—It was drunks and vagrants day at the Police Court this morning. Two of the former, a man and a woman, were discharged. Herbert Padfield, who said he came from Hamilton, and who from letters found in his possession was shown to be highly connected, was released on a charge of vagrancy. Seven other men, all charged with vagrancy, were remanded for a week. Their names were Albert Wilson, John Walsh, James Welman, John Clark, Wm. Smalley, Edward Powers and Michael Quinn. The last named carried a slungshot, and a charge of carrying concealed weapons was laid against him.

—The remains of the late Mrs. (Rev.) Walter Rigsby were taken to Montreal yesterday afternoon for burial. A short service was previously held over the coffin in the Colborne Street Methodist Church. The church, which was draped in black, was filled with sympathizers. After devotional exercises Rev. J. R. Gundy briefly sketched the life of deceased, which he characterized as full of Christian virtues. She died as she lived. Many of the congregation were deeply moved. Supposed Suicide at Lambeth.

The body of Abraham Patrick, a prosperous Lambeth farmer, was found in a barn on the farm of the deceased, at an early hour this morning. The evidence goes to show that Mr. Patrick shot himself in a fit of despondency or while mentally deranged. He was 70 years of age. His wife died about a year ago. Deceased leaves a large family. The instrument of death was a shot gun and the charge entered the groin and came out at the small of the back. An inquest will probably be held.

THE ALDERMAN'S DREAM.

Questioned by the Recording Angel.

The alderman dreamed that he was dead and with great fear and trembling he stood before the pearly gates, and knocked ever so timidly.

"Come into the ante-room," said a voice.

The alderman obeyed with the same alacrity he had always shown when on earth he was called into the ante-room to participate in a star chamber session. Then he saw an immense pair of scales and the clerk of the court dressed in white, with a pen interrogation-pointed behind his ear. He trembled, for he realized that his time had come for weighing in, and, as he carried no weights in his pockets, he might be found wanting.

"Where do you come from?" thundered the voice, now no longer mild.

"From London, Ontario," replied the quaking alderman, as he thanked his lucky star that it was not Hamilton, for in that case he would not have stood any show at all.

"What was your course on the electric railway question?"

The alderman's conscience smote him, yet he managed to reply, "I wanted cheap fares."

"Is that all?"

Was that all! The alderman was going to laugh outright, but he remembered where he was. "No," he replied, "I wanted a percentage."

The clerk's pen was working like lightning. "What else?"

"Mileage," answered the alderman, unabashed and beginning to feel at home.

The man with the pen was looking black and putting down marks equally sombre. "What else did you want, pray?" He was sarcastic now.

"The company to supply the paving material."

"Go on."

"And to supply all labor."

"Yes."

"And pave or repave whenever the city said so."

"Anything else?"

"Well yes. I wanted the line to run past some promising real estate that I owned. Of course it meant crossing several railroad tracks, but then you know it would have increased the value of my property."

"Nothing else, I suppose!" asked the white-robed scribe as he prepared to cast up accounts.

"Hold on," cried the alderman, as his bosom swelled with conscious pride, "we wanted the company to employ only home labor, and work their men only ten hours a day."

"Did you do that because of your love for the working men, or for votes?"

The alderman was candid. He knew it was no time for levity. "Votes," he replied, as he hung his head.

"Look here, alderman," spoke up the book-keeper, "you want neither heaven nor an electric road. What you want is the earth. First elevator to the left going down. Next!"

And the alderman woke to find the council in full session.
