BORED FOR OIL,

But Sulphur Water Spouted Instead—Interesting Local Event of Which Very Little Has Been Recorded—A Bit of Ancient History.

It was away back in the late 50's or early 60's that the idea became prevalent that oil in large quantities was to be found in this neighborhood. Speculators got wind of the rumor and many of them flocked to "London," which was then only a small town with little pretension to fame or importance. Those speculators came for oil, and oil they were going to have if it was obtainable at all. Work was commenced in many quarters, and continued until hopes were banished by failure. But while success was not coming in the way of the vast majority, a little party busied themselves just at the foot of Dundas street, at "The Forks." Down into the earth they kept their drilling apparatus going. The 100 foot mark was reached; no oil, no water; the 200, 300, 400 and 500 foot marks were also passed, and the same results were obtained. At 540 feet, however, there was a gush and up shot a heavy stream. It was not the much sought after—it was sulphur water.

And since that day the fame of London's sulphur springs has spread far and wide. "I am pretty sure that the above account of the discovery of the spring is correct," said Mr. John Milne last night. "I have been told so by many old-timers, and whether it is or not, we have got the sulphur water in endless quantities, and I am running one of the best equipped bath houses in Canada."

To convince him that such was the case, Mr. Milne accompanied his visitor through the bath house. It was found to be fitted up in excellent form, with all modern conveniences, including hot and cold water, with which a bath in water anywhere from 50° to 160° could be obtained. "There is where we get our supply," said Mr. Milne as he lifted the cover off a round, wooden arrangement somewhat resembling an old-fashioned pump. Inside of this came a strong stream of pure sulphur water, which if run through an inch pipe would shoot into the air many, many feet. The supply is not half consumed. In connection with this bath house Mr. Milne conducts a plunge, which is a great favorite with the boys, for in it they can enjoy themselves to their heart's content.

Mr. Milne's enterprise has also led him into the boat business, and he keeps in stock a choice assortment of pleasure boats.

The fact that Hood's Sarsaparilla, once fairly tried, become the favorite spring medicine, speaks volumes for its excellence and merit.
