Moderate Estimate of the Profit From Keeping a Brood Sow this Winter.

The man who plans to respond to the strong appeal of Food Controllers Hoover and Hanna to speed up hog production by saving young sows this fall wisely considers the business as well as the patriotic side of the venture. Sows are worth high figures and the necessary winter feed is proportionately high. It is not to be wondered if doubts as to the financial returns are entertained. With an aim to settle this question we obtained some facts from Professor Trueman of the N. S. Agricultural College which we herewith set forth.

At the College farm the brood sows are fed on an average of 2 lbs. of mixed meal and 20 lbs. of mangles per day up to the time of farrowing. The practice is to give them 4 lbs. of meal until they get in condition, and mangles alone after that. After farrowing, the sows are fed much heavier. The whole process is set forth in the following table:

Dec. 1 to April 1—121 days
2 lbs. of meal yer day at $50.00 per ton (121 days)	6.05
20 lbs. of mangles per day at 12c. per bushel (121 days)	4 84
April 1 to May 11—6 weeks
8 lbs. of meal per day at $50 00 per ton (42 days)	8 40
20 lbs. skim milk per day at 25c. per cwt (42 days)	2.10
20 lbs. mangles per day at 12c. per bushel (42 days)	1.68
Service	1 00
	24 07

This may be regarded as an extreme figure, averaging as it does about $4 40 per month. Before the war there were those who claimed to have fed sows at from $1.00 to $1.50 per month, and even lower figures were quoted when skim milk, garbage and other waste material was used. Now for the returns.

An average sow will raise 8 pigs, and frequently 10 to 12. Sucking pigs will sell next spring at $5.00 or more apiece, which means a gross return from the sow of at laest $40.00 to be set against a cost of $24.00 for maintenance. The sow herself will be worth as much as when the feeding began. No further figures are necessary to indicate profits to be derived from keeping sows even with feeds at the present unheard of prices. Possibly some may doubt the market for young pigs next spring, relative

Red Cross Notes.

There will be a meeting of the Red Cross Saturday, Dec. 1st, at 4 p. m. All members are requested to be present.

The ladies of the East End Club have just completed one hundred sets of pajamas. Mrs. Beckwith has knitted over one hundred pairs of socks. The Society welcome Mrs. George Churchill as a life member.

Mrs. Sexton, of Halifax, gave a most interesting address last Friday evening in the Baptist chapel. She spoke not only on Red Cross work giving the latest information in all departments, but very forcibly and with much feeling on the Christian duty of every one investing all they possibly could in the Victory Loan, and above all that every right thinking person should vote for Union Government. The collection at the meeting for Red Cross purposes amounted to $25 22.

The Only Medicine For Little Ones.

Mrs. H. Blanche, St. Pamphile, Que., writes:—'I have obtained great results from the use of Baby's Own Tablets. They are the only medicine I know of that one can depend upon to promptly cure bowel and stomach troubles.' The Tablets never fail to relieve the little one and besides the mother has the guarantee of a government analyst that they are absolutely safe. They are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr Williams' Medicine Co, Brockville, Ont.

A meeting will be held at 1 30 o'clock on Saturday at Kentville for the purpose of forming a Union Government Association. Rev. W. C Gordon (Ralph Connor) will be present and give an address. On fare return tickets on train. No one should miss this meeting.

"There are other things which I am looking forward to, and one is the perpetuation of La Belle Alliance between England, France, and America. I want it to take a more permanent and official shape. It is not strictly correct to speak of France and England as 'allies,' we should say 'common belligerents.' There is, of course, no formal treaty of alliance; there is what they call in business, a 'gentlemen's agreement.' Recently a son of the American revolution had the privilege of wearing a badge of the British recruiting committee and speaking for his work under the shadow of the monument called the 'Boston Massacre.' This is one of the signs of such changes as one could hardly have imagined even five years ago. There is the promise for the bright day I speak of when there shall be something more definite than a gentlemen's agreement:—three democratic powers of the world pledged in a mutual defensive pack to assure the true freedom of the seas and spare us any signs of a conspiracy against the peace and prosperity of the whole earth.

"That carries with it something else which, if it seems not to be realized, is more possible than some of the things already realized. We do see, and we shall see a diastole and systole among the great allied nations. My dearest friend on earth sails to spend a year of war work in England. I am glad to have him go, but I shall miss him as my right hand He is not going as a stranger to live in a foreign country. He is going from one home to another home. He shall be welcomed as a man coming home. There will be no readjustment over there in any particular except one: when a Canadian comes over to make his residence here, when an American goes to Canada without intending to return, he does not come as a foreigner to adjust himself as an alien. He has passed from one room to another in the common house of the English speaking family. The only thing that makes him feel out of it is that he has no political rights and must renounce his old allegiance and take new. The dream I have is of an interchangeable citizenship whereby any voter, any person of a free people in any such alliance as does exist, shall in so far as he is resident in any part of the countries of that alliance, be possessed of full political rights. The Germans do that: there is a secret provision in the German constitution whereby any German going to live in America can become a citizen in the new country, with the Kaiser's permission, yet remains a citizen in Germany. He takes a false oath; he disguises himself in the new citizenship to abuse it for the old. It is the thing that has made Germany a stench for honest people, but there is something in it—the notion of interchangeable citizenship.

'Another thing that must be considered is intellectual reconstruction after the victory is won. It is not just enough to blow up the German strongholds or destroy the German pill boxes, or to send them down under the Piave, that is not enough. It is not enough to line the Kaiser and his six sons up to be shot. There must be something more after the physical defeat: we must be ready for a true sort of fraternity which recognises the prodigal to have a place at the family board. We must be ready to give them something better than they have been fighting for. We must lead them back to the knowledge of a true God in whose knowledge is perfect freedom. It is a false god that they worship. It has nothing in common with Jehovah or with Jesus of Nazareth. We have seen our bright young men go to Germany to study and come back having accepted this monstrous god. It is theology we are fighting, it is a struggle between ideals and we must be ready to do missionary work of the right sort. Our nations shall purge themselves of the things that defile and shall make ready for such an order of society as shall merit the divine constitution which is in the will of God.'

Mrs. Grace Dean MacLeod Rogers related most delightfully the story of 'The dear old white college that stands on the hill far away.' She told how the first college in the maritime provinces was founded by the Episcopalians and was open only to those students who would sign the thirty-nine Articles. She explained how the need grew among the Baptists for a school and later for a college for their children, and the institution that they founded became Acadia University. The manner in which the money was raised for the new College was most interesting as told by the speaker:

"They could not ask the people for the money, and one man conceived the idea of building the college without money—not a temple without hands, but a college without money A master builder made out the specifications and they apportioned all the things needed to build the building. Three of the men went about through the country asking people to give something to build it. They went to a man with a mill and asked, 'What will you give?' Where ships were built, they sent kegs of nails, and seasoned timber came from the valleys. The women gave socks they were knitting, and so it went on The idea appealed to them,—it was a romantic thing to do. Money was scarce in those days, and hard to hold, but they all gave something One house to which the men went had no front window. When the house had been built, the people could not afford to build a door or window, and they had worked a long time and saved all they could so as to be able to build a bay window. This woman had longed so and planned so for it, but they agreed that they would give the money that they had raised to the college She never lived to get a bay window, but I am sure that in her Father's house she found her reward At another house, the wife said, 'What can we give?' 'I might give one of the cattle' her husband replied, 'and you might give your piece of cloth.' But this was a special piece of cloth—something new with a new kind of red thread running through it She had got the dyes from the Indians. She had planned so much about it, and had boasted a little about it, too. The minister solicitor, however, understood the sob in her throat, and immediately turned aside to the fireplace where the children were gathered He began to tell them all about the new college to which they would go someday, perhaps. There was a change in the woman's heart then, and she sat up all that night finishing the weaving of that piece of cloth The next morning when the minister was admiring it, she offered it to him for the college, and he sold it for a large sum. That mother lived to see all her children graduate from Acadia University.' This was the way in which the college first become entrenched in the hearts of the people, and they have always loved it and been willing to sacrifice for it.

Mrs Rogers concluded with a very sincere tribute to the soldiers represented by the 380 stars in the service flag.

'The simplest soldier among us if there could be such a thing as a simple soldier, has something finer and nobler in his make-up than any man who can and has not put on his armor: all that a man hath will he give for his life, and a soldier offers his for us.'

Mrs. Rogers has four boys and all of them are in the war. Three of them were at college when they enlisted, and the youngest one, barely eighteen, had matriculated.

Doctor B B. Lockhart of Manchester, New Hampshire, gave an address in his characteristic humorous style and kept the audience in laughter. He gave pleasing reminiscences of his college life at Acadia, and made a few well considered remarks on the ubiquitous subject of the war to which we should point out that the 'Keep a Pig movement, like the 'Town Garden' movement of last spring, is sure to interest hundreds of suburban dwellers in feeding pigs next year. And this demand added to the normal demand promises a bigger sale for young pigs than the total available supply

This is the business side of the story. There is no need to dwell on the patriotic, except to briefly state that the 'Hog Line' offers the quickest route to making up for the tremendous shortage in meat supplies, which is now one of the most critical features of the war For further particulars read the advertisement elsewhere inserted jointly by the Dominion and Provincial Departments of Agriculture

A Memorial Service at the Tabernacle.

On Sunday evening, Nov. 18th, the Hall was filled by interested and sympathetic friends, with the near relatives of the young heroes who have so nobly laid down their lives for their country on the battlefields of Flanders.

Dr. Gates conducted the services, and after prayer and the singing of appropriate hymns, he gave us a brief and impressive discourse. Two young ladies from the choir of College girls sang that sweet hymn, "Some Time, Some Time, We Shall Understand."

Short addresses were given by Revs Mr. Martell and M. P. Freeman, testifying to their esteem for the young men who had fallen.

Mr C A. Patriquin, as superintendent of the Sunday school and teacher of the young men's Bible class, had intimate acquaintance with the young men and had kept up a correspondence with them ever since their enlistment. Among the names he gave were Charles Farris, Walter Lynch, Leslie Rogers and Winfield Faris young men whose lives seemed full of promise and noble manhood

"Of that free manhood's choice they crossed the sea
To save a stricken people from its foe.
They died for Justice—Justice owes them this:
That what they died for be not overthrown."

These lines were penned by Lieut. Bernard Trotter, who himself yielded up his life as a brave soldier, "to save a stricken people from its foe."

The Boy Scouts.

The Scoutmaster wishes to express his thanks to those who contributed to the success of the entertainment on Monday evening. To the public for generously purchasing the tickets and interest shown in the performance, to the Give Service Girls for their help and to Miss Alice Stairs and Mr. Woodman for help with the music. The gross proceeds were $139 50, which will net over $100 00. This evening Mr Paul Davison will have an informal talk with the boys at 8 o'clock.

Keep A Pig!

Food Controllers Hoover and Hanna say that Meat Shortage is now one of the most critical features of the war. They urge that quick action be taken to make up for the shortage. And they point to the hog as the speediest means of doing so.

SAVE YOUNG SOWS

To increase the production of pigs, young sows intended for the butcher must be saved this Fall. Next Spring's "Keep a Pig" propaganda, aimed at the residents of small towns and suburbs of cities, added to the normal avenues of sale, ensure a record demand for the progeny of all these sows. Elsewhere will be found a business statement from Prof. J. M. Trueman indicating the probable profits. Be sure to read it. Try to plan things so that you will keep one or two more sows than in former years.

An Attempt to Bring Buyers and Sellers Together

There may be, in response to this appeal, those wishing to purchase sows for breeding purposes who do not know where to buy them. On the other hand we already have the names of some 25 farmers who have sows to sell and we solicit the names of others, If you are either a prospective buyer or seller and do not know of anyone with whom you can do business send your name to Prof. J. M. Trueman, Agricultrual College, Truro. He does not guarantee to personally make any sales or purchases, but he will try to bring prospective buyers and sellers together. Write him at once.
