Secrets of Health and Happiness

How to Strengthen Your Lungs By Breathing Aids

By DR. LEONARD KEENE HIRSHBERG,
A. B., M. A., M. D., (Johns Hopkins University.)

DR. HIRSHBERG

Rest is a fine medicine. At times rest for the stomach may cure a disorder of that organ; for the mind it may ward off insanity; for the harassed doctor or business man it may temper weariness and worry. Even children of toil need much rest.

Not so your breathing apparatus. Inspiration and expiration are not to be had by rest. Nay, even partial rest for the lungs may injure their elasticity and automatic action. Negligence in breathing has been known to start bronchitis, broncho-pneumonia or perhaps tuberculosis.

The lungs are like children. Unless they have good cheer and a free play of their animal nature, they pine away and become a source of infection and trouble. The elastic tissue of the lungs, like muscular fabric in general, requires motion, tension, relaxation, sun-lighted air, freshened zephyrs of pure oxygen and other incentives to fullness and endurance.

A chest as flat as a pancake, shoulders as bent as the crescent moon, lungs as lazy as Falstaff's feet, are not built for efficiency, prosperity, health or happiness.

Expand All of Lungs.

To overcome such a bad start toward success and fair health, rid yourself of any nonsense about chest expansion. You may develop an expansion of many inches and have worse lungs than a man with only a three-inch expansion.

Proper breathing exercises may happily widen your chest girth, but the peaks and corners of the lungs ought to be opened up simultaneously.

Fifteen minutes a day spent upon three or four manoeuvres in the open sunlight should help to ward off tuberculosis and several other ailments. Try the following:

Stand with heels together, toes turned slightly out, arms hanging at the sides. Now inhale a full breath slowly and gently, at the same time raising the arms straight up in front of the body until they are extended up above the head. Then, holding the breath, pass the arms in a wide circle downward and backward, palms forward, at the same time drawing the head up and back. After a few moments exhale the breath, relax the muscles and return to position. This exercise should be repeated from ten to twenty times.

Practice These Exercises.

Stand easily, right foot slightly in advance. Inhale slowly a full breath, swinging the arms straight above the sides until the hands meet above the head, at the same time turning the face up toward the ceiling. Then without holding the breath, exhale gently, swinging the arms downward, until they meet in front of the body, while head and body are bent forward. This exercise should be repeated from twenty to thirty times.

Stand with heels together, raise the hands straight up until they meet over the head. Then, holding the chest and shoulders rigid, bend forward toward the floor, at the same time inhaling the breath. After a full breath has been taken exhale at once while rising to erect position, arms still held fast on a line with the body. This exercise should be repeated from five to ten times.

Stand with heels together, toes turned slightly outward. Place the hands at the sides of the waist, finger-tips in front. Now slowly inhale full breath, at the same time sinking the chest and bowing the head as much as you can. As you inhale, note that the waist expands, causing the hands to be pushed farther away from each other. When full breath has been inhaled, let it out, at once rising to erect position. This exercise should be repeated from ten to twenty times.

Answers to Health Questions

A. X.: Q.—Kindly advise me what to do for falling hair.

A.—A little of the following may be tried on alternate nights. Rub in with a stiff bristle brush:

Fluid extract pilocarpine	1 dram
Tincture of cantharides	½ dram
Tincture of capsicum	1 dram
Quinine sulphate	1 dram
Rosewater	1 ounce
Distilled water	3 ounces

MRS. J. S.: Q.—Kindly write an article on Bright's disease.

A.—Have written several. As new discoveries occur I will write others.

MRS. B. M. B.:: Q.—Kindly advise me what to do for erysipelas.

A.—An infectious and contagious malady is associated with the germs, called the streptococcus. High fever and a spreading, fiery redness of the affected skin, usually the face, is in evidence. Physicians are the ones to treat this. It requires quarantine, isolation and internal as well as local antiseptics.

A CONSTANT READER. Q.—Kindly advise me what to do for itchy feet.

A.—Apply a little of the following lotion to your feet:

Pink calamine	2½ drams
Zinc oxide	2 drams
Glycerine	2 drams
Phenol	30 drops
Lime water	2 ounces
Rosewater	2 ounces

A. K. Q.—Kindly advise me what to do for boils.

A.—A little ammoniated mercury ointment usually cures mild boils. Apply a cloth which has been wet with hot boric acid to the boils. This will bring them to a head, and then a drop of carbolic acid will empty them, and ammoniated mercury ointment will do the rest.

Dr. Hirshberg will answer questions for readers of this paper on medical, hygienic and sanitation subjects that are of general interest. Harold Lloyd's Newest Comedy, "Look Out Below," Is Also Shown.

"For Husbands Only," a photoplay starring Mrs. Charlie Chaplin, who makes her first appearance before Londoners, will be shown at the Majestic today and Tuesday.

It may be said with safety that it will prove to be the cleverest and most fascinating subject Miss Weber's studio has yet produced. The famous woman director, who evolved the drama from an idea embodied in a magazine story by G. B. Stern, is responsible for a number of ingenious twists which are certain to startle and delight those theatregoers who are fond of novelty.

Mrs. Charlie Chaplin, the little lady who created such an instantaneous success in "The Price of a Good Time," and who is the featured player in another Lois Weber production shortly to be released, is the star of "For Husbands Only." Lewis J. Cowen has the principal male role. Other players who enact prominent parts are Miss Kathleen Kirkham and Fred Goodwins, who has just completed a principal part in Miss Mary Pickford's latest picture.

A feature of Miss Weber's new production will be the appearance in many of the scenes of the Denis-Shawn dancers, the advanced pupils of Ruth St. Denis and Ted Shawn. The settings in which they dance are among the most exquisite ever shown on the screen.

The story, like many of those which have come from Miss Weber's studio, is remarkably unlike anything that heretofore has been pictured on the screen. In fact, the story as planned by the feminine master of cinema craft is so unusual that even the cleverest student of screen drama will find himself baffled in his efforts to anticipate the climax of the play until the final scene is presented.

In addition to this feature a Harold Lloyd comedy, "Look Out Below," a travelogue, and a special vaudeville act, introducing the Buckeye Jazz Band, will be presented.

MY HEART AND MY HUSBAND
ADELE GARRISON'S NEW PHASE OF REVELATIONS OF A WIFE

What Mrs. Durkee Said To Madge.

Dicky and Alfred Durkee spent a long, busy afternoon over the manuscript of the novel which Mr. Durkee wished Dicky to illustrate. With an abundant allowance of pipe tobacco and cigars, with their feet elevated to the sun parlor windows, while their bodies rested luxuriously upon the base of their spines in the easy veranda chairs, they read and debated with all the gusto of men resuming congenial work after a long, enforced absence.

Alfred Durkee has an unusual reading voice, and he likes the sound of it almost as well as Dicky likes to listen to him. In fact, Dicky always lazily asserts that he can get the spirit of a manuscript much better from hearing it read than from perusing it himself—many the manuscript in the pre-war days which I read aloud to him—so all through the afternoon the novel the noted author had written was clothed with dramatic beauty by Alfred Durkee's voice.

I should have liked nothing better than the opportunity of sitting quietly in a corner while the reading and the discussion went on. It would have been a rare treat to me—indeed, I always have the sitting-at-the-feet-of-Gamaliel spirit when I see Dicky absorbed in his profession—but the inexorable laws of courteous hospitality decreed otherwise.

For little Mrs. Durkee was not only patently bored by the discussion, but, I knew from experience that her presence had the same effect upon the two men as that of a fussy, noisy little canary. There were times when they loved to have her with them, but not when they wished to concentrate their minds upon a subject.

"I say, Madge," Alfred Durkee looked up from the third page of the manuscript, which had been punctuated by his mother's ingenuous comments upon a wide variety of topics, "can't you lead the mater gently up to your boo-drorer and turn her loose on clothes or something like that while I'm reading this? Goodness knows I love and revere her, but I always prefer worshiping her from afar when I've any business on hand."

"You needn't think I care anything about your horrid old story," his mother declared with affected petulance, but real good-nature, rising with alacrity and shaking out her fluffy draperies. "It's as dull as ditch water. I never could bear that W— anyway. Don't like his photograph. He looks too lade-da for anything. Come along, Madge. I'm dying to talk clothes. I haven't had anything new for ages, and I'm planning how to fix over my old ones. Maybe we can swap."

The laughter of our men followed us up the stairs—when Mrs. Durkee talks her childish nonsense she is irresistible in her appeal to the risibles—made my friend toss her head defiantly.

A Potent Distraction.

"Conceited things!" she muttered. "Think their old authors and manuscripts are the only things in the world. They'll chuckle to themselves about our gabbling over dresses, yet how would they like it if we went around like old frumps? Just tell me that!"

I wisely made no answer to this, affecting to be busied with the lock of my wardrobe door. And the next minute I began spreading over the bed my gowns of the vintage of two seasons back. I knew that nothing would quickly make Mrs. Durkee forget a real or a fancied grievance as the sight of dresses, new or old.

I knew something else also, something that made me welcome this opportunity of showing her my wardrobe. The little woman had a rare taste and discrimination in dress, and a positive knack in designing and "fixing over" things. That it would only be a matter of a week or two before Dicky would wish me to accompany him to dinner and a play in town I was sure. And I had nothing modish to wear, for I had bought only the simplest, most necessary things during the war. My evening and afternoon gowns had the unmistakable look of being out of date, which, while it bothered me but little, would, I knew, annoy my husband's fastidious taste.

Mrs. Durkee promptly seized the prettiest gown I had, one of ivory crepe embroidered in gold threads—and held it up critically.

"You lucky girl!" she said. "There's so much stuff in this that we can take it out here, add to the length, hide the joining right under this embroidered design, and swirl it tightly around your ankles in the most approved style. Have you still got the adorable slippers and embroidered hose you used to wear with this?"

"Look Here!"

"Almost as fresh as if they were new," I said. "You know I had this made not very long before Dicky went away. I've only worn it two or three times."

"I remember," she returned absently. "Let's see the evening coat you wore over this."

I brought out the darling of my heart, a blue velvet cloak with a deep fur collar. It was a coat of several seasons' use, and the collar was distinctly shabby.

"H—m!" commented Mrs. Durkee. "The velvet is still good in this—it sure pays to buy good materials—but it's rubbed all around the edges. You need new fur on the collar and the edges of the sleeves and a new lining. I can fix it up for you so you won't know it."

"But," I stammered, "that will cost a good deal, I'
