THE HOME JOURNAL.

Edited by Morris & Willis.

Published every Saturday in the City of New York, at Two Dollars per annum.

In November last, we commenced the publication of this family newspaper on a new and novel plan. No similar work, intended to contain the pick of the news, elegancies, opinions and literature of our time, to call from the wilderness of the hour's ever flowering caprice, and to rescue the good things else lost in the bewildering floutsage of novelties adrift, had been previously attempted by others.

That we have labored successfully in our vocation and produced a paper remarkable for its interest, value and popularity, and one adapted to the wants of all classes in society, we have sufficient evidence in our extensive and rapidly increasing circulation, in the universal commendation of the public press, and, above all, in the flattering encouragement of our numerous Lady readers, in every section of the country.

The scope, design and character of the Home Journal differ from those of any newspaper heretofore established. The contents are fitted to engage the attention of the man of business, and be a source of elegant instruction and entertainment to the domestic fireside and family circle, and it combines the striking and novel attractions of the newspaper with the more abiding interests of the higher class of periodicals. It is printed in the folio form, on large and superior paper, on a new clear type, obtained expressly for the purpose; and is, on its whole arrangement and details, a most favourable specimen of the best typographical skill in the country. In addition to these, and as one of its most valuable peculiarities, it is, in reference to the diversity of talent employed upon it, the cheapest paper in the United States.

As all the back numbers of the work are entirely exhausted, we have this day, Saturday, the 21st day of August, increased the edition of the 'Home Journal' for the express accommodation of new Subscribers, and we therefore request that all who intend taking the Paper will commence their subscriptions with the present number.

Terms—Two Dollars a year, or three copies for five dollars, invariably in advance.

The 'Home Journal' is sent to all parts of the United States, the British Provinces and to Europe done up in strong wrappers, with the utmost punctuality and despatch.

Subscriptions, orders, remittances, and all communications, must be addressed (post paid) to the Editors.
