THE CONDUCTOR'S STORY.

Toronto World.

Five conductors, delegates to the Grand Convention now in session, were seated in the private office of the Queen's last night telling their experiences. The World's railroad reporter was with them. Their narrations were all interesting, but the one that caught the ear of the party was the following told by Conductor Tom Punchwater, now of the Chicago and Alton:

I was a baggageman then, fourteen years ago, on the Lake Shore. I ran on the through express from Buffalo to Chicago. One night, a cold night in early March, we left Chicago with five coaches filled with passengers, most of them excursionists. In my car there was little baggage, but amongst it a corpse checked to Buffalo. As we rattled along, the night dark and stormy without, my car dimly lighted within, I didn't feel any too comfortable with a coffin in my car. Some baggagemen that I've known have appeared indifferent to the presence of a corpse in their car; but I must confess that one in my car always unsettled me, and made me sleep little for the two or three nights that followed. And this night especially I felt particular uncomfortable. I knew something dreadful would happen. And sure enough it did. In the dim morning light, when we were within 20 miles or so of Buffalo, we collided with a freight train, both were running at a frightful speed. Our train was completely wrecked. I found myself in a field sixty yards or more from the smash. How I got there I never knew. But I was unhurt save a few scratches. Fire broke out and some of the cars blazed up. But a heavy rain-storm came on and soon the flames were extinguished. The people who escaped did their best to relieve the unfortunates. By 8 o'clock in the morning we were pretty well straightened up. The killed outright numbered seven; the wounded twenty. Before 9 o'clock a train load of doctors and railroad officials were on the scene. They had come from Buffalo.

Shortly after the accident I had been attracted by the piteous cries of a young woman, one of the passengers. She was bewailing her father. Her cries were piercing. Oh! where is Dad? oh! where is my dear Dad?' We learned from her bewailments that she had lost her father in the wreck. We searched as well as we could, and soon after the arrival of the doctors and head officials we found the body under my car. It was down the embankment, where three cars were piled one above the other. An old railway lawyer, counsel for the road, spoke soothingly to the girl. I, too, seemed to have an influence over her, and at last we got her calmed. But every now and then she broke out in paroxysms of grief. The old lawyer spoke to her about accidents; that they could not be helped; that some were doomed to die in bed and some at sea, and some by collisions; that the railroad officials were sorry and ready to make reparation to the best of their ability. The old fellow succeeded so well that he at last got her quiet. But I could hardly restrain my indignation when I saw him produce a pen and ink and get the young woman to sign a paper right there in the wet, for it was now drizzling. I knew what that meant. I had seen it done before, and I've seen it done since. He got her signature, however, and she got from him a cheque, as I afterwards learned, for seventy-five hundred dollars. He also got from her two railway tickets, first-class ones, that she had in her purse for herself and father. But her grief did not end easily. The body of the old man was put in a temporary coffin and placed on the relief train. The young woman went with it crying all the way. The old lawyer ordered me to accompany her to Buffalo. I did as he told me. I need not spin the story much longer, but six weeks after that I was married to the girl and six weeks still later I was made a conductor through the help of the old lawyer. My wife and I lived happy till her death three years ago. On her deathbed she made me a confession: Tom, she said, do you remember the night of the dreadful collision? I told her yes. "Well, do you know that the corpse you had in your car that night was Dad and that he had been killed by a street car in Chicago the day before, and that in the smash-up he was thrown out of his coffin and away from it?" As I remembered the corpse I recalled how peaceful he looked as we got him out from below the car. You bet I never told the old lawyer, and I never think of my wife but I also think of the way the old lawyer chuckled as he said to the general manager after he got the girl to sign. "That's a cheap settlement; in a court we'd have had to pay $20,000." I still think that he was not so smart as he imagined. I think my wife was a downright smart woman, like all the women that come from Chicago.

Do Flying Fish Fly?

It has long been a question with scientists whether flying fish actually fly, or are only carried forward through the air by the impulse which they gave to their bodies while still in the water. Professor Mobins expresses an authoritative opinion, and claims that they are totally unable to fly, for the reason that the muscles which move the pectoral fins are not sufficiently large to bear the weight of their bodies in the air. In birds the average weight of the muscles which are concerned in the movement of the wings is one-sixth that of the entire body; in bats one-thirteenth, while in the flying fish it is only one-thirty-fifth. He affirms, therefore, that the impulse to the propulsion of the fish in the air is delivered while they are still in the water.—Globe-Democrat.

Professor Mobins is quite mistaken, and has, evidentally, not seen flying fish on the wing. It is true that they acquire considerable impetus before rising out of the water, but this is only sufficient to give them a certain elevation and start, after which they fly quite long distances, either in a straight or gradually curved line. We have seen them fly several hundred yards before plunging again into the sea and have known them to come in the night from the leeward and, striking the weather bulwarks inside, fall upon the deck. They fly best on bright days when there is about a ten knot breeze, making perhaps a hundred yards or more to windward at a flight, which no momentum which they could possibly acquire in the water would enable them to do.

Agricultural Notes.

PLANT SUN FLOWER seeds along your fences and other parts of farm or garden not easily cultivated. Besides the pleasure of seeing them the seeds are most valuable for fowls and other farm stock adding to their health and appearance.

Make certain that your seed is clean There is nothing more disastrous than sowing foul seed.

Cover unsightly places with climbing plants. There are many annual climbering plants that can be easily grown, such as the Nasturtium, Canary bird Flower, Morning Glory etc.

Don't select all the disagreeable bits of work for the boys you wish to keep on the farm,

Sick hens should be taken from the rest of the brood, and be carefully cared for separately.

Lettuce requires to be grown in a moist soil and in cool weather; for this reason the best is obtained only in the spring or early summer.

To grow carrots to perfection there is needed a good, light and well enriched sandy loam.

Linseed cake, in moderate quantities, is good for milk cows.

The pig on many dairy farms is an important item.

IN RAISING TURKEYS it is better to have them hatched out a little late than too early. The young birds have not much vitality, and, chilly weather is pretty sure to take off many of them. It is a good plan to have them hatched out under common hens rather than turkey hens, as the former are better mothers and are not given to roaming the farm. The young birds should be given cooked food principally, and as they have good appetites they may be fed eight or ten times a day. As dampness is fatal to young turkeys, they should not be out of the coop until the dew is off the grass.

NEW USE FOR BUCKWHEAT.—No matter how large the spot of oil, any carpet or woollen stuff can be cleaned by applying buckwheat plentifully and faithfully, brushing it into a dust-pan after a short time, and putting on fresh until the oil has all disappeared. Never put on liquid of any kind to cleanse such a spot.

WOMEN ON THE FARM.—There is a deeply-rooted idea in rural communities that a woman is not good for much who cannot do all her own work, and that, except in actual sickness, it is unthrifty and extravagant for her to have hired help. I know many farms on which one or more hired men are kept all the year round, with extra hands in hurrying times, but one unaided woman is expected to do all the housework, dairying, care of the poultry and even calf-feeding. A state of bondage entailed by her female ancestery from a time when woman's work on the farm was far less than it is now, and when the necessity for it was more urgent than now, is accepted and submitted to as one of the conditions of the present, notwithstanding greatly altered circumstances. Improved implements and machinery, together with better methods of culture, have lessened the toil of man on the farm; but that of woman has been increased, until now it has become an intolerable drudgery that is wearing out both body and mind with slow but sure exhaustion.

RICHLY REWARDED are those who read this and then act; they will find honorable employment that will not take them from their homes and families. The profits are large and sure for every industrious person, many have made and are now making several hundred dollars a month. It is easy for any one to make $5 and upwards per day, who is willing to work. Either sex, young or old; capital not needed, we start you. Everything new. No special ability required, you, reader, can do it as well as anyone. Write to us at once for full particulars, which we send free. Address Stinson & Co., Portland, Maine.
