HOUSE OF ASSEMBLY.

Discussion of the Franchise Bill.

FREDERICTON, March 20.—Hon. Mr. Blair committed a bill to consolidate and amend the law relating to elections to the general assembly, Mr. Palmer in the chair. Hon. Mr. Blair said he apprehended that the sense of the committee generally would approve of his suggestion that the bill be read section by section. The bill, as all were aware, had only been a short time in the hands of hon. members. He knew they had not had much opportunity of examining it, although no doubt many of them had a summary of it in some of the St. John papers. He did not intend that much progress be made with the bill in the immediate present, and his chief object now was to make an explanation of the objects and intentions of the measure. One was that which touched the qualification of candidates to this assembly. The bill proposes that there shall be no qualification. The law which required that a candidate should be possessed of so much real or leasehold property before he could become a candidate for this house has been quite as much honored in the breach as the observance. He could mention the names of many gentlemen who had come here without the qualification required by law. He would not say that there were any such in the present legislature, but he knew as a fact that some gentlemen—some of the brightest ornaments in former assemblies—had been elected without the qualification required by law of candidates for legislative honors. For that reason, as one of many, the government had decided to drop the property qualification heretofore required.

As to the franchise in a general way remarked the attorney general, it might be said that the bill conferred the franchise on four different classes of persons. The first clause gave the right to vote to every male British subject of the age of 21 years as before stated, who shall in his own right hold real estate to the value of $100, or personal property or real and personal property together, to the value of $200 in any electoral district, provided such person is duly registered in the voters' list for such electoral district, and is at the time of tendering his vote the owner of the real estate or personal property, or real and personal property together. The question may be asked, Why make any reference to property qualification at all if it is intended that the bill be one conferring manhood suffrage? If this clause were not included in the bill, a person might have a large amount of property and yet not reside sufficiently long in a district to entitle him to a vote. Under this bill if a man sold out his property in one locality and went to another and bought property, he would have the right to vote whether he had resided in his new locality for 12 months or not. In the same manner he would have a right to vote on property which he owned in a locality from which he had moved. He thought that this clause of the bill was clear enough to be understood by every member of the committee.

Sub-section B or section 21 conferred the franchise upon any male British subject of 21 years of age as aforesaid, who shall be assessed upon income to the amount of $400 in any electoral district, provided the name of such person shall be duly registered upon the voters' list in such electoral district, made up in the year for which such person has been assessed upon income as aforesaid, and provided such person shall have continued to be a bona fide resident and domiciled in such district from the time of his being assessed as aforesaid until the time of tendering his vote. This section would apply to clerks and all others who might be under salary and move from one district to another. They might arrive in a district too late to qualify under the residential clause, and yet not too late to be assessed. Being assessed, and remaining in the district until the time of voting, all would agree that they should be allowed to vote. Sub-section C provided that a vote be given to every minister or teacher in the public schools.

All, he thought, would agree that such gentlemen should, in consequence of their intelligence, be allowed to vote without having to come under the residential clause. He now came, he said, to what all must recognize as really the most important clause of the bill, and that which might be expected to evoke the greatest amount of criticism as being of the most radical character, namely, the clause conferring on all persons who have attained the age of 21 years, being males and British subjects, provided they have had a residence for 12 months before the first day of May in which the list is made up. He showed that this provision was even more restrictive than it appeared to be and practically called for two years' residence. Some would prefer a less extended term of residence, and thought that about all that should be required in order to give one the right to exercise the franchise was that he should be a resident of the electoral district at the time the list was made up. To that view the executive had not been able to give their assent.

It had been the object of the government to take in everybody who might reasonably be expected to discharge that duty in the interest of the state, and on the other hand to exclude all those about whom a reasonable doubt might naturally arise.

Concerning section 21, the attorney general thought it was impossible to give to that section any other than the clear and plain meaning. The last clause, it would be seen, took in everybody, and under this residential provision, everybody, speaking generally might claim the franchise. But in case there were any, as probably in actual experience it would be found there were many, who might lose the vote they now had, he thought the government had in the three preceding clauses sufficiently embraced them all, so while they were giving the boon of franchise to a large class of people in the country on the one hand, they might not on the other, be taking away from any individual the right which he now by law possessed. He thought the section embracing the four descriptions of qualification, though it might at first blush seem to show a certain degree of circumlocution, could not without difficulty have been more clearly and concisely expressed.

He fully recognized the importance of the measure and he knew the committee would do so and assist to make it as perfect and complete as possible. He thought if they succeeded in placing upon the statute book this law which gave to the young men of the country, and many classes of deserving people, the privileges of which they had hitherto been debarred, he felt that they would have reflected some credit upon themselves as a legislature and adopted an act which would, in future, redound to their credit in no small degree. The government most cordially and heartily desired, as he felt did the house, to extend this right of citizenship to the important classes embraced within the purview of the bill. Though a man had very little property, yet he had an important and vital interest in the acts of this legislature. He is entitled to this privilege by reason of his citizenship, by reason of the fact that the legislature dealt not only with the property but with the liberties of the people of his country, and it being within the scope and competency of this legislature to legislate in that wide direction, surely it is not too much to say that every one who might be affected by that legislation should have a voice in the selection of the men who represent them.

Mr. Hanington said the government and the country was to be congratulated that the time had arrived when this privilege so highly spoken of and so well expressed by the hon. leader of the house should be given to the important classes included in this bill who, as he had submitted some years before, and as some of the friends of the government had submitted, should have enjoyed that privilege some time ago. He was glad that the time had come.

Hon. Mr. Blair—Your friends in the legislative council did not seem to agree with you.

Mr. Hanington—My friends in the council do about what is right and exercise their own proper judgments.

Mr. Hanington continued that he was glad that the government had, at last become convinced that this worthy class of citizens who had so long been deprived of this great privilege, should now receive the boon. The government was ready now to allow many men, who were previously deprived of the privilege of voting, to exercise that privilege henceforth, and from whence did they get their idea? Why, when, in 1886, the government presented a franchise bill before the legislature, and one of their friends moved that the principle of residential manhood suffrage should be the leading principle of the bill, the government said they could not accede to that suggestion. He was now prepared to discuss the details of the bill. Having ascertained that in this bill the leading principle was to extend the franchise to a very worthy class of people to a very deserving and intelligent class of people, he had very great pleasure in supporting the bill as far as that went.

The qualification of candidates was a different question. He thought no injury would be done by retaining the property qualification for candidates, but as the tendency of the age was to wipe away these qualifications and restrictions, and as that had been done by the parliament of Canada and other parliaments without any injurious results following, he should not assume the responsibility of voting against the clause of abolishing that qualification. The right of the people was to elect whom they pleased and with them could be safely trusted the full and free exercise of that right. While he knew of no injury that had resulted from the fact of the candidate having the property qualification, still the sentiment of the country as expressed in other parliaments, and in respect of higher functions than those devolving upon the local legislature, had been pointing in that direction, and no injurious results having followed, he felt that he could not oppose the central provision of the bill in this respect.

He would not now discuss the language of some of these sections. It would be time enough to go into section 21 when it came before the committee. He thought its ambiguity could be easily removed, and as to the question of revision he was very glad, indeed, that the government had changed their policy.

Hon. Mr. Ritchie, Mr, Hanington, Hon. Mr. Blair and Mr. Tweedie continued the debate, after which the motion was adopted.

Progress was reported with leave to sit again.

GENERAL BUSINESS.

Mr. Humphrey, from the standing rules committee, reported against suspending the rule regarding Hon. Mr. McLellan's bill incorporating the exhibition association of the city and county of St. John, and Mr. Wilson's bill incorporating the city of Fredericton and York county exhibition association.

Bills were introduced—By Mr. Baird, incorporating the town of Grand Falls; by Mr. Wilson, enabling the York county council to assess in aid of Victoria hospital; by Mr. Russell, establishing the width of Douglas street extension, town of St. Andrews, at 50 feet; by Hon. Mr. Blair, relating to limited partnerships; also by Hon. Mr. Blair, for the establishment of circuit courts; by Mr. Young, incorporating Temiscouata, Neguac and Shippegan Harbor railway company; by Hon. Mr. McLellan, incorporating the Keystone Fire Insurance company; by Mr. Russell, authorizing the Charlotte Municipality to sell and convey certain portions of the westign commons to the lessees thereof, on certain conditions; also Mr. Russell, amending the public health of 1887; by Hon. Mr. Ritchie, incorporating the St. Lawrence and Maritime Province railway company.

Dr. Alward committed the bill authorizing the commissioners of the general public hospital of the city and county of St. John to provide for additional accommodation in said hospital by building a new wing to the same; and to provide for the issue of debentures for carrying out the objects of the act, Mr. White in the chair.

Agreed to.

The house adjourned till to morrow morning.

SPIRIT OF THE TIMES.

Rowing.

Advices from Australia say that the proposal to take an eight-oared crew to England has been abandoned for this year, too much time having been allowed to elapse before any practical steps to raise funds and to get the crew together were taken. It is probable that the trip will be made next year, and that the crew will return home via San Francisco, expecting to get on a race in America with a Yale eight. They will, however, be willing to row any crew offering to meet them.

William O'Connor, the Champion sculler of the United States, and George Lee, his trainer, are at present in Washington Territory giving exhibition races. They will shortly leave for Canada. O'Connor will not go to Australia to row Searle for the championship of the world, but may meet him in England the coming season.—N. Y. Sun.

A double scull race between Al. Hamm and Jake Gandaur in one boat and John Teemer and Joe. Hosmer in another will be arranged in a few days.

The Turf.

The New York Jockey Club announces that it has received 1,460 entries for the twelve stake events it proposes giving next August, when the big $1,000,000 track at West Chester will be opened. The White Plains Handicap for two-year-olds, at three-quarters of a mile received the unusually large entry of 246, while the Great Eclipse Stakes, also for two-year-olds, at the same distance, received 212 entries. Of the three-year-old fixtures, the Pelham Bay Handicap, at one mile and a quarter, closed with 108 nominations, and the New York Jockey Club Handicap, is easily first of the all-aged events with 110 entries.

The Ring.

Later particulars concerning the Carroll-Blakelock fight says it was one of great interest as neither of the men has ever suffered defeat in the ring, Carroll carrying everything before him and Blakelock being the hero of 33 battles. For the first six rounds Blakelock had the best of it hitting Carroll several times and escaping without a return. On the seventh, however, Carroll got warmed up and struck his opponent a terrible blow on the mouth for which first blood was allowed. From this out the fight was a continuation of rushes and returns and on the fifteenth round Blakelock was knocked out.

The glove fight between Joe Lannon and Jack Ashton is "off" for the present.

Our local pugilists are not making much money just now. They are becoming quite famous however by their talking, and doubtless that is more paying than fighting for $10 a side.

Carrol once fought six rounds with Tom Bates, which resulted in a draw.

Notes.

The annual report of the New York Athletic club shows a net gain for the year of $21,253. The club's balance over liabilities amounts to $165,650.56. The athletic competition account footed up $11,603.

M. W. Ford, holder of the broad jumping record, says that it is only a question of a good day and grounds when Schifferstein will eclipse all broad jumping records.

Al. Pratt, of Pittsburg, has received a letter from Tener, pitcher of the Chicagos. Tener says the most wealthy and aristocratic crowds that ever assembled outdoors have witnessed the ball games in Europe.

Jubilee sports will be held in Dartmouth, to-morrow evening, by the colored athletes of that place.

Among the events are a 1-mile race, two 2-mile races, 5-mile, hurdle, obstacle and potator races.

There are no entries noticed from St. John.

Steve Brodie is willing to swim Capt. Boyton for $600 a side from Newburg to the battery in the Hudson or he will wager $1000 that he can beat Boyton across the English Channel.

The splendid throwing of the American ball players has made more impression than anything else on the English sportsmen.

The Cleveland club is scheduled to travel 9462 miles this season. The club's railroad bill alone will be about $20,000.

The Miramichi Foundry shipped, on Monday last, two large compound Edgers and one Lath machine to a milling firm at Ottawa. The Edgers will edge 75 to 85 M. superficial feet in a day of 10 hours. The Lath machine is capable of cutting 50 M. of laths in the same time.

ALDERMAN,
and respectfully request your vote and support. I am opposed to the wilful expenditure of large sums of money for water or any other purpose by which the bonded indebtedness of the city is increased. I believe in Retrenchment and Reform. "Abolish wasteful expenditure and live on your income" shall be my motto if elected.
Yours to serve,
J. G. FORBES.

DANGER!
People having Feather beds and Pillows do not seem to realize the danger there is in using them without being cleaned, especially in times of an epidemic, as feathers retain all the exhalations and poisonous matter exuding from the person, and by so doing spread sickness through the family.
Our steam cleansing process eliminates all the poisonous matter and leaves the feathers in a better condition than ever.
