Poetry.

WHO SHALL JUDGE.

Who shall judge man from his manner?
Who shall know him by his dress
Paupers may be fit for princes,
Princes fit for something less;
Crumbled shirt and dirty jacket
May beclothe the golden ore,
Or the deepest thoughts and feelings?
Satin vest can do no more.

There are streams of crystal nectar
Ever flowing out of stone,
There are purple beds and golden,
Hidden, crushed and overthrown.
God, who counts by souls, not dresses,
Loves and prospers you and me,
While he values thrones the highest
But as pebbles in the sea.

Oft forgets his fellow then:
Masters, rulers, lords, remember
That your meanest hinds are men
Men of labor, men of feeling,
Men of thought, and men of fame,
Claiming rights to golden sunshine
In a man's ennobling name.

There are foam-embroidered oceans.
There are little wood-clad rills;
There are feeble, inch-high saplings
There are cedars on hills.
God, who counts by souls, not stations,
Loves and prospers you and me;
For to Him all vain distinctions
Are as pebbles in the sea.

Tollings hands alone are builders
Of a nation's wealth and fame;
Titled laziness is pensioned,
Fed and fattened on the same,
By the sweat of other's foreheads,
Living only to rejoice,
While the poor man's outraged freedom
Vainly lifts its feeble voice.

Truth and justice are eternal,
Borne with loveliness and light;
Secret wrongs will never prosper
While there is a sunny right.
God, whose world-wide voice is singing
Boundless love to you and me,
Heeds oppression with its titles
But as pebbles in the sea.

Select Story.

Poverty and Preserved Ginger.

I was requested to visit a family on St. James street. There were three in the group—husband, wife and a baby less than four months old. They had come to Richmond on their way north; the man had neither money nor employment, the wife no force nor strength, and the child seriously ill. They had not a cent to buy milk or medicine for the child—nor a morsel of bread, nor anything that could be used to give light. The house was small with an insufficient supply of furniture. They had secured it by paying nearly all the money they had brought with them the small remainder had been expended in the purchase of some smoked salmon, three oranges, and a yellow glass to hang around the baby's neck, A sensible calico gowny hung on a closet door, but the woman wore a silk dress which seemed covered with the rust of ages. Around her neck was a gold-colored chain composed of enormous links and apparently holding a watch in her belt. I asked her the time, as my watch was out of order. She explained that the chain was attached to the key of her trunk. "However lowly," said she, "I may have descended into the cloudy vale of—of—I meant to say the cloudy vale of woe; no, that's too strong—"

"Misfortune," I suggested.

"Thank you, sir; however lowly I may have descended into the cloudy vale of misfortune, there are ties which cause memory to be ordorous with the light of days gone by."

"She was brought up to have all that heart could wish;" the man remarked, by way, probable, of explaining her high-flown language.

"This dress, that I had at boarding-school, I wear to remind me of my delight in soaring over the pains of arithmetic and geography, and this chain I keep as a momentum of my bridal."

Mr. Rowley was not always so ambitious as his wife in the use of language, but was greatly influenced by her, and listened admiringly to her discourse. Mrs. Rowley was the daugher of a successful junk-dealer, and had nearly ruined her mind by trashy reading. Mr. Rowley had been before his marriage, an amiable, purposeless young man, who had met this imaginative damsels in a rail-car, escorted her home, and shortly afterwards' clandestinely married her, for which he received and shared with her the curses of his father-in-law, whose door neither of them dare darken. Mr. Rowley lost one situation after another, through lack of force and energy, and finally obtained a situation as overseer of a farm. There he fell into the greatest destitution. He was totally ignorant of the work which he had undertaken, and of course, failed miserably. They suffered greatly, and left, considering themselves cruelly treated, although the owner of the farm was a serious loser by the reason of their incompetence.

Their suffering from cold, hunger and exposure, could not have been experienced on a Virginia farm, excepting as the consequence of that kind of inefficiency best represented as "not knowing how to do anything." In such a place, people can hardly be destitute of food and warmth, unless they are also so destitute of common sense that they do not know how use the means of comfort which are at hand. Two more impractical persons I never saw. Their condition in no way depressed them. He would talk of "property" and she of "society" as blithely as though they were possessed of every comfort, and had an assured future; they were as foolish as it is possible for grown up people to be.

Before I saw them again, the oranges and salmon were gone. Rowley had found no employment, and nothing was left but for them to accept charity. They did that gratefully and on giving her a small sum of money, I ventured to name to Mrs. Rowley one or two stores where it might be expended to advantage. "At Mr.—'s store," I said, "you will find some excellent herring."

"Herring!" she said, I don't deny that they are savory, but as I peer through the vista of life—I mean the life that is to come—not eternity, but the shadowy vista of this world's futurity, and see my child a maiden fulfilling her duties upon the stage of existence, what would be her feelings if she were to know that her mother had eaten herrings."

"I cannot imagine," I replied; "that is a fact of which she will be aware when she comes to maturity, that you ate herrings when she was four months old."

"You see," she rejoined, in my juvenile days the family who lived next door to us were very unpoetical in their aspirations—they ate herrings.

Another family near us were groveling in their ideas—they partook of the same diet. Other people in sight of us, who could not rise to gentility, fed upon herrings; I fancy they would prevent any rising of the mind to the heights it would seek on the wings of fancy."

"Let me beg you," I said, "for the sake of your husband and child, not to think of heights and poetry just now, when common sense is required."

"I am sure," she said, "for that common sense is my strong point. I try to inflate my husband with burning enthusiasm; the rewards of glory are before every man who will achieve the success which will encircle his name with a golden wreath of unfaded laurel."

Rowley now came in, disapointed. He had been after a situation, which some one had obtained before him.

"This is a mean world," he said, "I tell you what," to his wife, "I saw a dress at the milliner's for sixteen dollars, and I vowed if I got the place I would buy that dress the first thing!"

It turned ont that while Mr. Rowley had been walking around the coveted dress, chatting and joking with street acquaintances, and smoking and trifling at the corner, some one else had taken the place he wanted, and could have had on my recomendation, if he had gone straight about his buisness. After some serious reproof as to his neglect, I said:

"Now, Mr. Rowley, I would like to suggest a little as to the laying out of a small sum for the comfort of your family. Do you know any store conveniently near?"

"I'd rather go further off," he said; stock in these suburban stores is limited; I couldn't find one of them that keeps preserved ginger."

"Don't think of such nonsense; try to see what is really necessary. Have you any bread, flour or meal?"

"Not a crumb, or dust."

"Then take this money, get some milk for the baby, a chicken for your wife, and some good honest corned beef for yourself."

"Dont you think," asked Mrs. Rowley, that there is something in corned beef that's apt to give us thickness of perception, and to undermine the elegence of our literary tastes?"

"Don't you think, Mrs. Rowley, that if we don't get anything to eat at all, it my undermine life itself?"

I tried many plans to convey, without rudeness, my contempt for her absurdities of expression. At last I thought of making her repeat them. I asked him how he chanced to think of living on a farm.

"Why, sir," his wife replied, "I sighed for the balm of a rural atmosphere, and in many a day dream I glided where the frisking lambs, sporting on the crystalized meadows, snuffed the evanescent mountain dew."

Her husband looked at me, his eyes gleaming with pride. My plan tried more than once, was a total failure since she never failed to repeat her pompous periods, word for word.

Mr. Rowley still continued to hunt situations without success. One morning he said,

"I had goo l luck yesterday,'

I supposed he had obtained a position, and said so. But he answered,

"I found a five dollar note."

"Very good, if the loser can hear of it."

'That would be bad,' said he, 'for it's all gone.'

'I suppose you paid your rent and milk woman.'

It turned out that he had purchased some turtle soup, some fresh butter and canned lobster—all luxuries in Richmond.

"Did you buy five dollars worth of these things?"

'No—I laid out the balance in a breastpin for my wife, and some Roman candles for the baby,'

How could such an incorrigible be helped? This man, boasting of his gentlemanliness and his family, wou'd remain in any and every presence with his hat on and when soliciting a merchant for a situation, would sit half bent, hugging his knees by the hour, the picture of shiftless laziness.

After a while, arrangement were made by which some of their relatives agreed to help them if they would come to Baltimore. Before they started the child was to be baptised. I asked the mother what it was to be called.

She said, 'Clorina Waroola.'

'Let me babtise her 'Mary', or 'Helen,' or 'Alice', or some simple name,'

'I've set my heart on the other. It is the name of the heroine in an Indian story; she was a very beautiful character.,

I yielded. Next morning they departed. Mr. Rowley shook my hand and kissed it, as I gave him the means for his journey, Mrs. Rowley was characteristic. Weeping she sobbed out,

'The-bleak-wastes-of-life-are-before-us-but my-vision-will-often-revert-to-you-as-the-greenest-spot-it-has-ever-beheld!'

An old black woman, reciting her "speerunce" said she had been no heaven. "Did you see any of de colored ladies dar?" asked a younger sister. "Oh, you git out; you 'spose, I went in de kitchen when I was dar?"

"What is your name?" asked a census taker. "John Corcoran." Your age?' 'Twenty-one." "What nativity?" "Well, that's what bothers me. I'll tell you, and may be you can make it out. My father was Irish, but is now a naturalized American citizen; my mother English; and I was born on a Dutch frigate, under the French flag in Turkish waters Now, how is it?"

The other day two citizens stood in the rain discussing the merits of the German tongue; one was a native, the other an importation from faderland. The native finally wound up by saying, somewhat profanely: "This is a nice language; just look at the names—the d—l couldn't spell them," "Dat is so," replied the Teuton; "de tuyfel he don't got no German names on his pooks."

NOT MUCH CHANGED.—A party had met at a public table, when the conversation turned on the subject of transmigration. Mr. K. was a firm believer in the doctrine, and was expatiating largely upon its points when he was interrupted by a gentleman who was present with—"K., what do you suppose yourself to have been before you were L. K.?" "I do dot know," replied K., "I might have been a hog for aught I know." Well," rejoined his friend, "you have not changed much—only got upon your hind legs."

SOME years ago, in one of our western courts, three men, an Englishman, an Irishman and a Scotchman, were found guilty of murder, and sentenced to be hung. The judge told them they could each choose the tree on which they would like to be strung up. The Scotchman promptly chose an ash tree and the Englishman an oak tree. "Well, Pat, what will you be hung on?" "If it please your honor, I'd rather be hung on a gooseberry bush." "Oh," said the judge, "that's not big enough." "Begorry thin," replied Pat, brightening up, "I'll wait till it grows."

It tells you all about the Morale of Generative Physiology, the Physiology of Marriage, of Women and Offspring, Physical Contrasts, True Morality, Empiricism, Perversion of Marriage, Unusual Precepts and Friendly Counsel, Physical Infirmity, Its Causes and Cure, Relations between the Sexes Proofs of the Expansiveness of Love, The Miseries of Imprudence, Ancient Ignorance and Errors, Means of Cure, Cure of body and mind, True Principles of Treatment, Advice to Patients and Invalid Readers, The Author's Principles. The price of this book is only $1.00.

This Book also contains More Than Forty Prescriptions for the above named and other diseases, each one worth more than the price of the book.

No another valuable medical work treating exclusively on MENTAL AND NERVOUS DISEASES has more than 200 royal octavo pages, or half as many engravings, bound in substantial cloth, for double the price, enough to pay for printing.

The Book for young and middle-aged men to read just now, is the Science of Life, or Self Preservation. The Author has returned from Europe in excellent health, and is again the Chief Consulting Physician of the Peabody Medical Institute, No. 4 Bulfinch Street, Boston, Mass."—Republican Journal.

"The Science of Life is beyond all comparison the most extraordinary work on Physiology ever published."—Boston Herald.

"Hope nestled in the bottom of Pandora's box, and hope plumes her wings anew, since the benefits of these valuable works, published by the Peabody Medical Institute, which are teaching thousands how to avoid the maladies that sap the vitals of life."—Philadelphia Enquirer.

"It should be read by the young, the middle-aged and even the old."—New York Tribune.

"Of first and only Medal ever conferred upon any Medical Man in this country, as a recognition of skill and professional services, was presented to the author of these works, March 31st, 1876. The presentation was witnessed at the time of occurrence by the Boston Press, and the news was journeyed throughout the country. This magnificent Medal is of solid gold, set with more than one hundred India diamonds of rare brilliancy.

"Altogether, in its execution and the richness of its material and size, this is decidedly the most noticeable medal ever struck in this country for any purpose whatever. It is well worth the inspection of Numismatists. It was fairly and manfully bestowed."—Massachusetts Ploughman, June 3d, 1876.

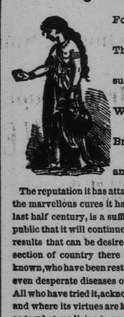
Ayer's
Cherry Pectoral



For Diseases of the Throat and Lungs, such as Coughs, Colds, Whooping Cough, Bronchitis, Asthma, and Consumption.

The reputation it has attained, in consequence of the marvellous cures it has produced during the last half century, is a sufficient assurance to the public that it will continue to realize the happiest results that can be desired. In almost every section of country there are persons, publicly known, who have been restored from alarming and even desperate diseases of the lungs, by its use. All who have tried it, acknowledge its superiority; and where its virtues are known, no one hesitates as to what medicine to employ to relieve the distress and suffering peculiar to pulmonary affections. CHERRY PECTORAL always affords instant relief, and performs rapid cures of the milder varieties of bronchial disorder, as well as the more formidable diseases of the lungs.

As a safeguard to children, amid the distressing diseases which beset the Throat and Chest of Childhood, it is invaluable; for, by its timely use, multitudes are rescued and restored to health.

This medicine gains friends at every trial, as the cures it is constantly producing are too remarkable to be forgotten. No family should be without it, and those who have once used it never will.

Eminent Physicians throughout the country prescribe it, and Clergymen often recommend it from their knowledge of its effects.

DR. CHANNING'S
Sarsaparilla
FOR THE BLOOD

CURES SYPHILIS, SCROFULA, SALT-RHEUM, ALL SKIN-DISEASES, TUMORS, ENLARGEMENT OF THE LIVER AND SPLEEN, RHEUMATIC AFFECTIONS, DISEASES OF THE KIDNEYS, BLADDER AND URINARY ORGANS, LEUCORRHŒA, CATARRH, AND ALL DISEASES RESULTING FROM A DEPRAVED AND IMPURE CONDITION OF THE BLOOD.

A HIGHLY CONCENTRATED EXTRACT OF RED JAMAICA SARSAPARILLA AND THE DOUBLE IODIDES

Space forbids the giving more testimony in this place, in favor of this great medicine. I do not one certificate, however, from an eminent and well known Physician like Dr. Pease of Montreal, sufficient to establish its superiority over the numerous mixtures called Blood Purifiers offered by Druggists and others?

T. C. STRATTON, Esq., Montreal, Feb. 1st, 1875.

I cannot but record the benefit, from which Dr. Channing's Sarsaparilla prepared, as one of the best possible combinations to constitute an effectual remedy, for the cure of Blood Impurities. Its use in my experience I have seen with this remedy. I can testify to its great value in the treatment of all strumous and Cachectic affections, as Glandular Enlargements, and a wide range of skin affections; as a reliable preparation for general use as a blood purifier, I know of none equal to it, combining as it does, all the implied virtues of Sarsaparilla, and several other reliable remedies, with the extracted nary alterative properties of the "Double Iodides," and of none that can be more highly recommended as safe, certain and reliable, and I have every confidence, that such a remedy for general use, taking the place of the many worthless nostrums of the day, will be a great boon to suffering humanity, and its use will be attended with the most satisfactory results. It should be invaluable to practitioners beyond the reach of medical advice, and will, no doubt, become popular with Medical men throughout the country.

Respectfully yours,
W. E. BESSEY, M.D.
