THE KING OF NO-LAND.

BY B. L. FARJEON.

VIII.

"A pleasant and sacred subject, my lord. I will listen to what you have to say."

The King settled himself comfortably in an easy chair. Lord Crabtree, thus encouraged, cleared his throat, and proceeded.

"Your most gracious Majesty's health is not good."

"Truly, my Lord, I suffer much. What has that to do with the subject in hand?"

"Your Majesty, marriage is good for the health."

"Ah! and I am to take it as if it were a pill."

"Your Majesty's wit is transcendant. Will your Majesty, looking upon me for the nonce in the light of a physician—and I may consider myself one on this subject, having lived matrimonially for seven-and-twenty years—condescend to explain to me the ordinary symptoms of your sickness?"

"My symptoms? Let me think. First, my lord, a general weariness."

"Good—good. A disinclination for society."

"Especially for society that bores me. A desire for solitude—a wish that I could shut the door upon the world, and be let alone. Then an inclination to make myself disagreeable, from which I am sure, my lord, you have suffered much. Then a general peevishness, and a tendency to believe that most things are wrong."

"As I expected, your Majesty. A complete disorganization of the system."

"Precisely. Leading me to take distorted views of things. As, for instance, that absurd fancy of mine the other day concerning the Garden and the Present. You must have been much astonished, my lord, at my wild words."

"Dwas, your Majesty, I was. I have thought seriously and deeply upon your Majesty's remarks about that garden—have put all my mind to them—and I have been unable to arrive at an understanding of them."

"I do not wonder at it, my lord. Are my symptoms such as you imagined?"

"Your Majesty, they tally exactly with the diagnosis I have made of your Majesty's health. And the royal physicians are with me."

In this way Lord Crabtree placed himself above the royal physicians.

"And you still prescribe—"

"Marriage, your Majesty. The pleasantest medicine!"

"Have you found it so, my lord?"

Lord Crabtree winced slightly.

"Lady Crabtree and I are of one mind upon that, your Majesty. Nothing could have been better." But his voice was not remarkable for cheerfulness as he made the declaration.

"I desire no greater happiness, said King Sassafras, in a musing tone, "than to mate with one to whom my heart is drawn. A partnership of hearts and souls, my lord, as well as of hands. Heaven upon earth must be realized in the perfect joy of such an union."

Lord Crabtree listened with delight. All was going on swimmingly.

"The wisest man, your Majesty, that ever lived—"

The fussy, fidgety manner of Lord Crabtree changed the King's humor.

"Surely the man lives not in my kingdom, my lord? His name?"

"The great King Solomon, your Majesty. He, who knew how to rightly estimate all things, spoke in favor of matrimony."

"Give his vote for it. I can not call to mind the manner or the matter of his testimony."

"Did he not say that a virtuous woman was a crown of something to her husband? I forget the precise words."

"Something in the jewel way, doubtless, as a woman was in question. He should have known the value of a wife. He had a thousand who ought to have stood to him in that connection."

"Has your Majesty ever given the matter a thought?" inquired Lord Crabtree.

"I have, my lord; many and many a dream have I indulged in, in which I have pictured the pure delights which wait on mutual love. Is it possible such happiness can ever be mine?" He rose and paced the room with an agitated air. "Can it ever, ever be? Or am I doomed to be denied the sweetest blessing which life contains? My lord, I can see the woman I would fain call my queen."

"See her, your Majesty!" and Lord Crabtree looked about him anxiously, in the fear that some fair nymph was concealed behind the curtains.

"She is here, my lord," said King Sassafras, touching his forehead, and, relieved of his fears, Lord Crabtree gave a sigh of relief. "If one could find her now! And if there was no obstacle in the way!"

He paused before Lord Crabtree, and the old courtier leaned forward, and rubbed his hands to and fro upon his knees, and chucked like an old hen.

"What obstacle can there be in the way, your Majesty? What other gentleman in the world can choose as your Majesty can choose, with the certainty of being blessed? Not that but the lady will be much more blessed. A happy, happy lady! A queen whom all will envy!" And Lord Crabtree rubbed his hands more vigorously upon his shaky old knees.

King Sassafras gazed upon him with suspicion. "I do not understand, my lord."

"If one could find her now!" chuckled Lord Crabtree. "If one could find her now! That is what your Majesty said. He! he! he!" And having had his wheezy old laugh out, Lord Crabtree whispered confidentially, "Your Majesty, we have found her!"

The King started back, and his face grew pale.

"You have found her!" he echoed.

Lord Crabtree was so enthusiastic in his purpose that he did not observe the expression on his royal master's countenance.

"We have found her, your Majesty! A Princess in whose veins runs the blood of half a hundred kings. A Princess whose lineage will add honor and lustre even to the House of Sassafras. A Princess who—"

"Stop, my lord. Of what lady are you speaking?"

"The Princess Calm, your Majesty, whom you met, doubtless, in your travels. A girl then; a woman now. A Princess out of a thousand, your Majesty! Happy, happy day!"

"Say no more, my lord," cried the King haughtily. "So, you have measured even this part of my life for me. This the union of hearts and souls that you propose to me. Why, my lord, you must think me a very puppet, or something worse! The lady to whom you refer I never met in my travels: she never saw me, nor I her. I know her, of course, as does all the world, as the daughter of a great king, and that is all. She speaks not a word of my language, nor I a word of hers. From the different circumstances of our lives, from the opposite natures of the peoples over whom her royal father and I reign, it is almost impossible that we can have one sentiment in common. Our laws are different; our institutions are different; our religions are different. I love my country; I love my people, cut off from them as it seems to me I am. What would the world be but for love? and am I to be deprived of it because I had the misfortune to be born a prince? If I met with one of my own people in whose breast dwells all that is pure and good and innocent, and to whom my heart is drawn by that sweet sentiment which humanizes the world, why should I not mate with her?"

Ayer's

Sarsaparilla

Is widely known as one of the most effectual remedies ever discovered for cleansing the system and purifying the blood. It has stood the test of years, with a constantly growing reputation, based on its intrinsic virtues, and sustained by its remarkable cures. So mild as to be safe and beneficial to children, and yet so searching as to effectually purge out the great corruptions of the blood, such as the scrofulous and syphilitic contamination. Impurities, or diseases that have lurked in the system for years, soon yield to this powerful antidote, and disappear. Hence its wonderful cures, many of which are publicly known, of Scrofula, and all scrofulous diseases, Ulcers, Eruptions, and eruptive disorders of the skin, Tumors, Blotches, Boils, Pimples, Pustules, Sores, St. Anthony's Fire, Rose or Erysipelas, Tetter, Salt Rheum, Scald Head, Ringworm, and internal Ulcerations of the Uterus, Stomach, and Liver. It also cures other complaints, to which it would not seem especially adapted, such as Dropsy, Dyspepsia, Fits, Neuralgia, Heart Disease, Female Weakness, Debility, and Leucorrhœa, when they are manifestations of the scrofulous poisons.

It is an excellent restorer of health and strength in the Spring. By renewing the appetite and vigor of the digestive organs, it dissipates the depression and listless languor of the season. Even where no disorder appears, people feel better, and live longer, for cleansing the blood. The system moves on with renewed vigor and a new lease of life.
