WOOED IN THE DOCK.

BY D. W. C. N.

There were twenty-seven persons charged with various offences before his honor that morning. It was only about eighteen months ago.

One of the accused was a young girl about 17, who was weeping very bitterly. The usual crowd of hangers-on to the police court was leering eagerly at the unfortunate tramp, the irreclaimable drunkard, the foreheadless petty larcenist and the burly burglar.

But there was something in this young girl's sobs, in this sorrow of the fair-haired maiden who had passed the night in the same cell with drunken prostitutes, female dive thieves and women of the worst class, that was heart-breaking.

Even the bailiff of the court—accustomed to criminal misery and inured to scenes of suffering, from the suicide of a wanton to the execution of a murderer and his parting with his mother and sisters—even the bailiff felt touched, and, walking up to the railing, whispered some kind word in her ear.

And next to her sat a young man pale as death. The humiliation of his position stood out in bold bas relief in his attitude and in every feature of his face, in the nervous clutch of his hands, in the shifting of his feet, the disarranged hair, and the silently expressed suffering.

The judge was late that morning and kept the prisoners waiting.

"Don't cry," the young man was saying to the girl who sat next to him. "I am sure you have done nothing wrong. I would pledge my life that you have not. Tell me your troubles and I will tell you mine. I have been with a wholesale jeweller for two years, and I got into bad company, took some gold that I was to work up into a bracelet and sold it. I first accused some one of having stolen it, but last night I confessed. They had me arrested, and I shall plead guilty and take my punishment."

The girl turned her head quickly, and between her sobs said:

"But I—I have done nothing wrong; only one of the girls at the store where I worked put some lace in my pocket because—because she is jealous of me, and then they found it there, and a policeman came, and—oh, my heart is breaking!"

"Hugh Murray, accused of robbing his employer, what have you to say?"

"Guilty."

His face was whiter than ever, but his mouth was firm and resolute and, after he had said the word that made him a convict, he faced the magistrate and said:

"Your honor, I have said guilty because I should be a liar if I said anything else; but, your honor, I have this to add to my plea: I never drank wine in all my life until last Friday night, and I was utterly under its influence when I took that gold."

And at this juncture an elderly man stepped forward and said, in a voice choked with emotion, "Your honor, I am this young man's employer, and I am sorry that I have taken these steps now. With your permission I will withdraw the charge."

But his honor only looked a little dimly through his spectacles and said: "Too late, complaint sworn to, arrest made, prisoner pleads guilty."

And so it came to pass that Hugh Murray expiated the one criminal act of his life by six months in the house of correction.

But before he left the dock he managed to whisper to his neighbor: "Tell me your name, won't you? I have been so bad, and I am sure you are so good; and perhaps when my punishment is over you who are so gentle will let me come and see you, and call you friend."

And she, with her great eyes all bleared with tears, said faintly: "My name is Isabel—Isabel Daly. I hope you won't ever be bad again, and that they won't be unkind to you."

And he passed out of the dock with those words ringing in his ears: "I hope you won't ever be bad again, and that they won't be unkind to you." And when he reached the cell from which they were to take him away to the house of correction, the firmness that kept him up so far all left him, and, crouched on the cold stones, he burst into a passionate fit of weeping.

He was not long alone, for his employer had followed him, and the once severe master was now as badly broken down as the clerk whom he had caused to be punished so severely. The old jeweller put his arms around Hugh's neck and for several minutes could not speak. At last he said:

"My poor boy, I wish I could undo this. When I saw you standing in the dock, you made me think of a boy of my own who was ruined by the wine cup, and left me for I don't know where. What can I do? How can I undo this?"

There was no reply, for both hearts were too full to speak for a moment; but the young man at last raised his head and said:

"I was not crying like a baby for my punishment, and I have nothing but good will to you. If you have been harsh to me, I don't know it. Let me be candid with you. I was a thief, and I was a drunkard—a thief for the first time and a drunkard for the first time; but still I was both. If you think you have been harsh, then, when my punishment is over, help me to go somewhere where I can get work—a long way off, where my story is not known; and, as I live, I will repay your kindness tenfold. And there is a young girl," he continued, "charged with stealing some lace, up-stairs. Will you see to her? I am sure she is innocent, and in the dock she forgot all her troubles for a moment to ask me never to be bad again. It was that, Mr. Belden, which made me give way so weakly."

The parting was a very sad one, but the inevitable had to come, and Hugh Murray was for six months to come only "No. 143," in the western corridor.

A few days after he had been in prison he received a trunk full of new clothing from his late employer, some luxuries in the way of food, etc., that were specially permitted by the warden, and the following letter:

"My Dear Hugh: Please accept the accompanying little gifts from me, and keep up a good heart. I send you some useful books with which to employ your time. Your friend, who was in such trouble, was perfectly innocent, and was discharged, her arrest having been a conspiracy, and she is now head saleswoman of the house where she was accused of theft. I called and told her yesterday how bitterly you suffered from her sympathy, and the noble girl burst into tears, and bade me tell you to be of good courage and never to be bad again."

* * * * * *

And a year after this there was a little quiet wedding in Toronto, Canada, and the bridegroom was a successful young jeweller just started in business, and president of one of the local total abstinence societies, while the bride's name was Isabel Daly. And as he held her to his heart after the ceremony, he whispered: "Darling, do you remember that you were wooed in a prison dock?"

The one strange thing about the wedding was, however, that when they got to their new little home there was a letter addressed to Mr. and Mrs. Murray, and it has a smudge on it just like as if an old-fashioned salt tear had fallen on it, and all that was inside of it was a check for $1000, signed by Everett Belden.

Faith Cures at Old Orchard Camp.

(Biddeford [Me.] Journal.)

Among the accounts of cures at the Old Orchard camp-meeting are two which deserve special attention. One is the experience of Mrs. Caroline Talbot, a member of the society of Friends. It seems that she has been troubled for years with a very dangerous form of heart disease, for which eminent physicians have assured her there was no remedy. She has travelled extensively in this and the old country, but to no avail. Her condition finally became such that she was unable even to dress herself or to comb her hair without assistance, and she could walk only a few feet at a time. In this state of health she came to the meeting, believing she could be healed. The journey was a great task to her strength, and she was unable to leave her bed. Dr. Cullis called on her and offered prayer in her behalf. She at once received strength, so that she was able to rise, make her own toilet, and walked some distance to the meeting. This she has done every day since, and believes that she is entirely cured. No one who is acquainted with the circumstances can doubt her statement.

The other case is that of an old gentleman who has used tobacco for over thirty years. So strong was the habit that he was not satisfied with chewing all day, but would rise two or three times during the night to get a chew. He was as much a slave to it as a drunkard to his cups. Sunday morning he decided to give up the habit, and threw away his tobacco. That night he was almost insane as the result. Dr. Cullis offered prayer in his behalf, and his appetite was entirely removed. He said that he felt perfectly well, and had no more desire for tobacco than the doctor himself.

CHEAP ADVERTISING —IN—
THE WORLD,

The Only ONE CENT Morning Paper in Canada.

THE TORONO WORLD, although only recently established as a morning paper, is already read widely, not only in Toronto but in every town and village of any importance in Ontario, as well as in many places in Quebec and Manitoba, and its circulation is advancing by more than one hundred daily. The afternoon edition also continues to grow in favor throughout the city and suburbs and to command an increasingly numerous circle of readers. The large and rapidly-increasing circulation of THE WORLD on the one hand, and its reasonable rates on the other, must commend it to all classes of advertisers as a most desirable medium of communicating with the public.

THE WORLD is published every morning at five o'clock. Extra editions are also published whenever there is news of sufficient moment to demand them.

All advertisements are measured as solid nonpareil, twelve lines to an inch.

ORDINARY RATES

are as follows:

Casual advertisements, of whatever nature, FIVE CENTS a line for each insertion.

Reports of meetings and financial statements of banks, and railway, insurance and monetary companies, TEN CENTS a line.

Paragraphs among news items, double the ordinary rates.

Special notices, twenty-five per cent. advance on the ordinary rates.

Birth, marriage and death notices, TWENTY CENTS each.

Concise scl advertisements on the first page, HALF A CENT a word, each insertion.
