CANTERBURY'S VISIT

Archbishop of Armagh Declares It a Fine Object Lesson.

Dublin, June 1.—The Archbishop of Armagh, in an address before the Church of Ireland, said that the conception of the religion of a great state, seen in an exalted position like that of the Archbishop of Canterbury, produced a great effect where it might be least expected. For instance, when the present archbishop visited America not many months ago, his words were followed by countless thousands; his visit almost overshadowed the presidential election. This was no doubt greatly because he represented the most sane and masculine conception of the reformation—that which endowed philosophy with a faith and faith with a philosophy, faith which was not afraid to reason, and a philosophy which was not ashamed to adore.

The archbishop also said that the appointment to parishes was mostly in the hands of the bishops. No doubt there was much room during recent years for the imputation of nepotism. He recollected the great names of the establishment; the plaintive beauty of a Christian priest in Goldsmith's "Deserted Village" was taken from a clergyman of the Established Church of Ireland. Was it not a bad sign when nations took to disestablishing churches and enabling predatory prime ministers and chancellors of the exchequer to lay bogus surpluses before an excited crowd? But it was surely an evil for the children of the church to have everything paid for them.

Labatt's PORTER

(LONDON)

Proved to be the best by analysis of four chemists, and by awards of the world's great exhibitions, especially Chicago 1893, where it received ninety-six points out of a possible hundred, much higher than any other porter in the United States or Canada.
