FASHIONABLE SHOPLIFTING.

A Beautiful Daughter of Countess Tolstoi Brought Up for Pilfering.

[From The London Telegraph.]

PARIS, Aug. 15.—This has been a regular field day at the police courts. On the bench allotted to the prisoners were seated two ladies. The one, a handsome blonde of 35, with features of remarkable delicacy, spoke French with an excellent accent and comported herself with the utmost dignity. She was no less a personage than Mme. Marie Nasimoff, daughter of Prince Viazimski and Countess Tolstoi. The lady is therefore a bona fide Russian Princess. She was divorced from her husband seven years ago by a special ukase of the Czar. The gentleman had been in the habit of knocking her about, and had actually been condemned at Nice for his shortcomings toward his spouse, to three months' imprisonment. The Czar's ukase settled the matter in a way satisfactory to all parties, and thenceforth Mme. de Nasimoff, free as air, was able to enjoy life without any apprehension of blows and bruises. She shone like a star at Nice, delighting her numerous friends and acquaintances with her concerts and receptions. Her voice was much admired, and in her intervals of repose from social engagements she climbed the Mount of Parnassus and contributed the results of her draughts from the Pierian spring to the local newspapers. One of her poems was entitled "Le Regard," and treated of the "Timid Virgin" and of "Chaste Pleasure." Another was headed "Confidence a Demain," while "Deception" was the title of a third. Melancholy seems to have tuned Mme. de Nasimoff's lyre. Besides these inspired works, the minions of the law had unearthed a whole budget of correspondence with "crowned heads," which, it is to be feared, have since been shaking rather ominously.

The other tenants of the prisoners' bench was Mlle. Nadedja de Fomine. She is 36 years old, the daughter of the late Gen. Demetri of the Czar's Guards, and to this day she receives from His Imperial Majesty a yearly allowance of $1200. Moreover, she writes for some of the Muscovite papers, acts as interpreter occasionally, and when she got into the scrape which launched her in the Police Court, was playing the further role of dame de compagnie to Mme. Marie de Nasimoff. What had brought these Russian ladies of high degree to this unpleasant predicament? A visit to the big Louvre shops on July 15, the day after the national fete and the grand review at Longchamps. They had been watched closely by two inspectors. One of them stated that the ladies had bought a few things; but had helped themselves to many more. He warned his comrade, who arrested the Princess in the Rue de Rivoli, while he took her companion in custody. When they were searched a quantity of articles for which they had not paid were found on their persons. They formed a miscellaneous collection, including scissors, cigarette holders, pencils, cigarette papers, cheap watches and chains, soap, card cases and toilet powder. The ladies were at once imprisoned pending their trial. In court today Mme. de Nasimoff declared that she had had nothing to do with the thefts, and that she thought that all the articles taken had been paid for. Her companion pretended that she had possessed herself of the things in a fit of absent-mindedness. Finally the Princess was acquitted, while Mlle. de Fomine was sentenced to a month's imprisonment.

A PROBLEM FOR JOCKEYS.

How to Reduce Weight and Not Bring On Great Bodily Weakness.

From The Chicago Herald.

There is always a vast quantity of absurd talk about jockeys being weak and unable to reduce weight without great effort. McLaughlin has been known to reduce from 129 to 110 pounds in five days and feel all the better for it.

"I am stronger and healthier when in training," he declared to a reporter the other day, "and enjoy life a great deal more at 110 than at 130 pounds."

This is true also of the majority of naturally heavy weight riders. Tumpkins is one of the best known jockeys now at the West Side Driving Park, and he rides ordinarily at 115 pounds. Last Tuesday he was engaged to ride Emma Manley in the fourth race at 109 pounds, and in order to lose the necessary amount of avoirdupois, abstained from food for thirty-six hours, besides sweating and taking a number of Turkish baths. This was reducing in more haste than is usually the case, and, in consequence, the jockey was very weak when he leaped into the saddle, and expressed himself as having undergone a severe strain on his nervous system to no purpose, as his horse could not possibly win the race. In fact, so confident was he of being unable to win that he sent his money into the ring to be played upon Hindoo Rose, the favorite. Emma Manley was at comfortable odds in the betting, but won her race in the end by a head only, due to Tumpkins' masterly finish.

In the meantime the rider had given orders at his stable to have a hearty meal prepared, as he wanted to eat it immediately after the race. Weighing out after his victory, he tipped the scales at 105 pounds, including the saddle. A half hour later he strolled leisurely toward the weighing room, a toothpick in one hand and a cigarette in the other, having partaken of his much relished meal. Out of curiosity he requested that his weight be taken, and to the amazement of those in the little room he balanced the Fairbanks at just 114 pounds. He had eaten a nine-pound supper.

A Misleading Announcement.

Editor World: The Scott Act people here are holding a prohibition camp meeting with a view, doubtless, of influencing the voting on the repeal of the act, which is expected to be placed before the people of this county during the next few months. For the last month the country has been "billed" from end to end announcing the coming event and the attractions. Amongst the attractions, as you can see by the program enclosed, and the first named on the list is the "Hon. O. H. St. John" from Kansas. Every one expected to see the veritable ex-Governor of that banner prohibition state. Instead of the would-be president we had to listen to the stale platitudes of this sixth-rate hack who says "he is one of the St. Johns of Kansas." My object in writing you is to prevent our temperance enthusiasts from misleading the public in other sections. OBSERVER.

"Billy" Lytell Angry Over Postal Delays.

Editor World: Can you explain why the Island residents are obliged to wait twelve hours for their American mail after it has been assorted (or supposed to be) at the chief office. For instance, I post a letter in New York at Monday noon, it leaves here that evening, reaches Toronto next day (Tuesday at 10.30 a.m. or 12 noon), is supposed to be assorted and ready for delivery at 4 p.m. Not so. It must wait till Wednesday. Yet they are supposed to have a mail service on the Island—a delivery morning and afternoon. Same way on the Island. Post a letter on Thursday and it will leave Toronto Friday. I have envelopes with P. O. marks, Toronto-New York, which substantiate my assertions. This letter will leave here to-night (Friday). I intend posting other letters on the same mail for my wife, who at present resides at the Island. You will doubtless receive this letter to-morrow (Saturday) at noon. My wife will receive hers on Monday. W. H. LYTELL.

Photography.

—Everyone nowadays possesses a photo, if not of themselves, of their friends. The art has reached almost perfection, and specially may this be said of the first-class productions of Mr. Lemaitre, 324 Yonge-street. A visit to his studio will well repay the exertion, even during the dog days. All who desire photographs in really high-class style and finish should patronize Mr. Lemaitre, whose reputation is so well known. 36
