Fresh Fish.

THE EXTENSIVE TRADE IN BOSTON, AND HOW IT IS CARRIED ON.

The question of food is one of the very first with which every man in every stage of his existence has to grapple, and in all communities which have attained to any degree of civilization, the business of supplying food materials becomes a very important and extensive industry. Take, for instance, the trade in fresh fish; the headquarters par excellence here in Boston is on Commercial wharf. Few persons indeed, outside of those actually engaged in the business, realize what sources of individual and national wealth exist in the sea, in the waters which wash our shores, and in our rivers and lakes. The great law of nature—to increase and multiply—appears to have been obeyed by the members of the finny tribe to an extraordinary extent; and the consequence is that no matter how many thousands, or even millions of these denizens of the deep are caught every year, the supply seems to suffer no dimunition whatever.

Said one of the largest if not the largest fish dealer in Boston to a Globe representative: 'Well I don't know how you could get at a reliable average of the number of fishing vessels arriving at Commercial wharf every day. Some days the arrivals are very slim—hardly anything at all coming in; and then the next day they'll come with a rush, all in a bunch. Now and then, perhaps, it will run along for a week or two with an average of twenty-five sails a day, then there'll be, perhaps, from seventy-five to a hundred come in in a single day. Yes, all the large dealers here in Quincy Market are owners or part owners, at least, of fishing vessels, and the way it's worked is this: I own half a vessel, for instance, and I draw one fourth of the catches, and the rest is divided among the crew. That is, of course, after all the expenses are paid. How much do these fishing vessels generally cost? Why, all prices. I've got one that I only paid $1,200 for, and there are some engaged in the business which cost $15,000. The crews? The general average is from ten to twelve men, but some carry as high as twenty five or twenty six. Most of the fish caught consist of cod (as a matter of course), haddock and mackerel. The fishing schooners go as far as seventy-five or a hundred miles from land—to the Georges (Middle) Banks, Lafleve Bank, Brown's Bank and South Channel. Mackerel fishing has already commenced down South—we always begin about this time, or a little earlier, down by Cape Hatteras, and then work northward, past Cape May, as the season advances. I have been in the mackerel fishery myself, and have caught as high as 225 barrels at one haul. Yes, that's a pretty good one; but I have known hauls of nearly 500 barrels—that is I've heard tell of such, but I wouldn't vouch for the truth of the story. As to fresh water fish, that comes from all parts of the country—out West, down East, and the Provinces. Salmon? Yes, we get that all the year around. The first we got this year came from Nova Scotia as early as April 16, while a consignment from the Penobscot arrived some eight or nine days later. We were speaking of lobsters just now, and that reminds me of the fact that the quantity of that crustacea eaten in this city is something enormous. Why there's Mr. William Prior Jr., of Quincy Market who sells on an average not far from 2,500 pounds a day, and he is by no means a big dealer in that line.'

Impure Literature.

One of the insidious evils of the day, and consequently one of the worst and most difficult to deal with, is the rapid increase of impure literature. Our bookstores, news stands and, to our shame be it said, even our private libraries and parlor tables are piled high with this sort of stuff, from the flashy story papers and filthy chroniclers of crime to the works of popular novelists, who gild their poisonous pellets with the grace of rhetoric and the flowers of fancy. The upas tree overshadows all society, and from its venomous branches there is a constant drip, drip, drip, of acrid poison, vitiating all life. The boys and girls of the land are feeding on literature to their everlasting detriment. Only a few weeks ago a Connecticut community was startled by the discovery in its midst of a band of youthful burglars who had fitted up a rendezvous in a cave and were living in the most romantic fashion, like the heroes of the most blood curdling fiction. Similar developments of youthful depravity are every day coming to us from all parts of the country, and nearly all of them are directly attributable to the influence of bad literature. These are some of the plainest and most pronounced effects of the evil, but who can tell its quieter and even more deleterious workings? Something demands to be done at once and the reform appeals personally to every father and mother in the community. This is not merely a work of philanthropy and a duty to society; it is rather a work of self-protection, and even of selfishness. To day it is our neighbor's children who are led astray; to morrow it may be your home or my home to be invaded and ruined. What will you do to help stem the tide?

—A singular combat between insects was witnessed by a traveller in South Africa. Pursuing a caterpillar was a host of small ants. An ant would mount upon a caterpillar's back and bite him. Pausing, the caterpillar would turn and bite and kill his tormentor. After slaughtering a dozen or more of his persecutors the caterpillar showed signs of fatigue. The ants made a combined attack. Betaking himself to a stalk of grass, the caterpillar climbed up, tail first, followed by the ants. As soon as one approached he seized it in his jaw and threw it off the stalk. The ants seeing that the caterpillar had too strong a position, resorted to strategy. They began sawing through the grass stalk. In a few moments the stalk fell and hundreds of ants pounced on the caterpillar and killed him.

Agricultural.

Food, Drink and Shelter in July and August.

Work horses should be fed hay. I know of many farmers who give their horses all the grain they will eat but no hay in summer. It is a very bad course of feeding. A horse should be given all the grain it will eat. It should be fed hay. Clover hay is best when properly cured and kept. It is difficult to cure it without damage from rain, and impossible to keep it in good condition without a mow or barracks. Timothy damages less from rain and exposure. It can be kept in good condition in stacks. The farmer must govern himself accordingly. Work horses must be fed the best of hay. They should have time to eat their meals and to rest a short time before going to work. Time is made in the end. If they have an hour and a half or two hours in the heat of the day in which to eat their dinner, they will do more work than if they are hurried with no time to rest after eating.

It is a good plan to give them a pinch of clean wood ashes on their grain once or twice a week. They should have salt regularly. If put where they can get at it at any time they will not eat too much of it.

The best food for horses not at work is a mixture of timothy and clover. They will do well on pasture without grain. Do not forget to give them salt.

Stock cattle are, of course, kept upon pasture. I know of no better pasture than a mixture of clover, timothy and orchard grass. The clover should predominate. They must also be given salt regularly. If it is kept in a trough in the pasture field, they will not eat too much of it, and this is the right way to give it to them—at all times. But if they have been deprived of it too long they will eat too much if allowed to do so.

Milch cows should be given in addition a little bran slop and green corn, stalk and all.

These two months constitute a critical period in the life of swine. At this time the germs of disease are most thickly planted. They should have green feed all through the summer. In no better way can this be furnished than by providing clover pasture. Clover is his nonpareil food and medicine. The fertility of it and the manure, solid and liquid, of the hogs will pay a good rent for the land, and will be got in the two succeeding crops of grain.

Hogs should have salt but they will eat too much if allowed to do so. They should be supplied with ashes and charcoal. If the fires in the house do not furnish enough burn a brush pile. They will appreciate refuse vegetables, slops, milk, etc.

Sheep should have good pasture and salt.

Mr. Young's Incubator.

HIS METHOD OF HATCHING CHICKENS AND ITS SUCCESS.

Richard Young, proprietor of the Morton (Delaware county) poultry yards, has an incubator with which he is experimenting—a machine which makes a loud outcry when the atmosphere becomes too sultry for chicken-hatching purposes. The incubator is a rough wooden structure. Its heating apparatus is quite simple. An oil lamp sends heat to an upper compartment built over the entire machine, the sides and top of which are so constructed that the warmth can only escape below through a tin bottom into the drawers where the eggs are being hatched out. The heat here may go slightly below, but must not get above 103 degrees F. On the exterior of the hatching boxes is an electric alarm bell. Two wires to complete a circuit are run into the boxes from this bell, and when the ends of these are connected the circuit is complete, the bell rings and the alarm is given. One of these wires is attached to a small piece of platinum so connected with a thermometer that when the mercury gets up to 103 degrees, the platinum reaches up to and touches the other wire, thus completing the circuit. This incubator is at present the only one in use, and on its first trial with 500 eggs, not selected, but taken at random from the farmers in the vicinity, hatched out 250 good chickens. Mr. Young has two other incubators, with a capacity of 500 eggs each and which can turn out 80 per cent. of good chicks. The new incubator, from properly selected eggs, is expected to realize 80 or 90 per cent. In addition to these incubators, for which there are artificial mothers, over 150 hens are frequently employed in hatching out young chickens. Each brood of chickens on the farm has its own quarters, which are subdivided into pens, with ten hens and one rooster for each. These pens are about 20 feet by 4 feet in extent, with very high picket fences, and are kept almost as clean as a kitchen floor.

A few weeks ago a nest of rats succeeded in getting under the chicken house and before they were discovered, killed 130 promising young chickens; then there was a rat hunt, and 26 of the largest and fattest rats ever seen in the neighborhood were slaughtered. Precautions were taken to prevent any others getting into the yard and no trouble has since been experienced.

—The N. E. Homestead says: 'Leverett Smith, a Springfield farmer has died in consequence of walking with bare feet through a potato field where Paris green had been used. The poison was communicated to his blood through some slight abrasion of the skin and he has been dying a lingering death. First one toe was amputated and then one leg, but all attempts to save his life were futile. It is impossible to be too careful in the use of this deadly poison.

—A dust of sulphur while the dew is on is said to be very effective against the striped squash bug, repeating the application if necessary.

—General Luard is in hot water again. He has snubbed Col. Ross, of the Foot Guards, for placing Lieutenant Bates of the Guards under arrest.

Fashion Notes.

To insert a vest is one of the best plans of renovating a basque or other waist.

Tucks in bunches across the skirt in flounces, and in lengthwise rows in front breadths, are still in favor.

Canvas shoes, low for the house and high around the ankles for walking boots will be worn in the country.

A row of silver beeds or a dog collar of silver is worn very high around the neck with stylish dark costumes of silk and wool.

Silk gloves in the popular Jersey shape will be worn during the summer, and are embroidered along the back of the hand and across the arms.

Watered silk and satins are employed for combining with other materials, such as camel's hair and brocades, but are not used for the entire dress.

Kate Greenaway handkerchiefs of white silk, with gayly colored figures of old-fashioned children on the hem, are knotted as cravats for little boys to wear with their kilt suits.

Tall and slender women still wear the English plaited jackets with a wide waistband of the material ending in two long loops that fall over the puffed back drapery.

Damier patterns like the blocks on a checker board are the fashionable caprice for kilt skirts and overdresses, whether of wool or of gingham, to be worn with a basque of the plain color.

Corded hats in basin and poke-shape are made of white linen and of colored gingham to match the summer dresses of little girls. A box pleating of lawn and lace is placed around the crown for trimming.

Basques are made rather short, disclosing the hips, and tabliers are no longer strained and drawn back tightly, but are put on with considerable fullness, giving an easy appearance to the folds and draperies.

Pale yellow and bright gold are the colors triumphant even in floral garniture. The gaudy sunflower has sunk into oblivion, but is replaced by prim roses, cowslips, marigolds, narcissus, marshmallows, and king cups.

ANTS IN THE HOUSE.—A Canada paper gives the following suggestions as a help to drive ants out of a house infested with them. It says: "Take advantage of the fact that ants will not cross a chalk line. They are so averse to crossing it that in order to reach the object at which they wish to get, they will crawl up a wall and drop down on the object. Chalk lines on the floor or around the legs of a stand on which articles of diet are kept, will therefore greatly abate the nuisance. There are various ways of destroying the pests, finely powdered borax and chalk sprinkled about is serviceable. A good way is to track them to their nests, and kill them with scalding water. Pieces of sweet cake placed about will soon swarm with them. Then pick the cake up carefully with forceps and dip it into turpentine. After a few days the ants that remain will learn that the sweet cake is dangerous, and will avoid it so much that few, if any, will be caught in the trap. Then try bits of bacon and cheese in succession, and dead grasshoppers, changing only when the ants avoid the new bait, as they will after a few days. By perseverance in this method of capturing the ants you will probably be entirely rid of them in a few weeks.'

GOOD TASTE AT HOME.—It is wonderful what a tasteful woman can do in the way of making home attractive. She can make a garret beautiful at little cost, for the beauty of home depends more upon an education and refined taste than upon mere wealth. If there is no artist in the house it matters little that there is a large balance at the bank. There is usually no better excuse for a barren home than ignorance or carelessness. A little mechanical skill can make brackets and shelves for the walls. A trifle saved from daily expenses can now and then put a new book upon the table or shelf. A thoughtful walk in the woods can gather leaves and ferns for adorning the unpictured rooms. The expenditure of a few shillings can convert the plain window into a conservatory. In these and many other ways can a plain, barren room be changed into a scene of beauty.

—Be especially careful to talk truthfully in your dealings with children. Don't tell your child you will take his head off if he doesn't shut up, because you won't; and it teaches him to doubt your word. At least that is one reason why you should not say so. Then, too, that expression and others like it are not agreeable to ears polite, and on boats and cars you are in danger of being heard and severely criticised. Being well dressed, or even elegantly dressed, will not convince your fellow traveller that you are a lady or a gentleman if such is your dealing with your children.

PLAIN TALK TO A GIRL.—Your everyday toilet is a part of your character. A girl who looks like a 'fury,' or a sloven in the morning is not to be trusted, however finely she may look in the evening. No matter how humble your room may be, there are eight things it should contain; a mirror, washstand, soap, towel, comb, hair, nail and tooth brushes. These are just as essential as your breakfast, before which, you should make good and free use of them. Parents who fail to provide their children with such appliances, not only make a great mistake, but commit a sin of omission. Look tidy in the morning, and after the dinner work is over improve the toilet. Make it a rule of your daily life to "dress up' in the afternoon. Your dress may or may not be anything better than calico, but with a ribbon or flower, or some bit of ornament, you can have an air of self-respect and satisfaction that invariably comes with being well dressed.

Joker's Corner.

A Dull Pawnbroker.

The other day a Detroit pawnbroker received a call from a young man with the tan and freckles of the country on his face and nose, and an old fashioned bull's-eye watch in his hand which he desired to pawn.

'Where you live?' asked the broker.

'Oh, out here a few miles!'

'Where you got dot vatch?'

'It used to be dad's, but he gave it to me.'

The broker looked him all over with suspicious glance, and asked and received his name, and then added:

'Why you vants to pawn dot vatch, eh?'

'Well, I needed a little money.'

'Dot looks suspicious to be, und I guess I call der boleecs.'

'Suspicious! Police!' repeated the young man. Say, mister, if you don't know the difference between a thief selling his plunder and a young man in town with his gal, and that gal wanting peanuts and candy and soda water and street car rides until she's cleaned him out of his last cent, you'd better go and start a sheep ranch.'

'Oh, dot vhat it, eh? Vhell, I gif you tree dollars. Dot makes it all ash blain as der face on my nose, und I hope you haf some goot times. Here—two und one makes tree.'—Detroit Free Press.

A Dude in the Wild, Wild West.

The car was full and I pre-empted a seat on the rear platform. Inside were miners bound for Carbonate, a drummer, one lady and a something we all decided was a dude. Once in a while the train would be lost amid coney pines, and then through a gap in the trees would be caught an Eden-like glimpse of the disappearing park. There were innumerable shades of green beside the track; the brilliancy of grass and the almost black of the forest. Even the dude showed an interest. 'No paintab, aw, could do this thing, ye know, aw.' The language of the dude was not particularly fop, but his head was level. However, he got knocked completely out of time further on. The train stopped at a neat cottage painted brown. In the door was a rosy-cheeked maiden, leaning in unconscious grace upon her broom.

'Aw, me guhrl, don't ye get lonesome, ye know, aw, way up heah?' he ventured, with a smile that trespassed on the back of his neck. The girl seemed astonished for a moment and then, looking over her shoulder, called:

'Pap, Pap! the Dime Museum monkey is loose! Kill it and get its clothes.' The dude seemed to shrink, and nothing could induce him to open his mouth from that point to the journey's end.—Correspondence Denver News.

MONEY NOT THROWN AWAY.—'Your daughter graduates this month Mr. Thistlepod?'

'Yes, she'll be home about the 20th, I reckon.'

'And your son graduates, also?'

'Oh, yes; he'll come home about the same time.'

'And what are they going to do?'

'Well, said the old man, thoughtfully, 'I don't exactly know what they do want to drive at, but Marthy she writes that she wants to continue her art studies on the continent, so I think I'll just send her to Greece in the dairy and let her do a little plain modeling in butter, and Sam he says he's got to go abroad and polish up a little, and as good luck will have it he'll be home just in time to spread himself on the grindstone and put an edge on the cradle blades against the wheat harvest.'

And the old man smiled to think that he hadn't thrown money away when he sent his children to
