CHAUTAUQUA TO OPEN SEPT. 11th.

The annual Chautauqua Festival will commence on Tuesday, Sept. 11th and will continue until Thursday night following. The program this year promses to be as good or better than that of last year and among the entertainers who will be present during its stay here are William Sterling Battis, who in "Life's Portrayals" shows the wondering audience how many complete personalities a single mortal may have. Mr. Battis is to be at Chautauqua on the opening evening. The same evening and also in the afternoon the Four Artists, will give to the music loving people a program of the usual Chautauqua excellence. Miss Millicent Melrose is a soprano who has had repeated conquests on every circuit she has visited. Miss Anna Brown is also a soprano of unusual ability. Miss Helen Ballein, the contralto and pianist has an unusual personality and musical skill which prove a most pleasing combination. The brilliant young tenor, Donato Colafemina, sprang into fame during the war, when he raised $5,000 at a single mass meeting for Victory Loans. He is now known as "the boy with the $5000 voice.

On Wednesday afternoon and evening the Batting-Mahler entertainers will present a program of monologues, songs, impersonations and musical sketches. Miss Batting has entertained audiences from coast to coast, while Miss Helen Mahler is one of Boston's popular sopranos and is also an accomplished pianist. In the evening besdes the above, Chancellor George Henry Bradford, guide and philosopher, will give his forceful lecture, "This Way Up". Mr. Bradford has a special message for boys and girls.

Thursday afternoon and evening closes the engagement and on this day the afternoon is especially devoted to the children when the Pageant, "Her Family on Display", and Prof. Will H. Smith, with his Punch and Judy entertainment will form an afternoon long to be remembered by the younger people. In the evening Julius Caesar Nayphe will present his "Oriental Pageant" which is as unique as his name. Costumes of rare beauty and richness are worn by members of the company, while Julius Caesar Nayphe delivers his leature on life and customs in Palestine and other countries.

Other lectures will be provided during the stay here as well as junior Chautauqua each day. The programmes promise to be well worth seeing.

GREAT LOSS OF LIFE BY FIRE AND EARTHQUAKE

Casualties from the earthquake and fire total 500,000 and 300,000 houses have been burned in Japan, it is estimated. Property loss in the terror zone will run into billions of dollars. Thousands of bodies are being piled into huge funeral pyres and cremated in order to prevent an outbreak of pestilence.

Japanese troops are being concentrated in Tokio and Yokohama from all parts of the empire to prevent a continuance of vandalism, and the strictest martial law prevails.

The Japanese government has commandeered food, medical and building supplies and is conscripting thousands of coolies for rescue work under military supervision.

A gift of $1,000 to the American Red Cross fund for the relief of Japanese earthquake victims was made by the National League.

EFFECTS OF THE MIGRATORY BIRDS TREATY ACT

When the white man first came to the North American continent, one of the attractions, not least among the many which appealed to those early settlers, was the great abundance of bird life, which not only afforded pleasure to both eye and ear, but was also a definite and unfailing source of food. Since then, the hunting and killing of game birds has been continued by succeeding generations, though the meat now obtained is no longer one of the principal means of subsistence. Men of to-day hunt more particularly for the sport of hunting and for the sake of the recreation afforded by an outing in the unspoiled outdoors. Many a tired business and professional man looks eagerly forward each year to his annual excursion to the woods, where with his gun he may spend a week or two of pure joy, away from all the cares and worries of his daily life back in civilization, returning, after his brief sojourn in the wilds, rested and strengthened, with renewed ambition to perform his share in the big world's work.

The early hunters brought back with them large bags of game. Then the bags grew smaller, and gradually it became evident to thinking men that our game birds were in danger of extermination if the decrease in their numbers was to continue. In fact, a number of species, once plentiful, have actually become extinct. These include the Eskimo Curlew, the Labrador Duck, the Passenger Pigeon, and the Great Auk. Others, such as the Whooping Crane and the Trumpeter Swan are in exceedingly grave danger of extinction at an early date.

While probably everyone will admit the great need for preserving our game birds as a natural asset, not everyone, perhaps, is fully aware of the value to the farmer and indirectly to all humanity, of the insect-eating birds, because of the immense quantity of injurious insects devoured each year by these birds. Should their numbers become reduced, a marked increase might be observed in the damage to field crops, orchards and forests, caused by insect pests—damage which is estimated to amount to millions of dollars annually in Canada alone.

Many of our Canadian birds, both of the game and the insect-eating varieties, spend the Winter months in the Southern United States, or pass through the United States in the course of their migration, and come back again in the Spring to propagate. It therefore became evident some years ago that any measure, taken with a view to the protection of our migratory birds, must be carried out in co-operation with the United States, if it were to be effective. The futility of protecting birds in one part of the country, only to have them killed in another section, was also recognized by the United States authorities, who, in 1913, enacted their Federal Migratory Bird Law, which gave uniform protection to migratory birds throughout the various States of the Union, with equable open seasons fixed in accordance with local conditions.

There was now uniform protection throughout the United States, and conservationists both of that country and of Canada immediately took steps urging the necessity for an international treaty for the protection of migratory birds. Their efforts were finally crowned with success when, in August, 1916, the "Migratory Birds Convention" was signed by the representatives of Great Britain and the United States. This treaty provides for the absolute protection in both Canada and the United States of game birds during the Spring months and of insectiverous birds throughout the year. It also provides for an open season of three and a half months, during which the sportsman, wherever he may live, is free to hunt game birds, fully aware of the fact that he is not being discriminated against, but has an equal chance at the birds with all other sportsmen in either country. Regulations setting forth the dates for the open seasons for each part of Canada, may be obtained from Mr. J. B. Harkin, Commissioner, Canadian National Parks, Department of the Interior, Ottawa, by whom the Dominion Act based upon the Treaty is administered.

As most of the provinces have amended their game laws to conform with the Migratory Birds Convention Act, thus making it possible for them to enforce the terms of the Treaty within their respective territories, the principal work of the Federal Department, in this connection, is the education of the people to a knowledge of the law and its benefits and the

OUT FOR TRADE

British Columbia wants the United States to remove the restrictions on the shipment of liquor through Alaska to the Yukon. The American Government might reply that the smuggling of B. C. whiskey into their country should first be stopped.—(Toronto Globe).

St. Catharines Standard: On this Continent we are spending four million dollars daily on the movies, twenty-two billion dollars annually for chewing gum, candy, motor cars, phonographs, organs, pianos, cigars, cigarettes and tobacco. The candy bill alone amounts to one billion dollars a year.
