should not assent. Thus ended the interview, and the Marshal returned to his colleagues, and informed them of the resolution of his Majesty.

From the Morning Chronicle.

A postscript from our French correspondent, dated five o'clock, on Wednesday, the 20th, states, that on Marshal Soult forwarding to the King M. Thiers determination to withdraw altogether, and break up the ministerial combination, his Majesty, after a short time signified to Marshal Soult, that he would waive his objections, and accept the conditions, and the programme set before him on the previous day as the principle of the future Cabinet.

It was thought that M. Thiers would withdraw his letter to the Marshal, and that Soult's ministerial arrangements would be completed. M. Villemain however, had now declared that he would not accept office.

Lord Ebrington had lost his election in North Devon, and Mr. Burke, the Conservative candidate was elected.

Mr. Papineau, from Canada, had arrived in Paris. Capt. Vaillant had been appointed to the command of St. Juan d'Ulloa, from which fact it was inferred that France intended to retain possession of that fortress as a guarantee for the sum which should be stipulated to be paid by Mexico, as an indemnity for the losses of French residents.

LONDON, March 22.—A good deal of anxiety prevails among the leading parties connected with the commerce of the United States and our North American colonies, in consequence of the unpleasant accounts respecting the disputed territory. People of the first information have to-day openly expressed their opinion that this rupture, for such it is, however the ministerial scribes may gloss the matter, is pregnant with incalculable mischief, not only to our own settlements, but as regards our relations with the United States, the Government of which does not appear to have the power to restrain the hordes of reckless emigrants that infest the border frontiers of the so styled land of liberty. It is maintained that our government alone are to be blamed for the unpleasant political aspects which have for some time threatened our supremacy from the other side of the Atlantic; with a crippled navy it is not to be expected that the despots of the world whether monarchial or republican, would respect British dictation

LONDON, March 22.—A report was circulated in this city as we went to press that a message is to be brought down to the House this evening relative to the supply of 20,000 additional troops to the army. This, we believe will prove not quite accurate. There will, however, be an increase to the extent of six or seven thousand.

From the London Courier of the evening of the 22d.

The House of Lords decided this morning (for their Lordships did not, on this occasion, close their discussion till the unusually late hour of 4 o'clock.) that we shall have another committee of inquiry into the state of crime and the administration of justice in Ireland. The motion originated with the Earl of Roden, and, as it received the support of the Duke of Wellington, and Lord Brougham, it may safely be set down as a party attack on the Ministry generally, though the remarks of the Earl of Roden were chiefly directed against the Irish Administration of the Marquis of Normanby. The motion was only carried by a majority of five, 63 Noble Lords having voted in favor of it, and 58 against it.

Lord Melbourne resisted the appointment of the committee, from which he made it clear that no beneficial result was to be hoped for, nor indeed did any of the Noble Lords who spoke in favor of the motion, express an expectation that the committee would have the effect of removing any one of the existing evils of Ireland. The motion, in point of fact, was merely one move in the factious game that was so industriously kept up last session, and which would have been recommenced before now, but for the attention commanded by the late anti-corn-law agitation. Such was the character of the motion to which the House of Lords assented this morning, and precisely for that reason it obtained the support of Lord Brougham.

Upon the receipt of the result of the above vote in the House of Commons, Lord John Russell rose and said, that he should in the first week after the recess, or on an early day, take the opinion of the House with respect to the Government of Ireland in late years. (Hear.) The House of Lords had appointed a committee to inquire into the state of Ireland since 1835, on account of the insecurity of life and property in that country. He did not deny the right of their Lordships to appoint such a committee, but he considered that it was vesting the government of Ireland in the hands of one House of Parliament. Lord Melbourne had declared that he would not carry on the government of the country without he possessed the confidence of the House of Commons, and as he fully agreed with his Lordship, he proposed to take the opinion of the House, respecting the administration of Ireland. If the House expressed its dissent of the policy which had been adopted in Ireland, and which was about to be acted upon by his noble friend, Lord Ebrington, he begged to say that his colleagues and himself would relinquish the government to other hands. (Loud cries of "hear, hear.")

THE LATE MR. ROTHSCHILD'S OPINION OF THE CORN LAWS.—This great Capitalist once said, in a conversation with Sir Charles Burrell—"You, Sir Charles are, I believe, one of the component parts of the landed interest. There is one piece of advice I wish to give you—never give up the corn-laws; If you do, all the links of society will be destroyed, and confusion will follow; the funds will be endangered, and the violent man will take to himself what does not belong to him.

THE AMERICAN BOUNDARY LINE.

(From the Times.)

Lord Palmerston has been interrogated more than once, or twice, or a dozen times, within the course of as many years, touching the state of the New Brunswick boundary quarrel, and as often, with that smirk which is peculiar to his lordship, and which conveys a sneer more plainly than a reply, has left the questioner to his own imaginings from utter despair of getting anything out of his lordship more satisfactory than "I don't choose to tell you—ask some other time."

That other time has often come, and has now gone, we are apprehensive, not to come again.

When Lord Palmerston stupidly, or flippantly and carelessly, acquiesced in the rejection by the United States government of the judgment pronounced by the King of Holland, to whose arbitrament the whole question has been absolutely and finally referred on the part as well of the republic as of Great Britain, the result might easily have been foreseen. The duty of Lord Palmerston was to have urged the finality of that adjudication, which the litigating powers had reserved to themselves no right or power to repudiate, and which, although it actually stripped Great Britain of more than one-half of the disputed land, was at least an intelligible settlement, assigning for a large portion of the boundary line the course of the St. John's River, and leaving in the hands of Great Britain that which has been throughout the object of highest consideration with her government—namely, the most practicable and convenient route between Fredericton and the St. Lawrence.

The haste, however, with which the senate of the United States, and in imitation of their eagerness, the government of Washington, declared the decision of the King of Holland to be "inadmissible," must have opened the eyes of any Englishman who was not determined to keep them shut to the real, though unacknowledged, views of the republicans and have satisfied Lord Palmerston that he must proceed with all despatch to a formal and irrevocable arrangement of the question, by amicable, but active and diligent, negotiation; or provide for the other and more distressing, but, in such circumstances, unavoidable alternative, of maintaining the just pretensions of his country by her armed power.

Lord Palmerston appears to have demeaned himself as if no such contingencies lay before him. He gave in to the rejection of the arrangement made by the King of Holland without betraying the slightest consciousness that any other adjustment of a difference in itself so serious would be required by the United States from this country, or by England at the hands of her foreign minister. He did not merely fall asleep at his post, but never dreamed of applying by a renewed negotiation the settlement which his own folly has suffered the United States to break off. "So far as our recollection carries us, his cool and easy treatment of the question was equivalent to this.—"The United States have flung back the King of Holland's proposition; it is now for them to make theirs." Why, theirs was from the beginning precisely this:—"We want the whole of the disputed territory, and we will have it too."

But, as Lord Palmerston made no movement towards a peaceful issue of this misunderstanding, so was he equally careful that for an opposite issue England should be totally unprepared.

The Americans took care that the success of their own policy should depend on their own will, not on the mercy of their rivals.

The rebellion in Canada, and the war of "sympathy," have been godsends to Gov. Fairfield and his "lumberers," who will thus have powerful diversions in their favour. Large lots of the soil of Upper Canada were long since said to have been sold by that exemplary patriot, Makenzie, as payment in advance for the personal exploits of all sympathizing riflemen who, in the cause of freedom, should cross the frontier and liberate the Queen of England's Canadian subjects from the yoke of cultivating their own lands and reaping their own harvests.

Lord Palmerston told Sir Stratford Canning, the other night, that he could not say whether or not the negotiation respecting the boundary would have a successful issue! Vastly consoling this: but he was "justified in stating that the cabinet of Washington had the most friendly sentiments towards this country." Vastly encouraging indeed! But if the cabinet of Washington should either willingly or by compulsion happen to support the State of Maine in its armed aggression upon the crown and people of England, will Lord Palmerston please to inform us how much Mr. Van Buren's "friendly sentiments" are worth in the public market?

We deprecate war. We dread it for the sake of humanity, for the sake of North America, beyond all, for the sake of England which must dearly suffer. But there is such a thing as driving a great country, however temperate, and tolerant, and pacific, into war, just as it is possible for the best natured and benevolent man in the world to be forced by indignity into a private quarrel. England can do much towards avoiding war than to abstain from offering injustice. If she suffers wrong timely, then is she unjust to herself and to posterity: for she invites thereby, and will inevitable have to endure, a repetition and a variety of insults. If both governments be wise, they cannot go on to bloodshed. But the wise and just may, by the foolish and unprincipled, be compelled, and dragged, and trampled, and spurned into a conflict. In that case the responsibility is not divided, because the crime is altogether unnatural. It is the simple case of a wanton oppressor, and an unwilling and unoffending victim.

If England be kicked into a war unprepared, the responsibility for so terrible a disaster though not shared between her and the United States, inasmuch as she, as a nation, must be exonerated, will fall heavily between the United States and the British government, which has left its country unprotected. For such a government there can be no forgiveness, nor any punishment severe enough for its enormous treason.

☞ The Lecture before the Mechanics' Institute, by the Rev. WILLIAM ANDREW, is postponed until Monday the 29th inst.

☞ Dr. BARTLETT'S Lecture on Phrenology, which was to have taken place this evening, is postponed on account of the weather until TUESDAY Evening next. April 26.

To Correspondents.—Several communications have been received. Z's inquiries respecting several items of appropriation, made by the Assembly during the last session will appear in our next number.
