Poetry.

FORTITUDE.

Faint not poor traveller, though thy way
Be rough, like that thy Saviour trod;
Though cold and stormy lower the day,
This path of suffering leads to God.

Nay, sink not; though from every limb
Are starting drops of toil and pain;
Thou dost but share the lot of Him
With whom his followers are to reign.

Thy friends are gone, and thou, alone,
Must bear the sorrows that assail;
Look upward to the eternal throne,
And know a friend who cannot fail.

Bear firmly yet a few more days,
And thy hard trial will be past;
Then wrapt in glory's opening blaze,
Thy feet will rest on heaven at last.

Christian! thy Friend, thy Master pray'd,
When dread and anguish shook His frame;
Then met his sufferings undismay'd;
Wilt thou not try to do the same?

O! think'st thou that his Father's love
Shone round him then with fainter rays
Than now, when throned all height above,
Unceasing voices hymn his praise?

Go, sufferer! calmly meet the woes
Which God's own mercy bids thee bear;
Then rising as thy Saviour rose,
Go! his eternal victory share.

THE TRUTH DOTH NEVER DIE.

Though kingdoms, states, and empires fall,
And dynasties decay;
Though cities crumble into dust,
And nations die away;
Though gorgeous towers and palaces
In heaps of ruin lie,
Which once were proudest of the proud,
The truth doth never die!

We'll mourn not o'er the silent past,
Its glories are not fled;
Although its men of high renown
Be numbered with the dead.
We'll grieve not o'er what earth has lost,
It cannot claim a sigh,
For the wrong alone hath perished,
And the truth doth never die!

All of the past is living still,
All that is good and true;
The test hath perished, and it did
Deserve to perish too!
The world rolls ever round and round,
And time rolls ever by;
And the wrong is ever rooted up,
But the truth doth never die!

PLAIN WOMAN.—We like homely women. We have always liked them. We do not carry the petitority far enough to include the hideous or positively ugly; for since beauty and money are the only capital the world will recognize in woman, they are more to be pitied than admired; but we have a chivalric, enthusiastic regard for plain woman! We never saw one who was not modest and unassuming, and sweet tempered, and seldom came across one who was not virtuous, and had not a kind heart. Made aware early in life of their want of beauty by the slighted attentions of the opposite sex, vanity and affectation never take root in their hearts; and in the hope of supplying attractions which a capricious nature has denied, they cultivate the graces of the heart instead of the person, and give to the mind those accomplishments which the world so rarely appreciates in woman, but which are more lasting, and, in the eyes of men of sense, more highly prized than all personal beauty. See them in the street, at home or in the church, and they are always the same; and the smile which ever lies upon the face is not forced there to fascinate, but is the spontaneous sunshine reflected from a kind heart—a flower which takes root in the soul, and blooms upon the lips, inspiring respect instead of passion. Plain women make good wives, good mothers, cheerful homes, and happy husbands, and we never see one but we thank heaven that it has kindly created women of sense as well as beauty, for it is indeed seldom a female is found possessing both.

CHILDREN'S TEMPER.—Bad temper is oftener the result of unhappy circumstances than of an unhappy organization; it frequently, however, has a physical cause, and a peevish child often needs dieting more than correcting. Some children are more prone to show temper than others, and sometimes on account of qualities which are valuable in themselves. For instance, a child of active temperament, sensitive feeling, and eager purpose, is more likely to meet with constant jars and rubs than a dull passive child; and if he is of an open nature, his inward irritation is immediately shown in bursts of passion. If you repress these ebullitions by scolding and punishment you only increase the evil by changing passion sulkiness. A cheerful, good-tempered tone of your own, a sympathy with his trouble, whenever the trouble has arisen from no ill conduct on his part, are the best antidotes; but it would be better still to prevent beforehand, as much as possible, all sources of annoyance. Never fear spoiling children by making them too happy. Happiness is the atmosphere in which all good affections grow—the wholesome warmth necessary to make the heart-blood circulate healthily and freely; unhappiness the chilling pressure which produces here an inflammation, there an excresence, and worst of all, "the mind's green and yellow sickness—ill-temper."

NOTE ON TRAFALGAR.—Lord Nelson's well-known valet, Tom Allan, lived for some time close to me, being then retained in the service of William Bolton. I met Tom almost every day in my walks, and often got into chat with him about his brave and noble master, Lord Nelson. Among other things, I spoke of his wearing his decorations at Trafalgar. Now Tom, who had been with him in so many other engagements, was by mere accident prevented from arriving in time on that last memorable occasion, having left London after his lordship, and not arriving till the battle was over, and his master's career of glory brought to a brilliant close. But it may be amusing to record Tom's opinion and observations. He said, "I never told anybody that if I had been there Lord Nelson would not have been killed; but this I have said and say again, that if I had been there he should not have put on that coat. He would mind me like a child; and when I found him bent upon wearing his finery before a battle, I always prevented him." "Tom," he would say, "I'll fight the battle in my best coat." "No, my lord you shan't." "Why not, Tom?" "Why, my lord, fight the battle first, and then I'll dress you up in all your stars and garters, and then you'll look something like." Thus poor old faithful Tom Allan gave himself credit for having saved his master's life by his rigid discipline in attire on former occasions; and it was evident that he was of opinion that he should have saved it once more at Trafalgar. Tom's accounts of other memorial events of Nelson's life were given with equal naiveté. His old age was rendered comfortable in Greenwich Hospital, where he held the office of pensioner till his death.—Notes and Queries.

People turn up their noses at this world as if they were in the habit of keeping company with a better one.

The happiest man in the world is the man with just wealth enough to keep him in spirits, and just children enough to make him industrious.

Sare, being rebuked for not keeping a lecture engagement at Albany, recently, wrote an apology. "I had no motive to break the engagement, and every motive except a locomotive, to keep it."

Have you got a sister? Then love and cherish her with holy friendship. If you have no sister, we advise you to love somebody else's sister.

GENTLEMEN—

ON the 29th ult. a steam Saw Mill belonging to me, which was partially insured at your office was totally destroyed by a destructive fire at the Staight Shore. Notwithstanding the extreme scarcity of money, you, at once, paid over to me, in the most courteous manner, the full amount of the insurance—£1,000—for which I desire publicly to express my thanks.

I consider the conduct of your Company as praiseworthy in the highest degree, and take pleasure in recommending it to all who now, or at any future time may be desirous of insuring their property, as one which is alike honourable in its dealings, safe in its character, and prompt in its settlements.
