A New York Hotel.

Heretofore when visiting New York we have always stopped at a down-town hotel; but this time, for a change thought we would try an up-town house, and went to the Grand Union, corner of Fourth Avenue and Forty-second street.

It is needless to say that hereafter we will take no more down-town hotels in ours when stopping in New York, as we have found it much pleasanter to be stopping up town on the European plan. Our department and Mr. Garrison, of Toronto, adding a column will be under railroad Record; edx

See! her brush is gently gliding o'er that canvas on its rest,
And her thoughts are of a lover, whose hand she's often held and pressed,
She thinks how soon the moments 'll fly, when a home she'll try to make,
And many a fancy will flit through her to furnish it nicely for his sake,
First, a stove and kitchen utensils, a parlor suite so pretty and neat,
A bedroom set with curtains and blinds to keep away the sun's fierce heat.
She knows his dollars are hard earned, and 'twould take some years to wait
Until he could a home prepare sufficiently pleasant for his sweet mate.
Walker's system is a boon, she murmurs, as her fingers deftly form
Certain words upon her easel, 'tis through him only we can have a home,
And so think many who toil in life, and drag an existence, through
Various stages of boarding, rooming and changing very often too.
How a great many, from the rich to the poor, at the time can't always pay
The cash right down to furnish a home, I care not who says nay.
At 107½ Queen-st. west, the widow, spinster, landlady, merchant and lover
All find what they want at spot cash prices, we guarantee no other.
It costs not one cent more to buy on time, our system o'er all other surpasses,
So come, take a view, ye salesmen, clerks, travelers and all classes.
