PARALYSED AND HELPLESS

Prominent Merchant Restored to Health by "Fruit-a-tives"

BRISTOL, N.B., July 25th, 1914.

"I had a stroke of Paralysis in March, and this left me unable to walk or help myself and the Constipation was terrible. Finally, I took 'Fruit-a-tives' for the Constipation. This fruit medicine gradually toned up the nerves and actually relieved the paralysis. By the use of 'Fruit-a-tives' I grew stronger until all the palsy left me. I am now well and attend my store every day."

The British Columbia prohibition bill introduced in the Legislature on May 17 is modelled after the act in Manitoba. As druggists have refused to take any responsibility under the bill to sell liquor on a doctor's prescription, the government will provide dispensaries for the selling of liquor for medicinal purposes. The government has denied any compensation to the liquor interests, but as a compromise the prohibitionists have agreed to consent to an extra six months delay before prohibition comes into force. The date will therefore be July 1 of next year, instead of January 1.

How Much is a Billion Dollars?

Before this world's war, billion dollars was spoken of only with awe. A billion dollars has today at a jump become an everyday expression in modern financial topics.

A billion is a thousand millions, but this definition does not give a satisfactory conception of its magnitude, and it is necessary to find some way to make it clearer. These illustrations are suggested: As to time—

If beginning at the time of the birth of Christ a dollar has been coined each and every minute since that date, over 1900 years would have to be spent and the twentieth century would have grown to one billion dollars.

As to weight—

A gold dollar weighs 25.8 grains hence a billion dollars would weigh over 1841 tons, enough to load 2 freight trains of 50 cars each.

As to work—

It represents the combined earnings of 20,000 men at $5 a day for 35 years

The British Isles spend a billion dollars a year on drink.

Verdun and the Red Cross'

The estimates of the enormous casualty list at the great battle at Verdun should stir every person of humane and sympathetic instinct to renewed Red Cross energy.

Behind the cold official figures there is, if we measure it from a point of wounds and suffering, an immense human tragedy which cries aloud for our fullest measure of human sympathy.

It was not indeed our Canadian troops which had to pay the price of the Verdun victory, but if our Red Cross sympathies were confined only to our kith and kin, if we showed a snug indifference to the sufferings of our allies, we should be a nation unparalleled for cold blooded egoism.

No one knows when our own troops may be called upon to do their part as gigantic or even more so than Verdun. In the face of that eventuality, and to discharge our Red Cross duty to our allies, the Canadian Red Cross Society has an increasing need of public support.

All who stay at home should do their Red Cross duty towards those other Canadians who are performing their military duty with so much credit to our country.

WHAT CATARRH IS

It has been said that every third person has catarrh in some form.

Science has shown that nasal catarrh often indicates a general weakness of the body; and local treatments in the form of snuffs and vapors do little, if any good.

To correct catarrh you should treat its cause by enriching your blood with the oil-food in Scott's Emulsion which is a medicinal food and a building-tonic, free from any harmful drugs. Try it.

RESCUES SWEETHEART

Girl Drags Drowning Lover From Water and Thereby Mends Breach.

By WALTER JAMES DELANEY.

"I wouldn't go out tonight, Elizabeth, if I were you," spoke querulous, rheumatic old Grandma Danby.

"I must, grandma," was the reply firm yet pained, and the old woman glanced keenly at the young face wearing care and sorrow, and sighed, and then was silent, gazing sadly, dreamily into the flickering grate.

"Dear child," crooned the old woman, as Elizabeth threw a cape across her shoulders and flitted from the room. "Dear, poor child—I know! I know!"

Yes, indeed, the old dame knew, for when the fires of youth were hers she had loved and lost. There was rude comfort at the little cottage, a pension and enough to make her grandchild independent, but love that had cheered the lonely life of the fair young girl had seared her heart with a cruel blow, and had left her what she was—a cheerless, solitary being, living only in one fond memory of the past.

That past, how golden it had been—and only a year agone! Just a year this very night, not chill and sere, although September-like now, but a star-spangled evening of sweet sounds, a stroll along the whispering sands, and troth plighted under the great, stately elm that had shaded the old brook for over a century.

Those strange, sinuous whispering sands, ever moving, ever singing a siren-like dirge—but on that night of nights they had seemed to weave a sweet melody of hope, and promise and love. Then under the great elm where each had promised, no matter how widely parted, no matter what might happen, to return there upon each anniversary as to a shrine devoted to a love undying, eternal.

"It was all my fault," moaned Elizabeth, as slowly, sadly she started down the edge of the sand reach, a watery moon casting dim, weird shadows across her path. "Oh, why was I jealous, why was I so impulsive and cruel!"

She recalled the May day festival at the village where she had been so proud of her lover, Randal Grey, and then so irrationally jealous of him.

In a fit of pique, incited by a false friend, a scheming girl companion, she had tried to punish her lover, entirely innocent of any real purpose to pain her, and she had lost him.

For he had gone away from Merton and she had heard of him among newer scenes, the gayest of the gay. He had forgotten her long since, her aching heart told her.

"And I can never forget!" she wailed to the sighing night winds, and pursued her lonely path on a pilgrimage of sorrow and penitence.

She faltered as she came in sight of the old elm. Its nodding branches seemed to beckon and then repel. She covered her face with her hands and swayed where she stood.

"I thought it would comfort me to come," she moaned, "but it is breaking my heart!"

For with a tide-like rush the sweet past was now more vividly recurrent than ever. Every bush, every rock, every turn of the path renewed some fond, sweet word he had spoken—the loved and lost one.

At last she reached the old trysting place. She sank like a wearied child to the moss-covered trunk and cried her heart out. Then dull, drear retrospect intervened, and accepting the burden her own folly had brought about, she sat mutely submissive to the fate that showed no brightness ahead.

Hark!

Her pulses stirred at a cry of alarm. It was vague, distant, but echoing. It was a call for help.

Elizabeth started to her feet and bent her ear. A new fear came into her face as she traced the call—across the sloping expanse of stunted oak to where the brook ran and the whispering sands were the most treacherous.

There were danger signs in the vicinity, but a stranger would scarcely notice them after nightfall, she realized.

The humane instinct was too intensely developed in Elizabeth to need urging, even when her mind was immersed in her own individual troubles. She was a true daughter of the woodland, and she sped like a sprite along the upper ledges overlooking the brook.

"Help!"

It was closer now, that cry, though not so distant. There was a token of weakness in the utterance, a forlorn intonation telling of exhausted effort and strength.

Her own feet, swift as they were, barely evaded one or two dangerous spots in her rapid flight. Then as she neared what was familiarly known to the denizens of the vicinity as "The Pits," her heart stood still and she chilled with a shock.

A human form was visible in the swirling mass of quicksands, appealing wildly for help, with arms outstretched, sinking deeper and deeper each succeeding moment.

In an instant Elizabeth forgot self, peril, all save that a precious human life was in the balance.

She ran to where the ruined old bridge lay. It had spanned a narrow brook, but long in disuse. She knew fully the last possible resource for assisting the man engulfed in the quicksands. How she managed to drag one of the great rough logs, the size of a railroad tie in thickness, fully 20 feet, she never knew. Superhuman strength seemed infused. Her hands were torn and bleeding, her breath came in gasps. She managed to tilt the end of the heavy timber across the ledge of rock and let it drop.

The log narrowly grazed the head of the man now struggling waist deep in the shifting mass. Both ends, however, were safely anchored. Elizabeth crept out on the log.

"Grasp the log firmly with one hand—give me the other—"

Then her voice died away and her soul seemed to go with it, for the man she had saved was—Randel Grey.

He was pretty well exhausted, but he smiled up into her eyes with grateful energy, as slowly, with difficulty he was extricated from his fearful dilemma.

It was like a hideous dream with a golden awakening, as both reached the soft ground and sank upon a grassy plat exhausted, their eyes met, and then their hands.

"You have saved my life!" he breathed. "I owe it to you—Elizabeth!"

How sweetly, how fervently he pronounced her name, the ring of a year ago in it!

"I am glad," she said simply, and shrank back away in very contriteness and sense of unworthiness.

"If you had not been near," he began, and then asked; "How came you to be?"

Her eyes drooped and she arose to her feet. He caught sight of her poor, bleeding hands and grasped them and kissed them.

"It was just a year ago—the old elm—do you remember?"

She bent her head, and he guessed the truth.

"Its call was strong upon me—I had not forgotten," he said in a low, eager tone. "Elizabeth, say it was all a mistake your cold, bitter letter to me."

"It was more—it was cruel, wicked, and I have been punished. Oh, Randal, my heart is breaking!"

He caught her swaying form in his arms. He clasped her close, leading the way past peril into peace, past the weird whispering sands to the soft shadow of the great elm, its swaying boughs seeming to welcome so much youth and loveliness and joy.

How the Blood Is Purified

By the Searching and Painstaking Work of Healthy Kidneys.

In its circulation through the body the blood not only carries nutrition to the cells and tissues, but also collects the waste material resulting from the breaking down of cells and tissues, the ashes left by the fire of life.

In due course the blood passes through the kidneys to be purified of these poisonous impurities, and these filtering organs extract each day about 50 ounces of liquids and 2 ounces of solids, 500 grains of urea and 10 grains of uric acid, the material which is found in rheumatic joints.

Sudden changes of temperature throw a great strain on the kidneys, but it is overeating and drinking that are the usual cause of trouble. In a vain effort to remove the excess of waste matter the kidneys break down, uric acid and other poisons are left in the blood and the whole system is poisoned by impure blood.

Pains in the back and limbs, severe headaches, lumbago and rheumatism are the natural result. Hardening of the arteries, excessive blood pressure, weakening of the heart's action, Bright's disease may be anticipated unless prompt action is taken.

We like to think of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills as preventive treatment, for by their timely use you can readily prevent all these dreaded disorders. Unlike other medicines for kidney troubles, they awaken the action of liver and bowels as well as the kidneys, and thereby effect a prompt cleansing of the whole filtering and excretory systems.

There is no way by which the action of the kidneys can be so quickly aroused and the blood cleansed of impurities as by the use of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills. It is therefore the greatest of blood purifiers and much sought for at this time of year, when everybody feels the need of a medicine to cleanse from the system the accumulation of poisonous matter.

Prudence In Eating.

In the American Magazine Dr. E. F. Bowers gives a diet suited to the average healthy person of indoor occupation.

"An ordinary domestic egg equals about eight grams of protein. This is approximately the amount contained in a cubic inch of steak or in half a pint glass of milk. A generous slice of bread contains about four grams of protein. The quantity of potatoes ordinarily dispensed at a meal equals two and a half grams.

"Allowing for our inability completely to extract all the protein from any given amount of food and convert it into assimilable nutrition, a liberal modicum of albumen would be twice Hindhede's protein formula, or fifty grams—this, remember, for an entire day.

"Therefore a regular egg, five ounces of beefsteak and a glass of milk should supply for twenty-four hours all the protein the system requires. The balance of the diet should consist of starches, sugars, fats and plenty of cellulose or hay. This can best be found in vegetables, such as tomatoes, carrots, celery, turnips, beets, lettuce, squash and all that grand group of horse foods containing much fibre and little nutriment.

"Try this regimen for awhile and see if fermentation, headache, insomnia, rheumatism, nervousness and 'that tired feeling' do not disappear like snow upon the desert's dusty face. And, when they do, remember that the chances of later developing Bright's disease, hardening of the arteries and heart failure have been reduced to the irreducible minimum.

"The eating game is the most important in life."

Farmer Giles' son is a smart lad, and attends a very good school. After the lad's return to work from the Christmas holiday, a neighbor said to Giles:

'Don't you find the house rather dull and lonely since your son went back to school again?'

'Yes, it is rather lonesome,' agreed the farm candidly, 'but it's sort of restful, too. You see, that there lad has been so busy during the holidays eddicatin' his mother and me that we feel we need a turn at a holiday, same as he did.'

Sandy Fraser was walking along the road, his head bent, and his eyes clouded with deep thinking, absorbed was he that he nearly collided with the minister.

'Good morning, Sandy!' said the latter in a joking manner. 'Thinkin' of the future el?'

Preparedness.

In the Maritime Provinces again this year, as formerly some creamery companies are offering cash prizes to awaken more interest in breeding and feeding dairy cattle. In addition to the substantial cash prizes offered by the Scotsburn N. S. Creamery Company and the Tryon, P. E. I., Dairying Company, there are several special prizes, cups, medals, books, etc., by prominent men connected with the dairy industry locally.

It is suggestive of the widespread attention being paid to cow testing, that awards are based on the records of butter fat production of individual cows.

This means a good impetus in several directions. First, to the factory, which must benefit considerably with larger supply and better proportionate running expenses; to the producers, who see dairying stimulated; to the herd owners, who aim for larger production and are encouraged to raise high levels permanently maintained. This means that attention is directed mainly to the maximum capacity of the individual cow thus bending energies to better herd building; it also means thorough preparedness for abundant yet economical production not only this season, but excellent trim for good business in subsequent years.

One may almost legitimately fancy that several cows will rejoice at new conditions. Many could do infinitely better if they were given the opportunity; with improved conditions tendered, many owners may be surprised at the liberal response.

Forms for recording milk and feed may be obtained free of charge from the Dairy Commissioner, Ottawa.

Fined for Getting Married.

There are certain sections and communities who penalize marriage and regard it in the light of a punishable offence. It is the rule for instance, at All Souls' College, Oxford, that a fellow forfeits his Fellowship if, when studying classics, he should marry. In such an event he must also present his college with a memorial in the shape of a silver cup.

By payement of a fine of £25 he can, however, retain an honorary membership, but of course, he cannot enjoy the privileges of this select band of non-marrying men.

There is a similar organization in Germany—the Jungesellen Club. Whenever there comes to the officials of this club any intimation that a member contemplates matrimony he is immediately summoned for trial in the club court, with the president as judge. The culprit is allowed to plead in extenuation of his offence, and upon his skill in presenting such plea depends the amount of his fine, which ranges from £20 to £200.

The humorous feature of the fine consists in the purpose to which the money is applied. The money is devoted to a dinner, where all members appear in mourning attire. At the conclusion of the repast the president solemnly reads the sentence of expulsion, and the delinquent is led from the room amid the groans and lamentations of his erstwhile club fellows.

A Soldier's Creed.

Ross R. McIntyre, whose father won a medal with the Black Watch at Waterloo, went 4,000 miles at his own expense to rejoin that regiment. In a letter written to his aunt in this city, he says:

'Some may wonder at me, who claim to be a Christian, going to war for the love of blood, even if I become of soldier stock, but for the love of my fellow men.

'Think of the poor women and children who are suffering worse than death at the hands of the Germans. They are not my people, or yours, but somebody's darlings, and they are calling for help to escape the torture of barbarians. Remember, I pray, with all decent men that the day will come when war shall cease, and peace and good will reign among men, but I have not stopped at that. I am going to help bring about that peace.

'We do not think that any soldier has penned a finer creed than this for the men who are fighting against the German tyrant. This young Ross McIntyre has spiritualized his own cause, and may heaven help those who face a Scotman armed with such a resolution. He is the 'peace militant' type of man armed with the same divine rage as Christ when he purged the temple of the money-changers.

HELP FOR WORKING WOMEN

Some Have to Keep on Until They Almost Drop. How Mrs. Conley Got Help.

Here is a letter from a woman who had to work, but was too weak and suffered too much to continue. How she regained health:—

Frankfort, Ky.—"I suffered so much with female weakness that I could not do my own work, had to hire it done, I heard so much about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound that I tried it. I took three bottles and I found it to be all you claim. Now I feel as well as ever I did and am able to do all my own work again. I recommend it to any woman suffering from female weakness. You may publish my letter if you wish."—Mrs. JAMES CONLEY, 516 St. Clair St., Frankfort, Ky.

No woman suffering from any form of female troubles should lose hope until she has given Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a fair trial.

This famous remedy, the medicinal ingredients of which are derived from native roots and herbs, has for forty years proved to be a most valuable tonic and invigorator of the female organism.

All women are invited to write to the Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., Lynn, Mass., for special advice,—it will be confidential.

ALCAZAR GARDENS OF SPAIN

Cottages Here Have Special Advantage for Lovers Who Begin Courting Early in Morning.

The best of the Alcazar is the Alcazar gardens. But I would not ignore the homelike charm of the vast court, says W. D. Howell in Harper's Magazine. It is planted casually about rather shabby orange trees that children were playing under, and was decorated with the week's wash of the low, simple dwellings which may be hired at a rental moderate even for Seville, where a handsome and commodious house in a good quarter rents for $60 a year. One of those two-story cottages, as we should call them, in the ante-court of the Alcazar had for the student of Spanish life the special advantage of a lover close to a ground floor window dropping tender nothings down through the slats of the shutter to some maiden lurking within. The nothings were so tender that you could not hear them drop, and besides, they were Spanish nothings, and it would not have served any purpose for the stranger to listen for them. Once afterward we saw the national courtship going on at another casement, but that was at night, and here the precious first sight of it was offered at 10 o'clock in the morning. Nobody seemed to mind the lover stationed outside the shutter with which the iron bars forbade him the closest contact; and it is only fair to say that he minded nobody; he was there when we went in and there when we came out, and it appears that when it is a question of love-making time is no more an object in Spain than in the United States. The scene would have been better by moonlight, but you cannot always have it moonlight, and the sun did very well; at least, the lover did not seem to miss the moon.

No Wonder.
