The Heiress.

Continued.

Meanwhile through the moonlight—in it—comes Molly very slowly, a perfect creature, in trailing snowy robes. Luttrell forgetting the inevitable cigar—a great concession—stands mutely regarding her as, with warm parted lips and a smile, half amused, half wondering, she gazes back at him.

Even a plain woman may gain beauty from a moonbeam; what, then, must a lovely woman seem when clothed in its pure rays?

"You are welcome—very welcome," says Molly, at length, in her low, soft voice.

"Thank you," returns he, mechanically, still lost in conjecture.

"I am not a fairy, nor a spirit, nor yet a vision," murmurs Molly, now openly amused. "Have no fear. See," holding out to him a slim cold hand; "touch me and be convinced. I am only Molly Massereene."

He takes the hand and holds it closely, still entranced. Already—even though three minutes have scarcely marked their acquaintance, he is dimly conscious that there might possibly be worse things in this world than a perpetual nearness to "only Molly Massereene."

"So you did come," she goes on, withdrawing her fingers slowly but positively, and with a faint uplifting of her straight brows, "after all. I was so afraid you wouldn't, you were so long. John we all thought you had thrown us over."

To have Beauty declare herself overjoyed at the mere fact of your presence is, under any circumstances, intoxicating. To have such an avowal made beneath the romantic light of a summer moon is maddening.

"You cared?" says Luttrell, in hopeful doubt.

"Cared!" with a low, gay laugh. "I should think I did care. I quite longed for you to come. If you only knew as well as I do the terrible, never-ending dullness of this place, you would understand how one could long for the coming of anyone."

Try as he will, he cannot convince himself that the termination of this sentence is as satisfactory as its commencement.

"When the evening wore on," with a little depressed shake of the head, and still you made no sign, and I begin to feel sure it was all too good to be true and that you were about to disappoint me and plead some hateful excuse by the morning post, I almost hated you, and was never in such a rage in my life. But," again holding out her hand to him with a charming smile, "I forgive you now."

"Then forgive me one thing more—my ignorance," says Luttrell, retaining the fingers this time with much increased firmness. And tell me who you are."

"Don't you know, really? You never heard of me from John or— What a fall to my pride! and in my secret heart I had almost flattered myself that——"

"What?" eagerly.

"Oh, nothing—only—— By the bye, now you have confessed yourself ignorant of my existence, what did bring you down to this uninteresting village?" All this with the most perfect naiveté.

"A desire," says Lutterell, smiling in spite of himself, "to see again your—what shall I say?"—hesitatingly—"father?"

"Nonsense," says Molly, quickly, with a little frown. "How could you think John my father? When he looks so young, too. I hope you are not stupid: we shall never get on if you are. How could he be my father?"

"How could he be your brother?"

"Step brother, then," says Molly, unwillingly. "I will acknowledge it for this once only. But never again as he is dearer to me than half a dozen brothers. You like him very much, don't you?" examining him anxiously. "You must, to take the trouble to come all the way down here to see him."

"I do indeed, more than I can say," replies the young man, with wise heartiness that is not unfeigned. "He has stood to me too often in the old school days to allow of my ever forgetting him. I would go farther than Morley to meet him, after a lengthened absence such as mine has been."

"India?" suggests Molly, blandly.

"Yes. Here they both pause, and Molly's eyes fell on her imprisoned hand. She is so evidently bent on being again ungenerous that Luttrell forces himself with a main object of distracting her thoughts.

"Is it at this hour you usually 'take your walks abroad'?" he asks, smoothly.

"Oh, no," laughing, "you must not think that. To-night there was an excuse for me. And if there is blame in the matter you must take it. But for your slothfulness, your tardiness, your unpardonable laziness," spitefully, "my temper would not have driven me forth."

"But," reproachfully, "you do not ask the cause of my delay. How would you like to be first inveigled into taking a rickety vehicle in the last stage of dissipation, and then deposited by that vehicle, without an instant's warning, upon your mother earth? For my part, I didn't like it at all."

"I'm so sorry," says Molly, sweetly. "Did all that really happen to you, and just while I was abusing you with all my might and main? I think I shall have to be very good to you to make up for it."

"I think so too," says Luttrell, gravely. "My ignominious break-down was nothing in comparison with a harsh word thrown at me by you. I feel a deep sense of injury upon me."

"It all comes of our being in what the papers call 'poor circumstances,'" says Molly, lightly. "Now, when I marry, and you come to see me, I shall send a carriage and a spirited pair of grays to meet you at the station. Think of that."

"I won't," says Luttrell; "because I don't believe I would care to see you at all when—you are married." Here, with a rashness unworthy of him, he presses, ever so gently, the slender fingers within his own. Instantly Miss Massereene, with a marked ignoring of the suggestion in his last speech, returns to her forgotten charge.

"I don't want to inconvenience you," she says, demurely, with downcast lids, "but when you have quite done with my hand I think I should like it again. You see it is awkward being without it, as it is the right one."

"I'm not proud," says Luttrell, modestly. "I will try to make myself content if you will give me the left one."

As this they both laughed merrily; and, believe me, when two people so laugh together, there is very little ice left to be broken.

"And are you really glad I have come?" says Luttrell, bending, the better to see into her pretty face. "It sounds so unlikely."

"When one is starving even dry bread is acceptable," returns Molly, with a swift but cruel glance.

"I refuse to understand you. You surely do not mean——"

"I mean this, that you are not to lay too much stress on the fact of my having said——"

"Well, Luttrell, where are you, old fellow? I suppose you thought you were quite forgotten. Couldn't come a moment sooner—what with Letitia's comments on your general appearance, and my own comments on my tobacco's disappearance. However, here I am at last. Have you been lonely?"

"Not very," says Mr Luttrell, sotto voce, his eyes fixed on Molly.

"It is John," whispers that young lady mysteriously. "Won't I catch it if he finds me out here so late without a shawl? I must run. Good-night." She moves away from him quickly, but before many steps have separated them turns again, and, with her fingers on her lips, breathes softly, kindly, "until to-morrow." After which she waves him a last faint adieu and disappears.

CHAPTER III.

"In my lady's chamber."

When John Massereene was seven years old his mother died. When he was seventeen his father had the imprudence to run away with the favorite daughter of a rich mar—which crime was never forgiven. Had there been the slightest excuse for her conduct it might have been otherwise; but in the eyes of her world there was none. That an Amherst of Herst Royal should be guilty of such a plebeian trick as "falling passionately in love" was bad enough, but to have her bestow that love upon a man at least eighteen her senior, an Irishman, a mere engineer, with no money to speak of, with nothing on earth to recommend him beyond a handsome face, a charming manner, and a heart too warm ever to grow old, was not to be tolerated for a moment. And Eleanor Amherst, from the hour of her elopement, was virtually shrouded and laid within her grave so far as her own family was concerned.

Not that they need have hurried over her requiem, as the poor soul was practically laid there in the fourth year of her happy married life, dying of the fever that had carried off her husband two days before, and leaving her three-year-old daughter in the care of her step-son.

At twenty one, therefore, John Massereene found himself alone in the world, with about three hundred pounds a year, and a small, tearful, clinging, forlorn child. Having followed his father's profession, more from a desire to gratify that father than from direct inclination, he found, when too late, that he neither liked it or did it like him. He had, as he believed, a talent for farming; so that when, on the death of a distant relation, he found himself, when all was told, the possessor of seven hundred pounds a year, he bought Brooklyn, a modest place in one of the English shires, married his first love, and carried her and Molly home to it.

Once or twice in the early part of her life he had made an appeal to old Mr. Amherst, Molly's grandfather, on her behalf—more from a sense of duty owing to her than from any desire to rid himself of the child, who had, indeed, with her pretty coaxing ways, made a very cosy nest for herself in the deepest recesses of his large heart. But all such appeals had been unavailing. So that Molly had grown from baby to child, from child to girl, without having so much as seen her nearest relations, although Herst Royal was situated in the very county next to hers.

Even now, in spite of having attained her eighteenth year, this ostracism is a matter of the most perfect indifference to Molly. She has been bred in a very sound contempt for the hard old man who so cruelly neglected her mother—the poor mother whose love she never missed, so faithfully has John fulfilled her dying wishes. There is no poverty about this love, in which she has grown and strengthened; it is rich all-sufficing. Even Letitia's coming only added another ray to its brightness.

They are a harmonious family, the Massereenes; they blend; they seldom disagree. Letitia, with her handsome English face, her tall, osee figure, and ready smile, makes a delicious centrepiece; John a good background; Molly a bit of perfect sunlight; the children flecks of vivid coloring here and there. They are an easy, laughter loving people, with a rare store of contentment. They are much affected by those in their immediate neighborhood. Their servants have a good time of it. They are never out of temper when dinner is a quarter of an hour late. They all very much admire Molly and Molly very much agrees with them. They are fond of taking their tea in summer in the open air; they are not fond of over-early rising; they never bore you with a description of the first faint beams of dawn; they fail to see any beauty in the dew at five o'clock in the morning; they are very reasonable people.

Yet, the morning after his arrival, Luttrell, jumping out of his bed at eight o'clock, finds on looking out of his window that overhangs the garden, Flora already among her flowers. Drawing back hastily—he is a modest young man—he grows suddenly energetic and makes good speed with his toilet.

When he is half dressed—that is, when his hair is brushed; but as yet his shirt is guiltless of a waistcoat—he cannot refrain from looking forth again, to see if she may yet be there, and, looking, meets her eyes.

He is slightly abashed; she is not. Mr. Massereene in his shirt and trousers is a thing very frequently seen at his window during the summer mornings. Mr. Luttrell presents much the same appearance. It certainly does occur to Molly that of the two men the new comer is decidedly the better-looking of the two, whereat, without any treachery towards John, she greatly rejoices. It does not occur to her that a blush at this moment would be a blush in the right place. On the contrary, she nods gayly at him, and calls out:

"Hurry! You cannot think what a delicious morning it is." And then goes on with her snipping and paring with the heartiest unconcern. After which Luttrell's method of getting into the remainder of his clothes can only be described as a scramble.

"How did you sleep?" asks Molly, a few minutes later, when he had joined her, looking up from the rosebush over which she was bending, that holds no flower so sweet as her own self. "Well, I hope?"

A reckless man is one who appears on the street without his coat and with a lot of 10-cent cigars sticking in his vest pocket.

A GOOD ACT.—"As a cure for all summer complaints I highly recommend Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry, having often used it with the best results. I have often been thanked for recommending it." William Haw, Ancaster, Ont.

A scientist has discovered that the mosquito's mission is to purify stagnant water. Why in the name of common sense doesn't he keep away from the people, then, and attend to business?

GREAT GAIN.—"I used a great deal of doctor's medicine for kidney complaint during five years, was getting worse all the time until I tried B. B. B. I took three bottles gained in weight from 130 to 159 lbs. I can highly recommend Burdock Blood Bitters to to be a good medicine." Thus testifies John Walton, of Springfield, N. B.

'All the witnesses in this case may consider themselves discharged till further notice,' called out the court crier. 'Be gob,' said an Irishman who had given testimony, 'an' its just my luck. I never could kape a pleasant agreeable job more than a day or two.'

A SOURCE OF DANGER.—The frequent source of danger attending bowel complaints to check the diarrhœa too suddenly. Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry will not do this. Inflammation of the bowels does not follow its use, as is too often the case with powerful opiates and astringents It cures promptly and in a natural manner.

City editor (to woman in tears)—'You say you haven't seen your husband for three days?' Woman—'Yes sir.' 'And that a valuable little dog belonging to you disappeared this morning?' 'Yes, sir; and I want to advertise for them.' 'Any reward offered?' 'Yes, sir; $10 for the dog and $5 for the husband.'

Wonderful is the instantaneous effect of West's Pain King in relieving cramps, colic and all bowel difficulties. Worth its weight in gold and costs but 25c. Should always be kept in every house. All druggists.

West's Pain King works like a charm in relieving pain in the stomach, all bowel difficulties and cholera. No traveller should be without it. Should always be in the house. Costs but 25c. All druggists.

New Jersey farmers cut their hay by moonlight to avoid the intense heat of the day.

Nervous headache, earache, toothache, and in fact any ache or pain, cured like magic with West's World's Wonder. 25c and 50c. All druggists.

A popular idea—A great financier is a thief who succeeds. A thief is a great financier who fails.

This season of the year it is very important to have a reliable remedy in the house for such diseases as flux, dysentery, diarrhœa, summer complaint, cholera, cholera morbus and cholera infantum. Such a remedy is West's Pain King. Only 25c. All druggists.

Potter Palmer, the big Chicago hotel man, is making a tour of Norway, Sweden and Russia as a change from the customary summer watering jaunt.

IN GOOD REPUTE.—James McMurdock, writing from Kinsale, says: "B. B. B. as a remedy for diseases of the blood, liver and kidneys, has an excellent reputation in this locality. I have used it, and speak from experience, as well as observation. It is the only medicine I want, and I advise others afflicted to try it."

Chicago began upon strawberries early in April, and is yet receiving a fair variety of strawberries from the far north. Not many cities have so long a season of this delicious fruit.

ARE YOU GOING TO TRAVEL?—Don't forget a supply of that Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry. It is a superior remedy for sea sickness, and a positive cure for all bowel complaints induced by bad water, change of diet, or of climate. Whether at home or abroad, it should be kept at hand in case of emergency.

Bret Hart was born in Albany only 43 years ago. He looks ten years older and writes like a man who has succeeded in living down both hope and ambition.

Reports made to the State Comptroller of New Jersey show that in the past year 240 persons were killed and 685 injured on the railroads of that state. Yet there was no great collision or disaster involving a large loss of life at any one time.

Not a particle of calomel, nor any other deleterious substance, enters into the composition of Ayer's Pills. On the contrary, this medicine is carefully compounded from the curative properties of purely vegetable substances. Try it.

Mr. George W. Childs has added another to his great collection of souvenirs. It is the silk hat that the late General Grant wore during his tour around the world. The late General's initials in gold-plated letters are placed on the lining inside the crown.

If you wish to restore the bloom to your wasted cheek and so improve your health that plumpness and strength will succeed emaciation and debility, purify your blood with Ayer's Sarsaparilla. This remedy will benefit you more surely and speedily than any other.

In a man's hand a fan has always a more or less effeminate look, but when the bearer of a sun umbrella has also a fan to keep it company, this effect is increased.

This is the sort of weather when a man remembers Moses in the bull rushes with an unconquerable feeling of undisguised and not altogether unjustifiable envy.

Fifty Millions Lost Annually.

Facts in possession of the government show that the loss of farm animals from contagious diseases exceeds fifty million dollars annually and that this enormous loss falls almost wholly upon farmers and poultry raisers, the loss from chicken cholera alone being almost beyond belief. Cases are mentioned where whole townships have been swept by chicken cholera and tens of thousands of fowl lost at one outbreak. In the case of pleuro-pneumonia and hog cholera, no absolute remedy has as yet been discovered, but in the case of children, cholera and all diseases of chickens an unfailing remedy has been discovered. We refer to Sheridan's Condition Powder. This powder was a marvellous discovery. It will not only prevent and cure all diseases of poultry but there is nothing on earth that will make hens lay like it. If you desire to learn how to use this powder to prevent and cure chicken cholera, roup, gapes and all other diseases of chickens; how to detect symptoms of disease, and how to care for sick chickens; how to clean poultry houses and runs, and how to save your young chickens and turkeys, then send at once to I. S. Johnson & Co., 22 Upstom House St., Boston, for a copy of the Poultry Raisers Guide, price 25 cents.

This work presents a matter of very great importance to everybody, but especially to women, children and invalids, for there is probably no way by which a small but constant cash income can be secured with so little effort as by keeping and caring for hens. This book will pay for itself twenty times over the first year.—Farm and Home.

IDAVILLE, PA., June 17, 1887.

I. S. JOHNSON & Co.:

Enclosed find 25 cents. Send me another package of Sheridan's Powder; I never saw anything like it. I have 98 chicks; only lost two this spring, but my next neighbor has lost 32 out of 60. Before using Sheridan's Powder I lost more than half my chicks every year. My hens began to lay in their small coops when their chicks were but three weeks old.

Ayer's Hair Vigor keeps the hair soft and pliant, imparts to it the lustre and freshness of youth, causes it to grow luxuriantly, eradicates Dandruff, cures all scalp diseases, and is the most cleanly of all hair preparations.

AYER'S Hair Vigor has given me perfect satisfaction. I was nearly bald for six years, during which time I used many hair preparations, but without success. Indeed, what little hair I had, was growing thinner, until I tried Ayer's Hair Vigor. I used two bottles of the Vigor, and my head is now well covered with a new growth of hair. —Judson B. Chapel, Peabody, Mass.

HAIR that has become weak, gray, and faded, may have new life and color restored to it by the use of Ayer's Hair Vigor.  My hair was thin, faded, and dry, and fell out in large quantities. Ayer's Hair Vigor stopped the falling, and restored my hair to its original color. As a dressing for the hair, this preparation has no equal.—Mary N. Hammond, Stillwater, Minn.

VIGOR, youth, and beauty, in the appearance of the hair, may be preserved for an indefinite period by the use of Ayer's Hair Vigor.  A disease of the scalp caused my hair to become harsh and dry, and to fall out freely. Nothing I tried seemed to do any good until I commenced using Ayer's Hair Vigor. Three bottles of this preparation restored my hair to a healthy condition, and it is now soft and pliant. My scalp is cured, and it is also free from dandruff.—Mrs. E. R. Foss, Milwaukee, Wis.

Ayer's Hair Vigor,

Sold by Druggists and Perfumers.

PERFECT SAFETY, prompt action, and wonderful curative properties, easily place Ayer's Pills at the head of the list of popular remedies for Sick and Nervous Headaches, Constipation, and all ailments originating in a disordered Liver.

I have been a great sufferer from Headache, and Ayer's Cathartic Pills are the only medicine that has ever given me relief. One dose of these Pills will quickly move my bowels, and free my head from pain.—William L. Page, Richmond, Va.

Ayer's Pills,

Prepared by Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Lowell, Mass. Sold by all Dealers in Medicine.
