The Nugents of Carriconna

An Irish Story.

By Tighe Hopkins, author of "Twixt Love and Duty," "For Freedom," etc.

"Well, ye know, dear," said Miss Nugent, addressing herself to Lady Kitty, "we've a story or a legend, or whatever ye may call it, that the tower is to fall one day, and one of the Nugents with it. 'Tis just a tower of Silo'm in the family, and for meself I wouldn't cross the shadow of it for a great deal."

"Ye wouldn't, I'm sure," affirmed Anthony. "But there's another thing ye might do, like a good woman; have the red room put in a nice, genteel state, for there might be company down upon us this any time."

"The red room!" said Miss Nugent. "And why the red room, if ye please? When Arthur comes, won't he have the room he slept in always?"

"Oh, ye may have Arthur's room ready, too, to be sure!" replied her brother. "'Tisn't that room I was thinking of, for I know there's small need of asking you to have Arthur in mind. 'Tis the red room I mean, and no other. It's just a notion of me own I have that I'll advertise in the newspapers for company. Isn't that a great notion now, Barbara?"

Miss Nugent lookedat her brother, open-eyed, without answering him. For days past she had been anxiously revolving in her mind such cases as she could recall of persons whose sudden accession to unexpected riches had unsettled their mental equilibrium. Then a solution occured to her which made her sit up stiffly, and stiffly inquire, "If it's a wife your wanting, Anthony, why don't you be plain about it?"

Anthony looked at Lady Kitty, and Lady Kitty looked at both of them; and Anthony and Lady Kitty laughed in chorus at Miss Nugent.

"Faith, no! I'd no scheme that way; but ye have given me an idee-a, Barbara, and I'll turn it over by-and-by."

"Indeed, yes; do so," said Miss Nugent. "I'm not the kind of person to be useful here any longer, I think. 'Tis well I have me own little money in the bank at Dublin; though it's thankful I am to think that the same little money was a power of help to us both, Anthony, in the times that you don't remember."

"Ah, now, Barbara, me dear, don't talk that way. Who would remember those days if I didn't? And what gave ye the foolish notion that I'd go marry meself again? Sure, where would I find your equal?"

"Well, then, what is it ye're talking of?"

"'Tis Kitty's notion, and not mine at all," said the evasive Anthony.

"You said it was your own just now."

"Now, Barbara, listen, and don't run away with your impossible notions," said Lady Kitty. "You know he's quite bent on having this what-d'ye-call-it—this observatory of his; and he can't manage it himself, of course; so I tell him he must advertise in the papers for somebody who understands such things; and I really think, Barbara, it would be much better to have a nice, quiet, clever sort of a girl than a man, who would perhaps bother Mr. Nugent with things he didn't want to learn, and mightn't be able to learn at all, and——"

"And steal me opinions. Don't forget that he might steal me opinions. That's what I'm afraid of. I wouldn't put up with that all."

"But doesn't it appear to either of ye," said Miss Nugent, "that this is a queer sort of a place to be bringing a stranger like that into? Kitty, I wonder at you to be putting such notions into his head."

"Queer?" said Anthony. "And where's the queerness of it? Don't we feed like other people—and by-and-by won't we be feeding better nor most? Haven't we beds to sleep in—and by-and-by won't we be treading on carpets a foot thick or more? Isn't there a cellar below that's——"

"A foot under water this minute," said Miss Nugent. "But don't say I'm standing in your way, Anthony; and, for the matter of that, you'd be like no Nugent that ever was if you weren't busy with some new-fangled thing, having a mint of money at your call."

"That's me good Barbara! me fine Barbara!" replied Anthony, as Miss Nugent put her pruning scissors in a basket and went off to the garden.

"And now, me Lady Kitty; me clever, ingenious, bold, redoubtable girl, sit down here and make me a cunning little trap of an advertisement that'll catch me the bird I must have."

"No, I don't think I'll have anything more to say to you. Remember the shocking things you've been saying about Arthur. Besides, even if you catch your bird, I don't believe Barbara will allow you to cage her here."

"Oh, but she will, she will now, Kitty. Didn't you hear the sentiment she went out with? And think how I'll be setting you up one of these fine days, you and your Arthur."

"I won't be bribed, and I don't believe you'll set 'us up' at at all."

"Oh, but I'm—I'm almost sure I will. I might do it any of these times now. And when I do 'twill be the greatest setting up that ever was. I can see the pair of ye on your way to the church now, in a carriage with postilions to the horses, and maybe an outrider or two. Ye shall have a procession just as grand as the judge and sheriffs used to have in the good old days."

"With javelin men and trumpeters?"

"Maybe, maybe. I wouldn't wonder at all."

"Very well, I don't mind so much about the javelin men, but remember the trumpeters. And now, look here; you must write the advertisement in this way."

And Lady Kitty, after a few moment's cogitation, drew up an excellent advertisement of precisely the right sort. But it did not satisfy Anthony, and when her ladyship had gone to the garden to look for Barbara, he drew up another to please himself. By the same day's post he sent the advertisement to the Irish Times and the Times.

CHAPTER V.

A LADY READS THE ADVERTISEMENT.

At about this time an English lady, who might be described with truth as young, interesting and handsome, sat in a small top room in a house near the Rue de l'Opera in Paris, counting a pile of napoleons and francs. It was such a scanty pile that she counted it over and over again to try and make it bigger. The reason of her anxiety was that this little heap of gold and silver represented to the young lady her whole pecuniary fortune; and while she counted it she was asking herself what she must do when the store should be exhausted. Having quite satisfied herself that there were no more coins in the heap than she had numbered at the first reckoning, she got up and began to pace the room; taking mental stock as she did so of everything that it contained.

But everything, or nearly everything, belonged to the French landlady, for the room was a hired one. The young lodger's chattels were chiefly personal ornaments and articles of the toilet; but these, though not numerous, were a good deal better in quality than one might have expected in the possession of a top-story tenant. Noticeably, there were hairbrushes whose ebony backs were inlaid with silver; on the chimney-piece were two scent-bottles with silver tops; and the diminutive and unsteady dressing-table contained two or three small morocco cases, one of which, lying open, discovered a gold bracelet. Amongst two or three dresses hanging on the door was a silk one which looked quite new, and beside it hung a silk-lined cloak which no cheap magasin had turned out. All these things the young lady noted with a careful eye, and it might have been conjectured that she asked herself whether they were not capable of being turned to account for the purpose of swelling the scanty pile of napoleons and francs. From this it may be gathered that the lady was of opinion she had no further need at present of ebony-handled hairbrushes, gold-bracelets, or cloaks with silk lining.

She sat at the table again, pushed away the heap of coins, and began to calculate with pencil and paper.

She was dressed in black, and that negative color relieved only by a small linen collar at the neck, and small linen cuffs at the wrists. Both collar and cuffs were spotlessly white, and black cashmere hung in admirable folds, and fitted perfectly; and the extremely small shoe, which was gently—one might say contemplatively—tapping the floor beneath it, was as neat it outline as it was soft in material.

Poor little widow? Yet, to tell the bare truth, there was not the least air of poverty about her; nor did the expression of her handsome face ask compassion from anybody.

As for her weeds, her looking-glass assured her that they became her well; for she was fair, and was tall, and straight as a pine-stem.

Having finished her calculation—no, not quite finished it, but she was hungry, and her clock told her that it was ten minutes beyond her usual breakfast-hour; the calculation must wait.

Her Dream Verified.

Des Moines, Iowa, April 10.—John Winslow, the 18-year-old son of I. O. Winslow, of this city, died Feb. 28 and was buried March 2 in the cemetery at Avon, eight miles from Des Moines. One night last week his mother dreamed the grave had been robbed. Mr. Winslow made an investigation to-day, and the dream proved to be true. The coffin had been opened and the body removed.

THE THIRD SIX QUESTIONS.
In the Great Dominion Illustrated Prize Competition.

13—Give particulars of the mention of one of the first proprietors of the Island of Montreal.
14—State the name of a retired officer in the British Army, who is an artist.
15—Where is it mentioned that tea is intoxicating?
16—In what article and under what name is mention made of a new magazine, whose main object will be to aid in ameliorating the sufferings of the poor?
17—Give details of the mention of a great defeat sustained by France in 1692.
18—On what page appears an item relative to a portage of fifty miles through the woods?

NOTE—All the material necessary for correctly answering these questions can be found in the weekly issues of the Dominion Illustrated.

This is not a WORD COMPETITION, but a valuable literary exercise for every reader. There are 100 prizes in all. The first prize is 750 in gold. The smallest prize is valued at $5. Subscribers wishing to compete can obtain all back numbers on application.

SOLID FACTS FOR SMOKERS

Reasons Why S. Davis & Sons Maintain the Quality of Their Brands.

It has taken the best part of a life time to establish them.

They have spent thousands upon thousands of dollars to introduce them.

Having obtained the confidence of the public they wish to merit a continuance of same.

A deterioration of quality in their brands would not alone destroy the structure upon which they have spent their time, money and labor, but would result in a loss of that confidence the public have favored them with that money again spent in advertising to introduce new brands could not purchase.

Therefore, is it to be supposed that any sane business man would be so foolish as to destroy in a short time what it has taken so long to establish?

Their brands, "Cable," "Mungo," "El Padre" and "Madre e Hijo" are undoubtedly the best value, the safest and most reliable smoke, and cost no more to the consumer than cigars of much inferior quality.

Why smoke other brands or permit dealers (for the sake of additional gain) to sell you those that you are in most cases unfamiliar with? 88tfzt.

ABOUT HAIR

Editor of the Advertiser:

Sir,—I have, as you know, for some time advertised in Canada and the States a prescription for the hair called "Dr. Dorenwend's Hair Magic." I have received some thousands of flattering testimonials from those who have used it as to its merits as a restorative of gray or faded hair; also as a promoter of the growth and a certain cure for dandruff.

A great many of my correspondents ask the questions: "Why is my hair turning gray so early? Why is my hair falling out? As it is impossible for me to answer every one, I take the liberty of encroaching on your valuable space to make a general reply. A great many persons do not seem to be aware that excessive washing and rubbing is injurious to the growth of the hair; such is the case, however. Constant washing and rubbing the scalp and hair causes over irritation and removes the oily substance which gives strength to the hair; undue heat caused by the wearing of heavy headgear is also injurious. Anything that will tend to dry up the sap or life of the hair will cause dandruff, falling out of the hair, gray or faded hair and finally baldness. Of course there are other causes as diseases, hereditary tendencies, etc., but the first mentioned are the main and most common.

Dr. Dorenwend, an eminent German physician, has given to the world after years of toil and experiment his now famous "Hair Magic." The object of this preparation is to assist nature in the production of this oily substance absolutely necessary to the growth of the hair. It is now sold by all reliable druggists at $1 per bottle, or six bottles for $5, or will be sent on receipt of price to any address. See that each wrapper bears the seal and signature of the manufacturer.
