THE TONE MASTERS.

BY JOSEPHINE POLLARD.

We have no music of our own,
No melody that god-like springs
Within the brooding soul, and brings
A blossom to the world unknown;

But silent in the darkness lie
The voiceless chords—until a hand,
Whose touch they surely understand,
Awakes them to their destiny.

Thenceforth they are not cold or dull
To aught that heaven or earth affords,
But eloquent the love-thrilled chords
Of all the world holds beautiful.

Some master-hand the key-note gives,
A gentle touch—perchance a word—
Which, when the waiting soul has heard,
It wakes from apathy, and lives.

From kindred souls we catch the tone
That thrills our being—and the song
Like a swift current moves along:
We cannot claim it as our own.

The sweetest notes the birds may sing
Broke silence in some distant clime,
And, like the poet's tuneful rhyme,
Are echoes of an earlier spring.

But dwellers on the heights receive
Diviner hints—diviner skill—
Than those who sit beneath the hill
And out of shreds their sonnets weave,

Those are the leaders of the choir
Who have received the mastery,
And with their soulful melody
Our souls to nobler heights inspire.

They dwell where glories are unfurled
That shine not on the lower sense,
And, clothed with omnipotence,
Their lightest whisper sways the world.

NOTES AND NEWS.

The Colonial Government of Queensland, Australia, offer passage to 1000 skilled laborers from Great Britain.

Democracy in England does not seem to be very profitable to the individual radical. Mr. George Odger, a leading English Republican, has been declared a bankrupt and his assets are found to amount to $30 and his liabilities to $4,560. Mr. Odger must have a genuine faith in his principles or he would not keep them. They bring him neither money, position nor power, but only abuse and bankruptcy.

People seem to be getting very nervous and want to put a stop to all sounds that jar their delicate structure. Citizens of Meriden who live near an extensive manufactory are trying to stop the noisy trip-hammers which disturb the quiet of the neighborhood. We suspect that in this industrious age trip-hammers are a necessity and those who do not like their music will have to settle in some other neighborhood.

Parricide is a crime not unknown in Japan, but it is evidently committed only on the strongest provocation. A youth lately killed his father and was crucified therefor, because the "old man" got the best of him in a rabbit trade; but they do remarkable things for these precious pets in Japan. Another man spent a fortune for two of them, and when he came to love them well they died, and he sold his daughter to buy some more.

There is a policeman in Oil City, Minn. who is in a quandry. He has levied on the contents of a torpedo magazine, wherein are many cans of the gentle glycerine. The proprietor has locked the door and put the key in his pocket. Now the policeman could break down the door, but whether, after doing this, he would be in a situation to carry off the goods inside, or whether he would, being able, find any goods or any inside in fact, are questions which he is in no hurry to have practically answered.

The forty-fifth day of the trial of the Tichborne claimant witnessed a display of some angry feeling. Speaking of a certain interview, Lady Radcliffe said that "Mrs. Whitgrave, who was a Miss Mostyn, was there, but she was dead. There was a Miss Amy Wells present." Dr. Kenealy remarked that she also was practically dead, since she was in a convent. "Don't tell me that," said the Chief Justice, "the summons of this Court would bring her here." Mr. Hawkins—"I think we saw enough of that in the great nunnery case." The Chief Justice—"A bit of paper from this Court would open the door of any convent or any place in England if we wanted a witness."
