MR. W. H. BAKER'S RING.

Mr. Baker himself told us this story. He said it was true; nor is this unlikely. I have known Mr. William Henry Baker personally for anumber of years, and I am inclined to think that he has hitherto never in all his life told the truth. Now, it is so manifestly improbable that the most consistent man should protract a long and useful career of story-telling to such extraordinary limits, without at some period telling the truth by sheer misadventure, that it is quite likely Mr. Baker may have committed himself in this instance. At least the time has arrived for human nature to assert itself, according to the doctrine of averages.

'Only once, gentlemen,' said Mr. B., 'have I been deceived. William Henry keeps his eyes open in a general way; William Henry also takes the liberty of seeing out of them. He uses them, as a rule, for purposes of observation, gentlemen. Still, I admit I was, once, taken in by as dead a swindle as could be. I am not ashamed to own I made money by it after all; but I was swindled.

'It was about a diamond ring. I knew the fellow who had it for many years in the way of business. He was a commercial traveler, and used always to flash this ring about whenever he came around on his journey. A jeweller friend of mine, who happened to be in my office once when Mr. Blook called, asked, I remember, to be allowed to examine it; and had pronounced the stones to be diamonds of the purest water, telling me afterwards the ring was worth about seventy pounds. Mr. Blook's initials were engraved inside the hoop of the ring: 'R. B;' and besides that, it was a ring of peculiar and rather old-fashioned make. Indeed, having once seen the ring, no one would be likely to mistake it for another. Well, Mr. Blook got into difficulties and went so entirely to the bad that I never saw or heard anything more of him. But about two years afterwards, while walking down a back street, my eye was taken by a ring exhibited in a pawnbroker's window.

'Mr. Blook's ring!' I exclaimed directly; 'I'll swear to it.'

It was in a tray with a number of very seedy-looking rings, and was as discolored and dirty as they were. I went into the shop and asked to look at it. The pawnbroker, an old Jew, said:

'Yesh, I might see his ringsh; but he did not know much about ringsh himself. They wash unredeemed pledges, thash what they wash, and they were mosh all marked at the monish advanshed upon them, with a very small overplush of interesh- thash all he knew.'

There was no mistake about it; it was Mr. Blook's ring, and had his initials inside. But how did the Jew get it? He would soon tell me. Referring to his book he found it had been pawned two years ago in the name of Smith.

'Thash all he knew. Would I buy? It was dirt sheap—three poundsh twelve—and cost him all the monish!

'Three pounds twelve!' I repeated, thinking he had made a mistake, for the ring was worth twenty times that amount.

'Well, if it wosh too dear, he had some sheaper ones—beautiful ringsh, he dare shay—but he knew sho little about ringsh, you shee, 'bexhept that he alwaysh advanshed too mosh monies on them. One couldn't undustand everything in bishnish, you shee, from flat-ironish to diamondsh.'

I bought the ring, after beating the Jew down half-a-crown, partly to prevent his suspecting its value, and partly—well knowing the disposition of the peculiar people—to oblige him.

I wore my new purchase about, with no little inward satisfaction at having bettered a Jew at a bargain. In my own mind, I accounted for its coming into his possession somewhat in this way; Mr. Blook must have sold the ring, when in difficulties, to some one else, I was quite certain Mr. Blook had not pawned it at the Jew's, or the Jew would have known its value. The ring must, then, have either been lost by, or stolen from a subsequent possessor; and the finder, or thief, (whichever it happened to be) being ignorant of its value, had taken it to the Jew, who knew no better.

There is a certain commercial club in our town which I occasionally visit. The members are of an easy and somewhat lively disposition; generally given to indulge in that playful style of banter known as'chaff.' My diamond ring came in for a good share of it. I can stand chaff as well as most men; but I put it to you, if, when you know your brilliants are real, it isn't a little annoying for the chaff of a whole body of people to assume the character of persistent disbelief in the value of your jewelry! For instance, the waiter answers the bell.

'Did any gentleman ring?'

'O yes,' one of the members would retort; 'it was the gentleman with the paste diamonds.'

Again, there are kinds of sham brilliants known as Irish Diamonds and Isle of Wight Diamonds. The club (not one or two members, but the whole body) refused to recognize such distinctions, and insisted on designating the whole class of shams as 'Bakers Diamonds,' 'Bakers Paste,' my gems were also denominated. They actually sent me by post a circular of somebody's Baking Powder, adding to it at the end, where it says the public is respectfully cautioned against spurious imitations, 'but more particularly against a spurious preparation to deceive the unwary, known as Baker's 'Paste'' Now, after two or three weeks, this became tiresome. Still I took no notice, and affected not to think the remarks intended for me.

I hardly know what made me go and call on my friend the jeweller. It was not that I had any doubts of the genuineness of the diamonds, especially as he was the very man who had before valued Mr. Blook's ring at seventy pounds. But it had been so dinned into my head that they were false, that I wanted just a formal confirmation of the estimate he had previously formed of their worth.

'O yes,' said my friend the jeweller; 'I recognize the ring again directly.—Want to know what it's worth?' (He put it in the scales.) 'Well—h'm—about seven—and—twenty shillings for old gold.'

'Eh!' said I, as pale as a turnip. Why, didn't you tell me it was worth seventy pounds?'

'Yes,' he answered; 'when it had diamonds in it—not when it had paste.'

Talking the matter over, the jeweller suggested, that on Mr. Blook getting into difficulties, the first thing he did was to sell the diamonds out of the ring and get their places supplied with paste; whilst, finally, he had pawned it himself with the Jew, as a paste ring.

'Well, William Henry,' said I to myself, 'the Jew has jewed you, and the club has chaffed you, and you may consider yourself trod upon, after the manner of speaking.

'But the worm will turn.'

'Did the jeweller let out diamonds on hire?' I asked.

'He did.'

'Would he have a certain alteration, which I suggested, made in my ring in a fortnight's time?'

'He would.'

'And keep it a secret.'

'Certainly—business was business.'

'For the whole of that fortnight I never went near the club; that was probably the reason why my appearance at the club dinner was not greeted with such lively sallies about Baker's Paste. One would-be-wag recommended me, whilst helping a tart, 'to keep my fingers out of the pastry.' Believing him to intend some obscure illusion to the gems on my little finger, I thought it time to open fire.

'Gentlemen,' said I, 'for some weeks I have listened to casual observations in which the name of Baker has been unworthily associated with paste and pastry, but have refrained from making any remark, having been firmly persuaded they could only apply to industrious tradesmen employed in the manufacture of home-baked bread.' (Oh, Oh!) 'It now occurs to me that such remarks were intended in allusion to the ring I wear—a ring, which I take this opportunity of informing you—unlike the wits who have amused themselves at its expense—is indebted for its brilliancy to nature. They hooted me; they heaped opprobrious epithets on the name of Baker, they laughed and talked me down.

'I'll bet him five pounds it's paste,' said one.

'So will I,' said another, 'And I,' 'And I.'

'So said eleven of them.'

'Really, gentlemen,' said I 'I am sorry you should take this matter so much in earnest. All I can tell you is, I believe my ring to be a diamond ring, and this, notwithstanding I will freely admit I only paid a very small sum for it.'

'They laughed and hooted me still more at this admission. They said that settled the question, and that it was paste.'

'I told them I did not think it was.'

'Well, would I bet?'

'I would rather not.'

'More hooting.'

'At length, very reluctantly, I overcame my scruples. The name of Baker is a name too closely allied to the gentle bred (arms, four loaves, ppr—sejant, quartered—crest the doe, livant) to allow it to be wantonly sullied, I bet.

We adjourned to the jeweller's.

'Without question, they were diamonds,' the jeweller decided, 'and some of the finest he had ever seen.' He ought to know, as they were his property—hired by me for the occasion.

'Eleven fives is fifty-five, gentlemen.'

'Having established the value of my ring, and freed the name of Baker from suspicion, I paid for the hire of the real gems, and had the paste stones re-set in their places, believing, after all, the reputation for diamonds to be as good as the possession of them, and free from the anxiety.

'It was talked about, and noised abroad; it even reached the little back street where the pawnbroker lived. You should have seen him.'

'Real shtones! Oh, my heart! Sheventy-five poundsh—dead robbery—clean gone. Oh, my bootshe and bones! not to know that folkshe do shome times come and pawn real diamondsh for phaste, sho as to have less interesh to pay for taking care of their ringsh. Oh, my blessed heart, only to think of it!'

'He came to me. He grovelled, and wriggled, and twisted himself before me. He prayed me to sell him his ring again. 'Oh, my tere Mr. Baker, you musht sell it to me, or I will be a ruined old manish. The time wosh not out, and Mr. Smit has come to redeem it, and he shays that it was a legacy, and if he does not get it by Shaturday next, he will ruin me—sh-shelp him, he will. Oh, Mishter Baker, think of it; twenty poundsh—all in gold—sholid money. Now, my tere, what do you shay? Thersh a good mansh.'

'What did I say? Could I turn a deaf ear to the distress of the old man? There are people who might do it, gentlemen, but not people of the name of Baker—not W. H. Baker. I certainly did ask him for more money. We compromised it at last at twenty-two, ten, which he paid, part in sixpences and coppers, and owes me fourpence-halfpenny to this day.'

'Twenty-two, nine and seven pence-halfpenny, and fifty-five pounds, is seventy-seven, nine, seven and a half. It just paid for the real diamonds; for I bought the ones I had previously hired of the jeweller, and had them set in a ring the fac-simile of Mr. Blook's, except that the imitials inside are W. H. B.'

'That was the only time I was ever swindled, gentlemen, Mr. Baker concluded.—Chambers' Journal.

JOB - PRINTING

LOWER Water St.

Chatham, MIRAMICHI.

Having completed the removal of the ADVANCE establishment to the building next N. B. Trading Co's. office, Lower Water Street, we are now prepared to execute all kinds of

BOOK AND JOB - PRINTING

in first class style. This establishment was the only one in the Province in a position to enter into competition with the city offices at the

Dominion Centennial Exhibition

at St. John, where it received a

—MEDAL AND DIPLOMA—

for "Book and Job Printing" and "Letter-Press Printing." This is good evidence of the fine character of its work.

We have also, constantly on sale a large line of blank-forms, such as:—

RAILWAY SHIPPING RECEIPTS.
FISH INVOICES, (newest form.)
MAGISTRATES' BLANKS.
DEEDS AND MORTGAGES.
SUPREME AND COUNTY COURT BLANKS.
SHERIFFS' BLANKS.
TEACHERS' AGREEMENTS.
SCHOOL ASSESSMENT FORMS.
ETC.; ETC., ETC.

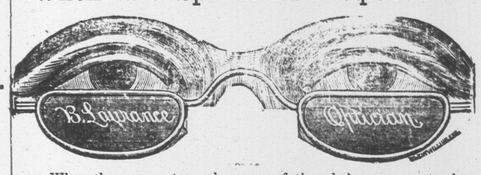
LAURENCE'S SPECTACLES.

When are Spectacles Required?



When the eyes water or become so fatigued by use as to be obliged to be frequently closed or relieved by viewing different objects

When more light is required than formerly.

When the letters of a book appear to blend with one another or to become double.

When the lamp has to be placed between the eye and the object.

When objects cannot be seen without holding them at an increased distance.

When much difficulty is found in threading a needle.

When the eyes appear confused as though they had a mist before them.

When black specks seem floating in the sight.

When any of the above indications arise all affectation should be laid aside and a pair of Laurences Spectacles or eye Glasses should be worn immediately.

Good fitting glasses are a great comfort. Our facilities for testing the sight and suiting the age are not surpassed anywhere.—Prices to suit everybody.
