Secrets of Health and Happiness

What You May Do to Make Your Arms More Truly Lovely

By DR. LEONARD KEENE HIRSHBERG,
A. B., M. A., M. D., (Johns Hopkins University.)

DR. HIRSHBERG

You often hear an unhappy woman exclaim: "I'm just waiting and praying for the good time to come when all dresses will have long sleeves. My arms are a sight! What on earth is a woman to do?"

Women to whom beauty is a cult and a science know that their arms are the first aid to grace.

Of course, physical training is the key to all beauty of form and face as well as grace of motion. Beauty without health is impossible.

The Greeks were the devotees of the beautiful, and they were the most perfect embodiments of health and beauty the world has ever seen. Their splendid physique was due to their outdoor life and physical training, which began in childhood and was systematically carried on throughout life.

The Greek artists bequeathed to all future generations a legacy of untold value. They used the men and women of the golden age of Greece as the prototypes for the most beautiful statues the world has ever seen, proving that by perfect development of the body an ideal type of beauty can be attained. These statues also show that the women of that day were the physical compeers of men.

To Develop Your Arms.

To develop your arms you must exercise care and thoughtfulness. Tight sleeves are an abomination which tends to pinch, flatten and redden the arms. If your arms are thin, they should be developed by exercise and by massage with oils or creams.

Pure creams, pure soaps and pure powders will keep your arms white and beautiful. Some arms lose much loveliness by having skin of coarse texture. The use of a bath brush will tend to remove the trouble by opening the closed pores. After rubbing the arms with a flesh brush a softening wash or unguent may be applied with much benefit. The following will soften and whiten the skin of your arms to a marked advantage:

Bran, 1 ounce; enough benzoin to moisten it; the juice of one lemon. Or this: Lemon juice, 1 ounce; glycerine, 1 ounce; and rosewater, 1 ounce.

Other Fine Aids.

To develop thin arms, hook the fingers of one hand in those of the other, turning one palm downward and the other upward. Raise the elbows shoulder high, and move to the left, dragging the other and resisting arm as far as it can be drawn. Reverse this movement. Shortly the muscles of the upper arm will grow larger and firmer.

The thin girl should apply to her arms one ounce of olive oil, patting it softly into the skin; ten drops of hyacinth essence is splendid, too.

If your arms are too fat have them massaged and exercise them by swinging them back and forth in a twisting movement. If hair grows on the arms they are much less attractive, especially if the hair is dark. Oxide of zinc, sulphuret of barium and carmine mixed by a chemist in quantities desired according to the number of applications will free you of this blemish. The mixture is a paste to be applied to the arms and removed as soon as a slight stinging sensation is felt. Two or three minutes after application this unpleasantness is usually felt. Scrape off the mixture with a dull paper knife and bathe both arms with cotton dipped in rosewater. Then apply almond oil, 1 ounce, and essence of violet, 6 drops.

The following when spread upon the arms will whiten them, and is a cosmetic that will not rub off: Glycerine, 1 ounce; oxychloride of bismuth, 1 ounce, and rosewater, 2 ounces.

Answers to Health Questions

F. H. Q.: Kindly advise me what to do for diarrhoea.

A.—Take no foods that are laxative, no fruits or bulky vegetables. Drink milk that has been boiled 20 minutes. Live on foods such as boiled milk and take a bulgarian tablet. Take fruits that are constipating. These may be discovered by the individual. Bismuth subnitrate, 1 teaspoonful dose, or syrup of ginger may be taken.

LOOKOUT. Q.: Kindly advise me what to do for perspiring feet.

A.—Bathe the feet in formalin, ½-teaspoonful to pint of water. Bathe them each night in warm water. Wear non-leather shoes and thin hose. Change the latter every morning.

AN INTERESTED READER. Q.: Kindly advise me what to do for a goitre.

A.—There are various kinds of goitre. Some require no treatment, but most of them require an operation, which is the only cure. Their causes are not known.

MRS. J. S., KITCHENER. Q.: Kindly advise me what to do for dark circles under the eyes?

A.—I make no apology when I tell you that grease and dirt are widespread causes of dark circles under the eyes. What seems often a skin invasion is removed with a little soap, water, or spirits of chloroform. If the dark circles are really in the skin a few good long nights of sleep, and a purgative, may rid you of them.

MOLLIE. Q.:—What is coca-cola? Is there any "dope" in it?

A.—It contains about one grain or so of caffein, the main ingredient in coffee. It is probably true that a carefully graded dose of coca-cola contains no more caffein than the average cup of coffee, and if coca-cola as a drink were subject to the same limitation, so far as availability is concerned, there is no danger in its use.

To-morrow's HOROSCOPE

By Genevieve Kemble

THURSDAY, MARCH 20.

While the planetary positions for this day point to certain financial gains, yet affairs must be handled with the contingency of deception, fraud or intrigue that might possibly negative the strong influence for prosperity presaged by the splendid aspect of Jupiter trine Luna. The threatening element is found in the square aspect of Luna to Neptune, which operates powerfully through subtle sources which it would be well to forestall. Those in employment are likewise in a degree of danger, and should move cautiously, avoiding superiors and attempting no change.

Those whose birthday it is may expect a prosperous year provided they be on guard against deception or fraud. Those in the employment of others should be particularly careful. A child born on this day will be popular, kind and generous, but should be schooled in integrity, candor and straightforwardness.

MY SOLDIER HUSBAND

ADELE GARRISON'S CONTINUATION OF

REVELATIONS OF A WIFE

What Lillian Told Madge About Her Decision.

As the full meaning of Lillian's words came to me I gave a little gasp of amazement, then words of horrified protest came tumbling from my lips:

"Lillian, you're absolutely mad!" I exclaimed. "No matter how much Mr. Underwood has expiated his fault toward Dicky, nothing can obliterate his cowardly desertion of you, his cold-blooded decision against your having Marion with you, his association with Grace Draper. You are under no more obligation to him than you would be to the veriest stranger."

She smiled at me, but I would far rather have seen tears upon her face.

"Dear child," she said, "it is not your conviction, but your love for me that is speaking. If it were your own problem—thank goodness it isn't—you would come to the same decision. There is no other."

"But Robert!" I urged, ignoring her appeal to my conscience. I wasn't so sure that I would be capable of the martyrdom which she was ready to assume.

She winced perceptibly. I felt as if I had struck her.

"Robert can have no part in my life until this other matter is settled one way or another," she said after a tense interval. "Don't mistake me, dear. I—love Robert"—she brought the words out bravely, defiantly—"no one knows how truly, not even Robert—especially Robert—" she amended, "for he cannot understand my attitude toward Harry at all."

"But Surely, Lillian—"

Her words were like the turning of an electric flash upon my consciousness. I realized that this decision of Lillian's was no new one, that it dated from Harry Underwood's determination to expiate the crime he had committed, by war service, and—most significant of all—that Robert Savarin knew of her decision.

With a little shiver I recalled the look I had once seen on Robert Savarin's face when I had told him of Harry's heartless treatment of Lillian. For the sake of all concerned I was glad that Mr. Underwood was confined in a German prison. I had an absurd little feeling, which, however, would not down, that if he were living at all he was safer there than he would be if Robert Savarin—knowing what he did of Lillian's attitude, feeling as he did—were to be thrown in contact with the recreant man.

I made another attempt to fathom the mental process back of Lillian's decision.

"But surely, Lillian," I began, "you cannot go back to the old way. Think of Marion—"

I choked on the name, remembering the cold finality, the heartlessness of Harry Underwood's decision in regard to the child when he had left Lillian.

My friend made a gesture of impatience.

"Haven't You Read?"

"You don't understand me," she said. "Marion comes first always. I sacrificed her once for honor"—my thoughts leaped back to that terrible martyrdom of Lillian's which Dicky unwittingly had caused—"but this thing is different.

"I said, 'If Harry lives and wants me.' That is predicated upon the assumption that he wants me enough to fill his part of the bargain. I am not an absolute idiot, Madge, even though you do think me utterly mad."

There was no bitterness in the smile that accompanied the ironical words. I drew a sharp breath of relief, for I had feared I knew not what fantasy of Quixotism when I had first heard Lillian's decision concerning Harry Underwood.

"But, of course, you see that I cannot wait for Harry to take the initiative," she said a moment later, startling me again into a subdued
