RELIGIOUS PAPERS AS ADVERTISING MEDIUMS.

In these days when so many papers demand the attention of the advertiser, it is little wonder that he is often seriously puzzled as to the best and cheapest medium to use.

In the last decade few class papers, if any, have made greater strides in public favor than the religious, and as they demand higher rates for advertising space than the secular papers the question naturally arises, "Are they worth it?" We answer emphatically, yes; and briefly point out a few reasons why. It is not every advertisement their columns are open to, and being restricted not only to quality but often to quantity, those that do appear have a much better display than in either the local or metropolitan weekly paper; and with better ink and press work, as a rule, the advertising columns are more attractive and offer the best inducements for using illus-

On account of the censorship exercised many advertisements are rejected on account of their fraudulent or indelicate character, more weight is attached to those inserted, and gives to the advertiser a standing of respectability and reliableness.

The subscription price--rarely less than $2.00 per annum—guarantees a circulation in the best homes, and among people who have time to spend. The bulk of the reading matter is of such a character that they are just as interesting in two or three weeks as the day they are issued, and not infrequently pass through many families before being destroyed. They receive special and undivided attention on Sunday, when all have more leisure than on any other day; just the time an attractive advertisement can be carefully noted, although, possibly, many would not care to plead guilty of reading the advertisements on that day. Being essentially home papers, they are read carefully by the women, and the women are the greatest readers of advertise-

We are all familiar with sundry dying scenes in fliction, from Little Nell's to by the novelists.

I had the acquaintance of an old lady of fashion, to whom, when she lay on her death-bed, a clergyman, an entire stranger to the family, sent up his card, asking permission to pray with her.
