QUIET CHUCKLES.

A sermon and a hornet resemble each other in that they both have a concluding point.—Dansville Breeze.

As freckles are to the countenance of a pretty girl, so are delinquents to the subscription list of an editor.—Dansville Breeze.

The calicoes of a popular dry goods house are said to be like one of the members of the firm—the prints of good fellows.—Boston Bulletin.

The chiropodist is content to begin at the foot in business; the barber straight at the head.—Boston Courier.

Water from the river Styx should be good material for mucilage manufacturers.—Boston Bulletin.

A sign over one of the concert halls reads: "A large chorus of solo singers."—Buffalo Courier.

And now we hear of an oil can trust. That's nothing new, as the sad fate of many a servant girl shows.—Richmond Dispatch.

The man with a magic lantern cannot be expected to hold your opinion. He may have other views of his own.—New Orleans Picayune.

A Singular Lack of Courtesy.—"I 'clar', Mr. Shookum, 'f I didn't forgit to ax yo' to take off yo' hat! I'm actually gittin' dat absen' minded I haven't got common perliteness no mo'."—Harper's Bazar.

A serious accident occurred in an up town house the other night by a misplaced switch. The owner's husband stepped upon it and ran a hairpin into his foot to the depth of an inch.—Norristown Herald.

Chicken Feed.

A man in Athens, Mich., possesses a hen 16 years old. She is still in egg-cellent health.—Lowell Citizen.

A St. Louis chicken has three wings, and the old rooster says gravely that the young chicken is altogether too fly.—Somerville Journal.

It is stated that gold is found in the chicken's crop in Nebraska. They have imported 'em, too, we judge from the price of the last pair we bought.—Boston Bulletin.

"Don't crowd your fowls," says a poultry exchange. We will add that if you do crowd them, do it with corn. We are some on poultry ourself.—Dansville Breeze.

Russia has placed a tax of one kopeck each on every egg sold in the kingdom, and the hens kopecking around with every mark of dissatisfaction.—Epoch.

A Michigan man has a chicken which is 16 years old. Sealed proposals for the purchase of it will be received from boarding house keepers—Hotel Mail.

A Connecticut man made a bet that he could kill, clean, cook and eat a spring chicken in fifteen minutes. He won the bet, but it was an awful surprise to the chicken.—Burlington Free Press.

At the Front Gate.

"I tell you it's de lawd's truf, Rosie, dere's nuffin in de worl you could do to hurt my feelins."

"But circumstances over which we have no control sometimes alter cases."—Georgia Cracker.

The Fashions.

Hands will be more be less worn in the pockets this winter.—Off City Blizzard.

A fashion note informs us that high linen collars are going. They were big enough to walk a long time ago.—New Haven News.

Fashions for males don't change much; still there is always a new wrinkle in coat tails.—New Haven News.

The Force of Habit.

Wong Chin Foo says that in China, when a highway robber is caught, his head is chopped off and he never repeats the crime. It seems odd, at this distance, that a little thing like decapitation will prevent a man from pursuing the profession of highwayman; but a heathen will be a heathen.—Norristown Herald.

A Long Training.

Brown—Do you know how long Robinson has been keeping house?

Smith—No; but it must be a good many years. I took dinner with him the other day, and he carved a duck without spilling it on the floor.—Harper's Bazar.

Saved Himself.

Miss Gushington (enjoying a sleigh ride)—I think you have a lovely horse, Mr. De Lyle. About what does such a fine animal cost?

Mr. De Lyle—Two dollars an hour—or—er—yes, that horse is worth about $800, Miss Gushington.—The Epoch.

Where Kansas Rules Supreme.

A New York man has invented a process for making railroad cars out of wood pulp, but it takes a Kansas cyclone to make wood pulp out of railroad cars.—Kansas City Star.

A Precocious Answer.

Minister—Well, Bobby, what do you expect to be when you grow up?

Bobby (solemnly)—A man.—Drake's Gentleman's Magazine.

Forgot Himself.

Once when Edwin Forrest went to Detroit he produced "Metamora." Supers were engaged to personate warriors, and among them was a bright Irish lad who had a lurid admiration for the great tragedian. At that point in the play where Metamora asks, "Am I not the great chief of the Pottawatomies?" the supers are supposed to grunt, "Ugh! Ugh!" The stage manager had carefully drilled them in what they were expected to do, but on the night of the performance our young friend was so transported by Forrest's acting as to quite forget that he was impersonating an Indian. When Forrest turned to the assembled warriors and thundered forth, "Am I not the great chief of the Pottawatomies?" the Irish boy's enthusiasm broke all restraint. He leaped into the air with a wild shout, and, twirling his tomahawk about his head, replied: "Yees sir! yees sir!"—Boston Traveler.

Our "Tim" Enjoyed Mrs. Whitney's Dinner.

Congressman Tim Campbell is a quaint figure in the halls of legislation. If there is anything that will ruffle his temper more than another it is to be balked in his efforts to get an office. He has been having some trouble with Pay Director Stevenson lately, and Secretary Whitney has had his hands full keeping Tim within bounds. Not long ago he hit upon the idea of inviting Campbell to dine with him. He was careful to make Tim the sole guest of the evening, perhaps not as a distinguished honor, but rather as a precautionary measure. Campbell came and had a good time without making any particularly queer remark. When he got into his overcoat he suddenly turned to Mrs. Whitney, and in a burst of enthusiasm over his entertainment he said: "There were no flies on that dinner. You can bet your life on that."—Washington Letter.

Where It Touched Him.

In his youth the late Charles Darwin was passionately moved by music. He often spoke of a peculiar sensation of coldness or shivering in his back on hearing beautiful music, and an old friend quotes a remark made on the occasion of their hearing a fine anthem. At the end of an exceedingly impressive part he turned to his friend, asking seriously and with a deep sigh: "How's your backbone?"—The Argonaut.

STORIES ABOUT MEN.

Governor Joel Parker's Success in Crawling Out of a Small Hole.

An incident which illustrates Governor Parker's readiness in extricating himself from an unexpected dilemma was related by him to the writer some years ago. While he was a member of the house of assembly, in 1848, a question of some local and political importance came up, and the then young and rising statesman decided to oppose it vigorously. To this end he prepared an elaborate speech, in which he let his patriotic fire burst into flame. He was so well pleased with his effort that he told a friend what he was going to say. To emphasize one portion of his speech he referred to an oil portrait of Washington, which hung on the wall at the right of the speaker's desk. When he got to that portion of his speech, he exclaimed "And even the Father of his Country"—He raised his hand and lifted his eyes toward where he supposed the picture was. It had been removed by his waggish friend. He instantly added, "has been taken away in fear that he would blush for shame at the passage of this iniquitous measure."—New York Sun.

On the Force.

People who have been clubbed by policemen naturally seek court plasters.—New Haven News.

A Baltimore policeman has for a recommendation that he walks in his sleep.—Yonkers Statesman.

Policemen are mysterious creatures, and frequently express themselves in a cross sticks.—New Haven News.

It is said that Diogenes could sleep soundly even in a tub, and it is hinted that the old man had policemen's blood running through his veins.—Yonkers Statesman.

No Equaling Chicago.

Omaha Child—Did you see the eclipse of the moon? I did. You ought to have seen it. It only happens once a year.

Chicago Child—Don't you have them oftener than that in Omaha?

"Why, no."

"Such a place! Pooh! Why in Chicago the moon gets eclipsed most every night."—Omaha World.

Higher Education.

Mrs. Biggs—Now that your son has returned from college, do you feel repaid for your outlay for his education? Did he take any prizes? Mrs. Squiggs—Oh, yes, mum, yes, indeed. He got a medal for what he calls sprinting, and he must be high up in mathematics, for he says he's learned four new curves.—Scranton Truth.

A Talented Girl.

He (to Miss Breezy, of Chicago)—Your friend, Miss Shawsgarden, of St. Louis, is something of a linguist, is she not, Miss Breezy?

Miss Breezy—Yes. Clara speaks French, German and the Missouri languages.—New York Sun.

Variety the Spice of Life.

He (after having slipped the engagement ring on her finger)—Are you pleased with it, darling?

She—Delighted, George. It is different from anything of the sort I've ever had before—Texas Siftings.

Very Polite.

A Paradox.

In a newspaper office the fact is well known,
And the people will oft of the paradox speak,
That although signs of discord be never there shown,
Yet the devil's to pay at the end of each week.
—Boston Budget.

Where Quinine Comes From.

The mountains of Peru constitute what might be appropriately called "Quinine land." There the cinchona reaches perfection when it is not disturbed by the axes of the cascarilleros or bark searchers, and there the rich lanceolate leaves of the healing tree reflect the golden beams of a tropical sun. Almost constantly expeditions leave Cuzco and other Peruvian cities in search of the cinchona tree. The most of these are conducted with great secresy, for the discovery of a good group of cinchonas is sure to make the fortune of the leader of the party. Rival discoverers watch one another like hawks. They try to bribe the sepia colored cascarilleros who have sold their services to others, and very often Peruvian gold brings a whole season's preparations and toil to naught.—Philadelphia Times.

Painting Palm Leaf Fans.

The everlasting enamel paint with which the decorating English woman now covers everything not lively enough to escape from her, is employed to cover palm leaf fans to be carried with evening costume. The enamel hardens them, and they wear very well, and with the decoration of a ribbon bow they look well, whether ornamented with flowers or not. And when the owner is tired of one color she can cover it with enamel of a different hue and be newly equipped.—Boston Transcript."

How Leprosy is Spreading.

According to M. Besnier, a member of the Paris Academy of Medicine, leprosy, far from disappearing by degrees, is spreading rapidly. Since the extension of the French colonial possessions, soldiers, sailors, traders and missionaries have fallen victims to it in large numbers. M. Besnier, therefore, exhorts physicians in all countries to study the fell disease, in order to find a means of counteracting its ravages, for it has active focuses of infection in every part of the globe. The malady is transmitted by a bacillus shaped like that found in tuberculosis.—Pittsburg Bulletin.

Verifying an Old Legend.

Readers of the saga of the Burned Njal, translated by Sir George Dasent, cannot have forgotten the terrible conclusion, the burning of old Njal's house with all his family. This deed was almost the last of a series of man slayings, the result of an Icelandic vendetta or blood feud. The date was about the time of the conversion of Iceland to Christianity, that conversion having been rather incomplete so far. Now people have often asked whether this event, so renowned in history, ever took place. According to Nature, a member of the Icelandic Archæological Society has excavated the site assigned to Bergthorshol, Njal's house, by tradition. He found at a certain depth the ashes of a burned house and also some curious lumps of a fatty substance. Being analyzed, these proved to be skyr, a kind of buttermilk, apparently, which had undergone the action of fire. Now the saga expressly says that pailfuls of skyr were thrown by the women of the house on the fire in the attempt to extinguish it. This confirmation is very curious, if not, perhaps, very cogent.—London Daily News.

Paying Children for Everything.

Three young ladies were walking down Woodward avenue the other day, the damsel in the middle talking volubly in a very audible tone. She said:

"Why, they are paid for everything. They got $100 each for not having their ears pierced; $100 each for not becoming engaged until they are 21, and when the rest of the family went abroad and didn't take ——, she cried and got $100. It's $100 for this and a $100 for that all the time. Then there is their brother. He's delicate, you know, and he gets $1 a day for not eating dessert, $1 a day for going to bed at 9 o'clock and when he is sick he gets $2 a day for taking his medicine. And spend money! Why, girls, it's just awful! They spend more in a——," and they passed out of ear shot.—Detroit Free Press.

India is now furnishing an excellent market for the horses and mules raised in Australia.

NEW DISCOVERIES IN CHEMISTRY.

Chemical Reproductions of the Valuable Principles in Natural Products.

It will be a long time before the farmer finds himself supplanted by the chemical laboratory in the production of such commodities as sugar, tea, alcohol, drugs and dye stuffs, though sanguine chemists tell us that the recent triumphs of their science indicate the probability that these and other articles will some day be profitably produced from purely inorganic materials. Synthetic chemistry, or the forming of compounds by recombinations of chemical elements, is making steady progress, and has already affected agriculture.

Mr. Robert Hugh Mills, in a recent lecture, called attention to the fact that the cultivation of madder has been almost destroyed by the chemical discovery that its identical coloring matter can be cheaply produced from coal tar. The production of indigo is also threatened by an artificial production which the chemists have discovered. A while ago it was found that the cinchona tree could be profitably planted in India, and a fine new field of industry was believed to have opened for the farmers of that country. Scores of chemists, however, have been at work upon the synthesis of quinine, and their researches have advanced so far that the prediction is now confidently made that the manufacture of the principle of quinine will soon be a commercial success, and that cinchona planting will become a thing of the past. These chemical reproductions of the valuable principles inherent in natural products are often easier to handle and utilize than the products from which they have hitherto been derived, and thus the tendency of manufactures is to substitute artificial for natural sources of supply.

The problem of sugar making from inorganic materials has engaged some chemists for a number of years. The synthesis of glucose by Fischer and Tafel is said to promise an ample supply of this commodity without the aid of grapes or starch. Two years ago some German chemists announced that they had produced saccharose, the equivalent of cane sugar, by passing an electric current through a mixture of starch, sulphuric acid and water. Nothing has yet been heard of the commercial value of this new product, and there is no reason to think it will prove a dangerous rival to the sweets we derive from the cane and the beet. Some sugar growers, however, have been prophesying for years that something would happen to ruin the sugar industry, and their alarm receives a fresh impetus at every new discovery like that of Remsen's saccharine, an exceedingly sweet article produced from coal tar. The day may come when processes of sugar making by the use of inorganic materials will seriously affect the sugar planter, but there is no reason as yet to believe that his industry will soon be imperiled.

Legislation has intervened in some places to protect the dairy farmer against oleomargarine, even where this product is honestly sold as artificial butter. It is not to be expected that in many cases where science supplies us with a desirable substitute for any product, the law can be successfully invoked to keep the world from reaping the benefit of increasing knowledge. Future discoveries may compel the farmer to cease raising some produce by which he has thrived, or to change and improve his methods of agriculture; but it is certain that the tillers of soil will continue to supply the chief resources of food and apparel.—New York Sun.

One of the Sea's Dangers.

A curious acoustic phenomenon, sometimes observed at sea, has been termed by M. Fizeau, the "mirage of sound," from its analogy to certain well known phenomena of light. The sound waves are deflected upward to a very marked extent under the influence of strata of air of various temperatures, and to this effect are ascribed numerous collisions between vessels having powerful fog signals.—Arkansaw Traveler.

A Big Canal Project.

A scheme for constructing a canal deep enough for transatlantic steamers, from the sea to the city of Brussels, Belgium, has been submitted to the city council. The company will undertake to finish the work, and begin running steamers from Brussels to New York within three years from the date of the concession.—Foreign Letter.

A Moonless Month.

The month of February, 1866, was in one respect the most remarkable in the world's history. It had no full moon. January had two full moons and so had March, but February had none. Do you realize what a rare thing in nature that was? It had not occurred since the time of Washington, nor since the discovery of America, nor since the beginning of the Christian era, nor the creation of the world. And it will not occur again, according to the computation of astronomers, for—how long do you think?—2,500,000 years. Was not that truly a wonderful month?—Golden Days.

Mules That Carry a Ton.

At Genoa I saw a train of a dozen donkeys loaded with iron for the improvement of the street railway. The iron was tied across the donkeys' backs the long way, and the weight would have been considered a good load for two horses in America. It is not uncommon to see a donkey carrying a load of railroad bars weighing 3,000 pounds, and a ton is not a small wagon load in most countries.—Cor. Philadelphia Times.
