CHAPTER I.

"Positively he is coming!" says Mr. Massereene, with an air of most profound astonishment.

"Who?" asks Molly, curiously, pausing with her toast in the mid-air (they are at breakfast), and with her lovely eyes twice their usual goodly size. Her lips, too, are apart; but whether in anticipation of the news or the toast, it would be difficult to decide. "Is any one coming here?"

"Even here. This letter," regarding with a stricken conscience the elegant scrawl in his hand, "is from Tedcastle George Letturell (he is evidently proud of his name), declaring himself not only ready but fatally willing to accept my invitation to spend a month with me."

"A month!" says Molly, amazed; "and you never said a word about it, John."

"A month!" said Letitia, dismayed. "What on earth, John, is any one to do with any one a month down here?"

"I wish I knew," replies Mr. Massereene, getting more and more stricken as he notices his wife's dejection, and gazing at Molly as though for inspiration. "What evil genius possessed me that I didn't say a fortnight? But, to tell the honest truth; Letty, it never occured to me that he might come."

"Then why did you ask him?" says Letitia, as sharply as it is possible for her. "When writing, you might have anticipated so much; people generally do."

"Do they?" says Mr. Massereene, with an irrepressible glance at Molly. "Then you must only put me down as an exception to the general rule. I thought it only civil to ask him, but I certainly never believed he would be rash enough to go in for voluntary exile. I should have remembered how unthinking he always was."

"But who is he?" asks Molly, impatiently, full of keen and pleasurable excitement. "I die of vulgar curiosity. What is he like? Is he young, handsome. Oh, John, do say he is young and good-looking."

"He was at school with me."

"Oh!" groans Molly.

"Does that groan proceed from a conviction that I am in the last stage of decay?" demands Mr. Massereene. "Anything so rude as you, Molly, has not yet been rivalled. However, I am at a disadvantage; so I forgive, and will proceed. Though at school with me, he is at least nine years my junior, and can't be more than twenty-seven."

"Ah!" says Molly. To an Irish girl alone is given the power to express these two exclamations with proper effect.

"He is a hussar, of a good family, sufficiently good looks, and I think, no fortune," says Mr. Massereene, as though reading from a doubful guide-book.

"How delightful!" says Molly.

"How terrific!" says Letitia. "Fancy a hussar finding amusement in lambs, and cows, and fat pigs, and green fields!"

"Green fields and pastures new;" quotes Mr. Massereene. "He will have them in abundance. He ought to be happy, as they say there is a charm in variety."

"Perhaps he will find some amusement in me," suggests Molly, modestly. "Can it be possible that he is really coming? Oh, the glory of having a young man to talk to, and that young man a soldier! Letitia"—to her sister-in-law—"I warn you it will be no use for you to look shocked because I have finally made up my mind to flirt every day and all day long, with Tedcastle George Luttrell."

"Shocked!" says Letitia, gravely. "I would be a great deal more shocked if you had said you wouldn't; for what I should do with him, if you refused to take him in hand, is a thing on which I shudder to speculate. John is forever doing questionable things, and repenting when it is too late. Unless he means to build a new wing"—with a mild attempt at sarcasm—"I don't know where Mr. Luttrell is to sleep."

"I fear I would not have time, says Mr. Massereene, meekly; "the walls would scarcely be dry, as he is coming—the day after to-morrow."

"Not until then?" says Letitia, ominously calm. "Why did not you make it to-day? That would have precluded the possibility of my getting things into any sort of order."

"Letitia, if you continue to address me in your present heartless style for one minute longer, I shall burst into tears," says Mr. Massereene. And then they all laugh.

"He shall have my room," says Molly, presently, seeing that perplexity still adorns Letitia's brows, "and I have Lovatt's."

"Oh, Molly, I will not have you turned out of your room for any one," says Letitia; but she says it faintly, and is conscious of a feeling of relief at her heart as she speaks.

"But indeed he shall. It is such a pretty room that he cannot fail to be impressed. Any one coming from a hot city and proving insensible to the charms of the roses that are now creeping into my window would be unfit to live. Even a hussar must have a soft spot somewhere. I foresee those roses will be the the means of reducing him to a lamb-like meekness."

"You are too good, Molly. It seems a shame," says Letitia, patting her sister-in-law's hand, and still hesitating, through a sense of duty: "does it not, John?"

"It is so difficult to know what a woman really means by the word 'shame,'" replies John, absently, being deep in the morning's paper. "You said it was a shame yesterday when the cat drank all the cream; and Molly said it was a shame when Wyndham ran away with Crotton's wife."

"Don't take any notice of him, Letty," says Molly, with a scornful shrug of her pretty shoulders, turning her back on her brother, and resuming the all-important subject of the expected visitor.

"Another railway accident, and twenty men killed," says Mr. Massereene, in a few minutes, looking up from his Times, and adopting the lugubrious tone one always assumes on such occasions, whether one cares or not.

"Wasn't it fortunate we put up those curtains clean last week?" murmurs Letitia, in a slow, self-congratulatory voice.

"More than fortunate," says Molly.

"Twenty men, killed, Letty!" repeats Mr. Massereene, solemnly.

"I don't believe there is a spare bath in the house," explains Letitia, again sinking into the lowest depths of despair.

"You forget the old one in the nursery. It will do for the children very well, and he can have the new one," says Molly.

"Twenty men killed, Molly!" reiterates Mr. Massereene, a faint gleam of surprised disgust creeping into his eyes.

"So it will, dear. Molly, you are an immense comfort. What did you say, John? Twenty men killed? Dreadful! I wonder, Molly, if I might suggest to him that I would not like him to smoke in bed? I hear a great many young men, have that habit, indeed, a brother of mine, years ago at home, nearly set the house on fire one night with a cigar."

"Let me do all the lecturing," says Molly, gaily, "there is nothing I should like better.

"Talk of ministering angels, indeed!" mutters Mr. Massereene, rising, and making for the door, paper and all. "I don't believe they would care if England was swamped, so long as they had clean curtains for Luttrell's bed.

CHAPTER II.

"A lovely lady, garmented in light
From her own beauty."—Shelley.

The day that is to bring them Luttrell has dawned deepened, burst into perfect beauty, and now hold out its arms to the restful evening. A glorious sunny evening as yet, full of its lingering youth, with scarce a hint of the noon's decay. The little yellow sunbeams, richer perhaps in tint than they were two hours agone, still play their games of hide and seek and bo peep among the roses that climb and spread themselves in all their creamy, rosy, snowy loveliness over the long, low house where live the Massereenes, and breathe forth scented kisses to the wooing wind.

A straggling house in Brooklyn, larger at the first glance than it in reality is and distinctly comfortable, yet with its comfort a thing very far apart from luxury, and with none of the sleepiness of an over rich prosperity about it. In spite of the late June sun, there is a general air of life a tremulous merriment, everywhere the voices of the children, a certain laugh that rings like far off music, the cooing of the pigeons beneath the eaves, the cluck, cluck of the silly fowls in the farm yard—all mingle to defy the creeping sense of laziness that the day generates.

"It is late," says Mr. Massereene to himself, examining his watch for the fifteenth time as he saunters in a purposely fashion up and down before the hall door. There is a suppressed sense of expectancy both in his manner and in the surroundings. The gravel has been newly raked, and gleams white and untrodden. The borders of the lawn that join on to it have been freshly clipped. A post in the railings, that for three weeks previously had been securely propped, and now stands firm and uncompromising as its fellows.

"It is almost seven," says Tetitia, showing her fresh, handsome face at the drawing-room window. "Do you think he will be here for dinner, John?"

"I am incapable of thought," says John. "I find that when a man who is in the habit of dining at six is left without his dinner until seven he grows morose. It is a humiliating discovery. Surely the stomach should be subservient to the mind, but it isn't. Letitia, like a good girl, do say you have ordered up the soup."

"But, my dear John, had we not better wait a little longer?"

"My dear Letitia, most certainly not, unless you wish to raise a storm impossible to quell. At present I feel myself in a mood that a very little more waiting will render ferocious. Besides"—seeing his wife slightly uneasy—"as he did not turn up about six, he cannot by any possibility be here until half-past eight."

"And I took such trouble with that dinner!" says Letitia with a sigh.

"I am more glad to hear it than I can tell you," says her husband, briskly. "Take my word for it, Letty, your trouble won't go for nothing."

"Gourmand!" says Letitia, with the smile she reserves alone for him.

Eight—half-past eight—nine.

"I don't belief he is coming at all," says Molly, pettishly, coming out from the curtains of the window, and advancing straight into the middle of the room.

Under the chandelier, that has been so effectively touched up for this recreant knight, she stands bathed in the soft light of the many candles that beam down with mild kindliness upon her. It seems as though they love to rest upon her—to add yet one more charm, if it may be, to the sweet, graceful figure, the half-angry, wholly charming attitude, the tender, lovable, fresh young face.

Her eyes, large, dark and blue—true Irish eyes that bespeak her father's race—shine with a steady clearness. They do not sparkle; they are hardly brilliant; they look forth at one with an expression so soft, so earnest, yet withal so merry, as would make one stake their all on the sure act that the heart within her must be golden.

Her nut-brown hair, drawn back from her low brow into a loose coil behind, is enriched here and there with little sunny tresses, while across her forehead a few wavy locks—veritable love-locks, in Molly's case—wander idly, not as of a set purpose, but rather as though they have there drifted of their own gay will.

"The Proper Study of Mankind is Man," says the illustrious Pope. If he had included woman in the list, he would have been nearer the truth, if not so poetical. Dr. R. V. Pierce has made them both a life study, especially woman, and the peculiar derangements to which her delicate system is liable. Many women in the land who are acquanted with Dr. Pierce only through his "Favorite Prescription," bless him with all their hearts, for he has brought them the panacea for all those chronic ailments peculiar to their sex, such as leucorrhœa, prolapsus and other displacements, ulceration, "internal fever," bloating, tendency to internal cancer, and other ailments. Price reduced to one dollar. By druggists.

A Remarkable Cure of Deafness.

Parkman, Me.

Messrs. I. S. Johnson & Co.,—Gentlemen,—I am going to tell you about my case in part. Some thirty years ago, I used to be troubled with cough, and threw up muscus junks of hard matter. People said it was catarrah. I took Dr. Marshall's snuff. It would make me sneeze, and give relief for a short time; but the trouble got worse. Some fifteen years ago it got so bad that I had to breathe out of my mouth. Ten years ago it caused partial deafness, which increased, and for the last six or eight years I have been stone deaf in my right ear, and very hard of hearing in my left ear. I have taken doses of physic, powders, and pills, from various physicians, and applied blisters, with only temporary relief. But of late I am getting permanent benefit—for I have been taking Johnson's Anodyne Liniment for the last five mouths. In a short time after I commenced taking it and applying it to the ear according to the directions, there appeared to be a large round substance in my right ear got loosed from its fastening, and would move round as my head was in different positions. It continued to grow smaller; and, about forty days since it was all dissolved and gone, and I can hear as well as I ever could. Your liniment was the cause of my recovering my hearing; and it has done more for me than anything else. I will make oath to the truth of these statements at any time. Dr. Stevens of this place advised me to write and tell you what the liniment had done for me; and I concluded to write, for it might do somebody some good. Yours gratefully,

E. M. HANES.

Has Effected an Entire Cure.

Brooklyn, N. Y.

Dear Sirs:—I have pleasure in stating that Johnson's Anodyne Liniment I got at your store, has effected an entire cure of my deafness when other previous remedies failed. J. G. M. WRIGHT.

HERE AND THERE.

Some Facts and a Few Other Good Things.

A tinsmith in the country has a sign which reads:—"Quart measures of all shapes and sizes sold here."

This season of the year it is very important to have a reliable remedy in the house for such diseases as flux, dysentery, diarrhœa, summer complaint, cholera, cholera morbus and cholera infantum. Such a remedy is West's Pain King. Only 25c. All druggists.

The New York City Directory just issued contains 2175 pages of names, numbering in all 324,813, and indicating a population of 2,600,000. There are 2300 Smiths, 1800 Browns and 900 Joneses enrolled.

Nervous headache, earache, toothache, and in fact any ache or pain, cured like magic with West's World's Wonder. 25c and 50c. All druggists.

A doctor stopped at the shop of a country apothecary and inquired for pharmacopœa. "Sir," said the apothecary, "I know of no such farmer living about these parts."

West's Pain King works like a charm in relieving pain in the stomach, all bowel difficulties and cholera. No traveller should be without it. Should always be in the house. Costs but 25c. All druggists.

A Western editor declared the other day that a certain tough locality in his town was worse than "the infamous Rotten Row in London."

West's Liver Pills remove that sallowness from the complexion by restoring the digestive organs to a healthy action. All druggists.

The Hoosier man who jilted a girl and had his thumb bitten off by her, may have had reason to think that he got off pretty cheaply after all.

Wonderful is the instantaneous effect of West's Pain King in relieving cramps, colic and all bowel difficulties. Worth its weight in gold but costs only 25c. Should always be kept in every house. All druggists.

It is said that a wealthy editor of Boston has made provision in his will for a fund to establish a Professorship of Practical Journalism at Harvard College.

Scientists inform us that we may expect a visit this summer from the terrible scourge, cholera. West's Pain King is the remedy to keep. Always ready for a sudden attack. 25c. All druggists

A damp cloth held over the mouth and nose, or better, made to envelope the whole head, will enable one to pass through the most dense smoke without suffocation.

West's World Wonder, for external use, excels any other liniment for rheumatism, neuralgia, cuts, wounds, burns and bruises. Always useful. All druggists.

The Japanese Government has placed some large orders for steel rails in Europe. Half the contract goes to English firms at $22.67 per ton and the other half to German at $26.25.

Life saved at midnight by the timely use of West's Pain King. Do not fail to always keep it in the house for attacks of colic, cholera morbus, cramps, flux, dysentery and all kindred diseases, always very sudden. Be prepared. 25c. All druggists.

The Philadelphia Inquirer judiciously observes that if the people of America would find half as much fault with their representatives in Congress as they do with their baseball clubs the country would be much better governed.

AFTER LONG YEARS.—"I was troubled with liver complaint for a number of years, finding no cure. I tried B. B. B. I took four bottles, and am perfectly cured, strong and hearty." Mrs. Maria Askett, Alma, Ont.

Surf bathing is said to be the cause of more cases of deafness than any other one thing.

The dyspeptic's friend, West's Liver Pills. Take one sugar-coated West's Liver Pill every night and you will bless the day you read this. 30 pills 25c. All druggists.

A girl may be like sugar for two reasons. She may be sweet, and she may be full of grit.

Bodily health and vigor may be maintained as easily in the heat of summer as in the winter months, if the blood is purified and vitalized with Ayer's Sarsaparilla. Every person who has used this remedy has been greatly benefited. Take it this month.

It is not enough to make a virtue of necessity. You should make a necessity of virtue.

Whether from swampy land or stagnant pool, or from the deadly gases of city sewers, malarial poisons are the same. Ayer's Ague Cure, taken according to directions, is a warranted specific for malarial disorders.

Magistrate—Did the prisoner make a full confession? Police—No, sir. He made the confession when he was full.

A GOOD ACT.—"As a cure for all summer complaints I highly recommend Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry, having often used it with the best results. I have often been thanked for recommending it." William Haw, Ancaster, Ont.

An old woman may be an incorrigible gossip, but when you come down to facts the peacock is the greatest tail-bearer of all.

A SOURCE OF DANGER.—The frequent source of danger attending bowel complaints during the summer and fall is the liability to check the diarrhœa too suddenly. Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry will not do this. Inflammation of the bowels does not follow its use, as is too often the case with powerful opiates and astringents It cures promptly and in a natural manner.

"Patrick, ye're not so stiddy as ye promised me yez'ud be to-morrow mornin'." "Whisht, Judy, avic; sure it was a rocket slitick that wint down me wrong throt."

GREAT GAIN.—"I used a great deal of doctor's medicine for kidney complaint during five years, was getting worse all the time until I tried B. B. B. I took three bottles gained in weight from 130 to 159 lbs. I can highly recommend Burdock Blood Bitters to to be a good medicine." Thus testifies John Walton, of Springfield, N. B.

The man who was charged with having a "skeleton in his closet" vigorously denied the accusation, but admitted that possibly it might be a phan-tom cat that was located there.

IN GOOD REPUTE.—James McMurdock, writing from Kinsale, says: "B. B. B. as a remedy for diseases of the blood, liver and kidneys, has an excellent reputation in this locality. I have used it, and speak from experience, as well as observation. It is the only medicine I want, and I advise others afflicted to try it."

Ma, said Bertie, "should I say pants or trowsers? "Trowsers, my dear," said the mother. "Well, then," said Bertie, "I think Bridget had better give Fido some water; he trowsers awfully."

It is said no one is allowed to speak when dining with the Queen of England." This is decidedly inconvenient. What is a fellow to do when he wants another piece of pie? Perhaps he is obliged to "whistle for it."

ARE YOU GOING TO TRAVEL?—Don't forget a supply of that Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry. It is a superior remedy for sea sickness, and a positive cure for all bowel complaints induced by bad water, change of diet, or of climate. Whether at home or abroad, it should be kept at hand in case of emergency.

A youngster sat watching his mother while she pitted cherries. She inadvertently passed one without removing the stone. Hopeful immediately picked it out with the remark: "Here's one you didn't unbutton, mamma."

Some one says that one of the latest freaks with New York girls is to "practice smiling before the mirror." It is a harmless whim; but it is hoped they will not imitate a freak of their brother's and practice "smiling before a glass."

AYER'S PILLS.

Sugar-Coated Cathartic

If the Liver becomes torpid, if the bowels are constipated, or if the stomach fails to perform its functions properly, use Ayer's Pills. They are invaluable.

For some years I was a victim to Liver Complaint, in consequence of which I suffered from General Debility and Indigestion. A few boxes of Ayer's Pills restored me to perfect health.—W. T. Brightney, Henderson, W. Va.

For years I have relied more upon Ayer's Pills than anything else, to my bowels. These Pills are mild in action, and do their work thoroughly. I have used them with good effect, in cases of Rheumatism, Kidney Trouble, and Dyspepsia.—G. F. Miller, Attleborough, Mass.

Ayer's Pills cured me of Stomach and Liver troubles, from which I had suffered for years. I consider them the best pills made, and would not be without them.—Morris Gates, Downsville, N. Y.

I was attacked with Bilious Fever, which was followed by Jaundice, and was so dangerously ill that my friends despaired of my recovery. I commenced taking Ayer's Pills, and soon regained my customary strength and vigor.—John C. Pattison, Lowell, Nebraska.

Last spring I suffered greatly from a troublesome humor on my side. In spite of every effort to cure this eruption, it increased until the flesh became entirely raw. I was troubled, at the same time, with Indigestion, and distressing pains in

The Bowels.

By the advice of a friend I began taking Ayer's Pills. In a short time I was free from pain, my food digested properly, the sores on my body commenced healing, and, in less than one month, I was cured.—Samuel D. White, Atlanta, Ga.

I have long used Ayer's Pills, in my family, and believe them to be the best pills made.—S. C. Darden, Darden, Miss.

My wife and little girl were taken with Dysentery a few days ago, and I at once began giving them small doses of Ayer's Pills, thinking I would call a doctor if the disease became any worse. In a short time the bloody discharges stopped, all pain went away, and health was restored.—Theodore Ealing, Richmond, Va.
