Engagement of Lord Northland — Coney Island, In Ireland a Family Possession

(Copyright, 1912, by the Brentwood Company)

The announcement of the engagement of Lord Northland to Hilda, daughter of the late Sir Daniel Cooper and niece of the present Sir William Charles Cooper, bears out what I stated in these letters that it would be impossible for him to wed Mrs. Stirling, with whom his name had been coupled in the divorce suit brought by the Scotch Laird, John Alexander Stirling.

Mrs. Stirling, it will be remembered, was before her marriage, Miss Clara Elizabeth Taylor, a pretty soubrette from Washington. Lord Northland is a Scotchman. His father, the Earl of Ranfurly, head of the house which furnished John Knox to Scottish history as a leader of the reformation in the northern kingdom, and having also in his veins the Quaker blood of William Penn, is a Scotch peer and land owner. Lord Northland is his son and heir.

Now the Scotch divorce laws are very peculiar. They do not forbid divorced people to marry again. The guilty party may marry immediately after the decree is pronounced, anybody except the co-respondent in the case. This rule, which is most strict and imperative, dates in its present form in Scotland, from the year 1600 and has always been vigorously enforced.

Lord Northland is about forty years of age. He has seen a great deal of the world having among other things, acted as A. D. C. to his father when the latter was Governor General of New Zealand, where he achieved so much popularity that when he completed his term of office, the colonials petitioned the crown to appoint him for six years more. Lord Ranfurley could not very well resist this flattering appeal and remained for a year longer, when homesickness took possession of him and he returned to Ireland. But he still has considerable property in the Antipodes, notably in Australia, where he is interested in an immense fruit canning establishment in Victoria. He owes his accession to the peerage to the fact that his elder brother was killed while out on an elephant hunting expedition on the east coast of Africa.

In the course of his explorations Lord Ranfurley collected and despatched to the South Kensington Museum many hundreds of specimens of antipodean birds and has the honor of having a new species of cormorant which he discovered, named in his honor "Phalacrocorax Ranfurlii." He is married to a daughter of old Lord Charlemont, who for many years was so familiar a figure at Dublin Castle, as Usher of the Black Rod to the Order of St. Patrick, and as comptroller of the vice-regal household.

As Lady Ranfurly is the only child of Lord Charlemont, she will inherit at his death, no less a place than Coney Island. I do not mean the Coney Island on the ocean front of New York City, however, but the Coney Island in County Armagh, sacred to the memory of Saint Coney. It is difficult for those who have visited New York's Coney Island at the height of the season, to realize that it owes its name to a saint, who was also a recluse. She is called a saint, though as a matter of fact she has not been raised above beatification. Her island is situated in Lough Neagh, and was a favorite retreat of St. Patrick.

According to tradition, Saint Coney was a pious woman who lived in a lonely cave in the woods of Tyrone. She practiced the art of healing with so much success as to win the respect and love of the natives. But when in the fourteenth century the O'Neills advanced from the Derry side to displace the O'Connors who held possession of the southern coast of Lough Neagh, their chief, Dermot, fell seriously ill, and he was carried to the cell of Saint Coney. However, his complaint defied her skill, and he died. His followers accused the saint of being a tool of their enemies, and swore vengeance. But the O'Connors came to her assistance, and carried her off to the island, which bears her name to this day. There she continued for many years, and when she died, the O'Connors erected to her memory a tower, the ruins of which have been converted into a mausoleum by the Charlemont family.

The Ranfurly motto is: "I move and prosper," and the present representatives of the peerage have certainly done their best to live up to it.

A most interesting volume or series of books might be written on the experiences and adventures of both father and son, especially in New Zealand, of which country it is said that no official has a better knowledge than Lord Ranfurly.

The welfare of the Maoris was a constant source of solicitude to him. He is said to have visited every Maori village in the colony, and during his term of office had the satisfaction of signifying the royal assent to an act of parliament giving to them county councils and power to deal with local and native affairs. The Maoris have a definite place assigned to them in the constitution of New Zealand. They have four seats in the house of representatives, and two in the legislative council, while it is not an unusual thing for a Maori to have a seat in the cabinet, holding the portfolio for native affairs.

Lord Northland's fiancee, Miss Hilda Susan Ellen Cooper, is the daughter of the late Sir Daniel Cooper. Her mother is the daughter of Sir James Grant Suttie. She has an elder sister named Dorothy, who is married to Henry Streatfield, of the Grenadier Guards. Miss Hilda Cooper's father, the second baronet, died on June 13, 1909, and as he left no male issue, the baronetcy went to his brother, Sir William Charles Cooper, of Woolahra New South Wales. The family may be said to be an Australian one, the first baronet having been Sir Daniel Cooper, speaker of the legislative assembly of New South wales from 1856 to 1860. He was knighted in 1857, and created a baronet in 1863.

To Keep Your Hair Fine and Glossy

(Amy Moore in Current Styles)

"The reason women have brittle stringy, straggly hair is because it is washed too often. This robs the scalp of the oily secretion necessary to promote a healthy condition and dandruff and falling hair result.

"Women troubled with dry, itchy scalps, or those having too much oil should use a dry shampoo frequently, as it invigorates the scalp tissues and stimulates the hair follicles, making the hair bright and fluffy.

"A reliable shampoo powder can be made by mixing 4 ounces of orris root with 4 ounces of therox and a tablespoonful dusted on the head, then brushed out carefully is more beneficial than a massage. It cleanses the scalp and keeps the hair glossy. Then, too, a dry shampoo eliminates the exposure to catching cold that follows washing the head."

Everyday Mind Readers

By RUTH CAMERON

DID you ever happen to interest yourself in the science of mind reading? I don't mean the abstract science which we read about in books, but the simple, concrete kind, which you and I can practice every day, if we have our wits about us.

For instance, a young engaged couple who have been absent from each other for some months come together again, and after the customary greetings have somewhat subsided, she asks him, "Do you ever wonder if I'll look the way you think I do, when you see me again?" "No," he answers, "but you do, or else you wouldn't have asked me that." In which conclusion he was quite correct, and showed that he understood the everyday science of mind reading to a T.

Suppose you are with a group of girls, and one of them looks at you thoughtfully and then observes, "Does my nose look shiny?" do you thoughtlessly say "No," or "Yes," as the case may be, and let it go at that? Or do you read the thought that made her wonder about the condition of her nose, and reach for your own powder puff?

Again, our judgments of other people's motives and characters are often excellent sidelights on our own inward workings to him who has the wit to look for them. "He says he gets fifty dollars a week," a man said to me the other day, speaking of a fellow employe," but they all four-flush about their salaries. I usually deduct about twenty-five per cent. from what they say. He probably gets thirty-five or forty dollars at the most."

Where did that man get such an idea of his friends? Partly from his experience with them, but partly out of his own knowledge of himself. I am sure it would be safe to apply this twenty-five per cent. rule to any statements which he should make.

The man who is always suspicious of other men's honesty proves that he has many dishonest thoughts himself. The woman who is always ready to believe the worst of other women therein admits her consciousness of her own inherent weakness, however virtuous the shelter of circumstances and environment may have made her.

Another interesting branch of mind reading consists in tracing trains of thought. You notice a child with an exquisite complexion and mention the fact. A moment later your companion says, "I wonder how Mrs. So-and-So is. Have you heard from her lately?" If he had said, "Speaking of complexions, how is Mrs. So-and-So who has such a bad skin?" would his thought have been any plainer? That is an exaggeratedly simple example of this kind of mind reading. Much more intricate and lengthy trails can be followed by any one who is accustomed to the exercise. I want, however, to warn any one who tries this not to be too sure of his conclusions. I have frequently put mine to the test of inquiry, and while they were often right, they were sometimes totally wrong.

Doubtless you are already a mind reader. If you are not, I recommend the gentle art to you as a diversion and a tool. I think you'll find it both.

A TRIO OF FRENCH FASHIONS

The left-hand figure has a smoke-gray charmeuse gown, drapped up one side of the skirt under a steel buckle. The bodice is outlined with a grey tulle ruche and opens over a plastron of white tulle, the frill round it being made with Malines lace.

The central figure wears a tafetta gown. The blue skirt has a multi-colored stripe. The jacket is of plain silk with a border of silk fringe, and has short sleeves with revers of stripped taffetas. The chemisette and collar are of white tulle.

The right hand figure wears an elegant "tailor-made" in Surah silk. It has a draped tunic showing long ends of black satin. The coat is in the bolero style, with collar and trimmings of white velvet.

POOR OLD MOTHER

In the correspondence column of a contemporary there recently appeared a question by a son-in-law with whom his wife's mother had been living as to whether other members of the family (three sons), who were said to be able, though unwilling, could be compelled to bear a portion of the expense of the mother's maintenance. She had been living with one of the sons, and the brother-in-law had been asked if she could be boarded in his house so that the daughter might look after her. This was agreed to, but the board money was not paid, and after eighteen months of squabbling the question was asked. The answer was diplomatic, namely, that the matter was one which required most judicious handling, and that a solicitor should be consulted.

Had the person in charge of the question column known of the Canadian Government Annuities System, the wisest thing he could have done would have been to recommend the purchase of a government annuity. At her age (75) an annuity of $300 ($75 every three months), payable as long as she might live, could have been purchased for $1,992. The mother could then have lived happily with her daughter for the remainder of her days, the son-in-law would have regarded the mother's presence in the home as a boon rather than a burden, and the family ties would have remained unbroken. But best of all, the comfort and happiness of the dear old mother, who had nursed them in their infancy, had, perhaps, spent many a sleepless night in anxious attendance upon them when the "dread messenger" was hovering near, ready to snatch them away from her, and who had guided their young footsteps in the straight and narrow path—priceless services—would then have been assured for all time.

Happily in Canada cases of this kind are few, and they will be still fewer in the years to come if the boys and girls of today can only be induced to pay into the annuities system a few cents a week For example, a young man of twenty by paying in fifty cents a week until he is sixty may purchase an Annuity of $352.76; and a young woman starting at same age, and paying a like amount for the same period, could secure an annuity of $311.72, which, owing to her longevity being superior, is somewhat less than he would receive. The age of sixty to a young man or woman of twenty may seem a long way off; but it may interest them to know that, according to mortality experience, of 10,000 of either sex starting at twenty considerably more than fifty per cent. will be still living even at sixty-five. There is more than an even chance that you will be one of the 5,000.

Information as to the cost of an annuity at any age may be secured on application to the postmaster, or to the superintendent of annuities, Ottawa, to whom your letter may be sent without postage.

Woman's Complexion Need Never Grow Old

(From English Magazine of Travel)

"Travelers visiting Baltimore and other cities in the United States are struck with the youthful complexions of the women. It is the same lovely and delicate tint—free from blemish—that one finds in France and Japan.

"Whether in the Orient or along the Mediterranean—or in the bustling American city—it is evident that some women know the secret of mayatone, for with the aid of this simple lotion any woman can preserve the dainty and delicate skin given her in her girlhood and halt the advance of Father Time.

"The treatment is harmless and will not injure a baby's skin. Dissolve a small original package of mayatone in eight ounces of witch hazel. Massage the face, arms and neck with this solution once a day and you need never use paint or powder. It does not show upon the skin, but it removes all sorts of blemishes and prevents the growth of hair. In hot weather mayatone is doubly welcome, for it removes any shine from the skin at once, and keeps the complexion dainty and fair on the most trying days."

Daily Hints For the Cook

WASHINGTON PIE.

One cup sugar, four teaspoons melted butter, two eggs (beaten), half cup sweet milk, one and a half cups flour, two teaspoons baking powder, salt and flavor.

COFFEE WHIP.

One tablespoon cornstarch, two tablespoons sugar, one cup coffee, quarter teaspoon vanila, whites of two eggs, Measure one tablespoon starch and two of sugar into a pan and rub down with a litle of the coffee; put on stove and let mixture boil until thick. Take this from stove and beat until spongy; beat whites of two eggs very thick and put them into the mixture very lightly and then cool.

STUFFED HADDOCK

Take a good-sized haddock, remove the tail, fins and head, and thoroughly dry the fish. Prepare the stuffing of three tablespoonfuls of chopped suet, three tablespoonfuls of bread crumbs, one dessertspoonful of chopped parsley or mixed herbs, one beaten egg and seasoning of salt and pepper. Mix this well together, pack it into the stomach of the fish, sew up the slit with needle and thread, place in a well-greased baking tin, brush it over with egg or milk, sprinkle on a tablespoonful of bread crumbs and bake three-quarters of an hour in a moderate oven, basting it occasionally with butter or dripping.

THEY FEAR RECIPROCITY

Amherst News)

The big interests on the other side of the border are keenly desirous of having the United States' offer of reciprocity taken off the statute books. The American Economist, the organ of the Protective League of the United States, says that in the Republican States that have gone against Taft in the campaign for renomination "if Mr. Taft had asked for the repeal of the reciprocity legislation he would have greatly helped himself. But he will not do so."

In another editorial reference to its pet aversion, The American Economist says:—

"But as to the fact that 'reciprocity' is dead—that is different. It is not dead so long as the onesided, unfair, and unjust provision for free trade in paper and pulp remains a law. Moreover, Canada may at any time reverse herself and accept the entire free trade scheme. To make sure that 'reciprocity' is dead, President Taft should recommend and his free trade auxiliaries in the house should concur in the repeal of the act of July 26, 1911."

The big interests on both sides of the border, which are fighting to prevent any lowering of the high protection walls of the United States and Canada will not sleep soundly at night till they secure the repeal of the reciprocity offer. So far as it remains on the record there will be danger of the abolition of the food duties on both sides of the line. There must be no leaks left unguarded in the protectist system of dykes.

LIBERAL POLICY

(Moncton Transcript)

A vote for the provincial Liberal candidates means fair play for the native farmer as well as for the newcomer, not for the newcomer alone. The Liberal party believes in welcoming the newcomer but does not believe that the native farmer should be passed over in the distribution of judicious assistance. The Liberal party bonuses the manufacturer. The Liberal party should help the farmer as well without being hostile to the manufacturer. The country districts should have assistance as well as the towns. The principal basis of urban prosperity is a prosperous country-side.

The country-side in New Brunswick is at present none too prosperous and therefore the urban communities as a whole are not growing rapidly. The provincial Liberal leaders recognize this fact of this condition and believe that a vigorously new policy of encouragement to the farmers of the province is imperatively needed and essential to general prosperity. It is time for a change! The Flemming government out, and in a government of the people for the people and not for the monopolists.
