ARE YOUR EYES TO BLAME?
Don't try to stop pain until you have found the cause. Get at the root of the trouble first, and remember pain is only nature's message that something has gone wrong.
Take headache for instance; do you suppose for a minute that the tablet or powder you take to relieve it is in any sense a remedy? You merely drug the nerves so that they no longer give their warning.
90% of all headaches are from defective eyes, and it is our pleasure as well as our business to provide you with glasses that stop the suffering once and for all, by correcting the cause.

The Mill on the Floss

BY GEORGE ELIOT

(36. Instalment.)

Mr. Tulliver fixed his eyes on the clothes, and remained silent for two or three minutes. A new shade came over his face. He looked up at Maggie first, and said in a lower tone, "You got the letter, then, my wench?"

"Where's your mother?" he said, so preoccupied that he received the kiss as passively as some quiet animal might have received it.

"She's downstairs with my aunts, father: shall I fetch her?"

"Ay, ay: poor Bessy!" and his eyes turned towards Tom as Maggie left the room.

"You'll have to take care of 'em both if I die, you know, Tom. You'll be badly off, I doubt. But you must see and pay everybody. And mind—there's fifty pound o' Luke's as I put into the business—he gave it me a bit at a time, and he's got nothing to show for it. You must pay him first thing."

Beware of Immitations and false recommendations.

"Yes, father. And haven't you a note from my uncle Moss for three hundred pounds? We came to look for that. What do you wish to be done about it, father?"

"Ah! I'm glad you thought o' that, my lad," said Mr. Tulliver. "I allays meant to be easy about that money, because o' your aunt. You mustn't mind losing the money, if they can't pay it—and it's like enough they can't. The note's in that box, mind! I allays meant to be good to you, Gritty," said Mr. Tulliver, turning to his sister; "but, you know, you agrravated me when you would have Moss."

At this moment Maggie re-entered with her mother, who came in much agitated by the news that her husband was quite himself again.

"Well, Bessy," he said, as she kissed him, "you must forgive me if you're worse off than you iver expected to be. But it's the fault o' the law — it's none o' mine," he added angrily. "It's the fault o' raskills! Tom—you mind this: if iver you've got the chance, you make Wakem smart. If you don't, you're a good-for-nothing son. You might horsewhip him—but he'd set the law on you—the law's made to take care o' raskills."

Mr. Tulliver was getting excited, and an alarming flush was on his face. Mr. Glegg wanted to say something soothing, but he was prevented by Mr. Tulliver's speaking again to his wife. "They'll make a shift to pay everything, Bessy," he said, "and yet leave you your furniture; and your sisters 'ill do something for you.... and Tom "ll grow up....though what he's to be I don't know.... I've done what I could....I've given him a eddication....and there's the little wench, she'll get married....but it's a poor tale—"

The sanative effect of the strong vibration was exhausted, and with the last words the poor man fell again, rigid and insensible. Though this was only a recurrence of what had happened before, it struck all present as if it had been death, not only from its contrast with the completeness of the revival but because his words had all had reference to the possibility that his death was near. But with poor Tulliver death was not to be a leap; it was to be a long descent under thickening shadows.

Mr. Turnbull was sent for; but when he heard what had passed, he said this complete restoration, though only temporary, was a hopeful sign, proving that there war no permanent lesion to prevent ultimate recovery.

Among the threads of the past which the stricken man had gathered up, he had omitted the bill of sale; the flash of memory had only lit up prominent ideas, and he sank into forgetfulness again with half his humalitation unlearned.

But Tom was clear upon two points — that his uncle Moss's note must be destroyed, and that Luke's money must be paid, if in no other way, out of his own and Maggie's money now in the savings-bank. There were subjects, you perceive, on which Tom was much quicker than on the niceties of classical construction, or the relations of a mathematical demonstration.

COMRADE GIBSON OF G. W. V. A. ON TOUR FOR BUILDING FUND

Comrade Stewart Gibson, of the G.W.V.A. building fund campaign committee, went to the rural municipality of Duff to meet the municipal council relative to the grant for the new home of the veterans in Regina. On Monday next he will go to Qu'Appelle, and on Wednesday will be at Wawota to address the council there.

Comrade Gibson had met with campaign fund and in every place he visited received substantial subscriptions.

STRENGTH OF R.N.W.M.P. IS GREATLY AUGMENTED

The R.N.W.M.P. has been authorized to recruit to a strength considerably greater than 1,200, according to information received from Commissioner Perry. What the total strength of the force is to be was not divulged, but it will be considerably increased from 1,200, the strength first arranged by the authorities at Ottawa.

IN BAD CONDITION. — Mr. Martin Boreson of Leeman, Wis., writes: "I was in a very bad condition this spring when I sent for Forni's Alpenkraeuter. I did not think that I would be able to do my work this summer, but now I am feeling exceptionally well and can work hard every day." There is no tonic like this old, time-tried herb remedy. It makes red, rich blood; it strengthens the nervous system, and invigorates the whole body. It is not a drug store medicine, but is supplied by specially appointed local agents.
