TARIFF COMMISSION WAS CRITICIZED

Govt.'s Bill Under Discussion In the House of Commons Yesterday.

HUGH GUTHRIE ATTACKS

Premier Borden for "Reasonable Protection," But Mr. Ames Comes Out for High Tariff.

Ottawa, Feb. 7. — To create a "buffer" between themselves and those whom Mr. Ames described as the "clamorous consumers" in the matter of raising Canadian tariffs as high as Haman's gallows is the purpose of the members of the Government in providing at this stage for the creation of a tariff commission, according to the vigorously-pressed-home charge of the Liberal Opposition in Parliament today. It was the first tariff debate of the new Parliament, and the galleries were crowded throughout.

The Government's proposal met determined opposition. Mr. Hugh Guthrie described it as the initial quid pro quo to the highly protected interests which had contributed so generously and lavishly to the Conservative campaign of last autumn. Mr. Kyte declared that it signified that Canada was on the eve of another battle between the high protectionist interests and moderate protection for revenue purposes. Mr. A. K. McLean scored the proposal on constitutional grounds as a subversion of ministerial responsibility in the matter of taxation and revenue. Premier Borden's defence was to the effect that all the commission would do would be to gather information for the benefit of the Government, while Mr. Ames did not hesitate to advocate substantial protection. The debate continues tomorrow.

White for Protection.

Hon. Mr. White, in moving the second reading of the bill, informed the House that the legislation was largely based upon that of the United States, under which the President was authorized to employ a tariff commission for defined purposes. He denied that the Government proposed to delegate the function of making tariffs to the commission, and defined the duties of the board as a quest for information upon which the Minister of Finance and Government would act.

"In bringing down this measure," said Mr. White, "I do not wish it to be implied that the Government has modified its policy of reasonable and adequate protection for the industries of this country. I am not a believer in high protection myself, but I am a believer in reasonable protection for the development and building up of the resources of the country."

Guthrie Challenges.

Then came Mr. Guthrie. Why, he asked, had the Finance Minister failed to present to the House any reason for such a new and radical departure from British and Canadian constitutional practice in the great matter of national taxation? What demands, if any, had there ever been for the departure? He challenged the Minister of Finance to give a single instance of demand or request on the Government for this action, except for one body—namely, the Manufacturers' Association.

"I challenge the Minister of Finance or any member here of the Government to stand up now and tell the House if there has been any other call made from any section of Canada. Has any agricultural society asked for it? Has any dairy or live stock organization requested it? Have the grain-growers petitioned for it? Has the Dominion Grange urged it? Have any of the consuming classes of the towns and cities said they wanted it? Have any of the boards of trade any of the great industrial class, the Trades and Labor Congress, the trade unions, any of these organizations asked for it? With the single exception of the Manufacturers' Association the Government has never received request, demand or suggestion from any other of the great public bodies in Canada in favor of such a move," declared Mr. Guthrie amid applause.

Significant.

Continuing, Mr. Guthrie pointed out that it was significant that the first measure of any importance or magnitude to be handled by the new Finance Minister was one borrowed, on his own statement, from the highest protective country in the world, the United States. It was a strange sequel to the pre-election meeting at Massey Hall, Toronto, addressed by Mr. White. His scheme then had been that United States systems were bad and if Canada were dragged into an association with them it would lower this country. Now the same man had gone to Washington and culled the congressional records to abstract in concrete form what the high protectionists there had said and decreed. Reading from the Washington records, Mr. Guthrie quoted the statement of a congressman in support of the measure which Mr. White had now taken for his model the declaration that the formation of a tariff commission was "the best way to sustain the glorious doctrine of protection." The tariff commission board was a necessary adjunct to the high protection system.

"This legislation," added Mr. Guthrie, "is the first important quid pro quo to the Manufacturers' Association by the Government to redeem the promises made to them for the generous and lavish support given in the last election." Instead of following the lines of British and Canadian parliamentary practice the new Minister of Finance had hastened to Washington and copied "a cheap Yankee device notoriously used by the big, highly-protected interests in the United States. And I also challenge him to deny that that is not so. He cannot do it, because it is the fact."

Continuing, Mr. Guthrie said that the qualification of the members of the proposed tariff commission were pretty well understood generally. The members would have to have two qualifications—to be Tories, first, last, and all the time, and to be high protectionists, protectionists of the "high as Haman's gallows" stamp.

"Does the honorable member not believe in protection himself?" queried Mr. Blain.

"Moderate protection," replied Mr. Guthrie. "Tariff for revenue is supported in my county, and is, in my opinion, sufficient."

Under the commission as had been proposed, Mr. Guthrie added, it was farcical to include the clause for the inquiry into combines. How was a hidebound political commission to inquire into combines dominated by their own political friends. "There is not a trust or merger or combine in Canada," he declared, "that will not laugh in its sleeve."

Mr. Guthrie quoted from Hansard the statement of Mr. Borden that the industries should be given "a fair chance, and more than a fair chance." Why more than a fair chance? he asked. This "more than a fair chance" was evidently to be granted at the expense of somebody else, some part of the great consuming class of Canada.

One vital objection to the bill in its present form Mr. Guthrie saw in the clause giving discretionary powers to the tariff board to bring in conclusions not based on sworn statements of fact. Its data might be obtained from high protectionists only. Nor was there any provision defining the representative character and requirements of the personnel of the board. He believed that the object in view—namely, the acquirement of exhaustive and reliable data bearing on tariff matters—could be acquired by simply enlarging the present expert staff of the customs and trade and commerce departments. This would insure the direct responsibility of the minister for any tariff changes and would guard against any partisan or interested recommendations. In conclusion he believed that no harm would be done by allowing the bill to stand over for a while until its provisions had been carefully studied by all interests in the country. There was no immediate necessity for so radical a change. The doctrine of let well enough alone might be applied for a time in this case. He moved a six-months' hoist.
