"Marry the Poor Girl."

Amusing Comedy Play at the Casino.

"Marry the Poor Girl," which was produced by the Gladys Klark Players at the Casino last night is a frace comedy. That is, a screamingly funny but plotless play. Jack Tanner who is a guest of the Paddingtons comes in drunk one night and unconsciously wanders into the room of Julia Paddington, the daughter of the house, where he falls asleep in a chair. The play opens at the time when Mrs. Paddington discovers Tanner in Julia's room and insists upon him marrying her daughter. Then the fun begins, nor does it end until the curtain drops for the last time. The amusing complications which ensue after the "marriage de convenance," when Tanner is assisted by his friends in getting grounds for a divorce, succeeded in keeping the audience in a constant fit of laughter. Mr. Louis Lytton, as Wallace Paddington, was splendid, and his dry wit delighted the audience, whilst Mr. LeRoy Kenneth made the best of a good character part, as Bradley Littlefield. Miss Gladys Klark's representation of Julia Paddington was well up to her usual standard, and Mr. LeRoy, H. Bayley and Miss Dot E. Jewel gave capable renderings of more or less difficult roles. The splendidly played selections of the C.L.B. Band under Capt. Morris added greatly to the evening's enjoyment. At this afternoon's matinee "The Confession" will be put on. Monday and Tuesday nights "Jim's Girl" will be staged. Is this one worth seeing? Well, we should say so!

Art Exhibition Closing To-Day.

Large numbers of people have been drawn to the exhibition of his pictures which Mr. Wilfred Wood, of London is holding in the Empire Hall. The exhibition opened on Tuesday and will close this afternoon. A general review of the pictures exhibited has already appeared in the Telegram, but they are so good that it is almost impossible to resist another reference to them. The most attractive are perhaps, the pen and ink drawings which are tinted with water colors. In these drawings the wealth of detail which is not so discernible in water colors and pastels, is more apparent and Mr. Wood has drawn in this detail with infinite care and finesse. The water colors, particularly the local views, are excellent and in his sky and rock effects the artist seems to be especially happy. The moonlight views of Spain are also very striking, whilst a twilight sketch of Logy Bay drew forth much favorable criticism. There are but a few pastels and all of these are very well done. The view of a hay field in the Waterford Valley and that of Old Man's Pond, at Petty Harbor, are the best of these. In the latter the autumn tints are caught to a nicety and the scene is really a beautiful one. Nearly all the local views have already been sold, and this alone should be sufficient tribute to Mr. Wood's work.

Tea will be served this afternoon in aid of the S.P.C.A. Mr. Wood is leaving for England by the Sachem next month. He has thoroughly enjoyed his stay here, where he has been a guest of Mr. Jack McNeil, 'Grove Hill' and he hopes to come again to Newfoundland in the near future when he will do some sketching in the interior and on the West Coast.

Florida's Sponge Fisheries.

The sponge fisheries at Tarpon Springs, Fla., do more than a million dollars' worth of business annually. The industry was built up by a Philadelphia banker, who went to Florida on a real estate development proposition and quickly saw the possibilities of making Tarpon Springs, centrally located on the Gulf of Mexico and with railroad connections, the headquarters of the industry. This has resulted in the building of a beautiful little city with 4,000 inhabitants. In 1905 he revolutionized the business by bringing divers from Greece to operate in 30 to 130 feet of water, instead of the old-style method of "hooking" the sponges out of shallow water with a hook on a long pole.

Why We Feel Pain.

Considering how very largely pain enters into the lives of us all, and how much we are afraid of it, it is astonishing how little most of us really ever think about it.

To begin with, what is pain? Sometimes that hurts your body, you say? But are you sure?

I have a notion that if I blindfold you and made you think I am going to burn you arm with a red-hot poker, you would "feel" intense pain, even though I only touched you with a paper-knife!

And what is more, if you happen to be a particularly nervous sort of person, your arm would actually blister under the paper-knife!

Then have you ever thought how much pain you could stand? We often read of the horrible and disgusting tortures to which men put each other in other ages. It may be a relief to some of us to know that most of this was only waste of time, for man is only able to "feel" a certain amount of pain, and with most of us the limit is reached with the extraction of a very bad tooth.

We Can't Live Without Pain.

Just as a bucket of water will only hold a bucketful, so, if you go on pouring into it, you are only wasting time.

But apart from all this, we literally couldn't live without pain, odd as it sounds.

Pain has two distinct uses to us; one as a teacher, disciplining our minds and tempers, and the other as a sentry.

Nature has provided us with two sentries—fatigue and pain. Fatigue warns us against ourselves. If it wasn't for fatigue we should walk too far, work too long, do a hundred things which would injure us. In the same way, pain is our warning against outside things which would hurt us. Pain warns us of danger.

It is a curious thing that when pain ceases it is often a sign to the doctor that the injury is beyond repair. The sentry, finding his warnings useless and the enemy in possession of the castle, has gone "off duty."

World's Biggest Beast.

There is a prevalent notion that the animals of past ages, whose bones are from time to time dug out of rocks and sand quarries, were many of them much bigger than any at present existing.

True, the mammoth and the mastodon were enormous creatures, but they were not bigger than their living representatives, the great elephants of Africa and India.

Actually the biggest extinct animal we know of is the gigantosaurus, a huge semi-aquatic reptile, but even the biggest of them would have weighed, much less than a whale.

Stretched on the shore, resting on its belly as a crocodile does, the body, barrel-shaped, of the gigantosaurus would have been about twelve feet high and some fifty feet long, with its tail, like a huge serpent, extending eighty feet beyond it in one direction.

Ancient Secrets of Acoustics.

"Of interest to architects of public halls is a discovery made among the ruins of ancient churches in France destroyed by the Germans," says the Paris correspondent of the Manchester Guardian.

"In clearing away the wreckage of the largest of these a certain number of pottery vessels of great age were found. At first it was supposed that these had, in ages past, been hidden or lost in the crypts. But expert examination revealed that they were undoubtedly 'acoustic vases' set in the walls of the church by monkish architects to give resonance to the walls.

"Old records of this are extant and are well known to antiquaries, but never before had the complete destruction occurred which alone could bring to light exactly what they were. French architects hope that some lost secrets of ancient by-blow of the war may be recovered."

Chorus Girls' Arrest.

FILM DIRECTOR'S DEATH IN ORGY OF DRINK.

Ssome of the unsavoury features of the Arbuckle affair are recalled by the death at Los Angelos of a young cinema director, Mr. Al Stein. It was the climax to a drinking party similar to that staged in Arbuckle's rooms at San Francisco, which resulted in the death of Miss Virginia Rappe, the actress. In the present case the circumstances are reversed, and two chorus girls, 22 and 23 years of age, have been arrested on "suspicion of murder." According to statements furnished to the police, a liquor orgy took place in Stein's rooms, lasting well into the morning. Then two other men in the party, who with Stein were stated to be under the influence of drink, departed, leaving Stein alone with the two girls. At half-past five in the morning the police were called to the apartment by one of the girls. They found Stein lying dead on the floor of his room, his head supported by pillows. There were no marks of violence on the body, except a long scratch on the left cheek. The doctor who performed the autopsy reported that death was caused by acute alcoholism. Stein shared the apartment with Fred Fishback, who was one of those who attended the Arbuckle orgy. Among the papers found in the apartment was a telegram to Fishback from the Public Prosecutor of San Francisco summing him to give evidence at the trial of the comedian.

Gallant Kentish Man.

EARL HAIG TELLS HOW BUFFS STOOD FAST.

Unveiling a memorial at Canterbury to Kentish men who fell in the war, Earl Haig declared that the Kent regiments had "maintained the reputation won so gloriously at Blenheim and Ramillies." It was, he added, the 7th East Kents and the 7th Royal West Kents who held the line at Vendeuil when the great storm of the supreme German attack burst upon the 5th and 3rd Armies. No finer feat at arms had been performed than was achieved by the 7th Buffs on that occasion. Throughout a long day of desperate fighting all attempts to overwhelm them were beaten off, and long after touch was lost with them the sounds of their opposition could be heard, though, unhappily, the reinforcements they required could not be spared. Earl Haig also opened the British Legion Club, aand, at the Guildhall, received the honorary freedom of the City.

A Changed Signboard.

The Bishop of Stepney tells an amusing story of a colleague of his who was in the habit of spending his holidays in a north-country village, and always stayed at an old-fashioned inn called "The Cock."

Out of compliment to his lordship, the landlord substituted for this title that of "The Bishop."

When next the great church dignitary arrived at the place he was startled to find that the old sign had been scrapped, and a new one put up showing a figure in full episcopal robes.

Frowning slightly, he went up close to examine it in detail. His consternation may be imagined when he discovered that the picture was surmounted by the words "The Bishop of Blankshire," and underneath, "This is the Old Cock."

An Awful Cure.

"Nervous breakdown, debility; nothing much to worry about. Get in the country; long walks in the open air. No alcohol in any form, and——" The patient sighed. "And one cigar a day."

"Oh, doctor—not that!"

"One cigar a day!" reiterated the doctor inexorably.

Six weeks later the patient returned to town.

"How do you feel?" asked the doctor.

"Splendid! Fit as a fiddle!"

"And you liked it all?"

"Yes, everything except the one cigar."

The doctor smiled.

"The tobacco habit, my dear sir——"

"Isn't any joke," put in the patient ruefully. "It is hard for a man at my time of life to take up smoking!"
