I profess that my object in publishing agricultural reports, is to promote the interest and prosperity of agriculturists, of whom I am one; nevertheless, I would not, if I could, do so to the prejudice, or at the expense, of any other class or portion of the community. It has ever been my conviction, that the prosperity of this country depends altogether upon her agriculture—that it is her agriculture that must furnish almost all the funds her population may require, whether for carrying on successful commerce, or for other purposes—and that her agriculture, judiciously managed, would be able to furnish abundant means of wealth and prosperity to all done so hitherto in the most ample manner. There are many articles necessary for us, that we may buy cheaper than manufacture; for these we might exchange corn and cattle. We possess the means of doing all this, if we only make them available, by introducing the most approved system in our agriculture—by keeping corn and cattle in due proportion, and managing them in a judicious manner—and encouraging any manufactures that can be directly and cheaply made from our agricultural produce, for the use of our people.'

I hope I shall be excused for this long report. I have been induced to extend it, from a conviction that it is only by the judicious application [illegible] ours, that its profitable [illegible] Rearing stock is a [illegible] at a price that will [illegible], and give a mode [illegible] will afford farmers [illegible] ployment of labour, [illegible] provements for new [illegible] may make new [illegible] again expended in [illegible] like results, and [illegible] menting our means [illegible] of continuous and wearing the prosperity of the country.

Lower Canada.

The gold medal offered some months ago by the proprietors of the Ami du Peuple, for the best literary production, the scene of which was to be laid in Canada, and its author to be of Canadian birth, was recently awarded by the Hon. Dominique Mondelet and A. N. Morin, Esq M. P. P. who kindly undertook the office of judges, to the author of a tale entitled "Louise Chavanikisique." When proceeding down Front-street, near the barracks, the prisoner became outrageous, and struck the deceased with a stick, upon which the corporal desired the deceased and the other man he had with him to seize him, when a scuffle ensued, in which M'Auliffe stabbed the deceased, Henry Olds, in the lower part of his belly with his bayonet, inflicting a wound about five inches in depth, and one in breadth. The deceased was conveyed to the Regiment Hospital shortly after, where he lingered until Saturday last, when he died. ## ANOTHER WAITER.

[illegible] ing into the city the other day upon busi- [illegible] we took a chop at a tavern, and renewed [illegible] acquaintance, after years of interruption, [illegible] that swift and untiring personage, yclept a [illegible] r. We mention this long interval of ac- [illegible] tance, in order to account for any defi- [illegible] cies that may be found in our description of [illegible] Our readers perhaps will favor us with a [illegible] r. He is a character before the public; [illegible] ands are acquainted with him, and can fill [illegible] e outline. But we feel irresistibly impelled [illegible] etch him; like a portrait painter who [illegible] suddenly upon an old servant of the fa- [illegible]

[illegible] e speak of the waiter properly and general- [illegible] called, the representative of the whole, real [illegible] al race, and not of the humourist or other [illegible] tric genius occasionally to be found in it, [illegible] ng out of the orbit of tranquil but fiery [illegible] ng, not absorbed, not devout toward us, [illegible] nient or monosyllabical; fellows that af- [illegible] a character, beyond that of waiter, and get [illegible] ed in club-rooms, and places of theatrical [illegible] t.

[illegible] our thorough waiter has no ideas out of the [illegible] e of his duty and business; and yet he is [illegible] arrow-minded either. He sees too much [illegible] ty of character for that, and has to exercise [illegible] uch consideration for the "drunken gen- [illegible] n." But his world is the tavern, and all [illegible] kind but its visitors. His female sex are [illegible] maid servants and his young mistress, or [illegible] widow. If he is ambitious, he aspires to [illegible] y one of the latter: if otherwise, and Molly [illegible] udent, he does not know but he may carry [illegible] off some day to be the mistress of the [illegible] n Lion at Chinksford, where he will [illegible] ew off" in the eyes of Betty Laxon wat re- [illegible] d him.—He has no feeling of noise itself, [illegible] as the sound of dining, or of silence but as [illegible] ing before dinner. Even a loaf with him is [illegible] lly a loaf; it is so many "breads."—His [illegible] reat speech is the making out of a bill wiz [illegible] —"two beefs, one potatoes, three ales, one [illegible] ne, six and twopence," which he does with [illegible] indifferent celerity, amusing to new-comers [illegible] o have been relishing their fare and not con- [illegible] ring it as a mere set of items. He attributes [illegible] irtues to every body, provided they are civil [illegible] liberal; and of the existence of some vices [illegible] has no notion. Gluttony, for instance, with [illegible] is not inconceivable, but looks very like a [illegible] ue.—He sees it in only so many more [illegible] efs," and a generous scorn of the bill. As [illegible] ine, or almost any other liquor, it is out of [illegible] r own power to astonish him with the quan- [illegible] you call for. His "yes sir" is as swift, in- [illegible] rent, and official, at the fifth bottle as at the [illegible] Reform and other public events he looks [illegible] n purely as things in the newspaper, and the [illegible] wspaper as a thing taken in at taverns for [illegible] tlemen to read. His own reading is confined [illegible] accidents and offences," and the advertise- [illegible] nts for butlers, which latter he peruses with [illegible] admiring fear, not choosing to give up "a [illegible] tainty." When young, he was always in a [illegible] rry, and exasperated his mistress by running [illegible] inst the other waiters, and by breaking the [illegible] eguses." As he gets older, he learns to unite [illegible] ftness with caution; declines wasting his [illegible] ath in immediate answers to calls; and [illegible] ows, with a slight turn of his face and an [illegible] ration of his voice, into what precise corner [illegible] the room to pitch his "coming sir." If you [illegible] d him that in Shakspeare's time, waiters said, [illegible] hon, anon, sir', he would be astonished at the [illegible] etition of the same word in one answer, and at [illegible] use of three words instead of two; and he [illegible] uld justly infer, that London could not have [illegible] en so large, nor the chop houses so busy in [illegible] ose days. He would drop one of the two syl- [illegible] bles of his "yes, sir," if he could; but busi- [illegible] ss and civility would not allow it; and there- [illegible] re he does what he can by running them to- [illegible] ther in the swiftest sufficiency of his "Yessir."

Thomas!
Yessir.
Is my steak coming?
Yessir.
And the pint of port?
Yessir.
You'll not forget the postman?
Yessir.

For in the habit of his acquiescence Thomas [illegible] dom says "yes, sir, for no, sir," the habit it- [illegible] f rendering him intelligible.

His morning dress is a waistcoat or jacket: [illegible] coat is for afternoons. If the establishment [illegible] flourishing, he likes to get into black as he [illegible] ows elderly, by which time also, he is gener- [illegible] y a little corpulent, and wears hair powder, [illegible] asing somewhat lazily about the waist, for [illegible] nvenience of movement. Not, however, that [illegible] draws much upon that part of his body, ex- [illegible] pt as a poise to what he carries; for you may [illegible] erve that a waiter, in walking, uses only his [illegible] west limbs, from his knees downward. The [illegible] ovement of all the rest of him is negative, and [illegible] odified solely by what he bears in his hands. [illegible] this period he has a little money in the funds, [illegible] d his nieces look up to him. He still carries [illegible] napkin under his arm, as well as a corkscrew [illegible] his pocket; nor, for all his long habit can he [illegible] elp feeling a satisfaction at the noise he makes [illegible] drawing a cork. He thinks that no man can [illegible] it better; and that Mr. Smith who under- [illegible] ands wine, is thinking so too, though he does not take his eyes off the plate. In his right waistcoat pocket is a snuff-box, with which he supplies gentlemen late at night, after the shops are shut up, and when they are in desperate want of another filip to their sensations, after the devil and toasted cheese. If particularly required, he will laugh at a joke, especially at that time of night, justly thinking that gentlemen toward one in the morning "will be facetious." He is of opinion it is in "human nature" to be a little fresh at that period and to want to be put into a coach.

He announces his acquisition of property by a bunch of seals to his watch, and perhaps rings on his fingers; one of them a mourning ring left him by his late master; the other a present, either from his niece's father, or from some ultra-good-natured old gentleman whom he helped into a coach one night, and who had no silver about him.

To see him dine, somehow, hardly seems natural. And he appears to do it as if he had no right. You catch him at his dinner in a corner, huddled apart, "Thomas dining!" instead of helping dinner. One fancies that the stewed and hot meats and the constant smoke ought to be too much for him, and that he should have neither appetite nor time for such a meal.

Once a year (for he has holydays) a couple of pedestrians meet him on a Sunday in the fields, and cannot conceive for the life of them who it is; till the startling recollection occurs, "Oh, now I know! It's the waiter at the Grogram!"

COURT MARTIAL.—The court-martial on Mr. Cardew, late mate of the Algerine, for mutiny in depriving Lieutenant Stovin of the command, and Mr. Heath, the master, for aiding him therein, commenced last Monday. Lieutenant Stovin was the first witness examined, and he stated, that when put under arrest Mr. Cardew placed his hand on his (Lieutenant Stovin's) shoulder, and the corporal laid hold of his arm, and that when he attempted to address the ship's company a hand was thrust over his mouth, but it was too dark to see whose it was. He further stated, that before Mr. Cardew took away his pistols, and when he gave them to the corporal to load, he said he intended to try and recover the command of the ship, and hoped the marines would stand by him. These were the most important points in the evidence for the prosecution, which closed on Tuesday at noon, and the Court agreed to allow the prisoners till Friday morning for the preparation of their defence. On the opening of the Court on that day, the prisoners put in their defences, Mr. Cardew's being read by his counsel, Mr. R. Missing, and Mr. Heath's by his solicitor, Mr. George L. Greetham. Both defences were very able documents, pointing out the cases in which the evidence for the prosecution had been at variance with itself, as well as those cases where it would be contradicted by the witnesses on the defence, and more particularly dwelling on the discrepancies in the evidence of Lieutenant Stovin himself. The hinging point of Mr. Cardew's defence was the uncertainty of Mr. Stovin's actions, it being impossible, on account of his repeated inebriety, to place any reliance on his conduct, especially as he had once chased a vessel which he believed to be a slaver without serving out any arms to the crew. [This fact was afterwards stated in evidence by Mr. Roberts.] Under these circumstances, Mr. Cardew declared that a desire to promote the interests of the service had alone induced him to pursue the course he had, which, as his mind was free from any mutinous intent, he hoped would be considered by the Court a mere error in judgment. Mr. Heath's defence ably urged his want of motive to concur in the arrest, as no end which he could have in view could be promoted by it, and his previous high certificates removed the suspicion of his being actuated by a spirit of insubordination. The only evidence of importance adduced for the defence was that of Commander Booth, late of the Trinsule, and who, as the superior officer at the Cape, had inquired into the circumstances of Lieutenant Stovin's arrest, when the Algerine arrived there. Commander Booth stated distinctly, that when he asked Lieutenant Stovin if he had made any resistance to the arrest, he answered in the negative, nor did he say anything about his statement to the corporal, that he hoped the marines would stand by him. The case for the defence was then specially closed, and the court cleared, and after two hours' deliberation the court reopened, and the Judge Advocate read the sentence:—that the charge had been proved, but in consideration of the prisoners' previous good character they were only sentenced to be dismissed the service, and to be imprisoned for three calendar months in the Marshalsea. A vast deal of interest had been excited by this trial, it being doubted by naval men whether the Court would consider the mitigating circumstances, or award the full penalty attached to the crime. The general opinion is that the sentence is extremely lenient.—Portsmouth Herald.

DIVERS, AND THEIR POWER OF SUSPENDING RESPIRATION.—Surprising statements have been made by travellers—a privileged race—respecting the powers of pearl-fishers and others in voluntarily suspending their respiration under water at considerable depths: some have mentioned half hours, and some even longer periods, as within the bounds of possibility. Dr. Lefevre, of Rochefort, who was lately stationed at Navarino, had ample opportunity of putting the powers of the best divers to the test. He witnessed the performance of those who were employed to fish up the relics of the Turkish fleet sunk in Navarino harbour. The depth to which they had to plunge was 100 feet; but though the Greek divers are, and have always been, famous for their prowess, none of them could sustain submersion for two whole minutes together. Seventy-six seconds was the average period in fourteen instances accurately noted; and frequently, after reaching the surface, blood issued from the mouth, eyes, and ears of the diver. But in general these people can repeat their task three or four times in an hour.—Medical Gazette.

MACKINTOSH'S CHARACTER OF SPENCER.—I have finished the "Faerie Queene." I never parted from a long poem with so much regret. He is a poet of a most musical ear—of a tender heart—of a peculiarly soft, rich, fertile and flowery fancy. His verse always flows, with ease and nature, most abundantly and sweetly; his diffusion is not only pardonable, but agreeable. Grandure and energy are not his character istic qualities. He seems to me a most genuine poet, and to be justly placed after Shakspeare and Milton, and above all other English poets. Spencer and Cervantes, within a few years of each other, wrote great works, founded on the system of expiring chivalry. Spencer has treated it like a poet, and Cervantes like a wit; but those who can laugh at wit are far more numerous than those who can feel poetry; and hence without derogating from the transcendant genius of Cervantes, must, in a great measure, he explain, ed the superior popularity of "Don Quixote." Sir Philip Sidney, Sir Walter Raleigh, Bacon, Shakspeare, and Spencer! What a glorious reign. —Life of Sir James Mackintosh.

DEATH OF FIGAULT LE BRUN.—Figault Le Brun, the Fielding of French novelists, died recently at the advanced age of 83. It is now sixty years since he commenced writing. His novels are for the most part, delineations of low life, for he rarely alluded to the manners of higher classes, except in the way of satire and ridicule. The morality of his works, is to say, the least, of a questionable character. In his own department he has had no equal among cotemporary writers.

The wreck of the ship Thomas Wallace, was sold at auction on Friday; the hull brought £35, cargo £67, and the materials £352.

REVIEW OF THE NEW YORK MARKETS FOR THREE DAYS PRECEDING

WEDNESDAY, September 30, 1835.

ASHES.—We have advices from Liverpool to 27th August, but do not notice any change in the article there. The arrivals here continue very small, and prices remain without alteration. Sales of Pots at $5, and Pearls at $7.

COTTON.—The principal transactions have been comprised in about 1000 bags St. Domingo at 11 @ 11½ cents; and 800 Brazil at 11 cents, cash, to 12 cents on time.

FLAX SEED.—Small sales of rough continue to be made at $12 ℔ tierce, and $1,62½ ℔ bushel; but it is yet too early in the season for a business of much extent.

FLOUR AND MEAL.—The market continues heavy for all kinds of Wheat Flour, and Western Canal has further declined about 12½ cents. Common brands were offered yesterday at $6, without finding buyers. Prices of Southern are nominally the same, but there have been no transactions of any importance. Some Troy in market, but no sale. Rye Flour and Corn Meal remain as last noticed.

FRUIT.—We have heard of no important transactions at private sale. The sales by auction, are 50 bales Bordeaux Soft Shell Almonds at 14½ @ 15½ cents; 123 bales Marseilles Soft Shell, 13½ @ 13¾; 10 bales Molier, 12½; 15 bales Hard Shell, 7¾ @ 8½; 20 boxes Shelled, 18½; 50 boxes Malaga Raisins, $3,25; 8 casks of Smyrna 7½ @ 7½ cents; 21 cases inferior Prunes, 5½ @ 5¾ cents; and 400 boxes Malaga Lemons, in fair order, $1,95, part cash, and part 3 mos.; 10 bales Bordeaux Almonds at private sale, at 16 cents, cash.

GRAIN.—We have no sales of Wheat to report. Sales of Northern Rye yesterday at 91 cents. Corn maintains full prices. There have been sales of Northern Yellow at 100 @ 102 cents; North River Brigg, 94 cents; and Oats, 56 cents. Exports, from the 1st to 24th inst., Corn, 1329 bushels.

NAVAL STORES.—Supplies of Turpentine are not equal to the demand, and it is now held firmly at $3,75, for North County; and $4,25 for Wilmington. In Tar nothing of importance done.

PROVISIONS.—There have been sales of city inspected Beef at $8,50 for prime; and $11,75 for mess; which is a further reduction of 25 cents. Pork maintains full prices; the supply being hardly equal to the demand, particularly of prime.

TEA.—A public was made yesterday of about 600 packages, mostly of the Emily Taylor's cargo, and inferior quality. The prices obtained for that importation were Hyson, 43½ @ 47; Young H a, 38½ @ 54; and Skin, 25 @ 29½ cents, 6 mos.; 60 chests Souchong of oriental congous, sold at 25 @ 26½ cents, 6 mos.

TOBACCO.—Small sales of good Kentucky were made at 10 cents; and, by auction, 14 hhds. common, 7½ cents; and 96 hhds. not merchantable, 50 averaging 7 cents, and 46 averaging 5½ cents, 3 mos.

SPICES.—Sales of Sumatra Pepper at 7½ cents; and Pimento, 5½.

EXCHANGE.—There were sales yesterday to some extent of Bills on England at 9½ @ 9 ℔ ct. premium; and on France at 5.5,92½.

The advices from New York of Thursday evening state, that a fair business had been doing in Western Flour, the principle sales of good brands had been made at $6, though in some cases a reduction of 6¼ cents had been made.

Schr Excellent, at New Bedford, from a fishing cruise in the Gulf St. Lawrence, reports that mackerel have been very scarce this season, and a very great multitude of vessels have been engaged in the business. No less than 2500 sail have passed Cape Canso since spring, in search of fish; and the catchings have not averaged more than 100 brls each.—Hudson's N. Y. Shipping List.

The Cincinnati Gazette of September 23d, quotes Flour at $5,75 from store, being an advance upon the previous week's prices. Pork is quoted at $14 prime, $16 mess, and $18 clear, being an advance of $2 ℔ brl.

BALTIMORE MARKET, SEPT. 28.

FLOUR.—Howard Street is rather more active today, and sales are making freely at $6,25. We have heard of no quotations in City Mills, but quote it at $6,12½ @ $6,25. There has been no Susquehanna in market for some days past.

GRAIN.—We are not advised of any alteration in prices; transactions limited, and arrivals continue light. We quote Wheat, best white, at $1,35 @ $1,38, best red $1,27 @ $1,28, fair to good $1,30 @ $1,27.

CORN.—We quote 90 cents as the ruling price for both white and yellow.
