THE TELEPHONE

Used by a Trapped Burglar to Call the Assistance of His Pals.

A Star man had accompanied a Chicago man to call on a Washington summer statesman at his home uptown, and while they were waiting for him to come down stairs they heard the tinkle of a telephone bell.

'I wouldn't have a telephone in my house under any circumstances," said the Chicagoan in response to the tinkle. "About five years ago I had a telephone put into my residence for the convenience of it, and for a time it was, as you say, not such a bad thing to have around. I put it in in October, and it went well enough till the following August, when my wife and family were away for the summer, leaving me in charge of the house. One night I came in about 12 o'clock, as summer widowers are known to do occasionally, and I sat down in the library to smoke one more cigar before going to bed. It wasn't long until I dozed off, and presently I was aroused by a noise in the hall.

"I was awake on the instant, and in another minute I was sure I had a visitor who wasn't expecting me any more than I was expecting him. I had a loaded revolver in my desk drawer, and very quietly I took it out and waited developments. They came quickly, and in about five minutes the gentlemanly and urbane burglar had entered the library. I had been sitting there in the dark, or only such light as came from the street, and when Mr. Burglar came into the room I touched the button, and the electric light showed him up nicely, and I was just before him, with my gun trained on him. I had him, and he knew it, and he made no resistance whatever. I don't think I was ever cooler and clearer-headed in my life, and I felt like a conquering hero when he held up his hands and begged me not to shoot.

"'I won't,' said I, 'unless you disobey me. Go over to that telephone,' I went on, steady as a clock, 'and ring up the police station. I don't know the number, but you will find it in the book hanging there, and if you make a false move I'll shoot you full of holes. Ring her up!'

"He was scared, I could see, for his hand shook when he took the book, but he found the place and called up the number.

"Now tell them to come to this street number, and I gave him my name and number, 'and say to them that I have a burglar ready to be taken to the station.'

"He followed instructions beautifully, and then I sat down to wait, while I kept him with his face to the wall and my revolver ready to prevent accidents. In 20 minutes or half an hour there was a ring at the front door bell, and I marched him down to meet the officers. With one hand I unlocked the door and with the other kept the gun trained on my robber, and as I pulled it open two men came in with a rush, and the next thing I knew I was bound hand and foot and gagged, and my burglar, with two of his pals, had possession of the house.

"Then they finished the job at their leisure, taking everything they wanted and at last went away, after giving me several parting kicks and otherwise showing their disregard of my rights in the premises. All the time I was wondering why the police hadn't come, and perhaps would still be wondering if the gents hadn't told me when they were departing that their captured partner had called up their number instead of the station number, and that they had caught on and come around in a hurry. It was the merest luck in the world that the snap had worked, but it was enough to disgust me with a telephone, and now I haven't one in my house, and sometimes I am almost tempted to sue the confounded company for damages, for those thieves got away with $1,000 worth of stuff that never did turn up again."—Washington Star.

The Ballet All Attractive.

To see and to discuss acquaintances and to see and be discussed by them, and (for me) to go gossiping from box to box, and everywhere the main objects with which "the world" goes to the opera. In Southern Europe, indeed, it may be said that they are the sole objects. There are, of course, a quantity of people, less regular in their attendance, whose purpose is simply to hear the music; but they are not "the world." They do not talk as others do.

In Paris especially it is an accepted principle that society n'ecoute que le ballet. It is only when the curtain rises on the short skirts that tongues grow still, and that eyes turn unanimously to the stage. There are, naturally, singers to whom everybody listens, and songs (even if heard for the hundredth time) for which all conversations are interrupted; but the general rule remains, that relative silence and attention are reserved in Paris for the dancing.—Blackwood's Magazine.

Cats and Diphtheria.

An English physician has just written an article, the result of recent cases of diphtheria in which his investigations proved that in several cases pet cats had been the carriers of this disease to the houses of a certain neighborhood. He believes cats have a peculiar throat disease which results, when contracted by human beings, in diphtheria. He pleads that cats should be watched, and when they show evidence of illness they should be isolated.

Combatting Drunkenness.

Denmark has an original way of combatting drunkenness. Every drunk met on the streets is loaded on a wagon, carried to the station-house, kept there until perfectly sober and then conducted to his home. The saloonkeeper who sold the last glass of beer, wine or whisky to the drunkard must pay the costs of this procedure, and, if guilty of the offense a second time, he loses his license.

Henry A. King & Co. received the following despatch over their private wire to-day: Wheat opened this morning at 59 3-4c for Dec. and half a cent up from yesterday's close. Cables were all firmer, both public and private. London quoted prices firm and country markets 6d to 1s per quarter dearer. Northwest receipts were 1135 cars, against 801 same day last year. Primary receipts, 1,110,000 bush, against 837,000 bush a year ago. Closing London cables were firm, at an advance of 3d. Notwithstanding better cables and the fact that local traders were nearly all bullish, the market was dull and heavy all day. A good deal of wheat was bought yesterday on better cables, in retaliation of firmer markets to-day. When it was offered no one seemed to want it, and the market closed weak at 58 3-4c, a full cent down from the opening.

Provisions dull and heavy on further liquidation of the Oct. product. Oct. pork sold at $8.05 and Oct. ribs at $5.10. We do not look for any improvement in provisions until this liquidation is over.

McIntyre & Wardwell (John J. Dixon) received the following despatch from Schwartz, Dupee & Co., Chicago:

Wheat weak all through to-day's session, closing about a cent less than yesterday. The best price was made at the opening. The market plainly showed lack of short interest, which is evidently lighter than it has been at this season for many years. The outside trade is inclined to be bullish, and the short interest is mostly local. The Northwest had done scarcely any hedging thus far in this market. It looks now as if the visible supply on Monday would show an increase of 3,000,000 bush. It is probable that Chicago will soon begin to get a liberal arrival from the Northwest, unless we get much better demand for cash wheat the price will work lower.

Corn showed a lack of short interest as much as wheat. September declined over a cent, and May 1-2 cent. The estimate for to-morrow, 600. Indications point to still better receipts. Cash corn was down to the Sept. price. Charters to-day were 145,000 bush. New York reported 14 boatloads for export. What little buying there was in the market was to cover shorts and against privileges.

Provisions quite active, weak and lower, losing all of the advance of last two days. Packers started the selling and local bulls weakened and unloaded whenever they could. The Oct. deliveries were very weak, and especially the ribs. This set back will put a damper on the cash trade, and, with so liberal receipts of hogs and Oct. liquidation also to be taken care of, soon the outlook is very bearish.
