REPORT ON CIVIL SERVICE BONUSES IS MADE PUBLIC

Cost of Living Has Advanced More Than Fifty-Two Per Cent.

OTTAWA, July 28.—The civil service commission today published the report on which the payment of the $10,000,000 bonus to Government employees is based.

The report explains the accepted method of measuring changes in the cost of living, shows the effect which increases in Canada have had on the income of the average person and indicates the method of computing the new bonus.

It is stated that $1,000 a year supported a family of five in moderate comfort before the war, while $1,550 would be needed to day as the cost of living was increased more than 52 per cent.

A bonus of $420 a year to householders with an income of $1,200 or less is recommended, and a proportional bonus to persons without dependents. From this point the bonus scales downwards, according to a fixed percentage.

Transplanting, Skin Science's Way of Treating Bad Burns

By DR. LEONARD KEENE HIRSHBERG, A. B., M. A., M. A. (Johns Hopkins University).

DR. HIRSHBERG

One of the best, if not the surest way, to obtain the healing of an extended raw surface, the result of a burn, is skin-grafting. The new skin is formed always from pre-existing epithelium. From the edges epidermic layers are formed which cover the raw surface. In a raw surface islands of epithelium are found scattered in different places and from them the skin-growth extends.

In the living body the skin is continually being shed or worn away. The waste is made good by regeneration from the deeper layers. The tissues when transplanted are subject to similar changes. If disintegration and absorption predominate, the graft is bound to disappear. If, on the other hand, regeneration keeps pace with absorption, the graft often maintains its existence.

How It's Accomplished.

Sometimes the skin grafts do not succeed, and after a few days there is suppuration. This result is not necessarily due to wound infection, but may arise when transplants are taken from another subject. The difference in the foreign serum and proteids causes a reaction resulting in the production of ferments which destroy the transplanted tissues. The best results are obtained by the transference of a portion of the skin from one part of the body to another on the same individual, called "autoplasty." Failure may be also due to interference with the blood supply.

Success in skin grafting is not always obtained. This may be due to damage to the graft or to the presence of conditions interfering with adhesion. The soil of the wound is of great importance, because this supplies nutrition to the graft and early adhesion of the edges to the surface secures the lymph flow and the establishment of the circulation to the graft.

Aseptic field and sterile plasma are the culture medium for a transplant. The surface of skin has to be scraped with a sharp curette in order to remove the old granulations which would interfere with the life of the grafts and the edges have to be freed from the hard epidermis which usually interferes with the cicatrization. With a swab moistened with warm normal salt solution the surface is generally dabbed until the bleeding, stops and fibrinous film is forming. In this way the grafts are brought into intimate contact with the capillaries of the prepared surface.

The Last "Touches."

In autoplasty the flaps of epidermis are usually taken from the thigh. The chosen area is sterilized, shaved and bathed with alcohol. The surroundings of the wound are sterilized, shaved and painted with tincture of iodine. The thigh is held tight by an assistant with both hands, making the surface bulge up. The operator with the left hand grasps and presses the skin, and with the right hand cuts the strips of the epidermis with the sawing motion of the razor. In this way can be cut a flap one inch long and a good half-inch wide. The flap remains on the blade of the razor. The lower edge of the flap may be cut by twisting the razor gently, otherwise an assistant detaches it with scissors.

With a dropper the assistant drops salt solution on the blade of the razor until the flap of the skin is detached and nearly floats. The razor is so transferred on the bed of implantion, the salt solution is continually dropped on blade, and by the help of forceps the transplant is gently set in its place without curling or distorting its shape with probes or other instruments.

The application of strips of epidermis to repair large areas of skin wounds has to be done where prevention of ugly scar formation is sought. This is important on the face and neat joints. Successful epidermis transplantation terminates in healing with smooth and soft skin surface.

Answers to Health Questions

MRS. A. B.: Q.—What do you advise for a catarrh?

A.—Often examination of the nose and throat by a nose and throat surgeon will reveal deflected bones, tumorous growth, adenoids, infected tonsils and other things which a slight operation will correct.

BLUE EYES. Q.—What can I do for enlarged pores?

A.—Massage the skin gently with a strong astringent that will serve to draw together the flabby skin, which has permitted the too wide opening of the mouths of the pores. The following will serve well.

Rosewater	6 ounces
Elder flower water	2 ounces
Simple tinct. benzoin	½ ounce
Tannic acid	10 grains

BETTY A.: Q.—How can I reduce my legs ?

A.—Walking, running, swimming, tennis, bowling, bicycle riding, horseback riding and other exercises help to reduce legs?

W. J. A.—If you will send a stamped self-addressed envelope with your query repeated, I will be glad to answer your questions.

L. M.: Q.—How can I bleach my hair?

A.—Dip the hair into salt water, peroxide of hydrogen, borax, chlorate of potash or any other bleaching agent. Seashore exposure is also effective. But why should you make a change that may cause you annoyance and trouble.

A. T. W.: Q.—What can I do for excessive perspiration?

A.—Over-exertion, constipation, lack of frequent daily bathing and excessive water drinking are among the many causes to be blamed.

Dr. Hirshberg will answer questions for readers of this paper on medical, hygienic and sanitation subjects that are of general interest. He cannot always undertake to prescribe or offer advice for individual cases. Where the subject is not of general interest letters will be answered personally, if a stamped and addressed envelope is inclosed. Address all inquiries to Dr. L. K. Hirshberg, in care of this office.

To-morrow's HOROSCOPE

By Genevieve Kemble

WEDNESDAY, JULY 30.

The position of the planets on this day point to active and stirring events both in a business way and in social, domestic and affectional matters, as Mars and Venus are strongly incited by a transit of Luna. Under this Mars rule all the energies are quickened, and the tendency is toward initiative, resourceful and bold enterprise. All dormant potencies are flared into action, making for achievement and success. There is a warning, however, against hasty or unconsidered risk of money in either speculation, investment or otherwise. The Venus government assures profitable and pleasant experiences in the realm of heart and home. The young will court or marry. Those in employment should be careful and conservative.

Those whose birthday it is may look forward to an active year with their labors crowned with success and prosperity. Domestic affairs will also prosper. A child born on this day will be active, energetic, enterprising, popular, kind and affectionate and successful.

MY HEART AND MY HUSBAND

ADELE GARRISON'S NEW PHASE OF

REVELATIONS OF A WIFE

What Madge Discovered in Mr. Stockbridge's Desk.

It was not a pleasant task that faced me when Alice Holcombe hastily left Mr. Stockbridge's office with the declaration that she could not open his private desk even to get the papers he wished, because she "knew him too well."

Only the fact that I suspected her secret hopeless fondness for her girlhood's friend and had compassion for it made me willing to take her place and to undertake the search which I knew must be made.

With the principal's keys in my hands I sat down before the small desk Mr. Stockbridge had bought for himself some time before, although a large roll-top one, provided for his use by the school board, stood in the office. Through my brain ran the mischievous comment upon the desk from the frivolous lips of Bess Dean:

"Mark my words, girls, Kenny's got a secret drawer in that thing where he keeps his old love letters and the heads of his former wives."

That the desk held secrets—probably most innocent ones—of Kenneth Stockbridge's past, I knew from the mad behavior of the principal's wife the day before, when she had stolen her husband's keys and pried into the secrets he had endeavored to keep inviolate. I earnestly hoped that the missing reports which Mr. Stockbridge wished sent to Albany might be the first things upon which my eyes should rest when I opened the desk, so that I might be able to conclude immediately a task most distasteful, to me.

Disheartening Chaos.

But as I drew out the right-hand drawers of the desk I saw that no such simple solution of my problem awaited me. Mr. Stockbridge, whether by nature or by stern training, is the most methodical of men. The papers in his other desk—to which the head teachers have access, are always neatly arranged, and his letter files are models. The papers before me, however, were scattered, and tumbled in disheartening confusion.

Hastily I pulled open the other two drawers upon the right side. The same chaos met my gaze. The drawers looked as if they had been invaded by some mischievous monkey with a touch of malignance in his mischief, and I thought grimly that Milly Strockbridge did have something decidedly simian in her mental make-up.

Hunting for the missing papers in the ruck before me was a much greater problem. I said grimly to myself, than that of the man who first set out to search a haystack for a needle. There was but one thing to be done, and that was to go through the mess systematically, rearrange and file all the contents of the drawers. Thus, only, could I be sure whether or not the missing Albany reports were among the tumbled papers.

A Face Recognized.

I worked fast and methodically, putting upon one side of each drawer neat little piles of papers pertaining to the school, each set docketed and its location entered in the pages of a small memorandum book I found.

It was not until the contents of two drawers had been put in perfect order, and I was at work upon the third that I found the missing reports. I verified them hastily, laid them on top of the desk, and cast a doubtful glance at the confused mass of papers in the lower drawer, in woeful contrast to the orderly array
