The Late Earl Canning.

Lord Canning, whose death in England is announced by the Scotia, was born at Gloucester Lodge, Brompton—a house now incorporated with the Kensington Museum—1812, and was the third son of the celebrated Geo. Canning. The most important fact [illegible] Canning (for the peerage which his father had earned was given in the first instance to his mother) entered upon public life in 1836, when he appeared in the House of Commons as member for Warwickshire. In the following year he went to the Upper House. When Sir R. Peel came into power, in 1841, he was appointed under Secretary for Foreign Affairs. He held this post till 1846, in spite of the inconvenience of having both the Secretary and the Under Secretary of the same department in the House of Lords. In July, 1846, he resigned with his party, and, declining high office at the hands of Lord Derby, returned with the Coalition Ministry in 1853. In the Government of Lord Aberdeen, Lord Canning was Postmaster General. After various ups and downs, Lord Canning was appointed to succeed Lord Dalhousie, as Governor General of India. He began his reign there on the last day of February, 1856, and the events of it are so recent, besides being, by their importance, so well known, that it can scarcely be necessary now to write their history. In the year after he assumed office the mutiny broke out, and he had to stem it as he could. Never has any Governor General of India had to go through so fierce a trial. He had a fearful load of responsibility—for a moment the Indian Empire seemed almost lost; in Calcutta the European inhabitants were in the greatest consternation; and Lord Canning was accused of weakness and softness in dealing with the crisis. The Indian Empire was saved by a miracle. It was saved by the firmness and the resolution of a very [illegible] kind of man, chief among whom ranks Lord Canning. For a time, even the friends of the Governor General were in doubt as to the wisdom of his policy; but it is now confessed that in that terrible emergency he displayed extraordinary courage, great administrative, and very great moral qualities. Having faced such unexampled dangers, and having accomplished such wonderful triumphs, Lord Canning came home, two months ago, for a little repose. The repose which he sought he has found in death. Lord Canning, who was raised to an earldom in consequence of his services in India, has left no family. His titles, therefore, die with him, and the line of George Canning now survives only in Lady Clanricarde and her children.

An Amusing Case.

(From the European Times.)

A very amusing case came before the Court of Exchequer, on Thursday, and is reported at some length in the morning papers of yesterday. A lady, who passed as Madame Rachel, but whose real name is Leverson, brought, through her husband, an action against the Hon. Captain Carnegie for a large sum of money—no less than £928—for 'enamelling' the wife of the defendant, who it appeared, is possessed of a separate income of £700 or £8000 in her own right. The lady's complexion had faded, and she sent for the plaintiff's wife to "enamel" her. The latter declined to visit Mrs. Carnegie, but expressed a readiness to perform the required duty if she would come to her place of business. Mrs. Carnegie, accordingly proceeded thither, and was duly "enamelled." There were four such visits, which appeared to be at a rate exceeding £200 per visit,—so that the work of "enamelling" ladies of fortune seems to be a very costly affair. Mrs. Carnegie was delighted at the change in her appearance, for the complexion, at first sallow, became "white as snow." The process, according to Madame Rachel, or Leverson, consists in the frequent use of the bath and the use of certain herbs. Mrs. Carnegie was afflicted with annoying abscesses on a conspicuous part of her person, and these the indefatigable Rachel contrived by her processes to remove. The defendant's wife, it appears, stated to the plaintiff's wife—"If I could make her appear in public without wearing a high dress, she would give me a thousand pounds, or any amount." But the husband of this renovated lady did not recognize this excessive liberality, and hence the action. The examination of Madame Rachel discloses a characteristic feminine infirmity; "My process is called by the ladies enamelling, but it is not so. After the process I use, the skin itself becomes so white that it resembles painting on ivory. Mine is a process of cleansing the skin and rendering it transparent. It is not closing up the pores by plastering the skin over. She was so delighted with her appearance after the second or third application that she wished to be made beautiful for ever." The judge who tried the case, Mr. Baron Wilde, put this modest interrogatory to the witness, "Do you mean to say that you complied with her wish?" and the answer of the indefatigable Rachel was, "Yes, I have made her beautiful for ever!" But, notwithstanding this great service, the verdict of the jury was against the enameller, on the ground that the defendant had not authorized his wife to employ the artist who had 'made her beautiful for ever.' Captain Carnegie seems to have preferred the retention of £1,000 to the perils of this exposure, or the extraordinary change which the appearance of his wife had undergone,—and we think he took a sensible view of the affair.

International Exhibition.

(Correspondence of the Spectator.)

I wish now to inform you of what will be made public here in a few days, and what will, I am sure, be the most gratifying news to Canadians. We shall receive the medals—the highest testimonials in every department in which we have competed. The awards are first, medals, and secondly, honorable mention, and we shall receive medals for our agricultural products, for our manufactured articles, for minerals and for woods. As a collection I believe I am justified in stating that the minerals exhibited by the Geological Survey of Canada under Sir Wm. Logan, are as complete as any, if not the most complete, in the Exhibition. Our agricultural implements have been much admired, and the agents of the Government of Norway and Sweeden, and of Prussia, have purchased them, and I have it on good authority that we shall receive more medals in this department than any other country represented in the Exhibition in proportion to the number of articles. In wheat, too, and the smaller grains, we shall not stand second to any. In the size of wheat South Australia will be first; but in quality of the wheat Canada takes a stand amongst the first, as the medals will show.

In woods, it is, as far as I have heard, both from the jury on woods and from others, admitted that the Canadian collection is the most complete. There are many competitors from nearly every British Colony and from every nation in Europe, and amongst them are many splendid collections, especially from Australia, Tasmania, Jamaica and Hungary, yet it is admitted on all hands that Canada stands first in the completeness of the collection and in the arrangements and classification. Of course the tropical countries send woods of deeper and richer colors than are found in the Canadian forests. That a collection such as we have, could be got together in so short a period in mid winter shows the richness of the country in woods. I find, too, the preference for the light colored Canadian woods increasing, as being more suitable and cheerful in the dark climate of England. The Canadian maples, ashes, hickory, black walnut, white wood, birch, button wood, (plane-tree) and many others, are much admired. Numerous inquiries for Canadian woods have been made by lumber dealers from Germany and France, as well as from England. Some of these asking for cargoes of it. The models of cars sent by Mr. Sharp, of Hamilton, of the Great Western Railway, are much admired. There being no sleeping cars in England, his model is a novelty, and is so complete, crowds of visitors examined it every day. The Canadian oils have just been admitted. At first they were expelled from the building, and we have had much trouble, extending over two months, in our efforts to get them into the building. I had sometime before the opening of the Exhibition instituted an inquiry and found the oil in the American and even more dangerous oils in the British, German and other courts. You will ask why this injustice. I can only answer that in many things there has been the most unpardonable blundering.

The allusions which you have seen made to the Canadian timber trophy, complaining of its height, and that it obstructed the view of a certain window, you are to take not to imply any innate ugliness in the trophy, but as expressing the desire of those interested in the window to get a view of it from a particular point. The chief facts are these:—The trophy was in its right place, which had been assigned it by the Royal Commissioners; they requested its erection; subsequently permission was given to this British exhibitor to put his window behind the Canadian court. The place for the windows (of stained glass) was in another part of the building. After the pressure from the Times, and one or two other papers, did not secure the removal of the trophy, the Royal Canadian Commissioners wrote to them requiring its removal. The reasons for not complying with the demand were briefly stated. Justice was unquestionably on the side of the Canadian Commissioners, and the trophy stands in all its ugliness if you please, but showing the majesty of the Canadian forests,
