XXX PORTER
HALF and HALF
Connoisseurs pronounce our ALE unsurpassed in purity and taste.
Everybody who drinks it says our XXX PORTER is strength, body, and lasting stimulating effect, as well as palatableness is not in style among the best imported stout or porter. Physicians recommend and patients gladly drink it.
Our HALF AND HALF in bottoms has the advantage of being the only one put up. It is a delightful drink—beneficial and satisfying.
In producing all three we spare no expense, securing the world for the best hops for our Ale and importing the FINEST IRISH MALT for our XXX PORTER.

TORONTO, JANUARY 22nd, 1904.

In the good old summer time the elections are promised.

* * *

The man who steals another man's vote should be sent down for life.

* * *

The police will now proceed to hunt up the stuffers. The culprits are liable to go scott free.

* * *

Ralph Smith will be the Labor-Liberal member for Nanaimo for the next session of Parliament.

* * *

Ramsden busted the combination and busted Dunn's chances for a chairmanship at the same time.

* * *

The sequel to the reduction in the price of gas was some time coming out, but it arrived all right.

* * *

The Globe will, no doubt, turn the municipal corruption cry into a political sin of the Conservative party.

* * *

There must be a thorough investigation of this municipal ballot stuffing, even if it costs thousands of dollars.

* * *

It looks like violent hatred by both political parties against A. W. Puttee in Winnipeg, and the labor boys will need to stick so that the enemy does not get his scalp.

* * *

The Socialists expect to have some representatives in the next Dominion House, and they are likely to come from British Columbia.

* * *

The Ontario Conservative party is lacking in good fighting material in the House. They have had all kinds of chances of late, but have accepted very few.

* * *

If the same amount of energy were expended in the interests of the city as has been used up lately at the hall in order to fix things the citizens would be highly tickled at the results.

* * *

The label movement wants some wakening around the Trades Council, and the label section should do the trick. It is the most potent factor in the fight for better wage conditions.

* * *

The science of socialism may be understood by Brother Peel, but if he lives until it is understood by a majority of the voters he is liable to be on earth quite a time without experiencing the changed conditions he predicts.

* * *

Will the quantity of wind passing through the gas meter be increased in proportion to the water passing into the stock? That's what one of our legislators should ask the Gas Company before they let the bill go through.

* * *

Bro. L. L. Pelletier would, no doubt, like to get to Ottawa to have one good crack at that parcel of dry bones, the Senate, and we wish him all kinds of luck. He should be able to talk the electors of Fort William and vicinity into voting his way.

DID THE SOCIALISTS DESERT THEIR ALLIES?

We made the statement two weeks ago that the Socialists deserted their allies in the late municipal elections, and in last week's issue Mr. Peel attempts to show that they did not. Mr. Peel says:

"The labor movement of Toronto today, as a whole, does not recognize or endrse the Scialist platform or programme." We are prepared to admit that they do not, and retort as well that even the Socialists, as a whole, do not endorse the Socialist platform or programme. No one knows this better than Mr. Peel, who will remember that their programme in the late municipal elections did not obtain the endorsement of all his colleagues. In the best of reform movements it is impossible to find the advocates a unit upon all points.

Will Mr. Peel deny that the platform of the trades unionists, as laid down by the District Council is not in harmony with the Socialist platform? Will he undertake to say that if the reforms advocated therein were brought about we would not be governed as well as if the Socialist platform of reform was a reality.

"Experience has shown that it has not been possible in the past to build up a political movement within the trades unions and retain its political integrity and clearness of purpose," says Mr. Peel. Does the experience in England justify the remark or the splendid success of the labor party in all the States and Commonwealth of Australia.

The education campaign theory of the Socialists is not a good one. History shows us that it is possible to get a voter to vote for an individual advocating something which the voter does not understand. This is where the phrase "good politics" comes in, which our good friend does not like. We maintain that not all the success of the Socialist party in Germany is due to the platform upon which the candidate stands but to some extent is due to the men who advocate the platform.

Moses led the Children of Israel who followed to a large extent blindly. Luther fathered the reformation, Lincoln was the leader of the anti-slavery movement—yet of all their followers will Mr. Peel assert that they, as a whole, understood just what the leaders were fighting for. Will the working people, as a whole, ever understand the science of socialism? Does the rank and file of the trades union movement, as a whole, understand the principle behind the movement? Are they not led largely by the earnest thinkers in the movement, and will not the same apply to a political movement? Is it not applying to all movements to-day?

Given a community of 100 people, will Mr. Peel assert that it is possible for ten earnest men of that hundred who are leaders to influence 40 or 50 more of that hundred to vote their way without knowing exactly what they are voting for Does not confidence in the individual inspire the follower?

Mr. Peel knows as well as the writer that there are numbers of men who know very little about the science of socialism who would with confidence vote for the president of the Trades Council, Mr. Simpson. Would it be good or bad politics to place that gentleman in a position where his power for good would be increased 100 fold just because those voting for him were not as well informed as he?

And this is just where the Socialists deserted their allies. Mr. Simpson is a Socialist and a trades unionist like the great majority of the Socialists. The Socialist movement has been gradually gaining strength through the method of working in the trade union. What influenced them to take the stand that they would no longer work with the powerful trades union movement and would place candidates in the field against candidates nominated by an organization of which the first officer and several other officers were Socialists. Is that not desertion of the allies with which you have been working. The Socialist movement and the trades union political movement cannot both hope to succeed, neither can either of them make progress with two in the field. Would it not be better politics upon the part of the Socialists to progress along the lines they were going working in harmony with the unionists than to oppose them.

The tendency of Mr. Peel's argument leads one into the position of a drowning man refusing proffered help because he was not satisfied with the past beliefs of the individual.

We do not agree with Mr. Peel in the last sentense of this paragraph:

"The man who has his own interest and the interest of his own class at heart would make it his duty to find out which faction is right, and after doing so the possibilities are he would cast a vote that would register a sincere political conviction. A movement built up by votes gotten in any other way will show a false strength and shattering weakness when a crucial period arrives."

Let the elected men of any party be absolutely sure about the practical operation of the reforms they propose and if these are for the benefit of the whole people there will not be much of "false strength and shattering weakness" It is good politics to elect your man that stands for right principles and bad politics to keep up a campaign of education with practically unknown men continuously going down to defeat.

WAKE UP, ONTARIO.

We are constantly being told by preachers and industrial reformers that the salvation of this world, politically, industrially and spiritually, can only be brought about by educating and converting every individual in it.

We cannot for a single moment entertain the thought that John Mitchell, when he was leading the miners in the great coal strike, succeeded in educating and converting every individual miner to adopt the principle of unselfishness as the guiding star of his life.

Neither do we believe that he succeeded in making the owners and operators believe that it was their duty to arbitrate the case before the President of the United States.

No. We believe the reason that John Mitchell led the men to victory was because he was convinced that the demands he was making on behalf of the miners were right, and because he had the moral courage to stand by his convictions and neither be bought or sold. Success finally rewarded the tremendous effort he made on behalf of the miners.

We do not find the Right Hon. Joseph Chamberlain troubling about educating or converting individuals, but we do notice that because he himself is convinced that the fiscal policy of the British Government must be changed, he has the moral courage to resign an important position in the Cabinet and risk his reputation on the result. He is not troubling about individuals, but principles, and because he has attacked the principles that govern the fiscal policy of the country, the people who believe that the present policy is right are defending it with all the power they have at their command.

We do not suppose that our chief magistrate succeeded in educating or converting all the people in Toronto to believe in public ownership or become good Grits, but we do believe that a good honest record of a good man is always appreciated by his fellow citizens, and this was the reason that he was elected for a second term to the civic chair, in spite of a tremendous effort of partyism to arrange for a contest.

If men show their appreciation of a good man by rewarding a good record with a second term by acclamation, we are not surprised that God told Abraham that He would save the cities from destruction if peradventure he could find ten righteous men, and we find that God prepared a way of escape for the one righteous man before the cities were destroyed.

We are convinced that even in wicked Ontario we have fifty men left that have not defiled themselves by corruption, whose very names are held in such high esteem by their fellow countrymen that if they would but wake up and perform their righteous duty to their fellow men, they would be elected by a sweeping majority to sit in our legislative hall and pass laws that would "Build up Ontario," and win back once more for this fair province a reputation from one end of the Dominion to the other for the righteous government of its people.

MAN'S DUTY TO MAN.

Let each one of us ask ourselves the question, What is our duty toward our fellowmen? Our Lord plainly states in His last command to us that we love one another, and our neighbors as ourselves.

All men generally believe there is a God—a Supreme Being who gives us raiment to wear. Nay, more, He has provided all things for our use, whatsoever we have need of. Nature's great storehouse is always full of the needs of man.

And yet we see men struggling day by day in every shape and form imaginable, some honestly, some dishonestly, but however it be, they are struggling for the things which nature has provided.

Why should this be? To many of us this may be a hard question to answer. Nevertheless, it can be answered, and answered simply.

Look at nature in its many ways. The sun rises and sets, the seasons come and go, the sunshine and rain to make things to grow and multiply. We lay down to rest after our daily toil. We rise again at the proper time; and yet through all this some, nay, most of us, cannot believe that there is a Supreme Being that governs all things, and provides all things for our use. Not that we should struggle one with another in dishonesty and strife, but that we love one another and use the things that nature has provided for us in a way that would be pleasing to Him who has so wisely provided. Rab.

WHAT OF THE FUTURE?

Editor Toiler:

Sir,—The labor movement as it is today shows within itself a certain power of strength. It is broadening out and moving into a sphere heretofore little dreamed of. It is preparing to meet a great crisis with that solidarity of purpose foreign to it some three years ago. It notices with stolid mood the economic evolution that is taking place in the financial and business world. Every day it finds itself handicapped in its endeavor to settle differences that arise at intervals, that a few years ago were not thought of. The reason for these changed conditions is evidenced in the decisions against labor representatives by the courts of a late date. The trade unionists are preparing for that final stage of the game that is closer at hand than outsiders imagine. The latest news of the trust is to this effect, that billionaires Rockefeller and Pierpont Morgan are attempting to perform upon each other the alligator act, as each has performed upon thousands of other smaller fish, which in itself is a sign that they are close at the end of their tether, as far as these two are concerned.

Then it is for us to stop and think how these two men attained the enormous wealth they now possess. Knowing what we do of their first step on the other side of the line, that it was by and through legislation they throw the whole energies to assist them in carrying on and operating their nefarious game of control and extortion, they do not dread either of the two political parties as at present exist in Canada, but they do dread the event of either the trade unionists or socialists being a part in the field of active politics, knowing well that representatives from either party would be subservient to the dictates and subject to recall, should they fail to act as instructed. History of the past has taught us that as soon as a third party appears, it is up to the party in power to fuse with it and finally disrupt it by legislating in its behalf "for the time being," or flattering it by choosing out of its ranks those who have proven themselves the people's favorites by such bribes as portfolios, on commissions, etc. We have the history of the past in the gradual decay of third parties, brought about through the ambition of the leaders of these said parties. We have had in our own province example enough in the Patrons of Industry, who fused for want of backbone, "gradually weakened by party hacks within their ranks." Then there is the experience of Nanaimo, B.C., where the trade-unionist fused with the Liberals, the action being championed by a former labor candidate, the result being that the toiler would sooner vote for the straight socialist, who eventually won out. The politicians, in causing a split and siding with the labor party, did two things. (1) They divided two parties whose interests and welfare are becoming more identical every day; (2) they affected a precedent that they hope "for their own salvation" will be followed by trade unionists throughout Canada. But will they? We are bound as a party to defend our integrity as an initiative body, to introduce laws giving justice to all, preventing vicious laws, and erasing from the statute books all laws that have been passed for the benefit of the few. Up to the present the trades and labor parties in this province are unidentified with any other party. We stand boldly out as a menace to the Grits and Tories alike, but the watch dogs must be alert, for great will be the efforts in divers ways to show us the uselessness of our efforts; but to this the trade unionists can well say: "The faith we have held in the past to alleviate our condition is lost to-day. Our appeals have been shirked, ignored, and finally shelved. Laws that for years had been thought dead have been revived and used against us. Laws that heretofore we have relied on as our support have been proven illegal and void, thus driving us to the resolve that as far as legislation is concerned there is no reliance in it, unless we manfully and unitedly resolve to legislate for ourselves.

John Gardner.
