JAMES FOLLETT ON TRIAL FOR KILLING HIS BROTHER.

A Neglected Hamlet in Newfoundland and its Awful Crime—The Trial in St. John's—Unpleasant Facts Brought to Light.

[Special Cor. Montreal Gazette.]

ST. JOHN'S Nfld., June 17.—On the 30th May last a murder of a peculiarly barbarous and revolting character was committed in a small fishing settlement called Grand Beach, in Fortune Bay. It is an isolated spot, containing only about ten houses and about fifty-six inhabitants. The people are of old English stock, and have intermarried for such a length of time that nearly the whole are blood relations. The settlement is twelve miles distant from a thriving and populous town named Grand Bank, a noted fishing centre. There is a rough road connecting the the two; but Grand Beach has little intercourse with the outside world. Here these few families live in lonely isolation. There never has been a school house or teacher in the settlement, and the children grow up in utter ignorance. There is neither church nor chapel, and it seems that visits from ministers of religion of any kind were few and far between. The people are very poor, and as may be imagined under such unfavorable conditions they are intellectually, morally and socially of a low type of humanity. That no civilizing influences were brought to bear on them, no religious or other instruction employed among then, is greatly to be deplored; but upon whom the responsibility of such neglect may rest it would be difficult to say. The census shows that 22 of the population belong to the Church of England and 32 are Methodists.

In this little peaceful hamlet a murder was committed on the 30th of May, which in horrible atrocity and savage brutality surpasses anything of the kind which has occurred in the colony during the last half century. A fisherman named James Follett, in open day and in the presence of a number of witnesses, took his loaded gun, walked from his own house to the beach, where his brother Edward had landed from a dory, and when he came within about sixty feet of him he took deliberate aim at him and fired. The charge was a heavy one of large shot and struck him in the breast inflicting there over thirty wounds and as many more in the neck, face and head. The unfortunate man threw up his hands and fell backward. Death was instantaneous. Numbers of shot had penetrated both heart and lungs.

The murderer walked back coolly to his house and laid his gun in its place. When arrested shortly afterwards he admitted that he had killed his brother and said he had done right in doing so, and that he was willing to die for the deed. He was perfectly calm and self-possessed, and showed no signs of insanity, or mental perturbation. He expressed no sorrow or regret for the terrible deed, and declared himself as ready to take the consequences. The reason he gave for killing his brother was that Edward had been guilty of criminal intercourse with his wife.

Judge Prowse was dispatched from St. John's by the authorities to investigate the case. He held a post mortem examination; collected evidence; brought with him to St. John's the necessary witnesses. The prisoner was committed to the penitentiary. It so happened that the Supreme court was sitting and it was decided to try him at once as there was no ground for delay, the witnesses on both sides being on hand. On the 15th June, a fortnight after the bloody deed was committed, he was placed in the dock and the trial began.

Nothing could be clearer or more conclusive than the evidence presented. Witness after witness described the killing as seen by themselves from their own houses. They saw him point the gun, heard the report and saw the victim fall. No shadow of doubt existed regarding the attendant circumstances, and the cool deliberation with which the prisoner had taken his brother's life. His own admissions completed the proof.

The accused was unable to fee counsel for his defence, and the court assigned the task of defending him to Sir James Winter, who did all that legal skill and ingenuity could suggest to save the life of the wretched man. He called no witnesses, but by his cross-examining the Crown witnesses he extracted from them sufficient material for the only defence which it was possible to make. That defence was that the prisoner for a length of time had been suspicious that an improper intimacy existed between his wife and the brother whom he had killed; that he firmly believed that such criminality existed and had very strong grounds for doing so, and after brooding for a long time over the wrong thus done him, and the ruin brought on his home and the destruction of his domestic happiness, his mind became so disturbed that he had ceased to work and gave himself up to walking about and constantly talking about his trouble. When in this morbid state of mind, he got some fresh proof of the guilt of his wife which further tended to disturb the mental balance and when in this half-crazed condition, not properly accountable for his actions,—in fact being temporarily insane, he perpetrated the rash act. Sir James argued that no sane man could possibly commit the deed as he did it—in open day, in the presence of witnesses; that had he been prompted by 'malice aforethought,' he would have killed him secretly and so escaped the consequences. A number of witnesses testified to the disturbed state of mind in which the prisoner had been for some days previous to the deed. No direct legal evidence was adduced to prove that illegal intercourse had existed between the prisoner's wife and his brother, but a case of strong probability was made out. Sir James also argued that whether or not the prisoner had sufficient grounds for his belief, he held it firmly, and this led to the unhappy deed. The provocation was very great—the perception of the consequences—of the difference between right and wrong were temporarily obscured. He dwelt, too, on the unhappy life he and his wife spent—quarreling, and at times coming to blows; he constantly wanting her to confess. Several witnesses testified to this. Sir James wound up with a powerful appeal to the feelings of the jury—urging a long array of mitigat-

MILL MEN STRIKE.

THEY SAY THEY WILL NOT RETURN TO THE TEN HOUR SYSTEM.

A Notice Posted Up in Some of the Mills That the Ten Hours will Constitute a Working Day After July 13th and the Men Refuse to go to Work—Several Mills Shut Down—A Meeting to be Held To-night.

The GAZETTE has already published exclusively the news that the majority of the mill owners of St. John had decided to shut down their mills after July 13th, unless the men employed in their mills would agree to return to the ten hour system. In accordance with this decision copies of the following notice were posted up in some of the mills this morning:

"In view of the depressed state of the lumber market, we, the undersigned mill-owners, find that we cannot compete with other places in the manufacture of lumber, where the mills are run from ten to twelve hours. Therefore we give notice that on and after the 13th day of July next ten hours shall constitute a day's work, except on Saturdays when our mills will stop at 5 o'clock p. m. No alteration to be made in wages on account of the above.

(Signed),
W. H. Murray, Miller & Woodman, E. G. Dunn, A. Cushing & Co., Stetson, Cutler & Co., James R. Warner & Co., Hilyard Bros, E. D. Jewett & Co., W. C. Purvis, Randolph & Baker, and George E. Barnhill.

The only mills of importance whose owners' names are not signed to the notice are those of Messrs Hamilton, Strait Shore, Gregory and Clarke in Carleton, and S. T. King & Sons at Kingsville.

At Stetson, Cutler & Co's. large mill at Indiantown, the men were on hand as usual to go to work at 7 o'clock, but after going into the mill and reading the notices they decided not to go to work at all and state that they will not do so until they are satisfied that they will not be asked to work more than nine hours per day. In and about this mill nearly 200 men were employed.

Word was at once sent round to the other mills, whose owners' names were signed to the notices posted up, but in several of which the notices had not yet been put up. At Hilyard Bros. mill the men were at work as usual, no notice having been put up, but when the messenger arrived from Stetson, Cutler & Co's mill with the word that Hilyard Bros. name was on the notice, all the men at once quite work, and the mill had to shut down at about 8.30 o'clock.

At Murray's mill the men worked a short time after the word came that the firm's name was signed to the notice. They worked till 9.30 o'clock, making a quarter day, and then knocked off. Messrs. Warner & Co's. mill at Strait shore was also shut down by the men quitting work. These three mills employ about 60 to 70 men each.

Messrs. Miller & Woodman's large mill at Milford and Messrs. A. Cushing & Co's. mill at Union Point are also shut down today, but it is their usual day for cleaning boilers.

The piers about these two mills were at work as usual.

At Messrs Randolph & Baker's mill, Kingsville, and Messrs Barnhill and Stetson's mills at Pleasant Point the men are at work as usual, and some of them stated today that the feeling there seemed to be in favor of keeping at work until the 13th of July, when they would strike if asked to adopt the ten hour system.

Hamilton's mill, Strait shore, is shut down for a time, but it is in no way connected with the strike, as the firm's name is not on the notices, and the mill stopped sawing some days ago. Mr. W. C. Purvis' mill in Carleton was also running all day.

At present there are about 400 or 450 of the mill men actually out on strike and about as many more were unemployed to-day on account of the mills being shut down where they work.

At Messrs. Stetson, Cutler & Co.'s mill, Indiantown, the schooner Valleta was being loaded with lumber and work on her was stopped.

The mill owners, as far as can be learned from interviews with a few of them, seem quite unconcerned as to whether they run their mills for awhile or not, but the strike puts some of them who had contracts to fill to considerable inconvenience. They say, however, that at the prices they are getting for the lumber it does not pay them to keep sawing.

The mill men intend to hold a meeting this evening at which the matter will be discussed, so that they may decide as to what course they will pursue. So far as can be ascertained they are all decidedly against returning to the ten hour system under any circumstances.

If both the mill owners and the men hold out and the mills all keep shut down it will be quite a serious drawback to business at about $22,000 are paid out in wages in the mills every fortnight.

The situation is a serious one, and just what this crisis will result in is difficult to predict. A prominent tug-boat man said to a GAZETTE reporter to-day that it would be impossible to make room for the logs that are coming down if the mills are shut down. He thought that either the men or the owners must give in for the mills must be kept going to keep the logs clear. Millmen, interested in the matter, however, say that they can better afford to pile the logs than to saw them at a loss, and they think there is plenty of room for booming and piling all the logs that are out.

LEPROSY HAS BEEN DISCOVERED AMONG THE CHINESE OF VICTORIA.

The American Quarrantine Order Against Canadian Sheep and Swine Revoked.

SPECIAL TO THE GAZETTE.

OTTAWA, June 29.—Dr. Smith of the lazaretto for lepers at Tracadie, N. B. reports to the agricultural department that he has discovered six lepers in the Chinese quarters at Victoria, B. C. All the unfortunate victims have been segregated on an island sixteen miles from Vancouver. Dr. Smith says that more severe measures than expulsion are practised among the Celestials. He discovered that in two instances the victims of the disease were secretly slain by their fellow countrymen in order to prevent contagion.

The United States government has revoked an order adopted last month quarrantining for fifteen days all sheep or swine imported from Canada. Official notice was given by the Canadian department of agriculture yesterday. The back down of the American authorities was the result of the adoption by the Dominion government of similar regulations, which practically destroyed the lamb trade from Western Ontario, now in the hands of the Americans. As it now stands, the Dominion regulations have not been enforced, and sheep, and swine from Canada may therefore be imported into the United States subject only to the regular inspection of United States vertinary officers, and in case of such animals imported from Europe a certificate from proper quarrantine officers of the Dominion showing that they have been duly quarrantined on their arrival in this country.

The Citizen, a government organ, in a vigorous editorial this morning takes the Rev. Dr. Douglas, Montreal, to task for aspersions on Sir John Thompson. The article says, "Douglas is a good man, pure in private life, and powerful in conference, but he is intolerant, too frequently permitting his devout belief in certain clearly defined principles to warp his judgment and prejudice his theological opinions.

Messrs. Abbott, Thompson, and Tupper, spent Sunday in Montreal.

Lieut. Col. Howard Vincent M. P. of Sheffield Eng., and founder of the United Empire Trade league is expected here (Ottawa) next month. He is making a tour of the British colonies and after visiting Winnipeg will leave Vancouver B. C. on 20th Aug., for the South Pacific possessions.

A bulletin has been issued by the chief analysts of the Branch Inland Revenue department giving the result of a series of tests made on various grades of teas. The bulletin shows that while the astringent properties of certain brands of green teas are rather high, there is yet no reason to conclude that there is any degree of adulteration practised, but that on the whole teas sold in Canada are of very fair quality.

STABBED IN THE SIDE.

A Fall River Teamster is the Victim of An Italian's Dagger—The Murderer Committed For Trial Without Bail.

BY TELEGRAPH TO THE GAZETTE.

FALL RIVER, MASS., June 29,—Matthew Cullen and some companions became engaged in a quarrel with several Italians on Bedford street last night and in the fight that ensued Cullen was stabbed in the side by one of the Italians named Angelo. He died early this morning from his injuries. The Italians were arrested at midnight and this morning committed without bail pending an investigation. Their names are Raffole Scarpio, Luigi Rossi, Paolo Duneo, Allessandro Leoni, and Pedrasella Angelo. Cullen is 26 years of age and was employed as a teamster.

The Parks Case.

The Parks case was resumed before Mr. Justice Palmer this morning. In the last scene E. P. Winslow was upon the stand. There was lively skirmishing this morning between Mr. Weldon and Solicitor General Pugsley; the latter wanted all letters, between the Saint John branch and the head office of the Bank of Montreal, put in evidence from the first September 1889 and twenty first August 1890. To this Mr. Weldon objected, as he considered, Mr. Pugsley was merely fishing for evidence, and that he should be able to designate the various letters he wanted put in evidence. Mr. Weldon contended that the evidence should be confined to the four corners of Mr. Winslow's affidavit.

Mr. Pugsley said, I want to see by these letters whether Mr. Winslow really did sell the cotton on his own responsibility.

His Honor—All I am now trying is the facts between the Bank of Montreal and William Parks & Company (ltd) in reference to the affidavit of Mr. Parks claiming damages for negligent sale of raw cotton. If the bank only acted negligently I will allow what the cotton should have brought, but if they acted wilfully I will allow the last cent against them. I will therefore allow the examination to see whether the bank did as act charged.

Mr. Weldon claimed the letters between the branch office of the bank here and the head office were private.

His Honor—I will decide that Mr. Pugsley may call for these letters.

Mr. Weldon protested vigorously against the decision of His Honor. E. P. Winslow then read the letters. Some of them must have been more than interesting for Mr. John Parks, who was present, as he heard Winslow's opinion of him, which is anything but flattering. Winslow considered Mr. Parks incapable of running the mill. The writer, in his letters to the head office of the bank, advised them since they had started to close down the mills, "they should not linger on the way." Winslow, in his letters, considered that if they stopped paying the acceptances for the raw cotton that would put a permanent end to the concern. The letters show that Mr. Weldon was fairly desirous of keeping the mills running and that he considered the bank's risk was not increasing and it would not be better to take judgment on the bond and warrant of attorney at the time the bank did so. Winslow's opinion differed from Mr. Weldon's and the mills were ordered to be shut down and sold by the head office.

The usual array of lawyers were present.

During the examination of Winslow this afternoon, a point was reached where Winslow was about to give evidence as to something that was about to be done under the advice of the
