s of interest from Europe.

Considering that any elucidation of the the circumstances which have conspired to place the Earl of DURHAM in his present position, must be highly acceptable to our readers, we have quoted in another column a very graphic description of the attack of Lord Brougham and the more than defence of Earl Durham at the great dinner given to Earl Grey at Edinburgh in Sept. 1834. A pretty full report of the speeches was published in the Standard of that year, and on recurring to it, we have enjoyed their intellectuality with a double zest after reading the description above alluded to. Earl Durham, in his unflinching honesty of purpose and unreserved openness in the avowal of his sentiments, declared to the Provincial Delegates at Quebec, how well he was prepared to expect a persecuting opposition from Lord Brougham and his adherents; but how little he dreamed of the base defection of those who should have stood forward in his defence, when his powerful political enemies were arrayed against him and using every energy to destroy him.

It is impossible to contemplate the circumstances in which Canada is now placed without experiencing anxious apprehensions for its future fate. Who is now to grapple with that ignorance of its condition which prevails at home, and with that absolute disorganization of moral feeling and political position under which that ill-starred colony suffers from one end to the other? It has been laid to Lord Durham's charge that he has been inactive: how can this reproach be sustained when his lordship's acts are fairly considered? A well informed Correspondent of the Montreal Courier, (in alluding to the Editor's call for a public meeting to enquire into what could be done to retain Earl Durham, or secure his good offices in Britain,) enumerates the measures that his lordship was on the eve of completing, and which, but for the high handed interference of the Home Government, would now be in operation for the restoration of Canada to order, security, prosperity, and peace. These measures are the following:—

1st—The Registry Act was finished and would have been law in a day or two, but for the proceedings in the House of Lords.

2d—A Jury Bill to remedy the defects of which the "CHARTRAND" trial gave evidence, was in hand, its preamble drawn up, and its provisions agreed upon.

3d—The "Land granting" enquiry was nearly concluded. It would have resulted in a law as soon as possible after the publication of the reports and evidence.

4th—The Montreal Feudal Tenures Bill was also rapidly approaching its completion, and there is little doubt its provisions would have met general approval.

5th—The Municipal Commission was hard at work.

6th—The Education Commission had nearly completed its labors, which would probably have resulted in the establishment of a general and impartial system of education.

7th—Lord DURHAM was strongly urging upon the Home Government the adoption of a system of most extensive internal improvement, in Upper Canada especially, as a measure hardly second to any other in importance for settling our troubles permanently.

Who could have anticipated that the laurels which under happier auspices would have entwined around the head of Lord Durham, were so soon to be blighted and prematurely destroyed? And how unworthily has this been effected? To gratify party spirit. But the Whigs have to come to their account; and although Lord Durham can hardly be expected to swerve from the pursuit of those liberal principles which he has all along so steadily maintained, yet he will surely refuse to co-operate any longer with persons by whom he has been deserted and sacrificed in so unprincipled a manner. We might even go further and surmise, that if the Earl be inclined to take a part in public affairs (which as the intimate friend of the young Queen he can hardly avoid,) he would probably listen to overtures from the Duke of Wellington and Sir Robert Peel to coalesce under a mutual surrender of extreme politics; in which case sensible and cautious reform would go forward, and the rule of the Whigs would cease forever.

The particulars of the Great Western, a variety of items, and the Address of the Delegates with Lord Durham's reply, are unavoidably postponed till next week, for which delay, the crowded state of our colums will, we trust, be a sufficient apology.
