HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, December 3, 1982

The House met at 11 a.m.

MOTIONS UNDER S.O. 43

[English]

LABOUR CONDITIONS

INCREASE IN UNEMPLOYMENT

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Madam Speaker, in the single month of November an additional 55,000 jobs have been lost in Canada. There are now officially 1,438,000 Canadians who are out of work. Therefore I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Prince Edward-Hastings (Mr. Ellis):

That this House has absolutely no confidence in the Liberals' handling of the economy and condemns the Liberals' six and five policy of fighting inflation through massive unemployment.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

CRIMINAL CODE

NECESSITY TO CONTROL PORNOGRAPHIC ENTERPRISES

Mr. Fred King (Okanagan-Similkameen): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgency. Citizen outrage in British Columbia against the spreading pornographic industry was evidenced by the fire bombing of three Red Hot video sales outlets. Less dramatic, but of equal intensity, is the citizen protest in smaller centres such as Penticton in Okanagan-Similkameen which are experiencing the extension of this unworthy business into their communities. Inasmuch as the struggle for decency in society is national and not just municipal, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Cariboo-Chilcotin (Mr. Greenaway):

That this House urge the Attorney General of Canada to meet with provincial counterparts to develop legislation which will represent the people's interests in eliminating this indecent trade, and relieve municipal councils of the burden of attempting to control pornographic enterprises without the backing of law.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

POLITICAL PARTIES

ABSENCE OF PROGRESSIVE CONSERVATIVE MEMBERS FROM CHAMBER

Mr. Lyle S. Kristiansen (Kootenay West): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter that is of pressing importance. Last night the Official Opposition Tory Members of the "Liberal Lifesaving Squad", this time 31 of the 101 PC MPs, stayed away from a vote again, thus preserving the life of the Government by allowing the Liberals to float by with a 27 vote margin and ensuring that most Canadian senior citizens will suffer a loss in real incomes as a result of Bill C-131's "deep sixing" of the aged. In recognition of these continuing PC efforts, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton):

That the Prime Minister publicly thank the PCs for saving his Liberal Government from defeat, and further, that he ask his Tory "Lifesavers" whether their repeated absenteeism and Liberal support is due to the fact that Tories love the Prime Minister more or love their own leader less.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

LABOUR CONDITIONS

NEED FOR MEASURES TO ADDRESS PROBLEMS OF THE UNEMPLOYED

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Madam Speaker, since the presentation of the budget of November, 1981, the number of people out of work for six months or more, that is the long term unemployed, has risen 124 per cent, and the total measured unemployed now nears the 1.5 million mark. The Government's response to this has been to attempt to create 60,000 short term jobs for these long term unemployed while sacrificing an undisclosed number of permanent jobs in the process. Inasmuch as the depth of winter is a particularly bad time for the unemployed, and that the Government has repeatedly stated that methods to improve the situation will be taken only in its projected spring budget, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Prince Edward-Hastings (Mr. Ellis):

That this House request the Minister to bring forward measures now not only to address the problems of the winter unemployed but also to convince the Canadian public that we who sit in this place do have their welfare at heart in a way that is more than crassly political.

S.O. 43

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

CRIMINAL CODE

USE OF FIREARMS DURING CRIMINAL ACTS

Mr. Mel Gass (Malpeque): Madam Speaker, Bill C-451 will be debated in the House today. This Bill would place further restrictions on the possession of firearms. Under our present gun control laws, all guns purchased after 1978 must be registered, and anyone wishing to purchase a firearm must obtain a firearms acquisition certificate from the police department. Police statistics show that this registration of guns does not reduce crime, and that it is ineffective, cumbersome and expensive. Therefore I urge, and move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Durham-Northumberland (Mr. Lawrence):

● (1110)

That all Hon. Members of the House seriously consider further legislation which places greater penalties on those who use guns during criminal acts.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

CLOSING OF AIRPORT SECURITY SERVICES

Mr. Len Gustafson (Assiniboia): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of increased unemployment of 55 per cent, and 12.5 per cent of the work force unemployed at this time, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Carleton-Charlotte (Mr. McCain):

That the Government reconsider its position on closing out the RCMP security offices at airports in St. John's, Moncton, Quebec City, London, Windsor, Victoria, Regina and Saskatoon, which will only cause unemployment and create security risks at these airports.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

HEALTH

HOME SUPPORT SERVICES FOR SENIOR CITIZENS

Mrs. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Madam Speaker, Canada has an increasing number of senior citizens who are in vital need of home support services which will allow them to remain out of institutions and to live productive, independent lives. We also have thousands of unemployed Canadians who are willing to work and provide these services in every community for senior citizens, services such as Meals on Wheels, home maintenance, transportation, medical care, and recreational and social programs. Therefore I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Kootenay East-Revelstoke (Mr. Parker):

That the Minister of Finance and the Government introduce a program of productive, long-term jobs to provide essential support services for the elderly and to save millions of dollars in costly institutional care.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

THE LATE PERCY WILLIAMS

COMMEMORATION OF OUTSTANDING ATHLETE

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Madam Speaker, this motion should have the full sympathy and support of all parties in the House. One of Canada's outstanding athletes is dead. Percy Williams surprised the world when, at Amsterdam, during the Summer Olympics held there in 1928, he won both the 100-metre and the 200-metre sprints, a feat which no other Canadian has accomplished. In 1950 he was voted the outstanding Canadian track and field athlete for the half century, and in 1978 he was presented with the Order of Canada. I therefore move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Cariboo-Chilcotin (Mr. Greenaway):

That, since Percy Williams died alone and without any known living relatives, will the Government of Canada consider recognizing, in a lasting way, the outstanding achievements of this athlete by issuing a commemorative stamp or by some other suitable manner through Fitness and Amateur Sport.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: The Hon. Member would have to gain the support of another Hon. Member for the motion, because the Hon. Member for Cariboo-Chilcotin (Mr. Greenaway) is not in the House. Oh, he is here. Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

EDUCATION

REPAYMENT OF STUDENT LOANS

Mr. Mark Rose (Mission-Port Moody): Madam Speaker, my motion under Standing Order 43 concerns the plight of approximately 13,000 young Canadians who borrowed through the Canada Student Loan Program to get an education but now find themselves being hounded by Government collection agencies because they are unable to pay back their loans, due to our restrictive job market. The level of youth unemployment today amounts to 21 per cent. The only crime of these young people is that they do not come from affluent families, and they took the Government up on its attempt to provide equal access to post-secondary education regardless of income. I therefore move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow):

That the Minister of Finance declare a moratorium on interest charges to young Canadians who have had to default because there are no jobs for them in the marketplace.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

LABOUR CONDITIONS

INCREASE IN UNEMPLOYMENT—IMPLEMENTATION OF NEED PROGRAM

Hon. David Crombie (Rosedale): Madam Speaker, my question, in the incredible absence of the Minister of Employment and Immigration, is directed to the Minister of Finance. The Minister will know the results of the statistics from Statistics Canada this morning on the unemployment situation. We now have over one and one half million people on the street and looking for work. The unemployment rate is at 12.7 per cent. In the last month alone we have 55,000 more Canadians out of work, on the street and looking for jobs. Clearly, the unemployment situation in this country is absolutely appalling. On October 27 the Minister and the absent Minister of Employment and Immigration announced the establishment of a so-called NEED Program to provide 60,000 short-term jobs. The problem with that Program, as the Minister knows, is that it will not kick in until the end of January or the beginning of February. I would like to ask the Minister would he not now use all of his influence in the Cabinet to move that Program forward so that jobs can be created before Christmas.

• (1115)

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I agree with the Hon. Member that the unemployment situation is very distressing. Even though the actual percentage of unemployment has not increased since last month, this is small satisfaction—

An Hon. Member: No satisfaction.

Mr. Lalonde: —to the hundreds of thousands of people who are unemployed at the present time.

The issue that the Hon. Member has raised is one that we have addressed. The Minister of Employment and Immigration has discussed this issue with me and we have decided to take every step possible to speed up the implementation of the Program. Consultation with the Provinces has been advanced, and I am pleased to advise the Hon. Member that I am informed that the Program will start being implemented this very month, before the end of December.

The agreement signed with the Province of Ontario in particular, this week, whereby the Province of Ontario is going to add $100 million to our own contribution of $130 million, will mean that we will be able to start the Program earlier than had been previously anticipated.

I want to assure the Hon. Member that we will do everything we can to make sure that that $500 million is available to the Canadian unemployed at the earliest possible moment.

STATEMENT MADE BY PRIME MINISTER

Hon. David Crombie (Rosedale): Madam Speaker, now that the Minister of Employment and Immigration has come into the House, perhaps I could direct my supplementary question to him rather than to the Minister of Finance.

The Minister of Finance and the Minister of Employment and Immigration, when they announced this Program, indicated that it would be a Program primarily directed toward those who are coming off unemployment insurance and are in danger of going on welfare, and it was to deal with the so-called "exhaustees", as the Minister calls them.

Sixty thousand jobs was the promise. Two days ago the Prime Minister publicly indicated that, in his opinion, there would not be 60,000 jobs created because the money that was coming for the 60,000 jobs was coming from programs which already employed people. Therefore, the Prime Minister indicated, contrary to what the Minister himself had indicated, there are not going to be sufficient funds for 60,000 jobs and sixty thousand jobs will not be created.

Who is right? Is the Minister of Employment right, or is the Prime Minister right? Are we going to have 60,000 jobs or are we not going to have 60,000 jobs?

Mr. Lalonde: You are wrong.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, if the truth were known, we will have substantially more than 60,000 jobs, because of that Program.

Mr. Clark: Which will last 20 minutes.

Mr. Axworthy: No, that is how long your leadership will last, Mr. Clark.

Mr. Clark: How long did yours last?

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): You could not even handle the women.

An Hon. Member: You twit.

Mr. Axworthy: What we are achieving with that Program is taking the $500 million and being able to multiply that into a substantial addition because of the contributions being made by the Provinces and by municipalities and, increasingly, by interest shown in the private sector. For example, yesterday we signed an agreement with the Province of Ontario. We had initially allocated $130 million. That Program now has grown to a $280 million Program and it is our estimate that we will provide, in that Province alone, somewhere between 35,000 and 40,000 jobs to help those most in need.

We have also signed an agreement with Saskatchewan. We have indications from Manitoba and several other Provinces that they will be coming into the Program, so it is our expectation that we will be providing a substantial amount of additional work at the time it is most needed for those who are facing the most severe problems. That was the intention of the Program. We intend to fulfil that intention.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REQUEST THAT PROGRAM BE EXPEDITED

Hon. David Crombie (Rosedale): Madam Speaker, if the Minister and the Government ever wonder why people do not believe them when they speak, on October 27 the Minister of Finance said there will be 60,000 jobs created with the NEED Program. Two days ago the Prime Minister said there will not be 60,000 jobs created.

Mr. Lalonde: That is not what he said.

Mr. Crombie: Today the Minister of Employment and Immigration says there will be more than 60,000 jobs created. If there is any difficulty understanding why there is no credibility for this Government, that is as good an example as any.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crombie: Now that the Minister is in the House, let me repeat the question I asked. People who are now suffering unemployment are in need. They want to know when the Minister is going to bring on the jobs under the NEED Program. Why will he not speed up the process and have those jobs available, or at least begin to have them available by Christmas?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, it is important to clear up the misunderstanding that the Hon. Member is trying to perpetrate. In the press conference held by the Prime Minister, he was asked the question by a member of the press: would the money that has been reallocated from the energy envelope not in itself create jobs? As I have pointed out in the past, those funds were for long-term economic investment over a period of several years and may have only created one job for $300,000 or $400,000, say on a major pipeline project.

What we are talking about here is targeting in the very immediate future when people are suffering problems and difficulties. We want to apply the resources and money at a time when they will do the most good. That was the whole point being made in answer to that question. We are saying that because of the willingness and the ability of the Provinces and others to join with us in a major effort, and not to engage in the kind of carping criticism we constantly hear from that Member opposite, we will be able to start jobs under that Program before Christmas.

GOVERNMENT PLANS

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. It concerns the very serious matter of unemployment. Unemployment is reaching deeper and deeper into the labour force and is now attacking those with years of seniority. The figures released this morning show that 48,000 of the 55,000 Canadians who lost jobs last month are 25 years of age or over. That means many of them are heads of families. With the deteriorating situation in employment and the fact that the GNP is off 1 per cent again in the third quarter, how much longer is the Government going to wait before it takes major measures? Are the unemployed going to be told that they have to wait until next February or March before the Government presents a budget and comes up with major moves?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I remind the Hon. Member that slightly more than a month ago I introduced an economic statement in this House in which I indicated that the Government was allocating $1.1 billion of additional expenditure in the next few months to cope with the very problem that the Hon. Member has indicated.

Miss MacDonald: It's not coping.

Mr. Lalonde: The Hon. Member may feel it is not enough. I agree it will not be enough to mop up all the unemployment at the present time. I said in my statement that unfortunately we will be faced with high unemployment levels for the next several months. I remind the Hon. Member that this morning the unemployment figures were announced in the United States. Average unemployment has gone up there by almost half a point in this last month. The situation is the same.

Mr. Broadbent: Oh, no!

Mr. Lalonde: Already I hear the Leader of the NDP jumping. I might remind him that the same situation is occurring with his socialist friends in France. As a good member of the Socialists International, he should realize the problem is worldwide at the present time, and is not only a Canadian and American problem.

To come back to the serious question raised by the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands, as the Minister of Employment and Immigration just stated, we are doing everything to speed up the implementation of the expenditures that we have announced in order to help the situation. I have indicated that I will have a budget early in the new year, but I do not want to leave any impression that that budget is going to be able to resolve the unemployment problem and the very serious situation that we are facing in Canada, as well as in all industrialized countries, at the present time. What is important is that we address the problem seriously, responsibly and consistently, and that is what we are trying to do.

DURATION OF INDIVIDUAL UNEMPLOYMENT

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, the unemployment rate in the United States is 10.8 per cent, and that is serious, but in Canada it is 12.7 per cent. That is the difference.

My supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. One year ago people who were without work for 14 weeks, or longer, numbered some 270,000 people. Today 605,000 Canadians have been without work for 14 weeks or longer. That is over a 100 per cent increase. These are the people who will shortly be running out of unemployment insurance benefits. The program which the Minister announced will deal with 10 per cent of that number. What is going to happen to the other 90 per cent who have families to care for, homes to maintain, financial contributions to make? What is going to happen to them? They, too, are looking for an answer.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, we have dealt with that particular question in this House several times. What we have pointed out, both in a study which was published by our Department, and in answer to many questions, is that a substantial percentage of those who exhaust their benefits find alternative employment within a matter of seven to 12 weeks. In fact up to 35 per cent or 40 per cent do find a job within that period of time. To use the figures which the Hon. Member suggests, simply is not accurate. The fact is that people do find employment.

What we have determined from our studies of the labour market is that it is a very active, dynamic labour market. There are something like 250,000 people per month who are presently unemployed who do find new jobs. So there is a very active labour force both going into and out of the market at the same time. That is why I think it is very important that the Hon. Member try to be more accurate in her analysis, rather than simply using those gross exaggerations.

EXTENT OF UNEMPLOYMENT—MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. The unemployment situation, which seemingly everyone in the country but the Cabinet recognizes, has reached an alarming state. We now have lost more than 100,000 jobs in lay-offs in the last two months alone. This is since the time the Minister made an optimistic forecast about the last quarter. We now have numerically a level of unemployment in Canada that is equivalent to the total labour force of half of our Provinces.

I would like to ask the Minister of Finance if he does not agree that the situation now is alarmingly different from what he forecast when he made his October speech? And if he thinks it is alarming, why does he not bring in something now which will give Canadians some hope?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party seems to have discovered today the serious unemployment situation in this country.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lalonde: We have had a serious unemployment problem in this country for many months.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lalonde: I am glad that the Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party recognizes this fact and admits it, but I refer him to my statement of October 27 when I said in that statement that we had a very serious unemployment problem which was at that time roughly at the same level as it is now, 12.7 per cent. I indicated that the unemployment level would decline only gradually in this country, but we were addressing it seriously and we were taking steps to try to cope with the people most affected, those who saw their unemployment benefits ending.

• (1130)

We allocated $1.1 billion six weeks ago to help ease the unemployment situation. The Minister of Employment and Immigration indicated that we would be able to start spending that money before Christmas in order to help the people of this country who are suffering from unemployment. These are actual steps which have been taken, and we are going to do everything we can to continue helping those people.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT INTRODUCE NEW PROGRAM

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, the Minister has just referred to his October 27 statement. Will the Minister have the honesty to admit to the House that in that statement he said that there would be an improvement in the economy in the last quarter, and that Statistics Canada figures released just a couple of days ago pointed out that the Minister's forecast of an improvement for the last quarter has turned out to be wrong? Instead of things getting better, they are getting worse. I repeat that we have lost more than 100,000 jobs in the last two months alone.

Considering that about a third of these people unemployed are heads of families, where entire families are dependent on the income of those people who are not working, will the Minister now come to his senses, admit his forecast was wrong, admit the need for a new program, and bring it in?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I invite the Hon. Member to go back to my text and read it again, because he seems to have completely misread or forgotten it. It was forecast that there would be an end to the downturn in the fourth quarter. The figures for the fourth quarter are not out, Mr. Leader of the New Democratic Party.

Mr. Broadbent: Look at the StatsCan figures.

Mr. Lalonde: The StatsCan figures refer to the third quarter. I invite the Hon. Member to look at those figures and find out. The figures for the fourth quarter will become available only in the first days of February, and I invite my hon. friend to have the intellectual honesty to recognize the situation and the facts as they are.

As far as the unemployment situation is concerned, I indicated that we expected unemployment to remain high over the next several months. As the Hon. Member knows, every winter in this country the actual number of unemployed increases. What is also very important to know and follow, however, is the seasonally adjusted rate. That rate has remained stable over the past two months. I would hope we will see a gradual decline in that rate, but I cannot promise the Hon. Member it will actually occur.

These are forecasts. Our policies are going to come into effect and I hope they will create an environment where we will see a gradual decline in the unemployment level over the next year. This is our purpose, and indeed we are going to do everything we can to achieve that purpose.

Mr. Broadbent: Madam Speaker, the Minister not only is doing nothing about the problem, he does not listen to the question. The figures I referred to from Statistics Canada were released earlier this week. They have nothing to do with the third quarter figures which came out this morning. They are indicators that StatsCan produced which show that, instead of getting an improvement in the last quarter, as the Minister said we would in his address in October, we are going to get the opposite. I tell the Minister to go back and check. However, I am not interested in scoring little debating points here in the House; I would like some action.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REQUEST THAT INCOME TAX BE INCREASED FOR UPPER INCOME GROUPS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, in October I put a proposal to the Minister which would obtain lots of money to create jobs by reimposing on upper income Canadians the taxes he took off them a year ago. The Minister then said he would study the proposal. A couple of days ago, in the House, the Prime Minister said he would study the proposal. I ask the Minister if the Government of Canada will stop studying this proposal, act upon it, and produce the jobs that Canadians want.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, in my previous statement I made a mistake. I mentioned that the fourth quarter figures would come out in the first few days of February. I believe they will come out in the first few days of March.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lalonde: Then we will know what has happened in the economy in the last quarter of 1982—

Mr. Deans: That is not the only mistake you made.

Mr. Lalonde: —and then we will be able to argue about the actual situation.

As far as the proposal of the Hon. Member is concerned, I indicated that I was considering it in the context of my next budget.

Mr. Broadbent: Do it now.

Mr. Lalonde: I will examine this, indeed. I remind him that we have already allocated $1.1 billion of additional expenditures to create jobs in this country right now, and I remind him that I am going to introduce an Income Tax amendment in the House next week. I would hope we will have his support to pass that as soon as possible so that we will create, in the private sector, the certainty required for them to make investment decisions and also encourage the private sector to support recovery in this country.

NATIONAL SECURITY

CASE OF CANADIAN PROFESSOR—DISCLOSURE OF NATO SECRETS

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of National Defence I direct my question to the Acting Prime Minister, concerning the Hambleton case. It is well known that among NATO nations Canada is recognized as a major player in the area of NATO security and intelligence. With this in mind, how can the Canadian Government take the position that a Canadian divulging NATO secrets is not detrimental to Canada's own security?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): In fact that is not the position, Madam Speaker, that the Government of Canada takes. If the Hon. Member will look back at the Treu case, he will see that there it was NATO secrets which were the issue. That demonstrates that the Government was prepared, certainly in that case, to take the position that a breach of NATO secrecy is damaging to the national interests of Canada. But in the Hambleton case, as I indicated, the opinion of the Department of Justice is that a prosecution on the evidence the Security Service had been able to gather would have been unsuccessful.

Mr. McKinnon: Madam Speaker, the Minister must know that a Member of the Cabinet has stated outside this House that the reason Hambleton was not prosecuted was because it was looked upon as a breach of NATO security, not a Canadian breach of security.

REASON FOR DECISION NOT TO PROSECUTE

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Madam Speaker, the Solicitor General is a Member of the Cabinet Security and Intelligence Committee and must know that Canada's heavy involvement on a day-to-day basis in the security and intelligence operations of NATO makes us an integral part of the process. How can the Minister accept the decision not to prosecute Hambleton in Canada on the spurious grounds that a breach of NATO security in Canada is not a breach of Canadian security?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Well, it is the same question and I give the same answer. A breach of NATO security would be considered by Canadians to be a breach of Canadian security.

Mr. McKinnon: Then prosecute him.

ADVICE GIVEN BY DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

Mr. Chris Speyer (Cambridge): Madam Speaker, last night the Commissioner of the RCMP said that the preservation of NATO secrets was absolutely essential to our national interests. In the Hambleton case the RCMP, in my view, did a superb job. They accumulated the evidence, the same evidence being adduced in a British courtroom today. In the case of Peter Worthington and The Toronto Sun it was the Department of Justice which decided, both unfairly and politically, to prosecute that case. In the Hambleton case it is that same Department of Justice which, disastrously and incompetently, has decided that there is no evidence to be adduced in a Canadian courtroom. I ask the Minister of Justice to tell us with some precision why this case is not being heard in a Canadian courtroom rather than in the Old Bailey.

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Madam Speaker, the hon. gentleman knows full well that the reason the decision was made not to prosecute in the Hambleton case is that the evidence was not adequate, in the opinion of the Department of Justice, to sustain a prosecution.

Mr. Nielsen: For a conviction.

Mr. MacGuigan: It has been quite obvious from much of the information released in the last week or two that the kind of information now available was not before the Department of Justice at that time.

PROFESSOR'S ROLE IN INTELLIGENCE

Mr. Chris Speyer (Cambridge): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. On April 25 the Department of Justice rendered a decision that Hambleton was not to be prosecuted. After that time Hambleton was in constant contact with our Security Service. After April 25, and until he went to Britain in June of this year, was he acting as a Canadian agent during that time?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): The Hon. Member has tried to obtain information of that sort from me and I indicated that, until the trial is over, I am not prepared to make statements which would bear on the issues before the court in Great Britain. He said that what I might say in Canada would not be quoted in the media of Great Britain. I can categorically contradict that. In The Times Wednesday a front page article stated in part, "Opposition MPs peppered Government about Professor Hambleton. Ministers Refuse to Answer in any Detail". That is exactly the kind of headline I should like to have in Great Britain.

UNEMPLOYMENT IN NORTHWEST BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. I am sure that he is aware by now that the rate of unemployment across northwest British Columbia has broken the 40 per cent mark. Much of this is due to bad management and lack of forest product diversification. Now that there are over 4,000 forest and pulp workers out of work, that across British Columbia the number of unemployed since this time last year increased by 84 per cent, and that by Christmas another 11,400 workers will run out of unemployment insurance and few of those will be able to get any re-employment under the NEED Program, I should like to put a question to the Minister, and I hope I will get a positive response.

Will the Minister designate northwest British Columbia under ILAP, keeping in mind the rates of unemployment in those other areas of Canada that have been designated under ILAP? Will he make funds available so that a group of workers and economists can look at forest product diversification for both domestic and international markets?

It is very important that we get some kind of response both to ILAP and to making funds available so that workers and economists can look at how the northwest may be revitalized. We need to know exactly where we are going so that we are not just throwing federal funds at different parts of the problem.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I want to tell the Hon. Member that that kind of examination of the future of the forestry industry has been examined by my colleage, the Minister of the Environment, through the forestry services of Canada. My colleague, the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion, has his officials working on it. It is one of the key sectors of our economy. There is a constant assessment of it and planning for its future. What we have to concentrate on is the immediate problem. I would remind the Hon. Member that in his area there are now 45 or 50 Section 38 work creation programs in the Kamloops area. We have established additional allotments under the Canada Community Development Program.

When the Hon. Member says that he does not expect to receive any NEED money, that means that he is not going to work to find it. We are inviting all Members of Parliament to go into their municipalities and communities and develop work projects so that we can put people back to work. Much of the responsibility for how well the NEED Program will operate in his area, is up to him.

SHIPBUILDING

TARIFF PREFERENCES EXTENDED TO COMMONWEALTH COUNTRIES

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In the last two years the country has lost something in the order of 5,000 shipbuilding jobs and about $1 billion in shipbuilding orders. Canadian shipbuilders are asking the Government to implement a policy that would at least put them on an equal footing with foreign competitors.

Would the Minister explain why the Government refuses to remove tariff preferences for shipbuilding from Commonwealth and developing nations, and why he refuses to plug tariff loopholes on offshore marine requirements?

If the Minister would implement such a minimal shipbuilding policy, he would put 10,000 unemployed shipyard workers back to work in Atlantic Canada, Quebec, Ontario and British Columbia, without having to blackmail workers and shipbuilders with the phoney six and five policy.

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, during the course of the summer and the fall we spent a great deal of time dealing with a shipbuilding policy. I hope to be able to make an announcement in that regard in the very near future.

UNEMPLOYMENT IN MANITOBA

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Madam Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. The unemployment level in the Province of Manitoba is around 10.5 per cent, a rise of almost a full percentage point over the October, 1982 figures. In many parts of the Province welfare agencies are being swamped and unemployment insurance offices cannot keep up with the deluge of applications. Is the Minister or his Department preparing any special program for the Province of Manitoba or, more specifically, for the prairie Provinces of Manitoba and Saskatchewan, in this crucial period?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, in yesterday's throne speech in the Province of Manitoba, the provincial Government indicated that it was prepared to participate with us in the implementation of a NEED Program. I expect that either on Saturday or Monday, whichever day is convenient, we will sign the letter of understanding between the federal Government and the provincial Government, to take the initial $17 million job creation money that we have made available to that Province and add to it what the provincial Government will provide. This will enable a large number of work projects to be initiated in that Province.

I can give the Hon. Member that assurance and that confidence that he can take back to his constituency. That program is about ready to be signed and to be brought into effect before Christmas.

ASSISTANCE FOR SECONDARY AGRICULTURE BASED INDUSTRY

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister. One of the areas that has been as hard hit as any is the secondary agriculture base industry in Manitoba, Versatile Manufacturing being a perfect example of this. The economy of a Province like Manitoba is based on the secondary agricultural manufacturing sector aspect.

Is any specific money being targeted to this particular area in the general agreement that the federal Government and the provincial Government have signed together? Is anything at all being done to look after this most important area which is the underpinning of the economy in Manitoba?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I am not sure that I can provide the Hon. Member with a list of different forms of grants and supports that have been given. The Hon. Member mentioned Versatile Manufacturing, which happens to be located in my constituency. I know that through the DREE Program the federal Government provided substantial capital to Versatile during the past year for expansion and modernization.

I would also remind the Hon. Member that we co-operated with the provincial Government to provide a major infusion of funds into Co-op Implements in the past year to keep that company in business. So we have provided major forms of support to the farm implement manufacturing industry in Manitoba and other parts of the prairies, to keep those companies in business.

What we have to face now, in many cases, is the problem of the export markets. Many of the countries that we relied upon are simply not buying tractors. Australia and the United States are not buying as many as they did earlier. We have to work to improve the basic underpinning of the international economy in order to enable firms such as these to regain their prosperity.

GRAIN

WHEAT SALE TO JAPAN

Mr. Bill McKnight (Kindersley-Lloydminster): Madam Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. In a trip last October, the Minister's assistant in the other place travelled to Japan. Could the Minister tell the House whether, on that trip, Senator Argue discussed directly or indirectly the wheat sale to Japan that was announced three days ago?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I do not really try to follow the Hon. Minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board in everything he does. I know that he travels internationally. He has been to Japan and the Soviet Union. Strangely enough, following his visits contracts are usually signed, which indicates that he is quite influential.

Mr. McKnight: I think everyone is amazed at that, Madam Speaker.

MINISTER'S TRAVEL BY CANADIAN PACIFIC AIRLINE

Mr. Bill McKnight (Kindersley-Lloydminster): Madam Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister if the trip taken by Senator Argue and his wife was on business for the Canadian Wheat Board and, if so, why they travelled on two free tickets provided by Canadian Pacific Air? They did travel on those tickets, so will the Minister ask his colleague to reimburse the cost? As some people feel that Canadian Pacific was the architect of Bill S-31, there could be an allegation of conflict of interest on the part of the Minister's assistant in the other place.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, that is really a personal problem. It was my impression that the national airlines, Air Canada and CN—

Mr. McKnight: CP.

Mr. Epp: That is the other one!

Mr. Pepin: —CP Air, occasionally make tickets available to Ministers who travel around the world to defend the national interest.

I will bring the very detailed question to the attention of my colleague and he can answer it on his own.

NATIONAL PARKS

PROPOSED BRUCE PENINSULA PARK

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Bruce-Grey): Madam Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of the Environment. The recent decision of the Liberal Government to allow Judd Buchanan to erect an apartment building within the boundaries of Banff National Park has placed the possible establishment of a national park in the Bruce Peninsula in serious jeopardy. A local advisory committee has given qualified approval for Parks Canada to proceed with the next stage in the establishment of a national park. What guarantees can the Minister give those people if they agree to the proposed park in the Bruce Peninsula that it will not be used for partisan Liberal purposes?

• (1150)

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of the Environment): Madam Speaker, I have a very great deal of respect for the hon. gentleman who asked that question. I will respond to it seriously, and I will ignore what I think are some rather uncharasteristic sentiments that he expressed.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Roberts: In terms of the Bruce Peninsula Park, there is an extensive consultation process which is underway at the present time with the people of the area, and with the two councils of the area. Council elections have recently taken place and there may have been some change in the disposition on the part of the councils in relation to the projects.

Mr. Clark: Will it be patronage as usual?

Mr. Roberts: As the consultation process continues, if Parks Canada decides to proceed with the idea of the establishment of a park, a management plan will be brought forward for extensive public discussion.

Mr. Nielsen: Parks patronage.

Mr. Roberts: That management plan will be the basis for any future developments that take place within the park. It is in the elaborations of public discussion and public confirmation of the management plan that the kinds of limitations which would apply to any developments within that park would occur.

Mr. Gurbin: Madam Speaker, I am sure that Mr. Horner, Mr. Erikson and Mr. Strong would be comfortable with the position that has been put forward by the Minister of the Environment and by the Liberal Government.

AUTONOMY OF RESIDENTS WITHIN PROPOSED PARK

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Bruce-Grey): Madam Speaker, I think the broader question here is the level of autonomy that can be expected by people who live within the boundaries of a national park. It is an important question, and a question which the Minister needs to address with some sort of a guarantee in this House. If the proposal proceeds, and if my constituents and myself are to give support to this proposal for it to proceed, what guarantees will we have that we will continue to have local autonomy and be able to exercise democratic self-determination? What demonstration is there that we can have confidence or trust in the Minister's answers, in view of the practices of the Liberal Government in the recent past?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of the Environment): Madam Speaker, we will not proceed with the establishment of a national park in that area, or indeed in any area, unless it has the support and approbation of the people in the area. We undertake an extensive series of consultations to try to ensure that support is there. When we develop to the point of knowing that there is that support, we proceed on the basis of a development or a management plan that is extensively discussed with the people. That is the process by which we establish a park, and that is the process by which the kinds of guarantees about future development are made.

Mr. Nielsen: It didn't happen with Kluane.

Mr. Roberts: I do not know how I can answer more clearly the serious question which I think the Hon. Member is asking. In terms of some rather unfortunate political allusions that I think the Hon. Member has made in the rest of his speech, I would simply advise him to look at past answers which have been given to Members' questions in the House of Commons and I think he would agree—I hope he will agree—that the kind of allusion he has made is unwarranted.

Mr. Clark: Stop hiding the information. Table the Buchanan documents.

UNEMPLOYMENT IN ONTARIO

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. The number of unemployed in the Province of Ontario has now reached half a million. I am sure the Minister realizes that this number is the equivalent of the total population of a number of our Provinces. The Government's reaction to date has certainly not recognized the human misery and suffering that this unemployment has created.

The programs which the Government has brought forward will provide employment for somewhat less than 13 per cent of the total number of the people unemployed in Ontario. Will the Minister now begin a systematic and quick review of the steel industry, which is at a modern-day low, the auto industry which is in serious jeopardy, the farm implement industry, which is rapidly declining, and the housing industry which is virtually at a standstill? Will the Minister bring in programs now which will introduce into those industries some appropriate stimulus that will bring about their recovery so that people who are currently unemployed will be able to look forward to an opportunity to work?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member mentioned a number of problems that clearly indicate the Government's policy must be one of stimulating investment across Canada, in all industries and sectors. The Hon. Member will have realized that it would be impossible for the Government to create directly all the jobs required at the present time. The solution is to stimulate the private sector, to restore investor confidence and to stimulate consumer demand. I would also remind the Hon. Member that there are indications in the housing industry that a recovery has started. To give an example, the Urban Development Institute has announced that next year, according to its projections, 150,000 new housing units will be built in Canada, a subtantial improvement over this year's situation and also over previous projections. I would therefore invite the Hon. Member to reflect on all of these factors during the weekend.

[English]

PROVISION OF FULL-TIME JOBS

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg-St. James): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Today's labour statistics indicate that over a one year period, since November, 1981, the Canadian economy has lost some 500,000 full-time jobs. Yet the Minister's announcements over the past year, the latest of which is the NEED Program, have focused upon temporary employment. The Minister has even refused during committee hearings to provide information on the number of full-time jobs his programs have created.

In light of the labour force statistics, which indicate a loss of half a million full-time jobs, is the Minister prepared to recognize the need for full-time employment in this country? As well, is the Minister prepared to put in place an emergency program to provide full-time employment for the half a million people who have lost work over the last year, particularly in light of the fact that during the past 12 months half a million Canadians who are heads of households, and primarily responsible for taking care of their families' needs have lost their jobs as well?

Mr. Nowlan: That is a supplementary speech.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, the Government of Canada has been continually interested in promoting development of an economic base upon which full-time work can be created. We have had a number of investments in the housing industry, in research and development, in new technology, and in new training programs, all to ensure that we provide a framework within which the private sector can develop an ongoing, stable, and active economy.

In the meantime, we are saying that, because of the world-wide recession that we are a part of, we must provide bridging assistance to help those who are laid off, who do not have jobs, or who have run out of UI benefits. That is why we have introduced programs, such as the NEED Program and the Canada Community Development Program. The Hon. Member refers to temporary versus full-time employment. But what we consider important is to provide the opportunity for people to have jobs, whatever label you put on it, and that is what we are trying to do.

GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES

IMPLEMENTATION OF RESTRAINT PROGRAM

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. The Minister is charged with the responsibility of promoting the six and five program, but he is promoting it to the point where he is having it apply to pensioners? Has the Minister sought and received the total co-operation of all Ministers and Departments to implement this program, particularly where Government funding applies to projects either taken alone or in conjunction with other Governments or private enterprise?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I received the support and the co-operation of all my hon. colleagues for implementation of the 6 and 5 policy. It has the support of all ministers and of the entire caucus on this side of the House, and I would even say of all Canadians, and I hope that the Hon. Member himself will also continue to support this policy.

SALARIES OF COMMUNITY DEVELOPMENT PROJECT OFFICERS

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Madam Speaker, my supplemetary question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Why, under the Community Development Projects, has the Minister allowed salaries for project managers to go over 41 per cent above the average levels that were in effect last year, which has the effect of reducing the number of projects which can be undertaken? As well, it works out on the average from 30 per cent to 50 per cent of the funds going to the project managers and not employing as many people.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I would think that the answer to that question would be obvious. The normal salary range that we provide under the Canada Community Development Projects, is the prevailing provincial minimum wage with a variable of approximately 20 per cent. However, because many of these projects are engaged in fairly skilled light construction work in the development of municipal services or facilities, they require the addition of some skilled personnel to provide supervision and management. In order to engage those people to provide the over-all accountability for that program, or to provide specialized training for those on the projects, a slightly higher stipend must be paid to do it. That is why we provide that different rate.

The average wages which are paid are around $200 a week, based on the minimum wage. It is only the managers or supervisors who must provide the over-all direction for a project who receive a larger stipend.

PETITION

MR. CLARK—CALL FOR ABANDONMENT OF SALES TAX PROPOSAL AFFECTING WHOLESALERS

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I have the duty and the responsibility to present a petition on behalf of 96 citizens from Grande Cache, Alberta.

The nature and purpose of this petition is to inform the federal Government that the announcement of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) of October 27, 1982 to delay the implementation of the proposed federal sales tax onto wholesalers until the middle of 1984 is not adequate. They call on the Government to have the Government publicly abandon, not simply delay, its proposed federal sales tax onto the wholesalers of Canada.

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S.O. 26

[English]

Madam Speaker: I have a notice of a motion under Standing Order 26 by the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent).

INCREASE IN UNEMPLOYMENT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I ask leave, seconded by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-St. James (Mr. Keeper), to move the adjournment of the House under the provisions of Standing Order 26 for the purpose of discussing a specific and important matter, namely the continuing unemployment situation which has reached a new critical plateau entailing the following elements: a record high level of unemployment which now includes heads of families as constituting more than one-third of the total unemployed in Canada; a total number of unemployed which more than equals the combined labour force of Newfoundland, Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island, New Brunswick and Manitoba; the reality that more than one-quarter of a million men and women have now been unemployed for over a year.

This alarming human and economic information, presented in a context in which the forecast of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) for improvement made on October 27 has turned out to be incorrect and in the context of statements made this week by the same Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) that no new programs dealing with unemployment would be announced before the Christmas recess, means we have reached a new and acute situation in the problem of unemployment in our country.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: The Hon. Member has given the Chair the required notice of the motion that he has now proposed to the House. As the Hon. Member knows, a matter can only be proper to be discussed under the provisions of Standing Order 26 if it is a genuine emergency, a sudden or unexpected occurrence. Section 16(a) of the Standing Order reads as follows:

> The matter proposed for discussion must relate to a genuine emergency, calling for immediate and urgent consideration.

I and my predecessors have consistently ruled that matters of ongoing concern and of a chronic nature are not proper to be discussed under this Standing Order.

I would also draw to the attention of Hon. Members Citation 288 of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, which states:

> The Speaker is bound to apply to motions made under S.O. 26 the established rules of debate, and to enforce the principle that subjects excluded by those rules cannot be brought forward thereon, such as a matter under adjudication by a court of law, or matters already discussed or appointed for consideration during the current session, whether upon a substantive motion, upon an amendment, or upon an Order of the Day.

Members will be aware that the House has debated the subject of unemployment on a number of occasions, the most recent being November 5, 1982.

I must further point out to the Hon. Member that the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) announced yesterday that next Thursday would be the final allotted day for this supply period which the House could use not only to discuss this important matter but also to demand a vote on it.

For these reasons, I regret that I cannot accept the matter as being proper to be discussed under the provisions of Standing Order 26, although it is, of course, a matter of extreme importance.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. KRISTIANSEN—COMMENT OF MR. LEBLANC DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Mr. Lyle S. Kristiansen (Kootenay West): Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. In answer to a question I put to the Minister of Public Works (Mr. LeBlanc) yesterday during Question Period, the Minister said, as reported on page 21202 of Hansard:

> Madam Speaker, I need your guidance as to whether we are answering questions on a regional basis or on a departmental basis.

The fact that you did not rise at that time to answer the Minister's request for guidance led me, and I believe others, to believe that you were probably reserving your opinion and that, following consideration, you would inform us of that opinion. It is important for all Members to know whether or not we will have these kinds of undue restrictions placed on us.

The question was asked regarding a foundry being placed into receivership in the Minister's riding. To some of us, he appeared to be using his request for guidance from you as a dodge in order to refuse answering that question, which might have been embarrassing to him. Will you be making a ruling, Madam Speaker, and, if so, we await it with some interest.

Madam Speaker: I have not made that ruling but I have reminded Members several times of the rules and practices which they have accepted for a long time in the House. That is, that Ministers may not be questioned on matters of regional importance which are under their jurisdiction as political personnel. Ministers in the House answer questions related to their administrative responsibilities in the Department of which they are a Minister.

I think the Hon. Minister put it in the terms yesterday which were quite adequate. Therefore, I felt no need to intervene.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orrally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 3,564, 4,165.

[Text]

CMHC OWNED CONDOMINIUM UNITS IN MISSISSAUGA

Question No. 3,564—Mr. Blenkarn:

1. Did newspaper releases of the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation indicate that purchasers can buy Corporation-repossessed condominium units with 5 per cent down and, if so, which lending institutions are prepared to accept purchasers paying as little as 5 per cent down on condominiums in Mississauga?

2. Which condominiums in Mississauga are available with 5 per cent down to qualifying purchasers and from what lending institutions can they borrow money?

3. When the government prepays interest to a lending institution to reduce the interest rate from 18 per cent to 15 per cent, are the purchasers who assume those mortgages qualified on the basis of interest at 15 per cent or do they need salary qualifications to show that they can pay a mortgage bearing 18 per cent interest?

4. What is the amount of income of a proposed purchaser which is taken into account when purchasers are given the advantage to pay down CMHC mortgages?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): I am informed by Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation that as of the date the question was asked the situation was as follows:

Order Paper Questions

1. Yes. Lenders have not been individually canvassed on their willingness to provide NHA financing.

2. None.

3. If the term of the mortgage is less than three years, the purchaser must qualify at the pre-buydown interest rate; if over three years, qualification is at the discretion of the lender but lenders generally qualify purchasers at the higher interest rate.

4. Under current NHA guidelines, lenders may qualify a purchaser using up to a maximum of 32 per cent of the purchaser's gross income. The following factors are included in the calculation of the gross debt service: principal and interest, taxes, one-half of the condominium fees, and the heating costs (if not included in the condominium fee). Use of the maximum G.D.S. ratio of 32 per cent is at the discretion of the lender.

MAIN SQUARE, TORONTO, ONTARIO

Question No. 4,165—Mr. Young:

1. What is the maximum annual income level at which tenants of the Main Square apartment complex in Toronto become ineligible for the 25 per cent rent-geared-to-income program?

2. On what data is the maximum income level set?

3. To whom are rent-geared-to-income applications submitted and who approves or disapproves the applications?

4. How long is the Main Square rent-geared-to-income program intended to last?

5. For how long can fixed income tenants of the apartment complex expect to have their rents subsidized?

6. What were the level of profits made by the Marchant Property Management Co. on the commercial operation (the shopping complex) of the complex for 1980-81?

7. What were the operating losses for apartment rental at the apartment complex for 1980-81?

8. What criteria were applied to determine local apartment rental market values in deciding the level that Main Square apartment rental rates will rise to?

9. What is the maximum annual income that people are required to earn before being eligible to rent a unit at the apartment complex?

10. Does the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation intend to increase rental rates for the Main Square apartment units in the fiscal year 1982-83?

11. Under the original management agreement signed by Victoria Wood Development Corporation Inc. and CMHC for the operation of the apartment complex, how many apartment units were reserved to accomodate (a) disabled persons (b) senior citizens (c) single parent families?

12. How many apartment units of the complex were occupied by (a) disabled persons (b) senior citizens (c) single parent families as of March 19, 1982?

13. Under the original management agreement, for what period of time were specific numbers of apartment units to be occupied by (a) disabled persons (b) senior citizens (c) single parent families?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): I am informed by Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation as follows:

1. Based on the highest rental rate, $22,940 and over.

2. The maximum income level is a factor of the apartment rent of a unit and a 25 per cent gross debt service calculation.

3. (a) Marchant Property Management Office at Main Square, (b) the property manager.

Point of Order—Hon. Walter Baker

4. The program will continue for as long as CMHC remains the owner of the property.

5. For as long as they are qualified under the rent-geared-to-income program.

6. None.

7. $582,026 in 1980 and $312,282 in 1981.

8. Comparable properties were selected by CMHC. Adjustments relating to location, amenities, unit types and sizes were then made for differences in the comparables and the various units in Main Square.

9. None.

10. Yes.

11. (a) 50, (b) 300, (c) 90.

12. (a) 18 approximately, (b) 260, (c) 54.

13. For the full length of the term of the mortgage or as long as CMHC owned the property. However, when the demand for these units dropped off in the mid-1970s, vacant units were rented to market tenants.

[English]

Mr. Smith: I ask, Madam Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. MacKay: Madam Speaker, about a month ago I asked the President of the Treasury Board about the terms of Mr. André Déom's settlement, which is on the basis of a five-year $300,000 package, $175,000 tax-free, with a contingency built in by the Treasury Board to pay any future tax liabilities. It is a very startling situation and I would hope that we will get some answers and some specifics at a time when, as some Hon. Members have said, bridging is very important and unemployment is very high.

Mr. Smith: Perhaps the Hon. Member could provide me with the number of his question and I will be happy to look into it.

Mr. MacKay: It is question No. 4,530 which has been on the Order Paper for over a month.

Madam Speaker: The questions enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Madam Speaker: Orders of the day.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. BAKER (NEPEAN-CARLETON)—PRACTICE RESPECTING TABLING OF REPORTS UNDER NEW HOUSE RULES

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, just before you continue on to Orders of the Day, I thought there might be some tabling of answers to questions today and I was waiting for that time before raising my point of order, which is with respect to the new rules of the House of Commons which will be in place on January 17. As the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) knows, those rules indicate that reports, returns and other matters tabled in the House of Commons will be automatically referred to the appropriate standing committee by the Hon. Members tabling them.

There has been a feeling for some time that some Crown agencies, Departments, Crown corporations and others have not been following the statutory requirement of tabling their annual reports on time. There may be a myriad of reasons why that is so, but now that the House has unanimously adopted a new set of rules, part of which is predicated on the timely tabling of those reports, returns and other things, I wonder whether the President of the Privy Council, during the period between now and January 17, in order to put the proper foundation under those rules, could canvass the Crown agencies and Departments to ensure that all of the reports which are due as of January 17 are tabled by that time.

Mr. Nielsen: It is required by law.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): And, incidentally, this is required by law. If the President of the Privy Council would undertake to make that investigation and perhaps report to the House at a later time, I would be quite happy.

[Translation]

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, we have made it clear, and I indicated this in my speech on the motion, that we are approaching this parliamentary reform experiment in good faith, which means that we would do nothing to prevent Crown corporations or other agencies from tabling a report or other papers, if they are legally obliged to do so. However, my hon. colleague has gone one step further, since he does not seem to be satisfied with our undertaking that we would do nothing to prevent them from observing the law. On the other hand, I have no desire to be the enforcer of this country's laws. I can only confirm that we will not take advantage of this experiment to ask Crown corporations or other agencies to delay tabling their reports, but I cannot guarantee that they are going to be able to table those reports at a date convenient to the Hon. Member. I trust that my answer is still clear enough to satisfy what the Hon. Member has in mind.

[English]

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): I was not even implying in my point of order, and I want to make it clear, that the Government is acting improperly or has acted improperly with respect to the matter. I am satisfied that the Government has not been holding back, as far as I know. However, there is a feeling that a practice has developed which is unsatisfactory. Perhaps the President of the Privy Council, using the prestige of his office, might be able to remind the various Departments and agencies about the new rules and their importance and the attitude of good faith which he himself has respected. If he would do that, it would satisfy what I believe is an innocent query on my part to underpin the operation of the new rules.

Mr. Pinard: Yes, Madam Speaker, the words "good faith" are very well spread, I can assure the Hon. Member, in Government offices and in Crown corporations, and I hope that he will be happy.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Thank you.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Madam Speaker, with regard to that same point of order, may I ask the President of the Privy Council if he would also look into the practice of some corporations or organizations of tabling reports through what they call back door tabling? It is sometimes difficult for Members to find out if a report has been tabled in time, and when we do look for it, I have noticed many times that the practice called back door tabling has been followed. I wonder if we could change or modify that practice and ensure that Members are aware of it.

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I will very seriously consider the very positive suggestion made by the Hon. Member, even if I am not sure that I understand what he means by "back door"; but I will speak with him and try to satisfy his request.

MEASURE TO LIMIT INDEXATION

The House resumed from Wednesday, December 1, consideration of the motion of Miss Bégin that Bill C-132, an Act to amend the Family Allowances Act, 1973, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, I think it is hard to trust a Government that is planning to cut programs and to cut back assistance to Canadians who are having trouble making ends meet. Madam Speaker—

Some Hon. Members: More, more!

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, it is also hard to trust a Minister and the Members from Quebec, who are intending to do just that.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. The Hon. Member for Lac-Saint-Jean (Mr. Gimaïel), on a point of order.

Mr. Gimaïel: Mr. Speaker, if I understood correctly what my hon. colleague just said about Quebec Members of the House of Commons, and perhaps I should congratulate him on his French, he does not have any confidence in the work being done by Quebec Members of the House of Commons—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. This is not a point of order, this is debate.

[English]

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, the subject of the debate here this afternoon is the Government's intention to cut assistance to families. This week we have been debating the Government's intention to cut assistance to pensioners in this country. I maintain that we are doing that at a time in Canadian history when it is extremely difficult for the average Canadian—

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): The Hon. Member for Lac-Saint-Jean is raising the same point of order. I just informed the Hon. Member—

Mr. Gimaïel: This is on another point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Family Allowances Act, 1973

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Would the Hon. Member please sit down? He has just been informed by the Chair that he did not raise a point of order. I can hardly recognize the same Member on the same point of order, since there is none.

Mr. Gimaïel: This is on another point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Well, the Hon. Member for Lac-Saint-Jean (Mr. Gimaïel), on another point of order.

Mr. Gimaïel: Mr. Speaker, I am raising a point of order because I cannot allow the Hon. Member to influence me with respect to the kind of work I am doing as a Member of this House. He said that he did not have any confidence in the work being done by Quebec Members. The Members from Quebec in the House—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. I am very sorry, but the Hon. Member for Lac-Saint-Jean is an experienced parliamentarian, and he is stretching our interpretation of a point of order to its very limits.

The Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes).

Mr. Hawkes: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There are now quite a few Progressive Conservative Members who have studied French because we are aware that Liberal Members from the Province of Quebec are not always able to tell their fellow citizens in that province the truth. We must support the use of French in order to be able to speak out against the Members from the Province of Quebec.

[English]

Mr. Speaker, that is the kind of difficulty that the country is in. It is difficult enough and takes a lot of goodwill for us to communicate in the two official languages of Canada. Government policies that make that difficult should be avoided and it is up to the Members of this House to straighten out such abuses, because Cabinet does not do it.

That takes me directly to the economic situation in Canada today. It is a difficult one, and in that difficult climate there are civil servants who give advice to Ministers who bring this advice to this House in the form of legislation. This week we are dealing with legislation which would cut assistance to Canadian families and pension assistance to Canadian senior citizens.

There may be a time in the history of Canada when such a policy is warranted. May I suggest that now is not the time. The difficulty in Canada today is not excessively high interest rates, as it might have been six months or a year ago. The difficulty is a lack of confidence, a psychological difficulty. The citizens of this country are not spending, they are not buying; they are saving and they are reducing debts. As a consequence we have a million and a half unemployed because there is not anybody willing or with the confidence to make the big ticket purchases, to buy cars, refrigerators, an extra pair of shoes, clothes or a little extra food. That is the difficulty we are in.

The new "Messiah of Finance" some three or four months ago went public with his personal preference, his personal intention of cutting all assistance to families in the form of Family Allowances. The wisdom of the caucus, I presume, prevailed over the wisdom of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde). After three months of discourse we have more or less some assurance that there is no intention to cut Family Allowances altogether.

But consider the three months of economic costs, which came about as a consequence solely of the statements made by the Minister of Finance. People out there in all our ridings, ridings held by Liberals, New Democrats or Conservatives, people in those ridings got scared because in the difficulty that we are in today in Canada people are afraid that next month, or three months down the road, they may not be able to put food on the table for their children. They are afraid that they may not be able to pay their rent. They are afraid that they may not be able to pay their mortgage payments.

Senior citizens are worried. I have many times in this House brought to the attention of Ministers and backbenchers in the Liberal Party the fact that there is a definite correlation between increased unemployment and all the stress-related impacts on society. Crimes of violence, heart attacks, suicides and mental hospital admissions increase as unemployment increases. All of these kinds of social costs are a consequence of increasing unemployment.

In committee this morning the first thing that astonished me was that the Minister would not admit that that correlation exists, that it is scientifically validated from many, many sources. But even more astonishing was the Minister's admission that the Cabinet of Canada, supported by the Liberal backbenchers, have decided that spending priority number one shall be the buying of service stations, rather than the provision of funds to old age pensioners and people on Family Allowances.

This Bill before us today—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Health and Welfare is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Schroder: Mr. Speaker, I am sure that the Hon. Member would not want to mislead the House, but he did not quote correctly what the Minister said. What the Minister said was that she was interested in job creation—

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): That is not a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. I should advise the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary that at the second reading stage the Parliamentary Secretary or the Minister will have the opportunity for reply. The remarks just made by the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary are debate, not a point of order.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): They will reply.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, one of the advantages of a committee meeting is that we have a written transcript, and every Member of the House can check what is said.

Miss Bégin: Exactly, and we will look at it.

Mr. Hawkes: The Minister did not talk about job creation but said that the purchase of British Petroleum service stations was to protect Canadian jobs. That is on the public record. That is a rather indefensible position, but it is irrefutable and there is no argument that that response is now a matter of public record, from our committee meeting this morning.

Mr. Speaker, this decision to buy service stations instead of providing money to families should perhaps be put in context. One recent service station purchase, the smallest one in its total dollar cost that has been made by this Government since 1974, is at a cost of something in the order of $550 million. Mr. Speaker, just buying 6 per cent fewer service stations from that one deal would enable us to leave the Family Allowances program alone. Transferring 6 per cent of the cost to the Family Allowance program would mean we do not have to deal with this piece of legislation this afternoon. Ninety-four per cent of the service stations that seem to be their passion and their priority could have been bought, and by not buying the remaining 6 per cent of them, the Family Allowance program could have been left alone.

Mr. Speaker, that identifies in the clearest, most concrete form the choices that the Cabinet—

Some Hon. Members: Order, order!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Fisher: A few minutes ago the Member said that he was referring to the truth. I wonder if he could tell us how the discussion he is carrying on about service stations bears any relation to the truth, let alone relevance.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Why don't you sit down and listen to his speech?

Mr. Hawkes: One of the responsibilities of a Cabinet is to make spending and taxing decisions. One of the responsibilities of all Members of this House is to hold the Cabinet responsible for those spending and taxing decisions. The Cabinet is asking us later this day to cut the amount of assistance that this Parliament is prepared to give to families. It is going to ask us to cut the amount of assistance that we give to pensioners.

The Cabinet Minister defends that by saying we do not have any money. Governments spend and governments choose the priority, when the backbenchers support them in the choice of the priority. This Government clearly and consistently chooses to buy service stations instead of providing money to senior citizens and families in Canada.

If Members on the other side joined with this Party, we could stop this Bill. If they would stand up in this House and vote in the manner that says to the Cabinet "Your priorities are messed up, your priorities are wrong", we could collectively stop it. We are wasting taxpayers' dollars. We are driving the country deeper into debt because of one or two stubborn people in the front benches whose minds are just a little mixed up about what Canada needs and should have today.

The only check on that power is the votes of backbenchers in the Liberal Party. They have a majority. On one or two occasions later this day we will see whether they are willing to stand up in this House and say yes, cut assistance to families. Next week we will see if they are willing to stand in this House and cut assistance to pensioners. We have already seen that they are willing to stand in this House and buy service stations as a priority. Now they are trying to make us believe there is no money.

Anybody on the other side who tells their constituents there is not enough money for pensions and family assistance is in danger of stretching the truth. The money is there, but it has been allocated to buying service stations, air travel for Ministers, and giving patronage to people such as Keith Davey, Jim Coutts, Maurice Stong, Joel Bell, and to send people to Europe at $200,000 a year for language training when we have some of the best teachers in the world in this country. Those are the priorities of this Cabinet, supported by the backbenchers. Some day they will be accountable to the voters in their riding.

Canadian jobs are disappearing at a rapid rate because the backbenchers support that policy. It is not a myth that the Liberal Party is self-destructing. The Gallup Poll now shows that 30 per cent of Canadians believe in them, whereas two years ago it was 50 per cent. Support is eroding and people say it is the Liberal Party's own fault.

We are helping. We are vigilant. We are hard-working and know what we are talking about. I bring to the attention of Hon. Members that our Leader and our caucus stood alone two years ago on the Constitution when all the Members opposite—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. I apologize for having to interrupt the Hon. Member for Calgary West. However, as Hon. Members know, the rule of relevancy is a very difficult one for the Chair to apply. I invite the Hon. Member for Calgary West to relate his comments to the debate now before the House, a Bill to amend the Family Allowances Act.

Mr. Hawkes: I will be very happy to do that.

Mr. Harquail: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Perhaps this is a good occasion because we have some difficulty with the procedure. Earlier the Hon. Member said that he had chosen one of the official languages to point out to Canadians that some Members on this side said something that was not the truth. Would he like to withdraw that or clarify what he meant?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. That is clearly debate.

[Translation]

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I trust your interpretation of the Standing Orders of the House.

Family Allowances Act, 1973

[English]

Mr. Harquail: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I am sure you would be the first to agree that when a Member uses a term that is unparliamentary and suggests or imputes that somebody is not telling the truth, has not told the truth or refers to lying, it is incumbent upon the Chair and all Members to correct that. The Hon. Member said that the reason he was speaking en français aujourd'hui was to make sure that Members from the Province of Quebec were not able to continue to say things that would be considered not to be the truth. He suggested that some Member, unnamed, or all Members from Quebec were trying to mislead by not telling the truth. One of the benefits we will have under the new rules will be being able to question Members for ten minutes after they have spoken, if we want clarification.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. I have listened attentively to the point raised by the Hon. Member for Restigouche (Mr. Harquail). That is definitely not a question of privilege. The matter referred to by the Hon. Member for Restigouche may be a point of order. However, I have listened attentively to the remarks of the Hon. Member for Calgary West and have not noticed any unparliamentary language.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I will provide to all Members opposite a transcript of the meeting held this morning with the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin), where she indicated that spending on service stations is more important than Family Allowances. If Members opposite will put that in their Householder I will be glad to stand in this House and praise them for providing both sides of the story. However, If they do not do that, I will continue with my lessons until I reach a level of skill where I can be comfortable in telling the story myself as to what I find in the Health and Welfare Committee minutes.

When you interrupted me, Mr. Speaker, you were asking for relevance. We will be voting later this day on the second reading stage of Bill C-132. Before doing that, we will vote on a motion which I will propose. The relevance is as follows.

I would like to make it clear to the other side that, in a marketing sense, politics is never a one-way street. The difference between selling your point of view to the voters of this country and selling a car or sewing machine is that it is a two-way communication street. When I sell a car, I have the chance to tell my story, but there is no opposition to interpret it in a different way. In politics there is a one-way communication and it is rebutted by the other side. Therefore, it goes two ways.

I point out to Members opposite that the Cabinet is asking them to cut assistance to families and pensioners, reducing the amount of money which goes to those two groups. I remind Hon. Members that the Conservative Party under the leadership of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) has been rather skilled in the last two years in acquainting the Canadian public with what Liberal backbenchers have done.

I started by saying the Liberal Party backbenchers supported the original Constitution. We had the opportunity to tell Canadians what was wrong with it. They believed us, it was eventually changed, and their popularity went down. We are the group in this House that rang the bells for democracy. Members opposite were prepared to support a non-democratic Cabinet. We rang the bells, Mr. Speaker, Canadians learned about the Liberal Party's lack of commitment to democracy and their popularity went down.

The Liberal backbenchers opposite supported the budget of the former Minister of Finance, and they did so at the beginning with a sense of positive voting behaviour. But our Leader and our caucus informed Canadians about the difficulties with that budget, the jobs which would be lost, the health concerns, and all of the things that were wrong, and gradually Canadians started to fight back. The popularity of the backbenchers on the other side fell.

I would like to remind those Hon. Members that we told them consistently that the National Energy Program was an economic disaster. It has cost jobs and foreign exchange. It is a disaster from start to finish. Because of its complexity Canadians did not believe us for a long time, but today they are very nervous about the support which Liberal backbenchers, as well as the New Democratic Party, gave to that program. As the economic mess worsens in this country, the popularity of these two Parties is going to go down and down, because we are telling Canadians where the source of the problem is.

With regard to political patronage and scandal, Joel Bell, Morris Strong, Jim Coutts and Keith Davey were unknown Canadians until we in this Party brought those names to the attention of Canadians, and in a manner which was not very pleasant. Because the Liberal backbenchers support that kind of Cabinet behaviour, their personal popularity in their ridings is going down.

Every voter in every riding in this country is going to find out who votes this afternoon and who votes next week to cut Family Allowances and pensions. We are going to tell them, Mr. Speaker, from the platform, in brochures, on radio and television that the Cabinet was supported by its backbenchers in cutting social programs at a time when Canadians have a real need and at a time of economic uncertainty, when stress-related illnesses are almost epidemic. The backbenchers opposite want to buy service stations instead of putting money in health and social programs.

I can understand the difficulty of the Hon. Members opposite in voting against the Government, throwing it out of office and going to the general electorate at a time when they have made so many mistakes as backbenchers, and I would like to give them a graceful way out. There is a graceful way of voting this afternoon which will not turf out the Government, but will simply delay the cut in Family Allowances. All they have to do is vote for the following motion. I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Leeds-Grenville (Mrs. Cossitt):

That the motion be amended by deleting all the words after the word "That" and substituting the following therefor:

"Bill C-132, an Act to amend the Family Allowances Act, 1973, be not now read a second time but that it be read a second time this day six months hence".

This is a delay of six months, Mr. Speaker. That is all we are asking for and that is all the backbenchers have to do to keep faith with the families of Canada, the pensioners, and those that need some help from this Parliament.

[Translation]

Mr. Herb Breau (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to be taking part in the debate this afternoon. I feel that Bill C-132 should be seen as part of the anti-inflation program announced by the Government in June. The program includes restricting salary increases of public servants to 6 per cent in 1983 and 5 per cent in 1984 and capping indexation of payments such as Family Allowances and Old Age Security Pensions to 6 and 5 per cent. Mr. Speaker, I think it is strange that a party like the Progressive Conservative Party should react the way it does. It is understandable that the New Democratic Party should speak with conviction about such matters, because before and after and during the month of June, according to them there was nothing the Government could do to try and fight inflation. As you know, Mr. Speaker, inflationary trends in modern society are partly due to psychological factors. That is why it is very important that the central Government should take action and implement measures that will have a psychological impact. Much of the 6 and 5 program is, in fact, psychological, because people are saying that the Federal Government is taking the initiative in an area over which it has direct control by restricting salary increases of its employees to 6 and 5 per cent. Salaries of Members of the House of Commons, Senators, and staff of the House and the Senate were limited right away to increases of 6 per cent this year and 5 per cent next year. Although one of the Opposition parties is speaking with the courage of its convictions, because according to them, the Government should not have acted the way it did, the Official Opposition, the Progressive Conservative Party, is being inconsistent, because according to them, it is absolutely necessary to restrict public spending, starting with federal expenditures and including all social payments, because a large part of the federal Budget, I think it is about 20 per cent, goes to direct payments to individuals. However, when it comes to concrete measures, the Progressive Conservatives object, and tell all kinds of horror stories about this particular Bill, as they did about the Bill we have been debating for almost a week because the Government intends to restrict increases in the basic pension but not the Supplement to 6 and 5 per cent, and the same applies here to Family Allowances. Well, Mr. Speaker, I would like to say from the start that most of the stories told by the Official Opposition with respect to this Bill have no basis in fact, because what the Government is doing with Bill C-132 is to restrict increases in Family Allowances, not by cutting allowances but by restricting the increase to 6 per cent as of January 1983 and 5 per cent as of January 1984, instead of normal indexation which would probably have been a bit higher this year, since we are just coming out of an inflationary period when the inflation rate, calculated on an annual basis, was over 12 per cent.

Mr. Speaker, Hon. Members will have to admit that if they read the Bill and read it intelligently, they will see that families receiving the Child Tax Credit will receive a special increase of $50, to compensate for the capping of indexation, since these families are particularly dependent on the tax credit. In other words, Mr. Speaker, those who can afford to cut their spending will make sacrifices in these difficult times, for, as I said earlier, it is important to take some action with a psychological impact to convince Canadians that through self-restraint, following the lead of the federal Government, we could together check and fight the inflationary pressures that we have experienced for over a year now, inflationary pressures which are both an economic and a social threat to our society, because inflation causes divisions among our economic groups and social classes and is an evil that we must eradicate. So is this unfair? Since the child tax credit only applies to families with a taxable income of $26,000 or less, only families with taxable incomes over that amount will be affected by this measure.

I said earlier that it was the taxable income, the net family income, or again the combined family income. Only those families will be adversely affected by the Bill, because the others which are entitled to the Child Tax Credit will receive a special $50 allowance to offset the limit on indexation. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I think this is a fair, liberal and equitable measure, even though it does provide for certain restrictions applicable at this time to the Federal Government policies and programs. I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, that it is dishonest and almost hypocritical coming from a party which has maintained a traditional position through the years to say, as they did again this year in the budget debate, that a limit must absolutely be set on the expenditures of the Federal Government because the country is going bankrupt. No sooner has the Government taken the lead to do just that, through a fair measure such as Bill C-132, they object strongly and say that it is an unfair measure which appeals to the emotions of people.

Mr. Speaker, I think Canadians are intelligent enough to grasp the dishonesty and the lack of conviction implied in such a stand and to realize also that it is truly the kind of red herring that is deliberately meant to confuse and deceive them. Since I am referring to Family Allowances, Mr. Speaker, I have read with interest the speech made by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mrs. Bégin) and I am pleased to see that in her speech she raised the general issue of Family Allowances as well as the more comprehensive question of family assistance, she also mentioned the importance of the system, which has sometimes a negative aspect as far as social justice and personal deductions for dependents are concerned. The universality of Family Allowances is quite often discussed.

We speak about the necessity to protect poor families and use every possible Government resource to do that, but we always forget that one of the injustices in the system, if you go beyond Family Allowances, is the deductions for dependants under the Income Tax Act. That deduction helps only people who are sufficiently well off to pay income tax. That is one of the reasons the child tax credit was introduced a few years ago, and by a Liberal Government, not by a Conservative Government, or an NDP Government either because they have never seen the light of power. That is why it was introduced. Rich families received it automatically. It is silent, not seen anywhere except as a so-called tax expenditure through a deduction from taxable income. Poor families do not receive that because they do not pay as much income tax; some of them do not pay any at all.

So, Mr. Speaker, when we talk, about Family Allowances and universality, I would ask all Members here, as well as the public and the Government, before they search for savings—as necessary as they are in this very difficult time—instead of touching the universality of the Family Allowances program—I should say it is not only a welfare program in the sense of helping people, Mr. Speaker. I have heard the Minister say it is a social contract. I would go even further; it is a political contract because for a lot of mothers it may be the only piece of paper, the only contact that a woman has with the Government of Canada. Every month she receives an envelope bearing a Canadian flag, with a cheque which bears a Canadian flag and which mentions the Government of Canada. Before you touch that, one has to consider the nature of the social and political contract of the Family Allowances program.

I would rather look to the income tax system to save money, because those deductions help rich families more than poor families. If you eliminate the deductions you are increasing the federal tax base and you are not only saving money for the federal Treasury, but you are saving money for all the Provinces, with the exception of Quebec, who use the federal tax base to collect their own provincial income tax. The income tax of those nine Provinces is a percentage of the basic federal tax. So the federal Government will save money, but the Provinces will probably save, generally speaking, about 30 per cent to 35 per cent. That means an automatic saving to the provincial treasuries through a tax measure of the federal Parliament.

One has to recognize the federal-provincial dimension and I suppose it would not be unfair to suggest that, if we look at that, it be within the ambit of an agreement of some kind with the Provinces whereby the money they would save would go to help poor families, either by way of housing, through direct grants or in some other way. Perhaps there should be a provincial Child Tax Credit or some kind of payment to poor families, because I would not want the Parliament of Canada to—

Mr. Benjamin: Shift the responsibility.

Mr. Breau: No, the Hon. Member should listen to me carefully. If we pass a measure here which has the effect of saving the federal Government money, so it can give more to the poor, it will also have the effect of saving the Provinces an additional 30 per cent or 35 per cent, because they use the federal tax base to calculate their own income tax. I think we should do that within the ambit of an agreement whereby the money the Provinces save would go to poor families in some way, as the federal savings would. If that is not part of the agreement, I am not sure that I would want to pass a measure here without any political strings attached. I am not scandalized by attaching political strings as long as they are fair, Liberal, just like the one I am suggesting now.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Breau: So I would ask Members of Parliament to think about that.

May I call it one o'clock, Mr. Speaker, before I conclude?

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. It being one o'clock, I do now leave the Chair until two o'clock this afternoon.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

[English]

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I am quite happy to have this opportunity to speak in the debate on Bill C-132, an Act to amend the Family Allowance Act, 1973.

Over the last few days we have heard a great deal of rhetoric and debate from the Government side about how wonderful Bill C-132 is. Members opposite have stood in their places and said how proud they are to speak in favour of Bill C-132, a Bill which cuts the amount of money which goes to mothers or, more precisely, goes to Canadian children.

I do not want to participate in that kind of debate. I want to present, as objectively and as clearly as possible, what the Bill attempts to do. If Hon. Members opposite feel that my allegations are incorrect, then, when they speak later, I hope they will identify where my arguments have some flaw or where they may be off the mark.

I think it can legitimately be said that over the next few years Bill C-132 will take money out of the pockets of mothers to spend on their children. I think every Member of the House would agree that the children of Canada are unquestionably our greatest resource; human resources in this country are one of the critical sectors where Canada has an advantage. By definition, therefore, our young people and children hold the key to the future. Anything we can do in the months and years ahead to ensure that these young people, these children of Canada, receive support, encouragement and nurturing ought, as much as possible, to be the least we attempt to do as Members of Parliament.

What is the aim of Bill C-132? First of all, we must recognize that we are talking about $26.91 per month, per child. That means that young people in Canada under the age of 18 can expect the Government of Canada to issue a cheque to their mothers on their behalf in the amount of $26.91.

To put that in perspective, Mr. Speaker, it must be recognized that that sum of money may buy a pair of blue jeans—on sale. That is the kind of money we are discussing, the equivalent of the price of a pair of blue jeans on sale.

The Bill does two things. First, it points to the children of Canada and says: "You are one of the causes of inflation. By receiving $26.91, you are fueling inflation in this country and that must be stopped. We must cap that. We must not allow you young people or your mothers in this country to continue fueling inflation."

That is aboslute balderdash, Mr. Speaker. The young people and mothers of Canada are not the culprits.

Mrs. Mitchell: They certainly are the victims of this Bill.

Mr. Riis: The Government has not brought forward legislation to correct the role that the banks play in fueling inflation in this country. The fact that they fell over themselves in the last few years pushing money on Canadian entrepreneurs, on the corporate sector and encouraging people to borrow beyond their limits has not been discussed. That is what Canadians were talked into doing. I suspect there is not a Member who does not know a number of people who were pushed into borrowing by the lavish advertisements issued by the banks, telling us that we had money that we did not know we had. "Borrow now for a trip to Jamaica—borrow now to buy Canada Savings Bonds—borrow now to buy stocks—borrow now to expand your business operations—borrow to the hilt."

• (1410)

This means that the debt-equity ratio in this country for large firms, huge corporations, small partnerships and proprietorships is usually out of whack. We do not hear anything about the banks. We hear that the children of Canada are fueling inflation. Goodness, what kind of people would present that kind of argument and stand in their places saying: "We are proud today to hammer the daylights out of the children of Canada because they have fueled inflation in Canada"?

What about the land speculators? What about the housing speculators who flip real estate sales time and time again? Do they not fuel inflation? I suspect a lot of Canadians are guilty of fueling inflation in one way or another, but I can say that there is unquestionably one group that did not go out of its way to fuel inflation. This group is made up of children, ages two, four and 15 years of age.

If we are going to talk about Bill C-132 as not being an effort to stop inflation, it will put to rest a good deal of the arguments that we have heard from the Liberal benches. What other possible motive would we have to impose a capping of Family Allowance payments of 6 per cent this year and 5 per cent next year if it is not to reduce inflation?

We have heard some people suggest that we are trying to save money. We have heard it said that the Government must save money. Let us look closely at the facts and identify precisely what it is we are attempting to say. I will quote briefly what the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) herself said in this House a few days ago. She explained to the people of Canada, through the House of Commons, what amounts of money the Government would save. As reported in Hansard at page 21117, we find the Minister said:

> They represent $70 million over two years. This could be explained by the fact that there will be a reduction in Family Allowances of $320 million over the two-year period. However, there will be an additional cost to make up for the loss which the Child Tax Credit will cost the Treasury, amounting to $250 million.

What that means is that, after causing concern and hardship for something like 3.6 million families in Canada and 6.7 million children, we are going to save $35 million a year. Let us consider that for a moment. Let us put the savings from this Bill into some context. The Government is saving $35 million a year by reducing the money mothers get for their children. Each Senator in the Senate will cost the Government between $2 million and $3 million each over the next number of years. Government advertising will be twice the amount of money that will be saved. Government advertising amounts annually to $60 million plus.

Mr. Waddell: What do Coutts and Davey cost?

Mr. Riis: Canadian oil companies last year received something in excess of $1 billion in hand-outs. One F-18, our infamous jet fighter that we hear about continuously and is under a great deal of question, costs $35 million. In an effort to save money, all the Government is saving is the equivalent of one fighter aircraft while causing a lot of hardship for 6.7 million children in this country.

Let us recognize one other small aspect if the Government opposite is interested in saving money. Let me make a suggestion, which I make in all sincerity. Rather than take $35 million from Canada's mothers, money to provide food, shoes and the necessities of life for their children, let us reform the tax system of Canada so that hundreds and hundreds of Canadians who earn well in excess of $100,000 each year and pay no income tax pay their fair share. We are not suggesting that we gouge the rich people of Canada, or that we expect the upper income earners to pay more than their fair share; we are simply asking them to pay something. Right now hundreds and hundreds of Canadians earning over $100,000 a year pay not one single penny in tax. If we tax those few folks in our society, the Government would not have to rip the money out of the hands of Canada's children, presumably to save some money.

That is not the only reason we in the New Democratic Party find it very difficult to support this legislation. We find it impossible to support this legislation because of its unfair nature. The six and five program is unquestionably unfair. We have heard Members opposite stand in their places saying: "We are all in this together. All Canadians are capping their incomes to 6 per cent. All civil servants are capping their incomes to 6 per cent. Even Cabinet Ministers' incomes being capped." If you stop to think, Mr. Speaker, even capping a Minister's salary at 6 per cent will still mean a $5,400 increase. Can you imagine what the mothers of Canada would think and how they would react if they were told they were going to get a $5,000 increase as a result of this Government's program? Canadian mothers would be leaping with delight.

Let us look at a few other folks who I find a little more interesting. We have heard some of the corporate heads of Canadian companies say that they like the six and five program. They like the idea of imposing the six and five program on the mothers of Canada, on federal civil servants and people working for CN or Air Canada. We hear them say that they are overpaid anyway. Look at who is saying that.

Mr. Benjamin: It is the blue ribbon boys.

Mr. Riis: One of them is Mr. Bronfman. In 1981 he was Chairman of Seagram's. When he caps his income next year he will only get an increase of $60,000. What about the President of Seagram's Mr. Griffin? By capping his income next year, he will only get an increase of $48,000. What about Mr. Tebbs, Senior Vice-President of Hiram Walker? When his income is capped next year, he will only get a $46,000 increase. We can go down the list. Mr. Ian Sinclair is the Chairman of the Board of Canadian Pacific Enterprises. When his income is capped next year he will get a paltry $35,000 increase. Here is a man who is running across the country saying: "Folks, we have a great idea; enjoy the 6 per cent imposition because we are all in this together".

Whether you are a mother who depends on the Family Allowance cheque to make ends meet at the end of the month, or whether you are Mr. Bronfman making well in excess of $1 million a year, we hear it said: "We are all in this together". That may be. We may all be in this together, but there is certainly no fairness, no equity and no justice in the system as it is implemented. That is why we in the New Democratic Party have opposed this six and five concept since the beginning, and we certainly oppose this Bill.

What about our friends to the right? I remember distinctly that last August the Government brought in Bill C-124, which imposed the six and five program on every aspect of the federal Government system. Who voted in favour of that? The Liberal Party representatives here and the Progressive Conservative representatives in the House of Commons. The only Party who saw the unjust nature of the six and five program was the New Democratic Party and, to be fair, a handful of Tories. But today, the Progressive Conservatives rise in their places and condemn this program. They cannot work both sides of the street at the same time, Mr. Speaker. They have to make up their minds. Either they are for or against it.

I suspect that when Bill C-133 comes before the House, those same Members will rise to their feet to call it unjust and unfair, when they are the ones who voted for the six and five program.

One can elaborate at great length on the details of the Bill. Bill C-132 will result in less income being received by the young people of Canada. Mothers will receive a $50 increase in Child Tax Credit for each of their children for the entire year of 1983, which means an additional $34 over what they would normally receive for each child. They will receive $35 less for each child in 1984. In 1985 they will receive $38 less. In 1986 they will receive $41 less. This trend will just continue.

A more serious consequence concerns the effect this Bill will have on the future generations of mothers and children in this country. When these programs return to full indexing in two or three years, the base on which that full indexing will take place will have been eroded. The implication of this program is that the children and the old age pensioners of this country, for the rest of its history, will receive less income from the Family Allowance Program and the old age pension. The base on which the calculations of these payments is made has been eroded. This causes great concern to some of us in the House, particularly those in the NDP who are committed to the concept of universality.

We wonder whether this is just not the foot in the door to abandoning that principle. I distinctly recall that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde), who is a former Minister of National Health and Welfare, stated on November 3 that the Government of Canada may end the universality of Family Allowances. Despite what the present Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) says, the Minister of Finance unquestionably made these remarks. He will be bringing in a new budget in the months ahead and the Government will be making a Throne speech. Knowing the Minister of Finance's position in Cabinet, I suspect that his remarks should serve as notice to Canadians that the Government is seriously considering abandoning this very basic principle.

I want to conclude my remarks today by suggesting that it will be very interesting to see if there are Members opposite who have the courage and the compassion for young children in Canada who will stay out of the House or perhaps even vote against the Bill when we do so later today. If those Members opposite stand in their place to vote against the Bill, they will be telling the people of Canada that the Government is taking a step today which will result in less money being sent to the mothers and children of Canada. If those Members who vote in favour want that on their conscience, so be it. I will guarantee that we in the NDP will be voting to delay this Bill for six months, as the proposed amendment suggests.

We will be opposing this Bill because we will never vote for a measure that takes money out of the hands of children. Children are the human resource of this country and we are very proud of them. We will vote against any measure which begins to erode this right.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I must say that I am surprised that we have not had from some of the Government backbenchers an explanation of why they are prepared to support this Bill. These measures represent a change in the philosophy of this Government about which we have known of for a long time. These Bills which propose to cap Old Age Security benefits, retired public servant pensions and Family Allowance payments to 6 and 5 per cent are just another example to demonstrate that when times get tough the first thing which the Liberals consider expendable is their supposed commitment to social programs.

We have seen decreasing support for medicare, hospital insurance and other basic safety net programs which were developed in this country over the last 30 years. It is interesting to see our friends in the Conservative benches expressing their opposition to this proposal as well as to the proposals concerning old age pensions. The fact is that when they voted for the 6 per cent and 5 per cent limits on increases to public service wages, they were voting for these measures as well. They are attempting to be on both sides of the fence when they oppose these Bills.

We are witnessing the Government taking deliberate steps during these difficult economic times to scale down the social programs which have been built up over so many years in this country. The Government has introduced measures to cap the indexing of Family Allowances and pensions even though the six and five limits to these increases over the next two years will mean a reduction in the standard of living of old age pensioners and families who receive Family Allowance.

There is no question that the increase in next year's cost of living will be much closer to 9 per cent than the 6 per cent figure which was projected by the Government last June. Furthermore, it will not even be close to the 5 per cent cap which has been proposed by the Government for the following year. At the same time as these cutbacks are being implemented, the reduced revenues of the federal and provincial Governments have resulted in their implementing methods to cut back on coverage in such areas as medical and hospital insurance which Canadians have come to expect. The federal Government is forcing the Provinces to cut back the support in certain areas which they give to hospital and medical insurance programs as a result of the reduction in its contributions to the Provinces for those programs.

Therefore, we have seen a decrease in the number of hospital beds in use in almost every city in Canada. We are seeing more doctors opting out of medical insurance plans because the Provinces will not agree to give the doctors the kind of increases they feel they need. We will see a gradual reduction in the standard of service. Indeed, some people who pioneered the health insurance scheme, such as the Hon. Mr. Douglas, the former Premier of Saskatchewan under whose leadership hospital and medical insurance was implemented for the first time in any Province, and Justice Hall, are predicting that if this trend continues we will have a two-track medical system in a few years. People who have the wherewithal to pay the extras which doctors and hospitals will demand will get first-class coverage, while people who cannot afford that will get second-class coverage.

This proposal to cap Family Allowances strikes a blow at the welfare of almost all the families with children in this country. Given the cost of living at the present time and the cost of housing, the very high percentage of a family's income which is needed to pay the kind of mortgage payments required for anything more than the modest home, it is unusual when both a husband and wife are not working these days. That means extra expenses in the way of child care and other family expenses. Very few families do not need the kind of assistance which they have been getting through Family Allowance. We are not alone in that kind of assessment. Yesterday an editorial in The Globe and Mail was entitled "The Society's Charges". Let me put a couple of sentences from that editorial on the record. The editorial begins:

> The effects of a weakened economy are being written ominously into the case books of Children's Aid Society workers in Ontario. More and more parents are finding that the squeeze on their budgets is so tight that they cannot afford to keep their children at home. They are turning to the CAS for help in numbers described as "alarming".
> "Poverty is back on our doorsteps and some parents just don't have the wherewithal to care for their children", said George Caldwell, executive director of the Ontario Association of Children's Aid Societies.

The editorial goes on to say that record numbers of teenagers are moving away from home and applying for welfare, partly because their parents say they do not have the money to care for them.

Given that that is the situation and the reality, this is the time when the Government proposes to cut back on the Family Allowances received by Canadian families. The United Church, in a position paper released by its Working Unit on Social Issues and Justice, in reference to the principle of indexation, has stated:

> As an attempt to offset rapidly-rising inflation in the 1970's, indexation was introduced in the income tax system, and also applied to most of the assistance programs including CPP, OAS, GIS, Spouses Allowance, Family Allowance and the Child Tax Credit. Without this the effect on low-income persons would indeed have been severe.

The United Church group that made that statement knew what it was talking about because the capping of the increases on Family Allowances and other social programs to increases of just 6 and 5 per cent when the cost of living is rising substantially more than six and five, will have a very serious effect on all those families with children.

What is the purpose of this Bill? Its purpose is to cap the increases in the Family Allowance at 6 per cent for 1983 and 5 per cent for 1984, rather than to permit the Allowance to match the increase in the consumer price index. What will be the effect on families which now receive the Allowance? Family Allowance payments now are $26.91 a month per child. This guarantees Canadian mothers some cash in hand to deal with the needs involved in raising children. It has given many mothers who do not work the only income, the only money, which they do not obtain from their husbands or for the receipt of which they are not dependent on someone else's decision-making or goodwill. This enables them to deal with some of the needs of their children, to buy clothing and food and to pay some school expenses. This year the Bill will reduce Family Allowances by $16 in 1983, from $358 for the year to $342 for the year, and will reduce it by $35 in 1984, from $394 to $359.

The Government has argued that those most in need will be sheltered from this real decrease in Family Allowance payments by a one-year increase in the Child Tax Credit of $50. On the face of it, families with children will not lose any money. That is true in an absolute sense, but our national social security system will lose an immeasurable amount because the base of future Family Allowance increases will be lower and, therefore, the reduction will be a permanent one. That, of course, assumes that at the end of two years the Government will go back to full indexation.

I want to suggest to Hon. Members that we have no guarantee that that will happen. After all, if the Government can reduce the rate of indexation to six and five for two years, it can do the same for the years afterwards. Or, even more disastrous, it could eliminate indexation altogether. After all, if the Government has done it once, why will it not do it again? We have no assurances that the economic situation will be any better in 1985 than it is in 1982. It may, indeed, be worse, and the Government, whether it be Liberal or Conservative or any other, could decide that the needs of the country are so great that capping must be continued or that indexation must be eliminated altogether.

Besides that, the amount lost is paid back on a selective basis. What do I mean by that? Presently, 3.6 million Canadian mothers receive Family Allowances, of which 2.5 million also receive the Child Tax Credit. This country has accepted the belief that Family Allowance is a universal right. At least, we have up until now. With the Child Tax Credit, we have divided those needing help into two camps, those with some need and those with more need. With this Bill, we will move closer still to making the two-class system permanent. I suggest that it is a ghetto-type Family Allowance, similar to what I predict we will likely see in relation to hospital and medical care in the next few years.

Some may say that a ghetto-type Family Allowance will do more for the really poor. The problem is different. As soon as one separates the real poor from the rest of the people, one stops doing very much. As soon as one splits the people of Canada into two groups, those who do, in fact, receive Family Allowance, or part of it, and those who do not, those who do not receive it will lose interest in the Program. Those who do not receive the benefits will feel that they have no reason to support the Program, and the almost unanimous support which we have had for this kind of Program will be reduced, if not eliminated.

Therefore, we are opposed to the kind of selectivity which is implicit in the Bill and in the whole Child Tax Credit idea. If some in the upper income brackets do not need the benefit of the assistance they receive from this Program, it would be a very simple matter to use the income tax system as it has supposedly been used but, in fact, has never been used. The income tax system could simply be used to tax back 100 per cent of the benefits which it is believed that people do not need. This would be the most effective, stigma-free way of accomplishing the objective of seeing that those who supposedly do not need the benefits of this kind of Program do not receive them.

We believe it is illogical and unjust to attack a basic social program such as the Family Allowance Program, which has brought such benefits to the Canadian people, while at the same time we are spending millions of dollars on propaganda kits such as the one that was issued a few days ago extolling the virtues and the benefits which will accrue to the Canadian people as a result of the six and five program. The Government is essentially attacking those who cannot defend themselves.

If I can go back to that study done by the United Church of Canada, they say in this regard:

> Poor people are powerless to bargain for more income, they have no access to capital for investment or job creation, they have no control over day-to-day living costs which are imposed upon them, and they have less opportunity to participate in the educational and social structures that might enable them to make it in our highly competitive system.

The poor who receive Family Allowances will never make up the losses in these payments which this Bill will inflict on them because it cuts away at the shelter that those with low incomes and fixed incomes need to protect them from inflation and to meet the day-to-day price increases which inflation represents.

My colleague, the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis), talked about the food depots which are being established in Kamloops. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-St. James (Mr. Keeper), and I know about the tremendous increase which there has been in the last year in the services of institutions such as the Salvation Army, and in the members of the old, middle-aged and young people who are coming there every day to get food.

I am old enough to have lived through the period of the great depression of the 1930s—

An Hon. Member: You were very young.

Mr. Orlikow: I was very young at that time, that is true—and I remember the soup kitchens and the relief kitchens to which tens of thousands of unemployed had to go just to keep alive. From 1940 on, from the period when World War 11 started and we saw that full employment was not only possible but had been achieved, I, like thousands of other Canadians, came to the conclusion that we would never see those kinds of situations again. They are now back for us, and not only in Kamloops or Winnipeg; Vancouver, wealthy Calgary, Regina, Toronto, every city and, I suppose, every small town in Canada is experiencing the same situation. That is a disgrace. It is a disgrace that that kind of situation would be permitted to exist in a country as wealthy as Canada, a country with the resources that we have, a country with the well-trained, highly-educated young people that we have. Yet that is what is happening in Canada, and it will get worse because the Government has given up any principle or intention it ever had to see that the people of this country live under decent conditions.

The Government brings forward this Bill, which we say is the beginning of an attack on the whole system of social programs which has served Canada so well since 1945, in order to save $115 million in 1983. This is based on the belief that this Government is determined to promote the idea that it is not a "big spender" in terms of social programs. This country is not one of the big spenders on social programs as compared to other countries. David Ross, in his book "The Working Poor" published in 1981, compared what Canada is doing in the way of social programs to other countries, and he makes the following statement:

> Using 1974 data, Canada ranked thirteenth of seventeen OECD countries when expenditures on income maintenance were expressed as a percentage of Gross National Product.

Mr. Speaker, we are not and have never been among the big spenders. We have never been in the same class as countries such as West Germany, Holland, Belgium, Norway or Sweden. Yet this Government which, for reasons which I do not want to discuss today, implemented so many of the programs we have—prodded by other Parties, by organizations such as the Canadian Labour Congress, and urged on by organizations such as the Canadian Council for Social Development—is now moving as quickly as it can to mobilize support, not for holding the line, not for improving the programs which we have, but for cutting back.

Once you start this process of cutting back, the Government and this Minister should know how many important, wealthy, influential individuals, how many big organizations such as the Canadian Manufacturers' Association and the Canadian Chamber of Commerce, will be happy to join with her in helping to persuade the Canadian public that we need to cut back, that we cannot afford these things.

We do not accept this idea that we cannot afford these things. We believe that this country not only has to maintain the services which we have established over these many years, but that we have to improve the services, that we have to catch up to other countries which have done more for their people than we have.

The Family Allowances Program is the only Program we have that acknowledges the cost of parenting and recognizes the importance of children to Canadian society. It has been estimated that it takes $500,000 or more to raise a child, counting out-of-pocket expenses, the extra hours of labour by the parents and the income that the mother could have earned if she had not interrupted her working career. In the end this huge investment benefits society in general rather than the individual parent.

In comparison to this huge expense the Family Allowance is a very small amount, and to reduce this amount even by a little bit is both illogical and unjust. A couple living in one of Canada's largest cities is poor if they have an income of under $12,000. If they have a child, they require an additional $4,000 income. Family Allowance supplies much less than $400 per year, less than 10 per cent of this requirement. Yet a cut in this amount is precisely what this Minister is proposing in this legislation.

We are going to oppose this Bill, as we are going to oppose the other Bills which call for cutbacks and reductions. We are going to oppose them as we always have because we believe that the people of Canada are entitled to the kind of social programs which they have. We believe they need much more than they are getting. This is not the place, nor do I want to take the time of the House, to say to the Minister and the Government that there are dozens if not hundreds of ways in which, if the Government really believes that it needs to save the kind of money that it will save with this program, it could save it with much less harm to ordinary Canadians.

Let me just mention a couple of ways. Let me remind the Minister that her colleague, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde), in a budget proposal last year reduced the marginal rate of income tax to be paid by those in the highest income brackets from 59 per cent to 50 per cent. That cost the people of Canada several hundred million dollars. Let me remind the Minister of National Health and Welfare that we have had a whole series of these kinds of hand-outs to people in the upper income brackets. If the Government feels it necessary to save money, there are many other ways it could do that. For all these reasons, we propose to vote against the Bill.

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, what we are debating today is very similar to what we have debated a great deal since October, 1980. Now we are removing the cash flow of families. In 1980 we removed the cash flow from the oil industry. Again, this is a Liberal grab. The Minister is laughing. I do not think she realizes the suffering that many of the unemployed are undergoing today. I am talking about the small people.

Miss Bégin: Speak to the Bill.

Mr. Fennell: I am speaking to the Bill. I am talking about those who need the increase next year because they are running out of unemployment insurance.

Miss Bégin: They are getting it. Read the Bill.

Mr. Fennell: Make your own speech in your own time. This is cruelty in a time of spiralling inflation. The Government is doing nothing to curb its own expenditures. I have been sitting on the Miscellaneous Estimates Committee and expenditures are going up. The Government is spending money everywhere it wants. There is no control. Now it is going to hurt the average guy who needs the money to put food on the table.

This is a serious time for our economy. We are dealing with unemployed people. However, not only are they unemployed, but at this time we have surplus labour. I do not know whether they can be employed. This Government has not identified the need to supply jobs for them. This is a serious subject and this is a serious Bill that will take money away from these people at this time.

There are many areas of Government spending that could be cut, but when the Government begins to cut cash flow to the citizens of this country, it is perpetrating a disgrace on this House. There is no way we could support this Bill at a time when people are starving, losing their jobs and not being re-employed.

The Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) referred to the creation of 60,000 jobs. Our Leader referred to the fact that each unemployed worker will get 20 minutes of work. That is not creating jobs for the people who need them; it is an inequity to Canadians. It is unfair to people right across this country, particularly those in areas with heavy unemployment such as Sudbury, where today there is 40 per cent unemployment. Those people do not know when they will go back to work. How can the Government take money away from them? It is cruelty. This is an absolutely cruel Bill being foisted on the citizens of this country.

In addition to looking at the unemployed, we have to look at the exhaustees. We do not know how many there will be before the next year is out. The automobile industry will not replace that many people; it is installing robots in order to remain competitive. We have the unemployment and surplus labour and this situation is not being dealt with. It is what we should be dealing with today instead of taking money out of the pockets of those who will not have any sustenance.

This is a very brief, short and cruel Bill. I regret that it has come before the House. Again it is the attitudinal situation of a grabbing Government, taking money away from people and grabbing all it can get. The Government believes it can spend the money better. However, people with children need it far more than the Government. The Government does not think of the human suffering that will occur because of this Bill.

Mr. Nielsen: They need the money for advertising.

Mr. Fennell: A very good point. Our House Leader says they need it for advertising. They love to sell their great programs across the country with their Maple Leaf and flying swans. They have to use swans because they have worn out the geese. What is happening in Canada is pathetic.

Mr. Evans: Come on!

Mr. Fennell: I see my usual heckler is here today. He always has something to say when I try to get the point across that he is being unkind to the people of this country. The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans) has many good points, but he will have a hard time with families the next time there is an election. I know because I happen to live in his riding when I am in Ottawa. The families who will suffer because of the Bill he is approving will have something to say to him when he knocks on their doors. They will remind him that they have not forgotten what he did to them. That Hon. Member hopes the election is far enough away that they will forget all about this. He hopes that by then the Government will come out with a new package of goodies which will double the Family Allowance just before the next election. That is the way to play the game and get elected. They will do that even though we have a $25 billion deficit this year.

In spite of that debt, there are many other places the Government could cut back. I plead with the Members on the other side to give some consideration to those who need help now and to vote against the Government.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, by popular demand from Members on the other side of the House, I will sum up the position of the New Democratic Party on this Bill and others like it.

Mr. Evans: That should take all day.

Mr. Benjamin: If I could take all day, I would. Since 1924 people in this kind of Party have been fighting in Parliament for universal programs, beginning with J. S. Woodsworth. When the Government of any political stripe impinges on, detracts from or attempts to reduce or destroy the universality and the benefits of universal programs, this Party will always oppose them.

We are in the midst of the worst social and economic crisis since the dirty thirties. This is a depression, not a recession, but a depression of a different kind. It is interesting to read the speeches of Prime Ministers and Ministers of Finance between 1929 and 1939. They show the same state of mind and they are the same kinds of speeches that were being made between 1979 and 1982. I quote one of them:

> The policies and measures I have outlined are based upon the firm belief . . . that this country is soon to enter upon a new era of prosperity—

That was Lyman P. Duff, the Minister of Finance, speaking on March 12, 1931, as reported at page 3 of Hansard. I again quote:

> —I told the electorate that there was one thing of which they could be perfectly certain, and that one thing was that if our Party were elected to power, at the very first opportunity we would enact legislation that would deal not only with unemployment but also with the question of affording to Canadians an equal opportunity with their competitors—

That was R. B. Bennett on March 17, 1931, as reported at page 57 of Hansard. The same right hon. gentleman said on June 29, 1931 as reported at page 3137 of Hansard:

• (1500)

> The primary duty with respect to unemployment does not rest with the federal Government—

In Hansard of June 30, 1931, at page 3183, Mr. Bennett said:

> For as has been very often pointed out and is generally recognized, the duty rests primarily with the municipalities and with the province—

An Hon. Member: We heard that last week from the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde).

Mr. Benjamin: We heard that last week, and we also heard it today from the Minister.

Let me move to another quote. Mackenzie King, at page 1041 of Hansard on February 19, 1937, said this:

> During that period much was expended for social services, to the neglect of what should have been expended for the purpose of keeping the defences of our country up to the standard to which they should have been kept.

And then Mr. Bennett, at page 1393 of Hansard on March 2, 1937, said this:

> It came to me as somewhat of a surprise that this country had the measure of prosperity that it did have in 1935.

Also at the same page and on the same date Mr. Bennett said:

> If we are to make this country attractive to new capital; if we are to induce people to invest their money in this country, we shall have to have regard to the fact that taxation is a very important item in the minds of those who are sending their capital to new countries.

Those kinds of speeches have been made in the House just in these past three years, Mr. Speaker. Mr. Bennett went on to say, on March 1, 1937, "that this House regrets that the government has failed to take effective measures to deal with the problem of unemployment". On March 24, 1937, at page 2171 of Hansard, the same gentleman said:

> Here we have a complete reversal of policy; here we have blank cheques issued for every form of activity that was contemplated by the relief act to the extent of twelve millions of dollars—

I mention these quotes, and there are many more, to illustrate the kinds of speeches which have been coming from the old line Parties on the matter of universal programs, matters of unemployment and taxation, and how they attack universal programs like the Family Allowances Program, attack it by chiselling on the benefits of a universal program.

I would like to quote the following sentence from the CCF Winnipeg Declaration of 1956, "A society motivated only by a desire for profit is basically immoral." A nation which will put up $8 billion for fighter planes, which my hon. colleague from Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) referred to, at $35 million each, which are of no use to us, instead of investing that kind of money in food production, fishermen, farmers or our children, surely has its priorities reversed. A nation which permits its financial system to invest billions of dollars in new, towering bank headquarters, corporate mergers and fancy office buildings, while people are losing their homes, their farms, their small businesses, and having their Family Allowances reduced, surely that nation is suffering from a conscience which has gone askew.

A nation which permits billions of dollars of investment capital to cross our borders to speculate on foreign currencies and commodities to make quick profits while those billions of dollars are desperately needed here for mortgage rates geared to income for homes, senior citizens' housing, transportation, research and development, and children, cannot be forgiven. A nation which will chisel on the increases for Old Age Assistance, Family Allowances and the poor, is surely failing the test of any civilized society, namely, how well it treats its old, its young and its disadvantaged. We need a national recovery plan that challenges Canadians, that does not pick upon those who cannot defend themselves.

There have been calls from the Government side about more responsibility on the part of the Provinces. Let me illustrate with an example of another old Party government, the Conservatives in Saskatchewan who, by chiselling the public, cancelled the next two planned 25-cents' per hour increases in the minimum wage. When it comes to being cheapskates, they make the Liberals look like amateurs.

Family Allowances Act, 1973

I would like to quote from a survey by the National Citizens' Coalition in 1976, because I have been listening to the Official Opposition's speeches, led off by the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald). All these candidates for the Conservative Party leadership were surveyed in 1976 by the National Citizens' Coalition. The survey reads: "Question: In the case of universal welfare, should any of the following plans be altered to provide for the needy only, unemployment insurance, medicare, Canada Pension Plan and baby bonuses?" The Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark), the Leader of the Opposition, said it should apply to the needy only in the case of unemployment insurance and, would you believe it, baby bonuses. The Hon. Member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser) said it should apply only to the needy, UIC and baby bonuses.

A former Member, one James Gillies, said it should apply to UIC and baby bonuses.

The former Liberal Member cum Tory, now cum Liberal, one Paul Hellyer, said it should apply to the Canada Pension Plan. He was a blue Tory. The first three were supposed to be red Tories. He is a blue Tory and he said it might be simpler to tax off the excess on baby bonuses rather than introduce another means test.

Then we have the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands. She said there was only one program which should be provided for the needy only, and I listened to her speech carefully about universality. Would you believe, Mr. Speaker, she said the program was baby bonuses.

Then there is the former Tory cum Liberal cum Chairman of the CNR, Jack Horner. He said, UIC and baby bonuses.

Then there was another gentleman who came out of the woodwork or from under a rock by the name of R. C. Quittenton. He said all four should be restricted to the needy only.

Another blue Tory, the Hon. Member for York-Peel, who, some have said makes Genghis Khan look like a raving left-winger, was the one who had the real radical left-of-centre proposal. He said, "Universality is preferable to a means test. Means tests are demeaning." That was the Hon. Member for York-Peel, can you believe it? He said, "Income tax tends to equalize all programs."

Out of those eight names of the leadership candidates for the Tory Party, the Hon. Member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens) was the most progressive, and he can quite justifiably get up and vote against this Bill. And if Mr. Hellyer were here, he could justifiably vote against this Bill. But if the Hon. Members for Yellowhead, Vancouver South, Kingston and the Islands have had a change of heart, have changed their minds, then I wish they would get up and say so. Everyone has a right to change their mind, but, as my colleague said earlier today, this business of continually trying to work both sides of the street has to be shown up for what it is, the worst kind of hypocrisy.

Some Grits are saying, hear, hear. These are the ones who like to brag about how they brought in the law for these universal programs. There were several of them. They had to be politically blackmailed by the CCF and the NDP and J. S. Woodsworth, to get them in. In fact, in the famous elections of 1945 and 1949, when Mackenzie King and the Liberal Party campaigned on the CCF platform, we found it very frustrating, but we are glad they did those things. But in their efforts to get back up in the polls, Mr. Speaker, these so-called Liberals, these middle-of-the-roaders, these progressives who say they have inaugurated these untouchable universal programs, are implementing the Conservative programs. Who is it that is agreeing with the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands, the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead and the Hon. Member for Vancouver South? It is the Liberal Party and the Liberal Government, Mr. Speaker. Universality of social welfare programs, Mr. Speaker, has always been a foundation of our party. Improvements in these programs has to be a continuing objective of any government, whatever its political stripe, in this Parliament.

I think there is general agreement amongst all political Parties that to equalize, paying the cost for benefits of those universal programs, we are years behind in having a fair income tax system. I will not repeat the remarks of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap, but surely there is something wrong with an income tax system which allows tens of thousands of Canadians to avoid and evade paying their fair share of the cost of running this nation and its universal programs from which they also obtain benefits. Yet the old line so-called free enterprise governments insist on reducing expenditures at the expense of the aged and retired, including retired civil servants.

Later we will be dealing with a Bill concerning retired federal civil servants and their pensions, and I was very interested to hear at a meeting a week or so ago the replies of Members of Parliament from the Tory and Liberal Parties on that one. It is so obvious, Mr. Speaker, that our income tax system needs a thorough overhauling. We need to blow the dust off the Carter Royal Commission report of 1966. Carter started to go public in support of his report, but the poor man died of cancer. However, there again is the most definitive job which has ever been done on our tax system. We collect taxes from Canadians based on the income they earn, no matter how they earn it, in order to pay for universal programs so that our aged, sick, disadvantaged and children are treated with some amount of civility.

Surely, Mr. Speaker, people are more important than profits. Decency has a priority over dollars. If that principle is incorporated in our universal programs and our income tax system, we can then be really proud; we can take our place amongst the nations of the world as a leader. We need not use these small-minded, old fashioned and out of date techniques which the Tories and the Liberals have been bringing out over the last 45 years. They have learned nothing from history and they are in fact repeating it.

I hope some Hon. Members in this House will join with us in supporting the amendment. If it does not carry, then let them join us in opposing the Bill. All it would take is for the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Lamontagne) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) to cancel two of the 138 fighter planes they have ordered, and they will save the money that they are attempting to save with this Bill. That would really make no difference in Canada's capacity or capability in the realm of defence or of our NATO commitments. It would not harm that in the least. The money is there, Mr. Speaker, but it is being taken for other purpose at the expense of mothers and children. Surely no Parliament with any kind of a conscience or some civilized priorities would stand for this kind of legislation, or would support it, and I urge this House to support the amendment and oppose the Bill.

Mr. Bill McKnight (Kindersley-Lloydminster): Mr. Speaker, my purpose in taking part in this debate is to support the motion made by the Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes). The intent of the motion is to allow the Government to examine the economy of this country for a six-month period to determine if this Bill has to be implemented. If those Members opposite have such a great belief that they are doing the right things, that their programs are going to turn this country around and it is going to blossom and grow and all the good things that the Liberal Party can do will be seen by the people of Canada in a very short while, would this Bill be necessary? We are told it is necessary because Government must restrain its spending. The motion put forward by the Hon. Member for Calgary West would allow all these great programs the Liberal Government is proposing to take effect. Then perhaps we would not have to deprive people of the Family Allowance. We would not have to deprive the single income families who make up about 60 per cent of the people who receive benefits from assistance programs.

All we are asking, Mr. Speaker, is that Hon. Members on the Government side show some belief in their own Government rhetoric. We would like them to say: we know our policies are going to work, therefore, we will support that motion and take the six months, because it may not be necessary to humiliate the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin). It may not be necessary to make it appear as though she is not in charge of her own Department. It may not be necessary to make it appear that she is deferring the matter to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) who says that we do not have enough money. Think of it, please. Is what you are saying that nothing is going to change in six months? Is that what you are saying?

All we hear is rhetoric. Are the people who are unable to defend themselves, the families and pensioners in Canada, the people who will have to try to bring this economy around? Surely that is not the Liberal way; there must be another way. Why do we not take six months to consider the Bill? We will be here and we can review it then. I do not understand the rush to become involved in something that every Member on the Government side believes will not be necessary. Our economy is going to grow so much in the next six months. We are going to start the engines of industry again.

I listened with interest to the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) I should like to point out to him and his Party that last night the Hon. Member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton) spoke on a subject on which he has spoken often in at least the last nine or ten years, and that is, the relationship of Family Allowances to the people under the age of 18 who do not have parents. He has fought that battle with the Minister of National Health and Welfare. She has said that she agrees with everything he put forward but that the Minister of Finance told her there was not enough money available to implement the program. Not once in those nine years has any Member of that supposedly compassionate, socially aware Party, stood in this House and supported the Hon. Member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain. Not once have they voted with him on this subject.

The people of the country do not believe that only one Party is socially aware and socially concerned. The difference between the Party of which I am a Member and the Liberal Party or the New Democratic Party, is that this Party is aware that there is a great necessity for generating revenue so that the Government can make a further commitment to those people who have to receive assistance and a little bit of help from the Government. No Member of this Party is any less aware than Members of the New Democratic Party or of the Liberal Party, of the social conscience that is a necessary part of the parliamentary process. It is necessary in order to protect those individuals who, through no fault of their own, cannot protect themselves.

The Minister of National Health and Welfare has said, with regard to the changes proposed to the Family Allowances Act, that those people in the income brackets affected will not suffer because other Government programs will make it up to them. If that is true, then why are we going through this process? Why are we taking the time of the House and causing concern and alarm in every home in Canada if this is not going to make any difference? If the Minister is correct and those people will not be affected by the Bill, why are we debating it?

The Government has continued to say that these changes in the Family Allowances are necessary in order to recover income for the Government. The Government has a horrendous tendency to be more concerned about its own income than that of taxpayers.

The Government knows full well that all it does is print money; it does not generate money. It has forgotten that a form of social care, aid to individuals and aid to families, is required. The family unit is not changing as drastically as is the Family Allowances Act. The family unit is still the most integral and important part of Canadian society.

I cannot understand the Minister or her Parliamentary Secretary supporting a program that would cause hardship to the most important unit in our population, the family.

Mr. Schroder: That's right.

Mr. McKnight: I hear the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister say that it is right, that it is not going to cause a hardship. Why are we having this debate if not to save money for the Government? If the people in this income range are not to receive any more or any less funds from the federal Government, why is this legislation necessary? If the Parliamentary Secretary has the time, I should like him to tell the House why we are going through this exercise, if it does not make any difference.

I ask Members of the Government to consider the motion proposed by the Hon. Member for Calgary West. If they believe the Government is doing the right thing for Canada and that this will help the economy grow, then why do we not just suspend this Bill for six months and consider it then? Nothing is going to change in that time. If they do not have faith in the Government and its programs, then I will expect them to vote against the amendment. If they have faith in the Government and the Minister, then they will believe the rhetoric. They will believe the statements of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and they will know that six months from now it will not be necessary to take income away from families with children under 18.

I hope Members of the Government will support this motion. I conclude my remarks, Mr. Speaker, by asking for the question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed to the motion will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Call in the Members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Hawkes) which was negatived on the following division:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I declare the motion carried. It being four o'clock the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper, namely, Public Bills, Notices of Motions, Private Bills.

Gun Control

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BILLS

[English]

CRIMINAL CODE

AMENDMENT RESPECTING GUN CONTROL

All items preceding No. 451 allowed to stand by unanimous consent.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East) moved that Bill C-451, an Act to amend the Criminal Code (Gun Control) be read a second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have this opportunity to move second reading of Bill C-451, a Bill designed to bring about more effective gun control in this country.

First, I would like to explain to the House the provisions of the Bill. I think this is extremely important because the exact provisions of the Bill have been distorted beyond belief by various circulars which have been distributed throughout this country.

This Bill deals principally with only two matters. The first is to change the presently existing firearms acquisition certificate, which was introduced in 1977, to a firearms possession certificate containing the same criteria as the firearms acquisition certificate.

Before 1977, there was little or no control over long guns, rifles and shotguns in this country. One could go into a hardware store or sporting goods store and buy a shotgun or rifle without any requirements, testing or screening. Under the 1977 legislation, to buy a new long gun a firearms acquisition certificate must be obtained. This means that those with a criminal record or a history of violence, instability, or alcoholism, could be refused this firearms acquisition certificate by the police in the local community.

Even if one might qualify under those criteria, because it takes a few days between the application for and the granting of the certificate, there is a cooling off period. This could be beneficial in a situation where one might want the gun for the purpose of doing something violent, on the spur of the moment.

When I presented Bill C-83 in 1966, the provision that I put forward was one whereby the principles of the firearms acquisition certificate—

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. This is one of the few times that private Members get an opportunity to speak. I think it behooves the House to be listening to the one who is speaking.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member's point is very well taken.

Mr. Allmand: As I was saying, when I presented Bill C-83 in 1976 as Solicitor General, that Government Bill contained principles with respect to the firearms acquisition certificate whereby it would have applied to all those who possess long guns and not just to those who purchase new guns. Bill C-83 was not passed because the session came to an end. When the Bill which came after it, Bill C-51, was introduced, it was watered down to the extent in that the firearms acquisition certificate licensing proposal only applied to new guns. This Bill intends to apply the criteria of the firearms acquisition certificate to all those who possess weapons. It would mean that those who possess long guns, rifles and shotguns, must have what would become the firearms possession certificate.

The only other provision and change that it makes in the law is that not only would you have to produce the firearms possession certificate when you buy a gun as you now do with the firearms acquisition certificate, but whenever you purchase ammunition, you would also have to produce your firearms possession certificate.

Those are the only two things that this Bill attempts to do. It does not do most of the things put forward in a circular that was distributed throughout this country and which provoked a lot of opposition and concern. I agree with the concern that was expressed, but this is a very dishonest circular, not signed by any individual or association. It shows the cowardice and the dishonesty of not all, but many of the groups dealing with the issue of gun control.

I want to go through some of the items in the circular and to state whether or not they are in the Bill. The first thing it says about Bill C-451 is this:

All retail sales of firearms to be handled through a new Government agency only.

False. There is nothing in the Bill on that point.

Applications must be made to purchase any firearm, and must be posted and published before approval, to allow people who oppose the application to register a complaint.

There is nothing in the Bill on that.

Possession of any firearm by police permit only.

That is one of the few things that is correct. In order to possess a firearm, you would have to get a firearms possession certificate. That is one out of three that is correct.

Compulsory registration of all firearms by serial number.

Absolutely false. There is absolutely nothing in the Bill about that.

Permit holders must file annual reports as to the use and condition of all firearms in their possession—

Absolutely false, there is no such thing in the Bill.

No firearm may be disposed of by sale, barter, gift or bequest.

Absolutely false. It also states it must be turned over to the police. That is absolutely false.

I could go on. There is a whole list of submissions in this circular that was sent everywhere in this country. I must say it was even sent on by some Members of Parliament. Of the ten items in the circular which are meant to describe Bill C-451, only one is correct. On the basis of this circular, people all across this country, some with justification, have written thousands and thousands of letters to protest the Bill.

Mr. Corbett: Thousands and thousands?

Mr. Allmand: There are thousands and thousands. I read a lot of the letters. Unfortunately, most were based on the circular and not on the Bill. Why this Bill?

An Hon. Member: Why?

Mr. Allmand: If the Hon. Member will listen, I will explain it, and I will be glad to listen to his arguments in opposition later.

There are still too many crimes with guns being committed in this country. According to all the evidence I have seen, it has been shown very conclusively that in states and countries where there is stricter gun control law, there is lesser crime with guns. The principal purpose of this Bill is to implement stricter gun control. First, to control the general availability of firearms, and, second, as much as possible to prevent the potential dangerous user from gaining access to weapons. I said that that was the purpose. There are too many crimes with guns. If that is the case, we should tighten our present laws to make them even more effective.

Those who complain about a law like this, whereby those who want to use guns must have a licence showing that they are competent, not dangerous, do not have criminal intentions and so on, seem to be obsessed with that type of law and oppose it at any expense or cost. What is very inconsistent with most of these people is that for years in this country in order to drive an automobile, which is a potentially dangerous object, you have to obtain a licence. If you have a history of drunkenness, poor driving or dangerous driving, your licence is taken away.

The purpose of the automobile is transportation. Here you have a situation where you have a gun, the purpose of which is to kill. It has no other purpose but to kill animals and, in certain circumstances, individuals. If there is good rationale for licensing individuals to drive automobiles and trucks, certainly the same reasons and logic apply to that consumer good, the principal purpose of which is to kill.

We licence people who deal with other types of dangerous substances. A pharmacist must get a licence to sell prescription drugs. I apply the same logic to guns. I feel it is necessary in order to reduce the number of crimes with guns in this country.

I also want to point out to the House that there is nothing in this Bill which outlaws guns altogether. There is nothing in the Bill which would take guns away from responsible, law-abiding hunters and sportsmen. I have never introduced a measure that would do that. I believe that hunting by responsible Canadians is a legitimate sport. I feel that the overwhelming majority of Canadians are responsible and will get a licence to possess a gun, just as they get a licence to drive an automobile. However, we would screen out those who are criminally or otherwise dangerous. Therefore, I accept the legitimate use of guns.

I want to deal with a few of the arguments that will no doubt be raised by some Members in the House. They will probably come up with the old saw that guns do not kill, people kill. Of course there is always an individual involved in a killing. As I said before, the possibility of killing with a gun is much greater than with any other type of weapon. A recent study in the United States shows that the capacity to kill with a gun is five times greater than with any other weapon. Show me the individual who would not rather have somebody go after him or chase him with a knife than with a gun. No doubt, if we have any kind of mobility at all, we would agree that the chances of being killed with a gun is much greater than with another weapon. You hear people arguing that you can kill with a baseball bat. Of course you can, but the purpose of the baseball bat is to hit baseballs. The purpose of most knives is to cut meat, paper, wood, or whatever. The purpose of the gun is to kill animals and to kill people.

Another old saw you hear is that if you outlaw guns, only outlaws will have guns. Again, that statement is based on a complete ignorance of the facts with respect to murder. In this country, two-thirds of the murders are committed by people who are not professional criminals or gangsters. Two-thirds of the murders are committed by people who are not involved in crime, who killed in the context of family emotions or in the context of some problem which has arisen. These are the people who very often go out looking for a gun, and find it in some cases too easily.

While it is true that no matter how strict you make gun laws, the professional criminal, the gangster, will still find guns, my point is that making guns less available will cut down on those two-thirds who are not professional criminals.

There was a young man in Ottawa a few years ago who went out one afternoon, bought a shotgun in a local hardware store, went back to his school and killed two or three of his classmates. He was in a severe emotional state and was able to get that gun without much difficulty. We hear the argument, Mr. Speaker, that by implementing stricter gun laws we are going to enable extreme political movements, such as the communists and the fascists, to take over the country. One has a picture of people with shotguns and rifles shooting at tanks as they roll down the street in Czechoslovakia, thereby stopping some kind of communist takeover. That is a specious argument.

I am coming to the end of my speech, and I want to repeat that of all the consumer goods sold in this country, the most dangerous is the gun. It is the only consumer good the purpose of which is to kill animals and kill people, the one consumer good with the greatest potential to criminal violence.

I would ask Members of Parliament to consider the measures of this Bill seriously. I would ask them not to consider this ridiculous circular which was sent around. If they are going to debate this issue, they should debate the Bill, not the circular. At the beginning of my speech I was afraid Hon. Members were trying to howl me down as if they were afraid to hear any argument on the question. If they are really serious, I would ask them at least to let this matter be sent to committee where it can be given serious study. If their arguments are so good as they say they are, they will stand up in committee. If they are no good, they will not, and logic will prevail.

Mr. Bill Vankoughnet (Hastings-Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to rise to speak in the House on Bill C-451 on gun control. It is not only of concern to my constituency but of concern to people all across this country.

I want to congratulate my colleagues for being here in the House today, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie), the Hon. Member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil), the Hon. Member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers), the Hon. Member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Corbett), the Hon. Member for Victoria-Haliburton (Mr. Scott), the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor), the Hon. Member for Edmonton North (Mr. Paproski), the Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker), I can go on and on. I congratulate the Hon. Member for Malpeque (Mr. Gass), the Hon. Member for Prince George-Peace River (Mr. Oberle), the Hon. Member for Okanagan North (Mr. Dantzer), the Hon. Member for Kindersley-Lloydminster (Mr. McKnight), the Hon. Member for Prince George-Bulkley Valley (Mr. McCuish), the Hon. Member for Huron-Bruce (Mr. Cardiff), the Hon. Member for Cariboo-Chilcotin (Mr. Greenaway), the Hon. Member for Grey-Simcoe (Mr. Mitges), the Hon. Member for Perth (Mr. Jarvis), the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson), and so on. These people are very concerned—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) rises on a point of order.

Mr. Fulton: I only want to stop the Hon. Member for a moment. I want to hear what he has to say, but I do not think he should name Members who are not in their seats. He has named at least three who are not.

Mr. Vankoughnet: That is not a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I really believe that these people are here in the lobby. They are in and out. They have stayed here specifically this afternoon to protest this Bill.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Vankoughnet: I have listened to the former solicitor general's comments, and I can say with certainty that Canadians do not believe the former solicitor general when he states the "purpose" of his private Member's Bill. I ask the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East (Mr. Allmand), what is the hidden agenda of his Party? This Bill suggests police state tactics which are foreign to Canada and Canadians. This Bill attacks the right to own private property, penalizes law-abiding citizens, gives the police powers which are not necessary, and does not address the real problem, which is the misuse of firearms. If the former solicitor general wants to implement a deterrent to criminals, he should be introducing a private Member's Bill which has tougher laws against those who misuse firearms, not against law-abiding citizens. If he is really serious about the intent of his Bill, he should urge his Party to reintroduce capital punishment, which is a more meaningful deterrent than the increased harassment he now proposes.

I am particularly pleased, Mr. Speaker, to be able to speak to this Private Member's Bill when I think back to a Friday earlier this year, on July 9, when a Private Member's Bill was introduced in this Chamber at four o'clock which changed the name of our July 1 holiday. This was done in an underhanded manner. No way will this Bill be allowed to go any further. On this side of the House, Friday is a difficult day on which to be in attendance, because, unlike Members of the Liberal Party which is centred in Central Canada, my colleagues have had to travel far because of their representations in the vast areas of this country. They cannot be here. I would like to mention, particularly, the Hon. Member for York North (Mr. Gamble), the Hon. Member for Okanagan-Similkameen (Mr. King), and the Hon. Member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Hargrave). They would have liked to take part in this debate, but due to previous commitments they could not be in the House this afternoon.

I have stated publicly previously, and still believe, that Bill C-451 is a trial balloon to test public reaction. We have a former solicitor general sponsoring this Private Member's Bill. He is the same individual who introduced the original Bill C-51. I was heartened to hear the present Solicitor General of Canada (Mr. Kaplan) make the following comment publicly here in the House as well as in the press: "I would like to make it very clear that Mr. Allmand's Bill is not a Government Bill, and the position of the Government has not changed in that there will he no substantive amendments to the current legislation until after the review". The Solicitor General also stated that his review would be available in late 1982 or early 1983. Is Bill C-451 a preview of that report, depending on current public reaction? And will the Solicitor General withdraw any recommendations in that report which allude to the substance of Bill C-451?

Guns used by the professional criminal element will always be acquired, and no amount of gun control will ever control that. If the intent is to control the illegal use of guns, look to the courts, our laws and the complete disregard of justice. Today a murderer can expect a few years in jail. Mandatory supervision sees to it that he is back out on the street quickly. The murderer can try again because he knows he will not spend a long time in jail. There are no complaints from previous victims because they have been buried. Capital punishment is a deterrent.

It is clear that we have had a form of gun control in this country for years. Handguns have been restricted since the 1930s. As well, restrictions on automatic weapons are certainly necessary. We can all agree on that. Bill C-451 will only serve to harass those law-abiding citizens who use hunting and sporting rifles for peaceful purposes.

to own private property. Responsible gun owners recognize that guns are not toys and must be used with care. But surely Canadians have the right to own private property and exercise that right freely. When we talk about property rights, some have a tendency to think about real estate only. As we all know, however, a rifle or a shotgun is private property. As well, the provisions in Bill C-451 extend also to the possession of ammunition, which presents the possibility of extreme abuse. I stated earlier that this Government seems intent on creating a police state.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) relished the taste of repression when he instituted the War Measures Act in 1970, and his Government has been trying one way or another ever since to recapture that taste. The present gun control section of the Criminal Code is cumbersome, expensive to administer and effective only to harass law-abiding individuals. It does not restrict the use of firearms by the criminal element, nor does it affect their ability to secure restricted weapons illegally.

I and Members of my Party have advocated and continue to stress the need for a detailed review of the firearm control provisions in the Criminal Code by the House of Commons Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs. The evaluation study commissioned by the Solicitor General's Ministry will not allow public input until after it is written. The evaluation study has no credibility without direction and public input. The Justice and Legal Affairs Committee could conduct hearings across Canada, at which time the public, particularly in rural areas, could give their views and suggestions for any changes pertaining to gun control in the Criminal Code. The Hon. Member for Durham-Northumberland's (Mr. Lawrence) motion asking for this public review has come before the House previously, and before this House should ever consider more legislation added to current gun laws, I believe a conscious effort should be made to iron out the flaws in the current gun legislation. The time for a review of Bill C-51 is now, and it will most properly be done by a parliamentary committee.

If the purpose of Bill C-451 is to reduce the number of gun crimes in Canada then let us take an accurate accounting of the state of current gun legislation. This would be more effective and appropriate than what Bill C-451 will accomplish by adding to the already cumbersome and time consuming process that now exists. The proposals in Bill C-451 would be a curse to all law-abiding rifle and shotgun owners throughout the country.

It seems that the former solicitor general is still conducting his misguided crusade against legitimate, law-abiding gun owners. Bill C-451 will succeed, if passed, in making criminals out of a great many honest people. If someone is found with ammunition and they do not possess a firearms possession certificate or even a gun with which to fire the ammunition, rendering it virtually harmless, he could be sentenced to two years in a federal penitentiary, not a county jail. In the same vein, if a person is an occupant of a vehicle in which there is ammunition and no one has a firearms possession certificate, that individual could receive a sentence of five years in prison. The burden of proof is on the individual to prove that he is innocent in that he was unaware of the existence of the ammunition, or that someone else in the vehicle possessed a firearms possession certificate. I repeat, Bill C-451 will make a great many law-abiding citizens into criminals.

While I am confident today that Bill C-451 has no chance of becoming legislation, I also recognize the distinct possibility of this Government introducing future legislation. There has been a considerable amount of confusion about this private Member's Bill. This arose, I believe, in the time it took from when it was first introduced to the time it took to be printed. Also, the resemblance of the Bill number of the current gun legislation, Bill C-51, to the Bill number of the private Member's Bill C-451, is just too coincidental for me not to be skeptical.

The party of the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce (Mr. Allmand) has a history of reversing previous positions and claiming this has not occurred. During the metric debate the Progressive Conservatives were prepared to negotiate concessions to the Government's demand only if the mandatory element was removed from the legislation. The Libearl Party has been misinterpreting our position ever since. My stand on the issue of gun control has been very consistent. The review which the previous Liberal Government made a commitment to undertake, which the succeeding Progressive Conservative Government actively undertook, has now been abandoned. On previous occasions I have risen in support of caucus colleagues who had made a similar request to the current Government.

A recent evaluation of the present Canadian gun control legislation by the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) reveals points worth mentioning. First, there is an inability to find any relationship between gun prohibition and firearm incidents; second, there is evidence of abuse of the power of search and seizure without a warrant; and third, the return procedure for confiscated firearms was not being adhered to, with this report specifically mentioning those sections as potential areas of abuse in the future.

These are all sound reasons why a review of Bill C-51 is necessary, and it is also a sound reason for not allowing Bill C-451 to go any further than the floor of this House. Bill C-451 represents a further erosion of rights we all take for granted. The significance of the right of every lawful citizen to acquire private property for peaceful purposes is a fundamental cornerstone of our system. A majority of citizens, including gun owners; support some form of gun control measures. In practice, Bill C-451 would serve only to impede law-abiding citizens.

In closing, I would like to state that the real losers in Bill C-451 are the Canadian people. Yes, it is conceivable that people possess firearms for peaceful purposes and the need to acquire a firearms possession certificate is just one more regulation in an over-regulated lifestyle.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my Party has had a tradition of supporting the concept of reasonable and safe control of firearms. We do not have that element in this particular Bill before us. Rather, we have a bureaucratic nightmare which will harm ordinary Canadian citizens who enjoy hunting. There are many native Canadians in my riding and the ridings of my colleagues who still hunt as part of their traditional way of life. So we have to speak in opposition to this Bill.

We believe there should be adequate training courses sponsored by the federal Government, much more than there are at present. While I am sure it was not intended, this Bill has harmed real efforts to provide adequate gun control in this country because it is too extreme. In the same way, those people who have ranted and raved against the Bill have also harmed their own cause. Having seen some of the ads and circulars which have gone out over the past two years, I am ashamed of what some of my fellow Canadians have said against this Bill. It is creating here an American type of paranoia which we see there whenever it comes to gun control legislation. We do not want to become like that. We do not want to have groups running around the country sponsoring one person or fighting another person on this issue and giving great hunks of money to one person or one Party. Gun control is a serious issue, one which must be covered by adequate legislation, and it is up to us to make sure that such legislation is reasonable.

I am concerned that many Canadians will get the firearms possession certificate that is called for in the Bill and, as a result, will become criminals. We should never make laws that make ordinary Canadians become criminals by an action which, in itself, is not harmful to other Canadians.

People who live in cities often do not understand why people who live in the North or in other rural areas or parts of western Canada, want guns. I do not believe that Canadians have the right to bear arms at all times in all circumstances, but in a riding such as mine or that of the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) or that of the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis), or of the Hon. Member for Comox-Powell River (Mr. Skelly), there are vast areas where, just a few miles from home, people can go hunting. Hunting has become part of the tradition. I am not referring only to native people but also to white residents of those communities.

It is very hard for some people to understand that others enjoy hunting or that by hunting the food bill can be cut. Unlike someone who lives in Toronto or Montreal or even Vancouver, those of us from rural ridings do not have to travel great distances in order to go hunting, nor do we have to put up at an expensive lodge. In my riding I can walk across the street into the wilderness. These are aspects of the question that should be debated seriously. However, Mr. Speaker, I am ashamed of some of the things I have heard said about the Bill.

The Hon. Member who introduced the Bill said guns—he was referring to long guns, a term I have not heard for a long time—were the only commodity that can be bought by Canadian civilians which will harm other people. In saying that, he is raising the level of debate on this issue.

An Hon. Member: He is lowering it.

Mr. Murphy: A lot of people have a rifle for some purpose other than killing. Killing is not often taken as referring to birds or moose or other animals but as killing people.

Mr. Hopkins: He was lowering the level of debate. You said he was raising it.

Mr. Murphy: I am sorry. He certainly was lowering the level of the debate.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Would the Hon. Member please address the Chair.

Mr. Murphy: I was glad to see that Members of the Official Opposition did not take a highly partisan position in the debate, because it is true that when the original gun control legislation was introduced, the three opposition Parties in the House at that time opposed the Bill for some of the reasons I have mentioned. It is interesting to note that even at that time only 30 Conservatives showed up to vote against the Bill. On July 18, 1977, the recorded vote was yeas 95, nays 40, of whom 30 Members were Conservatives.

An Hon. Member: How many NDP?

Mr. Murphy: There were eight in the House and at that time there were only 15 NDP Members, so it was more than half.

If the Government is to bring in any Bill similar to C-451, it is important that such legislation be acceptable to Canadians in that it recognizes the different regions in the country. It is important that it be legislation that most Canadians can accept, not just some people in some urban areas.

Mr. Ellis: How about giving someone else a chance to speak? There are 18 Members waiting.

Mr. Murphy: The Hon. Member asks me to give someone else a chance to speak. That is interesting because I listened to the Members of that Party who spoke already, and I hope they will extend me the same courtesy. There are Members of all Parties who wish to speak on the Bill, I am sure. One of the problems with Private Members' hour is that it is just that, an hour. As I indicated the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap wishes to oppose the Bill, the Hon. Member for Skeena wishes to speak in opposition to it and some other Members of this Party wish to speak as well. I find it interesting that the Hon. Member who spoke ahead of me listed more Conservatives who wished to speak against the Bill than voted against a similar Bill some years ago.

It is important that crime be controlled, Mr. Speaker, especially crime committed with firearms. I do not think the Bill will achieve that. Rather, it will create a massive bureaucracy where people in the areas I have mentioned will, first of all, have to get a temporary possession form and later a permanent possession form. That will mean they will have to go through the bureaucracy twice in order to keep a weapon that could have been in the family for 40 or 50 or even 60 years. This creates a problem for people who want to live within the law.

As I said, Mr. Speaker, this Party opposes the Bill. If the Hon. Member had offered reasonable gun control legislation we might support it, but certainly the Bill before us would hurt a lot of ordinary Canadians. It is completely unacceptable to this Party for the reasons I have stated.

[Translation]

Mr. Alain Tardif (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I am also pleased to be taking part in this debate and to have this opportunity to respond to Bill C-451. I was not sitting in the House at the time Bill C-51 was passed, but I am sure Hon. Members will recall that the passage of this bill was accompanied by some controversy. The implementation of the legislation has been smooth, however. Since 1977, new penalties for misuse of firearms were introduced and changes were made in the restricted weapons system on January 1, 1978. A successful Amnesty/Recall program took place in November 1978, and the introduction of the Firearms Acquisition Certificate and Business Permit systems took effect on January 1, 1979.

• (1650)

[English]

As significant as these changes were, I think they should be viewed in the context of the history of firearms control in Canada. It is not widely appreciated that Canadian law has controlled firearms in one manner or another for more than 100 years. The first permit system for the carrying of a small arm outside one's residence or place of business was introduced in 1892. By 1934, the law required the registration of all hand guns. Changes to the law in 1968, created three classes of weapons in Canada: prohibited, restricted, and unrestricted.

I bring this brief history to the attention of the House because I believe it sheds some light on why, although a frontier society that depended to a large extent on firearms, Canada has generally enjoyed a history of responsible use of firearms.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the changes enacted by Parliament in 1977 continued in the same Canadian tradition, the most important change being the Firearms Acquisition Certificate system. As I mentioned, the 1968 law created three classes of weapons: prohibited, restricted and unrestricted, while conditions were attached to the acquisition and use of handguns, shotguns and hunting rifles—all restricted weapons. The Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1977, introduced controls of long arms to the extent of requiring that individuals wishing to acquire them in any manner after January 1, 1979 must be screened by police to ensure that they do not have a criminal record or history of mental illness associated with violence.

Mr. Speaker, it has now been three full years since all the provisions of the Criminal Law Amendment Act, and in particular the Firearms Acquisition Certificate system have been in force. Although there are some eencouraging indications that the misuse of firearms is declining, it is still too early to draw definitive conclusions about the success of the firearms control program. The most recent report by Statistics Canada shows that homicides and the use of firearms in homicides has continued to decline. I would submit, however, Mr. Speaker, that it would be wrong to amend the legislation in the manner suggested by the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East (Mr. Allmand), or in any other way, until we have fully assessed the impact of the existing legislation. It may well be that no further changes are justified, or indeed that some of the present law is unecessasry from the point of view of public safety.

Because of the extent of public interest in the firearms control laws and because of the sensitive and complex nature of the legislation, the Government decided, when Bill C-51 was tabled in Parliament in 1977, that a thorough evaluation of the program would be carried out. The purpose of the study, which is now underway, is to ensure that legislators as well as interested members of the public will have full and objective information with which to assess the effectiveness of the firearms control program.

Now, as the Hon. Members are, I am sure, aware, the Ministry of the Solicitor General has engaged an outside objective consulting firm to carry out a three-year evaluation study to gather information which will allow us to gauge the impact of the legislation on the frequency and nature of firearms incidents, both criminal and accidental. In addition, the study is collecting data on the implementation of the legislation and the Firearms Acquisition Certificate system so that we will have a much clearer idea of which aspects of the legislation are most effective and which might require amendment. The consulting firm has established co-operative arrangements with provincial and municipal agencies to enable the efficient collection of information relating to the legislation.

The reports from this study will be available to all interested parties in order to ensure that all the facts are available when forming conclusions about the effectiveness of these legislative and administrative measures. The final report will be available in April 1983 for public distribution. I am sure all Hon. Members will appreciate that the accurate measurement of the effect of a complex legislative program such as this must be carefully conducted over a reasonable period of time before reaching definitive conclusions. The final report will permit us, as legislators, to have outside objective material to provide a basis on which we may draw some sound conclusions and make decisions as to whether the program is meeting the objectives set out in 1977 or whether it is in need of revision. In response to thousands of letters received concerning Bill C-451, the Solicitor General stated that upon completion of the evaluation study, he will be conducting a full public review of the present law. Until that review has taken place and the public has had the opportunity to comment fully, the Government will not consider or support any substantial changes to the current legislation. The Hon. Member's proposals in Bill C-451 are of a very substantial and controversial nature, and I submit it would be wrong to support such measures in this debate.

As this debate is coming to an end, Mr. Speaker, I should like to stress the fact that several colleagues had asked me to rise on their behalf in the House to express their complete disagreement. They are the Hon. Member for Sarnia-Lambton (Mr. Cullen), the Hon. Member for Lambton-Middlesex (Mr. Ferguson), the Hon. Member for London-Middlesex (Mr. Bloomfield), the Hon. Member for Kent (Mr. Bossy), the Hon. Member for Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke (Mr. Hopkins), the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster), and the Hon. Member for Restigouche (Mr. Harquail). Mr. Speaker, I am using the same ploy as my hon. friends opposite a while ago. There are other Hon. Members who are now in the House and who would have liked to express their complete disagreement with Bill C-451.

[English]

Mr. Ellis: Mr. Speaker, I trust that you will allow me a brief point of order in order to put on the record that the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Solicitor General (Mr. Tardif) did exactly as the Government promised and talked out the Bill brought in by the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East (Mr. Allmand).

THE HON. MEMBER FOR NUNATSIAQ

Madam Speaker: Order. I have received a communication from the Hon. Member for Nunatsiaq (Mr. Ittinuar) stating that it is his desire to sit in the Chamber as a Member of the Liberal Party of Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: Accordingly, I am now able to advise the House that the seat to be occupied by the Hon. Member will be No. 125.

Mr. Nielsen: He knows not what he does.

NATIONAL PARKS

BANFF LAND EXCHANGE—CONDEMNATION OF MINISTER

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, whereas the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Roberts) justifies the desecration of a park by stating that affordable accommodation is being provided, and whereas the Minister admitted that he has secured no guarantees from Buchanan and Company with regard to rates, which the company now indicates will be in the area of $500 to $800 per month, which is not affordable accommodation, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson):

That this House soundly condemn the Minister for inefficiency and his heartless unconcern for the workers and for the destruction of a park.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

DIAMOND JUBILEE OF INSULIN USE

Mr. Jim Peterson (Willowdale): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Whereas on January 11, 1922, Leonard Thompson, a 14 year old diabetic, first received insulin, and whereas this was the first time insulin was ever used on a human being, and whereas recognition should be given to the great role Canadians have played in developing insulin and combatting the disease of diabetes, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mr. Cousineau):

That 1982 be proclaimed the Diamond Jubilee of the use of insulin.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Madam Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

TOURISM

DECLINE IN REVENUE

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Madam Speaker, figures just released by Statistics Canada show that tourist travel to Canada has trailed off rather dramatically during the past year. There is, of course, no particular reason why the tourist industry should be spared the effects of policies of the Government any more than the rest of society. However, because it provides so much of the income which fuels the economy of my riding of Parry Sound-Muskoka, I feel roused to comment. I therefore move, seconded by the Hon. Member for St. Catharines (Mr. Reid):

That, in view of the rampaging effects of the Government's policies throughout the entire economy, the House call upon the Minister of Finance to restrain himself and to reassess his program for economic recovery before the entire country goes the way the petroleum industry did under his tutelage.

Mr. Nielsen: Under his tinkerage.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

S.O. 43

ATTENDANCE IN CHAMBER OF PROGRESSIVE CONSERVATIVE MEMBERS

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Madam Speaker, considering the fact that the two opposition parties, along with the vast majority of Canadians, believe that only a new government will be able to solve the economic situations which leave thousands of more Canadians unemployed each month, and considering the fact that on August 3 the Liberal Government retained power by winning a vote in the House by 27 votes with 35 Conservative MPs absent—

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Murphy: —and that on November 1 the Liberals retained power on a Tory non-confidence motion with 24 Conservative MPs absent, and that last Thursday 31 Conservatives stayed away in order to allow the Government to retain power by a margin of 27 votes, and that on Friday, 34 Tories stayed away from votes on two motions in order to allow the Government to limit family allowance cheques and to retain power by 28 votes, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Selkirk-Interlake (Mr. Sargeant):

That this House urge Conservative Members of Parliament to stop absenting themselves from this House every time there is a chance to bring down this Liberal government and that the Leader of the Official Opposition use his remaining influence with his caucus to remind them that the only way we can put Canadians back to work is if Conservative MPs will come to work.

Madam Speaker: Order. I do want to remind the Hon. Member that I cannot put this motion to the House, because it seems to be out of order. It is not acceptable to refer to the absence from or the presence of Members in the House.

YOUTH UNEMPLOYMENT IN NEWFOUNDLAND

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, the Newfoundland and Labrador Youth Advisory Council has completed a study on youth unemployment in Newfoundland. It released its findings on Friday last and found that there is a staggering 42 per cent unemployment rate amongst young people in Newfoundland. Therefore, Madam Speaker, if there is unanimous consent, I would move:

That this House directs the Minister of Employment and Immigration to meet with his counterpart in the Government of Newfoundland with the view to putting in place a special program to deal with this disastrous situation.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

MINES AND MINING

SUGGESTED POSTPONEMENT OF TAXATION PROPOSALS

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Madam Speaker, whereas the recently announced closure of the Pinepoint Mine in the Northwest Territories now threatens the jobs of 4,500 workers at the Cominco smelter in Trail, British Columbia, and inasmuch as the Government's new plan to tax northern employee benefits, announced last week, is most inappropriate and will further undermine the mining industry's ability to compete on foreign markets, thus magnifying the reasons for the shutdowns at Pinepoint, Cyprus Anvil, and elsewhere in the North, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Prince George-Bulkley Valley (Mr. McCuish):

That the federal Government hold in abeyance all plans for increased taxation affecting the mining sector of our economy, including the proposed northern benefits tax, until the industry has recovered to the point where its competitive position in world markets is secure.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

METRIC CONVERSION

APPLICATION TO RULES OF SPORT

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Madam Speaker, I have learned that a Unionville consulting firm has just been employed by the Metric Commission to rewrite our Canadian sporting rule books in metric. This was done at a cost of $89,190. Imagine, no longer will there be a forty-five yard line, Instead, with one yard to go for a first down, it will be .9144 of a metre to go—or face confiscation of the football, or fines and a possible jail term. I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for St. Catharines (Mr. Reid):

That we save $89,190 by scrapping the printing of this metric rule book and use the funds to create jobs for some of the one and one half million Canadians who are presently unemployed.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

FOREIGN INVESTMENT REVIEW AGENCY

PERFORMANCE REVIEW OF FOREIGN FIRMS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Madam Speaker, lask week Bowater Newfoundland Limited of Corner Brook announced the layoff of 746 employees. These lay-offs come despite the fact that the company made a profit of over $40 million in Canada in the last two years and paid dividends to its British parent firm of over $30 million during that same period. In light of these facts, which show yet again that a foreign-controlled firm will not voluntarily act in the best interests of Canadians, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong):

That this House implement a 1980 election promise made by the Prime Minister, namely: "that the Foreign Investment Review Act be amended to provide for performance reviews of how large foreign firms are meeting the test of bringing substantial benefits to Canada".

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

COMPENSATION FOR HONG KONG VETERANS

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Madam Speaker, as the Division of Laboratories, Ministry of Health, in British Columbia has made positive findings of both strongyloidiasis and amebiasis in Canadian Far East prisoners of war, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for St. Catharines (Mr. Reid):

That this House direct the Minister of Veterans Affairs to take immediate action and arrange for special pension compensation for these afflicted Hong Kong veterans.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Campbell said yes.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

WELFARE

INCREASE IN NUMBER OF TORONTO APPLICANTS

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Madam Speaker, the number of people applying for welfare in Toronto is the highest number since metropolitan Toronto was formed, and since a high proportion of the applicants are considered employable but simply cannot find work, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans):

That this House instructs the Minister of National Health and Welfare to offer immediate assistance by increasing the amount of transfer payments to be used for welfare purposes, and the Minister of Employment expedite the implementation of the NEED Program in Metropolitan Toronto.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

NATIONAL SECURITY

CASE OF CANADIAN PROFESSOR—IDENTITY OF JACQUES LALIBERTÉ

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Durham-Northumberland): Madam Speaker, I know that a ministerial briefing was prepared so that the Solicitor General today would be able either to furnish some identity or lack of identity for a gentleman by the name of Jacques Laliberté. Can the Solicitor General tell us if anyone by the name of Jacques Laliberté has been or is now a member of the Canadian Security Agency?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Madam Speaker, I regret to give monotonous replies, but again the identity of that individual, and his existence or non-existence, as I understand it, and his role, are one of the issues being pursued in a trial on serious charges which is presently under way in Britain. I would ask the Hon. Member to allow that type of evidence to come out as it should in that tribunal and not this one.

INFORMATION AVAILABLE TO ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Durham-Northumberland): Madam Speaker, Ministers should not be able to blow and suck at the same time. If no comment is to be made in any of these matters by any Minister of the Crown, then they should stick to it, but they do not. For example, on Friday morning in the House we were told by the Minister of Justice, and I quote from Hansard: "much of the information released in the last week or two" was not the same kind of information that was before the RCMP and the Government of Canada at the time the decision was made not to prosecute. With that type of comment, obviously they are trying to do two things. The Solicitor General was in the House and he heard what his colleague stated. What information released at the trial of Professor Hugh Hambleton in Britain was not available to the RCMP here in Canada at the time the decision was made not to prosecute?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Madam Speaker, the statement that my colleague made the other day was not a matter which would be relevant to the trial taking place in Great Britain. The question that the Hon. Member has asked me is one that I prefer to answer after that trial.

Oral Questions

OBTAINING OF EVIDENCE

Mr. Chris Speyer (Cambridge): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice. At a press conference after Question Period on Friday, the Minister of Justice went through the sequence of events; that there was insufficient evidence at one point in time to justify any prosecution, a letter dated April, 1980 was taken from his predecessor which indicated that subsequent evidence came to light after that, and then he made this statement:

There's an old tradition of the law that, if evidence has been obtained either through threat or inducement, it is not available to the prosecution.

That was within the context that the Canadian Courts were not capable of having a conviction. My question to the Minister is: what inducements or what threats were made to Hambleton for him to make such a statement?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice): Madam Speaker, I was discussing the law that was applicable. I was not discussing the facts. The hon. gentleman can apply the law to the facts as he wishes.

NATURE OF QUESTIONING

Mr. Chris Speyer (Cambridge): Madam Speaker, my supplementary is directed to the Minister of Justice. There is a law with respect to the admissibility of statements, but I am asking the Minister, within the context that he told the press that there would not be a prosecution in a courtroom of Canada as a result of obtaining this subsequent evidence because it would not be admissible either through threat or inducement, was there any threat or any inducement that would prevent his Department from instigating a prosecution against a spy who gave away the secrets of our country to the Russians.

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice): Madam Speaker, I think I see the Hon. Member's problem. He is drawing a conclusion which I did not draw. I did not say there could not be a prosecution subsequently in this case. I said if one were to consider whether there were to be a prosecution, one would have to look at these principles of evidence.

THE ECONOMY

PRIME MINISTER'S STATEMENT ON RECOVERY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. It concerns the interesting speech of the Prime Minister to a Liberal gathering on the weekend. The Prime Minister, at a $150-a-plate Liberal dinner, said that economic recovery was at hand. Unemployment at this point in the year is up 55 per cent over last year. On Friday, Statistics Canada indicated that the 15-month trend of a decline in the economy was no reason to believe that improvement was just around the corner. Considering that we are now losing jobs at the rate of 1,700 per day, does the Government have access to information which has eluded the rest of us, or is this simply what Liberals pay $150 a plate to hear?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, perhaps my hon. colleague would care to look at the statement I made in the House on October 27 of this year, when I said that the Government was expecting to see economic recovery in the last quarter of this year and during 1983. I also said on that occasion, as the Hon. Member is well aware, that we expected high levels of unemployment to continue into next year, unfortunately, despite the fact that the economy would be showing a positive growth rate. Those are the predictions I made in the House at the end of October. They are the same predictions we are using today in projecting economic growth for the coming months.

[English]

Mr. Broadbent: The Minister carefully avoided dealing with what the Prime Minister had to say. No one in his right mind, at this point in December, 1982, would assert that recovery is at hand. We have the worst level of unemployment since the last depression and every indication is that the situation is getting worse, not better.

BOWATER LAY-OFFS—REQUEST THAT COMPANY BE INVESTIGATED

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): I would like to ask the Minister a question which is directly relevant to the job situation now in Canada. Last week my colleague, the Hon. Member for Churchill, raised a question concerning the lay-offs by Bowater in Corner Brook, of some 700 employees. At that time the Hon. Member for Churchill pointed out that this company, in spite of significant profits recently, was shutting down. This plant is putting hundreds of Canadian workers out into the street. The Minister indicated that he would be prepared to look at this situation.

Today it was learned that the assertion made last week was absolutely true, that Bowater has paid $33 million in dividends in the last two years, based on a profit of $44 million which was earned here in Canada, mostly in Newfoundland. Is the Liberal Government prepared to investigate this foreign-owned company which has taken profits earned in Canada out of Canada, put Canadian workers out of a job, and transferred its profits back to Great Britain? Will the Minister investigate this?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, in order to help the Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party see the situation in more exact terms regarding the economy generally, I would like to remind him that housing starts in November, for instance, on a seasonally adjusted basis were at approximately 135,000 units. In October they were only at 107,000 units. Housing starts were up 30,000 units in a single month. Therefore, there are indicators that there is a turnaround, and there are some positive elements taking place in the economy.

As far as the point raised by the Hon. Member is concerned, I indicated to his colleague last week that I was taking his suggestion seriously and I would examine whether there were any particular steps which should be pursued following his representations. I thank the Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party for the information he has provided today, and I will certainly make sure that this is pursued further.

STRENGTHENING OF POWERS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, as I have said in another context, the people of Canada are getting just a little tired of the Government of Canada studying situations. They want, just for a change, some action by the Government.

In this particular context, we are losing hundreds of jobs, as I have said, at the rate of 1,700 per day. In the last few days it was Bowater, a foreign owned firm in Newfoundland; a couple of weeks before that it was the Iron Ore Company of Canada in Schefferville, a company which earned millions of dollars in profits in this country but was busy transferring those profits abroad.

Given our concern about jobs, instead of emasculating FIRA is the Government of Canada prepared to do what other industrialized countries have done with equivalent agencies, that is to say, improve the powers of FIRA so it would have the authority to ensure that profits earned by foreign firms in Canada are reinvested in Canada to produce Canadian jobs?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, it is typical of the New Democratic Party to suggest action before they themselves have thought about it. That is not the style of this Government. We want to act, but after getting the proper facts, not on phony assertions which may be made right and left. We are going to get the facts and decide whether action is required, and we will act decisively if action is required and justified in the circumstances.

As far as FIRA is concerned, the previous Minister of Finance and the Government have indicated that we are improving the efficiency of the operation of FIRA.

Mr. Broadbent: What does "efficiency" mean?

Mr. Lalonde: We intend to go on doing so. The steps have already been announced in last June's budget, they have been taken by the previous Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, and they are also being implemented by the current Minister.

BOWATER LAY-OFFS—CONTACT WITH CORPORATION CHAIRMAN

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, has the Minister of Finance or the Minister of State for Economic Development, or any Minister of the Government of Canada, been in contact with the head of the Bowater Corporation in London to determine whether or not these lay-offs can be avoided?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I understand that the Premier of Newfoundland claimed he had been in touch with the Chairman of Bowater, while the Chairman of Bowater said he had never seen him in his life. To my knowledge, no member of the federal Government has been in touch as yet with the Chairman of Bowater, but I will refer this matter to my colleagues and check whether any of them have already done so.

CASE OF CANADIAN PROFESSOR—APPLICATION OF OFFICIAL SECRETS ACT

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice and relates to the Hambleton spy matter, but more particularly with respect to why spies in Canada are apparently not prosecutable. The Minister will understand that we in Canada, because of the ineptitude of the Government, have become the laughingstock of the world with respect to the prosecution of spies, people who are taking information and selling it to foreign countries. The Minister has indicated that the Official Secrets Act is too broad, and he has indicated that the Treu case and The Toronto Sun case are examples of that. I would point out that those cases involved domestic disclosure of classified information, whereas in the Hambleton matter we are talking about the sending of information to our enemies.

Does the Minister feel that spies can be prosecuted under the Official Secrets Act? If not, where are the amendments to the Official Secrets Act, and would he please table in this House the legal opinion of his predecessor as to why the prosecution in the Hambleton affair could not proceed?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Madam Speaker, my hon. friend is asking for a great deal of legal advice in one question. The law applicable here is the Official Secrets Act, as he said. This is an act of this Parliament. We endeavour to give this meaning and application in every case in which it is brought forward to us. I have spoken of the fact that there are some deficiencies in that legislation, and I hope to bring forward amendments to remedy them, but in the meantime we will certainly in good faith attempt to apply the Act in every case where the facts warrant. When facts come before us we judge them on the basis of that Act and the traditional interpretation of that Act, and of course on the weight of the facts themselves. That is exactly the kind of decision that my predecessor made with respect to the Hambleton case.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Madam Speaker, I only have to refer to the Prime Minister's statement at his press conference last week in which he indicated that the Department of Justice is always doing that, that is to say, always advising against the prosecution of spies in our country.

TIMING OF DECISION TO PROSECUTE IN GREAT BRITAIN

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Solicitor General. Over the weekend he posed the incredible and novel proposition that somehow the Security Force in Canada was using reverse psychology in telling Mr. Hambleton to beware of a hostile reception in the United Kingdom.

First, when was the Government actually aware that the United Kingdom was going to proceed with the prosecution of Mr. Hambleton? Second, what was the deal between Canada and the United Kingdom with respect to proceeding in the United Kingdom as opposed to proceeding in Canada in the prosecution of the alleged spy, Hugh Hambleton?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Madam Speaker, first, as to the headlines, which I also read, speculating about reverse psychology, I can assure the Hon. Member that I said no such thing. In none of the articles that I read was such a position attributed to me. It is speculation, and it just hangs there for what it is worth. I have not said that the Security Service informed him that he would be prosecuted if he went to Great Britain. He was informed that he might receive a hostile reception.

I would remind Hon. Members that the British interviewed him for a long time after he went back to Great Britain. It may well be that the prosecutorial decision was made on the basis of what he said after he arrived in Great Britain. We were not informed, and it was not indicated to the Security Service that the hostile reception would be prosecution. It was simply indicated that he might receive a hostile reception.

DELAY IN AMENDING OFFICIAL SECRETS ACT

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Justice. It was in 1968 that the MacKenzie Commission reported to the Government which was led by the Prime Minister. It recommended, I believe, well over 300 changes, or it had 300 recommendations. One of the more urgent was that the Official Secrets Act be amended. Why has it taken the Government 14 years plus to present amendments to the Official Secrets Act which would provide that the kind of problem that he and his colleagues speak of could be dealt with?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Madam Speaker, the primary problem in the case we are speaking about is the problem of the evidence, not the problem of the law. As I have said several times in the last few weeks, this law is the result of recommendations of the McDonald Commission and it is very much under reconsideration. We hope to be in a position, before long, to bring forward amendments to the Official Secrets Act.

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, the Minister has not answered my question about why it has taken the Government 14 years to do something about the recommendations of the MacKenzie Commission on the security of this country.

POLITICAL CAMPAIGN CONTRIBUTIONS BY FOREIGN COUNTRIES

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, may I direct my second question to the Solicitor General. Have there been or are investigations being made into the possibility of foreign countries contributing to the election campaign funds of political parties in this country, and have activities been undertaken by such countries to encourage or urge individuals to run for election to this House of Commons? If there have been such investigations, what have been the results?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Madam Speaker, under the new election campaign expenses legislation any such clandestine activity would be illegal, unless it were disclosed. If it were done by a foreign power in a clandestine way, such action would be conduct that would come within the ambit of the mandate of the Security Service. It would be a matter that could be legitimately investigated by the Security Service.

QUERY RESPECTING POSSIBLE INVESTIGATIONS

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, I have a brief supplementary question. I know the law, but I am asking the Minister whether any investigations had been conducted into that kind of conduct in the past, or whether any such investigations are going on at the present time.

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Madam Speaker, I do not consider it to be in the public interest to answer that question.

AIR CANADA LAY-OFFS—APPLICATION OF EARLY RETIREMENT POLICY TO MACHINISTS

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Labour I will direct my question to the Minister of Transport. The International Association of Machinists and Aerospace Workers of Air Canada has been informed that 585 employees of that group will be laid off. Mr. J. J. Bourgeault, the Senior Director of Labour Relations for Air Canada, stated on May 19, 1982, that "application of early retirement policy will apply equally to any employee groups". Will the Minister inquire why Air Canada is not willing to apply this policy of a voluntary separation program to the machinists and aerospace workers, but solely to management personnel and employees of other bargaining units in the Air Canada family?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I have inquired about this. In the case of management people the separation is a permanent one and they are not subject to recall or to the protection of collective agreements, et cetera. In the case of mechanics they are subject to recall and are protected by collective agreements in terms of pension, security, priority to certain jobs should they become open, and so on. The two situations are quite different.

REQUEST THAT MEDIATOR BE APPOINTED

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Madam Speaker, as 26 machinists will be laid off in the Winnipeg area alone, I should like to ask the Minister if he would consult with the Minister of Labour to consider appointing a mediator to investigate why Air Canada is discriminating against its machinists, all members of the International Association of Machinists and Aerospace Workers. Will they do everything possible to stop these lay-offs?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): I will do so, Madam Speaker.

ENERGY

DEVELOPMENT OF ATHABASCA OIL SANDS

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Has the Minister had discussions with Imperial Oil or Shell or Canstar, or the provincial Government, with regard to establishing a fiscal regime so that the development of the Athabasca oil sands can take place?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, we are having continuing discussions with the industry and the Provinces on this subject. If there is some progress to be announced I will be very pleased to tell the House of Commons about it, but I have nothing to announce at this point.

DISCUSSION OF FISCAL REGIME

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Madam Speaker, I was not asking whether there was a project to be announced. I was asking whether a fiscal regime had been developed or is in the process of being developed, to control the development of the tar sands and the oil sands in northeastern Alberta. Perhaps I should direct my question to the Minister of Finance. Is he having these discussions?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I replied to both aspects of the question. My answer applied to the development of projects. Of course there are discussions about tax regimes. I am having discussions about that with the Saskatchewan and Alberta Governments.

BOWATER LAY-OFFS—REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT TAKE ACTION

Mr. Sid Parker (Kootenay East-Revelstoke): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. Considering that the announced lay-offs by Bowater are not taking effect until next April, and considering that Bowater made over $44 million in profits in the last two years, will the Minister ensure that the Government will demand that these lay-offs will not take place?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I have already answered that question in answer to the Leader of the New Democratic Party.

PUBLIC WORKS

REQUEST THAT MINISTER CONSIDER ESTABLISHING EMERGENCY FUND

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Madam Speaker, may I put a question to the Minister of Finance. In his responses to questions in this House in the last number of weeks, he has often been forced to say that there is nothing the Government can do in the short run, to combat lay-offs in all parts of Canada. Perhaps there is a solution that the minister ought to consider. Municipalities across Canada, such as Kamloops and Salmon Arm, have capital works projects ready to go, in the amount of $18 million each. If the Minister is interested in job creation and in stimulating the economy from one end of Canada to the other, would he give some consideration to establishing a special public works emergency fund so that muncipalities across Canada could get these road projects, sewer and water projects and parks projects, that are now waiting for financial support, off the ground?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I will consider any suggestions put forward by anyone in this House. I will give all suggestions very serious consideration.

As a general statement, however, I should like to point out that it would be very wrong for provincial or municipal Governments to sit on their hands and hope that the federal Government is going to dish out hundreds of millions of dollars to them. Municipal Governments and provincial Governments, like the federal Government, have the power to borrow. If there are projects which are worth-while for the community, I encourage them to exercise their responsibilities as elected officials, to go ahead with the projects, to go to the market and borrow money like the federal Government is borrowing, and to do something that is required in the community. They should not wait for the federal Government to finance every action which is taking place in the country.

As I indicated, the federal Government set aside over $1 billion in addition to the previous amounts set aside for direct job creation last October. This is a significant amount of money which we are putting aside for all kinds of job-creation programs across the country. I hope municipal Governments, like others, will do their share in this regard, and try to use this period of recession to stimulate activity, proceed with projects which they themselves can finance on their own, and not just wait for grants from the federal Government. This being said, I take the statements of the Hon. Member as a representation. As I said, I will consider it together with numerous other representations which have been made by other Members.

INCOME TAX

PROPOSED TAXATION OF NORTHERN BENEFITS

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance as well. It concerns the announcement made by his colleague, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, on his behalf last week, of the imposition of a very significant new tax burden on northern residents, a burden which will result in an increase of between $2,000 to $3,000 per year for the average worker in the North who is employed in the mining and resource sector industries.

Could the Minister tell the House why he chose this particular time to make this imposition on northerners, having regard to the fact that they are already hit hard and that economic circumstances multiply themselves several times by the time they are experienced in the North? Why is it that he imposed this tax at this time?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I should like to tell the Hon. Member three things. First, the announcement was not made by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development on my behalf. I made it myself, and I associated that Minister and the Minister of State for Mines with this particular announcement.

Second, the tax will not generate the figures to which the Hon. Member referred of $2,000 or $3,000 per individual.

Third, there is no tax. The remission order is being continued in 1983 and, as a matter of fact, it is being extended to workers who were not covered by the remission order in 1982. They will benefit from an exemption in 1983 which was not available to them in 1982.

The taxation of benefits will only start in 1984. It will start on a very gradual basis. The taxation of benefits will grow 25 per cent a year. It will start with only 25 per cent of the taxable benefits being eligible for taxation. The figures to which the Hon. Member referred are quite small and I would like him to bear that in mind when he considers the steps that have been taken, which I think are quite fair to the people of the North who were benefiting from the particular remission order.

Mr. Oberle: This is a display of a strange twist of logic. The Minister says that it is a tax which was always on the books but had never been paid and that simply because it has to be paid now it is not a new tax. I must have attended a fairy-tale session last week when I sat in on the press conference, including stations of the CBC northern service, when the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, on behalf of the Minister of Finance, announced a new tax.

In fact it is not a serious imposition when it is figured out on a monthly basis, as the Minister did but, when the monthly figures are multiplied by 12, it is an imposition of between $2,000 and $3,000 on average taxpayers or average northern workers. There are no ifs, ands or buts about it.

REASONS FOR CHANGE

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Madam Speaker, did the Minister of Finance take into consideration that the average home owners in the North pay between $200 to $300 in some instances for utilities to heat their homes, that they pay $4 for a gallon of gasoline, and that freight costs often multiply essential consumer commodities by four times? Is there any equity and fairness in his tax system at all? Why was logic not considered, that changes to the tax Act would have been a much better compromise to replace the remission order?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I remind my hon. colleague that the average northerner never had access to this particular benefit. It was limited to a very restricted number of people who happened to work in the North for large corporations or certain Governments. That was the limit of the benefits. They were not available to the average northern citizen or resident. Indeed we have very carefully taken into account the serious recession which the industries in the North are knowing at the present time by not imposing the taxation of those benefits in 1983, and by starting the taxation of them on only a gradual basis in 1984. It will take four years after 1984 before they become fully taxable.

In addition, we have put specific ceilings on benefits such as housing allowance, for instance, so that there would not be excessive taxation of these people. I invite my hon. friend to examine more fairly the proposal or the plan which was announced, and he will come to the conclusion that he should not be talking about the kinds of figures he indicated.

FINANCE

IMPLEMENTATION OF SMALL BUSINESS DEVELOPMENT BOND PROGRAM

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Canada's chartered banks are flatly refusing to process Small Business Development Bonds for farmers and small-businessmen who are in financial distress. What action has the Minister taken in this regard? Has he met with the banks? If, as the banks suggest, the present program is unworkable, is he actively considering any changes to the program to make it more workable to meet the desperate need?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Yes, Madam Speaker, I am examining the situation very carefully in order to ensure that there is no undue prejudice caused to either farmers or small-businessmen.

FUNDING FOR FARM FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE PROGRAM

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is also directed to the Minister of Finance. Under the special Farm Financial Assistance Program the funds appropriated for this fiscal year have been expended and farmers are not being accommodated. Has the Minister had any discussions with his colleague, the Minister of Agriculture, in this regard? Is he actively considering the prospect of increasing funding for that particular purpose so that farmers who are in financial distress at this time will be able to use the Program in a more effective manner?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Minister of Agriculture is well-known for his great interest in farmers. Everyone knows that he has their best interests at heart all the time. Indeed he has made very strong representations to the Minister of Finance, and representations coming to the Minister of Finance from the Minister of Agriculture are always examined with great attention and sympathy.

PIPELINES

CONSTRUCTION OF ALASKA GAS PIPELINE

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. He has heard about plant closings and job losses in the House today. I want to give him an opportunity to create some jobs on a rather massive scale. Is the Minister aware that, if the whole Alaska Highway Gas Pipeline went ahead, it would mean 350,000 man-hours of work and 1.2 million tonnes of pipe construction for Stelco in Hamilton and Ipsco in Regina?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Epp: You were against it.

Mr. Waddell: Before my Conservative friends have heart attacks here as they line up behind their Leader, is the Minister aware that the previous Minister of Energy said in this House in July, 1980, that the Government was convinced of the United States commitment to complete the whole line by 1985? In light of the commitment which "old iron clad" said we had, and in light of the fact that all these jobs could be created, what has the Minister personally done since taking office to get the pipeline construction going, the whole pipeline for the North?

• (1450)

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, the first thing that I did to make that project work was that, contrary to the Hon. Member, I voted for it in the House of Commons.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: It was a long time ago, and of course, we were depending on that. I am very pleased to see that the Hon. Member for once in his life wants us to collaborate with the Americans. We are willing to do so. In fact, we need their collaboration. In order to justify the construction of the pipeline from Alaska to the southern parts of the United States there is a need, first, to find financing for it and, second, to find a market for the gas. This matter is under the control of the American administration, over which I do not have great influence.

SEARCH AND RESCUE

PROVISION OF SERVICES ON WEST COAST

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Defence. Over the last year we have had three studies on search and rescue operations on the coast of British Columbia. We have had an interdepartmental study, a joint Coast Guard and a DND study, and a DND study on deployment of air resources.

In addition to the removal of weather ships, the Government has now removed two vessels, one from Campbell River and one from Prince Rupert. As well, the Government has removed two of the three crash groups from CFB, Comox. The Government has also reduced coverage from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday to Wednesdays. The Government has apparently refused to deploy the air resources on the coast of British Columbia in a proper and effective manner.

Would the Minister be prepared to describe why the three studies are top secret and why there has been a substantial reduction in the available resources on the coast of British Columbia? For example, we get three vessels in lieu of six. Also, when will the Minister consider an effective deployment of his rotary wing air resources on the coast of British Columbia?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, the Member asked many things on search and rescue. First, I do not know of any secrecy with regard to the studies that we are currently doing with a view to ensuring more effective search and rescue on the coast of British Columbia as well as on the east coast. We try to utilize our facilities in the best way possible so that we can effectively cover the area where there are the most incidents. I am sure that my Department in co-operation with the Department of Transport, has studied the air and the sea aspects in detail so as to improve our search and rescue operations.

I can assure the Hon. Member that our search and rescue facilities are much better today than they were a year ago. We intend to continue our examination of those facilities as much as possible, and I know there has been some improvement.

I could write to the Hon. Member and give him details. The Premier of Newfoundland has written to me about this matter. I will give him a complete review of what we are doing in Newfoundland covering all aspects of search and rescue. But, as I have said with reference to the Hon. Member's question, there has been an improvement in search and rescue in British Columbia.

PROPOSED OPENING OF ABORTION CLINIC IN MANITOBA

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice. It concerns Dr. Morgentaler's announcement of his intention to open an abortion clinic in Winnipeg. Has the Minister been in touch with the Attorney General of Manitoba? Has a plan of action been determined which would prevent the opening of an abortion clinic such as this, rather than having it opened first and then having charges laid, which obviously will result in many young Manitoba lives being lost?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): No, I have not been in touch with the Attorney General of Manitoba on this subject, because it is not necessary, Madam Speaker. The responsibility for enforcing the Criminal Code is entirely in the hands of the Attorney General of Manitoba. If he wanted to consult with me in some way on the law, I would be available, but that is not the usual course for Attorneys General to follow. Just as the Attorney General of Ontario has said that he will apply the law if the occasion warrants it, I am sure the Attorney General of Manitoba will follow the same course.

Mr. Epp: Madam Speaker, I am aware of the administration of justice in that way. I phrased the question in terms of whether the Minister had been in contact with the Attorney General of Manitoba. I recognize his responsibility is to administer the law but there have been other Attorneys General, such as Mr. McMurtry of Ontario, and the Attorney General of Saskatchewan, who have said if that eventuality occurred they would prosecute.

QUERY RESPECTING AMENDMENT OF CODE

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Madam Speaker, in view of the situation in which we find ourselves, namely, that the Criminal Code has some very specific requirements concerning the setting up of therapeutic abortion committees in hospitals before the process can be undertaken, is the Minister now considering amendments to the Criminal Code which would prevent, or at least put a prohibition on the opening of such abortion clinics, rather than leaving the law as it is?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Madam Speaker, there really is no need for additional law. It is in the hands of the Provinces, in this case, the Province of Manitoba, to determine what is an accredited hospital. A Province may even decide that a free-standing clinic of this kind should be classed as a hospital, although I am not aware that any Province has yet done that. Therefore all aspects of the problem as they affect the situation in Manitoba are in the hands of the provincial Government and, in particular, in the hands of the Attorney General. I see no role for the federal authorities, Madam Speaker, and no, we are not contemplating changes to the abortion law at this time.

NATIONAL SOVEREIGNTY

EXTENSION OF CUSTOMS ZONE TO CONTINENTAL SHELF

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Finance responsible for customs. In view of the very depressed state of the Canadian steel industry and the advantages which would flow to this industry if the Canadian customs zone were extended from the 12-mile limit to the Continental Shelf, and in view of the fact that most countries such as Australia, New Zealand, the United Kingdom and Norway have already provided for this extension, can the Minister say when the Government of Canada is going to move to extend our custom zone to the Continental Shelf?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, the question of the Hon. Member involves not only areas of customs jurisdiction, and I believe the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce responded to a similar type of question last week. He indicated that the matter is under consideration by the Government, and when the Government is in a position to advise Hon. Members, he will do so.

TRADE

EFFECT OF FOOTWEAR IMPORT QUOTAS

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for International Trade. Could the Minister tell the House what action he has planned in order to resolve the problem of hundreds of shoe retailers who face extinction because of the reimposition and cut-back of shoe quotas which are drastically reducing the lines which these shoe retailers have offered for decades?

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister of State (International Trade)): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member will be aware that, with the reimposition of quotas on importation of shoe wear, meetings took place with representatives not only of retailers but also of importers and manufacturers. Subsequent to those consultations, quotas were arranged to try to take care of the interest of all groups in the most equitable manner possible. I am confident that, on the basis of the quota assignments that have been made, while it may be that retailers will end up selling more Canadian shoes than previously, they will indeed be able to survive and there will not be undue hardship.

POSITION OF INDEPENDENT RETAILERS

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Madam Speaker, I wonder whether the Minister is aware of two facts. First, the quotas were given out so late that the appeal date had passed, and an appeal is being refused now by his Department. Second, the retailers in question have nothing to do with the chains and are only concerned with about 15 per cent of the quotas about which the Minister has been talking.

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister of State (International Trade)): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member should be aware that both independent retailers as well as the chains were represented at meetings and consultations that I had. In relation to their volume and numbers, the amount apportioned to them is an equitable amount. I certainly want to carry out this unfortunate necessity of restricting imports in a way that will provide the minimum dislocation possible to the retailers as well as to the importers, but the Hon. Member will be well aware that there are Canadian jobs at stake and the Canadian manufacturers of shoes have been very very hard put as consequence of a sudden, very rapid increase in the volume of imports of footwear. I would hope that the Hon. Member might show some concern for the Canadian workers who have lost their jobs as a result.

PETRO-CANADA

PURCHASE OF BRITISH PETROLEUM SERVICE STATIONS

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In Committee on Friday morning the Minister of National Health and Welfare indicated that it was a Government priority to buy service stations to protect Canadian jobs. Could the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources indicate to the House how the buy-out of British Petroleum service stations became a priority, one more important than pensions and family allowances, and could he explain how that will protect Canadian jobs?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I think that this transaction has been well explained to the House of Commons. It was a commercial transaction involving Petro-Canada, which was buying the stations of BP. Of course, because Petro-Canada is very popular, it will be in a position to pay it easily because it will sell 20 per cent more gasoline than the present owner of the stations. Of course, concerning the other part of the Hon. Member's comment, its purpose was not job preservation. It was a good investment by Petro-Canada and it will be paid commercially, as a good commercial decision should be.

Mr. Hawkes: Madam Speaker, the more Petro-Canada sells, the more we buy from Mexico, Venezuela and so on.

Mr. Chrétien: That is not true.

FUTURE PROSPECTS

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): The previous Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources was one of the greatest job cutters in Canadian history. He destroyed about 40 per cent of the jobs in that industry and in related industries.

Mr. Nielsen: Old Slasher Lalonde!

Mr. Hawkes: Do we have any indication from the present Minister that something significant will happen and that we are going to restore jobs in that industry and in those related service industries which serve oil and gas exploration and development?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): I would like to inform the Hon. Member that figures for last week indicate that rigs in Canada were operating at 76 per cent of capacity, the best in a long time, because in the spring they were operating at only 22 per cent of capacity.

MR. CLARK—CALL FOR ABANDONMENT OF SALES TAX PROPOSAL AFFECTING WHOLESALERS

Madam Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the Clerk of the House has laid upon the Table the three hundred and forty-sixth report of the Clerk of Petitions stating that he has examined the petition presented by the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark) on Friday, December 3, 1982, and finds that the petition meets the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

PETITIONS

MR. THACKER—OPPOSITION TO BILL C-10

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills): Madam Speaker, as a Member of this House, it is my privilege and duty to present two petitions. The first is on behalf of 152 members of the Netherlands Reformed Congregation from my riding. The purpose of their petition is to express strong opposition to the proposed legislation contained in Bill C-10. They believe that Bill C-10 reflects a dangerous use of power on the part of the civil government and a potential tool for subjecting churches to the moral decisions of civil courts.

The petitioners hope that in your examination of the petition you will find the petition in order, will sense the urgency and strong commitment in their plea, and use the discretionary power vested in your office to allow discussion and referral to the appropriate committee at the earliest possible moment.

MR. THACKER—CONSIDERATION OF BILL C-53

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills): Madam Speaker, the second petition I wish to present is on behalf of 150 members of the same Netherlands Reformed Congregation, in which they wish to express their concerns about Bill C-53. The petitioners set forth a number of points which they believe the House should consider when the legislation is discussed next.

I note that their petition has been sent to the Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan) and the Chairman of the Justice Committee, and I hope that the committee will consider their views seriously.

MR. PARKER—OPPOSITION TO BILL C-133

Mr. Sid Parker (Kootenay East-Revelstoke): Madam Speaker, it is my privilege and duty to present a petition signed by hundreds of citizens of Ontario and Quebec. The purpose of the petition is to express the clear and strong opposition of those citizens to Bill C-133, legislation which would reduce the indexing of the pensions of public servants. The nature of the petition is to oppose the passage of Bill C-133 at second reading and thereby prevent the cut in indexing of Public Service pensions.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

NATIONAL LIBRARY ADVISORY BOARD

Question No. 4,478—Mr. Mazankowski:

1. Is there a body known as the National Library Advisory Board and, if so (a) what are its stated purposes and terms of reference (b) what is the composition of the Board?

2. Who are the current members and what are the lengths of their appointments?

3. Do members receive any remuneration and, if so, within what ranges?

4. What were the total costs associated with the Board for the fiscal year (a) 1980-81 (b) 1981-82?

5. What tasks did the Board complete in those fiscal years?

Mr. Jack Burghardt (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): I am informed by the National Library of Canada as follows:

1. Yes. (a) Section 9 of the National Library Act (1969—c. 47, 17-18 Eliz II) states that "The Governor in Council may establish a Board, to be known as the National Library Advisory Board, to advise and assist the National Librarian in the organization and development of the Library and to advise and assist in the development of the relations of the Library with other libraries and library and educational associations and institutions".

(b) "The membership of the Board shall consist of (a) The National Librarian; (b) the Parliamentary Librarian and the Dominion Archivist, who shall be members ex officio; (c) four other persons, one each representing and nominated by the Canada Council, the Social Sciences and Humanities Research Council, the Association of Universities and Colleges of Canada and the National Research Council of Canada; and (d) "11 other persons, at least five of whom shall be professional librarians and each of whom shall be appointed by the Governor in Council to hold office for a term of not more than four years".

2. The list of current members, with the dates of their appointment (where applicable) is as follows:

Current Members	Term
Mr. John Dutton Director Calgary Public Library	May 25, 1981 to May 25, 1984
Rev. Paul-Emile Filion Director of Libraries Concordia University	April 16, 1981 to April 16, 1984
Mr. Nicholas Goldschmidt	Canada Council appointment Ex Officio
Dr. Francess G. Halpenny General Editor Dictionary of Canadian Biography	December 9, 1979 to December 9, 1982
M. Louis-Edmond Hamelin Recteur Université du Québec à Trois-Rivières	June 17, 1982 to June 17, 1985
Miss E. Diane MacQuarrie Director Halifax City Regional Library	October 29, 1981 to October 29, 1984
Dr. Peter Meincke President University of Prince Edward Island	Association of Universities and Colleges of Canada appointment
Mrs. Anne B. Piternick Professor, School of Librarianship The University of British Columbia	July 13, 1981 to July 13, 1984
Madame Anna Rovira Directeur Bibliothèque municipale La Salle, La Salle	May 14, 1981 to May 14, 1984
Mr. Elmer V. Smith Director, CISTI National Research Council	National Research Council appointment Ex Officio
Dr. W.I. Smith Dominion Archivist	Ex Officio
Mr. Erik J. Spicer Parliamentary Librarian	Ex Officio
Dr. Guy Sylvestre (Secretary) National Librarian	Ex Officio
Dr. T.H.B. Symons Vice-President Social Sciences and Humanities Research Council	Social Sciences and Humanities Research Council appointment Ex Officio
Dr. Otto Tucker Professor of Education Memorial University of Newfoundland	September 22, 1982 to September 22, 1985
Mr. Ronald Yeo Chief Librarian Regina Public Library	January 22, 1981 to January 22, 1984

3. By Order in Council of May 13, 1982, the members receive $225, and the Chairman $325, for each day they attend a meeting of the Board or a committee of the Board. (P.C. 1981-1412)

4. The total costs associated with the Board were (a) $7,720, (b) $7,460.

5. The National Library Advisory Board advises and assists the National Librarian in the organization and development of the Library and its relations with other libraries and other appropriate institutions. It does this on a continuing basis by advising on and reviewing the priorities of the Library, its developments and its ongoing activities. It is also an important channel for making known the services of the Library in the Provinces and for soliciting suggestions for making its services more responsive to the needs of its users.

In the period under review, the Board met three times. In October, 1980, the meeting was held in Saskatoon and at a public session the Library's programs were summarized, questions were entertained and briefs were received. In November, 1981 the National Library Advisory Board met with the Advisory Board on Scientific and Technical Information to discuss Telidon and its application to library and information services. As a result of this meeting, the Board recommended that the National Library act as a clearinghouse of information on the applications of videotex and teletext to library services.

During the two fiscal years under review, the Board furthered the development of a decentralized network to facilitate the exchange of bibliographic data and the sharing of library resources. This recommendation was first set out in the "Future of the National Library of Canada", presented to the Secretary of State in 1979, after extensive consultation across Canada and with the support of the National Library Advisory Board which assisted with the establishment of priorities. In particular, the Board established committees to investigate in depth and make recommendations on some of the issues posed by the application of the combined technologies of computers and telecommunications to the evolution of a bibliographic network as well as those which need examination for the sharing of data and library resources. The progress made in these areas has resulted in the formation of the Bibliographic Common Interest Group, co-ordinated by the National Library, as part of the iNet (intelligent network) trial mounted by the Computer Communications Group of the TransCanada Telephone System. Six libraries with autonomous computer systems are able to interconnect to exchange bibliographic data and to facilitate document delivery. The Board also received recommendations concerning electronic publishing, the legal aspects of network development and the unauthorized use of copies of databases and requested that these issues be investigated.

In the same period, the Board made formal recommendations to the Secretary of State on the establishment of national library services for the visually and physically handicapped. It also actively supported the Library's submission to the Parliamentary Special Committee on the Disabled and the Handicapped which recommended that the Library act as co-ordinator of Canadian library services. As a result of the proposal, endorsed by the Special Committee in its report "Obstacles", the National Library received the resources to set up a program in 1982/83.

The Board has also been concerned with the conservation of the Canadian literary heritage and the alternative methods of storing and retrieving material. Its attention has focused especially on newspapers which are not collected on legal deposit by the National Library. The Board commissioned two surveys of newspapers; the first gathered information on the policies of provincial, university and other libraries on the collection and maintenance (in original or in microform) of newspapers; the second survey brought together information on the availability of newspapers on interlibrary loan and on the reference services available to researchers in libraries where newspaper collections are maintained. The Board has now asked a committee to make recommendations for a policy which will ensure that newspapers are systematically collected and maintained so that this vital primary source will be available to future researchers.

Both the review of priorities and ongoing activities and the study of special issues by the Board are undertaken in order to fulfil the National Library's objective which is to facilitate the use of library resources of the country by the people and Government of Canada.

"CANADA UPDATE FROM THE 1981 CENSUS"

Question No. 4,564—Mr. Siddon:

1. What was the total cost to the Government for the design, production and distribution of the pamphlet entitled "Canada Update from the 1981 Census"?

2. How many copies of the pamphlet were printed and distributed to date?

3. (a) Who did the design and production of the pamphlet (b) was the person an outside contractor and, if so, how was the contract awarded?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): 1. The newsletter "Canada Update from the 1981 Census" cost $9,822.54 to design, produce and distribute.

2. As of November 16, 1982, approximately 29,000 were printed and distributed. Subsequent mailings will be only on request and for the next issue will involve 6,338 copies.

3. (a) The design, typesetting and camera-ready artwork were done by Statistics Canada staff. (b) The designer is an employee of Statistics Canada. The printing was done by Dollco Printing, Ottawa, selected under the standard Supply and Services contract tendering process.

[English]

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Madam Speaker: The questions enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary have been answered.

[English]

Mr. Murphy: I rise on a point of order, Madam Speaker, with regard to Order Paper question No. 3,487, which I asked last November 26, 1981. It was comprised of a series of questions relating to the Public Service superannuation fund and to how much money is in the fund and how much the Government has made in terms of windfall profits. Those questions directly relate to Bill C-133, which we will be debating today in the House. On November 18 of this year I asked the Parliamentary Secretary if I could receive an answer to that question prior to the Bill being discussed in the House. I would like to know if that will be possible.

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, I did send off an inquiry and I will send another one today.

Mr. Murphy: If we cannot have that information before the debate starts in the House of Commons, can we have a guarantee that we will have that information before the Bill is discussed in the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates?

Mr. Nielsen: What good will it do you?

Mr. Murphy: Will we have the information before we debate this important Government legislation?

Mr. Nielsen: Ironclad.

Mr. Smith: It is possible, Madam Speaker. I will do my best to try to obtain an answer for the Hon. Member. The Government is not under any obligation to answer any of these questions, but notwithstanding that fact, we have answered over 83 per cent of the questions placed on the Order Paper in this session alone. Over 3,816 questions have been answered. I think that speaks for our good faith.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: That's four a day.

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier: Madam Speaker, while we are on this subject, I would like to refer to a question I asked about a month ago regarding Bill C-133, namely, Question No. 4,532, a thirteen-part question. I wondered whether the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Smith) would be willing to take this as notice and provide the answers before the debate starts in committee?

[English]

Mr. Smith: I cannot assure him of that, Madam Speaker, but I can assure him that I will make my best effort to try to obtain an answer.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker: Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

MEASURE TO MODIFY BENEFIT INDEX

Hon. Herb Gray (President of Treasury Board) moved that Bill C-133, an Act to amend the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act (No. 2), be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates.

He said: Madam Speaker, this Bill is being presented to implement one of the elements of the six and five program announced in the June 28 budget.

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Gray: This program is a cornerstone of the Government's program of economic stabilization and renewal.

Mr. Epp: Not a cornerstone, a millstone.

Mr. Gray: I might remind the House that the purpose of the six and five program is two-fold. First, it is intended to set a clear example of federal leadership so that we can deal effectively with the problems of inflation, high interest rates and unemployment and to make our economy more productive. The second objective of the program is to provide funds to be reallocated to job creation.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, Bill C-124, the Public Sector Compensation Restraint Act passed by Parliament last summer, was the first in a series of measures to reduce inflationary income expectations. The Bill restricted wage increases of employees in the public sector to 6 and 5 per cent, for a period of two years. Another measure applied the 6 and 5 program to the inflationary component of indexing of family allowances, old age security pensions, public service pensions and personal income tax. Thus, the purpose of Bill C-133 is to apply the 6 and 5 program to public sector pensions. The bill is not a pension policy but should be seen as part of a comprehensive response to the economic problems facing Canada today. As I said before, it is one of the many economic measures that were contained in last June's budget.

• (1510)

[English]

In that budget, people who have been employed in the federal public sector and who therefore have more assured incomes and relatively more job security than most other Canadians were asked to accept less protection from inflation temporarily so that inflation could be reduced and the Government could free up needed financial resources for job creation in the private sector.

Bill C-133 does not single out federal Public Service pensioners as the cause of inflation any more than any other group of Canadians. Rather, the Government chose the public sector as a vehicle to project an unmistakable signal to all of the participants in the Canadian economy that we have to have lower income and price increases if we are to deal satisfactorily with problems of inflation, the problems related to it of high interest rates as well as the problems of unemployment.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Nobody believes that.

[Translation]

Mr. Gray: Mr. Speaker, the general goal of the program is to encourage the private sector to follow the example set by the Federal Government and its share to reduce inflationary demands on the economy. In Bill C-133, cost-of-living adjustments paid under the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act are capped at 6 per cent in 1983 and 5 per cent in 1984. These restrictions will apply to all individuals receiving retirement benefits as a result of employment in the federal public service.

[English]

Without this legislation, public service pensions would be increased by 11.5 per cent in January of 1983. This percentage reflects the full cost of living adjustment prescribed by the present law. That adjustment of 11.5 per cent would arise out of the relative increase in inflation in the 12-month period ending in September, 1982 over the average increase in the previous 12 months.

The restraint program is designed to alter inflationary expectations. It seeks to counteract the expectations of inflationary increases and the resulting future inflation which comes from assuming that price performance in the past will turn out to be the case for days yet to come.

Since Bill C-133 received first reading there certainly has been a fair amount of public discussion surrounding it, principally by those who oppose it. The debate has also produced a great deal of confusion and factual error over the nature of the present indexation arrangements. I would like to deal briefly with some of those more common misconceptions at this time.

Many of those who oppose the limitation on increases in Public Service pension indexation argue that public servants have fully paid for their indexation through their contribution of 1 per cent of salary, together with the matching direct contribution by the Government as employer, towards the cost of this benefit. This is not the case. Approximately 90 per cent of the indexation benefits paid to Public Service retirees are currently charged directly to the Consolidated Revenue Fund of the federal Government.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Fine way to make a case.

Mr. Gray: The Consolidated Revenue Fund is made up of moneys raised from the taxpayers of Canada generally.

Mr. Stevens: That is right—you bet.

Mr. Gray: Only the balance of the indexing benefit, that is approximately 10 per cent of those payments, comes directly from the supplementary retirement benefits account. This is the separate account set up to receive employees and employer contributions to provide for pension indexation.

To explain why this is so, I would remind Hon. Members that the present law provides what amounts to full indexation for inflation to all Public Service pensioners and their survivors. But an indexation program was first introduced only in 1970 and a large number of such pensioners retired before that date. Those who retired before 1970 made no contribution for indexing, and the majority of those retired in the years since 1970 have contributed only a small portion of the over-all costs of the benefits being paid.

Those critics of Bill C-133 who are aware of all this say yes, but if the supplementary retirement benefits account was combined with the basic pension accounts, there would be sufficient funds to support full indexation. Again, this is not the case. Looking at the program as a whole, if funds were taken from the basic accounts to support full indexing, shortages would arise in these accounts so that the basic pensions would no longer be properly funded.

Some of those who have commented on Bill C-133 have referred to an alleged $14 billion surplus in the public service superannuation account.

Mr. Stevens: They are crazy.

Mr. Gray: I am informed that no such surplus exists.

Mr. Stevens: That is right.

Mr. Gray: The $14 billion presumably refers to the balance in that account as of the last fiscal year end, that is, March 31, 1982. The balance at this time is in fact $15.5 billion. However, the important thing to note is that this money represents the amount which, together with future interest earnings, is needed to pay the accrued basic superannuation benefits—the basic pension—to all existing Public Service pensioners and their survivors, as well as the benefits which have been earned to date by current employees.

Other arguments have been made to the effect that the Government has broken a contractual agreement with its pensioners and has also violated an agreement that unilateral changes would not be made in the public service pension plan without prior consultation with employee representatives. While I regret that prior discussions did not take place before the June budget on this matter, I can only say that this measure was proposed as part of the over-all restraint program announced in that budget, and that it is not normal practice to reveal measures, so announced, in advance.

The capping of indexing for inflation is a temporary measure for two years which is, of course, quite different from any permanent changes which might be proposed for the plan and which would be discussed in advance.

With respect to the alleged contractual nature of pension arrangements, as Hon. Members are aware, there is no formal contract which parallels the written wage contracts existing between the Government, as an employer, and its employees. While I gather there was consultation with employee representatives on the question of providing full indexing for inflation of Public Service pensions prior to that program being implemented, it in fact came about through a Bill introduced by the Government and approved by Parliament in 1973. Therefore, it would be more realistic to view such pension arrangements as being long-term but, at the same time, flexible and involving the employer and generations of employees, where changes can be made in the relevant legislation to reflect varying economic circumstances.

This was, in fact, what happened in 1973 when Parliament adopted the policy of full indexing of Public Service pensions and took the additional step of applying that policy retroactively to many persons who had paid little or even no extra contributions at all. Also, another modification to reflect economic circumstances was made as part of the Anti-Inflation Board program when Parliament put a cap on Public Service indexing to limit it to an increase of $2,400 for 1976.

Notwithstanding these comments, however, and due in large measure to the representations of several members of our caucus supporting the Government, the Government has given additional consideration to how six and five should apply to the Public Service pension arrangements. The Government recognizes that there are retirees who have made some contributions towards the cost of indexation and that moneys are set aside for this purpose in the supplementary retirement benefits account. The Government has accordingly given further consideration to whether the capping measure should apply both to that portion of the benefits paid out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund. As a result, it has concluded that indeed the capping should not apply to both of these portions.

Therefore, I propose to move, at an appropriate later stage in the debate on Bill C-133, an amendment which would be based on the principle that the six and five cap would apply only to that portion of the indexing which would be paid out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund—that is, from general tax revenues—but not to the indexing which would be charged against employees' credits in the supplementary retirement benefits account—that is, coming from direct contributions by employees and by the employer specifically for indexing.

Such an amendment would be in keeping with the Government's over-all approach on the application of the restraint measures to federal allowances and pensions. That is to say, as the House knows, the Government has proposed that the programs financed out of general tax revenues, the Family Allowance and Old Age Security, would have temporary limits placed on their increases in indexing for two years. However, the Canada Pension Plan, for which direct contributions are made by employees and employers, has not been included in the six and five restraint program.

The effect of the amendment will be to limit the increase in Public Service pensions to 6.5 per cent in 1983 and 5.5 per cent in 1984. The funds available for reallocation to job creation after adjusting for the proposed change are estimated to be $60 million in 1983 and $105 million in 1984.

I want to stress that the Government remains committed to the principle that retired Canadians have protection against the effects of inflation. That is why we are proposing that over the next two years indexing for inflation for recipients of the Old Age Security and the Public Service pension will continue up to the limits to be set for the restraint program. The six and five program does not reduce any inflation protection which has been paid to date. What is proposed is a limit on the amounts for increases in indexing payable from general revenues during the restraint period.

As I said earlier, Canada Pension Plan benefits remain fully indexed, as do the income security benefits of those drawing the Guaranteed Income Supplement so that a measure of full inflation protection will remain on a portion of the incomes of many retirees, including recipients of Public Service pensions. More important, though, is the effect of the six and five program on breaking inflationary expectations. As the consumer price index, interest rates generally and mortgage rates come down, any real income losses from the cap on increases in indexing will disappear.

I know that the introduction of this Bill and the public discussions surrounding it have raised many questions about the state of the superannuation and indexing accounts. These include questions on the funding and financing of the program, the philosophy behind the use of the funds in the accounts and whether the various accounts should be combined, just to name a few of the issues or questions. However, I regard these as long-term issues and I believe these must be addressed in the context of the debate which will take place over the coming months about the direction and form of our national pension system, both public and private, once the green paper on national pension reform is released later this month.

Let me assure everyone that there will be full opportunity for consultation before any changes are decided upon and any proposals made to Parliament concerning the superannuation plans of federal Public Service employees. In passing, I want to recall the work done on these issues by the Miscellaneous Estimates Committee in a previous Parliament.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, all Canadians should be very happy about the successful results so far of the 6 and 5 program and the promising signs of further success in the near future. We are getting closer to the 6 and 5 era, which is the purpose of the first stage of this important program.

[English]

A review of retail prices since the June 28 launching of the program shows inflation moderating. On an annual basis, inflation in October was an even 10 per cent, the lowest rate since May, 1980. On a monthly basis, inflation in October was 0.6 per cent.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, considering the 0.5 per cent recorded in July, August and September, we can certainly say that inflation is stabilizing at the levels we have set. If we continue this trend, it will also help to stabilize the real income of Canadians, including retired Canadians.

[English]

To conclude, let me repeat that this Bill is part of a broad policy package intended to steer us toward lower inflation and renewed economic growth. Therefore, I urge all Members to support this Bill and its early adoption.

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, we have just heard an extraordinary speech by the Minister. Just a few moments ago in one of the last passages of his discourse to the House, the Minister said there would be full consultation before any changes would be made in the superannuation program affecting the public servant. It is interesting to note that that promise about full consultation was made some time ago. It is precisely that promise which the serving public servant and the superannuates say was broken.

I do not know why anyone in the federal Public Service, anyone who represents federal public servants or anyone who is interested in the question of equity and good conscience in terms of this matter should be prepared to accept that representation by the Minister. He read carefully from a prepared text. I do not know why he should expect that when we had similar undertakings from the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the former President of the Treasury Board with respect to the same kind of consultation—no changes regarding inflation as an eroding power on superannuates' income.

Earlier in his speech the Minister said, and none of us is quite sure what he meant, that this amendment would limit increases in 1983 and 1984 respectively to 6.5 per cent and 5.5 per cent. I believe that is what he said. What he is saying to this House is that with 0.5 per cent, "I can buy you". That is what he is saying to all the people he is today asking to support his program.

Instead of having a six and five program, apparently it is now a 6.5 and 5.5 program. That is what he seems to be suggesting to the Members of this House. We will have to examine it in some detail, but that is what he said today.

I am going to deal with the problem that affects certain members of this House of Commons and a little later, I hope, a much larger number. If anyone who is interested in this program regards it as a great leap forward in equity, they had better think about it overnight. They will have some time to think about it before they leap and grab at this, clutch it and hold it close to their bosom as a salvation.

What this represents is not a great victory but a failure by Members of Parliament to persuade the Government. They did their best to attempt to succeed with respect to this, but it is a great failure.

The Minister was very careful not to tell this House what this Bill is. He set it in a broad framework. I will tell Members what it is. It is part of a vicious trilogy of legislation being dealt with in this House of Commons. We are not through dealing with it all; This is the third leg of the vicious trilogy of legislation.

The first piece of legislation, which affects those who are not in a position to look after themselves, is Bill C-131 dealing with the recipients of Old Age Security. The Government decided that the senior citizens would be put into the trenches to be the cannon fodder in this fight against inflation.

The second thing they are saying is that mothers of young families, the young children themselves, are to be the second tier in the trenches behind the Old Age Security recipients under Bill C-132 dealing with Family Allowances and limitations thereto.

The third leg in the trilogy is the public servants. That is an interesting phrase. Let me tell you what that means in terms of who it affects, Mr. Speaker. Broadly speaking, it affects every serving public servant because the six and five program as applied in Bill C-124 has an effect thereafter on their best six years. It affects every retired public servant because the six and five program as applied in Bill C-124 has an effect thereafter on their best six years. It affects every retired public servant because the retired public servants are grateful for the support willingly given to their superannuation by those who are still working. It affects every serving and retired employee of every Crown agency and Crown corporation in the country. It affects the Members of this place, certainly, and Her Majesty's judges. More importantly than that, if affects every member of the Canadian Armed Forces, both serving and retired. It affects as well those who are serving and those who have served in the Royal Canadian Mounted Police.

The group which is sometimes forgotten in all of this discussion about six and five is not just those who are still in the work force in the broad public sector and, therefore, have some clout in terms of future bargaining, but the wives, the widows and the children of those who are serving and those who have served. Those are the ones who are affected by this piece of legislation.

I am going to characterize this Bill, even with the amendment which we are going to have a chance to look at and the figures which are going to be produced later on, in this way: it is a mean, vicious, wretched, immoral act of this Government. That is how it ought to be characterized. Any Government which would put those who have retired into the trenches with respect to the battle against inflation and run them ahead of itself as the shield against inflation ought to be ashamed of itself.

I do not think the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray) ought to count this as a red letter day in his ministerial life. This is his first major piece of legislation. Bill C-119 was his first piece of legislation and that was nothing of which one can be terribly proud. In fact, it has not yet even been scheduled at the Miscellaneous Estimates Committee. In any event, I do not believe the Minister should be proud that his first major piece of legislation is a Bill that breaches faith and an undertaking and defies a moral obligation. Whether this Government likes it or not, the funds with which we are dealing, never mind the statements which have been made, every contribution which has ever been made over the last 50 years, is a contribution of funds which are impressed with a trust. If you or I, Mr. Speaker, tried to convert moneys impressed with a trust from one purpose to another, the Crown Attorney would be called in. Governments are no better than anyone else, even majority Governments. It is a breach of a moral obligation to the serving public servant as well as those who have served in the broad sense I have described, including the wives, the widows and the children.

This piece of legislation is unsupportable. The gall of this Government in this matter is breathtaking, to move in that direction and then to say, "But we will consult a little further now". What happened to the consultation before? Our Party is opposed to this Bill; make no mistake about that. This piece of legislation to cut indexing for serving and retired public servants so that their incomes in retirement will not reflect the cost of living is being proposed by the same Government which decided it would be a good thing one way or the other to index mortgages. It said that in the budget. The Lortie Commission dumped on it, but that proposal has not gone to sleep because the Economic Council of Canada has decided it would be a good thing to index mortgages for, supposedly, younger people buying homes, people still in the work force who can protect themselves. But with respect to that group of public servants who are said to be docile, quiet, who do not make much noise and are not very popular in the country, "We'll deal with them; we'll cut their indexing. We won't let that be reflected".

There is another side to this, Mr. Speaker. This same Government which is asking for a cap on indexing is exactly the same Government which looks after its friends. You must have read in the paper, as I have, about the generous golden handshake for the senior public servant, Michael Pitfield. It is marvellous what the Government has done for him with respect to his pension. It is allowing Michael Pitfield to leave the Public Service with a special deal which will allow him to contribute to his indexed Public Service pension at a certain rate so that when he has reached the period of life when he, too, can no longer bargain, he is going to be protected, even though he did not serve, even though he decided to leave voluntarily. It is generous, Mr. Speaker. This is what the Order in Council said, and I quote:

—to approve . . . the continued participation of Mr. P. M. Pitfield under the Public Service Superannuation Act on the basis that he shall contribute 50 per cent of the contributions payable under the act until such time as he takes his pension, the other 50 per cent of the contributions to be paid by the Government—

I should add, a "grateful" Government. The article continues:

—and . . . to deem . . . the salary of Mr. P. M. Pitfield to be at the 8th decile of the DM-3 level as amended from time to time until he takes his pension."

An Hon. Member: What is that level?

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): What is that level, my hon. friend asks. At his present rate of pay, it could easily total $100,000 by the time he is eligible for retirement at the age of 55 on June 18, 1992. There is still a Santa Claus, Mr. Speaker. And yet, for the least of the public servants, for the least of the widows, for the least of the children of public servants, that Minister has the gall to stand up in the House and say: "We are going to do it for Pitfield, but we are not going to do it for you".

• (1540)

Well, Mr. Speaker, we do not intend to stand idly by and see that kind of thing happen. The Government might as well face up to that. Technically, Michael Pitfield could have worked for the Government for 20 years and be paid for 40 through his pension, at the level of a Deputy Minister. That is really generosity worth noting in this country. Yes, Virginia, there is a Santa Claus! Is there not someone over there who can blush at that? Cannot the former President of the Treasury Board, who has now gone to his glory in another portfolio, blush at that? Is there no one over there who does not see the injustice of it all? Is there anyone over there as my friend, the Hon. Member for Annapolis Valley-Hants (Mr. Nowlan) says, without a sense of shame? I hope there is. I hope there is someone over there with the guts to stand up against that kind of inequity for the least of those in the Public Service.

Does the Government need to renege on its contractual obligations, Mr. Speaker? I am going to read from a letter to the Editor of the Ottawa Citizen where that question was put. This is the answer:

> The refusal to honour indexing commitments for public servants would reduce the government deficit by less then $60 million in the present fiscal year (based on an average contribution per pensioner of approximately $450 less income tax). That is a substantial sum, but placed against a budget deficit of $23 billion, it will not do much to reduce inflation.
> What is really at stake is public trust and confidence in the government. While it may be politically opportune for the government to make public servants and public service pensioners "whipping boys" to divert attention from much more serious matters, the question is, who will be next? Will the government decide to default on other contract commitments?
> In the conduct of affairs, whether they be public or private, the "broader principle" is that there must be rules for the game. Neither governments nor individuals should be allowed to change the rules to fit personal convenience. In that direction lies chaos and anarchy.

That is the reason the community is aroused about this matter, whether you are talking about old age pensions, mothers' allowance or this Bill in particular. It is a breach of trust, pure and simple, a breach of a moral obligation. That is why we oppose this Bill.

Members know the history of this legislation, Mr. Speaker. They know it has been some 50 years in development. They know it was Arnold Heeney who indicated clearly that there was an undertaking and obligation to serving public servants which ought to be met. When public servants of that day wanted to have pensions bargainable, the Government said no, that could be difficult. It could lead to all kinds of anomalies and problems. "Do not make it bargainable and we will make a deal with you; we will not change those things without consultation".

That is the history. The Government held to the bargain for a long period of time. In 1973 the Government finally took the 2 per cent cap off. I spoke for my Party in 1973 and said it was a good thing. Why? Because indexation does not put public servants marching ahead of the economy; it keeps them up to date. It just keeps them in line. Why is it a good thing that we keep those people in line? For the same reasons that we keep recipients of the Canada Pension Plan in line—because we have a special obligation to those who have gone ahead. This Bill is a denial of that obligation. I read in 1974 the directive of the Treasury Board that said it was the policy of the Government to keep everyone in line to ensure that no one would lag behind. That was the reason for indexation. I read what the Prime Minister said in a letter to the National President of the Defence Employees' Association. This is what the Prime Minister said on October 12, 1977:

> In our society, pensions provide a means of sharing risk so that we can retire in reasonable security and dignity, without fear of the future. Protecting pensions from inflation by indexing them to increases in the cost of living should be an integral part of our pension schemes.

It was, it is, and if this Bill fails, it will still be. He goes on:

> Indexing does not give pensioners an increasingly larger claim on our economy's production—

Remember that, my friends in the Liberal Party; that is what your Prime Minister said. He continued:

> —that is, more money to buy things they could not earlier afford. Rather indexing merely enables pensioners to maintain, roughly, their same standard of living.

I do not normally quote the Prime Minister, but it may be only the Prime Minister whose words will have some influence on those over in that party who can change the course of this legislation if they want to. The Prime Minister went on to say this:

> Even a modest rate of inflation destroys, at a devastating rate, the buying power of people on fixed incomes. Pensioners are out of the workforce and cannot bargain or strike for larger incomes. They are not the cause of inflation; they are its victim. We have an obligation to help protect them.

That is what the Prime Minister of Canada said in 1977 when the problems facing pensioners then were not as serious as they are now. If that was the truth in 1977, why has it suddenly become the anti-truth in 1982? Why has the situation suddenly changed? When he said that, the need for protection was not as great and the disparity was not as great as it is now. Yet today, when we have all those problems, and with increasing uncertainty, suddenly the Liberal Party, the Liberal Government, changes course and puts all pensioners in the front line of the fight against inflation.

In 1981, the then President of the Treasury Board said it was the position of the Government that public servants would be protected from inflation. At the Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates not too long ago he said, in answer to a question of mine, that it was not the intention of the Government to bring in legislation to deal in isolation and individually with Public Service pensions.

Mr. Nielsen: He is listening to you now.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): But that it would be considered as part of an over-all program of pension reform. That is fair ball, but this is discriminatory. When you move a Minister from one portfolio to another, does it mean that what was the truth before can become a lie today? I suggest not, and no one in the country will believe it.

You will never convince, Mr. Speaker, the serving public servant that the money we are talking about does not belong to him, that he did not contribute, that there is not a contract or an obligation, because the argument is irrefutable.

• (1550)

As best I can, I have given the history and this will be examined in committee if the Bill goes through. The Bill will never get to committee, of course, if some Members of the Liberal Party do their job.

I am told the legislation would rob the average pensioner of about $1,200 over the next two years, would impoverish them and drastically lower their standard of living. Some people think that Public Service pensions and the pensions paid to widows are huge and that these people walk around with their pockets heavy with coinage from the pension to which they have contributed through an arrangement made by the Government. That is not so, Mr. Speaker. Former public sector workers and their survivors currently receive an average pension of only $6,900. That is better than nothing, but it is not a large pension. These are the people who will be affected by the Bill.

I think that the public should know that the Senate of Canada maintains that a two-person family earning less than $11,030 in 1980 was said to live in abject poverty. The Government would like to weave a fantasy of wealthy public servants with both feet in the public trough. But that is not so, Mr. Speaker. Even if it were partially true, any Government would have to think twice before it attacked those who cannot protect themselves; but that is what the Government is doing through this Bill.

I want to speak to my friends in the House who have spoken out about this legislation, Mr. Speaker. The discussion first started in the warm days of July, 1982 when the breezes that flowed over the Ottawa River had a remarkable effect on some Members. The Ottawa Citizen of July 9, 1982 quoted the Hon. Member for Ottawa West (Mr. Francis) as follows:

> I personally find it unacceptable that the government plans to limit pension indexation. The government is a trustee of the indexation fund but the money belongs to the pensioners.

No doubt the Hon. Member will be speaking in this debate and will develop what I think is a fairly reasonable theory about where payments can be made. If he speaks, he will condemn the President of the Treasury Board for the line of reasoning he has brought forward. I certainly expect him to enter this debate and to oppose the Bill.

Then the Hon. Member for Hull (Mr. Isabelle), who is in the House listening to the debate today, spoke on the matter when the proposal to limit indexation was included in one of the MacEachen budgets. The same Ottawa Citizen article reported him as saying:

> —they should leave the pensions at full indexation. Eighty per cent of retired civil servants are not getting very big pensions and most are out of the workforce so they can't increase their incomes.

I agree with him; he is right. Some time during the course of this debate I want him to stand up and say this. When the time comes, I want him to put his vote where I believe his mouth is—that is, to oppose the Bill.

The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans), who is my good friend, is also in the House today. That Ottawa Citizen article quoted him as saying:

> I have not seen any evidence that the contributions paid to the supplementary fund are inadequate and that the fund is not solvent.
> I want to take a good hard look at the government proposals.

I assume he has taken a good hard look, Mr. Speaker. I shared a platform with him at the RA Centre the other night when he made what I call a courageous speech, indicating that he opposed the Government's proposal to reduce indexation to six and five. I presume he will not be purchased or bought by 6.5 and 5.5.

Then there is the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), the Chairman of the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates on which I have the honour to serve and which will deal with this Bill. According to that Ottawa Citizen article he said that the pension indexation fund:

> —is similar to investing your money at a trust company. There is now $889 million in the indexation fund and it is paying a 14.9 per cent return on investments.

That is not bad, Mr. Speaker. He went on to say:

> Suddenly one day the trust company phones up to announce that arbitrarily and unilaterally it will only pay six per cent because the customer is expected to set an example.

He was also at the public meeting at the RA Centre. He and I had the privilege of sharing the platform. At that time he gave us a trust company analogy in both official languages and he said he was going to stand against this measure. There was not a public servant of the some 800 in the hall who did not understand that and left the meeting with content in his heart that the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) was on his side.

At that great meeting at the RA Association there was also the Hon. Member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert). He had been denied a pension. He said he was opposed to this, that he supported indexation, that this was not the Government's money but it belonged to public servants. He pointed to the audience of public servants and superannuates who agreed that it was their money and who cheered him to the rafters. They even tolerated him when he said that, on the other hand, he was a Liberal and would not want to vote against the Party. He gave the clear impression, however, that his heart was in the right place but that his vote might be in the wrong place. It was marvellous that night. There was an ecumenical euphoria in the hall when Liberal after Liberal stood up and said: "We are opposed. We will vote against it.". One said, "We do not want the Tories in office again; we don't want to risk it." I will help them out with suggestions about how we can get around that in a few minutes, Mr. Speaker.

I want to talk now about something that has worried me. I go to church from time to time and every now and again my minister warns me against backsliding. The Hon. Member for Provencher (Mr. Epp) understands what I am coming to. I suspect the person who spiritually ministers to the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier has warned him against backsliding from time to time as well. That is why I was shocked to read the headline in the Ottawa Citizen of November 25, 1982: "Grit MPs back off from revolt over PS pensions".

As I have said, as the Hon. Member for Provencher has said, as the Hon. Member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) has said, as the Hon. Member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon) has said, as the Hon. Member for St. Catharines (Mr. Reid) has said and as the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) has said, they could hardly believe what they read, in view of the courage that had been exhibited at the Recreation Centre in front of 800 public servants. The Member for Ottawa-Vanier said they were worried about bringing down the Government; that it was a matter of confidence in the Government if they voted against the Bill.

I agree that it is a serious vote, given that the President of the Treasury Board characterized it as an absolutely essential part of the six and five program. I just do not believe the President of the Treasury Board when he says that it is essential, but that is his view. In any event, these Liberals have indicated that it would be a blow and that they were worried about bringing down the Government.

I will help them out because I believe the fate of the Bill does not lie with the New Democratic Party or with the Progressive Conservative Party. Its fate lies with the backbenchers of the Liberal Party. The question of retired public servants lies with those Members of the Liberal Party who are prepared to put their votes where their mouths are. There may be more. The rate of this Bill also lies with those who believe in simple justice and wonder whether it is right to deny a moral obligation which has stood the test of time, which has been backed by the Prime Minister and by former Presidents of the Treasury Board, and which has been relied upon by people who made their retirement plans on the basis of these things, those who are no longer in the work force. It lies just as much with Members of Parliament outside the National Capital as it does with Members of Parliament within the National Capital, but it lies very heavily on the latter because they represent the largest single group.

I want my friends opposite to remember that there are federal public servants in British Columbia, Alberta, Saskatchewan, Manitoba, Ontario, Quebec and the Maritime Provinces. There are federal public servants who serve with our troops in Lahr and Baden. There are federal public servants in the Middle East. There are federal public servants all over the world. Their eyes are on Parliament today. I know it is difficult for some of my friends in the Liberal Party to rise and vote against their Party. It is tough. It is not in the Canadian tradition.

When we dealt with Bill C-131, I said that I would give them an opportunity, that I would plead with them and that I would try to help them. I want to tell them how. It should be a blow to the Government for sure, but it would be a blow to the Government worth sustaining. I put it to my friends that it would not bring down the Government. Is there anyone in his right mind who believes that the federal Government or the Liberal Party would want to go to the country riding on the backs of old age pensioners, retired public servants and those in receipt of Family Allowances? Is there anyone who believes that they really want to go to the country? Nobody does. They know in their heart of hearts that, although it would be a blow to the Government, it would be the best message the Government ever received. They would be saying: "Send back the Bill, redo the Bill, rethink our attitude". Then the very next day the Government House Leader, aided and abetted by his Parliamentary Secretary who sits in the House today, would have a motion in which the House would be asked again to vote confidence in the Government.

Do Hon. Members remember Lester Bowles Pearson who did exactly that? I did not like it any more than anyone else. It was a dilution of the things we knew about the British parliamentary system, but there it stands as a precedent.

Mr. Evans: Why didn't you do it?

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Because we were dealing with a budget. I have never held that a budget as such or a budget motion is anything other than a matter of confidence. This is not. This is a Bill arising out of the budget, the budget already having been approved by the majority of the Members of the House of Commons. There is quite a difference. I tell the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre that he should think about it overnight. I say to him, "Give the Government a message". They should rise on their hind legs, defeat the Bill and send it back.

If they do not do so, people will wonder ever again whether or not the word of the Government or those who say they are opposed to a measure can be accepted. They will wonder ever again, if there is a public meeting a little later about indexed pensions or anything else, whether or not those who speak and take positions can be believed and relied on.

I tell my dear friends that it is absolutely important for everyone to understand that the eyes of a great number of Canadians, 300,000 public servants and other people who care about reasonable equity and justice, have been and will be on the House of Commons as we deal with Bill C-131, Bill C-132 and Bill C-133. I want to give the Government a chance. I want to give backbenchers a chance to think about it. I want to give their caucus a chance to think about it. It is for that purpose that I will move an amendment which I hope will be supported by my friends in the Liberal Party, on whom the fate of this legislation rests when the matter comes to a vote. Therefore I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Provencher (Mr. Epp):

That the motion be amended by deleting all the words after the word "That" and substituting the following therefor:

"Bill C-133, an Act to amend the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act (No. 2), be not now read a second time but that it be read a second time this day six months hence."

Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act (No. 2)

The Hon. Member for Provencher, a Member from western Canada, is prepared to support this amendment. The purpose of it is to indicate that there can be time for those opposed to inequity, to injustice, to the breach of moral obligation and to the breach of contract by the Government with its employees, to prevail upon the leaders and the Treasury Board to breathe some life in 1982 into the statements made by the Prime Minister in 1977.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Sid Parker (Kootenay East-Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, I noted with interest the comments of the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker). In his closing remarks he stated that this was a breach of contract. He should realize that when the six and five program was brought in under Bill C-124, which his Party supported, it was also a breach of contract with many Canadians across the country. He and his Party supported it. In fact, his Leader stated that they had not gone far enough. Now the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray) is starting to go a bit further.

It is a sad day for me that I have to rise in the House to speak on Bill C-133. It is difficult to discuss the Bill before the House of Commons because so much of the language which we need to describe the Bill is unparliamentary. For example, it removes pension protections for which public servants have already paid. What do we call a person who takes something that belongs to another person without that person's consent? This is what I want to ask. The Bill also provides a pension level less than that promised to public servants. What do we call it when a person sells something to another person and delivers much less than he promised?

Then there are the Conservatives. The Conservatives say they oppose this Bill. They say they oppose it in the same way they oppose the Bill to reduce indexing on Old Age Security. But what are the Conservatives going to do with that opposition? They are not going to do very much. Even last November 18, when the subject of Bill C-133 came up in the House, the Conservative House Leader asked the Government House Leader whether he would bring the Bill forward the following day so they could deal with it expeditiously.

There is also a word for a person who claims to oppose something but then does nothing to back it up. We cannot use any of those words in the House of Commons. If we cannot use the words describing what this Bill really does in Parliament, we can at least describe the effect it will have.

First and most important, this Bill will permanently reduce by 10 per cent the real incomes of over 150,000 retired federal public servants. Thousands more widows or retired public servants will see their incomes cut as well.

Once again, the Government has tried to say that this Bill will only affect people who can afford to be affected. The average pension of people retiring in 1982 is $8,100. The average pension of all retirees from the federal Public Service is $6,900. The average pension going to widows of public servants is $3,200.

Let us put these figures into perspective. A couple living in one of Canada's largest cities requires an income of nearly $12,000 annually to keep above the poverty line. If inflation for 1983 and 1984 remains in the area of 10 per cent, which seems likely, people retiring this year will see their real pension income decreased in purchasing power by about $1,400. People receiving survivors' pensions will see their purchasing power drop by over $500. While this is happening, there are no guarantees about prices. What happens when housing costs and rents go up, energy and heating costs go up, food costs go up, medical costs go up, a factor very important to senior citizens?

Pensioners are not just facing a temporary loss of income. When our economy recovers and our workers return to their jobs, they may be able to catch up with some of the losses they have incurred. They may do this through productivity or bargaining. But pensioners will never catch up because they will never have that opportunity.

This Bill and Bill C-131 impose pension cutbacks which will reduce the incomes of retirees for the rest of their lives by making their pension base lower. That is a fact that must be understood.

One idea that must be put to rest in the House today is that the pensions attacked by Bill C-133 are some sort of Government charity. They are not. They are pensions which have been bought and paid for by working public servants.

Since 1924 public servants have had sums deducted from their wages to pay for retirement pensions. Like many employers in the private sector, the Government also makes contributions to the pension funds and interest on those funds is added. The difference is in the amount paid by public servants. Public servants pay a base rate of 6.5 per cent of their salaries into pension contributions, which include the Canada Pension Plan. Over and above that amount, and this must be understood, public servants pay a further 1 per cent of their salaries into an indexing fund to cover the costs of indexed pensions. In fact, public servants pay one of the highest pension contribution rates of any employer-sponsored pension plan in Canada. The Government is also aware that there is enough money in the pension funds to pay the pensions of retired public servants, even though the Government has paid a very low rate of return on the money it has held for pension purposes.

Public servants have chosen to pay a larger portion of their incomes into pension plans than other people, and for a very good reason. They know that pension plan contributions are a form of deferred income. They are putting off a portion of their income today for their future needs. Public servants chose to put off a larger than usual portion of their incomes in order to guarantee themselves a secure retirement, protected from the ravages of inflation. Throughout their working lives public servants paid a portion of their pay cheque to give themselves a safe future. On the basis of that indexed pension, which they had paid for, many public servants have taken an early retirement.

That secure future, paid for during their working lives, is now being threatened by this Bill, which will reduce their standard of living by 10 per cent. In essence, we know that pensions are nothing more than a way of putting off earnings until retirement. The Government, through this Bill, is, in effect, confiscating a part of those previously earned wages. For working public servants, wage controls will affect their present and their future wages. Retired public servants, through this Bill, are actually having their wages reduced retroactively. The pension indexing which is being stolen from these retired public servants has been acknowledged as a vital part of their pensions. Let me quote one important commentator on this subject as follows:

—Put simply, people must be protected in their retirement years. The Canadian Government has pledged that they will be better protected in the future than they are now—

Pensions which are not protected against inflation naturally tend to dwindle over the years. People who thought they had purchased protection for the rest of their lives find that they have more serious financial problems the older they become. The unfairness of that situation, particularly when the savings pool to which they have contributed may have been reaping inflationary interest premiums, is not tolerable in a nation which believes in social justice—

The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said that at the 1981 National Pension Conference. For the President of the Treasury Board to bring in this Bill now on behalf of the Government of Canada is a disgrace and a shame.

However, the then President of the Treasury Board made similar comments to those of the Prime Minister last year concerning public service pensions. He agreed that our pensions were indeed simply deferred wages and said:

The federal Government remains dedicated to the principle that public servants' pensions are to be protected from inflation.

I see the former President of the Treasury Board is sitting in his place and laughing. He will not be standing up with some of his backbenchers who have indicated that they may vote against this Bill. No doubt they will be properly told to get back in line.

The action being taken by the Government is so morally wrong that it has even forbidden companies in the private sector to do the same thing. Pension plans, registered under the Canada Income Tax Act, are prohibited by law from reducing either benefits or any right to benefits of a supplementary pension. What is illegally and morally wrong for insurance companies is now before the House as Government policy.

When collective bargaining was being introduced to the federal public sector many years ago, the Government approached the associations which existed at that time. The Government proposed to exclude superannuation from collective bargaining. In return, the Government said there would be unilateral changes in the program. That was a gentleman's agreement. It is now pretty clear just how much a gentleman's agreement with a Liberal Government is worth. It is something like the iron-clad guarantee made by the former Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources when we were dealing with the Alaska pipeline. I imagine there are some retired public servants who are now wondering just how much the word of any Liberal Government is worth.

Mr. Murphy: Less than 6 per cent.

Mr. Parker: I think they must also take into consideration the fact that when they elect these members, it is the policies of the Liberal Party and of the Conservative Party for which they are voting, not the individual. It is evident that the individual cannot carry the load for the electorate and cannot entice the Government to carry out programs for the protection of the people.

Just a couple of weeks ago, the Public Service unions in this community held a public meeting for retired public servants. Nearly 1,000 people came. Many were turned away, as was mentioned by the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) during his speech. However, before that audience of 1,000 people, the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) and the Hon. Member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert) promised that they would fight the Bill and vote against it. Those were pretty tough fighting words.

Unfortunately, those tough fighting words lasted only until the audience had gone home. Within days, those two Hon. Members changed their minds and said they would vote for the Bill. At this time, I would like Hon. Members to know that when we were at that meeting here in Ottawa, which I attended, we were told by the chairman of the committee that there was a vote in the House and that we must return to the House. That is how the meeting dispersed that night. In fact, when I returned to the House I found that there was no vote being held in the House.

Mr. Murphy: Cowardly behaviour.

Mr. Parker: I do not know where that information originated. A disservice was done to the Public Service of Canada because that fact was not admitted while the audience was still there. That would have been more courageous and honourable. At least the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin), who could not break Cabinet solidarity, had the decency to make his position clear by refusing to attend.

The Official Opposition has also been playing fast and loose with its stand on the Bill. The Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton told those at that same meeting that his party would do everything in its power to prevent the passage of the Bill.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): That is why we moved the motion today.

Mr. Parker: He conveniently forgot to mention the promise of his House leader that if the Government would bring the Bill forward, the Conservatives would deal with it expeditiously.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): We cut its throat.

Mr. Parker: That does not come as any surprise, either. When the Government brought forward its six and five budget last summer, the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) had only one complaint. The Leader of the Conservative Party said that the idea did not go far enough. The Bill must go far enough even for the Leader of the Opposition now. We think the Bill goes too far. We think it is an outright theft of wages put away by public servants in the past toward their old age. We think it is nothing more than a raid by the Government on the pension account which will end up with retirees losing $100 million. We think it is a move which will drive thousands of retired public servants below the poverty line in their standard of living. Perhaps most of all, we think it is a betrayal of the Government's own employees. Never again will a Government employee be able to trust the word of the Government as to how its pension funds are handled. They will always know that at any point in the future the Government may unilaterally reduce their pensions or raid their pension account for its own purposes. That betrayal of the trust and confidence of public servants will have longer-term consequences than those of which the Government may be aware.

In closing, I can do no better than to quote the words of our own House Leader when he was speaking on Bill C-131, the Old Age Security Act. At that time he said: "We are not only opposed to the point where we want to vote against this Bill, but we are opposed to the point where we will not facilitate its passage in any way". That quote stands on the record.

We have raised a number of issues. I would urge the Government to reconsider what it is doing, to withdraw the Bill at the present time and look for other sources of money than taking it on the backs of civil servants and from the indexing of their pensions.

Mr. Hal Herbert (Vaudreuil): Mr. Speaker, no doubt some will find it strange that I should be speaking this afternoon; first, that I should have chosen to speak and, second, that the Government should be allowing me to speak this afternoon on this Bill in view of the remarks that I have made publicly and which I will be repeating this afternoon.

The reason I have chosen to speak is that I have heard so much rhetoric from Hon. Members of the Opposition in the last several days on Bill C-131 and C-132 that I felt that for my own constituents, at least public servants and retired public servants in my riding, it would be a good thing for me to put my position on the record in totality, so that there is no misunderstanding about the position I have taken on this Bill.

I have just listened to the remarks of the Hon. Member for Kootenay East-Revelstoke (Mr. Parker), which remarks do not surprise me. It is same socialist line we have been hearing in the last several days. I will allow only one thing: it is consistent with what I expected to hear from him. In fact, he only said one thing that surprised me. He said he found it difficult to discuss the Bill. I would have thought he would find it very easy to discuss the Bill. Certainly I will not have any difficulty in discussing the Bill. However, I will particularly address my remarks this afternoon toward the Tory Party, because it is the hypocrisy which I have heard from that Party in the last several days which makes me angry enough to want to speak this afternoon.

First, I have publicly said that I do not like Bill C-133, and I repeat it. It is simple. I do not like it simply because we are reducing the expectations of retirees from the Public Service. We are cutting down the amount that they were expecting to receive in 1983 and 1984. That is a fact and no one can deny it. However, it should be abundantly apparent that if we succeed in reducing the rate of inflation in 1983 to 6 per cent, the amount they will receive next year, 6 per cent, will compensate them for the increase in the cost of living.

Which, of course, brings us to the Government's efforts to reduce inflation and to do it across the board. I must ask myself, first of all, whether it is fair to apply these reductions to the superannuation payments of public servants. Certainly I have publicly said that I believe that public servants have, with their own money, purchased something. I will come to the definition of "something" in a minute. They believe that they have purchased full indexing of their pensions. However, with what did they pay for full indexing? Those who retired previous to the imposition of the charge for indexation paid nothing whatsoever. Those who have retired since, those who retired before 1975, have paid one-half per cent. Those who have retired since 1975 have paid 1 per cent.

Quite apparently, even with a person who has recently retired in the last year and has contributed to indexing since the 1975 change to 1 per cent, or the one-half per cent prior to that, the amount of that contribution is certainly inadequate to cover the amount of indexation for all the years ahead. Thus one could argue that if the amount is inadequate maybe the Government should have approached it in a different fashion, that it should have increased the levy on public servants. That is one approach that one can take.

I have also argued that the Government, and I hope this will happen fairly soon, should put together the amount that is in the fund to cover indexation with the amount that is in the original fund to cover pensions, and that these two together should be enough to cover indexing in future years. It should be abundantly apparent that even the amount that is presently in the fund to cover indexation is more than enough if we can reduce the rate of inflation to a low level of, say, 3 per cent, 4 per cent, or 5 per cent.

I did indicate at the meeting which was held on Monday evening, November 22, at the Recreation Centre in Ottawa, that I did not like Bill C-133. At the same meeting I was asked the direct question: "Will you vote against Bill C-133?" I said: "No, I will not". I want to explain that in full right here and now.

First of all, I was elected as a Liberal to support Government policy.

Mr. Nickerson: Even if you do not agree with it.

Mr. Herbert: Government policy at the present time is the full program of six and five.

An Hon. Member: Hear, hear!

Mr. Herbert: I support that in its entirety. The Tories, I had thought, also supported it in its entirety. I must admit that when six and five was originally introduced I did not think all the way down the line. I did not think down to the level of the old age pensions and to the level of Family Allowances.

Mr. Nickerson: You did not think at all.

Mr. Herbert: I am on the record already as stating that, in the case of Family Allowances, we should start economizing. In fact, I have even suggested freezing Family Allowances entirely, not even increasing them by 6 per cent. I suggested that we put some sort of a freeze on the basic old age pension and that we index only those receiving the GIS, indexing the total, of course, of the GIS and the OAS together. The reason I suggested this is that I believe that when the Government is short of funds, when there is an obvious need to direct our moneys to those most in need, we should make every effort possible to redirect our funding to those who are likely to suffer the most from the present high rates of inflation.

I find the arguments that are based on universality frankly hypocritical. I admit that that is a plank of my Party and I have no hesitation in supporting the principle of universality. I also point out that, as long as we have the OAS universal and the GIS revenue-tested, as long as we have Family Allowances universal and the Child Tax Credit means-tested, and so on and so forth, we only go as universal in our programs as we can afford.

In principle one can support universality, but I have bluntly asked the Members of the Socialist Party on several occasions, if there is a shortage of funds to whom do we give the money? Do we share it among everybody? Do we share it among my constituents who are well above average in income, or do we try to direct that funding at those who need it most?

I find it quite incredible that the Members who have spoken in the last few days on behalf of the Tory Party should so work on the emotions of people in this country. I have heard all kinds of things said by the Tory Party but we know for a fact that if they ever were to form a Government in this country they would crucify the social programs that presently exist. If you look at the total spending on social programs, the only way they can achieve their end result of a balanced budget is either to increase taxation, or decrease social programs, and in either case the poor will have to pay. So let us discard this rhetoric that we hear from the Tory Party.

Mr. Blenkarn: How are you going to vote? What is wrong with the amendment? You could vote on that one.

Mr. Herbert: We can talk as much as we want about reducing spending, but another thing is important. Will no Member of the Tory Party who supported the principle of six and five, stand up and admit that if all programs continue to be fully indexed, then we will carry into 1983 the rate of inflation which exists in 1982?

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): That is nonsense.

Mr. Herbert: Since the objective is to cut the rate of inflation in 1983, then we have to anticipate what the rate is likely to be and reduce the carry-forward to that level. Since our objective is to have a 6 per cent inflation rate in 1983, then we have to carry forward in our social programs that same rate of inflation, 6 per cent. That is why, much as I detest Bill C-133—I say so publicly and I have said so before—and much as I do not like the fact that the pensioner is not going to receive as much as he or she anticipated he or she would receive, if we are going to stick with our principle of six and five, which is to reduce inflation by not carrying it forward into the following year, then we have to do it right across the board.

I suggest to the retirees, the public servants who are now on pension, that the amount that they are going to contribute is no more or no less than the amount that everyone in this country is being asked to contribute. Everyone is being asked to take just a little bit less, which will cause a little more hardship, a little more difficulty and a few more problems.

As I have said to many public servants who have come to me, employees working in my constituency who have complained about six and five, when you look at the number of persons who are unemployed today, they should thank God they have not only a good job with security but are going to get a 6 per cent increase next year. I say to retirees that their contribution, difficult though it may be, is going to help us to achieve the objective of a 6 per cent inflation rate next year. I feel that if we make an exception for the retiree, we have to make an exception for the old age pensioner. If we make an exception for the old age pensioner, then we have to make an exception for the mother who receives Family Allowances.

Mr. Taylor: They have already made exceptions.

Mr. Herbert: If we make an exception for those people, then we make an exception right across the board and forget entirely the program to try to reduce inflation.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): You have already made exceptions.

Mr. Herbert: There is an exception, a noted exception, and I have not heard the Tories talk about it.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): I did.

Mr. Herbert: The Canada Pension Plan will go ahead with full indexing. The reason is that in order to change that Plan we have to have agreement with the Provinces. Most of those Provinces have Tory Governments and those Tory Governments will not go ahead—

Mr. Taylor: They do not break contracts.

Mr. Herbert: —with an agreement whereby we could control the CPP and increase the amount next year by only 6 per cent.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Thank God for that.

Mr. Taylor: They do not break contracts, that is why.

Mr. Herbert: That is despite the fact that the Canada Pension Plan is probably under-funded, unless we can bring down the rate of inflation.

I find my position relatively easy inasmuch as I do not like cutting old age pensions, I do not like cutting Family Allowances and I certainly do not like cutting the pension of a retiree. I do not like having my own salary cut either, and I do not like cutting the salaries of the employees in my office. I have been in business since the last war and this is the first time I have seen one of my employees have to suffer a cut in salary. Many times I have not given an increase, but never before a cut; but I have had to do it. We have had to do it because we are facing a crisis. That must be obvious to everyone. Unless we can get down the rate of inflation so that we can remain competitive with the United States, with which we do most of our business, we might as well throw in the sponge entirely. We do not have any choice.

I said on that evening at the Recreation Centre in Ottawa that I did not like Bill C-133 and I would work, if I could, to get changes.

Mr. Blenkarn: What changes have you got?

Mr. Herbert: I have a suggestion to make that has not been discussed. I have not even discussed it with the Minister. For example, we might think along the lines of taking the money we are taking away from the retirees and putting it back into the fund since it is supposed to belong to them. The fund, which many people will maintain, certainly the actuaries, is inadequate, will be boosted somewhat. Thus we defeat the purpose we talk about of taking it away from individuals. In effect, we would return it to them. That is the suggestion I will discuss with the Minister.

The Minister came up with a suggestion today which in part solves this problem of what belongs to whom. In all fairness to the retirees, they have a pretty good deal. We talk about the word of Government. I want to deal with this because it was referred to in the closing remarks of the Hon. Member for Kootenay East-Revelstoke. I will stand up in this House today and say one thing. I have no hesitation in saying that maybe next week I am going to say something different. I am not ashamed of changing my mind when the circumstances change.

An Hon. Member: Typical Liberal.

Mr. Herbert: I do not mind what they say about typical Liberal. I look upon it as being honest. I see a situation where, if it is necessary for me to change my mind, I will change my mind.

On this particular Bill, I have not changed my mind. I do not like the Bill and I said so. I will vote for the Bill. I said so. I intend to vote for the Bill because it is a Government measure.

Mr. Taylor: Because the Government told you to.

Mr. Herbert: I heard a remark from the Tory backbench that the Government told me to. Let me get that on the record. Not one Minister, in fact not one single Member, has approached me and asked me to change my position on this Bill.

Mr. Taylor: Vote against it and see how many Ministers you get.

Mr. Herbert: Those Ministers have asked for suggestions. They have asked for a resolution of a problem which we all face. I can say in all honesty that no one on this side likes what we are doing with Bill C-133. I am darned sure the Minister does not like what we are doing in Bill C-133. However, if we cut the old age pension and the Family Allowance—and I am talking about the cut in the increase, not in the basic dollars—how can we be consistent if we do not cut this pension as well?

It is far easier to be a Member of the Opposition. In those short two months when I was sitting on the other side, I had a lot of fun. I could stand up and criticize willy-nilly. I could pick what I wanted to say. It was an easy couple of months. I must admist I was a little sad and it was the only reason I was sad when that Government was defeated, because I was going to lose some of my freedom to do what the Opposition does, just use one piece of the package in an argument.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): You will soon be free in Vaudreuil.

Mr. Herbert: We will see. It is far more difficult when one forms the Government to form a fairly consistent policy. That at least is what we are doing now. If the Government is imposing on me the undesirable choice of voting for a Bill that I do not like, I accept it because of the principle behind which it is being presented. The total package is an effort to bring down inflation next year to a 6 per cent level. Everyone, including Members of Parliament, when they get a 6 per cent increase, will receive an increase that covers the true cost of living.

If we bring inflation down next year to 6 per cent as we hope, the old age pensioner who only gets a 6 per cent increase will get enough to cover the increase in the cost of living. The mother who only gets a 6 per cent increase in Family Allowance will also get enough to cover the increase in the cost of living. If we achieve that, then surely the retiree, the person only getting a 6 per cent increase in pension, will have very little to complain about.

Mr. Parker: What happens if you don't?

Mr. Herbert: If we don't, it is because of one reason only, and the NDP should realize that. It is because we have tried to set an example. We have taken the federal Government, federal public servants, federal Members of Parliament and those who the federal Government can control, and put them legally, by Bill C-124, within the six and five package.

We have asked for the voluntary co-operation of the Provinces. That initially was refused. It has now been given to us in part. At the present time the private sector has had mixed reaction. I am pleased that most of the major associations in the private sector are doing their best to co-operate with the federal Government in its efforts to cut inflation to 6 per cent. If the Members of the NDP, who are so quick to jump on the Government for attempting to put a cap on the increase for next year, were honest, they would criticize the various union leaders who are still looking for increases of 10, 12 and up to 18 per cent.

On Friday last I talked to a gentleman in a municipal office. He said when the municipal employees asked for 18 per cent, the municipality said: "Thank you, federal Government, for setting us an example", and then said to the employees: "You take 6 per cent". And they have taken it. If the NDP were to look at the pensioners they talk about and use their good offices to exert an influence on the private sector, which has gone haywire in its increases, and as a result achieve an inflation rate in 1983 of 6 per cent, the retiree receiving a 6 per cent increase would not lose one nickel.

That is my explanation of why, despite the fact that I do not like to see Bill C-133 and wish that I did not have to go through this process, as I said two weeks ago and as I repeat, I will vote for the Bill. It is because I support the principle of six and five.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Hon. Member would permit a question?

Mr. Herbert: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Blenkarn: The Hon. Member said that he was dissatisfied with the Bill. He offered some suggestions with respect to negotiations that might help restore some of the money to the public servants' trust fund with respect to the indexation part of that fund. Would the Hon. Member take kindly to the hoist of the Bill for six months to allow him to use his good offices to make that negotiation and bring some fairness to it, as suggested by the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker)?

Mr. Herbert: Mr. Speaker, if it was that simple, I would give a simple answer and the simple answer would be yes. However, the Hon. Member knows, as everyone in this House knows, that if this Bill is not passed by January 1, an 11 per cent increase goes into effect.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Eleven and a half.

Mr. Herbert: Approximately 11 per cent, if the Hon. Member wants to be precise. The point is that unless this Bill is passed before January 1, the increase according to the present legislation will go into effect at that time. I will give him my word on one thing. I do not give up on an issue. Even if this Bill goes through, I am not giving up. I want to see a change made in this legislation so that we will not again be in the position where we have to go through this particular exercise.

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, as I rise to address Bill C-133, I want to refer an old biblical adage to my friends to the left, paraphrased somewhat. It goes something like this: Let he without sin cast the first stone.

I wonder how many times my friends on the left have wondered in their hearts and minds about the craftiness of the resolution which brought down the 1979 Government. I wonder how many times they have felt that they are reaping the whirlwind because they, with the majority of Canadians, are having to suffer the frustrations and the desperations of this Government.

It is the second time in a very short period that I rise, with other Members in this House, to address a pensions Bill. The short period of time is made shorter because of closure by this Government on Bill C-131. That is an act to limit the time for discussion and debate, an act to prevent the public from realizing the length and extent to which this Government is going to pin the problems of Government on the pensioner. The pensioner should not be the one to bear responsibility for the over-expending of this Government or the inflation which has struck us. In our wildest moments, as I said in respect to Bill C-131, we did not think that the pensioner would be in the front line of the restraint attack, the six and five attack. But that is what has happened and our Party is deadly opposed to Bill C-133, as we were with respect to Bill C-131.

The President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray), in the last minutes of his comments this afternoon, proposed to make an amendment. I suppose, true to the tradition of that Party, that amendment will be drafted more to bring his players into line than by what is in the best interests of pensioners. It will be a further variation of the six and five working together.

The Minister went on to say he would have to wait for the green paper before introducing equity and justice. We are told that the Government's green paper on pensions will be tabled within this next two weeks. That paper should have been the meaningful reform legislation upon which Acts such as this might be based, amended or related thereto, instead of bringing forward Bills C-131, C-132 and C-133, one after the other, to put legislation in place so that the reform paper will have no meaningful effect on pension reform.

How can a Government claim to be serious about pension reform when such a Government deals with pensioners as callously as this one does? How can a Government be serious about pension reform when it is prepared to destroy one of the bulwarks of any strong pension plan—the protection of pensions against the ravages of inflation? How can a Government point an accusing finger at the private sector for offering little more as protection against inflation when that Government is moving in the same direction? Finally, how can any Government hope to maintain credibility, trust and faith with its Public Service when it unilaterally goes back on its word, a signed agreement, in an exercise of political huckstering? And how else, Mr. Speaker, could one describe the Bill which was presented this afternoon other than as an exercise in political huckstering?

Bill C-133 proposes to limit increases in Public Service pensions to 6 per cent in 1983 and 5 per cent in 1984, regardless of the inflation rate in either of those two years. This is done to save the Government an estimated $100 million over these two years. We on this side have grown to respect the sum of $100 million, unlike the big spenders sitting on the Government benches. However, we have to respect something else as well, the fact that some items of expenditure have greater priority than others. But how can one justify cutting Public Service pensions by $100 million when the waste, extravagance and mismanagement of our economy continues unabated? Anyone can pick up a newspaper at any time and read a tale of squander and waste. One can read where hundreds of millions of dollars are being spent in foreign shipyards because Canada lacks a shipbuilding policy. One can read where thousands of jobs are being lost because we lack a Canadian content agreement with respect to Japanese imports. One can read where another oil rig has left this country for the United States because of this Government's National Energy Program. One can read of a 70 per cent increase in the travel expenses of Ministers this year over last year, while they talk in terms of a six and five program. Against a background like this, Mr. Speaker, cutting a Public Service pensioner's cheque is not restraint; it is just simply being mean and misguided.

Last week a bright young fellow decided all Members of Parliament needed copies of all news releases which might be related to the six and five program. More than that, he decided that Members of Parliament needed that material indexed, prepared on high quality paper and enclosed in binders emblazoned with the "six and five" logo. This binder sums up better than any words possibly could the utter hypocrisy of both the six and five program and the Government's approach to the most serious depression we have faced since the 1930s. If restraint is to have any meaning, the Government must distinguish between governing in the best interest of all Canadians and governing in the best interest of the Liberal Party.

It is all right for me or for any other Member of Parliament to illustrate the 1,001 ways in which the $100 million could be saved other than by cutting Public Service pensions. But when we talk in terms of $100 milion, we tend to forget the real meaning of this Bill, the real meaning for those who will be affected by it. As of last month there were 90,000 former public servants receiving pensions. In addition, there were another 32,500 persons receiving survivor benefits. One reads about fat cat public servants and those huge, fully-indexed pensions which they are going to receive, and Michael Pitfield might just be in that category.

It might interest Hon. Members on both sides of the House to note that the average pension being received is $6,900. This, Mr. Speaker, is the "fat cat" which the Government wants to rein in or limit to six and five deindexing by way of Bill C-133. The Government says: "Oh well, the impact of the six and five program is not nearly as great as one would imagine". First of all, when your pension income is $6,900, every dollar counts. Second, we are not talking about a meaningless amount of money which will be lost to those pensioners. Assuming inflation next year will be 11.5 per cent, and 10.5 per cent in 1984, the average pensioner will lose $1,409 over those two years, and the average survivor will have lost $557 from their "fat cat" meagre pensions. Once again, when we consider the average 1982 starting ground is $6,900, a loss of this order is anything but meaningless or "not so great".

The second reason for my opposition to this Bill is the very significant hardship being inflicted on individual pensioners. But there is a third point I want to make as well. We in the opposition are often critical of the Government's non-stop printing presses. Day after day, night after night, those presses are turning out what the Government calls information briefs or brochures. Some of us would prefer to call them propaganda brochures. One such product was the pamphlet prepared to let public servants know about their pension plan. Another was a much larger publication issued after the last National Pensions Conference. The first publication stated clearly:

> All pensions are adjusted annually to cover cost of living increases.

That does not say, Mr. Speaker, adjusted to cover "some" increases; it says Public Service pensions are adjusted to cover cost of living increases. My mathematics may not be perfect, but I fail to see how a 6 per cent increase will cover 10 per cent inflation.

The National Pensions Conference held here in Ottawa in 1981, which I was pleased to attend, provided a forum for the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) to adopt a holier-than-thou attitude with respect to the private sector. I have to wonder if he is not wincing just a bit, trying to square this Bill C-133, and Bill C-131 with what he said at that conference. Put simply, he said people must be protected in their retirement years:

> The Canadian Government has pledged that they will be better protected in the future than they are now.

Once again, perhaps a Government Member could explain how 6 per cent is better than 10 per cent. Or is it simply that a pledge is only a pledge when it suits the political fortunes of a Government bankrupt of ideas? Where is the fulfilment of trust when pensioners are being deprived of something they paid for? However, Mr. Speaker, our Prime Minister could not leave well enough alone. He had to go on to say:

> Pensions which are not protected against inflation naturally tend to dwindle over the years.

I certainly do not argue with that statement of fact, Mr. Speaker. Nor do I argue with his conclusion:

> The unfairness of that situation is not tolerable in a nation which believes in social justice.

Where is the social justice in Bill C-133 or Bill C-131? Does social justice take a back seat to the re-election hopes of the Liberal Party, which we heard about at length from the previous speaker? This Bill in no way, shape or form lives up to the Prime Minister's remarks at that conference, nor does it offer a legitimate reason why it should supersede what he said. As I have already pointed out, the $100 million saved could have been and still can be saved elsewhere, but this Bill hurts those who cannot afford to be hurt in difficult or even in good economic times. I have shown that these phrases, uttered in the sanctimonious tones of many Government speakers at that pension conference, fly in the face of the obvious.

There is a final point which needs to be emphasized. The pensioners in question believed and still believe that they have a formal agreement with the federal Government on the question of indexing pensions. In return for paying 1 per cent of their salary into a supplementary retirement benefits account, public servants were to receive full indexation of their pensions. That, in essence, is what the Government stated it would do. Even more importantly, that is the spirit of the agreement and that is what public servants had been told to expect. To announce 12 years after the fact that the fine print allows the Government to weasel out of the agreement is a breach of faith and political opportunism at its worst. For three nights running the Prime Minister spoke to the nation about trust, confidence and belief in our political leaders. Who would ever trust a Government which would attack pensioners while leaving the JetStar engines idling while the Government waits for the next six and five binge?

I am appalled at the persistence of this Government in bringing this Bill forward. In 1979 a Conservative Government found over $500 million worth of fat to be cut without too much difficulty. The same could be done today if there was an effort put into that task. That money is five times the amount being saved by this legislation, yet the Government refuses to cut waste because it is easier to ram a Bill through this House by closure and enforced voting than it is to pore over departmental budgets and estimates. Well, if the Government has lost the will to control its own spending, call an election so that the Canadian people can determine where expenditure cuts can be made and decide whether the Government will have the will and determination to get spending under control.

While I am unalterably opposed to this Bill, Mr. Speaker, some weeks ago, as has been mentioned earlier today, several Government Members were just as equally opposed to that legislation. Now they feel the winds of non-confidence blowing in their faces and we hear an about-face and a very different story today than that told on an earlier occasion. I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that it will be a sad day for Canada indeed if Government Members opposite vote for opportunism, self-preservation and self-protection rather than for responsible government, good government and the people they represent in Parliament. The Just Society of 1968 is most certainly dead, thanks to today's Liberal Party of Canada. Will they not just take six months more to reconsider their position?

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: The Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie)—Labour Conditions—Air Canada lay-offs—Application of early retirement policy to machinists. (b) Request that mediator be appointed; the Hon. Member for Richmond-South Delta (Mr. Siddon)—Mines and Mining—Union recommendations on stockpiling. (b) Restoration of competitive advantage; the Hon. Member for Halifax West (Mr. Crosby)—Atomic Energy of Canada Limited—Future of Nova Scotia heavy water plants. (b) Policy on sales to India.

SUPPLEMENTARY RETIREMENT BENEFITS ACT (N. 2)

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Gray that Bill C-133, an Act to amend the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act (No. 2), be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates.

Mr. Gaston Isabelle (Hull): Mr. Speaker, I believe it is important that Members for the various ridings concerned should make a contribution to the debate on Bill C-133 which is about to affect the indexation of Federal Public Service pensions. Mr. Speaker, I listened to the previous speakers and I also heard what the Member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) had to say. I believe that in some parts of his speech he was right, while in others he was wrong. In any case, I am not going to try and analyze all the speeches made in the debate on Bill C-133. I think, in fact I am certain, that the Members opposite are electioneering on this subject. I also think that my friends in the New Democratic Party at least during the last election campaign totally ignored Section 32 of the Public Service Employment Act which precludes political activity by certain public servants. I am sure that to them, Section 32 applies only to Liberals and Progressive Conservatives. But quite honestly, Mr. Speaker, I must say that I, too, have had grave reservations and have given careful consideration to the implications of Bill C-133. I can honestly say that I am opposed to Bill C-133 in its present form. The reasons, Mr.

Speaker, are simple. There is a matter of equity involved here, and if there was a mistake on the part of the Government that drafted the Act or the regulations or on the part of the bureaucrats who drafted this legislation when indexation was approved in 1970, we should certainly not try to correct the initial blunder by perpetrating a second one. Since we are on the subject of indexation of Public Service pensions, I think we should have had studies made, as suggested in 1976 when a report was tabled in the House concerning the entire question of Public Service pensions. However, it was not done, Mr. Speaker. The question came up again in 1978, when it was suggested that the procedure for indexing Public Service pensions should be changed not abolished altogether by linking indexation directly to the interest generated by the funds provided by employees, interest that could be redistributed to Public Service pensioners according to a given scale. The point was, Mr. Speaker, that in the case of galloping inflation, the interest generated would have been higher and the resulting funds would have been redistributed from year to year to retired public servants and would also have provided a basic scale for indexing wages. That would have been eminently logical, Mr. Speaker. We would not have been obliged to take this corrective action which I would qualify as grossly unfair via-à-vis this group in society which is no longer on the labour market.

Obviously, when legislation is introduced, there are exceptions for which provision must be made, and I think that the officials who prepared this legislation should and could have made an exception for retired public servants. Mr. Speaker, blunders are made. The other day, I noticed that a senior official who was Deputy Minister at Health and Welfare was transferred to Paris for a year, on the same salary he was getting before, while during that time his position was to remain vacant. The position in Paris calls for a salary that is $20,000 less than what the official was earning before. So he is getting the same pay he would be getting if he had stayed here in Canada, which is certainly a lot more than 6 and 5, Mr. Speaker and there are many other examples. In fact, the newspapers are full of them. So I hope these are not the same senior officials who drafted the 6 and 5 measures that apply to retired public servants, because we know what goes on in the upper echelons of the public service, Mr. Speaker. No one who has an important job is going to be affected by 6 and 5. They just change the category and the salary with it, and the 6 per cent will apply, as they say, over and above, so I think there is something here that we as legislators should do, but unfortunately, the system has not reached that stage yet.

When I see the Progressive Conservatives making modest attack on the system, and I said just now they were doing some electioneering, including my good friend from Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) who is not above adding an extra quaver to his voice to sound more convincing, I think the people listening should remember that when the Progressive Conservatives formed the Government in 1980, they said without hesitation that they were going to eliminate 55,000 public servants. I do not want to indulge in electioneering, and I just want to—

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): That is no excuse!

An Hon. Member: 60,000 public servants.

Mr. Isabelle: . . . 60,000, I apologize, I forgot 5,000. In any case, I do not want to do any electioneering, and I just want to defend the rights of the majority of my constituents who are public servants and retired public servants. I agree with the 6 and 5 program as a general government policy, and I congratulate the Government for having adopted this measure, but I also think that this bill should allow for exceptions, and Mr. Speaker, retired public servants are an exception. Where pensions are concerned, there is a big different between 6 per cent of $4,000 and 6 per cent of $30,000, because someone who is drawing a pension of $30,000 will get nearly $2,000 that is easy to figure out while 6 per cent of $4,000 is only $240. People on low incomes need every cent to make ends meet, while to someone who is getting a pension of $30,000, whether he gets an extra $2,000 or $1,800 does not make such difference, it is not vital, so that is why I am saying that this bill is unfair, because if we look at the principle underlying indexation, the whole point was to maintain the purchasing power of pensions so that retired public servants would continue to have access to the same market basket and the same services, and this is the principle the Government committed itself to. Mr. Speaker, this was said in this very House in 1978 by one of our colleagues, who unfortunately is no longer with us today, and who has served this country well, and I am referring to Bob Andras, an exceptional President of the Treasury Board, who wanted to change the system in 1978, and who unfortunately was unable to have this plan implemented. Mr. Speaker, we are forcing retired Canadians to submit to the 6 and 5 restrictions, while in most provinces—I am not referring to the Federal Government here, although I may later on—public utilities including gas, hydro and telephone services, all of which are essential services that no one can do without, let alone pensioners, are increasing at a stupendous rate every year. Take hydro, for instance. We have a surplus of electric power, but nevertheless, prices are still increasing at an astonishing rate in la belle province, although it is against all the principles of political economics, and the same applies to natural gas.

So why are we saddling our pensioners with this reduction in indexation? No one is going to get rich with a cost-of-living indexation, especially—but this is of course hypothetical—if we expect that in one or two years, indexing may be 7 or 8 or 9 per cent. If we were sure that indexation would go down, why not maintain cost-of-living indexation for the 85 per cent, that is, the vast majority of retired public servants who are getting not more than $4,000 or $6,000?

Mr. Speaker, I feel that these people have served their country well as public servants, and this includes the Armed Forces, the RCMP, and all those who have served their country in the course of duty and when they were in a position to do so. I remember when I was growing up in the Ottawa-Hull area, that the Public Service had trouble recruiting employees. Mr. Speaker, that was because the pay was not good. Today, pay levels may be somewhat higher than they are in the private sector, but the fact remains that to get people the pay has to be good. If it is not, they will not come. Maybe we have gone to the other extreme, and perhaps a review would be in order. In fact, a study was made in 1978 or 1976.

There is a mass of data, and when senior officials talk about the subject, they reel off a whole series of figures which do not mean a thing to the average person. No matter how many speeches are made and no matter how many reasons are given, retired public servants will never understand, and they certainly have no reason to, why the Government is taking away what they paid for. That is what is happening. Never mind the figures, never mind that this is going to mean a savings of $50 million and that if we do not cap indexation it will mean an increase of $100 million. We all know how governments conduct their finances. They make budgets and they always have budget deficits. Why? Because there are contingencies, of course, but there are other things that also happen to a budget. The individual person, the retired public servant, however, was first asked to pay 1 per cent extra to cover indexation, and this point was made over and over again. Now all of a sudden they are saying: Listen, drop everything, the country is almost bankrupt and now you have to help us get it out of this mess. Well, I do not think that is the way things work. They do not see it that way, and I think they are right. I hope that during the debate it will be possible to make some changes—and I see the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray)—to put as it were a more humane face on this question by making a special exception for retired public servants. Once more, we are in favor of 6 and 5, and personally, I would have said more about this question, because to the people, 6 and 5 means a reduction. A lot of speeches have been made and of lot of figures have been produced, but we forget to tell people that what was involved was a salary increase that was being capped at 6 and 5 per cent. We get people writing us who think it is a reduction. Some people say: If you do not vote against the bill, we will not vote for you in the next election. We always have voted for you but will not this time. But if they vote against the Liberals for introducing this legislation, they will vote against me in any case. When all is said and done, I think they are doing a bit of innocent blackmail, because they are good people. However, I am not doing this for political reasons and I am not trying to do the Public Service Alliance a favour. In fact, I have had it up to here with the PSAC. So I am not particularly keen on doing them a favour, I am doing this for the pensioners, because I realized that we were really hurting a sector of the population that is particularly vulnerable because it is no longer part of the labour market.

My contribution to this debate has been to the point and will, I think, be understood by everyone, even if I did not quote any figures. I was very reluctant to parade vast numbers of statistics in order to impress or depress people with all the data we are able to produce. In any case I am sure that the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray), with his natural intelligence, his sensitivity to the plight of the autoworkers in his constituency, his broad political experience, his great wisdom and his understanding of the human condition, will realize that perhaps it would be advisable to introduce amendments that will go somewhat further than the bill he introduced this afternoon.

Mr. Speaker, this was my humble contribution on the debate on Bill C-133, a bill which I hope will be amended for the benefit of retired public servants who have served their country well and continue to do so.

[English]

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I wonder whether the Hon. Member would agree to a short question.

Mr. Isabelle: With pleasure.

Mr. Murphy: I agree with much of what the Hon. Member said in his speech, but I want to ask him a question just to make it perfectly clear. If there are no further amendments to Bill C-133 other than the amendments suggested by the Minister responsible earlier this afternoon, will he definitely be here to vote against the Bill at second reading?

Some Hon. Members: That is an improper question.

Mr. Isabelle: Mr. Speaker, it is a hypothetical question because it might be the end of the world tomorrow and then no one would be able to vote. I do not know what will come, but if the Bill remains as is, I will do what I have to do.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I compliment the Hon. Member for Hull (Mr. Isabelle) for his wonderful last line, that he will do what he has to do. Of course, the next question is: What will he have to do? I admire his ability. I have seen people riding bicycles on tightwires before but never two bicycles at the same time! He has been doing this for the last half hour; it is quite a stunt.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): It is hard on the seat of the pants.

Mr. McKinnon: Yes, but he said that he was opposed to Bill C-133. I am afraid that I have to wait until tonight, a week from now or some time in the near future when the Speaker says, "All those opposed will please rise" to find out what he has to do.

Also I heard the Hon. Member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert) indicate that he did not like Bill C-133. It is rather startling how many sympathetic people on the other side are filled with kindness and good heart in this regard, but also stick pretty closely to the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray) in bringing in this terrible Bill. Actually, it is the first one I have seen brought into the House which deliberately upsets a contract and a piece of legislation that has been in effect for some time.

I thought the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) made a particularly good speech this afternoon. I believe he represented the situation in this locality very well.

I am sure the heart of the Hon. Member for Kootenay East-Revelstoke (Mr. Parker) is in the right place, but I wish he would manage to quit confusing Bill C-124 and Bill C-133.

• (1730)

We voted against—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McKinnon: Let me try again. Bill C-124 provided a small cut in the pay of Members of Parliament. The New Democratic Party opposed that Bill. That is the Bill we voted in favour of. It had nothing to do with the capping of indexation. Indexation capping is contained in Bill C-131 and in Bill C-133, depending upon which pension is involved. But to try to say continually that because somebody voted for or against Bill C-124 means that they vote for or against Bill C-133 is carrying things a little far.

After the budget was brought down, in the debates on the budget I raised the question on July 15 and again on August 2 that we were going to have to look at legislation, presumably in the fall, if we were going to carry out what the budget had indicated we would. I am particularly interested in pensions of servicemen and retired servicemen.

There are not too many Members in the Chamber who have a close interest in the Canadian Forces superannuation account or the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act as it applies to the Canadian Forces superannuation account. I have a great deal of concern about this matter partly because it is so complicated. When the Hon. Member for Winnipeg is not here, there is hardly anyone who can give you a logical explanation as to why the Government keeps putting money from one account into another. It seems these accounts are overflowing with money, but in fact there is no money there. I feel that a contract has been broken with the servicemen who paid their contributions faithfully. They now find they will not get the pension they expected.

It is difficult to understand the attitude of some of our friends on the benches opposite. They are well known. I believe the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton referred to them this afternoon. First, there is the Hon. Member for Ottawa West (Mr. Francis) who finds it unacceptable that the Government plans to limit pension indexation. The Hon. Member for Ottawa Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) said that the pension indexation fund "is similar to investing your money in a trust company" which then decides not to pay out on the agreed terms. Any trust company doing that would have its charter removed. The Hon. Member for Hull, who has just finished speaking, said that they should leave the pensions at full indexation. He has now decided that he will do what he has to do.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Whatever that is.

Mr. McKinnon: Whatever the Hon. Member for Hull does, he is not too specific about it. However, we will watch him with a great deal of interest when the vote comes. Then we have the vocal Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans). He said:

> I have not seen any evidence that the contributions paid to the supplementary fund are inadequate and that the fund is not solvent.

I look at the funds quite often, and I have a great deal of difficulty finding that they are not solvent. I have tried to find out.

The last Member whom I shall refer to is the Hon. Member for Gatineau. He said:

> I wonder if we can legislate on this matter since the money belongs to the pensioners.

What worries me is that a group of Liberal Members of Parliament can get together before 800 voters out there. These Members say something outside of the Chamber but say something quite different inside. We are witnessing that today, and it is not a nice thing to see, quite frankly. Members opposite go out and try to buy votes. They hope nobody will notice what they said. Then they come in here and hope that nobody will notice how they vote. One is opposite to the other, and it is embarrassing.

We have the prime example set by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). He sent out his famous telegram saying that he indeed was very aware of all of this and that he had noted the concern about indexation of Government pensions, that is should be maintained.

The Prime Minister philosophizes in a letter in which he wrote:

> In our society, pensions provide a means of sharing risk so that we can retire in reasonable security and dignity, without fear of the future.

It is sickening for the Prime Minister to write that and have it sent to pensioners. They depend upon Members of Parliament to look after their interests. It is a joke when we hear that things are ironclad agreements. An ironclad agreement is a joke because it means that you do not intend to keep the agreement. The Prime Minister of the country put the pensioners at ease. He said the Government had no intention of removing indexation from pensions, but here we have a Bill that is going to do exactly that. The sad part is that this is the time when pensioners need indexation the most. I will have a few more words to say about that in a minute or so.

I just wanted to point out that five Members of Parliament and the Prime Minister are as sanctimonious as can be about the plight of the pensioners when they say that their plight is right next to their hearts, except that many other things come in between when it comes to legislation.

Let me come back to the matter of the servicemen. There seems to be a consistent effort to meld the servicemen's pension funds with the civil service pension funds. There are some good reasons why servicemen prefer that this not happen. It is particularly noticeable when we hear the Canadian Forces

Superannuation Act and the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act treated as if the beneficiaries were exactly the same. However, if one looks at the figures, it is quite alarming to servicemen and ex-servicemen because the Forces fund is in a much sounder condition than the supplementary benefits fund.

According to the report on the administration of the Public Service Superannuation Act, there was a balance on 31 March 1981 of $12.7 billion, with 308,000 public servants contributing to it. The Canadian Forces Superannuation Fund stood at $9.327 billion, with only 80,000 contributors. It is obvious from the number of contributors that the servicemen have a much larger vested interest in the superannuation account than the civil servants have. Both accounts seem to be running into difficulty as a result of what the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray) is doing today. The Government is treating the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act as if it were the same as the other fund. There is now approximately $25 billion in the two funds. By doing a little bit of arithmetic you will see that the interest on $25 billion would more than pay the entire pensions for both the servicemen and the civil servants.

I have another grievance. I have a letter dated March, 1982, addressed to me which mentions interest. It is from the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Lamontagne). I understand that interest is never paid on these funds. Instead, a paper transaction is made. In 1980 to 1981, the last year for which we have records, the Government in the first quarter "paid" 2.05 per cent on this money. In the second quarter, it "paid" 2.09 per cent; in the third quarter, the amount was 2.01 per cent, and in the fourth quarter, the Government "paid" 2.15 per cent for the money that in theory was in the account. That comes to an annual rate of 8.6 per cent. Everyone knows that the interest rates in 1980 to 1981 were much greater than that.

If we take a look at the amount of interest that was credited to the Canadian Forces Superannuation Fund during that fiscal year, we see that on March 31 the amount credited was $131 million. In the actuarial liability account there is another $348 million, which comes to a total of $479 million. The payments made by Canadian Forces personnel amounted to $80 million. The payments out of the fund were only $280 million in 1980-1981 out of the total amount received of payments of $559 million. Yet we are told the fund is in desperate straits, that it is likely to go broke, and everyone is worried about it. I will tell Hon. Members who is worried about it. The servicemen are worried about it because they are the only ones who seem to be able to see money actually going into it. It goes right out of their pay and into the fund and then it goest off in strange directions. Some of it goes to the Canadian Forces superannuation account and some to the actuarial liability account. Servicemen certainly do not know what that is, but in their opinion they do not seem to be getting credit for the money that is in there.

I was rather surprised when the President of the Treasury Board suggested that he would do a couple of things because of the pressure which had been put on him by some MPs. First, he would raise the cap from 6 per cent to 6.5 per cent and then, the following year, it would rise from 5 per cent to 5.5 per cent. Anyway, it was very strange to hear his remark that anyone drawing the Guaranteed Income Supplement would not be severely capped. I am a bit puzzled as to just how this relates to the pay of servicemen or public servants, because I am sure the President of the Treasury Board realizes full well that if one is receiving any kind of pension amounting to $250 a month, except for a disability pension, one cannot qualify for the Guaranteed Income Supplement. One cannot receive anything from that fund. I thought that dragging in that red herring was a little bit beneath the President of the Treasury Board, as only a very few civil servants would ever draw the Guaranteed Income Supplement, I would hope.

The other matter is that this afternoon the President of the Treasury Board announced that those whose pensions were being paid from the Consolidated Revenue Fund would not be eligible for the increased cap, as I understood it. I realize that it is a little difficult to follow all these different terms, but if that is so, that would mean that the President of the Treasury Board is penalizing those people who drew pensions before indexation came about. There will be a slight penalty. That is the way it seemed to me. If I am wrong, and if someone from the Government has the gumption to speak in this debate besides the Minister, I will be pleased to hear about it, but that is the way it sounded to me. I see the Minister and his Parliamentary Secretary nodding their heads, so I will look forward to hearing how that will be corrected.

References to the pension index make interesting reading. If we consider the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act, one finds that this was a promise, really a contract reached with servicemen and public servants, when they were told in 1974 that they would receive their indexed pension. It states:

> "Pension Index", with respect to any year, means the average for that year of the Consumer Price Index for Canada, as published by Statistics Canada under the authority of the Statistics Act, for each month in the twelve-month period ending on the thirtieth day of September in the immediately preceding year;

That is a contract, it seems to me, that the pension will be indexed, and the amount by which the pension will be increased. That was the agreement. At that time, servicemen were paying half of one per cent of their pay to cover the cost of indexation. It was found at that time that they needed more money, and it was determined that from then on they would pay a full percentage point. Therefore, servicemen are now paying 7.5 per cent, 6.5 per cent going toward the Force's Superannuation Fund, and 1.5 per cent, I believe, for participation in the Canada Pension Plan or the Quebec Pension Plan, and then 1 per cent for the supplementary retirement benefit.

I might point out that because the cost of living and the consumer price index were increasing each year, pensioners were always behind because the pension contribution was determined from September to September. If the rates rose 7 per cent, for example, five years ago and 10 per cent four years ago, there was a 3 per cent difference which the pensioner had to pick up because he was paying the charges for that particular year.

I can briefly indicate some of the figures. If we consider the figures for 1971, one finds that the benefit index was 104 per cent. In 1972 it was 106.5 per cent. That amounted to a 2.5 per cent raise. Therefore, in 1972-73, pensioners would receive an extra 2.5 per cent. However, in 1973, the cost of living rose by 5 per cent. In 1974 it rose by 7 per cent and in 1975 it rose by 12 per cent. Every year the increase given to pensioners was only based on the previous year's increase in the cost of living. Consequently, they were robbed a little bit each year. However, that does not seem to have bothered the Government. Now, strangely enough, when the rate of inflation is beginning to come down, the Government wants to tell them what the benefit index will be in advance. When it was rising, they were paid according to the last year's increase. Now the Government will decide what it will be ahead of time. Next year it will be 6 per cent and the following year it will be 5 per cent, so the Government will get them going both ways.

These figures are spelled out right on the back page of Bill C-133. If one considers the benefit index under column II, one can take the amount of $1,000, one month's pension, and compute what the benefit would be in 1984. One can divide 275.69 by 262.56 and multiply by $1,000 and arrive at an amount of $1,050, which is a 5 per cent increase. If inflation is more than that percentage, it is just too bad. One is only a pensioner, anyway, according to the hard-line attitude of the Government. The Government says, "We are sorry we made an awful mess out of running the country, but you have to pick up the cost". It is easy for Hon. Members opposite to say, but it is very hard for them to look people in the eye and tell them that they are doing it to them.

I have in my hand the eleventh annual report on the administration of the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act. It was submitted to His Excellency, the Right Hon. Edward Schreyer, Governor General and Commander-in-Chief of Canada, by the President of the Treasury Board. I would simply like to point out how this has been arranged according to the Treasury Board which supervised. The Act, if this Bill is approved, will apply to some 26 different acts and groups of people, including the Canadian Forces Superannuation Act as well as the Defence Services Pension Continuation Act which, to my understanding, is now almost non-existent because people have gradually faded out of it.

At page 2 of the report, it states:

> The amount of this increase in any January is equal to the percentage increase in the average of the Consumer Price Indices for the twelve months ending on the preceding September 30 over the average for the twelve months ending a year earlier.

In reference to financial provisions, it states:

> Between April 1, 1970 and December 31, 1976 employees contributed ½ of 1 per cent of salary. Effective January 1, 1977 this rate was increased to 1 per cent.

This puzzles me. The Government is attempting to claim that the pension fund, amounting to $25 billion; is not sufficient to pay pensions. I suppose that would be hard to prove to a mortgage company. However, if that is not sufficient, I wonder if the Government has ever thought of asking the people if they are willing to contribute more. In the last couple of months I have spoken with many servicemen and retired and employed civil servants. Most of them would be quite willing to pay another half of one per cent if that were enough, or if it were important. However, they have said, "For God's sake, do not leave us high and dry so that we do not know what will happen in the way of inflation. It would appear that if the rate of inflation keeps on rising, we are the ones who will not become adjusted to it, and we would be willing to contribute". That thought occurred to people in 1977 and they did double their contributions at that time, but it has apparently not been considered at this time.

I would like to point out one other matter. The report continues:

> Prior to January 1, 1974, the Act also provided that all supplementary benefits would be charged to the Account. Since that date, however, those benefits paid in respect of a former contributor are charged to the Account only until their accumulated total equals the aggregate of all amounts credited to that Account in respect of that person. Supplementary benefits paid in excess of that aggregate are then charged to the Consolidated Revenue Fund.

This is quite true. These are almost identical words to those found in the Act in Section 8(2), which is of interest. However, Section 9 states:

> There shall be credited to the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Account in each fiscal year an amount representing interest on the balance from time to time to the credit of the said Account calculated at such rate as may be fixed by the Treasury Board.

We all know how miserly the Treasury Board has been with the interest they have paid on the alleged funds, that they allege are somewhere. I expect the President of the Treasury Board has that $25 billion earmarked for somewhere, but there might be people who are not quite as trusting as I am who might wonder if there is any part of it around. I believe the Government made a commitment during the collection and the putting together of those funds, so that the Government actually would consider that the pensioners had a vested interest and were entitled to be consulted and to get a fair deal.

The fund is growing so rapidly, and wording such as this, that the supplementary benefits paid in excess of the aggregate are then charged to the Consolidated Revenue Fund, is looked on by the pensioner as an effort by the Government to prove that it has paid them back everything they paid in and an indication that it has no further real responsibility, and it is just out of the generosity of the Government heart that it is paying them anything extra from then on. This is what worries the pensioner because he suspects this kind of legislation is really there to take away any rights that he has to the contract he thought he had with the Government.

I can never quite understand how the interest rates are worked out on this, but they seem to me to be much less than they should be.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I would just like to point out that these funds have grown so enormously that the Government is neither going to write them out a cheque for it nor set up another fund of an equal size to be self-administered, or in any part administered, by the people who contribute to it, and the people who expect to benefit from it.

I suggested to a meeting of long service pensioners of the Canadian Forces, that perhaps they should try to get this on a sounder footing over a long period of time, say ten or 15 years. If the Government would guarantee to maintain the contract it has with the pensioners, paying them an indexation rate equal to the inflation rate, perhaps the pensioners would be willing to give up any real or imagined right to part of that $25 billion. They accepted that and indicated that if during that ten or 15 year period their contributions and the Government's contributions went into a fund, for instance in the form of Government bonds, which really are much more liquid than the imaginary kind of money being dealt with now, in about ten or 15 years they then would be able to have a funded fund, which is really what the civil servants want and what the Armed Forces want.

In closing, I simply say this is a Bill that I never thought I would see presented in Parliament; that the Government would try to balance its books—which is almost unheard of for this Government—and it would, first of all, pick out old age pensioners and, secondly, those people who thought they had a Government pension. Most of the people who are now retired are people who served their country in the Armed Forces. When they came back from overseas they decided they would stay on in the Forces partly, and to quite a degree, because there was a pension. Nobody ever dreamed of the inflation this Government has brought on in the last 20 years. Pensions had a lot to do with decisions being made by people to stay in Government service. The pay was not as good and the conditions were at times terrible. There were many other disadvantages to being in the Armed Forces, such as being posted at a moment's notice, and the necessity of having one's family educated in a variety of locations. The decision to stay in Government service was made because of the security that Government employment was supposed to offer.

It is shocking to think that the Government would have misled servicemen over the years and then simply, because of its mismanagement of the economy, put their contributions into the Consolidated Revenue Fund, and now acts as if they were just a drain on the taxpayer that should not be there at all, when in fact it gives no credence to these figures, figures that are quoted quite frequently by Ministers of the Crown.

A letter from the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Lamontagne) to me on February 25, 1982 said:

> The balance in the account—

That is the superannuation account.

> —as of 30 September 1981 was $9.89 billion.

He says that it is in there. Who does it belong to? The President of the Treasury Board thinks it belongs to him. There are quite a few people who think it belongs to the serving servicemen and the retired servicemen.

I would hope that the Liberals, particularly those who represent their constituents in this area, and in other areas as well, might see what a shabby deal they are pulling here. They take a contributory pension, on which a recipient has no say either as to how much he contributes or how often he has to contribute to it, or how often it may be raised without his permission, and summarily decide that they will not give them the payout that had been promised. I can simply say that if any organization other than this Government did it there would be a class action lawsuit about it. In fact, I would not think that would be too bad an idea for the veterans to do so right now. When I say veterans, I mean the long service pensioners, I do not mean the disability pensioners that the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Campbell) might talk about.

I am sorry that the Minister of National Defence is not here at the present time. I had expected he would take part in this debate to support the 80,000 servicemen who are involved and the 33,000, 34,000 or 35,000 annuitants who are retired from the services and drawing these pensions to which they contributed. Perhaps he will take part in the debate this evening or tomorrow, if he has something to say in defence of those people who are contributing to the safety and security of this country.

Some Hon. Members: Six o'clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is the House agreed therefore that the Chair call it 6 o'clock? There may be some difficulty, because it will be a matter of whom the Chair recognizes at eight o'clock. Normally I would recognize the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Is that agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): It being six o'clock, I do now leave the Chair until eight o'clock this evening.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. When the House rose at six o'clock, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Berger) had been given the floor.

[Translation]

Mr. David Berger (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the purpose of the Bill before us this evening is to limit to 6 and 5 per cent any increase in Public Service pensions. Were it not for this Bill, this increase would come to 11.5 per cent, based on the last year's increase in the consumer price index.

[English]

It is important to understand that this is not a Bill on pensions, but a Bill which is part of an economic plan designed to bring down the rate of inflation from the 10 or 11 per cent we have known over the past couple of years to, hopefully, six and five per cent in the coming years. It is extremely important to remember this fundamental fact.

When I hear the criticisms of this Bill by Members opposite, I scratch my head and wonder what it is that they would propose. Do they prefer 10 or 11 per cent inflation? What is their plan of action? How do they propose to get inflation down to a lower level? What ideas do they have? Unless they have some ideas on how to reduce inflation in the manner that we are doing, I say their arguments have no force.

In trying to bring down inflation, there are a number of options the Government could have considered, one of which was mandatory wage and price controls. I have not heard any Members opposite come out in favour of that. Last winter, prior to the introduction of this program by the Government, a number of groups submitted briefs strongly urging that mandatory wage and price controls not be considered.

One brief was submitted by the Business Council on National Issues which represents a number of major employers in this country. It strongly urged the Government not to impose such a system, which we knew in 1974, 1975 on to 1978, because of the constraints that were involved, the administrative difficulties and the bureaucracy required to administer it.

They made a submission to the previous minister of finance during the series of consultations which he undertook in the spring and early summer, suggesting a system of voluntary wage and price controls, which the Government subsequently embarked upon. They included a premise in their suggestion. They felt that by and large Canadians are intelligent people who will respond to reason if presented with a reasonable argument. They felt Canadians would respond to the kind of appeal that would be made to them by the Government setting the example and asking industry to comply with the program voluntarily.

What does the Opposition have to say about that? Do they feel that some other approach would be better? A number of people from industry have supported this program. Members are aware of the industry committee established under the chairmanship of Mr. Sinclair. Since then a great number of companies have adhered to this program.

I want to bring to the attention of the House an article which appeared in yesterday's New York Times. Felix Rohatyn, a prominent investment banker and chairman of the Municipal Assistance Corporation in New York, which engineered New York City's federal aid package in 1975, speaks of the alternatives to Reaganomics. In an extremely thought-provoking article he talks about the necessity of guarding against a renewal of inflation in the United States caused by wage settlements in excess of productivity improvement. The article reads in part:

> Wage and price controls in an advanced industrial society cannot work for long, and a formal, legislative policy, such as a tax-based incomes policy, is probably neither practical nor fair. However, a change in our labour cost structure has to be examined if low inflation is to co-exist with high growth. The most practical way to approach this would be for all major labour contracts to expire simultaneously every year, with wage increases related to existing economic conditions and current inflation; significant elements of profit-sharing should reward real productivity improvements. We should take a cue from Japan and Germany and have an annual, national wage negotiation involving business, labour and often the government. The result should be keyed to the performance of the economy. This is the practical equivalent of an incomes policy for most of the economy.

He looks at the matter of wage and price controls and he says they cannot work for an extended period of time. He looks at tax based incomes policy, and he says that is impractical as well. He argues for some form of an incomes policy which, I believe, our six and five program will ultimately lead to, where wage increases and salaries will be tied to the increase in productivity of the country or to the increase in the gross national product.

Mr. Rohatyn is not the first to advocate such a policy. Lester Thurow, who is, I believe, the favourite economist of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Lincoln (Mr. Mackasey) has written extensively about such a program. I do not hear the Opposition, though, Mr. Speaker, raising such matters. I do not hear them saying, "Well, yes, this is the kind of policy which should be considered in Canada." I do not hear them discussing the pros and cons of it. They just continue to harp about the so-called injustices in our particular program, and these injustices may very well be more perceived than real. I have to conclude that much of their criticism is, as the Hon. Member for Hull, (Mr. Isabelle), I believe, earlier today said, just pure electioneering. They are just playing to the public and trying to score points. They are criticizing the Government for the sake of criticism and trying to appeal, basically, to the fear of Canadians, rather than trying to arrive at a solution to our problems in a constructive manner.

What has seemed to have escaped the attention of both Opposition Parties is that prices as well have been controlled in this program. We are very well aware of the Government's restrictions as they have applied to companies within federal jurisdiction. They must come before federal regulatory agencies like the Canadian Transport Commission or the CRTC. We are also aware of the example of Bell Canada and the fact that their increase in rates was limited to 6 per cent. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, increases in prices throughout the third quarter, for the three-month period, August, September and October, slowed considerably from 3 per cent to 1.7 per cent in May, June and July. On a monthly basis, inflation in October was 0.6 per cent, and when taken with the 0.5 per cent recorded in each of July, August and September, it is solid evidence that inflation is stabilizing at targeted levels. On an annual basis, inflation in October dropped to 10 per cent from 10.4 per cent in September. This decrease continues the steady downward movement from levels which were above 11 per cent prior to July. We have, therefore, dramatic evidence that our policy is beginning to take hold.

I do not claim, and I do not think anyone in our Government has claimed, that our policy is solely responsible for this decrease in the rate of inflation. It is undoubtedly true that a number of companies, and many thousands of small firms, have been restricting their wage and price increases throughout the recent recession, going back about a year or a year and a half. I have met countless shop owners and small businessmen in my constituency and elsewhere who have said to me they have not taken a raise in the past several years. In light of this kind of situation, it certainly would be unconscionable for the Public Service, which is not subject to the same kinds of competitive forces as the private sector, and which does not have to depend on the bottom line or the amount of cash which is in the till at the end of the week or month, to continue to have increases at the rate of 10 per cent or 11 per cent when other sectors of the economy cannot take the same kinds of increases and when many are suffering. Indeed, it really is only logical—the kind of logic, perhaps, which escapes the Members of the Opposition—that the Government impose the same restrictions upon its employees as do many companies in the private sector.

On the other hand, Mr. Speaker, it is true to say also that our program has had an effect on the private sector. I have spoken to a number of businessmen who have told me that when faced by their employees in the course of the past four or five months who perhaps asked for 12 per cent or 9 per cent or whatever, these companies said, "No, the Government has a policy which we intend to follow. It will be 6 per cent over the course of the coming year."

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I would like to mention briefly that what we are really asking pensioners to do under this Bill, which has been described as a great hardship for them by Members of the Opposition, is not as great a hardship when you look at the cold, hard facts.

[Translation]

Naturally, Mr. Speaker, no one readily wants to limit increases, but the difference between the amount which the pensioners will get as a result of this 6 and 5 per cent limitation and the 11 per cent they would have received otherwise is practically nil. I figured it out. It amounts to perhaps the price of a pack or half a pack of cigarettes a day. The difference will come to $37 a month in 1983. I am not a cigarette smoker, but as far as I know a pack of cigarettes these days costs about $2. So half a pack of cigarettes costs $1, which is the equivalent of the $37-odd loss incurred by the pensioners under this Bill. In my opinion, half a pack less a day is definitely not something which will create undue hardships for pensioners. It can hardly be labelled a loss since pensioners will in fact get an increase. It will be limited to 6 per cent instead of 11 per cent but, as I pointed out earlier, the rate of inflation has already begun to drop sharply. If we manage to bring it down to 7 or 6 per cent in the coming year, it is obvious that there will be no loss. Quite the contrary, the Canadian economy as a whole will be stronger so that pensioners and all Canadians alike stand to benefit from the upturn.

I am grateful to have had this opportunity to take part in the debate, Mr. Speaker. I hope Hon. Members opposite will take the floor and make more constructive contributions to this important debate.

[English]

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-133, which amends the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act, is simple in form and substance but its effect is shattering to more than 200,000 retired public servants and Armed Forces personnel across this land. The case for the senior citizens should be established and explained to fair-minded legislators and the Canadian electorate who, after all, will judge our performance in this House of Commons on measures such as this Bill.

Let me deal first with a specific provision of Bill C-133. It applies the Government's six and five policy to retirement allowances of those persons subject to the Public Service Superannuation Act so that regardless of the increase in the cost of living, those people are limited to a 6 per cent increase in 1983 and a 5 per cent increase in 1984. It should be made clear, Mr. Speaker, that the designation of the six and five is arbitrary, even imaginary, and not based on fact or even on an economic forecast. In fact, the economic forecast would indicate that the proper increase for the year 1983 would have been, but for the introduction of Bill C-133, something in the area of an 11.5 per cent increase in pensions payable to retired public servants and members of the Armed Forces. If we were to act on the basis of the prediction made by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde), who indicated that even he does not expect inflation to be reduced below 8 per cent, we would have that as a standard. But there is no basis for assuming that the inflation rate in 1983 will be 6 per cent or 5 per cent in 1984. It is not even anticipated that this is an achievable goal. So what the Government is doing with this restraint policy is simply acting on an arbitrary figure it sought to impose in order to save the public purse. We have to ask ourselves, Mr. Speaker, whether that is fair in the circumstances.

I want to deal with the matter of inflation in Canada and how this economic evil may be attacked, but first let me consider the justification given by the president of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray) when he presented this Bill to us. In explaining the Bill he said that it implements the Government's six and five policy which he claimed has a double-track effect of restraining Government spending while providing additional funds for job creation. Mr. Speaker, if that statement were made in the context of a business or social environment instead of a political context, the Minister would at best be condemned for violating business and social ethics. It is well within the realm of possibility that such an extravagant and misleading claim would be considered fraudulent, but unfortunately of a kind and character that would not be subject to a court of criminal law. Nonetheless, it should and does incense fair-minded people. The fact that the Minister would have the Canadian people believe him when he says he wants to restrain public spending and at the same time spend taxpayers' dollars to create jobs means that his fraud is of a public character. That is what I want to accuse the Minister and the Government of Canada tonight of doing, perpetrating a fraud on the Canadian public. It consists of the fact that the Government is restraining Government expenditure and at the same time it is spending more funds for things which the Government thinks will bring it political credit. I can say without fear of contradiction that the Goverment's six and five program constitutes a public fraud.

Let me review the program. You remember the night of June 28 when the then minister of finance introduced his budget in the House of Commons. In describing the world of six and five, he said that Canadians have been suffering from a double digit inflation rate and, unless it was brought into line, Canadians would continue to suffer. So what he proposed to do was to start a restraint program, and he would start it with the Government's own employees, the federal public servants. The Minister knew, when he rose in this House on June 28, that there was abroad in this country the idea that federal public servants were overpaid and underworked. Well, Mr. Speaker, there may be those in the Public Service whose jobs attract a salary beyond the salary they could achieve in the private sector, and there may be those in the Public Service who do not work as hard as they ought to, but to characterize the Public Service of Canada as overpaid and underworked is grossly unfair. In fact, the statistics indicate otherwise. Statistics indicate that in the last five years, between 1977 and 1982, the Public Service increases have been marginally behind the private sector increases. I think any person knowledgeable about salary ranges in the Public Service could establish very easily that in specific areas like engineering the salaries are substantially behind those paid in the private sector. In fact, for a medium range engineer, the salary would be something in the order of $3,000 to $6,000 less in the Public Service than in the private sector.

So one has to ask what basis the Government has for restraining the Public Service in the name of helping the economy of Canada. Even restraint of Public Service salaries and related expenditures would be justified if the Government practised and over-all policy of restraint, but we have reason to believe that Government spending programs have gone onwards and upwards since June 28 when this program was announced. We have seen the Post Office pile up ever larger deficits to the extent of $500 million a year. Canadian National Railways come and tell the House of Commons that their deficit is increasing to a similar extent. The Mirabel Airport continues to pile up huge deficits, week after week, to the extent of over $1 million per week or over $50 million per year. We have write-offs for our national ports to the extent of close to $500 million. The list goes on and on. I will not mention, as I have several times in the House already, the $24 million thrown away on the purchase of jets, the $5 million to buy firecrackers to celebrate Canada's birthday, or the amount of money paid to public servants like Michael Pitfield who received a quarter of a million dollars in a settlement deal.

There is no evidence before us that the Government is serious about restraint. The only evidence is Bill C-133, in which the Government attacks retired public servants by taking from them the benefits built up, in many cases, over a lifetime of service. The Government is trying to tell the public that this is its restraint program; that it is so concerned about the amount of money being spent, it is going to cut back on the money it contracted to pay to public servants, in order to demonstrate how serious the situation is.

In a recent speech at a fund-raising event for the Liberal Party, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) referred to the bad times we are having in Canada and said that it is the worst time since the depression but that we are not to worry, because the worst time can be the best time. What he meant was that in times of adversity Canadians come together, look at themselves, and decide what to do about the problem. That may be true in the federal constituency of Mount Royal with its multimillion dollar homes and its $100,000 and $200,000 plus incomes, but it is not true in many parts of Canada. The worst times are not the best times.

It is a shame and a crime that the Prime Minister of Canada, viewing the situation with which so many Canadians are faced, could make the statement that the worst times are the best times. That is his assessment of the situation. In times of adversity you can see good things in the situation, according to the Prime Minister. I wonder if he would think that if he went to the coal mining town of Glace Bay with his colleague, the Hon. Member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall), to see the devastation being effected in that area by this period of recession and if he saw people not only losing their jobs but the hope and expectation of employment in the future. I wonder if he would say then that the worst times are the best times.

If he went to the Strait of Canso with his colleague, the former minister of finance, now the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen), and saw the devastation there, as a result of the economic recession, would he still say the worst times are the best? I should like to see him in the town of Canso or Port Hawkesbury where they are about to close down the major source of employment, the heavy water plant, telling those people that the worst times are the best times.

What we have to conclude is that the Prime Minister and the Government and, I am afraid, all his colleagues in the Liberal Party, deal entirely in perceptions. They think they can sell deals to the people of Canada and that they do not have to worry about the facts of the situation and do not have to deal with the real people who are suffering, the pensioned off public servants. They think they can just deal with the perception that they are attacking the economic problem in Canada, that the businessmen will cheer and the chambers of commerce across the land will join with them in their restraint policy without examining it.

That is why I stand in this House time and time again to tell the people of Canada that there is no restraint policy. The Government is not restraining spending. It has gone up and up and up, to $79 billion while revenues stay at $55 billion, leaving a $26 billion deficit. That is what is wrong with Canada. It is not the public servants nor the retired pensioners. They are not creating inflation in Canada. It is the Governemnt that continues to spend and spend and to borrow money to finance that spending that is causing inflation. It will have to do a lot more than pretend, at the expense of public servants and retired public servants, that it is doing something about it.

What is the Government doing to the public servants of Canada who, many Canadians think, are overpaid and underworked? The average pension paid to more than 200,000 retired public servants and members of the Armed Forces, is $6,900. Michael Pitfield and his buddies retire on a much larger pension. In the length and breadth of the Public Service the average pension is $6,900. This, together with the old age pension, which is under $3,000 per year and is going down as a result of another measure that is before the House, gives an income of $9,000 per year for a retired public servant.

If these public servants received the increase they would normally be entitled to of 11.5 per cent, the increase in their pension would be something in the area of $763, whereas with a cap of 6 per cent they will only receive something in the order of $473. What this Bill will do is take $310 away from 200,000 public servants whose total income, including Old Age Security, is $9,000.

If I thought this measure was going to correct all the economic wrongs in Canada, if I thought it was going to change the course of our economic history, if I thought it was going to do anything for the people of Nova Scotia, British Columbia or the Northwest Territories, then I would support it. Even though we are calling upon retired public servants to make that kind of sacrifice, if it meant something for the greater good of Canada and all Canadians, then I think I would support it.

There is no way that anyone on the Treasury benches, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) or the former minister of finance or 600 parliamentary assistants, can convince me that taking approximately $300 away from 200,000 retired public servants, is going to help Canada. How could that action possibly help Canada when the Government throws away $500 million on the post office, $100 million on this program and $100 million on that program and provides pension benefits to one public servant, the Clerk of the Executive Council, Michael Pitfield, of about a quarter of a million dollars?

There is no relationship between what the Government says it will do and what it does. That is beginning to bother not only Members of the Opposition but people all across Canada. They are beginning to realize that the Government talks not only from both sides of its mouth but, can I say, from several sides of its mouth. It always tells a different story and paints a different picture. What is most important, it creates perceptions. The Government of Canada never deals with facts. It never deals with the inflation rate nor with specific economic measures that are designed to reduce the inflation rate. It plays with the perception that if we cut back on public servants benefits, we will cut back on public expenditures. The truth is that payments in respect of Public Service salaries went up by 17 per cent in the year in which the Government announced its restraint program. The justification for that, given by the President of the Treasury Board was that Bill C-133 would implement the Government's six and five restraint program and that it was coupled with a job-creation program.

Unfortunately, when the former minister of finance, the Hon. Member for Cape Breton Highlands-Canso, announced this great restraint program, he did not mention job creation as being the other side of it. He picked that up later when the Government realized the problem in Canada was not really inflation or high interest rates but was unemployment. It did not find that out until a couple of months later when the unemployment rate went up a couple of points to 1.4 million people uenmployed. Then the Government began to realize that even though the Governor of the Bank of Canada and other high-priced economists did not like the rate of inflation or the interest rate, the real human problem in the country was unemployment. That is when it started to talk about job creation.

In the June 28 budget when the Minister of Finance announced measures the Government would take to cap salaries and incomes in the Public Service, he said that over a two-year period something in the area of $800 million would be saved. He immediately announced expenditures of $2 billion, most of which were directed at small business and some of which were directed at lowering interest rates. Now the Government has come forward with a job creation program in which it will spend $500 million to create 60,000 part-time jobs. It is trying to claim that that program is tied in with the caps on Public Service salaries and with increases in Public Service pensions.

There comes a time when even the Government has to give up trying to fool Members of the House and the people of Canada. If it does not know what it is doing, it can simply come to the Parliament of Canada and say, "We are sorry, ladies and gentlemen, we do not know what we are doing. We have made a number of mistakes in the past but now we want to co-operate with Members of Parliament and with people across Canada to remedy the situation." If the Government took that honest approach, I would have some sympathy for it. I would even be willing to explain to public servants and persons receiving Public Service pensions that they have to contribute in the same way as all Canadians. But that is not what the Government has done. It has simply redirected some of the funds without cutting back on expenditures at all.

Nonetheless, inflation will decrease in Canada. The interest rate will go down and is going down. The reason is that economic activity is grinding to a halt. The reason we will have a lower inflation rate over the next months and years is not the Government's six and five program. The reason is that there is no economic activity in Canada. The reason interest rates will go down is that no one is expanding his or her business or borrowing funds for business purposes, so the demand for money simply goes down. It is the lack of economic activity in Canada which is bringing down the inflation rate and the interest rate, not the Government's six and five program. One does not have to be an economist to recognize that fact.

The real fact in Canada is that there are 1.4 million unemployed persons. There were 55,000 more unemployed people this month over the figure for last month. We have every reason to believe that there will be another 50,000 to 60,000 people unemployed next month. The 1.4 million listed by Statistics Canada does not include all unemployed persons in Canada. There are all the people who have given up looking for work, 250,000 or more. There are all the people who are employed at jobs in levels well below their qualifications, that is another 250,000 to 300,000. There are all the part-time workers, the 800,000 who are working part time, at least half of whom want to work full time. There are not just 1.4 million unemployed. There are over two million or almost 2.5 million persons in Canada with serious employment problems. They are unemployed, have given up looking for work, are working below their job levels or part time. This is the result of the Government's policy. It will not be cured by any six and five restraint program. It will not even be helped by any six and five restraint program. All it does is to give the Government opportunity to take money from one sector of the population and spend it in another sector.

With the Government's record over the past decade of reallocating wealth in the country, it is no wonder that Canadians, particularly Members of Parliament, are wary about giving the Government the right to reallocate any wealth in the country.

Let us look at some of the programs which the Government has created. There is the $3,000 grant to purchasers of new homes and to new home purchasers. On the face of it, it sounds like a reasonable program. It helps owners and it helps stimulate the housing industry. But in the hands of the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation the program becomes a complete shambles.

I will not complain about that in the House of Commons because if the Minister of Housing does not know then he should that every recipient, whether the person is a new home purchaser or the purchaser of a new home, is disgusted with the Government before he or she ever receives a cheque. Recipients are disgusted with the Government because of the rigmarole through which they have to go to get the grants, the bureaucracy they have to face, the forms they have to fill out, the actions they have to take and the insults they have to endure from CMHC to obtain $3,000 grants. If the Government expected to get any votes out of the program, I can tell it that it will not.

It is the same situation with the home improvement program under which the Government provided Canadians with non-repayable loans. Again we see the Government misleading the people. It cannot even call a grant a grant any more. It has to phrase it in some way that is hardly understandable to most Canadians. If Government Members think that is helping them politically, they are mistaken because everyone I have talked with who applied for home improvement grants is completely dissatisfied.

In the first place, I do not know of any contractors in Canada to whom one can go, certainly in my part of Canada, Nova Scotia, and expect them to do kitchen work in six months' time. It takes at least six or seven weeks to contact CMHC and arrange for an inspection of one's home, which is a prerequisite to the grant. It does not make any difference what one is doing in the home. If it is something which is clearly visible as home improvement work, a week, a month or six months later one has to have an inspection. Every CMHC office across the country cannot provide inspections for at least five, six or seven weeks. Again there is no connection between the Government's announced policy in the House of Commons and what is taking place out in the country.

It is interesting that I should have an opportunity to say this to Ministers of the Crown. They sit around Cabinet with their advisers in the bureaucracy and dream up these programs without any reference to what is going on in the cities and towns across the country. This time they made a disastrous and dreadful mistake. Whereas they promised to give elderly citizens an extra $35 a month during the election campaign—and I would be the first to admit that it might have brought them a few votes—whereas they promised to provide new home owners and purchasers of new homes with $3,000 grants, and whereas they promised to provide Canadian citizens who wanted to renovate their homes with interest-free loans, the plans have backfired because they are not administering them properly.

Time and time again as part of the Government's economic program to help get the economy moving again, we have heard of help for small businesses. One does not have to talk very long to any small-businessman across the country before finding out that in his or her opinion the Government is doing nothing to help small business. In fact, the complaint is still there that the Government is riding on the backs of small-businessmen. The Government places a burden of regulatory control or a burden of Government regulations which is actually swamping small business across the country. Small businesses which might have coped in good times with this myriad and morass of Government regulations now find the burden too onerous. They do not want to carry on with high interest rates and all other problems which arise from a recessionary period within the economy. Small-businessmen are giving up. When the Government comes forward in the House of Commons saying that it is taking $800 million from public servants to put in a program to help small-businessmen, I am sure business persons across the country are asking, "Where is the help?" How many are actually seeing this help? I have talked with a great many small-businessmen. None of them have asked me to thank the Government for providing the help it claims it wants to provide.

I want to deal for a moment with the plight of pensioners across the country. As I have indicated, there is the idea that public servants have been overpaid for a long period of time, that they are not required to work as hard or their work is not as difficult as their equivalents in the private sector. It is very difficult to deal with that kind of subjective analysis. All you can do is to show people that in fact Public Service salaries are not as high as equivalent positions in the private sector, which has been proved time and time again by statistical analysis. You can show and demonstrate to person in the private sector that increases in that area have been higher for the last five years, though only marginally higher than increases in the Public Service. But you cannot deal effectively with the perception that really is the situation. You cannot always confront the perception with the facts because people are not willing to listen to facts once they have formed that idea.

I want to say to the Public Service pensioners across Canada that it is a shame the Government has created this perception and aids and abets it by saying in this House of Commons and elsewhere that we have to cut down on the Public Service both in relation to salaries and benefits to public servants who are now unemployed and in the superannuation payments made to retired public servants. We have to cut down on that expenditure.

At the same time, the Government does not point out the plight of the public servants. The Government does not point out that the average retired public servant receives an income of $6,500. The Government does not point out that in some cases public servants have taken early retirement because their jobs have been abolished. The Government talks about security in the public sector, but there is no security for a public servant in a recessionary period any more than in some aspects of the private sector. You have to be careful when making comparisons here, Mr. Speaker. One cannot compare an employee in the federal Public Service to an employee in some small regional industry that is totally dependent upon the economy of that region or on the state of the business in which the employer is engaged. But if one compares federal public servants to those employed in large organizations in the energy field, such as Imperial Oil, or if one compares federal public servants to employees working for large banks, such as the Royal Bank of Canada, then one can make a fair comparison. But, Mr. Speaker, I do not think that you will then find that job security is any different among employers at that level.

However, the Government has said, and the Minister of Finance has said in this House of Commons, that public servants should accept less because they have job security and because they have the assurance that they will continue to be employed, and they should share with fellow Canadians who are not employed the benefits of their employment. That makes sense. That is a rational approach to the situation.

I think that most Canadians, as the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said in one of his fireside chats, are willing to share. But Canadians want this sharing to be based on real facts. Canadians want this sharing to be based on truth. They want the sharing to be based on the fact that the public servants now employed do have job security. The President of the Treasury Board stood up last week and said that the Government will have to get rid of a lot of public servants, that it is going to have to cut down, because that is part of the program. What he forgot is that there may be 500,000 persons employed in the Public Service and he may be getting rid of only 10,000 or 20,000 but those public servants do not know who he means in that group. They do not know who of the 10,000 to 20,000 will lose his or her employment.

If you think that creates job security among people, Mr. Speaker, and if you think that one does not have to worry because he or she probably will not be the one in the small percentage of public servants who will lose his or her employment, if you think that gives public servants any sense of satisfaction or makes them happy at having spent most of their adult lives in the Public Service, then you are making an awful mistake, Mr. Speaker. One either has job security or one does not have job security. It is not a hit or a miss proposition to have job security. Job security is not based on percentages; it is based on the right to keep your employment against the wishes of your employer. If a person simply has a job at the whim or demand of one's employer, then a person does not have job security.

When you run down the whole list of assets that one gains by employment in the Public Service, and subsequent retirement, you find very quickly that the Government is taking most of the assets away. One has to ask what the Government is providing by way of compensation. What is it doing to make Canada a better place in which to live? What is the Government doing to contribute to economic security in the future? If there were a positive answer to that question, I think everybody in this House of Commons would say that the exercise was worthwhile. If this action that is being taken by the Government will help the economy of Canada and contribute to a better future for all Canadians, then I agree, and I am sure most Members would agree, that all Canadians ought to be called upon to share in this venture.

I have not seen any evidence that that will be the result of the Government's program. I cannot see any evidence that what the Government is taking from one sector and giving to another is going to produce anything substantial. I believe it is all a facade. I believe it is all phony. I think the Government is trying to fool Members of the House of Commons, the Parliament of Canada and the people of Canada. I think the Government has come to the end of the line. The Government realizes that it has mismanaged the affairs of Canada to the point where it cannot effectively administer the economy. This Government has overspent, as I have said, to the tune of $26 billion in the current fiscal year. This Government has run up a total debt of $132 billion. The Government has to use over $1 in every $4 in revenue to service that debt. Yet because of a situation aggravated by a world-wide problem in trade and business activity, we find ourselves with a gross economic problem.

There is no economic activity in Canada. There is no business income to pay off this debt. There is no money to invest. There is no reason to invest in new activity. Therefore, the Government can no longer depend upon the private sector to bail us out of this situation. What does the Government do? The Government does not call in the private sector and deal with the problem in a realistic way. The Government does not really examine the total process by which it has dealt with the economy. It simply announces a program for which the claim is made that it will resolve the economic problem.

The problem is that the Government's fraud is starting to affect people in a real way. When the Government of Canada comes to the House of Commons for legislative authority to take $1.61 a month away from each child under 18 in Canada; when the Government of Canada comes to the House of Commons for legislative authority to take $300 a year away from retired public servants and thus reduce their income, which is actually only at the $6,000 or $5,000 level; when you find those kinds of measures—not to mention the Bill before the House to deprive persons receiving Old Age Assistance of $19 a year—and you add them up, the children, the senior citizens and the Public Service pensioners who are being asked to contribute millions of dollars to the Government of Canada only to be redirected in some of the ways that I have already pointed out to pay for the massive deficits on the railway system, and the postal service, then you know that we are in trouble.

Even The Toronto Star was forced to write an editorial condemning the Government for its policy with respect to this Bill, Bill C-133. Even The Toronto Star has to question the rightfulness of depriving retired federal public servants of a reasonable increase in their pensions.

I would like to direct the attention of the House to exactly what we are doing here and why we are doing it, because I do not think anyone can seriously justify the breach of a contract embedded in this statutory provision—with the condonation of statutory provisions—in the name of restraint when the real effect of the breach of that contract is simply to transfer Government funds from one group of Canadians to another. In more specific terms, I do not see how the Government of Canada could ever justify breaching its contract with retired public servants and taking dollars out of their pockets unless it is part of an over-all, complete program whereby all public expenditures are limited to the same amount.

However, I have said time and time again that we know public expenditures are not being limited in that way. We know that the Government has no intention of decreasing its payments to people, even those in the employ of the Public Service, and we have seen that time and time again.

Let me close by simply saying that we have before us a Bill which, in effect, is a breach of a sacred contract between the Government of Canada and its retired public servants. The breach of that contract could only be justified on the most extreme grounds, and those grounds simply do not exist in this case. The action of the Government is wrong and I do not see how anyone in the House can properly support it.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I congratulate the Hon. Member for Halifax West (Mr. Crosby) for much of what he had to say in this House. It can truly be said of him that he is one of a few Conservatives who can stand up and attack the Government on this particular Bill, Bill C-133, because he, of course, is one of two Conservatives in the House who have joined with us in opposing the Government's Bill to limit the wages of people working in the Public Service. I congratulate him for his efforts in August and for the speech he just made in the House.

Mr. Berger: You are in good company.

Mr. Murphy: I hope that he has the ability to convince the rest of his colleagues to ensure that they are consistent in their position.

I would like to refer to the Hon. Member for Laurier (Mr. Berger) who spoke in the House. One of the things this Liberal Member discussed was the fact that there were groups in this country who supported the Government's six and five program. He mentioned one group in particular, the Business Council on National Issues, and pointed out that that group did not want mandatory controls and was very concerned that we have only voluntary controls. What he really did not mention was who was in the group and what was its representative nature. That group is composed of chief executive officers and presidents of the largest corporations in this country, and it is involved in a direct and obvious conflict of interest in giving the Government recommendations on this legislation.

Let me refer to some of those people. I do not have a complete list of the BCNI members, but I do have a list of some of the people who have supported the Government's program and I know of some of their wages. If I can refer to an article in The Financial Post dated May 15, it lists the salaries and other equivalent remunerations of various people supporting the Government's six and five program and belonging to the BCNI. C. F. Baird, the Chairman of Inco Limited, a company which supports six and five, receives $425,645 a year. D. M. Culver, President of Alcan Aluminum, receives $532,941 a year. Ian D. Sinclair, about whom we have all heard in this House, is almost "Mr. Six and Five" himself. How much does that poor man make for his work on behalf of CP? He receives $556,228 a year. Mr. A. G. de Grandpré, Chairman of Bell Canada, receives $626,000 a year, and J. A. Armstrong, Chairman of Imperial Oil, receives a meagre $736,741 a year.

An Hon. Member: And they are advising the Government.

Mr. Murphy: Therefore, I am not surprised that they gave the Government the advice for the mandatory six and five program, as well as the program which will affect Civil Service pensioners in this country. They comprise a group which has the most to gain and the least to lose by imposing what are called voluntary controls but what, in fact, are mandatory controls on the Public Service, on those who receive Family Allowances, old age pensions and, through this particular Bill, on those who are retired and receiving Government pensions. The Government Member may wish to quote those people as being ones who support the Bill, and I am certainly glad he did because that is the type of people to whom the Government should not be listening when it comes to a direct conflict of interest.

Let me turn to the person who introduced the Bill in the House today, the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray). He said that before any significant changes were made to the Superannuation Act in the future, there would be full consultation with the workers. However, that is a promise that this same Government has made in the past. Those employed in the Public Service and those who are retired from it were told that they cannot negotiate Public Service pensions. They were told that the Government would not allow them to negotiate outright. It was the Liberal Government, needless to say. However, they were told there would be full consultation with retired people before there were any changes actually relating to superannuation. Therefore, what good was the Liberal promise that there would be future consultations with regard to Public Service pensions in the future?

Mr. Blaikie: What good is any Liberal promise?

Mr. Murphy: My friend, my colleague, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) just asked, "What good is any Liberal promise?" the Liberals have just reneged on a promise that they made to Civil Service pensioners. The President of the Treasury Board himself promised that he would resign if a Liberal Government could not bring down interest rates. Yet I see him sitting across from me tonight in a Cabinet seat. He, along with many so-called progressive Liberals, had promised that the Liberal Government, if re-elected in the 1980 election, would strengthen the Foreign Investment Review Agency, but, as was mentioned, with regard to the Bowater lay-offs earlier today, that very promise has again been broken by the Government. The Government has not imposed any strengthening of regulations as far as the Foreign Investment Review Agency is concerned. In fact, it is weakening the legislation existing in this country today. A Liberal promise is not worth anything. Today that same Minister rose in the House and announced it was his intention to introduce an amendment at the appropriate time which would somehow recognize the contribution to pension plans of those who have retired so that they would not be receiving a meagre 6 per cent and 5 per cent increases. He said that he would allow increases over the next two years, not amounting to 6 per cent or 5 per cent, but, rather, to 6.5 per cent next year and 5.5 per cent the following year. I do not know what the intent of that amendment is, I do not know if it is to try to buy off some of the Liberal Members who are concerned about the effect that this Bill may have on their electoral possibilities in the next election, but I can tell you that going from 6 per cent to 6.5 per cent, or going from 5 per cent to 5.5 per cent is not going to help many, many pensioners in this country. It is a farce and it is a shame.

I would like to quote, not from Government spokesmen, not from great philosophers or great economists, but from some of the people who are receiving Government pensions at this time. I am reading from the Federal Superannuates National Association, Nova Scotia, Central Branch, a publication of December 1982. Some of their arguments are as follows:

> Our pensions, including indexation, are a form of deferred remuneration and should not be altered at the whim of Government or without prior consultation.

It also said:

> Considering the statements made in the last three issues of the Treasury Board publication, "Your Superannuation Plan", any reduction of full indexation is an outright breach of faith with those already retired.

They go on to say:

> We understand that the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Fund is not sufficient in itself to pay for indexation of pensions, but we are entitled to a share of the excess earnings from the main fund, and if our share of excess earnings was credited to the S.R.B.A. there would be sufficient to pay full indexation.

That same group says:

> When the superannuation plan was introduced, the Government said it would be non-negotiable. However, no changes would be made without consultation. To date there has been no attempt at consultation.

An Hon. Member: The Government does not believe in that.

Mr. Murphy: Those are some of the concerns, some of the positions taken by the people who will be most directly affected by this legislation.

As the Minister knows, I have been trying for over a year now, through a question I placed on the Order Paper, Question No. 3,487, to get details of exactly what is in those plans, relating to money, exactly how that money is invested, exactly what rules the Government is imposing on itself with regards to those funds. I also question whether or not there are windfall profits to the Government by the division in the investment policies followed by the Government, with regard to the two superannuation funds.

To date, over a year later, the Government has not answered that series of questions. They answered the ten questions that were before mine on the Order Paper and the 13 questions that were after mine on the Order Paper; but that question is obviously politically embarassing to Members of the Government, and they are afraid to answer it. Yet that is the kind of information that the public service retirees, Members of Parliament and the public at large are entitled to have before we debate this particular legislation.

An Hon. Member: Right on.

Mr. Murphy: I can tell you that our Party will insist on that information before we let this Bill get through the Miscellaneous Estimates Committee, because that is the information we and others need to debate this Bill with the intelligence and the knowledge that is necessary. If the Government wants co-operation it had better provide co-operation to Members of all Parties of this House.

Earlier today we heard a number of Conservative Members speak on this Bill. Conservative Members have made a big deal of the fact that they are now taking the same position we are in opposing the Government's six and five regime. However, in what might be called a re-think process or operation by the Conservatives, they keep referring to this as the third of three Bills, the third of a trilogy, with regard to the six and five program. They talk about Bill C-131 which will limit old age pensions; they talk about Bill C-132 which will limit Family Allowances; and they talk about the Bill before us, Bill C-133 which will affect pensions of retired civil servants. But the Conservatives seem to have forgotten that this is not the third of three Bills, this is the fourth of four Bills; and the first Bill in this series was Bill C-124—

An Hon. Member: Which set the stage.

Mr. Murphy: —that set the stage, that announced the Government's basic principle of limiting wages, old age pensions, Family Allowances and the pensions of retired civil servants, to six and five.

When the Conservative Member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon) was asked about this very point, he said, "Oh, C-124, that was the Bill that controlled the wages of MPs". That is certainly true, but there are 700,000 other Canadians whose wages were limited by Bill C-124, and the Conservatives had better try not to forget that. They had better tell the truth when the rest of their Members speak in this debate, that on the primary Bill on six and five they, as usual, supported the Liberal Government. For them now to say that they are against six and five is pure hypocrisy. The Conservative Party in many ways is like a bunch of streetwalkers.

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Murphy: They decide that the best way to increase their take is to work both sides of the street. That is exactly what they are trying to do. They supported six and five one day when Ian Sinclair was down here, but now that the pensioners are concerned, now that those who receive Family Allowances are concerned, now that those who are retired are concerned—oh, my gosh, we are opposed, they say, to this Liberal Bill.

If the Conservatives had opposed Bill C-124, and if they had joined us when we kept this House sitting through June, July and August, then we would not have this legislation in front of us today and the pensioners, those receiving Family Allowances, and those who are about to have their pensions through the superannuation fund de-indexed would not have to fear this legislation, they would have been protected. But the Conservatives stepped back and allowed it to happen.

I remind the Conservatives of some of the things their Leader said. He said, in reaction to the budget of June 28, 1982 which announced the particular six and five regime:

> We are relieved that it—
> It is the Government:
> —is beginning to accept that Government spending is a major cause of current economic problems . . . it is a step in the right direction.

We are in the fourth step, and now the Conservatives should recognize what is involved in those steps. They should recognize what is involved on the road that they have so gladly walked down.

Earlier today, the Minister referred to the so-called success of the six and five program. We debate that success. We debate whether a program can be called successful as unemployment increases drastically across this country. We wonder if a program can be called successful as layoffs are announced day after day. We wonder if success can be measured in the form of the Government issuing posters, stickers, pamphlets and speaker's notes, and that is all the semi-annual report on the six and five can be called. They are speakers' notes for an election campaign, the only time I ever see stickers, pamphlets, posters and speaker's notes.

What the Government is doing, often with the support of the Conservatives, is running an election campaign against workers, women and children who depend on Family Allowances, and pensioners. It is an election program which becomes very obvious when you consider that Senator Keith Davey is in charge of it. The literature was not prepared by a Cabinet Minister of the bureaucracy, but by the "Chief Electoral Officer" of the Liberal Party of Canada. Those who are being affected by this program had better remember that.

I wish to talk for a few minutes about the effect of this Bill. According to information I have received, as of last month the average annual pension paid to some 90,000 former contributors is about $8,100. In addition, 32,500 persons are paid about $3,200 in survivor benefits. Therefore, the average annual pension paid as of November 1982 was $6,900.

When the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) talks about sacrifice over television, he does not talk about those earning $3,200 or $6,900 a year, nor does he talk about those who make the great amount of $8,000 per year. These are the people who are making the real sacrifice. It is not the Pitfields, Jack Horner and all the other Liberals and Conservatives who are making a bloody rip-off of the Government system. They are protected. Those who earn $3,200 after their spouses die are making the real sacrifice.

What is the effect of this legislation on those people? After two years, those earning $8,100 a year will have lost $1,409. Those who earn $3,200 in pensions would lose $557 a year. The average Public Service pension recipient will lose $1,200 over the next two years. One of the Liberal Members referred to that as a package of cigarettes a day.

An Hon. Member: Half a package.

Mr. Murphy: I do not smoke, but someone earning $8,000 a year on a Government pension will not enjoy hearing a rather rich Liberal Member of Parliament referring to it as just half a package of cigarettes. They used to say, let them eat cake.

I wish to quote another Liberal. Speaking at the 1981 National Pension Conference, the Prime Minister said in his opening remarks:

> Put simply, people must be protected in their retirement years. The Canadian Government has pledged that they will be better protected in the future than they are now . . . Pensions which are not protected against inflation naturally tend to dwindle over the years. People who thought they had purchased protection for the rest of their lives find that they have more serious financial problems the older they become. The unfairness of that situation, particularly when the savings pool to which they have contributed may have been reaping inflationary interest premiums, is not tolerable in a nation which believes in social justice.

The very information I have been trying to get from the Government, to quote the Prime Minister, is whether the Government has been reaping inflationary interest premiums. Is the Government making that kind of windfall profit which he is attacking almost as usury in this speech? If that is the case, how can the Prime Minister allow his Cabinet to introduce this type of legislation? In a letter which the Prime Minister wrote to civil servants a few years back, he said this:

> Indexing does not give pensioners an increasingly larger claim on our economy's production, that is, more money to buy things they could earlier afford. Rather, indexing merely enables pensioners to maintain, roughly, their same standard of living.

The Bill before us is one of many steps the Government is taking to limit the pensions of the very people that the Prime Minister a number of times has said should be protected against inflation. Under the existing pension regulations, those people should not be receiving 6 and 5 per cent increases but, according to the formula which the Government designed, an 11.5 per cent increase next year. They are being robbed of over 5 per cent of the increases they are entitled to under the regulations this Government set down. This is a plan which those workers paid for in the past. It is a plan they are entitled to now and in the future.

We will oppose this legislation. We hope that Liberals who promised to oppose this legislation when they talked to retired public servants in their riding will oppose this legislation in the House. We also hope that the Conservatives will show up in the House to oppose this Government program.

As I mentioned earlier today in the House of Commons, there have been at least five occasions in the last four months, two last Friday and one the Thursday before that, when more Conservative Members of Parliament have been absent for serious votes in this House than the margin by which the Government won. Last Friday 34 Tories stayed away and the Government won by only 28 votes. Those votes were on the Government's intention to limit Family Allowances to 6 and 5 per cent increases. The Tories, as they are doing on this present Bill, got up and spoke against that Bill. They ranted, raved and did all the usual things that Tories are fairly good at, but when it came down to the actual vote in the House of Commons 34 Members of Parliament were absent. With more than one-third of their total caucus absent, the legislation passed by 28 votes. That is ironic.

What is more ironic is that the Conservatives have done the same thing in the House today. The reason we had two votes on Friday is that the Conservatives moved a motion to postpone the vote on Bill C-132, an Act to limit Family Allowances to six and five. And on their own amendment to delay for over six months the vote on the imposition of that important legislation, which they ranted and raved over, the Conservatives did not show. Again, there were 34 Conservatives at home, at quilting bees, attacking their Leader, whatever they were doing, and the Government won that vote by 28 votes.

This legislation would not be before us now if the Conservatives had showed up. We could be in an election campaign. Therefore, let every Tory, from the Leader to those in the backbenches, remember that when it comes to the vote on Bill C-133, the Bill they have been speaking against today, the Bill which they made the same amendment to postpone today, that they had better show up. I do not want to see an attack on the various Liberal Members from Ottawa, from Thunder Bay or from Cape Breton, if the Conservative Members show, through their usual lack of attendance, their lack of concern about the progress of legislation in this House. It is the Tories and not the Liberals who keep the Government in power. That is your warning, Mr. Tory, to show up and finally show your courage to vote against the Liberal Government which is imposing this bloody, stupid legislation on the pensioners of Canada.

Mr. Berger: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Hon. Member would entertain a question?

Mr. Murphy: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Berger: The Hon. Member referred to the members of the Business Council on National Issues, who, he argued, had a conflict of interest. I would ask him if it is not in the interest of all Canadians to lower the rate of inflation. I think he has addressed himself to that in his speech. Second, is it not true to say that inflation is the biggest redistributor of income to persons who have high incomes and substantial bank deposits?

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, first of all, there was a conflict of interest because one of the greatest promoters of the six and five program was Ian Sinclair, the head of CP, who, in turn, had this Government legislate the workers of CP into the six and five program. So there was a conflict of interest, and that is one of the problems of listening to that person and that group of people. Second, when we fight inflation, we must make sure that we pick on those who are best able to fight, that we pick on those thousands of Canadians who are paying no income tax at the present time, that we pick on the 700 Canadians who earned more than $100,000 and who paid not one cent in tax in 1979, because those people—

Mr. Sargeant: Make the rich pay.

Mr. Murphy: My colleague, the Hon. Member for Selkirk-Interlake (Mr. Sargeant), said, "Make the rich pay", and he is so right. Those are the people who can afford to pay for the Government's job-creation programs which we hear the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) bragging about. Those are the people who are milking the cream of the profits from this society. Those are the people who should be making the sacrifices, not those whose husbands have died and who are only receiving $3,200.

We are all interested in the fight against inflation. We are all concerned about job creation. But I am sick and tired of Liberal MPs defending the rich, giving tax incentives, tax write-offs and tax reductions, as they did in the November budget, to those at the top, and then calling on the pensioners and those receiving Family Allowances, those who make low incomes in this country, to make the sacrifices. That is the hypocrisy we talked about earlier, and I thank the Hon. Member for his question.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to have a chance to say a few words on Bill C-133. It is interesting to note that some of the Members across the way are making comments tonight that they see no reason to believe that inflation will come down during the next 12 months. Yet, if we look at the inflation rate since the six and five program was introduced on June 28, we would see that the inflation rate for each of the months, July, August and September, was in fact 0.5 per cent which, annually, comes out to exactly 6 per cent. In October it was 0.6 per cent. So it is hovering right around the 6 per cent annual rate which, I believe, is really encouraging and, I am sure, indicates the kind of support that there has been for this program.

I know that the Members in the Opposition do not like to see that much support for the six and five program. They are used to Gallup polls which go in another direction. But, clearly, the public support for the six and five program has been very encouraging, and the results, as far as inflation is concerned, are very encouraging. If we look at the Gallup poll taken I believe in September of this year, some 64 per cent of respondents said that they supported the program, some 67 per cent said they wanted to see the restraint program extended to provincial Governments, and 63 per cent felt the ceiling should also apply to the private sector. Another poll which was conducted by The Toronto Star of 200 Metropolitan Toronto residents in August found that 50 per cent of the full-time employed Torontonians were willing to accept a 6 per cent limit on their wage increases. Asked about the extension of federal guidelines to various employee groups, 83 per cent said they should apply to provincial and municipal employees, 75 per cent to employees of large corporations, 74 per cent to construction workers, 71 per cent to the medical profession, and 61 per cent said that they themselves should be governed by the 6 per cent guidelines. This program, of course, is at the federal level and is only compulsory for federal Government civil servants and Crown Corporations representing some 500,000 employees, but it is interesting that when the provincial Premiers came together this summer, although they were not really agreeable to it then, some seven out of the ten provincial Governments now have adopted some kind of restraint program.

Surely, Mr. Speaker, the voluntary approach of the private sector is more desirable than a compulsory approach, because it seems to me that many unions and many collective bargaining agreements which were reached, say, last summer or the previous summer, and are in effect for a period of two or three years, even though they were well beyond the six and five guidelines, the economic circumstances demand and have resulted in a much tighter, more efficient, more productive shop situation.

I have heard recently of a large industry where there have been quite heavy lay-offs, where the demand for their products is not very great, where they have had to bring in tremendous efficiencies, and where previously a shop would have maybe 20 people working in it, they have now honed it down to 12 or 13 workers. In fact, they are putting in place a very austere and restrained work situation even though they have a collective agreement which runs over a three-year period and which is far above the six and five guidelines.

A Member across the way complained that the problem, Mr. Speaker, was really high unemployment and lack of jobs, not inflation. Well, it is both. The six and five program is designed to address both, because not only does it try to reduce inflation to 6 per cent next year and 5 per cent the year after—and it is looking very encouraging in that regard—but the money saved, some $750 million, principally in wages, over that two-year period is being allocated to job creation.

In my own constituency we have been able to announce a number of Canada Community Development Projects, I believe about 40 or 50, resulting in several hundred jobs this coming winter at a cost of over $1 million. That is considerably more than we were able to provide last year, and for an area like mine in northern Ontario where we have high seasonal unemployment, those job creation funds are very much needed and will be very beneficial this coming winter. But that is only one part of the Canada Community Development Project. It has a special feature for native people and for young unemployed Canadians. I am really pleased about that because if you look at the unemployment statistics, they reflect a very high level of unemployment among young people. In addition, there is a fund of $18 million under this Program for native peoples.

Last Friday morning, Mr. Speaker, I had the opportunity to attend a signing ceremony with the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy), along with the Ontario Treasurer, Mr. Frank Miller, and the Ontario Minister of Labour, Mr. Russ Ramsay. The agreement signed will put in place some $200 million, the federal share of which, $100 million, is reallocated funds from other sectors of the federal Government. That shows that the over-all thrust of the six and five program is toward restraint in the federal Government, while at the same time reallocating Government funds to create jobs. I would just point that out to the Hon. Member across the way who said that the concern must be for jobs. Surely, when we are implementing direct employment programs, they should ultimately result in jobs in the private sector. I have a project in my constituency which we have been trying to get going for the last six months or year. It is to create a new shipping terminal to ship aggregates and sand to the United States. The markets are not too great right now, but as we come out of the recession in the next year or so there will be tremendous markets in the U.S. It is those kinds of programs or ventures which we should be putting in place because, after all, it is the private sector which generates the taxes which pay for the social security system we have in this country. So I think it is important that as we go about creating jobs, we create an infrastructure within the private sector which will create long-term jobs. That is really important.

I think it is also important, Mr. Speaker, even though this program is compulsory for MPs and civil servants, that we give leadership. I think the rollback in MPs wages was a good signal to the private sector in that regard. Although it is voluntary in the private sector, the compulsory aspect for federal employees is seen as a clear signal. I think the private sector has been responding in a tremendously positive and creative way, labour as well as management, in an effort to make industry more competitive, more productive and efficient.

I spoke recently with the president of a large corporation who said that whenever they discussed with their employees the idea of more productivity or improving the quality of workmanship, or greater efficiency, their response was pretty negative and along the lines of, well, the company is making lots of money, why should we worry about productivity? Yet during these past six months, when we have really been under the gun for markets, for opportunities for our products, and when everything is so tremendously competitive, that attitude has changed. Labour is saying, yes, how can we make the industry more productive, how can we keep those markets overseas, how can we co-operate and work together? That is one of the benefits of this situation.

There is not a lot that we can do to create new markets overseas, which are so important to a resource-producing area like my own, but we can put in place a very efficient and lean industry, one able to face that kind of competition with wage settlements comparable to those in the U.S. and our other trading partners so that we can have products which will compete in the world market. This Bill before us tonight, Bill C-133, is one part of that effort.

It can be argued that these employees, whether they are former MPs or civil servants, have a contract under which they contributed 1 per cent of their salaries in order to have full indexation—and I understand the Government matched that—and that they should not be restrained in any way. If we look at the over-all picture in the country, old age pensioners and people receiving the Guaranteed Income Supplement who do not have much or perhaps not even any Canada Pension Plan benefit, are restrained to six and five. I was pleased that the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray) indicated that those full contributions, that 1 per cent from the employee and 1 per cent from the employer, would be passed on and that the only thing that would be restrained, in effect, was that part of the indexation which comes directly from the Consolidated Revenue Fund.

Surely if we are successful in reducing inflation—and the first four months of the program are very encouraging in that regard in many sectors of the economy such as food, transportation, housing and so on—and if we get it down close to 6 or 7 per cent in 1983, then the pensioner who would be affected by the Bill would only be so affected to a minimum degree. We hope that the restraint on inflation will continue and that it will come down to 5 per cent in the following years.

The cost of energy has had the effect of pushing inflation up in the past few years. It is interesting that a couple of weeks ago the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Chrétien) announced that next year's increase will be minimal, and that the compensation fund increases will be reduced. That will compensate for the increases coming as a result of the Canada-Alberta Agreement.

When the six and five program was announced in late June, many senior citizens receiving the Guaranteed Income Supplement and Old Age Security—not pensioners who would be affected by this Bill—spoke out and said they wanted to play their part. If we all play our part in trying to reduce inflation to 6 per cent next year, then people receiving 6 per cent or 6.5 per cent as indicated in the Bill, will suffer considerably less than they might have otherwise.

Those are a few thoughts that I think should be placed on the record, Mr. Speaker. The six and five program is designed to restrain benefits to federal civil servants and, as well, to create employment for this coming winter. It will probably be the worst winter since the 1930s as far as unemployment is concerned. Industries that are still operating and producing jobs have tended to tighten their belts and employ a minimum of staff.

I think we have to work together, the private sector, Government and industry, and use all the tools available to us. Whether it is the new program for employment and economic development to create jobs in the private sector or the program to create employment for forestry workers, there must be a coming together of all forces at all levels of Government.

During the past three or four months we have seen great co-operation between the private sector, municipal Governments and provincial Governments, not only to create jobs through the funds being made available by the six and five program, but to do worthwhile things in the community. The six and five program has been successful in giving people an objective to work toward rather than demanding high amounts of money at a time when the economy simply cannot afford it. I think there is an opportunity through the program to create jobs, to limit our expectations and to prepare for the opportunities which will be there when we come out of this recession later in the decade.

I think we should support this program. The inflation rate is coming down, interest rates are coming down and there is the prospect for greater growth next year. At the same time, funds are being generated which can be used for job creation. After all, this is one of the main challenges we face in the coming year.

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I want to make it very clear from the beginning that I do not support this Bill. For a moment or two I want to deal with some of the comments of the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy). As long as he was speaking about Bill C-133, I thought his arguments were rational and good, but he spent a considerable portion of his time speaking on Bill C-124. During the course of his remarks he said that Members of the Progressive Conservative Party had supported the reduction of indexes for old age pensioners, for child welfare and for superannuates when they supported Bill C-124. That is what he said. I see the NDP Members nodding their heads.

An Hon. Member: Shaking their heads.

Mr. Taylor: I want to set the record straight. I have Bill C-124 in my hand, Mr. Speaker. It is entitled, an Act respecting compensation in the public sector of Canada. Nowhere does it mention Child Tax Credits; nowhere does it mention a reduction of indexes for old age pensioners; nowhere in the Bill does it mention a reduction of indexes for superannuates.

How could the Hon. Member for Churchill say what he did in the House today? How could he tell the people of Canada something that is not true? We did not support Bill C-133 when we voted for Bill C-124. We did not support Bill C-131 when we voted for Bill C-124. We did not support Bill C-132 when we voted for Bill C-124. What we did support was a reduction in our own salaries. We should set an example by taking a reduction. I would have supported a much greater reduction. The NDP opposed that. They voted against the Bill, and they should put that in their pipe and smoke it.

Bill C-124 states that it applies to employees of the various Departments, the staffs of Ministers, directors of corporations, to persons appointed by the Governor in Council, to Canadian Pacific and subsidiaries. Clause 9 of the Bill says that, "Every compensation plan for employees to whom this part applies shall be deemed to include a provision to the effect—".

Then we turn to the Schedule. I challenge Hon. Members of the New Democratic Party to show me where one of these Bills is in the Schedule. Schedule I refers to the Department of Agriculture and other various Departments. Schedule I deals with all Departments; in fact there are pages of them. Schedule II includes Air Canada, Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation, the Canadian Cultural Property Export Review Board, and these types of things.

May I call it ten o'clock, but before doing so I want to say that the NDP was completely wrong when it said that we supported these other three Bills. We did not.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Taylor: We supported reduction for those who could afford reduction, not for those who could not afford it.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

LABOUR CONDITIONS—AIR CANADA LAY-OFFS—APPLICATION OF EARLY RETIREMENT POLICY TO MACHINISTS. (B) REQUEST THAT MEDIATOR BE APPOINTED

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Mr. Speaker, this afternoon I directed a question to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) regarding the International Association of Machinists and Aerospace Workers of Air Canada being informed that 585 employees of that group will be laid off. I asked whether the Minister would inquire as to why Air Canada is not willing to apply its voluntary separation program to the machinists and aerospace workers, as it is doing to management personnel and employees of other bargaining units in the Air Canada family.

The Minister of Transport answered by indicating that in the case of management people the separation was a permanent one, and that they were not subject to recall or the protection of collective agreements. He also indicated that in the case of machinists they were subject to recall and were protected by collective agreements in terms of pensions.

The Minister said that the cases of the management people and the machinists were quite different. Why then was Air Canada prepared at one time to offer machinists the same basic program, although not nearly as beneficial to machinists as the one it offered management?

I should also like to point out that under the presidency of Claude Taylor, Air Canada has become one of the most efficient and well-managed airlines in the world. But serious labour problems have arisen in Air Canada with the proposed lay-off of 585 machinists. I hope Mr. Taylor will personally intervene and work toward a satisfactory solution, as has been the case with other Air Canada groups.

Also, Air Canada could be violating Sections 7 and 10 of the Canadian Human Rights Act by not treating all employee groups in the same manner. I am prepared to file a claim with the Canadian Human Rights Commission if this situation is not corrected. I hope I do not have to take those steps.

The International Association of Machinists is distributing cards across Canada which read:

As an Air Canada worker, my wages are being controlled under the six and five program. That's for the good of the country, so I'm told.

Now, Air Canada is threatening me with lay-off if I don't concede some of my existing benefits. That's JOB BLACKMAIL.

At the same time, the Company is offering a $21 million "Golden Handshake" deal to its management personnel. That's downright discrimination.

The Air Canada voluntary separation program is an early retirement program designed selectively to trim management staff with a minimum of hardship for the employee. On August 30, 1982, Air Canada offered a voluntary separation program to its existing management staff levels due to economic conditions. This program will cost approximately $21 million, to be paid from the company's operating fund.

Meanwhile, on September 7, 1982, the union met with Air Canada to discuss the company's plan with regard to staff reductions of the International Association of Machinists across Canada. The company indicated that the total machinists group would be reduced by approximately 518 people. At that time the position taken by the union was to extend to the International Association of Machinists the voluntary separation program being offered to all management personnel. The company's reaction was that this was out of the question.

On September 24, 1982, Air Canada discussed with the union the possibility of the voluntary separation program for the International Association of Machinists but presented to them a substantially reduced program than the one being offered to management. The cost of including the IAM members in such a program would be approximately $3 million, and the union would have to make concessions for an equivalent $3 million to offset this program, which does not even compare to the benefits being offered to management. This could be a violation of Section 7 and Section 10 of the Canadian Human Rights Act. The company is voluntarily spending $21 million for management apparently, with no strings attached.

In a letter to the Minister of Labour (Mr. Caccia) dated September 24, 1982, from Air Canada, it was stated that layoffs from the International Association of Machinists would total 585 employees, not 518 as originally assumed. In the meantime, employees of other bargaining units in the Air Canada family have obtained the voluntary separation program.

On September 30, 1982, the company informed the union that if it is ready to accept certain concessions the company's committee would try to get approval for a voluntary separation program. On October 8, 1982, the union informed the company that it was willing to submit to its members the company's offer for ratification. The company replied that the offer no longer existed. On October 19, 1982, a letter was sent to the Minister of Transport requesting assistance. Just recently an acknowledgement has been received, but it was not a satisfactory one.

The International Association of Machinists feels that with a voluntary separation plan, similar to what management personnel is receiving, the number of machinists who will be laid off effective January 3, 1983, and April, 1983, could be substantially reduced from the 585 total, therefore easing the burden on unemployment insurance.

I hope the Parliamentary Secretary will inform us tonight that the Government will intervene and try to get the two parties together. Let us try to come up with the same voluntary plan and the same satisfactory solution for the machinists as Air Canada has been providing to management personnel and other groups within Air Canada.

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, one of the tasks I take very seriously in Parliament is my role as Chairman of the Helsinki Parliamentary Group on Human Rights. If an individual Canadian or a certain group of Canadians were being discriminated against, as the Hon. Member charges, I would be the first Member in this House to fight for the protection of their rights.

Let us look at some of the facts surrounding the charges against Air Canada made by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie).

Air Canada is using almost 15 per cent more manpower today to accomplish the same workload it performed five years ago. To remain competitive, it must reduce its scale of operations to match the traffic available. Faced with the prospect of lay-offs, Air Canada has examined and proposed various alternative ways of achieving the necessary cost reductions. For example, Air Canada pilots were offered, and overwhelmingly accepted, a five per cent reduction in flying time, which roughly corresponds to a 5 per cent cut in pay. I congratulate the pilots on their wisdom and co-operation in helping to solve a real problem.

The International Association of Machinists and aerospace workers, to which the Hon. Member referred, were offered the comprehensive package which included worksharing, leaves of absence and a voluntary separation settlement. I emphasize that the machinists were offered a form of voluntary separation settlement. Granted, it was not the same as that offered to management, and rightly so, because the union is protected by the security of the collective agreement, whereas a laid-off management employee is permanently separated from the company. The International Association of Machinists rejected the comprehensive package. This is regretted by Air Canada and by the Government as this package would have allowed Air Canada to retain many, if not all, of the employees without seniority which it is now being forced to lay off. However, those lay-offs are entirely within the terms of the collective agreement.

Laid off employees and contract groups generally remain employees of the company, retain certain rights and are guaranteed return to their jobs when work becomes available.

In my view, this can hardly be described as discrimination against a certain group of employees, as unfairly charged by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine.

Mr. McKenzie: I will file a complaint with the Commissioner against you.

MINES AND MINING—UNION RECOMMENDATIONS ON STOCKPILING. (B) RESTORATION OF COMPETITIVE ADVANTAGE

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Mr. Speaker, on November 1, as reported at page 20232 of Hansard, I raised questions of the Minister of State for Mines (Mrs. Erola) and the Minister of State for International Trade (Mr. Regan) with regard to the very seriously deteriorated state of Canada's mineral industry.

Canada's mining industry produces some $10 billion of net benefits to Canada's gross national product and balance of payments because a large proportion of our minerals produced is exported, in excess of 80 per cent. As we have seen in the past year, most of Canada's major mining companies have had to exercise substantial lay-offs amounting to lost employment for thousands of mine workers across Canada, and in resource communities in particular, which depend heavily on mining operations as the mainstay of their economies. I am thinking of the asbestos mining industry of Quebec, the iron ore industry of Labrador, Northern Ontario and Quebec, the nickel industry in the Sudbury area, the uranium industry, the potash industry and the lead and zinc industries, as well as the mining activities in the Yukon, the Northwest Territories and British Columbia.

The questions really focused on determining whether or not the Ministers responsible had come to recognize the tragic deterioration of Canada's competitive position in international markets. To consider the nickel industry alone, for a moment, it is now known that there are some 25 other competing nations producing nickel, while in 1950 Canada was one of the world's three leading nickel producers. We have now developed a major industry in Sudbury, primarily represented by Inco and Falconbridge, which employ in excess of 15,000 workers, but that industry is only active to the extent of 38 per cent of its capacity. In fact, the world nickel industry is only performing at 57 per cent of total capacity.

The question I asked the Ministers was whether or not they had addressed this serious problem and had some solutions to offer. It has been recognized for some time that this problem did not just occur during the last 12 months. As pointed out in a brief to the Government earlier this year from the British Columbia and Yukon Chamber of Mines, Canada's share of metal mining markets has been in a state of decline for the past ten to 15 years. In fact, statistically speaking, we have seen our share of the world nickel market, for example, reduced from 75.7 per cent in 1950 to only 25 per cent in 1980. The Chamber of Mines, in identifying this problem, singled out the Minister of State for Mines and her policy discussion paper released last March, which totally failed to address this problem of Canada's deteriorating competitiveness and the world market situation. The brief states:

> Ignoring the decline in Canadian mineral production and independent studies that are critical of past federal policies has reduced the credibility of the Mineral Policy Discussion Paper. This deficiency must be corrected at once before it affects discussions with the provincial governments.

I would like to state some of the reasons Canada's competitive position has failed so miserably.

• (2215)

First of all, one of our most important customers for mineral resources is the United States of America which purchased more than 50 per cent of Canada's non-fuel mineral exports in 1980. The anti-American policies of this Government, both in terms of defence and security, but more particularly as represented by the National Energy Program, and our anti-investment policies with respect to foreign and American investment, have had a very detrimental impact on our potential for sales of minerals to the American market.

I want to point out, in case the Parliamentary Secretary is concerned, that the B.C. and Yukon Chamber of Mines say that it is not the current slump in the international marketplace that is at fault, but the vicious and deteriorating problem that has been developing over many years which cannot be ascribed to the current economic downturn.

In addition to the anti-American policies have been the anti-investment policies and the tendency to protectionism of the present Government which has driven away many Japanese purchasers of minerals. If we do not want to purchase cars built in Japan, they have less desire to buy our coal. They have therefore cut back on their coal imports by 30 per cent in the past year. They are buying less lead and zinc, therefore Cyprus Anvil and the northern mines are going down. They are buying less iron ore, and therefore the iron ore industry of northern Quebec is in trouble.

What I am saying in a nutshell is that the anti-investment policies, the discriminatory and volatile tax policies of this Government, the high energy taxation and the lack of regard for our important trading partners are at the heart of this serious dilemma. I would be pleased to see what response the Government members have to offer to this very serious problem which is affecting thousands and thousands of mine workers across Canada.

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, in response to the Hon. Member's concern, I must say that we on this side of the House are also very concerned about the situation.

The Hon. Member raises the question of stockpiling nickel, as did the Steelworkers Union in Sudbury last week when they met with the Leader of the Conservative Party of Canada. The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) described the proposition of stockpiling as "intriguing" and that his Party will "seriously examine it." He said, and I quote, "it makes sense". Serious examination will show that nickel is only one of our metals experiencing a world slump in prices; so also is copper, zinc, lead, silver and iron ore, just to name a few.

With the exception of cement, Canada exports the major portion of its mining output, and must accept world market prices. Stockpiling not only upsets this world market even more, it is outrageously expensive. When markets recover it is very difficult to dispose of stockpiles.

Estimates have been made on a case-by-case basis of the costs of bringing operations that are temporarily closed back into production, but time does not allow a detailed examination of those here. Let it suffice to say that for a nickel stockpiling program alone, which would stockpile the difference between the amount of nickel produced in Canada in 1982, and 1981, which were not banner years for that industry, it would cost the Canadian taxpayers about half a billion dollars, using a nickel price which would only cover the producer's operating costs. This does not include those mines still open, but operating at a loss, who might also want assistance, particularly as their losses would be aggravated by the depressing effect of increased inventories. That is not to say that this Government does not care about the people in the Sudbury basin.

The Hon. Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Chrétien) has been meeting regularly with all levels of Governments, with the unions and the companies, to come up with some creative solutions to this very disturbing unemployment situation. It ought to be mentioned that the Minister of State for Mines (Mrs. Erola) has been actively pursuing creative solutions to rectify a very, very difficult situation caused primarily by a world economic recession.

ATOMIC ENERGY OF CANADA LIMITED FUTURE OF NOVA SCOTIA HEAVY WATER PLANTS. (B) POLICY ON SALES TO INDIA

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Mr. Speaker, let me begin my remarks by pointing out to the House that Atomic Energy of Canada Limited operates in the Province of Nova Scotia two heavy water plants respectively located at Glace Bay and at Port Hswkesbury in the Strait of Canso. These two heavy water plants have been in operation for several years and employ jointly over 700 persons directly, and probably another 2,000 persons indirectly. Therefore, any cessation of the operation of these heavy water plants would result in a loss of jobs in the area of 3,000 persons in the Cape Breton area of Nova Scotia.

I would point out that that area of Cape Breton now has an unemployment rate of approximately 19.5 per cent. There is no question that if the operation of these heavy water plants in Cape Breton was endangered and if they were to cease operation, there would be a very serious problem created on top of the existing serious unemployment problem in the Island of Cape Breton which would affect the economy of the whole of Nova Scotia.

With that in mind, on November 3, 1982 I rose in the House of Commons and asked the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Chrétien), and subsequently the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), what action might be taken to ensure the continued operation of these heavy water plants by Atomic Energy of Canada Limited. On that day I was not successful in obtaining a clear and careful answer to my inquiry. Although the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources did indicate there was a serious problem with the marketing of the Candu reactor both in domestic and international terms and the failure to sell Candu reactors domestically and internationally would mean there was no market for the heavy water to fuel these plants.

Given the problem with the Candu reactor program, in that it has been unsuccessful, I still want to ask the Government what it proposes to do in the face of this horrendous problem in Cape Breton Island and across the Province of Nova Scotia. What in a word is the solution?

I do not believe, and I am sure my colleague from Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall) does not believe the economy of Cape Breton and Nova Scotia can withstand this tremendous amount of unemployment which, beyond the persons immediately affected, would have a disastrous effect on the operation of the power plants that are related to the operation of the heavy water plants at Glace Bay and Port Hawkesbury. In addition, there is a vast amount of coal produced in connection with these operations that would be left without a market, as well as the effect on the miners who engage in that operation.

In search of a solution the employees of the heavy water plants have made the suggestion that the Government should consider the construction of three 600-megawatt Candu reactors in Canada to be related to other energy projects. They point out in graphic terms that this could be of great assistance to the energy industry across Canada because the reactors could be used to fuel and assist broader energy projects.

Those employees of the heavy water plants pointed out in very clear terms that the economic activity generated by the operation of the heavy water plants is a very serious concern because they pump a vast amount of money into the economy. In fact, it was indicated by Atomic Energy of Canada that the cost to that organization of operating the heavy water plants is in excess of $120 million per year.

One wonders what the obligation is of the Government of Canada in this situation. Let me refer to a remark by the Prime Minister made in June of this year when the unemployment rate had risen to 10.8 per cent. He said it is scaring hell out of the people. We now have an unemployment rate two points higher and the Prime Minister is saying that the worst times can be the best. That is the word from the Prime Minister of Canada to the working people of Glace Bay and of the Strait of Canso, that the worst times can be the best. We want more than words of that kind from the Prime Minister of Canada. The people need action, concrete proposals to meet those problems.

The Government ought to consider the suggestion made by the workers in heavy water plants, and determine whether the construction of reactors cannot be accomplished across Canada and elsewhere in the world. The Government must review its plans and its programs and ensure the sale of these reactors to provide for the continuation of these heavy water plants, because if it does not, not only will the workers involved come upon economic disaster, but probably the whole Island of Cape Breton will experience an economic disaster, if it is not already in that situation at present.

I hope the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources will give a little more thought and consideration to this problem than he has in the past, that he will not content himself with the indication he gave to the parliamentary committee on November 23 when he simply said he had a proposal to close the heavy water plant and unless something happened, which he did not indicate he intended to make happen, he would have to abide by the recommendation of Atomic Energy and close the heavy water plant.

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, in response to the concerns raised by the Hon. Member, I wish to inform him that we, on this side, do not need to take any direction from him, or his Party, about how we should be sensitive to those workers in Glace Bay and Port Hawkesbury. I should point out to the Hon. Member that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Chrétien), as well as the Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen), met with the unions involved at both Glace Bay and Port Hawkesbury and explained the situation to them. The problem we have to focus our attention on is twofold, both domestic and international. There are no foreseeable sales for Candu reactors within Canada or, indeed, on the international market.

What is more appalling, Mr. Speaker, is the hypocrisy of the Conservative Party of Canada. We have the Conservative Member for Halifax West (Mr. Crosby), a "Crosby", unlike his colleague, the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie), or his colleague, the Hon. Member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Clarke), or his colleague, the Hon. Member for Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatyshyn), who each want those two heavy water plants closed.

Of course, the New Democratic Party is no better, including the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow). The NDP Convention of 1980 passed a resolution which in effect said, "close both those heavy water plants." Therefore, I find it somewhat despicable that the Hon. Member would come to this Chamber and put forward the case, if you will, that somehow he is concerned about the workers in those areas. It does not add up. On the one hand you have the Conservative Party arguing that the plants ought to be closed. On the other hand you have a member from Halifax, who is probably a leadership candidate provincially, trying to say to the workers in that area that he is very concerned about them.

I assure the Hon. Member that everything possible is being done to maintain the existence of the two heavy water plants in Glace Bay and Port Hawkesbury, both internationally and domestically. But he ought to know and appreciate that we are in a worldwide economic recession and individuals are not buying the Candu reactor. Therefore, I suggest very politely and respectfully that the Hon. Member's hypocrisy is second to none, other than that, of course, of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) and those three Conservative Members who have said time and time again that the heavy water plants ought to close. We don't need that kind of debate in the House of Commons by the Hon. Member from Halifax. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Chair will reserve the right of Hon. Members present or absent to invoke their rights tomorrow as they may see fit with respect to the word "hypocrisy".

It being 10.30 p.m. I do now leave the chair until two o'clock tomorrow afternoon.

At 10.30 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

AUDITOR GENERAL'S REPORT

TABLING OF REPORT FOR FISCAL YEAR ENDED MARCH 31, 1982

Madam Speaker: I have the honour to lay upon the table the Report of the Auditor General of Canada to the House of Commons for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1982.

I would remind Hon. Members that, pursuant to Standing Order 65(1)(q), this report is deemed permanently referred to the Standing Committee on Public Accounts.

MOTIONS UNDER S.O. 43

[English]

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

CHEMICAL POLLUTION OF NIAGARA RIVER-LAKE ONTARIO BASIN

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Recent reports indicate that the flow of chemical contaminants into the Niagara River-Lake Ontario basin is now such that municipalities using these waters are urged to consider the development of emergency alternative sources of water supply. I therefore move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling):

That the Government of Canada, through its Department of the Environment, directly intervene in the present court proceedings already initiated and requiring immediate remedial measures to be taken with respect to the S-Area dump, the major source of this contamination.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

SEARCH AND RESCUE

SATELLITE COVERAGE OF WEST COAST AND FAR NORTH

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Madam Speaker, whereas the SARSAT emergency location system, which uses satellite pinpointing of ELT equipped aircraft or vessels, has already been credited with the saving of several lives, besides reducing search and rescue costs, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta (Mr. Friesen):

That the Department of National Defence be mandated to extend SARSAT coverage to the West Coast and the Far North by establishing additional ground receiving stations.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

TRADE

OBSERVANCE OF ANTI-BOYCOTT POLICY BY GOVERNMENT AGENCIES

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Madam Speaker, I rise to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43. It was recently revealed that the Canadian Dairy Commission wilfully broke Government rules forbidding Government agencies to support the Arab boycott of Israeli goods and services. The Canadian Dairy Commission admits having entered into agreements that clearly accepted the principle of the Arab blacklist against Israel, in order to get contracts from Libya. Inasmuch as the action of the Canadian Dairy Commission violates both the letter and spirit of the Government's own guidelines, declared first in 1976 and put into regulations in 1977, and inasmuch as the move by CDC is even more deceitful by its attempt to use an intermediary business, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie):

That this House urges the Government to take action to ensure that its anti-boycott policy is respected by all Government agencies, Departments and Crown corporations.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

S.O. 43

STATUS OF WOMEN

SUPREME COURT RULING ON NON-FAMILY ASSETS

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, I rise under Standing Order 43 to move the following motion. On December 6, 1982, the Supreme Court of Canada ruled that, in the event of marriage breakdown, a woman who has worked outside the home during some, or all of the period of the marriage, is entitled to a share of non-family assets, but that a woman whose work has been solely in the home can receive no such benefits. Therefore I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling):

That this House urge that all legislatures and courts develop, administer or interpret family law in such a way that the woman who works in the home is not discriminated against, as she is in this most recent ruling of the Supreme Court of Canada with regard to non-family assets.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

SHIPBUILDING

DEMAND FOR INTRODUCTION OF GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. J. Robert Howie (York-Sunbury): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Whereas the Canadian shipbuilding industry in a period of decreased world demand is faced with increased competition from subsidized foreign shipyards, with resulting widespread unemployment in the shipbuilding and marine communities in Canada, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Corbett):

That the Government be directed to bring in its shipbuilding policy now, and that such policy contain tax incentives for building, buying and leasing Canadian built and registered ships to enable Canadian shipyards and ship operators to compete in world markets, and further be directed to bring in a policy that requires that vessels for resource exploration and transportation in the Canadian Arctic be built in Canada.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

SUPPORT FOR ADEQUATE MANPOWER RESOURCES

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Madam Speaker, I rise under Standing Order 43 to bring to the attention of this House of Commons the alarming rise in the rate of criminal activity related to break-ins, robberies, and other crimes of violence, as a result of the severe economic recession into which Canada has drifted. I therefore move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Corbett):

That the Government give police forces the required manpower and support staff to control criminal activity adequately and that the highest priority be granted to staving off lay-offs and cutbacks in positions involved with public safety by the wise use of job creation of job-retention funding programs.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

MUNICIPAL AFFAIRS

FUNDING FOR CAPITAL WORKS

Mr. Bill Yurko (Edmonton East): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Yesterday the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) stated that municipalities across Canada should initiate and undertake capital works programs by borrowing on the capital market. To encourage such action without imposing any immediate revenue requirements on the federal Government, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers):

That the Government bring forth legislation immediately to permit municipalities to issue tax-free bonds to raise capital for needed municipal capital works projects and thus generate jobs.

Such a policy would use tomorrow's potential federal Government tax dollars to create jobs today.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

POLITICAL PARTIES

NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY POSITION ON PROSTITUTION

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Madam Speaker, in view of the fact that yesterday the Justice critic of the New Democratic Party, the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson), stated on the "Jack Webster Show" that the official position of his Party is to legalize prostitution and license brothels in certain areas of the city, and in view of the fact that the NDP have only recently acquired an interest in the endeavours of the small business person, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Cariboo-Chilcotin (Mr. Greenaway):

That when the Member for Burnaby returns from his wanderings in Washington, D.C., this House call upon him to explain whether his Party also favours government grants and loans to assist those wishing to open businesses in human flesh; whether subsidies will be made available to those of less fortunate means who would like to but cannot afford to ensure the viability of the businesses, and whether his Party proposes to amend the Income Tax Act to make such business transactions tax-deductible expenses.

SUPREME COURT DECISION IN LEATHERDALE CASE

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Whereas the highest court in the land yesterday announced its decision in the Leatherdale case, to the effect that the only value a woman brings to her marriage is the monetary value of her wages or salary earned, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Beaches (Mr. Young):

That this House express its profound regret for this decision, especially for its failure to recognize the contribution of Canadian women to the family in raising children.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

SUPPLEMENTARY RETIREMENT BENEFITS ACT

POSITION OF CERTAIN LIBERAL PARTY BACKBENCHERS

Mr. Sid Parker (Kootenay East-Revelstoke): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the fact that several backbench Liberals recently said they would vote against Bill C-133 because it would cut the pensions of retired Public Servants, and in view of the fact that several of those Members changed their minds when the Government offered to reduce that pension cut by a chintzy one-half of 1 per cent, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo):

That this House express its disappointment that these backbench Liberals, in changing their minds and accepting the half a per cent solution, have betrayed thousands of retired Public Servants and condemned many of them to lives below the poverty line.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

THE ADMINISTRATION

EXECUTIVE REMUNERATION

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Madam Speaker, the Government's six and five program creates a law for the rich and a law for the poor in that public servants and pensioners, children and senior citizens, are deprived of statutory benefits granted by Parliament, while an executive like Michael Pitfield is given a substantial retroactive pay increase and unearned pension benefits which could cost over $1 million. Other Government executives are given similar benefits. I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall):

That this House condemn the Prime Minister of Canada and his Government for robbing poor Canadians to reward rich friends like Michael Pitfield, Joel Bell, Pierre Juneau, Maurice Strong, Jack Horner, Donald Macdonald, and on, and on and on.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

EUROPEAN MANAGEMENT FORUM REPORT

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance, who must have noticed the report coming from the European Management Forum which reviewed the records of 22 countries and found that Canada, in terms of business confidence within Canada, ranked 12 out of 22, compared to other nations. In terms of innovative forward orientation, Canada ranked 16. In terms of outward orientation with the rest of the world, Canada ranked 17. Would the Minister of Finance indicate, bearing in mind that his Party has been in power in Canada for 19 of the past 20 years, what has gone wrong in this country?

[And the Hon. Member for Nunatsiaq having taken his seat:]

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I apologize for the interruption in the answer to the Hon. Member, but it was a worth-while interruption since we are welcoming, on the Government side, the presence of the Hon. Member for Nunatsiaq (Mr. Ittinuar). I would say that if there are Members as good on the Opposition side, we would be happy to consider their candidacy, not the Hon. Member from Edmonton who is smiling over there, but some others.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lalonde: Madam Speaker, the study to which the Hon. Member refers is one that includes a number of very subjective criteria. The ones he has indicated, for instance, are indeed in that category of very suggestive criteria which are very difficult for anyone to evaluate in a scientific way. I would like to remind the Hon. Member, however, that, over all, that agency has come to the conclusion that, of all the countries analysed, Canada ranks number six in the world. It is not a bad performance, I would suggest to the Hon. Member, taking into account that we are in competition with all the other industrialized countries in the world, that Canada could stand up in that regard compared to other industrialized countries.

If the Hon. Member wishes to have supplementaries, I could go into some of the points he has mentioned and draw to his attention that this Government in the last year has taken a number of steps, for instance, having to do with research and development, which indicate quite clearly that we are attaching a lot more importance to this whole issue of innovation, and we look forward to making sure that the Canadian economy is going to be one of the most progressive in the world. We are determined to make sure that the Canadian economy is going to remain in the vanguard of industrial progress in the world.

INDUSTRIAL TRENDS

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Madam Speaker, my supplementary is directed to the Minister of Finance. To be specific, in The Globe and Mail this morning it was reported that:

> Manufacturers reported lower orders and further cutbacks in both production and jobs in November. The Conference Board of Canada states that production was down again in the third quarter. Canadian farm prices are reported to be dropping still. The slump in the steel industry has prompted the Dominion Bond Rating Service to lower the rating of two steel companies in Canada, and Canadian pulp producers continue to take a beating.

In view of this continuing industrial slump, has the Minister given any consideration to reversing the move made in the November, 1981, budget which called for a lower depreciation allowance for industry, a move which has cost, this year and last, Canadian industry $2 billion in money grabbed by Ottawa?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): First of all, Madam Speaker, I would dispute some of the statements made by the Hon. Member. Indeed, the situation is serious, the recession is quite serious, but as the Conference Board report to which he alludes indicates, there are also some encouraging signs. For instance, the Conference Board is estimating that there will be 156,000 housing starts next year. They also note a significant decline in the inflation rate, and forecast a moderate recovery in the U.S. as well as Canada. That will have a significant impact on all the industries that the Hon. Member has referred to, particularly the steel and forest industries, to mention only two of them.

The specific measure that he is referring to is one that has been carefully examined and studied. We have come to the conclusion that the depreciation rate in Canada compares favourably with that found in most of our competitors, and that the solution is to try to create an environment for general economic recovery, rather than making small adjustments here and there on specific items having to do with the tax system. We have made a number of adjustments but, as far as the capital cost allowance is concerned, I have indicated that the decision has been to keep the proposal in the November budget.

SMALL BUSINESS BOND PROGRAM

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Madam Speaker, let me try the same Minister again, who apparently has no wish to help business in Canada create needed jobs.

In the November, 1981 budget, the small business bonds were changed so that they would only be available to small businesses in financial difficulty. In view of the fact that small businesses have now been caught in a Catch 22 situation where they apply to a bank and the bank says, "Are you in financial difficulty?" If they say yes, the bank says, "We do not want to make a loan to you." In short, there is no further sizeable activity in small-business bonds at the bank level.

Will the Minister change this, bearing in mind we have lost almost 600,000 jobs in this country in the past year, a rate of job loss running at 1,900 Canadians per day thrown out of work because of the misdirected policies of the Government?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I would have to point out to the Hon. Member that the business community in general has not passed the same judgment as he has about the measures we have announced in this House since last October. As a matter of fact there has been quite a lot of support for the decisions announced by the Government since that time, and particularly since the six and five program contained in the budget of last June.

As far as the small business sector is concerned, I would remind the Hon. Member that we have made a change, for instance to the 12.5 per cent tax on dividend provision whereby that tax is not going to apply to past dividends but will apply only in the future. This is going to be of significant benefit to the small business sector.

We have decided not to proceed at the present time with the wholesale tax. This is going to be of great benefit to the small business sector which was very concerned about the implementation of this proposal at this particular time.

Finally, the significant interest rate reduction program that we have for small business is still in operation, and a large number of small businesses are benefiting from these measures.

I should like to point out, Madam Speaker, that over the last few months we have succeeded, through the co-operation of all sectors, in reducing inflation. This has also allowed us to reduce interest rates by over 5 per cent for the entire business sector. That is what is important in the sense of creating a favourable environment for further investment. Everyone is now able to borrow at a much cheaper cost than they were able to a few months ago.

SHIPBUILDING

DECLINE IN EMPLOYMENT—PRODUCTION OF GOVERNMENT REVIEW POLICY

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. The Minister will know that at the end of last March there were 18,000 shipbuilding jobs in the country, and at the end of October there were less than 12,000 jobs, and that this is a serious problem. The contracts are drying up fast and the bottom of the well is in sight.

While the Minister's Department has been lollygagging over releasing the shipbuilding review policy, and while the Minister has been doing the same thing for the past two and a half years, $1.1 billion worth of domestic shipbuilding has gone to foreign markets.

My question is the same one that I put to the Minister of State for Economic Development last week, to which he was unable to give an answer. When is that policy coming forward and what encouragement will it contain for unemployed shipbuilding workers?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, as I indicated in the House the other day in answer to a question from a colleague of the Hon. Member, we spent a great deal of time last summer and fall on the shipbuilding policy and we hope to make an announcement shortly. Even while that policy was being discussed, several contracts were landed by Canadian firms with the assistance of the Government of Canada. As I think I indicated to the Hon. Member several weeks ago, the Saint John shipyard landed a $100 million plus contract for a semi-submersible drilling rig. The company was assisted in that, to a large degree, by the Government of Canada.

CONSTRUCTION OF FISHING TRAWLERS

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is for the same Minister who apparently did not hear my original question too well. I asked him what is going to be included in that shipbuilding review. I will give him a little help. Will it contain provisions that will alter, for instance, current policies of the Department of Fisheries and Oceans regarding the purchase of trawlers offshore in foreign markets for use in the fishing industry in the Atlantic provinces? Or, on the other hand, will it espouse policies such as those recommended by the Hon. Member for Saint John, that the private sector must start stockpiling unusable vessels like so many sticks in the lumberyard, before the Government is prepared to step in and take an interest in the plight of unemployed shipyard workers?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, when the policy is announced by the Government of Canada the Hon. Member will be one of the first to see what it will encompass in the shipbuilding industry.

REFLECTION OF GOVERNMENT LIABILITIES

Mr. Doug Anguish (The Battlefords-Meadow Lake): Madam Speaker, my questions relate to the Auditor General's Report, tabled today. My first question to the Minister of Finance is one that I put to him on October 29 regarding the Public Accounts of Canada.

The Auditor General again points out the very serious situation that has arisen because of the Government not having its books in order. Some $14.5 billion in statutory appropriations are not recorded, international development assistance loans have been overvalued by $3.9 billion, and the total understated liability of the Government of Canada is shown as $17.9 billion. If any business or individual submitted an income tax return on the basis of books kept as the Government of Canada keeps its books, they would be nailed for income tax evasion.

I would like to know what the Government is going to do to put the books of the country in order so that they will fairly reflect our financial situation.

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I answered this question some time ago, and my answer still stands. It is a complex issue on which there is a division of opinion. Different accountants have different points of view on the matter. Perhaps the Hon. Member would care to note that not all the assets belonging to the Government of Canada are calculated either. For instance, what value would he put on our national parks such as Banff or Jasper or to go even further, how would he calculate the value of the Yukon and Northwest Territories, which belong to the Government of Canada? What value would he put on offshore resources? There is no evaluation being done of these assets, and it is something the books do not show either. So once again, it is a technical and a complex issue which is still being debated by the accounting profession.

• (1430)

[English]

Mr. Anguish: Madam Speaker, I was hoping the Minister would have answered the question.

ACCOUNTABILITY OF CROWN CORPORATIONS

Mr. Doug Anguish (The Battlefords-Meadow Lake): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board. One of the main thrusts of the Auditor General's report concerned Crown corporations and their lack of accountability. Earlier some $25 million was advanced to CN Marine for the purchase of a new ferry. This money was put in a trust account in the name of the shipbuilding company, and some $163,000 has been withdrawn from the account for the shipbuilding company. Is this a practice which would be condoned by Treasury Board?

Hon. Herb Gray (President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, I have not yet had a chance to study the report in depth. I will be consulting with my colleague, the Minister of Transport, about it. With respect to the Hon. Member's question regarding Crown corporations, as he knows, the Government presented a Bill to the House designed to create a stronger accountability and responsibility framework respecting Crown corporations. Certainly I hope that before too long we will be able to make progress in considering this matter. It is certainly my desire and that of the Government to have an improved and stronger framework of responsibility and accountability with respect to Crown corporations.

DEPARTMENTS' PEAK SPENDING MONTH

Mr. Doug Anguish (The Battlefords-Meadow Lake): Madam Speaker, again my question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board. Something which the Auditor General also pointed out in his report was that the peak spending month for every year in Government was the month of March. In fact some months it doubles other months in which the Government makes expenditures. It is certainly a time when many Government Departments spend off the fat within their Departments or their agencies. Would the Minister take a very serious look at this? Instead of robbing old age pensioners, would he take a look at carving some of the fat from departmental budgets which is very obvious by the peak spending in the month of March?

Hon. Herb Gray (President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, I reject completely the premise of the Hon. Member's question with respect to robbing pensioners. There is nothing of the kind in anything we are doing. At the same time I will certainly study the views of the Auditor General with respect to peak spending, as the Hon. Member alleges, in the month of March. I hope when we have examined it that my hon. friend will not rise and complain that any spending we are reducing is for programs he is seeking.

CASE OF CANADIAN PROFESSOR—CLAIM OF IMMUNITY FROM PROSECUTION

Mr. Chris Speyer (Cambridge): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. This morning in the Old Bailey the spy, Hugh Hambleton, was convicted and sentenced to ten years' imprisonment. In making representations as to sentence his counsel stipulated that full disclosures of his activity had been made to the RCMP and that he had been granted immunity from prosecution. This was not disputed by the prosecutor, and it was taken into consideration by the trial judge.

In addition, his defence counsel brandished a letter to the court, said that it contained the promise of immunity from prosecution, and said that he had been requested not to file the letter as an exhibit at the trial. Who was the author of that letter? What information did it contain? How does the Minister reconcile any of this with his statement in the House that, "I can assure this House that no deal was made with Hambleton"?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Madam Speaker, I have no personal knowledge of the existence of such a letter or of its contents.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Kaplan: I can assure the Hon. Member that no letter was sent by me or any official on my behalf, offering immunity. I explained to the House exactly what the circumstances were under which the RCMP informed Mr. Hambleton that there would be no prosecution, the basis of confidence that was established, the information that was obtained on the basis of that confidence, and what was done with it. I have verified with the Security Service Officials that they would have been prepared to go back to the Department of Justice and put a case to them again, if at any time subsequently evidence was developed which would have supported the laying of charges against Hambleton in Canada.

I remind the Hon. Member that when evidence is taken from an individual, without any caution being given to him, after he has been informed that no charges will be laid against him, it would be very difficult for that evidence alone to be brought forward in a court, and that the opinion of the experienced investigators of the Security Service was that some independent other evidence would have been required before they could go back to Justice and present a case again.

Mr. Speyer: I say through you, Madam Speaker, to the Minister that the reality is that a parking meter violator or a shoplifter is treated in a far harsher fashion than our spies.

[Editor's Note: At 2.35 p.m. the lighting in the Chamber failed.]

Madam Speaker: Order, please. If I may have the indulgence of the House, perhaps we could wait a while so that I can find out what is the cause of the problem.

An Hon. Member: We are in the dark anyway.

Mr. McKnight: Stick around, Pierre, and you will see the light.

Madam Speaker: I am just finding out whether the lights can be activated right away. Otherwise we shall probably have to suspend the sitting for a while.

[At 2.40 p.m. the lighting resumed in the Chamber.]

AVAILABILITY OF INFORMATION

Mr. Chris Speyer (Cambridge): Madam Speaker, it is impossible for anyone to believe that some type of deal, that some type of immunity, would not be granted for this spy to tell everything concerning the information he had. In light of catching Hambleton red-handed in November, 1979, with the most sophisticated type of Soviet-made espionage equipment, and in light of the fact that we knew he had been a spy for 30 years, did the Minister or the Security Service know that documents which were important to NATO were being passed to the Soviet Union or whether we were aware prior to the prosecution in Great Britain that the highest grade of intelligence, namely "Cosmic" classified documents, were passed to the prosecution? What information did we not have that the British had in order to enable them to prosecute Hambleton?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice): Madam Speaker, this question appears to be directed at the information which was in the hands of the Attorney General at the time the decision was made on April 25, 1980, not to prosecute. Perhaps I might draw to the attention of the House that the first count in the trial just completed in London, on which Mr. Hambleton was convicted, was one of communicating to a Russian agent top secret, secret, and confidential material belonging to the North Atlantic Treaty Organization. I can inform the House that at the time the decision was made by the Attorney General there was no information of this kind concerning Mr. Hambleton's passing information of this type.

Mr. Speyer: What about the second count?

ACTIVITIES IN CANADA AFTER 1961

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Justice. The first count concerned offences which were committed between 1956 and 1961. I am sure that the Minister has informed himself as to the elements of the second count which was withdrawn.

Can the Minister say whether his Department is considering recommending the laying of charges with respect to offences committed subsequent to 1961, and especially within Canada?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice): Madam Speaker, in case my previous words were not sufficiently clear, I can confirm that there was no evidence before us of transmission of NATO secrets at any time.

With respect to other evidence which may have been revealed at the trial in London, one of our senior Justice prosecutorial officials has been at the trial and I am looking forward to consulting with him on his return as to whether the interest of Canada is further involved in any way in this matter.

POSSIBLE LAYING OF CHARGES

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, with respect to the possibility of offences having been committed subsequent to 1961, will the Minister be discussing with his representative, upon his return from Great Britain, the possibility that those offences were committed, quite apart from supplying NATO secrets, but offences of any kind, against the Official Secrets Act? If found to exist, will his Department be considering the laying of charges against Mr. Hambleton?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice): Madam Speaker, I would not want to prejudge the result of our inquiries, so I think that it is best to say that we do not know the evidence at this point which was presented in the United Kingdom. In fact some of it was presented in secret and may not be available to us. I certainly will consult with my official on his return to attempt to ascertain whether the interest of Canada is further involved.

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

IMPORTATION OF VEHICLES MANUFACTURED IN JAPAN

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In view of the fact that Statistics Canada reported today that both exports and imports in the automotive industry are at an all-time low, in view of the fact that an Ontario report states that the automobile industry is in dire straits and that the auto pact is no longer effective and may, indeed, be obsolete, and in view of the fact that Japan now has 27 per cent of the automobile sales market in Canada, which makes us the third largest consuming nation of Japanese cars, what will the Minister do to force the Japanese to come to a quota, to cut back on imports, or to ensure that Japanese cars are sourced in Canada because of the thousands of Canadian workers who are unemployed and the many thousands who will never go back to work?

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister of State (International Trade)): Madam Speaker, of course the Hon. Member touches on a very difficult subject. It is the question of the incursion of Japanese motor cars into what had been considered the traditional Canadian market. I believe the Hon. Member will recognize that sales of all types of motor cars have fallen off as a consequence of the downturn in the economy and as a consequence of energy costs as well.

However, the question of the number of vehicles being imported into this country from Japan is a matter of discussion between Japanese officials and our officials. As well, representations in relation to the utilization of parts from Canadian parts manufacturers in Japanese cars is another very topical and, in my view, important subject.

MINES AND MINING

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT CONSIDER STOCKPILING PROGRAM

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Mines. As the Hon. Minister already knows, the city of Sudbury, which already has 28.5 per cent of its work force unemployed, learned today that another 1,050 workers who were scheduled to go back to work in April will never be recalled.

In an international struggle to secure larger shares of the world market, Canadian workers are the primary victims as their jobs disappear with Canada's declining share of the market. In order to halt this devastation of the Canadian industry and the lives of workers in communities like Sudbury, if the Minister will not consider taking Inco and Falconbridge into public ownership, will she consider a proposal to provide price support or stockpiling incentives to Canadian producers until world prices begin to recover, in the long-term interest of securing our markets in the world and jobs for our workers in Canada?

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of State (Mines)): Madam Speaker, the answer is no. I would suggest to the Hon. Member that he consult with the Leader of the New Democratic Party, because it was the Leader of the New Democratic Party who said he would have to consider very carefully all proposals, and was leery of endorsing a stockpiling program.

ACCOUNTABILITY OF CROWN CORPORATIONS—NECESSITY FOR LEGISLATION

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board. The Auditor General's Report, which was tabled today, complains of a lack of accountability in the more than 300 Crown Corporations. He refers to them as a sub-government which employs 263,000 people and spends $33 billion. Six years after the Auditor General reported weak and ineffective financial management and control, and in spite of recommendations by the Public Accounts Committee, which is an all-party committee controlled by Government Members, the Auditor General now reports that, "The legislative framework urgently required is still not in place."

Where is the proper Crown Corporation legislation, and when will it be debated? I hope the Minister will not use Bill C-123 as an example, because that Bill was introduced over five months ago. It is an omnibus bill and has not had one word of debate in the House.

Hon. Herb Gray (President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, Bill C-123 does contain an important section which is designed to address concerns on both sides of the House over the need for a stronger framework of accountability with respect to Crown Corporations. I am informed by my colleague, the House Leader, that he has been holding discussions with House Leaders of Opposition Parties about the possibility of dividing Bill C-123 so that the portion with respect to Government reorganization and the portion with respect to Crown Corporations could be debated separately. I hope that the Government House Leader and his colleagues will soon reach a mutually acceptable understanding on proceeding with this matter at an early date.

Mr. Clarke: The Minister's predecessor and the Auditor General know very well that even that part of Bill C-123 does not address the problems described by the Auditor General.

DEBATE ON LEGISLATIVE MEASURES

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Madam Speaker, what we need is legislation that will deal correctly and properly with classification, the comprehensive audit, the appointment of auditors, and the duties and reporting abilities of auditors of Crown Corporations. When will we get those measures?

Hon. Herb Gray (President of the Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, I do not necessarily agree with my hon. friend that Bill C-123 does not address these issues, particularly when one looks also at the accompanying policy directive. At the same time, we can certainly consider the very useful recommendations of the Auditor General further and in depth when we are ready to proceed with discussion of the Crown Corporation section of Bill C-123. I hope that there will be an early mutually satisfactory conclusion to the discussions between House Leaders on this matter so that we can soon turn our attention to it.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

CHEMICAL POLLUTION OF LAKE ONTARIO-NIAGARA RIVER BASIN

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment. The Minister will know that there was a very recent discouraging report issued by the New York State Department of Health, stating that contamination by toxic chemicals in the Lake Ontario-Niagara River basin is increasing rather than decreasing. The Minister's own departmental officials say that more is escaping now than was anticipated. Dr. Becking of the Department of National Health and Welfare stated, "Canadian water treatment plants are not equipped to remove toxic chemicals from drinking water". Some of those toxic chemicals are deadly.

My question, and that of the four million Canadians who are using this as a source of water supply is: has the time not yet come for an emergency summit meeting and the establishment of an international task force, rather than leaving it to the Province of Ontario to fight the battles of this international waterway?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of the Environment): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member is mistaken if he thinks we are simply leaving this question to the Province of Ontario. This is a matter of very grave concern to us, although the information I received from my officials is that there is no danger to water supply in the situation.

We have raised this matter on a variety of occasions, as the Hon. Member knows. I think there are court actions under way. We have been of great assistance to those who wish to intervene in the court cases to present their concerns. We are undertaking extensive studies and making great efforts in conjunction with the Department of National Health and Welfare to monitor and assess the situation. It is a matter of very great concern to us and we are pursuing every possible method in our attempt to ensure that the situation is properly assessed and remedied.

REPRESENTATIONS MADE TO UNITED STATES AUTHORITIES

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. We know that what the departmental officials have done has been helpful, but it has had little impact. I would ask the Minister, is it not better to stop those chemicals from reaching the water supply we are now discussing? The Minister's officials know there has been a contamination of the bedrock structure along the Niagara River. He also knows that, since 1978, the faulty Niagara Falls, New York, system has been discharging contaminated water, raw sewage containing chemicals, into the Niagara River. Since the Minister has been saying that the federal Government is taking some action, will he table the representations which have been made in writing by either himself or the Department of External Affairs? If nothing more can be done, then what is the purpose and the effect of the 1978 Great Lakes Water Quality Treatment Agreement?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of the Environment): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member is correct. We would very much like to have those contaminated wastes removed by digging them up and having them destroyed. However, they are within the jurisdiction of the Government of the United States, as he has indicated. Therefore, we have been making continual representations of the most vigorous sort to have that situation remedied in the direction which he has described.

The Hon. Member has also raised a question involving the Niagara Falls sewage treatment plant, and our extremely vigorous representations have been very effective in leading the U.S. administration to unfreeze funds to be directed toward placing the Niagara Falls, New York, sewage treatment plant into a proper remedial state. There has been action flowing as a result of the kinds of representations we have made to the American authorities.

I would be quite happy to make available to the Hon. Member all the representations that I can. It may very well be a case that, in terms of the diplomatic exchanges between our two governments on this matter, those are matters of a confidential nature which cannot be treated in the way which he has described. However, it is certainly my interest to ensure that he is as aware as I hope Hon. Members are generally of the very strong representations that we have made in the past and will continue to make to American authorities with regard to this matter.

ENERGY TAXES PAID BY FARMERS

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Bruce-Grey): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Agriculture my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. The Minister will know that net farm income is projected to be down 15 per cent in 1982 and that farm bankruptcies are up by 65 per cent this year. Since the Liberal Government took office in 1980, farmers have been required to pay $300 million in additional revenue to the federal Government due to increased energy taxes, particularly on gas and diesel fuels. Is the Minister aware of the impact of these additional charges? Is he aware that the Minister of Agriculture made an election promise of an energy tax rebate and, if so, what is he prepared to do about it?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I am aware of the impact of energy price increases, not only on farmers but on all Canadian citizens. I would remind the Hon. Member, who I know is aware of the situation, that the price we are paying for oil in Canada is cheaper than in any other industrialized country in the world. We had to adjust gradually to higher prices, in order to get closer to the world price. My hon. colleague will recall that his own party wanted to impose the full world price on farmers. Thanks to the agreement we were able to negotiate with the Province of Alberta, we are now paying only 75 per cent of the world price for oil discovered before 1981. So the present price of oil provides protection for all consumers, including farmers.

[English]

Mr. Gurbin: I think that what is at issue here, regardless of all the rhetoric about the difference in pricing regimes, involves Liberal promises. The Minister would not want to mislead the House, but he is clearly wrong on statements he has made. The issue here involves Liberal promises of cheap gas and energy rebates. Those are the basic questions.

APPLICATION OF FARM EQUIPMENT PURCHASE TAX CREDIT

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Bruce-Grey): My supplementary question, which is also directed to the Minister of Finance, concerns the very specific proposal which has been made by the Canadian Federation of Farm Implement Dealers. This proposal, which is for his consideration as Minister of Finance, is that the investment tax credit which can now be applied toward the purchase of new farm equipment also apply to the purchase of used farm equipment. This would help not only farmers but also implement dealers who are as severely affected as the agricultural sector. Will the Minister of Finance consider this proposal and ensure that it is implemented in his next budget?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, we promised to introduce an oil and gas pricing system that would be cheaper than the one proposed by the Progressive Conservative Government of 1979-80, and we have kept this promise. Today, prices paid by the Canadian consumer for oil and natural gas are still substantially lower than the levels projected by the Progressive Conservative Government of 1979-80. In this respect, we have kept our word, despite what the Hon. Member just said.

As for his suggestion, I have indicated that I would be pleased to receive suggestions from any Members of this House for my next budget. I am taking this suggestion as a proposal to be considered when the next budget comes up, and I shall give it my attention.

COMINCO LAY-OFFS—USE OF COMPANY HOUSING

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Madam Speaker, my question, which is directed to the Minister of State for Mines, involves the 600 workers to be laid off on January 2 by Cominco at its lead/zinc mine at Pine Point in the Northwest Territories. What action will the Minister take to ensure that the three-quarters of the workers who reside in company housing can remain there at reduced rents for the duration of the lay-off, as was the case during the lay-offs at Faro and Schefferville? Will the Minister implement regulations requiring this kind of consideration for workers laid off in remote, single industry towns, to help keep families and communities together?

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of State (Mines)): Yes, Madam Speaker, I can inform the Hon. Member that we will make every possible effort to work with the company to see that the workers can remain in their homes. At this moment, I would like to remind the Hon. Member that the Cominco lay-off will be a temporary one.

AGRICULTURE

FORECAST OF NET FARM INCOME

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance in the absence of the Minister of Agriculture. Over the last day or so, the Outlook Conference for Agriculture has been taking place in Ottawa. We find that net farm income for 1983 is projected to be $3.7 billion, about the same as it was in 1974. Since those dollars in 1983 will buy between 40 per cent and 50 per cent of what they would buy in 1974, farmers are, in effect, facing a halving of their net income in eight years. What policies have been prepared by the Government to offset this violent decline in farm income? How will the Government turn this situation around?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, as the Hon. Member is aware, the Canadian economy is not alone in this respect. The economies of all industrialized countries and in fact, the entire world economy is going through a very severe crisis. All sectors, including the manufacturing sector and the mining sector, to name one of our primary resource sectors, have been substantially affected. Business profits are much lower than they were in the past, and unfortunately, not a single sector of the Canadian economy seems to have escaped the international crisis the world is going through today. So the solution is not to try and find some kind of arrangement for a specific sector, but to stimulate the entire economy so that all sectors will be able to benefit. That is why our goal is to reduce the rate of inflation and with it our interest rates, thus making it easier for various sectors to borrow and invest, and I hope that farmers will also be among those who will benefit.

As for the specific situation in the agricultural sector, the Hon. Member is aware that thanks to efforts by the Canadian Government, we have had record sales abroad this year. Our farmers will benefit even if prices are low, and at least we have succeeded in expanding our foreign markets and selling all the products we produce here in Canada. These efforts will be continued. The Minister of Agriculture has tabled in the House some very important legislation, namely the Canagrex Bill, and I hope that we can count on the support of the Opposition to expedite passage of this Bill.

CASE OF CANADIAN PROFESSOR—REPORTED OFFER OF IMMUNITY

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Solicitor General. The Solicitor General earlier today, if I heard him correctly, and I believe I did, said he had no personal knowledge of a deal that might have been made with the convicted spy, Hugh Hambleton.

As reported at page 21118 of Hansard, on November 30 the Solicitor General said that after Hambleton had been told that no Canadian charges would be laid:

> On the basis of having been given that information he agreed to co-operate with the Security Service and produced considerable additional information—

In other words, he was told there would be no charges. After he was told, he provided the additional information. How, having said that on November 30, can the Minister now stand up in this House of Commons and claim that he had no personal knowledge of a deal?

While I am on my feet, the Minister said he would not comment on this matter while it was before the Old Bailey. It has now been decided in Britain. Will he make a full statement on motions in this House of Commons indicating to the Parliament of Canada exactly what are the facts as known now and as known earlier to the Government of Canada, so that we may judge whether the Government of Canada carried out its responsibilities in this case.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Madam Speaker, I meant in my first answer to make it very clear that there is no letter offering an immunity. I said I had no personal knowledge of that letter but I verified with those who might have sent such a letter on my behalf, or on anybody's behalf, and can assure the House that there is no letter offering an immunity. I have no idea what Mr. Hambleton has in that envelope. I am as interested as the Members opposite to know, but I can assure you it is not a letter from me or from anyone on behalf of the Government offering him an immunity.

As to the deal, I think it very important to understand that what the Security Service told Mr. Hambleton was not that the Department of Justice had decided that he would not be prosecuted, but that the Department of Justice had come to the conclusion that he could not be prosecuted because there was insufficient evidence.

Where a deal is created, one side furnishes consideration and the other side furnishes consideration. That was not the arrangement here because, having revealed, as the Security Service was authorized by the Minister of Justice to do, that a prosecution could not be brought because it would not succeed, they asked Mr. Hambleton if he would give them further information and he agreed to do it.

Why would Mr. Hambleton do such a thing that could work out to be against his interest? Why did he go to Britain? These are questions that are very difficult for someone to understand, without knowing Mr. Hambleton. I cannot help the House in understanding, for example, why, after being told of the reception he would receive in Great Britain, he would nevertheless decide to go to Britain. Why, when the Security Service was still interested in prosecuting him, if they could get admissible evidence, he would willingly, having been told simply that he could not be prosecuted on the basis of the evidence that they had—

Miss MacDonald: Peter Treu was.

An Hon. Member: He is a spy.

Mr. Kaplan: —why he would willingly give further evidence. He is not an easy person to understand—

Miss MacDonald: That is incredible.

Mr. Kaplan: —and I cannot help the Members opposite in understanding him any better.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER MAKE STATEMENT TO HOUSE

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, the Minister himself has used the word "deal". That is his language; he just used the word "deal". He is nodding his head to show that he agrees with that interpretation.

Some Hon. Members: No deal.

Mr. Clark: We will read Hansard. The Minister referred to the deal, and he indicated that, after an assurance was given that prosecution would not or could not proceed, Hambleton then took certain actions, as a consequence of that undertaking being given by the Government of Canada.

My question is simple. Will the Solicitor General give us an undertaking now that he will make a full statement to this House of Commons so that we can judge for ourselves what parts of Mr. Hambleton's situation are understandable to this House of Commons, so that we can make that judgment and not be held back by the confusion of the Solicitor General. Will he make the information available to Parliament?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Madam Speaker, I have given forthright answers to the questions that I have been asked today. I am prepared to answer other questions that I am asked to the greatest extent possible, but I would like to remind Hon. Members that the KGB must very well now be doing a damage assessment on this matter, trying to see exactly what the Security Service has learned, what information the Security Service and other friendly Security Services now have about their operations, from Mr. Hambleton and from the information that he has given. I would ask the Hon. Members not to invite me or push me too far to assist the KGB in making that assessment.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Epp: They do not trust you, Bob.

PARLIAMENT'S RIGHT TO KNOW

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): We have to give the Minister some credit for imagination. First, he was hiding behind the courts of Great Britain. Now he is hiding behind the KGB.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: This House of Commons has a right to know what deals were made by the Government of Canada with a Canadian citizen, a Canadian resident who has just been convicted of spying by courts in the United Kingdom. Will the Minister give a complete statement on motions to this House of Commons?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Madam Speaker, when the Hon. Member says that the House has a right to know what deals, I have answered that question. I have indicated that there were no deals.

Miss MacDonald: That is not what you said before.

Mr. Kaplan: I have explained the basis on which Mr. Hambleton gave his information, and I would also remind the House that that information was shared with the British Security Service—

Miss MacDonald: You said there was a deal.

Mr. Kaplan: —with MI-5, and it was an important contributing factor to the investigation and the prosecution which took place in Great Britain.

I am prepared to answer other questions that were asked to the greatest extent possible to assist the House in understanding fully the circumstances under which the Security Service dealt with Mr. Hambleton; the basis on which decisions were made by the Department of Justice; advice given by the Minister of Justice; but beyond that I do not know how I could be more forthcoming about it.

PETITIONS

TABLING OF REPORTS OF CLERK OF PETITIONS

Madam Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the Clerk of the House has laid upon the Table reports of the Clerk of Petitions stating that he has examined the petitions presented by Hon. Members on Monday, December 6, 1982 and found that the petitions meet the requirements of the Standing Order as to form.

MR. MURPHY—S.O. 43 MOTION

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Madam Speaker, I wish to raise a point of Order on a statement you made in the House yesterday. Yesterday I was raising a motion under Standing Order 43 with regard to large numbers of Conservative Members being absent on a number of occasions. On each of those occasions a large number of Conservatives were absent, thereby allowing the Liberal Government to stay in power. You ruled that—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. Precisely, that statement I made in the House yesterday was a ruling. Therefore, the Hon. Member should know that he may not comment on a ruling. That ruling is quite consistent with rulings made by my predecessors and I maintain that ruling; and I would ask the Hon. Member not to comment on it.

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 4,083 and 4,370.

[Text]

POSTAL BOXES

Question No. 4,083—Mr. Herbert:

What is the approximate average cost of a letter-size postal delivery box as installed in Post Office lobbies and what is the average life of such postal boxes?

Mr. David Berger (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): I am informed by the Canada Post Corporation as follows: average cost: $9.50 each, average life: 20 to 50 years of service.

STRAIT OF GEORGIA—ANCHORAGE FOR FOREIGN VESSELS

Question No. 4,370—Mr. Manly:

1. How many designated anchoring places for foreign vessels are in the Strait of Georgia and adjoining channels?

2. Are foreign vessels anchored in these areas allowed to practise (a) chipping (b) maintenance (c) lightering (d) flushing?

3. In (a) 1979 (b) 1980 (c) 1981 (d) 1982, how many charges under the Canada Shipping Act and other pollution-related Acts were laid against foreign vessels anchored in the Strait of Georgia and adjoining channels?

4. What is the role of the Coast Guard with respect to the enforcement of regulations under the Canada Shipping Act?

5. How many persons are involved in the enforcement of these regulations in British Columbia waters?

6. For (a) 1979 (b) 1980 (c) 1981 (d) 1982, what was the average length of time that foreign vessels stayed in designated anchoring places in British Columbia waters?

7. Are crews of foreign vessels allowed to come ashore to dig clams and, if so, what are the regulations governing this and other fishing activities of foreign crews?

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Departments of Employment and Immigration, Fisheries and Oceans, National Revenue and Transport Canada as follows:

1. There are no anchorage areas specifically designated by regulation in the Strait of Georgia and adjoining channels, except for anchorage areas designated by the National Harbours Board within port areas under its jurisdiction. There is one area in which vessels are prohibited from anchoring except with the permission of the Minister, that is the area designated by the Parry Bay Anchorage Regulations. There are 28 anchoring places designated by the National Harbours Board within Vancouver Harbour and four off Nanaimo Harbour.

There are at least eight other areas which are not officially designated but are commonly used for anchoring; such as Houston Passage, Cowichan Bay, Ladysmith Harbour, Trincomali Channel, Pylades Channel, Plumper Sound, Squamish Chemainus. Other suitable anchorages may also be used by ships at their discretion.

2. (a), (b) and (d) Chipping, maintenance and flushing are not restricted except that the vessel must not contravene the provisions of the Garbage Pollution Prevention Regulations or the Oil Pollution Prevention Regulations.

(c) Foreign vessels would be permitted to lighter cargo from designated anchorage points direct to authorized customs ports, provided such were the continuation of an international voyage and all applicable customs reporting and control requirements were met.

3. The charges laid under the Oil Pollution Prevention Regulations against foreign ships in the Strait of Georgia are as follows:

Year	Reported Incidents	Prosecutions Initiated
(a) 1979	5	2
(b) 1980	4	3
(d) 1982 (to date)	1	0

4. The Canadian Coast Guard enforces regulations made under the Canada Shipping Act by inspection and certification where required. Certain regulations may also be enforced by peace officers, and by Harbour Masters. Any person may "lay an information" under these regulations.

5. In British Columbia, the Coast Guard has 39 Ship Safety officers and 75 Vessel Traffic Management officers involved with enforcing regulations. Additional Transport Canada and Communications Canada personnel are involved with the enforcement of the Ship Station Radio Regulations.

6. Vessels may anchor for a matter of minutes or may be at anchor under exceptional circumstances for months, therefore it is impossible to establish a meaningful "average length of time". Typically vessels remain at anchor from three to seven days, (probably closer to three days).

7. Crew members of foreign fishing vessels authorized to enter the Ports of Vancouver or Victoria must be customs cleared before disembarking on Canadian soil and are entitled to the same rights and privileges as any non-resident visitor. Crew members of foreign vessels are required by the Immigration Regulations, 1978, as amended, to obtain Employment Authorizations (work permits) if they are intending to engage in any commercial fishing operation, including the digging of clams, while in Canadian waters. Such authorizations would be issued only where it could be established that the employment of Canadian citizens or permanent residents would not be adversely affected by the activities of such crew members. If the individual is clam digging for personal consumption (not for sale or barter) a licence is not required. However, he must abide by regulations relative to catch limits, closed times, etc.

If the foreign fishing vessel is anchored in an isolated area along the coast, departmental policy, in the form of a condition of the licence issued to a foreign fishing vessel, is that crew members are not permitted ashore in accordance with Customs and Immigration regulations. Therefore, clam digging would not be permitted. Crew members of foreign vessels, other than fishing vessels, may sport fish subject to their taking out a sport fish licence. Regulations governing other fishing activities of foreign crews are the Coastal Fisheries Protection Regulations and the Foreign Vessel Fishing Regulations.

Mr. Smith: I ask, Madam Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Madam Speaker: The questions enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

[English]

Mr. Stevens: Madam Speaker, I am compelled once again to ask the Parliamentary Secretary why he has not replied to a question I asked on January 29, 1981, almost two years ago, that simply requested the total cost of the Prime Minister's December-January world tour and what percentage of the full cost would be paid for by Canadian taxpayers. As we all know, the Prime Minister has taken several jaunts since that world trip. Recently he was in Moscow. Now he is planning to go in the other direction. Surely the people of Canada are entitled to know what are the total costs to be borne by them with respect to these capers.

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, I am shocked by the use of the word "caper". These were official visits undertaken by the Prime Minister as the representative of the Government of this country. I regret the Hon. Member has chosen to inject that tone into this question. Nevertheless, I have made inquiries since he raised this with me a few days ago and I will continue to pursue the matter on his behalf.

MEASURE TO MODIFY BENEFIT INDEX

The House resumed from Monday, December 6, consideration of the motion of Mr. Gray that Bill C-133, an Act to amend the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act (No. 2), be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton) (p. 21305).

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, last night I had about four minutes before ten o'clock. I was dealing with a comment by the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy) in connection with Bill C-124. Today I have the benefit of Hansard and I want to pursue the matter further. It would be bad for this to remain in Hansard, because it is not correct. At page 21328 the Hon. Member for Churchill said:

—Bill C-124 that set the stage, that announced the Government's basic principle of limiting wages, old age pensions, Family Allowances and the pensions of retired civil servants, to six and five.

As I mentioned last night, there is not one word in Bill C-124 about the old age pension, the child allowance or superannuates. When the Hon. Member for Churchill says that we supported those items by voting for Bill C-124, he is completely in error. The Hon. Member should have read Bill C-124 before coming to that conclusion. If he had read Bill C-124, he certainly misled the House and the people out there in the great beyond.

I want to tell the Members of this House and the people of Canada that the Progressive Conservative Party did not support the reduction in indexing of the old age pension, child credits or the superannuates. I suppose when a Party is drowning, it will grab at any straw. That appears to be what the Hon. Member was doing last night. I hope I have put the record straight.

A little further in the Hon. Member's speech last night he said something to which I objected, but I did not have his exact words. He said, and I quote:

I remind the Conservatives of some of the things their Leader said. He said, in reaction to the budget of June 28, 1982, which announced the particular six and five regime:

He then quoted our Leader as having said:

We are relieved that it is beginning to accept that Government spending is a major cause of current economic problems . . . it is a step in the right direction.

How in the world the Hon. Member for Churchill can equate that with a reduction in indexing for old age pensioners is beyond me. There is no relation whatsoever. Our Leader and this Party have been calling for reduced expenditures on the part of the Government. Government expenditure is one of the major causes of inflation. The NDP may want more expenditures, but we want less and we want Canadians to know that. The Government cannot go on spending money that it does not have. That is one of the major causes of inflation.

If anyone can find the items in Bills C-131, 132, 133 or 124, I will apologize to the House, but they are not there. Bill C-124 reduces the wages of MPs, Senators and judges, those who have jobs. The NDP opposed it. In fact, they bragged about that last night. They did not want a reduction in wages for Members of Parliament or Senators. They could not have or they would have voted for the Bill. They do not want a reduction for those in the high income brackets of the Public Service or for judges. Nobody likes a reduction, but when things are tough those with jobs should suffer the reductions first, not those who are retired or without a job. Bill C-124 did not have anything to do with Bill C-133. I repeat that I oppose Bill C-133.

I now want to deal with some of the provisions of Bill C-133. The first item that bothers me is an item that I raised in this House on July 27 in questions to the then Minister of Finance. The reply that he gave should be repeated. People should know what is involved. My question to the then Minister of Finance on that day is recorded at page 19086 of Hansard, July 7, 1982, and I quote:

It involves about 120,000 retired public servants, 30,000 retired armed forces people, and 5,000 retired members of the RCMP. Given that former public servants who worked from 30 years to 50 years for the federal Government contributed 6.5 per cent of their earnings for basic pensions plus one per cent for indexing in order to secure full pensions when they retired—this was not only a condition of their employment; it was confirmed by law in the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act—and given that the June budget has capped the indexing of these pensions at 6 per cent, under what authority is the Government doing this? Why is the Government breaking its promise to former employees who are in the sunset years of their lives, by cutting off part of their pensions when many of these people are barely making both ends meet now?

What was the answer of the then Minister of Finance? I quote from the same page of Hansard:

—the Hon. Member referred to the full pensions which are being received and will be received by retired public servants. Obviously there is no intention to affect the pension rights of retired public servants.

I repeat that: " . . . there is no intention to affect the pension rights of retired public servants." The Minister went on to say that "what is intended is to cap the indexation". The Minister obviously considers that part of the indexation is not part of the pension. But when a pensioner receives his money, he feels the whole amount is his pension. He needs it all to make both ends meet. The Minister is simply grasping at straws when he says the indexation is completely different from the pension. They are one and the same thing.

Public servants will obviously receive increases in subsequent years, but the increases will be 6 per cent and 5 per cent. The impact, of course, of that capping of indexation can be minimized, and will undoubtedly be minimized as we make progress toward the 6 per cent target for inflation.

Again, the Minister is using what we call rationalization. We used to do that, Mr. Speaker, in mathematics. If you have an irregular item with which to deal, then you try to rationalize; you dispose of that irrational quantity by rationalizing. That is exactly what is being done here. The Government is trying to dispose of the information with which it is going to index the pensions. This Bill proves I was correct at that time and the then Minister of Finance was not.

Obviously that authority will be sought from Parliament by way of legislation in order to achieve the objectives of the Government.

And here and now is the legislation which he mentioned at that time. My reply to him was:

Changing the law might make it legally right, but it will not make it morally right. This is actually a doublecross of people who worked from 30 years to 50 years to build up pensions and who are not now in the $30,000 bracket which the Minister mentioned but are having a hard time making both ends meet; and the minister will now take some of that away from them.

My supplementary question again dealt with the funding of indexing. I said:

—will this not really make every public servant of the federal government today wary of the fact that they are now contributing toward pensions and make them worry about the future when some future government may suddenly cut their pensions in half? This is not playing the game with former employees. The act makes present employees wary of this particular thing. I suggest to the minister that this is confiscation of something that does not belong to the government. Is not the index fund already able to carry full indexing?

The Minister replied:

I am not quite sure what the question was because I did not hear the peroration of the Hon. Member. However, I would tell him that I do not believe that public servants will be wary of this action because I think that retired public servants will understand the reasons for this change, and the reasons why a sacrifice is asked of them. If the Hon. Member has read some newspapers he will have noticed that a number of retired public servants were quite prepared to accept this policy and not accept the rather defeatist attitude of the Hon. Member.

I would remind the Hon. Member that while the pensions of the public servants are indexed and will continue to be indexed, the pensions of most retired persons from the private sector are not indexed at all.

Again, that is rationalization. In the private sector, if any individual paid part of his wage towards indexing, no employer in this country would have the gall to reduce the indexing after the man retired. No court would permit an employer to do that. The Goverment is doing something which a private industry just would not be permitted to do. These people contributed to this fund. They have a right to it. It is not the Government's money; the Government should get that into its head. It has no authority to handle this money except as set out in the legislation which was put on the books when an agreement was made with those who contributed.

I would like to deal with the fund briefly. For instance, the public service superannuation fund on March 31, 1981, as mentioned yesterday, was $4.7 billion. The Canadian Armed Forces superannuation fund was $9.327 billion, or altogether a little over $14 billion. But the pensioners themselves, in their own literature, say it is altogether different. They say the public service superannuation account had a credit balance at the end of the fiscal year, March 31, 1981, of almost $13 billion. Then they put in brackets, to be exact, $12,705,719.

The Member for Churchill said yesterday he had been waiting for an answer to a question as to how much was actually in the fund. He has been waiting for over a year and still the answer is not supplied. On July 8 I wrote a letter to the then Minister of Finance because I wanted that information also and thought the fastest way to get it was to send a letter to the Minister of Finance directly instead of putting a question on the Order Paper and waiting month after month to receive an answer. I wrote to the Minister on July 8, 1982, the day after I asked him the question how much was in these funds. I asked him what was the balance as of March 31, 1982? What portion of the amount was earnings through interest? What portion of the amount was contributed by the employer? What authority is there for the Government to restrict the indexing of these pensions? What use is being made of the unused portions of the funds collected from the public servants and retired public servants, and what is happening to the fund now? I have not even had an answer. I might just as well have put the question on the Order Paper.

I thought I was going the fastest route. The Hon. Member for Churchill did not get an answer for over a year. I did not get an answer to my letter of July 8, 1982. What is wrong? Are we not entitled to know the exact amount of money in these funds? Are we not entitled to know the exact amount of interest which has accrued in these funds? Why are we not permitted to know what constitutes each fund? Which fund includes public servants? Which one includes the RCMP? Which one includes retired Armed Forces personnel?

Mr. Speaker, this is public information and I think everyone is entitled to know what use is being made of this fund. The Government has this fund sitting there, the $12 billion or $25 billion, whichever way you look at it, the two together or the one. That is a lot of money. The superannuates have said that the exact amount was $12.705 billion. If that figure is correct, and I have no reason to doubt it, what rate of interest have they been getting? It is the duty of the Government to get the highest possible rate of interest on these funds. If it was only 4 per cent, then that is over $480 million added per year. If it was 6 per cent, it would net over $700 million a year. If it was 8 per cent, it would be about $1 billion a year.

During the last two or three years, Mr. Speaker, the Government could have placed this money in short-term contracts which earned up to 13 per cent, 14 per cent, 15 per cent or 16 per cent. They could have had a tremendous amount of money in this fund. I think the superannuates particularly are entitled to this information. Members of Parliament are entitled to this information but we are not getting it. If we do not get it very soon, I think this should be a special item for the Auditor General to look at. Let us find out what is going on with this money, who is responsible for the administration of the money, and what they are doing with it. Are they getting proper interest rates? Is the Government using this money for some other purpose? I want to know. If the Government is not, all it has to do is open up the books. There should be no reason the books are not open in that regard. If we do not get this information very soon, all I can say is that the Government must be trying to hide something. If not, the Government should provide this information to the House before debate on this Bill comes to a conclusion.

Let me now deal with some of the comments made by some Hon. Members on the other side of the House. I mentioned a few moments ago that most of what they had to say was rationalization. The exception was one Member who said he was not supporting the Bill, that he was going to do what his constituents told him. I admire him for that but I will admire him a lot more if he stands up when the vote is called and votes against it. That will be the proof of the pudding. I have no reason to believe he will not, but I have heard Liberal Members talking against Bills before and then stand up and support them. I have heard Liberal Members in debate make very terrible comments about some legislation and then stand up and support it. I would like to see what exactly they are going to do on this particular Bill, because it is not good enough to rationalize.

This Bill will affect the lives of men and women and their families—because some of then still have families and relatives to support. There was a contract with the civil servants that when they retired they would get their extra money from indexation. In other words, it is more than just a contract, it is actually a deferred payment. The money is put into a fund and there are people who are supposed to make sure that that money is going to be there when these people retire. Yet here we have the Government by legislation dipping into those funds, money it does not own, and that simply should not be tolerated by any member of this House.

What did the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray) say about this? Any reduction of full indexation is an outright breach of faith with those already retired. That is what it is, Mr. Speaker. It is their superannuation plan—that is what the Minister called it—and consequently any reduction in full indexation is an outright breach of faith. Surely this Government does not want to be forever labelled as one which breaks its word to those people after they have retired, having contributed for many years.

When the superannuation plan was introduced, the Government said it would be non-negotiable, Mr. Speaker. "We will put it into law", the Government said. So this Act was set up and that satisfied people because it was on the law books of the country. No Government is going to change that. Then the Government went on to say that no changes would be made without consultation. To date there has been no attempt at consultation. The superannuates have not even been called in to discuss the matter. Any meetings held have been called by the pensioners themselves, in order to bring this matter to the attention of the public. The Government has not consulted with them, and this is becoming all too common. The Minister of the Environment (Mr. Roberts) puts a complex in the middle of a park without consulting the people involved. That is not democracy; that is not the kind of Government we want in this country.

The former President of the Treasury Board, who is now Minister of State for Economic Development (Mr. Johnston), and the Government of the day on numerous occasions proclaimed indexation of pensions to the CPI as a minimum benefit. These guarantees were clear, straightforward and unconditional. Pensioners contributed to the plan and many took early retirement based on the Government's promise of full indexation. How can the Government alter the agreement under which these workers retired after they have retired?

If there has to be some change, give the pensioners who are now contributing a choice as to whether they want to contribute; do not tell them they have to, as these former public servants had to. Interfering with their pensions after they have retired is a disgraceful thing for any employer to do.

The Government says that the public service superannuation account stands at $15 billion, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): More like $17 billion.

Mr. Taylor: It earns interest at the rate of 10 per cent annually, or $1.5 billion. Let us look at that for a moment. How much is it costing to do this? The fund should have been built up considerably because payments out were a maximum of $470.6 million, and the interest received would have been $1.5 billion. This whole thing needs to be pretty carefully looked at by the Auditor General, Mr. Speaker, or perhaps by the Public Accounts Committee. The difficulty with the Public Accounts Committee is that it is after the fact, a year too late. We do not want indexation to come after the fact. We do not want the indexation reduction to take place at all. Retired civil servants, retired RCMP and retired Army personnel were given a promise and we do not want to see that promise breached. We do not want these people to be double-crossed. We do not want this thing to go into effect at all. Some Hon.

Members have said that that will depend on the Liberal side of the House. If the Liberals support this Bill after what some of them have said about it, that will be a pretty sad thing.

People across the country will not be fooled by the rationalization offered in the speeches by Members of the Government. People take a promise to be a promise and they expect the Government to keep that promise. If the Government wants to change things now it should talk to people who are presently in the civil service and not go behind the backs of those already retired. If this indexation must be reduced, then let the Government reduce it for those people who are working and contributing so that they will know how things stand before they retire. It would be a shame if they took early retirement and then found they did not have enough to live on.

The Minister of Finance and one or two other Members have said that the pensioners are quite happy to do this. Just the other night in a different debate, I told the House about an old aged pensioner who kept his thermometer down low because he was trying to co-operate with the Government. He wanted to do what the Government asked, so he was half freezing. He wore a heavy sweater and his wife wore a kimono because the room they were in was so cold they could not stand it. They said they wanted to co-operate. Of course, they would co-operate to the fullest extent. No retired civil servant should be asked to co-operate with a Government which breaks its contracts or by a Government which breaches the promises it made to him when he was working.

I have received a lot of letters and I wish I had time to read them all, but I shall only read a few excerpts. These letters are from people who need the money, not from people whose incomes are $50,000 or $60,000. Undoubtedly some people have quite a bit of money. It may come from an inheritance or luck in gambling or in business—or someone may have married a rich widow! I do not know why they are rich but some people have high incomes, although not as high as Ian Sinclair's which is in the $600,000 per annum bracket. I suppose some people are well fixed and are quite able to look after themselves, but the vast majority of ordinary, every day people depend on the total pension, including indexing, in order to maintain the standard of living to which they have been accustomed.

A letter that I have in front of me reads in part as follows:

> Bill C-133 proposed by your majority Government will not only break this legislated contract but permit actual theft of money held in trust by the Government.

That letter was written to the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Roberts), who said the other day that he would not break a contract in order to save a park in Banff. Apparently he agreed in Cabinet to break the contract with our aged, our kids and superannuates, and to cut their allowances. That is pretty sad, Mr. Speaker.

Another pensioner wrote to me from British Columbia as follows:

> You can tell the Hon. Allan J. MacEachen that we are wary of this Government. I'm sure anyone who has retired from Public Service, Cdn. Forces or RCMP are just as wary as I am.

People are wary all right. I think it is probable that more people who are now contributing will become pretty wary as well. They had better watch what is happening or they might find themselves in this position a few years from now.

The Government claims that it has to get the money. I can offer a few suggestions as to where it could get the money without taking it from the crippled, the aged, the superannuates and the kids. There are a number of other ways and I will list three or four of them. So many times the Government complains that we just vote against everything and do not offer any alternatives. The trouble is that the Government does not listen to the alternatives that we suggest.

One alternative was offered to the Government just the other day by the Hon. Member for Peterborough (Mr. Domm) involving $89,000. If someone on a pension wants to keep a total of the following figures, they will see just how much is involved in my three or four suggestions. Why are we paying $89,000 to someone to write metric into a sports book? Did any football player ask that yards be changed? Did any baseball player or tennis player ask for this? This $89,000 is being spent at the whim of the Government in order to incorporate metric into a sports book. I suppose the next thing is that it will be hiring somebody to incorporate metric into the operation of auction marts. That would destroy the whole thing, as the Hon. Member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone) has said.

Mr. Hovdebo: They already do that.

Mr. Taylor: The Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo) says that they already do that. I am not so sure that they do it in the Province of Alberta but I suppose some places feel that they have to do it. That is the way metric was brought in. People were told that they were going to have to do it and they just might as well agree with it. Then the Government claims to have the agreement of the people. As the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie) says, Members of the Government ought to be thrown in jail. It is going to cost $89,000 to produce this useless, nonsensical, silly book on metric to tell football players that they cannot play in yards any more.

Last year the Metric Commission received $12 million but this year it will receive $26 million. Why are we doubling the amount available to the Metric Commission and cutting back on old age pensions? Why are we doubling the amount available to the Metric Commission and taking it off the kids of this country who will not have enough money to buy their books? Why are we taking it away from retired RCMP personnel who risked their lives trying to protect us? We are going to cut their pensions because they can no longer contribute but we are going to double the vote for the Metric Commission.

Do Hon. Members opposite know what is going on? How can they support that kind of thing? The Metric Commission should be thrown out, not have its allotment doubled. The people of Canada do not want it. Let us go back to free choice and use metric if we want to or Imperial if we want to use that. That would not cost a cent or, at least, it would cost very little. So there is $89,000 for the book and another $14 million for the Metric Commission.

Another problem is the provision for 28 more Members of this House. Mr. Speaker, will the people of this country be any better represented with 28 more Members? The elections of 1979 and 1980 were run with the present boundaries, but now those boundaries are to be changed. People will just be confused. Who will pay for all this? Will it be the Government? No, the people will pay. Normally the Boundary Commission receives $1 million each year to carry out its work and keep everything ready for an election at any time. I do not complain about that but I certainly complain about the cost of changing the boundaries and the advertising inserts that came with some newspapers.

I do not know how much extra all this will cost, but let us take a minimum figure of $1 million, although it will probably be more like $5 million or $9 million. Another $1 million for the Boundary Commission plus the cost of 28 new Members will add up. I am told it costs the people of Canada $100,000 for every MP at present, so 28 times $100,000 means that those new Members will cost us another $2,800,000. And it is completely unnecessary, Mr. Speaker. Canada does not need them and the House of Commons does not need them.

The Hon. Member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers) introduced a Bill in an attempt to bring some common sense and ordinary thinking into the matter, but they threw it out; they would not support it.

The price of milk will rise because we now have to buy jugs of milk in litres. The money for the kids will go down; they will have a reduced amount.

What are they doing to the people of the country? How can Liberal Members support this type of legislation? I just cannot understand it. Let us keep our figures to a minimum so that no one will say that we are being liberal with our figures. We will be conservative with our figures—another million could have been saved.

There is another item to which I could refer concerning the use of the money that the Government has. The Government does not have a very good record. When the Prairie Farm Assistance Act came to an end, there was $9,060,000 in the fund. The Hon. Member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil) cried and cried about this, trying to get some sense put into the system. But what has happened? The money sat there year after year drawing no interest. This was not fair to farmers. The money belonged to them, but they did not even get any interest from it as it sat in the fund for years.

Then I could talk about the trip of Janet Smith to the Riviera.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member but his allotted time has expired. He may continue with unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There does not appear to be unanimous consent.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, it is with some hesitation, but also with the support, I believe, of many of my constituents, that I am taking part in this debate on second reading of Bill C-133. I should like to start by providing some background for the debate. I have been called a rebel on this issue, and I assume that it was meant as a negative assessment and not as a word of praise. Mr. Speaker, Bill C-133 which deals with the indexing of pensions of federal public servants is an issue that has provoked considerable response at our offices in the riding and on Parliament Hill, in the form of letters, telephone calls and comments from my constituents and other people who do not necessarily live in Ottawa-Vanier. The House will recall that since 1977, the indexing issue has been raised from time to time. It was given serious consideration in the House in 1978 and 1979, and a report on the subject was tabled at the committee stage, a report that had the unanimous support of all parties, and which, as I thought at the time, made some valid, equitable and very reasonable proposals for resolving the thorny issue of maintaining the purchasing power of the elderly during retirement. Unfortunately, the report died on the Order Paper, elections were held in 1979, the Progressive Conservatives came to power and the whole issue was shelved and not heard of again. Now, in 1982, we are discussing Bill C-133, legislation which is aimed at capping indexation of public servants' pensions.

Mr. Speaker, to get back to the far from praiseworthy term applied by a number of newspapers to my position on this issue, namely, that I am a rebel, I would refer to certain debates reported in Hansard in 1978, and I am going to quote some comments by Robert Andras who was President of the Treasury Board at the time. At page 3623 in Hansard of March 9, 1978, when Mr. Andras was introducing a Bill concerning indexation of pensions, he explained why he wanted to maintain indexation. I quote, from page 3623:

> In the government's view, it is unjust and unfair to allow the rate of inflation to determine arbitrarily the real value of pensions, and that is exactly what happens when pensions are not adjusted for changes in the cost of living.
> In short, the principle of maintaining the purchasing value of pensions so that pensioners can maintain their access to the same basked of goods and services is a principle to which the government is committed, and remains committed.

I also want to mention several comments made by the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Trudeau) at the National Pensions Conference held in March and April of 1981. The Prime Minister recalled that the Canadian Government under Mackenzie King had established a modest pension plan, which was gradually expanded in subsequent years. Under Prime Minister Pearson, the Government added an income supplement for people lacking any other source of income, and as you know—I am quoting the Prime Minister—my Government has indexed these pensions to cost-of-living increases.

In his opening statement, the Prime Minister went on to urge participants to look at important issues, such as what would constitute a decent retirement income, and should there not be special consideration for people on middle incomes who, all things being equal, often suffer a very substantial loss of income upon retirement.

Finally, the Prime Minister invited participants to consider another important point, and I am quoting from page 12 on the Conference proceedings:

> Pensions which are not protected against inflation naturally tend to dwindle over the years. People who thought they had purchased protection for the rest of their lives find that they have more serious financial problems the older they become. The unfairness of that situation, particularly when the savings pool to which they have contributed may have been reaping inflationary interest premiums, is not tolerable in a nation which believes in social justice.

Mr. Speaker, I could quote a number of passages from various speeches that have been quoted in the House during the last few years. However, I am confident that being a rebel does not mean forsaking a principle as basic as that of protecting people who because of circumtances are unable to defend themselves. They cannot ask for a raise and are often unable to seek gainful employment.

[English]

Before discussing my concerns about this unfortunate piece of legislation, I wish to review briefly the history and present status of the Public Service pension plan. The first Superannuation Act was passed in 1870, only three years after Confederation. It provided for annual allowances upon retirement because of age or disability, based upon the average salary for the last three years of work. However, there was no provisions for what are now called survivor benefits.

• (1600)

The next milestone came in 1924 with the passage of the Public Service Superannuation Act. Coverage was broadened to include departments, commissions, corporations and others designated by the Act or by the Governor in Council. Benefits were granted by the Governor in Council for age, disability or abolition of position and after ten years of service for resignation or dismissal.

The Civil Servants Widows Annuities Act passed in 1926 provided first benefits to widows of contributors who had retired or died prior to 1925. A requirement for ten years' service as a condition for granting benefits was lowered to five years in 1944.

Our present Act, the Public Service Superannuation Act, was passed in 1953. Among other things, the Act broadened the coverage and removed the distinction between permanent and temporary employees. Of special significance was the recognition in the Act of benefits as a right rather than as a discretionary grant by the Governor in Council. I repeat that benefits are a right. This is a point which may have been overlooked by at least some of the present advisers to the Government.

The Supplementary Death Benefit Plan was added as part of that same Act in 1955. Part III of the Act was added in 1970, to deal with contributions needed to finance the escalation of pensions in response to inflationary pressures authorized by the new Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act of 1970.

In the interim period there had been a number of technical changes arrived at providing for the integration of certain provisions of the Act with those of the Canada Pension Plan, the Quebec Pension Plan and the Pension Benefits Standards Act, including the matter of pension portability.

In 1967, employees leaving the Public Service after age 45 and ten years' service automatically became entitled to pension benefits. In 1975, the equality of status for male and female contributors was legislated by Bill C-52 for both contributions and benefits. That was not 50 years ago; that was in 1975.

The Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act initially provided that benefits would increase in relation to the cost of living with a maximum increase of 2 per cent per year. Contribution rates for both employee and employer were set at a half of 1 per cent. In 1974, the 2 per cent ceiling on increases was removed and, in 1977, the supplementary contribution rates were increased from one-half per cent to 1 per cent for both the employees and the employer.

Today, the Public Service Pension Plan requires that public servants pay 6.5 per cent of their annual salary into the superannuation fund account. In addition, they pay 1 per cent of their annual salary into the supplementary benefits accounts to cover indexing of cost of living increases after retirement. Of course, the employer matches these contributions plus interest earnings of only 4 per cent.

I was told today that that has increased to 6.5 per cent, but I have not had a chance to verify that figure. Therefore, I will stay with the 4 per cent figure.

It is important to note that these contributions go into separate accounts, an account for pensions and an account for indexing, credited to individual civil servants. Pensions and indexing supplements are paid from these individual accounts.

The President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray) has overall responsibility for the public service superannuation account with detailed administration being provided by the Department of Supply and Services. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) is responsible for the financial management of the superannuation account.

The Minister of Finance, through the Department of Insurance, is also responsible for making actuarial evaluations of the account every five years. Since the last available evaluation date is 1977, it would have been reasonable, in my opinion, to expect the Department of Insurance to have conducted an evaluation in 1982, as required. If that had been done it would have been made available to us and would have been most useful in this debate on both sides of the House. In my opinion, this is unfortunate, since the results could have been of assistance in our deliberations on Bill C-133. Perhaps the Minister of Finance could indicate to the House if the 1982 evaluation has been done and, if so, when it will be made available to Members so that we may have it before us in committee.

I now wish to tell the House of my main concerns about this ill-conceived piece of legislation. First, I am concerned that the Government has been the recipient of some bad advice about this Bill. Its advisers apparently could not see any real difference between imposing a ceiling on salary increases, as we did in the spring, and imposing a ceiling on pension benefits which are already paid for. In other words, a ceiling on salary or earnings increases in the future and the imposition of a ceiling on pension benefits that are already paid for. I suggest that there is a difference.

As a result, if the Government proceeds with this Bill in its present form, it may be open to charges that it is trying to redirect pension contributions and the accrued interest without the permission of the other parties, namely the pensioners and the present employees. This may be an approach which is so legally questionable that it should be tested in the courts. Even if it is found to be legal in the narrowest sense, it would be completely unethical, in my opinion.

Should the Government persist in its present course, I believe it will do considerable harm to its credibility, not only in the eyes of its employees but in the eyes of many other Canadians as well. Since 1970, Ministers of the Crown and the Prime Minister have stated their strong support for the principle of full indexation of Public Service pensions.

The Prime Minister himself, at the National Pensions Conference in 1981, put the case for indexation when he said in his opening remarks in the report of which I read another section in French a few moments ago:

> The unfairness of that situation, particularly when the savings pool to which they have contributed may have been reaping inflationary interest premiums, is not tolerable in a nation which believes in social justice—

Suddenly, Canadians are being told that this principle should be ditched, but only temporarily. In my opinion, this represents a rather disturbing view of the nature and importance of a principle.

I have heard it suggested that public opinion would be generally supportive of any move to restrain the pensions of those "fat cat" public servants. According to the very reliable Government sources from whom I have received these statistics, 70 per cent of those pensioners, those same "fat cat" public servants, receive less than $8,100 annually. The Public Service Alliance of Canada estimates, as indicated in their recent brief, that the annual pension of the average retiree to be $6,900 as of November, 1982. To attempt to portray such a group as "fat cats" is, to put it mildly, somewhat dishonest. In my opinion, far more Canadians would recognize this proposed action for what it really would be, namely, a breach of trust on the part of a previously trustworthy employer. I would be surprised if most Canadians will look favourably on such an action.

In the light of this credibility problem, we would also be asked to believe that the measures would be of a temporary nature. No doubt at this point in time, the Ministers involved, and probably most of their advisers, honestly intend that the measures would last but for two years.

However, as anyone in the House knows, experience with the Ottawa scene tells us that temporary measures can become remarkably durable. For instance, consider the Halifax Relief Commission which was established as a result of the explosion in Halifax in 1917. The Government was finally able, with some difficulty, to phase it out in the mid-1970s as part of an austerity program.

Many of us in Ottawa remember the notorious temporary buildings which were erected in the early 1940s. They finally came down some 35 years later under the demolition program of the federal Government's public works in Canada.

If these temporary measures are adopted, the same old pressure groups will re-emerge and begin beating the drums once again to do something about indexation per se, preferably by eliminating it. I suggest that the President of the Treasury Board look back at the amount of time and effort the Government has had to spend since 1970 in defending the principle of full indexation. I am assuming, of course, that the Government still wishes to defend the principle. Perhaps the President of the Treasury Board could indicate to the House the credible safeguards he would adopt to ensure that the measures are indeed temporary. Otherwise, despite all their good intentions today, Ministers two years hence will find themselves once more being accused of breaking their word to their employees.

I do not want to hold it against one Minister, because we all know they come and go. In the last five years, we have had five Presidents of the Treasury Board. There has been Mr. Buchanan, Mr. Andras, Mr. Stevens, Mr. Johnston, and the present Minister. I fail to see how we can have continuity in such an important dossier as indexing, and that is possibly one of the reasons we are having some difficulties with this subject every so often.

As I understand it, advisors to the various Presidents of the Treasury Board had indicated to Ministers that capping pension indexation for the next two years, 1983-84, would save the Government about $180 million. That was prior to the amendment tabled yesterday. I suppose that a cynic could say this gives us some indication of the price they would place on a principle. However, I do not believe that this is the whole story. Presumably after two years of restraint, pensions would be lower than if full indexation had remained in effect.

As I see it, this could be seen as a savings of sorts to the Government. Could the Minister of Finance indicate to the House the approximate annual savings the Government would expect to achieve as a result of this Bill from 1985 onward? What would the Government propose to do with these savings? Further, could the Minister also indicate to the House the anticipated magnitude of lost revenues as a result of the reduced spending power of pensioners brought on by Bill C-133? Is it possible that the two-year savings to the Government might be less than $180 million? In the House yesterday, the Minister gave notice of his intention to amend Bill C-133 and thus reduce anticipated savings to $165 million, over two years.

According to available information, as of November, 1982 there were about 122,500 persons, contributors and survivors, receiving pension benefits. The average annual benefits paid out were, as I indicated earlier, about $6,900 per individual. I must say I have a great deal of difficulty in believing that reducing the growth in their incomes could have any real effect on the outcome of the Government's battle with inflation and unemployment. Put another way, I for one would find it distasteful to ask anyone at such an income level to give up any part of income to which they are entitled. More and more I am driven to the conclusion that Bill C-133 might be intended more for cosmetic or other purposes than to make a real contribution to our economic recovery.

The proposed savings, as I understand it, are forecasted to be about $60 million in 1983 and about $105 million in 1984. Unless the Government intends to spend these savings before they have been achieved, I fail to see how they could make any significant immediate contribution to job creation, particularly since the Minister of Finance has told us he expects recovery to be well under way in 1983.

It has been argued many times by some outsiders in the past that the Government's total contribution to the pension plan has been too high and that a period of restraint such as today requires that it be reduced. The facts indicate a somewhat different picture. I refer back to our 1978-79 debates in committee, because that is where I gained most of my information. If we look at PSSA and SRBA revenue sources, including special employer payments made from the CRF pursuant to Section 8(2) of the SRBA, for the period 1966 to 1981 we find that the percentage provided by employee contributions has remained around 20 per cent to 22 per cent; the percentage provided by interest earnings has gone up from 36 per cent to 50 per cent; and the percentage provided by the employer, the Government, has dropped from 42 per cent to 30 per cent. Present trends suggest that the Government is on the way to becoming a minority contributor.

A study done in 1974 by Statistics Canada and the Department of Insurance, which we used during our committee hearings, compared the level of employer contributions by the federal Government and for private sector pension plans with the same basic formula, that is, benefits of 2 per cent of average salary during the last or best years multiplied by the number of years of service. In the federal Government the maximum is 35 years, which would give 70 per cent of one's best six years. The study showed that the Government's contribution percentage was about 13 per cent lower than that of private sector employers.

Treasury Board, in its review "The Basic Facts about Pensions in the Public Service of Canada in 1976", noted that for the same year, 1974, the contributions of public servants were about 14 per cent higher than for employees participating in all pension plans with the same basic formula under federal jurisdiction. Unfortunately, there does not appear to be any more current information available. However, I would be greatly surprised if the essential situation had changed markedly.

We appear to have a situation in which the Government contributes considerably less than its private sector counterparts and the employees contribute considerably more than their private sector counterparts. Could the President of the Treasury Board advise the House whether this situation comes about because of gross inefficiencies in the management of the Public Service plan or, as is more likely the cause, because the Government finds this a convenient way to reduce its contributions?

Despite their relatively high levels of contributions, Public Service employees have been satisfied to leave the management of their pensions completely in the hands of the Government. I say "the Government" because I make the distinction between the Crown, which can be many things, and the Government, which in this case is the employer; and, in my view, sometimes there is a conflict.

Up to now, these employees have been able to trust the Government to manage the fund in the best interests of present and prospective pensioners. Bill C-133, representing as it does a unilateral changing of the rules, would effectively destroy that trust. If this Bill is passed, it would be reasonable to expect that employees would demand a more active role in the management of their pension fund in order to protect themselves from their employer.

What we are seeing today is the result of a fundamental conflict of interest in the Government's position. In the private sector, a contributory plan under the force of law would have to be administered by a third party in order to protect and to be seen as protecting the integrity of the pension fund. The same rules do not apply here. The Crown, which literally can do anything it wishes, is also the employer, which should be concerned with the interests of its employees. The temptation to use the pension fund and its proceeds for purposes of political gain must, at times, be very strong. The absence of an independent third party makes it almost impossible to provide assurance that such does not happen.

I am quite sure that retired public servants, like most other Canadians, are prepared to make some contribution to the restoration of the health of our economy. They would ask only that their leaders set a good example and that there be some equity in the contributions sought. For instance, pensioners might have felt somewhat reassured about the seriousness of the Government's intentions if the Government had shown more interest in restraint, or lack of it, on the part of federal agencies. I am thinking of numerous Crown corporations and of the news which is going around the country concerning some of them. There is a growing body of evidence that suggests that increases in federally regulated prices have been major contributors to our problem of inflation. I am sure that pensioners would welcome evidence of the same diligence in controlling these prices as in controlling their pensions.

I am in no position to know whether or not the Government has indeed exhausted every other possible avenue of potential savings and thus has no choice but to tinker with its employees' pension fund. However, I do know that the Government has not yet made the case as to why this present course of action, Bill C-133, which if not illegal is certainly immoral in my view, is so crucial to its efforts to stimulate the economy. How does reduced spending power inspire consumer confidence? I do not understand it.

As the President of the Treasury Board knows, the annual rate of indexation for Public Service pensions is established based on changes in the consumer price index for the month of September in the preceding year. If the Government is successful with its six and five program during the coming months, it seems to me that the problem, if there is one, of the level of indexing for 1984 would be taken care of without the need for Bill C-133. On the other hand, some pensioners have expressed the view to me that Bill C-133 represents, among other things, a lack of confidence on the part of the Government about its ability to achieve its six and five targets. Possibly the President of the Treasury Board would like to comment on those points of view.

As I have indicated, I continue to be a strong believer in, and supporter of, full indexing of retirement pensions based on employee contributions. Accordingly, I cannot support Bill C-133 in its present form, which I view as nothing more nor less than the sacrifice of a long-held principle by the Government for the sake of what, in the larger scheme of things, would be a relatively small, immediate contribution to creating new jobs. I find it somewhat ironic that a Government which for so long has devoted its time and energy to improving pension arrangements and Old Age Security for all other Canadians, should be so ready and apparently willing to downgrade the quality of protection afforded to its own employees.

Whether or not the Government can afford to continue full indexation for the next two years should not be the issue. Its own public statements on a number of occasions have clearly shown that the Government has not considered its contributions to be excessive. In any case, there exists a mechanism whereby these matters are supposed to be reviewed and, as required, changes to the rates of employee contributions introduced. I think Members of this House would agree that it is indeed most unjust to penalize the recipients of pension benefits merely because the responsible bureaucrats have been unable to advise the Government effectively on the appropriate balance between contributions to, and expenditures from, the two pensions accounts.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Right on.

Mr. Gauthier: Although I am strongly opposed to Bill C-133 in its present form, at the same time I am equally strongly supportive of Government efforts to reduce inflation through its six and five program. Obviously, this poses something of a dilemma. Nevertheless, I think an answer can be found.

I would like to take the time of the House to outline one of possibly several solutions whereby the Government's six and five objectives can be met and the principle of full indexation remain protected.

Briefly, what I think we should consider is that for the next two years the contributions of the Government would be held at 6.5 per cent and 5.5 per cent. The shortfall, if there is one, could be made up through a temporary increase in the level of employee contributions for the same two-year period. Time has not permitted any of us to develop the detailed calculations, but a preliminary assessment suggests that it might call for an increase in contributions from the present level of 1 per cent to about 1.7 per cent for two years, or to about 1.5 per cent for three years.

For the public servant earning $25,000 a year, this would represent an added contribution of less than $125 to $175 annually, before taxes. I would be the first to agree that this might be construed as in the nature of a special tax on public servants. To this I would say that it could also be seen as a measure of the willingness of public servants to act in order to protect the principle of full indexation.

Assuming the Government can demonstrate the absolute impossibility of maintaining full indexation for the next two years, I still believe that the situation could be better handled. For instance, the inclusion of a "sunset clause" in Bill C-133 would go some distance towards re-establishing the Government's credibility, especially if it were coupled with a provision that, with the demise of this Bill, pension levels and increases would be determined using, after December 31, 1984, today's formula.

A precedent for this type of action was set in the period 1976-1978, when under rules set by the Anti-Inflation Board annual pension increases were capped at $2,400. At the end of that period, pensioners were able to make up what they had lost.

In conclusion, I would like to draw the attention of the House to what is a notable if not historic occasion, namely our present debate on Bill C-133. After all, it is not every day that the Government introduces a piece of legislation which, if passed, would result in all of the parties involved becoming losers. Pensioners would lose a significant part of the indexation to which they are entitled. Eligible federal employees would see the base level of their future pensions reduced, even though their contributions remain unchanged. Finally, the Government would lose the trust of their past and present employees, as well as losing credibility in the eyes of the Canadian public at large.

I fervently hope, in the next stage of our deliberations, that we are successful in finding some equitable way to protect the principle of full indexation, while at the same time aiding in the achievement of the Government's anti-inflationary objectives.

I would like to end this short speech by referring to a rather unusual coincidence of numbers. I said at the beginning that this issue raised a serious question in my mind. Some Hon. Members will recall that Section 133 of the Constitution Act also raised serious concerns, which I had to deal with. The constitutional number was also 133. For those who did not see or did not notice, we opposed vote 133 on the Bill that became the Constitution of this country. Bill C-133, as you can well imagine and appreciate, also gives me great difficulty. So 133 is not my better number!

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, before proceeding with my remarks I wish to comment on the courageousness of the Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) in the remarks he has delivered to us this afternoon. I think Members of all political Parties will agree with me that the difficult stand that he took will be appreciated by all Members in the House.

Like him, it is with a great deal of sadness that I also join in the debate on Bill C-133 because this Bill, like Bill C-131, C-132, and Bill C-124 that was debated last spring, constitutes a backward step. They take away from ordinary working people, from mothers and from pensioners, certain basic protections and basic rights.

These basic rights and basic protections were not easily won. It took many years of pressuring reluctant Liberal and Conservative Governments for public servants to be able to bargain collectively for their wages. The protection of pensions from inflation was also a victory which took many years to accomplish. Bill C-124, Bill C-131, Bill C-132 and now this Bill that we are debating today, Bill C-133, are attacks on those hard-earned rights. They are backward steps.

Bill C-133, an Act to amend the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act, sets out to limit the amount by which the pensions of retired civil servants, military and RCMP personnel will be increased over the next two years. For example, next year the pensions will only increase by 6 per cent rather than the 11.5 per cent called for under the present pension formula. It is estimated that over $100 million will be taken from the pensioners in 1983 and 1984.

I know that Government speakers have contested the figures as to how much mothers, pensioners and workers will lose under the six and five program. The truth is that no one can accurately state how much these people will lose; it all depends upon the inflation rate for 1983 or 1984. Who knows what that is to be? The Government has consistently been wrong in its economic forecasts during the last three budgets. We are living in a period of economic anarchy. For the Government to claim that it is able to forecast the inflation rate for the next two years is, to put it mildly, dishonest.

The essential point with this Bill, however, is that it reduces the protection retired public servants now enjoy. It will make them more vulnerable to the economic shifts and changes of our times. What makes Bill C-133 even more repugnant is that the protection it takes away was protection that public servants paid for.

Public servants contribute 6.5 per cent of their wages for pension purposes, plus an extra 1 per cent to the supplementary retirement benefits account, an account to pay for indexing and to protect the purchasing power of their pensions. Bill C-133 is robbery. It breaks agreements, it is a double-cross and it is unforgivable.

The Government justifies removing this protection under the guise of fighting inflation. It claims that 120,000 or more retired public servants who receive an average $6,900 per year, a little over $500 a month, must reduce their standard of living in order to wrestle inflation to the ground. How cynical the Government is to claim that, in order to fight inflation, the people who have the most to lose from inflation must give up what little protection they have against it. This is a cynical Government indeed.

Does the Government really believe that the money it will save by reducing the indexing of pensions and mothers' allowances will bring inflation down by a fraction of a point? Does it really believe that restricting Public Service wages will make a dint in the inflation rate? I doubt that even one Liberal Member seriously believes that.

The Government needed someone to blame for the economic mess we have today, so it commissioned Mr. Goldfarb to do a study. I imagine Mr. Goldfarb told them that as far as the public was concerned, an attack on public servants and their pensions would be acceptable, that it would create the image that the Government was doing something about inflation. I am certain that Government Members do not seriously believe that inflation will be stopped by the actions of Bills C-131, 132, 133 and 124.

The Government has elected workers, mothers and pensioners to share the blame for inflation. The burden of pain in the fight against inflation is being laid on those who are the least to blame. What is happening is that the victims are being blamed.

The Conservatives have gone along with this. Despite the protestations of Members like the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor), they supported Bill C-124 earlier. That clearly indicates that they have bought the basic Government argument that Canadian workers are to blame for inflation. According to a report in The Globe and Mail of November 22, 1982, a survey of world labour costs by the Citibank of New York stated as follows:

> In addition, the commonly expressed view that wage demands by Canadian workers are inordinately high is more myth than reality, the study finds.
> It shows that Canadian industry on the whole is competitive and that, for the past decade, the work force has been a model of restraint. With the single exception of the United States, there is no industrial economy where wage rises have been less or where the growth in hourly manufacturing costs has been lower.

This is from the Citibank of New York, but yet the Conservatives have gone along with the Liberals in perpetuating the myth that the reason we are in an economic mess is that Canadian workers are getting too much. That is why the Conservatives went along with the Liberals in support of Bill C-124 which blamed the workers for inflation.

Despite Conservative objections to Bill C-133, the record shows how the Conservatives went along with the six and five program last spring. They go along with the Liberals in blaming working Canadians. The Conservatives are now opposed to Bill C-133. I say good. However, is there any reason to believe that if they were in power today they would not cut pension benefits?

Do not the Conservatives also believe in restricting public spending? Do they not give lip service to Reaganomics? Do they not believe, like the Liberals, that only the private sector can get our economy back on track and that corporate taxes should be reduced in order to create a good climate for business?

Let us see how well the corporations have been looked after in the last three decades. In 1950 federal and provincial Governments collected about the same amount in taxes from corporations as from individual Candians. Let us look at what has happened since then. In 1950, there was a rough equality between corporate and private individual taxes being paid to governments. By 1960, individuals accounted for 58.6 per cent of total Government revenues whereas the corporate sector contributed only 41.3 per cent. By 1970, 71.3 per cent of Government income came from individuals whereas only 28.6 per cent came from corporation taxes. In 1980, individual taxes contributed 76.6 per cent to the public purse whereas the corporate sector was down to 23.3 per cent.

The major shift from the corporate to the individual occurred during the seventies and eighties. I am somewhat amused when the Conservatives charge the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) with being a socialist. Some socialism when corporate contributions to the public purse during the last two decades dropped from 41.3 per cent to 23.3 per cent whereas individual income taxes increased from 58.6 per cent to 76.6 per cent!

Another area of agreement is that the Conservatives, like the Liberals, say that we must reduce the Government deficit. I agree, but I disagree with them as to how we should reduce it. Let us talk about deferred income taxes, which never really shows up on the books as a tax expenditure. These are the tax loopholes that are provided. In 1979, total deferred taxes amounted to some $30 billion, almost the same as the deficit that we are running this year. Again, these are taxes that never show up on the books. It is true that the amount of money we collect from taxes is not enough to pay for all the social programs we want, but that is not because we spend too much money on these programs. It is because we spend too much money on loopholes.

Our tax expenditures are too high. For example, between 1976 and 1979, the federal Government's restraint program managed to limit direct spending increases to some 30 per cent. The cost of tax expenditures, however, went up 42 per cent. The Government made a great public show of trying to save, all the while quietly giving away more and more to the rich and powerful. That is why in 1978 there were 2,316 individuals in Canada who had assessed incomes of more than 50,000 but paid not one penny of income tax. Seven hundred and forty of those individuals made over $100,000 and 96 of them had incomes of over $200,000 or more, and they did not pay one cent of income tax. That, Mr. Speaker, is how we can start reducing our deficit.

The Conservatives, together with the Liberals, basically agree that it is the Canadian workers who are to blame for inflation, and that it is the expenditures of the Government on social programs that are to be blamed for our deficit and for inflation. I suggest the Canadian public is being hoodwinked. We are being hoodwinked into accepting the blame and, therefore, they are preparing us to accept the pain. It is not our social programs which are to blame for Government deficits and inflation, and it is not the workers' incomes which are to be blamed for inflation. It is the amount of profits which have increased over the last decade or so. That is the major contributor to the inflation spiral which we find ourselves in.

The increase in the prices of oil in 1973, a major money grab by the oil industry and by oil-producing countries, set off a series of actions where by everyone got into the act and made major money grabs. The profit increases in the 1970s were obscene. That is the major reason we ended up in the inflation spiral. Yet are they asked to share any of the blame or any of the pain of the six and five program? Has anyone asked industry or the corporate sector to restrict their price increase to six and five, to restrict their profit increases for next year and the year after to six and five? No, Mr. Speaker; the people who are really to blame for the inflation spiral are the ones who are not being asked to share the pain. In this, both the Liberals and the Conservatives must share the responsibility of trying to hoodwink the Canadian public.

The distribution or redistribution of income in this country has never been fair, even in good times. In these bad times, those at the bottom of the income level are being asked to make the greatest contribution in fighting inflation. For example, in 1965 the top 20 per cent of income earners in Canada took home 41.4 per cent of all the money which was earned while the bottom 20 per cent got a bare 4.4 per cent for their efforts. By 1980 things had gotten more lop-sided. The top 20 per cent pocketed 42.5 per cent of all the money earned and the bottom 20 per cent had dropped to 4.1 per cent. The rich do get richer and the poor do get poorer, Mr. Speaker.

The six and five program which this Government has introduced and which was supported by the Conservatives this spring is a further reduction of the incomes of average Canadians. I suggest that when the figures are compiled in terms of income redistribution for 1982, 1983 and 1984, it will even be more lop-sided than the figures I have quoted today.

I have received correspondence, from my constituents, as other Members have from theirs, concerning Bill C-133. I would like to put some of this communication on the record.

For example, I have a copy of a letter which was sent to me. The original letter was sent to the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray) on November 2, 1982. It states as follows:

> I have just received from the Prov. Rentalsman, notification that my rent is being increased by 13 per cent. The cost of rent, utilities, clothing, food, are all allowed to increase substantially. Why then is the federal Government restricting the indexing of our superannuations by a 6 per cent margin? It would appear that those of us who formerly worked for the federal Government are being forced to carry more than our share in an effort to restore a neglected economy.
> I would be interested in knowing why the superannuation fund now being used by your Government as a lucrative source of revenue, in that the actual interest earned by this fund is not credited to the fund. You, as our former employers, guaranteed complete indexing, provided that the current employees contributed an additional 1 per cent of their wages to keep the fund viable.
> Surely such a positive guarantee should be honoured. How can the Hon. Pierre Trudeau expect us to trust each other when he allows the above situation to become law?

An excellent question, Mr. Speaker. We sent a copy of this letter to the Prime Minister and I am very anxious to hear how the Prime Minister answers it. How can he expect us to trust each other when he allows the above situation to be come law?

I talked about the cynicism of this Government in introducing Bill C-133. They know it will not reduce inflation. They know it goes against everything which they have paid lip service to in the past—social justice, social equality, indexing of pensions, protecting the poor, the old and the weak. They do it, Mr. Speaker, because they feel they are in political difficulty. They believe that the Canadian public will accept this as some measure of action by the Government to control the economic situation, to bring inflation to the ground. It is all appearance. It is show and tell. It is mirrors and fog, because it will not bring inflation to the ground.

It is so sad that the cynical Government is using the aged, mothers, clerks and other civil servants, people who earn money that is barely enough to pay the rent and the utilities. The Government is using these people in order to project an image of itself as a Government with a definite economic recovery program.

The cynicism of this Government has hit a new low. A number is being done on the Canadian public. We see business pointing the finger at Government for over-spending to satisfy the whims of a pampered public. The Government says that business must share the blame for caving in to exorbitant wage demands. Both are agreed that it is the plain people with their unrealistic expectations who have the most to do with bringing us to where we are today. Both agree on laying the blame for the economic mess we are in on the victims, on the ordinary working Canadians. But ordinary working Canadians do not cause economic disasters; they are the victims. Today they are being victimized by the very people who really are to blame for the economic mess we are all in—the rich and the powerful.

I will join with other Members of the NDP caucus to oppose this legislation, as we opposed Bills C-131, C-132 and C-124. We will argue that other measures must be taken to end the economic anarchy which Canada finds itself in. We will argue that restricting wages and pension benefits will not lead to economic recovery, but rather that the whole Reagan economic theory will only make matters worse. Reaganomics will reduce the spending power of ordinary Canadians, which in turn will reduce economic activities, which in turn will only lead to greater unemployment. The New Democrats will try to present to the Government and to the Canadian public some semblance of sanity. We will argue that it is not the average Canadian that is to be blamed for the economic mess we are in, and we will encourage them to take political action to punish those who are in fact to blame.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: The Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom)—Trade—United States subsidization of wheat exports; the Hon. Member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Corbett)—Shipbuilding—Meeting with industry representatives in New Brunswick; the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor)—National Parks—Banff land exchange—Request that housing permit be cancelled. (b) Request for Minister's resignation.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

MEASURE TO MODIFY BENEFIT INDEX

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Gray that Bill C-133, an Act to amend the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act (No. 2), be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates: and the amendment thereto of Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton) (p. 21305).

Mr. John Evans (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have indicated on a number of occasions, as have my colleagues from the Ottawa area and others, that we had difficulty with Bill C-133, that to us the Bill was unacceptable in its form when it was introduced.

I want to start out by repeating my over-all strong support for the six and five program, a support which has been in place since day one. Indeed, I recommended to the Minister a concept along the lines of general restraint to bring the public sector in line with the private sector. I admit that, and quite frankly I think it was the proper thing to do. Indeed, if we look at the reality in the private sector today, the just released Conference Board study indicates wages and salaries from the senior executive level right down to the clerical level will probably come in in the range of 5 per cent to 6 per cent next year.

My support for the six and five program was based on a firm belief that the Government must constrain the outflow of taxpayers' dollars, and all of my constituents are taxpayers. The restraint of government expenditure is terribly important for a large number of reasons. First of all, there is the federal deficit. All of us in this House, including the New Democratic Party, are terribly concerned by the size of the deficit and we are afraid that it will constrain economic recovery. We must bring it under control over time because we must reduce the present and future burden on Canadian taxpayers. The Government has said this, the opposition parties have said this, and the six and five program, I think, is consistent with the need to reduce the expenditure of taxpayers' dollars.

Second, we must free up funds to help those in greatest need. We have 12.7 per cent unemployed, and youth unemployment is running up to 25 per cent. We are talking about the pension field, but there can be no question that the youth unemployment problem is probably the most critical part of our unemployment problem because who indeed is going to pay the pensions of the future if the youth of our time do not have employment opportunities?

Third, Mr. Speaker, we must reduce the tax burden on firms which are in financial difficulty and close to bankruptcy. Funds for housing must be freed up. So in addition to the need to reduce the deficit, there is a need to free up funds without increasing the deficit so that they can be used in other areas of extremely high priority.

Then we must constrain pressures on the capital markets. If we hold down taxes by simply borrowing money, we will put upward pressure on interest rates. We know what that does to people with mortgages to renew; we know what it does to consumer and investor confidence. If we do not restrain, the economy will simply not get back on the track to economic growth.

Fourth, Mr. Speaker, we must break the inflationary psychology. Certainly that is a terribly important thing and the six and five program has contributed to that goal.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, we have to spread the burden of this recession through our society as broadly as we can. We certainly cannot expect those in one sector or another, whether they be construction workers or woodworkers, unemployed miners in Sudbury or others, to carry the entire burden of the recession while the rest of us continue to increase our demands on the system.

For all those reasons, Mr. Speaker, I think the six and five program is a major step in accomplishing these objectives, and for those reasons I continue to be a strong supporter of the program. However, I think there is a distinction which must be made. Six and five should not be seen as a program of restraining incomes. It should rather be seen as restraining the expenditure of taxpayer dollars, and there is a fundamental difference between those two notions which is terribly important to the argument I wish to develop.

I think all of us in this House, in the Senate, in the Public Service generally, federal or provincial, have to understand that we are employees of the people. We are paid from the taxpayers' purse. Any time we take increases in salary, justified or unjustified, it is an additional burden on the taxpayer. I am not saying that wage and salary increases in the public sector are not justified. What I am saying is that there has to be a fundamental realization that, when we do ask for more, it means that others in our society—including the taxpayer, which includes public servants—have to have less. When the taxpayer is suffering, it seems to me only fair and equitable to ask that those of us who are employed by the taxpayer have to share some of that burden.

So I have no problem defending or standing up for the six and five program as it applies to wages and salaries. As I indicated earlier, that sharing of restraint is taking place in the private sector, as the Conference Board study clearly indicates.

Now, Mr. Speaker, a second aspect of the six and five program is as it applies to transfer programs, direct transfers of taxpayers' dollars to members of our society where no contribution whatsoever is involved. I include in that category, for example, Old Age Security and the Family Allowances. These are pure transfer programs from the taxpayers' purse; they are not contributory programs.

I support and will vote and have voted in favour of restraint to six and five on these transfer programs where no contributions were made, but I make an exception, and indeed the Government made an exception. That exception is that we have to make sure that we maintain the incomes of those who are in greatest need. That is precisely why the Child Tax Credit and the Guaranteed Income Supplement were not touched. They are fully indexed because they are transfers to people in greatest need in our society. The Government said transfers generally, yes; but transfers to those in greatest need, no, the restraint program will not apply to those. A distinction was made with regard to which transfers would be restrained and which would not be restrained.

The final category is one which brings me to Bill C-133, and that is restraint as it is applied to contributory programs. I draw to the attention of Hon. Members that the Canada Pension Plan was not restrained. There are several reasons for that. One is that the people contributed to that Plan and the payments being made out of that Plan now are a return of contributions. Some time in the future we may have to increase the contributions to make sure that the Plan remains viable, but it is a contributory Plan and for that reason, among others, it was not subjected to the six and five program; nor should it have been.

There is another plan and that is superannuation. The difficulty that many of us had with Bill C-133 when it was introduced was that it did not recognize that superannuation and the indexation of superannuation were both contributory plans. It treated superannuation as a pure transfer program; it treated superannuation as though it were OAS or as though it were Family Allowance, both of which are pure transfers. That is the source of the difficulty that I have had.

Just the other day the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) made some comments on this subject. I want to indicate that this has been the position I have taken all along and I come back to a speech I delivered in the House on July 8, 1982. At that time, as reported at page 19156 of Hansard, I said:

There is another aspect of the program, and that is deindexation. I support certain elements of that deindexation as well, but there is one element of deindexation about which I have serious questions. I intend to pursue those questions. I know you intend to pursue them as well, Mr. Speaker.

The Hon. Member for Ottawa West (Mr. Francis) was in the chair at the time. I continued:

—The element to which I refer is the element of deindexation of public service superannuation. The reason I have questions about that is that contractual payments are made to individuals who made contributions during their working lives to fund indexation. If it could be shown that the fund which has been built up by public servants to fund the indexation of their pensions is inadequate or insufficient, then I could see justification for saying. "Yes, restraint". I have not seen that evidence. I have not seen anyone put forward evidence or indicate to me that there is evidence which indicates that the funding of that indexation program is inadequate. I will have to see that evidence before I can support this particular element of the deindexation program. If public servants in our ridings, Mr. Speaker, and all across the country made contributions to that fund which are adequate to cover the indexation of their superannuation payments, then I do not think that should be part of the restraint program.

I do support the over-all restraint program, but I put forward the caveat that I do intend to pursue that one element of the program.

Indeed, Mr. Speaker, that is precisely what I have been doing. More recently, at the RA Centre, several of us met with a group of senior citizens and retired public servants. At that meeting I came out at the beginning and indicated my full and unequivocal support for the principles of the six and five program and for the vast majority of the six and five program itself.

Second, I stated at that time that Bill C-133 was not acceptable in the form it then was. I also stated that it was unfair in that it failed to recognize that public servants had made contributions, that it treated superannuation the same as a pure transfer program such as those I have mentioned, Old Age Security and Family Allowance. I committed myself to fight to have the Bill altered.

Bill C-133 was designed with the apparent intent to limit the increase in the income of pensioners, not to limit the expenditure of taxpayers' dollars. By its very formation, it was aimed at saying pensioners' increases shall not increase by more than six and five. At the same time, of course, that would mean that the transfer from the taxpayers' purse would not increase by more than six and five and would probably increase by less than six and five.

What has happened is that when the Minister introduced the Bill for second reading yesterday, he made a fundamental shift in philosophy. That shift in philosophy recognizes that contributions were made and that increases in pensions should reflect the effects of those contributions over and above the part contributed by the taxpayer. The Bill has been fundamentally changed. It is now designed to restrain the expenditures of taxpayers to six and five and not to restrain the increases in pensions to six and five. The whole target of the legislation has been shifted.

The numbers are not the important aspect at this point. What we have seen is a fundamental establishment of principles. It is not important that it is 6.5 and 5.5. The fundamental principle established in this Bill—and I am not sure whether the Department realizes this—is that it is the transfer from the taxpayer that is going to be restrained to six and five and not the increase, necessarily, in Public Service pensions.

That is a fundamental change and, as I said, it is not clear to me that all people realize that, including those who made the recommendation to the Minister. Whether the Department realizes it or not, it has now opened up a number of options for consideration by the committee of which the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) is Chairman.

First of all, if the increase in pensions is not the issue but rather the contribution from taxpayers' revenue, and if the fund contributed by public servants is inadequate to pay full indexation, then the rate of contribution should be increased until it is adequate to give full indexation. This is not an unusual thing; it has been done before.

Until 1977, public servants contributed one half of 1 per cent to the supplementary retirement benefits account to fund pensions. In 1977 that was changed and since then contributions have been at the rate of 1 per cent of salary. The Government should have no objection, I contend, to full indexation provided that the portion above six and five is paid for by public servants and not by the taxpayer.

Second, the Minister states that only 10 per cent of the cost of full indexation has been paid for by contributions from public servants. I suggest that this is not fully accurate. Specifically, the figure of 10 per cent relates only to the contributions and the earnings on those contributions that have been made to the supplementary retirement benefits account by those people now receiving a pension, and only by those who are now retired. It does not include contributions and the earnings on contributions which have been made by those public servants who are now employed in the Public Service. Since indexation was implemented for all retired public servants in 1971, even for those who never contributed anything to the supplementary retirement benefits account, it is obvious that the contributions of those now retired would be inadequate to fund their own indexation.

Third, the officials have contended that each public servant has a separate account into which his or her contributions are paid, both in the main fund and in the supplementary retirement benefits account. It is in that person's name. If this is so, then recent retirees have adequate amounts in their accounts to fund the indexation for this year, but early retirees prior to 1971 or in the early 1970s who have been receiving indexation at accelerating rates over the last years do not have any balance in their accounts.

If these accounts are indeed individual and in the name of the employee or the retired person—and this is the reason given for not being able to shift funds from the contributions of those now working to those who have been retired to supplement the amount of money available to pay full indexation—then how can the funds be shifted between the accounts of retired public servants in order to give all retired public servants an equal amount of one-half of 1 per cent of their pension? If these accounts are indeed inviolable, how can they be inviolable when it comes to shifting money from working contributors to pensioners but not inviolable regarding shifts from one pensioner to another? That is a fundamental point. Either shifting can occur or it cannot occur. We will probe this matter in committee.

If funds can be shifted, what about the earnings on the main superannuation fund? Why can these funds not be shifted to fund higher indexation? The Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier indicated some points earlier. It is important that it be on the record what is the nature of the $15 billion or $17 billion fund. Also it is important to know why the employer, rightly so, reduces its contribution by the amount of excess earnings over and above the rate assumed actuarially.

The nature of pension plans, private or public, is such that one assumes there will be no increase in salary over the life of the pension plan or one assumes some actuarial rate of increase and then an actuarial rate of interest, usually one or two percentage points higher than that. Since the pensions are based upon the average of the last six years of earnings, and if incomes are going up and the pensions are based upon only the last six years but contributions have been made on the basis of early earnings, obviously with rising incomes there is what is called an actuarial deficit. The Public Service Pension Plan and private pension plans are set up so that employers have the right to use excess earnings over and above the actuarial rate of return to pay the actuarial deficit in order to fund fully the pensions.

That is fine, but one can get to the point where the rate of return on the assets so far exceeds the assumed actuarial rate of return that in fact the fund runs a surplus. I would contend—and I have been so informed by actuaries who do not have an axe to grind in this particular case—that while the main superannuation fund does not now run a surplus in a full actuarial sense, it is very rapidly coming to the point where it will run a surplus as a result of the very high rates of return which the fund has been able to earn in recent years.

Since the superannuation program includes an agreement indicating that the Government's contribution shall never be lower than the contributions of employees—the employer's shall not be lower than the employee's—it will mean that as soon as the employer's contribution has been reduced as far as it can, the excess earnings will simply create a surplus in the main superannuation fund. It seems to me at that point in time—and that is why an acturial assessment has to be done—those funds should be available to be used to fund other forms of retirement benefits, for example indexation.

Another point raised by officials was that this year the cost of indexation for people now retired would be somewhere in the range of $470 million. that is somewhat misleading as well, because it is the total cost of the cumulative indexation over the years which would be paid this year, as opposed to what would have been the case had there been no indexation at all. The really important figure is, how much in addition it will cost this year over what it cost last year? That figure is $139 million. This is the marginal increase in the cost of indexation this year.

Right now the increased contribution or the contribution of public servants who are working this year will be in the range of $180 million, so the contributions of working public servants this year will exceed the increase in the cost of indexation this year by some $41 million or thereabouts.

The point of all this is that we are now at the point where indeed six and five is working and inflation is coming down. If we take the last four months, for example, the annual rate of inflation has been running at around 6.5 per cent to 7 per cent; this is for the last four months, annualized. So it is coming down; we are beating inflation. That implies this year's indexation figure will probably be the highest that it will be for the next few years and hopefully for a good many years. If that is the case, if current contributions by working public servants are $180 million this year and the cost of indexing at 11.5 per cent is $139 million this year, and if indexing will be less next year but contributions of public servants will be more than $180 million next year because their salaries are going up and they pay 1 per cent, it seems to me that if it were possible to transfer funds from the accounts of working public servants to those of retired public servants, we could cover that amount this year. Also it seems to me that their accounts would continue to grow in the future as the amount of indexation went down but the amount of contribution by existing public servants went up. This is another point we will want to pursue in committee.

As I said, I opposed the Bill at the outset as tabled because it did not recognize the contributory nature of the plan. It now recognizes this and I can accept it in principle. It limits Government contributions to six and five. In other words, it is contended that it limits, as the numbers now stand, the Government's contribution from taxpayers' revenue to no more than six and five, and I agree with that principle.

Also as a result of the change brought it by the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray), it recognizes that amounts reflecting contributions must be considered over and above six and five. I accept that principle. I do not necessarily agree that 6.5 and 5.5 are correct numbers to use, and I will pursue that matter vigorously in committee, as I am sure all my colleagues will. However, once these dual principles are recognized—the principle that six and five should be maintained as it applies to the amount that is taxpayer-financed, and the principle that contributory amounts should be considered over and above that amount—then the question of further increases based on additional contributions, as was suggested by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier, must also be recognized.

The Government entered into an agreement with the Public Service, whether implicit or explicit, to provide indexed pensions. The Government reserved the right to alter contribution rates, and it has done so in the past. Indeed, it has altered the rate of indexation, as the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier indicated. In the period during the AIB, there was a maximum transfer of $2,400, a maximum increase in pensions of $2,400, established. that established the principle of a cap on indexation, whether or not it was binding.

Further, the Government has established the right to alter the fundamental nature of the program. I would refer Hon. Members to Bill C-12, which was introduced in 1978. It received second reading, in other words, agreement in principle, by the Members of this House and provided that the Government could cap indexation, because that was precisely what the Bill accomplished. It said that there would be full indexation up to a certain figure, which I believe was $12,000, and that there would be reduced indexation beyond that level. This received approval at second reading and, when it returned to the House for report stage, it came back with the unanimous agreement of all Members of the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates. Therefore, there are grounds for doing what is being done. There are grounds for limiting.

However, while I contend that the Government has the right to alter, it also has the moral obligation to employ all avenues to meet its commitment to pensioners. I therefore feel that all avenues mentioned by myself and by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier, must be considered to meet the two objectives I have outlined above. First, it would restrict the expenditure of taxpayers' dollars to no more than six and five; and, second, it would meet its moral obligation to provide indexed pensions to retired public servants based upon their contributions.

The change announced by the Minister in Bill C-133 would make both these objectives possible. The old Bill restricted pension income while the new Bill would restrict the outflow of taxpayers' dollars, recognizing increases in pensions funded by contributions as being outside the six and five program. With these two principles intact, I can support the Bill at second reading. I accept its principles, and I have indicated that I will continue to work in committee with my colleagues to see that all avenues are rigourously explored so as to meet our moral obligation to provide indexed pensions within the principles of the Bill.

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, it is a privilege to take part in the debate today on Bill C-133. However, I would like to preface my remarks by complimenting most sincerely the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), who gave a very considered, well-researched, well-thought-out dissertation to the House today outlining some of the problems faced by the constituents of his riding.

I would also like to comment on the remarks of the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans). I am not really sure whether he has swallowed himself whole, whether he has gone halfway or whether we must wait for another time to see what the outcome will be. He indeed said a number of things. In relation to the principle of six and five, he felt that expenditures of Government funds should be restricted and that those funds should be freed up to help those in need, such as youth, industry and so on. He also discussed how we would break up those funds to fight inflation and get people back to work, helping industry. He said the aim was not to restrain income but, rather, to restrain public spending. I wonder if the Hon. Member had taken the restraining of public expenditures into consideration. For instance, has he considered the $70 million to $100 million spent on advertising by the Government?

Has the Government considered the tens of millions of dollars which have been spent to promote the six and five program? Has it considered the cost of publishing binders containing the interim report on the progress of the six and five program, such as the one which was dropped off at my office and those dropped off at every Hon. Member's office, having been sent clear across the country? That probably cost somewhere between $100 and $200 per copy to produce. What earthly good was that? It was a flim-flam attempt to tell people across the country that something is working in the six and five program.

Indeed, I hope to see inflation come down because it underlies simply everything which happens in our country. We all know that and we all agree that we must fight it. However, to fight inflation, does one break the trust of one's employees, the civil servants?

The basic principle of the Public Service pension is being suspended. It was agreed that people who work for the Public Service and for the RCMP would contribute to their pension funds and people who went into the Armed Forces would contribute to theirs. It was agreed that when they retired they would receive their pension, which would be indexed so that their purchasing power would not be eroded. It is very simple and progressive.

I spent ten years in the Armed Forces and contributed to a pension fund. I constantly knew what I would receive as my retirement benefit when I retired from the Armed Forces if I spent the required number of years in the forces.

Part of the enticement to a career in the civil service is a pension. That plays a part, as does security of tenure, working conditions and amount of pay. As well, I knew that if I contributed to a pension, when I retired after faithful service I would receive the kind of income on which I could live for the rest of my life. People simply do not work 25 to 35 years for one employer, contributing to a pension plan, and then say at the end of that time: "Gee whiz, we get a pension". That is part of the over-all family planning, the retirement planning. Each one of us goes through this. I have seen Members of this House sit down in the dining room and discuss, if they retire or are forced to retire after the next election, what indeed their pension will be.

They know that it is indexed; they talk about the purchasing power. It is trust. The Government hires civil servants for the Public Service. They go into the diplomatic core, the Armed Forces, or the RCMP. All these people trust their employer to do what he said he was going to do when they retire. There is no other issue at stake here, none whatsoever, except trust.

We teach trust, and trust is inherent in our society right across Canada. That trust is implicit in our teaching of children in school, or when you take them to the bank. You say you can trust this institution, you can put your money in the bank and when you want those funds you can write a cheque and withdraw those funds. The trust is there in the Bank Act, that if they say they are going to pay an interest rate on your account, it will be paid.

Our whole society is built on trust of the very basic things. If you go into the rural communities of Canada today you will find that people trust their neighbours not to infringe on their property, they leave their doors open in the rural communities. The trust is implicit—all that we have at stake here today.

When an individual first joins the Armed Forces, for example, or the RCMP, he immediately starts looking for a career. Perhaps he does not look at the retirement benefits until he is married and has children and is looking to secure his position when he does retire. But at certain points along the way when he is offered a job outside of the Armed Forces, the RCMP or the Public Service, that becomes a very, very strong inducement for him to remain; and all we do is break the trust.

It is sad to say, but I see this trust being broken continually in other areas, and I am sure that Hon. Members on the Government side do not want to go down in history as part of a Government that introduced mistrust into our whole system. That clearly is what is happening, in my view.

Where was the trust, for example, when the national energy policy was brought forward, and when they reneged on agreements with foreign companies, and with Canadian companies, who indeed were told that there is a certain tax regime set-up, and if they will invest their moneys, private moneys, to develop a certain industry, this is the kind of return, this is the kind of thing that will happen. The national energy policy actually came in with a back-in provision that allowed them to confiscate properties. I implore Hon. Members not to allow this mistrust to arise among the employees in the Public Service, the Armed Forces and the RCMP. It is wrong; it is dead wrong. I think all Hon. Members, if they will reflect for a moment, will realize that.

We heard the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre say that we had to tighten the public purse, quit wasting money, quit spending money that we do not have. We cannot increase the deficit because if we do we are going to increase inflation because there will be a call on the money markets which will increase the interest rates, with devastating effect, right across the country. I agree. But how about restraining Crown corporations or Government corporations from expanding? An example is the purchase of BP by Petro-Canada. That is a cost to the taxpayer. It is a direct cost to the taxpayer when we allow a Government corporation, a Crown corporation or a Government-owned operation to spend money. We hear we will increase the sales, et cetera, and we will be able to pay off BP in this respect, but that is not totally true. Some of it will be, possibly, but the Government is still paying in, transferring directly to Petro-Canada, millions and millions of dollars a year through the ownership levy at the pumps today. That is inflationary.

We have a new Macdonald Commission to look at the economy and come up with ideas on how Canada can fight inflation. At what cost? What is it going to cost taxpayers of this country to have this flim-flam Commission—$5 million, $10 million, $15 million? Certainly it is going to be at least $10 million. That in itself is inflationary.

What about the advertising we talked about earlier, Mr. Speaker, the advertising that is done by the Unity Office or the advertising that is now done by the six and five office? It created a bundle that was delivered to my office in hard cover, a very fancy document, a fancy book, that had to cost at least $100 and more likely $200 per copy. This was delivered to all Members and, indeed, probably across the country. How many copies were issued, 1,000, 2,000? Why not reduce in those areas?

The federal Government, the so-called people's Government, is the largest advertiser in Canada today, at a rate of $70 million to $100 million per annum. I do not think that people across Canada have to see all the advertising or to get a bound copy of the three dissertations that the Prime Minister made on his six and five proposals, et cetera, a few weeks ago.

There is something fundamentally wrong when we break the trust that we have with our employees, the employees of Canada, who have contributed, dedicated their lives and their working careers. In many cases Armed Forces personnel, RCMP and diplomatic corps people lived in situations they did not like. They remained because of a duty to their career or to their country. Often they were enticed to remain.

I left the Armed Forces after ten years' service. Canada or the federal Government had made an investment in my training and the expertise I had developed in certain categories. A real effort was made by the commanding officer, and later the personnel officer at the release centre, urging me not to leave the Armed Forces after ten years, telling me that if I remained for another ten years I would earn a pension and never have to worry. It was pointed out that I would still be a young man and could attain a higher rank. That is being said today to fighter pilots and to trained public servants. They have been in the past and will continue to be in the future talked into staying with their career, whether it be with the RCMP, diplomatic service or Public Service.

We cannot allow the trust relationship that has been built up over many years with the employees to be trampled in this way. This Government has an obligation. We cannot allow that trust to be broken. I hope that during the Committee stage all Members of Parliament will look clearly at their responsibility. In a small business, the employer's word is his bond. We have stated clearly that pensions will be indexed and not trampled on. That is in legislation. We have said to them that when they retire, they will receive a pension and that if inflation escalates, they will still have the same purchasing power from the day they retire until the day they die.

People have planned their lives around this principle of indexation of pensions. We cannot break that trust.

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley-Hants): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to participate in the debate on Bill C-133 although, as other Members have said, the subject matter does cause concern. The Hon. Member who just concluded echoed in very real terms the fundamental issue.

Before getting into what I want to say about this Bill, I want, without any hesitation or equivocation whatsoever, to pay a heartfelt compliment to the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) who spoke earlier this afternoon. It was one of the most constructive, reasoned and parliamentary speeches that I have had the pleasure of hearing for some time. After listening to the tone and timbre of that speech, I must say that it has affected what I intend to say today.

I was going to go further with this trust. I was going to refer to the classic article by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in Cité Libre where he chewed out Liberals as docile sheep. There were many other interesting epitaphs in that article. There has been the tremendous flip-flop with regard to nuclear arms and the acquisition of Bomarcs. Admittedly, that was in 1963 and the Prime Minister was not a Member of the House at that time. The article talked about spineless Members who go through the charade in this House of speaking for and against Bills, not worrying too much about conviction or principle.

This is an issue that one could talk about in a facetious way, but I will not be facetious. The issue in Bill C-133 contains many complexities with regard to pension funds. This is one place where I do not want to be confused with the facts. Frankly, I do not understand the shell game regarding the differences between one pension plan and another. I do not know which one is over-funded and which one is under-funded. I do not know where the surplus is. For years there has been an ongoing debate about what has happened to the contributions of federal public servants, RCMP and Defence employees. In effect it goes into an account, some goes into the national account and the Government pays out.

When it comes to the complexities of pension funds, Alice in Wonderland would be as confused today as she was at the Mad Hatter's tea party.

What stood out today was the contribution by the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier. He researched the subject and spoke very carefully in a concerned way about his personal dilemma of trying to rationalize loyalty to the Party and the principle which he feels could be violated if the Bill came to a vote in its present form.

The most interesting part of the Hon. Member's speech was at the end. He proposed certain changes by which he and other Members might avoid the dilemma which so often hits Members. He very eloquently expressed that when he said that when you have a personal dilemma between what your conscience tells you to do and what your constituents would like and there is a Party label on an issue, you are supposed to vote the Party line.

That Hon. Member's contribution was one of the more interesting ones. There have been contributions by other concerned Members, in tremendously marked contrast with some of the speeches made by other concerned Members as to how they would wiggle out of the dilemma they now face.

There have been contributions by Members who spoke outside the House about their personal views on Bill C-133, how they do not intend to support the Bill in its present form. They have stated this at public meetings and so on. However, when the debate began yesterday—and I was here yesterday and today—some Members from the Government side, and I will not name each one, created an amusing situation. The mental gymnastics they went through of trying to rationalize the conflict they are in would make a professional acrobat seem like a piker. They moved around and hopped around the issue, which was squarely faced by the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier.

I said do not confuse me with the facts because, as the Hon. Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields) said, the issue is the fundamental principle of trust. I find it most ironic that we are talking about this type of Bill where trust is the fundamental issue. I will not get involved in all the facts and figures but I can mention a few. As my hon. friend, the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) said so eloquently yesterday in trying to meet the canard, we are not talking about the "fat cat" who can fight inflation. We are talking about an economic group who are really on the low part of the totem pole, with an average income from these pensions of $6,900. Yet, because of show, cosmetic effect and propaganda, these retired pensioners from the federal Public Service are suppossed to carry their weight, even though so many of them carried their weight by receiving low incomes for so many of the years, let alone the fact that they have made a contribution to their pension since the Act was changed a few years ago and feel very much that there is a contract which binds the Government as a trustee not to meddle with these funds.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) appeared on television, and what was his fundamental message? What he tried to preach to the people of Canada was trust. He said, "Trust me, trust the Government, trust Canadians". I find it fantastically ironic that the Prime Minister on that day was asking Canadians who were overdrawn at the bank to trust the Government, farmers to trust bank managers, all kinds of Canadians to trust each other in this new euphoria of trust. Yet, here today when he should be practising what he is preaching, his Government would not trust the most loyal Canadians which Government has, the retired public servant who has done his duty to his country until recent years at relatively low income scales. Certainly, when you average out the pensions at $6,900 you are not talking about fat cats who have milked the trough; you are talking about Canadians under the poverty line. They cannot fight back. And when you cap their pension at six and five, they cannot come back when this capping is over and renegotiate.

The Hon. Member earlier spoke about how permanent temporary things become in this House. If the Prime Minister wants Canadians to trust, he should start to practise what he preaches by changing this Bill. Frankly, there is a way out for every Member of Government in the motion which is on the floor at the moment. Many Hon. Members may not know about it. The motion of the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton is a six months' hoist to give Government time to iron out perhaps some of these problems, to study some of the suggestions which have been made, whereby Members, particularly Government Members, would not have to face this dilemma of in effect having their personal conscience and their loyalty to their constituency fly in the face of their loyalty to the Party. In the six months made available we can all talk about what the interpretation may be of that Bill.

Some of us have been in this House before when a Government has lost a tax Bill, and the next day the question was: you have lost a tax Bill, have you lost the confidence of the House? In 1968 in Mr. Pearson's day, in a constitutional parliamentary precedent, the Government which lost the tax Bill had not lost the confidence of the House. And I do not think, even with the losing of Bill C-133 or a six months' hoist to Bill C-133, with all Members present, that the Government would in fact have lost the confidence of the House.

I am glad to see the Government House Leader (Mr. Pinard) here because I know he has been very interested in reform. My hon. colleague was the Vice-Chairman of the committee for reform and, quite frankly, that committee has done some very good work in starting down the road to reform. You can talk about reform all you want in terms of rules and technicalities of procedure, but unless and until we start to reform Hon. Members in their conduct so that we are not always playing the political game and talking rhetorically, which we can all do fairly well, some of these technical reforms will not matter very much. Of course, the one I believe in, which I am not going to repeat, is a fundamental reform which is obviously the reform on confidence motions. If we change that, we will have Members saying what they really believe, really helping their constituents and helping redress this alienation which the public feels for this institution.

That was the essence of the speech from the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier today. He spoke about what he believed in and, interestingly enough, posed the rhetorical question: that he did not feel he was a rebel, running away from principles that he and his Party had believed in for years, mainly because they have been in Government so long, and the inference from what he said was that the import of Bill C-133 is really going against the principle.

Frankly, and I say this seriously, if there was ever a black mark on the social conscience of the Liberal Party it is contained in the implications of Bill C-133. And there are good Liberals, in the Liberal sense of this word, outside of this House who must be squirming at the implications of Bill C-133, and certainly those dead must be turning in their graves. Bill C-133 is in effect breaking trust with retired employees who have served, and served well. The other aspect is that this change was unilateral. It was made with no prior consultation, which is another reason why there is such negative reaction from retired public servants.

I do not have the number of retired public servants in my constituency that some Hon. Members who have spoken in this debate have in their constituencies, but I say seriously that if you want a whipping boy it might be easy to point to those "fat cat retired public servants".

Frankly, it would be easier for me perhaps to vote for this Bill, if I did not honestly believe that this fundamental principle of trust between employer and employee is being violated, and if you violate it once, you can violate it again in any area. And that is what this Government has done in so many ways.

I have in my hand, Mr. Speaker, a season's greeting message from the members of the Federal Superannuates Association of Nova Scotia who, in effect, are concerned about this matter. I see that the clock shows almost six. May I call it six o'clock and continue my remarks at eight o'clock?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Chair thanks the Hon. Member for recognizing the clock. I will now rise until eight o'clock this evening.

At 6 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, I had the floor just before six o'clock, and over the dinner hour something happened which some Members here might not think is related to Bill C-133. In listening to the news I heard that the MX missile proposal of President Reagan was defeated in the Senate, and I am very happy about that. Quite frankly, I think the whole concept of dense pack MX missiles, ironically called the Peacekeeper system, is one of the greatest political perversions in the United States, just like the Maginot Line was in France because it was supposed to keep the Germans out of France, but the politicians forgot that the Germans could come through Belgium. It is ironic that it happened today, on December 7, when my young friend, the Hon. Member for Gloucester (Mr. Breau), who is not in his seat, perhaps forgot about that day, December 7, 1941, and about preparedness.

The reason this is relevant, Mr. Speaker, is that in the United States' political system a presidential decree, edict, or whatever it is, concerning the MX missile went down to defeat, and neither the Democratic Party nor the Republican Party are shattered. That is their system, they can vote the way they believe. That is why I come back to Bill C-133 and some of the Hon. Members opposite who, I believe, feel the same as I do about it. I paid the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) the justified compliment of saying that his speech was one of the more courageous, comprehensive and constructive speeches that I have heard since I have been a Member of Parliament. The point is, Mr. Speaker, when you get an issue like Bill C-133, it boils down to a simple but very challenging word, that of trust.

Before six o'clock I said it was ironic that we are discussing this Bill and its betrayal of the trust of people who have served this country better than perhaps a lot of Members or a lot of other Canadians across this land, that is the retired public servants. It is ironic because it was the Prime Minister who, two or three weeks ago, went on national television to talk about trust. You cannot have the Prime Minister of the land, in an interesting television performance, come on and ask Canadians to trust in Government, trust six and five, trust a Canadian, when the people who have served the country feel betrayed by Bill C-133. It just does not sell. And those are not my words.

I could stay silent on this Bill. While I have a number of retired public servants in my riding because the Annapolis Valley is a nice place to retire to, the numbers are rather few in relation to the many thousands across this land. So it would have been easy for me to stay silent on this Bill. But, as I said before six o'clock, unless Members start to heed the example of the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier and say what they feel, we are just kidding ourselves in our attempts to reform the House of Commons. Unless Members can reform their own performance, all the technical changes in the rules will mean very, very little. Because of television, the public can tune in to what goes on here. Because they are better educated than they were 20 or 30 years ago they are starting to expect Members of Parliament to speak about their belief in a cause. If they do not believe in the cause, let them shut up and sit down. This is one of the reasons why there is this alienation between the public forum of this Parliament of Canada and the public out there who wonder who is speaking for them.

I say to you, Mr. Speaker, as humbly as I can, that Bill C-133 to me crystalizes the issue which the Prime Minister talked about. I thought it was a relatively good performance on television, regardless of the partisan aspect where I could say he did not say too much in a concrete way. But his one message was trust. Trust me. Trust Canadians. And is it not a paradox that the one Canadian he is not going to trust is the retired public servant who has worked in many cases at a sub-par income level and in many cases has a sub-par pension level.

These are the people who feel betrayed by the leader of the land. We are not talking about the fat cats of the land; we are talking about retired public servants whose average pension is $6,900, and that is below the poverty line. They contributed to that pension from their salaries when they were working. These individuals, without form, without face, having given service, are supposed to be the front-line fighters in the trenches because the economic conditions in the country are very, very difficult today. We all understand that difficulty, Mr. Speaker.

The Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier quoted some words that the Prime Minister had used in an address to a pensions conference. I should like to read from a letter which is about trust. It shows why I think this matter is so fundamental. The letter is dated October 12, 1977. It is addressed to a Mr. Power, who at that time was national President of the Union of National Defence Employees, and it is signed by the Prime Minister. I will read the letter in its entirety But I want to bring the last paragraph in particular to your attention as that is the one on which I will make my case. The letter begins as follows:

Dear Mr. Power: Thank you for your telegram of September 27.

By the way, this telegram was sent because there was a question at that time about the right or the policy of indexing public service pensions. It continues as follows:

I have noted your concern that the indexation of government pensions be maintained.

In our society, pensions provide a means of sharing risk so that we can retire in reasonable security and dignity, without fear of the future. Protecting pensions from inflation by indexing them to increases in the cost of living should be an integral part of our pension schemes. Indexing does not give pensioners an increasingly larger claim on our economy's production, that is, more money to buy things they could not earlier afford. Rather, indexing merely enables pensioners to maintain, roughly, their same standard of living.

Even a modest rate—

This was written in 1977, when we did not have the ravage of inflation that we have today. It went on:

Even a modest rate of inflation destroys, at a devastating rate, the buying power of people on fixed incomes. Pensioners are out of the work-force and cannot bargain or strike for larger incomes. They are not the cause of inflation; they are its victim. We have an obligation to help protect them.

I have asked my staff to send a copy of our correspondence to the President of the Treasury Board, the Honourable Robert Andras.

In the remarks that I made before six o'clock this evening, I said that if there is any one Bill that is a blot on the social conscience of the Liberal Party, it is Bill C-133 which attacks pensioners who are out of the work-force, who cannot defend themselves and who will never again be able to negotiate or strike or make up what they are going to lose through the capping of a pension to which they contributed and which they were told—in contract form—was theirs.

This hocus-pocus on the part of the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray) of playing around with one half of one per cent to try to get some of the mental gymnasts, in the parliamentary sense, to come on board, is not only all heart, it is a complete and total sham.

We have all heard that a woman cannot be half pregnant; she has to be pregnant or not. There either is a principle and a contract that cannot be changed unless there is consultation, or there is no principle involved here. You cannot play around with the principle by trying to insult Members, as the President of the Treasury Board has done, by saying, "Fellows, come on board because we will recognize the six and five in terms of the 1 per cent contribution that people made. We will give a half per cent more so it will not be six and five, it will be 6.5 and 5.5"

This morning I heard a commentary which pointed out that the difference works out to $3 per month. Almost before you were born, Mr. Speaker, and in my early adolescence, there was another Government of Liberals. Walter Harris, a great Canadian in the true Liberal sense, brought in a budget. He just added $6 to the old age pension. The Government legitimately went down to defeat because of the "six buck boys".

We all know about Mount Rushmore National Park. Here we have the President of the Treasury Board whose face is carved—in the animate spirit that moves him—in chalk as if on Mount Rushmore. He is trying to delude certain Members on the other side who are faced with a legitimate problem—conscience versus loyalty to the Party. He is trying to seduce them in an insulting way with half a percentage point. That is how much he thinks of them. Three dollars a month—the price used to be 30 pieces of silver. Well, 30 pieces of silver today is more than $3 a month. For $3 of this Government's money he says, "Come on board. We have changed the Bill. It is no longer six and five. We are giving you half a percentage point more because there is a little different principle here. Some retired civil servants did help pay for an indexing clause." Thirty pieces of silver, or $3 in the Government's price, is supposed to seduce Members to come on board without change.

The Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier proposed some changes that the Government should consider. The motion that is before the House at the moment does not cut to the core of a Government. It does not mean that if it were adopted the Government would go down the drain and we would be fighting a winter election. As much as any of us love elections, winter is not necessarily a good time to have one.

The motion of the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton calls for a six month hoist. The Table officers might try to define what a six month hoist does to a bill. I was a Member of the House when another Prime Minister of the same governing party defied a vote on a tax bill and said it was not a vote of no confidence. So there is a way out for Members opposite faced with that dilemma. And they must face a dilemma if they have any political conscience at all.

You do not hit a little fellow when he is down, Mr. Speaker. Why should retired federal public servants who worked for the Government, believed in the Government and expected the Government to protect them, now be the guinea pigs because of economic conditions in the country and indeed, in the world? I will not try to lay all the blame on the Government, although I can lay a lot of it there. I do not care about blame. I care about the injustice, the inequity and the total anti-Liberal philosophy of Bill C-133 as it stands. It uses retired federal public servants as guinea pigs in order to introduce a psychology that six and five will be the salvation of all our economic ills.

When I spoke before six o'clock I referred to a "Season's Greetings" note sent out by the Federal Superannuates National Association of Nova Scotia. Members get oodles of paper coming across their desks. This is a mimeographed newsletter which, ironically, is financed by a New Horizons grant from Health and Welfare Canada. This is participatory democracy in a real way. It is an expenditure of public funds, but if they are to be spent, let the superannuates spend them. It is they who are going to get hit over the head if Bill C-133 goes through as it stands. This letter from the 16,000-odd superannuates of Nova Scotia presents their arguments against the Bill in summary form. They are as follows:

1. Our pensions, including indexation, are a form of deferred remuneration and should not be altered at the whim of government or without prior consultation.

• (2020)

2. Considering the statements made in the last three issues of the Treasury Board publication, "Your Superannuation Plan", any reduction of full indexation is an outright breach of faith with those already retired.

3. The contributions made to the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Fund were mandatory—

This is the interesting thing which makes almost a lie of granite face from Mount Rushmore, the President of the Treasury Board. He started to play around with one-half of 1 per cent and to say that the one-half of 1 per cent was in effect a reward. He missed the whole object of the exercise. We all know that a 1 per cent payment from a federal Public Service salary will not pay for full indexation, but it is a form of insurance which they bought; it was part of the contract. Now this trustee of public funds will unilaterally change the contract and not give them their indexed pensions for which they have paid. Now he unilaterally says that they will be indexed at six and five. It has been said by other Members, more eloquently than I can say it, that if anyone else tried this they would be in criminal court for violating their trust to a trustee's account. That is the point in No. 3 in a simple form. The superannuates of Nova Scotia indicated:

3. The contributions made to the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Fund were mandatory and represented a form of insurance of our pensions against rising cost of living. We paid the premium, we are entitled to the product.

That says it all. They continued:

4. We understand that the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Fund is not sufficient in itself to pay for indexation of pensions, but we are entitled to a share of the excess earnings from the main fund, and if our share of excess earnings was credited to the SRBA there would be sufficient to pay full indexation.

5. Lastly, if government is allowed to meddle with the pension funds, then a very dangerous precedent is being set.

I agree with each of these five points. I think my time is coming to a close. Therefore, I will conclude in the usual manner, observing the House rules. If I do not observe the rules, Mr. Speaker will direct me to do so.

In conclusion, let me remind the House that we have the letter of the Prime Minister in 1977. If we are talking about a principle of indexation when pensioners are out of the work force and cannot bargain or strike for larger incomes, and if all that were true then, what has changed today in 1982 in terms of the principle of indexation? Many of us voted for Bill

C-124. We all know that one Party did not. We voted because we in the work force, public servants in the work force, should accept and react favourably to the Government program of six and five. We in the Conservative Party never intended that a vote on Bill C-124, which in effect approved of the Government trying to exercise restraint by example—and I will not get into the reasons it has not lived up to its example—would mean that we acquiesced with an inequity upon those who cannot defend themselves. The two cannot be connected. It is the same as the canard from the NDP which says that if one believes in God one is a Baptist or if one believes in God one is a Catholic. Often we believe in the same principle, for example that of disarmament, but we may have a very different way of going about it. That is how the MX missile was started; it was a crazy idea to begin with. I am glad that it was defeated. I think the world now will be safer. That is my thought about it. At least it was defeated and the world did not break down.

As Members of the House listen to the debate I hope they realize the inequity to retired public servants. Let me say, for those people who have just tuned in and do not know what I am talking about, we are considering Bill C-133, the Government Bill to cap the pensions of retired public servants as an example for all of us who are presently in the work force, to try to bring everything down to the six and five level. Quite frankly it is hocus-pocus because the economic, draconian methods of the Government with interest rates, the slow-up of the economy and the depression we are in, with 1.5 million unemployed, are bringing everything down to six and five and even below that level. It is no reason or justification to try now to pass a Bill affecting the pensions of people who have paid into them on a contractual basis and have worked faithfully for the Government. Now they are being betrayed by the Government of Canada. It is a mockery.

In conclusion I want to say that if the Bill passes in its present form, every Canadian should wonder why the Prime Minister, three to four weeks ago, interestingly enough preached, very well and eloquently in many ways, on trust. Yet we have a Bill in the House of Commons tonight which betrays the trust of one of the most fundamental groups in Canada, namely, retired public servants who have given their service and expect a better deal than they are getting from their former employer.

Hon. J. Robert Howie (York-Sunbury): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to speak on Bill C-133. I am speaking in opposition to the Bill which limits indexing of Public Service pensions to six and five per cent. I thank Mr. Speaker for recognizing me and for giving me the opportunity to participate in this very important debate. I congratulate those of my colleagues who have already spoken, particularly the previous speaker, for their constructive and well-intended comments in the debate.

I am surprised the Bill was brought before the House because there has been such vehement and sustained opposition to it. Not only are my Party and the Party to my left determined to vote against it but, until the Government Whip tugged sharply on their reins, up to ten Liberal Members were also ready to help defeat the Bill and possibly their own Government.

This is another component of the six and five program; six and five Bills have been dangled before us over the past few months like a yo-yo. In fact, the entire program reminds me of a 99-cent novelty yo-yo—it is cheap, poorly constructed, and does not work very well; but it is gaudy and attracts a lot of attention when used in public.

This particular Bill is just as reprehensible as Bill C-131 because once again it puts pensioners, the sector of our society least able to give up buying power, on the front line of restraint. It has the added tinge of moral bankruptcy since it breaks the 1970 agreement between public servants and the Government, under which employees pay a percentage of their wages for protection of their pensions against inflation.

At the 1981 National Pension Conference, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said in his opening remarks that the unfairness of a pension without inflation protection, particularly when the savings pool to which workers have contributed may have been reaping inflationary interest premiums, is not tolerable in a nation which believes in social justice.

In June 1981 the then president of the treasury board said that the federal Government remained dedicated to the principle that Public Service pensions are to be protected from inflation. Since 1971 Public Service pensioners, including federal Public servants, members of the RCMP, the Armed Forces and parliamentary employees, have paid one-half of 1 per cent of their salaries to protect their pensions against inflation. Since 1977 they have paid 1 per cent. In each case their employer, the federal Government, has matched those contributions.

In 1974, Public Service pensions were fully indexed to the rate of the consumer price index for all pensioners, including those who retired before 1970 and thus had not paid in at all to the supplementary retirement benefits account. It was only at this point that the Government had to begin drawing from the Consolidated Revenue Fund to cover the indexing of those pensions with little or no equity in the supplementary retirement benefits account. Until 1974, the indexing account had been self-sustaining. The 1974 Treasury Board handbook entitled "Your Superannuation Plan" stated:

> In any year where there is an increase in the cost of living, pensions will be increased in an amount directly related to the increase in the consumer price index, without limit.

"Without limit" is the key phrase, echoed in the words of the President of the Treasury Board and the Prime Minister on the occasions I have mentioned, and on many others. Time and time again the President of the Treasury Board has been on record as expressing the concept that pension savings and employers' contributions to match those savings are deferred wages or earned income, part of the total benefits package. Now, because the Government is short of funds, it has decided to breach its obligations.

The security of senior citizens has always been one of the touchstones of the Government, one of the policies of which it could be proud. Part of what it meant to be a Liberal was to uphold this principle. It is no wonder, then, that the backbenchers opposite are in revolt as this principle goes down the drain in the name of restraint.

If this Bill is passed without amendment, 190,000 retired public servants, RCMP and military personnel will lose 5.5 per cent of the indexing to which they are entitled in 1983 under the established terms, and probably more than that in 1984, when indexing is to be limited to 5 per cent. The former contributor who earned about $16,000 on average in his or her last six years of employment and worked for 25 years in the public sector received $8,100 in pension annuities last year. He or she will lose $1,409 over the two years while six and five is in effect. Surviving spouses and dependants who received an average payment of $3,200 in 1981-82 will sacrifice $557 during the two-year restraint period, a sacrifice of which this Government should not be proud.

Therefore, the average recipient of a Public Service pension who received $6,900 last year will lose $1,200 in purchasing power over the next two years. This is quite a blow in itself, but the sacrifice does not end in 1984. These decreased pensions will form a lower base for any future indexation. Public sector pensioners will find their pensions and their standard of living are reduced forever. The Government points to the $1.06 billion paid out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund from 1974 to 1982 for indexation of Civil Service pensions alone and states that it cannot afford to increase future liabilities for indexing. However, there was a fat balance of $1,215,769,000 in the supplementary retirement benefits account at the end of the fiscal year, 1981-82, of which $880 million was credited to public servants.

The reason that the Government must draw from the Consolidated Revenue Fund is simply to satisfy one of its more puzzling accounting practices. Since January of 1974, supplementary benefits paid to a former contributor are charged to the supplementary retirement benefits account only until the accumulated total of such payments equals the aggregate of all the amounts credited to that person under the account. Indexing paid in excess of that aggregate amount is then charged to the Consolidated Revenue Fund. If the Government persists with this practice, the burden on the Consolidated Revenue Fund will still diminish as time goes on because future pensioners will have more and more equity in the supplementary retirement benefits account to pay for the indexing of their pensions.

The pension plan itself is not and has not been funded. There are two thoughts on this matter. The first approach would be to consider that the amount would be used by the Government to create wealth in the country, which would be reflected over time in increases in the general revenue of the nation. This, in turn, would enable the Government to meet pension obligations as they became due. The other approach, and one which I am inclined to prefer, would be to fund the pension plan by lending the money out in mortgages or other securities at current interest rates, allowing the interest to be compounded over a period of time in order to meet the obligations owing to pensioners as they became due. I feel that this latter approach would enable us to make the plan more accountable to pensioners, those paying into the pension accounts and the taxpayers.

Many pensioners point to the rate of interest which has been attributed to contributions over the years and make the claim that they have paid in far more than they will ever receive because of the inadequate interest rates applied to their contributions and matching contributions by their employer. With a fund in existence, bearing in mind that the fact that interest rates have always outstripped the consumer price index, it would be quite possible to adjust contributions to meet expectations with greater certainty and to remove the doubts and charges that are made from time to time. Clearly, a unilateral change in the rate of benefit imposed by the employer without consultation or agreement with the employee is a violation of trust and a violation of a contract which exists between the workers and the Government.

The breach of trust is possible in the present instance because the Government is not only the employer but also the trustee of the fund, which puts it in a conflict of interest position. It is this breach of trust which is unacceptable to me. I would urge the Government to reconsider its decision. I would also urge it, even at this late date, to commence the funding of pensions such as this by using a corporate trustee to ensure that the rights of all parties are protected and to ensure that the money will in fact exist to pay the pensions when they become due and to provide for the efficient operation of the program.

I think the Government should do everything it possibly can in both the public and private sectors to ensure that senior citizens who, in more difficult times than these, created for us one of the highest standards of living in the world, will be rewarded for their hard work and self-sacrifice with pension plans which will see that they enjoy a reasonable measure of happiness in their golden years, without the constant fear that their buying power will steadily erode and that next week and the week after they may have to get by with one less egg or one less orange.

I support the concept of indexed pensions and I believe that when people pay for an indexed pension, it should not be unilaterally taken from them.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, on October 28 the Government introduced Bill C-133, a Bill which, if passed, will have the effect of reducing the indexing of pensions paid to retired federal public sector workers to 6 per cent in 1983 and 5 per cent in 1984. If passed, Bill C-133 would roll back pension indexing to 6 per cent, effective January 1, 1983, in spite of the fact that under current legislation, public sector pensioners should receive 11.5 per cent in view of actual increases in the cost of living. The Bill sets the indexation limit to 5 per cent in 1983, regardless of what happens to inflation in the meantime or what price increases will be likely at that time.

Over the next two years, this legislation would rob the average public sector pensioner of $1,200, and thereby considerably lower the already minimal standard of living which many pensioners are experiencing in their retirement years. As my colleague, the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy), said last night, the average annual pension paid to some 90,000 former contributors is about $8,100 a year, and there are some 32,500 persons being paid about $3,200 in survivor benefits, on the average, which brings the over-all average pension being paid out to about $6,900. This is hardly an extravagant amount in 1982, yet these are the people who are being lectured on sacrifice by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and by, for instance, Ian Sinclair, the President of the CPR, who makes $556,000 a year. Things are not tough all over, Mr. Speaker.

Furthermore, the decreased indexation could create a lower base for all future indexation, and thereby set the structure for continuing losses in the future, when compared to what would be the case if this Bill had never been brought forward.

In addition to the unjust economic consequences of Bill C-133—because there are not just economic consequences of this Bill for public sector pensioners—there is also the moral question, which so many Members have dwelt upon, and quite rightly so, of the breach of trust which is involved in the Government's bringing this Bill forward in the first place.

Pensioners retired with a pension plan that they contributed to on the understanding that they would receive a fully indexed allowance upon retirement, and now they are faced with the Government unilaterally changing the rules, and in effect depriving them of their own income. There is no other way to describe this Bill.

This is a very important issue, this question of the breach of trust. In fact, the breach of trust which Bill C-133 involves is probably even more significant in the long run than the short-term economic consequences of the Bill, however undesirable they may be. The same is true, at the moral level, of Bill C-131, the Bill to reduce indexing of the Old Age Security payments which is a breach of the trust that many other Canadian pensioners had when they planned their retirement years on the basis that whatever private pension they might have, if they were lucky enough to have a private pension, would be rightly complemented by a universal and fully indexed Old Age Security pension.

The effect of Bill C-131 will be a significant erosion of universality in our public pension system, and will mean that our pension system as a whole will become even more of an income-tested system.

Canada's pension system is already excessively reliant on income-tested benefits. More than 50 per cent of the OAS recipients, for instance, are also receiving full or partial GIS benefits, and by substituting special GIS supplements for the OAS increases that are eliminated by Bill C-131, we are drawing more of Canada's elderly into the income range where part of their public pension benefits are income tested. This is a retreat from the victory won 31 years ago in 1951, the year I was born, when the means test was removed from the payment of Old Age Security as a result of the work done over the years by my esteemed colleague, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-North Centre (Mr. Knowles).

An Hon. Member: Hear, hear!

Mr. Blaikie: We in the NDP, and the CCF before us, believe that it is more desirable to provide public retirement benefits as a matter of right rather than on the basis of an income test. We are concerned that since 1964 OAS benefits have declined from 20 per cent of average wages and salaries to approximately 14 per cent in 1982. This, combined with the reported controversy in the Liberal Party over whether or not universal benefits like the OAS should be maintained makes us very anxious about the future. We will be even more vigilant in our defence of this aspect of our public pension system, as a result.

Bill C-131, an Act to reduce the indexing of Old Age Security pensions and Bill C-133, the Bill we are debating, an Act to reduce the indexing of Public Service pension, are both clearly unacceptable. They constitute an injustice against the pensioners of Canada and a double injustice against retired public servants. We in the NDP will continue speaking against these Bills in all stages, as well as Bill C-132 which reduces indexing for Family Allowances.

We believe that there is an urgent need for pension reform in this country, and we have waited long and not so patiently for it, because it is something we do not want to be patient about. We have waited long, nonetheless, for the Government's position paper on pension reform, and we are still waiting. We believe there is an urgent need for pension reform, for reforms which would guarantee that all Canadians over 65 have incomes over the poverty line; that all middle and low income Canadians have indexed retirement incomes that allow them to maintain their pre-retirement standard of living throughout their retired lives and pension reforms that would guarantee that income-tested benefit would form a smaller rather than a larger part of our pension system.

Bill C-133 and Bill C-131 move away instead of toward those goals, and set dangerous political and conceptual precedents. For this reason I hope that sufficient numbers of Members of Parliament will be moved to vote against these Bills. In this respect I would like to make a few comments on the position being taken by my Progressive Conservative colleagues to my right.

Last night a certain Progressive Conservative Member, and he is in the House tonight, became very upset when my colleague, the Member for Churchill commented on the fact that the Progressive Conservative caucus was playing both sides of the street on the Liberal six and five program. I want to return to this for a minute because I think it is crucial that the Canadian people know where each Party stands on the Liberal approach to our economic problems.

It is true that the Progressive Conservatives are opposing Bill C-131 and Bill C-133. I believe most of them are doing this out of political expendiency because they are afraid to face the legitimate wrath of old age pensioners and Public Service pensioners, and because they do not want to be seen to be in bed with the Liberals. They would prefer the lights to be out all the time, Mr. Speaker, as they were for a short moment today, so that their relationship with the Liberals would be less visible. Only a few of them genuinely disapprove of these measures, and they are well-known to the House. I congratulate them for that disapproval.

The fact of the matter is that the Conservative Party has supported the six and five program in principle since the beginning.

An Hon. Member: For people who are working, sure.

Mr. Blaikie: This last summer they voted overwhelmingly in favour of the initial and most all-encompassing of the six and five Bills, Bill C-124. Had they helped the NDP to oppose that particular Bill, instead of giving aid and comfort to the Liberals, we might not have ever been faced with Bill C-131 and Bill C-133.

An Hon. Member: Hear, hear!

Mr. Blaikie: So I repeat the charge that my Conservative colleagues are trying to have it both ways on this issue by supporting the program in general, but then pretending to oppose it in particular, when there is a subsequent Bill which is part of the over-all program.

I maintain that the Liberals have acted so confidently to reduce indexation of pensions and Family Allowances because they correctly judged that the Official Opposition, the Progressive Conservative Party of Canada, would offer only token resistance to such moves.

An Hon. Member: They made a deal with them.

Mr. Blaikie: Why? Why only token resistance? Because the six and five program is consistent with the general view of the Progressive Conservative Party about what needs to be done in order to produce renewed economic growth in Canada, and because the Conservative Party of Canada has a long tradition, broken only to an extent by John Diefenbaker, of having a negative rather than a positive attitude toward pensions and toward other universal programs like Family Allowance and Medicare. Indeed, when the Old Age Security payment first came into being in 1927, it was over the objections of the Conservative Party of Canada. Many Conservatives at that time seemed to think it would be vaguely immoral to do what that terrible radical, J. S. Woodsworth, was proposing, and have a means-tested pension of $20 per month for every Canadian over 70 years of age. To most of the Conservatives of that time, Mr. Speaker, that smacked of communism, the same kind of rhetoric that we hear so often from the benches to my right, even to this very day.

No group of people involved in politics in the last decade or so has done more to discredit the Public Service and universal social programs than the official spokespeople of the Progressive Conservative Party of Canada. The PCs have allowed Members of their Party, and I think of the Hon. Member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens) as an example, to go around the country denouncing the public sector, blaming spending on social programs for all our economic ills, and arguing against the indexation of pensions as something we cannot afford and should not do. Yet tonight they are full of praise and compassion for the retirement incomes of the people who are retired from the very kinds of jobs that they wanted to cut by 60,000 in August 1979, according to an announcement made then by the Member for York-Peel when he was president of the treasury board in the short-lived Progressive Conservative Government in 1979. This is the kind of inconsistency to which we have been treated by the PCs in this debate on Bill C-133.

Tonight the Conservatives are great defenders of universal old age pensions and Family Allowances, but it was the PC minister of national health and welfare, the Hon. Member for Rosedale (Mr. Crombie), who in 1979 clearly was interested, indeed fascinated, with the arguments being advanced by his right-wing colleagues that the time had come to ditch the universal programs. I remember only too well his hedging on the future of universal programs like the Family Allowance when I asked him a question in the House of Commons on that issue as social policy critic for my caucus in that Parliament of 1979.

The general point I am trying to make is that the six and five program, in so far as it is presented as part of an over-all economic strategy, is exactly what the Conservatives have been advocating for years as a way of accommodating the Canadian economy to the changes which are taking place in the international structure of capitalism. As we move into the era of the consolidation of the power of global corporations and out of the era of national corporations, and before that family corporations, we are going to have to decide how we are going to deal with the mobility of capital that is now characteristic of the economic context in which we live.

The Conservatives in their own way have already faced up to this issue and they found it very easy. Because they worship market forces as the ultimate arbiter of human needs and human destiny, they seem to have decided some time ago that the Canadian response to this new reality should be not to question this mobility of capital and the reality of internationalization of capital, but to shape our own country in such a way as to make ourselves acceptable to the profit aspirations of these global corporations.

Capitulation and abandonment of the well-being of Canada is the only option available to those who worship the idol of free enterprise. The Liberals, of course, worship only power. Seeing as they cannot be guaranteed hanging on to power if they act in the long-term interests of the country instead of the short-term interests of their own political fortunes, they have adopted the Conservative strategy, so naturally the Conservatives support them.

What is happening is that the formerly unchallenged industrial economy of the United States, of which we have been a branch plant thanks to Liberal policy over the last few decades, supported by the Progressive Conservative Party of Canada, is having to compete with advanced industrial bases in Europe and Japan, the Third World and even in Communist-bloc countries like China where the ideological purity of the multinationals is being compromised by the lure of endless cheap labour. The almighty dollar, after all, is really the only ideology that counts.

Global capital now flows to wherever the return is greatest, and returns will be greatest where wages are restrained and where taxes are low, generally due to the absence of social programs and the social and political equality and freedom which Canadians rightly feel that they should not have to sacrifice in order to be competitive in the modern world, yet that is exactly what they are being asked outright to do by the PC Party and duplicitously asked to do by the Liberal Party.

We in the NDP say the way out of the problems created by the global mobility of capital is not to accommodate ourselves, not to give up all of the things we have come to regard as important to the social and economic fabric of this country. We should devise a way of bringing our economy before the bar of the common good, bringing it under more Canadian control, and try to devise a strategy in which we could on one hand meet human needs and wants in this country, be competitive in the world economically, but not in the short-term have to give in to the demands of the international investment community that we curtail those things which have been important to the achievement of social justice in this country in order that they would continue to invest here.

That is exactly the kind of blackmail the Liberal Government has given into. That is what six and five is all about, and that is why the Conservatives support it. They believe the only way to get anywhere in this world is to capitulate to those market forces. We have long rejected the political and economic solutions based on capitulation to those forces, and we invite the Canadian people now, as we will in the next election, to join with us in trying to see our way out of that darkness instead of giving in to it.

Mr. Paul Dick (Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I want to intervene briefly in this debate. I want to set out and state clearly that when the Liberals introduced the six and five program, I supported it and still do. The reason I supported six and five was that it appeared that the Government was taking an initiative, that it was doing something and showing some leadership in trying to come to grips with the inflation which has been ruining this country for most of the 12 years the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has been in power.

However, once the cape was taken off the six and five program and we saw how they intended to implement it, it appeared that their implementation strategy was not one of showing leadership but one of following. I do not see how the Government can call itself a leader and say that it is giving leadership when in order to implement its six and five program it introduced the three Bills, C-131, C-132 and C-133.

In Bill C-131, which we discussed the other day, the Government is cutting back on the indexation of pensions to senior citizens of this country. At the same time, it is abandoning the principle of universality on senior citizens' pensions. Those who have worked 40 or 50 years are being asked to take the lead, carry the burden and show leadership in the six and five program. These people have done their bit. They have given to this country. They have turned it into what it is today. They should not be asked to head the fight once more.

The second Bill, C-132, with which the Government is implementing its six and five program, cuts back on the indexing of the baby bonus or Family Allowance, and the mothers of young children—and not all of them are wealthy—are being asked to lead the fight of six and five. They first called upon the senior citizens, then they called upon the mothers and children of this country as the next line. Now they have introduced Bill C-133, the Bill we are dealing with today, and have asked a third group if they would be the ones to lead the fight and support the six and five program so inflation could be handled, and that group is the public servants.

I would like to say categorically that I have not seen, and I do not believe there have been, any actuarial studies done to prove that indexed pensions are affordable and that we can have them. And I want to explain right now that I am skeptical that we can afford fully indexed pensions in this country. But, having said that, I must point out that the Government legislated in 1974 that it was going to index the Public Service pensions fully, and when it makes a promise, it should keep the promise. After those people, from 1974 on, have planned their retirement, their way of living, or the date of their retirement, depending on a fully indexed pension, they find they have been deceived by this Government. The Government is not showing leadership by attacking senior citizens or by denying mothers and their children. The Government has not shown leadership in taking away what it had already promised. In fact, I would go as far as to say that if the Government breaks a promise, breaks a contract which it imposed by legislation, if the Government breaks faith with those people, then the Government deserves no trust whatsoever. We heard the Prime Minister begging for trust three nights in a row earlier this year, but no trust is deserved by this Liberal Government because they have broken a contract, they have broken their promise.

Perhaps public servants from this day forward should not have their pensions indexed. That is, perhaps, open for debate. But the Government would not be breaking a promise if it so changed the rules. The fact is, it cannot go back, as it has in Bill C-133, and renege on a promise already made.

There are some things which the Government could do if it wanted to show leadership in the six and five program, which I do want to support, but I certainly cannot support it in the way it is shown, by implementation of Bills C-131, C-132 and C-133. For example, if the Government had held its spending this year down to 6 per cent rather than increasing it by 22 per cent, I would have supported that. If the Government promises to keep its spending increases down to 5 per cent next year, I will support that. That would show some leadership, if the Government would do it. Maybe the Government would like to keep down the growth of our national debt to six and five per cent in the next two years, but I do not think there is any way it will do it, not the way it throws money around. After all, it sends civil servants to Paris for $200,000 a year. The Prime Minister takes a holiday across the country with his children at our expense, the taxpayers' expense.

An Hon. Member: You're cheap. Come on!

Mr. Dick: That may be cheap. I wish he would go and have all the holidays he wants, young man, but not at my expense. He is a millionaire. Let him pay his own way, but do not make the taxpayers of this country pay for it. That is being cheap. The Prime Minister is a cheap man, and that is being cheap.

So I ask the Government to show some leadership by cutting its spending increases so they would only go up by 6 per cent and 5 per cent rather than calling upon the old age pensioners, the civil servants to whom they promised a different deal, and the mothers and children of this country with respect to the baby bonus. Only then will the Government be showing some leadership.

Having said that, Mr. Speaker, I can only say I will not support this Bill. I would be surprised if anyone with any sense of decency could support a Government breaking a contract, when the Government itself fails to show any leadership.

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, since becoming a Member of Parliament some three and a half years ago, I cannot recall any labour-related Bill that is more odious than the one now before the House of Commons for debate. Bill C-133, an Act to amend the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act, is not only misguided, it is immoral in every sense of the word. Seldom have we seen, even from this Government, such a blatant assault upon long established principles of fair play in management/labour relations. In this case, the Government is proposing to change unilaterally and retroactively pension arrangements for its employees, which it agreed to almost a decade ago and on which, since then, thousands of Canadians have planned their retirement. In one fell swoop, Mr. Speaker, those arrangements are to be changed in a way which will jeopardize the annual income of a sizeable proportion of individual Canadian pensioners, while effectively robbing a fund held in trust for them collectively.

In a nutshell, Bill C-133 seeks to undermine the indexing of the pensions of public employees, which are currently fully tied to the cost of living, by limiting increases to 6 per cent throughout 1983 and to 5 per cent in 1984, regardless of the inflation rate in those two years. Modifications to the legislation announced by the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray) yesterday may well change the relevant percentages to 6.5 per cent and 5.5 per cent respectively, but the adverse impact on pensioners remains largely the same. Retired civil servants, Armed Forces personnel, the RCMP and their survivors, among others, would be affected. The immediate impact, Mr. Speaker, would be to slash the real purchasing power of their pensions, thereby decreasing the standard of living of people who in many cases already live perilously close to the poverty line.

Other Hon. Members participating in this debate have detailed how the federal Public Service pension system works by demonstrating the injustice of the substantial changes contemplated by Bill C-133. Suffice it to say, for my part, the pensions are paid out of what could be described as a fund, which in effect is two funds. The main fund is the Public Service superannuation account. The second is the supplementary retirement benefits account. Each is covered by an Act of Parliament and attendant regulations and is backed by the resources of Canada itself. Every public employee contributes 6.5 per cent of his or her wages to the first account from which the basic pension is paid upon retirement. The individual also contributes 1 per cent of salary to the second fund which is set up to protect the purchasing power of the pension. That is a total of 7.5 per cent of salary thus contributed for a fully indexed pension. Since 1973, benefits in a given year have been hitched to the annual consumer price index of the previous year. Last year, for example, consumer prices rose 12.5 per cent. Therefore, pension benefits for 1982, the following year, increased correspondingly. By the same token, with inflation running at about 10.8 per cent in 1982, benefits for 1983 would ordinarily be hiked by that percentage. Bill C-133, however, proposes to limit any increase to 6 per cent.

The truth is that neither account is technically a fund in the sense that money is kept intact in a bank account, accumulating interest on a compound basis. But the money is, nonetheless, accounted for like a fund. Certainly, if all the money not paid out in pensions were kept in a bona fide fund to gather interest, instead of being used by the Government for its purposes, the two accounts taken together would generate enough income to pay for the full indexing of Public Service pensions. Indeed, the main account, notwithstanding the remarks of the President of the Treasury Board yesterday in his speech, now stands at something like $15 billion, equivalent to over $1.5 billion in interest annually. This is far more than enough to offset the $300 million by which the other account falls short each year in meeting the cost of indexing.

Last month, November, for example, the average annual pension paid to some 90,000 former contributors was about $8,100 annually. In addition, 32,500 individuals were paid an average of $3,200 in survivor benefits. The average annual pension paid as of November, 1982, was thus $6,900 per person, for a total annual cost of $746 million, or in that ballpark. In that context, then, pensioners have paid for and are continuing to pay for benefits which Bill C-133 now proposes to withdraw in part. While the Government proposes to limit pension increases over the next two years to 6 per cent and 5 per cent, it does not intend to reduce the required contribution to the Pension Plan. So, current contributors will be paying more for less.

Sir, I sincerely hope the Government's six and five program, of which Bill C-133 is a part, will bring down inflation as is intended. On the whole, we on this side of the House support the principles and general objectives of the program. Any type of economic program from this Government is welcome after so long a period of inaction. But Bill C-133 is as immoral as it is self-defeating. It is one thing to impose the Government's six and five restraint program on, say, wages or prices in the public sector; it is an entirely different matter, however, to impose the same program retroactively and unilaterally on pensions to which the beneficiaries themselves contributed along with their employer. The rest of the six and five program, including partial indexing of Public Service wages, Family Allowances and the tax system itself, relates to Government budgetary revenue and expenditure accounts. The Government has therefore both the legal authority and the moral right to make changes in those areas, although I hasten to add that I personally found Bill C-124 repugnant and I went on public record as saying so.

By contrast, the imposition of limits on public employees' pensions is an altogether different matter. Affected is not the Government's fiscal position but, rather, a trust or pension account held by the Government for the benefit of a particular group of citizens. The indexing of Public Service pensions was not a gift by the federal Government to its employees, nor was it to be bartered from time to time in contract negotiations between the Government and the public sector unions. Neither was it to be altered at the whim of either side, depending on the mood or the fashion or the fad of the day. Public Service employees negotiated their pension benefits with their employer, the Government of Canada, with the full understanding by both parties—and I emphasize both parties—that any agreement was inviolable. For their part, the public employees have always viewed their pension agreement as a form of deferred remuneration for services rendered, or, expressed differently, as part of their pay package or compensation.

The public record, including Hansard reports of the relevant debate at the time, makes it clear that successive federal Governments have consistently taken the same position. Yet, boxed-in by a budgetary crisis of its own making, the present Government sees the public employees pension fund as an easy way out. It matters not to this Government that it is breaking faith with its employees in the process. The Government has long ago, Mr. Speaker, ceased to care about such principles as trust or due process or even old-fashioned honesty. As a columnist put it in a recent article in MacLean's magazine, this Government has been in power so long that it has begun to believe that whatever it does it has a right to do simply because of the fact that it has done it. He went on to say:

> Because (the Liberal Party of Canada) does not steal money, does not stash graft away in unnumbered Swiss bank accounts, does not torture and does not openly bribe, it assumes that it is not corrupt. Corrupt in the Liberal mind applies only to money. But the real corruption is in the Liberal mind. The party is morally bankrupt.

Nowhere is that statement more true, Mr. Speaker, than in the Government's approach to its retired employees. I recommend, Sir, that every Member of this House take the time to read the excellent speech delivered in the House by the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) on July 20, 1982, in debate on the Government's Supplementary Borrowing Authority. As he rightly pointed out, even at the height of the Great Depression in the 1930s, the R. B. Bennett government of the day, while reducing salaries of public servants by 10 per cent and withholding all annual increases, viewed as inviolate the existing pension arrangements for retired public employees. One wonders what the current Government considers inviolable, apart from its own divine right to cling to office at any cost to the Canadian public. If the Government will violate the rights and welfare of pensioners, Mr. Speaker, it is capable of violating anything.

The Government is doing much more than just denying a large group of Canadians full receipt of a benefit which they have, in the words of one maritimer, "bought and paid for". The Government is laying the groundwork for real economic hardship for many of these people.

I said a moment ago that the average full pension is only about $8,100 annually. Of course, and I would be the first to concede this, many recipients receive the basic old age pension as well, and some may have other income. But, given today's skyrocketing inflation, the total that most of them receive from all sources combined is no fortune, I assure you. In fact, by the definition of the Canadian Senate in its celebrated report on the subject of poverty, many retired public employees are certifiably poor. The Senate has stated that a two-person family earning less than $11,030 in 1980 lived in abject poverty. In my own province of Prince Edward Island there are 662 service annuitants and 234 others receiving survivor benefits. Their average gross employment pension is a mere $6,028.32 a year, or $502.36 a month. Like their counterparts in every other province, including the great province of Ontario and specifically the National Capital region,they now face the prospect of seeing their already limited income reduced each year in real dollar terms as inflation takes its cruel toll.

I realize that public employees, active or retired, are not everybody's favourite group of people. Opinion polls have demonstrated that civil servants are currently out of favour with the public. Highly publicized strikes in certain sectors—notably the post office—have left a bitter taste. It does not matter that most labour disputes in the public sector are settled amicably and without strikes; the image of public employees is at an all-time low. True to form, the Government thinks it can reverse its plummeting fortunes coast to coast by flexing its muscles at the expense of public servants. Dr. Gallup and Mr. Goldfarb have told the Government that those people are unpopular. Consequently, the Government has decided to do battle with them in order to court public favour.

That is exactly what Bill C-133 is all about. It is not law so much as a public relations job. After spending the country into bankruptcy over the last 14 years, the Government has suddenly chosen to make restraint the rallying cry in its fight to win back public support. People can see behind the facade of this feigned conversion. They are not easily duped. They can see the facade and duplicity for what they are. They recognize instinctively the essential unfairness of legislation like Bill C-133.

My riding of Hillsborough, which is in the capital city area of Prince Edward Island, contains many federal public employees, as well as provincial Government civil servants. I know a lot of them personally and others at least as acquaintances. My work as a Member of Parliament requires me to work hand in hand with these people and with their counterparts elsewhere in the Atlantic region, especially in regional head offices, and in Ottawa. My experience is that public employees are the most maligned group in society, no doubt in part because their own public relations leave a lot to be desired. They are commonly perceived as underworked, overpaid, and too plentiful for all the good they do. But the truth is, we in Canada have the best Public Service in the world, with the possible exception of Britain, from which ours has inherited much of its tradition of dedication and professionalism.

The extent to which the public takes the Public Service for granted is, in reality and paradoxically, a measure of how efficiently our public employees do their job—unobtrusively yet competently. By the same token, only when they are on strike do we sometimes realize how dependent we are on the services these people provide. Proportionately, Government harbours as many diligent and competent and qualified employees as can be found in any field in the country. I defy anyone to demonstrate otherwise.

Similarly, the machine-like efficiency typically associated with employees in large corporations in the private sector is no less out of whack with reality than the less favourable public image of public servants. I am convinced that just as the public wrongly perceives public servants as slackers, as underworked and overpaid and too plentiful, so also the public's perception of employees in the private sector, for different reasons, is wrong. I do not have the time on this occasion to delve into the issue, except to invite people who think otherwise to examine some of the literature in political science, in management studies and in sociology. Read the studies on North American corporate management that seriously throw into question the common assumption that private enterprise has a patent on competence. Some of the business giants most familiar to North Americans are, in fact, riddled with incompetents, from the lowest echelons to the million dollar-a-year chief executive officers. The Chrysler Corporation is a case in point.

By requiring public employees, including the retired, to bear the load of its restraint program, instead of including them in an over-all wage and price strategy, which would make more sense, the Government is both reflecting and contributing to the conventional myth that those people are responsible for the double digit inflation in the country. Nothing could be farther from the truth. The blame rests squarely with the political mismanagers in the federal Cabinet, especially the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), who has been calling the shots for the past 14 years. At the heart of the inflation problem, in particular, has been the Government's 14-year spending spree that has seen Government expenditures soar an incredible 630 per cent since the Prime Minister took office in 1968. The deficit of the federal Government this year is some $12 billion more than the total budget of the Government in the Prime Minister's first year in office.

The share of the total public debt of the country borne by each Canadian taxpayer, now amounts to $14,100, quite apart from their personal, individual debts. This year alone, the cost of servicing the public debt will be $700 for every man, woman and child in the country. Is it any wonder that the Government is now having to borrow money just to pay the interest on previous borrowings? Mr. Speaker, if you or I or any other Canadian conducted our personal finances the way the Government runs the country as a matter of course, we would have long since been forced into personal bankruptcy, or jail, or both.

Having increased its total spending this past year by some 20 per cent, having racked up a deficit of $24 billion in the current year alone—100 per cent higher than forecast as recently as seven months earlier—the Government now expects pensioners to settle for annual increases of no more than 6 and 5 per cent in the benefits which they themselves made possible through deductions in their paycheques when in the active work force.

A pension without built in protection against inflation is a prescription for poverty. Actuarial experts—and I do not pretend to be one—have made it abundantly clear that the average male retiring with a fixed income at age 65, with inflation raging at its current rate of 10 per cent per year, will have his real pension benefit slashed to one-quarter of its original value by the time he dies. A fully indexed pension is not a bonanza. It is not like winning the Irish sweepstakes. It is not like a Liberal appointment to the Senate. It is simply an assurance that a pensioner, struggling to make ends meet, will be able to purchase something close to the same basket of goods, through his or her retirement years. Is that too much to ask for someone who has served the country well over a long career? Surely a country as great, as wealthy and as inherently bountiful in its resources as Canada can do no less for its pensioners.

The concept of indexing has been allowed to become virtually a four letter word, especially when applied to public sector wages and pensions. The same thing is true with Family Allowances and other benefits which a civilized society should take for granted. Yet the very people who most vocally condemn the concept of indexing can and do in fact protect themselves in a similar, very analagous way against inflation. Business and professional people, for example, do so through price, rate or fee increases. Employees, whether unionized or not, seek and usually gain wage increases which take inflation into account. But now the Government expects pensioners to accept something dangerously close to a freeze in their incomes at a time when inflation continues to cut in half the real buying power of the dollar every five years.

In my Province of Prince Edward Island, the price of home heating oil soared from 74.2 cents a gallon in 1979 when the Conservative Government was in office to $1.47 a gallon today. In my Province the price of electricity is the highest in the country. In the average household on P.E.I., it has gone from $33.84 a month to $53.76 a month, compared with only $12.15 a month in Calgary, in the same three-year period. Gasoline has leaped from $1.26 a gallon to $2.40 a gallon. Increases in prices of even locally-produced foodstuffs in the Province of Prince Edward Island—from eggs to fish to potatoes to fresh milk—have been stratospheric.

If current pensions are allowed to shrink in real value with each passing year, how are the people on Prince Edward Island, and other people across the country, to cope? Even the most optimistic independent analysts do not expect inflation to abate in the next two years to anything like the Pollyanna levels forecast by the Government.

The irony is that in a misguided effort to free up money for new job-creation programs, a commendable goal but misguided in execution, the Government may well be making the employment problem worse by its six and five program. Some retirees faced with deteriorating pensions are being forced back into the labour market merely to make ends meet. In the process, job opportunities which would otherwise go to younger and less experienced Canadians are being lost to them. This is why I say that, in the final analysis, the Government's six and five program is self-defeating and misguided.

Bill C-133, if passed, will rob the average retired public employee of $1,200 over the next two years, plunging many of them into real poverty. Some 12 Government Members of Parliament stated publicly that they intended to oppose the legislation. I hope that they will not view the miserly, stingy modifications to the Bill announced by the President of the Treasury Board on Tuesday as sufficient cause to reverse their position. I admire the courage which they have shown to date in opposing their own Government on the question. It is uncharacteristically courageous of them. Public sector employees and retirees in my riding, and in numerous other ridings in which there are sizeable Public Service populations, will watch anxiously as those Members of Parliament vote on every stage of the Bill. For my part I intend to join my Progressive Conservative colleagues in opposing this offensive, invidious legislation.

I urge other Hon. Members to do likewise. If we in the House of Commons, and Senators, all parliamentarians, will not fight for the rights of pensioners, who look to Parliament as their only line of defence against a callous and short-sighted Government, whose cause are we prepared to champion?

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to participate in the debate this evening on Bill C-133. Basically I should like to speak on five short topics in relation to this Bill. My first point is to state that there is a general feeling that this particular piece of legislation on the part of the Government constitutes an outright theft, something along the lines of a lawyer dipping into trust funds held for the benefit of his clients.

My second point concerns the philosophy of the six and five program which the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray) indicated was the underpinning and the rationale for this particular legislation.

My third point is perhaps to analyse some of the arguments put forward by the Liberal Government as a justification for the entire six and five program which led to the Bill before us and the series of Bills which have been before the House recently.

The fourth item with which I would like to deal concerns what I feel is the incredible position of the Conservative Party in doing an enormous sleight of hand trick in this House. The Tories back the six and five legislation. They defeat amendments which would exclude persons from the six and five program, and then the Tories turn around and harp continuously tonight on this position, in opposition to this Bill.

If Hon. Members of the Conservative Party who spoke tonight had in fact taken the 40 minutes to which they were entitled, the implementation of this Bill would have been delayed and certainly more Government Members would have had time to wrestle with their consciences and vote against the legislation.

The fifth point, with which I would like to deal very briefly, is what we in the NDP believe should be done. In addition to defeating this particular Bill the pension question is a very vital one, and this is a pension Bill before us this evening.

It was fairly interesting that, when the Bill was introduced by the President of the Treasury Board on December 6, he made a number of statements to justify the particular legislation. He said that the purpose of the six and five program was to show federal leadership. I would question the kind of leadership that Government is attempting to impose or show. The Government certainly wants economic recovery to come on the backs of working people. The Government has literally removed a right which we believe is a right in a free society—the right to bargain collectively for wages and working conditions. With a stroke of the pen the Government immediately dissolved this right of Public Servants. Further, the Government believes that the six and five program should be enforced on the backs of low and middle income families through the imposition of the capping of indexing of Family Allowances.

I have had constituents come forward lately to talk about soup kitchens. Soup kitchens are becoming a necessity in my riding. Some people regularly use soup kitchens as a source of nutrition. With the very bleak prospects in the forest industry and the economy on the West Coast of Canada, things such as soup kitchens are becoming a hard reality. At one point it was said that these soup kitchens should be more readily available. Another individual, a school teacher, pointed out that perhaps soup kitchens should be opened in the schools because children were showing up in his classroom who were not properly nourished or, for that matter, not properly clothed. This is the kind of attack the Government wants to execute against lower income families in this series of Bills.

The Bill before us attacks retired civil servants living on a pension income. It attacks the basic underpinning or the philosophy of most Canadians who believe that when one retires, one should retire with a decent pension income, and that that pension income should be protected from the ravages of inflation by an adequate indexing program. The President of the Treasury Board said that the federal Government wants to show leadership but it is doing it by using, as examples, people in our society who can least afford to be exposed to the kind of cutbacks and very negative, regressive action the Government has proposed. The President of the Treasury Board made a further statement and said that this is just one of the economic measures contained in the June budget, that the government wants to use this particular program against people who have security and jobs and that it feels that by dissolving their bargaining rights, by capping their salaries and refusing them the right to bargain effectively, this will be an economic measure which will lead to recovery in the economy. I would suggest that this is an incredible stunt and that the imposition of the six and five program on the salaries of public servants, on families through Family Allowances, and on pensioners has nothing to do with economic recovery. It will not put one logger back to work in British Columbia. It will not put one of the thousands and thousands of people laid off by MacMillan Bloedel back to work, and it will not put workers back to work in the shipyards of Canada. Only positive government action in our forestry industry and in our manufacturing and shipbuilding sectors will ever put people back to work or turn the economy around. Mark my words, Mr. Speaker. There has not been one positive act by the Liberal Government since the inception of the Thirty-second Parliament which would do anything toward putting the economy on the road to recovery.

Certainly, the question at hand concerns the six and five program. If it has nothing to do with recovery, what is its purpose? The purpose is simply to create a facade of action which, in reality, will create division in our society. The Liberal Party and the Liberal Government are held in such disfavour in this country that I do not think that after February 18, 1985, we will be worried about Liberals for a long time to come. However, in the impending two years, they have a serious problem, as do the people of Canada.

The Government was quick to perceive that the imposition of the six and five program would certainly turn the attention of many people away from the inadequacies of the Government and its lack of sound economic policies, and would direct attention toward an old kicking post, the Public Service. The Public Service has been a public kicking post for too long, and one for both Parties Liberal and Conservative.

Therefore, we essentially have a situation in which the Liberal Government, strictly for the purpose of political gain and not for economic recovery, decided to impose a six and five solution. Management is now fighting labour, and people in Canada who are laid off are fighting with the public servants. The Government has essentially created the same kind of rift in our economy as it created when it imposed the wage and price controls in 1975 or, I should say, the wage controls. It has nothing to do with economic recovery, but it has everything to do with political deception and an attempt to increase its own position from the one of very low esteem in which it is currently held in the public opinion polls. Mark my words again, Mr. Speaker, that should the six and five program lead to management and labour unrest, it will certainly lead to a reduction in productivity and further spiralling down of the Canadian economy. This could turn out, in fact, to be some of the most destructive legislation produced by this Parliament since 1975.

Mr. Kristiansen: Cut off Tiny Tim's crutches next.

Mr. Skelly: It is a very serious situation, but we must try to remember that this particular legislation is probably not the direct fault of the President of the Treasury Board. I think that in some former incarnation he actually had some very interesting views on the economy, before he was muzzled and before he did not resign his seat for certain commitments he made while in Opposition. Today, he is out justifying the six and five legislation of a predecessor to his position. It shows the intent and the determination of the Government to impose harsh conditions upon people in our economy who are least able to afford it, pensioners who have retired from the Civil Service, those who are depending on Old Age Security, and certainly those receiving Family Allowances.

I think that most Members of Parliament, most civil servants and most people in the economy today know that the imposition of the six and five solution, the removal of funds desperately needed by pensioners, is something which will certainly be dealt with in the next election. It will be an election issue. It is interesting to consider what the alternatives for the voters in that next election will be. When employed and retired civil servants come to vote in the next federal election there will certainly be a question in their minds. Will they support the Liberal Party and the Liberal Government which removed their right to bargain? Will they support that Government which removed the indexing on their pensions, on Old Age Security and on Family Allowances, or will they vote for the Official Opposition? It is a very curious situation. The decisions must be made by 1985, but a majority Government, whether it has been Liberal or Conservative in the past, has not served the interests of the majority of Canadians, least of all Civil Servants. What people are facing right now is a disastrous Government policy, but I am certain that they must very closely consider what the Official Opposition has done.

Mr. Lewis: Oh, you have been doing well until now, so do not spoil it.

Mr. Skelly: I notice that the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) who led off the debate, made a great fuss over the entire issue. I listened with great interest to his speech on this particular topic. He stood, full of sound and fury, blaming the Liberals for this Bill which would harm retired civil servants. He blamed the Government for the six and five legislation and its negative impact on families depending on Family Allowance. He went on and on, blaming Liberals and everyone he could find, but he never stated for the record what the Conservative Party would do. Not one time have the Conservatives put forward a constructive alternative to the very destructive programs of the Liberal Party.

Mr. Lewis: Just wait.

Mr. Skelly: It is funny to hear the people to my right hollering, "Just wait, just wait". It is interesting to find that when it came to the six and five program, they supported its philosophy very clearly. The Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton and other Hon. Members in the Official Opposition in the House tonight supported the six and five program. They knew full well what they were doing when they supported it. As a matter of fact, they called for speedy delivery of the rest of the legislation to implement that program. They wanted to get the legislation before the House so they could vote on it and get it in place, and that is part of the public record.

It is an incredible act of hypocrisy for Hon. Members of that party to stand up in the House tonight and say, as they are saying, allegedly in support of the Public Service of Canada, the retired members of the Civil Service and families who are having their indexing cut on their Family Allowances. It was absolutely astounding to hear those same people demanding that this legislation be brought before the House so they could deal with it quickly. Tonight they are speaking in short ten minute or 20 minute jabs to deal with it quickly. However, if they were to use the full time allocated to them to make their points, then there would be more Government Members who would consider opposing the legislation.

When we voted on the original legislation to implement the six and five program, Bill C-124, the Conservatives voted with the Liberals time after time. As a matter of fact, they voted against an amendment put forward by our Party which would exclude this six and five legislation from applying to the pensions of retired civil servants. The Conservatives voted against that amendment. They demanded that this series of Bills be brought forward quickly so they could deal with it expeditiously. What we have tonight, I guess, is the full circle, where the Conservatives are trying to tell the pensioners of Canada that they are supporting them, when in fact their actions very clearly eroded the position of those pensioners. The Conservative position was recorded in vote 245 when 26 NDP Members supported the protecting of pensions and excluding them from the six and five legislation, and the Liberals and Conservatives together voted against that motion.

It is going to be an interesting act of hypocrisy when the Tories come forward and vote as they say they are going to, against this legislation. I will bet money that there are not enough Conservatives in this House when this vote comes to defeat the Liberals, even if 12 Liberal Members vote against this Bill. The Assistant Conservative House Leader is giggling at that prospect.

Mr. Lewis: At that idiot.

Mr. Skelly: But I recall that on numerous other occasions they have failed to show up to vote when there has been an opportunity to defeat the Government. On August 3, for example 41 Conservative Members were absent from the House of Commons; 27 Liberals were absent and five voted against their Party. That is a very clear example of the Conservatives lack of—I would say—integrity on this particular issue, that they had a very clear opportunity to defeat the Government, and yet failed to show up to vote.

That is not the only opportunity that the Conservatives had to defeat the Government. On December 2 the same thing occurred; and on December 3. As astounding as it seems, when we deal with this legislation there will not be enough Conservatives in this House to defeat a Liberal Government which does not have enough Members in this House to carry that legislation.

So the incredible hypocrisy of the Conservative Party on this and many other issues in this Parliament is an extremely serious issue.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Skelly: It is a problem that we cannot obtain—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member for Comox-Powell River has the floor.

Mr. Lewis: He should do something constructive with it.

Mr. Skelly: I wish to thank the Assistant House Leader of the Conservatives for his advice. I am going to do something constructive with it namely, to elaborate on the hypocrisy of the Conservative Party.

One of the big lies that the Tories have developed in Canada has been the theory that we in the NDP prop up that mess over there, that Liberal Government. Listen to them ranting and raving; but, travelling the country, the Leader of their Party suggests that it is us, who keep the Liberals in power, when in fact since the commencement of the Thirty-second Parliament, in 1980, on 69 occasions the Conservative Party voted with the Liberals on critical issues in this House of Commons, on amendments and procedures to protect consumers in the banking industry in this country. The Tories aided the Liberals to promote the give-aways and tax grants to the oil companies. On these kinds of issues, the Conservatives and the Liberals are locked together.

An Hon. Member: And on six and five.

Mr. Skelly: And on six and five, 13 times, the Liberals and Tories voted together, so we know where this Conservative Party is coming from. They are very upset this evening because it has been opened up to the light of day where these people in the Conservative Party are.

We know what kind of Government we have across the floor. We know ultimately what is going to happen to them by February 18, 1985, but it is time to talk about the electoral choices that people will have to make. One of the most serious mistakes that could be made in this country is on the six and five legislation, and the Bill before us tonight. The electorate has to make some judgment on what the Official Opposition has put on the record in relation to this Bill? According to the Tories it is everybody's fault. It is the Liberals' fault, but we have not had one constructive alternative from the Official Opposition, Mr. Speaker.

The remarks made by the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton are interesting. I must admit that within that particular caucus he is one of the real gentlemen, and I would suggest that he is probably constrained by the more exuberant right wing Members of that caucus who wish to drive the hammer down on the middle and lower income wage earners in this country. It is interesting, if we pursue the same theme, that they have refused to put forward a policy in this House of Commons, an alternative policy, on any of the legislation before us, except to support six and five. The Tory position since February, 1980, in this House has been summed up by the former Conservative finance Minister when he said, coming out of the Budget speech, "Well, the Liberals are a Government arift, and the Government has no answers". When asked what he would do, he said "If we told you what we would do, the people would never elect us". Ultimately, Mr. Speaker, that is the situation here.

If the Conservative Party told the people of Canada what they were prepared to do, they would never be elected and, ultimately, Mr. Speaker, they do not want to move another embassy to Jerusalem; they do not want to offer to destroy another Petro-Canada; they do not want to offer to get rid of 60,000 civil servants over a three year period, and that is exactly where they are today. The Tory Party is a bad alternative.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Member for Moose Jaw rises on a point of order.

Mr. Neil: Mr. Speaker, I wonder what the relevancy of this is. The comments being made by the Hon. Member have nothing whatsoever to do with the debate.

Miss Jewett: It is beginning to hurt. They do not like the truth.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member's point is well taken. Would the Member for Comox-Powell River please take note.

Mr. Skelly: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The behaviour of the Official Opposition must be judged in the context of their full behaviour in the thirty-second Parliament, since 1980, to show that their performance tonight on this particular Bill is consistent over time. The electorate, if they place their trust in the Conservative Party to relieve them from the hardship and the dismal record of the Government opposite, then unfortunately they will be looking at five hard years ahead.

That brings us forward into the question of where we should be on this particular issue. It is interesting that clearly the Liberal Party, since the inception of this particular Parliament, has refused to address the needs of pensioners. The miserable amount of money that was put forward to boost the base rate of those pensioners in 1980 was extremely inadequate. The other interesting situation is that the Conservative Party has never put forward an alternative for pensioners.

Mr. Epp: And you do not have one.

Mr. Skelly: There is no doubt that our Party has placed firmly on the record a policy on pensions. It is a right, not a privilege, for every citizen in Canada to have a fair pension; every senior citizen who retires has a right to an income above the poverty line. They have a right to expect fair retirement income. It is basically a question of, as the gentleman opposite said, fair play in our society.

I notice, Mr. Speaker, that my time has not expired and yet it is ten o'clock, so with your permission I will take my remaining time when the debate resumes, and call it ten o'clock.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

TRADE—UNITED STATES SUBSIDIZATION OF WHEAT PRODUCTS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, on December 2 I put the following question to the Acting Prime Minister:

> Last month the United States announced a Blended Credit Program, which is a new export program for subsidizing the exportation of wheat from that country. It is worth about $1.5 billion over the next three years, and is in contradiction to the position which the U.S. took at GATT. Has the Government or the Prime Minister petitioned the United States asking them to withdraw that very destructive program? If they have, and the answer is no,, can he assure us there will be a similar program for Canadian farmers so we do not lose our world markets?

I asked that question because I believe the American program that was announced a few days ago could be potentially very destructive for the export of Canadian grain around the world. The reason is that the program is worth $1.5 billion, to be spent over three years. They have announced that during the first year, 1983, they want to spend around $500 million and they hope that expenditure will increase the sale of grain in the United States by some $1 billion.

What will that do? First, I maintain that it may take away a number of markets from Canadians. Some of the countries the Americans will be subsidizing with regard to credit and interest rates are customers of Canadian grain. Indeed, some may be major customers. When a country is looking at a grain contract worth millions of dollars and the United States announces it will subsidize the interest rate by 2, 3 or 4 per cent, if Canada cannot afford to subsidize the interest rate, it is only natural and normal that that country will look to the United States. That could mean the loss of thousands of jobs in this country.

The second thing that concerns me is that if the Americans begin to subsidize the export of grain, the price of grain, particularly wheat which is already depressed, may drop even lower. Even before this program was announced, the projection for 1983 was that the price of wheat would fall by about 5 per cent. With this program, and because of a grain surplus in the United States, it is very possible that the price will fall even more than the dismal forecast for 1983.

This is a very important issue to Western Canada because agriculture is so important to the western Canadian economy. It is a very important issue to Canada because farming and agriculture is still number one. It is a basic industry. What the farmer wants is fairness. He does not want any special status or deal. Farmers expect their Government to go to the United States and say to President Reagan that the program he has introduced is unfair, dangerous and protectionist. Also, it could start a massive trade war. We had trade wars in the thirties and we could have another one. The people who will get hurt will be the farmers of Canada.

I would hope today, five days after raising the question on Thursday, that the Government has made official representation to United States officials asking that they cancel this very destructive and dangerous program which they commenced in their country.

Most people do not realize the importance of agriculture. Last year, for example, food trade had a net surplus for our country of $3.2 billion. There was $9.5 billion worth of food exports or expected exports for 1982. Export sales accounted for about 50 per cent of farm income. That is how important and vital this program is to Canadian farmers.

I was surprised to see the United States announce the program because at the recent GATT meeting in Geneva, it took a very strong position against the growing protectionism of subsidies in the European Common Market, against the closed market of the Japanese and many other such practices around the world. When U.S. representatives came back from Geneva, they announced a similar program of their own. I want to refer to what Agriculture Secretary Block said on October 20, and I quote:

The program will be used in those markets where we are assured of the greatest return. We also will pay special attention to the opportunity to achieve long-term sales gains in the markets that we select. Long-term expansion in agricultural trade under normal commercial terms is a primary goal of this administration.

They will subsidize the interest rate and they will subsidize credit to try to undercut other grain exporters, including Canada, and that is not fair and it is not just.

Regarding the second part of my question, Mr. Speaker, if this fails and if we cannot persuade the Americans to play fair ball, then the federal Government, unfortunately, must come up with a similar program for Canadian farmers. If it does not, Canadian farmers in Canada will be hurt, not just in the short term but in the long term as well. We must do that because 30 per cent of our GNP is tied to trade and Canada's share of world trade is falling very rapidly. Back in 1970 it was 5.9 per cent of world trade. In 1979 it was 3.9 per cent of world trade. With a program like the blended credit program in the United States, that is now in danger of falling even further.

I plead with the Government of Canada, therefore, to make strong representationsto President Reagan in the United States in an effort to end this destructive program, to end what could be a serious escalation of a trade war which is potentially the most dangerous since the 1930s. But if we cannot persuade them, then we cannot live in an "Alice in Wonderland" world, leaving our farmers totally and absolutely unprotected.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean Lapierre (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, first of all, I would like to thank the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) for his speech.

[English]

He says that this issue is very important. The Canadian Government agrees with him and is very disturbed that the U.S. government has chosen to reply to the current supply and demand situation in this manner. There is no other word than the one he used to say that we find also the whole program unfair, dangerous, a bit of protectionism, and it could start a trade war. That is why we are very concerned about the farmers of Canada and what they might suffer from that kind of a program.

I believe the Canadian authorities are very concerned that this initiative may put other exporters in a position where they have no choice but to introduce similar programs. The result, unfortunately for producers, is likely to be lower returns. This is particularly important under the current depressed price situation prevailing in world agricultural markets.

Canada has sought to contain the use of concessional financing as a competitive instrument in international trade, and the Hon. Member referred to GATT. We were impressing on the United States that we should not have that type of program and we should bring agriculture under international discipline. Unfortunately, a couple of days later, we find there is a little double talk on their behalf, and we are very concerned about that. Where I do not agree with the Hon. Member is that if they do not follow what we are asking them to do, we should embark also on a trade war and provoke the installation of protectionism. I think we would then be doing exactly what we are blaming them for doing. I think the Hon. Member is right. We have shown our opposition to the Americans. We have communicated our concerns to the U.S. administration, and we hope that they will react positively to our requests.

SHIPBULDING—MEETING WITH INDUSTRY REPRESENTATIVES IN NEW BRUNSWICK. (B) GOVERNMENT POLICY REVIEW

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, over the last few weeks I have been attempting to extract from the Government the long overdue shipbuilding policy which has been under wraps for some reason or other. It has refused to divulge it. I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, there are a good many workers in this country who are rather resentful of the fact that the Government is reluctant to release the facts of this shipbuilding review policy. Indeed, it is affecting their very livelihoods and the futures of their families.

I think it is important to recognize that the shipbuilding industry is critical in the Maritimes. We have shipbuilding industries located on our Pacific and Atlantic coasts, as well as the St. Lawrence. These people are in dire need. They are becoming concerned that the Government is not addressing itself to their particular needs. They are aware that the Government has been in possession of a shipbubilding policy for the last two and a half years, and during that period of time they have seen at least $1.1 billion leave this country for foreign countries which are constructing ships that could have been constructed here. That is distressing to them.

I was astounded to hear the Hon. Member for Comox-Powell River (Mr. Skelly) tell the House this evening that it was incredible hypocrisy for my party to be expounding a philosophy and theory in support of the Government, when he knows full well that his party is entirely responsible for the fact that this Government is in power today. That same Member has stood up in the House and shed crocodile tears on behalf of the workers in the shipyards of this nation knowing full well that his party is totally responsible for the fact that those people are in power and directing the policies of the shipbuilding industry.

There is information available, Mr. Speaker, that the Department of Fisheries is considering the purchase of trawlers from Europe for the fishery off New Brunswick and Nova Scotia. That is very distressing news to the workers in the shipyards of this nation generally, let alone those in Atlantic Canada. The news that the same department is anticipating the purchase of a freezer trawler in Japan for conversion to a research vessel is extremely distressing for shipyard workers across this nation.

Last March, Mr. Speaker, there were 18,000 workers involved in shipbuilding across this nation, and today there are substantially less. Those people are not going to have a very pleasant Christmas this year. Many of those individuals have been thrown out of work because of the inactivity and inability of this Government in addressing itself to the industry's difficulties.

Why is it that British Petroleum is going to be purchased at a price in excess of $600 million, Mr. Speaker? This will not get one single job. But that is something that we should expect of this Government. Why is it that Dome Petroleum, which the Government is bailing out to the tune of millions of dollars, will purchase submersible rigs from foreign countries when they could be built in Canada?

The frustration that I and many of my fellow citizens in Atlantic Canada experience tonight is caused by the fact that, despite the insistence of this Party that the Government come forth with this shipbuilding policy review which has been in its hands and has been passed through Cabinet, there is no sign of it. I defy the Government to refute that statement. For two and a half years while people in this nation have been suffering, we have been exporting millions of dollars worth of work, but those problems will not be addressed this evening by the Parliamentary Secretary in his reply to the points I have raised. It is absolutely incredible that the Government can have so little respect for the plight of the workers of this nation.

Mr. Jim Peterson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Economic Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): On the contrary, Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to be able to rise tonight and respond to the Hon. Member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Corbett). If he thinks that this country will be able to produce every type of ship and every type of boat that Canadians need, he is wrong. That is unfortunate, but as a country we will have to specialize and find needs in the international market which we can satisfy. This does not mean that we have achieved our full potential in the shipbuilding industry, but I do not despair to the extent that the Hon. Member for Fundy-Royal does.

On November 22, the Minister of State for Economic Development (Mr. Johnston) initiated an intensive round of negotiations on economic and regional development issues. He was in the Province of New Brunswick and met with Premier Hatfield who voiced his support for the program of reorganization, which the Minister has undertaken. He also met with union and management in Saint John. It was reported that those discussions were extremely frank and interesting.

The Saint John Shipbuilding and Drydock Company is an integral and, I believe, a very proud part of Canada's shipbuilding heritage. We should talk about some of the successes we have had instead of badmouthing Canadian industry all the time. This company has an order for a $100 million semisubmersible drilling rig that will create 1,500 person years of employment. It has a contract for the design of the new type 1,100 icebreakers. These ships are needed to replace the older ships. It has a $1.6 million contract to refit the Coast Guard's Louis St. Laurent. A federal contribution of more than $12 million was allocated to lengthen and renovate the drydock.

Saint John has been awarded a contract worth $39.4 million regarding the Canadian patrol frigate contract definition phase of the program. There is a $2.6 billion contract for the construction of six new frigates which is being bidded on by Saint John and its competitor Scan Marine. This contract alone has the potential of providing 30,000 person-years of employment or over 7,000 person-years of shipyard labour over a ten-year period.

There is room for improvement, but I would refer the Hon. Member to the Minister's comment that in the very near future we will have an announcement to make on this very important topic.

NATIONAL PARKS—BANFF LAND EXCHANGE—REQUEST THAT HOUSING PERMIT BE CANCELLED. (B) REQUEST FOR MINISTER'S RESIGNATION

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, tonight we will discuss the desecration of a beautiful park in Banff, a desecration which was requested by Parks Canada, says the Minister.

• (2220)

The facts of the case are as follows. First, the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Roberts), in charge of National Parks, issued a permit for the construction of a 76-unit complex in the only treed park in the townsite of Banff which is located in Banff National Park. The Minister alleged that Parks Canada issued the permit and pretended that he had nothing to do with it. But, in a representative democracy under our form of Government, the Minister must take responsibility for the actions of his Department. If indeed the Minister had nothing to do with the issuance of the permit, why did he not freeze the project and fully investigate the entire matter when it was raised in the House? That is what any other government or any responsible government would have done.

Second, the Minister and/or Parks Canada did not notify the people of the area that a 76-unit complex was to be built in their park. In any town or village, even the smallest village in Alberta, before authorizing a public work in any area the council notifies the people of the area. They are given an opportunity to comment. They are told that an apartment building or whatever is being planned, and they are asked for comment. Parks Canada did not do this. The Minister well knows that this was kept secret for a period of months, and that the only way the people found out was from a leak published in the Crag and Canyon. Then the people knew, but not until then.

Third, the Minister justified the swap of land by saying that Banff needs affordable accommodation. Banff needs affordable accommodation for the workers in Banff, but the Minister secured no guarantee that accommodation in the 76-unit complex would be affordable. Now the people of the area have been advised by the company that the accommodation will be as affordable as possible, and rates like $500 to $800 are being suggested. Rates like $500, $600 or $800 per month will not be good enough. Such rates are not affordable for people who make only $800 to $1,200 per month. But the Minister secured no guarantee in regard to the rates, and now the company will charge all the market will bear.

Fourth, the land swap or the park was valued by Parks Canada at $1,368,000 for five lots which I consider to be worth about $600,000. The Minister claims they are worth $900,000. Taking the Minister's own figure, this leaves a difference of over $400,000 in favour of Buchanan and company. In other words, the Buchanan and company lots could accommodate at the very best 20 units, while the land given to the company by Parks Canada will accommodate 76 units. Is there any company in Canada that would not jump at an offer like that? What is more, the whole deal was done by negotiations, with no public tender and no auction.

Fifth, the Minister did not refer the deal to the Treasury Board. The Minister apparently was taken aback by the refusal of Treasury Board in December 1981, and was not taking any more chances in getting another refusal, particularly for a deal which the Minister alleges he knew nothing about.

Sixth, the Minister did not refer the project to the Federal Environmental Assessment Review Office, FEARO.

In conclusion, as I said to the Minister in Committee the other day, the deal was done under the table and he knows it. The Minister did not answer. As the development officer of Parks Canada in Banff said after he resigned, "The deal smells to high heaven". I beseech the Minister to save the park, call off the company, listen to the views of people expressed in the press from all parts of Canada, and build the project some other place in Banff; save the park.

Mr. Jim Peterson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Economic Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) is a first-rate hockey player. Again tonight we have seen an example of the Opposition skating around the true issues which underlie the matter before us.

There have been many allegations in the House over the past few days regarding the land exchange in Banff National Park. Much of the information given by Hon. Members opposite has been mistaken, and questions have often been phrased in a manner of insinuation rather than on a clear, factual foundation. I should like to cite a number of examples of what I have just claimed.

First, the Hon. Member said that we should not have allowed a beautiful park to have been destroyed. What is this park? This is an area which has been zoned R3. This has been a matter of public record since 1972. It was publicized in 1972 and again in 1980. Therefore, this development can really be considered as being a fulfilment of the zoning purpose for that property.

There is another misconception, the second one. The Hon. Member stated that the swap, the exchanged property, should have been subject to public tender. In this particular instance a public tender would not have been possible since a land exchange was at the heart of the proposal. An exchange was suggested by Parks Canada officials because of their wish to avoid having higher density development on the original land held by the developer.

Mr. Kempling: Garbage.

Mr. Peterson: Third, the Hon. Member has said that no environmental assessment was done. With respect, that is not true. An assessment was conducted in December, 1981 and certain of the resulting proposals and recommendations were incorporated in the conditions attaching to the building permit.

Fourth, it has been alleged that the matter was kept secret for two years before people found out about it, at the last moment. Quite apart from the fact that the zoning has been a matter of public knowledge for ten years, we have the minutes of the Banff Advisory Council, which are a matter of public record, which show repeated reference to the progress of this development proposal. The charge of secrecy is therefore unwarranted.

The fifth charge is that the permit was hastily issued. The permit was not rushed. It was not issued until the developer had fulfilled all the requirements which are normal under the circumstances. This developer was treated no differently from any other. I would like to say, as the Minister has repeatedly stated in the House, that the approval process in this case followed its normal course and Parks Canada officials were satisfied that the development, which will provide badly needed housing, meets the interests of Parks Canada and the residents of Banff.

This has not been a battle of bulldozers and chain saws against the ecology and the people. It has been a matter seized upon for the narrow purpose of attempting to exacerbate partisan emotion and to make petty political gain.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at two o'clock p.m.

At 10.28 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

MOTIONS UNDER S.O. 43

NATIONAL PARKS

BANFF LAND EXCHANGE—DEMAND FOR INVESTIGATION

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, the hypocrisy of this Liberal Government knows no bounds. Here is one example. The Government published a booklet entitled "Guide to the Federal Environmental Assessment and Review Process" and confirmed it by legislation in the Government Organization Act in which it is stated the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Roberts) "shall initiate, recommend and undertake programs . . . to ensure that new federal projects . . . are assessed early in the planning". This assessment includes up to three sequential review stages, the final one being the Federal Environment Assessment Review Office, (FEARO). Sounds wonderful, doesn't it? It would be if the Minister of the Environment followed it, which he did not do in the Banff case. Therefore I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker):

That this House abhors this hypocrisy and demands an investigation into the desecration of the park in Banff.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

SMALL BUSINESS

DEVELOPMENT BOND PROGRAM—ROLE OF BANKS

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Madam Speaker, Small Business Development Bonds are no longer available to the small businesses requiring subsidized interest rates in the Peterborough area, and I am sure this is the case in a lot of areas across Canada. Business bankruptcies in the first nine months of 1982 were 43 per cent higher than in the first nine months of 1981, and 66 per cent higher than in the first nine months of 1980. I therefore move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn):

That the Government immediately instruct the banks to make Small Business Development Bonds available to hard-pressed businesses which are unable to pay the high interest rates now being offered by the banks.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

TRIBUTE TO FORMER OLYMPIC COMPETITORS

THE LATE HARRY JEROME AND THE LATE REGINALD DIXON

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Madam Speaker, Canadians today were saddened to hear the news of the deaths of two more Canadians who did much to promote amateur sport in our country.

Harry Jerome died a young man. He shared the world's record for the 100-metre sprint from 1960 to 1968, and set a world record for the 100-yard dash in 1966.

Reginald Dixon sailed for Canada in two Olympics. At the 1932 Olympics in Los Angeles he won three of eleven races, more than any other competitor. I therefore move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser):

That this House recognize the contributions made by Harry Jerome and Reginald Dixon, two outstanding sportsmen, by sending the condolences of this House to their respective families.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Madam Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

POLITICAL PARTIES

PROGRESSIVE CONSERVATIVE PARTY POSITION ON CROWSNEST PASS FREIGHT RATES

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Madam Speaker, the Gilson Report recommendations on grain handling will dramatically raise costs to farmers and accelerate branch line abandonment, resulting in huge losses to farmers and their grain-handling co-operatives. Since the Conservative Party in the West is splitting on support of the Gilson Report, with Alberta going one way and Saskatchewan the other, I move, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, seconded by the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy):

That this House urge the federal Conservative Party to take an unequivocal stand in favour of retention of the Crow rate and appeal to their Alberta wing not to sell out to the transport and agri-business interests who wish to abolish Crow.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

CROWN CORPORATIONS

AUDITOR GENERAL'S REPORT—COMMENT ON PROPOSED LEGISLATION

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Madam Speaker, in light of the fact that the Auditor General of Canada has proclaimed that Government auditors are frequently denied access to information required to judge whether Government money in Crown corporations is being spent with regard and respect for economy, and since the Auditor General of Canada, Kenneth Dye, has stated that he sees more merit in the previous Crown Corporation Bill introduced in 1979 by the Progressive Conservative Party under the leadership of the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark), and claimed that that Bill "had an effective framework for the control, direction and accountability of Crown-owned corporations", and since Auditor General Dye further proclaimed that the present Liberal Government's Crown Corporation Bill "advances no provisions dealing with the audit of Crown-owned corporations", I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn):

• (1410)

That the Government of the day, in keeping with the spirit and express wishes of the Auditor General, withdraw the present legislation placed before us by the Liberals and replace it with that legislation previously tabled by the Clark Conservative Government, which the Auditor General found to be more acceptable and workable.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

CHARTER OF RIGHTS

APPLICATION TO SASKATCHEWAN PUBLIC SERVANTS

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Madam Speaker, I also rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a civil rights issue. Last week, my alderman, Mr. Harry Van Mulligan, was confronted by his employer, the Government of Saskatchewan, with a hard choice—either move to a new post in Prince Albert or lose his job. Mr. Van Mulligan had spoken out in opposition to the provincial Government's restraint program in the course of doing the job he was elected to do on Regina City Council.

The Premier of Saskatchewan has since gone on to declare that each and every Government employee who also serves his or her community on school boards, hospital boards, and even on church boards, must carefully weigh the consequences of freely speaking their minds in public. These tactics, Madam Speaker, are more suited to totalitarian, single-party states than they are to the—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: It seems to me that the Hon. Member is dealing with a matter which is solely under provincial jurisdiction.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. de Jong: Madam Speaker, these actions are a serious infringement of the Canadian Charter of Rights. I therefore move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin):

That this House condemn the curtailment of basic civil and political liberties of Saskatchewan public servants by the Government of Saskatchewan.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: Order. I really have the impression that this is a matter which deals with provincial responsibility and should have been brought up in that legislature. The Hon. Member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Wenman).

TRADE

PROPOSED ESTABLISHMENT OF ASIA-PACIFIC FOUNDATION IN VANCOUVER

Mr. Robert Wenman (Fraser Valley West): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter or urgent and pressing necessity. Given the current 12.7 per cent unemployment rate, negative 4.4 per cent GNP growth rate and slumping production in Canada, as well as growing world protectionism in the industrialized OECD and Canada's over-reliance on resource exports and trade with the United States, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Vancouver Centre (Miss Carney):

That the Government move as quickly as possible to implement the recommendations of the Bruk study to establish an Asia-Pacific Foundation Headquarters in Vancouver to exploit and expand Canada's trade relations with Asian Pacific countries in order to open up new markets for Canadian producers and thereby revitalize Canadian export trade and create new employment opportunities for Canadians.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

CRIMINAL CODE

CALL FOR REVIEW OF PENALTY FOR MURDER

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Madam Speaker, I would like to move a motion under Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Whereas it has been six and a half years since the abolition of capital punishment in 1976; whereas at that time the penalty for first degree murder was fixed at life imprisonment with no parole for 25 years; whereas that penalty was decided by a close, free vote in Parliament, with 11 persons on death row and strong pressure to increase the use of capital punishment; whereas it is recognized that the mandatory minimum of 25 years is too inflexible, and in some cases counterproductive to rehabilitation; and whereas there is no new rationale to reconsider capital punishment because, first, the rate of murder has declined since 1976; second, capital punishment is not a more effective deterrent to murder, and capital punishment is immoral, irreversible and inequitable in application; I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Louis-Hébert (Mr. Dawson):

That the Government set up an independent review group to examine the present penalty for murder and its impact on prisons and prison populations, and to recommend new, more flexible provisions which will protect the public to the greatest extent possible and at the same time provide a greater opportunity for rehabilitation for those serving sentences in prison.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

AIR CANADA

LAY-OFF PROVISIONS FOR EMPLOYEES

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Madam Speaker, Air Canada is not acting responsibly or fairly in refusing to offer a voluntary severance pay package to its employees covered by the IAM collective agreement, comparable to that which is being offered surplus Air Canada management employees. Yet the same economics which makes it advantageous for Air Canada to offer a "golden handshake" to management is surely also applicable to the early retirement of IAM employees, in addition to the fact that such early retirements would also ease the burden of the planned lay-off of 585 IAM employees as of January, 1983. Therefore I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow):

That this House instruct the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) to communicate to the President of Air Canada the desire of all Members of this House that IAM employees of Air Canada should not be discriminated against, should be offered a comparable VSP arrangement, and should not be asked to pay for any such arrangement by giving up other benefits just as management has not had to pay for its "Golden Handshake".

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

CROWN CORPORATIONS

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT WITHDRAW AND SELL ASSETS

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, my questions are directed to the President of the Treasury Board who will know that last year the Government sold its interest in Consolidated Computer to the Corporation for $100,000 having blown $125 million of taxpayers' money on that company. Since Nabu has been able to turn that consolidated computer around and make a profit of over $2.3 million in less than a year, when is the Government going to realize that it cannot run businesses at all and that it would be far better off to sell those businesses it owns, or give them away if necessary, so that the assets could be used to make a profit, put people back to work, and get the country growing again?

Hon. Herb Gray (President of Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, I am glad that the Official Opposition is now willing to admit formally that the deal we made with Nabu to extricate ourselves from involvement in the CCI situation was a good one. I am glad the Hon. Member finally recognized that.

With respect to the second part of his question, Government involvement in Crown-owned corporations involves public policy purposes. The important thing is to ensure that those purposes are effectively carried out. In some cases that will mean return of an entity to the private sector, as we intend to do with our shares in the Canada Development Corporation. So it is a matter of properly carrying out what is in the best interests of the public, and this is what we are doing.

Oral Questions

CANADAIR AND DE HAVILLAND

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, the Minister will know that this House is being asked to vote $400 million for Canadair and de Havilland. He will know that his colleague in the Senate has indicated that the $400 million will not cover the hole and we will have to vote again, perhaps next March, for more millions and millions of dollars.

The Minister has been successful with Nabu, so why does he not turn around and sell Canadair and de Havilland to Canadian entrepreneurs who know how to run things, and not leave it with the Government for another great disaster such as has been pointed out by the Auditor General to the people of Canada?

Hon. Herb Gray (President of Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, Canadair and de Havilland are being run by commercial management, most of whom were there before the Government acquired the controlling shareholding interest. In any event, as my colleague in the Senate said in announcing the transfer of the Crown shares in those companies to the Canada Development Investment Corporation, one of the objectives of that Corporation is to see when there would be an appropriate opportunity for return to the private sector of companies under its management. But this involves considering when there would be an appropriate return on the Crown's investment. It obviously involves looking at the over-all situation of the marketplace, bearing in mind the over-all public policy purposes which were in effect when the Government acquired the share interest in the first place.

These companies are in many ways the cornerstone of the Canadian Aerospace industry. There are some 25,000 direct and indirect jobs involved, and I hope my hon. friend is not suggesting that we would undermine the continued existence of these jobs which are so important to these key sectors of our economy, indeed to the entire economy.

• (1420)

Mr. Blenkarn: Madam Speaker, clearly socialism does not work. Clearly, ownership of the means of production and distribution by the state do not work.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

SUGGESTED ESTABLISHMENT OF PRIVATIZATION COMMITTEE

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister. When can we have a commitment from the Government that it will set up a privatization committee which will, as quickly as possible, get the Government out of these losing businesses so that they can be turned around in much the same way as Nabu turned around Consolidated Computer?

Hon. Herb Gray (President of Treasury Board): Once again, Madam Speaker, I want the House and the public to note the endorsement of the official spokesman of the Conservative Party for the steps we took to end our involvement in Consolidated Computer and have it involved with the Nabu company.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Beatty: Read your letters.

Mr. Nielsen: It was about time.

Mr. Gray: I should also remind my hon. friends that the reason the Crown acquired majority interests in Canadair and de Havilland was because of the state they had got into when they were under private ownership and, for that matter, foreign ownership. We do not rule out the possibility of a return to private ownership but it depends on when we can get the best return for the Crown and the terms and conditions involving the over-all protection of the public interest with respect to the health of the aerospace industry and the maintenance of the tens of thousands of jobs involved. My hon. friend and his Party may oppose that, but the workers in those companies do not oppose it, and Canadians generally certainly do not oppose it.

Mr. Clark: Put that to the test.

USE OF FUNDS ADVANCED TO CN MARINE INCORPORATED

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. The Auditor General's Report documents that the Department of Transport gave CN Marine $25 million as an early downpayment on the construction of the new carferry M. V. Abegweit to travel between Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick, as a means of saving the taxpayer money on the total cost of that project.

Instead of advancing the money to the shipbuilder to save the taxpayer money, as CN Marine was instructed to do, CN Marine stashed it in a bank account and reaped a windfall profit of $4.8 million in interest earned.

The Auditor General has revealed the appalling fact—

Madam Speaker: Is the Hon. Member going to ask a question, ever?

Mr. McMillan: In light of the fact that the Auditor General has revealed that CN Marine paid $163,000 to the shipbuilder to consent to the shady deal—an outright bribe—is the Minister going to call for a full public inquiry into this appealling practice? What else is the Minister going to do to prevent this from happening in the future?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I have not really had the time to go into the details of it. I am grateful to the Auditor General for bringing this matter to our attention.

Nevertheless, I have looked into it yesterday and this morning. The facts are that, indeed, advance payments were made to the contractor. There is nothing wrong with that as a principle. The thing that one must make sure of, however, is that the interest on the money is allocated to the price of the ship, and this was done. An amount of $2,880,000 odd was credited to the cost of the ship. This is quite all right, in my view.

There might be a debate about whether one could have found a better interest rate elsewhere. I do not know, and I have not looked at the matter in sufficient depth to judge that. The principle of advance payments is a normal practice in these instances. The $163,000, which is one half of one per cent for the management fee, was given to Saint John Shipbuilding. In this particular instance there might be a debate about whether it should not have remained to the credit of CN Marine instead of moving to the shipbuilders, but again, this money has been accounted for.

In a word, Madam Speaker, I wish procedures had been followed in a tighter way in this matter, but up to now I do not see any scandal in what was done.

ACCOUNTABILITY FOR EXPENDITURE

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Transport. The Minister is parroting the very explanation given by CN Marine which the Auditor General has described as totally unsatisfactory.

The Auditor General has made it clear that CN Marine and the parent company, Canadian National, have totally stonewalled the Canadian Government's efforts to initiate an operational audit of CN Marine to ensure that taxpayers' money is being wisely spent. When will the Minister call the corporate elite, at least the presidents of CN and CN Marine, on the carpet in his office and order them to exercise some minimum degree of accountability in the expenditure of millions of dollars every year of taxpayers' money?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, as usual things are not as simple as they are made to look, particularly in a question of this kind. CN Marine has not been as open to auditing by the Government or by the Auditor General as the Opposition Member who is asking the question would have liked. The case that CN Marine makes is that, as a subsidiary of CN, it should be using exclusively the auditing firm of CN itself. There is a justification in what it is saying. To ensure that nobody will have the feeling that the Government or I am trying to hide anything in this matter, since yesterday, I asked CN yesterday to accept the idea of a comprehensive auditing of CN Marine, and CN has accepted it.

REQUEST THAT POWERS BE STRENGTHENED

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Everyone knows that the Government has been going all over the world undermining FIRA, promising foreign countries that legislation will be introduced or that legislative changes will be made which will weaken FIRA. The code word for this process has been, of course, to make FIRA more efficient. The Minister of Finance repeated that euphemism earlier this week.

Considering that foreign-owned firms import four times as much into Canada as do Canadian companies—that is to say they export thousands of Canadian jobs—will the Prime Minister assure the House that he will implement what was promised in the last Throne Speech, namely, a commitment to strengthen FIRA to provide more Canadian jobs, instead of the reverse?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I would disagree with the Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party in that he is implying that we are trying to weaken FIRA. The position of the Government is not to weaken FIRA; it is to make it more efficient. I stand by the words spoken by the Minister of Finance and various other Ministers on that subject. We are effectively trying to make sure that the screening process will ensure the objective of FIRA that any foreign investment will be for the benefit of Canadians but that indeed the screening process be conducted efficiently. That is the state of our policy now. It is not correct, as the Leader of the New Democratic Party said, to say that Members of the Government are going around the world saying that they will weaken FIRA or make it disappear.

Mr. Broadbent: Once again, deliberately or not deliberately, the Prime Minister is misstating reality.

BUDGET PROPOSAL

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, will the Prime Minister not acknowledge that in the last budget introduced in the House there was a specific provision designed to weaken FIRA, to make it possible in terms of regulation change for foreign companies to buy up, without going through any review process, all kinds of additional companies at fire sale prices in Canada, and that if the regulations remained unchanged they would not be able to do so? Will the Prime Minister deny that? If he will not deny it, will he give assurances in the House that the proposal made in the last budget will be withdrawn?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Madam Speaker, I will deny that. The proposal made in the last budget is intended to make the administration of FIRA more efficient. It is not intended to weaken FIRA by changing the threshold. Permitting an accelerated review does not mean that there will not be a FIRA process. It means that the FIRA process will be more expedient and more efficient.

Mr. Broadbent: The Prime Minister knows as well as anyone else that, according to the process mentioned in the budget—and I assume he is now being corrected by one of his Ministers—a number of companies will be exempt from review. That can only mean one thing—a weakening of FIRA, and the Prime Minister should acknowledge it.

LAY-OFFS ANNOUNCED BY FOREIGN-OWNED COMPANIES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, we have seen just in recent weeks that foreign-owned firms certainly do not have a commitment to jobs in Canada. For instance, the Iron Ore Company in Quebec has laid off hundreds of workers, and Bowater in Newfoundland has also laid off hundreds of workers. Both companies have made millions of dollars in profits. Considering this is the reality about the performance of such companies in Canada, will the Prime Minister implement what he promised, not only in the 1980 election campaign but also in the last Throne Speech, that is, to bring measures before the House specifically designed to strengthen FIRA?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the examples which the Hon. Member gives are somewhat misleading. It is obvious that some foreign-owned companies are laying off workers, but so are Canadian-owned companies. Strengthening FIRA now would do nothing about the specific cases he quotes.

Mr. Broadbent: What about the next ones, though?

Mr. Trudeau: The next ones, Madam Speaker, I have dealt with in answering the Hon. Member's two previous questions.

Mr. Broadbent: No.

Mr. Trudeau: We are not weakening FIRA. We are making it more efficient. Increasing the threshold above which companies are examined for their investment intentions does not mean that we change the spirit of FIRA; it means that we will be able to deal with the important and the big cases more expeditiously. That is the object of it.

Mr. Broadbent: Black is white, too.

THE CONSTITUTION

QUEBEC'S RIGHT OF VETO—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Dennis Dawson (Louis-Hébert): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. In its decision on Monday, the Supreme Court of Canada rejected the appeal launched by Quebec in which it claimed to have a veto right. As a result, a number of Quebecers again have the feeling they were betrayed by the other provinces and the Federal Government. Can the Prime Minister inform the House whether the case is closed or whether the Federal Government can be expected to reiterate the offer made in Victoria and rejected by Quebec, and rejected by Quebec once again during the last round of constitutional talks? And now that the courts have dealt with the case, is the political debate expected to resume, and is there a chance that the subject will be put on the agenda of the Constitutional Conference that is already scheduled, in order to prove to Quebecers that the Federal Government is still interested in this matter?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, regarding the second half of the question, the provinces are aware that the Constitutional Conference next March will be held specifically to discuss matters relating to native peoples. The agenda is open, and officials from the various provincial governments and our federal officials are now trying to determine the items that will be put on the agenda, which means that the provinces are free to make suggestions for discussing various constitutional matters, including the amending formula. I do not know whether the Government of the Province of Quebec, after abandoning its veto right, will now try to get it back.

Mr. La Salle: It never had one, according to the Supreme Court's decision!

Mr. Trudeau: The Member for Joliette says that it never had one. It never had one because it never wanted one. The Member for Joliette ought to know that at least since 1968, our Government has been trying to get an amending formula that would have given Quebec a legal veto right. We did this because we wanted it to be enshrined in the Constitution. However, in April 1981 the Parti Québécois Government joined the other provinces in saying that all provinces should be treated the same, and the party to which my hon. colleague, the Member for Joliette, belongs, fought the Government's draft proposal for a veto right and prevented its approval by the House. The Hon. Member and his leader have prevented Quebec from getting a veto right by fighting against our proposal, which contained a veto right.

NATIONAL SECURITY

CASE OF CANADIAN PROFESSOR—TRANSMISSION OF NATO SECRETS

Mr. Chris Speyer (Cambridge): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice. In an article in this morning's Citizen written by Neil Macdonald, it is reported:

> Tuesday, Solicitor General Robert Kaplan and Justice Minister Mark MacGuigan admitted Hambleton did tell the Mounties about passing on the NATO documents—

Now I will quote precisely what the Solicitor General said:

All of the information about his role working for NATO in Europe, when volumes of documents, many of them highly classified, were transferred directly to KGB officers . . . he gave details of all of those things—

Will the Minister of Justice reconcile that statement with the statement which he gave yesterday in answer to a question by the Hon. Member for the Yukon, which reads:

Madam Speaker, in case my previous words were not sufficiently clear, I can confirm that there was no evidence before us of transmission of NATO secrets at any time.

Who is telling the truth?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice): Madam Speaker, the article is mistaken, and I think my hon. friend's interpretation of it is further mistaken. I think the point the article makes is that both the Solicitor General and I admitted that, after the initial decision of the Minister of Justice that no prosecution should take place—

Mr. Clark: Should?

Mr. MacGuigan: —it was after that time that NATO secrets were revealed. If that is the meaning of the article—or whatever the meaning of the article is—I did not state that. I have no direct knowledge of that, and my hon. friend may wish to address that question to my colleague, the Solicitor General.

An Hon. Member: Get together with him.

Mr. MacGuigan: What I said yesterday in this House, and which cannot be controverted because it is the fact, is that at the time the decision was made by my predecessor as Attorney General there was no evidence whatsoever to suggest that there had been any transmission of NATO secrets by Mr. Hambleton at any time.

Mr. Speyer: It is quite obvious that the left hand does not know what the right hand is doing in this particular case, Madam Speaker.

INFORMATION SECURED BY SECURITY SERVICE

Mr. Chris Speyer (Cambridge): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Solicitor General. After the letter of opinion was given to the Solicitor General from the predecessor of the Minister of Justice, which said that there was not sufficient evidence for a prosecution, and after the Solicitor General's Department and the Security Service came and knew that there were NATO documents being passed, was that knowledge ever communicated by the Security Service to the Minister of Justice's predecessor?

In addition, could the Minister please tell us what were the contents of the document that the spy Hambleton had in his possession in the Old Bailey? Will the Solicitor General release it and table it in the House? If he will not, why not?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Madam Speaker, the Security Service tells me that, from the receipt of the opinion of the Department of Justice, the Security Service did not return to the Department of Justice for further advice about prosecution with any of the additional information it got from Hambleton.

Mr. Speyer: Why?

Mr. Nielsen: Why didn't you?

Mr. Kaplan: In the earlier period, when the Security Service was preparing its case for the Department of Justice, all of the interviews, for example, with Hambleton, were taken under caution. He was warned that the information that he gave the Service could form the basis of a prosecution against him.

An Hon. Member: So what?

Mr. Kaplan: After the Security Service got the decision of the Department of Justice, the Service told Mr. Hambleton of that decision. They told him in their opening remarks. Following that, the Security Service has many discussions with Mr. Hambleton which were not on the basis of a caution, which information, in the opinion of the police investigators and of lawyers, would not have been admissible to be used against Hambleton. That is the reason the Security Service did not go back to the Department of Justice. That Service was quite satisfied to be running a very successful counter-espionage operation which was very productive; Hambleton was giving the Service information, which information the Service was sharing with the other friendly intelligence services, including MI5.

USE OF INFORMATION OBTAINED FROM PROFESSOR

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Solicitor General. Surely if this kind of voluminous evidence was obtained from the spy Hambleton—even if the Security Service felt that because it was obtained from him and could not be used against him because of a lack of caution, a statutor's warning, as the Solicitor General said—that evidence could have been used to solicit evidence from other people he named in that kind of testifying who could then have been given a caution? Why is the Solicitor General apparently hanging the success of the case only on what Mr. Hambleton could testify, instead of all of the other evidence that opened up as a result of what he said?

• (1440)

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Let me clear that up for the Hon. Member. No voluminous evidence, physical evidence, was obtained from Hambleton. He did not have or certainly did not produce it, and the Security Service did not find NATO documents in his possession following—

Mr. Epp: No, they were all in Russia!

Mr. Kaplan: —the discussion with him. These were things that he told the Security Service and, by the way, they were things that he had done, not in Canada but overseas. He worked for NATO overseas, he got those documents overseas, and transmitted them overseas. So, in the discussions that they were having with Hambleton in Canada, all that they were getting from him was exactly that, information.

The Hon. Member is asking why they did not seek to verify information from third parties or in other ways which would have given them a basis to go back to the Department of Justice. The answer is that they wanted to do that very much and it was always their position that, if they could find third party evidence, not this information which was obtained without a caution, but third party evidence, they would indeed have gone back to the Department of Justice to try to obtain a consent from the Attorney General of Canada to found a prosecution in Canada.

ELECTION CAMPAIGN PROMISE

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. It is a supplement to the questions asked earlier by the Hon. Member for Oshawa. I have in my hand a copy of a campaign speech given by the Prime Minister in Toronto on February 12, 1980, wherein he made three specific promises to strengthen FIRA, one of them being as follows:

> We want to expand and strengthen FIRA ... FIRA's mandate will be broadened to include the periodic review of all foreign firms of large size to assess the performance of these companies in such areas as export promotion and research and development.

If that promise had been kept, perhaps we might have prevented the Bowaters and the Iron Ores of the world.

The Prime Minister has now had three years to keep this commitment. Why has he not lived up to that promise he made in the dying days of the 1980 election campaign?

Mr. Nielsen: Same reason.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, because in those dying days of the 1980 election campaign Canada was not in a world which was very short of investment funds. We did not have 12 per cent unemployment. We felt at that time that we in Canada could be a little more selective—

Mr. Nielsen: We did not have $2 a gallon gas either!

Mr. Trudeau: —with the import into Canada of foreign capital. Since that time, there has been a very severe world-wide crisis.

Mr. Clark: Particularly in Canada.

Mr. Trudeau: The position of the Government remains that which I gave to the Hon. Member for Oshawa. We are not tightening the rules of FIRA to make it more difficult for foreign capital to have access to Canada, but we are not making it more easy either. We are just maintaining the previous position by ensuring that there will be more efficient administration and, therefore, the capital which people want to invest in Canada and which can create jobs here, which would be done in a way which is favourable to the economy of the Canadian people—those things can get by without many months of delay which had been required under previous administrative rules. In other words, if investment is judged to be in the interests of Canada, we want it to come more quickly than more slowly.

Mr. Murphy: Madam Speaker, I would suggest to the Prime Minister that the only selectivity is that the Liberals select which promises they wish to keep.

Mr. Nielsen: Name one.

MUNICIPAL AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR ESTABLISHMENT OF FUND FOR MAJOR PROJECTS

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): My supplementary question, Madam Speaker, is directed to the Minister of Finance. About 50 per cent of the construction workers in the Province of Nova Scotia are unemployed, with approximately 30 per cent facing the possibility of joining the welfare lines this winter. In the community of Springfield, Nova Scotia, a fire pump and the town fire department have been used to provide water to the community because the half finished water system is not being completed because of lack of funds. With this in mind, would the Minister of Finance act on a recommendation of my Leader, the Hon. Member for Oshawa, and create a major municipal projects fund in order to create real jobs? I would remind the Minister of Finance that there are many millions of dollars in these projects which are ready to go now so that jobs can be created for this winter.

Mr. Epp: Tell us about the Manitoba deficit.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I have already indicated, in answer to the Hon. Member for Oshawa, that I would consider his representation. But I would also remind the Hon. Member that in my economic statement of October 27 I announced a $500 million fund for direct job creation for which municipalities can also apply. Therefore, in the case to which he is referring, the municipality could apply through the NEED Program for an allocation of funds. The Province of Nova Scotia has been allocated several million dollars for that particular Program. It would be possible for the municipality to consider applying for a contribution under the particular Program in order to complete the work. That is available, and I am sure the Minister of Employment and Immigration will want to follow the representation made by the Hon. Member.

COMMENTS ON GOVERNMENT MANAGEMENT

Mr. Ron Stewart (Simcoe South): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board. The report of the Auditor General points out that the Government is guilty of wasting millions of taxpayers' dollars and of gross mismanagement, to such an extent that 30 per cent of the public servants do not know what they are supposed to be doing. The underlying essence of the Report is that we are experiencing a large scale Government scam, and "scam", in my view, is an acronym for "squander, contort and mismanage".

Does the Minister agree that this Report is a fairly accurate assessment, or is it his opinion that his Government is responsible, accountable, not wasteful, and provides sound management?

Hon. Herb Gray (President of Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, I do not think the Hon. Member has accurately described what the Auditor General said with respect to performance criteria and their communication within the Government. He said that 30 per cent of the employees surveyed throughout only seven Departments indicated that they were "unclear about the kind of job performance expected of them during the last rating period".

Mr. Beatty: How about the cabinet?

Mr. Gray: The Auditor General did not say that 30 per cent of the employees do not know what they are doing.

Mr. Clark: Do you know what you are doing?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Gray: In any event, Madam Speaker, I want to assure the House that we are working with the Departments to update and review the—

Mr. Clark: Is it true that you have resigned?

Mr. Gray: —performance review system in question—

Mr. Clark: Herb, are you on strike?

Mr. Gray: —in the light of the Auditor General's recommendations. However, if the Hon. Member wants me to go on and respond more specifically, I would point out to him that the Auditor General pointed out in his Report that he has, "identified a gradual but unmistakable emergence of a new determination in Government and Parliament toward improved management and more stringent accountability". The Auditor General's Report itself indicates that the Hon. Member does not know what he is talking about.

Mr. Stewart: I would like to tell the Minister that that was a gray answer from a gray area.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McDermid: No gray matter.

FOREIGN AID—RESPONSIBILITY FOR PROJECT IN HAITI

Mr. Ron Stewart (Simcoe South): Let me ask the Minister why, in view of what he just said, he does not read the Report a little further. If he did he would see that in November, 1981, after $22 million of taxpayers' money was spent over a period of ten years, a project in Haiti was cancelled by gross mismanagement. A subsequent audit revealed that a $110,000 payment was fraudulently paid, that a $127,000 payment was paid and it was suspected of being fraudulent, and $1.7 million—

Madam Speaker: Order, order!

Mr. Stewart: —of Canadian taxpayers' money is not accounted for.

Madam Speaker: Order. I do not know why we have so much trouble on Wednesdays in keeping questions short, but all of the questions have been too long and, most of all, the answers.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stewart: Madam Speaker, with all due regard for the Chair, I do not know why you always pick on me.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stewart: May I ask my supplementary question?

Madam Speaker: I would tell the Hon. Member that once in a while I have to pick on someone. It just turns out that it is him today.

Mr. Stewart: May I ask the Minister a question, Madam Speaker? Will the Minister acquiese that gross mismanagement was involved in the Haiti project? Will he tell us, this House, that he will name persons responsible for this gross mismanagement, and will there be firings?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Herb Gray (President of Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, the Auditor General has identified a number of important issues. With respect to the one the Hon. Member has mentioned, I intend to be discussing this matter very thoroughly with the Minister responsible for CIDA so that all appropriate action will be taken.

I might add that the Hon. Member would ask better questions if he had more gray matter, which he obviously lacks.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

CORPORATIONS

INQUIRY WHETHER GOVERNMENT WILL MODIFY BILL S-31

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Madam Speaker, my quesiton is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Yesterday, the Minister appeared before a Senate Committee to comment on Bill S-31, and when questioned by the press when he came out, he said he was willing to accept amendments to Bill S-31 which would have the Bill concentrate on pension funds rather than on provincial agencies or corporations, as is the case in the present Bill. Could the Minister repeat in the House today that he is willing to amend the Bill in order to restrict its application to pension fund institutions, and if so, could he inform the House whether the Alberta Heritage Fund could be exempted from Bill S-31?

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, I said before the Senate Committee that we would examine all draft proposals that were of any interest. I made it clear that both in the Senate and in the House of Commons, Members had an interest in the Bill, that a committee of Liberal Members was examining the Bill and that I was quite open to constructive amendments. I did not, however, specify the nature of those amendments. A journalist told me about the proposal formulated before the Senate by the President of the Montreal Stock Exchange. I said it was an interesting proposal that would be considered, but I did not specify, as the Hon. Member seems to want to imply, that such an amendment would be accepted. I think it is too early at this stage to conclude whether an amendment of this kind would benefit or would adversely affect the general scope of the Bill.

EFFECT OF BILL ON PENSION FUNDS

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Madam Speaker, so according to the Minister, and for the information of the people of Canada, the newspaper article is wrong when it says that the Minister is prepared to amend the Bill by making it apply only to pension funds. I think it is important that the Minister should inform the House whether he is willing to narrow his Bill down to the point where it would apply only to pension funds.

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): I think the article to which the Hon. Member is referring is headed: Ouellet says he is open to amendments. That is what I said and what I maintain. As for the kind of amendments, I have not been specific on that, with the Senators or with the press. I think it is too early at this stage to start speculating on one kind of amendment or another. I just want to make it clear, Madam Speaker, that as with any other bill tabled in Parliament, often amendments are made to improve legislation, and this proves how flexible and how open we are to concrete suggestions.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

PROPOSED PALESTINIAN REPRESENTATION REFERENDUM

Mr. Ian Watson (Châteauguay): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister and relates to a meeting I had recently with Yassar Arafat, Chairman of the PLO, to discuss peace prospects in the Middle East. Mr. Arafat indicated strong support for a Palestine-Jordan Confederation and stressed his support for Article 7 of the Arab Fez Summit Declaration which urges the guarantee of the security of the boundaries of all the states in the region, including Israel. He indicated that he would favour the idea of a U.N.-administered referendum of Palestinians living on the West Bank, in Gaza and East Jerusalem, to determine who the Palestinians wanted to negotiate for them.

Would the Prime Minister say whether he is willing to consider the idea of such a referendum, and whether Canada might consult with its allies to promote such a referendum as an important step toward meaningful negotiations for a Middle East peace settlement?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, in reply to the question I would begin by saying that the Government hopes and it is its policy that the inhabitants of the occupied territories will some way eventually be able to express their views in a free and unfettered fashion. This, after all, is one of the principles which was recognized in the Camp David Accords which provide for self-governing of the authorities of those territories.

On the principle of the choice by the inhabitants of the area of who should represent them, the Government is in accord. Whether this electoral process should proceed under the U.N. supervision, or in the way suggested in his question by the Hon. Member for Châteauguay, is something that I have not had occasion to discuss with the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Therefore, I cannot speak for him on this particular modality of expression of opinion by the inhabitants.

I would be prepared to say that this should be a matter which should be negotiated between the parties themselves as to what is the best method of having free expression by the inhabitants of those territories, on their representatives. It is something for the parties involved to discuss amongst themselves. Whether having the United Nations supervising the electoral process is the correct method or not, I am not prepared to say at this time.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

SUGGESTED SCHOOL ATTENDANCE FOR RECIPIENTS

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. In view of the 1.5 million unemployed people in Canada and the complete absence of jobs for those people, and in view of the fact that Government-sponsored vocational training positions are overbooked with long-waiting lists, will the Minister bring in changes to the Unemployment Insurance Act which will permit unemployment insurance recipients to improve their job qualifications by attending school? Will the Minister take this step to help these workers prepare for new job opportunities which will become available when the economy improves?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, perhaps before answering the Hon. Member's question specifically, we should provide some alteration to his basic premise that there are not jobs available. As I pointed out in this House last Friday, every month there are some 250,000 jobs taken up by the unemployed moving back into the market. Indeed this Government is supplying through a number of its job creation programs, jobs for well over 100,000 Canadians at the present period of time.

As far as a specific answer to his question is concerned, the Unemployment Insurance Act already has within it provisions to allow those who are unemployed to take up training positions; so I would recommend that he read the Act.

CASE OF CANADIAN PROFESSOR—DOCUMENT SHOWN BY SECURITY SERVICE

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General, and I will speak slowly as he returns to his seat. He indicated yesterday that the spy, Hambleton, had been shown a document. Will he tell us what exactly was shown by Canadian officials to the spy, Hambleton, in 1980?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Madam Speaker, yesterday when I was asked that question I did not have the full information, so I am glad to have the question again today.

He was shown, on a separate piece of paper, a paragraph from an internal memorandum sent by headquarters of the Security Service to the operative member of the Security Service who was dealing with Mr. Hambleton. The document is a national security document. I have reviewed it, and I do not feel, to anticipate his question in reply to the question asked earlier this day, that that document should be made public.

BASIS FOR DOCUMENT

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, was this memorandum based upon a Department of Justice opinion?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Madam Speaker, I am not certain if "based upon" is a term of art. It referred to that opinion. It communicated that opinion, and it set out some instructions and advice for the operative.

Mr. Epp: For the spy.

GOVERNMENT'S POLICY IN TABLING LEGAL ADVICE

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, so we now know that there was an opinion by the Department of Justice, part of which was communicated to the spy, Hambleton. That is the case.

The Minister will know that on November 30 the Minister of Justice tabled in committee legal advice from the Department of Justice that implicated certain members of the RCMP. Is the Solicitor General telling us that there will now be a practice that the Government of Canada will table letters of advice from the Department of Justice, which implicate the RCMP, but will not table letters of advice which implicate a convicted spy, as in the case of Hambleton?

If that is the case, will one Minister or the other, and we will probably get different answers from each of them, tell us how in the world they can justify keeping from the Parliament of Canada information that was given to a convicted spy?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Madam Speaker, when I referred to "based upon" in the Hon. Member's earlier question, I wanted to make it very clear that there was much more to the internal memorandum than just legal advice. It is a national security document. Part of it was to be shown to Hambleton. It was designed with that in mind. The rest of it is not to be made public. It is part of one whole document which I do not propose to make public.

PURPOSE IN SHOWING DOCUMENT

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Solicitor General. It was "designed" to be shown to Mr. Hambleton. For what purpose, as an inducement?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Madam Speaker, it was to be shown to Hambleton to demonstrate to him the view of the Department of Justice and the decision of the Minister of Justice respecting prosecution. I should add that he was only shown one paragraph of the total memorandum. That is the paragraph which was in that letter that was waved that I was asked about the other day, and that I looked into.

Point of Order—Mr. de Jong

INDUSTRIAL AND LABOUR ADJUSTMENT PROGRAM

REQUEST FOR DESIGNATION OF SQUAMISH, B.C.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance regarding the economically hard-pressed community of Squamish, B.C., which now has an unemployment rate in the 30 per cent range. The community has just found out that its wood fibre pulp mill will be closed for an undetermined period of time, laying off an additional 450 persons. Will the Minister make some effort to have this community in British Columbia designated under the ILAP program, as not a single western community has so far been designated?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I will raise the Hon. Member's representation with the Cabinet Committee on the ILAP Program. The Chairman of the Committee is now the Minister of Economic Development. I will bring this representation to his attention. I am not quite sure about the Hon. Member's statement that there is not a single western community under the ILAP Program. He may be right, but I thought some had been designated. I will check into this matter.

POINTS OF ORDER

MR. DE JONG—ACCEPTABILITY OF S.O. 43 MOTION

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I recognize that I cannot and will not question your ruling regarding the motion I introduced earlier today under Standing Order 43. You might have misheard the motion that I was trying to introduce because of the noise in the Chamber at that time. I would therefore request that you kindly review the "blues" to determine if the matter I was trying to raise falls under federal jurisdiction. I honestly believe that the matter I was raising poses a serious infringement on the federal Charter of Rights and Freedoms. I believe the matter should have been allowed to be introduced in the House.

Madam Speaker: The Hon. Member is right. I do not think I heard one line in particular in the Hon. Member's presentation which referred to the Canadian Charter of Rights. There was some noise. The Hon. Member was reading quite fast because his motion was long. I was especially struck by the motion which called for some kind of redress in the Parliament of Saskatchewan. I therefore gathered that he was dealing solely with a matter under provincial jurisdiction. I think I can do him right by asking if he will come back with the motion tomorrow, and then he can put it to the House.

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, I might say that if you were to put the motion under Standing Order 43 now, the Tories would be delighted to say no.

Madam Speaker: I could not possibly go back to motions under Standing Order 43 without the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Madam Speaker: If the Hon. Member can come back with his motion tomorrow, that would be very helpful.

MR. KAPLAN—CORRECTION OF EARLIER REMARK

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Madam Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I would like at the first opportunity to correct one word of an answer that I gave to a question from the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark). I referred to a letter which had been exhibited in a courtroom in Great Britain. I meant to say "an envelope".

MR. STEVENS—ALLEGED IRREGULARITY OF ESTIMATE BEFORE STANDING COMMITTEES

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter with respect to the estimates that will be before us tomorrow evening for voting purposes. This is the first opportunity I have had to speak to my point of order since getting the electronic transcript with respect to certain evidence given by Senator Austin in the Committee of this House known as Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs touching specifically on the estimates that we will be considering tomorrow night. The estimate that I refer to specifically is the one appearing in Supplementary Estimates B for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1983 under the Ministry of Industry, Trade and Commerce and known as Vote 26b, being a payment to Canadair Limited as equity of $200 million, and Vote 27b, being a payment to The de Havilland Aircraft of Canada Limited as equity of $200 million.

Where the irregularity appears to have arisen is that subsequent to the estimates being tabled in this House, events have transpired which now make the estimate on its face incorrect and certainly not in a form that could be properly voted on tomorrow evening.

What I am referring to is that on November 24 of this year the Prime Minister's (Mr. Trudeau) office stated in a press release:

> The Prime Minister announced today that the Government has approved the transfer of certain commercial assets and enterprises to the Canada Development Investment Corporation (CDIC) and its responsible Minister, Senator Jack Austin. In addition to the Government's Canada Development Corporation (CDC) shares, the transfer is to include: Canadair Limited, The de Havilland Aircraft of Canada—

And certain other corporations.

This transfer was subsequently confirmed on the same day in another press release issued by the Government of Canada in which it was stated:

The CDIC was incorporated under the Canada Business Corporations Act in order to hold the Government's 85 per cent share . . . of the common shares of the Canada Development Corporation (CDC)—

Later in the press release it states, and I emphasize the reference to legislation:

Legislation will be introduced in Parliament to seek statutory affirmation of the reorganization of CDC of CDIC, Senator Austin said today. In the meantime, the Government has given Senator Austin and the CDIC responsibility for the following assets and enterprises in addition to the CDC shares: Canadair Limited, The de Havilland Aircraft of Canada, Limited—

And certain other corporations. The release put out by Senator Austin concludes with this paragraph:

Legislation will be introduced in Parliament to carry out obligations to confirm the Government's agreement with CDC, rendering it an ordinary commercial corporation which will adopt a new name.

I would like to emphasize the reference to legislation. It goes on to read:

• (1510)

The legislation will also reflect the CDIC's role in succeeding to CDC's original statutory mandate, and seek formal approval of Parliament for the structure of the Crown Corporation, and a requirement that CDIC obtain the approval of the Government for its corporate strategies, plans, and specific commitments.

In short, Madam Speaker, we have in those two releases notice, subsequent to the estimates being tabled in this House, that the Government has shifted its asset to a new corporation which has been incorporated under the Canada Business Corporations Act, and that the responsible Minister is no longer the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, but is the Minister of State for Social Affairs, Senator Austin.

As further confirmation of what I am saying, Madam Speaker, when Senator Austin appeared before our Finance Committee, I asked him this question, and this is recorded in the Minutes of Monday, December 5:

MR. STEVENS: Who at the present time technically owns the shares of de Havilland and Canadair?

The reply, in part, was as follows:

SENATOR AUSTIN: It is a matter of PCO paperwork, but in law the responsibility is now mine through CDIC. The responsibility speaks from the time of the order by the Governor in Council.

MR. STEVENS: So to all intents and purposes, the shares and the ownership then of the de Havilland and Canadair are CDIC's?

SENATOR AUSTIN: Yes, indeed.

The evidence then goes on to the point where I asked Senator Austin whether he felt that the vote reference in the estimates that were then before us was a fair reference. Did it accurately reflect what we were being asked to vote on? And the Senator replied:

SENATOR AUSTIN: I do not wish to change the vote wording in any way and they remain wholly owned by the Government of Canada through another wholly-owned Crown Corporation, so I see no difficulty.

The Senator then went on basically to say that he felt that whatever had transpired, indeed had transpired, but he did not feel it affected this estimate and the vote in it which I have referred to.

Point of Order—Mr. Stevens

The reason I rise on this point of order, Madam Speaker, is that I feel you may well want to consider whether the two votes which I have referred to under the Ministry of Industry, Trade and Commerce are in the estimates properly, or whether they should both be deleted. I say that, first of all, bearing in mind that we are being asked to approve funds on behalf of a minister of industry, trade and commerce who has now lost the responsibility for the very entities for which he is requesting funding. Second, I would suggest, Madam Speaker, you might consider, based on the various rulings you have given, whether in fact we are dealing with a legislative matter here because, as Senator Austin pointed out, they are contemplating legislation to deal with CDIC which will give them authority to do what the Order in Council has presumably already anticipated, and has put in place. In short, we are being asked to approve a $200 million equity injection into de Havilland and also a $200 million equity injection into Canadair Limited on behalf of a Minister who no longer is responsible for those companies. If we did approve that appropriation, I would suggest to you it should be in the form of legislation.

In addition, think of the dilemma that both the Government and this House will be in if that estimate is approved, because here we have entities which are now no longer owned by the Government of Canada. The $200 million will go into those two entities after the Prime Minister of the country has indicated they are to be wholly owned subsidiaries of CDIC. What exactly does the Government do then? We have authorized it to put $200 million in the form of equity into each of the two companies, but those two companies in turn are to be owned by CDIC.

I would suggest, therefore, Madam Speaker, that if we were to approve the estimates in their present form, it would be a nullity because, in truth, the money, under the present Government's intentions, should be voted to CDIC, and then CDIC may see fit to put the money into their two wholly-owned subsidiaries, de Havilland and Canadair Limited.

I raise this, Madam Speaker, because I think it is a very fundamental matter. Senator Austin informed us that he is going to be requesting at least $100 million more in further estimates for each of these two companies, de Havilland and Canadair, and my feeling is that if we chose, and in your discretion you decided, that the two votes should be deleted, there will be ample time for the Government to request, in a proper way, the funding, which apparently they should have requested a few weeks ago, that is, funding to go into CDIC with an explanation that it intends to use the funds to put further equity into de Havilland and Canadair Limited.

In conclusion I simply say that it appears that these estimates, having been approved it seems well in advance of CDIC even being incorporated, cannot be accepted at the present time as reflecting what in reality is the Government's position with respect to these entities. I would ask you, Madam Speaker, to consider the deletion of the two votes before we deal with the estimates in general tomorrow night.

Point of Order—Mr. Stevens

[Translation]

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, I do not think that the remedy being sought by the Hon. Member should be to simply strike out the two votes in question. He is saying that his argument is based on testimony given by the Minister before the Committee, and there is nothing in what he said that proves the two items are likely to have any legislative effect. I think they have their raison d'être. These two items in the supplementary estimates meet all the requirements of the Chair's previous ruling on admissibility of items in the estimates. I understand that the Hon. Member may disagree, and that eventually legislation might be tabled in Parliament for other purposes, and this legislation would then form the basis, if necessary, of future estimates. However, despite the testimony of Senator Austin to which the Hon. Member is referring, at the time the estimates are tabled, these items are based on practical considerations and meet the requirements of the Chair's ruling, because they do not seek to create a new legislative authority but in fact exist because that authority exists already. I think that the remedy the Hon. Member should be seeking is to object to these items and not to ask that they be deleted. If he does not like them, he can object, and according to parliamentary procedure the House will be voting tomorrow. However, I do not believe he has shown that the items were infringing some regulation or were at odds with the Chair's previous rulings or with parliamentary procedure, and therefore, the only way to express objection to these items is not to ask for their deletion but to object formally and to put the matter to a vote.

[English]

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, I have a couple of points which have not been covered. The Government House Leader (Mr. Pinard) refers to previous rulings. I would agree with him that there might be some remedy in curing the very valid point that is raised by the Hon. Member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens), that if there were to be further supplementary estimates, the problem might be cured in the next set. We are not in that position. We are in the position now where estimates are deemed, under the Standing Orders, to have been reported yesterday, and we are voting on all of them tomorrow night.

The Government House Leader also says that the case which has been very reasonably made by the Hon. Member for York-Peel is based on testimony in committee. That is not the case at all, Madam Speaker, and you should, when considering the matter, take into account two press releases. One of them is in the name of the Government of Canada. That is on the front page of the news release, which was dated November 24, 1982, announcing that:

• (1520)

The CDIC was incorporated under the Canada Business Corporations Act in order to hold the Government's 85 per cent share (48.6 per cent of voting control) of the common shares of the Canada Development Corporation (CDC), as part of a reorganization permitting CDC to operate as a purely commercial venture and the CDIC to succeed to CDCs public policy mandate.

That press release, taken together with another press release dated the same day, issued on the stationery of the Office of the Prime Minister, outlines the names of the companies involved here. It reads as follows:

The Prime Minister announced today that the Government has approved the transfer of certain commercial assets and enterprises to the Canada Development Investment Corporation (CDIC) and its responsible Minister, Senator Jack Austin. In addition to the Government's Canada Development Corporation (CDC) shares, the transfer is to include—

And then among others appear Canadair Limited and de Havilland Aircraft of Canada Limited, the two companies mentioned by my colleague in making his point with respect to the two items in the estimates.

So, Madam Speaker, it is not based merely on testimony in a committee; it is based on a news release of the Government of Canada and a companion release by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) stating that CDIC has come into being for certain specific purposes, one of which was to assume the responsibilities outlined by my colleague, the Hon. Member for York-Peel. I think he has hit the nail on the head when he says that in all probability the estimates, including these two items, were prepared before the creation of CDIC and before the transfers had taken place. The transfers are there.

I see more of a problem with respect to the dilemma mentioned by the Hon. Member for York-Peel, because I do not think, with respect to his submission, that the voting of the $200 million in each case to each of these Crown corporations would be a nullity in view of the events which have over-run the purpose of the estimates; rather, I think probably the votes would go forward, but wrongfully, and they would be untouchable legally by the new Crown corporation. What is more, Madam Speaker, I think the end result would be that there would be no machinery to get those moneys back to the Government of Canada. That has happened in the past, too. So there they would sit.

I think it is a very serious question that should be taken under consideration. I suggest it is curable, not by the estimates any more because we are at the end of the supply period, but by proper legislation. Indeed, we can deal with it fairly quickly if that is the course the Government intends to follow in order to meet the impossible situation outlined by the Hon. Member for York-Peel.

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, I think the House must appreciate that somewhere along the line the Government changed course. It gave its shares in these two Crown corporations, Canadair and de Havilland, to CDIC. The Government no longer has a direct interest in those two corporations. That being so, to be proper, this vote would have to be a vote granting money to CDIC so that it could fulfil certain requirements with respect to investment in Canadair and de Havilland. On that basis, the Hon. Member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens) is quite correct. There has been a change in the corporate set-up reflected in the estimates. So what we are being asked to do is to make advances to two Crown corporations which the Crown no longer owns. On that basis the Government has created the problem, and these two estimates must be withdrawn or disallowed.

Now, the Government can, as pointed out by the Hon. Member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) introduce a Bill, or perhaps a new set of Supplementary Estimates, for $400 million or whatever it needs, which would probably be more than that. But the way it is now, the Government has created a corporate mess and it cannot now come before the House and ask for advances for the purpose of capitalization of two Crown-owned corporations because those corporations are no longer directly owned by the Crown. Our submission, then, is that these votes are no longer proper. The Government's own action has made them improper.

Madam Speaker: Since this is a very technical matter, I shall have to take this point of order under consideration I wish to thank the Hon. Members for the points they have made.

PETITION

MR. BRADLEY—OPPOSITION TO BILL C-10

Mr. Bud Bradley (Haldimand-Norfolk): Madam Speaker, it is my duty to present a petition signed by 76 members of the Congregation of the Selkirk Church of Christ Christian Chapel which is in my constituency of Haldimand-Norfolk, who are very concerned about the provisions of the proposed Non-Profit Corporations Act, Bill C-10. The purpose of this petition is to protest the Government's proposed changes in Bill C-10, which allows a court of law to interfere in the affairs of the Church body. The nature of the petition is to urge the Government to drop the provisions of Bill C-10 which would infringe on the rights and privileges of the Church to take a moral stand on matters concerning membership of that Church body.

The petitioners hope that in your examination of the petition you will find the petition in order, and that you will exercise the discretionary powers vested in the office of the Speaker of the House to allow discussion and referral to committee at the earliest possible time, in order that the sanctity of the Church in Canadian society can be preserved.

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 987 and 4,528.

[Text]

DEFENCE INDUSTRY PRODUCTIVITY PROGRAM

Question No. 987—Mr. MacKay:

1. Did the Government undertake a national advertising campaign to publicize the industrial benefits of the F-18 fighter and, if so, what is the planned expenditure for the advertising campaign?

2. Are the full benefits of the $2.91 billion in industrial offsets contingent upon Government assistance to Canadian industry to permit it to re-tool and thereby take advantage of these programs and, if so, will the Defence Industry Productivity (DIP) Program be part of such Government assistance to industry?

3. What effect did the August, 1978 round of cut backs have in the DIP budget for the fiscal year (a) 1978-79 (b) 1979-80?

4. Does the development of high technology projects require several years lead time and, if so, what effect have these cutbacks had in industry's ability to take advantage of the current industrial offset program?

5. With reference to DIP expenditures for the fiscal year ended (a) 1974 (b) 1975 (c) 1976 (d) 1977 (e) 1978 (f) 1979 (g) 1980, what was the total in grants and contributions (i) to industry (ii) when deflated by an appropriate price index?

6. Has the DIP budget for the fiscal year 1980-81 been committed since December of 1979?

7. Did the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce receive applications totalling over $100 million for the development of industrial technology for DIP assistance in the fiscal year 1980-81 and, if so, what effect will the lack of DIP funds have on the $2.91 billion industrial offset program associated with the F-18 fighter?

Order Paper Questions

8. Will the lack of DIP funds affect jointly funded projects by the Canadian and American Governments, or other projects such as the STOL or Cruise missile?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): As of May 26, 1980, the reply for the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce was as follows:

1. Yes. Soon after the new fighter aircraft contract was signed, the Government sponsored a series of advertisements to inform Canadians on the breadth of the CF-18 industrial benefits program and to encourage Canadian companies to take advantage of the new business opportunities the program offers, at a cost of $259,000, to be shared by the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce and National Defence.

2. Of the $2.91 billion industrial benefits program contracted by McDonnell Douglas, $2.453 billion was firmly committed, that is to say, was not dependent on any form of federal Government assistance. The remaining $457 million, which comprises a number of structural, engine and avionics work packages on the CF-18 and F-18, was conditional on Canadian companies being competitive with existing U.S. suppliers to McDonnell Douglas. The costs of tooling, training, modernizing plant and equipment, etc., required to start up production in Canada on this aerospace and electronics works must be borne by Canadian funding sources. The Defence Industry Productivity Program may be expected to provide part of the federal Government assistance to industry in this regard. Accordingly, the Government authorized the addition of $39.5 million to the DIPP budget (19.5 million for year 1980/81; $20.0 million for year 1981/82), to support the establishment in Canada of second sources for four CF/F-18 airframe structural components. This amount would be repayable from company earnings through the standard terms and conditions of the source establishment provisions of the DIP Program.

3. In the August, 1978 budget reductions, the contribution budget for DIPP was reduced from $44.2 million to $40 million for 1978/79 and 1979/80.

4. With respect to high technology development projects arising from the F-18 aircraft industrial offsets, lead times of up to four years before production start-up were anticipated. Two years lead time would be required before most special materials and equipment are identified and procurement initiated. The F-18 contract has been signed and areas requiring development are still being defined. Accordingly, the shortage in DIPP funding had little or no effect on the ability of industry to take advantage of the industrial offset program in order to undertake high technology development.

The application of technology already developed and where specific manufacturing opportunities had been identified, much shorter time scales are involved. Where source establishment and capital assistance aspects of the DIP Program are involved, the impact will be more serious unless funding beyond the current budget levels are provided.

5. (i) The total DIPP contributions to industry were:

(a) 1973/74—$57.5 million
(b) 1974/75—$48.4 million
(c) 1975/76—$39.0 million
(d) 1976/77—$44.9 million
(e) 1977/78—$43.2 million
(f) 1978/79—$52.2 million
(g) 1979/80—$57.9 million

(ii) The total DIPP contributions when deflated by an appropriate price index were:

(a) 1973/74—$57.5 million
(b) 1974/75—$42.0 million
(c) 1975/76—$30.5 million
(d) 1976/77—$32.0 million
(e) 1977/78—$28.8 million
(f) 1978/79—$32.7 million
(g) 1979/80—$33.1 million

Note: Using the Implicit Price Index for the gross national expenditure published by Statistics Canada, the above values have been computed in terms of the FY 1973/74 dollar.

6. The DIPP budget for fiscal year 1980/81 was committed by December, 1979 to pay legal obligations under contract with Canadian industry.

7. Yes. The Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce received application for DIPP assistance in 1980/81 totalling over $100 million for development of industrial technology.

Federal Government assistance to Canadian industry on behalf of the F-18 fighter aircraft offsets are in two parts:

(a) The assistance provided as a special fund to McDonnell Douglas for high technology production involving a minimum number (six) of companies. This funding has been provided by the federal Government and is separate from the normal DIPP funding. (See reply to Part 2)

(b) Normal DIPP funding is the second source of assistance to Canadian industry. Canadian contractors will be seeking contracts under the F-18 offset program with the intention of utilizing existing plant equipment which may or may not have been acquired with DIP Program support. Other contractors will require additional advanced capital equipment and may acquire the equipment with their own resources or seek DIP Program assistance which can only be provided if funds are provided in excess of the Crown's legal commitments.

8. (a) Canadian-American Joint Projects. Lack of DIPP funding had no impact on the completion of joint projects underway as long as these projects remained within their planned budgetary allocations. Projects under discussion or negotiation were scrutinized carefully for maximum potential contribution to the Canadian economy.

(b) STOL Aircraft. The jet STOL aircraft will be a multimillion dollar development project for which foreign partners are being sought. The Canadian federal Government's share of the funding would be considered separately from the normal DIP Program budget. The activity is in the project definition stage.

(c) The Cruise Missile. The Cruise missile project had not yet received approval in principle and authority to contract by May 26, 1980. When approved, additional funding was allocated to this project.

(d) Other Projects. Other projects could not be accepted until the DIP Program funding was increased. Based on the approved levels of funding at May 26, 1980, the entire 1980/81 budget was required for legal contractual commitments in hand.

CONVERSION OF GOLF COURSES TO METRIC MEASUREMENT

Question No. 4,528—Mr. Thomson:

Were nine clinics, run by a Mr. Dan Halldorson and supporting the conversion of golf courses to metric measurement, paid for by the Metric Commission and, if so, what was the cost to the taxpayers?

Mr. David Berger (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): The total cost of the nine clinics run by Mr. Dan Halldorson was $55,000, $35,000 of which was paid by the Metric Commission and the remaining $20,000 paid by the private sector.

MEASURE TO MODIFY BENEFIT INDEX

The House resumed from Tuesday, December 7, consideration of the motion of Mr. Gray that Bill C-133, an Act to amend the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act (No. 2), be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton) (p. 21305).

Mr. Terry Sargeant (Selkirk-Interlake): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate in the debate on Bill C-133 today. By way of opening, let me read from two letters from constituents that I received in today's mail concerning the Bill. In the last two weeks all of us have received dozens of letters from retired civil servants, Armed Forces personnel and members of the RCMP, seeking our assistance as Members of Parliament to stop Bill C-133. Some of these letters have been read in the speeches of Members of all Parties this week. Let me read from one written by a retired civil servant in Winnipeg who writes:

Dear Member of Parliament . . . It's not too late!!!!!!

Be fair to the Public Service Pensioners.

In good faith over many years of employment a sur-charge deduction was made from our pay cheques to cover any increase in the cost of living. This was supposed to be reflected on our pension cheques.

Now with no thought to the dedicated years of service of thousands and the foregoing understanding, —with one swift axe—GONE!!!!!

This will not only effect next years cheques but snowballs for years to come.

Please Mr. M.P.—RECONSIDER—Do a little soul searching and give the pensioner his just return.

Let me read from the second letter written by a person in Selkirk who retired from the Armed Forces after 29 years of service, part of it during the last war. He writes as follows:

Two years ago I received notification that in 1983 my pension would be adjusted upward. I was happy to hear this because it meant that I would finally get a monthly cheque that would more realistically compensate me for my long years of service to my country.

If Bill C-133 is allowed to pass, I and many others like me will feel that our country has let us down.

Please, USE EVERY MEANS AT YOUR DISPOSAL TO STOP BILL C-133 and help preserve the rights and dignity of those who served.

I am glad to have this opportunity to put on record my opposition to what I consider to be an offensive piece of legislation. Bill C-133, as we all know, is part of the Government's six and five con job and will limit pensions of federal public servants to 6 per cent next year and 5 per cent in 1984.

On Monday night, the President of Treasury Board (Mr. Gray), no doubt hoping to quell a backbench revolt in his caucus, proposed an amendment to cap these pensions at 6.5 and 5.5 per cent. This six and a bit and five and a bit amendment does not alter the fact that the Government has a commitment to continue full indexation of public servants' pensions.

Bill C-133 is different from the rest of the six and five program. In this case it is not the Government's own money that it is tinkering with. The pensions are paid out of a fund established by matching contributions from employees and the Government and its agencies. This fund belongs to the pensioner, not to the Government.

Bill C-133 is unique in the Government's six and five program because it is an act of outright robbery made legal by an Act of Parliament. Federal public servants have paid for their pensions out of their own pockets. They contributed 6.5 per cent of their salaries for their pensions. On top of that they paid an additional 1 per cent to the supplementary retirement benefits account to protect the purchasing power of their pensions by having them indexed to inflation. For the right to a fully-indexed pension, Public Service employees have paid 7.5 per cent of their salaries, one of the highest rates of contributions of any employer-sponsored pension program. The pension contributions of their employers, this Government and its agencies, are not Government handouts; they are part of the employees' over-all benefit package. It is really the deferred income of Public Service employees themselves.

Taken together, there is more than $15.6 billion in the Public Service superannuation account and the supplementary retirement benefits account. Considering that, it is clear that the combined Public Service pension plan is on a sound financial foundation. Therefore, there can be no basis for arguments which attempt to prove the Government must reduce the indexing on these pensions because the fund cannot cover the cost.

About 200,000 pensioners will be hit by the cutbacks contained in Bill C-133. Capping the indexation of Public Service pensions will rob these pensioners of about $100 million in the next two years alone. And, of course, like the rest of the six and five program, when indexing is re-introduced, after 1984 it will be on a smaller base pension. The result will be pension cuts for all time.

The average pensioner is not getting rich from the Public Service pension plan. Of course, there are exceptions. I read a few days ago that Mr. Michael Pitfield, well known to all of us, could stand to collect some $100,000 annually by the time he is eligible for retirement ten years from now. Obviously, capping Public Service pensions matters little to a man of Mr. Pitfield's financial stature. But for the average pensioner, it is quite a different story. The average annual pension for contributors to the Public Service pension plan is not in the six figure range, as Mr. Pitfield's will be. No, it is only $8,100. And the average survivor benefit paid to widowed spouses is only $3,200 per year.

Slashing the indexation of Public Service pensions will mean a loss of $1,400 in pension benefits for contributors to the plan over the next two years alone. It will mean a loss of $577 to widowed spouses receiving survivor benefits. Surely the Government must realize that the impact of this Bill, and of its whole six and five program will be to drive thousands of Canadians further below the poverty line.

I will be interested to see how many Liberal backbenchers will keep their promise to the Public Service employees they represent and vote against the Bill. How many of them will worm out of their promise with the six and a bit and five and a bit amendment of the President of the Treasury Board?

I will be interested, too, to see how many Tories will show up when it comes time to vote on this piece of legislation. I think the Tories must feel uncomfortable about having to deal with this Bill and the rest of the Government's six and five schemes. The Conservatives have promised public servants that they will oppose Bill C-133; but they have promised the Government, too, that they will deal with the Bill expeditiously. Now, how can a Party promise on the one hand to fight the Bill, while it is promising, on the other, to give it expeditious passage in the House?

I was rather amused on Monday night when the Hon. Member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon) talked about the Hon. Member for Hull (Mr. Isabelle) appearing to be like a man trying to ride two bicycles on a high wire at the same time. What was amusing was that my friend from Victoria then jumped on those two bicycles himself. He claimed to be opposed to Bill C-133 because it upset a contract.

What did Bill C-124 do, Mr. Speaker? The Hon. Member for Victoria said that Bill C-124 provided for a small cut in the pay of Members of Parliament. That is true enough. He implied that that was all Bill C-124 was about. He did not say anything else about that Bill. He did not mention that it represented a breach of contract, or, to use his words, "upset the contracts" of some 700,000 civil servants, Armed Services personnel and members of the RCMP. I call that selective criticism, or a pretty good high wire act.

It is also worth noting that the Tories have moved an amendment for a six months' hoist on Bill C-133. In August, when Members of this Party moved a similar amendment on Bill C-124, the Tories—to a person—voted against it. It is very difficult to follow the convolutions of Tory logic, Mr. Speaker.

The Tories supported the introduction of the six and five program in August. Their Leader says they support the spirit of six and five. But now when public attention is focused on the impact of six and five on Old Age Security, Family Allowance and Public Service pensions, the Tories have discovered, by some magic no doubt, that there are poor people who are going to be hurt by the Government's restraint program.

What did they expect? They knew very well when we were voting on wage controls for the Public Service and armed forces personnel in August that the six and five program would attack the living standard of pensioners and the poor. It was there in the June budget for all to see. As the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy) said on Monday night, the Tories are working both sides of the street. To atone for their sin of voting for Bill C-124, they are now opposing the legislation to implement the six and five for which they voted.

The Tories support the thrust of the six and five program. By their own admission, the only problem they find with it is that it does not go far enough. Through the six and five program the Government is taking away from those Canadians who are the poorest and giving to the wealthiest. This they do in the name of creating a positive investment climate.

In November 1981 the Government closed a number of loopholes for the rich. To compensate, it reduced the marginal tax rate for the richest Canadians by something in the order of 10 per cent. Then, under a barrage of criticism from the Tories and lobbies for big business and the banks, the Government began to backtrack. Now most of the loopholes have been reopened and the tax rate for rich Canadians has been kept at its reduced rate. This amounts to more than a billion dollar tax cut for Canada's wealthiest taxpayers. Contrast that to the impact of capping the indexing on income tax at six and five per cent and the 40 per cent increase in unemployment insurance premiums. That will take $3.5 billion out of the pockets of ordinary working Canadians. Tell me how this represents an equal sacrifice for all Canadians.

Or consider this: last November the Government implemented a $5.7 billion cut for medicare and post-secondary education. Only a few months later the Liberal Government, with the support of their Tory allies, boosted the handouts to oil companies through PIP to $6.5 billion. It is restraint for health care and education and increased welfare for the oil companies!

This is the kind of program for economic recovery that inspires Tories and Liberals alike. It does not matter which Party it is, both of them are quick to criticize the labour productivity of ordinary Canadians and attack our social programs, but they never utter a word to challenge the kinds of corporate investment decisions made by big business. My God, even the "Harvard Business Review" has criticized North American management for being too preoccupied with the short-run buck and not sufficiently concerned with long-run investment.

The Tories and Liberals stand solidly behind restraining the incomes of ordinary Canadians and driving thousands more into poverty. But let any of them suggest that our captains of industry and finance may not really have the best interest of the country at heart, and they are quickly brought back into line. Faith in economic decision-making in corporate boardrooms and faith in the ability of the marketplace to get us out of this economic mess are what inform the economic thinking of the Liberals and Tories. As my Leader said when responding to the mini-budget of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde), this is 1982, not 1932; the Liberals and Tories apparently have learned precious little from the depression. They insist on dealing with the myths about private enterprise and refuse to recognize, as most European Governments and the Government of Japan have done, that societies cannot rely on raw capitalism and the law of the jungle for economic stability and growth.

If the Government is guided by an irrational faith in the ability of Canadian Pacific and the Royal Bank to pull us out of economic hard times, what is the purpose of six and five? The reason for the six and five program is political, not economic, I am sure most Liberal Members opposite are hoping that this program will save their political hides. I wish them good luck. The economy has deteriorated steadily in spite of liberal doses of fiscal and monetary restraint. Already this year we have seen more than 34,000 business and personal bankruptcies in the country, and there are now more than 1.5 million people officially unemployed across the country. Given that the Government intends, by and large, to let free enterprise take its course, allowing of course for odd Dome-style bail-outs, it needed a program which would create the illusion of action against the erosion of incomes of the poor and middle-income Canadians. That is what this program does. Obviously it has been in the works for some time.

Last year we learned through a document which my Leader obtained that the Government wanted the following:

> A program of consultation and public relations aimed at changing public attitudes and expectations would be useful, even though the main advantage of the program would be that it would enable the Government to be seen doing something about inflation.

As we know the centrepiece for the six and five program is wage controls on Public Service incomes. Bashing unions, especially Public Service unions, is good corporate boardroom sport, and the six and five program was the kind of thing guaranteed to get the boardrooms buzzing. But even according to the Government's own assessment, wages were not the cause of inflation. Again I am quoting from the same document:

> We are not currently facing wage-driven inflation such as we were in 1975, instead real wages have fallen for four consecutive years.

The Government has been conning Canadians with the six and five program. It is relying on the willingness of ordinary Canadians to share and to sacrifice in order to make things better for everyone. But that gang over there has been clever to keep under wraps the transfer of wealth from the poor to the rich which accompanies this con job. Revealing that would most certainly minimize the public relations value the Government expects to reap from this program.

While it is attacking the living standards of public servants, mothers and pensioners, the Government is pulling out all stops to sell this program as good news. Last week I received, as well as did all other Members of Parliament, an attractive promotional binder on the six and five program from the Davey-Joyal Committee. It is a clever piece of work because it avoids the charge of being partisan by avoiding mention, by name, of the Liberal Party of Canada. But in substance it is no different than the Liberal Party strategy binder that the committee distributed to Cabinet Ministers and Government Members of Parliament over the summer.

This attractive document, some 150 pages in total, goes on at length about selling the program to ordinary Canadians and enlisting support of big business. As we all know, big business is flocking to six and five like lemmings to the sea. Keeping wages down and undermining Government social programs, is just the kind of thing which gladdens the hearts of corporate generals.

Mr. Murphy: And of the Tories and Liberals.

Mr. Sargeant: Yes, the Hon. Member for Churchill is correct. Senator Davey and the Secretary of State (Mr. Joyal) are proud that they have kept their promotional budget for six and five to less than $100,000, but for the majority of Canadians that $100,000 might as well have been spent on potted plants for Government offices.

The Government's six and five program is a sham. It is the kind of thing that is bound to win support from the Tory benches, but we in this Party will have no part of it. It is an attack on collective bargaining rights for public servants, on our system of social security and on the public servants' own pension plan, as we see in this Bill before the House. At the same time it is intended to create the illusion that the Government is doing something about the declining purchasing power of poor and middle-income Canadians, while in fact money is being taken from the poor and given to the rich.

Bill C-133 is a distasteful piece of legislation. Through this Bill the Government intends to reduce the pensions of Public Service employees, derived from their own pension funds.

• (1550)

Just before I conclude, let me read a couple of paragraphs from a news release put out by the Public Service Alliance of Canada. It is dated December 7, 1982, and concerns Bill C-133. In part, this release reads:

> Again, this is a deception being perpetrated by the federal government. The same government that reneged on signed contracts with its own employees is now reneging on a legislative agreement with its former employees.
> Federal public service employees have been deceived by their own employer. They have contributed to a pension plan under the condition that they would receive a fully indexed allowance but the government has unilaterally changed the rules, leaving pensioners stranded.
> The reduction in the indexing of federal public service pensions is a punitive measure aimed at those who can least afford it and the minimal saving will do nothing to improve the economy.

That last sentence says it all.

Mr. Speaker, this Bill is a punitive measure. It represents a minimal saving to the Government but at a high cost to those who can least afford it. It will do nothing, I repeat, nothing to improve the economy. It is for these very reasons, Mr. Speaker, that I and my Party oppose this legislation, just as we opposed Bill C-124, Bill C-131 and Bill C-132. We will not be party to any legislation that breaks faith with the Public Service workers or the pensioners of this country.

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, I will be relatively brief in my remarks. This matter came most directly to our attention when we dealt with Bill C-124. My opposition to that Bill was expressed in the usual way here on the floor of the House by my recorded vote in opposition to it. I voted in opposition because it was abundantly clear what the Government intended to do. There was an understanding and agreement that such universal programs and commitments were made to public servants, maybe not contractually in written form and on paper, but nevertheless valid, not only in my judgment but in the minds of upwards of 200,000 retired public servants, their widows and other dependants. They were absolutely certain in their minds that there was an understanding and an agreement.

As with that measure then, the same holds true with respect to the measure currently before us, and it is my intention to vote against it as well. I do so because it does not represent, as offered by Government, the means of bold leadership on restraint in this country. It represents to me the conundrum which people must face when they are faced with decisions made in principle or on principle. Principle, it seems to me, is never changed. Frequently the method of expressing principle is changed. Here we do not have that course of action on the part of the Government but, rather, quite the opposite. The principle is of no concern whatsoever, expediency is.

I have one or two comments with respect to the silence of the junior Government Member from the electoral riding of Halifax, the Minister of State for International Trade (Mr. Regan). I wonder, as do thousands upon thousands of public sector employees in the metropolitan area of Halifax-Dartmouth why the Minister has been silent on this subject. He is derelict in his responsibility to those people. The Hon. Member for Halifax West (Mr. Crosby) and myself have taken a common stand. We have invited the Minister's participation on behalf of one of the largest groupings of public sector employees in this nation, but we have had no response. The Minister has remained silent. Eventually he will have to answer to those people in his constituency who will be most directly affected by this legislation.

It is not my intention to put numbers on the record, the numbers involved in this Bill or the number of people affected. This job has been done by many others. The amount of money involved is relatively small compared to our deficit. We have a deficit rising toward $26 billion. The amount of money that is to be saved through this legislation represents only 0.02 per cent of the deficit. The amount, when looking at total Government expenditures, is virtually nothing. We bail out CNR. We bail out CBC annually. We bail out Air Canada and any company that needs bailing out: Chrysler, Massey-Ferguson to name two, all of this in the name of saving jobs.

Surely this Government recognizes that our country will not progress with regressive legislation such as is before us. This Bill is odious. It is unjust. It perpetrates inequities upon those who place trust in it. It affects the pension base of thousands upon thousands of public servants who will be retiring in the next two to three years. This Bill seriously affects the base from which calculations will be made. All one has to do is to multiply this base throughout years of retirement.

This Bill represents a loss of many, many thousands of dollars. It represents a loss to widows and other dependants of deceased employees. This Bill is wrong. The Government was wrong to consider it. Whether or not the Government did this out of concern or to get on the bandwagon with the private sector, I do not know. Certainly the six and five program was a follow-the-private-sector role, as we now know from evidence clearly before us. It was not, as the Government suggests, leadership in the restraint program which, God knows, this nation needs. I repeat, this Bill should be opposed.

I would hope that those on the other side know the deep concern this holds for retired public sector employees, serving employees, not only in the Public Service but in Crown corporations, the Armed Forces, the RCMP—in fact, for employees throughout the public sector. Members on the other side know, they know it in their hearts. I wonder how they are going to deal with principle. I wonder whether they are going to let what they clearly understand to be principle be subjected to the view, or someone's view over there, that this Government must not fall.

Every thoughtful person would honour those who work diligently and loyally throughout their mature years. We should honour that work, respect and commitment. Hopefully those Members will later today stand up and oppose this odious, unfair and iniquitous piece of legislation.

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Mr. Speaker, we are debating Bill C-133 this afternoon, which is a Bill to amend the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act. I would suggest that the Liberal Government is working in reverse. There are other areas upon which the Liberal Government should be focusing its sights. This Government should eliminate waste and mismanagement within the federal Government. By eliminating the waste and mismanagement which is in the billions and billions of dollars, then inflation will drop and indexing will look after itself. We will not have to worry about indexing once we get Government spending under control. The federal Government here could well look to the Province of Manitoba as to how it pays for its indexing. The Roblin Government set up a plan a number of years ago whereby pension moneys are invested to cover the indexing for civil servants in Manitoba. All the indexing comes from the investment of their funds, not from taxes or from general revenues. It is one of the best pension plans in Canada, and it is unfortunate that the federal Government did not implement a similar plan.

To give some examples of waste, where we could start is by considering the document I have in my hand which has just been widely distributed across Canada. It is a transcript of the Prime Minister's (Mr. Trudeau) broadcast to the nation on the economy. There was absolutely no need for this document to be printed. No one is interested in it. It is just an absolute waste of money. In the broadcast, the Prime Minister said:

> Of course I am concerned about waste, very concerned. Where we find it, we will weed it out.

Those were empty, meaningless words. The man does not mean what he says and he never has since he took over the country in 1968. We have heard these statements starting in 1968, and we are hearing them in 1982. He does not mean what he is saying because if he did, he would not allow a document like this to be printed and distributed because it will just end up in the trash-can.

Repeated reference has been made to the Joyal-Davey Report on the six and five progress. It is the most expensive Liberal householder that has been put out in Canadian history. It is just propaganda. It is not required. It is costing hundreds of thousands of dollars, and it is simply not needed.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McKenzie: The Government should pay more attention to the Report of the Auditor General of Canada to the House of Commons.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McKenzie: We receive this Report every year, but the only difference between last year's and this year's Report is that this one is worse than last year's. They never get any better. The Liberals have been in office since 1968 and they have no intention of eliminating waste, Mismanagement and duplication. They simply have no intention of doing it, and one must simply read this document to find that out, because it gets thicker every year, not thinner, and the horror stories mount up.

The Auditor General pointed out that about $16 billion is missing some place. An article in the Ottawa Citizen dated November 2, 1982, states:

> Auditor General Kenneth Dye has again proved that this federal Government is at worst not competent to manage money, and at best reluctant to let us know how they handle it.

That is the understatement of the year. So, what are we doing? We are debating a Bill to cut pensions and retirement benefits. The Government is starting at the wrong end. That is easy. Anyone can go out and cut pensions. But why does it not implement the recommendations in the Auditor General's Report? I have not heard any Liberals discuss that.

I have in my hand a research paper which is full of horror stories within the Liberal Government. I would simply like to read a couple of the examples for the records. One states:

> Spending "Cut" by Juggling the Books. In order to present the illusion of slower spending growth, the Government has changed its accounting system by netting out petroleum taxes against petroleum compensation payments. Thus, through a wave of an accountant's magic wand, spending on a public accounts basis is "cut" by $2.7 billion in the current (1981-82) fiscal year.

That is an example of the type of bookkeeping of these Liberal Governments. I guess that in order to account for this $2.7 billion, the Government will reduce old age pensions. The item continues to read:

> Perhaps the next accounting trip of the Government will be to say that "income taxes are really a public debt tax, and as such interest on the debt does not cost the Government anything." The logic of this is the same as the logic used by the Government in saying that it does not cost anything to subsidize imported oil.

That statement came from a Progressive Conservative research analysis based on the 1981 budget. That is an example of juggling the books. I say: never mind juggling the books; start balancing the books and start spending the money properly.

The classic example of horror stories is found in Public Works. It just goes on and on. There is absolutely no control in Public Works. We have empty offices all over the place. Petro-Canada has skyscrapers in Calgary which are full of empty offices and it is building another skyscraper. There is absolutely no need for Petro-Canada to be building any more skyscrapers or to be obtaining any more office space. The Government could reduce the amount of office space it has instead of starting to cut old age pensions and retirement benefits.

With reference to Bill C-133, I would like to point out the average pension income for retired Government workers. It amounts to $6,900 for retired workers and their survivors, and old age pension adds another $2,963. The national average poverty line for a single person is $7,940 and $10,400 for a couple. These figures are derived from Statistics Canada "Low Income Cut-Offs of Family Units, 1981", adding 10.8 per cent to allow for inflation.

The Government estimates saving $85 million by restricting indexing of Public Service pensions to six per cent and five per cent. The source of this figures comes from the June budget papers. Supplementary Estimates (B), on the other hand, ask for $1.9 billion in discretionary non-statutory spending. This amount is more than the estimated $1.4 billion required to bring all senior citizens in Canada above the poverty line.

The Progressive Conservative Government of 1979-80 was able to trim $500 million from the federal budget without any income penalties to retired civil servants or senior citizens in general. About $445 million would be paid out in benefits this year, according to the Treasury Board, and $420 million will come out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund, with only $25 million covered by the contributions made by pensioners when they were employed. This is because the plan was only implemented in 1971, but benefits are extended to all retired public servants, whether or not they contributed to the fund.

As time goes on, the drain on the CRF will diminish and the supplementary retirement benefits account will pay a larger share of the benefits. The total cost of indexing the pension was about 4.5 per cent of payroll last year from regular public servants. Pensions for the Armed Forces and some other groups are administered separately.

Since the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act was passed in March, 1970, it has been amended six times. Over the same period, the Old Age Security Act has been amended 16 times. The Government is seeking approval to reinstate the cap of indexation which was removed in September, 1973. This piecemeal, patchwork approach to pensions is an insult to the senior citizens and a waste of expensive parliamentary time. A bona fide pension fund should be considered, as the one in Manitoba I mentioned which was brought in by a Conservative Government a number of years ago. It is financially sound because pension money is invested instead of being put into general revenue. The present arrangement provides no guarantee of future financial soundness and is too open to meddling from a Government which cannot keep its accounting straight, and I gave examples of its trickery.

The present employees' contribution rate of 1 per cent of salary to the SRBA provides only for a 1.5 per cent inflation rate in the future, according to the Treasury Board. There is $15.5 billion in the basic pension account, the public service superannuation account. An actuarial analysis claims that all of this, including interest, will be required to meet future benefit payments. The level of Government-employer contributions to the PSSA and SRBA should be investigated to determine if they have been adequate. The massive amount of money in the PSSA might be able to cover the cost of pension indexation throughout the SRBA, especially if the funds were invested at a high rate of interest, as I mentioned was done in Manitoba, or some other changes were made. There is no question about the fact that the federal pension plans could stand some improvement in the way they are handled. As I mentioned earlier, the indexing in Manitoba is not a drain on the taxpayers of Manitoba. It is a sound, well-administered pension plan, and it is most unfortunate that the Liberal Government did not study this plan. If it had, we would not be in quite the same mess that we are today.

This is a regressive piece of legislation. The Government is working in reverse. If they were carrying out the recommendations in the Auditor General's Report, eliminating the waste and mismanagement which is costing billions and billions of dollars, this would reduce inflation and we would not have to be launching an all-out attack on pensioners, and retirement benefits in general.

I am prepared to vote against this Bill, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The question is on the amendment (Mr. Baker) (Nepean-Carleton). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment?

Those in favour of the amendment will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Those opposed to the amendment will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): In my opinion, the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Call in the Members.

MOTIONS UNDER S.O. 43

[English]

AUDITOR GENERAL'S REPORT

SUGGESTED ADOPTION OF RECOMMENDATIONS

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Since the Auditor General has now confirmed what many of us have long suspected, that this Government has turned Parliament into a large rubber stamp, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn):

That the Government urgently adopt the recommendations of the Auditor General, stop creating Crown corporations and stop bailing out failing companies, before the taxpayers revolt and refuse to supply the ink for the pad.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

CN MARINE ACCOUNTING PRACTICES

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Madam Speaker, in view of the seriousness and urgency which the Auditor General attaches to present accounting practices of CN Marine, and in light of the Auditor's concern over the limited arrangements for audit and the consequent lack of control over Government moneys spent to subsidize East Coast ferry services, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay):

That, as a first positive step toward meeting the concerns of the Auditor General, the Government take the appropriate steps to have the Auditor General named joint auditor of CN Marine.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

HEALTH

NATIVE INFANT MORTALITY RATES

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Madam Speaker, the Cree Indians of Quebec have for some time been lobbying the federal Government to invite the World Health Organization to study native health problems in Canada. In this they were supported recently by the Editor of the Canadian Journal of Public Health, who feels that international effort may be the only way of reversing, for instance, the appalling native infant mortality rates, which are said to be worse than those of Indonesia or Nigeria. I therefore move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Saskatoon East (Mr. Ogle):

That the Government swallow its pride and allow the World Health Organization to investigate the intolerable death rate among native people and, if it will not, that the Minister of National Health and Welfare make a statement to this House as to why not, and as to what the Government intends to do to improve the social and economic conditions that make such a study necessary.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

SHIPBUILDING

CONSTRUCTION OF ONTARIO DRYDOCK

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, in view of the fact that an agreement was made between the federal and Ontario Governments to assist financially in the building of a new 1,300 foot drydock in an Ontario shipbuilding yard, and in view of the fact that the decision was made to locate this drydock at the Collingwood Shipyard in Collingwood, Ontario, quite some time ago, therefore I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis):

That the federal Government make good its promise and come forth with its share of the cost of the drydock. This will create much needed ship repair jobs in the area, jobs which would contribute in a positive way to our sagging economy.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

S.O. 43

BAN ON USE OF PRIVATE COMPANY SERVICES

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Madam Speaker, I rise today to point out another example of misconduct by the Post Office. It has come to my attention that the chief executive officer of the Corporation has warned dissatisfied users they cannot opt out of postal service and engage the services of private companies which provide better service at lower cost. This is a further threat to the free enterprise system. The philosophy of Canada Post is a monopolistic one, one which states in effect: "If we cannot compete with private companies, let's make it illegal for them to provide the same services." Therefore I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor):

That, if the Post Office cannot provide better service than private enterprises, it at least permit such companies to pursue their legitimate business aspirations.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

CHARTER OF RIGHTS

APPLICATION TO SASKATCHEWAN PUBLIC SERVANTS

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Madam Speaker, apropos of a point of order which you thought was appropriate yesterday, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of a serious infringement of the Canadian Charter of Rights. Last week Regina Alderman, Harry Van Mulligan, was told by the Government of Saskatchewan either to move to a new post in Prince Albert, or lose his job. Mr. Van Mulligan had earlier spoken out in opposition to the provincial Government's restraint program, while carrying out his elected duties at Regina City Council.

The Premier has since declared that all Government employees who also serve their communities on school boards, hospital boards, and even on church boards, must carefully weigh the consequences of freely speaking their minds in public. I therefore move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo):

That this House condemn the curtailment of basic civil and political liberties of Saskatchewan public servants by the Government of Saskatchewan.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

MARINE TRANSPORT

COAST GUARD REPORT ON VULNERABILITY OF BRIDGES

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Madam Speaker, a report entitled the "Vulnerability of Bridges in Canadian Waters" made by the Canadian Coast Guard states that the A. Murray MacKay Bridge and The Angus L. MacDonald Bridge, which span Halifax Harbour, as well as bridges spanning the St. Lawrence River and Vancouver Harbour have the highest risk of damage in Canada based on pier vulnerability and volume of marine traffic. I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall):

That this House direct the Minister of Transport to act immediately on the recommendation of the Canadian Coast Guard to protect the two bridges spanning Halifax Harbour from damage or destruction, resulting from a marine accident by co-operating with the Province of Nova Scotia and other agencies to construct the necessary safeguards.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

NATIONAL SECURITY

CASE OF CANADIAN PROFESSOR—ROLE OF FORMER SOVIET KGB COLONEL

Mr. Chris Speyer (Cambridge): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice. It pertains to the spy, Hambleton. We know that Col. Rudolph Herrmann was a colonel of the KGB, that he operated in Canada between 1959 and 1968, and that he subsequently moved to New York State but returned to Canada on a regular basis and had continuous contact with Hambleton.

In determining whether he was going to lay charges with respect to prosecuting Hambleton in circumstances where the Americans were willing to make Herrmann available for interrogation, for full debriefing, and to give a sworn statement as to all the activities of Hambleton, how could the Minister's predecessor, or the Minister himself, have neglected his duty in ascertaining all of the information that this particular spy was capable of giving to Canada, especially when, in the circumstances, he was the one who tipped Canada off on the identity of Hambleton?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Madam Speaker, my hon. friend has a mistaken notice of the facts. My philosophy has been to lay out all the facts it is possible to bring forward. I have stated that there was no evidence before the Attorney General in the spring of 1980 concerning any transmission of NATO secrets, that there was not deemed to be sufficient grounds for prosecution, but I can tell the Hon. Member that there was evidence before the Attorney General at that time that in fact Col. Herrmann had been interviewed and that that evidence was available to the Attorney General.

Mr. Speyer: Madam Speaker, there was no evidence from a Canadian source. It was all from the FBI.

INTERROGATION OF KGB COLONEL

Mr. Chris Speyer (Cambridge): Madam Speaker, I would ask the Minister whether the RCMP requested that the Department of Justice attend upon Herrmann for the purposes of getting a sworn statement that would enable the Department to undertake a prosecution.

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Madam Speaker, the RCMP had interviewed Col. Herrmann. The text of that interview was available to the Attorney General and it had been ascertained that he could be made available for trial if his evidence were needed.

INTERVIEW CONDUCTED BY RCMP

Mr. Chris Speyer (Cambridge): Madam Speaker, I will put my question to the Solicitor General. In an article by Neil Macdonald in this morning's Citizen it is stated that at no time did Canada ever debrief the double agent who was Herrmann. I will quote from the article, which I am sure the Solicitor General has read, as follows:

> It may well be that we didn't get the full story because no one from Canada debriefed Herrmann from a Canadian perspective. We had an outline of what he would likely say, but that was provided by the Americans. He was debriefed from an American perspective.

I find it incomprehensible that Herrmann was not debriefed by the RCMP. Is the story accurate?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Madam Speaker, I can assure the Hon. Member that in fact members of the RCMP went to New York, interviewed Herrmann, and prepared the transcript of the interview, which was shown to the Minister of Justice to assist him in making his decision. As a matter of fact, the fact of that interview having taken place was revealed by the FBI on the date that Herrmann was made available in Washington to be interviewed in public.

REASON FOR NOT LAYING CHARGES AGAINST PROFESSOR

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, the Minister of Justice knows, or should know, that the voluntary nature of a confession by an accused person is normally decided by a judge. I would assume that the Solicitor General would also be aware of that doctrine of the law of evidence, and that all that is necessary in order to lay charges is a prima facie case, and not evidence sufficient to support a prosecution. Both Ministers seem to be hiding behind the doctrine of inducement which is only one element which goes toward determining whether or not a statement by an accused person is voluntary.

It would seem that the decision here was taken by the Government acting as a judge. Why did the Solicitor General or the Minister of Justice not allow a judge to make that decision, rather than usurping the function of the court itself? Why did they not lay charges and let a judge make that decision?

• (1420)

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice): Madam Speaker, the only time in which the matter was before the Attorney General was in the spring of 1980. He made a decision on April 25 that there was not sufficient evidence to lay before a court. No part of that concern had to do with what my hon. friend states. It had to do with the insufficiency of the evidence that was available at that time.

DECISION ON ADMISSIBILITY OF EVIDENCE

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, how does that square, then, with the statement of the Minister of Justice that that conclusion was reached because the judgment was made that, after having shown the telex to Hambleton, that constituted an inducement which would bar the admissibility of the subsequent statement of the accused, Hambleton, a question normally decided by a judge and not by an official, or by a Minister or anyone in the Government? Why was that question as to whether or not it constituted an inducement only one fact going toward the voluntary nature of a confession which would allow its admission in evidence? Why was that decision made by Ministers of the Crown, rather than by a court of law?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice): Madam Speaker, my hon. friend is again confused, I have to tell him, as to the facts. All the facts that he is talking about occurred after the decision by the Attorney General as to whether or not to lay a prosecution.

LOCALE OF TRIAL

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Justice. I want to ask him why we could not have had the locale of the Hambleton trial here in Canada on the basis of NATO secrets being compromised. Could we not have imported the evidence, as well as exported it to Britain? Then we would not have seen the spectacle of having to have Britain do the job for us, to the humiliation of our Security Service.

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice): Madam Speaker, the only point at which the matter was before the Attorney General for consideration as to whether or not to lay a prosecution was in April, 1980. I have already made it clear that there was no evidence before the Attorney General at that time of the transmission of NATO secrets, but I have also made it clear, as indeed it is indicated by the prosecution in the Treu case, that the Government did not consider that the transmission of NATO secrets would not have been sufficient to lay a charge, if indeed there were evidence to substantiate that. The problem was that there was no such evidence.

MISCELLANEOUS ESTIMATES COMMITTEE

RESIGNATION OF CHAIRMAN

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Madam Speaker, all this last week we have been asking only economic questions and job-related questions. However, today I have a different question which I will direct to the President of the Privy Council, because it is a matter which affects the House of Commons. Last night the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier voted against the Liberal Government. Today the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates met. We were told that the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier had to resign as Chairman of the Committee. We were told that as soon as he resigned he was automatically taken off that Committee. In the spirit of parliamentary reform, will the President of the Privy Council allow that Committee to select the Chairman, who was nominated by the Hon. Member for Kootenay East-Revelstoke and by the Conservatives? Will he allow the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier to remain Chairman of the Committee, as both Opposition Parties insist?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, it seems to me that all the statements made by my hon. colleague are based on hearsay, since he keeps saying: we were told. I want to make it clear that it is not up to me to appoint committee chairmen or to intervene. Committee members are free to choose their own chairman. In the circumstances, the answer to the Hon. Member's question is yes. That is, I do not intend to intervene. It is up to the Member for Ottawa-Vanier and the members of the committee to do as they see fit.

[English]

Mr. Murphy: Madam Speaker, it is not hearsay. It was the Hon. Member for Gloucester who said that it was a matter of Liberal discipline. He said that in the Committee; it is on the record of that Committee.

EX-CHAIRMAN'S COMMITTEE MEMBERSHIP

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Madam Speaker, will the Government allow the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier to stay on the Committee? We were told that as soon as he made his resignation statement—and we got that from the Hon. Member for Gloucester—that he was automatically off that Committee. Will the Minister allow that Member to remain on the committee, and will the Minister allow the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier to remain as Chairman of that committee as both Opposition Parties insist?

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, I would be more inclined to take this request seriously if it had been made by the Member for Ottawa-Vanier.

INCOME TAX

RATE APPLICABLE TO UPPER INCOME GROUPS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. The previous Minister of Finance last November, 1981, suggested that the tax system was unfair and needed adjustment. He attempted to close some loopholes, but to compensate the wealthy, who took most advantage of the loopholes, he lowered their tax rate. The Prime Minister's present Minister of Finance has now reopened the loopholes but has maintained the present lower tax rate for upper income Canadians. Is this the Prime Minister's idea and his Party's idea of a just tax system and a just society?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member has asked me to comment on past and possibly future budgets. I want to tell him that I cannot do that in the context of Question Period. If he wants to discuss over all budgetary matters, there are times and places to do that.

TRANSPORT

INQUIRY RESPECTING CHOICE OF AIR CANADA HEAD OFFICE

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. The Minister is no doubt aware that today, the Board of Directors of Air Canada will be asked to ratify the choice of Place Beaver Hall as the future headquarters of the corporation, even if this choice would cost about $10 million more than another proposal. My question is as follows: Has the Minister, who is aware of this proposal, asked for an investigation, considering the fact that the same accommodation is probably available for $10 million less? If so, who was asked to conduct this investigation, and since a decision is to be made today, has the Minister asked for the decision to be postponed?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, in view of the present economic situation, especially in Montreal, it was to be expected that there would be quite a bit of competition for this Air Canada contract. Offers were made by a dozen or more candidates. The Board of Directors of Air Canada, which has jurisdiction over such matters, established fourteen criteria according to which the acceptability of the tenders was to be assessed. The Government was asked whether these criteria were sufficient, and on behalf of the Government, I said yes, and a decision is to be made today. Among these criteria, cost is, of course, a major factor. I have sufficient information to know that there is no substantial difference in price between the various tenders that were made. This $10 million is pure fantasy.

Mr. La Salle: Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary. Since the press is, of course, being very vocal about a proposal that we find unacceptable, especially considering the economic situation, could the Minister publish the findings of the investigation he requested, with any considerations that might indicate the contract should be awarded to one company rather than another, even if the figure of $10 million is not entirely accurate? Could the Minister publish information that would help us to understand better the reasons for selecting Beaver Hall?

Mr. Pepin: Madam Speaker, I imagine that if the Board of Directors of Air Canada makes the decision anticipated by my hon. colleague, it will give a full explanation of its actions. I imagine that they will issue a press release this afternoon, stating why they made the choice they did. Therefore, if my hon. friend is not satisfied with the explanations Air Canada will be giving this afternoon, I shall then see whether there is a case for providing further explanations.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD

QUERY RESPECTING FALL WHEAT PAYMENT

Mr. Len Gustafson (Assiniboia): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture due to the absence of the Minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board from this House, and who is busy in the other place mailing out volumes of Liberal propaganda and comical cartoons. Will the Minister answer a question with regard to important matters concerning farmers and state whether there will be a wheat payment made this fall from the Canadian Wheat Board to the western grain farmer? Will that payment be made before the year's end, and can the Minister give any indication of the size of that payment?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, the answer is no to both questions.

REQUEST THAT MINISTERS CONFER

Mr. Len Gustafson (Assiniboia): Madam Speaker, we received exactly the same kind of answer about three weeks ago from the Minister when asked a question in the House regarding the Western Grain Stabilization Program. Would the Minister make it a point to contact the Minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board and determine whether he can bring answers for the western Canadian farmers, both in regard to the Wheat Board payments and the Grain Stabilization payments?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member knows full well that there are time limitations on both of those Programs. Until that time is reached, then the decisions are made. The Wheat Board will make them in due course. Those payments will be made on the sales and that type of thing, and he knows that full well, if he studied the legislation and how it operates.

APPLICATION TO MILK PRODUCERS

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Madam Speaker, I think everyone in the House realizes that there will be a long hard winter ahead for a million and a half unemployed, coupled with those on welfare, and not to mention those who qualify for neither, in being able to put enough bread and milk on the table. I ask the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs how he justifies forcing milk producers, such as Beckers and the like, to do away with their imperial measure full quart and raise the price of milk by up to 40 cents a packaged unit in order that the administration can have its own way as a Liberal Government in forcing metric on the Canadian people?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, I suspect that the Hon. Member's statement has no more basis in fact than the petition he tabled in the House a number of weeks ago, a petition that, according to his own words, contained 135,000 names and which he tabled here in the House on behalf of the Toronto Sun. Upon checking the petition, we realized that there were certainly not more than 75,000 names and not even that many addresses. Furthermore, after I wrote to some of the people who signed this so-called petition, some wrote back that they had never signed the petition and that, on the contrary, they were in favour of the metric system.

[English]

Mr. Domm: That had absolutely nothing whatsoever to do with the 135,000 signatures, not 135 as the translation reported.

Oral Questions

INCREASE IN COST OF MILK

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): To give credence to my statement about this being against the wishes of the milk producers, Mr. Lowe, President of Beckers, said that he was extremely upset that metric conversion is being forced on the industry against their wishes, and it is another case of a rip-off by this Government.

Will the Minister just answer the question that I first asked? How does he justify a 40-cent unit price increase on the cost of milk at a time when Canadians can hardly feed the mouths of the babes at their tables because of the unemployment brought about by this Liberal Government?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, I already said that I doubted the accuracy of the Hon. Member's statement. I think he is becoming the House expert on gratuitous statements that later appear to be totally false. It is not the first time the Hon. Member is rising in the House to make statements about the metric system which later were found to be untrue. In this case, I am sure that after checking the facts, we shall realize that once again, the Hon. Member has given the truth a wide berth.

REORGANIZATON OF QUEBECAIR—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mrs. Éva Côté (Rimouski-Témiscouata): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. Representatives of the Department of Transport, Air Canada, the Government of Quebec and Quebecair have been meeting since last Tuesday. Madam Speaker, I wonder whether the Minister could give us a progress report on the discussions being held by the various parties with respect to the restructuration of Quebecair.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, in my last instalment, I said that the question was whether we should create an entirely new company or restructure the existing one. A few days ago, the Government of Quebec and Quebecair made a presentation before a group of negotiators representing the three parties concerned, and I am told this presentation was very realistic. At the present time, its contents are being analyzed and assessed by the negotiators for the Federal Government, and I shall have more news in a few days.

REQUEST FOR REOPENING OF CYPRUS ANVIL MINE

Mr. Sid Parker (Kootenay East-Revelstoke): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Yesterday the Yukon Territorial Assembly passed a motion calling on all parties, including the federal Government, to take whatever steps are necessary to ensure that the Cypress Anvil Mine in Faro is reopened. Will the Minister assure the House that the federal Government is actively pursuing the reopening of the mine through Dome Mines and that the aid package specifically put together for this purpose by the Government is still being pursued?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Yes, Madam Speaker, of course it has been the policy of the Government to do everything possible to ensure that this mine reopens. I am disappointed, though, that labour negotiations broke off the other day. I believe that the union has made all of the concessions that were anticipated orginally, yet Dome has still not settled. Dome indicated that if we filled in the second year of the northern benefits package which my colleague, the Minister of Finance, did, and announced recently, they would then settle. They still have not settled. That is the only discouraging element at the moment. I am very hopeful that Dome will return to the table and sign a collective agreement as soon as possible.

YOUTH UNEMPLOYMENT IN BRITISH COLUMBIA—
AVAILABILITY OF COMPUTER TRAINING PROGRAMS

Miss Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. With youth unemployment in British Columbia having now climbed to 23.4 per cent and with many of the unemployed seeking training or retraining, can the Minister tell the House why these young people are being told by employment centres in the Province that they must wait for at least two years before any one of them can take courses in such important areas as computer programming? Why is there a two-year wait for courses which are considered by the Government itself to be top priority areas?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I would like to point out to the Hon. Member that in this fiscal year we will be spending over $85 million alone in federal funds to assist in the funding of community college programs and courses in the Province of British Columbia. We recently signed a new agreement with the Province of British Columbia under the National Training Act that will allow us to begin to shift the courses into areas of high priority such as computer training.

However, we cannot place people into facilities that do not exist. That is one reason why we, as the federal Government, have the skills growth funding being made available so that provincial Governments, which are responsible for community colleges, can plan and expand facilities in this area. That is why we have put the money forward and have a new National Training Act. This cannot be created overnight and must be worked out in co-operation with the provincial Government.

CASE OF CANADIAN PROFESSOR—POSSIBLE BREACH OF CRIMINAL CODE

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice. The Minister will know that one of the charges laid against Mr. Hambleton was remarkably similar to a charge of treason under our Criminal Code. Will he tell us if the matter was ever referred to the Attorney General of the relevant Province? The minister knows those matters fall within his or her jurisdiction.

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Madam Speaker, my understanding is that the matter was not referred to any provincial Attorney General, but that the possible evidence for a charge of treason and the law of treason itself were examined before coming to a tentative conclusion that there would be no possibility of prosecution.

REQUEST FOR REFERRAL TO PROVINCIAL ATTORNEY GENERAL

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): Madam Speaker, the fact is that the Federal Government usurped the constitutional and legal authority of the Attorney General of the Province in issue and made the decision on its own terms. The horse is certainly out of the barn. Is the Minister now prepared to refer the matter to the appropriate provincial Attorney General for a second opinion?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Madam Speaker, if there is no evidence, there is no evidence.

Mr. Clark: He has just been convicted!

FINANCE

PENALTY FOR PREPAYMENT OF MORTGAGES

Mr. Paul Dick (Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton): Madam Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance, and perhaps the Minister responsible for Housing may have some interest in it. The Interest Act was first enacted in 1886 and it has not been substantially changed in well over 20 years. Section 7 provides that a person can prepay a mortgage by paying a three month's penalty if the mortgage is more than five years in length. Has the Government given any consideration to changing the Interest Act, especially in these times when people have been caught by high mortgages?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I will take the question of the Hon. Member as a representation and will consider his suggestion, bearing it in mind in the preparation of the budget. I will consider whether it is possible or advisable to act in this manner. However, in the meantime, I would hope that we will be able to adopt the Income Tax Act which was introduced earlier this week and which contains provision for refunds to several millions of Canadians. I think that would also immediately help Canadians.

REQUEST FOR LEGISLATION TO AMEND INTEREST ACT

Mr. Paul Dick (Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton): The question I asked with regard to the Interest Act has nothing whatsoever to do with the budget. It can be enacted tomorrow if the Government wants to bring the legislation forward. It would help people caught in a bind in housing. For example, if they have three year or five year mortgages at 18 per cent or 20 per cent interest rates, by law they cannot pay three months' interest and get out of their mortgage commitments because they are not over five years in duration.

The Interest Act should come under the control of the Minister of Finance. Obviously, the Government has not considered helping home owners by this sort of a step so far, but I am asking whether it would consider it soon, and perhaps bring in legislation to change the Interest Act.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): I have already answered this question, Madam Speaker.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

DISAPPEARANCE OF MISSING AIRCRAFT FROM RADAR SCREEN

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence. Canadian Forces are still looking for the two Starfighter aircraft and the pilots recently lost near Cold Lake. Would the Minister tell the House how these two aircraft were lost from radar view, when Canadian Forces Base Cold Lake is one of the six bases recently equipped with the new terminal radar and control system, at a considerable cost?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): First of all, Madam Speaker, I would like to express my sympathy to the families of the two pilots we have lost. It was a most unfortunate accident. I can assure the House that every possible means of finding them has been put into effect. With regard to the remark of the Hon. Member for Victoria concerning the installation of a new radar system which is called, I believe, RATCOM, which is supposed to be operational in Cold Lake, is not actually in our hands yet. It is still in the hands of the contractor for testing and we are still using the old system which is called TRAC. This will be replaced by RATCOM, which is a much better and efficient way of locating the aircraft. However, at the moment, the only way we could trace the plane was through the TRAC system which only gives communication contact not necessarily radar coverage.

NON AVAILABILITY OF EMERGENCY LOCATION TRANSMITTERS

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Is the Minister telling us that over all these years there has been no radar installation at Cold Lake able to track aircraft coming in and going out of Cold Lake? I would appreciate if he would answer that question. Perhaps, while he is on his feet, he could also tell us whether these planes had any kind of emergency locator transmitters on them or anything else which would indicate the site of the crash.

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): As far as emergency location is concerned, we know very well that these fighter planes do not have what we call ELTs, emergency locator transmitters, but they do have a special device which a pilot must put into action if, in any case, he is in an emergency. Apparently, they had not been switched on in these two cases. Not knowing exactly how the accident happened, we do not know if they were flying high or low. As the Hon. Member very well knows, if pilots fly lower than a certain height, we cannot follow them by radar. At the moment, there is an investigation going on to see how this accident happened, but unfortunately, I cannot give a more exact explanation for the accident at the present time.

PROJECT TO SAVE LAST WARTIME CORVETTE

Mr. W. Kenneth Robinson (Etobicoke-Lakeshore): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence. Will the Minister advise whether he will save the last Corvette, the Sackville, which has been taken out of service, and if he will make arrangements that it be given to the Maritime Museum in Halifax and the Naval Officers Association of Canada so that it can be restored to its wartime condition and put on permanent display?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, I have received several representations, from both sides of the House, especially those of my colleague, the Minister of State for International Trade, who is from Halifax. I can assure the Hon. Member that my Department is currently conducting a study on how we can preserve it, and this study has my full approval. I do hope we can save the Sackville, which was a wartime Corvette, as it would be a very good memento for the many brave sailors who sailed on these Corvette class ships during the war.

INDUSTRY

TAX INCENTIVES REQUESTED FOR RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): Madam Speaker, could I have the attention of the Minister of Finance for a moment?

Mr. Lewis: Get ready, Marc!

Mr. Hees: The Prime Minister has nothing to worry about today.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: Or any other day.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hees: I would like to address a question to the Minister of Finance, Madam Speaker. As the share of the Canadian market held by foreign-made products has increased from 19 per cent 15 years ago to 31 per cent today, and as more and more Canadians have found foreign-made products more attractive in price, quality and design, would the Minister give serious consideration to introducing generous taxation incentives based and paid directly in proportion to increases in the research and development carried out by Canadian industry, so that we can lower costs and selling prices and improve our quality and design, so that Canadian products can start winning back the very large share of the market which they have lost in recent years, and start producing the extra jobs our people need?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question and his interest in this very important subject indeed. The question of increased productivity, better technology and better quality of product, is one which is uppermost in the Government's mind. As a matter of fact, I would remind the Hon. Member that this year, on the export side, Canada has increased its share of the world market, so we must not only be buying imports, but we must also be pretty good at exporting our products, and that has applied even in the manufacturing sector, I am advised.

Mr. Stevens: No, no!

Mr. Lalonde: This is the advice I have received, that we have succeeded in expanding our share of the world market in terms of exports.

Mr. Stevens: But not on manufactured goods.

Mr. Lalonde: As far as the question of research and development is concerned, the Government has attacked this issue very aggressively since 1980. In fact it is estimated that the total expenditures for R and D in Canada in 1982 will have increased from $3.7 billion in 1981 to about $4.4 billion in 1982. I am also advised that we have one of the most generous tax incentive systems in the world for research and development. It can cost only about 20 cents on the dollar for research and development in this country if one is to use the tax incentives which are available. Thus, I think we have a pretty good record.

REQUEST THAT ASSISTANCE BE LINKED TO PRODUCTIVITY

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): If the Minister will look back on the figures that he has received, he will find that we have increased in our exports of raw materials and so-called manufactured goods which are qualified as goods which receive one stage of processing, like iron ore which is made into iron ore pellets. That is all. It is not refrigerators, cars or anything like that. In fully manufactured goods, which are the ones which produce the jobs, we have been losing our share of the world market at about the same rate as we have lost our share of the Canadian market. Will he also take into consideration the fact that there is nothing that appeals to a businessman like an incentive that he receives in direct proportion to what he does? Having used this method with some success when I was in Government—

● (1450)

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Hees: —I highly recommend it to the Minister.

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I have indicated that we have indeed a very generous tax incentive program. There is a tax credit that is available to corporations which varies from 10 per cent to 20 per cent, and up to 25 per cent for small businesses. There is a 150 per cent tax deduction for firms that increase their R and D. There is always the possibility of adding, but I again remind the Hon. Member that if firms want to use the tax incentives that are available, it can cost them only 20 cents on the dollar for their research and development. That is a pretty good bargain. I hope that more and more Canadian firms will use the incentives that are available.

BANKS AND BANKING

ROYAL BANK FORECLOSURE OF SACKVILLE, N.B. FOUNDRY

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg-St. James): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister will know that Enterprise Foundry of Sackville, New Brunswick, was on the upswing when the Royal Bank decided to foreclose. Sackville then lost its second largest employer. Out of this wreckage has emerged a new owner who is seeking to save those jobs, but the bank remains an obstacle. It is simply walking off with more company assets than is necessary. Will the Prime Minister call on the Royal Bank, ask them to reverse their foreclosure decision, or at least dispose of the company assets in a way that will preserve jobs? Will he say this time to the Royal Bank:

> Those of you, bankers, who see farmers and small businessmen struggling to keep the land alive and the doors open for a better time, ask yourselves what will be served by a bailiff's padlock. Why don't you take a chance on a Canadian? You may be surprised.

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, I would like to inform the Hon. Member that our officials did meet with the previous owner of that particular operation, as did my colleague, the Minister of Public Works. On several occasions we asked for a viable operating plan on which we could make a decision as to whether to provide financial assistance. That viable operating plan was not forthcoming. We now understand there are new people interested in the company. We are looking seriously into that operation to see if we can salvage it.

PENITENTIARIES

PROPOSED EDUCATION ADVISORY COMMITTEE

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Madam Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Solicitor General. The Canadian Corrections Service comes under his jurisdiction. Some time ago its officials arranged with the Ontario Institute for Studies in Education to make a survey of educational facilities in the correctional institutions. They received a series of recommendations, one of which proposed the establishment of an education advisory committee to the Commissioner. Will the Minister advise why those recommendations, particularly the one calling for an advisory committee, have not been implemented?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Madam Speaker, I can only say that I will look into the matter and report to the Hon. Member as soon as I have done that.

NATIONAL SECURITY

CASE OF CANADIAN PROFESSOR—AVAILABILITY OF EVIDENCE

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Justice. Is the evidence that was available to the British courts which led to the conviction of the spy, Hambleton, available to Canadian authorities?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Madam Speaker, I have just agreed to provide the funds for acquiring a transcript of that trial. In addition to that, some of the proceedings were conducted in camera. We hope to be briefed on them by British authorities.

Oral Questions

MINISTER'S KNOWLEDGE

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Does the Minister know if the evidence that was available to the British courts that led to the conviction of Mr. Hambleton is available to Canadian authorities?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Madam Speaker, that is the question I just answered.

ADMISSIBILITY OF EVIDENCE IN CANADA

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Is it the position of the Government of Canada that there is any bar to the admissibility in Canada of the evidence that led to the conviction of Mr. Hambleton as a spy in Great Britain?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Madam Speaker, I am not in a position to answer that question.

Mr. Nielsen: You were yesterday.

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY

INCREASE IN TOLLS—REQUEST FOR TALKS WITH UNITED STATES AUTHORITIES

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Madam Speaker, the Minister of Transport will be aware that significant toll increases in the St. Lawrence Seaway will come into effect in 1983. They are far and above the six and five goal set by the Government. Will the Minister consider reopening talks with his United States counterparts with respect to this unduly heavy increase in tolls? Will he do this from the perspective of the very serious impact this will have on Canadian registered ships using the Great Lakes and the Seaway system next year?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, in the second year of the agreement between the Canadian and American authorities there was to be an increase of 10 per cent. I understand that an exchange of views took place between the two authorities on this matter and they were not particularly fruitful. The Americans are not particularly eager to reduce that 10 per cent. At the moment I am looking to the special committee which makes the decision on this matter in order to obtain a recognition of the 10 per cent as being an exception, on the basis of an international agreement.

EXEMPTION SOUGHT FOR CANADIAN REGISTERED SHIPS

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Madam Speaker, given the apparent failure, will the Minister give consideration to an exclusion for Canadian registered ships plying between Canadian ports?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I am not sure I understand the question. Maybe the member and I could have a conversation later.

CANADIAN TRANSPORT COMMISSION

CONDUCT OF RAIL LINE ABANDONMENT HEARINGS

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. It deals with the process by which the rail line abandonment hearings are initiated and conducted. As the Minister knows, either CN or CP rail have as much time as they deem necessary, perhaps even years, to present the case that they believe a branch line ought to be abandoned. Having come to this conclusion, they then submit to the CTC an appeal for abandonment. After all of that period which the railway companies have, does the Minister judge it to be fair that the communities along those railway lines are then given as little as 30 days in which to prepare a case to defend themselves against the railways, against something which affects the life of the communities? Indeed, it is the umbilical cord of their economic life for the remainder of the existence of those communities.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I have no way of judging whether 30 days is too long or not. I do know that these hearings take a very long time. Usually the community is quite aware of what is going on. Without being theoretical, I would think that 30 days after the decision is made would constitute a sufficient time in view of the existing awareness in the community.

REQUEST THAT AFFECTED COMMUNITIES BE GRANTED PROFESSIONAL ASSISTANCE

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Transport, setting aside for a moment the fact that he presumes 30 days is long enough for these communities, many of which have a population of 100 or less. And bearing in mind that when the Commissioners enter the hearing room, which is referred to as a judicial court and is court-like in style, there is a battery of lawyers, accountants and other experts for the Commissioners, in what other court situation is it the judge who has the lawyers and the expertise?

If the communities are the defendants, why does the Government of Canada not grant to the individual communities across the Prairies the money or the experts so that the communities can have the expertise to bring an appropriate defence, rather than the judge having the assistance, against the slick CN and CP Rail with their lawyers, accountants and economists? These communities of 100 people have only 30 days and no expertise. Can the Minister justify that behaviour?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, that is a big question indeed; it applies to the whole legal and regulatory system and is far too wide for me to try to tackle this afternoon. However, if I judge by the extent of the branch line system which is still open in Canada, and by the rather low level of branch lines which have been abandoned, I suggest that the communities have done a damn good job against the lawyers.

IMMIGRATION

RECOMMENDED AMNESTY FOR ILLEGAL IMMIGRANTS

Hon. Bud Cullen (Sarnia-Lambton): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration.

Some Hon. Members: Gone!

Mr. Cullen: Well, perhaps someone can take notice of the question.

As the Minister will know, some 600,000 to 800,000 people apply every year to come to Canada by legal means, adopting legal procedures. Now there is a recommendation from the Advisory Council that a general amnesty should be granted to those who are here illegally. Can the Minister confirm that he will not accept this advice and that he will not even entertain the idea of an amnesty for illegal immigrants.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I think it would be much too early to draw any conclusions because the report was just issued yesterday and it is obviously a very delicate and sensitive matter. We will not be making any judgments until we have had an opportunity to get a full response from all affected organizations and individuals in the country, including provincial Governments and others.

The Advisory Council has undertaken the study and I want to review its report in consultation across Canada. I would think this would be an area where Members of Parliament in particular could be particularly helpful by taking soundings in their own areas and giving me the results, so that I can make a judgment based on those results. It is a problem, Madam Speaker, and as in most areas of immigration we are prepared to deal with those problems in an effective and fair way.

MR. BRADLEY—OPPOSITION TO BILL C-10

Madam Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the Clerk of the House has laid upon the Table the three hundred and fiftieth report of the Clerk of Petitions stating that he has examined the petition presented by the Hon. Member for Haldimand-Norfolk (Mr. Bradley) on Wednesday, December 8, 1982, and finds that the petition meets the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, I thought for a while the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) was going down for the third time!

My question is to the Government House Leader. He has informed us that we will be proceeding with Bill C-131 on the final designated day under Standing Order 75C for the Old Age Security Act. Could he confirm that and confirm as far as he can into next week the business that the House will be dealing with?

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, today is the last opposition day in the current supply period. Tomorrow, we shall indeed complete second reading of Bill C-131 and, beginning Monday next week, we shall undertake second reading of the bill to amend the Income Tax Act. As usual, of course, all that is subject to change.

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: There was some thought, I believe, that debate might be interrupted on Bill C-139 if, as and when the capping Bills, C-131, C-132 and C-133, came back from committee. Is it the intention of the Government to interrupt debate on Bill C-139 should those other Bills come back from committee next week?

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Yes, Madam Speaker, my colleague fully appreciates how most urgent it is to have Royal Assent given to Bills C-131, C-132 and C-133 before December 22. That is why, under the circumstances, should these bills be reported to the House in the middle of next week or even earlier, I will seriously consider giving the Hon. Member reasonable notice with a view to completing the study of those bills before December 22.

[English]

Mr. Murphy: Madam Speaker, my question is also for the Government House Leader and relates to the question I asked earlier in Question Period. I understand that at 3:30 today in Room 209 of the West Block the Miscellaneous Estimates Committee will meet again. Looking at the fact that he said we are going to adjourn December 22 with all these Bills passed, is he planning on calling us back on December 23? Because we are not going to let that Bill pass unless we have an open election of the chairman of that Committee.

Point of Order—Mr. McKnight

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I will take the request of the Hon. Member under serious consideration. With respect to the election of the committee chairman, as I said earlier, I will not get involved. That is the responsibility of the members of the committee and I am sure that Hon. Members are responsible enough to make a judicious choice of a successor to the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) who has tendered his resignation as committee chairman.

[English]

Mr. Murphy: Madam Speaker, will the Government House Leader allow the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier to stay on the committee, and will he and the Government majority allow that person to remain as chairman?

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I answered that question during the Oral Question Period.

POINTS OF ORDER

MR. DOMM—PROCEDURE RESPECTING PRESENTATION OF PETITIONS

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Madam Speaker, the procedure followed in this House for presenting petitions has been questioned by a Minister. It is my understanding that when a petition is collected and given to a Member of Parliament to present on behalf of the constituents who signed or printed their names on the petition, it is not the responsibility of the Member who presents the petition to verify every signature on the petition. During Question Period today the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) made the statement that a petition was presented which you, as Speaker of this House, examined and accepted and reported that it was found to be in order. The Minister has questioned your judgment.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I am sure the Hon. Member is very conscious of the fact that he is debating this question. I did examine the petition and declared to the House that it was in order as to form. That is the limit of the speaker's duty. Whatever other members' opinions are on that particular petition belongs to them. It can be debated in the House, and possibly will be, but it is not a point of order.

MR. McKNIGHT—S.O. 43 MOTION OF MR. DE JONG

Mr. Bill McKnight (Kindersley-Lloydminster): Madam Speaker, my point of order arises out of a motion under Standing Order 43 presented by the Hon. Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong) yesterday and the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) today. It would appear that the national interest implicit in those Standing Orders is that Gretta de Jong was the campaign manager for Mr. Van Mulligan; and is it in the national interest that when the Hon. Member for Regina East goes back to Regina, he stay with Mr. Van Mulligan? Is that why it is—

Madam Speaker: Order. Is that a point of order? It is a great point of debate but not very much a point of order.

TABLING OF GREEN PAPER ON PENSIONS AND TWO RELATED DOCUMENTS

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 41(2), I am pleased to table in my name and on behalf of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde), in both official languages, the Green Paper on Pensions entitled "Better Pensions for Canadians", along with two related documents, "Focus on Women" and "Highlights".

PETITION

MR. HALLIDAY—GENERAL DISARMAMENT

Mr. Bruce Halliday (Oxford): Madam Speaker, it is an honour today to present to the House a petition signed by 1,088 residents of Oxford County and the surrounding area. The petitioners call upon the Government of Canada to negotiate and implement, with other Governments, the balanced steps that will lead to the earliest possible achievement of general disarmament, and in particular, nuclear disarmament.

Dr. Tom Mayberry of Ingersoll, Ontario, has been the driving force behind this petition, working hard to amass these many signatures and giving the issue of disarmament a high profile in Oxford County.

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 4,127, 4,348 and 4,473.

[Text]

PAMPHLET "BUDGET 1981: WHAT IT MEANS FOR SMALL BUSINESS"

Question No. 4,127—Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton):

1. Is the Government mailing out brochures or pamphlets entitled "Budget 1981" to Canadian business firms and, if so (a) how many are being mailed (b) what are the mailing costs?

2. Are envelopes being used for the brochure and, if so, what is the cost?

3. What is the source of the list of firms and their respective addresses?

4. Is the list compiled from information filed in pursuance of the Income Tax Act and, if so, who has access to the list?

5. What is the statutory authority for the use of such information for government propaganda purposes?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of State (Finance)): 1. The Government has mailed out approximately 202,000 brochures entitled "Budget 1981: What it Means for Small Business". The mailing costs of this brochure at 13 cents each were approximately $26,260.

2. The brochures were mailed in kraft envelopes which cost approximately $21 per 1,000 for a total cost of approximately $4,250.

3. The list of firms with their respective addresses were randomly chosen by Revenue Canada.

4. The list was compiled from information filed in pursuance of the Income Tax Act. Revenue Canada officials have access to this list.

5. Appropriation Acts. Democratic accountability requires that the public understand policy changes. Thus, it is the government's responsibility to inform the public of policy changes which may affect them. The brochures mailed to small businesses are informational in nature and were designed to help correct much of the misunderstanding which has been prevalent in the small business community with respect to the 1981 budget provisions.

DRUG INFORMATION PACKAGE

Question No. 4,348—Mr. Robinson (Burnaby):

1. Did the Bureau of Dangerous Drugs in the Department of National Health and Welfare distribute to doctors throughout the country an information package entitled "Drug Abuse/Misuse is a Serious Problem" and, if so, on what date?

2. Who within the Bureau (a) conceived of (b) drew up the information package or any element of it?

3. Was the package submitted to or approved by the Canadian Medical Association or any other recognized, independent body in the medical field in Canada before it was released?

4. What was the total cost of (a) producing (b) distributing the package and is it still being produced and distributed?

5. How many packages were (a) produced (b) distributed?

6. Was the package distributed on a regional basis and, if so, what was the distribution?

7. (a) To whom was the package distributed (b) how many (i) doctors (ii) medical institutions (iii) hospitals (iv) other institutions, groups or persons in the medical field received the package?

8. Does the pamphlet "The Physician and Psychoactive Drugs", contained within the package, represent Government policy (b) what is the statutory or regulatory authority for the pamphlet?

9. Did the Government receive any reaction to or comments about the package from the medical community or any other element in the public and, if so (a) what were the comments and did the Government respond to them (b) does the import of the comments generally favour or oppose the package or any element of it?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. Yes, the Bureau of Dangerous Drugs of the Department of National Health and Welfare's Health Protection Branch began a phased distribution of the drug information package to medical practitioners, residents and interns in Canada between April and June, 1982.

2. (a) and (b) The senior personnel of the Bureau of Dangerous Drugs with input and concurrence from the Provincial Registrars of Medicine and the Canadian Medical Association.

3. See 2.

4. (a) Production costs, $26,000; (b) distribution costs, $28,000.

5. One printing only was made. Reprints may be considered depending on demand and follow-up assessment.

(a) 50,000 packages were produced. (b) 47,700.

6. The distribution plan provided for national mailings to the 40,000 medical practitioners. Regionalized distribution took place only to offices of medical registrars and certain hospitals where drop shipments could be made for distribution to the medical residents and interns.

7. (a) and (b) The packages are being distributed to the following: (i) Medical practitioners (to the end of May, 1982)—40,000; Hospital residents and interns (by mid-June, 1982)—4,000.

(ii) and (iii) The kit is not being distributed to hospitals except in cases where the Director of Programs agreed to distribute a drop shipment directly to the medical residents and interns serving at the hospital.

(iv) Two thousand seven hundred packages are being distributed among the Provincial Registrars of the Colleges of Physicians and Surgeons at their request for use as hand-outs to new medical registrants during the coming year. One thousand packages are being distributed to health related associations and internal use within Department of National Health and Welfare.

8. (a) Yes. The pamphlet "The Physician and Psychoactive Drugs" does represent long-standing Government policy in the area of distribution and use of mood-modifying prescription drugs. More specifically it contains guidelines for the issuing of prescriptions for psychoactive drugs, definitions of categories of drugs that require different procedures for issuing prescriptions and information concerning the ways in which both physicians and patients may avoid contributing to the abuse and misuse of psychoactive drugs.

(b) The pamphlet supports the established departmental policy of providing information to health practitioners regarding abuse/misuse of drugs and guidelines/interpretations regarding the drug regulations. Appropriation Acts. The authority for control over mood-modifying drugs is the Narcotic

Control Act and Parts III and IV of the Food and Drug Act and the Regulations thereunder.

9. (a) Yes, 70 per cent of the letters received from physicians supported the initiative and several recommended a continuation in future years. Some letters expressed concern about the cost/benefit ratio for the project. Replies have been prepared in response to all letters received. (b) Generally favour.

CUSTOMS PORT AT WOODSTOCK, NEW BRUNSWICK

Question No. 4,473—Mr. Crosby:

1. Who were the officers or employees of the Department of National Revenue (Customs) on duty or present at the border point between Woodstock, New Brunswick and Houlton, Maine, United States on July 31, 1982 from approximately 11.35 p.m. until midnight on that date?

2. What is the age, educational qualification, rank and position, and length of service of each officer or employee on duty or present at the border point?

3. In the case of each officer or employee on duty or present at the border point, have there been any complaints of improper or abusive treatment by or on behalf of persons crossing at the border point or has any such officer or employee been accused of uttering threats against any persons crossing at the border point?

4. Does the Department keep a record of persons who cross at border points between Canada and the United States and, if so, does the record identify the person by name and address and does it stipulate the goods brought into Canada?

5. Does the Department keep and maintain a list of persons who the officers of the Department claim have committed an infraction of any rule or regulation that applies to customs or excise or any other matter relevant to border crossings?

6. What kind of record does the Department keep and maintain that is consulted or applied when a person mentioned in the record crosses the Canadian border?

7. Which Cabinet Ministers have crossed the border into Canada since March 1, 1980 and, in the case of each crossing, what declaration was made by the Minister and, where goods were declared, what was included in the list of goods?

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): 1. Officers on duty at the Port of Woodstock, N.B. on July 31, 1982 between 2335 and 2400 hours were as follows:

One—A/Superintendent (PM-2)
Three—Customs Inspectors (PM-1)
One—Student Customs Officer

2. The requested information is protected by the Access to Information Act. However, below are the Statements of Qualifications for the officers involved.

3. Complaint concerning the conduct of all officers at the Port of Woodstock for the following fiscal years were:

1982/83—	None
1981/82—	One valid and one invalid
1980/81—	None
1979/80—	Two valid and one invalid
1978/79—	One valid, three invalid and one where complainant and officer at fault

There have been no complaints received where an officer or employee was accused of uttering threats against any persons crossing at the border point.

4. A record is not kept of every person crossing the border. However, where duties and taxes are assessed and collected, a copy of the declaration form is retained for accounting purposes. See answer to part No. 5.

5. Yes, the Department maintains a record of those persons against whom seizure action has been taken.

6. Any information concerning the format of these records and any information contained within these records is protected by the Access to Information Act.

7. No record available. See answer to 4 and 5 above.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. STEVENS—ALLEGED IRREGULARITY OF ESTIMATE BEFORE STANDING COMMITTEE—RULING BY MADAM SPEAKER

Madam Speaker: Before we proceed to the Orders of the Day, I would like to rule on the matter that was raised by the Hon. Member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens). He raised a point of order on the propriety of votes 26b and 27b under Industry, Trade and Commerce in the Supplementary Estimates (B) for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1983. The two votes concern payments of an equal amount of $200 million as equity each to Canadair Limited and the de Havilland Aircraft of Canada, Limited. The Hon. Member argued that they are incorrect and not in a proper form to be voted on, and should therefore be deleted from the Estimates. I would like to thank all Hon. Members who contributed arguments on this very technical question.

I should remind Hon. Members once again that the Chair's responsibilities lie strictly within the realm of parliamentary procedure and not within the sphere of legality. With respect to the items in the Estimates, it is the Chair's duty to ensure that such items are based upon legislative authority. In the case before us, I have examined each item carefully and can conclude that each is based upon a legislative authority; namely, vote 26b upon Appropriation Act No. 3, 1975 and vote 27b upon Appropriation Act No. 4, 1973. Both votes are therefore properly before the House. In any case, there were no procedural objections raised against them as they appear in the Blue Book.

Hon. Members have argued that the announcement of the transfer of certain commercial assets and enterprises of Canadair and de Havilland to the Canada Development Investment Corporation would have the result, in their words, of nullifying votes 26b and 27b. But in so far as the Chair is able to determine, the announcement of the creation and involvement of the CDIC does not appear to change the existence of Canadair or de Havilland. It is my view that this aspect of the question resolves itself into a matter of debate and, as Hon. Members are aware, the role of the Chair is not to become involved in any such debate.

The question of the two Crown corporations being placed under the responsibility of a new Minister has also been raised. Let me put that argument to rest by stating that the transfer of the responsibility from Industry, Trade and Commerce to Social Development has no bearing upon the actual items or under which headings they are placed in the Blue Book of Estimates. For the benefit of all Hon. Members, I should quote, in part, from Beauchesne, Citations 484 and 487(2):

Supply

The proposals with respect to items which the House may vote upon are conveyed formally in these Estimates in the wording and amount of the Votes which, when included in Appropriation Acts, become the governing conditions under which the expenditures may be made ... as far as possible, connected services appear together and all the Estimates for the services controlled by a particular Department are mainly grouped in the same class.

In other words, what is important here is that the items must be clearly set out in the Estimates and the grouping of any such items under a particular title or heading is immaterial.

In conclusion, I appreciate the points raised by Hon. Members yesterday, but after careful examination I must rule votes 26b and 27b under Industry, Trade and Commerce to be in order and properly before the House.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY S.O. 58—NON-CONFIDENCE MOTION—CROWN CORPORATIONS

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition) moved:

That this House condemns the Government for its deliberate proliferation of Crown corporations accountable to the Government rather than to Parliament and the taxpayers who, in the words of the Auditor General, "have every right to consider themselves the principal shareholders of these corporations", and instructs the Government to immediately introduce a Bill substantially the same as Bill C-27 in the Thirty-first Parliament so as to make such corporations properly accountable to the people.

Madam Speaker: Before we proceed with the Orders of the Day and since this is the final allotted day, the House will go through the usual procedures this evening to consider and dispose of the Supply Bill. It is usual practice to distribute the Bill ahead of time, and I would ask the consent of the House to do just that.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

&ws3308;-1 Mr. Clark: Madam Speaker, the seconder of the motion and my seatmate from the Yukon (Mr. Nielsen), along with several other Members of this House, served and fought in the Second World War. I have only read about that period in our history, but I know from my readings the way that nations prepared the state of mind of their people for sacrifice and suffering at home and to make them think the worst of their enemies away from home.

That same psychology is being used today deliberately by the Government of Canada in the face of our economic problems. The Government blames international forces which it says we must fight, but which it says we cannot control or really influence. It has mounted a propaganda campaign at home which asks pensioners to sacrifice, and it is pretending that the Canadian Government is doing everything it can to survive the problems it claims that other people have somehow created.

We in this House unhappily have become numbed to the reports of casualties—the bankruptcies, lay-offs, suicides, the destruction of families. I am shocked, Mr. Speaker, that while I speak of destruction of families, while I speak of the tragedies that are caused by economic hardship in Sudbury and elsewhere in this country, some Members of this House are laughing. I am shocked at that kind of callous indifference to the plight of Canadians in deep trouble. To our shame, this House knows that in November 1,438,000 Canadians were out of work.

[Translation]

Another 379,000 Canadians are working part time because they were unable to find full-time employment. These figures do not include at least 130,000 people who have stopped looking for employment because there are simply no jobs available. From 1981 to 1982, bankruptcies in Canada's primary industry have increased by 58 per cent. In our manufacturing industry, the bankruptcy rate has increased by 77 per cent, in the service sector by 37 per cent and in the finance, insurance and real estate sectors, by 113 per cent.

Mr. Speaker, during the first ten months of 1982, farm bankruptcies totalled 344, an increase of 50 per cent over last year.

[English]

Everyone who travels in Canada knows that these figures simply yield shocking increases in break-ins, family violence, suicides, in the kinds of tension that can drive families and communities apart.

In the face of all of that, in the face of an obvious depression, family tensions, suicides, social problems and criminal problems whose like we have not seen before, what happens? What is the response of the Government of Canada? What is the policy of the Government of the richest nation in the world? The considered response of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) is to say that he is sorry, that it will probably get worse and that the Government has a policy—its Maginot line of six and five—that there is really nothing else that he can do. There is nothing he can do—as Minister of Finance in the richest country in the world!

Then his Leader, who walks out when the lights fail, sounds the bugle notes of patriotism, asking for trust, asking that the unemployed in Canada be patient. A plan like that will work only if it is true.

• (1520)

The news this week from the Government's own policeman, the Auditor General, is that the Government has not been honest with Canadians. It has asked pensioners and unemployed Canadians to sacrifice, but it carries on itself, deliberately, with programs and practices which waste hundreds of millions of dollars and drive away investment and jobs.

From among all the extravagance that exists in this Government, the Auditor General has identified one area which he believes provides "significant opportunities for improvement". He says:

—the most important of these matters . . . has to do with the accountability of corporations owned by the Government of Canada . . . the citizens of Canada have a right to consider themselves the principal shareholders of these organizations; Parliamentarians speak for them. Crown-owned corporations must be held accountable through Parliament.

These organizations have a greater impact on the economy and the life of Canadians than ever before. There are now more people working for crown-owned organizations then there are working in government departments and agencies, when the RCMP and the Armed Forces are excluded. A sub-government has been created to fulfil some of the social and economic aims of government.

The Auditor General has called them a sub-government. But if you believe in our system of parliamentary democracy, where elected representatives of the people control public spending, then these uncontrolled Crown corporations constitute, in effect, a separate country, to whom we send $30 billion of Canadian money each year, but over which the people of Canada have virtually no control.

We are all aware of the sickening individual abuses by some of these Crown corporations. For example, when Petro-Canada pays roughly double what it should for Petrofina and individual Canadians pay the difference at the gas pump, or when parts of BP are bought for $400 million more than was first reported — both transactions being outside the mandate Parliament gave to that Crown corporation — it was doing something Parliament did not authorize it to do and it is doing it in an inexcusable and extravagant way.

Those are the abuses, but I am not going to read a list of abuses because I want to deal with the principles of this. Those are just peaks on the horizon of the uncontrolled, subsidized, separate country that we have let Crown corporations become. That separate country of Crown corporations spends $30 billion each year. That is a larger annual budget than Spain, a larger annual budget than Greece, a larger annual budget than Austria, a larger annual budget than Finland, a larger annual budget than Ireland and a larger annual budget than Switzerland. Yet those real nations all have governments which let their people exercise some control over their spending. Canada's Crown corporations, spending Canada's money, simply ignore that democratic requirement. Their relation to the people is exclusively to spend the people's money. They operate outside democracy. They have, and they exercise, more arbitrary, uncontrolled power than the countries of Switzerland, Ireland, Greece, Spain, Finland, Austria and several others.

The Liberal Government, which is the architect of separatism in the Province of Quebec, pretends to worry that Quebec will remove itself beyond the jurisdiction of Canada. Quebec's budget last year was slightly more than $20 billion. The budget of that already separate country called Crown corporations was $30 billion, and there is literally no limit on the size to which that spending can grow—literally no limit at all. The Liberal Government has deliberately, not by accident but deliberately, used its power to allow the creation of unlimited Crown corporations—unlimited additions to this expensive, subsidized, separate country that operates beyond the control of Canada's Parliament and Canada's elected representatives.

[Translation]

We do not know how many millions of dollars have been wasted by Crown corporations. In one case, the Auditor General pointed out, and I quote:

We have not yet been able to assess whether the $1.7 billion invested by the Government of Canada for the purchase of the shares of Canadian Petrofina Inc. was expended with due regard to economy.

In another case, referring to Letters of Comfort, he commented as follows, and I quote:

In the last six years, more than a billion dollars has been advanced to Canadair through a sequence of Letters of Comfort . . .The authorized limit is $1.35 billion. This amount of taxpayers' money is at risk without what I would consider clear criteria and objectives for providing, continuing, or terminating support.

Mr. Speaker, the Auditor General's testimony is clear. He is saying that $1.35 billion are, and I quote:

—at risk.

[English]

The price for BP turns out to be at least $400 million more than first reported. That is nearly $2 billion covering just two agencies. That money is gone; it was allowed to drift away by the Government. Yet senior citizens are forced to cut back $290 each, and the Government says it cannot find money to create jobs.

The Auditor General put it well when he said:

There are more than 300 of these corporations, including subsidiaries, employing some 263,000 Canadians. Revenues of Crown corporations in the most recent fiscal year were $31.9 billion, and expenses were $33.6 billion. Most of these corporations are virtually unknown even to the best informed members of the taxpaying public. Yet, in the aggregate, they represent a hole in the taxpayers' pocket, resulting, as they often do, in a consistent negative return on investment.

That is the hole in the pocket—the hundreds of millions of dollars that are taken from pensioners, that are taken from small businessmen in taxes, that are taken from Canadians who buy gas at the pumps, and the money given to unaccountable Crown corporations to waste as they will. If that money were being properly used, it could create jobs in Canada, it could create growth in Canada and it could create hope in Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Clark: That is actual money, actual dollars and cents, being wasted at the same time as the Government comes before the House and seeks permission to pick the pockets of Canadian pensioners in the amount of $290 over the next two years. It wastes $2 billion on two Crown agencies and it picks the pockets of Canadian pensioners.

Let me put this in the broader context of what it does to confidence, what it does to our ability to attract investment, to create jobs and to create growth in the country. This kind of situation sends a very clear signal to investors here and around the world.

Not only do we have a massive deficit which the Government admits exists, although it is never really sure how large the deficit is, but the Government's carelessness about Crown corporations means that we are incurring even more losses, losses that we do not know about, losses that we cannot put a figure on and losses that are hidden, and deliberately hidden, from Parliament. Those hidden losses are one more reason investors stay away from Canada and Canadian investors sit back or move their money out of the country. Nobody trusts a Government which hides its losses and sets up an uncontrolled, unaccountable private spending empire.

The Government pretends that six and five is an economic program. The only advantage of six and five is that it has helped keep administered prices in the public sector from outrunning wages more than they were already, and it has freed up some money for short-term job creation or preventing the federal deficit from going higher. That is it; that is all it does. Otherwise, six and five is a slogan. It is a fraud and, most important, it is a hide-out which lets the Government pretend that there is nothing else it can do. Dealing with Crown corporations is just one field in which the Government could act if it truly cared about jobs for Canadians and recovery for Canada. There are immense savings to be made if we had a system which held them accountable to Parliament, that stopped that kind of regular, consistent, authorized waste by this Government, which prefers to pick the pockets of pensioners while it finances Crown corporations with a mandate to waste.

Let me list some of the other actions which could achieve a climate of confidence, a climate of trust, which the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) pretends he wants. For example, a Government that wanted to encourage investment in Canada could make it clear immediately that it intended to reinstate the previous tax provisions on the capital cost allowance, to reinstate the previous tax provisions on the employee share purchase loans, on the soft costs on MURBs and on interest deductibility relating to RRSPs, DPSPs and registered pension plans. That statement of policy would create jobs and investment immediately in Canada. It can be done today by the Government of Canada if it chose to do it.

The Government could, and we believe should, announce that it will eliminate the extension of the corporate surtax. It should withdraw its proposal to tax accrued income on new whole life insurance policy. It should renounce absolutely the proposed capital gains tax on corporate reorganization. Those declarations made today would create investment and jobs immediately in Canada. They would help Canadians who are suffering in the country.

The Government, if it wanted to, could and should, renounce the plan of the Minister of Finance, which he made very clear after he brought in his first budget, to apply the principles of the National Energy Program to other industrial sectors. A statement renouncing that plan to apply the NEP to other now healthy sectors of the Canadian economy would remove some of the uncertainty the Minister has created in the country. That, too, would lead directly to the creation of investment and jobs for Canadians in need.

The Government should, and certainly could if it wanted to, identify what parts of our unproductive spending on unemployment insurance, welfare and on revenue lost because the unemployed and the bankrupt cannot pay taxes, can be turned to productive public purposes; what infrastructure should be put in place; what public works could be financed. Canadians would prefer to work on public projects like that, rather than subsist on unemployment insurance and welfare. An action of that kind would create both jobs and a renewed sense of worth on the part of the citizens of the country.

The Government could abandon its headlong rush to impose Bill S-31 which, in a single blow, has given the lie to the pretence of the Prime Minister that he is seeking co-operation. It has destroyed the hopes of federal-provincial co-operation and it has, incidentally, frustrated the possibility of direct provincial investment, which could be creating jobs and growth in Canada today but will not be until Bill S-31 that hangs like a menace over the heads of Government Members is withdrawn.

That is part of a list on which a Government that cared about coming to grips with Canada's economic problems could act immediately. In many cases all that is required is for the Liberal Government to stop doing things which cause problems, frustrate growth and throw Canadians out of work. One of the unassailable realities of the country is that if the Government would back away and stop causing problems we would have more jobs for Canadians, we would have more growth, and we would have more investment in the country.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: The Prime Minister claims that our problems are all caused externally. I seldom accuse him of modesty, but there is no doubt that he is far too modest when he blames others for Canada's situation. The principal cause of Canada's unemployment, the flight of investment from the country and the depression into which we are sinking, is the policies and attitudes of the Government across the way.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Peterson: Absolute nonsense.

Mr. Clark: I hear the temporary Hon. Member for Willowdale (Mr. Peterson) saying that this is absolute nonsense. I would be interested in knowing where the temporary Member for Willowdale stands on the principle of accountability to Parliament of Crown corporations. Will he join the flock of sheep again and vote against his principles, or will he stand tonight and vote for a principle which restores to the people and to the—

Mr. Fisher: Where does Peter Worthington stand? Tell us about the next Member for Broadview.

Mr. Clark: I will come to the Member from Scarborough in just a second.

Mr. Epp: He is next.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) has the floor.

Mr. Harquail: Where do the Premiers stand on this?

Mr. Clark: I am being asked a few questions. First, I am being asked about Premiers by a Liberal. It is natural that a Liberal should ask about the Premiers because they do not know any; they do not have any.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: They do not have any because there is not a provincial politician in the land strong enough to carry the weight and the burden of the reputation of this Government to the polls.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Ask Allan Blakeney about that; ask Mr. Doug Young about that. Pose that question to those individuals.

Let me come back to the Member for Willowdale and ask him where his principles are. I ask him whether he would prefer to be picking the pockets of pensioners or to have parliamentary control over Crown agencies which are now wasting literally billions of dollars. Will he vote for his principles and support this motion, or will he sink back into that flock of sheep which has been sitting over there and leading the country into such difficulty for so long? The Member from Scarborough—

An Hon. Member: It was the Hon. Member for Mississauga North (Mr. Fisher).

Mr. Clark: I am sorry; he was not the Member who was displaced by Maurice Strong, but if he is interested in discussing questions of democracy, perhaps he can consider what happened to the Canadians of Greek origin who sought nomination in the Liberal Party and were "strong-armed" aside, if I may coin a phrase.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mazankowski: What about Gauthier?

Mr. Clark: Indeed, if he finds the heat is too great in the House, let him go and sit on the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates. His colleague, the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), had the courage to stand up last night on behalf of the people who sent him here and, in response to that courage, was thrown out of his right as a Member of Parliament to serve as the chairman of a standing committee of the House.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Epp: More, more!

Mr. Rossi: What did you do with Yurko?

Mr. Harquail: What about Thomson and Gamble?

• (1540)

Mr. Rossi: Where is John Crosbie?

Mr. Clark: He is running to be Chief of Police for Montreal, Carlo, my boy.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Rossi: What did you promise Mulroney?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) has the floor.

[Translation]

Mr. Rossi: What did you tell Mulroney?

Mr. Clark: I told Mr. Mulroney that he was free to run against the Member for the time being, Mr. Rossi, and that he was sure to win. That is what I said.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, order. I would ask the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) to observe the customs of the House of Commons. Members are not mentioned by name but by riding or by their function here in the House.

Mr. Clark: I apologize, Mr. Speaker, you are absolutely right. However, the Hon. Member who spoke from his seat has acquired such a formidable reputation in the House that his name is quite unknown in Quebec, so that before he leaves after the next election, I want to give him a chance to make himself known to the public. I think he referred to the rights of Quebecers, and perhaps we could discuss some issues that relate to Bill S-31, a piece of legislation that has aroused Quebecers against his Government, but I suppose he will not open his mouth and will meekly toe the party line—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: With due respect, once again, I would ask the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition to speak to the motion.

Mr. Clark: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I apologize. However, the only Quebecers who are against me are the Liberals here in the House, and since I so seldom see any Quebecers who do not agree with me, I am going to challenge them here where I can find them.

Mr. La Salle: Put that in your pipe and smoke it, Rossi!

[English]

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, I have to take some satisfaction in passing that we have managed to arouse that group of Members of Parliament who are best known in the country for their dormancy.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: I ask the Member from Montreal—

Supply

[Translation]

What is his riding? Does he have one? He has forgotten the name of his riding because all his constituents have forgotten his name. That is why!

Mr. Rossi: Try your stuff in Bourassa and they will cream you!

Mr. Clark: So his riding is Bourassa!

[English]

An Hon. Member: It is Bourassa.

Mr. Nielsen: Order.

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, I apologize for letting myself be diverted by the gentleman from Bourassa (Mr. Rossi), but I understand the frustration he feels as a Member of the Liberal Party caucus. He has no place else where he can speak, so he has to shout from his seat here in the House of Commons.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, let me leave aside the Hon. Member for Bourassa and come back to serious matters. The Reports of the Auditor General of Canada always do this country a great service, but perhaps no Report has been more important for the country than this last one, not just because of its contents but because it serves to dramatize the fact that there is action within Canada that we can take—action to stop waste, action to create jobs and action to restore confidence—if only the Government has the will to act.

If the Auditor General's Report is new, fresh on the Table, then the problem is not new; nor is the opportunity to solve that problem. The Government itself has a Bill dealing with Crown Corporations. In essence, it gives control to the Government, not to Parliament. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Beatty), introduced a very different kind of Bill when he was the Minister responsible, different because it gave control to Parliament and thus to the people which Parliament represents. He will speak in more detail of the dangers that are involved, of the actual situation and of the changes that we will make to meet those dangers.

Because we trust Parliament and we believe that a Parliament with real powers can become trusted again by the people, that will be another step forward toward the co-operation and the confidence upon which our future is founded. That kind of change is an abiding interest. But our urgent interest today is in having this institution act to help Canadians whose lives are quite literally coming apart. We in this Parliament are the only ones who can help. It is no help to those people to send out propaganda on the six and five program. It is no help for the Minister of Finance to sympathize and then go on to say that things are going to get worse. It is certainly no help to take money from pensioners. But there are things that we can do. I have suggested some of them today. Others in this debate will suggest others. The Auditor General has shown one way to make a major change that will stop waste and build confidence.

We are here to act, sir. We have to act. For God's sake, let us do that.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Doug Anguish (The Battlefords-Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, it is an honour for me to follow the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) in this very important debate concerning the accountability of Crown corporations. It is certainly a bit disheartening for me to see the jaws of some of the Members of the Liberal Party flapping on the other side at a time in our history when they should be listening to some of the constructive criticism that is being made of the lack of accountability by Crown corporations.

Before getting into the delivery of my remarks this afternoon, I would like to compliment the Hon. Members for Capilano (Mr. Huntington) and the Hon. Member for Rosemont (Mr. Lachance) for the work they did over the summer preparing the paper on parliamentary accountability, which they submitted to the Special Committee on Standing Orders and Procedure. Some of the things that have been reflected in the recommendations have been adopted by this Parliament and will come into force on December 22, 1982.

In this document entitled "Accountability: Closing the Loop," the Hon. Members for Capilano and Rosemont point out:

> The Government must seek approval from Parliament for its spending program, and it should account to Parliament for its spending performance.

The Government should account to Parliament for any tax dollars that are spent. Members of Parliament must look at fulfilling their responsibilities in several areas. They must then examine the proposal for expenditure and when doing so not only establish the results to be expected but examine the effectiveness of past expenditures against results achieved in the program and the envelope sectors.

• (1550)

Finally, I think they must hold the Government accountable for accomplishing what was intended to have been accomplished with the complete ability to point out areas of waste and inefficiency. The Government has moved a long way, through the office of the Comptroller-General, to assist in some of those areas in which Members of Parliament and Parliament itself should be much more involved. I am talking about the revised form of the Estimates which are presently coming about and will be completed within the next couple of years. While this is not soon enough, it is a step in the right direction.

These revised Estimates concern three main areas. When I first came to the House, all that Members had available to them when the Estimates were tabled was the Blue Book, which was a comprehensive document that lacked the information which Members of Parliament needed in order to do their job in holding the Government and its expenditure of tax dollars accountable.

We have now moved to the point where we not only have the Blue Book as part of the Estimates, but a guide as well to show us how to use the Blue Book. It shows Members how to use the Blue Book in connection with two other very important documents, which are the Government's expenditure plans and the departmental expenditure plans which are hopefully being developed by all Government departments within the very near future.

If this information is compared to what is available with respect to Crown corporations, all that Parliamentarians have to review with regard to Crown corporations are the annual reports of those Crown corporations which are, indeed, lacking in terms of the information that should be available to Members.

There was a great deal said in the paper on accountability about restructuring some of the committees so that we do not only look at the pre-expenditure of tax dollars but also are able to review and monitor programs and expenditures on an ongoing basis, to examine the mandate versus the actual role of some of the Government departments and its agencies as well as to conduct a close examination of the post-expenditure so that we can tell whether or not Government departments have met the objectives that they set out earlier. In this manner we can determine if we have received the true value for the dollars that were actually spent.

I am very interested in one recommendation that I would make, which is that we should have a standing committee of the House examine all quasi-governmental bodies, including Crown corporations, on an ongoing basis. We find that Crown corporations have grown far beyond anyone's expectations. When one sees the facts which were compiled by the office of the Comptroller-General on November 30 of 1981, we see that in our country today there are some 306 Crown corporations which are either totally or partially-owned by the people of Canada. Shares of these corporations are held by the Minister in trust for the people of Canada. We do not have any real input into how those expenditures are made. We do not have any valid information to ascertain whether or not Crown corporations are fulfilling a meaningful role.

When I mentioned that we have 306 federal Crown corporations, I should point out further that in 1982 the Crown-owned corporations employed over 263,000 Canadians. They had record assets of approximately $67 billion, expenditures of more than $30 billion with liabilities of some $57 billion.

These figures can be compared to the Government itself. Government departments employed approximately 221,000 public employees, excluding those employed by the Armed Forces and the RCMP. These departments spent over $75 billion in 1982. This shows that the Crown corporations play almost or possibly as much as an important role as Government departments play. Yet we find very little information available for Parliament to scrutinize the activities of Crown corporations.

I was somewhat distressed to see the jowl-flapping back and forth between the Liberals and the Conservatives. I thought that the Leader of the Opposition was delivering a good speech on accountability of Crown corporations. As I have already indicated, I believe that the Liberals should be listening to the Opposition since it is in the interests of every Member of Parliament to see that the taxpayers' money is used to its best value. We must carefully scrutinize how the taxpayers' dollars are spent to ensure that Crown corporations are using their funds efficiently.

In the majority of Crown corporations that were audited by the Auditor General, financial management and control has been found too weak and very ineffective. Moreover, the co-ordination and guidance by central Government agencies of financial management and control practices in these Crown corporations were virtually non-existent, as the Auditor General points out. This, together with the results of the previous years' study of similar practices in the departments, led the Auditor General to express the deep concern that Parliament and, indeed, Government have lost control of the public purse. I suggest that this is a sad fact.

We are here to represent those who elected us. I have found that the only real control exerted on Government and Crown corporations is by the executive arm of the Government, the Cabinet. Backbench Liberals have very little say about how Canadians' tax dollars are spent. Members of the Opposition have very little input as to how tax dollars are spent. Even more importantly, we have little say in assessing whether Canadians have received good value for the dollars that are spent by the Government of Canada.

Six years have passed since the office of the Auditor General pointed out the existence of major weaknesses in the control and accountability of Crown corporations. The legislative framework urgently required is still, in fact, not in place. We do not believe that there will be effective legislation with respect to Crown corporations for quite some time to come.

There are a number of recommendations that the Auditor General made in his recently tabled Annual Report that I believe should be pointed out for the record. He said that there is a need for broad legislation respecting the accountability of Crown corporations and that it should include provisions relating to each of the elements of authorization and mandate, financing, directing, controlling and reporting. Such legislation should provide that these corporations be subject to comprehensive audits.

Unless a Crown corporation allows the Auditor General to conduct a comprehensive audit as a result of the establishment of a good relationship, the Auditor General can only conduct an attest audit on the figures that are given by the accountants of a Crown corporation. A comprehensive audit should be required of all Crown corporations. This comprehensive audit would include a review of the original mandate and objectives of the Crown corporation. I would also consider the questions whether these are procedures which can measure the effectiveness of those objectives and whether the corporation is truly operating with due respect for economy and efficiency. The Auditor General cannot judge its effectiveness, because that would be a policy decision which would not be within his jurisdiction. However, it certainly should be within the jurisdiction of the Parliament of Canada. We should consider whether there is such effectiveness based on studies on economy and efficiency carried out by the Auditor General.

I want to point out some errors, or illustrations, I suppose I should say, showing how Parliament has lost control of the taxpayers' dollar. I think Parliament has the responsibility of bringing this matter to the attention of the Government and the people of Canada, and the Government has the responsibility of listening to the recommendations which are being made.

An illustration of where we have lost control of the taxpayers' dollar is found in the area of letters of comfort. The amounts involved can be very insignificant indeed. In the last six years, more than $1 billion has been advanced to Canadair through a sequence of letters of comfort. These were authorized by Parliament on March 31, 1982, after the fact. The authorized limit was some $1.35 billion. This amount of taxpayers' money is at risk without what I would consider to be clear criteria or objectives for the guarantee of money coming into Canadair. We do not know whether there is due regard for economy and efficiency or whether that money was spent in an effective sort of way, because we do not have the facts before us to tell us that that money was spent wisely or very poorly by the federal Government in extending letters of comfort to Canadair.

Another area where mandates are overstepped and also where money is spent without any consideration of the poor taxpayer involves Atomic Energy of Canada Limited. Atomic Energy of Canada Limited was created back in 1952 and its mandate was to conduct nuclear research and development. "Development" means increasing the state of the art in nuclear technology. We now find that it is in a position where it has gone beyond the research and development aspects into production and sales. I would first point out that it has gone beyond its mandate without coming back to Parliament, without Parliament having any say in what AECL should be doing. As well, it has no regard for the taxpayers' dollars. It is very difficult to determine the actual amount spent by AECL, which is in the billions of dollars. Every time it sold a Candu reactor, we lost millions of dollars. Every time it opened a new heavy water plant, we had to subsidize it with millions of dollars more, and Liberal and Conservative Governments have done nothing to stop that.

I ask the people of Canada to keep in mind that, for the last 115 years, since Confederation, there have been Conservative and Liberal Governments running the country. In the case of AECL, it is likely that every person employed in the industry could have been given $50,000 to start their own businesses and there would still have been a savings to the taxpayers of Canada in light of the waste of money by that Crown Corporation with no parliamentary scrutiny whatsoever.

At this point in time I would like to move an amendment to the motion that we have before us today. I would move:

That the motion be amended by deleting the period at the end and adding the following:

"and that this House affirms the past and future role of Crown corporations in developing an independent and socially responsible Canadian economy".

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member has moved an amendment.

Mr. Anguish: Mr. Speaker, there has been some dissension with the Conservative Party involving the role of Crown corporations.

Mr. Nielsen: Really?

Mr. Anguish: The speech of the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition today was very supportive of the accountability of Crown corporations. Then one hears the Hon. Member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens), who is sometimes referred to as "The Slasher", talking about knee-capping many Crown corporations. I cannot say that all Crown corporations should be slashed or held up, although many Crown corporations—

Mr. Nielsen: Nothing in the till, anyway.

Mr. Anguish: —have abused the funds gained by taxpayers' dollars because they were not scrutinized by this Parliament.

Mr. Blenkarn: Would you like to knee-cap Atomic Energy?

Mr. Anguish: This Parliament should have the ability to assess whether or not Crown corporations are doing a good job. However, in the Bill introduced by the Conservatives in the last session of Parliament, Clause 33(2) stated:

The board of directors shall, in the exercise of its powers and duties, have due regard to sound business principles.

If this means that Crown corporations must be self-funded or make a profit and, if they do not, they face closure, then we in the NDP would disagree. From what the Leader of the Opposition said today, I think he would agree that most Crown Corporations need a social mandate or else one of promoting national policies and objectives. This must be taken into account as well, beyond consideration as to whether Crown corporations are sustaining themselves or making a profit.

I think that the motion involving accountability of Crown corporations is very timely. Certainly the Government has lost control of the public purse and Parliament is lagging behind as well. Parliament must have the mandate to consider accountability, not only the expenditures of Crown corporations but also of the Government.

Hon. Herb Gray (President of Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the motion presented by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) certainly raises an important topic. It is unfortunate that, rather than addressing this topic, he spent his time on rather fanciful and incorrect assertions about Government action with respect to the economy and a number of other areas of policy.

The fact is that the Government has been taking important and substantial steps to assist in bringing about economic recovery and renewal in Canada. Its six and five program is a basis for bringing down inflation and bringing our costs under control. At the same time, in the budget of June 28 and in the economic statement of October 27, the Government has allocated more than $2 billion to job creation in the private sector. The Government is carrying out these efforts in spite of the fact—and it is a fact, no matter what the Leader of the Opposition says—that the major markets for key Canadian industries like forest products, minerals and auto parts are outside of our borders, and these markets themselves are suffering the most severe recession in some 30 or 40 years. In spite of this, the Government is taking steps and developing programs to reverse the present recession in Canada and, as I have said, to create jobs and bring about a healthier and stronger economy.

Mr. Blenkarn: That is right. Spend and waste money.

Mr. Gray: When the Leader of the Opposition finally got around to the topic of his motion, he seemed to be attacking the very concept of Crown corporations. However, they are simply a means of carrying out public policy purposes, they are simply a means of carrying out purposes connected with national or provincial policies. For example, he complained about the need for more housing for our senior citizens. However, in attacking the very concept of Crown corporations, he attacks the existence of an entity like Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation which has been the means of creating affordable housing for hundreds and thousands of our senior citizens.

• (1610)

When he finally got around to talking about Crown corporations, he referred to the comments of the Auditor General in his most recent Report tabled in this House some two days ago. However, the Leader of the Opposition in his remarks goes far beyond anything said in that Report by the Auditor General. The Auditor General did not call for the abolition of Crown corporations or for a reduction in their number, but for a better framework for their accountability and direction.

The Auditor General certainly did not make the sweeping and inaccurate assertions of the Leader of the Opposition. He did not make the assertion that Crown corporations as a whole are the obvious source of savings in the dimension mentioned by the Leader of the Opposition, or any source of savings at all.

In any event, this Government has already taken a major step toward improving the direction, control and accountability of its wholly-owned corporations with the tabling of its proposed amendments to the Financial Administration Act in Bill C-123. Hon. Members will recall that the Government also announced on June 30 when Bill C-123 was tabled that complementary organizational and administrative measures would be implemented. In addition, the Government announced it would capitalize on the existing authorities contained in the constituent Acts of Crown corporations and in the Financial Administration Act.

These measures must be looked on and considered as a total package. They were designed to enhance the ability of the Government to act as an effective and vigilant shareholder of its wholly-owned corporations. I would like to emphasize the words "wholly-owned corporations". As Hon. Members are aware, the Government's wholly-owned departmental corporations are listed in Schedule B to the Financial Administration Act and are subject to the same provisions of that Act as are Government Departments.

The proposed amendment outlined in Bill C-123 would permit the Government to apply improved direction, control and accountability measures to the other corporations wholly-owned by the Government, whether they are parent corporations or subsidiary corporations.

I believe a distinction should be drawn between corporations which are wholly owned, either directly or indirectly, by the federal Crown and those in which the federal Government may be a majority or minority shareholder together with either private interests or other Governments. In these cases where the Government is not the sole shareholder, the rights of the other shareholders have to be taken into account and thus the degree and manner of Government direction and control exerted over the corporations which are not wholly owned would have to be quite different from that exerted over those which are wholly owned. The proposed amendments in Bill C-123 to Part VIII of the Financial Administration Act, together with complementary administrative reforms, will I suggest establish a régime capable of ensuring that wholly-owned corporations are policy-sensitive and financially-accountable entities.

In Canada, Government-owned corporations have had a long history of being created to achieve public policy objectives. Even before Confederation, the public enterprise model was chosen as a means to attain a particular goal. In 1841 the United Provinces of Canada created a board of works to construct a canal system. In 1906, I think it was, the Province of Ontario, which at the time had a Conservative Government, created Ontario Hydro, one of the largest publicly-owned corporations in Canada and perhaps in North America. The Conservative Government of Ontario, at the time, created Ontario Hydro at the request of a large number of business people who feared the monopolistic practices of a number of privately-owned power companies.

In 1919 the Canadian National railways was created. To many this is considered to be the point at which the federal Government commenced its entry into public enterprise in a major way. The Canadian National Railways was created by the Conservative Government of Robert Borden.

Mr. Clark: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gray: Over the years various Governments, federal and provincial, have used the public enterprise model in pursuing particular public policy objectives, with Conservative Governments being particularly active, when it came to creating many of the Crown corporations whose very existence the Leader of the Opposition is attacking today.

For example, in 1932 the Conservative Government of R. B. Bennett created what is now the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. That same Government created—and I am sure my hon. friend may not be willing to have it recognized now—the Bank of Canada, so often the subject of question and comments by Members of the Opposition. The Diefenbaker Government created the Farm Credit Corporation.

It would seem to indicate that all of those Conservative Governments which had a mandate from the people to form a majority Government and had the brains to be able to manage their affairs to stay in office used Crown corporations as an essential instrument of national policy.

What about the efforts in this regard of provincial Governments? My hon. friend has said nothing about the recent activities of the Alberta Conservative Government in creating the Alberta Energy Corporation and in purchasing control of Pacific Western Airlines. He said nothing about the recent activities of the Ontario Government in creating the Ontario Energy Corporation and the Urban Transportation Development Agency. The Conservative Government in Ontario I am sorry to say has been there for 40 years under successive administrations, each of which has set up new Crown corporations for public policy purposes.

Do Opposition Members in the Ontario legislature play a more active and complete role than they do in this House when it comes to reviewing the activities of Crown corporations? I do not think so. Do Opposition Members in the Alberta legislature play the kind of role sought by the Leader of the Opposition in reviewing Crown corporations?

Mr. Clark: Liberal Opposition Members don't in Alberta.

Mr. Gray: They certainly do not.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gray: When an NDP Government was in office in Saskatchewan, I doubt very much whether members of that legislature, on the Government or Opposition side, played the role sought by the spokesman for the NDP in reviewing the activities of Crown corporations. What we are proposing in Bill C-123 goes far beyond what is available to members of the legislatures, on both sides of the House, in the Provinces I mentioned which have been particularly active in recent years in creating Crown corporations.

Getting back to Bill C-123, the Government has announced measures which would ensure that wholly-owned corporations are more aware of Government priorities. In that Bill, the Government is proposing that the Governor in Council be given the same rights and powers of direction as may be exercised by the sole shareholder or proprietor of a private-sector company incorporated under the Canada Business Corporations Act. In addition, the Government announced the institutionalization of the concept of an annual shareholders' meeting whereby each appropriate Minister as the trustee shareholder would meet annually with boards of directors to formally review the Government's performance and to communicate specific Government objectives to the boards. Of course, the informal communication which now exists between appropriate Ministers and wholly-owned corporations will continue. The proposed shareholders' rights provision in Bill C-123 also involves prerogatives with respect to approval of corporate by-laws, the election and removal of directors and the appointment of auditors.

Although the Government already has similar authority under the constituent Acts of many of its Crown corporations and with respect to all wholly-owned corporations created under the Canada Businesses Corporations Act, the proposed amendment would allow a consistent standard that is in accordance with private sector practices to be applied across all wholly-owned corporations.

As indicated, Mr. Speaker, in the policy statement tabled with amendments, to Bill C-123, the Government will seek to improve its use of existing authorities contained in constituent Acts of Crown corporations and the Financial Administration Act. This action, coupled with the proposed amendments and complementary administrative measures, as I have said, comprises a package designed to address very important issues which have been raised regarding Crown corporations. This approach has taken into account the balance which must be achieved between ensuring that corporations perform in a manner consistent with their role as instruments of national purpose, that they can be held accountable for their performance, and that they can be directed when necessary, while at the same time recognizing that a need exists for a flexible relationship which allows corporations to operate effectively in a corporate form, manner and milieu in accordance with sound business behaviour and practices.

Now, Mr. Speaker, as Hon. Members are aware, the Government's wholly-owned corporations vary in many ways. At one end of the spectrum are those corporations totally dependent on appropriations by Parliament for the financing of their day-to-day operations. At the other end are the commercially-oriented corporations which are financially self-sufficient and pay dividends to the shareholder. There are some corporations which have only a handful of employees. There are others whose employees number in the thousands, and, as has been pointed out, several whose employees number in the tens of thousands. The wholly-owned corporations' head offices are located in a number of Canada's regions. In all, these corporations are important contributors to Canada's economic and social development through their actions across major industrial, financial and service sectors.

The Financial Administration Act was approved by Parliament in order to provide a foundation for the financial administration of the Government of Canada. Part VIII of that act, as I have said, applies solely to Crown corporations listed in Schedules C and D which provide the legislative foundation for the financial relations between Crown corporations and the Government, as well as between the Government and Parliament.

Accountability to Parliament is addressed by having all Crown corporations' annual reports and annual capital budgets tabled in Parliament regardless of whether the corporation was financed through parliamentary appropriation. The information provided to Parliament in this way assists Members of Parliament in holding Ministers accountable for the owners' prerogative which Ministers exercise with respect to Crown corporations. In addition, this information assists executives of Crown corporations in accounting for their activities when they appear before parliamentary committees.

Now, the amendments to Bill C-123 are intended to build on this framework. One of the most important areas which the proposed amendments relate to is control of the proliferation of Crown corporations. We are certainly aware of criticisms which have been expressed in this area by Members of Parliament and the Lambert Commission. The proposed amendments provide that no person, including a wholly-owned corporation, whether a parent or subsidiary, could create a corporation controlled by the federal Government under the Canada Business Corporations Act or the Canada Corporations Act, or any other companies legislation, without the express approval of the Governor in Council.

In addition, the approval of the Governor in Council would be required by any Minister wishing to acquire all the shares of a Canada Business Corporations Act corporation which, upon acquisition, would be owned by the Crown. However, any Order in Council approving the creation or acquisition of a CBCA corporation by a Minister would have to be tabled in Parliament and Parliamentarians would have the right to table and debate and vote on motions which would seek either to confirm or reject the Order in Council under consideration.

Mr. Beatty: What about the CDIC?

Mr. Gray: The proposed amendments also provide that terms and conditions could be attached to any Order in Council approving the creation or acquisition of a subsidiary corporation. Thus, the Government could ensure that the powers of a subsidiary corporation were limited to those of the parent—

Mr. Clark: "Could".

Mr. Gray: —in those cases where wholly-owned parent corporations or wholly-owned subsidiaries were creating or acquiring new subsidiaries. Other terms and conditions which could be part of the—

Mr. Clark: "Could be".

Mr. Gray: —Governor in Council approval might relate to the placing of restrictions on the operations—

Mr. Clark: But won't be.

Mr. Gray: —of new corporations or a requirement for the corporations to submit new or amended articles of incorporation for approval.

The Bill also seeks to ensure the Crown would assume no liability in cases where the incorporation or acquisition had taken place contrary to the restriction on incorporation provisions detailed in the amendments. In addition to including controls on the proliferation of corporations, the Bill would place restrictions on the disposal of the corporate holdings of the Crown. Governor in Council approval would be required before any person, including a corporation, could sell or dispose of any shares held by such a person on behalf of Her Majesty.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to emphasize that with respect to the disposal provisions parliamentary approval would continue to be required in the case of any corporation established by an Act of Parliament where the transfer of the shares of such corporations or the winding up of the corporation and its affairs are subject to the approval of Parliament.

Mr. Clark: Read that again.

Mr. Gray: The Government is strengthening its authority to require financial information consistent with its role as shareholder and, in some cases, as banker or as a source of financing for federally-owned corporations. The Government has therefore proposed in the Bill that Treasury Board should be given authority to request such accounts, returns, statements, documents and reports that the board considers necessary for the performance of its duties.

In addition, Mr. Speaker, to ensure the flow of timely and effective information to assist decision-making, the Government proposes to implement the corporate plan concept which is consistent with normal, good business practice. In general, each corporate plan would provide consolidated information on the corporation's growth and market strategies, the consistency of these corporate strategies with statutory mandates and stated Government objectives, the financial implications of such strategies and their time frame.

Well, Mr. Speaker, I am certainly in a position to give a detailed outline of the amendments proposed for Bill C-123, but I think that I have already begun to demonstrate that what we have in mind is—

Mr. Nielsen: Total incompetence.

Mr. Gray: —something intended to respond to concerns expressed on both sides of this House, in Royal Commissions and in the Auditor General's Report.

Mr. Clark: Shut out Parliament.

Mr. Gray: We intend to respond to those kinds of concerns in an effective and timely manner. Certainly, Mr. Speaker, the recently tabled Report of the Auditor General is likely to be a focus of attention for Members of Parliament, therefore I would like at this time to make a few comments about some of the specific points respecting the accountability of Crown-owned corporations which the Auditor General has highlighted in his report.

I want to remind the House that a previous Liberal Government initiated a major study of the broad issue of the direction, control and accountability of Crown corporations. The study led to a blue paper which was published in 1977 and outlined proposals of the Government of the day regarding a renewed relationship between the Government and Crown corporations. This initiative led to important discussions among interested parties on the role of Crown corporations and the degree of Government and parliamentary direction, control and scrutiny which would be most appropriate. Certainly the Bill presented by the Government of my hon. friends opposite drew extensively on the work done by previous Liberal Governments.

Mr. Beatty: From which you backtracked.

Mr. Gray: Also, Mr. Speaker, the proposals which this Government introduced on June 30 are the result of further consideration of views expressed by Parliamentarians, the Auditor General and the Lambert Commission, balanced by the recognition that wholly-owned corporations are not Government Departments and that these corporations require a flexible relationship which allows them to function in a corporate environment in accordance with sound business principles.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the Auditor General in his recent Report concluded that legislation is necessary to require comprehensive audits for all federal wholly-owned corporations. I want to remind the House that the Government had already noted the previously stated recommendations of the Auditor Genreral and the Public Accounts Committee requesting that comprehensive audits become a requirement for Crown corporations. It was with these recommendations in mind that the Government announced in the policy statement, which was made public at the same time as the amendments to Bill C-123, that it would use the proposed shareholders' rights authority, which would be granted to it through the Governor in Council, to require management systems audits when and if necessary.

As I stated earlier in my remarks, Bill C-123 is only part of the Government's total package respecting Crown corporations reform. It should be noted that the comparison made by the Auditor General, in his very useful Report between Bill C-123 and Bill C-27 does not reflect those aspects of direction, control and accountability measures which are addressed through the improved utilization of existing legislative authorities contained in the constituent Acts of Crown corporations and in the Financial Administration Act; nor does the comparison reflect the organizational and administrative measures which complement the proposed amendments to the Financial Administration Act.

I would remind the House that with respect to the corporate financing area the Government has proposed an amendment to the Financial Administration Act which would provide a general authority for the Minister of Finance to approve the borrowing activities of any wholly-owned corporation subject to general regulations issued by the Governor in Council.

To conclude, I also want to remind the House that the Government House Leader (Mr. Pinard) has said he is negotiating with Opposition House Leaders with a view to having Bill C-123 divided so that the Crown corporations section can be the subject of a separate Bill. I hope there will soon be agreement on this so that this important subject can be given the focus and attention it deserves. I am presently very actively reviewing the comments and recommendations in the latest Auditor General's Report to see if they can provide a basis for further possible amendments to Bill C-123, and I will certainly be discussing this actively with my colleagues.

It would appear that all Members of the House are in agreement that there has to be an improvement in the over-all means of ensuring the accountability and direction of Crown corporations. We do not differ in this regard—

Mr. Beatty: We want them accountable to Parliament; we do not want them accountable the Liberals only.

Mr. Gray: —although obviously there is a very serious difference in perception when it comes to the most appropriate way of going about this. There is a very serious difference in perception when it comes to looking at the views of the Official Opposition about the nature of the success of Crown corporations in building Canada and the views of the people on the Government side of the House.

My hon. friends have made some reference to improved accountability of Crown corporations to Parliament. They seem to have forgotten that it was the Government, and the Members of Parliament supporting the Government, that took the initiative to adopt the report of the Special Committee on Standing Orders Procedure just recently and which becomes operative when we come back in January.

Mr. Clark: That is not true either, Herb.

Mr. Gray: This report has amended Standing Order 41 to ensure that:

> Reports, returns or other papers laid before the House in accordance with an Act of Parliament shall thereupon be deemed to have been permanently referred to the committee designated by the Member tabling the report, return or paper.

Mr. Beatty: That certainly sets my mind at ease.

Mr. Gray: Also, Mr. Speaker, this House has adopted the recommendation which has led to a change in the Standing Orders to the effect that:

> Within 120 days of the presentation of a committee report the Government shall, upon the request of the committee, table a comprehensive response.

Mr. Clark: If the committee requests.

Mr. Nielsen: Only if the Government wants it.

Mr. Gray: Bill C-123 which was tabled months before the Auditor General's Report also helps prove our resolve to bring about improvements in the framework, direction—

Mr. Beatty: Nonsense.

Mr. Gray: —and accountability of Crown corporations.

The Opposition motion obviously ignores completely the steps the Government has taken and intends to take to deal with the very important matter of improving the accountability of Crown corporations. The motion of the Opposition is superficial, one-sided and incomplete. It ignores completely the need for the flexibility of the Crown corporation concept and the major contribution Crown corporations have made and will make to the well-being of Canada and its people.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I call upon all Members of this House to reject overwhelmingly this specious and empty motion.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest to the remarks of the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray). Perhaps now, though, it is time for some facts to be injected into this debate, because it is clear that the President of the Treasury Board neither understands the legislation that he is being called upon to defend nor has any grasp of reality as it relates to the problems posed by Crown corporations in Canada today.

Mr. Gray: We are not going to get any facts from you, just fiction.

Mr. Beatty: If the President of the Treasury Board had read the Auditor General's Report, he would have seen the Auditor General warn Canadians of a sub-government, largely invisible to Canadians, beyond Parliament's reach, competing with our citizens in the marketplace but having special advantages over them, employing more people than are employed by the federal Public Service, costing billions of tax dollars every year and steadily growing in size and power. That sub-government is the array of Crown corporations that moves our mail, produces our radio and TV programs, transports us across the country, builds aircraft, sells uranimum, lends money, pumps gas and touches our daily lives in a hundred other ways.

In theory, Parliament authorizes the creation of these corporations and supervises their activities. In practice, Parliament's involvement is minimal, and shrinking. Many of these corporations conduct their affairs in secrecy, seeing little need to explain to the taxpayers, who pay billions of dollars to subsidize them each year, how that money is being spent.

Try to find out how much it costs the Canada Post Corporation to participate in Intelpost, or try to discover how much business Intelpost moves between Washington and Toronto. I did, and I was told that it was none of my business as a Member of Parliament. That information is classified.

Try to find out the cost of the CBC's logo, which looks like a flying pizza. You will not find that out but that is a secret too. Ask the Government how two of its Crown corporations participated in the energy cartel. That information is classified and indeed it would be a criminal offence to give out some of that information. Or try to find out how much taxpayers will be paying Joel Bell, the new President of the Canada Development Investment Corporation. We are not entitled to know that.

The Auditor General pointed out that the size and power of Crown corporations today is massive and largely beyond Parliament's control. But there is nothing really very new in his findings. His predecessor found the same thing six years ago, as did the Public Accounts Committee, the Lambert Commission, the Privy Council Office and various other studies which have taken place since. What is new, however, is that at the same time as the Government talks about making Crown corporations more accountable, it is moving quickly to put the corporations even further beyond Parliament's reach.

The President of the Treasury Board talked about Bill C-123. Bill C-123 will give Parliament's blessing for the Government to create an unlimited number of new Crown corporations in any field whatsoever. Any of these corporations which the Government decides to make agents of Her Majesty will be free to price-fix and publish misleading advertising without having to fear prosecution. They will borrow on the Government's credit rating and Canadian taxpayers will be automatically responsible for their debts.

Parliament will not be asked to pass Bills to create the corporations, as we did for the Canada Post Corporation or for Air Canada. Instead, Parliament's participation when the Government decides to set up a new corporation will be limited to three hours' debate in the House and three hours' debate in the Senate. When a corporation itself is creating a new subsidiary, however, there will be not one syllable, not a single word said in Parliament, no parliamentary involvement whatsoever.

A few weeks ago, the Government created a new Crown corporation, the Canada Development Investment Corporation, because their attempts to pressure the Canada Development Corporation, in which they hold only a minority interest, had failed. They had tried to instal Maurice Strong, a former Liberal candidate, as Chairman of the CDC but were forced to back down because of the public outcry. Instead, they have created a whole new corporation for Mr. Strong. Its President will be Joel Bell, who has prospered from the Government's generosity and goodwill in the past. It will report to Senator Jack Austin, the architect of the infamous energy cartel. The elements of patronage in the corporation would be serious enough in themselves, but from the point of view of Parliament what is far more serious in the long run will be how the corporation was created and how it will function in the future.

The corporation was formed without a single word of debate in the House. Parliament was neither informed nor consulted before the corporation was created. Yet the Government is in the process of building what may soon become the largest holding company in Canada, dwarfing in size Conrad Black's holdings or the Power Corporation.

• (1640)

Parliament may be asked to vote funds for the company and its consent will be needed to transfer the Government's holdings in the Canada Development Corporation to the CDIC. In time, however, the CDIC will have all the power it needs to create, buy, sell, and manage companies in any business whatsoever, either in Canada or anywhere around the world. Parliament will neither have a right to be consulted before important actions are taken nor to control the billions of dollars involved.

Even the creation of new Crown corporations to be owned by the CDIC will not require Parliament's involvement because Bill C-123 exempts subsidiaries of Crown corporations from parliamentary debate.

The President of the Treasury Board spoke about Bill C-123 being designed to ensure that there would be improved parliamentary accountability, but I would like to know where that accountability will be. I would ask the President of Treasury Board and the Liberal speakers who will follow where that accountability will come from in the case of the CDIC. Will Parliament have the opportunity to utter even one syllable before these new corporations are incorporated as subsidiaries of CDIC? Will it have any control over the budgeting process? Was it consulted before the CDIC was created? What does Bill C-123 do in this very important field to enhance accountability to Parliament and to enhance the ability of Members of Parliament to discharge the responsibilities entrusted to them by the people of Canada?

The Canada Development Investment Corporation may well not have to come to Parliament for funds for very long, because profits from any of its subsidiaries can be spent without Parliament's consent. And when the CDIC sells assets, such as its shares in the Canada Development Corporation, it will hold on to the proceeds of these sales and will be able to use that money to subsidize any losing companies or buy whole new corporations. All the Government need do is move into the portfolio held by CDIC sufficient companies able to pay their own way. It can recycle the funds from winning companies to the losers. It can take the profits to expand the involvement of CDIC. At no time does Parliament come back into the picture unless CDIC comes back to Parliament to ask for more funds. When it sells Crown corporations or their assets, that money will not flow back to the Consolidated Revenue Fund so that Parliament can hold the purse strings. It will flow into the CDIC which is accountable only to Senator Jack Austin. The money can be spent however the CDIC chooses, without Parliament being asked for consent.

How dare the Minister talk about Bill C-123 and about parliamentary accountability when everything that he has done and everything being done by the Government at present will subvert parliamentary accountability, not enhance it.

The prospect of such a massive company, controlled by the Prime Minister's protégés and involved in a wide range of economic activities, above the laws that its private sector competitors must obey and beyond Parliament's scrutiny, is frightening for anyone who believes in free enterprise or parliamentary democracy. And yet the facts are clear and incontestable. The company has been formed without Parliament's consent. The Government has installed its cronies as Chairman of the Board and President. It has listed some of the companies that will be transferred to the CDIC and will be asking us to approve $400 million more for two of those companies this evening. The President of the Treasury Board has already tabled Bill C-123, which will permit the creation of an unlimited number of new Crown corporations.

Crown corporations have long been seen by the Government as a useful means of pursuing its policy goals. Only recently, however, has the Government discovered just how useful they can be.

The Government does not see Parliament as the central institution in our democracy. The Liberals see Parliament as a pain-in-the-neck, a roadblock in their way. To the Liberals, Parliament is not the central institution in Government; it is an obstacle to be removed or avoided at all costs.

By using Crown corporations instead of Government departments to achieve its purposes, the Government can almost totally avoid Parliament. Our consent is not needed to create the corporations; if they are carefully set up, their finances can be managed outside the budgetary process, thereby avoiding messy parliamentary debate and reducing the apparent size of Government spending. If embarrassing questions are asked, the Government can always plead the need for commercial confidentiality.

It is ironic that the President of the Treasury Board should be given the responsibility for supervising Canada's Crown corporations and for developing a regime of accountability. When I was a Minister in Treasury Board I often wondered why the windows of the Department were sealed. Now I know the reason. When the building was erected it was suspected that he might one day become President and they wanted to avoid the prospect of public servants jumping from the windows when they learned that.

The President of Treasury Board, who has been told by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) that he has the responsibility of enhancing the credibility of Crown corporations, showed his ingenuity earlier this summer when he was Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. He had a new company created under provincial legislation in Newfoundland. He did not take action under the Canada Business Corporations Act but used the provincial companies legislation. The Government then issued an Order in Council that made that company a Crown corporation. The Government had been following the procedures in the House so it knew about Madam Speaker's ruling that it is not possible to put funds into a program which has not been approved by Parliament, but it found a way around that ruling. It chose to use a fund which was created to assist industry and it used that fund in order to put money into this new Crown corporation.

What is at issue here is not the need for the new Crown corporation or whether it serves any useful purpose; the issue is whether this precedent will be increasingly used in the future and what effect the precedent will have upon the solemn obligation that we have as Members of Parliament to control the public purse strings.

The President of Treasury Board, in his previous incarnation, discovered a convenient way of end-running Parliament. The Government will ask us to give it the money it needs to assist industry. It will set up funds of this sort. When we ask what companies will receive the assistance, it will reply that nobody will know until we see who requests it. When we ask about this in the Estimates, the response will be: "How should we know? This is a fund set up to assist industry and we will not know who is going to ask for funds until later. We have to set the fund up now; then we will see who asks for money and make the decision." Increasingly, Mr. Speaker, those requests will be used by Crown corporations as a means to avoid coming back to Parliament to ask for funds.

Before I leave the Minister's responsibilities, Mr. Speaker, I think we should not forget his record as related to Consolidated Computers. Over $100 million of taxpayers' money was lost. In the House yesterday the President of Treasury Board had the unmitigated gall to state with a straight face, as reported at page 21390 of Hansard, the following:

> Once again, Madam Speaker, I want the House and the public to note the endorsement of the official spokesman of the Conservative Party for the steps we took to end our involvement in Consolidated Computer and have it involved with the Nabu company.

Where has the Minister been? At the very same time as his predecessor in that portfolio wrote to him saying that Ministers had been kept in the dark about the state of affairs regarding Consolidated Computer, he wrote back on more than one occasion—and we have the letters—saying that what was necessary was not to pull the plug on Consolidated Computer but to put more tax dollars in to build it up. Yet he had the unmitigated gall yesterday to talk about "the steps we took to end our involvement in Consolidated Computer". If he had not been overruled by his predecessor at Treasury Board we would still be pouring good tax dollars after bad into Consolidated Computer.

Mr. Gray: It was my initiative.

Mr. Beatty: Now the Minister is entrusted with the responsibility of coming up with a comprehensive package for the accountability and control of Crown corporations. A few minutes ago he told us that he is currently reviewing the recommendations of the Auditor General to see which he can accept. What else could we expect?

Mr. Wilson: Would you trust him?

Mr. Beatty: My colleague asks if we would trust him. If we had $100, we just have to look at the treasury benches and ask ourselves which Member of Cabinet—the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Roberts), the President of Treasury Board, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen), the Minister of State for Multiculturalism (Mr. Fleming), the Minister of State for Mines (Mrs. Erola) or the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy)—would we trust to invest it wisely?

Mr. Clark: Roberts would give it to Buchanan!

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Speaker, to which one would you give your money? I think I know what the answer would be. Yet we are being asked to give to these Ministers a blank cheque written on the account of the people of Canada to continue to spend, to continue to intrude in the marketplace, and to continue to destroy the viability of the private enterprise system in Canada. We are telling them to spend literally billions of tax dollars every year in their involvement in Government corporations, without limit. As corporations which are agents of Her Majesty continue to run up debts, those debts are automatically charges upon the revenues of the taxpayers of Canada.

The Government has found another way of getting money to its corporations without the fuss and bother of asking Parliament first. Clause 29 of Bill C-42, which created the Canada Post Corporation, allows the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) to forward any money he chooses to the Corporation to cover its bills. The Corporation is expected to pay back as much as it can, but any shortfall will be covered by an item in the Estimates. When Parliament comes into the picture, the money will have been long since spent. Parliamentary control will be no more than an illusion because Parliament will have no ability to control money which is already gone.

The Auditor General has looked at what the Government has been doing to control Crown corporations. He took the Government at its word when it said that it wanted improved accountability. He said that he found its plans to be inadequate. The President of the Treasury Board alluded to that, but perhaps he did not go into the depth he might have. On page 58 of the Auditor General's Report, he made a comparison of the 1977 Blue Book, the Conservative legislation, Bill C-27, and the legislation before the House now, Bill C-123. There were 33 separate points of comparison. In seven of the points his concerns were fully met by the Government's Bill; in two other points portions of his concerns were met. By contrast, Bill C-27 fully met some 25 of the Auditor General's concerns and partially met one of them. Yet the Minister has the nerve to talk about Bill C-123.

I would go well beyond the Auditor General's observations. I do not believe the Liberals have the slightest intention of improving parliamentary control over Crown corporations. Their activities prove that they intend to do just the opposite. Looked at in that context, Bill C-123 is not simply a weak and ineffectual attempt to make improvements; it is a highly dangerous Bill designed to provide a fig leaf of respectability for a measure which is an attack on Parliament itself.

Bill C-123 should not be amended as the Minister suggested. It should be scrapped and replaced with a whole new Bill which genuinely attempts to correct the problems pointed out by every study of Crown corporations that has been conducted. There must be no more Crown corporations created without Parliament's consent. Crown corporations must obey the same laws as their private sector competitors when it comes to false and misleading advertising and to cartels. The mandates of new Crown corporations must be spelled out clearly. The mandates of old Crown corporations must be regularly updated. There must be much less secrecy about the activities of Crown corporations, and secret directives from the Government to Crown corporations must stop. New controls should be placed on the borrowings of Crown corporations. The Government's accounts must accurately reflect their debts. The Auditor General must have the authority that he needs to do his job.

Parliament cannot force such legislation on a majority Government if it does not want it, but we still have the power to stop the Government from taking some of the dangerous actions it is currently planning. It is too late to prevent Bill C-102 from becoming law. It is too late to force changes to the Canada Post Corporation Bill in the areas where it violates Parliament's control over supply. It is too late to stop the creation of the CDIC. But it is not too late for us to take a stand against Bill C-123 or against any other measure designed to subvert parliamentary democracy.

In conclusion, let me say to the President of the Treasury Board that the Government should not underestimate our sincerity or our determination to draw the line and to take a stand to prevent this last vestige of parliamentary control from being stripped away. We will fight them in the House. We will fight them in the country. We are prepared to allow the people of Canada to decide whether or not the Government shall be permitted to remove this last parliamentary check on its actions. It is a fight that we dare not lose because the wealth and the liberties of every Canadian hang in the balance.

Mr. Pierre Deniger (La Prairie): Mr. Speaker, when I read the wording of the Opposition motion which, in fact, urges greater participation by Members in the management of Crown corporations, I must admit that I found both the subject and the speeches of the previous speakers most interesting. However, with due respect, I was very disappointed, Mr. Speaker, in the speech made by the Right Hon. Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Clark).

Mr. Mazankowski: That is not what you told me.

Mr. Deniger: Mr. Speaker, I made notes, because I am always interested in what the Right Hon. Leader of the Official Opposition has to say.

I have about a dozen pages of notes here in my hand, and they are about subjects that are extraneous to the question we should be debating, according to the motion before the House today. The Leader of the Official Opposition talked about internationalism, about Government advertising and he talked about the unemployed with a great deal of concern, but all that is not the subject of the motion before this House. He talked about my colleague from Bourassa (Mr. Rossi) and about several other Members, but he did not speak to the motion under consideration. Mr. Speaker, I wrote on this small scrap of paper everything he said about today's motion. I wrote down the words: Crown corporations. His contribution to today's debate was just that: Crown corporations.

Mr. Speaker, I am afraid I shall have to conclude that if in today's column, Allan Fotheringham's last words were:

[English]

"Why do they publish evidence of their own ineptitude?"

[Translation]

He must have been anticipating the speech of the Right Hon. Leader of the Official Opposition. Mr. Speaker, it was one of the worst speeches it has been my misfortune to hear.

[English]

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The Hon. Member who is now speaking told me privately that he thought the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) made a brilliant speech.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please.

Mr. Deniger: Obviously the Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) misunderstood what I said. If I remember exactly what I said to him, I said that the future of his Leader depended upon his actions. This is what I remember telling him, and he agreed.

I go now to the substance of the motion itself.

[Translation]

I think it is clear, Mr. Speaker, that Crown corporations should be made accountable to Parliament. I think they have been allowed to take it easy and to do just about whatever they wanted to do for far too long. The few times Crown corporations appeared before Parliamentary committees for instance, the Committee on Transport and Communications of which I am Deputy Chairman, and I am referring to Crown corporations such as Air Canada and Canadian National, and there are many others, Mr. Speaker, they gave the impression that, of course, they had to submit to the Committee's questions for three hours, but once the torture was over, they could go home and do whatever they wanted.

Mr. Speaker, in view of that experience, I thought it would be very useful for Hon. Members to have an opportunity to make a more thorough analysis of the activities of Crown corporations. In fact, I was quite convinced, until Canadair—a corporation that was particularly important to Quebecers who believed in the aviation industry and in the benefits of advanced technology—appeared before the Finance Committee. I see the Members opposite, but none of them were on the Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs—at least none of those who are in the House today. But I think the Member for York-Simcoe or was it York-Peel, but in any case, the former President of the Treasury Board asked the President of Canadair some questions. Mr. Speaker, at that time I saw right away the kind of a trap the Members of the Opposition are preparing for us. In the case of Canadair, which is a highly competitive industry with competitors in the United States and France, what kind of questions did the Opposition Members ask? They were interested only in matters that were entirely confidential, such as production costs and the use of technology as compared to Grumman or other companies. The Canadair people appearing before the Committee—I had been wanting to see them for a long time, because $1.3 billion is a lot of money—told us: Gentlemen, your questions are only helping our competitors. Do you not understand that your questions are not a help but a hindrance? That was the kind of question the Opposition Members asked Canadair.

Instead of seeking the assurance that the money was well spent, the Opposition Members only wanted to know about cost, in order to help Grumman, because the Member who was asking the questions had Grumman's annual report in front of him, and used it to embarrass these people who were appearing before the Committee for the first time.

Mr. Speaker, it is clear that the Progressive Conservative Party is not prepared to, as it were, put its money where its mouth is. I listened to the Member for Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Beatty). The Hon. Member is Joint Chairman of the Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments. He is one of the Members I prefer to listen to in the House, because he is consistent, because he believes basically in what he says and because he practises what he preaches, and having seen his performance as Joint Chairman, we realize that he knows where he is going. Unfortunately, he is alone, crying in the wilderness, in the middle of that crowd sitting next to him. The Member for Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe does not, for instance, want to do away with VIA Rail. Suppose we talk about VIA Rail for a minute, Mr. Speaker. Obviously, the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition did not talk about VIA Rail, but he could have used it as a good example in discussing the legislation and the measures he would like to see introduced, because the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) has often been criticized for cutting 20 per cent of the traffic—

Mr. Clark: Without prior consultation! Without public hearings!

Mr. Deniger: Without prior consultation, this summer, and without any public hearings, and why not, Mr. Leader of the Opposition? What is so bad about not having a public hearing? Is that so bad? What is really bad, Mr. Speaker, is that the Progressive Conservative Party is going to criticize us for running a deficit and for giving VIA Rail even more money, namely $164 million in addition to the $500 million it was given already. I would like to know what VIA Rail's deficit would have been if we had not had the guts to scrap routes that were not being used?

Mr. Clark: Probably less.

Mr. Deniger: Of course, if the Leader of the Opposition had the courage to say what is on his mind, Mr. Speaker, he would probably get fewer votes in Winnipeg in January, because as Hon. Members are aware, the Progressive Conservatives are ahead in the polls, and are also so scared and their popularity margin is so narrow that they will not take a stand on anything. When they had their policy orientation convention in Toronto—the Leader of the Opposition is smiling because he knows what I am going to say—they did not even have the guts to have a debate on an orientation issue. All they did was use a questionnaire, and now they are trying to camouflage the results. For shame! A questionnaire in which they say they are against family allowances, against multiculturalism, against any form of security and against hospital insurance! This is the party that was so concerned about the accountability of Crown corporations, this is the party that wanted to be able to analyze Crown corporation activities. This is the party that wanted to know whether profits made by Air Canada this year should not be returned to the Consolidated Fund instead of being reinvested to ensure that the Canadian taxpayer is getting his money's worth. Mr. Speaker, I am glad to see them in the Opposition. I am especially glad, as my colleague from Longueuil (Mr. Olivier), said, that the Leader of the Official Opposition is going to stay there. I am glad, because although he may show some common sense on other issues, though lacking the support of his caucus, he does not do so on this issue. It was obvious, Mr. Speaker. It was embarrassing to hear him speak just now, when he so obviously had been told to say nothing.

Take Air Canada or Canadian National or Petro-Canada. The Leader of the Opposition should know that according to the same polls that show his party is ahead, Canadians like their Crown corporations, they support them and are the corporations' main customers.

Mr. Speaker, he should remember the lesson he got in 1980, in January or February, when the Canadian people rejected him outright because he wanted to privatize Crown corporations. Has he forgotten? That is really amazing, Mr. Speaker. However, I would rather not waste any more time on what the Leader of the Opposition did not say, because what is important here is the Auditor General's Report. I would like to quote what he said in paragraph 2.114, since we have talked a lot about Bill C-123. The Auditor General said, and I quote:

—Bill C-123 considerably strengthens the role of ministers in controlling the financing and directing of wholly-owned Crown corporations.

I think it is quite true and that it is a straightforward analysis of Bill C-123. In fact, this is what the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray) told the Members of the Opposition, who were obviously not paying much attention. However, the Auditor General goes on to say, and I quote:

However, it does not address the needs of Parliament.

That is true. I would prefer that, if all Members were responsible. Unfortunately, I just gave an example of the irresponsibility of Opposition Members. Unfortunately, all Members are not responsible. Where I fully agree with the Auditor General, and perhaps some of my colleagues in the Cabinet are not so enthusiastic, is the principle of comprehensive audits for certain Crown corporations. I sat on the Committee on Communications and Culture, where there was a long debate on whether or not there should be a comprehensive audit of the CBC. The Committee's report was clear and recommended a comprehensive audit. Unfortunately, the Ministers did not act on this recommendation. In the case of VIA Rail, for instance, there is now a comprehensive audit for management. Unfortunately, we will not see it.

Personally, I would like to see comprehensive audits for Air Canada and other Crown corporations. Opposition Members would have us believe that they are really concerned about making these corporations a success, while from their questions and actions it is clear that if they could get hold of these comprehensive audits, they would hand them over to the competitors, to make sure the corporations would lose money, since it is against their policy that a Crown corporation should be properly administrated and make a profit. To people who are interested in profits, it is fine as long as the profits are not being made by a Crown corporation. Mr. Speaker, the party opposite is really a mass of contradictions. As far as the motion before the House is concerned, I feel that, basically, it is quite straightforward, and it is hard for a Member to object to having more power. However, in view of the total lack of responsibility of the Members opposite, it is clear that we cannot vote in favour of a motion of this kind, because the Members opposite are not prepared to assume the responsibilities that the motion entails.

• (1710)

Earlier a Member from the other side took the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray) to task for creating Crown companies. When we do create one, it is always because there is a need for it, and it is in the public interest. Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, that is certainly not the way Members opposite see it since they think that whenever a new Crown corporation is created Canadians are deprived of jobs, goods and services. It is precisely the opposite that happens, Mr. Speaker, whenever we create a new Crown corporation. The CNR is a case in point. Exactly what was it? Just a loose aggregate of private companies which were operating an unprofitable railway system. So the Government stepped in and created a corporation to extend rail services to various regions. There was a merger. The Government bought the CN and today, except for a few thick-witted Members opposite, who is talking about selling off our Canadian National Railways? That is sheer nonsense, Mr. Speaker!

If we take VIA Rail, for instance, are there any Members on the other side who would dare say that we should get rid of that corporation? Not one, Mr. Speaker, even though it is costing us $500 million, not to mention the additional $165 million we gave them this year. Why? Because they know that, politically speaking, it would be unwise to advocate the privatization of VIA Rail.

People talk about the CBC and its huge budget. In that case, I would like to have an integrated audit, as would the Hon. Member for Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Beatty). Indeed both he and I are strong advocates of an integrated audit, but we have not had any luck so far. I must admit that I have not yet accepted that refusal and I still think that the Government will eventually have the courage to insist on an integrated audit of the CBC. However, Mr. Speaker, are there any Members on the other side, except for that Edmonton visionary, who would put the CBC up for sale? Not one. When Mr. Pocklington was asked who would buy the CBC, he said he would. Naturally, he would make a profit out of the deal, and that is what we want to do too. In the public interest, would we rather not make sure that our communications networks are efficient, excellent and a model for others? I think so.

Mr. Speaker, as I listened to Hon. Members opposite, I realized that while their motion refers to accountability, their comments were strictly on the question of whether or not we should have Crown corporations. It is very obvious, Mr. Speaker, that it is quite reasonable and useful to have Crown corporations. Does this truth get the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) so angry that he gets excited and turns as red as his tie and as "Rouge" as the party that will remain in power for a long time to come? I do not know, but I want to tell him that if he really understood the concept of Canada, he would certainly realize that Crown corportions are essential tools for a government such as ours in our type of society. I can see the Hon. Member behind him, the Hon. Member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone), make gestures of frustration. I am certain that these gestures were not addressed to the Leader of the Opposition and that his gestures were addressed neither to the Leader of the Opposition nor to his constituents who are of the opinion that we need the CBC, VIA Rail Canada, Air Canada, Petro-Canada and the Canada Housing and Mortgage Corporation. And that is the whole issue, Mr. Speaker. Do we want Crown corporations or not? The leaders of the opposition say no and we say yes. Do we want them to be well managed? For our part, we say yes.

Do Hon. Members opposite have enough heart and conscience to hold in their hands documents that could help the competitors of our Crown corporations? I say that that is how they use them. I say that they are irresponsible and that as long as they cannot show a greater sense of their responsibilities, intelligence and good will, on the basis of their behaviour even in committee, they do not deserve to see documents which would help the competitors of our Crown corporations.

This evening, I shall vote against the motion of the Progressive Conservatives, Mr. Speaker, because they have once again demonstrated what Mr. Fotheringham calls their ineptitude. During the last minute remaining to me, Mr. Speaker, I would not want to deal with the Arrow, our great and fantastic plane made in Canada, which was scrapped by the Progressive Conservative Party. So I will not deal with it. I will not deal either with its unemployment insurance policy or anything the Canadian people want, except their filthy rich members.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, and before the Right Hon. Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Clark) has a stroke, I want to say that we will definitely vote against this motion and that it is unfortunate that a party which thinks it is on the brink of returning to power does not have among its members responsible people who could have supporting evidence and use it property.

[English]

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Laprairie (Mr. Deniger) concluded his speech with a surprising statement. He said he was going to vote against the motion. Sheep are expected to do nothing else but as they are told. You know it, I know it, and everyone knows it. Judging by the Hon. Member's speech, he is not allowed to think either. It was the most atrocious speech. What made it more atrocious was that it followed the eloquent speech given by the Hon. Member for Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Beatty). I do not know how any responsible Member of Parliament, after listening to the Hon. Member for Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe, could not end up feeling anything but rage about this situation or anything but dedicated to do something about it in order to restore some semblance of parliamentary democracy to this country.

The Hon. Member for Laprairie said that the question is whether there will be Crown corporations; whether they are approved or not approved. He was absolutely wrong, as he realized when he made that false statement. That is not the question. Every Party in this House, whether directly as the Government Party or indirectly through associated parties at provincial levels, has participated in the creation of Crown corporations of one sort or another. The question of whether there is a role for Crown corporations is not in doubt. There are, in certain circumstances, situations where Crown corporations are useful.

The question we are concerned with is, is this a Parliamentary democracy? Do elected representatives of the people have a right to know what is happening in these Crown corporations? Do elected representatives of the people have a right to say when these corporations will be created, how they will be created and what their budgets and operations will be? No Members of Parliament have that fundamental right, or are we forced, because these are Crown corporations, to remain mute and ignorant as these corporations spend huge amounts of money—$30 billion a year—which belongs to the taxpayers. All to frequently this Government wastes huge amounts of money.

I do not know whether the President of Treasury board (Mr. Gray) heard my colleague from Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe when he gave his final analysis. I suggest that the Minister read the speech because he gave a warning that we view this question as fundamental to our responsibilities as Members of Parliament. I see the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) sitting over there as well. I suggest he may do well to read that speech.

Unless something is done soon about the problems which were articulated by the Auditor General and expanded upon by my Leader and the Hon. Member for Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe, there is, quite frankly, little or no use for this Parliament to carry on. That was the message being conveyed. The question as to the purpose of this place is so important that it takes precedence over almost anything else. That message should be heeded by Members opposite who have a sense of responsibility and would like to see passage of other legislation and other programs.

A study of this issue of Crown corporations is almost a microcosm. It is not a microcosm because it is larger than that, but it is almost an analysis, if you will, of what is fundamentally wrong with the situation in Canada. The Government is out of control. There is no sense in the country that we in Ottawa, the Government and Parliament, the people who have the responsibility which has been entrusted to them by the citizens of Canada, really know what is going on, are in control and have some sense of propriety with regard to the expenditure of taxpayers' money, some sense of responsibility, some sense of the future and a plan by which to address the many concerns of Canadians. This situation involving Crown corporations is exactly parallel. It is, as the Auditor General said, a sub-government. In fact, in terms of employees it is larger than the bureaucracy. It is larger than the main Government. The situation is totally out of control.

My colleagues pointed out that Crown corporations can be created at will, at any time, by two or three people who are appointed, not elected. They have no mandate from anyone. They have been hired for certain jobs. They can create new corporations, obligate the people of Canada for the debts of those corporations and spend not just hundreds, thousands or millions of dollars, but, rather, billions of dollars without being held accountable to anyone. However, the people of Canada are responsible for making those payments.

If we are a democracy, then this problem must be addressed. The chronology has been gone over. The Auditor General made the statement in 1975 that the financial accountability and management of Crown corporations is out of control. From that observation came a study in 1977. It was not a bad study. From that came draft legislation which the Progressive Conservative administration introduced and intended to have passed. Since then, there has been nothing except a proliferation of new Crown corporations. The problem has become even worse. What has happened? Why has this problem not been addressed? Everyone who has examined it, including the present Auditor General and several others and the Lambert Commission, has clearly said that there is a serious problem which must be addressed if this is a parliamentary democracy.

Liberal Governments keep saying, "Yes, yes, we are looking at it", but then do nothing. Why? The reason is that Crown corporations are very convenient tools by which to avoid some of the messiness of democracy, because there is no question but that democracy is messy. It requires the disclosure of information which sometimes one does not want to disclose. It requires that satisfactory procedures are followed and that is sometimes a little bit annoying. There is no question but that dictatorship, having to account to no one, is a far more convenient system by which to work for the person who has the power. However, it is not democracy to have that kind of system.

It is a very convenient process for Government. It is a convenient repository for the party faithful, for people to whom the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) or the Party is obligated. For instance, when the Hon. Member for Lincoln (Mr. Mackasey) lost out in his little excursion into provincial politics in Ottawa Centre, he was appointed Chairman of Air Canada. It was a lovely position with a marvellous salary. We do not know what the salary was and we are not allowed to find out. We can find out the salaries of the chief executive officers of every single American airline. We can find out the salaries of the top executive officers of any private Canadian corporation, but not of Air Canada. How good was he as Chairman?

Mr. Benjamin: You're going to find out in the States.

Mr. Andre: We know that his favourite waiter received a pass for two to fly to London and back. We know that the Hon. Member for Lincoln enjoyed that.

Then, of course, there is Jack Horner, the CNR Chairman. We do not know what he is getting paid. We are not allowed to find out. As well, Maurice Strong and Joel Bell of the Canada Development Investment Corporation passed no Public Service Commission exam. We do not know their salaries. We do not know what they are doing on behalf of the people of Canada.

Mr. Benjamin: Ian Sinclair!

Mr. Andre: They are appointed, they are not elected. Is it not, just on the face of it, perverse that appointed people have all of this power while elected people have none? Is that not, on its surface, perverse and anti-democratic, except to the turkey from Regina, who feels that once one is appointed to the Government, one attracts an aura or a halo and then suddenly becomes honest?

To the Government, Crown corporations are a convenience through which to pass benefits on to their friends, and to use and abuse. Consider the example of Mr. Mike Phelps, who was the executive assistant to the current Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) when he was Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. The rules will not allow the Minister of Finance to pay his friend, Mr. Phelps, what he thought Mr. Phelps was worth, so he arranged that Petro-Canada would pay him a salary in addition to the salary allowed under the rules. Petro-Canada mortgaged his house in Rockcliffe so that he could live in the style to which a man of his stature should be accustomed. As a Member of Parliament, I cannot afford to live in Rockcliffe. That is because I am merely elected. If I want to make some money, I should become a Liberal and then become appointed to something.

In the 1981 report of Petro-Canada, under "investments", there is listed $16.5 million in mortgages. Therefore, in addition to Mr. Phelps, there is a pile of Liberal friends whose houses have been mortgaged, interest free, I might add, by Petro-Canada. I have been trying to find out where these investments are and whose houses Petro-Canada has invested in. I cannot find out. I am merely elected by the people of Calgary Centre; I have no ability to find that out. As an elected person in a democracy, I do not have that authority.

Crown corporations are useful ways by which the Government can prevent the disclosure of uncomfortable information. The uranium cartel is a perfect example. What a fraud! On the one hand, there was a cartel. Therefore, Eldorado Nuclear and Uranium Canada were charged as participants in the shell. Jack Austin, the guy who organized it, did not get charged. The organizer does not get charged. A couple of Crown corporations are charged and then another Government lawyer comes forward and says, "Oh, just a minute, they are agents of Her Majesty; they cannot be charged". Voila! With one little move, Crown corporations have been put above the law. Now, no Crown corporation can be required to obey the law because they are agents of Her Majesty. Therefore, that whole sub-government out there does not have to account to Parliament. It does not have to obey the law. The Government's Crown corporations are useful ways by which to avoid responsibility.

Hon. Members recall when Atomic Energy of Canada Limited sold reactors to Argentina. The then Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, the present Royal Commissioner, Donald Macdonald, said, "My, what a marvellous thing this Crown corporation is; we are just selling reactors around the world". Then when the Auditor General pointed out the fact that that sale would cost us in excess of $200 million, the successor to that minister, the Hon. Alistair Gillespie, said, "Oh, I do not know anything about it. It is the Crown corporation which did that. Do not ask me to account for that $200 million plus in taxpayers' money we have blown in Argentina. That is not my responsibility; that is the Crown corporation's." So they are very convenient in order to avoid responsibility.

Then there is the use of Crown corporations to distort what is actually happening to Government. In that semi-budget of October 27, the Minister of Finance made a statement in reference to how careful the Government has been in terms of spending public funds and how it is restricting growth. I quote from page 7.

Those who assert that federal expenditures are out of control should quote the record of the past seven years.

The record, as he points out, shows that Government spending as a percentage of GNP has fallen from 20.5 per cent in 1975 to 16.2 per cent in 1981-82. The only reason he could get away with misusing figures this way is that he does not count the Crown corporations. He does not count the enormous growth outside the public accounts in Crown corporations. It goes out over the airways to Canadians to pass on the impression that somehow Government is restraining its expenditures.

It is a blatant falsehood. This is a way of avoiding fundamental checks and balances. Over the years procedures have been built up in Government to try to check the manner in which public funds are being spent. The whole Treasury Board bureaucracy was built up to do that. The private sector has its own mechanisms. What happens to Crown corporations? Neither of those.

As the Auditor General points out, he has been unable to find, and doubts the existence of any fundamental economic evaluation of the Petrofina purchase prior to its being made. In other words, there was no evaluation. They spent a whopping pile of money with none of the rudimentary analyses that would be required if that was a direct part of Government operating through normal Government bureaucracies, or none of the rudimentary requirements that would be necessary if that was a private corporation which had to seek private funding for that kind of purchase. Because they satisfy neither requirement, they get away with totally inaccurate and wasteful procedures.

What happened? Petrofina shares were trading about $50, $55 a share. They shot up to about $85 a share while the rest of the market stayed flat. There was no reason for that escalation in share prices. There was no fundamental difference in Fina in terms of having made any discoveries or its income statement suddenly getting out of line. The reason was that there was inside information. It is very clear. Some friends of Fina, Petro-Canada or the Liberal Party, the three possible sources, knew about this proposed purchase and takeover. They bought those shares between $55 and $80 and eventually sold them to Petro-Canada for about $120.

Vast illicit fortunes were made by either friends of Petrofina, Petro-Canada or the Liberal Party. It is beyond dispute that vast fortunes were made. The infamous Maurice Strong collected a $1 million brokerage fee for that deal, the man we are now rewarding by making chairman of the new Corporation. We do not know how much we are paying him to do that. We are not allowed to find out. We are merely the elected representatives of the people. That does not give us any right to information about Maurice Strong's salary from the Canadian Development Investment Corporation. We do know that his salary as Chairman of the Board of AZL Corporation was $20,000 a year, plus a consulting fee of $100,000 a year. The reason we know that is because in the United States that has to be made public. In Canada we pay him with taxpayers' money and we cannot find out that information.

We were told that the total for the Petrofina purchase was $1,450 million. That is what Petro-Canada told us in its press release. The Auditor General points out it is actually $1,700 million. They failed to disclose $250 million of additional costs. A private company that publicly traded shares would have its wrists slapped. It would face penalties under the Security Commission and stock exchanges for that kind of misinforming. Our Corporation, Petro-Canada, faces none of that because we do not have rules.

I could go on and on. Even a socialist has to admit that those kinds of abuses are improper. What we are asking, indeed demanding, is that Crown corporations must have their books exposed to the elected representatives of the people. If this is a democracy, and we insist that it become a democracy, we must have the right to examine their books to see what they are spending. We must have the right to say yes or no to the creation of new Crown corporations. If we do not demand that right as Members of Parliament, we are failing in our responsibility, and we have no right to continue to remain here and pretend that somehow we are representing the citizens of this country.

Mr. Douglas Fisher (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to join in this debate and to say right off that I believe Crown corporations are a very proud extension of Canadian Government policy. I am personally pleased to rise now and offer a defence in the face of some of the scurrilous attacks we have heard from across the aisle. I believe that Crown corporations in general give us a flexible way to attack problems in this country, ways that the private sector cannot on its own find or follow. In addition, I believe we have seen an excellent pattern developing where we have been able to use Crown corporations to extend Canadian ownership over our own economy. I approve of that extended ownership and I am pleased to stand up today in support of it.

I think that Crown corporations provide a competitive force, a chance for the people of Canada to look at a vital part of our economy through the eyes of a publicly-owned, Government-controlled institution and to have some confidence that the industry as a whole is operating in a competitive and beneficial fashion. I do not think that those positive characteristics of Crown corporations have been brought out today by Members of the Conservative Party. Those Members should have started talking about these characteristics of Crown corporations.

I wish to quote from two columns that have appeared in The Globe and Mail recently. These are summaries of a recent speech given by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) in Calgary. Mr. Michael Valpy, a columnist with The Globe and Mail, has had a couple of reactions to that speech. I quote from yesterday's column:

In its sum and rhetoric, it implies that Mr. Clark leads a party, no longer of traditional Canadian conservatives, but of nineteenth century liberals with a philosophy updated and imported en bloc from the Reaganomics across the line.

Today Mr. Valpy continued his analysis of that speech. He had some additional thoughts:

—it made no mention of the finest traditional thought and action of Canadian conservatism . . . He—

Supply

Referring to the Leader of the Opposition.

—over-simplifies and he is wrong. As he himself has noted (elsewhere in the country), Conservative governments have not shirked from using the state to preserve and strengthen the country's economy and culture.

Conservative governments have nationalized railways, created Sir John A. Macdonald's National Policy, the CPR, the Bank of Canada, the CBC and Ontario Hydro, bought Suncor and Pacific Western Airlines, extended the welfare state and been patron to artists—

Traditional Canadian conservatism has recognized that Canada is not a scaled-down America, that it is a small population living in a vast land beside a vast giant, and that it has required the glue of the state to maintain its existence—

Mr. Clark spoke of a fleeting political fad that is not even our own.

• (1740)

That is from the Globe and Mail, an observation on the recent contribution to debate about Crown corporations coming from the Conservative Leader. I believe, Mr. Speaker, that our habit—developed on both sides of this House in a proud Canadian tradition—of using Crown corporations is one endorsed and preferred by Canadians across the country. We only need to look at the coast-to-coast approval given to PetroCan's retail operation by Canadian consumers.

Mr. Anguish: That is not the issue.

Mr. Fisher: In my own city, in Streetsville, there was a little gas station owned by a Petrofina dealer and the man said to me, when I asked him how he liked being a PetroCan dealer, it was great to go from the bottom to the top in one leap. He has subsequently confirmed to me that his business has leapt up by over 20 per cent. I think it is important for us to know that these Crown corporations have constantly been supported by the Canadian public. It is equally important to note the pattern of the Tory Party to attack them continually and find ways to undermine their credibility.

I thought the Hon. Member for Laprairie (Mr. Deniger) gave a us an excellent analysis of the behaviour of Tory Members in asking questions of the president of a Crown corporation which would have revealed vital secret commercial information. It was not information important to public policy; it was information that any corporation would normally prefer to keep confidential. The people in the Tory Party know that, yet they pursued that line, quite possibly to the detriment of the corporation.

I think it equally important to note that the Tory Member who just spoke who went on about his love for Crown corporations in principle, once again brought out all the code words and secret attacks guaranteed to undermine the public's faith. We saw that in 1980. We saw the Tory Party talking about its dislike for PetroCan and the need to wind it up. Through the period leading up to the 1979 election, we heard the increasing attacks on PetroCan from Tory Members. Then they got into government and in the 1980 election tried a flip-flop by saying they were going to support PetroCan in the future. But the public would not buy it any more, and instead of letting PetroCan be thrown out, the public threw out the Tory Party.

We have heard them in my area talking about de Havilland, and just the discussion of selling de Havilland brought back memories of Tory behaviour with the Arrow, the way the Tory Party under Diefenbaker destroyed the aerospace industry in this country some 20 years ago. Liberal Governments have worked hard since to rebuild and restore the industry to the pride it once had before Diefenbaker got his hands on it. I heard all that in 1980, and it was just the hint that the Tory Party wanted to sell off de Havilland which caused those kinds of concerns among electors in my riding.

Equally disturbing, I think, here in this House has been the reliance by the Tory Party on cheap personal attacks. We have heard it over and over again. The Tories know that if they cannot directly attack a popular institution, then they will attack the man running it, and try to demean the institution by demeaning the man. Well, let me ask what tory over there is prepared to match his record of international contributions to the hungry and poor of the world with the record of Maurice Strong?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Fisher: What Tory in this House is prepared to stand up and say that he has contributed as much to world progress on cleaning up the environment as has Maurice Strong? What Tory on that side of the House is prepared to say that he is as good a businessman as Maurice Strong? None of them are.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Fisher: I know personally because I know Maurice Strong personally and rank him as a man whose contributions have improved my life. I believe that an unprincipled attack like the one we have been hearing has to be proven. Let them stand up here and offer what they think is the evidence on the personal attacks they have made. They do not have evidence; they have slurs and innuendos, and a great Canadian like Maurice Strong, who has national and international business credentials, finds his reputation being dragged into the gutter. I think the Members should offer some evidence, and they should offer it outside the House as well as inside the House.

Mr. Kempling: Where does he live? He does not live in Canada.

Mr. Fisher: When they have the courage to do that, maybe—maybe—we will begin to take their personal attacks a little seriously. But not until we see them stand up on their feet in and out of this Chamber and back up their charges with evidence. I challenge each one of them, Mr. Speaker, to stand up and offer evidence.

There is the Hon. Member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre) coming back in. Let him prove, as he just implied, that Mr. Strong made $1 million personally from the sale of Petrofina to Petro-Canada. Let him rise in this House and say that he has evidence of that.

Mr. Andre: I got a statement from the Minister that Strong's company collected that fee.

Mr. Fisher: Let him rise in this House and give the evidence which he was not able to produce to the Ontario Securities Commission who could find nothing wrong with that sale.

Mr. Andre: Marc Lalonde told me.

Mr. Fisher: Let the Member go outside this Chamber and take the risk that Mr. Worthington was ready to take when he made the accusation. At least Mr. Worthington was ready to stand on his principles—

Mr. Andre: I would have to go to London or Switzerland to find him. Strong does not live in Canada.

Mr. Fisher: —and offer some evidence and be challenged in a court of law. He has more courage, I might add, than the Hon. Member for Calgary Centre has shown when he made these charges. So let us not fall into the trap that the Tories offer of demeaning the institution by demeaning the man.

Many of those people across the aisle lack the capacity to organize a peanut roll. Yet they are ready to stand up and say to the Canadian people that a man of the proven record and stature of Maurice Strong is indeed doing something wrong. Let him prove it, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Andre: Tell me why the minority shareholders of AZL are suing him at the moment?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): The Hon. Member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone) rises on a point of order.

Mr. Malone: Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Hon. Member opposite would not want to mislead the House, and I would just like to point out to him that during the next election the Conservative Party will have a peanut roll.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Speaker, I would love to see the Members from the Tory Party come back into my riding and talk about Crown corporations the way they did in 1980.

Some Hon. Members: We will be there.

Mr. Fisher: Come on down to Mississauga North and we will have a little talk.

Mr. Wilson: Will you be there?

Mr. Fisher: Maybe we can have a little talk about PetroCan the way we did in 1980. I think we could possibly have that talk in one of their stations. We have lots of them and they are not hard to find because of the line-up of cars outside. People like them. Se let us go some place like that and talk about Crown corporations.

Mr. Andre: The party of polls, propaganda and patronage.

Mr. Fisher: That was the kind of thing that gave the Tory Party a quick ride back into Opposition in 1980, and I certainly would personally welcome a repeat of that ride whenever the next election happens to be.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Speaker, let me just conclude by saying—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fisher: —as I did at the start, that I regard Crown Corporations as very effective tools for Canada's development. I reject the kind of Reagan right-wing thinking put out by the Tory Party, as well as its reliance on personal attack rather than evidence or any kind of reasonable debate. I regard PetroCan as a great success and I welcome its expansion throughout the country. I look at Air Canada and see that it is one of the few airlines around the world which has turned a profit in tough times. One of the few. I look at Canada Post—

• (1750)

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Fisher: I have a direct mail business and I am careful in my criticism of Canada Post, because I find my criticisms are usually not justified. Certainly I have found in the past year that that Corporation has improved its performance magnificently. It is the flexibility of the Crown corporation approach that has made it possible for Canada Post to begin to flourish and to regain some of the confidence both in its staff, and by the public at large.

I see that the Government is doing the right thing with these Crown corporations. I see us developing the economy in areas where private enterprise cannot do so. I see us increasing Canadian ownership, and I see us promoting public policy, after concerted debate and discussion here in the House of Commons.

The kind of attack we have heard is unjustified. I would challenge those who are proud of the attack to bring out some evidence to back up their words.

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Mr. Speaker, in the form the motion was presented to this House of Commons by the Right Hon. Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Clark) it exposes the evil that exists today with respect to Crown corporations in Canada, and the fact that this corporate device has been used to hide Government activity from public view.

We have just had an example of that before us in the House in the address of the Member for Mississauga North (Mr. Fisher). He is able, because we do not have proper accounting for the work and pomps of PetroCan and for a variety of Crown corporations, to get up in the House of Commons and make allegations about their merit and about the contribution that they are making to Canada and to the Canadian economy, without much fear of contradiction, because the fact is that the activities of PetroCan are hidden from public view.

It is only when an enterprising reporter or an enterprising Member of Parliament or an enterprising investigator discovers something and brings it to public attention that we begin to know some of the activities of organizations like PetroCan. It is only when a reporter goes to their offices in Calgary and finds floors of empty space, and finds that rent is being paid on that space at the highest evaluation, in most cases to friends of the Liberal Party, that we begin to realize and recognize what is going on.

But the Member for Mississauga North has come to the end of the line because people are starting to turn on PetroCan, starting to realize what is going on, starting to investigate, starting to circulate stories. I will tell him a few of them right now before he goes home for supper.

Go down to the Strait of Canso, in the home territory of the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen), and find out what PetroCan is doing. They have an operation, a shore site, from which they carry on their business. At the request, I think, of someone from the Liberal Party they moved that a few miles down the road. Why? They wanted to escape organized labour. The great supporters of the labour movement in Canada, the Liberal Party, wanted to escape the collective bargaining process, so they moved their plant out of an area in which there was an organized labour group—

Some Hon. Members: Shame, shame.

Mr. Crosby: —to an area where there was no organized group. They made a contract with a Liberal friend, a person who runs a construction company, well known across Nova Scotia as a Liberal Party supporter, the President of Nova Construction Company, and they made a deal with him to supply the labour force. It was at rates of pay much lower than those demanded by the unionized labour force. That is the kind of thing PetroCan does.

What does the Member for Mississauga North have to say about that? He is leaving the Chamber, but before he goes let me ask the Member through you, Mr. Speaker, why Petro-Canada, in the interest of all Canadians trying to support the Canadian economy and develop our industries, petroleum and manufacturing, when it needed containers for its operation, went to Europe to buy the containers, when right in the place where the containers had to be landed, in Halifax, Nova Scotia, there is a container manufacturing plant. Why did they do that if their interest was to develop Canada and Canadian industry?

There is not a Member in this House on either side who cannot tell you a story about PetroCan, and that is what you are going to be hearing in the next months and years, stories about Petro-Canada. When the next election campaign is called there will be Members in that very constituency of Mississauga North and they will be reciting the litany of sins committed by PetroCan since its expansion. It will be a lot more than the stories we all know about, the speculation in shares of Canadian Petrofina, the profits that were made by insider trading by a person who now sits on the Board of Petro-Canada, Mr. McCain from New Brunswick. Ask him. Where is the Member for Mississauga North? He has left the Chamber. Maybe he wants to call Mr. McCain and ask him when and how and under what circumstances he acquired his shares of Petro-Fina, how much money he made and where he got his information, why did he take that action and who called him about it. We could go on, but it is going to be a sorry day for Members of the Liberal Party from here on when they stand up in the House of Commons and attempt to defend Petro-Canada, with all the evils that that organization has committed. I will not even talk about Mr. Joel Bell, because I am here to talk about Crown corporations in a general way.

I said that the form of the motion introduced in this House by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) was designed to expose the evil of Crown corporations, but there is substance to the motion, Mr. Speaker, and it runs much deeper.

In presenting this motion to the House, the Leader of the Official Party embraces a philosophy that has two basic elements: a social conscience within the framework of a free enterprise system. I, for one, am not afraid to stand up in this Chamber, or anywhere else in this country, and defend the free enterprise system.

The proliferation of Crown corporations, not subject to Parliament control and public scrutiny—

Mr. MacBain: What about Irving Oil?

Mr. Crosby: —at once destroys the possibility of exercising a social conscience in Governmental affairs and damages the viability of the free enterprise system.

Mr. Speaker, one of the Members opposite has raised the matter of Irving Oil. I would like him to check one of the very devices used by the Government under the guise of Crown corporations, to find out how this Government is feeding money to Irving Oil, through the Petroleum Compensation Board. It is just another kind of Crown corporation, another kind of organization not subject to scrutiny and control. When somebody representing the Province of Ontario starts attacking the Irving Oil Company in the Province of New Brunswick he had better realize that this is one of the greatest friends of the Liberal Party, and they will be very dissatisfied when they hear that the Member for Niagara Falls (Mr. MacBain) attacks Irving Oil. J. D. Irving will be on the phone this very night to the upper echelons of the Liberal Party and the Liberal Government complaining about that, and never more will you hear that Member for Niagara Falls complaining about Irving Oil. He is already in trouble. I want to expose him. J. D. Irving will rise from his luxury condominium, wherever he is, and strike him down, because he is the beneficiary of this hiding, of this failure to account publicly for what goes on in the Canadian Government.

Let me explain this vital point in simple terms. The system of Government employed in Canada involves only one real safeguard, and that is public accountability. How do we get that public accountability? The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and his Cabinet are required to account to Parliament. The Parliament of Canada must account and answer to the people in every general election.

The law that limits the life of Parliament to five years ensures that any failure to account to the Canadian public will be quickly and severely punished, and that is what is going to happen to the Liberal Party when the mandate of this Parliament expires. The people of Canada are going to punish the Liberal candidates and the Liberal Party because they have hidden from public view the vital activities of Government, the vital services, and they have masked them in Crown corporations.

I will call it six o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please! It now being 6 o'clock, I do now leave the chair until 8 o'clock.

At 6 o'clock, the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When the House rose at six o'clock the Hon. Member for Halifax West (Mr. Crosby) had the floor.

Mr. Crosby: Before the recess, Mr. Speaker, I said the motion presented by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) provides an opportunity to consider the key safeguard of our parliamentary democracy, namely, the public accountability of the Government. I support the motion and I make the charge that the Government, under the current Prime Minister and indeed, under his Liberal predecessor, Lester B. Pearson, have, by planned and deliberate policy, endangered our democratic system by avoiding public accountability. One instrument of that evil and dishonest policy has been the use, or the misuse, and abuse of the Crown corporation.

Let me say very quickly that there is good reason and justification for the employment of the device of a Crown corporation in our democratic system and in our society. There are and will be circumstances and situations when an activity, service or enterprise can be governed, provided or operated by a Crown corporation. The people of Cape Breton in Nova Scotia were well served when a Crown corporation called Sydney Steel Corporation was formed by the Government of Nova Scotia to continue the operation of the Sydney Steel works after that black Friday in 1967 on which the plant was closed and thousands thrown out of work. But in the hands of a devious Government intent on avoiding public accountability and parliamentary processes, the same corporate device can be used to isolate an activity, service or enterprise that the Government desires to cover up and keep hidden from public view and censure.

Let me review very briefly the situation in Canada at present. We have almost 200 federal Crown corporations wholly owned by the Government of Canada. They account for gross expenditures exceeding $30 billion. The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition rightly termed this corporate morass "the underworld of Government"—a sea of organizations peopled by characters like Joel Bell, Jack Horner, Pierre Juneau and assorted Liberal hacks like Bill Mingo and Harrison McCain—the mafia of Government.

By comparison, the current revenues of all Canadian provinces total only $45 billion, and if you view only the Atlantic provinces of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Newfoundland and Prince Edward Island, you will find revenue totalling only $3 billion, only one-tenth of the revenues that flow to our federal Government underworld. Let me record the fact that last year the revenue of Petro-Canada alone exceeded $2.7 billion. You could say that Petro-Canada has grown, in terms of revenue, to the size of the entire Atlantic area.

We know the problems that exist. I have mentioned some gross examples and the Auditor General has documented many more, but what is the answer? Fortunately, we have a relatively simple solution and it is endorsed by many knowledgeable people.

First, a Statute of the Parliament of Canada should be enacted that would legislate all the necessary requirements and processes to ensure full parliamentary and public accountability of Crown corporations. Second, there should be a careful review of all existing federal Crown corporations by a competent tribunal or parliamentary committee so that existing Crown corporations could, in some cases, be restricted or eliminated and in other cases abolished.

We have the statutory model already. It was mentioned in the motion introduced by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition. When he was Prime Minister he introduced Bill C-27, so we could start immediately to resolve the problem. We could start with the enactment of the statutory provisions contained in Bill C-27, and we could start immediately on a parliamentary review of existing Crown corporations.

I said at the beginning of my remarks that I believe that the national Government should exercise a social conscience in the framework and context of the free enterprise system. The Government must support and foster the free enterprise system. It is that system that will produce the wealth and enable us to establish social programs, health care services and educational services required by the people of Canada. We cannot do that unless we have in place a viable private sector that can produce the necessary wealth to carry on and pay for the required services.

The Crown corporation, as advanced and operated by the Government of Canada, has been the nemesis of the private sector. Those corporations have taken over areas of activities that for decades, and indeed for the whole of this century, have produced the wealth that allows us to have one of the better social systems in the world.

Anyone who supports Crown corporations in his desire to oust the private sector, in the result will destroy our social service system in Canada. When we in the Progressive Conservative Party rise to defend and support the free enterprise system, we take nothing away from the social service system that exists in Canada. In fact, we are supporting that very social service system. We are acting on a social conscience because the social service system cannot exist unless it is supported. The only support it can have is that which is produced by the private sector.

• (2010)

Of course, this is the problem which faces the New Democratic Party. It wants to spend, it wants to have wealth, but it does not provide the method of producing it. This is where we differ. We can have a viable and effective social program because we are willing to take the steps which are necessary to support financially such a program.

We have heard in this debate and will continue to hear a list of the sins of Crown corporations, but what we are faced with is the perception created by the Government of Canada in the public mind that Crown corporations are good. We know that the Government has the capacity and ability to create that perception in the public mind. But I challenge the people of Canada to check this year, next year and following years the performance of Petro-Canada. I challenge them to go to gasoline pumps across the land to see if they are getting a better deal from Petro-Canada than they are getting from even multinational oil companies which have no interest in Canada, in the economy of Canada or in the welfare of Canadians.

I could take Mr. Speaker to places in Halifax, Nova Scotia, where side by side sit the private sector oil company and Petro-Canada, and the Petro-Canada prices are higher. How can Petro-Canada be accomplishing anything for Canadians? What is it doing? Time and time again I hear reports which indicated that Petro-Canada behaves not only like oil companies in the private sector but like the worst of those companies in the private sector. If, Mr. Speaker, you know any Petro-Canada dealers, you should just ask them whether they are required to take Petro-Canada products at higher prices than are available in Canadian department stores and that if they do not accept those products their franchises will be terminated.

I could go on and on, but the message must be given to Canadians so that they are aware of the evil of Crown corporations, just as they ought to be aware of the value of Crown corporations in certain circumstances.

That is why we are here. We are here to make the case, not against viable and valuable Crown corporations but against those Crown corporations which are destroying our private sector and hurting our economy and, in that very way, undermining the social service system in Canada. We have to counteract the activities of the Government in trying to create the idea across Canada and among Canadians that their action is intended to benefit the people of Canada, because in most cases the action is only intended to benefit the welfare of the Liberal Party of Canada and those who support it.

I want to end on a positive note. We can solve the problem very simply, as I said, by introducing legislation in the Parliament of Canada and by reviewing existing Crown corporations. In that way we will strike down the evil which has existed for past decades under the Prime Minister and his Liberal predecessor. Then we will end this cancer on our private sector, this cancer on our society which will not only destroy the free enterprise system but will destroy the social service system that is supported by free enterprise.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. David Berger (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, here we have another example of a speech that was nothing but empty rhetoric. The government has introduced Bill C-123 with a view to improving the operation of Crown corporations. Instead of attacking this bill blindly and trying to play politics, the opposition would be better advised, in order to impress the Canadian people, to look fully into the proposals put forward by the government and suggest reasonable amendments when its expectations have not been met so far. As I said, Mr. Speaker, the purpose of Bill C-123 is to give both the government and Parliament more control over Crown corporations. It seems, however, that the Auditor General and the Opposition have voiced some criticisms. For instance, in his report, the Auditor General claimed that Bill C-123 disregards the role which Parliament should play as far as the accountability and control of Crown corporations is concerned. There is also a clause in this bill which requires parliamentary authority by means of a negative motion for the creation of Crown corporations, but the Auditor General complained about the fact that Bill C-123 strictly limits the length of debates authorized under this act.

I should like, therefore, to consider tonight, together with other Hon. Members, the provisions of this bill dealing with the creation of new Crown corporations. Mr. Speaker, Bill C-123 proposes that upon the creation of a new Crown corporation—I am trying to find the specific section—I have underlined it in another document.

Here it is. Clause 66.14 reads:

A Minister in respect of whom an order of approval of the Governor in Council—

[English]

Mr. Blenkarn: What are you reading?

Mr. Berger: I am reading a paragraph from Bill C-123. If you would care to look at it, it is paragraph 66.14. I really understand your question when you ask what I am reading because, from the comments made by your colleagues today, I gather that none of you have read it or none of you really know what it contains.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member's remarks should be addressed to the Chair.

Mr. Blenkarn: We know what it contains.

Mr. Berger: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for drawing that to my attention. Yes, I should address my comments to you. What I really have to say is that the question asked by the Hon. Member, "What are you reading", raises a question as to whether he knows what is the subject of debate this evening. As I said, the earlier comments today of the Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) and other Members over there indicate that they do not know what I am reading.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, Section 66.14 provides that a minister establishing a corporation under the Canada Business Corporations Act may or shall table an order before Parliament within 15 sitting days after the order was issued. So there is a clear obligation for the Minister, in respect of any new Crown corporation, to table an order before the House within 15 sitting days after the date of that order. It is further provided that there be a motion to the House of Commons for ratification of the order establishing the Crown corporation.

There is also a provision for a debate in this House within 6 sitting days after the motion is tabled. In addition members of the Official Opposition will be given the opportunity whenever 30 members of the House want a debate on the establishment of a Crown corporation, to propose a motion to the House which will be discussed within 6 sitting days after it is tabled. Furthermore the Act provides for a discussion of such a motion in a non-stop debate not exceeding three hours. That provision of the Act was criticized in the Auditor General's report which was tabled yesterday. The Auditor General contends that three hours is not long enough to debate the establishment of a new 5050;-1 Crown corporation. But as you know, Mr. Speaker, a three hours' debate in this forum, in this House, is indeed a full day's debate. And it seems to me that this should be enough for such a discussion.

But I regret, Mr. Speaker, that the Auditor General did not state how many hours the debate should last. Does he suggest two days, three days, or five days? What does the Official Opposition have to say on that? If three hours is not enough, what about six hours? Or a week? Today we heard nothing on this subject from the Official Opposition.

• (2020)

[English]

And this is a crucial question, Mr. Speaker. I know you follow the debates in this House very carefully, and I expect you are probably aware that this is not the first time we have discussed this matter. Indeed, last October 26, 1981,there was a debate on an Opposition motion regarding the creation of VIA Rail. The same arguments were raised at the time. The Opposition cried out that VIA Rail had been created without a legislative act, that it had been created by an Order in Council.

Mr. Benjamin: You are right.

Mr. Berger: Yes, that is true. However, that was done because this House of Commons has become a bottleneck over the years.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, no!

Mr. Blenkarn: The people are a bottleneck to a dictator.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The Parliamentary Secretary has the floor.

Mr. Berger: Over the years this House of Commons has become a bottleneck in which it is very difficult to get legislation through.

There is a constant tension in government between the need to have accountability to Parliament and the need to have an efficient administration and an efficient government in modern society.

Mr. Blenkarn: You are right.

Mr. Blaikie: And Liberal patronage.

Mr. Berger: Once more, we have the people screaming about patronage and we hear the jackals across the way crying about a dictatorship.

An Hon. Member: You have created it.

Mr. Berger: But they have not addressed the matter that is proposed in this piece of legislation in which the Government has proposed that there be a three-day debate—

Mr. Beatty: Three-hour debate.

Mr. Berger: Pardon me, a three-hour debate, when a new Crown Corporation is created.

Mr. Wilson: Big deal.

Mr. Beatty: Tell us about CDIC.

Mr. Berger: The Hon. Member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson) says, "Big deal." But what does that Hon. Member propose? Would he prefer that it be a six-hour debate, that three hours is not enough? What does the Hon. Member propose?

Mr. Wilson: Stick around and you will find out.

Mr. Berger: The fact is the Government has laid before this House a piece of legislation which is designed to increase parliamentary control and designed to ensure that there will be a parliamentary debate when a new Crown Corporation is created. The gentlemen opposite are saying that they do not want it. That is really what they are saying.

Mr. Beatty: What about the CDIC? Where was the debate on that?

Mr. Berger: I would suggest, if the gentlemen opposite really wanted this legislation, that rather than trying to obstruct the work of this House as they so often do, they should engage in negotiations with the responsible Minister, and I would say he is a reasonable person, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Beatty: Try to find a responsible minister when you need one.

Mr. Nielsen: Name one.

Mr. Berger: I suggest the Minister would be willing to entertain certain amendments which might satisfy Members concerned.

Mr. Blaikie: You just cannot hire responsible ministers these days.

Mr. Berger: Members opposite have not done anything like that. They prefer to yell and scream like they have this evening. They prefer to use the typical scare tactics to which they are accustomed. They try to say, "Hey, we don't have a Government here, we have a dictatorship."

Some Hon. Members: You are right.

Mr. Berger: I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, that that is not responsible opposition by any stretch of the imagination.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Beatty: Why have you lost your place? Do you have difficulty reading other people's writing?

Mr. Savard: Take your time.

Mr. Wilson: Give him a hand, Charlie.

Mr. Beatty: It's a great speech, keep going.

Mr. Berger: Thank you.

Mr. Blaikie: We can't wait for the next punch line.

Mr. Savard: Take your time. Listen and learn.

[Translation]

Mr. Berger: As I said, Mr. Speaker, the Opposition must negotiate, they must show good will rather than indulge in constant bickering, because if parliamentary reform is to proceed, the Opposition must be willing to find positive solutions instead of trying to score political points.

Mr. Speaker, this is a suggestion that indeed comes from the bottom of the heart, because recently the House passed new regulations for next year. As you know, that was unanimous, and if we wish parliamentary reform to progress there must be constructive opposition rather than, as I said, the usual partisanship we have been seeing in this House. This is about all I had to say on this legislation. I would now conclude, Mr. Speaker, by saying that the Hon. Member for Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Beatty) has been screaming since the beginning of this afternoon—

• (2030)

[English]

Hon. Members opposite have been screaming about the new Canada Investment Development Corporation.

Mr. Beatty: Canada Development Investment Corporation. You even have the title wrong.

Mr. Berger: The Hon. Member is saying, "What about it?" Well, I would ask him, what about it?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Berger: If this law had been in force today, in order to create a corporation under the Canada Business Corporations Act, a motion would have to be presented before this House in order to create it and there would be a three-hour debate and, as I suggested earlier, there could be a longer debate if the Hon. Members of the Opposition were willing to make some constructive suggestions.

Mr. Beatty: What about its subsidiaries?

Mr. Berger: I believe, also, that the hon. gentleman says, "What about subsidiaries?" I believe that subsidiaries are covered by the present legislation as well. Again, these are subsidiaries created by a minister under the Canada Business Corporations Act.

Mr. Beatty: Absolutely wrong. Reread the section, David.

Mr. Berger: The Hon. Member says that I am wrong. But I—

Mr. Beatty: Do you want the section? Read the next paragraph, David. There is no provision for an instrument, vested in Parliament, for subsidiaries.

Mr. Berger: I would suggest to him—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The Parliamentary Secretary has the floor.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Berger: Mr. Speaker, I would suggest to the Hon. Member that subsidiaries fall into the section which has been proposed under this Bill.

Mr. Beatty: Wrong.

Mr. Berger: I would suggest again that if there are difficulties with it, the Minister would certainly be willing to entertain suggestions.

I see that Your Honour is about to rise. I would suggest that the Hon. Members of the Opposition address themselves to the particular—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to interrupt the Parliamentary Secretary, but the time allotted to him has expired.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to rise to speak in support of the motion which is before us today, and I hope the Official Opposition will feel the same about our amendment, because my party both practised and advocated accountability of Crown Corporations for something nearing 50 years. One of the things that I find strange and one thing we must get straight in the debate is that certainly since the First World War, the only time a Conservative or Liberal Government started a Crown corporation was when the so-called private sector could not or would not fill a public or national need or had gone belly-up, and successive Conservative and Liberal Governments ran to bail them out. They were not created because these Governments believed in them. Those were not really the best reasons for starting Crown corporations.

I suppose the classic example is the Canadian National Railways, started by Sir Robert Borden, not because he believed in a publicly-owned railroad, but, rather, because the then Bank of Commerce and a number of other trust companies and bondholders were about to lose their money. Therefore, five bankrupt railroads were put together because free enterprise could not and would not work, could not and would not and did not make a buck, and could not and would not and did not serve the needs of this nation when it came to transportation. Therefore, Canadian National was formed, not in order to have a Crown corporation, but, rather, to have the people who had their private money invested bailed out and paid off and paid back. This country has been paying that private sector back tens and hundreds of millions of dollars ever since.

When I say that we have advocated and supported public accountability by Crown and private corporations for 50 years, I like to illustrate it by saying that we put our action where our mouths were and we did it. In the 1940s the then Premier Douglas in Saskatchewan established a Crown corporations committee and, from that day until now, every Crown corporation had to appear before the legislature to account for its annual reports, financial statements, operating practices, and management-labour relations practices, and they still do. I am not sure how long that will last with the present Government in my Province, but the proof is there. Similarly, in the Province of Manitoba, the then Premier, Mr. Schreyer, established a Crown corporations committee so that any Crown corporation must appear before the elected representatives and account for its annual report and all aspects of its activities. We should have the same here, in the Parliament of Canada.

I take a little pride in having had one of my amendments accepted by the Governent, practically the only one. The then Minister of Transport, Mr. Lang, accepted an amendment from me in the early 1970s when Air Canada was separated from Canadian National, which made it statutory "that the annual reports for those two corporations shall"—not "may", but "shall"—"be referred to the Standing Committee on Transport". That should be the case with every federal Crown corporation. Their annual reports should be referred to the appropriate standing committee where the subject matter is the same or similar. No doubt there will be some Crown corporations which do not fit into present standing committees and their terms of reference, in which event we would need an additional standing committee of Parliament to which all those other Crown corporations would be referred. This would be necessary because no one standing committee could deal with the annual report and activities of every single Crown corporation, even if they met 24 hours a day, every day of the year.

The so-called free enterprise ideology, particularly American, has never fit well in Canada, even before 1867. Even the Conservatives recognize and know this. I was happy to hear the Hon. Member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre) say today that there is a proper role for Crown corporations under the federal Government and on behalf of the people of Canada.

Free enterprise economics which ignores cultural, political, social and other human variables has as much in common with reality as a game of Parcheesi. Crown corporations exist in Canada because the kindergarten classroom theory of the marketplace of my free enterprise friends to my right, if nothing else, is really irrelevant, because of our geography, diverse heritage, location of our citizens, and our climate, where the goods are produced.

What might resemble a competitive market in densely populated Europe or in most areas of the United States would still be a natural monopoly in Canada. Our small markets, long distances and climate are the major reasons we have more Crown corporations in Canada than most other nations. As Herschel Hardin says in his book "A Nation Unaware":

> Public enterprise in Canada is the direct result of the dilemma of Canadians with their small domestic market immediately next door to the Americans with their large market and manifest power. We did not choose public enterprise freely.

It was forced on to reluctant Liberal and Conservative Governments by American enterprise and expansion. In each case the project, such as railway construction, was undertaken as a reaction to and against American initiatives.

Public enterprise in this country started with the building of the Lachine Canal. It is the public sector which has provided most of the needed capital for national infrastructure and communications. Sir John A. Macdonald convinced Canadians to pay for the Pacific Railway because private enterprise could not raise the money. The Government set up Trans-Canada Air Lines because the private companies could not and would not do the job, even though they were invited to join in. A series of blunders, miscalculations and corruption of private railways since the nineteenth century would make our Crown corporations look good.

Canadian Pacific Railway was paid for, rescued and has since been subsidized by the Government. It has become known as a private enterprise triumph. Canadian National, which took over bankrupt private railways, is considered as a public enterprise failure. Without public investment in CPR, that corporation would never have shown a profit.

It was the Tories in Ontario who nationalized hydro. I am interested in some of the comments of Tory Members regarding Bill S-31 when earlier, the Ontario Conservatives nationalized hydro in order to prevent American capital from taking over the electrical generation and distribution. It was for that reason and that reason only.

In the past our country has had the attitude that where profit is to be made, private enterprise should do the job, otherwise public enterprise should take over. If you are going to run an enterprise with good businesslike practices, any private enterpriser will tell you it is dumb to start up, take over or operate an enterprise that does not make a buck. For 120 years Liberal and Tory Governments have been saying, if it is not going to make money and we must have it, then make it a public enterprise, or Crown corporation.

We in the New Democratic Party, and before that in the CCF, said that if we are going to have Crown corporations, we should not just take over and operate those that lose money, but those that make money as well. The profits should either be injected into general Government revenues or used to support other necessary Crown corporations that are losing money.

Not surprisingly, the tax-paying public under successive Liberal and Tory Governments has been left with the mistaken impression that public enterprise loses money while private enterprise makes money. That is not by accident, but by design. Each national Government has done that since the first Crown corporation was established, not because they believed in it, their hearts were for it or they wanted to make money. That would fly in the face of the marketplace, the free enterprisers. It would fly in the face of the endeavours of their friends who support them, those who only make the bucks out of those things that make bucks and to heck with anything else the country might need.

Crown corporations are highly visible. Private corporations can hide their waste and bungling. If you have one share in Canadian Pacific and go to their annual meeting to try to get the kinds of answers that you as a part owner of that corporation feel you have a right to know, you could not do that. In Canada now you do not have the right to find out how much the president or chairman of the board of that corporation is paid. The only way to find out is through the embarrassing way of going to the United States Securities and Exchange Commission.

The way the Liberals and Tories have set up our Crown corporation system in Canada, a Member of Parliament, let alone an ordinary taxpayer, cannot find out what the new Chairman of the Board of Directors of Canadian National, the head of VIA Rail or any senior official of a Crown corporation is paid. It is interesting to hear the Tories complaining and crying about the lack of accountability. How can you have accountability from a Crown corporation when the rules under which they operate are identical to those under which private corporations operate in this country? As a shareholder, you cannot get that kind of information from either a Crown corporation or private corporations.

There is a mythology about capitalism to the effect that if a Canadian buys shares, he will have a vote at the annual meeting and the mythology is that the management and board will be answerable to the shareholders. Liberal and Tory Governments have set up Crown corporations in the same way. As I said, our Crown corporations are highly visible. I do not like the inadequacy of the answers or non-answers that I get from the President and officers of CNR when they appear before the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications once a year. But at least they show up. Just try to get Canadian Pacific's Board of Directors and officers to answer questions in detail about their operation.

• (2050)

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Speaker, would the Hon. Member permit a brief question?

Mr. Benjamin: I will, Mr. Speaker, if you do not deduct it from my time.

You will not do that? Then let the Hon. Member ask me when I am through.

Mr. Beatty: When will you be through?

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, when Crown corporations are made accountable, then they have to be more efficient and innovative. And there are some public enterprise success stories for which they did not get much, if any, credit. Canadian National, believe it or not, pioneered the diesel locomotive and set up our first national radio network. Where the heck was private enterprise?

Air Canada, as well as having a long list of world firsts, won the gold medal last year for efficiency in operations, savings in fuel consumption and employee efficiency, a medal recognized and selected by all the other international airlines of the world. It was the first airline in the world to prepare detailed specifications for a commercial jet transport and that was in 1946. Where was private enterprise?

In 1908, Ontario Hydro began construction of a 110,000 volt transmission line when the experts said that the current dogma and wisdom was that the maximum we could have was 60,000 volts. That was under a Conservative Government public enterprise, a Crown corporation, which led the whole continent. Where was private enterprise? Where were these private investors and risk takers?

In most cases it has been the taxpayer and the public through federal and provincial Governments who have taken the risks, invested the money, but then, when things are going good—as soon as Air Canada started making a buck, Mr. Speaker, who was the one to come forward and say, hey, now we want to be a national airline, too? That was CPR. When they were invited to join in starting up a national airline in the mid-1930s they said no, but by the 1950s, when Air Canada was turning around and making a buck, Canadian Pacific wants the gravy off the top. They want the money-making routes. Now there is Wardair. The owner told us to leave him alone, he did not want any Government interference, regulations or scheduled routes, and now who is crying in Ottawa with his hand out? The great free enterprise entrepreneur bragged about my friends to my right and my friends across the way, the same Max Ward. He does not have to run scheduled routes, he can pick and choose. He can decide a plane will only take off when it is full. The taxpayers paid for regular scheduled flights, whether they were full or empty. Where was private enterprise then? But as soon as they made a buck, now we have another national airline, we have four or five regionals, all siphoning off the lucrative routes from Air Canada. Where were they when we needed them?

Of course a Crown corporation must appear before elected representatives, Mr. Speaker. In fact, the public should be entitled to appear, too, and make briefs and submissions to a parliamentary committee on what they think about the operations of their company. We can do it, we should have been doing it before, we have done it with a couple of Crown corporations, we must do it with all of them.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Beatty) on a very quick question.

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Speaker, my question is indeed very brief. The Hon. Member indicated that he found about equal degrees of secrecy in CN and CP Rail, and he said if he were a shareholder in CP Rail, he might not get satisfactory answers to his questions. If he were a shareholder in CP Rail and did not like the answers he could sell his shares.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: With all due respect, the Hon. Member will have his opportunity to participate in the debate. The Hon. Member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson).

Mr. Beatty: My question, Mr. Speaker, is how would the Hon. Member sell his shares in CN?

Mr. Benjamin: You can also vote out Hon. Members who let the CN operate the way it did when his Party was in power.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Etobicoke Centre has been recognized by the Chair.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have listened to most of the Liberal speakers in this debate this evening and all through the day and the interesting thing is that most of them—there were some exceptions—have distorted totally the purpose of the debate. They have been dredging up and twisting statements about what Progressive Conservative Members have been saying about this or that Crown corporation. Yes, we have had some criticisms to make about Crown corporations. Yes, there are Crown corporations that we do not think should be in existence.

Mr. Blaikie: Which one?

Mr. Fisher: PetroCan.

Mr. Wilson: The point of the debate this evening is to focus on the control and accountability of Crown corporations which are investing the taxpayers' money.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Hon. Member would submit to a question?

Mr. Wilson: I would be happy to submit to a question after I have presented my remarks, and I hope the Hon. Member will listen very carefully because he might learn something.

Mr. Blaikie: I always listen very carefully.

Mr. Wilson: As I was saying before the interruption, most of the comments of the Auditor General's report are directed at this problem of accountability and control of the taxpayers' money as invested in Crown corporations. Now, I want to reread the motion so that the Members who are here, who have had their understanding of the debate distorted by what Liberal Members have been saying, will understand just what we are talking about today. The wording of the motion is as follows:

> That this House condemns the Government for its deliberate proliferation of Crown corporations accountable to the Government rather than to Parliament and the taxpayers who, in the words of the Auditor General, "have every right to consider themselves the principal shareholders of these corporations", and instructs the Government to immediately introduce a Bill substantially the same as Bill C-27 in the Thirty-first Parliament so as to make such corporations properly accountable to the people.

Now, I am glad to see the Hon. Member for Laurier (Mr. Berger) back in his seat because I hope he will learn something from this point forward as he made some very clear errors in the presentation he just made. He asked, what alternative do the Conservatives have? My colleague, the Hon. Member for Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Beatty) referred to that alternative very clearly in the Bill he put forward in the Thirty-first Parliament when the Conservative Government was in power. That is a clear alternative to this Bill, and I am going to come back to the comparisons that the Auditor General has made between that particular Bill and the Liberal legislation on the Order Paper which is clearly inferior, not in the judgment of the Conservative Members of Parliament but inferior in the judgment of an independent and expert observer, the Auditor General.

While I am referring to the Hon. Member for Laurier, I might just correct one of the misstatements he made in his remarks with reference to the fact that the creation of subsidiaries will be brought before this Parliament for that tremendously important and extensive three-hour debate. I think he has learned from my colleague that there is no debate on the creation of subsidiaries. So if the CDIC is going to go out and buy Noranda or General Motors, if they have the funds in the till—and they could have the funds through the sale of the Canada Development Corporation—they can go ahead and create new Crown corporations with no further reference to Parliament.

That is the point we have consistently underlined as being a loss of control by Parliament. The Hon. Member for Laurier, the Hon. Member for Lincoln (Mr. Mackasey) and other Members of Parliament will have no control over the creation of these subsidiaries. But none of the Liberals have directed their comments to the motion I have just read; none have defended the Government's position on Bill C-123 referred to in the motion. Perhaps I should say, with the possible exception of the Minister himself, but the defence he put up was really a laughable one. Now, that is not an uncommon occurrence in the remarks of the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray). But none of the other Members has talked about the problems of accountability, control and financial reporting. It must be quite transparent to those people who are observing this debate that the Liberals cannot win this debate. They know they cannot win this debate, so what do they do? They distort the facts, they try to divert people's attention from the motion at hand. There is no logical argument coming from them as to why Bill C-123 is better than the Clark Government proposal. There is no alternative that they are talking about for Bill C-123, which they do not want to mention. It is clear today that when they do not have a defence they start talking about something else, and that has been very clear, from every Member of Parliament from the Liberal side.

• (2100)

Mr. Simmons: As you are doing now.

Mr. Clark: I am coming to the point of the motion, and I will talk about this in a very clear and incisive fashion, unlike the Member from Newfoundland.

Mr. Simmons: That will be refreshing.

Mr. Wilson: The economy today is in a steep slide. Unemployment is running at 1.5 million people; bankruptcies are at record levels; the federal Government's deficit is at $24 billion and growing. The Government has consistently tried to shift the blame to the private sector, to the Central Bank in the United States, to the international economy, to all sorts of things. It has steadfastly refused to accept the blame for the problems we have today.

On Tuesday we were presented with the Report of the Auditor General, and Members of Parliament in that Report got a clear example of the alternatives that are open to the Government to address the problems, to free up funds, by better control of Crown corporations, by better control of the Government itself, funds that could be used to finance other programs of the Governement, reduce the deficit or whatever the Government wishes to do. But there are alternatives presented in this Report.

In the report the Auditor General highlights a huge sector of Government which he refers to as:

—an enormous iceberg, floating lazily in the foggy Atlantic; silent, majestic, awesome.

That is the subject of the debate tonight, Mr. Speaker, the adequacy of control and the accountability of that great, sleepy iceberg, the Crown corporations.

The message of the Auditor General's Report is that there is waste, there is a lack of control and there is inadequate accountability of Crown corporations. If this were reduced we would have considerable flexibility to address the problems at hand rather than being in the strait-jacket that this Government finds itself in now. Time and again the Government has said that nothing can be done, but clearly this Report shows us how things can be changed.

The response from the President of the Treasury Board, both today in the House and when the Report was brought down earlier this week, was typically weak and inadequate. He said, "The Report is useful; we are going to have to study it; we will have some comments once we have had a chance to study this Report." Just another study! That is not good enough.

This Report is a call for action, and Members of Parliament have a responsibility to take that action. This is a powerful indictment of Government inaction over the past five or six years. The Report sets out a number of initiatives that have been proposed by various individuals, by the Members of the Government opposite, as well as the people in the private sector, indicating ways that this accountability can be improved upon. But I stress the point that the history of this Government has been to shuffle that information aside, not pay adequate attention to it and not take strong enough action to direct itself at these problems.

The key objective and the key recommendations in the past, and in this Report, is the need for an over-all legislative framework. That is clearly set out in the Auditor General's Report, and we responded to that in the Clark Government by presenting the legislation that is referred to in the Auditor General's Report in 1979.

To have the President of the Treasury Board try to take credit for that legislation by saying it was based on some work initiated by the previous Liberal Government is a joke. We see clearly in the Auditor General's Report that they have taken a major step back in a number of areas from the position that was taken in the legislation put forward by the Clark Government.

I want to read something from the Auditor General's Report at page 57, Sections 2.50 and 2.51.

Although Bill C-27, the Clark Government Bill:

—had a number of deficiencies, it represented a major step toward a comprehensive and effective framework for the control, direction and accountability of crown-owned corporations. It also responded to——a number of recommendations, et cetera.

In the next paragraph it says:

Part V of Bill C-123 does not take the same comprehensive approach as did Bill C-27. Instead, it addresses only issues which the Government presumably believes demonstrate the most pressing need for correction.

On the next page, on page 58, it does a comparative analysis in a number of areas of the initiatives in those two pieces of legislation against the general accountability framework that the Auditor General felt was important. Of the 33 areas in which they wanted action taken, the Clark Government acted on 25 in a full sense and partially on one. In Bill C-123 it was a very pitiful action on seven and partial action on two.

There is no comparison whatsoever, and for the President of the Treasury Board to take credit for it and to say that the piece of legislation that he has put forward, Bill C-123, is an adequate response to the requirements of the Auditor General, is a joke.

The understatement of the year is also on page 57 of the Auditor General's Report when he expressed disappointment that the legislative framework had not been provided.

I am sure that the Auditor General is bitterly disappointed that this proposed legislation is so inadequate. We as Members of Parliament should also be bitterly disappointed because we have a clear responsibility to take action here, to take the Auditor General's Report as an action plan, to bring forward legislation that is needed to control the taxpayers' money invested in Crown corporations.

Bill C-123 in my judgment is a sham. What it is doing is trying to put the Government in a position of being seen to be doing something when time and time again we have seen they are not taking the action that is required of them. That is why we are here this evening. We are not talking about an insignificant part of Government here. Using the Auditor General's words, "A sub-Government employs more people than Government Departments do as a whole." They spend $30 billion of taxpayers' money, but what is key is the scope of the Crown corporations throughout our economy. We all know about Canada Post, CN, Air Canada, the Bank of Canada, CBC and so on. But let us look at another few of these Crown corporations: National Battlefields Commission; Northern Power Corporation; Canadian Saltfish Corporation; Canadian Arsenals Limited; Defence Construction (1951) Limited; Canadian Dairy Commission. They are in all parts of our economy and it is important that we understand what is going on in these parts of the economy, and whether the moneys are being used effectively.

The authorization and mandate for Crown corporations is clearly too loose. There is too little control here. That has been touched on by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe. But let me just comment on this Canada Development Investment Corporation again, to which the Member for Laurier referred. It was incorporated without adequate parliamentary review. It was incorporated earlier this year but there was no parliamentary approval. There was a fanfare, a press release and the appointment of Liberal backroom boys to top management positions, but there was only an Order in Council to transfer the objectives of the Canada Development Corporation to this new corporation. It was also made an agent of the Crown. That means that any time it borrows money, it borrows on the credit of the taxpayer. The taxpayer is directly obligated to stand behind those loans. That was done without parliamentary approval. Clearly, Bill C-123 is inadequate.

I want to quote from the Auditor General's Report at page 62 where he said:

> Because CDIC has objectives virtually identical to those of CDC allowing it to participate in almost any activity, it has the potential to acquire and dispose of business interests without parliamentary approval.

Let me give another example of why I am worried about this whole matter. Crown corporations today are not adequately controlled by Ministers. In the Clark Government I was responsible for the Export Development Corporation. Shortly after I took on that responsibility I initiated monthly meetings with senior management of EDC. After the second meeting the President of the Corporation said, "Congratulations, you just had twice as many meetings as your predecessor had." I had been there for two and a half months, Mr. Speaker, and he had been there for two and a half years at that time.

The point is not that I was doing such a great job. The point is that I was taking an interest and the other Minister had not taken any interest. It was a nuisance to him. He was letting that very important corporation float along without adequate ministerial control.

The Auditor General has said that broader, stronger parliamentary control and accountability is necessary—and that is absolutely the right conclusion—as Ministers are not exercising this. He says that their primary concern is the Department under their responsibility. The Crown corporation is a diversion, and that is why we must return to Bill C-27 introduced by my colleague so that Parliament can take over some of these responsibilities from the Ministers if the Ministers are not going to do the job.

There is one other step that I believe is important, Mr. Speaker, and that is to require each new Government, when it comes into office, to provide a written mandate to each Crown corporation within a certain period of time after it takes office. This written mandate would establish clearly what the Crown corporation was to do. These mandates change. They are written in a vague way in the incorporating legislation. Time passes, Governments change and so the interpretation changes. The best example of that is Petro-Canada, as mentioned in the Auditor General's Report. When it was incorporated there was no intention whatsoever that it would own service stations. Now the taxpayers have seen $2 billion of their money going to buy a series of service stations across the country.

Mr. Benjamin: Good!

Mr. Wilson: It is not good. Let me point out why we have a problem with control of Crown corporations. If the Ministers do not take control of these Crown corporations then the bureaucrats take control. If there is one thing that I have heard time and time again in my travels in my constituency and across the country, it is that the bureaucrats have too much control and that there is not sufficient accountability to see that these corporations are run efficiently.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, let me say that the Government is moving down a very dangerous road if it ignores the advice of the Auditor General and the legislation introduced by my colleague. After delaying for three years it has finally addressed the problem but in a totally inadequate way. The Auditor General has clearly said that the legislation is not good enough. Members of Parliament have a responsibility to their constituents and to taxpayers to listen carefully to the advice of the Auditor General. It is his responsibility to report directly to Parliament and not through a Minister. It is the responsibility of Members of Parliament to respond to the Auditor General. We must resolve today to force the Government to change this legislation. The taxpayers of Canada will accept nothing less.

Mr. Berger: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I wonder if the hon. gentleman would entertain a short question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): The Hon. Member can only accept a question with the unanimous consent of the House because his time has expired. The Hon. Member for Burin-St. George's.

Mr. Roger Simmons (Burin-St. George's): Mr. Speaker, I listened with great interest to the Hon. Member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson). Among other things he said that no Liberal Member has spoken about the motion. I will do that very directly, Mr. Speaker. Let us see what the motion says.

Mr. Malone: We will help you with the big words.

Mr. Simmons: The motion put down by the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark) reads in part as follows:

That this House condemns the Government for its deliberate proliferation of Crown corporations accountable to the Government—

There is the sin, Mr. Speaker, "corporations accountable to the Government". Is that not an awful crime, that the legitimately elected Government of this country should have organizations or corporations accountable to it that are under its control and direction? I always thought it was a function of Government to be in charge of the way the taxpayers' money is spent, whether through Crown corporations or otherwise. But there is the indictment. There is the reason we ought to be hanged. Out there we have Crown corporations which are accountable to the Government. That is our crime. That is the sin we are accused of today by the Hon. Member for Yellowhead.

Hon. Members opposite have run out of ideas. On this, their last Opposition day, this is the best they can do—accuse us of doing our job. They accuse us of making Crown corporations accountable to the legitimately elected Government of this country.

That is count one in the indictment, Mr. Speaker. There is evidence to show that we are absolutely guilty of that charge. As late as June of this year the then President of the Treasury Board took the dastardly step of making those Crown corporations even more accountable. On June 30 he introduced the Bill on Crown corporations. I wish my friend, the Hon. Member for Etobicoke Centre had read it and understood it. The Bill provides very clearly for additional accountability to the people who have been charged with the Government of this country.

The Bill provides for a number of legislative changes, organizational changes and administrative changes, all aimed at enabling the Government to act quickly—there is the sin—and responsibly in enhancing the relationship between the Government and the Crown corporation. It also charges the Government with responsibility to provide for the over-all capability of Government to act as a vigilant and effective shareholder in relation to its wholly-owned corporations. That is the crime, Mr. Speaker. That is what they have been talking about over there today, that is what they are talking about over there tonight. They complain that we have a system of Government in the country—a government endorsed by the people and legitimately elected by the people—which insists on Crown corporations being accountable to it in ever more rigid form, especially when we implement this new legislation. That is our crime, but it is not the full crime.

• (2120)

The Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead went on and on and on as he usually does. In his motion he indicated further:

—and instructs the Government to immediately introduce a Bill substantially the same as Bill C-27 in the Thirty-first Parliament—

There is a good idea. On the surface that is an excellent idea. We could go back to the thirty-first Parliament. That, for those who have chosen to forget—and there are many in the country who have chosen to forget that Parliament—is the Parliament during which the Tory regime had that brief interregnum in power.

Mr. Blaikie: Yours was even briefer, Roger; yours was only one day.

Mr. Simmons: Oh, they are hurting now; they are even waking up over there.

Mr. Malone: You do sound like an alarm clock.

Mr. Simmons: Yes, they are waking up, they are hurting. The Thirty-first Parliament had not only a Bill C-27; it had another Bill about which I want to tell the House. On the surface the idea of the Hon. Member for Yellowhead is a good one. I commend it to the Government and to the House. We ought to go back to the Thirty-first Parliament and have a look at the legislation put down by the Conservative Government. In fact, we looked not only at Bill C-27 but we looked at another one. I give notice now to the Official Opposition that we on this side of the House have the full intention of giving them the opportunity to vote for another Bill which they had on their Order Paper. We will let them vote for it word for word, dot for dot, every last comma, as it was. The Bill in its new form, the Bill under its new number, is a Bill which my friends on the other side of the House will recognize very well. They did not write the Bill but they brought it into the House. It happened to die on the Order Paper like they did.

When this Government came back into power after February 1980, we had the courage to resurrect that excellent piece of legislation which the Tories had had on the Order Paper. We will give those people the full opportunity at third reading to vote for that particular Bill. The Bill is Bill C-10. I mention it tonight in order to draw a parallel with the suggestion of the Hon. Member for Yellowhead concerning Bill C-27. He said that we should go back, get Bill C-27 and bring it in because it is a good Bill. We have taken his advice on Bill C-10.

Does the House know what happened as soon as we brought it in without changing a comma? Those who were for it in the Thirty-first Parliament were suddenly "agin it". They have gone across the country and have written clergymen in the country, spreading fear that the state is going to take over religion. Where do they get the basis for that charge? In Bill C-10. What is Bill C-10? It is a piece of legislation under another number which was the identical piece of legislation the Tories brought in when they were in power.

Some Hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Simmons: If the Hon. Member for Yellowhead wants us to have a look at Bill C-27, we will want every Member on that side of the House to put in writing that they promise not to do a 180-degree turn on Bill C-27 as they did on Bill C-10.

Mr. Andre: You got it, let's bring it in.

Mr. Simmons: We want them to promise not to play cheap politics with Bill C-27 as they did with Bill C-10. We want them to promise not to go around the country spreading fear in the minds of the clergy, religious organizations and charitable organizations. We want them to promise not to be hypocritical on Bill C-27 as they were on Bill C-10. Give us that promise—

Mr. Andre: You have got it.

Mr. Simmons: I see the Hon. Member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre). It looks like he has dined very well again tonight. If he would only feed his mind half as well, what a man he would be.

This motion says more, although not a lot more. First it says that Crown corporations are accountable to the Government. I plead guilty to that sin. That is right. They are accountable, and we are making them even more accountable. The Government was elected to protect taxpayers' money.

Mr. Wilson: How?

Mr. Simmons: Read the Bill.

Mr. Wilson: You read the Bill.

Mr. Simmons: I have read it. Which page would you like me to recite?

Mr. Wilson: Never mind the page. What does it say?

Mr. Simmons: I know it is tender for my good friend. Somebody called him—I would not do it, being that kind of an individual—the "honourable fat cat from Bay Street". I said, "No, that is not fair". I saw him tonight as the champion of the public purse. It boggles the mind—someone from Bay Street protecting the public purse. It is something like having an arsonist as the new fire chief, I suppose.

Mr. Beatty: Or Marc Lalonde in charge of the economy.

Mr. Simmons: What are those tyrannical things called Crown corporations, these insidious things creeping out there in the country and destroying us all? We have such monsters as the National Battlefields Commission! There is a lot of scope for skulduggery and mischievousness! Imagine the damage it could do to the country if it were allowed to really get loose—the National Battlefields Commission! Then there are the International Joint Commission and Hockey Canada Inc.

Perhaps if the truth were known as to what is bothering them, it would be a Crown corporation called Petro-Canada. Petro-Canada ought to be a fond term in the minds of every Tory in the country because that is a subject they know well, both sides of it, because they have been on both sides of it. During the election campaign they were for privatizing it, but then they learned that that might not be the thing to do, so they did a Petro-Canada trip similar to the Jerusalem trip.

Mr. Fisher: They took a poll.

Mr. Simmons: Yes, they took a poll and for once they understood a poll. Then they said that perhaps they should not be for privatizing it at all, that perhaps they should keep it much as it is, somewhat like it is, maybe all like it is. They got the message and found that corporations such as Petro-Canada, the National Battlefields Commission, the International Joint Commission, Hockey Canada Inc. and Fashion Canada, were not the creeping monsters which they had conjured up in their minds. It must have been terrible for them to live with it every day. Every waking moment they must be shaking because they think one of those monsters, one of those Crown corporations, will get them by the throat somewhere. What a terrible thing to have to carry around with them, those poor, poor Tories.

Perhaps they are concerned about a couple of corporations with which I have had reason to deal. Perhaps it is the Canadian Saltfish Corporation. There is a villain, there is an absolute monster! Among other things it has its headquarters in Newfoundland. Have we heard about the damage it has done to this country? In all the time it has been there as a corporation, does the House want to know how much money it has received to bail it out, money from the Treasury of the country? How much money has Parliament voted to keep that outfit alive so that it could squander more of the taxpayers' money on behalf of fishermen in Newfoundland, part of Quebec and so on? Do Hon. Members want some idea of how much money? Not one red cent, not one red cent. They do not bother to tell you that some companies out there are making a few bucks for the Treasury. They do not bother to tell you that some of the Crown Corporations which they want to malign and undermine and soil the reputation of, and belittle, are doing a good job on behalf of the fishermen in this country. If people live too far West to know about the Saltfish Corporation, let me tell them about another, the Canadian Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation which has its headquarters in Winnipeg, just west of Thunder Bay. That, too, has taken a big fat nothing out of the Treasury. That corporation also has committed the heinous sin of going without funds from this Parliament.

• (2130)

There are a couple of corporations serving this country well. I could tell you about several more, in fact, many many more, Mr. Speaker, but Hon. Members over there do not want to hear about them.

Mr. Gustafson: Start naming them.

Mr. Simmons: That is why they keep bawling and yapping on the other side because they do not want to hear that the corporations of this country are answerable to the legitimately elected Government of this country, and, by and large, are doing a good job.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Simmons: I said by and large because I, like any person in this House, have a few scores to settle with a Crown Corporation like CN Marine.

An Hon. Member: And Canada Post.

Mr. Simmons: There are a few with Air Canada I can settle.

An Hon. Member: Nationalize them then.

Mr. Simmons: But this is not the place to settle those scores. We might have individual beefs. I hear Members on the other side. Maybe they did not have the right kind of wine one night on the first class flight, but that does not mean we should wipe out the whole corporation—maybe the President, yes.

Mr. Gustafson: Get rid of the President because he is not a Grit.

Mr. Simmons: Seriously, we ought to recognize once in a while that you cannot, day in and day out, get your jollies or get your kicks out of raking everybody and everything down. The Crown Corporation has served this country well. If there are some imperfections, as I am sure there are, as there are with any organization established by man—

Mr. Malone: Or women. Quit being a sexist.

Mr. Simmons: The Hon. Member has learned a new word tonight. He does not understand it but he has learned it.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Simmons: The Hon. Member for Etobicoke Centre quoted rather extensively from the Auditor General's Report. Well, two people can play that particular game. Somewhere in these pages—

Mr. Deans: Why don't you get someone to turn the pages for you?

Mr. Simmons: —the Auditor General also goes on to point out very clearly—

Mr. Wilson: You had better drink to that.

Mr. Simmons: I will drink to that as long as it is water.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Simmons: The Auditor General points out something else very clearly on the same page as the page my hon. friend for Etobicoke Centre quoted from. I might say quoted selectively and conveniently. It is pointed out in the Report by the Auditor General how the Crown Corporations have a legislative base; how Parliament has a way of making those corporations accountable. I say to the Hon. Member, and I say to his Leader who put down this motion, that the problem with their logic and their approach on this particular issue is the same as their approach on any problem. They go at it back-foremost. They are coming at it from the wrong end. They would do well to read all of the Report before picking out convenient little bits. I would suggest Hon. Members over there have never read it at all. They ran to the newspaper this morning to get the juicy bits and figured they had a good thing going.

Mr. Wilson: Have you read it, Roger?

Mr. Simmons: A few pages to go.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Simmons: A few pages to go. I say to the Hon. Member for Etobicoke Centre, who has the great reputation for being a man from Bay Street, a man who understands business, that he does his reputation no good at all to be associated with a group of people who are on this witch hunt of "How much is so and so paid; how much is that person's salary?"

Mr. Blenkarn: Why shouldn't we know that?

Mr. Malone: If you ask questions, you might get answers.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. The Hon. Member's time has expired. The Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn).

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, it is always entertainment to the House to hear the Hon. Member for Burin-St. George's (Mr. Simmons) speaking about his National Battlefields Commission. We were most impressed by the costs of SaltFish Corporation and the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation, but what he fails to realize is that the shareholders of Canada, the people of this country, represented by Members in this House, are entitled, as shareholders in these corporations, to demand an accounting from the Corporations and their executive. They are entitled at least once a year, like any other shareholders of any other corporation, to demand an accounting from the president and the executive officers of the Corporation. It has been the habit of this Government to hide as much as it can. It is a situation of "bury it under the carpet and make sure it is never shown".

This Party on the other side of the House, this Liberal Government, is a master at hiding, burying and shoving things under the table.

We have, as the Auditor General says, a sub-government that looks after well in excess of $30 billion in transactions a year, and we as the representatives of the people cannot look, cannot see, cannot ask about them because the Government wants to keep the information buried under the table, and this Government wants to do its borrowing in one way or another and its manoeuvring in one way or another. This Government does not want the people to know what it is doing. That is the issue, and that is the issue the Hon. Member for Burin-St. George's and the entire Liberal Party runs away from. That is what this debate is about tonight.

I refer to two business Crown Corporations that have recently been transferred under the blanket of the Canada Development Investment Corporation, under the hideout controlled by the Minister of State for Social Development, of all things, Senator Austin from the other place. He is a Minister who says he does not know what Canadair and de Havilland are all about. A Minister who is taking over control of these Corporations says, just as the Auditor General said, "I do not know how much money they are going to need. I know that the $200 million that we are asked to vote for each of them tonight is not enough." He said, and he said it in testimony given to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, that the amount will last maybe until March. They will then need at least $100 million and maybe more than that by March. We are asked to vote in favour of spending more money when we, as Members of Parliament, as representatives, as shareholders of these corporations, cannot get an accounting.

Let me deal first with Canadair. Canadair is the subject of the Auditor General's Report. In his Report, dealing with the last fiscal year of this Government's operation, he indicated that the $1.35 billion authorized in loans to that corporation was not sufficient. It clearly was not sufficient because the Government is coming to us tonight to demand another $200 million for that corporation. The Minister of the Government who is responsible for the Canada Investment Development Corporation has said in committee that that is not enough. I say that the people of Canada have a right to know where we are going. Where are we going? Where is the Government taking us? Where is it spending the money of the people of Canada? It is as simple as that. It is not a question of whether we should build a Challenger jet or whether we should own an aircraft corporation. It is the basic right to know where we are going. What are the projections for sales? How is this management operating?

Let us discuss management for a while. The President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray), in his other capacity as Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce before the latest shuffle, wrote two letters to the present Minister of State for Economic Development (Mr. Johnston), previously the President of the Treasury Board. Both of those letters are available for public scrutiny because they were leaked to us. In each of those letters, the present President of the Treasury Board, that great squanderer of the people's money, said that Consolidated Computer needed a little more money, another $25 billion, another $35 million. Indeed, while he was Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, he deliberately allocated over $50 million of money to Consolidated Computer, and then the lid blew off. Then we gave away that company for the sum of $1 and we sold nearly $50 million worth of assets for $100,000.

If the Parliament of Canada had had an opportunity to review Consolidated Computer annually, the Government and the people of Canada would not have lost $125 million, but it was hidden. It was swept under the carpet by a Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce who wanted to protect himself, and it really did not matter to him whose money he was spending. After all, the money comes from the great money tree and the Government spends it and shuffles it here to try to cover up the losses, and the Auditor General points that out.

To say, for one moment, that the House should not have some control over the business activities conducted by the Government, under the guise of a Crown corporation, is to say that Members of Parliament have no right to examine the spending of the people of Canada. Sir, the barons of Runnymede did not put up with that with King John. I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that this House cannot put up with this kind of activity.

Representatives of Canadair appeared before our committee for two and one-half hours. During that time, the executives of that corporation refused to disclose their projections, refused to disclose their creative bookkeeping methods, refused to set out the costs of building an airplane, refused to say how many airplanes they had to build to get the company out of debt and refused, indeed, to give us any of the details. This Party asked for in camera hearings of the committee so that ordinary commercial matters would not be disclosed to the public, but the Government refused to give us those in camera hearings because it somehow wants to keep the lid on it all. Well, the Auditor General has blown their cover. I say to you, Mr. Speaker, the people of Canada will blow its cover when an election comes, because we cannot put up with this kind of failure to disclose and this failure of responsibility any longer.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. It being 9.45 p.m., it is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 58(10), to interrupt the debate and put forthwith every question necessary to dispose of the proceedings now before the House. The question is on the amendment.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): All those in favour of the amendment will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Supply

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The House divided on the amendment (Mr. Anguish) which was negatived on the following division:

Madam Speaker: I declare the motion lost.

Before putting the question on the opposed items in Supplementary Estimates (B) I would suggest to Hon. Members that in order to avoid confusion during the taking of divisions on Estimates, they follow the proceedings by referring to Roman numerals XI, XII and XIII in today's Order Paper and Notices.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker there have been discussions among House Leaders. I think if you make inquiries you will find that there is a general disposition that you put the question on the first item and have the division recorded on that item. Then, when you put items Nos. 2, 3, 4 and 5 you will find that there is a general disposition to apply the division taken on the first item to the subsequent four items and that that division be recorded in Hansard on each of the items Nos. 2, 3, 4 and 5.

● (2230)

Madam Speaker: Is there disposition to that effect?

[Translation]

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, I just want to make sure that everything is quite clear. We are agreed on Motions Nos. 2, 3 and 4, but I think Motion No. 5 is in the name of the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray), and so for the time being, we shall withhold consent for Motion No. 5, and as the vote proceeds, we shall be able to decide on our position, and we shall then let you know what our decision will be.

[English]

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, my understanding was the same as that put by the House Leader for the Official Opposition. As I read No. 5, there would be two votes on No. 5. As I understand it, when we get to No. 4 perhaps we will have another vote on No. 5.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker: I would ask the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) to please check his list. Is the motion in the name of the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray) Motion No. 6?

Supply

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, you are right. So in that case, the vote on Motion No. 1 will dispose of Motions Nos. 2, 3, 4 and 5, and we shall vote separately on Motion No. 6, if necessary.

[English]

MOTION FOR CONCURRENCE IN VOTE 1B, MINISTRY OF STATE FOR ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

Hon. Herb Gray (President of Treasury Board) moved:

That Vote 1b, in the amount of $7,479,600 under the Ministry of State for Economic Development—Program Expenditures and Contributions, in the Supplementary Estimates (B) for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1983, be concurred in.

MOTION FOR CONCURRENCE IN VOTE 20B, DEPARTMENT OF INDIAN AFFAIRS AND NORTHERN DEVELOPMENT

Hon. Herb Gray (President of Treasury Board) moved:

That Vote 20b, in the amount of $18,310,000 under the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development—Northern Affairs—Operating expenditures, in the Supplementary Estimates (B) for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1983, be concurred in.

Madam Speaker: I declare the motion carried.

Motion No. 5 agreed to.

● (2240)

Mr. Elzinga: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would like to have a ruling from you with regard to proper dress in this Chamber. I was under the impression that a male Member of Parliament had to wear a shirt, a tie and jacket. If that is the proper dress in this Chamber, I would suggest that the Hon. Member for Saint John (Mr. Landers) is not here in proper attire, and I would seek your ruling on the matter.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: I was just going to ask the Hon. Member to please stand up so I could see how he is dressed.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member seems to be correctly attired. Perhaps the Hon. Member for Pembina (Mr. Elzinga) needs my glasses.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

MOTION FOR CONCURRENCE IN SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES (B), 1983

Hon. Herb Gray (President of Treasury Board) moved:

That the Supplementary Estimates (B) for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1983, laid upon the Table Monday, November 8, 1982, except those items disposed of earlier this day, be concurred in.

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. We are prepared to let this item go on division.

Madam Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: On division.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Herb Gray (President of Treasury Board) moved that Bill C-140, an act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the Government of Canada for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1983, be read the first time and be printed.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Gray thereupon moved that Bill C-140, an Act granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the Government of Canada for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1983, be read the second time and referred to the Committee of the Whole.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Corbin in the Chair.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Shall Clause 2 carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause 2 agreed to.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Shall Clause 3 carry?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: On division.

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 4, 5 and 6 inclusive agreed to.

Schedule agreed to.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Shall Clause 1 carry?

Some Hon. Members: On division.

Clause 1 agreed to.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Shall the preamble carry?

Some Hon. Members: On division.

Preamble agreed to.

Title agreed to.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Shall I report the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: On division.

Bill reported.

Mr. Gray moved that the Bill be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Gray moved that the Bill be read the third time and do pass.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker: It being 10.48 p.m., I do now leave the chair pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 2(1).

At 10.48 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

MOTIONS UNDER S.O. 43

[English]

BANKRUPTCIES

EFFECT OF GOVERNMENT ECONOMIC POLICIES

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Madam Speaker, today's Ottawa Citizen tells us that 9,962 companies have gone bankrupt in the first 11 months of this year, leaving behind them some $2.1 billion in debt. This represents an increase of 35.4 per cent over the same period last year, and 411 per cent over the 2,420 recorded during the height of the 1930s' depression.

The Party opposite has clung to power for 15 years by claiming to be able to unite our country. While its members efforts in every other regard have been utter failures—even to the point of being counter-productive—honesty compels us to acknowledge the unity they have forced upon all of us by their economic policies. Therefore I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Corbett):

That this House congratulate the Government for at last fulfilling, at least in part, its pledge to unify the country—even if that unifying force is despair—and urges it to quit while it is at least this far ahead.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

TRANSPORT

IDENTIFICATION OF TRUCKS CARRYING DANGEROUS CARGO

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Madam Speaker, I rise today on an issue vital to the safety of Canadians. Last month a tanker truck carrying an explosive liquid rolled over on the Queen Elizabeth Way. Firefighters were unaware of the contents of the trunk and exposed themselves to an unknown danger. Later the Transportation Minister for the Ontario Government, when asked why there were no laws to force truckers carrying dangerous goods to label their vehicles for easy identification of their contents, told the press that he could not do so until federal regulations are in place.

Given that the Minister has been pressing the federal Government for five years on this matter and that the well-being of Canadian citizens is at stake, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Grey-Simcoe (Mr. Mitges):

That the Government immediately draft legislation requiring trucks to carry signs identifying dangerous cargo with a view to preventing serious accidents of this nature in the future.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

HUMAN RIGHTS

ANNIVERSARY OF UNITED NATIONS UNIVERSAL DECLARATION OF HUMAN RIGHTS

Miss Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the continuing denial of human rights in many parts of the world and the continuing need to urge all Governments to adhere to the substance as well as the spirit of the United Nations Universal Declaration of Human Rights, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Parkdale-High Park (Mr. Flis) and the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald):

That this House note that today, December 10, 1982, is the thirty-fourth anniversary of the United Nations Universal Declaration of Human Rights, express its appreciation of and support for the important work being done by the United Nations Human Rights Commission, Amnesty International, and the Helsinki monitoring groups, and urge all nations to adhere to the spirit and the substance of the United Nations Universal Declaration of Human Rights.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

[Translation]

Hon. Serge Joyal (Secretary of State): Madam Speaker, it is with great pleasure that I rise on the motion proposed by the Hon. Member. I wish to say that on this side of the House, we strongly support the declaration whose anniversary we are about to celebrate today. I may add that since taking on the duties of Secretary of State of Canada, I sent invitations to all my colleagues in the provinces and the territories, asking them to take part in a federal-provincial conference on human rights some time next year, the objective being to reassess initiatives taken by various levels of Government with respect to affirmative action, and also the manner in which UN member countries are meeting their international obligations. As Secretary of State, I earnestly hope that all private groups in Canada are joining in this celebration and that we can—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I thought the Hon. Member was dealing with another matter. I need a copy of the motion in order to put it to the House, and I am waiting for the copy.

• (1110)

[English]

Do I have unanimous consent without having the copy? Do I have the unanimous consent of the House for the presentation of this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker: The Secretary of State has the floor.

Mr. Joyal: As I said before, Madam Speaker, I hope that all private organizations in Canada with a deep commitment to human rights will take appropriate action in order to meet the objectives set forth in the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

As Secretary of State, I shall also have an opportunity to report to this House on the manner in which Canada has met its commitments to two extremely important international conventions one on eliminating racial discrimination, and this report will be tabled at the end of this year, and the other on eliminating discrimination against women, with a report to be tabled at the beginning of 1983. I therefore hope that the spirit of commitment and support shown by the parties in this House with respect to the Universal Declaration of Human Rights will lead to further initiatives and increased support in the course of this year, because it is extremely important for Canada to maintain the leadership demonstrated at the time the Declaration was drafted.

[English]

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, this thirty-fourth anniversary of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights is a day to which we all want to pay respect, as indeed the world community has done for 34 years in its efforts to enhance and respect human rights.

We know, nevertheless, that human rights have been violated time and time again throughout the world. So often we just use this occasion to pay lip service to a significant day, but one of the steps that we, as Canadian Parliamentarians, can take is to implement the recommendation that has been made to this House to establish a Parliamentary Association on Human Rights. In that way, as legislators in this Chamber we can give continuing and consistent support wherever human rights violations take place, whether they be in our own country or in any part of the world. We have an opportunity to set up an association and do something more than just pay lip service to this Universal Declaration of Human Rights once a year.

Mr. Bob Ogle (Saskatoon East): Madam Speaker, I should like to join with other Members of the House in acknowledging this day. I believe that at this time in our history the basic needs of not millions but of billions of people are being neglected, even the simple rights to food, water and shelter, as well as political rights and religious rights.

Today this House says that it will stand behind the Charter and do everything possible to see that it is carried out.

Madam Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Does the House agree to the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

ATTENDANCE OF DEPARTMENTAL OFFICIALS AT CONFERENCE IN HAWAII

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Madam Speaker, Mr. Ron Fournier and Mr. Dan Goodleaf of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development are presently attending the International Indigenous Peoples Conference in Hawaii. At the same time our current economic and winter climates are keeping most Canadians at home. As the Department must obviously feel that the capabilities of these two public servants warrant such an arduous journey, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Cariboo-Chilcotin (Mr. Greenaway):

That the government recall Messrs. Fournier and Goodleaf immediately from the sunny climes of Hawaii and tell them to bend their backs to the wind, pull themselves up by their snowboot-straps and apply this expertise in Canada—for native Canadians—in the many long, hard winters ahead.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

BANKRUPTCIES

INCREASE IN NUMBER INVOLVING SMALL BUSINESSES—EFFECT OF BUDGET

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Finance. I am sure he is aware of the announcement of the bankruptcy figures for November of this year, which are up 35 per cent over the same period last year, and for the period to date this year 38,000 bankruptcies have been declared. Since almost all of these bankruptcies relate to small businesses, could the Minister explain why the Government has persisted in retaining so many parts of the disastrous November budget which hurt small business so badly? I am referring to such things as the 12.5 per cent dividend tax, the effective removal of the deferred profit sharing plans, the loss of the cumulative dividend account, the reduction of capital cost allowances, much tighter treatment of the reserve provisions of capital gains, and others besides those.

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, the Minister of Finance, in his statement to the House on October 28, indicated that the Government was concerned about the plight of the small business sector. In response to that, a number of changes have been made to the proposals in the November, 1981, budget. For example, an item talked about by the Hon. Member, that is the distribution tax on dividends and its supposed retroactivity, has been eliminated and the section simplified. A number of steps have been taken by the Minister. There are a number of provisions in the Bill placed before the House which have been well received by the business community, for example, the extension of the Small Business Bond until the end of 1983.

Of course it is the wish of the Minister, and I am sure of the Hon. Member who asked the question, that these provisions be dealt with quickly by the House so that they can be put into force. Perhaps there are some with which the Hon. Member does not agree but, nevertheless, they would bring certainty to the business community. We would urge quick consideration of those provisions.

Mr. Wilson: I should remind the Minister that the 12.5 per cent dividend tax is still there. If he says that this is well received by the business community, as always he is totally out of touch with what is going on with small business people in the country.

The announcement this morning represents 38,000 broken dreams. It also represents 38,000 people and their families who have had their nest eggs for the future destroyed. Also it means that many jobs related to those businesses have been lost.

QUERY RESPECTING GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, since these tax changes to which I referred a minute ago discourage these people, and many others like them from leaving their secure jobs, going out and starting a new business—and I should remind the Minister that this is one of the few sources of new job creation in the country today—why does the Government ignore the effect of these budget changes on the start-ups of new business and job creation?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, I think the Hon. Member is really missing the forest for the trees. For example, he takes one or two items but has not looked at the rest of the provisions in the Bill before the House, which we hope will be considered soon. He misses, for example, the fact that a small-businessman is not just a small-businessman; he is an individual. He is subject to other tax provisions in the Bill. Many small-businessmen would be some of the 5.8 million Canadians who, as a result of the reduction in the general rate, will receive a reduction in general tax increases. There are many provisions in the Bill that affect small-businessmen, that affect all Canadians, that mean good news to Canadians, and will be well received by millions of Canadians. That is why I am sure the Hon. Member will want to have that legislation dealt with quickly in the House.

• (1120)

Mr. Wilson: Madam Speaker, the Minister says that he wants to have this legislation dealt with quickly. He must realize that there are 295 pages of legislation. This is probably the most complex Bill we have seen in this House in years, probably since the last tax legislation reform ten years ago. Clearly we disagree with the small business part of the tax Bill and probably many Canadians will disagree with other parts.

PASSAGE OF TAX LEGISLATION

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, since I am told by tax lawyers and tax accountants that they can live with the delays and the uncertainties—they have been waiting for 13 months now and another month or two will not be the end of the world—would the Minister explain whether the reason for this pressure on getting the tax legislation through is simply to avoid further embarrassment and scrutiny of this Bill in the House of Commons?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, I cannot believe my ears. I cannot believe the hon. gentleman who has just phrased that question is the same gentleman who, for the last 14 months in this House, has been saying that businessmen in Canada want certainty in the tax system and want these provisions dealt with quickly so that that uncertainty is removed.

I cannot believe that he is unaware that the majority of taxpayers in Canada will receive refunds from passage of this legislation—

Mr. Wilson: When will you pay the refunds?

Mr. Cosgrove: —that the majority of Canadians, particularly those Canadians who unfortunately have been unemployed, and those Canadians, possibly who may be the small-businessmen to whom the Hon. Member refers, will receive tax refunds as a result of this legislation. Those are the main reasons which urge and move this Government to ask this House to deal with the legislation quickly.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

REQUEST THAT DEPARTMENT ISSUE WARNING TO BUYERS OF TELEVISION SETS

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. The Minister will know that there are now on the market maybe a million new television sets in Canada which have built-in cable converters but which cannot accommodate Pay TV. Cable companies are getting a lot of flack from consumers who invested in these cable ready or cable compatible sets and were not told that they cannot accommodate pay TV. What will the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs do to warn prospective purchasers, especially now it is Christmas time, that cable TV sets are no good for Pay TV?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, I want to thank the Hon. Member for his question, because it is very important for consumers to know that if they buy a television set and assume they will be able to use a regular converter to receive pay TV channels, they may have a few problems. I believe that right now, my departmental officials are meeting with the industry and with representatives from the Department of Communications in order to solve this problem. I think the public will be informed of any additional equipment it will have to purchase if the industry itself is unable to find a way to overcome this obstacle.

[English]

NECESSITY FOR INFORMATION ON PRODUCT LIMITATION

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is also for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. In a case such as this when a manufacturer knows there is a deficiency in a product and the consumer is in danger of being misled, has the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs considered establishing a policy, or even a law, which would require manufacturers and distributors to inform retailers and consumers about potential limitations to a product so as to avoid the kind of misrepresentation consumers have faced, with these cable ready TV sets?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, I do not think the Canadian public would wish to see the State intervene in the private sector in such a direct way. The Hon. Member will agree that we have here a new technology that is going to revolutionize television. It was impossible to anticipate these technological changes, but obviously, if consumers have been misinformed, we can take steps to correct this. I do not think we can deprive the consumer of this new technology. On the contrary, it should be made widely available so that modern society can reap the benefits.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT INTRODUCE NATIONAL PROGRAM OF RECOVERY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. During the past seven sitting days of the House Members of the New Democratic Party have raised no fewer than 23 specific sections in the unemployment crisis in this country as areas to make constructive proposals to the Government in order to create jobs. On the one hand the Government's response has been arrogant indifference and, on the other hand, simply to dismiss the proposals out of hand. It has not accepted one idea. In the face of the continuing massive lay-offs that are occurring all over the country, will the Government now come to its senses, accept its social responsibility, and announce that it will bring in a national program of recovery before Christmas?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member in asking his questions always chooses to ignore deliberately the actions the Government has already announced, actions that it has already taken and actions that are now in the process of creating jobs.

Some Hon. Members: Name them.

Mr. Trudeau: Hon. Members of that Party ask me to name them; I did. I will send the Hon. Member a copy of my speech made about ten days ago. When I looked at the proposals made by the New Democratic Party, proposals which I think were made by its Leader himself, calling for some expenditure of close to $2 billion to create jobs, I totalled the expenditures which had been tabulated by the Government of this country to create jobs in the June budget and in the recent announcement by the Minister of Finance. It turned out that we had earmarked more money than the Leader of the New Democratic Party for creating jobs, so that is the difference between the two Parties. Even in Opposition the Leader of the New Democratic Party cannot come up with a program which is as stimulative to creating jobs as the Liberal Government can.

INCREASE IN BANKRUPTCIES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, as usual the Prime Minister has a little trouble in his reading. The proposals that we made offered, in addition to what the Government has proposed, in addition to what it has done, $2.2 billion more stimulus. We have told the Government where it could get the money if it wanted to provide a little fairness in our tax system. That is what we suggested to the Government. The Prime Minister should not use his time to distort his own bad record by trying to mislead the House about what we have presented.

I would like to ask the Prime Minister a question in this context. The statistics that came out today, and they have already been referred to on this side of the House, show that there has been an alarming 35 per cent increase in personal and business bankruptcies. For the same period of time on a comparative basis, there is now twice the number than at the height of the Depression. Does the Prime Minister not recognize that in order to obtain a reversal of this economic downturn, a major program, not the pittance that the Government has put out, is required? In short, we need a national program of economic recovery. If so, why does the Government not bring it in?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, if the Hon. Member is reduced to describe as a pittance the two billion and some three hundred million or five hundred million that we have earmarked to create jobs, whereas he was able to come up with $2.2 billion, I do not know what his notion of a pittance is.

Mr. Deans: A pittance is what people on old age pensions get.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT TAKE ACTION BEFORE CHRISTMAS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, either the Prime Minister's hearing is bad or he is deliberately misinforming the House, and I say that with care. I said $2.2 billion in addition to what the Government has proposed. I hope the Prime Minister heard it that time.

In the past seven sitting days we have talked about lay-offs in the wood products sector of Newfoundland, in mining in the Yukon, in manufacturing in Quebec and Ontario, in the forest products sector of British Columbia, in short in every part of this country. We made suggestions that could be acted upon. Why could the Government of Canada not accept at least one of these suggestions? Why cannot it do something that will provide some hope before Christmas?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I can assure you that my hearing is not bad. I understood what the Hon. Member said. Therefore I wish he would withdraw when he said I was deliberately misleading the House.

• (1130)

Madam Speaker: Well, I heard that, and I do not know whether it was said very clearly that someone was deliberately misleading the House. I thought the Hon. Member said that he was trying to deliberately mislead the House.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Rephrase the question, Ed.

Madam Speaker: Furthermore, he said "misinforming the House", and that is not considered to be unparliamentary language.

Mr. Nielsen: No!

Madam Speaker: I would just urge Hon. Members to be careful with the language they use in the House.

Mr. Clark: Not now, not now!

Madam Speaker: The Hon. Member for Durham-Northumberland.

Mr. Lawrence: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Madam Speaker, as a result of—

Mr. Trudeau: Thanks for your support.

NATIONAL SECURITY

CASE OF CANADIAN PROFESSOR—RCMP INTERROGATION OF FORMER SOVIET KGB COLONEL

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Durham-Northumberland): Madam Speaker, as a result of what the Solicitor General said yesterday, both inside and outside the House, we have learned that the RCMP, or Canadian Government agencies, in any event, interrogated Colonel Rudolph Herrmann of the KGB in the United States in July of 1979 respecting the Hambleton affair. My question to the Solicitor General is whether he would confirm, as is our understanding, that as a result of that interrogation the Canadian Government or the RCMP, in any event, knew that direct evidence, not hearsay evidence, was therefore available that Colonel Herrmann passed United States secret classified information to Hambleton on Canadian soil.

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Madam Speaker, I will not answer that question on the grounds of national security.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lawrence: Madam Speaker, I point out to you that it was the Solicitor General, here in this House and in the corridor right after the Question Period yesterday, who introduced this whole topic of that interrogation and also the transcript of that interrogation relating to Colonel Herrmann. Certainly, that is not an excuse now, at this late date, for him to be once again sucking and blowing at the same time in respect to this information.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

MINISTER'S KNOWLEDGE OF INTERROGATION

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Durham-Northumberland): My supplementary question, then, to the Solicitor General does not relate to national security but, rather, to his own activities. When did the Solicitor General first learn of that interrogation and, second, when did he, himself, go through the transcript of that interrogation?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Madam Speaker, I learned of that interrogation in the course of being briefed about the matter.

Mr. Clark: When?

Mr. Kaplan: I have been briefed on this particular operation periodically during the whole of the period I have been Solicitor General.

TRANSPORT DISCLOSURES

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, I would like to ask a supplementary question based on the transcripts of that interrogation of Herrmann by U.S. authorities as well as by security officials in the Minister's own Department. Can the Minister inform the House how many other Canadians were implicated by Herrmann in that interrogation?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Madam Speaker, Hon. Members are asking me questions the answers to which would reveal matters that are within the national security of Canada. I was prepared to indicate that that meeting took place because it became an issue of public debate. I am not prepared to indicate what information Herrmann gave to the FBI that has not been made public, or what information he gave to the security service that has not been made public. I can assure all Hon. Members, though, that the entire brief of all of the evidence that had been gathered by the Security Service relative to Mr. Hambleton was presented to the Department of Justice and to the Attorney General of Canada when his consent for prosecution under the Official Secrets Act was sought.

Mr. Nielsen: I would like to ask a further supplementary question, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker: I will allow a very short supplementary question.

PASSING OF CLASSIFIED INFORMATION—PROFESSOR'S CLAIM

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): My brief supplementary question is directed to the Solicitor General. Does the Minister deny that, prior to the decision that was taken not to lay charges against Hambleton, he or his officials were aware that Hambleton had claimed to have passed classified information to the KGB?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Madam Speaker, the Solicitor General of the former Government is aware of the facts. He has indicated more than once that he reviewed the file and, that he was fully briefed about it.

Mr. Nielsen: I am asking you.

Mr. Kaplan: That is not information that I think should be made public.

Mr. Nielsen: I am asking you.

Mr. Kaplan: However, I think Hon. Members opposite could find assurances given by their own Solicitor General—

Mr. Nielsen: I am asking you.

Mr. Kaplan: —that a full brief was presented of all the information that the Security Service had on Hambleton and that the FBI had on Hambleton that they communicated to the Security Service when the Attorney General was making his decision.

Mr. Nielsen: I am asking you.

POSITION OF CANADIAN GOVERNMENT VIS-À-VIS SOVIET GOVERNMENT

Mr. John Gamble (York North): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Secretary of State for External Affairs, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. We know, as a consequence of the actions taken by the Government of the United Kingdom, that a Canadian citizen has been convicted of spying activities, and we know that the Government for which he was spying was that of the Soviet Union. When did the Government of Canada communicate to the Government of the Soviet Union its condemnation for the part played by the Government of the Soviet Union in the spying activities of Hambleton?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): In the particular case of Hambleton, Madam Speaker, I am not aware of any particular protests having been made, but there have been various occasions known to the public when the Government has protested to the Soviet Union at the time that they PNG'd Soviet Nationals in Canada.

Mr. Gamble: I suppose that I might have anticipated that kind of a response that no specific action has been taken by this Government against the Government of the Soviet Union.

REQUEST FOR REDUCTION IN NUMBER OF SOVIET EMBASSY OFFICIALS

Mr. John Gamble (York North): We are well aware of the activities of the Government of the Soviet Union in Canada, and it was not so long ago that 12 spies attached to the Soviet Embassy were expelled from Canada. Surely the Government of Canada must now have realized that, in order to reduce the inducement to Canadian to commit treason against their country, it might be appropriate to reduce the number of KGB agents attached to the Soviet Embassy in Canada. I ask the Prime Minister whether he is not seriously contemplating such a sensible step.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member has just quoted, himself, occasions when the Government has demanded that the Soviet Union withdraw certain of its people who operate here under our ambassadorial cover. That has been done in the past and it will be done again when we have cause to believe that an ambassador or one of his officials here is not discharging his ambassadorial duties but, rather, is performing as a spy. That happens frequently, and the Hon. Member has quoted 12 cases when it did happen.

SPORTS

ANNOUNCED CHANGE IN VENUE FOR HENLEY REGATTA

Mr. Gilbert A. Parent (Welland): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister who speaks for the Minister of Sport. For a number of years, 100 years, the Henley Regatta has been held in St. Catharines. Information came forth yesterday that this regatta will be moved to Montreal.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An Hon. Member: Along with everything else!

Mr. Parent: I was just wondering what would be done in order to ensure that this Regatta will continue to be in St. Catharines.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nielsen: Nobody to answer!

PENSIONS

GREEN PAPER ON PENSION REFORM—PROPOSAL TO APPOINT PARLIAMENTARY COMMITTEE

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): My question is directed to the Prime Minister, if I can have his attention.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member for Beaches (Mr. Young).

Mr. Young: Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister.

Mr. Clark: He is busy with posterity. Don't bother him.

Mr. Young: Yesterday, after 18 months of study, the Government finally tabled in the House the Green Paper on pension reform. The major recommendation in that Green Paper appears to be a proposal that the House strike a committee to study pension reform for at least another year, and probably two. The Prime Minister knows that over the last five years there have been some 50 major studies on pension reform, and the last thing that seniors in this country need is yet another study on what they need in terms of pension improvement.

Will the Prime Minister tell the House why the Government, after all of those studies, and knowing exactly what must be done in terms of pension reform, has shelved that very important question for at least another two years, instead of coming forward with real proposals to improve the lot of senior citizens?

• (1140)

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, the answer is very easy, and I think the Member knows this.

First of all, it would be great if the New Democratic Party had a position of which we could be aware. That would be of interest.

For example, what avenue would they choose to recycle the billions of new dollars that will have to be invested for the benefit of the Canadian economy? Which avenue would they choose for the 80's or the 90's? Do they have an idea? What do they think of the CPP as a means? Do they have an idea? Are they backing credit splitting for homemakers and for spouses?

Mr. Clark: You should be in Opposition with all those questions.

An Hon. Member: It won't be long.

Miss Bégin: How would they do it? How much do they think that the workers whom they represent, like we do, will be ready to donate from their paycheques, right now?

There are many very serious questions which were never put to the Canadian public, and on which we need the work of the special committee of the House to create as large a consensus as possible from the Canadian public.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

GOVERNMENT PLANS

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Madam Speaker, my supplementary is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. I will tell the Minister one thing we would not do, and that is we would not further victimize the victims of inflation by restricting their purchasing power over the next two years by six and five per cent. We would not do that.

The Minister of National Health and Welfare indicated three or four weeks ago that senior citizens in this country needed an immediate increase in the OAS of $25 a month. We know what we would do if we were the Government. We want to know what they are going to do.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, now the Member is switching to another issue, which is public pensions. I thought he had started with private pensions, which was the object of the Green Paper. According to the Green Paper, simply to improve existing pensions—and I hope everyone knows that half the workers do not even have pension plans—it would cost about $2 billion this year. That is the order of magnitude of the cost of this reform. We think this is not the year to do it. If and when public consensus develops certain measures, that the time is right, for example, corrections to the Tax Act or to the Pension Benefits Standards Act which we are recommending in quite specific detail, could be started as soon as there is a demand, and I hope the committee will create that demand.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

MANDATORY SUPERVISION PROGRAM—RELEASE OF DANGEROUS SEXUAL OFFENDERS

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. Recently the Solicitor General said, and I quote, "That no one with a bad evaluation will be released under mandatory supervision in the future."

If it is the intention of the Minister not to use mandatory supervision, under what auspices does he plan to release dangerous sexual offenders in the future?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Madam Speaker, I do not think the question is very clear. I would like to see the context of that statement. I have been reminding people recently of the new policy of the National Parole Board of stopping the eligibility and granting of mandatory supervision to dangerous offenders, even when they reach the date on which they become eligible for mandatory supervision.

There are six cases like that now in which, starting just a few months ago, the National Parole Board has begun, in effect, to withold the mandatory supervision. Three of the individuals have appealed on habeas corpus grounds or under the Charter for the right to be released under mandatory supervision. The law officers of the Crown tell us we have a good case to keep them behind bars, and we intend to continue with that policy.

REQUEST FOR DEFINITION OF "A BAD EVALUATION"

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Madam Speaker, the Minister is interested in protecting Hambleton, and he is interested in protecting Clifford Olson. It would be nice to see him protect the law-abiding citizens of this country for a change.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Friesen: And rather than foist his responsibilities on the National Parole Board or the Provincial Attorneys General it would be nice to see him take on his own responsibilities in this legislation.

The phrase he used in that quotation was, "a bad evaluation". With a subjective term like that, I would like him to define for us in the House and for the Canadian people what he terms "a bad evaluation".

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Madam Speaker, I would like to remind the Hon. Member that several changes have been introduced by this Solicitor General to toughen up the procedures for dealing with dangerous offenders. The answer that I gave a moment ago was explaining to him a new policy which is helping to keep dangerous offenders behind bars. I do not see how the Hon. Member can characterize that as increasing the danger to the public. It is increasing the security of the public.

The Bill which I sent to the Senate will have the same effect. It will toughen up mandatory supervision to make sure that, to the greatest extent possible, dangerous offenders stay behind bars as long as their sentences last.

SMALL BUSINESS

PROGRESS OF LEGISLATION

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Prince Edward-Hastings): Madam Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of State for Small Businesses. We have been looking forward for some time to the Small Business Investment Grants legislation. I would like to ask the Minister two questions. One, when does he anticipate that we will see that legislation again, and the benefits from it? Secondly, within the legislation there is a clause that asks that only new equipment be used. In the case of many small businesses, good, used equipment would be a far better buy. Will the Minister, if indeed we are going to have this legislation, assess the possibility of allowing good, used equipment to be used?

Hon. William Rompkey (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Madam Speaker, the Bill is before the House at the present time. It has passed second reading and committee stage, and hopefully it can be brought forward at the earliest possible opportunity for report stage and third reading. I would certainly welcome that, as I know the Hon. Member would, because it is going to be a help to the small business community.

STIPULATION RESPECTING EQUIPMENT TO BE USED

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Prince Edward-Hastings): Madam Speaker, I appreciate that, but the main part of my question had to do with the utilization of used equipment, as a part of this particular piece of legislation, which would be tremendously helpful to many small businesses which, even with the legislation, would find it extremely difficult to expand.

Hon. William Rompkey (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Madam Speaker, the reasoning behind limiting it to new equipment was that there would be a double effect in the sense that it would create more jobs, and in the sense that if indeed we stuck with new equipment rather than used equipment, it would be a two-pronged effect. That was the rationale behind it. I believe that rationale was reasonable.

RAILWAYS

SUGGESTED ELECTRIFICATION OF RAILWAY SYSTEM IN MARITIME PROVINCES

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Madam Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Minister of Transport. The quality of the transportation services available in the Maritimes is the key factor in the Maritime economic scene. Since railway systems in most of the world, especially Europe and Japan, are fully electrified at present, I ask the Minister is he giving any thought to the electrification of the railway system in the Maritime Provinces since we need a major, mega, Maritime long-term project to alleviate high unemployment and a constantly increasing welfare and social assistance caseload in our area.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, the subject of electrification of railways is one that is popular in Canada as a subject for research. My Department has a research program on it. Recently the Government provided funds for a British Columbia Railway pilot project to which it contributed about $5 million, if I remember well. The Government considers that as an investment toward greater railways development in the future by way of electrification.

REQUEST THAT SPECIAL COMMITTEE STUDY PROJECT

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Madam Speaker, in view of the fact that electrification of the Maritime railway system would halt the dangerous erosion of the present system, move manufactured goods and materials at competitive speeds, assist more industry to locate in the Maritimes and assist present industries to expand, I would like to ask the Minister if he would consider appointing a special committee composed of Members from all Parties to study this proposal and to bring to this Parliament a recommendation on this important matter.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, my opinion on the subject is not a very worth-while one but, generally speaking, people who have written and talked on this subject, particularly in my Department, tend to believe that the investment that this would bring about would be considerable, and too great for the benefit to be harvested at this particular moment.

The subject is one that is interesting, indeed. I have already said that. If my hon. friend wants to suggest to the chairman of the committee on transportation of the House of Commons that this might be a good object for a short inquiry with a few witnesses, I would suggest that he do so.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE TO CONNE RIVER COMMUNITY IN NEWFOUNDLAND

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): My question is directed to the Minister of Indian Affairs. What is the Minister going to do for the Indian community of Conne River, Newfoundland, which is heading for 100 per cent unemployment because it is caught in a federal-provincial power play over funding? Is the Minister aware that banks extended credit to the Conne River Band on the strength of the Minister's promise to provide funds, and that these banks now threaten court action against the Band because the Minister has not kept his word?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member is mistaken. I purposely did not tell the banks that I would supply funds, and when it was suggested that my intervention might be interpreted that way, then I said I would not call the banks and I was assured by the people in my office that they would never allege that that is what I did. The Hon. Member is certainly letting the Conne River Indian people down badly on an essential undertaking on their part.

May I also tell the Hon. Member that the only reason we cannot flow funds to the Conne River Indian people is that we can only do it, under any authorities I have as a Minister, under the auspices of a federal-provincial agreement, and the terms which are being insisted upon by the Newfoundland Government are so obnoxious to the Conne River people that they prefer I never agree to such an agreement, and I have indicated to them I am prepared to go along with their wishes in that regard.

REGISTRATION OF BAND

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Madam Speaker, my supplementary is directed to the same Minister. The Minister should know that he told the committee last spring that, if funds could not be delivered through the agreement, he would have to find some other way to provide those funds. To date he has not done that. Will the Minister confirm that, when Conne River Indian people visited his office two years ago, he showed them an Order in Council which in effect would have created the Conne River Band as a registered Indian Band under the Indian Act? Will the Minister tell the House what became of that Order?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Madam Speaker, we have not been prepared to proceed with that Order at the present time. Let me indicate also to the Hon. Member that, as far as endeavouring to find some other way to flow funds is concerned, he is quite right, Madam Speaker—that is precisely what I am endeavouring to do. Have I found another way to do it? I have not yet. I am taking the matter up with—

Mr. Manly: Why don't you register them?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): I am taking the matter up with my colleagues to ascertain whether there is another way. If there is, and we can find it, I would be the first one, and so would my colleagues, to try to afford assistance inasmuch as we have received no co-operation whatsoever—

Mr. Manly: Register them.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): —from the Province of Newfoundland.

FISHERIES

COST OF IMPLEMENTING KIRBY REPORT RECOMMENDATIONS

Hon. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Veterans Affairs. In view of the fact that the Kirby Report on the Atlantic fisheries is not yet made public and is presently being discussed in front of a Cabinet ad hoc committee, can the Minister tell us why he apparently has publicly said that the recommendations would cost the federal Government $100 million, when we have no idea how it would be spent?

Hon. W. Bennett Campbell (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Madam Speaker, that particular quote was in response to a reporter who visited with me some two or three weeks ago and asked my personal views as to what I thought might be a rough figure, and that was the figure I gave him.

MINISTER'S ESTIMATE OF COST

Hon. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Madam Speaker, I wonder if the Hon. Minister was giving that figure as a consequence of information which he has received from seeing the Kirby Report, or was that just a guess that the Minister put out to satisfy the reporter?

An Hon. Member: That is not the responsibility of the Minister of Veterans Affairs.

An Hon. Member: He has already answered the question. How long did it take you to figure that out?

Hon. W. Bennett Campbell (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Madam Speaker, it was not as a result of seeing the report. It was a personal point of view.

NATIONAL REVENUE

DONATIONS TO RELATIVES IN IRON CURTAIN COUNTRIES—DEPARTMENTAL REGULATIONS

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Madam Speaker, I would like to direct my question to the Minister of National Revenue. Many Canadians who have relatives behind the Iron Curtain, especially in the U.S.S.R. and in Poland, have regularly been sending financial and other donations to their relatives. The Department of National Revenue is now insisting that an affidavit be sent by those recipients stating that they are not in receipt of a pension from either one of those Governments, and if that verification is not received, those donations by Canadians will not be regarded for tax purposes.

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, the income tax application rules for which the Department is responsible and which are now being applied more stringently to donations made to persons residing abroad, derive from the changes made in the last budget with respect to the provisions of the Income Tax Act.

[English]

DEPARTMENT'S VIEW

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Madam Speaker, I would like to ask the same Minister another question, because the circumstances behind the Iron Curtain are very different from the possibility of getting an affidavit from another country where a dependant might be living. Let me read one sentence from a letter from his Department:

> We have found that most residents of the U.S.S.R. and Poland who are 65 years of age or over are in receipt of a pension reasonably necessary to support the individual.

That is simply not the case. We know that is not the case for many people behind the Iron Curtain in the U.S.S.R. and Poland who have relatives in Canada. They are not receiving enough money to sustain themselves and that is why the money is sent. Surely we are dealing with a bureaucratic jungle here which should be able to be cleared up so that these Canadians in fact could get tax credit for moneys which they sent to their dependants.

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member raised the point that it was difficult to establish income figures. I can assure him that I shall look into this matter and find out whether there is any basis for the statement he is making. I shall then be in a position to let him know the results of my investigation.

PENSIONS

PROVISIONS OF CANADA-WEST GERMANY AGREEMENT

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Finance, and I have given him notice of the question. It has to do with the reciprocal agreement which the Prime Minister signed on behalf of Canada in the summer of 1981 with the Federal Republic of West Germany, having to do with taxation, one article of which deals with the double taxation of pensions. The agreement was ratified in the German Parliament early this year, and I have now learned that, even though the Bill has passed through the Senate, the Department of Justice has some reservations about it and another tax year will pass before pensioners, who have earned some rights in the Federal Republic, will receive the benefits which are slanted significantly in favour of Canada. Can the Minister report today whether he will be making an effort with the Department of Justice and the House Leaders to have this Bill passed before we go home for Christmas?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, I can confirm to the Hon. Member that I have in fact asked departmental officials to give me a report on the difficulty he outlines. In view of the fact that he has indicated there is the potential of some difficulty which has been raised by lawyers in the Justice Department, I would be reluctant to confirm that it could be dealt with as quickly as he wishes.

TRADE

PROPOSED ESTABLISHMENT OF ASIA-PACIFIC FOUNDATION

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is addressed to the Prime Minister, if I could get his attention. One of the concrete moves which the Government could make to help the economy to recover is to increase our trade opportunities with the Pacific Rim which, as he knows, is an area with which we now do more trade than all of Europe. With that in mind, we welcomed his support last week in Vancouver for the Asia-Pacific Foundation, which arose out of the initiative of the Clark administration in 1979. Unfortunately, he failed to give us specifics on when he proposes to introduce the Foundation. Could he tell the House now when the Foundation will be established? When will he allocate the $20 million to it? Where will it be located? And who will head it?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I indicated last week when I was in Vancouver in relation to this that the Secretary of State for External Affairs had just received the report of the Foundation and that he had set up a group in his Department to study the answers to the very questions which the hon. lady is asking.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

REQUEST THAT PERMISSION BE GRANTED TO HOLD LOTTERY

Mr. Bill Kempling (Burlington): Madam Speaker, I have a short question for the Minister of Veterans Affairs. Last November 11, after returning from a Remembrance Day service, the Hamilton Naval Veterans Association were told by regional police that a 25 cent lottery they were operating to raise money for needy veterans was illegal and that charges would be laid if the lottery operation was continued. On that day, November 11, there was $40 in the pot.

Would the Minister support an application from veterans associations to National Revenue to allow them to operate a lottery legally during the month of November, and such other times as they may decide, in order to raise money for needy veterans who are not covered by the various assistance programs?

Hon. W. Bennett Campbell (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Madam Speaker, that particular issue was brought to my attention a few days after the event. I think it was most unfortunate that the local police force chose Remembrance Day to visit this particular association. As the Hon. Member is aware, it involves areas of the Criminal Code and federal-provincial jurisdiction. We are looking into the matter and hopefully it can be resolved very shortly.

PETITION

MR. HALLIDAY—GENERAL DISARMAMENT

Madam Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the Clerk of the House has laid upon the Table the 351st Report of the Clerk of Petitions stating that he has examined the petition presented by the Hon. Member for Oxford (Mr. Halliday) on Thursday, December 9, 1982 and found that the petition meets the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

[English]

POINTS OF ORDER

MR. TRUDEAU—ALLEGED UNPARLIAMENTARY LANGUAGE OF MR. BROADBENT

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I would like to raise an interesting point of order with you. You have perhaps received the blues now, and I am quite certain I understood the Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) to indicate that either I was deaf or I was deliberately misleading the House.

Mr. Towers: Both.

Mr. Trudeau: I am sure you will find the words in Hansard. I am not sure there has been a ruling on this particular matter in any other circumstances, but obviously I could not, using that form, indicate that any Member opposite is either ten feet tall or is lying to the House. So it seems to me that the accusation is one which should be withdrawn by the Leader of the New Democratic Party.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) shows remarkable sensitivity to the truth in the House here today, something he has not always shown outside the House.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: But as someone who respects the rules, if I at any—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: I see that our little boy has gone home, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I really thought the Hon. Member was rising in order to withdraw those words. I would urge him not to make his case any worse than it is by debating.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: I have checked the blues.

Mr. Beatty: It is just a lover's quarrel, Madam Speaker!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: I have also looked at the dictionary because I was not sure whether there was a great difference between "mislead" and "misinformed". I thought there was a big difference between them, but in checking the dictionary I find they mean approximately the same thing.

Some Hon. Members: Withdraw.

Madam Speaker: Now, the Hon. Member said that the Right Hon. the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) deliberately misinformed the House and I rule that that is unparliamentary, and I ask the Hon. Member if he would withdraw those words.

Mr. Nielsen: Kiss and make up.

Mr. Broadbent: Madam Speaker, another synonym is "distort", but I do not want to carry on with this linguistic game. The Prime Minister knows what he said, he knew what he attempted or did not attempt to do. If there was any suggestion that I breached parliamentary tradition, which is to show at least formal respect in this House for our political opponents, I would withdraw any words that give offence because I am interested in the truth.

MR. DEANS—REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION OF SPEAKER'S REMARKS

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, I have a very brief point of order I would like to raise. I wonder if I could ask you to review page 21286 of Hansard dated December 6, 1982 concerning an exchange on motion under S.O. 43 moved by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy). I would like to know clearly and exactly what is meant by the following words which are attributed to the Speaker:

> Order. I do want to remind the Hon. Member that I cannot put this motion to the House, because it seems to be out of order. It is not acceptable to refer to the absence from or the presence of Members in the House.

I want to be clear on the matter inasmuch as Citation 316 on page 103 of Beauchesne makes it quite clear, under Subsection (c), that a Member may not refer to the presence or absence of "specific" Members. In the case of the motion put by my colleague, he did not make reference to the absence or presence of specific Members.

Madam Speaker: Order. I have dealt with that matter. I am quite aware that the Standing Order deals with individual Members. Some of my predecessors have dealt with this problem and have indicated that since that particular Standing Order had not been used, I think since 1877 or something, it should probably be deleted. But I have dealt with the matter.

I do not think it is fair for Members to refer to the absence of other Members, implying that they were not doing their work. Members who are not in the House may be otherwise occupied with duties relating to their function as Members of Parliament and it is not proper to refer to their absence in this respect. Furthermore, the Hon. Member was reflecting on a vote of the House, and that, too, is not acceptable. I have dealt with that matter.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PRIVILEGE

MR. DE JONG—REMARKS OF MR. MCKNIGHT

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Madam Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. As reported on page 21422 of Hansard of December 9, 1982, the Hon. Member for Kindersley-Lloydminster (Mr. McKnight) rose on a point of order and questioned my motives in raising a matter relating to a decision of the Premier of Saskatchewan and one—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member is too late. The only time a Member can raise a question of privilege without notice is when the particular question of privilege flows from the debate of that very day. If the Hon. Member has a question of privilege he can give me written notice and a brief statement of what it is about, and then I will hear him.

POINT OR ORDER

MR. KRISTIANSEN—REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION OF SPEAKER'S REMARKS

Mr. Lyle S. Kristiansen (Kootenay West): Madam Speaker, I am seeking clarification regarding your answer to the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans). Simply clarification.

Mr. Malone: Sit down.

Mr. Kristiansen: Do you want to try it?

Madam Speaker: The clarification is that I have dealt with the matter.

PRIVILEGE

MR. MALONE—PROCEDURE RESPECTING TABLING OF DOCUMENTS

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Madam Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege, the necessary information about which I have just been able to acquire within the past half hour. I raise it because it deals with the way in which we table documents in the House of Commons and the process which took place yesterday which I believe is offensive to Members of Parliament.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. If it took place yesterday, the Hon. Member may raise it but he must give me written notice with a statement of what his question of privilege deals with. I will hear him then. But the Hon. Member may not spontaneously, in the way he is doing now, raise a question of privilege unless it flows from today's deliberations.

POINTS OF ORDER

MR. REID (ST. CATHARINES)—HENLEY REGATTA VENUE

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Madam Speaker, my point of order arises out of today's proceedings and concerns me as the Member for St. Catharines, the home of the Henley Regatta. The Minister was asked what justification there was for the moving of the centennial regatta from St. Catharines to Montreal. No Member of the Government responded. While I recognize that the Minister responsible for Fitness and Amateur Sport is in the other place, there should be a Member in this House to answer Members of this House.

• (1210)

Madam Speaker: That is an opinion which the Hon. Member is expressing. Ministers are not obligated to answer questions if they feel they do not want to. There is no way that the Speaker can intervene in order to force them to answer a question.

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, I want to inform the Hon. Member that the Minister who answers for sports in the House of Commons is the Minister of State for International Trade (Mr. Regan). Unfortunately, he was not in the House today because he was busy dealing with his responsibilities, but most often he is in this place. He will be pleased to answer questions related to sports in future.

MR. KRISTIANSEN—REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION OF SPEAKER'S REMARKS

Mr. Lyle S. Kristiansen (Kootenay West): Madam Speaker, this is not a new point of order, but I want to be clear on something. You gave a reply to the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) that leaves some of us in some wonderment about your exact meaning. In clarifying your previous ruling you suggested that there was an implication that Members may have been absent because they were not doing their jobs. Madam Speaker, it may be that on occasions of this sort the suggestion is that Members were doing their jobs, as they see them, by being absent.

For instance, in the case of their repeated mass desertions whenever the Government Party is in danger, it may be that Members of the Official Opposition feel that to be their duty. But—

Madam Speaker: I am sure the Hon. Member knows that he is not raising a point of order but is debating the question.

MR. BAKER (NEPEAN-CARLETON)—REMOVAL OF CHAIRMAN OF STANDING COMMITTEE ON MISCELLANEOUS ESTIMATES

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, my point of order concerns the recent unanimity with respect to the rules of the House of Commons, the work of the Special Committee, and the fact that the report was accepted unanimously in the House, in a spirit of goodwill. It also concerns the fact that yesterday, for some reason or other, the Government saw fit to engineer the removal of the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) as Chairman of the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates and even his removal as a Member of that Committee.

I want to raise this matter publicly and openly to say to Members of the Government and to you, Madam Speaker, that the spirit of unanimity and the importance we attach to committees as a result of it may well have been damaged. I would like to warn the Government and the House that we do not want that kind of thing to occur.

Madam Speaker: The Hon. Member may do that on the appropriate occasion if he wants to, but it is not a point of order. Furthermore, it is a matter that deals with committees. As Hon. Members know, the Speaker, not being present at deliberations of committees and not having anything to do with the formation of those committees, cannot deal with this question. There are forums where these questions can be dealt with and I would urge the Hon. Member to use them.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, just to follow the spirit of this matter, which clearly belongs to this House, I want to say that we are all concerned about the spirit of the reforms that were adopted. There has been a clear departure from that spirit of independence of committees that was part of the reform package adopted unanimously by all Members of the House not too long ago.

I should like to ask the Government House Leader if he is contemplating any other changes in the agreement reached by all Parties. The Government has already tarnished the question of the independence of committees of the House. Is there an intention, for example, to breach the agreement regarding the date on which that new agreement comes into effect, and is there an intention on the part of the Government to breach the date on which the House will meet in 1983? Are there any other intentions to breach the spirit of that all-Party Committee of which the House should be advised?

[Translation]

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, I do not think there was any breach on the part of the Government. I may draw the attention of the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark) to the Standing Order which relates to committees, and if he looks carefully at Section 65(2)—

[English]

—and Standing Order 65(4)(a), he would understand that everything that occurred in the Committee was proper. I have doubts about his sincerity. I should like to know if he was really talking about what happened in Committee. We do not ask questions about who removed the Hon. Member for Calgary North (Mr. Wright). In Committee it is a standing practice, according to the Standing Orders, that Members are changed from time to time, especially when they request a change.

MR. CULLEN—PROCEDURE RESPECTING PRESS INTERVIEWS

Hon. Bud Cullen (Sarnia-Lambton): Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order regarding a problem that keeps recurring. From time to time members of the press gallery, particularly those with cameras, are out in the front lobby. Every Member of Parliament has now received a letter from the president of the parliamentary press gallery explaining that interviews are still taking place and that they are held behind the lines indicated on the floor.

As a Member, I would like to know what the rules are. Are the people who do not have cameras allowed to do the interviews but those with cameras are not allowed? What is the situation?

Madam Speaker: This is a matter that could be more properly discussed with me in my office. I want to inform Hon. Members that I have canvassed the representatives of all caucuses and they have discussed this matter. Some new arrangements have been devised in order to allow the press to do its job. If Members do not agree with these particular measures, they can come and discuss them with me and I will be glad to hear what they have to say.

I am only trying to accommodate everyone. We thought we had devised something that would be adequate and convenient for everyone. If it is not, I am quite willing to look into it.

COMMUNICATIONS

REFERRAL TO STANDING COMMITTEE ON COMMUNICATIONS AND CULTURE REPORT ON CULTURAL POLICY

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Don Valley West (Mr. Bosley):

That the Report of the Federal Cultural Policy Review Committee, tabled in the House on November 16 of this year, be referred to the House Standing Committee on Communications and Culture.

[English]

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): Madam Speaker, I should like to indicate on behalf of this Party that since we have been seeking this reference since some time late in the summer, we of course wish to give our consent and to see the report moved to the committee as soon as possible.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the following question will be answered today: No. 4,365.

[Text]

STUDY OF MULTICULTURALISM PROGRAM

Question No. 4,365—Mr. Mazankowski:

1. Did the Secretary of State authorize an evaluation assessment study of the multicultural program and, if so (a) by whom was it performed and at what cost (b) what is the status of the study?

2. Did the study make any recommendations and, if so, what action did the Secretary of State take to implement them?

Hon. Jim Fleming (Minister of State (Multiculturalism)): 1. An evaluation of the multiculturalism program has been authorized as part of the Departmental five-year evaluation plan and scheduled for 1985-86. In planning for this evaluation, an evaluation assessment study was commissioned in order to develop (i) a definition of the program evaluation component, (ii) a program component profile, (iii) a report on formal structure and resources, (iv) an evaluation assessment and (v) terms of reference for data collection to assist a future evaluation.

(a) The evaluation assessment study is being performed by RES Policy Research Inc. at a cost of $44,610. (b) The study is in progress. The Department anticipates completion of this study by the end of 1982.

2. The study has not been completed and therefore there are no recommendations at this time.

STARRED QUESTION

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, would you be so kind as to call starred question No. 3,747?

*BOOKLET "STANDARDS OF CONDUCT"

Question No. 3,747—Miss MacDonald:

1. Does the "Standards of Conduct" booklet issued to taxation employees by the Department of National Revenue have any legal status and, if so, what is it?

2. Was this directive the subject of negotiation between government management officials and members of any Public Service union or the national joint council?

3. Who defined the section of the directive referring to "public statements" and does this restrict employees from publicly expressing views on any government program or policy?

4. How does the directive correlate with Section 2 of the Charter of Rights, which guarantees freedom of speech as a basic fundamental right that all Canadians enjoy?

5. To whom do the standards of conduct apply, other than to employees of the Department?

[English]

Mr. Garnet M. Bloomfield (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, I am replying to a number of questions by the Hon. Member as follows:

1. The "Standards of Conduct" booklet was prepared pursuant to legal authority. Section 7 of the Financial Administration Act gives Treasury Board the authority to establish conditions of employment and the right to delegate to deputy heads of departments that authority.

Pursuant to Section 106 of the Public Service Terms and Conditions of Employment Regulations, Treasury Board has delegated to deputy heads of departments the authority to establish standards of discipline.

2. The "Standards of Conduct" booklet was not the subject of negotiation between Government management officials and members of any Public Service union or the National Joint Council. However, it was the subject of consultation with the taxation component of the Public Service Alliance of Canada.

3. The current "Standards of Conduct" booklet does not deal with the subject of "public statements".

4. I suggest the Hon. Member refer to the answer I have just given in 3.

5. The standards of conduct of National Revenue, Taxation, apply to employees of National Revenue, Taxation.

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Madam Speaker: Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

OLD AGE SECURITY ACT (NO. 2)

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Tuesday, November 30, consideration of the motion of Miss Bégin that Bill C-131, an Act to amend the Old Age Security Act (No. 2), be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Mr. Speaker, we are debating Bill C-131 today. It is a Bill to reduce old age pensions by allowing for indexing of only 6 per cent for Old Age Security this year and 5 per cent next year; hardly the rate of inflation which is well over 10 per cent. Even the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) stated her agreement at the National Pension Conference when she said:

> Pensions which are not protected against inflation naturally tend to dwindle over the years. People who thought they had purchased protection for the rest of their lives find they have more serious financial problems the older they become.

With inflation as it is, I am shocked that the Government can even consider restraining the already limited income of senior citizens and further adding to their financial burdens.

It would seem to me that our older population is not being given the consideration they have earned. Due to the fact that we had 2,360,975 senior citizens living in Canada in 1981 and that this number is increasing at the rate of 3 per cent per year, I feel it necessary that action be taken immediately to ensure that the voices of our senior citizens are heard. It is important that they be easily able to inform us of their thoughts and concerns, as well as share with us their collective experience and judgment, which might better enable us to deal more effectively with their problems.

Therefore, I am proposing that a Senior Citizens' parliament be formed, similar to that of the very successful Canadian Youth Parliament and based upon the same idea as the organization established in Florida, namely the Silver-Haired Legislature. A number of articles have been written in the Manitoba "Seniors Journal" by Mr. H. W. Brown of Winnipeg on this very subject.

The State of Florida Silver-Haired Legislature was commenced some years ago, and at least ten other States are in the organizing stage of similar legislatures. The successful attempt to convince various groups of the need for such an organization was brought forward by the identification of what was perceived to be important and necessary concerns for the over-all and ultimate well-being of older adults. Promotion, public information and the mass media brought to the public interest the potential of such a seniors' lobby. Funded through the Older Americans Act, the first Silver-Haired Legislature was organized and co-ordinated by the Department of Health and Rehabilitative Services, Office of Aging and Adult Services, and co-sponsored by the League of Women Voters and Florida State University. Responsibility for monitoring and administering the over-all operation of this legislature lies within the structure of the State Office of Aging and Adult Services. Personnel of the various area and local programs were convinced of the value of the Silver-Haired Legislature and trained to organize the necessary tasks for electing persons to the legislature.

The following goals reflect the intent of implementing the Silver-Haired Legislature:

> (a) To provide an educational opportunity for the elderly to learn through participation in legislative activities.
> (b) To increase the level of participation and involvement of retired professionals that may have no prior or continuing contact with older adult programs.
> (c) To develop a collective awareness among older persons with regard to needs, issues and policies that are of concern to themselves and their age cohorts.
>
> (d) To stimulate community organization involvement with groups of older adults, and
> (e) To provide a stronger base for influencing policy which reflects the self-perceived needs of the older population.

We will all be part of the Silver-Haired Legislature sooner or later. Not all of us; as I look around the Chamber I see that some still have a bit of brown hair.

Miss MacDonald: You missed the Hon. Member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon).

Mr. McKenzie: Yes, and some have no hair.

Mr. McKinnon: Why have I been left out of this legislation?

Mr. McKenzie: Because of the increasing number of senior citizens in Canada, we are certainly not at a loss for people to become involved in such a plan. For example, the National Pensioners and Senior Citizens Federation is comprised of more than 400,000 members. In my own riding alone, we have the St. Andrews Over 60 Group, the 1600 Recreation Club, the Boulton Bay Seniors Association, the Sturgeon Creekers Over 60 Club, the Hamilton House Recreation Club, the Hendon Avenue Residents Tenants Society, and the Carefree Curling and Recreation Association. They are only a few of the many seniors' groups which could become active in such a mini-parliament.

One group which comes to mind is the Rail Pensioners organization. There has never been a group in Canada which has been treated so shabbily by successive Liberal Governments; they have been given the runaround for years. The group could certainly become part of a senior citizens' parliament to explain how they have been shabbily treated and have received a mere pittance each year in terms of increases in their pensions.

Every Senior citizens' organization across Canada could elect a representative who would meet as often as necessary with other elected Seniors under one umbrella. They could discuss the obstacles being encountered by the older population and their solutions and then collectively make representation to the federal Government. This parliament would not only have the power of recommendation but would undoubtedly tend to influence public opinion, as well as hopefully make the Government more aware of its concerns, problems and needs which are now, particularly today, being so carelessly overlooked.

Legislative successes in the State of Florida are indicative of the effectiveness of a self-advocacy model. Furthermore, this approach provides an opportunity for the implementation and expansion of the political input of the elderly. The presence of a potential age-related backlash could be offset by an awareness of community issues which include those issues confronting older adults.

An immediate example would be the issue which we are discussing now, that of Bill C-131. Certainly the increased visibility of the issues facing the older adult population specifically can serve to reduce the misconceptions of the community at large which might result in a hesitancy to support policies affecting the elderly.

In Florida the successes of the Silver-Haired Legislature delegates include the funding of bills for community care for the elderly and recommended the spending of $11.8 million which was increased by the Legislature to $13.2 million. A Silver-Haired Legislature bill mandating Medicaid payments for eye glasses, hearing aids and dentures recommended $3 million, and this was raised to $5 million by the Legislature. A Silver-Haired Legislature in Canada could recommend spending authority, but that would probably be the extent of it. With the urging of the SHL, the Legislature allocated $2.5 million to help with transportation for the elderly and handicapped. Hospital cost containment was taken up by the regular Legislature, and a special committee on aging was created. A recommendation that seniors be nominated to advisory boards resulted in seniors being appointed to at least five State-wide boards.

It is fairly evident that the Florida experiment has been highly valuable to seniors, the general public, advisory boards and the State Legislature. Therefore, I would ask that the Government take into consideration my proposal, as I am sure it could be as successful here in Canada and invaluable when we in the House of Commons debate subjects such as Bill C-131, which is only one issue, if passed, that will drastically affect the lives of Canadian senior citizens.

We have just received this document from the Government which is entitled "Better Pensions for Canadians". In the Foreword we find these words:

> Many Canadians have expressed concern over the adequacy and fairness of the retirement income system. In response to these concerns, the Government of Canada is putting forward for discussion and debate a number of proposals for reform. These proposals will be referred to a Parliamentary Committee, where all interested parties and the public at large will have the opportunity to express their views.

The establishment of a senior citizens' parliament might be the way to do this. These comments continue:

> Consultations must be as broad and effective as possible in the revision and improvement of Government policies.

That, of course, would fall in line with the formation of a senior citizens' parliament which would meet, say, on an annual basis or twice a year to discuss problems and make presentations to the Government.

It has always been Progressive Conservative policy to maintain the quality of life on retirement, Mr. Speaker. Therefore, so that we can spend time studying the recent report "Better Pensions for Canadians" before we start cutting any more old age pensions, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker):

> That the motion be amended by deleting all the words after the word "That" and substituting the following therefor:
> "Bill C-131, an Act to amend the Old Age Security Act (No. 2), be not now read a second time but that it be read a second time this day six months hence".

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that this should receive the approval of the House.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): In order to assist the House, the Chair declares that the six-months' hoist is in order.

Mr. McKenzie: Mr. Speaker, that concludes my remarks.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I do not frequently speak on this subject in this House because my friend and colleague, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), who has been here for almost 40 years, has made hundreds, if not thousands, of speeches and asked questions about old age pensions. To a large extent I felt I could leave the subject to him, but because of the fact that he has not been well and is not able to participate in this debate today, I thought I would try to do the best I could to put the case against the proposals in this Bill as he would have done.

It is interesting and somewhat significant that we are debating and will vote on this Bill today, a day after the Government, through the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin), finally, and very belatedly, tabled its green paper on pension reform. In the last two years there have been 15 major studies on pension reform. These have been done by groups appointed by the federal Government, by some provincial Governments, by trade unions and by business. Yet here we are debating a Bill that will limit the increases old age pensioners will get. These increases will be limited to 6 per cent this year and 5 per cent next year. Yet the green paper makes it very clear, as does the Minister, that there is much wrong with the pension system as we have it, and that so many people are dealt with in a miserly niggardly way.

In the Minister's press release of yesterday when she tabled the green paper, she said, in part:

> Reform of the pension system is important because there are serious deficiencies relating to coverage, inflation protection, portability and the treatment of women. As a result, many Canadians face a significant decline in living standards on retirement due to inadequate pension incomes.

Having said that yesterday, the Minister today brings forward a Bill which will reduce the protection which our old age pensioners had against the increased cost of living.

There are blatant contradictions between the public declarations which this Minister has made over the years and her actions in the House sponsoring what we consider to be a repugnant and despicable piece of legislation. We condemn that.

While the Minister bemoans the lack of inflation protection and said that "women suffer most from deficiencies in the current pension system", she sponsors this Bill which cuts inflation protection and the already meagre stipends that over 100,000 elderly Canadians, the majority of them women, exist on. While piously declaring herself for pension reform, the Minister of National Health and Welfare puts before us legislation to erode a system which she herself has stated again and again is inadequate.

The Government argues that any loss in Old Age Security will be made up by an adjustment in the Guaranteed Income Supplement. If an individual receives $6,123 or more in outside income—perhaps in savings—this individual is disqualified from receiving GIS. The individual would receive $3,058 per annum from OAS, and his or her outside income, making a total as low as $9,200 a year. What these individuals are receiving from the Minister is a kick in the teeth, not pension reform.

The National Council on Welfare estimates that over 100,000 of Canada's elderly citizens "fall through the cracks this way". In cities such as Toronto, they would exist at a level 37 per cent below the officially recognized poverty line. In rural areas Canada's elderly citizens exist at a level 15 per cent below the officially recognized poverty line.

The United Church of Canada commissioned a report recently entitled "Income Security". We find in this report the following:

> It would seem that increases in the OAS, the GIS, and provincial supplements may have been sufficient to move many older couples from the "poor" to the "near-poor" category, but leaving a large number of single elderly people below the poverty line. All in all, the elderly make up a very large portion of the "poor" and "near-poor" group in this country.

Why, then, does the Minister attack the elderly poor? On June 29, 1982 the Minister stated that measures in the budget, now contained in the Bill before us, "fully protect the lowest income Canadians and the working poor". Only those who are not in need will be asked to share in serious sacrifices which are required to bring our country out of the economic crisis, she said.

Is the Minister not by her own admission attacking those she purports to want to aid? How does she expect Members in this House or the people who are now receiving Old Age Security to take her seriously? Through the Bill before us, Bill C-131, the Minister of National Health and Welfare is attacking the very group which she has vowed will be protected.

Let me quote from a speech which the Minister made to the Men's Club of Vancouver in November, 1980. She said:

• (1240)

> We have too many retired Canadians who find themselves living below or near the poverty line ... Can you imagine if 53 per cent of the total population in Canada under age 65 had to rely on Government welfare payments to survive? That would be shocking, shameful and economically disastrous. Why is it we ask this for our pensioners?

We say why indeed. What is the argument for bringing forth the proposals in this Bill? Supposedly to save an estimated $105 million a year, the Minister is cutting the already meagre welfare payments to the elderly poor. She does this by arguing that restraint is needed during the current recession.

The Liberal Government, of which this Minister is one of the key Ministers in its strategy for recovery, if there is one at all, is to put money in the hands of the rich for increased investment. Changes announced by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) in October, recommended to him by his blue ribbon committee on taxation, and changes which he will bring forward next week in his income tax Bill, will offer $750 million in tax breaks for the first year and $1.5 billion in the second year to Canada's wealthiest citizens.

How can the Minister of National Health and Welfare, who proclaims that she is the champion of justice in social programs in Canada, support such a policy? Where is her personal integrity? The Minister states that pension reform "is the highest social policy priority of the Government today".

I have tried in the years I have been here not to deal in personalities, but I have to say to the Minister, and I wish she were here, that we in the New Democratic Party, and I believe this would be true of old age pensioners, are bitterly disappointed in her. This Minister has frequently spoken about the needs of the old age citizens, the needs of the poor and the desirability and importance of maintaining our health care system, yet she is involved in cutting back on old age pensions and income security programs. We will see in the next year this Minister, through the federal Government and with the co-operation of the provincial Governments, cutting back on medical and hospital insurance.

We expected a great deal more from this Minister. In my opinion, if this Minister really believed what she has been preaching for the last couple of years, she would have resigned when the Government brought forward this kind of legislation.

This Bill will affect all those who now receive Old Age Security. That was 2.4 million people in 1981, of whom 57 per cent were women, many single or widowed. The argument has been advanced, and I say this in a cynical way, that in absolute terms the reductions in income as a result of the implementation of this Bill will be small. That is not true. It will seriously affect those who do not qualify for the Guaranteed Income Supplement and whose outside income does not provide them with adequate support.

Even a cursory examination of the facts reveals the weakness of the argument that the implementation of this Bill will affect only a relatively small amount of people. After all, prices are always relative to income. In a world of double-digit inflation, even the smallest cuts in income are debilitating for the elderly living in poverty.

More than 100,000 people will have the indexation of their pensions capped at 6 and 5 per cent, and suffer because they do not receive GIS. They are being told that they will not be affected. However, the cost of living is still rising by 10 per cent. The Government's argument that by the summer of next year it will be down to 6 per cent is a specious argument. It will not happen. All the evidence is that the cost of living will be running at something like 9 per cent next summer. Those who have their old age pension increase capped at 6 per cent will have a reduction in their already too low standard of living of between 3 and 4 per cent.

We estimate that this Bill will cost those who depend on OAS $77 in 1983 and $220 in 1984, in total approximately $300 in the next 24 months. This is a piddling amount for this Liberal Government but a very significant amount for the 1.2 million Canadian senior citizens who depend on OAS to sustain themselves.

In the rush to apply six and five to all sectors of the economy, has the Government not forgotten its priorities and ignored the history of social welfare in Canada? While the Government will be niggardly with the incomes of those struggling to maintain their dignity and a decent standard of living in their old age, it has no compunction in allowing price increases well over their six and five guidelines for other sectors of the economy.

Let me give a few examples. In the summer of 1982, rent increases in Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation-owned housing projects in my Province were allowed of 16.4 per cent. The Ottawa-Alberta energy pricing agreement will increase the price of gasoline and home heating oil by 20 per cent or more for each of the next two years. In September, 1982 TransCanada PipeLines received, with the approval of the federal Cabinet, an increase of 16 per cent in natural gas transportation charges. That provides an average rate of return for the shareholders of 15.4 per cent. Shareholders can get 15.4 per cent, but old age pensioners will have their increases capped at six and five per cent.

In September of this year the excise tax on beer, wine, liquor and cigarettes was raised by 15 per cent by the federal Government. In October, 1982 the Government announced that unemployment premiums will go up by 39 per cent.

The Government overlooks the long-term effects of cutting indexation to six and five. This cuts the base on which further indexing will be calculated after 1984. That will be true only if we assume that the Government will go back to full indexing in 1984.

Once having breached the principle we have lived with for a number of years, that old age pensions and the Canada Pension would be increased quarterly by the amount that the cost of living goes up, having said that no matter how much the cost of living goes up the increase in indexation will be kept to six and five per cent, what assurance do the old age pensioners have that in 1984, given that we may still be in a recession, the Government will not say that it is going to continue to cap indexation? What assurance is there that any Government might not say that the economy is so bad and Government revenues so low that indexation could be done away with altogether? This is indeed a very serious step.

I indicated earlier that we are discussing a reduction of $300 in the next two years in the amount that old age pensioners receive. If and when indexation begins at the full rate in 1984, the base on which the indexation will begin will be $300 less than it would have been. That means that all increases from then on will be based on a lower amount than they should have been. Therefore, what we are talking of concerning old age pensioners is not a reduction of $300 in their pensions. We are talking of a reduction in the life span of the old age pensioners because, after all, they will live 20 or more years after they begin to receive their pensions. We are talking of a reduction in real money to old age pensioners running into the hundreds of millions of dollars.

With the cut to 6 per cent in the increase in OAS in 1983, and generously assuming some reduction in the rate of inflation, there will be a reduction in real income of 5 per cent and more in future years for our pensioners. We have estimated that, realistically, the loss to the elderly in the next four years will not be $300, but rather $900.

The elderly are unjustly the victims of what has become a Government campaign of promising pension reform, as it did in the green paper tabled yesterday, while in fact it is eroding the fundamental basis of Canada's social security system. Old Age Security is one of the pillars of Canada's social security system. It represents 65 per cent of the income of the elderly from combined Old Age Security, Guaranteed Income Supplement, and the Canada Pension Plan or Quebec Pension Plan. From its inception in 1952 when the Old Age Security pension represented 17 per cent of the average industrial wage, the Old Age Security benefit has now been allowed to slip until it represents barely 13.5 per cent of the average industrial wage, amounting to a loss, in just a few years, of 20 per cent.

When the Old Age Security Program was enacted in 1951, after work done for many years in this House by Hon. Members of my Party, like the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre, by organizations such as the Canadian Welfare Council and the Canadian Labour Congress, it was a major achievement because we thought then that we had gone a long way toward abolishing the humiliation which had been part of the old pension system, the means test, which characterized the antiquated and limiting plans which preceded the open and universal program embodied in the Old Age Security Program.

In this Bill with which we are dealing today, the Government is asking the 2.4 million elderly Canadians to take a cut in benefits, but, further, it moves the whole social security program a few more paces back to the days when proud and dignified elderly citizens were required to submit to the means test. Why, Mr. Speaker? Because this Bill assumes that those who really need it can get the means tested Guaranteed Income Supplement. The Guaranteed Income Supplement has been excluded from the six and five limitations on the basis that it is more equitable to do so. This is part of the campaign which puts more and more emphasis on the means tested GIS as the basis for the whole system of social security.

The GIS was introduced in 1966 to assist pensioners with little or no income. However, OAS was to act as a bridge until the Canada Pension Plan had ripened sufficiently. In this Bill, the Government justifies cutting OAS by putting more weight on GIS to select a program.

We have fought for a long time so that universal old age pensions providing a decent living standard would be considered a right for all elderly Canadians, not a welfare program or not a gift. The fact is that people, particularly the elderly, will use a program much more when it is open to everyone. When a program is organized on a welfare basis, which we consider the GIS to be in part, requiring those who can participate to undergo a means test, it is clear that fewer will participate. The fact that over half of the 2.4 million Canadian pensioners are GIS recipients speaks for the Government's record on this issue. That fact alone demonstrates how many of our senior citizens are living in poverty. The latest statistics show that, of all individuals aged 65 years and over, almost 75 per cent have incomes under $10,000. The average income for this group is $9,280 a year. This includes Old Age Security benefits as well.

After the June budget, when the Bill was first announced the Minister of National Health and Welfare claimed that the budget "fully protects the lowest income Canadians and the working poor". She said that "only persons who are not in need will be asked to share in the serious sacrifices which are required to bring our country out of the economic crisis". I can only assume that the Minister, in presenting this piece of legislation, did not realize its full impact on the lives of elderly Canadians.

We say that the Government should withdraw the Bill. We expected a great deal more from the Minister. We say that if this country is in a recession, which it is, if sacrifices must be made, the sacrifices should be made by those people who can afford it, those people in the higher income brackets, those thousands of people who have incomes of $50,000 and $100,000 a year and pay no income tax at all because of the loopholes which are built into the income tax system as we have it.

Therefore, we say that if we must call on Canadians to make sacrifices, the last people upon whom we should call are retired Canadians who have contributed so much to building up the greatness of this country. They are the last people who should be called upon to make these sacrifices and, for that reason, we propose to vote against the bill.

Mr. Jack Masters (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if, given the hour, I may call it one o'clock and continue at 2:00 p.m. Do I have the agreement of the House?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): It seems that the House agrees to that suggestion.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. When the House rose at one o'clock, the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay-Nipigon (Mr. Masters) had the floor.

Mr. Masters: Mr. Speaker, I would like to begin my intervention on the subject of Bill C-131, an amendment to the Old Age Security Act, by mentioning my mother. She is a senior citizen, and I hope I am a dutiful son to her. Her means are modest as is the case with so many senior citizens today. I mention my mother not to garner sympathy or to make my speech different from any other, but only to underline the point that when we debate issues like this, so often it becomes "they".

Everything we do in this House really relates to people, both collectively and in a general sense. Not only do we have to think in terms of helping the most people most of the time, but in order to arrive at our decisions to do certain things in this House we have to remember that what we decide to do has an effect on individuals, because all of those broad "theys" are just a collection of individual people.

Somehow when we get into an extremely important subject such as this, it would seem that Members opposite suddenly garner the market on compassion and on understanding and really feel that we, the big bad Liberals and those that support the Government of the day, somehow have lost our mothers, our sons and our daughters. I submit that it takes a great deal of courage for a Government to introduce and support this kind of legislation, because if you take it out of context as one single act, yes, it becomes an unfair practice.

What we are really discussing in Bill C-131 is an amendment to the Old Age Security Act. We are saying that this is a necessary piece of legislation that is part of a broad range of programs designed to help all Canadians, and especially those senior citizens who have given so much to this country. What we are talking about is putting a cap on an increase. I do not think we should ever forget the fact that we are still talking, both in this piece of legislation and related pieces of legislation, about capping an increase. That is what is happening in this instance, but there is still further money to come.

In its wisdom the Government in this Bill has said to those of our citizens who are really going to be hurt the most: We understand your plight. We understand that this is their sole means of livelihood. We will do the best we can with limited funds and will maintain the status quo, and in fact do a little bit better for those people who are receiving the supplement. That is not the act of people who are not thinking, who lack compassion or understanding.

As always when we debate these points, one wonders about the information going around. I have heard all kinds of figures about what the actual dollar cost to the senior citizen might be. They range, from our side of the house, from $29 in 1983 and $52 in 1984 to figures conjured up on the other side which go as high as $900 over five or six years. I think we have to think about what is really being said. In effect, Hon. Members, without thinking, are saying, "We don't think that inflation will come down". That is what this is all about. The Hon. Member nods, "Yes, that's what we're saying". But may I just respectfully suggest to all of us in this House that if we, as Parliamentarians, do not believe that inflation will come down, do we not then fuel in our own way the expectations of Canadians of more inflation and not less? I might add, Mr. Speaker, that the trends of the moment indicate that in reality inflation is coming down. As inflation comes down, current projections show that in reality there may not even be a modest change in that capping of senior citizens' pensions, and they will at least maintain the level they are at now because inflation will hit that 6 per cent level.

Some very dear senior citizens I know have wondered why Members of Parliament, and other leaders in whatever part of society, do not concentrate more on encouraging businessmen to bring prices down. Then their dollar would be worth more and they would not be doing too badly. Senior citizens are saying, "You people in the labour movement, or in the work force in general, please consider, if you bring your expectations down just a little bit more, if you accept a little bit less, then we collectively as a nation gain and we won't have to get into this kind of legislation or greater controls somewhere down the line".

This Bill is a part of a package that no one is happy with, including my mother, but they recognize that it is part of a program which is trying to set an example whereby all of us can find a vehicle, if you will, in which to participate in a very important and necessary fight, and this is the fight to bring down inflation.

In this season of goodwill perhaps more Canadians should say, "Wait a minute. I think for a change I will truly think of my fellow man. Maybe I will be more careful in how I comment on the restraint of inflation. I will reconsider how I will gear my expectations for the future, how I will direct my thoughts toward wage increases, and so on, and I will consider that we collectively caused the problem and we can collectively solve the problem."

There is something else which the senior citizens of this country, and particularly my riding, recognize, Mr. Speaker, and that is that their sons, daughters and grandchildren have a right to expect something in the future. Many of the thoughtful senior citizens say, "We will, albeit it reluctantly, join in this fight against inflation. We will join in this fight to stabilize Canada not only for the sake of ourselves but for our children and grandchildren." I believe it is an accurate perception that senior citizens think of their children and grandchildren even more than we do in our sort of central sector of life. They want to make sure their grandchildren also have a place in the sun.

I believe also we have to stop and think about introducing this kind of legislation from a political point of view. It is dynamite, because nothing can turn people on more, and no better Brownie points politically, in the crassest sense, can be garnered, than when you start speaking of widows, orphans and children. But I believe that thoughtful Canadians recognize that no Government of any Party would introduce this kind of legislation unless it was being very thoughtful and responsible.

It is not an easy thing to do, nor is it easy to stand in my place today, Mr. Speaker, and support this kind of legislation. I would not do it if I did not really believe that all of us collectively have to do something more to bring down inflation in order to make this a better country in which to live and to give all citizens a chance to participate more equally in its bounty. If this involves taking another look at programs, to be consistent, such as the Old Age Security Act and many others, then I say I do not want to do it; but I have done a lot of things in my life I did not want to do because it was the responsible thing to do, because it was necessary.

As I said on an earlier occasion, Mr. Speaker, I would really hate to think that all of these things will go for naught. We in this House have a larger responsibility than just getting elected the next time, or forming the Government the next time, and that is to keep this country on an even keel, to bring inflation down for the short term, the medium term and, what is even more important, the long term.

Hon. Members opposite have as much information as we on this side, or anyone else in the country, as to world-wide conditions in regards to productivity, what inflation rates are elsewhere, and what we have to do to compete in a world-wide situation because we belong on the same planet with these other countries. Members opposite know that. Therefore, they know this is not a trivial fight, this fight against inflation. It is an essential fight. We may be going to pull out of it now. People are uniting in a more meaningful way. We are beginning to move, all too slowly perhaps, but in a more positive direction. We have to accelerate that move and we also have to put ourselves in a position where we can say to the people of Canada, who also pay to help support our senior citizens whom we dearly love and are so proud of, that they will be in a position tomorrow to do even better. We can compete with anyone in the world, and we can do it well; but we cannot do this if Hon. Members opposite, I do not say deliberately, keep fueling these negative thoughts and expectations. If they keep saying day in and day out that there is no way inflation will come down, some sectors of the population will begin to believe they are right. And if they believe inflation is going to go up, maybe they would feel they should have a little bit more just in case, whereas in reality they should be saying collectively, "No, we don't like to take measures like this. We wish they weren't necessary but, by golly, it's a start."

If we all join in the fight collectively and sincerely, I think we can in fact bring down the inflation rate and can say to the senior citizens of this country, "We haven't been able to give you all you would like, or perhaps all we would like to give you, but you haven't lost ground because inflation did come down and your dollar is worth more". So that 6 per cent increase—it is an increase and I wish people would keep that in mind—is still realistic in these times.

So, Mr. Speaker, as I said at the beginning, I too have a mother. I am also just old enough to remember the Depression years. That has been brought into the debates of late a great deal as though only one side of the House knew anything about the Depression or about living in houses that were lit by kerosene lamps and all that sort of thing. I too have had my share of that and I have not forgotten; but I think I will be able to vote for this Bill, not because I want to see less in any way, at any time ever, go to our senior citizens, and not just because I want to see this as a positive step towards pension reform so we solve the ongoing problem of how we look after our people as they get older, but I will be able to vote with a clear conscience because I have thought it out and feel honestly that I have supported a measure which is absolutely necessary as part of a total package to bring down inflation, help restore confidence of Canadians and others in our country, so that we look after the immediate future and do the very large job of setting the stage for tomorrow.

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I thought I was dreaming when I listened to the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay-Nipigon (Mr. Masters) telling us about his mother. If he can tell us today that he is going to phone his mother tomorrow or tonight and say, "Mother, I voted to cap the indexing on your pension", and she does not slap his wrists or something more serious, Mr. Speaker, then I will be very surprised.

Mr. Rose: He knee-capped her.

Mr. Clarke: Maybe she will knee-cap him, Mr. Speaker.

I listened in amazement to a Member from the Government Party trying to tell this House that inflation is coming down and that we should not be the ones to go around saying that inflation is going to stay up. If his Party believes what he said today, there would not be any need for this Bill because the pensions would be automatically capped at the rate of inflation. So what the Government is telling us today is that there is no way we can expect inflation to fall from 11 per cent to anything approaching 6 per cent or 7 per cent. Well, I believe that, Mr. Speaker, because the Government has not shown any responsible actions which will in any way ever attack the problem of inflation. The Government told us that ten years ago. The Hon. Member for Sarnia-Lambton (Mr. Cullen) smiles. He was here ten years ago and must have laughed when the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said that he was wrestling inflation to the ground.

Mr. Cullen: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I was sent a message by the Hon. Member across the way and I was smiling at that. However, I think I should remind the Hon. Member that when the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said he was wresting inflation to the ground, wrestling is always two out of three falls.

Mr. Rose: Which one is he on now?

Mr. Clarke: Well, now I am smiling, Mr. Speaker, at the Hon. Member for Sarnia-Lambton. He was here ten years ago when his Government first admitted that inflation was out of control and indexing had to be brought in to protect the taxpayers, pensioners and all sorts of people against the ravages of inflation. Now they say, "Well, inflation is coming down anyway, so we do not need it". But here we have this legislation. Well, Mr. Speaker, that certainly is not the attitude we on this side of the House take when we look at a serious Bill like this one.

As I add a few words to the debate on Bill C-131, I have to ask myself why is this the last day of the debate? Why do we have this limited debate? The Government says it is an important Bill and it has to go through in a hurry, but we note the Government waited about four of five weeks from the date it was first introduced in the House until it was brought to the floor for debate. I suggest the reason is that the Government does not want the message to get out across the country. It is well known around here that short debates are not generally noticed across the country.

Mr. Cullen: Want to bet?

Mr. Clarke: If we do not have a long, protracted debate, then the news is going to be on something else and people out there will not know what the debate was all about. I think the Parliamentary Secretary said there were 23 contributors to the debate, five from the Government side and obviously 18 from both Opposition Parties. We could ask why were there only five Liberals addressing the issues in this Bill. I suggest it was because the others were afraid—or ashamed, as the Hon. Member for Mission-Port Moody (Mr. Rose) says. They were afraid to be seen to be eager to penalize pensioners.

Why were there so many speakers, relatively speaking, on this side? I am not admitting that 18 is a large number at all. Because people on this side know that the message has to get out and we have to have some kind of debate on a matter of deep principle which this debate involves. The House Leaders of both Parties on this side have said that we are opposed to this Bill, and what better way to show our opposition than to have a number of speakers get up and debate the issue and get the message out to the public.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Hear, hear!

Mr. Clarke: Mr. Speaker, the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Smith) told us, with some pride I thought, that we had already had eight and a half hours of debate on this Bill and today we are probably going to get two or three more. Well, that is 11 hours. Now, is 11 hours too much? Would 21 hours or 31 hours be too much debate on a Bill which changes a very serious principle which was entrenched by this Parliament about ten years ago, that of indexing? We might also ask how many debating hours there has been between the time the Bill was introduced on October 28 and when the debate started, or even up until now.

I said this was an entrenched principle, Mr. Speaker, and to put that into perspective. I want to refer to the remarks of the Prime Minister from just last year—not a decade ago, but just last year—at the National Pension Conference. I am quoting from his opening remarks:

> Put simply, people must be protected in their retirement years. The Canadian Government has pledged that they will be better protected in the future than they are now. Pensions which are not protected against inflation naturally tend to dwindle over the years. People who thought they had purchased protection for the rest of their lives find that they have more serious financial problems the older they become.

That last sentence, of course, refers not to the old age pension but to contributory pensions. But the seniors of this country believe that they have contributed to the welfare and the coffers of this country and have purchased the protection promised to them by their Government. The Prime Minister went on in that same paragraph to say:

> The unfairness of that situation . . . is not tolerable in a nation which believes in social justice.

Well, Mr. Speaker, we have heard our Prime Minister tell us that the land is strong and we have heard him talk about the just society, and now we have heard what he said about pensioners. That was said 1981, it is now 1982, and what is he doing? Has he changed his principles? Has he changed his mind? I do not know. Now he is asking the pensioners of this country to take a cut in purchasing power—not in numbers of dollars but in purchasing power—which they can ill afford.

I think we can go back to the original concept when indexing was entrenched in the legislation of this country and ask why we had indexing in the first place. The reason we had indexing was that inflation was found to be robbing seniors because of Government action. As Government action was robbing seniors of their purchasing power, the Government and Parliament thought they should take it upon themselves to restore that purchasing power. For nearly a decade, because the Government has seen fit to do nothing effective about the problem of inflation, we have had indexing in order to give seniors some measure of protection. It cannot be said that they are getting total protection from the ravages of inflation because of the way the consumer price index is calculated, which is not reflected in the living habits of all groups. Those on low income spend a greater proportion of that income on the necessities of life which are given a certain rating in the index.

We must consider who is going to suffer as a result of the proposition put forward today. Since the Guaranteed Income Supplement will be increased to cover the loss of the pension increase by those who receive the Guaranteed Income Supplement, I suppose we could say that only those with an income of over $8,912.40 will be affected. Let us round out that to $9,000. Every pensioner who has an income over $9,000 will have that income cut by about $3.40 in each of the first three months of 1983. That does not represent a lot of money to the Government but the increase to the pensioner will be cut from 11.5 to 6 per cent. That is quite a large percentage of the total pension income.

The Hon. Member for Northumberland (Mr. Hees) and the Hon. Member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling) both receive the old age pension and it will be cut. But they receive a salary as well, Mr. Speaker. There are thousands of pensioners with incomes of well over $9,000 who will not mind cutting back and giving up some pension. But that does not take away from the fact that it is a right and something that Parliament made a bargain on. It is something that Canadians should be able to rely on.

The Prime Minister talked about trust in one of his television speeches. How can he expect taxpayers and senior citizens to trust anyone here when the Government pulls tricks like this one?

Anyone who earns over $9,000 is not rich. Those who earn $10,000 will suffer more proportionately than the person whose income is $30,000. Should the cut come at $11,000? It is impossible to say. That is why the program should not have been adjusted the way the Government is trying to do it. It will make only a small dent in its huge deficit problem anyway.

I mentioned the $3 loss for the first three months of 1983 that will be incurred by pensioners on a cumulative basis. I have not figured out how much the total loss will be by the end of 1985 when indexing will be restored. That is not the whole problem, of course. The loss suffered by pensioners for those two years will carry on for the rest of their lives. The younger pensioners, those who can expect to live longer, will suffer more as the effects of the program accumulate.

I do not think many Members of the House would argue against the over-all restraint program. Six and five is good in certain ways. I think we must ask ourselves if the program is a good measure when it attacks the incomes of our senior citizens, those who can least protect themselves and the people who need to spend their money. The restraint program is good in so far as it will control Government expenditures and reduce Government deficits.

One of the things that we need in order to get the economy rolling again is to have more people investing and spending money. That helps to create jobs, to create multipliers and so on. It is well known that senior citizens, those with low incomes, spend it all. Every dollar the Government pulls out of the pension program will mean that one dollar less will circulate to improve the economy.

This Bill is a short-sighted action which may contribute a little bit to the solution of the Government's over-all problems. It is a niggardly action. It is directed at the wrong people in Canada. If it is successful in helping with the Government's program, then the seniors of Canada will not thank the government for it.

Mr. David Weatherhead (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry that I have not had a chance to listen to all the contributions to this debate on Bill C-131 but I have listened to the last two speakers.

I am pleased to take part in the debate this afternoon. This Bill gives us an opportunity not only to discuss the success of the Government's six and five program but it also gives us an opportunity to show the good record of this Party in dealing with seniors over the last 30 years, if not more. In the brief time that I have been listening to speeches in the House, I have not heard too much about that, particularly from Members on the other side.

The Hon. Member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Clarke) says that he is in favour of the six and five program but that it should not affect certain types of people. Surely the whole success of the program is that it affects everybody on the federal payroll, those receiving federal pensions or federal allowances of one kind or another unless their incomes are below the poverty line. That is the psychological reason why the program has been a success—and it has been.

When the program was introduced in the June budget I wondered how it would be received in the country. I recall very well, as I am sure you do, Mr. Speaker, how the Opposition Parties ridiculed and pooh-poohed it following June 28, 1982, and how the provincial Premiers when they met in Halifax a month or so later also ridiculed and pooh-poohed it. Just a few months later Members on the other side like the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Quadra had to admit that it is a good program. A Gallup poll shows that two-thirds of the people in the country believe it is an excellent program and about the same proportion of union households agree with the need for it.

I was speaking to the Hon. Member for Egmont (Mr. Henderson) at lunch today and he said that the Chamber of Commerce in Summerside, Prince Edward Island had made a survey. The result showed that 90 per cent of those surveyed approved of the six and five program. Owners of large and small businesses are embracing the program with open arms. Some of the most influential names in the business world are actively promoting it as the only plan that will make our economy competitive again.

That is the name of the game. We cannot have double the inflation of the United States. We are a trading nation; our whole economy depends on our competitiveness in foreign markets. Unless we get our inflation rate down to near that of the United States, we cannot compete. Our manufacturers will not be capable of producing, new jobs will not be created and new investment will not take place. The more sensible and realistic Members of the Opposition realize that.

Some people say that while this is a good principle it should not affect this or that group—it should always affect some other group than the one they are dealing with at the present time.

As the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay-Nipigon (Mr. Masters) mentioned, no Party is going to bring in legislation—particularly a Party that has been in power for most of the last 50 years—that is damaging to it unless it thinks there is a good reason for doing so.

• (1440)

In a few moments I will deal with our record in terms of senior citizens over the years, but particularly in the case of the Family Allowance legislation, Bill C-132, and Bill C-133, as far as it is concerned, unless we make all these groups subject to the six and five formula, with a bit of change in Bill C-133 because of contributions, the psychology of the program will be badly affected.

We heard provincial Premiers and Members opposite deride the program in June and July, but let me look at what has happened since that time. Since then most Provinces have brought in their own programs. For example, in my Province of Ontario, Premier Davis brought in his own program after seeing how the wind was blowing in favour of six and five. After a few months he brought in his own 9 per cent and 5 per cent program, I believe it was. Most Premiers have done the same in one way or another.

I mentioned the business reaction before, and I mentioned that unless we get inflation down, our economy will not get rolling again and our people will not get back to work. It is worthwhile to mention the bases of finances here. At the present time, in December, 1982, people on OAS are receiving $246.92 per month. This time next year, December, 1983, they will be receiving an increase to $261.74 per month, and in December, 1984 they will be receiving $274.83 per month, another increase.

This will affect everyone on OAS, but what happens to the 53 per cent, more than half our seniors, who receive the Guaranteed Income Supplement at the present time? These 1.2 million seniors do not have any other real income. They receive the GIS or part of it. They will not be hurt at all by Bill C-131. Their GIS will be fully indexed in the coming two years. This new Bill will only be in effect until the end of 1984. In addition, those on GIS, more than half our seniors who need it most, will be compensated in lump sum payments for moneys they would otherwise lose by the OAS not being fully indexed for the next couple of years. Those who need it most among our seniors—and I am sure they are the ones about whom most of us are really concerned—will not be affected or hurt at all by this particular Bill.

The Hon. Member for Vancouver Quadra talked about the actual amount of money involved here. If we get inflation down to 6 per cent by the end of 1984, those receiving the OAS but not the GIS will lose about $29 in 1983 or less than $2.50 per month, and about $52 in 1984 or a bit more than $4 a month. For everybody, but particularly for our seniors, every dollar is important, but $2 or $4 per month is not the end of the world, if it helps get the idea firmly implanted in all parts of the country and with every group in the country that we are serious about the six and five program, that everybody should support it and do his or her part.

A few minutes ago I heard the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay-Nipigon (Mr. Masters) refer to the fact that seniors are not only concerned about themselves, but they are concerned about their country, their families, their children and their grandchildren. They have gone through hard times themselves. They are the ones to whom we owe our comparative prosperity today. They are the ones who went through the wars and the Depression. They are the ones who worked hard to build the country after World War II. We owe an awful lot to those people.

In my area of Scarborough West there is a large proportion of senior citizens. This is what I tell them every time I see them, and this is what I believe. They are not only concerned about themselves; they are concerned about their grandchildren, many of whom do not have jobs. They are concerned because plants are closing down as a result of high inflation and lack of competitiveness in world markets. They are concerned that some of their children in middle age are unemployed for the first time. They are the ones who have always done their part. They answered the call to duty in the First and Second World Wars. Those are the ones who fought a hard fight during the Depression. They have always done their duty. People on OAS who have other income and do not receive the GIS want to do their part in the six and five campaign at the same time, which is a two-year campaign ending in 1984. I think Hon. Members will discover that as they go across the country.

There are some savings involved, but I do not think they are the big items in the Bill. After we take into account the money saved in reduced OAS increases and additional moneys paid out in GIS increases, we will have an estimated saving of $115 million. I suppose $115 million should not be sneezed at and I am not sneezing at it. Basically the idea is that this group of senior citizens who are above the poverty line and have other income want to do their part. It is true that many of them do not have too much other income. In some areas of the country seniors have a fair amount of other income, but not in my riding. If $100 million could be saved to contribute to employment opportunities elsewhere, they are willing to do their part.

What is our record? What is the record of the Liberal Party regarding senior citizens over the years? The Hon. Member for Fraser Valley East (Mr. Patterson) who is in the Chair at present has been in the House for a long time and has participated in many debates. He will remember 1952 when the Hon. Louis St. Laurent brought in the first universal Old Age Security after discussions for a great number of years. Also he will remember that at that time it was effective at age 70. From 1966 to 1970 the age was reduced one year at a time to age 65. Then the Guaranteed Income Supplement came in for those seniors below the poverty line. Indexing came in for the first time in 1973. In 1975 the spouses' allowance came in for spouses between ages 60 and 64 who were living with spouses over age 65. Also, Mr. Speaker will remember that in 1979 the GIS was increased by another $20 flat rate as well as continuing to be indexed, and that in 1980 after the last election it was increased by another $30.

Mr. Bossy: That was all done by the Liberal Government.

Mr. Weatherhead: Yes, as my hon. friend says, this was all done by the Liberal Government.

Our record with respect to seniors does not just rest with Old Age Security and the Guaranteed Income Supplement. Our Party brought in the Canada Pension Plan in the mid-1960s; it was the Government of the late Right Hon. Lester B. Pearson. That plan has been built up since 1966 and it is now becoming a more and more significant portion of pensions for workers once they retire. Perhaps just as important is our record for seniors and everyone else with respect to Medicare and hospitalization.

My father was a lawyer. He was comparatively well off although he never thought so. He always had a fear, going through his life, that he would run into some dire medical disease or whatnot which would strip him of all his savings. My father was fairly well off, but this fear was always in the back of his mind.

Going back 20 years or so many people felt the same way. No matter how wealthy or poor they were a person's life savings could be wiped out if they suffered any kind of disease that required hospitalization. Hospitalization insurance came into being in the late 1950s. It was brought in by the Government of the Right Hon. John G. Diefenbaker. Medicare was introduced in 1964 or 1965 by the Government of the Right Hon. Lester B. Pearson. Senior citizens are more apt to have disease than younger people, but after hospitalization insurance and Medicare were brought in they no longer had this fear of having their life savings wiped out as a result of ill health.

We take hospitalization insurance and Medicare for granted in this country, but we should be reminded of the situation in the United States. Senator Kennedy and others have been fighting unsuccessfully for years trying to get the same sort of medicare legislation in the U.S. They have been fighting against medical lobbies of various kinds. There are some plans for those on charity, but other than that Americans have to pay high premiums to get some sort of health insurance. The Medicare and hospitalization schemes that we have here in Canada give very good protection. Medicare was brought in by my own Party and has played an important part in the over-all protection of senior citizens.

In closing, might I mention a program which I think delivers the most benefit per dollar to our seniors. I am, of course, referring to the New Horizons Program brought in by our Government. In my riding of Scarborough West, which comprises the old suburbs of East Toronto, we have many older people. This riding is not like other suburbs in the City. We have 20 to 25 senior citizens' clubs in this area. People who belong to these clubs are very active. They want to get involved. They not only live in senior citizens' towers but in family homes around the area as well. With a little bit of seed money, often no more than $5,000 per club for a year or two, they are able to get themselves organized. Some of them have weekly meetings. There are daily activities for some of them. These clubs are a focal point for sociability, athletic exercise and stimulating conversation for men and women. The New Horizons Program is an excellent program. I am sure Members on all sides of the House will agree with me that for a very few dollars we are able to get seniors to organize themselves, to take an interest in everything from nutrition to athletic endeavours. I also think of ceramics and woodworking. This is not a big program money-wise. It does not go into the billions as do some other programs for seniors that we have, but it is a very worth-while program.

I am not apologetic at all, nor is the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay-Nipigon and others on our side of the House who have spoken, for this piece of legislation. I can go into any seniors' group—I have 20-odd in my area—and say very clearly that they know who their friends have been over the last 30 years in this country. That is why we take the seats in Toronto, in the urban areas of the country and in Eastern Canada. These people know who their friends are. We do not come in making wild promises. We do not say, as do Members in the Party across from me here, sitting at the far end of the House from you, Mr. Speaker, that everything the Liberals do they will double automatically. We do not say that. Our seniors know who their friends are, and that is us.

Mr. Riis: With friends like you, who needs an enemy?

Mr. Weatherhead: You will remember that in the 1980 election campaign, Mr. Speaker, the Conservatives did not have any ideas about increasing the GIS at all. The Conservatives were going to study it. All of a sudden the Conservatives were not in the Opposition any more, they were the Government in power. They became awfully responsible. They did not think the seniors needed more money for the GIS. They were going to study the GIS and that was that.

I do not want to get overly partisan, but we have had a good record over 30 years. Our seniors, the ones who have some extra income, are not on GIS and are concerned about their children and their grandchildren, want to take part in the six and five program, which is a two-year program only. I urge Members on all sides of the House to support the legislation this afternoon.

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, it is with mixed feelings that I participate in the closing stages of this debate this afternoon. The Hon. Member who has just spoken is a very distinguished and well thought of Member in this chamber. I think of him as a very good friend who is a very highly respected Member from Toronto.

Mr. Rose: He used to be until he made his speech.

Mr. Murta: I do think it would be stretching one's imagination to believe for one minute that the Hon. Member, or indeed any Member of the Liberal Party, could go into a senior citizens' home in Canada—other than some very wealthy ones—and expect to get out with any more than the clothes on their backs after they were through trying to explain this legislation. It is virtually unexplainable.

The Bill itself has been characterized in many, many ways over the course of this debate, but one of the best descriptions of the legislation is that it is a mean piece of legislation. It is designed, as it has to be designed if it is going to move in the area of restricting benefits, to impose a 6 per cent increase this year and a 5 per cent increase next year on old age pensions in terms of the Government's proposed plan to curb inflation. By the very nature and the very design of this Bill, it will curtail old age pensioners' incomes. It has to. It cannot do anything else.

As I have said, the Bill limits the increase in old age pensions to a maximum of 6 per cent in 1983 and 5 per cent in 1984. As we all know, this pension previously had been fully indexed to the rate of inflation as measured to the consumer price index, which moves from time to time.

The legislation is basically directed against approximately 1.2 million senior citizens in this country who do not qualify for a full or partial Guaranteed Income Supplement. Looking at the scenario of a 10 per cent inflation rate, which will certainly occur this year, and also at the general economic situation, the scenario is bleaker now than it was some months ago, first because the American economy has not responded in the way that President Reagan and the powers that be in the United States hoped for, and, second, because we are on the verge of a very detrimental trade war. This will slow down the rate of recovery as well.

Everyone is hoping for a recovery. Everyone is hoping that consumer confidence will pick up and people will start to buy goods and services once again. If that does not happen, and it is increasingly more evident that it will not, then we could see, even with the six and five program, that inflation will remain at very substantial levels, well above the hoped for targets of six and five.

If we were to take an inflation rate of approximately 10 per cent, which is what it is presently, each of the 1.2 million old age pensioners would lose $290 in the next two years. On a year to year basis, that would be approximately $70 in 1983 and $220 in 1984. Those who will be affected to the greatest degree will be the single elderly with incomes slightly above the $8,900 or, to round it off, $9,000 which is the cut-off figure for those who receive the full Guaranteed Income Supplement. Anyone with an income marginally above that will certainly be affected very significantly. Those with incomes marginally above the $9,000 level will be the hardest hit. They are the ones who cannot afford a decrease.

Those who earn $8,900 a year receive a little less than $25 a day. The Government is going to carry out its fight against inflation by telling them that they have to sacrifice. The sacrifice made by someone who receives $25 a day is significantly more than the sacrifice made by someone who earns significantly more. Those who can least afford to make a contribution in the fight against inflation are being asked to make biggest contribution.

An elderly married couple with an income of just over $15,000 per year will lose approximately $580 over the next two years. Clearly the Government intends to fight inflation on the backs of the elderly, admittedly not all but 1.2 million of them, which is a significant number. The cut-off level will be $9,000 for a single person and $15,000 for a married couple. Those marginally above that cut-off level will have to do further belt-tightening at a time when I suspect the belt is drawn as tightly as it can be.

How much does the Government expect to save with this proposal? If the savings amounted to millions and millions of dollars and if one were hard hearted enough, one could say that it would be worth it in view of the good to the Canadian economy. However, that is not the case. I do not know what the savings will be, but I am sure they will be small in comparison to the total amount of money that this Government should be trying to save.

The sum will be small compared to the detailed criticisms made this past week by the Auditor General, particularly with regard to Crown corporations. The savings will be minuscule when compared to total Government spending. We are not talking about a lot of money, but we are talking about a significant amount of misery. That is an area we must look at.

A country is not judged on how it treats its more privileged citizens, but how it treats those at the lower levels, the low income earners. It can be judged in no other way. We are judged by the compassion we have for those less fortunate than ourselves. That is how we judge our friends, neighbours and, in fact, other countries.

If someone were to look at Canada, they would see that the Government is asking this Parliament to pass legislation which asks those who are already struggling to struggle even harder. We would not be judged in a very positive way.

Closure is being imposed and this afternoon we will vote on this Bill. We should hang our heads in shame for what we are doing to a significant portion of our population who helped to make this country what it is today, a good place to live.

The elderly in our society scrimped, saved and sacrifices in order that we might have what is ours today. Today we will be saying to these people that they must scrimp, save and cut back on their standard of living even more. That is not right, and the Members of my Party will not support it. While we agree generally that inflation must be dealt with, we cannot in good conscience vote for a measure like this in the same week that the Auditor General came out with horror stories of excess Government spending in the hundreds of millions of dollars over the past year by this Government, which is now asking us to impose a further hardship on our old age pensioners. It is not right, it is not fair, it should be voted against and it should be condemned by every sane person in this country.

Hon. Bud Cullen (Sarnia-Lambton): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to participate in this debate because there are some people who need to be reminded of what has occurred. It has been said that a country is judged by the way it treats its senior citizens. It is equally true that a Party can be judged in the same way. Given that circumstance, I think the Liberals can stand tall. What Hon. Members should recall, particularly those in the Opposition, is the fact that the GIS and the Old Age Security will not be reduced to the 6 and 5 per cent for those who are on GIS and Old Age Security. We will have full indexing in that particular area.

The senior citizens of this country will not judge the Liberals or this particular Government on one measure alone. They will look at the over-all picture of how they have been treated by a particular Government. I think the Opposition should be remained of the fact, because its Members, of course, never mention it, that something like $8.5 billion is paid directly to Canadian senior citizens on an annual basis through the Old Age Security, the Guaranteed Income Supplement and the spouses' allowances. That amounts to $8.5 billion, approximately one-tenth to one-twelfth of the total expenditures of the federal Government, including transfer payments, moneys that we must pay out in interest on the national debt, and money that we spend on the Department of National Defence, be they direct or be they transfer payments.

Senior citizens, those over the age of 65, have gone through two world wars and a Depression as well as the conflict in Korea. They know what it is to plan and to prepare, but, more important, they know what it is to be independent, and they like to have the accompanying feeling of pride. Therefore, I was particularly proud to have been elected in 1968 when one of the earlier moves of the Government was to bring in low rental housing for senior citizens. The mood and the approach of the Canadian public has changed quite a bit. In my day there was the sort of thought that grandparents in their old age would probably live with one of their children. That is not the case nowadays. The time came when people felt that senior citizens lost a bit of their dignity. They were quite often shut off in one room. Sometimes they had to put up with grandchildren whom they were frankly ill-equipped to look after on a permanent basis. They had spent a quarter of a lifetime looking after children and felt that they were entitled to something just a little bit better.

Low rental housing units for senior citizens gives them that sense of independence and the opportunity to invite friends and relatives over. They are still able to visit their grandchildren so that they can enjoy them, and when the children start becoming a little less than congenial, they can be dumped back on their parents' laps and looked after in this way. This gives senior citizens the sense of independence, value and worth and, primarily the opportunity of feeling that they are in a position in which they can act as they have acted all their lives, namely, in the position where they are not beholden to anyone.

Bringing in the Old Age Security so that everyone receives the benefits on a universal basis is appropriate, not so much for people who really do not need it but for the average working person who puts aside a few dollars so that he or she will have something upon which to retire, supplemented by the old age pension. These people are encouraged to save because they will then have their pensions or savings looked after and the old age pension as well, and that is across the board.

Others, through no fault of their own, are not in a position to put a few dollars aside because they have not received sufficient compensation for their work to permit them to do so. Some senior citizens incurred heavy medical expenses before the introduction of Medicare. I say, thank heaven for Medicare. Many senior citizens lost their life savings because of a sickness in the family. These savings could have been wiped out in a six month period. Senior citizens no longer have the fear that if they go to the doctor it will eat into their incomes. The Liberal Government has brought in the kind of legislation to allay such fears.

Who stands to gain the most if we are able, through this program, to bring down the rate of inflation? Obviously, it will be the people on fixed incomes and, very obviously, those who are drawing only old age pensions and the Guaranteed Income Supplement. Inflation is invidious. It cuts right across the board. I believe the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay-Nipigon (Mr. Masters) indicated earlier that people who had set aside money for their pensions had seen it being eaten away by inflation. Therefore, we have indexed pensions so that they will not be eaten away in this manner.

No one is suggesting that the old age pension should be decreased in its value and in payments to pensioners, and no one is suggesting that, for all time, indexing should be taken away. However, if this program is successful, then our civil servants who are under the six and five program and the senior citizens who are finding their pensions increasing by 6 per cent and 5 per cent rather than according to the consumer price index, are the ones who will have taken the leadership role, once again, in aiding the economy. They will be the chief beneficiaries when the inflation rate comes down to an appropriate level.

Obviously, the Government cannot do it all alone. With the success of the six and five program, many people in the private sector are now coming forward and saying, "We actually initiated that ourselves. We had put freezes on our salaries, on the salaries of members of boards of directors and mid-management, and in some instances we had actually cut salaries or the amount of compensation payable to our employees and, in some cases, even encouraged employees to take early retirement at wages similar to those they would have received if they had stayed on". In that way they tried to rationalize the situation so that their employees would be able to meet the difficulties lying ahead.

The six and five program is appropriate because it will help our senior citizens. They will probably become the chief beneficiaries. My colleague—my colleagues—

Mr. Deans: Colleague. Right.

Mr. Cullen: No, my colleagues, the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay-Nipigon, the Hon. Member for Scarborough West (Mr. Whitehead) and others who have spoken have indicated the various programs which have been put in place by Liberal Governments. We have a proud record, and we can indicate to our constituents what the Liberal Government has done on their behalf.

I have already mentioned the old age pension, the Guaranteed Income Supplement and indexing. If we needed any indication that senior citizens like independence, have initiative and are prepared to work if only given a little seed money, the New Horizons Program is a magnificent example as it has had great success. The low rental housing units have given back to the senior citizens their sense of dignity which they were losing. It is not because they were not loved, because they were loved when their children would take them back into their homes, although admittedly, as I have said, many of them were lodged in a room upstairs, but because many of these senior citizens felt ill at ease in such a situation. In probably 90 per cent of the cases they really did not feel at home. Certainly they did not feel as though they were in their own homes, but rather as though they were there almost by sufferage. They had a tendency to forget all the wonderful things they had done for their children and wondered if they were becoming a burden. Certainly, because they had to live in someone else's home, they did not feel as good as they should have and not as independent. To some extent, they were losing their sense of pride and dignity. Low rental housing units gave that kind of independence to citizens.

Mr. Deans: That's where I came in.

Mr. Cullen: The Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) says, "This is where I came in".

Mr. Deans: That is where you started.

Mr. Cullen: It is nice that the Hon. Member recognizes this particular effort, and only one of several which have taken place at the initiative of the federal Liberals. I sometimes think one must comment on something more than twice in order to get the point across.

Mr. Deans: There are always some of us who would not listen long enough to hear it twice.

Mr. Cullen: Then there is the wonderful independence of the senior citizens who do not want to retire. I am thinking of people like Senator Croll and his study on aging. I am thinking of a chap named Jim Woods who "retired" at age 65. I know that he is out selling Christmas trees at age 80, not because he needs the money, although every additional bit of money is helpful, but, rather, he wants to make a contribution. He knows that in tough times, it is a role that he can play. I think of the voluntary work done by senior citizens. The healthy ones do work on behalf of the unhealthy ones. Those with the talent for organizing, putting things together, do so. Organizations of concerned pensioners make representations here in Ottawa to each individual Member of Parliament.

This Government need make no apology for the work, the service and the programs it has initiated to help the senior citizens. It is not meant to sound as though it is a charity; it is something they have earned and something that they deserve. But we were the ones who came up with the ideas and we were the ones who located the money and set the priorities so that senior citizens in Canada can maintain a dignity and live in a situation to which they are entitled and so that they can say they are proud of the country that treats them so well.

Mr. Bill McKnight (Kindersley-Lloydminster): Mr. Speaker, I would just like, in discussing Bill C-131 today, to draw to the attention of the Members opposite who have spoken that it was not only by the votes of the Liberal Government Members that these senior citizens programs were put in place. They were supported by all Parties in this House. There was some discussion and some debate on each occasion as to whether it was the right step, or there was enough money, or the allocation was proper or a certain group would be left out. But all Parties in this House, when all the measures that had been discussed earlier were voted on, supported those measures.

Let us take a look at the basic provisions in Bill C-131. It amends the Old Age Security Act, and the purpose for this legislation is the implementation of the six and five. This is what we are told. This is what speaker after speaker on the Government side reiterated, that this legislation is necessary to bring forth the Government's restraint program known as six and five.

In specific terms, the Old Age Security payment that is now fixed at $246.92 per month will be increased by 6 per cent in 1983 and by a further five per cent in 1984. The result is that the absolute limit of that increase, the only increase that can take place by the end of 1983, will be $14.82 per monthly payment, bringing it to $261.74, slightly more than $3,000 for the full year, and you can compare it: $2,999.04 versus $3,140.88.

Why is this action being taken in the guise of restraint? The answer is quite simple, it is being done in this way so as to save $90 million in 1983 and $150 million in 1984. The Government is now saying that the senior citizens, the people who built this country, will have to be restrained. The total funds that we are talking about over the two years, $240 million, will be taken from 1.1. million Canadians, and $125 million will be paid to 1.2 million Canadians. Those are the Canadians who receive the Guaranteed Income Supplement. So we are only talking in this House right now about $110 million. This is restraint? It is not restraint, it is re-allocation.

I do not think that Members on the Goverment side are being quite straightforward with people receiving Old Age Security. It is not restraint, it is re-allocation. Why is it necessary to re-allocate funds in that manner? We have been told that we have to bring inflation down, below six and five, and we say that that is an admirable goal. The problem arises that while the oldest people of this country, the senior citizens, are being asked—not really asked, it is being demanded of them—to take part of this program, the Government itself is not taking part. The Government is going on its merry way continuing to spend, continuing to increase. I think we all know of much less harmful instances to the fabric of this country on which the Government could practise restraint than the senior citizens who have helped to build this country.

It takes away the encouragement, the feeling of self-sufficiency that most people in this country have, as they feel it is their responsibility to provide in their senior years. We come to a point where a very small segment of society will be affected by this Bill, but those people are proud that they have been able to provide an income for themselves in the $15,000 to $16,000 range in their retirement years.

A senior married couple with one income of just over $15,000 are going to lose $580 over the next two years, and 250,000 married senior citizens with incomes between $15,000 and $16,000 will be affected, and they will be the hardest hit. If the Members feel that $25 a day, and that is what it works out to,, is adequate to provide shelter, travel, food,, clothing and some luxuries like being able to visit children who live far away, why do we and why do other employees of this Government and of the public of Canada receive incomes that are much higher than $25 per day?

When we look at people who are living just above the Guaranteed Income Supplement, that amount that they are allowed is in statistical terms above the poverty line. We all know that the poverty line is a figment of someone's imagination. When you look at the ever-growing necessities of life and the cost of those necessities, the poverty line is changing probably daily. The Members on the Government side insist that that is because of inflation, and that is right. I think that probably inflation will eventually be well below 5 per cent or 6 per cent. Those people in Canada who went through the years of Depression can tell you that inflation was well below 6 per cent in those years. It does not mean that our country and our economy was growing and generating the goods and services that were needed. It is not just to get below 6 per cent, it is to try to restrain Government spending so that the rest of the economy can go ahead and generate wealth, and allow the Government to have its fair share.

When we look at some of the things the Government has spent money on, rather than spending it on senior citizens, we find that, for instance, the Canadian International Development Agency paid $1.5 million for late and damaged food shipments. That is not to say that late and damaged food shipments were the fault of CIDA, but people ask, why should we restrain our senior citizens when a Government agency is not able to control or to manage its own affairs?

The senior citizens are being asked to accept an increase of 5 and 6 per cent. Let us look at spending in all Government Departments and by all Members of Parliament where spending increases in travel are apparent. In the Department of Agriculture spending on travel by the Minister is up by 43 per cent; the Secretary of State, up 1179 per cent; the Prime Minister's Department, 184 per cent; the Office of the Minister of National Defence, 584 per cent.

Mr. Pepin: What is yours?

Mr. McKnight: We have to come up with 5 and 6 per cent. It is just a matter of trying to impress on Government Members that you are asking a segment of society to assist in the recovery of the economy. That segment of society is the segment that built this country and built the economy that in some points I think this Government has helped to turn down. There is no reason why we should go ahead and support a motion that deprives a segment of society that is least able to defend itself against Government restraint, such as the senior citizens, when we have other areas we can draw from. There are certain areas that could be restrained which would not harm the economy of the country and would not harm individuals. I am not sure why senior citizens are being asked to partake in this, because the carrot which is held out is not too much of a carrot. I would like to quote the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) when she said as reported in Hansard of November 18, 1982, at page 20799:

• (1530)

After all, we know that we cannot give any guarantees to pensioners that others will join them in the fight against inflation but, at the same time, we are optimistic and believe in the willingness of all Canadians to participate in this critical national challenge.

Canadians do respond to challenges, Mr. Speaker, but I do not think the Government should expect the senior citizens to pay for mismanagement and deliberate mistakes.

On the motion to put over the vote for six months, which was put forward by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie) if the Government Members believe in their own programs, six months down the road this vote may not be necessary. It may not be necessary to impose upon senior citizens a restraint program. If the programs which have been presented are as earth shattering and as beneficial to Canada as some Hon. Members on the Government side believe, there is no need now to make the decision that we put the restraint program in place as it affects senior citizens.

Senior citizens have always done their part for this country and will continue to do so, but I think there are other segments of society we can look to, and if we do not, we are doing a disservice for all the efforts and toil which these people have put into building this country. I certainly will not be voting in favour of the restraint program as it affects senior citizens.

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. McKnight: I hear some Members over there say, shame. It may be surprising, but I do not think a lot of the Hon. Members on the Government side of the House would voluntarily wish to impose this restraint, and if they had the right to vote as they wish—

An Hon. Member: Otherwise they would be cut off committees.

Mr. McKnight: —as the Hon. Member for Edmonton North (Mr. Paproski) can on this side of the House, then they probably would be voting with those of us on this side of the House against this Bill, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. John Evans (Ottawa Centre): I am happy, Mr. Speaker, to be able to stand and speak in this debate, especially following the Hon. Member for Kindersley-Lloydminster (Mr. McKnight), who generally gives a very thoughtful speech. I am sure he really, sincerely believes everything he says, and I listened to him quite carefully. I would like to point out one or two things about what he has said, particularly with regard to the comment that we could look to others, that the program of restraint should not be as broadly spread as possible, that it should not apply to certain segments of our society, and that there are other segments of our society that could indeed make a greater contribution to the restraint program. When you look at the over-all situation we now face, I find that hard to believe. What other segments of our society are better able to absorb more of the strain of the situation we now find ourselves in?

An Hon. Member: The poor people.

Mr. Evans: If we look at the situation of corporations, we have heard the New Democratic Party say we should tax corporations more heavily. I think it was the Hon. Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong) who said the other day that is where we can get the money, tax the corporations, because the corporations are making excessive profits. Corporate profits in the last year have fallen 50 per cent. They are 50 per cent lower. It is not a matter of increasing by only six and five; it is a matter of actually declining absolutely by 50 per cent from where they had been the year before. And as a result of that decline, people are being thrown out of work, firms are shutting their doors, and that is increasing the burden on individuals, and it is increasing the burden on the state which has to pay unemployment insurance and other forms of social assistance to those who have lost their jobs.

I believe, rightfully so, the corporate sector, the business sector, has to pay their fair share, but is that the sector which can absorb more of the load right now? I suggest to you at this point in time that that sector cannot carry more of a burden than it is already carrying. As far as public servants themselves are concerned, the working population of public servants has been subjected to the six and five program. Their salaries will go up by 6 per cent this year and 5 per cent next year.

We have heard a great deal of discussion in committee with regards to Bill C-133 and some of the other legislation, that indeed it is not fair to apply restraint to pensions in the various areas, the general transfer programs, because where it is fair to apply it to wages and salaries, it is not fair to apply it to pensions. The reason is that those who are working are able, through collective bargaining and other means, once the restraint is over, to recapture that lost ground, and this is not possible for pensioners. That gave me pause for thought for a long time because it sounds right. It sounds right to say yes, pensioners cannot bargain, they cannot get an increase, and workers can because there is such a thing as bargaining.

Then I went back and looked at the facts to see if it was true. If you look at the figures and the facts you will find that, indeed, workers are not able to extract more from the system than the system is able to pay. Workers' salaries and wages have not increased out of line with productivity over the long term. They have not increased at astronomical rates above inflation over the long term. Certainly, in short-term periods that has been the case, where wages in a particular sector have gone up. But you would expect that. If there is a shortage of certain kinds of workers, their wages will go up. But over the five to ten-year period wages on average have gone up about the same as inflation, plus a productivity factor.

It is not, therefore, fair to say that workers are able to recapture what they might have lost during a period of restraint. I really do not think that kind of thing can happen. I believe that restraint is going to be there and it is going to affect their incomes over the long term. Indeed, if we believe that wages tend to go up by inflation, plus a productivity factor, then any restraint now is going to affect their pensions five or ten years down the road because it lowers the base from which that pension is calculated ultimately. So the workers in the Public Service are certainly carrying their share of the burden at this point in time under the six and five program.

Regarding workers in the private sector, Mr. Speaker, we have heard from Members of the New Democratic Party—again I think it was the Hon. Member for Regina East, and some others—that some workers, not all workers, are making large wages and salaries, and I looked at the figures on that. Unionized workers are not receiving salary increases which are excessively out of line at this time. They have restrained their wages to a general degree. Management, clerical, and the non-unionized workers in the private sector, if we can believe the Conference Board survey, will be receiving wage and salary increases of 5 per cent to 6 per cent in the next year. There is restraint there, Mr. Speaker. And if it is not the corporate business sector that is able to carry a heavier burden now, and if it is not the private sector work force, and it is not the Public Service work force, because not only at the federal Government level, but also in the provincial Government, these kinds of restraint programs are in place, then I would honestly ask the Hon. Member for Kindersley-Lloydminster what other sector of our economy is left to carry this additional burden of restraint, if it does not apply to transfer programs in this area.

I have talked to a great many senior citizens in my own riding since the six and five program was introduced. I have heard from the majority—certainly not all of them—that, certainly, we do not like restraint, you do not like restraint, but we understand. When we are really honest about it, we probably never had it better. The Hon. Member for Lambton-Sarnia (Mr. Cullen) pointed out the kind of advances we have been able to make in this country over the last 15 years—longer, but primarily the last 15 or 20 years—for senior citizens.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): The Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes) on a point of order.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I may have missed something. Did the Hon. Member explain to those pensioners that poor people pay—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. The Hon. Member may only put a question if the Hon. Member who has the floor consents to receive it. Does the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans) accept the question?

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, I really do not think the Hon. Member had a question; he wanted to make a point in debate. That is not an unusual thing for that Member to try to do, but I do not think I am going to let him at this time.

The senior citizens I have talked to, Mr. Speaker—the majority, not all—have indicated that they are willing to share in a restraint program. What is the restraint being imposed, Mr. Speaker? As the Minister of National Health and Welfare has indicated, it amounts to an increase in pensions of $2 a month less than would have been the case without the restraint this year, and $4 a month less than the increase would have been next year. That is a modest amount of restraint, but it does spread the six and five program widely so it applies to everyone. It is only fair to do that, but there are some exceptions.

As I indicated in my speech earlier on Bill C-133, the six and five program is terribly important because if we can make it succeed—and all indications are that it is succeeding, inflation is coming down, and inflationary expectations are coming down—then the country is going to be stronger and better able to generate economic growth in the future. As a result, we are going to be in a better position to move ahead economically and socially. So that program is terribly important and we must support it. I think to be successful the program must be spread widely throughout our society. It cannot be limited to just public servants or the private sector through voluntary restraint; it has to be spread very broadly. It applies to wages and salaries, it applies to transfer programs such as Old Age Security and Family Allowances. But the Government, in the tradition of the Liberal Party, has made the exception that those who are in greatest need will not be asked to contribute excessively, and in this case not at all because the Child Tax Credit is fully indexed, in fact double indexed, as well as the Guaranteed Income Supplement. So anyone receiving the GIS will not lose a penny as a result of the restraint program.

However, Mr. Speaker, I mentioned an exception, and that was the restraint program as it was originally conceived to apply to superannuation, which I talked about the other day. That exception was that it was treated like a transfer program, kept out of the six and five program even though it was contributory. The CPP is contributory and it was not touched, and superannuation was. The President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray) brought forward an amendment to recognize the contributory nature of that program, and he maintained that the restraint only applied to those parts of the program which were paid for by the taxpayer dollar, and any contributory part is over and above that.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. It being 3:45 p.m., pursuant to the order made Thursday, December 2, 1982, it is my duty to interrupt the proceedings and put forthwith every question necessary to dispose of the second reading stage of the Bill now before the House.

The question is on the amendment of Mr. McKenzie. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Old Age Security Act (No. 2)

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): All those in favour of the amendment will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): In my opinion, the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Call in the Members.

The House divided on the amendment (Mr. McKenzie), which was negatived on the following division:

CRIMINAL CODE

NATIONAL REFERENDUM ON CAPITAL PUNISHMENT

The House resumed from Friday, June 13, consideration of the motion of Mr. Fretz:

That, in the opinion of this House, the Government should consider the advisability of holding a national referendum on the issue of capital punishment and, following such referendum, amend the appropriate sections of the Criminal Code to conform with the majority views of the people of Canada.

Capital Punishment

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Mr. Speaker, I want to begin by complimenting the Hon. Member for Erie (Mr. Fretz) for bringing this motion calling for a national referendum to be held on the subject of capital punishment.

I take pleasure in this debate largely because the motion is so similar to the one that I introduced in the House in November, 1976. At that time I called for a national referendum to be held on the same subject. I very clearly recall the debate, which happened to be on November 15, of that year. I remember what the Hon. Members on the Liberal benches were saying in the argument against my motion.

The Hon. Member for Windsor-Walkerville, now the Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan), who was a reputed constitutional expert on the subject, entered the debate. He had two very singular arguments for putting down my motion. One was that such a referendum would be very divisive to the country. He called upon history and the conscription debate of the 1940s when in fact a referendum was very divisive. The way the question was put, the experience was very divisive for the country. I accept that particular argument on that particular subject for that particular period of time.

The other argument which he put to the House at that time was that a referendum would be considered unconstitutional, that in fact it was against British parliamentary tradition to have a referendum because the elected Members of Parliament have been chosen by the population at large to represent them in Ottawa in this case, to speak on behalf of the people and therefore it was not the tradition of the British parliamentary system to hold referenda.

It was very interesting to follow that debate. As I said, it went on during the day of November 15. While we were debating that motion in this House, the good citizens of the Province of Quebec were going to the polls. On the evening of November 15 we watched the results come in. They had elected a Pequiste Government.

You never saw such a marvelous conversion in the Liberal ranks on the subject of referenda. What had been an anathema to the country before, a divisive subject, a divisive mechanism, an unconstitutional mechanism, overnight gained immediate credibility.

I recall that within a year of that debate the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) introduced Bill C-9 in this Chamber. It was to provide the mechanism whereby in this British parliamentary system, which is not designed to allow for referenda to be held, all of a sudden after a particular dramatic election in the Province of Quebec there would be a mechanism, and it was articulated by the Prime Minsiter of Canada. A Bill was tabled in this House which would provide and legitimize the mechanism whereby a referendum could be held on that subject.

The Bill which the Prime Minister tabled in the House at that time had a very narrow reference. It was made to deal with one particular topic. If in that very narrow reference there could be a mechanism and legitimacy provided for a referendum in this country, why could it not be applied to subjects other than the matter of separatism? If it is legitimate to have a referendum to cover that very important subject to the future of our nation, why not on the matter of capital punishment?

If there is one subject which all Members of the House are consistently confronted with in their constituencies, across the board, why is it not possible to have a referendum on the subject of capital punishment? That is a question that comes to all Members whether they are abolitionists or in favour of capital punishment.

There was a very simple reason for that. Public opinion polls consistently show that between 70 and 80 per cent of the population is in favour of capital punishment. This is very clearly understood by all Members of Parliament, and indeed all candidates in every general election. All Members of Parliament accept that by far the majority of Canadian people are in support of capital punishment.

The fact that in 1976 the Parliament of Canada voted against the wishes of the Canadian people has been one of the singular features of our Parliament which has tightened the level of cynicism in our country toward the work of Members of Parliament. If on the one hand the people of Canada are saying this is what we want you to do and they make that known to Members of Parliament during an election campaign and through representations later, and in the face of that known position the Parliament of Canada votes against the wishes of the majority of the Canadian people, that in itself is enough to heighten the level of cynicism toward the political process in our country.

In 1976 we were promised that there would be a free vote. Some free vote. I remember that free vote and the pressure that there was on Government Members to vote with the Government on that issue. It is because the Parliament of Canada has not fulfilled the wishes of the Canadian people that we have this continual request for a referendum on the subject of capital punishment. It is because of this continual request that the Hon. Member for Erie has fulfilled the request of his constituents that we present to the House this motion, which is a further request that the Government honour the wishes of the majority of the Canadian people.

On every other issue, the Government always makes the argument that they are doing something because that is what the people of Canada want them to do. It does not matter whether it is the subject of PetroCan, six and five or any other subject, the rationale on the part of the Government is that the people of Canada want it to do it.

If the people of Canada want the Government to do that, and the argument of the Government is that it wants to do what the people of Canada want it to do, then why does it not do it on this subject? Very clearly, the answer is that the Government thinks that the people of Canada are wrong. I think that one of the most cherished rights we have in this country, above every other right, is the right to be wrong. It was our right. That is what brings about the differences of opinion in our country. That is what makes democracy a vital experience in our country, because one side thinks the other side is wrong, and that is all right. If the people of Canada, 70 per cent to 80 per cent, are wrong, it is their right to be wrong, and it is the requirement of the Parliament of Canada to fulfil the wishes of the Canadian people, even if it thinks the Canadian people are wrong.

It seems to me that when we go through an election campaign, one of the frequent campaign statements by all candidates and one which we have all said here in one way or another is, "Let me represent you in Ottawa. I want to represent you in Ottawa". That is a good statement to make to the electorate. However, on this subject, when the people of Canada said, "I want you to represent me in Ottawa," the majority of the Members of Parliament said, "No, I will not do that. I will represent myself, not the majority of the Canadian people". Candidates in a campaign never say, "When I go to Ottawa, I will think for myself, and even if you want me to do something else, I will do what I want to do because I happen to think that I am right". Candidates are always saying, "I want to represent you." They never say, "When you elect me, I will go to Ottawa and I will study the issues but I will do exactly as I please".

Mr. King: "Or as I am told".

Mr. Friesen: Yes, or, as the Hon. Member for Okanagan-Similkameen (Mr. King) says, "Or as I am told." That is a fact. It seems to me that if people want to be elected on a popular or populist basis, and be honest with the electorate when they become elected, saying, "I want to represent you", then they must represent the Canadian people on every issue.

I pay tribute to my predecessor in the riding of Surrey-White Rock-North Delta. He happened to be a Member of the New Democratic Party. However, he was an honourable man. He took a poll of Surrey-White Rock-North Delta residents at that time and found that something like 80 per cent of the people of that riding wanted him to vote for capital punishment. He was the only Member of that caucus to vote in favour of capital punishment because he was determined to do what his constituents wanted him to do. I tip my hat to him because he maintained his sense of honour.

If there is one thing that we cannot afford in this country, it is a spirit of elitism on the part of the elected representatives who say to the electorate, "I can do as I please". We cannot afford that kind of elitism. If we want to be a populist Parliament, if we want to represent the people of Canada, we must represent what they want, whether or not we agree with it. Frankly, I think one of the most anguishing votes in which I ever participated was one in which I disagreed and I voted against what I thought was good for the country because I thought the people wanted me to vote that way, and it was on the Constitution. I do not think that the Constitution that we passed in this Chamber is a good Constitution. However, I know that the people of Canada, by far, wanted us to get it over with, wanted to have it done with, and they wanted a Charter of Rights and Freedoms, whether they agreed with that particular Charter or not, and I voted for it, much to my dismay, worry and conviction that in the long run it would not be good for the country.

There is one argument I want to put forward with regard to the issue of capital punishment itself and, with that, I will turn the floor over to some other Hon. Member. I spoke on this subject on June 8, 1976, I believe, and the former Solicitor General, who was piloting that Bill through the House, is sitting opposite me here today. I know that he hung on every word I said during that debate. The one point I want to make is that those people who want to see the abolition of capital punishment continuously say that a civilized nation cannot put people to death. Civilization depends on two very important factors. The first is that it be an orderly society and the second is that it be a compassionate society. That is a civilized society.

Murderers, particularly those who kill prison guards and policemen, are the most anarchistic, order-destroying people in our country. To protect those people who want to create anarchy in families, in communities and in nations is a contradiction of the word "civilization", because they are anarchists. Why should we protect those people whose personal goal is to create anarchy?

The second point I want to make with regard to civilization is that it is a hallmark of all civilizations, if, indeed, they are comprised of civilized people, that they will protect the unguarded and the weak from those who would ravish them. They will protect those who have suffered the consequences of the actions of murderers and rapists and they will protect those who have suffered as a result of that kind of ravishment and provide some kind of support mechanism afterwards.

I want to ask you, Mr. Speaker, of all the hours of time we have spent in this Chamber discussing the rights of criminals who have taken the lives of other people, how much time have we spent thinking about the anguish of those people who are members of the families of those who have been murdered?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Friesen: How much time have we agonized with the families of the victims of the Olson cases? What have we done to provide psychiatric and medical care and all of the support mechanisms that these people need as a result of the anguish that they have endured as a result of the Olson murders?

Mr. Fretz: Precious little.

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, if the public at large knew, if the journalists knew—

Mr. Kelly: I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Friesen: I wish the Hon. Member would not disturb me now, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Does the Hon. Member for Scarborough Centre (Mr. Kelly) rise on a point of order?

Mr. Kelly: Although I have not been in the House for the duration of the Hon. Member's speech, I have been listening and following it carefully. I am not in disagreement with what he has been saying—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Would the Hon. Member please state his point? I would like the Hon. Member to resume his seat, please.

Mr. Kelly: I would like to ask the Hon. Member a question. Will he permit a question, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Kempling: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): The Hon. Member was recognized on a point of order. Would the Hon. Member state his point of order?

Some Hon. Members: Right on!

Mr. Kelly: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the hon. gentleman if he would permit a question.

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, I will do that at the end of my remarks. I wish he had not interrupted me. I did not intend to use my full time allotment, and he could have done it at that time, but he has broken into my train of thought and I am sorry for that.

I want to go on to say that if the public at large or if the journalistic community, for example, knew what kind of anguish the families of the victims involved in the Olson murders had gone through, they would not print one more word about Clifford Olson. They would not give him the notoriety he hungers for, and they would clamour for some kind of help to all those families of victims of murderers.

• (1640)

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Friesen: We are calling for psychiatric help for murderers. How about psychiatric and psychological help that is needed for those who have suffered distress, grief and remorse as a result of what they have endured?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Friesen: The second point is with regard to Ministers who clamour for the human rights of those who are murderers. I have yet to see $1 devoted in their budgets to be spent on behalf of the victims. There is no such thing as dollar expenditures for families of victims. All we hear about is protecting the criminals.

Is that the hallmark of a civilized society, to devote all of its attention to those who rape and pillage and kill, and ignore the anguish of those who are ravaged?

It is because of our distorted values, our distorted goals and our distorted laws that I commend the Member for Erie for bringing forward this motion that will let the people of Canada express their will on the subject of capital punishment.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, I am also pleased to participate in this debate on what I consider to be a very important and serious question, one that deserves much more time than we can give it today.

Let me respond right away to the last remarks of the Hon. Member. I am not speaking here today for the Government, but he criticized the Government for spending too much time on the issue of capital punishment and the abolition of capital punishment, and not on what we should do for victims and so on.

If that is the case, why is he today supporting a motion or a Bill which would bring about a reconsideration of capital punishment? Why did he not bring forward today a Bill or motion which would allow us to deal with the subject of the victims of crime.

The point of my speech, which I will get to in due course, is that our time would have have been much better spent today if we considered motions and Bills that, first, dealt with the causes of crime and how to prevent crime; second, how we can help the victims of crime, and the Hon. Member seems to be in favour of that; and, third, how we can have better rehabilitation programs in prison so that when people leave prison they will go to a productive life and not back into a life of crime.

I will return to those in a minute, but I see many contradictions in the Hon. Member's speech. If he is really interested in those things, why should we have a referendum on capital punishment?

I am not dogmatically opposed to referenda on some matters but I do not think that a referendum or a plebiscite is the best way to settle or solve a complex emotional question in this country. Certainly it is not the best way to decide on the important issue of capital punishment.

In the British parliamentary system, which is part of our Constitution, it is not that it is unconstitutional to have referenda or plebiscites, but it is against the general spirit of our system. I think in all Canadian history, at the federal level, we have had two plebiscites, not referenda I make the distinction. Generally a referendum is when we allow all voters to vote, but the result of that vote becomes law without any further action by Parliament or town councils or legislatures. On the other hand, we have had plebiscites in the past 100 years of our history on two occasions, for conscription and with respect to our drinking laws. These were plebiscites. Once the vote was taken the Government still had to deal with the issue in Parliament. As you know, in the conscription plebiscite, the Government took action not quite in line with the plebiscite results because it felt it would have very badly divided the country. Also around the turn of the century, the same was done with the plebiscite on alcohol.

In Britain, the only time that I can recall that a plebiscite or referendum was taken was on the case of joining the Common Market, and again it was a plebiscite and not a binding referendum.

The fact that it is not normal in the British parliamentary system does not mean that it cannot be used. I maintain very strongly that it is the wrong way to deal with complex emotional issues.

During his speech the Hon. Member opposite referred to public opinion polls. He said public opinion polls have shown over and over again that the public in Canada favours capital punishment. I would ask this House, are we saying that we are favour of public opinion polls as a basis of governing this country?

Mr. Kempling: That is how you govern.

Mr. Pepin: No, we govern by vote.

Mr. Allmand: That is not the way Governments under the British parliamentary system have governed for over 600 years, and it is not the way they should govern. I would agree with the Hon. Member that too often today some Governments are attempting to govern by polls.

Mr. Kempling: You people do.

Mr. Allmand: I would submit that that is completely wrong. It negates the whole tradition of our system whereby we run on platforms; we run on principles of different views, a Conservative principle or a Liberal principle or Socialist principle or whatsoever. If we are elected, we govern through a policy of implementing the policies that we ran on.

It is completely contrary to the traditions of the British parliamentary system to govern by public opinion polls.

An Hon. Member: Hear, hear!

Mr. Allmand: With respect to this very complex and very emotional issue, it would seem to me that if we were to decide this issue by referendum, which is one of life and death—we are dealing here with the lives of individuals—the whole question would carry with it more emotion than light and reason.

Another argument that I give against having referenda or plebiscites settle this very important question is that much will depend on how you formulate the question. It is obvious that if you put out a public opinion poll or a plebiscite or a referendum in a community or in a country where there has been a problem of murder, where there have been some severe and horrible murders and the people are upset, and rightly so, they should be upset at horrible murders, but if you put out an opinion poll or a plebiscite in those communities immediately afterwards and asked, are you in favour or against capital punishment as the penalty for murder, of course they are going to say, yes. You are putting before a group of people who are upset by murders being committed in their community one solution to deal with the problem of murder, and asking them whether or not they agree.

I say how you put the question is very important. I have seen public opinion polls on this issue where instead of merely putting forward one solution to the problem of murder, the pollster put forward ten solutions. He says, we have a serious problem of murder in this country—this was back in the sixties—and here are some solutions: stricter gun laws, better community education programs for youth, better programs for alcoholics and drug abusers, and so on. He listed ten things and asked, would you put these in the priority in which you think they are most important in dealing with the problem of murder. In that type of poll, capital punishment came fourth or fifth, not at the top. Even then it was subject to emotional problems and lack of information and so on. I submit very strongly that this would be the wrong way to deal with this very complex and important issue.

The Hon. Member says that many of us changed our views on referenda when the Parti Québécois put the question of independence on a referendum in the Province of Quebec. I am a Member from the Province of Quebec. I am a citizen of Quebec. I never approved of that referendum as a way of settling that question. I thought it was completely wrong. I thought it was a way in which to appeal to the emotions and not to the reasons of the people of the Province. I would have much preferred that the whole question be dealt with within the National Assembly of Quebec and within the Parliament of this country, not by a referendum, and I stand by that today. Once we had the referendum, of course, we had to deal with it, and we fought hard on the "no" side of the question and we won, but it was not our preferred way of dealing with that question, not mine, in any case, as a citizen of Quebec.

Capital Punishment

• (1650)

I would like to comment on the Hon. Member's remarks with respect to the free vote which we had in 1976 on this issue. He questioned whether it was a free vote or not. I would like to tell him, since I was the Minister who introduced the Bill and had to pilot it through this Parliament, that as far as I was concerned, it was a free vote. I was on this side and I had a hang of a time getting the support I needed to get that Bill through. I recall the day I stood up in the House and answered the question and said, "yes, it will be a free vote for everyone except the Cabinet", because I thought if the Cabinet approved of the Bill, certainly it would not be a free vote for them. I was contradicted at the time by the House Leader and the Prime Minister who said it would be a free vote for everyone. In fact, we only won that vote by six votes, I believe, on the final reading of the Bill, and by 15 votes on the second reading. It was a very close vote. Thirty per cent of the Government caucus voted against the Bill. I believe, on the other side, 30 per cent of their caucus voted for the abolition, and almost the entire New Democratic Party voted for the Bill, and all the Social Credit Party voted against. But they should have been involved, Mr. Speaker, in the problems which I had on this side of the House when I had the Official Whip, the Whip of my own Party, going around trying to convince people to vote for retention". Despite the fact that several Members of this House voted against the Bill to abolish capital punishment, several of them were taken into the Cabinet afterwards, and one is our new President of the Liberal Party, Iona Campagnola, who voted against me on that issue as a backbencher. It was not held against her. No pressure was brought to bear. She was still brought into the Cabinet as an important and productive Member of our Caucus.

Mr. Darling: Look what happened to Gauthier.

Mr. Allmand: I did not hear what you said, I am sorry?

Mr. Darling: What happened to Jean-Robert Gauthier yesterday?

Mr. Allmand: I do not agree with what happened to him yesterday, but that is a different issue. I believe very strongly in consulting with my constituents and with the public of Canada. That is essential in our system. We consult, we go to public meetings, we listen to the population, but we listen to their arguments, we do not simply count heads. That is not our system of Government. We are elected to office on platforms with a political Party and we are expected to study questions in depth, to look at the pros and cons of a question, and in good conscience make a decision for the public good in Canada. We are not expected merely to count heads, which is suggested by this resolution. You go out and listen to the arguments, you debate. I have done that on many occasions in this country. And it was difficult to go into packed meetings where the people came with blood in their eye, and so on, because there had been a horrible murder in their community. It was right they were angry. I agree with them. I am angry myself when I hear of these awful murders. But you listen to the argument. Reason should prevail in our Government and not numbers.

What is suggested to me by the type of motion that is introduced today, what always is conveyed to me, is the so-called trial of Christ, where Pilate had Christ before him and it was his responsibility to make the decision for Christ, and the mob was shouting, "crucify Him. Crucify Him." So Pilate washed his hands and allowed Christ to be dealt with as the mob wanted and not in accordance with justice as he, who was responsible for Roman justice in that colony, should have done. That is what plebiscites, referenda and public opinion polls always suggest to me. It is mob rule and not rule by rationale and reason.

I would like to submit very strongly that there is no basis for reconsidering capital punishment at this time. Since the abolition of capital punishment, the murder rate in this country has steadily declined, not because capital punishment was abolished, but because lots of other things have happened. In 1975 there were 701 murders in Canada. In 1976, the year we abolished capital punishment, there were 668 murders. In 1977, there were 710 murders. This was a gradual increase, but in 1978 there were 658 murders. In 1979 there were 631 murders. In 1980 there were 593 murders. We have not received the final statistics for last year, but they declined again. Therefore, there has been a decline every year.

Mr. Darling: How about the attempted murders?

Mr. Allmand: I do not know what the number of attempted murders was before the abolition. That is a red herring, Mr. Speaker. Let them make their speeches, if they can, and I admit that the time is too limited today. We have no statistics on the attempted murders either before abolition or after abolition. The point I am making is that I can recall the debate very well. Members who were against the abolition said, "If you abolish capital punishment murderers will run amuck in the streets and the murder rate will go out of control." In fact it has not. The murder rate has gone down, thank God. Consequently, what we should be considering today is the question which the Hon. Member raised: how can we more effectively reduce the rate of murder in this country? What are the preventive measures which we can introduce to deal with murder? The issue is not what the penalty should be after a person is murdered, if we catch the criminal and find him guilty. The issue is: what should we do to prevent that murder in the first place; better policing, better rehabilitation, more effective alcohol control, drug control programs, better community recreation programs, and better housing in communities where crime is bred more rapidly than other communities. These are the things we should be concentrating on.

We should also be concentrating on how we should help the victims of crime. The Member was right when he discussed that issue. I agree with him 100 per cent. These are the kinds of things we should be discussing, how to better compensate the victims of crime, how to give them crisis centres, because a lot of murders are committed in families where women are battered by their husbands, along with their children. We should provide more assistance for that sort of situation. We should give better training to our social workers to take people out of crisis situations.

In addition, in accordance with the motion I put to the House on December 8, 1982. I believe the Government should set up an independent review group to examine the present 25-year minimum before eligibility for parole on first degree murder, and we should be looking at its impact on prisons and prison populations. And I believe such a review group should recommend new, more flexible provisions which will protect the public to the greatest extent possible, but at the same time provide a greater opportunity for rehabilitation for those serving sentences in prison.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, let me say that we should concentrate on the causes of murder and not the penalty, family support, urban environment, education, treatment of emotional disorders, alcohol, drugs, health care, community involvement, gun control, police training, pro-active policing, effective corrections programs, and so on. And there must be more concern, assistance, support and better compensation for the victims of crime, especially victims of violent crime. It is not just the criminal who is responsible for these crimes but, to a certain extent, all of us. Society is responsible because we fail every time there is violence in our society. I think most of us would admit that the supreme value in our society is human life. And if the supreme value is human life, then the organized state should never repeat the act of the criminal. A criminal justice system, based on revenge, is not appropriate to a civilized society. We must look for solutions that are humane and civilized, but also effective and ones which offer security to the population.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): The Hon. Member for Kootenay West rises on a point of order.

Mr. Lyle S. Kristiansen (Kootenay West): My point of order is simply this, Mr. Speaker, I would like the record to show, if you would allow me, that I rose as a representative of the New Democratic Party following the address of the Hon. Member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta (Mr. Friesen), to say that there was no attempt, and there is no attempt, on the part of my Party to attempt to duck this debate, as I am afraid that that question may arise if I had not made this statement at this time.

SHIPBUILDING

CALL FOR ANNOUNCEMENT OF NEW SHIPBUILDING ASSISTANCE ACT

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, in view of the fact that it takes nine months of preparation, planning and designing before the actual building of a ship can take place in any of our shipyards, and in view of the fact that shipbuilding orders have slowed down to a trickle because the Government has delayed and delayed its announcement of the new Shipbuilding Assistance Act, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Prince Edward-Hastings (Mr. Ellis):

That the Government cease its delaying tactics, cease playing cat and mouse with our shipyards, and immediately announce the long awaited provisions of the Shipbuilding Assistance Act.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

SPORTS

HENLEY REGATTA—PROPOSED TRANSFER OF VENUE TO MONTREAL

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Madam Speaker, earlier this year the Government recognized the Royal Canadian Henley Regatta by issuing a centennial commemorative stamp. Ninety-three of those events were rowed in St. Catharines on the Henley course there. It is now proposed that the Henley regatta be moved to Montreal, money being a factor. I therefore move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Erie (Mr. Fretz):

That Sports Canada be urged to intervene in the best interests of rowing and firmly establish that tradition, convention and good sportsmanship cannot be purchased by a mess of pottage.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

CHARTER OF RIGHTS

REVIEW URGED OF ONTARIO LABOUR LEGISLATION TO ENSURE CONFORMITY

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Madam Speaker, the Ontario Labour Relations Board decided last week to restrict activities which are totally in line with the traditional interest of the labour movement in communicating the broadest concerns of its members as workers and as citizens. In view of the fact that the Charter of Rights, which came into being with the full support of the Province of Ontario, specifically guarantees freedom of expression and freedom of association in Canada, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Beaches (Mr. Young):

That this House urge the Ontario Government to review its labour legislation to determine whether it ensures these fundamental rights to all citizens as guaranteed in the Charter.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

LAW OF THE SEA

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT RECOGNIZE CONTRIBUTION OF AMBASSADOR AND HIS TEAM DURING NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. Alexandre Cyr (Gaspé): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity, under the provisions of Standing Order 43.

The third Law of the Sea Conference ended December 10 of this year, when a convention was signed by 119 countries. Canada obtained a major victory during this conference, of which Canadians may be proud, and they should be especially proud of our ambassador and his team, who in twelve sessions negotiated an international convention that protects the interests of Canada.

S.O. 43

I therefore move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser) and the Hon. Member for Nanaimo-Alberni (Mr. Miller):

That this House recognize the contribution of the Ambassador, His Excellency Mr. Alan Beesley, and his team to the Law of the Sea Conference negotiations and congratulate them for the enormous work they have accomplished and the success they obtained for Canada and the international community.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Madam Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

AGRICULTURE

REPLACEMENT OF DEPARTMENTAL SCIENTISTS ELIGIBLE FOR RETIREMENT

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills): Madam Speaker, the Auditor General's report shows once again how the Liberal Government has sold out the heritage and future of our Canadian youth. In the Department of Agriculture, Research Branch, over 300 of the existing scientists will be eligible for retirement within four years, yet the Government has not made provision for their replacement. Therefore I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Erie (Mr. Fretz):

That the youth of Canada note once again how the Liberal Government's philosophy and practice have injured their futures as scientists in Canada through its failure to fund the training of scientists adequately.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

POLAND—CALL FOR ENDING OF MARTIAL LAW

Mr. Ron Stewart (Simcoe South): Madam Speaker, today marks the anniversary of the imposition of martial law in Poland which was imposed on December 13, 1981, bringing to a temporary halt the progress of the Polish people toward full human rights and political freedom. The situation in Poland a year later is still dark, but there are some hopeful signs that martial law may soon come to an end. Therefore I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie):

That this House urge the Polish authorities to end quickly martial law in that country, to agree to Lech Walesa's demand for a general amnesty of those who have been imprisoned for political reasons, and to resume negotiations with the Solidarity Trade Union and the Roman Catholic Church in Poland on reforms which would allow for economic, social and political freedom and progress in Poland.

EXTERNAL AID

PROPOSED CONSIDERATION OF UNICEF PARLIAMENTARY CHRISTMAS CARDS

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Madam Speaker, bearing in mind that 12,000 children per day in the world die of starvation and that here in the western hemisphere, in just one country, that of Brazil, 25 million children live on the streets, abandoned by their parents mostly for reasons of economy, and since UNICEF has done an outstanding, commendable job in bringing aid and assistance to the world's needy children, and since Members of Parliament generally send between several hundred and several thousand Christmas cards to friends and associates each year, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald):

That this Parliament encourage each of its political Parties to put forward a name, and that this all-Party Committee of three be asked to consider the advisability of approaching the UNICEF organization for a special production of parliamentary Christmas cards so that we might, concurrently with extending good wishes, assist the needy children of the world and, in the act of so doing, encourage many others to do likewise.

That this House urges the Government of Saskatchewan to continue with its land bank program in order that legal and individual rights of some 2,700 young farm families may continue, that the contracts which they now hold be maintained and honoured, and that they not be subjected to arbitrary Government intervention without recourse to the courts as is now the intention under its Bill C-46.

THIRTY-FIRST PARLIAMENT

BUDGET DIVISION ANNIVERSARY

Mr. Roger Simmons (Burin-St. George's): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Rarely do I resort to rhyme to make my point. However, as you will see, those I salute and the occasion I recall today clearly justify a bit of poetry:

Amazing John who, on this day
Just three short years ago,
Did forfeit gain for short-term pain
To put the boots to Joe.

When we've been here ten thousand years,
We'll still recall the time
That Walter's skill at counting failed,
And Liberals smiled, sublime.

CROWN CORPORATIONS

SCRUTINY OF FINANCES

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Madam Speaker, in the United States it was Watergate and Ellsberg; in Canada it is Crown corporations and an iceberg. With more people employed than Government, and spending $30 billion a year, the Auditor General perceptively stated that Crown corporations are a "hole in the taxpayers' pocket". Therefore I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Perth (Mr. Jarvis):

That the huge hole in taxpayers' pockets be sewed up by following Mr. Dye's recommendations that "Crown corporations' finances must be specifically subject to the scrutiny of Parliament."

NATIONAL DEFENCE

COLD LAKE AIR DISASTER—RADAR COVERAGE AT BASE

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Defence. Last Thursday the Minister appeared to be quite confused in answering a question about the tragic loss of two planes and two pilots at Cold Lake. I trust by now the Minister's staff has briefed him and he can answer today in a more cogent manner. Can the Minister of National Defence tell the House if, on December 3, when the planes disappeared, there was for a period of time no radar coverage in this controlled air space? Also, was that due to equipment or human failure?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member for Victoria is quite right. I was going to send a letter to him and also to the Clerk of the House of Commons today stating that in fact there was a mistake when I answered his question concerning the new system and the old; RATCOM versus TRAC. In my answer of December 9, 1982, the words RATCOM and TRAC should be reversed. What is TRAC is RATCOM and what is RATCOM is TRAC.

Mr. Nielsen: I hope it wasn't that way at the airport.

Mr. Lamontagne: I think it is important that you know the difference. I knew the difference but I misplaced the two terms. The main thing is that we have a new system that will improve tremendously our way of following our pilots flying at high altitudes.

I cannot answer the question asked by the Hon. Member for Victoria today because an investigation of the matter is currently in progress. We had quite a discussion among the air commanders and all others in the Defence Council this morning to find out exactly what happened. It is quite a mystery for us because everything which had been working was working adequately. As I mentioned to the Hon. Member the other day we do not cover by radar from the airfield itself the whole area where these two pilots were flying. These pilots could have been flying at a low altitude where radar does not cover them. Despite all these facts, I do not think that at the point where the investigation is at the moment there is any answer I can give to the Hon. Member for the disappearance of these two pilots.

Oral Questions

REQUEST THAT BOARD OF INQUIRY FINDINGS BE MADE PUBLIC

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Madam Speaker, there will, no doubt, be a military board of inquiry on this accident. And as the Prime Minister has directed Departments to act as if the Freedom of Information Act had been proclaimed, will the Minister ensure the House that the findings of the board of inquiry will be made public, thus ensuring that his Department will show the same degree of public responsibility that any private corporation or company is required to do?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows well, the findings of boards of inquiries are not normally made public because we gather considerable information some of which is confidential. If we make public the findings of boards of inquiries every time we have an investigation, then witnesses may not answer our questions, or may not give the proper answer, because they will be afraid the information will become public. But whatever information we can give to the Hon. Member so that he can clarify in his mind that everything which should have been done has been done, I will be very glad to see him and see what I can give him when the investigation is complete.

NATIONAL SECURITY

CASE OF CANADIAN PROFESSOR—REASON FOR SECURITY SERVICE POSITION

Mr. Chris Speyer (Cambridge): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Solicitor General who, during the past two weeks, has refused to give a full account of the Hambleton affair and has left many contradictions in his answers. I have a specific question for the Solicitor General. We know that after April 25, 1980, Hambleton made aware to the Security Service the fact that he, Hambleton, was passing NATO secrets on to the Soviets. The Solicitor General has indicated to this House, and has indicated outside of the House, that no deal was made, that there was no promise of immunity. If that is, in fact, the case, could the Solicitor General tell us why did the Security Service never return to the Department of Justice with the necessary evidence there would have been in order to initiate a prosecution?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Madam Speaker, that is a question that I have been asked before and that I have answered before.

Mr. Speyer: No, you have not.

Mr. Kaplan: When the Department of Justice and the Minister decided that there would be no prosecution, it was further decided that that information be communicated to Hambleton, that the mode of the operation should be changed from an investigation, which might have led to the laying of charges, into a counter-intelligence operation in which information would be obtained from Hambleton for the benefit of Canada's national security and that of friendly intelligence services.

Miss MacDonald: It was a deal then?

Mr. Kaplan: The Security Service already knew that if Olson, that if Hambleton was cautioned, he would refuse to answer NATO questions, because he had refused to answer NATO questions when he was cautioned, so that after April, it was agreed that he would not be cautioned, that he would give information on a basis in which it would not be very likely admissible in a prosecution against him. But it was clear to the Security Service and to the Attorney General of Canada that if any third party evidence turned up or could be found, they would go back to the Department of Justice and put the case to them again for the Attorney General's consent.

• (1420)

Mr. Speyer: I think answers such as this past one that the Solicitor General gave just indicate how constipated he is on this issue as well as on the Olson issue.

REPORT THAT BRITISH SECURITY URGED PROFESSOR TO RETURN TO CANADA

Mr. Chris Speyer (Cambridge): Madam Speaker, in The Toronto Star on Saturday, as a result of a London Times story, it was indicated that Scotland Yard's Special Branch met Hambleton in London at Heathrow Airport. At that time they wanted Hambleton to return to Canada. They did not want to prosecute him. We have been going on the assumption that the Brits wanted to prosecute Hambleton when he got to Great Britain.

In light of the answers given by the Solicitor General two weeks ago today that the fullest co-operation existed between our Security Service and the British Security Service, would the Solicitor General say whether or not the report that the Special Branch of Scotland Yard tried to talk Hambleton into going back to Canada is accurate?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Madam Speaker, obviously that is not information I can give.

Mr. Speyer: You should know.

Mr. Kaplan: I know, but I do not give answers for the Government of Great Britain. I give answers for the Government of Canada.

THE ECONOMY

REQUEST FOR INTRODUCTION OF RECOVERY PROGRAM

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. As the Minister knows, increased capital spending is a key element in any recovery program. The forecasts now made by Industry,

Trade and Commerce show that new investment by large corporations will decline by $2.4 billion next year, an even larger drop than we experienced in 1982. Given the fact that these forecasts point to a potential loss of hundreds of thousands of jobs in 1983, will the Minister agree that we have now arrived at virtually a crisis situation, and will he bring in some kind of massive recovery program before the Christmas recess?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I think that one very helpful first step in that regard will be for the House to pass the amendments to the Income Tax Act coming before the House this afternoon. This particular Bill provides for significant reductions in terms of individual and corporate tax. It would provide certainty in the business sector and would be quite helpful in ensuring that the private sector would know under what circumstances it will be operating in the next few months.

As far as the specific figures that the Hon. Member has referred to are concerned, he knows that these forecasts are only for the larger businesses. We are confident that the small business sector will see a turn-around. As the Hon. Member knows as well, the housing sector is certainly showing greater strength at the present time.

FORECAST OF UNEMPLOYMENT

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Madam Speaker, I suspect that when we look closely at the amendments to the Income Tax Act we will actually see a loss of jobs as a result of that legislation, as opposed to anything additional.

The Minister must admit that another year of decline in corporate investment will not only mean that unemployed people will not go back to work but those who are already working will likely lose their jobs in the realm of hundreds of thousands in 1983. Does the Minister have any idea of how many jobs we will see lost in 1983?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I have indicated that the level of unemployment in 1983 would remain high but that it would gradually decline below 12 per cent before the end of the year. That is a situation that would be similar to the one that is being forecast in the United States and in most industrialized countries over the course of the next year. We plan to do everything that we can to bring that level of unemployment down as fast as possible. Obviously we have to do it in terms of an international environment that would be favourable, while using all the resources of the provincial and federal Governments to stimulate the economy over the next year.

CONSEQUENCE OF REDUCTION IN CAPITAL INVESTMENT

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Madam Speaker, with all due respect to my hon. friend, if the Minister cannot make an accurate forecast, perhaps I can.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

• (1425)

Mr. Riis: Considering the fact that, in 1982, 500,000 jobs disappeared in Canada, will the Minister not agree that, with $2.4 billion lost in capital investment, much larger than in 1982, it would at least mean 80,000 fewer production jobs in Canada next year and, using the multiplier effect, another 200,000 jobs in the service sector? These figures do not even take into account the jobs lost as the result of an expected low level of consumer spending. Now, with over 280,000 jobs guaranteed to be lost next year, plus many more as the result of a downturn in consumer spending, how can the Minister continue to justify not bringing in a comprehensive recovery program before Christmas?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the only thing I can say is that I am confident that the New Democratic Party will be proven as wrong in this forecast as it has been proven in all its previous forecasts.

Some Hon. Members: We were not!

Mr. Lalonde: I would also indicate that the forecasts of not only the Department of Finance, but also of all the major, private institutions in Canada, are to the effect that, although there will still be a higher rate of unemployment next year, the rate of unemployment will decline during the course of the year, not increase. Therefore, rather than having an increase in the total percentage of unemployed, it is foreseen that in the course of 1983 the rate of unemployment will gradually go down toward the latter part of 1983. This being said, I have indicated before that it might be that, in the early part of 1983, we will still have a very high rate of unemployment indeed.

FISHERIES

CANCELLATION OF ENTERPRISE ALLOCATION SYSTEM FOR ATLANTIC FISHERY

Hon. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, who has now been able to come into the House. In 1982 the Department of Fisheries and Oceans established an enterprise allocation system for Atlantic Canada's offshore fishery. This commendable initiative gave each participant a quota to catch for the entire year and thus allowed for a rational plan for fishing, processing, marketing and financing. It stopped the frantic rush by everyone to get a maximum catch from a common quota in a very short time, which had created problems in processing, marketing, quality control, and had resulted in inefficient use of boats, manpower and working capital. On Thursday the Minister cancelled this system for 1983, opening up the much condemned "free for all" for the coming year.

Just what is he up to? Does he want the banks to call their loans? Does he expect anyone to want to go back to the chaos that was in existence before? Can the Minister clarify the reasons for cancelling this, as I said, commendable program?

An Hon. Member: Yes or no.

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Yes, Madam Speaker, the Enterprise Allocation Program, as the Hon. Member suggests, was established on a trial basis last year to the benefit of the offshore fleet. As the Hon. Member knows, at this moment there is a great uncertainty about the future of some of those companies. I have reached the conclusion pending the conclusion of this question concerning how the restructuring will develop, that I should wait until it is resolved before re-introducing this system which, as the Hon. Member said, has brought some positive improvement in the harvesting sector.

Mr. Fraser: Madam Speaker, the Minister, in his telex said that the reason that he did not want to proceed with this system was because of current instability in the industry. I want to remind the Minister through you, Madam Speaker, that there was plenty of instability all through 1982, but because of the fact of the system being in effect, that instability was at least diminished.

REQUEST THAT KIRBY TASK FORCE REPORT BE RELEASED

Hon. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Madam Speaker, it is common information in the fishing industry that the members of the Kirby Task Force were generally in support of enterprise allocation, but the Kirby Report is still secret. This allows the Minister to ignore the Report and it allows something else, Madam Speaker. It allows the Cabinet Committee that is studying it to launder the Report accordingly. What we want to know is when is the Report as originally submitted to the ad hoc Cabinet committee going to be released so that Parliament can tell what the Report said, as opposed to what the Minister may want to do before we get any chance whatsoever of seeing what those recommendations were.

• (1430)

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, I hope to be able to bring the Kirby Report before Cabinet in the very near future. On the other hand, the Hon. Member should realize that the question that he is touching upon is not part of the Kirby Report. The Kirby Report touches on some of the most fundamental and general problems that affect the fisheries in the Atlantic, exactly like the Pearse Report does for the Pacific Coast fisheries.

The question of the restructuring of the companies themselves is not within the Kirby Report. I must remind you again that the moment the fish is landed it becomes a question of the processing companies and is essentially a provincial matter. Of course we are ready to entertain helping that sector, like others.

I can tell the Hon. Member that at noon today I was meeting with a representative from one of the most important processing plants in the Altantic area, and he tells me that he understands fully that in view of the uncertainty we cannot renew those enterprise allocations before we know what is going to be their structuring.

REQUEST THAT PARLIAMENT BE CONSULTED ON POLICY

Hon. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Madam Speaker, the House knows that in January of this year, nearly a year ago, a Cabinet committee was going to implement a plan to salvage the Atlantic fisheries. They could not decide what to do, and so Mr. Kirby was appointed. He was going to report in July, then in September, then in November, and now possibly in January.

In view of the fact that the Minister of Veterans Affairs, a member of the Cabinet, has said that implementation of the Kirby Report would cost the taxpayers $100 million, and recent press reports quoting a source said that the bail-out is up to one-half a billion in debts and half as much again in working capital requirements, and the same source says that the ad hoc Cabinet committee is split, and in view of the almost incredible delay facing a fishery which everyone knows is in trouble, and knew it since the summer of 1981, when is the Minister going to present any policy for Atlantic Canada, and will Parliament have any say in it before it becomes policy?

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, as you have noticed, the Hon. Member referred very often to what he said are rumours. Obviously, I will not comment on rumours.

Secondly, when he says that the fishery is in difficulty, I hope that he is knowledgeable enough about the Atlantic fisheries to know that we have different fisheries in the Atlantic. Some are doing very well; others are in difficulty. As some have told me, maybe it is because they did not want to listen to my predecessor when he told them that it was unwise to over-expand.

The Kirby Task Force was established less than a year ago, and I am very confident that in the very near future the Government will make its Report public. I can assure you immediately that there will be a lot of room for consultation and input from all the different groups, including provincial Governments, if they want to co-operate in the implementation.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT ACT TO ASSIST ATLANTIC FISHING INDUSTRY

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. I am not going to deal with rumours. There are 40,000 fishermen in Atlantic Canada and 48,000 who work in fish plants, normally, many of whom are now unemployed. That is 98,000; and the fish plants owned by the Nickerson group, the Lake group and the Fishery Products group, three of the four main companies in Atlantic Canada, are all in jeopardy because those companies are on the verge of bankruptcy.

These are not rumours. The plant is closed at Harbour Breton, at St. Lawrence, at Fermeuse, at Ramea; they are going to close a major plant at Burin. In my district the plant at Trepassey is closed. There are thousands out of work, thousands of fishermen in jeopardy.

When is the inaction and the evasion and the escaping of responsibilities going to end? When is the Government going to act to save the Atlantic fisheries, the fishermen and the plant workers? The 12 months have now passed for these studies. When is the Minister and his Government going to take action? It is their responsibility, under the Constitution. They have refused to give the Provinces any responsibility.

Madam Speaker: Order, this period is for questions.

Mr. Crosbie: When is he going to act?

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, I am appalled to see the Hon. Member trying to make cheap political gains out of that question. When he speaks about our constitutional responsibility, surely, in view of the time that he has spent in politics, both in the provincial legislature and in Ottawa, he should know that the processing plants are not within the federal responsibility. It is the Province which has allowed, over the objection of the federal Government, over 25 processing plants to be built in the last four years, when we said there was no room for them. Today he is trying to put the blame on us. It is really quite reprehensible and objectionable, coming from him.

Secondly, when he says that for over a year now we have been waiting, let me remind him that only two weeks ago one of those three companies he has named from Newfoundland came to see us for the first time ever and asked for help, and we are studying their requests on the most urgent basis. So stop making cheap politics.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

GOVERNMENT SUPPORT FOR FISH PLANT AT ST. ANTHONY, NFLD.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Madam Speaker, I am appalled that we have a Minister of Fisheries who knows so little about this situation. The Minister does not even realize that it was the Government of Canada, through DREE, that financed all these plant expansions throughout Atlantic Canada to the tune of $46 million at least.

My supplementary to the Minister, who is unconcerned apparently about the unemployed plant workers and the fishermen, is very specific. The federal Government financed the operation of a fish plant at St. Anthony this year, only for this year—and 800 jobs are in jeopardy—through the Fishery Prices Support Board. The Government of Canada gave the Lake group a guarantee of $12 million or $13 million to carry them on, but the guarantee expires on December 31. If it is not renewed, the Lake group and thousands of people will be out of work on January 1, 1983. Is the Government taking any action to renew those guarantees? What is the Government's plan for the St. Anthony plant next year?

What is the Government going to do to meet its responsibilities in the fishing industry, because only this Government can take action. Its Ministers have complete constitutional responsibility. What are they going to do—stop evading the issue, and twisting and turning as you are.

Madam Speaker: Order.

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, I have heard a lot of inconsistencies coming from that Member of Parliament, but it is the first time ever that in the first question he says we have done nothing and in the second he says, "You have re-opened St. Anthony, you have cared about the Lake group by advancing over $15 million".

Mr. Crosbie: You did not advance a cent, you guaranteed it.

Mr. De Bané: He is the one reminding the House what we have done.

Mr. Crosbie: What are you going to do?

Mr. De Bané: I have never seen such blatant incoherence coming from the same Member.

Mr. Crosbie: What are you going to do?

Mr. De Bané: I would remind the Hon. Member that what we have done for St. Anthony, what we have done for the Lake group, we will continue doing, but I will not recommend to the Government any course of action before I get all the figures. At this moment, we have—

Mr. Crosbie: You got them. You have had them for months.

Mr. De Bané: You believe in the private sector. We have given a study to the private sector, to two big accounting firms, to get us all the figures. When we get them, the Government will decide on a course.

Mr. Crosbie: Another study.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): They will die of starvation.

Mr. De Bané: It is surprising. If he does not understand, I can tell you, Madam Speaker, that I have met with the Premier of Newfoundland and he understands fully that no course could be decided upon before we get those figures. When he speaks about all those municipalities I can tell him—

Madam Speaker: Order.

Some Hon. Members: More, more!

Mr. Crosbie: You are doing nothing. Get out and take Trudeau with you—MacEachen as well.

• (1440)

POSITION OF RESOURCE-SHORT PLANTS

Mr. Ted Miller (Nanaimo-Alberni): Madam Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. Last week at the NFFAWU Conference, the Minister of Fisheries for Newfoundland made the statement that he had met with the federal Minister of Fisheries and Oceans and that they had agreed there would be no quota allocation to the major companies unless those companies were prepared to give some guarantee that resource-short plants in Newfoundland would have access to some fish to process. In light of the statement of the Newfoundland Minister of Fisheries, who was against quota allocations, what is the mechanism by which resource-short plants such as those as Burin, Grand Bay and Ramea are going to be guaranteed some products this winter for shore workers and plant workers?

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, it is true that the Newfoundland Minister of Fisheries suggested that at the last meeting of the Ministers of Atlantic Fisheries with myself. Mr. Jim Morgan suggested that the Enterprise Allocation Program not be renewed pending the uncertainty which is prevailing at the moment in the processing sector. As to the other point to which the Hon. Member has alluded, I raised that topic after having met with the mayors of the Southwest coast of Newfoundland who gave me the idea it may be worth exploring the possibility of allocating the quota, not on the fishermen, not on the boat, not on the company, but on the community. I promised to bring that to the attention of the other Ministers. We have agreed among ourselves to study that possibility.

IMPACT ON INDIVIDUAL COMMUNITIES

Mr. Ted Miller (Nanaimo-Alberni): Madam Speaker, the Kirby Task Force has some serious reservations about resource allocations to specific communities and specific plants. I would like to clarify with the Minister just how he perceives that those communities, because of an over-capacity in the processing industries, the ones that he met with, will be guaranteed a continuation of employment in the coming fishing season. The Minister has not been specific in his comments today on how we will guarantee communities such as Burin that they will continue to have a resource to process.

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, of course I cannot be specific. That suggestion was made to me by various town councillors and mayors about two weeks ago. I cannot now comment on it in detail. I asked my Department to study whether it is feasible, and to determine what are the different aspects of it. After that we will study the implications. I will then meet with my counterparts, the Atlantic Ministers of Fisheries, and hopefully we can then have a position based on consensus.

INDUSTRY

INQUIRY WHETHER FISHERIES AGREEMENT WITH QUEBEC WILL BE CONTINUED

Mr. Alexandre Cyr (Gaspé): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. In 1977, the Government of Canada signed a subsidiary agreement with the Province of Quebec for the development of infrastructure. With respect to fisheries, the agreement provided for four service centres with winter pounds. Should Quebec be unable to make preparations for the development of infrastructures in these fishing centres before March 31, 1984, the date of expiry of the agreement, could the Minister inform the House whether this agreement with the Province of Quebec will be extended or renewed, so as to enable that Province to receive the Federal contribution which amounts to 60 per cent?

[English]

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, the particular general development agreement under which the service centre component receives its money has been extended for 2 years already. As the Prime Minister announced on January 12, it is highly unlikely that the Government will renew this particular agreement. If I were a Member of this House from that designated region, I would do everything I could to encourage the Quebec Government to fulfil its part of the commitment prior to March 31, 1984.

CRIMINAL CODE

CONNECTION BETWEEN PORNOGRAPHY AND CRIME—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Justice. The Minister will be aware that a great many Canadians are concerned about hard core pornography. Does the Minister accept personally that the latest research shows there is now a connection between pornography and crimes against women and children, and what are his plans in this area?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice): Madam Speaker, I share the Hon. Member's concern about pornography. I do not think that the scientific studies that have been made so far are absolutely clear on what are the social consequences. However, we have to assume as a working hypothesis that there are consequences and that they are serious. We can regard that as one of the bases of our present law. I think what the hon. gentleman is referring to is whether there should be additional laws beyond those which presently exist. That is very much on my mind at the moment. Indeed, in the new session of Parliament I hope that we will be able to make our position very clear on that point.

CUSTOMS AND EXCISE

&ED1764;-1 IMPORTATION OF PORNOGRAPHIC MATERIAL—INSTRUCTIONS TO CUSTOMS OFFICERS

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of National Revenue on the same subject. The Ontario Provincial Police have objected that one of the problems with pornography is that Canada Customs officers are too lax in what they permit to come into the country. Will the Minister tell us what his specific directions are to his customs officers, and what advice he has received on this subject from his colleague, the Minister of Justice?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member is aware that our customs officers are responsible for implementing a schedule to the Customs Tariff which refers to the provisions of the Criminal Code regarding pornography. In the implementation of these provisions, customs officers follow generally known guidelines based on the approach of the Criminal Code to pornography and also on court decisions in cases of seizures and especially in the case of appeals. I think that to date, the guidelines and the manner in which customs officers have applied the tariff items in accordance with the spirit of the Criminal Code, have been generally accepted by Canadians.

NATIONAL SECURITY

CASE OF CANADIAN PROFESSOR—TRANSMISSION OF UNITED STATES MILITARY SECRETS

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice, who can again demonstrate his agility on his feet. My question is with regard to the Hugh Hambleton matter. People across Canada are asking themselves why in fact there is no prosecution of spies in Canada, particularly in this instance. In light of the fact there is now clear evidence of the transmittal by Mr. Hambleton of American secrets to the KGB on Canadian soil, is it the opinion of the Minister that there is no prosecution available in Canada that would be successful for the transmittal of American military and other secrets in Canada?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice): Madam Speaker, I am not sure of the facts to which my hon. friend is referring. I do not have the report of the case in Britain. My impression from the newspapers is that he was convicted, not of passing U.S. secrets, but of NATO secrets. To the best of my information, that concerned the time he spent at NATO. If my hon. friend is asking whether we would charge him in Canada with the same things for which he has already been charged and convicted in the United Kingdom, I would be interested in having his opinion on whether that would be a violation of double jeopardy or not, but certainly I have not as of now, because of a lack of evidence, decided that question.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: That is not double jeopardy; it is double talk.

CIRCUMSTANCES UNDER WHICH PROFESSOR WAS QUESTIONED

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Solicitor General. After April 25, 1980, Mr. Hambleton gave a great deal of information to the RCMP security branch. Why did the Solicitor General not return to the Attorney General to obtain a legal opinion as to whether Mr. Hambleton should have been prosecuted at that time? Second, why did the Minister not ask for a legal opinion from the Attorney General on whether the circumstances under which Mr. Hambleton gave this information constituted an inducement?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Madam Speaker, as I have indicated, the ground rules that were established for further questioning of Hambleton were that he would not be cautioned because, when he had been cautioned in the past, he had refused to give information about his role with NATO; that he would not be cautioned but that his co-operation would be sought. It was sought. It was forthcoming. Valuable information was obtained from him about NATO, but no third-party information was ever obtained by the Security Service, although it was agreed that, if further third-party information had been obtained, they would have indeed returned to the Attorney General of Canada and once again sought his consent.

ELEMENTS OF BASIS FOR QUESTIONING

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): So we are clear on the elements of the deal, is the Solicitor General saying that, on his side of the deal, the Government of Canada said that Hambleton would not be cautioned, and on Hambleton's side of the deal he said in exchange for that undertaking he would provide information? Are those the fundamental elements of the deal?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Madam Speaker, there was no deal, as I have indicated everytime I have been asked that question. Hambleton gave his information because he was encouraged to do so. He was aware, I am sure, that without a caution that information would not be admissible. But the reason it was not admissible was not because of any agreement with him. It was not admissible because of my understanding and because of the advice we have had about the implications of the law.

Oral Questions

BRITISH DETECTIVES' WISH TO HAVE PROFESSOR RETURN TO CANADA

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): To coin a phrase, I find the Solicitor General incredibly naive. He tells us that in exchange for the undertaking that there would not be a caution, Hambleton gave information, but that was not a deal. Well, it is a deal in any other man's language, and I do not know why the Solicitor General will not admit in the House of Commons that he made a deal, and then, having done that, why he will not tell the House of Commons and the people of Canada what the consequences to Canada were of his deal.

Let me come to the question of the British. The Solicitor General earlier in this House today said he knew why British detectives tried to urge Hambleton to come back to Canada. He knew, but he will not tell Parliament. That is what he said. Will the Solicitor General tell us whether the immunity which Canada had granted Hambleton influenced the British detectives' decision to send him back to Canada?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Madam Speaker, Canada did not give an immunity to Hambleton. I have indicated repeatedly that it was very clear to officials on our side, in Justice and in the RCMP, that if any basis could be found for prosecuting Hambleton after April 25, they would seek to do so. That is why I cannot understand how the Opposition can characterize that as a deal. The Government did not agree to give up anything to Hambleton in return for getting information, and Hambleton gave his information to them without any expectation that he would be any better off or any worse off for giving information. Therefore, there was not a deal within that very simple definition. There was no consideration coming from the Government, and there was no consideration expected by Hambleton.

REASONS FOR NOT LAUNCHING PROSECUTION

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): If the Government of Canada did not give up the right to prosecute Hambleton, why did they not prosecute him?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): The Government of Canada did not prosecute Hambleton because no additional third-party evidence was forthcoming after April 25. They got a considerable amount of information of value. They shared that information with the Government of the United Kingdom and other friendly intelligence services, but it was not information which would have been admissible in a court in Canada, in the opinion of the law officers of the Crown, by the ground rules which they had set out in the meeting at which the decision of April was reached.

NATURE OF ARRANGEMENT FOR QUESTIONING

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, a very brief supplementary. Was the arrangement his officials had with Hambleton—I will not call it a "deal" if the Minister insists—that no prosecution would be brought by the Government of Canada except on the basis of third-party evidence?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Madam Speaker, we are learning the extent of the ignorance of the Leader of the Opposition of the law. It was not an agreement at all.

An Hon. Member: He is way ahead of you.

Mr. Kaplan: It was the effect of obtaining information from Mr. Hambleton without caution, and it was obtained from him without caution because efforts over a period of months to obtain information from him about NATO after caution had been unsuccessful. If the RCMP had been able to get his NATO connection from him before going to the Attorney General, they would have presented it to the Attorney General. They were unable to get it from him because he refused to answer questions relating to his role in NATO. After the meeting of April, 1980, the RCMP went back to Hambleton and told him of the decision which had been reached by the Attorney General. They asked for his co-operation, and Hambleton established a relationship with them which produced that information, and very good value was made of it, as the Hon. Member knows.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

LEVEL OF UNEMPLOYMENT AMONG NATIVE PEOPLES

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. I am sure the Minister is aware that last year's federal labour market study by David Dodge confirmed that in western Canada 20 per cent of the labour market growth in this decade will be among native people. Recent federal studies in British Columbia and Saskatchewan have shown that off-reserves unemployment among native Indians is three to six times higher than among the non-native population. In northwestern British Columbia, where a third of the native people in the Province reside, reserve unemployment has now exceeded 90 per cent for several months.

A report is now before the Minister from his own Advisory Council. I would like to ask the Minister whether or not he concurs with the recommendation that all funds and programs should be turned over to the native people in relation to employment programs, or does he accept 90 per cent unemployment as their lot in life?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, we have never accepted that as being the condition of native people. My colleague, the Minister of Indian Affairs, and many other Ministers in this Ministry, have spent a lot of time and effort working with native organizations to try to improve their ability to create jobs and economic development, including many efforts which we are making in my own Department, by special training programs and the special allocation of job-creation plans, which the Hon. Member is spending in his own constituency, as he well knows. As far as the report from the Advisory Council is concerned, I just received it about a week ago and we are now looking at it in the Department. As soon as we have given that report a careful and proper assessment, we will let this House and other Members know the results.

SENATE FUNDING

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Madam Speaker, my supplementary is directed to the Prime Minister. He has a rather unique employment strategy under way at this time. I understand that during the Christmas break 15-odd Senate vacancies are going to be filled. The Prime Minister has made an offer to his friends across the floor, the Conservatives, for four of those slots, and they found some unemployed millionaires to fill them. I wonder if the Prime Minister would not agree in principle that, with one and a half million Canadians out of work, and those Canadians have done just as much for this country as anyone at present or in the future in that Senate, that money should be directed towards those million and a half unemployed rather than toward some political hacks.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the record would have to be set straight in many regards in relation to that question. The premise to it is completely false. In so far as filling vacancies in the Senate is concerned, Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member knows that Members of the New Democratic Party in the past have been even offered seats in the Cabinet, and none of them dare get that close to exercising responsibility, because—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: —it is much easier to criticize from the Opposition than it is to bear the responsibilities of governing.

HOUSING

REPORTED SLASHING OF COMMITMENT TO NON-PROFIT AND SOCIAL HOUSING

Hon. David Crombie (Rosedale): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister responsible for Canada Mortage and Housing, I wonder if I might direct my question to the Minister of State for Finance. The Minister is probably aware that in the last couple of days there have been published reports which indicated the federal Government was going to slash its commitment to non-profit and social housing in the Province of Ontario from 2,800 to 2,200 units. In light of the fact that the vacancy rate in the Metropolitan Toronto area alone is less than 1 per cent, and we have 25 per cent unemployed in the construction industry, I would like to ask the Minister whether or not that figure is correct and, if so, how does he justify such an outrageous policy.

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, I do not have the advantage of the reports which the Hon. Member for Rosedale has at his fingertips today, but the material is quite novel. It is somewhat surprising and a little bit shocking, in view of the efforts which the former Minister responsible for CMHC to the House made, for example, in increasing the amount of funds which were available to non-profit and social housing over the last three years. It has been a priority of this Government, and I dare say it will continue to be a priority.

• (1500)

Mr. Crombie: Madam Speaker, shocking is the word for this, and that is why I am pleased to have this Minister respond to the question.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER MEET WITH TORONTO OFFICIALS

Hon. David Crombie (Rosedale): Madam Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of State for Finance if he would use his good offices and speak to his colleague who is responsible for CMHC about this. Would he remind him that we are talking about five specific projects which have been slashed by the City of Toronto as a consequence of this policy, and that two projects dealing with emotionally disturbed children and handicapped people have also been slashed as a result of this policy? The Mayor and the Chairman have asked for a meeting with the Minister and, so far, have been unable to get one. Would the Minister ask his colleague who is responsible for housing if he would meet with those officials? Would he see what he can do?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, I am sure that the Minister, like all former Ministers with the responsibility, has to respond not only to representatives from the City of Toronto, for example, but to Canadians right across the country. In that vein, since November last year the Government has allocated some $900 million to assist people with housing problems in all areas of the economy, all areas of the country and all Provinces. I am sure that the Minister who is now responsible for housing will continue that concern.

LABOUR RELATIONS

NORDAIR STRIKE—PROGRESS OF NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Labour. In view of the tremendous inconvenience to travellers during the past five or six months due to the Nordair strike, and the busy holiday season ahead, is he able to say whether the strike will end soon and when services will be resumed to those cities that are served only by Nordair?

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Minister of Labour): Madam Speaker, considerable progress was made last week, leading on

Order Paper Questions

Friday to a finalization of a protocol for a return to work and an agreement leading to a settlement. However, these two documents have not been signed. The union leadership will put the two documents to the membership for ratification during this week. If—and I repeat if—the membership will ratify the two documents, then it is possible that service by Nordair will resume by next week.

VACANCY

BRANDON-SOURIS—HON. WALTER DINSDALE BY DECEASE

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Madam Speaker, if this is the appropriate time I should like to give notice, pursuant to Section 10 of the House of Commons Act, that a vacancy has occurred in the representation of the House of Commons for the electoral district of Brandon-Souris in the Province of Manitoba by reason of the unfortunate and untimely death of Hon. Walter Dinsdale, the Member for that district.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 4,516 and 4,517.

[Text]

DREDGING IN WEST GREEN HARBOUR, NOVA SCOTIA

Question No. 4,516—Mr. Crouse:

1. What is the amount approved for dredging at West Green Harbour, Shelburne County, Nova Scotia in 1982?

2. What is the anticipated date when dredging operations will be carried out?

3. What is the extent of the area to be dredged?

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): 1. The amount approved for dredging for 1982/83 fiscal year is $9,500 for land based dredging. In addition to the land based dredging, Public Works Canada Floating Plant No. 16 is currently doing channel dredging.

2. Dredging operations began on October 20, 1982. It is anticipated the work will be completed by late January or early February, 1983.

3. A channel will be dredged 450 metres long by 20 metres wide to a depth of two metres below low water by floating plant. Approximately 8,700 cubic metres of material will be removed. In addition, land based dredging will be carried out around the wharf.

DREDGING IN LUNENBURG HARBOUR, NOVA SCOTIA

Question No. 4,517—Mr. Crouse:

1. What is the amount to be allocated for dredging in Lunenburg Harbour, Nova Scotia during the fiscal year 1982-83?

2. What is the anticipated date when dredging operations will be carried out?

3. What is the extent of the area to be dredged?

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): 1. There will be no contract dredging done. Dredging will be done by Public Works Canada.

2. It is expected that Public Works' dredge No. 400 will be at Lunenburg to commence dredging on, or before December 15, 1982.

3. The dredging will consist of 22,000 cubic metres of material to a depth of six metres below low water ordinary spring tide. This will provide a berthing area of 30 metres wide by 110 metres long on the northern side of the government wharf as well as a dog leg shaped section of 310 metres long by 50 metres wide, which will be dredged in the turn basin.

[English]

Mr. Smith: I ask, Madam Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker: The questions enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

INCOME TAX

AMENDMENTS TO STATUTE LAW

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance) moved that Bill C-139, an Act to amend the statute law relating to income tax (No. 2), be read the second time and referred to a Committee of the Whole.

He said: Madam Speaker, I am indeed very pleased to open the debate on this major Bill to amend the Income Tax Act. I want to discuss its provisions in both broad and specific terms. Not only is this legislation of great importance because of the positive changes it proposes in the tax system, but its passage will end the uncertainty that has lingered for too long on this subject. The Bill also provides an important example of the expanding role of consultation in shaping a tax system that works better for all of us.

As you know, the measures before us today represent the culmination of a process begun with the November, 1981 budget, the June, 1982 budget and my economic statement to the House on October 27 this year. Since becoming Minister of Finance three months ago, I have looked forward to the day when we could get on with this final stage of the job. The time span covered by the process reflects the intensive and comprehensive consultation that has been followed.

My predecessor and I met directly with a wide range of individuals and organizations who had advice to give on tax issues. Members of the House and of the Senate have contributed greatly to the process through both formal and informal consideration of many of the issues. The Finance Committee of the House worked through the summer and reported in October. The Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce also held hearings on the original ways and means motion. The Lortie Committee of outside experts has made a valuable contribution on the questions of inflation and taxation of personal investment income. Several other groups of outside tax experts and private sector representatives were appointed to examine important tax proposals.

The proof that all that consultation was for real is in the Bill itself. We asked for a lot of advice and we received it. More to the point, we accepted a lot of that advice and I will discuss some of those adjustments in just a few minutes.

We will continue to work to improve the consultative process in order to make the tax system more effective in achieving many important goals. We want to make the process more accessible to taxpayers. You will note, for example, that we have made available for the first time explanatory notes on the measures contained in the Bill. Those notes are written in a language that the average taxpayer can understand when he finds that a particular tax provision applies to him.

We have also made available draft regulations relating to the taxation of life insurance policies and annuity contracts. This is an area of particular complexity. By broadening the base on which budget decisions are made, we can look forward to both an improved process and improved results.

With this Bill today we are proposing commonsense management of the tax system. We have taken account of both the difficult current economic circumstances and the need to encourage a more efficient and productive economy through a tax system that is fair to taxpayers.

To accomplish those goals we must give immediate priority to creating a stable tax environment. Accordingly, the measures before us today reflect a number of decisions to delay or modify initiatives which, however worthy in their own right, would have created unwarranted disruption in a particularly difficult period for the economy.

• (1510)

As I have noted, there has been a lot of public debate about the Bill. Some of it has been highly emotional. It is understandable that particular groups and individuals should object strenuously to tax changes affecting them, and obviously it is understandable that people do not like to pay taxes. There is nothing new about this in the history of the world.

I believe that Canadians as a whole understand that their Government cannot continue to spend more and more while it taxes them less and less. Equally they understand that taxes cannot be lowered for some without being raised for others. It is the job of the Minister of Finance, of the Government and of Parliament to weigh the merits of this or that special interest against the good of society as a whole.

Therefore, before getting down to specifics, I believe it would be extremely worthwile to look beyond the merits or acceptability of individual measures to specific interest groups and to focus on the fundamental thrust of this Bill.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, this Bill is based on the principle that the Canadian tax system is better off with lower tax rates applied to a broader income base. I firmly support this principle and I think it would be difficult to disprove it. Although many changes have been made to the Bill during the last few months, that same principle continues to be reflected in the tenor of the legislation before the House today, namely, that we should try to broaden the tax base and thus reduce tax levels. Actually, a tax system that rests on a broad base and provides for lower taxation rates is not superior in itself, but it is less likely to disrupt the market, to discourage individuals from saving, working and investing, in short, less likely to interfere with market operations and the rational allocation of resources.

We have heard a great deal about incentives. The basic incentives of our economic system are those created by the market, not by the tax system. The notion that a good dose of incentives would create a streamlined, flourishing and highly productive economy is simply unacceptable, since it would very probably lead to the creation of a motley group of overlapping and contradictory preferential measures.

I shall, if I may, clarify my position on this issue. I am not proposing, and I am not in favour of, a system totally devoid of tax incentives. In fact, even if we tried to achieve this, we would still have a system that would contain a certain number of incentives. A glance at the tax laws of almost any industrialized country in the world shows us that there are always a certain number of incentives in certain specific sectors. Some people think, and they are wrong, that the Government is trying to get rid of these incentives. I hasten to say that this is absolutely untrue and has no basis in fact. Even with the amendments we are proposing today, many incentives still remain in our tax legislation, and in fact, this Bill puts greater emphasis on some of those incentives. In fact, it has the advantage of reinforcing the impact of the remaining incentives and making them more effective. The proliferation of incentives in our tax system has unfortunately added to the daunting complexity of the system itself, and has aroused considerable criticism during the past few years.

I think the system should be further simplified, although we must not forget that it will necessarily reflect the complexity of the world we live in. Furthermore, our desire to stabilize the tax environment unavoidably leads to some degree of complexity, which is evident in the wording of the legislation itself. Insofar as incentives continue to be a part of the system, they will continue to render it more complex. Nowhere has this been as obvious, perhaps, as in the small business sector. Year after year, Finance Ministers have received representations aimed at improving the tax system as it applies to small businesses in Canada, and year after year, they have proposed adjustments to that same tax system. The net result is, that today, we have a tax system for small businesses that is terrifying in its complexity, and that we shall now have to renew our efforts to take a less complex approach to small business taxation.

[English]

In effect, efforts have been made to simplify the Bill before the House today. The revised small business dividend tax measure about which I will speak in a moment is a good example. Moreover, I invited the Canadian Tax Foundation to suggest alternative approaches to tax simplification, with particular concentration on the issue of the taxation of small business. I am happy to report that the Canadian Tax Foundation accepted my invitation and that it is preparing itself to work on the very issue in the next few months. It may well be impossible to make major headway in simplifying the tax law until we are again prepared to address the issue of eliminating more special provisions, broadening the tax base, and reducing tax rates.

For example, much, if not all, of the complexity in the small business tax system arises because of the special tax rate which provides over $1.2 billion a year to small businesses and is being enriched in this Bill. The fact is that the small business tax system would be much simpler if tax rates were the same as those for other corporations, just as unincorporated small businesses are taxed like other individual taxpayers. I am not suggesting that incentives to small businesses are a bad thing, and I doubt if anyone would suggest it, but it underlines the point that tax complexity is one of the prices to be paid for special treatment of any group.

Before dealing with some of the specific measures and adjustments in the Bill, permit me a further word on the subject of consultation. Some people have interpreted the Government's response to the consultation process as a sign of weakness. Some have catalogued the number of changes made as a result of the process and interpreted it as a sign that the whole Bill should or would be withdrawn. With all due respect, I say that this is irresponsible. I suppose it is the old game in politics of being damned if you do and damned if you don't.

Mr. Blenkarn: If you have a bad Bill, you withdraw it.

Mr. Lalonde: The Government's responsiveness is a sign of its commitment to consultation and of its repectiveness to constructive comment. I will illustrate that point by citing the Government's response to particular issues raised by the House committee and many other groups and individuals. My colleague, the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Cosgrove), will address in detail the consultation and response that has been made on the taxation of life insurance. I would like to thank my colleague and many of our backbenchers for their contribution in the analysis of this very complex and very difficult issue. I would like to express my appreciation to them for the excellent work which they have done in bringing before the House measures that I think meet most, if not all, the objections raised to previous proposals. I would merely cite this area of life insurance as evidence that significant adjustments can be made while preserving the basic intent of broadening the tax base in a fundamentally fair and efficient manner.

Another example. The November budget imposed a tax on dividend distributions by small business with a very specific and defensible purpose. The aim is to ensure that income withdrawn from a small busines for personal use of owners is taxed in the same way as other income, including hard-earned wages and salaries.

Mr. Lambert: That is nonsense.

Mr. Lalonde: Few have disputed the basic purpose of this tax.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Darling: Come on, thousands have.

Mr. Lalonde: You see another example across the aisle of people who are criticizing before hearing it all, Mr. Speaker. The measure was criticized for its complexity and also for its application to dividends paid out of income earned before the measure was introduced.

Mr. Blenkarn: You withdrew it.

Mr. Lalonde: That is right. I am glad to hear that. What we have done is to take account of those criticisms and representations. That issue was raised by several organizations: for instance, the Canadian Institute of Chartered Accountants; the Canadian Bar Association; the Canadian Federation of Independent Business; the CMA; the Tourism Industry Association of Canada.

Mr. Darling: Why didn't you forget about it then?

Mr. Lalonde: I invite my hon. friend to read at least the explanatory notes if he cannot read the Bill. He will find that we have taken into account those representations and amended the Bill. The Bill before us today does address those very concerns. The tax applies only to dividends paid out of income earned after 1982. We are not taxing dividends that have been accumulated in the past. This and other technical adjustments have allowed for significant simplification of these rules. This is a very important example of how the process of consultation can be carried on effectively and how we can end up with a better system, one less complex but which will at the same time be fairer to the average taxpayer. It will make the Canadian taxpayer, whether he is taking his money in the form of dividends or whether he is getting it in the form of wages and salaries, feel that he is being treated equitably and fairly and that there is no undue advantage to one taxpayer because he happens to get his money in one form rather than in another form.

Another area that raised concern was the question of the liability of a director of a company. This was addressed in the November, 1981 budget. That budget proposed to expand the liability of a director by imposing joint and several liability on directors where the corporation fails to withhold various payroll and non-resident taxes. The House Finance Committee noted that the Canadian Bar Association considered the scope of the application too broad. Similar representations were made by other groups. In response, we have amended the proposal to include a due care and diligence test to ensure that innocent directors are not adversely affected in cases where taxes are withheld but not remitted.

In response to advice from the Finance Committee of this House and various professional associations, the change in treatment of professionals' work in progress will not apply to professionals who are ineligible for the low small-business tax rate or who would be ineligible if they were incorporated. This includes doctors, dentists, lawyers, accountants, veterinarians and chiropractors, among others, and will mean that many professionals will not have to face the complexity and the paper burden represented by evaluating every file which they have on record at the end of every year. That measure has been abandoned, and this decision, I would argue, has been very well received by all parties concerned.

Mr. Darling: It was stupid in the first place.

Mr. Lalonde: Although not part of this legislation, I would like to say a word about the proposed move of the federal sales tax from the manufacturers' to the wholesale level. This is an issue of importance for both small and large business. In response to representations, the introduction of this measure is being delayed. This will provide time for further consultation with industry representatives who suggest that a modified proposal might achieve our objectives of improving the tax structure and removing some serious biases in favour of imported goods over those manufactured in Canada. I have invited interested associations to designate their representatives, and I expect to be able to announce the composition of that task force in the next few days. We will see this further phase of consultation going ahead soon. Again, what is required is rational debate and rational and thorough examination of an issue that is very complex.

My colleagues in this House will no doubt have read press reports put out by business groups who have complained that we have not proceeded with this measure aimed at transferring the federal sales tax from the manufacturers' level to the wholesale level. On the other hand, I and Members of this House have been receiving many representations from other business groups saying "Don't do a thing; don't proceed with this now".

In effect, we have a strong division of views among the business community in this regard. We have sectors, such as the auto parts industry in particular, which claim that the present regime favours imports at the expense of domestically produced parts. Also we have a number of businesses, retail and wholesale, that say they cannot afford to assume an additional burden at the present time, that there must be a better way. So we agreed to give them some time. As a matter of fact, I have indicated that we would give them until at least the middle of 1984, the next 18 months, to sit down in an attempt to work out between themselves as well as with the Government a better way of doing it.

• (1530)

One fact which must be made clear is that we will not be able to continue indefinitely with the present arrangement. Clearly, I am sure any Party in the House would not want to encourage this direction of favouring imports rather than Canadian production in certain sectors in particular. Instead of telling the Government to abandon its notion of taxation at the wholesale level, we must all try to find a better solution than what is in place at the present time. I recognize that this is not a particularly easy task since it is a complex problem which implies changing some of the traditional, well-established practices of many businesses. Some of these businesses have been doing well with the present regime by avoiding some requirements that they may be faced with under a different regime.

Again, the House will be invited in due course, after those consultations have taken place, to consider a changed system, which I hope will carry broad support because I do not think there is much disagreement over the fundamental objectives being pursued in these particular amendments.

To underline the Government's commitment to consultation and stability in the tax system, I have also made clear again that the proposal will not be implemented before the legislation on wholesale tax receives Royal Assent after being passed through both Houses of Parliament.

The consultation process has also led to significant adjustments in proposals affecting the taxation of personal investment incomes. The proposed restriction of deductibility for interest expense has been dropped on the advice of a committee of prominent tax professionals. We will also be proceeding with draft legislation for a registered shareholder investment plan under which the taxation of capital gains will be limited to the real after inflation gain. The Lortie Committee, to which I have referred already and which endorsed such a plan as proposed by my predecessor, has also proposed a major study of the desirability of adjusting the taxation of business income for inflation. We hope to proceed in that direction shortly. This will clearly be an important area of exploration in the continuing effort to improve the tax system in an orderly, consultative manner.

I have already noted that the Government remains committed to special measures to assist small business in spite of the associated problem of tax complexity. This support of small business is one goal that this Government has always been committed to. Today, I would like to give a very clear renewed commitment to this support, and since my appointment I have made it a point of consulting quite frequently and regularly with the official spokesmen representing various areas of small business in this country.

A very significant example of the commitment of this Government to help small business is provided in this Bill. The amount of income subject to the low small-business tax rate is being raised from $150,000 to $200,000 annually and from $750,000 to $1 million in total retail earnings. These measures should be of substantial help to the Canadian small business sector at the present time.

As Members know, in the case of manufacturing profits the tax rate for small business corporations is 10 per cent as compared to 30 per cent for larger corporations. For other types of active business income, the small business rate is 15 per cent instead of 36 per cent for larger corporations. Therefore, the benefit is clearly in substantial favour of small business in this country. This Bill provides significant new incentive for the growth of the small business sector in Canada.

This Bill also gives effect to an extension of the Small Business Bond to assist eligible small businesses in financial difficulty. This is a measure which I announced in October.

[Translation]

Measures affecting all taxpayers included a proposal to tax benefits derived from private health insurance and dental care plans. This proposal would have made the tax system more equitable, but representations against the proposal were made before the House Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, by many groups, including the Life Underwriters Association of Canada, the Canadian Life and Health Insurance Association, the Canadian Manufacturers Association, the Canadian Federation of Labour, the Canadian Association of University Teachers, the Canadian Federation of Independent Business and the Canadian Dental Association.

I concluded that the time was not ripe to introduce this measure. The benefits of the average health insurance and dental care plan for a married couple may total from $400 to $600 per year. Tax on these amounts would have been from $120 to $175 for the employee with an average income. Thanks to the decision announced in my statement in the House on October 27 of this year, Canadians will not have to pay this tax.

[English]

The result of abandoning this measure will be that the health and dental care insurance premiums or contributions paid by the employers will not be subject to taxation for the employee. This will be of significant help to those workers who are presently benefitting from health or dental care plans in their jobs. It is a significant tax relief which would not have been available had we proceeded with this particular measure.

[Translation]

The bill before the House today has also absorbed a number of important aspects of the 6 and 5 program, reflected in the capping of indexation of personal income tax rates at 6 and 5 per cent for the next two years. I am glad to see that in Canada, the rate of inflation is falling towards the 6 and 5 level. If we manage to control inflation, the impact of capped indexation on the Canadian taxpayer will be considerably lessened and even practically non-existent, if we reach our objective.

I think this measure aptly illustrates the validity of the 6 and 5 program, which, in fact, cancels out its own drawbacks in the short term, while providing the tremendous advantage of reducing inflation in the long term. We should also remember that since 1974, Canadians have had the benefit of full indexation of personal income tax. Furthermore, indexation at 6 and 5 is clearly preferable to the complete absence of indexation experienced by the American taxpayers over the same period, that is, since 1974. In fact, many Canadians are unaware that people in the United States do not have the indexation which Canadian taxpayers have enjoyed since 1974. Many Canadians pointed out to us that last year in the United States, they had a tax reduction of 10 per cent. What they forgot, however, is that since 1974, Americans had not enjoyed the tax rate indexation we had here in Canada, and that Canadians, as a result of the indexation since 1974, had enjoyed a far more substantial tax adjustment than the one announced last year by President Reagan and adopted by the U.S. Congress.

In addition to indexation at 6 and 5 per cent, this Bill provides for a general reduction in income tax starting in 1982 and totalling more than $1 billion per year. I may add that this measure has not received the attention it deserves. I cannot blame the Opposition, because that is not really their role. They are supposed to point out the negative aspects they see or think they see in any draft legislation introduced by the Government. Nevertheless, the Canadian taxpayer ought to know that the Bill before Parliament today will mean a general tax reduction of over $1 billion in 1982.

For a married worker with two dependent children and earning the average industrial wage of $22,000 per year, the reduction in tax rates and the reduction in Federal transferable tax will mean a savings of over $220 per year. Furthermore, the Child Tax Credit has been increased by $50 per year per child, up to a maximum of $343 for fiscal 1982. This measure will mean a savings of another $100 for low or middle-income families with two dependent children.

The Bill also provides for a reduction in Federal tax, so that the taxpayer with a dependent spouse and an income of less than $20,000 will save an additional $200.

The Opposition, especially the Members of the New Democratic Party, has tried, during the last few months or weeks, to convince us that the tax changes contained in this bill will only benefit people with income of $100,000 and over, in other words, people in the upper tax bracket. However, the facts I mentioned earlier clearly demonstrate that millions of Canadians, and I say millions of Canadians will benefit from the tax advantages provided by the draft legislation being considered by Parliament today. I am not referring to Canadians in the upper tax bracket but to Canadians with incomes of less than $20,000 per year, and workers earning an average industrial wage of $22,000 per year, who will benefit substantially from the tax changes contained in the Bill before the House today. As I said before, the general reduction in income tax rates provided in this Bill should encourage Canadians to save and invest in order to develop our country. The Bill represents a substantial structural change in the system, and its long-term benefits are very promising. Nevertheless, we must not lose sight of our fiscal responsibility. Earlier, I commented that few people like to pay taxes. In fact, I think all Canadians would prefer their taxes to go down or disappear altogether. However, even in the best of worlds, taxes would be inevitable.

In these difficult times, the Government is under constant pressure from all sides to spend more money or to reduce taxes in order to stimulate the economy. Often, I see people who ask me to spend more money, reduce taxes and reduce the Government's deficit, all at the same time. I must admit that my officials and advisers and I have been unable to find a way to achieve all three objectives at the same time.

My hon. colleague, however, seems to have found a way to reduce taxes, expenditures and the deficit. I noticed that when his party was in power, it failed to find the magic formula, and I am afraid that any claims that one would be able to do all three simultaneously are more reminiscent of the claims of snake oil salesmen than of the principles of economics or sound fiscal management.

• (1540)

[English]

Mr. Blenkarn: Why don't you let us take over, Marc, and then you'll find out?

Mr. Lalonde: The Hon. Member says that we should let them take over and we would find out. The Canadian public did find out in 1980, and after six months they could not stand it any more.

Mr. Blenkarn: Now they wish we were back.

Mr. Lalonde: I would suggest to the Hon. Member that the recipe has not been tried and that the Canadian people rejected being force-fed the kind of economic horse medicine that the Conservative Party was trying to impose upon them.

[Translation]

Notwithstanding interruptions by my colleagues opposite, I shall listen carefully to any suggestions and give them my attention. However, I urge Hon. Members to remember the economic problems facing our country and this Government at the present time with respect to our fiscal policy, as a result of the automatic impact the recession has on our tax system. Government revenue has dropped considerably—by several billion dollars—because corporate profits are down, as well as personal income, and the latter particularly as a result of unemployment. Thus, Government revenue has fallen dramatically and at the same time, Government expenditures have increased very substantially, because we have to provide assistance to people who are hurt by the recession. We have had to help hundreds of thousands of Canadians who are now unemployed and are either drawing unemployment insurance benefits or welfare or being helped by one of the many direct employment programs created by the Government to help Canadians cope with the economic crisis we are going through at the present time. Financially, our room to manoeuvre has shrunk considerably. In the circumstances, it is impossible to grant further substantial tax breaks to any group without increasing taxes for another group in order to bring down Government expenditures by a corresponding amount. The bill before the House today, Mr. Speaker, reflects fiscal reality, because it proposes a balanced selection of carefully thought out measures aimed at improving the tax climate, laying the foundation for economic recovery and enabling Canadians—and this is very important—to continue to help those who need help.

[English]

In conclusion, I believe the basic philosophy of this Bill is sound.

Mr. Blenkarn: What about the tax increases?

Mr. Nielsen: Iron-clad.

Mr. Lalonde: Its provisions are good and it responds to criticisms which have been made.

An Hon. Member: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: Here? Where?

Mr. Lalonde: The time has come to pass this legislation. The time has come to end the uncertainty surrounding these tax issues.

Mr. Nielsen: Never should have been started.

Mr. Lalonde: The time has come to move on and to face and solve the pressing and serious problems before us. The passage of this legislation is a prerequisite for further budgetary moves directed at our economic problems.

• (1550)

Mr. Wilson: Don't hit us again.

Mr. Lalonde: It would be irresponsible to introduce a new budget before the uncertainty of the old measures is cleared up. I can say, in the process of consultations I have had since I have been appointed Minister of Finance, that this is the message that has been repeated over and over again to me by everybody I have consulted. This message has come through quite clearly from the 30 different organizations with whom I have had meetings in the first month and a half after my appointment.

Mr. Wilson: Why did you not bring the budget in then?

Mr. Lalonde: That message has been clearly repeated since I started consulting, anticipating the next budget.

Mr. Wilson: Why the delay in bringing it in?

An Hon. Member: What message?

Mr. Lalonde: The Hon. Member is asking what is the message. The message is that we should pass the legislation resulting from the previous budgets—

Mr. Wilson: Why did you wait two months to bring it in?

Mr. Lalonde: —that we should clear the air, that we should remove the uncertainty and that we should not proceed with a new budget until we at least know exactly what is happening with the measures resulting from the previous budgets. The message from labour, management, farming organizations and small business has been clear; they want to know what the rules of the game are going to be.

Mr. Nielsen: You will change them anyway.

Mr. Lalonde: They want to be assured by Parliament that the measures affecting the fiscal situation for 1982 are going to be implemented without further delay and without leaving an air of uncertainty around those measures.

I read last week that the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) declared that he would do everything he could to block this legislation and prevent it from going ahead. Obviously, I can understand that in a flight of high rhetoric any politician can make high-sounding statements. I hope this is one of those. Obviously, the Opposition can drag out this Bill for a very extended period, but I believe that the Opposition will adopt a more responsible attitude and, after due consideration, we will be able to proceed not only with debating these measures but with the voting on and adoption of them. They have been the subject of extensive debate over the last year.

Mr. Wilson: It is the first time they have hit the House.

Mr. Lalonde: They have been the subject of consideration by outside experts, by groups and organizations that have made representations before the Government, before parliamentary committees, the committee of the House and the committee of the Senate. The committee of the House sat through the summer right into the fall, heard briefs and made representations. How much more study do we need?

Mr. Wilson: You are starting to weep now. Wipe the tear from your eye, Marc.

Mr. Lalonde: In fact, we know now exactly what kind of measures the Government is proceeding with. I have indicated the changes that have been made. A number of those changes have already been included in the Bill which was considered by the parliamentary committee, and I submit to the House that the Canadian public is expecting us to proceed expeditiously—

Mr. Wilson: And responsibly.

Mr. Lalonde: And responsibly—with this particular measure.

As far as we on this side of the House are concerned, we will co-operate to provide all the information that is relevant and required, but at the same time I hope that we get good co-operation from other Members of the House to make sure that this Bill receives Royal Assent with not too long a delay.

I remind the Members of this House that last year there were more than 15 million tax returns filed, of which more than 11 million resulted in refunds. We expect this year there will be even more refunds than last year because there are people who have been unemployed during the course of the year who will have a lower level of income than they had anticipated and will be entitled to significant and I hope large tax refunds when they file their income tax return.

Early passage of the legislation will help Revenue Canada get on with the job of processing the 1982 returns and mailing the refunds to Canadian citizens who are entitled to them. It is clear that many Canadians will be in urgent need of their tax refunds during the period we are going through. I therefore look forward to a speedy debate that recognizes the extensive consultation process that has contributed so much to the Bill before us.

My colleague, the Minister of State for Finance, will be taking this Bill through the House during the debate and consideration before committee.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Lalonde: My Parliamentary Secretary and myself will be very happy to be present and to give him a hand whenever he needs a hand. I must say my colleague has shown such competence, such ability and such expertise in that subject—

An Hon. Member: When?

Mr. Lalonde: —that I am sure the Opposition will be very happy to support him in advancing consideration of this Bill.

Mr. Wilson: When?

Mr. Lalonde: I conclude by pledging to continue to expand consultation in the development of a better budget-making process, a process that promotes tax certainty, stability and fairness and the efficient and productive use of Canada's great human and material resources.

I started those consultations last week in Vancouver, for instance, with the B.C. Employers' Council and representatives of the labour movement. This morning I met with the board of directors of the Canadian Chamber of Commerce and we had an extended discussion about the approach to the next budget. That organization will be able to present a formal brief to me within the next two or three weeks.

I intend to meet with my provincial colleagues, the Ministers of Finance, this coming Thursday at which time I hope we will be able together to develop a general posture that will lead to Government fiscal policies that will go in the same direction, that will reinforce each other rather than working at cross-purposes. That will help all Canadians in every single Province in this country see 1983 as a better year in all respects than 1982 has been for Canadians generally.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): The Hon. Member for Yukon is rising on a point of order?

Mr. Nielsen: Will the Minister permit a brief question?

Mr. Lalonde: With pleasure.

Mr. Nielsen: The Minister will know that the leader of the Government in Yukon has requested to attend the federal-provincial meeting of Ministers of Finance to commence, I believe, this Thursday. To date the attitude of the federal Government and the Minister's Department has been that neither of the two northern territories will be favoured with attendance at that federal-provincial meeting of Ministers of Finance.

The leader of the Government in Yukon, as well as an elected representative from the Northwest Territories, are now attending a federal-provincial meeting of Ministers of Mines in New Brunswick and will be in Ottawa on the day the federal-provincial meeting of the Ministers of Finance is to be held.

I ask the Minister this question now, in keeping with the spirit of his announcement and that of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Munro) with respect to fiscal reforms in Yukon and the Northwest Territories, made a little over a week ago. Since there is utterly no provincial objection, will the Minister here and now extend that invitation to the two Northern Territories to be represented by their appropriate Ministers, particularly since the subject matter of the discussion affects us just as vitally as it does the Provinces and since we are expected to make fiscal decisions on the same basis?

• (1600)

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, I have noted the representation made by the Hon. Member. The only answer I can give him is the answer that has been provided generally in the past, a view shared by both the provincial and federal Governments, that, contrary to what the Hon. Member has indicated, the conference of Finance Ministers should be limited to Finance Ministers of the Provinces and the federal Government. However, I have indicated to the people referred to by the Hon. Member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) that I would be very happy to meet with the representatives of those two Territories at their earliest convenience and have a general discussion with them about the next budget as well as the financial situation in the Northwest Territories and Yukon.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, today we are commencing the first formal consideration of the tax legislation arising out of the November budget, some 13 months after the fact. That is far too long a period of time for Canadians to wait. It is incredible that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) should be urging this House to move quickly on this legislation when we have just now seen the Bill representing that budget, plus the June budget, plus his October statement, all brought into one omnibus piece of tax legislation. The Government House Leader is urging us to come to grips with this Bill and pass it within the next eight sitting days. That is unacceptable.

Much has been lost since that time, 13 months of valuable time. A Minister has lost his job and a Deputy Minister has lost his job. A Government which used to pride itself on being known as a competent manager has lost all credibility as well as the confidence of the Canadian people.

More seriously, in human terms over 500,000 people have lost their jobs and some 50,000 bankruptcies have been declared during this period. To put this in some perspective, that over 500,000 job loss figure is just about equal to the entire population of Quebec City or Calgary, Edmonton, Winnipeg or Hamilton. It is an incredible figure.

Also during this period of time Canada has seen its place in the international community slip noticeably. We have seen articles in the London Economist entitled "Maple Leaf Crumbles", as well as in The Wall Street Journal, The New York Times and Business Week. These stories were not written in anger or with any vindictiveness but with sorrow and disbelief that we as a country have plunged so low in spite of our rich human and natural resources.

That November budget played a pivotal role in this decline. In my opening statement following the Minister's speech at the time of that budget, I warned of a tax revolt. Those words were acutely prophetic, judging from what in fact has happened since then.

Let me remind Hon. Members of the reaction to that budget. I want to direct these words to some of the Liberal Members. I quote from The Toronto Star of November 14 last year:

> Liberal politicians were chuckling like schoolboys yesterday.
> For the relaxing Liberals the snickering came at Wilson's expense.
> "There is nothing he can say against this budget", said one smiling Liberal who has aspirations of a Cabinet post in next February's promised shuffle.

Maybe it was the Hon. Member for Willowdale (Mr. Peterson) who made that snickering comment.

> "We covered everything. There is just nothing left to criticize."
> While many Liberals were in a buoyant mood yesterday, their glee could swiftly change to sorrow if MacEachen's objective of reducing inflation by cutting the deficit, withholding investment incentives and avoiding either a tax increase or reduction for average consumers backfires . . . So while the bored Liberal backbenchers were able to giggle and laugh yesterday in the sleepy Commons, economic realities may come crashing down on them with each new release from Statistics Canada of inflation and unemployment rates as well as the Bank of Canada's weekly interest rate lottery.

I mention that because I want to remind Liberal Members how wrong they were. Thirteen months ago today they sat snickering on the other side of the House, thinking that that budget was just what the people wanted, just what people in this country asked for.

Mr. Peterson: That's nonsense.

Mr. Wilson: That's not nonsense. The Hon. Member for Willowdale says it is nonsense. Maybe he should stand up and tell us what is nonsense. What is nonsense is since that time Canadians have been so angry, upset and disturbed with that budget that they came out in droves and spoke to him and his colleagues as well as those on this side of the House complaining bitterly about the direction that budget took.

Mr. Peterson: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I resent very much the personal attacks that have been made by the Hon. Member opposite to the effect that we were sitting here snickering. We have taken that budget process very seriously.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. That is obviously not a point of order. That is debate.

Mr. Wilson: Mr. Speaker, I think the Parliamentary Secretary is displaying his sensitivity to what happened in the budget and what happened to him. I wonder whether he is looking at the polls that are being taken in his riding which show that his performance, his popularity and his position in that riding have gone straight down since November 13, 1981 when he was here snickering behind the curtains of the House.

I wish to quote from a few reports and other representations that have been made to me and other Conservative Members about that budget. I am going to give a number of random quotes that came to me either through letters that I received or in the course of the meetings that 62 Conservative Members of Parliament held in 15 cities across the country, which gave Canadians the first and, with a few exceptions, almost the only opportunity that they had to speak out directly to Members of Parliament in a formal way about what was wrong with that budget. I quote:

> Robin Hood MacEachen takes not from rich but from millions of Canadians.
> Budget, a recipe for recession.
> Home owners: Little reason to cheer.
> Mr. MacEachen's can of worms.
> The over-all economic condition loaded the gun and the budget is going to pull the trigger.

I have another quote:

> As a young married Canadian with two children, to be honest, I'm scared. I'm scared because I don't know if I'll be able to provide a roof over their heads. I'm scared because I have been classified as one of the wealthy in the country now.

Another one reads:

> It seems hard to believe, but the budget appears bent on the objective of slowing or destroying investment incentives.

The Minister spoke in a very false way to that in his comments earlier:

> The recent budget makes all of us who borrowed money to create this company which now employs 200 people appear to be rip-off artists, speculators and Shylocks unwilling to pay our way.

Another one:

> For a Government to introduce a series of tax incentives over the years and then make an about-face and call these incentives loopholes is both ludicrous and intolerable.

Mr. Peterson: You are dealing with ancient history. Why don't you deal with the budget?

Mr. Wilson: I am not dealing with ancient history, I am dealing with this tax legislation. Many of the same things that these people spoke of are still in this legislation. I will be coming back to that in due course, if the Member has any patience and can keep himself in the House and not snicker behind the curtain.

• (1610)

The next quote is from an older gentleman:

> I was trying to save the Government from having to support me in my old age. Damn the Government now. I am going to spend every cent I can get my hands on and when I run out of money I won't be ashamed to ask the Government for help. They're certainly not ashamed of taking it from us.

And the next one:

> The November 12th budget pulled the rug from under my feet. If that "financial fiasco" is implemented, it appears that our family farm will no longer exist and my family will be forced to accept a lower standard of living.

The final quote I want to give, Mr. Speaker, is this:

> We object to the victimization of low and middle income groups to trap the affluent.

All of these quotes came to me from real people. We received them in the course of our meetings across the country. There is no imagination here; these are real quotes. The Minister implied that we are using our imagination in drumming up criticism of this budget. These are real people assessing the true impact of that budget, this tax legislation, on their lives, on their jobs, their businesses and their families. Many of these statements have been confirmed by the experience of the past 13 months and are still very pertinent to this legislation.

Our Party opposed that budget right from the start. We encouraged the Government not to proceed without a full public debate. We wanted those most affected to be able to explain to the Government the true damage which the budget was going to cause. The Government refused this course of action, probably out of crass political self-interest, because as we look back over the past 13 months it is incredible the number of changes which have been made. There have been as many as 47 changes. Some areas have been changed a full three times. That is a clear indication that the Minister and his officials proceeded with this major tax reform in a totally blind vacuum. Many areas were changed, including multiple unit residential buildings, capital cost allowances, retiring allowances, work in progress, employee benefits, life insurance and annuities, automobile stand-by charges, charitable foundations, housing and travel benefits and Small Business Bonds. Most of these changes were only transitional in nature, and that is what brings us to this particular piece of legislation.

We called for a new budget and, Mr. Speaker, some people criticized us at the time for being too blatantly partisan; but considering the piece of legislation which is before us today, how much better, how much less destructive, it would have been had the Government taken our advice and introduced a new budget. Instead, we have had an ongoing series of changes over the past 13 months. Changes have been made, I think, some six or seven different times during that 13-month period. The changes have been spread over that full year and the uncertainty of not knowing whether further changes would be made has hurt many small businesses, many business plans, and has contributed directly to the job loss we have suffered during this period. It is as if the budget has been struck as a flash fire strikes a building. Much of the interior is destroyed, but the building is still left standing.

Let us look at what is left in that budget, Mr. Speaker, the contents of the Bill before us, and try to judge whether the entire budget should have been scrapped back in November-December of last year. It is ironic, but the most damaging part of the budget will not even be voted upon by this House. The change in capital cost allowance, which has had the effect of reducing the amount of investment in new plant and equipment and other job-creating projects, will be dealt with by regulation. I ask Liberal Members of Parliament whether they are happy that this Government has slipped this one by them without even having had a chance to consider it in the House of Commons. Investment in new plant and equipment has dropped by 12 per cent in Canada over a one-year period.

The Canadian Manufacturers' Association says that manufacturers will not show any investment growth until 1985. The comparable figure in the United States is down 6 per cent. The reduction in the capital cost allowance clearly has been the major factor in the poor performance in Canada. It is also a clear reason why over the past year our unemployment rate has gone up four percentage points, while that in the United States has only gone up three percentage points. Our unemployment rate is standing now at 12.7 per cent, almost two percentage points higher than in the United States.

The areas which do remain from the budget and which are in this legislation will compound an already poor economy. The small businessman is hit particularly hard. The 12.5 per cent small business distribution tax remains. Deferred profit-sharing plans are now almost totally impractical for all but a few small businesses. There will be a considerably less favourable treatment of a capital gain in the sale of a business where the payment stretches over a period of years. The gutting of the Small Business Development Bond and its replacement by the small business bail-out bond makes this type of financial support almost unavailable to small businesses.

Finally, an element which the Minister totally ignored in his remarks earlier is that the small business lower tax rate will be lost when the cumulative earnings of a company reach $1 million, regardless of the amount of earnings retained in the business and regardless of the amount of capital needed to run that business. The result of this is that in time many small businesses will be taxed at the same tax rate as the largest businesses in Canada. The effect of this is to put the real risk-takers of the country on the same basis as the large companies and the salaried employees, and that, Mr. Speaker, is a totally wrong way to go. Is it any wonder that the small business community is now almost totally opposed to the Liberal Party of Canada? Is it any wonder that they and other Canadians are very apprehensive about their future? The new Minister of Finance has said there will not be any further tax reform for now as long as we are in a recession. Small businessmen are terribly worried that, as soon as the economy turns around, the Liberals will spring the rest of the MacEachen budget without any warning. The changes in interest deductibility, the federal sales tax and the tighter rules on capital gains are three examples of what they are fearing right now.

The construction industry has been suffering terribly in the past year. It suffers from some of the same effects of this budget as the small businessman. The result is that thousands of workers have been laid off. Yet the Government persists in retaining the capital cost allowance changes and the new policy to capitalize so-called soft costs during construction. Previously, architects' and engineers' fees, legal fees, fees for interest costs during construction, could be charged against current income. Now they must be capitalized. The result of this is that these two changes remove a considerable amount of cash income at the start of a major capital investment. The consequence is that, with the very high interest rates today, many projects have become uneconomical. Many are cancelled, jobs are lost. This indicates that these changes are sheer madness at a time of high unemployment. Either that or the government displays a total ignorance of or insensitivity to the effect of the changes, which is massive job loss in that industry.

Forward averaging is another backward step in this legislation. It is being sold by the Minister and his Department as a fair means of spreading the tax load. But let us be honest with the taxpayer: it is a sneaky way of transferring money from the private sector to the public sector.

There has been a system of forward averaging in place for a number of years now. It was called an income averaging annuity contract, IAAC for short. IAACs allowed the taxpayer to spread over an extended period the tax load of a large bulge in taxable income—for instance, from the sale of a business or a farm. Now these options are much more restricted. There will be no more IAACs and no general averaging. The taxpayer either pays taxes on the large income in that year or he averages it over future years.

The Government has a number of assumptions on how this forward averaging works, and they can come up with some assumptions which show the income averaging annuity is about the same as forward averaging. This requires some very selective assumptions, but it does not work in most normal cases. Let us for a minute just accept the Government's assumptions and reasoning here. The big difference between the IAAC, on the one hand, and forward averaging, on the other hand, is that with an IAAC the money is left in the hands of the private sector. The taxpayer gives the money to his choice of trust company or insurance company to invest.

His money will be invested in real estate, mortgages, stock or bonds—creating jobs, generating income and more production.

• (1620)

With forward averaging, the new approach, the money goes to the Government, to the bureaucrat to invest, perhaps in Maislin or Dome. It will be invested not in productive job-creating projects, but probably in make-work programs.

This is an excellent example of the difference between the Conservative Party and Liberals and the NDP. We have opposed the loss of IAACs strongly. We believe the money will be more productive to the economy if left in the private sector. The other two parties want it left with the Government where it can be controlled by decision makers here in Ottawa. The result will be a less productive economy and more people out of work.

There is another reason that we oppose forward averaging. If a taxpayer elects forward averaging today, he must pay the taxes now at the top personal rate and take his chances that in the future he will recover some of these taxes if his rate in those future years is lower than the top rate. Who is likely to benefit from this system? The person in the top income bracket? Probably, because he has nothing to lose; either way he has to pay taxes at the top rate.

What about the person in a lower income bracket? He has a very difficult decision to make. If he elects forward averaging, he must pay taxes today at the top rate and hope he can get it back in future years if his taxes are lower. But if he guesses wrong, he will have paid more tax than he should to the Government. With forward averaging, he has to survive to get the benefits. With an IAAC, his surviving wife and children receive the proceeds. With forward averaging, the agreement expires upon his death.

In effect, it is heads the Government wins, tails the taxpayer loses—except for the wealthy taxpayer, about whom the Liberals seem to be more concerned than the vast number of small businessmen and farmers who make up an important part of the vast group of middle income Canadians who have given this country such strength and stability over the years but have been so severely attacked by the budget and by this legislation.

Let me point out two other aspects of this Bill which run directly counter to the interests of the country.

[Translation]

Last week, the Government tabled its proposals on pension reform. The message of that report is clear: Canadians are not adequately prepared for retirement. And now, in this Bill, the Government is discouraging Canadians from saving through RRSP's or other plans. Who is going to be hurt most by this measure? Not the person who is well-off and can find various ways of reducing his taxable income. The impact of this measure will be felt most severely by those on low incomes, who probably do not have decent pension plans and who need interest deductibility most. To many of these people, a loan contracted at the end of February in order to be able to contribute to an RRSP is a form of forced saving, and they will have to work very hard to pay off the loan in the following months. If there is any abuse among those in the upper tax brackets, by all means put a stop to it, but not if it means discouraging saving for one's retirement.

[English]

Mobility of Canadians has always been an important part of our work life. National companies have traditionally moved their staff around, giving them experience and exposing them to different parts of the country. Here again, the tax Bill takes a major step backward by taxing the benefit received on low-cost loans made to assist this type of move. The Government has said this is a loophole that the rich are taking advantage of, yet company after company has shown that these loans have been made more to their lower and middle management than top management people. There could not be a loophole for the rich because there is already a $50,000 limit on the size of loan allowed under the existing rules.

This is another example of how the middle income people in this country are being attacked by the Liberal Government. I hope that in Committee of the Whole and in subsequent speeches Members opposite and the Minister will tell us what they have against the middle income earners in our country.

We oppose the limitation of the indexation factor on personal taxes according to the six and five program. This is nothing more than a sneaky income tax increase. If the Government wishes to increase taxes, let it do so. To slip this through without proper debate and backed up by a massive advertising program supporting the six and five program is pure and simple deceit.

Now is not the time to increase taxes. The economy is still in decline. Canadians should be encouraged to spend their money. A tax increase to feed the ever-growing appetite of the Government is counter-productive.

If the Government feels so strongly about the size of the deficit, let it cut spending. Let it curtail the 50 per cent increase in ministerial travel. Let it keep its little JetStars on the ground. Let it cut back on the size of the increase in the Minister's Department and show it means business. Let it cut back where any businessman would start—on overhead and the administrative costs of running the Government. We have yet to hear why the overhead costs in the 12 largest Departments will increase by 17.1 per cent. These are not my figures; these are Government figures taken from the Blue Book of the Government Estimates this year. I say do not increase personal taxes; rather, reduce Government spending and get the Government off our backs.

There have been many changes to the original proposals on life insurance and annuities, as I have already indicated. The rules of the game have changed significantly. If a policy is cancelled because of a financial emergency, the tax consequences are major. The tax on surrender will increase by between 25 per cent and 50 per cent—depending on the age of the person—just when the policy holder can least afford it.

Policy loans—loans using the insurance policy as collateral—will now be taxed. This again will occur when the policy holder can afford it the least.

The conversion of an insurance policy into an annuity will be taxed on the same basis as if the policy were cancelled. Surely this ignores totally the use of life insurance as a source of retirement income after the policy holder reaches a certain age and his dependants no longer need life insurance protection.

This tax Bill also continues the unfair requirement to tax the interest element of deferred annuity contracts every three years, even though no cash income has been received. There may have been abuses here, but no recognition is being made of those annuities which are purchased for true retirement purposes.

Together these provisions attack retirement planning and run totally counter to the spirit of pension reform which this same Minister and his colleagues espoused last week. Words are cheap Mr. Speaker, but actions reveal far more accurately the philosophy and policy of this Government.

This tax Bill says one of two things, Mr. Speaker. Either the Government is not prepared to follow through with real actions to support the desire of Canadians to prepare for a happy, self-reliant retirement, or the Government is attempting to undermine this healthy motive in the hope that retiring Canadians will be thrown more into the hands of Government. This potential loss of freedom and independence for our retiring Canadians poses a serious question for all Members.

There is another part of this tax bill which is a bit of a sleeper. The Minister has never discussed it before. It has to do with the long-standing principle of confidentiality in the tax system. The legislation now requires information regarding the name, address, occupation or type of business of a taxpayer to be given to other federal or provincial Departments for the purpose of enabling these Departments to do analyses and research work. What does this mean? What information is required? How detailed will it be? How soon will it be before the specific tax information will be bandied about? What control will there be on how these other Departments use that information?

Also this amendment extends the access to tax information for purposes of administering the Petroleum Incentives Program and the Unemployment Insurance Act. What controls will be instituted to prevent fishing expeditions on the part of curious or vindictive administrators? How far will this administration go? These are serious questions which Members must ask themselves. How far will we allow "big brother" to go?

I could go on. There are many other parts of this tax Bill which are clearly wrong—the treatment of automobile expenses, allowances for those living in our northern communities, retiring allowances, iron ore processing changes, and the elimination of the lower withholding tax on dividends from Canadian-controlled companies. That is a puzzler for me, from a Governement so intent on improving the degree of Canadian ownership. Through this Bill it takes away one of the incentives for increasing Canadian ownership.

I am sure my colleagues will raise these matters later in the debate. It is absolutely clear that there are sufficient reasons the Bill should not be passed. During the course of debate we will be putting up amendments on all these areas to try to improve the Bill and meet the objectives which we feel should be sought in a Bill such as this. If those amendments are not accepted, then we have no alternative but to vote against the Bill.

I say this because it undermines the strength of our small business community today, the source of some two-thirds of the jobs in the country. It undermines the ability of Canadians to prepare for retirement without fear of becoming overly reliant on Government. It also attacks the long-standing provision of confidentiality in the tax laws. It is against this background that the Minister is asking the House to ram the Bill through. As I said earlier, the Government House Leader wants the Bill passed in eight sitting days, by December 22. That is totally irresponsible. Let us not forget that it is basically the same bureaucrats who gave us the disaster of November 12, 1981 who also produced this Bill. There are 295 pages of very complex legislation, and the Government is asking us to give rubber stamp approval of it over the next eight days without proper debate. That is totally irresponsible.

[Translation]

Many Canadians have asked me personally to make sure that this Bill would be a good piece of legislation. They have kept after me with requests for amendments. This Bill is the most complex piece of tax legislation since the Benson reform 11 years ago. To pass this legislation in its entirety in eight days is both preposterous and unacceptable, as I see it.

[English]

The Minister says we need the legislation passed, that we need it to relieve Canadians of some uncertainty. I have been advised by lawyers and tax accountants that they do not need this legislation before mid-February next year. They are more concerned that the Government do it right this time and remove the worst parts of the Bill. If the Minister felt so strongly about getting this legislation through, why did he not bring it in at the end of October when it was ready? Or why did the previous Minister not bring it in last June when there was a detailed ways and means motion which proved that detailed tax legislation had been prepared? Why the delay? Why put Members of Parliament under the gun to try to pass this Bill in eight days?

It must be totally transparent by now that the only reason for the haste in rushing the Bill through the House in eight days is its fear of reopening the old wounds from November of last year. Sure, people want to know the rules of the game, but they also want to get the right rules of the game. That is the responsibility which Parliament has today.

If we needed any more proof of the transparent nature of the Government's pleas to get the Bill through, we have only to look at the red herring which the Minister and the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Cosgrove) have thrown out, saying that Canadians need tax refunds. These tax refunds will not be processed until the first of March anyway, so why the rush? Surely people understand that.

Returning to the budget of last November, it caused the most adverse and widespread reaction to Government policy that any of us in the House can recall. Our Conservative special committee on the budget experienced that first-hand when it travelled across the country. All Members of the House of Commons have received a massive response from their ridings, particularly at personal meetings and town-hall type meetings, as well as in letters. The former Minister of Finance had to take on a new staff of some 40 people just to answer his budget-related mail. It is human nature that the Government would want to avoid a repeat of that; we can understand that. But Members of Parliament have a greater responsibility to those Canadians affected than they do to the feelings of the present or former Minister of Finance. The Conservative Party is determined to give this legislation the responsible, comprehensive consideration and treatment which all Canadians expect from the House.

Before I close I want to ask Members and all Canadians to assess the Bill in the context of recent statements made by the Minister of Finance. He has said that there is not much that can be done, that the Government has done about all it can about the recession and that now it is up to the private sector to get the economy rolling again. How will the private sector do it? There are many remaining obstacles which will prevent the private sector from doing the job. I have spoken on many occasions about the vicious circle that we are in. Business activity is slow. Investment in new plant and equipment is projected to decline next year by 8 per cent. In 1982 it has already gone down signficantly. Business is not investing because consumers are not buying, and consumers are not buying particularly because they fear that they or someone in their families will lose their job. As I said, it is a vicious circle.

The key to breaking that vicious circle is to stabilize the unemployment outlook, to get business activity going and thereby increase the number of jobs available to Canadians. If we do not have this stability, which Canadians will buy new cars, stoves or houses, if they may need the money in a few months' time when they are laid off? This would give individual Canadians more confidence in the future, and only then would they consider making some of the purchases they have been putting off for such a long time.

The economic policy of the Progressive Conservative Party is aimed directly at breaking that log jam or vicious circle. How can we get business to hire more people? Existing companies are not likely to do this. They have been going through the wringer lately, cutting down the size of their operations. They have made many wrenching decisions to improve their productivity. Now we have to look elsewhere. We have to look outside the existing job-creation mechanism for new jobs.

Our economic policy has targeted five ways of encouraging new job-creating investment. The first is mini-projects, encouraging the start-ups of small businesses, encouraging people to leave the comfort and security of well-paying jobs with large companies or Government. This is where this Bill is so wrong. In nine separate ways it makes it more difficult and less attractive for small business to prosper. It is more difficult for a person to leave that secure job, pull up stakes and build his future around the risky success of a small business. Many small-businessmen have told me that they would not leave a secure job with a large company today to start a small business. That attitude must be reversed if we are to create new jobs. The first steps toward changing that attitude can be taken by cancelling some elements of this Bill.

The Progressive Conservative economic policy would go further. We would take as a priority, as a new government, the objective of introducing a clear bias toward encouraging risk-taking investment. This would provide a major step to improving our economic future.

Our second step is in the mega-projects. We would change those parts of the energy program which inhibit start-ups of these projects, the major sources of new job-creating investment. These changes would include the cancellation of the 25 per cent confiscatory back-in provision. They would also include a reduction in federal taxes where a reduction would contribute to major capital investment, such as in petrochemical projects where the federal natural gas tax has made these projects uncompetitive.

A third area of incremental investment is foreign investment. Foreign investment was actively discouraged by the former Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. This Government has acknowledged and has made some tentative changes in the operations of FIRA. More changes must be made to show that foreign investment is welcome in Canada, because it is investment that will create new jobs. It is investment incremental to that which we have in the country today.

As a fourth step we would reduce interest rates further. The inflation rate in the marketplace, the non-Government controlled part of the economy, is between 5 per cent and 6 per cent. The current interest rate at 13 per cent or 14 per cent is simply too high. It is a major deterrent to these new projects.

The fifth area that the Progressive Conservative policy would attack directly is the burden of Government. The current deficit of $24 billion is a dead-weight deficit. It is producing little by way of long-term job creation. Its size is both a psychological and a real burden on the capital market. It is inhibiting the reduction of interest rates.

Our policy would involve a reduction in Government spending. I have already touched on ways in which we would do that. Our policy would also involve a reduction in Government regulation and centralized decision making. Let me remind you again, Mr. Speaker, of the precise example I gave concerning income averaging annuities which took that decision-making process from the private sector and dropped it right into the middle of Government Departments. This is one area we would reverse and one which would clearly address that problem.

It must be clear to Hon. Members that these five targets of Progressive Conservative economic policy would reduce the roadblocks to growth of which I have spoken. If these roadblocks are now removed, the private sector simply will not be able to do the job which the Minister is asking of it. All that the Government has offered is the six and five program. There is no long-term program. There is no program to remove these roadblocks to growth, so essential to the private sector being able to create jobs. I expect that the next budget in February or March next year will appear to go in that direction. It will sound pro-business, it will use the right words, but it will do nothing to change the direction which this Government has taken since 1980.

Let me point out two recent statements to support my thinking. The first is by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). Last week the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) asked why the Government had backed off on its stated intention to make the Foreign Investment Review Agency a more interventionist part of Government policy. Did the Prime Minister say his Government realized what it was proposing was wrong, that it would have been too interventionist, that the Government thought it might scare away foreign investment from the country? No, not at all. Not a word of withdrawal, nothing like that. The Prime Minister said only that there would be no changes because the economy today is too weak. What happens when the economy gets stronger? What does the threat of a stronger Foreign Investment Review Agency do to those contemplating investment in Canada today? It scares them away.

The second statement to support my thinking was by the Minister of Finance, to which I have referred.

An Hon. Member: Would you withdraw FIRA?

Mr. Wilson: In answer to the Hon. Member, we would not do away with FIRA. We have proposed a number of specific changes in the Foreign Investment Review Agency to make it more effective in doing what it is supposed to do. Instead of being a policing agency as it is now, it would be a screening agency to get the right sort, the right type of foreign investment which will create the jobs and technology we need in Canada today and not scare that investment away.

Mr. McDermid: We would make it a positive tool, not a negative one.

Mr. Wilson: Let me refer again to the Minister of Finance's statement, to which I referred a moment or so ago. He said:

> Now is not the time for further tax reform. The economy is too weak.

Again the Minister of Finance will wait until the economy recovers and then bring back those parts of the November budget that were dropped. The expectation that two of the greatest mistakes in the life of this Government will be repeated when the economy recovers will further slow down the economic recovery we need so much. Those two statements are very revealing of the way these two men think. Their action through this tax bill further supports my opinion.

My point, Mr. Speaker, is that I expect the policy of this Government to appear to be pro-business, and to be supportive of the private sector over the next few months. Then, because the road blocks are still there, job-creation and economic growth in the private sector will probably not be that good. The state will have been set. The Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance will be able to say: "We gave the private sector a chance; it did not perform. It dropped the ball. Now we will do it our way, by more intervention, more Government ownership and a higher Government deficit."

What are the signs of that now? What makes me think that I am right when I make those statements? First, the Canada Development Investment Corporation has been created. There is no clear mandate for it. There is no parliamentary debate on what it will be doing. Those in charge are clearly identified with the more interventionist side of the Government. Senator Jack Austin, Maurice Strong and Joel Bell, the architects of the greatest thrust into the Canadian private sector that we have seen in years.

The Minister of Finance is already talking about possibly softening his stand on the size of the federal Government deficit. He has said: "Interest rates are coming down. Canadians seem to support a higher deficit. They are putting up billions to buy our Canada Savings Bonds." What a short-sighted point of view, but clearly one which is massaging public opinion in support of a larger deficit, a deficit which ultimately means higher taxes and more government in our lives.

In summary, this tax bill is the first sign of the Government's strategy to take a greater share of the economy. It confirms the Minister's words that he is prepared to rely more on the private sector, but these are only words. There is no evident desire to change the Government's fundamental course. The reduction in the capital cost allowance remains. The small business community remains under attack. Retirement savings are undermined.

We must defeat this Bill. We must work hard to change the damaging parts of the Bill. If we are not successful, I am sure that when we look back a year from now the direction toward greater Government control in our lives and the unhealthy private sector which must result from that will be abundantly clear. That is the mission on which we are embarked today.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. Before I recognize the next Hon. Member, may I deal with the debate on the adjournment motion this evening.

Income Tax

It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the Hon. Member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta (Mr. Friesen)—Administration of Justice, (a) Mandatory supervision program—Release of dangerous sexual offenders. (b) Request for definition of "a bad evaluation"; the Hon. Member for Annapolis Valley-Hants (Mr. Nowlan)—Administration of Justice—(a) Request for federal-provincial co-operation on issue. (b) Request that Minister take action; the Hon. Member for Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatyshyn)—National Security—(a) Case of Canadian professor—Application of Official Secrets Act. (b) Timing of decision of prosecution in Great Britain.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

INCOME TAX

AMENDMENTS TO STATUTE LAW

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Lalonde that Bill C-139, to amend the Statute Law relating to Income Tax (No. 2) be read the second time and referred to a Committee of the Whole.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to rise to participate in the opening debate on Bill C-139, an Act to amend the statute law relating to income tax. I suspect that it should read "an Act to tinker with the statute law relating to income tax". This is a Bill consisting of 295 pages which has come about 13 months after the introduction of the budget of November 12, 1981. This Bill also brings into effect certain aspects of the June 28, 1982 budget, the mini-budget of October 27, 1982, as well as incorporating the material which was covered in 17 press releases by both the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) and his predecessor.

The Minister of Finance is now asking us to jam this legislation through the House very quickly in the remaining eight days of this session. This Bill is 295 pages of very difficult, conflicting and confusing tax law. In effect, the Minister is asking us to have faith in his Government and ram this contract between the Government of Canada and the people of Canada through without bothering to read, study or debate it. I guarantee you, Mr. Speaker, that that is not what we intend to do. We do not plan to rush a document through the House when it affects every person in this country, especially when those effects are not beneficial.

In his most recent press conference, the Minister urged Parliament to end this time of uncertainty that surrounds the tax situation which has arisen from the last two and a half budgets. If the Minister of Finance expects this Bill to end the uncertainty in this country for one moment, I suspect that he must be a colleague of ET, someone coming from a different planet. This Bill will not end uncertainty; it will add to uncertainty and confusion in terms of what lies ahead for the people of Canada.

I clipped an interesting cartoon out of a newspaper from my constituency. It is an illustration of Mr. Hugh Hambleton's lawyer who is saying: "I respectfully submit, my Lord, that my client, Mr. Hugh Hambleton, passed some information to the Russians. But I can prove that he was a western agent working toward destabilizing the Soviet Union. The documents, my Lord, that he passed were blueprints of the Canadian Liberal Government's economic policy and tax laws." If anything was to destabilize an economy, it certainly would be the economic policies of this Government, complemented with its most recent introduction of tax reform.

This tax Bill comes before us at a time when there is a general sense of fear among Canadians across the country. Shortly after the introduction of the November 12 budget, the New Democratic Party toured the country with a series of open hearings in various towns. We asked for people's reactions to the budget. Whether the hearing was in eastern Canada, central Canada or western Canada, people demonstrated the same concern about the budget being a serious departure from traditional Government policy. There was very little in the budget to enhance the economic recovery which the country needed at that time. When we see the tax Bill that eventually evolved from the November budget and subsequent budgets, we find 13 months later a tax system that can only be described as a jungle. It is a tangle of legislation, regulations and interpretations that are becoming more entangled every year. The tax laws are virtually incomprehensible to almost everyone, including those in the tax Department.

As a matter of fact, the Minister of Finance was recently asked during a Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs hearing whether he could fill out his own income tax form. I give the Minister credit for honestly admitting that he found it impossible to fill out his personal income tax form; he had to go to a tax accountant for assistance. Here we have the Minister of Finance of Canada saying that he is unable to fill out a so-called simple tax form.

The small business sector is equally perplexed. I suspect that many small businesses are virtually on the edge of giving up totally. When one looks at the tax return that a small business is required to fill out and sees the pages of complex information that is required, one can see why a typical small business in this country literally throws these documents out of the door. These small businesses simply cannot handle the red tape, regulations and the jungle of information that they are required to give. They can no longer keep up with the requirements. Canadians are being asked today to participate in a tax process that is beyond comprehension. One simply has to call the tax Department and seek clarification or interpretation of what has been introduced in the last two and a half budgets in order to have an indication of the confusion in the Canadian tax system.

The Income Tax Act in 1971 consisted of approximately 916 pages of legislation. The Government has been attempting to streamline this legislation over the years in order to make it more simplified. However, when one compares the 1981 Income Tax Act to the 1971 Income Tax Act, one sees that it consists of 1,256 pages instead of the former 916 pages. In other words, the Government has added another third to the explanations in order to make it more understandable. This is the Government's notion of encouraging the private sector to participate in the system, but adding more and more pages of complex legislation seems to be a rather peculiar way to streamline the system.

As we move toward the end of 1982, the prevalent trend which we see today is for accountants to run around with their pocket calculators advising their clients about the various year-end tax plans. We see many advertisements at this time of year by the financial institutions which are encouraging people to buy RRSPs, RHOSPs, MURBs and participate in oil and gas and drilling funds. People are being encouraged to buy a share in a Canadian film. One begins to wonder what is happening. For whom are these tax deferrals designed? Are the textile workers and fishermen running out to participate in drilling funds? Are the IWA members or auto workers running out and picking up MURBs, or are the fellows down in the shops or the secretaries in the offices running out and selling off their stocks in order to get the $2,000 capital loss against other income?

Are tax deductions good or bad? A few months ago, MURBs were considered a good investment. The Government encouraged people to buy MURBs. We now find out that they are bad and people can no longer buy them. At one time the Government said that health and dental plans were beneficial and should be encouraged. It then said that these plans were bad and were to be taxed. Now it is again saying that they are good. The Government was saying that investment should be encouraged to buy stocks and the interest on that investment should be tax deductible. That was good then, but a few months ago we were told that it was bad and now, once again, we are told that it is good.

We were told that workers should be encouraged to move out into remote areas of the country to participate in resource development and that they should be encouraged to move there by having their housing subsidized. Then the former Minister of Finance suggested that that was a bad thing, and now we are hearing, once again, that it is not too bad, that it is only bad in certain instances but not in others. Is it any wonder that there is an incredible atmosphere of uncertainty and confusion when it comes to trying to figure out just what on earth the Government is trying to do?

We have heard Hon. Members discussing the whole matter of economic development and how it needs to be encouraged. We found out today that capital investment in this country will fall by $2.4 billion which, of course, will result in something like an extra 280,000 jobs lost in 1983, plus many more unemployed as a result of the lack of consumer confidence.

The Government brings in legislation to kill economic activity, and it does it instantly. When one introduces tax legislation to stop a certain economic activity, it does it instantly. Then when one brings in tax reform to encourage certain kinds of investment, it takes place very slowly. It is a little like a marathon runner, running down the lane, and one walks up to him with a sledgehammer and busts one of his knees; it stops him dead in his tracks. Then we say: "We will just get that cast on and get him going again", but he moves off, very, very slowly.

The people of Canada have lost faith in this tax system. People have looked at the tax system and tried to figure out the motive behind it. Of course, one of the motives was that it would redistribute income in this country, yet when one looks at how income is distributed in Canada, comparing 1960 to 1980, one finds that the top small percentage still controls the majority of income and the percentage of poor remains the same. In other words, the rich are still in place and the poor are still in place, in the same percentages as they were 10 years, 20 years or 30 years ago. Therefore, in terms of redistribution of income, it has not happened.

We hear that the tax system is used by the Government to foster certain economic and social policies. While there has been marginal success in this area, it has been only marginal. I think one of the best examples of this was found in the incentive provided through the tax system for people to participate in the development of the Canadian film industry. With this incentive, upper income earners, by and large, were given a 100 per cent tax write-off if they bought shares in the Canadian feature film industry. In a sense, I think we must recognize that this is a direct grant to the upper income earners of this country to the tune of about $50 million a year. It is a hidden subsidy, then, to the upper income earners. However, the facts show that the films produced before this measure was introduced actually reflected the true essence of Canadian society better than those produced afterwards, because what kind of films were they? American movie moguls were coming into Canada, picking sites in Canada which would look very much like parts of San Francisco, New York, Wyoming or Alaska. There were also obvious, blatant tax avoidance efforts. There were certainly many stories going around concerning inflated movie budgets. In the end result, the movie industry in Canada was perhaps actually harmed as the result of this so-called tax incentive to encourage and invest in the film industry of this country.

In terms of using the tax system to advance good Government policy, that has not worked in Canada because so much of the policy has not been good. It has not been thought through in a careful way. That is why I was quite pleased when the Leader of my party suggested that, indeed, it was possible to use the tax system to encourage critical and strategic industries to develop programs in the research and development area, and to introduce affirmative action programs. In other words, to use the tax system to encourage and reward those corporations which, in fact, were developing in the best interests, not only of themselves but of Canadians as well.

When one gets right down to it, one must admit that the tax system in this country has become nothing but a money grab, nothing but a revenue grab, nothing but a Government bail-out, really, these days. It has created a very peculiar phenomenon in our country. A whole group of people have become participants in guerrilla warfare of tax avoidance. Tax evasion and tax avoidance are becoming almost a preoccupation with more and more Canadians. Normal, decent folks have been driven into discussing and planning how to avoid paying income tax in this country. Yes, I suspect that tax avoidance has moved from being a simple financial migraine into a financial epidemic in this country. If one goes into the bookstores at this time of year, one sees that the best sellers are those books telling one how to avoid paying income tax.

We can identify various groups, certainly those in the executive and highly paid professional category, who have the financial wherewithal to employ high-priced tax lawyers and accountants to assist them to dodge and weave through the various loopholes in the tax system. Then there are those upper middle class people who are exchanging services without any records to show financial transactions. For instance, someone will fix someone else's teeth in exchange for doing a tax return or will take on a particular legal case in exchange for the loan of a condominium in Maui. Goods and services are being exchanged with no record of transaction in terms of national revenue. This is occurring right on down to the blue collar workers, who are taking on extra jobs at night for cash at wages lower than what they would normally expect because the tax man will be unaware of such transactions. Someone will fix someone else's car in return for some plumbing work in the basement for that extra suite, and so on. An entire underground economy is developing, keeping money out of the federal treasury, affecting between 5 per cent and 20 per cent of our gross national product. It is a very serious situation when we have a system which is turning regular, normal, decent people into people who are trying to scheme and dodge around paying tax.

Why have people lost faith in the system? First, they have lost faith because they see how their money is being spent. After all, virtually every Canadian is affected by this tax system. Most Canadians are paying at least some income tax, particularly working Canadians. They see how it is being spent. It is almost like being spent by a drunken sailor but not quite, because a drunken sailor spends his own money. It is like being spent by a drunken sailor who is spending the petty cash he has lifted off the ship.

The Canadian people say that they are simply not appreciative of the way the Government is expending their money. Then when they consider how it is collected, they feel the tax system is obviously unfair and unjust. It favours certain income earners at the expense of others. To be very blatant about it, it favours the upper income people, the rich in this country. The budgets which have been introduced, in spite of what Ministers of Finance have said about their being more equitable, more just, or more fair, have been quite the contrary.

The publication of one of the tax experts in this country is entitled "The New Canadian Tax and Investment Guide". This man has spent his entire life trying to advise people and finding ways to avoid paying tax, legally, as per the Income Tax Act. He says that the wealthy investor in Canada in 1983 will pay the same tax rate, even if his investment increases from, say, $200,000 to $300,000 in a given year.

While the MacEachen budget has been promoted as an attack against the rich, a close analysis of these numbers will show that the rich are virtually unaffected. For the rich and the super-rich the budget provides a 10 per cent decrease in tax rate.

One could look at what happens to one of these upper income earners in the Province of British Columbia or Ontario, just to take two Provinces as a sample. In 1981, under the old Budget, at a $100,000 income he would pay $32,589 in federal income tax. In 1982, as a result of the changes he would pay $29,085. When one considers that the provincial tax is related to the federal tax, for the person making $100,000 in British Columbia or Ontario, this budget and this tax Bill will save him in excess of $5,000 a year. Those are the facts.

What we are saying is that the tax system of this country favours certainly a very select upper income group, and that is why people are fed up. That is why people are going out of their way to try to find ways and means to manipulate the system to avoid paying what they know is an unjust tax.

Mr. Speaker, if you look very closely at the tax Bill and at the tax laws of this country, it becomes more incredible all the time: a tax system that consciously taxes the very poorest, those with incomes well below the poverty line. I raise this as a fundamental criticism of our tax system and one that really demonstrates clearly how desperate this Government is in terms of grabbing money.

In our country, the poverty level for a single person is about $5,000 a year. In 1981, a single person paying tax would have a number of deductions totalling something in the neighbourhood of $3,500. After $3,500, that single individual would be paying tax on money earned. What that says is that people who are living below the poverty line in this country, and there are hundreds of thousands of them in that category, are paying federal income tax. Surely to goodness we could allow an individual to work his or her way up to the basic poverty level of Canada before we start taxing them. But no, this Government taxes people whose incomes are below, and in many cases well below, the poverty line as defined by Statistics Canada. I think that demonstrates clearly just how desperate or perhaps how thoughtless this Government's tax system really is.

Mr. Blackburn: It gives millionaires a break.

Mr. Riis: It gives millionaires a break, as my colleague from Brant indicates.

Let us look at a few sectors of this tax Bill and how it impacts on certain sectors. Many of my colleagues in the days ahead will discuss the impact on the life insurance business, on the energy sector, on the agricultural sector, as it affects a number of women's issues, how it relates to the housing industry and how labour is influenced by this tax Bill.

I want to just focus for a moment or two on the area of small business. I choose small business because this Bill, C-139, goes out of its way to make life miserable for the small business person. Here is a sector of our country made up of about 940,000 small businesses and shrinking, by the way, every day.

There is a story circulating as to how you start a small business in this country. The best way to build a small business or to find yourself the proprietor of a small business is to buy a large corporation, vote Liberal and wait a little while. Then, of course, you will end up with a small business very, very quickly.

These are the businesses that are virtually 100 per cent Canadian-owned. They are community oriented. They are labour-intensive as opposed to being capital-intensive. They represent the sector that is most effective in job creation. They do not send out vast amounts of money out of Canada in terms of interest and dividends. In other words, this is the sector of our economy that should be encouraged, that should be supported, that should be nurtured.

When you look at Bill C-139, you find that the Income Tax Act as it existed prior to the November budget—without taking into account Bill C-139—provided that a Canadian-controlled private corporation in the business of earning income from an active or non-qualifying business would be eligible for the low rate of 25 per cent, including provincial and federal combined tax; 25 per cent of the first $150,000 of income each year. When the small business has claimed the low rate on $750,000 during its lifetime, the small business would no longer be eligible for this low rate of tax and their tax rate would jump to the 50 per cent range.

However, if a corporation paid a taxable dividend to its shareholders, the payment of the dividend would then reduce the amount on which the low rate has been claimed. Thus, the shareholders of the small business corporation would make sure that the small business cumulative deduction account was rejuvenated by paying taxable dividends to himself or herself, or to the shareholders of that small operation. Then the individual would personally pay the tax on the taxable dividend, after the dividend tax credit.

What this meant was that the payment of the dividend rejuvenated the availability of the small business deduction in the year that followed. This provision enabled the small business peson to finance that operation from its earnings because of the shareholders reinvesting most of the dividends back into the small business. In other words, it enabled the small business to build equity capital, and it gave some encouragement for that small business to avoid going to the financial institutions and borrowing at excessive interest rates.

However, Bill C-139 changes all this, Mr. Speaker, the annual income eligible for the low tax rate will increase from the original $150,000 up to $200,000, and the total amount on which a corporation can claim the low tax rate, during the life of the corporation, is on accumulated earnings of $1 million as opposed to $750,000.

However—and this is where the major change has occurred—any dividends paid after 1981 will not rejuvenate the accumulated earnings account. Furthermore, the corporation may have already accumulated earnings of, say, $400,000 as a result of earnings in the past which have not been dividended out. If this corporation earns $200,000 in each of the next three years, it will run out of the $1 million limit and in year four, and from then on, it will no longer be eligible for the small business tax rate. On the other hand, a similar business which had been paying out dividends will have five years at $200,000 a year before it would end up paying the high tax rate of 50 per cent.

The question I want to put to Members opposite is, why do they think that a small business should be entitled to a low tax rate on only its first $1 million of accumulated earnings? Does that small business all of a sudden become a large business in the sixth year of its operation? The Act, in Section 72(c), which concerns the transfer of shares of small business corporations from a father to his children, provides that a small business corporation would be a Canadian-controlled private company which carries on an act of business. One has to wonder why this defined small business is not a small business at the end of five years, with accumulated earnings of $1 million. Do Members opposite intend to destroy the small businesses of Canada by asking them to pay at a high corporate rate, when in fact their economic situation remains totally unchanged?

One could also comment on the corporate distribution tax of 12.5 per cent, now that it has been levied on the small business. Of course, the result of this will be to encourage small business, rather than to continue on as a family operation, to sell up, so that the father who wants to sell to his son or to his daughter now will have to pay that 12.5 per cent. That will be encouragement to sell the operation lock, stock and barrel to someone else. Consequently we will see small business moving more and more into the national and multinational sector.

Let us be honest. This Bill was written for the large corporate sector and for the wealthy of Canada. It will make rich people richer and favour the rich at the expense of the poorer people of Canada. That is not rhetoric. Let us look at some of the facts.

Those with taxable income over $24,464 will receive a reduced tax rate as a result of this Bill. Those in the upper income levels with a taxable income of over $133,000 will have a significant tax decrease, from 43 per cent to 34 per cent. There will be a 9 per cent drop in the tax rate. This will result in a tax saving to the upper income earners per year of about $5.7 billion, a nice subsidy for the upper income earners of Canada.

The 1978 tax returns indicated that well over 2,000 individuals who had assessed incomes of more than $50,000 paid no income tax at all. Hundreds who earned in excess of $100,000 paid no income tax. In 1979 more than $30 billion in revenues were lost to the Government as a result of tax loopholes.

While most Canadians were paying tax rates in the area of 20 to 25 per cent, the banks of Canada were paying a tax rate of 18 per cent, Power Corporation a rate of 11 per cent, the Steel Company of Canada 7 per cent, and Cadillac-Fairview 6 per cent. In other words, while the average working Canadian was being asked to pay 20 to 25 per cent of his income in tax, the banks and major real estate corporations were being asked to pay significantly less. When you look carefully at this Bill and the tax system, it is interesting to find that it is a kind of hidden subsidy or welfare for the upper earners of Canada.

In 1979 the Clark Government published the first Government report outlining the tax expenditure account. It proved beyond any question that most Government spending is actually done through the tax system, not through the usual kind of system such as DREE. In fact, eight times as much money was spent on housing and urban renewal through the tax system than through direct spending.

In the resource sector, the manufacturing sector, the general business incentive sector, the Government spent about $1.5 billion directly and about $6 billion through the tax system. As an example, take the income from capital gains. In 1978 1 per cent of tax filers accounted for 55 per cent of all the capital gain reported. Five hundred individuals with incomes over $100,000 recorded all their income from capital gains. A capital gain is only taxed half. In other words, half the capital gain is taxed. Another way of putting it is this. In 1980, $1 billion was spent to subsidize those who speculate in the securities and commodity markets and those who realize profit from real estate and other capital property sales.

This is justified by saying these people are in a high-risk area. They are risking their funds, but capital gains applies to all or any property. While it may be true in certain areas, it certainly would not be true for those who are making their capital gains through investment-induced stocks where the risk is indeed extremely minimal.

Over the last number of months, many people to my right have been railing on how they despise the way the Government spends on the CBC, and yet are quite willing to accept a 100 per cent tax break for those individuals invited to participate in the Canadian film industry.

Who can argue against charities? Let us look at who participates in contributions to charities. If you are in the $100,000 a year bracket, a $100 donation will cost you $39. If you are in the $10,000 a year bracket, a $100 donation to a charity fund will cost you $73. In other words, the tax system of Canada gives the wealthy much more power over the spending of Government money. One per cent of the taxpayers allocate about 35 per cent of all the Government funds that go to certain charities. The charities that are associated with and encouraged by the upper income earners are the ones that are funded. Lower income Canadians do not have the same flexibility in the tax system to support the charitable organizations that they would like to support.

Let us deal with child care costs. We recognize today that with the state of the economy, it is important often for both parents to be away from home working. If a single parent is working, day care expenses become very important. If you are in the 65 per cent tax bracket, you get a subsidy from the Government of $650 for child care costs. If you are in the typical 20 to 25 per cent bracket, you get $250. If you are in the low income bracket you get nothing because there is no deduction. Any deduction in a low income area would be worthless. The Minister of Finance should say that we have a system which supports child care costs and some help to those who are very wealthy, a little less for the middle income group and nothing for the poor of Canada in terms of child care costs.

I listened with interest this afternoon when we were talking about deferred profit sharing. The idea behind that is good. However, when we hear that 90 per cent of the deferred profit sharing programs are used by firms participating with only three or fewer, we get the impression that this tax legislation is not being used for the purpose for which it was intended.

This Bill is simply too important and complex to gloss over. It is too important to pass quickly. In fact, when you consider what this Bill does, Mr. Speaker, it must be opposed. We waited 13 months for this Bill to come before the House. We know that there will be another budget in 90 days. There will likely be another set of tax changes. In the best interests of stability and certainty, perhaps we should hold off passing this Bill. Perhaps we should pass one Bill associated with that new budget and settle this whole matter. It would give the people of Canada some years where they could predict that no serious changes would be made to the tax laws.

I said at the outset of my comments that this Bill is tinkering with a system that is unjust. Further tinkering will not help the situation. When you consider the complexity, it is likely going to make it more unjust and more confusing. The average wage earners in Canada who cannot afford a tax lawyer or accountant to help them with their tax returns are being disadvantaged as the complexity grows more and more.

We plan to study this Bill very carefully. We plan to debate this Bill and point out its shortcomings in the hope that the Government will see fit to remove some of the more problematic clauses. We certainly do not plan to support this Bill so as to see its rapid completion in the next eight days before Christmas.

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Mr. Speaker, it was almost exactly one year ago when I rose to speak on the origins of this income tax legislation, the November, 1981, budget. It has taken this Government 389 days to bring in the income tax legislation to implement portions of that budget in the form of Bill C-139. This Bill is being presented by the new Finance Minister (Mr. Lalonde), a new hand at the helm of the financial ship of state, but these changes must be viewed in the context of the economic distress which this Government's fiscal and monetary policy has imposed on Canadians because we want to ensure that the measures in this Bill help to alleviate that stress.

A year ago I detailed the hardship, uncertainty and chaos being created by that November budget. I reviewed some of its most damaging aspects such as the taxation of income from life insurance, the removal of incentives for construction of rental accommodation, the blows to investment, the taxation of income before it is received and the taxation of employee benefits. I said then, that these measures are damaging at any time but are particularly destructive when the economy is in a tailspin. I quoted comments which I received from Canadians who are outraged by the ineptness and incompetence of this Government. And I concluded that speech by saying, "Canadians will not accept the budget. It has caused too much pain and too many broken commitments." It gives me no pleasure at all, Mr. Speaker, to look back at that time and realize that my comments were all too accurate. That budget has had a devastating impact on the economy, on business, on investors, and on Canadians in general.

My Province of British Columbia has been particularly hard hit this year both by the recession and by this Government's policies. Its major employer, the forest sector, for example, is struggling to survive. We have heard in this House about the threat to our soft wood lumber exports which we face from the U.S. Major lumber companies are reporting huge third-quarter losses. For instance, one of our largest firms, MacMillan Bloedel Limited, of Vancouver has fired 22 per cent of its salaried work force, and at one point had laid off almost half of its hourly-paid employees. Fourth quarter losses are expected to be high also. The Council of Forest Industries reports between 25 per cent and 30 per cent of British Columbia lumber mill capacity is closed. The devaluation of the Scandinavian currency has had a stunning impact on our hopes for an early recovery of our offshore pulp markets. The IWA expects that total lay-offs will rise to 20 per cent of the lumber industry's work force. There are some towns, such as Port Alberni, which face 30 per cent to 40 per cent unemployment. Yet this Government has brought in no long-term solution to deal with some of these fundamental economic problems.

The hardest task to deal with, Mr. Speaker, for any Member of Parliament on either side of the House today is unemployment in his riding. We are daily meeting with very proud people, people in shock, people who have given the best years of their lives to agencies or to companies and who are out of work. Some of these people no longer even ask us to help them get jobs. Their problem is that they are running out of their unemployment insurance benefits and they are desperate for any measure at all that we can give them to re-enter the labour force. Given that reality in our ridings, I was truly astounded to hear the Finance Minister today say he expected unemployment to drop next year, because that is not the reality that we face here today. It is in keeping with this Government's track record, however, of disastrous economic policies and poor forecasts.

While B.C.'s unemployment soared by 100 per cent this year over last, this Government was draining the investment needed to create jobs through a series of anti-investment measures. With mines closing throughout the Province, the Minister planned to tax employee benefits and northern allowances, thus making remote sites uneconomical. As the B.C. economy plunged, the Government proposed to make it harder for Canadians to provide for their future by taxing life insurance, restricting the $1,000 pension deduction and disallowing the deduction of interest costs on funds borrowed to invest in registered retirement savings plans and deferred profit-sharing plans. While the number of business bankruptcies in B.C. doubled this year, this Government was gutting the small business development bond, eliminating reserves and applying a 12.5 per cent tax on dividends.

For over a year now this Government has not addressed the central issue facing our country today, the collapse of the economy. In fact, its policies have been making our problems very much worse. In my riding of Vancouver Centre, for example, small independent retailers of high fashion footwear are being put out of business by the Government's import quotas on footwear. These quotas were imposed last summer to protect the jobs of Canadian manufacturers in Central Canada at the expense of jobs elsewhere. Unfortunately, the Canadians who are being put out of business are the small retailers who sell highly specialized shoes for which there is no Canadian manufacturer. One merchant in my riding, for example, sells shoes which are designed in Canada by Canadians, but made offshore because it is uneconomical for any Canadian manufacturer to produce them. The quota he was allocated is too small to keep him in business and, unfortunately, he received his quota two months after the deadline for appealing it had passed. He tells me that unless he is allocated sufficient quota to keep him in business, he must close his doors. This Government, therefore, is forcing Canadians out of work in order to protect jobs which do not exist and cannot exist because of the size of the market in this country.

As a result of the Government's economic policies, a great deal of damage has been caused, and some of it long-term. The loss of faith and confidence in the future which some of my colleagues have referred to, Canadians will feel for a long time to come. For instance, a woman wrote to the Finance Minister about her husband. She said:

> My husband's UIC ran out in June. He has been looking for employment for over a year. I have watched this man, who has lots of ability and experience in many areas, a man who would be an asset to anyone who would employ him, become discouraged, disheartened and finally to begin to feel that he is of no value to anyone. Whatever you think may happen in the decade of the 80s will be likely too late for us, and there are thousands like us.

Canadians have also lost faith in their Government. I continually meet Canadians with years of professional service who are out of work. I remember meeting with one bureaucrat who said he deals with former colleagues of his, people he went to college with, people he worked in business with, who are out of work, and their attitude toward him as a secure bureaucrat is one of burning resentment. Distrust, indifference and resentment are dangerous attitudes if we want to work together in the future to pull ourselves out of this crisis. As one of my constituents said in a letter:

> I do not believe that the Canadian taxpayer will trust any Government incentive program for quite some time.

In fact, who could blame them? Businesses which have gone bankrupt will not easily re-open their doors. A senior citizen on a very limited income told me, "This budget is making everyone live in fear, and fear is foreign to me." She will not forget that feeling of insecurity. The tenants who cannot find affordable housing will never recapture the exorbitant rents they are having to pay because the Government removed effective incentives to build. Many Canadian taxpayers will pay more tax because the Government changed the taxation rules and disrupted their planning. Many Canadians will never return to their jobs because their jobs have vanished. And this is particularly hard on the young Canadians who tend to be the last hired and the first fired.

When I am working in my riding with Government programs which are too narrow to deal with the problems, one of the toughest problems I have is finding work for young kids who do not have a work record, do not have unemployment insurance and cannot qualify for the Government's job creation programs.

One of my constituents is a chartered accountant who wrote me recently that his practice had grown substantially for all the wrong reasons and he said his clients are desperate to find ways to survive while dealing with problems beyond their understanding. I think this constituent has touched on one of the major problems underlying this Government's economic policies, and that is the intrusion of the state into areas which have previously been reserved for the individual.

There are two disturbing themes which can be identified through the last two budgets, the Minister's economic statement, and in this income tax legislation. The first is the fact that the Government is forcing Canadians to depend on the state rather than on themselves. Second, the Government is taking money from people before they receive it. These two themes have formed the basis for the original November budget, and they are present in this income tax legislation.

There is no question, Mr. Speaker, but that this income tax legislation is a much improved document over that first budget. Over the last 13 months some 47 retreats and withdrawals have been made to the initial proposal, largely because of the efforts of the Official Opposition on behalf of and working with Canadians hurt by the budget. Certainly we welcome some positive measures that the Government has included in the legislation. I am glad to see, for example, that the Child Tax Credit has been increased by $50 per year, per child. I think this credit is one of the most fair means of helping out families with children. I applaud any move to strengthen it. With my NDP colleague, the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis), I would welcome any measure to extend daycare credits.

I think our income tax legislation is improved by the provision in the Bill which permits the tax-free transfer of an RRSP between spouses in the event of a marriage breakup. That is a constructive move. I am also very pleased to see that the Government has agreed not to touch the employer contribution to health and dental plans. I was afraid that if this measure had been included in the legislation, many Canadians would simply opt out of these plans.

Today the Minister of Finance claimed that the legislation reduces taxes for 5.8 million Canadians, for a total saving of approximately $1 billion per year. What the Minister failed to acknowledge is that the major beneficiaries are high income Canadians whose marginal tax rates has been reduced. Low and middle income Canadians gain little or nothing from lower or marginal tax rates and will lose proportionately more from the partial deindexation of old age and public service pensions.

Many employees are also adversely affected by the 40 per cent increase in unemployment insurance premiums announced by the Minister in his October economic statement and by the increased taxation of some important employee benefits. As an example, loans to employees to permit them to purchase a home or shares in their company will become taxable. This measure discourages employees from investing in their own firms, which is a measure that we need in order to encourage the productivity increases that we need to fuel our recovery.

In the case of loans for housing, it also represents a real barrier to worker mobility. As the Council of Forest Industries of B.C. wrote me, this will make it even more difficult to attract employees to areas of high housing costs, such as outside Vancouver. This measure seems particularly ill-timed, since the federal Government has been strongly encouraging the Provinces to eliminate all barriers to worker mobility. The cost of housing is certainly a major barrier to that kind of mobility.

Similarly, the standby charge on which the amount of taxation on company cars is calculated has been doubled. We in the Official Opposition did succeed in persuading the Government to limit the increase, since the November budget proposed an even higher rate of taxation, and we are pleased that the Government has agreed to modify the taxation for those who do not use their cars a great deal for personal business. We still believe this is an unnecessary tax increase at a time when this industry has been hit very hard by the recession. Many auto dealerships across the country have gone bankrupt over the past year, and yet the Government persists in adding to their burden by forcing the employers and the employees to keep much more detailed records in order to exact this tax.

One of the meanest aspects of this Income Tax Act is its effect on Canadians who are retired or who are trying to provide for their retirement. Many of these changes are extremely complicated and confusing to seniors who often do not understand the rules which keep changing and which are much more complex than they have been accustomed to.

For example, the Government has restricted the amounts that can be rolled over tax-free into registered pension plans and Registered Retirement Savings Plans, to $2,000 per year of employment plus $1,500 for each year that no money was contributed to a pension plan. Originally, the impact of this measure would have been extremely harsh, because it was retroactive. Many people who planned to retire at the end of 1981 were going to be affected without warning. For that reason, we forced the Government to grandfather this measure. Nevertheless, the Government severely disrupted the financial planning of many groups nearing retirement. We heard from many professional groups such as the Police Association of Ontario and the B.C. Federation of Teachers.

As one Canadian said of this measure in his letter to the Minister of Finance, "If the intent is to get people to not plan for retirement but rather to count on Guaranteed Income Supplements or other Government assistance, you are on the right track."

Furthermore, this Bill denies registration for future deferred profit sharing plans which allow an owner to qualify for a plan. It prevents owner-managers from using this means to provide for retirement. It is very unfair, particularly to small businessmen who may not know how much money their company will earn in a year and who draw limited salaries.

I was in that position when I ran my own company, before being elected. Everyone else is paid first, the bills are paid and then the boss is paid. A deferred profit sharing plan was a simple way to allocate part of your own wage cost when you did not know how much you would earn in a year. Its loss is going to be a very bad thing for a lot of small businessmen, particularly in times when costs are hard to forecast.

In addition, this legislation eliminates the deductibility of interest on loans taken out to purchase RRSPs. Particularly hard hit are middle-income Canadians since many rely on RRSPs to provide income security for their future. In fact, nearly 1 million people earning less than $30,000 per year declare contributions to RRSPs as deductions. Many of them borrow money to purchase their RRSPs because they do not happen to have the lump sum available to meet the purchasing deadline early in the year. This measure hurts low income Canadians. Higher income people have the money available. As our task force toured the country it was told this by many groups, over and over again. As many of these loans are paid off within the year, they are a form of forced savings. In effect, the Government is penalizing Canadians for prudently putting money aside.

Another harmful measure in this legislation is the limits to the $1,000 pension deduction. In most cases the pension deduction is limited for those under age 60 who roll over a pension benefit into an RRSP. This affects those who retire early and who may wish to shelter income which at the present time is surplus to their needs. That is important in bad times when people are being asked to retire early. It also denies the pension deduction to those who receive lumpsum pension benefits in any form other than life annuities.

As with so many of the Government's measures, it hits hardest those most vulnerable—those Canadians who are at the end of their salaried years and who face a future on a fixed income.

Many small businessmen, farmers and those who are employed in seasonal occupations such as fishing and logging, are particularly hard hit by the elimination of general averaging and income averaging annuity contracts and their replacement with forward averaging.

For those who receive a once-in-a-lifetime income which they would like to set aside for their retirement, the IAAC is no longer available. For those whose income varied with the seasons and the harvests, the automatic system under which their gains and losses were evened out by the tax system is no longer available.

Both systems have been replaced by a very complicated procedure called forward averaging, in which a taxpayer will have to estimate whether his income will fall in the coming years, prepay the tax at the top marginal tax rate and claim it back in the future. He will have to hire an accountant to pilot him through the extremely complicated procedures. Should he neglect to tell the Government he intends to forward average initially—either because he does not understand the system or because he does not realize his income in future years will fall—he will not be able to claim back the tax he has paid. He is taking all the risk while the Government has fully hedged its bets, taking the money. Those who suffer least are those in top tax brackets who lose nothing by electing to forward average since they have to pay the top rate anyway.

After attacking in so many ways the ability of older Canadians to provide for their retirement, the Government caps it off by limiting the indexing of old age pensions and Public Service pensions. Nearly 1.2 million Canadians are affected by these two measures which are enshrined in Bills C-131 and C-133 currently being studied by committees of the House. What these measures represent collectively is best described by two people who wrote me from Vancouver. One investment analyst said the following about the victims of these measures:

> Probably not since the depression years of the 1930s has a group of Canadians suffered such drastic reversals in their economic fortunes while having paid comparatively high tax levels during their productive years and having no responsibility whatsoever for the economic plight they find themselves faced with today, to say nothing of the loss of personal pride and dignity.

Recently the Minister of Finance said that he expected older Canadians to shoulder their share of the battle against inflation. As the President of the Vancouver branch of the Federal Superannuates National Association said with reference to the deindexing of Public Service pensions:

> These are the same Canadians that were obliged to carry the main burden of the 1930-1939 depression. A great number of these Canadians bear the psychological scars of unemployment during their youth; of living in family homes in which welfare payments were their main subsistence; of soup kitchens and "riding the rods". This group of older Canadians is also the group that was called upon to carry their load during the period 1939-1945 war and facing all the rigors that war involves.

This group is one of the major victims of the Government's economic policies. They have suffered through a recession which has been made worse by a Government that is incompetent and shortsighted. They are being penalized for attempting to provide for themselves and for trusting the Government. The irony is that at the same time as the Government reduces the indexing on pensions, it is forcing more Canadians to become even more reliant on income from state resources after retirement.

In conclusion, I should like to touch briefly on the other very dangerous principle which underlies the Government's economic policies, that is, to tax money before it is received by the taxpayer. In his statement today, the Minister of Finance neglected to point out that that is still an underlying theme. The November budget established a very dangerous principle when it dwelt on the concept of tax expenditures and argued that the Government is forgoing a great deal of revenue by not imposing taxes on certain kinds of hidden income or imputed income.

The Government argued that many taxpayers were receiving benefits on which they were not paying tax, and it set out to capture some of this revenue. In the November budget, for example, it proposed to tax Canadians who sold property and then took back mortgages. Where in the past the taxpayer paid taxes as he received income, the Government proposed to force him to pay tax on the sale as if he or she received a lump sum from the purchaser rather than in instalments on a regular basis.

If we had not forced the Government to alter this provision, most small land developers would have been put out of business and with them the jobs they create would have disappeared. The Government has applied the same principle to the taxation of life insurance and annuities. Fortunately we have been successful in persuading the Government to modify the provision, but the principle remains and is embodied in this income tax legislation. Accrued income on some kinds of life insurance will now be taxable, thus affecting those Canadians for whom these policies are a major form of retirement income. Similarly, accrued interest on annuities is now taxable. Income from annuities is calculated every three years and tax must be paid on that amount even though the taxpayer does not receive a direct benefit from the annuity at that time. With the Government operating on this deemed-income principle, who knows what may become taxable in the future?

The income tax legislation before us requires careful scrutiny. It is extremely complicated. As the Minister of Finance said today in the House, income tax legislation is forbiddingly complex. This Bill is nearly 300 pages long. It has been pointed out that it is the most complex document we have seen since the Carter Commission on Taxation, a Commission which produced seven volumes of work, which met and held public hearings for months to discuss similar types of measures.

We in the Conservative Party have acted very responsibly in the past year in our efforts to gather information about the impacts of this income tax legislation, in our task force on the budget which travelled the country, in the volume of correspondence from constituents across the country with which we dealt, and in trying to seek, through committees, constructive solutions to some of the changes.

We are not about to be rushed now into forcing this legislation through the House. We are not here to stonewall the legislation, but we are here to ensure a sense of security about the measures contained in the legislation. It was this Government that created the tremendous uncertainty about our income tax legislation; trying to rush the legislation through will simply compound the problem. There are examples, for instance, in terms of work in progress. For many firms such as engineering and economic consulting firms, this measure will impose undue economic hardship.

I should like Government Members to consider the case of Dome Petroleum which hired all its consultants. The industry says that in the worst days of its financial difficulties it simply did not pay them. Is the Government proposing that those people bear the entire brunt of this kind of legislation?

We in the Conservative Party are anxious to proceed in a responsible manner with what we hope is the final instalment of this long budget process. We do not want to be identifying and debating once again unworkable aspects of the Bill long into the future. Stability is the key which we are seeking, and stability requires that we ensure that when this legislation is approved, it is the best we can make it.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Mr. Speaker, in commencing my remarks today I cannot help but mention how odd it was to hear the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) earlier this afternoon rise in the House and talk about removing uncertainty and getting on with telling the people of Canada exactly where they stand with respect to income tax, and then to take a look at the Bill before us.

It is fair to say that the provisions in the Bill touching on small businesses, which are mainly involved with amendments to Section 125 of the existing Income Tax Act, are nothing but a morass. They are a morass through which most small-businessmen would virtually find themselves incapable of finding their way. I say this because the Minister of Finance in his press release, when the legislation was first but before us, stated that he had received calls from the "business community to end the uncertainty over our tax laws." He suggested that it was now time to "let affected taxpayers know precisely where they stand."

In this context it might be helpful to read into the record one short passage in the Bill which deals with small-businessmen and then ask ourselves honestly whether it is fair for a Minister to say that he is clearing the uncertainties and that he is allowing affected taxpayers to know precisely where they stand. I refer to page 189 wherein the following is indicated:

(4) Subparagraphs 125(6)(b)(iii) and (iii.1) of the said Act are repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"(iii) the aggregate of

(A) 4/3 of the amount, if any, by which

(I) The aggregate of all amounts each of which is a dividend (other than the portion thereof referred to in subclause (B)(I)) that was deductible under section 112 or subsection 113(1) from the corporation's income for the year exceeds

Then it continues:

(II) 4 times the amount of the tax under Part IV that would be payable by the corporation for the year on the assumption that no amount was claimed by the corporation for the year under paragraph 186(1)(c) or (d) (other than the part thereof referred to in subclause (B)(II)), and

(B) 3/2—

I take it that is the draftmen's way of saying one and a half. In any event they said:

(B) 3/2 of the amount, if any, by which

(I) the aggregate of all amounts each of which is the portion of a dividend that was deductible—

I could go on by referring to the full page, but perhaps at eight o'clock I could continue to show how unintelligible the Act is, as put to the House by the Minister of Finance. We must bear in mind that it is small-business who will have to read that Clause and figure out where they now stand in relation to the income tax system of the country. Perhaps I could continue at eight o'clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I thank the Hon. Member for calling it six o'clock. It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock this evening.

At 6 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member for Hamilton West (Mr. Hudecki).

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I am not clear on the arrangements that we normally make in order to permit the Hon. Member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens) to finish his comments.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When the House rose at six o'clock, the Hon. Member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens) had the floor. He is not present. Is there any other Member prepared to speak?

Mr. Weatherhead: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The Hon. Member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens) is at a meeting down the hall. I saw him leave a minute ago and I am sure he is on his way.

An Hon. Member: Here he is.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for York-Peel.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, I must apologize for delaying the House. But as you know, we sometimes run into conflicts. Tonight there is a dinner meeting in the Railway Committee Room, which went a little longer than anticipated. In fact, the bells started to ring just as the main course was being brought in. I can only apologize in the sense that I was the unfortunate victim of the conflicts with which we live in the politics of Canada.

As you will recall, Mr. Speaker, I was simply pointing out that in sharp contrast to what the Minister of Finance had indicated as something that would remove uncertainty with respect to our tax laws and would, to use his words, "affect taxpayers and allow them to know precisely where they stand", that was really stretching the English language when one considers the type of Bill in the form of an amendment to the Income Tax Act that we have before us in Bill C-139.

I was reading in particular only parts of the Clause dealing with small business taxation. I pointed out that surely when you read the wording in that Clause, it is almost incomprehensible, certainly to us in the House of Commons and I would suggest even to the tax lawyers and accountants who are being asked to cope with these sections and passages every day of the week. This matter was brought to my attention soon after this Bill was tabled on December 7 by a number of tax authorities in Toronto and in other localities in Canada. After receiving the Bill and spending four hours reading the Clause, in the case of one of the largest chartered accountant firms in Canada, its experts were still unable to know how to advise their client as to the impact of the Clause.

If we could just follow the Clause to which I was referring starting on page 189, we find sub-paragraph 125(6)(b)(iii), of which I will read the preliminary part. It goes on to sub-paragraph (iii.1) where it states:

where the year in its first taxation year ending after 1982, the amount, if any, of the prescribed addition to the cumulative deduction account of the corporation, and

(iii.2) the aggregate of all amounts each of which is an amount required to be added to the amount of the cumulative deduction account of the corporation at the end of the year under subsection (8.1) or (8.4).

(5) Subparagraphs 125(6)(b)(iv) and (iv.1) of the said Act are repealed and the following substituted therefor:

I quote that just as an example. But this goes on not by the page or by tens of pages, but by hundreds of pages. We have a little less than 300 pages in this Bill that, if passed, will be put before the people of Canada, particularly those who have to pay taxes in this country, who will be asked to please pay up. It is "pay up the taxes" that in effect we say are properly payable under this Bill.

Let us put that into perspective. We are amending here an Income Tax Act that first began in 1917. It is interesting to look at the initial act. I have here a copy of the initial Act passed by this Parliament in 1917, at that time as a temporary war measure. The Act passed in 1917, was ten pages long; including the schedules it amounted to 11 pages. It had only 24 clauses, and that was it. Yet here a simple amendment to that Act, as it was in 1917, has required 295 pages to be put into a special Bill, presented to Parliament, presumably passed, and we are all supposed to cheer, if you believe that the Minister of Finance has removed the ambiguities so that suddenly everything is made abundantly clear for the taxpayers of Canada.

That is only part of the problem. We find, when we review the matter, that this only deals with specific amendments to the Income Tax Act itself. It does not touch all the variances that are occurring even as we talk. There probably are some bureaucrats changing those regulations now.

• (2010)

The fact is that regulations are being changed. Let me refer to one example. I trust that every Liberal is very familiar with the Income Tax Act. When I refer to the fact that there is a Part XI—sometimes referred to as 11—of the Income Tax regulations dealing with capital cost allowances, those Members will know immediately that one of the most important changes suggested in November, 1981, with respect to our Income Tax Act was the very radical move made by the Government of reducing the capital cost allowance that businessmen were entitled to with respect to depreciation or write-offs on capital goods. That section has netted the federal Treasury for this year and next year an estimated $2 billion. But this change in the regulations did not even rate being put into the income tax amendment which we are now considering. Bill C-139 does not include any reference to that capital cost allowance adjustment because it has been touched upon in a regulation. It was simply a matter of amending Part XI to the income tax regulations to cut the normal write-off which included being able to write off, for example, $100,000 of equipment or other capital expenditures within the year to only half of that amount. I cite this example because this is a regulation that has a $2 billion impact as far as the taxpayers in Canada are concerned, yet we in the House of Commons are not even given an opportunity to consider that change in a direct way.

Not only are regulations used for that purpose, I would point out that included with the small bundle which we received with Bill C-139 was another press release from the Minister of Finance in which he stated that he was including draft regulations in such a form as to assist in the understanding of the Bill and to invite comments from interested persons before they are issued in final form. These draft regulations that the Minister referred to concern the taxation of certain debt obligations, annuities, and life insurance policies. How can one accept the credibility of a Minister of Finance, who said earlier today that he is trying to remove ambiguities, who wants us to believe his press release which states that he is calling for the passage of this law to let affected taxpayers know precisely where they stand, when he hands us at the very same time another press release which says, "Incidentally, I have passed a few more regulations in draft form that I would like you to look at and comment on because we are not sure what to do in that field."

In short, the Minister has introduced much more ambiguity into our tax system at a time when the public needs clarity, certainly from a taxpayer's point of view, and less uncertainty as to what the total impact of taxation is on individual Canadians. I suggest that any amendment to the Income Tax Act which requires a magnitude of explanation such as we see before us should be withdrawn, reconsidered and introduced in a simpler form. The time has come when we surely have to accept that if people are to be taxed to the extent they are now taxed in Canada, the least that can be done for them is to make it understandable as to when they do or do not pay taxes. I remind Hon. Members of the extent to which we are being taxed in this country. Let us never forget that the total take of the Government today is between 42 cents and 43 cents of every dollar that we earn. This means that in a five-day workweek the first two days that one works are simply to earn enough money to pay some level of Government what it believes is its take.

As has been said, slavery is living in a society that taxes its people 100 per cent. We are 42 per cent of the way there already. I believe that it is not only time to draw back from more taxation; we must make it abundantly clear that if taxation is necessary it must clearly be done in a manner that is understandable.

Some Members on the Government benches may suggest that it is easy for a critic from the Official Opposition to make these suggestions and that they know better. What I find most odd is that one of the Government's super Ministers, the Minister of State for Economic Development (Mr. Johnston) who is the czar, if you like, who hovers over all these lesser economic Ministers, has written various articles. For example, he wrote an article in the McGill Law Journal concerning the taxpayer and fiscal legislation. It is very interesting to hear what the super Minister on the Government side said about the very things we are discussing tonight. For example, he said:

> The arbitrary or discretionary imposition of taxes is therefore incompatible with the first meaning of the 'Rule of Law'.

He goes on to state:

> Yet even in the absence of arbitrary or discretionary powers, the individual may be unable to ascertain the consequences of his actions because of the language of the statute with which he is concerned.

He mentions how important it is not to have imprecision or ambiguity in legislation. The point that he is making is that if a Government tells its citizens that they cannot claim ignorance of the law or that they do not know what the law is, the legislators then must go out of their way to ensure that the law is easily understood. In short, the Minister points out in his article that:

> The first rule of importance is that the subject is not to be taxed without clear words for that purpose.

He goes on to cite an English authority to support that statement. I suggest that all Hon. Members who wish to read this full article can turn to the McGill Law Journal of 1962, Volume 8, No. 2. They have a very interesting exposé in support of the arguments that I am raising tonight. This is an example of a senior Government Minister who has realized for the past 20 years the importance of having simply worded language in statutes if the Government is going to tax the people as a result of those statutes. He went on to state:

> Unfortunately the existence of legislation which permits such arbitrary taxation probably does not arouse public concern to the same extent as legislation which confers arbitrary powers permitting encroachments upon physical freedom or freedom of expression.

• (2020)

He then went on to state:

> It would seem therefore that liberty may be especially vulnerable to abuse in the realm of fiscal legislation.

Then he quotes a quotation to which I often refer myself. On November 18, 1783, William Pitt, the younger, stated:

> Necessity is the plea for every infringement of human freedom. It is the argument of tyrants; it is the creed of slaves—

In short, that in effect is what we have in part here tonight. It is not just a question of people being taxed. It is a question of their being taxed and yet not fully understanding from the wording of the legislation to what degree they should or should not be paying tax to the federal Government. That is restricting their freedom. It is something that is not necessary, and I think it is time that we stood in this House, to a man, and said to this Minister, and to any other Minister who dares to bring such confused, complicated, needlessly wrongfully worded legislation in the sense of its being wordy and unclear, "Take it back. It will not be passed by this House of Commons until we can understand it". Hopefully, the people of Canada may then have some chance to understand the demand that will be made on them.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, before I discuss the details of my speech on the budget this evening, I would like to advise those on the Government benches that, in view of the fact that we on this side of the House have waited some 13 months for this document, Bill C-139, I think it takes a lot of nerve on the part of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) to expect us to allow the Bill to go through in the remaining seven days before Christmas.

I would also like to suggest to Hon. Members that, while the Government has attempted to bring in some minor changes or modifications to the budget of November 12, 1981 and the budget of June 28, 1982, this document, consisting of some 295 pages, is just as complicated and confusing and, for many Canadians, causes as much anger as the ways and means motions or notices with respect to the two previous budgets. It also includes recommendations for further change brought in by the new Minister of Finance this past October 27, yet the Government and the Minister of Finance expect us to zip through this Bill of 295 pages in the remaining seven days. That is just too much to ask, and I know that we on this side of the House will not grant the Government that demand.

The moral fibre of any government in a democracy is really judged by its system of taxation, because the system of taxation is really basic to a democratic government. If such a system is fair and equitable, there will be a stable society with a minimum amount of discord, because what affects people or their pocketbooks really dictates their behaviour in a political sense. However, if a taxation system is not fair and equitable, then there is discord, confusion, anger and bitterness. At best, there may be a tax revolt, as mentioned by the Conservative finance critic this afternoon and, at worst, there could be revolution and social upheaval. I am not suggesting that we will have a revolution in Canada because of a series of ill-advised budgets.

Mr. McDermid: Yet.

Mr. Blackburn: However, I refer Hon. Members to fairly modern history, to the French Revolution, and to the Bolshevik Revolution which occurred more recently in the Soviet Union in the Twentieth Century, and one will find that at the beginning of both those revolutions, taxation issues were at the hearts of the matter. They were the straw, so to speak, that broke the camel's back in both those countries.

I suggest that when dealing with any tax Bill, we are dealing with something of extreme importance. When we are dealing with a confused, complicated and contradictory series of budgets which have been changed, rearranged, amended and appended for the past 13 months, contained in this one huge document, Bill C-139, 295 pages in length, none of us, neither on this side of the House nor across the way on the Government benches, should take it lightly and let it go through quickly and irresponsibly in a matter of a few days. Therefore, we must confront this piece of legislation and ensure that as many inequities as possible are vetted. Indeed, it is our duty.

I am not an idealist. I realize that we on this side of the House cannot rewrite whole sections of the Bill, but it is certainly our duty and responsibility to our respective constituents to make it very clear to the Government where we disagree with it as it affects their pocketbooks and their taxes.

I might also state that we know that the previous Minister of Finance and the present one have been deluged, almost set upon here in Ottawa by an endless string of powerful lobbyists, many of whom have travelled across the country to force their opinions and ideas upon the Minister and the Department of Finance. I am suggesting this evening that the previous and present Ministers of Finance, particularly the present one, have caved in to many of the demands of the lobbyists. Unfortunately, most ifnot all of those lobbyists represent powerful financial institutions and interests in this country.

Mr. Wilson: How about the unions?

Mr. Blackburn: When the former Minister of Finance originally introduced his budget of November, 1982, I personally thought that the general thrust of the budget was good. He at least made an honest effort to plug many loopholes, the most obvious loopholes which had existed in a very unfair taxation system. Unfortunately, and this was my major criticism at the time, the budget was badly timed. It came, not at the beginning of a severe recession, but, rather, long after that recession had set in. In plugging many of those loopholes, he was simply giving the powerful, vested financial interests of the country a chance to jump on him and his officials and say, "Look, we cannot afford plugging these loopholes at this time". Had that budget been announced in 1976, 1977 or 1978, when productivity was high, when our country was in a period of relative economic development and progress, I am quite sure that many of us in this Party would have accepted the plugging of those loopholes. We still do, but it is more difficult now for us to put forward those arguments.

I want to make brief reference to some of the changes that have come into this piece of legislation, an Act to amend the statute law relating to Income Tax, for two reasons: one, to show you how wide-ranging and all-encompassing these changes are and, two, to serve notice to the House that other Members of my Party will be speaking at greater length and in greater depth with respect to these proposed changes.

We have changes, for example, to annuities; to capital cost allowance—actually the Minister of Finance is flip-flopping on most of the clauses of the Bill I am referring to at the present time—to company reorganizations; deferred profit-sharing plans, interest expense; prescribed interest; capital reserves; work in progress; loans to non-residents; Canadianization and the incentive to Canadianize foreign industry in this country; life insurance. Every Member in this House could speak on the problems with respect to taxing certain life insurance policies because we have been deluged by lobbyists from the life insurance industry and by life insurance underwriters in our respective constituencies. We could all speak with respect to soft costs regarding certain aspects of real estate, such as the former MURB Program; to charities, as they affect individual contributions; to farmers, in selling their land to their children; and to house loans.

This Bill also includes such things as capital gains reserves, employee or shareholder interest deductibility, capital cost allowances, small business investment grants, Child Tax Credit, heritage tax deduction, pension income deduction, and so on and so forth. Investment dealers have lobbied for many changes. There are other lobbies, small businesses, the Retail Council of Canada, the Toronto Stock Exchange, the Housing and Urban Development Association, et cetera, et cetera. Yet the Minister of Finance expects us in seven days, to go through all these clauses and give him carte blanche to proceed? Absolutely ridiculous!

It is not that we want to hold up the business of the House simply for the sake of holding it up, but we would be irresponsible on this side of the House to let such important, complicated and all-encompassing tax legislation go through in a week and a day. Besides, what is the reason for our being so accommodating to this Government after waiting 13 months for this Bill? Secondly, the Minister of Finance has said that he is going to bring in yet another budget in late January or early February, so I see no need for rushing this through.

I am very concerned specifically about two major areas in Bill C-139. One is the drop in marginal income tax rates, and the other is the partial deindexation. When considering deindexation, along with the capping of Family Allowances and pensions, and personal income tax exemptions, we are reaching out virtually to every taxpayer in this country, as we are with the drop in marginal income tax rates.

The marginal rates were dropped because in the November 1981 budget there were 16 major tax loopholes which the Minister then wanted to plug. In order to try to sell the idea to the business community, and primarily to the wealthy people in the country, he argued, not in so many words, that if we were going to plug these tax loopholes then we would have to drop the marginal tax rates as they affect wealthy people who do the investing and who could take advantage of these loopholes. In other words, it was a trade-off.

However, we find when we look at this document, Bill C-139, that many of these loopholes have been unplugged or partly unplugged, or at least there is a promise there that in 1983 or 1984 they may be unplugged. But what has he done about the marginal tax rates? The new Minister of Finance has left them. In other words, the wealthy and the large investors in this country are going to have it both ways. First, they are going to have the tax loopholes unplugged and, second, we are going to continue with the lower marginal tax rate for the wealthy people in this country. I find that is totally unacceptable to the New Democratic Party, and indeed it should be totally unacceptable to any Member of Parliament in this House who has a strong social conviction that the poor and low income earners in this country are already over-taxed, and the rich in this country are patently undertaxed.

The Bill brings into law the lower personal income tax rate proposed in the November 1981 budget for the 1982 and the 1983 taxation year. I want to give some examples. For those whose taxable income bracket is under $1,112, the rate proposed in this tax Bill is 6 per cent. The old rate was 6 per cent. These rates do not change until we get to about the $20,000 to $24,000 a year income tax payer. But when we get to that income we find that the new tax rate has actually gone down, so the higher the income, the greater amount of tax rate decrease. If taxable income is between $24,000 and $31,000 a year, the rate proposed in the budget which is in this paper is 25 per cent, but the old rate was 28 per cent so there is a gain of 3 per cent on the income tax rate, it is 3 per cent lower. If we go to the top income earners, those whose taxable incomes are in excess of $133,440 a year we have an effective tax rate decrease from 43 per cent to 34 per cent. That is a decline, Mr. Speaker, of 9 percentage points.

The tax rates of the little guy at the bottom, do not change. They are just as high in this budget as they were in the November 1981 budget, but the big income earner has a lower rate of income tax. Keep in mind that the Government has now unplugged most of those so-called plugged loopholes which were supposed to be the original trade-off, so I repeat, that the rich, and the rich investor, are getting it both ways. He still has the tax loopholes in most cases and he has a lower effective rate of income tax to pay.

Secondly, let us look at the partial deindexation of personal income tax. The June 1982 budget limits the personal income tax exemption indexing to 6 per cent in 1983 and 5 per cent in 1984. The result simply is that personal exemptions will not rise as much next year as they would have with full indexing to inflation. We have seen a slight moderation to 10 per cent, but it would be more than wishful thinking to assume that the rates of inflation will come down to six and five, unless of course we unleash Mr. Bouey totally. The rate of inflation has not dropped as one would have hoped because of the Government's regulated price component of the consumer price index. I think this is very important when we are talking about six and five.

The Government has not made any effort to slow down the rate of increases in energy prices, which are going up 23.5 per cent, to which the Government has agreed. In addition they have not tried to provide Canadians with low, stable interest rates. All are items that contribute to keeping inflation running at 9 per cent plus and the rate in Government and Government-regulated industries at about 18 per cent. In other words, and I should stress this, regulated prices make up 23 per cent of the consumer price index. When you consider the 23 per cent, almost a quarter of the CPI, is that part of prices regulated by the federal Government, and the federal Government is still keeping interest rates and energy costs high, it is very doubtful whether the year-over-year inflation rate in this country will drop much below 9 per cent between now and late 1983 or 1984.

This partial deindexing amounts to a large tax bite of approximately $1.7 billion for 1983-84 fiscal year. Because a lot of workers are under the wage restraint program of the federal Government and various provincial Governments, as well as a lot of private employers, they will be getting a double whammy through wage restraint coupled with partial deindexation.

This partial deindexation could not come at a worse time for the majority of workers today. When you consider the 1.5 million officially unemployed and another 500,000 either on welfare or who have given up looking for jobs, they have already suffered the rigors of a major depression. Their incomes have already been cut back 30, 40 and 50 per cent and more.

Then we come to the partial deindexation of their income tax which is thrown at them. At the same time that Government-regulated prices are going up this year over next year and over the next year at a higher rate than the six and five the Government thinks everybody should hold to, I do not know how this Government can expect us to let it go through within the next seven days without giving them one hell of a good fight.

Deindexing of personal income tax exemptions allows Government to profiteer from inflation at the expense of individual Canadians and gives Government a vested interest in inflation. It should be remembered that Finance Minister John Turner in 1973 introduced the indexation of personal income tax exemptions and tax brackets to the inflation rate so that taxpayers would not be pushed into a higher tax bracket because of inflation. In Turner's words, indexing would "eliminate that unfair and unintended result from our tax system". Simply put, the effect of partial deindexing of personal tax exemptions will be to impose a tax increase on Canadians. That is basically what it means.

What this really means is the beginning of the end of indexation and any real taxation reform. I have a table here which I will explain as briefly and as clearly as possible. The 1984 federal and provincial income tax combined for a single taxpayer whose income is $7,500 without limitation will be $223 in income tax. With partial deindexing, he will pay $336 for a net increase of $113 or a 50.7 per cent increase. A person whose taxable income is $10,000 a year, without partial deindexing will pay $807 in income tax. With partial deindexing, he would pay $926 for a net increase of $119, or a 14.7 per cent increase. That is a far cry from the six and five limit that the Government is touting around the country as the saviour as far as our future is concerned.

The taxpayer whose income is $100,000 in 1984, without limitation, will pay $38,179. With partial deindexing he would pay $39,120, a tax increase of $941, but in percentage terms an increase of only 2.5 per cent. The Government is treating him fairly because that is very comfortably within the six and five. His tax goes up only 2.5 per cent on $100,000, but the poor guy earning $10,000 has to pay an additional 14.7 per cent as a result of partial deindexing.

It is little wonder that those who write popular bestsellers on how legally to beat the tax system in this country are saying that this budget, or combination of budgets and the financial or economic statement, plus Bill C-139, is a boon for wealthy people. I need only quote from Henry B. Zimmer's "The New Canadian Tax and Investment Guide", a reputable tax consultant. It says "Completely rewritten to include the 1981 budget changes". At page 5 it reads:

—the wealthy investor will pay the same tax rate even if his investment increases from, say, $200,000 to $300,000 in a given year. While the MacEachen budget has been promoted as an attack against the rich, a close analysis of these numbers will show that the rich are virtually unaffected. For the rich and the super-rich, the budget provides a 10 per cent decrease in tax rates.

There it is from Henry B. Zimmer, a tax expert. We, especially those of us in the New Democratic Party, are expected to let Bill C-139 go through in seven days. No way. It is not going through in seven days.

It is clear that, with the introduction of the 1981 and 1982 budgets, plus the economic statement of the Minister two months ago, ordinary income earners are the net losers. Some will quietly wonder what else is new. A lot of those will probably not stand up and say anything about it because of Party discipline.

Income Tax

As far as marginal tax rates are concerned, there is no benefit to low and middle-income earners. With partial indexing there is a net loss. With capping of Family Allowances, again a net loss; capping of old age pensions, again a net loss; reduced services under the Canada Assistance Act, a net loss for those in greatest need. De facto wage restraint in the private sector is already down by 30 to 50 per cent for hundreds of thousands of Canadians because, as I said earlier, they are on unemployment insurance, welfare or not looking for work at this time.

Wage restraints in the public sector are being held to six and five, as they are for many in the private sector. Because of partial deindexing of personal income tax, as wages are held down, their income taxes for next year will go up.

I would like briefly at this time to put forward some of my Party's views on what we think would be an equitable tax system. I would be remiss at this stage if I did not include this in my remarks.

First, the tax system should be fairly based on the ability to pay. Ability to pay is the cornerstone of any progressive tax system. Second, all types of income should be treated equally for people earning the same level of income. Let us look at some recent tax developments, that is, before the 1981-82 budgets.

Since the 1960s the tax system has become more uneven, less comprehensive. Changes in the early 1970s brought new tax advantages to the corporate sector. Business taxes have assumed a declining proportion of federal revenue since the end of the Korean war. They peaked with the imposition of a tax on excess profits in 1950. At that time corporate taxes comprised 23 per cent of federal revenue, but by 1979 that amount had dropped to 10.3 per cent. The decline in the importance of corporate taxes corresponds directly to an increased reliance on personal income tax revenue. Since 1950 three-quarters of the growth in federal revenues have been as a result of increases in personal income tax. Thirty years ago personal income tax contributed 20 per cent of federal revenue. By 1979, the figure was 37 per cent. Individuals picked up an additional 20 per cent in sales and excise taxes. The last three decades, Mr. Speaker, have also seen the advent of a new series of levies, payroll taxes, special charges to cover the cost of unemployment insurance, Canada Pension Plan, and in some Provinces even Medicare premiums. These levies now account for 6 per cent of wages. The employers' contribution to those programs is generally considered forgone wages, although it is not apparent on the pay slip.

Taxes on wealth have assumed a declining role in the raising of revenues. In 1971 the federal estate tax was abolished, which led to the dismantling in most Provinces, with the exception of Quebec, of succession duties. In 1971 alone, the federal Treasury lost $4.5 billion, which would have otherwise been collected from our wealthiest citizens through estate taxes and succession duties. These changes left Canada with the dubious honour of having the lowest rate of tax on wealth in the industrialized world. Our rate of tax on wealth in Canada is .07 per cent of the GNP. Even in the United States it is .42 per cent of the GNP, and in Switzerland a much more realistic 1.02 per cent. Most taxes on wealth in Canada are levied in the form of property taxes, a relatively unprogressive levy, leaving only 2 per cent collected from death taxes.

The federal Government also gains revenue from commodity taxes. These are usually applied on goods whose demand does not fluctuate with price changes, such as tobacco, alcohol and gasoline. It seems that the Government anticipates raising greater proportions of its revenue in future through substantially increasing energy excise taxes. Probably the most significant developments in the tax structure during the last decade have occurred through the expansion of the tax expenditure system. Through tax expenditures the Government encourages certain activities by giving preferential treatment to certain types of income, thus giving up taxes it would have normally collected.

In the existing Income Tax Act there are over 100 provisions for preferential treatment of income, including deferrals, deductions, exemptions, credits, exclusions and special rates. In 1979 the total tax expenditures were worth $30 billion. By 1980 they had risen to $39 billion or 60 per cent of direct expenditures. These developments occurred in direct opposition to the recommendations of the Carter Commission. Between 1976 and 1980 direct expenditure by the federal Government increased 30.4 per cent, whereas the value of tax expenditure grew 42 per cent.

What should a tax system accomplish, Mr. Speaker? I would like to suggest, first of all, that it should raise sufficient revenue to cover Government expenditure, including the increased revenue needs of a more activist Government. Second, these revenues should be raised fairly, adhering to the principle of ability, that is those with the largest income should have the highest rate of tax. This principle should be applied to both corporate and personal income taxes. Third, there should be a primary reliance on income taxes, both corporate and personal, to raise Government revenue. Income taxes can be the most progressive, hence the Government should reduce its reliance on commodity taxes and move toward the elimination of payroll taxes, funding these frugal programs through general revenue. Fourth, the tax system should be comprehensive. The existing structure of tax expenditures should be reduced and the existing goals of the system should be accomplished to a greater extent by direct spending. The tax expenditures that remain should, to a greater extent, take the form of refundable tax credit or direct grants. Fifth, the system should act to redistribute wealth. I think this is very important in any forward-looking, socially-conscious Government, that the tax system is really the major vehicle for redistributing wealth in the nation.

Over the last 30 years the combination of increased social security spending, and a supposedly progressive income tax, have done nothing to alter the balance of wealth in Canada. The top 20 per cent still control over 40 per cent of the national income, and the bottom 20 per cent have access to only 4 per cent. Fulfilling its function as a redistributor of wealth, the Canadian federal tax could also compensate those least able to cope with current economic problems, with food and fuel credits for Northern residents, for example, and a cost of living tax credit for low income people. This, Mr. Speaker, is not happening, and that is the major problem with which we are faced in Canada today.

I would now like to refer to another very important aspect of our tax system and what it should do. As you know, we are in the middle, or in the depth, of a severe economic recession. Indeed, if you are out of work or have been out of work for any extended period of time, you are not in a recession, you are in a depression. Therefore, we in the New Democratic Party suggest very strongly, and argue very strongly, that a tax system and job creation can be combined, and the tax system or fiscal policy should be used with strength and determination to create jobs, the number one crisis in our country today.

One of the most important instruments for the establishment of priorities in job creation is the nation's tax system. Through the tax system Governments can make clear to investors where they would like to see investment dollars go. At present, there is a hodge-podge of incentive programs in effect to encourage investors to put their money into the economy. The principle of using a tax system to encourage investment is certainly not new. However, even if the principle is well established, the Canadian practice has never included anything resembling a strategy.

Canada needs to have investment streamed into key sectors if long-term job creation is to be achieved. The existing hodge-podge must be abolished. We need to pay special attention to the investment needs of a number of sectors, such as small business, forest products, energy, machinery, construction, manufacturing, transportation equipment, steel, chemicals, electrical products, fishing and, of course, the new and crucial high technology industry. Investments in these sectors during this decade can provide Canada with the economic base for large scale job creation and an internationally competitive economy. Such investment would benefit every region of Canada. The crucial continuing source of capital to meet the needs of these sectors must be the reinvestment of profit made in the Canadian economy. The profits earned by corporations in Canada are the fruits of the labour of all Canadians, not just investors, but those who work in the plants, the forests, or in the mines.

I believe that the federal Government must play a much more creative role in ensuring the reinvestment of these profits where it will do the most good. What I am talking about, Mr. Speaker, is corporate tax reform. We must begin by revamping the corporate tax system, something which Bill C-139 has not done, and something which neither the June 1982 budget nor the November 1981 budget did. The federal Government should put in place a much more attractive system of tax incentive for investment in the crucial sectors I have listed. Such a system should award companies tax points off for such things as research and development, Canadian ownership, the use of Canadian-made machinery, export orientation, effective job-training programs, and affirmative action in hiring policies. The object of such incentives is to make sure that profits are reinvested where they will create jobs and will contribute to an internationally competitive Canadian economy.

We do not get there, Mr. Speaker, by either ignoring our present corporate tax laws and leaving them on the statute books, as this Bill does, or by allowing more and more foreign money to come into the country to take over more and more control of the manufacturing sector. Because we need investment capital now to create jobs, such a system should not involve a net increase in the total amount of tax paid by corporations in Canada. Neither should it involve a net reduction at a time of very high Government deficit. Therefore, what I propose and what my Party proposes is an increase in the nominal corporate tax rate from the 36 per cent collected by the federal Government to 46 per cent. The additional revenue that would accrue from the increased nominal rate would not end up with the Government. Instead, it would serve as the basis for making possible substantial tax incentives to ensure investment in the key sectors under the conditions I have listed.

Such a system would reward those who invest in long-term job creation. Such investment would have effects far beyond the sectors singled out. Productivity advances in these fields would provide the economic underpinning for the whole of the economy, in particular the service sector where jobs and incomes depend upon the health of the key productive industries.

While we are speaking of corporate tax reform and fiscal change for the purpose of creating jobs, there is one more point that I should like to mention briefly. It goes with the corporate tax changes I have just suggested. We propose a surtax on upper income individuals which would go directly into job creation. Quite frankly, Mr. Speaker, I really do not think that those whose earned incomes are in excess of $40,000 per year would fight too much or be much opposed to helping in job creation, provided their extra tax dollars went into proper job creation and not just quick-fix make-work projects.

What we have in mind is not a flat rate for everyone whose earned income is over $40,000 per year. We propose that if your income is between $40,000 and $53,000, you would simply increase your tax by .75 per cent. However, if you earned $268,000 and upwards, then you would pay $2,409 more. The rate is graduated.

I see that my time is up, Mr. Speaker. I would have liked to proceed a little further with my remarks on the surtax. The Conservatives have misinterpreted it. We do not propose a flat rate, but a graduated rate. Not everyone who earned $40,000 plus would have to pay the same amount of added tax.

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to take part in this debate. The Bill before us today, Bill C-139, is an important Bill that we have all been waiting for since almost this time a year ago. Income tax aspects of the last two budgets and of the recent economic statement by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) will pass into law. As such, Bill C-139 contains important tax reforms and also reflects a need for fiscal restraint to limit growth in the deficit. In this context, it is inevitable that some individuals in certain circumstances will end up paying more taxes, but I hope they will recognize the importance of the goals being pursued in this Bill.

I am pleased to speak in support of Bill C-139 because it will provide assistance for those experiencing special difficulty, although the over-all framework has to be one of restraint. Moreover, in making tax reforms, the Bill shows sensitivity to the practical realities in the small business sector, especially agriculture.

In a fair system of taxation based on ability to pay, most people would see the importance of limiting opportunities for those with high incomes, to defer taxes. A postponed tax is a lower tax. If taxpayers with high incomes can defer tax, this shifts the burden on to those less able to bear it. At the same time, however, this Bill recognizes the importance of vendor financing in the sale of small businesses, and therefore preserves a meaningful capital gains reserve provision, so as not to cut off this source of financing.

I should like to review this provision briefly. The vendor will now have a maximum of five years to bring the total taxable capital gain into income. At least one-fifth of the taxable capital gain will be brought into income the year the property is sold. At the end of each of the following years there will have been brought into income, on a cumulative basis, an amount at least equal to one-fifth times the number of tax years ending after the property is sold.

About 99 per cent of all farms in Canada are family-owned and operated. They are the foundation of our successful agricultural industry. The Government supports the family farm as the most efficient form of farm enterprise, and that support can be seen in the Bill before us. Bill C-139 recognizes how important it is for farmers to be able to hand down their farming enterprises from one generation to the next within the family. It also recognizes the desire of many farming parents to help their children get established on the farm through easy terms of payment. Thus, the Bill doubles to 10 years the time limit for bringing into income, the taxable capital gain that results when an active farming operation is sold to a child or grandchild or great-grandchild.

The minimum amount of taxable capital gain which has to be declared as income in the first year, is reduced to one-tenth. At the same time, the minimum amount which must have been declared on a cumulative basis at the end of each tax year following sale, is also reduced to one-tenth times the number of tax years ending after the sale.

The agriculture sector has been quick to approve and support the federal Government's six and five restraint program. But in this period of economic restraint, Bill C-139 does not ignore the plight of debt-burdened farmers who are struggling to carry on until commodity prices improve. For incorporated farms and other businesses subject to the small business tax rate, the Small Business Development Bond has been continued to the end of 1983, and has been focused on the need for refinancing of existing debt at lower rates of interest. The Small Business Development Bond carries the potential of cutting interest charges almost in half.

I am particularly pleased that this Bill includes a similar measure for unincorporated farmers and other small-business people. I am referring, of course, to the Small Business Bond, which will also be available until the end of 1983.

These two bond programs mean that farmers who are in financial difficulty will be able to retain the benefit of a lower interest rate for up to five years, if they get their banker to refinance existing debt under a Small Business Development Bond or a Small Business Bond loan before December 31, 1983.

Many farmers and small business people will be helped by the provisions which allow more than one Small Business Development Bond or Small Business Bond to be granted, as long as the total of the original value is no more than $500,000 per borrower.

I am sure that farmers who have incorporated their farms and want to build up their businesses by investing their profits back in the farm, will be pleased to see another provision of the Bill. This provision increases from $750,000 to $1 million the cumulative amount of income they can earn before losing the low small business tax rate. I am sure a lot of people are not aware of that.

On the other hand, in those cases where earnings are paid out in dividends, the new 12.5 per cent tax on dividends will apply. However, I want to point out that the total tax on the farming corporation and farmer, including the tax on dividends, will be approximately the same if the income had been earned by an individual unincorporated farmer.

I know there have been questions about the chartered banks' participation in these programs. Many people accuse them of not participating at all. I can only say that the evidence I have so far is encouraging. As of September 24, Revenue Canada figures indicated that 758 unincorporated farmers had benefited from Small Business Bond refinancing, introduced in the November 12 budget, and that $146 million of debts had been refinanced for these farmers. Most of this refinancing probably took place in the eight-month period after the release of guidelines to lenders last January. In addition, a large amount of refinancing was provided in the same period to incorporated farmers under the Small Business Development Bond.

I believe that these measures have provided a lot of badly-needed help for farmers who are going through a very difficult economic period. I would urge the banks to continue providing as much refinancing through the two bond Programs as possible. The federal Government stands ready to absorb the cost of these Programs, in terms of forgone tax revenue on whatever number of bonds the banks and other lenders issue. Of course it is only because the Government is not taxing interest income from these loans that lenders can offer such a greatly reduced rate of interest.

When we add on top of the benefits of the bond Programs the refinancing assistance program of the Farm Credit Corporation, we see that the Government is offering a meaningful package of financial aid programs for farmers.

The FCC's Special Farm Financial Assistance Program was introduced in the November 1981 budget—and many people said that it was not very good—with additional funding provided in the June 1982 budget. From the time it was started until November 30 this year, a total of $141.3 million was provided to 1,071 farmers. Since the June 28 budget, the interest rate charged on this money has been a full four percentage points below the normal FCC lending rate. This reduced rate is available to farmers in financial difficulty for up to two years.

Also I want to point out that as of December 9 the interest rate charged by the Farm Credit Corporation on regular loans was 13.25 per cent. Therefore the initial interest rate on FCC special loans is now 9.25 per cent, that is for farmers who are complying with special interest rates. If they are in financial straits where they need assistance, they can borrow money for the first two years, up to $500,000 at the present time for 9.25 per cent. For people who live in rich Provinces, it means their Provinces will not have to pay anything on those loans because they are guaranteeing to pay up to 12 per cent to finance it, to subsidize it, or whatever one wants to call it, up until that time.

Between now and the end of the present fiscal year, the Corporation may extend another $34 million under the special loan program. The FCC has the authority to lend a total of $130 million under the special assistance program in the 1982-83 fiscal year. I am sure this money will go a long way in helping financially hard-pressed farmers.

I would further like to point out that the small business investment grant is available to reduce the financing costs of farmers for new depreciable capital by a maximum of four percentage points. However, the interest rate may not be reduced below 12 per cent. Hon. Members can see from my comments that the federal Government is concerned about the financial situation of our Canadian farmers and offers a number of programs to help them through difficult times. One program we offered is a very controversial one as far as some farmers are concerned; it is called Canagrex, the Canadian agricultural export corporation.

Mr. Hargrave: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I am sure that nowhere in this almost 300-page Bill does the word "Canagrex" appear. I object very strenuously to the Minister exposing his bias to a certain Bill in the House.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. The Hon. Member will know that this is a tax Bill and that the widest possible latitude is given to every Member to address himself to the debate. There can be no favouritism from one side of the House to the other in that regard.

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, I have listened to some of the other speakers. I have read the debate. They have talked about everything under the sun, as far as that goes.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

TIME ALLOCATION FOR REPORT STAGE AND THIRD READING OF BILL C-85

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, I wish to inform the House that there has been consultation among the representatives of the Parties and that it has not been possible to reach an agreement pursuant to Standing Order 75A or 75B with regard to the allocation of time on report stage and third reading stage of Bill C-85, an Act to establish a corporation called Canagrex to promote, facilitate and engage in the export of agricultural and food products from Canada. Therefore, at the next sitting of the House I shall propose a motion pursuant to Standing Order 75C to allocate one sitting day to each of the said stages of the said Bill.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Shame, shame!

Mr. Whelan: We are talking about the economic plight of farmers and the economic plight of people. We talk about assisting them in some way. I entered that economic Bill to help farmers. I just want to say, yes, that is a notice which Hon. Members can take.

INCOME TAX

AMENDMENTS TO STATUTE LAW

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Lalonde that Bill C-139, an Act to amend the Statute Law relating to Income Tax (No. 2), be read the second time and referred to a Committee of the Whole.

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, in conclusion, I stress that Bill C-139 is sensitive to the needs and problems of agricultural producers, as is the other Bill which I just mentioned. I urge those who really maintain that they have the concern of farmers and other people at heart to support Bill C-139 and to support in a real democratic fashion the other Bill which I just mentioned.

Mr. Epp: Which one is that?

Mr. Whelan: Bill C-85, Canagrex. The Bill was thought up by farmers and supported by many, many people across the land.

Mr. Mayer: Don't talk about democracy and then give us closure.

Mr. Whelan: They thought it up, not we on this side of the House. We were asked by farm organizations to help them be in a better economic position. That is what we are doing and that is what we are trying to do, if they will just allow it.

I have checked procedures in other democratic Parliaments around the world, and I have found in the Ontario Legislative Assembly that the Premier, the Leader of that great Conservative Party and that great Government of Ontario, found it necessary to use time allocation. He even used guillotine law to get some legislation through the Provincial Legislative Assembly of Ontario. When we check the record we will find—and I think it has been for economic reasons, rather than wasting manpower or the facilities of the House of Commons—that the Liberals were in power over two-thirds of the time since Confederation but that that Party opposite used closure, guillotine laws and time allocation more than we did in the history of this Parliament.

Some Hon. Members: Nonsense!

Mr. Whelan: If we cannot come to a gentleman's agreement on time allocation, as the Mother Parliament or the mother of democracy does in 90 per cent of all instances, it leaves me no other choice. As one who has been elected from the age of 21 years, I have never in my political career seen democracy being stymied like it has been in this instance with the little Bill called Canagrex. It is no wonder we cannot get on with the things we need to do.

What do they say? I have some of their old letters and old publications when they were supporting Canagrex on the other side of the House. It is amazing to read them and then to read what they are saying at this time.

Mr. Mayer: Read them, let's hear them.

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, I cannot wait until we debate the time allocation. I look forward to that and I will debate it at greater length at that time.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. John Thomson (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, having listened to the Minister talk about parliamentary democracy makes a charade of this whole place. It is just farcical for him to rise and point to parliamentary democracy.

Mr. Whelan: You need a little understanding.

Mr. Thomson: You do not even have the vaguest understanding of what parliamentary democracy is all about.

Some Hon. Members: Order, order!

Mr. Kelly: You do not know.

Mr. Thomson: Is that right? In order to achieve a rapid economic recovery, Canada needs a private sector which will focus all of its talents on its investment, production and marketing decisions. Do you know who said that? It was the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) on October 27, 1982. Where has he been for the last 14 years? It is incredible the Minister would have that much gall to stand up in this House and say, "In order to achieve a rapid economic recovery, Canada needs a private sector which will focus all of its talents on investment, production and marketing decisions." He no more means that statement than he would fly to the moon. He does not know what it is all about. He does not even know what those statements mean. Nor does he really care. He is a born again free enterpriser.

• (2120)

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Kempling: Hallelujah, Marc.

Mr. Thomson: Here is a man who single-handedly destroyed an industry. He should be very proud of himself. He destroyed the Canadian oil and gas industry. If there is one thing the Minister of Finance will be remembered for for the rest of his life, and it will go down in Canadian history, it will be that he destroyed the Canadian oil and gas industry.

A Government Minister of Finance should have some credibility. It is the second most important position in Government. Next to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) the Minister of Finance has to be seen by all sectors of society as being credible. But here we have the Minister of Finance who has destroyed the Canadian oil and gas industry and then has the gall to say that we need a private sector, by saying "Fellow Members, we need a private sector which will focus all of its talents on investment, production and marketing." Let me repeat that phrase, "All of its talents on investment." Here is a man who just drove $10 billion out of Canada. Those are undeniable facts. Here is the man, the Minister of Finance, who drove $10 billion out of Canada and goodness knows how many jobs, and yet says that we have to focus all our attention on investment, production and marketing. How can he say that to the Canadian people with such audacity?

Hon. Members, can you not smile a little bit? Surely that must tickle your funny bones just a bit.

Mr. Irwin: How about your 400 per cent in the last decade? How can you stand there with a straight face?

Mr. Thomson: In his statement of October 27, the Minister went on to say that the people of this country recognize that the recession is a global problem. But here we have a Government that for 14 years, with the exception of nine months, has mismanaged the Canadian economy. The Liberals say it is not their fault, that it has nothing to do with them. They say "It is a global problem." We hear them say that all of these villains, all the other rotten countries around the globe, have brought Canada to the brink of where it is today.

The Liberals have no responsibility for the plight in which we find ourselves. Of course not. A Liberal Government would never assume responsibility for anything unless somehow it could take credit for something it had nothing to do with. The Liberals say they have no responsibility for the plight we are in. There is no admission. The Liberals would not take any responsibility for the faulty policies or the mismanagement of the country. The Liberals would never take responsibility for the disastrous National Energy Program or for FIRA and the adverse effects that has had on investment in this country and the adverse effect it has had on jobs in Canada. Nor would the Liberals assume any responsibility for the uncontrolled growth and spending of Crown corporations, which the Auditor General has just told us about. The Liberals would never assume responsibility for $200 million going to Canadair when that amount could be financed outside of the Government. What do the Liberals care? They do not want to take any responsibility for a $25 billion deficit.

The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Lumley) appeared before the committee the other day. We were talking about $200 million going to Canadair. I asked him where the money would come from. The President of Canadair said, "The Government, of course, where else?" Everybody lines up at the trough.

This Government has $25 billion less than nothing at all. Yet here we are going back to the trough for another $200 million. But that is peanuts. What about de Havilland? It wants only $1 billion.

This Government does not assume any responsibility for those Crown Corporations, nor any other Crown Corporation, nor the deficit. This Government likes to back losers. Maybe the Liberals do not take responsibility for backing losers either. The Liberals blew $125 million on Consolidated Computer, but the Liberals do not take any responsibility for that.

In looking back over 14 years of Liberal mismanagement, how could anyone go about mismanaging anything quite so badly? But there is one over-riding factor. It is sad to say but the Prime Minister of this country does not care about economics. He never has. He does not understand economics and he just does not have any interest in economics. He likes Constitutions, foreign travel and external affairs. He does not like economics because he does not understand economics. He has no understanding of business or business incentives. It is clearly evident from his speeches that he does not care. Yet we have a Minister of Finance who stands up and says, "We have to dedicate ourselves to the private sector. We must continue to practise fiscal responsibility. We must persist in restraining Government spending." That is what the Minister said on October 27. These statements come from the most profligate Government we have ever known in Canadian history. In 1968 Government spending was $12 billion. Fourteen years later it is $80 billion.

Mr. Blenkarn: It is $90 billion.

Mr. Thomson: But the Government says that it wants to restrain Government spending. Here, it spends $200 million on advocacy advertising. Yet it wants to restrain Government spending. It is a farce.

The Minister goes on to say that we must continue to rely primarily on the dynamism and creativity of the private sector as the engineer of growth in Canada. I seem to recall that it was only a couple of years ago when the Prime Minister said that the private sector could not be relied on any longer. Now the Minister of Finance tells us that we must rely on the private sector. Which will it be?

The problem faced by the Liberal Party is that it does not really believe in the private sector since it is locked into a dogma that does not allow Liberals to believe in it. This dogma states that the Liberals know best what is good for Canadians. Those Members on the other side have all that business experience so they will run our businesses for us, tell us what to do and give us the grants. They will spoonfeed those grants, however, and will decide who the winners and losers will be since they have all the business experience. I think there is one Member over there who was in the Coca-Cola bottling business who claims to be a businessman. The Liberal Party is locked into a dogma that says it knows what is best for Canadians and cannot allow the people to make their own decisions.

The November 1981 budget addresses businesses as if it were a dread disease, instead of the main force for economic growth and job creation, because the Government does not believe that the private sector is the main engine of economic growth and jobs. The Government only says it is that because it sounds good politically.

While the Government says that it must rely primarily on the private sector, the budget eliminated practically all incentives for investment in this country. Each incentive was originally placed in the Income Tax Act to encourage entrepreneurial activity and investment. But the Government decided that in our best interests it would eliminate those incentives because it does not want to provide incentives and does not like entrepreneurial activity. The Minister went on to say that he intends to foster the certainty and stability that are basic preconditions for a favourable economic climate. Therefore, if the Government intends to introduce basic stability in favourable economic climate, do you know what it will do? It will introduce a 300-page Bill with over 75 major changes to the Income Tax Act in order to create stability and this wonderful economic environment that it wants. The Government believes that the certain way to create that stability in our economic climate is to introduce a 300-page Bill with 75 major changes which no one in Canada will understand. That is how it intends to proceed.

The Minister went on to say that this requires development of our technological base, increased investment and new and innovative approaches to organizing work and labour management relations. The Minister enjoys that word "investment". He went on to say that in future, economic development in Canada will be managed by politicians and bureaucrats. I find it difficult to understand, when the Minister says that economic development in Canada will be managed by politicians and bureaucrats, how it compares with relying on the private sector as an engine of growth. Can anyone explain that logic to me? They appear to be completely contradictory statements. Either the Government will rely on politicians and bureaucrats or it will rely on the private sector, but it cannot do both. They do not represent the same thing.

Income Tax

The Government has a great system of grants. Grants are available to everyone who simply lines up at the trough. If someone needs a grant, they can see the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. While the Government has indicated it will rely on the private sector, it will decide who receives the grants, and therefore who are the winners and the losers. The Government will decide for itself if it will give its grants to Dome, Maislin or to Massey-Ferguson. The game is called "line up at the trough".

I believe my friends across the way will enjoy this article, particularly the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) since he is from the agricultural community. It concerns the definitions of communism, fascism, socialism and capitalism. "You are a farmer and you own two milking cows. Under communism, the government would take both cows and give you a little milk for your needs. Under fascism, the government would take both cows and sell you some milk. Under benevolent socialism, you would give one cow to a neighbour in need. Under capitalism, you would sell one cow and buy a bull or perhaps lease one to build up your herd. What would be done under the current Canadian economic management? It is simple, the Government would buy both cows at inflated prices, shoot one, pay civil servants to milk the other, throw away the milk and pay you not to raise the feed for the one that was shot."

What was most disturbing about the November budget was its anti-business bias and its chronic opposition to tax relief and deferral. While these are strong enough words, the budget's attack on entrepreneurs is only one side of the vice. The other side can be found in a quote from the budget paper entitled "Economic Development for Canada in the Eighties". It says that the Government of Canada must assume a leadership role in the field of economic development. But it says that it will rely on the private sector.

Before addressing one specific area of Bill C-139 concerning retirement benefits, I wish to cite a few examples of the Canadian tax system from my own personal experience. One of my constituents phoned me to say that he had received a letter from the Winnipeg taxation centre. I see the former Minister of National Revenue sitting here and I think he will enjoy this anecdote. The Winnipeg taxation centre deals with the majority of western Canadian income tax returns. My constituent said that after receiving the letter from Winnipeg he tried to phone the Winnipeg taxation centre. They would not answer his call. He finally asked his taxation centre in Calgary why he cannot get in touch with the Winnipeg taxation centre. He said, "They have written me a letter and I am trying to contact the person to sort the matter out." He was told by the Calgary taxation office, "Well, you cannot do that. You cannot reach the Winnipeg taxation centre by means of telephone. You have to write a letter". Do Hon. Members know how much this adds to the cost of clearing up simple little problems? One would think that the bureaucracy would try to make itself at least somewhat accommodating to the constituency or to the people. But, no, no. Bureaucrats say, "What we must do is force them to write a letter to Winnipeg. We will not answer any telephone calls from those ordinary, little old constituents".

The withholding of credit balances is a dandy. A letter was written to my constituent which stated, "A further review of your income tax accounts shows that a credit balance of $12,000 was reflected in your 1980 notice of assessment dated September 2, 1982. The above credit will be held pending assessment of your 1981 income tax return". The guy has already filed his 1981 income tax return and he has paid all of his taxes, and now the Government, through the Department of National Revenue, has the utter gall to withhold $12,000 which he has overpaid, which he has owing to him on his 1980 income tax return.

Mr. Kempling: At no interest.

Mr. Thomson: The arrogance is just incredible. Here is another beauty which has always bugged me, and that is that if one makes capital gains which, of course, one declares, one must pay full taxes on the capital gains, but if one has capital loss, no, it is only a one-way street. One pays full taxes on capital gains, but if one has capital loss, which one cannot offset by means of capital gains, one is only allowed to deduct one half of it in that year. Does that seem fair? Is it fair? There are full taxes on capital gains, but one can only claim one half of the loss. That does not seem to be very fair and equitable to me. One has two chances with the Liberal Government, and that is, lose and lose.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Thomson: This example is just one laugh. I could go on. I have reams of these in my pocket.

Some Hon. Members: More, more!

Mr. Thomson: I know of a company in western Canada, and I will not name names, which is involved in oil and gas exploration.

Mr. Simmons: Just give the street address.

Mr. Thomson: The company had worked for years trying to raise $10 million and had worked out a scheme to raise the $10 million in foreign capital. The deal was that it would be raised by means of debenture by debt, and the company would pay interest on this debt to the foreign investor. Therefore, it approached the Department of National Revenue, which gave a pre-ruling for which it had asked, and the Department of National Revenue said there would be no withholding taxes. That ruling was given on June 22, 1982. Six days later, the Department of Finance came out with its ruling, the changes to the Income Tax Act, and said, "No way. You cannot do that, no, no. We will tax you on that. You must pay withholding taxes". Therefore the company threw the $10 million deal overboard.

I said that I wanted to discuss retirement benefits for a few minutes. One would think that retirement benefits were sort of nasty, dirty words because our senior citizens, who have worked hard to build this country, will be taxed. The Government will get even with them, with all those people who have profited by investing in this country. The Government will tax their retirement benefits, and I will tell Hon. Members how it will do it. For those approaching retirement, the over-all effect of the changes which have been introduced in Bill C-139 will be to reduce the ability of people to save during their working years for their retirement years. First, the Government will disallow interest deductions for investing in Registered Retirement Savings Plans. The Government will not allow people to do that anymore. If one does not have the cash to put up, one will pay a penalty. One will not be able to go to the bank and borrow money in order to finance a Registered Retirement Savings Plan.

I cannot understand what is equitable about that. Why is it that if someone happens to have the cash to put into an RRSP, he should be treated differently from someone who does not, particularly now when many people do not have ready cash? Why would the Government penalize those who do not have the ready cash now? It is really a small, niggardly thing, it is not? If someone goes to the bank and borrows $3,500 and pays 12 per cent to 15 per cent interest on that amount, the Government will say to him, "No, you cannot deduct the $500 interest bill for investing in your own retirement income". Yet, who will pay to support people? We constantly hear about inadequacy. I hear the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) stand up in the House day after day and say, "Pensions to our elderly people are inadequate". Yet here the Government is introducing a tax provision which will deny people the opportunity to invest in their futures.

There has been much said on life insurance, but, here again, life insurance is a traditional way by which Canadians put away money for their retirement years. Now, all of a sudden, the Government will tax the income associated with life insurance policies. Even though one does not receive the cash, as in a whole life policy, it just contributes to the amount of the paid up value of the life insurance, but the Government will tax one on that amount. One will not get any cash, but the Government will force one to pay tax. I do not understand.

Why is it that all of a sudden, the Government had to turn the tax system upside down and change it, when people made commitments, and bought life insurance as a traditional way of looking after themselves for the future? All of a sudden, the Government has turned the income tax system upside down in order to tax these people.

I would like to discuss employee share purchase loans. If there is one thing in which I believe and in which a great many other Canadians believe, it is the value of an employee owning shares in a company for which he works. If there is anything to which an employee can point as being something which makes him a more productive and willing worker, it is the knowledge that he owns some of the equity in that company and he feels a part of that company. We have had a system whereby employees are encouraged to go out and purchase shares in their companies. It makes them more productive and they feel more a part of their organization, but the Government will not allow them to deduct the interest any longer. It is niggardly. The Government seems to be taking the attitude that these employees are getting away with something. This was the law and no one was doing anything wrong, but now, all of a sudden, it is like being a criminal to take advantage of this right. An employee went out and bought shares in his company, but now the Government is plugging that loophole. It is saying, "We must stop that criminal action".

The November 1981 budget proposed limitations on the termination benefits and retiring allowances, which will significantly increase the taxation of such payments. Limitations on retiring allowances, on termination benefits and on the $1,000 pension income deduction will make it harder for many Canadians to prepare for their retirement years.

Bill C-139 will deny registration for future deferred profit-sharing plans which would have allowed an owner to qualify as beneficiary for the plan. This will discourage all owner-managed firms from having such profit-sharing plans, leaving both the owners and employees without job-related retirement income.

Concerning the provision relating to income averaging annuities, this is a real villain, according to the Government, and has been badly abused. I know an elderly couple in Ottawa who have worked in a small grocery store all their lives. They had a piece of real estate put aside that they had invested in many years ago, and they sold it last year. They were going to use the proceeds from that for their retirement income and had decided on putting it into an income averaging annuity. We are going to get those two old people, because they are abusing the system!

I heard my colleague talk about forward averaging. I heard the Minister and other officials say that forward averaging is just about the same as an income averaging annuity. If any of you have ever taken the time to work it out, you will know it is not. It is a penalty system, and it is designed to abuse the taxpayer. Why should the taxpayer have to pay a maximum rate of 50 per cent, and then adjust his future income? Why should the onus be on the taxpayer to put money up, on the basis that it may be refundable? There is no equity in that.

Restricted claims for support of non-resident dependants—let me give you an example of why that is bad. Suppose a parent chooses to move to the United States, and he does not have enough income to live on. His son decides to help him, but he is not allowed to deduct that. He could deduct it if his parent was living in Canada. I do not understand, why should a deduction be allowed if the parent lives in Canada but not if the parent lives in the United States? Is there any equity in that? No, sir.

There is one good thing in the Bill and that is the spousal transfers of RRSP funds in the event of a marital breakdown; that was a good move on the part of the Government.

Income Tax

The over-all significance of our tax policies can of course be appreciated quite readily when we reflect for a moment on the fact that tax is the mechanism that appropriates over 45 per cent of our gross national product at all levels of Government. Instead of trying to address the problem by looking at that 45 per cent and seeing what we can do about that, this Government has taken the other approach and said, "What we will do is to raise the revenues to meet the expenditures. We will not cut the cloth to suit our incomes. We will adjust the income tax take by increasing taxes to the people of Canada; but we are not going to modify our expenditures".

The present Government has used the tax system to induce taxpayers to make certain investments. Later they criticize those who do make those investments for not paying their fair share of tax. Over the years the Canadian Government has introduced income tax incentives to encourage Canadians to invest in multiple-unit residential buildings, Canadian films and oil and gas drilling funds. They did that, presumably, with a view to creating homes for people; they wanted to develop a Canadian film industry and wanted security of oil supply, but no, those people who did that, the Canadians who responded by investing in these business ventures, are told that is unfair and that they are taking advantage of the system.

The Minister of Finance described the tax system as unfair and said that the well-advised or the wealthy very often pay less than their fair share. The Gospel according to the federal Government amounts to this: tax incentives are introduced, but when Canadians make use of them they become tax preferences or loopholes for the well-advised and the wealthy.

I want to ask the federal Government: who did it think was going to invest in MURBs and drilling funds and Canadian films? Did it think that the people drawing unemployment insurance were going to invest in these things? They were put there for a purpose. I guess the implication which I find very disturbing is that the federal Government now takes the view that the gross income of everyone accrues first to the Government, and if we are allowed to retain some portion of it, then this is an act of benevolence on the part of the Government. I think we should ask ourselves what place this attitude has in a free and democratic society.

Mr. Nielsen: A point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Member for Yukon is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I hesitate to interrupt my colleague, and I do so with my apologies. I refer to an intervention made this evening by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan), in which, I am informed, in my absence from the House, he purported to give notice under Standing Order 75C with respect to Canagrex, Bill C-85.

I want to note, Mr. Speaker, that ordinarily this would trigger a debate tomorrow before Government Orders for two hours. I want to serve notice now that we do not accept the propriety of the procedure adopted by the Minister in giving that notice tonight. We do not accept the notice. We will be raising a point of order tomorrow, immediately prior to embarking on Orders of the Day, and leaving the question with the Chair at that time for its decision, presumably immediately, upon conclusion of the Chair hearing adequate argument as to whether or not the Minister, in giving that notice this evening, was in order, it having been given during a debate on a tax measure.

Essentially the position we will be taking is that if that procedure is acceptable we could be in the middle of a debate on the acceptability or the non-acceptability, for instance, of capital punishment and be served with notice, under S.O. 75C, of time allocation on Canagrex.

Essentially that will be our position tomorrow. I rise now to give the Chair due notice of that so you will have the evening and tomorrow morning to consider the matter, but we absolutely do not accept the notice as being proper. We presume that the Chair will be accepting our very well-reasoned arguments tomorrow and declaring that that notice is not within our practice, and we will be proceeding with the debate on Bill C-139 tomorrow in the usual way.

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, I rise on that point of order. It was quite clear that the House Leader for the Conservative Party (Mr. Nielsen) has not read 75C, and I am sure that after he has had a chance to read it tonight he will rethink his position, because clearly the motion was in order. As to whether or not it was properly put is up to the Chair to decide, and not the Hon. Member for Yukon.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I agree wholeheartedly with the Parliamentary Secretary with the exception of that portion of his remarks dealing with my not having read 75C. The Government having exercised its prerogative under 75C this session 14 times more than any other parliamentary session in Canadian history, I have certainly read and re-read and re-read 75C.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Chair can recognize the Hon. Member for Calgary South, but I must indicate his time has expired. It is very close to 10 o'clock.

May I extend to the Hon. Member the privilege of continuing for a few more seconds.

• (2200)

Mr. Thomson: Mr. Speaker, I would like to say that Bill C-139 is the most complex piece of tax legislation to come before this House since Mr. Benson's White Paper on taxation. This Bill will hit very hard the low and middle-income Canadians who gain little or nothing from the legislation. There is one thing for certain. The proposals in this Bill will ensure the continued employment of two professions which have arisen through the complications of the income tax which have mounted since the 1960s. Those are the tax accountants and the tax lawyers.

There was a time when I understood a little bit about the Income Tax Act intricacies, but today I doubt whether I have any knowledge whatsoever.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Shall I recognize at one and the same time the Hon. Member for Burin-St. George's (Mr. Simmons) and call it ten o'clock?

Mr. Simmons: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE—MANDATORY SUPERVISION PROGRAM—RELEASE OF DANGEROUS SEXUAL OFFENDERS. (B) REQUEST FOR DEFINITION OF "A BAD EVALUATION"

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Mr. Speaker, I asked the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan), as is my want, questions on the subject of mandatory supervision. The question I am addressing tonight and on which I wish he would elaborate— I am glad he is in his place tonight to respond to my remarks—has to do with remarks he made to a gentleman about a week ago, a gentleman from Mississauga by the name of Mr. Les Crisp. He is quoted as saying to Mr. Crisp that no one with a bad evaluation will be released under mandatory supervision in the future.

This is my question to the Solicitor General. As it is clear the Solicitor General intends in the future to continue to release dangerous criminals to the public, if he is not going to use mandatory supervision in the future, what will he use in releasing these people? Such statements he has made in public raise very important questions.

I notice that the Chairman of the National Parole Board is starting a letter-writing campaign to the newspapers. I have before me a clipping from The Globe and Mail dated September 29 in which the Chairman of the National Parole Board is reported as having said, and I quote:

> The decision to test the mandatory supervision release mechanisms which by law allow a federal penitentiary inmate to return to society after he has served two-thirds of his sentence was an action which was not taken lightly.

You bet is was not taken lightly. It has been 12 years since mandatory supervision was enacted. That policy has now been in place for 12 years. To my knowledge, it has never been challenged until the last several months. The Chairman of the National Parole Board could not have been more honest when he says he has not taken it very lightly. He has waited long enough to do it. That raises some very important questions.

The same article which quotes Mr. Crisp goes on to say that the Solicitor General has urged the provincial attorneys-general to make more frequent use of habitual criminal laws. The Solicitor General and the Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan) are the senior law officers of the land. They are the ones who ought to be urging Crown prosecutors to press charges. They are the ones who ought to be implementing the laws of this land in conjunction with the Provinces.

I would like to ask the Solicitor General, as I did the other day, when he wants to assume authority in this area, why is he foisting it on to the provincial attorneys-general? Why is he always copping out on that subject? Why is he seemingly asking the Chairman of the National Parole Board to take action? These are very important questions.

What I would like to know from the Solicitor General is why it has taken so long for the Chairman of the National Parole Board or the Solicitor General or the Minister of Justice to act. Why, when a law was apparently brand new, a law which instituted mandatory supervision, and the Solicitor General had said that there has been an over 50 per cent failure rate in mandatory supervision—

Mr. Kaplan: Forty-one per cent.

Mr. Friesen: Now the Minister says it is 41 per cent. I guess it depends on how he wants to read the statistics. Forty-one per cent is not a very good batting average. If it has been that ineffective, why have we seen dangerous offenders released in society after two-thirds of their sentence for 12 years? Why has it taken 12 years to test the validity of that law? I know the Government is intent on rehabilitation, but certainly it ought not to be the policy of the Government to do that at the expense of the unsuspecting public.

• (2205)

The Chairman of the National Parole Board has been wont to issue two more press releases defending his position to continue to incarcerate some inmates. On December 3 he said this was in order to ensure public safety. I commend the Chairman for that, but why was he not doing that during the past 12 years?

On December 3 he further stated, and I quote:

> As in the recent cases of west-coast inmates who were suspended 'at the gate' by the Board, this is a test case. There are few precedents for suspending mandatory supervision when the inmate has not been found responsible for misconduct which occurred subsequent to his release, and the National Parole Board fully expects its action to be challenged in Court.

There was another press release on December 7.

As I said the other day, Mr. Speaker, we need to re-examine the priorities of this Government. What are the values of this Government? As I said in a speech last Friday, "The mark of a civilized country is that it sees the role of a Government to defend and protect the defenceless in our society." If that is taken at face value, surely the defenceless ones are the ones who are living by the law without having to be urged by police officers to do so. But under this Government the defenceless ones are overlooked and ignored and those who are the rapists and the murderers are protected by the law.

Just a few years ago this Government spent thousands of dollars providing staff from the Ministry of Justice to help one man in Manitoba defend himself against a traffic ticket. Yet there is not one penny allocated from the Minister of Justice or the Solicitor General to protect the families of those victims who have been murdered or who have been raped. The Government has not set aside money for that. If this Solicitor General wants to be the friend of the defenceless, it is time to set his values in order and to start providing a defence for the defenceless, not for those who would rape and plunder our society.

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, in spite of the criticism which I have received from the Hon. Member, I welcome very much his recognition of a very important fact which he has denied until tonight. Tonight in his opening remarks, and throughout his remarks, he finally admitted that this Government, and this Solicitor General, are getting tougher with dangerous offenders. In the past he suggested we were getting softer on them. Tonight, he finally recognizes we are getting tougher on them. He asks why it has taken so long? I cannot and do not propose to explain why it has taken many years to do these things. I will only say that they are being done. I am responsible for doing them and I am very pleased they are being done. I would like to deal with a few of them.

The Hon. Member asked why, in the case of the dangerous offender provisions, I was relying on provincial Attorneys General to do the job, and why I was not taking responsibility myself for having more Crown Attorneys seek dangerous offender classification of accused persons who are considered dangerous. There is a simple reason for this, Mr. Speaker. It is that the Crown Attorneys work for the provincial Governments. Those who prosecute these cases against dangerous offenders under the Criminal Code are always, 100 per cent of the time, in the employ of provincial Governments and report to provincial Attorneys General. That is why I directed my remarks to the Ministers responsible for them, namely, the provincial Attorneys General. I should like to do it myself and I should like to see it done, but legally the authority for those provincial Crown Attorneys is that of the provincial Attorneys General.

I do not think the Hon. Member knows the law very well but when he reflects on this I think he will understand why I chose to write to the provincial Attorneys General instead of writing to the people who are responsible to them.

The Hon. Member referred to the toughening of the mandatory supervision rules. One of those policies is totally within the responsibility of the Parole Board. I am very happy with the step it has taken and I support it. I would like to have seen that done years ago, but it is being done now and it is being challenged in the court. I look forward to the result of that challenge.

I have also taken a bill to the Senate to toughen mandatory supervision, and I know that the Hon. Member will support it. In all, I am glad to see that he finally recognizes that the Government and I, as Solicitor General, are getting tough on the dangerous offender.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE—REQUEST FOR FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL CO-OPERATION ON ISSUE. (B) REQUEST THAT MINISTER TAKE ACTION

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley-Hants): Mr. Speaker, I must say it is rather ironic that tonight during the adjournment debate we have the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) in a sort of three-hit tango on the different issues before the House. I listened to the eloquent plea of my colleague for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta (Mr. Friesen) about mandatory leave and other problems in the administration of Justice. I want to speak on something that is perhaps appropriate because of the season, and that is the blood money that could flow to the murderer who tries to profit from his books.

In the restricted time allotted to me I extend the olive branch of fellowship and/or goodwill of the season to the very harassed Solicitor General. I believe he feels the same compassion as I and other Members of the House and, indeed, all Canadians do for the tremendous problem regarding the civil liberties of the individual as opposed to the collective decency of the community, when a confessed murderer comes on national television and speaks of his crime. When someone says, as I heard and saw "Oh yes, I killed but I killed sincerely because of a political cause".

I do not try to ignore the problems involved in resolving this issue. The reason I take the time of the House on this adjournment debate tonight to bring this subject up is that no matter how much the Solicitor General and others share my compassion and believe that there is something to be said for the defenceless community and the victims of the murderer, I believe it is wrong to have this confessed murderer come on the screen and say, "Yes, it is the Christmas season and we have to profit from the book sales and therefore we have a book to publish." I felt sick, seeing the reporters at that press conference go up and ask for an autographed copy of the book.

That is why I got myself very directly involved in the first question that was asked about the specific case of Simard, the confessed FLQ killer, coming on the screens of the land less than two or three weeks ago at a press conference in Montreal. Those paragons of virtue, the press gallery, the fourth estate, exhibited no morals whatsoever, going up for their autographed copy. That part is not within the purview of the Solicitor General.

I am trying to bring to the attention of the Solicitor General tonight, in as calm a way as I can, what frankly is a new phenomenon, certainly in the western world and perhaps in Canada. We no longer have capital punishment. Therefore a lot of people, a lot of killers, walk the streets who would not have walked the streets had capital punishment been in place. We have the phenomenon of television through which one can become an instant celebrity. Then we have the fact that a political crime is not supposed to be a crime. Therefore, there are nuances; a person can come on the screen and insult the collective decency of the community by a statement such as, "Oh, yes, I killed, but I killed sincerely". I do not believe—and frankly I think the Solicitor General may share some of my views—that the people behind him have the sense of urgency and immediacy which this phenomenon deserves.

Olson, that sickness of smut, killed a lot of young Canadians and is still taking the administration of justice into perversion by getting flyaway trips to Vancouver and/or Victoria in search of a new grave. It is a sickness beyond comprehension that we all share, in terms of the horror of the thing. Then we had Simard come on the public screens not too long ago. Those two incidents alone demand more action in the offices of the Solicitor General and the Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan) than we have frankly seen heretofore.

I say to the Solicitor General that the United States has been faced with this because of a so-called Bill of Rights. They appreciate the fact that there is freedom of speech and the fact that I, in speaking tonight, might trespass on that right. But there is no absolute freedom of speech which allows the absolute insult of the dignity of the community at large, and which allows an absolute assault on the collective decency of Canadians. This has been proven in the Supreme Court of the United States. There are 28 states in the United States that have linked with them in their statutes compensation to victims and a prohibition, in respect of publication.

I must say that, in my emotional reaction to the press conference, when I first asked the question I was all for prohibition—take away the rights of the pen from anybody in the prison. I think I went too far, but this is not beyond the ingenuity of the law officers of the Crown and/or the compassion of the Attorney General. I have never asked a question in this House which has evoked more of a spontaneous response than the question about the murderer not profiting from his murder.

In conclusion, may I suggest that continual pressure should be kept on the Minister, he should not give me the slough-off by saying that law officers are studying it. Let us have a white paper, or a green paper; let us have the Law Reform Commission do something. Something has to be done now because Canadians are speaking out that a murderer should not be able to profit from his crime, whether this is done by establishing trust fund for victims, by impoundment of the profit in the right of the state or any one of a number of things. If we can have an embargo on External Affairs documents and documents of state for 20 or 30 years to save the sensitive egos of public servants, surely to "Lord liftin" we can have some type of embargo from the Attorney General and/or the Minister of Justice on a murderer insulting and committing another crime against the sensitivity of the victims and/or Canadians by coming on the screen and suggesting that he will profit from his crime.

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has generated a lot of heat on a subject about which I too have very strong feelings. Like the Member, I consider it to be unacceptable for a criminal to be able to profit from the sensationalizing of his crime through the writing of a book or the giving of interviews. While the Hon. Member has generated a considerable amount of heat, I would rather that he generated some light as well.

• (2220)

Mr. Nowlan: Twenty eight states have got it. What are you doing?

Mr. Kaplan: Twenty eight states have got it, and that suggests it is not federal legislation in the United States.

Mr. Nowlan: The Americans have states.

Mr. Kaplan: We have provinces in this country and our provinces have considerably more power than the states do in the United States. I do not mean by that to suggest there is not a federal solution. There may well be a federal solution. We are pursuing one, but I have not heard one from the Hon. Member opposite.

Mr. Nowlan: I could have given them to you.

Mr. Kaplan: A private Member's Bill was proposed by someone on his side of the House.

Mr. Nowlan: The Hon. Member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone).

Mr. Kaplan: It is a Bill worth putting forward, but it is probably not a bill that would create valid federal legislation.

I myself have proposed two ideas, one to which the Hon. Member referred, and the other being simply making it a crime to write a book like that. I proposed my ideas to the country for some thought. The provincial Attorneys General, by and large, replied. They are also very concerned about the problem and they feel concerned about the solutions I proposed. They indicated, without giving me any ideas about what to do, that I should do something other than the two suggestions I had proposed. I am giving the matter a great deal more thought. I am working with officials on it.

We have made suggestions to the law officers of the Crown. We have kept in mind the constitutional issue, because no one will be served if we bring forward a bill that Clifford Olson can take to the Supreme Court or to a lower level court and have struck down as being valid provincial legislation, but not valid federal legislation. I might add that a couple of Attorneys General who wrote me rejected the option of provincial action, and suggested that this is a problem that only the federal Government can solve.

Mr. Nowlan: Publish them all.

Mr. Kaplan: I take that responsibility very seriously. I am working on this problem and I am putting a lot of time into it. I hope that very shortly I will be able to share the results of my work with members opposite and, indeed, with all Members of the House. I think it is a very urgent matter because Canadians, perhaps as never before—maybe this kind of book is unprecedented—are scandalized by this book, as I am. They resent very much the kind of opportunities which the mass media and mass publication, and so on, provide for an individual who really is beneath contempt and who should not be allowed to profit from his crime.

I would only suggest that this is a country with a great respect for the rule of law. No one will be served by having some half-baked solution that results in frustrating the Canadian people even more than they are now at the prospect of a man like Clifford Robert Olson making a substantial profit from the publication of such a book.

NATIONAL SECURITY—CASE OF CANADIAN PROFESSOR—APPLICATION OF OFFICIAL SECRETS ACT. (B) TIMING OF DECISION TO PROSECUTE IN GREAT BRITAIN

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Mr. Speaker, the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) continues to hide from his responsibilities in the Hambleton spy matter. This evening I want to discuss some of the issues in this matter.

The Government has avoided prosecuting the spy Hambleton. It claims the April 25, 1980, legal opinion provided by the Department of Justice, determined that a prosecution would not be successful. The Government had already determined at that point that Hambleton should be prosecuted. The Government was simply without what it considered to be sufficient evidence.

What did the security service do at that point? It went back to Mr. Hambleton and told him of the decision of the Department of Justice, and he began to tell his story. The Solicitor General says that no prosecution could be undertaken thereafter because these confessions were taken without a caution being given to Mr. Hambleton. I ask the Solicitor General where in Canadian law is it mandatory that a caution be given to make a statement voluntary? The only requirement is that when a statement is made to a person in authority, it be made without fear of prejudice or hope of advantage. The Boudreau case in 1949 established that to be the law in this country.

In any case, the Solicitor General did not even bother to return to the Department of Justice to get a second opinion. One has to ask why did he not return?

The Minister hides behind the claim of lack of evidence, and behind a legal excuse as to why Hambleton was never prosecuted, yet he did not bother to go to the Department of Justice to see if his judgment held any water whatsoever. He says there was no direct evidence other than that supplied by Hambleton. Yet, when my colleague, the Hon. Member for Durham Northumberland (Mr. Lawrence), asked whether the Canadian Government knew that direct evidence was available that Colonel Rudolph Hermann passed United States secret classified information to Hambleton on Canadian soil, the Solicitor General of Canada refused to answer for reasons of so-called national security.

• (2225)

Again, why could the Solicitor General not give us this information? I submit that the answers can be found in many of his responses to questions in the last two weeks. The Solicitor General says that after Hambleton was told of the Department's decision not to prosecute, all of a sudden he began to talk. The Solicitor General said:

> We learned a great deal more about his activities after the Security Service informed him of the decision.

The heavens opened and the sun came out. The Minister says that there was no inducement; he was simply advised of the legal opinion. Why, may we ask, was this spy so forthcoming?

Let us dig a little deeper. On December 1, 1982, as reported at page 21172 of Hansard, the Solicitor General said:

> The Hon. Member has to recognize that the Security Service is not primarily in the business of catching crooks, seeing them tried, and seeing them punished. The objectives of the Security Service are much broader. They are to protect the national security of the country.

On December 8, 1982, as reported at page 21393 of Hansard, the same Minister said the following:

> That Service was quite satisfied to be running a very successful counterespionage operation which was very productive. Hambleton was giving the Service information, which information the Service was sharing with the other friendly intelligence services, including MI5.

What we have here is a situation in which the Minister responsible for the Security Service made the political decision not to prosecute Hugh Hambleton. He says that he did not have the evidence. Yet after April 25, 1980, he never returned to the Department of Justice for another legal opinion. He has said that he does not have the legislation, yet our Official Secrets Act is broader than Britain's. He has hinted vaguely at the true story, that he and the Security Service simply decided that Hambleton should be used for the information he could provide and that a prosecution would go by the boards. This was probably effected through a deal with Hambleton. I suggest it is inconceivable that Hambleton would talk without some kind of deal. One thing is certain; the Government wanted Hambleton to think that he had a deal.

On this issue the Government cannot have it both ways. Either it admits that it induced Hambleton to provide his statement, or it admits that it should have prosecuted, for without inducement there was no obvious bar to prosecution. Why does the Solicitor General not come clean with the House and with the Canadian people? Why does he not tell us the whole story? Is it because he knows his handling of this entire affair has been appalling and he seeks to cover up his role?

Some may ask if there is anything wrong with using Hambleton for information. Why should spies be prosecuted? I say to those people that this man has committed crimes of a very serious nature. He has undercut the defences of our country and of our allies. By giving this man immunity we send messages to his patrons. They know how Canada treats its spies. Spies have nothing to fear in this country under this Government.

On that side of the House we have, as Solicitor General, Hugh Hambleton's aider and abbetor. I am asking a simple question, as are the people of Canada. Why does the Solicitor General not stand in his place? Why does the Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan) not stand in his place and make a complete and full report to the Canadian people on the method and the manner in which this matter was handled? We can only draw one conclusion from their reluctance. This is the result either of incompetence or, which is of more concern, they have something to hide.

• (2230)

Mr. Al MacBain (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure as Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan) to rise in reply to the intervention of the Hon. Member for Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatyshyn). I do not propose to deal in detail with the Hambleton case. I think it would be more worthwhile if I traced the history of the Official Secrets Act of Canada in comparison with that of the Official Secrets Act of Great Britain.

The Official Secrets Act in Canada is modelled on a statute enacted by the Parliament of the United Kingdom. Because the Canadian law is an outgrowth of the United Kingdom's statute, it is desirable to set out briefly, in a few principal milestones, the development of the United Kingdom law in this area.

The first Official Secrets Act was passed by the United Kingdom in 1889 as the result of continuing leaks of Government information. The provisions were aimed at dealing with "espionage as well as the leakage of Government information, the disclosure of which would not be quoted in the interest of the state, or otherwise, in the public interest". In 1911, the United Kingdom's statute was amended.

When the amending Bill was introduced to the House, the Government announced that the amendments were intended to strengthen defence against espionage activities. However, the Bill also made it an offence for any Government information to be disclosed without authorization, whether or not the information was secret, and whether or not the disclosure would adversely affect the interests of the state. Owing to the deteriorating international situation, no questions were asked and the Bill was passed without substantial debate. The scope of the leakage offence was thus widened without any apparent public discussion of what had transpired.

The United Kingdom's statute was further amended in 1920, but those amendments were not intended to modify the leakage provision in any important way. The United Kingdom statute thus deals with two distinct offences, espionage and leakage of Government information.

The first Canadian OSA was passed in 1890 at the request of the Government of the United Kingdom. Its provisions were transferred to the Canadian Criminal Code when it was enacted in 1892. I see, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Carry on. I'm fascinated.

Mr. MacBain: I can understand that.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I am sorry to interrupt the Hon. Member, but the time allotted for the adjournment motion has expired.

At 10.32 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

MOTIONS UNDER S.O. 43

[English]

ENERGY

SUGGESTED MODIFICATION OF OIL PRICING AGREEMENT

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, in view of the fact that under the federal-provincial agreement the price of a barrel of domestic oil is geared to 75 per cent of the cost of a barrel of international oil, which is applied only when the international price rises but does not apply when the price drops, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis):

That the Government take the necessary steps to modify this agreement so that it will work both ways, which could mean a substantial saving to Canadians in their fuel bills when implemented.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

THE PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Ron Stewart (Simcoe South): Madam Speaker, it is important that recognition be given to the ideological direction being taken on behalf of this nation by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). In keeping with his personal socialist philosophy, he established a friendship accord with the Soviet Union and, as the only western leader to attend the funeral, eulogized Brezhnev as a man of peace, a tribute the people of Poland, Czechoslovakia and Afghanistan failed to comprehend. I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor):

That, because the Prime Minister continues to support those Canadians who actively pursue a philosophy similar to his, to the extent of refusing to prosecute those who, like Hugh Hambleton, would otherwise be dealt with as traitors, this House direct that a letter be written to the newest man of peace, Yuri Andropov, former head of the KGB, suggesting the Prime Minister of Canada be awarded the Order of Lenin for services rendered.

Madam Speaker: The Hon. Member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone).

EXTERNAL AID

ADVISABILITY OF PRODUCING UNICEF PARLIAMENTARY CHRISTMAS CARDS

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Madam Speaker, since attempting to get a motion passed yesterday, another 12,000 of the world's children have died of starvation. Since Members of Parliament and Senators send an estimated one-quarter of a million Christmas cards per year, and since UNICEF has done an outstanding job in bringing assistance to the world's needy children, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member of Oxford (Mr. Halliday):

That this Parliament urge that an informal group be organized by the political Parties in this Chamber to ascertain the advisability of having the UNICEF organization produce special parliamentary Christmas cards so that Members and Senators might, concurrently with their good wishes for the Christmas season, assist the needy children of the world.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

HUMAN RIGHTS

CONDEMNATION OF SASKATCHEWAN MLA'S COMMENTS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Madam Speaker, on Friday, December 10, Saskatchewan celebrated Human Rights Day. The day before, a Conservative MLA, Lloyd Hampton, told a legislative committee that it is not fair when a person buys a $100,000 house in a nice residential area and then is forced to sell it cheaply when immigrants buy the house next door. He said:

Their aroma floats into my property and the next thing you know the value of my home has gone to pot.

He also characterized native workers as being incompetent and suffering from hangovers. I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for The Battlefords-Meadow Lake (Mr. Anguish) and, I hope, by all Hon. Members of the House:

That this House condemn the Conservative MLA Lloyd Hampton's comments in light of their affront to federal and provincial human rights legislation, fundamental human dignity, and the history of immigration that has built this country of ours.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

TIME ALLOCATION FOR REPORT STAGE AND THIRD READING OF BILL C-85

Mr. Len Gustafson (Assiniboia): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan), in moving closure under Standing Order 75C, is creating yet another mammoth Crown Corporation named Canagrex which will have broad and powerful control on all agricultural and food products. This recent step by the Minister further undermines the democratic working of this House. Therefore I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Hargrave) and the Hon. Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields):

That this House ask the Minister of Agriculture to reconsider a step as serious as the one taken yesterday on closure and allow free and open debate in this House on Bill C-85.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

BOWATER LAY-OFFS—PROTECTION OF WORKERS' JOBS

Mr. Ted Miller (Nanaimo-Alberni): Madam Speaker, I rise to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Whereas the Bowater Newfoundland Ltd.'s employees have been put on notice that the company will close permanently a large part of its Corner Brook pulp mill on April 2, putting some 750 of the workers out of work; and whereas this decision came in spite of profitable years between 1978 and 1981 and the company's remission of large dividends to its British shareholders this year, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Mrs. Mitchell):

That the House instruct the Government to meet company officials, provincial Government officials and employees' representatives to discuss possible action to protect the jobs of Bowater's workers, and that the Government aiso be instructed to investigate the circumstances of the reduction in the plant's operations in spite of its productivity and profitability.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

1985 CONGRESS ON ALCOHOLISM AND DRUG DEPENDENCE—SUGGESTED ISSUANCE OF COMMEMORATIVE STAMP

Mr. Bill Yurko (Edmonton East): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the fact that the widespread social and economic costs resulting from the abuse of alcohol and drugs are becoming increasingly apparent and understood in Canadian society; in view of the fact that many agencies and groups across Canada are attempting to address this problem by increasing public awareness of it, and in view of the fact that there is almost a desperate call by society on all elected Members to act in a meaningful manner, at the request of the Alberta Alcohol and Drug Abuse Commission, I move, seconded by the Hon. Members for Saint-Michel (Mrs. Killens), Kootenay West (Mr. Kristiansen), and Calgary East (Mr. Kushner):

That this assembly act unanimously to bring attention to this very serious matter by requesting the Post Office to strike a stamp to mark the first meeting in Canada of the thirty-fourth International Congress on Alcoholism and Drug Dependence scheduled for Calgary in 1985.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

METRIC CONVERSION

MINISTER'S PRESS RELEASE REFERENCE TO REGULATIONS

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Madam Speaker, my motion under Standing Order 43 is a direct challenge to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) to retract an incorrect statement in his media release of yesterday that regulations regarding metric were passed by the Clark Government, by Order in Council. I checked with the Privy Council Office this morning and was informed that no such Orders in Council were passed between May, 1979, and February, 1980. Therefore I move, seconded by the Hon. Members for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Schellenberger) and Athabasca (Mr. Shields):

That the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs move immediately to amend this false statement, and if he intends to follow through with his bluff to prosecute those Canadians in the retail field who are exercising their freedom of choice in a free country, that he treat the cases as sub judice and refrain from placing any phone calls to judges or criticizing their decisions.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

FINANCE

FUEL EXCISE TAX EXEMPTION SOUGHT FOR FARMERS

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Madam Speaker, because the rate of farm bankruptcies in Canada which have been caused by high overhead costs to farmers has reached the point where the survival of the agricultural industry is seriously threatened, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Schellenberger) and the Hon. Member for Assiniboia (Mr. Gustafson):

That this House immediately take action to assist farmers to reduce their operating costs by introducing legislation which will exempt farmers from the payment of federal excise tax on fuels used in agricultural production.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

CROWN CORPORATIONS

OPPOSITION TO CREATION OF NEW CORPORATIONS

Mr. Charles Mayer (Portage-Marquette): Madam Speaker, Crown corporations were termed a dangerous hole in the taxpayers' pockets, and the Government's control of Crown corporations was severely criticized by the Auditor General in his annual report. Last night the Minister of Agriculture gave notice that the Government is now invoking closure in order to create Canagrex, yet another Crown corporation. The Opposition has moved several responsible amendments to the legislation that will allow Parliament effectively to scrutinize public funds being spent by Canagrex. As a result of closure, these amendments will not now have a chance of being adopted. Therefore I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Schellenberger):

That this House instruct the Government not to create any new Crown corporations before legislation is passed which allows Parliament to regulate this form of subgovernment properly.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

TIME ALLOCATION FOR REPORT STAGE AND THIRD READING OF BILL C-85

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister, who indicated that he would be here, and in the absence of the Deputy Prime Minister, I will direct my question to the Acting Prime Minister, to whom I have also given notice. The Acting Prime Minister will know that the Canagrex Bill had been debated for only 90 minutes at the report stage. Yet last night, without warning, the Minister of Agriculture gave notice of an intention to introduce closure on Canagrex.

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Clark: Will the Acting Prime Minister, on behalf of the Government, now agree not to proceed with closure on Canagrex?

[Translation]

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, since the question concerns the business of the House, I think I should make it clear what the facts of the matter are. I may remind the Hon. Members opposite that the Canagrex Bill was introduced more than a year ago, on December 8, 1981. It was debated on second reading for twelve hours and fifty minutes on five sitting days. In committee, the Bill was debated for three and a half months. Twenty-seven meetings were held, lasting a total of twenty-one hours and forty-five minutes, and finally, at the report stage, most of the amendments being proposed are similar to those that were defeated in committee. The Leader of the Official Opposition ought to know that for the Government to give notice pursuant to Standing Order 75C means that his party in particular has refused to co-operate in negotiating a reasonable schedule for completing debate on the Bill. Otherwise, the Government would have had no reason for using Standing Order 75C. Whenever a minister responsible for a bill sees no other alternative but to give notice in order to limit debate at any stage, it implies that despite discussions with the Official Opposition, no agreement could be reached on when debate could reasonably be concluded. Consequently, what the Minister of Agriculture did yesterday is entirely in accordance with the Standing Orders of this House and with parliamentary procedure, and indicates the Official Opposition's lack of good faith in refusing to negotiate an agreement for ending debate on this very important Bill.

Oral Questions

[English]

POWER OF PROPOSED CANAGREX CORPORATION

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, we have noted before with this pocket dictator of a Government—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: —that the weaker its case, the longer it takes it to defend its action. The Government knows that there have only been 90 minutes of debate at report stage. It knows that its own Members failed to show up to allow debate on this Bill the last time it was brought in. It knows that the Minister of Agriculture snuck into the House the other night and introduced closure by surprise, on Canagrex. What the Government House Leader has done is indicate that he holds in contempt the spirit of Parliamentary reform that was marked when Members from all sides of the House adopted the first report of the Committee on Standing Orders and Procedure, and that will not be forgotten.

Let me ask whomever is speaking for the Government as Acting Prime Minister whether the Government believes, and why this Government believes, that this Crown corporation needs the extraordinary power to buy and sell agricultural products, and why it refuses to allow that principle to be discussed here in the House of Commons of Canada?

[Translation]

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, I think the Leader of the Opposition will agree that one would have to be very narrow-minded to conclude that limiting debate at this point constitutes an attack against the spirit of parliamentary reform, on the contrary. The Right Hon. Member ought to know that the reform proposals provide for a parliamentary calendar, with set dates for adjournment. It will therefore become even more vital for parties to meet in good faith and try to negotiate agreements on the length of debate on certain bills, if the House really wants this experiment to be fruitful and to pave the way for permanent reform. What we are doing today in no way affects the spirit of parliamentary reform, and I think the Right Hon. Member's party, in refusing to agree to time allocation with a view to ending the debate on Canagrex, is in fact against the spirit of parliamentary reform. The Leader of the Opposition knows perfectly well that the House will adjourn on December 22. This is the first time in our history that Hon. Members have been informed three weeks ahead of time that the House will be adjourning on a given date for the Christmas holidays. Nevertheless, the Leader of the Opposition is doing everything in his power to keep the Government from expediting its legislation within a reasonable length of time. The fact that the Minister of Agriculture was obliged to give notice, as he did yesterday, means that the Leader of the Opposition failed to show the parliamentary co-operation required to conclude an agreement on a reasonable length of time for ending the debate on this very important Canagrex Bill.

AUDITOR GENERAL'S COMMENTS ON CROWN CORPORATIONS

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, the Government House Leader will have a hard time explaining how it was the attitude of the Opposition that stopped his own Members from being able to show up in this House of Commons to debate Canagrex. They would rather boycott the House and then invoke closure, which is what they have done.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: I see that the dictator-in-chief has returned.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Withdraw.

Mr. Clark: Let me ask the Prime Minister—

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Clark: Perhaps Members opposite would like to impose closure on the question period as well.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: Can the Prime Minister tell us whether the Government intends to ignore the Auditor General's report and recommendations about the abuse of Crown corporations generally, or does he intend to ignore it simply and exclusively in the case of Canagrex?

[Translation]

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, if I may finish my answer to the question put by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition, he twice alluded to the fact that at a given time, there were not enough Liberal Members in the House to debate the Canagrex Bill. This reminds me that we tried twice over to call the Bill for debate, and twice the party of the Leader of the Opposition used childish tactics to prevent the debate from taking place. In fact, the occasion to which he is referring, namely, when a large number of Liberal Members were present but not in sufficient numbers to make a quorum, there were more than twenty Conservative Members hiding behind the curtains like a bunch of kids to prevent Parliament from working. Madam Speaker, since we are talking about the spirit of parliamentary reform, not about infantile behaviour, I suggest that the Leader of the Opposition consult the real lawyer sitting on his left, who will tell him that he urged me, in the present circumstances, to limit the debate because there was no way agreement could be reached on a specific deadline for concluding the debate on Canagrex.

POSITION OF PRIME MINISTER

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, let me direct my supplementary to the Prime Minister. Does the Prime Minister know anything about Canagrex? Does the Prime Minister know that his Government imposed closure on it? Does the Prime Minister intend to reject the advice of the Auditor General regarding the abuses of Crown corporations generally, or does he intend to reject that advice simply in the case of Canagrex?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I apologize to the House. I did arrive late. I was having lunch with the spiritual leaders of the country who wanted to debate the question of nuclear disarmament. On the way back I was told that the Leader of the Opposition had sent a letter to my office at 12.45, at which time I was already engaged in the meeting. Therefore, I have not had time to read the letter. However, I understand from the debate which has begun that the objection is more to the notice of closure than to the substance of the debate.

I understand that timing has been discussed over a long period as to how we can reasonably bring this debate to a democratic end by having a vote on it. There have been more than 86 hours in the House and in Committee given to the debate on this subject. I think any reasonable kind of person in a democratic meeting, and this is the case here, would be able to reach some firm agreement as to a reasonable amount of time after which the debate would be brought to an end. I do not think there is anything dictatorial in hoping that a democratic assembly will make up its mind on the time for debate and on the results of that debate. That is what we are asking the Opposition.

In so far as the question of the Leader of the Opposition on Crown corporations is concerned, I do not think that even he or his Party would think that the Auditor General was advocating the abolition or non-use of all Crown corporations, because then we could begin with Air Canada, CNR, and so on. Therefore, the question of Crown corporations and its relevance to the Auditor General's report is whether this Crown corporation will be properly controlled. That is the purpose of the debate before the House. It is on that we want the Opposition to express its views and to vote.

THE ECONOMY

REQUEST FOR CONVENING OF FIRST MINISTERS' CONFERENCE

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Yesterday in the House the Minister of Finance, in reply to a question from the New Democratic Party, indicated that there ought to be a major co-ordination between the federal and provincial Governments to come to grips with the alarming level of unemployment in the country. Yesterday, at the same time the Minister was speaking here, the Maritime Premiers were meeting elsewhere, expressing the same desire for a co-ordinated effort between the federal and provincial Governments on the economy, but noting that the Prime Minister, not having agreed to a First Ministers' conference on this subject, they remain skeptical about the seriousness of the federal Government on it.

Considering that the Minister of Finance has said we need a major co-ordinated effort and, as everyone knows, unemployment is now at a disastrous level, will the Prime Minister state his agreement in principle and make it clear to the Maritime Premiers that he would like to have a First Ministers' meeting on the economy?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I would like to suggest to the Leader of the New Democratic Party that his question is very oddly timed. He is asking that question just two days before the federal Minister of Finance meets with all his opposite numbers from the Provinces, precisely to discuss ways of implementing that co-ordinated effort which we certainly want and which we suspect the Provinces want, and they will be attending that meeting. I would suggest to the Leader of the New Democratic Party that he put more faith in the provincial Ministers of Finance, who are coming precisely to discuss co-ordinated efforts, than the other Ministers of the Provinces who do not seem to know about that meeting.

• (1430)

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER AGREE TO MEET PREMIERS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, it is not a question of faith in the provincial representatives on this issue. Up to this point, and specifically concerning the Prime Minister, it is a question of faith in the Government.

I would like to say in all seriousness to the Prime Minister that one of the advantages of a commitment by the Prime Minister now, instead of standing back and waiting to have such a conference, would be that the Finance Ministers when they meet could act on that assumption, sort out certain basic questions which ought to be faced by the First Ministers, and the First Ministers could then meet, presumably early in the new year, if it is not resolved before. Therefore, I would like to ask the Prime Minister once again, will he not commit himself in principle to the necessity of meeting on this fundamental question of unemployment with the other Premiers of the country?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I cannot speak for the Finance Ministers of the Provinces, but our Finance Minister has been part of the Government for more than ten years and throughout the seventies we have had a greater number of federal-provincial First Ministers' meetings than in any other period in our history. There have been dozens of such meetings, Madam Speaker, since I have been Prime Minister, as many, I think, as have been had, perhaps in the previous 25 or 50 years. The assumption is that we are always anxious to have federal-provincial meetings if they are productive, and the best way to see if they can be productive will be for the federal Minister of Finance to meet with his counterparts to see what suggestions they have for co-ordinated or other forms of action in order to help revive the economy.

RESPONSIBILITY FOR CONVENING CONFERENCE

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, with all due respect to the Prime Minister, surely if the meeting which is taking place on Thursday is a success, then, presumably, the implication of what the Prime Minister is saying is that there will be a First Ministers' conference. But even if it is not a success, I would like to suggest to the Prime Minister it is all the more reason for the Prime Minister of Canada to show some leadership and call the First Ministers together to give some collective leadership to Canada in this very serious economic situation. Therefore, I would like to ask him a straight question, not a rhetorical one. Would he not agree that, even if the meeting which takes place on Thursday is not successful, it is essential to get a co-ordinated effort at the national level, involving the Provinces and the federal Government, and, therefore, he should exercise his responsibility and request that the Premiers come and meet in Ottawa, or elsewhere, to deal with the very serious problem of unemployment?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I will speak my mind quite clearly on this. I think that a meeting which would be wildly unsuccessful and would break down as did the February meeting of last year, when there was total disagreement and practically chaos in the so-called collective approach of all First Ministers, would be counter productive. I would rather have no meeting if it appears from the meeting of the Finance Ministers that there is not some possibility of reaching a form of agreement, and if the signs seem to emerge from that meeting that the Premiers will use the next meeting as they did the February one, to make ten speeches on television blaming the federal Government for all the evils of the nation.

CROWN CORPORATIONS

FRAMEWORK FOR ACCOUNTABILITY—AUDITOR GENERAL'S COMMENTS

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, in his response to my Leader, the Prime Minister talked about what the Auditor General did not say about Crown corporations in his report. What the Auditor General did say was that of 33 key criteria which should be included in an omnibus Crown corporations' policy, the Government's Bill C-123 fails to meet some 26 of those criteria. I would like to ask the Prime Minister, will he now give the House the assurance that no new Crown corporations will be created, including Canagrex, until the Government has in place a comprehensive framework for the accountability of Crown corporations which meets most of the key objections of the Auditor General?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, we do have such a comprehensive framework. I believe it is before the House now in Bill C-123, and Part V of that Bill indicates that comprehensive framework which we see as appropriate for ensuring that Parliament has all the pertinent and relevant information regarding the operation and control of Crown corporations, and that the Government maintains the ultimate responsibility for acting on behalf of the shareholders. This is the spirit of Bill C-123. We hope that the Opposition will co-operate to bring it before the House as soon as possible so that we can hear their views on this and, hopefully, improve it and study any amendments they might want to bring in which would improve the control and administration of Crown corporations.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: If not, bring in closure.

REQUEST THAT BILL C-123 BE SCRAPPED

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Possibly the Prime Minister did not hear the question or he did not read the Auditor General's report. What I pointed out was what the Auditor General said, that of 33 key criteria which the Auditor General feels should be included in any framework for Crown corporations, C-123 fails to meet some 26. In view of that fact, and in view of the fact that the Government, without any reference to Parliament whatsoever, over a three-month period created four new Crown corporations, and is acting now to gag Parliament on Canagrex, why will the Prime Minister not reconsider his policy? Why will he not stand Canagrex to one side? Why will he not scrap Bill C-123 and bring in a Crown corporations' policy which meets the objections of the Auditor General and the Parliament of Canada?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I am sure the Hon. Member is not serious in suggesting we scrap a Bill on which some 86 hours have already been spent.

Some Hon. Members: Put it aside.

Mr. Trudeau: Canagrex has been studied for 86 hours by this Parliament. If the Hon. Member is asking now about Bill C-123, then we suggest that the debate begin on that also and that we hear which particular criteria, in the view of the Hon. Member opposite, have not been met by that Bill.

Mr. Beatty: They are listed in the Auditor General's report.

Mr. Trudeau: I understand the Hon. Member has a copy of the Auditor General's report in his hand and he wants to make some arguments—

Mr. Clark: All you have are your jack boots.

Mr. Trudeau: —on the criteria. The Leader of the Opposition wants to get in on this, but I would suggest it would be a courtesy to his Member, to his backbencher, if he let me continue the argument with him. But the Leader of the Opposition is not known for his courtesy and he would like to act as a dictator—

Mr. Clark: I do not take lectures on courtesy from you.

Mr. Trudeau: —but unfortunately he cannot find in his Party people who want to be dictated to.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

INCOME TAX ACT

ALLEGED OMISSION OF NOTARIES IN IDENTIFICATION OF PROFESSIONS IN SECTION 16(2)

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. In his Bill to amend the statute law relating to income tax, I think there was a very serious oversight which the Minister will notice in Clause 16(2), which identifies the professions of accountant, dentist, lawyer, medical doctor, veterinarian and chiropractor. The Minister of Finance is aware that in Quebec, we have a very important profession, namely that of notary. Why is this profession not identified in the Minister's Bill?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): I shall check with my officials to find out if there has indeed been an oversight. If such is the case, an amendment will be proposed, when the Bill is considered in Committee of the Whole, to include this very important profession for which I have the greatest respect.

Mr. La Salle: Madam Speaker, on behalf of Quebec's 2,000 notaries and on behalf of a profession that has existed in Quebec for well nigh 300 years, does the Minister undertake to add to his legislation the profession of notary, which is very well known in Quebec?

Mr. Lalonde: As I said before to the Hon. Member, I shall check whether there was an oversight, and if that is the case, I shall see to it that a correction be made at the time the Bill is considered in Committee of the Whole. That is when amendments to a bill are made.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

TIME ALLOCATION FOR REPORT STAGE AND THIRD READING OF BILL C-85

Mr. Bert Hargrave (Medicine Hat): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture regarding the Canagrex issue. In view of the Minister's abrupt indication last night that he will proceed with closure, he must surely be aware of the total opposition to this legislation as it presently stands by almost all the organized beef cattle producers in Canada. He must know that beef cattle producers have requested that cattle and beef products be removed from the Bill unless the buy-sell provisions are cancelled.

How can the Minister justify such an extreme procedure when only 19 hours—and that may add up to five days—but only 19 hours of debate took place on second reading, and less than two hours at report stage?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, the motion that I put through was because of the long talk that had taken place about Canagrex, even before it entered this House.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: That is a new parliamentary principle.

Mr. Whelan: Canagrex was not thought up by the Liberal Party. Canagrex was thought up by farming people in this nation, and it is still backed by farming people in this nation. As the Hon. Member says, it is not backed by all of them, not by 100 per cent, but the vast majority still want Canagrex and they are still asking that we get on with it. As late as yesterday evening, I am told, the President of the Ontario Federation of Agriculture was saying, "Where are we at? Let's get on with passing Canagrex."

The Hon. Member refers to the length of debate. He knows this was discussed in committee. He knows that you operate this House and the Committees as democratic forums, Madam Speaker. We have followed that principle. He also knows that if this were the Mother of Parliaments there would be an agreement for so many days of debate and to deal with amendments, et cetera.

Hon. Members opposite keep using the word "closure". We are asking for time allocation, Madam Speaker. Since I was 21 I have been elected to some kind of public office and I know that this is generally how business is administered, by some kind of ladies' or gentlemen's agreement.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hargrave: Madam Speaker, I would have to add to the Minister and to the Government House Leader that it is a little difficult, if not impossible, to collaborate on bad legislation.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

OPPOSITION TO CANAGREX

Mr. Bert Hargrave (Medicine Hat): I have a supplementary question, Madam Speaker. The Minister will be aware that some 23 agricultural commodity organizations have recently reaffirmed their total opposition to Canagrex. Most of them were unable to appear before the Committee. The Saskatchewan Stock Growers requested permission to appear but were denied the opportunity. I want to ask the Minister if this closure motion is his only response to this large and important segment of Canadian agriculture. Surely this is not the Canadian democratic way.

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Surely, Madam Speaker, it is the parliamentary way. We are operating within the rules and regulations of a democratic Parliament. The rules we have in this Parliament lag far behind the rules in most democratic Parliaments in the world, where this would be an automatic thing. For instance, Premier Davis had to do the same thing in Ontario just the other day. I do not hear Hon. Members opposite saying that his action was undemocratic. He used closure, and he used the guillotine.

We are asking for time allocation. The Hon. Member refers to Committee meetings. As he attended most of them he knows what took place. Democracy took place in the Committee. Members made the decisions on the amendments that were presented. What they are saying now is that they do not want democracy to work. That is what they are saying.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

INQUIRY WHY CANADA OPPOSED ESTABLISHMENT OF ARAB STATE IN PALESTINE

Mr. Louis Duclos (Montmorency-Orléans): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. Last week, the United Nations General Assembly adopted a resolution with a sweeping majority, in favour of the establishment of an Arab State in Palestine, while Canada, with the United States, Costa Rica and Israel, voted against the resolution.

Could the Right Hon. Prime Minister inform the House why Canada thought it preferable to vote against this resolution?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, if the Hon. Member had given me notice of his question, I could have checked the text of the resolution we voted against or on which we abstained, or else I could have asked the Secretary of State for External Affairs who is at this moment meeting with members of the Brandt Commission. I cannot give a specific answer for the simple reason that I have not read the resolution in question. On the face of it, it seems to me that the Hon. Member's question raises a number of other questions regarding an Arab State in Palestine. Is this not merely a petition on a matter of principle? What is Palestine? Does it only mean the left bank of Transjordania? Does it include the Gaza strip? I do not know what the resolution contained, so I am really not able to answer the question.

RAILWAYS

WINNIPEG ACCIDENT—QUERY RESPECTING RELOCATION OF CPR YARDS

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport concerning the mishap, the explosion and fire, in the CPR yards in Winnipeg last evening. Since Mississauga and McGregor, and since there was a spill of methanol in the same yard two years ago, and in light of the request by the City of Winnipeg for the relocation of the CP railway yards to an unpopulated area—and not only in Winnipeg but in many other cities as well—may I ask the Minister how many times this sort of accident will have to happen—is he waiting for people to be killed? How many times does it have to happen before the Government will act on feasibility studies and on the actual relocation of railway marshalling yards to unpopulated areas?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, in 1979 or 1980 an agreement had been reached that an overpass would be built, and the city and the Province requested UTAP money for that purpose. An amount of $7.6 million was allocated. But later, because of local opposition, the municipality decided to drop that project—regretfully, in my view.

The relocation had always been considered to be rather expensive at $170 million, which would probably be up to $300 million at this time. There are all kinds of problems associated with it besides the financial ones. For example, where the yard would go is one problem. All this is to say that at one point the city had a choice to make. It decided not to go ahead with the Sherbrooke-McGregor overpass. Since then it has decided to get involved in a core development program, and this is very well known to Members of the House.

Mr. Benjamin: Madam Speaker, had that explosion occurred last night at the overpass at one end or at the underpass at the other end, people would have been killed. That is not the answer. Those yards have to be relocated.

REGULATIONS GOVERNING TRANSPORTATION OF DANGEROUS GOODS

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): It is two years and four months since the legislation on the transportation of dangerous goods was passed. The Minister has recently presented one-third of the regulations but they are still not in force, and two-thirds of the regulations have yet to see the light of day.

When is the Minister going to publish regulations that do something about the security of railway cars that contain, or used to contain, dangerous goods, in storage and marshalling in railway yards? What action is he taking to try to prevent what occurred last night from happening again?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I think my hon. friend should make a distinction between railways operations under the Railway Act—and there are plenty of regulations for the operation of railways in yards or outside them—and the transportation of dangerous goods. That is really a different issue. On the transportation of dangerous goods, as he said, we have gazetted the first units of regulations now. Most people who are well informed on the subject, while regretting that we have not gone faster in drafting these regulations, understand why it has been done so slowly according to the Hon. Member's standards. Drafting the regulations is terribly difficult because of the many jurisdictions that have to be reconciled, and I have explained that before. The operations in the yard come under the Railway Act and are not really a matter that would come under the transportation of dangerous goods, as far as I am concerned.

Madam Speaker: Could I ask all Hon. Members to please try to be more brief. We are runnning considerably behind time. I want to warn Hon. Members on both sides that they will not be able to get their usual number of questions in today. I would ask them to be very brief for the rest of the Question Period.

TRANSPORT

PROTECTION OF BRIDGES—REQUEST FOR FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL ACTION

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. It arises out of the Canadian Coast Guard report on the vulnerability of standing bridge structures in Canadian waterways. The Minister will be aware that there are at least five from Vancouver to Halifax in some degree of danger. Ideally these bridges should be protected. The Minister will have in front of him a proposal from the Premier of the Province of Nova Scotia on an 80-20 per cent cost sharing arrangement to alleviate the possibility of imminent disaster. Will the minister give some indication of his preparedness to call together the various jurisdictions for the purpose of sitting down and resolving this very potentially disastrous problem?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I have answered this question a number of times. I have stated quite clearly that the responsibility for intraprovincial bridges is a provincial one. My hon. friend knows that, and I am quite sure that he agrees with it. Consequently, the protection of intraprovincial bridges under Canadian law is a provincial matter. However, because I am sympathetic by nature, and sympathetic to this particular subject, I have gone further and have said that I will be looking with the Provinces—Nova Scotia, in this particular instance—to find if there could not be savings on other transportation matters which could be made in order to help the federal Government make a contribution to this particular objective.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER INITIATE NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Madam Speaker, an additional 800 transits will occur beneath the Angus L. Macdonald and A. Murray MacKay bridges into Bedford Basin this year. Will the Minister undertake to the House that he will ask his officials to initiate negotiations immediately which will lead to the conclusion that I am sure he shares, as well as all of us on this side of the Chamber?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, there is a federal-provincial body to look into these matters. I remember that this was one of the items that I expressed the wish should be put on the agenda. I will check further and I will activate matters, if they have not yet been sufficiently activated.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

RECOURSE FOR CREDITORS IN CASES OF DEFAULT

Mr. Lorne Greenaway (Cariboo-Chilcotin): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. According to one of the Minister's senior officials, Indian bands across Canada owed banks, retailers and suppliers more than $35 million as of the end of March, 1981. This estimate was arrived at by doing band audits. However, the Department gave up on the matter because it proved to be such a large problem. It now estimates that the total amount is probably in the neighbourhood of $100 million. What recourse does a creditor have when an Indian band defaults on the payment of a loan or a debt? What responsibility does the Minister have to these creditors?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Madam Speaker, that is very largely a legal question, but let me indicate that I think many suppliers in communities near Indian reserves are aware of the limited liability of the Indian people with respect to reserve lands. They choose to make those supplies, knowing the degree of limited liability with respect to others. They have to accept a certain amount of responsibility for the fact that they are prepared to extend the credit under those circumstances.

If the Hon. Member is suggesting that somehow the Minister should intervene and tell Indians where and how they can buy, it certainly runs counter to any suggestion from the Hon. Member or the Opposition Party with respect to ending the dependency and paternalism regarding Indian people which they allege so often in the House.

Mr. Greenaway: That is not what I had in mind. I had in mind to tell the Minister that his officials are telling us that a serious credibility problem is building up because of this. Many suppliers, banks and retailers think the Department has some part to play in this, and that is why I wanted to raise the matter on the floor of the House today.

INVESTIGATION REQUESTED

Mr. Lorne Greenaway (Cariboo-Chilcotin): Madam Speaker, will the Minister order an investigation into the problem, and will he report the findings of such an investigation to the House?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Madam Speaker, in each case where this occurs, where band councils expend money for purposes other than the ones indicated when they sign contribution agreements with the Department, we go in, we intervene, we send in auditors to assess the situation and to apply what corrective measures we can. We will continue to do that, but I just want to indicate that the Hon. Member is ill-disguising what he is suggesting. I take it that he is suggesting a greater degree of interference by the Department, and that is not consistent with policies enunciated by his Party.

POLITICAL PARTIES

RECRUITMENT OF LIBERAL PARTY MEMBERS

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Do the Prime Minister and the Government approve of a political party using a citizenship court judge as a tool for recruiting new members to that party?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): The question is hypothetical, Madam Speaker, in its very form.

Mr. McDermid: Maybe I could show the Prime Minister that it is not hypothetical.

MULTICULTURAL RECRUITMENT MANUAL

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Madam Speaker, could the Prime Minister explain why the multicultural recruitment manual of the Liberal Party of Canada, written by the Minister of State for Multiculturalism, suggests under the chapter entitled, "New Activities for Recruitment", that a meeting be called by a Liberal riding association under the guise of a citizenship class involving a citizenship judge, and that this meeting be used to recruit new members to the Liberal Party? Does he support this flagrant misuse of citizenship court judges?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I would have to take cognizance of the document itself. If the Hon. Member would be patient, I will look into it.

NUCLEAR ARMAMENTS

TESTING OF CRUISE MISSILE—CANADA-UNITED STATES AGREEMENT

Mr. Doug Anguish (The Battlefords-Meadow Lake): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Recently the Secretary of State for External Affairs said that the umbrella agreement between the United States and Canada had been concluded, or tentatively agreed upon. In the absence of the Secretary of State for External Affairs, could the Prime Minister tell us what are the details of the umbrella agreement, including the Cruise missile, if any, and when he expects the final signing of the agreement?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I am afraid that I will have to take notice of the question on behalf of the Minister. I do not know of any date.

REQUEST THAT AGREEMENT BE DEBATED IN PARLIAMENT

Mr. Doug Anguish (The Battlefords-Meadow Lake): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister as well. In the United States matters of this importance are usually discussed by the House of Representatives. Just recently the MX program was turned down there because of financial implications and the concern about nuclear arms. Will the Prime Minister assure us that there will be some debate in this House on the whole umbrella agreement, specifically on the use of the Cruise missile over Canadian territory, before the agreement is finally signed, so that we can voice the concerns of our constituents who have been writing to us about the Cruise missile question?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I agree with the Hon. Member that the question is extraordinarily important. I hope the New Democratic Party would view it as important enough to give perhaps one of its opposition days to debate the subject.

ENERGY

MEETINGS BETWEEN FEDERAL AND NEWFOUNDLAND MINISTERS

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. The Minister met in St. John's yesterday with his Newfoundland counterpart. Can he tell us whether, arising out of that meeting, we can expect a resumption of formal negotiations on the offshore? Can we also expect a degree of flexibility from the Minister which hopefully could lead to a settlement?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I had meetings last Friday in Montreal and this Monday in St. John's. We explored new avenues which could lead to a resolution of this problem. I guess the fact that we have had two meetings is a good sign. I am well known for my flexibility, but at the same time I have to protect the interests of the Canadian Government.

JOINT MANAGEMENT AND REVENUE SHARING PROPOSAL

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, could the Minister be more specific and tell us whether or not he is prepared to deal with the Newfoundland compromise proposal on joint management and revenue sharing?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, we have explored new avenues, and Mr. Marshall and myself have agreed that our two governments should not necessarily maintain their previous positions and that they should try to seek new alternatives. That is exactly what we are trying to do at this time.

HOUSING

COMMITMENT TO NON-PROFIT AND SOCIAL HOUSING IN ONTARIO

Hon. David Crombie (Rosedale): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for housing. Yesterday I had the opportunity to ask the Minister of State for Finance whether or not the reports that social housing, co-op housing and non-profit housing had been reduced by over 600 units in the Province of Ontario were correct. He indicated that he could not confirm that figure but found it surprising and shocking. Could the Minister confirm the figure today?

• (1500)

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I heard the exchange. In fact my colleague dealt with the Hon. Member very effectively. The reality is that the social housing budget has been consistent since 1979, with some variations, but over all the statistics would show that the average has been very well respected. In fact, it has been more than respected.

The Province of Ontario, in the area of social housing, has benefited from 30 per cent to 38 per cent over the same period. It, too, has been dealt with very fairly. In the debate taking place, I think probably caused by some statement by the Minister of Housing for Ontario, the point was not made that the allocation of municipal non-profit housing units, 75 per cent paid by the federal Government, is at the total discretion of the Minister of Housing for Ontario.

REDUCTION OF PROJECTS IN TORONTO

Hon. David Crombie (Rosedale): Madam Speaker, the figures that are in the hands not only of the Province of Ontario but of the City of Toronto and of metropolitan Toronto are that in 1982 the allocation from the federal Government was 7,418 and the allocation for 1983 is 6,688. Those are the actual figures with which they are working. The city has now taken an action to reduce five projects, all co-op and social housing, including those dealing with handicapped and disturbed children. Would the Minister check with his own officials and confirm those facts? Right now those projects are being halted as a result of the information which they have from officials in CMHC. Would the Minister check those facts and get in touch with the city?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, not only will I check those alleged facts but I can inform the Hon. Member that the 1983 budget has not been finalized.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. NIELSEN—PROPOSED TIME ALLOCATION ON BILL C-85

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Last night, as recorded at page 21551 of Hansard, there will be found in the right-hand column the heading: "Business of the House—Time Allocation for Report Stage and Third Reading of Bill C-85". This statement by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) then follows:

Mr. Speaker, I wish to inform the House that there has been consultation among the representatives of the Parties and that it has not been possible to reach an agreement pursuant to Standing Order 75A or 75B with regard to the allocation of time on report stage and third reading stage of Bill C-85, an Act to establish a corporation called Canagrex to promote, facilitate and engage in the export of agricultural and food products from Canada. Therefore, at the next sitting of the House I shall propose a motion pursuant to Standing Order 75C to allocate one sitting day to each of the said stages of the said Bill.

As you know, Madam Speaker, I was unavoidably absent from the House when the Minister of Agriculture made that statement during debate on Bill C-139, an Act to amend the Income Tax Act. Upon being informed of the statement, at 9:55 p.m., as recorded at page 21556 of Hansard for December 13, 1982, I said, among other things:

I want to note, Mr. Speaker, that ordinarily this—

"This" referred to the Minister's remarks. My sentence continued:

—would trigger a debate tomorrow before Government Orders for two hours. I want to serve notice now that we do not accept the propriety of the procedure adopted by the Minister in giving that notice tonight. We do not accept the notice.

To support my submission which I will be making to you that that notice was out of order, I want to review some of the precedents with respect to the notices given since the implementation of new Standing Order 75C.

On December 1, 1971, at page 10046 of Hansard, the then President of Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen), under the heading "Business of the House—Notice of Time Allocation Motion for Committee of the Whole Stage on Income Tax Bill", gave notice with respect to the Bill then under consideration, which was Bill C-259, that he would move pursuant to Standing Order 75C that four additional days be allotted to the Committee of the Whole stage of that Bill.

The next precedent I wish to draw to the Chair's attention is recorded in Hansard for Monday, December 13, 1971 at page 10383, where again the then President of Privy Council gave notice during Routine Proceedings, dealing with Business of the House, that he would be imposing Standing Order 75C limiting debate and stating his intention to move a motion which would limit the debate at the third reading stage of Bill C-259 to an additional three days.

The next precedent is to be found in Hansard for November 12, 1975 where the then President of Privy Council, the Hon. Mitchell Sharp, gave notice that he would be invoking Standing Order 75C with respect to Bill C-58. He stated:

—I shall move that not more than five additional hours shall be allotted to the consideration and disposal of proceedings at the said stage of the said Bill.

That notice was given during debate on Bill C-58.

The next precedent in Hansard is found at page 11639 for March 9, 1976 appearing under the heading in Hansard of "Routine Proceedings—Business of the House". The then President of Privy Council, the Hon. Mitchell Sharp, again invoked the provisions of Standing Order 75C with respect to Bill C-68. He said that he gave notice that at the next sitting of the House we would move that not more than five hours shall be allotted on that bill.

At page 12340 and 12341 for March 31, 1976, Mr. Sharp, the then President of Privy Council, rose during the debate on the Bill on a point of order and informed the House that he would be invoking the provisions of Standing Order 75C with respect to Bill C-83, allocating a further four days for the consideration and disposal of second reading. Again, I point out that procedure took place during the debate on Bill C-83.

The next precedent is found in Hansard at page 2495 for January 28, 1977. Again under Routine Proceedings notice was given by the then Minister of Finance, the Hon. Donald S. Macdonald, invoking the provisions of Standing Order 75C with respect to Bill C-22 limiting Committee of the Whole stage consideration to an additional eight hours. Again, that action was taken under Routine Proceedings.

On February 8, 1977, at page 2830 of Hansard, again under Routine Proceedings, the then Minister of Finance, the Hon. Donald S. Macdonald, gave notice that he intended to move a motion limiting the proceedings at third reading stage and passage of Bill C-122 to one additional sitting day. Again, that action was taken by the then Minister under Routine Proceedings.

On March 28, 1977, at page 4377 of Hansard, again under Routine Proceedings, the then Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Cullen) gave notice under Standing Order 75C which affected Bill C-27 and informed the House that a motion would be made at the next sitting for the purpose of allocating five further hours to the second reading stage of Bill C-27. Again, that announcement was made under Routine Proceedings.

At page 1077 of Hansard for November 21, 1977, the then Minister of State for Multiculturalism, the Hon. Norman A. Cafik, gave a similar notice. It is recorded under Routine Proceedings, Business of the House for that day, and he gave notice that he intended to move a motion limiting the proceedings on second reading stage of Bill C-11 to five additional hours. Again, that action was taken during Routine Proceedings.

At page 1498 of Hansard for December 2, 1977, again under Routine Proceedings, the then Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) gave notice under the provisions of Standing Order 75C relating to Bill C-11, for study in Committee of the Whole, limiting that study to an additional three days. Again, that action was taken under Routine Proceedings.

On June 5, 1978, at page 6049 of Hansard, again under Routine Proceedings, Business of the House, the then Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) invoked the provisions of Standing Order 75C by giving notice that he intended to limit discussion on Bill C-56 at second reading to a further one additional day. Once again, that action was taken during Routine Proceedings.

Then on June 12, 1978, at page 6298 of Hansard, the then Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien), under Business of the House, invoked the provisions of Standing Order 75C restricting further discussion of Bill C-56 at the Committee of the Whole stage to a further two additional days. Again, this was done while that legislation was under discussion and on Routine Proceedings.

At page 458 of Hansard of October 25, 1978, again during Routine Proceedings, dealing with the Business of the House, the then Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) invoked the provisions of Standing Order 75C on Bill C-7 and gave notice that he would be moving to restrict consideration at second reading to one further sitting day. Again, that action was taken under Routine Proceedings.

At page 2262 of Hansard for December 19, 1978, again under Routine Proceedings, the Hon. Member for Lambton-Sarnia (Mr. Cullen) invoked the provisions of Standing Order 75C informing the House that he would be moving a motion limiting debate to one additional day on each of the stages of report and third reading of Bill C-14. Again, this was under Routine Proceedings.

In Hansard for March 17, 1979, at page 4281, again under Routine Proceedings, the then Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and Minister of State for Science and Technology, the Hon. Alastair Gillespie, invoked the provisions of Standing Order 75C to limit discussion on Bill C-42 to one additional day for each of the report and third reading stages of that legislation. Again, the action was taken under Routine Proceedings.

At page 2040 of Hansard for December 5, 1979, again under Routine Proceedings, my colleague for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) gave notice under Standing Order 75C to limit discussion on Bill C-20, to amend the Income Tax Act and to provide a tax credit with regard to mortgage interest and home owner property taxes, to one further sitting day. Again, that action was taken under Routine Proceedings.

At page 1840 of Hansard for June 6, 1980, again under Routine Proceedings, Business of the House, the present Government House Leader (Mr. Pinard) gave notice of invoking the provisions of Standing Order 75C with respect to Bill C-30, informing the House that he intended to propose a motion allocating one additional sitting day to the second reading stage of that Bill. Again, that action was taken under Routine Proceedings.

In Hansard for January 12, 1981, the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) invoked the provisions of Standing Order 75C while Bill C-48 was under discussion, notifying the House that he intended to propose a motion that would limit the debate on second reading stage of that Bill then under discussion to one further day.

At page 7147 of Hansard for February 11, 1981, the Government House Leader and President of the Privy Council during debate on Bill C-59 indicated that he was giving notice under Standing Order 75C to allocate one additional day for second reading stage of Bill C-59 which was then under discussion and in which the Minister was participating in the debate.

At page 8614 of Hansard for March 25, 1981, the Minister of State for Finance, during the debate on the measure, invoked the provisions of Standing Order 75C to limit the report and third reading stages of Bill C-59 to one sitting day for each of the stages of the Bill then under discussion and being debated.

At page 10373 of Hansard for June 8, 1981—and this is one exception—the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Bussières) gave notice, immediately following the dinner recess, under the provisions of Standing Order 75C, to limit the report and third reading stage of Bill C-57 to one sitting day for each of those stages. In that precedent, the Chair will note that under discussion at that time was a national energy measure, and that immediately following the dinner recess at 8 p.m. the Minister of State for Finance rose on a point of order. The record does not disclose whether any consent was sought or given. Mr. Deputy Speaker in the chair at the time simply recognized the Minister of State for Finance on a point of order and it was that vehicle which he utilized to give that notice. I do point out, in passing, and I will come back to it in a moment, that no consent was sought.

At page 13734 of Hansard for December 4, 1981, the Minister of Energy (Mr. Lalonde), as he then was, during Routine Proceedings, under Business of the House invoked the provisions of Standing Order 75C with respect to the proceedings on Bill C-48, giving notice that he intended to move a motion that one sitting day be allocated to the third reading stage of that Bill. That action was taken again under Routine Proceedings.

At page 15348 of Hansard on February 24, 1982, the then Minister of Public Works (Mr. Cosgrove), under Business of the House during Routine Proceedings, invoked the provisions of Standing Order 75C stating that he intended to move a motion which would limit debate at the second reading stage of Bill C-89 to one additional sitting day.

On July 14, 1982, at page 19327 of Hansard, again under Routine Proceedings, Business of the House, the then President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Johnston) invoked the provisions of Standing Order 75C, stating that he intended to move a motion to limit discussion on Bill C-124 at the second reading stage of that measure to one further sitting day.

On July 21, 1982, at page 19556 of Hansard, again under Routine Proceedings, Business of the House, the then Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Bussières) invoked the provisions of Standing Order 75C, stating that he intended to propose a motion to allocate two additional sitting days to the second reading stage of Bill C-125.

Now another significant precedent, Madam Speaker. On July 27, 1982, at page 19756 of Hansard, the Government House Leader (Mr. Pinard) invoked the provisions of Standing Order 75C during which he notified the House that he would be moving a motion allocating one additional sitting day to the second reading stage. In any event, the precedent is significant enough to read it in full. Under the heading, "Business of the House, Disposition of Bill C-124", I draw again to the attention of the Chair that when this action was taken the business under discussion was a Bill concerned with UFFI. The Government House Leader took his action immediately following the dinner recess, and this is what is recorded in the exchange:

MR. PINARD: Mr. Speaker, I have had consultations with the House leaders, and I think I know what the hon. member wants. Perhaps he will be satisfied once I have disposed of the following.

This is the significant part, Madam Speaker:

At this time I would like to have unanimous consent to tell the House the result of those talks.

MR. DEPUTY SPEAKER: Is there unanimous consent for the minister to make a statement at this point?

SOME HON. MEMBERS: Agreed.

MR. PINARD: First of all, I wish to inform the House that notwithstanding consultations which took place—

Thereafter followed the usual wording of the invocation of Standing Order 75C, during which he informed the House that he would be moving a motion to limit further discussion on Bill C-124 to one additional day on the said stage of the said Bill. I am presuming that is the second reading stage.

The significant thing is that the debate was recommenced immediately following the dinner recess by a request from the Government House Leader for consent of the House to invoke the provisions of Standing Order 75C.

On July 31, 1982, at page 19874 of Hansard the then President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Johnston), during a debate on Bill C-124, said this:

I also take this opportunity to inform the House that there have been consultations among the representatives of the parties and that it has not been possible to reach any agreement under the provisions at the report stage and third reading stage of Bill C-124, an Act respecting compensation in the public sector of Canada.

Then there is an interjection by the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans), and Mr. Johnston went on:

Therefore, I wish to give notice, Mr. Speaker, that at the next sitting of the House I shall propose a motion, pursuant to Standing Order 75C, to allocate one sitting day to each of the said stages of the said bill.

I point out, Madam Speaker, that the Minister took that action during debate of the very measure that was concerned with his notice under Standing Order 75C.

On December 1, 1982—and the Chair will be happy to learn that this is my last Hansard precedent—at page 21172, again under Routine Proceedings under the heading of Business of the House, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) invoked the provisions of Standing Order 75C, saying that she intended to propose a motion pursuant to that Standing Order to allocate one further sitting day to the second reading stage of Bill C-131. The Chair will recall that that measure was then called later on as the Order of the Day.

Those precedents all having been set on the record, Madam Speaker—my research has been fairly exhaustive; there may be other precedents but I certainly have not found them—it would appear that this summarization can be made of the precedents which I have put on the record.

The first point that can be made is that notice under Standing Order 75C was given during Routine Proceedings in all cases with the following exceptions. There are five exceptions with respect to the giving of notice not during Routine Proceedings, and those five exceptions concern notices all of which were given during debate on the measure under discussion, the measure being the subject matter of the notice being given under 75C. Those occasions were November 12, 1975; January 12, 1981; February 11, 1981; March 25, 1981; and July 30, 1982. In those five instances, as I say, the provisions of Standing Order 75C were invoked while the measure intending to be affected by the notice was then under discussion. It was then under consideration, to use the words of the Standing Order, which I will get to in a moment.

The second point that can be made concerns the one instance on March 21, 1976 when the notice was given by virtue of a point of order during the debate on the Bill concerned. In my submission, that really is not an exception and it need not have been done on a point of order. It certainly could have been given, as the precedents so clearly point out.

The third point I wish to make is that the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) sought the unanimous consent of the House during debate on another Bill not the subject matter of 75C. That was on July 27, 1982. I have already cited that precedent before the Chair. The point is that unanimous consent was sought and given.

The last remaining point, the fourth point, is that on June 8, 1981 notice was given on a point of order during an allotted day. That precedent, if the Chair will examine it, will disclose that that point of order was raised by the Minister giving the notice immediately there was a quorum after the dinner recess. There is nothing wrong with that if the Standing Orders had been complied with. I point out with respect, and with no reflection on the action of the Speaker who was present at the time—I do not know who it was—that it was up to the Chair at that time to seek the consent that was necessary, as the Government House Leader displayed on the occasion of July 27, 1982. That consent was not sought.

It might be said that now that record is part of Hansard it constitutes some kind of precedent as to the manner in which notice must be given under 75C. I suggest to the Chair that simply because no objection was raised at that moment to that notice on that Bill, it does not establish that event as a precedent for all time to be taken into consideration in reaching a decision as to whether 75C has been properly invoked. My submission is that it was done the wrong way and that consent should have been sought.

It is of singular importance to note that in all cases, apart from that one aberration, since that Standing Order has been utilized in this place—and I believe it came into force in 1969—notice under 75C has either been given during Routine Proceedings or during the discussion of the measure which the notice intended to affect. That was not done in this case.

Last night we were discussing Bill C-139, an Act to amend the Income Tax Act. In my submission, based on those precedents, that notice was wrongly given and is a nullity. Let us just reflect for a moment on the wording of 75C:

> A Minister of the Crown who from his place in the House at a previous sitting has stated that an agreement could not be reached under the provisions of Standing Order 75A or 75B—

There is nothing wrong at all so far. It is the next words that are important:

> —in respect of proceedings at the stage at which a public bill was then under consideration—

My submission is that Bill C-85 had to be then under consideration in order to allow the Minister to invoke the provisions of Standing Order 75C.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: That is in those cases where the notice is not given during Routine Proceedings, which I submit would be the proper place for it to be given.

That essentially is my submission to the Chair. I believe that the notice is a nullity. We cannot proceed with the triggered debate for two hours today unless the Government now wishes to call Bill C-85. If it calls C-85, then certainly it can give the notice; but it cannot give it during debate on a matter which is not the subject matter of the notice.

Those are my submissions. I tried to give the Chair as much notice as possible last night because I realized this matter required an immediate decision of the Chair.

I further submit to the Chair, on the basis of the literal raft of precedents, that the Chair really is compelled to come to the conclusion that either the notice should have been given under Routine Proceedings, which could have been done quite easily by any Minister of the Crown giving notice yesterday during Routine Proceedings, or during a discussion of C-85. There may be other ways. However, what happened last night is certainly not one of them.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, I will be brief in dealing with this point. I want to say that the Hon. Member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) has made a submission both lengthy and elaborate, obviously well researched and supportable.

I want to say that to give notice of 75C in the middle of another debate is quite unacceptable. If it were not for the way that Hansard does its work, it would be entirely possible for Members of the House of Commons not to be made aware that 75C had been announced by the Minister during the course of the debate last evening. That is crucial. Surely Members are not required to read every word uttered by every Minister every day in order to determine whether at some point in time some Minister rose to give notice of 75C. They have reason to expect that the notice will be given in the usual way at the usual time.

I urge you, Madam Speaker, to read page 21551 of Hansard. The Minister did not at the beginning of his speech, almost the entire content of which was out of order, bring to the attention of the House, either by way of a point of order or in any other obvious way, that it was his intention to notify the House that 75C was to be used.

The Minister went on for a number of pages during the course of his deliberations, starting at page 21549. It was not until page 21551, in the middle of his speech, that he was giving notice of the use of 75C. I make the point that Hansard need not have put a heading in the speech "Business of the House". Hansard need not have done that; but had Hansard not done that, then the notice which the Minister gave last night would have been buried in the middle of a speech on another piece of legislation and would have excaped the notice of the majority of the Members of the House of Commons. If for no other reason than that, the notice was not properly given.

I want to say further that all of the precedents given by the Hon. Member for Yukon are valid. This is not the way the Government has normally gone about giving notice to the House of Commons. This is not an acceptable way for the Members of the House of Commons to be given notice. I suspect that it probably was intended that he give notice at eight o'clock, but perhaps he was not here; or maybe it was intended that he give it during the Routine Proceedings earlier in the day, but perhaps he was not here. I do not know about that. I am surmising that may have been the case.

• (1540)

Mr. Nielsen: Any Minister could have done it.

Mr. Deans: It is true, any Minister could have done it. But I ask you in the interest of fairness, Madam Speaker, to rule that this way is unacceptable, that there is no precedent for it, and that because there is no precedent for it, it is unacceptable. But even more important than that, we must establish here and now that you cannot slip in notice during the middle of a debate on an entirely different matter.

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills): Madam Speaker, I wish to present an argument to you based on the broader aspect of parliamentary reform and procedure. As you know, there is a special parliamentary committee sitting which is designed to make this place more operable for Members of Parliament so that we can go back to our ridings and report on what is happening.

We have 282 Members of Parliament, soon to be 310 if the law is not changed, and there are a million different rules and procedures. We have come to rely on the fact that we are going to meet at two o'clock, and everyone will be here before we spread out over 20 committees and the special task forces. We have come to expect that during that time the Government will provide its notices. Indeed, if you look under "Routine Proceedings" on the Order Paper, there is a special heading entitled "Government Notices of Motions". That is a period when Government Members can stand and give notice of motions which they are going to present, and all of the precedents submitted by the Hon. Member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) show that, with the exception of five occasions when the House was actually involved in the debate on the Bill regarding which they gave notice. That is a reasonable exception because the people in the House at that time were involved with that very Bill. Therefore, they are the people who are interested.

Last night on the income tax Bill, if the Standing Committee on Agriculture had been sitting and all Hon. Members of this House who are interested in agriculture were off on another part of the Hill, the fact that the Minister stands up and gives notice on a Bill dealing with agriculture which affects 300,000 people directly in this land just will not wash, Madam Speaker. I submit to you, on that broad principle, that you have to find that the notice given by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) last night, slipped into a tax Bill, is not sufficient.

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, I do not think it will take me as long to make my argument as it took the Hon. Member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen), because I think our case is much stronger and speaks for itself. The proposition which the Hon. Member for Yukon has basically put forward, Madam Speaker, is that either notice has to be given under Routine Proceedings or during consideration of a Bill which is then under debate.

To clear that up we have to look, first of all, at the Standing Orders, Standing Order 75C. The Hon. Member read it but I suggest he did not go quite far enough. That Standing Order reads:

A Minister of the Crown who from his place in the House at a previous sitting has stated that an agreement could not be reached under the provisions of Standing Order 75A or 75B—

Did that happen? Yes, that happened. So far so good.

—in respect of proceedings at the stage at which a public bill was then under consideration—

I believe the many precedents to which the Hon. Member for Yukon referred in which this was done under Routine Proceedings destroys his own argument that it can only be done when the Bill in question is under debate. If you are interpreting it in the way he is suggesting, Madam Speaker, it would clearly suggest that to do it under Routine Proceedings would be some other way which is not specifically referred to here. I suggest that that is not the way it is meant to be interpreted.

It is abundantly clear that that is not the way it is to be interpreted if you, as Mackenzie King used to say, "read on, read on", because my hon. friend from Yukon stopped after the word "consideration". And what does it go on to say?

Mr. Nielsen: I don't have a crystal ball.

Mr. Smith: After the word "consideration" it says:

—either in the House or in any committee—

What does that phrase "or in any committee" mean?

An Hon. Member: It certainly does not mean last night.

Mr. Smith: It certainly would not suggest that the Bill had to be under debate in the House, because how could you apply Standing Order 75C to something which was going on in committee if you could only do it when the debate was going on in the House? Clearly, what that means is that the Bill is at a stage in which it can be called, it has been called for report stage, it has been dealt with at report stage, and it is a proper matter to be called at any point. I suggest, Madam Speaker, that that is the proper interpretation of what that Standing Order means.

I think it is quite clear that it does not mean it can only be done if the Bill in question is under debate, or all of those examples to which the Hon. Member for the Yukon referred where it was done under Votes and Proceedings, would be out of order. And how do you explain the phrase "in any committee", if that is what it means?

I think we can also look at precedents, and I thank the Hon. Member for Yukon for the very exhaustive number of precedents to which he referred where this was done under Vote and Proceedings. That is, of course, in my opinion, an appropriate occasion for it to be done, but certainly not the only occasion.

Mr. Nielsen: You mean Routine Proceedings.

Mr. Smith: I think if you go back to the first time it was used, as a matter of fact on December 1, 1971, it was done under Votes and Proceedings.

Mr. Nielsen: Routine Proceedings.

Mr. Smith: Routine Proceedings, yes. Clearly, the Bill had not been called at that point. So I suggest that it clearly does not mean that it can only be done when the Bill itself is under debate.

There have been a number of other occasions on which it has been done in some manner other than on Routine Proceedings, and I would refer you, Madam Speaker, to November 12, 1975 and January 12, 1981. It was not done then during Routine Proceedings. My hon. friend referred to it being done on an allotted day. I believe there are two precedents on which it was done on an allotted day, March 25, 1981 and also June 8, 1981. In the latter case, it was done on a point of order.

My hon. friend has referred to the occasion when consent was asked by the Government House Leader, but I suggest to him that the reason consent was asked was that he did not have the floor. It was not that it was necessary to get the consent of the House to give notice, but he needed the consent of the House to in fact get the floor. I think a careful reading of what occurred there will make that point quite clear.

I think we can then, if we are still in any doubt, go to Beauchesne at page 224 of the Fifth Edition, Citation 732, which states, and I quote:

> Whenever a Minister of the Crown—

That is the word that is used. It says, "Whenever". It does not say, "During Routine Proceedings". It does not say "During the debate on the Bill in question". It says "Whenever". That is the Citation used in Beauchesne. It reads as follows:

> Whenever a Minister of the Crown has given notice under S.O. 75C that he will propose a motion for the purpose of allocating a specified number of days or hours for the consideration of a stage of a bill, this notice must be accepted by the Speaker.

It refers also to a citation from Journals of December 1, 1971.

With regard to the point made by my hon. friend, the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans), which somehow suggested that unless a person read Hansard very carefully, something could be snuck in, it is quite true that Government business was not called as an item. That is something which is done in the minds of the Editors of Hansard, but it is not something which occurs in fact, or at least in that particular instance.

I would simply like to introduce to some Members opposite another Journal which is put out by the House called Votes and Proceedings. It would appear that some Hon. Members on the other side of the House do not read Votes and Proceedings as carefully as they should, because if they refer to Votes and Proceedings for yesterday, they will see very clearly in the fourth paragraph that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) did in fact give notice. I suggest, therefore, if a person reads the Journals properly and looks at Votes and Proceedings, that that really is not a very strong argument.

Finally, I suppose the bottom line is what is going on here in terms of the public. I think some people might get the impression that the axe has fallen, that the Government is trying to choke off debate and ram something through. Nothing could be further from the truth, Madam Speaker. What is clearly happening is that the Official Opposition in particular is trying to frustrate the will of Parliament by a deliberate filibuster.

• (1550)

The Bill was first introduced on December 8, 1981. Since then 86 hours and 35 minutes have been spent in discussion of this Bill in the House and in committee. I could give the exact dates and the details at great length if that were in question, Madam Speaker.

An Hon. Member: Go ahead!

Mr. Smith: Anyone who wants to do the mathematics on it can do so. I have been invited to do that and perhaps I shall, if you think it is appropriate, Madam Speaker.

Second reading began on January 25, 1982 and was completed on February 5, 1982, taking five sitting days, 12 hours and 50 minutes. It then went to committee on March 23, 1982.

An Hon. Member: That was to hear evidence.

Mr. Smith: It was completed on July 15, 1982. It was reported on July 19, 1982. Twenty-seven meetings were held on this measure for a total of 71 hours and 45 minutes.

Hon. Members opposite are now suggesting that the Government is strangling and choking off debate when 27 meetings of the committee at which this matter was discussed were held.

An Hon. Member: That is not relevant.

Mr. Smith: Report stage began on July 29, 1982, and two hours have been spent on that stage. The total time spent on the Bill has been 86 hours and 35 minutes.

Mr. Blenkarn: That is not so.

Mr. Smith: What is really happening is that the Government is assuming its responsibility for leadership and is saying: "We are not going to allow the Opposition to filibuster this Bill and prevent the democratically elected Members of the House from coming to a vote". Hon. Members opposite can vote against the Bill, but we should make a decision and get on with it, one way or the other. The Government is living up to its responsibilities and is showing leadership in a proper and acceptable way, according to the Standing Orders.

Mr. Taylor: It is dictatorship.

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Madam Speaker, my remarks will not take long but I wish to address one point that has not been raised and which I think is relevant. Speaking of relevance, the final remarks of the assistant House leader of the Government are certainly in violation of Standing Order 34(2) which provides that when a Member is speaking to a point of order the argument should be relevant. The Hon. Member spoke of the number of hours the committee spent listening to witnesses regarding Canagrex. That can hardly be called relevant to the question that is being debated.

Point of Order—Mr. Nielsen

The Hon. Member referred to Citation 732 in Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, giving great emphasis to the word "whenever". The Citation begins, "Whenever a Minister of the Crown has given notice". There is no doubt about that, Madam Speaker. Whenever proper notice has been given under Standing Order 75C, it is the obligation of the Chair to accept that notice. The arguments presented by the House Leader of this Party and the House Leader of the New Democratic Party show that notice was improperly given.

I should like to offer another reason why the attempt by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) to give notice last night was out of order. I refer to the question or relevance of speeches and relevance of subject matter raised on motions before the House. There are generally accepted rules of relevance, albeit not rigidly enforced as a certain amount of latitude is allowed. Certainly in the middle of debate on an income tax Bill one cannot speak of capital punishment or in the middle of discussion of an energy Bill speak about fisheries, and so on. There has to be some sort of relationship between speeches and the motion before the House.

I should like to quote briefly from Bourinot's Parliamentary Procedure and Practice, Fourth Edition. At page 340 there appears the following statement:

> But it is nevertheless the duty of the speaker of the house (or chairman of committee), to interfere when he finds that the member's remarks are not relevant to the question before the house. On such occasions, he may very properly suppose "that the member will bring his observations to bear upon the motion before the house" (m); or "that he will conclude with something that will bring him within order" (n). And he may find it necessary to caution a member that "he is approaching the limits of propriety which confine hon. members is speaking to that which is relevant to the subject in hand", and to express the hope "that he will be careful to confine himself to that which is relevant" (o). In other words, he must direct his speech to the question before the house or committee, or to the motion or amendment he intends to move, or to the point of order raised.

On that basis, it is perfectly in order, during Routine Proceedings or discussion of the subject bill, for a Minister to give notice under Standing Order 75C. At any other time it is irrelevant to the motion under discussion. It is certainly irrelevant to the income tax Bill for the Minister to bootleg in what he assumed was proper notice under 75C. It most certainly was not proper notice under 75C. Perhaps he should have been called to order immediately and instructed to confine himself to the motion before the House, which was second reading of an income tax Bill.

The Minister's whole statement last night was irrelevant to the motion being discussed. It was irrelevant to the income tax Bill. It was irrelevant to the motion that Bill C-139 be now given second reading, and therefore it was improperly placed in the debate and should have been ruled out of order on the spot by the Speaker. It is a nullity now and we cannot accept it.

If the Minister wants to rise on Routine Proceedings and give notice, or if the House Leader wants to declare that Bill C-85 will be the subject of debate this afternoon and during the course of that debate give notice, such actions would certainly be relevant to the subject matter under debate. Otherwise it is irrelevant and a nullity.

I humbly submit that that argument, coupled with the argument of my House Leader and that of the House Leader of the New Democratic Party, must bring you, Madam Speaker, to the conclusion that the Minister of Agriculture will have to start over again.

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, I have one brief suggestion to make. My hon. friend from Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre) mentioned the solution. We are still on Routine Proceedings. I have made a very strong case in support of the right of any Minister of the Crown to give notice on Routine Proceedings. That is where it should be done and that option is open to the Minister now if he wants to rectify the matter.

Madam Speaker: I thank the Hon. Member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) for having given me sufficient notice of his point of order and a good idea of what his arguments would be in this case. I was able to look into the precedents in order to enlighten my decision.

The Hon. Member for Yukon has given us a very long list of precedents in favour of his argument that this notice of motion is out of order. Those precedents are real. I have found a number of precedents which go exactly another way, however. That is to say, they indicate that notices of motion to limit debate have been given at another time than those that the Hon. Member feels are indispensable. They were given at another time than under consideration of a certain bill.

I will not read the precedents at length but the first is a notice of motion to limit debate on Bill C-68 which was given in the House immediately after the dinner break, although not necessarily during the course of consideration of the Bill on which a limit was to be proposed. The Bill then before the House was Bill C-83 and the notice was given for limiting debate on Bill C-68.

In another instance, on Bill C-59 the notice of intention to limit debate on the measure was given at the end of a speech in a supply debate.

• (1600)

There is another precedent concerning Bill C-57, where notice was given immediately after the dinner break on a point of order, as the Hon. Member himself has pointed out.

A further precedent is Bill C-124 on which notice was given immediately after the dinner break. The business before the House then was Bill C-109 and notice of the intention to limit debate was on Bill C-124.

We rely quite heavily on precedents. I guess the Hon. Member was right in pointing out to me the numerous precedents which could be invoked in favour of his argument that notice to limit debate on a Bill must be given in the course of consideration of the very Bill. But these other precedents go the other way and indicate that notice of such motion can be given at other times. In fact, as we have seen from the precedents, the notice can be given during Routine Proceedings, during consideration of the Bill on which it is intended to limit debate, during debate on another Bill than the one on which the limit is proposed to be imposed, and also on a point of order, as the Hon. Member pointed out.

In looking at the long list of precedents which the Hon. Member gave me, one might think the Chair must absolutely find in favour of those arguments which he has given, but I think Hon. Members would agree that other precedents exist.

Now, why do we find ourselves in this situation? I believe the Hon. Member for Yukon was invoking precedents against an argument which does not exist in regard to this particular situation, as I think Members will realize on reading very carefully Standing Order 75C:

A Minister of the Crown who from his place in the House at a previous sitting—

Those are the two conditions which are imposed upon the notice to propose a limit on a debate. Those are the only conditions which are written up in the Standing Orders; that is to say, that the Minister must be in his place in the House, and that he must do this at a previous sitting. He stated at that previous sitting and standing in his place:

—that an agreement could not be reached under the provisions of Standing Order 75A or 75B in respect of proceedings at the stage at which a public bill was then under consideration either in the House or in any committee—

The Hon. Member for Yukon uses that as referring to the fact that notice is only in order if it is given during consideration of the Bill on which it is proposed to impose a limit. That particular phrase describes exactly what we want to do and does not constitute a condition under which that notice has to be given.

I will read it in French where I think it is a little more clear because of the French language which requires punctuation. In French it says:

Un ministre de la Couronne qui, de son siège à la Chambre, a déclaré à une séance antérieure qu'il n'avait pas été possible d'en arriver à un accord, en vertu des dispositions des articles 75A ou 75B du Règlement, relativement aux délibérations . . .

The punctuation indicates quite clearly to what the remainder of that sentence relates, that is to say:

. . . relativement aux délibérations à l'étape de l'étude d'un bill . . .

I am afraid that disposes of the argument made by the Hon. Member for Yukon. In reading the Standing Order it is quite clear that the phrase stated by the Hon. Member, that is to say, "at the stage at which a public bill was then under consideration", does not constitute a condition under which a notice of motion can be given.

I think the Hon. Member has probably destroyed his argument by telling the Chair that these notices had been given sometimes when a quorum was reached in the House, or on a point of order or during Routine Proceedings. It does indicate that notice can be given on many occasions and in many circumstances, not only in the unique circumstances which he has cared to mention, that is to say, only when we have under consideration the particular Bill on which the limit is to be imposed.

The Hon. Member is smiling, but I think he has to read the Standing Order very carefully, and I think he will agree with me that "A Minister of the Crown who from his place in the House" and "at a previous sitting has stated" are the conditions. I believe they were fulfilled in this particular case.

I thank other Members for their interventions, in particular the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans), who said that this procedure was unacceptable. It might be, but if Hon. Members find it unacceptable, I think they should proceed to change the rules because the Chair unfortunately cannot accept judgment values on the rules; the Speaker has to read the rules and interpret them as rigorously as possible. If it is not acceptable to the Hon. Member, I must tell him that it is in accordance with the rules.

The Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker) made an intervention with which I have a lot of sympathy. How can a Member know what is going on in the House all the time? Also the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain referred to that. Of course Hon. Members would not be required to read all of Hansard; that indeed could be too much punishment for them. But if they want to challenge something, obviously they have to read everything in Hansard which is relevant to the challenge they want to make.

The Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills would appreciate that there is a distinction between the notice given last night and the fact that the motion would come forward under "Motions" during the course of Routine Proceedings; therefore, Members would be in the House, if they chose to come only during Question Period, and they would be aware of the motion and, furthermore, they could debate it. The rules also provide for a fair chance of debating something if Hon. Members wish to do so.

As for the Hon. Member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre), I have to tell him that his argument on relevance was interesting. I agree with the Hon. Member that we should perhaps look at the rule of relevancy and apply it more often. It is an extremely difficult rule to invoke because Members are bound to say to the Chair: "Yes, I will be relevant; in two minutes the Chair will see how relevant I have been, despite the fact that what I am saying appears not to be relevant". The particular argument of relevance in this case, I am afraid, was not altogether relevant.

I have to rule that the notice of a motion to be made later this day by the Hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) was in order, and I so rule.

PRIVILEGE

MR. MAYER—DEPARTMENTAL PUBLICATION RESPECTING CANAGREX LEGISLATION

Mr. Charles Mayer (Portage-Marquette): Madam Speaker, I have what I believe is a serious question of privilege of which I have given you prior notice. I should like to outline it briefly before I attempt to amplify my case.

It involves the Department of Agriculture publishing a very extensive and elaborate defence of the Bill about which we are talking respecting Canagrex. I find that it interferes with my privileges as a Member of Parliament in the sense that the Government has used the full weight of its printing press and the Minister has used the weight of his Department to make a one-sided case for a Bill before it has in fact become the law of the land.

I should like to quote from a December 10, 1979, ruling of Mr. Speaker Jerome, as reported at page 2180 of Hansard, in which he said:

> The support of public funds, where applied to parliamentary activities, ought, I think, to apply across the floor of Parliament—

• (1610)

I submit, Madam Speaker, that parliamentary activities include the enabling of Members of Parliament to make their case properly for or against pieces of legislation that are in front of the House. When Speaker Jerome suggested that that ought to apply across the floor of the House, it implied to me that the Opposition ought to have access to the kinds of funds and expertise which the Minister had in preparing well over a 100-page document in both official languages in making what I consider a biased case for the Canagrex legislation. If I could go on for a minute—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. Yes, the Hon. Member can go on as long as he comes to the point and tells me immediately where he feels his privilege has been affected. He is now discussing something but it does not constitute a question of privilege as he has argued it now, or from what I gathered from his notice. If the Hon. Member does have a specific point of privilege, I would like him to announce it now so that I can follow his arguments. There is a difference between grievances and privilege and I am sure the Hon. Member is quite aware of that.

Mr. Mayer: Very briefly, Madam Speaker, I feel that what I am discussing here today is very similar to what has become known in our Party as the Neil report, which report was undertaken during the brief period of time when we were the Government. At that time a Member of Parliament conducted a study on behalf of the Government of the day. Speaker Jerome at that time ruled the report could not be used in the House. In fact, the Progressive Conservative Party of Canada ended up paying for the report.

I suggest that the Government should not be using its high offices to publish the type of report that is more suited to the kinds of activities done by research departments. I can give you some quotes from Speaker Jerome where he points out that those kinds of activities based on party policies, not on the law of the land, are much better financed by what we consider to be each party's very adequate research funds.

Madam Speaker: I know the case very well. Research was done by a caucus committee and the matter was ruled on by my predecessor. I know what subsequently happened. A department felt that the particular information would be useful to it and it was decided to reimburse the Conservative caucus for its research, which was then distributed widely to the country or to the Members. However, the fact that the Government tried to distribute certain material one way or the other is not a matter on which the Chair can rule. It does not enter into the zone of what can be considered privilege.

How has the Member's privilege been affected? The Hon. Member knows the definition of privilege and I would like him to address that very shortly in his arguments, because he is telling me about a case of which I am aware. I know what the ruling is and I think the Hon. Member understands what it means as well. I would like the Hon. Member to come to his point of privilege.

Mr. Mayer: Madam Speaker, basically I am asking you to uphold the principle that each Member in this House has the same opportunity as the next; equity among Members, if you will. The Minister of Agriculture, through the weight of his Department, is able to mount argument for a piece of legislation that is not in fact the law of the land, to which I happen to be opposed and to which many of the people whom I represent are opposed, and I consider my privileges, as a Member of the House as equal as the Minister, have been severely interfered with. The Minister of Agriculture, through the weight of his department, published a 140-page document. I, as an individual Member of Parliament, have no access whatsoever to the kinds of resources or facilities by which I could put out that kind of document. This interferes with the performance of my job as a Member of Parliament. On the other hand, the Minister of Agriculture has these resources and facilities available to him. Specifically, that is why I think my privileges have been interfered with.

If you agree with me and let me go on, Madam Speaker, I can cite some examples for you from past rulings. If you disagree with me, I would find it incomprehensible for you to suggest that an individual Member of Parliament, such as myself, cannot have access to the same research and production facilities as a Minister of the Crown, because it puts me at a great disadvantage to my constituents.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. That particular point does not come within the purview of privilege. It does not constitute a question of privilege. If that is the Hon. Member's point, which he is telling me now it is, then I must tell him that is not in the realm of the practice which would allow me to find a prima facie case of privilege. Government spending, the way money is spent, the way documentation is distributed and the way Goverment chooses to announce certain policies might grieve Hon. Members considerably. They might want to protest that and debate it, which is quite legitimate and I would allow that under the proper proceedings. But I cannot allow this to be done by way of raising a question of privilege.

Mr. Mayer: Madam Speaker, may I then ask you what are the proper proceedings through which I can raise this issue? Let me further ask you if you think by your ruling today—and I take it by implication that you are in favour of allowing a Minister of the Crown to propagandize my constituents in a fashion that I am not able to—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I never said that I found that legitimate. That is not my concern. I am telling the Hon. Member that the way in which the Government determines that it will publicize its policies, its instructions, its directives or its regulations is not of concern to the Chair. The freedom of expression of the Hon. Member has not been tampered with. He has not been molested. Privilege deals precisely with these kinds of things. I do not think that a publication published by the Government—which the Hon. Member, by the way, was able to consult, I suppose—constitutes a question of privilege. His freedom has not been tampered with. Perhaps he is saying that he has not had a fair chance. He is able to expose and discuss that in the House, but the Chair cannot arbitrate in these matters.

Mr. Mayer: With all due respect, Madam Speaker, to paraphrase or to quote you, you said that under the proper proceedings you would allow me to raise this issue. What are the proper proceedings?

Madam Speaker: I am willing to coach Hon. Members on the procedure which they can use in order to do whatever they want to do in the House, but not in the House. Perhaps the Hon. Member could discuss this with me in another place and I could indicate times and proceedings which are available to him; but I am sure he knows them very well.

Mr. Taylor: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. When a Government uses public money to advertise one side of a Bill before it becomes law—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. If the Hon. Member wants to raise a point of order, he may do that, but I have now ruled that the Hon. Member for Portage-Marquette does not have a question of privilege. As a matter of fact, the Hon. Member for Portage-Marquette has accepted my ruling. He asked me alternatively what proceedings could he use because he has accepted my argument.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I am speaking to the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) now. The Hon Member may not comment on my ruling. There was no question of privilege in the case of the Hon. Member for Portage-Marquette.

Mr. Taylor: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. What I am saying, if you will just hear me out, is that when a Government advertises one side of a Bill before it becomes law, then it is not fair—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. That is not a point of order. The Hon. Member is debating the question; he is not raising a point of order. This is not the time for debate. He can use many other occasions on which to debate that point, as he knows very well.

• (1620)

Mr. Mayer: Madam Speaker, you said that I accepted your ruling.

Madam Speaker: Is this a point of order?

Mr. Mayer: Yes, it is a point of order, Madam Speaker. You said that I accepted your ruling by implication. With great respect and deference to the Chair, I certainly accept your ruling on my point of privilege, but that does not mean that I accept the despicable conduct of the Minister of Agriculture in publishing this document.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

ALLOCATION OF TIME TO CONSIDER REPORT STAGE AND THIRD READING OF BILL C-85

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture) moved:

That, in relation to Bill C-85, an Act to establish a corporation called Canagrex to promote, facilitate and engage in the export of agricultural and food products from Canada, one sitting day shall be allotted to the consideration of each of the report stage and the third reading stage of the Bill; and

That fifteen minutes before the expiry of the time provided for Government business on those days, any proceedings before the House shall be interrupted, if required, for the purpose of this Order and, in turn, every question then necessary in order to dispose of the stage of the Bill then under consideration shall be put forthwith and successively without further debate or amendment.

Madam Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion? The Hon. Minister of Agriculture.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Friesen: A point of order, Madam Speaker.

Time Allocation

Madam Speaker: The Hon. Member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta (Mr. Friesen) on a point of order.

Mr. Friesen: Madam Speaker, I have a point of order concerning the statement that you have read in the name of the Minister. I listened to the Minister last night and I was prepared to raise a point of order on the content of his motion because I think it violates the Standing Order in question.

I heard him say last night that he intended to invoke Standing order 75C, and I quote, "to allocate one sitting day to each of the said stages of the said Bill". I wanted to wait until I heard the motion today to make sure that it was going to be the same as what the Minister presented last night.

In the interest of the accuracy of the Standing Orders, if Madam Speaker will refer to Standing Order 75C, she will note that the order reads:

—one sitting day and provided that for the purposes of this Standing Order an allocation may be proposed in one motion to cover the proceedings at both the report and the third reading stages on a bill if that motion is consistent with the provisions of Standing Order 75(13).

The language is very important here because the Standing Order reads:

—at both the report and the third reading stages—

The phrase "at both" discriminates between the two stages. If the motion had been intended to include both stages, it would have read "of both the report and third reading stages". The fact that the Standing Order reads "at both" indicates that this motion under Standing Order 75C must be presented at each of the two stages. Otherwise, it would have had an inclusive word, the preposition "of". Since it reads "at", it says very definitely that the Minister of the Government House Leader (Mr. Pinard) must present this motion at both stages.

I recognize that precedents indicate that historically it has been including both stages. I suggest to you, Madam Speaker, that even though it has been done in that way, the violations do not sanctify the condition. If the Minister wants to invoke Standing Order 75C, if we want to read this ruling accurately as it is presented in the Standing Orders, he must present 75C at each of the two stages.

Madam Speaker: As I read the Standing Order, I do not feel that the Hon. Member is right in his reading of it. The words "at both" in fact do not discriminate but mean that it is applicable to both those stages. If you read in French, it says:

. . . une seule motion peut prévoir l'attribution d'une préiode de temps pour les délibérations tant à l'étape du rapport . . .

If I translate literally—

. . . tant à l'étape du rapport qu'à celle de la troisième lecture . . .

"As much the report stage as the third reading", is exactly what it says in the French. Even in English, it is clear to me that "at both the report and third reading stage" of the Bill is not discriminating.

The argument made by the Hon. Member is that up until now that particular Standing Order has been violated. I suggest to the Hon. Member that it has not been violated but must be read the proper way. That is to say, that this particular phrase "at both the report and third reading stage" does not discriminate between the two stages of the bill but includes both of them.

At any rate, the Hon. Member may vote against the motion if he does not like its wording. I do not think he is reading the Standing Order properly and I cannot accept his point of order.

The Hon. Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. Andre: Madam Speaker, I am rising to speak on the motion you just called for the business of the day.

Madam Speaker: Does the Hon. Member have another point or order?

Mr. Andre: I am rising to speak on the item of business before the House.

Madam Speaker: I have recognized the Hon. Minister.

Mr. Nielsen: No.

Madam Speaker: Order. I had recognized the Hon. Minister when the Hon. Member rose on a point of order. Therefore, in my view I must go to the Hon. Minister.

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, I was following the proceedings quite carefully. I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis):

That the Hon. Member for Calgary Centre be now heard.

Madam Speaker: The Hon. Member for Restigouche (Mr. Harquail) is rising on a point or order.

Mr. Nielsen: That cannot be done.

Some Hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Harquail: Madam Speaker, in the interest of assisting the House and the Chair—

Mr. Nielsen: There is a motion on the floor.

Madam Speaker: Order. It appears that the Hon. Member for Restigouche wishes to speak on that particular point of order.

Mr. Nielsen: No. It is not debatable.

Mr. Harquail: That is incorrect.

Mr. Nielsen: Standing Order 29 is quite clear. The motion has to be put forthwith. It is not debatable.

Mr. Harquail: Madam Speaker, you have given me the floor.

Madam Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member cannot be debating the motion at the present time because I have not put it before the House. He is raising a point of order on the proceedings which are suggested by the Hon. Member. At the present time there is not a motion before the House.

Mr. Nielsen: The Chair must rule on it.

Madam Speaker: This does not call for a ruling.

Mr. Nielsen: Standing Order 29 applies.

Madam Speaker: The motion moved by the Hon. Member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) does not call for a ruling; it calls for a vote.

Mr. Nielsen: That is right, forthwith.

Madam Speaker: Could I ask the Table if I can entertain a point of order before a vote.

• (1630)

Mr. Smith: As I understand it, the Member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) moved his motion after he rose on a point of order, and I would refer you to page 78 of Beauchesne, Citation 234, which says that a Member cannot rise on a point of order to move a motion.

Some Hon. Members: No, no.

Mr. Smith: I submit his motion is therefore out of order.

Mr. Nielsen: I did not rise on a point of order. That is precisely why—

Madam Speaker: Order, please, I hope we can resolve this without creating chaos in the House. I understand that I can entertain points of order on the motion that was proposed by the Hon. Member for Yukon, and I will entertain the point of order for the Hon. Member for Restigouche.

Mr. Harquail: Madam Speaker, I want to thank you very much for giving me the opportunity to speak in this House. The Members to your left have been very belligerent in not wishing to show any respect for other Members' rights—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An Hon. Member: A point of privilege, Madam Speaker.

Mr. Harquail: Just a moment, I want to get to my point of order.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: Order, order. If the Hon. Member has a point of order, I would like him to expose the point of order forthwith.

Mr. Harquail: The point of order that I want to make, Madam Speaker, is the fact that you indeed had recognized the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan); you have indeed given him the floor.

Some Hon. Members: No, no.

Mr. Harquail: This is something that is trying to be glazed over, something that is trying to be railroaded in another direction. What I want to state for the benefit of the House is that I, as a Member sitting here, witnessed the fact that you had given the floor to the Minsiter of Agriculture, and I want to support this particular point—

Mr. Taylor: That is not a point of order.

Mr. Harquail: —to keep the record straight before the House. You had indeed recognized the Minister, and we were underway with his presentation when the Member from British Columbia asked for the floor.

Mr. Epp: I have a point of privilege.

Madam Speaker: We do have some business before the House that I have to deal with. Apparently two Members had risen—

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, I want to be heard on the point of order that you have entertained.

Madam Speaker: The Hon. Member for Yukon.

Mr. Epp: It is a point of privilege.

Mr. Nielsen: It has been asserted, Madam Speaker, by the candy-back kid, the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nielsen: —that it is not possible to move a motion under Standing Order 29 on a point of order. I did not do that and the record will clearly show that I did not do that. I put the motion, after having been recognized by the Chair, without any preliminaries. It will show that quite clearly.

Even if I did, the Hon. Member is wrong. Even if I did rise on a point of order, which I did not, and the record will clearly show that, he is wrong. I would like to cite for the convenience of the Chair Hansard for October 26, 1981, commencing at page 12170, where a similar situation arose when the then Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier) was in the chair. At that time he recognized the Hon. Member for Willowdale (Mr. Peterson). This is the exchange that took place:

Time Allocation

MR. NIELSEN: A point of order, Mr. Speaker. If government members speak now, they will have an opportunity of moving that we move to orders of the day. I therefore move that the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) be now heard.

SOME HON. MEMBERS: Hear, hear!

THE ACTING SPEAKER (MR. ETHIER): Order, please. The only time to move a motion such as that which the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) has just raised is when he has been recognized and given the floor. Had he been recognized and given the floor to participate in the debate, he could—

SOME HON. MEMBERS: No, no!

MR. BLENKARN: Not so!

THE ACTING SPEAKER (MR. ETHIER): Again, I must say that had he been recognized on a point of order, debating again whether there were two hon. members getting up to speak at the same time, and—

MR. BLENKARN: There were several.

MR. LAWRENCE: I stood up.

MR. MAYER: I stood.

THE ACTING SPEAKER (MR. ETHIER): Order, please. The Speaker, in the usual fashion, had been alternating. I saw the hon. member for Willowdale (Mr. Peterson) and I have recognized him. There could have been others seeking the floor whom I did not see; but at the time I alternated, as I do in all debates. The first hon. member to speak was from the official opposition, the second was a member from the NDP, and then we go to the other side. That has been done all the time. I did not choose between any hon. members. I recognized the hon. member for Willowdale, whom I saw rising. That now being the question, I will hear the hon. member for Yukon on his point of order.

MR. NIELSEN: I refer the Chair and his advisers to Hansard of December 11, 1975, at page 9938, where this precise question came up. After Mr. Allard had finished speaking, the then House leader for the opposition spoke. I draw Your Honour's attention to the fact that it was on a motion to concur in the report of a standing committee. Immediately after the mover had finished speaking, the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker) said this:

Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Under the Standing Orders of this House, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Hargrave):

"That the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe be now heard."

We don't want to hear him now.

MR. DEPUTY SPEAKER: The Hon. Member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker) has risen on a point of order under Standing Order 29—

That is my motion, under Standing Order 29.

—at page 24 of our Standing Orders, which reads as follows: "When two or more Members rise to speak"—

That was the situation here with the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) rising and the Member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre) rising.

Some Hon. Members: No, no.

Mr. Nielsen: Here is the Acting Speaker of the day listening with great interest to what I have to say. I continued at page 12170 as follows:

Then the hon. member for Nipissing (Mr. Blais), along with the hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Hargrave), intervened in the debate. Mr. Deputy Speaker, who was in the chair at that time, put the motion.

I suggest to you sir, that that is the obligation of the Chair now unless—I want to be fair because we all want to be fair on this side of the House—

And we still do, in this new spirit of collegiality and in the adoption of the experimental rules of reform.

—we can have the assurance of government members that their participation in the debate will be had without moving any motion—

And so on. The important part is this ruling by the then Acting Speaker. Madam Speaker, I know that you have the highest possible regard for the knowledge of the rules and practices and precedents of this place which resides in the Hon. Member who served in that very distinguished post of Acting Speaker and who is now with us today, I am sure, to give us the benefit of his advice once again, as he did on October 26, 1981. This is what he had to say at page 12170 of Hansard:

After referring to the Standing Orders, I want to correct something I said earlier. The hon. member for Yukon had the right to rise. I recognized the hon. member whom I saw rising, namely the hon. member for Willowdale.

I draw that to the Chair's attention. In that case the Chair recognized the Hon. Member for Willowdale, and went on to say:

It is very difficult for the Chair to argue. I am told other people were seeking the floor, and that could be debatable.

It certainly is not here.

When things such as this happen, the point made by the hon. member for Yukon is in order. The hon. member for Yukon has made a proposition. Nevertheless, I would have to put the motion before the House if anyone wants to be heard. There is a motion before the House that the hon. member for Vegreville be now heard.

Madam Speaker, I submit that there is no other way to invoke the provisions of Standing Order 29 except upon a point of order, but not to burden the Chair with that complication, I did not rise for that purpose. I was recognized without any preliminaries and moved the motion right off.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: I just want to summarize the situation. In my view, the Hon. Minister of Agriculture, who had risen when I read the motion to the House, had the floor. He was interrupted by another Member who invoked a point of order. Immediately after that point of order was heard, I felt I had to go back to the Hon. Minister of Agriculture in order again to give him the floor.

This is contested by the Hon. Member for Calgary Centre, whom I recognized supposedly on a point of order but who said he wanted to debate the motion. I feel that at that particular time the Hon. Minister of Agriculture had the floor, and therefore I wanted to recognize the Hon. Minister.

• (1640)

I now have a motion. This is contested by a Member of the House. The Hon. Member for Yukon rose quite properly under Standing Order 29 and proposed a motion, which I will now read and put to the House. It has been moved by Mr. Nielsen, seconded by Mr. Lewis:

That the Hon. Member for Calgary Centre be now heard.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Madam Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Madam Speaker: All those opposed to the motion will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Madam Speaker: In my opinion, the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Madam Speaker: Call in the Members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Nielsen), which was negatived on the following division:

Mr. Andre: Madam Speaker, on a point of order. I believe I heard the Clerk call out my name, and I wanted you to know that in view of the fact I am the subject of the motion I abstained from this vote.

Madam Speaker: The motion is lost. The Hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) has the floor—

Mr. Whelan: Madam Speaker—

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, Madam Speaker—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An Hon. Member: No way.

Madam Speaker: —and it now being ten o'clock, the House is adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Nielsen: I rise on a point of order. Point of order. You cannot, Madam Speaker, with great respect—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Time Allocation

Mr. Nielsen: With great respect—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member—I am not sure whether the Hon. Member rose before I adjourned the House—

Some Hon. Members: He did. He did.

Mr. Nielsen: Yes.

An Hon. Member: Yes, two of them did, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker: —but it seems from the protest—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An Hon. Member: No way.

Madam Speaker: Therefore, if the Hon.—

Mr. Nielsen: I cannot be heard until they turn the mike on.

Madam Speaker: Let us not get excited.

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker—

Madam Speaker: I did not see the Hon. Member rise before I adjourned the House.

Mr. Nielsen: Yes.

Madam Speaker: But apparently he had risen. Will the House allow me—

Some Hon. Members: No, no.

Madam Speaker: Then, the House is adjourned and I will hear the Hon. Member's point of order tomorrow.

At 10.08 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

MOTIONS UNDER S.O. 43

[English]

MEDICAL CARE

COLOUR CODING FOR MEDICAL GAS CONTAINERS

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Madam Speaker, I rise to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Whereas deaths caused by gas equipment mix-ups in hospitals are all too frequent, and whereas the Health Protection Branch and other agencies are already working diligently to reduce such deaths, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Grey-Simcoe (Mr. Mitges):

That this House favours a mandatory standard colour coding for all medical gas containers and supply lines.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

HUMAN RIGHTS

DEMAND THAT GOVERNMENT OF URUGUAY RELEASE IMPRISONED PROFESSOR

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Madam Speaker, I rise to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Professor Jose Luis Massera of Uruguay was seized and imprisoned for expressing political opinions. He has been tortured and held in terrible conditions in the Prison of Torture, Libertad, Uruguay. The conditions being suffered by Professor Massera are likely to lead to physical and mental illness, and possibly death, if his release does not occur immediately. Therefore I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie):

That the Canadian Government condemn the actions of the Uruguayan Government and demand the release of Professor Massera. These flagrant violations of human rights are in direct contravention of the Helsinki Accord, and steps must be taken to have Professor Massera released and to put an end to acts such as he has suffered.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

SUPPORT URGED FOR BILL C-85

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Dauphin (Mr. Lewycky):

That this House cease the impasse over Canagrex and revert to its initial assessment of the Bill which was highlighted by enthusiastic support from the House Leader for the Official Opposition at first reading on December 8, 1981, and further reinforced in the House through agreement in principle on second reading debate where Members of the Official Opposition from Elgin, Moose Jaw, and Provencher, to name a few, supported the legislation, including support for Canagrex's ability to buy and sell agricultural products.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

EXTERNAL AID

SUGGESTED PRODUCTION OF UNICEF PARLIAMENTARY CHRISTMAS CARDS

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Madam Speaker, I rise to move a motion similar to one I have moved twice before because I have an indication that it might receive unanimous consent today. Since more than 100 million human beings are born into the world each year, most of whom will live in conditions of sub-standard housing, will remain illiterate by United Nations standards, and four-fifths of whom will continually suffer from malnutrition, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Oxford (Mr. Halliday):

That the political parties of this Parliament, through consultation, consider the advisability of having the UNICEF organization produce special parliamentary Christmas cards so that Members and Senators may have an appropriate option of sending Christmas cards that depict scenes from Parliament Hill and, concurrent with their good wishes for the Christmas season, be able to assist the needy children of the world.

ENERGY

STATUS OF ARCTIC PILOT PROJECT

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. The $2 billion Arctic Pilot Project promoted by Petro-Canada promised new advances in shipbuilding and marine technology, industrial development for the Canadian East Coast, and access to a world market for Arctic gas. However, this vital project has been seriously delayed and is now stalled before the National Energy Board. Therefore I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Annapolis Valley-Hants (Mr. Nowlan):

That this House direct the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources to review the status of the Arctic Pilot Project and ensure that this vital ocean energy initiative is not drowning in the Government's sea of bureaucracy.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: No.

NUCLEAR ARMAMENTS

CALL FOR DEBATE ON CRUISE MISSILE TESTING

Mr. Sid Parker (Kootenay East-Revelstoke): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to ask for the unanimous consent of the House to deal with a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the fact that the Government would not permit a debate in the House of Commons on the testing of the Cruise missile in Canada, in spite of the fact that this weapon represents a dangerous new step forward in the arms race, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap):

That this House instruct the Government to provide for one day's House business in which this House can debate the testing of the Cruise missile on Canadian soil.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

THE ADMINISTRATION

EXPRESSION OF CONDEMNATION

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, whereas this Liberal Government is reneging on its agreement and changing the legislation regarding indexing of pensions for retired army personnel, retired RCMP and retired civil servants, which is shameful, while the Prime Minister and the Government refuse to investigate let alone cancel the permit given by the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Roberts) to friends in Banff which will desecrate a beautiful park, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Simcoe South (Mr. Stewart):

That this House condemns this callous Government which tries to kid the people by calling dictatorship leadership.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT REFUSE TO TEST CRUISE MISSILE FOR UNITED STATES

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Madam Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity, under the provisions of Standing Order 43.

In order to maintain our country's credibility as a defender of world peace, I move, seconded by the Member for Saskatoon East (Mr. Ogle):

That the Canadian Government turn down any requests by the U.S. Administration and President Ronald Reagan for testing their new cruise missile system here in Canada.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

MINES AND MINING

PROPOSED CENSURE OF MINISTER

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Madam Speaker, whereas the Minister of State for Mines (Mrs. Erola) has once again shown her lack of appreciation for the problems endured by the Canadian mining industry as revealed by her comments in New Brunswick yesterday where she said that the Government can do little to help the slumping mining industry, and whereas this continuing effort to put the blame for the depressed state of mining solely on world conditions completely ignores the effects of the federal Government's anti-investment policies and regressive tax measures, such as the proposal to tax the imputed rent of mining company employees, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson):

That this House censure the Minister of State for Mines for her callous disregard of the effects of her Government's retrograde tax measures and anti-investment policies upon the Canadian mining industry.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

NUCLEAR ARMAMENTS

CHURCHES' POSITION ON CRUISE MISSILE TESTING

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Yesterday the leaders of the major Christian Churches in Canada met with the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) to ask him, on behalf of millions of Church members, to refuse Cruise missile testing in Canada and the production of components of nuclear weapons in Canada. I therefore move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-St. James (Mr. Keeper):

That the Prime Minister now publicly respond to the request of millions of Canadians that the Church leaders presented to him yesterday.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

DEMAND THAT CRUISE MISSILE TESTING PLANS BE ABANDONED

Mr. Ted Miller (Nanaimo-Alberni): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Whereas Canadians voted overwhelmingly for balanced nuclear disarmament during referenda held coast-to-coast last month, and whereas citizens in the Vancouver Island communities of Port Alberni and Nanaimo voted 79 per cent and 82 per cent respectively in support of such resolutions, while students at Nanaimo's Malaspina College asked that their campus be declared a nuclear-free zone, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for New Westminster-Coquitlam (Miss Jewett):

That Parliament instruct the Government to abandon its plan to test the Cruise missile over Canadian soil and that the Government redirect its foreign policy toward policies that will promote international peace, and that Canada be declared a nuclear-free zone as well.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

CITIZENSHIP COURTS

REPORTED ALLEGATIONS BY MINISTER AGAINST JUDGES

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. The Minister of Labour has made very serious allegations against the Court of Canadian Citizenship. The Minister has alleged, among other things, that judges are expected to turn down a number of applicants as criteria for good performance, that there are clashes between the French and English speaking judges, and that there is a deliberate effort made to keep applicants from one ethnic group from being interviewed by a judge who comes from that same group. Does the Prime Minister agree that such allegations attack the integrity of the Court of Canadian Citizenship, and will he conduct a full investigation into the very serious allegations of the Minister of Labour?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I had not heard of these allegations, but I will take notice of the question, and look into the matter, as the Hon. Member suggests.

Mr. Lawrence: We knew we could count on you.

ALLEGATIONS WITH RESPECT TO APPLICATION OF RULES

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Is that while the Prime Minister is looking into the issue I raised yesterday?

Will the Prime Minister also look into the allegations of the Minister of Labour that there are rules and regulations currently being applied which do not bear any resemblance to the citizenship legislation? Will he ensure that political pressure by Members of the Liberal Party is not being brought to bear on the everyday operation of the Citizenship Courts and the judges who, as I pointed out yesterday, are being used by his Party on one hand and, on the other hand, are being attacked by a Member of his Cabinet?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, that hardly seems like a supplementary question, having looked into the matter raised by the Hon. Member yesterday, and I would not want to give the detailed response which could be given by the Minister today in the House.

However, it would seem to me that it is not a matter of using courts when one encourages Canadians to become citizens. That is the—

Mr. Nielsen: Ask Ouellet to look into it.

Mr. Trudeau: —policy of this Party, to encourage new Canadians to become citizens, and we are happy to be associated with it.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER APOLOGIZE

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Madam Speaker, my final supplementary question is also directed to the Prime Minister. Since Judge Alice McKeown, the then national co-ordinator of citizenship judges, upon learning of the allegations of the Minister of Labour which were made, by the way, in a letter to the then Secretary of State, said that the credibility of the Court of Canadian Citizenship had been seriously undermined, will the Prime Minister demand that the Minister of Labour publicly apologize to the Court of Canadian Citizenship judges?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, that is a return to the first question, and I said that I would take notice of it and look into the matter.

An Hon. Member: The same as you did yesterday.

Mr. Trudeau: I cannot say more on this day because I do not know what the statement was, the contents of the letter, and, indeed, I am surprised that a distinguished judge would use a Member of Parliament as a vehicle for his representations.

Mr. McDermid: It is a she.

Mr. Trudeau: If he has representations to make, I should think that he would proceed in another way than doing it in this open way.

INDEPENDENCE OF CITIZENSHIP COURT JUDGES

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. I have in my hand copies of the letters from the Minister of Labour to the Secretary of State which outline in specific detail a very serious castigation of the entire Citizenship Courts, a wide brush accusation of racism and of attempts to improve performance by the number of rejections. I am quite prepared to send these letters over to the Prime Minister. They were circulated to the so-called Met Pac group in his caucus a year ago. That is the Metropolitan Political Action Committee, I suppose.

In terms of principle, does the Prime Minister believe that the Citizenship Court judges should have independence in terms of political pressures being put on them by members of his Cabinet?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, of course I believe that independence should exist, but, not having seen the letter, I cannot begin to see the relationship between the question and the allegation of the letter.

Mr. Nielsen: The Minister should resign.

Mr. Trudeau: Just from the quotes of the letter I have heard, it would appear to me that a Member of this Cabinet, as it should be the duty of any Hon. Member of this House, would try to improve the citizenship process, and if he or she feels there is anything untoward in the process itself, then he or she should be awake enough, as are our Members, to draw it to the attention of the relevant people.

Mr. Nielsen: The Minister should resign.

ROLE OF JUDGES

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, again my question is directed to the Prime Minister. The Minister of Labour has, in effect, made a charge that the Citizenship Court judges are a bunch of incompetents. I do not know whether this has any relation to the method of appointment on the part of the Prime Minister and his Cabinet, being that most appointees are Liberal devotees or wives of former Cabinet Ministers.

• (1420)

I also have a copy of a letter from the Solicitor General to the Minister of Labour, in which he gives a legal opinion that, notwithstanding the fact that there is some role for the Citizenship Court judges to play, no attention has to be paid to those decisions because the Secretary of State has the right to decide on citizenship matters, absolutely, without reference to the Citizenship Court judges. I wonder if that is the policy of this Government, that the Citizenship Court judges have no role to play in the applications for citizenship.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I think the Hon. Member is using a kind of perverse logic. He accuses the Minister of having made a charge against the Court. From my understanding of the reading of the quotes, the Minister was complaining about certain aspects of the administration of the citizenship laws, and surely that is not the same as making a charge. The Hon. Member, in his own question, accused Citizenship Court judges as being a bunch of Liberal devotees. Is that a charge, Madam Speaker, or is that a smear, or is that a way of showing his respect for the Courts?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: It is a fact.

NUCLEAR ARMAMENTS

REQUEST FOR FREE VOTE ON ISSUE OF CRUISE MISSILE TESTING

Miss Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Yesterday in the House, the Prime Minister suggested that the NDP should use an opposition day to debate the Cruise missile question. I take it that by making that suggestion the Prime Minister would welcome such a debate and the ensuing vote. I would like therefore to ask the Prime Minister whether he would allow and welcome free expression of opinion and a free vote should the Cruise missile be debated, and not follow the example set the last time the NDP had an opposition day on the Cruise missile and related matters, on April 29, when the Government took all this as a want of confidence motion in the Government and therefore insisted that its Members could not be free, if they wished, to vote against the Cruise missile. Will the Prime Minister in other words, not use this issue as a confidence measure, but indeed allow a genuine free debate and free vote?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, on the first part of the question, indeed I would welcome such a debate. I believe the matter is extremely serious and I certainly share the Hon. Member's concern with the importance of this issue being aired in Canada, it being properly understood and the proper decisions being taken by Government, so on the question of a debate, I repeat that I would welcome the debate and I hope the NDP will follow up on that suggestion.

Insofar as the latter part of the question about a free vote is concerned, I think the Hon. Member is showing a slight misunderstanding of the rules. If it is an opposition day and there is a vote, under the rules that is a vote of non-confidence in the Government. Of course, I would not suggest that these Members should support the NDP in a vote of non-confidence in the Government of which they are Members.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT ALLOCATE DAY FOR DEBATE

Miss Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Madam Speaker, many of the Members on the other side, including the Minister of Employment and Immigration, would welcome a free vote.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss Jewett: I would like to remind the Prime Minister that there is not, in fact, an NDP opposition day left. The Prime Minister probably knew that at the time he made the suggestion. In view of that fact, plus the fact that he has to regard votes on opposition days as votes of want of confidence, that is all the more reason why he should take up the suggestion we have made time and time again, and indeed follow in the footsteps of his distinguished predecessor in 1958. At that time, the Liberals in opposition insisted on a parliamentary debate and vote in the House on the last most significant intergovernmental matter between Canada and the United States in defence, namely NORAD. Will the Prime Minister therefore, in view of all this, set aside a Government day, as the Liberals forced Mr. Diefenbaker to do then, for discussion, debate, and vote on the Cruise missile testing?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1425)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, for one part, I would remind the Hon. Member that between now and March 26 there will be seven opposition days. Therefore, it is possible for the New Democratic Party to use one of its days, if its members think the subject is so important, to debate this issue. I repeat, we on this side are happy to debate the subject. In so far as referring to experiences in previous Parliaments is concerned, I cannot say. I do know that under the rules as they stand now, if the Opposition uses one of its days to call a vote it is, by definition, a vote of non-confidence.

PROCEDURE ADOPTED IN 1958

Mr. Doug Anguish (The Battlefords-Meadow Lake): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. In June, 1958, the late Right Hon. Lester B. Pearson insisted that the Government of the day, under the Right Hon. John George Diefenbaker, set aside a Government day to discuss the very important question of the agreement between the United States and Canada, the NORAD Agreement. In fact the Leader of the Liberal Party at that time said it was normal procedure for matters of such importance to be debated and vote on in this House of Commons. Does that not fly in the face of what the Prime Minister is telling us now?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, repeatedly since I have been Prime Minister this Government has agreed to put government days aside so that we would debate issues of international concern. This is one example. I remember another example when one of the opposition parties put, forward one day and we put forward another government day so that there could be a two-day debate. This is something we certainly envisage if the House Leaders want to discuss the use of government time in such a way. I repeat, if there is no such discussion, the New Democratic Party, sensing the urgency of this, can certainly move a motion any time on one of its opposition days between now—

An Hon. Member: He said it was normal procedure.

Mr. Trudeau: Well, they are talking of the lack of days. Did they suddenly just discover today that this was an urgent and important matter? Our own Liberal Convention held early in November debated this subject very thoroughly and there was a vote at the end of that. If the Hon. Member wants to know how we voted, she can refer to that convention.

Mr. MacEachen: She might rejoin the Party.

GARRISON DIVERSION

IMPACT OF U.S. HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES VOTE

Mr. Jack Masters (Thunder Bay-Nipigon): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Could the Minister, who has been very involved in trying to stop the Garrison Diversion Project, inform the House of the impact for Canada of the vote in the U.S. House of Representatives last evening which, in effect, suspended funding for Garrison?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An Hon. Member: It has nothing to do with his responsibilities.

Madam Speaker: I am quite sure that is not under the purview of the Minister's administrative responsibility, having been in that Department which is responsible.

POLITICAL PARTIES

RECRUITMENT OF LIBERAL PARTY MEMBERS—USE OF CITIZENSHIP COURT JUDGES

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Secretary of State I will direct my question to the Prime Minister. It is pursuant to a question asked yesterday by the Hon. Member for Brampton-Georgetown. Yesterday the Prime Minister indicated that he would take notice of the question that was asked and that he would answer today. He knows that the Minister of State for Multiculturalism has already given his view on this matter when on "Canada A.M." today, in describing the use of Citizenship Court judges to recruit Liberals, he said "if that helps them think that the Liberal Party is a good Party that cares about them, I am pleased with that."

● (1430)

The document distributed by the Liberal Party at its Convention says very clearly that the purpose of the meetings using Citizenship Court judges is not only just to explain citizenship, but to "bring potential Members of the Liberal Party into contact with established Liberal associations". Will the Prime Minister indicate, Madam Speaker, whether that is a policy on the use of the judiciary which the Prime Minister of Canada supports?

Hon. Jim Fleming (Minister of State (Multiculturalism)): Madam Speaker—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Fleming: As I pointed out yesterday, if trade unions, church groups and others are encouraged to ask Citizenship Court judges to describe to groups they bring together what it means to become citizens, then I think a political party should be encouraged to do that, if that helps people to better understand the political process, what citizenship is all about, understanding politics and voting in elections.

INDEPENDENCE OF JUDICIARY

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): Madam Speaker, if we cannot get an answer from the chief Minister, perhaps I could direct my question to the Minister of Justice and Attorney General. Will the Attorney General, the Minister of Justice for Canada, tell me whether, in his view, it is reasonable for the judiciary to be used in Canada to, "bring potential Members of the Liberal Party into contact with established Liberal associations"? Is that a tradition of the independent judiciary as he knows it?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice): Madam Speaker, I think that is just another way of asking the same question which my colleague has just replied to.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

FISHERIES

DISCLOSURE OF KIRBY TASK FORCE REPORT CONTENTS

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Madam Speaker, I have a question I would like to direct to the Prime Minister. It concerns the status of the Task Force report relating to the Atlantic fisheries. I am sure the Prime Minister is aware of the difficult conditions which exist in the Atlantic fisheries because of the delay in making public the report of the Task Force which dealt with the Atlantic fisheries. My question relates to the Government and Cabinet policy with respect to such public inquiries.

What is the position of the Prime Minister with respect to disclosure of parts of the report which are made known to the public in various ways by leaks from the persons involved in the Task Force and by the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, himself? He must know this creates a state of confusion. What is he going to do about it? And what is his policy with respect to these leaks and the misinforming of the public on such a vital matter?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member is asking about our policy on leaks. Our policy is to condemn them firmly.

REQUEST THAT RECOMMENDATIONS BE MADE PUBLIC

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Madam Speaker, the Prime Minister has just condemned his own Minister of Fisheries and Oceans because he is responsible for the leaks in an interview with a correspondent in London, England, when he disclosed certain vital aspects of the recommendations made by the Task Force on the Atlantic fisheries. Will the Prime Minister, knowing the difficult state of the Atlantic fisheries, indicate to those persons intimately involved with that troubled industry, what the Government proposes to do? When is it going to make the recommendations public? When is it going to come up with a policy to resolve some of the problems? Or is he just going to let the Atlantic fishing fleet flounder on a sea of government indecision?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I heard, and so did you, the Minister of Fisheries answer that very question yesterday when he dealt with the Kirby Report, and he even referred to the Pearse Report, and indicated it was before the Government, and that their recommendations would be brought forth. That was the answer the Minister gave. I am not quite sure why the Hon. Member is asking a repeat of the same question.

LOSS OF MEMBERSHIP FOR FORMER CHAIRMAN

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley-Hants): My question is also directed to the Prime Minister. I would like to know how he reconciles his penetrating philosophical views about "the anti-democratic reflex reactions of the Liberal flocks of sheep", when they flip-flopped on Bomarcs in 1963, with the independent action of the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier who "raised his voice against the dictatorship of the Leader", and last week voted against Bill C-133, only to lose his very membership on the relevant Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, as a matter of curiosity, when the Hon. Member said, "raised his voice against a dictator", who was he quoting from?

QUERY RESPECTING PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley-Hants): Madam Speaker, perhaps the Prime Minister has selective amnesia. It sometimes inculcates the very interesting mind of the Prime Minister. I am quoting from the Prime Minister's article in "Cité Libre" of April, 1963, when the then philosopher was commenting on the dictatorship of the then Prime Minister, Mr. Pearson. My supplementary, Madam Speaker, is that in that article the Prime Minister of today, as a philosopher then, wrote, and I quote:

> I notice amongst the old guard Liberals a degrading cynicism that remains unchanged; amongst the young Liberals I observe the same obsequious—

Madam Speaker: Order. Order! The question period is to entertain questions, not long quotations.

Mr. Nowlan: My question is very short and very much to the point, and it very much involves the whole political morality of this Government.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nowlan: And to continue the quotation, which the Prime Minister wrote in his own hand—

Madam Speaker: Order. Order!

Mr. Nowlan: I would like to ask the question.

Madam Speaker: Order. Order! I can certainly give the floor to the Hon. Member to ask the question, but not to debate and not to make lengthy quotations. And I am not treating him in any other way than I am treating other Members of the House.

Mr. Nowlan: Madam Speaker, I will try to observe your restrictive stricture.

Madam Speaker: What is the question?

Mr. Nowlan: My question to the Prime Minister, Madam Speaker, is this. Having developed an interesting reputation for political philosophy before he became a practising politician, why has he changed his mind from the article in 1963 when he talked about "old guard Liberal cynicism", and he, God forbid, "never trampled on democracy"? Is not what happened to the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier a trampling of parliamentary democracy, or has the Prime Minister just joined the "old guard" ranks of Liberal cynicism?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member is confused. In his first question he referred to an article of some 25 years ago, I guess, or 20 years ago, and it cannot be all that urgent a matter. In the second part of his question, between quotes he indicated that the Member for Ottata-Vanier had, "raised his voice against a dictator". I was asking the source of that quote. I suspect the Hon. Member has made those quotations up as he makes up a lot of his questions.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nowlan: I will be raising a point of privilege, Madam Speaker, at three o'clock. I will read the whole speech. I give you notice now.

Madam Speaker: Order. Order! I really wonder what has come upon the Hon. Member. He has had an answer. The Hon. Member for Selkirk-Interlake.

NUCLEAR ARMAMENTS

REQUEST THAT PERMISSION BE REFUSED FOR CRUISE MISSILE TESTING

Mr. Terry Sargeant (Selkirk-Interlake): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister who has stated three to four times in this House in recent weeks, including this afternoon, that he views the Cruise missile matter as serious, yet over the past nine months he has tried to defend his Government's decision to permit U.S. Cruise missile testing in Canada as part of an effort to achieve arms control agreements. But as early as 1974, U.S. military planners, including Admiral Holloway, then Chief of U.S. Naval Operations, argued for the Cruise missile because it could be deployed covertly and thus make any arms control verification meaningless. Given this information, will the Prime Minister now make a commitment to stop fuelling the arms race by refusing to allow Cruise missile testing in Canada?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I must point out to the Hon. Member that I do understand the concern shown by himself and by many Canadians on the testing of the Cruise missile in Canada, if that is indeed to happen, and which has not been decided yet. That is a matter which is being negotiated in the form of an umbrella agreement with the United States. I understand the concern. I want to point out, as I did to one of his fellow members of the New Democratic Party the other day, that this is part of our participation in an alliance, and, if we refuse to take some role in the alliance, we are either hypocrites because we are supposing someone else should take that role, or else we should withdraw from the alliance. I have not heard his party suggest with any unanimity that we withdraw from the alliance.

• (1440)

As to the Cruise itself, I want to point out that one of the reasons why we have followed this policy which we are debating now is that the Cruise, by its very nature, cannot be a first-strike weapon. The Cruise delivery time is two to three hours, depending on where it is launched from. It cannot be a first-strike weapon, it can only be a retaliatory weapon, used in cases where someone else started a nuclear war, or a war that we feel is going to mightily destroy the alliance. That is a basic point. If the Hon. Members were lobbying against the Pershing or something else, I would understand it more because I suppose conceivably it could be a first-strike weapon. But when you are talking of a missile the delivery time of which is three hours, Madam Speaker, I do not see how the Members over there, or anyone in good faith, could suspect that this is one way in which our side wants to start a war.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Sargeant: Madam Speaker, I submit that the Prime Minister has become a born-again militarist.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nielsen: That will be the frosty Friday.

PRIME MINISTER'S MEETING WITH CHURCH LEADERS

Mr. Terry Sargeant (Selkirk-Interlake): Madam Speaker, given the Prime Minister's obvious disregard for the damaging impact of Cruise missile deployment on future arms control operations, and given that his mind is so obviously closed on this matter, could he tell the House why he wasted the time of the leaders of Canada's major Christian churches who met with him yesterday for the express purpose of changing his Government's position on Cruise missile testing and participation in MX development?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, they asked to meet me. I do not think it was their assessment that I wasted their time. We had a rational, intelligent discussion. I am sorry the Hon. Member is unable to carry on that kind of discussion. When he calls me a militarist, Madam Speaker—obviously we are a member of an alliance. We are not non-aligned, we are members of NATO. If that makes us militarists, because we are not absolutely neutral, so be it. But then I challenge his Party to get up and say now that they are not militarists in that sense, that they want to get out of NATO.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

METRIC CONVERSION

WARNING OF BUSINESS PROSECUTIONS

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Madam Speaker, my question had been intended for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Perhaps I could direct it instead to the Minister responsible for small business.

The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs has broken his word to the House of Commons and to retailers in Canada. He gave assurances to this Parliament back in January, 1981, that he would not prosecute those businesses who still choose to deal in imperial measurement, perhaps along with metric measurement. Will the Minister call off his colleague and stop force marching Canadians into metric and into the courts?

Mr. David Berger (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, the retail gasoline industry met with the Minister on a number of occasions, and had a committee, as the Hon. Member is aware, which oversaw the transformation from the imperial system to the metric system. That committee stood down earlier this year because conversion had taken place in about 99 per cent of the cases. It is possibly damaging to certain competitors of those who seek to infringe the law, and therefore the Minister has taken steps to apply the law.

Mr. Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Surely, Madam Speaker, even the Parliamentary Secretary is not naive enough to believe that there are not many upset Canadians who are being forced to deal in metric, not only in the gasoline retail trade but in many other sectors of metric conversion.

METRIC COMMISSION BROCHURE

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Madam Speaker, the Parliamentary Secretary will know that the Metric Commission is sending out a five-colour brochure, reported to have cost more than $100,000, with every family allowance and pension cheque, wherein it is stated that metric conversion is voluntary in Canada and that we in this country must go metric because the United States is going metric. Both statements are untrue.

Will the Parliamentary Secretary bring to the attention of the Minister that his own Department should stop this Metric Commission from publishing false and misleading advertising?

Mr. David Berger (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, I do not know where the Hon. Member gets the impression that metric conversion is voluntary in certain sectors; it is part of the Weights and Measures Act and the Minister has a responsibility to apply that law. Further, Madam Speaker, given the fact that all young people in this country these days are educated in the Metric system I have a great deal of difficulty understanding—

Mr. Epp: Anything.

Mr. Berger: —the lobby being raised by the dinosaurs across the way.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

PAKISTAN—DISCUSSION OF NUCLEAR POLICY

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister.

Some Hon. Members: Leader! Leader!

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Crosbie: Madam Speaker, apparently they want a new leader over there.

Madam Speaker: Order.

Mr. Crosbie: Madam Speaker, the Prime Minister is meeting with the President of Pakistan this week and, as the Prime Minister knows, there is a great deal of fear that Pakistan is a country determined to develop a nuclear weapon. Will the Prime Minister tell the House what he hopes to accomplish in his meetings with the President of Pakistan, and is he going to urge him to sign full scope safeguards and sign the nuclear non-proliferation treaty? If the President of Pakistan does not agree to do that, are we going to continue our policy of refusing to deliver nuclear fuel or any other nuclear implements to Pakistan?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Well, Madam Speaker, without going into the details of what has happened over the past years, I can assure the Hon. Member that in our past negotiations with Pakistan we stood pretty firm in ensuring that they would not become a nuclear state with Canada's assistance. That remains our position. Of course we will discuss that subject with him again, and it would be our desire that Pakistan and many other countries sign the non-proliferation treaty.

The Hon. Member asks what other subjects will be discussed. There will be many, but I am sure as a front-line state Pakistan will be willing to discuss with us the problems arising from the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan, a matter which I understand has caused concern even in the mind of the Hon. Member, preoccupied as he is with the leadership question.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: Madam Speaker, the Prime Minister seems to have leadership much on his mind. Methinks the throne is not as secure as it might appear, Madam Speaker.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): He just has to look behind him.

Mr. Crosbie: Safeguards are needed by the Prime Minister.

Oral Questions

ARGENTINA—NUCLEAR ENERGY AGREEMENT

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Madam Speaker, Canada ended nuclear co-operation with Pakistan in 1976 when they refused to accept full safeguards in connection with our nuclear reactor in Karachi, but we still have Canadian technicians working on a Candu nuclear reactor in Argentina; we are still shipping them nuclear fuel bundles; we are still co-operating with them in the nuclear sense even though they have threatened to construct nuclear weapons.

Could the Prime Minister explain to the House the apparent contradiction between our policy with respect to Argentina and the policy he says we are still going to implement with respect to Pakistan?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): If I understand the Hon. Member correctly, Madam Speaker, he is supporting the position this Government took in the past as regards nuclear and non-nuclear co-operation with Pakistan. I am grateful to him for having reminded the House of that.

As far as Argentina is concerned, it is another case which has been answered in detail by the present Minister of Justice when he was Secretary of State for External Affairs. Just to refresh the Hon. Member's memory, it had to do with the fact that if we were unilaterally to denounce our agreement with Argentina now, then we would be doing away with all safeguards. They are bound by the safeguards agreement we have now. Since the first signing of agreements in the early 1970s we have attempted to heighten the level of those safeguards and we have not been successful in every case. But to follow the course advocated by the Hon. Member would mean that there would be no safeguards at all with the material and the technology which has already been transferred to Argentina.

GOVERNMENT RESPONSE TO BRANDT COMMISSION STATEMENT

Mr. Bob Ogle (Saskatoon East): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. Yesterday afternoon there were two groups of people here. One came representing the churches of Canada, seven national leaders, and at the same time Dr. Brandt from Germany and his commissioners were in the House of Commons. I think that was a very significant event. I feel that both came speaking with a prophetic voice.

This morning the Brandt Commission made a statement which called for urgent action to discuss means to increase world—

Madam Speaker: Order, order. The Hon. Member should be asking a question, not quoting from a report.

Mr. Ogle: I would like to ask the Prime Minister, without that much preparation, whether he is prepared at this moment to give a short answer on how he reacts to the Brandt statement this morning asking for greater liquidity, to reverse the decline in world trade and to alleviate the mounting burden of debt around the world? Does he have a feeling about how Canada can respond?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I know Members of Parliament had the privilege of discussing all these subjects with Mr. Brandt and his colleagues, and I discussed them with them the previous day. I think the Hon. Member knows that Canada has been responding and has been taking positions which the Brandt Commission recognizes as showing the proper kind of leadership. Naturally they would want us to do more.

Mr. Brandt and his colleagues suggested the convening of a Cancun-type conference and were very profuse in their congratulations to Canada for having played a leading role in the Cancun Conference. If the Hon. Member is really trying to find out whether Canada is on the same wavelength as the Brandt Commission, the answer is that we have been saying for a long while that the North-South problems are very grave and that they are linked not only to the peace of the world but to economic recovery. We have been saying that. We believe that, but it does not mean that we can give Mr. Brandt or any other organization a blank cheque on the future.

COMMITTEE STUDY OF NORTH-SOUTH RELATIONS

Mr. Bob Ogle (Saskatoon East): Madam Speaker, the House of Commons is changing its rules at this time. Would the Prime Minister be willing to ask the Government to set up a Standing Committee to study the North-South question steadily, the same way the Brandt Commission has extended itself?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, we just had a task force of the House, chaired by, I believe, the Hon. Member for Gloucester, which issued a report on this very subject. I think the findings of that task force are still worthy of interest, and certainly they have been studied by the Government in determining its policies.

THE ECONOMY

GOVERNMENT DEFICIT—MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. This morning there were reports in the newspapers which indicated that the Minister is changing his position on the size of the federal Government's deficit for the purpose of funding direct job-creation programs. This comes at a time when the deficit is at the particularly high level of 40 per cent of federal Government revenues.

Would the Minister explain to the House why he is reversing himself on this and considering a further increase in the size of the deficit, rather than encouraging Canadians across the country to create jobs through tax incentives designed to generate about as much revenue as the apparent tax costs would be?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, a few weeks ago, in answer to a question of a similar nature, I indicated to the House that, as I was going to proceed with numerous consultations for the preparation of the budget, obviously there would be all kinds of speculations in the press about the options I would tend to entertain as the Minister of Finance. I said that I would not comment on those speculations because I was convinced that they would go in all kinds of directions. I should like to advise my hon. friend right away that he will probably see other articles in the next few weeks indicating a contrary direction. The advice I can give him is that he should read all of them as pure speculation. As far as the specific point he raised is concerned, I will take it as representation in the preparation of the budget.

Mr. Wilson: I hope, if the Minister of Finance raises this with his colleagues from the Provinces tomorrow, that he will let the House in on the secret which he apparently wants to hold off until the budget.

SUGGESTED TAX CREDIT FOR HOME RENOVATIONS

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, let me give the Minister an example of what I have in mind, the type of tax incentive to which I was just referring. Would he consider a tax credit, for example, of $5,000 against a portion of costs incurred in home renovations completed over the next six months? Obviously this would help the construction industry. It would stimulate expenditures on furniture and wood products with a high Canadian content and a high labour content, and it would be spread throughout the country. Would the Minister give consideration to this type of plan since it is likely to be more effective than large Public Works programs directed by bureaucrats here in Ottawa, and far broader and more efficient than the current CHRP direct loan program which requires a bureaucratic approval in each case?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his interesting suggestion. I would only remind him that we already have in operation a program for home renovations which provides $3,000 grants and which has generated something like $175 million of investment by the private sector. I do not think he has invented the wheel in his suggestion. He only wishes to add more money to it; I will bear that in mind in the preparation of the budget.

Mr. Wilson: You do not understand the difference.

PUBLIC SERVICE

SCALE OF PRIVY COUNCIL CLERK'S SALARY AND PENSION

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I wonder whether the Prime Minister could confirm that on November 5, 11 days after the announcement by Mr. Michael Pitfield of his intention to resign as Clerk of the Privy Council, the Government passed an Order in Council PC 1982-3439 to raise Mr. Pitfield's salary from the eighth decile D-M 3 level to the tenth decile D-M 3 level.

Will the Prime Minister confirm that that action had the effect of increasing Mr. Pitfield's pension by $1,500 to $3,000 per year at a time when the Government was acting to reduce the pensions of other Canadians?

Would he also confirm that Mr. Pitfield's salary has been increased 9.28 per cent since the introduction of the six and five guidelines?

Some Hon. Members: Shame, shame!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Madam Speaker, I cannot confirm that but I will be happy to look into it. As regards the passage of that Order in Council, my recollection is that it was done effective April 1. I may be subject to correction on that, but it seems to me that that is an action which is taken as regards all Deputy Ministers, all Order in Council appointees. They are done every year on recommendations of the Special Committee from the private sector appointed to advise the Government on senior salaries. If the facts as quoted are correct, I can assure the House that the action was taken as part of an increase given to all senior public servants.

SALARIES OF SENIOR PUBLIC SERVANTS

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, is the Prime Minister telling us that since the introduction of the six and five principle for ordinary Canadians, senior public servants, on average, generally, have been receiving salary increases in excess of 9 per cent as is the case with Mr. Pitfield? Is that what he is telling us? Also, would he tell the House of Commons on what authority he acted?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, on the first part of the question, the answer is no, that is not what I am telling the Hon. Member. If he looks at my previous answer he will see that he is making up the suggestion and not basing it on the facts.

When the Hon. Member asked me on what authority, I indicated that at least the moral authority came from a committee of private sector people which was set up more than a decade ago and which I believe was called the Kline Committee. But as far as the legal authority is concerned, it was the authority of the Governor in Council to recommend to His Excellency the Governor General, the salary levels of Order in Council appointees.

FINANCE

FEDERAL SALES TAX PROPOSALS

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. On October 27 the Minister announced that he was deferring any changes in the federal sales tax proposals until May, 1984. Can the Minister give this House absolute assurance that he will not try to introduce these changes piecemeal, product by product in the interval, say, for instance, in lumber and building products?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I can tell the Hon. Member that I am not contemplating any such step. He knows, however, that the task force has been agreed to. It is being set up, and consultations will take place. Obviously if there was unanimity on the task force in the private sector that certain steps would be taken, I would want to look at the advisability of proceeding with certain steps, but I can tell the Hon. Member that neither my Department nor myself is considering any such step at the present time. We have never discussed this matter.

Madam Speaker: The Hon. Member for Provencher.

Mr. Epp: Madam Speaker, I would like to direct my question to the Minister of Transport—

Madam Speaker: I am sorry, I thought the Hon. Member was rising on a question of privilege, of which he had given me notice. Questions of privilege are not exactly in the order in which I received them, but he was the only Hon. Member rising. I would just like Hon. Members to allow me to put an end to the Question Period, and I will do it this way.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

Madam Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that a message has been received from the Senate informing this House that the Senate have passed Bill C-140, an Act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the Government of Canada for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1983.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. EPP—ALLEGED UNPARLIAMENTARY LANGUAGE OF MR. HARQUAIL

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Madam Speaker, I want to raise a question of privilege of which I gave you written notice today. I would ask you, Madam Speaker, to take a look at yesterday's Hansard at page 21585. You will note that Hansard records my name in two different places and that I was rising on a point of privilege. Circumstances being what they were yesterday afternoon, a vote was called by you and with the ringing of the bells there was no opportunity for me after ten o'clock last night to raise my question of privilege, and it is for that reason that I do so today.

Yesterday during the events of the afternoon there was an exchange between myself and the Hon. Member for Restigouche (Mr. Harquail) during which the Hon. Member for Restigouche, I presume wanting to participate in the debate at that time, was trying to get your eye. I suggested to him, as there were exchanges across the floor, that he should not rise and not further embarrass himself. The Member for Restigouche made a comment which I believe was, first, unparliamentary and, second, I believe it was obscene.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. Just to put this procedure more in conformity with our rules, the Hon. Member should be rising on a point of order and not on a question of privilege. Otherwise I need not hear him and can tell him that he does not have a question of privilege. The Hon. Member does have a point of order. If he wants to raise a point of order, I will entertain it.

Mr. Nowlan: I have a question of privilege, Madam Speaker, which takes precedence over a point of order.

Mr. Epp: Madam Speaker, I will take your advice. I will continue where I left off. I believe the comment was, first, unparliamentary and, second, I believe it was obscene. Third, I believe the comment was unworthy of any Member in the House, to raise matters in the manner in which that one was raised.

I notice that the comment is not recorded in Hansard. I have checked with a number of my colleagues on this side of the House to confirm whether or not they heard the comment made by the Hon. Member for Restigouche. A number of them assured me both yesterday and today that they heard the words used by the Hon. Member from Restigouche. Even though the matter is not recorded in Hansard, it is important the words of Hon. Members in this House be taken as the truth. Even though the words were not recorded in Hansard—and I have no intention of repeating them and thus entering them into the pages of Hansard—these types of exchanges are unworthy of all Members in the House and I would ask that the words uttered yesterday by the Hon. Member for Restigouche, confirmed by Members at least on this side of the House as having been made, be withdrawn.

Mr. Maurice Harquail (Restigouche): Madam Speaker, on this particular subject raised by the Hon. Member for Provencher (Mr. Epp), he admits that I did not have the floor, that I had not been successful in getting your attention. The Hon. Member has just stated that I did not have the opportunity to participate in the normal way. He confirms that I had not been successful in being recognized to participate at a very crucial time in the exchange and in the debate that was taking place at the time which, as Your Honour will only too well recall, resulted in a five-hour bell.

As I was trying to get the floor to make a correction for the House by pointing out that the Minister had already begun his remarks and that you had given the floor to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan), at that point a dozen or more Members were heckling. It is very little wonder that the comment was not recorded in Hansard. There were more than a dozen people drowning out my voice and drowning out my attempt to be recognized by the Chair, which created the problem in the first instance. I think if the Hon. Member had not been so reckless himself in participating in the manner in which he did, he would not be faced with this embarrassment for himself today.

Madam Speaker: The only point that is of interest in this particular exchange, and I thought the Hon. Member for Restigouche (Mr. Harquail) was rising for that purpose, is that I did not hear the words. I did not hear any words that were unparliamentary. They are not recorded in Hansard. Therefore, I have to rely on the word of Hon. Members. Hon. Members on this side of the House say they heard unparliamentary language. The only way I can rule on the matter is if the Hon. Member for Restigouche will confirm that he used unparliamentary language. Unless he does, there is no way that I can rule that what was said was unparliamentary. I have to take the word of all Hon. Members. If the Hon. Member for Restigouche feels he said nothing that was unparliamentary, I am afraid the point of order cannot be taken and I cannot rule on it.

Mr. Beatty: Show some honour.

Madam Speaker: The Hon. Member for Provencher.

Mr. Epp: Madam Speaker, with all respect, I think that creates a particular dilemma for all Members of the House in this sense, that literally anything can be said across the floor.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. Literally anything cannot be said across the floor. If I hear unparliamentary language, I deal with it. If I do not hear unparliamentary words, then I consult Hansard. If unparliamentary words are not recorded in Hansard, we also have the tapes and we can listen to them. Since we have none of those records and if the Hon. Member for Restigouche does not confirm that he used unparliamentary language, I have to insist that I cannot rule on the matter.

Mr. Harquail: Madam Speaker, in the interests of the great respect I have for this institution and for the Chair, and through you to the Hon. Member, whether he knows it or not the respect that I have for him, I want to say that if he has read something into this or heard something which is not recorded, it is difficult for me to respond to it. But I would want to take the opportunity to say that if the Hon. Member has been offended, I will withdraw whatever was said in the heat of debate that offended him. But he in fact knows full well that he contributed to the particular instance to which he is referring, if there was such an instance.

Madam Speaker: The matter is obviously closed.

PRIVILEGE

MR. McKNIGHT—USE OF FRANKING PRIVILEGE

Mr. Bill McKnight (Kindersley-Lloydminster): Madam Speaker, I gave you notice of my question of privilege earlier today. I have raised this issue in the House regarding the use of franks and House of Commons stationery by Members outside of what would normally be considered their duties as Members of Parliament. I have read a ruling that you made on one occasion and I will give you the page number and the day so that you will have it for reference.

• (1510)

Madam Speaker: Order. Please do not read to me my ruling. The Hon. Member can read it later on. Right now, he should tell me what his question of privilege is.

Mr. McKnight: Madam Speaker, as I indicated in my letter to you, the question of privilege I am raising today concerns the use of privileges which Members of Parliament have because of our positions that could cause disrespect or be used in an unmeaningful way.

In order to enable you to make a ruling on this matter, I have taken the opportunity to inform the Hon. Member for The Battlefords-Meadow Lake (Mr. Anguish) that I would be raising it as well as to provide that Member with a copy of the correspondence which I hope to discuss. My reason for doing this is that I have correspondence from the Saskatchewan Land Bank Tenants Association, Box 89, Sonningdale, Saskatchewan which is signed by Chris Mewhort, who is the Secretary of the Saskatchewan Land Bank Tenants Association. It is a letter sent to J. F. Watts, Box 1105, Weyburn, Saskatchewan. In these pieces of correspondence in the envelope which bears the frank of the Hon. Member for The Battlefords-Meadow Lake, I do not find anything that refers to the Hon. Member by name, constituency or anything else which indicates that the Hon. Member is aware that his frank is being used.

If our franks are being used without our knowledge—

Madam Speaker: Order. I can see that the Hon. Member is complaining about the use that another Hon. Member has made of his frank.

Mr. McKnight: No.

Madam Speaker: It is not that? It is only proof, then, that the Hon. Member has not been quite clear as to what his question of privilege is. I want to know how whatever he is complaining about or what he is intending to expose affects his personal privilege.

Mr. McKnight: Madam Speaker, as I said in my initial remarks, with respect to the use of the privileges which are allowed Members of Parliament because of our positions, there is a great concern and need to protect the rights that are given to us by the House and, in fact, the people of Canada.

An Hon. Member: What is your point of privilege?

Mr. McKnight: I am sure that is not one of your assistants that I hear, Madam Speaker.

My question of privilege is that Members must know whether their franks are being used, because our franks are important. If a frank has fallen into the wrong hands or used without a Member's knowledge, it is important that all Members of Parliament are made aware of this. Letters that do not pertain to federal Government business or do not pertain to matters concerning a Member's own constituency may be sent out and people will assume that the frank was used with the Member's knowledge and, therefore, his endorsement of whatever information may be contained in those letters.

I raise this question of privilege because I feel that you, Madam Speaker, as the first Commoner of the House, have the right and will to protect the use of our franks. I have brought this to the attention of the Hon. Member for The Battlefords-Meadow Lake and, through raising this question of privilege, I am asking that Members be made aware of the situation and be sure that their franks are used only with their knowledge, since it may not have been used with the knowledge of the Hon. Member for The Battlefords-Meadow Lake.

Madam Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member must be fair. He does not know whether the frank has been used with the knowledge of another Hon. Member. He does not know whether the Hon. Member used it himself. It is not a very precise exposition of a complaint of a problem and I cannot accept it as such.

Furthermore, with respect to the matter of the use of a frank, if the Hon. Member has a complaint, especially of the type he is now discussing, I think he could discuss it with the Hon. Member. As Hon. Members know, the use of the frank is a matter that is usually discussed among the Members of the Committee on Management and Members' Services if there is a particular problem arising from the use of the frank. The Speaker does not interfere to tell Hon. Members in what instances they may use their frank or may not use their frank. This is up to the Hon. Member to determine. He does it within his own conception of what is or is not proper. If something improper arises, Hon. Members usually discuss it in the Committee.

I cannot hear the Hon. Member further. He has already spoken for quite a while on this subject and has not made clear that it is a question of privilege. I have gone to the trouble of explaining to him where he can get redress on this particular matter. I would urge him to do just that.

I will deal with the questions of privilege in the order they have been received. The Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker).

Mr. Thacker: Madam Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

Mr. Nystrom: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. In all fairness, the name of the Hon. Member for The Battlefords-Meadow Lake (Mr. Anguish) was dragged before the House. As you said, Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member making the charge spoke for quite a while. We have a tradition in the House of giving the Member at least a few minutes to reply to the charges that are being made. I maintain that that Member should have that right. I see the Hon. Member for Kindersley-Lloydsminster (Mr. McKnight) nodding his head.

Madam Speaker: I do not say that the Hon. Member would not have the right to reply, but I have already ruled on the matter, which is not a question of privilege, in any event. If the Hon. Member wishes to reply I may hear him later; but the Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills rose before him and that is why I recognized him.

Mr. Thacker: Madam Speaker, in view of the fact that the matter was raised by the Hon. Member for Kindersley-Lloydminster (Mr. McKnight) and that the Member for The Battlefords-Meadow Lake (Mr. Anguish) wishes to respond, I would be delighted to stand down for a couple of minutes to allow him to respond. I do not want the Hon. Member to stand again on a point of order and interrupt a proper question of privilege which affects every Member of the House. I believe you will find that all Members have the same problem I have with respect to Private Bills. It truly is a question of privilege which must be dealt with.

Madam Speaker: There is some difficulty. I have already ruled on this particular question. I could perhaps accept what the Hon. Member has to say on a point of order but he should not comment on the ruling. If he wants to give an explanation, I will hear him on a point of order.

Mr. Anguish: Madam Speaker, on a point of order, the correspondence to which the Hon. Member for Kindersley-Lloydminster (Mr. McKnight) referred arose from a concern over a bill that was presented in the provincial legislature of Saskatchewan. It concerned Bill 46, an Act to abolish the land bank. In the wisdom of the previous Government, it saw fit to create the Saskatchewan land bank and the Saskatchewan Land Bank Commission as a means to get young farmers on the land. In the wisdom of the new Government which just came into power in Saskatchewan, it has seen fit to abolish the land bank by introducing Bill 46.

The Hon. Member does raise a very important matter. The letter which he has brought into question was sent out under the signature of a Chris Mewhort, who is a land bank tenant and represented the Saskatchewan Land Bank Tenants Association.

I believe that when a Member's frank is used it must be done in a way that upholds the honour of this institution. This is not accomplished if Members use their privilege as Members of Parliament, especially with regard to franking of correspondence, to send correspondence which has a political leaning or nature to it.

I submit that in the case of this letter that was sent out by the Saskatchewan Land Bank Tenants Association, there was no political motivation on my part. There were some 2,600 land bank tenants in Saskatchewan. Many of those are card-carrying members of the Progressive Conservative Party, many are New Democrats and many are also members of the Liberal Party, I would submit.

• (1520)

I have no personal motivation in this matter because the letter that the Land Bank Tenants Association sent out was not only within my constituency—

Mr. Hnatyshyn: It was in mine!

Mr. Anguish: —but it was sent out to all of the approximately 2,600 land bank tenants in the Province of Saskatchewan.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: It came from my constituency!

Mr. Anguish: I do not solicit any funds in the letter for myself as a politician or for my political party. I hear the Hon. Member for Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatyshyn) starting to cry that this was from his riding. I would admit that fact, and he can respond as well.

It happens that Mr. Mewhort, the Secretary of the Saskatchewan Land Bank Tenants Association, does in fact live in the riding of the Hon. Member for Saskatoon West. The writer of this letter came to me and said that he was very concerned about the passage of Bill 46 in the Saskatchewan legislature because it took away the rights that people have under the Charter of Rights and Freedoms which would apply to this House. In fact, Bill 46 takes away the right to any recourse—

Madam Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member is going far beyond the explanation that he was going to give with regard to the complaint raised by the Hon. Member. I asked him to make his comments short. I think we accept the explanation that he has given, but he must make his comments very short.

Mr. Anguish: Madam Speaker, I was coming to my point. I think that two things were indicated. The Hon. Member was asking if this was not an abuse of my frank, and was also asking if I was aware of the use of my frank on this piece of correspondence, which I could read into the record if you so wish, Madam Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Go ahead.

Mr. Anguish: The frank was used with my full knowledge on this piece of correspondence. I would admit that. I maintain that there was no abuse of my frank as a Member of Parliament or, if Your Honour would see fit to find that there was an abuse, it would certainly be less flagrant than it was on November 30, 1978 when—

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Anguish: —when the Hon. Member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton)—

Madam Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member is raising another point in order to justify—

Some Hon. Members: No, no!

Madam Speaker: —his own conduct, which I do not judge. I told Hon. Members before that I do not judge whether the frank was used properly or not. If Hon. Members maintain that there is a complaint which could be lodged, then they must lodge the complaint before the Committee on Management and Members' Services.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Nowlan: I have a question of privilege.

MR. THACKER—PREPARATION OF PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BILLS

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills): Madam Speaker, I rise pursuant to Standing Order 17. You will know from the notice that I gave to you that the question I propose to raise today affects each and every one of us as Members, because we all have Private Bills which we have presented and which we want to present. The question relates either to the inability or, as written in my notice, the refusal—although I am not sure that is the case—of the legislative drafters to prepare our Private Bills in time.

The reason I raise this matter before Your Honour—

An Hon. Member: Filibuster!

Mr. Thacker: —is that it falls under your jurisdiction on the Hill.

Since I became a Member in 1979, I have attempted to have Private Bills drafted with respect to gun control, with respect to making salaries public of officials who work for us and Crown corporations, and another relating to the Constitution which would provide for balanced budgets. Such Private Bills would reflect the wide views of constituents.

Ever since becoming a Member in 1979, I have met with different lawyers in the private legislation branch. The first time I went over there was in 1980, after we came back with the new Government in place. I met with a young lawyer and his adviser to discuss these Bills. They were supposed to be drafted but they never were. My researcher would go back after a few months and ask for an update. Then a draft of the gun control legislation came and it simply was not in the proper form. I held a meeting, then a second one, with a supervisor at which time I explained why I wanted to have a certain clause of the Constitution deleted. That officer was actually quite rude in the sense of implying that his branch would not draft just any Bill that a Member wanted. I wanted to have Clause 133 totally taken out of the Constitution, leaving the question of language to the Provinces, but the officer simply refused to draft that Bill. I think that is—

Madam Speaker: All right, I see what the Hon. Member's question is all about. What I must tell him is that it is not a question of privilege. It is, rather, a question concerning the services of the House. I very much regret that the Hon.

Member is running into that kind of trouble in getting his Bills drafted. I know that in that particular section we have run into some difficulties with some of the staff having to absent themselves—

Mr. Rose: Yes, everyone quits. That is what your difficulty is.

Madam Speaker: —and at least one having resigned to take another position which he thought was more in line with his interests. I knew that there was a bit of a backlog, but I did not know that it had inconvenienced Hon. Members to the extent that the Hon. Member would want to raise the matter in the House. I must tell him that he could raise it with me privately in my chambers, and I will certainly see to it that he gets his Bill or Bills drafted in the time that he needs them. If necessary, I will seek help from other services in order to satisfy Hon. Members.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): I rise on the question of privilege.

Madam Speaker: The Hon. Member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) rises on a point of order.

Mr. Nielsen: I do not believe the Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker) had finished his comments, but it raises a serious question of privilege—

Mr. Smith: Filibuster!

Mr. Nielsen: —in my submission. I hear the Parliamentary Secretary saying "filibuster!" He is not concerned with the rights of Parliamentarians.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: The provision of services by the law branch of the House of Commons is very much a matter within the particular bailiwick of each and every Member of Parliament. I have heard more than one complaint from Hon. Members who have not been able to get their legislation drafted. As Your Honour knows, it has now been three months since Mr. Maingot has left and his position is still vacant. Surely, it cannot be all that difficult to fill a position of director of the House of Commons law branch, which is specifically charged with providing services to all Members of Parliament.

Then, too, I am aware that Professor Franks of Queen's University was commissioned to prepare a study. I am afraid I do not know who commissioned it. Perhaps the Office of the Chair commissioned that study. However, that study should be available and should be read by all Members of Parliament. For that purpose, it is my personal submission to Your Honour that the Franks report should be tabled so that it is available to all Members of Parliament.

Lastly, I suggest that any critiques which have been prepared of the Franks study should also be made available to all Members of Parliament so that we know where we are going with respect to the future of his very vital service of the House of Commons law branch to Members of Parliament.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: Is the Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker) rising on a point of order or a question of privilege?

Mr. Thacker: On the question of privilege, Madam Speaker. I believe, just from your own words, it has been shown that there is a prima facie case, and the question is not whether or not you try to solve it by meeting privately with me, or whether, by a motion, it is put before the proper committee so that all sides of the House—

Madam Speaker: No, I said it did not touch on privilege. The particular complaint which the Hon. Member was making did not touch on privilege, but I did say that I would be glad to discuss with him how we can solve this problem.

For the benefit of the Hon. Member for Yukon, I can tell him that the post of law clerk has been filled on an interim basis. The post was not left vacant; it was filled on an interim basis by another member of the personnel. Therefore, it was not left completely in abeyance. However, the Hon. Member is right in saying that it should be filled. At any rate, those are problems of administration which Hon. Members know should not be taken up and discussed in the House.

Mr. Benjamin: I have a point of order, Madam Speaker.

Mr. Nowlan: I have a point of privilege, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker: I have another notice of a question of privilege by the Hon. Member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone).

• (1530)

MR. MALONE—DRAFTING PRIORITY OF PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BILLS

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Madam Speaker, I preface my comments by saying that while you will note some similarity between what I am about to say and the comments of the Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker), I believe I can make a distinct difference, in terms of the concept of Private Members' Bills, that will set it apart from what you heard from that Hon. Member.

One of the common understandings of all Members is that we are treated equally. Our chances to raise questions, to raise points of order or questions of privilege, to print Bills or our opportunities to speak, are equal to all.

In making reference to the printing of Private Members' Bills, I want to bring to the attention of you, Madam Speaker, a specific comment of an officer who is in charge of drafting. I want to pause at this point to say that I lay no critique towards those good officers and the hard work that they do in drafting. I would not want any slant of anything I say to reflect on them because I think we are all aware of the fact that the restraints of both the country and this House of Commons have led to an understaffing of those Members.

The specific comment that I would like to bring to your attention with respect to the reasons I could not get a Private Members' Bill drafted until into the next session is as follows: "There are some Bills of priority that must be drafted first".

I submit that, when there is a judgment of priority and the question of what comes first, what comes into question then is which Member among Members should be the first to receive consideration. I submit that a consideration is taking place out of this Chamber as to the status and nature of some Members versus others; a judgment is being made as to which Member ought to receive priority. Any time, whether within or outside the House, that there is a priority decision given as to which Members are to be first, that jeopardizes those Members who must be something other than first.

When we, for whatever reason, have cause to bring to the attention of the House of Commons a piece of legislation in the interest of our constituents, our Province or our country, we should be able to do that without having to challenge whether or not we meet the priority of some other Member. If we have, as individual Members of the House of Commons, legislation that we want drafted and placed before the House, we should not have to wait until another session of Parliament, especially when that session could be several months from now. We want to be able to have our legislation at least receive the attention of the public by the fact that it receives first reading and, hopefully, is debated in this Chamber.

I have had a number of Bills. The nature of the Bills are not necessarily important, but I have a list here of six. I am sure that just by reading them Members would find in the main most of them are probably important and which to a large extent they may concur in. But the fact is that we cannot even get them drafted, and if the reason for it is that there are some Bills of priority that must be drafted first, then I submit that there is a judgment being made that affects the working operations of each and every Member in this Chamber. That, I suggest, constitutes a question of privilege.

Madam Speaker: I think the Hon. Member could have come to my office and discussed this problem because it is obviously a problem dealing with the manner in which the services of the House of Commons are provided to Members.

May I tell Hon. Members that I spend a lot of time trying to improve the services to Hon. Members because I know that those services are essential to the accomplishment of their tasks as Members of Parliament. I think Hon. Members will recognize that I have spent a lot of hours doing just that.

I would tell the Hon. Member that if he has been told that some Bills have priority over any of his Bills, I think I can explain to him what that really meant. Our policy is that Bills are drafted on the basis of first-come, first-served; so the first Members who came, I suppose, would be the ones who had priority.

There is no judgment made by any people in the law branch or by myself or anyone who has to deal with these problems as to which of the Bills are the most important ones. That is certainly not a judgment that is made. If he has been told that there were certain priorities, it is simply because other Members presented themselves before he did.

I have a notice of a question of Privilege by the Hon. Member for Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatyshyn).

MR. HNATYSHYN—ALLEGED ATTACK ON CITIZENSHIP COURT

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, I did rise on a point of order, I do not know if you would want to hear me—a separate point of order—flowing from remarks of the Member for The Battlefords-Meadow Lake (Mr. Anguish) with respect to the admission he made as to the franking from my constituency of certain material, not under his signature but apparently under his auspices. I have the document in question and I would propose, with the unanimous consent of the House, to table these documents which are in the nature of a fund-raising opportunity and a membership application by an association involved with provincial legislation, not dealing with any responsibilities that we have in this Parliament.

I would ask, Madam Speaker, if I could obtain unanimous consent to table this material so it will be a matter of public record.

Madam Speaker: There are no precedents for that kind of tabling. The Hon. Member might make the documents available in another way, but there is no precedent for that kind of tabling.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I wanted to ask for unanimous consent under Standing Order 42 of the rules of this House, which I think is available to us.

Mr. Nielsen: The House can do anything with consent.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I certainly take your advice. I am quite prepared to—

Madam Speaker: The Hon. Member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) is quite right: the House can do anything with unanimous consent. Does the House consent to the tabling of these documents?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Madam Speaker: The Hon. Member does not have unanimous consent.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Madam Speaker, I want to rise on a question of privilege arising from matters in the Question Period today, in which I participated, relating to an unprecedented attack on the independence of a judicial body in our country, not only by a Member of the House of Commons but also by a Member of the Cabinet—and I refer to the Minister of Labour (Mr. Caccia).

Privilege—Mr. Hnatyshyn

The point I want to raise by way of a prima facie case this afternoon is that this particular attack on the citizenship court is one which affects the rights and privileges of all Members. I think it would be helpful to us if I were to read specifically the contents of this letter which I have in my hand. I have given copies to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) so that he is apprised of the correspondence. As he indicated he may not have been, I felt it was a courtesy to let him have this information.

This is a letter from the Minister of Labour to the then Secretary of State who is now the Minister of State for International Trade (Mr. Regan). I make the point that while the letter is to the then Secretary of State, it has been published in the legal sense inasmuch as copies have been sent to the Metropolitan Toronto Political Action Committee and also to all Toronto Ministers of the Cabinet.

I will read the letter, Madam Speaker, and you will see the severity of the accusations and statements made which, I suggest, verge on, if not in fact meet, the test of libellous statements.

The letter is addressed to the Hon. Gerald Regan, P.C., M.P., Secretary of State, House of Commons, Ottawa, and is dated November 20, 1981. It reads as follows:

• (1540)

Dear Gerald:

Following letters I wrote you and your predecessor in recent months on citizenship matters, I am taking the liberty of writing this time on the organization of citizenship judges. Repeatedly the point has been made with me that:

(1) there is a structure of national and regional co-ordinators which is costly and considered unnecessary; judges seem to resent that organization because it causes internal frictions;

(2) judges are expected to show more rejections in their workload as one criterion of good performance; women applicants have to pay for this insane requirement;

(3) apparently one or more clashes between groups of English-speaking and French-speaking citizenship judges have taken place at a recent annual meeting;

(4) apparently deliberate efforts are being made to keep applicants from one ethnic group from being interviewed by the judge who comes from that same group.

If these points are important enough to you, I would take the liberty of suggesting a thorough review of the situation. In addition, as mentioned in my last letters, rules and regulations are being applied which do not seem to have any resemblance to the legislation. I am available for elaboration on these points and on the examples I have brought to your attention in previous letters.

With kind personal regards,

The letter is signed "Charles" over the signature of "Charles Caccia".

My question of privilege is simply this. You will take notice of the provisions of the Citizenship Act which established the Citizenship Court. There are many precedents which have been dealt with in this House of Commons regarding what I consider to be criticisms not only of the judiciary, but criticisms of judgments of individuals and the collective judiciary. In this particular case, outside the House of Commons a Cabinet Minister gave to those people who received the publication of this particular allegation the imprimatur of being the considered view of Members of this House of Commons.

Madam Speaker, I think that you can see, and you will agree, that when it is alleged in a very racist statement that apparently efforts are being made to keep applicants from one ethnic group to be interviewed from one who comes from another group, the reference is that the Citizenship Court judges are conspiring against the responsibilities that are to be carried out under the Citizenship Act.

When you consider that the allegation is made by a Member of this House that judges are expected to show more rejections in their workload as one criterion of good performance, when Parliament has spoken on these issues by the enactment of legislation, and when a Member of this House, a Member of the Cabinet bearing responsibility, says that rules and regulations being applied have no resemblance to the legislation, it reflects upon the House.

There are analogies not only in this country but in the United Kingdom, at the Mother of Parliament, of recent vintage. By way of example, the Solicitor General for Scotland in the United Kingdom recently said publicly—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. Is the Hon. Member arguing that a Minister of the Crown cannot write a letter to express an opinion on the way some person is applying the legislation? The Hon. Member has not yet told me where his personal privilege has been affected. The Hon. Member knows that a Minister does not necessarily speak for Parliament. He speaks for himself, for Cabinet, his caucus, and all these other things, but certainly not for Parliament. So I cannot accept that argument. If the Hon. Member has other arguments, especially as to where his privilege has been affected, I will be glad to listen to him.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Madam Speaker, there are two points I would make. I am not objecting to the fact that one Member of Parliament writes to another, whether it be a Cabinet Minister or not. That is not the point. This document has been published by virtue of the fact it has been circulated among a number of people in Canada. By doing this, the Minister has indicated in no uncertain terms that legislation passed by this House of Commons, this Parliament as a whole, is being abrogated. He casts an aspersion on Members of the judiciary, namely the Canadian Citizenship Court.

The point is simply this. Members of Cabinet have a responsibility to reflect the views of the House of Commons in accordance with those authorities which we give by way of legislation, practice or tradition. What has happened here is without authority, without sanction or legislation. By virtue of no tradition, the Minister has circulated an accusation which affects the privileges of all Members of the House of Commons. The Minister is making the allegation that Citizenship Court judges are not performing the task that we as legislators have enacted.

I was making an analogy. In the United Kingdom, the Solicitor General of Scotland made a public statement that the laws relating to rape in that country were not properly constituted and were not being properly handled. Because of that statement made in public, the British Prime Minister asked for his resignation and it was tendered. It was because of an admission on the part of the Minister that the Government was not handling its responsibility.

I draw an analogy here. In terms of legislation, whatever the Prime Minister asks the Minister of Labour or Secretary of State, it is his responsibility. However, here the Minister of Labour is saying that laws passed by Members of the House of Commons have been abrogated by some conspiracy by at least some of the Citizenship Court judges. As a Member of Parliament, I refuse to accept that categorical assertion.

If there are no greater facts, we should have the matter referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections so that we can determine the validity of the allegation to find out whether our laws are being abrogated by a conspiracy among some judges. If, Madam Speaker, you find that I have presented to you a prima facie case that our rights have not only been abrogated in this House, but that there is a reflection on the laws that we have passed, I will make the appropriate motion with respect to a reference to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Madam Speaker: The Hon. Member for Willowdale (Mr. Peterson) had risen before the Hon. Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis). I would like to know on what point the Hon. Member for Willowdale is rising.

Mr. Peterson: Madam Speaker, I am rising on a question of privilege arising out of today's performance. I have so far heard at least five—

Madam Speaker: Order. If it is a new question of privilege, I will hear the Hon. Member for Simcoe North, who wants to intervene in the question of privilege raised by the Hon. Member for Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatyshyn).

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Madam Speaker, I want to add further to the very able argument of my colleague from Saskatoon West (Mr. Hnatyshyn), who has read into the record the very serious allegations made by the Minister of Labour (Mr. Caccia) with respect to the independence of the judiciary and the way the judiciary is operating. What we should be looking at is Beauchesne, page 25, Citation 80(2), and I quote:

> A question of privilege, on the other hand, is a question partly of fact and partly of law—the law of contempt of Parliament—

In 1976 the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) felt that interference by a Cabinet Minister with the judiciary was so important that he came into this House on March 12 of that year and made a statement as Prime Minister. You will recall, Madam Speaker, that at that time there had been several occasions upon which Cabinet Ministers from the Liberal Government had been called into question with regard to contacting judges. There was a question regarding the then President of the Treasury Board; one regarding the present Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Chretien); and another regarding the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde), who at that time was an employee. There was a question regarding the then Minister of Public Works, Mr. Drury, who has since resigned. Then there was finally the question concerning the then Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs who resigned as a result of the judge's inquiry and then was reincarnated as the present Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet).

• (1550)

The Prime Minister very specifically said at page 11771 of Hansard on March 12, 1976:

> I entirely concur with the view of the Chief Justice that the independence of the judiciary must remain protected from interventions from Members of the Cabinet—

He went on to say:

> —there should be an immediate clarification of the régime which under this and, I hope, any future Government will govern the relationship of Members of the Cabinet with Members of the judiciary.

Finally he said:

> —no Member of the Cabinet may communicate with members of the judiciary concerning any matter which they have before them in their judicial capacities—

I appreciate, Madam Speaker, as does this House, that the Minister of Labour wrote the letter directly to the Hon. Gerald Regan, the Secretary of State, but what bothers this House, my colleagues on this side, is that a copy went to members of METPAC. We do not know who "METPAC" is. If the Minister of Labour had a concern with the conduct of the citizenship judges, why do the members of METPAC have to be apprised of his concern? Would it not have been something which the Minister of Labour should have dealt with directly with the Secretary of State, without spreading this kind of malicious allegation to all the members of METPAC and, presumably, to their secretaries and the people in their offices?

I believe, Madam Speaker, what concerns this Parliament and my colleagues on this side is that the Minister of Labour, by his actions, has brought every citizenship judge in Canada into question. Stucture is one thing, but they should not suggest they show more rejections, or that women applicants are not getting a fair break, or that there have been clashes between judges, or that there have been deliberate attempts to keep members of an ethnic group from sitting on applications from their own ethnic group. That is what we on this side feel is a contempt of Parliament. By suggesting this in his letter, the Minister has made every member on both sides a party to this allegation. We feel that is an abuse of the privilege of all the Members of this House.

Madam Speaker: It seems to me that the question raised by the Hon. Member for Saskatoon West might be a legitimate complaint, one the Hon. Member might make in this House, but criticisms of judges made outside of the House certainly do not call for the intervention of the House. It is really a matter for the courts to decide if they feel that the judiciary has been in any way affected by those particular criticisms. The fact that these criticisms were made in a private letter which subsequently was circulated to a number of other people does not change the matter at all. As a matter of fact, this letter was supposed to have been circulated to members of METPAC. Who is METPAC? I do not know.

An Hon. Member: A Toronto Liberal organization.

Madam Speaker: I, as the Chair, have no way of finding out who these people are and why this letter has been circulated to them. This is a matter which has to be dealt with in another way than the one which is suggested by these two Hon. Members.

I would remind Hon. Members that criticisms of judges do not impair the operations of this House whereas a question of privilege would deal with the operations of this House. These particular criticisms of judges do not impair the operations of the House or obstruct Members, as a matter of fact, in their duties. They are able to perform their duties regardless of whether or not criticisms of that nature have been levelled at judges.

I have a lot of sympathy for the strong feelings which Members have about this particular situation, and they should be encouraged to pursue the matter in every possible way they feel they can pursue it, but I cannot allow them to do it under the guise of a question of privilege and, unfortunately, I have to rule that I do not find privilege in the Hon. Member's question.

I have a question of privilege from the Hon. Member for Willowdale (Mr. Peterson).

MR. PETERSON—CONDUCT OF MEMBERS OF OFFICIAL OPPOSITION

Mr. Jim Peterson (Willowdale): Madam Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege arising from today's proceedings. I feel that my privileges as a Member of Parliament to do the job for which I have been elected have been very seriously impaired by the type of conduct which I see going on today. We have already had at least five questions of privilege raised by Members of the Official Opposition. I see at least five or six other Members who are—

Madam Speaker: The Hon. Member might not like what is taking place in the House at the present time. He can have opinions on whatever is taking place, but certainly that is not a question of privilege. He has risen to expose a question of privilege, but unfortunately I have to interrupt him because he does not have a question of privilege.

The Hon. Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis) on a point of order.

Mr. Lewis: Madam Speaker, while you were delivering your judgment, the Hon. Member for Don Valley East (Mr. Smith) allowed to the House that he was a Member of METPAC, and that might be of some assistance to you.

Madam Speaker: The Hon. Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Blais) on a point of order.

[Translation]

Mr. Blais: Madam Speaker, my point of order concerns the procedure being used by the Members of the Opposition. I simply wish to point out that immediately after the oral question period, a series of questions of privilege were raised in an entirely disorderly fashion. As you know, Madam Speaker, there were at least six or seven other Members who advised the Chair that they intended to raise a question of privilege. My point or order is as follows: According to Standing Order 12 of the House of Commons, the Chair has the duty to preserve order in the House, and on page 441 of Erskine May, it says that it is the right of any Member of this House who conceives that a breach of order has been committed, to rise in his place.

With all due respect, Madam Speaker, I wish to say that after what happened when the bells started to ring yesterday afternoon, and considering the debate on the motion before the House pursuant to Standing Order 75C, and the position taken by the Opposition on motions of closure and time allocation under Standing Order 75C of the House of Commons, it is clear that the Opposition is systematically trying to create disorder in this House.

[English]

There are, of course, Madam Speaker, the rules of this House which have to be honoured, but beyond that there is the necessity in a democratic institution such as the Parliament of Canada that there be sound debate, and that the Orders of the Day, when they are ready to be called, ought to be called by the Chair. There ought not to be a possibility of systematic interruption by the misuse and abuse of the rules of the House by the raising of spurious questions of privilege by the Opposition. For them to do that, even though they may do that very quietly, in my view, Madam Speaker, constitutes a grave disorder that attacks the very essence of a deliberative body in a democratic society such as ours. And the Opposition, Madam Speaker, even though they think they are very bright and very smart in doing this, are discrediting the very essence of this Parliament of Canada and this House of Commons and they ought to be ashamed of themselves for doing so.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker: The Minister is absolutely correct in saying that when there is a breach of order, it is the duty of the Chair to intervene as appropriate. I do not know whether the Minister was openly or implicitly criticizing the Chair's behaviour in the circumstances, but it seems to me that this afternoon, all proceedings have taken place as prescribed by the Standing Orders. I cannot prevent Hon. Members from raising a question of privilege. I can only rule on questions of privilege. The questions are raised, and it is my duty to hear them. I try to ask Hon. Members to state their questions of privilege as quickly as possible, and especially to describe in the first few sentences what exactly their question of privilege is. That is what I have been doing all afternoon. If Hon. Members decide to raise a lot of questions of privilege, I cannot do otherwise but hear them, and in doing so, I am fulfilling my duties as Speaker of the House of Commons. The Hon. Members of the Official Opposition are using one provision of the Standing Orders, while Hon. Members on the Government side use others. I respect Hon. Members on both sides of the House, and I am trying to conduct this debate as calmly as possible.

[English]

I have a question of privilege from the Hon. Member for Halifax West (Mr. Crosby).

MR. CROSBY—ALLEGED LEAKING OF TASK FORCE REPORT ON ATLANTIC FISHERIES

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Madam Speaker, before I embark on my matter of privilege I think it behooves us to respond to some of the remarks of the Hon. Member for Nipissing (Mr. Blais) as to those who use the rules of the House.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member was rising on a point of order. He said what he had to say, I ruled on that point or order, and the Hon. Member will not comment on that ruling. If he wants to expose a question of privilege, I will hear him.

Mr. Crosby: Madam Speaker, matters of privilege do not give rise to legal precision in the manner in which some Members have indicated in this House. In fact, no less an authority than our own Clerk of the House has said in the course of an article that the Canadian Parliament has always refrained from defining privilege too precisely in order to avoid anything which could be used to limit privilege in the future. I remind the Chair of that statement because, in order properly to raise a question of privilege, one has to lay the groundwork and refer to the—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I see where the Hon. Member's question is coming from. The groundwork may be laid once the Hon. Member has told me what the question of privilege is. That is what the House wants to hear in the very first part of the Hon. Member's intervention. After that, if I feel I need some information, I will allow the Hon. Member to develop his arguments.

Mr. Crosby: Madam Speaker, if I may state my question of privilege as precisely as I can, it relates to the fact that the report of the task force on the Atlantic fisheries was prepared under Government direction and that matter has been reported on to the House. But what has happened over a period of time is that there has been systematic and deliberate leaking of items within the report by Ministers of the Crown, such as the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. De Bané), the Chairman of the Task Force, J. Michael Kirby, and other persons connected with the task force. Publication of elements of the report has caused great confusion and difficulty for people in my constituency, across my province of Nova Scotia, and to many who are concerned with the Atlantic fisheries.

Therefore, I rise to complain as a Member of the House of Commons that both my privileges and my ability to represent my constituents have been adversely affected by this deliberate action on the part of Members of the Government and others connected with the Government.

I can provide examples, Madam Speaker. In a statement printed in the Halifax Mail Star it is reported that the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans hinted there were differences within Cabinet. While he recognized the urgency of settling on a new policy, in those areas where there was no unanimity the report would have to be delayed.

In the case of J. Michael Kirby, Chairman of the Task Force, he has given interviews to members of the press also.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member has said nothing since the beginning of his intervention which would allow me to think that he has even the beginnings of a question of privilege. The Hon. Member knows that the way in which the Government chooses to publicize its policies, programs or studies has nothing to do with privilege. That is quite a different matter and I will not spend any time defining privilege to the Hon. Member. He knows what it is.

The leaking of publications to one person rather than to another—we had one the other day and I ruled on it—is not a question of privilege. If the Hon. Member has a question of privilege, I would like him to come to the point immediately so as to allow me to judge whether he has one. If he speaks for ten minutes without telling me what the question of privilege is, I will have to assume that it is not very clear in his mind where the privilege lies. I am sure the Hon. Member can be clear, and I invite him to be.

Mr. Crosby: Madam Speaker, in order to respond to the challenge you have given me—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Benjamin: What challenge?

Mr. Crosby: The challenge to state my question of privilege. It is simply this. On November 5, 1982 my colleague, the Hon. Member for South Shore (Mr. Crouse), asked the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans when the report would be published. The Minister responded that it would be published at some later date. Again the other day my colleague, the Hon. Member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser), asked when the report would be published and again the response was "At a later date". In fact, elements of the report are being published all the time by way of leaks to members of the press. That affects our privileges in dealing with this very important matter.

Without regard to the technicalities of privilege, Madam Speaker, which I would be pleased to discuss and provide documentation, I am simply saying that I am having difficulty dealing with this very vital matter of policy with respect to the Atlantic fisheries because there is a report before the Government which the Government has said it will release at a later date, and in fact elements of that report are being continually released by way of comments, interviews and material given to members of the press and others which are being published. It is simply that, Madam Speaker—a Government that chooses not to deliver the report to the House of Commons but to deliver it elsewhere.

Madam Speaker: Well, if I understand it, the Hon. Member is getting previews of that report. In a sense, that could turn out to be quite useful. However, I have to maintain my point. I have a lot of sympathy for the Hon. Member's complaint, but it is a complaint and he can bring it up in other circumstances, not under the guise of a question of privilege. I have to rule that he does not really have a question of privilege.

The Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) has a point of order.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. BENJAMIN—REQUEST TO TABLE DOCUMENT

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Madam Speaker, in order to be of assistance to all my colleagues in the House and to the Chair, I would like to seek unanimous consent to table an envelope addressed to Leslie Benjamin, Regina, Saskatchewan, under the frank of the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark), a letter on House of Commons stationery asking me for a donation for the P.C. Canada Fund.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Benjamin: Along with a leaflet referring to the Progressive Conservative Party financial statement. I would ask leave for unanimous consent to table these documents in the House.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Madam Speaker: Does the House give its unanimous consent for the tabling of these documents?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Madam Speaker: The Hon. Member does not have unanimous consent. The Hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Kilgour) on a question of privilege.

PRIVILEGE

MR. KILGOUR—ALLEGED UNPARLIAMENTARY LANGUAGE OF MR. BERGER

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): Madam Speaker, I will be very brief. As I indicated in my notice to you, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Berger), to the best of my information and belief, used the word "dinosaur" in referring to Members of this Party earlier in Question Period. I have not yet been able to get the "blues", but I am informed that that is the case. If you wish, Madam Speaker, to put the question to him and ask him whether or not he did do so, it is your choice to do so. Otherwise, I would go on to make the case that you should rule that the word "dinosaur" is not an acceptable parliamentary word.

• (1610)

Madam Speaker: I heard the word "dinosaur" but I do not know whether it is unparliamentary. I am just being advised that it is not on the list, so it is not an unparliamentary expression.

Mr. Kilgour: I think it should be.

Madam Speaker: I might rule on that some day! Furthermore, that is not a question of privilege. It is a point of order. I want to tell the Hon. Member that because he rose on a question of privilege and received priority over other Hon. Members who were rising on points of order, I have to apologize to the other Members who were rising on points of order for recognizing the Hon. Member, since he said he had a question of privilege. The Hon. Member for Annapolis Valley-Hants (Mr. Nowlan) told me this afternoon that questions of privilege have precedence, a point of which I am aware.

When Members who have questions of privilege do not rise in the House I cannot recognize them, and that was exactly the case. The Hon. Member does not have a point of order in this particular circumstance. I would remind him that anything concerning unparliamentary language is a point of order.

MR. NEIL—S.O. 43 MOTION OF MR. ALTHOUSE

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Madam Speaker, I will be very brief. My question of privilege arises as a result of a motion under Standing Order 43 this afternoon which was proposed by the Hon. Member for Humboldt-Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse) and seconded by the Hon. Member for Dauphin (Mr. Lewycky).

The motion is deliberately misleading in that it attempted to point out that two Members of my Party and I were supportive of the Canagrex Bill but have since changed our minds.

Madam Speaker: The Hon. Member is debating a motion which the House has dealt with already. There was no unanimous consent to debate the motion under Standing Order 43. He seems to be debating that motion just now, and I cannot allow it at this particular time because the House has dealt with it.

Mr. Neil: Madam Speaker, I am suggesting that if someone makes a statement in a motion under Standing Order 43 which deliberately misleads, there is a question of privilege and I, as a Member, am entitled to raise it.

Mr. Nielsen: Now you have a question of privilege. Go ahead.

Mr. Neil: I am entitled to rise on a question of privilege with respect to that motion. Otherwise, if that is not the case, the situation is that any Member of the House can rise on a motion under Standing Order 43 and impute motives, accuse people of something, and there is no recourse. I suggest that I have a question of privilege based on that motion under Standing Order 43. The suggestion was that I, in particular, along with two other Members, have changed my position with respect to Canagrex. This is not the case.

If the Hon. Member who proposed the motion and the Hon. Member who seconded it would read Hansard for January 29, they would find that that was not the case. In particular, if they look at Hansard for February 5, 1982 when the vote was taken on second reading, they will find there was no unanimous consent for second reading of Bill C-85 but that the vote on second reading was on division.

I suggest the motion was a deliberate attempt by the Hon. Member for Humboldt-Lake Centre to cast aspersions on myself and other Members of my Party named in the motion, and I believe I have a question of privilege.

Madam Speaker: I believe that is a point of order. The Hon. Member was mentioned in the motion under Standing Order 43. I suppose I have to take this as his desire to make a statement about the fact that his name was used. He has a point of order, and I guess the Hon. Member has made his point.

Mr. Epp: Madam Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. In referring to the comments of the Hon. Member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil), I would like to indicate that my name was mentioned as well as the Hon. Member for Provencher. I want to associate myself with the words of the Hon. Member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil) and suggest that this type of attempt to draw people into these kinds of statements has been a tactic the New Democratic Party has used for a long time and is not worthy of the House.

Madam Speaker: The point has been made.

MR. NOWLAN—REMARKS OF MR. TRUDEAU DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley-Hants): Madam Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I rose earlier to let the Chair know that I intended to raise a question of privilege at three o'clock. Quite frankly I would like to elaborate on it. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) is not here. I asked to see the "blues" or to have the "blues" here so that I could lay the facts on the table. In response to a question from me this afternoon, I heard the Prime Minister say that I fabricated—the word was "fabricated"—the quotes that I was using in my question. It is very clear under Beauchesne that "fabrication" or "fabricated"—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. It is also very clear that that is a point of order, not a question of privilege.

Mr. Nowlan: Madam Speaker, with respect, it says right in Beauchesne that this is a matter of privilege reflecting on a Member, in effect saying that I lied in the House of Commons. If that is not a fundamental question of privilege, I do not know what is.

Quite frankly, I will look at the "blues" tomorrow and I will not take too much of the time of the House. I want to give the Prime Minister notice that I was quoting from the historic document, "Cité Libre", of April, 1963 entitled: "Pearson or The Abandonment Of Conviction; 'Lester B. Pearson . . . the defrocked priest of peace'." This article was written by the Prime Minister, about whom many of us have heard before in terms of the article. I very deliberately used three quotations taken right from the article which, in effect, castigated the then Liberal Party for making a fundamental flip-flop on the Bomarc missile. Not a Liberal spoke out either in the Party or, more particularly, in the House of Commons. Those were the quotes which I used. The Prime Minister knows well from what I quoted; he knows this article. This article helped make a reputation for the gentleman in terms of a clear political and analytical finding. I am asking the Prime Minister to withdraw—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member is not going to continue this speech because he is continuing to debate a question which he raised during Question Period. He has pointed out that he is not certain he heard the word. When he makes certain that he did hear it, he can raise his point of order and I will accept it at that time, but not at this time.

POINTS OF ORDER

MR. HARQUAIL—RIGHT TO RESPOND TO QUESTIONS RAISED

Mr. Maurice Harquail (Restigouche): Madam Speaker, perhaps this will be helpful for Members on all sides. I would like to learn about the following from you. Three times this afternoon questions of privilege were raised and I thought it was a time-honoured rule that Members involved in questions of privilege be in the House to respond. The Hon. Member from Halifax West (Mr. Crosby) raised a question of privilege with respect to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. De Bané), who was not here. Another question was raised with respect to the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), who was not here.

Some Hon. Members: That is their problem.

Mr. Harquail: Is it not an accepted practice that, if a question of privilege is to be raised, there at least be agreement, understanding or common courtesy that the Member involved in the question of privilege be in the House to hear the question and be able to respond to it? Perhaps, Madam

Speaker, you could shed some light on this. Is it not an accepted practice?

Madam Speaker: It goes several ways. It is not a rule; it is a matter for the Speaker to determine whether the Speaker needs to hear a response on a question of privilege.

In these cases this afternoon I did not feel I required any response on the part of another Hon. Member. If they had been in the House and had sought the floor, perhaps I would have heard them, but I had to deal with this business. A question of privilege, as Hon. Members know, has a character of urgency and takes precedence over other business. I have been able to rule on these questions without hearing responses, and that is perfectly proper.

Mr. Harquail: Madam Speaker, just to finalize this, I defend those Members who are not here and reserve on the record their right to have the opportunity to respond and rebut the points which have been made.

Some Hon. Members: Tomorrow!

Madam Speaker: No, they would not have an opportunity to respond because, once I have ruled, the matter is closed. The Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Smith) might have chosen to respond in the names of the Hon. Members who were referred to. They did not ask for the floor and I was able to rule on those questions. I was sufficiently informed about the substance of what were not questions of privilege by the way, to rule on them.

MR. ALTHOUSE—REFERENCE BY MR. NEIL

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil) has just referred to my motion which I moved under the provisions of Standing Order 43 today as being deliberately misleading and an attempt to deliberately mislead the House, which I think casts aspersions on me. My motion was based specifically on what was recorded in Hansard at page 14471 and attributed to the Hon. Member for Moose Jaw. The point contained in my motion this day was that the Conservatives had been in favour of the buying and selling option. I shall quote from Hansard—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member should not be discussing his motion. He has raised one point; that is to say, the Hon. Member used the expression "deliberately misleading". I believe I heard that expression. Is the Hon. Member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil) quite certain that is what he wanted to say, or would he care to withdraw those words? The only way that charge can be made is in a substantive way.

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Madam Speaker, I deliberately made certain that I did not accuse the Hon. Member of deliberately misleading the House. I said that the motion was deliberately misleading; I did not say that the Hon. Member was deliberately misleading the House.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: I think the Hon. Member for Humboldt-Lake Centre can accept that. If he will, I think we can resolve the matter.

Mr. Althouse: Madam Speaker, on the point of order, I simply refer the House to page 14471 of Hansard where we find that the Hon. Member for Moose Jaw said:

> As far as I am concerned, Canagrex as a corporation should be concerned directly in sales, in co-ordinating sales with foreign governments and the industry in Canada.

Further down the page, we find:

> —the name of the game should be sales.

It was very clear that he discussed sales, and a buy and sell option was part of that.

Madam Speaker: I could not hear the last sentence of the Hon. Member because of the noise. Does the Hon. Member for Humboldt-Lake Centre consider that the intervention by the Hon. Member for Moose Jaw satisfies the point of order he raised earlier?

Mr. Althouse: Yes, Madam Speaker. I am satisfied with the Hon. Member's statement that I have not misled the House. I was simply pointing out that the motion itself was not misleading the House either, as Hansard itself shows.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, on that very point, the Hon. Member for Humboldt-Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse) has said that my colleague, the Hon. Member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil), stated that he withdrew the charge of deliberately misleading. In fact, what the Hon. Member for Moose Jaw said was that the motion was deliberately misleading—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. That matter is settled to the satisfaction of both Members. That is the spirit in which this rule is applied. If Members are satisfied that they have not been offended or that language which is not parliamentary has not been preferred against them, then they are both satisfied and the matter is closed.

MR. SCOTT (HAMILTON-WENTWORTH)—REPLY OF MR. BERGER DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Madam Speaker, my point of order arises from an answer given to me earlier this day during Question Period by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Berger). This is the earliest opportunity I have had to raise my point. The Parliamentary Secretary asked me where I got information that metric conversion was voluntary in Canada. I want the record to show that the Government's own brochures which are being sent out by way of—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member asked a question during the course of Question Period. He received an answer. If he is not satisfied with that answer, he may not bring it back under the guise of a point of order. This is not a point of order. He may ask another question tomorrow during Question Period, and every day subsequently, if he gets the floor. That is the way to deal with that particular question.

MR. MALONE—DISTRIBUTION OF MATERIAL RESPECTING PENSIONS

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. This point of order is one to which I know you will want to give some attention. It relates to the distribution of materials in the House of Commons itself. I make specific reference to the recent tabling by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) of a new pensions approach for Canadians. So far there is nothing wrong. But what happened, as I understand it, is that around 3.30 p.m. that day, arriving here on Parliament Hill was a vehicle containing all of the printed material. Interestingly enough, first to be unloaded were volumes and volumes of specific brochures for the media, after the vehicle had previously stopped at the National Press Club. Again, when Members attempted right after to obtain copies, we found that those materials were not available to us.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I think it will be obvious to the Hon. Member why this particular matter is not my concern. I do not control the buses. I do not control their itinerary, and I have no reason to do so. If the Hon. Member has a complaint, and it might be legitimate, he can make it to the Hon. Minister or to any other person who is in charge of distribution; but those distributions are certainly not my responsibility.

Mr. Malone: Madam Speaker, I hear your comments and I accept them totally. You are absolutely right, and I would not expect you to have any control of the buses. That, however, was not the point. The point I was coming to was that the media had for at least 40 minutes full access to all information while Members of the House of Commons did not. I share this with you, that when we approached distribution, the people in distribution expressed most vividly how concerned they were and told us that if we wanted copies—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I have to correct the Hon. Member. As soon as the document was tabled in the House, it was, in principle, available to Hon. Members and they could consult it. At any rate, if the Hon. Member has a complaint about the press getting one copy or several copies before he did, that might be a legitimate complaint; but he had better make it to the Minister and not to myself. As far as the House is concerned, the document was tabled and Members could consult it.

MR. ANDRE—AUTHORITY FOR SALARY INCREASE FOR MR. MICHAEL PITFIELD

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Earlier this afternoon the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) asked the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) a question about the salary increase recently given on November 5 to Michael Pitfield, formerly Principal Secretary to the Privy Council. The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition asked upon what authority that was done. The Prime Minister replied, perhaps in error, that it was done on the advice of the private sector advisory committee on upper level public servants' salaries. That advisory committee advises on levels only, not on specific elements.

Perhaps the Prime Minister may have unintentionally misled the House, but in terms of that authority, Michael Pitfield when rehired by the Prime Minister in March, 1980, arranged—

Madam Speaker: That is not a point of order.

Mr. Andre: Madam Speaker—

Madam Speaker: No, the Hon. Member may not continue discussion on questions that were raised during Question Period. If he wants to receive more information on that particular matter, he can ask questions tomorrow during Question Period, but he cannot debate this matter in the House now under a point of order. Unless he does have a point of order, I cannot allow the Hon. Member to continue.

• (1630)

Mr. Andre: Madam Speaker, I have a very specific point of order in terms of the authority with regard to Estimates and Appropriations Bills. I will get to that point of order as quickly as possible without making the whole discussion totally incomprehensible because of a tremendous leap being required from the start to the main point.
