Let me just deal for a minute, if I may before I sit down, with this piece of legislation, which we will vote against. This legislation, unfortunately, puts the burden of fighting inflation on the backs of the people who cannot fight back.

If in fact the Government, and I know who are the proponents of this Bill, the people who are trying to put this Bill in place, the NDP obviously do not know, if those people have to carry the whole burden of the inflationary program of this Government, then it is entirely unfair. Surely the answer is to reduce inflation first, and then the indexation which is in place will not in fact increase over 6 per cent or 5 per cent. Surely that is the logical way to do the job. Surely a Government which has been in power so long should be capable of coming up with ways to do just that. Obviously it is not.

In closing, I say that we are going after the wrong people. There are those people in the civil service in Ottawa, as we have heard, who somehow seem to not know where they are going. And there are probably quite a few more than there should be. But I say that whether one goes to Regina or Vancouver or the city of Belleville, where I live, and talk to those people who are doing their jobs in the small offices of the Department of Agriculture, or in the Unemployment Insurance Commission, which happens to have its head office in Belleville, they are doing their jobs the very best way they know how. They are doing it for a Government that hands them Bill C-133, and it is time we all voted against that Bill, and did the job properly.

Mr. Bill Vankoughnet (Hastings-Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate this opportunity to speak against Bill C-133, and particularly this amendment, which is an insult.

I agree with the concept of Government restraint. The record shows that we voted in favour of the restraint program of the federal Government. I would like to make it perfectly clear now that the vote was not also a vote in favour of breaking faith with the many public service pensioners who will be affected by Bill C-133. I find it very disturbing that, as part of the federal Government's so-called restraint program, it has decided to penalize public sector pensioners. I am deeply concerned that this Government, reversing its repeated promise for a just and equitable tax system, is now adopting a proposal which clearly discriminates against a segment of the population who are the most susceptible to the vagaries of this recession-wracked economy, elderly pensioners.

Indexation of our tax system affords taxpayers a measure of protection against inflation and at the same time imposes a degree of financial discipline and spending control of the federal Treasury. With this proposal, the Government will profit from inflation through the erosion of the income of civil service pensions. No incentive will exist for this Government to try to halt the inflation spiral. Unlike those Canadians who, despite Liberal policies, are working, pensioners are not able to negotiate increases to their incomes to help them cope with rising costs. That is why the fully indexed pension is so necessary. It enables men and women on fixed incomes to keep the purchasing power they have when they retire. The argument that the universal old age pension goes equally to the well-off as to the needy elderly, does not apply. The very needy elderly are eligible for the Guaranteed Income Supplement, which continues to be fully indexed. The well-off elderly are in a fortunate position. However, there are about 100,000 elderly recipients of universal old age pensions whose outside incomes are just barely above the $6,000 cut-off for the Guaranteed Income Supplement.

The Senate of Canada maintains that a two-person family earning less than $11,030 in 1980, a figure which must be higher now considering this Government's track record of recessionary policies, live in abject poverty. Former public sector workers and their survivors currently receive an average of only $6,900 per year. In large cities, pensioners live well below the poverty line. While $55 may not seem to be a large amount of money, to many pensioners who have planned for their retirement, next year this amount will be very important.

Mr. Speaker, may I call it six o'clock?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I thank the Hon. Member for calling it six o'clock and in this pre-prandial hour, thanks is due to the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) for his generous offer of assistance.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

NATIONAL SECURITY—POSITION OF CANADIAN GOVERNMENT VIS-A-VIS SOVIET GOVERNMENT. (B) REQUEST FOR REDUCTION IN NUMBER OF SOVIET EMBASSY OFFICIALS

Mr. John Gamble (York North): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to address, at some greater length, a question which I asked of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) on December 10, 1982, and the response to that question.

It will be recalled that my concern, expressed in Hansard at page 21474, involved the spy Hambleton and the revelation that in a British court, not a Canadian court, the country for whom Hambleton was engaged in his spying activities was the Soviet Union. Having regard to that disclosure, I asked the Prime Minister what note of protest his Government has sent to the dictatorial regime in the Kremlin. He confronted me with the response, which is on record, that to the best of his knowledge there has been no specific protests at that time.

I then went on to deal with the fundamental problem that exists with respect to the staffing of the Soviet embassy by agents of the KGB, either properly so-called or otherwise. I pointed out to the Prime Minister that this was not a novel or unusual circumstance in that it was not that long ago that 12 employees of the Soviet embassy had been expelled from Canada for conducting espionage activities. His response to me was that that showed very clearly that the Government was indeed on its toes, astute and alert and about to deal with those who tampered with our national security.

Let me refer to Hansard for April 2, 1982 when almost the exact circumstance was raised by myself in the House. I refer to page 16098. In that case I referred to the expulsion from Canada of a certain Mikhail Abramov, an official of the Soviet embassy who was carrying out activities which were illegal under Canadian law. Accordingly, he was denied continued residence in this country. It will be recalled that Mr. Abramov had endeavoured, unsuccessfully that time, to convince a Canadian citizen to provide him with information of a technical nature which had been denied the Soviet Government as a consequence of its invasion of Afghanistan.

On that occasion I referred to a statement by the then secretary of state for External Affairs, now the Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan), in which he dealt with the revelations of the espionage activities of Mr. Abramov. That particular press release noted that "this is the third time in a period of four years that Russians have been involved in activities of this nature." With the Hambleton affair, we might now conclude that there were four occurrences within a four-year period, or maybe three and a half-years. In any event, the circumstance with which we are confronted is one in which the Soviet Union consistently breaches our laws and engages in activities which are directly related to efforts made by their agents to subvert Canadian justice and penetrate our security.

The point I made in both cases was simply this. It is time we laid down a rule to the Soviet Union that they would understand. I suggested that that rule be this. In the event that an agent of the Soviet Union is found to be engaging in subversive acts in Canada or endeavouring to tamper with our security system or enticing Canadians to commit treason, for every expelled Soviet diplomat or agent, five of their embassy staff shall be expelled. This would be done in the hope and expectation that by reducing the number of these agents, the security of Canada may be protected.

Mr. Douglas Fisher (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his comment to the effect that, in his view, the Government is alert and on its toes, ready to protect our national security. I believe those were his exact words and he is correct in that analysis.

When the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) replied to this question on December 10 he said that the Government does not hesitate to demand the withdrawal of personnel from Canada who have abused their diplomatic status or who have behaved in ways contrary to their responsibilities as representatives of their countries. This includes the Soviet Union. The record shows that Canada has been prepared to take appropriate action as circumstances dictate. Indeed, since 1978, a total of 18 foreign officials from four different countries have been declared persona non grata. The Hon. Member should know that prompt and firm action is certainly taken against all foreign officials who abuse their diplomatic status.

It is important, however, to repeat that diplomats are posted to Canada for valid and entirely legitimate reasons. They have important functions to fulfill representing their countries' interests here, just as our representatives have in their countries. We encourage normal diplomatic functions by any embassy and we expect that same treatment for our representatives abroad.

In the case of the Soviet Union, we are aware that in the past some officials have abused their status and we have reacted appropriately. A permanent reduction in the number of Soviet Embassy staff, however, would certainly not guarantee that such unacceptable activities would end. It would, however, undoubtedly invite retaliation against our Embassy in Moscow and inevitably it would adversely affect the important work carried out by both embassies in managing Canada-Soviet relations. If we applied the Hon. Member's magical rule of five expulsions for every sin, then we would expect the same treatment to be meted out to our people in Moscow. That would not be useful.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE—PLIGHT OF PERSONS EXHAUSTING BENEFITS—REQUEST FOR AID TO MUNICIPALITIES

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, this evening I would like to raise a very special problem which has occurred in certain parts of Canada, namely, the two communities of Kamloops and Salmon Arm, British Columbia.

The unemployment rate in Kamloops as of last week was 27.4 per cent, and in Salmon Arm it was in excess of 30 per cent. These communities have had to adjust to an extremely trying situation and they have done so by formulating a series of food bank operations for needy families. They have set up unemployment guidance centres to advise on both economic and social aspects which face a family or individual experiencing unemployment, particularly those who have been unemployed for more than a year and who are now part of that growing group called "exhausties" who have lost their UIC benefits and are now dependent upon welfare or other forms of social assistance. The mayors of the communities have established special employment crisis centres. Local groups are again doing a variety of volunteer tasks to ease the unemployment problem which now face so many families in these two communities.

The question, Mr. Speaker, is this. What does the Federal Government have for these communities faced with these very special problems at this time? We hear of programs such as ILAP, under which a certain community is designated because of a high level of unemployment and the difficult circumstances it faces. I should like to ask how much unemployment is required before a community is designated under that scheme to provide financial assistance to both the public and private sector. It seems to me that 27 per cent and 30 per cent unemployment is far in excess of the statistics for those communities that have already received designations under programs such as ILAP.

I should like to ask the Government to consider these two communities as being in some special circumstances, and give special consideration to them for public works projects, for instance, that could be financed through a number of federal Government schemes.

The fundamental question my constituents have asked me to pose to the Government is, how many people have to be unemployment before a community is considered eligible for special assistance from the federal Government?

It has been proposed that the period for which people receive UI benefits should be extended in special circumstances. At the present time, many people who have received benefits for 52 weeks no longer qualify and see their incomes collapse to the social welfare level. Some of them end up losing their homes, their businesses, their farms or whatever.

I realize that people sometimes describe situations in terms that make them seem worse than they are, but 27 per cent and 30 per cent unemployment in a community means that the situation is very severe indeed. It does not look as if things will get much better in the months ahead. Like everyone else, I hope that economic recovery is just around the corner, but until we see some clear evidence of it I suspect that unemployment will increase.

I ask the Member of the Government who will reply, and for whom I have a great deal of respect, to give these two hard-pressed communities some encouragement so that they may approach the future with optimism.

Mr. Douglas Fisher (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, may I immediately tell the Hon. Member that he has raised his concerns at a most appropriate time, just before the presentation of a budget by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde). I am certain that these representations, among others, will be considered seriously by the Minister in the preparation of that document.

I think we should offer a small explanation on each of the two issues he has raised. He asked about a universal increase in the benefit period for unemployment insurance and also about increasing some tax rates in order to pay for that. In good conscience, he discussed the communities where unemployment is running at 30 and 40 per cent. His proposal to increase benefits would also apply, however, in an area like my own where we are fortunate enough to have an 8 per cent unemployment rate. I think we need to target the help more to distressed communities rather than making it universal. In an area like mine, unemployed people have communities like Toronto, Mississauga, Oakville, Burlington and Guelph in which to approach employers in thousands of businesses for work. Those people would benefit as much as those people in isolated places. For that reason we introduced targeted programs like ILAP and NEED.

I would refer the Hon. Member specifically to the municipal options available under the NEED program through which communities can build up their infrastructure and, at the same time, hire people who are exhausting their benefits. In that way, they can kill two birds with the one stone. They can get rid of some of the headaches that up to now the municipalities have not been able to solve.

The tax question is equally important and equally serious. I urge the Hon. Member to look at the advantages of leaving the money in the private sector where it can stimulate investment and where it can stimulate the creation of jobs. In effect, we have already had a tax increase, the increase in unemployment insurance premiums in October to both employers and employees.

I do not think it would be appropriate to drain more money out of the private sector at this time just to increase the period of time for universal unemployment insurance benefits. We should be looking at targeted programs and we should be encouraging investment. At the same time I encourage the Hon. Member to continue making his representations so that the Minister can take them into account in the preparation of his next budget.

AGRICULTURE—LEVEL OF BEEF IMPORTS. (B) BALANCE REMAINING IN QUOTAS

Mr. Bert Hargrave (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, my adjournment debate participation this evening is related to questions I directed to the Minister of State for International Trade (Mr. Regan) respecting the matter of recent beef imports into Canada. The details can be found in Hansard of November 5, as reported on pages 20447 and 20448.

At that time I asked whether current beef imports into Canada were being properly monitored according to an earlier September meeting between the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) and some of his staff and the newly-appointed Meat Import Advisory Committee. This monitoring procedure was necessary because of the then anticipated reduction in Canadian exports of beef to the United States under the terms of the U.S. meat import law.

This year-end disruption of beef imports and exports between Canada and the United States was precipitated by the ongoing very serious drought in Australia. This situation, which was really tragic in that country, interrupted the last half of their 1982 exports into North America and caused considerable disruption. It caused stepped-up beef exports from Australia to both the United States and Canada, but mainly into the United States because its market was obviously higher.

In his response the Minister admitted to the danger of "some of that excess being diverted into Canadian markets". Now we have a better understanding of what developed after Australia, New Zealand and Canada voluntarily agreed to reduce and limit their beef exports to the United States, in return, for which the United States would not trigger its reduced beef import law quotas to which they were entitled. Unfortunately it took Canadian authorities more than a month to put this quota control into effect.

In October 1982 the Government announced that Canada's quota had been filled, and we began to experience a serious drop in our Canadian live cow prices. Our shipment of live cows had been increasing since the United States beef quota had been applied. Two situations developed. Our live cow prices were depressed rather significantly and the incident provided a short-term but serious irritant to American cattlemen. I know from my own experience that something like this upsets a usually good relationship between our two countries. This was all because of the delay of over a month in the Canadian Government's institution of the export permit system to provide a basis of monitoring.

The voluntary import limitation agreement was the right approach; I hasten to point that out. It was fully supported and suggested in the first place by the Canadian Cattlemen's Association. The Association also suggested quarterly quotas for the new year that we are into now. Unfortunately the joint statement at the end of last year, on December 30, did not suggest this. The reason is obvious.

We know the threat of excessive imports exceeding quotas at this time is not very likely. Nevertheless, this experience in 1982 suggests that not only should a quota have been declared in that joint statement at the end of last year by the Minister of State for International Trade and the Minister of Agriculture. But also, we feel sure, and the Canadian Cattlemen's Association recommended, that it be should done on a quarterly basis.

I would suggest one other recommendation I hope the Government will take seriously. When we have an upsetting situation or an emergency, such as took place in the last six or seven weeks of 1982, which requires a voluntary quota system, such as we used, a monitoring permit system should be declared early, giving the trade—not only the producers but the importers and exporters—to get used to the fact that they can expect a monitoring system under the Export and Import Permits Act.

This should be done early enough so that we do not have the panic effect we had last fall. Even though the Government indicated what it would do, it took a long time to implement the monitoring process. That had rather serious consequences on the price of our live cattle, in particular.

There is one other point concerning this situation that I think is worth mentioning. Surely this is the time to think about the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade. We had one preliminary early meeting late last fall. This reminds us of the situation that developed in the discussions that took place in the Tokyo round during the last GATT negotiations a little over three years ago. Now that is behind us and we see the situation that developed. We know our negotiators were outmanoeuvred in the Tokyo round in two areas.

The first was the guaranteed minimum access level, to which Canada subscribed, for meat imports coming into Canada, mostly from Australia, New Zealand and the United States. It was set too high. I think that is obvious now. Perhaps the reason is that at the time of the negotiations Canada had an all-time high in our cattle population. That situation has drastically changed. It may be years before we ever reach that peak again. But let us remember, such is not the time to negotiate a guaranteed minimum access level. The figure set has caused us considerable trouble.

The second thing that developed out of those negotiations was our agreement as a trading partner to what is known as a human population growth factor. No other country, especially the United States, was asked to make such an agreement. This was an agreement that as our human population increased each year, which is inevitable, so should the level of imports of Canada. That has imposed a long-term load on what we are expected to take into Canada. This is very discouraging to our domestic cattle producers at a time when they need some incentive to get back into the industry.

Mr. Douglas Fisher (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the points raised by the Hon. Member. I will make sure they are drawn to the attention of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) and the Minister of State for International Trade (Mr. Regan).

The Hon. Member pointed out the events of 1982. I would like to note further that on September 28, the Governments of Canada and the United States entered into an arrangement to control the trade in beef and veal for the calendar year ending December 31, 1982. The two Governments anticipated that Canadian exports of beef and veal to the United States would not exceed 121.1 million pounds and that U.S. exports of beef and veal to Canada would not exceed 21.4 million pounds, both figures for 1982.

Consequently, beef and veal were placed on the Export Control List and the Import Control List effective October 1, thereby requiring export and import permits for the last quarter of 1982.

On December 31, 1982, the Minister of State for International Trade and the Minister of Agriculture announced that upon review of the international meat situation, Canadian import controls would not be required for at least the initial 1983 period. In addition, a review of the U.S. beef market indicated that, at least for the first two-quarters of 1983, it would not be necessary to restrict beef exports to the U.S. In view of these developments, the requirements for export and import permits were revoked, effective January 1, 1983.

The Minister of agriculture has added, however, that the decision not to limit imports of beef and veal in 1983 would be reviewed on a quarterly basis—and that is close to what was said in one of the comments by the Hon. Member—and that import action would be considered if the forecast for imports of beef and veal increased significantly, or if the United States moved to restrict its own beef and veal imports.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at two o'clock.

At 6.28 p.m., the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

INSTITUTION OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE TO STUDY CROWSNEST PASS RATES MODIFICATIONS

Mr. Jean-Guy Dubois (Lotbinière): Madam Speaker, I am pleased with this opportunity, under the provisions of Standing Order 21, to discuss the changes in the Crow rate and thus the Gilson report. Since the report was published, Madam Speaker, the Quebec caucus, both at its meeting in Jonquière in September and since the beginning of the session on October 27, 1982, has been meeting with farmers and with representatives of the FPU, the Coopérative fédérée and the Association des meuniers du Québec to discuss the general situation. At the insistance of all Quebec members, the caucus formed a special committee, and although a great many members were interested, we had to keep the number of committee members to ten. On this committee, the members for Rimouski-Témiscouata (Mrs. Côté), Chicoutimi (Mr. Dionne), Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot (Mr. Ostiguy), Portneuf (Mr. Dion), Lévis (Mr. Gourde), Beauce (Mr. Lapointe), Lac-Saint-Jean (Mr. Gimaïel), Mégantic-Compton-Stanstead (Mr. Tessier) and Richmond-Wolfe (Mr. Tardif) and myself, as chairman, are working to protect the interests of Quebec's farmers and to promote the equitable development of Canadian agriculture from east to west, so that no one is penalized and everyone will have a role to play in Canada's agricultural industry.

CANADA DEPOSIT INSURANCE CORPORATION

LIMIT OF PROTECTION FOR INVESTORS

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Madam Speaker, the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Cosgrove) announced that he would introduce draft legislation soon to increase guarantee deposit insurance coverage. Agitation to increase the 1967 limit began as early as 1975. Astra Trust went broke in 1980, and still the Government refused an increase and called for a study. The report of that study was in the hands of the appropriate Minister for more than a year, yet the Government refused to act.

The 1967 dollar upon which the $20,000 limit was based is now worth only 40 cents. Per capita savings in Canada are greater than they are in the United States. Now, after three more trust companies are shown to suffer from financial instability, the Government is struck with creeping paralysis.

The Minister said that each depositor will be insured up to $60,000. A director of CDIC and the Superintendent of Insurance said that, until legislation is passed, depositors will still be limited to a guarantee of $20,000, although they may be protected up to $60,000. What those depositors should have—and the legislation should contain—is a guarantee of up to $100,000. Since the legislation has to be retroactive, why will the Government not give the same protection to the depositors of Astra Trust as to the three trust companies now under consideration?

COMMUNICATIONS

PAY TV—EFFECTS OF PORNOGRAPHIC FILMS

Mr. Henri Tousignant (Témiscamingue): Madam Speaker, I wish to thank you for giving me a chance to bring to the attention of this House a matter that is making the headlines and which remains a very controversial question. I am referring to the advent of pay television and to its programming which is expected to include pornographic films. Now, I do not wish to seem prudish or Victorian—in fact some of my colleagues will agree that I am quite broad-minded in such matters—but I think it would be useful, Madam Speaker, to ask ourselves what the constructive and what the negative effects of this type of film will be, and I am thinking of negative in terms of delinquency, violence and perhaps social disorder. Unfortunately, ninety seconds would be too short to provide supporting evidence, but I do hope that the members of this House will be willing to consider this matter very seriously and to take a strong stand at the appropriate time. After all, whatever the terms of licensing of these companies or television networks may be, we, in this House, have the power to decide one way or another, and if the majority of the House is against this type of entertainment, I think we should decide according to our convictions.

SHIPBUILDING

NECESSITY FOR "BUY CANADIAN" PRINCIPLE

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Madam Speaker, Canadian shipyards have demonstrated a production capability that makes our shipbuilding industry equal or superior to the world-wide standard, yet over 2,000 shipyard workers are unemployed in the Maritimes, and thousands more across Canada. Canadian shipyards can compete internationally and for domestic orders if the ground rules are the same for all competitors. Unfortunately they are not.

Some shipbuilding nations subsidize employment. Others use their national banking system or treasury to assist ship construction. Canadian shipyards cannot compete for foreign or domestic orders in the face of such massive national subsidization. In order to maintain viability and secure thousands of skilled jobs, Government protection and help are required.

Here is part of the problem—East Coast resource exploration has created a huge demand for marine drilling rigs and service vessels, yet only the Sedco 709, among the 20 or more drilling rigs, is Canadian-built. Even Petro-Canada charters foreign built oil rigs and service vessels. Canada must have a shipbuilding policy that establishes a "Buy Canadian" principle for energy exploration and the fishery, as well as northern and coastal marine activity, thereby excluding non-Canadian vessels.

The Government policy must also provide realistic financial assistance to off-set the support provided in competing nations. Unless a Government shipbuilding policy provides adequate protection and assistance, a viable job-generating industry will be destroyed. The proposed shipbuilding policy does not meet this test.

INDUSTRY AND LABOUR ADJUSTMENT PROGRAM

DESIGNATION OF COMMUNITIES

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Madam Speaker, it is well known that certain Canadian communities are experiencing more economic pain than others as a result of the present recession/depression. In an effort to provide special support to those communities especially hard hit, the Government of Canada established the Industry and Labour Adjustment Program. Consequently, a number of communities are receiving special financial assistance, as a result of having been designated under ILAP.

Recent employment figures have identified the communities of Kamloops, B.C., and Salmon Arm, B.C. with unemployment rates of 27 per cent and 30 per cent respectively. These unemployment levels are the highest in Canada. These communities have therefore been ravaged by unemployment more than most. To seek relief, both formal and informal requests for designation under ILAP have been made. To date these appeals have fallen on deaf ears.

The questions which spring to mind are: first, how devastated must a community be before it is designated under ILAP and, second, is the designation under ILAP based on a community's need, or is it designated under the auspices of patronage?

THE ECONOMY

SUGGESTED FORMATION OF PRODUCTIVITY COUNCIL

Mr. Stanley Hudecki (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, during this harsh economic time it is especially significant to note that Canada stands alone among the major industrialized nations in that it does not have some form of national productivity centre.

As the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) stated in his three talks to the nation, improvement in the country's economy, especially in regard to our international trading position, requires, in part, an improvement in Canadian productivity. I would like therefore to suggest that the federal Government, in co-operation with the Provinces and other business and labour groups, consider the formation of a Canadian productivity council. Such a council could have as its goals: first, to raise the country's level of productivity consciousness; second, to act as a clearing house for productivity research and literature; and third, to establish centres across the country and offer short courses in productivity improvement.

These goals would in turn encourage both business and labour to increase productivity, decrease the per unit cost of our goods and services, and thereby increase the competitiveness of Canadian goods and services both at home and abroad which would help to spur on the Canadian economy and employment opportunities.

AGRICULTURE

CAPITAL GAINS TAX ON FARMLAND

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills): Most Canadians, including many MPs, believe Canada has enormous agricultural land. That belief is totally untrue and is very dangerous. On a global scale, Canada has only 3 per cent of the world's arable land. Canada has less agricultural land than Western Europe, and one-seventh that of the U.S.A. Within Canada only 13 per cent of our land is arable, and only 4 per cent of that is class one or two.

The yearly loss of agricultural land is enormous. It is over 30,000 acres. The number of farmers has dropped 55 per cent since 1941 to some 318,000.

Liberal Party economic policies have resulted in over 50 per cent of our farmers having to earn income off their farms to survive. The most recent attack on farmers is the capital gains tax. In fact it is a tax on capital, because inflation has been the reason for increased land values and not productivity.

It is now almost impossible for a farmer to keep a farm together as one unit and pass it on to the next generation. Capital gains tax is a time bomb which will result in Canadians standing in food lines. The solution, and it is essential to our national well-being, is for the capital gains tax to be abolished on bona fide farmland. This will encourage small family farms which, in turn, will buy machinery from Canadian manufacturers. It will also result in farms being better managed, and in a higher percentage of food self-sufficiency.

Fellow MPs, let us act together now so our descendants will be proud of us and not curse us from bread lines.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

TRUST COMPANIES

GOVERNMENT ROLE IN INVESTIGATION OF POSSIBLE ILLEGAL ACTIVITIES

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Finance. It concerns the Crown Trust, Greymac, and Seaway Mortgage mess that we are all reading so much about in the newspapers. It becomes clearer every day that the inaction on the part of this Government has been a clear factor in leading to the expected bankruptcies of these companies.

I have been told that over a year ago the Government was made aware of the problems and the manipulations which were occurring in the activities of these companies, yet it took action only after the Province of Ontario stepped in to take over the companies. The result of this delay has meant that the savings of Canadians, their registered savings plans, have been put at risk.

When did the Government take action to look into and stop these possibly illegal activities, in its role as a regulator of the mortgage companies or as the trustee for the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, with respect, the Hon. Member has confused the provincial trust companies under the jurisdiction of the province of Ontario with the supervision exercised by the Superintendent of Insurance over federally incorporated mortgage companies. I would respectfully suggest to the Hon. Member, if he is genuinely concerned and feels, for example, that the statement made by the Hon. Mr. Elgie in the Ontario Legislature was not satisfactory and did not give answers to his questions, that he contact the Minister who is a resident in the Hon. Member's own municipal area.

Mr. Wilson: That is an incredible answer. The Minister totally avoided the question which I put to him. The point is that the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation and two mortgage companies are under his jurisdiction as Minister of State for Finance.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

OWNERSHIP OF CROWN TRUST—ROLE OF CANADA DEPOSIT INSURANCE CORPORATION

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, since the loss to the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation could be well in excess of $100 million, since the transfer of the Crown Trust Company to new owners is an important element in minimizing the loss to the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation and the depositors, and since there is some suggestion that CDIC has been delaying the transfer of ownership of Crown Trust to new owners, would the Minister tell the House what he will do to ensure the speedy transfer of Crown Trust to new owners and thereby help salvage the savings of those many Canadians which are at risk right now?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, now I am convinced that the Hon. Member is confused. He is restricting his questions to the discussion of Crown Trust. That is clearly a provincially incorporated corporation. It is under the jurisdiction of the Minister in the Province of Ontario. Again I would urge the Hon. Member to speak to his Conservative Minister in the Province of Ontario.

Mr. Wilson: If the Minister would only listen to the question that I put to him—the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation is under his responsibility and jurisdiction. That was the basis of the question, as well as what is the CDIC doing to allow that transfer of Crown Trust shares.

REQUEST FOR REPORT FROM MINISTER

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, the Minister mentioned the statement made by Dr. Elgie in the provincial House at Queen's Park the other day. When will the Minister make some statements on these facts to this House? When will he report on the activities of the CDIC with respect to the transfer of Crown Trust? When will he respond to the first question that I asked him about what the Government has been doing with the two mortgage corporations under his jurisdiction, since there are hundreds of millions of dollars in savings of individual Canadians at risk here? I remind you, Madam Speaker, that this could be the largest single financial default in Canadian financial history.

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, I would remind the Hon. Member that the specific issue of the transfer of a provincially controlled trust company lies exclusively within the jurisdiction and under the legislation of the Province of Ontario.

Second, I would remind the Hon. Member of the obvious difficulties that are being experienced by companies, the largest of which is Crown. That is a company which is exclusively under the jurisdiction of the Province of Ontario.

The answer to the last question is yes, the question of Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation is a matter under federal jurisdiction, and yes, the Superintendent of Insurance has taken some actions. According to the legislation, the Minister responsible for the superintendent in this area is required to exercise a quasi judicial hearing in the matter. That is presently under way. Until such time as it is concluded I could not, under law, under conscience, or as a practical matter, respond in detail.

GOVERNMENT RESPONSIBILITY

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, the Minister's CDIC yesterday took the liquid assets of Crown Trust and put them in the Bank of Canada. If that is not exercising some responsibility, what is it? Will the Minister tell us about that? While he is at it, will he stop ducking his responsibility? He knows that ever since this Parliament opened, this Party, the Opposition, has been demanding some responsibility. We have seen Re-Mor, we have seen Astra Trust, we will have seen Caledonia and Pitts Insurance Company. When will the Government do something, come clean, and exercise some sense of responsibility to the people of Canada?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, the Superintendent of Insurance of Canada, as one of the officers of the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation, in response to the request from the Minister of the Province of Ontario, agreed to support the Province's action in assuming responsibility for Crown Trust, a company exclusively under its jurisdiction, under its supervision, and now under its control.

The Province asked for the help of the federal Government. We have given that help. More than that, we have accepted the advice of the Hon. Member and many of his colleagues, including the last Hon. Member who asked the question, who, in July, asked the Government to increase Canada Deposit Insurance coverage to $60,000. We have done that, and we have done it quickly. We think we have moved with the interests of small, ordinary Canadians in mind, and we will continue to keep their interests at heart.

VALUE OF SECURITIES

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, the Government knows, as all Canadians know, that we have had falling real estate prices, yet the bulk of the assets of these companies are in mortgages which are supposed to be less than 75 per cent of value. The Superintendent of Insurance and the Government have been asked to inquire into the value of securities behind trust and loan companies. What action has the Government taken to inspect the real estate securities of trust and loan companies to ensure that mortgage indebtedness against properties is not more than 75 per cent?

An Hon. Member: Speak to Bill Davis.

Mr. Blenkarn: What effort has the Government made to ensure that people can have faith in money they have with trust and loan companies?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, to begin with, the Government has indicated that it will increase mortgage deposit insurance from the present limit of $20,000 to $60,000. That legislation will be introduced in this House of Commons this afternoon—

Miss MacDonald: Mine will!

Mr. Cosgrove: —and in view of the fact that many Hon. Members oppposite, including the Hon. Member who asked the question, requested that increase, we hope that we will have the assistance of all Hon. Members in the House, who are obviously concerned about the issue, to give speedy passage to that legislation.

Second, because the provincially controlled corporations, the trust companies to which the Hon. Member has referred, are the major shareholders in the federally controlled mortgage corporations, the Superintendent of Insurance, after the Province acted, moved as well to assume control of assets.

Mr. Wilson: That is a cop-out.

Mr. Cosgrove: The Superintendent recommended to the Minister of Finance that we undertake an investigation. To do that, in co-operation with the Province of Ontario we retained the services of the same accounting firm, Touche & Ross. They are presently investigating the standards, the books, and all of the issues raised by the Hon. Member. When that information is available, when I am permitted under law to give those answers, I will give them to the House.

SHIPBUILDING

ANNOUNCEMENT OF POLICY—GOVERNMENT POSITION ON CONCESSIONARY FINANCING

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Madam Speaker, my question today again deals with the Government's lack of an industrial strategy as a basic problem in the country, and is with respect to the announcement of the recent shipbuilding policy in which there was a glaring flaw, the omission of addressing the necessity of placing Canadian manufacturers on an equal footing in relation to shipbuilders and shipowners in Canada. Would the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce be prepared to tell the House why an important feature was left out of that new policy—the approach to providing concessionary financing to shipbuilders in Canada?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, I am sure that the Hon. Member is aware that the shipbuilding industry received the announcement by the Government of Canada with respect to its new policy in a very favourable way. As a matter of fact, what we did ensure was that by raising the tariffs on a more consistent basis for ships, for drilling rigs and for supply vessels, to a tariff of 20 to 25 per cent, which originally applied only to ships within the 12-mile limit, now the shipbuilding industry of Canada will be on a more competitive basis with the shipbuilding industries of Europe and the Far East.

Secondly, we extended the 9 per cent production subsidy to July 1, 1985, for ships delivered prior to that date. I think the Hon. Member should be aware that the comments have been very favourable from the shipbuilding industry, at least the comments that I have received in my office and that the Minister of Transport and the Minister of State (Finance) have received.

Mr. Skelly: Madam Speaker, it is very clear that doing anything in that area is certainly better than the Government's record to date, and there was a glaring need there.

LEASING OF SHIPS PRIOR TO PASSAGE OF LEGISLATION

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Madam Speaker, it would appear that there are some serious flaws in the policy statement. One of them is the question of implementation. If, in fact, there is expansion next year through an agreement with the Atlantic Provinces on offshore activity, the implementation date is vital. If that policy is not implemented very quickly what we will find is that the promised activity will be taken up by obtaining and leasing rigs from foreign builders. Could the Minister give us an indication of how he intends to block that major flaw in it, what he intends to do with Petro-Canada, hopefully making it an instrument of national economic policy as well as energy?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, with respect to Petro-Canada I am sure that question can be more properly answered by my colleague, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, who has the responsibility for Petro-Canada.

With respect to the Hon. Member's point concerning companies renting or leasing ships during the period until the legislation is passed, I am sure that with the co-operation of the other House leaders, my colleague, the Government House leader, will be more than happy to put this legislation forward quickly and to have it adopted by Parliament.

AIR TRANSPORT

ALLEGED REFUSAL OF PERMISSION FOR WARDAIR TO COMPETE WITH AIR CANADA AND CANADIAN PACIFIC AIRLINES

Mr. Pierre Deniger (La Prairie): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport and concerns Wardair.

Could the Minister of Transport inform the House and the Canadian people why, as reported in The Citizen on January 11 of this year, the Government is denying Wardair a chance to compete with Air Canada and Canadian Pacific on certain regular flights, and how such a decision could be said to benefit Canadian travellers and Wardair?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, a few weeks ago, Mr. Ward, the President of Wardair, came to see me and discussed several problems he was experiencing. He asked me to examine with him the problems his company was facing, and to give him some indication, as soon as possible, of the Federal Government's intentions with respect to his interests. I promised to do so, and I am preparing a reply which I shall be communicating to the Hon. Member in due time.

PAY TV LICENCES—APPROVAL OF PORNOGRAPHIC PROGRAMMING

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Communications, supplementary to his answers given yesterday. I might remind the Minister that yesterday he indicated he was certain that if "any one of those channels had applied for a pornographic Pay TV licence, that licence would have been refused by the CRTC, and certainly would have been refused on appeal to the Governor in Council".

When he gave that answer yesterday was he aware that the majority of the successful applicants to the CRTC explicitly included in their applications and in their undertakings a desire and a commitment to produce and to show adult or restricted programming, and that in fact the CRTC has heard the question of whether soft core pornography may be shown, and has approved of it?

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, I was listening to Mrs. Barlow last night and I think the women's groups themselves made the distinction which the Hon. Member has not made in his question, that is, the distinction between an adult movie and a pornographic movie.

PORNOGRAPHIC AND ADULT MOVIES

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): Madam Speaker, I would greatly appreciate it if the Minister would take the time to enlighten the House on the difference between a soft core pornographic movie and an adult movie, which is the acronym which is used when marketing the film to cover that issue in the law.

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, I would like to remind the Hon. Member that the Minister of Communications holds powers given to him under Acts of Parliament. Parliament in its wisdom, and I agree with it, decided that governments of any political stripe ought not to be the ones to interpret what community standards will be. Parliament has decided that the courts ought to do so and, within a certain restricted range of areas, that the CRTC ought to do so. That is the desire of Parliament. Those are the powers, and the decisions that have been made by successive Parliaments.

AIRPORTS

SALE OF HOUSES AT MIRABEL TO PUBLIC SERVANTS

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Public Works. Under an Act respecting the expropriation of land, paragraph 19, there is a provision for retrocession of land to the original owners. In light of the sale to federal public servants of properties in the Mirabel area prior to December 31 so that they would qualify for and get the $3,000 grant, and in view of a Quebec parliamentary commission just having been completed, which was in opposition to the federal Government, what right does this Government have to sell houses in Mirabel to public servants who were tenants, prior to an offer to the original owners?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I am sure the Hon. Member would not want his question to be interpreted as being unfair to a lot of people. The decision to offer those houses for sale to those who wanted to buy them was made a number of months ago. Many asked that they be allowed to put in bids before the program of home ownership assistance ran out. Among them there were six, and that is the correct figure, public servants, many of whom had been residents of the area for many years and happened to work for the Government of Canada. They were not processed quickly. They were examined and re-examined very carefully. Then they were allowed to make purchase offers.

Over 180 houses were purchased in all. Therefore, what we are talking about are six people who, as residents of the area and occupying those houses, were eligible to make an offer to purchase, like anyone else. That they did. I wanted to be doubly sure that there was no last minute speculation by employees of the Government of Canada. That is why I asked that every case be reviewed very carefully.

SUITABILITY OF CERTAIN LANDS FOR AGRICULTURAL PURPOSES

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary for the Minister responsible for this land, the Minister of Public Works. In view of the fact that this is farmland, and the Minister is undoubtedly aware of the tremendous importance of agricultural development, and I am sure he has already heard from people representing the various sectors, considering this aspect therefore, could the Minister perhaps ensure that the future owners, if he is not willing to accept the principle of returning the land to the original owners, could the minister perhaps suggest including a condition that the future owners should be farmers, so as to promote the development of this excellent farmland?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, that is exactly what we have in mind. Furthermore, in line with a decision already made by my colleagues before I was appointed to this Department, I have been emphasizing the broadest possible identification of farmland, and I have done nothing to stop consolidation of farms into units bigger than the original farm before expropriation, if that would make a unit more profitable. Contrary to what is being said by a number of officials of the Quebec Government and by some politicians, farming in this area is in better shape than people say, and I think we should encourage this positive trend and try to put as much land as possible back into farming. That is why I feel that a first step has been made with the identification of some 30,000 acres, and that we must go even further, provided we succeed in reaching an agreement with the Ministry of Transport.

REQUEST FOR RETROCESSION OF 80,000 ACRES AT MIRABEL

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): A supplementary, Madam Speaker. The Minister has just told the House that he had already agreed to 30,000 acres being ceded back. Considering the fact that the government was astonishingly greedy a few years ago, and that present estimates show that it would be possible to cede back 80,000 acres, could the Minister inform the House, still within the context of specific farming operations, whether he is prepared to accept the principle of ceding back at least 80,000 acres, which would leave ample room for the present airport's operations?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I would rather not refer to exact figures before having read the experts' report. The Hon. Member knows perfectly well that although there are definite long-term zoning regulations which cannot be changed at the whim of every new government, there is still a possibility to reduce the scope of Mirabel. We are looking at this and that is the approach we are taking, and if there is a possibility to cede back more than 30,000 acres, I shall do so with pleasure.

EMPLOYMENT

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Following the last war the Government committed itself to a national policy of full employment. In the intervening years it began to whittle away at this commitment, culminating in the Dodge report of two years ago in which the Government talked about trade-offs between full employment and inflation. Yesterday the former Leader of the Liberal Party in the Province of Ontario, the President or Executive Director of the Science Council of Canada, stated that full employment is now an unattainable goal. Does the Government of Canada still have as its overriding policy in the economy a commitment to full employment? If so, will the Minister tell us the targets for achieving it and define what the Government means by it?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, there is no question that this Government is very deeply committed to the goal of providing full employment in this country to the extent that the resources, conditions, and circumstances that we live in make that possible.

As the Hon. Member knows, and he has been studying the issue for a long time, as we all have been, we are going through some very traumatic changes in the kind of technology that goes into industry and the nature of our international markets. What we are trying to put together in this period of time is a kind of strategy in the area of export markets, the area of reorganizing and modernizing our industrial base and the retraining and development of new human skills, so that we can maximize those, but they do not all come together at once. What we can try to attain as much as possible is working together with business, labour and government at all levels to achieve the maximum benefit possible for workers in this country. That means we have to be very open-minded, prepared to change and to do some awfully hard work to bring about some reforms in our system which are long overdue.

Mr. Broadbent: I think that can be summarized reasonably concisely by saying the Government's policy now is full employment if necessary, but not necessarily full employment.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT SET TARGETS FOR REDUCING UNEMPLOYMENT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I would like to direct a supplementary question to the Minister with reference to another report that came down yesterday, this time by the Metro Toronto Social Planning Council. It reported that an alarming almost 900,000 additional men and women ought to be included in the unemployment figures but, for reasons the Minister well knows, are not included in the official figures. This means that in Canada now we have in real terms about 2.5 million unemployed. With reference to the report, the director preparing that report said that what is lacking is the political will to achieve full employment. Will the Government set specific targets for the next 12 months that it will aim at in terms of reducing the level of unemployment? It has done this for inflation. Why will it not do it in terms of jobs?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, to begin with, just commenting briefly on the report from the Metro Toronto Social Planning Council, they have not sent me a full copy, but I have seen news reports of it. We have to be very careful with such reports that we do not distort the figures and exaggerate them beyond what the reality is in order to frighten people.

What they do include in that report is what they call the discouraged workers and underemployed workers. That includes a lot of people, who have gone back to school to improve their education and training during that period of time, so I believe we have to be very careful. That does not in any way diminish the seriousness or the critical factor that there are a lot of people out of work, and we must work together to bring them back into jobs.

One of the major achievements we have made over the last several months is in working closely together with the provincial Governments to co-ordinate our efforts, to provide for a combination of resources, to do joint planning so that we can work together to use the maximum amount of governmental resources in this area.

We are now engaged in a meeting with the private sector, with business and labour, to see if we can develop systems to bring that about with them as well. It will only work, Madam Speaker, if we have that kind of partnership and not the kind of rhetoric which the Leader of the Opposition too often uses.

Mr. Broadbent: Madam Speaker, I am not interested in this instance in rhetoric. I am interested in a very specific kind of goal which the Liberal Government set for itself in 1945. When we have unemployment reaching the same level on a percentage basis almost as we had in the 1930s, surely it is time to set the goals again.

GOVERNMENT POSITION ON SETTING UNEMPLOYMENT TARGET

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Considering that the Government brought in a program which set as a target an inflation level of 5 per cent for next year—a specific program to try to achieve that goal—and considering that a right to a job is a fundamental human right, why cannot the Government bring in the same kind of target for unemployment levels and the same kind of specific programs to achieve those goals?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, it is my belief that that target of full employment should not just be restricted to Members on the Government side. It should also be a goal which every Member of Parliament endorses. What we must do is establish the framework within which economic recovery and growth can take place. That is the reason why we developed a program of restraint in the economy, to bring inflation right down and to bring interest rates down. Members of the Hon. Member's caucus and the Conservative Caucus stood up in this House day after day saying that the solution to the problem was to bring the interest rates down. The interest rates are coming down, Madam Speaker, because of the establishment of a goal set by the Government last fall and last spring. What we must begin to do through our direct employment program is provide supplementary support for workers who are out of work.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An Hon. Member: Your own Members are laughing.

Mr. Axworthy: And by the way, for the Tories who are laughing now, it is that group who were in Government who cancelled all the direct employment programs so that no one would have had any assistance.

SHIPBUILDING

POLICY REVIEW—REQUEST FOR INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, and I would like to bring him back to the matter of the shipbuilding policy review which he was referring to earlier in the Question Period and which has finally been released after months of indefensible delays by the Government. He is correct when he says it has been welcomed by industry, labour, and management alike, as a positive step in the long-term solution of the ills which have been suffered by the shipbuilding industry due to the Government's inaction over the long term.

As was pointed out, however, by the previous questioner, the policy does have some very serious shortcoming and loopholes, such as the six-month implementation period during which the Canadian market could be flooded with an influx of cheap foreign vessels which could negatively affect the precious few jobs which remain in the industry, for periods up to five and ten years. The Minister has indicated that he is prepared to implement and bring this legislation—

Madam Speaker: Order. Does the Hon. Member have a question?

Mr. Corbett: Yes, indeed I do, Madam Speaker, and I thank you for allowing me to put it. Will the Minister now bring that legislation into this House, because I can assure you that, if it means saving jobs in this country, the Government will have the co-operation of this Party in seeing that it is passed speedily?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, first of all, the responsibility for bringing forth that piece of legislation does not rest with my Department. Second, we will try to expedite the negotiations so it may not take six months, but obviously we do not have total control over these negotiations. Third, although there is a possible loophole for the renting and leasing of ships and floating equipment, we do not expect that too many firms will take advantage of that situation. In fact—

Mr. Clark: Just Petro-Canada.

Mr. Lumley: —there are few orders on the order books almost anywhere in the world right now for marine construction.

Mr. Corbett: Madam Speaker, this is an indication of how much co-operation the industry can expect from this Minister.

CONSTRUCTION OF FRIGATES

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): Regardless of how co-operative the Government is going to be, it is going to take months, or even years, before the effect of this policy can be felt by the shipyards. Will the Minister press his colleagues to do something about something which they can do something about, and that is to see that the frigate program, for instance, is implemented immediately, and that those proposals which they have made to build navigational aid vessels, as well as search and supply vessels, are put into effect now, and not six months down the road?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, first of all, my colleagues gave me full support when I requested, in spite of the restraint program, an extension of the 9 per cent production subsidy for the shipbuilding industry to 1985, which also could enable several of our firms to get some export orders on which they are building the present time.

Second, we did stretch the rules of the Export Development Corporation a year ago at the request of my colleague, the Minister of Public Works, to ensure that the first major drilling rig for the East Coast of Canada was produced in Canada by Canadians. That was worth over $100 million. But just as my colleague, the Minister of Employment and Immigration, said, Madam Speaker, I think if there were a little less rhetoric from the other side of the House and a little more co-operative effort in trying to ensure jobs for Canadians, we could be more successful in industries such as the shipbuilding in areas such as the one from which the Hon. Member comes.

STATE OF DISEASE AFFECTING PIGS IN DENMARK

Mr. Marcel Ostiguy (Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture or to his parliamentary secretary. More than a year ago, the Danish pork-producing industry was struck by an epidemic, and as a result, production was increased in Canada. Could the parliamentary secretary inform the House whether this epidemic in Denmark is now under control and what the effect will be on pork production in Canada?

Mr. Marcel Dionne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, in 1982, an epidemic did, indeed, cause a number of problems in Denmark, and this country has just confirmed that the epidemic still exists, since last week, 120 cases were reported among hogs and seventy-two cases among calves, all of which were slaughtered this week. It is obvious that the consequences will be the same as in 1982, that is, the epidemic will eliminate Denmark from export-import markets, with, once again, favourable consequences for Canadian producers. Finally, I can say that the same sanitary measures will be taken and that the Department is also taking very stringent action to prevent this disease from spreading to our country.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

TRANSFER OF HEAVY FREIGHT OPERATIONS FROM PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND TO NEW BRUNSWICK

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. Senior Canadian National officials earlier this week advised the Government of Prince Edward Island of their plans to transfer most of the Island's heavy freight operations from the Island to Moncton, New Brunswick, as part of an over-all rationalization of services within that region and Quebec. Given that that measure, if it goes ahead, will render Prince Edward Island the only Province in Canada without a fully operational carload centre, will the Minister undertake to exercise every possible moral suasion with Canadian National officials in Montreal to have this disastrous decision reversed?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): I must admit, Madam Speaker, that the Hon. Member has a very special way of introducing that question which makes my answer a little more difficult than it otherwise would have been. But each time that three or four or five jobs are lost in the CN there is a question or protest of this kind. My answer is always the same, that if my hon. friend wants CN to be viable and to give Canadian shippers the best possible rates, the lowest possible rates, they have to allow the Corporation to make these technological and administrative changes. In this particular instance it affects ten people, three of whom are going to stay in Charlottetown, two are being relocated, and the other five will be given the usual pre-retirement and retraining opportunities.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER INVESTIGATE TRANSFER

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Madam Speaker, I will put a supplementary question to the Minister of Transport. It is not just a few jobs that are involved; it is a question of whether we are going to have an essential service for the Island and an important part of the economic base of the Province.

Given that Island shippers require on-the-spot, direct, personal, day-to-day services provided by CN employees on the Island, rather than having those services provided by computers in some other part of Canada, and instead of echoing some rationale given to him by the head office of CN in Montreal, would the Minister take the initiative to investigate the matter himself? At the moment he is just echoing something said to him by people who have a vested interest in taking apart the railway in P.E.I.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I take some objection to the tone of the question, but I will not answer in kind. I am too generous and too cool to do that sort of thing.

Mr. Clark: That is why you ignored the CTC on VIA Rail.

Mr. Pepin: This is not a position that was imposed upon me by CN. I dare say that people in P.E.I. really believe, as I do, that these changes have to be made if potatoes, other agricultural products or the manufactured goods of P.E.I. are to be shipped at the best possible price. I think that this a strong belief throughout Canada. It has the name of productivity, if my hon. friend is looking for an expression to characterize it.

There is no law in the Constitution which indicates that all provinces should have centres of all Crown corporations of the country. There are other cases where centres are not located in every province in Canada. This is one of those instances, and I regret it. I prefer to be charming, but in this instance I think that the importance of the best possible rates for shippers is the predominant pre-occupation.

Oral Questions

NATIONAL DEFENCE

TORONTO AGENCY COLLECTING FEES FROM POTENTIAL ARMED FORCES RECRUITS

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of National Defence my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Are the Minister and the Government aware that in Spadina riding, at the corner of Bloor and Bathurst Streets, there is an enterprise advertising itself as "Jobmart" which promises, in return for a $50 fee, to give exclusive job-opening information to unemployed job seekers? One of the opportunities offered to those who have paid their $50 fee is the chance to apply to join the Canadian Armed Forces. Did the Minister or the Government authorize Jobmart so to advertise the Canadian Armed Forces recruiting program in return for a fee to be paid by the unemployed? If the Minister did not authorize this, what action will the Government take to end this misuse of the name of the Government of Canada in shamefully cheating Canada's unemployed men and women?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, I have no information on this point. I think the best answer is to rely on the good sense of the constituents of my hon. friend who would not likely be induced to pay a fee of $50 to join the Armed Forces of Canada. There is a great deal of advertising about the Forces which is well known to anyone who wants to join. I think the Hon. Member ought to rely more on the good sense of the public than upon actions to be taken by the Government at this time.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

SASKATCHEWAN POTASH INDUSTRY LAY-OFFS—REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT ASSISTANCE

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question about jobs, for the Minister of International Trade. On December 22 last, in response to questions I asked him about potash workers being laid off in my Province, the Minister said that he would do everything possible to help. A few days ago 100 potash workers were laid off at the head office of the Potash Corporation of Saskatchewan, and another 900 workers will be laid off between now and the end of February. This means about half the potash workers in the Province will be laid off. This is largely because the provincial Tory Government scrapped the export wing of the Potash Corporation of Saskatchewan.

Will the Minister tell the House today what specific measures he will be taking to make sure that those workers in my Province get their jobs back within the next few weeks or months?

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister of State (International Trade)): Madam Speaker, I am reluctant to become involved in disputes between the Hon. Member and the Government of Saskatchewan. I am sure that the Hon. Member is aware of the fact that international markets for potash, as a consequence of international economic conditions, are not in the sort of condition one would wish. I think he has to look in that direction to determine a large part of the nature of the problem that exists for this particular industry at the present time. The problem that it is experiencing is shared by many other potash producers around the world.

I can say to the Hon. Member that my Department remains available to assist in locating new markets that exist, at any time, but I cannot promise him an earlier solution to that particular problem than to the problem of economic improvement in general.

AIRPORTS

MIRABEL—SALE OF HOUSES TO PUBLIC SERVANTS

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Public Works. Will the Minister tell the House if the six properties at Mirabel which were sold to public servants were first offered to their original owners as is required by law?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I should correct the record. I said public servants. In fact these are employees of the Crown corporation which administers the lands. They are not public servants in the traditional sense.

Mr. Nielsen: What Crown corporation?

Mr. LeBlanc: I would have to check the legality of this. I am not a lawyer. I would not even aspire to be one.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lawrence: There is no sense in overreaching yourself.

Mr. LeBlanc: I was alluding to the Right Hon. Member's former ambitions in that area.

I will have to inquire what the legalities of the situation are, and report to the Right Hon. Member.

Mr. Clark: Madam Speaker, I doubt that it would be possible to reach higher standards than those that have been established consistently by the Minister responsible for the pork-barrel in New Brunswick.

PROVISIONS OF EXPROPRIATION ACT GOVERNING RESALE OF PROPERTY

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Let me return to the question, Madam Speaker. The Minister said earlier in the House that he had looked into those matters individually, and with great care. He should know that in the case of the expropriation of land for which the Government no longer has a use, Section 19 of the Expropriation Act requires him to make a first offer to the original owners. That is the law that the Minister is sworn to uphold. Did the Minister follow the law in this case? Was a first offer made to the original owners before those six sales were made to employees of a federal Crown corporation?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I inherited a dossier which said that the lands and the residences would be offered for sale to those who occupied them.

Mr. Nielsen: Oh, oh!

Mr. LeBlanc: The Hon. House Leader should really keep his cool.

I have asked that public servants or Crown corporation employees not take undue advantage of the situation. The figures that I have show that six out of some 180 sales were made to these people. That is a reasonable number and each case was looked into.

I did not investigate the legality of this. I am not a lawyer, but I will ask the law officers of my Department about it, and answer the Right Hon. Member's question.

Mr. Clark: Madam Speaker, what the Minister inherited was a law which he is sworn to implement.

QUERY RESPECTING OFFER TO ORIGINAL OWNERS

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, the Minister indicated earlier that he carefully investigated the backgrounds of the purchasers, but he did not carefully investigate the law. Will he now answer the question. Was a first offer given to the original owners of these six properties? That is a simple question, and he should answer yes or no.

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, obviously I will look into this. I do not think that if the Hon. Member repeats the question for a fourth time, it will get me to give him more information than I have. I know what I have stated already.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): It obviously is not very much.

Mr. LeBlanc: On the other issue he has raised, I will obviously ask the questions.

COMMUNICATIONS

UNLICENSED SATELLITE RECEIVING STATIONS

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Communications. Last fall the Minister was very bellicose in making attacks on pubs and other institutions which had unlicensed earth stations. What has happened since then?

• (1500)

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, as the Hon. Member is aware, our policy is aimed at protecting cable distributors who are licensed by the Canadian Government against unfair competition from people who pirate programs and try to retransmit them, thus competing with licensed cable distributors. There are a number of cases which will come before the courts in February, including one in Chicoutimi and another involving the Holiday Inn in Winnipeg. Meanwhile, as the Hon. Member is aware, the Newfoundland Court of Appeal has confirmed that as far as the reception of programs via satellite is concerned, the Canadian Government has full jurisdiction.

[English]

Mr. Beatty: It appears that the Minister has huffed and puffed, but he has yet to blow the house down.

LAYING OF CHARGES

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, I want to ask the Minister specifically how many charges have been laid, since last fall, as a result of his threats against the owners of unlicensed earth stations.

[Translation]

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, following the statement I made last autumn, we got in touch with a number of people who were using antennae without getting permission from the CRTC and without a licence from the Department of Communications. I remember at least two hotels in the Toronto area which ceased such operations at our request, and there have been other cases in Canada where an order from the Department or the CRTC has put an end to such illegal activity.

I should hope, Madam Speaker, that it will not always be necessary to take legal action in order to make people comply with the law. I believe that now the Canadian Government has successfully put its case to the courts in Newfoundland and in a number of other instances, people will be more likely to comply with the requirements of our legislation.

HOUSE OF COMMONS PRINTERS

Question No. 2,786—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Has or will the Department of Supply and Services absorb approximately 50 to 55 printers of the House of Commons staff and, if so, for what reason?

2. What House of Commons items will be printed by the Department and, specifically, does this include householder mailings by Members of Parliament?

3. Is it now government policy to take over from the House of Commons printing services and any other House services and, if so, is it the government's intention to thereby place the House of Commons under control of the government in power rather than under its own control as in the past?

4. What are the names and job designations of all persons in the Department or persons who dealt with the Department that were involved in the planned takeover of certain House of Commons printing and was there any contact between the Department and House of Commons employees and, if so, did the Department initiate such contact and, if not, who did?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): 1. The Department of Supply and Services (DSS) has absorbed 52 employees who were engaged at the House of Commons. These persons previously had produced householders in the House of Commons, but that work is now being produced by DSS.

2. The Canadian Government Printing Office has always had the responsibility for printing Parliamentary Papers including Debates, Order Papers, Votes and Proceedings, Bills and Committee Reports. The responsibility for printing householder mailings for Members of Parliament has been added recently.

3. No.

4. The following persons participated in the negotiations regarding householders.

FINANCIAL CONTRIBUTION TO CANADIAN ASSOCIATION OF FIRE CHIEFS

Question No. 4,563—Mr. MacKay:

What is the financial contribution by the Government to the Canadian Association of Fire Chiefs, either directly through grants or indirectly through paid membership of the federal employees?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): The Government of Canada makes a matching grant to the Canadian Association of Fire Chiefs (CAFC) up to a maximum of $25,000 subject to grants obtained from the Provinces in any fiscal year. Public Works Canada pays an annual membership of $65 to the Association in the name of the Fire Commissioner of Canada.

PAMPHLET "URBAN PARKS AND GREEN SPACES IN THE NATIONAL CAPITAL"

Question No. 4,585—Mr. McCuish:

1. Did the National Capital Commission publish a pamphlet entitled "Urban Parks and Green Spaces in the National Capital" and, if so (a) what was the total cost for the design, production and distribution (b) how many copies were printed and distributed to date (c) who was responsible for the design and production?

2. Was the contract awarded outside the Government and, if so, in what manner was it awarded?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): 1. Yes. (a) $5,100; (b) 50,000 printed; 2,400 distributed to date; (c) Executive Director, Public Activities Branch, National Capital Commission

2. Yes. Printing contract awarded following tender call.

CANADA DEPOSIT INSURANCE CORPORATION ACT

AMENDMENT TO INCREASE BASIC DEPOSIT COVERAGE

Madam Speaker: Before proposing the question for the second reading of Bill C-665, an Act to amend the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation Act, the Chair ought to express strong reservations as to the procedural acceptability of this Bill, which seems in part to infringe upon the financial initiative of the Crown as far as the power to pay any amount out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund is concerned.

Having entered this caveat, the Chair is prepared to allow debate to take place on the motion for second reading of Bill C-665. Should such debate come to an end, the Chair will have to rule on the procedural acceptability of this Bill.

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands) moved that Bill C-665, an Act to amend the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

She said: Madam Speaker, the Private Member's Bill which I have before the House this afternoon, Bill C-665, comes, I would say, at a particularly propitious time. I make that statement, of course, because of the very great concern which surrounds the takeover of certain trust companies based in Toronto and the increased attention that has been paid to that matter in recent days. I would also suggest that that concern has been in the public domain for quite a time.

The purpose of my Bill—and this will explain why it comes at such a propitious time—is to amend the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation Act so as to increase present insurance coverage for depositors from $20,000 to $100,000. This is a move which is long overdue. The insurance coverage under the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation Act has really not been changed since the Act was brought into effect back in 1967, even though the $20,000 coverage that was established some 15 years ago is totally unrealistic given today's economic realities. A sum of $20,000 in 1967 dollars no longer has anything like that value today; it is perhaps 40 per cent of the value of $20,000 in 1967. Therefore, it has no relevancy to the needs of today.

I reiterate, sir, that this increase is long overdue. Arguments favouring such a move have come from a variety of sources over a considerable period of time, and rightly so. They have come because of inflation, high interest rates, rampant unemployment and huge deficits. These things have all contributed to the very uncertain economic climate in which Canadians exist today. These are the conditions which have caused Canadians to view their economic security with anxiety and concern. That concern is not limited solely to the vast national problems that affect this country. It is not limited to the economic instability and uncertainty that one hears being expressed from coast to coast. It centres more and more upon the personal financial security of individuals. People are wondering how they are going to stand in relation to their own future.

That concern was expressed long before the recent developments with regard to Crown Trust, Greymac Trust and Seaway Trust. Obviously those developments which have taken place in recent days have aggravated the concern considerably. But for much of the last year and indeed before that I was being questioned more and more often by people in my own riding and by groups to whom I have spoken elsewhere about the security of their deposits with banks and trust companies.

It was in response to those repeatedly expressed concerns that I introduced this Private Members' Bill, hoping that it might be given serious consideration and, indeed, that it would be given acceptance by the Government. In so doing, it would give assurance as well to the individuals concerned that their life savings, in whatever form they might be, whether as RRSPs or as deposits in banks, would not be in any jeopardy.

Canadians are only too well aware that the country has been on an economic roller coaster for some years now. The time has come, therefore, to strengthen some of the safety features which are supposedly in place to protect Canadians. Obviously, the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation Act is one such measure which needs strengthening. If that measure is going to be there to protect Canadians, then we ought to do what it says we will do, and that is, protect them. At the moment the $20,000 limit does not. What I am suggesting today would help to meet that protection.

Various proposals have been put forward over the years to achieve that goal. My Bill is one such proposal. It would increase the coverage for insurance from $20,000 to $100,000. This proposal does not originate with me; it has been presented by many people and it has been well argued by several organizations. The Consumers' Association of Canada is one such organization that has put forward this proposal.

Tom Delaney, the economic policy adviser for the Consumers' Association of Canada, was quoted in an article which appeared in The Globe and Mail on Monday, January 10, 1983. He said that the federal Government should immediately strengthen its deposit insurance protection limits to $100,000 and iron out confusion in the legislation to avert what he calls a crisis of confidence in the trust industry. He is quoted as having said the following:

> I'm not saying this is the doomsday scenario, but it's the kind of thing that demonstrates the reason for the CAC's concern over the years.

Concern has been expressed repeatedly by Mr. Delaney and others.

It is my understanding that the Canadian Bankers' Association has suggested increasing the coverage to $40,000 with unlimited coverage for RRSPs. I may be misinterpreting their position, and if so, I am sorry. But if I am correct in my interpretation of what they would like to see instituted, then that is a proposal well worth considering.

This afternoon the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Cosgrove) finally got around to introducing a Government bill to raise the coverage by the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation from $20,000 to $60,000 with protection being retroactive to January 17, 1983. He is the latest in a series of individuals to make proposals along this line. Though I am glad to see the Government is finally taking some positive steps toward reviewing the present insurance arrangement, I am concerned about several factors of that Bill.

First, as my colleague, the Hon. Member for St. Catharines (Mr. Reid), who also has a Private Members' Bill before the House on this subject, said earlier today in the House, there is some question as to whether or not there would be adequate protection for depositors under the retroactive legislation proposed by the Minister.

In a Toronto Star article dated January 18, 1983, Mr. Robert Hammond, a Director of the Canadian Deposit Insurance Corporation and Superintendent of Insurance, said that until the legislation is passed in the House of Commons depositors will still be limited to $20,000, although they will be protected to $60,000. As a result of this difference in opinion as to the actual protection available, I point to the urgency for this House to end the uncertainty for depositors. That uncertainty can indeed be ended by sending this Bill to committee so that the issue can be studied and adequate protection established at the earliest possible moment. Canadian investors must have that insurance. There exists too much uncertainty today. For instance, how long would it take an investor to be reimbursed for any loss by the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation; and would the reimbursement include interest for the period of time that the investor has to wait for the payment to be made? Those are questions which further aggravate the uncertainty.

Two concerns have been expressed to me about my Bill, Mr. Speaker. One is that it would cause a very significant increase in the premiums that would have to be paid by the chartered banks on insurance deposits which they have in the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation. While I sympathize with their dilemma, I am confident of their ability to meet it.

The other concern that has been expressed is that the increase in insurance coverage to $100,000 may, in itself, add to the anxiety and uncertainty of depositors. In other words, it might cause alarm that a crisis may be imminent. My Bill is intended to do just the opposite. The anxiety and the uncertainty exists already. They are there and cannot be denied. The best way to overcome them is to provide the security that investors have a right to expect. I know of no better way to accomplish this than to send this Bill to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs this very afternoon so that we can get on with implementing its provisions and introduce a level of insurance that will guarantee protection to investors so that the uncertainty and anxiety which exists in the country will be erased.

Mr. John Evans (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure for me to rise to speak in this very important debate concerning the security of the deposits which Canadians have in our financial institutions. This important issue has been considered in previous deliberations in the very committee to which the Hon. Member would like to send her Bill, the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs. We undertook that study during our deliberations on the question of bank profits when all Members of the House were represented in the Committee. At the time of the report, one of the Parties had decided to withdraw. Certainly the Members of the Official Opposition and the Government were represented during those deliberations and they concurred entirely in the recommendations.

It was made clear by both Members of the Official Opposition and the Government during our discussion on the question of deposit insurance that a $60,000 limit was adequate, given the purpose for which deposit insurance is in place and the changes which have occurred since 1967 when deposit insurance was established at $20,000 per institution, with some exceptions. The existing law has been changed as a result of the announcement by the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Cosgrove) on Monday, when he indicated that any deposit in place from Monday onward would be covered by the new limits, which have been raised to $60,000 from $20,000.

The question we were concerned with at the committee deliberations was the limit at which deposit insurance should be set in order to provide adequate coverage. One can see the necessity for deposit insurance when its history is reviewed. Deposit insurance was originally established in the 1930s, primarily at the initiative of the United States but in Canada as well. The difficulties faced in the United States were much more serious since bank failures had taken place in that country. Authorities in the United States were much more fearful that, if no protection were provided for a depositor's funds in financial institutions, there would continue to be runs on institutions whenever there was a rumour that depositors' funds may not be safe in a particular institution which might not have been able to reimburse the full value of a deposit.

In Canada, our track record in this regard has been much better. I believe that the last bank failure occurred in the mid-1920s and it was a relatively small bank.

Mr. Blenkarn: What about trust companies?

Mr. Evans: Our institutions have been solvent and have not experienced any problems of failure—except for the recent example that the Hon. Member just mentioned of Astra Trust.

Mr. Kempling: What about Argosy?

Mr. Evans: Canadian depositors have been very well protected by the institutions. In addition, however, deposit insurance has been in place up to the amount of $20,000. This deposit insurance is structured in such a way that $20,000 is not the total coverage that is available to an individual who has means in excess of $20,000. For example, this means that a depositor can have a deposit at an institution with coverage at all branches of the institution, whether a bank or trust company, up to a maximum of $20,000, but that person's spouse can also have coverage in the same institution for accounts in that person's name of up to $20,000. As well, they can both have a third joint account which is also covered. Under the old rules, this meant that a person and their spouse could be covered up to a maximum at that time of three times $20,000 or $60,000.

In addition to that, the deposit insurance limits apply to the value of deposits in a particular institution. Therefore, if a person deposits up to $20,000 in one institution, they are covered; if they deposit $20,000 in a second institution and $20,000 in a third institution, they are also covered. This means that a person can achieve total coverage equal to the amount of their deposit, whether $100,000 or $200,000, by splitting deposits among different institutions.

The difficulty that arose was that the increase in inflation and salaries gave rise to increased savings and the limit of $20,000 became very inappropriate. For example, the three-year maximum limit of RRSP contributions would amount to approximately $15,000 or $16,000 plus interest, and a person could exceed the total value of the deposit insurance in that institution very quickly. This is a result of the limits remaining unchanged since 1967 while inflation has certainly escalated the amount of savings and income available.

During the review of this whole question in the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs' study of bank profits, the Members of the Committee unanimously agreed, as appears at page 21 of the Committee hearings, that:

> Deposit insurance is also important as a means of protecting depositors' savings.

Here, we were referring to the whole question of bank solvency and bank liquidity, but we were not just concerned with chartered banks. We had broadened our scope implicitly to include the solvency and financial integrity of all financial institutions which accepted deposits. The Committee went on to say:

> Since it was first implemented in 1967, the value of the protection this insurance offers to depositors has been seriously eroded by inflation. The Committee therefore recommends that:
> 8. Deposit insurance should be increased to afford a better real protection of depositors' savings. The level of insurance for each individual depositor with any bank should be raised from the present $20,000 to at least $60,000, which restores the real value of protection offered when it was introduced in 1967. The level of deposit insurance should be reviewed every five years.

I believe that was a very good recommendation. It was responsible in light of all of the facts. It certainly goes to restore the real value of the protection that was provided.

I would note that this recommendation is fully reflected in the Bill that the Hon. Minister introduced in the House today and in the statement that he made on Monday with regard to the Bill that the limits have now been increased to $60,000 as recommended. While I have not yet seen the Bill, I urge that there should be some protection for an automatic review of those ceiling limits if that is not in the Bill. There should be some provision for automatic review of those ceiling limits every five years, as we have recommended in the committee report. Every five years we should review the limits of deposit insurance coverage and then we would not get ourselves back into the position we are now facing. Such was the motivation behind the Bill presented by the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald). Fifteen or sixteen years after the fact we are just getting around to modifying those limits.

We in the committee felt very strongly that not only should the limits be increased, but there should also be an automatic provision in the Bill that the question concerning limits and their adequacy should be brought before Parliament at least once every five years.

Therefore, the question is whether the Government Bill and the raising of the limit from $20,000 to $60,000 is adequate or whether those limits should be further raised to $100,000. I do not think it is necessary to raise those limits to $100,000. I have noted Mr. Delaney's comments, a man I have known for a long time. I respect his work for the Consumers' Association and as a private consultant in the field of financial affairs.

The other night, on "The Journal", I believe Mr. Delaney indicated that the Government's action was too little, too late. I do not agree that it is either too little or too late because certainly, now that we have increased the limit to $60,000 through the multiple family accounts which I described earlier, a person, with his or her spouse, could obtain coverage in a single institution up to $180,000. On the other hand, by simply splitting the accounts across three institutions, for example, a bank, a trust company, and another trust company or bank, which can now be done efficiently because the amounts which we are discussing are large enough, the individual can again be covered up to $180,000, or, across four institutions, up to $240,000.

These limits, these amounts, go far beyond the financial savings of the vast majority of Canadians, and I also think it is good, sound financial practice, for purposes of financial planning and management, for people not to place all of their savings in one institution. It is a good idea to diversify those savings across several institutions and several kinds of investment vehicles, such as five-year guaranteed investment certificates, perhaps self-administered registered retirement savings plans of various forms, or short-term savings certificates. Various forms of financial instruments should be invested in when one is considering the volumes of money we are discussing here under the new coverage. Certainly, a person would be wise to spread those moneys across institutions simply because different institutions have different performance patterns. In order to get a good average rate of return representing what can be achieved from the marketplace, so to speak, it is a good idea to diversify.

Certainly, the coverage we are now asking Parliament to approve in the Minister's Bill today, $60,000, would provide adequate coverage for a very sound investment in any one institution and would allow efficient splitting of savings across institutions, whereas the $20,000 limit clearly did not and needed to be raised. It caused people to find it necessary to distribute their savings of, say, $100,000 or $110,000 in RRSP across five, six or seven institutions. Not only is that inefficient, but it is also difficult for the individual to administer that kind of fund. It also adds to the cost of the institutions involved and thereby lowers the return which could be paid to savers. This is because if an institution has many small accounts of $15,000, for example, instead of a few larger accounts, its cost of doing business increases. It either lowers the rate which can be paid on savings, or it tends to increase the rate paid on loans. Not only do we want to try to make the system fair, equitable and safe for Canadian savers, but we also want to try to make the system efficient from the point of view of the Canadian financial institutions so that the rates of interest charged on loans are the lowest they could possibly be and the rates on savings are the highest they could possibly be.

I think the amendment by the Minister to the Act is an adequate one. It is one which was very strongly recommended by the Finance Committee, there being unanimous agreement of its members. I might add that there was no logical argument against this proposal given to us by the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands other than the fact that the United States has a limit of $100,000. I think there are some other differences of which she may be aware between how deposit insurance is handled in the United States and how it is handled here. It is also a fact that Mr. Delaney of the Consumer's Association of Canada has recommended a limit of $100,000. I believe the basis of his recommendation is that that is the limit in the United States.

I believe that with the amendment concerning the limit proposed by the Minister of $60,000, in fact the one which is now in place for Canadian depositors, we will be able to provide adequate protection for deposits of any size if they are split in the way I have suggested. I do not see any need to impose additional cost on financial institutions by raising the limit from $60,000 to $100,000, so I do not see the logic in the argument in favour of $100,000. Certainly, in 1967 there was logic in setting the rate at $20,000. The Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands said that that has now been depreciated to 40 per cent of its original value in real terms, which would mean that it has been dropped down to real coverage of $8,000. If we multiply that by 2.5, it is once again $20,000, which would be full coverage. Therefore, 2.5 times the 1967 value, according to her figures, would bring it to full value.

Miss MacDonald: I am thinking ahead.

Mr. Evans: However, 2.5 times $20,000 is $50,000, the Minister has proposed a limit of $60,000, and she is proposing $100,000. I suggest that perhaps the Hon. Member's figures are slightly off because we considered that situation, and increasing the limit from $20,000 to $60,000 is very close to being the full readjustment for inflation. I think it is more than 50 per cent. I think the depreciation has come down further than 40 per cent. Therefore, the actual restoration of original value requires that we increase from $20,000 to $60,000 today, and then there would be an automatic review every five years to upgrade or adjust if inflation continues at a high rate, which I certainly do not expect and I know the Government does not. The financial markets certainly are not predicting inflation at historical rates, so we would expect that there might be some deterioration relative to the same extent as we have experienced lately.

Concerning raising the limits further, beyond $60,000, one must consider that in the way our deposit insurance is structured, all institutions are required to pay about one-thirtieth of 1 per cent on deposit liabilities as a contribution to the fund. That percentage varies depending on the type and size of fund and the necessity of further contributions.

There is another issue involving raising the limit which would affect all institutions, especially those which are marginal and might be in a position to get themselves into trouble, such as the ones in the marketplace which have been the subject of much public and media coverage in the last few months. The argument against raising the limit is that institutions which might have marginal lending and investment practices would then be able to borrow from the public through the form of deposits up to a maximum of $100,000 and would have this public insurance umbrella. The fact is that, as a result of that ability, other institutions would have to pay higher premiums for deposit insurance to provide the coverage necessary to protect the public interest with regard to deposits in some of these more marginal institutions. That kind of redistribution I do not think is right; I do not think it is fair.

We have to provide a balance between causing the stable, sound institutions to subsidize the less stable institutions, and at the same time protect the public interest. I think a $60,000 limit does precisely that. It provides for a sound coverage of deposit insurance and at the same time it does not increase the limits to the extent which would allow some of the more marginal institutions—there are certainly some in Canada and there could be more in the future—to exceed their depth at the expense of a publicly insured deposit situation.

Looking at the actual Canadian experience with deposit insurance, there are some figures as to how much additional benefit the Canadian depositor would receive from going from $60,000 to $100,000. Here are some estimates of the percentage of deposits that would be covered at the various levels of deposit insurance. In the case of banks, with the limit at $60,000, 79 per cent of all deposits in the chartered banks are less than $60,000. When you go to $100,000, you only move from 79 per cent to 83 per cent. So you do not achieve a great deal of increase of protection for Canadians by increasing the limit from $60,000 to $100,000.

In the case of trust companies, 92 per cent of all deposits are less than $60,000 and 95 per cent are less than $100,000. For an additional $40,000 of protection and the costs associated with that, you only increase the percentage of total deposits covered by 3 per cent, whether it be with banks or with trust companies.

I think that the possibility of splitting deposits efficiently now, with the new limits of $60,000, and the fact that the vast majority of deposits are being covered by these limits, means that we should support the Government Bill to increase these limits to $60,000. I suggest that if we could get together in the Steering Committee on Finance and come to an agreement, I can see no reason why we could not give the Government Bill all three readings in very short order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Kilgour) on a point of order.

Mr. Kilgour: Mr. Speaker, I wanted to ask the Hon. Member a question but there are other speakers who want to use the time.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I will be brief in order that we can move this Bill quickly into the Finance Committee for rapid passage, but I do want to make two or three comments. The Bill is long overdue but I am encouraged that this Bill, which was brought forward by the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald), is finally before us.

The Committee to which the previous speaker referred tabled the study into bank profits earlier in the summer, and only on Monday did the Government see fit to bring in their Bill. I wonder if the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands had not introduced this Bill whether that kind of action would have been seen. But whatever the reason, we are now dealing with this very important matter in an effort to bring some stability and to build confidence in Canada. To say that there is a feeling of uncertainty in the country would be an oversimplification. Indeed, for many people in this country there is a certain sense of fear. The takeover of the assets of the three trust companies by the Province of Ontario recently does little to dispel that fear and the most haste we can bring to bear on this Bill will be in the best interests of developing security and hope for the future of Canada.

I have very little interest in the debate on whether or not the maximum should be $60,000 or $100,000. I think that is a point open for some discussion. I have listened to the two previous speakers who have made a strong case for one or the other. I suppose I feel at the moment that $60,000 would be an appropriate figure, for a number of reasons. I understand that a $60,000 maximum would in fact cover about 92 per cent of deposits in trust companies. Raising the limit to $100,000 would move that figure up to 95 per cent, and for that 3 per cent difference, and considering the extra premiums that would be expected from the institutions, I am not certain that is really necessary at this point.

I, along with others, have received a great number of representations, both from trust companies and from individuals who are very concerned. My colleagues from Kootenay West (Mr. Kristiansen) and the Battlefords-Meadow Lake (Mr. Anguish) have expressed the concerns of their constituents. A typical example could involve a man and wife who have on deposit with one of the controversial trust companies, Greymac, about $55,000. Under the present legislation they are not fully protected. They are viewing this as retirement income and are bringing to their Member's attention their concern and urging him to press for raising that deposit insurance from $20,000 to $60,000, or higher. Again I say that at $40,000 or $60,000 I believe a case can be made for either one.

I listened with interest to the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands who I believe referred to the $100,000 coming from the American model. While we recognize that the United States banking and financial system generally is quite different from ours in Canada, being more along monopoly lines I suppose one of the benefits is that it does provide more security as opposed to the small, independent banks in the United States.

With the $60,000 limit a couple could have security for $180,000 in terms of each individual having an independent deposit protection of $60,000, as well as sharing a joint deposit with the $60,000 coverage.

As other speakers have suggested, spreading one's deposits among various institutions simply reflects good business practice and is probably in their best interest. Again, a $60,000 maximum would probably provide one with all the coverage one may need to expect.

I do appreciate the initiative which has been taken by the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands. I would like to see this Bill referred to committee today and let us get on with it quickly and get it back into the House. I know that as a steering committee we will have no difficulty in negotiating a $60,000 or $100,000 sum. Then we can get the Bill back into the House for rapid passage, preferably without debate.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Hon. Member for Mississauga.

Mr. Fisher: Which Mississauga?

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, my friend from Mississauga North (Mr. Fisher) will note that the Speaker called me the Member for Mississauga! It depends how the representation is in the city.

There are two questions which have been raised in this debate which I think should be dealt with immediately. First is the question whether the limit should be $60,000 or $100,000. Our friend from Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans) suggested that the difference was not that much in terms of the numbers of people being covered. He said that 92 per cent of the trust company deposits were less than $60,000 and that 95 per cent of them were less than $100,000. So the Hon. Member asked, why not make it just $60,000? The answer, of course, is why not make it $100,000, because the additional risk is quite minimal. So why not go for the $100,000?

The second question he raised concerned the decision to make the limit $60,000. I remind him that that was before it became eminently apparent that the Government had lost track of its management responsibilities in the money markets. There is a real fear, concern and lack of confidence that has developed, and it is essential that we do something and do it well in order to restore that confidence. I say that $60,000 does not have the ring of confidence that $100,000 has. As the Member for Ottawa Centre pointed out, the cost is not that much different.

The Government has a responsibility to supervise these companies. One way of ensuring that supervision is carried out is to increase the liability of the Government for its failure to supervise. That can easily be done by changing the terms of the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation Act to $100,000. That $100,000 will give real assurance that the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation will look at the securities held by trust and loan companies and make sure that they are properly policed. They have not been properly policed.

We have seen that with the incorporation of Greymac and Seaway by this Government. Seaway was incorporated in 1982. It was not incorporated in 1981. Imagine a company being incorporated in 1982 and before even a year had elapsed it has already had seized its assets and responsibility for deposits. That is a clear indication of lack of attention to detail by that ministry. It is important to restore confidence. This Bill is an attempt to do that.

The next question is, why not proceed instead with the Government legislation? I remind Hon. Members that the Government has been attempting to end this session of Parliament since November, so it says. There are some 18 or 19 Bills which the House Leader has indicated are essential, even though this session is to end relatively early in February. Where will we get time to deal with that piece of legislation? The probability is that, having introduced the legislation and having made a fuss about introducing it, the Government will do as it did with the Bankruptcy Act and a whole series of other statutes. They leave them on the Order Paper. They boasted about them, sent out pamphlets, did their PR work, but they have not been passed.

If this House really intends to deal with deposit insurance and intends to get down to the business of increasing the limit, why not take advantage of this Bill, pass it at second reading and get it to committee? Amendments can easily be made in committee, hearings held quickly, the Bill brought back to the House and the matter dealt with.

The Government has a shortage of House time. We are suggesting that this is an opportunity to take advantage of Private Members' time to get what amounts to Government legislation through the House now. To make sure the Private Members' hour does not elapse, I will resume my seat and let this Bill come to a vote.

Mr. Douglas Fisher (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to make a few comments on this Bill. May I say at the beginning that I welcome it, and I welcome some of the comments that have been made. A few moments before the debate began we heard the Speaker say she had some reservations about this Bill and would have to pass judgment on it if it got as far as a vote. I take those directions from Madam Speaker very seriously. However, we can be assured that the debate today has been most useful and welcome in light of the tabling of the Government's Bill earlier today in the House. This has been a constructive joining of efforts to advance the issue and clear up some of the comments on it.

I extend my congratulations to the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) for her obvious concern about this topic and to the other speakers who rose to comment. We all join in trying to clear the air at a time of uncertainty and to give the ordinary depositor and the ordinary Canadian a sense that the safety net of deposit insurance is intact and satisfactory.

Along that vein, I would like to refer to an editorial in the Toronto Star of January 18, yesterday, entitled "And Ottawa's reassuring step". I quote:

> Given the concerns raised by Consumer and Commercial Relations Minister Robert Elgie's statement yesterday, Ottawa's decision to triple the level of protection for people who entrust their money to financial institutions comes not a moment too soon.

I quote from the end of the same editorial:

> It is vital that people be able to have full faith in our financial institutions and not have to fear the slightest possibility that their life's savings could be wiped out at a strike, through no fault of their own. Cosgrove's announcement is a reassuring step in that direction.

There are two initial comments that can be made about this present debate. First, as I have already said, we welcome the opportunity to debate this question. Second, we are grateful to the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans) and other Members of the Finance Committee for the hard work they did on the bank profits study which provided much of the factual background for a Bill such as the one before us.

The increase to $60,000 does give much of the reassurance that the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) is seeking for ordinary savers. It is important and notable that 92 per cent of all the deposits in trust companies are covered by the $60,000 limit. Equally important, almost 79 per cent of bank deposits are covered by that limit.

As the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) pointed out, that is an important emphasis for the trust companies, which appear to be much more vulnerable than the banks. As he said, it is an important benefit that we get from the Canadian banking system. When a community suffers an economic setback, the banking system in that community does not become vulnerable. People's savings are protected by these large banks and the strength of the whole system is applied to the individual community.

There is a different system in the United States. They have community-located banks which are more vulnerable than our banks. They are not able to bring this national strength to bear when a local community runs into economic difficulty.

The fact that 92 per cent of the trust and loan company deposits are covered by this $60,000 dealing is significant. It is no secret that for some time the Government has been considering the question of increasing this ceiling. The Government's Bill, the one introduced today, applies additional insurance protection to the existing deposits in those Ontario trust companies which are currently in difficulty and, as a result, their depositors are not going to suffer.

• (1600)

Now, before I go further, Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out some important aspects of the deposit insurance provided by the CDIC. The Corporation was established by federal legislation in 1967, in the wake of the failure of another Ontario trust company in which a considerable number of people lost their savings. Membership in the Corporation is restricted to banks, trust companies and mortgage loan companies. It is mandatory for federally-incorporated companies. Provincially-incorporated trust and mortgage loan companies must apply for membership and they are accepted only if the Government of their Province has approved the application and certain standards and conditions are met.

Deposits with companies in Quebec which are incorporated by that Province are covered by the deposit insurance plan administered by the Quebec Deposit Insurance Board. Obviously, the main difference between the Bill we are debating today and the Government's new proposal involves the amount of the maximum limit of deposits covered by insurance.

The Hon. Member today in her Bill proposes that the present $20,000 limit be escalated up to $100,000. The Government in the Bill we introduced today suggests that the ceiling be increased to $60,000. This is the amount which was recommended, as we have discussed, by the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs in the report on July 27 on bank profits. It is a reasonable amount, reflecting the increases in incomes, prices and savings since the deposit insurance plan was begun in 1967.

Interestingly enough, The Toronto Star in that same editorial estimates that the $20,000 limit would translate from 1967 to today at approximately $63,000. There are additional factors, however, which argue in favour of the $60,000 maximum. One of the most important considerations relates to the basic purpose of the deposit insurance scheme. The goal of the 1967 legislation, and the goal we should be seeking today, is to provide substantial insurance for the savings of average Canadians.

The plan recognizes that ordinary Canadians should be able to deposit their savings in our basic financial institutions with the confidence that their money will be safe. Ordinary Canadians should not have to equip themselves with sophisticated skills and knowledge so as to reassure themselves that this kind of savings deposit can be made with assurance.

Mr. Blenkarn: On a point of order, would the Hon. Member for Mississauga North (Mr. Fisher) accept a question?

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Speaker, I would be delighted to accept a question from my colleague, the Hon. Member for Mississauga South, my compatriot from that beautiful city, but perhaps he would be courteous enough to let me finish my remarks and then I would love to hear from him. It would be a great pleasure.

I suggest that people with individual investments as large as $100,000 can reasonably be expected either to have some knowledge of financial markets, or go to someone who does have that knowledge and equip themselves with that knowledge.

The extent of coverage being provided, even with the existing $20,000 ceiling, really is substantial. We heard from the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) along those lines. With the $20,000 limit, CDIC estimates that there is a total insurance protection for 63 per cent of bank deposits and 76 per cent of trust and loan company deposits. The proposed $60,000 ceiling would mean that approximately 79 per cent of bank deposits would be insured, and trust and loan companies would include 92 per cent of the deposits.

I would point out that even the average investor is not so unsophisticated that he or she is unaware that there are very simple ways of ensuring insurance protection for amounts of savings greater than the $20,000 limit, or $60,000 under the new proposal. Since the limit applies to the total of deposits which an individual has in his or her name within a single institution, that person can simply place extra amounts on deposit in another institution. Even within a single institution, a married person is insured to the maximum amount in his or her own name, and at the same time has the maximum insurance in a joint account held by both spouses. To carry the point further, the other spouse may have a third account insured to the maximum. Therefore, by using three different accounts, a married couple, under the $60,000 ceiling, is insured for up to a total of $180,000 in a single institution. Given these facts, it can hardly be argued that the $60,000 limit is unreasonably low and will not provide the means for adequate insurance protection for the savings of a vast majority of Canadians.

The argument is also made, and was made here today, that because of the large amounts of savings accumulated in recent years in Registered Retirement Savings Plans, and to a lesser extent in Home Ownership Savings Plans, the insurance maximum should be tailored to better accommodate RRSPs. That would not be a wise course for a number of reasons. We should bear in mind that deposits in RRSPs and RHOSPs can be invested in a variety of ways, not only via an insured account in CDIC member institutions. Assets of RRSPs which are invested in this way are insured separately from any other deposit of the holder of the RRSP; thus such an individual has up to $60,000 of insurance for the RRSP savings in such a plan, on top of the other insurance for ordinary deposits outside the RRSP. To provide a higher ceiling for RRSP savings would obviously bias and distort the decisions which are now made as to how RRSP funds are invested. Furthermore, it would discriminate against the very large number of employer/employee pension plans which cover a large proportion of our working force and which do not have similar insurance guarantees for their solvency.

One other essential question must also be addressed in judging a proper limit for this kind of insurance protection.

That point involves the need in our system of financial institutions to encourage good management and sound financial practices. That point can hardly be over-estimated in light of recent occurrences in Ontario. It is unreasonable to expect that the federal and provincial agencies which supervise trust and loan companies can on their own ensure the soundness of all the investment decisions made by every company. That would require an army of inspectors. Therefore, we must ensure that the broad rules under which these companies operate are such as to encourage prudent investment decisions within the industry. In other words, we should not be concerned that the limits for deposit insurance are not so high that they serve to encourage speculative investments or firms with inadequate financial resources and weak management. There must be fairness and balance in the system.

Bear in mind that the CDIC insurance fund is financed through premiums from its member institutions. The large, strong institutions which hold the great majority of deposits are, therefore, the principal source of funds for the CDIC. Even without the insurance system, their deposits could be considered secure. It would, therefore, be difficult to justify forcing such institutions to contribute to a fund that would underwrite the operations of smaller and weaker institutions, if we are talking about insuring a deposit of $100,000.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. I am sorry to interrupt the Hon. Member. I would remind Hon. Members that under the provision of new rules and Standing Orders for the House of Commons, one hour has been provided for the discussion of Private Members' Public Bills. That hour has expired and accordingly, pursuant to Standing Order 24(2), it is my duty to interrupt the proceedings.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS

[English]

INCOME TAX ACT

SUGGESTED DEDUCTION FOR VOLUNTARY FIREMEN

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the Government should consider the advisability of amending the Income Tax Act in order to allow voluntary firemen to deduct from their income $1,000 for all expenses incurred in the exercise of their duties.

He said: Mr. Speaker, it is indeed a pleasure to address the above motion which I originally made on April 15, 1980 under the then Standing Order 15.

I have a soft spot in my heart for firefighters in this country, Mr. Speaker, particularly volunteer firefighters. I wish to recognize the service they provide and, if I may, I will relate a story to the House.

Last March, at eight o'clock one morning as I was getting ready to come up to the Hill, the fire alarm went off in the apartment building in which I live in Ottawa. Anyone who lives in an apartment building knows that the fire alarm goes off quite often. This time, however, I opened the door to check and found the hall filled with smoke and the apartment next to mine on fire. I ran down the hall, grabbed the hose and at full speed headed for the apartment, only to find that the hose was about 40 feet too short to reach it and so I fell flat on my fanny. By this time the fire was well under way and the smoke filled the hallways.

If anyone has ever been in a fire they will know just what I am talking about. It is not a situation I should like to experience again. However, it gave me a far greater appreciation of the dangers that firefighters have to face. It also showed me, in very dramatic detail, what damage smoke can do to an apartment and to clothes. There was a total of $4,000 smoke damage done to my apartment alone. I can now appreciate the damage done to the personal belongings of people who go to fight fires. This reinforces my feelings about the importance of firefighters, particularly volunteer firefighters, and what they go through.

In 1975, at the sixtieth annual conference of The Canadian Association of Fire Chiefs, a resolution was introduced by the voluntary sector of the Fire Chiefs' Association of British Columbia regarding an increase in the income tax exemption for all volunteer firemen. I will not read the entire motion but at that time a $300 exemption was allowed to volunteer firefighters for expenses incurred as a consequence of their duties. This exemption was introduced about 36 years ago and had not been changed since then. In 1979, the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) proposed an increase in the exemption in his now infamous Budget. The proposal, of course, was defeated with the rest of the Budget but it was adopted by the Liberal Government in 1980 when the exemption was increased to $500.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) has told us that a Budget will be forthcoming in the not too distant future. I see his Parliamentary Secretary in the House and I am sure he will relay my message to the Minister. The Minister has spoken of having conferences with various interested groups in the country with a view to determining what should be included in the Budget. I hope he will seriously consider including the recommendation made in my motion. An adjustment in the tax exemption for volunteer firefighters is a small way in which these people could be repaid for their dedication and community spirit. I do not think anyone in the House or in the country would deny their importance.

I will dwell on conditions in Ontario because I am most knowledgeable about that Province. In Ontario, fire protection is a municipal responsibility. In fact, under the provisions of the Municipal Act, councils of local municipalities are authorized to establish and regulate fire departments, incur expenditures for capital and operating costs for such services to be paid from local taxes, and decide on the quality and quantity of fire prevention and firefighting services provided to their citizens. For instance, under this system the available statistics, which are for the year 1978—we do not have statistics for 1981—indicate that 8,301,704 people in Ontario were provided with various levels of fire prevention and firefighting services. It should be noted that there is no legal obligation for municipalities to establish a fire department, although in recent years the Canadian Association of Fire Fighters has recommended that firefighting services be made mandatory for municipalities, through legislation.

Most municipalities recognize that they have a social obligation to organize fire protection services. In cases where municipalities have no fire departments of their own, special equipment and firefighting services are purchased through operating agreements with neighbourhood communities.

The basis of what is known as mutual fire aid is pre-planning to provide adequate manpower—in other words, volunteer firefighters and equipment—for given situations and locations, and to use men and equipment as efficiently as possible to the best possible advantage. The pooling of resources underlies the whole system of mutual aid. Mutual fire aid agreements are particularly effective in towns and villages where firefighting facilities are inadequate to handle emergency situations.

I have spoken about the situation in Ontario and I should now like to touch upon the situation in my riding of Brampton-Georgetown, where there are firefighters of whom we can all be proud. Chief Jim Brunne in Brampton and Chief Cunningham in Georgetown are to be congratulated for their dedication and service. Although Brampton is a city of approximately 160,000 citizens, it has 45 volunteer firemen in four different locations. The town of Halton Hills is divided into two areas. In Georgetown there are 45 volunteers and in Acton there are 35. These people are so well recognized in Georgetown that the entire volunteer fire brigade was named citizen of the year a few years ago. They are very dedicated people with a great sense of community. These are the ordinary guys who feel that their assistance to the fire department helps everyone.

In Brampton a volunteer is compensated on the points system. He or she earns five points per fire call and five points for attending a training session or for being on weekend duty. The average compensation is from $150 to $175 per quarter year. They are given $40 per year, which is expected to cover such things as the cleaning of and the wear and tear on clothing. With $40 per year, one smokey fire and the cleaning bill is shot. I saw the bill to clean the clothes that were in my apartment during a fire which caused only smoke damage.

In Georgetown volunteers are given $1,500 per year to cover the wear and tear on clothing and the cost of gasoline. It is interesting to note the difference in what is being paid in compensation in these two communities which are next to one another. To some the compensation may appear to be enough but I do not think to too many. We must be realistic. In Brampton there is an average of three to ten calls per month on volunteer time. In Georgetown there is an average of 200 calls per year. It is a busy fire department. The compensation and tax deduction simply do not cover the actual wear and tear on clothing, the wear and tear on volunteer's cars, the cost of gasoline and the disruption in volunteers' time. I strongly believe that an increased tax exemption is warranted and would more adequately recognize the services and actual expenses of volunteers.

Volunteer firefighters are not easy to recruit. Every advantage we can give must be given to persons interested in becoming volunteers and to those who are already fighting a very serious threat to us all—fires. The employment of volunteer firefighters, or a combination of full-time and volunteer firefighters in lieu of only full-time firefighters attached to a fire department, can save governments millions of dollars annually. Volunteers are paid only when they are called to the scene of a fire. The saving to Governments which volunteers represent must be acknowledged. The federal Government must do what it can to encourage the continuation of volunteerism with respect to firefighters. They render a valuable service to the Canadian community at great risk to their own lives. I do not think anyone would argue that. I cannot imagine what many communities would do without volunteers.

The Hon. Member for South West Nova (Miss Campbell) is vitally interested in this particular issue. I gather, because she is present and I know of her interest and involvement in a similar motion, she will speak on it today. Many Members of my caucus have spoken to me over the last number of days because they knew my motion was coming forward. They are vitally interested in the subject. One said, for example, that in his ridings there were 42 volunteer fire departments and only one permanent one. Of course, he and others support this motion and ask that the Government give serious consideration to it and include it in the next Budget.

Just to give an idea of the numbers about which we are talking, the last available figures for Ontario indicated that there were 16,000 part-time volunteer firefighters, and that of 637 municipal fire departments, there were 503 part-time departments employing only volunteer firefighters. These following statistics for other provinces are for 1981. For some reason the other provinces are more up to date than Ontario in their statistics. At the end of 1981, Newfoundland had 4,175 volunteers; Prince Edward Island, 751; Nova Scotia, 7,000; New Brunswick, 3,063; Quebec, 14,771; Manitoba, 2,400; Saskatchewan, 6,000; Alberta, 4,500; British Columbia, 6,500; the Northwest Territories, 750; and Yukon, 150.

We cannot afford to lose these volunteers and the service they provide. It is about time that the Income Tax Act adequately recognized their valuable service to all Canadians. An increased exemption should be considered and included in the forthcoming Budget. The Minister of Finance has an ideal opportunity to win the repect of approximately 67,000 people across Canada through a very simple amendment to the Income Tax Act. I urge him to introduce such an amendment.

As I mentioned earlier, there has only been one change to the tax exemption since its original inception in 1953. That change was proposed in the Budget of the Hon. Member for St. John's West and later adopted by the Liberals. Once again it is time to look at the tax exemption and to increase it to $1,000.

I should like to point out what this would cost the treasury. It will cost approximately $11 million in lost tax revenue. Just to put that in its perspective, for most of us $11 million is a lot of money but the Government spends $9 million in the time that it takes to hold Question Period—$9 million in 45 minutes. We are asking for a tax exemption which will cost about $11 million or approximately 55 minutes of expenditure by the present Government. We are not asking for something monumental in terms of this tax deduction.

I think we should sum up the services performed by these volunteers. They risk their lives. They interrupt their day-to-day routines. In some cases they lose pay at their regular jobs each time they answer a fire call. I think it is worthwhile; I doubt that there is a person in Canada who would disagree with that. If the Minister of Finance conducts a survey of every fire marshal or commissioner in Canada, I am certain he would find unanimous approval of such a tax exemption increase.

In summary, I ask for support of this motion by all sides of the House to increase the tax exemption for volunteer firemen to $1,000 in the next federal Budget, which we expect early in the spring.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss Coline Campbell (South West Nova): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Brampton-Georgetown (Mr. McDermid) was quite correct: I planned to speak this afternoon as soon as I knew that his notice of motion would be before the House. I certainly appreciate the opportunity to speak again on behalf of volunteer firemen, not only in South West Nova but across Nova Scotia and Canada.

I realize that the Hon. Member's motion is to increase the amount allowed under Section 8(1)(b) of the Income Tax Act to $1,000 for volunteer firemen who receive allowances from a Government, municipality or other public authority. However, in Nova Scotia there are 8,000 firefighters, 7,000 of whom are volunteers. The majority of them receive no allowance at all from a municipal body or any other public authority. In my opinion, the notice of motion of the Hon. Member does not cover volunteers who receive no allowance. We must remember that all volunteer firemen across Canada incur similar expenses. Not only do they incur expenses, but they risk their lives voluntarily and save many lives across the country, as well as save millions of taxpayers' dollars. They do it night or day, winter or summer, and they do it without knowing when they will do it.

As the Hon. Member mentioned, I raised my concerns in this regard in the House last July at which time my notice of motion was debated. I have raised it in the past before with Ministers of Finance as to the need to make a special example of the volunteer firemen because of the special type of work that this volunteer does in Canada. I do sympathize with the need to increase the amount. However, I would like to see us amend the Income Tax Act to include these people. I say this not to go against the motion because I feel expenses are rightly there, but if they should be increased to $1,000, so be it. I say this because I feel that this motion does not go far enough or deal with that volunteer fireman who is not entitled to take advantage of Section 8(1)(b), which the Hon. Member wants to amend today.

I raised the matter recently with the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) after his appointment because I have been working, as I have said, to have it changed. I wanted to bring my concerns to the new Minister of Finance.

I have a letter from the Minister of Finance dated January 12, 1983 in which again he explains the position of the Government on this matter. I would like to talk about these volunteers. The Department of Finance seems to feel that if we give special status to the volunteer firemen we will be offending other volunteer groups across Canada. I can appreciate that. I can appreciate all the good work that is done by volunteers right across Canada, but I am asking that special status be given to volunteer firemen. Most of us at one time or another have seen the work done by volunteer firemen. Their work includes going to meetings, training, looking for new equipment and, particularly in rural Canada, raising money to run volunteer fire departments. It also includes raising money to buy coats, hats, boots, gloves, or whatever type of clothing they must wear to a fire. They have no choice as to the time a fire takes place. A fire can take place when they are at their normal work. They have to go to the scene of the fire. They have no choice but to go in the clothes they are wearing. They receive no additional recognition if their clothes are destroyed. It is up to them to replace their clothing at their own expense. It seems to me that all Canadians should be aware that for volunteers who do not receive an expense allowance from a municipality this is not provided for in the Income Tax Act. Volunteer firemen cannot deduct expenses like these from their income tax. I feel very strongly about that.

The Minister and his Department have a concern. In his letter to me of January 12, 1983, he writes:

> Contributions of money and time in volunteer service is basically personal—

It is a personal decision to be a volunteer. The Minister continues:

> —undertaken at a taxpayer's discretion. The related expenses of providing the service are, therefore, personal expenses. Because of the possibility of abuses of tax incentives for personal gains, tax concessions are not generally provided in respect of personal expenses, even when they are expended to earn incomes—

I will accept that. The letter continues:

> Given this general tax principle, it would be very difficult to introduce tax benefits for volunteer services that would be fair to the taxpaying public who must ultimately finance these benefits.

The taxpaying public to which the Minister refers is receiving an extra special service from these volunteers who are trained to go out at the risk of their lives to protect property and people in burning buildings. I do not think that the Canadian taxpayers would object if they were asked whether they would mind the deduction being allowed, under Section

8.1, to all volunteer firemen, and Section 8(1)(b) being amended to include all firemen, whether they receive an expense allowance or not.

It seems to me that the section was obtained because of pressure from the bodies named in the section and is geared to those municipal bodies that can afford to give an allowance to their firemen. It is not geared to the smaller communities, the rural communities, which put in a lot of time and effort to build up a local fire department and cannot give them expense money which would then come back as a deduction under the Income Tax Act.

The other concern in the Minister's letter—and I know it is a concern of the Department as well because I have discussed it with them—is who would decide what is a legitimate expense of a fireman. Under the present system under the Act there is an independent control element because a municipality or a public body gives a certain expense allowance. Therefore, you have a control. If you give up to $500, then you can get a $500 tax deduction. If you give above that amount, you are limited to $500. Regarding that independent control which the Department seems to imply, reading from the Minister's letter we find the following:

> Permitting a deduction of these expenses, as you propose, would clearly increase the administrative cost of ensuring that the expenses are reasonable. It would also further aggravate the disparity between volunteer firemen and other volunteer workers,—who constantly point out the inequity in a tax concession for firemen and no similar treatment for them.

I feel there are several elements here. As I have already stated, I do not think that Canadian taxpayers and other volunteer groups would deny that firemen do a special job, right across Canada, independent of each other, but for the same purpose. I do not think that other volunteer groups would be against a special status for volunteer firemen. I do not think either that Canadian taxpayers would mind or begrudge this income tax deduction to volunteer firemen, nor did I feel that volunteer groups would deny that there are special circumstances in the jobs that firemen do, regardless of the amounts being paid to them by a public authority or a municipal body.

Let me come now to control. There may be a few additional costs as to what are reasonable expenses. I believe that most fire chiefs across the country can certainly work out a system whereby percentage-wise they could, by attendance throughout a year, tell what the participation of the volunteer was, and they could make a percentage of that participation up to the full amount of deduction under Section 8(1)(b) whether amended by the Hon. Member or not. I have to discredit that. A fire chief's statement could be sworn by a commissioner of oaths as to the number of hours or the amount of volunteer work of the individual fireman. This might encourage others to become volunteers because they would at least be given a deduction on their income tax for expenses they incurred while carrying out their duties.

The Minister also legitimately pointed out that fire protection is a municipal service. I agree that these services are provided locally and that some municipalities provide a reduction in property taxes to volunteer firefighters. However, I am asking that some consideration be given to the savings provided by volunteer firemen across Canada, not only to the Government of Canada but to all Canadians, as a result of their volunteer work.

I am aware that there is a provincial responsibility as well as a local one to provide incentives to this type of volunteer. In my Province of Nova Scotia a special committee of the legislature has been set up to study this question. I look forward to the report of that committee to see its recommendations, if any additional incentives will be given at the local and provincial level, and whether it believes that the federal Government should also be involved in allowing a deduction.

Since the federal Government has put this item under Section 8(1)(b) and has given special status to certain volunteer firemen, I believe the federal Government should provide it to all volunteer firemen, regardless of whether or not an allowance is paid by a municipal body. It might be easier for the authority paying the allowance to decide what the legitimate expenses are, but where there is no authority I suggest that this role could easily be performed by a fire chief, perhaps at the beginning of a year when a deduction can be based on the amount of time a volunteer puts in for the whole year.

I do not believe that the Department's opinion that there is no independent control is reason enough to not allow a tax deduction. Let me say in conclusion the Minister has assured me that he will consider my request for future tax concessions. Of course, I am aware of the present economic climate but I feel that this is an important matter which should be considered in the upcoming budget as a concession to the importance of the work of all volunteer firemen in Canada.

I welcome the opportunity to reinforce my motion on this matter and to state very clearly that while I am in favour of the present notice of motion before the House, I strongly feel that it does not go far enough to include my notice of motion. I believe that no increase should be given before the work of this segment of volunteer firefighters in Canada is recognized. They should at least be given the $500 that is presently provided for in the Income Tax Act. As the Hon. Member said, there are 7,000 volunteer firemen who are doing a very commendable job for the people of Nova Scotia, as do all volunteer firemen.

Mr. Doug Anguish (The Battlefords-Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to take part in this debate on Motion 52 which was put before the House by the Hon. Member for Brampton-Georgetown (Mr. McDermid). In his motion, the Hon. Member wishes to have the tax exemption for volunteer firemen raised from the current $500 to $1,000.

The previous speaker has pointed out that this does not go far enough. I agree with her. In fact, from discussions which I have had with the Hon. Member for Brampton-Georgetown I know that it was his intention to have the $1,000 exemption include all volunteer firemen regardless of whether they receive any remuneration or honorarium for the volunteer work they do. For that reason I support the motion before us today.

The Hon. Member for South West Nova (Miss Campbell) referred to changes which she felt needed to be made to Section 8(1)(b). If she was referring to the Income Tax Act, I believe the section which would apply to volunteer firemen for this exemption would be Section 5(1)(b) of the Income Tax Act. I cannot overemphasize the fact that this exemption should be extended. I am sure all Hon. Members who have spoken on this issue would agree that it should be extended to all volunteer firefighters, regardless of whether or not they receive remuneration or an honorarium for their services.

My constituency of The Battlefords-Meadow Lake comprises almost a third of the geographic area of northwest Saskatchewan. There are almost 70,000 square miles in the constituency of The Battlefords-Meadow Lake. There is only one fire department staffed full-time in the dozens of communities which have fire departments in my constituency. That fire department is in the City of North Battleford. There are literally dozens of other communities which have volunteer fire departments and a great many of those volunteer firefighters are paid little, if any, remuneration. For this reason, I strongly feel that this exemption must include all volunteer firefighters.

The role of the volunteer firefighter is very important to those communities which have volunteer fire departments. These firefighters are called upon at all hours of the day and night and in all kinds of weather. They very ably serve their communities with a great deal of conscientious service. They are made up of people from all walks of life. In my constituency, volunteer fire departments are made up of men and women. In some cases they are farmers who live within a small community, they are small business people, trade unionists, labourers or professionals. They are the ones who are very concerned and dedicated to the work within their community and who provide the very essential and necessary service that smaller municipalities cannot afford on a full-time basis.

I must say that the role of the volunteer firefighter in some of these departments is just as varied as that of full-time firefighters in large municipal areas. For example, I think of a volunteer firefighter who is not from my constituency but from my Province. In 1982, I was pleased to attend the Governor General's residence to witness the presentation of awards of bravery to people from all of Canada. A medal of bravery was presented to Fire chief Gerald John Jurgens. On September 5 of 1980, this fire chief was called out from his hometown of Eatonia, where he has a small business, to save an 18 month old child who had fallen down a well on the parents' farm. The chief of the volunteer fire department went out to that location and some of the people who were gathered around were uncertain as to what to do. Fire chief Jurgens instructed them to tie a rope around his legs and lower him into the well. Consequently, he saved the life of the child who had fallen into the water at the bottom of the well. I commend this individual for his volunteer service and his concern to his community. There are many other individuals like that firefighter who participate in such activities throughout Canada and certainly throughout the Province of Saskatchewan.

I am happy to support the motion which has been brought forward here. If the motion to allow all volunteer firefighters a $1,000 exemption does not pass here today, I would certainly urge the federal Government to include it in its next budget. From the figures which were cited by the Hon. Member for Brampton-Georgetown, I see that there is about one volunteer firefighter for every 165 residents in the Province of Saskatchewan. The cost to the taxpayers of Canada would be about $11 million, which is a large amount of money in terms of one's personal wealth, I would imagine, but if one compares that amount to the national debt, which is expected to be some $150 billion at the end of this fiscal year, one finds that $11 million would amount to less than one one-hundredth of 1 per cent of the national debt.

I am sure the taxpayers of Canada recognize the valuable role played by volunteer firefighters across Canada and certainly would not begrudge this deduction which is quite well warranted because of the very valuable and conscientious job which they perform within the many communities where they provide such excellent service.

Mr. Bill Vankoughnet (Hastings-Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): Mr. Speaker, I rise to support my caucus colleague who is proposing a simple increase in the tax exemption for volunteer firemen from $500 to $1,000. The notice reads:

> That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of amending the Income Tax Act in order to allow volunteer firemen to deduct from their income $1,000 for all expenses incurred in the exercise of their duties.

I believe it is significant to note that the Progressive Conservative Party has attached a great deal of significance to voluntary organizations in Canada. As I am sure my colleagues in the House are aware, my Party, while it formed the Government, established a special committee of the House of Commons to examine the role of the voluntary sector in Canada. The committee would then have made recommendations on action the Government should take to strengthen the position of voluntary organizations. Tax treatment was an important aspect of the committee's deliberations, and my colleague, the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie), as Finance Minister, recognizing the importance of volunteer firemen, proposed in his budget to increase the tax exemption from $300 to $500. While it was unfortunate for Canadians that the Liberal Party did not incorporate all of the budget, it was fortunate that it did pirate the proposal from the Progressive Conservative budget to raise the level of tax exemption from $300 to $500.

I would also like to point out that the exemption for firemen had not changed since 1952, until it was proposed in the Progressive Conservative budget of 1979. This gives some indication of the importance we attach to the valuable service firemen and volunteer firemen provide and how it is placed as a priority with the Liberal Government.

Volunteer Firemen

In 1975, at the annual Fire Commission meeting, the Commissioners recommended that the tax deduction be increased to $1,000. The proposal has been with us and I believe it should receive serious consideration by this House.

In Canada, there are approximately 67,000 volunteer firemen and, while some receive compensation for actual hours of service, in most instances it does not correspond to the service which is provided.

My constituency of Hastings-Frontenac-Lennox and Addington is primarily rural in character. The provision of fire protection by local municipalities encounters problems which are not prevalent in urban constituencies. Of the 632 fire departments in Ontario, no fire protection whatsoever exists in some 54 fire areas, and 516 have only part-time departments which employ only part-time volunteers. Residents who live in urban constituencies tend to take the provision of services, particularly fire protection, for granted. However, in rural areas, this is not the case. By removing some of the financial constraints involved, perhaps many of these municipalities which presently provide no fire protection would be in a better position to provide this service which some people in urban areas take for granted.

The volunteer firemen respond to and participate in countless community emergencies across Canada. This service is very important in rural areas which otherwise would not have this protection to life and property. Hastings-Frontenac-Lennox and Addington has over 25 different voluntary fire associations. These people provide skills, training and self-help to their respective communities. Needless to say, this service not only provides a valuable safety service but also saves thousands of dollars in insurance premiums paid by property owners. The mutual aid service provided by the voluntary fire department is a prime example of how these men save countless dollars for property owners.

I appeal to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) to increase the income tax deduction from $500 to $1,000 or more. All volunteer firemen should be granted this exemption regardless of whether or not they receive any allowance from local Governments. So also we must amend Section 8(1)(b) of the Income Tax Act to include all volunteer firemen.

Mr. Garnet M. Bloomfield (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I am genuinely pleased to participate in the debate on the motion before us today. In my view, the motion addresses an issue which is a very important component in the social affairs of Canadian rural communities. While volunteerism and the work of all voluntary groups is necessary, there is no more important job to the small towns, villages and farmers than that of the volunteer firemen who provide an essential service at no manpower cost to the community, risking physical well-being in protecting the lives and properties of residents of their respective areas. Coming from a rural community myself, I understand the value of these firemen and their equipment. Modern equipment is a very valuable asset to any community. I well remember the hopelessness of the old bucket brigade.

It is a very difficult thing to put a monetary value on the work that these people do, but we all agree that it is very high. Consider the value of the property damage saved by their actions and consider the injuries and death prevented by their heroic efforts, often in bringing people out of burning buildings. Certainly we cannot put a monetary value on a life. But I think of the money these voluntary firemen save governments in medical expenses by preventing accidents and injury, and I think of the millions of dollars in property damage they prevent by their fast, efficient action. Surely we can no longer ignore the unselfish contribution they make to their communities.

Another point I would like to make is that we should be aware of the insurance coverage that should be considered for injury or life. We should urge our municipalities to consider that matter very carefully because those individuals often place themselves in very great danger. Unfortunately, many of these firemen receive very little allowance from government, if any at all, be it from a municipality or other public authority, to help cover the expenses incurred in carrying out their duties as volunteer firemen. The Income Tax Act should be extended to cover these volunteer firemen, in these cases.

I realize that Bill C-54, passed in February, 1981, amended portions of the Income Tax Act and increased from $300 to $500 the amount of tax exempt expense allowance which a volunteer fireman could receive from local government. This was a much needed and welcome change. However, it does not offer compensation to those who receive no allowance at all. For such volunteers, surely a similar tax break should be available.

The volunteer firemen are a very special group. They are on call 24 hours a day, 365 days a year. When the fire alarm sounds they drop everything and answer the call of duty. I know of their dedication at first hand. Whether they are at work, at a social event, shopping, or doing anything else, they respond immediately. With no concern for the clothes they are wearing or the duties they may be performing, they go to fight the fire. Inevitably, clothes and other personal belongings will be destroyed. These items must be replaced, often at great expense to the family income. At the very least, clothes must be cleaned, again an expense to the individual fireman. If dress uniforms are used, normally the volunteer fireman must either pay for the original, a replacement, and oftentimes both. In view of the valuable services volunteer firemen provide to society, surely a tax exemption under the Income Tax Act is warranted.

In a July 16, 1982 address to the House of Commons on the issue, the Hon. Member for South-West Nova, Coline Campbell, suggested a points system that could be used to implement this tax exemption, and today she made the same suggestion again. This points system could be used—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, order! I should again advise Hon. Members that they should not refer to their colleagues in the House by their proper names, but refer to them by the name of their ridings or by the portfolio they occupy.

Mr. Bloomfield: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, but I did want to give the Hon. Member for South-West Nova (Miss Campbell) credit for that suggestion.

I agree with her suggestion. Under this system fire chiefs would keep records of the percentages of participation in a given year by each volunteer fireman. For example, if an individual fireman had an activity rate of 100 per cent, he would be entitled to 100 per cent of a set deduction; if another gave only 50 per cent of his personal time, he would be eligible for only 50 per cent of the maximum deduction.

That certainly seems like a very fair way of handling the situation, and a very practical way of solving it. It might also encourage more volunteers to work in volunteer fire departments. More people are desperately needed to do this work, and if a tax exemption for expenses incurred while fighting fires attracted these additional firefighters, then a great benefit would be given to all rural communities in Canada.

At the present time, lack of some form of compensation for this volunteer work could be a deterrent to gaining new volunteer firemen. Personal commitments of time and money spent from personal incomes can make the job unattractive, and eventually unthinkable. As I mentioned earlier, the firemen often must leave work to respond to a fire alarm. If a worker wears special clothing for work and it gets destroyed while fighting a fire, he has no alternative but to buy another outfit before returning to work. Surely both of these factors weigh heavily on any volunteer fireman considering quitting his post with the local fire department, or a prospective recruit planning to join up. However, if a tax exemption were offered to those not receiving an allowance, the possibility of keeping veteran firefighters and attracking new ones would be enhanced.

Many people have argued that introducing such an exemption would be perceived by Canadians as discrimination in favour of this group. I personally do not agree with that sentiment. The rural residents of Canada, such as those in my constituency of London-Middlesex, appreciate the excellent service and protection offered by their volunteer fire departments. I am confident that Canadians would not begrudge a tax exemption being offered to volunteer firemen receiving no allowance, especially in light of the services provided. The exemption being suggested is not large and in my view is a modest return for the valuable service performed.

This issue is a real concern to local rural fire departments in my constituency. I have spoken with several of the chiefs and they unanimously support the idea of a tax exemption for volunteer firemen. I agree with them, and urge that this provision be included in future amendments to the Income Tax Act. These firemen are available for duty 24 hours a day. They are ordinary Canadians giving fellow ordinary Canadians the benefit of extraordinary service. While the social value of their work is recognized, the value of personal expenditures incurred by them is not. I believe that this recognition should come in the form of a tax deduction similar to that presently available to those volunteer firemen already receiving an allowance. I therefore ask that the House seriously consider this motion. If it does not pass today, at least we should be considering it for some future amendment to the Income Tax Act.

I believe that these individuals who spend their free time, often giving up their involvement in sports and other activities, put themselves at risk, and are trained to be efficient firemen; these men are not second rate firemen, they are first rate. They are trained; they are capable; they deserve to be recognized in a special way.

Mr. Laverne Lewycky (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, I will make sure I watch the clock to allow enough time for the question, if Hon. Members to my right would indicate that to me. I understand that I have until 12 minutes after five.

I rise in support of Motion No. 52. It says:

> That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of amending the Income Tax Act in order to allow voluntary firemen to deduct from their income $1,000 for all expenses incurred in the exercise of their duties.

I have received representations from my constituency, even before the presentation of Bill C-54, which was referred to earlier and would allow exemptions to be increased from $300 to $500.

I would like to place on record a resolution from the Manitoba Association of Fire Chiefs which reads:

> Whereas volunteer fire fighters are presently allowed an amount of $300 as a deduction for income tax purposes for clothing and transportation relative to their fire fighting duties, and
> Whereas this deductible amount was established many years ago when economic conditions were a great deal different than they are today, and
> Whereas the volunteer fire fighter performs his duties in the protection of lives and property primarily as a public service without or with very little remuneration, and
> Whereas the type of work involved in fire fighting duties produces abnormal wear and tear on the volunteer fire fighters' personal clothing and vehicle, and
> Whereas due to present economic conditions, inflation and a devalued dollar, the replacement and/or repair of personal clothing and/or equipment damaged in the course of fire fighting duties has become increasingly more costly, and
> Whereas the cost of repair or replacement of such personal clothing or equipment damaged in the course of fire fighting activities has for several years far exceeded the $300 deduction allowed.
> BE IT RESOLVED that the Manitoba Association fo Fire Chiefs make representation to the federal Government and request in the strongest possible terms that the present deductible amount of $300 per year be increased to $1,000.

• (1710)

This was submitted by Fire Chief Gordon Seeley of Dauphin, Manitoba, my hometown, which has a volunteer fire department, seconded by the Fire Chief of Winnipeg, Manitoba. It was passed unanimously by that association. In view of this and the fact that many other communities have volunteer firemen, I urge the House to vote in favour of this motion. I will conclude now so that the question can be called and voted on favourably.

Mr. Douglas Fisher (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, this is a terrific motion. It is too bad the other Members talked so long and talked it out. I just want to get a couple of ideas on the record. The spirit of the motion was to bring an idea to the attention of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde). I thank the Hon. Member for Brampton-Georgetown (Mr. McDermid) for doing that. It is a good proposal prior to the budget, one that has been well presented in the debate here today.

I was particularly impressed with the comments by the Hon. Member for South West Nova (Miss Campbell) who worked on this idea in previous presentations, and the ideas from my friend, the Hon. Member for London-Middlesex (Mr. Bloomfield) whose concern for his community shone through his speech. I do not want to downplay the contribution of the Hon. Member for Hastings-Frontenac-Lennox-and Addington (Mr. Vankoughnet), the Hon. Member for Dauphin (Mr. Lewycky) or the Hon. Member for The Battlefords-Meadow Lake (Mr. Anguish). All of these people brought good representations to us today. I thank them for the efforts they put into their comments.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. There seems to be a general willingness to put the matter through second reading now without a division. I want to say on behalf of my Party that we are prepared to do that.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, may I say on the same point of order that with the concurrence of Government Members, we too would be willing to have the matter dealt with now and proceed to committee.

Mr. Fisher: On the point of order, Mr. Speaker, I thank the representatives of the other two Parties for making their position so clear and for their willingness to move ahead on this. However, I suggest it is probably much better to simply pass along our enthusiasm to the Minister of Finance and leave it at that.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. Pursuant to Standing Order 24(2), the hour provided for the deliberation of Private Members' Notices of Motions being exhausted, it is my duty to interrupt the proceedings at this time.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BILLS

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Shall all orders listed under Private Members' Public Bills preceding Order No. 295 be allowed to stand by unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

REGISTRATION OF LOBBYISTS ACT

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

Mr. W. Kenneth Robinson (Etobicoke-Lakeshore) moved that Bill C-495, An Act respecting the registration of lobbyists, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to speak on Bill C-495, my Bill, an Act respecting the registration of lobbyists. This matter of lobbying has come before the House of Commons on a number of occasions. I note that in past years it was examined through Bills C-328, C-268, C-428 and now my Bill, Bill C-495.

I will mention at this time that the Opposition Member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) in the past referred to a Bill on lobbying. I quote a statement made by him and referred to in the January 29, 1977 issue of the Ottawa Journal:

—continued above-board dealings between pressure groups and administrators and politicians.

That is really what this is all about. The explanatory note in the Bill reads as follows:

This Bill provides for the registration of lobbyists, and a declaration by them stating in whose interest they are working. It imposes a fine and disqualification from lobbying for those convicted of evading these provisions.

The intention of this Bill is to make the public aware and provide for public scrutiny of the individuals and organizations that hope to influence Government policy and legislation. This would also allow the civil service, with whom many lobbyists deal, to know who they are really talking to and why.

Lobbying is the deliberate organization and application of effort to influence public policy generally for the benefit of some specific person or group. Lobbyists as defined in Bill C-495 means:

—any person who attempts to influence, directly or indirectly

(a) the introduction, passage, defeat or amendment of any legislation or budgetary estimates before either House of Parliament, or

(b) a decision to be taken on any matter coming within the administrative jurisdiction of a Minister of the Crown, whether or not that matter has come or may come before either House of Parliament for legislative action;

If this Bill is passed, any person or persons attempting to effect some legislative change, extract some favour or influence policy could be identified through public disclosure. This would also allow the public to gauge the success of lobbyists by the subsequent rejection or acceptance of their proposals by the Government.

In our parliamentary system, the presentation of testimony before a parliamentary committee or subcommittee is a well-established process. It has been widely recognized that our committee system, unlike the more successful United States committee system, is not provided with the resources necessary for adequate performance of committee duties, except for special committees and the Standing Committee on Regulations and Statutory Instruments, where we do have legal counsel. This has already been stated as a major issue for those concerned with parliamentary reform.

The time of a Member of Parliament is valuable. Therefore, when they take time to listen, they should be assured the benefit of expert witnesses and quality information. If there is not an established mechanism to sift through lobbyists, we cannot be assured that true representatives of groups get a chance to speak. We also risk wasting time on unnecessary representations.

By registering lobbyists, we would give Members of a given committee access to a master list which would provide them with names of expert witnesses when they are studying a piece of legislation. It would also allow committee Members to vote in a more enlightened way and perhaps recognize and implement amendments that might otherwise be missed. Such a Bill as I am suggesting would allow for a more organized, efficient and effective approach to the taking of the national pulse on any given issue.

If Parliament takes to heart the recommendations for parliamentary reform, they will find it has been suggested that committees be given responsibility for overseeing operations of relevant Government departments. At present our committees do not have the responsibility for overview and scrutiny that United States committees have.

The question is, should our committees take on such a responsibility? If this is so, it is all the more important for a given committee to be in a position to identify on an ongoing basis those individuals or groups outside the bureaucracy whose representations may be relevant. Lobbyists would clearly have access to specialized interest groups.

In his speech in the House of Commons the Hon. Member for Grenville-Carleton, as the constituency was then called, had this to say on January 28, 1977 as reported at page 2515 of Hansard:

—the direction in which our parliamentary system should be evolving—toward a more open Government with a more influential House of Commons—leads me to believe that we should begin now to establish a framework for the operation of lobbyists before any serious problems develop.

I subscribe to that statement. It is as relevant today as it was then. We are now in the process of seriously examining our parliamentary system. Perhaps now is a good time for renewed interest in such matters as registration of lobbyists. Lobbyists are able to provide legislators with feedback on the actual operation of Government programs in the field. As we already know there is usually a discrepancy between bureaucratic theory and the practical application of Government programs. The sooner the Government is able to gain insight into the effects of any given program, the sooner it will be able to act upon that information.

As we all know, many large associations and organizations have taken offices in Ottawa for the specific purpose of lobbying. The biggest of them, the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, the Canadian Labour Congress, the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, the Medical Association, and there are numerous others well known already, present their briefs and publicize their views before each federal budget. They also maintain year-round contacts with civil servants and also members of Parliament who may be working on legislation which affects them. The survival of any organization which claims to effectively represent its members depends on its ability to persuade the power holders to recognize them as a legitimate representative agent. Interest groups have developed links with the existing political and social structure to ensure the protection of their interests and also to keep open the direct lines to the Government.

It is my contention, Mr. Speaker, that it is essential that lobbyists register. It would clarify their situation as well as give a clear understanding of which groups are legitimate and which most fairly represent the interests of the public as a whole. I would like it to be understood that I am not suggesting we restrict lobbying, paid or otherwise, or in any way interfere with the right of the public to make representations to Members of the Senate or the House of Commons. Rather, I am suggesting that lobbyists should be registered and we should know on whose behalf they are acting and making representations.

Under this Bill, the Clerk of the House will be responsible for maintaining a registry of lobbyists. This registry will be accessible to any Senator, Member of Parliament, and accredited member of the Parliamentary Press Gallery. Each lobbyist shall be issued an identification card. In this way we could maintain an ongoing list of those groups and individuals within the lobbying system, and at the same time ensure a level of security which will be advantageous to the House of Commons as well as to the public.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would like to say that, since this matter has been before the House of Commons on so many occasions, and since there has been so much concern and deliberation and debate on the matter, it should be sent to the appropriate committee for further consideration, and I would so recommend.

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I would like to begin my rather short speech this afternoon by saying to the Hon. Member for Etobicoke-Lakeshore (Mr. Robinson) that I am extremely grateful to him for his very kind references to Bills I have had on the Order Paper on other occasions with respect to this matter. If you read his Bill and my Bills C-432 and C-214 in prior sessions of Parliament, you will see that they are virtually the same, so we are ad idem. I would have seconded the introduction of his Bill, Mr. Speaker, if you had cast your eye my way. I do not fault you for casting it the other way, but I want to say that because I think it is important. I would also like to suggest that the penalty section of his Bill, which does go beyond mine, I feel is a worthy addition to the Bill and something which the committee should be able to discuss.

I am particularly grateful that I am able to respond to his very generous speech, both with respect to the subject matter and to me, personally. I would like to respond in kind and inform the House that the Hon. Member for Etobicoke-Lakeshore joined my colleagues, the Hon. Member for York-Sunbury (Mr. Howie), the Hon. Member for Vancouver South

(Mr. Fraser), and Senator Joan Neiman from Toronto, in being honoured in the federal Queen's New Year's Honours List with the designation of Queen's Counsel. I think it is right that the Government should see fit to recognize distinguished lawyers on both sides of the House of Commons, and certainly my hon. friend, the Hon. Member for Etobicoke-Lakeshore is one of those. I should add that I was surprised that he did not wear his gown today for the purposes of this debate.

My hon. friend and I are ad idem, Mr. Speaker. Both of us agree that it is absolutely essential to the understanding of Government of the problems of the private sector, whether that happens to be the private sector composed of doctors, manufacturers, farmers, accountants, lawyers, secretaries, women's groups, and what have you, or of particular industries and businesses, that there be an interchange of information between Government and those sectors. It is essential for Government to be attuned to the greatest extent possible with the operation of the private sector. Therefore, my hon. friend and I are ad idem that that process must go on.

Equally, it is important that we recognize that through no fault of our own, the word "lobbyist" has taken on a somewhat odious connotation, and that is unfortunate because it seems to imply that anyone who buttonholes a Member of Parliament, or talks to a senior public servant, or a group of them, or even talks to a Cabinet Minister, is advancing at all times a nefarious cause, and that is not so.

It is essential for us as Members of Parliament, and I suppose for the Hon. Members of the other place, to understand the relationship, which is important, and which I characterize in my first reference to "Government's understanding". This Bill, I know, and my Bill, was not designed as a technique to penalize or interfere with, or deal in a negative way with those who are engaged in the legitimate operation of attempting to influence Government—using the word "influence" in its best sense—but what is happening in our society is that all of our instruments are becoming suspect. This Parliament is becoming suspect. Members of Parliament are becoming suspect. The Public Service is becoming suspect. Those who talk and push for a point of view, even legitimately, are becoming suspect. The trust which heretofore existed pretty well throughout the country with respect to all kinds of institutions, is breaking down. People are questioning. The purpose of this Bill is not a negative thrust, as I understand the Hon. Member. It is very positive. It says, "Let us recognize the legitimacy of the function but let us ensure not only that right is done, or that justice is done but that it appears to be done. And what better way is there, or has there been since time immemorial, than full disclosure? We demand more of Members of Parliament who go into a Cabinet than full disclosure. Is it wrong for us to say that those who come to Parliament should be asked at least to give full disclosure?

My hon. friend's Bill says that those who would attempt to move public policy, whether through Parliament or the Public Service, will have to come forward and declare their interest, not how much money they are making, that is their business, but their interest. It is also important because what may be the interest of one particular lobbyist may very well be interesting to a force which is opposed to the point of view of that first lobbyist. It is, therefore, important that we know who the players are. It has always been important in the Public Service because the Public Service does not have to come and answer here every day on the floor of the House of Commons. The Public Service in our system has carried on outside of the glare of publicity, and that is probably the way it should be. I am prepared to say that is the way it should be. Therefore, it is important that those interchanges which may take place between the public sector as represented by the Public Service, and the private sector, be fully disclosed in the sense of who the players are and what the relationships might be.

We have done something in this Parliament, at least for an experiment, and I hope it is an experiment which will last. We have suddenly done something that should have been done years ago, and I believe when it grows out it will have a profound effect on Members of Parliament, on the work of the Members of Parliament and their individual power in terms of particular issues.

We have given the committees of the House an opportunity to be independent and to respond, on their own, to those persons, ideas, associations and groups of people with ideas, who may ask for an expression by Members of Parliament. We are into the second or third day of the experiment but I do not think all Members quite understand the profound change that this can and will make to the House. As the House becomes used to it and as Members become used to the independence they have as a result of the changes, they will be equally aware of the representations they can make and will be asked to make on behalf of interest groups. It is therefore doubly important that interest groups be registered, that they be public and that their interest be disclosed.

We are embarking upon quite an important experiment, Mr. Speaker. When I introduced the earlier Bills, particularly Bill C-432 which was mentioned by my hon. friend, I received a great deal of correspondence from people who have an interest they wish to bring to public officials and to Parliament. This correspondence was very helpful, but it is interesting that not one letter said that the idea of disclosure was wrong. Some had reservations about the form of my Bill and therefore about the form of my friend's Bill—not about the penalty but about the ambit of the Bill. Invariably they said that the idea was sound, but they did present some problems they had with my definition.

I will quote from a letter I received from the Canadian Soft Drink Association in 1976. The writer made some observations which would be helpful to committee. The letter reads in part as follows:

A lobbyist would have to be very clearly defined. While we accept the fact that an association may be able to register as a lobbyist, it is unclear whether that automatically covers the chief executive officer of the association, all the staff of the association and all appointed committee members and all directors. This certainly will have to be clarified as in many cases the chief executive officer would be accompanied to Ottawa by some of the elected or appointed members either as resource people or to share the work load.

He was really asking, "What is the extent of the disclosure?" The letter continues:

The next point to be covered of course is the persons hired temporarily by an association for a specific job. These persons may vary depending on their expertise. Supposing it is a piece of legislation under the Competition Act, you may hire a corporate lawyer or if it is a bill concerning say the Health Protection Branch, you may hire a lawyer who is well versed in food and drug regulations. Very often the same lawyer could not accompany you or could not do the lobbying for you and he may send his assistant. Do you therefore extend a blanket coverage to all people appointed and hired by the association or does it only apply to an individual.

Furthermore, we think that registered lobbyists may take advantage of the fact that they are registered, canvas firms that may be interested in having lobbying done on their behalf and thereby weaken the efforts of the association. While this, of course, is left to the discretion of the individual firms, i.e whether they want to go through the association or through a private lobbyist, sometimes the private lobbyist, who let's say is a retired senior civil servant, may have some appeal that outweighs the advantages of acting jointly through an association.

In effect, he was saying that it is important that this type of question go to committee. The Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections could study this, and I am sure it would receive a great deal of correspondence from a growing army of people who come to this capital and others to influence—I am using that word in its best sense—the direction of public policy.

I commend my hon. friend for bringing this Bill forward today and I am prepared to support it. I hope that after a short debate the Bill will go to committee for discussion. I think that it could be improved by the committee. I expected my Bill to be improved and I am sure my hon. friend expects the same for this one. I see that he nods in agreement. I am sure that its time has come in our legislative and governmental process.

I hope at the end of today's debate the House will see fit to send the Bill to committee where the subject matter can be dealt with. I believe it is important. I think my friend has done a public service in bringing it forward today. I close as I began, by saying that if Your Honour had cast his eye in my direction when calling for a seconder for the Bill, I would have been pleased and honoured to do so.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I want to join the two previous speakers in giving my support and the support of this Party to the concept that is suggested. I must confess that I have some reservations about the actual legislation. The Bill is a good one but it may have to be changed in order to make it work in the way that the Hon. Member for Etobicoke-Lakeshore (Mr. Robinson) would like it to work. That matter could be taken care of in committee where some of the minor and even the more important deficiencies could be dealt with, as could the last point made by the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker). He raised the question of how one could identify the lobbyist as opposed to a lobbying group, and how one takes care of an association as opposed to the private individual or private lawyer who has contacts in Government as a result of having been involved behind the scenes with one or other of the political parties.

I think we must never be seen as trying to subvert or dissuade public input. That is to be encouraged. It is essential that the public at large feel free to contact Members of Parliament whether they be in the Senate, the House, in Opposition in the backbenches or in Cabinet. Members of the public must know that we want this input, but we must make it easier for them to participate.

What we are doing today may make it easier for the public to participate. They will be better able to judge the arguments advanced by certain, and sometimes high-priced, individuals who put forward the position of a particular vested interest but fail to identify that party. I think members of the public would be less likely to be influenced if they fully understood that the person making the argument to Government was a lobbyist paid to do so. From that point of view I think the Bill is valuable.

From another point of view it is valuable as well. I think it is important that the public should be able to identify the players in the field. Those of us who are in politics and have been for some time know that there are certain people who are in and out of government. I do not mean in and out of elected office necessarily, but in and out of government—in the Privy Council, out lobbying later; back into a senior Government position, out lobbying later, working to make people Prime Ministers, out lobbying later. I am sure the House knows the kind of people I mean.

Mr. Keeper: Liberals.

Mr. Deans: Not necessarily. The Hon. Member might be surprised to know that there are even two or three Tories who do this. I think it is valuable that we should have that kind of information readily available. There is a need to show that it is legitimate to be a lobbyist but, more important, there is a need to show that certain people in the country in fact exercise considerably more influence than others, even though they are faceless and frequently nameless. By making provisions such as those brought forward by the Hon. Member for Etobicoke-Lakeshore, we would at last be able to see the faces and names of those who exercise the power behind the scenes. I think that is important.

I commend the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton because he has been pushing for this for years. I had reason to read a number of comments made by him over some years and comments attributed to him in addition to the ones he had made personally. His interest is longstanding. He very carefully set out that he did not want in any way to dissuade people from becoming lobbyists, as did the Hon. Member for Etobicoke-Lakeshore. It is not a matter of trying to keep people from doing it. It is a matter of trying to get people who want to represent the views of other people to be prepared to stand up publicly and to be placed under the kind of scrutiny which is inevitably put on those who are doing work for pay. There are individuals who, on a matter of conscience on any subject, decide out of their own pockets or by joining with some friends, to attempt to influence the Government's course of action, to make representation, to travel overnight to Ottawa, to stand on the steps of Parliament, to visit with Members in their offices, or to telephone at their own expense. Sometimes they share among themselves, but there is quite a difference between the view they might express as a result of their very strong convictions and the view which might be expressed by someone pulling down $100,000 or $200,000 simply for being available to express a view. We have to be able to measure that in our judgment about the force of the argument and the level of commitment.

Let us be quite fair. There may be someone living in Vancouver who has a very strong sense of miscarriage of justice in a particular issue. He or she may, together with some friends, pay the expense of coming to Ottawa to visit various Members of Parliament to express a concern. Such people are not lobbyists in the sense of the word to which this legislation refers. Indeed they are lobbyists inasmuch as they are lobbying Members to gain favour for their points of view. We are not talking about these kinds of people. We are talking about persons sitting in offices somewhere in high-rise towers. Not only are we talking about them, but about those who make the trip for considerable remuneration or at someone else's expense to present a well-thought-out brief which pays little attention to other matters than that it must be done in a professional and very technically correct manner. I do not want to leave the impression that we are in any way trying to do anything to keep down the level of public participation by anyone, but particularly by those whose opinions are being expressed because they are their opinions.

I say to the Hon. Member for Etobicoke-Lakeshore that I do not think I would be wrong in saying that no doubt he received at least one letter as a result of the recent statements of the Minister of State for Mines (Mrs. Erola). In fact, he smiles; I bet he even received two letters. I have received literally hundreds of letters from people who are vitally concerned about the statements of the Minister. Each and every one of them wrote to ask me to ensure that this proposal never saw the light of day. Each one asked me to do all in my power to keep the Minister of State for Mines from imposing her nutty scheme on the people of Canada. I am sure Liberal Members have also received similar kinds of communications. I can only suggest that the people writing to us are doing so in good faith. They are lobbying us quite justifiably. They are saying, "For Heaven's sake, stop that madwoman before she goes too far", and I agree with them. They are not the kind of people about whom we are talking in this legislation. We are talking about the Bill Lees and the Bill Nevilles of the world and the others moving in and out of the circles of Government, lurking behind the scenes in the halls, carefully sidling up to people at lunch and whispering in their ears.

It happens to all of us at some time. I am referring to people who attempt to influence us on behalf of others. It is time we all knew who they were. If someone walks through our doors, calls for an appointment or writes for an opportunity to come before a committee or to speak to us, we ought to be able to refer to a register and see who is this person and whom they represent, so that we are able to make a judgment about his or her commitment to the cause being presented. Not only that, we might even want to make a judgment about such a person's contacts or general background so that we know—not because it would influence us—or sense how to deal with the individual in the question placed before us.

It was interesting when the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton pointed out a dilemma in terms of the soft drink association, was it?

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Yes. They were very constructive comments.

Mr. Deans: It was a very constructive comment. I could relate to it because it was what was in my mind when I read the Bill. How would we deal with associations? How would we register them? Whom would we register officially? Would we make a provision for others to represent them? If so, at what cost if at all? Would they all have to register? That crossed my mind; we could deal with it in committee. Would we register law firms? There are many legal firms which take on substantial lobbying efforts. If I am not mistaken, I think the petroleum association was represented by a law firm. Am I correct in that?

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): I cannot tell you.

Mr. Deans: In any event, it seems to me that the petroleum association was at one point represented by a law firm. Would we register the firm? Would we register the principal within the firm? Would we register the individual? How would we go about doing that? To what extent would we have to have disclosure?

A question was posed as to whether we would want to know the level of income. I think we would be going a mite far if we asked for that, but by the same token there is some cause to look at the question of substantial contribution. For example, lobbyists could receive a substantial contribution and act, for want of a better word, as bagmen for one of the two major political Parties, Liberal or Conservative. Even though they may not be receiving any direct income from the work they are doing on behalf of contributors and, therefore, might technically fall outside the area of this particular law, they could nevertheless be influencing for gain, which may in fact turn out to be gain such as an appointment to the Senate. I think that is not unreasonable. I have looked around and I have seen some who have been appointed to the Senate who have been very active in the raising of funds for one or other of the Conservative or Liberal Parties and who have not perhaps received, I am not sure, any money personally for the lobbying they did on behalf of certain special interest groups but who gained, nonetheless, from their efforts.

I want, therefore, to make the point that the bill is somewhat deficient in dealing with that problem. I think that as we get it into committee, and I hope we will any minute now, we will be able to keep that in mind too. I am sure that the Hon.

Member for Etobicoke-Lakeshore, as also the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton, would be aware of the efforts of Bill Kelly, for example. He is one who comes to mind quickly, a person who has worked very hard on behalf of the Conservatives in Ontario and who knows how much he has raised and who knows whether or not he ever got paid. I do not. Nevertheless, he could be considered a lobbyist. Is that not fair? But he may not fall within the jurisdiction of this Bill. In any event, I make these points. I think they are important. I think there is value in what is being offered. It will find favour with us if amended appropriately. Maybe we can dash this Bill off to committee now, get the committee working on it, make it law, and we will have served the public of Canada in the process.

Mr. Gary F. McCauley (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, I want to begin by congratulating the Hon. Member for Etobicoke-Lakeshore (Mr. Robinson) for once again drawing our attention to this important issue. He is, of course, building on the arguments advanced in this House before by the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker), as my colleague here says, with eloquence and passion. It was a privilege to hear him once again on this subject which we know is dear to his heart and important to us all. As my colleague, the Hon. Member for Etobicoke Lakeshore has said, this is a subject that has received a thorough airing in this House and also in other places.

I refer to a 1979 symposium organized by the Conference Board of Canada. The topic was: Lobbying: A Right? A Necessity? A Danger? Lobbying is probably all of those things and more.

I believe it is important that we define what we mean by lobbying. In a speech on his Bill in January, 1977, the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton defined lobbying as:

> I think of a lobbyist as someone who seeks, by means of contact with persons of power or influence, to have a significant effect on executive or legislative actions to be taken by the Government of Canada. Lobbyists may act directly for themselves, or on behalf of organizations which hire professionals to make their case. Lobbyists are, in short, special interest and pressure group publicists or their representatives.

That definition encompasses quite well one kind of lobbyist; those whom we would call special interest advocates. It seems to me that is the same kind of lobbyist to whom my colleague, the Hon. Member for Etobicoke-Lakeshore was referring. But there is another kind of lobbyist. There is a group or an individual who could be defined as a public interest lobbyist, a citizens' interest lobbyist.

In the symposium organized by the Conference Board of Canada, this type of lobbyist is well defined. The distinction is well made. Let me quote from the symposium as follows:

> Public or citizens' interest groups can and should be distinguished from special interest groups. Public interest groups have no financial or other vested interest in the causes they support—They want a better society and so challenge politicians, bureaucrats, businessmen and others to take into account in their decision making aspects of the public interest that might otherwise be overlooked or not given proper weight.

This morning, those of us in the Atlantic Government caucus had an example of that kind of public interest lobby group. We had before us representatives of the International Union of the Marine and Shipbuilding Workers of Canada, Local 3, Saint John, New Brunswick. They presented to us in a forceful and passionate way their beliefs regarding the shipbuilding industry, not only on the East Coast of Canada but on the West Coast and wherever that industry is situated in this great country. They did a fantastic job presenting their case. We were very impressed by the quality of their arguments. I do not think any of us who heard them would be of the opinion that they were a special interest advocacy group about which we have to be concerned, that they were the kind of people who had to be registered, noted and so on.

Another group who fits this category about whom I would like to make note, and I am sure my colleagues in the House who have had experience with them will agree with me, is made up of the various and sundry groups throughout the country who represent the UFFI home owners. They were pleading and lobbying all of us in various and sundry ways and were a great help in forming Government policy, in responding to the needs of these people with UFFI in their homes. They were a great help to us in the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs when we studied this whole question of how UFFI came to be and how the whole problem arose. This group appeared at committee meetings and made their point succinctly and well. They were of great assistance to us. No one in the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs would say that these people should be registered, noted, or that a record should have been kept of who they were and from where they came.

I do not think any of us in this House this afternoon would have any objection to public or citizens' interest groups. There is no need to take note of them or to register them. There is no need to register those who speak for the poor, the disposessed, the unemployed or the powerless in our society. In fact, some would argue that such groups should be assisted by Government to lobby. That would create certain problems, but it is a point worth debating.

May I call it six o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): It being six o'clock p.m., this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m., in accordance with the provisions of Standing Order 2(1).

At 6 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

MEASURE TO MODIFY BENEFIT INDEX

The House resumed from Tuesday, January 18, 1983, consideration of Bill C-133, an Act to amend the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act (No. 2), as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates; and the motion of Mr. Gray (p. 21886) and the motion of Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton) (p. 21889).

Mr. Bill Vankoughnet (Hastings-Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to continue my remarks on Bill C-133 and the concern I have for the pensioners of this country who will be affected by this legislation. In two years, when pensions are supposed to be once more fully indexed, there will be a lower base with which to determine any necessary increases.

I would also like to draw attention to the petty manner in which this federal Government has implemented its so-called restraint program. This 6.5 per cent and 5.5 per cent gesture is a gimmick. The federal Government claims that by reducing indexing the pension account will save $100 million. However, the Government neglects to point out that this money in the pension account belongs to contributing public sector workers, not the federal Government. Federal public sector workers are required by law to contribute 6.5 per cent of their salary to a pension account. They pay an additional 1 per cent of their salary to purchase pension indexation for inflation. The federal Government also neglected to point out that it borrows heavily from the pension fund to pay its deficit, so that while the accounts show $14 billion in the pension fund at the end of March, 1981, in fact that money does not exist in that account.

Earlier I made the point that, unlike Canada's decreasing working population, pensioners are not able to negotiate increases to their incomes to help them cope with rising prices.

The right of public sector employees to the collective bargaining process is now denied to that group also. Through no fault of their own, as they do not set policy, they are now being penalized for being public sector employees by the actions of an inept Government. Once this Government attacked current public sector employees, the writing was on the wall for public sector pensioners as well. I repeat that my Party's support for Government restraint should not be misconstrued to mean that there is an agreement to limit the incomes of public sector pensioners.

The principal difference between Bill C-124 and this Bill relates to the actual pension account and whose money it really is. This federal Government is behaving as though the $100 million it proposes that the pension account will save does not rightly belong to the pensioners. The contributions that have been deducted from the pay of public service employees rightfully belongs to those individuals. I might add that pension plans registered under the Canadian Income Tax Act are prohibited by law from reducing either accrued benefits or any right to a supplementary pension in respect of those accrued benefits. This federal Government is now about to take the kind of action vis-à-vis its own pension recipients that has been specifically legislated against in the case of private pension plans.

In the case of the administration of the pension fund, public sector workers have demonstrated not only good faith but trust that the federal Government would administer the pension fund for the benefit of its contributors. Not very many retired civil servants can look forward to the lush pension arrangement the federal Government gave to Michael Pitfield, or to the Liberal example of restraint which was to increase the salary of the Liberal Party President by 140 per cent. The six and five window dressing applies only to pensioners, not Liberal Party friends, as these cases demonstrate.

Credibility is what this Government needs to restore the sort of economic climate that will encourage investment. Bill C-133 sets a poor example for employer and employee relations, particularly when the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has made a call to smooth differences, to work together and to show a little trust.

The Government states that this action is necessary to reduce inflation. If the federal Government had any faith in its own program, it would find that it would not be necessary to legislate six and five or 6.5 per cent and 5.5 per cent, as inflation would be at those levels and indexing of pensions would reflect this. It would be ironic if 18 months hence this Government finds itself paying pensions higher than the rate of inflation.

The fact of the matter is that if the Government had better managed the economy, the capping Bills would not have been necessary. The OECD results that placed Canada twenty-fourth out of 24 countries in fighting inflation demonstrates a total lack of control. This is what Canadians can expect from a Prime Minister who thinks that during Christmas they were skiing or in the Caribbean. That should give a few chuckles to seniors or the unemployed. The Prime Minister should not dismiss the Bishops' statements so quickly. He might learn that the grim realities faced at Christmas by the 1.5 million unemployed in this country did not include a Caribbean holiday.

The fast-rising deficit demonstrates how this Government is out of control. Due to the Government's lack of confidence in its own recovery program, it will seek security through the reallocation of $100 million of Public Service pension money, which rightfully belongs to its contributors, to other uses, such as funding the estimated $30 billion deficit that will be imposed on Canadians.

Furthermore, pension money which the federal Government is trying to raid from the employee pension fund is a paltry sum compared to the millions involved in the Petro-Canada takeovers which do not create one new job, the billions of dollars to Dome Petroleum and the $34 million to an undeserving Maislin Transport, as well as the millions of dollars spent on bail-outs that will provide no long-term job opportunities to Canadians.

In closing, I ask the federal Government to demonstrate some faith in its own recovery program. Bill C-133 only contributes to an attitude of suspicion and mistrust.

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Mr. Speaker, we are debating Bill C-133, to amend the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act. The Government is anxious to terminate debate on this Bill and thereby have pensioners pay for the Government's irresponsible handling of their pension account.

I support my colleague, the Member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker), in his claim that the Government's move to invoke closure is absolutely reprehensible. Not only is it reprehensible, it is also condemnable.

The Conservative Party has steadfastly supported Public Service pensioners in their fight to defeat a Bill which takes $165 million away from pensioners, a segment which is often least able to defend its rights and protect its standard of living. The Conservative Party is well aware that public employees pay 7.5 per cent of their salary to support their pension plan. The private sector employee contributions seldom exceed 5 per cent and are frequently less.

Benefits paid from the plan to date have been more heavily financed by employees than by their employer. Of $1,360 million paid out between October, 1981 and September, 1982, employees contributed $735 million compared to the Government's $625 million.

The Conservative Government of 1979-80 was able to trim $500 million from the federal Budget without any income penalties to retired civil servants or senior citizens in general. Approximately $445 million would be paid out of benefits this year, according to the Treasury Board, and $420 million will come out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund, with only $25 million covered by the contributions made by pensioners when they were employed. This is due to the fact that, while the plan was only implemented in 1979, the benefits are extended to all retired public servants whether or not they contributed to the fund. As time goes on, the drain on the CRF will diminish and the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Account will pay a larger share of the benefits. The total cost of indexing the pension was approximately 4.5 per cent of the payroll from regular public servants last year. Pensions for the Armed Forces and some other groups are administered separately.

There is a paper figure of $15.5 billion in the Public Service Superannuation Account. The present employees' contribution rate of 1 per cent of salary to the SRBA provides for only a 1.5 per cent inflation rate in the future, according to the Treasury Board.

An actuarial analysis claims that the total surplus of $15.5 billion in the superannuation account is sufficient to meet future benefit payments and the accrued interest on this account, especially if it were invested at a high rate of interest, would be more than adequate to cover the cost of pension indexation. Records show that Public Service employees have contributed more to the pension plan than their employer. I suggest that Government-employer contributions to the PSSA and SRBA be investigated to determine if they have been adequate.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has previously committed the Government to full indexation of Public Service pensions as a right earned during working years. His Ministers previously defended the plan and argued that the Government could not break its contract with public employee pensioners by reducing indexation. I would suggest that the Liberal Government is working in reverse. There are other areas on which the Liberal Government should be focusing its sights. The Government should eliminate waste and mismanagement within the federal Government. By eliminating the waste and mismanagement which is in the billions of dollars, inflation will drop and indexing will look after itself. We will not have to worry about indexing once we get Government spending under control.

To give some examples of waste, we could start by considering the document I have in my hand, copies of which have been widely distributed across Canada. I also have in my hand a transcript of the Prime Minister's broadcast to the nation on the economy. There was absolutely no need for this document to be printed. No one is interested at all; it is just an absolute waste of money. In his broadcast, the Prime Minister said: "Of course I am concerned about waste, very concerned; where we find it, we will weed it out". Those were empty, meaningless words. The man does not mean what he says, and he never has since he took over the country in 1968. We heard these statements starting in 1968, and we are hearing them again in 1983. He does not mean what he is saying; if he did, he would not allow a document like this to be printed and distributed. It would just end up in the trash can.

Repeated reference has been made to the Joyal-Davey report on the six and five program. It is the most expensive Liberal householder which has been put out in Canadian history. It is just propaganda and is not required. It is costing hundreds of thousands of dollars and is simply not needed. We receive the Auditor General's report every year, but the only difference between last year's and this year's report is that this one is worse than last year's. They never get any better.

The Liberals have been in office since 1968, and they have no intention of eliminating waste, mismanagement and duplication. They have proven that time and time again. One must simply read the Auditor General's document to find that out, because it gets thicker every year, not thinner, and the horror stories mount up.

The Auditor General pointed out that about $16 billion is missing some place. An article in the Ottawa Citizen dated November 2, 1982, stated:

> Auditor General Kenneth Dye has again proved that his federal Government is at worst not competent to manage money, and at best reluctant to let us know how they handle it.

This is the understatement of the year.

So what are we doing? We are debating a Bill to cut pensions and retirement benefits. The Government is starting at the wrong end. It is very easy to cut pensions. Anyone can go out and cut pensions. However, why does it not implement the recommendations in the Auditor General's report? I have not heard any Liberals discussing that during the debate.

I have in my hand a research paper which is full of horror stories within the Liberal Government. I would simply like to read a couple of examples for the record. One states:

> Spending "cut" by juggling the book. In order to present the illusion of slower spending growth, the Government has changed its accounting system by netting out petroleum taxes against petroleum compensation payments. Thus, through a wave of an accountant's magic wand, spending on a public accounts basis is "cut" by $2.7 billion in the current (1982-83) fiscal year.

That is an example of the type of bookkeeping of the Liberal Government. I guess that in order to account for the $2.7 billion, the Government will reduce old age pensions. The item continues:

> Perhaps the next accounting trip of the Government will be to say that "Income taxes are really a public debt tax, and as such interest on the debt does not cost the Government anything". The logic of this is the same as the logic used by the Government in saying that it does not cost anything to subsidize imported oil.

This is another example of juggling the books. I say: Never mind juggling the books; start balancing the books and start spending the money properly. In this respect the federal Government could well look at the Province of Manitoba and how it pays for its indexing. The Roblin Government set up a plan some years ago whereby pension money is invested to cover the indexing of civil servants in Manitoba. All the indexing comes from the investment of their funds, not from taxes or from general revenues. It is one of the best pension plans in Canada and it is unfortunate that the federal Government did not implement a similar plan. There is no question that the federal pension plans could stand some improvement in the way they are handled. The indexing in Manitoba is not a drain on the taxpayers of Manitoba; it is a sound, well-administered pension plan and it is most unfortunate that the Liberal Government did not study this plan. If it had, we would not be in the mess we are in today.

I want to point out at this time that I am voting against this amendment.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make some brief comments on the amendment which is before us and the Bill we are dealing with. I do not think it is possible to deal with this Bill without thinking out the implications of four pieces of legislation. I remember well in August, when Bill C-124 was brought forward, the Bill to implement the six and five program, the indecent haste with which the Conservative Party dashed across the floor to embrace the Liberals in their efforts to cut the incomes of civil servants.

How well I remember the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) as he rose and said they were prepared to pass the Bill post haste, without debate if necessary. I remember the Leader of the Opposition saying: "It is too little, too late, but it is a step in the right direction". Now we have the hypocrisy.

However, we are now dealing with the fall-out, the consequences of the Tories' inability to see the Liberal duplicity. That is the difficulty we are now facing in this country, the difficulty with which many seniors and all mothers of children are now being faced. I say to the Conservatives that they should be ashamed of themselves.

Let us look at the legislative program. We have before us three Bills. The Bill we are now discussing will limit the entitlement of civil service retirees for the rest of their natural lives. This is not a minor thing; this is a major thrust by the Government. It could not have happened if the Tories had not supported the Government originally; nevertheless now we have it. The Bill ought to be withdrawn. If there was ever a time for this legislation, if it could have been justified—and I say quite bluntly on behalf of myself and my colleagues that we do not believe it was ever justified—but if there was ever a time when it could be said that this kind of measure was appropriate, the time has passed. The mood in the country is now quite different. The sense among those who are most affected is one of outrage. The belief of the majority of Canadian citizens that this is not the kind of legislative action that is necessary has become evident from every single statement by those who support both the Conservatives and Liberals, and it is now becoming a clear violation of what the majority of economists believe is necessary for this country.

I point out that not only did the Catholic Bishops quite justifiably say that a social conscience was desperately needed in dealing with the income capacities and purchasing power of those who were less advantaged than others, for example, seniors, those who are raising families, those who are on extremely low incomes. Not only did they say we needed to take a new look at this legislative program, but Ian Sinclair, the chairman of the six and five committee, has said—and he is the Government's representative—that at this time, with current economic conditions, we need new direction. We need direction even if it means that there will be a higher deficit in the country. We have to re-focus our attention on income capability and job creation. We have to look at the economy. Six and five applied to Public Service pensioners, any other pensioners or to family incomes is not the answer to creating purchasing power in this country.

We said this at the beginning and we continue to say it: the legislation should be withdrawn. Bills C-133, C-132 and C-131 should be taken back to the drawing board, looked at and scrapped. A new program for stimulation should be brought forward by this Government, one that will increase employment and give people income capacity. That is what this Government should bring forward.

We say to the Government it is not too late. It does not have to go on with this ridiculous proposal it has placed before the House of Commons; there is no reason for it. It is outdated. If it ever had a time, that time has passed.

We ask the Government to reconsider this Bill seriously. If it is not yet satisfied that the program now before us does not have the support of the majority of Canadians, it should send these Bills back to committee. Let the committee travel across the country. Divide it into panels and let the committee hear the views of those most affected. Let it hear them in Vancouver, St. John's, Toronto, Montreal, Quebec City and every other community across the country. Let us find out and do what the public wants for a change. I say to the Government, take the Bills out of the Order Paper, put them back in the committee and send the committee out to the people. I am positive as I stand here that the committee would come back and recommend that these pieces of legislation not be proceeded with.

Equally important, there is a serious question about the legality of one of the pieces of legislation now being implemented. I ask the Government to make a reference to a Supreme Court judge and ask for a judgment on it. Let us find out who is right. The Government back room manipulators say it is legal; lawyers on the other side say it is not. Surely in those circumstances the Government ought to recognize its responsibility, take the right course of action and ask for a legal opinion.

Should the Government decide, in its misguided judgment, to proceed with the legislation, for heaven's sake do not make it retroactive. If the Government decides it has to go ahead, for God's sake do not impose it retroactively.

Finally, I say to the Government to make use of the time. To further harass and reduce the income capacity of those at the bottom end of the scale is outrageous. To push ahead with it now is ridiculous. It is inhuman; it will create great hardship. Let us address the real problems in this country. Come forward with some proposals for economic recovery, job creation and other proposals that will put this country back on the road to success.

Do not push ahead with the legislative program now before us. For heaven's sake, stop and think about it, those of you who are here on the Government benches. The Tories have come grudgingly to the view that what they once supported is no longer supportable. I say to the Liberals, for God's sake think of what you are doing. Consider the impact on those who have now retired, whether they be public service retirees or retirees who worked in other parts of the economy.

Consider this. These people are not being denied some income for a year or two; they are being asked to reduce their income for the rest of their lives. For heaven's sake, it is not necessary. It is wrong-headed, economically stupid and defies all logic. It flies in the face of the Government's own advisers' advice. It pays no recognition to what the spiritual leaders of this country are advising. It does not even recognize what the banks' senior administrative officers are now saying ought to be done. Those are your supporters, for heaven's sake. Listen to those senior corporate people, if you cannot listen to us. If the Government thinks that the Tories cannot be trusted because it does not know where they stand, although I agree, I say, listen to them on this occasion and for heaven's sake withdraw the legislation.

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak on Bill C-133 knowing full well, as others do, that the Government moved yesterday to close off debate on this very important piece of legislation. It did this knowing full well that many Hon. Members in this House still wish to address the provisions of Bill C-133. It knows there is growing opposition to the measures contained in this Bill across the country, not only from the trade union movement but from a growing number of concerned citizens. In fact, if the Government were to listen at all to the media attention which has been paid to this Bill, not only on the commentary pages but on the editorial pages right across this country, it would recognize that the support it believes it has for this piece of legislation is dissipating very quickly. I believe that is probably why the Government is moving to shut up debate in this House on this very important piece of legislation.

In the course of this debate, Mr. Speaker, Members in my Party have been extremely critical of the position which the Conservative Party took in supporting Bill C-124 at the beginning of August, as my colleague from Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) just mentioned. I believe we have been absolutely right in levelling that criticism. I know that many Members of the Conservative Party do not like to hear us make that criticism; nonetheless, I believe it to be quite accurate and quite true. In fact, many Members of the Conservative Party have spoken to me since then and said if they had known what the Government was really doing under the six and five program, they would never have voted for that piece of legislation in the first place. And I am quite sure that many of them regret their support of the Government for the six and five program.

I have received numerous letters from constituents and from Canadians across the country who will be seriously affected if this piece of legislation is in fact enacted. One gentleman in my own riding, a Mr. Wilson, a retired public servant, has sat down with me on several occasions to express his concern about what is going to happen to his income once this legislation has been passed. I want to tell you, Mr. Speaker, that this gentleman is a rather bitter Canadian these days when he considers the kind of service he has given to this country through the Public Service and now the Government is turning around and saying to him: "Look, even though you bought inflation protection through deferred income, even though you bought that inflation protection specifically, we are now going to renege on that and not give you the full inflation protection you thought you had bought".

I have heard many Members of the Government stand up here and try to defend the indefensible which is contained in this piece of legislation. It is typical of this Government, and of that particular Party over there, that it is doing this kind of thing again, breaking the social contract, if not the legal contract that it has with Canadians. It was not so long ago, in 1977, for example, when the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) himself said that pensioners were the victims and not the cause of inflation. In a letter to the Public Service Alliance in 1977 he in fact said, and I quote:

> Thank you for your telegram of September 27. I have noted your concern that the indexation of Government pensions be maintained.
> In our society, pensions provide a means of sharing risk so that we can retire in reasonable security and dignity, without fear of the future. Protecting pensions from inflation by indexing them to increases in the cost of living should be an integral part of our pension schemes. Indexing does not give pensioners an increasingly larger claim on our economy's production, that is, more money to buy things they could not earlier afford. Rather, indexing merely enables pensioners to maintain, roughly, their same standard of living.
> Even a modest rate of inflation destroys, at a devastating rate, the buying power of people on fixed incomes. Pensioners are out of the workforce and cannot bargain or strike for larger incomes. They are not the cause of inflation; they are its victim.

Many other Canadians, as well as myself, have become rather used to this kind of Liberal about-face where they make promises, give assurances, even go on national television to pontificate to Canadians about the need for trust between people in this country, and they then turn around in the most hypocritical fashion and stick it to people such as those on fixed incomes, and pensioners in particular. They would be of more service to Canadians if they were to address the real problems in this country today rather than attack those who are at least able to defend themselves.

In this country today, as the Leader of my Party indicated the other day, the real unemployment rate is in excess of two million people. Unemployment is without question the major problem which Canadians face today. The Episcopal Commission for Social Affairs, Canadian Conference of Catholic Bishops, made reference to this in a recent document which has received wide attention across the country. They said, in part, and I quote:

> —greater emphasis should be given to the goal of social responsibility in the current recession. This means that every effort must be made to curtail cutbacks in social services, maintain adequate health care and social security benefits, and above all, guarantee special assistance for the unemployed, welfare recipients, the working poor and one-industry towns suffering from plant shutdowns.

I totally agree, Mr. Speaker, that is the emphasis and direction this Government should go in. But rather than that, it has chosen to take a swipe at people who are at the low end of the income scale, who are least able to defend themselves, such as senior citizens, retired public servants, Family Allowance recipients, and all the rest.

The Conservative Party is standing up in this House also defending the position which they took last August in supporting the Government in this horrendous piece of legislation. They are standing up now and saying: "We are in favour of restraint, but not really restraint, especially when it could reflect on the electoral chances we may have in the next election". They now see the kind of opposition which has been generated in the country against this offensive piece of legislation. But although the Conservative Members may want to stand up here and make those attempts to convince Canadians that they were not serious when they did that kind of thing, I suggest it is an integral part of the philosophy of that Party to go along with the kinds of initiatives this Government has taken. In fact, at the Tory conference held early in 1981 the Party conducted a questionnaire among the delegates. Then they did something I thought they may have been reluctant to do; they actually issued the results of this questionnaire so that the public could see quite clearly exactly the position they would take if they were ever, unfortunately, elected to form the Government of this country.

For example, 62 per cent of the delegates said quite clearly that they favoured a reduction in Family Allowance outlays, compared with 30 per cent who would leave these unchanged. Asked how they would categorize their economic views, 66 per cent of the delegates described themselves as being either to the right of the average Canadian or much further to the right. As for their social views, 58 per cent put themselves to the far right of the average Canadian.

I hear one of the more right-wing Members of the Conservative Party. He was probably discouraged at the relatively low percentage who said they were as right-wing as he was. He complains about the statement I just made. But the fact is that it is not something I dreamt up, Mr. Speaker. The Tories have said it themselves. Certainly their actions when they were the Government would clearly show to all Canadians that if they were ever elected, they would be as bad as, if not worse than, that crowd over there.

I see my time has run out, Mr. Speaker, so therefore I will end on that happy note.

[Translation]

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I should like to speak for a few minutes on behalf of Quebec and most emphatically against the bill now under consideration. I have every reason to believe that very few Quebec Members have shown even the slightest sympathy for these pensioners, and in view of the correspondence I have received, especially during the holidays, and also considering the commitment made by the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) a few years ago, I believe it is my duty to take the strongest possible stand against the proposal now before the House.

Mr. Speaker, people say that we supported the principle of 6 and 5 policy, and they would also have the public believe that the Progressive Conservative Party has changed its mind. We were aware of the difficult situation they had put the Government in, and we are also aware of the economic disaster for which the Government must take the responsibility. Some time ago, the Prime Minister of Canada made an appeal to the nation, to all organizations and even to the Members of the Opposition, asking them to help him get Canada out of the present recession for which he himself, I feel, is partially responsible. We did want to try once more, and we shall probably regret it, to trust the Prime Minister, and considering our responsibilities as Members of this House, we had a duty to help Canadians get out of this recession as painlessly as possible.

Mr. Speaker, to get back to the information and complaints I received from a number of public servants who live in Quebec, this morning, in the few minutes at my disposal, I want to let those 20,000 retired public servants in Quebec know, and on their behalf I want to say that our party will do everything it can to obstruct this bill, which we feel is entirely unfair and certainly does not live up to the very important promise made by the Prime Minister of Canada in 1968, when he told us that he was going to create a Just Society in this country. I also know that there are now 86,000 federal employees living in Quebec and an additional 45,000 who work for Crown corporations.

I feel that as the only Quebec Member of the Opposition in the House, I have a duty, on behalf of those thousands of Quebecers, to at least ask my Quebec colleagues to show the sympathy and compassion they have been unwilling to show until now.

Furthermore, I think it is very important that the people of Quebec should know about the commitment made by the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Trudeau) a few years ago to provide for and support a pension plan that would provide a decent living. In this connection, I would like to recall, as did one of my colleagues here in the House, a letter written by the Prime Minister of Canada to Mr. Power, letting him know what the Prime Minister of Canada's views were on the subject of pensioners. In our society, he said, pensions provide a means of sharing risk so that we can retire in reasonable security and dignity, without fear of the future. Protecting pensions from inflation by indexing them to increases in the cost of living should be an integral part of our pension schemes. Indexing, he said, does not give pensioners an increasingly larger claim on our economy's production, that is, more money to buy things they could not earlier afford. Rather, indexing merely enables pensioners to maintain, roughly, their same standard of living. Even a modest rate of inflation destroys, at a devastating rate, the buying power of people on fixed incomes. Pensioners are out of the work force and cannot bargain or strike for larger incomes. Indexing does not give pensioners an increasingly larger claim on our economy's production. Rather, indexing merely enables pensioners to maintain, roughly, their same standard of living. Pensioners are out of the work force and cannot bargain or strike for larger incomes. They are not the cause of inflation; they are its victim. We have an obligation to help protect them.

That, Mr. Speaker, was what the Prime Minister of Canada said, probably as part of that solemn promise he had made to create a Just Society. Today, the House is considering legislation that goes directly against the principles we have supported and intend to support once more. I think that in any case it is our duty, as Members of this House, to recall the commitment made by the Prime Minister of Canada, and if the attitude taken by the Government today cannot be called a fundamental betrayal of the Prime Minister's commitment, then I wonder what it can be called, Mr. Speaker. I understand that the Prime Minister is away on a trip at the present time, and he must be very glad not to have to face the speeches being made here in the House of Commons, and if we were obliged to vote before the Prime Minister gets back, he would probably be equally delighted not to have to betray his own commitment to these pensioners.

Mr. Gauthier: He came back yesterday!

Mr. La Salle: He came back yesterday. In the circumstances, he will have an opportunity to vote and explain how he can betray his commitment to these pensioners. Mr. Speaker, that is why I am launching a special appeal to the Members from Quebec, on behalf of 130,000 public servants, either retired or still working in the public service and living in Quebec. I believe it is my duty to remind those members from my own province that, at the very least, they must support the commitment made by the Prime Minister of Canada. It is not the first time that the Prime Minister ignores his commitments, but I do not want to go into that. I shall have other opportunities to show that the Prime Minister has not always kept his promises. How can we possibly hesitate and not be totally honest towards these people deserve all our respect and who have helped us build our society? It is solely on behalf of these thousands of people that I rise today in this House, Mr. Speaker, to ask my colleagues from Quebec to show first some honesty concerning the commitment made by the Prime Minister of Canada and then a minimum of sympathy for the needs of pensioners in view of the present economic conditions, and at the same time, of course, to keep the promises made by the government to public servants.

• (1150)

I believe that my time has already expired, Mr. Speaker, but I trust that Hon. Members from my province will take this opportunity to reject a bill which I find completely unacceptable for all those who will be personally affected. Of course, there will be other speeches and other pressures to be made concerning family allowances, old age security, and especially the piece of legislation known as Bill C-133. I believe that we cannot accept the position taken by the Government and its proposals. We were aware that the income of active workers might be restricted in view of the present economic situation, but we would never have thought that the Government would attack the pensioners. If we had been told about this at the start, the Government would never have received the support of my party for its 6 and 5 program. We were misled because this was kept from us, Mr. Speaker! We were not told about it! We are now aware of it and we believe that it is important and vital for us to object to such a measure, and that it is our duty to ask and urge one last time our colleagues from Quebec to do what I am now doing and to promise these public servants that we will fight and vote against this measure because it is discriminatory, unfair and goes against the promise of the Right Hon. Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Trudeau) concerning what was once called a just society and what is now becoming increasingly unjust, as is evidenced once again today.

I thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I hope that my colleagues have understood my message correctly.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Hon. Member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) would allow a question?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I must tell the Hon. Member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) that his time has already expired. A question can therefore be allowed only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, my question is very simple. The Hon. Member for Joliette spoke for about 10 minutes and I listened very carefully. Is he aware that the motion of his colleague for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) has been grouped with that of the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray) and does he support the amendment moved by the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton?

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Speaker, if the Government wants to make a change which could be of some help to the pensioners, we are quite willing to agree. However, I am still convinced that the bill as a whole is a breach of a commitment made by the Right Hon. Prime Minister of Canada on behalf of his party. We find this unfortunate and regrettable. Because of this, if some improvement can be made, we will vote in favour of it, but I am still convinced that this improvement is clearly inadequate.

Mr. Maltais: Would the Hon. Member agree to a question?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Once again, there has to be unanimous consent for the Hon. Member to ask his question. Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Maltais: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member for Joliette whether it would not be preferable to try capping at 6 and 5 per cent the old age security benefits of people who are entitled to them and use that money to create jobs for younger people about whom the elderly are so concerned. Moreover, I would like to know whether the funds thus saved are used to create jobs for young people. Would older people then not consider the six and five measure more interesting, and I wonder whether the Hon. Member for Joliette would be in favour of that kind of solution?

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Speaker, the way the legislation now stands, it seems to me that the Government could recoup $100 million. If the Government simply needs $100 million, Mr. Speaker, perhaps it might cut down by one third on its ministers' and members' junkets. This, I think, would be a way to find the $100 million. Another way of recuperating $100 million would be to sell back the 80,000 acres of farm land at Mirabel. There are other sectors where expenditures could be slashed instead of this money being taken out of the pockets of the elderly and retired people. That is what I deplore indeed. Expenditures ought to be cut down in fields where savings could be made without hurting anyone. I fully agree with the Hon. Member that we must direct our efforts towards the creation of jobs for younger people. They do experience an employment crisis, but the fact remains that when this Government came to office 15 years ago we only had 300,000 people out of work whereas their ranks have swollen to nearly 2 million today. I would suggest to my colleagues across the floor that directing questions to the Official Opposition and attempting to hold us responsible for the mess we are in now is not the way to solve the problem, in my opinion. The Government has flopped miserably in the economic sector, to say the least and it is now attacking the elderly and retired people and requiring them to make sacrifices. If the Government wants to help young people get jobs, it could find more appropriate ways to cut down its expenditures.

Mr. Maltais: Perhaps I should ask the Hon. Member for Joliette whether he is aware that the most needy senior citizens are still eligible for the income supplement. The question I want to ask him is this: does the Hon. Member for Joliette agree that those funds be set aside not only for the elderly but for other sectors where the 6 and 5 per cent limit applies, provided that the money be used to help young people, does the Hon. Member agree with that principle?

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Speaker, I am all in favour of the Government doing its utmost to create jobs for young people. The current situation is that young people account for 40 per cent of the unemployed. They are deeply concerned and they have almost given up any hope for the future. The Government must accept responsibility for that, but it does not have the right to get on the backs of senior citizens and retired people in its attempt to correct a situation for which it is responsible in the first place. Under these circumstances, the six and five policy may be acceptable to those who earn a good income, but I am squarely against attacking needy people who do require essential services. These government policies will affect people who cannot afford any lowering of their standards of living. We should ask those who are better off to accept a wiser redistribution of funds, but I still maintain that the Government has made a wrong decision as a result of which it will be singled out as the main culprit for this untenable situation, and that is my answer to the Hon. Member for Manicouagan who does entertain lofty principles. Of course, I agree with him, but, indeed, the Prime Minister of Canada had advocated and defended a commendable principle with respect to retired people, but today he throws that principle overboard in the piece of legislation now being considered. That is why we blame the government.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): It seems to me Hon. Members will have no difficulties with the Chair if they seek the floor to continue exchanging that kind of questions and answers.

[English]

Hon. Members have no difficulty with the Chair if the House wishes to persist in giving its unanimous consent to an exchange of questions and answers, but I have to seek unanimous consent every once in a while. Is there unanimous consent for an exchange of questions and answers?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Maltais: My question is this, Mr. Speaker. I suggest the Hon. Member for Joliette is making a commendable attempt to support the 6 and 5 program which is designed to provide money for job creation, but when he talks about justice, is he aware that our senior citizens who are really destitute will be entitled to a fully indexed income supplement? This is not at all inconsistent with the concept of a just society. I wish all pensioners were entitled to a full indexation. In view of the manner in which the Government will apply the 6 and 5 program, however, our senior citizens who are really destitute will be entitled to a fully indexed income supplement. Is the Hon. Member for Joliette aware of that fact?

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Speaker, I want to say to the Hon. Member for Manicouagan that I am indeed quite aware of that fact. We are dealing today with Bill C-133; we will have the opportunity to deal with OAS some other time, but I am shocked to find today that the Prime Minister will not keep the promise he made to public servants and tomorrow, we will have comments to make about the bill to amend the Old Age Security Pension Act.

[English]

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, will the Hon. Member for Manicouagan (Mr. Maltais) accept a question?

Mr. Maltais: Yes.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Could he tell me what aspect of Government policy has worked to create employment in Canada? Could he lay his seat on the line and tell me categorically any policies that he sees in the future which will work to create employment in the country? Why is it necessary for him to support some mythical Liberal policy with respect to employment which attacks the least defensible of society, namely, senior citizens and retired public servants who paid for their benefits? Why is the Hon. Member supporting such a breach of contract?

[Translation]

Mr. Maltais: In short, Mr. Speaker, I feel that the current crisis is worldwide and that it should be borne by all Canadians, both young and old. Moreover, early last fall, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) announced that programs totalling over $1 billion would be implemented to create jobs and start the economy moving again. One cannot give what one does not have, and what really matters is that all Canadians assume their share of the burden in the best interests of Canada.

• (1200)

[English]

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, is the Hon. Member not aware of the wasted squandering of public money on the purchases by Petro-Canada of something Petro-Canada did not need in a period of emergency? Is the Hon. Member not aware of that? Does the Hon. Member not have enough imagination to consider that there are other programs which the Government could look to which would provide the capital for the programs that he thinks would work, without attacking senior citizens and retired public servants?

Mr. Young: And little kids.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Is he satisfied with the morality of the Government from that point of view?

Mr. Maltais: Mr. Speaker, I can inform the Hon. Member that first of all, Petro-Canada holds a very bright future for Canadians. Through this Corporation, Canadians can invest in their own natural ressources, and being from a northern riding myself, I can say that we are all very proud of the oil exploration being done in this country. I also wish to point out, for the information of the Opposition, that if research is carried out in co-operation with Petro-Canada, this will be a tremendous stimulus for technological development, especially since in my riding, we are facing the situation created by the Iron Ore Company, and lay-offs as well, and if research on iron ore could have been done with other companies, we might not be as badly off as we are now. In the proposals by Petro-Canada, it says that there will be research in the petro-chemical sector, and this means it will be possible to provide truly creative jobs for young people jobs with a future. I hope the opposition parties understand that the present Government and Canadians support job creation in the high technology sector. Whatever our political affiliations may be, Petro-Canada represents an asset for Canadians. The public may think Petro-Canada is expensive, but in fact, it is not costing Canadians a cent. The corporation is financed with revenues from oil, from the gas purchased by people who want to use their cars and from purchases of oil products. It is therefore entirely wrong to say that Petro-Canada is being paid for with the taxpayers' money. I would like to point out to all opposition parties and the government side as well that if private companies were to make the same effort to carry out research as Petro-Canada is doing and intends to do in the oil sector and oil products, I think Canada's future would be as rosy as that of Petro-Canada itself.

[English]

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the hon. gentleman another question. Has he run across any young persons who are prepared to agree with him that it is morally right to carry out the programs that he says the Government intends which will attack senior citizens?

Has the Hon. Member been lobbied by those people that it is imperative the Government cut old age pensions and pensions which have been bought and paid for? Has he run into anyone so heartless? Is that the reason the Hon. Member agrees with the Government Bill, or has the Hon. Member lost all sense of balance with respect to the matter itself?

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Before recognizing the Hon. Member for Manicouagan—

[English]

—may I just remind Hon. Members that I have, I think, three times sought unanimous consent for an exchange of questions and replies. There is no difficulty in continuing if it is the mood and the will of the House. Therefore, until I hear some indication that Hon. Members wish to revert to Bill C-133, we will continue in the present direction.

[Translation]

Mr. Maltais: Very briefly, Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out to the House that in addition to the young people I met, for the information of the Hon. Member, I also met senior citizens who told me: We are prepared to do our share as Canadians in helping the Canadian economy to recover, so that young people, our grandchildren, will have jobs. I would go even further. Being young myself, I feel that the elderly, our senior citizens in Canada, deserve to get even more than 6, 12 or 30 per cent, because they are the people who built this country. However, there comes a time when there is a limit to what the budget can bear. We must act responsibly, and I certainly do not think that either the Government or the Opposition are out to restrict aid to senior citizens. As I said before, the aim of the Government is to have all Canadians contribute their fair share towards relieving the economic recession, and if anyone asks me whether I have met any young Canadians who were prepared to attack senior citizens, my answer is that I have not, and that the Hon. Member opposite is the one who brought up the word attack. We are merely concerned with distributing benefits fairly and allowing everyone to do his fair share. If we manage to bring down inflation, this will increase the purchasing power of senior citizens and improve their standard of living. That is what the present government is aiming at, and I think this is perfectly clear to Members on both sides of the House.

[English]

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, with the unanimous consent of the House I would like to participate in this very lively debate and put a question to the Hon. Member.

I notice that the Government over the last number of months has put a great deal of stock in listening to the advice of the blue chip community of Canada, seeking the advice of business leaders and particularly the advisory group headed up recently by Mr. Ian Sinclair. We read this morning that Mr. Sinclair and his blue chip group has now looked at the six and five program and has deemed it no longer appropriate.

An Hon. Member: That is not true.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Sinclair has talked with the leaders of Canada's Government and said that it is now time to divert our attention away from six and five and into job creation.

If the Government has been listening to the blue chip business community up to this point and the blue chip community now advises the Government that it is time to move away from its preoccupation with six and five and into job creation, about which the Hon. Member obviously feels very strongly, is it not time now to show good faith on behalf of the Government, pull out this legislation which will not add a single job—and I am simply following the advice of the blue chip community—and strike another committee in an effort not to impose five and six, but to impose job creation programs in Canada?

[Translation]

Mr. Maltais: Mr. Speaker, I should like to emphasize a basic element of our economic system: if industries are to invest, we must first of all appreciate our currency, and the purpose of our anti-inflationary 6 and 5 program is to strengthen the Canadian dollar so that industries can invest. I should like to emphasize also, for the information of Hon. members, that the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce and the Minister, who is present today in the House, have set up task forces which, in consultation with representatives of the private sector and the various industries, are seeking very positive ways and means not to create jobs, but to encourage both Canadian and foreign interests to invest in Canada and thus create jobs.

Our meetings with these economic agents have led to the following conclusion: all these economic agents demand as a prerequisite that we wrestle inflation to the ground. Personally, I am eager to fight unemployment. But it is impossible to create jobs when our currency is worthless. It would be like asking a farmer to sow his fields with sterile seeds. Nobody will agree to work for money that is worthless. Money must retain its value, and that is why the government, at the request of economic agents and other groups, decided to fight inflation first and foremost. We are making progress already. The inflation rate is coming down, which shows that the policies of the Government of Canada are working. Then, after inflation has been brought under control, new investments will be made. And if the Hon. Member does not believe in Canada's future, let him consider what is happening in the United States. He should find comfort in the realization that investments have already started again there.

[English]

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Hon. Member's answer and I just have a follow-up question for him. If he is concerned about the attitude of the investment community about creating long-term jobs, if the blue chip committee which is in place to advise the Government was to recommend the abandonment of the six and five program at this point, if the bankers of Canada who obviously have a sensitivity toward investment in the country were also to advise abandonment of the program at this point, would the Hon. Member admit that it is perhaps time to withdraw the six and five program as it applies to senior citizens of Canada, mothers and children of Canada and to retired Armed Forces, RCMP and civil servants?

[Translation]

Mr. Maltais: Mr. Speaker, I would point out first of all that the 6 and 5 program is voluntary for Canada as a whole. It is compulsory for the Canadian Government because the salaries and benefits paid by the Government represent approximately 40 per cent of total Government expenditures. This is why the Canadian Government has made it compulsory for the federal Public Service and those who receive benefits under various programs. I believe that the private sector has already given encouraging support to the 6 and 5 program and would have agreed to much harsher measures to reduce the increases in welfare and old age security benefits as well as Public Service pensions.

We are already protecting our senior citizens and public servants with the 6 and 5 program. If we had listened to the private sector which favoured much more drastic action than the Government, we would perhaps now find ourselves with a situation somewhat similar to that which prevails in Quebec, with rollbacks of 20 per cent and so on. Members of Parliament were against such action and were in favour of the most basic of equity for Canadian citizens and recipients of Government benefits and this is why we have a 6 and 5 program. Moreover, I would like to remind Hon. Members that the 6 and 5 program was viewed as an unacceptable policy at the time of the meeting of federal and provincial Ministers of Finance in Halifax last year and that the 6 and 5 program is now accepted by nearly everyone and that even public servants in various provinces and the federal Government agree with this policy of restrictions because it is much better than the policy of minus 20 per cent applied by certain irresponsible people.

[English]

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I have two or three questions for the Hon. Member as well. He mentioned that he supported Petro-Canada. Does he support the fact that they have spent thousands of dollars to construct an office building in Calgary and that scores of those offices have been empty for several weeks? Would it not have been better to spend that money on senior citizens, old age pensioners and retired civil servants who are unable to defend themselves?

Mr. Maltais: Mr. Speaker, I do not claim the Government is always one hundred percent right, but I would like to examine the case proposed by the Hon. Member before answering. Since I do not know all the details I would rather not reply, but I am prepared to examine them if they are given to me.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out to this House that both sides have now been asking questions back and forth for nearly twenty minutes. Granted, it is an important and very interesting debate, but we are now considering an amendment to Bill C-133 and I wish Hon. Members would debate it because the time allowed is limited. In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, the House could consider the Government legislation and proceed with the reading of the next motion. I do not see anyone rising, so I presume the House will pass on to motion No. 4.

[English]

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, as a courtesy, I wonder if the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) might allow one more question.

I wonder if the Hon. Member for Manicouagan (Mr. Maltais) is at all concerned that those opinion-makers in the country are now quite clearly questioning the value of proceeding with this general legislative framework, given the current economic conditions within the country? Has he considered whether there would be general agreement that conditions are quite different today from those which existed in August of 1982 when the Government first introduced its program and that it might be useful for the Government to postpone its headlong dash toward approval of this legislation in order to analyse the economic changes that have taken place, the social effects of those changes and to review the new opinions that are being expressed by many people, including the chairman of the six and five committee, the presidents of a number of the larger financial institutions and the spiritual leaders of the country?

In light of those fairly dramatic shifts, has he considered whether it might not be advisable to draw back and review the over-all situation to determine whether this kind of legislation is necessary and appropriate?

[Translation]

Mr. Maltais: Mr. Speaker, if you are putting the question to me, I would say that I think we must maintain the six and five policy until the rate of inflation is down to 1 or 2 per cent.

Mr. Veillette: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Chair is experiencing a minor difficulty.

[English]

There are several Hon. Members rising to continue this exchange. One Hon. Member has risen to indicate that he thinks we should perhaps revert to debate on Bill C-133. Nonetheless, the Chair is obliged to recognize Hon. Members who rise on a point of order and I will do so. However, the implication is that there may not be unanimous consent to continue this kind of exchange.

[Translation]

Mr. Veillette: Mr. Speaker, I simply want to point out to you that the thrust of the debate has shifted completely. The Hon. Member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) had the floor a few minutes ago and we as Members of the Opposition were supposed to direct questions to him, but now it is our colleague the Hon. Member for Manicouagan (Mr. Maltais) who is fielding questions. Mr. Speaker, I can see that the Hon. Member for Joliette was afraid to face questions from the Quebec Member. He left his seat after the second one to avoid further questions from a Quebec Member. Being unable to answer, he left the House.

[English]

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I think we are beginning to see the offshoot from the reforms that were instituted. Although the specific reform only calls for a question period of limited duration, ten minutes, after speeches on second and third reading, the thought has opened up that a debate with respect to posing questions at Report Stage is just as relevant sometimes as a debate in terms of set speeches. I am inclined to agree that this is the case.

I think that the give-and-take has been quite healthy so far, just as Statements by Members have indicated that, despite the labels that might be put on some Members of Parliament, some do have a sense of independence and are deeply concerned about issues that are raised by Ministers from time to time.

You will recall that a Liberal Member questioned the statement by the Minister of State responsible for the status of women (Mrs. Erola) on income tax deductions. I think that this is quite a healthy development. I would not want to see that abandoned merely because it has taken a new twist this morning.

On the other hand, I can understand that the Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) is anxious because he has an amendment which he would like to see reached at some point. Incidentally, I support that amendment and I would like to have it reached at some point.

I would not want to be seen as opposing unanimous consent for the continuation of this healthy exercise. If I were asked for unanimous consent, I would say yes. However, I think we have embarked on a new means of debate in the House and I want to commend you, Mr. Speaker, for your understanding of the new feeling in the House in terms of debate in the House. I hope that this precedent is one that will not be forgotten because it extends to the report stage at least the spirit of the changes with respect to the second and third reading. I think it is a very healthy exchange indeed and it ought not to be forgotten by Members of the House.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would point out a fact that is confusing at this time. As the Hon. Member for Champlain (Mr. Veillette) said, it was the Hon. Member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) who was supposed to reply to questions. He made the speech. He was there to reply to a question and he ran away from the House. After that, the questions were asked of an Hon. Member on our side. I would like to point that out to the Hon. Member, as we would like to have the privilege of asking questions. Now we have the Hon. Member for Manicouagan (Mr. Maltais), who took questions from anyone, and he has done it in a superb way.

• (1220)

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: But, on the other hand—

[Translation]

—the Member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) got scared and left when we began asking questions which could have been embarrassing. I hope Members opposite will not rush out of the House every time Liberal Members will rise to put questions to them. It is a good example, and thanks to the Opposition this incident did prove—and I am very proud of that—that a young Member such as the Member for Manicouagan

(Mr. Maltais) can answer questions coming from anyone. I hope that one day the Members opposite will remain in their seat so that we on this side can show them how incompetent and vulnerable they are.

[English]

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I do not think we can let the point raised by the Hon. Member for Champlain (Mr. Veillette) and the Minister (Mr. Chrétien) go unchallenged. The Hon. Member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) did not run away. The Hon. Member for—

Mr. Deans: I saw him running.

Mr. Taylor: —Joliette answered all the questions that came to him. Then the questions switched to another Member. The only reason the Hon. Member for Joliette left is that he had an important appointment.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Taylor: There was no precedent for questions after the ten-minute period. Had there been such a precedent, the Hon. Member would have made arrangements to be here. However, he stayed here and answered every question which was put to him. Let us get the record straight. Another point is that the Hon. Member for Joliette will never be afraid of any question coming to him from a Liberal, never.

Mr. Deans: I rise on a point of order. I am really enjoying this little family squabble.

Mr. Darling: Are you not part of the family?

Mr. Deans: However, I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that we would not have to ask questions of the Hon. Member for Champlain (Mr. Veillette) if the Minister were here.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, it appears that after 14 hours of debate in which 64 Hon. Members spoke, the House, on giving unanimous consent on a number of occasions to discuss other issues of importance beside Bill C-133, may be disposed to give unanimous consent to pass Bill C-133 so that we could then revert to asking these questions.

Mr. Deans: No, I can assure you that is not forthcoming.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I do not know what the Parliamentary Secretary had in mind except, perhaps, mischief. However, I repeat I am sorry that what had been a reasonably sane atmosphere in the House of Commons with respect to a good Question Period had to be overcharged, should I put it that way, or tarnished by the efforts of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Chrétien). We were doing quite well without him. We were having a very intelligent discussion about a very important matter—

Mr. Deans: And then the Minister arrived.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): —until he came along and, in his usual way, he managed to trivialize it and turn it into a partisan row, which it was not intended to be. It was intended to be a series of questions following a speech, and I repeat what I said earlier.

Mr. Chrétien: Who spoke last?

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): I will say that the Hon. Member for Manicouagan (Mr. Maltais) has done a good job; I will not argue with that.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): He has done his very best to defend the indefensible, and that takes skill—

Mr. Chrétien: Who spoke last?

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): —because the Government's record is indefensible. He has done his very best with respect to it, but I repeat that no one wants this to go on forever, certainly. However, the precedent has now been established, and I think a very important one, that when issues are raised now, even on report stage, there are questions that come to Hon. Members' minds which, for the purpose of advancing debate, had better be answered, all of them, that the reservation on this precedent in terms of questioning is not, as it is on second and third reading, directed to the Hon. Member who sat down, but that Hon. Members who intervene can also be questioned. This does not take away at all the right of the Chair to deal with the question if it becomes irrelevant, if it does not deal with the proposition. I think the Chair always has that right.

However, the precedent has been established concerning unanimous consent being sought and given when the questions are relevant to the issue. Certainly the issue involving old age pensioners, retired Canadians, and particularly, in this case, public servants, in relation to unemployment and inflation, has been the great issue before committee concerning how they could cope with this situation.

Mr. Deans: This is another ten-minute speech.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): That has been an issue and these questions were relevant.

I want to repeat what I said to Your Honour and to commend you, if I may do so, for seeing the importance of debate of a nature which can take place during Report Stage.

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier on a question of privilege.

[English]

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I rose 15 minutes ago asking that we go back to discussing Bill C-133. I did not see anyone rising on the motion which was grouped, the motion by the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker), and that of the President of the Treasury

Board in the groupings which we were studying here or have been in the last two days. I think, having presented a motion, to amend this Bill, I want to come to that amendment soon. My privileges are being—

Mr. Deans: It is the Government that is cutting you off, not us.

Mr. Gauthier: —somewhat stretched right now. I think that with the concurrence of the House, and there is a certain amount of reasonableness concerning this matter, since we have carried on for 35 minutes, we could go on with a question period. However, we are stretching the rules a bit too far when we are starting to have a half hour question period after one Hon. Member has spoken. I would ask that either we revert back to the order of business, which concerns Bill C-133, or that we start Question Period right now and continue all afternoon, as far as I am concerned.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I must indicate to the Hon. Member that there may be some extension of logic which could result in the possibility that he has the basis for raising a point of privilege, but I think, on the face of it, that if Hon. Members seek, by unanimous consent, to have a discussion of the nature which has just been had, then I do not think the decision of the House reached unanimously constitutes a cause for a point of privilege by some Hon. Member. The Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) has now indicated for the second time that he would like to see debate continue, for the very valid reason that he himself has an amendment.

Mr. Deans: Talk to the Government.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): However, I much appreciated the comments made by the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker), particularly as to the new rules and their form. It may be that the mood is now changing toward reverting to Bill C-133. However, I must point out once more, as I did on the last occasion, that the Chair cannot refuse to recognize an Hon. Member who rises on a point of order. That would certainly be a withdrawal of privileges from some Hon. Member who seeks the floor on a point of order. If points of order continue to come, they will have to be recognized as they appear on the floor.

Mr. Gauthier: With all due respect, Mr. Speaker, I am not questioning your ruling. I am just saying to Your Honour that I have not heard any points of order. I have heard questions and exchanges. If someone has a point of order to raise at this time in debate, fine, I agree with Your Honour. However, I fail to see that there has been a valid point of order raised in the last half hour.

Mr. Deans: Not even yours.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I would like to indicate to the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier that there were certain points of order raised which I thought were quite in order. However, aside from that fact, I do recognize that Hon. Members use the process of raising points of order to make some comments and enter into debate. What I must explain to the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier is that I cannot tell whether a point of order is in fact valid until I have heard the Hon. Member first.

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I certainly welcome the fact that we actually have had a debate in this House, but I am sorry that it relapsed into the usual discussion about procedure. We almost reached the level of the xerox machine again in the last 15 minutes. However, I do want to return to discussion of the amendment and the Bill before us, Bill C-133.

I am opposing the amendment, as my Party is, because it is too little. To make an amendment in the six and five program, to say 6.5 per cent instead of 6 per cent, is simply not enough. Ten cents a day extra is what this would amount to and that is a ridiculous sum of money. It does not change the nature of the Bill. If Bill C-133 were not passed, retired civil servants would receive the full indexing of the Consumer Price Index, which is over 11 per cent. With Bill C-133, it is reduced 6 per cent. If the amendment is passed it only goes to 6.5 per cent. That is about 5 per cent the people are going to miss, and that is a significant sum. What is worse about it is that this means that the base is lowered, so this taking out of the pockets of retired civil servants will continue year after year. It is not merely a theft in 1983, it is an ongoing theft.

What is wrong with it? A contract is a contract. Civil servants contributed their money to the fund and it is splitting hairs to say that the fund in which, for bureaucratic reasons, indexing money goes is too low. There is another fund; transfers can be made. Those are purely administrative procedures. The point is that civil servants paid their money and were given to believe that they would get fully indexed pensions.

The Government takes very seriously its debt to corporations. It is going to continue the Petroleum Incentives Program grants. Military expenditure is increasing. It would not think of reducing interest on Canada Savings Bonds. The Government respects all kinds of debts it has with companies. It is shameful that the Government will not respect its obligations to its own former employees.

It is unconscionable to break a contract for any reason, but to break it for the six and five program is really pathetic. Six and five is not the answer to our economic problems. We need an industrial strategy which will put people back to work, which will get people working and making contributions. This will build up all kinds of funds for social purposes. Until we address the unemployment program we are not going to have a well-funded economy and we are not going to be able to afford the pensions or the social services we need.

The six and five program goes in the opposite direction. It is going to reduce demand, and that means companies will be laying people off or closing down instead of expanding. That is a popular theory with the lunatic right-wing fringe in the United States, but that is certainly no reason for us to adopt it here. It has not been successful there, it is misguided, and even if it were a good theory it would still not be a good reason for breaking a contract with our retired civil servants.

Pensions are deferred wages. People have paid for them; they are entitled to get them and get them fully indexed. One of the justifications has been very adequately spelled out by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in a letter, which I now quote:

> In our society, pensions provide a means of sharing risk so that we can retire in reasonable security and dignity, without fear of the future. Protecting pensions from inflation by indexing them to increases in the cost of living should be an integral part of our pension schemes. Indexing does not give pensioners an increasingly larger claim on our economy's production, that is, more money to buy things they could not earlier afford. Rather, indexing merely enables pensioners to maintain, roughly, their same standard of living.
> Even a modest rate of inflation destroys, at a devastating rate, the buying power of people on fixed incomes. Pensioners are out of the workforce and cannot bargain or strike for larger incomes. They are not the cause of inflation; they are its victims. We have an obligation to help protect them.

These are not mere pious words of the Prime Minister. They are in fact the law of the land, and a law which is passed saying that we will simply take it back, take away the money which has been promised to these people, is an immoral law.

The Bishops' statement is another good reason to have another look at this. Here we have spiritual leaders in the country pointing out the very great importance of giving the higher priority to the needs of working people over capital. Let me quote:

> The needs of the poor have priority over the wants of the rich. The rights of workers are more important than maximization of profits. The participation of marginalized groups takes precedence over the preservation of a system which excludes them.

That is a very fundamental point and is the kind of analysis which we in my party appreciate very much seeing.

I would like to say something about the hypocrisy of the Conservatives who are supporting us on the principles of Bill C-133, although not on the amendment. They seem to think the amendment is all right. It is rather late for them to be coming into the game and defending retired civil servants, just as it is rather late for them to come into the game on Family Allowances and on the old age pensions. The Tories supported Bill C-124 in the summer. That was the time when the Government could have been stopped. The Bills we have before us now on Family Allowances, old age pensions and retired civil service pensions are simply a logical working out of the programs which were prepared last summer. The Conservatives should not be surprised to see them now, and if they are surprised it is because they were incompetent last summer when the matter was being discussed and did not know what was in front of them.

I oppose the amendment, Mr. Speaker. The only way to improve Bill C-133 is for the Government to withdraw it.

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Mr. Speaker, if ever there was a Bill which symbolized the philosophy of this Government, it is Bill C-133. I believe this Bill will go down in the annals of history as one of the most divisive pieces of short-sighted legislation ever to pass through this House. It represents the obstinate inflexibility of a Government dedicated to the philosophy of the end justifying the means, the goal being ostensibly reduction in inflation, and the means being the taking away of legitimate pension money from retired public servants. Surely the Government must be aware of the public's distaste for the insensitive way in which this and many other Bills have been shoved down our throats. Perhaps they know that this may be their last chance to dominate public affairs for a good long time and they wish to go out in style and be remembered for their foolhardiness, just as the Kamikaze pilots were in World War II.

Once the Government begins to commit breaches of faith, the public loses confidence in that Government, and believe me, this is happening. Bill C-133 represents the most flagrant breach of trust in recent times. If I were to send in my tax return based on a 10 per cent tax rate, there would be agents of the law at my door demanding the extra money. If a constituent of mine were to receive unemployment cheques to which he was not entitled, the Unemployment Insurance Commission would be on his back soon enough.

Why, then, would the Government turn the tables and hold back money which rightfully belongs to these retired people who contributed to a plan in full expectation that they would receive these funds? There is such a thing as making plans based on future income. These people are going to be more than disappointed; they may be wiped out financially.

The Minister defends himself here by making an amendment changing the indexation to 6.5 per cent in the first year and 5.5 per cent in the second year. He feels that the extra .5 per cent covers the cost of the contributions made by the public servants. This may be so, but even this amendment cannot camouflage the terrible wrong which is being done here. This Government has gone back on its word and is trying to patch an ugly wound with a band-aid.

What is the purpose of attempting to pass this Bill through Parliament? Is it to enhance the image of the Liberal Party and the present Government? It certainly is not doing that. Is it to cure inflation? Inflation is beginning to cure itself. It is happening without the capping of pensions and the limiting of Family Allowances.

Why not just accept the wisdom of public opinion and drop this ridiculous Bill from the books? It would restore some of the confidence lost in recent times.

It was mentioned by one of my colleagues on Monday of this week, and I quote:

• (1240)

> Government means sometimes taking hard and harsh measures where it is possible, and in this case the only way it is possible to take these measures is within federal jurisdiction.

I agree fully with taking hard and harsh measures to control inflation, but I disagree with the target of these measures. Spending continues unabated in the bureaucratic countinghouses of this Government while here in the House of Commons the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray) is trying to extract the last possible nickel from the usual victims, the middle-aged and the middle-class wage earner. The taxpayer is being taxed as never before, yet our deficit increases by leaps and bounds, by billions and billions of dollars.

This Government spends millions advertising the merits of the colossal, clumsy Canada Post Corporation and translating obscure documents from English to French and back again, yet it wants the pensioners of this country to tighten their belts and cheerily refuse badly needed funds to which they are entitled.

I hear the answer from time to time that we are going to save the Government money. The Parliamentary Secretary said that $18 million is not inconsequential. I agree that $18 million is a lot of money. Hon. Members opposite supported the Government which spent $650 million to buy service stations just two or three months ago. They supported the Government which has provided $1 billion in hidden subsidies to one Crown corporation called PetroCan. Where is the sense of fairness in supporting an expenditure of $1 billion on the one hand, and putting a special 5 per cent tax on retired people to get back $18 million or $80 milion on the other hand? Where is the sense of social justice?

It is with continuing amazement and almost sympathy that I listened to the defences put forth by some of my colleagues in the Liberal Party for this inexcusable piece of legislation. There are Members in that Party, as we are all aware, who squirm in their seats and battle with their consciences as they listen to their very own Party attempting to gloss over the ugly truth of this Bill. They gloss over the ugly truth of this Bill by stating that it is a noble plan of self-sacrifice and voluntary restraint on the part of Canadians. Such nonsense! Or, as my friend says, baloney.

This Bill is a well-planned deception with the simple aim of picking up some ready cash to keep afloat a badly leaking Government. The Liberal Member faced with voting for this Bill is confronted by an interesting dilemma. Voting for it may guarantee joining the UIC line-up next election, but voting against it could mean future political obscurity or permanent backbench warming.

It is interesting that such an important issue is bound to be distorted by political realities. Were the average Liberal Member of Parliament truly free to vote on this Bill, I contend that it would never have passed first reading and what headaches that would have saved.

There are many complex problems facing this House today. There is inflation which will not go away by itself. There is poverty and injustice. There is escalating crime throughout the nation. The citizens are overtaxed and unemployed. Little faith remains in the Government and linguistic and cultural disunity still dishearten us.

The passing of Bill C-133 will not solve these problems. The revenues generated by it are not significant in the big financial picture of this country. Can wasteful spending not be lessened? Can obsolete and high-paying Government jobs be streamlined or eliminated? We need to address these sources of income. Those are the sort of issues this Government should be looking at and this Parliament should be dealing with.

In conclusion, I feel that I have brought the attention of this House to some of the injustices found in this Bill. We are all aware of the fact that it is a mockery and a breach of faith. When public employees pay 7.5 per cent of their salary to support their pension plan, they should not be treated in this manner. As well, the benefits paid from the plan have been more heavily financed by employees than employers. Therefore, the employees are entitled to a return on their investment. Finally, there is a surplus of $15.5 billion in the Public Service Superannuation Account. Given the public outrage and the obvious unfairness of this legislation, the Government should drop Bill C-133.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, if one tries to find the principle and central idea behind this Bill, to limit the indexation of Public Service pensions, the Bill to put a cap on indexing of old age pensions and the Bill to put a cap of six and five on Family Allowances, one can see that the Government is following the kind of thinking which has been described in a shorthand form in the United States as Reaganomics. The Government's implementation is not quite as tough as Reagonomics, but it is the same kind of thinking which led the American government under President Reagan to bring forward the idea for the first time in 50 years that the role of Government should be drastically reduced as it affects the lives of people.

In the United States they have cut back on medicare, medicaid, hospital insurance, food stamp programs, job-training programs and a host of other programs developed in the United States since 1932 with the election of Franklin Delano Roosevelt. They succeeded in bringing inflation down very substantially in the U.S.A., but they also succeeded in bringing about the highest rate of unemployment which that country has had since the thirties. They have done this on the backs of the poor and elderly. As so often happens, we in this country have picked up their ideas, and were stupid enough to pick up their ideas even though they have by now proven wrong and not workable.

We have here a proposal of Government to put a limit on the wages and salaries of public servants of six and five at a time when inflation is running much higher than that. The Government is saying to the public servants, and urging those in the private sector to follow suit, so that they must accept a lower standard of living. As well as saying to employees who work for the Government that they must accept a reduction in their standard of living, they are saying to the old age pensioners that retired public servants and those receiving Family Allowance too must accept a decrease in their standard of living. It is a disgraceful situation.

This is just the beginning. I predict that in the next year or two we will see cutbacks in federal and provincial assistance to medicare, hospital care, unemployment insurance and welfare. Those who need help the most will have to bear the brunt of the mistaken economic policies of this Government. The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) and the Minister responsible for the status of women have again and again made speeches about how pensioners, women in particular, in large numbers if not a majority, are actually living in poverty. Yet these are precisely the people who as a result of this Bill will have their standard of living lowered even further.

These proposals, Mr. Speaker, these Bills, when passed, will have an adverse and immediate effect, of course, on all the people who are directly affected. But to the extent they reduce the real standard of living of the people I mentioned, the old age pensioners, retired civil servants, Family Allowance recipients, to the extent these programs are implemented, they reduce the purchasing power of millions of Canadians. How stupid can we be? Canadian factories are now working at less than 70 per cent capacity. According to official statistics, we now have over a million and a half people unemployed, if one adds the discouraged people who are not looking for work, and I do not really know what good it would do for somebody unemployed in Sudbury, Ontario, Thompson, Manitoba, Kamloops, British Columbia, or the Gaspé region of Quebec to look for work when there are no jobs available, and to the extent that we reduce the purchasing power of Canadians we guarantee more and more unemployment.

There is not an economic research institution in this country which does not say that unemployment in 1983 is going to be even higher than it was in 1982, whether that institution is to the left of centre like the Canadian policy alternatives, or the C.D. Howe Institute or the Conference Board. I except from the list the Fraser Institute, of course, for obvious reasons. And I am sure that if the Government would permit the people of Canada to know what studies have been done in the Finance Department, the Employment Department or by the Bank of Canada, they would see the estimates on unemployment made by the organizations I have already mentioned confirmed. So what the Government is guaranteeing, Mr. Speaker, is that we will have even more unemployment in 1983, more misery than we have had up to now.

It is typical of Liberal thinking and of the Liberal idea of a "just society" that at the same time as they are asking those in the lower income brackets, the poor and the people in the lower middle class to make the kind of sacrifices which are involved in this kind of legislation, they are increasing the tax concessions and the "goodies" which have always been given to those in the upper income brackets by Liberal and Conservative Governments. There was the spectacle in the last Budget proposed by the former Minister of Finance when he reduced the tax rate for those in the upper income bracket from about 60 per cent to 50 per cent. That example was followed by the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde). What did he do? In his last Budget he extended a series of tax loopholes which will benefit only the rich and the professionals, less tax on investors' stock profits, rejection of any limit on investment interest expense and deduction, rejection of the need to tighten rules on capital gains and corporate reorganization, and the maintenance of a loophole which enables professionals to defer the taxability of large chunks of their already sizeable incomes. That is the kind of idea about justice which we have come to expect from Liberal Government—"Stick it to the poor and give more to the rich".

We in the New Democratic Party oppose the six and five program and have done so from the beginning. We pointed out that it would not work, would not really bring down inflation and that it would mean more unemployment. We were alone at that time, but since then we have been joined by many other groups. I am not going to put on the record in any detail the criticism made of Government policies by the Roman Catholic Bishops, but they have said far more eloquently than I can that this kind of thinking, and the kinds of programs the Government has adopted, will hurt the people who need help the most. They have been joined now by that arch-defender of the free enterprise system, Mr. Sinclair, the head of the CPR, a supporter of six and five, who has pointed out that what we need now is not more restraint but a program to put people back to work.

We oppose this Bill, Mr. Speaker. We are going to vote against it as we have from the beginning, unlike our Conservative friends who, having voted for the six and five, are now going to play it both ends against the middle by opposing these Bills, which are a logical extension of what was proposed in the six and five program which they supported.

Mr. Al MacBain (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, the debate on Bill C-133, which we have been considering this week, and which the Miscellaneous Estimates Committee studied at length prior to the Christmas recess, has highlighted the importance which Members of all Parties place on retirement benefits. The debate also has brought out the security which retired members of the Public Service, the Armed Forces, the Royal Canadian Mounted Police and others, have felt towards the nature of the retirement benefits which they receive.

We have heard much about the relatively low level of benefits now received by these people, and from messages sent to me by my constituents and others, I share the concern that this is the case. Contrary to claims made over the years by certain groups who have depicted retired public servants as citizens living high at the expense of everyone else, the average pension being paid to retired public servants and their survivors, taking into account all of the post-retirement indexing adjustments, is not at a very high level at all. As indicated by a number of Hon. Members, the average pension was $6,900 in December, 1982. The question, therefore, is how much that $6,900 will increase in 1983. I am certain most of the recipients are pleased to know that as of the end of this month, January, 1983, the rate will increase.

As I said earlier, much has been made in recent years by some critics of the Public Service pension arrangements claiming undue generosity, which is certainly not the case, but very little has been said about the amount of contributions which retired public servants have paid. There are few pension plans in the country which require an employee to pay 7½ per cent of his wages towards his retirement pension. Most have contribution rates either lower than that or do not require contributions to be paid at all. Furthermore, although most large companies in Canada have paid ad hoc inflationary adjustments to their retired personnel, few, if any, require employees to make additional contributions to pay for these adjustments. These introductory remarks are made to try to put into perspective the present situation for Public Service pensioners in relation to Bill C-133.

The President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray) has moved a motion that recognition of the contributions made by retired public servants for the indexing of their pensions be given. He has said that only the portion of indexation benefits which is payable from the Consolidated Revenue Fund will be subject to the six and five restraint program.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I am sorry to interrupt the Hon. Member but I believe we have reached the hour of one o'clock, and it being that time I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this afternoon.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

AIR TRANSPORT

AMALGAMATION OF QUEBECAIR AND AIR CANADA—CONSEQUENCES FOR EASTERN QUEBEC

Mr. André Maltais (Manicouagan): Madam Speaker, I would like to mention an important debate now going on in eastern Quebec concerning the merger of Quebecair and Air Canada. I want to ask the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) to take into account, within the context of these negotiations, the matter of rates and the organization of facilities in the area between Sept-Îles and Blanc-Sablon, including the—

[English]

Mr. Ellis: Madam Speaker, there is no translation and I understand enough French to know that my colleague is speaking about a subject in which I am particularly interested. I would like to hear his remarks, but there is no translation coming through.

Madam Speaker: Well, I guess we will have to wait.

Should the Hon. Member not continue? We shall see whether the interpretation system is working or not.

Mr. Maltais: I want to call the attention of the House to an issue which has great significance for my region and eastern Quebec, namely the merger of Quebecair and Air Canada. I wish to emphasize the importance of this debate because air transport has always been linked with route equivalence, especially on the North Shore, in the Magdalen Islands and the Gaspé Peninsula. I believe that in the context of the negotiations now under way we should be careful not to negotiate only for routes or administrative matters and be only concerned with routes such as Montreal-Toronto and Montreal-Florida. I would like to ask the Minister of Transport to pay particular attention to the rates which apply on the Montreal-Sept-Iles routes. Moreover, I would like to point out that a return trip from Blanc-Sablon to Sept-Iles costs $640. I would therefore like the minister to ask Air Canada to be very cautious during the negotiations. On the North Shore, we want Air Canada to have administrative control, the employees of Quebecair to keep their jobs and transport administration to take into account the facilities at the airports of Havre-Saint-Pierre, Chèverie, Natashquan and Blanc-Sablon and we also want something to be done about the local airports. Runways should be built in Baie-Johan-Beetz, Kegaska, Tête-à-la-Baleine and La Romaine. I think that the region of Canada designated as the middle and lower North Shore should be included in the negotiations and if I make these comments, madam Speaker, it is to remind the House that it costs $800 to fly from Montreal to Paris and $400 to go from Montreal to Vancouver. It is therefore abnormal for one region of the country to pay excessive rates and for the residents of such an area to be deprived of transportation. To conclude, I repeat that we want Air Canada to be in control and the minister to take his responsibilities.

PROPOSED PORNOGRAPHIC PROGRAMMING ON PAY TV

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Madam Speaker, up until now, thankfully, the medium of television has been relatively free of pornographic material due to stringent regulation of public television. Now, however, with the advent of Pay TV, the possibility looms large that our air waves will soon be filled with "Playboy" as well as assorted explicit movies. At a time such as this one would expect the Minister of Communications (Mr. Fox) to stand up and defend the right of Canadians to clean and decent television programming. Instead, as mentioned in The Citizen of January 18, he will not take special action to stop First-Choice Pay TV from producing and showing soft core pornography to national audiences. However, he also states that he hopes many groups will apply pressure on the service by protesting its plans to program and produce skin-flicks.

When questioned in the House on Tuesday and Wednesday of this week on this very subject, the Minister was evasive and non-committal. This attitude is intolerable. He refuses to act in his capacity as Minister and take action, yet he hopes other people will protest. What hope do any protest groups have, if the man with the power to do something about the situation does not care? Unless he takes a stand on this matter, the voices of decency in this country are going to be drowned out and the "sexploiters" will be laughing all the way to the bank.

TRADE

IMPORTANCE OF ASIAN MARKETS—SUGGESTED FOLLOW-UP TO PRIME MINISTER'S TRIP

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Madam Speaker, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), accompanied by a delegation of senior Canadian businessmen, just completed a visit to the Asian Pacific region, the world's fastest growing region and one which is now planning major capital projects worth billions of dollars in areas such as transportation, energy and communications where Canadian expertise is second to none. Asian markets want North American technology and want to diversify their trade. Canadian success in winning some of these contracts means jobs for Canadians now and in the future.

The prime Minister undertook this visit in response to many requests from Canadian business interests. It is important that the momentum not be lost and that every effort now be made to remind Canadians of the importance of Asian markets, as well as keeping Canadian trade information before our Asian friends.

INCOME TAX

TAXATION OF NORTHERN BENEFITS—CALL FOR RETENTION OF REMISSION ORDER

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Madam Speaker, because of the higher cost of living in the north and because of the progressive nature of the Canadian income tax system, northerners are effectively taxed at higher rates than southern Canadians. In Australia, Denmark, and the U.S.S.R. a tax zoning system is in effect, designed to encourage people to live in remote areas, but this is not the case in Canada.

In 1980, because of the public outcry over the taxation of certain necessary benefits, the then Minister of Finance was forced to issue a remission order which partially solved the problem, although it was still unfair to many. The announcement by the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) on December 2 that the remission order will expire and benefits will be taxed under a complex bureaucratic formula, has rekindled public outrage. The tax grab from the pockets of northern employees and industry at a time of acute recession is senseless and bad public policy, and the proposed system will promote the fly in fly out situations instead of building up a steadfast northern community. We therefore call upon the Minister of Finance to abandon his ill-considered scheme and retain the present remission order until it can be replaced by permanent amendments to the Income Tax Act, resulting in fair and equitable taxation for all northerners.

LABOUR RELATIONS

IMPACT OF TECHNOLOGICAL CHANGE

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Madam Speaker, yesterday was the last day of the National Occupational Outlook Conference which was studying the job implications of technological change as well as the over-all outlook for jobs in coming decades. Yet despite the fact these issues have profound implications for the labour movement, only two labour representatives were asked to participate. The Deputy Minister of Labour has acknowledged that the human side of technological change has received little attention at policy levels in Ottawa.

Since the human implications of economic planning are precisely the concerns the labour movement wants to address, and since the Canadian population strongly supports the call of the Bishops to put people first in economic planning, I would ask the Minister responsible for labour and the Minister responsible for employment to take immediate steps to improve the climate of labour and Government relations in Canada, and to call on their cabinet colleagues to withdraw the six and five program as a first step towards creating real growth in employment in our country.

PARLIAMENTARY REFORM

SUPPORT FOR HOLDING OF FREE VOTES

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton-Lawrence): Madam Speaker, the steps being taken toward parliamentary reform have been excellent, but we urgently need to realize the full extent of the frustration and misgivings of the Canadian people. They are correct when they conclude that the way we operate our parliamentary system demands an almost slavish subservience to party lines and provides little or no opportunity for a genuine open dialogue and co-operation in a time of crisis such as the world is presently experiencing. I suggest that, in order to provide Canadians with new evidence of our integrity, we badly and urgently need to have more free votes in this House.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. de Corneille: If more Bills could be presented to the House of Commons on a free-vote basis, Members could represent their views and those of their constituents forthrightly. They could listen with more sympathy to the opinions of Members of opposing parties as well as to those of their own. A quality of respect, dialogue, and co-operation might have a chance to take root, and the public would begin to believe that their affairs were being managed on the basis of reason and discussion, rather than on one of reflex and polemics.

Of course there are many issues which involve the basic differences of the three parties, and on such Bills, and on all money Bills, votes of confidence must continue to be employed. But even a few free votes, in my opinion, would do wonders to make the system more responsible to the needs and views of our constituents, and would do wonders to restore faith in the integrity of the democratic process.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

SURCHARGE ON SPECIFIC LETTERS—EFFECT ON TOURISM AND SMALL BUSINESS

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Madam Speaker, I want to record my objections and those of tourist operators and small-businessmen in my riding of Parry Sound-Muskoka, as well as in most parts of Canada, to the fact that in so many ways they seem to be the chosen targets of the Government. The specific weapon being used this time is the new postal regulations of our postal corporation. Under these regulations, from April 1 onward a surcharge of 5 cents will be charged on all small-business letters which are non-standard in size or do not use the postal code.

Big business is catered to by providing an incentive rate of 24 cents for mailings of 20,000 or more standard identical pieces, and an even lower rate of 21 cents is charged for 1,000 or more items which are presorted to carrier routes. Perhaps Canada Post would also consider a new rate of, say, 17 cents, providing the customer delivers the mail himself.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Darling: It was explained to us that these new rates are to allow a discount to large mailers who do some of the post offices' work for them, and for enabling their new automatic sorting machinery to be used. Presumably this results in significant cuts in labour costs. This is all very logical, except that it is a bit hard to reconcile with the fact that, according to the best figures I have been able to come up with, since the end of fiscal year 1981 the cost of first-class postage has—

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

EMPLOYMENT

NATIONAL DEFENCE TRAINING PROGRAMS

Mr. Michel Veillette (Champlain): Madam Speaker, the situation of the young Canadians who are unemployed and untrained is a major concern of all Hon. Members.

Unable to find jobs, many young Canadians have asked to join our Armed Forces, which have the necessary facilities to train them. In fact, their number is so large that it exceeds the Department of National Defence's current requirements. The Canadian Armed Forces would have to accept additional applications by the thousands if they were to provide them all with jobs as well as the professional training they require to find jobs on the labour market today.

For quite some time, Hon. Members on the government side have requested that the programs and facilities of the Armed Forces be made available to a greater number of young unemployed Canadians who are in need of training. We know that the Government is giving serious consideration to their request, and we hope that its decision is forthcoming.

PREPAYMENT OF TAX ON INCOME FROM GOVERNMENT BONDS

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Madam Speaker, every Member of the House must be aware that many Canadian pensioners hold Canadian Government Bonds on which interest payments are made, sometimes twice but just as often only once during the year. Also they must be aware that these pensioners are nonetheless required to submit quarterly income tax returns and, in consequence, have to pay tax on revenue before that revenue is actually received. This is an iniquitous injustice and an intolerable burden which many pensioners find difficult to bear.

The principle ought to be established once and for all that no taxes can be collected from individual Canadians until the revenue on which those taxes are levied has been received by those individual Canadians. I suggest that the income tax Bill, Bill C-139, which will soon be before us again, should be amended to embody this principle.

ABORIGINAL RIGHTS

PREPARATION FOR DISCUSSION AT FIRST MINISTERS' MEETING

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Madam Speaker, I should like to express my deep concern about the strategies which are currently being developed by the federal Government and some provincial Governments prior to the upcoming First Ministers' Conference on aboriginal rights. We have learned about a leaked Government document which indicates that the Liberal administration intends to "reduce native expectations" and "embroil provincial Governments in the process of discussion".

Such an approach implies that the Government's commitment to an equitable settlement of the aboriginal rights issue is not sincere. This will only strengthen the suspicion of native peoples that the federal Government cannot be trusted.

Constitutional negotiations in the past have led to a feeling of betrayal. If this betrayal of native people by the Liberal Government continues, the willingness of these peoples to work within the system will disappear altogether. Surely the Government would prefer to encourage and not to destroy the faith and trust of the native population.

Some Provinces, including the Province of British Columbia, have hidden agendas to include other items in the March Conference. While it cannot be denied that there are other important issues, in particular the position of the Province of Quebec, these should be made the subject of a separate First Ministers' meeting. To attempt to deal with a variety of issues at this time will result in a treatment that will not solve any issues for Canadians—

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE ECONOMY

REQUEST FOR ACTION TO CREATE JOBS

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister who will know that the OECD study of 24 member nations revealed in terms of real growth last year that Canada ranked twenty-fourth out of 24; we ranked dead last. That means our problems are caused right here in Canada. Also the Prime Minister will know that the people who suffer most from those problems are the Canadian unemployed who now number nearly two million, and according to the Conference Board there will be at least another 141,000 Canadians who will lose their jobs this year.

The Government, three or four months ago, introduced the NEED Program which was supposed to create 60,000 jobs. So far, according to the Department of Employment and Immigration, it has created about 4,000 jobs. That is a shamefully inadequate response to a major Canadian crisis.

Will the Prime Minister indicate whether the Government intends to bring in immediately new action to create jobs for Canadians, when that action will be taken, and what form that action will take?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the NEED program which I announced in October and which is being implemented by the Minister of Employment and Immigration involves not just a $500 million grant but also an additional amount of at least $200 million to be provided by the provinces. My colleague has concluded agreements with all of the provinces and that program is now under way. Indeed, each week and each day new projects are being undertaken. I am positive that we will exceed the 60,000 jobs referred to thanks to the co-operation of the provinces. In addition, Madam Speaker, I remind the Leader of the Official Opposition that several bills are now before this House, especially one dealing with the Income Tax Act which is being delayed. Passing this Bill would encourage Canadian businesses as well as Canadians into giving the economic impetus which we all need. Those bills are before Parliament and I hope that they will be considered as quickly as possible to help the unemployed and all those who would like to stimulate the Canadian economy.

[English]

Mr. Clark: Madam Speaker, let me express my apologies to the House. I could have sworn I saw the Prime Minister over there; I could have sworn that he had returned from vacation. I did not know that he was still goofing off and letting the Minister of Finance reply for him.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

LOSS OF JOBS

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, let me ask whichever Minister is responding for the Government on economic policy—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: Let me try the Deputy Prime Minister; are you here?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition should proceed to his question.

• (1420)

Mr. Clark: Madam Speaker, I wonder if the Acting Prime Minister or any transient seat mate he might have, can call to mind that in October the Prime Minister indicated there would be bold new measures brought in by this Government to generate economic growth in the country, and that the House Leader indicated that the Throne Speech was already prepared with these bold new measures in it. Three months have passed since those declarations and thousands of Canadians have lost their jobs. Will the Acting Prime Minister tell us what the Government is waiting for? Why will the Government not act now to bring jobs and hope to Canadians who are losing their jobs by the thousands as this Government sits back and waits?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I am surprised that the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition treats the question of unemployment in this country with such levity.

Mr. Jarvis: Don't blush.

Mr. Lalonde: The question of unemployment has been addressed by this Government through the addition of over $1 billion of further expenditures in the last few months to the Government's expenditure plans in order to compensate for some of the difficulties being faced by hundreds of thousands of Canadians. The provincial Governments have agreed to co-operate with the federal Government in that regard. What we have seen in the meantime has been systematic dragging of feet and filibustering on the part of the Opposition on numerous Bills that have been before this House to deal with the crisis the country is facing.

Mr. Mitges: What Bills?

Miss MacDonald: Name one.

Mr. Lalonde: I would urge the Leader of the Opposition to examine the actions of his own Party and the lack of action by his own Party before he starts to throw any rocks.

INQUIRY RESPECTING DATE OF BUDGET PRESENTATION

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, let me direct this question also to the only Minister who is awake over there and who has just come back, by the way, from the OECD meeting where he had to defend Canada's performance of being twenty-fourth out of 24 in economic growth; where he had to defend the policies of this Government which alone have dragged this country below the standards of other comparable countries.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: The Minister has talked about delay in debate. He knows there is a 300-page tax bill which the Government has introduced for one day's debate only. If he wants to bring it forward, let him bring it forward. We will debate it. If he wants to have a deal on it, delete 15 or 20 of the provisions which will restrict expansion in this country and we will give it very quick passage. Let him do that.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I am really sorry, by I have to remind the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition that he should not be making a speech but rather asking a question.

Mr. Nielsen: Remind the Cabinet, too.

Mr. Clark: Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Government, the Opposition has to take more time.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Madam Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Finance on what date he intends to bring in a budget?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I have indicated that I was hoping to bring in a budget early in the new year. I indicated also that to me this meant preferably before the beginning of the new fiscal year, that is, before April 1. However, I also indicated that it was very important that the House deal with all the legislation resulting from budgets and budgetary measures that go back two years on which the Opposition has been dragging its feet and filibustering.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lalonde: The reason the Income Tax Bill has not been considered further, Madam Speaker, is because the Opposition has refused to deal with other urgent Bills having to do with six and five. That is why that Bill has not yet been brought before this House for debate more frequently. We are waiting for the Opposition to deal with the most urgent Bills also—

Mr. Nielsen: We didn't see them for two years.

Mr. Lalonde: —and the Income Tax Bill will then be brought forward for debate.

TRADE

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER REPORT ON TRIP TO SOUTHEAST ASIA

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is addressed to the Prime Minister. The public perception of the Prime Minister's trip to the Pacific Rim is that it enhanced his reputation as an international globe trotter and fun kind of guy, to quote one news report. Since the trip was advertised as a diplomatic trade mission to the fastest growing economic area of the world, what sales report can the Prime Minister make to the nation? What contracts did he sign? What new trade agreements did he negotiate? And what specific commitments did he win abroad that will create jobs here at home?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: He is awake. Does that mean you are going to speak?

Mr. Shields: Let's hear from the violins now.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Wouldn't you like to have an ovation like that, Joe?

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, first I want to thank the House for making me so welcome on my return. I want to inform the Hon. Member that I did not sign any trade agreements. It was not my intention to do so. I think that the tour was mainly conceived to make Canadians and members of the Association of Southeast Asian Nations aware of the vast trading possibilities potential between us. In that sense, I think it will be up to the House and the public to judge whether the trip will have been worth while.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): They already have.

Mr. Trudeau: They will see that, I suppose, if the private sector and Government relations do improve in the months to come.

DISCUSSIONS WITH JAPANESE OFFICIALS

Miss Pat Carney (Vancouver Centre): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is also for the Prime Minister. I would point out that any private sector salesman who returned from an 18-day trip abroad with a blank order book would probably lose his job.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Miss Carney: In Tokyo the Prime Minister promised to sell unlimited quantities of Canadian natural resources to Japan which, in fact, is what Canada is already doing. In return he asked Japan to invest more in Canadian manufacturing in order to create jobs here. Since the former Japanese Ambassador to Canada says that the major obstacles to expanded Japanese investment in Canada are the Government's own policies, specifically, the National Energy Program and the Foreign Investment Review Agency, did the Prime Minister agree to alter these policies in his discussions with Japanese officials?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the hon. lady shows that she does not understand much about trade if she suggests that after 18 days anybody in the private sector would come back with a filled order book.

Mr. Clark: Just one entry, Pierre.

Mr. Trudeau: The message which the businessmen whom I met in each one of these countries were conveying to each other, and to myself, was that to break into the market in those countries where the competition is very high from the Economic Community, from the U.S., and from Australia, as a businessman one had to go many times and stay there for years—

Mr. Kempling: Are you going back next month?

Mr. Trudeau: —it was not just one trip by businessmen which could be expected to yield a great deal of business. A great deal more persistence and less levity on the part of the Opposition would perhaps lead to deeper trade.

Mr. McDermid: You must have jet lag.

Mr. Trudeau: Yes, I do.

THE ECONOMY

STATEMENT BY CATHOLIC BISHOPS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister as well. During the Christmas break the Canadian Catholic Bishops produced a cogent analysis of the Canadian economy which the Prime Minister dismissed out of hand. Canadians have received from the Prime Minister since the 1980 election one disaster after another, ranging from the megaproject fiasco up to the two-month flirtation with an industrial strategy, all of which have produced, as the Leader of the Opposition has correctly pointed out, about two million unemployed. In the light of this totally disastrous record, where does the Prime Minister get the nerve to dismiss so readily the Bishops' very fine analysis of the Canadian economy?

• (1430)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the Leader of the NDP must have been misinformed. I did not dismiss, as he says, the Bishops' analysis out of hand—that very fine analysis, as he puts it. I was asked a question in one of the countries where I was travelling about the Bishops, and I felt it was not the right time to discuss in any detail that particular important comment by the Bishops. My comment, which concerned their reflection on the fight against inflation, was that their economics was not all that steady, but I added that that was not the forum in which to discuss this matter.

The Bishops were discussing it amongst themselves. I would be happy to answer any substantive questions about this report that the Hon. Member wants to put because I feel it is more appropriate to do it here in Canada than in some foreign country.

Mr. Broadbent: I too feel it is appropriate to ask questions in a serious nature about that report.

MORAL APPROACH

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, one of the serious concerns of the Bishops was that we should have a moral approach to the problems of the Canadian economy, one that is fair. They used, with care, the phrase "moral disorder" to characterize the Government's program, and specifically said that the Government of Canada was cutting back on pensions and family allowances, putting wage controls on Canadian workers, but at the same time leaving upper Canadian incomes untouched. Such a combination, in their analysis, leads appropriately to the description of a moral disorder.

Will the Prime Minister, for once in this context, act morally and bring forward a program of economic recovery that puts an equal burden on all Canadians?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member is misinformed in his second question too. He knows that the Government is not cutting back on pensions. The Government is simply reducing the rate of escalation of those pensions to 6 per cent and 5 per cent. If we do succeed in bringing inflation down to 6 per cent this year, it will mean that pensioners will be compensated for the rate of inflation.

This is why I think that the Bishops were misinformed when they attacked the six and five program in itself as a misguided attack on the economic evils. We have to bring inflation down. We are succeeding in bringing inflation down, and that will create jobs. This is the point that I was making. This is the only quarrel I have with the economics of the Bishops, and that was my point.

In so far as applying six and five in a rigid fashion across all levels of income receivers is concerned, I want to point out to the Hon. Member that my first proposal in February of last year was indeed to have caps on income which would be graduated according to the size of that income. I did not receive any support, either from the Provinces, from the NDP, or from the Bishops on that.

ELECTION CAMPAIGN PROMISE

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, as everyone who has paid any attention to the Bill being debated before the House now, and during the past few days, knows, the Government has in fact broken a contract which it had with its own employees concerning pensions. I repeat that the Government is cutting back on something to which these pensioners were legally entitled.

The Prime Minister has virtually made a political career out of promising Canadians one thing and delivering another. In the 1980 election campaign the Prime Minister promised that he would not fight inflation on the backs of working Canadians. As the Bishops have pointed out, once again he has broken this promise. In light of the very serious moral concern expressed all across Canada about the issue of unemployment in terms of his remarks in the 1980 election about not fighting inflation on the backs of workers, in comparison with what he delivered, was he at that time simply lying to the people of Canada, or has his action since indicated that he simply does not care?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I think the Hon. Member, in his rhetoric, is perhaps being a bit immoral himself. He is quoting the Bishops as having pointed out that I broke an election promise. The Bishops have pointed out no such thing, and the Hon. Member is using—

Mr. Broadbent: I did not say that.

Mr. Trudeau: The Hon. Member did say that, and if he would stop chewing his gum he would realize it.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

MINES AND MINING

LAY-OFFS IN WESTERN COAL INDUSTRY—DISCUSSION OF SALES TO JAPAN

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Madam Speaker, my question is also directed to the Prime Minister. During his sojourn to the Far East, the Canadian mining industry continued to deteriorate as a result of more cut-backs and shutdowns being announced in great numbers. Thousands have been laid off in the western Canadian coal industry, including an additional 1,900 workers at B.C. Coal's Balmer Mine, which was announced last week because of a declining demand for coal exports to Japan and other Pacific Rim countries.

What steps did the Prime Minister take in Japan to address this problem? Did he encourage the Japanese to speed the conversion of their electric power utility and cement plants to coal from oil-fired generators? Did he discuss the possibility of a joint Japanese-Canadian coal liquefaction plant in Canada similar to the commercial scale project planned for Australia under a joint agreement between that country and Japan? Just how much new coal did the Prime Minister sell while he was globe-trotting?

Mr. Siddon: From the Prime Minister's evasive reply, it seems that the only aspects of his Japanese trip which were carefully planned were his secretive sojourns for sightseeing and sunning by the seashore with his son, Sacha.

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

FUTURE OF YUKON MINE

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Madam Speaker, the lead and zinc industries of northern Canada and the iron ore industries of Labrador and Quebec supply much of their production to the Japanese and Pacific Rim countries. The continuing shutdown of the Cyprus-Anvil Mine in Faro, for example, has compelled the mine's former Japanese customers to seek new suppliers in other countries. No doubt their concern, as it is for all Yukoners, is that the Cyprus Mine will remain closed.

Madam Speaker: Order. That is two long questions. At least the second question should be short. We cannot complain about the length of the answer.

Mr. Siddon: I hope the answer will be at least half as long as the question. When the Prime Minister pledged Canada's "limitless" natural resources to Japan last week, did that include the assurance that the Dome Mine in Faro, Yukon, will be reopened immediately so that hundreds of anxious northerners can be put back to work?

FISHERIES

REQUEST THAT KIRBY TASK FORCE REPORT BE TABLED

Hon. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. As the Minister knows, the Kirby Report was forecast last January with the establishment of the Kirby Task Force. The Report was supposed to come down in July, then in September, then November and, most recently, January 17, which has now passed.

In the meantime newspaper reports are quoting parts of the Report, and CBC Radio, last night and this morning, carried more reports on what they say is a leaked document. This is creating great confusion and uncertainty in the Atlantic fishery. Will the Minister immediately table the Kirby Report as originally submitted to the Cabinet Committee which we, of course, know is split? Will he table the Report so Members of Parliament can see it, the fishermen can see it and the industry can see it, in order to stop the confusion because they cannot do any planning at the moment?

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, I think that what the fishermen of the Atlantic want is not only reports but action. I think it would be futile and a complete misunderstanding of the aspirations of the fishermen to limit ourselves to tabling reports. What they want are policies. I hope that in the very near future I will be able to table the fundamental principles and the major actions that we will take.

I hasten to add that this will be done and the implementation of those policies will be undertaken with close consultation and co-operation of all participants.

LEAKING OF REPORT

Hon. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Madam Speaker, I say to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans that everyone knows that the Cabinet Committee has not been able to decide on the Kirby Report because it is split over it. There is widespread belief, if not conviction, that the Kirby Report is being deliberately leaked by one faction or another in that Cabinet Committee, either to destroy the credibility of the report or to enhance its arguments in Cabinet. Will the Minister tell us which faction is leaking the Report?

• (1440)

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, of course our policy is well known on that matter. We do not deny, we do not confirm, we do not comment on any document which is presented as a leaked document.

Mr. Clark: You do not do anything; you do not show up.

Mr. De Bané: For me, the leak is non-existent.

HUMAN RIGHTS

VIOLATIONS IN THE PHILIPPINES—REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT MAKE PROTEST

Mr. Bob Ogle (Saskatoon East): Madam Speaker, my question is also directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister and concerns his recent trip to the Far East, particularly to the Philippines. Amnesty International and other human rights groups continue to condemn the practices of illegal detentions, torture, and other violations of human rights by the Marcos regime in the Philippines. Since the Prime Minister has been quoted as saying that he did not feel that it was proper to protest against such violations while recently visiting the Philippines, I ask him today, when, in his opinion, is the proper time to protest such violations, and will the Canadian Government make such a protest?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I would probably find it more productive to protest privately by form of letter to the President or to the Prime Minister—

An Hon. Member: Did you?

Mr. Trudeau: —raising particular cases. If the Hon. Member wants to suggest particular cases that are worthy of being raised, I would be happy to hear from him.

Mr. Ogle: I will be able to give the Prime Minister particular cases, Madam Speaker.

OFFICIAL'S STATEMENT

Mr. Bob Ogle (Saskatoon East): Madam Speaker, a Canadian Government official on the tour was quoted as saying that Canada "is not prepared to cause unemployment in Sudbury to free a nun in the Philippines". I trust that this is not the Government's position. If not, I ask the Prime Minister what is the Government's position on the relationship between trade and human rights?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I have made it clear to all of the Press Conference, Madam Speaker, that policy in this regard was not established by officials, but, rather, by the Government itself. I would point out to the Hon. Member that the two matters of trade and human rights are not in the same category. They should not be traded off, one against the other. One should be able to pursue trade for its own merit in the ways one can best do it. Insofar as the promotion of human rights is concerned, it should also be done in ways which would be most effective.

NUCLEAR ARMAMENTS

PROPOSED DEPLOYMENT OF PERSHING II MISSILES IN WEST GERMANY

Mr. Paul E. McRae (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs or the Prime Minister, whichever would like to answer it. This year NATO Forces will be deploying 108 Pershing II missiles in West Germany. This missile is one which can deliver on a target 1,000 kilometres away in six minutes. There is no defence except launch on warning, and the Russians have indicated that that will be their defence.

I would ask the Minister what efforts we are making to persuade the Reagan Government to get down to serious bargaining before deployment, as part of the two-track proposal, in view of the fact that in the last week Eugene Rostow, a hawk, was fired and replaced by a super hawk named Kenneth Adelman, whom many Hon. Members here know. It looks as though there will be no serious effort to sit down and make a deal involving deployment unless that is done.

Mr. Shields: All the doves are in Russia!

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member began his question by saying that NATO intended to or would deploy Pershing II in western Europe this year. It would be my deepest wish that that deployment would not take place. That is why the NATO Alliance has offered to enter into negotiations with the Soviet Union, in order to ensure that the Pershing II would not be deployed and in order to remove the SS-20. It is therefore the view of the NATO Alliance that, if concrete results are obtained in the all-important negotiations, it would not be necessary to go ahead with the deployment of either the Cruise or the Pershing II. Therefore, as the Hon. Member knows, the two-track NATO decision which was taken in December, 1979, involves not only the possibility of deployment of new weapon systems, but also the necessity of serious negotiations.

In so far as the Government of Canada is concerned, we will do everything possible to ensure that the negotiations take place in good faith and that every serious proposal will be seriously examined. I can simply assure the Hon. Member—

Some Hon. Members: Time.

Mr. MacEachen: —that that is the attitude of the Government of Canada, and it is the one which was taken by the NATO Alliance in its last meeting in December.

VOLUNTARY ORGANIZATIONS

FINANCIAL IMPLICATIONS OF REMOVAL OF SPOUSAL TAX EXEMPTION

Mr. Walter McLean (Waterloo): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State of Canada who, in his role as Minister advocate for the voluntary sector, will be aware of the long-delayed release last week of Statistics Canada's selected financial statistics on charitable organizations based on a 1980 survey, which shows that the total economic activity of the voluntary sector amounted to $11 billion in 1982, excluding universities and hospitals, or roughly 3 per cent of the country's gross national product. The Minister will also know that the recent proposals of his colleague, the Minister responsible for the status of women, have had a destabilizing effect on the voluntary sector. Will the Secretary of State tell the House what will be the financial implications of the proposed removal of the spousal tax exemption for the voluntary sector and its caring work?

[Translation]

Hon. Serge Joyal (Secretary of State): Madam Speaker, I am perfectly aware of the report made public by Statistics Canada. Here in Ottawa yesterday I met with the national representatives of the coalition of voluntary organizations in Canada. We reassessed the economic impact of the voluntary sector in Canada and agreed on a work schedule which, in the coming months, would enable us to review the legislation and the context within which the Canadian Government co-operates with the voluntary sector.

[English]

NECESSITY FOR TASK FORCE

Mr. Walter McLean (Waterloo): Madam Speaker, the question concerning the stability of the voluntary sector and its important input, as the Minister will know, is vitally important, given the situation in the country today.

On November 10 the Secretary of State told the National Conference on Philanthropy that he would seek Cabinet approval for the creation of a task force to study the financial and legal situation of the voluntary sector. He confirmed that announcement in committee on November 23. In light of the inaction of his two predecessors, the studies which have been ongoing, and the frustration of leaders of the voluntary organizations, will he now indicate to Canada's over three million volunteers what progress he is making in convincing his Cabinet colleagues, particularly the Minister of Finance, of the urgent need for such a task force in order to draw together the reports which are available, including the last report of Statistics Canada?

[Translation]

Hon. Serge Joyal (Secretary of State): Madam Speaker, we have made much progress and I would urge the Hon. Member to support my efforts to convince Members opposite to expedite the passage of legislation stemming from the budget so that we might at last have the Speech from the Throne and I would then keep the commitment I made before the Parliamentary Committee.

Oral Questions

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

POSSIBLE USE OF BRAMPTON PLANT BY CHRYSLER CORPORATION

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. He recently had some very extensive discussions with Chrysler of Canada. I would like to ask him if he directly dealt with the subject involving the 1,400 employees at American Motors in Brampton who will be laid off in April, and whether he appealed on their behalf that the Chrysler work be carried out in the Brampton plant.

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Yes, Madam Speaker, Chrysler indicated there was a possibility that the Brampton plant could be used for the continuation of the production of rear-wheel drive cars such as the New Yorker. I am advised that the Brampton operation has a maximum capacity of about 80,000 units a year. Chrysler expects to produce 125,000 units a year and will therefore also be considering a St. Louis operation, a vacant plant, which could produce up to 150,000 units a year. They indicated a final decision would be made this week or next week.

ROLE OF MINISTER

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Madam Speaker, the Minister did not exactly answer my question. Did he make an appeal on behalf of the 1,400 workers who are being laid off in April in Brampton from that plant to get the work there or did he just take their word and say, 'That is fine' and just let the jobs go to the Americans?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, it goes without saying that we want to retain every single automobile job that we can in this country. We were hoping that we could retain the rear-wheel drive production in Canada, whether it is in Brampton or any other facility. That decision has still not been taken by the Chrysler Corporation.

CANADA-UNITED STATES WEAPONS TESTING AGREEMENT—EFFECT OF ORDER IN COUNCIL

Miss Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Both he and his colleague, the Minister of National Defence, have said that the Canadian public, in voting by a majority against Cruise missile testing, was ignorant of all the complexities involved.

If the Minister and his colleague really believe that the Canadian public is ignorant, why did the Minister authorize an Order in Council the day after Parliament rose for the Christmas recess, authorizing the Canadian ambassador to sign a framework weapons testing agreement in Washington? Why did he not bring this agreement forward to the Canadian public and Parliament? Why has the Order in Council not even been made public or gazetted? Why did the Minister decide, if he is so anxious for the Canadian public to be knowledgeable on this matter, that it should know nothing about it, and that the agreement would be signed in Washington and not in Ottawa?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, I want to assure the Hon. Member that at no point have I ever stated that the Canadian public was ignorant on the question of the Cruise missile. I do not have that view at all, and I have never expressed that view. What I have said was with respect to a specific question that was put in the Gallup Poll, namely, that it was an incomplete question and did not include all the factors that had to be taken into account in reaching a judgment on the Cruise missile. There was no reflection on the knowledge or lack of it on the part of the Canadian public. I hasten to assure the Hon. Member that when the umbrella agreement is signed it will be tabled in the House and all its contents will be made known to the Canadian public, to the Canadian Parliament, and I will be prepared to answer all questions, inside the House or outside the House, with respect to the details of that umbrella agreement.

SITE OF SIGNING OF AGREEMENT

Miss Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Madam Speaker, looking at the public opinion poll questions, they are generally what one would call soft. If they had been tougher, if they had said more about the Cruise missile testing than they did, the vote would probably have been 80 per cent opposed rather than 52 per cent.

The Minister still has not answered my question. Why are we signing this agreement in Washington? Why was the Order in Council authorizing that agreement to be signed never gazetted? Why is he persisting in this secrecy? Is he frightened of parliamentary and public scrutiny? Is that the problem?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): No, Madam Speaker. The Hon. Member is, I think, profoundly misinformed about the gazetting. I understand the fact that an Order in Council had been passed authorizing the signing of the agreement was published in The Canada Gazette, and the fact that the Order in Council had been passed was listed in The Canada Gazette. If I am mistaken I will obviously correct myself, but I think probably the Hon. Member will have to do the correcting rather than I.

IMMIGRATION

VICTIMIZATION OF CHINESE STUDENTS

Mr. W. Kenneth Robinson (Etobicoke-Lakeshore): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. In view of the fact that some Chinese students living in Canada on student visas are being victimized by so-called secret criminal societies, and in view of the fact that extortion cases are quite common in Toronto's Chinatown, according to information from the Metropolitan Toronto Police Intelligence Squad, will the Minister state what action, if any, his Department will take to advise people in Canada on student visas and who may be potential victims? Will he also advise what action will be taken against landed immigrants or potential landed immigrants who engage in this criminal practice of extortion?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I know the case the Hon. Member refers to is one that has caused some very serious concern in the city of Toronto and other parts of Canada. When we allow people to enter with student visas they are usually advised of their rights during that period of time, and we certainly accept no interference with those rights. They have the full protection that those visas provide to them. However, it is not the direct responsibility of the Canadian Immigration Department to pursue cases where there may be threats of extortion, or other criminal activities. It is really the responsibility of the police forces to look into that. We, of course, co-operate with them in any way we can, but it is not our job to prosecute cases. That really has to be left up to the police.

FISHERIES

REQUEST THAT CRUIKSHANK REPORT BE TABLED

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Madam Speaker, my question is supplemental to that asked by the Hon. Member for Vancouver South addressed to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. I am going to the other ocean—from coast to coast and sea to sea.

The Minister will be aware that there are two reports on West Coast fisheries, one prepared by Dr. Pearse and the second prepared by a committee appointed by his predecessor, which I will call the Cruikshank report and for the lack of a better title, "The Rationalization of the Fleet Report". I wonder if the Minister is prepared to table the second report, the Cruikshank report, and to provide a reference to the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Oceans so that it and the Pearse Report might be studied side by side?

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, I would gladly transmit that report to the Hon. Member, but of course it is up to each committee to study whatever it would like to study. I think that as my consultations are going on at the moment with all the participants on the Pacific Coast, the most useful thing would be to study the implementation of the policies which will be announced after due consultation with the different participants.

REQUEST FOR REFERRAL OF REPORTS TO COMMITTEE

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): The Minister's answer suggests that the committees are capable of deciding what they should be studying. That is not my experience with committees in the past, nor is it my understanding of the committee reforms. There must be a reference from this House to a committee, and the Kirby Report must also be referred to the Committee on Fisheries and Forestry.

I wonder if the Minister is prepared to make sure that all three of these reports are referred to the committee, with the appropriate reference. He always talks about the action. He is going to be acting from coast to coast, from ocean to ocean. His hands are going to be full. The fishermen still want to have their views expressed in Parliament, and I hope he will provide that reference. Will he do so?

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, I will certainly take under consideration the recommendation put to me, but I would like the Hon. Member to remember that, if we follow his suggestion, it could be a never-ending process. Those reports are the fruit of extensive consultations with the participants. Now that the reports have been tabled, if we have to invite those participants again to appear at committee hearings, when will that end?

I think we have carried out enough consultation. Now is the time to hold final meetings with the different participants. I will be doing that on the Pacific Coast, through my deputy, next week. I will be going there the week after that and afterward I think we will have to make some decisions. Then the Committee could study the implementation of those policies.

INDUSTRY

POSSIBLE ESTABLISHMENT OF HELICOPTER INDUSTRY IN MANITOBA

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Federal officials, either in the Minister's Department or some other Department, have indicated that a priority of the Government is to attempt to establish a domestic helicopter industry in Canada. This is because of the need for it from the point of view of jobs and the fact that sales, not only in Canada but in other countries, would be substantial in the coming years.

The Province of Manitoba has already made a submission to a federal departmental committee which is looking at this whole question. It wants the Government to look very seriously at the question of establishing a helicopter industry in the Province of Manitoba. Will the Minister advise whether this is being taken seriously at this time and whether Manitoba will be a front runner for any industry such as a helicopter industry that may be developed in Canada in the very near future?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, over a year ago our officials did a study and discovered that Canada is the second largest user of commercial helicopters in the world. Consequently we have been very active in trying to encourage various helicopter companies from around the world to have a manufacturing plant in this country. Several weeks ago I sent a letter to, if I recall, seven manufacturers around the world, giving them a date for a proposal with respect to building a facility in Canada. There have already been a couple of applications by different companies to have a helicopter facility located in more than one province. Finally, Madam Speaker, yes, we do take this project seriously and we hope that we will be able to finalize a very important manufacturing industry some place in Canada during the coming year.

RATIO OF AEROSPACE INDUSTRY IN MANITOBA

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Madam Speaker, I remind the Minister that Manitoba has traditionally had 8 to 9 per cent of the aerospace industry in terms of production in Canada. That percentage has dropped to approximately 2 to 2.5 per cent at the present time because of the shift to central Canada. In view of what the Minister has just stated, I ask him to keep this in mind. Also, does he anticipate further meetings with Government representatives of the Manitoba Department of Trade and Commerce?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, if I am not mistaken, at least six Provinces have made representations to the Government of Canada to have that potential facility located in them. By and large that decision will be taken by whichever company if one, or maybe more than one, decides to locate in Canada, and not by the Government of Canada.

PETITIONS

TABLING OF REPORTS OF CLERK OF PETITIONS

Madam Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the Clerk of the House has laid on the Table the reports of the Clerk of Petitions stating that he has examined the petitions presented by the Hon. Members on Wednesday, January 19, 1983, and finds that they meet the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

[English]

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, I would like to ask a question of the Government House Leader. Is it the intention of the Government to proceed today under the appropriate Standing Order with the time allocation motion given notice of yesterday?

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member is extremely well informed.

[English]

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, is the House Leader aware that there is a growing and mounting opposition to the moves that the Government is proposing, not only in the House of Commons but outside from many, many sectors of the economy? Is the Government House Leader prepared to consider holding off the closing off of debate on Bill C-133 in order to allow the legitimate opposition that is growing to be heard?

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, Bill C-133 which my hon. colleague is referring was discussed as part of the debate on the June 28 budget. It was considered at the second reading stage and received the approval in principle of this House. The bill was then referred to a Standing Committee of the House, where after clause-by-clause consideration, it was approved and reported back to the House. We are now at the report stage, on which already more than two days have been spent. That is an extraordinarily long time, considering the circumstances I just mentioned. Pursuant to the provisions governing procedure in the House, I suggested that the Hon. Member negotiate with the Government on a reasonable time frame for completing debate on this legislation. Since his party turned down my proposal, today, the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray) has no alternative but to move a motion to limit debate to two additional days, which is again quite considerable, in view of all the other obligations Parliament must meet at this time.

[English]

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, I hope that the Conservative Party is as concerned about this as I am. In light of the Minister's statement, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Beaches (Mr. Young):

That this House do now adjourn.

Madam Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Madam Speaker: All those opposed to the motion please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Madam Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Madam Speaker: Call in the Members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Deans), which was negatived on the following division:

Madam Speaker: I declare the motion lost.

Motion (Mr. Deans) negatived.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

PETITIONS

MR. SHIELDS—RESTRICTION ON JAPANESE AUTOMOBILE IMPORTS

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Madam Speaker, I have the honour and duty to present a petition on behalf of a number of my constituents in the riding of Athabasca. The purpose of the petition, signed by 33 residents of Fort McMurray, is to register their protest against the restriction on Japanese auto imports. The nature of the petition is to request that the Government immediately withdraw this restriction which is unfair to Canadian auto dealers who sell Japanese vehicles, their employees and dependants. This restriction will inevitably force these auto dealers to lay off up to 2,000 employees, while studies show that only a very small number of Canadian auto workers' jobs will be restored.

The petitioners hope that in Madam Speaker's examination of the petition she will find it in order, sense the urgency of their plea, and use the discretionary powers vested in her office to allow discussion and referral of the petition to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs at the earliest possible moment.

MR. SIDDON—PLANNED LAY-OFFS OF AIR CANADA MACHINISTS

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Madam Speaker, it is my duty and honour to present to the House a petition on behalf of the International Association of Machinists and Aerospace Workers, District Lodge 148 and local lodges in the greater Vancouver area. The petition is presented by these employees in light of Air Canada's plan to lay off some 585 machinists without any form of severance benefit and at the same time to extend an early retirement program to senior management employees, some 500 employees, costing $21 million.

The petitioners, as Air Canada workers, indicate in the petition that as their wages are being controlled under the six and five program and that that is for the good of the country, they are told, nonetheless Air Canada is threatening to lay them off and indeed started to do so on January 1. They call that job blackmail. At the same time the machinists claim that the company is offering a $21 million "golden handshake" deal to its management personnel and allege that this is downright discrimination.

These machinists ask for the support of all Members of Parliament to ensure that the Government of Canada insists that Air Canada offer to all its employees the same benefits provided for in the Air Canada voluntary separation plan for management.

In presenting this petition, I urge the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin), on behalf of these 150 employees, to treat all employees of Air Canada with equity and fairness.

ACT RESPECTING THE EXECUTION OF CLIFFORD ROBERT OLSON

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-671, an Act respecting the execution of Clifford Robert Olson.

Some Hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Taylor: Madam Speaker, when the laws of Canada provided for the death penalty for murderers, exceptions were made after the court ordered their execution. Now the laws of Canada do not provide for the death penalty. This Bill will provide an exception to the law and Clifford Robert Olson will be hanged within 90 days after its passage.

The Bill shall operate notwithstanding Section 2 or Sections 7 to 15 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms as contained in Part I of the Constitution Act, 1982 and the Canadian Bill of Rights.

Clifford Robert Olson is guilty beyond the shadow of a doubt of murdering 11 young people and, in committing these hideous, cowardly murders, he has forfeited his right to live.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

ALLOCATION OF TIME TO CONSIDER REPORT AND THIRD READING STAGES OF BILL C-133

Hon. Herb Gray (President of Treasury Board) moved:

That, in relation to Bill C-133, an Act to amend the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act (No. 2), one sitting day shall be allotted to the consideration of each of the report stage and the third reading stage of the Bill; and

That 15 minutes before the expiry of the time provided for government business on those days, any proceedings before the House shall be interrupted, if required, for the purpose of this Order and, in turn, every question then necessary in order to dispose of the stage of the Bill then under consideration shall be put forthwith and successively, without further debate or amendment.

He said: In opening debate in support of this motion, I want to submit that Members of the Opposition Parties and all Members have had a broad opportunity to consider the provisions of this Bill and to present views to Parliament. In fact, members of the public have also had a broad opportunity to let their views be heard. The debate on second reading took up three days of the time of this House, and a review of Hansard indicates that during this stage a total of more than seven hours were spent on debate. Of that time some four hours were used by 12 Members of the Opposition Parties. After the House approved this Bill in principle it was referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates on December 9, 1982. Over 23 hours were spent by the Committee questioning witnesses and in detailed study of the Bill. This took 14 sittings of the Committee over a period of nine sitting days. Thirty one witnesses appeared before the Committee and 12 briefs were presented.

The report of the committee which we have been debating this week arises from 520 pages of Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence of the Standing Committee, not counting the actual briefs which were presented. The Committee voted to refer the Bill to this House with its approval.

As Hon. Members know, for three days this week this House has been engaged in debate on the Report of the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates on Bill C-133. I do not want to overburden Members of this House with statistical data. However, I would simply like to point out in support of my arguments that there has been ample opportunity for the views of Members of Parliament and the public to be heard on Bill C-133 up to this point in time. On January 17 and 18 alone, in the course of over seven hours of debate, a total of 45 Members were heard, 41 of them would rank themselves with the Opposition Parties, and eight more Opposition Members were heard on this Bill this morning. Thus in debate in this House alone on the provisions of Bill C-133 some 61 Members of the Opposition have spoken. Many more have spoken in committee.

There has been, Mr. Speaker, a full opportunity to study, reflect and to express views on the provisions of what is in reality a very straightforward piece of legislation. Let us remember that the proposal was first announced last June and it has been available for study and comment by Members of Parliament and members of the public all through that time since this proposal was made in last June's budget of last June. As I have said, Bill C-133 is a straightforward Bill. It contains only two short clauses. The explanatory note in the Bill runs to four sentences only. The reason for the Bill can be put into one sentence. The Bill applies the Government six and five restraint program to the indexation of Public Service pensions for a two-ear period.

Mr. Kilgour: Unfairly.

Mr. Gray: I am arguing that further debate on this Bill is not required to enable a decision on it to be made by this House.

The questions surrounding the funding and financing of Public Service pensions are complex indeed, but these funding and financing issues are not the subject of Bill C-133. I have made the point repeatedly that the Bill does not have its origin in fundamental pension policy but rather in the Government's over-all economic stabilization program announced in the budget of June, 1982.

Mr. Kilgour: That is absolute nonsense.

Mr. Gray: This program began last summer with the application of the six and five limits to the wage increases of employees in the federal public sector for a two-year period. The second step of this program involves the application of the six and five limits to the indexation features of Family Allowances, Old Age Security pensions, personal income tax exemptions and Public Service pensions, again for a two-year period. The effect of the Bill is to limit the increase in indexing of Public Service pensions to 6.5 per cent in the first year and 5.5 per cent in the next year according to the terms of the amendment I have offered. Nothing that is presently being paid is being reduced. Nothing that is presently being paid is taken away.

Mr. Kilgour: That is absolute nonsense.

Mr. Gray: Hon. Members know that this Bill is a part of a program which has as its objective altering inflationary expectations and to provide a basis for economic recovery for reducing inflation and interest rates, and maintaining and creating jobs. The facts are very clear. This program has already had a useful effect if we look at the substantial reductions in inflation and interest rates over recent months.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Even before it is enacted?

Mr. Gray: Members of the Opposition continue to point to amounts of money in the superannuation accounts, and the fact that public servants have made contributions toward the cost of their indexing, which is something that we recognized in our amendment. There is also the fact that support has been given in the past to the concept of indexing of pensions to keep pace with the cost of living. We are also aware of facts like these and others, but I would like to say that the references made to huge surpluses are not accurate, and that the sufficiency of employee contributions has been questioned by many and is under review. Also, the Government remains committed to the principle of indexing, and this Bill provides for a return to the present system of indexing after the restraint period.

I suggest that everything possible has been said on this Bill. It is apparent from the debate so far, particularly from the remarks of Opposition speakers in the most recent stage of debate, that Members opposite have run out of new or cogent arguments and points to be made and they have begun resorting to all manner of irrelevancies simply to prolong report stage and the Bill's ultimate passage.

Let me cite some of the matters that we have heard discussed in recent hours on this debate. We have heard, for example, how the Hon. Member for Prince Edward-Hastings (Mr. Ellis) had dinner with the Hon. Grant Devine. I suppose if he speaks again he will tell us exactly what was on the menu. But that certainly is not the point of this Bill. We have had a rather questionable review from the Hon. Member for Simcoe South (Mr. Stewart) of the federal Government's loan transactions. There was a quote offered by the Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) from Ultramar Canada's assessment of PetroCan's competitive potential related to its low-cost capital structure.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Now read the Prime Minister's (Mr. Trudeau) letter.

Mr. Gray: I could go on citing other examples, Mr. Speaker, but the ones I have given, I think, do show why the motion on allocation of one final day to report stage and one day to third reading is a reasonable measure at this time.

Opposition Members may say that we are doing something contrary to parliamentary tradition. Aside from the fact that the steps we are taking are found in the rules adopted by this Parliament and are there to be used in support of its work. I want to remind the House that the British Parliament, the Mother of Parliaments, has had provisions of this type for many years which it uses on just about every Bill, including the most important. Time allocation is automatic in the British House with respect to almost every Bill that goes there, and there is not more than one or two days allotted to any stage of debate. What we are doing is certainly consistent with parliamentary tradition, especially that found in the British House, the Mother of Parliaments.

It is unfortunate that it has not been possible to negotiate an agreement for ending debate on Bill C-133, but in fact we believe time allotted to date for this Bill has been sufficient to enable a full range of opinions to be expressed about the capping of indexing of Public Service pensions as part of the six and five program.

In moving this motion, I am mindful that in the past pension cheques for superannuates have been sent out from and after the twenty-fifth of the month. In my view, the motion will assist in ensuring that pension cheques for superannuates are sent out in the traditional time period for superannuates.

To conclude, I submit, there has been a reasonable opportunity to debate this Bill and for the views of the public to be heard. A full range of opinion has been expressed on it. We are proposing that, in spite of the time already taken to debate this Bill, two more days be set by the House for debate and that we then go on to make a decision on this Bill so that we may get to other important business awaiting our attention.

Parliament is a place of debate but, even more important, it is a place of decision. It is time for a decision on Bill C-133. I urge the adoption of this motion.

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, the question is not whether it is time for decision. The question is whether a decision ought to have been made long ago by the Government of Canada to deny an undertaking and agreement with respect to its own public servants. I must consider this motion in those terms.

Before doing so, I wish to welcome back the New Democratic Party to the House of Commons who moved a motion to adjourn the House. They somehow wanted to convince everyone that they were really fighting this legislation. That was their intention.

Mr. Waddell: You were fighting for the oil companies.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): What they forgot is that the ditches and the trenches that they should occupy in terms of this debate are in the House of Commons and not outside boycotting their own motion.

Mr. Deans: Now the hypocricy comes out.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): That is why the New Democratic Party has become known across this country as the prairie chickens.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. That Party fought for 15 days for the oil companies but they are not prepared to fight 15 minutes for pensioners and civil servants.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, that is not a point of order and they know it. They should not further boycott and limit the work of this Parliament when we are dealing with a motion that they themselves say ought not to have been brought.

Mr. Deans: That is right and we refuse to help them. Tell the senior citizens what you really think of them.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): There have been approximately 30 speakers at the report stage over two days under the new rules of this House. These are rules which the Government House Leader (Mr. Pinard) said would shorten speeches. These speeches have been shortened at report stage by being reduced from 20 minutes to 10 minutes.

Why were they shortened? It was to allow Members of all Parties, whether Liberals, New Democrats or Conservatives, to speak on this matter. There still remain issues to be discussed, despite what the Minister says. Imagine, Mr. Speaker, in the face of shortening the period of time in which to speak, the Government has moved to allocate time.

I would be prepared to argue that when a Bill is absolutely necessary to implement a beneficial Government program there is perhaps a place for time allocation. However, can it be argued, with respect to a Bill which is designed to remove a benefit which has been contracted, paid for and relied upon by a large number of retired public servants, Armed Service members and retired members of the RCMP, as well as their widows and children, that it is honest and moral for the Government to move time allocation? That is the issue in this debate.

Let me say what the effect of this Bill is. Without any consultation, without a word to the Public Service, the Government has effectively increased taxation on those retired public servants and the broad public sector which I have mentioned by 5 per cent. That is the difference between the 11.5 per cent which public servants were entitled to under their agreement and understanding over the years and the 6.5 per cent in the first year as set out in this Bill. It is an increase in taxation on a particular segment of society. It will be seen as that; it is that and it is unforgiveable to introduce such a Bill. It is equally and perhaps more unforgiveable to cut back on the right of Members to speak about it.

I want to say to the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray) and Members of the House that this is not the first time that the Government will use this measure during the course of debate on its famous six and five program.

Mr. Deans: I could have told you that in August.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): We will be dealing with Old Age Security. I do not want the NDP to boycott the House during discussion on Old Age Security. I want Members of Parliament and the public to know that the Government will do exactly the same thing with respect to Old Age Security. This will be an additional tax on the senior citizens in the country.

During the period for Members' Statements today, the Hon. Member for Eglinton-Lawrence (Mr. de Corneille) made a good statement when he said that Members should have an opportunity to be more independent. This is an opportunity for all Members of the Liberal Party to be more independent because the vote to close off debate in the House is not a vote of confidence. I say to the Liberal Members that they should stand up and vote against this motion. Your Government will not fall at 5.30 p.m. when this vote is taken. The Hon. Member for Eglinton-Lawrence should return to the House. I would ask him and every Member to have a conscience and vote against this motion.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Hon. Member would answer the question as to why the Conservative Party would keep the bells ringing for the oil companies but not for the senior citizens, if they are concerned about this legislation. Can he answer that question?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I think I should remind Hon. Members, particularly since I know that points of order were used earlier today as a mechanism to encourage debate, that it may be appropriate in the circumstances to remind Hon. Members to consider perhaps whether or not they are properly speaking on a point of order before they interrupt another Hon. Member. Of course, the Chair will recognize Hon. Members on a point of order.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, as you noticed, the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) was taking his seat. I was rising on a point of order to determine if he was willing to respond to a question as to why the Conservative Party was willing to let the bells ring in the House for the oil companies but not for the senior citizens of this land.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I said I could answer the question if I have your permission and the permission of the House to do so.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I apologize to the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom). I did not realize that the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) had decided to take his seat or to answer a question.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, the issue during the bell-ringing episode was with respect to this very institution. That is the difference.

Mr. Waddell: You supported the oil companies.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): The issue on which the NDP supported us, in their good sense, incidentally, concerned the survival of this institution with regard to legislation being brought forward.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Would the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton permit another short question? I want to ask, in a very non-partisan way, why the Conservative Party and he himself in particular—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. A point of privilege is being raised by the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier). I have no choice but to interrupt the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway who is speaking on a point of order.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I want to draw your attention to the fact that we are into the same quagmire in which we were this morning. We are now getting questions from the NDP, who just came back into the House, addressed to the Member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) when he, indeed, had the floor. You did not ask me or anyone else for unanimous consent for questions to be put to the Member for Nepean-Carleton. I refuse to have an ongoing debate on this motion.

Mr. Deans: How long can we speak with the Conservatives alongside of you?

• (1600)

Mr. Gauthier: Get up and take the floor, Deans, if you want to speak. Wait until I am finished.

I object to this kind of procedure, which is completely wrong, completely frustrates the whole spirit of our new rules, and which will just make the NDP look sillier than it did before.

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I want to say on behalf of my colleagues that we in the New Democratic Party will not abuse the rules. We are using these rules to protect the pensioners of Canada. That is what we are doing.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: I want to spend about one minute discussing the Bill because, as the Minister has indicated, much has already been said about the Bill, but I want to make two quick points. At this point in our history, when so many Canadians, particularly pensioners, are in a state of misery, it is wrong for any Government in this land with a sense of decency to take a whack at the pensioners, to reduce their benefits by whatever amount. However, I say that it is doubly wrong, the immorality is compounded, when a Gouvernement takes a group of pensioners who in fact have negotiated a contract, creates a fund to give them special benefits to which they contribute, and then denies that benefit to those pensioners. I repeat, it is compounding the imorality, and that is what the Government is doing.

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Broadbent: In this context, I want to say that the hypocrisy of the Conservative Party could hardly be exceeded in terms of what it is doing today. We have said in this debate that last spring, in June, when the budget came down, the then Minister of Finance made it very clear that anyone supporting the six and five program would also support a reduction in pensions, a whack away at recipients of Family Allowances, and curtail in general incomes of public servants. By moral admonition, the Government hoped, with Conservative support, there would be a curtailment of wage and salary increases of ordinary workers throughout this land. I say to the Conservatives that the Government made it clear last June that the pensioners would be affected. The Conservatives rose in this House in August and voted for the six and five program.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): We voted against that budget.

Mr. Broadbent: Now, hypocritically, they oppose its clear implication.

Some Hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I want to address the immediate issue which is before the House this afternoon. Our House leader rose because he knows that on Tuesday cheques will be sent out in good faith to men and women who have contributed to pension funds and who are now entitled to an escalation in their pension increase fully equivalent to the increase in the cost of living, to which they are morally and legally entitled at this minute, throughout Canada. Our House leader rose because he is aware that even if we in this House could hold the measure up this afternoon until 6 o'clock or beyond 6 p.m. so that the required two hours of closure debate would not take place, at least the pensions which would go out on Tuesday would reflect some sense of morality and justice because they would be fully indexed. I say with all seriousness that because today the Liberals were supported by the Conservatives, the pensioners will be cheated on Tuesday night. That is the reality.

Some Hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Broadbent: In this context, I want to say that all that it would take—

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): You were not here!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): You were not even here to vote for your own motion.

Mr. Broadbent: Oh, note the crocodile tears and the astute, well-informed, cogently equipped argumentation of the Hon. Member who has just said that if we had been here and voted with them, if we had come back sooner, then somehow that would have helped the pensioners!

Mr. Nielsen: We did your job.

Mr. Broadbent: I say to the Conservative Member that even his Party, for once, got all its Members out—

Mr. Nielsen: Where were yours?

Mr. Broadbent: —to the vote, and we had ours and had voted with them, he knows very well that the majority on that side of the House would have carried the day, the debate would have been finished by six o'clock, and the pensioners would have been cheated. That is what he knows.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Changed your tune, now, Ed. The old 20 per centers.

Mr. Broadbent: I say to the Conservatives that if they had really been interested, just as a small percentage in terms of their concern, to the same degree as they were with regard to the oil industry at the time they held the House up for days, not hours, then the pensioners would have had some justice on Tuesday night. If they had just stayed, literally, until one minute after 4 o'clock, and come back in for the vote, then the pensioners' cheques would have been at the just level which they had negotiated.

Our Party opposed the six and five program because we said at the outset that that was a bit of cosmetic window-dressing brought forward by the Government of Canada because it knew that all the economic indicators pointed to the fact that wage and salary increases would be going down, anyway. However, it brought it in to try to claim some credit. We saw it for what it was, an unfair slap at ordinary working people, doing nothing about inflation and, most important, doing nothing about the basic necessity at this point in our history of creating more jobs. We said it last August. We have consistently said it in terms of every Bill which has been related to it. The Conservative Party which, I regret to say, voted for that Bill last August, has now hypocritically stood up in the House and pretended to oppose the natural outflow from that course of action. The Government was wrong in its economic analysis and in its morality, and has been joined in this injustice by the Conservative Party. We oppose both of them.

Mr. Douglas Fisher (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, in the June budget, the then Minister of Finance proposed that a national partnership be undertaken between the Government and the people of this country to begin a serious effort to fight inflation. On page 4 of his budget speech, the Minister made two important statements which I would like to quote so that everyone can be reminded of the importance of this issue. First, the Minister said:

> It is within our power, through deliberate and concerted action, to bring down price inflation much more quickly. We can do this by accepting, for the time being, income increases that are lower than the current rate of inflation. A reduction of income demands will lower cost and price increases. In this way we can stop feeding the spiral of inflation.

Then a little further on in his budget speech the Minister said:

> The private sector and the Provinces could not be expected to accept income restraint unless the Government of Canada showed leadership in the conduct of its own affairs. The government has therefore decided to lead the way by implementing the proposed strategy in the federal public sector for a period of two years.

That is the purpose, the whole direction, of this debate. The Government has proposed a national partnership, and we have further proposed that the public be able to judge its behaviour against our own. The public has accepted that partnership and the public approves the six and five program and the efforts that we are making with our own behaviour.

Mr. McDermid: They are asking for a second opinion.

Mr. Fisher: Your Honour will recall that in June we introduced three stages. We said, first, that political people, the governing people, the M.P.s, Senators and their staffs, would have their salaries rolled back from an 11 per cent increase to the 6 per cent level for 1982, and that after that we would go through the normal six and five cycle in 1983-84. Then Deputy Ministers and the heads of Crown corporations were limited to 6 per cent and 5 per cent increases from July 1, 1982.

Mr. Lewis: How about Campagnolo?

Mr. Fisher: After that, in an easier fashion, in a phased-in fashion, ordinary public servants were asked to enter the six and five program. That included not only their salaries but their pensions. Then, having set that out, we turned to the public and asked them to accept six and five limitations on pensions, on Family Allowances and on income tax indexing. I do not know how I could possibly go to my own parents and say to them that their pensions must be limited to six and five but that the pensions of civil servants need not be limited. We had to have that partnership, we had to have that agreement, before going to the general public. We need to remember, as well, that these six and five increases have brought to us lower prices in the form of administered prices, lower prices through the indirect pressures the Government has applied to industry, and lower wages, through the leadership we have given to ordinary companies and ordinary people.

We need to remember that this program has been brought in by Province after Province, as part of a partnership, right across this country. So we are not talking here only about civil servants. We are talking about a partnership involving all Canadians, and the goal of that partnership is to bring stability and health back to our economy. We are not talking about parliamentary gains. We are not talking about fights between politicians. We are talking about the economic health and price stability for this country, and there has been widespread public acceptance of that.

I remind everyone of the fact that when that budget speech was given, inflation was over 11.5 per cent. On a year to year basis, in November it was 9.8 per cent. The bank rate was 16.5 per cent on June 28 and today it is under 10 per cent. The dollar was under 77 cents on June 28, and today it is over 81.5 cents. That is good news at a time when good news is needed. It is as a result of this national partnership and as a result of the efforts of all Canadians who agree that fighting inflation is the key to our future health. The results of this effort show up in the lives of ordinary people. A typical mortgage, a one-year mortgage of $50,000, on June 28 was earning interest of 19.25 per cent. The same mortgage negotiated today is 12 per cent. That is god news and it is the result of the partnership and determination that is building around the six and five program.

Predictably, there are some people who are opposed, and predictably those people would like us to show favours to a special group or to pick out one group of people who need not be included. We cannot affort that in this kind of program. We cannot abandon our half of the partnership. We cannot go to the Canadian people and say that six and five is an acceptable rule for them but not for our employees. We cannot delcare the partnership void once we have asked everybody else to get on board.

That is what the Opposition is asking us to do, to abandon our commitment to the six and five program and to abandon the fight against inflation. In that kind of sentimentality they are urging us to get back from feeding what the Minister calls the inflationary spiral. We cannot do that any longer.

I would finally like to remind Hon. Members, Mr. Speaker, that coming from the six and five program there have been savings which have been applied to other Government programs, and those programs today, six months after that budget, are demonstrated successes. We have seen $400 million applied to transportation. We have seen $500 million in the NEED program. We have seen the $3,000 mortgage renewal program and the $3,000 homeowner grant program and we have seen renewals in all these industries because of this kind of stimulation.

When people talk, as the Opposition does, about abandoning the six and five program, they are also talking about abandoning the commitment to those jobs, the stimulants and the renewed investments. I do not think today we should let the debate end without putting into perspective the implications of their attack. They want special status given to special people, after asking every other Canadian to join in. They want, furthermore, an abandonment of the stimulants and spending that has been earned from the six and five program. Those commitments that were set out in the June budget, that were renewed in the October financial statement, stand, and the determination of this Government stands to renew the health of the economy of this country.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Before recognizing the Hon. Member for Esquimalt-Saanich, may I proceed with announcing the questions in the "late show" for this evening?

Time Allocation

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie)—Canadian National Railways—Committee recommendation on pension fund inquiry—(b) Pension fund in investment; the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson)—Communications—Production of pornographic shows for Pay TV; the Hon. Member for Broadview-Greenwood (Ms. McDonald)—Communications—Pornographic programming advertized by First Choice Pay TV. (b) Provisions of Broadcasting Act. (c) Request that Broadcasting Act be amended.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

ALLOCATION OF TIME TO CONSIDER REPORT AND THIRD READING STAGES OF BILL C-133

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Gray:

That, in relation to Bill C-133, an Act to amend the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act (No. 2), one sitting day shall be allotted to the consideration of each of the report stage and the third reading stage of the Bill; and

That 15 minutes before the expiry of the time provided for Government business on those days, any proceedings before the House shall be interrupted, if required, for the purpose of this Order and, in turn, every question then necessary in order to dispose of the stage of the Bill then under consideration shall be put forthwith and successively, without further debate or amendment.

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, this is the most puzzling debate in which I have ever participated. It is an extraordinary debate. I hear a complete fabrication from Hon. Members opposite. I hear a Goebbelesque sort of defining of the word "partnership" without identifying any more partnership than the six and five, but let me first deal with Hon. Members to my extreme left. I was taken by complete suprise when the Leader of the New Democratic Party said, if I recall—and I just could not believe my ears—that if the Progressive Conservative Party had not supported the Government on the motion to adjourn—

An Hon. Member: You supported the Government.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Were they looking through the TV backwards, out there in the lobby? I just do not understand. We did not support the Government on that. We supported their motion which they were not here to support, and they say that we supported the Government on this motion. I do not understand that sort of reasoning.

The reasoning of the Liberal Party is just as flawed. They talk about partnership. Partnership with whom, the six and five? Is six a partner of five? By the imposition of six and five, which they are seeking in certain areas, are they suggesting that, because of the future application of six and five, they have managed to bring the inflation rate down? They were blaming the United States for causing the inflation rate to rise, and interest rates too, and now they are taking credit for the collapse of the interest rates and the inflation rate. I just do not understand. Goebbelesque is the only way I can describe it—if you repeat something often enough in enough places, to enough people, somebody is bound to believe it. But I suggest in the House there is no one who will believe what we heard from the Parliamentary Secretary just a few minutes ago. It is just incredible. What do they mean by partnership? The Hon. Member talked about those savings which have been accumulated by the imposition of six and five. How can we have savings when we are already $23.9 billion in debt, maybe more than that, maybe $30 billion? Where does one get savings, when one is already in debt, that one does not apply to reduce that debt? The logic that comes from that side of the House and from the other end of the House is fallacious—I guess they learned it at the same school. It is fallacious, it is misleading, it is Geobbelesque and it is dangerous.

I want to read into the record now the text of a telegram which was sent today by the Professional Institute of the Public Service of Canada to the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray). It puts in a very succinct form the matter now before us. It reads:

> Am deeply disappointed that you have resorted through sheer political expedience to measures that would negate the democratic process in order to implement administrative procedures. Following our meetings last December and earlier this month I had hoped that you would have exerted your influence to honour the Government's commitment as employer and not deny pensioners the full indexation to inflation that they have paid for and which present public servants continue to support with their contributions.

Got the message? It goes on:

> —the full indexation to inflation that they have paid for and which present public servants continue to support with their contributions. Bill C-133 is a political measure which the Government mistakenly believes will have popular support because it adversely affects public servants, but by forcing pensioners—

This is the point.

> —by forcing pensioners to bear the brunt of this evil law, the Government's strategy will eventually backfire. It is still not too late for you to redress the situation. Withdraw Bill C-133 and restore some of your credibility.

I doubt the Minister could ever restore any of his credibility. We have talked about the number of people being injured by the legislation. I was able to get the number of pensioners in the Public Service and in the Armed Service. I asked for the number in the RCMP. It was not easy to get this information because of the three categories. The RCMP were not able, in the time available, to supply me with the figures I was seeking, but they can be pro rated. It is important to know how many widows are going to be hit by this legislation. In the Public Service and in the Armed Service there are approximately 150,000 pensioners. Of those, approximately 40,000 are widows. Is the President of the Treasury Board aware that his measure is going to have an impact on widows who rely on this pension for their livelihood?

This is an iniquitous Bill. Commitments were made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in 1977 and by the then President of the Treasury Board, now Minister of State for Economic Development (Mr. Johnston), as late as June 1981 indicating that the Government confirms the concept that pension is part of pay and—> —a viewpoint well supported by the compensation policies which give its full value to the pension plan . . . we, the government, have attempted to formalize a policy of matching the total salary compensation of our public servants with that of other Canadian employees. An important aspect of these comparisons consists in giving a value to the pension benefits of federal employees.

[English]

That is an extract from a letter written by the then President of the Treasury Board to the National Association of Federal Annuitants. They are deeply distressed.

There is another aspect to this matter that has not been fully underlined but deserves to be underlined. This imposition of a lower index is to be applied to current pensions, despite the 11 per cent inflation. A catch-up will not be made. This brief, which I believe was presented to the Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates in December of last year, suggests what ought to be done if, as seems likely because of the predominance of the heavy weighting on the Government side. The Government is going to have its way. Once the six and five formula is implemented, appropriate increments should be added so that the base from which the 1985 or 1986 pensions are paid will be restored and there will not be a backtracking from the current expectation. That is a legitimate request. With time running as short as it is, I will reserve any further comments until third reading.

Mr. Norman Kelly (Scarborough Centre): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity to participate in this debate because, quite frankly, I take issue with the arguments raised by Members of the Opposition Parties. In debates like this, it is not unusual for Opposition Members to rant and rave about this Government's predilection for using closure in the House. They like to create the image of the Government strangling democracy, having its fingers and thumbs firmly around the neck of this House, squeezing as tightly as it can, and perhaps even cackling with enjoyment.

I know, Mr. Speaker, that you are an astute student of politics. Like everyone else in this House who does any reading on the state or character of legislative politics today in the western world, you know that many Houses of Commons like this are rapidly becoming anachronistic simply because they cannot get the business of the country done quickly enough in a world that is changing with enormous speed.

The Mother of Parliaments in Great Britain recognized this fact long ago. There is not a Bill introduced in the British House of Commons that does not automatically carry closure with it. If you look at the rules of some of the other Houses in the British parliamentary system, you find that they too have gone to some form or another of automatic closure.

I would argue that the failure of this House for a number of reasons to introduce automatic closure is the major reason why this institution is rapidly becoming less relevant in the important debates that we have today and will face in the future. The irony of that situation is that the people who, publicly or rhetorically, express their love and respect for this House are the very people who object to closure, the one instrument that will save this House from the doom that I and many other people see ahead of us in the near future. I cannot understand that. How can we have a gentleman like the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker)—

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point or oder. I am trying to digest an extraordinary comment made by the speaker who was just now on his feet.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Kilgour): I do not consider that a point of order. I recognize the Hon. Member for Scarborough Centre (Mr. Kelly).

Mr. Kelly: Mr. Speaker, with respect to the Hon. gentleman's inability to digest the facts—I am not appealing to his stomach, I am trying to appeal to his head—the point I was making is that I listen very carefully and I respect very much the views of the esteemed Hon. Members of this House such as the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton, and it strikes me as being highly ironic that that Hon. Member, and people like him, who love this institution and want to do the very best for it, would be among the very first to stand up in this House to object to the only procedure which, frankly, is going to rescue this institution from the oblivion to which it is so resolutely headed. I do not understand the contradiction between the conviction of his heart and what I hear him say from time to time in the debates in this House.

There are some Members of this House who might say, "Well, I can accept the need for closure, time allocation of one sort or another in the deliberations of this House, but the real question is, should there be closure on time allocation placed on this Bill today?" I would respond, Mr. Speaker, by saying, yes, I think there should be closure today. I know there are Members of the Opposition Parties who say there should not be closure because the argument is not over, and they want to continue the argument through this week or next week or next month, or whatever, until the issue is resolved. I would like to make an important distinction which I think should be understood in the debates in this House. You do not debate issues until the argument is over. You do not debate an issue in this House until all the facts are in.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Who decides that?

Mr. Kelly: I know, as everyone knows, that arguments of this sort produced by Bills as sensitive and as important as this one will never end. You will never get anyone in this House to believe that the argument is over, and because that will never happen I think there has to be a point in the life of a debate where the question can be raised and reasonably answered, "Are the facts in?" I believe the answer to that is, yes, the facts are in.

Although I have not participated in this debate until now, I have been following it through Hansard, and I find nothing new in the debate over the last few weeks from what I saw in the debate over the first few weeks. I believe that is as good a test as any to see if the facts are in. Is there anyone on the Opposition side, or on this side for that matter, who is raising any new points or introducing any new facts or looking at the issue from a fresh perspective? The answer is, no, there is not.

The Hon. Members opposite are not without imagination. They are not without research staff. I think, frankly, from what I have read in Hansard in the last few days, they have exhausted both. Because of that, I think it is legitimate for this Government to ask for a vote on time allocation today.

The third point I would like to make, Mr. Speaker, centres on the whole controversy over income limitations. Should there be income limitations in today's economy? My answer to that is, yes. Several months ago, in a debate in the House, I argued that income limitations should be of the strictest kind. I suggested a wage freeze, that no one should get any increases of any sort. That fell on deaf ears in this House and in Cabinet, but I do not think it was without merit. Notwithstanding, whether it is zero per cent, 2 per cent or 6 per cent, the real issue is, should there be income limitation? I believe the answer to that, Mr. Speaker, is, there should be.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Start with the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau).

Mr. Kelly: A study published a number of years ago, quickly forgotten and immediately buried, indicated that about 60 per cent of the price increases in Canada was generated domestically, that is, 40 per cent of the price increases was generated abroad. Given those conditions, and given an inflation rate of 10 per cent, I feel it is legitimate for this Government, in those areas of jurisdiction under its control, to place an income ceiling or capping of 6 per cent, because that 6 per cent ceiling reflects the domestic rate of inflation. Frankly, I do not believe anyone in this country, senior citizen, Member of Parliament, or anyone else, should expect an income increase to compensate totally for the increase in inflation. For all of us to expect that is to keep the inflationary spiral going, and the irony of that is that all of us want two things at the same time: we want to break the inflationary spiral and we want to keep up with the price increases. We cannot do both, Mr. Speaker. We can do one or the other, but we cannot do both. If it is important for our short-term and long-term interests to control inflation, then I feel we have to accept the argument and accept the reality that no one in this society should be receiving an income increase in any one year higher than 60 per cent of the inflation rate of that particular year. That is why I do not believe that the 6 per cent increase which we have placed on the pensions of civil servants is either arbitrary or unfair.

Mr. Orlikow: Would the Hon. Member permit a question?

Time Allocation

Mr. Kelly: I will permit a question at the end. There may be some people in this House, Mr. Speaker, who would accept that argument and their response might be, "Well, I can buy that, but I don't like the way you imposed it. You ran rough-shod over the rights of civil service pensioners. Why didn't you in some way try to negotiate?" Well, when I was the Parliamentary Secretary I met with many of the people who were negotiating on behalf of the Public Service. And I will tell you right now, they were not interested in negotiating this. They told us point blank that they would not negotiate a surrender of—

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Sincerely promised.

Mr. Kelly: —benefits for which they worked so hard in years past. What we were told in essence was there were no options. There was no option the Government could follow, no option to explore, no willingness on the other side to sit down and negotiate. They told us beforehand this was an issue which was non-negotiable.

When you get into a situation like that, what do you do? What do you do if you sincerely believe that inflation must be fought, and it must be fought through some kind of income limitation? I do not think there is anyone in this House who can answer the question. Finally, Mr. Speaker—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. I am sorry to interrupt the Hon. Member for Scarborough Centre (Mr. Kelly), but his time has expired. He may continue with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): There is not. The Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker).

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills): Mr. Speaker, it is with real sadness that I rise to speak to closure motion or time allocation on Bill C-133 because I think it really is a tragedy.

I would like to speak first of all to the comments of the Hon. Member for Scarborough Centre (Mr. Kelly) because I think he simply missed the point on most of the issue. He argues that closure will save Parliament, and I take issue with that because I believe closure and time allocation destroy this place. The purpose of a Parliament is for debate, and the reason we have debate is so that the media can spread that debate across the country, and ordinary Canadians can interrupt their lives in terms of reading newspapers and articles so as to get some feel for the issue, then give input back to us as Members of Parliament. If we were a small postage-stamp country, perhaps closure after two or three days would be appropriate but certainly it is not in a country as large as Canada when it takes weeks for the news to get across the country in terms of the weekly newspapers, which is basically the newspaper which most people read. We have to keep these debates going. It takes people time to go to their church meetings or their women's institute meetings where these issues are discussed. Then they have to formulate in their minds whether the Government is acting fairly or unfairly, then get back to us so we can start to reflect their views in the House.

• (1640)

The Hon. Member for Scarborough Centre (Mr. Kelly) is simply wrong when he says we have to close this thing off quickly. I say to him that the prime reason the Government is into closure is that it is now beginning to get input from Canadians that they genuinely do see the issue. The issue is not whether we have restraint. We all agree there has to be restraint, and that is why we voted for Bill C-124. But we certainly did not agree to the Government breaking contracts. For years civil servants have paid in 7.5 per cent to their pension, whereas most of the payments in private industry were less than 5 per cent. They actually had earmarked an extra 1 per cent, pursuant to an agreement, which would guarantee them indexation. We also know that in the superannuation account there is over $15 billion built up, but now the Government is unilaterally, by closure, taking away the benefits they have paid for. Any decent Government would have at least said, well, we took your money under false pretences; we will give your money back and then you are under six and five. So I say to the Government, give the retired civil servants their money back. They will be glad to take it because there is lots of money in the account.

If the Government would accept, Mr. Speaker, in the parliamentary process, more amendments from the Opposition and even from its own backbenchers, we would not be in this jam today. I know that in all the legislation that I have been involved in in the last three years, not once has the Government accepted amendments from the Opposition, even though Government backbenchers agree that on this issue, this would be a good amendment. What the Government would sometimes do is reject the Opposition amendment and have one of its own Members bring it in with a separate motion, and then accept that. But the Government sees Parliament as just an in-and-out operation. If you go over to the Privy Council Office, Mr. Speaker, and watch how legislation, the budget and everything, is prepared, you will find they have enormous flow charts there. They show how an idea starts, goes through various Departments and officials, and then you will notice up in the far right-hand corner a tiny, tiny little box. That is Parliament. It is just a simple in-and-out operation. The Hon. Member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre) gives a beautiful speech on this because he has looked into it in great detail. Parliament is irrelevant to the bureaucracy. The reason for that is that Government backbenchers have failed to stand up to Cabinet. They do not seem to understand that it is an issue of executive power versus Parliament. Now, on this Bill we know several Government Members have stood up against it, and that is to their credit. I am looking at the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) right now.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, I want to deal with the points made by the Leader of the NDP. Recently we have seen them make an enormous attempt to get on the morality bandwagon, backing the Bishops and their fine paper. The implication they are trying to leave with the Canadian people is that "We, the NDP, back the Bishops", therefore everyone else, including the Government, should. But the Bishops are against abortion. What is the NDP stand on abortion? They want abortion on demand.

Mr. Deans: What position does the Tory Party take on abortion?

Mr. Thacker: I am talking about the NDP.

Mr. Deans: I know you are. What position does the Tory Party take on abortion?

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, they get riled when they get to these points they cannot handle.

Mr. Deans: Answer the question. What position does the Tory Party take?

Mr. Taylor: Why did you kick Borowski out, then?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. The Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker) has the floor.

Mr. Deans: Well, why doesn't he stick to the Bill?

Mr. Thacker: They are really annoyed about that because they want the Government to accept the Bishops' position on nationalizing industry but not on abortion.

Mr. Deans: What about the Conservatives?

Mr. Thacker: Let me tell them what their policy is: save the seals and kill the babies. That is the NDP policy.

Mr. Deans: You cannot find out where the Tories are because they do not know.

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the NDP stood up today and sanctimonously, with heartfelt words, said: "Why don't you listen to ordinary Canadians? Let us follow them." I agree. What is their position on capital punishment? More than 80 per cent of ordinary Canadians want justice on capital punishment.

Mr. Deans: What is Joe Clark's position on capital punishment?

Mr. Thacker: We are talking about Party positions. Our Party agrees that individuals can take their own position, but the NDP does not.

Mr. Deans: There are 101 positions in the Tory Party, all of them at the feet of the Liberals.

Mr. Thacker: We all have the right to have our own positions. The NDP really see themselves as social engineers; they want to remake mankind in the image of NDP policy. They do not permit dissent.

Mr. Beatty: They purged Svend Robinson for speaking out. If you have a mind of your own, you get purged.

Mr. Deans: You want to get into that one, too?

Mr. Thacker: The great NDP Party, Mr. Speaker, and more so now the Liberal Party because Liberal backbenchers have failed to honour their commitment to their constituents, are letting the Cabinet get away with murder. So we see in this social engineering type of Government the remaking of mankind. We have a law passed in Parliament, a commitment to go metric, but it will be voluntary. Then the executive Cabinet, because it has to remake mankind, has to impose that law, just as with this Bill before us. My time has expired, Mr. Speaker, thank you.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): The Hon. Member for Etobicoke North (Mr. MacLaren).

Mr. Beatty: We want Deans.

Mr. Roy MacLaren (Etobicoke North): Mr. Speaker, the motion before us is to place a limit on the length of this debate. Since the House has already spent a large amount of time debating Bill C-133. Members are aware of the extensive debate on this Bill. It has stretched over a prolonged period from well before the Christmas recess until today. We have spent, on the various stages of this Bill, a total of some 45 days. More than 70 speakers have now participated in its discussion. In addition, we have had, of course, extensive discussion in committee. There were some 14 meetings of the committee which heard briefs and submissions from a total of 31 witnesses, who contributed to over 500 pages of testimony. In those circumstances I should submit that for what is indeed a fairly simple and straightforward Bill, one with only two readily understandable clauses, we might conclude that ample time has been provided for debate.

If one needed any additional evidence to reach that conclusion, I should suggest that the course of our discussion today would lead anyone to the conclusion that every aspect of this matter has been fully discussed. For example, earlier today we spent some time on Petro-Canada. We heard a number of Members from the other side of the House discuss aspects of PetroCan's capital spending program. It was largely an erroneous discussion but, be that as it may, we also had the matter of abortion introduced. In those circumstances we can conclude that just about everything there is to be said about Bill C-133 has already been said. Therefore, I urge Members to support the orderly termination of this discussion and to get on with the other pressing matters on our agenda.

However, there are two points which I should like to make in passing regarding the substance of the Bill. The Minister introduced a motion which has the effect of raising the pension increase in 1983 to 6.5 per cent from 6 per cent and in 1984 to 5.5 per cent from the earlier 5 per cent. That motion takes into account the underlying circumstances of the Public Service pension scheme. The President of the Treasury Board (Mr.

Gray) noted that it was because employees contributed toward their indexation since 1970 that he wanted to ensure that none of the amounts set aside by them would fall under the six and five program. In so stating he was indicating that if people had paid for something then it should be delivered. That was the reason for his amendment, to bring into practice the principle he described, that is, to cap only that part of indexing which has not been paid for in advance and in fact is being paid for by the same taxpayers who are being asked to moderate their expectations for a short time. That seems to be an entirely reasonable proposition. I cannot think any fair-minded person could object to it.

The other consideration that I wanted to note during the brief time available is that there has been some discussion by Hon. Members opposite about a contractual obligation. I do not wish to enter into a legal discussion. I would say, however, that there have been changes in the Act in the past on at least two occasions when the fact that it was not really a contract operated to the advantage of public servants. The argument now is that any changes are operating to the disadvantage of retired public servants and public servants generally. The changes in the past have benefited public servants, and on those occasions we did not hear any arguments about contractual obligation.

I have in mind the situation in 1970 when 2 per cent indexing of the Public Service pension plan was introduced. It applied to all those already receiving pensions and had in fact completed their side of the pension agreement by being employees or contributors and who were then, as beneficiaries, receiving the agreed-upon benefits promised while they were employees. The Parliament of that day did not say to these people, "You are not going to be contributors to the index plan, so you will never get the benefits". The Government decided that those pensioners should not be excluded from such an important benefit. On that occasion we certainly did not hear anything about so-called contractual obligations. On the contrary, the changes were welcomed.

The only other point I would make is to recall that, prior to the 1979 election, in the Standing Committee for Miscellaneous Estimates, I believe that there was all-Party agreement for the capping of Public Service indexing over a certain amount. I do not have the details, but I believe that that all-Party agreement fell victim, as it were, to the 1979 election and was not proceeded with.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): It was quite a different concept.

Mr. MacLaren: It may have been in many respects a different concept, but the basic principle which that agreement embodied was not, in essence, different from that which we have before us today. Capping of indexing in certain circumstances may well be appropriate. Certainly in my view it is appropriate in our present economic condition which requires a degree of commitment and restraint on the part of all Canadians. I am sure that those who are receiving Public Service pensions will recognize the reasonableness of that proposition.

I recall the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) saying the other evening that, "in other words, the war against inflation will be fought in part by the retired public servants of Canada". That is true. I certainly would be the last to suggest that they would think of playing any other role.

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): Mr. Speaker, it is never a pleasure to participate in a closure debate or a motion to close debate, so the traditional introduction to a Parliamentary speech I will not make, with great respect.

I wish to respond directly to some of the comments of the Hon. Member for Etobicoke North (Mr. MacLaren), whose arguments as always sound good but contain within them most remarkable assertions. The Hon. Member's argument was that because a Bill only has two clauses, it does not need as much debate as a Bill with more clauses. The logical conclusion of that argument would be that it would be reasonable for the House to deal with a Bill that has one clause, a clause to abolish Parliament, in one day because it only had one clause. It is a most remarkable assertion that the necessity of debate and the quality and length of debate should be determined by the number of clauses in a Bill. We might refer to that as a typical quantitative argument from people who quantify things rather than deal with the ethics of things.

It is true that this Bill has had a substantial number of speakers. Surely any Bill with the purpose and intent to take away a right, when there is not agreement by both parties, should deserve to have every Member of the House speak on the matter. That seems to be self-evident. As long as I have breath I will refute, every time I hear it, the argument that someone in the House has the capacity to rise and invoke closure on this basis because "somebody else has the capacity to decide that everything there is to say has now been said". That is the most fundamental muzzling of free speech that I have ever heard. I am absolutely shocked that the Hon. Member opposite would support it, because I know his track record on these issues.

Let me deal briefly with the contractual obligations which were so gleefully and happily thrown out by the previous Member as existing in this case. His argument was that obviously no contractual obligation exists because in a previous case the contract was amended and they did not object. If I can paraphrase the Hon. Member correctly, in a previous case the benefit was increased and there was no objection; it was therefore not a contract. In fact, what happened in that case is that the two parties to the agreement agreed. What we have here is a clear case where one party to the agreement with the ability to invoke closure in the House of Commons chooses unilaterally to change a contractual agreement without consultation, without agreement. Perhaps the lunacy of the argument of the Government is best indicated by the fact that the Government felt it was necessary, having lauded six and five all across the country, to bring in a motion to amend the 6 per cent and 5 per cent in this case to 6.5 per cent and 5.5 per cent because, said the Minister as correctly quoted by the previous Member, "Retired public servants are entitled to receive something they have paid for".

One of two things is true. Either there is contractual obligation to pay to retired public servants full indexation because it has in fact been paid for, in which case the Minister should honour his own word, or it has not been paid for. If it has not been paid for, then surely it is the plan itself which should be amended on its own merits, not as part of some nonsense about fighting inflation. The amendment makes that clear. If people have paid for something, then they are entitled to get it.

What the Government is proposing to do to civil servants and to retiring employees of the Canadian public is wrong. It is clearly the reason the Government is using closure. I sense that there is a growing recognition that what it is proposing to do is wrong. It is much easier for the Government to close debate now than to allow time for others to find out about it. But if those retired public servants have paid for something, as the Government and everyone around Ottawa has claimed for years they have, then they are entitled to it. Surely that is a principle of justice that every Canadian understands.

To put the matter in context for those who are not civil servants, if the Government of Canada had sold Canada Savings Bonds, as it did this year with interest at roughly 12.5 per cent and last year as it did with interest at roughly 19.5 per cent, and it felt that it needed to obtain some revenue with which to fight inflation, which is a peculiar concept in itself, it would now say to all Canada Savings Bond holders, notwithstanding the fact that the Government had a contract with them and it agreed to pay a rate of interest, it now deems it in the public interest, to break the contract unilaterally, through closure, in Parliament and to change the rate of interest. That is exactly as I understand what the Government of Canada is doing to its pensioners, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Precisely.

Mr. Bosley: That, I think, every Canadian would find immoral. That is precisely why Members on this side of the House find the Bill so odious. Equally, when what is being done is odious, it must be even more odious to do it through the most reprehensible parliamentary means available to the Government, that is, allocation of time in order to close off debate on such a matter.

I want to say just one other thing. As I sat in this House today, I was absolutely stunned to discover Members of the New Democratic Party, having moved a motion to adjourn, which is their legitimate parliamentary right, refuse to come in and vote on the matter.

Mr. Beatty: They boycotted their own vote.

Mr. Bosley: That in itself is an unbelievable procedure. As far as I know, Mr. Speaker, it is unprecedented. It may even have been out of order to vote on a motion when the mover and the seconder were not here. The defence being used by the NDP of that decision is itself odious. The argument is being made that it is somehow the same as the ringing of the bells on the energy omnibus bill.

Mr. Deans: This is much more important. This is not the protection of oil company profits.

Mr. Bosley: Members of the NDP have spent the day trying to tell others that they are defending the rights of Parliament. What I found with NDP Members on city council in Toronto is that any end justifies any means, including obviating their obligation to vote in the House of Commons. I find that offensive to the House. To try to link that with the defence of Mother Parliament, which was involved in preventing the House of Commons from dealing with the energy omnibus bill, an offence to the House, I find even more odious.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Bosley: I know, and I think Members of this House know, why many Canadians believed in the beginning that there might have been some logic to the original Bill, that is because many Canadians believed that some civil servants have an unfair pension arrangement. I do not know whether they do. I continue to hope that there will, at some time, be a full evaluation on an actuarial basis of the civil servants' plan so that Members of the House will be able to deal with that matter on its merits. On its merits, Mr. Speaker.

What is offensive in this proposal on which closure is being applied is that a principle of ancient justice is being violated. I am not a lawyer, but I had to come to learn the principle in my days on city council. Other Members, including the Hon. Member from Scarborough, will remember, in terms of the municipal plan, that you may not do indirectly what you cannot do directly. That is an ancient principle of justice in law. Some sectors of the public support that argument because they believe the civil service pension plan is unfair. But the Government is not doing it for that reason. The Government is bringing in a Bill which it hopes will be politically popular and, as a consequence, expedient. The Government is riding this Bill over the backs of the civil servants. One can only hope that the civil servants of this nation and the pensioners understand finally that they would be wise to take away from the Government the right to manage their pension funds and get them back under their own control so that they will never have to face this odious treatment again.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I am taking part in this debate in an attempt to clarify a few points which have been raised more or less haphazardly in the House today. First of all, I would like to point out that the question regarding Standing Order 82 which is being applied at this stage of the debate has no connection with closure nor with the provisions of Standing Order 37. For the information of my hon. colleagues, I would like to point out that when we refer to closure, notice, and time limit on speeches, these are points covered by Standing Order 37. The present debate is being held pursuant to Standing Order 82, which provides for a procedure to limit debate, and only that.

As far as limiting debate is concerned, during the past few days I have been following the debate in the House quite assiduously, and I was disappointed in not being able to speak to Amendment No. 4 which I myself proposed. It is supposed to come up for debate and will be debated eventually at least I hope so.

In any case, Mr. Speaker, I shall be fairly brief. I must say that by limiting debate, the Government may be perfectly right from a management point of view, since I suspect that after hearing fifty-three Members at the report stage and eight or nine Members today, the Government's patience may be wearing a bit thin. As far as I am concerned, I find it regrettable that it should be necessary to intervene in this way in a debate that I consider very important and which for many of us is also a very difficult one. As for me, I see it as my duty to vote against closure on this bill. I think there are report stage amendments that should be considered. I am thinking more specifically of the debate that should be held on the proposal by the Member for Nepean-Carleton (M. Baker). This motion was regrouped with the one put by the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray) and reads as follows, and I quote:

That Bill C-133, an Act to amend the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act (No. 2), be amended in Clause 2, by striking out at page 2 the year 1984 and the figure 275.69 opposite the year 1984.

I would have liked to hear what the Members of the Progressive Conservative Party and the New Democratic Party would have to say on the effects of this amendment. As far as I know, none of the members has spoken to the amendment proposed by the Member for Nepean-Carleton, which I imagine has the support of the Progressive Conservative Party. I would have liked to hear those comments because I must admit I am a little confused. Upon reading this amendment, I get the impression that it is somewhat of a fence-sitter, and I would have liked to hear some good arguments that would perhaps make me change my mind. Somehow, the motion favours living in sin for one year but not for two years, and I fail to see how the bill's concept can be said to be valid for one year, namely, 1983, but not for the two years provided for in the bill. Mr. Speaker, I realize that there was no time to debate this question and that limiting the debate will probably prevent us from getting an answer. However, perhaps the Member for Nepean-Carleton or other Members in his party will be able to answer these questions—what the amendment exactly means—and perhaps they will be able to give us further clarification in the course of the debate.

Mr. Speaker, the debate on indexation deals with the risks incurred by workers who expect to spend their retirement years in relative comfort. Of course, there are risks involved in indexation, and the major difficulty which remains unsolved is that society cannot agree on the sharing of these risks. Alternatively, Mr. Speaker, after an understanding is reached on risk sharing, there are sometimes in our society human considerations which make a program hard to implement. Inflation is eroding the revenue of people on fixed income, and we all agree on the need to protect our retired citizens against that thief, inflation. We should reconsider the options related to those much talked about actuarial deficits, look into the rate of contributions made by both the employer and the employees, and seek ways to change the current investment methods of the pension funds. Finally, Mr. Speaker, we should settle once and for all, as the previous speaker has said, the problem of financing and indexing the basic pensions by consolidating, if possible, the Public Service Superannuation Account and the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Account.

Before resuming my seat, Mr. Speaker, I should like to deal with the argument put forward by many Hon. Members to the effect that Bill C-124 was consequential to Bill C-133. I, for one, strongly reject this argument, for Bill C-133 have absolutely nothing in common with Bill C-124.

[English]

Actively employed public servants, through Bill C-124, which restricts increases to their salaries to 6 per cent and 5 per cent, were asked to accept a limitation of 6 per cent and 5 per cent on their 1983 and 1984 standard of living. Conversely, retired public servants are asked to take a cutback on their pensions which were established on the best six consecutive years of their working years. We all know that the average public servant retired some eight years ago and that he is 70 years old. Limiting indexation to 6.5 per cent and 5.5 per cent in the two coming years will result in a continuing permanent loss of pension income to retired public servants, because the future base on which their indexation will resume, should it happen, will be reduced. God knows that it does not say on the Bill it will happen. I have tried to present an amendment which will make it happen but it was not acceptable to the Chair and had to be withdrawn.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mine too.

Mr. Gauthier: The Hon. Member tried the same thing and it was also withdrawn. I would like to see some confirmation in the Bill that it will die on December 31 of 1984. I hope to get to amendment No. 4 which proposes to do that and nothing else, to make the Bill die on December 31, 1984, so that public servants will know that the program will end in 1984. There is nothing in the Bill that says it will.

As I have mentioned, limiting indexation at 6.5 per cent and 5.5 per cent in the two coming years will result in a continuing permanent loss of pension income. Conforming to the Government restraint program should not entail a permanent loss of income due to the erosion of the base. One method of maintaining that base would have been the method proposed by the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) and myself. Public Service pensioners who are on fixed incomes have told the public of Canada that it is unfair, and I believe it is.

When this program terminates, actively employed public servants will have the opportunity to negotiate and catch up on their salaries, while this is not so for those public servants who are 70 years old and have been living on pensions for the last eight years that are based on the standard of living during the best six years of their working lives. One of my relatives retired in 1969 after 33 years of public service to this country. He retired on a pension which was based on a 1969 standard of living. He is being asked to take a permanent cutback today which is based on his standard of living in 1966.

Public servants who are actively working for us can continue to negotiate for increases in their standard of living in the future. I regret to have taken so much time, Mr. Speaker. I thank you for listening.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I am not happy to be speaking this afternoon. I had hoped that the Conservatives would have shown some courage and joined with us to stop the Government from passing this legislation. I cannot believe that a political Party, vying for Government as it claims to be doing, would be in a position to put oil company profits ahead of the affairs of pensioners who already have inadequate incomes. I thought back to those bells ringing day after day on behalf of the profits of oil companies, those who make the donations to the Tory Party. They know who is fighting for them.

Mr. Taylor: We were fighting on behalf of the people who were losing their jobs.

Mr. Deans: It was 15 days of bell-ringing in support of oil company profits. We could not even get 15 minutes out of them in support of the pensioners of Canada. I say to you, Mr. Speaker, if that does not put this into perspective, nothing will.

Here we were with an opportunity to stop this Government dead in its tracks. Here we were with an opportunity to demand that this Government reconsider its legislative program which is normally called six and five. Here we were with a chance to demand that this Government take into account the most recent economic statements being offered by a variety of groups and individuals in the country, many of whom surprised me. We were in a position to demand from the Government that it not proceed with this legislation and that it take into account the views of Ian Sinclair, the views of the Bishops and the bank chairmen and presidents. We were in a position to stop this Government from proceeding with these Bills. Where were the Tories?

Mr. Taylor: In here voting.

Mr. Deans: They were lying at the feet of the Liberal Cabinet, as always. They were lying at their feet asking "Can we help you?" They are saying to the Liberals, "Can we come in quickly and help you get the legislation through?"

I say to anyone watching on television that it does not take a genius to see the hypocricy. For days they bled all over their desks. There they were, the champions of the oppressed, fighting to maintain decent income levels for senior citizens.

Mr. Kristiansen: Was that them?

Mr. Deans: The Tories. Time after time they were standing in their place in righteous indignation demanding the Government withdraw the legislation, demanding the Liberal backbenchers, poor souls that they are, join with them to defeat the legislation. Then we say to them, "Here is the way. We will stop this Government today. We will say to the Government, 'No, according to the rules, Parliament may not sit until the Government is prepared to consider the alternatives that are available to it' ". We say to the Conservatives, if they are sincere about their position and truly stand for the oppressed, let them join us. I say to Your Honour, I was outside the House. They literally ran into the House of Commons to vote with the Government—

• (1720)

Mr. Taylor: You were supposed to be here too.

Mr. Deans: —to get the vote over with so the Government could go ahead with Bill C-133 and get it passed.

Mr. Taylor: More baloney!

Mr. Deans: It is interesting that the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor), who is constantly chattering away, says that this is baloney. As an astute observer, Your Honour would recognize the fact that every single word that I have uttered is absolutely true.

Mr. Taylor: Absolutely wrong.

Mr. Deans: Every word.

Mr. Taylor: Wrong.

Mr. Deans: I see the Hon. Member for Bow River. This is the same Hon. Member who, together with his Leader, his House leader and all the other Tories, was so eager to pass Bill C-124: "By God, yes, we will squeeze these civil servants".

Mr. Taylor: But you would not take it.

Mr. Deans: The Conservatives said that it would not affect the pensioners.

Mr. Taylor: You would not take a cut in your salary.

Mr. Deans: We said to them at the time that it would affect Family Allowances. They did not care. They said, "Oh, no, get it passed passed right away".

Mr. Taylor: You wanted every dollar you could get. You would not take—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. The Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) has the floor. I suggest that we listen to him.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deans: I appreciate that intervention, Mr. Speaker. I need your protection from these people.

Mr. Taylor: You sure do. From the people.

Mr. Deans: These are not to be trusted.

Mr. Taylor: Oh yeah?

Mr. Deans: Your Honour remembers their dashing up and threatening the Speaker not so many months ago. I tremble in my shoes when they rise and castigate me. I will tell Your Honour the one thing I do not do, Mr. Speaker. I do not believe them.

Mr. Taylor: Where were you when property rights were discussed?

Mr. Deans: I do not believe them.

Mr. Taylor: Ask the people.

Mr. Deans: The Tories now ask where I was when property rights were discussed.

Mr. Taylor: That is right. You were right with the Liberals.

Mr. Deans: It is interesting, is it not? When oil profits are at stake, there are the Tories.

Mr. Taylor: The people's word, not the oil rights.

Mr. Deans: When people's property rights are at stake, there are the Tories.

Mr. Taylor: For the people that work.

Mr. Deans: But when people's incomes through pension and Family Allowances are at stake, where are the Tories?

Mr. Taylor: They are in here voting. Where were the NDP?

Mr. Deans: They are running in to help the Liberals get this legislation through the House of Commons.

Mr. Taylor: We were in here voting. Where were you?

Mr. Deans: I want to make some further remarks but I will not take a long time. It is not necessary.

Mr. Taylor: You have not said anything yet.

Mr. Deans: The case was made before. The Conservative Party is now a spent force. We understand that. When the public of Canada views its most recent action, they will see it plummet in the Gallup Poll.

Mr. Taylor: Oh?

Mr. Deans: We will see the Conservatives plummet in the Gallup Poll.

Mr. Taylor: You are not going up fast.

Mr. Deans: Their days are numbered, not by anything we have done, but because of their own actions, and quite justifiably so. One cannot always be on the side of big business and against the common man and expect to get support from the people to whom one is opposed.

Mr. Taylor: We are on the side of the people!

Mr. Deans: All I can say is that the Tories have historically, and continue to have, that mentality of absolute opposition to people who are impoverished, to people who are in need.

Mr. Taylor: We are on the side of the people!

Mr. Deans: That has been shown again today. Your Honour knows that had they stayed out until one minute past four o'clock—

An Hon. Member: Not 16 days.

Mr. Deans: —this would not have been voted on today.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Chicanery.

Mr. Deans: The vote would not have been held until Monday. The legislation could not have passed in time for the cheques to go out on Tuesday night.

Mr. Taylor: It could so.

Mr. Nielsen: It will not, anyway.

Mr. Deans: The senior citizens of this country who receive those benefits would have received full indexing this month. The Tories did not understand, as usual, that but for the sake of a minute or two, they could have stood up on behalf of the people whom they pretended for months they were supporting.

Mr. Taylor: We were in here voting, at least. Where were you?

Mr. Deans: We were not here. Does the Hon. Member know why we were not voting?

Mr. Taylor: Yes, I know.

Mr. Deans: Do you want to know the real reason? It is because we understood that if we came into the House, the motion would be moved, the vote would be taken, and the Bill would have proceeded, and we did not want that Bill to proceed because we are opposed to it.

Mr. Taylor: And you have accomplished nothing.

Mr. Deans: We believed we should do all in our power to hold the Bill up, unlike the Tories who dashed in and helped the Liberals. Now they are back together again. My suggestion to the Liberal House leader is: why does he not extend the bench, make room for them, put them over there beside him, for God's sake?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deans: They are no Opposition!

Mr. Gray: You first.

Mr. Deans: That is a pitiful group of hypocrites. They are no Opposition. Sit them on the other side where they belong.

Mr. Taylor: Look who is calling the kettle black.

Mr. Deans: They are constantly on the side of the Government. As I said to Your Honour, I appreciate the chance to set the record straight. I say to the Conservatives: repent, repent.

Mr. Taylor: You are crooked enough.

Mr. Deans: You have problems ahead.

Mr. Taylor: So have you, brother, so have you.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): The Hon. President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard), on a point of order.

Mr. Pinard: No, Mr. Speaker, I am rising to take part in the debate. But first, I do have a short point of order. I would like to designate tomorrow as an opposition day, provided we vote before the end of this day on the motion now being debated. It seems that will be the case, so I wish to confirm to my colleagues that tomorrow will be an opposition day.

Now, I would like to take part in the debate on the motion. I had not intended to until I heard—

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: Forgive me for interrupting. Would the Government House Leader simply extend this point of order so that we will not have to entertain the process after the vote tonight and tell us what the business of the House will be for next week?

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Pinard: With regard to the same point of order, Mr. Speaker, I want to confirm that, provided we vote tonight on this motion, it looks as though tomorrow will most likely be an Opposition day. On Monday we will be dealing with the report stage of Bill C-133.

Mr. Deans: Shame.

Mr. Pinard: On Tuesday we will be dealing with the third reading stage of Bill C-133. Wednesday has been reserved for Private Members' Business and Thursday next will most likely be another Opposition day. All of this is subject to change with reasonable notice to my colleagues, but that will most likely be the business from now until next Thursday.

I have received a request from my hon. colleague, and I think he wants me to address it, not to sit on Friday next for obvious reasons. His caucus must go to Winnipeg. Certainly, we on the Government side are willing to extend the usual courtesy of allowing a political Party to attend a democratic convention. Therefore, we are willing not to sit on Friday, January 28, and we will support any House order to that effect.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Is the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) rising on the same point of order?

Business of the House

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I understand that it will require unanimous consent not to sit on Friday next, and I would like to reserve decision overnight in order to discuss the problem which confronts us with my colleagues, concerning whether it is better to have the Tories here or away.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deans: I would be happy to seek advice on the matter and report to the House tomorrow.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I am sure that this intervention is not eating into the time of the Government House leader in the debate, but I can assure the Acting House leader for the New Democratic Party that the Government House leader is acting purely within tradition when he accedes to the request I have made of him. May I say to him that should his Party wish, at any time in the future, to proceed to a place outside of Ottawa for the same purposes we are proceeding to Winnipeg, we would be more than pleased to give that Party our consent to its absence for five days or whatever number of days its Members might wish to have.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deans: We, of course, are not likely to want to deprive the Hon. Member for Yukon of our presence here since the Conservatives seem to flounder so when we are not here. However, I do want to remind him that the last convention for the NDP was in Vancouver, and the House sat. We asked, I might point out, that it not sit, but it did. It was pointed out to us that it is not a tradition for the House to adjourn for political conventions. In fact I was curious about it when the Liberal convention was held in Ottawa, and they pointed out that the House sat. I can assure the Hon. Member for Yukon that in our normal generous way, and in our normal co-operative way, we will give grave consideration to this matter overnight. I can assure him that whatever decision we come to we will relay it to him as early as we possibly can.

• (1730)

Mr. Kilgour: On the same point of order, Mr. Speaker, I understood the Acting House leader for the New Democratic Party to say in effect that this House sat on the July 1 weekend two summers ago when his Party was having its biennial meeting. Did I understand him correctly, or did he just tell the House now that the House was sitting on one of the days his Party was meeting? It is my understanding that if it was a Friday that was involved, the House was not sitting on that day, and I think he would wish to clarify his statement to the House on that basis.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Is the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain rising on the same point of order?

Time Allocation

Mr. Deans: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I would not want the Hon. Member to be labouring under any misapprehension or under any misunderstanding. I was here, together with the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), during the time the New Democratic Party convention was under way, so I say to him that though he may have a good memory on this, he is lacking somewhat.

ALLOCATION OF TIME TO CONSIDER REPORT AND THIRD READING STAGES OF BILL C-133

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Gray:

That, in relation to Bill C-133, an act to amend the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act (No. 2), one sitting day shall be allotted to the consideration of each of the report stage and the third reading stage of the Bill; and

That 15 minutes before the expiry of the time provided for government business on those days, any proceedings before the House shall be interrupted, if required, for the purpose of this Order and, in turn, every question then necessary in order to dispose of the stage of the Bill then under consideration shall be put forthwith and successively, without further debate or amendment.

[Translation]

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): So, Mr. Speaker, I have a few comments to make on the motion now before the House. I was going to say just now that I had not intended to take part in the debate at this time, but after I heard the comments made by my colleague for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans), I could hardly refrain from rising in the House, because I found his remarks rather discouraging. In my opinion, they do not augur well for future developments in the work of the House. I also think some criticism is in order, if we believe that Parliament should be a place of debate and not a place where we only hear the ringing of bells. In my opinion, the Hon. Member's appeal to all parties to let the bells ring longer in order to waste a day's work of the House and force the Government to delay the effective date of a bill by one day, is an opposition tactic that fails to respect our free and democratic system that is the envy of so many countries throughout the world. I take a dim view of all this because once again, we are just starting an experiment in parliamentary reform, and to be successful, the experiment requires good faith and a minimum of co-operation.

The Hon. Member should realize that as a result of the economic problems facing this country and so many others throughout the world, we have fair-sized amount of legislation to deal with, and the Government's time in the House has become extremely precious. Moreover, with our new parliamentary reform, between now and the end of June the Government will have only three days a week to spend on consideration of legislation. I hope the Hon. Member realizes this, and I am sure the Member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) is also aware of the implications. Practically speaking, between now and the end of June, the Government will have only three days a week in the House, since Wednesdays are for private members' business, and we also have to give the Opposition an average of one day a week for supply, which means seven between now and March 26, and thirteen between March 26 and June 30, while there will also be an eleven-day Easter recess. There will therefore be on the average one opposition day a week and another day, Wednesday, for private members' business. For all practical purposes, only three days every week will be left to the Government to take care of its legislative program and to meet the pressing needs of the economy.

We are coming to the end of a session which has been extremely full, extremely important, and extremely long and during which many records have been set, but the end of one session implies the beginning of a new session soon after, and consequently a Speech from the Throne and a debate on the Address in reply. During the oral question period today, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) stated that a budget would probably be presented during the coming weeks or months. This means a budget speech and a budget debate, as well as other financial bills and budgetary measures in addition to those now before the House. It would therefore be child's play for the Opposition to hinder the Government, and Parliament, from carrying on its business. It is very simple, especially when the Government only has three days a week as a result of a parliamentary reform which we want to benefit the entire population, this institution and particularly every member of Parliament. However, what the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) is now doing in asking the Official Opposition to let the bells ring and waste one day opposing a bill is not the proper attitude to take under the circumstances or one which can serve as a valid test of this parliamentary reform. It is not very reassuring as to the possibility of making a full use of the parliamentary calendar and then adjourning for Easter and next summer because, in the eyes of the people, the Government will have no other choice but to sit in order to pass those measures which are absolutely essential in view of the datelines provided in our rules and in the budget measures to be announced in the near future. The Hon. Member must be aware of one fact, and I do not want to defend the Progressive Conservative Party, but while it did not play the game as the New Democratic Party wanted it today, it still did not support the bill for which we now want to limit the debate. As a matter of fact, the Progressive Conservatives came to the House and voted in favour of the adjournment motion introduced by the NDP. They therefore wanted the House to adjourn so that we could not proceed, but this was in accordance with the rules since they had to vote on a specific issue. They were free to vote one way or the other, but they came to the House to do so. If it had been their wish, they could also have made a separate agreement with me on the length of the debate under Standing Order 81, formerly Standing Order 75B. I indeed invited the House leader of the Progressive Conservative Party to agree on a limited debate at this stage since the NDP were not willing to come to such an agreement. If the Progressive Conservatives had been willing to do so, they could have agreed to this proposal. Now I am not certain they do not have second thoughts about it in view of what the NDP Members are trying to do to them.

Perhaps I am giving the impression that I defend the position of the Progressive Conservative Members because they showed up in strength for the vote on the motion to adjourn the House and because of their attitude with respect to Standing Order 81 when they refused to agree with us, but I am not always in agreement with their tactics. God knows that more often than not I do not see eye to eye with them, but I do believe that it is a step in the right direction and in keeping with democracy. Parliament is a place where Members speak out against a measure, where they debate, argue and discuss, not a place where they prevent other Members from speaking by keeping the bells ringing or by blocking passage of legislation by delaying tactics which prevent Members on both sides of the House from taking part in the debates. In our democratic system, in a free society such as ours, we have the right to disagree on certain measures, but the way to voice our opposition under our rules and our practices, and in keeping with our traditions and our culture is not to prevent others from speaking by calling for recorded votes. It is simply by expressing our views in the House, conducting debates in accordance with the rules and accepting the point of view of a government which does hold the majority.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. It being 5.40 p.m., the two hours provided for the debate on the motion now before the House pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 82 have now expired.

● (1740)

[English]

Accordingly, under the terms of the Standing Order, it is my duty to interrupt the proceedings and put every question necessary to dispose of the motion. The question is on the motion of Mr. Gray.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Call in the Members.

Madam Speaker: I declare the motion carried.

Motion (Mr. Gray) agreed to.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS—COMMITTEE RECOMMENDATION ON PENSION FUND INQUIRY. (B) PENSION FUND INVESTMENT

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Mr. Speaker, I am calling upon the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde), the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin), the Minister of Labour (Mr. Caccia) and the Chairman of the Standing Committee on Transport to get their heads together and reply to my question of November 29, 1982.

In June 1982, the Transport Committee passed a motion unanimously calling upon Parliament to provide the Committee with a reference to conduct a full inquiry into the CNR pension fund. I asked the Minister what was the current status of this report and when the House could expect to have it presented. All I received was an evasive and negative answer. I would strongly suggest that these three Ministers and the Chairman of the Transport Committee deal with this question and at the same time deal with the motion as passed by the Transport Committee on June 29, 1982. That motion as passed read:

> That this Committee seek in its report to the House on the annual report of the Canadian National Railways for 1980 and 1981, a reference enabling a thorough review of Canadian National pensions, together with the necessary authority to call witnesses, to engage secretarial staff and professional advisers, and to report back no later than December 31, 1982.

It is now time for the three Ministers and the Chairman of the Transport Committee to stop delaying, stalling and passing the buck. It is now long past the time for these tactics; they are no longer acceptable.

Following presentations by two associations represented by railway pensioners, the Transport Committee of the House of Commons voted unanimously to ask Parliament to allow it to hold a full-scale inquiry into the pension funds of Canadian National Railways. Mr. R. W. Worraker, Chairman of the National Council of CN Pensioners Associations, stated the following:

> They concoct the recipe, bake the cake, give it to us to eat and don't ask us what it tastes like.

Some type of annual increase or indexing is desperately required to ease the plight of railway pensioners who received their pensions prior to 1973. Some of these pensioners are now in their eighties. How much longer can anyone expect them to have to sit around and wait for a decent pension which will enable them to live out their lives above the poverty line? They get the ministerial and bureaucratic runaround from the former president and Chief Executive Officer of the Canadian National who is paid $150,000 a year and tells a group of pensioners in their seventies and eighties to find some resource to get a little bit of a pension increase. What a national disgrace this is under the Liberals.

I have in my possession statistics from the Retired Railway Employees Association of Canada which prove that some railway pensioners are receiving as little as $115 a month; $148 a month or even $166 a month. Once again, as I have previously pointed out in motions in the House, railway pensioners have had to put up with the measly increases of $77 over 19 years. This amounts to the grand total of $4 per year or 33 cents a month, resulting in a $265 a month pension rate. A 33 cent increase does not go far against the odds of record inflation rates, such as a 15.2 per cent increase in food costs. We are talking about rail workers who retired prior to 1973.

Even if there have to be changes to the Pension Benefits Standards Act, the three Ministers and the Chairman of the Transport Committee will have to take the necessary steps to make them before it is too late for these pre-1973 railway pensioners to enjoy an above-the-poverty-line style of life.

The Minister of Transport has stated in a letter to me:

> Railway pensions are acknowledged by many experts to be amongst the best in the corporate world.

What about the pensioners who went on pension prior to 1973 and have no indexing? Can you honestly say their pensions are among the best pensions in the corporate world?

The pensioners complained that CN continues to shirk its full share of pension funding by deferring its contributions and that pensioners do not have adequate representation on the pension fund's board of trustees. The National President of the CNR Employees' Pension Association said investment income and employee contributions alone exceeded the pensions paid by a total of more than $809 million between 1960 and 1981. With the inclusion of payments by CN, the excess rises to more than $2.5 billion.

Furthermore, of CN's total contributions to the fund between 1960 and 1981 of $1.71 billion, $1.52 billion or 88.9 per cent of the total went to pay interest on the unfunded liability carried on the books of the pension fund, which stood at $1.5 billion at the end of 1981. CN is paying that off with periodic payments of principal and interest, stretching until 2006 for the Canadian plans. The national president is calling those interest payment contributions "misleading and highly improper". The pensioners do not claim CN is doing anything illegal, just that they are getting a raw deal.

What really irks the pensioners is that because the fund builds at a low fixed rate of interest, CN is able to rake in the difference between that rate and what it can gain on the open market by deferring its contributions. When will the Government take the necessary steps to correct this disgraceful situation?

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member appeared to have two concerns when he raised his question in November. The first was to allow the Standing Committee on Transport to conduct an inquiry into CN pensions, and the second was to somehow restrict the CN pension fund from making certain investments he found undesirable. He highlighted these two concerns again this evening. Recognizing that his answer at the time was not complete, the Minister of Transport wrote to the Hon. Member shortly thereafter. I would be pleased to table that letter this evening, Mr. Speaker, although it only exists in one official language.

The letter responded to the Hon. Member's concern in what appears to me to be a very adequate way. The Minister pointed out that it was not only the Transport Committee that had an interest in the question of pensions, expecially since the tabling of the green paper on pension reform, and that any serious comparison of corporate pension plans proved that railway plans were relatively good. But in that spectrum, yes, there will be those receiving only $115 a month as the Hon. Member mentions. This is regrettable.

The Minister also suggested that the Hon. Member consult his colleagues on whether and how they wanted to deal with this matter in the Transport Committee. I do not know if he has done that. I was present when this topic was discussed at the steering committee, but I should not divulge in the House the discussions of that committee. If he consults with the Transport critic of his Party, I am sure he will find the reasons and the problems facing the Transport Committee in tackling this very difficult problem.

Finally, with respect to the CN Pension Fund investments, the Minister pointed out that CN's obligation toward its pensioners must be respected, regardless of the performance of individual investments. Therefore, the Hon. Member's fears are totally unfounded.

COMMUNICATIONS—PRODUCTION OF PORNOGRAPHIC SHOWS FOR PAY TV

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, the CRTC rules require that Pay TV services must run 30 per cent Canadian content during the first three years. The CRTC rules call for a significant involvement by Canadians in artistic control. The intent was obviously to ensure that Canadian writers, producers and actors have opportunities to work and gain recognition.

We now find that at least one company in Canada, with a New York producer, is producing shows written in the United States. Since these shows are of the kind euphemistically described as adult entertainment, otherwise known as soft core pornography, they have nothing to offer serious Canadian actors and actresses. The situation is that this company is investing millions of dollars in Canadian funds in an American production, produced for Playboy in the United States. Obviously, this must be a very welcome investment from the point of view of Playboy U.S. because it reduces their risks. However, funds for Canadian productions are very limited and the loss of capital for our artistic community is serious.

When Pay TV was accepted, it was hoped that it would improve the level, content and variety of Canadian programming. In fact, instead of upgrading, this is likely to downgrade what is available. In view of the very competitive situation between the new Pay TV stations, we can expect other companies to try to outdo the so-called Playboy channel. In fact, this is already happening. Last week, an actress in my constituency found that her agency had no work for her of the kind she would accept, but she could have worked on one of seven of these soft core pornographic films.

Pornographic films, by whatever name one calls them, are inexpensive and quick to produce. If these are to count as Canadian content then the companies are free to buy all their serious programming outside Canada. We will then find that work opportunities will effectively be closed to our own creative writers, producers and actors.

The Canadian content rule has not been revised by the CRTC for the last 12 years. In those 12 years the concept of Canadian content has been diluted by practice. There has been a tendency to allow companies to operate with less than what was required, if they promised to improve. I am in favour of negotiation and operating by agreement rather than heavy-handed regulation. It is clear, however, that this has not worked over 12 years and we are now in need of clear rules. The CRTC held issue hearings on Canadian content. It is time for them to act on those hearings.

I would close by saying that this is not a censorship issue; I am not in favour of censorship. We are not talking in this instance about a private citizen who buys a video cassette to view in his own home. The issue as far as I am concerned is the use or misuse of public airways for purposes that are directly in conflict with the expressed purpose of the Broadcasting Act; to strengthen, enrich and safeguard the cultural, political and socio-economic fabric of Canada. In my view the CRTC's duty is clear, and I hope it will exercise it and promptly produce rules of Canadian content, and also enforce those rules with Pay TV companies.

Mr. Jack Burghardt (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, in response to the very important concerns registered by the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson), I would like to say that the Minister of Communications (Mr. Fox) and, in fact, the Government as a whole are very much concerned about Canadian content rules and regulations, certainly as they apply to the entire broadcasting industry; in this case as they apply to the Canadian Pay TV system. The regulations on this subject should enable Canadians to watch an increasing number of quality Canadian TV programs.

It was the hope and desire of the Government, and certainly of the Minister, when it was first suggested that Pay TV be brought into the country, that the CRTC would look very closely at this very important area. If we can produce quality Canadian programming this will indeed help the entire Canadian production industry as it applies to TV, and also as it applies to films.

There has been a difficulty facing the Canadian program production industry in that it has not had sufficient financial wherewithal to develop a serious and viable industry in this country. It was definitely hoped that Canadian Pay TV would be able to contribute, through its financial resources, to this very important program production industry.

The Hon. Member for Trinity referred to the fact that the CRTC held hearings on Canadian content rules and regulations. It did, indeed, do this in December of 1981. I understand those rules and regulations and the updating of the regulations will soon be forthcoming. Given all that, we also have to look at the fact that our Canadian artists, including writers, producers, actors, actresses and all the technicians, have a great stake in this area. It is certainly the hope of the Government and of the Minister that the CRTC look at this question as it applies to the current controversy regarding Pay TV so that in fact the Canadian production industry will benefit. We do share the concerns of the Hon. Member for Trinity.

COMMUNICATIONS—PORNOGRAPHIC PROGRAMMING ADVERTISED BY FIRST CHOICE PAY TV. (B) PROVISIONS OF BROADCASTING ACT BE AMENDED

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I would like to support the comments of my hon. friend, the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson). My remarks are complementary to hers.

I would like to begin by reviewing a few of the events since this question was first raised. The Minister has since spoken with the CRTC and the CRTC has called in First Choice to explain its plans. In the meantime the Canadian Association of Broadcasters has reiterated its support of the Task Force on sex-role stereotyping on the positive portrayal of women in the media. I want to bring to the Minister's attention the recommendations of this Task Force.

Pay TV was not part of the Task Force at the time it was sitting but a recommendation in that report suggests that Pay TV should come under the same guidelines as other forms of broadcasting. It said that while there were no representatives on the Task Force, recognizing that if they are participants in the Canadian broadcasting system—referring to Pay TV—they would come under those same guidelines. They also apply to educational broadcasting. It was urged that they "recognize the public concern about sex role stereotyping; adopt the applicable programming recommendations set out in this report; exercise sensitivity to, and awareness of, the problem of sex-role stereotyping in the acquisition of programming material or rights" and "ensure that women are adequately represented both on and off air." The report is very clear on that point. It would be absolutely ludicrous if Pay TV did not come under the same guidelines. That is to say if we were to have positive images of women on certain channels and pornographic portrayals of them on other channels. There would be an absolutely ridiculous result. Certainly the work of the Task Force would have been wasted if that was the result.

• (1825)

The public members of that Task Force made some very specific recommendations about pornography. I quote:

> To clarify the meaning and intent of the CRTC's initiatives in eliminating abusive comments or pictorial representations of both sexes, the public members recommend: > that the CRTC and all licensees recognize the special problems of pornography and violence against women.
> Male dominance and female submissiveness are at the very heart of the stereotypes of men and women. Pornography is the extreme portrayal of dominance and the exploitation of women's sexuality. Pornography, or any portrayal of violence against women, is the ultimate expression of dominance/submissiveness, the objectification and the abuse of women. As such, pornography or the portrayal of violence against women has no place in the broadcast media. And as one mechanism for implementing this, the public members recommend the following specific initiatives—
> —that the CRTC amend its television regulations to include, among those subjects that may not be broadcast, abusive comments or abusive pictorial representations of either sex.

That was a very specific recommendation from the public members of the Task Force.

When the Minister says he has confidence in the CRTC and the chairman, I hope that confidence will be found to be warranted. Initially the CRTC was not very sensitive about women's issues. It certainly was improved.

The Minister can act on the more long-term problem the First Choice submission has raised. What is needed, and what I am proposing and trying to get all-party support for, is an amendment to the Broadcasting Act to add sex as one of the prohibited grounds of broadcasting. This would be in Section 61B of the Broadcasting Act. Let me point out what protection races and religions now receive, and I quote:

> No station or network operator shall broadcast any abusive comment or abusive pictorial representation on any race, religion or creed.

The amendment we need to pass would add, "or sex", so that women get the same protection that members of races, religions and creeds get in this country. It is absolutely ridiculous and unacceptable that we say it is all right to abuse women on our television screens, although we must be sensitive to issues of race and religion. Women deserve and need very much the same protection other people receive. This gets to the heart of the problem. I would suggest that the First Choice application is contrary to the Broadcasting Act on a number of grounds. It is not a good idea to proceed against them on the ground of obscenity because so many of these cases involve the explicitness of sex, and this is a tangential problem.

What is really objectionable is the portrayal of women in this way. If the programs focus on the abuse of women, that really will be what women object to, is really the heart of the problem.

I cannot stress too much the importance of stopping "First Choice". This is the thin edge of the wedge. We begin with a little bit of titillation, mere portrayal, mere exploit of portrayal and, if Pay T.V. is anything like the film industry, or anything like dirty magazines, they begin with something objectionable but fairly simple and move on to brutality. This is a very serious problem. If "First Choice" is not stopped, we are going to have pornography right across the country, and it will grow and get worse and worse.

I hope very much, Mr. Speaker, for support on this question, to put sex as one of the prohibited grounds, to make Parliament's intentions clear, to improve the climate in which this debate takes place. The women in Canada are very much counting on it.

Mr. Jack Burghardt (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, there has indeed been a great public outcry and concern registered in recent days regarding Pay TV in Canada. I want to reiterate what I said earlier, that the main intent, of course, in the use of Pay Television is to help the entire Canadian production industry as it relates to television and to broadcasting. Therefore, anything that is used by any of the licensees as far as Pay Television is concerned must be of a quality that will stand competition, not only with its immediate competitors but certainly with the public and private television industry as we know it in the country today, and on an international scale through the use of the satellite broadcasting system, which is here, and in many areas just around the corner. So we have to be very concerned about program content and the inherent quality of that content. The CRTC does have the authority to regulate program content. We cannot escape that fact. It was given to them by Parliament.

The Minister has already expressed his displeasure with what has taken place in recent days regarding the particular application of "First Choice". He has, as the Hon. Member for Broadview-Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) has stated, met with Dr. Meisel, the Chairman of the CRTC. Dr. Meisel, in turn, has had his officials meet, and perhaps they are meeting right at this moment, with officials of "First Choice" Pay TV. Following that meeting, we expect that the CRTC will have a public statement to make.

I think we must also not forget the responsibility of the licensee, of the shareholders, and of all connected with the various applications. The Canadian Association of Broadcasters, an association made up of independent radio and television broadcasters across the country, has its own code of ethics, and it polices its members. Perhaps a suggestion can be made right at the outset that the pay television industry do likewise; perhaps it should look at the quality of program which it intends to produce. In light of the public outcry and pressure which has come to bear this past week, it in fact should look at what it intends to produce and televise. There is no doubt that if it does not, Government will have to step in and ask that certain stronger regulations and measures to be taken. In the meantime, it is the hope that the industry itself, because of the public concern expressed thus far, will take a second look at what it intends to produce and televise.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S.O. 21

[English]

HUMAN RIGHTS

NECESSITY FOR COMMITMENT TO OBSERVANCE

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I wish to make a statement pursuant to Standing Order 21. Presently the Conference on Security and Co-Operation in Europe has recessed and will resume in Madrid in February this year. At this time it is perhaps important to re-examine Canada's commitment to the principles of the Helsinki Final Act.

When the Final Act was signed in Helsinki in 1975, the 39 participating states agreed to uphold the basic principles outlined in the Final Act, principles which addressed co-operation in economic, technological, scientific and humanitarian fields.

In view of the tense international situation and the gross violations of human rights practised by many of the signatories of the Final Act, it is important that the concluding document of the Conference contain a balance between all spheres of the Final Act. Scientific, technological and economic co-operation cannot be achieved without government observance of human rights. One precludes the other. The enshrinement in our Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, of human rights and rights to fundamental freedoms defines our commitment to this cause. Thus, when the concluding document is drafted, Canada should insist that human rights be one of the major foci of the document.

CALL FOR REMOVAL OF FARM FUEL TAX

Mr. Len Gustafson (Assiniboia): Madam Speaker, I rise on an urgent matter pertaining to agricultural production in Canada. Income from agricultural production has dropped significantly in the past year. Some farm experts have projected that 1983 agricultural income will drop 28 per cent to 32 per cent while the cost of production continues to rise at the same time.

The federal Government's tax on farm fuel, amounting to over 60 cents a gallon, in my opinion is a very heavy-handed tax on the part of the federal Government and is having a counterproductive effect on agricultural production. I would therefore call on the Government and the Cabinet to remove the federal tax on farm fuels immediately.

FIRST CHOICE PAY TV—TELEVISING OF PORNOGRAPHIC FILMS

Mr. Marcel Dionne (Chicoutimi): Madam Speaker, I am grateful to you for giving me the floor so that I may express my views on the screening of pornographic films on Pay TV.

First of all, I should like to commend the Minister of Communications (Mr. Fox) who has threatened to cancel First Choice's broadcasting permit if that company does not reconsider its decision to show pornographic films. I think of myself as being broadminded, yet I think that the company is insulting Canadians when it suggests that people are eager to watch pornographic TV. In my opinion also, CRTC Chairman John Meisel should have prohibited the telecasting of pornographic films by First Choice. I felt singled out when, in his latest report, the CRTC Chairman criticized Members who encourage groups or individuals who broadcast programs received via satellites. If Mr. Meisel can threaten to take legal action against people who do not comply with a given section of the legislation, can he not invoke the same legislation to ban pornographic TV? The CRTC has no qualms about discriminating against remote areas where TV and radio signals are extremely weak, and yet it shows every respect for pornographers. Women, the Canadian bishops, parents and Members of Parliament have come down openly against pornographic films on Pay TV and their opinion should be respected.

INCOME TAX

CONDEMNATION OF PROPOSAL TO ELIMINATE SPOUSAL DEDUCTION

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Madam Speaker, the Minister responsible for the Status of Women has questioned the contribution to society of a childless woman who stays at home. My constituents in Simcoe North have asked me to enlighten the Minister. These women contribute a great deal to society. As one of my constituents so aptly put it, these women give a great deal of time, energy and money to churches, hospitals, and charities. These volunteers respond to a diverse number of community and national needs. In 1979 it is estimated that some $3.5 billion in unpaid volunteer wages was contributed to Canada's economy.

In the Minister's request to have the spousal allowance dropped, she failed to take single parents into consideration. She has suggested a tax increase to single parents who claim the spousal allowance. Seventy-five per cent of the 1980 returns in which a spousal deduction was claimed came from taxpayers earning less than $25,000, which is under the average Canadian family income.

We on this side of the House urge the Minister responsible for the status of women to abandon her suggestion to change the tax system and unfairly discriminate against childless couples and single parents.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NICARAGUA—UNITED STATES ASSISTANCE TO DISSIDENTS

Mr. Bob Ogle (Saskatoon East): Madam Speaker, it is a well known fact that the United States is currently carrying out covert action against Nicaragua. For a well documented report I refer Hon. Members to the cover story in the November 8 issue of Newsweek, as well as to The New York Times of December 3, 1982. They detail the aid the United States is giving to supporters of the previous Somoza dictatorship of Nicaragua, based in Honduras, in their attempt to overthrow the legitimate Government of Nicaragua. The action is causing extreme hardships for many innocent people along the border of Honduras and Nicaragua. Farmers and villagers are being caught in the crossfire, and the land, the most fertile in Nicaragua, is being left unused. I can personally attest to these facts having toured the area recently.

• (1110)

United States support is also having more profound effects on the whole area in that it is destabilizing all of Central America. Not only is Nicaragua being threatened, but Honduras is needlessly being brought into the conflict. Who will be next?

In view of the fact that the United States is sending 1,600 troups to Honduras next month to compete in military exercises within 15 kilometres of the Nicaraguan border, and that the conclusions of the subcommittee on Latin America recommended that the maintenance of stability in the area be the No. 1 priority of the Government of Canada, once again I ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) to visit Washington and all countries of Central America, to meet with appropriate officials in the countries directly involved in the conflict and also in those countries which are trying to bring about a peaceful solution, in order to expedite an end to this precarious situation.

SHIPBUILDING

FRIGATE CONSTRUCTION PROGRAM—CONTRACTS URGED FOR DRYDOCK AT SAINT JOHN, N.B.

Mr. Maurice Harquail (Restigouche): Madam Speaker, my intervention relates to the economy of the Atlantic Provinces, and specifically to the shipbuilding industry. I would like very much to join and support my colleague from Saint John in inviting the responsible Ministers, specifically the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Lamontagne), on the subject of the proposed new frigate construction program, to give every consideration to directing that work to the drydock at Saint John, New Brunswick. We know of the efficiency and the excellent work that the employees of that drydock have been able to achieve over the years. In a recent meeting with Local 3, at their initiative this question was brought forward. I am very happy to have this opportunity today to invite all Hon. Members to support us in ensuring that, when this work is finally approved, contracts will be given to the drydock in Saint John, New Brunswick.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

DELAY IN PROCESSING OF CLAIMS

Mr. John A. MacDougall (Timiskaming): Madam Speaker, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) recently announced a new computerized labour force planning system which will chart industrial trends and match workers to jobs. I am pleased to see that the Minister is planning for the future, for a change, but I am also very concerned that little is being done to meet the immediate needs of the 1.5 million Canadians out of work today.

The computerized delivery system for unemployment insurance benefits is in sorry need of improvement. Unemployed Canadians are being forced to wait weeks and weeks for their benefits while their unemployment insurance claims are being processed. Many of these people are forced to go on welfare in order to survive through the interim period between their job loss and the receipt of their first UIC benefit cheque. I am told that when people receive welfare, while waiting for their benefits to be processed, their cards are pulled from the computer and processed by hand, creating yet a longer delay.

I am fully aware that the system was not designed to handle 1.5 million unemployed Canadians. I can fully understand why the Government could not foresee the problem developing, just as it was unable to foresee any of the effects of its disastrous economic policy. Foresight has never been an attribute of the Liberal Government. There is no reason why a person who has already suffered through the loss of his job should be forced to apply for welfare while waiting for his unemployment insurance benefits—

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

HUMAN RIGHTS

SUGGESTED MEASURE TO OFFSET WARTIME TREATMENT OF JAPANESE CANADIANS

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Madam Speaker, 21,000 Japanese Canadians were interned and dispossessed of their property during the Second World War because they were a threat. Well, they were not really a threat; they were Canadians, and their only crime was that they were of Japanese ancestry. This was an historical wrong and we should right it, or else it will linger on and fester, and will be similar in many ways to the Acadian problem—it will go on over the years.

I suggest two things. One is that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) should apologize on behalf of the Canadian people. He has done so in Japan, but he should do so in the House of Commons before he retires, if ever. Second, we should have a commission to listen to the evidence and hear the historical record so that history will not be changed. The commission should recommend whether there should be compensation individually or symbolically, and I point out there is an American precedent for this. I hope to bring in a private members' bill on this matter and seek support.

I understand the passions that were here in Canada at the time because my predecessor, Angus MacInnis, once said it was a tidal wave of public opinion. I understand that, but this is a matter of human dignity, it is a matter of historical wrong, and we have a chance this year to correct it. I urge the Prime Minister and the rest of the House of Commons to consider doing that. It will make us better as a people.

HISTORIC SITES

PROTECTION OF HERITAGE BUILDINGS

Mrs. Ursula Appolloni (York South-Weston): Madam Speaker, in an effort to preserve Canada's heritage and with a view to avoiding in the future such wanton acts of destruction as was recently perpetrated by Canadian Pacific with the demolition of the West Toronto station, I, and all Canadians to whom history has special significance, urge the Department of Transport to consult with the Canadian Transport Commission, the Heritage Evaluation Review Office, and all other appropriate bodies, in order to seek and to implement ways and means to ensure the protection of all Canadian heritage buildings.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

INCOME TAX

DELAY IN ISSUING REFUNDS

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Members of Parliament on all sides of the House have received letters from their respective Revenue Canada taxation offices informing them that taxpayers' refunds will be processed and mailed out much later this year than in previous years. My own letter, from Mr. R. W. Mercer, who is Director of Taxation in Charlottetown, states that this year the very first batch of refunds will not be issued until the middle of May.

By mid-May last year 6.5 million Canadians had already received their income tax refunds. Many had received them as early as March 26. Since hundreds of thousands of Canadians are desperately in need of those refunds this year, just to put bread on the table, how can the Government justify such callous, heartless and insensitive delays in getting these refunds to them?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, since this is a matter for the Department of National Revenue, perhaps I may be allowed to answer the Hon. Member's question. I did not see the letter the Hon. Member received, but I did read a letter sent by the regional directors to Hon. Members, indicating how we would be analysing tax returns this year and also asking Hon. Members to urge Canadian taxpayers to complete and return their tax returns as soon as possible so that they can be processed as soon as possible. The Hon. Member said that the letter contained information to the effect that no refunds could be sent before the middle of May. I did not see a specific date in the general letter sent by the district directors, but we are going to make every effort to send out refunds as soon as possible. However, I may point out that we will not be able to send the refunds until the legislation to amend the Income Tax Act has been passed by this House.

EFFECT OF SHUTDOWN IN COMPUTER SYSTEM

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of National Revenue or to the Minister of Finance. Since the Minister of National Revenue has stated that he has not seen the letter to which I have made reference, or one like it, such as has been sent to every single Member of Parliament, including himself, I wish he would only read his mail. Let me tell him this. My own letter from the Charlottetown Taxation District Office states clearly that the income tax refunds will be delayed this year because "Our computers are shut down for approximately two months to enable systems changes, reprogramming and testing . . . " The Government has had 14 months since the last major set of taxation changes in November of 1981. It has had seven months since those changes were modified in June of 1982.

Is this Government so incapable, so incompetent and inept that it cannot move quickly enough to change computers to implement its own legislation?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, perhaps the Hon. Member could first listen to the answers to his questions instead of losing his temper, and I would ask the Hon. Leader of the Official Opposition once more to stop grumbling and to listen as well.

I said in my answer to the Hon. Member's question that I read the letter and I also read the letter I myself received. The letter I received and read was a general letter that did not provide a specific date for sending out refunds to taxpayers. That is my first point. Second, I pointed out that we would not be able to send out refunds until the bill in question was passed by Parliament. That is exactly what I said, and the letter asked the Members of this House to urge Canadian taxpayers, as soon as they received their returns, to send them back as soon as possible so that we can prepare the computer programs and get everything ready. Would you please listen instead of getting ready for your next question? We have to prepare the data processing and the cheques, and as soon as the bill is passed by Parliament, send out tax refunds as soon as possible to taxpayers who are eligible for a refund.

Mr. Clark: Now that is arrogance!

REASON FOR DELAY

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of National Revenue. The Government has used the failure of the Parliament of Canada to pass Bill C-139 as an excuse for not sending out refunds. But in the absence of the passage of that Bill, it has had no hesitancy in taking money from the taxpayers.

Last year some 15 million Canadians filed income tax returns. In all, the Government had to pay out $5 billion in refunds while taxpayers ended up still owing the Government only about $2 billion after claims were processed. There is a difference historically of about $3 billion—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member is now in his third speech. I cannot allow that. He must ask his question.

Mr. McMillan: My quick question to the Minister is this: since in all likelihood the Government of Canada will be owing much more money to the taxpayers than the taxpayers will owe to the Government of Canada after all the income tax returns are processed, why do the Minister and the Government not come clean with Canadian taxpayers and admit that the reason they are delaying sending out income tax refunds to the Canadian people is not legislation like Bill C-139 but the fact that the Government of Canada wants to use the taxpayers' money for as long as possible on a free ride?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, I have a much higher opinion of the intelligence of the Canadian people than the Hon. Member, and I am sure that they will draw their own conclusions and show their disapproval of the entirely unacceptable statement the Hon. Member just made.

OBLIGATION TO PAY REFUNDS UNDER EXISTING LEGISLATION

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, I will address my question to the Minister of Finance. This Minister, as well as the Minister of State for Finance, has said on a number of occasions that the Government cannot pay out refunds until the income tax amendments, Bill C-139, are passed into law. Will the Minister give the legal basis for that statement? Will he admit that the law requires that the Department shall calculate a taxpayer's tax payable, and any refund owing, under the existing tax legislation? Is there not a legal obligation to pay the refunds due to taxpayers without delay under the existing tax legislation?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, there is one basic rule in Beauchesne's, namely, that we do not ask for legal opinions on the floor of the House. That has been a rule in this House for over 100 years. I am surprised he does not know that.

One thing is certain. As soon as the Income Tax Act amendments before this House are passed, we will make sure that the refunds are sent to the people of the country. This will mean very significant benefits to millions of Canadians. Over 5 million Canadians will be getting refunds. Hundreds or thousands of corporations will also get refunds owing to them. I urge the Opposition to use basic elementary common sense, support the adoption of the income tax amendments as soon as they come forward for consideration, and not do like the last time we tried to get the Bill before the House—hide behind the curtains and prevent the House from having a quorum. That is the kind of deal we have had from the Conservatives in this House.

• (1125)

Mr. Wilson: I think the Minister's answer speaks for itself. When that Bill comes before the House, we will debate it. We have seen it once. It was brought in 13 months after the budget of the former Minister of Finance.

GOVERNMENT POSITION ON PAYMENT OF REFUNDS

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, is the Minister saying that he is legally unable to pay the refunds, or is he saying that the Government is unable to pay because the computers have not been changed? Or is he saying that the Government is going to play some sleazy political game here, using the threat of refund delays to put pressure on the Opposition to give speedy passage to this Bill in order to save further embarrassment to the previous Minister of Finance, to get the law passed and avoid further embarrassment over the most widely discredited budget which this country has ever seen?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, if there is any sleaziness it has been and is still on that side of the House among the Conservative Party.

The income tax amendments and proposals in question have been before a parliamentary Committee for over a month over the course of the summer. They have had hearings on them. They have had a report on them. The Government has taken into account the recommendations of the Committee, has made amendments, and has come up with a Bill which represents the results of consultations with outside people over months, and consultations and participation of this Parliament.

The Opposition, as well as Members of Parliament on this side, have made a great contribution to the improvement of the Bill. The Bill has been introduced, and the first time the Leader of the House on this side asked that the Bill be debated, what we saw was the Conservatives running out of the House in order to prevent a quorum from being established, and in order to avoid debating this Bill.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lalonde: It is there for the record. They are arguing to bring this Bill back, and I hope the Conservatives will come to their senses and accept passage of this Bill soon—

Mr. Clark: Why are you breaking the law?

Mr. Lalonde: —so that the people of Canada will be able to receive the refunds to which they are entitled. That is the issue.

INDUSTRY AND LABOUR ADJUSTMENT PROGRAM

REQUEST FOR DESIGNATION OF KAMLOOPS, B.C.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister of Canada who will be well aware from his own statistics that the unemployment rate in the City of Kamloops has now reached the level of 27.4 per cent. It is the highest in Canada. The human tragedy and suffering which are going on in that community are something to behold. Emergency food banks have had to be set up, and emergency employment centres and crisis centres, to meet the devastation occurring in that community.

I have approached the Minister of Employment for some special consideration, for naught. I have approached the Minister of Finance; no response there. I have approached the Minister responsible for economic development; nothing there. I have approached the Minister of Energy; nothing there. The last Minister, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, sent me a note saying communities experiencing severe economic difficulties are monitored for ILAP designation on an ongoing basis. How bad must it get, Prime Minister? The unemployment rate is at 27.4 per cent, the highest in Canada. Communities have been designated with half that percentage of unemployment. Tell the people of Kamloops how bad it must get before your Government gives a designation under ILAP?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, during the month of December the Committee of Ministers responsible for ILAP had several meetings. We designated the communities of Port Alberni, B.C., and Sudbury, Ontario. At that particular time, with the information we had at our disposal on the situation, those two communities, particularly with respect to long-term structural problems, were in far greater need than the Hon. Member's community. There have been over 1,000 requests, Madam Speaker, with respect to communities seeking ILAP designation. Potential ILAP designation is an ongoing process by a Cabinet Committee of Ministers.

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER VISIT KAMLOOPS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Madam Speaker, I would like to remind the Minister, in response to his return, we are talking about a community with the highest unemployment figures in Canada for some weeks, and with a refinery which is slated to close down in the weeks ahead, which will even worsen the situation.

My question again is directed to the Prime Minister of Canada. The Prime Minister has shown concern for conditions in Japan, Thailand, Singapore, Malaysia and other Southeast Asian countries. He is sensitive about their concerns. He is concerned about how Canada can assist those countries develop. Would he be prepared to join with me this weekend, or as soon as possible, to come to Kamloops and talk to the people of this country to find out what their problems are, and ways and means whereby his Government can resolve their problems? Come and talk to the people of Canada, Mr. Prime Minister.

• (1130)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I am not sure the Hon. Member is stating the reality when he says that my concern was to create jobs in those countries. My concern is to create jobs in Canada by making exchanges and commercial transactions with the fastest growing area in the Pacific. That was why I went to those countries. Hopefully it will help British Columbia because many British Columbia businessmen were on these trips and they encouraged me to proceed.

ELECTION CAMPAIGN STATEMENT

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Madam Speaker, it is very difficult for me to remain calm when I hear responses as vague and convoluted as that.

When the Prime Minister toured Kamloops in 1980 he said to the people of Kamloops and the people of Canada that every Canadian citizen has a right to a job. Was the Prime Minister of Canada lying, or was he demonstrating today that he does not give a damn about the people of Canada? And should they be giving him the same salute he gave the people in Salmon Arm?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, of course they are free to act as they want; I hope it will be a little more rational than the Hon. Member.

Mr. Riis: How did you behave with them in Salmon Arm? You gave them this finger.

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, if the Hon. Member wants to ask a supplementary I will—

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Clark: Invite him outside, Pierre.

THE HANDICAPPED AND THE DISABLED

REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE IN FORMATION OF HANDICAPPED PEOPLE'S ORGANIZATIONS

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Since there are many communities throughout Canada which have disabled people, and there are people in those areas who would like to form voluntary organizations to assist these unfortunate people, is her Department providing any assistance, physical or financial, to assist in the formation of such organizations, since a check with some of the officials in her Department has produced negative results?

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, the answer is yes, we give direct and material assistance as well as financial contributions. Perhaps the answer in this particular case was negative if it happened to be the end of the year and our budget was exhausted. Perhaps the Hon. Member—

[English]

Perhaps the Hon. Member should give me the specifics of the dossier and I will look into it. It may well be that this year's budget is exhausted and we did not have enough money.

[Translation]

However, we shall do our best, and I would like to make it clear to all Hon. Members that we give what we can, which is never enough, but just the same, the help is there for organizations for the disabled.

[English]

ROLE OF PROVINCIAL GOVERNMENTS

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Madam Speaker, has the Minister given consideration to working out an arrangement with the provincial Governments whereby some financial assistance might be forthcoming from them at least to provide seed money for these voluntary organizations?

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): The Government of the Province of Saskatchewan is a Conservative government, if I remember correctly, the same party as the one to which the Hon. Member belongs. Perhaps he could speak to them directly. In fact, the Constitution clearly states that this is the direct responsibility of the provinces. We provide additional assistance. In fact, if we want to help experimental projects, we often have to do it in a roundabout way when we provide funds for direct delivery of services. As a result, it is really very difficult for me to do more than what the provinces should be doing under to the Constitution. If the Hon. Member could give me some specific cases, I would be happy to write directly to my counterpart in Saskatchewan.

STANDARDS COUNCIL OF CANADA

APPOINTMENT OF EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Madam Speaker, I was wondering if I should turn around and ask the Minister of Justice this question, but my question is actually directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

The Minister will know that the Standards Council of Canada made a nation-wide candidate search at considerable public expense for a new executive director. Last June the Council made a unanimous recommendation that Mr. John Dumbrille, a certified bilingual engineer with extensive background in standards, be appointed by Cabinet. Does the Minister also remember that just before Christmas, on December 23, the Cabinet passed a fast Order in Council naming instead Mr. John Woods, who just happens to be a former national director of the Liberal Party of Canada, as the Standards Council executive director?

I want to know from the Minister whether Mr. Woods was on the short list, or even on the original long list of applicants, and why no prior notice was given to this prestigious body which prides itself on being independent of political interference, and why its unanimous recommendation was overturned?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, I think the Hon. Member, who has been very active on the urea-formaldehyde issue, will understand that it is very important to have people with good contacts in the business world, people who understand why standards are important and how they should be written here in Canada to prevent any future occurrences of the kind experienced by some owners of homes insulated with UFFI. Consequently, Madam Speaker, the Standards Council will have an executive director who has my full confidence, who is very competent and will do a very good job, that I am sure of.

[English]

Mr. Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Madam Speaker, the question might well be asked: what does a Liberal know about standards?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

COUNCIL GUIDELINES

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): The fact remains, Madam Speaker, that members of the Standards Council are visibly upset, hurt, and embarrassed by the overturning of their unanimous decision last June to have Mr. Dumbrille as executive director, and a Liberal hack substituted without prior notification.

Given the fact that Section 14(1) of the Standards Council of Canada Act stipulates that the Governor in Council, on the recommendation of the Standards Council, may appoint its executive director, what guidelines should members of the Standards Council now follow in order to avoid the Minister's passion for patronage?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, I met with members of the executive of the Standards Council. We discussed the matter, and I think the Hon. Member's information is inaccurate.

FOREIGN INVESTMENT REVIEW AGENCY

INCREASE IN NUMBER OF APPLICATIONS APPROVED

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. On December 8, 1982, in response to questions by myself and the Leader of my Party regarding FIRA, he said, and I quote:

> We are not weakening FIRA. We are making it more efficient.

We now find there is growing evidence to the contrary. I checked the published figures of FIRA itself and I find the number of applications allowed under the new Minister in charge of FIRA are the highest in the nine-year history of the Agency. Under the present Minister over 95 per cent of applications are allowed; under the previous Minister it was about 87 per cent; under the Tories it was 92 per cent; Jack Horner, 93 per cent.

In light of that kind of evidence I wonder if the Prime Minister will admit that the intention of the Government is really to weaken FIRA, and can he explain to the country why he is doing this at a time of high unemployment in Canada?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the short answer is no. An explanation of that is that at this time the Hon. Member should not be complaining that there is more investment, from whatever source, in Canada, because that is the source of jobs in Canada.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Madam Speaker, we are talking here about takeovers. The number of applications before FIRA has gone up this year by some 6 per cent, yet the number of disallowances has gone down to an all-time historic low. The Prime Minister made a promise in the 1980 campaign to strengthen FIRA, and he put that in the Throne Speech in April, 1980, as well.

I ask the Prime Minister why is the Foreign Investment Review Agency under the present Minister now approving over 95 per cent of applications received? Why is it turning down only just over 4 per cent, which is an historic low for that Agency? Why that abrupt change in policy since Herb Gray was the Minister four months ago?

• (1140)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member will recall that the basic guideline of FIRA, in one sentence, is that investments be of significant benefit to Canada. I would think that almost everyone in the House would believe that investment would create jobs, would prevent Canadian firms from going under by creating work for the work force, and would be very welcome at this time. If the Minister is proceeding in that way at a time of high unemployment, I suggest that the Hon. Member should get together with the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap who was somewhat emotional about high unemployment. I think the Hon. Member should realize that high unemployment is a problem everywhere.

AIRPORTS

MIRABEL—SALE OF EXPROPRIATED LAND

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Public Works. Further to questions put to him earlier this week, may I ask the Minister if he has had an opportunity to have discussions with his legal advisers and, possibly, the Minister of Communications, in order to try to justify breaking the law by selling land at Mirabel.

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I wish the Hon. Member had used the spare time he has had since the last question, to check the law. I have written a letter to the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition based on the legal advice of the legal officers in my Department.

I will say to the Hon. Member that the properties in question were expropriated pursuant to the former Expropriation Act, in which there was no requirement to offer expropriated land to the former owners in the event of a resale by the Crown.

Mr. Clark: When was it changed?

Mr. LeBlanc: Perhaps if the Right Hon. Member stopped interrupting and listened, he might learn something.

Mr. Clark: Tell the whole truth.

Mr. LeBlanc: Section 24 of the Act was similar in nature to Section 19 of the present Act. It provided that where no compensation money had been paid and the land was abandoned by the Crown, it be vested in the person from whom it had been taken.

In the case of the six properties that we are talking about, the fact is that full compensation had been paid to the expropriated parties and the Crown has not abandoned the land.

I hope the Right Hon. Member bothers to read the excellent letter I will be sending him right away.

Mr. Fennell: Madam Speaker, the Minister is referring to a previous Act. There is one rule for Ontario and one rule for the Province of Quebec, and the people of Mirabel are being ill-treated.

REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Madam Speaker, I would point out to the Minister that I am talking about Section 19 of the present Act, not Section 18, or Section 24 of the previous Act. I would like the Minister to come clean and provide for a complete review and investigation of this matter. He will find out that he has broken the law in selling these 180 properties.

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I hope the Hon. Member will do what I have done, which is to examine this matter—the legal position should be examined—and then he could pose questions accordingly.

If I have broken the law, obviously I will not hesitate to take the position that I should. The legal advisers in my Department have very carefully drafted an answer for the Right Hon. Member, and this should be part of the record.

QUERY RESPECTING OFFER TO ORIGINAL OWNERS

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question. May I return to a question the Minister has not yet answered, at least in the House. Did the Government of Canada offer the first chance to purchase those six Mirabel lands, to the original owners?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, the decision has been made—

Mr. Nielsen: Answer yes or no.

Mr. LeBlanc: —that the houses and the land would be offered to those who had become the tenants. If the Hon. Member's position were followed logically, it would simply mean that we would go through all the pains of a second expropriation. If that is what he advocates, he had better say so publicly.

Mr. Clark: What I advocate, Madam Speaker, is that the Government of Canada follow the law. It has broken the law on tax refunds; it has broken the law on family allowances; it has broken the law on the Standards Council appointment, and it has broken the law with respect to the expropriation at Mirabel. This is a Jesse James Government that has no respect for the law of Canada.

TREATMENT OF ORIGINAL OWNERS AT MIRABEL AND PICKERING

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, the Minister knows that the expropriations at Pickering and Mirabel occurred under the old Act.

Mr. Fox: Not true.

Mr. Clark: The Minister also knows that the return of land at Pickering involved a first offer to the original owners. The return of land at Mirabel did not involve a first offer to the original owners.

Can the Minister tell us why there was a double standard? Why was one law followed in Pickering and a different interpretation of the law followed in Mirabel? Why is the Minister breaking the law in Mirabel?

[Translation]

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I get the impression that we are listening to a man who is frustrated because he did not get through law school. He keeps interrupting us with claims that we have broken the law. I must say I think that the opinions of the legal advisers of the Department of Justice and the advisers of my own Department of Public Works are more reliable in this respect than the questions put by the Right Hon. Member.

INCOME TAX

DELAY IN PAYMENT OF TAX REFUNDS—QUESTION OF LEGAL OPINION

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, on this question of respect for the law I wonder if the Minister of Finance would tell us whether he has received an opinion—

Mr. Trudeau: That is not a supplementary question.

Mr. Clark: It has to do with the Prime Minister's practice of consistently breaking the law. He does not answer questions in the House of Commons and he should not lecture those of us who do ask them.

Mr. Trudeau: Read the law. Try again.

Mr. Clark: Let me ask the Minister of Finance whether he has received an opinion from the Department of Justice which would permit the Government to delay tax refunds that are required by law. Does he have such an opinion from the Department of Justice?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I can only feel sorry that the Leader of the Opposition could never finish his law studies and did not get a law degree. He could have avoided a lot of questions in the House.

I do not have a written opinion but I have an excellent team of legal advisers from the Department of Justice in the Department of Finance. Like the Minister of National Revenue, the Minister of Finance acts upon the advice of the legal officers of the Crown who are responsible to and who are part of the Department of Justice. This is the way things are being done in the Parliament of Canada and by the Government of Canada. Whether one has a law degree or not, one follows the law that has been passed by Parliament. This is the way things are.

Mr. Clark: Madam Speaker, I would not want the Minister to take this personally, but a lot of crooks have law degrees.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: I see some lawyers on the other side raising their hands. Perhaps they should be identified.

THE ADMINISTRATION

REQUEST THAT LEGAL OPINIONS BE TABLED

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance, the Minister of Justice, or the Minister of the pork barrel for New Brunswick—whichever Minister wants to answer.

Will the Government place upon the Table of the House of Commons the legal advice on which the Minister of Finance is refusing to pay tax refunds which the law requires him to pay; lay upon the Table the legal opinion by which the Minister of National Health and Welfare is refusing to pay family allowance recipients the amount of money required by law, and lay upon the Table the legal opinion which justifies the Minister of Public Works in refusing to follow Section 19 of the Expropriation Act in relation to Mirabel lands? Instead of claiming that it has a legal opinion and then not having the courage to table that opinion, will the Government table those opinions in Parliament?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, things must be looking even worse than we thought for the Winnipeg weekend.

• (1150)

Mr. Lalonde: Hearing the comments of the Leader of the Opposition about lawyers, and so many of his colleagues, including the Opposition House Leader who is a good lawyer, being attacked with such a broad brush, I suspect that there really are serious problems for the Leader of the Opposition. Not only does the Leader of the Opposition not know the law but, unfortunately, he does not even appear to know the rules of this House. Again, I refer him to Beauchesne. In Beauchesne it is stated quite specifically that the Government cannot table legal opinions.

Mr. Clark: You have done it.

Mr. Lalonde: It is not a question of courage, it is a question of respect for the House, about which the Leader of the Opposition does not even seem to know about. I invite him to read Beauchesne between now and next weekend and maybe it will be helpful if he succeeds next weekend, when he comes back to the House.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Oral Questions

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

CHRYSLER CORPORATION COMMITMENTS

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, perhaps if the Tories had supported us yesterday, they would have got the legal opinion they are now seeking.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deans: For oil companies, anything; for senior citizens, nothing!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deans: I want to ask the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce a question, if I may. Since 1980 we have had a litany of broken promises from Chrysler with regard to commitments that it was prepared to make to the Canadian Government in return for loans and loan guarantees.

Mr. Clark: He will now ask his question and then leave the House.

Mr. Deans: We have seen the engine plants which were promised, disappear. The company has not yet proceeded with the front-wheel drive van plant, and there are serious questions about whether it will proceed. There are now serious considerations by Chrysler about moving the rear-wheel-drive vehicles to the United States. Is the Government prepared to tell the people of Canada what commitment we can get from Chrysler that it will keep, and how many jobs is this company prepared to guarantee for Canadians?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, first the Hon. Member should get his facts straight. There is no doubt whatever about Chrysler proceeding with their van wagon project, the T-115. That is on schedule. As a matter of fact that is one of the reasons why Chrysler has to find a new location for the rear-wheel-drive operation. Also, it was the intention since 1981 to close the rear-wheel-drive operation in the Chrysler plant in Windsor. Chrysler has since found that sales were better than anticipated and now the company is planning to continue the production of the rear-wheel-drive vehicles, and we are trying to encourage Chrysler to keep that operation here in Canada. With all due respect, I think the Hon. Member should get his facts straight before asking his question.

Mr. Fisher: Stop worrying about the Tories and start worrying about the facts.

BREAKING OF COMMITMENTS

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, it is interesting that I also met with the President of Chrysler, Mr. Lander, when he was the President and I heard the commitments. The Minister perhaps did not because he was not the Minister at the time. The commitments were to build a V-6 plant in Canada. It has not been built. The commitment was then to build a diesel plant. That has not been built.

Mr. Epp: Nobody is buying.

Mr. Deans: In the process the company has closed the spring plant, and in the process the company has not gone ahead with its commitment on schedule to build a front-wheel-drive van plant and the company is going to move the rear-wheel plant. How many jobs are we going to get in return for the commitments made by the Government? Is the Minister prepared to transfer the $50 million in loan guarantees which Chrysler is now asking to that particular operation? How do we know the company will live up to these commitments which it is now proceeding to make to us?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, I have no doubt about the sincerity of the Hon. Member in trying to protect the autoworkers' jobs.

Mr. Kempling: I do.

Mr. Lumley: We obviously share the same goal. But again I want to ensure that the Hon. Member knows exactly what he is talking about in terms of the facts. The company is going ahead with the T-115 operation, the van wagon plant project, as originally scheduled. Chrysler has not yet shut down the spring plant. All the company has done is announce that it is going to shut down the plant in July. The diesel engine project was, in essence, a change in the agreement for the K car operation, which the Hon. Member has not even mentioned. The company is considering Canada. Although there was no commitment by the company to continue the production of rear-wheel-drive operations in Canada, they are giving consideration to this project.

Mr. Deans: Do you believe the Chrysler spokesmen?

Mr. Lumley: Also, Chrysler has to close the rear-wheel-drive operation if it is going to go ahead with the van wagon. I know the Hon. Member's sincerity in terms of protecting these jobs, but I want to pose a question to him.

Mr. Nielsen: That's a neat switch.

Mr. Lumley: If, all of a sudden, we should decide not to continue or to go ahead with the Government guarantees, perhaps all 11,000 jobs at Chrysler Canada would be in jeopardy. Is that what the Hon. Member is suggesting we do?

INCOME TAX

LEVEL OF CHILD EXPENSE DEDUCTION

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. Could the Minister confirm that he agrees with his colleague, the Minister of State responsible for the status of women, that the $1,000 child care expense deduction is too low in that it does not reflect current costs of child care? Will the Minister confirm to the House that he will be giving this matter due consideration in the formulation of his next budget?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I have been receiving a number of representations on this subject and, as well, on other subjects during the course of the consultations I have had, and also in discussions I have had with my colleagues in caucus. Obviously, I am giving serious consideration to all the representations that are being made. Clearly, I will not be able to accede to all the representations that have been made; many are even contradictory. But this is one to which I will certainly give very serious consideration.

REQUEST FOR SEPARATE CONSIDERATION

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Madam Speaker, could the Minister confirm to the House and to the women of Canada that, when he is considering an increase in the child care expense deduction, he will do it separately and apart from any other tax matters, such as the spousal deduction?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, when preparing the budget, the Minister of Finance has to look at all aspects. We cannot separate a single issue from the rest of the budget. As far as the particular point raised by the Hon. Member is concerned, I may remind him that I have received no representations regarding the spousal deduction, and that I have no intention of addressing this issue in particular when the next budget is brought down. The matter is not under consideration at the present time.

PROVINCIAL AFFAIRS

MANITOBA PAYROLL TAX—EFFECT ON FEDERAL GOVERNMENT

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Madam Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Minister of Finance. It has to do with questions I have asked the Minister earlier regarding the Manitoba Government's employees' payroll tax, the 1.5 per cent tax which the NDP Government imposed on all employers before jobs could be created in Manitoba. Has a decision been made? I am not trying to ask for a legal opinion because I am finding out the Minister does not give them.

Mr. Nielsen: When he does, they are wrong.

Mr. Epp: Has the Government made a decision, on the basis of legal opinion, on whether or not a level of government such as a provincial government, in fact can tax another level of government, namely, the federal Government?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, it does not seem from the preliminary examination we have made that there would be anything illegal about a provincial government proceeding in that way. As I say, that is on the basis of a preliminary examination. However, a discussion did arise in my last meeting with provincial Ministers of Finance concerning the question that some provinces—Manitoba is one, and Quebec is another one—have been resorting to this kind of taxation which, in effect, ended up reducing the federal tax revenues. Obviously this was a matter of concern in that when the federal Government increases its taxes generally, especially income taxes, Provinces benefit; from this, when Provinces resort to this kind of taxation, they end up reducing federal Government revenues. Certainly this was likely to give rise to serious problems down the line between the federal Government and the Provinces if such a practice were to be continued or expanded. This is a matter that I hope the provincial Ministers of Finance will want to examine seriously in a spirit of continuing co-operation.

EFFECT ON FEDERAL SALARIES

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is also for the Minister of Finance. In view of the fact that the Manitoba Government is now facing deficits, estimated well in excess of half a billion dollars for this fiscal year, having tragic results not only in terms of credit rating but also in job-creation, has the federal Government decided to pay the Manitoba payroll tax on federal salaries earned in Manitoba?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, this matter has been raised, and I apologize to the Hon. Member for not being in a position to give him the answer today. I remember having examined this issue and having discussions about it, but I cannot remember exactly what the conclusion was at that time. If the Hon. Member wishes, I will be very happy to give him the answer on Monday. I would like to check my files with respect to what exactly the situation was.

TABLING OF REPORTS OF CLERK OF PETITIONS

Madam Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the Clerk of the House has laid upon the Table reports of the Clerk of Petitions stating that he has examined the petitions presented by Hon. Members on Thursday, January 20, 1983, and finds that they meet the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

AGREEMENT NOT TO SIT ON JANUARY 28 NEXT

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Yesterday the Government House Leader (Mr. Pinard) requested that we consider a request from the Conservative Party not to sit on Friday next. I promised that I would respond to that request this morning. In making my response, I am assuming that if a similar situation were to arise affecting any Party in the House, that same concession would be granted.

Assuming that, we are then quite prepared to give unanimous consent not to sit on Friday next.

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, the assumption outlined by the Acting House Leader for the NDP (Mr. Deans) is entirely correct.

[Translation]

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, we usually make decisions on such requests as the events in question arise. Therefore, we cannot make any commitment in this respect, if we are to observe parliamentary practice and our customary procedure. As far as this convention is concerned, we were the first to point out yesterday that we were willing to meet the request made by the Progressive Conservative Party. Consequently, if there is unanimous consent, the House will not be sitting next Friday. That does not mean to say that the same decision must apply to future conventions, but I can assure my Hon. colleague from the New Democratic Party that we are always very receptive, and that our decision will be made at the appropriate time, as soon as his request is received.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for the proposal that the House should not sit next Friday?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

TRADE AGREEMENTS WITH U.S.S.R.

Question No. 4,231—Mr. Fretz:

1. (a) On what date was the 1956 Trade Agreement between the U.S.S.R. and Canada extended and for how long (b) what areas of trade does the Agreement cover (c) does the Agreement permit the transfer of science and technology and, if so (i) in what fields or areas (ii) under what conditions or restrictions and is the transfer free of charge, barter or payments?

2. (a) What fields or areas does the Agreement on Economic, Industrial, Scientific and Technical Co-operation of 1976 cover (b) was the Agreement extended?

3. On what date does the Friendship Agreement of 1971 expire and are there discussions taking place to extend it?

4. Were projects financed by the Export Development Corporation or another Department or Development Agency to export U.S.S.R. goods or services to Canada and other countries and, if so (a) what were the projects (b) which other countries were involved?

5. Did the Government or any departmental officials engage in any discussions or exchanges with the U.S.S.R. on building a Lada automobile plant in Canada?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. (a) A protocol to renew the 1956 Trade Agreement between Canada and the U.S.S.R. was signed on January 21, 1982. The extension of the Agreement is for a period of five years (April 19, 1981 to April 18, 1986).

(b) The Agreement provides Canada with a basic juridical and commercial framework which is necessary to manage our trade relations with the U.S.S.R. The most important feature of the 1956 Agreement was the exchange of Most-Favorite Nation treatment.

(c) The 1956 Agreement does not contain any reference to transfers of science and technology.

2. (a) The 1976 Long-term Agreement to facilitate Economic, Industrial, Scientific and Technical co-operation seeks expansion and diversification of trade in goods and services and of scientific and industrial co-operation in fields of common interest; joint efforts in the implementation of projects and of industrial co-operation between Canadian firms and Soviet enterprises; joint efforts in the construction and supply of equipment and services for industrial facilities in third countries.

(b) The Agreement was done on July 14, 1976, and is valid for a period of ten years.

3. The Government of Canada does not have a Friendship Agreement with the U.S.S.R. On May 19, 1971 the Governments of Canada and the Soviet Union signed a Protocol on Consultations which provides a framework for the development of a dialogue with the U.S.S.R. on issues of mutual interest or international importance. The Protocol has no expiry date. The Protocol on Consultations is a very different intergovernmental mechanism with a different purpose than the largely symbolic Treaties of Friendship which the Soviet Government has negotiated for political reasons with ideologically like-minded developing countries. For example, unlike some standard Soviet Friendship Agreements with other countries, the Protocol on Consultations makes no reference to consultation on measures to ensure the security, independence and territorial integrity of the two signatory states.

4. No. The Corporation provides export credits financing to foreign borrowers to facilitate the sale of Canadian goods and services only.

5. No. While Canadian Government officials are aware of discussions having taken place between Lada Cars of Canada Inc. and the Soviets concerning assembly by the NIVA four wheel drive utility vehicles in Canada, Canadian government officials have not been part of these discussions.

CODE OF CONDUCT

Question No. 4,252—Mr. Crosby:

1. Does the Department of External Affairs have written rules or regulations governing the conduct or standards of behavior for employees of the Department and, if so, are they embodied in a Code of Conduct or other specific document and is the Code or document available to the public?

2. In the five years preceding April 1, 1982, were any employees of the Department disciplined by way of suspension, dismissal or otherwise for violations of any rules or regulations governing the conduct or standards of behaviour for departmental employees and, if so, in each case, what was the name of the employee and the date of the disciplinary action?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. The Department of External Affairs does have written Rules or Regulations governing the Code or standard of behaviour for employees of the Department. These are embodied in a Code of Conduct and the Code is available to the public.

2. On the basis of data available, the following sanctions were imposed in the five years preceding April 1, 1982.

	Written Reprimands	Suspensions	Discharges
1977	None	1	None
1978	3	None	None
1979	3	2	None
1980	13	5	None
1981	10	5	None

To be consistent with the provisions of the Canadian Human Rights Act we are not providing names.

ASSETS AND LIABILITIES OF PETRO-CANADA

Question No. 4,465—Mr. Malone:

1. What is the dollar value of the present assets of Petro-Canada?

2. What is the dollar value of the present liabilities of Petro-Canada?

3. What is the total (a) number of persons working (b) annual advertising budget for Petro-Canada?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Petro-Canada reports as follows:

1 and 2. The dollar value established in Petro-Canada's Annual Report is the only measure of the assets and liabilities of the Corporation.

PUBLIC SERVICE EMPLOYEE PENSION CONTRIBUTIONS

Question No. 4,481—Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton):

1. On what date are Public Service employee pension contributions for current service credited to the Canadian Forces Superannuation Account (CFSA), the Public Service Superannuation Account (PSSA), the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Superannuation Account (RCMPSA) and the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Account (SRBA)?

2. Do employee contributions to the CFSA, PSSA, RCMPSA and the SRBA earn interest between the dates they are deducted from employee pay cheques and the dates they are credited to these Accounts and, if not, for what reason?

3. On what date are the government's matching or corresponding pension contributions for current service credited to the CFSA, PSSA, RCMPSA and SRBA?

4. What additional amounts would have to be included in the 1982-83 Estimates and credited to the CFSA, PSSA, RCMPSA and SRBA if the government's contribution for current service in respect of 1982-83 service were credited to these Accounts at the same time as those of Public Service employees?

Mr. Peter Lang (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): 1. The pension contributions of public servants and members of the RCMP are credited to the PSSA, the RCMPSA and the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Account at the same time they are deducted from their pay. The pension contributions of members of the Armed Forces are credited to the CFSA and the SRBA in the month during which they are deducted.

2. Pursuant to regulations made under the authority of the relevant pension acts, interest is credited to the CFSA, PSSA and RCMPSA at the end of each quarter based on the account balance at the end of the previous quarter. Interest is credited to the SRBA at the end of each quarter based on the minimum monthly balance in the account in that quarter.

3. In accordance with the PSSA, the government matches employee contributions a year in arrears. For example, an amount matching the employee contributions for fiscal year 1981-82 was credited to the PSS Account in the first quarter of fiscal year 1982-83. The government credits an appropriate amount each quarter to the CFSA and RCMPSA, based on employee contributions made in the previous quarter. Employee contributions to the SRBA are matched by the government on a current basis.

4. PSSA—approximately $35 million.

CFSA—approximately $5.2 million.

RCMPSA—approximately $1.3 million.

SRBA—see Part 3 above.

LEGISLATION GOVERNING OPERATION OF SUPERANNUATION ACCOUNTS

Question No. 4,482—Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton):

1. Does the legislation governing the operation of the Canadian Forces Superannuation Account (CFSA), the Public Service Superannuation Account (PSSA) and the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Superannuation Account (RCMPSA) require the Government to make annual actuarial liability adjustments to these Accounts to meet the cost of the benefits payable from these Accounts as a result of salary revisions occurring in the year and, if so, is the Government required to underwrite the financing of these actuarial liability adjustments?

2. How were the annual actuarial liability adjustments, referred to in Part 1, determined before and after the laying before Parliament of the 1975 CFSA, the 1977 PSSA and the 1974 RCMPSA actuarial reports?

3. In the years since the 1975 CFSA, the 1977 PSSA and the 1974 RCMPSA actuarial reports have taken effect, by what amounts, for each Account and year, have the actuarial liability adjustments to these Accounts been reduced as a result of these actuarial reports?

Mr. Peter Lang (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): 1. Yes. The liability adjustments are amortized over five years in equal instalments. The cost of the amortization is met by the Government, but in meeting the cost the Government can use any interest earnings of the pension accounts over 6.5 per cent per annum.

2. Prior to the valuations as at December 31, 1975 for the CFSA, December 31 1977 for the PSSA and December 31, 1974 for the RCMPSA, the actuarial valuation assumptions used did not provide for general economic, as opposed to promotional, salary increases. Consequently, the actuarial liability adjustments to these accounts as a result of general economic salary increases were calculated with reference to the total of such increases granted each year. The actuarial liability adjustments were determined by multiplying the amounts of the general economic salary increases granted during each year by the appropriate actuarially determined factors.

The actuarial valuation assumptions used for the purposes of the actuarial reports for the CFSA as at December 31, 1975, the PSSA as at December 31, 1977, and the RCMPSA as at December 31, 1974, include a provision for general economic salary increases at the rate of 5.5 per cent per annum. Consequently, the actuarial liability adjustments that were calculated for the years subsequent to the laying before Parliament of the said actuarial reports were calculated with reference to general economic salary increases in excess of 5.5 per cent per annum. These excess salary increases were multiplied by the appropriate factors specified in the applicable actuarial reports to obtain the actuarial liability adjustments required on account of the general economic salary increases granted in each year.

3. Because the actuarial valuation assumptions upon which the 1975 CFSA, the 1977 PSSA and the 1974 RCMPSA actuarial reports are based include a provision for general economic salary increases at the rate of 5.2 per cent per annum, the actuarial liability adjustments on account of the general economic salary increases granted during the periods following the laying before Parliament of the most recent actuarial reports were calculated with reference to such increases in excess of 5.2 per cent per annum and were as shown in table 1.

Fiscal Year	Actuarial Adjustments on accounts of general economic salary increases calculated on the basis of the most recent actuarial reports
	CFSA	PSSA (millions)	RCMPSA
1978-79	N/A	N/A	0.9
1979-80	N/A	N/A	13.6
1980-81	252.4*	568.2	38.3
1981-82	453.6	951.4	51.3

* This amount, actually credited, was determined on the basis of assumptions used in previous reports because the most recent report was not laid before Parliament until October 29, 1980.

 This amount was calculated on the assumption that the credit would be made on June 30, 1981.

If the actuarial valuation assumptions had not included a provision for general economic salary increases of 5.2 per cent per annum the actuarial liability adjustments for those years would have been calculated with reference to total increases and would have been as shown in table 2.

Table 2

Fiscal Year	Actuarial Adjustments on account of general economic salary increases calculated on the assumption that there is no provision for such increases in the valuation bases
	CFSA	PSSA (millions)	RCMPSA
1978-79	N/A	N/A	24.9
1979-80	N/A	N/A	42.3
1980-81	252.4*	799.0	66.6
1981-82	702.9	1,435.8	92.4

Fiscal Year	Amounts by which the Actuarial Adjustments shown in Table 2 exceed those shown in Table 1
1978-79	N/A	N/A	24.0
1979-80	N/A	N/A	28.7
1981-82	249.3	484.4	41.1

It should be noted that the actuarial valuation assumptions upon which the 1975 CFSA, the 1977 PSSA and the 1974 RCMPSA actuarial reports are based provide for interest on the funds at the rate of 6.5 per cent per annum. The valuation reports that preceded the above mentioned reports provided for interest on the funds to be credited at the rate of 4 per cent per annum. Thus, while the actuarial liability adjustments based on the assumptions used in the most recent actuarial reports are smaller than the actuarial liability adjustments that would have been necessary had there been no change in the economic assumptions, the interest which must be credited to the accounts is higher.

ACTUARIAL REPORT ON CANADA PENSION PLAN

Question No. 4,483—Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton):

1. Does the December 31, 1977 actuarial report on the Canada Pension Plan (CPP) assume that CPP contributors will, through salary increases, promotions and other increases, experience an average long-term increase in their real earnings of 2 per cent per annum, that is two percentage points above the assumed rate of inflation?

2. Does the December 31, 1977 actuarial report on the Public Service Superannuation Account (PSSA) assume that PSSA contributors will, through salary revisions and promotions, experience an average long-term increase in their real salaries that is 75 per cent a year higher than that of Canadians contributing to the CPP and does the 1977 PSSA actuarial report assume that public servants through salary revisions and promotions will, on average, receive annual increases in their salaries of three and one-half percentage points above the implicitly assumed rate of inflation and, if not, what is the annual real rate of salary increases that the 1977 PSSA actuarial report assumes will be received by public servants though salary revisions and promotions?

3. What was the average annual percentage increase in real salaries that was received by PSSA contributors as a result of salary revisions and promotions for each of the past ten fiscal years?

4. Were representatives of PSSA contributors and pensioners consulted on the decision taken with respect to the 1977 PSSA actuarial report to base the future financing of the PSSA on the assumption that public servants in future would receive substantially higher increases in their real salaries than Canadians in general who contribute to the CPP and, if not, for what reason?

5. Does financing the PSSA on the assumption that PSSA contributors will, over the long term, receive substantially larger increases in their real salaries than CPP contributors, together with the other assumptions and experiences described in the 1977 PSSA actuarial report, create a deficit of $61.5 million in the valuation balance sheet of the PSSA as at December 31, 1977?

6. (a) What amount did the Minister of Finance determine should be credited to the PSSA pursuant to Section 34(3) of the Public Service Superannuation Act following the laying before Parliament of the December 31, 1977 actuarial report on the PSSA (b) was the amount $61.5 million and, if not, how was it determined?

7. What would be the size of the actuarial surplus of the PSSA as at December 31, 1977 if the 1977 report had assumed that public servants through salary revisions and promotions would receive the same real salary increases as Canadians contributing to the CPP, which was 2 per cent per annum, and if the 1977 report remained unchanged in all other respects?

Mr. Peter Lang (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): 1. No. Earnings increases in excess of the rate of inflation might be considered to be attributable to two sources: (a) general economic increases due to increased productivity, general labour market conditions or other factors which affect all persons more or less equally; and (b) career-specific increases which depend much more heavily on individual circumstances.

In the main estimates of Canada Pension Plan Statutory Actuarial Report No. 6 as at December 31, 1977, it was assumed that economic increases in earnings would be 2 per cent per annum for 1983 and subsequent years.

It was also assumed, implicitly but not explicitly, that there would be substantial promotional increases at the young ages, diminishing and becoming negative at the older ages, but cumulatively positive over the lifetime of an individual. The increases were based on the earnings statistics of CPP contributors in 1975 which exhibited the following average earnings:

Age Group	Males	Females
18-19	3,580	2,547
20-24	6,626	4,752
25-29	10,119	5,938
30-34	12,576	5,846
35-39	13,751	5,921
40-44	14,310	6,074
45-49	14,323	6,190
50-54	13,782	6,202
55-59	12,758	6,154
65-69	7,068	4,107

In addition to the above economic and promotional increases, it was also assumed that the gap between male and female average earnings would narrow by 1 per cent each year, which implies, of course, that male earnings increases in excess of the rate of inflation were assumed to be somewhat less, and female earnings increases somewhat more, than those that would follow from the above described economic and promotional increases.

2. No, it was not assumed in the 1977 Actuarial Report on the PSSA that PSSA contributors would experience real salary increases 75 per cent higher than Canadians contributing to the CPP. The 1977 PSSA Actuarial Report does not assume real salary increases of three and one-half percentage points above the implicitly assumed rate of inflation. Real economic salary increases of 2.5 per cent were assumed. However, when these increases are combined with assumed promotional salary increases, it is impossible to calculate a single meaningful average figure, since the average compound rate depends on the range of ages being considered as indicated by the following examples:

Average Compound Annual Real Salary Increases Assumed in 1977 PSSA Actuarial Report

Age Range	Male	Female
50-65	2.75	2.80
30-65	3.29	3.72
45-60	2.87	3.07

The promotional salary scales used for purposes of the PSSA are based on the pattern of PSSA contributors; they are not as high as those used for CPP contributors at the young ages but higher at the older ages. The two scales are simply not comparable. For example, the earnings pattern of CPP contributors reflects the abnormally high "promotional" increases obtained by employees who move from one employer to another precisely for the purpose of increasing their earnings; on the other hand, they reflect the earnings of older employees whose earnings may substantially decrease but some of whom may have retired on pension from one job while continuing full or part-time work with another employer to augment their income. The substantial decreases in average earnings exhibited by the relatively older CPP contributors would not be representative of PSSA contributors nor of members of many other employer pension plans.

The assumption that the general level of salaries of PSSA contributors would increase at 2½ per cent net of inflation (actually 2.427 per cent) was based on the statistical data for Canadian wages and salaries which showed a rate of 2.35 per cent for the 50 years ending in 1978 and 2.29 per cent for the ten years ending in 1978. While the rate has been declining it appeared desirable to retain a margin of conservatism in the assumption, particularly since the assumed rate of real interest of 3.5 per cent (actually 3.398 per cent, which was chosen as representative of implicit assumed real interest rates used in the private sector and of the returns expected of balanced portfolios, might be subject to the criticism of tending to understate costs.

If the assumed real interest rate and real general salary increase rate used for purposes of the 1977 CPP Actuarial Report were substituted for those used for purposes of the 1977 PSSA Report, all the results relating to basic PSSA benefits would remain unchanged. However, the normal actuarial cost (current service contribution rate) for total benefits (including Supplementary Retirement Benefits), would have increased from 15.9 to 16.8 per cent and total estimated combined actuarial liabilities would have increased by about $580 million.

It might be added that the economic assumptions used for the 1977 PSSA Actuarial Report were the same as those used for the three CPP Actuarial Reports immediately preceding the Report as at December 31, 1977 (No. 6). For purposes of the CPP Actuarial Report No. 6 the assumed real rate of increase in earnings levels was decreased from 2½ per cent to 2 per cent and the assumed real interest rate was reduced from 3½ per cent to 3 per cent. The decrease in the assumed rate of increase in real earnings meant that the estimated CPP contribution rates (i.e. pay-as-you-go costs) would be determined on a slightly more conservative basis. For a "funded" plan such as the PSSA, such a reduction in the assumed real rate of increase in earnings levels would have had the opposite effect. The concomitant change in the assumed real interest rate for the CPP Report was of relatively little importance but would be significant in the determination of costs for a "funded" plan such as the PSSA.

3. Approximate increase in real salaries received by PSSA contributors as a result of salary revisions in the last ten calendar years.

	Per cent
1972	1.0
1973	0.3
1975	3.3

Note: Salary increase information is maintained on a calendar rather than a fiscal year basis.

Information regarding salary increases due to promotions each year is not available. Promotional salary increase assumptions used in the actuarial reports are determined by making comparisons of salary movements for various age groups between valuations.

4. As outlined in the response to Parts 1 and 2, the premise of the question is not correct.

5. The 1977 PSSA deficit estimated at $61.5 million is the result of all the assumptions entering into the actuarial calculations. As noted in the reply to Parts 1 and 2 above, the salary increases assumed for purposes of the CPP would not be appropriate for use in connection with PSSA estimates, because of the different promotional patterns.

6. (a) The actuarial report on the Public Service Superannuation Account as at December 31, 1977, was tabled on October 29, 1980. Since it was estimated that as at that time the Public Service Superannuation Account was in a surplus position, principally as a result of the fact that until the tabling of the report the actuarial liability adjustments on account of general economic salary increases were being determined with reference to the totality of increases in excess of 5½ per cent, the Minister determined that no amount needed to be credited to the account pursuant to Section 34(3).

(b) As described in (a) above, the deficit referred to in the actuarial report on the Public Service Superannuation Account as at December 31, 1977 was estimated to no longer exist when the report was tabled. Consequently, no credit was made to the account with respect to the deficit that existed on December 31, 1977.

The financial position of the Public Service Superannuation Account as at September 30, 1980 was determined by projecting the results of the December 31, 1977 valuation to September 30, 1980 together with the actual income and outgo of the fund. On the basis of this calculation, the fund was estimated to be in a slight surplus position on September 30, 1980.

7. The premise of the question that the real salary increases assumed for purposes of the 1977 CPP Report were 2 per cent per annum is incorrect as noted in the reply to Part 1. Implicit career-specific salary increases assumed for purposes of the CPP Report are not readily available and in any event would be quite inappropriate for use in connection with PSSA estimates.

RCMP SUPERANNUATION ACCOUNT

Question No. 4,484—Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton):

1. Did the actuarial reports on the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Superannuation Account (RCMPSA) prior to December 31, 1974 examine the RCMPSA using economic assumptions that reflected a zero inflation scenario?

2. Did the actuarial report on the RCMPSA as at December 31, 1974 examine the RCMPSA using economic assumptions that reflected a 3 per cent annual inflation scenario and, if so, what windfall gains were realized by the RCMPSA with respect to (a) the amount required to finance RCMPSA benefits earned to December 31, 1974 (b) the employer contribution rate required to finance all RCMPSA benefits in respect of current service after December 31, 1974 solely because the 1974 RCMPSA valuation was carried out in a 3 per cent annual inflation scenario?

3. To what extent would the windfall gains realized by the RCMPSA through the move to a 3 per cent annual inflation scenario in the 1974 RCMPSA actuarial report have been reduced if the calculation of RCMPSA benefits after December 31, 1974 were made on the basis of a RCMPSA contributor's (a) best consecutive (i) five (ii) four (iii) three (iv) two (b) best single year annual salary?

4. What windfall gains would have been realized by the RCMPSA with respect to the amount required to finance RCMPSA benefits earned to December 31, 1974 and the employer contribution rate required to finance RCMPSA benefits on account of current service after December 31, 1974 if the 1974 RCMPSA actuarial report had moved to economic assumptions reflecting annual inflation scenarios of 6 per cent and 9 per cent respectively and if the calculation of RCMPSA benefits after December 31, 1974 were made on the basis of a RCMPSA contributor's (a) best consecutive (i) six (ii) five (iii) four (iv) three (v) two (b) best single year annual salary?

5. Does the December 31, 1974 actuarial report on the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Superannuation Account (RCMPSA) assume that RCMPSA contributors will, through salary revisions and promotions, experience an average long-term increase in their real salaries of more than 2 per cent per annum, that is more than two percentage points above the implicitly assumed rate of annual inflation and, if so, what is the annual real rate of salary increases that the 1974 RCMPSA actuarial report assumes will be received by RCMP personnel through salary revisions and promotions?

6. What was the average annual percentage increase in real salaries that was received by RCMPSA contributors as a result of salary revisions and promotions for each of the past ten fiscal years?

Order Paper Questions

7. If the 1974 RCMPSA actuarial report assumes that RCMP personnel will, through salary revisions and promotions, receive real salary increases of more than the annual 2 per cent real earnings increase assumed for Canadians contributing to the Canada Pension Plan (CPP) in the 1977 actuarial report, have representatives of RCMPSA contributors and pensioners been consulted on continuing the future financing of the RCMPSA on the assumption that RCMP personnel in future will receive larger annual increases in their real salaries than Canadians in general who contribute to the CPP and, if not, for what reason?

8. What would be the size of the actuarial surplus of the RCMPSA as at December 31, 1974 if the 1974 RCMPSA actuarial report had assumed that RCMP personnel through salary revisions and promotions would receive the same real salary increases as Canadians contributing to the CPP, which was 2 per cent per annum, and if the 1974 report remained unchanged in all other respects?

Mr. Peter Lang (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): 1. Yes.

2. The actuarial report on the RCMPSA as at December 31, 1974 used economic assumptions of 6.5 per cent annual interest and 5.5 per cent annual salary increases. While no explicit assumption was made with regard to inflation, an implicit assumption of 3 per cent annual inflation was included in the two economic assumptions used.

Previous reports were based on assumptions of 4 per cent interest rates, zero per cent for salary increases and no inflation assumption. In the most recent report (as at December 31, 1974), the real interest rate could be said to have changed from 4 per cent to 3.5 per cent and salary increases related to productivity were assumed to be 2.5per cent.

The effects of using an implicit inflation assumption of 3per cent, and therefore raising the interest and salary increase rate assumptions from 3.5 per cent and 2.5 per cent to 6.5 per cent and 5.5 per cent respectively were as follows: (a) with respect to benefits earned to December 31, 1974 a decrease in liabilities of $209.3 million; (b) with respect to the employer current service cost for service after December 31, 1974 a decrease of 8.6 per cent of contributory payroll from 19.8 per cent to 11.2per cent.

3. The effect on the amounts shown in question 2 of lowering the number of years over which RCMP salaries are averaged for benefit calculation purposes would be as follows:

	Salary Averaging Period
	5 years	4 years	3 years	2 years	1 year
			(000,000's)
Reduction of the $209 million decrease in liabilities shown in question 2	12	25	38	52	66
			(per cent)
Reduction of current service cost difference of 8.6 per cent of contributory payroll, as a per cent of contributory payroll	0.55	1.12	1.7	2.3	2.93

Order Paper Questions

4. The effect of using implicit annual inflation assumptions of 6 per cent and 9 per cent instead of zero per cent, along with reduced salary averaging periods, would have been as follow:

Table 2

6 per cent Inflation Scenario	6 years	5 years	Salary Averaging Period 4 years	3 years	2 years	1 year
			(000,000's)
Decrease in liabilities in respect of service prior to December 31, 1974	326	314	301	287	273	258
			(per cent)
Decrease in current service cost for service after December 31, 1974, as a per cent of contributory payroll	13.33	12.78	12.21	11.61	10.98	10.33
9 per cent Inflation Scenario	6 years	5 years	Salary Averaging Period 4 years	3 years	2 years	1 year
			(000,000's)
Decrease in liabilities in respect of service prior to December 31, 1974	397	385	373	359	345	330
Decrease in current service cost for service after December 31, 1974, as a per cent of contributory payroll	16.22	15.69	15.13	14.54	13.91	13.26

5. The 1974 RCMPSA Report assumes that RCMPSA contributors will, through salary revisions and promotions, experience an average long-term increase in their real salaries of more than 2 per cent per annum, i.e., more than two percentage points above the implicitly assumed rate of annual inflation. It is impossible to calculate a single meaningful average figure since the average compound rate depends on the range of ages being considered as indicated in the following examples.

Average Compound Annual Real Salary Increase Assumed in the 1974 RCMPSA Actuarial Report

Age Range	Male and Female
45-60	3.88

Note: Salary increase information is maintained on a calendar rather than a fiscal year basis.

Information regarding salary increases due to promotions each year is not available. Promotional salary increase assumptions used in the actuarial reports are determined by making comparisons of salary movements for various age groups between valuations.

CANADIAN ARMED FORCES SUPERANNUATION ACCOUNT

Question No. 4,485—Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton):

1. Did the actuarial reports on the Canadian Forces Superannuation Account (CFSA) prior to December 31, 1975 examine the CFSA using economic assumptions that reflected a zero inflation scenario?

2. Did the actuarial report on the CFSA as at December 31, 1975 examine the CFSA using economic assumptions that reflected a 3 per cent annual inflation scenario and, if so, what windfall gains were realized by the CFSA with respect to (a) the amount required to finance CFSA benefits earned to December 31, 1975 (b) the employer contribution rate required to finance all CFSA benefits in respect of current service after December 31, 1975 solely because the 1975 CFSA valuation was carried out in a 3 per cent annual inflation scenario?

3. To what extent would the windfall gains realized by the CFSA through the move to a 3 per cent annual inflation scenario in the 1975 actuarial report have been reduced if the calculation of CFSA benefits after December 31, 1975 were made on the basis of a CFSA contributor's (a) best consecutive (i) five (ii) four (iii) three (iv) two (b) best single year annual salary?

4. What windfall gains would have been realized by the CFSA with respect to the amount required to finance CFSA benefits earned to December 31, 1975 and the employer contribution rate required to finance CFSA benefits on account of current service after December 31, 1975 if the 1975 CFSA actuarial report had moved to economic assumptions reflecting annual inflation scenarios of 6 per cent and 9 per cent respectively and if the calculations of CFSA benefits after December 31, 1975 were made on the basis of a CFSA contributor's (a) best consecutive (i) six (ii) five (iii) four (iv) three (v) two (b) best single year annual salary?

5. Does the December 31, 1975 actuarial report on the Canadian Forces Superannuation Account (CFSA) assume that CFSA contributors will, through salary revisions and promotions, experience an average long-term increase in their real salaries of more than 2 per cent per annum, that is more than two percentage points above the implicitly assumed rate of annual inflation and, if so, what is the annual real rate of salary increases that the 1975 CFSA actuarial report assumes will be received by military personnel through salary revisions and promotions?

6. What was the average annual percentage increase in real salaries that was received by CFSA contributors as a result of salary revisions and promotions for each of the past ten fiscal years?

7. If the 1975 CFSA actuarial report assumes that military personnel will, though salary revisions and promotions, receive real salary increases of more than the annual 2 per cent real earnings increase assumed for Canadians contributing to the Canada Pension Plan (CPP) in the 1977 CPP actuarial report, have representatives of CFSA contributors and pensioners been consulted on continuing the future financing of the CFSA on the assumption that military personnel in future will receive larger increases in their real salaries than Canadians in general who contribute to the CPP and, if not, for what reason?

8. What would be the size of the actuarial surplus of the CFSA as at December 31, 1975 if the 1975 CFSA actuarial report had assumed that military personnel, through salary revisions and promotions, would receive the same real salary increases as Canadians contributing to the CPP, which was 2 per cent per annum, and if the 1975 report remained unchanged in all other respects?

Mr. Peter Lang (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): 1. Yes.

2. The actuarial report on the CFSA as at December 31, 1975 used economic assumptions of 6.5 per cent annual interest and 5.5 per cent annual salary increases. While no explicit assumption was made with regard to inflation, an implicit assumption of 3 per cent annual inflation was included in the two economic assumptions used.

Previous reports were based on assumptions of 4 per cent interest rates, zero per cent for salary increases and no inflation assumptions. In the most recent report (as at December 31, 1975), the real interest rate could be said to have changed from 4 per cent to 3.5 per cent and salary increases related to productivity were assumed to be 2.5 per cent.

The effect of using an implicit inflation assumption of 3 per cent, and therefore raising the interest and salary increase rate assumptions from 3.5 per cent and 2.5 per cent to 6.5 per cent and 5.5 per cent, respectively, were as follows: (a) with respect to benefits earned to December 31, 1975 a decrease in liabilities of $2,438 million; (b) with respect to the employer current service costs after December 31, 1975 a decrease of 8.2 per cent of contributory payroll from 19.0 per cent to 10.8 per cent.

3. The effect on the amounts shown in question 2 of lowering the number of years over which CFSA salaries are averaged for benefit calculation purposes would be as follows:

Salary Averaging Period

	5 years	4 years	3 years	2 years	1 year
			(000,000's)
Reduction in the $2,438 million decrease in liabilities shown in question 2	106	215	328	445	565
Reduction of the current service cost difference of 8.2 per cent of contributory payroll, as a per cent of contributory payroll	0.54	1.11	1.69	2.28	2.90

4. The effect of using implicit annual inflation assumptions, of 6 per cent and 9 per cent along with reduced salary averaging periods would have been as follows:

Table 2

Salary Averaging Period

6 per cent Inflation Scenario	6 years	5 years	4 years	3 years	2 years	1 year
Decrease in liabilities in respect of service prior to December 31, 1975	3,828	3,721	3,609	3,491	3,368	3,240

ADVERTISING COSTS OF PETRO-CANADA

Question No. 4,489—Mr. Siddon:

1. What amount did Petro-Canada spend for advertising in the fiscal year (a) 1980-81 (b) 1981-82?

2. What amount did Petro-Canada budget for advertising in the fiscal year 1982-83?

3. What percentage of Petro-Canada's fiscal year 1982-83 advertising will be devoted to (a) newspapers and magazines (b) radio (c) television (d) trade show or convention exhibits (e) any other?

4. Did Petro-Canada declare a deficit in the fiscal year (a) 1980-81 (b) 1981-82 and, if so, what was the extent of that deficit?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Petro-Canada reports as follows:

1. (a) January 1, 1981—December 31, 1981—$1,136,000; (b) January 1, 1982—October 27, 1982—$5,737,751.

2. Petro-Canada's 1982 advertising budget including all aspects of production, research and media expenses is $6,325,-000. The Corporation's 1983 budget has not yet been established.

3. (a) 14 per cent, (b) 17.5 per cent, (c) 58.5 per cent, (d) Trade shows and exhibits are not included in Petro-Canada's advertising budget. (e) 10 per cent.

4. (a) and (b) No.

BALANCE OF SUPERANNUATION ACCOUNTS

Question No. 4,532—Mr. Gauthier:

1. As of March 31, 1982, what was the balance of (a) the Public Service Superannuation Account (b) the Canadian Forces Superannuation Account (c) the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Superannuation Account (d) the superannuation account of judges, senators, Members of Parliament and diplomats (e) any other superannuation account?

2. As of the same date, what was the balance of the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Account?

3. For each account mentioned in Parts 1 and 2, is interest paid and, if so, at what rate?

4. For each superannuation account mentioned in Part 1, what are the (a) number of recipients (b) average benefits paid?

5. (a) How many persons receive supplementary retirement benefits (b) what are the average benefits paid?

6. Are supplementary retirement benefits indexed and, if so, what percentage of this indexation is paid by (a) public servants (b) public funds?

7. If the superannuation account was combined with the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Account (a) in each case, what would be the (i) five-year (ii) ten-year actuarial projections (b) on what (i) inflation (ii) interest rates would the projections be based?

8. For the superannuation accounts mentioned in Part 1 (a) from 1976 to 1983, what was the annual contribution from the Consolidated Revenue Fund to meet full indexation (b) what would be the anticipated contribution for 1983, assuming the full indexation was granted to the recipients?

9. What would be the amount of the proportion of supplementary retirement benefits coming from public funds, if that proportion was set at a maximum of 6 per cent?

10. If the money mentioned in Part 9 was distributed among the neediest, could the full indexing be paid to all persons receiving less than the average superannuation benefits mentioned in Part 1 without having to pay out public funds and, if so, would the Government consider it?

11. What would be the supplementary contribution required to pay the full indexation to all recipients in (a) 1983 (b) 1984?

12. Did some retired public servants contribute to the indexing of their pensions and (a) if so, what was their average salary (b) if not (i) how many in each group did contribute (ii) what was their average salary?

13. Is it possible to distribute supplementary retirement benefits in such a way as to pay the full indexation to some recipients and partial indexation to others and, if so, how would that money be distributed if the total benefits envelope increased by 6 per cent only?

Mr. Peter Lang (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board):

	Balance at March 31, 1982
1. (a) Public Service Superannuation Account	$14,757,155,902
(b) Canadian Forces Superannuation Account	$10,343,553,408
(c) Royal Canadian Mounted Police Superannuation Account	$ 1,212,155,985
(d) Members of Parliament Retiring Allowance Account	$13,861,821
(e) No superannuation account is maintained with respect to the pension plans of Judges, Senators appointed prior to 1965, Lieutenant Governors or the Governor General

2. Supplementary Retirement Benefits Account $1,215,769,564.

3. (a) Interest is earned by the Public Service, Canadian Forces and RCMP Superannuation Accounts, on a quarterly basis as if the excess of receipts over disbursements since the accounts were established had been invested in long term Government of Canada bonds, and as if these amounts had been reinvested at current rates every 20 years. The resulting weighted average rate as of September 30, 1982 was 10.2 per cent, expressed as an effective annual rate.

(b) Interest is credited to the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Account at the end of each quarter, and is calculated on the minimum monthly balance at a rate based on the yield of an outstanding Government of Canada bond having a term to maturity of five years, less ⅛ of 1 per cent. The rate for the quarter ending September 30, 1982 was 16.125 per cent.

(c) The Members of Parliament Retiring Allowances Account is currently credited quarterly with interest at a rate of 1.75 per cent or 7.2 per cent as an effective annual rate.

4.	Number of Recipients	Average Annual Benefits Paid
Public Service Superannuation Account	122,600	$4,035
Canadian Forces Superannuation Account	68,100	$4,560
Royal Canadian Mounted Police Superannuation Account	2,560	$7,300
Members of Parliament Retiring Allowances Account	335	$5,950
5. Supplementary Retirement Benefits Account	162,100	$3,450

6. (a) Benefits payable under the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act are themselves indexed.

(b) Currently less than 10 per cent of indexing benefits are charged against the contributions made in respect of former public servants and over 90 per cent are charged to public funds.

7. In the Actuarial Reports for the PSSA as at December 31, 1977, the CFSA as at December 31, 1975 and the RCMPSA as at December 31, 1974 appendices were included showing the valuation results on the assumption that the benefits pursuant to the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act were combined with the benefits arising out of the basic superannuation accounts.

The assumptions with respect to inflation and interest rates used in the Reports referred to above, when the benefits under SRBA were combined with the basic benefits, were 3 per cent and 6½ per cent, respectively. When performing valuations of the superannuation accounts, whether in combination with SRBA benefits or not, assumptions are made not just for five or ten years but for the period of time that reflects the life expectancy of the current membership of the plan, including their dependants. The economic assumptions involving interest, general salary increases and inflation are made on the basis of the relationship that is believed to exist among them and on the basis of the best long-term forecasts for such rates that are available. Economic assumptions with respect to the valuations currently in progress have not yet been determined.

8.	1976	1977	1978	1979	1980	1981	Estimated 1982	Estimated 1983
Public servants	78	102	126	160	193	248	324	420
Armed Forces	34	47	68	87	124	133	172	221
RCMP	4.2	5.4	6.5	8	9.6	11.6	15	18
Members of Parliament	.3	.4	.5	.6	.7	.7	.9	1.1

Note: The amounts shown for the RCMP and the Armed Forces include benefits paid to recipients under the RCMP and Defence Services Continuation Acts, for which there are no accounts. Also, the amounts shown were estimated from fiscal year data.

9. If benefits that are indexed from public funds were limited to a 6 per cent increase in 1983, and other benefits increased by 11.5 per cent, new indexing payable in 1983 would be approximately $80 million.

10. The $80 million mentioned in Part 9 could provide roughly full indexing on the first $5,100 of all pensions, if no indexing were applied to amounts over $5,100. The Government recognizes the contributions of former public servants and is proposing to modify Bill C-133 to set indexing at 6.5 per cent in 1983 and 5.5 per cent in 1984.

11. (a) 1983—about $60 million or about .6 per cent of salaries.

(b) 1984—about $105 million or about 1 per cent of salaries.

12. All public servants who retired about April 1, 1970 contributed some amount towards the indexing of their pensions. It is estimated that about 24,700 retired public servants who are receiving indexing benefits still have money to their credit in the indexing account. Information on their average salaries is not readily available.

13. A legislative amendment would be required to fully index some pensions and partially index others. See reply to Part 10.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 62—UNEMPLOYMENT

Hon. David Crombie (Rosedale) moved:

That this House condemns the Government for its callous disregard and tragic neglect of the dire economic and social plight of the over two million Canadians who are now unemployed and of the increasing lack of job security which threatens the livelihood and well-being of this country's remaining 10.4 million workers, and that, on behalf of all Canadians, this House insists that the Government take immediate steps to restore social and economic health to Canada by: forging a social and economic consensus between business, labour and government, encouraging job creating investment, establishing a National Productivity Strategy to restore Canada as a world class competitor, and rebuilding the confidence of individual Canadians in the future of this country.

He said: Madam Speaker, during the last number of months and years, we on this side of the House and indeed many people in the country have urged the necessity upon the Government of striking a program which will bring this country to greater levels of employment and general economic recovery. Indeed, economic reconstruction has been the basis upon which our questions and speeches in the House and our public policies have been put forward.

Indeed, we have discussed and urged upon the Government the necessity for the creation of an environment for long-term job creation. Without investment there are no jobs. Second, we have urged the Government to take advantage of greater productivity to allow Canadian business, labour and Canadians generally to take advantage of new opportunities for productivity. Third, we have continually urged upon the Government the necessity for Canadians to be able to take advantage of the new technology that has been sweeping the world. Fourth, we have demanded time and again that the Government move, instead of talk, on training programs which would allow Canadians to become skilled and world competitive as they once were.

We have insisted month after month—now year after year—that the Government increase its investment and encourage private investment in research and development. In 1968, an independent board recommended to this Government that we increase our participation in research and development to 1.5 per cent of our Gross National Product. We are still looking to get just above 1 per cent. We now stand last in the industrial world in our commitment to research and development.

Finally, we have insisted time and again that the Government should act and not merely talk on the question of direct job creation.

Those six items which I have just listed—job-creating investment, greater productivity, new technology, new training facilities and training courses, increased research and development and increased direct job-creation programs—are the six pinnacles of future progress which we have insisted upon and urged the Government to reach. Those six items have become the main topic for discussion by almost everyone, with the possible exception of the Government, as evidenced by its slow approach to these issues.

In the past few months a new phrase has engaged the interest of increasing numbers of people across the country. It relates to the importance of forming a national consensus in this country which, without addressing these six items, cannot be achieved. That national consensus is required in order to achieve increased investment for jobs, greater productivity, new technology and research development and direct job creation.

Before those words pass into Liberal buzz words which they can use as points for discussion so that they do not have to do anything, I thought it might be useful if I took my time today to talk about what people really mean by that national consensus.

Pat Johnston is Vice-President of the Canadian Federation of Independent Business. Incidentally, she referred to the unemployment level in Canada as unconscionable. She has said that we need in Canada a policy consensus for recovery. Ronald Anderson, a respected columnist in The Globe and Mail, talked about the disturbing level in the past decade of a progressive loss of a sense of common purpose and shared objective. He noted just last week that there was a widening schism among Government, business, industry and labour. Also he noted the widening between the Provinces and the federal Government, that while the talk got better, the action was not getting any better. Russell Harrison, Chairman and Chief Executive Officer of the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce, said in a speech this week that if this country did not prevent division within it, it will not be able to respond to the challenges of the 1980s and 1990s.

Across the country more and more people are beginning to understand that unless we can forge a national consensus, what politicians, bureaucrats and opinion leaders talk about will merely be at the level of chat. It will not be effective because there is not within us yet a will to establish that national consensus. I might say that when most people talk about national consensus they are really referring to what I would call the larger pieces of society. Normally we are talking about the relationship of Government, business and labour. In the last 15 years the sad but true fact is that relationships between the Government and business have deteriorated to a low which has never been seen before in the history of Canada. This is undeniable.

The priorities of the business sector are simple—growth, employment and price stability. Those used to be the goals of the federal Government prior to 1968. Indeed, it was Mr. Harrison, the banker, who said that what happened in the past number of years was that this federal Government had broken the historical consensus which allowed the country to have some kind of progress and prosperity for its people. It is this Government which has broken the historical consensus that was necessary for business to flourish, for growth to occur, for jobs to begin and for stability to be with us once again.

In the past two years we have seen budgets based only on the premise that the Government can do best and that business and labour do not. We have seen policies which stifled initiative and a continuation of the concept within bureaucracy and the Government that if it is not the Government that does it then it is not important. This kind of philosophy has contributed to the awesome deterioration between the Government and business enterprises in the country.

If the Government has been bad for business, it has been deplorable for labour. There has been no labour policy in Canada for 15 years. Labour has no place at the national table with the Government. Mark Daniels, no stranger to the House, is the Deputy Minister of Labour. At the University of Toronto on Monday he said that the labour factor has been ignored for over 15 years in federal Government decisions, that labour issues have not been a part of policy planning and that it was one of the federal Government's great failures. Those comments were made by the federal Deputy Minister of Labour.

On Wednesday a conference held by the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) was concluded. It was the National Occupations Outlook Conference. One would expect that an opportunity would have been provided for labour to play a full role and that there would have been an acceptance of labour as a national part of the way in which we can get out of the recession and into a new period of prosperity. Did labour have a role? "No", said the federal Government.

Let us look at the response from labour. As far as it is concerned, this week at the conference the role of labour was blatantly biased and denigrated. The entire conference was to deal with a program known as COPS, a computer system concerned with monitoring and projecting labour needs of the future. The program was developed after the federal Government rejected a proposal by business and labour, the Canadian Labour Congress and the Business Council on National Issues.

Three years ago, the Business Council on National Issues, in concert with the CLC, came to the federal Government and said that they would like to participate. The federal Government delayed and delayed and finally denied and rejected one of the few occasions in recent history where business and labour came together. They were scuttled by the Government. Is it any wonder that labour and business find that they have no connection with the Liberal Government and that they have had no connection with it for the past 15 years?

When people talk about national consensus, they are now increasingly not only talking about the relationship of business, labour and Government. They are also talking, perhaps much more fundamentally, about the relationship of Canadians one with the other. Those of us who had the opportunity to read the letter from the Bishops, the so-called "Ethical Reflections on the Economic Crisis", and to think about it and discuss it, would offer a thanks to the Bishops for reminding not only us but, more important, the Government that economic issues are social issues and that social issues are moral issues; that economic decisions are also moral choices.

In passing, it reminds me that Adam Smith, the great chronicler and fundamental thinker of the free market system, was a professor of ethics and moral philosophy. This is why the Bishops were on good ground on two fundamental points. In their first point they reminded us of the importance, the value and dignity of human work. They said that people contribute to their community and give meaning to their existence as human beings through work. This is why unemployment for most people is a loss of human dignity and of a sense of self-worth. This is why the Bishops reminded us that unemployment deprived people of work and of an income with which they could carry out their responsibilities to themselves, their families and their communities. Not to have that work is, as the Bishops said, a social evil. That is why, thanks to the Bishops, we have all been reminded that unemployment in this country is a personal tragedy, a national shame. If there is any one single body which has had responsibility for the past 15 years, it is those who have failed to establish a consensus by which Canadians can come together as individuals and as groups of individuals to begin the restructuring of this society so that we can get out of this recession.

The second thing the Bishops said, which is important to me and to everyone, was that we need to remind the Government to worry about the growing tendency to treat individuals as impersonal forces, having little or no significance beyond their economic purpose in the system. I guess we all knew that. I think maybe the Government collectively, and so many of us, have forgotten that. It is simple. If people are treated as though their contribution is irrelevant, then they will feel irrelevant. If people feel they do not count, then they will feel that not much else counts either. If people lose their stake in society, we all lose the very glue that holds our communities, neighbourhoods, villages, towns and cities together. When we lose that, we have no consensus.

That is what is at stake when we talk about unemployment in this country. What is at stake is not an economic category. What is at stake is not economic statistics. What is at stake is whether or not people are able to see themselves as something other than economic events and, indeed, as unemployed, not even that. Need anybody be reminded? The Bishops did it for us.

The single most important problem in this country, bar none, is unemployment. Secondly, unemployment can no longer be and ought never to have been considered as only an economic problem. That is why we condemn the Government. We condemn the Government because it has failed. The Government has failed, as I indicated earlier, to create an environment by which investment can occur, so that people in this country will have jobs. The Government has failed to take advantage of opportunities so that we can become more productive and therefore more competitive. The Government has failed to take advantage, particularly during the seventies, of the new technology sweeping this world, leaving this country behind. The Government has failed since 1968 when Jean Marchand—now Senator Marchand—brought in the Training Act. Now he is a member of the other place. For 15 years this Government has done nothing with respect to training. The Government also failed to do little more than talk and provide the country with more initials, instead of creating real, live jobs in terms of direct job creation.

Finally, we condemn this Government because it has failed to do one thing that does not cost money. It failed at the one thing it could do and has not done, and that is, to create a national consensus in this country. And it is now unable to do so. It is exhausted and bankrupt and is unable to create the national consensus which is absolutely vital to the future of this country. That is why this motion should be supported in this House today.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Perhaps the Chair should remind Hon. Members that our provisional Standing Orders provide for comments, questions and answers for a period of not more than ten minutes at this time. Therefore, if I see Members rising I presume it is to put questions to the Hon. Member who has just spoken.

Mrs. Hervieux-Payette: Mr. Speaker, following the comments made by the Hon. Member for Rosedale (Mr. Crombie), I have a few questions, but I would first like to point out that Quebec Members have always had an abiding concern for employment. Last year, we sent a letter to the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) with our comments on the budget, and subsequently, a number of job creation measures were taken, the last one being the NEED program, which I hope will provide part of the jobs needed by Canadians in these difficult times, and this includes the $220 million granted to Quebec.

However, Mr. Speaker, I should like to know whether the solutions proposed by the Progressive Conservative Party, the instant answers for bringing down inflation, would not increase the deficit. The aim would be to create jobs, promote investment, protect the workers and at the same time maintain the new concept of profit put forward by the bishops. Mr. Speaker, I have a great deal of trouble reconciling the comments made by the Member for Rosedale with the philosophy of the Progressive Conservative Party, which has been concentrating far more on the profit concept than on job creation.

[English]

Mr. Crombie: I thought, since I said it twice, the Hon. Member would have heard what I said earlier with respect to the things we have talked about in this House for the past two years, and even before that. If the Government would like to hear it one more time, I will say it.

The first thing the Government should do is to begin to create, for the first time in a long time, an environment to attract investment to produce jobs. Investment in this country has gone down by 50 per cent in terms of capital investment. People are not investing and the reason is that they have lacked confidence for so long in this Government. So the first thing the Government can do is to create an environment in which people can invest so that jobs can be created.

Second, the Government, for the past 12 years in particular—I said 15 years before, but I will be more precise—has slowly moved away from any consideration of the importance of productivity for people in this society. Productivity is the way in which we become competitive. We are not competitive because we have not been as productive as we could have been, and consequently we have lost jobs.

Third, one of the greatest sins is that although new technology has been around this world for about 20 years, the Government has been almost negligent in taking advantage of it. The Hon. Member does not have to accept my word for that. Just look at any independent national or international monitor and it will tell you that our record is either the worst or close to the worst, at a time when it did not have to be, because we were one of the wealthiest countries in the world at that time.

Fourth, the Government—and here I will give a small piece of credit to it—appointed as chairman of the advisory committee to the Minister of Employment and Immigration Mr. Tom Sosa of Ryerson Polytechnical Institute. Perhaps the one good thing the Government has done was to ask his advice. I have known this man for 20 years. It is through the influence of that man that the Government has been able at least to bring forward the National Training Act.

This Government has also been responsible for the 15 years during which we got behind the rest of the world in training. That is why we had to import 25,000 skilled workers into this country at a time when unemployment was rising. That was the result of inaction by the Government for 15 years.

Back in 1968, Tom Kent, a Liberal I can talk about, recommended that there ought to be 1.5 per cent of the Gross National Product dedicated to research and development. It has been .9 per cent since then.

Mr. Peterson: You are wrong.

Mr. Crombie: Or 1.1 per cent; it went up and then went back to .9 per cent. Check the figures. Indeed, the only thing the Government has done is to re-establish the goal of 1.5 per cent, the goal that was given to them in 1968. That is why the OECD will tell you that we have not one of the worst but the worst record in research and development in the western industrialized world. They will tell you that it is directly attributable to the lack of policies of this federal Government.

● (1230)

Those are five courses of action. Had the Hon. Member and the Government listened to them, we would not have quite the problem we now have.

Mrs. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, if there is time for another question, I would like to ask the Hon. Member whether he is in favour of increased Government investment in jobs as well as the private sector.

In view of his remarks about high technology, I would also like to ask another question. He knows of the permanent displacement of many women in service and clerical jobs. What would he do to ensure equal opportunities for women in the workforce, not only now, when it is far below what is needed, but in the future when they will be displaced permanently in the service and clerical fields?

Mr. Crombie: Mr. Speaker, with respect to the first question, would I favour public expenditure—

Mrs. Mitchell: Increased public investment.

Mr. Crombie: Absolutely. I have on a number of occasions, as has this Party, advocated that the Government increase its investment in research and development. We supported strongly and indeed participated in the development of the National Training Act legislation. We voted for it at that time and wanted to increase the investment. I believe it was an increase of 15 per cent. We wanted to increase that investment and national training. Training and technology, ability and tools are the way in which people can have jobs. We have consistently not only supported it but advocated it, and we will continue to do so.

I might say just in passing—this is only a small matter in the scheme of things, but it reflects where the Government is—that on three occasions this week I have asked the Government if it would kindly increase the level of recruitment in the Armed Forces. That is a simple thing. There are 25,000 applications. There are now 82,000 people in the Armed Forces. They want to do it. The Minister of National Defence (Mr. Lamontagne) says he wants to do it, but the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) constantly says no. Even a Liberal backbencher stood up and asked how about it, and he said no. Yes, we want to increase public investment for jobs. Absolutely.

On the final question with respect to women workers, this is a very difficult problem, one that will get worse. That is why I and this Party have consistently advocated that we increase training opportunities, particularly as it relates to new technology. Moreover, and perhaps even before that is done, there is a need to create learning on the part of women and those who teach young girls that there are other role models, other ways in which things can be done. We have also advocated this.

Mr. Breau: Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Hon. Member for Rosedale (Mr. Crombie). He made reference briefly to job-creation programs, particularly those that have evolved over the last 10 or 12 years. In the past some Members of his Party have been critical of these programs. One of the first things his Party did when briefly in power in 1979 was to do away with one of them. Does his Party now have a position with regard to these direct job-creation programs? Do they intend to support the continuing existence of them and would they continue to bring support to these kinds of these job-creation programs?

Mr. Crombie: Mr. Speaker, there are two points. First, with regard to general job-creation programs, I do not think the Hon. Member can pick up one example of where we have opposed any job-creation program that this Minister has brought forward. Our problem with what the Minister has done is that it is more talk and not much action.

Most people know that whenever we get a new set of initials describing a new program, it goes away somewhere. It is very hard to get a handle on what it is the Minister is actually doing, let alone the fact that mainly we are only talking about jobs for less than 4 per cent of the unemployed. What the Government has done and the Minister keeps doing is try to take people's eyes away from the fact that there are no policies, the fact that 96 per cent of the people who are unemployed are in that position because the Government has failed to establish the national consensus which I talked about earlier.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. The ten minutes provided for questions has now ended.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. As this is the first occasion when we have engaged in this back-and-forth questioning, we would be remiss if we did not extend our congratulations to the Hon. Member for Rosedale (Mr. Crombie) on what was an outstanding performance. I do not agree with much of what he said, but it was very well handled.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to join this debate on the motion of the Hon. Member for Rosedale (Mr. Crombie). I listened intently to the Hon. Member's speech. If it had been any other Conservative Member, I would have used the expression "full of sound and fury, signifying nothing" or very little. Because I have great admiration, respect and warmth for the Hon. Member for Rosedale, I will not use that expression. He and I both belong to that group of people in the world who share the same size. I feel very akin to him for that.

An Hon. Member: You have the same complex.

Mr. Waddell: The Hon. Member says we have the same complex. This is not going to stop me from making some comments on the Hon. Member's speech. I am glad he is still in the Chamber. I wonder whether the Hon. Member has really been listening to the questions and answers in the House this past week. He said he put some. If he had listened to them, he would have seen that the Liberal Government's policy is moving very much toward the kind of policy that he seems to advocate. We saw this in an answer to a question by the NDP Member from Saskatchewan today who put a question about FIRA. We can see it with what is happening to the National Energy Program.

The Liberal Government is doing its collective best to tone down FIRA or forget about FIRA, and to deep-six the National Energy Program or at least play it down. It is saying to the Americans and Japanese that we need their investment. That is what is happening with Liberal policy. It is very much like the Conservative policy when you consider what there is to the Conservative policy.

The Hon. Member for Rosedale talked about gain, but what really is his policy? What is the analysis behind our problems? We all acknowledge that we have deep problems. Today the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) talked about 27 per cent unemployment in his riding. All Members know that. No one disputes that fact.

As a major part of his speech, the Hon. Member for Rosedale said that we are last in the industrial world in our commitment to research and development. I asked myself why we are the last. Is it because the Government is not putting in enough money? I think it is because industry is not putting enough money into research and development. Why not? I will give the answer to that later. However, that is the question the Hon. Member should really be asking.

The Hon. Member for Rosedale asked for a national consensus. It sounds good, but what is it? He says we need this national consensus, that we have somehow to change. We wonder what will bring our people together. Will it be the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) leaving? As a westerner, I can say that would be helpful; but honestly, will it really change our unemployment picture overnight? I think not. It might help, but nothing is going to fundamentally change.

• (1240)

Would it help if the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark)—as the slogan goes, "Joe must go"—goes next week? Is that going to bring a consensus in this country? I do not think so, although I would like to. It reminds me of what the former Hon. Member for Broadview-Greenwood, Bob Rae, said in this House, that the Government had a sort of "Tinkerbell" attitude in its budget. The Hon. Member for Rosedale, despite his charm, buoyancy and energy, has that kind of a "Tinkerbell" attitude. It is as if we could just wish—

Mr. Crombie: Tinkerbell?

Mr. Waddell: Yes, "Tinkerbell" from Peter Pan. If you remember, Tinkerbell said: "If we just close our eyes and wish, it will happen". We can hold hands together and close our eyes and we have a national consensus.

An Hon. Member: And we can all fly.

Mr. Waddell: And suddenly we can fly, and the Canadian economy will fly. But it is not going to happen that way.

I want to analyze this situation. I say this seriously to the Hon. Member. I looked at the motion which he presented. He says we have to forge a consensus among business, labour and Government. Of course we have to, but what kind of consensus? What is the basis of the consensus? He says we should establish a national productivity strategy. Perhaps I should check the notes, but I did not hear one mention of what is the Conservative policy. Perhaps he did mention it, but I did not hear it.

May I suggest, in all my bias to the Hon. Member, that the Conservatives really do not have a policy. The "policy" is simply to wait until—

Mr. Crombie: Crosbie says after the election.

Mr. Waddell: —the Tweedle-dum Liberal Government goes down to defeat, and hopefully they will replace it with a Tweedle-dee Conservative Government. Tommy Douglas used to say that choosing between Conservatives and Liberals is like choosing between Tweedle-dum and Tweedle-dee; there is no real difference.

The Hon. Member even thanked the Bishops. Although I cannot speak on behalf of the Bishops, I am sure they are very pleased the Hon. Member thanked them; but he did not adopt their policies. Is he prepared to adopt what the Bishops have said? I want to come back in my speech later to what the Bishops really have said.

The Hon. Member also said that unemployment was a big problem. We agree, and the Bishops said that to a major extent.

Why, then, is the Hon. Member's Party so enthusiastic about the six and five program, which is a program which is essentially supposed to be fighting inflation and trying to bring the inflation rate down? The Hon. Member cannot have it both ways. You cannot choose to be the inflation fighter as opposed to the job creator, it seems to me. What we really have in this country is the Liberal Government moving towards opening up again to American investment, and other investments, moving closer to monetarism, Reaganism, and the kind of thing which got us into this.

The Conservative Party—and the Hon. Member for Rosedale, I am told, is perhaps the minority in that Party—is basically a Party which wants to go back in history and grab for the Reaganomics and those kinds of ideas. I would just ask the Hon. Member to sit in the House and listen to some of the speeches of his fellow Party Members when they outline their flirtation with these kinds of economics.

I would like to talk a little bit about what I think is wrong with the country today. I believe we have a general crisis in this country. We have a general crisis in the world. Let us level with ourselves in the House of Commons and with the Canadian people. We have had policies in Canada, but it is part of the world economic problem. We have not done much to make it better, but we should recognize that it is part of a world economic problem. We have a general crisis unlike the crisis of 1973 and 1974, when we had the recession which was based on adjusting to the OPEC oil increases. Eventually we got around the crisis caused by the petroleum pricing change.

It seems to me we have a major disequilibrium in the world system, and Canada is part of the world system. I see a number of causes. Our major industries which have served as a foundation for the economy in the past are losing their old predominance. This becomes clear when you listen to questions in the House about automobiles, steel, rubber, glass, construction materials. They are in decline. These industries can no longer serve as engines of growth for the economy as a whole. We have a world-wide over-capacity to produce the products in these fields relative to the available market.

It seems to me the Hon. Member barely touched on this in his speech, but he was going in the right direction when he talked about the new industries, which I feel will serve as engines of economic growth. The new engines, as I see it, are computers, data processing, microprocessing and microelectronics. This new technology will help our old industries also; for example, people know about robots in assembly lines at automobile plants, and so on. Why can we not take advantage completely of what is happening in the new industries? What we are seeing is a decline in the economic power of the United States, and because Canada is so closely associated with the United States, and because of the traditional Liberal policy of continentalism, it is vulnerable to the "bad" things, if you like, which happen in the United States. The power is moving from the United States partly to Western Europe, but also to Japan. The reason it is moving to Japan is that that country has gambled on the new high technology industries.

There is a decline in traditional industries. We are at the end of the U.S. technological predominance and we are seeing no less than the end to the post-war world. It will no longer come back to that general upward trend. We would all like to see us get back to the sixties and seventies, but it will not come back to that.

I said I would try to state the matter as honestly as I could. What can we do about it? For example, France, a socialist country, started to prime the economy. That was not the solution. It did not work. They primed the economy and who benefited? Consumers went out and they spent. The richer ones bought German Mercedes-Benz cars and the poorer ones bought Italian Fiats. So it did not benefit the one country. Because we are in a wider market, a wider world, we have to consider that a vast economic stimulus may not work.

What the Conservatives have offered in the past was "Let's be pals with the oil industry and Bay Street and everything will work out fine". But that is not going to make any difference any more. More progressive people have said we should stimulate the economy, get producer demand going and so on, but perhaps that is not going to work either. It will help, but it will not necessarily work because we are in a new world and we have to make some fundamental changes. We need massive investments in key productive sectors of the economy. We have to make a rapid transition away from our obsolete technology which is being used in the branch plants of multinational companies.

The answer to the question I posed to the Hon. Member for Rosedale, why are we not investing in R and D, is that the branch plants of the multinational companies do not want to do that. They have never done that. They invest in the United States. The Hon. Member, who is from Ontario, should see that Ontario is being deindustrialized and it is not going to be reindustrialized by wishing that you had a national consensus or that you could go and shake hands with Conrad Black. What you are going to have to do is control where your investment goes. You are going to have to look at industry by industry and region by region. That is not an easy message to tell Canadians.

I was in Sudbury over the holidays. I know the Hon. Member for Rosedale will share this; he and I are both small of limb and big of heart. I felt for the workers in Sudbury. The Hon. Member knows it is hard to see people unemployed, hoping with their fingers crossed that they will go back to work. A lot of people in our traditional industries are not going to go back to work, and that is the problem. It is going to be more difficult for us to make this transition. We are going to have to change and it is going to be hard because we have so much foreign ownership in this country and we are dependent on foreign borrowing. That is the lesson of France; they were dependent on foreign borrowing and they could not make the change.

So, Mr. Speaker, we will not have any short-term, quick-fix solutions; we have to look at the long term. The United States is going to decline further. They are making a terrible mistake by investing in armaments. Believe it or not, that is against their strategic interests. They keep investing in arms; but the Japanese are not dumb, they are out there investing in new industry and producing consumer goods we use every day. This policy of investing in arms is going further to weaken the U.S., and it will further weaken Canada.

There is a monetarist policy in the U.S., as most Members know, which is going to try to squeeze inflation by holding down the money supply and cutting back on Government spending. What they are doing is simply killing the American economy, and of course the Canadian economy, since it is a branch plant economy, is suffering as well. Ask any worker in Ontario, those who are unemployed or barely hanging on to their jobs.

Even though I believe we should be different from the U.S. we are brothers and sisters with the U.S. We have a very close relationship. I hope that a future administration in the U.S. will realize we are giving these huge advantages to Japan and Western Europe, that we are living in the past.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to say a few words about the six and five program. That program is really not intended to be an economic strategy at all; it is a phony political strategy. It is designed to convince Canadians that the burden of the recession is being shared fairly and that we have to blame people like civil servants in Ottawa and easy targets like that for our problems. It is not really a program with any real economic impact. Inflation is going to come down anyway; we all know that. We are squeezing the economy and there is no demand in the economy. I am not an economist, but I see one over there.

Mr. Benjamin: Not him.

Mr. Waddell: He purports to be one. The program is not going to make much difference because it does not involve any strategic attempt to strengthen Canadian manufacturing. In Japan the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) talked about how we welcome Japanese investment. They can have all our resources. What are we doing, Mr. Speaker? We are a hinterland of the U.S., which is part of our problem, and now we want to make ourselves a hinterland of Japan. Does that really make sense for this country?

I do not have time today to go into some of the solutions. I have spent most of my time trying to give a kind of analysis of what I think is happening. I challenge Members to deal with that analysis. I hope in days ahead, in other debates, to try and deal with the real solutions.

I would just draw the House's attention to the Bishops' solution which we have been advocating in the House. They say we have to focus on job creation, encourage technologically intensive industries, and creative work is going to be limited to a few. We have to continue with our social net for other people. But we have to look at different regions and our regional strengths, such as British Columbia and forestry. We have to build industry around the forest industry. We have to look at energy, where instead of just exporting oil and gas we have to build industry around petro-chemicals.

I am not saying that my colleagues in the Conservative Party are not interested in that; of course they are. But I am saying that their analysis is wrong. The answer is not just let us have consensus, or the Liberal answer which is let us just welcome investment. The investments may not come no matter what you do. Investment has to be directed to areas such as high-tech industries, and to different regions of our country, to strengthen our economy. It seems to me we should level with the people. It is only in this way that we can have a national regeneration in Canada.

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, I notice the Hon. Member mentioned the situation in Japan, which is a very interesting example. It is a country which has been able to hold its unemployment rate to a very low level. I would ask the Hon. Member if he understands the way the Japanese system is set up and if his Party is prepared to debate seriously the kind of structural changes which would be required in this country to reach a solution such as the Japanese have reached.

For example, is he prepared to look at a system where compensation is based upon productivity, where workers opt for reduced wages when the economy turns down as a way of ensuring higher levels of employment? Is he prepared to look at a situation where a country has company as opposed to industrial unions? Does the Hon. Member agree that this should be a matter which is considered for Canada? Is he prepared to consider those realistically as options for this country if he is so impressed with the results in Japan?

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for the question. Speaking for myself, I am prepared to consider anything which is practical, logical, fair and which gives us some light at the end of the tunnel. I talked to David Suzuki from British Columbia, a distinguished Canadian who has written about the Japanese economy and his impressions of what was happening in Japan. I am inclined, as is the New Democratic Party, to favour the notion of a plan such as the Japanese have developed. They are not prepared to say, as it seems we in North America are, that the free market forces will do everything. I think we should look at having a strategy and know where we are going. We should look at the idea of gambling, if you like, with new industry, as I said the way the Japanese did it, and at the way the Americans, since Viet Nam, have not really done it.

However, with respect to the unions and the work and so on, I think we would be better to look to Western Europe. We are more culturally akin to Western Europe. The NDP has been saying in the House that we should look to Western Europe and their worker-business co-operation. I think that could he explored a lot more in Canada. Instead, we have kind of put labour out of the picture. The Hon. Member, in a way, was getting at that idea of bringing labour, management and Government back together. In Canada we have tended to put labour right out of the picture. One of the reasons is, I think legitimately, that labour does not believe that we are being fair to them. We are making them the scapegoat and fall guy over a lot of things.

I wanted to go further in answer to the Hon. Member's question because I think that we should look to Western Europe and Japan, but I see it is one o'clock. I think probably I have exhausted the answer to the Hon. Member's question.

Mr. Evans: No, you have not answered it all.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. It being one o'clock, I do now leave the Chair until two o'clock this afternoon.

The House took recess at 1.00 p.m.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): When the House rose at one o'clock, the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) was responding to a question. I understand that question was put by the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans) and that the answer was completed. In the remaining ten minutes of the exchange period, if other Hon. Members wish to put questions I will recognize them; otherwise I will recognize the Minister of State for Economic Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Johnston).

Are there any other Members who wish to make comment or wish to put questions to the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Minister of State for Economic Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, in my opening remarks I should like to comment briefly on some of the statements made by the Hon. Member for Rosedale (Mr. Crombie) and by the spokesman for the New Democratic Party.

The Hon. Member for Rosedale began with a series of themes. I do not think anyone in the House would have much quarrel with the themes themselves or with the concerns he expressed in a sincere and, I believe, a very committed way. I must say that I am tempted to align myself with the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway, however, who said that he heard a lot of sound and fury signifying nothing.

The Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway also made the point that he and the Hon. Member for Rosedale had something in common. As I recall it, he said they were both short. I should like to say that they may both be short, but I regard both of them as Members of this House of considerable statute. I should also like to say that they are both fine spokesmen for their parties and have other things in common as well.

Perhaps one of the most striking things they have in common is that they are both progressive. Unfortunately, both are constrained in that they have to operate within the ideological limits imposed upon them by their respective Parties. Perhaps that is why they both also suffer from another common characteristic, a weakness, and that is an absence of policy. The Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway took issue with the Hon. Member for Rosedale on that ground, and with justification. We heard no policy from the Conservative Party but we did not hear any policy from the New Democratic Party either.

Mr. Nickerson: We have not heard any from the Liberal Party either.

Mr. Johnston: The other thing that struck me in the comments of the Hon. Member for Rosedale was the facts upon which he often relied. I am not going to review the full range of statistics which he purported to lay before the House, but I should like to comment upon the issue of research and development.

The Hon. Member for Rosedale seems to be operating very much in history. I hope that does not mean he has joined the "conservative" part of the Progressive Conservative Party, because I have always regarded him as one of the most eloquent spokesmen of the "progressive" part of that Party. It is clear from the statistics that the Hon. Member for Rosedale has either not done his homework, has been careless, or is misinformed.

He spoke about the effort of research and development in this country as being 0.9 per cent of the Gross National Product whereas, in fact, since 1977 it has been in excess of 1 per cent at all times. A target was set by this Government of achieving 1.5 per cent of the GNP by the year 1985. In 1982 we are at 1.2 per cent, very much on track, I would suggest. This accusation that there has been no concern for or no movement on the issue of research and development is simply not true.

Similarly, there have been some very encouraging developments in the industrial sector. We all know that Canadian Government laboratories have always made a very important contribution to research and development. In fact, the ratio of their research to that of the country as a whole has been unduly large, principally because of the absence of the same level of effort on the part of industry.

Recently, in 1981, that industry increased its percentage over the previous year by 26 per cent and in 1982 by 23 per cent. For all sectors as a whole we find that in 1981 the percentage increased by 20 per cent, in 1982 by 18 per cent, and our target is 20 per cent for the country as a whole. Nevertheless, I suggest that given the kind of economic situation in which we find ourselves there is nationally by this Government, by the industrial sector and by the university sector, a very real commitment to enhancing research and development in this country.

When the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) began to speak, particularly about the six and five program, I was about to say we were about to have some more "Waddell-Twaddle" in this House.

Mr. Crombie: That is as good as his song.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Johnston: I am not here to discuss songs, Mr. Speaker; I am here to discuss the comments made by the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway. He went on in a most encouraging way, much more encouraging, I might say, than the comments made by the Hon. Member for Rosedale, because at least he provided the House with an analysis of some of the problems we have and some of the opportunities that we see.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I may remind you that not long ago, Members of the New Democratic Party recommended a reduction in interest rates in this country. Today, the Member for Vancouver Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) said in the House that Canada is part of the international environment and part of the international trade world. Perhaps he has finally realized that we cannot arbitrarily reduce interest rates in this country since we are part of an international community.

[English]

I found it very encouraging to receive finally a recognition on the part of this spokesman for the New Democratic Party that Canada is very much a part of the international world of commerce and cannot unilaterally simply reduce interest rates.

Another very encouraging point made by the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway was the recognition that we are in a new world; that industries in many sectors are in decline. I suggest he was telling us that he accepts the view that we are passing out of an industrial society into an information society, that these sunset industries should not be propped up, which I believe has been very much in the tradition of many spokesmen of his Party in the past. In other words, the real challenge before us is the industries of the future, not the industries of the past, and we should not disguise public employment programs through alleged industrial support in certain sectors. There is no point in being the champions of the world in a declining sport, as some observers have said, and that is the case with many industries.

Some, on the other hand, are approaching sunrise. I would say that the Hon. Member's analysis was good. Moreover, his response to the question put by the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans) was very encouraging. When the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre asked him whether he was prepared to show the kind of flexibility and pragmatic approach to investment and job creation that has been shown in countries such as Japan, as I recall the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway gave a very pragmatic response to that, one not rooted in the traditional ideology of the New Democratic Party.

With that, I would like to turn very briefly to the motion proposed by the Hon. Member for Rosedale. It reads, in part:

> That this House condemns the Government for its callous disregard and tragic neglect of the dire economic and social plight of the over two million Canadians who are now unemployed—

First, we all deplore the unemployment levels with which this country is faced. But I might say again in terms of actual facts and statistics that the last numbers in December showed that there were 1,533,000 unemployed members of the Canadian workforce on a seasonally adjusted basis. That is not a number of which to be proud. I would remind the Hon. Member for Rosedale and the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway that there are almost 10 million workers unemployed in Britain, Germany, France and Italy and 12 million unemployed workers in the United States, our neighbour to the south where close to 70 per cent of our trade, our exports, go. It is not hard to imagine what an impact those circumstances in those markets have upon a country like Canada, this being a country very dependent upon exports, with approximately 30 per cent of our Gross National Product tied to that sector. But the Hon. Member talks of "callous disregard".

I thought that at the risk of taking some time on the subject I would deal with some of the programs which this Government currently has in effect to create jobs in the country.

The Bishops told us that we should be creating jobs. We recognize that we should be creating jobs. We recognize that this transitory period which we are passing through into this new technologically-oriented world of which the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway speaks does require alleviation from hardship and does require the creation of jobs.

Let me draw just a few programs to your attention, Mr. Speaker. The so-called NEED Program, the New Employment Expansion and Development Program, has created 60,000 short-term jobs. The Industry and Labour Adjustment Program has created 8,600 short-term and continuing jobs to date. What about the Work Sharing program? It has averted 80,000 lay-offs in 1982 and 53,000 lay-offs will be averted in 1983. The Canada Community Development Program has created 38,700 short-term jobs. The immediate employment stimulation project has created 16,000 short-term jobs.

The National Industrial Training Program has 51,000 participants and Summer Canada has created 54,000 summer jobs. The Unemployment Insurance job-creation program has created 26,000 short-term jobs. The Local Employment Assistance Program has created 5,500 jobs and the program for the employment disadvantaged has 18,000 participants.

The Canada community services project has created 1,600 jobs. The New Technology Employment Program has created 300 jobs and the Local Economic Development Assistance Program has created 250 jobs to date. Then there is the refinancing aid to Dome which has created 9,500 jobs. Pulp and paper modernization has created 80,000 jobs.

Mr. Waddell: You did not pay for those.

Mr. Johnston: The Canadian Industrial Renewal Board has created 700 jobs to date. The restructuring of Chrysler Canada, with minimum average employment as a percentage of Chrysler, U.S. Employment, is maintained. Shipbuilding Industry Assistance has created 7,500 person-years of employment. The refinancing aid to Massey-Ferguson has created 6,000 jobs. Chrysler Perkins Diesel, 1,600 jobs by 1988. There is Maislin Trucking with 2,000 jobs, Mitel Regional Expansion with 1,700 jobs, loans to Advocate Mines, 134 jobs re-established and 366 jobs to be re-established in coming months, and fruit and vegetable storage, 150 short-term construction jobs and 250 other jobs. There are 5,500 person-years provided by new fighter aircraft. Need I go on, Mr. Speaker? I am only on page 2 and I have seven pages of job-creation programs that this Government has introduced. How can anyone in the House say that the Government has taken a callous attitude toward the plight of the unemployed? It is simply rubbish.

I understand that under these new proceedings, Members opposite are entitled to pose questions at the end of my remarks. I would be delighted to give details of any of the programs to which I have referred and supply any additional information they might wish to have with respect to other programs, which I do not have time to read since I will not finish within my allotted time. However, those are job-creation initiatives.

Let us discuss another part of this motion. The Hon. Member for Rosedale seems to have left but he suggests in this motion that this Government has not tried to forge a social and economic consensus between business, labour and Government.

[Translation]

This is really incredible. We have been making a real effort to hold consultations, more so than ever before, and it is truly incredible that we should be accused of not communicating with all groups and sectors in our society, with the unions, the business world and the provincial governments. We have been conducting consultations across the country for many years, while the pace has been stepped up last year and this year as well.

[English]

Again, let me make reference to some of these consultative efforts since we have been accused of not forging our fences or not attempting to. Incidentally, I should say for the benefit of Members opposite that the meetings to which I am about to refer are official meetings between Ministers that are formally structured. Apart from those meetings, as the Hon. Member for Rosedale undoubtedly knows since he is a former Minister, there are many meetings and consultations held in an effort to achieve what the French-speaking people refer to as "concertation" between all these sectors.

Let me cite some examples. Between March and June of 1982, leading up to the last budget, Ministers met with the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, the Investment Dealers' Association of Canada, the presidents of the stock exchanges, the Chamber of Commerce, the Conseil du Patronat du Québec, the Canadian Petroleum Association and allied associations, the B.C. Employers Council in Vancouver, the Business Council on National Issues and selected business groups in Toronto at two separate meetings. As I recall, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) participated in those meetings. Meetings were also held with selected Atlantic Canada businessmen in Halifax, the Canadian Labour Congress in Ottawa, the Co-Operative Union of Canada in Ottawa and then the Canadian Federation of Agriculture in Ottawa.

As Hon. Members will recall, in the wake of the six and five program, in terms of continuing this round of consultation, further meetings were held with business participants in Ottawa. It was a large meeting at which the Prime Minister was present. In fact, he was present at many of these meetings. Again, there were meetings with the Canadian Labour Congress, the Canadian Federation of Labour, the Canadian Labour Congress once again, the Federation of Canadian Municipalities, the housing and construction industry, the automotive industry, representatives of small business, representative groups from Quebec-based enterprises in Montreal, representative groups from high technology centres in Ottawa, the agri-food representatives, the Investment Dealers' Association once again, the Canadian Institute of Chartered Accountants, food and grocery products industry representatives and representatives of the co-operative movement. The Prime Minister and the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) met with the so-called Sinclair Committee on six and five, and the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet), who I see is in the House, met with consumer groups.

Currently this year, meetings were held with the Conseil du Patronat du Québec and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) in prebudget consultations. There are meetings with the Atlantic Provincial Economic Council, the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, the Canadian Banking Association, the Investment Dealers' Association once again, the Retail Council, the Canadian Labour Congress. And on it goes. I am lost in the number of consultations that have been held with a view to forging the very kind of consensus that this motion moved by the Hon. Member for Rosedale speaks to.

I find it quite extraordinary for—

—for the Member for Rosedale (Mr. Crombie) to be accusing us of not having held consultations and of failing to have made any effort in this respect. In fact, as I have just said, we have established consultation procedures that did not even exist before.

[English]

That being said, let me address another issue that is raised by this motion. It concerns the issue of an increasing lack of job security which threatens the livelihood and well-being of this country's remaining 10.4 million workers. I have spoken for a moment about the plight of unemployment and some of the programs that have been implemented to ease that plight. However, there are those who feel insecure about their jobs because of the high unemployment rate. It is important that this be put in a realistic context which, I would suggest to the Members of the House, can also be seen as an optimistic context.

The fears of unemployment of those still employed arise from a number of causes. First is the recession. Second is the non-competitive position referred to by the Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) of some of our so-called sunset industries. Finally, of course, is the issue which was raised, I believe, in a question put to the Hon. Member for Rosedale concerning unemployment resulting from the evolution of Canada—revolution, perhaps—by the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway, as we move from an industrial society to an information society.

I see you indicating, Mr. Speaker, that I have one minute left. It is not very much in the circumstances. I could go on about this subject at length. However, given the problem of time—

[Translation]

As far as technology is concerned, a very important question was raised by a representative of the New Democratic Party. How we adapt to new technology will depend largely on how we react to this fear which is very widespread and very serious. However, I am convinced, the Government is convinced, and I hope that the other Members of this House are as well, that although the rise in productivity resulting from improved techniques will reduce the number of jobs for a time, on the other hand, new technology will reduce the number of difficult and boring jobs, and give workers a chance to do work that is less arduous and more interesting, and I do not think we should be opposed to this happening. The biggest headache is the present transition period and the very obvious problem of structural unemployment. Union leaders, business, and the federal and provincial governments must work together to ease Canadians through this transition period and allay the fears of our workers by taking joint and positive action. Once more, Mr. Speaker, consultation is tremendously important in this respect. In concluding, I should like to refer once again to the scenario proposed by the Member for Vancouver Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) which I support—

[English]

—that we are entering a new world. Frankly, I believe that no generation has faced a future as promising and possibly as prosperous as the one we face if we are prepared to throw away our death grip on the past and look forward to those industries of the future that will arise out of the renewed and new technology, and research and development that this Government is so committed to. I say that whereas the current recession brings us hardship, what we see in front of us at the same time should give us a good deal of optimism and enthusiasm. Frankly, we should all be glad to be part of the decision-making process that can make it happen.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crombie: Mr. Speaker, midway through his speech, the Minister invited us to ask questions with respect to the specific job-creation programs of the Government. The Minister may or may not be aware that I have had on the Order Paper since approximately mid-November a question in which I asked for details with respect to the immediate employment stimulation project. To refresh the Minister's memory, it was a program which had allocated to it some $150 million.

• (1430)

In his comments the Minister indicated that that program now has created 16,000 jobs. I might say that so far the Government has been unwilling to answer my question. It is two and a half or almost three months old, and this is the first time I have received any information on the immediate employment stimulation program and the fact that it created 16,000 jobs.

Would the Minister advise us who is responsible for the immediate employment stimulation program? Would he be willing to provide details as to why there was not any public participation or public process by which those funds were allocated? I have been unable to find out about any public process whatsoever. The record shows that the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) indicated in committee that he was not responsible for the program. He announced the program, but he said that the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray) may be responsible. I have been unable to find out so far who meets the allocation of the funds and by what process they are allocated. They amount to $150 million and they are not on public view. Would he answer that question?

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Speaker, when I said that I would provide details, obviously I can only provide the details which I have in my possession as I stand in the House. One point of clarification so as to ensure that I do not mislead anyone in the House. When I give job numbers they are the job impact of the program for the period of the program. In some cases all those jobs exist; in some cases they will exist during the period from 1982 to 1984. In the case of the immediate employment program, it is the period in which the program is in effect.

My advice is that so far this program has been allocated to 400 approved projects and that during the period 1982 to 1984 16,000 short-term jobs will be created. I might add, in responding to the question regarding the use of the term "short-term jobs" that it is very important to realize that the criteria used in all short-term job-creation programs were intended to make a contribution to the basic economic infrastructure. While the jobs may be short-term, the benefits will be long-term. I do not think anyone on this side of the House would guarantee that that will always be the case in every instance, clearly with the magnitude of the programs in front of us, but that is the thrust. I must say that the programs which have been brought to my attention tend to confirm that that indeed is the case.

As to the actual mechanics of the program, they are not under my responsibility. Clearly, it is not an issue which would fall within the Economic Development Committee. Certainly I will be pleased to take that question under advisement and try to get the answer for the Hon. Member for Rosedale.

Supply

Mr. Watson: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Hon. Minister—

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I do not want to impinge on the Hon. Member but the spirit of the rules of reform, if we read the third report, was that this question period was primarily designed for people who were perhaps not of the same political mind as the speaker. I stand to be corrected. Perhaps we could refer to the report, but I believe that was the essence of it. I know the Hon. Member for Châteauguay (Mr. Watson) very well. I do not want to impinge on him. If I am wrong, I stand corrected. Another Member of the Committee is here, the House Leader of the New Democratic Party; perhaps he could deal with it. I think that was the intent and purpose of this question period.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. Before recognizing another Hon. Member on this point of order, the first thing I should say is that the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) is quite correct. I will not take this time out of the ten minutes provided for the exchange.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): I think that is fair.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Committee report indicated that the Chair should give priority during this ten-minute period to Members representing Parties other than that of the Hon. Member who had just spoken. The point of order raised by the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton is correct. I thought I would attempt to recognize the four Hon. Members who rose immediately following the Minister's remarks.

Hon. Members will realize that the Chair is also involved in a new procedure. It may be that I should have proceeded to supplementary questions by the Hon. Member for Rosedale (Mr. Crombie), but in fairness to the Hon. Member I recognized, I think I will persist in recognizing him for one question and then I will look to the Hon. Member for Rosedale for one or two supplementary questions. All questions and supplementaries are intended by the Committee report to be short and sharp, so we would look to very brief interventions. I also want to recognize Hon. Members of the New Democratic Party. I may have been in error, but I will allow the Hon. Member for Rosedale to ask one or two supplementary questions. Let us proceed in this manner as I learn how we ought best to go.

Mr. Cousineau: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. There is also the principle that each Member of the House will be recognized in an equal manner. I think we must not forget that.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the point of order. Under normal conditions I would agree with the Hon. Member who just made the point, but on the specifics of the ten-minute question period following 20-minute speeches, it was quite clearly the intention of the Committee that to the greatest extent possible—and I am not ruling out that there may be exceptions—questions would be addressed to speakers by Members other than those of their own political Party.

In fact, we dealt with it in exactly that way, pointing out that we did not want to have an exchange between one Member and another simply to highlight the points the speaker wanted to make, or to draw out additional points from the speaker which would enable them to enlarge upon or extend their available time beyond 20 minutes.

I would say to the Hon. Member, without entering into a disagreement with him, that in all matters with the exception of the ten-minute question period we recognize the need to be fair and equitable with all three Parties. But on the ten-minute question period that was not the case, for I think the Chair will no doubt see good and justifiable reasons.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I have already indicated that I think it was the Chair's error to have recognized the Hon. Member to my right. Having done so, however, I think it is unreasonable to deprive that Hon. Member of the question. I will recognize him for one question and I will confirm the remarks made by the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton and the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) to the effect that the committee report indicated that this ten-minute period is to be given, in terms of priority, to Members representing Parties other than that of the Hon. Member who just spoke. That is clear and I have indicated that it was my error. Therefore, I will recognize the Hon. Member for Châteauguay (Mr. Watson) for one question and then the Hon. Member for Rosedale.

Mr. Breau: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order.

Mr. Cousineau: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I will not take the time of this exchange out of the ten-minute question period—that is, the current situation where Hon. Members are rising on points of order—so that those Members who wish to enter into the exchange will have an opportunity to do so.

[Translation]

Mr. Cousineau: I see that in Hansard of Monday, January 17, it says very specifically that backbenchers on the Government side will also be entitled to speak following a speech by a Minister.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I think I should answer that so that there will be no difference between the Committee report and Madam Speaker's comments. I believe the Hon. Member is quoting Madam Speaker in that regard. The point was that when an Hon. Member from either of the Opposition Parties spoke for the 20-minute period, obviously the intent of the Committee report was to give opportunity to Hon. Members on the Government side to use the ten-minute period for an exchange of questions and comment. So there is nothing inconsistent between what Madam Speaker says and what the Committee on Procedure and Organization said.

Is the Hon. Member for Gloucester rising on a point of order?

Mr. Breau: On a related point of order, because it deals with the way this exchange period will work. Shall I make the comment and ask for clarification now? I wonder if the Chair could elucidate as to the kind of discipline that will exist. Will it be the kind that exists in the regular Question Period where questions and answers should be short? I believe the intent of the exchange period is that it be short. The experience today has been that both questions and answers have been too long. I wonder if the same discipline should apply as applies to the Question Period.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): It is probably not a good idea for the Chair to attempt to give hypothetical rulings, but I think I should indicate that one of the other Acting Speakers and myself have had occasion to discuss this today, that is to say, the two of us who are on duty today.

I will begin by again quoting the Committee report, which reads:

> Your Committee envisages that exchanges which will take place will be short and sharp.

In an attempt to give some conceptual framework to that, my own feeling is that Members might like to consider a time period of something like one or one and a half minutes. I would say that is probably reasonable. However, today is the first time that this new rule has been applied to the operations of the House and, of course, what I have indicated as a time frame does not necessarily make it a ruling from the Chair on the subject. An example might be that some Hon. Member might find himself the only Member involved in the exchange period and he could use up the ten-minute period entirely. I would say that if one were looking for a definition of "short and sharp", one would say that one minute or one and a half minutes would be reasonable, with, of course, the opportunity for supplementaries, additional comments, depending upon other Members who may be standing and looking for recognition.

I see the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton may wish to make a comment.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I would be worried about the clock watching aspect of it. I am not in the least worried about the short and sharp aspect of it, because that does fit within the framework of the discussion of the Committee. I think it would be important that the House understand that the Committee and the House, by adopting the report, did expect the Speaker in the Chair at the time to exercise quite strict discipline with respect to shortness and sharpness of both questions as well as answers.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I think that is clear. The time is now 2.43 and there remains, if I recall correctly, approximately five minutes. To the extent that Hon. Members are now recognized, may I remind them of the comments by Members themselves to the effect that exchanges should be short and sharp.

Mr. Watson: Mr. Speaker, I would just like to make a very brief contribution to the point of order before proceeding to my question, the contribution being that I have no quarrel whatsoever with the point being made that priority should be given to Members of the Opposition during this question period. But it seems to me that we could follow a format that is somewhat similar to what happens during the regular Question Period where Members on the backbench of the Government side do have a rare opportunity to ask questions. They are not given priority, but they do have an opportunity once in a while. As long as that is followed, it seems to me that it will work out.

My question to the Minister is based on a comment made before Christmas—and it may have been corrected by now. The Royal Commission that was established on Canada's economic future, which is headed by Mr. Macdonald, apparently, initially at least, had not invited anyone from the high technology area to join. I am wondering whether or not that oversight has been corrected, and the Minister can inform us about that. I would appreciate any information the Minister might have on the type of co-ordination that has been established for making sure that the Provinces and ourselves are working in the same direction in so far as training is concerned for industries and careers of the future.

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Speaker, on the first point I think, obviously, it would be important that someone familiar with, in fact expert in, the high technology sector be involved in some manner in that Commission. That is not my responsibility. But if there is not a member on the Commission, I am sure the technology sector will make very extensive and complete representations to the Commission, as they have done in my case and I am sure with many other Ministers.

With respect to the issue of co-ordination, on the training side and, in fact, the whole technology development side, we have now, with the advent of the new Government reorganization which is yet to be adopted by this House but which, for practical purposes, we are operating under, established a mechanism which I think will be very effective in co-ordinating the federal role in technology and research and development with provincial roles and provincial priorities. The general development agreements, I hope, will be negotiated and executed as the old agreements expire and they will perhaps form the basis for an agreement with the provinces individually and with the regions as to what directions we must move in in areas of technology. Because it is absolutely clear that we cannot in this vast country fragment our efforts; we must create as much synergism as possible.

I see I am asked to shorten my comments and I will therefore sit down.

Mr. Crombie: My question will be brief, Mr. Speaker, and I appreciate the comments made by Hon. Members on that point. I simply want to make sure that the Minister understood, in answering the question which he has undertaken to do—and I appreciate that very much—the nature of my question. I am concerned, as are many others, about the process by which the $150 million has been spent. If the Minister would have a member of his staff get in touch with the Employment and Immigration Department, they would advise him that the immediate employment stimulation program is not really a program because it does not have an official application form, an official public application procedure. Most of the job-creation programs that the Minister was describing are characterized by a public application form and a public procedure, so people know how money is being spent. This particular program, at best, is shrouded in mystery, and I would like to ask the Minister to make sure I am provided with a description of the process by which the $150 million was spent.

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Speaker, I think that is a perfectly fair question. No expenditure of taxpayers' funds by any Government should be shrouded in mystery, and if the Hon. Member feels that it is I will try to clarify the mystery for him, although, as I say, it is not directly within my area of jurisdiction. But I will certainly raise the matter with my colleague.

Mr. Kempling: Mr. Speaker, I have just a short question for the Minister. In his comments I think he was reading off a long list of plusses for the Government and actions they had taken. He mentioned the Chrysler diesel plant and I do not think he really meant that. I think he is aware there is some reverse action being taken on that, and he should clarify that.

The second question I want to put to him is this. One of the difficulties I am running into in my constituency is not only that I have untrained and unskilled people applying for unemployment, but I also have a large number of trained individuals, that is, engineers, architects, certified electrical and mechanical technicians, welders, millwrights and people who have industrial skills. Some of them are going in for retraining. How we are going to retrain them is the point, and what are we going to do with those people who were at a fairly high level of income for a good number of years, and who in many cases held senior positions, but now find themselves not only unemployed but unemployable?

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Speaker, I would like to tie that question to my very brief and perhaps over-simplified explanation of unemployment. It is clear in the case of these skilled people to whom the Hon. Member for Burlington (Mr. Kempling) makes reference that the recession effectively has had an impact on their companies and their jobs. As we see a turnaround in the economy, we will expect to see those skilled people certainly back as active participants in the workforce. There may be exceptions to that. The technological revolution we have talked about has created a need for different kinds of skills and training. As I mentioned, that problem has to be identified and pursued in terms of recycling, retraining and computer training. Many corporations are now doing this in-house, such as the 3M Corporation in London, Ontario has undertaken for its employees. This is the way we have to move. People must have these new skills to take on these new challenges.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I congratulate the Minister, not that I agree with what he was saying, but for the way he said it. Also, he was prepared to engage in a debate. We had a real debate this afternoon, and I congratulate him for that.

What disturbs me is that industries just do not appear. Because you want a hi-tech industry in Sudbury, it is not going to suddenly appear there. People in places such as Sudbury will get short-term jobs which really do not mean very much in the long run. Private investment is not working. Is the Minister prepared to do what some other countries have done in order to compete, namely, to plan investment priorities? In other words, to commit ourselves to a planned investment economy?

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Speaker, I am disappointed. I said earlier that I felt from the comments we heard before lunch that the Hon. Member was not rooted in the ideology of his Party. Perhaps his true colours are showing when he talks about a planned economy. I would be the last to agree that private investment is not working. Private investment will work. It will always work when the appropriate investment climate has been created. That appropriate investment climate requires a reduction in inflation which, of course, is the purpose and point of the six and five program.

As inflation and interest rates fall, I have no concern about the private sector making investments in areas that are of interest to all Members of this House, certainly in terms of job creation and economic growth.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I should advise the House that the ten-minute exchange period has more than expired. I tried to be particularly generous with it because of the points of order that occurred earlier. It is time now that I recognize the Hon. Member for Richmond-South Delta.

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the foregoing discussions on procedure were essential. But it is also the wish of members of this Party to have adequate time to deal with the motion before the House, a motion which "condemns the Government for its callous disregard and tragic neglect of the dire social and economic plight of over two million Canadians". The Minister responsible for Economic Development (Mr. Johnston) appears to be leaving the Chamber. I had hoped he would stay because I want to respond to some of the remarks he made concerning his policies on science and technology in particular and industrial development in general.

Contrary to the implication and the verbiage of the Minister who just spoke, we do have a serious economic problem in Canada today. I challenge any Member of the Liberal Government to deny that there is a serious problem, far more serious than any of the major industrialized nations which are also having difficult times.

For example, the primary metals production industry is operating at 61 per cent of capacity, the transportation equipment industry at 59 per cent, the wood and forest products industry at 51 per cent, the electrical industry at only 67 per cent, the furniture industry at 58 per cent and the mining industry at approximately 57 per cent of capacity.

The after-tax profits of Canadian corporations has fallen some 60 per cent over the last year and business and corporate bankruptcies have virtually doubled since 1980. In fact, in British Columbia the number of business and corporate bankruptcies has doubled in the last 12 months. These are all evidence of a serious economic dilemma which this nation is contending with today. This ultimately translates into economic hardship and human suffering, as reflected in the motion before the House this afternoon.

As the Hon. Member for Rosedale (Mr. Crombie) suggested, we feel in general terms there are four important initiatives that need to be taken. First, we need to forge a new bond of trust and spirit of co-operation among business, labour and government. Second, we must encourage job-creating investment. The Minister of State for Economic Development did not say anything about what the Government is going to do to reverse the absolute destruction which that Government has caused of the investment climate in Canada.

Third, we must focus on the problems of productivity and the decline of Canada's international competitive advantage which has been traditional for this country, to the point where now out of the 24 members of the OECD nations, we are rated as the country with the lowest productivity improvement record. We need a means of dealing with this question of declining productivity. We need goals and we need tools.

I was very disappointed by the rhetoric of the Minister of State for Economic Development. He talked about consultation, programs and appointments to boards, but did not tell us where we were headed. He has no sense of appreciation that this country, with all of its potential, does not present to the Canadian people the leadership, goals, objectives and climate in which individuals can have confidence and invest in this country as a reflection of that confidence.

Canada's need to restore its access to world markets is at the heart of our economic dilemma. Before the end of this century, some two-thirds of the world's population will be clamouring for all the goods, services and comforts which Canadians have come to take for granted. Two-thirds of the world's population do without all those things that we benefit from.

We have to ask ourselves why we are not tapping into that opportunity. Why have Canadians taken an isolationist attitude that we can live to provide only the needs and services of Canadians? Why do we isolate ourselves economically by closing our borders and raising tariff barriers even higher, disregarding the fact that there is a tremendous opportunity to be harnessed which will produce employment for all Canadians?

While I appreciate the current emphasis on what is called high technology and electronics sectors, people around the world do not eat chips. They can eat potato chips which we can produce in great abundance. They certainly could use wood chips to produce paper, but not silicone electronic chips. It is an error of judgment on the part of those in powerful positions to place all of our eggs in one basket and put so much emphasis on the so-called high technology "silicone valley" mentality. That may be good for Ottawa and the immediate area, but it does not take advantage of the resources that we possess in great abundance, resources that people of the world need.

The people of the world, regardless of what self-styled experts in the House and Government may think, need food, clothing and shelter, which is made from agricultural commodities, petro-chemicals, forest products and the fishery. We in this nation and the Government in particular are totally neglecting these important sectors, totally disregarding the opportunity. We must not merely be content to continue to strip off our natural resources and export them, but to develop an industrial plan with specific goals to increase and upgrade the value added that we get out of those resources. That, Mr. Speaker, translates into jobs, and the cornerstone of realizing that opportunity is our science and technology policy. I would like to come back to that in a moment because that policy, which the Minister talks about in vague terms in terms of percentage of GNP, has to be much more comprehensive and dedicated to national objectives than anything this Government has produced in the last 14 years.

We have to ask ourselves, in looking at our mining industry, why it is that virtually every sector of the mining industry is in a severe slump, losing millions upon millions of dollars, with the iron ore shutdown at Schefferville, for example, the cutbacks in Labrador City and in the mines of Northern Ontario, or the major lay-offs in two north shore mines of the Quebec Cartier Mining Company. Falconbridge was shut down for most of last year, and the International Nickel Company is still shut down in Sudbury, with 10,000 mine workers laid off. We know why that industry is shut down, Mr. Speaker. It is because in 1950 Canada was one of the two major world producers of nickel, and with the help of the Canadian Government through its export development initiatives and CIDA initiatives, we now have 30 separate mining centres around the world mining nickel, and all but two or three of them are outside of Canada. We have cut off our own potential to continue to provide a viable income and well-being for the people of the Sudbury area because this Government has paid no attention to the decline of our international productivity and to the dangers of a growing surplus of world producers in that sector.

We have the case of the Cyprus Anvil Mining Company which has for years produced lead and zinc, shipped it by the White Pass & Yukon Railway to Japan where it goes into the Japanese automobiles. We have now a Government which has promised, since last October 5, to provide some means of overcoming the mismanagement of that company, after having forced the sale of that company from the original owners, known as Amoco, into the hands of Dome. And we know what a great performance record Dome has shown in recent months to the detriment and to the great financial burden of all Canadians. Now Dome, with the complicity of the Government, apparently wants to kill the mining industry in the Yukon, to close down the Cyprus Anvil Mine. They shut down the railway last week and we are told that with the cumulative snow pack it will not be possible to open that railway for at least six months. Meanwhile, the Japanese customers for that lead and zinc have found other countries to supply them that material. The contracts have not been fulfilled by Dome Mines. And we have a couple of thousand people in Faro in the Yukon who are losing hourly their entire future because of the inaction of this Government.

With respect to the Pine Point Mine in the Northwest Territories, another producer of lead and zinc, 50 per cent of that lead and zinc goes to the large smelter at Trail, British Columbia, Canada's oldest smelter. The federal Government has allowed Pine Point to be shut down because of labour problems, but primarily because the products just cannot find a market out there on a cost-productive basis. It cannot compete because of the burdens of taxation, energy costs, and all of the other factors which have prevented our Canadian mining industry from continuing to enjoy the markets which they have traditionally enjoyed.

To give an example of the value of upgrading our resources, Mr. Speaker, in terms of jobs created, it should be evident to Hon. Members of this House that if you shut down the mine at Pine Point where there are maybe 500 employees, you risk shutting down the smelter at Trail which employs some 8,000 workers because you no longer provide the feed stock for that mine. That should show the tremendous advantages in enhancing and upgrading the value of our national resources, and also the tremendous, implicit dangers in mismanaging our industry, or at least over-taxing them and burdening them with high energy costs, and a lack of Government support and encouragement for investment in this country through such measures as the October 12 budget. As a consequence, we are seeing our entire industrial infrastructure crumbling in this country. I was very disappointed that the Minister of State for Economic Development did not address this question.

In the case of coal, we have four or five major coal producers in Alberta and British Columbia all shutting down, or already shut down, and we have a major investment, including participation by the federal Government in the Northeast coal development, and no market for that coal.

Last week we saw that the Balmer Mines at Sparwood, British Columbia has laid off another 1,900 employees, essentially eradicating the economic base for another Canadian community. Yet the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), on returning from his globetrotting tour to Japan and the Pacific Rim, cannot tell us what he has done to improve our ability to market coal in the Far East. What has he done to address the problem we have with Japan producing highly industrialized products which we have imported over recent years, high quality products produced by very productive industries? We have not been able to find a way to negotiate with the Japanese a mutual trade agreement under which we would do more secondary upgrading of those products. In return, we would want to increase our sales of coal, lead, zinc, nickel and iron ore to our good Japanese friends who are so important to us in Western Canada. This Government has been dilly-dallying for months while it has seen our international resources crumble and our industries, at the same time, going without production because they have not been able to negotiate opportunities to build new plants in order to expand.

That brings me to the second important theme of my remarks, Mr. Speaker, and that has to do with the fact that we in Canada must put a much higher priority on research and development, on applying new technology. To speak about a goal of 1.5 per cent of GNP by 1985 just shows the Minister's absolute ignorance of the demonstrated value of science and technology and the important goal it plays as the underpinning element of an over-all industrial plan. It is not a matter of the Government having to take over industries, and control, manipulate and redistribute their earnings. It is merely a matter of the Government recognizing the multiplier effect which comes into play when we make an adequate investment in research and development.

It is a fact that in 1969 Canada's investment in research and development was 1.5 per cent of its GNP. By 1980 it had dropped to .9 per cent of its GNP. The Minister has nothing to brag about, therefore, when he talks about having raised it to 1.2 per cent of the GNP by 1982. That is an appalling performance, Mr. Speaker, when we realize that Japan presently spends 2.8 per cent of its Gross National Product on research and development, and its target is 4 per cent. I would like to give an illustration of how important this is. The President of the National Research Council, reporting to the committee about a year ago, talked about a study which was done in the late seventies of the benefits accruing from the expenditure of federal money on research and development programs through the Industrial Research Assistance Plan. This plan is terribly under-funded, but over that period they tracked what the return was to Canada after having spent $100 million, roughly, on research and development. There was a seven to tenfold increase in the return in the earnings which the companies developed out of those research projects. There was over $1 billion of earnings from companies whose economic bases were the research projects which cost $100 million. The tax revenues which flowed back to Government in that period were $350 million, or three and a half times as large as the initial investment.

The point is, Mr. Speaker, we have to recognize that the less we spend on research and development in this country, the fewer jobs we are going to have, and the more priority we give it, the more opportunity we are going to give to our young people. The situation in Canada is appalling, Mr. Speaker, when we look at the case of Japan, which produces eight times as many engineering graduates per capita as British Columbia and four times as many as all of Canada, when we look at their industrial development and the progress they are making, when we look at the benefits to their young people and the healthy attitude between labour and management, the desire to work together for the betterment of the nation. And it all started with a Government which was prepared to make a commitment to invest in research and development.

It is a fact this Government is preoccupied with the redistribution of income. We are redistributing more than 50 per cent of income earned by Canadians, and half of that goes to social and cultural programs. I think these are all very worthy initiatives but I have to make the point that if we cannot put more than 1.5 per cent of our GNP into R and D, yet spend more than 50 per cent on social programs, then we are perpetrating on Canadians the greatest social injustice of all. That, Mr. Speaker, is the injustice of unemployment, of a desperate Government creating short-term programs which fit nowhere within a framework of long-term goals. The Government creates gimmicky, alphabet soup programs. As the Minister himself implied when he listed off all the jobs to be created, virtually all of them are examples of temporary jobs. This whole notion of a temporary solution is at the heart of this Government's ineptitude, and it must be changed. I am afraid that change will only come with a change to a Progressive Conservative Government.

We should not continue to fritter money away on short-term programs such as NEED, CCDP, SRF and SDP and all these other things, without recognizing that the jobs created are temporary. In fact, under the NEED and the CCD programs most of the people who get those jobs are people who have no particular skills. Yet if you look at the unemployment statistics, the people who are lining up in droves at UIC offices are people who have lots of skills such as carpenters, machinists, electricians, chemical and civil engineers.

I am told there are no engineering projects on the drawing boards of the major consulting companies in this country. That tells us that four years from now there will not be any new plants irrespective of all the gobbledygook of the Minister of State for Economic Development. We are frittering money away on programs designed to rake grass over the wintertime, using UIC exhaustees. I know they need work, but I am saying that our priorities are misplaced. If an engineering company is working, then there are contracts being let. There is work for carpenters, concrete men, form makers, miners, and then there is work for teachers and storekeepers. That is the multiplier effect, Mr. Speaker. But if we dump the limited resources we have—in fact, they are just deficit dollars—into temporary initiatives, then we are not investing those limited resources in the right direction. I submit, Mr. Speaker, it is high time this Government recognized that this important change of priority is essential within a framework which encourages investment and private sector participation. We must get away from this bail-out mentality and realize that private individuals in this country will move ahead at a great pace if only the Government of Canada would get off their backs.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I rise to ask a question. I found the remarks of the previous speaker very interesting. He spoke a lot about Japanese technology and investment by their Government into research and development. I found that fascinating because I have done a lot of reading in that area myself. But one thing he mentioned early on rather puzzles me. He was complaining that our Government is putting too much emphasis on and too much money into advance technology in our country. I would like to ask him where he gets that kind of information because all the studies I have seen, like the Science Council of Canada and others, have said that in comparison with the Japanese, Americans, French, Germans, Austrians and others, we are putting less public money into advance technology, and one of the problems we are going to have today and tomorrow because of the rapid change of technology in our society is that we will not be competitive with these other societies now starting to restructure and retool. That is what I get from all the studies I have seen, and that is what we have been told by people who have studied the area. The Hon. Member is now telling us the opposite, and I wonder if he can enlighten us as to where he gets that information from.

Mr. Siddon: I am happy to respond, Mr. Speaker, because I think the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) somewhat misconstrued what I was saying. I was saying people cannot eat microchips. There are many, many nations around the world which can produce integrated circuits and electronic gadgets more cheaply than we can. I am not speaking against the Telidon concept or automatic process control in industry. I am very conscious of the important role that technological innovation and development will play in the future. It will provide opportunity to all Canadians.

What I am saying, Mr. Speaker, is that our strength must be in the application of those technologies, not in developing another whole range of some computers or another Challenger jet to sell to major corporations around the world. Our priority has been misplaced in deciding we could not think big in terms of technology or production; we had to produce excellent products in small numbers, like the Candu reactor.

I think we made a lot of bum decisions over the last 15 years because of incompetent leadership from the Government, and the scientific community to some extent, in directing us along the lines they have. I think we should harness the resources we have in greatest number and use high technology to make those available to the people of the world. I am talking about mining and forest machinery, special purpose transportation vehicles, electric commuter cars and rapid transit systems. I am talking about modular home designs which can be exported everywhere in the world. I am talking about water systems, sewage disposal systems, all highly sophisticated in terms of their technological application. We are second to none in the world. We have the unique expertise to produce those because we have a history of that kind of thing. We can marry our natural resources and our engineering expertise to high technology in order to harness a market, fuels and feedstocks from coal; LNG fueling systems, because we use natural gas in various ways more heavily than any other country in the world. We talk about exporting the gas; what about the systems which will use it? I am referring to such systems as electrically powered locomotives, special purpose paper products, agricultural products, drugs, medical diagnostic equipment, or industrial automation systems. I am talking about using that high technology, not just bragging about having a silicon valley of the north here in the Ottawa area to compete with Stanford or MIT or something like that. That is a very narrow application of the concept of high technology; I am talking about something much larger than that.

Mr. John Evans (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I am very happy to have a chance to enter into this debate. This is not a unique or unusual debate. Rather, it is along the same lines we have had on so many occasions since I was elected a Member of this House. I am sure it is a familiar theme to a great many Members, and it touches on an area we are all concerned with.

I think I have done this before, but I would like to again issue a challenge to my colleagues in the House. In debates such as this we try to get down to an analysis of the fundamental problems facing the country. We try to put aside the rhetoric and discuss the reasons for our problems. I know some Members will say, as the Hon. Member for Richmond-South Delta (Mr. Siddon) is doing right now, that the reasons for the problem are the Government. Mr. Speaker, that is pure nonsense.. There are fundamental structural problems in our society which we will have to come to grips with if we are to return to a sustained prosperity.

Mr. Benjamin: You have had 15 years to do that.

Mr. Evans: We have to get down to the fundamental question of why we have inflation in our society; why we have low productivity and chronically high unemployment, and probably, most important of all, why we have unemployment of our youth running in the range of 25 per cent, and what implications this has for our ability to provide advanced social services in the future, or even maintain the level we now enjoy. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that until we really start to come to grips with and debate seriously in this House those fundamental questions and causes of our problems, only then, it seems to me, are we going to be able to begin to find solutions which can be implemented by Government.

• (1520)

It is not good enough to stand here simply and blame Government—to say that it is the Government's fault, that the Government has not done this or the Government has not done that. I believe that all Members of the House understand that that is not good enough. The people of the country understand that that is just shadowboxing, just the political rhetoric of the House of Commons. They are becoming more and more disenchanted with all of us because they do not see us coming to grips with the problems that are of greatest concern to them. They see us standing in the House yelling at one another, pointing the finger and saying that the blame lies here or there. Assessing blame does not do any of us any good and it does not help people with their problems.

If we are to come to grips with the real problems raised by the Hon. Member for Rosedale (Mr. Crombie), we have to be willing to traverse a field that is full of sacred cows that we have been unwilling to deal with. We are going to have to deal with some fundamental social issues that we have not been willing to deal with in the past, because they are socially explosive.

An issue we are addressing in another area of debate is that of capping the indexing of certain social programs. I believe that is the tip of the iceberg, Mr. Speaker. That issue will not go away after the six and five program has been fully implemented. We will have to come to grips with problems such as the intergenerational transfer of funds. It will not be good enough, when the Government tries to come to grips with them, if the response of other Members of the House is to try to make political mileage out of the fundamental issues that have to be dealt with.

At some point in the very near future, if we are to put the recession back on track, we are going to have to come to grips with special interests. We are going to have to step on some toes. If we do not do this together, I do not think we are going to find a Government that is willing to take these hard decisions but if they are not taken, the country will go down the drain.

It seems to me that these are the issues on which the people expect leadership. Where do we want to go as a nation? What is the model of where we want to go? What kinds of major, hard decisions do we have to take to get there? We cannot get there without taking hard decisions. If the Government tries to take some of those hard decisions and receives nothing but condemnation from the other side of the House, then it is going to be very reluctant to take them. I do not care whether it is a Conservative Government, a New Democratic Government or a Liberal Government, it is going to be very reluctant to face those problems. I think we have to start pulling together.

The Hon. Member for Rosedale said that we have to build a national consensus. I agree with him but to do so, we have to build a national consensus in this House of Commons. We can show leadership in building a national consensus. We represent the nation. If we cannot develop a national consensus on how to come to grips with the problems, how can we expect the people of the country to develop a national consensus? It seems to me that we have to come to grips with that.

I think we must begin with the notion that we can only have a rising standard of living if we are willing to become more productive. The Government does not have a bottomless trough. It is no use Members of the Opposition or Members on this side demanding that Ministers put more money in our ridings, not take money from our constituents but from someone else's constituents, yet that is the kind of thing we hear all the time. It puts the Government and Ministers in the position that no matter what they do, they are roundly condemned on all sides.

There are other issues here, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) has been diligently trying to come to grips with problems regarding the western rail transportation system and the Crow rate issue. I can assure you that if things do not change, that will become the monumental political football of the decade. Not only need it not become a political football, but it should not. If that does happen, however, we will probably forgo the development of an efficient rail transportation system in the west. Western economic development will suffer and the nation will suffer. I think it is time we started to think of a consensus on that subject instead of trying to find ways of condemning the Minister.

We have to come to grips with the fundamental issue that workers cannot demand more than is justified by their productivity, and that no amount of monopoly power granted to labour unions can justify demands for more. We have to come to grips with the fact that management cannot expect more than it is willing to give and cannot expect loyalty from workers if, when things get tough, those workers are thrown out of work. I do not think that owners of capital can have higher profits during the good times and not expect to share the burden during the bad times.

Those are the kinds of issues that I think have to be debated, Mr. Speaker. How can we come to a national consensus where workers share in profits through good times and also bear their share, across the board, in the lowering of incomes of bad times? It only delays the day of reckoning for any group to run to the Government for protection from competition or to ask for more monopoly power to protect their position within the domestic economy. I guarantee that such action will intensify the severity of adjustments that have to be made in future. It does not put off the day of reckoning, but just makes things harder when we have to face them.

The symptoms of this have been growing during the decade of the seventies. Collectively, we have been unwilling to come to grips with these problems, and now they have come upon us in full force in the worst recession of the past 50 years. The symptoms were present in this country, in the United States and in western Europe, but the political system was unable to face the facts and make the hard social choices that should have been made if we are to move forward.

Inflation was a warning. It was a sign that we were trying to live beyond our means. That is what inflation is, Mr. Speaker. Inflation is the automatic adjustment mechanism of the economic system which is trying to bring incomes into line with output.

Mr. Benjamin: That is what Mackenzie King said and he was wrong too.

Mr. Evans: That is precisely what it is. It is the signal. The answer to this fundamental fact of life is that the system is trying to adjust. One reaction to this was to index.

Indexation is a very interesting phenomenon, Mr. Speaker. It protects those who need protection most. That is fine, but as the indexation system spreads, it implies that the system is going to adjust and reduce incomes to fall in line with output. It implies that those who are indexed are going to be immune to inflation. For those who are not indexed it implies that they are going to pay a heavier and heavier price. The group that was not indexed during the last 10 or 15 years of high inflation, that is, the people who put their money in savings or invested in plant and equipment, have been devastated by inflation, along with others. That is one reason why there is not more investment in this country. The real return on investment and risk taking has been devastated by inflation, while other incomes have been protected. Our personal income tax system was indexed. Our social system was indexed. We had indexation in other areas, but the system still had to adjust to excess demands and it put it all on to the part that was not indexed. That is unacceptable for the future. We have to ensure that the burden of our readjustment is fairly shared throughout the system and that no one integral part of our system bears such an enormous burden of those adjustments that they simply disappear.

We can adjust quickly and equitably to the changes that are going to be necessary in the future or we can respond to the kinds of cries from special interest groups that we have heard so many times in the past. We can adjust slowly and painfully. I am afraid right now that the process we are going through is an example of the latter. It is a slow, painful, adjustment process that we are going through where a great many people are being devastated as a result of the fact that our system has a built in structural rigidity that will not allow that adjustment except on the backs of certain classes of our society.

Let us examine one aspect of the compensation system. I heard the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell), for whom I have great respect, talking about the Japanese system. I am not touting the Japanese system, but I would like to put forward a hypothesis. In the main, the Japanese system has a very interesting system of compensating. There are differences, but the basic system of compensation is a relatively low fixed wage rate and a very generous bonus system based on productivity and profitability over and above. During good times the profitability and the profits of the firm are shared equitably with the workers. During bad times the variable part of the wage is reduced. The fixed component is low enough that the firm's cost structure reduces during those times. It can stay in business and does not have to throw workers out of their jobs to cut costs.

Another thing that a compensation structure based upon productivity and upon a fair and equitable sharing of profits does is that it leads to the kinds of so-called cultural things that we have seen in the Japanese system that I do not think are cultural at all. They are economic, quality circles. If you, as a worker, benefit from the productivity and profitability of the firm, you, therefore, have an incentive to ensure that everything that can be done to improve the competitiveness and the profitability of that firm is going to happen. It leads you to work co-operatively with your fellow workers on the production line. If they work better and you work better as a team, the firm is more efficient and more profitable. As a result you get more. It also has the same effect between labour and management. If labour and management work co-operatively, the company is more efficient and more profitable. The company makes more money, and not only do the managers and owners take profits, which is the way our system works, but the workers share in those profits.

In our system we have an adversarial relationship, a compensation system which says that we will establish relatively high fixed wage rates, as high as we can fix them, and there is a monopoly power afforded to unions and to the companies. But the power of the unions to extract the highest possible fixed wage is seen as a laudable objective.

This does several things. First, given that you have a high fixed wage rate, the incentive to work together co-operatively with your colleagues on the production line or between management and labour is not there. Indeed, you can turn it around. How do you get more compensation once you have a high fixed wage rate? You work less, and so it leads to featherbedding—

Mr. Benjamin: That is hogwash.

Mr. Evans: It leads to a situation where you rate bust because the compensation system allows you to increase your personal satisfaction by reducing the work effort for the fixed wage. It also creates a situation where when things get bad the company has to reduce its costs for survival, and the only way it can do that is by sloughing off workers. Instead of equitably sharing the reduction in income that is required by tough times, the system demands that a few workers get thrown out of work, so a few get thrown out to bear the entire income loss that we should all be sharing fairly and equitably. It leads to adversarial relationships between labour and management. If management can screw more productivity out of the workers, who benefits from higher profits? Management and the owners do. The workers do not benefit at all.

What is the incentive for the workers to put out as much as management would like to see them put out? There is none. As a result there is confrontation and an adversarial relationship. Those are the kinds of structural problems I am talking about.

The compensation system, something which is fundamental, is how we reward the people in our society for putting forth effort, and I suggest to you that we are doing it wrong in our society. I would suggest that the cultural system in Japan is not what has led to their good labour-management relations. It is just a sane and sensible compensation system. People who work share in the good things that come from their work; workers, managers and owners.

We have to look at some changes to our Labour Code and some changes to the way we do things in this country if we want to have that kind of co-operative relationship here that we see in some other countries.

I believe I have one or two minutes left in the time allotted to me. One of the most fundamental problems this system breeds is the problem we are facing with youth unemployment. We have a system where within our union structure the seniority system rules. Here we have 25 per cent youth unemployment. When the young people try to get work, if they are hired they are the last ones in and the first ones out when we have an economic downturn. To try to compensate for that we have tried to build all kinds of other things into our system. We have put in minimum wage laws and all kinds of factors to offset or to try to boost the incomes. We put taxes on employment for the business so we put in disincentives for the business people to hire young people because they are unskilled, and we put in disincentives for them to seek employment through the relatively generous social programs. We will wind up in a situation in five or ten years where we will have a very large number of people in their thirties with no job experience, no skills, and no hope. These are the kinds of fundamental issues that I am talking about with which we will have to come to grips in debates in this House of Commons. I put that challenge to my colleagues on the other side of the House.

Mr. Crombie: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member, but before I do, I would be remiss if I did not offer my congratulations to him for what I thought was an exceedingly good speech. I might say it was a very courageous one. I know that I speak for a number of people who are here in the Chamber. It was an outstanding speech.

The Hon. Member indicated that now is the time to reassess some assumptions that we have had in the past. Does the Hon. Member support social programs being based on need or on the principle of universality?

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, that is one of the issues which I think has to be debated in this House of Commons fairly and openly, not with any political malice behind the scenes. There are two sides to that issue. Certainly your resources go further when you use a selective system, but you also create some very real social problems by doing that. A stigma is associated with those programs as well as the need to police very seriously the program that exists. Universal programs move away from that but at the cost of a much higher resource allocation to the program.

I have supported universal programs. At one time I was in favour of a guaranteed annual income which, by its very nature, will be selective if it is run through a system. I have had serious second thoughts about that as a result of some experiments which have been carried out in the United States and in Winnipeg with regard to a guaranteed annual income.

At this time I tend to favour universal programs because of the negative aspects of selectivity. As we get into a position where our resources to provide help and the best possible support to those in the greatest need become more limited, we will certainly have to come to grips with the question of selectivity versus universality. I would welcome hearing the views of other Hon. Members in a very serious debate on that question in the House of Commons.

Mr. Siddon: Mr. Speaker, from that answer, it is obvious that the Hon. Member does not know which side of the fence he is on. All the debate in the world will not extract a decision from Members if they cannot answer questions.

I have three short questions. The Hon. Member implied that it is not only the blame of the Government, but that we are all to blame. Does that suggest that he denies the responsibility to provide leadership, or does he believe that this Government has been providing the leadership required by this country? Second, he placed great emphasis on the deindexing initiatives of the Bills presently before the House as if this were the Government's most important initiative for coming to grips with our serious economic crisis. Does he believe that the most important initiatives which merely reduce the incomes of all Canadians equally will solve the structural problems and attitudinal problems in our society?

Since he dwelled on productivity and the deficiency of a compensation system, I would like a specific answer as to what particular legislative steps and consultative steps the Government has taken to overcome that problem. Does he feel that the Government is taking those initiatives which he would advocate? Let us hear some real answers for a change.

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, with regard to the six and five initiatives, I think it is extremely important. I would say to the Hon. Member that that program has formed the basis for the establishment of a national consensus on the need for Government action as well as some agreement on the nature of that need. I am not saying that it is a be-all and end-all but it has allowed us to establish some form of national consensus upon which we can build in the future. We have to expand on that national consensus, which is the very theme the Hon. Member for Rosedale was trying to build upon in his initial comments. I think the Hon. Member would agree that the beginning of a national consensus was formed around that six and five program. I think it has to be nourished further, and I hope he would have some comment on that.

I told the Hon. Member my position with regard to the question of universality. At this time I am in favour of universality because of the negative aspects of selectivity. I am not saying that this is the route the country will have to take in the final analysis. That debate certainly must be entered into. I do not believe that I am copping out at all. At this time I favour universality.

The last question asked by the Hon. Member concerned productivity and compensation. I would suggest to him that this issue, which was raised in questions I asked during my speech, has not been raised in the House before. I am in the process of raising those issues with my colleagues on this side at the present time. Today, I have raised those issues with my colleagues on the other side of the House. Therefore, the Government has obviously not introduced policies to deal with them. That is not to say that I am the only one who has contemplated these issues. However, I have not heard debate on them before. I welcome the Hon. Member's contribution to that debate, should he decide to contribute.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member's constituency includes Parliament Hill. I wish that we had a Member for Parliament Hill in particular, namely, the Speaker, due to the manner in which employees are treated here, with lay-offs and the type of salaries they receive.

When the Hon. Member talked about indexing—which the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) bragged about instituting because of its protection for those who cannot defend themselves against the ravages of inflation—he complained that it installed a structural rigidity. We now have 6 per cent and 5 per cent limits on pensions of Public Service and Crown corporation wages and salaries.

Would the Hon. Member tell us his view on implementing 6 per cent and 5 per cent on professional fees such as those of doctors, lawyers and chartered accountants? Is he prepared to say that under the next budget, 100 per cent of any increase in income over 6 per cent will get taxed back? Is he also prepared to say that management fees, management perks and consultant fees will also get taxed back 100 per cent for anything over 6 per cent?

Since he wants to do away with this structural rigidity, will he say that dividends, what he calls the owners of the private sector, will be held to 6 per cent and 5 per cent and the surplus profits will be reinvested into the economy?

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the Hon. Member knows as well as I do that questions dealing with prices are not something that this Government can bring down in a budget.

Mr. Benjamin: I never used the word "prices".

Mr. Evans: The prices charged by doctors and lawyers. Those are outside of this Government's jurisdiction as he knows from the AIB period. It was done with the consent of the provincial Governments. We have been told quite clearly that the provincial Governments will not support any form of mandatory wage and price controls. Quite frankly, I do not support mandatory wage and price controls. I do not believe that they work. It is just another rigidity built into the system which is compounded on top of other rigid programs.

When we were talking a moment ago about the necessity to consider how we determine who takes what out of the system, I was not only talking about the workers. I talked about the managers and the owners, and I suggest that if you review what I said, Mr. Speaker, you will find that I was equally concerned about both sides, labour and management and capital and labour. We have to find a better way to split the rewards since it is not being done well at this time. That was the theme I was trying to make.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the Hon. Member a question. He stated that the country had to make some hard choices. There has been an implicit criticism of the Government in terms of a myriad of policies on which the Government has not made tough choices.

The Science Council of Canada in its report entitled "Threshold Firms: Backing Canada's Winners" said that backing the winners seems like a good objective for an industrial policy, but Canada's policies over the past years have been directed far more to propping up the losers in troubled or dying industries. Is my hon. friend advocating, either personally or on behalf of whomever he is speaking for today, that we should prop up, assist and support the high technology industries and other industries which are perceptibly emerging as winners and forget or withdraw support for the textile industry which is apparently losing and dwindling in Canadian industry, the automobile industry which is apparently in great difficulty at this point, and the small parts manufacturing industry which is apparently in great difficulty? Is he advocating that type of industrial strategy with that kind of tough choice? In other words, does he agree with the general thesis of the Science Council of Canada?

Mr. Evans: Basically, my response to that would be, no. To my understanding, the Science Council of Canada advocates an industrial strategy in which the Government would select winners and losers, cause the losers to go under and support the winners. While that is very laudable and sounds good—and basically it is what governments have tried to do—we wind up with a strategy which does exactly the opposite because in trying to help the winners someone has to decide. I would rather have the market decide and then have the Government assist society to make the transition. By looking at such things as the compensation system and job security, we would be much better able to help people affected by industrial relocation and dislocation than we are under the current system. Rather than propping up, let us help people, not the companies.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate in the debate on the Opposition motion today because it focuses on some very real problems in the country. The motion of the Hon. Member for Rosedale (Mr. Crombie) outlines the callous disregard and tragic neglect of the dire economic and social plight of over 2 million Canadians who are unemployed today. Also it expresses concern for those Canadians whose jobs are at risk today.

The motion sets out five steps to restore the social and economic health of Canada, that is, by forging a social and economic national consensus, encouraging job creating investment, establishing a national productivity strategy and rebuilding the confidence of individual Canadians as they look into the future to what the country has in store for them.

The social impact of what is happening today is a very real one for all Members of Parliament. I should like to refer to some letters I have received from constituents who have been very seriously affected by today's slowdown.

The first one is from a fourth year chemical engineering student who indicated that due to the present economic situation it appeared that he would unable to find suitable employment in Canada. He is looking to pursue his career outside the country. A great sense of loss was expressed in the letter on the part of the young man who devoted 17 years of his life to educate himself and now finds that there is no work. Another was from the mother of a 16-year old young man who was unable to find employment. She indicated that her son, Joseph, wanted to work, that he would work at anything, that he just wanted to be working. She said that he haunted Manpower offices and scoured every available newspaper but that each time the answer was the same; "We will have to let you know". Also she indicated that she was worried about her son, that he might be on the borderline of crime. This lady has a great sense of frustration and concern because her son desperately wants to find work but is unable to do so. That last letter was from a young man who began his first post-secondary job a few months back and three months later was laid off. He has now found a job but it took him 3.5 months to find it. Upon reading the letter the sense of cynicism and despair is very clear about the way things are going. It is not only indicative of the situation with which he is faced, because he found a job, but of a number of his friends who have been unable to find work.

Also I should like to refer to a very poignant experience about a lady who came to Canada from Poland 17 years ago. She had worked diligently, not in a high-paying job, at something which was able to give her a means on which to get by and have a roof over her head. She was able to save and buy her own home, but for the past nine months she has been unable to find work. She has looked everywhere. She said something to me which was very important. She said that she came from Poland to Canada because she wanted to be independent and to have that sense of self-reliance that she could control her own destiny, own her own home and not have to rely upon Government. Now she desperately wants to find a job so that she can have self-reliance, and she cannot find it. She thinks she will have to turn to the Government. She does not want to do that. She does not want to lose her independence which was her primary objective in coming to Canada 17 years ago.

All Members of Parliament are experiencing these same things. For this reason we have to take seriously the intent and the direction of the motion before the House. It is imperative that Government Ministers listen carefully. Also it is imperative that those who are not present today read carefully the speeches that have been made. I think a very clear consensus has developed in the speeches I heard, and I think I will contribute to that consensus in some of my remarks.

Let me look at what has happened over the past little while, the experience to date and the outlook over the next few months. We need only look at the OECD economic outlook for Canada. It does not hold a very promising future for Canada over the next 12 months. It predicted marginal GNP growth, increased unemployment, a flat consumer market and unfavourable business fixed investment. Also it indicated that it appeared unlikely that a significant recovery in activity would occur during the projection period. The prospects are for some further fall in the volume of consumer outlays as continuing high unemployment will militate against a significant reduction in the level of savings. People are saving their money because they are worried about their jobs. They are worried about the future and whether they will be able to maintain their homes and automobiles. This is why people are not spending today.

Since the level of unemployment will continue at the 13 per cent level, the outlook today is bad. It was bad all last year when OECD told us that Canada ranked twenty-fourth out of 24 industrialized countries. We are at a point today where we must take stock. We must understand where we are today and where we can go from here. I believe that over the past 30 years or so we have become less and less self-reliant, less inclined to seek the solutions we need but more inclined to look much more to Government. I believe this is the heart of the economic malaise of today.

Governments—not just the Liberal Government which has been in power for a good part of this period, but also a number of provincial Governments—have moved steadily away from the position where after the war economic growth and performance was the number one priority, to the point where there are a number of other competing factors which are usually described under the very seductive heading of "quality of life". In some cases they enjoy equal rank with economic performance and in other cases they have a higher ranking. We have reached a point where we must re-establish economic growth as the number one objective. We must never lose sight of those quality-of-life objectives. We must do our utmost to maintain that. In future we must constantly remind ourselves it is only through a healthy and growing economic climate that we can enjoy and maintain our quality of life. We must realize that it is conditional upon our success in achieving sustainable economic growth, higher levels of employment and stability in prices and interest rates. We must start now by establishing some new objectives and some new priorities for the country. I am not advocating any wrenching change in the system. Our economic system is basically sound. Nor am I proposing some sentimental return to the good old days, because I think we all know economically and politically that simply it is not possible. So my first objective for our country, and a very simple one, is to try to do a little better economically than our dominant trading partner, the United States. I stated this in one of my first speeches, after I was nominated for election in my riding some five years ago, and I must say that in the intervening period I have had serious second thoughts as to whether that was the right objective because that country was not doing as well as I thought it should do. But now that I see it improving and in many cases surpassing our economic performance, I think that is an appropriate objective for us to follow.

How should we measure this? I think we should be designing our economic policies to do just a little bit better than they do, in our economic growth, our performance with respect to inflation, employment growth, unemployment levels and in the whole performance of our competitive position, the value of our dollar.

As a second priority I believe we should establish a sound economic performance as our primary policy objective. Again, to repeat myself, while I would never relegate those quality of life objectives to a secondary position, I believe we must realize that these objectives are only obtainable on an ongoing basis if we enjoy a healthy economy. But put in its simplest terms, I may feel, and you may also feel, Mr. Speaker, that a cottage by a quiet lake in the country is the utmost in the quality of life, or a trip to Florida in the middle of winter, when it is cold as it is right now. But if we do not have the means to afford these things, if our economic performance is not good enough, our idea of the quality of life will bankrupt us, or at least will rob us of the necessities that we do need. That is the position that Canada has reached today.

My third priority is the key element in achieving the first two. This goes right back to the basis of the Opposition motion today. We must recognize that the way to achieve these goals is to build a social and economic consensus among our national partners, the provincial Governments, labour, business and the long-suffering, average Canadian.

I listened very carefully to what the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans) was saying about his idea of the importance of achieving that national consensus, because I believe that the Ministers on their side of the House in recent years have done their best not to try to build that national consensus. Our federal leaders have tried to govern through confrontation and conflict. I just remind you, Mr. Speaker, about the recent trip of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) when, in response to a very simple question about the importance of human rights in trade negotiations, rather than answer that in an unprovocative way, deliberately tried to provoke—and I would say he could not help it because of his nature—a very important element in that debate. Because he has provoked those people, the people who hold, very sincerely and emotionally, a sense of the importance of human rights in these countries and the desire to link these two, it has made the ongoing debate on improving either, one, the human rights performance, or two, the trade performance, of these countries much, much more difficult.

I am not so naive, Mr. Speaker, as to expect that relations will change overnight. Nor do I expect our future relations between the different national bodies will be totally without conflict. But let us look at Japan, to which many have referred in the House this afternoon. Japan has succeeded through co-operation and through national consensus. The experts say this is just not possible in Canada, that the federal Government could just never achieve the strength that the Japanese leaders have been able to achieve. But because they say that, because we have a very diverse country, is that any reason why we should deliberately take the reverse approach and govern in a way which deliberately provokes differences and confrontation? That is the attitude that must change and it is the attitude which must change at the top, with the federal Government and with the Cabinet, if we are ever to come close to achieving the national consensus and policy so many of us have talked about this afternoon and which is so important in meeting the very tough international world today.

My fourth objective must arise out of the conclusion which must be reached by national consensus. We must accept the fact that Government policy must build self-reliance. We must reverse the growing trend to more reliance on Government. Canadians, both individuals and business, must not constantly turn to Government for support and for a bail-out, and Governments must say no more often and must explain fully and honestly to Canadians why they are saying no.

Canada today is in a serious economic recession, and in this environment it is natural to expect that many Canadians will be looking more to Government for help. But we are also in a period of major industrial transition. People will lose their jobs; companies will go bankrupt, for reasons which are primarily related to this changing environment. The world is changing and it is changing fast. Many Canadians will adjust and they will make it through, but many will not. And the role in Government in this instance is not to bail out companies or to sustain jobs which can no longer be supported. Canadians understand that this change is upon us. We must accept it. We must adapt to it and we must maximize the benefit that will come from these changes.

The role of Government is to help Canadians meet this need for change. It must support manpower and retraining programs in a major way. It must assist and encourage companies to change, through incentives for research and product development. And it must maintain a safety net to catch and assist those individuals who are having trouble adjusting. Put in its simplest terms, Governments must help us all to prepare for the future, not relive the past. This will require a major change in attitude by Governments and by individual Canadians.

I think many Canadians have made the adjustment. I think they have accepted the need for that change, but I do not believe that Governments have moved nearly as fast as they should have done. This surely is an area in which Government must lead, not be drawn in to the future, kicking and screaming, after valuable time has been lost.

My final priority is very much consistent with my Conservative philosophy. We must move into this new world by placing primary reliance on the initiative and determination of the individual. I am convinced that the combined will, intelligence and energy of many individuals, acting in their own self-interest in building for their own future, is much more powerful and knowledgeable than a small coterie of politicians and bureaucrats making centralized decisions here in Ottawa.

For the very same reason, I have more confidence and faith in an economy built on a thriving, vigorous and self-reliant small business sector than one which is dominated by a concentration of Government-owned and large privately-owned companies. Our future must surely rely on this type of society and economy. It is the surest guarantee of those economic freedoms which are so fundamental to our way of life in Canada.

We are now entering a period in which there will be great pressures on individual Canadians, as well as on our economy and institutions. We must demonstrate great courage and determination as a nation and as individuals. We must tell Governments that they must not cave in and bail out the past. As individuals we must strive harder to get by on our own and to reawaken that spirit of enterprise that brought this country to its feet in its earlier days but which has slipped somewhat in recent years.

Now, those are the five objectives I have set out, and I want to move quickly into some of the specifics that I believe we can be looking at in addressing the specific problems of today.

Let me analyse the current problem in its simplest terms. We are in a vicious circle where we have a lack of business confidence because consumers are not buying and where we lack consumer confidence because they fear for their jobs. But because they fear for their jobs and they are not buying, business confidence falls because businesses are not selling things. We have to break out of that circle and we must, somewhere along the line, break the circle to improve the confidence of one of these elements. That is the biggest challenge of governments; how to stabilize that unemployment figure. I believe the way to do it is through new investment. This is not going to come from existing companies, because most existing companies have gone through a very wrenching experience in recent years in which they have tried to scale back to build a more productive enterprise. They will not be going out to hire people very quickly. We have to look to new business investment, small business start-ups and foreign investment. The small business organization recently submitted a report to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) which deals with a number of these areas. I urge the Minister to consider these carefully when preparing his budget.

I also urge the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister to look very carefully at the role of foreign investment in this country. In Question Period today he referred to the job-creation aspect of new investment coming in. I agree. For the last three years we have been pleading with them to take that into account. Also, let us not forget the fact that foreign investment brings new technology and a more efficient type of operation in some instances.

Let me make one final plea. Government Ministers and others talk about the need for a higher deficit to stimulate the economy. I draw their attention to the fact that in the past, month mainly because of the spectre of high deficits in the United States and high deficits in Canada, proportionately double what they will be in the United States, we have seen a levelling off in recent days, an increase in long-term interest rates. Higher deficits will snuff out economic recovery through higher interest rates. I hope that is the message the Minister of Finance is receiving from people in the community as he goes about conducting his pre-budget meetings.

In conclusion, I do not want to enter into a debate today on comprehensive policy. I tried to outline a broad thematic framework of five key objectives which I think are critically important to us to achieve the national consensus we all are talking about today. I have alluded to some alternatives that should be considered at the time of the next budget. I believe that these are the key to economic recovery and the rebuilding of confidence in our country so we can have a strong and self-reliant future. That is the way we have to develop our country in the eighties.

Mr. Peterson: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson) a question. It relates to his comments with respect to the effect that increased deficits would have on long-term interest rates. All of us concede there would be a crowding out and that might be part of it. I draw that to his attention in light of what was said by the Hon. Member for Rosedale (Mr. Crombie) who, in response to a question, indicated that he would be in favour of higher deficits at this time in order to help get our economy going and create meaningful jobs for those who are unemployed. Is the Hon. Member against higher deficits or is he in favour of higher deficits?

Mr. Wilson: Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member's question illustrates the real problem of understanding we have in this country of what is meant by higher deficits and what is meant by Government stimulus. It can come in many different ways. If he had listened carefully, he would have heard the Hon. Member for Rosedale say that the direction we in this Party would be following would be increased incentives for training, investment and investment in new technology.

The direction which this Government has followed, and has followed to an increasing degree in the past three years, is to do this through a grant where big money is paid out to selected elements of the economy, selected companies, rather than through a tax incentive where all companies can take advantage of it if they are going to participate directly in some sort of investment which will create economic activity immediately.

The difference is that we believe the incentive approach would have a much more immediate economic impact. Another aspect of it is that it is an investment in the future through training, product development and increased research activity. We believe the result will have considerably less impact on the deficit than the high profile megaproject infrastructure spending that the Minister of Finance is talking about. We believe our approach will have less impact on the deficit than those things which the Minister of Finance has been talking about.

Mr. Peterson: Mr. Speaker, I take it that the answer to the question is yes, the Conservative Party is not against higher deficits as they relate to the attempts by the Government to deal with job-training programs.

Mr. Wilson: Mr. Speaker, we think that the impact on the deficit in a very short period of time will be that the deficit will drop because there will be investment in new jobs, in new plants and equipment which will create new jobs, and take people off unemployment insurance and welfare. I again underline that it is an investment to create new technology and training programs to help individual Canadians face the future in a more productive way. The results will be a lower deficit.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Chair was prepared to recognize the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis). Perhaps there has been a change.

Mrs. Ursula Appolloni (York South-Weston): Mr. Speaker, I would have welcomed this debate infinitely more if the wording of the motion had been changed to reflect what I believe is an absolute necessity in this country, the necessity that we all get together as rational human beings without this unnecessary confrontation, and try to find among ourselves ways and means to end the unemployment situation which is reaching absolutely endemic proportions in all OECD countries. Instead, we are treated to such wording as blaming the Government for so-called "callous disregard and tragic neglect of the dire economic and social plight of over two million Canadians who are unemployed". That is palpably untrue and grossly unfair.

I will zero in on one sector only during my remarks, that is the unemployed youth, and quote some interesting statistics. The Minister already quoted a whole litany of programs put in place by this Government to help the unemployed.

As regards youth unemployment, Employment and Immigration Canada is spending about $2.5 million per day on youth aged 15 to 24 years through 20 different programs and services which provide either employment or employment development. Can that be called callous disregard? Obviously not.

Since the fall, special measures have been put in place for youth, specialized youth units in every Province of Canada, new youth out-reach projects and $10 million Canada community development projects.

I may stop at this point to remark on something which was said a little while ago by the Hon. Member for Richmond-South Delta (Mr. Siddon). He mentioned in particular the community development project as it is short-term and therefore, he implied, totally unworthy. Let me give one example of the kind of results that can be achieved through the various training programs put in place by this Government. I shall refer to one particular project that was funded by the community development program which happened to be in my riding.

The cost of the program over one year was exactly $100,000. We managed to get it repeated because of the success of the results. In one year and a half, that is since the inception of that project, the homes of 87 senior citizens and low-income people were renovated at a cost to the low-income owners of the materials only. A further 27 projects are already under way, and of prime importance to the young people of Canada, in that project alone, 21 young people have received training for which they have all now passed their apprenticeship aptitude tests. Two of those young people have themselves opened their own businesses and are in turn employing other youngsters. This is the kind of thing which can be done with good thinking and co-operation of all members of a community. This project itself has been so successful, it is interesting to note, that the model is now being accepted by no less an institute than the Kennedy Memorial Foundation of Boston, which only last week sent people up to Toronto to study the model. I would heartily recommend it to any Member of Parliament who is more interested in providing innovative programs in his or her particular constituency than in just griping about unemployment in the House of Commons.

We spoke about the need, Mr. Speaker, for total co-operation, and in that respect I hope the media were very factual in quoting recently a statement from the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis). I have not got the clipping in front of me, but he said that if we are really concerned about unemployment we would sit around and discuss it rationally and constructively among ourselves, not just point fingers. We could put our heads together, put our good will all together, to stop this canker in our society. I fervently wish that more people would adopt the same attitude. I do congratulate the Hon. Member. Instead, what we have is emotion, such as has been handed to us today.

May I make another comment on the wording of this motion? I think it is indicative also of a certain degree of, shall we say, ambivalence which exists in the Tory caucus. Not one word of mention is given to job creation. We talk about encouraging job-creating investment, but we do not talk about job creation. I am led to wonder, does that mean that every Member of the Tory caucus would have the Government stop immediately all job-creation programs? If that is so, let them say it. If they are not against job-creation programs, will they at least tell us which ones work? Will they give credit where the credit is due and therefore return some kind of confidence to the people of Canada, who otherwise, listening to these debates, would think, my goodness, their tax money is just being thrown away? That is not true. I have already pointed out one particular program only in my riding, which has incidentally been repeated in other parts of Toronto. I have offered it also as a model to any Hon. Member of this House who wishes to repeat it in his or her own riding. Results can be achieved if we work together. Instead, we are told that the Government is to blame. The Minister, in his speech this afternoon, besides mentioning a long litany of programs which have already been put in place to curb unemployment, also mentioned a long litany of countries which, unfortunately, are also suffering the scourges of high unemployment. Interestingly enough, not one Hon. Member from the other side has dared to blame those other Governments for their high unemployment. Do the Tories blame the Thatcher Government for the enormous unemployment which exists in Britain at this moment? Of course not. Do they blame the Reagan administration for the high degree of unemployment in the United States? Of course not.

Now that I have mentioned the United States I will say that it was just last night, I believe, through radio and television, that we heard reports of the scandalous incidents which are now occurring in the United States. It has been documented there. I mention that because, God knows, perhaps they even exist in Canada. People do not even have a roof over their heads any more in the United States. Last night a man was found frozen to death in a telephone booth in a city in the United States. Is that the country we want to emulate? God forbid. Yet is Reagan blamed for these kinds of situations? Of course he is not, nor should he be, if we are going to be fair. But in Canada, if it rains, it is supposed the Government must have ordered a rotten forecast.

We have to build confidence in the country, in the consumers and in business, and I believe we have to start by building a little confidence in ourselves, first as individual Canadians. More important, my colleague, the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans), mentioned the need to co-operate even in this House of Commons, to put aside at least some of the partisan barbs and sit down and, as my hon. friend the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap said, put our heads together and come up with some kind of remedy for the frightful situation we are in with the unemployed. Instead, unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, we spend our time sniping and criticizing each other, and really not getting on with the job at all. It is no wonder that the people of Canada are losing faith in this institution.

There is also another sector at which we must look very carefully. Are the media really doing a good job all the time in reporting the facts? Do they not also think that it is good, it is "with it" to be negative all the time? Whatever the Government may suggest has to be automatically wrong, because it was the Government who suggested it. Let me read from The Edmonton Journal, the edition, I believe, of January 18, 1983. The article is entitled, "The Marching Jobless". It mentions a suggestion made that to put young people in the Armed Forces would be in effect to ask them to mark time in the Armed Forces. In other words, keep them out of sight and out of mind. It then says that if the suggestions were adopted, it would undermine the already shaky morale of Canada's forces. I would tend to agree with that article, Mr. Speaker, if it were factual. I do not know what proposal they were discussing. It was certainly not the proposal which grew from this Liberal caucus in order to help unemployed youths in Canada join the Armed Forces, because at no time was the suggestion made that the criteria made for selection of those young people into the Armed Forces would be with any other Department except the Department of National Defence. We did not tell them what kind of people they should employ. We started by saying, all right, we have found probably 33,000 who are already eligible to go into the regular forces, who want to go into the regular forces. Let us start with that. Get those kids already eligible, if they want to join, and let us give the money to DND to do so. Instead, this has been distorted.

Of course, they might be speaking of another proposal, but certainly not one that came from this side of the House. Certainly, our proposal, which hopefully would employ as many as 50,000 young people over two years, would not be a waste, either from the training point of view or the point of view of their earning money and helping the community at large, with the procurement program and the spin-off effects in the local community, because we are talking not only of presently existing bases; we are talking of probably 177 locations throughout Canada. Just think of that. Would that be a waste of money? But, unfortunately, when we come down to the cost factor, we have been told it would be an expensive program. And yes, in comparison with other programs, it would be expensive, until you think of the effect of getting immediately back into the Treasury the statutory contributions and other effects. However, if the Government were to accept not only this proposal but others—this flows from the question which the Parliamentary Secretary put to the Hon. Member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson)—I wonder if the Tory Party, for one, would accept the idea of an increased deficit. Certainly from the answers and ambivalence we perceive in the Tory caucus, I am not sure.

We have been told in the past that deficits are the curse of present day society, depending on which economist you are following. I think what would spook me is not so much a higher deficit, but the continuing long unemployment of the people of Canada. In yesterday's Toronto Star we were told that industry, not the socialist Party or even some left-wing members of the Liberal Party, urges "billions for jobs". Even industry itself is no longer spooked by the thought of an increased deficit. I am not necessarily advocating a huge deficit; I would like it to be manageable. But if at the expense of increasing the deficit we can give hope to the unemployed people of Canada, certainly I am not going to object to that. However, I wonder what the Tory critics will say to that, people like the Hon. Member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens) or the Hon. Member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington), the Member who has just spoken, or the Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn). I wonder if they could withstand the shock of yet another increased deficit. We will never know.

We have heard Members of the Official Opposition talk about Government intervention. They think it is a dreadful thing. We have been told on several occasions, that businessmen think that Government intervention is a dreadful thing. Then how come it was the businessmen themselves who asked the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Trudeau) to go to the Pacific Rim countries? That is what I do not understand. Do they want Government intervention or not? If they do, how much do they want? How much intervention do they want in the job creation field? Will they accept a higher deficit? If so, by how much?

So far I have spoken of the Tory Party, but even the Leader of the NDP—again if media reports are correct—even he got squeamish at one stage about an increased deficit. So what is Government to do? Are we to be scared that if we do increase the deficit, the Tories will have a collective heart attack, or that the NDP will start having qualms? We do not know, but these are the kinds of questions that have to be asked.

The Tories talk about investment to create jobs, Mr. Speaker. Of course we on this side of the House would dearly wish to create a better climate for investment which would create jobs. But let us ask ourselves, is there enough money in Canada at the moment—even if it were all invested—to create all the jobs we need? I am not sure that the answer to that could possibly be yes. In fact, I am pretty sure it would have to be no, there is not enough money. So where do we get the investment money from? From overseas. Even today, in the midst of the unemployment crisis in Canada, in the midst of the sorrow which each and every one of us as Members of Parliament witness every week in our constituencies, with unemployed constituents, even with all that, there was a question today in the House from a Member of the NDP asking if the Government was going soft on FIRA. Here again we have to ask ourselves another question. On the one hand, we want investment in Canada to create jobs in Canada. On the other hand, we want an institution which is so tight that it frightens the daylights out of potential investors in this country. We cannot have it both ways. Perhaps that should be the sum total of this debate, Mr. Speaker. Because we cannot have it both ways, we have to get together in the spirit of co-operation, starting in this House, and talk about the realities of the situation, what can be done, and stop all this petty, petty bickering.

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, first I should like to make a few comments on this idea of consensus and co-operation. The last speaker referred to this and said we should stop arguing amongst ourselves, that we should all co-operate. Everyone has spoken in favour of consensus, but what each individual means when he uses those words is that everyone should come around to his particular way of thinking, then we can solve all the problems. Well, Mr. Speaker, I really do not think that can happen. I do not know that it should happen. I think there always has to be room for dissent. The majority view, by and large, should prevail, but there should be room for dissent. The consensus by way of majority view will come about after the time of our next election. I have every expectation that there will be returned to this House a large majority Conservative Government after the next election. But there will still be room for dissent. There will be a handful of Liberal and NDP Members returned, of that I have no doubt. There might even be a dozen of them. I would not necessarily expect a high degree of co-operation from them. They will then be the voice of dissent and they will have every right to be heard. That is how majority consensus should operate.

I see by the consensus of Members here today that my time has been reduced from some 20 minutes to ten minutes. Therefore, what I will do is to give you a preview of a great speech I had intended to give, and probably will give at some future date. It had not been my intention to get into a great partisan debate, although the motion is phrased in a very condemnatory manner. I do not think it is necessary for me to condemn the Government; it has done that itself by its own actions and inaction. What I wanted to do was to look into the principle, the cause and effect—I think that term was used by the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans)—of the position we are in today and how we can remove those causes. The business cycle has been with us since the industrial revolution, and even before that when the world economy and the economy of nations was agriculturally based. I do not think we are going to get over the business cycle, not in the foreseeable future. What has happened is that governments, with all good intentions, have got into the act, but they have not solved the problem of the business cycle. They have changed its shape. Whereas in previous times the business cycle meant a great dip in economic activity, which would then spring back, we now have a prolonged period of recession. Whereas at one time the problem was acute, it has now become chronic.

Some of the good things that Government has done have helped to prolong the agony; the various income maintenance schemes, for example. That is one other reason why the free market in labour no longer exists. It might be very good if you are unemployed to be assured of that unemployment insurance, but what it means in the long run is that it takes a lot longer for the business cycle to recover. Other reasons that should be cited are the very nature of industry today, and the very large organizations and large unions that mean inflexibility is built into the system.

The degree to which Government is present in the marketplace is also being constrained. That does not allow the economy to rebound in the way it should. I could give as an example the Pine Point Mine in my constituency which is dependent on Government for transportation, through CN, and is dependent on Government for its electricity supply through the Northern Canada Power Corporation, which is a Crown corporation. These corporations are headed by reasonable people but they are so bureaucratic that they have to go all the way to Cabinet for decisions. The system is just not able to adapt. In Pine Point, the Northern Canada Power Commission charges 120 per cent of the cost of the power it supplies. When the mining company goes to the power company to ask for a reduction in the rate, it is told that the decision is up to Cabinet. If a private company were involved, rather than be put in the position of not selling any power, it would reduce the price. Certainly it would make a lesser profit but, all around, it would be good for the company, good for the mine and good for the employees involved.

There is a similar situation with the Dome mine in Yukon. It is so involved in discussing the bail-out it needs because it got involved with carrying out Government policy and is so dependent on top level decisions to be made by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Munro), that the normal flexibility in arrangements between members of the marketplace, just cannot take place. The Government of Canada owns the minerals in the Yukon. It is concerned with all the other great issues of the day, and what happens in the Yukon appears as the last item on the agenda for Cabinet meetings, I am sure. Cabinet probably never reaches it.

If the minerals were privately owned, things would be different. The owner would meet with the lessee, would meet with the representatives of the employers and with the customers to try to work things out so that he could continue to receive royalties. That is not the case when the Government is involved in so much of the action.

I wanted to say something about protectionism and how it can be avoided, Mr. Speaker. When there is a contraction in trade, everyone loses. Practically every country in the world is guilty of some form of protectionism. Japan has put restrictions on the importation of manufactured goods. The United States is trying to restrict the importation of competitively produced Canadian lumber. In Canada we protect industries such as the garment industry which is largely headquartered in Montreal. Then there was the fiasco on the West Coast concerning the importation of Japanese cars. We all share the guilt, Mr. Speaker.

The long-range solution to economic problems is the removal of constraints and international trade that is as free as is possible. When I get around to giving this great speech, Mr. Speaker, I shall deal with the things that we might do in the short term to alleviate unemployment. My main contention will be that we should concentrate on public works, on things of an investment nature, rather than short-term, make work, current account-type schemes that will have no long-term effects.

If we have to borrow money in the marketplace, if we have to resort to a certain amount of inflation and deficit financing, then we should put things in place that will pay dividends in the future. I think of roads, harbours, air strips. I could cite examples from the last Depression, such as the Grand Coulee Dam in the United States. Such things would pay dividends in the long run and are the type of thing we should be doing.

I am sorry I was not able to go into these matters in detail but I shall give the House the benefit of my advice for the long run at another time. In deference to my colleagues who wish to speak this afternoon, I shall now take my seat.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I want to say how much I appreciate the element of co-operation the House has shown this afternoon in allowing the maximum number of Members to participate in the debate. I think this is a very positive gesture and augurs well for the future.

I have two brief comments to make, one of which is perhaps of a slightly negative nature. I am pleased that the Hon. Member for Rosedale (Mr. Crombie) brought this motion to the House today. I respect his views and I know his intentions are positive and honourable. I cannot say that about all his colleagues, however.

As I listened to the speeches today I recalled one of my grandfathers who lived into his nineties. As he approached the end of his life his mind began to slip and the only things he could recall happened in his youth. For hours on end he would tell stories about what it was like to be a young man in Norway. Today, when I was listening to the Progressive Conservative speakers, I was reminded of my grandfather. They keep thinking of the old ways and what happened in the nineteenth century.

Some of the policies they articulated might have been fine for Canada in the late 1800s or early 1900s but they do not apply to the complex world we live in today. Listening to some of the ideas put forward by the Progressive Conservatives, one has a sense of history. That is not a blanket condemnation of them all as one hears many progressive ideas in a debate such as the one we are involved in today.

I want to refer to some of the positive ideas offered by members of the New Democratic Party, some backbench Liberals, and even the odd Tory. There is an element of frustration in the land today, Mr. Speaker. By and large, people have lost faith in the political leadership of the country at the national, provincial and even the local levels. I wonder if it is not time for the Government to set aside a number of days when members of the New Democratic Party could lay out, in a creative, innovative and positive style, what they feel we ought to be doing for both the short term and the long term. We could forget about the way the Government and some Tory Provincial governments have erred and set out what we feel should be done in the short term and in the long term. We could even ask the Liberals to lay out what they think the long and short-term solutions to our problems are. Then, almost by definition, we would expect the Progressive Conservatives to tell the country precisely what they feel should be done in the long term and in the short term.

I have a difficult time trying to understand what the Progressive Conservatives think should be done. One Member says that we need to stimulate the economy, while the blue chip advisory committee of the Government says that it is time to abandon the six and five program and to stimulate the economy—not to the extent of hundreds of millions but, in the words of Ian Sinclair, to the extent of billions and billions of dollars.

The finance critic for the Progressive Conservatives says that they do not believe in deficit expansion. But, in response to a question, he said that they want to use the tax system to give tax advantages to corporations and to medium and small businesses in order to stimulate the economy. Anyone knows that when tax loopholes are provided for the private sector in order to stimulate the economy, it means less revenue will accrue to the Government coffers. It does not take much imagination to figure that out. When less corporate tax and less personal income tax is collected, it means that it is likely the deficit will increase. Do the Conservatives believe in an expanded deficit or do they not? One gets a different impression according to which Member one listens to.

In the last few moments available to me, Mr. Speaker, let me say something about foreign investment. We have heard a great deal about the need to stimulate investment, to encourage investment, both at home and from abroad. One of the problems when we talk about investment, particularly foreign investment, is that we do not differentiate between investment that comes in from loans and simply loans to Canadian corporations from the outside to encourage them to expand and investment from equity loans when foreign investors from Germany, Japan or the United States come here and buy equity in Canada, in other words, foreign control of Canada. I think it is time, if we are going to say that we agree or disagree with foreign involvement or "foreign investment", that we distinguish between equity involvement and simply loans.

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank my colleague from the Northwest Territories and my friend from British Columbia in the New Democratic Party for allowing me to participate for a few moments in the debate this afternoon. I have sat in the House all day and listened to this debate. In some respects it has been an interesting one, interesting because we have begun for the first time a question and answer period. I hope for people who are watching the debate that it has been more stimulating than the usual debate when people read from texts, which may be necessary from time to time and when people make long speeches, such as those made by Ministers of Finance on budget nights, but which are not so necessary on other occasions.

I am impressed with the questions and answers from both sides of the House. I am equally impressed with the way in which the Chair has, in this first time that we have gone into the experimental period, handled itself in terms of fairness to everyone. I hope that we are seeing a new structure and some new form in debate which might be followed by some new substance.

There is one concern I have about Parliament. I am not alone. The Hon. Member for Willowdale (Mr. Peterson) feels strongly about this place, and I know the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Campbell), who is here, feels very strongly about this place, and the Hon. Member who has just spoken also feels strongly about Parliament. I am speaking about the issue of partisanship. I do not say this from the point of view of anyone who has never taken part in the barbs of which people speak. I have done that. We have all done that at one time or another. But what I call crass partisanship does not do this institution any good at all. Every time we call one another names, as we do from time to time, it does detract from the debate, which all of us are interested in promoting as a worthwhile Canadian exercise.

That is one of the purposes of the reforms. When I use the word partisanship, I think it is very important to understand what it means. If partisanship is to be meanness, crassness, calling one another sleazy or shouting across the floor of the House of Commons with a lack of civility, it is not the kind of thing which uplifts this institution. But if it is the clash of ideas, ideas that may be forcefully put, then I believe that kind of partisanship is a good thing and is the purpose of this institution.

Today we have had a clash of ideas. We have had a clash in the Question Period and a clash in the speeches that have been made by Hon. Members. I think this is one of the best debates we have had the opportunity to have.

The problem with this House is that there are some great issues which have to be discussed concerning Canada. How do we relate to the United States and the rest of the world? How do we relate to the Soviet Union? What is our attitude toward trading and the matter of disarmament? How should we look after our veterans? All of these things we address in terms of legislation. All of these things we address in the Question Period. Some of them we address when we take legislation to committees. But there is very little opportunity for the give and take of debate on the floor of this House of Commons which Members have managed to do in the Parliament of Great Britain. These allotted days for the Opposition, when the Opposition has the right to choose a topic, are one of those opportunities. If there is a clash of opinion or a clash of ideas, differences of points of view expressed forcefully but with civility, then I think that is a healthy turn of events. Today has been that kind of a day. When there are pleas for lack of partisanship, let us make sure that if we plead for lack of a certain kind of partisanship, a lack of meaningless partisanship, and can have instead the opportunity to engage in a clash of ideas, that we do so.

Someone said, I think it was the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans) whose speech I enjoyed and I compliment him on it, that we have to come to consensus. If we can, we must come to consensus on objectives. We may not always agree. Some Parties in this House have a responsibility to lead. And we, as well as opposing from time to time, have a responsibility to suggest. But I think it was the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre who said that we should come together. I accept that we should come together to discuss things far beyond just a debate like today. I think it would be important in this House if someone had thought that there might be ability, buttressed by appropriate staff in this Chamber, alone or in concert with the other place, to have done a great deal of the work that has been given to the Macdonald Royal Commission.

I mean no disrespect to a former Member of this House, but it seems to me that ultimately Hon. Members of this House, by their votes, the Government by the policy it presents, and the positions taken by others, are going to be judged. If it is the Government which decides that there should be a special committee on the economic opportunities in the short, medium or long-term for Canada, and what can be done about that, then that is a matter in which we should be able to participate. On that committee there would be that kind of clash of opinion. If we could come to grips with deciding for the country what is a true relationship between government and the private sector, government and business; what is the place of government in Canada, whether it is appropriate that we adopt from other jurisdictions certain things which may be fine for them but many not apply here, those too are matters that we should be prepared to discuss.

I think the structures are here. The people are here. I agree with the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre that we are not tapping the potential of this House of Commons at all. Perhaps that is why there is such frustration among Members which finds itself displayed in other ways.

I have had only a short time, but I answer the challenge of the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre in this way. Allow us to participate. My Party has advanced ideas over the years which may not all be agreeable, but we have found that Governments do not listen. We do not advance ideas for self-aggrandizement; we advance them because we are as interested in the progress of this country as anyone else.

Give us all a chance to participate, and perhaps all Hon. Members would be surprised at the consensus we could find.

MEASURE TO MODIFY BENEFIT INDEX

The House resumed from Thursday, January 20, 1983, consideration of Bill C-133, an Act to amend the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act (No. 2), as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates; and the motion of Mr. Gray (p. 21886) and the motion of Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton) (p. 21889).

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to take part with other Members of my Party in the debate on Bill C-133, which would have the very negative result of capping the indexation on Public Service pensions at 6 per cent for this year and 5 per cent for next year.

The amendment, which purports to increase this capping to 6.5 per cent and 5.5 per cent, is really no answer to the problem at all, proposing what would amount to a ten cents a day increase. However, it is the Liberal's approach by which they hope they can somehow save their electoral skins. I believe that the people and public servants of Canada are much smarter than to accept this miserable half per cent solution, because they recognize the basic principle involved here.

Basically, what the debate is all about is whether or not the Government should have the right to break contracts and promises, promises which were made several years ago, promises that the public workers entered into in good faith—

An Hon. Member: Paid for.

Mr. Manly: —and promises that they paid for, very definitely.

The Government sees pensions, I suppose, as being a privilege which it, in a paternalistic manner, can give out to public workers, rather than as being a right earned and paid for by these same workers down through the years. It is interesting to note that the Government has not always seen it this way. When it has suited its purposes, it has seen the virtue of indexing.

Perhaps the most eloquent statement of indexing was contained in a letter dated October 12, 1977, from the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) to the President of the Union of National Defence Employees. The Prime Minister stated:

> In our society, pensions provide a means of sharing risk so that we can retire in reasonable security and dignity, without fear of the future. Protecting pensions from inflation by indexing them to increases in the cost of living should be an integral part of our pension schemes. Indexing does not give pensioners an increasingly larger claim on our economy's production, that is, more money to buy things they could not earlier afford. Rather, indexing merely enables pensioners to maintain, roughly, their same standard of living.

> Even a modest rate of inflation destroys, at a devastating rate, the buying power of people on fixed incomes. Pensioners are out of the workforce and cannot bargain or strike for larger incomes. They are not the cause of inflation; they are its victim. We have an obligation to help protect them.

Like so many of the other Government obligations, this is one they are reneging on. It is true that pensioners cannot bargain. They cannot strike. They have very little leverage with this Government except when it comes time to vote. We can be pretty sure how they are going to be voting the next time around, and it is not going to be for a Government which has introduced this kind of action. The actions of the Government at this time do not match the eloquence of the Prime Minister six years earlier.

When we look at the record of the Tories, what do we find? We find, as I mentioned earlier, that they are doing the hesitation waltz with the Government, the six and five hesitation waltz. When this proposal was first introduced in the budget last year, the Tories welcomed it. It is a step in the right direction. They moved in with that step. Then when they saw the implications this had for the voters they changed their tune and moved back a little bit. It was interesting to note last week that when they had a real opportunity to oppose this measure, they were right back in there with the Government. When they had a real opportunity to delay this legislation, they missed it. It is interesting to note that the Tories held up the business of this House for 15 days to defend oil company profits, but they were not willing to do so for 15 minutes for the rights of pensioners.

I have received a lot of correspondence from people in my constituency on this issue. As I mentioned earlier, the part of the world in which I live is a very attractive place for people to live and also to retire. The people who have retired in my area are not rich or well off but most of them do hope that they can retire in a modest degree of dignity and comfort. They find the present actions of the Government seriously erode and undermine these hopes. One of my constituents on one of the Gulf islands wrote to me as follows:

> It is simply to remind those whom it may concern that as a civil servant I paid for an indexed pension out of my salary at the rate set by the Government and I had no choice. I did my part and feel I should be able to expect the Government, as my employer at that time, to come through with the pension as promised.
> Furthermore, I retired six years before I reached compulsory age for retirement, thus providing a job for another individual. I did not have to do this—if the Government renege on their promise, do I get compensated for this, I wonder?

Of course he does not need to wonder, because there is no compensation. Another writer says:

> If the trust and confidence which have protected the pensions of federal superannuates for a century are broken down on this occasion, what will stop the present Government or any future Government attacking pensions whenever they are short of funds? Don't change the rules of the game in the middle of the game.

I think that this writer, like others who have written to me and to other Members of this House, is right. He understands the basic situation. Here the Government is breaking promises, breaking contracts, and what guarantee do these people have that these contracts will not be broken again and again in the future?

The Chairman of the Victoria Organization for Indexed Pensions raised some interesting questions in a letter he wrote to me. He writes:

> If our pensioners were paid from the pockets of the taxpayer, the legislation might have some validity. This, however, is not the case. Since 1924 the sums deducted from the pay of employees and the interest on their contributions have been greater than the total payout in pensions and indexing combined. Federal public servants have always paid for their pensions through a 7½ per cent deduction on their salaries. Even without the matching employer contribution, the plan is self-sufficient and multiplying at a phenomenal rate.

> We public servants have willingly paid our high premiums over the years because we honestly felt we would receive a worth-while pension on retirement.

I say in conclusion, Mr. Speaker, that we oppose this Bill. The amendment is inadequate. The one-half per cent solution does not solve the basic problem. I urge the Government to withdraw this Bill from the Order Paper and, as our House Leader urged, get the committee out across the country to hear what the people have to say about it. Then the whole issue will be dropped altogether.

Mr. Terry Sargeant (Selkirk-Interlake): Mr. Speaker, I welcome again the opportunity to speak on this piece of legislation, Bill C-133. There is no doubt that this Bill is unjust. In fact, the Government's whole six and five program is unjust and that fact will not be changed by the Government's amendment to Bill C-133, such that the limits on pension increases become six and a half per cent and five and a half per cent for the next two years. The Government's whole six and five program is a snow job.

It has been shown time and time again that inflation is not the result of the incomes of working Canadians or the incomes of pensioners. In fact, incomes have fallen behind the rate of inflation for the last four years, so what is the purpose of the six and five program? It is to save the Government's political hide by creating the impression that something is being done about inflation. At the same time it is to lead the way in attacking the incomes of working Canadians and of our old age pensioners, to free up more capital for the corporate brethren of the Liberals and Tories.

The Tories, those masters of political gamesmanship, have made a great show of opposing the six and five cap on pensions and Family Allowances. They know that to support what, in effect, amounts to pension cuts and cuts in Family Allowances is no way out of the political wilderness. How genuine is that opposition, Mr. Speaker? When the Government brought in the six and five program with its June budget last year, it was made all too clear that the six and five program would be more than just wage controls for Public Service employees. We knew then that the whole scope of this illusory anti-inflationary program would include a reduction in real pension incomes and Family Allowances over the next two years.

The Tories, anxious to gain the favour of their corporate bosses, eager to capitalize on the right-wing penchant for attacking Government employees, stood four square behind the Government's wage control program, and I suppose they reaped some good political mileage for doing that. When it comes time, though, to pay the price for that mileage, all of a sudden they have discovered a social conscience. The six and five program will mean a reduction, in real terms, for pensioners and for mothers. Now these Tories have found something they might be able to squeeze more mileage from. They decided to make a great show of their newly found opposition to the six and five program.

Last Thursday we saw just how far the Tories were willing to go in their opposition to capping Public Service pensions at 6 and 5 per cent. Our House Leader rose last Thursday to introduce an adjournment motion because he knew there was a chance to delay this Bill long enough to see at least one pension cheque go out with an increase which reflects the cost of living. But the Tories, who were only too eager to keep the bells ringing for 15 days last spring in order to come to the aid of their friends in the oil companies to ensure their profits, could not find their way to do something similar for old age pensioners. Fifteen days for oil company profits, Mr. Speaker. Fifteen minutes for old age pensioners. That is Tory priority for you. If they had stayed out for even a half an hour the pension cheques which will go out tomorrow would have been at the level negotiated by the Public Service employees and the Government. Half an hour, is that too much to ask? Instead, the Tories discovered a new desire to see Parliament respond quickly to the Government's desire to push through its legislation. I can only hope, Mr. Speaker, that the Public Service employees and pensioners, who were counting on strong opposition to this Bill which violates their agreement with the federal Government, have been able to see through the Tory posturing on Bill C-133.

The Government, with this Bill, is unilaterally breaking an agreement with its employees, the Public Service. More than that, it has decided that it is appropriate, perhaps even desirable, to fight inflation on the backs of the weak and the poor. This, of course, is the thrust not only of Bill C-133 but of the Government's entire six and five program. This Bill will have the effect of driving retired public servants, if not into poverty as measured by Statistics Canada, then into near poverty, which amounts to basically the same thing for pensioners.

The average annual pension paid from the public servants' superannuation account is a paltry $6,900. True, some of those people will also qualify for Canada Pension benefits and the old age pension, but even taking all of that together—because we are dealing with averages here—we can be sure that there are some Public Service pensioners who will be receiving less than that $6,900 average. At least some of them will be living so close to the poverty line that it is unconscionable. The poverty line, Mr. Speaker, for a city like Winnipeg in my home Province is somewhere around $8,970.

Is there a contract being violated here? Of course, the Government denies this. It says pensions were not a negotiable item between it and its employees for collective bargaining. But what the Government is not telling us is that when it was preparing to enter into collective bargaining with public servants in the mid-1960s, it approached its employees to exclude superannuation from negotiations in exchange for an agreement that there would be no unilateral changes made to the superannuation plan. Well, this smells suspiciously like a unilateral change to that plan.

What does this unilateral reduction in the pensions of public servants say about this Government? It says more than just that the Government does not honour its agreements with its employees; it says that the Government of this country, regardless of all the pretty and fine statements it may make about pensions reform, believes, just like the worst, most backward employers, that pensions are a privilege and not a right.

Of course, the Tories have been attacking the Government for introducing this Bill because they, perhaps wishing to see the Government operate on a sound business practice basis, do not like to see contracts broken. But why did they not speak out against breaking the contracts of thousands of public servants when the Government introduced Public Service wage restraint? They did not speak out, not one bit. In fact, they could not contain themselves as they rushed to support Public Service wage control.

What about unilateral changes to private pension plans? Well, the Superintendent of Insurance in any of the Provinces of this country would normally reject amendments to private pension plans which, similar to the changes advanced in this Bill, had the effect of reducing pension benefits. But the Government, in hopes of saving its political hide, is not interested in the niceties of business practice. What is most important with this whole six and five program is that it appears to be doing something about inflation. So with this Bill it is Public Service pensioners who are expected to take it in the neck.

If we accept only for a moment that there is validity to the foundation of this Bill—the need to cut Government spending—I think it becomes clear that this is a particularly unjust way of doing that. If a similar move were put forward as a change to tax policy, if taxes were increased in order to reduce deficit financing, it would never be acceptable to increase the taxes of pensioners. The move would be attacked from all quarters, probably even by the Tories, as being grossly unfair, but by rationalizing what amounts to the same thing, by calling this an anti-inflationary measure, the Government hopes to lend some credibility to its plans. Reducing these pensions is the same thing as retroactive wage control.

Government employees agreed to put a portion of their wage package away in a pension plan. They could have decided, instead, to put some of their money in Canada Savings Bonds and perhaps that would have been safer. I do not think many Canadians would support a Government move to dip into money invested by employees in Canada Savings Bonds, even on the grounds of mounting an anti-inflation program.

The effect of this Bill on labour/management relations and on the Government will be devastating. For the last time, I call on the Government to remove this Bill and the rest of the six and five program from its proposals. It is just too hard on the people of Canada.

Mr. Leonard Hopkins (Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, as I start out to take part in the debate on Bill C-133, I want to say that the main issue in this Bill is one that looks very simple on the surface; but when one gets into the details and the subject matter behind the whole issue, one realizes it is very complex and virtually steeped in potential and real controversy. I did not speak on second reading because I did not wish to prejudice in any way my remarks on third reading of the Bill, or on any negotiations and discussions in the interim.

On July 6, 1982 I delivered a speech in the House on the great need for pension reform generally in Canada. It astounds one to think about all the billions of dollars that are in pension funds in this country today. At book value, at the end of 1980 there was $52 billion in trustee pension funds. There will be very little feeling of security, Mr. Speaker, in public and private areas of employment in our nation unless we, and other jurisdictions of Government, revamp and reform the diversity and the plethora of private and public pension plans across the country.

The reason Bill C-133 is before Parliament now is simply that we have failed to tackle the job of bringing in reform legislation to place the public sector pension plans beyond the reach of public criticism. This could be done by making some financial rearrangements within the system itself after employer-employee discussions and agreements.

There seems to be a large measure of agreement to unite the Public Service Supplementary Retirement Benefits Fund with the Public Service Superannuation Fund, the Canadian Forces Superannuation Fund and the RCMP Superannuation Fund; but all this, of course, will have to be part of future discussions and agreed upon arrangements.

The Public Service Pension Fund should be placed on a solid financial administrative base and then taken out of the realm of politics and managed by a board of trustees representing not only the employer and the employees but also the pensioners. There would have to be very definite guidelines for them to follow, but if something happened to the viability of the fund, the trustees would be accountable and would have to take measures to correct the deficiency and not fall back on the taxpayers of Canada for funding. In this way, it would be removed from the realm of public issues. Any deficiency would likely only happen in times of extreme inflationary rates, but with changed, or amended, internal financial arrangements of the fund, it would in all likelihood not happen at all because the new guidelines would hopefully be very specific.

It is important to point out here that presently the Public Service Supplementary Retirement Fund is structured in such a way that every contributor and pensioner has his or her individual account. Now, some say, there is over a billion dollars in the Supplementary Retirement Fund. Why then, they ask, do you not take more money out of the fund instead of making up any shortfall out of the public treasury? One can readily realize why. You cannot take from Peter's account, who is still working, for example, to pay Paul, who is retired, because some day Peter is going to retire and he will want his supplementary pension.

On the other hand, the Public Service Superannuation Fund is not based on individual accounts, and it is also very wealthy. One can readily understand why some agreed upon reform measures for these plans can correct this straightjacket situation, which is the very basis of the problem. At the present time the Government picks up the difference between what the individual pensioners' accounts of the supplementary fund yield and the amount required for full indexation. It must also be recorded that the federal treasury picks up 100 per cent of the indexing costs for those who retired before 1970, because as we know, prior to that date no supplementary pension fund existed. I must reiterate that all these difficulties can be settled by constructive pension reform.

The Tomlinson-Alexander report, 1978, indicated that the Public Service Superannuation Plan could carry itself but that with proper investment the plan could be viable as well. I should point out that some Government agencies have their own pension plans, and CMHC is one of them. In Issue No. 109 of the Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence of the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates, page 34, for Monday, December 20, 1982, one of the witnesses gave a synopsis of the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation pension plan, and I will quote part of that evidence:

> We look at a pension plan such as the Central Morgage and Housing Corporation plan where the employer contributes his share to a fund along with the employees, and we see in ten years, from 1971 to 1981, a growth from $47 million to $170 million; an increase in pensioners of up to and about 980 pensioners. I think that sure as heck would cover their pensions and include the indexing. Perhaps if the Government feels, or the people responsible feel, they are unable to handle or control the pension plan, they should consider turning it back to a joint employer/employee committee who would, under restrictions such as Central Mortgage, be allowed to operate their own pension plan. Perhaps then, if something goes wrong with the indexing or the loss in interest accrued from it, we would have no one to blame but ourselves.

Later in the meeting the same witness said:

> Based on the very quick look I have had and from talking with neighbours and people who have worked at Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation, I gather they are extremely pleased with their pension plan. And on looking into the facts and figures, I find that the employer which is the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation, contributes a certain percentage along with that from the employees. It is then under control by a board of directors and employer representatives, and they have restrictions as to how much they can invest in particular areas. For instance, they invest money in mortgages, provincial and dominion, or federal bond issues. Then they are allowed to speculate on the other 50 per cent in real estate and, I guess, chip stocks or whatever.

The reason I am talking so strongly in favour of reform of the Public Service Superannuation Act and the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act, putting them on a firm financial base to pay indexing by changing the rules of financial administration therein and taking them out of public controversy, is that the federal Government can lead the way by promoting better pension plans for rank and file citizens in both public and private sectors across Canada. Indeed, this is in the Liberal tradition.

In his speech on second reading of Bill C-133, the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray) said:

> The debate has also produced a great deal of confusion and factual error over the nature of the present indexation arrangements and I would like to deal briefly with some of the more common misconceptions at this time. Many of those who oppose the limitation on Public Service pension indexation argue that public servants have fully paid for their indexation through the contribution of 1 per cent of salary together with the matching direct Government contribution towards the cost of this benefit. This is not the case. Approximately 90 per cent of the indexation benefits paid to retirees are currently charged directly to the Consolidated Revenue Fund of the federal Government. The Consolidated Revenue Fund is in fact made up of moneys raised from the taxpayers of Canada generally. The balance of the benefit, that is approximately 10 per cent of those payments, come directly from the Supplementary Retirement Benefits account. This is the separate account set up to receive employee and employer contributions to provide for pension indexation.

That is the problem within about which I am talking. Surely this must lead someone to question the way the supplementary fund was set up in the first place.

I emphasize pension reforms in the public sector because they are the only answer to our dilemma, to the problem before us. As long as public funds are used in large amounts as an additional financial contribution, there will be controversy. The money should not be administered in such a way that embarrassing amounts are left sitting in the Public Service Superannuation Fund or the Public Service Supplementary Pension Fund. The administration of such funds should be flexible enough to permit the dollars to be used for what they were meant in the first place, namely, to pay the pensions and indexation of retirees. This is why there must be more flexibility and possible amalgamation of the two funds.

This is the alternative to the contentious issue of Bill C-133. It is important to note that all countries in the industrialized world are in financial straits because their financial base or taxation bases have been eroded temporarily. How does a country like Holland handle its crisis? There is an interesting comparison here. Let me read a brief article from The Globe and Mail dated November 23, 1982.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member but the time allotted to him has expired. He may continue with unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There appears to be unanimous consent.

Mr. Hopkins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The article is headlined "The Hague" and reads:

> The new Dutch Government formally announced tough spending cuts and a public sector wage freeze. The centre-right Government said it was aiming to reduce the official spending deficit and from a projected 11.9 per cent of national income next year to 7.4 per cent by 1986. To do this, it will push ahead with plans for about $5.64 billion in cuts next year, including a freeze on public sector wages and social security programs.

This is why I support the six and five program. Mr. Speaker, can you imagine what would happen in this country or in this House if there were a complete freeze? Last summer when the six and five program was introduced, all Members of Parliament accepted a 5 per cent pay cut and media stopped talking about it immediately thereafter. Then we went on the six and five program. This was done to set an example for others to accept only six and five in their pay. As far as the Simon Reismans of the world are concerned, I could vote early and often for this Bill, but I have a major concern for average and low-income pensioners who are lumped together with all others.

Let me cite some humanitarian examples of how the Bill will affect them. For example, I know of several cases where Armed Forces personnel retired several years ago and passed on much earlier than their life expectancy. When the husband dies the wife receives one half his pension. We know for those who retired from the Armed Forces eight, ten or more years ago, that the pension of a private, corporal or sergeant major was not very big. Even though his pension had been indexed over the years, the fact that the wife receives only half his pension following his death simply means she could well be cut back to the amount of pension income her husband received when he first retired. She may be 60 to 64 years of age or younger and, therefore, does not qualify for old age pension or for the Guaranteed Income Supplement. There are many cases where others, for example couples, are trying to get along on one pension and because of the economic downturn cannot find employment.

Throughout the hearings of the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates, we constantly heard remarks about reneging on an agreement and not keeping faith with pensioners who have paid into a pension fund during the course of their lives. On the other hand, Treasury Board continues to indicate that there is no agreement, that there is no contract, and that such charges are not accurate.

The two conflicting parties in this kind of dispute will continue to debate that issue, but my difficulty with this Bill is simply the fact that pensioners from the public sector, some Crown corporations, Canadian Armed Forces and the RCMP perceived, if not understood, that there was a commitment. They retired with the expectation that they would, in fact, receive full indexation on the basis that they had contributed to the Supplementary Pension Fund. Treasury Board has become very concerned because the Supplementary Plan does not carry full indexing and they have to pay a large amount out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada to make up the difference. Based on the figures that they have provided, this is the case. But my major concern about all this is that this problem has been well known for a long time and no reform measures have been concluded to correct it.

The Hon. Robert Andras, who was a very fine Minister in the House, made a very sincere attempt to do so when he was President of the Treasury Board and introduced Bill C-12 on March 23, 1979. That Bill was a result of many meetings of the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates and there was virtual agreement by all three Parties in the House. If this Bill had been passed, we would not be discussing Bill C-133 today nor would it have seen the light of day. However, Parliament was dissolved shortly thereafter and the Bill died with no chance of consideration. The Progressive Conservatives came into power after the ensuing election and they did nothing more about it. In fact, what we heard about most was the plan to lay off 60,000 civil servants.

Nothing further has been concluded since the election of the present Government in 1980, and I therefore do not feel that retired public servants, some retired Crown employees, retired members of the Armed Forces and the RCMP should lose out simply because successive Governments have failed to act on pension reform.

That is past history, unfortunately. I would urge the Government to proceed immediately to correct this situation so it will not arise again. There is no way that matters of this nature should be thrown into the public arena where bad relations with employees can be created.

The misconception is always thrown around in the media and among the public to the effect that all such pensioners are wealthy. There is a large percentage, about 68 per cent, of retirees of 70 years of age or more who receive less than $7,000 per year, and this is what bothers me tremendously about this Bill. There is a large number of these people in my constituency up and down the Ottawa Valley. I know many of them personally and I am aware of their situation. The major part of this group is here in the Ottawa Valley; the remainder are scattered across the country.

Mr. McKinnon: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I hate to rise on this unusual point of order but we did give unanimous consent to the Hon. Member, we thought, to conclude his speech, not to go on to read the distorted and tiresome view of history that he seems to have. I believe there are limits to these extensions, generally a couple of minutes.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: With all due respect to the Hon. Member, when the House gives unanimous consent for the extension of an Hon. Member's remarks, the Chair is not aware of any procedure in the rule book by which a limit can be placed on the time.

Mr. Hopkins: I appreciate the remarks fully, Mr. Speaker.

After several meetings of the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates, this Bill was returned to the House without amendment. This simply means that with the exception of the 6.5 per cent and 5.5 per cent change, the Government wants the Bill to remain in its original state.

I realize that the Minister in charge of the Treasury Board has a tough row to hoe in piloting this legislation through the House, but as he knows, I have talked with him on several occasions because I am one of those Members who has many people in my constituency who are affected by this Bill and they do not fall in the upper income brackets. For this reason, I still have great reservations about this Bill and I have had considerable discussions with my colleagues on this matter.

Therefore, it is with regret that I state now that I cannot support Bill C-133.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hopkins: I have arrived at this decision without malice, without any ill feelings, but certainly in all seriousness and sincerity. I want to thank Hon. Members for their patience.

Hon. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton North): Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a few words with regard to the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act, particularly after listening to some of my pinko friends to my far left who keep making these disparaging remarks about the Conservative Party. If they keep saying things like that, they will not be at five points in the Gallup polls, but they will be lucky if they have one point in the Gallup polls.

Mr. Deans: The Gallup poll is not necessarily a measure of the truth.

Mr. Paproski: While I am speaking I wish they were not talking about polls. There are a few Members over there who feel that they know what they are talking about, but when I came here at 11 o'clock this morning and listened to some of the nonsense, I could not believe they would make some of those ridiculous remarks in this Chamber after seeing the Gallup poll over the weekend.

The Hon. Member for Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke (Mr. Hopkins) recalled history during his remarks when he said that the Conservative Party was going to fire 60,000 civil servants. That is a ridiculous remark. We have gone through that routine and we would never have taken such action. It is fine for the Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan) to say that, but we did not even have the opportunity to look at it, much less listen to such trash as that the Conservative Party was going to eliminate 60,000 top-notch civil servants in this country. I cannot believe anyone would even think of something like that.

I am surprised at this heartless Government's proposal to implement its six and five program on the backs of pensioners in this country, particularly civil servants. I cannot believe it would stoop so low at this time and take away the pension that civil service pensioners in this country have contributed to over the last few years. The Government is now telling them that it does not have enough money and pensioners will have to settle for a six and five agreement. It is breaking an agreement which it made with the pensioners in the civil service of this country. I suggest that this heartless Government is scraping the bottom of the barrel. I find it ridiculous that I must rise on January 24, 1983 to debate such a Bill as C-133.

I would like to repeat the remarks made by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie), as they appear at page 22018 of Hansard on January 20, 1983. At that time he said:

> The Conservative Party has steadfastly supported Public Service pensioners in their fight to defeat a Bill which takes $165 million away from pensioners, a segment which is often least able to defend its rights and protect its standard of living. The Conservative Party is well aware that public employees pay 7.5 per cent of their salary to support their pension plan. The private sector employee contributions seldom exceed 5 per cent and are frequently less.
> Benefits paid from the plan to date have been more heavily financed by employees than by their employer. Of $1,360 million paid out between October, 1981, and September, 1982, employees contributed $735 million compared to the Government's 625 million.
> The Conservative Government of 1979-80 was able to trim $500 million from the federal budget without any income penalties to retired civil servants or senior citizens in general. Approximately $445 million would be paid out of benefits this year, according to the Treasury Board, and $420 million will come out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund, with only $25 million covered by the contributions made by pensioners when they were employed. This is due to the fact that, while the plan was only implemented in 1979, the benefits are extended to all retired public servants whether or not they contributed to the fund.
> As time goes on, the drain on the CRF will diminish and the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Account will pay a larger share of the benefits.

He went on to say:

• (1150)

> The total cost of indexing the pension was approximately 4.5 per cent of the payroll from the regular public servants last year. Pensions for the Armed Forces and some other groups are administered separately.
> There is a paper figure of $15.5 billion in the Public Service Superannuation Account. The present employees' contribution rate of 1 per cent salary to the SRBA provides for only a 1.5 per cent inflation rate in the future, according to the Treasury Board.
> An actuarial analysis claims that the total surplus of $15.5 billion in the superannuation account is sufficient to meet future benefit payments and the accrued interest on this account, especially if it were invested at a high rate of interest, would be more than adequate to cover the cost of pension indexation. Records show that the public service employees have contributed more to the pension than their employer. I suggest that the Government-employer contributions through the PSSA and SRBA be investigated to determine if they have been adequate.

That was part of the speech of my friend, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine, who plainly said it in four or five paragraphs.

I see no reason why I should carry on any further with regard to this matter. I think it is incredible that we should have to take up the time of the House on this particular Bill when it is such a ridiculous Bill. Naturally, I will be voting against it, I know that the whole Conservative Party will be voting against it. I hope some Hon. Members opposite—and I know that they will—will be voting against it. Maybe it will be an opportunity for us to defeat the Government, who knows? Maybe some great people like the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) will come up with some amendment so that we may be able to carry this matter on for another two or three months. If that is what the House wants, then maybe this is how we will carry on.

The Minister has taken away the full Family Allowance benefits by deindexation. Now the Government is affecting the senior citizens of this country. My, who will it be next? I cannot believe what I am seeing. The Government has even taken away lottery funds from the poor fitness and amateur sport people, the people in the sporting industry. The federal Government has taken $90 million from the Provinces' lotteries. Does Your Honour know where it put the money? It was put into the Consolidated Revenue Fund to look after other expenditures while the poor people in the sports organizations are looking for bucks. They cannot get their money. Moneys were promised for the University Games in Edmonton but have not been received. The Olympic Association is looking for money; it does not have any. If these events were being held in Quebec, let me tell you there would be a change and a different atmosphere over there. The moneys would be coming tout de suite.

Mr. Lapointe: No.

Mr. Paproski: Oh, yes. The Minister says "No". I know, because I see the way you guys operate—

Mr. Lapointe: You just show your bias.

Mr. Paproski: —over on that other side. Do not tell me it will not.

Miss Bégin: Racist!

Mr. Paproski: Do not call me a racist, either. Do not dare call me a racist.

Miss Bégin: Racism.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Remarks should be addressed to the Chair.

Mr. Paproski: Through you, Mr. Speaker, I will say that I do not want to get the Ministers, hot and heavy, but I have been around here long enough to know just exactly what happens. They who scream the loudest, and they who form the largest majority in the Party which governs, particularly my friends opposite from la belle province, do not hesitate to get their funds.

I will end my speech by saying that we intend to vote against the Government, and particularly against this Bill.

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would like to spend a few moments discussing the amendment to the Bill. As most people know, the Bill ignores the basic rights of civil service pensioners who have paid for the indexing of benefits and who thought they had a contract. Indeed, it was understood, in negotiations back as far as the 1960s, that a contract existed between the Government and civil servants with regard to pensions.

It has been pointed out by various unions for the civil service that in the 1960s it was suggested that superannuation be excluded from collective bargaining by the Government. In return, they were promised that there would be no unilateral changes to the program. An advisory committee was established and, up until the present time, the Government, under two different parties, has been keeping up those promises. However, we are now seeing a change in policy, a breaking of a contract, if you like, so that even though pensioners had paid for it, indexing to keep up with the cost of living would no longer be there.

Simply so that we can study the matter in its proper perspective, we should remind ourselves that indexing was always "after the fact" indexing. We waited until the end of the year to find out how much inflation had run amuck in the previous year and then, in the coming year, the pension would be increased by that amount. That basic tenet is being ignored in this Bill and an amendment which would not only break a social contract, but would also amount to a tax on senior citizens.

The Government of Canada should maintain the contract with pensioners of all types that there will be no excessive taxation of their benefits, because in the main they comprise a fairly low income group. In recent times of high inflation, it has been very difficult for pensioners to keep up with the cost of living. This kind of procedure would have the effect of adding what would amount to a tax on senior citizens, in this case pensioners who have previously worked for the civil service. It would amount to a tax because it would reduce the amount of money to which they were entitled, a tax deducted before they even received their pensions. The deduction would amount to the difference between the real inflation rate and the 6 per cent proposed in the Bill or the 6.5 per cent in the amendment.

The only place where the case of pensioners can be heard is in this House of Commons. That is why this Party has been holding up proceedings on the Bill. We say that this is the pensioners' last chance. Retirees do not have organizations or unions which can speak for them. They rely on their elected representatives to look after thir needs, and not all of them are paying attention.

I want to point out that we probably would not have found ourselves in this mess had we in the Opposition collectively, both Parties together, stood up more strongly against Bill C-124 which introduced the six and five set of guidelines in the beginning. There were enough votes in Opposition—

Mr. McKinnon: Nonsense.

Mr. Althouse: —when one adds the Liberal Members who decided to vote against the six and five proposal, to defeat Bill C-124; but our friends to the right chose, instead of standing up for a principle, to go on holidays. Therefore, instead of defeating the Government or at least defeating that particular Bill brought in by the Government, the Bill was passed, and we now have the imposition of six and five because of a lack of interest on the part of Tory Members.

Just this past week we have also noted an attempt, with regard to holding up the legislation, to raise the ire of most people across the country on the side of the pensioners, because while civil service pensioners, old age pensioners, baby bonus benefits and child allowance credits may be affected in a series of Bills coming before the House, we do not know what other low income group will be the next to suffer from the six and five imposition.

We have seen the way the Tories reacted last week when the motion to adjourn the House was offered by our party. They had an excellent opportunity to hold up this Bill and to carry on the delaying tactics so that this dreadful imposition would not be placed on our civil servants who are retired. Instead of giving it the good support that they gave oil company profits last March, when they stayed out for 15 days to protect oil companies, they would not stay out for 15 minutes to protect old age pensioners and civil servants.

The Liberal position has been varied. Mostly Government members support the Government, with a few notable exceptions. I was pleased to hear the Hon. Member for Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke (Mr. Hopkins), who spoke a few moments ago, say that he will be opposing this amendment and the Bill itself. I think more Ottawa Members on the Government side and, indeed, any Government Member who has a conscience and realizes the need for maintaining trust in contracts, should be voting against this Bill. I cannot understand why a Party that professes to be in favour of justice and a just society, in favour of maintaining incomes for low-income people, in favour of assisting people who are on pensions, could introduce such a Bill in the first place, but they have.

We have been watching, and so have civil service pensioners, the gyrations of some of the Members. I note the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans) is in the House today. He is reported to have been at a meeting of civil service pensioners in Ottawa in which he said he would not allow such an inequitable Bill to go through the House. I have heard him make speeches in this House since that time saying that adding one half of 1 per cent to the six and five, as this amendment proposes to do, to make it 6.5 per cent and 5.5 per cent as it applies to civil service pensions, will bring about the kind of equity he can support, and I understand he is going to support it.

When you look at the kind of pensions that Public Service pensioners are receiving, he is being bought out for a fairly paltry sum. There are approximately 90,000 former contributors to the civil service pension fund that are taking home approximately $8,100 on average annually. In addition to those 90,000 there are 32,500 on survivor benefits who are receiving approximately $3,200 per year, making the average for all pensions paid in the order of $6,900 per pensioner. Just look at what that means. It means that for the average pensioner receiving the $6,900 per year, the extra one half of 1 per cent provides them with $34.50 per year more. This is a princely sum for the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre to have—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The Chair regrets to interrupt the Hon. Member but the time allotted to him has expired. He may continue with the unanimous consent of the House.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There appears to be unanimous consent.

Mr. Althouse: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will finish rather quickly. I was pointing out that the average pensioner receives $6,900 per year, so the extra one half of 1 per cent means they will receive $34.50 per annum extra, which works out to about 66 cents per week. With that princely amount of money, the average retired civil servant who has retired in Ottawa has almost enough money to make a one-way bus trip downtown. It will not be enough to get him home, but if he adds a few cents he can get downtown. The knowledgeable economist from Ottawa Centre is willing to call this equity.

I think the case has been well made in this House. I will not speak any longer on the Bill. We in this Party will be opposing the amendment and the Bill itself, and we hope that more of the Members on the Government side will see fit to support this stance as well.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt motion No. 2?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion, the yeas have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to section (11) of Standing Order 79, the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

Earlier in the proceedings the Chair ruled that an affirmative vote for the motion which has been deferred would deal with the motion standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker). Therefore, at this stage the Chair will proceed to the motion in the name of the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier).

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier) moved:

Motion No. 4.

That Bill C-133, An Act to amend the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act (No. 2), be amended by adding immediately after Clause 2 at page 2, the following new Clause:

"3. This Act expires on December 31, 1984."

He said: Mr. Speaker, Motion No. 4 which you have just read proposes the following, and I quote:

"3. This Act expires on December 31, 1984."

The purpose of this motion is to establish without a doubt that Bill C-133 will expire on December 31, 1984.

In English this is call a sunset clause, an expression that is rather difficult to render in French, but I suppose it could be called an expiry clause or perhaps a twilight clause or a limited duration clause. I have been seeking advice on this matter, but there is no real agreement on the best translation. In any case, the purpose of my motion, Mr. Speaker, is to have this legislation repealed as of December 31, 1984, and since the bill itself does not contain any clauses limiting its duration, I think putting this motion does not raise more problems than it solves. Furthermore, other Members in this House have often put similar motions for other bills. I would have preferred to see Bill C-133 withdrawn, but since it will be passed, we must try and make the best of a bad thing.

We do not know what the future holds in store, Mr. Speaker. In politics as in so many other areas, the saying: A bird in the hand is worth two in the bush, is very apt. Adding to Bill C-133 a clause that it will expire on December 31, 1984 will show the legislator is acting in good faith by putting a two-year limit on this government policy. It also provides the assurance that neither politics nor the results of a possible election will prolong the effects of Bill C-133. Who knows, Mr. Speaker, who will be in power on December 31, 1984? I certainly do not.

Public servants have been told that there was nothing in writing on the indexation of their pensions. That is true. Because of exceptional circumstances, they have had to rely on the Government to manage the Superannuation Fund in the interest of present and future public service pensioners. It is also true that fifteen years ago, there was no public service union powerful enough to demand a more active role in the management of the Public Service Superannuation Fund.

If Bill C-133 is passed without amendment, public servants may be expected to demand an active role in the administration of their superannuation fund to protect themselves against their employer.

Legally, the Crown can impose the 6.5 and 5.5 per cent ceiling on public service pensions, there is no doubt about that. However, Mr. Speaker, it is another thing altogether, and not much can be said in its defence, when we realize that the employer, Treasury Board, can restrict and even defend such measures without breaking its word or infringing existing agreements. I find all this compromising, to say the least, and very damaging to employer-employee relations. It will probably take some time before a minimum of trust has been restored between present and future retired public servants and the employer, that is, Treasury Board.

That is why I am suggesting this modest step towards a reconciliation. Let us restrict the effect of this bill to two years and immediately start genuine consultations with the unions, and let everyone know that the legislator will keep his word. Let us amend Bill C-133, Mr. Speaker, to have it expire on December 31, 1984.

On the subject of consultation, Mr. Speaker, I would like to read to you a passage from Hansard of December 6, 1982, page 21301, and I am quoting the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray):

Let me assure everyone that there will be full opportunity for consultation before any changes are decided upon and any proposals made to Parliament concerning the superannuation plans of federal Public Service employees.

By adopting motion No. 4, the Government will restore its credibility vis-à-vis federal public servants and particularly the retired members of the Public Service of Canada. In addition, Mr. Speaker, this amendment would reaffirm the Government's confidence in a 6 and 5 program aimed at bringing down inflation and promoting economic recovery. The motion would also confirm statements by certain ministers, especially the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) who indicated in his budget speech that the 6 and 5 program would be restricted to the next twenty-four months.

• (1210)

As a result of what has been said over the past weeks and months about indexing of public servants' pensions, I think it is quite clear that the tide of mistrust and suspicion that I see making its way across the Public Service cannot be stemmed by words promising a different tomorrow.

I find that pensioners are extremely skeptical over Government claims that the restrictions contained in Bill C-133 are temporary when the Bill provides that the restrictions to be implemented in 1983 and 1984 are also to apply after 1984. I repeat, the restrictions are to apply after 1984. Some pensioners also liken Bill C-133 to the camel in the proverb about the camel and the tent.

There is concern among some pensioners that C-133 is the first stage of a program that will lead to an ad hoc dismantling of the indexing program, to be followed by its eventual elimination. The only chance I see of checking this tide is through positive action. One action that I believe would be particularly helpful would be to adopt motion No. 4, inserting a sunset clause in the Bill providing for the demise of the Bill on December 31, 1984.

Two conditions must exist if one expects compliance and trust. The rules must be reasonable and, second, those who set the rules must abide by them. The effect of amendment No. 4 will allow the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray) to substantiate his claim that Bill C-133 is really a temporary measure. A sunset clause in Bill C-133 would also restore some credibility to the Government and to Parliament. It would show that the Government has confidence in its six and five program. In my view, it would re-establish a certain amount of trust which should lead to further consideration of pensioners with a view to restoring mutual confidence and understanding.

My colleagues can help restore some trust and improve somewhat the credibility which the public expects from its legislators. I invite my colleagues to vote for amendment No. 4 which will limit in time the unfortunate effects of Bill C-133.

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased that you looked at this side of the Chamber when it came to seconding the motion standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier). I was very pleased to second it because I, too, read the budget speech. I, too, have heard the protestations that this is a two-year program. I think there is that wave of skepticism.

This skepticism is tinged with a great deal of apprehension and anger about a system that has been in force, supported unanimously within the country and within the Public Service, for many, many years. It is a system upon which thousands and thousands of public servants made their retirement plans and are making their retirement plans which, in a decent civilized society, also benefits the widows of public servants, who are included in the broad sector when we talk about public servants.

This very broad sector includes those who come under the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray), members of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, the Armed Services and some Crown corporations. It is interesting to note that it does not include employees of the Bank of Canada, which recently announced that they will index at 111/2 per cent, the going rate. The Act does not apply there. This is an indication of the ad hoc approach which raises the skepticism that my friend talked about. He is absolutely right.

We are approaching a watershed in Canadian pension history. If this Bill passes, it will be the first time that any federal Government had decided to diminish pensions, pensions which were bought and paid for. I want my friends opposite to remember this when they go to their constituents.

It is true that the Right Hon. Richard Bedford Bennett froze the salaries of public servants when he was Prime Minister. Although there was not a pension system in place for public servants of the kind we have today, there was a pension system in place during the regime of the Right Hon. Richard Bedford Bennett which was likely then described as generous. It probably was for its time. And yet in the depths of the Depression, with the prospects and position of its senior citizens, of its young people, the Government of the country of that day did not touch pensions. It dealt with salaries, and people will say dealt iniquitously with salaries. If I were living in that day I would likely say the same thing. But they did not touch pensions.

Therefore, anyone who votes for this legislation is participating in the first of what we all suspect is a restructuring which will have very serious effects. It is a precedent and anyone who proposes to vote had better remember that. This is the first time that the pensions of senior citizens, especially those who have bought and paid for them, will be affected.

I want everyone to know what is the effect of the amendment brought by the Hon. Member. He says, and I agree, that he wants to underscore that the Bill will cease to have any effect after the two years. He is saying to the President of the Treasury Board, to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde), to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), who made a representation some time ago: "Put your money where your mouth is. You have backed off from that letter in 1977 when you said indexing was meant to protect against inflation. All those sweet protestations in that letter which was circulated to the public servants by the Prime Minister meant nothing. You have broken your word on that. The latest word you have is it would only be two years. Put your money where your mouth is."

I want to know where Government Members stand on that. I think this is quite a reasonable amendment to support and I hope that the first speaker on the Government side will suggest that it be supported. It is not only of importance in that it underpins the pronouncements which have been made by Ministers, but it is equally important in another way. I believe that it is at least open to argument that when the amendment says this legislation expires on December 31, 1984, it goes beyond just the expiry of a Bill. In other words, I believe it is more than a sunset clause. In my judgment, it is at least open to argument that when it says this Act expires on December 31, 1984, it could mean, and will likely be argued that it means, that its effects expire on December 31, 1984. The House should know that at some time that case will likely be argued.

The Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier and I, in two amendments which were declared inappropriate for this House, put forward the proposition that the base should be restored at the end of the program. I think the argument will be made somewhere that that will be the effect of this amendment, that the base will be restored, that there will not be a permanent loss of pension base for the two years, which without expression otherwise would in fact occur.

One of the great injustices of this Bill, Mr. Speaker, is that the Public Service pensioner bought and paid for something for him or herself, widow or widower, or children, as the case may be, which is not only denied for two years, but the base upon which all other future pensions are calculated has been diminished. And the figures are really quite significant. I believe it is open to argument , and I hope some day someone will argue—which is why I want this Clause supported—that when it expires, not only does it expire, but the status quo ante is restored. That is simple justice.

It is one thing to say that a person who is employed suffers a two-year diminution in his economic prospects, but that person knows through reclassifications and promotions, and a whole host of things which can be bargained for, that that person has at least a chance of recovery. But if this Act goes through as it stands, the persons to whom this Act will apply have no chance of recovering at all. And it is very important that we remember the effect of it.

Of course, the program should not go on any longer than two years. Is there anyone on the other side who will call the Minister of Finance a liar? I would not call him a liar. Is there anyone on the other side who would vote and, by implication, call the President of the Treasury Board a liar? I would not want that to happen. I want them to support the statements made by the President of the Treasury Board and the Minister of Finance and the blandishments which we have heard on other things and say, "Yes, Mr. Minister, we support this amendment. This will 'sunset' the Bill and the burden will not be further extended."

I say to those people in the Public Service who are interested that they ought to ply their books to see whether or not, if this amendment did in fact carry, there would be the opportunity to get rid of the injustice which is there if the Act stays unamended. I am proud to support the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier with respect to this amendment, we will vote in favour of it, and I invite my hon. friends to join us.

Mr. Sid Parker (Kootenay East-Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak on the amendment presented by the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) that this Act should expire December 31, 1984. I would have much preferred to have seen the date "December 31, 1982".

I would like to point for a moment to some of the remarks made by the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier, where he suggested that some confidence would come back by having this amendment adopted. I want to know how he can possibly expect any confidence to come back from these people who are affected by this legislation. We will support the amendment, but we believe that this Bill must be killed. It must be written out in no uncertain terms.

I would like for a moment to speak especially about some of the comments which have been coming from the Conservative Party whose Hon. Members have been getting up in this House day after day and commenting that this Bill is a breach of contract, a violation of rights, a violation of contracts. I want the Conservatives to know that in my riding every railroader knows that the Conservative Party voted in favour of Bill C-124, and that was a breach of contract. Every public servant in my riding knows that the Conservatives supported Bill C-124, and that was a breach of their contract.

Every one of my senior citizens, pensioners, are going to know that on Thursday the Conservatives had an opportunity to save their indexing, that those cheques would have been mailed out fully indexed. I would defy the Government, in that case, to roll it back and take it away. But what did the Conservative Party do? They could not wait 15 minutes longer so that the closure Bill would have had to go over to the next day, and then there was no way those cheques could ever be mailed out in time and therefore would have had to go out fully indexed. But no, the Conservatives tripped over themselves to get into this House to accommodate the Government, to ensure that that legislation is now able to be put forward. That is what the Conservatives have done. They have the audacity to stand up in this House and talk about the Gallup poll. I want to tell you, Mr. Speaker, that public servants and retirees are not worried about the Gallup poll, they are worried about what is happening to this legislation in this House. Nor are we worried about the Gallup poll.

The social services of this country are being eroded, Mr. Speaker. They are being eroded in the fields of Old Age Security pensions, Family Allowances and Public Service pensions, by the Government opposite, accommodated and assisted by the Conservatives. The only credible opposition in this House is coming from the New Democratic Party.

Mr. Taylor: They said so themselves.

Mr. Parker: I would like to comment on some of the things which were reported by various groups at the committee stage of this Bill. Under Bill C-133, the Government of Canada is allowing itself to shirk its obligation to its retired employees. It is doing so in a manner which would not be allowed for the sponsors of private pension plans. The private firms could not do it but the Government of Canada is taking away what they have an obligation to fulfil. Retirees from the federal Public Service will suffer a decrease in their standard of living in 1983 and 1984 as the result of Bill C-133. They will not be permitted to make up the reduction.

One of the great promoters of this Bill, Ian Sinclair, Chairman of CP Rail, championed the Government's cause across the country. A constituent of mine from Field, British Columbia, wrote me a letter which I in turn wrote to Ian Sinclair about. I thought the House would like to know how Mr. Sinclair applies such dedication to his own business. Marathon Realty, the Canadian Pacific real estate arm, is increasing the lease cost of one of my constituents by 90 per cent and has announced that it will increase it by a further 12 per cent a year. The Chairman of Marathon Realty has written to me to say that the increases are fair and reasonable and they do not propose to make any changes. This is what is happening, Mr. Speaker. There is no control on prices or profits, but the Government is asking our senior citizens, old age pensioners and Public Service pensioners to try to live on a 6 per cent increase when the cost of living is anywhere between 11 per cent and 12 per cent.

The Conservatives, Mr. Speaker, have assisted this Government in a very hypocritical way. Those Members who have large numbers of public servants in their ridings, such as the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker), are standing up in this House and saying in a calm way how serious it is and how they feel for those pensioners. What I am trying to say, Mr. Speaker, is that their Party believes it is time to roll back social programs. Their Party is following the line of the Reagan administration. Make no mistake about it, every Canadian is watching what is taking place here because they know their social programs are under attack, not only by the Government but also by the Conservative Party of Canada.

Mr. Ralph Ferguson (Lambton-Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, I want to speak very briefly on this particular amendment today because the motion proposes that a sunset Clause be applied to this Bill. I should point out that, in effect, there is such a provision in the Bill and indexing is restored as of January 1, 1985. If we were, however, to allow a catch-up provision it would perhaps destroy other aspects of the six and five guidelines which appear to be working at the present time. In fact, over the last five months the rate of inflation in Canada has decreased dramatically.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Even before you passed the Bill. Marvellous.

Mr. Ferguson: It is down to a rate of 0.5 per cent on a monthly basis. In the U.S., of course, it is calculated on a monthly basis, but in Canada it is on an annual basis. However, if we look at it on a monthly basis in Canada we have been within the guidelines for the last several months, and if the present trend continues, those pensioners may even have a net gain in the upcoming year, although they would have had a loss in their pensions for the previous period which ended last September.

I would like to address very briefly some of the arguments advanced by critics of Bill C-133, namely the capping of the pension indexing amount and the confiscation of moneys already paid by public servants. The point is made that because the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Account requires a 1 per cent of salary contribution by the employees, it is matched by Government. Sufficient money has already been set aside to pay for full indexation. I would like to expand on the point already made in that regard.

I think it is most helpful to note that plan members only began paying extra contributions for indexing in 1970, consequently moving from 0.5 per cent of salary to 1 per cent in 1977. No pensioner who retired prior to 1970 made any additional contribution in the way of catch-up and the pensioners who retired since that time only made special contributions during the smaller portion of a 25-year career. Contributions by pensioners to date currently pay less than 10 per cent of the indexing payment being made, with over 90 per cent, that is $420 million in 1981-82, being charged against Government expenditures.

There seems as well to be a mistaken impression that there is more than enough money in the pension accounts to pay for full indexing because the accounts are growing each year and the amount of interest earnings exceeds benefit pay-outs. In response to this I would like to point out that the basic pension plan is designed to operate on a fully funded basis, so that the basic pension accounts are credited with amounts which are sufficient, taking into consideration future interest earnings, to meet the benefit payments earned by plan members to date, assuming that all actuarial and economic projections prove to be accurate. Certainly this has been very difficult to do having come through a period like the last few years.

The indexing account is, by legislation, operated on a partial pay-as-you-go basis, so there is currently not enough money in the account to meet all the future indexing benefits that will become payable in respect of benefits already accrued. For example, in the 1981-82 Public Accounts, an actuarial deficit of $5.5 billion was reported in respect of Public Service indexing benefits which become payable up to March 31, 1982. That deficit would exist if those benefits had to be fully funded. This amount did not include any liabilities for the future indexing of pensions being paid at that time, nor for the indexing of accrued pensions of current employees.

While I would suppose that the estimate of the actuarial deficit may be argued since it is very much dependent upon the actuarial assumptions used to calculate it, there is an actuarial deficit in the indexation account. Even if both accounts were combined, full indexation could not be provided without substantial Government contributions over and above its matching of employee contributions. Therefore, it cannot be said that the Government, by capping indexing, is cutting back on benefits for which sufficient funds have already been set aside.

Some people argue that the additional contributions paid by employees can be likened to insurance premiums where, in exchange for the premiums, employees are protected against the risk of inflation. I do not agree with the idea that the Public Service superannuation system is comparable to an insurance scheme where premiums are paid and benefits are received, no matter what the cost to the insurer, in this case the Government. As everyone knows, insurance rates are adjusted up or down depending on the experience with claims and no adjustment is applied to the payment of claims already made. If the same concept were applied to the Public Service pension plan in current economic circumstances, the contributions or premium rates for current employees could go up in relation to accruing benefits that could very well become payable in better economic times. It is seen, then, that the relationship between contributions and benefits would become somewhat fortuitous. In a sense, groups of pension winners and losers could be created.

I think the Minister put it very well when he said that he prefers to regard pensions as a long-term and flexible arrangement involving the employer and generations of employees, where changes can be made to reflect varying economic circumstances. This was the case in the early seventies when the Government adopted a policy of full indexing of Public Service pensions and applied that policy retroactively to persons who had paid little or no extra contributions.

The proposed modification of Bill C-133, as has been indicated, does recognize the contributory nature of the Public Service pension programs and specifically the indexing portion. The modification is designed to take into account the 90 per cent and 10 per cent ratio I previously referred to with respect to indexing payments charged against Government expenditures, and payments charged against pensioner credits in the indexing account. With this in mind, it is proposed that the indexing of Public Service pensions be increased to 6.5 per cent in 1983 and 5.5 per cent in 1984 from the cap of 6 per cent and 5 per cent currently set out in the Bill. In other words, moneys that have already been set aside by or on behalf of pensioners for indexing will not be confiscated but will instead be used, in effect, to increase the average pension increase that all Public Service pensioners will receive over the next two years.

In summary, then, I find that the argument that Bill C-133 amounts to a confiscation of moneys already set aside for Public Service pension indexing is not supportable. As I indicated earlier, with the current trend in inflation I should like to suggest that, even though pensioners would have incurred a loss for the year ended last September, in effect they could be winners in the year ahead.

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I should first of all like to deal with that ridiculous final sentence in the speech of the Hon. Member for Lambton-Middlesex (Mr. Ferguson). Of course pensioners could gain, but only if the inflation rate this year is 1.5 per cent or less. The likelihood of the inflation rate in 1983 being 1.5 per cent or less is about the same likelihood as the Liberals being returned to office if they called an election. It is zero; there is no hope whatsoever. The Hon. Member should be ashamed of himself for making a statement like that.

I might mention to those who are paying attention to the debate that we are once more operating under closure. The Liberals have found it necessary to salve their consciences by trying to move the debate out of the House to a place where people will not hear about it. For that reason they have brought in closure.

I am astonished that the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin), who feigns a sincere interest in the welfare of pensioners, has taken no stand against this arbitrary legislation. If this Bill and its companion, Bill C-131, are passed, we will find that next year more and more old age pensioners and senior citizens retired from the Public Service will be living below the poverty level, because their pensions this year will not keep up with the cost of living. That is what this Bill and and Bill C-131 will do to the old age pensioners. They ensure that their pensions will not keep up with the cost of living and, therefore, their standard of living will go down. The fact that the Minister of National Health and Welfare, who feigns interest, has done nothing about this is shocking.

I do not know whether I should bother mentioning the NDP. I read in this morning's newspaper that 5 per cent of the people of Canada believe the NDP will form the next Government. They continue to make these silly remarks about bell ringing. They forget that they form a very small rump, a Party in one corner of this House. Major decisions are not made by little rumps in the corners of Houses, except on those very rare occasions when the people of Canada, probably with some other aim in mind, elect them as the controlling Party, in the case of a minority Government, between the major Parties. That has happened twice in my experience in this House. In 1972-74 they supported the Liberals. There used to be a daily caucus between David Lewis, the then Leader of the NDP, and the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. MacEachen) of today. When the Liberals found themselves far enough ahead in the poll, they pulled the rug out from under the NDP without even a "thank you" for 18 months of support. In the next election the number of NDP Members in the House was reduced by about 65 per cent.

In 1979 the NDP again held the balance of power and wanted to show everyone how powerful they were so they voted the Liberals in and the Conservatives out. To that degree they are responsible for the situation we find ourselves in now. They are responsible for things like Bill C-131 and Bill C-133 because they put in the kind of Government that produces such outrageous legislation. Yet they pretend to be unhappy about these Bills, and they keep fussing about Bill C-124. We voted for that Bill, which reduced MPs' pensions. The NDP was opposed to that Bill which also cut our pay by 5 per cent. They spoke out against that Bill months after it was passed and they are still speaking against it, hoping it will be changed and the 5 per cent pay cut reinstated. Five per cent is an exact balance with their standing in the Gallup poll.

Bill C-124 dealt with people in the workforce who have some control over their lives, sometimes through the strength of their unions. The unions are strong. Anyone who has ever tangled with the postal union will realize that. The people affected by Bill C-124 have a bargaining position and that is the big difference between that legislation and Bills C-131 and C-133. These people affected by these Bills C-131 and C-133 have no bargaining position at all. Old age pensioners and senior citizens cannot withhold their services, nor can they enter into contract negotiations. There is a tremendous difference in the cases, although it is not obvious to the little rump on my left.

There is one place where the NDP shines, Mr. Speaker. Members of that Party make more noise per pound than Members of any other Party in the House. When this place is turned into a shambles, nine times out of ten it is because of that little group.

I should like to speak about the amount of money in the pension fund which the Hon. Member opposite mentioned. I should like to quote from the Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence of the Standing Committee of Miscellaneous Estimates of December 15. The witness was Mr. Walter Riese, Chief Actuary, Actuarial Branch. This was the evidence of a senior Government adviser on actuarial matters dealing with pension funds. I should like to quote a few lines from these minutes:

• (1250)

MR. MCKINNON: When you say unfunded liability, you really mean it is a debt that the Government owes. Is that correct?

MR. RIESE: That is correct.

MR. MCKINNON: Who does it owe it to?

MR. RIESE: Well, it is, I suppose, really an accounting matter, because the liability of the Government does not really change, whether the liability is funded or unfunded.

MR. MCKINNON: To whom is the liability?

MR. RIESE: It is to the beneficiaries; to the members and the beneficiaries of the plan.

The Government owes a debt to the beneficiaries of the plan. The Government has been collecting money for many years. It now owes the Armed Forces fund something just over $10 billion and the Public Service fund something over $15 billion. One does not have to be a great mathematician to realize—and I will discuss the military one first—that if that $10 billion were invested at a very low rate, which is what the Government usually pays, say 6 per cent, one would get $600 million on an annual basis. If it were funded and invested as badly as that, that it only paid 6 per cent, $600 million would be coming into the pension fund. They paid out of that pension fund $281 million, the last year for which I am able to get any records. Therefore, where is the need for this clamping down on Canadian Forces' pensions or, for that matter, on the Public Service pension? I cannot see any need for it.

If the Government has any intention in its heart of ever paying any real recognition to the donations of both the employer and employee in this case, considering the funds which have built up in the superannuation fund it must realize that it is short-changing these people. The fund will continue growing indefinitely if the Government does not come up with any plan as to how to reach some kind of a plateau. When it gets up to $100 billion and its own actuary says that it is owed, perhaps that will be sufficient to stop people from worrying that there is too much money tied up there. In reality there is no money, but they think of it as money; they compute the interest on it and put out annual reports which, as was the case this particular year, indicate that for the Armed Forces it is now over $10 billion for a payout of $281 million. It just does not make sense. I wish the Government could explain it, but not in the convoluted, tortured and meaningless way as did the Parliamentary Secretary.

How is it, with $25 billion tucked away in these two funds, that the Government turns first to clamp the lid on the payout? I suspect Mr. Goldfarb took a poll which came up with the idea, accepted by the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray), that people were not vitally concerned about indexed pensions for public servants and Armed Forces personnel. I suspect Mr. Goldfarb said: "Here is a good issue for you people to jump on. You can cut it. It will not affect too many voters, and you will look as if you are doing something real and determined." It seems to be ridiculous.

In the minute remaining I should like to suggest that there has to be a future for the fund. A bona fide pension fund should be considered. The present arrangement provides no guarantee of future financial soundness. It is too open to meddling from a Government which cannot keep its accounts straight.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I participated in the Committee which dealt with Bill C-124, and it was clearly indicated at that time that somewhere along the line those things that appeared in Bills C-131, C-132, and C-133 would appear.

At the outset I say that I will support wholeheartedly the amendment of my next door neighbour. I urge my colleagues and all Hon. Members to do so. His and my political views are widely divergent, but on this occasion the amendment is second best. The first would be to vote against the Bill. The second would be to eliminate as much as possible some of the negative and nefarious effects of this Bill.

The Hon. Member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon) adequately dealt with the bleats which came from his co-provincial member who, I must confess, uses logic which leaves one totally in dismay, especially the convolutions in his thinking. It is as though New Democratic Party Members took the aura or halo and planted it so firmly over their heads that it went down over their ears and blocked them so that they all got fat between the ears.

There is a need for restraint; there was a great need for restraint. United States labour unions volunteered to participate in restraint, but here in Canada they decided that they would do otherwise—damn the torpedoes and full steam ahead! As far as they were concerned, they wanted to benefit from inflation in every way possible. On the other hand, this is one of the inherent problems the Government built into its entire fiscal planning back in the late 1960s and early 1970s. I recall the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) boasting to the country that we had wrestled inflation to the ground. The only thing was that he had taken hold of a shadow; he had not touched inflation.

I was financial critic at the time. Time and time again we spoke about the Government's unwillingness to deal with inflation. I recall saying that this was a pis aller, that it was merely supplying a cushion or mattress against some of the effects of inflation. We must remember that it was not much to start with. There were only low, partial percentages. Nothing was done to deal with inflation. That was the problem. The Prime Minister said that we had wrestled it to the ground, but following the 1972 election the then Minister of Finance, when full indexing came in, the so-called Prince Charming—a nice fellow, personally we could not ask for a nicer man—inflicted on the country something we all remember. The budgets of 1973 and 1974 were inflationary. Government Members said—and the NDP was with them for the 1973 budget—that it was for the good of the country. But by 1975 did we not have real inflation? Then, without even consulting his Cabinet Members, the Prime Minister announced the policy of wage and price controls, partly applied and badly applied.

May I call it one o'clock?

TRADE

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT INSTITUTION PROJECTS

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Madam Speaker, as a trading nation Canada must necessarily take an interest in all international trade opportunities and markets.

Each year the World Bank and other international financial institutions sponsor capital project contracts to the value of some $10 billion. Canadians have the technology, the goods and the services to be successful in this lucrative market, and winning contracts for international development institution projects would, of course, bring valuable new business to Canadian companies and create jobs for Canadians. But to be successful in international bidding we must be competitive, and look toward raising our currently low profile in this arena of world trade.

International financial institution projects are new and attractive territory for much of the Canadian business community. The involvement of small and medium sized Canadian exporters could surely be facilitated by increased availability of information on forthcoming projects and Third World trade practices and procedures.

I would therefore urge the Government to take action promoting the participation of interested Canadian exporters in international financial institution project bidding.

INDUSTRY AND LABOUR ADJUSTMENT PROGRAM

SUGGESTED DESIGNATION OF OXFORD COUNTY, ONT.

Mr. Bruce Halliday (Oxford): Madam Speaker, one of the Government's job creation measures with the greatest unused potential is the Industry and Labour Adjustment Program, ILAP, which can help to attract industries and permanent jobs to depressed areas of the country. Only 12 communities have been designated under the Program so far.

The people of Oxford feel that if the funds originally allocated to ILAP have been exhausted then the Program should be expanded to help other communities, including the County of Oxford. The Government knows that Oxford has suffered severely from the recession over the past year, experiencing record unemployment and, as a result, an unprecedented welfare case load. In the Woodstock area alone the increase in the number of registered unemployed from December, 1981, to December, 1982, equals the total number of registered unemployed in December, 1980. The local economy has worsened with the recent closure of La France Textiles and the impending closure of Gardner Denver.

Since Oxford County is an ideal candidate for ILAP assistance, given its economic distress and its tremendous potential for industrial development, thanks to its location, skilled labour force, transportation networks, and the great amount of land which is zoned for industrial development, I earnestly beseech the Government to respond to the repeated requests that the Ministers responsible for ILAP meet with the elected mayors and the warden of Oxford.

MARINE TRANSPORT

PORT OF MONTREAL—NECESSITY TO DREDGE ST. LAWRENCE—SAFETY OF SAILORS

Mr. Pierre Deniger (La Prairie): Madam Speaker, in 1982, the Port of Montreal registered a drop in traffic of 18 per cent but still made a net profit of $16 million, which is certainly something for Port administrators and employees to be proud of. However, I am extremely worried about Transport Canada's inaction with respect to navigational aids on the St. Lawrence ship channel between Quebec City and Montreal, and even more so between Montreal and Sorel. In fact, the bends in the channel are becoming more and more pronounced, thereby increasing the risk of accidents and possibly limiting the size of ship that can reach Montreal.

I think the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) should immediately make sure that the channel is cleaned up and dredged between Montreal and Sorel, and that turning basins are dug to improve navigability and make the channel a safer place for all our seamen.

I may remind the Minister that even if he has the best facilities and the best managerial resources, ships will not be able to get to the Port of Montreal unless the channel is dredged.

METRIC CONVERSION

ALLOWABLE USE OF IMPERIAL MEASUREMENT

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Madam Speaker, the Progressive Conservative fight against mandatory metric is winning despite Liberal Orders in Council trying to make imperial measurement illegal. One, wieners may be packaged in one-pound packages; two, the fresh fruit and vegetable sector retains 40-pound basket-size, and potatoes in 10, 20 and 50-pound bags; three, the canning industry retain six, eight and 12-ounce sizes; four, CP and CN Railway cars will retain dual metric and imperial markings; five, the Canadian industrial sector is free to choose its preferred units of measurement, as is the construction industry; six, gasoline at the Canadian Forces bases and Canada Post is being pumped to consumers in gallons; seven, post offices in Ontario are using imperial weigh scales; eight, Consumer and Corporate officials have removed the wire from gas pumps delivering gas by the gallon in Alberta and have dropped charges against retailers selling carpet by the square yard; nine, the cattlemen have won their fight to keep the stockyards imperial across Canada; ten, major department stores retain the use of imperial measure in advertising floor covering; and finally, all media can now use either metric or imperial in all their material content. Remember, our freedom to measure is a measure of our freedom.

IMMIGRATION

CAUTION URGED IN ADVERTISING FOR OVERSEAS WORKERS

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, during the latter part of 1981 Canadian Westinghouse advertised in Britain for skilled tradesmen. It used the facilities of Ontario House and Canada House in order to have those people come to Canada. They arrived in early 1982 and, by the end of 1982, 40 such families were among the ranks of the unemployed in this country.

I want to suggest to the Government that it should seriously consider companies which are advertising for people to emigrate to Canada to take jobs for which there are untold number of Canadians available who, if not already skilled to do the work, could be trained to do so.

I want to suggest as well that when government officials in either Ontario House or Canada House make commitments to people that there will be employment opportunities in this country, the Government must then assume responsibility to make sure that there are those opportunities and that those people do not become a burden to the unemployment insurance system or, in many instances, be forced to return home at their own expense.

In closing, I want to suggest to the Government that it is time that it reviewed the apprenticeship programs that should be in place in this country but do not exist, and that it make a special effort to deal with companies such as this by making it mandatory that, if they must employ people from outside the country, it should be on a temporary basis.

AEROSPACE INDUSTRY

PARTICIPATION OF CANADIAN FIRMS IN INTERNATIONAL CO-OPERATIVE VENTURES

Mr. Louis R. Desmarais (Dollard): Madam Speaker, international co-operation on major telecommunications contracts is a dramatic spin-off of the widely shared technology and instant communication which are features of the world in which we live.

Canada's participation in the international team approach in the space industry is evidence of the health and competitiveness of our own aerospace industry. Canada is working with the United States and France in the establishment of SARSAT, a global search and rescue network, which eventually will provide 24-hour international coverage of emergency signals from downed aircraft and vessels in distress.

Recently a Canadian firm won a satellite contract with EMBRATEL, the Brazilian telecommunications agency, which will be undertaken with the co-operation of France.

Such co-operation with other nations is indeed a hallmark of the space age and we look forward to seeing Canadian firms continuing and increasing their participation in international co-operative ventures in the aerospace industry.

USE OF MONEYS IN PRAIRIE FARM EMERGENCY FUND

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Madam Speaker, almost two years ago, on February 3, 1981, Bill C-245, an Act to repeal the Prairie Farm Assistance Act, a Private Member's Bill, sponsored by myself, was debated in the House. That Bill would have set up a trust for the purpose of research into cereal grains and oil seeds fit for cultivation in the Prairie Provinces.

Initial funding was to come from the Prairie Farm Emergency Fund, which is a non-interest-bearing account of $9,060,000 made up of farmers' contributions under the PFAA. The account has been dormant since August, 1972.

In the debate two years ago the Minister of Agriculture stated that his own Bill on the matter was in the preparation stage, and he moved that the subject matter of Bill C-245 be referred to committee. Shortly after, the Minister indicated that he was prepared to turn the $9 million over to a foundation made up of representatives of farm organizations from western Canada.

Two years have passed and the money is still in the Prairie Farm Emergency Fund, used by the Government interest-free. In the meantime the Minister has announced cut-backs in research personnel in western Canada and an increase in research personnel in Quebec.

Research is vital if western Canada is to maintain its competitive position in grain and oil seeds exports. Unfortunately the Minister of Agriculture and his Cabinet do not understand this and refuse even to support a producers' self-help program at no cost to the Government.

HUMAN RIGHTS

SUGGESTED ESTABLISHMENT OF PARLIAMENTARY ASSOCIATION

Mr. Stanley Hudecki (Hamilton West): Madam Speaker, part of the policy which Canada should pursue in order to promote human rights, not only in Latin America and the Caribbean but in other nations world-wide, is to adopt the House of Commons Sub-Committee on Latin American and Carribbean Nations' recommendation that a Canadian Parliamentary Human Rights Association be established to serve as a forum for discussion and promotion of international human rights. This concept is fully supported by Amnesty International, the respected human rights monitoring organization.

• (1410)

I urge the House and the Government to consider seriously the formation of such an Association by way of a sub-committee of the House of Commons Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence. Sub-committees such as this would allow parliamentarians to monitor periodically the human rights records of foreign countries as a means of focusing attention upon Governments which abuse the human rights of their citizens, and as a forum for making recommendations to the Government of Canada on policies toward these Governments.

I would also urge that the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence be given additional researchers and funding to assist in this important task.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

EFFECT OF MAILING RATES ON SMALL BUSINESS

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Madam Speaker, once again I want to try to make the point which I was addressing the other day when the egg-timer ran out on me. The point is that, while the new postal rates make volume discounts possible which will most benefit big business, and exemptions from the proposed surcharges for individual mailers, it is once again the small enterprises, the perennial bag-holders in the Government's airy-fairy schemes, which end up carrying the can.

The new rates, we are told, are to permit the greater use of automatic letter-sorting machinery and to encourage large mailers to pre-sort their mail, thus cutting down on the labour requirements of the Post Office. This is all very logical, except for the fact that, according to the figures given to me, in the period since March of 1981, the cost of first class postage looking ahead a month, has risen by 88 per cent, from 17 cents to 32 cents. The volume of mail handled has dropped from 6.5 billion to 6.1 billion, or over 6 per cent; and the number of permanent employees of the Corporation has risen from 53,465 to 66,121, which is almost 24 per cent. With statistics like these it is easier to understand why the Corporation seeks to limit its competition.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

REDUCED FINANCIAL SUPPORT FOR NATIVE STUDENTS AT SASKATCHEWAN COLLEGE

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Madam Speaker, there are more people of native ancestry per capita in my home city of Regina than in any other city in Canada. It is true that many live in an environment of alcoholism, welfare dependency, violence and despair. It is also true that they do not like it.

The Saskatchewan Federated Indian College at the University of Regina stands as eloquent evidence of that dislike. The College has helped to break down stereotypes. The young Indians who go there are taking advantage of the seldom offered chance to acquire the skills and knowledge necessary to obtain new opportunities. Now everything which has been so carefully developed over six years of hard work stands threatened. It stands threatened because of a directive from the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development which would deny continuing financial support to one half of the students at the College. Is this any way to recognize and support the efforts of Indian people to break their dependency on welfare and the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development? No, it is not. The Minister should immediately commit the Government to supporting those students.

The Saskatchewan Federated Indian College and its students must be allowed to plan for their future. We must stop speaking with forked tongues. We must not only talk about equal opportunities for native people; we must also provide them.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Oral Questions

IMMIGRATION

ENTREPRENEURIAL SKILLS OF IMMIGRANTS—INFORMATION ON GOVERNMENT AID PROGRAMS

Mrs. Ursula Appolloni (York South-Weston): Madam Speaker, it is often said, and it is no less true for the frequency with which it is said, that this country has been built by immigrants. At the leading edge are new Canadian entrepreneurs, many of whom I have seen arriving in my own riding with savings in hand and plans in mind to establish business operations in this country.

A recently published report testifies to the initiative and enterprising spirit of these ethnic business owners, most of whom employ fewer than 20 employees and generate growth revenues of $100,000 to $500,000 per year. These are individuals who clearly have a valuable contribution to make to the Canadian economy and have chosen to make it, yet the study to which I have referred would indicate, and I have found it to be true from my own experience, that new Canadian business owners might well benefit by more familiarity with Government programs in place to assist them.

I would therefore recommend that the Government consider ways by which information on its assistance to small businesses might be made more accessible to new Canadian entrepreneurs.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

LABOUR CONDITIONS

LOSS OF CLERICAL AND SALES JOBS—NECESSITY FOR WOMEN'S RETRAINING PROGRAMS

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Employment and Immigration I will direct my question to the Minister responsible for the status of women. It concerns the increasing number of women who, because of the depressed state of the economy, are being laid off jobs in the clerical and sales areas, the very areas where jobs are being transformed by the microchip revolution. These women cannot get into retraining programs to upgrade themselves for the jobs of the future because all of the retraining programs are full. In fact there are long waiting lists.

I would like to ask the Minister why the Government did not anticipate this urgent need and provide for more retraining programs. There are 2,400 such women unemployed in the Kingston area, and only 150 retraining places.

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of State (Mines)): Madam Speaker, I hate to refute the figures brought forward by the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands, but the fact is that the unemployment figures for women have not risen substantially. That does not, of course, answer the question concerning the plight of women in the country. However, let us get the facts straight.

I really do welcome this opportunity to respond to the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands, because the kind of examination which I have suggested is the kind which I would have thought the Hon. Member would have endorsed and urged. The role of women in the economy is one which I think requires a very close examination. I am frankly very disappointed that she has not endorsed that kind of examination and really examined the plight of the poor in this country, the women and the children.

Mr. Jarvis: They need jobs, and that is what they want.

Miss MacDonald: Since the Minister very casually denied the question or addressing herself to it, I can only consider that she is not concerned about the great number of women in clerical, stenographic and sales positions who are being laid off.

REDUCTION IN PROVISION OF RETRAINING PLACEMENTS

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, unemployment is increasing. I would like to point out to the Minister that the bottom line is that the number of CEC retraining places in this country has gone down from last year. At this time last year there were 293,000 training places. This year there are 271,000, and yet unemployment has risen 50 per cent, in case she had not realized it. I would like to ask her why, when unemployment is approaching the two million mark, there should be fewer retraining places than there were at this time last year.

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of State (Mines)): Madam Speaker, the budget is $1 billion. I should like to point out to the Hon. Member, who has taken a very superficial approach to the problem concerning women in this country, that there is a fundamental problem which goes far deeper than retraining.

Mr. Nielsen: The Government.

Mrs. Erola: It is the absence of training in science and mathematics at the earlier level which prevents women from entering the retraining program.

I would suggest to the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands that she take a much more fundamental and realistic approach to the problems of women in this country.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: You are a farce.

Miss MacDonald: I would hope that the Minister responsible for the Status of Women would only argue the case for women in Cabinet instead of ignoring it all the time.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: She has lost her status.

PLIGHT OF WOMEN CUT OFF UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE BENEFITS

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): I would like the Minister to tell us what she is recommending with regard to a woman on unemployment insurance benefits who offers to pay for a retraining course on her own and is then cut off unemployment insurance benefits if she does. Such a woman cannot pay for the course and then be left with no income.

I would ask the Minister to consider a woman on unemployment insurance who—

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Miss MacDonald: —offers to work perhaps two days a week as a volunteer but is cut off unemployment insurance benefits when she does. What is happening to such women? Why must they be penalized, with their UI benefits taken away, because they either offer to pay for retraining courses on their own or do voluntary work in the community?

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of State (Mines)): I repeat, Madam Speaker, that the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands is taking a very piecemeal approach to the fundamental problem concerning women.

• (1420)

I spent an hour with women from the Outreach Program in London, Ontario, on Friday, and they pointed to the real problem of women in our society. The problem is much deeper than the one the Hon. Member has referred to; it is training at the very early level. I was talking to women, and I talk to women regularly. I suggest to the Hon. Member that she sit down and examine what is the true plight of women in our society, and I suggest to her that the women who are attending university cannot even deduct tuition fees from their income tax. These are very real problems which the Hon. Member refuses to address.

Miss MacDonald: You are the Government.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

PURCHASE OF F-18 FIGHTER AIRCRAFT—IMPORTANCE OF RELATED BENEFITS TO QUEBEC

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence. On November 3 last year, in answer to a question I asked the Minister about the F-18 of course he gave me the assurance in this House that the Province of Quebec, a province he knows quite well, would without a doubt obtain 48 per cent of the economic spin-offs. Last Friday, according to a report which the Minister of Supply and Services had ordered, it seems that Quebec is getting only 24 per cent of the projected spin-offs. Could the Minister, to reassure those who are worried about this—and they are not on this side alone inform the House today—that he can confirm that 48 per cent of the economic spin-offs will go to the Province of Quebec?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, I think the allegations made by the Member for Joliette may be somewhat confusing, where the Hon. Member mentions the figure of 48 per cent, for instance. First of all, I may say that my main responsibility in the matter of the F-18 was to select a plane that would give our pilots the best possible defence in case of an armed conflict. That was my main responsibility as Minister of Defence.

Mr. La Salle: That is not the point.

Mr. Lamontagne: My second—I know that is not the point here, but I felt it was proper to mention what our responsibilities were. Madam Speaker, as the Member for Langelier and being from Quebec, my responsibility was also to see to it that Quebec maintained its position in the aviation industry, which at the time meant 48 per cent of the industry's activity across Canada. The figures projected at the time by the Ministers of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Supply and Services were $1.573 billion worth of economic spin-offs for Quebec and $1.296 billion for Ontario. This is where we got the percentages that are in the news today, since the sum of $1.573 billion represented 48 per cent of the economic spin-offs, for Quebec, and $1.296 billion represented 41 or 42 per cent of the economic spin-offs, for Ontario. This is what lead to the conclusion that because historically, 48 per cent of Canada's aviation industry was concentrated in Quebec, it would be normal to expect the F-18 spin-offs to be apportioned in the same way.

Madam Speaker, I do not think the F-18 battle is lost. I think we can still win the war, that is, ensure that Quebec gets the percentage that reflects its position in Canada's aviation industry, and that is exactly what we intend to do.

REQUEST THAT REPORT BE TABLED

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): I have a supplementary, Madam Speaker. Today, the Minister seems to be unwilling to stand behind a minimum of 48 per cent. He keeps mentioning figures. There is a report that came out in one of the newspapers. First of all, is the Minister willing to make this report public? I think it would be of interest to all concerned. Second, is the Minister now refusing to consider this basic 48 per cent which is important to many Quebecers and many Liberal Members from Quebec? Is the Minister now refusing to give us as Quebecers the assurance that a 48 per cent portion of spin-offs is feasible? That is my question as a Member from Quebec, and I am speaking not only on behalf of many Quebecers but also on behalf of many Liberals on the other side of the House who are afraid to speak up themselves. I think the answer is of some considerable importance to the Members of this House today.

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, I have never felt that I myself as a Minister from Quebec, nor the Quebec caucus, nor the Cabinet or other Quebec Ministers in the Cabinet, have ever wished to shirk our responsibility with respect to the F-18. I think that our past statements and projections are still valid. The figures are still there, and not only do I have the impression but I am certain that Quebec will maintain the position it held in Canada's aviation industry when the F-18 contract was signed, namely 48 per cent, and we shall do everything necessary to make it so.

HOUSING

CONSTRUCTION OF SOCIAL HOUSING UNITS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister responsible for housing. The Minister will know that housing starts in 1982 were even lower than the pessimistic projections put forward by the previous Minister, and I am sure he will agree with the previous Minister when he identified one of the major problems facing the housing industry as the growing number of Canadians who pay more than 30 per cent of their incomes to provide shelter. One of ways to ease that situation, and one of the ways to ease the situation for the growing number of Canadians who are homeless, is to provide more money for social housing. Will the Minister explain to the House and to Canadians why at this time the Government has chosen to cut back social housing to the tune of 2,500 units?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): The Hon. Member, Madam Speaker, should ask for information before he asks questions. In 1979 the level was set at 25,000 and almost every year since then it has exceeded 25,000, always with the provision that, when the situation improved, we would pay back to the Department of Finance the borrowing we had made. In the light of the present situation I have asked my colleague, the Minister of Finance, and have had discussions with him, to put off the date when these units will be restored and, in fact, to continue at a level of 25,000, if not more, for the current year, and that decision is pending.

Mr. Riis: Madam Speaker, I do hope the Minister of Finance listens to that suggestion, and I would ask that he even consider what our party has proposed, namely, to add $500 million to that section of the budget, which would provide 50,000 additional units, and in addition create 100,000 new jobs in Canada.

PENALTIES CHARGED BY BANKS FOR RENEGOTIATION OF MORTGAGES

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of State for Finance, the previous Minister responsible for housing. Considering that some of the banks have been paying no income tax for 1982, in spite of profits in the $300 million and $400 million range, and that banks are still asking people to pay an incredible penalty, often to the tune of many thousands of dollars, in their efforts to renegotiate their mortgages to take advantage of the falling interest rates, is it not time for the Minister to stop this process that the banks are presently involved in, and ask them to reduce the penalties they are charging Canadians to allow Canadians access to these lower mortgage rates?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, the representation made by the Hon. Member is one that has been made to the Minister of Finance. The Minister has indicated that, given the opportunity, he intends to raise this subject with representatives of the banking industry.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT MAKE REPRESENTATIONS TO BANKS

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Madam Speaker, my question is a further supplementary to the Minister of State for Finance. Given the fact that mortgage interest rates have come down by as much as 6 per cent in recent months, why should the Government not take immediate action to say to the banks and mortgage companies that when they were assessing a penalty of three months' interest for prepayment of mortgages they were already asking too much? Now that they are asking even more and increasing the penalty, they would be told that what they are doing is usury and that it is time they stopped it and gave a chance to the ordinary people of Canada who cannot make the kinds of profits which the banks have made, and who have to pay much higher income taxes than the banks pay.

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, I have great difficulty with the premise of the Hon. Member's question, and that is the assertion of the untoward profits of the banks. The Hon. Member probably does not know because the Members of his party who started out with the Special Committee on Finance which studied that subject abandoned the other Members of this House of Commons on that Committee. The result of that study dated July 27, 1982, did not at all support the assertion of the Hon. Member that the profits of the banks had been untoward.

PIPELINES

ALASKA GAS PIPELINE—FAILURE OF COMMITTEE TO MEET

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Bearing in mind that the Alaska gas pipeline, if completed, would be about an $80 billion project, would create between 150,000 and 200,000 jobs and those jobs would be effective in places like Sudbury, Hamilton, places where the iron ore could be mined and rolled, plus all of industrial central Canada, why is it that presently, with continuing rumours coming out of Alaska that there is a move toward shipping it the 800-mile route from Prudhoe Bay via the Port of Valdez into Japan as LNG Gas, we still do not have the Committee on Northern Pipelines meeting? Is there a disregard on behalf of the Government of Canada for protecting that enormous capacity for the production of jobs in Canada?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Malone: I wish the Members of the NDP—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The question of the Hon. Member is unusually long.

Mr. Malone: It is unusually good too.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Malone: It deals with jobs for Canadians. Can the Minister report to the House of Commons whether he is going to call upon that Committee to meet, and what is it that Mitchell Sharp, his Liberal friend is doing? Do we have any—

Madam Speaker: Order.

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, the question of committees of the House is not the responsibility of the Minister, it is the responsibility of the House. If the Hon. Member is a Member of that committee, he should talk to the chairman and request a meeting. I have no objection to a meeting. Nobody has asked me.

The problem with the pipeline is not that Canadians have not played their part. Hon. Members will recall that some years ago Parliament sat a full summer in order to pass the Bill. We authorized the pre-build of a large section of that. The problem is vested with the American section of the pipeline because they cannot find the financing or the market. As far as the project of former Governor Hickel is concerned, to have the gas delivered to Valdez, it is a project that was put forward exactly at the time of the discoveries in Prudhoe Bay. There is nothing new to it. When the Americans are willing to build their section of the pipeline, they will just do what Canada has already done.

CANADA-UNITED STATES AGREEMENT

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Madam Speaker, I will direct my supplementary question to the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that Senator Bud Olson in the other place who is in charge of this very important job-building task, stated on July 17, 1980, that the risks were minimal, the project was going ahead, that the former Energy Minister gave an iron-clad guarantee that the job was going ahead, and added on July 17 "is reasonable time"; and we have the assurance on July 21, 1980, of the Prime Minister, does the Prime Minister in fact have some kind of agreement with the United States that he can share with this House? Will he table that information? Will he give us whatever there is so that we in Parliament and the people of Canada might know that this enormous megaproject, with billions of dollars of job-creating capacity across the country, is in fact onstream and that we did not build the pre-build for naught? Will he give us that assurance?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the agreement I have is the one that was made publicly by President Reagan when he came to this country. He made it quite clear that his administration was committed to the building of that pipeline, and that remains the case.

ENERGY

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL PRICING AGREEMENT

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. The National Energy Program of October, 1980, and the energy-pricing agreement of September, 1981, were predicated on the assumption of steadily rising world oil prices. Not only have world oil prices remained flat since then, but since yesterday, as a result of the collapse of the OPEC meetings in Geneva, it is widely believed that we in fact will see decreasing world oil prices. In view of these developments, is the Minister prepared to reopen discussions with the producing Provinces in order to find pricing and taxing regimes more appropriate to these changing circumstances, since obviously the circumstances are totally different from those which existed then, or those that were thought to exist now?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, we have an agreement signed with the Provinces for five years. There have been no requests from the different Provinces asking me to reopen the agreement. Therefore it is a purely hypothetical question at this time.

Mr. Andre: My suggestion was that the federal Government, this Government, show some leadership.

REQUEST FOR RE-EXAMINATION OF PRICING STRUCTURE

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Madam Speaker, I have a related question. Press stories over the weekend confirm that United States consumers now pay in the order of 15 cents a litre, or 60 to 70 cents a gallon Canadian currency, Canadian gallons, less for gasoline and heating oil than Canadians. Americans are not protected from the world price. They pay world price while we in Canada are supposedly protected from high world prices by this made-in-Canada creation of the Minister's predecessor. Obviously, either the pricing regime put in place by the Minister's predecessor is not working properly, or the Government is perpetrating a fraud on Canadians, because we are paying 60 to 70 cents a gallon more for gasoline in Canada today than are Americans who are paying the world price.

In view of this reality that the scheme is not working, or fraud is being perpetrated, does the Minister feel an obligation to re-examine that whole structure, and either admit that the Government was mistaken in what it promised and committed itself to, or else make changes to keep the promises that were made in the last election and since then?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I think the Hon. Member's statement was not quite accurate, because he forgot to mention that prices in Canada are sometimes higher because of provincial taxes which vary enormously from province to province, and considerably increase the national average. In some provinces there is no sales tax, while in other provinces, the tax on gas may be extremely high, thus raising the national average. As for the base price paid to Canadian producers, we pay the international price for imported oil, about 75 per cent of the international price for old oil and the international price for new oil. The problem is therefore not our basic policy but the sales tax which varies across Canada.

THE ADMINISTRATION

REPORTED STATEMENTS BY MINISTER OF ENERGY, MINES AND RESOURCES

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): Madam Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. As the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources advised a group of American Congressmen who were at a dinner here in this building on Friday, and was quoted as saying:

> I don't know how long we'll be here, we're in terrible shape.

I would like to ask the Prime Minister if he has any plans for improving the terrible shape which the Hon. Minister so correctly described the Government as being in. If so, when will those plans be made known to the Canadian people?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, knowing the hon. Member's political acumen I thought I would not have to explain to him, but the Minister of Energy was really trying to ensure that the present Tory Leader would be confirmed at this week's convention.

APPRAISAL OF POSSIBLE LEADERSHIP RACE

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): Madam Speaker, as the Right Hon. Prime Minister knows, also in that speech, a very eloquent speech by the way, the Minister is directly quoted as saying:

> If I run hard, Trudeau will say: 'Chrétien, out of the cabinet'.

Does the Prime Minister not think this is being hard on his colleague, a very good and old friend, in view of the fact that many of his colleagues are running very hard at the present time, both here in Ottawa and in Toronto?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the only conclusion that the Hon. Member should deduct from the alleged quote of the Minister of Energy is that he too has political acumen.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PENITENTIARIES

CANCELLATION OF UNIVERSITY COURSES

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Solicitor General. Last week it was announced that the Minister intends to cancel post-secondary university education courses in the federal prison system. These important programs which are offered at four B.C. institutions by the University of Victoria, as well as at three other Canadian prisons in Manitoba, Ontario and Quebec, have been by far the most successful rehabilitative programs within the federal prison system.

Will the Minister explain the incredible decision to axe this successful program, which is supported across the board by citizens, advisory boards, guards, prisoners, wardens and after-care agencies, and which has been described by his own Director of Academic Education as the finest program of its type in North America?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Madam Speaker, there were 232 inmates among the 10,000 in our system who were benefiting from those programs. I do not agree they have been proven to be particularly rehabilitative because post-secondary offenders tend to recidivate much less than the general population in any event. But they were good programs and I was very proud of them. I regretted very much having to do that. They were the best in North America. But we also have the most expensive correctional service system in North America and I am responsible for restraining expenditures within the Correctional Services of Canada, as elsewhere.

These programs cost $3,500 per inmate per year. That is a high amount. My hope is that post-secondary education can still be brought to them by self-help, by group sessions and by correspondence courses. I believe that, if those inmates really want to have the benefit of post-secondary education, they can develop it in some way that will cost the taxpayers less money.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Well, Madam Speaker, this is just an exercise in colossal correctional stupidity. It is going to reinforce the "warehousing" concept that this Government seems to support and which is an expensive failure in the present prison system.

REQUEST THAT DECISION BE DEFERRED

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): My supplementary is directed to the Solicitor General. The Warden of William Head Institution in British Columbia, as well as a number of other wardens across the country, has said that if the Minister persists in axing this successful program there are going to be very serious consequences within the federal prison community. In view of the widespread support for the program, will the Solicitor General at the very least agree to defer a final decision on the matter until he has met with university and prison officials who are directly affected by this fundamentally mistaken decision?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): No, Madam Speaker, my decision is a final one, but I make it believing that the slightly over 200 inmates who have been benefiting from these programs can find other ways within our system of getting a higher education. It is totally wrong to characterize the Correctional Service of Canada as a "warehousing" system, and the Hon. Member knows that. It is the best in North America, and he knows that also.

PROVISION OF FREE UNIVERSITY TUITION TO INMATES

Mr. Maurice A. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Madam Speaker, perhaps the Minister would explain to the House why inmates of the correctional service, who are being paid for by the taxpayers of Canada, should receive free university tuition when the children of those taxpayers do not?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Madam Speaker, I believe we do have a responsibility to rehabilitate offenders who are behind bars, and we will continue to exercise that responsibility, but when programs across the country are being cut back for people who are not in prison, I think inmates, and others who support inmates, have to understand that restraint has also to be applied within the Correctional Service as well.

ABORIGINAL RIGHTS

GOVERNMENT POLICY FOR CONSTITUTIONAL CONFERENCE

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Indian and Northern Affairs. Last week the press published a leaked Government document written by a certain Denis Morantz of the Federal-Provincial Relations Office outlining a possible government policy for the Constitutional Conference on Aboriginal Rights scheduled for March 15 and March 16. Since the document suggested a policy and tactics which are manipulative, cynical and insincere, will the Minister say whether that document represents the policy of his Department and, if not would he assure this House that he will take an open and co-operative approach in planning for that conference?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Madam Speaker, I, for one, have not seen this alleged leaked document, but from what my hon. friend says it is some type of memo from one official to another and, as the Hon. Member knows, having been a Minister in the Government previously, officials' memos do not form government policy. The Cabinet certainly is not contemplating any approach which would be cynical or have any of the other attributes which the Hon. Member identifies; rather, we are approaching that conference with the best of intentions to do the very best we can for the native people of Canada.

EFFECT OF PROPOSED SPOUSAL TAX EXEMPTION—MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Bill Jarvis (Perth): Madam Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Agriculture who, I am sure, in common with all Hon. Members of this House, will have received various forms of communication arising from the statement made by the minister responsible for the status of women regarding spousal exemptions under the Income Tax Act. The Minister will know that many farm wives have not had the option to enter the work force because, to preserve and enhance the integrity of the family farm, they, of necessity, have had to stay on the farm, where they are, in my view, true partners and true contributors to the preservation of the family farm. I wonder, because of the Minister's responsibility for the family farm and its operators, would he indicate to us what his position is with regard to any changes to the spousal exemption under the Income Tax Act.

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, I have received no letters from any farm organization or any farmers' wives, to my knowledge. Once we have received representations I will have discussions with the Minister concerned, dealing also with our concern about joint ownership, joint partnership in farming. We know, and the Hon. Member knows, fairly well, the contribution which farmers' wives have made. We have passed special laws and regulations for the Farm Credit Corporation giving them equal rights.

REPORTED RESPONSE BY MINISTER

Hon. Bill Jarvis (Perth): I am sorry, the Minister did not choose to answer, because my information, and I hope he will correct me if I am wrong, is that he has communicated to his colleagues saying he was unable to support these changes at the time, and went on to say, "I did not say anything in Cabinet or Caucus but this is one of the roughest issues yet. They are mad." This is on his ministerial letterhead. I ask seriously, was this simply an expression as a private Member of Parliament concerned about his constituents, as I am concerned about mine, or is that the official position of the Minister of Agriculture of this Government?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, I misunderstood what the Hon. Member said. I thought he said "from organized farmers, or farmers' organizations." We have received several letters from people concerned about what my colleague has stated, et cetera, and we have answered those letters.

NATIONAL SECURITY

POSSIBILITY OF LAYING CHARGES AGAINST FORMER RCMP CORPORAL

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Durham-Northumberland): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice. Early in November, only as a result of prodding, the Solicitor General asked the Minister of Justice for an opinion on whether ex-RCMP Corporal James Morrison of the Security Service could be charged for betraying, for money, a potential Canadian agent to the Soviets. Twice since then the Minister of Justice has stonewalled my questions in the House. Now, two and a half months after the matter was put in his hands for an opinion, could he tell us whether Morrison is to be charged and, if not, why not?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Madam Speaker, I have to admit that I have not yet received an opinion from the Department on that to forward to the Solicitor General. I appreciate the interest of the Hon. Member and I will press the Department again for action on this matter. Perhaps there may still be facts which are not available to them to enable them to complete their opinion.

FORGING OF FORMER SOLICITOR GENERAL'S SIGNATURE

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Durham-Northumberland): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is about a clear case of forgery of a former Solicitor General's signature to documents of which the Minister, I understand, has full knowledge because of briefings which have occurred. Can he also tell us if any consideration is being given to a prosecution in relation to the forging on documentation, purportedly official Canadian Government documentation, of a signature of a previous Solicitor General?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Madam Speaker, I have myself recently asked the question whether this is covered by decisions which have already been made, or whether this is a matter which we still have to decide. I still do not have an answer to that question.

RAILWAYS

CROWSNEST PASS RATE—CONDITIONS PREREQUISITE TO CHANGE

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister and is with regard to Government policy on changes to the Crow rate. The much touted ministerial announcement on the Crow rate which was slated for last Friday in Winnipeg, was cancelled with no real explanation.

• (1450)

Since the Canadian Wheat Board Advisory Committee voted an overwhelming seven to two to reject the Gilson proposal, which I submit accurately reflects producer opinion since they were just elected last month by grain producers all across the Wheat Board Region, would the Prime Minister tell the House if the Government has now decided to interpret correctly the overwhelming opposition to the Crow change proposals, and does the Government now recognize that the consensus among farmers, which the Prime Minister has always claimed would be a first condition to any Crow change, does not in fact exist?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, the situation in the West is rather special. We have the Saskatchewan Federation of Agriculture which could not make up its mind and decided to go back to a previous version of its policy. We have the Manitoba Farm Bureau which is in favour of the Gilson approach. Then we have Unifarm which is in favour of the Argue approach. They all met the other day at the Western Agricultural Conference and their first vote was 17 in favour of the Argue approach, 11 for the Gilson approach, and five abstained. Then the next day they had another vote and decided to leave it to the Government to make the decision.

Mr. Althouse: Madam Speaker, I think that answers the allegation that there is no consensus, but it does not answer the question about what is the Government's policy.

REASONS FOR GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Madam Speaker, the second reason raised by press observers for the cancellation says that it was done to avoid conflict with the media coverage of the Tory Convention in Winnipeg. Does this mean that the Government's consensus-forming strategy on the Crow has veered away from its focus on farmers toward concentration instead on reinforcing the more natural alliance between the Government and its allies, those Tory Governments and railways which have a vested interest in breaking the old contract at the expense of the farmers of the country?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, as the Hon. Member just realized, even the Tories find the question preposterous.

JAPANESE CANADIANS INTERNED DURING WARTIME

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. In the United States the Congressional Commission on Wartime Relocation and Internment of Civilians will be reporting and will recommend that President Reagan establish a federally financed education foundation for Japanese Americans, and that the Government should compensate each camp survivor or immediate heir. Is the Canadian Government considering similar assistance to our citizens of Japanese extraction who were interned during World War II?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Madam Speaker, there was, of course a commission in Canada under which compensation was paid to Japanese Canadians involved in that very unfortunate experience. Naturally we will look at the situation in light of the kind of recommendations my hon. friend refers to as being likely to be made in the United States.

REQUEST FOR COMMITTEE REFERRAL

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, I think the actions of our Government during World War II are a serious blot on the country's record of respect for minority rights and human rights, as the Minister will understand.

Would the Minister be agreeable to this subject matter, including the U.S. experience, being referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs so that a representative group from the House will have an opportunity to examine the possibilities in Canada with respect to this initiative?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): I am certainly prepared to consider that, Madam Speaker, to the extent that it is possible in accordance with the other responsibilities of that committee.

AIRPORTS

MIRABEL—SALE OF EXPROPRIATED PROPERTIES TO CROWN CORPORATION EMPLOYEES

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Public Works regarding the six properties at Mirabel which were sold by the Government's Crown Corporation to employees of that Crown Corporation. Can the Minister tell us whether the original owners of those properties were, in any case, offered the first right to purchase those properties?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I am not familiar with that detail and I will inquire. I doubt very much, as the Right Hon. Member knows, that those who were occupying farms or residences at one point were offered the possibility of purchase. What the Right Hon. Member suggests would, in fact, be a second expropriation. For example, a farmer who has consolidated into a large and successful enterprise would suddenly find that, out of his 400 acres or 300 acres, a good part of his land would be excised like a doughnut. If the Right Hon. Member defends that thesis, I would like to hear how he would apply it.

Mr. Clark: Madam Speaker, I find it curious that the Minister should have such a ready defence of a position he does not know whether or not has been taken. I also find it rather surprising that the Minister, having been under questioning in this House for four days on this matter, and having said this particular question had been studied with particular care, would not know whether the original owners were offered the first right to purchase.

REQUEST THAT COMMITTEE STUDY SALE OF PROPERTIES

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, let us bring the matter into the public domain. Will the Minister agree to have all details of the disposition of those six properties sold to employees of the federal Crown Corporation, including copies of any representations given by any Liberal Member of Parliament, or anyone else—will he allow that to be studied without limitation by a Standing Committee of this House?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, the Estimates of the Crown Corporation involved will be up for review in the natural course of events and it is open to the Right Hon. Member to have his representations heard then.

REQUEST FOR PRODUCTION OF DOCUMENTS

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, in light of the unusual circumstances here where the Government took away land from the original owners, some of whom had it in their families for generations, set up a Crown Corporation, and then had the Crown Corporation sell that land to the Government's own employees without giving the original owners an opportunity to bid, a reckless abuse of Government power, will the Minister not agree to make a special reference of all the information available respecting the sale by a Crown Corporation to six employees of that Crown Corporation of those lands? Will he make that information available now, immediately, so that the House of Commons can study each detail, including any representations or any record of representations made by Liberal Members of Parliament? Will he not do that now, immediately, so that the matter can be cleared up?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, the Right Hon. Member, having found that his legal position was not a position—

Mr. Clark: That is not true.

Mr. LeBlanc: —now goes into a supposed conspiracy of secrecy. The Crown Corporation in question is open to be examined in any committee, and I am quite willing and quite happy to recommend that this avenue be explored.

METRIC LABELLING OF FARM CHEMICALS

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture who is probably aware of the problems encountered by farmers as a result of metric labelling of farm chemicals. He has probably received representations from individuals, and I imagine recently he has received representations from the Ontario Farmers' Union. I would like to know the Minister's position with respect to metric labelling of farm chemicals.

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member, I think, is referring again to representations made concerning dual labelling; they want it in both imperial and metric. We have written back to them stating our position, and I am sure that if my letters are available on other things I have written about, these also ought to be available.

Mr. Paproski: What is it?

Mr. Whelan: It says that we are considering some of the ramifications of dual labelling, including the danger of doing that if it is misinterpreted. Our officials are telling me that the danger is very great, as their studies show. Also, there are available small calculators with which people can immediately translate metric into imperial and imperial into metric, whichever their machine is manufactured for.

Mr. Neil: Obviously the Minister does not credit the farmers with much intelligence when he says they might be confused about dual labelling.

REQUEST THAT REGULATIONS PERMIT DUAL LABELLING

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Madam Speaker, would the Minister be prepared to talk to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and ask him to change the regulations in order to ensure that there is dual labelling? This is what the farmers are asking.

• (1500)

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member says I am challenging the farmers' intelligence. Already 67 per cent of farmers have changed to metric. They lead the nation in the change. For years they have used metric when doctoring their animals. At the present time 85 or 87 per cent of all agriculture has changed to the metric system. Hon. Members opposite want us to take a retrograde step—to go backwards. Instead of stepping into the Twentieth Century they want us to go back to the Eighteenth Century. We do not intend to do that. Most of the farmers whom I know have the intelligence and know-how to use the metric system, and they are using it.

Hon. Members opposite point to mistakes in the metric system, but mistakes were made in the old imperial system which were just as bad as anything ever reported to me. In my career as Minister of Agriculture, in my career as a farm leader, and in my career as a farmer, I have used all these products on my own farm. If the Hon. Member opposite ever used any on his farm, I challenge him to show that they are not now used in a safer manner than they have ever been used in our lives.

MR. GREENAWAY—OPPOSITION TO BILL C-85

Mr. Lorne Greenaway (Cariboo-Chilcotin): Madam Speaker, it is my duty to present a petition signed by 256 citizens of the interior region of British Columbia protesting Bill C-85. In addition, I have a Telex from the Peace River Regional Cattlemen's Association, representing 350 cattlemen, also voicing their opposition to Canagrex. Previously I presented a petition signed by 293 of my constituents on this issue.

The purpose of this petition is to express the clear and strong opposition of the citizens of British Columbia to Bill C-85, the legislation to establish Canagrex. In particular, the petitioners protest the buy and sell provisions of Canagrex as well as its wide-ranging powers.

The nature of the petition is to halt passage of Bill C-85 and prevent approval of Canagrex at third reading, and thereby prevent the establishment of Canagrex.

The petitioners hope that in your examination of the petition you will find it in order, that the Government will take heed of opposition to Bill C-85 among those in the agricultural sector and will withdraw this ill-conceived legislation.

MR. MUNRO (ESQUIMALT-SAANICH)—PUBLIC SERVICE PENSIONS

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Madam Speaker, I have a duty to present a petition entitled "SOS—Save our Superannuation" on behalf of more than 60 residents of the constituencies of Esquimalt-Saanich, Victoria, and Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands, all members of the International Association of Machinists and Aerospace Workers, Lodge No. 456, asking the Government to honour the commitment it gave almost a decade ago when it agreed with public servants that an additional 1 per cent and, later, 1.5 per cent be added to their pension deductions to take into account the excessive inflation in the country which the Government has done so much to create.

These petitioners do humbly pray that in your examination of the petition you will find it in order, will give full weight to the urgency and strong commitment of their plea and will use the discretionary powers vested in your office to allow discussion of it at the earliest opportunity.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Jack Burghardt (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 4,269, 4,584, 4,626 and 4,632.

TREASURY BOARD—CODE OF BEHAVIOUR

Question No. 4,269—Mr. Crosby:

1. Does the Treasury Board have written rules or regulations governing the conduct or standards of behaviour for employees of the Secretariat and, if so, are they embodied in a Code of Conduct or other specific document and is the Code or document available to the public?

2. In the five years preceding April 1, 1982, were any employees of the Secretariat disciplined by way of suspension, dismissal or otherwise for violations of any rules or regulations governing the conduct or standards of behaviour for departmental employees and, if so, in each case, what was the name of the employee and the date of the disciplinary action?

Hon. Herb Gray (President of Treasury Board): 1. The Treasury Board has written rules or regulations governing the conduct or standards of behaviour for employees of the Secretariat. These are the Conflict of Interest Guidelines that could be made available to the public upon request, as well as some other documents such as the Employee Information Booklet and the Manual of Internal Administration.

2. Based on records, the reply is as follows:

	Written reprimands	Suspensions	Discharges
1977-1978	—	—	—
1978-1979	—	—	—
1979-1980	—	1 (5 days)	—
1980-1981	—	—	—
1981-1982	—	—	—

The period of suspension was from February 18 to 22, 1980 inclusive.

To be consistent with the provisions of the Canadian Human Rights Act, we are not providing names.

PAMPHLET "KEEP THEM SAFE"

Question No. 4,584—Mr. McCuish:

1. Did the Government publish a pamphlet entitled "Keep them Safe" and, if so (a) what was the total cost for the design, production and distribution (b) how many copies were printed and distributed to date (c) who was responsible for the design and production?

2. Was the contract awarded outside the Government and, if so, in what manner was it awarded?

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Transport Canada advises as follows:

1. The pamphlet entitled "Keep Them Safe" was developed and produced jointly by the Department of Health and Welfare and Transport Canada. (a) $57,843.72, (b) 3,852,540 inserts printed; approximately 3,777,000 inserts distributed to date, (c) the insert was designed by Ove Design, and printed by Interweb, Boucherville, Quebec.

2. The design contract was established from a standing offer which was issued on the basis of a competitive tender. The printing was done under a one-year contract for cheque inserts which was based on a competitive tender.

PURCHASE OF $100 GOLD COIN BY MINT

Question No. 4,626—Mrs. Cossitt:

1. Did the Royal Canadian Mint recently purchase a 1978 $100 gold coin which it had minted and, if so (a) did they purchase it from Mr. Tom Swadrow of Ottawa (b) what was the purchase price (c) what was the price of the coin in 1978 (d) for what reason did the Mint purchase the coin at this price?

2. Has the Mint bought any other Canadian minted coins in the past five years and, if so, what were all the details, including the cost of purchase, the original cost of the coin, the name of the seller, the date of purchase and the reason for the purchase?

3. Does the Mint keep an inventory of every coin it has minted and, if not, for what reason?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): The Royal Canadian Mint informs me as follows:

1. Yes, the Royal Canadian Mint purchased a 1978 numismatic $100 gold coin. (a) it was purchased from Coin Centre of Canada, (b) the purchase price was $300 plus provincial tax, (c) the price of the coin in 1978 was $150, (d) the coin will be used in an exhibit and paid at market price.

2. Numismatic coins purchased by the Mint in the past five years are as follows:

Denomination	Year Issued	Issued Price	Purchased Price	Seller	Year Purchased
$ 1 (silver)	1935	$ 1	$ 16	Silver Dollar Reg'd	1982
$ 1 (silver)	1939	$ 1	$ 16	Silver Dollar Reg'd	1982
$ 1 (silver)	1949	$ 1	$ 16	Silver Dollar Reg'd	1982
$ 1 (silver)	1958	$ 1	$ 12	Silver Dollar Reg'd	1982
$ 1 (silver)	1964	$ 1	$ 11	Silver Dollar Reg'd	1982
$100	1978	$ 150	$ 300	Coin Centre of Canada	1982

The above coins will be used in an exhibit which is being prepared and which will tour Germany for the next three years.

3. No, the Mint does not keep an inventory of every numismatic coin struck. One of each is transferred to the Bank of Canada National Currency Collection on a permanent loan basis. A small quantity of each numismatic coin struck is kept for a limited period following the issued year as potential replacement for coins returned by customers or coins lost or damaged in transit. Afterwards, the remaining numismatic coins are melted.

CANADIAN GENERAL STANDARDS BOARD

Question No. 4,632—Mr. Fretz:

1. Was non-confidential information from the Canadian General Standards Board recently sent out by registered mail at a cost of $3.85, when the logical choice for such material would have been first class rates of 60 cents, and, if so (a) for what reason (b) how many envelopes were mailed at these rates?

2. Does the Minister feel these costs were justified, given the current economic climate?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): 1. (a) The Canadian General Standards Board sends letters by registered mail when the nature of the contents indicates that this method is necessary. Most of the registered mail concerns the insulation contractors certification listing program. It involves information on applications for listing, examination information, certificates, notices of quality defects, legal documents and other notices. Since this mail affects a contractor's livelihood, it is important that CGSB knows whether or not the mail was received. It is particularly important at the early stages since some companies change addresses.

(b) The Canadian General Standards Board mails many thousands of letters per year, of which about 10 per cent are registered, for the reasons outlined in 1 (a). It is not possible to determine exactly how many letters are registered.

2. Yes, in view of the points noted in 1 (a).

[English]

Mr. Burghardt: Madam Speaker, I would ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Madam Speaker: The questions enumerated by the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

MEASURE TO MODIFY BENEFIT INDEX

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-133, an Act to amend the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act (No. 2), as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates; and the motion of Mr. Gauthier (p. 22129)

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Madam Speaker, before lunch I referred to the complications that had arisen when the Government of the day in 1972, 1973 and 1974 introduced budgetary measures inspired by the so-called "Crown prince of the Liberal Party", John Turner. In my view and in the view of many people, he was responsible for the deep roots of inflation over those three years of heavy Government spending and for other measures that resulted in the partial wage and price controls of 1975.

The Bill before us is the Government's attempt to rectify some of those complications but it is directed at the wrong sector. With Family Allowances, social security and with the cap on the increase in the personal allowance in the Income Tax Act, nothing has been taken from the recipient, as is the case with this Bill. Under the Bill before us, the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act, a contribution of 1 per cent and then 1.5 per cent of salary is called for. It does not matter whether it is .25 per cent, an annual contribution was set down. A contract was established in law between the Crown of Canada and those particular classes of pensioners for a full indexation of pensions. Now the Government, acting unilaterally, wants to wipe that arrangement out for two years, to start with. After that it may want to continue with the 5 per cent cap. I say that is a distinct breach in law as well as a moral breach.

When the proposal for indexation was introduced, Old Age Security was the first to be affected. In 1973 we had the increase in the personal allowance under the Income Tax Act. With this, the Government gave a solemn promise to take care of the taxpayers of Canada and save them from the ravages of inflation. At that time inflation was only 6 or 7 per cent. In 1981 it was 12.8 per cent and last year it was somewhat less. The obligation remains, however. The Government could certainly find the few millions that would be saved by these methods in some other way. Some departments are moving to bigger and better and more prestigious buildings deemed better suited to the dignity of a local regional director, notwithstanding the fact that leases already exist on other buildings. Such cases can be documented.

I see that you are quite anxious that I conclude my remarks, Mr. Speaker, and my time is up. I will vote in favour of the amendment of the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) and I will vote against the Bill.

• (1510)

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I wish to speak on the amendment of the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier). The New Democratic Party caucus will vote for the amendment, but of course we will vote against the Bill. We will vote for the amendment because it basically indicates that the Bill will not continue after its term. In itself that sounds rather obscure, but I should like to refer to what we have learned during the couple of months of debate in Committee and in the House.

We have learned that the Government cannot be trusted. We have learned that Ministers of the Crown promised that the pensions of retired Government workers would not be affected, touched or altered without consultation. We were told this by pensioners, by unions representing present Government workers and by the association which represents retired Government workers. We have learned that the Government broke its word. No matter what we do with regard to the amendment before us at this time, I have the feeling that if the Government feels like breaking its word in the future, it will do so again.

When the Government wanted something from its employees in the past, it went to them and said: "Please do not negotiate pensions; it would create a bit of an administrative headache for us because there are a number of unions involved". The Government gave its word to the various unions and its employees, including Armed Forces and RCMP personnel, that those plans would be protected and that the only way they would be touched would be if the Government consulted with them. That did not happen. To my way of thinking, if we pass this amendment today and the Bill later this week, retired and present Government workers will still not have any protection; the Government will still be in a position to change its mind if it thinks it has a reason to do so in the future.

We have learned through leaked Government documents that the whole six and five program was a public relations effort. It was recognized that it would do nothing for the economy. Also it was recognized by certain Liberals in Cabinet and certain Liberal Senators that it would have a public relations value for the Government by making it look like the Government was doing something about inflation, but if two or three years down the road the Government decides again—whether it is Liberal, Conservative or any other Government—to break its word with its employees, it could do so.

To support my contention, I refer to the first six and five legislation, Bill C-124, supported by the Conservative Party and by the majority of the Liberal Party in the House. In that Bill the Government not only broke a gentlemen's agreement, which is what it referred to when it talked about pensions, but it broke contracts and collective agreements that it had signed with hundreds of thousands of Canadians. It broke agreements which the Government itself had negotiated and signed. Not only does the Government break gentlemen's agreements, but it breaks signed, collective ones. There is no reason to believe that the Government would not also break laws passed by Parliament. While we support the amendment, we are very cynical about whether or not the Government would obey the amendment if indeed it were passed by the House.

We learned a lot in Committee as we studied the Bill. We wish that closure or time allocation had not been invoked by the Liberal majority in the House. If more Canadians found out the real effect of this Bill, I believe there would be an outcry which would result in not just another Liberal deciding to vote against the Bill in addition to the three Liberals who earlier indicated their opposition to it, but in a number of Government backbenchers, not only from Ottawa and Hull but from Cape Breton, Sydney, Halifax and various ridings in New Brunswick, Ontario and Quebec, and perhaps the two who were elected from western Canada, doing so.

In Committee we discovered that we were not hurting people with pensions of $20,000, $30,000 or $40,000 per year; we are hurting pensioners who receive on the average pensions of $8,000 per year from the Government and the surviving spouses of deceased Government workers who have average pensions of $3,100 per year. These are the people who are being affected by the Bill. Also we found out that the vast majority of people are at the bottom end of the pension fund and that those people will be hurt by this legislation. We discovered that there were over $15 billion in accounts attributable to the pension plans of Government. So there is money available.

Also we found out that the Government has benefited from these plans in the past because it did not have to go out on the bond market and borrow at prevailing rates. In effect, it is stealing blind the money of present and retired Government workers. The Government of Canada has saved money on pension plans in the past because it has not had to borrow at commercial rates. Now these people are suffering doubly because they cannot even get the money in the plan.

The former President of the Treasury Board, the Minister of State for Economic Development (Mr. Johnston), composed a song. He plays it on his piano, and with the good graces of Senator Keith Davey and certain unknown Liberal friends, a record is being distributed which praises six and five across the land. I think this makes our point for us. If this were a Government program designed to fight inflation and to get the economy going again, we would not have stickers, posters, pamphlets, fancy books, or the song that Senator Keith Davey and others in the Liberal machine are pushing down the throats of Canadians. If this were a Government program for job creation, there would not be all this hoopla and election gimmickry at the present time. The Government would be taking the issue seriously and talking seriously rather than pushing its little jingle.

There is a story about a certain Roman emperor who fiddled while Rome burned. Now we have a Liberal Government which writes songs and plays pianos while Canadians are burning from their lack of economic planning. We need serious planning and a Government program which fights inflation and creates jobs, but we have another public relations gimmick by a Government, as the Hon. Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Chrétien) said, which really does not deserve to be around any more. We need real programs. We need more than just the token support of the Conservative Party. We need the Conservative Party to rise in the House and fight this Bill. We do not need a 15-minute walk-out by the Tories; we need them to fight this Bill to the same degree they fought for their friends, the oil companies. That is what Canadians need.

Mr. Peter Lang (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the amendment to Bill C-133 which is before us today is a sunset amendment. I want to address this point very briefly because the amendment is essentially unnecessary since the Bill itself is self-limiting. It will apply, in 1983 and 1984, a 6 per cent and 5 per cent restraint measure to the indexing of Public Service pensions. However, in the Bill's present form, we will revert to indexing in 1985 according to the full Consumer Price Index. Therefore, the amendment put forward by the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) is considered by the Government to be redundant and unnecessary since it will not improve the present legislation in any way.

I would like to respond to a few of the remarks made by Hon. Members opposite with regard to the impression they may have left with people that there was a negotiated contract between the Government and the Public Service sector unions. This simply is not the case; there was no negotiated contract between the Government and the Public Service sector unions.

Mr. Murphy: Did the Government give its word?

Mr. Lang: I challenge those Hon. Members opposite who have referred to this contract—some of them stating that there was a written contract—to table the contract.

I would like to refer to the argument made by some Hon. Members that this Bill represents confiscation. Those Members are alleging that the Government is capping funds that have been contributed by public servants to the indexation account. The Government has indicated with its amendment that it will not cap the contributions made by public servants and matched by the employer to 6 per cent and 5 per cent. The Government has recognized the contributory nature of the indexation program with this amendment and I urge Hon. Members opposite to support the amendment.

As you are aware, Mr. Speaker, in supporting that amendment they will be negating an amendment moved by the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker). His amendment is very puzzling in view of the Official Opposition's supposed—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I call to the attention of the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary that the amendment being debated is in the name of the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier).

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I just found it difficult to understand the Hon. Member's position on this Bill. In general, I find it difficult to understand the Opposition's position on the Bill as well as their position on the amendment of the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier, because all I have heard from the Opposition is the importance of restraint and bringing down the deficit, their support for controlling inflation, and their support for Reaganomics.

While they support restraint in general terms, they do not like to see restraint when the Government decides to exercise it in a particular area. We then see the fiddles come out. They support restraint as long as they can keep it general and do not have to put their money where their mouth is or support an unpopular restraint measure. The Government is not afraid to proceed with legislation that may not be popular to everyone when it is in the best national interest.

The legislation does two basic things. First, it is an important and integral part of the six and five program to reduce inflation. Even the official critic for the Opposition was quoted last weekend in the media as saying yes, the six and five program has contributed to reducing inflation in Canada.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): No, he did not.

Mr. Lang: Yes. How has it done this? This has been accomplished in two ways: by restraint and by reducing inflationary expectations. We are in an inflationary recession. Clearly, inflation is not being caused by an increase in total aggregate demand, as some Milton Friedman disciples might try to argue, because total aggregate demand is clearly down in a recession. Therefore, we know that the inflation forces that are acting at this point are cost-push inflation forces and inflationary expectations. The six and five program deals with both of these aspects of inflation, cost-push and inflationary expectations. The program is working. In the last month, the month-to-month change between November and December saw zero inflation.

The second result of this legislation is the saving of money which the Government can put toward job creation. Therefore, the two basic results of this program are a reduction in inflation and a savings being put toward job creation. This is the kind of legislation that I believe most Canadians have asked for and support, as indicated by the polls.

The last point I would like to make concerns the argument presented by the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton, as the official critic for the Opposition, with regard to the amendment moved by the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier. He indicated that this amendment was a catch-up amendment or could be argued as such. This would defeat the purpose of the legislation in a major way. A catch-up amendment would eliminate a reduction in inflationary expectations which, in turn, would defeat the purpose of the legislation.

In conclusion, I would ask Hon. Members to support Bill C-133, which fights inflation and produces funds for job creation.

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I listened with a good deal of attention to the extraordinary logical path followed by the speaker who just resumed his seat. I do not see how he can live with his conscience, let alone his logic, in coming out with such tripe.

There have been a number of references today and earlier to a letter which was written by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) to the Chairman of the Union of National Defence Employees, which is a member of the Public Service Alliance. There has been the odd reference to it throughout Hansard, but I think it would be helpful to Members on both sides of the House as well as to those in the general public and the pensioners who are being hit by this particular legislation to have in total, without interruption, the depth of the commitment made by the Prime Minister to Joe Power, President of the Union of National Defence Employees on October 12, 1977. For that reason, with your permission, I would like to read this letter from beginning to end. It states:

Dear Mr. Power:

Thank you for your telegram of September 27. I have noted your concern that the indexation of government pensions be maintained.

In our society, pensions provide a means of sharing risk so that we can retire in reasonable security and dignity, without fear of the future. Protecting pensions from inflation by indexing them to increases in the cost of living should be an integral part of our pension schemes. Indexing does not give pensioners an increasingly larger claim on our economy's production, that is, more money to buy things they could not earlier afford. Rather, indexing merely enables pensioners to maintain, roughly, their same standard of living.

Even a modest rate of inflation destroys, at a devastating rate, the buying power of people on fixed incomes. Pensioners are out of the workforce and cannot bargain or strike for larger incomes. They are not the cause of inflation; they are its victim. We have an obligation to help protect them.

I have asked my staff to send a copy of our correspondence to the President of the Treasury Board, the Honourable Robert Andras.

Yours sincerely,

Pierre E. Trudeau

That is the integral text of a firm commitment given by a Prime Minister in 1977 to one branch of the Public Service Alliance of Canada, the Union of National Defence Employees, which was worried at that time that there would be an attack on pensions through some modification of the indexation formula.

It has been mentioned by the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Lang), who last spoke, and I take the point, that no one has yet managed to come up with an agreement between the Treasury Board and the Public Service Alliance of Canada or other negotiating sections of the Public Service that, without fail, the pensions of retired public servants would be indexed in accordance with changes in the cost of living. I do not have a copy of that agreement available at my fingertips. For my purposes, I consider an undertaking by the Prime Minister to be just as binding a commitment. I am glad that we, at long last, have an integral text of it on the record for all to see what this same Prime Minister's Government is now doing to Public Service pensioners by reneging on an undertaking, given in 1977, in the so-called interests of the six and five formula.

I wonder if anyone has ever delved into the mathematics of this situation. There are two aspects which I think deserve commentary at this stage. One is that something in the order of 150,000 Canadians are at present drawing pensions from the Public Service and Armed Forces which they assumed would be indexed by the CPI. In addition to those 150,000, there are 40,000 widows of public servants and members of the Armed Forces. I am sure that Your Honour is aware that widows of serving officers and members of the Public Service do not draw full pensions. This is one of the most iniquitous aspects of this particular measure. The six and fixe formula, despite the commitment given by the Prime Minister five years ago, will hit more than 40,000 widows of those who served in those two services alone. Their pensions are to be reduced this year and next year in accordance with the 6.5 and 5.5 formula which has been devised. The .5 concession, the concession to something more than just 6 per cent and 5 per cent, is a cosmestic operation by the Government, as far as I can see. I think many of the widows of these public servants, whether they served in uniform or in civilian dress, should be maintained so that they can keep pace as best they can with changes in the cost of living.

I just heard the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Treasury Board suggest that the six and five program is working. If it is working, I do not see any point in imposing this iniquitous legislation on 150,000 Canadian pensioners and widows of another 40,000 Canadians who served the Government faithfully throughout their working lives, who were given this undertaking by the Prime Minister and who understood that the cost of living index would be applied to their pensions. If, as the Parliamentary Secretary so confidently predicts, the 6 per cent this year and the 5 per cent in 1984 will be the end of it, then they will readily accept those shifts in the cost of living index applied to their pensions. However, it is totally unfair, a breach of faith, to take away from them that which was offered to them in a solemn undertaking and accepted in trust.

One further matter must be considered. I have not been able to attend all the debates nor have I read all the transcripts concerning this particular matter. However, there is one aspect which worries me. After the six and five guidelines are lifted, if they ever are lifted, if there is a change in 1985 or 1986 under the provisions of this law, on what base will the new cost of living be set? Will it work on the base of the reduced 5 per cent? I suggest that there is room for another amendment. Unfortunately, I will not be able to move it, but I do suggest to the Government that it carefully consider the matter. I want the Canadian people, particularly public servants and serving officers of the Armed Forces, to bear in mind that their pension base is being eroded. I would suggest that a suitable amendment would be that if the six and five formula is applied, and the Government is all too likely to impose its will, the real cost of living index, whatever it is, should be applied to their pensions as of today for the next two years and should be a base for the application of the cost of living after that time. This would at least preserve the base.

Miss Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I would like to suggest to the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Lang) that he, in his speech a few moments ago, as much as admitted that the base would be permanently reduced by the amendment which is before the House.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): That is what I heard. You are right, Pauline.

Miss Jewett: The only recourse for the Government now, surely, is to say, "We have made a mistake. We did not really wish to fight this battle on the backs of retired public servants and retired Armed Forces personnel and we will gain very few dollars from this battle". However, those very few dollars which will be gained by the Government are, to the people concerned, extremely important dollars. This has been emphasized many times by members of all Parties, including some on the Government side. Indeed, if only about three or four additional Members on the Government side would act really in accordance with their own, I am sure, deeply held convictions, there would be no way this Bill would pass the House. I think it would only take perhaps four or five additional Members from the Government side to join us on this side and we would be able to dispense with the present amendment, and then defeat the Bill.

I find it particularly sad that those who suffer the most, and of course all the superannuates will suffer, are the surviving spouses of superannuates, of whom I believe there are 32,500, practically all of whom are women. Their average pension benefit now amounts to about $3,200, based on normal indexation with inflation, $3,200 which in many cases is the totality of the pension received, or is almost the totality, that is to say, the Old Age Security when added to it makes the totality of the pension received. This is what a great number of superannuates' spouses are trying to live on, yet the Government, by reducing the 11.5 per cent indexation that would normally be given this month to 6.5 per cent, has caused a loss to these superannuates' spouses of $160. With the 11.5 per cent indexation, they would have got an increase from $3,200 to $3,568. They are now going to get an increase to only $3,408. That goes into the base, that $160 loss. In 1984, the second year of this program, whereas the normal indexing base would have been $3,568, with 10.5 per cent indexing, which would have been the normal indexation, that would have been raised to $3,943. Now, with the 5.5 per cent indexation, the raise is only to $3,595. That makes a loss of $348 to the surviving spouse in 1984.

The combined loss to a surviving spouse who gets an average pension now of $3,200, over the two-year period, will be $508. That is a very large amount of money when the base is only $3,200. There is nothing in the Government's proposal that will ensure that the base will ever be restored to where it is now and, as the Parliamentary Secretary to the Treasury Board (Mr. Lang) himself said a moment ago, the amendment we are discussing at the moment will not ensure that the original base will ever be restored to the present base.

The numbers of people I am talking about now is not large. As I say, surviving spouses of superannuates number about 32,500. The total amount of moneys from the Government's point of view, or anyone's point of view, that would be going to the surviving spouses had the 6.5 per cent and 5.5 per cent not been introduced are not large amounts of money. However, a loss this year of $160 and a loss next year of $348 for a combined loss of $508 is, as I have said, a very significant amount of money to the surviving spouse when one is already living, as many are, below the poverty line.

It would not take very much, it seems to me, for Members on the opposite side, to say to their consciences and eventually to the House as a whole, that a mistake has indeed been made, and that it is not only a breach of moral contract to be reducing the indexing, because everyone must agree that it is that, but it is not in any way necessary for the so-called fight against inflation.

As has been pointed out many times, for reasons that have nothing to do with six and five, the cost of living is coming down. It is coming down because of the deepening recession, and there is no need therefore, even if they put it forward not on the grounds of morality but on the grounds of need, to index at six and five or at 6.5 and 5.5, the pensions of the retired public servants of this country and their surviving spouses. Neither on grounds of morality nor of need is this legislation necessary. It may be, in the case of the Conservatives who originally voted for six and five in Bill C-124, that they have now realized there is no need. They are late coming to this realization, but it may be that they have realized it, and all that is left now is for the Government to realize it.

The superannuates associations across this country have been trying in recent months, as hard as any group of people could, to impress upon the Government both the lack of morality and the absence of need for this legislation. I want to put on record at least one of the messages I have received. Like others, I have received hundreds of messages from individual pensioners and groups of pensioners. In my area there is quite a large group named the Fraser Valley Branch of the Federal Superannuates Association which, of course, is a branch of the national association, which has sent a telegram to me saying:

> The Executive of the Fraser Valley Branch Federal Superannuates National Association and our four hundred members are counting on your vigorous support of our demands that Bill C-133 restriction of indexing of public service pensions be withdrawn or defeated in the House. We shall be watching with interest your efforts on our behalf and hoping that they will be successful.

What I am suggesting, and many are suggesting, begging the Government is that in all good common sense it withdraw this Bill and if it does not withdraw it, begging at least a half dozen Members on the Government side to join us in defeating this Bill.

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills): Mr. Speaker, I rise again on this infamous Bill C-133. We have another amendment which has come from the Government side. To my surprise, Government Members are speaking against it. It is an amendment by a caring Member on the Government side which says, let us by statute end this Bill on the date that the Government, when bringing in the Bill, said it would end. Now the Government is speaking against it. It will be interesting to see how they vote on it when it gets right down to the push and shove.

This Bill clearly cuts the pensions of retired civil servants. We are not talking about those presently in the system. They are subject to the six and five restraint program, Bill C-124, that those in this Party, at least, voted for. The whole country is in favour of restraint. This Bill does not have anything to do with restraint. This Bill has to do with the treatment of retired civil servants and the spouses of former civil servants who have now died.

The sole issue on which we are going to stand in this House and vote is to break a contract. Most Government Members will stand and vote against the interests of their constituents. It clearly is in the best long-term interest of all of us as citizens that Government should honour contracts. When Government Members vote to break a contract, that is a very serious matter, not only in the short term but in the long term. They will stand to break a contract for one year.

There is no doubt that because inflation is dropping for 1983, the natural formula will drop the indexing of pensions of retired civil servants to the rate of inflation. There is no doubt that pursuant to the contract, in the year 1983 retired civil servants are entitled to over 11 per cent. They will only get 5.5 per cent or 6.5 per cent, depending on where they are.

That is wrong. It clearly is a situation where the Government is going to break a contract. That really does not surprise me. I will go on later to explain why the grassroots supporters of the Liberal Party have lost control. It has been a progressive loss of control since 1968.

The Cabinet now running the Liberal Party and the strategists behind it are not the Liberal Party that you, Mr. Speaker, fell in love with and joined. It is not the Liberal Party that a lot of young people in the fifties and sixties decided to support because of what it stood for, the concept of liberalism, the individual versus the state. That is totally switched around. Now the controlling mechanism in the Liberal Party clearly are statists. They believe the state is more important than the Canadian citizen. They are centralists. They like to bring power into Ottawa rather than leave it.

For example, in taxation the philosophy of this Party is to leave money with Canadians, let them decide how to spend it. They are the people getting black lung diseases in the mines and emphysema on the farms. Let us leave the money with them and let them decide. However, the new Liberal philosophy is no, Canadian citizens are not wise as to how to spend their money, therefore we had better tax it away from them. Those in the Cabinet and the bureaucracy will decide how to spend the money because they believe they know better.

Throughout the seventies, they took us into a huge deficit situation. A deficit is really a form of taxation, as is inflation. It means that questions on redistribution are not decided by individual Canadians in the sense of which charity to support or which product to buy. It is done by a central bureaucracy which taxes it away and decides who will get it by way of grants, not tax deductions which leave the onus on the citizen. They decide that if you do this, they will give you a grant.

Essentially, that is socialism. In terms of economic philosophy it is socialism. We see other people suffering under that same type of Government. Every citizen in Quebec now knows in full measure what it is to live under a socialist government where a bureaucracy and a Cabinet decide what is best for the citizens. In that Province, the Government is taking away 20 per cent from its on-line civil servants. It gave them an enormous raise trying to buy a "yes" vote in the referendum. Now they are having to eat crow and are taking it back.

From the citizens' perspective, what did they do wrong? The Government offered them money and they, of course, took it. Now it is being extracted from them. In the meantime they bought houses, have mortgage commitments, and they bought cars. The 20 per cent cutback is truly a serious matter for the individual citizen in Quebec. That flows back. It is a logical result of a Government saying it knows better what the citizens should do than the citizen himself.

The United Kingdom is a classic example. Since the Second World War, they have nationalized coal and the shipbuilding industry. All of the major industries were nationalized under Labour Governments. Again it was increased taxation with the bureaucracy deciding how to spend it. We know where Britain is as a result. They have lost their standard of living.

We know what has happened in Canada. In 1968, comparing ourselves with the 24 western industrialized nations, we were second. On an individual basis, we had the second highest standard of living. Now that has slipped to thirteenth. Under some measurements in comparison, we have dropped to the absolute bottom of the list. We are essentially prisoners in our own land. That is what inflation does. Compared to citizens in other countries, we are thirteenth rather than second.

Why is it the Government would bring in a Bill to break a contract? We know the reason. It is because the national debt is probably in the area of $150 billion gross. The yearly deficit is something like $30 billion. That is in spite of all the enormous tax increases since 1980. When you look at those tax increases, they are almost all on the direct taxes which affect the poor far more than the rich.

Take the gas tax and all of the sales taxes that have been imposed as compared to the so-called progressive tax system where the rich are supposed to pay more. In spite of all those tax increases, we are still in the position where the deficit is going up enormously. Revenues are plummeting, yet the costs, the so-called safety nets, are bringing it up. The amount for interest alone just to service that debt is something like 30 per cent of every dollar of revenue coming in.

In past years we would go to Canadians every year and say that the deficit is rising, that it will hurt us. In every election campaign those in this Party at least would say, "Look, friends, the deficit is getting so high that we believe Government has to be cut back". The Liberal Party with all of its strategy would have all of its Members go out and say, "No problems, folks, the amount to service the debt is only 5 per cent". Then it went to 10 per cent, 15 and 20, and now it is over 30 per cent of tax revenues just to service the debt. That does not pay it back. It just services it. That money concentrates into the hands of our fellow Canadians who already have wealth. Therefore, the rich become very rich and the poor very poor. That will turn us into a Third World country. It is not the fault of the citizens, except that they fell for the election platforms. It is the fault of Governments which think they can do things they really cannot do. I see my time has expired, therefore I will resume my seat.

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, it is also my intention to be fairly brief. I do not want to become repetitive. There have been a number of speakers on this amendment. I will be very pleased to support the amendment put forward by the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), a gentleman who obviously has the best interests of his constituents at heart.

The amendment before us would put a definite cap on the legislation, Bill C-133, that has been proposed by the Government. Some Members opposite have argued that a cap is contained within the Bill. I am not so sure whether that is true in the strict legal sense, but if this amendment were to carry, the Act would expire on December 31, 1984.

I, like my colleague, have difficulty with the way in which the Government has reneged on its contractual obligations. This Government has developed the habit of ripping up, when it suits it, any contract which is outstanding. We witnesse this, for instance, with Bill C-48, the Oil and Gas Act, when existing leases which had been entered into in good faith by the lessees were ripped up by way of Bill C-48 by the lessor, who was the Government of Canada. I notice on this occasion the New Democratic Party, because it suits its political purposes, has been critical of the Government for doing just that, but I ask, where were they on other occasions when the Government did precisely the same thing with contracts of a different nature?

We, on this side, Mr. Speaker, do not at all like the idea of legal contracts being ripped up, reneged on by the Government by virtue of Bills introduced into this House, and we have said so on occasions such as in Bill C-48, when one set of Canadian citizens were involved—on that occasion lessees of oil and gas rights—and we have said so again today and on previous occasions with respect to the pensions of public servants. In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, contracts of this nature should have the sanctity of the law apply to them. They should be allowed to expire if the Government wants to change them. They should not be changed in the middle, so to speak.

There is a difference between promises of a general nature and contractual obligations. When the Liberal Party in the 1980 election promised "Vote for us and we will keep the price of oil and gas low", I suppose you could call them morally responsible for the way they have not kept that promise. But I do not think the majority of Canadian citizens thought it any more than just another Liberal promise, and when the Government broke the promise, of course it mattered, but not in the same way as if it had been a contract negotiated and entered into by two sides.

I believe, rather than using a great amount of parliamentary time just to address this one specific issue, the question of pulling back Public Service pension rights, we should rather be using the time of the House to address the whole question of pensions, Canadian pensions. Any pension scheme, whether it be public or private, should be governed by the principle of actuarial soundness. If we talk to the actuaries today we will find that many pension schemes, especially public schemes, are no longer actuarially sound. If we study the population forecast for Canada, if we address ourselves to the aging population, the number of people over 65 who will be in this country some 20 years from now, and the number of people of working years, we find that we will very shortly come up to a real bind.

There has been some preliminary thought put into this by Government Departments, by Members of this House, members of the Senate and a lot of other people, and we find that there will be some hard decisions to make in the future. We want a system of pensions in Canada which will allow people, once they have retired, to live in a manner to which they have been accustomed during their working lives, to enjoy the benefits of those later years. It then becomes necessary to have a radical change in the amount of national income or personal income which is put into the pension scheme during the lifetime of the people who will eventually become pensioners. I believe the figures are something like three times what we presently put into pension schemes. I would hope that when that is done there will be a system of pensions compensated for inflation.

I do not think the Government's six and five per cent solution is going to work. We have heard that it is very much of a public relations gimmick, and I am inclined toward that way of thinking. If a pension is not indexed, it very rapidly erodes away. I know a number of pensioners in my constituency and across Canada who throughout their working lives have done everything they should to look after themselves in their declining years, for want of a better word, and they now find themselves almost destitute because they paid in good money for bad pensions, or what turned out to be a bad pension because of inflation.

Inflation has not been wrestled to the ground, and what has been going on at the present time will result in another great bout of inflation once the economy recovers. We are guaranteeing that by the continued high deficits and by the Government's financial policies. I believe the action of the Government in putting before us Bill C-131 is despicable. It should not be done this way at all. We should have a public debate on all pensions. We should not single out the public servants to be harassed in the way which has been done by the present Liberal Government. We should try to ensure, Mr. Speaker, that all Canadians can avail themselves of pensions which will enable them to live in dignity once they pass through their working years. They should have the best pensions we are able to afford.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, when some years ago Liberal Governments of the day brought forth legislation which provided for the indexing of the old age pension, Family Allowances, Public Service pensions and the Canada Pension Plan, and when the Parliaments of that time approved those proposals, what they were establishing was not the principle that people receiving the benefits under those programs would get increasingly generous assistance from those plans, but rather what they were adopting was the principle that even if the cost of living went up, as it has every year since that legislation was passed, those people would be secure. The real benefits, the real standard of living of the people receiving the old age pension or the Public Service pensions, or Canada Pension or the Family Allowances, would continue at the level and the rate they obtained when they became eligible for the programs.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, when the Government now proposes to change the rules, to put a cap of 6 per cent and 5 per cent on old age pensions, Family Allowances and Public Service pensions, what they are saying in effect is that the real standard of living of these people will be reduced because the cost of living is still rising at substantially more than the six and five figures the Government talked about. There is no indication that it will be much less than 9 per cent in the coming year. Indeed, there is every reason to believe that in fact the cost of living may rise rather than drop.

In his speech a little while ago, Mr. Speaker, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fisher) tried to argue that there was no contract with respect to Public Service pensions between the Government of Canada and the organization representing public servants, and therefore the Government was quite proper in bringing forward this legislation. I am not going to repeat the arguments or quotations from letters written by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) which indicate there certainly was the implication by him that the Government would maintain the indexing of Public Service pensions. However, I suggest the Parliamentary Secretary does not have to look very far to see that the Government does not mind at all breaking contracts negotiated with its employees. After all, it was a Liberal Government of Canada which gave the public servants the right to collective bargaining on wages and salaries and other questions. It was the Government of Canada which reached agreement with all public servants on the wage and salary increases they would be entitled to this year and next, by free collective bargaining. Nearly all those agreements called for increases of more than 6 per cent and 5 per cent, yet the Government has unilaterally brought in legislation which limits pay increases, as it limits pension increases, to six and five.

Members of the Opposition have been accused by Government Members of opposing these proposals for partisan political reasons. Nothing could be further from the truth, Mr. Speaker. It is not that we are not partisan; the essence of a democratic system is that there should be differences of opinion between various groups and parties. However, in opposing the legislation we are dealing with today, we are not alone. I am sure Liberal Members of Parliament have had hundreds of communications from retired public servants or their widows telling of the difficulties they will have. We know there may be a few retired public servants, like the former Deputy Minister of Finance, Mr. Reisman, whose pension is quite generous. But thousands of pensioners, particularly the widows of former Public Servants are drawing pensions of $1,000 or $2,000 or $3,000 and they are living in real poverty.

I have spoken on this Bill before and I do not want to repeat what I have said on other occasions. In any case, I could not say anything about this Bill nearly as eloquently as were the comments made about this kind of legislation and other Government policies in the statement released a few weeks ago by the Canadian Conference of Catholic Bishops. Speaking about the Government's policies dealing with the real economic and social crisis in which we are living at the present time they say this, amongst other things:

> In developing strategies for economic recovery, we firmly believe that first priority must be given to the real victims of the current recession, namely—the unemployed, the welfare poor, the working poor—pensioners, native peoples, women, young people—and small farmers, fishermen, some factory workers and some small businessmen and women. This option calls for economic policies which realize that the needs of the poor have priority over the wants of the rich; that the rights of workers are more important than the maximization of profits; that the participation of marginalized groups takes precedence over the preservation of a system which excludes them.

If there ever was a marginalized group, Mr. Speaker, it is the kind of people I have been talking about, those who are living in real poverty by any standard which any Member of this Parliament wants to establish. They go on to say:

> —greater emphasis should be given to the goal of social responsibility in the current recession. This means that every effort must be made to curtail cut-backs in social services, maintain adequate health care and social security benefits, and above all, guarantee special assistance for the unemployed, welfare recipients, the working poor and one-industry towns suffering from plant shut-downs.

They are talking about social security benefits, and they are so right, because this particular Bill and the others deal with pensions. That is part of our social security system. In a not too distant future this federal Government and provincial governments will be taking steps to cut back on the fundamental structure of health care and hospital insurance we have established over the years. Then, in dealing with the present strategies of Government, the Bishops say:

> The means for curbing inflation are such austerity measures as the federal 6 and 5 wage restraint program and cut-backs in social spending (e.g. hospitals, medicare, public services, education and foreign aid) rather than controls on profits and prices. These measures, in turn, have been strengthened by a series of corporate tax reductions and direct investment incentives for such sectors as the petroleum industry. In effect, the survival of capital takes priority over labour in present strategies for economic recovery.

That is how they analyse the thrust of this Government's policies. They go on to say:

> At the same time, working people, the unemployed, young people, and those on fixed incomes are increasingly called upon to make the most sacrifice for economic recovery.

That is precisely what the Government is doing, Mr. Speaker. People on fixed incomes are our pensioners and they are being asked to carry the can, to pay the price for the mistaken policies we have had in recent years from this federal Government. The Bishops talk about alternative approaches and they say:

> An alternative approach calls for a re-ordering of values and priorities in our economic life. What is required first is a basic shift in values: the goal of serving the human needs of all people in our society must take precedence over the maximization of profits and growth . . . alternative strategies are required which place primary emphasis on the goals of combatting unemployment by stimulating production and permanent job creation in basic industries; developing a more balanced and equitable program for curbing inflation; and maintaining health care, social security and special assistance programs.

I am not a member of the Roman Catholic Church, Mr. Speaker, but I say that the ideas expressed in this statement are principles which could be adopted with great benefit to Canadians regardless of their religion. I urge the Government to reconsider what it is doing, and to realize it is shifting the burden of the difficulties we are in to precisely those people who can least afford to live with the kind of decisions this Government is making.

Mr. Lyle S. Kristiansen (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, in rising to speak to this latest amendment on Bill C-133; the matter of trust, which was raised continuously in succeeding submissions in committee, once again comes to mind. It strikes me as somewhat odd that the Liberal Member concerned should show such obvious lack of faith and trust in the word of the Party and the Government to which he belongs, as to deem it advisable for him to introduce an expiry amendment which sets out clearly what the Government says is already the case. If a Member of the Liberal Party acts independently to bring forward an amendment which says he does not believe that bunch over there, so he wants to nail it down to make sure there is no mistaking it—what are those in the Opposition to think? What are the people of Canada, who have been given so many reasons to dispute the good faith of that Liberal Government, to think? A lot of questions need answers, Mr. Speaker, but we have not received them from the Government in this debate.

It was with a great deal of regret that last Thursday, my colleagues and I in the NDP watched the Official Opposition Torries rush in with undue haste in an effort to help rush this legislation through. Their opposition has been token. It made us question the motivation of that Party once again. They did not understand the Government's game plan of compulsion and compulsory restraint that was presented in the budget of June 1982, and again, they dealt with Bill C-124, the parent of the six and five legislation, in isolation. They supported it although they put on a public display of opposition to the companion Bills, Bill C-131, Bill C-132 and Bill C-133 which grew from Bill C-124. Their protest today lacks credibility.

The antics of that Party make me think of a young man who gets a girl in trouble and then takes off when he sees the progeny. That is the kind of game the Conservative Party has been playing. They were all in favour of Bill C-124, all in favour of compulsory restraint, all in favour of breaking written contracts, but now they have the unmitigated gall to pretend opposition to the legitimate offspring—perhaps the illegitimate offspring—of the parent Bill.

I do not believe that many people in the country think kindly of a young man who gets a girl in trouble and then takes off, out of town, and does not live up to his responsibility. But that is the kind of contempt that the Conservative Party deserves for their behaviour regarding this matter. If the people of the country decide on a shotgun ceremony and insist that the other two Parties in the House get together, then no one should be surprised.

Mr. McKenzie: Leave that to Svend Robinson!

Mr. Kristiansen: Another analogy came to light in Committee.

Mr. Reid (St. Catharines): I hope it has more substance than the last.

Mr. Kristiansen: It has more substance than some of my PC colleagues on my right appear to have. Their lack of consistency suggests that they have very little.

I can visualize an avalanche, Mr. Speaker, where the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) stand at the top of a hill and roll a stone down, which is Bill C-124. They work together, cheering on the wolves of compulsory restraint against pensioners and public servants, but as the stone rolls down the hill it gathers momentum. Under it are not only the Public Service employees who are being crushed by C-124 but the mothers and children suffering from Family Allowance restraints, the old age pensioners suffering from restraints on Old Age Security and now the public servant retirees who are being crushed by the onslaught. The Leader of the Opposition claims that he only rolled the first stone. But that is how an avalanche starts, Mr. Speaker. Anyone in public life ought to know that.

The Conservatives have attempted to deny their part in this fiasco, and that is contemptible, Mr. Speaker. I do not think any other word can appropriately describe their actions.

At the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates which studied Bill C-133, I put some questions to a Mr. Potter who represented the Economists, Sociologists and Statisticians Association, regarding remarks he had made in earlier testimony. I wanted to know the difference in what was accruing to the indexation fund at the present time and what would accrue if a properly managed plan was in existence. The committee report for December 14 shows Mr. Potter answering as follows:

The idea is that the pension account and the indexing account collectively earn less interest than a fair return on a well-managed private pension plan by about one percentage point, according to Tomenson-Alexander. In addition, the basic pension plan is in 20-year bonds which are particularly unresponsive to inflation in the sense that very few of them come up new, get a new money interest rate credited to them. There is a great lag in the response to inflation in the weighted rate, and this is not a prudent way to manage a pension account in an inflationary environment.

He then referred to a question that had been asked of the Treasury Board on April 21, 1982, and commented on it as follows, and the question was:

—how much the indexing account would be if the PSSA, the Canadian Forces account and the RCMP account were all credited with the five-year bond rate the indexing account gets, in the same way it is done there, and in addition got monthly interest credited and a 0.125 per cent representing the saved transaction costs of not having actual investments. The answer was that the indexing account as of January 1, 1981, would be $6.305 billion.

This is the answer of the Treasury Board. The actual amount of the indexing account was $807 million. If the extra interest were credited on account of the term of the bonds and the way it has worked, if the excess interest resulting from such a crediting was on the excess interest principal, transferred for indexing, there would be $6.3 billion for indexing on that date compared to $800 million. Because of recent high interest rates and the way five-year bond yields move, it is probably much higher now. They did not give us a figure on what would happen if you credited 1 per cent extra, à la the Tomenson-Alexander Report, and also transfer that on an excess interest basis, then one would guess the updating and the extra 1 per cent Tomenson-Alexander identified, would bring the figure well over $10 billion.

The Government has been misallocating this money by its misuse and mismanagement of those pension funds and indexing funds for its own purposes. Certainly those are also the purposes of the people of Canada, but it is a misallocation and misplacement of trust. The Government has no moral or ethical right to deny the public servants of this country what they have paid for and what their payments would more than cover.

In certain joint pension funds in the private sector, conditions are imposed. In the IWA Forest Industry Plan there is a provision that funds from that plan cannot be invested in the industry so that there will be no conflict of interest. Perhaps we need something like that to ensure that neither this Government nor any future Government may misspend, misallocate, misadminister and mismanage the pension funds of the people of this country or its own employees.

Mr. Fred King (Okanagan-Similkameen): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to add some words of wisdom to this debate after the statement made by my colleague on my left.

In the real world which exists outside the confines of this city, I find that Canadians in general do not feel great resentment against the Government for the six and five program. There is broad resentment for the Government which produced the economic circumstances in the country by its neglect of basic principles for many years. There is broad resentment because the Government has simply resorted to rhetoric and attacks against one segment of the population and because it carries on as if all things were normal. It has shown no spending restraint in its efforts to advertise its self-perpetuation and glorification.

It is the breaking of faith with the people of Canada to which I should like to speak briefly today. Also I should like to compare the record over the years with what might be accomplished by the Government if it had good faith and accepted its responsibility to the people.

I should like to refer to an article written by George Bain which outlined the history of rhetoric by successive Ministers of Finance in this particular regime. It indicated that they have been mouthing restraint but have produced nothing but the opposite in the final result. According to the article, Edgar Benson, the first Minister of Finance of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), said on October 22, 1968:

We should not delude ourselves into thinking the choice is between either policies of fiscal ease to counter unemployment or policies of fiscal restraint to fight inflation. In our present circumstances, unchecked inflation would precipitate the kind of economic disruption in which unemployment would surely increase and we would end up with more of both evils.

How often have we heard this lately? Also, according to the article, the Prime Minister said in February 1982:

Experience both here and elsewhere has shown us that you cannot have real, long-term economic development and generate lasting employment unless you are first prepared to deal with the problems, like inflation, which stand in their way. There is no way of avoiding the requirements of self-discipline . . . We . . . have chosen our course: It is one of restraint in our own finances.

This statement by the Prime Minister of Canada stands in stark contrast to what is going on in the country. It is no wonder that resentment has built up because the Government of Canada chooses to attack one particular group of people. Also, according to the article, John Turner, when he was finance minister, said:

The Government proposes to set an example of restraint.

Then it indicated that Donald Macdonald said:

Restraint has been an integral part of our anti-inflation policies.

The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Chrétien), when he was Minister of Finance said the following, according to the same article:

Expenditures by all levels of Government have been brought under tight control.

I should like to read more from the article. It continued:

—Liberal Governments over all that time have said that restraint of Government spending is the specific for inflation, that reducing inflation is prerequisite to "lasting employment," and that restraint has been, is being, and will be applied.

Against all that, there must be put the fact that Government spending has gone only up.

Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act (No. 2)

Also it read:

—a 356 per cent increase in the size of the economy, a 545 per cent increase in Government spending.

As recently as 1980, the present Prime Minister said, while speaking in Windsor during the election campaign:

—the Liberal Party puts people first, and it's on that basis that we will worry about the deficit after we finish worrying about the unemployed.

This is the type of rhetoric which the Government, the Prime Minister and Members opposite use in an election campaign. This rhetoric is demonstrated in such acts as the introduction of Bill C-133. The Bill was simply designed as an example to which the Government could point to show that the depression it produced in fact wrestles inflation to the ground.

We now pay as much in interest on public debt in a year as we used to set aside for total budgetary expenditures in the late 1960s. Its record of non-achievement is very pertinent to this debate.

In my allotted ten minutes last Tuesday I was able to begin the basis of the argument which I believe goes to the heart of the issue and accurately describes the sentiment of a vast majority of Canadians. If we look at the Gallup poll results today, we will see that statement carried out in statistics. Canadians believe in restraint. Canadians believe that the Government should show responsibility in its spending habits. Canadians have experienced that and they know that when there is no recognition of the gross results produced by overspending in deficits, catastrophic tragedies await the citizens of Canada. In this situation the vast majority of Canadians are prepared to bite the bullet and to share in the sacrifices which must be made by all to right the madness which has happened within the nation under the direction of the Liberal Government.

I am fully convinced that as a whole Canadians are begging the Government to show leadership and an honest effort to reform its ways. Were honest and generous leadership shown in restraint, I am sure the outcry against Bill C-133 would be much less intense. Even though it is a breaking of faith, if all people were contributing equally to the attack on inflation, the outcry would be less.

One reaction against the Bill is that the Government of Canada has singled out one group of Canadians, namely, superannuates, from its employe, to bear the burden of carrying the Government's facade of restraint. As a legitimate result, the cry is going out against this unworthy action. In light of this record, considering the total lack of evidence that the Government has any intention to mend its ways, and considering the documented undertakings of the Government to its employees on many occasions—that is from the Prime Minister to the former President of the Treasury Board—to maintain indexation and not to change the provisions without consultation, the only honourable step for the Government to take is to withdraw totally Bill C-133.

In conclusion, failing this, surely the Government has an obligation to accept the amendment of the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) so that the Act will expire on December 31, 1984. Surely former servants of the Crown deserve at least that consideration and more.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I want to say a few words in support of the proposed amendment of the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), that the Act terminate on December 31, 1984. I suppose that the only difference I would like to see is that it terminate on December 31, 1982 instead of 1984. I say that because I believe that this Bill, like the other two capping Bills, is a very regressive piece of legislation. It is unfair. It is not equal. It hits the ordinary and low income Canadian much harder than those who are more highly paid in society.

For example, people who make $10,000 a year and receive an increase of 6 per cent will have their wages increased by $600 this year and $500 next year, with a 5 per cent increase. Those who receive $50,000 and receive an increase of 6 per cent and 5 per cent will have an increase of $3,000 this year and $2,500 next year. I say that is unfair and economically immoral and simply not just in the twentieth century.

We saw a report from the Bishops which was issued on January 5. In their report on economy they said that our economic moral standards are lacking, and they called upon the Parliament of Canada and Canadians to think more about equality and justice in this country's economy.

I want to call upon the Government to implement some of the ideas and ideals of the Bishops of this land. I think we all know of the problems this nation is facing. We are all aware of the tremendous unemployment rate in Canada which stands at about 1.5 million. We know about the high inflation rate and the high bank rates which we have had for the last several months.

I suggest that the piece of legislation before the House today, along with the other capping Bills, will do nothing to bring down inflation or help the Canadian economy. They do not form part of an economic strategy but, indeed, form part of a political strategy for the Liberal Party as a result of the troubles in which they find themselves in this country.

At a time when we have economic difficulties in Canada and need to create jobs for Canadians, I have never been able to understand why the wealthy who have investment funds need to be stimulated by incentives and various tax write-offs in order to invest their money and contribute to our society while the ordinary worker, in order to make his contribution, has to tighten his belt. I do not understand why the poor have to tighten their belts while the rich need incentives in order to make a contribution in this country.

Mr. Benjamin: They have the power.

Mr. Nystrom: My friend is absolutely right. They have the power.

If one reads the Bishop's report, they refer to the fact that the upper 20 per cent of Canadian income earners are making some 42 per cent of the country's national income while the bottom 20 per cent are making only 4 per cent of the Canadian income. What inequality! Yet the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), when he was elected in 1968, crusaded this land talking about a just society and a more compassionate society. He talked about a society in which those who have would help those who have not. Instead, the gap has widened, and we now see legislation in the House today that will widen the gap even further by putting a 6 per cent and 5 per cent ceiling on the increase in pensions for retired public servants. The Government will do the same thing very soon to other pensioners in Canada and to Family Allowances. I say that it is unfair.

I believe the Government should rather be devising methods to stimulate the Canadian economy. We should realize that the current recession in Canada is very serious and world-wide in its consequence and nature. We are not simply experiencing a slowdown in demand, a crisis created by OPEC or a crisis created by armament expenditures, although these are all important factors, especially the spending on armament in the world. More important, however, we are experiencing a tremendous technological shift in our world where many of the older and more stable industries, such as automobile, steel, rubber and construction industries are going down. Even with a recovery in the world's economy these industries will still leave tens of thousands of people permanently out of work as a result of technological change revolutionizing the work force.

Unless we devise an economic strategy and alternative direction for this country when recovery is achieved, Canada will be left far behind. There will not be enough jobs to go around.

If we look at the world today, we find that the Japanese in particular, but the French, Germans, Dutch and other Europeans as well, are putting more of their funds and investment into productive industries. These are the new advanced technologies for which they are modernizing their plants and factories. Those countries will have the jobs. I suggest that the Government has not prepared for this technological change. This is why it has been condemned by Stuart Smith, Chairman of the Science Council of Canada. He is a former Liberal leader from Ontario who recently said in his Science Council report that our country is falling far behind in the field of advanced technology and that we will not have the jobs or control in this country to keep our people working in the years ahead. I suggest that we have already seen the ramifications of that.

For example, I have a portion of a study which was conducted by an economist in Montreal recently which tracks the average income in several industrialized countries over the last 20 years. We find from this study that the average income in Canada has fallen drastically in the last 20 years, as it has in the United States and in Great Britain.

In the 1960s, the United States was the wealthiest country in the world in terms of average per capita income. Canada was number two, Sweden was third, Switzerland was fourth, Britain was sixth, Germany was seventh, the French were ninth and the Danes were tenth. In the last 20 years, between 1960 and 1979, Canada, the United States and Great Britain have fallen far behind the western European countries. We find, for example, that Switzerland has moved up from fourth to first place. Denmark has moved from number ten to number two in terms of their standard of living in the world. The Swedes have remained at number three, while Germany has moved from seventh to fourth place. Belgium has moved up to number five, the Netherlands have moved from number thirteen to number six. France moved from number nine to number seven. The average standard of living of the United States has dropped from number one down to number eight. Canada has dropped from second to tenth place between the years 1960 and 1979, in terms of the average standard of living among the industrialized nations.

According to an article written by economists in 1981, based on 1979 figures, Canada is no longer first, second, third or fourth. It is now number nineteen in the world in terms of the average standard of living.

Mr. Kelly: That is not true.

Mr. Nystrom: It is number nineteen according to the economists. We have Liberals saying that is not true. I would like to see anyone in the House tell us that Canada's standard of living is higher than that.

Mr. Kelly: I am telling you right now.

Mr. Nystrom: I hope the Hon. Member gets up to put the figure on the record.

The average income in Canada in 1979 was $8,376. In the United States the average income was $9,637. Ahead of us are countries like Switzerland which ranks number four in relation to all the countries in the world, with an average income of $13,987. I suggest that this is a damning testimony of the bungling we have seen in this country during the last 20 years. In terms of our standard of living, we have fallen from being one of the wealthiest countries in the world, one with tremendous promise and hope, to a country whose average income has dropped to nineteenth in the world according to the economists, or number ten among the industrialized countries of the world. I believe that sums up the record of the Government across the way.

The Science Council of Canada, many economists around the world, the OECD and others are saying that Canada is having problems now. Unless we change our strategy and come up with an economic plan or vision concerning the future, we will be even poorer in the next five or six years than we are now. That will happen despite the fact that we have a country with tremendous people, all kinds of resources, training and technology and much potential to produce massive quantities of fuel. We have all kinds of resources, such as energy, oil and hydropower resources, which European countries and Japan do not have. We have so much, but we still lack the vision to put all of it together for the ordinary citizen. Instead, we get crazy programs like the six and five program, which will sacrifice more income of the poor and the workers, the ordinary people, so that a few fat cats at the top can jet around the world and have a good time at their expense.

Mr. Denis Ethier (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, it was not my intention to participate in the debate, but I thought it was my duty to put on record my opposition to the amendment of my friend and colleague, the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) and to register my support for Bill C-133.

Your Honour will recall that at the second reading stage of this Bill, the media had reported the actions of all Hon. Members from the capital area and who, it was claimed, were most concerned because of the proximity of their ridings. I was absent during that vote and I justified my absence very well. I very seldom miss votes in the House, so I do not think the media needed to put my name in the paper and state that I did not bother to vote. It will be noticed how I vote on the Bill.

I totally discard the idea that we should be only concerned for the regions. I would hope that the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker), as well as my colleague, the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier, would rise above regional concerns when discussing or debating a matter as important and vital to all Canadians. I submit that Bill C-133 is just that. It is legislation which would permit us to reduce the inflation rate and, by the same token, would create an economic climate which investors will favour, and will result in the creation of more jobs for the unacceptable number of Canadians who want to work in the country.

Regrettably, the critics of the Bill never refer to the positive effects of the six and five program but, rather, only to the inflation rate in such a short period. On the contrary, the critics continue to refer to high unemployment rates and, of course, they never add the declining rate of inflation. They continue to amplify the problems of unemployment, and never do they dare refer to the much more serious problem of still higher unemployment that there might have been had we not taken the serious and courageous corrective measures such as those found in Bill C-133.

Our critics say that we are fighting inflation at the risk of increasing unemployment.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): You are beginning to understand that.

Mr. Ethier: They justify their argument by flashing the current unemployment figures. I say that this is wrong and grossly unfair.

Mr. Riis: What evidence?

Mr. Ethier: It was not so long ago that the same critics were united in requesting that we introduce measures to reduce inflation. This is what the critics were saying then: investors will not be attracted or inclined to invest and create jobs in an economy where inflation is 10 per cent, 12 per cent or 13 per cent. The same critics were even questioning how long Governments could guarantee the jobs of their civil servants in such an inflationary economy. They were seriously questioning how long Governments could pay the pensions of their retired employees, not to mention indexation.

It was precisely in answer to those many critics from different groups in our society that our program of six and five was introduced. Indeed, it is difficult and requires courage from those of us who have the responsibility to govern during these difficult economic times the world is going through.

The situation is a difficult one, and we must be brave in these times which are difficult for the economies of Canada, the United States, Europe and the entire world. I said the situation was a difficult one, because we needed the support of the private sector and municipal and provincial governments to introduce this particular piece of 6 and 5 legislation, Bill C-133. Up to now, we can say that our problems have become fewer, since a number of provinces have shown that they agreed with our programs. The private sector has also indicated that it is in agreement with these austerity measures. Above all else, we must not be afraid, even if we are not always going to be very popular with our employees if we ask them to accept pay increases below the rate of inflation, and even less so with all retired public servants if we ask them to accept indexing below the inflation rate. Even the most inexperienced politician realizes that supporting such measures is not going to be very popular. However, we cannot afford to dwell on that now. We must now show that we have the courage of our convictions.

That is the message I want to bring to my colleagues here in Ottawa and to all Canadians. We must be brave. We must ask Canadians to support our efforts. If I did not have the conviction that these measures will have a positive effect on our economy, that they will attract investors and will eventually lead to creating more jobs, I would not be supporting this bill, and we would not be considering the motion put by my colleague who is worried about the measure being effective for longer than two years. I really wonder what my colleague from Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) had in mind when he proposed this amendment. Does he support Bill C-133, but does he not want it to be in effect for more than two years? If that is the case, I can assure both him and other Members on the Government side that it will not last for more than two years. Personally, I shall vote against the motion and I shall support Bill C-133.

[English]

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity to raise a point or two in today's debate on the amendment put forward by the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) to Bill C-133. There is certainly some merit in the suggestion that it would be appropriate to set forth an expiry date for the Bill, the expiry date being December 31, 1984, so that there would at least be some certainty as to when this rather simplistic program would end. It is a rather light-hearted gesture but a positive one, despite its lightness.

One must consider it a sad day when one hears an Hon. Member from the Government side doing his best to bail out the Government from one more ill-conceived scheme to rescue us from this economic dilemma. I listened with interest to the Hon. Member opposite and I know that he was serious when he said that it was because of the nation's concern about the level of inflation that the Government introduced the six and five program. However, I want to challenge a couple of points he raised. He said that the dropping of the inflation rate will give investors the needed incentive and encouragement to start to invest. I have also heard that when the interest rates come down to their present level, or maybe even a bit lower, that that too will give the automatic signal to Canada's investment community that the good life is ahead and it should start investing hard-earned money, and to the savers of Canada that they should start investing their savings.

I will venture a guess that there are very few investors today who are motivated enough to risk any of their hard earned savings in the present political and economic climate in Canada. However, if the interest rates come down another two or three percentage points, that confidence will still not be there. If inflation comes down two or three percentage points, for whatever reason, likely because we are in a depression, but regardless of the cause or reason, I do not think that will make a difference.

Recently, just in the last few weeks, I had occasion to speak to virtually every chamber of commerce in my constituency, every board of trade, every municipal council, large or small, and to informal gatherings of businessmen, again representing large corporations and small corner stores, virtually. I did not speak with one single individual who said that he or she was prepared to invest anything in this climate of uncertainty. Canadians have totally lost faith in the Government.

On the weekend the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Chrétien) was reported as saying that, yes, indeed, the Liberals are in a hopeless situation as a political Party and that the people of Canada are now prepared to turf them out. Of course they are. It does not take any genius to figure that out. One could walk down the street and ask any five people, and four of those five people will say that this political Party providing so-called leadership in Canada today has to go.

Until there is a dramatic change in policy on behalf of that Government, or the Government disappears, there will never be any investor confidence or consumer confidence occurring in our country, which is needed to get a real recovery under way.

Today we are dealing with Bill C-133. No matter how you describe this Bill, it is a Bill which breaks the contract that the public servants of Canada have had with the Government of Canada. Of these retired individuals there are 120,000 in the Public Service, 32,000 in the Canadian Armed Forces, 2,000 in the RCMP, and when you include those people who will be retiring in 1983 and 1984 and the surviving spouses who would receive benefits, we are identifying about 200,000 people in Canada. They have made their retirement plans, knowing what their incomes will be, based on their pension programs, and they have made personal plans, investment plans and so on, assisting their sons and daughters, their grandchildren in education, and planning holidays that are well deserved. They have made plans for their futures. All of a sudden, to have those future plans curtailed because the Government of Canada broke a contract—broke the clear understanding they had with the RCMP personnel and Armed Forces personnel—how can the people of Canada have any faith in a Government which is, by a motion in this House of Commons, going to break a contract?

Member after Member has stood up to say that they support the breaking of this contract, that they think this motion is in the best interests of Canadians. Do you know what that is doing to do to the confidence people had in this Government, that handful of people who are still hanging on by the skin of their teeth hoping for something positive so that they can believe in this Government? Some Members say they are happy to support Bill C-133, yet they know this breaks a contract. How can they still be happy? That assumes, then, that people let their eyes drift across the room and say, "We like to go with the people who believe in keeping their contracts."

I do not like to cast aspersions at my Progressive Conservative friends—on the weekend I was even called a Conservative by a certain editorialist. They are the people I remember distinctly voting on Bill C-124, under which they were prepared to break contracts with people who work in the CNR, knowing the people who work in the CPR, because of the similarities, in the Public Service, in the Armed Forces in the RCMP would be similarly affected. With a couple of exceptions, they voted for it. They said, "We, too, as the Official Opposition, want to break contracts with those hundreds of thousands of people who work for the federal Government". And we wonder why the people of Canada have lost faith in the Government, and have lost faith in the people in the Official Opposition.

I agree that when you carry out a popularity poll and when they ask, "Will the Conservatives win in the next election?" people in their rather meagre response say, "Well, they are presumably the Opposition, they probably will. We will support this in some respect". But when they think about it carefully and when it is presented to them that that Party, too, is prepared to break those contracts, how can Hon. Members continue to stand and say they support this Bill but did not support the other one?

I know that Members will be standing up when I sit down and they will be saying how they are prepared to support this Bill, but were prepared to break all those other contracts. I ask those Members, as a serious question, to explain to the people of Canada why they will break contracts with hundreds of thousands of federal employees but will not break this one—that they feel very strongly about this one. The point is, we have a majority of Members of this House on record as favouring taking a contract which was duly signed by both parties with the clear understanding of both groups, tossing it out of the window and just saying, "That is fine; we don't care about a contract we have with thousands of Canadians".

May I suggest, in my humble way, that perhaps that is some small reason why people in Canada are losing faith in their elected representatives when they hear that incredible hypocrisy.

Mr. Doug Anguish (The Battlefords-Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, I, too, am pleased to be able to participate in this debate in which the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) has put forward an amendment to Bill C-133, the piece of legislation which is to put a cap on the amount of indexing for the retired public employees who have paid for the luxury of making sure that their pensions were indexed to the rate of the Consumer Price Index, so that their meagre pensions, in many instances, would not be eaten up by the ravages of inflation.

What the amendment by the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier has done is to put forward that this Government will not extend this Bill C-133 past December 31, 1984. I admire the backbenchers and some Members of the Liberal caucus who have opposed Bill C-133, because I think it is a flagrant abuse of the Government's power in betraying the trust of the many public employees who depended on and in fact paid for their pensions that they expected to receive, because of the good faith they had in this Government.

Furthermore, I find it strange that a Member in the Liberal Party would need to put forward such an amendment. It shows to me a lack of trust, even from within the Liberal Party, that one of their Members would have to go as far as to say that he wants assurances in Bill C-133 that it will not go beyond the deadline of December 31, 1984. In fact, it was through some pressure by backbench Liberal Members that the six and five program was modified in Bill C-133 for the retired public employees. In fact, they have been given a concession. It is not really a concession at all, but is viewed as a concession by the Liberal Government in that their capping will not be six and five, as will be applied to the Family Allowance indexing and the old age pension indexing, but in Bill C-133 for the retired public employees it has been raised to 6.5 per cent for the first year and 5.5 per cent for the second year.

No matter how you look at it, I do not think we in this Party can support such a piece of legislation, and I would urge Members of the Conservative caucus and also Members of the Liberal Party to oppose this Bill when it is voted upon later today.

I support the amendment of the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier because I think this program should not only not be in existence but if it does pass, it certainly should terminate when the Government says it will terminate, and I feel it is important to have that set out in this piece of legislation.

We have seen how this Government has been abusive of people's rights in other areas, such as the capping of indexing on the Family Allowance payments before that legislation has actually gone through this Parliament. I was speaking to a group last week and I thought it appropriate to state that our political system in Canada has participatory democracy on election day and maybe during election campaigns, but between election campaigns we have a system of almost totalitarianism or a dictatorship regime, because that Government over there is without the checks and balances of a Senate, because we have such a partisan, pork-barrel of a Senate in the other place that they do not put any checks and balances in there, and they are virtually useless. If that were a regionally elected Senate, I do not think we would see things like this happening within our system in Canada, and it would go a long way toward protecting democracy in this country if, in fact, we had checks and balances beyond this House of Commons. In the past I favoured abolition of the Senate, but I am changing my mind somewhat to support a regionally-elected Senate so that this Government cannot put through or abuse pieces of legislation, which it has no right to do. Seemingly no one in this country can do anything about that.

An Hon. Member: Abolition of the Liberals.

Mr. Anguish: My colleague says abolition of the Liberals would be one answer to the problem. We could then start on the road to recover economically and reform the political system in Canada, which over the years has become so archaic.

I would like to make a few more comments in the brief time that I have remaining. We only have ten minutes each in this debate. I would like to talk about the whole pension system in Canada, something we have fought for long and hard to bring into place and to preserve.

In a relatively short period of time, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) and other Members of this House have worked hard and tirelessly for the rights of Canadians to have a retirement pension in order that they could maintain a decent standard of living and have some respect in their retirement years. Whether or not they have had the fortune of contributing to a public or private pension program, many of them worked for years for small remuneration. Some women worked long and hard to raise families and take care of farms and family households and received no income. Recognizing that each and every Canadian has made a significant contribution to our society, they should have the privilege of receiving some kind of pension in their retirement years.

In Canada we have an evolving state. The pension program has progressed considerably over the years from the early thirties up until the present time. We now find an erosion or setback in our pension system in Canada. Certainly the Government, whether it is an NDP, Liberal or Conservative Government, has some responsibility as to whether a country has a high rate of inflation. Certainly the major control to influence that comes from the Government.

If we have to contend with inflation as a result of a Government which cannot deal with the problem, whether it is beyond their control or ability, retired people should not have to live on a pension that is not indexed. If someone retires at age 65 without an indexed pension, imagine what would happen if that person lived to age 95. The pension would be virtually worthless. After having made a significant contribution to Canadian society, that person would be degraded to the point of having to accept public assistance which he does not feel he has earned. He should have an adequate pension to provide for retirement.

We have to address seriously the problems of the future in terms of pensions. Any more setbacks, halts or dismantling such as we now see because of this Liberal Government will not be advantageous to the future of our pension program. For example, there are those who have contributed to the Canada Pension Plan. I am concerned as to what will be the situation when I retire. My grandfather, who passed away before Christmas, retired in 1969 after having contributed to the plan for three years. That was through no fault of his own because the Canada Pension Plan was not in existence prior to that. As a result of his contributions, he received less than $30 a month from the Canada Pension Plan in his retirement years. Two generations later, I have contributed to the Canada Pension Plan off and on since I was 16 years of age. When I retire there may not even be a Canada Pension Plan. Even though I will have contributed substantially into the Plan, it may not be in existence at that time because of the bankrupt situation that may occur. In my mid-retirement years if, God willing, I reach that point, there will only be two people in Canada working for every one retired, as we now describe retirement. Today there are five or maybe seven people working for every retired individual. If we are going to continue with our pension plans and make them meaningful when people retire, we must do some real rethinking of what retirement means and what pension plans mean to every Canadian in this country.

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I want to say a few words on this amendment which I plan to support. It will not change the basic principles of the Bill except to indicate that the technique of the Bill will not continue year after year. The Liberal Member for Kitchener (Mr. Lang) said that the amendment really is not necessary. He attempted to explain that the Bill will expire automatically at that time.

If an amendment to a Bill is simply to exemplify or strengthen something in the Bill, it would be out of order. The Speaker in her wisdom, I suppose with the help of the Table Officers, came to the conclusion that the Bill would not expire automatically and declared that the amendment was in order. Otherwise, it would have been ruled out of order, because you cannot move an amendment to do something that the Bill already does. That type of amendment would not be acceptable, certainly not to the knowledgeable people around our Table and our Speaker. I say to the Hon. Member for Kitchener, who is trying to persuade the Members of his Party to vote against this because it is already in the Bill, that that is not so.

Anyone who takes a simple look at the Bill and the amendment and accepts the Speaker's ruling will see that is not so. The amendment is necessary. This would not be the first time the Government extended something like this over and over again.

A Liberal Member at the far end of the Chamber said this morning that he opposed the Bill. I can understand that. He cannot believe that the legislation will expire on December 31, 1984. It will if this amendment carries. Otherwise, it may go on for several years. It will be the pensioners who suffer.

When speaking on the Bill, another Liberal Member, the Hon. Member for Lambton-Middlesex (Mr. Ferguson), said something absolutely amazing. He said that retired pensioners "will have a gain even though they have had a loss". That is what he said. If that is not Irish, I do not know what Irish is. I do not want to reflect on the Irish.

Mr. Ferguson: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. If the Hon. Member had listened closely, he would realize that I said that in the first year there would be a loss and in the following year there could very well be a gain if the rate of inflation is lower than it is at the present time.

Mr. Taylor: That is hardly a point of order, but I accept the correction if a correction is necessary. When he was speaking, I thought I wrote down exactly what he said. I will check the "blues". I thought he said, "Will have a gain even though they have had a loss". He will have a tough time explaining that to a soldier's widow who now receives little enough to live on. She now finds she is going to have part of that cut off in the next few years. What about the retired civil servant who is having a difficult time today getting by? They are not going to look upon this as a gain at all. I think we should be realistic and say there is definitely a loss. There is something being taken away. If it were a gain, we would not need the Bill. Something is being taken away from them and that is part of their indexing, and they need that indexing to meet the cost of living today.

• (1720)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary rises on a point of order.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I would not want the Hon. Member unintentionally to leave a misunderstanding in the House. Veterans' Pensions are fully indexed.

Mr. Taylor: I am talking about the widows of retired pensioners. Widows of retired soldiers are not going to be fully indexed. You are cutting part of it off. Let us not try to fool the population of this country. This is cutting part of the indexing of the widows of retired soldiers, pensioners, civil servants and RCMP personnel who are retired. They are widows, you know. When a man dies there is a widow left, and she is going to have part of that indexing cut off. So do not try to kid the troops. The Hon. Member had time to speak, Mr. Speaker, and he did not mention anything worthwhile. Now he is simply talking, and talking about nothing. I am not going to have a red herring pulled across my path. The widow of a soldier who was retired will now have less coming into her pocketbook each month. If that is not so, then I stand to be corrected, but that is so. And the widow of a retired RCMP officer who today is getting something from the work of her husband, will get less when this Bill is passed. Let us not kid ourselves. The pensioners themselves, the civil servants who are now retired, the superannuates, will receive less, not more. They will lose, they will not gain, when this Bill is passed. Again, let us not try to kid the troops because the people will know when they get their cheques.

The Hon. Members of the New Democratic Party have mentioned a number of times that if this vote had been delayed for another 30 minutes, the cheques would have gone out. But the Government, at least from information received from the civil service, would have had up to two more days, and the debate had to end tomorrow night under the closure rules. They would have had two more days and still get the cheques out. That is what the civil service tell me, and they probably know more about it than the Hon. Members of this House. But accepting the statement of the NDP, if that were so, then what would happen the following month? There would be an over-payment and the pensioners would have to pay it back. I can appreciate how pensioners today would feel if they received an over-payment and had to pay back something, because when they get the money, they have some place to spend it; then the money is gone. The following month they would suddenly receive a letter saying they have to pay so much back. We do no good to a pensioner or a superannuate by putting him or her in that position. I believe, therefore, we had better think pretty carefully about what we say there.

The Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis), a few moments ago, mentioned in a very nice way that we broke a contract when we voted for Bill C-124.

An Hon. Member: Yes, you did.

Mr. Taylor: I hear an Hon. Member saying, "Yes, you did". But, Mr. Speaker, everyone under Bill C-124 was receiving wages of some kind. Every one of us was on wages. When you hire a civil servant, do you break a contract if you give him an increase? Of course, you do not. If we had refused Bill C-124, we were not breaking a contract. We took a big raise a few months ago, and there is only a portion of it being given back now. So that is not breaking a contract. When you make a contract with the civil servants, then you give that contract credibility by putting it into legislation, and then you break it, you are breaking a contract. To compare that with Bill C-124 is completely nonsense. Bill C-124 had nothing to do with old age pensions or superannuates. It had nothing to do with children. We voted for it here because we were on wages and we took too big a raise in the first place. To give some of it back is only logical and sensible.

The people hurting today are those who do not have jobs, and those on fixed incomes; they are the people we are talking about. This Bill is going to hurt those people on fixed incomes badly. The amendment will soften the blow. In two years time that will be the end of it. But it will not change the principle that they are losing part of their indexing during the period in which that indexing is in effect. If the Government side refuses to support this amendment, it will show it is going to continue this, and whenever they want they have another sword to be used against the pensioner, another blow against the pensioner.

Mr. Speaker is indicating my time has expired, but I have barely started. However, I want to say that this is an abominable Bill, the Progressive Conservative Party is opposing it and we have opposed it from the beginning, in spite of what the NDP have said.

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg-St. James): Madam Speaker, I am happy to have the opportunity to participate in this debate because it is a very important matter which touches on such important principles. I must start out by pointing out that we will be supporting the amendment that is before the House now. This amendment will assure Canadians that this Bill will in fact terminate at the end of 1984. It is surprising that the Government did not provide for that themselves in the legislation. The amendment is a good amendment, but what we want is not so much for this legislation to terminate at the end of a period of two years, but rather to have the Bill terminate right now. The Bill should be withdrawn rather than left in place for a couple of years.

The Government, of course, did amend this legislation which we are now dealing with so that the limiting of indexation would be at 6½ per cent rather than 6 per cent. That one-half per cent solution certainly was not a real solution, and it makes one wonder why the Government would take such a mini step, such a half-step. Quite frankly, I believe everyone is aware, at least everyone who reads the newspapers these days, that the reason the Government chose to change the indexation, the limit of the indexation of Public Service pensions to 6½ per cent is that they were threatened with a split in their own caucus. They had some very good political reasons for wanting to amend this Bill, but rather than accepting the real reason for the potential splitting up of the caucus, withdrawing the legislation and changing course, they put a bandaid on the situation and said, okay, we will take a half measure in order to give some of our backbenchers an opportunity to vote for this legislation.

Well, the legislation, Mr. Speaker, is still wrong. It is both morally and economically wrong. This legislation is of course the application of the Government's so-called anti-inflation six and five program to Public Service pensioners. Why did the Government pick on the pensions of public servants? Well, I suspect it is probably because Gallup and other public opinion polls are indicating that labour and labour leaders are pretty unpopular with the general public. That makes them an easy target for the Government. It is a politically easy thing to attack public servants these days because the general public do not have a great deal of sympathy for civil servants, at this time. So it is a political move.

The six and five program is the key to the Government's economic policies. The theory is that by limiting indexation of pensions and Family Allowances, that will contribute to the fight against inflation. There is very little evidence, Mr.

Speaker, that these measures will have any impact whatsoever on inflation. In fact, it is well known that the rise in wages in this country was following the rise in inflation. In other words, wages were rising at a rate slower than inflation. So it is very difficult in those circumstances to argue that the rise in income is the cause of inflation. I would say we can question the notion that we should be putting the greatest priority in the fight against inflation.

Over the Christmas break the Catholic Bishops issued a statement which indicated that in their opinion the priority should be on jobs and human dignity, on the avoidance of human suffering, rather than the single-minded fight against inflation. The Government promises that if we put the priority on fighting inflation, it will come down, interest rates will come down and suddenly jobs will appear. Well, interest rates are much lower now than they were a number of months ago, certainly there is less inflation, but unemployment continues to rise. So the results of the Government's policy are just contrary to the promise.

To go back to what the Bishops said, Mr. Speaker, it was simply that the Government's policy was morally wrong. I know the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), when he was overseas, said that the Bishops' economics were bad. Well, I have more faith in the Bishops' economics than in the morality of the policy the Government has put forward. I want to indicate that it is not only the Bishops or myself who are questioning the rightness, both economically or morally, of the six and five program. In fact, even the Government's own blue chip advisory committee questioned that as the priority for today.

I want to read from the Winnipeg Free Press, an article written by Dian Cohen, hardly a raving socialist. She says our problems today relate to the fact that consumer spending is down and somehow we have to get it up so that the plants and factories can get back into production and people can go back to work. She says:

> The research economists looked at the relationship between personal consumer spending and employee compensation from 1965 to 1978 in 45 different countries, 19 of them industrialized. They found that, in every case, with very little variation, annual consumption ranged just slightly more or less than annual compensation.

What she is saying is that if we want to have greater consumer spending, workers have to have greater annual compensation. In other words, if you cut down on people's wages, you will cut down on consumer spending and aggravate present economic circumstances. That is exactly what this policy does; it cuts down on income, reduces spending and drives us further and deeper into the economic mess we are in today. So I think the Government should reflect on its policies, not only because of what the Bishops have said but because it is morally wrong to leave two million people unemployed. That amount of suffering is unacceptable.

I want to quote just briefly from an article in The Globe and Mail. It says:

> —a pick-up of personal spending, was less evident because of the country's high jobless level and uncertainties.

They are saying that if we want to get this economy moving, we have to get consumer spending moving, and to do that we have to have people at work. We have to stop robbing people of their incomes, and that includes members of the Public Service and those on pension. It is not good enough to attack public servants, the helpless and the powerless. We have to examine this Government's policies, which have been found lacking both by economists and moral leaders in this country, and we have to set a priority on job creation. We have to set about developing income policies which are going to give people greater compensation and therefore get consumer spending back up, get the economy moving, get back to work and have a little respect for the human person, rather than leaving them out on the street with no job and suffering. That is not adequate public policy; we have to turn it around and show some compassion.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, it gives me a great deal of pleasure to enter into the debate today to discuss the amendment by the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) who has come forward in response to the great public outcry which has arisen as a result of the Liberal Government's attempt to reduce the earned inflation-indexed pensions that public civil servants are entitled to. I would point out with some pride that the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker), my colleague, who has spoken out so often in this House on behalf of civil servants, has seconded this very astute motion by the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier. I say "astute" because the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier spotted something we knew was there, but in the great wealth of debating material there is on this Bill we could not cover it all. The Hon. Member very astutely pointed out that there is a definite risk that the Liberal Government will carry on with its fight to—

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Its chiseling.

Mr. Lewis: Chiseling is a good word, Mr. Speaker, its chiseling of public civil servants beyond December 31, 1984. Now, you might think that there should be an election by then. I know most of the Canadian people do, Mr. Speaker, and I see you nodding, but there is a very real fear on this side that the Liberals will go to February 22, 1985, in their desperate grasp for power and in an effort to appoint as many Michael Pitfields of the world to the Senate as possible. Yes, there are many honourable people who should carry their talents to that honoured Chamber down the hall. A lot of them will be legitimate appointments, not like that of Mr. Pitfield. A lot will be legitimate politicians who have honourably gone out and proclaimed themselves as Party politicians on either side, rather than sneaking in the back door of the Privy Council and pretending they were not Liberal politicians.

• (1740)

I see many Members on the Government benches smiling at this, Mr. Speaker. I should point out that it has been suggested to me that Mr. Pitfield had to agree not to attend Liberal caucus meetings so that he could be appointed an independent

Senator. I can understand him not wanting to participate in Liberal caucus meetings. However, it has also been suggested to me that it was to protect his hide that he was advised not to attend. There is more laughter and nodding of heads on the other side, Mr. Speaker.

We note that through the force of Progressive Conservative arguments, assisted on occasion by my colleagues on my left, those Members who are receiving so much media attention, the Government, assisted by a cadre of scattered socialists, has been brought to the point of offering amendments to its own Bill.

My own Member of Parliament, the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans), has not seen fit to offer an amendment to this legislation, however, and I know that he must be receiving as many calls from his constituents as I am.

This amendment seeks to stop the terrible chiseling of public servants by the Liberal Government. We will support the amendment as part of this Party's attack on the Government's position. We feel that a deal is a deal, Mr. Speaker. Whether an agreement be in writing or verbal, it is entered into with a sense of honour, which obviously the Government did not feel although the agreement is incorporated in a statute.

We regret that the Government has turned its back on public servants. This is not the first time it has done that and I am sure it will not be the last.

The Government built up inflation and it has built unemployment as high as two million. Of course, the Government persists in saying that 1.5 million Canadians are unemployed, forgetting about the 500,000 who have given up looking for work.

We object to the Liberal Government's ignoring the deal it made with Public Service pensioners and which it kept until now. We also object to its fighting inflation on the backs of the unemployed.

This amendment is key to our fight against Bill C-133. Even at the last hour we hope the Government will reconsider its position and play fair with civil servants. We would like to see that but we do not trust the Liberals. That is why the sunset provision has been suggested—just in case this Government lasts until January 1, 1985. We know that with the first cheques in 1985 it will want to grind out one last capping on indexing for public servants, and we are doing our best to stop that, supported by at least four Members of the Government.

Perhaps through the force of our arguments even more Liberals will display a sense of decency, vote for the amendment and against the Bill so that they can go back to their ridings and face civil service pensioners. These people made their pension payments faithfully and now believe that it should be indexed as was set out in the agreement.

I hope the Government will support this amendment made by one of its own Members and vote to defeat the bill, in essence.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): It being 5.45 p.m., pursuant to order made Thursday, January 20, 1983, it is my duty to interrupt the proceedings and put forthwith every question necessary to dispose of report stage of the Bill.

The House will now proceed to making the deferred divisions on the Bill. The question is on the motion of Mr. Gray.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): All those in favour of the motion please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): All those opposed to the motion please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Call in the Members.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker: The first question is on Motion No. 2 in the name of the Hon. President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray).

An affirmative vote on this motion will dispose of the motion in the name of the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker).

A negative vote will require a division on the motion of the Hon. Member.

The House divided on Motion No. 2 (Mr. Gray) which was agreed to on the following division:

Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act (No. 2)

[English]

Madam Speaker: I declare the motion lost.

Motion negatived.

Madam Speaker: The question is now on the motion of the President of Treasury Board (Mr. Gray).

Hon. Herb Gray (President of Treasury Board) moved that the Bill be concurred in.

Madam Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Madam Speaker: All those opposed to the motion will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Madam Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

An Hon. Member: On division.

Madam Speaker: I declare the motion carried on division.

Motion agreed to.

Madam Speaker: It being 6.20 p.m. this House is adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

At 6.20 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

MEASURE TO MODIFY BENEFIT INDEX

Hon. Herb Gray (President of Treasury Board), seconded by Mr. Smith, moved that Bill C-133, an Act to amend the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act (No. 2), be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. Nickerson: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Would I not be correct in thinking that it would be necessary for the motion to be seconded by a member of Her Majesty's Privy Council?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): I thank the Hon. Member for his comment, but that is not necessary.

Mr. Gray: Mr. Speaker, I said in my speech on second reading—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): The Hon. Member for Yukon is rising on a point of order?

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, without in any way appearing to be critical of the Chair, I seem to recall the practice that a motion of this kind must be seconded by a Minister of the Crown, not by a Parliamentary Secretary and not by any other Government Member. That is why there are always two Ministers in the House at all times. I see the Minister of State for Multiculturalism (Mr. Fleming) is here now, and perhaps for the sake of order and for the sake of the record the motion should be put, seconded by a Minister of the Crown.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): The President of the Treasury Board is rising on the same point of order?

Mr. Gray: Without accepting the correctness of the assertion of the House Leader of the Official Opposition, and without saying this would create a precedent, in order to facilitate the business of the House, I would have no objection to Your Honour calling the motion again.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): The Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain on the same point of order?

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I do not accept that reasoning, quite frankly. It is either to be done because it is right or it is not to be done because what has been done is correct. It is of importance that we establish whether it is necessary for a third reading motion to be moved and seconded by Ministers of the Crown, not whether the Minister accedes to the request. I would ask the Chair carefully to review the Standing Orders and the precedents to determine whether the point of order of the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) and the Hon. Member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) is a legitimate one, and to enforce it if it is.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, the Chair might reserve its decision on that matter and inform the House later, following the suggestion of the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans). In the meantime, for the sake of facilitating debate the motion might be put, seconded by a Minister of the Crown.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): I accept the comments of Hon. Members. I find them helpful. The Chair has put the question, in its opinion, properly, but it will take the advice of Hon. Members, doublecheck and notify them later on in the debate. In the meantime I recognize the President of the Treasury Board.

Mr. Gray: Mr. Speaker, I said in my speech on second reading that I was certain that deliberations on this Bill would raise a variety of questions on the state of the pension accounts, on the means of funding and financing benefits and on the rate of return on pension accounts, just to name a few. I was quite accurate in these predictions. Also at that time I referred to the relationship between fundamental and long-term changes in Public Service pension arrangements, and the impending national pension process. Since then, of course, the long-awaited green paper has been issued and reform proposals can now be debated in earnest.

One of the most positive aspects of the debate on Bill C-133, with its questioning of federal Government employee pension arrangements, is that it has highlighted the issue of ensuring that public servants' pension measures are on a sound financial footing. This is particularly appropriate at a time when we are entering the era of national pension reform.

• (1110)

A second positive result of the debate is that there is a greater appreciation of the issues among all concerned, Public Service pensioners, Government employees and employee associations, Members of Parliament and others, issues associated with the funding and financing of the federal Government's plans for its employees. As well, it is most heartening that there is a willingness on the part of all these groups to sit down and talk about how best we should face these issues.

After assuming my responsibilities as President of the Treasury Board, I said that I would consult on future fundamental pension plan changes, and I intend to do this. I want to see how we can best carry out an orderly review of the existing financial arrangements of the Public Service pension plan and, in doing so, to seek the views of all concerned prior to making any permanent and fundamental changes.

I want to assure the House of my desire to have addressed within the reasonably near future, bearing in mind their complexity, the outstanding pension policy issues. These include the nature of future inflation protection, the method of financing indexing, investment strategy for the pension fund, the level of employee-employer contributions and whether there should be a change in the averaging period used for pension calculations. Such issues will, of course, have to be considered in light of the discussions on national pension reform. Such a debate will undoubtedly bring under scrutiny other aspects of the Public Service pension program.

Again, possible changes arising from this process should be fully discussed with Public Service representatives. I believe that a review of our Public Service pension plans can be accomplished in the context of national pension reform and, conversely, that these deliberations will be of interest to the other participants in the national pension reform debate.

With respect to Bill C-133, the Government remains convinced of the need for the six and five restraint program and of the role which this Bill and the other Bills on indexing play in the success of that program. Stabilization of purchasing power for all Canadian pensioners will be helped to be achieved by the six and five program and all its elements. I recognize that public servants contribute some of their salary toward the arrangements for indexing of their pensions, and in proposing my amendment to Bill C-133 I have attempted to recognize this concept. However, we cannot overlook a basic fact, and that is that under the present arrangements a substantial portion of the financing of public servants' pension indexing comes directly from the Consolidated Revenue Fund; that is, from the taxpayers of Canada generally.

Nothwithstanding that suggestions have been made as to how this situation could be changed, Bill C-133 reflects the present legal framework and state of the accounts, a state which cannot be changed overnight, certainly not in the context of a short-term program of economic stabilization.

I also want to remark on the reference during the debate to a $15 billion surplus in the pension account. I have already assured the House that this could refer only to the $15.5 billion balance in the Public Service Superannuation Account, the account for the basic retirement pension. This is not a surplus. The balance in the account is the amount required to pay all the obligations accrued under the plan to date. In other words, those funds are already committed to the payment of basic benefits and cannot be used for indexation purposes without giving rise to a deficit in the basic account.

The Opposition has attempted to argue that the Government has broken an unalterable contract with its pensioners. However, there is no formal contract on this matter. It has not come from an agreement reached in the collective bargaining process between the Government, as employer, and the unions representing Public Service employees. In fact, by law pensions are excluded from that collective bargaining process as a subject to be considered in it. Nor has there been any other kind of formal agreement on this matter. In fact, coverage under the pension plans is a condition of employment in the federal Government and employees are required by law to participate in them.

I am told that the decision to provide full indexation was made unilaterally by the Government and Parliament in 1973, and while the advice of the advisory committee of the day, and others, was sought, ultimately the decisions were taken by Parliament on request of the Government. Other changes in the indexing concept have also been made unilaterally by Government and Parliament in the past. For example, a $2,400 ceiling was placed on benefits for 1976 as part of the Anti-Inflation Board program. Contribution rates were increased in 1977. All this was done by Parliament unilaterally on recommendation of the Government.

There were also changes proposed in 1978 under Bill C-12, which would have altered very significantly the indexation provisions for Public Service pension plans. Under these arrangements, future indexation levels were not guaranteed in law but were to be subject to triennial review. The House gave second reading, approval in principle, without opposition, if I am not mistaken, to those proposals and they were considered in committee and again recommended unanimously to Parliament. The Bill was not dealt with, as we know, because not long afterwards the House was dissolved for an election. My point is that this House agreed, including Hon. Members opposite of that day, to what would have amounted to a unilateral fundamental change in the then existing system of indexing. I have also heard comments from Members opposite on what they have referred to as the lack of morality or social justice in Bill C-133. I would ask them where they find the morality or social justice in high levels of inflation, with the accompanying problems of unemployment and high interest rates, a serious situation which the six and five program, including the elements capping indexing, is designed to deal with.

It is likely also that deep down Hon. Members of the Conservative Opposition recognize the validity of the case we are making in support of Bill C-133. If that were not the situation, why would the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) on behalf of his Party have presented his amendment to limit the capping of superannuation indexing under Bill C-133 to one year? If what the Hon. Member and his colleagues have been saying is correct, why would he have been willing to accept something he considered so wrong, so immoral, only for one year? Deep down, Mr. Speaker, the Hon.

Member and his colleagues, on behalf of whom he was speaking, recognize the validity of our case. Otherwise, why would they have presented that amendment to cap indexing for one year? If what we are doing is wrong, it is just as wrong for one year as it is for two years. In moving that amendment, the Hon. Member and his colleagues recognize that what we are doing is right for one year and right for two years, as part of a basic program of economic stabilization to get our costs under control, to bring down inflation, and to help strengthen the basis for economic recovery in the interests of superannuates and all Canadians.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would like to emphasize my willingness to review and consider carefully all of the suggestions for changes in Public Service pension arrangements which have been put forward thus far, and to discuss them with my Cabinet colleagues.

This Bill is part of a broad temporary program of economic recovery, which includes the restraint measures of which Bill C-133 is one. This Bill deals, as I have said before, only with the limitation of that portion of the indexing of Public Service pensions which is paid for out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund, that portion paid for by the taxpayers of Canada generally, with the resulting funds being available for reallocation to job-creation programs for the benefit of all Canadians.

I therefore urge this House to support this Bill and the six and five program as part of an effort to rebuild the Canadian economy, to protect the purchasing power of superannuates and all Canadian retirees, and to provide a basis for maintaining and creating jobs for all Canadian workers.

I ask this House, Mr. Speaker, to support third reading of this Bill.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. I see the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) rising to put a question to the Hon. Minister. According to the provisional orders under which the House is presently operating, it is the Chair's understanding—and we have taken this matter under deliberation with the Table Officers just recently—that there is no provision for the putting of questions to the Minister and the Member immediately speaking after him. It is the Chair's understanding that the question period would be reserved for Hon. Members who have a right to 20-minute speeches. That is, Members other than the first and second speaker on a motion on third reading.

I see that there are Hon. Members who served on the Committee here present in the House. If this is not the correct interpretation of the intention of the Committee, it would perhaps be useful to clarify the matter further before we proceed. Otherwise, if the House accepts the interpretation of the Chair, I would then proceed to recognize the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker).

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I think I should make myself clear. Naturally, we are completely opposed to this Bill. If there was any place that any Member thinks I would rather be in my own constituency today rather than debating this Bill, I wish my Hon. friend would suggest it. This has been a long and bitter fight. It has been a fight that will not be forgotten by public servants, or by others far beyond the Public Service. I have a file of letters in my office which is as thick as the Minister's head from people from all walks of life, in all parts of the country, who have shared a great concern about what has been proposed.

I know that if you went to the serving Public Service and the retired public servants, those from all walks of life, all activities within the federal jurisdiction, they would say this: "Surely it would have been the decent thing to have at least consulted us before you moved in this way".

The Minister has admitted that there was a consultation process of some kind which took place before Bill C-12. In a letter I received from my colleague, the Hon. Member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro), dealing with the surgical and medical insurance plan of the Public Service, he talked about the increases and the National Joint Council. He said the National Joint Council is a consultative body created in 1944 to promote regular consultation between the Government and bargaining agents. The NJC consulted on matters in respect of which it is desirable to have the same policy throughout the Public Service. If it was desirable to consult with respect to medical plans, is it not equally fair to say that it would have been more desirable to consult with respect to pensions for persons who are unprotected?

The utter hypocrisy of the position of the Government was demonstrated when the Minister said today; "We did not consult about this but we will consult future changes in the plan". Humbug, I say. The Government moved unilaterally without consultation. If there is to be an opportunity for consultation, then something has to happen.

This Bill ought not to be taken to its final decision today, even with closure or allocation of time, or cutting off debate, or whatever label the Government wants to put on it. It should not be taken to its final decision today. But that is the position we are in—unless something is done.

There are two things that could be done, Mr. Speaker. I do not expect that the Government would look kindly on any Liberal backbencher rising in opposition to third reading and I appreciate that. It makes me appreciate even more the courage of the four Liberal Members who have indicated that they intend to do that. Perhaps there will be some abstentions as well.

The other aspect is that if there are some who believe that there should be a period of consultation, then we should give time to the Government for this. I say to my friends that that would not be a matter of confidence in the Government; the Government would not fall if it were given that opportunity.

I wish to present a motion, Mr. Speaker, and I will present it now because an affirmative vote would allow time for consultation to take place, as it did before Bill C-12 which the Minister now says he was committed to—after he has put the screws to the federal superannuates. I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon):

That the motion be amended by deleting all the words after the word "that" and substituting the following therefor: "Bill C-133, an Act to amend the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act (No. 2), be not now read a third time but that it be read a third time this day six months hence".

This will allow time for consultation to take place.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. The amendment is acceptable; therefore I shall put it to the House immediately. It is moved by Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton), seconded by Mr. McKinnon:

That the motion be amended by deleting all the words after the word "that" and substituting the following therefor: "Bill C-133, an Act to amend the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act (No. 2), be not now read a third time but that it be read a third time this day six months hence".

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Just so that I understand the procedures and Members know what we are doing, I take it that we are now discussing the amendment of the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker). He is the first speaker on that amendment. We are not speaking to the motion of the Minister on Bill C-133. Is the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton going to be allowed to answer questions when he has finished his remarks?

• (1130)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): The Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) is the responder to the Government motion. Speaking immediately after the Minister, he is entitled to unlimited time. The fact that he has presented an amendment to the motion does not, in the Chair's opinion, preclude in any way his right to speak for an unlimited period of time.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, therefore I take it your answer is that there will be no questions put to the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): That would be the Chair's understanding of the new Permanent and Provisional Standing Orders.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I hope when I am finished that the Hon. Member will not have any questions to put to me. I believe he and I are ad idem with respect to this Bill. I repeat that the purpose of it is to allow the kind of consultation which ought to have taken place with respect to the Bill in fact to take place.

Before Mr. Speaker rose, I was about to say that if one reads the evidence before the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates, one would support this motion. One should consider the evidence of the interunion people who appeared before the Committee representing a large number of Public Service unions, the evidence of postal workers and of the Public Service Alliance of Canada. They put briefs in on the merits of the Bill, certainly, and disputed the merits of the Bill. The common thread through all briefs was that the period of consultation should have taken place but did not. If anyone in the House really believes that consultation is a good thing, whether he is a Liberal, Conservative or New Democrat, I hope he will support the motion because it is important.

We have talked about what happened in the community and about the forces therein separating one interest group from the other. This is true, and our country suffers from it. We are seeing evidence of it right now.

I want to move on to another matter. I suggest that it might be appropriate if I put on the record a sampling from the thick file I have mentioned of the views of people with respect to the Bill, and why making the widest possible period of time available for consultation is important. The first letter to which I will refer was written by a retired public servant and is directed to the Minister. He wrote:

—have you considered the spirit of this, one of our laws that we elect a Government to protect? Have you considered how such flouting of a Government contract could affect the image of a democratic Government . . . Whenever the Government decides to cut costs, however, it appears that its own lowest level workers and pensioners are the first, if not the only ones, to become the scapegoats, and bear the brunt. A good many of us, now superannuated, were red-circled some years ago when the Government decided that such action was warranted.

He put the following question:

Did it really help our economy or reduce our debt?

I put that question to the House. Did it? Is the deficit any lower as a result of this? I ask my colleagues to think about it.

I refer to another letter from one of my constituents which was directed to the Minister. He wrote:

I respectfully ask you to give this proposed legislation your sober second thoughts—

In other words, he was asking that we accept my motion. He continued:

—and take appropriate action to prevent it from passing.

I have recently completed 35 years of pensionable service in the Public Service of Canada and was quite prepared to manage in retirement on my reduced income under the existing pension plus indexing legislation.

I strongly object to this proposed legislation by the Federal Government to chisel an additional 5 per cent from my income.

The Prime Minister in his television address stated that we should trust one another. I retired trusting that the Government would honour its existing legislation.

He speaks for a legion of people in that sense. Another letter which was directed to me read:

We ask for your support in opposing this piece of legislation and in particular the breach of agreement which it represents if passed into law. We are pensioners with 35 years of service in the Public Service of Canada and because of this ill-conceived proposal now feel threatened financially. The indexing of pensions we suggest was a legal agreement which was paid for by the individuals concerned, and for the Government of Canada to now partially withdraw from this agreement is in effect a breach of contract.

Another letter from a constituent read:

It was always my understanding that, while on full salary as a federal public servant, I was paying for indexing which I was to receive at a later date. Now we are told that the Government is to cut the indexing to 6 and 5 per cent . . . Is this legal? And again more recently we hear that the Government . . . the elite Cabinet . . . is contemplating weird and wonderful things with our pension funds. Is it not the sitting Members of the House of Commons who enact the law of the Government and not the "four horsemen" of the Cabinet? These people have nothing to lose as their fortunes are protected. But what about us, who with inflation, barely make it through the month. Why should we, the Public Service pensioners, be denied what we have paid for.

Mr. Baker, I am sure that you will agree that those in the same situation as I am should get more consideration than the bailing out of Maislin Brothers Transport. In my opinion, their loyalty was always to the almighty dollar and not the Canadian public. I honestly believe that the Government has a moral and financial obligation to us the pensioners. Don't you agree?

The answer to that question is yes. I should like to refer to another letter respecting the difference between a pensioner and a serving public servant in terms of the six and five program. This correspondent wrote:

This would be an unjust default on the Goverment's obligation to index pensions at the cost of living. I have contributed to my military pension since its start in 1946 to my retirement in 1977. For the last five years I have been an employee of the RCMP . . . civilian member . . . and have again contributed to the indexing.

If the 6 per cent-5 per cent indexing is allowed, I feel that our pensions will be open to attack at any further date once the precedent is set.

Then he says what so many working public servants have said:

I am not against the 6 per cent-5 per cent formula for my salary, but because I have paid for indexing for many, many years it should not be altered.

That is what they have said. They do not like it, but that is what they said. For whatever reason, just on the grounds of ordinary, common decency, I say to the Minister that it would be best, if he thought about it for a few minutes and perhaps a little longer, to withdraw the Bill and consult. I do not know what would come out of that consultation, and neither does he. But he and Members of the House know that it would be the honourable thing to do. This is the only way that this legislation can be stopped.

I ask my friends in the Liberal Party, such as the Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mr. Cousineau) who represents a large number of public servants, and I ask Members of Parliament from all over the country, not to vote on Bill C-133 right now, today, but to remember the obligations that we have as Members of Parliament to the Public Service of Canada, just as every other Government has an obligation to its public servants who cannot take part in politics and cannot speak for themselves. We have an obligation to them to ask that this Bill be withdrawn, remembering as well that all of us, including public servants, have obligations to the country and those obligations can best be met through what was the thread of argument throughout the Public Service submissions to the Committee—consultation. Do not do it on an ad hoc basis—consult.

What happens if we do not consult? The House is going to be participating in a confiscatory measure that will confiscate money from one group of Canadians, joined soon by old age pensioners and joined now by those who receive the Family Allowance. It will in effect be an increase in taxation. This Bill will cause an increase in taxation based on the difference between what is to be a 6.5 per cent and a 5.5 per cent increase and whatever the inflation rate is. This year there will be an increase of 5 per cent in taxation for senior citizens and retired Public Servants. That is what this Bill will do. That is why I ask my friends to consider what this Bill will do.

This Bill is dishonest. It is a dishonest piece of legislation because it is designed to capture a mood in the country to the detriment of a certain group of citizens. Public servants are not popular in the country. If one listened to the distortion that Bruce Phillips gave on CTV last night, one would know that he made the assumption—and assumptions are made all over—that all public servants have a $50,000 a year pension. The fact is that the average public servant and widow is on a pension of $6,900 or less. Public servants are an easy target and the Government has chosen an easy target. I do not know if that is politically right or not, but I know the Government is morally wrong.

The Government is moving with almost indecent haste with respect to this legislation, which is an indication of how wrong it is. As I said, it is a dishonest piece of legislation. However, if Hon. Members on the other side think the concern relates just to public servants, I indicated earlier that is not so. In the evidence which was presented before the committee by the private sector actuary, he said in terms of the morality of the administration of pension plans that the private sector looks to the public sector for leadership. This man, who is experienced in his field, said to me that many private sector people will say: "If they can get away with this, why not us?" I believe there will be a ripple effect from this legislation which perhaps the Government needs time to consider, apart from whatever political ripple effect there might be.

If any Member of Parliament believes that the interest and the sense of fairness has gone from the Canadian people and that this is purely a national capital issue, I want that Member of Parliament to know that that is not so. Let me quote from an editorial which appeared in the Toronto Star on December 27, 1982. Members on the other side have heard of that newspaper. This editorial reads:

Unlike Canada's working population, pensioners can't negotiate increases to their incomes to help them cope with rising prices. That's why indexed pensions are so valuable: They enable men and women on fixed incomes to keep the purchasing power they had when they retired.

That is what indexing does. It maintains the same purchasing power a person had when he or she retired. This editorial continues:

So it's decidedly unfair of Ottawa to expect pensioners to give up this measure of their security, as it is doing in two bills now before Parliament. The federal government proposes limiting the indexing of two types of pensions—the Old Age Security payment that goes to all Canadians age 65 and over as well as the retirement benefits of former civil servants—to 6 and 5 per cent in the next two years.

The writer then dealt with the effect this would have on senior citizens:

—when the restraint program comes off and full indexing is restored, it will be calculated in a lower base.

That is with respect to whether we are dealing with public servants or senior citizens. Make no mistake about it, these two years will be lost forever to that exposed category of senior citizens in this country, Mr. Speaker.

Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act (No. 2)

Then the writer goes on to deal with the Public Service matter, and we read the following:

Retired civil servants have an additional reason to be unhappy. During their working years, they made extra contributions from their wages in order to help pay for indexed pensions. And they planned their retirements and their savings plans with the legitimate expectation of fully-indexed pensions.

By imposing limits, the government breaks faith with these retired workers. And most of them are not high-income mandarins who have gone on to second careers as consultants. They are former clerks and secretaries who earned modest salaries and retired on correspondingly modest pensions. If those pensions are no longer fully indexed to inflation, some retired civil servants will undoubtedly have to make painful cuts in their day-to-day budgets.

Then the writer refers to the pension document, the green paper on pensions. He writes as follows about the tabling of that document in the House of Commons:

It contained numerous cogent arguments for protecting all pensions—public and private—from the inroads of inflation.

The green paper argued against the very band-aid approach which this Bill is and which the former President of the Treasury Board, speaking on behalf of the Government before the Miscellaneous Estimates Committee, indicated would not take place. The editorial in the Toronto Star concludes with this paragraph:

Lalonde and Bégin have shown that they recognize how important indexing is for the majority of Canada's elderly. What they should do now is restore that full indexing to the old-age security payments and the retired civil servants' pensions.

To that I say amen. That is what should be done.

What the Government is doing with this Bill is causing a permanent loss of purchasing power of old age pensioners and retired civil servants.

The cost saving of Bill C-133 is worth noting. According to the figures supplied by the Treasury Board, Bill C-133 will save the Government $60 million in 1983 and about $105 million in 1984. Do you know what that amounts to, Mr. Speaker? It amounts to $4 a taxpayer in 1983 and $7 a taxpayer in 1984. It would cost retirees an average of $400 in 1983 and $700 in 1984, 1985, 1986, 1987 and every other year until that retiree dies. That is what this Bill means. Anyone on the other side who thinks this Bill is for only a two-year period, and anyone who is telling people, constituents or otherwise, that this Bill is to be for only two years, is at best, and putting it most charitably, pulling the legs of those people. That is the situation in which we find ourselves in this matter.

Someone argued that there is no written contract. Isn't that wonderful, Mr. Speaker? The last refuge of the knaves is that there is no written contract. There is not, Mr. Speaker? There is no written contract? Is the Government saying that it does not have a moral obligation and does not feel bound by its moral obligation as it would if somebody had put it down in writing? Is the statute that we are amending not written? You bet it is, Mr. Speaker. It is part of the statute law of Canada. Are the statements of Ministers of the Crown in the House on this and other occasions, before the Miscellaneous Estimates Committee and before other committees not written and are they not undertakings on which we should be able to rely?

Mr. Wise: What about the Prime Minister's statements?

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Does the Prime Minister's word mean anything?

An Hon. Member: Apparently not.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): There are people in the country who would say that.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): There are many more now.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Many, many more are going to say it.

Mr. Riis: His Party Members will say it.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): I do not want to lay this completely on the Prime Minister. I want to lay the burden for this where it belongs.

• (1150)

Mr. Riis: Where does it belong?

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): It belongs on the Liberal Party which has backed off from the undertakings it gave over the years—

Mr. Darling: With the exception of four.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): —with the exception of four courageous people; and my motion will allow others to join them, so to withdraw the Bill.

Mr. Murphy: We need 50 more Liberals because the Tories will not show up.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): I ask whether the word of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) means anything. What did he say? What have we heard in election campaign after election campaign in Canada? We have heard the essence of the letter he wrote to Mr. Power of the defence component of the PSAC on October 12, 1977. This is what he stated:

I have noted your concern that the indexation of Government pensions be maintained.

It is much more than a concern. Here it is, the Prime Minister at his best:

In our society, pensions provide a means of sharing risk so that we can retire in reasonable security and dignity without fear of the future. Protecting pensions from inflation by indexing them to increases in the cost of living should be an integral part of our pension schemes.

And it was, in all of them. He went on to state:

Indexing does not give pensioners an increasingly larger share of our economy's production, that is, more money to buy things that they could not earlier afford. Rather, indexing merely enables pensioners to maintain, roughly, their same standard of living.

That was a statement of simple justice, applied to them all. He went on to state:

Even a modest rate of inflation destroys, at a devastating rate, the buying power of people on fixed incomes.

The Prime Minister is a marvellous wordsmith. Pensioners are out of the workforce and cannot bargain or strike for larger pensions. That is the truth. They are not part of a bargaining unit, whether public or private. Therefore, they must look to others to protect them, and those people are here in this Parliament. That is why we are here.

"They are not the cause of inflation", the Prime Minister said. That is recognition of the truth. They are not the cause of inflation, yet the Government is putting senior citizens, retired public servants and others—

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): And their widows.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): —and their widows in the trenches of its fight against inflation.

Finally, the Prime Minister said that these pensioners are the victims of inflation. To quote him exactly, he said "they are its victims", and he is right.

Then came the clincher which was meant to convince Mr. Power and everyone who received the letter that the leader of the Government was a compassionate man leading a compassionate Party which was thoughtful about those senior citizens. Mr. Speaker, what was the clincher? This is what he stated:

> We have an obligation to protect them.

He did not say that the obligation had to be in writing. He did not have to tell anyone that it had been discussed over the years and settled that there would be no unilateral change in pensions without consultation.

There cannot be one right-thinking Member in the House of Commons who honestly believes that the Government has the right to ride roughshod, without so much as a "fare-thee-well", over any person out of the workforce, whether that person is a Public Service pensioner or anyone else. That is the issue—trust. Do not let the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray) hide behind the weasel words that there is nothing in writing. What a shameful position that is for him to take!

I do not argue that the pension plans of public servants ought not to be examined with other pension systems to ensure that there is justice, but I do not believe that, in order to build one's own house, one should take the bricks from the house of someone else. But that is what is happening today.

As long as there is breath in me, I intend to fight what I believe to be iniquitous legislation and I am proud that my Party joins me in this battle today.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Thacker: How many tens of millions for the Hilton Hotel in Windsor?

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): One should consider the amount of money that the Government has spilled—

Mr. Tobin: Spill some my way.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): —and the contracts that it states it cannot break. I was reminded by a retired public servant today that the Government did break the contract with its public servants or retired people. However, the Government says: "We cannot break the contract with Judd Buchanan concerning that parkland out in Banff. We cannot do that; that is a sacred contract. That is an agreement we cannot touch; but, of course, we can deal with the public servants." By golly, that is a written agreement, that is right.

A letter written to the Editor of the Ottawa Citizen presented the case as well as it could ever be presented, and I will read it. It states:

> The refusal to honour indexing commitments for public servants would reduce the government deficit by less than $60 million in the present fiscal year (based on an average contribution per pensioner of approximately $450 less income tax). That is a substantial sum, but placed against a budget deficit of $23 billion, it will not do much to reduce inflation.
> What is really at stake is public trust and confidence in the government. While it may be politically opportune for the government to make public servants and public service pensioners "whipping boys" to divert attention from much more serious matters, the question is, who will be next? Will the Government decide to default on other contract commitments?
> In the conduct of affairs, whether they be public or private, the "broader principle" is that there must be some rules for the game. Neither governments nor individuals should be allowed to change the rules to fit personal convenience. In that direction lies chaos and anarchy.

If every Member is present when the House votes on Bill C-133, it will pass. However, it can at least be delayed in order to consider the case appropriately as part of pension considerations as a whole in the country. My motion to delay for only six months is to allow for that appropriate discussion to take place. As I believe it is morally wrong for us to attack pensioners, I also believe it is morally wrong for us not to allow that consultation to take place.

Much has been made of the position in which the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans) finds himself, and he finds himself in a pretty bad position as a result of loyalty to his Party. I suggest that he would not be in such a bad position if he and Hon. Members opposite would join to support this motion. I am confident that we will be joined by the Hon. Member for Ottawa West (Mr. Francis); I am confident the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) will stand against it; I am confident that the Hon. Member for Hull (Mr. Isabelle) will stand against it; I am confident the Hon. Member for Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke (Mr. Hopkins) will stand against it. I am confident of that. It does not detract at all from the principle of the Bill if other Members also stand against it. It is reasonable.

• (1200)

The Hon. Member for Don Valley West (Mr. Bosley) not a Member for the National Capital area, said in the House the other day that it was appropriate that this matter be integrated into the overall pension review, and I believe that that is so. This matter has not been debated or dealt with as merely a matter for the National Capital Region. I invite the public, as I invite my colleagues, to review the list of speakers at second reading, at committee stage and in our debate at report stage yesterday and in our debate today. They will find when they read it that the speakers against this bill are not confined to the National Capital Region because public service pensioners, the people who are concerned about their pensions, are not confined to the National Capital Region. They will find that speakers from every Province in Canada spoke against this Bill.

I suggest, with respect, that there must be some people over there who would like the opportunity for sober second thought. I think we do have an obligation here; I believe that firmly. We have an obligation to look after the disadvantaged in society, wherever they are. We have an obligation not to distort the position of any group in society, whoever they may be, and there have been a great many distortions in this debate.

I ask my friends in the House to set aside the question of whether or not they are going to be dealing with Bill C-133. I would like to suggest that they would not be dealing with Bill C-133, but would be addressing the question in my motion, that this Bill and its consideration be delayed, that the appropriate consultation take place. Lord knows there are groups that want to do it, that would have liked the opportunity not to have this sprung on them in a budget, and that want to do the right thing in the process that ought to exist between the governors and the governed.

It should be possible to consult and see if on something of such importance there could be a consensus. I think this issue demands that and I invite all my friends, not just those who spoke on the other side of the House, but men like the Liberal Whip who has served many years with distinction in another occupation before coming here, to consider how important consultation is, and therefore how important this motion is.

This motion is not going to delay dealing with this Bill today. If it were dealt with affirmatively, that consultation would take place. The Bill is still there. It is important that this happen. It is just simple, plain justice. That is as plain, as simple and as succinct as I can put it.

I ask my friends on the other side of the House to think the same way. Do not rely on that little argument of "no written agreement". Nobody buys that. It is so patently dishonest it stinks. I say to my friends on the other side, if, after the kind of consideration that ought to apply to Public Service pensions as well as to others, legislation comes forward in the broad sense that would not attack one group for the sake of another, then that legislation may very well be supportable. But this legislation is not. It is confiscatory. It is a tax on seniors. It is dishonest and it ought not to pass this House.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Before recognizing any other Hon. Member the Chair could perhaps be allowed at this time to clarify the matter raised by the Hon. Member for Western Arctic, the Hon. Member for Yukon and others with respect to the seconder of the motion made by the President of the Treasury Board.

I should first of all draw to the attention of the House that our Standing Order 49(1) reads as follows:

All motions shall be in writing and seconded.

Standing Orders do not provide for the seconder necessarily to be a Minister of the Crown.

Further to that, the Chair has in its hands precedents which clearly establish that on a number of occasions private Members, Parliamentary Secretaries—in other words, Hon. Members other than Ministers of the Crown—have from time to time moved motions presented by the Government. One of the most recent examples of this practice occurred on November 18, 1982, and I refer to Votes and Proceedings for that date, where the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) was seconded by the Hon. Member for London East (Mr. Turner) when she moved that the Bill be read a second time.

The Chair also has a number of other examples. In fact, I have one in which a member of the Opposition moved a motion made by a Minister of the Crown on at least one occasion. Therefore, it is the Chair's considered opinion that the motion, as put, was in order and that the debate should proceed as usual.

Mr. Gauthier: On the point of order, Mr. Speaker—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Is the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier rising on this point of order or on another point of order?

Mr. Gauthier: On this point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): With all due respect, the Chair has ruled.

Mr. Gauthier: Twice you said a Member of the House may "move" and I think you meant to say "seconded".

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): It could well be that I may have unintentionally said that but I shall clarify. With respect to Government Orders only Ministers of the Crown may move such motions; but any Member of the House may second such a motion. That is what I intended to say. I thank the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier.

Mr. Sid Parker (Kootenay East-Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, commencing my remarks I might address the amendment put forward by the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) which would in fact give a six months' hoist to the Bill so that consultation could take place. While this may be commendable and we will support that amendment to allow that kind of consultation to take place, I want to make it very clear that regardless of what takes place we oppose this Bill in the strongest terms possible. We do not agree with the concept of what is taking place and there is no way we can support this Bill at any time, whether now or six months down the road.

I want to talk about the hypocrisy of the Conservative Party for putting forward a motion with such a plea, because less than six months ago that same Party supported the Government which had carried out no consultation with the workers in the Public Service. Those are workers who in many cases are lower paid than workers in other areas. There was no consultation with railway workers either. Yet the Conservatives came into this House and supported legislation which broke those contracts. Not only were they in writing, they had been negotiated through free collective bargaining. The Conservatives say they believe in the concept of free collective bargaining. In that instance, however, they came into this House and voted in favour of reducing the wages of public servants and railway workers across Canada. It is the height of hypocrisy when they stand in the House today and say they will not stand for it. They have stood for it, and that should be made abundantly clear. I remember an election campaign when the Liberals were using the slogan "A leader must be a leader". Trudeau, with his gunslinger image—

• (1210)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. I must draw to the attention of the Hon. Member and all Hon. Members that it is against the rules to mention another Member by proper name. A Member should refer to his colleagues by their portfolio, the office they occupy or the name of their constituency. Members may not do indirectly what is not allowed directly.

Mr. Parker: I stand corrected. Our Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), with his gunslinger image, our Prime Minister, the tough guy. This legislation makes it clear who the Prime Minister is getting tough with—the retired public servants, Old Age Security recipients and families with children. That is not a tough guy; that is a schoolyard bully.

The Government says it will bring about economic recovery by picking on the poor. With this legislation, it is playing Robin Hood in reverse. It is attacking retired female public servants who have always received low pensions, retired long-service veterans who have served their country well and retired police officers. It must be clear that this is a real attack, not just a public relations ploy.

Retired public servants face a 10 per cent cut in their standard of living. To some, that is pretty important. As of 1982, average pensions were $6,900, pensions of widows $3,200 and pensions of new retirees $8,100. That is not an awful lot of money. A real 10 per cent cut in living standards will push many of these people into poverty. This is especially true because there is no guarantee on prices.

Canadian Pacific raises its rates, energy prices are going up, as is home heating fuel and gasoline. The Government will try to argue that its programs will protect these people, but it cannot deny that many pensioners will fall below the poverty line.

A pension of $8,200 might sound good to many Canadians, but we must remember that that is an average. For every one receiving a pension above that, there is someone receiving a pension below it. This legislation will do a great deal of damage. No way can it be called a public relations ploy. It is an attack on retired public servants in the same way that Bill C-124 was an attack on working public servants.

I have estimated that railway workers in my riding will each lose in the area of $3,000. It is clear that the purpose of the Government is deliberately to try to reduce the wages of workers and their living standard. It is doing this for two reasons. It believes that if wages are lower, we will export more. Also if wages are lower, there will be higher profits and business will invest more. In other words, the problems of unemployment, inflation and recession will be fought on the backs of the working people and the poor.

What about the well-to-do in this country, the many people who earn over $100,000 and do not pay a cent in income tax? What about the suggestion in the June budget that some investors might not have to pay tax on returns that are lower than the cost of living? What about those companies that have taken billions of dollars out of this country over the years? How does all of this compare with the people this Bill deals with?

Bill C-133 is a tax measure. The effect on Government revenue is the same as a special tax aimed at retired people. The Government could not get away with calling it a tax measure, so it calls it an anti-inflation measure. This Bill will cause more, not less, unemployment. Low-income people spend their money and that creates jobs in the communities, particularly in small businesses. Government grants to business do not create jobs unless business decides to invest. Why would any business invest when it is not now operating all of its equipment?

In the riding of Kootenay East-Revelstoke, with railway workers on the six and five program, public servants reduced to six and five, municipal and provincial governments getting in on the six and five program, as well as the tremendous number of lay-offs throughout the riding, consumer spending will go down and there will be more unemployment. The Minister has indicated that this measure will create employment. It is not creating employment but unemployment, and that is occurring in areas that can ill afford it.

There are 700 railway workers in Revelstoke. Because of Bill C-124, each will lose $3,000. That is $2,100,000 that will be lost in that community alone; lost to the small stores, car dealers, home builders and so on. Cutbacks in pensions will have the same effect, only it will not be concentrated in one community but spread right across Canada.

There is a more direct way in which this Bill will cost jobs. With lower pensions, fewer people will retire. Those who have retired may think about re-entering the workforce as their standard of living falls. This will mean fewer jobs available, particularly for untrained young people who make up such a large part of our unemployed.

Just as serious is the damage being done to the morale of those public servants who serve the people of Canada. These people believed they had a contract and were assured of a decent life in their retirement. After this legislation, they will never again trust the Government.

The President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray) states that there is no contract. He knows full well that when an extra 1 per cent a year was being taken from public servants that that was a contract. They were getting the money and they were expected to deliver. The President of the Treasury Board now has the audacity to stand in this House and say it was not a contract. He did not tell the House that an advisory committee had been set up which was supposed to be available to advise on pension changes and so on. Neither the President of the Treasury Board nor the Government had the decency even to talk to the advisory committee to find out their thoughts with regard to changes they were contemplating.

Mr. Gray: I certainly did meet them.

Mr. Parker: The Minister says he certainly did. Representatives of various groups came before us. I specifically asked whether they were a part of that advisory committee. They said they were and that they had had no consultation. Therefore, I can only say to the President of the Treasury Board that from the information we have from Committee, that is not so.

• (1220)

It was very interesting at the report stage to hear the Conservatives complaining about the Government breaking contracts. I could not believe what I was hearing when they talked about the importance of contracts and the need to keep those contracts. It was the Conservatives who set the precedent by breaking contracts. Do they really believe the Government would have broken this contract so easily if the Conservatives had not gotten away with breaking contracts with their own people? Where were the Conservatives when the clerks had their contract broken after they had been driven to go on strike for the first time in their history? They were right there, lined up behind the Government saying, "Yes, sir, right on".

The Leader of the Conservative Party (Mr. Clark) said the Government had not gone far enough with Bill C-124. That was the only complaint. I wonder if the Government has gone far enough now to make the Conservatives happy? Are the Conservatives happy now that the Government is not only rolling back the wages of workers but is stealing their savings? Pensions, after all, are nothing more than savings. They are deferred wages. Instead of receiving the money now, workers agree to have it put away for their retirement. They might just as easily take the money and use it to buy Canada Savings Bonds. With this legislation, the Government is stealing their savings. It is the same as retroactive wage controls. It is saying, "We are going to cut your salary yesterday so you cannot save much money". There is no difference between this and having the Government confiscate savings bonds which someone has put away for his retirement.

The Government is arguing that it is not the same, that the program is being paid for out of taxes. From presentations in Committee, I do not believe that. I believe that is a phony, trumped up excuse the Government trotted out to help sell this program. That will not wash. If the Bill is just an anti-inflation program, then the Government will have to admit that it is stealing money from pensioners and breaking contracts. If it is a program to correct deficits in the pension plan, why did they not go to the unions and representatives to discuss it? The reason is that there is nothing wrong with the pension plan and under an expert challenge before unbiased judges, there is no way the Government could prove there is.

Beyond the fact that the Bill is immoral, it is an action which would not even be legal if it were taken by the private sector. The CLC told the Committee that the Canadian Superintendent of Insurance will normally reject amendments to private pension plans which reduce benefits earned prior to the date of amendment. This Bill would not even be accepted by the standards which judge private pension plans.

This Government has made a lot of promises over the years. The Prime Minister told the Pension Conference in 1981 that it had to protect pensioners against inflation, that without this protection their incomes would dwindle. Last year the President of Treasury Board said his Government was dedicated to maintaining indexing of Public Service pensions. That was less than a year ago. In 1977, the Prime Minister said in a letter to Public Service unions that pensioners were not the cause of inflation and Government had a duty to protect them. The Government lied in each of these statements. It lied in the same way it did in 1974 when it ran an election campaign against wage controls.

Like all schoolyard bullies, our Prime Minister is afraid of the truth, and the Conservatives are just as bad for helping the Government get away with this. Why did the Conservatives not speak out when the Government began to break contracts? Why did they not even bother to show up for the Committee which was discussing this Bill? The Conservatives were entitled to have seven Members on that Committee but many times there were as few as two present.

Why did the Conservative House Leader promise to help the Government pass this Bill on November 16? It is a matter of record in Hansard that the Conservative House Leader in this House stated that if the Government brought the Bill forward, they would see it was speedily dealt with. Both Liberals and Conservatives have a lot to answer for in this contemptible legislation and, Gallup polls or not, we will make sure that people remember this in the next election.

I feel it is a sad day for this House, Mr. Speaker, that we have to deal with this kind of legislation and take up the time of this House to deprive Public Service pensioners, retirees, families with small children, many of them having unemployment problems as well, and Old Age Security recipients. We should instead be dealing with the major problem in Canada, which is unemployment. We are not going to create one job with the kind of program which the President of the Treasury Board is talking about in this legislation; make no mistake about that.

With respect to the railways, Mr. Ian Sinclair of Canadian Pacific was used as our chief spokesman on the six and five program, and the day after the Government adopted the recommendations of that group which expounded on this six and five track the Government got on, that group announced lay-offs right across Canada. After literally saving hundreds of millions of dollars in wages which they should be paying out, they announced lay-offs across Canada. It has in fact created more lay-offs than employment.

[Translation]

Mr. René Cousineau (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Mr. Speaker, I cannot say that I am particularly happy about speaking to Bill C-133, a very controversial piece of legislation which has raised considerable debate on both sides of the House and, I may add, has perhaps been misunderstood by the Canadian people. This Bill modifies the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act. Since the Bill passed second reading, my office has been deluged by telephone calls and mail. There is a great deal of discontent, not only among pensioners but also among public servants and their families. There is also a lot of dissatisfaction among Hon. Members on both sides of the House, Mr. Speaker, and I must say that I personally am not terribly happy about this legislation. However, the fact remains that life is not always a matter of doing what one wants to do but what one feels one must do. Before making a decision, a Member of Parliament, whether he is on the opposition side or the government side, and whatever his party affiliation, must always weigh the pros and cons of the legislation or program under consideration. Will it be detrimental or beneficial to his constituents? Will it be beneficial to all his constituents? Will it be beneficial or detrimental to Canadians?

The role a Member has to play is basically threefold: First of all: A Member represents his constituents and must always keep their welfare in mind, whether they are employed or unemployed, young or not so young, retired or still working. Second: Parliament is Canada's legislative assembly, and a Member must also bear in mind the interests of Canadians living beyond the boundaries of his constituency. And last, Mr. Speaker, but not least, a Member belongs to a political party, to a team. Of course, some members of the team will differ in their views, but I respect the opinions of others just as I expect them to respect mine.

Mr. Speaker, I believe in team spirit. All my life I have belonged to some kind of team, in sports or as a member of service clubs. I also feel that loyalty to one's leader, one's colleagues and to fellow members is very important, and that is all part and parcel of my list, Mr. Speaker.

In the richest countries in the world, the great industrial democracies, 30 million people are out of work, and in Canada, 1,500,000 are unemployed. It is a national and international tragedy, and we are living in difficult times, Mr. Speaker. Here in Canada, we did not want to live with the status quo. Something had to give, and hard times demand decisions. This Government has acted responsibly by making a decision in the best interests of the Canadian people, and taking specific action to enforce that decision. We must not forget that. The government made this decision on June 28, 1982, when the then Minister of Finance asked for a two-year national effort in order to bring this country out of a recession situation with 12 per cent inflation and put it on the road to economic recovery by bringing inflation down to 6 per cent. The main objectives were to reduce inflation and interest rates, to increase investment and to create jobs.

For the first time since 1977, the rate of increase in the price of food in Canada is down below 10 per cent. Statistics made public on December 31, 1982, show that food prices have gone up 7.7 per cent in 1982, which is an indication that we are doing well in this fight against inflation.

Interest rates in early 1982 stood at anywhere between 18 and 24 per cent. Last week, on January 19, they were down to 12 per cent. There again we are doing well, but nobody is rushing to congratulate the Government. People did severely criticize the Government when interest rates were very high, but now that these rates have come down significantly, it seems that the Government had nothing to do with that.

With respect to increasing investments, I would suggest there is a psychological barrier. No one seems willing to take a chance, yet that is the key to success in any endeavour. Mr. Speaker, we must have confidence in ourselves, in our neighbours and in the potential of our country. Bill C-124 was the starting signal in our fight against the recession, against inflation, and against unemployment. That was the legislation on compensation restraint in the public sector, including Crown corporations. This Bill does provide for an increase, not a decrease: 6 per cent more on January 1, 1983 and 5 per cent more on January 1, 1984. When times get hard a responsible government has to take harsh decisions which are likely to alienate the public, but we are convinced that Canadians prefer and will always prefer any policy to the lack of policy which is the hallmark of Members of the Official Opposition.

It has been stated that half a million people will be affected by Bill C-124. Capping the increase at 6 per cent will enable us to recoup $250 million, not to mention another $550 million in 1984 to create jobs. We are asking public servants to tighten their belts a little in the next two years to help needy Canadians and others who are anxious to work. But we need money to do that and it has to come from somewhere: either we increase the deficit or we raise taxes. The Government has chosen to cap indexation and set a ceiling on public sector salaries to give an example to the private sector, keeping in mind the fact that we must reduce inflation and be more competitive on international markets. I have already pointed out that either the deficit or the taxes would have to be increased but whose taxes Mr. Speaker? In the city of Gatineau in my own constituency, the world wide recession resulted in the loss of over six weeks of work at the CIP company which has 1425 employees. Newspaper production was reduced during that six week period. On December 7, the Maclaren company announced that its plant would close down for 12 days with 300 to 350 employees being temporarily laid off. The Thurso Pulp and Paper Company has announced a plant close-down which will stop production for five weeks, and this for the fifth time in 1983; 250 employees are temporarily laid off. Erco Industries Limited in Buckingham announced 25 permanent lay-offs and Vilas Industries Limited of Thurso, a furniture manufacturer, 125. These people who have worked 5, 10, 15, 20 and perhaps even 25 years are now unemployed. They have exhausted their unemployment insurance benefits and must rely on welfare. It is not easy for someone who has worked in a plant for 15 years to go on welfare because he is no longer entitled to unemployment insurance.

On January 17, 1983, Masonite Canada Ltd. announced that 130 employees in its plywood division would be laid off around mid-April. How many other people have been and will be affected when these 130 plywood employees become unemployed in April? As a second measure, we have Bill C-131 to amend the Old Age Security Act. The basic pension was $246.92 as of October 1, 1982, and it was increased on January 1, 1983, to $250.62. The principle of universality is therefore maintained, and pensions were increased by 6 per cent instead of 11 per cent because these people have other sources of income. As for the income supplement, the indexation will be doubled. The benefits of those who receive part or the total amount of the supplement will be indexed at double the rate. People 65 and older who have other sources of income will not have their pensions reduced in January. They will receive 50 cents less in February, 50 cents less in March or $29 less for the entire year in 1983, and by the end of 1984, are expected to have received $52 less. About 1.1 million people should be affected at the end of the year, and this will make $30 million available for job creation the first year and over $50 million the second year. To create jobs, maybe not for the same people but for the children of these people who are 65 or over and perhaps for their grandchildren. To create jobs for people from Vilas who are now unemployed because of the shutdown, because of the slump on the market. Jobs for 130 employees at Plywood where in April they are all going to be laid off permanently, because the factory is being closed. We have therefore asked our pioneers to contribute once more to the economy of their country. We are asking them once more to make sacrifices, and I am sure that although they are probably not very happy about this situation, and it certainly is a bitter pill to swallow, they are willing to go along with it, because helping others has been part of their whole lives. Based as always on the principle that all Canadians have an obligation to make some sacrifices in order to help this country on the way to economic recovery, we have Bill C-132 as a third tool for fighting inflation and creating jobs.

Briefly, the Bill says that people whose needs are the most urgent will get more and others will get less. I feel that here, the spirit of charity and of sharing should prevail. Mr. Speaker, we must bear in mind the objectives of the 6 and 5 program, which are to bring down inflation, find money to create jobs without having to increase the deficit or increase taxes, bearing in mind the increasing number of bankruptcies in Canada, decreasing corporate profits—a drop of 50 per cent in 1982, salary freezes and even reductions in some companies. Let us not forget that as of December 12, 1982, the Canada Employment Centre in Buckingham registered 3,041 people drawing unemployment insurance benefits, and the CEC in Gatineau, as of January 12, 1983, had 6,418 people on unemployment insurance, not including those who have exhausted their benefits and are now on welfare. The 6 and 5 program also applies to pensions in the public sector.

Mr. Speaker, I do not like Bill C-133 today any more than I liked the Government's statement on June 28, 1982 regarding its intention to cap indexing of pensions. Today, however, the problem has changed because the situation has changed. From the outset, I have expressed my doubts as to the legality of the Government's intentions in wanting to manipulate the portion paid by the pensioner in order to provide for an indexed pension. The question was, did the Government have the right to legislate in this area, since the money belonged to the pensioners? That has been argued since the very beginning. In fact, the arguing goes on today, Mr. Speaker. Those who are opposed to capping indexation of retirement benefits argue that they have paid for full indexation by contributing 1 per cent of their salary in addition to the 6.5 per cent for the basic pension, both contributions being matched by the direct contribution by the Government as employer, a total of 15 per cent.

This direct Government contribution is paid for by all Canadians through their taxes, and this is something we must not forget. Nor should we forget the contribution of those who are now unemployed but were paying taxes when they were employed full time. We must not forget their contribution.

Therefore, it is wrong to say that public servants have paid for full indexation. Public servants or retired public servants who keep repeating this are wrong, because the Canadian taxpayer has also made a contribution. Ninety per cent of the indexation benefits paid to public service pensioners are currently charged directly to the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada. In other words, paid for by the taxes of all Canadians, taxes paid by people at Villas and Plywood who are going to be laid off in April, by CIP employees who were laid off for a period in 1982. Only 10 per cent of the current indexing benefits comes directly form the supplementary retirement benefits account which receives employee and employer contributions to provide for pension indexation.

The 6 and 5 capping will not affect the indexing charged against employee credits in the supplementary retirement benefits account—that is, coming from direct contributions by employees and by the employer, specifically for indexing. Hence the 0.5 per cent this year, which makes 6.5 per cent, and the 0.5 in 1985, which makes 5.5 per cent.

What the Government is proposing is to cap increases in indexing financed out of general tax revenues for the duration of the restraint period. In other words, taxes paid by businessmen, by all the people I just mentioned, by employees of the Town of Gatineau and of all the municipalities in my riding, taxes paid by the employees of each company, all this tax revenue has helped to pay for the pensions of public servants and the indexing of those pensions.

Mr. Speaker, do not public servants also pay taxes? Of course they do. If they pay taxes, then they have also paid for their indexation. Of course they have. A public servant contributes two amounts, namely, 6.5 per cent for his basic pension and 1 per cent to provide for indexing. The total amount is matched by the government. There are two separate accounts in the name of the public servant. Both accounts bear interest, and public servants are arguing that it is their money. Retired public servants are saying that sufficient funds are being generated by both accounts, but there we have a legal snag. According to law, interest or income from the basic pension fund may not be transferred to the special indexing fund. That is why public servants are accusing the Government of "playing around" with their money. However, without wishing to contradict this statement, since it is their money, the fact remains that by law, no transfers may be made. If we want to proceed with a transfer, we will either have to change the law or, as one of my colleagues suggested, increase individual contributions according to specific recommendations, to prevent the same problem from occurring again.

The other argument, Mr. Speaker, is that the Government had a contractual agreement to pay this indexation, and indeed, I find this very unfortunate, since our retired public servants had already calculated how much they would get and made plans accordingly. As I said before, hard times demand unpleasant decisions, which are not popular but are necessary in the circumstances.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. I apologize for interrupting the Hon. Member, but his allotted time has expired.

[English]

Mr. Parker: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Hon. Member will allow me a question. He touched on the 1 per cent of salary paid for indexing by public servants and claims that it is the taxpayers who back that. Does he recognize the fact that taxpayers also back Canada Savings Bonds? When a commitment is made and people buy a bond, they expect a return. When the pensioner paid 1 per cent for indexing—not partial indexing—he also expects a return.

What is the Hon. Member's rationale for his statements? How can he say, on the one hand, that pensioners should not get that indexing when they have paid for it, but on the other hand that the buyer of the bond should? Would he say it is fair that the Government should take it away from the buyer of the Canada Savings Bond?

[Translation]

Mr. Cousineau: Mr. Speaker, perhaps I could provide some further clarification. I did say that perhaps there was a way to resolve this problem, either by changing the law, so that income or interest is drawn from the basic pension fund, which is one solution, or by increasing individual contributions, and in that case, the B.C. federal contribution would be increased accordingly.

[English]

Mr. Parker: Mr. Speaker, an agreement was made to pay 1 per cent in order to get something in return. Now, without any discussion whatsoever, the Government is going to cut that in half. I know the Hon. Member is trying to say that this is taxpayers' money, but the people who signed this agreement are also taxpayers. If changes are to be made, I am sure the Hon. Member does not think they should be made without consultation or without agreement on both sides. I should like to hear his view on that.

• (1250)

Mr. Cousineau: Mr. Speaker, I deplore the situation just as much as the Hon. Member, but hard times require decisions. We took a decision—the whole package, Bills C-124, C-131, C-132 and C-133. We cannot isolate any of them; that is the reason. I do not like this Bill any more than the Hon. Member does, but the fact remains that when it is a necessity we do what we have to do. This is the way I see it. It is as simple as that.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I have a short question which I should like to put to the Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mr. Cousineau). Having listened to the Hon. Member's comments and his support of the six and five program as it relates to retired public servants, he would presumably also support the idea of having retired personnel, let us say, of the Bank of Canada under the six and five program. Is this something which he would support?

Mr. Cousineau: Mr. Speaker, since this is not a matter under discussion, I do not think I should answer it.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, perhaps I will try putting a different question to the Hon. Member. If someone such as Governor Bouey, who is obviously a strong advocate of restraint and a strong supporter of the six and five program, limited the employees under his jurisdiction, does the Hon. Member not think that would be fair? In other words, retired personnel of the Bank of Canada would be limited to the six and five program, or should they be receiving 11.5 per cent on their pensions?

Mr. Cousineau: Mr. Speaker, I do not think I mentioned the Bank of Canada in my speech. I think we are discussing Bills C-124, C-131, C-132 and C-133—

Mr. Fulton: We are discussing equity.

Mr. Cousineau: —and therefore I do not see how this question can be put.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member a question. The Government, through several of its Ministers and Members, pleaded with the private sector to follow the six and five program. They have stated that the program would not be fully or wholly successful without the private sector following it. In view of this, how does the Liberal Party justify giving its President an increase of 120 per cent?

Mr. Cousineau: Mr. Speaker, we are discussing Bill C-133. I do not understand how my good friend, the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor), with all his experience, could think about asking a question such as that.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. Of course, the Chair does not wish in any way to enter into the debate, but since we are in a trial period under the provisional rules, perhaps I could draw again to the attention of Hon. Members the comments made by Madam Speaker, as reported on page 21873 of Hansard for January 17, 1983. In relation to questions and comments, Madam Speaker said:

> The period is to be reserved for questions and comments about the speech preceding this period. I believe that in this connection, the Chair will probably have to take a stricter approach as far as the principle of relevance is concerned. The Chair has always been fairly flexible in this respect, but when only ten minutes are allowed for debate, it is clear that both the questions and the speech itself must be relevant in the strict sense of the word.

I offer these comments for the reflection of Hon. Members.

Mr. Kristiansen: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): The Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor).

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate that, but the Hon. Member was speaking—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): I apologize to the Hon. Member for Bow River, but the Hon. Member for Kootenay West (Mr. Kristiansen) is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Kristiansen: Mr. Speaker, with respect to the explanation of the new rules which you just gave, can Hon. Members ask questions based on answers given to previous questions? For instance, the Parliamentary Secretary, I believe in answer to a question by the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis), stated that his support for Bill C-133 was based upon his support for the whole package, the principles of the six and five program and of restraint. I think he referred to Bills C-124, C-131, C-132 and C-133. Within the parameter of the new ruling, are subsequent questioners able to ask questions in response to an answer and dealing with the facts brought out in an earlier response of the Member?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): I thank the Hon. Member for his question. As all Hon. Members including himself will appreciate, this is a trial period. It is also a trial period for the Chair, with all the discretion given to it in the application of these provisional procedures.

Again, if I may be allowed, the question and answer period following an Hon. Member's intervention should not be an occasion to bring forward new issues or new aspects of the issue, if I may put it that way, raised in the Hon. Member's speech. The questions and answers should as much as possible, if not strictly speaking, apply to the comments made by the Hon. Member in the course of his speech. Of course, in a sense questions and answers would be part of the time allotted to the Hon. Member, so it would be up to Hon. Members to discipline themselves in this respect. The Chair does not wish at this time to say that questions will or will not be allowed. The best discipline is self-discipline, and I appeal to Hon. Members to adhere to the spirit of the report.

Again I apologize, but the Chair is now put in a position where it should normally close the question period. Points of order were raised in connection with the Hon. Member's speech, therefore, it is my understanding and my intention to take these points of order as part of the ten-minute period allowed for questions, comments and answers. Therefore I recognize the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) to make his speech.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. With respect, I think we should have this point clarified. If we may only ask questions about what the Member said during his speech, what is the use of asking questions? We have heard what he said. Surely if we are talking about the six and five program we can apply it beyond just what the Hon. Member said. Otherwise the Member will simply repeat what he said before and there will be no purpose in the question period at all.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): I appreciate the comments of the Hon. Member for Bow River. Debate on third reading is rather far-ranging. It is not as strictly limited as it would be, for example, at report stage. This is a matter for Hon. Members to decide. They are in the best position to decide how far-ranging they really want the debate to be, but I suppose questions could be allowed on the broad principle of the Bill. However it is the privilege of the Hon. Member who is receiving the question to answer or not to answer. The Chair is not the best arbiter of that.

Mr. Nickerson: May I call it one o'clock, Your Honour?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Is it agreed that we call it one o'clock?

[Translation]

It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this afternoon.

GOVERNMENT ANNUITIES

RETURN TO INVESTORS

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, as the Government is well aware, there has not been an increase in the yield on Government annuities, I believe, since 1976, despite assurances by the Government that increases would be reviewed from time to time to reflect the ongoing increases in the cost of living. This problem has been under study by the Department of Employment and Immigration for some years, and still no decision has been made.

The people who invested in these annuities did so in all honesty, and I believe they have the right now to demand that the Government should at last take the necessary measures to introduce some relief for annuity holders, who purchased Government annuities in good faith, to supplement their incomes and retirement funds.

An over-all review of the annuity situation, as well as a review of other kinds of Government investment portfolios, are long overdue and badly needed. I believe that low yielding annuities purchased some 25 to 30 years ago should be redeemed at full value to eliminate this unfortunate problem. It is my sincere hope that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde), in his new budget expected soon, will bring forth the necessary solution and legislation to do just that.

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND SUPPORT FOR CANAGREX LEGISLATION

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Madam Speaker, most Canadians are aware that the potato industry has provided my home province of Prince Edward Island with the livelihood that has made our Province famous. Prince Edward Island is blessed with a climate and soil well suited to agricultural production. Service industries, processing industries, and retailers alike, are dependent on the agricultural industry. The success of agriculture has a great influence on Islanders and so is of great importance to me.

Many months ago Bill C-85, a Bill of great importance to farmers across the country, was introduced to the House. This Bill will allow the establishment of a Crown Corporation called Canagrex. All of Prince Edward Island's Members of Parliament are aware of the outstanding support shown for this Bill by such organizations based in P.E.I. as the P.E.I. Potato Producers Association, and Cavendish Farms, which have come out in favour of the passage of the Canagrex Bill. As well, P.E.I's executive members of organizations such as the National Farmers' Union and the Horticultural Council have indicated their support for this legislation.

It is my sincere hope that the Members of this House will show their support of the agricultural industry on Prince Edward Island through strong support of Bill C-85 when it again returns to the House.

INDUSTRY AND LABOUR ADJUSTMENT PROGRAM

SUGGESTED DESIGNATION OF ERIE CONSTITUENCY COMMUNITIES

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Madam Speaker, some communities have been more hard hit by the effects of the recession than others. Many towns which have only one major industry are devastated when that business shuts down. The Government has made provision to assist such areas under ILAP, the Industry and Labour Adjustment Program.

As the Member for Erie I am acutely concerned about certain areas in my constituency and the regional municipality of Niagara, which are suffering from massive unemployment due to slowing down and the closing of key industries. With unemployment estimated to be 19 per cent in some areas of my riding, I feel it would be very appropriate that these communities be aided under the Industry and Labour Adjustment Program. If only 12 areas have been designated so far under ILAP, surely there must be funds remaining for distribution to communities such as these in my riding and others.

When I look at regions with less unemployment than Erie riding receiving funds under ILAP, it raises doubts as to the equitable distribution of money available through this Program. It has become increasingly evident by the placement of ILAP designations that ILAP is being misused and seems to be little more than a promotion scheme. I say either the Program must be directed where the need is, or it should be dropped altogether before we become totally disillusioned with what appears to be blatant patronage.

THE ADMINISTRATION

ESTIMATING SIZE OF DEFICIT

Mr. Paul E. McRae (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Madam Speaker, many economists differentiate between short-term deficits and longer term or structural deficits, the latter being far more dangerous than the former. Thus when a national deficit is adjusted to remove the effects of a recession, we can determine whether the deficit is short-term or structural and whether it is deemed dangerous or not.

A study done by a group of economists at the University of Toronto, Institute of Policy Analysis, indicated that, when one applies the no recession scenario to the federal Government's accounts, one finds a small federal surplus in this fiscal year, indicating that our federal deficit is short-term.

According to figures supplied to The New York Times by Morgan Guaranteed Trust, a no recession scenario would show a deficit of $60 billion. Other estimates run as high as $90 billion, "a figure deemed dangerous." Given the nature of our deficit short-term, there is no reason, therefore, that Canada's federal short-term deficit should prevent expansionary measures.

POLITICAL PARTIES

ATTENDANCE OF PROGRESSIVE CONSERVATIVE MEMBERS DURING PENSION LEGISLATION VOTE

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, the House will recall that last year the Conservatives held up the House of Commons for 15 days on behalf of their friends in the multinational oil companies. And during the course of the last year they have held up the passage of Canagrex on behalf of their friends in the multinational grain companies.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deans: Last August the Conservatives hurried with obscene haste to support the Government in its six and five legislation, and in the process voted against an amendment put by us which would have protected the pensions of senior citizens who worked for the Government.

On Thursday last we gave the Conservatives an opportunity to stop the Government dead in its tracks as it attempted to pass legislation which affects senior citizens and families all across the country. They, however, could only muster 15 minutes of support for senior citizens. Yesterday we had a vote in the House and, had the Tories been present, we could have defeated the legislation which most affects senior citizen pensioners and the civil servants, but they had only 54 Members present, just slightly more than half of them. I want to say to you and to the House, Madam Speaker, that it is clear to see where the Tory priorities lie.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

ENERGY

PRICE OF GASOLINE

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Madam Speaker, it is difficult to follow a comedy routine, but I will do my best.

In 1980 the Liberals promised the Canadian people lower energy prices. Since that promise, gasoline prices have risen 17 times, adding some 84 cents a gallon to the price of gas. Canadians are now paying $2 a gallon, or 44 cents a litre, for gasoline.

Yesterday the Minister of Energy, Mr. Chrétien, tried to blame provincial sales taxes for high-gas prices. That is nonsense. In Ontario the provincial sales tax is 15 per cent while the federal sales tax is 35 per cent of the price consumers pay. What bothers us on this side is that while Americans are paying less because OPEC prices have dropped and consumers everywhere welcome that, the Minister of State (International Trade) (Mr. Regan) is quoted in Saudi Arabia as saying, "If the price of international crude oil should go down, Canada would face very serious problems."

On behalf of the consumers of Canada we demand that the price of gasoline in Canada, which has followed world prices up, follow world prices down just as quickly as OPEC prices decrease.

INDUSTRY

REQUEST FOR RECONSIDERATION OF NORTH SHORE AS SITE FOR PÉCHINEY ALUMINUM MILL

Mr. André Maltais (Manicouagan): Madam Speaker, the House is aware that at the present time, the North Shore is going through one of the most difficult times in its history.

I should therefore like to ask the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Lumley) to reconsider the choice of Bécancour as the site for the Péchiney aluminum refinery. Madam Speaker, I wonder whether instead of investing in the construction of new facilities at Bécancour, we should not ask the Province of Quebec to invite Péchiney to establish its refinery on the North Shore where all services already exist and where we have accommodation for over 8,000 people in Port Cartier and Sept-Îles. Considering the availability of large quantities of cheap energy and the existence of deep-water ports on the North Shore, I think Quebec would do well to urge Péchiney to reconsider its choice of site and opt for the North Shore instead. This industry would revitalize the region, which certainly deserves the assistance of both provincial and federal governments. Madam Speaker, it would be unreasonable, to say the least, to spend millions of dollars in the Bécancour area on site preparation and access roads, when on the North Shore, the same facilities already exist, were paid for ten years ago and are not being used at the present time. I would therefore ask the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion to get in touch with his Quebec counterpart to make sure that we—

EFFECT OF GOVERNMENT POLICIES

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills): Madam Speaker, with two million Canadians out of work and 500,000 Canadians on welfare, the breakdown of Liberal economic policy has produced a crisis of fear and despair in Canada. The social disruption, broken homes, alcoholism, and acute anxiety caused by Liberal economic policies have moved concerned churchmen to express their indignation on moral grounds at a deliberate policy of placing monetary considerations above the welfare of individuals.

The depression which we must endure is totally unnecessary for Canada. It was caused by years of deliberate Liberal Party policies, such as high deficits, inflation, centralization and state control. The Liberal Party policy of "eat, drink and be merry for tomorrow you die", is now coming true.

On behalf of the hundreds of thousands of unemployed Canadians who are not, in the words of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), "skiing at Whistler" or "snorkeling in the Caribbean", this Party urges the Government to cease frittering away time in a vindictive pursuit of old people, widows and mothers, and to come up with effective and realistic policies to restore confidence and provide jobs.

PENSIONS

PROPOSED ESTABLISHMENT OF REGISTERED PENSION ACCOUNT

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parkdale-High Park): Madam Speaker, I wish to make a statement pursuant to Standing Order 21. Although Canada's pension system is one of the best in the world it still requires some improvement. One of the major problems is that many pensioners receive an insufficient income. Many live below the poverty line.

One of the changes proposed in the Green Paper on pensions is the introduction of a Registered Pension Account, RPA, an account wherein savings could be locked for use during retirement. This would be one means of ensuring that increased access to tax assistance is used as intended, that is, for retirement savings. This change, the report points out, would create an improved vehicle for individual retirement savings which, in conjunction with the vesting and portability measures, would enable individuals to have truly portable pensions.

During one's lifetime the average individual changes his or her job more than once. Because of this, improving the portability of pensions is of the utmost importance.

I urge that the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) accelerate the establishment of a parliamentary committee to look into pension reform. I also urge the committee to consider seriously the establishment of a Registered Pension Account as a viable proposal to improve the pension system.

Madam Speaker, we hear heckling from Members of the NDP. They are not interested in pension reform. We on this side of the House are.

BANK OF CANADA

INCREASE IN EMPLOYEE PENSIONS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Madam Speaker, where does Governor Gerald Bouey of the Bank of Canada really stand on the Government's six and five program? Does he really believe in it? Does he support it? He presumably advised the Government to proceed with it. He says he supports it, but his actions betray his true position. One would expect him to follow the six and five program with regard to his own retired personnel if he really believed in the six and five program, but he obviously realizes that the program is a farce, since, while most retired Canadians must live within a 6 per cent hike in Old Age Security benefits this year, the pensions of 484 former employees of the Bank of Canada have been raised by 11.5 per cent, fully covering the rate of inflation and more. It would appear that Mr. Bouey has now joined the rest of Canada and has pulled even his support of the six and five program.

Perhaps we should ask Mr. Ian Sinclair and his blue chip committee to approach Mr. Bouey to check if Bouey, too, along with them, believes the six and five program is not the avenue the Governor should pursue, which would hopefully encourage the Government to pull its six and five legislation currently before the House.

ENERGY

EAST COAST OFFSHORE EXPLORATION—EFFECT OF REDUCED CRUDE OIL PRICES

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, perhaps I could direct my question either to the Prime Minister or to the Minister of Finance.

Some Hon. Members: There he is!

Mr. Andre: Oh, here comes the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Bolt the door behind you!

Mr. Crosbie: Good old swinging door!

Mr. Hees: Close the door, John!

Mr. Andre: During his recent junket to Saudi Arabia, the Minister of State for International Trade was quoted as saying that a drop in world crude oil prices would have disastrous consequences for the Canadian economy. He could have been thinking about a number of things, but he was undoubtedly concerned about the effect of dropping crude oil prices on offshore exploration, particularly on the East Coast.

Given the fact that oil and gas exploration, particularly East Coast offshore exploration, is one of the few bright spots in an otherwise dismal economic outlook, what steps is the Minister planning on taking to ensure that this new hope for the future is not lost as exploration slows down in an inevitable response to crude oil prices, prices much less than were predicted by the Minister's predecessor and much less than are economic under current fiscal and regulatory regimes?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, at this time we have an agreement with some oil companies to do some drilling off the coasts of Nova Scotia and Newfoundland. Of course, in order to achieve the goals to which the Hon. Member referred, it would be very useful to be able to come to an agreement with the Government of Newfoundland. We were supposed to meet today, but, unfortunately, they have not shown up.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): They did not show up?

REQUEST FOR CHANGES IN LEGISLATION

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Madam Speaker, the legislation governing offshore frontier exploration is the Canada Oil and Gas Act which, like the rest of the National Energy Program, was based on assumptions which are turning out to be totally wrong. Surely if the Canada Oil and Gas Act was appropriate for the assumptions that underlined it, it must be malappropriate or inappropriate for the actual real world situation which exists today.

Will the Minister wait for a curtailment on East Coast exploration prior to acting, or will he give a commitment to the House to act now, to put in the changes now, before East Coast exploration joins the long line of casualties, such as the tarsands plants and so on, which are a result of government mismanagement? Will he not act now, before we see that curtailment of this bright hope?

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Open the door.

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I have not received any indication from anyone that the agreement which we have signed with the industries drilling off the coast of Nova Scotia, for example, will not be kept, that they will not follow up with the commitment they made to both Governments. There is no reason for me to believe that they will not fulfil their obligations because of the present OPEC situation. As I say, the best tool in ensuring development off the coast of Newfoundland would be to have an agreement with the Province. I have worked very hard in the last three months in order to achieve it. I am very disappointed, considering the agreement that we were to meet this afternoon in Montreal, that they have not come up.

Mr. Nielsen: It is the weather.

PRICES PAID BY CONSUMERS

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Madam Speaker, the disaster of falling crude oil prices predicted by the Minister of State for International Trade could be accurate with regard to the effect on Governement revenues which will be disastrously short of predictions. It could be right in terms of its effect on exploration, particularly offshore frontier, if the Minister does not act. However, it is an ill wind which does not blow some good, and at least the consumers should expect to pay less for gasoline and heating oil if world crude oil prices decrease.

In the United States, Americans, whose Government does not claim to protect them from high prices, are paying less for gasoline and heating oil than are Canadians, whose Government claims to be protecting them from high world prices. When can Canadian consumers get the benefit of this international situation? When will the Government live up to its election promises?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I would like to reply to the question by saying, as I said yesterday in the House, that there is a break, a variation in the price of oil in Canada, depending on the Province where one lives. In some Provinces, like Alberta, there is no sales tax, while in Quebec, for example, and other Provinces, there is a huge provincial sales tax which makes a big difference in the price.

The Hon. Member is proposing some change in the agreement with the Provinces at this time, but he should check with the authorities in his own Province of Alberta, who stated yesterday they are not interested in any change at all.

NUCLEAR ENERGY

FUTURE OF HEAVY WATER PLANTS IN NOVA SCOTIA

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Madam Speaker, my question, which is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, concerns the heavy water plants in Nova Scotia, operated by Atomic Energy of Canada Limited. Is the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources listening? Are you there?

• (1420)

I have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources about the heavy water plants operated by Atomic Energy of Canada in Cape Breton, Nova Scotia. The Minister knows what havoc would be wrought by the closure of this plant—

[Editor's Note: A disturbance having been created in the Public Gallery.]

Madam Speaker: Order! Order!

Mr. Crosby: Does this count on my time?

[Editor's Note: And the disturbance continuing.]

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: Order!

Mr. Crosby: One thing we must make clear in this Chamber is that if we are allowed to function as parliamentarians without outside interference, aided and abetted by the group to my left, nothing will happen in the name of democracy.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosby: I have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, as he now knows, concerning the heavy water plants in Cape Breton, Nova Scotia, operated by Atomic Energy of Canada Limited. If the plants are closed 700 people or more will be thrown out of their employment and havoc will be wrought in Cape Breton and eastern Nova Scotia. Can the Minister tell us whether the Government will see that these plants will remain open, but if they are to close, does the Government have a program or plan for alternate employment for those persons directly or indirectly affected?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I would like to tell the Hon. Member that we are very much aware of the problem that the closing of these two heavy water plants might cause in this area. That is why the Government is looking at some other sort of solution than closing them. At this time we are having discussions with Atomic Energy of Canada to see what are the prospects of selling more heavy water, which would permit them to keep these plants open and, if we cannot keep them open, to try to find some alternative. We are taking the problem very seriously, as the Hon. Member is, and we will do our best to find an adequate solution.

USE OF COAL TO PRODUCE OIL

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Madam Speaker, on the question of alternative employment for persons whose employment might be lost through the closure of the heavy water plants in Cape Breton, may I ask the Minister is he aware of a program or project by Scotia Coal Synfuels which would result in using Nova Scotia coal to produce oil, with the assistance and use of natural gas? Is the Minister aware of that project, which I understand is headed by Alastair Gillespie, and will he assure the House that the former Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources who partly caused the energy problem in Canada, will not be called upon to correct it, and be the source of this alternate employment in Nova Scotia?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I am certainly aware of the project. My Department is paying for it.

NATIONAL ENERGY PROGRAM

CALCULATION OF REVENUE LOSS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources as well. In the fall of 1981 the Government's budget clearly pinned the whole fiscal future of the country on OPEC's continual increase of energy prices. The Government finally admitted last spring that its calculations in terms of anticipated revenue were out by some $25 billion. The disarray demonstrated by OPEC the other day clearly means that these calculations are out by many more billions of dollars. Will the Minister give the House a carefully worded and accurate update on the calculation of the revenue loss to the people of Canada? Is it now $30 billion, $35 billion, or what is the figure?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, it would be entirely premature to try to answer the question put by the Leader of the New Democratic Party, because as yet, not all the consequences of yesterday's decision—or the lack thereof—by the OPEC countries are known. In the weeks or months to come, we shall see at what level the world oil price will stabilize, and at that time we shall be able to make our estimates accordingly. I believe last year's figures are still valid today, because the world price has been fairly stable during the past eight months.

[English]

Mr. Broadbent: Madam Speaker, it seems that everyone in the oil business but the Minister knows that the most recent estimates that he has made are wrong, that he is out by many billions of dollars once again, and that he has an obligation to this House, to explain soon just how many billions of dollars the Government has miscalculated.

DECREASE IN OPEC OIL PRICES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): I would like to go to my supplementary question. It is quite evident that if prices remain stable between now and July 1 the agreement entered into between the federal Government and the Provinces will mean that the anticipated increase of $4 per barrel on July 1 will not be taking place. Given the needs of Canadian industries and Canadian consumers at this time, will the Minister guarantee to these groups that they will obtain exactly proportional benefits from declines in price increases by OPEC? Will he make sure that we get a reciprocal decline in prices for Canadian consumers and Canadian industries if the price goes down?

Presence in Gallery

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, with respect to the price of oil in Canada, the policy is well known. For imported oil and new oil the price is based on the international price. For old oil it is 75 per cent of the international price. Everything is based on the fluctuations in the international market, and the prices will have to be adjusted accordingly.

Mr. Broadbent: I take it that means there will be a direct relationship between the decline in OPEC prices and the decline in prices to Canadian consumers and industry.

THE ECONOMY

REQUEST FOR INDUSTRIAL STRATEGY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): My last question is for the Minister of Finance. His predecessor abandoned the Liberal commitment to an industrial strategy in the fall of 1981 when he put all his fiscal expectations into the OPEC basket anticipating revenue increases in Canada virtually exclusively being dependent upon oil price hikes by OPEC. We have now seen the disaster of that miscalculation, the disaster of abandoning the commitment that was made to an industrial strategy.

In the forthcoming budget will the Minister assure the House that this mistake will not be repeated, that we will not continue to lose the thousands of jobs and suffer the loss of revenue that came from that OPEC miscalculation, and will he live up to the 1980 election promise made by the Prime Minister and give to this country, at long last, the industrial strategy that we need?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I cannot agree with the statement by the Leader of the New Democratic Party as it applies to my predecessor. In the November 1981 budget, my predecessor did not base his entire economic strategy on a given projection of oil prices. As far as the contents of my upcoming budget are concerned, I would ask the Leader of the New Democratic Party to be patient, and I am sure that when the budget is brought down, he will be pleased with what is in the budget and will support it wholeheartedly.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF YUKON MINISTER OF JUSTICE, HON. CLARKE ASHLEY

LABOUR CONDITIONS

INCREASE IN WOMEN'S UNEMPLOYMENT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. David Crombie (Rosedale): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Yesterday the Minister responsible for the Status of Women stated in this House that it was her view, and I quote, "that the unemployment figures for women have not risen substantially". I am sure the Minister is aware that last year the unemployment rate for women went up 41 per cent, the highest since the Depression of the thirties. Does the Minister agree with his colleague, and is that unemployment rate unacceptable to the Government?

• (1430)

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, it is my reading of Hansard that the Minister of State responsible for the Status of Women did not say that it was acceptable. She simply pointed out to the Members of the Opposition that, in fact, the rate of unemployment for women has not risen as dramatically or as drastically as in other groups. It has remained relatively stable. As we have pointed out in this House many times, the fact that there are high rates of unemployment is unacceptable to this Government and that is why we are working very hard to change this.

RETRAINING OF WOMEN

Hon. David Crombie (Rosedale): Madam Speaker, if the Minister again consults Hansard he will see that the quote is clear. It says:

—the unemployment figures for women have not risen substantially.

That is actually the quote. The Minister will also recall that recently there was a report from Heather Menzies with respect to "CHIPS" and "Future Work for Women". Ms. Menzies in that report indicated, by the way, that by the end of the decade we would have close to a million women unemployed unless we paid attention to our training programs. In the face of that, the Minister of State responsible for the Status of Women said yesterday:

Many unemployed women can't learn new skills because they aren't educated enough to be retrained—

Is it the view of the Government that these women cannot be retrained, or are we again being treated to more uninformed and insensitive remarks from the Minister responsible for the status of women?

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of State (Mines)): Madam Speaker, I should like to clarify that statement and elaborate on it.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mrs. Erola: From my conversations with a great many people, including the head of the task force, Dr. Margaret Fulton, and all of those very much involved in the retraining of women, the problem is very fundamental. The teaching of math and sciences in the elementary and secondary schools has not been followed as it should be in the training of women. They are, therefore, unable to take advantage of the training programs that we, the federal Government, offer to them. The provincial Governments have failed in their responsibilities to women.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. David Crombie (Rosedale): Madam Speaker, is the Minister actually saying that because in an earlier period of their lives these women, not having proper math and physics training, are not able to have retraining programs from the federal Government, and that they will be written off?

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of State (Mines)): Madam Speaker, it is not what I am saying.

Mr. Crombie: It is what you are saying.

Mrs. Erola: What I am saying is that it is impossible for women to take advantage of the training programs that are available to them because they have not had the proper educational background. I suggest the Hon. Member look at the Science Council of Canada's recently released report "Who Turns The Wheels". It states specifically the very real problems of women in this country.

REQUEST FOR CHANGES IN RETRAINING PROGRAMS

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of State responsible for the status of women.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: The Minister of State said that the state of preparation of unemployed women, and I use her words, prevents those women from taking advantage of federal programs. What changes does the Minister intend in federal programs to allow those unemployed women to take advantage of the retraining programs and not simply be written off as uneducable, as the Minister of State tried to do yesterday?

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of State (Mines)): Madam Speaker, I would like the Minister of Employment and Immigration to answer the second part of the question. The first part of the question is very real—how do we address the fundamental problems of women in this country? I appeal to the women of this country to go their Provinces and their educators and say to them, "Give us the proper training in the beginning", and then we will finish the job at the federal level.

PROVISION OF RETRAINING PROGRAMS

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, the Minister of State cannot have it both ways. She cannot say that there is a problem caused in the past by provincial education systems that can only be solved by the federal Government, and then go to say that the refusal of the federal Government to solve that problem is the fault of the Provinces. She cannot have it both ways. Since she has now asked the women of Canada to set her policy and said that the Minister of Employment and Immigration will announce it, will the Minister of Employment and Immigration answer two questions.

First, the Minister of State responsible for the status of women said that a 41 per cent increase in unemployment among women is, to quote her, "not substantial". What in the name of God is substantial if 41 per cent unemployment is not?

Second, will the Minister of Employment and Immigration tell this House of Commons what the Goverment is going to do, and precisely when it is going to do it, to make its retraining programs deal with the problems of women who are now prevented by the Government's own policy from taking advantage of those programs?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, it is very unfortunate that the Leader of the Opposition has been so distracted by his political problems in his own caucus that he has not been aware of what actions this House and this Government have taken. I would like to point out, for example, that when this Government came into office the Government of Canada offered something like 14 Outreach Programs directed toward the needs of women. We now have 32 programs available. We have more than doubled the number of programs that his Government offered to enable women to get into our training programs.

Further, he may not be aware of this, but last year this Government passed a National Training Act which provides special allowances for women to move into non-traditional work. It provides special grants to non-profit, community and business organizations to offer special training programs for women in non-traditional work. Just last week it provided $41 million to modernize the training facilities across the country in order to provide for those new training places. I think the Leader of the Opposition is in desperate need of retraining.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

QUERY RESPECTING GOVERNMENT PLANS

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, as one of my colleagues pointed out, I will do considerably better in Winnipeg than the Minister will.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: I regard the matter as being very serious when the Minister of State responsible for the status of women says that 41 per cent unemployment among women is not substantial and when she admits that the present arrangement of her policies, and I use her words, "prevents women from taking advantage of retraining programs". In other words, the status quo of yesterday prevented those women from taking advantage of retraining. What is the Government going to do about that? Obviously the changes the Minister referred to are not enough. According to his seatmate, they prevent women from retraining. What is the Government going to do to provide retraining to those women so they can get back into the work force and play a role as equals in the growth of Canada?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, it again strikes me as exceedingly strange that the Leader of the Opposition, who in the past has prided himself as being the great defender of federal-provincial jurisdiction, is not aware that in this very critical area we share jurisdiction. The provincial Governments have responsibility for providing basic education for their populations, and the federal Government, through its direct grants, through the National Training Act, provides for higher skilled training. By the way, to clarify the statement made by his colleague yesterday, we provided over a million additional hours of training this past year in the high-skill trades in order to provide for the kind of concentration and focus in those areas of training that are required to make a more productive economy.

This Government is taking action. We are concerned about the problems of women. That is why we have introduced a number of direct employment programs in which women participate up to 40 per cent or 50 per cent, unlike his Government which cancelled all the direct employment programs.

REQUEST FOR RULE CHANGES

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I would like the Minister to take his responsibility seriously. He knows that his Government designs the training programs. He further knows that his colleague said yesterday that the rules of the Liberal Government prevent women from being engaged in those training programs. The Liberal rules prevent women from being retrained. That is what the Minister of State said yesterday. What is the Liberal Government going to do to change the Liberal rules?

• (1440)

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I would again ask the Leader of the Opposition, does he not understand what this Parliament has passed? He seems incapable of reading Hansard one day after it is printed. The Minister of State did not say that Liberal rules prevent women from taking training. What she was saying is that the lack of proper grounding in the vital areas of mathematics and science, during their primary and secondary school education, makes it more difficult for them.

What we have introduced in our National Training Act are the kinds of programs which will enable women to get the remedial training and the kind of counselling and guidance which will allow them access into our programs. I would be very glad to provide the Hon. Leader of the Opposition with full information on that program so that he can bring himself up to date.

PRIVACY

MISUSE OF PERSONAL INFORMATION STORED IN COMPUTERS

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice. In view of the fact that the protection of privacy now lags far behind available computer technology and that an unprecedented amount of information about Canadians using electronic banking, home shopping services, computerized home security services, and so on, will shortly rest in computer banks, will the Minister say whether he is giving consideration to ways of preventing misuse of that information? In particular, will he say whether the recommendations of the Privacy Commissioner are under active consideration?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Madam Speaker, I can indeed confirm that this is the case. As a result of the recommendation of the Privacy Commissioner last year that a new offence be created for the misuse of personal information, we have engaged in a very serious study of this issue. This is part of the general review of the criminal law process which is taking place. I hope to be in a position, perhaps even sometime later this year, to announce our policy in that respect.

BROADCASTING

PROTECTION OF WOMEN AGAINST ABUSE

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Communications. The Minister is aware that the CRTC has been asked to amend the broadcasting regulations to give the same protection to women as is accorded to members of racial ands religious groups. It has also been asked to see that the same guidelines are applied to pay television as to radio and ordinary television broadcasting. If the CRTC will not act to prevent this kind of abuse, is the Minister prepared to introduce an amendment to the Broadscasting Act to see that Members of racial and religious groups as well as both sexes are protected against abuse?

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, the CRTC has very specific responsibilities under the Broadcasting Act. As the Hon. Member knows, these representations were made by her to Members on this side of the House and, obviously, to the CRTC only a few days ago. The concern of all Parliamentarians was conveyed to the CRTC by myself. I expect the CRTC is considering these matters at the moment and will be in a position to state its own position in the very near future.

INVITATION TO ATTEND SHOWING OF PLAYBOY TAPE

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): So far, Madam Speaker, the CRTC has not seen fit to act, although asked to do so on many ocasions, and a number of months ago. I can certainly assure the House that my Party would be prepared to support swift passage of an amendment to the Act. We can amend the Act, the CRTC can only amend the regulations.

Will the Minister attend a showing at 3.30 this afternoon in the West Block of a tape of what is now available from Playboy network in the United States? I have invited all Members of the House and the press to see this tape because I think it will show most clearly that what we are talking about is not simply adult movies so-called, not simply erotica, but really severe abuse of women, and a great deal of cruelty and brutality toward women.

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, a number of Members on this side of the House have indicated a very real concern to me on this important issue. I met with a number of them last night and I know they do indeed share the type of concerns expressed by the Hon. Member, and intend to assist this afternoon.

CRIMINAL CODE

REQUEST FOR AMENDMENTS TO DEAL WITH STREET PROSTITUTES

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice. As the Minister knows, the Supreme Court of Canada today rendered its decision in the Westendorp case, striking down Calgary's by-law dealing with solicitation for the purposes of prostitution. In that judgment the Minister will know that the Chief Justice of Canada has made it clear that municipalities under the present constitutional arrangement from Halifax across to Vancouver have very little room to manoeuvre in the fight against soliciting. Now that it appears by virtue of this Court ruling that the ball is directly back in the federal Government's court, is the Minister prepared to bring in amendments to the Criminal Code to make effective the laws against solicitation for the purpose of prostitution?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Madam Speaker, I am sure the Hon. Member will recall, because I believe he supported it, this issue was referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs for their guidance to the Government last year. We are, of course, eagerly awaiting that guidance. I may say our hope had been that this Calgary by-law would be upheld. We did not oppose the by-law. And since the judgment has been rendered today I have asked my Department to investigate any ways that may exist to enable us either to delegate such kind of power to municipalities which wish to have it or through some other way to make available to the municipalities this type of control over the use of streets.

DEFINITION OF SOLICITATION

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, I am sure the Minister will be aware, by virtue of reports from his colleagues on his side of the House, that the conclusion of the Standing Committee at this point is inconclusive. Only one Member of his Party, the Hon. Member for Sarnia, was in favour of amendments to the Criminal Code. The New Democratic Party was in favour of legalizing prostitution. We had anticipated the decision here, and said that we wanted to have amendments to the Criminal Code to make it effective.

The Minister cannot avoid his responsibility any further. I woulld like to know whether he is prepared to make amendments to the Criminal Code in terms of a new definition of solicitation, including customers as well as the prostitute, making both males and females subject to charge, and redefining "a public place". Will the Minister not take action now to aid the municipalities across the country?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Madam Speaker, I find it very strange that the Hon. Member, who has responsibility as a Member of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs for this advice to the Government, would now be asking us to make a decision without reference to the views of the Committee. The Committee has presented no report. He may rightly indicate the Committee Members are divided in their views. So is the country, Madam Speaker, and it was precisely because of this that we asked the Committee members for their best views. The responsibility is theirs; it is not ours.

INDUSTRY

EFFECT OF GOVERNMENT POLICIES ON PETROCHEMICAL INDUSTRY

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Bruce-Grey): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy. The Minister will know that the petrochemical industry is having severe difficulties. He also will know that this industry uses only 5 per cent of the total oil and gas resources in Canada, but adds up to 27 times their value in finished products. Is the Minister aware of the difficulties that are persisting, and is he aware of the fact that the revenue and taxation policies which have been implemented by the federal Government have already exceeded those levels which were expected in 1985, which has made many of the companies non-competitive? If he is aware of these things, what is he prepared to do about it?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, questions with respect to the petrochemical industry are normally handled by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, but there is a component of my Department which deals with that. I suppose what I can say at this time is that the Government is studying the problem. We are aware of the problem, and it is not an easy one.

REQUEST FOR TAX CUT

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Bruce-Grey): Madam Speaker, my supplementary is directed to the Minister of Finance. Understanding the revenue and tax policies on energy of the Liberal Government, the Minister will understand that the petroleum compensation charge of about $7 per barrel, and the natural gas and gas liquids tax which are being imposed on this industry now, are the reason that they are non-competitive and face real danger in terms of survival.

If the Minister would eliminate those two portions, the petroleum compensation charge and natural gas and gas liquids tax, on just that 5 per cent of the energy resources which Canada uses for petrochemicals, then he would lose $125 million of tax revenue, but he would achieve an additional $300 million in increased personal income tax, and another $200 million in retail tax, sales tax, and unemployment insurance benefits which he would not have to pay. In addition to that, there would be corporate taxes. There would be a net benefit, therefore, of at least $400 million. I would like to ask the Minister of Finance if he would consider removing those taxes on just that 5 per cent of the energy resources which are used for that industry, thereby helping the industry to survive, creating jobs, and reducing the federal deficit by $400 million?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, a number of factors are involved in the difficult situation now facing the petrochemical industry. According to the Hon. Member, the gas-based petrochemical industry is not facing the same difficulties as the oil-based industry. International factors are also involved, at this time, and I think the Hon. Member was somewhat hasty in his analysis of the situation.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

POLLUTION OF NIAGARA RIVER—POSITION OF UNITED STATES ADMINISTRATION

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment. I am sure many Members of this House noticed some of the headlines the Minister got yesterday, such things as "Leakage Turns Water into 'Toxic Brew'", "Ottawa Starts Study of Poisons in Water", and "5 Million Lives at Risk". However, I do not think too many Members of this House are aware of the fact that these same kinds of headlines have been coming out as the result of studies since 1973, particularly in relation to the S-Site Dump and others along the Niagara. It seems to me that adding another volume to this coroner's inquest is just a continuation of the kind of criminal negligence with which various corporations are treating the Great Lakes water supply.

Will the Minister tell the House whether or not he has received one shred of evidence from the U.S. adminstration that they intend to spend one dollar in the coming year on cleaning up S-Site, or are we once again doing all kinds of scientific work on behalf of a bankrupt administration in the United States?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of the Environment): Madam Speaker, the information which I announced yesterday is relatively new information which is coming to us—the studies of the S-Site Dump in terms of the potential migration to Canadian territory from fill on the American side. This is new and disturbing information.

As far as the second part of the Hon. Member's question is concerned, yes, through the Niagara Toxics Committee, established well over a year ago and which includes the Consultation and Liaison Committee, there are indications that the American Government is taking this issue very seriously. The whole matter of cleaning up the S-Site, as perhaps the Hon. Member knows, or certainly should know, is now a question which has been looked at in terms of negotiations preliminary to the court process in the United States.

REQUEST THAT DELEGATION APPEAR BEFORE UNITED STATES CONGRESS

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Madam Speaker, there is a real question of credibility here. Just recently the Environmental Baseline Study on the Niagara River came out and Dr. Berkes, who teaches environmental studies at Brock University, had the following to say concerning that:

> Assurances that drinking water meet government standards are misleading and irresponsible.

Almost two years ago an NDP Committee travelled to New York State and were the first people ever to meet the responsible New York legislators. We know it is going to cost hundreds of millions of dollars to clean up the S-Site Dump. I would like the Minister to explain to this House why Canada is spending millions of dollars doing studies on this carcinogenic and mutagenic material going into our drinking water? It is from U.S. chemical companies, it is on U.S. soil, and Reagan will not do anything about it. Why are we spending the money? Why don't we send an official delegation down before Congress and tell Congress how we feel about being poisoned?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of the Environment): Perhaps if the hon. gentleman had listened to my first answer he would realize it is not a phenomenon which is occurring entirely on United States soil, but it is now invading Canadian territory as well. That is why we are doing research on Canadian territory, to assess the impact so we will be better able to respond.

The hon. gentleman claims his Party was first off the mark on that, and that is simply not true, Madam Speaker. There are Members in this House—I could cite the Hon. Member for Niagara Falls—who, long before the NDP became interested in this matter, were exploring it with officials in the U.S. The NDP is jumping on a bandwagon which has long left.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

F-18 FIGHTER AIRCRAFT PROGRAM—ALLOTMENT OF WORK TO PROVINCES

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Defence who stated in the House yesterday that almost half of the new fighter aircraft work would be allotted to the Province of Quebec and the remaining 50 per cent would be spread amongst the other nine Provinces. Can the Minister justify such a discriminatory arrangement?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): Madam Speaker, the hon. gentleman ought to have followed the dossier a bit more closely. Had he been able to read the French press in the Province of Quebec he would have seen that the criticism from that Province is indeed that Quebec is not getting the number of offsets from the F-18 Program that the Quebec aerospace infrastructure would justify according to the allegations. I point out to the hon. gentleman that I would be pleased to provide him with the full figures relating to the projected offsets, including those for the Province of Manitoba which is doing well under the F-18 Program.

Mr. McKenzie: Madam Speaker, I have studied the Minister's answers of yesterday, and that is why I am asking the question today.

REQUEST THAT MANITOBA GET PERCENTAGE OF WORK

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Madam Speaker, as 10 per cent of the aerospace industry is in the Province of Manitoba, would the Minister give us a firm commitment that 10 per cent of the NFA work will go to the aerospace industry in Manitoba?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): Madam Speaker, the Government has never indicated, or at least offered any guarantees for regional distribution of the offsets of the F-18 to any region of the country. What the Government has done is included two terms within the contract, one involving the Blade and Vane plant that has gone into Bromont; the other was with reference to a numerical controlled machining centre that is going into Eastern Quebec as well. Those are the only undertakings that were contractually provided for by the Government.

The balance of the offsets will be determined, Madam Speaker, based upon the ability of individual companies within Canada to compete not only with other companies in Canada but indeed in North America.

ENERGY

CLOSURE OF SATELLITE ICE TRACKING STATION AT ST. JOHN'S, NFLD.

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Could the Minister tell the House why the Government has taken a decision to close the satellite tracking station outside St. John's which will leave a very serious gap in our search and rescue capability in terms of, for example, tracking ice and getting immediate data on ice movements which seriously impact on the safety of our offshore workers?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, there was a problem of costs involved in that. I am informed by the officials that the system we have will be adequate for the supervision needed, but we are looking into the problem at this time. There is some discussion about alternative solutions to the problem and I will advise if we can change the decision. So far the decision was made because of much higher costs to operate than before.

JUSTIFICATION FOR CLOSURE

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, is the Minister aware that a senior official of Petro-Canada has described that station as "a necessary element to the safety and efficiency of frontier exploration"?

Can the Minister also explain to the House, when he talks about cost efficiency, how the Government can justify closing down this very important tracking station while at the same time planning on spending over $1 million to build a tracking station in Thailand?

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of State (Mines)): Madam Speaker, the Shoe Cove installation was designed originally to receive signals from SEASAT. The SEASAT installation has disappeared, and it is in fact obsolete, to be replaced by a better system which will provide better services.

Mr. Clark: In Thailand.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

POLLUTION OF NIAGARA RIVER—MINISTER'S STATEMENT ON SAFETY OF DRINKING WATER

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment who will recall answering a question of mine some six weeks ago by stating that the S-Area does not constitute a threat to the quality of the drinking water of some four million Canadians.

On what basis would the Minister make such a statement to this House, and then yesterday issue a press release indicating that this S-Area is somewhat of a new and pressing problem which should be eradicated almost immediately? This is also in view of the answer he has just given, since he has had knowledge of it for some considerable length of time.

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of the Environment): Madam Speaker, I would have to check exactly what I did reply to the Hon. Member but, as far as I can recall, the answer I gave him then is still accurate. There is no evidence whatsoever that the standards of drinking water in the Niagara River or Lake Ontario are beyond those which are established as being safe. There is no indication in the present situation of any conflict with the existing safe water guidelines. That does not mean we should not be concerned about leakages or the migration of fill. There are problems which should concern us. The question the Hon. Member posed, if I remember correctly, was in terms of safety levels, and I think the answer I gave to him is one which I would repeat now.

REASONS FOR MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister who said that the information he received from his officials was that there was no danger to quality supply in this situation. If he is not serious about the problem why did he make this expression yesterday in his press release? If he is serious, then why did he say that he would simply express his concerns to American authorities so that they, in turn, will keep his concerns in mind when they negotiate a settlement with the contaminators, knowing full well that we have had little benefit from U.S. actions in the past?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of the Environment): Madam Speaker, that is not what I said yesterday. We indicated that not only are we going to continue our representations to the American authorities in a diplomatic way, as we have in the past, but we are going to continue to deal with the International Joint Commission on these affairs. We are using the Niagara Toxics Committee and the consultation committee to bring our concerns to the attention of the United States. We are increasing our own spending in terms of the Departments of Environment, in terms of Health and Welfare, and in terms of fisheries and Oceans to examine the problem. What is new in this situation is not changes in the quality of water; what is new is the evidence of migration, underground, of potentially dangerous products to Canadian territory. That is the new element of the situation which I discussed yesterday. I brought forward an action program which will help us deal with that.

PRIVILEGE

MR. ROBINSON (BURNABY)—PRESENCE OF PHOTOGRAPHERS IN CHAMBER

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege following certain events which took place during Question Period. It is my understanding that recently photographers were allowed into the House of Commons for the purpose of taking pictures of what takes place on the floor of the House. It is my understanding that photographers are restricted to taking pictures for that purpose.

Today, a group of young Canadians individually voiced their anger and outrage over Canada's complicity in the testing of the Cruise missile. Following that peaceful protest, which I at least, as an individual Member, support—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): —the photographer turned his camera up to the gallery and started to take pictures of members of the public in the gallery. I would ask—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. Of course, the Hon. Member knows that this is not a question of privilege; it is a matter of the administration of the affairs of the House of Commons. I can assure the Hon. Member that if he is right in saying that the camera was turned toward the galleries and such photographs are published, then as Speaker I will make any disposition that may be required. The photographers are sufficiently warned of their latitude in the House. Until now they have adhered strictly to the rules we have set down for them.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. FLIS—INTERRUPTION OF QUESTION PERIOD

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parkdale-High Park): Madam Speaker, it is unfortunate that the proceedings of this House were interrupted during Question Period today. I think it is more unfortunate that one Party in this House applauded this kind of disruption.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Which Party?

Madam Speaker: Order, order. At no place in the Standing Orders does it say that Members cannot applaud at any time during the course of debate in the House. The Hon. Member must realize, therefore, that he does not have a point of order.

PRIVILEGE

MR. ROY—IMPOSSIBILITY OF ATTENDING ALL MEETINGS

Mr. Marcel Roy (Laval): Madam Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I consider that my rights as a Member were breached during today's oral question period. I feel that an unfortunate precedent has been created here. I shall explain.

During oral question period, Madam Speaker, an Hon. Member, possibly with an interest in a cablevision company, was distributing in the House invitations to all Members for a special meeting at 3.30 when a television screening would be held. Following distribution of this written invitation, the Hon. Member put a question to the Minister of Communications (Mr. Fox), who is responsible for the CRTC.

Madam Speaker, Government Members have commitments, since we are involved in running this country, and we cannot attend a meeting on a few minutes' notice. However, I would not want the press to interpret the absence of some Liberal Members as a lack of interest in the problems raised in the message contained in the invitation.

I fail to see how the desired objective could be attained by this action, and I am therefore registering this complaint. In my opinion, this is a breach of the rights of the Members of this House.

[English]

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Madam Speaker, on the same point, it would certainly be possible to arrange other showings of this tape for people who are not available at 3.30.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, I understand the point made by the Hon. Member for Laval (Mr. Roy), but unfortunately he is factually incorrect. To begin with, the suggestion that my colleague, the Hon. Member for Broadview-Greenwood (Ms. McDonald), distributed the material is incorrect. I distributed the material.

Second, I did so after consulting the House Leader for the Conservative Party and the Whip for the Liberal Party to ascertain whether they had any objection to making the invitation available to each Member during the time that the House was sitting. Both indicated their willingness to have the material distributed.

The invitations had previously been sent out in the in-House mail but we were afraid they might not reach each of the offices in time. I suggest to the Hon. Member that he should check his facts.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker: I want to make it clear to the Hon. Member that the Chief of the Distribution Office had warned the Hon. Member for Broadview-Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) that he would not be able to have her invitations distributed by the services of the House. However, as was pointed out by some Hon. Members, the invitations were distributed by Members themselves, and I think I saw one of the pages putting them on some of the desks. Now I understand that all of this is the result of consultation among the party whips.

I must warn Hon. Members that the only way to reach Hon. Members and distribute documents is through our mail services, and I would ask Hon. Members from now on, despite any consultations that may take place among party whips, to refrain from making use of the pages and House services and also to refrain from distributing messages in the House themselves.

MR. DUPRAS—NORTH AMERICAN MILITARY INTERVENTIONS IN CENTRAL AMERICA

Mr. Maurice Dupras (Labelle): Madam Speaker, I wish to speak on behalf of nearly 4,500 petitioners from the riding of Labelle and the general area, who are outraged by North American military intervention in Central America and are demanding the liberation of the people of these countries. Although I do not necessarily agree with some of the terms used in this petition, I believe it is my duty as the Member for the riding of Labelle to provide a forum for the views of my constituents in this assembly, the highest court in the land.

MR. GURBIN—SPORTS FISHING IN ONTARIO

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Bruce-Grey): Madam Speaker, I have the privilege of presenting to the House a petition on behalf of 80 constituents who are members of the Bruce Peninsula Sportsmen's Association. The petitioners have serious concern that the proposals signed by the Ontario Government and Indian Bank representatives might limit the future of sports fishing in Ontario. The petition requests of the federal Government that:

The upcoming agreement for native fishing rights not be signed until full disclosure of the agreement to the public is made. Also that reasonable time be allowed for public input.

I hope that the petition is in order and that the Chair will see fit to refer it to the appropriate standing committee.

MR. MITGES—BELL CANADA ENTERPRISES INCORPORATED

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, it is my duty to present a petition from the constituency of Grey-Simcoe and surrounding area, signed by 52 individuals who are deeply concerned and distressed by recent actions of the Government of Canada to try and prevent the reorganization of a new parent company for the Bell Canada group called Bell Canada Enterprises Incorporated.

The petitioners have correctly stated that such an undertaking has been approved by Bell shareholders and the Superior Court of Quebec. They point out as well that it has been acknowledged by a wide range of Cabinet Ministers and senior Government officials that it is a move in the right direction to provide the corporation with an improvement in its structure. The petitioners are vehemently opposed to the Government's appeal of the Quebec Superior Court decision and call for the withdrawal of the inappropriate, unnecessary and costly delay resulting from a CRTC inquiry.

MR. McKENZIE—OPPOSITION TO BILL C-85

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Madam Speaker, it is my duty to present a petition signed by 22 citizens of the Winnipeg area. The purpose of the petition is to express the clear and strong opposition of the citizens of the area to Bill C-85, the legislation to establish Canagrex. In particular, the petitioners protest the buy and sell provisions of Canagrex, as well as its wide-ranging powers.

STATUS OF IMMIGRANTS FROM CZECHOSLOVAKIA

Question No. 4,169—Mr. MacKay:

1. For each calendar year since 1977, how many Canadian residents with landed immigrant status, formerly citizens of Czechoslovakia, availed themselves of the offer made to them on March 16, 1977 by the Government of the Czechoslovak Socialist Republic and applied to Czechoslovak authorities for "regularization" of their legal relationship towards Czechoslovakia?

2. For the same period, how many of the residents were, at the time of their applications to the Czechoslovak authorities (a) Canadian citizens (b) employees of the Canadian Government (c) employees of provincial Governments (d) employees of Crown corporations and Crown agencies?

3. For the same period, how many applications by Canadian residents to the authorities of the Czechoslovak Socialist Republic for "regularization" of their legal relationship towards Czechoslovakia were approved by the Czechoslovak authorities and how many Canadian residents were (a) released from Czechoslovak citizenship (b) issued Czechoslovak passports?

4. For the same period, how many Canadian residents who were issued Czechoslovak passports were (a) Canadian citizens (b) employees of the Canadian Government (c) employees of provincial Governments (d) employees of Crown corporations and Crown agencies?

5. For the same period, how many Canadian residents with landed immigrant status, who were formerly citizens of Czechoslovakia, travelled to Czechoslovakia and (a) how many used Canadian passports (b) how many used Czechoslovak passports for travel to Czechoslovakia and how many used Canadian passports to return to Canada?

6. For the same period, how many Canadian residents with landed immigrant status, formerly residents of Czechoslovakia, were formally and unilaterally deprived of their Czechoslovak citizenship because of their activities against the régimes of the Czechoslovak Socialist Republic, its representatives and its allies?

7. For each calendar year since 1975 (a) how many Canadian visitor visas were issued to citizens of the Czechoslovak Socialist Republic (b) how many visitors actually came to Canada from Czechoslovakia (c) how many of the visitors (i) applied for (ii) were granted landed immigrant status?

8. For each calendar year since 1977, how many visitors to Canada from Czechoslovakia were visiting Canadian residents who had "regularized" their legal relationship with the Czechoslovak Socialist Republic?

9. Is there any evidence of foreign diplomatic representatives manipulating members of Canada's ethnic communities by threats of reprisals against relatives or friends in the country of origin, as referred to in the McDonald Commission 1981 Report, 2-1, pp. 66, 415 and 432 and, if so, in each case (a) on what date did the event take place (b) what foreign diplomats were involved (c) what was the disposition of the case?

10. Did the Solicitor General state in the House of Commons on November 19, 1981, that he was aware "of particular cases where Canadians of dual nationality have been pressured by foreign governments in one way or another" and, if so, in each case (a) what was the nature of such pressures (b) on what date did the pressuring take place (c) what foreign governments were involved (d) what steps were taken by the Canadian Government against such practices?

11. Does the Canadian Government negotiate with the Government of the Czechoslovak Socialist Republic about the problem of dual citizenship and, if so (a) on what date did the negotiations start (b) what are the concrete results to date (c) on what date does the Government expect the negotiations to be concluded and in what form?

12. Is it now or was it the policy of the Security Service of the RCMP to keep track of Canadian residents' travel to Eastern European countries and, if so (a) on what date did the policy start (b) what countries of Eastern Europe are or were the subject of such policy?

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Department of External Affairs and the Solicitor General as follows:

1. This information is not available. Under the terms of Article 36 of the Vienna Convention on Consular Relations, to which both Canada and Czechoslovakia are party, Czechoslovak consular officials are free to communicate with and to have consular access to individuals who are still deemed to be citizens of Czechoslovakia on matters which fall directly under their consular jurisdiction. This implies that in so doing, Czechoslovak consular officials are under no obligation to notify the Canadian Government of their legitimate contacts with Canadian-Czechoslovak dual citizens. At the same time, Canadian-Czechoslovak dual nationals are not obliged to notify the Canadian Government of their contacts with Czechoslovak consular officials. Therefore, unless the information is volunteered, which it usually is not, it is not possible for the Canadian Government to compile data on those Canadian Czechoslovak dual citizens who wish to comply with the Czechoslovak regulation.

2. See reply to part 1.

3. See reply to part 1.

4. See reply to part 1.

5. All Canadian citizens and residents are free to leave Canada at will, and no person is required to inform the Government of his destination on leaving the country. No data on the movements of departing persons are maintained. It is therefore not possible to know accurately how many Canadian residents of Czechoslovak or other origin visited Czechoslovakia in any given period. It should be noted, however, that a landed immigrant in Canada who has not been granted Canadian citizenship does not have the right to obtain or travel on a Canadian passport.

6. This information is not available because neither the Czechoslovak Government nor the individual being deprived of his citizenship has any obligation to inform the Canadian Government when such an event occurs. Although the Government is aware of a small number of such cases where the individual involved has advised the Department of External Affairs, no reliable estimate can be made as to the total number of persons affected by such decrees.

1977—3,395
1978—3,027
1979—3,114
1980—3,312
1981—3,425

(b) Visitor entries to Canada:*

1975—4,046
1976—4,481
1977—3,864
1978—3,887
1979—4,007
1980—4,109
1981—4,597

*Visitor entries for the years 1975-1981 are higher than the number of visas issued because visas were not required for visitors entering Canada from the U.S.A. until 1978 and because persons entering Canada in transit do not require visas.

(c) (i) and (ii) There is no specific tabulation maintained of the number of persons of a given nationality who seek landed status after entering the country as visitors. Instead, landing statistics reflect only the total numbers of persons in a given nationality who were granted immigrant status in each calendar year. Landings of Czech nationals for the years 1975-1981 are as follows:

1976—145
1977—136
1978—86
1979—89
1980—172
1981—1,078*

*The increase in landings in 1981 is a reflection of the Self-Exile Designated Class Regulations created in 1979 which enable larger numbers of East Europeans to qualify for immigrant status.

8. As noted in the reply to question 1, it is not possible for the Canadian Government to compile data on those Canadian-Czechoslovak citizens who choose to "regularize" their status vis-à-vis the Government of Czechoslovakia, and it therefore is not possible to determine the answer to this question.

9. The Government recognizes that some members of Canada's ethnic communities, particularly those who have relatives in Communist countries, may be vulnerable to pressure from representatives of their native countries. When such cases come to the attention of Canadian authorities, appropriate action is taken. However, to reveal specifics of such cases could jeopardize the security of these individuals and their families.

10. Yes, the Solicitor General made such a statement in the House of Commons on November 19, 1981. The Government considers, however, that to reveal the specifics of these cases could jeopardize the security of these individuals and their families.

11. Yes. (a) October 27-29, 1980, (b) discussions are at a preliminary stage, (c) the second round of Consular discussions is likely to be held in the course of this year and it would be premature at this time to predict the outcome.

12. In the Second Report of the Commission of Inquiry Concerning Certain Activities of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, the Commissioners noted that "the Security Service has been known to collect systematically, information on all persons who travelled to Communist bloc countries" (p. 471). The Government considers that the disclosure of additional details would not be in the public interest.

INTERNATIONAL MONETARY FUND CONFERENCE

Question No. 4,536—Mr. Mazankowski:

Did the Government organize the IMF Conference held in Toronto during September 1982 and, if so (a) what amount did it spend (b) how many Government employees or consultants were involved in organizing the Conference and for what period of time (c) how many persons attended the Conference on behalf of the Government and, in each case, what was his/her name and in what capacity did he/she attend?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of State (Finance)): The Government in co-operation with the secretariat of the two institutions organized the joint annual meetings of the International Monetary Fund and the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development in Toronto during September, 1982.

(a) The total costs of the meetings to the federal Government are not yet available but are expected to be less than $6 million.

(b) A total of 12 Government employees were involved in organizing the meetings: one person for two years, three people for 22 months, and the other eight people for six months, of which two months were on a full-time basis. An additional seven were seconded for periods of two weeks or less. In addition, nine local personnel were hired in Toronto for periods ranging from three to six weeks and one secretary was hired for six months. A total of 24 hostesses were hired for eight days during the meetings.

(c) The official delegation was composed of the following people: the Hon. Allan J. MacEachen, Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Finance; the Hon. Mark MacGuigan, Secretary of State for External Affairs; the Hon. Pierre Bussières, Minister of State for Finance; the Hon. Ed Lumley, Minister of State for International Trade; Mr. Douglas Fisher, Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance; from Finance: Mr. Ian A. Stewart, Deputy Minister; Mr. Bernard J. Drabble, Associate Deputy Minister: Mr. G. E. Shannon, Assistant Deputy Minister, International Trade and Finance; Mr. Michael G. Kelly, Director, International Finance Division; Mr. John C. Coleman, Director, International Programs Division; Mr. Robert Pattillo, Press Secretary to the Minister of Finance; Mr. Michael Gillan, Assistant to the Minister of Finance; Mr. Alain Dudoit, Senior Departmental Assistant to the Minister of Finance; Ms. Laurette Gauthier, Legislative Assistant to the Minister of Finance; Mr. D. Blake MacKenzie, International Finance Division (Delegation Secretary); from Bank of Canada: Mr. Gerald K. Bouey, Governor; Mr. D. J. R. Humphreys, Deputy Governor; Mr. Jacques Bussières, Advisor; Ms. Dorothy Powell, Assistant Chief; from External Affairs: Mr. W. J. Jenkins, Assistant Deputy Minister, Sectoral and Economic Relations; Mr. Philip Somerville, General Economic Relations Division; Mr. Roy Culpeper, Development Assistance and Export Financing Policy Division; from CIDA: Mr. Marcel Massé, President; Mr. Jean-Marc Métivier, Director, Financial Institutions; Mr. Howard Smith, Multilateral Programs Branch. Not all of these delegates were present for the entire period of the meetings. In addition eight people from Ottawa served the delegation as assistants and secretaries. These figures do not include those participating in the Conference organization mentioned under (b) nor a number of officials who were involved in trade promotion and similar activities but did not attend the annual meetings.

HOSPITALITY AND ENTERTAINMENT AT IMF CONFERENCE

Question No. 4,538—Mr. Mazankowski:

1. Did the Government provide hospitality and entertainment during the IMF Conference in Toronto in September, 1982 and, if so, what was the total cost?

2. For each event, such as a reception, dinner or party (a) for whom was it held (b) how many persons were in attendance (c) what entertainment/hospitality was provided (d) what was the cost?

3. Were any events catered and, if so (a) by whom and at what cost (b) were tenders requested?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of State (Finance)): 1. The Government did provide hospitality and entertainment for the delegates to the joint annual meetings of the International Monetary Fund and the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development held in Toronto. The total cost was $288,359.

2. The events were as follows:

Event	Estimated Attendance	Cost
Per Jacobsson lecture and reception	500	$ 5025
Luncheon for spouses of all delegates (with fashion show)	673	22689
Luncheon for governors' spouses	30	1273
Canadian gala and reception (variety show of Canadian artists)	2000	131205
Tour program for spouses	1993	49840

In addition gifts were provided to delegates and spouses at a cost of $55,303. Floral arrangements at the various receptions cost $1,763 and printing of programs, invitations, signs cost $21,261.

3. The luncheons were catered by the hotels where they were held. No tenders were sought; locations were selected on the basis of available facilities. The Per Jacobsson reception was catered by the University of Toronto where the lecture was held. The reception following the Canadian gala was catered by Winston's which submitted the lowest bid among several offered through the Thomson Hall administration.

SOCIAL SECURITY—NUMBER RECEIVING BENEFITS

Question No. 4,590—Mr. Mazankowski:

For (a) 1980 (b) 1981 (c) each month in 1982, how many Canadians received (i) unemployment insurance benefits (ii) the Guaranteed Income Supplement (iii) welfare payments to which the Government contributed?

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Department of National Health and Welfare and Statistics Canada as follows:

(i) For 1980, 1981 and for each month in 1982 the unemployment insurance beneficiaries were as follows:

Unemployment Insurance Beneficiaries, by Month

	1980	1981	1982
January	824,885	873,775	1,077,960
February	854,386	880,888	1,134,543
March	840,173	862,962	1,150,537

September	557,925	568,591	1,042,391P
October	579,515	621,756
November	649,362	711,643
December	753,876	880,164
Monthly average	702,716	720,280

Notes: (1) Beneficiary date cannot be totalled as each month represents a count of those receiving benefits for a specific week each month.

(2) Beneficiaries include those receiving regular, sickness, maternity, retirement, fishing and training benefits.

(P) Preliminary data.

(ii) (a) In 1980, on average 1,190,964 persons per month received the Guaranteed Income Supplement, (b) in 1981, on average 1,231,871 persons per month received the Guaranteed Income Supplement, (c) the monthly Guaranteed Income Supplement caseload of each month in 1982 was as follows:

January	1,257,997
February	1,257,434
March	1,256,813
April	1,138,001
May	1,186,341

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, if questions Nos. 4,480 and 4,539 could be made orders for return, these returns would be tabled immediately.

Madam Speaker: Is that agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

SALE OF MINISIS SYSTEM

Question No. 4,480—Mr. Fretz:

1. Which nations receive the MINISIS System from the International Development Research Centre at no cost to the Government agencies in (a) Africa (b) South America (c) the Far East?

2. What does it cost the IDRC to provide the system at no cost to the government agencies per country in (a) Africa (b) South America (c) the Far East?

3. Which Canadian consulting firm is licensed to sell the system to commercial organizations and what is the fee?

4. (a) How many were sold and to which (i) commercial organizations (ii) countries (b) what were the amounts involved?

5. Which other nations take advantage of Canada's technology transfer in (a) Africa (b) Asia (c) South America (d) Latin America?

Return tabled.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE—RESEARCH PROJECTS

Question No. 4,539—Mr. Mazankowski:

In the fiscal year 1982-83, are projects being funded under the Department of Agriculture's Energy Research and Development for Agriculture and Food Program and, if so (a) what are such projects (b) in each case (i) what is the cost of the project (ii) who is doing the research?

Return tabled.

Order Paper Questions

[English]

Madam Speaker: The questions enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary have been answered.

Mr. Smith: I ask, Madam Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. McKenzie: Madam Speaker, I should like to ask the Parliamentary Secretary about starred question No. 4,641 which I placed on the Order Paper on December 20. I thought that the Government would have provided an answer over the Christmas break. My questions were:

Will the Government be launching a comprehensive environmental study to determine the effects on the water quality of Indian Bay and Shoal Lake in the event that the proposed 350 cottage lots on the northwest corner of Shoal Lake in Manitoba are developed and, if so (a) what will be the starting date (b) on what date will it be completed (c) will it determine the degree of risk of increased algae production, oil spills or other major forms of pollution (d) will it include an examination of the effects of using the sewage lagoon located across from Winnipeg's drinking water intake on the shore of Indian Bay?

Will the Government permit the use of motorboats for recreational purposes on Indian Bay?

We are talking about the water supply to a city of 600,000 people. This is a matter of great importance and concern to the citizens of Winnipeg. I feel that over a month is a long enough time to provide an answer as to whether or not a full environmental study will be conducted.

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, I do not know offhand what progress we have made in answering that question, but I will be happy to look into it on the Hon. Member's behalf.

Mr. Reid (St. Catharines): Madam Speaker, I welcome back the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary. Would he be good enough to check once more, since this matter was raised earlier, question No. 4,502 which was placed on the Order Paper on October 27, 1982. It relates to the receipts and expenditures of the federal Government from the Provinces under the lottery agreement, as well as two related questions, Nos. 4,531 and 4,544, all of which were referred back to the Parliamentary Secretary earlier on the basis of obtaining some information for us.

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, I will be happy to look into that matter and find out what progress we are making on providing those answers for the Hon. Member.

Mr. Stevens: Madam Speaker, now that I see the Parliamentary Secretary back in the House, I should like to remind him that the question I asked on January 29, 1981, not 1982, is still unanswered. It is the question dealing with the Prime Minister's December/January world tour at that time. Now that we have the Prime Minister back after another jaunt of holidaying time, would the Parliamentary Secretary zero in and try to obtain some answers as to what these trips are actually costing Canadians? It is time they were told.

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, I would have been disappointed had the Hon. Member not asked about that question upon my return. Needless to say, it was not a holiday that the Prime Minister undertook; it was a hard-working trip.

Mr. Stevens: With no results.

Mr. Smith: I will be happy to look into the question on behalf of the Hon. Member. I would be very pleased to do so.

Madam Speaker: Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

MEASURE TO MODIFY BENEFIT INDEX

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Gray that Bill C-133, an Act to amend the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act (No. 2), be read the third time and do pass; and the amendment thereto of Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton).

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, before I begin my presentation proper, I should like to make some comments on the new rules, especially as they apply to the ten-minute question period after a Member has made his speech. I found this procedure most useful in the case of the Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mr. Cousineau) who finished speaking before lunch. He gave what on the face of it was a presentation that made a certain amount of sense. He was well-rehearsed and it was well-written, but he was devastated by a few simple questions put to him by Hon. Members on this side of the House. He did not know what was up or what was down. If we are to follow this procedure, it means that Hon. Members will have to think out their positions much better than at the present time. I am sure when the Hon. Member for Gatineau returns to the House that he will be much better prepared than he was earlier this morning.

Another surprising thing about the Hon. Member's presentation was the fact that it was diametrically opposed to an earlier speech in the House by a colleague of his in the same Party, a gentleman who is, to all intents and purposes, his next door neighbour, the Hon. Member for Hull (Mr. Isabelle). This goes to show that a Member's views in the House are influenced by the type of constituency he represents. In the case of the constituency of Hull, it is one with very many public servants. The next door riding of Gatineau is an industrial one suffering from very high unemployment at the present time.

I am pleased to have this opportunity to present the last views on Bill C-133. The guillotine is poised, as it has been some 14 or 15 times in this session. It is ready to drop on the heads of the public servants who will have their pensions decapitated. I am pleased to reiterate my Party's point of view and to state that we will vote against Bill C-133. Of course, we will vote in favour of the amendment of the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker).

We are pleased that our point of view is supported by some Hon. Members in the benches opposite. These gentlemen are acting according to the dictates of their consciences and the wishes of their constituents. I hope they will not be chastised by the Party brass, as was the case in past dissent within the Government Party. We have seen examples of Members of the Liberal Party who have dared speak out against the Government. They have been stripped of their privileges and removed from positions of emolument within the Government system. But in spite of this, there are at least four and and probably more Members on the other side who will vote tonight with the Progressive Conservative Opposition.

Despite protestations to the contrary by the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray) this morning, the action which has been accomplished by Bill C-133 is indeed a breach of contract. That is the view of the pensioners who will be affected and it is the view of this side of the House. It is, as the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton said this morning, a contract, an agreement enshrined by virtue of the statute law of Canada, and it ought not to be changed in the manner that it is now being changed. This type of change is probably worse because, as the President of the Treasury Board said this morning, public servants have no option but to become members of the Public Service pension scheme. They do not have an option to shop around. They cannot look at who might be a better manager of pension funds; they have to embrace the Government's scheme. For that reason we should be very careful how the funds are managed and how the legislation which affects that scheme is dealt with in this House.

During the debate on this issue there has been a great deal of input by associations of pensioners and by Public Service unions. I and I am sure many other Members of this House, found that input to be very valuable. In particular, I would like to single out the Professional Institute of the Public Service. I think its presentations were of a most professional nature, as might be expected of that body, and under the circumstances I found its representatives more than restrained.

The effect of the Bill we have before us today will make it very difficult for pensioners to plan ahead. They will not know from one year to the next what their pensions provide for them. If they are to plan at all, they will have to plan for a declining standard of living as time goes on. For example, if someone retires at age 65 with a reasonable standard of living, he or she will have to face the fact upon reaching age 70 that that standard will decline. By the time the person is 75, instead of taking taxis he or she will have to ride a bus, and by the time that person is 80 years of age it will mean walking, if that is possible, because he or she will not be able to afford the bus fare. I think Canadians want and deserve a better deal for their elderly than has been put forward by Members opposite.

Pensioners and Public Service pensioners have a feeling of betrayal. I doubt whether public servants in the employ of the federal Government will ever trust their employer again. One of the reasons public servants dislike what is going on is that they now find out that the Government has been very selective in the application of cutbacks. For instance, we learned this morning that Bank of Canada employees will have an 11 per cent increase, or slightly more than that, in their pensions whereas other people in the employ of the federal Government will be restricted to a 6 per cent increase, or little more than 6 per cent, with inflation still raging at 11 per cent per annum or better.

In my opinion, the Public Service of this country has been used as a political pawn. When the Government wanted the electoral support of the public servants, it made all kinds of promises to them. The Liberals said: "We are going to increase salaries; we are going to give indexed pensions and there will be increased pensions". But now, when times are a little tougher because of mismanagement and ineptitude on the part of Liberal Governments, this Liberal Government is desperately seeking a scapegoat and it has found it in the public servants.

The same thing is happening in the Province of Quebec. In fact, if anything the situation is worse in that Province. Public servants in the Province of Quebec were at one time the greatest supporters of the PQ Government, for the sort of reasons I have just cited. But now the financial situation in that Province is extremely bad. It is probably the worst of any Province in Canada. Unlike the federal Government, the Province of Quebec does not have access to the printing presses, and the Government of the Province of Quebec is having to take desperate measures and cut back its provincial expenditures. But guess who is getting hit, Mr. Speaker. It is the public servants in that Province, with the exception of the police. The police have to be excluded because no doubt they will have to be used for certain purposes.

Had there been a federal Progressive Conservative Government over the last few years, it is my submission that the situation would have been much different than it is today. We feel that the Public Service should not be used for political purposes. The Public Service should be beyond political partisanship. We have the concept of honesty in our dealings with public servants. Of course, the Public Service unions would find it fairly tough bargaining with a PC Government, of that there is no doubt. But when an agreement is reached and a contract signed, sealed and delivered, the unions could be absolutely assured that it would not change and that it would go for the term of the agreement.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Remember how badly Michael Pitfield did.

Mr. Nickerson: A broken contract is bad enough for people who are still working, but when it comes to pensioners, people who have no leverage, who are unable to withdraw their services, either collectively or individually, then it is a terrible thing. These people have nobody to protect them except Parliamentarians. It would appear to me that the majority of Parliamentarians in this House are not up to that job and are not doing the job of protecting people who are unable to protect themselves.

Why we get into these types of situations is a question I have asked myself. But one of the more philosophical points would be the difference in strategy, outlook or concept between the Liberal and NDP Parties, on the one hand, and the Conservatives on the other. The Liberals' view of the national economy is that it is a zero sum game. They view the wealth of the nation as being a fixed sum. They are preoccupied with the distribution of this fixed sum. They like cutting the pie in different ways.

What we have in Canada is a gigantic Government, a giant maw that has to be fed more regardless of what happens to the private sector, the pensioners, or anybody else. The amount of funds required to feed that mouth are fixed. When the economy declines and public revenues are not coming in, then somebody else has to give; somebody else's slice of the pie has to be smaller. In this case, the Liberal Government has decided that it is the Public Service pensioners who will have to get the thinner slice of pie and subsist on less.

The Progressive Conservative view of the national economy and the way things should be run is that we should have an expanding economy. Instead of concentrating on dividing a fixed sum, we should be concentrating on releasing the shackles that tie up business enterprise.

I will not go into this matter. We have explained many times in this House how that might be accomplished. For instance, on many occasions the Hon. Member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson) has put forward the concept of productive economics. If this were to be followed, then the pie would be expanded and everyone's slice would get larger day by day. We could afford to have the type of indexed pensions that public servants have now. Hopefully, we would be able to expand and allow other Canadians to have the same types of benefits.

• (1530)

With the Conservative approach to the economy, we would be able to afford decent pensions that we would like all Canadians to have. We could have pensions which would have a fixed real value in time instead of a declining real value.

One of the most painful aspects of the debate, I am sorry to say, has been the participation of the New Democratic Party. Its Members have apparently chosen this issue as the one by which to put some distance between themselves and their erstwhile friends whom they normally support—

Some Hon. Members: The Tories!

Mr. Nickerson: —the Liberal Party.

Mr. Althouse: We vote with you guys most of the time.

Mr. Nickerson: I am sorry to say that this tactic on their part has backfired. They have been utterly incapable of preventing passage of the Bill and they have revealed to the public at large their utter toothlessness. They have flailed their arms in the wind and blamed everyone for the plight of pensioners in whom they apparently now have a feigned interest.

In fact, I was listening very intently to the Hon. Member for Kootenay East-Revelstoke (Mr. Parker) yesterday, and this hon. gentleman even went as far as blaming that old NDP bugbear, the Canadian Pacific Railway. I do not see the connection, myself. Undoubtedly, that hon. gentleman can.

Mr. Ellis: He blames everything on CP.

Mr. Nickerson: All that the Members of the NDP have suceeded in showing is that if their policies were to be followed, they would be in precisely the same position as the Liberal Government. In fact, to all intents and purposes, their policies are the same. The pensioners, under such a regime, would be in even worse shape than they are today.

Let us reconsider this issue. Let us take advantage of the opportunity offered to us this morning by the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) by way of his amendment which would put off the day of reckoning for another six months and would allow for the process of consultation between representatives of pensioners and people who will be pensioners and the Government of Canada. Let us take that extra six months which has been offered to us before finally dealing with the issue. I am sure that we can come up with a better deal for Canadian public service pensioners than we have today.

For these reasons, then, I wish to support the amendment with the majority of Members of my Party—all of the Members of my Party, as far as I know.

Some Hon. Members: Majority.

An Hon. Member: Well, 54.

Mr. Nickerson: I wish to support the amendment put forward by the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton and register my opposition and our opposition to the passage of third reading of Bill C-133.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Is the Hon. Member for Kootenay East-Revelstoke (Mr. Parker) rising to ask a question of the Hon. Member?

Mr. Parker: Yes, Mr. Speaker, if I may ask a short question. My question is with regard to his comments on the six month heist. Could he explain why his Party did not recommend this same heist when the initial six and five program—

Mr. Beatty: Heist or hoist?

Mr. Parker: —was brought into being?

Mr. Beatty: It is the Government which is engaging in a heist.

Mr. Parker: The President of CP Rail, and this identifies the reason why CP Rail was brought into this dispute, headed the blue chip committee which recommended the six and five program and was selling it across Canada, while the Conservatives voted in the House to break contracts which were fully negotiated through mediation and so on.

Now we have a system and we supported the idea of the six month hoist and we will support the request of the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) but we will not support the change in indexing, regardless of whether it is six months down the road. Therefore, my question is: how can the Conservatives, on one hand, ask for a six month hoist for one proposal while, on the other, they stormed into the House and voted with the Liberals to bring in the very program which is now hurting the pensioners of Canada?

Mr. Nickerson: I thank the Hon. Member for Kootenay East-Revelstoke for his question. It appears that at least I listen to his speeches and he listens to mine. That is quite an improvement. I would be very pleased to explain to him what happened over the last two or three months with regard to the general process of restraint.

We on this side of the House agree that, wherever possible, the Government should restrain its expenditures. We dislike an ever-increasing deficit because we feel that that leads to inflation and, in the long run, to a lack of jobs. Therefore, when the Government, in its wisdom—and I say that advisedly—first put before the House the general concept of restraint on Government expenditures, we voted for that particular idea.

If Hon. Members will recall, Bill C-124, one of the first pieces of this companion legislation, was a Bill which reduced the salaries, indemnities, of Members of Parliament and their expense allowances and pensions, and we thought that if there was to be restraint, then we as Members of Parliament should take the lead. Therefore, we were in favour of the reduction in our own salaries. However, when it comes to public service pensioners, many of whom live on $6,000, $7,000 or $8,000 a year and really cannot afford to take that decrease, whereas we are receiving $50,000 a year or better, we feel that it is incumbent on us to protect their interests and not to let them be cut down by the Liberal Government opposite.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Parker: I would like to ask a supplementary question, if I may. That appears to be the rationale, and my next question is: if the Conservative Party believes in free collective bargaining, why did they not, during that process, request that consultation or negotiation take place with these groups so that they could also be heard and understood? Then we probably would not be facing the very dictatorial way in which the Government is dealing with our Public Service pensioners.

Mr. Nickerson: I am very pleased to answer that question. The view put forward by the Hon. Member for Kootenay East-Revelstoke that there should have been consultations and negotiations at that time was, in fact, the substance of an amendment moved at that time on behalf of the Progressive Conservative Party by the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton, who is leading this side in the debate.

Mr. Mazankowski: He has memory lapses.

Mr. Nickerson: And I remember speaking in strong support of that amendment myself. That was precisely the view taken by this side of the House, by this Party, that there should be negotiations, that the matter should be resolved in consultation with representatives of the public servants. Unfortunately, we were outvoted on that matter.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I would also like to make a brief comment and ask a question of the Hon. Member for Western Arctic. The Hon. Member has indicated his Party's longstanding opposition to interference with the rights of pensioners. The Conservatives, in general, have stated that they were opposed to taking action which would in any way limit the pensions of those who are in receipt of them. I wonder if the Hon. Member could explain something on behalf of the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton, who has been extremely noisy concerning this matter. Some kind soul referred to him as the Houdini of the Conservative Party. I wonder if he could explain why, when Bill C-124 was before the House in August, on August 3, and it was pointed out to them that the legislation would include pensionable income and would adversely affect the pensions of the employees of the Government, in the face of a motion put by this Party to exclude pensions from the six and five program, the Conservative Party joined with the Liberal Party to defeat our motion? Is it possible to explain why the Conservative Members joined with the Liberals on that particular action, to defeat our motion to protect the pensions of civil service pensioners?

• (1540)

Mr. Nickerson: The preamble was so long that I hardly got the question, Mr. Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Oh!

Mr. Nickerson: I must admit I am not fully familiar with the technicalities the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) is placing before me today.

An Hon. Member: Neither is the Member for Hamilton Mountain.

Mr. Nickerson: I would be very pleased to review the debates and those things that the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain mentioned. I would have to admit that there were certain things in Bill C-124 that go against the grain when you have to vote on it. That happens with practically every Bill of any length that is placed before this House. There is a Bill about three inches thick and one can maybe agree wholeheartedly with two and one half inches of it, and perhaps one can live with another quarter of an inch, but perhaps dislike very much the remaining quarter of an inch. Sometimes you have to vote in favour of the majority of what is contained in a Bill, while at the same time accepting something you may not really like that much.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): The Member for Hamilton Mountain is rising on a brief supplementary question.

Mr. Deans: Following directly on his answer, the Member says that frequently a Bill is complex and covers a variety of things and that in general you may disagree with certain of them but on balance you support the majority of things. Let me put to the Member that what I am talking about is the following: let me read it to the House. I am reading from the record. It was moved by the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy) and seconded by the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Mrs. Mitchell) that:

For the purpose of calculating pension benefits payable under any Act of Parliament to employees to whom this part applies, subsection (1) shall be deemed to increase wage rates proportionally to increases in the Consumer Price Index for the calendar years corresponding most nearly to the periods referred to therein.

Now what it did was to make sure there would be no reduction in pension, and we pointed that out to the Conservatives as they stood to vote. Why did the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) and why did the other Members of the Conservative Party rise on August 3 and support the reduction in pensioners' incomes, and now why are they standing up and pretending that somehow they are defending pensioners?

Mr. Nickerson: My memory has been refreshed on this issue, Mr. Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nickerson: I was talking to the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker), whose memory is a little better than mine. It appears that what happened is that during the report stage on Bill C-124—and you ruled earlier that we should not speak about past Bills, but this matter was brought up by the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain so I feel obliged to reply to it—they introduced the motion that he just read out, and in fact at the report stage a very similar motion was introduced by the Progressive Conservative Opposition. It was the finding of the Chair at that time that those motions were out of order, and they were not put before the House. Therefore, of course, there was no vote on these matters, and the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain, I am afraid, is rather in error. His memory of these events is no better than mine initially was, before I was put right by the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): I was talking about Bill C-133.

Mr. Deans: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. On a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): The Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Deans: My point of order is that the Member has mistated what is factual on page 523—

Some Hon. Members: That is not a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. That is not a point of order. The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre.

Mr. John Evans (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, every sector of our economy, indeed our society, is facing an extremely difficult time. The private economy has serious problems, business profits have fallen over 50 per cent in the last year from an already low level, the number of bankruptcies is higher than at any time since the Great Depression, wage and salary increases in the private and the public sectors alike have fallen dramatically to the 5 per cent and 6 per cent range and, indeed, in many cases there has been an absolute reduction in compensation.

The over million and a half unemployed Canadians represent the highest number of unemployed since the 1930s. The youth unemployment rate is in the range of 25 per cent, Mr. Speaker, and it is estimated that even with full employment a budgetary deficit in the range of $5 billion would continue. All major economic organizations agree that we are facing a world economic crisis, a battle for our very economic survival. Governments all over the western world, irrespective of political stripe, are realizing and acting on the necessity of restraining expenditures, even social expenditures.

Governments must act to restrain all outlays of the taxpayers' dollars because the taxpayer cannot bear more. At the same time we simply cannot borrow more against the future for this would place even heavier burdens on future generations.

I have personally fought long and hard to have this attitude of fiscal responsibility adopted by the Government, and I will continue in this effort. An economic crisis such as the one we are now facing requires not only that real restraint be achieved but that the remaining Government spending be refocused on those areas which promise to contribute the most in the fight to restore economic growth. We will not have rising standards of living without economic growth; we will not provide opportunities for our citizens without growth; we will not be able to support social expenditures, even at present levels, without restored growth.

The Government has responded and will respond further, Mr. Speaker. This is the concept within which the six and five program was introduced. The Government has acted to restrain the increases in program expenditures to no more than 6 per cent and 5 per cent. The Provinces and municipalities have followed suit, in the main, and all areas of federal outlay, including administered prices, have fallen under the restraint program. Where it can be shown that expenditure of taxpayers' dollars is involved, six and five must apply, as much for the credibility of the program as for the effectiveness of the program.

With these comments in mind, let me turn my attention to the public servant pension issue. The Public Service pension plan is a private plan, as opposed to a public plan, and is comprised of two parts, the Public Service Superannuation Account established in 1924 and the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Account established in 1970. These are independent accounts under the current structure, and funds cannot be transferred from one account to another. The Public Service Superannuation Account provides a basic pension for retired public servants. This basic pension is calculated at 2 per cent per year of service multiplied up to a maximum of 35 years times the average of the six consecutive years of highest salary, usually the last six years. This type of plan is commonly referred to as a final average plan. This calculation determines the pension one receives at the date of retirement and is an amount which remains constant thereafter. It does not increase over time.

The SRBA provides for all increases in pensions beyond retirement, that is, indexation. Such increases are based on changes over any given year, from October to the following September, in the Consumer Price Index, specifically the average of the previous 12 month figure for the CPI. Each public servant has an individual SRBA account. Funds may not be transferred between the accounts of the individual members. Indexation is thus funded from a Member's account until it is exhausted. Thereafter, it is funded out of general tax revenue.

With regard to the funding of the plan, public servants make contributions to both of these accounts. Contributions to the PSSA are made at a rate of 6.5 per cent of salary, less required contributions to the Canada Pension Plan. Contributions to the SRBA are made by an additional 1 per cent of salary; from 1970 to 1977 this was one-half of 1 per cent of salary. Both of these amounts are matched by an equal contribution by the employer with a one-year lag in the case of PSSA contributions, and interest is paid on the balance in each account.

Interest earned by the PSSA is calculated as though the funds were invested in 20 year Government of Canada Bonds. New contributions plus interest on the fund, which are not required to pay current benefits in any quarter, are invested at the then current rate on such bonds. For the year 1982, the rate of return on investment of the PSSA was over 10 per cent.

Interest is also paid on the balances in the SRBA. It is calculated quarterly at the rate of interest for five year Government bonds, less one-eighth of 1 per cent. As of September 30, 1982, the rate being paid on the SRBA was 16.1 per cent.

What are actuarial assumptions? The contribution rates for every pension plan are based upon a set of assumptions as to life expectancy, interest earned on account balances, levels of benefits to be paid, and so on. Since the Public Service pension plan is a final average plan, in other words benefits are calculated on the basis of the average of only the six highest consecutive years of salary and also involves inflation adjustments, there are certain key assumptions which should be mentioned. These relate to the rate of inflation, the rate of interest to be earned and the rate of increase in salary levels.

These assumptions have been established by the Chief Actuary of the Department of Insurance, who is independent from the administrators of this plan, and are not significantly different from those employed by the actuaries for most other private pension plans. This fact was confirmed by Mr. Murray Segal of the firm of Eckler, Brown, Segal and Co. when he was appearing before the Miscellaneous Estimates Committee on behalf of the Professional Institute of Public Service and, with regard to the last report of the actuary, Mr. Segal indicated that he did not dispute any of the significant conclusions that had been reached in that report. I will refer to that later on.

The actuary in setting up the contribution rates to the plan is assuming that real interest rates will be 3.5 per cent, that is, interest rates will exceed inflation by this amount over the long term and salary increases will likewise exceed inflation by 2.5 per cent. These assumptions are then used to determine contribution rates to be paid during a plan member's working life so as to fully fund one's retirement pension. So long as these relationships hold, and proper contributions are paid, the funds should be available to pay the anticipated pension until death.

The actuarial rate of interest should not be confused with the interest rate actually earned on the invested fund. As was indicated earlier, the actual rates are determined by the rates applicable on Government of Canada Bonds in the marketplace. The relationship between the actuarial rate and the earned rate gives rise to the term "excess interest". Much has been said about excess interest and the use to which it is and should be put.

As a general rule, excess interest is used in private pension plans, especially those whose benefits are based on a final average of salaries, as the PSSA is, to offset what is termed unfunded liabilities. An unfunded liability arises when salaries increase at a rate faster than assumed in the actuarial assumptions. This means, of course, that the contribution rates which are based on these assumptions were too low in the earlier years of one's working career. This shortfall is magnified when the pension is based on the average salary during the last few years of employment.

However, at the same time, and generally for the same reasons, as salaries grow at a higher rate than assumed, interest rates should also exceed the rate assumed. On average then, the shortfall of contributions should be offset by the excees interest earned on invested funds. Therefore, the unfunded liability for current and past service is logically and properly reduced by the excess interest, and the plan remains fully funded.

This same analysis should apply in the case of inflation adjustment of pensions after retirement, assuming that contribution rates were adequate. Again, as I said, this assumes the adequacy of the plans funding. If contribution rates had been too low, or if the real interest earned is less than the 3.5 per cent assumed, then the plan will be under-funded and chronic and rising long-term deficits will occur. Let me now turn to this subject.

Is our plan fully funded? Unfortunately, the answer to this question is no. There are two reasons for this. First, contribution rates have been too low in the past, particularly contributions to the SRBA. Second, the rate of interest paid on balances in the two accounts has been below that which was assumed, and will continue to be inadequate so long as interest is credited at the rate paid on Government of Canada Bonds. Historically, the real rate on these bonds has been from 2 to 2.5 per cent. In fact, the period from 1800 to 1977 showed that Government bonds interest rates were around 2 to 3 per cent real during that entire period. You will recall that the rate assumed by the actuary is 3.5 per cent, so there has been a 1 per cent shortfall.

These facts have been clearly established. The actuary of the plan indicated in his 1977 report that to fully fund the PSSA/SRBA as a combined entity, contributions would have to be increased from 15 per cent of salary, less CPP as the case is today, to around 18 per cent of salary, less CPP, which would be required. In other words, employee-employer contributions, or some combination of both, would have to be increased by a total of 3 per cent. This conclusion, as noted earlier, was supported by Mr. Segal of Eckler, Brown, Segal actuaries, an independent witness before the Standing Committee of Miscellanious Estimates.

Finally, the latest report of the Auditor General indicated that the unfunded liability of the combined Public Service Superannuation Account and the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Account is currently $7.5 billion. Mr. Thompson, Principal of Public Accounts, of the Office of the Auditor General, stated in a letter to me:

—the unrecorded part of the pension liability does represent a shortfall between pension entitlements and contributions to date.

The liability for the combined PSSA, CFSA and RCMPSA, which are the Canadian Forces and RCMP equivalents, is in the range of $12.5 billion, as reported by the Auditor General. In other words, these pension plans combined should have an account balance of $40 billion, as opposed to the current $27.5 billion which is on the account books, if all pension liabilities accrued to date were indeed fully funded. The equivalent for the PSSA/SRBA alone is around $23 billion in the account as opposed to the current balance of $15.5 billion. Clearly, there is no surplus in the PSSA. To claim that the $15.5 billion itself is a surplus is absolutely incorrect and misleading.

Other claims were made during the committee hearings and the debate. First, there is the claim that there is a surplus in the PSSA in the amount of $15.5 billion. This statement, as I have shown, is simply untrue. I stand on the reports by actuaries and by the Auditor General.

The second claim is that public servants have themselves contributed more than the total of all pensions paid to date. Whether or not this is true is irrelevant since our plan, thankfully, is not a pay-as-you-go plan. It is a funded plan. This means that each person's pension is paid for by that person's contributions, employee plus employer plus interest.

There have been primarily two reasons for the growth of the fund over time and the fact that the fund does now stand at $15.5 billion. First, the rapid growth in the size of the Public Service during the 1970s resulted in more people making contributions. The second, of course, is the rapid increase in the level of salaries due to inflation which greatly increased the dollar value of contributions that were paid.

• (1600)

There is another claim, Mr. Speaker, that Bill C-133 is precedent setting in that it alters an agreement which has previously been unchanged. Neither is this correct. The plan has been changed after consultation, admittedly, by the Government alone on several occasions. Initially, indexation was capped at a maximum of 2 per cent per year up until 1972. Full indexation came into effect only thereafter. During the AIB in 1976, the maximum dollar amount of indexation was capped at $2,400. In 1977, the rate of contribution to cover indexation was raised from one half of one per cent of salary to 1 per cent of salary. In 1978-79, Bill C-12 was introduced, received second reading, and was reported unanimously by all Parties back to the House from committee. It would have provided indexation only to the extent that it could be paid for by the plan itself. There would have been no guarantees and no further claim on general revenue. For the three years from 1979 to 1981, for example, it was estimated that full indexation could have been paid only on the first $7,000 of pension. Greater amounts would have been indexed by only about 7 per cent. And I believe the facts were that in 1979 it would be 8 per cent, in 1980 it would be 7 per cent and in 1981 it would be 6 per cent. As stated above, of course, this legislation never became law.

Another claim, Mr. Speaker, was that the six and five program will result in a permanent loss for pensioners, whereas working public servants can catch up for reductions in salary increases. This is an extremely tenuous proposition at best. It has not been supported over the period since 1975 when average Public Service salaries increased by less than did Public Service pensions, which was 96 per cent as compared to 102 per cent. Certainly, any public servant retiring in the next six or more years will suffer a lower pension as a result of the effects of the six and five program on salaries, and the consequent effect this has on the basic pension determined by the average of his or her best consecutive six years' salary. Further, the very difficult times we face now, and will probably face over the medium term in the employment area, will undoubtedly act to hold down future salary increases. It is highly unlikely, therefore, that such conditions will allow any widespread "catch up" to occur.

Another claim, Mr. Speaker, is that the Government's actions in Bill C-133 are a single-minded attack on retired public servants. I disagree. Every Government program, save those directed at people in greatest need, which would include the GIS and the Child Tax Credit, for example, is subjected to the six and five program. All these actions change what we had come to expect would occur, and in some cases modifies existing arrangements. To some degree, implied or actual commitments have been changed in all of these cases. None of us is pleased that such measures have been necessary. They can only be justified by the depth of the overriding national economic crisis, and the broadly accepted urgent need to assist those suffering most from the recession and to pursue fiscal restraint to promote economic recovery.

If our pension plan is not fully funded, if pensioners under the plan are indeed being partially funded out of general revenue with regard to indexation, is it realistic to expect that such funding can be excluded from the over-all restraint plan? Is it realistic to expect the representatives of the people from other parts of Canada to support our appeal for exclusion from the restraint program? With all honesty, Mr. Speaker, I must say that I do not believe so.

Where do we stand now? Given the information provided above, could we have expected Bill C-133 to be withdrawn? I think not. But we can try to achieve certain other objectives. Specifically, we can attempt to ensure that only the portion of indexing paid by taxpayers' funds is subjected to restraint. Moneys flowing from the contributions and earnings should not be subjected to restraint, and Mr. Gray has agreed to amendments which would include that principle. More important, we can demand that the plan be put on a sound basis once and for all to prevent future political incursions. Mr. Gray, today, has agreed to seek—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. I am sorry to interrupt the Hon. Member. He still has a minute left. But I should remind him that he should refer to his colleagues in the House either by their portfolio or the name of their riding.

Mr. Evans: Thank you. I apologize, Mr. Speaker. I should have said the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray). As indicated earlier, the six and five program is terribly important to the economic recovery program of the nation, if only because it has provided a concrete basis for the establishment of a national consensus for Government action. My caucus colleagues are of the strong opinion that no exception can be made to the principles of that program. Within the context of six and five, I have fought the case of Public Service pensioners, but I could not win the day since my appeals violated my colleagues' perception of what was fair and necessary in the national interest. My colleagues are willing to see modifications to Bill C-133 in this context, and are prepared to support my demand for modifications to put the plan on a sound footing and remove the possibility for future political manipulation. But to receive support in this effort it is incumbent upon me to provide support for the over-all six and five program. I cannot expect other Members to deal fairly with my appeals if, when all the facts are in, I am not prepared to accept the facts and support the results.

If I could have one more minute, Mr. Speaker, I would like to put forward the proposals—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): I must inform the Hon. Member that his time is up. He may only continue with the unanimous consent of the House.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): There is not unanimous consent. Is the Hon. Member for Kootenay East-Revelstoke (Mr. Parker) rising to question the Hon. Member?

Mr. Parker: Yes, I have a question for the Hon. Member. He has mentioned that he would like to see the pension on a sound basis. He has also mentioned the possibility of the principle of the six and five. I would like to ask the Hon. Member what his views are on the Government's policy of not consulting with the advisory committee of the pension group, not consulting with the unions involved, not consulting with the pensioners' groups before this action was taken. Does he agree with that process?

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, since the proposal was brought in as part of the six and five program, which was part of a budget, I absolutely agree with it. There is no way that a Minister of the Crown proposing a budget can discuss budgetary proposals in advance, and that Party would be the first one to condemn the Government for violation of budget secrecy, if the Minister intended to do so. In addition, the Hon. Member's question referred to proposals, so I would like to put on the record exactly what those proposals are.

First of all, I am calling for an integration of the two funds currently comprising the pension plan. Second, a conversion of these plans to "Fully-funded/excess-interest" system of inflation protection, with the necessary modifications to contribution rates, the provisions for dealing with existing unfunded liability and the rates of interest which are paid on those account balances. Third, the establishment of an independent representative third-party body to act as a board of trustees empowered to oversee and administer the major features of the plan, to include pensioners, employees as well as the employer. I would ask that the Minister consider these modifications at the earliest possible date, and that these be brought forward for implementation no later than January 1, 1985, when full indexation is to be restored.

Mr. Parker: My supplementary is to the same Hon. Member. Is he aware that the business sector was contacted and a chairman was selected to expound on the six and five program to the business sector, and yet the Government did not see fit prior to its budget to consult with the workers or the pensioners involved in the program. I see a little bit of contradiction here, and I wonder if his executive people have given him the answer to that one also?

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, I do not need any help answering any questions from that Hon. Member. The fact is that no one was notified or indicated what was in the budget prior to budget night. After the budget, certainly an advisory committee on six and five was established, but that was done after the budget was presented in this House of Commons, as is proper and traditional in British Parliamentary practice.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, this is the first opportunity I have had to participate in this new enterprise of asking questions. I must say it is difficult because I have to sit through the speeches in order to ask the questions. But I have done that, and I have been sufficiently punished in having to listen to that Hon. Member try to rationalize. My question to him is: does he, as a Member of Parliament for Ottawa Centre, think that the Canadian Government has the right, legally or morally, to unilaterally change the pension plan for the Public Service retirees, those people who are already retired, as proposed in the legislation that is now before the House? That is the question, not all of these specious rationalizations which the Hon. Member has engaged in. This is a question he is being asked by people who live in his district and which he has failed to answer. He sends out form letters which do not answer the questions which he is asked.

• (1610)

I have a letter here which asks a simple question. Does the Member of Parliament for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans), where many thousands of pensioners live, think that he has the right to support the Government, legally or morally, in unilaterally changing this pension plan for people who are retired? Yes or no. It is a simple question which his constituents deserve to have an answer to, not all this mish-mash of this fund or that fund and amalgamate the fund. He is putting the blocks to those pensioners and they want an answer.

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, I stood on my voting record at second reading, and I will stand on my voting record on third reading, in answer to that question.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, I do not want to blackguard the hon. gentleman unnecessarily because he is so easy to blackguard by just using the truth. Did the hon. gentleman vote for the principle of this legislation, and has he voted for it continuously since it came into the House? Because if he did, it means he believes the Government has the right, legally and morally, to change the pension plan unilaterally. His constituents want to know that.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. Before allowing that question, the Chair should perhaps caution Hon. Members that the question has to relate to the topic at hand. Questions relating to previous votes, it seems to me, stretch the matter of relevancy a great distance.

Mr. Crosbie: It is this Bill.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): If the Chair may suggest, Members' votes are one the record for all Members and the public to see. I would appeal to Hon. Members to adhere as much as possible to the rule of relevancy and not refer to something which happened in this House at some previous time in the course of other stages of the debate. But in any case, I will recognize the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans) for the purpose of answering the question as put.

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, I will answer the question as put. As I have said from day one on this, as long as taxpayers' dollars are being used to pay, then the Government has not only the right but the obligation to see that those taxpayers' dollars are properly used. If a restraint program is going to be applied to the expenditure of taxpayers' dollars, then it should apply globally to the expenditure of taxpayers' dollars.

Mr. Crosby: Mr. Speaker, I have some sympathy for the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans) because I can see how he is torn between his duty and loyalty to the Government which he supports in the House of Commons and his loyalty and duty to his constituents who in many cases are currently employed in the federal Public Service and in other cases are retired members of that Public Service. I want to help him along with his difficulty by pointing out to him that when the so-called six and five program was introduced in the House of Commons on June 28, 1982, by the then Minister of Finance, the Hon. Member for Cape Breton Highlands-Canso (Mr. MacEachen), the indication was that the Government was promoting a restraint in the Government spending program to bring inflation into line, and possibly to bring it down to the level of six and five. That was the goal as announced by the Government in the House, and I can see why the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre might be prepared to support that program in the interests of his constituency which includes both retired and working federal public servants.

However, the problem I now see for the Hon. Member is that seven months have gone by, we are now at the end of January, the inflation rate is 9.3 per cent and nowhere near the six and five. Is he not now faced with revising the view he took months ago in support of the Government's program? Is he not now faced with his duty and loyalty to his constituents in that the Government has been proved to be wrong in its prognostications, there will be no 6 per cent or 5 per cent inflation rate and in fact his constituents are faced with a 9.3 per cent inflation rate?

Is he now prepared to revise his view, abandon the position he has taken in the past, and now vote against this terrible Bill?

Mr. Evans: No, Mr. Speaker. The Government's six and five program, in conjunction with other economic policies, is indeed working. Inflation has gone down from over 11 per cent in the early summer to 9.3. If we look at the last three months of the year it is down to 6.5 per cent; indeed, there was no change at all in the price index during the month of December.

On this issue, Mr. Speaker, I think there is a long Public Service tradition, with which I was raised when I was working in the Public Service, that you give the best possible advice to your Minister and then when the Minister makes a decision, you stand behind your Minister. That tradition is alive and well in the Liberal Party of Canada and, I would expect, in the New Democratic Party as well. I tell the Hon. Member that he would have a lot fewer problems in that Party had they followed that tradition as well.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. The time for questions is over.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity to participate in this debate because it is an important one and, of course, another nail in the coffin of this Government. What is happening here, Mr. Speaker? The agitation for indexation of Government employees' pensions only came about in order that they could keep up with the cost of living, which resulted from the negligence and failure of the present Government to deal with the problem of inflation. There would be no need to have Government employees' pensions indexed if there was not the threat of inflation. Why is there this threat? Because we have had a group of incompetents in charge of the economy of this country since 1968. The same group whose Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said that he had stomped inflation into the ground, that inflation was overcome and conquered. That same gentleman is now introducing legislation into this House, asking us to take away the indexing of civil servants' pensions, not because inflation has been overcome, not because last year inflation was only 5 per cent or 6 per cent; he is asking us to do this because the battle against inflation has not been overcome, because his Government has been such a failure and has gone back on its sacred word to the electorate of Canada in the 1980 election. Then, Mr. Speaker, after having proven it can no longer be trusted to control inflation, and having agreed to give civil servants and pensioners the right to have their pensions indexed, people who paid for that indexing, this same Government which has shown it is monumentally incapable of controlling inflation because it went over 12 per cent just a few months ago, now brings in legislation to take away the protection its public servants had against inflation. It is not because the Government thinks it now has the answer to inflation. It does not. The Government is now proclaiming victories because the inflation rate is down, in the last year over year, to 9.3 per cent or 9.6 per cent or whatever it is. Here we have in today's paper, The Toronto Sun, the Finance Minister saying "Inflation is on the Ropes". This is what the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) said: "The war on inflation is almost won". How often have we heard that said by this degenerate Government, by this incompetent Government, by this inconsequential and fraudulent Government? How often has it proclaimed these victories? Then today we see the Minister of Finance saying that inflation is on the ropes. He has legislation before this House right now so that pensions next year will not be indexed in excess of 6.5 per cent. That is not 9.3 per cent year over year, and not what the Government's own agencies are doing. Here is another selection from today's paper: "Bank of Canada's pensions up 11.5 per cent". Why are they up 11.5 per cent? The Bank of Canada, by the way, is the Government's agent which is supposed to control inflation. Why are the pensions of employees of the bank going up 11.5 per cent this year? Because the bank had no choice, they say, under the bank's staff pension plan. In a statement, Mr. Bouey said that the bank felt bound to grant the increase because it was required under the rules of the bank's pension plan and that because of the rate of inflation and the increase in the cost of living last year the bank would give an increase of 11.5 per cent this year—not 6.5 or 5.5 per cent, Mr. Speaker. The Bank of Canada could ask the Government to do for its employees exactly what the Government is doing for its own former employees and that is, bring them under the legislation that is now before the House.

• (1620)

If the Government was concerned with equity and fairness, it would not allow the pensions of people who formerly worked for the Bank of Canada, which is the main institution that is supposed to fight inflation along with the Government—and they have both failed—to increase its pensions by 11.5 this year while the rest of Government retirees receive an increase of only 6.5 per cent, even though they suffer the same inflation rate as the pensioners of the Bank of Canada. There is no justice in that, Mr. Speaker.

We are dealing with pension pulverizers, actuarial arsonists, Mr. Speaker. When I listened to the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans) give specious arguments to cover up the fact that he was turning his back on federal Government pensioners who live in his riding of Ottawa Centre, I thought he was trying to justify the tearing up and burning down of the solemn commitments made to them by the Government. He is an actuarial arsonist, Mr. Speaker, and all his speechifying and qualifying and the details and nonsense he offers is not going to obscure the fact that he is going for the long trip. When the next election comes, he will need his Member's pension. He is on the skids; he is on his way out. He is going to get the flick, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Lang: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: If the Hon. Member opposite has a conscience he will not be able to vote for the Bill when I am through. He should just listen to what I am saying and stop bleating. The Hon. Member for Kitchener (Mr. Lang) continually bleats, Mr. Speaker, and I want him to stop bleating and to let his heart start beating.

I have in my hand a document with the heading "Notes for remarks by the Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau to the Campaign College, Toronto, January 12, 1980." This was the election platform of the Right Hon. Prime Minister and his Party. I shall not read it all, naturally, because it would sicken the people across the country who are listening to me today. They would have an automatic attack of flu if they listened to it all.

He said this:

> The Liberal program seeks to provide stability, equity, and security for the 1980s.

Security, Mr. Speaker! Is this the security that the Prime Minister said he was going to provide for the 1980s—jackbooting, blackjacking the old age pensioners and the pensions of the federal Government retirees? Is this the security he was going to provide? Then he said this:

Canadians want to cast their vote for a party which can bring some order and policy and programs. They want a party that knows where it's going.

That is not what they got, Mr. Speaker. The Government and the Party opposite does not know where it is going. It has no order or policies or programs. The public only knows that that Party is going down, that it has stabbed the public in the back and has gone back on every one of its solemn commitments.

Mr. Lang: There will be some stabbing in the back going on in Winnipeg.

Mr. Crosbie: If the Hon. Member for Kitchener will listen, he will discover why he will be defeated so abjectly in the next election.

Mr. Lang: You said that in the last election and yet I am here.

Mr. Crosbie: At the bottom of page 2, the Prime Minister said:

Our program for the 1980s consists of five major commitments:

This was from the gentleman leading the Liberal Party who had said that our budget and our program was so dastardly for the Canadian people. Looking back now, the Canadian people remember that program with fondness. All over the country statues are being put up to me, in honour of my budget. As I go around the country I am ashamed to see so many of them.

Mr. LeBlanc: It is a shame!

Mr. Crosbie: That was the Hon. Minister, formerly of fish, now of public works.

There were five major commitments, Mr. Speaker. The first was:

(1) to manage more rigorously the nation's finances in order to make more effective use of the taxpayers' money.

The deficit is now $23.5 billion so I will not go into that. The second one was:

(2) to achieve energy security at a fair price for all Canadians.

Ugh! A fair price for all Canadians? The price of energy has doubled in the last two years. The next one reads:

(3) to develop industrial policies that will provide jobs—

Imagine! With 1.6 million out of work the Government is going to provide jobs. That one goes on:

—spur growth, and increase Canadian ownership and control of the economy.

What is left of the economy, Mr. Speaker? That is the one thing they have done—increased Canadian ownership and control of the economy. There is damn little of the economy left. What is the good of an economy that is all Canadian owned when there is no economy left? We are reduced to building popsicle sticks. Number four reads:

(4) to build greater economic strength in each region of that country as the basis for overall Canadian prosperity.

They put the boots to Alberta, Saskatchewan and Newfoundland, they pushed Newfoundland down to its worst unemployment rate yet.

Point five is the relevant point, Mr. Speaker, I know you are cringing in your chair because you think I am not being relevant enough. It reads as follows:

(5) to enhance the security of the individual by helping those who most need assistance.

This was the fifth great point of the Liberal platform of January and February, 1980—"to enhance the security of the individual by helping those who most need assistance." There it is, people of Canada. I fool you not. It is in black and white, right on your TV screen. That was the promise. What are we doing today? We are voting on a Bill to take away indexing from former public servants and employees of this country who were promised it and who contributed to it. This is called enhancing the security of those individuals by helping those who most need assistance.

Let us go further with this six page document. I cannot go over it all because I do not have the time. On page five this appears:

This party will not simply stand by and let the recession come. We will fight it and overcome it.

They even knew the recession was coming. They promised to fight it and overcome it. I ask backbenchers opposite who meekly and blindly vote for everything this Government proposes, if they have seen any recession being fought and overcome during the last two and a half years. They have not. The worst recession is raging in the country since the 1930s, and it will be worse than that shortly, in my opinion. The Prime Minister claimed that the Liberals were going to lower unemployment and would use every economic tool to do so. Every day we can see on the benches opposite the economic tools the Government is using. On page six of this document this appears:

Fifth, the Liberal Party commits itself to enhancing the dignity and security of individual Canadians.

Hon. gentlemen opposite will get up and cheer and clap at the next Liberal convention when the Prime Minister says, "We commit ourselves to enhancing the dignity and security of individual Canadians". That is why there are 1.6 million unemployed. We do not give a continental damn about them, now that we are in power. We think they are going to forget it before the next election. That is why we put the blocks to the people who are on old age pensions. That is why we stopped indexing their pensions. That is why we have done the same to the crowd who get the Family Allowances. It is all because we are dedicated to "enhancing their dignity and security", and they cannot have dignity and security as long as they have incomes.

That is the new Liberal reasoning, Mr. Speaker.—you cannot have dignity and security as long as you have income. That is the principle of the legislation that is before the House.

Listen to this, Mr. Speaker, although I will excuse you if it makes you heave. On page six we find this:

We must set out sail firmly against this Tory tide of reaction and make the pledge that this party will put people first.

The people of Canada believed the Prime Minister and now they want the Tory Party back. They know that with us they will see real progress and will hear the truth. They know that they will have a Party that will carry out what it promises, not a Party that says it is committed to enhancing the dignity and security of individual Canadians but does not do anything about that except bring in legislation which flies in the face of that promise.

In the next paragraph he said:

We must endorse the right of every Canadian to have a job.

How can Members opposite stand in this House after having made that kind of commitment? How can they look at the figures for Newfoundland where unemployment runs at over 30 per cent, or at Sudbury? How can they stand the situation there? It is only because they are so used to being in power that they are beyond feeling anything. How can they say that they endorse the right of every Canadian to have a job when 1.6 million Canadians are out of work? Finally he said:

And most important of all, we must guarantee the income security of our older citizens. Retirement should be a time of peace rather than a time of fear. All this we will do. And more.

You can just see the Prime Minister in Toronto, all emotional and excited, telling the press that, most important of all, they must guarantee the income security of our older citizens and that retirement should be a time of peace rather than a time of fear, and that they will do all this.

He did not say that they were going to bring in legislation to stop people getting an indexed pension. He did not say to the tens of thousands of civil servants retired from Government employment and that he was going to cap their pensions. He did not say to the people who were getting Family Allowances or Old Age Security that those things were not going to be indexed any longer. He said that they must guarantee the income security of our older citizens.

It makes one sick to see how a Party can turn its back on its pledges and commitments and still carry on. This Party opposite will carry on right till the five years are up, right till they are forced out by the letter of the law. We will have to get writs of mandamus, injunctions and call out the army. The Governor General will have to act to get them to call an election because they are afraid to face the electorate. This is why I am voting against this legislation. I am voting against the legislation because it flies in the face of the Liberal program about which we were told in January and February 1980. These lies, deception and deceit inveigled the Canadian people to put us out before we had a chance to show what we could do, and put back in this bunch of cynics, hypocrites, defrauders and fraudulent misrepresentators. They fraudulently misrepresented their position to every old age pensioner. They promised them income security.

• (1630)

Mr. Lang: You should be ashamed.

Mr. Crosbie: You should be ashamed. You should vacate your seat. You should be the first to show some decency. The Hon. Member for Kitchener should show some decency. He should stop staying here bleating and get out. His finest moment will be the day that he resigns his seat.

Mr. Lang: It is your blood pressure that is going up.

Mr. Crosbie: I do not want to get excited, Mr. Speaker.

This legislation enables the Government to break an agreement into which it entered with public servants who are no longer there. They served their time and they are gone. This is the difference between all the other things they have done. Public servants are being—screwed is not the right word, not the polite word; what is a better word than screwed—screwed, blued and tattooed. The old age pensioners and Government pensioners are having that done to them. These people are now retired. They gave their services. They thought they had a commitment from the Government. Now they are told that they must bring down inflation by having the indexing removed from their pensions.

First the Government captures their votes, or tries to, by saying, "We are incompetent; we do not know how to overcome inflation, but we will protect you, the public servants of Canada, the Armed Forces personnel and so on, by giving you indexed pensions. Therefore, you do not have to worry about our economic incompetence. No matter how incompetent we are, if the cost of living goes up 100 per cent, your pensions will go up 100 per cent". That is what they said to those people. Many of them went out and voted for them on that condition. Then in 1980 they said what I quoted. Now they turn around and say, "It was all make believe. You will be better off if you do not get this additional income. Why, your security in your old age and your golden days you will enjoy much more if you have a Government which breaks its commitments and promises to you". That is what they have said to them. This is what the Prime Minister said when he stated that platform from which I read. He said, "We have an economic program which will enhance dignity". This is part of the program of the Prime Minister to enhance dignity—cutting back on Government pensioners. This is creating opportunities for whom? For the scoundrels that inhabit the Government like maggots in a piece of old fish. They are creating opportunities for them. They are not creating opportunities for anyone else. Yes, the patronage opportunity is there, but not for the ordinary person, not likely. "To provide security", this is what the Prime Minister said.

Where is that program? His backbenchers do not revolt. The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre does not go into or come out of caucus saying, "I will make our leader stick to the promises or, by God, I will leave the Party". No, he is the Indian rubber man. He has no backbone, no gumption. He rises in the House with these silly hypocrisies which we heard today, the slipshod nonsense about how, after all, they are not indexing the 1 per cent which employees contributed toward the indexing, that they will only limit the indexing on the part the Government contributes.

It is a major piece of treachery. It is an act of disdain and contempt for the Canadian people, particularly pensioners. This is why I am so delighted I am here today. I was off on business and I was not able to be here.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: I was not able to be here last week. I am sorry I missed last week because I would have had the chance to speak three or four times to see if I could get anything across to Hon. gentlemen opposite. They are breaking faith. This is trickery. They talk in international affairs about confidence-creating measures; we must have confidence-creating measures. How can the economy ever come back with this kind of confidence-destroying tactic? There is no confidence in the business community. There is no confidence in the investor. They have all been betrayed. Now there is no confidence in the Government by the old age pensioner. There is no confidence in the Government by the person who receives Family Allowance. There is no confidence in the Government by the 1.5 million people who are unemployed.

How can the Government lead us to an economic recovery? It cannot. It can only lead us to further treachery, trickery and skullduggery. They are breakers and enterers. They should be charged with break and entry, destroying the trust and confidence which people normally have in Government. They have broken and entered peoples' minds. They are worse than the criminal who breaks and enters an ordinary home.

I am coming toward the end of my time. I say that I am voting against this legislation. It is uncaring, unheeding, unknowing, unwholesome; it is treacherous and contrary to the program which the people of Canada were promised. I hope to be around when we come marching back to try to restore some of the things Canadians deserve and should never have had removed from them.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I should like to deal with three matters which arose in the debate today. The first one is the question of the motion of the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker).

Mr. Crosbie: I want a question.

Mr. Gauthier: You do not deserve any questions.

Mr. Crosbie: Why am I being discriminated against? They will not ask me questions.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. The Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) has the floor.

Mr. Gauthier: If I may give good advice to the Hon. Member, he has to be relevant and he has to be non-repetitive. He was not very relevant and he was very repetitious.

Dealing with the motion to hoist or to put off the vote on this motion to six months hence, I regret to tell the House that I cannot support it because I want the Bill to be disposed of today and beaten, if possible. I do not think the realities of the political world will allow that. Therefore I do not see any virtue in putting the hoist on this Bill so that it will be taken up six months hence, souring relations even more with public servants and making it very difficult for valid consultations to go on with the Bill over their heads.

I would like to join with the Minister and with other Members of the House in trying to make the consultation process work better in pension matters. I say to the Minister that I think there has to be a fundamental review of the issue and that there are several important issues at hand which must be looked at. In the Public Service Superannuation Act, the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act and all other pension accounts, there are important technical and fundamental issues which have to be addressed at this time and quickly. To that effect I recommend an approach to the Minister. In light of the statement this morning that we should look at this in the context of national pension reform, and because of the specificity of the matter of Public Service pensions, the Minister should consider setting up a task force—and he should give serious consideration to this without delay—to canvass the views of Public Service pensioners and organizations on the future of the Public Service Superannuation Act, the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act and all the others, respecting benefits, funding, financing, investments, administration, the role of employees and pensioners in determining these matters in future, and the long-term issues which are of concern to the Minister, to many employees and pensioners at this time.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Six months would give him time to set up a task force.

Mr. Gauthier: Of course the members of the task force would have to be credible to employees and pensioner organizations. Such a task force would be given full access to all pension data and records other than confidential policy papers between the Minister and his advisers. It would need staff assistance in carrying out financial and other propositions or projections. Finally, to achieve maximum credibility, I believe that it would be necessary for the report of the task force to be made available to employees, pensioners and their organizations when it is submitted to the Minister. If the Minister follows this course of action, it would enable him to make good on his promise that employees and pensioners should and will be consulted on important long-term pension matters, particularly if he moved to set up such a task force at this time and without delay. Such a task force, as I see it, would parallel basically what the Government is proposing to do by setting up a parliamentary committee to get the opinions of all interested Canadians on its Paper entitled "Better Pensions For Canadians."

• (1640)

My second point is with regard to a statement made this morning and repeated again by the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray) to the effect that there is no formal agreement with respect to Public Service pensions. He said that the present pension system, and I noted that down, does not form part of any agreement arrived at by collective bargaining.

Some have said to me that the Minister is implicitly suggesting that everything should be in writing. This would lead to bargaining on pensions. I have not heard in the last few months any unions suggest that we should bargain on pensions. If we came to this, I feel it would be admitting failure on all parts. If the government persists in arguing that gentlemen's agreements, hand shake agreements, and other unwritten agreements are not binding, Public Service unions may reluctantly conclude that they have no other choice but to formalize their pension arrangements, agreements and undertakings with the Government by putting these into collective agreements. As I have said, to me this would be to admit failure.

Since second reading debate on Bill C-133 started about a month and a half ago, a growing recognition has emerged that the fundamental issues faced by this Bill are one of credibility and trust. More specifically, can employees and pensioners believe the Government when it makes a promise, and can they trust the Government as an employer to keep its end of the bargain or agreement? When public servants retired or left the labour force they were told that their pensions would keep up with inflation. They were also told that their pension rights would not be altered without prior consultation. Bill C-133, if enacted, will break faith, in my opinion, with our pensioners on both these counts. Breaking faith or trust for that matter is rightly regarded as a very serious offence in most democratic societies. Trust and faith owe their existence to a structure that is made up of such things as mutual trust, respect and confidence; a sense of fair play and adherence to a comprehensive code of values that, for the most part, is not enshrined in any written document. When these elements permeate the fabric of our society, our social and human relations can withstand great pressure and testing.

The fact that pensioners are protesting the enactment of this Bill is to be expected. What I find surprising, though, is the strength of their protests and the deep sense of grievance, betrayal and outrage that they harbour over the Bill and the effect the Bill has had in creating a spreading atmosphere of mistrust and suspicion in the minds of many pensioners and employees of the Public Service. This, in part, I feel is due to the fact that Bill C-133 was sprung on them like a bolt from the blue, and so their reaction of complete surprise and shock is easy to understand.

To gain a better appreciation of this shell-shocked reaction of employees and pensioners, it is necessary to cast our minds back to 1975 and 1977 when the indexing of Public Service pensions was a highly controversial and emotional issue. Most of us who sat on the committee dealing with the issue remember how hard we had to work on that very, very important issue of indexing of Public Service pensions. At the height of this controversy, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) stated that:

—pensioners are out of the work force and cannot bargain or strike for larger incomes. They are not the cause of inflation, they are its victims. We have an obligation to protect them.

It is important to remember that this statement and others in a similar vein that were made by the late Robert Andras and the Hon. Judd Buchanan, were not made when controversy had died down, but when controversy was at its peak. In addition, the Government in these statements was not making a back-pedalling defence of indexing, but was proclaiming for all to hear that it was a fair and just measure and that it advocated such measures for its pensioners. These statements played a major role in giving pensioners a real sense of security about the future of their indexing.

In the last five years, a good deal of the heat and emotion over indexing has abated and increasing numbers of leaders in the private sector have been calling for better inflation protection for pensioners in the private sector, and the Government, by tabling its document entitled "Better Pensions for Canadians", took the same position and encourages, in its Green Paper, better inflation protection for all Canadians.

Another worry that employees and pensioners have is that if the Government feels it has the right to change unilaterally or abandon its commitments and undertakings with respect to indexing, what assurance do employees and pensioners have that the Government will not do the same thing to other pension commitments and undertakings? Much of the worry here is centred on the broad understanding that underlies the many measures the Government has instituted over the years for budgetary reasons, to limit the amounts it puts up for Public Service pensions. These measures have saved the Government and taxpayers billions of dollars and were measures that could not be taken by employers in the private sector. The unwritten agreement involved here is the understanding that if the measures taken to accommodate Government budgetary requirements, as distinct from pension requirements, undermined the financial viability of Public Service pension programs, the Government would step in and meet the shortfall. Perhaps it would be helpful if I described a few of the ways in which the Government over the years has managed to reduce its budgetary requirements for Public Service pensions.

The pension accounts earn interest at rates that are determined by averaging interest rates over the last 20 years in Government bond borrowing. Answers provided by the Treasury Board and tabled in the House on April 21, 1982, in response to a question that was placed on the Order Paper, indicate that by using this formula instead of current interest rates like the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Account, public debt charges that must be met by taxpayers have been reduced by over $5 billion to the end of 1980. I am told that one of the unions wrote the President of Treasury Board last spring seeking an update of this figure, but has not yet received a reply. Considering the level of interest rates in 1981 and 1982, I would not be surprised if the current figure showed that these public debt charge savings have now passed the $10 billion mark.

Government budgetary requirements have also been reduced because of the fact that Government matching contributions to the pension accounts are always made one fiscal year in arrears, while employees are required to make theirs every two weeks. This means that Government contributions are perpetually in arrears by amounts varying and ranging up to $500 million or more. It is worth noting that one year's interest on $500 million is just about equal to the amount the Government expects to save in its first year's implementation of Bill C-133.

Employees and pensioners have a deep concern and worry about this rate of interest which their pension accounts will earn in the future. The interest rate on the main accounts, as I have said, is determined by averaging interest rates on long-term Government securities over a 20 year period. As a result of this formula, the Government has for many years been able to use Public Service pension funds at rates of interest that have been well below current rates of interest. This situation will change though when rates of inflation come down to more realistic levels. When this happens the interest rate lag that is built into the formula will cause the pension accounts to earn interest at rates that will be well above current rates of interest. The question put to me by many pensioners and Public Service employees from time to time is, what assurance do employees and pensioners have when this occurs? Will the Government not then change the formula to suit its own purposes? This concern, in my view, is not easily dismissed as the current formula is not prescribed by statute but, rather, is determined by regulation.

• (1650)

Frankly, I do not know how to go about putting the minds of employees and pensioners at ease when they ask, "If the Government does not consider itself bound by commitments that are enshrined in statute, why should we believe that the Government will have a stronger attachment to commitments that are contained in regulations, particularly when these regulations can be changed without seeking the approval of Parliament?"

Of all the things that have transpired since Bill C-133 was introduced, I think nothing has perplexed employees and pensioners more than the tendency they have witnessed on the part of the Government to underestimate grossly the pension savings of its six and five proposal. When Governments embark on restraint programs, they are not usually inclined to hide their light under a bushel when it comes to telling the public about the savings they have achieved. If anything, they are usually accused of overstating the savings of their restraint initiatives. "Why", employees ask, "is the Government in this instance underestimating the financial impact of its Public Service legislative proposals?"

Another question I am asked is why the Government has said nothing about the pension savings which will result from the enactment of Bill C-124. As most Hon. Members are aware, the Government is required to credit large amounts to the Public Service Superannuation Act, the Canadian Forces Superannuation Act and the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Superannuation Act each year to cover the past service pension costs of salary revisions granted every year. When salaries are restrained, these amounts, which are called actuarial liability adjustments, are greatly reduced. Estimates which were provided to the Miscellaneous Estimates Committee by one of the unions indicates that the pension savings which the Government will realize through the enactment of Bill C-124 will run between $900 million and $1 billion. I expect that this figure might run as high as $1.5 billion if we included the Armed Forces and the RCMP.

The Government, to date, has not been particularly reluctant to publicize the savings in salaries it hopes to realize from Bill C-124, but there has been not one word on the pension savings. This is difficult to understand, particularly when pension savings are bound to exceed salary savings from Bill C-124.

During second reading debate on Bill C-133, the Minister stated that the Bill, if enacted, will produce pension index savings of $165 million in 1983 and 1984. The Bill, however, would affect pensions after 1984, but no figures were provided by the Minister on the effects of the Bill on pension incomes after 1984. Estimates which were provided to the committee by some of the pensioner's organizations indicate that Bill C-133 will, over time, reduce pensioners' incomes by about $500 million.

My back-of-the-envelope calculations suggest that the $500 million figure is much too low and that we are likely to find a pensioner income loss of between $1 billion and $2 billion to be closer to the mark. I arrive at that figure by multiplying the life expectancy of pensioners who, on average, are 70 years old, by the life expectancy of 12 years, and multiply the savings of the Government in 1984, which is $105 million, by 12. One can easily understand that my projection of $1 billion is very conservative, to say the least, and is twice the amount given by some of the witnesses who informed the committee during its hearings.

Some employees and pensioners are more than perplexed by the tendency on the Government's part to play down the impact of its six and five proposals on pensions and pensioners. They feel that if true and proper figures were published, it would clearly be demonstrated that the sacrifice pensioners are being required to make is neither minor nor temporary but, rather, is substantial and permanent.

In the limited time available to me, I have not been able to carry out a comprehensive review of the claims, charges and apprehensions which have been raised with me over the past few weeks. It was necessary to read all the Miscellaneous Estimates Committee reports to try to inform myself of the aspects which were put forth by letter and telephone and in personal contact with hundreds of public servants in my riding and elsewhere. I have noticed that most of the issues which have been raised were contained in the very briefs or representations made to the committee, but they sometimes went unanswered because of the structure of the committee. Many of the points and representations made by employee unions, pensioners' organizations and others were not answered in a comprehensive manner. This may, of course, have been due to the hurried nature of the committee's proceedings and examination. Accordingly, I would like to suggest to the Minister that he carry out a detailed review of all the briefs which were submitted to the committee and that he send a comprehensive and detailed reply to the organizations and individuals who submitted them. I am concerned that if this is not done, the organizations and individuals involved, the taxpayers, those constituents of mine who have written letters, will assume that silence denotes assent, and this cannot help but exacerbate future relations with these organizations and individuals.

One thing is crystal clear: when there is a breakdown in trust, an atmosphere of mistrust and suspicion quickly develops, which, if left unchecked, can poison a broad range of employer-employee relations for a long time. It was with this is mind that I concluded in my speech during second reading stage that this is a Bill which makes everyone a loser. The taxpayer loses, the pensioner loses and the Government loses by its presence.

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I have no questions to ask of the Hon. Member who has just spoken. I listened carefully to a very thoughtful speech by a very thoughtful person. Certainly, there are few people in the House who could match his knowledge concerning the problems of senior citizens and indexation. Also, I suspect there is no one in the House who has more clearly seen what the Government is doing. The Government is breaking a pledge to civil servants and to the Armed Forces, and I understand that next week or sometime in the near future it will be the turn of the old age pensioner.

This morning we listened to the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray) while he gave us his excuses for what was going on here. He made a few statements which absolutely astonished me. I simply cannot understand them. Perhaps he will enter into another debate next week on the Old Age Security Act and explain how he could say such things. I took down what he said at the time, and he said, "The payments to the pensioners come from the taxpayer, generally". This is very difficult for me to accept from a Minister of the Crown or from anyone else, for that matter. Another opinion was stated by Bruce Phillips, the commentator on the CTV National News last night. He is usually much more sensible. I do not know how he could state such an opinion, which I know Hon. Members opposite hope is a popular opinion, as to how people felt concerning indexed pensions, without mentioning the Superannuation Fund or the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Fund. He implied, as did the Minster this morning, that that money comes entirely from the taxpayer.

My colleague, the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker), placed a question on the Order Paper a few weeks ago and received an answer on January 21. Question No. 4,486 asked, in part:

> For each of the past ten fiscal years, what was the amount of (a) interest earned (b) employee contributions—

Statistics were given for several different funds, starting with the Public Service Superannuation Account. Employee contributions, which the President of the Treasury Board likes to completely ignore, as did Bruce Phillips last night, amounted to $126 million in 1972. Pension payments amounted to $121 million. Therefore, starting in 1972, more money has been paid in by employees than paid out in pensions, to say nothing of the employer contributions or, as the President of the Treasury Board would like the general public to believe, the amount derived from general public taxation. In 1973-74 the employees contributed $141.5 million and pension payments were $139 million. In 1974-75 the employees contributed $168 million and the pension payments were $161 million.

How the Minister can go on with this kind of "Gray's Elegy" as he did this morning, and I hope it will not be read hundreds of years from now as the other "Gray's Elegy" has been, but how he can claim that the payment out to the pensioners comes from the taxpayers generally, in view of the figures I have just read out, is beyond comprehension.

As well as that, the Public Service Superannuation Account receives interest which is credited, additional interest which is earned and employer contributions.

If I could skip to the year 1981-82, which is the last one mentioned in this answer to the question from the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton, the interest credited was $837 million; the additional interest earned was $355 million; the employees contributed $403 million and the employer contribution was $606 million. That is a total of $2,201,000,000, and the pension payments were $459 million.

There has to be something wrong about these figures and the statement from a Minister of the Crown that the general taxpayer is paying this. Does that mean that all these figures are just a figment of the imagination of some clerk somewhere, that they mean nothing? One would assume so, if the Minister actually believes that the pension payments come generally from the taxpayers.

I would like to mention a few figures for the Canadian Forces Pension Fund, which provides on a per capita basis for those involved, a somewhat larger amount per person. They had receipts into their fund, the interest credited, of $618 million; additional interest earned was $262 million; employee contributions, $91 million, and the employer contributions $198 million. This was in the year 1981-82, and the payment out was $291 million. From this it can be seen that the payments in far exceed the payments out, in fact that is true in almost each category. Yet the Minister had the nerve to say that the amounts in the superannuation accounts represent the amounts required to pay future benefits. Does that mean that in the answer to the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton, when he mentioned employee contributions, the Department officials also made that up, either from their imagination or from their computers, because, believe me, civil servants know where some of that money comes from? It comes from their pay cheques and it comes out of the servicemen's pay cheques. They have no doubt at all as to where it comes from. The servicemen and the civil servants may consider that they are the only ones putting money into it, and that may be so, from these figures. Certainly if the Government has not exactly cheated them, it has given everyone in the country the wrong impression of what is going on with the civil service pensions.

The subject was dealt with at some length by my distinguished colleague from Nepean-Carleton this morning when he rebutted the statements of the President of the Treasury Board about a contract. The President of the Treasury Board seemed to think he was on firm ground because there was no written contract with civil servants, the Armed Forces or the RCMP signed by the appropriate Minister of the Crown, I suppose—that would be the President of the Treasury Board—and signed by every one of the hundreds of thousands of people involved, an agreement that would say, "Yes, I will pay you an indexed pension".

I have here a copy of a few pages out of the Statutes of Canada, and one part says, "This Act may be cited as a Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act". In this it defines what a pension index is. With respect to any year it is the average for that year of the Consumer Price Index for Canada as published by Statistics Canada.

What does the Minister mean when he says the Government does not have a contract? Of course it has a contract; it is spelled out in the Statutes of Canada. If he is trying to say that the Statutes of Canada are really meaningless when it comes to whether it has a contract to fulfil or not, then I think we must take a new look at the dealings between this employer and its employees. If he can say that about pensions, the Government can say that about employees' pay, their terms of service, terms of employment and so on.

What is sad about this legislation is that the Government, with the need for restraint that has become obvious to everyone in the last year—except that it may have become obvious to the Liberal Government a little later than to others—has looked at a class of people, a group of people that will suffer. This group of people is going to be moved, from the position they now hold in our social fabric, down 5 per cent. That is what it means. Instead of that group being able to buy the kind of groceries they were able to buy last year, and expected they would be able to buy this year, they are to be moved down 5 per cent, and they have to stay there forever. No longer will they be where they were this past year or the year before. They are down 5 per cent. There is no way they will ever get that money back, nor ever return to the base on which their annual percentage increase will be computed. Down they go, and this is pretty hard to take for this class of people who mainly have in common the fact that they work for the Government and that they are elderly. Some are wealthier than others and those it will not hurt as much as others, but there are quite a few who will be hurt quite considerably.

I think with some affection of the gentleman who appeared in front of the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates and spoke to us about his pension. His name was Mr. Aplin and he was an ex-serviceman. I was questioning him about the 85 rule. I sometimes think I am the only person in the House who understands what the 85 rule is about, but I know about that because I am an ex-serviceman. It is that your age and your service must together add up to 85 before you can become indexed. One of the reasons this is particularly important to servicemen is that they are not allowed to serve until they are 65 or 60. They are turned out much earlier. When I questioned Mr. Aplin, I asked him "So the 85 rule is particularly savage on servicemen where it is not on civil servants, in that they have this compulsory release age. How old were you when you were let out of the forces?" Mr. Aplin told me "forty-five". I said, "Age 45. And when will you be indexable, or are you now?" Mr. Aplin responded, "I am not indexable until January 21". That was four days ago. Congratulations Mr. Aplin, you made it. I then asked him, "And how long have you been out?" I meant out of the service. He said, "Ten years. No, 12 . . . 13 years". I said, "Might I ask how much your pension is?" His reply was, "$277.55". I said, "And has been for ten years." He said, "It has been for ten years".

That is the kind of person that we should be thinking about, a person who has been on pension for 12 years at $277.55, yet the general public thinks that immediately a person gets out of the service they retire on a fat pension. They certainly do not.

Another question is whether or not a person should lay up an income for their old age. That is a conflict between the wish of the Government for people to make their own preparations for their golden years and the Guaranteed Income Supplement. When a person is thinking of buying an annuity or working for the Government for a sufficient time to get a pension of, let us say, $250 a month, that simply means that if that is all one has when one reaches the age of 65 and retires, one might as well not have any pension at all. All it means is that it prevents one from drawing the Guaranteed Income Supplement. This is the odd conflict that we have got into by the mismanagement of the pension funds and the pension terms in this country.

In closing I would just like to say that we have participated at great length in this debate. It has been interesting and has presented quite a challenge, I would expect, to the morality of some of the Members in the Liberal Party and, I hope, they will make the right choice when the vote is taken in the next half hour or so.

• (1710)

I am much encouraged by the Hon. Member for Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke (Mr. Hopkins) who last night said, "Therefore, it is with regret that I state now that I cannot support Bill C-133". I looked for him last night when we were voting on Bill C-133. There must have been some earthshaking, cataclysmic event of about seven on the Richter scale that kept him from coming here to vote. We look forward to him and others making their decision in half an hour or so from now. I hope enough Members on the other side will think of the debt they owe to the senior citizens of this country and show an example that will encourage the old age pensioners whose turn will come in a few days or week, giving them hope that they will be treated in the just manner to which the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) was so fond of referring in his election campaign.

Mr. Peter Lang (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I wish to speak in favour of the motion for third reading of Bill C-133, as modified by the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray) to grant pension increases under the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act of 6.5 per cent this year and 5.5 per cent in 1984. I speak in favour because the modification to the Bill will give Public Service pensioners more than they otherwise would have received under the original proposal without violating the spirit of six and five.

The modification recognizes an important principle of not capping contributions made by the employees, matched by the employer, without upsetting the integrity of the six and five program. The modification to the Bill will not upset six and five because it follows on the principle that money set aside in the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Account as a result of prior contributions to pay for indexing should continue to be used for indexing. In this way the principle is recognized that the capping of Public Service pensions should not apply to the portion of the indexing being provided for from the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Account.

Those from the private sector who have been most active in their endorsement of the six and five program, it is understood, concur with the Government's view that modifying the pension increases in the manner indicated would not be a breach of faith with the program. Furthermore, the modification was only embraced after extensive review of all suggestions received by the Government, Members of its own caucus as well as from other sources. These representations reveal that some modification to the original proposal for restriction of Public Service pension increases to six and five could be made within the spirit of the six and five program.

The main reason for restricting pension increases to the new proposed levels dictated by the six and five program is, of course, to support the present policy for achieving price stability. There can be no sound and lasting recovery in the economy without price stability. It is something fundamental and basic that any economist will indicate to someone who inquires about this.

Price stability is sought and is desirable, not only for its own sake, but because it is necessary to re-establish growth in the economy and, with growth, to promote jobs. This is what the six and five program is all about, reducing inflation for an economic recovery and producing jobs. Thus, any breach in the program at this time could jeopardize importance national economic objectives.

It has been questioned by some whether it is now necessary to carry forward with the pensioner's part of the program since the goal of price stability is within reach. This is to overlook the role of inflationary expectations. Anticipation of the six and five program being implemented has been sufficient to start moving the inflation rate down. That is, prices move on thought; when there is conviction, the thought will be followed by implementation. To interfere with the implementation is to break the conviction. Not to carry through now is to break the very favourable expectations of lower inflation set in motion with the announcement of the six and five program. To back away at this time from the original intent and the basis of the initial success would be to jeopardize that very success. It would lead to renewed speculation of more inflation to come.

Other critics of the motion have taken a different tack. They rally around the cry of not fighting inflation on the backs of pensioners. This is to argue that while it is desirable to dampen inflationary expectations, it is not for some reason desirable to dampen the inflationary expectations of pensioners. These critics go on to maintain that it is unfair to force a reduction in living standards on pensioners. This is to ignore, however, what happens to the relative economic position of Public Service pensioners when their pensions are fully indexed for inflation when wages are not.

When Public Servants are asked to take a reduction in living standards, they suffer a loss in economic position vis-à-vis pensioners whose standards are maintained by full indexing. It seems only elementary justice to ask pensioners to share in the same reduction as active workers when this is necessary for the national good. Pensioners are not being asked to share a loss in economic position relative to active workers, only to share in a common restraint with workers that keeps the relative position of the two groups unchanged.

To keep any group at its previous level of real income at times when others are suffering a loss of their real incomes through restricted wage growth or, worse, through unemployment is to enable the protected group to gain in economic position relative to the others. This is hardly the way to have us all pull together in support of six and five and a better economic recovery.

Much has been made of the fact that there was no consultation with regard to this legislation. The answer is simple. The legislation was part of a budgetary process and at that time budgetary processes involved no prior consultation due to traditions of Parliament. However, the President of the Treasury Board when appointed to this position immediately initiated consultations with the Public Service unions. These consultations played an important part leading to a respect of the principle of not capping contributions made by the employees and matched by the employer. They played an important part in leading to the amendment that increased the cap to 6.5 per cent in 1983 and 5.5 per cent in 1984.

I now want to turn to some of the comments by Members in the Conservative Party, particularly the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie). He talked of hypocrisy. I find it difficult to understand the Hon. Member who supports restraint in general, but when it comes down to the specifics is not willing to support it. It is easy to espouse motherhood and easy to espouse restraint when you do not have to name what you are going to restrain, when you do not talk about who will get hurt. That is easy.

The Hon. Member for St. John's West is a supporter of Reaganomics. He has indicated that publicly. The major basis of Reaganomics in terms of social programs is to slash them and slash them hard, not just slashing at indexing, but cutting away at the very foundation of the program. To be a supporter of Reaganomics and then come here and try to pretend that you have a greater social conscience than the NDP is a little hard to swallow.

Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act (No. 2)

We then come to the comments by the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) and his amendment to have 6 per cent apply in 1983 but not 1984. Somehow the Conservative Opposition, represented by the Official critic, in that amendment finds that it can accept the principle of six and five for one year but not for two.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I do not mind the Hon. Member using my name if it is in order, but I think it is inappropriate to comment on a vote in this House.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I am not commenting on the vote in this House. I am commenting on the Hon. Member's amendment to limit indexation to 6 per cent in 1983 but not in 1984. If it is okay to cap the pension in 1983, why is it not okay to cap it in 1984? You cannot have it both ways, Mr. Speaker.

• (1720)

I would like to ask Hon. Members from the Opposition who have endorsed some Hon. Members from the Ottawa area on this side, who, in good conscience, are voting against this legislation, to recognize and respect the right of other Hon. Members from the Ottawa area who have the personal and political courage to vote in support of the legislation. The people of Canada are looking for politicians who have integrity and courage. I would really encourage Hon. Members opposite to recognize that kind of personal and political courage from those people who, in good conscience, are voting in support of this Bill, and who believe in putting the national interest first.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: At this stage, the Hon. Member is rising to put questions to the Hon. Member who has spoken. The Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis).

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, actually I have only two very short questions for the Hon. Member, if he will permit. One question is about his reference to the necessity of Canadians to share in this fight against inflation, with the implication that people should be volunteering to restrict their pension increases to 6 per cent this year and 5 per cent next year.

In light of that fairness and sharing concept, which in principle, of course, one has to support, could the Hon. Member attempt to explain how the man who advises the Government on fiscal policy, Governor Bouey of the Bank of Canada, would not go along with this sharing concept and ask his retired employees to share in the six and five program, as opposed to giving them an increase this year of 11.5 per cent, which is more than the rate of inflation? Could he explain that, please?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out to the Hon. Member that less than 1 per cent of pensioners in the private sector have fully indexed pensions. Therefore, the Government has no necessity to ask private sector pensioners to volunteer for six and five. They are not receiving six and five. I believe that is part of the equity here. We are asking Public Service pensioners to share in the burden in the same way private sector pensioners are already. They do not have a chance to volunteer.

With respect to Governor Bouey and the Bank of Canada, the fact is that the Bank of Canada is not covered under the Public Service Superannuation Act. Bill C-133 amends the Public Service Superannuation Act. That is one point. It is not possible, therefore, to do that through this legislation.

Second, the setup of pensions in the Bank of Canada is such that it is fully contributory, not only for the basic pension plan, as it is for Public Servants in general, but also for the indexation part of the plan. So taxpayers' funds are not being used in any way to index the pensioners of the Bank of Canada, as opposed to the pensioners covered under this Act where 90 per cent of the funds to pay for that indexation are coming from the taxpayers.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I accept the Hon. Member's very diligent response. I must say, though, Governor Bouey's call for restraint at six and five has a relatively hollow ring after today, when he deals with his employees one way and asks others to deal with their employees in quite a different way. I notice the banks as well have been very vocal in encouraging the six and five program. Looking at the annual statement of the Royal Bank of Canada I note they gave their pensioned off employees an increase of 16.5 per cent for this year. Again, while certain leaders are saying one thing, their behaviour is demonstrating quite another. We have now heard from the Chairman of the blue chip committee, Mr. Ian Sinclair, who has advised the Government on the six and five program and has been their spokesman across the country, saying virtually that now is the time to stimulate the economy. I have a newspaper clipping in which he does not refer to millions and millions of dollars, but says, Mr. Speaker, we must stimulate the economy to the tune of billions of dollars.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I would remind the Hon. Member that a question should be short and to the point.

Mr. Riis: My question to the Hon. Member is this. It would appear now that Ian Sinclair and his blue chip Committee have abandoned this six and five course and are now asking for an incredible amount of stimulus. Would that not weaken the Hon. Member's position on Bill C-133, and perhaps even encourage him to vote agains it?

Mr. Lang: No, Mr. Speaker, on the contrary. Mr. Sinclair has been a strong supporter of the six and five program. He also recognizes, as does the Government, that six and five is not the total answer, that there are other economic measures which have to be taken to bring about an economic recovery and to deal with the serious problems of unemployment. That does not say, Mr. Speaker, it is inconsistent with reducing inflationary expectations to modify and moderate income expectations. Clearly the Hon. Member who is the finance critic for the New Democratic Party understands that in an inflationary recession, inflation is not being driven by too much total aggregate demand, but is being driven by cost-push inflation and by inflationary expectations. I do not find it inconsistent to have a program of six and five dealing with cost-push inflation and inflationary expectations, and at the same time to advocate measures to increase investment in the private and public sectors, when we know that investment is down dramatically because of the effects of recession on corporate balance sheets. Therefore, I find no inconsistency in that at all and support what Mr. Sinclair has indicated.

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, can I speak on the amendment?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: An Hon. Member is rising to put questions? I recognize the Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker).

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Hon. Member opposite would agree that the retired federal civil servants paid an extra contribution into their pension fund, some 7.5 per cent, that the superannuation account has almost $16 billion in it, and they should be allowed to use that up before having to take a cut like the rest of us? Second, who or what caused the original inflation? Would the Hon. Member agree that it was really the federal Government deficit, rather than the ordinary civil servant working faithfully at his desk?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I have already answered the Hon. Member's question in my speech when I indicated that 90 per cent of the funds which go to pay for Public Service pensioners' indexation is coming out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund, originally from the taxpayer.

With respect to the Hon. Member's second question as to who caused inflation, I find it a little difficult to even start to answer that question, knowing that I have one minute. If the House would like to give unanimous consent to me taking 15 minutes, I would be happy to answer it.

I think it is safe to say we all had a part in creating the inflationary environment in which we find ourselves. There were not only domestic causes but also very dramatic international causes. Probably the major cause, Mr. Speaker, was the 1,500 per cent increase in the last ten years in the price of oil, which led to a 1,500 per cent increase, basically across the board, in the cost of the energy which fuels our economy.

• (1730)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: One last question, the Hon. Member for Halifax West (Mr. Crosby).

Mr. Crosby: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans) made it very clear in his presentation a short time ago that he justified the application of the six and five program to retired public servants on the grounds that taxpayers' dollars were involved. To paraphrase, he said that because taxpayers' dollars are involved, the Government has an obligation to impose this program of restraint. We have heard the Hon. Member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon) and others analyse the funding of the Public Service Superannuation Plan, the fact that there is $14 billion in the various funds, and the fact that contributions greatly exceed the amount being paid out in Public Service pensions.

I would like to ask the Hon. Member for Kitchener (Mr. Lang) if he believes that taxpayers' funds are being used to pay these benefits and that is the justification for application of this six and five program and the provisions of Bill C-133, or does he agree with me that there are no taxpayers' funds involved?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I just answered this in my answer to his colleague's previous question. But, yes, 90 per cent of the funding which goes toward indexation of Public Service pensions comes from the taxpayer. The Hon. Member refers to $14 billion; it is actually $15.3 billion. That money is there to pay for the basic pension plan as well as 10 per cent of the—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The ten minute period of question and answer having expired, the Chair now recognizes the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy).

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I wish to speak on the amendment to Bill C-133 which would prevent the passage of this Bill for six months, and also speak on the Bill itself. Before that, however, I would like to respond to a remark made by one of the Conservative Members who spoke earlier this afternoon when he said the NDP had a new-found interest in pensions.

There is not one person in this House, Mr. Speaker, who would deny the fact that our colleague, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), has been the spokesman for people who receive pensions throughout this country, whether they be men, women, veterans or any other Canadian.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Murphy: Our record on pensions is consistent and stands by itself. I think some people should really research the record before they speak in this House.

When we look at this Bill before us, Mr. Speaker, we find there many objectionable features. One of the concerns we have is that the Government is breaking a trust. The President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray) said earlier today, there is nothing in writing. There is no written contract between the Government and the pensioners, the Public Service unions or the association representing the superannuants. That is what the Minister said. That was the Minister's justification for doing what he is doing. But there is much more to keeping your word than having a written contract. As has been referred to in a number of briefs which came before the Committee studying this legislation, there is such a thing as a gentleman's agreement and the Government giving its word to its employees and pensioners. This Government, and the one which preceded it under the Right Hon. L. B. Pearson, promised that no changes would take place in the Public Service pension without consultation. The Government did not say, "Without consultation; however, if it is a budget we will not talk to you." They did not say that. Prime Minister Pearson and Presidents of the Treasury Board—for the most part Liberal Cabinet Ministers—said, "This is your pension plan". The Government put out a pamphlet saying that there would be no changes without consultation. And this Bill breaks that trust.

Earlier this afternoon the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans) got up and asked those same pensioners to put their trust again in this Government. He said that he had a promise from the President of the Treasury Board, one that the Minister did not make in this House, that there will be changes to the Public Service pension plan prior to 1985. Well, anyone who is quick with mathematics—I sometimes wonder if the Liberal backbenchers are—will realize that there will be an election before that time, and it is again a situation where the Government does not really expect to have to live up to the promises it is making. This legislation is a betrayal of trust, and the Government has the nerve to come to this House, the pensioners and people who are working for the federal Government, and say: "Trust us again. We broke trust today but that is only because it is a budget item. Trust us because sometime in the next three or four years we will do something different and try to make amends". I do not believe, Mr. Speaker, that the pensioners trust this Government. I do not believe we can expect that because trust has to be based on action and the action of this Government is to betray trust.

In the last few minutes I have heard some heckling from my right in the Conservative Party. In the last few days they have been getting up and talking about the Government breaking trust and contracts, and they made all sorts of fancy speeches. Not as many as they should have, but that is to be expected because they do not really defend pensioners when they have the chance. Well, Mr. Speaker, those same Conservatives who talk about this Bill breaking trust should remember that when Bill C-124 was before this House they voted with the Liberal Government, as they do on most pieces of significant legislation, and that legislation broke collective agreements the Government had signed with hundreds of thousands of Canadian workers. That was not just a gentleman's agreement, that was an agreement the Government had negotiated and signed. And the Conservatives, with the exception of two of their Members, stood up and supported the Liberals in breaking that trust. That set the stage for breaking trust with old age pensioners, people who receive Family Allowances and Government pensioners affected by this legislation. Then, Mr. Speaker, over the last few days, when there was an opportunity to fight the Government, the Conservatives have not shown that much strength. We talked about the fact that they only stayed out of the House 15 minutes and defeated our effort to prevent the Government from making a closure motion at that time. They spent 15 days protecting their friends in the oil companies.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Protecting Parliament.

Mr. Murphy: They spent a number of days protecting their friends, the export companies, over Canagrex, but they could only spend 15 minutes protecting the Government's pensioners.

• (1740)

Last night when we were voting on the amendments to Bill C-133, how many Conservatives showed up for the last vote? Fifty-two showed up and 49 were absent, Mr. Speaker. If half of those Conservative Members had been present last night, the Bill would have been defeated. Where were those 49 Conservatives? There were not that many Liberals absent. I do not know how they pair—is it one Liberal for four Tories? If their excuse is that they are paired with the Liberals, they are admitting that they have co-operated on every vote that the Liberal Government survives.

Mr. Taylor: Who sold out property rights?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The Chair has some concern about relevance in the debate at this point. It is a difficult matter, but I would call the attention of the Hon. Member to the Bill that is before us for debate.

Mr. Murphy: I can understand why the Conservatives in the House—not the 49 who were absent—would be sensitive about this.

Earlier I heard the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) ask that more than four Liberals vote against this legislation. We need more than four on that side to support us, Mr. Speaker. We need those 49 Conservatives in the House tonight to support us and defeat this legislation which breaks the trust of Civil Service pensioners.

We have fought against this Bill because it breaks that trust. We have fought against the Bill because we know it is the result of a public relations exercise on the part of the Government. That was evident in a leaked document that came to my Leader early last year. It showed that a Public Service restraint program would be a public relations effort. It said that the main value of such a program would be that the Government would be seen as doing something to fight inflation.

We need a job-creation program in the country. We need an industrial strategy in the country. We need a lot of things to get the Canadian economy going. Something we do not need is a program to fight it on the backs of Government pensioners. We do not need to fight it on the backs of those who receive the old age pension. We do not need to fight it on the backs of the women and children who receive Family Allowances. We need the fat cats in the Liberal Party and the silent and invisible Members of the Conservative Party to support Canadians in need. What we do not need is the hypocrisy we have seen in this debate.

This Party has been consistent in the debate and we have been consistent in fighting the six and five legislation. We have been consistent in calling for a job-creation program. We have been consistent throughout the debate on six and five. The Tories cannot claim that. They supported the Liberal Government under Bill C-124 and now they hop on in the other side of the bed.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Murphy: There seems to be some sensitivity among Conservative Members, and I can well understand that.

Let me speak on behalf of old age pensioners and the others affected by this legislation. We will continue to fight despite the fact that it upsets some Tory backbenchers, despite the fact that it has upset some Liberal backbenchers, because we believe in fighting for adequate pensions for Canadians. We will keep doing that despite the heckling of some people in this House who do not give a damn.

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It being 5.45 p.m., it is my duty pursuant to the order made on Thursday, January 20, 1983, to interrupt proceedings and to put forthwith every question necessary to dispose of the third reading stage of the Bill.

[English]

The question is on the amendment of Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the amendment will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Call in the Members.

The House divided on the amendment (Mr. Baker) (Nepean-Carleton) which was negatived on the following division:

Madam Speaker: I declare the amendment lost.

Motion (Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton)) negatived.

Madam Speaker: The next question is on the main motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Madam Speaker: All those in favour will please say yea.

Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act (No. 2)

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Madam Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Madam Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Madam Speaker: Call in the Members, and let us dispense with the bell.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Gray) which was agreed to on the following division:

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S.O. 21

[English]

THE LEADER OF THE OPPOSITION

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Madam Speaker, I would like to read extracts from an editorial entitled "Mr. Clark Goes Overboard" in this morning's Montreal Gazette. Commenting on a recent Maclean's interview with the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark), the Gazette states:

Tough political criticism is a fair, indeed necessary, part of democratic debate. Outright untruths, however, are beyond the pale.

The editorial continues:

Mr. Clark says that in the referendum campaign Mr. Trudeau "lied" to Quebecers.

Mr. Clark: That is correct. He did lie.

Mr. Berger: The editorial quoted Mr. Clark as stating:

He told them there would be a more flexible federalism . . . That wasn't the truth. He brought in, instead, a unitary constitution.

The Gazette continues:

But Mr. Trudeau did not lie to Quebecers. He promised them that he would start to work immediately after the referendum to achieve constitutional change; he did just that. He said a No vote would be interpreted as a vote to increase liberties; the constitutional charter of rights does that.

Mr. Trudeau did not promise vast increases in provincial power . . . It is thus no surprise that the reformed constitution did not include every item on the provinces' shopping list for expanded powers.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Author?

Mr. Berger: The editorial continues to state:

Mr. Clark further suggests that Mr. Trudeau has given us a "unitary constitution." This is a preposterous assertion, one which Mr. Clark unfortunately has made several times.

Mr. Clark: And will make again.

Mr. Berger: The editorial continues:

Nothing, no contortion of logic or dose of skepticism, can see in this "a unitary constitution." Mr. Clark is not a stupid man.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Berger: The article continues:

It follows that he knows he is not speaking the truth when he makes such allegations—

Madam Speaker: Order.

AIR TRANSPORT

LICENSING OF NORTHERN COMMERCIAL OPERATORS

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Madam Speaker, the regulations and procedures respecting the licensing of commercial aircraft operators by the Air Transport Committee of the Canadian Transport Commission do not make sense when applied to small operators in remote areas of Northern Canada.

The highly complex and legalistic licensing system may be suitable for Air Canada, CP Air and some of the regional carriers which could afford to dedicate the services of expert personnel to regulatory matters while the rest of the people get on with the serious and productive business of running an airline. In the North, however, most operations are small and must be flexible in order to meet rapidly changing markets in a region where frequently the only means of transportation is by air.

The owner-operators are fiercely independent and have little time for red tape. They are often not averse to telling Ottawa bureaucrats, and even the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin), precisely what they think. It is seldom flattering.

Mr. Pepin: Think about Dubin.

Mr. Nickerson: The present licensing system is slow, unresponsive to public needs, encourages chiselling, and turns healthy competition by way of superior equipment, improved routes and services and lower prices, into back-biting complaints and—

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

TRADE

FINANCING OF CANADIAN EXPORT BUSINESS

Mr. Stanley Hudecki (Hamilton West): Madam Speaker, it has come to my attention through the Hamilton and District Chamber of Commerce that exporters of capital goods in my riding of Hamilton West, like most Canadian exporters, are in serious competition with foreign producers, some of whom offer concessional financing to perspective purchasers. This type of financing is often done with the direct or indirect involvement of the foreign government, which provides interest rate subsidies. In many cases, for Canadian exporters, the difference between obtaining an order or not is the financing terms which they can provide in negotiations with overseas customers.

The Canadian Government has a mechanism by which it can provide financing and support for Canadian export business, namely, the Export Development Corporation. If funds could be made more readily available by the Corporation to Canadian business in order to secure offshore contracts, this would certainly help to stimulate the Canadian economy. With this in mind, Bill C-110, which proposes, among other things, to increase the authorized capital of the EDC from $1 billion to $2 billion, must certainly be viewed as an important step in the process of achieving greater Canadian competitiveness in the export market, and should be given consideration by all parties for rapid passage.

INCREASE IN NUMBER OF FARM BANKRUPTCIES

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, in 1981, 260 farms went bankrupt, and in 1982, 410 farms were forced into bankruptcy. Statistics Canada states that in 1982 farm income dropped 28 per cent from a loss position in 1981. Scores of farms across this nation are on the verge of bankruptcy and thousands of farmers are worried.

The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan), instead of doing something to save our farms, tells the world that "agriculture is in a healthy state". The Minister and the Government of Canada should be taking effective steps, including the following, to help save our farms: Reduce the federal Government's tax on farm fuel which, at 60 cents per gallon, is far too excessive; eliminate the excise tax on gas which, besides other ill effects, is cutting down production because more and more farms cannot afford to fertilize their land; eliminate the capital gains tax so that elderly Canadians may retire in dignity and younger men and women can start farming.

The National Energy Program of the Liberal Government is forcing our farmers to pay a far greater share of taxation than any other group in the country. Saving our farms should have top priority in any economic recovery and should not be left on the backburner, where it is now.

• (1410)

EFFECT OF UNITED STATES MEASURES ON CANADIAN EXPORTS

Miss Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Madam Speaker, President Reagan, in his State of the Union Address last night, said that the United States " . . . must remain committed to free trade . . . " Perhaps our Government should remind the President that his country's trade practices are not so free as he would have Americans and Canadians believe. A new "buy America" law will act to exclude Canadian concrete and steel firms from U.S. funded highway and bridge projects. One estimate of the dollar loss to Canadian cement firms alone is in the tens of millions.

The United States Department of Agriculture's Blended Credit Program, offering credit guarantees to selected countries buying American wheat, will make it impossible for Canadian wheat producers to export to those countries.

Also of great concern is the future of the Canadian forest industry, and particularly the British Columbia lumber export trade, in light of the current opposition in the United States to our forestry exports to the U.S. I ask our Government to say to President Reagan that his administration cannot " . . . remain committed to free trade . . . " until it " . . . becomes committed to free trade . . . "

NUCLEAR ARMAMENTS

PROPOSED DEPLOYMENT OF PERSHING II MISSILES IN WEST GERMANY

Mr. Paul E. McRae (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Madam Speaker, the two super powers are now using the phrase "launch on warning" to describe their response to certain new weapons. The Pershing II missile to be deployed in West Germany late this year is such a weapon. It is extremely accurate and will destroy an enemy missile 1,000 kilometres away in six minutes. The only defence against this weapon is to get your own missile out of the silo before it is destroyed, and the only means, given the short time available is to launch on warning.

What does "launch on warning mean"? There have been, over the past 20 years, many warnings of possible enemy missile launchings, bombers and such, reported by NATO and NORAD. Each has been tracked down and found to be false, so no defensive action occurred. "Launch on warning" means that, since there will be no time to investigate these warnings, a computer malfunction or misinterpretation would result in a launching and trigger a nuclear holocaust.

We Canadians, as members of NATO and NORAD, are part of a process this year which could turn the remote possibility of an accidental nuclear war into one of probability. This House must demand in the name of humanity that the concept and weaponry which could cause a "launch on warning" be forever abolished.

ENERGY

NEGOTIATIONS BETWEEN FEDERAL GOVERNMENT AND NEWFOUNDLAND ON OFFSHORE RESOURCES

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Madam Speaker, I am concerned about the apparent breach of faith in negotiations concerning offshore resources. It is an issue of immense concern to Canada and to the economic life or death of Newfoundland.

The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Chrétien) said before Christmas that he was prepared to consider for Newfoundland an agreement on the offshore resources different from that with Nova Scotia. Mr. Marshall of Newfoundland contacted him. They had several meetings and they agreed verbally on certain points of principle which would govern an agreement. The Minister of Energy wanted only a verbal agreement, not an agreement in writing. When the officials sat down to carry out the principles which had been agreed, it was discovered that the federal Government officials did not accept the points of principle on which the Minister had agreed.

There was to be a joint management board of both Governments, for example, with paramountcy in certain areas, but it turned out, according to the federal officials, that all the employees of the board were to be appointed and responsible to the federal Minister.

There are differences between what the Minister agreed to and what his officials say he agreed to. Newfoundland has now telexed the Minister asking him to respond in writing to 17 points of principle. The Minister is refusing to do that. He must do this or be accused of bad faith. Surely it is necessary and reasonable for the points of principle to be agreed upon in writing before officials draft a suggested agreement. Has the Minister of Energy been "hung out to dry" by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde)?

TRUST COMPANIES

CALL FOR COMMITTEE STUDY OF REGULATORY AGENCIES

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, the federal Government, under our Constitution, has powers over banks and banking, the use of credit, money supply, and interest. Our forefathers gave the federal Government that responsibility to ensure that Canada would have a sound financial system.

Since this Government came into power three years ago, serious concerns have developed with respect to financial institutions and insurance companies. In the trust field we have had the bankruptcy of Astra Trust and its associated company, Remor. And now we have the defalcations of Seaway, Greymac, and Crown. In the insurance field we have had receiverships in Pitts, Strathcona, and Caledonia. Yesterday concern was raised with respect to the Canadian Commercial Bank.

Clearly there is evidence that the Department of Insurance, the Inspector General of Banks, the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation, and the Bank of Canada, the Government's agencies that are supposed to be the policemen managing financial institutions, have been asleep. The Government has failed to conduct inspections, failed to follow up on information, failed to act promptly.

Confidence in our financial system is essential. That confidence is damaged by the Seaway, Greymac, and Crown matters, and the concerns reported yesterday with respect to the Canadian Commercial Bank. It is imperative that this House constitute a special committee to examine in detail all of our agencies managing financial institutions to give people renewed confidence.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

TRUST COMPANIES

QUERY RESPECTING ACTION TO PROTECT INVESTORS IN SAVINGS PLANS

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Finance. Last week, when I put a question to him as to when the Government was aware of problems with the various trust and loan companies which are in question right now, he gave a very evasive answer. However, outside the House of Commons he acknowledged that he was aware, indeed, that the Government was aware of the problems in those companies a full year before.

I ask the Minister what action did the Government take when it first learned of these problems, in order to protect the savings and the Registered Retirement Savings Plans of many Canadians? Did the Government undertake an investigation with each precise problem brought to its attention and, if so, when?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member has not cleared his confusion of last week even today. He has made reference to trust companies which fall under the jurisdiction of the Province of Ontario. This administration, the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation, and the Superintendent of Insurance for Canada do not regulate those companies, Crown Trust, Seaway Trust, Greymac, and I would invite the Hon. Member to direct that type of question and that concern to where the responsibility obviously rests. His questioning should be of Dr. Elgie in the Ontario House.

Mr. Wilson: I do not know whether the Minister has been reading his mail or not, but there is a question of some hundreds of millions of dollars which will be paid out, if these companies go bankrupt, by the Canada Development Deposit Corporation, which is his direct responsibility. That is the basis of the questions I have been asking, and he is giving sleazy evasions to those questions every time I put them to him.

OFFICIAL'S REPORT

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, let me follow up on something here that is directly under the Minister's responsibility. Under the Loan Companies Act, the Superintendent, who is responsible under the Minister for those loan companies, shall report to the Minister if the assets of a loan company are not sufficient to give adequate protection to those Canadians who have their moneys on deposit. Has that report been given to the Minister and, if so, what was the date when that report was given to the Minister, and when will the Minister report to the House on what action he is taking in response to that report?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, indeed the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation is subject to the jurisdiction of the Government of Canada under the British North America Act. I am not sure which corporation the Hon. Member is referring to when he refers to the "Canada Development Deposit Corporation". That is a new one to me. However, I would like to remind the Hon. Member that the federal Government indicated its intention over a week ago. Under its jurisdiction the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation has moved to increase deposit insurance coverage from the $20,000 limit to a $60,000 limit, which was part of the recommendation of the Finance Committee, supported by the Hon. Member, in the Committee's report on bank profits to this House.

• (1420)

Mr. Wilson: I do not know whether the Minister heard the statement given to the House just a few minutes ago by the Hon. Member for Mississauga South. It is that type of evasive answer that indicates to Canadians that the Minister is not in control of the situation, and that undermines the confidence that Canadians want to have in their financial institutions but are being robbed of by his incompetence or his lack of knowledge about what is going on.

ROLE OF CANADA DEPOSIT INSURANCE CORPORATION

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, under the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation Act, if the Corporation believes that a trust company or a mortgage company is following unsound business practices it can threaten to terminate the deposit insurance provided for that company's depositors. Did the CDIC uncover unsound business practices? Did the Corporation threaten to terminate deposit insurance with any of the five companies involved in the Crown-Seaway-Greymac mess and, if so, when?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, I think it is widely known to most people—with the probable exception of the Hon. Member who raises the question—that the Loan Companies Act indicates that if the superintendent is concerned about any federally incorporated companies under his jurisdiction then, in a report to the Minister of Finance, he may indicate that concern, and request confirmation of his opinion that there are difficulties with those companies.

As probably every Canadian except the Hon. Member knows, at about the same time as difficulties with Crown Trust arose, the superintendent did indicate that situation with reference to two federally incorporated mortgage companies. Under the Act the principals of those firms have a right to a hearing. In one case the hearing has commenced, and in the other case, the solicitors have asked for time for a hearing. In both cases the Minister has to act in a quasi-judicial capacity in response to their request. As those proceedings are going on, and because I have to act in a quasi-judicial capacity, I cannot report until the hearings have been completed.

ACTION TAKEN BY MINISTER

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, the Minister was aware that there were problems with Greymac and Seaway nearly a year before the matter became public. When was the first time that the Minister took the action he is required to take under the provisions of the Loan Companies Act, and what action was taken under the Canada Deposit Insurance Act after the Minister heard these rumours and after these concerns became apparent to him?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, I am sure the Hon. Member was in the House when I answered the last question put by his colleague. It was the same question. I invite him to look at the answer in Hansard if he did not hear it or understand it.

QUERY RESPECTING ROLE OF MINISTER

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, with respect to the provincial companies the Minister has said that he has no responsibility. Why is it, then, that the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation is putting up all of the cash with respect to these defalcations? Why is it that the Province of Ontario is not putting up a nickel? Is it because the Minister really has responsibility here? Is it because the Minister did not follow up on the information he had for a long time? Is it because the Minister is afraid of a real investigation?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, if the Hon. Member has questions concerning the trust companies under the control of the Province of Ontario, that were incorporated under the laws of the Province of Ontario and that, under recent legislation, have come under the ownership and control of the Province of Ontario, then I invite him to direct his questions to the Premier of the Province of Ontario.

THE ECONOMY

PROVISION OF FUNDS FOR MUNICIPAL JOB CREATION PROJECTS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. In the news this morning the Minister was reported to have said that he agrees with the need for additional stimulus in the economy to provide jobs and specifically, he said, in terms of providing additional infrastructure and municipal works. I point out to the Minister that there is not a municipality from St. John's all the way across Canada to Victoria that does not have at least half a dozen projects ready today that would create jobs throughout the land.

• (1425)

Given the need of more than 1.5 million Canadians to find jobs, and given the presence in municipalities of plans to create jobs, why is the Minister planning to wait another two months, until budget time, to allocate money to provide jobs? Why does he not act now?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the question raised by the Hon. Member was inspired by an excellent meeting I had with representatives of the Canadian Labour Congress, and speaking on behalf of two million workers, I am very pleased with the spirit of co-operation shown by the CLC on that occasion. I realize the Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party may be somewhat upset about this, but I trust that in the final instance, he will realize it is a development that should be applauded by all Members of this House, and it is to be hoped that labour will work closely with employers and the governments concerned towards the economic recovery this country so urgently needs.

As for the Hon. Member's specific question, I shall repeat, if I may, what I said yesterday after the meeting, namely, that I have received numerous representations from a variety of organizations which seem to indicate there is a growing consensus that stimulus should be given to investment in the public sector at the municipal, provincial and federal levels, and that consumer spending should also be stimulated. It seems that support for these general measures is very widespread, and I shall, of course, take these representations very seriously because, as I said before, they were made by a large number of organizations.

As for what specific decision will be made in this respect, I would ask my hon. colleague to wait until the next budget.

[English]

REQUEST FOR EARLY ANNOUNCEMENT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, the Government has not brought forward a new program since October when NEED was announced. From October to the end of March will be five months before we will get a budget. There is some real need, and a feeling of urgency by the people of Canada in respect to obtaining new jobs. The Minister has already indicated that the Government is prepared to provide additional stimulus. What is holding him back from announcing it now and saying to municipalities across the land, "Don't wait for another two months; provide some employment right now for Canadians and you will get it from the federal Government"? Why does the Minister not say that?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I remind the Leader of the New Democratic Party that the Government has already provided over $2 billion of stimulus in the June budget and in my October economic statement. That stimulus is showing its effects in the figures which have come out in the last few months.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lalonde: As a matter of fact the leading economic indicators were all up in the last quarter. Housing has increased for the first time in 16 months. Employment rose in December. There are a number of clear indications that we are on the way to recovery. This is due, in good part, to the measures announced by the Government in the last six months, since the last budget in June. These measures are taking effect. That expenditure of over $2 billion is going into the economy at the present time.

I have had a very fruitful meeting with my provincial colleagues, the Ministers of Finance. We have agreed that we will be looking together at everything that could be done at the municipal, provincial and federal levels to help ensure an even stronger recovery. This process is ongoing at the present time. It was made clear at the time, and my provincial colleagues recognized this, that this did not mean the federal Government would be paying for all these activities—that the municipal, provincial and federal Governments had room to borrow and proceed with activities of their own. This is what is taking place at the present time.

If there is to be a federal contribution it will be known at the time of the budget, but in the meantime my provincial colleagues are showing more common sense than the Leader of the New Democratic Party. They are working hard at this themselves, and municipalities that have projects to go ahead are welcome to go ahead with those projects right now.

• (1430)

Mr. Broadbent: Madam Speaker, the Minister took about five minutes to say that he is not going to do anything in the next two months before the budget. That is what that amounted to.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT WITHDRAW EXPENDITURE RESTRAINT PROGRAM

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, my supplementary is also for the same Minister. We pointed out last summer that the six and five program was taking money out of the economy, and the Bishops of Canada pointed that out over Christmas. Yesterday Statistics Canada reported that because of the six and five program money was being taken away from Canadians which otherwise would be going into their pockets and would be spent to create jobs. Will the Minister at least acknowledge that the six and five program is counter productive and will he withdraw it so at least there will be a little equity in the country?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, would the Leader of the New Democratic Party at least have the honesty to reflect the views expressed by Statistics Canada properly? This is not at all what Statistics Canada indicated in its last report. I want to stress to the Hon. Member again that Statistics Canada indicate there are many signs of recovery taking place. Employment rose for the first time in 16 months in December, which Statistics Canada indicated. Statistics Canada also indicated that there is a resurgence in consumer confidence and a resurgence in investor confidence in the business sector.

Mr. Broadbent: Why do you not listen to the question and answer it?

Mr. Lalonde: This is the report of Statistics Canada. It is not the type of cooked question raised by the Hon. Member.

INDUSTRY

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT ASSUME RESPONSIBILITY FOR ADMINISTRATION OF CANADIAN INDUSTRIAL RENEWAL BOARD

Mr. Gérald Laniel (Beauharnois-Salaberry): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and concerns the Canadian Industrial Renewal Board.

Considering the Board's lack of efficiency in its decision-making and administrative procedures, and the mediocre results obtained after seven special areas were designated in Quebec and in Eastern Ontario, and especially considering the fact that the Board failed to create even a single job during this nine-month period in my own riding in the area of Valleyfield, I want to ask the Minister whether he would be willing to consider dismantling the Board of Directors of the CIRB, chaired by Mr. Paul Desmarais, and as a more efficient alternative, to take on full responsibility for this program, whose objectives raised high hopes at the time the program was presented.

[English]

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, while acknowledging that there have been some difficulties in some constituencies with respect to the operations of CIRB, I want to indicate to the Hon. Member that a substantial number of jobs have been created by that organization. There has also been financial assistance to the clothing industry, to the textile industry and to the footwear industry as a result of the $267 million which the Government of Canada allocated for that program. But I do agree with the Hon. Member that there are some areas which could be improved upon, and I will be addressing that matter with the chairman of the board and the administration.

ENERGY

NEGOTIATIONS BETWEEN FEDERAL GOVERNMENT AND NEWFOUNDLAND ON OFFSHORE RESOURCES

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In December the Minister indicated that the Government of Canada was prepared to change its approach to an agreement with the Province of Newfoundland on offshore mineral resources. The Minister then met with Mr. Marshall of Newfoundland. They both agreed on certain principles that could govern an agreement. Their agreement was a verbal one at the Minister's insistence that he did not want it in writing. Federal officials then met with provincial officials to draft a suggested agreement, but it was discovered that the federal officials were not following the Minister's agreement.

Why did the federal officials not follow the principles which the Minister agreed upon with the provincial Minister? Why were there changes made? Were they authorized by him or not? Were the principles which the Minister agreed upon agreed upon by his colleagues in cabinet, or was he doing this in some manner that was unauthorized? Why have we now had this crisis in negotiations?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I think the statement made by the Hon. Member has no foundation in reality. Over two months I met many times with Mr. Marshall. Both of us were supposed to have mandates from our respective Governments to try to develop an agreement that would be satisfactory to both Governments. Mr. Marshall and I agreed to meet at a referendum and refer our proposition to our Governments.

I discovered last week that officials of the two Governments had met for four days. They had drafted many, many notes that were to be part of the agreement. At one time the Newfoundland officials were to come back to collect a document that had been mostly written by both parties. In fact, they never appeared. After that I discovered Mr. Marshall did not want to see me either. I offered to meet him on Thursday. It was not possible. On Friday, after a lot of insistence he met me for a few minutes. On Saturday he was not available, nor Sunday, nor Monday, nor yesterday. For two days he has not been available, and, therefore, I think he does not want to have a deal.

Every time Mr. Marshall came to see me I discovered, that when he was in one hotel with me Mr. Peckford was across the street in another room. The Prime Minister gave me his confidence and he let me handle the problem myself. The Prime Minister is not known to follow his Ministers into other towns and wait across the street to give information.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

TELEXED MESSAGE

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question. Is it not correct that Mr. Marshall, on behalf of the Newfoundland Government, telexed the Minister on Monday after meeting him on Friday to inform him of this verbally, and to outline 17 points of principle to which a response was needed from the Minister in writing. The Minister's verbal promises or assurances are no longer sufficient because his officials will not follow them. The Finance Minister has hung him out to dry. He has pulled his chain and the Minister has been hauled back.

Is the Minister prepared to answer in writing the 17 points of principle put forward by the Newfoundland Government so that these negotiations can start again and the officials can start drafting? They cannot draft an agreement if they do not know what has been agreed. Why is the Minister keeping his agreements verbal? Is it because he has not got the authorization of the Prime Minister who was off in Southeast Asia when he should have been in a hotel room keeping an eye on the Minister?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, first I would like to deny one affirmation of the Hon. Member. Following each meeting I had with Mr. Marshall we would call our Deputy Ministers. Both of them took notes of the agreements that we made, which were transmitted to officials of both Governments. There were notes taken after each meeting we had. The notes were taken by Mr. Abery and by my own Deputy Minister. From these notes officials ten days ago drafted some aspects of an agreement, 22 pages in total. To claim there is nothing in writing is absolutely untrue. The problem is that Mr. Marshall did not have a mandate to negotiate in good faith with me. He had to go back to the next room—

Mr. Clark: You could not find your Prime Minister.

Mr. Chrétien: —and I did not have to go back to my Government because my Government told me to try to make a deal that is acceptable to Canada and Newfoundland "and we will back you up." But Mr. Marshall did not have such a mandate.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: The Minister is telling absolute falsehoods.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member for St. John's East.

NATURE OF AGREEMENT

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, may I ask the Minister a supplementary question? Will the Minister of Energy please tell the House why he has refused to reply to the legitimate request of the Government of Newfoundland to put in writing the 17 points verbally agreed to by the Minister and his Newfoundland counterpart?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I am sorry but the 17 points are not the 17 points on which we had agreed. These were other points agreed to. Many of them were new questions which Mr. Marshall and I had never debated. They were not the points on which we had agreed. I took the speech that Mr. Peckford made on October 6 in which he made four objections to the proposition of my predecessor. I met the four points. Now that I have met the four points, they come with 17 new ones. When you are serious and you want to have a deal, that is not the way to act, and you never negotiate through telegrams.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: You were authorized—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member for Victoria.

Some Hon. Members: More.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I guess the House has now had its recess and we can go back to business. The Hon. Member for Victoria.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

MOVEMENT OF 409 SQUADRON FROM COMOX, B.C. TO COLD LAKE, ALTA.

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of National Defence I would like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. In the Comox, British Columbia area there is considerable economic distress. Lumbering is down by over 50 per cent in British Columbia and fishing income has declined significantly. To add to the difficulties the Minister of National Defence has decided to move the 409 Voodoo Squadron from Comox to Cold Lake, Alberta. Would the Prime Minister tell the House what prompted the Government to move over 400 jobs out of this already distressed area?

Mr. Stanley Hudecki (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, the unfortunate aspect of phasing out the Voodoo airplanes from the 409 Squadron has necessitated reducing the number of people who are required at that particular base. However, that base will be used for search and rescue. It will eventually be used for the CF-18s when they are deployed from their home base which will be at Bagotville or Cold Lake. That will increase the number at that time.

In addition, the Maritime Patrol will still be functioning so that there will be a very respectable number of people employed at that level. There are currently 1,950 employed. The net loss in total personnel will be 430. It is regrettable, but this is a result of phasing out the CF 101 aircraft at that post.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McKinnon: It is surprising to see the applause from the Liberal ranks at the loss of 400 jobs in Comox, British Columbia.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

SEARCH AND RESCUE COMPLEMENT AT COMOX, B.C.

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Madam Speaker, I will direct my supplementary question to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Defence. I thank him for the fullness of his first answer.

The Cabinet has overruled the recommendations of its own search and rescue report that a Minister other than the Minister of National Defence should be responsible for search and rescue. Will the Parliamentary Secretary tell us if there are any plans for increasing the size of the search and rescue squadron at Comox, or for moving in any other units to replace the 400 who are moving out with the 409 Squadron?

Mr. Stanley Hudecki (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, the answer in that respect is that in light of the phasing out of the 409 Squadron there would be less need for search and rescue equipment and personnel. On the other hand, arrangements had been made to increase the number of cutters for the West Coast.

ENERGY

PRICE OF NATURAL GAS EXPORTED TO UNITED STATES

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In recent press reports several U.S. Congressmen are claiming success in pressuring the Canadian Government to reduce the price of Canadian gas going into the U.S. market. The Minister has publicly indicated that he is flexible on this subject. His officials will also be visiting Washington on Tuesday to pursue this matter further. Would the Minister assure the House that he is not prepared to cave in to American pressure to reduce the price of Canadian gas going into the U.S. market?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I think the question of price is part of an agreement between the Canadian administration and the American administration which was signed some two or three years ago. The price is $4.94. It has not been increased over the last two years because of the current market conditions.

In terms of the price for future exports, I am waiting for the report of the National Energy Board which is supposed to be published tomorrow in which they will decide if there is surplus and to whom they will give the licence for export. It is only after that that we will have to decide about the price.

At this time the price is part of an agreement between the two Governments. I explained that to the Congressmen, as well as telling them that they cannot blame the increase in the price of natural gas in the United States this winter on a price that was set three years ago and has been in their system for three years.

Mr. Skelly: That certainly is not an answer that would give any assurance to provincial Governments that are already having great difficulty with revenue problems.

LINKAGE TO PRICE OF OIL

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Madam Speaker, there was an assurance in the National Energy Program to consumers that in order to convert through the off-oil program to natural gas and other alternatives it would maintain gas at 65 per cent of the price of oil. Yet in the face of a temporary glut and the threat of price reduction, it looks as if the price of natural gas is over that 65 per cent level. Can the Minister give some assurance that, in order to protect alternative energy programs, the Government will in fact make sure that the price of natural gas tracks at 65 per cent of the price of oil in the face of oil reductions?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the natural gas and gas liquids tax has been set in such a way that the price of gas would be very advantageous to consumers. Our intention, as announced in the National Energy Program update, was to maintain that tax at a level of approximately two-thirds the price of oil in 1982 and 1983.

I am reviewing this matter at the present time and I expect to be able to announce a decision in that regard. I want to assure the Hon. Member, however, that we will reduce the natural gas and gas liquids tax significantly to honour that commitment fully and maintain a very significant advantage in favour of natural gas as compared to oil, as far as consumers are concerned.

THE CONSTITUTION

MINORITY LANGUAGE RIGHTS IN QUEBEC

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. During the Christmas recess there was an exchange of correspondence between the Prime Minister and the Premier of Quebec regarding a possible Quebec veto and certain language rights. There was an inference in the press reports that the Prime Minister might be willing to reduce even further certain minority language rights in Quebec in order to get Quebec's agreement to the Constitution.

Would the Prime Minister clarify this matter and, since we all would like to see Quebec accept the new Constitution, would he consider suggesting to Quebec that there could be a certain constitutional veto in exchange for stronger minority language rights, not only in Quebec but throughout the country?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member will understand that it is not in my power to offer Quebec a stronger veto right in exchange for anything at all. The veto right, if it is recognized for Quebec much as every Province had recognized it in the 1971 agreement, which Quebec rejected, will be a consequence of all Provinces agreeing to the new amending formula. Therefore, I cannot offer any pay-off.

However, I do want to clarify, for the benefit of the House and the Hon. Member, what I wrote in my letter to Mr. Levesque concerning language protection. In essence I was offering to sit down and write a text which would be more protective of minorities, both French and English, across Canada in the educational system. That was the line that the Premier pretended had been adopted at the St. Andrews' meeting in 1977 and the Montreal meeting in 1978 when all Premiers agreed to protect the minority language rights in their Provinces.

It will be recalled that, as the agreement was being reached in November, 1981, I made the same offer at that time to the Premier of Quebec, saying that if the Charter and the particular section concerning language rights did not correspond to the agreement they had reached in St. Andrews and Montreal, I would be prepared to change its wording. But it was not a watering down, as has been suggested by some editorialists, which was indicated in my letter. On the contrary, it was a rewording which I would hope would go even further in respecting the minority language rights.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CANADIAN INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT AGENCY

ENDEAVOUR TO PROTECT BUDGET

Mr. John Gamble (York North): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Secretary of State for External Affairs I would like to direct my question to the Minister of State for International Trade. Is he aware of an endeavour to be made by CIDA, by way of a self-serving propaganda campaign, to convince the media, Members of Parliament and the development community that it is appropriate that none of its budget be cut in these difficult economic times, as part of the difficult task of proving to Canadians that CIDA is an efficient, effective, and responsible institution?

• (1450)

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister of State (International Trade)): Madam Speaker, the article the Hon. Member refers to may be slightly erroneous in one regard. One official in CIDA had done a certain amount of work and had prepared a recommendation for a policy in that direction. That policy has not been adopted.

It is true that some senior officials of CIDA were aware that work was being done on the examination of a policy, but the proposed policy is merely the opinion of one person in CIDA and has not been adopted.

PURPOSE OF PROPOSED EXPENDITURE

Mr. John Gamble (York North): Madam Speaker, I am gratified with the Minister's response and I take it from that reply that it will be the intention of the Government to see that this kind of frivolous expenditure is not incurred, having regard to the fact that the taxpayers' dollars which are put into CIDA, according to this plan if it is ever implemented, are to be used for the purpose of convincing Members of Parliament, who are also paid by the taxpayers, how they should do their jobs, and also convincing the development community, consisting of such organizations as CUSO, how they should use taxpayers' dollars funded to them through CIDA, all for the purpose of persuading the general public how they should respond to this issue.

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister of State (International Trade)): Madam Speaker, obviously the Hon. Member did not listen to my first answer, or he decided that he wanted to flail away at the subject even though he had nothing at which to flail. The situation is, of course, that the official in question was asked to look at a communications strategy. The Hon. Member is well aware of the value of CIDA. It is probably the best organization of its type in the world, and it is essential that Canadians have a knowledge of that. Indeed, it is important in its work that its method of operation be well understood. The Hon. Member can be reassured that there is no intention on the part of the Government or the officials of CIDA to pursue a course of propaganda.

In relation to what he said about Members of Parliament, I would hope that Members of Parliament on all sides would have taken the time to be aware of the many worth-while achievements of CIDA in various parts of the world.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

ELIMINATION OF JOBS IN SAINT JOHN, N.B.

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. The CNR has announced its intention to eliminate 44 jobs in the Maritimes, a move which can hardly be received warmly in a region of the country in which unemployment has already ravaged countless households.

However, the ramifications are much more substantial than 44 lost jobs. In the name of efficiency the port City of Saint John, whose facilities handle more tonnage than any other port on the East Coast, has been reduced to a second class status from a "carload centre" to a "satellite". Will the Minister not recognize the negative impact that this change will have on users and potential businesses in the city, and reinforce the position of the port and the security of the port workers by assuring the city it will not lose its classification as a "carload centre"?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, there are two answers to questions of that kind, which I receive regularly two or three times a week. One is to emphasize that if we Canadians want our railways to be efficient we have to accept the fact that they have to keep up with improvements, to rationalize, to be efficient. That means, unfortunately, and we all regret it, occasionally the transfer or pre-retirement or lay-off of some people. That is the first answer. It is a question of knowing what we want and having in mind the real interests of Canadians and of shippers, and trying to develop as efficient a railway transportation system as we can.

The second answer is, and it is a traditional one in Canadian politics, for the Minister to say that we have Crown corporations in Canada and the Minister is not involved in the daily operations of these institutions. That is in line with the best practice throughout Canadian history.

REQUEST FOR POSTPONEMENT OF ACTION

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): Madam Speaker, the port city of Saint John must remain efficient and it must serve a useful purpose, just as the CNR should be serving it. That city has received body blow after body blow—the cancellation of VIA services, the non-utilization of the port for a fair share of grain movement, to name two recent events—and now this. I will ask the Minister will he not confer with his officials, because he does have an opportunity to influence the CNR, and he should not try to deny that, and ask them at least to postpone the disembowelling of the city of Saint John until parties at all levels have had some opportunity for input into this decision?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I will do so, but I do not accept the proposition which is apparently at the basis of the Hon. Member's question, that the Port of Saint John has not been thriving in recent years. On the contrary.

MEDICAL CARE

CONTRACT TO MANAGE HAWKESBURY HOSPITAL

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. The Minister is no doubt aware of the controversy surrounding the approval which the Ontario Conservative Government has given to the contract signed between the District General Hospital in Hawkesbury and the Canadian subsidiary of American Medical International which will manage the hospital according to profit criteria, as opposed to health criteria, and of course in return will get a share of whatever profits they can generate.

Does the Minister consider this contract, which sets a serious and dangerous precedent in the privatization and, indeed, the Americanization of health care in Canada, to be in violation of one of the five founding principles of medicare, which is the principle of non-profit administration?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, when I read the news in the newspapers, like many other parliamentarians, I immediately inquired into the repercussions on the five basic principles upon which medicare is established, and well established. I must immediately, and I am pleased to have a chance to do it in answering the Hon. Member, point out that the Medical Care Act refers to a medical care insurance plan of a province as being administered on a non-profit basis.

According to the legal advice that I have received, medical practitioners or institutions related to health could operate on a profit basis. It is the plan covering the client services that must be administered publicly, not for profit.

I would therefore suggest, before we all panic and think there is something deeply wrong with what Ontario is doing, which by the way is being studied carefully with the purpose of imitating it in other provinces, that we ask the proper question, which is, if that hospital makes a profit, and it is good for the hospital as long as its clients are well served, where will the money go? I think it should increase the services needed in health promotion, for example, and in new work on health concerns. That is where the pressure should be put.

Mr. Blaikie: We know where the money will go, Madam Speaker. It will go to the same place where all money generated by multinationals in this country goes; it will go back to the United States. That is where the money will go, it will not go into health care.

QUERY RESPECTING MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): Madam Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister whether or not she approves of this, not whether or not there is some legalistic distinction between the Medical Care Act and the Hospital and Diagnostic Services Act, which there may well be. What I am asking the Minister is, does she approve of this in principle and, if she does not, will she include something in the next draft of the Canada Health Act to address this problem, because it certainly goes against the spirit of health care in Canada as it is understood by the majority of Canadians.

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, women are not priests, and at times that is practical. I do not approve or disapprove on moral grounds. My job is to administer and act for the benefit of Canadians. Let us start with the facts. It would help. I have just answered, black and white, that that is not a breach of the conditions in the Act. What else does the Hon. Member want me to do? Second, I am offering him what is a good political line, which is where will the money go? If the answer you gave me is in a letter from Mr. Larry Grossman, the Minister of Health in Ontario, I would like a copy, because I am sure he never was asked in the provincial legislature, "Where will the money go if the hospital makes a profit?"

REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE FOR BEEF INDUSTRY

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the very depressed situation in the Canadian beef industry this year, with low cattle prices last fall and continuing high input costs for interest and farm machinery repairs, is the Minister planning to implement the provisions of the Anderson-Vandermeulen Report on the beef industry, or provide stabilization payments to producers this winter? What action is planned by the Government?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member has asked what action is planned by the Government to help with the plight of the beef farmer at this time. We are having discussions every day and hope to be able to meet the industry and the provincial ministers very shortly.

PETITIONS

TABLING OF REPORTS OF CLERK OF PETITIONS

Madam Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the Clerk of the House has laid upon the Table reports of the Clerk of Petitions stating that he has examined the petitions presented by Hon. Members on Tuesday, January 25, 1983, and finds that the petitions meet the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. BAKER (NEPEAN-CARLETON)—STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S.O. 21

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, at the outset of proceedings today, during the period of time devoted to Members' statements, the Hon. Member for Laurier (Mr. Berger) made a statement in the House purporting to be under the section concerning Members' statements. What he did, in effect, was to quote completely, for 90 seconds, an editorial from the Montreal Gazette.

I am not arguing the substance of that editorial, its rightness or wrongness, but I am arguing the question whether that was within the spirit of the rules, and I believe it was not. The rules are designed for Members of Parliament to make statements, not for editorial writers of newspapers to make statements. If the Member of Parliament agrees with the statement, and I am sure he does, I am not arguing whether he is right or wrong.

Mr. Clark: He always agrees with it.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): However, no matter what the situation, it ought to be the Member's statement in that period of time, 90 seconds, and it should not be filled up with a long quote.

Mr. Crosbie: Brainless quote.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): We dealt with the whole question of poems and other things. Your Honour said that a poem could not be quoted to use up the entire period; one could use small quotations. I think the same principle applies here and the matter should be dealt with now. We allowed Standing Order 43 to fall into disrepute as a result of misuse and we do not want this period devoted to Members' statements to meet with the same fate.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: Just to refresh the Hon. Member's memory, when I spoke about quotations in answer to the question whether statements could be made in verses, I said that I did not think the spirit of that particular Standing Order would allow Members to make their statements in verses but that I would allow quotations from poets—

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Small quotations.

Madam Speaker: —if they seemed to fit into the statements of the Members.

As for the Hon. Member's statement today, I was waiting to see whether the Hon. Member would finish his quotation by stating his opinions of that particular editorial rather than simply reading all of it. I think this matter deserves some examination on my part in consultation with those who decided that they would make a change to Standing Order 43.

The Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) is right. I think this change was for the good. The House is receiving statements from Members concerning questions which they feel are important, and I think we should keep it that way. I will look at the statement of the Hon. Member for Laurier (Mr. Berger) and I will consult with those who were in the committee. I will give some guidance on this matter once I have completed those consultations.

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, may I direct the question which is usually asked on Thursday to the Government House Leader today and ask him what the business will be for next week? We know that we are not sitting this Friday and that tomorrow will be an Opposition day for the NDP; but could he lead us as far as he can into next week with respect to House business?

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, the hon. gentleman is right; no one expects Friday to be very productive.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): At least not for you.

Mr. Pinard: I want to designate tomorrow as an Opposition day and on Monday we will resume debate on Bill C-139 with respect to the Income Tax Act. On Tuesday and Thursday we will resume debate on Bill C-131, which is related to Old Age Security.

[Translation]

Therefore, Mrs. Speaker, next Monday we shall proceed with consideration of legislation to amend the Income Tax Act, and next Tuesday and Thursday, debate will be resumed on Bill C-131 whose purpose is to restrict indexation of old age security benefits.

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: I would like to ask the Government House Leader one further brief question. I ask these questions today because I will be unavoidably absent tomorrow for one of the greatest exercises in Canadian democracy.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nielsen: Will it be the Government's intention to designate one day next week as a further allotted day?

Mr. Pinard: I will consider that request, Madam Speaker, and report to my hon. colleague some time at the beginning of next week.

PETITIONS

MR. KEEPER—LONG-TERM EMPLOYMENT

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg-St. James): Madam Speaker, I have the honour of presenting a petition to this House which was brought to me by a number of students in an upgrading program who are despairing of the opportunity to get some real training and, even if they get training, of the opportunity for employment in the future. Therefore, they are calling upon the House to do some real economic planning in order to provide long-term employment for Canadians.

MR. SCHELLENBERGER—IMPAIRED DRIVERS' LEGISLATION

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Madam Speaker, I have the duty to present a petition on behalf of my constituents. The purpose of the petition signed by 131 citizens of the Town of Leduc is to register concern that fines and restrictions handed out for legally-charged impaired drivers are too small and that a much larger fine and longer restriction of their driving licences should be implemented. The nature of this petition is to request that Parliament enact tougher legislation with regard to legally-charged impaired drivers.

The petitioners hope, Madam Speaker, that in your examination of their petition you will find the petition in order, sense the urgency of their plea and that you might use the powers of your office to allow for discussion and referral to committee.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD—EURODOLLAR BORROWINGS

Question No. 4,592—Mr. Murta:

1. Did the Canadian Wheat Board recently borrow $50 million U.S. on the American market and, if so (a) for what purpose does the Board require eight year moneys (b) what provision has been made to carry the risk of exchange rate fluctuations over that period of time?

2. Was the borrowing for the acquisition of some asset and, if so, what source of funds will be used to repay the capital?

3. Since the Board is accountable only to Parliament but uses producers' money to purchase assets, for what reason does this procedure not merely amount to a transfer tax on producers?

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1. The Canadian Wheat Board recently floated a U.S. $50 million Eurodollar bond issue.

(a) These proceeds will be used for the general purposes of the Board including the repayment of bank indebtedness incurred to finance its holdings of railway hopper cars and of grain which the Board has acquired.

(b) While no specific exchange rate provisions have been made at this point, and it is not practical to do so, the Board's selling prices are changed each day to reflect the current exchange rate, thereby creating a built-in hedge in the price of Board commodities.

2. The borrowing was for the purposes of repaying bank indebtedness incurred to finance railway hopper cars and holdings of grain which the Board has acquired. The bonds will be redeemed at maturity out of the proceeds from the sale of grain and/or bank loans and/or another bond issue.

3. All purchases made by the Board, be it real property, hopper cars or purchases of grain, are paid for with producer funds and/or bank loans. In the case of real property purchases or hopper cars, these costs would be amortized in Board accounts over a period of years and become a cost to the producer as do the interest costs resulting from bank loans incurred in financing such purchases.

DIMETHYL SULFOXIDE

Question No. 4,615—Mr. Mitges:

1. Is the pain-killing drug Dimethyl Sulfoxide (DMSO) available for human use in Canada and, if so, is it available for any specific disease or affliction?

2. Are there any side effects from the use of the drug by humans and, if so, what are they?

Mr. Jim Schroder (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. In Canada, Dimethyl Sulfoxide (DMSO) has been cleared under the Food and Drug Regulations as a 70 per cent solution for the treatment of scleroderma by application to the skin and as a 50 per cent solution for direct instillation into the urinary bladder for the treatment of interstitial cystitis, a fibrous disease of the bladder wall. DMSO is available on prescription.

2. In humans, the possible side effects include a garlic-like odour on the breath and an associated peculiar taste in the mouth. Increased warmth, burning, irritation, itching and eruption of the skin, headache, nausea, dizziness, sedation and certain chemical abnormalities in the blood reflecting possible liver and kidney malfunction have also occasionally been observed in persons taking DMSO.

GOVERNMENT TELEPHONE DIRECTORY

Question No. 4,631—Mr. Stewart:

1. Was a 1703 map of New France printed on the front cover of the government telephone directory for the National Capital Region and, if so, for what reason?

2. Was the description of the map printed on the back cover, in both French and English, and the map itself only in French and, if so, for what reason?

3. For what reason did the front cover not portray (a) an English language map (b) a map in both French and English?

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): 1. A 1703 map of New France was printed on the front cover of the National Capital Region government telephone directory at the request of Public Archives Canada. The purpose was to commemorate the seventy-fifth anniversary of the National Collection of Maps and Plans of the Public Archives.

2. The description of the map was printed on the back cover in both official languages, in accordance with standard procedures. The map, which was originally published in French in 1703, was simply reproduced on the front cover.

3. This map was selected by Public Archives Canada to be reproduced on the NCR directory as the first map to depict the latitude and longitude of Canada more or less correctly. Other historical maps, some of which were in English, were reproduced on government directories elsewhere in the country. As the historical maps were all published originally in either French or English, there were none available to be reproduced in both languages.

TRAVEL EXPENSES OF CABINET MINISTERS

Question No. 4,664—Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich):

What were the travel bills for all Cabinet Ministers other than the Minister of Agriculture for the fiscal year 1981-82?

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): See Public Accounts of Canada, 1981-82, Volume II, Section 38.40.

SALARIED PEOPLE'S PENSIONS

OPPORTUNITY TO ESTABLISH TRANSFER SYSTEM WITH PROVINCES

Mr. Marcel Roy (Laval) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the Government should consider the advisability of providing, in association with the provinces, a scheme whereby the pensions of all employees in Canada who contribute to a pension plan shall be portable from one employer to another without any loss of accrued benefits.

He said: Madam Speaker, it is with great satisfaction and pride that I rise in the House today to present the motion read just now. It was tabled on December 10, 1980. I just want to explain the procedure I had to follow to get this motion before the House today. Madam Speaker, I am particularly proud to be speaking on behalf of over 60 per cent of Canadian workers who do not enjoy the same advantages as their colleagues in the public sector with respect to pension plans, and also the manner in which such plans provide protection for the spouse.

That is therefore why I put this motion, at the request of a number of workers employed in small- and medium-sized businesses who, because they had changed jobs and owing to various circumstances had reached the age of 45 or 44 or 42 without having any kind of pension. During the last election campaign, I promised, and I made a commitment in my parliamentary bulletins to the constituents in my riding of Laval that I would draw the Government's attention to this situation which is penalizing 60 per cent of our workers because they work in the private sector and because they have not had an opportunity to work in the public sector. I therefore put this notice of motion. Several discussions were held in the Liberal caucus among Members from Quebec, Ontario and all the other provinces. In fact, the Liberal Government has been a major force in improving the quality of worklife and developing pension plans in Canada.

As a Member of this party, I could almost rest assured that the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) and the Government would demonstrate a firm resolve to take a comprehensive look at the pension plan situation in Canada, and the purpose of my motion today is to propose that for workers in the private sector, pension plans should be portable from employer to employer, until the employee retires.

In view of worker mobility, one aspect of pension plans that should be considered is portability, so that workers will be able to live comfortably upon retirement. In other words, Canadians in the private sector would, upon retirement, have a reasonable chance of avoiding a serious drop in their standard of living.

The purpose of my speech is to ask the Minister to refer this motion to the special committee of the House of Commons, to review the status of pension plans in Canada, and I am thus speaking on behalf of all those workers, men and women, in the private sector who do not enjoy the same protection as do employees in the public sector, at the municipal, provincial and federal levels. In the public sector, pension plans are portable, which means the employee is not penalized if he changes jobs.

Private plans financed by the employer represent only 14 per cent of total benefits paid to persons of 65 and over, that is, $1 out of $7, while 60 per cent comes from Government sources, that is, $3 out of $5. At the present time, the most urgent social problem is pension reform, for the simple reason that neither the Canada Pension Plan nor private plans provide an adequate income for Canada's senior citizens.

Today, 53 per cent of 2.3 million retired Canadians have incomes that are low enough to make them eligible for the Guaranteed Income Supplement, which is $194.37 per person for a married couple and $252.10 for a single person. The supplement is added to the monthly $251.12 provided under the universal Old Age Security Program.

This means that one pensioner out of five, or nearly 400,000 Canadians, have no income other than their Old Age Security and the Guaranteed Income Supplement, although they have worked all their lives.

How does the pension system in Canada work? It is often referred to as a three-tiered system. The first level consists of Federal programs including Old Age Security—$251.12 per month—the Guaranteed Income Supplement of $194.37 for a married person and $252.10 for a single individual, and the spousal allowance which is granted to the spouse of a pensioner who is receiving Old Age Security and the Guaranteed Income Supplement, if the spouse is between 60 and 64 years old. Since the Old Age Security Act was amended, about 90,000 pensioners have been receiving these benefits, which represents an annual expenditure of Government funds of approximately $175 million.

At the second level, we have the Canada and Quebec Pension Plans to which contributions are compulsory and linked to earnings, and which apply to practically all Canadian workers between the ages of 18 and 64, unless they are receiving retirement or disability benefits under the Plan.

The third level is the pension plan which comprises private pensions, personal savings and investments which represents approximately 25 per cent.

If we want to ensure the well-being of private sector workers in the years to come, we must treat them as equal partners, and pension plans must be on a level with those in the public sector. It is along these lines that I am going to continue the balance of my speech.

Private pension plans have a number of drawbacks which prevent the elderly from receiving an adequate income upon retirement. Only 40 per cent of Canada's labour force contribute to a private pension plan. There are 380,000 Canadians living solely on Old Age Security and Guaranteed Income Supplement benefits, despite the fact that they have worked for a number of years. This problem must be solved first of all, because even if we do change the rules on portability, it would not do much good if 60 per cent of our workers were not able to benefit.

A number of arrangements regarding vested rights leave much to be desired. The employee is entitled to his pension plan contributions as soon as the employer's share becomes the employee's property. A number of companies require a long period of service—as much as ten years—and the recipient must be 45, before they agree to pay the employee what he invested in the pension fund as soon as he turns 65. An employee who leaves a job and does not have ten years of service with the same company, loses the employer's share. The employer returns the employee's share, keeps his own, and the employee may receive interest of up to 4 per cent. The result is that all these workers are penalized because pension funds are not portable. Sometimes workers reach the age of forty without having any pension plan whatsoever.

If we look at figures provided by Statistics Canada, we see that in 1976, only 10 per cent of contributors to private plans were eligible to receive the full amount contributed to their pension plans. In view of the very considerable mobility of Canadian workers, people who change jobs have no protection at all as far as pension funds are concerned.

Mr. Speaker, I am not setting myself up as an actuary or an expert on the subject, but I believe that as a Member of Parliament I have a responsibility, with my fellow Members, to try and correct this unfortunate situation which is penalizing men and women working in the private sector and I believe we have a duty to ensure they have at least the same level of protection afforded to public sector employees. That is the purpose of my motion, and I realize that eventually a price will have to be paid, and that the Government, in addition to "recharging the batteries" of our Canadian economy and safeguarding and creating jobs, will also have to continue its efforts in the area of pension reform and consider my notice of motion as one of its priorities. I appreciate the Minister's concern for the predicament of spouses who are not protected in the private sector, as our legislation now stands.

I am well aware of the rules of this House, and I do not intend to use up all my time. I wish to appeal to all parties to make this notice of motion more than just an earnest wish expressed by a Member of this House on behalf of 60 per cent of the working men and women of Canada, and to have this motion referred to the special committee announced in the House by a Government that is indeed making a tremendous effort to improve the status of pensioners in Canada. On December 9 last year, we tabled in the House a document entitled: "Better Pensions for Canadians", and we also announced the formation of a special committee. I should therefore appreciate it if this notice of motion were referred to the committee.

[English]

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, first of all I want to express my appreciation to the Hon. Member for giving us an opportunity to debate the merits of this particular motion.

The need for greater probability of private pension schemes is obvious to most Members of this House, particularly in a period of high unemployment. There are literally thousands of individual workers who have paid in to private pension plans and are now suddenly faced with, and affected by, plant shutdowns. Because they do not have a particular number of years of service and a vested interest in a private pension plan, they suddenly find that the pension they thought they had bought is in fact not there at all. Very often all they are entitled to is the return of contributions, and even that at a very low rate of interest; sometimes it is something less than 4.5 per cent based on the contributions they have made to that particular plan.

While all workers, male and female, are affected detrimentally by that kind of situation, for women it presents a different kind of problem. The reasons for that have been stated by the present Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin), who has pointed out on a number of occasions that simply because of the position of women in society and the workforce, they tend to change their jobs about six times during their work life. That being the case, it becomes increasingly difficult for many of those women to build up a pension benefit through the private pension plan system. And not only that, very often it is impossible for many women in the workforce to earn a pension benefit on retirement because of the inequalities and inequities built into our workforce structure.

The mover of this motion, when he wound up his speech, Mr. Speaker, referred to the green paper on pension reform which was recently tabled in the House by the Minister of National Health and Welfare. As the Hon. Member knows—but it may come as a surprise to the House—that green paper dealt primarily with reforms to the private pension system. When I asked the Minister a question about what was going to happen to that green paper, she made it absolutely clear that the thrust of the green paper and the statements it contained—they were not even recommendations—were related directly to the private pension system.

Now, while I would be the first to agree that there will always be a place in our retirement income structure for private pension plans for those individuals who wished to buy an additional benefit over what public plans provide, I think it is an abdication of this Government's responsibility to place the total thrust of any policy development to improve retirement incomes on the private system. I say that for a number of reasons. First of all, the private plans cover less than 50 per cent of the workforce, and out of that number of people only about 33 per cent are women. At the National Pensions Conference held here in Ottawa several years ago there was absolutely no doubt in the mind of anyone who participated that the private pension system is totally inadequate for the needs of people who retire today. In fact, there has hardly been a newspaper editorial since that green paper was tabled, and for some time prior to that, which has not emphasized that if there is any kind of policy development on reforming our pension system, it should be weighted in favour of the public plans, particularly the Canada Pension Plan. The reasons for that are obvious.

The Hon. Member's motion is welcome in terms of allowing the House to debate the merits of this particular proposal to improve portability from one private pension plan to another. I want to point out, however, that the best kind of portability is already provided for in the Canada Pension Plan. It is completely portable. If you are laid off at one plant and then become employed at another, the Canada Pension Plan is still there; your contributions are still there, the benefits you bought are still there and it is guaranteed to be paid to you at retirement age. In my view, that is the best kind of portability that can be provided. It does not demand a certain level of income to allow you to buy an additional benefit, as would be necessary under a private pension plan. In my view and that of many other people, the Canada Pension Plan is probably much more desirable than any improvement in the private system which would provide a benefit to the largest number of people in the country.

• (1530)

There are obviously other problems which many Members on this side of the House addressed in the debate on Bill C-131 which took place in the House in the last several months. We pointed out repeatedly that the benefits provided under the Old Age Security Act are totally inadequate. That statement is justified when it is recognized that the vast majority of single women over the age of 65 have annual incomes of something less than $5,000 per year under the Old Age Security Act. I challenge any Member of the House and most Canadians to try and scrape by on that.

While we are talking about improved portability provisions within private pension plans, I think we would be remiss in our responsibilities if we did not address these other serious problems that are built into the income replacement system for retirement that we have in this country.

A number of groups and individuals have been concerned with the plight of retired Canadians and those who have not had an opportunity to buy into a private pension plan over the years. One such group is the Social Planning Council of Metropolitan Toronto which, on December 10, 1982, issued a statement that addressed the particular problems faced by single, elderly people. It said, in part:

> On average, unmarried elderly persons in Ontario who are supported only by government income guarantees are currently living over $1,300 below federal poverty lines. In large urban centres, such as Toronto, Ottawa or Hamilton, such persons have incomes which are nearly $2,000 below the poverty line. The Social Planning Council estimates that a minimum adequate income for unmarried elderly persons in Ontario is about $350 a year more than the poverty lines in 1982. These elderly persons cannot wait until after the much delayed process of pension reform reaches parliament in 1984 or later . . .
> While pension reform for those who have not yet retired is urgently needed, the needs of those who have already retired, particularly elderly persons who live alone, is much more urgent. The current debate on pension reform will not help the poor elderly person, because few have any pension benefits in the first place.

That is a matter that should be of serious concern to anyone who has any sensitivity or recognizes that there should be a form of social and economic justice in the country.

At a recent conference held by the International Association of Machinists and Aerospace Workers, the whole question of pension requirements was addressed. The research director, Louis Erlichman, stated as follows:

> Resolving the pension issue is becoming increasingly urgent as the number of needy elderly Canadians grows.
>
> Statistics Canada figures show there now are two million Canadians over 65 and more than half of them are living on less than $6,000 a year.
> The federal agency's figures also show that once the baby boom generation of the 1950s starts to retire, the number of over-65s will more than triple.
> Meanwhile, about 43 per cent of the country's population has no investment or private pension income.

A discussion on the need for complete portability between the pension plans in the private system is welcome, but I think we have to extend the discussion to requirements in the public pension system as well.

I want to thank the Hon. Member for giving us this opportunity to address this particularly serious question today.

Hon. Bill Jarvis (Perth): Mr. Speaker, I want to join with the previous speaker in thanking the Hon. Member for Laval (Mr. Roy) for bringing this matter to the attention of the House. I believe it is important because it is an issue that will be with us for a long, long time. As the previous speaker indicated, it is a problem for a growing number of elderly people in the country.

When one looks at what we have come to call the post-war baby boom bubble moving through society—I presume they are now in their thirties and forties—one can see that the issue is not just one of immediacy for people now aged 65 and over, but that it will be exaggerated enormously when the baby boom bubble moves into retirement in the next two or three decades.

As I understood the remarks of the Hon. Member for Laval, the principal thrust was that the committee consider the nature of this motion as part of its mandate when it studies the broader issues. To that I enthusiastically and whole-heartedly subscribe. For the last ten years I have believed that the greatest underutilized force of this Chamber is our committee system. I hope that the parliamentary reform proposals will do something to correct that. I have some serious reservations, however, about the genuineness of certain Members of Cabinet in terms of fulfilling that potential for committees, but I hope I am wrong. As we move into a rather changed committee system, I have great hopes for improvement.

I cannot think of any subject—although I am sure there are some—that would provide a better subject matter for intensive study than the whole issue of pensions. I sincerely hope the issue of portability will become one of the major issues that the committee will study.

The Hon. Member for Laval professed that he was neither an accountant nor an expert on pensions. I do not think that is very important from a committee point of view, Mr. Speaker. As a bachelor, I am sure the Hon. Member was not an expert on wife battering, yet he chaired the committee that studied the subject and which, I say in all sincerity, was one of the greatest stimulants in society. In my riding, an active committee of volunteers was created as a direct result of the committee and it is now working on the problem.

The Hon. Member need not make any apologies to the House for not being an expert on pensions or for not being an accountant, because were that performance to be repeated by the committee studying pensions and a report drafted that would have as much success and progress and make as much impact as the one on battered wives, then the Hon. Member would have made a very significant contribution not only to the House but to society.

Let us talk a bit about the problem of pensioners. I claim not to be unique at all, but I come from a riding in which the principal employer for many decades was the CNR. One of the great attractions of working for the CNR, as many of us will remember, was its pension plan. By comparison, in the 1940s and early 1950s its pension plan was very attractive. As a result, CNR pensioners in my riding and dozens of others across the country looked forward to a reasonable retirement in their own homes. That pension plan, as many others, has become a victim of inflation. The pension has been so seriously eroded by the ravages of inflation that the reasonable expectations of these pensioners have not been met.

I should like to direct my remarks particularly to portability. I agree that women have been the principal victims of pension plans or the lack of viable pension plans. If one looks at typical young persons in the work force served by private pension plans and acknowledges the mobility of workers, not only geographically but from one employer to another, one finds that many of them upon changing jobs regard for good reason the contributions they have made to the pension plan of their previous employer, together with any interest which has built up, as a sort of savings. Suddenly it becomes—and I hate to use the word—a windfall gain when they have their previous employer that may be used to purchase a car, to take a holiday or to pay debts, which would be more likely in today's society. In my view, it is because of lack of portability that they have been regarded as temporary savings plans rather than as plans for future retirement.

If we can do anything to encourage a change in attitude toward that contribution, we should do so. We should work in the House and in the committee toward changing the attitude among young people in the work force who regard it simply as a supplementary savings plan to be cashed in when they change jobs. Their attitude should be changed to regarding it as something to supplement the Canada Pension Plan and the Old Age Security.

The Hon. Member pointed out a number of people were receiving GIS. This is directly attributable to the fact that people have become either discouraged or uncaring during their working years about supplementing income for retirement years or creating additional income for retirement years. Certainly portability is one of the best tools available to us toward changing that attitude and experience. Therefore, I hope the Government consider, as a result of the Hon. Member's motion, that the portability factor be one of the major items to be studied by the committee.

I hope I do not imply something incorrectly in the motion. In part it reads:

—the Government should consider the advisability of providing, in association with the Provinces, a scheme whereby the pensions of all employees in Canada who contribute to a pension plan shall be portable from one employer to another without any loss of accrued benefits.

I do not believe the Hon. Member is suggesting that we exclude private carriers or that the Government pension plan should supplant all private plans. He is suggesting, rather, that the Government should take some action, in consultation with private carriers, to encourage portability of private plans. I see him nodding in the affirmative. I very much support that concept.

I was somewhat disturbed by the spokesman for the New Democratic Party. I think he intimated that the Government should be the exclusive carrier of pension plans. That was not the intention of the Hon. Member for Laval. Again I thank him very much for bringing the matter before the House of Commons in this form. I wish him great success in convincing his ministerial colleagues that the substance of this motion should be included in the terms of reference for what I hope will be a very successful committee study.

Mr. Young: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would not want the Hon. Member to misunderstand what I said. I said that I recognized there would always be a place for private pension plans in the country. However, I would be disturbed if the major thrust or weight in reforming the pension or income retirement system was to rest on the private sector, where I do not think it should be. I recognize that there will always be a place for private pension plans, but there should be a greater emphasis upon vastly improving the public pension scheme.

Mr. Jarvis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. I apologize for misunderstanding the Hon. Member. I do not think we agree on the major thrust: I think it should be on the private sector and the Hon. Member thinks it should be on the public sector. I misunderstood his remarks and I withdraw my comments in that regard.

Mr. Douglas Fisher (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I should like to begin my remarks by commending the Hon. Member for Laval (Mr. Roy) for his very timely and very fine reminder of the importance of this issue. At the end of his comments he mentioned the pressing need to look at the economy and that he did not want to divert us from that issue. I assure him that the issue of pensions deserves our attention at this stage and that it will not divert us from other economic topics. We are indebted to the Hon. Member for his timely reminder and for the ideas he put forth.

I know that in his work as Chairman of the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs he has constantly shown a concern over this matter. I know as well that he raised these comments in correspondence and in our caucus meetings. He has travelled about his own riding gathering evidence and commenting with his constituents. Today's discussion moves the issue one step further. We are all the beneficiaries of this and we thank him for it. They are important ideas which deserve our attention now. Some of them deserve our immediate action.

I should like to refer the Hon. Member to some comments which were made before the Finance Committee during its special hearings in September. At that time we looked at the Income Tax Act and our discussions touched upon quite a few points, including the problems in terms of pensions, especially equity issues for farmers, small-businessmen and professionals who need to take a capital asset and turn it into a pension. We discussed how they could do that without suffering undue tax burdens. There was a very useful discussion of the problem at the time. The Hon. Member may want to take a look at it as a smaller issue inside the one which he raised.

We all have observations which we want to make on the topic. Personally, I am struck by the importance of home ownership for many Canadians. Very often home ownership gives retired Canadians a great degree of security, a kind of security which is not apparent when we look at the otherwise low incomes they enjoy. For example, one of my neighbours is a widow who is in her eighties. She owns her own home and takes advantage of public sector pensions. She is able to live in that manner because she does not have a heavy burden in terms of shelter costs; she is able to enjoy her own home.

I wonder whether we should be exploring further the question of using RRSPs for home ownership, given the obvious evidence that Canadians are able to live at home and not rely too much upon outside pensions; they are able to get by with what otherwise seems to be minimal incomes. I know there are some tax issues involved with that proposal. It is an old idea; it does not originate with me. It seems to me that we should be able to overcome the tax-related problems of immediate benefit, of creating an undue tax shelter and so on. We should be able to work out some kind of compromise between the tax issues and the needs of Canadians in that respect.

• (1550)

Last December, as the Hon. Member knows, the Government presented its green paper on pension reform. I want to talk about some of the issues on pensions that come from the Finance Department. I know my colleague, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Schroder), has some other comments that he wants to raise from that department's point of view. From the Finance Department's perspective, we published a paper on pension reform that we thought set out an important array of proposals and some issues involved in upgrading our private sector pensions and our income support system. At the same time, I think it has been proposed that a special parliamentary committee be formed that will submit a report by the end of 1983. I think the idea which the Hon. Member for Laval has raised should be directed to that committee, which should be asked to react to these very important insights.

The portability of private pension plans has long been a concern of the Government of Canada. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and other Ministers have promised that pension plan credits will be made more portable than they are now. These initial studies that we have undertaken are the first steps along the line.

The difficulties created by the existing limitations on pension portability are well known. The Hon. Member for Laval raised some and so did Members on the other side. One problem is that belonging to an employer-sponsored pension plan does not necessarily mean that employees will ultimately receive a pension at retirement. They lose their pension rights if they change employers or if they lose their jobs before retirement.

While such employees may have their own pension plan contributions returned in such circumstances, they frequently forfeit the benefits that would result from the contributions made by their employers. I heard the ideas put forth by the Hon. Member for Perth (Mr. Jarvis). I thought it important that we look for some way and some incentive to keep younger people involved in pension plans rather than simply encouraging them to spend the money right away. I know we found similar problems with young employees who regard health and dental plans as unnecessary expenses, for example. They do not see the sense in these kinds of plans in their stage of life. We might want to take a look at that idea to see if there is some incentive that can be built into the system to follow up on the Hon. Member's ideas.

Many workers end up in their retirement years either with low pension benefits or none at all, even though they may have worked most or all of their working lives with various employers who offered pension plans.

In Canada the problems involved in portability of pension benefits are exacerbated by the high labour mobility that exists here. We have estimates that a male worker can hold jobs with as many as six employers during his working years. The average female worker may expect to have even more than six different employers during her working life. On the one hand, this mobility is a very healthy sign, both for the individual and for the economy. For the individual it means greater opportunity to switch employers rather than to progress slowly up the ladder in the same company. For the economy, there is a great deal more productivity coming from these people and many more benefits because of the greater use of their skills and knowledge. But the limitations to pension portability are creating a real barrier to job mobility for many Canadians. It becomes a disincentive for them to switch employers, to seek better opportunities and to make more productive use of their skills.

Therefore, in the green paper we find, as just one of several of its considerations, a whole series of proposals aimed at promoting high mobility through greater portability of pension rights.

First, we have to consider the question of the vesting of an employee's rights to pension plan contributions made by the employer. This is naturally an issue that is very closely related to pension portability. The Government believes that vesting provisions, that is, the time or age at which an employee is entitled to receive a pension credit based on the employer's contribution, must be substantially improved. The green paper proposes that vesting occur after two years of service. Otherwise, improved portability provisions would in many cases merely have the result of transferring the credits resulting from the employee's own contributions.

In respect of portability itself, the green paper has suggested that three options should be available to an employee when he leaves a job after his pension rights are vested. Subject to adjustments related to the funded status of the pension plan, the employee could have the following three choices. First, the employee could transfer the entire value of the pension to a registered pension account. This would be a new retirement savings plan, and I will elaborate further on that in a few minutes.

As a second option, the employee could leave the accumulated credits in the former employer's plan and take a deferred pension when he or she reaches normal retirement age.

Another option would be a combination of the two I have just mentioned. The value of the employee's contributions, with interest, would be transferred to a registered pension account while he or she would take a partial, deferred pension by leaving the remainder of the value in the plan with the original employer if the employer agreed. Or the employee could transfer the value of the accumulated pension to a new plan with the new employer, if that new employer agreed. Alternatively, amounts that could be transferred to a registered pension account could instead be transferred to a pension plan with the new employer.

How does this proposed new approach compare with the current provisions under pension law and income tax rules? The present legal framework generally allows employees to transfer the value of their vested pension benefits, tax free, to another pension plan or to a Registered Retirement Savings Plan, provided certain conditions are met. However, pension plans are not required by law to provide for such transfers.

In practice, we find a variety of approaches to this question. In the public sector many employers have reciprocal agreements among themselves to transfer credits for pensionable service when an employee moves from one such employer to another.

In the private sector the Canadian Life and Health Insurance Association has sponsored a somewhat similar arrangement among some of its member companies. A few industries, such as construction and forestry, have some multi-employer pension plans. However, in practice the majority of private industry pension plans do not provide for the transfer of vested benefits.

There are a number of other issues which have a bearing on the portability of pension rights. For example, most private plans do not provide for automatic indexation of benefits to maintain the purchasing power of pension rights in the face of inflation. Until such indexation becomes more prevalent, many employees might be better off if they simply took the cash on leaving an employer and invested it in such flexible instruments as Registered Retirement Savings Plans which could remain constant with inflation as the years go by.

• (1600)

This situation has led the Government to bring forward, as a proposal for consideration, the idea of requiring a minimum degree of inflation protection. This is the so-called excess earning method. Under this method, adjustments would be based on the difference between the five-year average of Government of Canada long-term bonds and 3.5 per cent. This proposal clearly has long-reaching implications and there must be broad consultations with the private sector and provincial Governments before it can be implemented.

I spoke earlier of the proposal in the green paper for a new retirement savings vehicle, the registered pension account. This would operate in a rather similar fashion to a Registered Retirement Savings Plan except that employers would also be able to contribute to an employee's registered pension account on a tax-deductible basis.

The proposal for a registered pension account has the potential of providing a very simple but effective way of improving pension portability. The details of such a plan are currently being developed within the Government and it is intended to publish a discussion paper on the whole question within several months. It should, however, be an important part of public discussion and debate which the Government hopes will take place on the whole question of pension reform.

Naturally, provincial Governments will have to be involved. They will play a key role. As the Hon. Member for Laval indicates in his motion, the Provinces have an important input in any decision on pension portability. The Provinces are responsible for regulating 90 per cent of workers and their pension plans in Canada. Over the years the federal and provincial Governments have co-operated closely in building a pension system that is substantially uniform throughout the country. In this way we have established and maintained Canada-wide standards, encouraged labour mobility and minimized administrative burdens for our employers. Federal-provincial co-operation will be more important in tackling the next stages of pension reform.

One point that I am trying to make in these remarks is that pension portability is important but it is not the only issue that must be considered as we attempt to achieve reform in our pension systems. There are other important matters that I have not mentioned which have to be carefully examined. There are questions of broader pension coverage for our working population and questions of improving pension treatment for women. We must ask ourselves, for example, what kind of balance we should strive for in seeking better retirement income protection between employer-sponsored pension plans, the more broad-based contributory Canada Pension Plan and Quebec pension plan, and the universal Old Age Security system.

It is noteworthy, for instance, that in the last several years there has been little or no increase in the proportion of workers covered by employer-sponsored pension plans. The percentage of employed paid workers in such plans increased from 42 per cent in 1970 to 47.9 per cent in 1979, but dropped marginally to 47.7 per cent in 1980. We must also ask ourselves how much pension reform can be afforded. It may in fact be necessary to choose among the elements of reform if they cannot all be afforded at once.

The green paper on pension reform examines all these wider issues. It contains proposals to improve the Canada Pension Plan and strengthen Government support for the elderly with low incomes. It also discusses issues related to financing the Canada Pension Plan.

The green paper proposes that a special parliamentary committee be set up to examine all of these proposals and to submit its report by the end of 1983. I hope that it will be possible to proceed at an early date with this committee study. I wish the committee well and at the same time I want to recommend to the committee the thoughtful presentation which we heard today from the Hon. Member for Laval. I want to thank him for raising these issues again and providing a chance to discuss them once again.

Mr. Jim Schroder (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, in the short time that I have available I would like to say that I know my Minister would consider the subject of pension portability, the subject of this motion today, to be well within the mandate of the special committee on pension reform. I am sure she will be anxious to have the subject referred to this committee and that it be given open and full discussion by the special committee on pension reform.

I am pleased to have an opportunity to speak on this motion put forward by the Hon. Member for Laval (Mr. Roy). I commend him for bringing this motion forward, as it contains the elements of a solution to one of the main problems with Canada's pension system. Indeed, I am certain that the reason or rationale behind the motion must be immediately apparent to anyone who has been following the pension debate in Canada over the last several years. Of course, I am speaking of the problems caused by the lack of suitable vesting and portability provisions in private pension plans.

As a result of the interaction of these two factors, vesting and portability, few workers in Canada who have had at least some degree of coverage under a private pension plan during their careers reach retirement age with any significant amount of income from this source. The only people in Canada today who are likely to receive an adequate pension from a private pension plan are those who have not only paid into the pension plan but have been working for the same employer for all or most of their working years. Far too few Canadians fall into this group. This is a very strong factor which contributes to the inadequacy of pensions today.

The obvious solution to this problem is contained in this motion. Let all employees in Canada take accrued benefits with them when they change employers. Of course, the problem in fact becomes less simple under detailed examination. That is why the problem remains with us. However, that is not to say that it is insoluble, nor that it has been ignored by Governments in the past. Indeed, as a direct result of Government action, there are two contributory pension plans in Canada at this very moment which achieve everything which could be provided as a result of this motion. I am sure Hon. Members are aware that I am speaking of the Canada and Quebec Pension Plans. Hon. Members will recall that one of the main forces, if not the force, behind the introduction of these plans was the need to solve the problem caused by a lack of transferability of an employee's accrued benefits from employer to employer.

How did the introduction of these two compulsory, contributory social insurance schemes deal with the problem of portability of accrued pension rights? The answer lies in several key elements of these two plans. First, membership is compulsory for virtually all workers in Canada between the ages of 18 and 65 as long as annual income is above a certain basic amount. This means that every worker in Canada is covered by one of these two plans, regardless of their length of service with the employer, the size of the company, the industry they work in or even the number of hours they work in a week. Unfortunately, all of these factors can affect the employee's coverage under an employer-sponsored pension plan at any given point in time.

The second key element is that all pension credits attributed to any one contributor to the Canada or Quebec Pension Plan are immediately vested.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member. As I am sure he is aware, it is my duty pursuant to Standing Order 24(2) to interrupt the proceedings at this time and move on to the next stage of Private Members' day.

CANADA LABOUR CODE

AMENDMENT RESPECTING SAFETY OF EMPLOYEES IN FEDERAL UNDERTAKINGS

Mr. Sid Parker (Kootenay East-Revelstoke) moved that Bill C-317, an Act to amend the Canada Labour Code (Safety of Employees), be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to introduce Bill C-317, a private Members' Bill to amend the Canada Labour Code. The purpose of the Bill is to amend the Canada Labour Code to make the provisions of Part IV, relating to the safety of employees, applicable to all federal work undertakings, including the operations of trains, ships and aircraft, departmental corporations and private and local works in the Territories.

I would first of all like to make it clear that I do not suggest that this Bill will solve the problems of health safety facing the workers of Canada. This Bill will deal with a few of the problems but, more important, I hope we can use the debate to convince the Government of the need for major changes in health and safety legislation. I shoulld not have to work hard to do this because it is not a partisan issue. The Minister has admitted in speeches that we lose more time through injuries than through strikes.

The Conservative labour critic has spoken often on this subject, and the NDP conducted a task force which travelled right across Canada and saw at first hand the problems that workers face in the workplace each day. It is a very, very serious problem.

Mr. Speaker, we all agree on the size of the problem. According to Workmen's Compensation Board figures, there were over a million work injuries in 1978. In the ten years before that the size of the work force had risen by 29 per cent and the number of injuries had risen by 69 per cent. Under the Canada Labour Code, one in every eight workers suffered a work injury or was killed in 1978. The same figure was true for workers in federal Crown corporations. On top of that, the Department of Labour admits that these figures may underestimate the problem by as much as 20 per cent. It is quite possible that there are a much larger number of injuries than even these figures report.

There is a great deal which could be done to reduce these injuries. In the first place the Labour Department does not have enough inspectors. Back in 1978 there was an article in the old Labour Gazette which contained a comment that is as true today as it was then. That article said that the main problem was:

> A system which put the inspectorate in the front line of the battle for occupational health and safety, in insufficient numbers, with confused and inadequate battle orders and a poor supply of armaments.

Less than a year ago we discussed this whole question for an estimates committee. We found at that time that there were 13,200 work sites under federal jurisdiction. There were 8,000 new work sites added, with the addition of the post office, under the Canada Labour Code. To inspect those 20,000 work sites there are about 135 labour affairs officers and about 40 of them have a safety specialty.

The Government has tried to deal with some of these problems through safety service agreements with the Provinces, but the Provinces have problems of their own. In Ontario there are only about 120 inspectors for 66,000 work sites. In Alberta the situation is even worse, with only about 50 inspectors for 60,000 work sites. The result of this is that on many work sites, both federal and provincial, the Government just does not enforce health and safety regulations or make inspections. On many occasions it just takes too long to find an inspector, even where there is a specific problem. As a result, many of the inspectors, given an impossible job, let the employers set the standards.

Labour Department officials told the Finn Commission looking into West Coast grain elevators in 1976 that our approach to the company and the industry, whether the grain industry or any industry, is to talk to the people about establishing procedures and systems that, over a long period of time, continuously take care of the situation. That approach is still being followed today.

Last year a safety officer told an inquest: "I leave it up to the individual company to draw up any procedures to suit their regulations". That inquest was into the death of Paul Jovanov. Mr. Jovanov was killed in a Windsor grain elevator which had been open for two years. The elevator had never been inspected.

I want to make it clear I am not blaming the inspectors. We ask them to do impossible jobs, to police vast numbers of job sites with no resources. They spend most of their time stamping out forest fires, so we cannot blame them for infrequently planned inspections.

I could not believe the response of the former Deputy Minister of Labour when I asked why some of the recommendations of the Finn Commission into safety in grain elevators had not been brought in. I asked him why there were not more frequent inspections of grain elevators. He told the standing committee that the Finn Commission had been looking into West Coast grain elevators and that Windsor was not on the West Coast.

Conflicting jurisdictions: that is the area to which my Bill speaks most directly. I would like to read a brief quote from the Science Council of Canada's report entitled, "Policies and Poisons". It said:

> We have reviewed the existing jurisdictional complexity in Canada and conclude that the confusion between jurisdictions has led in the past to difficulty in identifying with precision the Department or body actually responsible for any existent situation.

A report on mineral policy published last year by the Mines Department put it even more clearly. It said:

> The situation clearly presents problems—inconsistency from one Act to the next, bureaucratic struggles over jurisdiction, lack of accountability, variability of standards.

The Department of Labour has admitted this problem in reports to Cabinet. In 1981 in a presentation to Cabinet the Department of Labour said:

> Part IV of the Labour Code does not apply to employees of enterprises coming under the federal jurisdiction that are regulated by other Acts. These include longshoremen when they are working on board or alongside ships, crews of ships, tugboats, dredgers and other small vessels, aircrews, employees on offshore drilling rigs and on oil and gas pipelines. Nor does it apply to the federal Public Service, where Treasury Board is in the anomalous position of being both employer and the standard setter for safety and health governing its employees.

Clearly a conflict of interest. This complication had tragic results last year with the sinking of the Ocean Ranger, and shortly before that with the deaths on board the Hudson Transport on the St. Lawrence River. We do not know if better safety regulations would have made the difference in the Ocean Ranger situation, but we do know that safety regulations were inadequate. And in the case of the Hudson Transport we also know that if survival suits had been on board that vessel, lives would have been saved.

Another immediate problem is the enormous confusion which still exists over health and safety in the uranium mining industry. Uranium miners are still denied good health and safety protection because of the confusion between the federal and provincial regulations. This has been going on for years. I would like to quote for a moment from the report of the task force of the New Democratic Party as we toured across Canada, and mention some of the unbelievable things which took place. The bulletin issued on December 31, 1980, with respect to miners in Elliot Lake, stated:

> No hourly rate employee will be hoisted to surface other than his regular hoisting times at the end of day shift or the end of night shift, unless:
> 1. he has been injured while on the job.
> 2. he has a written note signed by his Supervisor saying he may be hoisted early.
> 3. all other rules apply.
> 4. no exception for sickness.

It is unbelievable that there is no exception for sickness.

In December I raised the question again with the Minister of State for Mines (Mrs. Erola) in the committee. Her response at that time was that a consultant was considering the whole affair and that the problem might be resolved within a year. She said that she was being generous. Those uranium miners have already been waiting for years. Why they must wait another year or longer is beyond me and, in fact, it is beyond belief.

I would like to discuss the whole area of hazardous substances in the workplace, but I do not think I have time right now. Perhaps it is sufficient to say that there are over two million chemical compounds. While consumers have the right to know the contents of what they are eating, workers do not have the right to know the contents of materials with which they are working. Considering the fact that some people argue that the majority of cancers are related to chemicals, this is astounding. During our task force meetings we were also told of railway employees who had entered a car to clean it out and the chemicals in the car affected them in such a way that they had to go to the hospital. The former Minister of Labour said:

> We may not know for another 20 years whether chemicals introduced in the 1960s were dangerous. Various types of diseases take from 12 to 20 years to develop. This has to cause us all great anxiety, especially since one-third of all cancer deaths are said to be occupationally related.

I would like to quote from a report on the hazards concerning the reproductive system at work. The President of the Canadian Advisory Council on the Status of Women, Lucie Pépin, said:

We have found that almost all workplaces contain hazards to the reproductive system; not only factories, nuclear plants or mines, but also hospitals, offices and schools. These hazards do not simply harm pregnant women, but other women, men and future generations as well.

It is a very serious problem. In spite of that fact, we have no federal law enforcing disclosure of chemicals in the work place and the Provinces do not have the power to do it.

I would like briefly to speak on the right of workers to police the safety of their own environment. The Government told us it would give workers this right in 1978, when it introduced amendments creating health and safety committees and allowing the right to refuse dangerous work. However, the health and safety committee were not mandatory. In 1981 only 700 such committees were in place on our 20,000 federal job sites and, of those 700, only about 50 had been imposed by the Minister. The difference between a voluntary committee and an imposed committee is that the imposed committee has a great deal more power. That is why many employers will try to get the unions or workers to agree to a weak voluntary committee. Once again, the former Minister of Labour had admitted he was disappointed at the small number of committees which had been formed, but even those committees have few rights.

The right to refuse dangerous work is based on imminent danger. In other words, if a truck is about to fall on someone, it is immiment danger. However, if someone were dying by degrees from chemicals in the air, there is nothing that one could do.

The state of health and safety laws at the federal level is awful. They are also the worst in Canada. The NDP knows this, as does the Official Opposition. Certainly Canadian workers know it, and even the Government knows it. For two years the Government has been sitting on recommendations which would bring about needed improvements, such as making committees mandatory and improving the right to refuse dangerous work. The legislation is written. I asked the Government to present it and perhaps save some lives.

The annual cost because of health and safety problems is nearly $4 billion. Surely that kind of saving is more important than the money saved by cutting Public Service pensions. Surely the loss and ruin of lives of Canadian workers should be our first, not our last, priority.

Finally, I ask the Government to go further and give the Department of Labour the kind of funding it needs to carry out its mandate. Within its existing mandate and funding, surely the best thing it could do to improve the quality of the working life would be to remove the danger of loss of workers' lives.

The Bill I have presented today deals with one aspect of the problem I have raised, the problem of other Government legislation having more power than the safety and health provisions of the Canada Labour Code. I hope by raising these other matters that I might encourage the Government to act on them as well.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate the Hon. Member for Kootenay East-Revelstoke (Mr. Parker) for raising this matter in the House this afternoon. The opening remark of the Hon. Member, when he said that the issue of health and safety was not a partisan one, was appropriate, and I think all Members of the House share his concern for the safety and security of public servants of Canada.

In rising to speak on Bill C-317, an Act to amend the Canada Labour Code, I would like to refer to the explanatory note which gives us insight as to the purpose of the Bill. The note states:

The purpose of this bill is to amend the Canada Labour Code to make the provisions of Part IV relating to safety of employees applicable to all federal undertakings, including the operation of trains, ships and aircraft, departmental corporations and private and local works in the territories.

As Your Honour knows, Part IV of the Canada Labour Code sets out a range of minimum standards to be used by employers to protect the safety and health of their employees. Employees who are within federal jurisdiction are in such enterprises as banks, broadcasting, airlines, shipping, railways, interprovincial trucking, telephones, and other undertakings which have been deemed to have been for the general advantage of Canada. As things stand at the moment, federal public servants do not come within the purview of the Canada Labour Code and I think the Hon. Member was quite right in his research on this question. Their safety and health are protected by the provisions of the Treasury Board policy and standards which are indeed similar to the requirements of Part IV of the Code.

The occupational safety portion of the Treasury Board's program is handled in a similar manner by Labour Canada, but Health and Welfare Canada administers the occupational health portions of the program. The objective of these regulations is, of course, to ensure that work is respectful of human life. The law also underlines the general principle that all Canadians have the right to a healthy and safe work environment regardless of the jurisdiction.

Another point I wish to bring to the attention of Hon. Members is that Part IV of the Labour Code does not apply to employment involving the actual operation of ships, trains or aircraft. Bill C-317 does have definite merit. I am pleased to inform Hon. Members that the Minister of Labour (Mr. Caccia) has been holding extensive consultations with representatives of labour, industry and other federal Departments in order to prepare a comprehensive revision proposal for Part IV of the Canada Labour Code. These discussions are proceeding, and I anticipate that an amendment proposal to the Canada Labour Code will be introduced in the House in the very near future. Any proposed changes to the application of the Code must, however, accommodate situations where international laws, agreements, public safety, and a concern for passenger safety in the transportation field take precedence over the "safety of employees" provisions included in Part IV of the Code.

• (1630)

Bill C-317 is, however, in my opinion, slightly regressive in one area, that is to say, where the Bill proposes that the undertakings or business of a local or private nature within the Yukon or the Northwest Territories should revert to federal jurisdiction. This recommendation, in my view, is contrary to current practice and can only be seen as a sorry step backwards to what is supposed to be an orderly evolution in the development of the Territorial Government.

Although several aspects of Bill C-317 are commendable, the Bill should be considered in the context of the development of a more comprehensive amendment to Part IV of the Code. This process must involve extensive consultations, which we believe are currently under way, to develop an amendment proposal which considers all aspects of a contemporary occupational safety and health legislative program.

I have not taken much of the time of the House, but I wanted to put those comments on the record. I would like to congratulate the Hon. Member for presenting this Bill. I know how interested he is in this matter. I have had the privilege of working with him in committee. He is preoccupied with the safety and health standards of this country. I want to congratulate him, and I hope that this Bill is accepted.

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Mr. Speaker, I wish to say a few words on Bill C-317, which is an Act to amend the Canada Labour Code, (safety of employees). The Hon. Member who introduced the Bill has asked that trains, ships and aircraft, departmental corporations and private and local works be included in Section 80 of the Canada Labour Code, Part IV, dated May, 1981. It states that ships, aircraft and trains are to be excluded from this section of the Act. I do not know how that came about because I was not involved in the drafting of this particular piece of legislation, but if the Minister is going to bring in changes and improvements to the Labour Code, I believe we can make some inquiries in committee as to why trains and ships have been excluded in Section 80 of the Canadian Labour Code.

We, of course, are all concerned with the health and safety of all workers, whether they are in a mine or a factory, in an office, or even in the home. It is interesting to read some facts and figures which indicate there are more accidents in the home than in any other location, and a lot of this is caused, for example, by a person using an unsafe ladder or standing on the edge of the table, or what have you.

I notice the Ontario Government uses television extensively to get the safety message across, and I think that has been most effective because actual demonstrations are given of just how accidents happen. I hope they continue with that kind of exposure and that the day will come when they will expand into areas other than the industrial area. In order to have proper safety practices, Mr. Speaker, management training is very important. If a manager does not understand the rules of safety and cannot explain and train his staff in the importance of the rules of safety, for example, the use of hard hats, safety glasses and safety shoes, then he is not much of a manager and he will not have much of a safety record with his crew.

I was a foreman in industry for many years and I took a great interest in safety. I found that proper training will eventually get the message across, but it is difficult. A lot of people want to take a lot of shortcuts. They do not want to examine their ladders. They do not want to wear a hard hat or to wear safety shoes. It is difficult to get the message across to some people on the importance of safety.

I found it very rewarding over the years as the majority of my crew eventually caught on to the art of safety inspections of their equipment, and it certainly pays off in the long run. There are a lot of excellent films available across Canada on the subject of proper safety procedures, and I used these safety films extensively. There have been great advancements in safety equipment as well. Perhaps one of the most prominent pieces of safety equipment is the hard hat. Everyone who works on new building construction sites or renovation sites is wearing a hard hat, so the message has certainly been put across in regard to wearing hard hats on construction sites.

The Hon. Member who introduced the Bill spoke extensively of problems in mines. I agree with him that there could be a lot of improvements made in that area. If you are 500 or 600 feet below the ground, you certainly do not want any risks to be taken. We certainly want the most up-to-date safety equipment for anyone working in a mine.

I am looking forward to the changes which the Minister is going to be bringing forward, and I am sure the Hon. Member who introduced the Bill will be present at the committee meetings. We will have also representatives from the Conservative Party at the committee to review carefully the new recommendations which will be coming from the Minister. I believe his Parliamentary Secretary is here today and perhaps he will enlighten us further on what changes the Minister will be bringing forward.

[Translation]

Mr. Antonio Yanakis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): Mr. Chairman, I should like to make a few comments on the statement made by the Hon. Member for Kootenay East-Revelstoke (Mr. Parker) concerning Bill C-137, An Act to amend the Canada Labour Code (safety of employees) Part IV. As I understand it Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to extend the scope of Part IV dealing with employee safety to all employees coming under federal jurisdiction, including employees of the Public Service of Canada and of private and local companies operating in the Territories.

I think that it would be worthwhile to provide this House with a brief background of Part IX of the Canada Labour Code and point out some technicalities contained in other orders. The Canada Labour Code is a digest of various federal measures dealing with labour issues. It sets out some standards for workers in the private sector who come under federal jurisdiction. Part IV of the Canada Labour Code deals with health and security at the workplace and includes statutory provisions provided under the act and setting forth minimum standards which employers must enforce in order to ensure the security and health of their employees.

Even if Part IV of the Labour Code is the only federal legislation which deals exclusively with those issues, it does not apply to all workers in the private sector coming under federal jurisdiction.

That situation, Mr. Speaker, stems from restrictions related to the application of Part IV of the Code. Because of such restrictions, any other Act of the Parliament of Canada and its regulations take precedence over Part IV, the provisions of which do not apply to persons employed on ships, trains or aircraft, including their operation, unless the Governor in Council has issued an Order in Council stating otherwise. Part IV excludes as well any undertaking which is defined as a department or a corporation under the terms of the Financial Administration Act. In accordance with recent amendments to Part IV of the Canada Labour Code, employees now have the right to refuse to work under conditions which, in their opinion, constitute an immediate danger to their safety or their health. In addition, as a result of the proclamation of provisions giving them the right to create health and safety committees made up of employer-employee representatives, workers now take a more active part in the operations of the company, except, as I just said, those who work on ships, trains and aircraft.

• (1640)

Mr. Speaker, the laws dealing mainly with public safety on the safe operation of various means of transportation overrides the Labour Code provisions concerned with safety and health. The health and safety in the workplace of employees subject to those acts are looked after by departments and agencies whose primary responsibilities and expertise are not related to those areas.

Those departments enforce laws that deal with a specific sector, namely railways, and look after their safe operation and the safety of the public.

During the early discussions on the Canada Labour Code (Safety), it was clearly established that the Code would only complement existing federal laws and would only apply in those instances where those laws contained no similar provision on safety and health in the workplace.

At the time, Mr. Speaker, labour organizations had strongly recommended that the Code should apply to all employees coming under federal jurisdiction. Since 1966, they have taken that stand on several occasions. Yet, it was decided that the purpose of the legislation, which was to guarantee the safety and health of all workers, could be achieved by enforcing the Code only in those instances where no such protection was provided under existing legislation. In the last several years, there has been far more concern for the health and safety hazards in the workplace. Due to the work-related diseases suffered by some of their members, unions have become more aware of those hazards and a good number of them are now giving top priority to safety and health problems.

Many western industrialized countries have now recognized the need for regulatory agencies to deal better with health and safety problems and have therefore increased the number and the quality of their programs to ensure safety and health in the workplace, mainly by combining all regulatory agencies into a single agency. Thus, Mr. Speaker, when it endorsed the recommendations of the Roben Commission, the commission inquiring into health and safety in the United Kingdom felt that the separation of legislation from its administration was causing a scattering and a compartmentalization of the technical facilities and knowledge available across the country to fight occupational hazards.

Mr. Speaker, occupational safety and health problems vary from one industry to the next, but the Commission felt that many had technical characteristics in common and required the use of similar professional and technical knowledge.

During the same period, the U.S. government was facing similar problems. Following discussions within the government the Occupational Safety and Health Authority was set up to administer the Occupational Safety and Health Act (1970), which includes many acts which until then came under various agencies.

In Canada, the provinces are taking similar steps to do away with the fragmentation of legislation in this respect. However, as far as Federal jurisdiction is concerned, it is often impossible to act quickly and efficiently to protect the health and safety of a large number of workers, because responsibility is spread over a large number of departments where there is a definite lack of co-ordination of activities. Many workers covered by other parts of the Canada Labour Code are not covered by Part IV.

Mr. Speaker, it is sometimes said that work-related hazards come under two clearly defined headings: health and safety. Experts on prevention agree that when they want to determine causes and set up preventive measures, the two concepts are so closely linked that it would be unthinkable to consider them separately. Mr. Speaker, that is why most national bodies in industrialized countries have set up health branches that are solely concerned with occupational health. The branch reports to a central, regulatory body that is responsible for occupational health and safety in all sectors.

This division was created in accordance with the recommendations of the board of directors of ILO, according to whom occupational health and safety cannot be considered separately and must therefore be dealt with as being part of the same problem.

Mr. Speaker, more recently, Commissioner James Ham stated in his Report of the Royal Commission on the Health and Safety of Workers in Mines, Ontario, 1976, that certain cases of occupational stress affected both health and safety. Dealing separately with health and safety as far as workers are concerned constitutes another false dichotomy, maintained by company policies and regulations.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to see that the technical resources of Labour Canada, including the support required for investigations as well as an analysis laboratory, have been expanded so that now most of the hazards occurring in the occupational environment, both in the public and private sector, can be dealt with. With these new facilities and the full time services of a specialist in industrial medicine Labour Canada has been able to improve its work safety and health services.

Mr. Speaker, I strongly support the principle of this bill which concerns employee safety. Guaranteeing the safety of workers is not only a matter of interest, but a major concern for the Minister of Labour and the Government. Because of this, the Minister of Labour has undertaken a series of major consultations with interested groups with a view to developing a cohesive set of amendments to the Canada Labour Code. Of course, this includes the principles of the bill now before us. Mr. Speaker, I believe that these amendments should be reviewed as a whole rather than in isolation. I believe that the Government wants to introduce all these amendments at the same time to the House in the near future. This is why, Mr. Speaker, I would recommend that this bill not be supported in its present form.

• (1650)

[English]

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I enjoyed the address of the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Labour (Mr. Yanakis) until the last sentence. I cannot follow his line of thought. This Bill is not partisan; it has nothing to do with political Parties. The whole object of the Bill is to prevent accidents and to extend the provisions of the Canada Labour Code.

I want to commend the Hon. Member for Kootenay East-Revelstoke (Mr. Parker) for bringing the Bill forward. I hope the Government will take a positive view of it because it does not affect one political Party more than another. It is to the credit of any political Party to try to prevent accidents in this country, and the broader we make the provisions of the Canada Labour Code, the better it will be for everyone. The object is to prevent accidents.

The Parliamentary Secretary stated that the Minister was going to introduce amendments, and of course that would be an excellent thing. What better way of doing it, though, than by canvassing the ideas of a parliamentary committee on this and on other amendments? If this matter were referred to a parliamentary committee, it could do all the work and the Code would be better as a result, as more minds would be directed toward its improvement. If Hon. Members opposite have not made up their minds already that they are not going to support the Bill, I suggest it would be a feather in their hats if they were to send it to committee. This would be in the interests of the safety of workers in this country, but to talk the Bill out on second reading would be a disgraceful thing. I urge Members of the Government to think positively about this matter.

If this were a Bill that affected one political Party more than another I could understand Members of the Government talking it out, but I cannot understand their talking out a Bill that is intended to prevent accidents and make the workplace safer for our workers.

I intend to complete my remarks and sit down, Mr. Speaker, so that the Bill will not be talked out, but there are two points that I should like to make.

I do not think we are making enough use of workers' and employers' safety committees today. In the coal mines I have found that for many years employers have resisted safety committees, but after experience with them, employers found that the committees reduced the cost of compensation and reduced the pain and agony suffered by employees as accidents were prevented. The safety committee was composed of workers who knew the conditions in the coal mines; we should make greater use of their knowledge regarding safety.

Most of the safety inspections of working conditions are inadequate. There are not enough inspectors. There should be better inspection, particularly where intricate machinery is involved. It sometimes happens that machines are left exposed and, as a result, a worker loses a hand or a foot or some other part of the anatomy. These matters could be discussed in committee, and the Canada Labour Code could be improved as a result.

I urge Members of the Government to send the Bill to committee, not to be prejudiced and negative and talk it out. It would be to their credit to refer the Bill.

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, I have no intention of assisting the Government in talking this Bill out, either. I want to commend the Hon. Member for Kootenay East-Revelstoke (Mr. Parker) for presenting it to the House. I cannot think of anything that is of greater importance to working people than the proposals it contains. In fact, it is the kind of measure that the Government should have introduced a long time ago, instead of waiting for a Member of the Opposition to do so.

As the Hon. Member pointed out, the sensationalism caused by man hours lost due to strikes in the country is always brought to the public's attention. It should be realized, however, that in each of the last 12 years, more man hours have been lost due to industrial illness and injury than were lost due to strikes or labour disputes.

That fact does not seem to be generally known but it demonstrates the need for the kind of amendment that the Hon. Member has proposed today. I think it would be to the shame of the Government if its Members were to talk the Bill out rather than refer it to the committee for action.

Mr. Gérald Laniel (Beauharnois-Salaberry): Mr. Speaker, I also should like to commend the Hon. Member for presenting this Bill, and I agree in principle with what he proposes to do. At the same time, I must say that I disagree with some of the comments of the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor). I had the impression that he had not even listened to the speech of the Parliamentary Secretary who said that the Government wanted to do more than the Bill sets out to achieve and has not decided to put aside its objective of extending the application of the Canada Labour Code.

It is easy to blame the Government for filibustering something or for blocking legislation proposed by a private Member. One should recognize, however, that when a piece of legislation is not complete in itself, it should be examined in that perspective. I did not hear the two Members of the NDP who spoke make a point about the implications of this Bill for the Northwest Territories and their autonomy. Nor did they say anything about the matter mentioned by the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) concerning the effect of modifying, without examining the impact, the application of the Canada Labour Code to labour organizations or Government corporations that are subject to international law. These are things worth looking at when we deal with this kind of legislation.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I must say however once again that I am in agreement with my colleagues who congratulated the Hon. Member for Kootenay-East-Revelstoke (Mr. Parker) for introducing Bill C-317, which aims at extending the provisions of Part IV of the Canada Labour Code relations to the safety of employees.

Mr. Speaker, Hon. Members will know that the Canada Labour Code combines several federal statutes establishing standards for private sector employees who come under federal jurisdiction. Part IV of the Code deals with the safety and health of employees and set out a range of minimum standards to be used by employers to protect the safety and health of their employees. However, Part IV does not apply to all private sector workers under federal jurisdiction, and this is precisely the situation that the Hon. Member wants to remedy. In principle, I agree with him on this point.

Moreover, as stated in the existing legislation, Part IV of the Labour Code does not apply to sea, rail and air workers. Hon. Members would probably be interested to hear that, in the federal government, nine major departments or agencies administer 16 different statutes dealing in various degrees with work safety and health. This is one problem. These government departments are the Departments of Labour, National Health and Welfare, Agriculture, Environment, Indian and Northern Affairs and Consumer and Corporate Affairs. The Hon. Member has made a suggestion and I am certain that today's debate will give us a better understanding of the problem and will make it possible for the government to take all necessary action to improve the situation.

[English]

Most of the 16 statutes to which I have referred were enacted to regulate particular industries such as the railways, to ensure the safety of their operations and the protection of the public. It was piecemeal legislation developed over the years. In all of them, occupational safety and health is incidental to their main purpose. It was because of this that the original Canada Labour (Safety) Code, which later became Part IV of the consolidated Canada Labour Code, was enacted by Parliament in 1966.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the purpose of Bill C-317 now before us is to extend the application of Part IV of the Act and not to increase the number of inspectors as the Hon. Member from Bow River (Mr. Taylor) mentioned. The administration of the Act would remain unchanged but Part IV of the Canada Labour Code would apply to all federal workers. As I said earlier, this is a very commendable purpose insofar as it will provide better and more comprehensive safety and health protection for federal employees. I do not intend to vote against the principle of this bill even though some of its provisions should be amended.

[English]

For example—and I referred to this in my opening remarks—the territorial exclusion provided in Subsection 80(1) would need to be retained. To take the right to regulate works, undertakings or businesses of a local or private nature away from the Governments of the Yukon Territory and the Northwest Territories would not only be unjustified at this time but would run counter to the steady development of Territorial Governments and autonomy.

The proposed Bill would also extend the coverage in Part IV to include federal public servants. In this respect I would point out that in the federal Public service, with the Treasury Board acting as employer, the Government several years ago affirmed the policy of applying the principles of the Canada Labour (Safety) Code and the regulations and standards adopted thereunder to the Public Service. I do not know why we have to send the Bill to committee so quickly since the Government is applying these at this moment.

The portion of the proposal which would make departmental corporations subject to the Canada Labour Code has merit, but a case is still being developed to demonstrate that adequate occupational safety and health protection for federal public servants can best be achieved under the provisions of Part IV of the Code itself, not in an application clause.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I understand from what my colleague the Parliamentary Secretary said earlier, that the Minister of Labour (Mr. Caccia), in conjunction with other ministers, has been holding consultations for several months in order to develop a safer environment at the workplace and to update the Labour Code so as to provide a better protection for workers in today's High-tech world.

[English]

Since the Minister has been consulting to achieve a better Labour Code which would be more adapted to the 1980s and 1990s, I do not think we should accuse Hon. Members of the House of not being interested in the safety of Canadian workers in general or of those who fall under federal jurisdiction. Hon. Members should understand that our main objective is not to have the House make a quick decision. We want to take the necessary time and wait for a few weeks for the Hon. Minister to come forward with a complete proposal to revise the Code so that it will meet the approval of labour organizations themselves.

Although we support the intent of the Bill, with the exception of the Territorial reference, we do not believe it should be considered until a complete package of code amendments is developed following a consultative process with labour, industry and other federal Departments. I do not think I can recommend to the House at this time the passage of the Bill on second reading.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, too often Opposition Members have blamed us for our inefficiency and incomplete legislation. We have been told many times there is a lack of planning in our policies. Well, given the fact that a Minister of Labour has finally undertaken a complete review of the Canadian Labour Code, especially Part IV which prescribes security and health measures concerning employees under federal jurisdiction, it seems to me that we should commend the Minister and thank him for not relying on ad hoc volitions. We are duty bound to help him introduce soon a bill which will be debated, and which, hopefully with the support of the whole House, will achieve the goals pursued by the Hon. Member.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order please! Pursuing to Standing Order 24(2), it is now my duty to interrupt the debate.

CANADA CONTINENTAL SHELF ACT

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East) moved that Bill C-373, an Act respecting the continental shelf be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this Bill is to extend Canadian jurisdiction of the sea to the extremities of the continental shelf for the purpose of conservation, protection and management of marine resources. It is interesting to note that this Bill speaks to the length of this record session because it received first reading on May 2, 1980. One might suggest that it has been overtaken by events in that since May, 1980, Canada has signed the Law of the Sea Treaty. However, I intend to establish arguments that this Bill is just as relevant today as it was when it received first reading several years ago. I can anticipate the argument of the Government, especially that of the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen). Likely it will be that foreign nations during the course of discussions leading up to the Law of the Sea Treaty have made it very clear that they have very strong views against any further extension by Canada of our 200 mile limit. I accept that. However, it is equally true that the countries with which we enjoy bilateral fisheries relations, our partners in the Northwest Atlantic Fisheries Organization, recognize our special interests beyond 200.

I believe the case can be made, just as the case was made for our unilateral move to declare jurisdiction within 200, to extend our jurisdiction for purposes of managment, if not for the continental shelf then at least for those two areas known as the nose and tail of the Bank. This is an area of the Grand Bank which is currently outside of the 200 mile limit. I think we can make that case the same way by getting support and agreement from our partners within the North Atlantic Fisheries Organization. They would recognize our right to manage stock beyond 200 on the nose and tail of the Bank just as they recognized our right in the bilateral agreements leading up to the extension of our jurisdiction to manage the area within 200. This makes sense because fish know no boundaries. We are talking about transboundary stock when we talk about the area of the Grand Bank known under the old ICNAF system as 3NO, DLN, 3-0 and 3LNO.

I remember one of the first things I had to do upon assuming the responsibilities of the portfolio of fisheries was to close this particular area of the Grand Bank to further fishing of cod because the stocks were so depleted at that time.

However, we have been very successful in rebuilding the stocks within our jurisdiction under the 200 mile limit, but we have not been successful in the management of this particular stock because we do not enjoy the exclusive right to do so. That situation is complicated by the fact that the most offending nation is Spain. Spain has, for its own reasons, elected to stay outside of the NAFO convention. It is not part of the North Atlantic Fisheries Organization, and does not come under NAFO management. If Spain does not come under NAFO management and it does not come under Canadian management, then Spain is beyond control, and that is the problem.

To give you an idea of the importance of that stock, Mr. Speaker, the average groundfish catch on the Grand Bank, the 3NO and the 3LN area is 124,000 tonnes, broken down into 25,000 tonnes of cod; 32,000 tonnes of redfish, and the balance in various species of flounder. The problem we are facing with Spain choosing to remain outside of NAFO and our own inability to extend our own management regime is that Spain is depleting stock by the persistent use of a technique known as pair trawling. What the Spaniards do in that particular area known as the tail of the Bank is to have two trawlers that trawl together and sweep up everything. Our own experience based on experimental fishing indicates that with that kind of pair fishing one gets 50 per cent cod with the balance by-catch being flounder. The Spaniards are not interested in flounder or flatfish, or whatever you want to call them; they are only interested in the cod which they salt and take back to Spain to dry. By and large, the flounder is thrown over the side. It is lost. It is destroyed. That has impacted directly on the plants situated along the south coast of Newfoundland which depend to a large extent on this stock. These plants have established markets for flounder. What the experience has been year after year as this situation continues out of control is that the size of the flounder keeps getting smaller and smaller because the stock is not managed.

I know that I would be out of order if I were to refer to the Kirby Task Force which was supposed to have reported in November, then again in December. It is now almost the end of January and the Kirby Task Force still has not reported, Mr. Speaker. But the reason I mention the Kirby Task Force is to inject into my remarks the seriousness of the situation in terms of the Atlantic fishery which is currently on hold, having gone through perhaps the worst crisis in its history awaiting the results of the Kirby Task Force. I realize that the Kirby report will not address itself to this particular problem. I realize that while it is a special interest problem for the Department of Fisheries, it is the specific responsibility of the Department of External Affairs, regardless of what Kirby recommends, to address itself to the problems of plants that are currently down especially along the south coast of Newfoundland. Unless we get this situation under control all of the recommendations in the world will not address the basic problem resulting from the fact that Canada does not enjoy total management of this stock.

• (1720)

I do not want to take up too much time so that other Hon. Members will have a chance to participate in this debate. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro) will be addressing some remarks to the Law of the Sea. It is important to remember that we are not talking about the seabed, fossil fuels or seabed mining. We are concerned with the management of the marine resources and Spain's failure to comply with international conventions or to recognize Canada's right to manage this stock.

The record will show that Spain has been harvesting the major bulk of this stock over the years, thereby representing a prima facie case. We have made attempts to come to grips with the Spanish situation. There is a current offer being considered in which I believe we have offered 5,000 tonnes of groundfish in our zone in exchange for access of a limited amount of our fish in the Spanish market, with the understanding that they would be good boys and play the game. That deal has not materialized as yet and, quite frankly, I call it blackmail. Even if that deal is consummated—which I hope never happens—the Spaniards will still not adhere to an adequate management regime. This is because they answer to no one and are not subject to inspection either by NAFO or Canada. They are totally on their own and totally out of control.

There was an interesting report published by the Economic Council of Canada last year which was entitled "The Promise of Abundance: Extended Fisheries Jurisdiction and the Newfoundland Economy". They had this to say at page 61 about the Spanish situation, including by-catches which I have referred to. It reads:

> It is much to be hoped that Spanish-Canadian relations will improve in the future, both so that the management of 3NO cod as a transboundary stock will be improved, and so that the aforementioned co-operative arrangements can, at a minimum, be explored. It would be unfortunate, to say the very least, if both opportunities were lost to Canada.

These opportunities are lost to Canada. Our experience with Spain on bilateral agreements has not been a happy one. We must get tough with the Spaniards.

I believe that if we were to pursue this with our partners within the North Atlantic Fisheries Orgnization, we would receive their support in extending our jurisdiction beyond 200, at least to take in the area known as the nose and tail of the Bank. If this does not occur, we will never have control of the management of that stock and we will continue to be faced with a situation where we do not control the by-catch and have no access in terms of inspection of what happens out there.

It is indeed worth mentioning that one of the suggestions made by the Economic Council of Canada was that Spain be allowed to land its cod catch in Canada in return for agreeing to conservation and Canadian management. Of course that would give us an opportunity to acquire the very expensive by-catch, the majority of which is flounder, that is currently being dumped over the side. I might add that this is seriously affecting the flounder stock which, in turn, is adversely affecting the plants and operators on the south coast of Newfoundland.

I hope that Hon. Members will agree with the arguments that I have presented. It is not an unreasonable proposition and one that would be supported by our fishing partners. I believe that it would enjoy support within NAFO since I do not think Spain has any intention of signing the NAFO convention. While there is a suggestion that Spain may eventually join the European Economic Community and thereby become part of the NAFO agreement, we still have to deal with the Spanish problem until that time comes. Unless we deal with it in a direct and effective way, unless we get tough with the Spaniards, we may have to close that very important traditional fishery, which again is so important not only to the fishermen of Newfoundland but to the fishermen of Nova Scotia.

Mr. W. Kenneth Robinson (Etobicoke-Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity to speak to Bill C-373. I note from the explanatory note that the purpose of this Bill is to extend Canadian jurisdiction of the sea to the extremities of the continental shelf for the purposes of the conservation, protection and management of marine resources. Without doubt, this is a most commendable objective. I congratulate the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) for bringing it forward. There is no question that it is a timely matter and one which must be properly dealt with. The Hon. Member has made some very powerful arguments for its immediate consideration. He has mentioned the Grand Bank. I suggest that it has always been understood throughout Canadian history that the Grand Bank belongs to Canada in their entirety. I do not believe anyone would question that fact. The Hon. Member also stated his concern about the pair-trawling that takes place, particularly by the Spanish fishermen. He also talked about the resulting wastage of flounder that occurs. I wish to commend the Hon. Member for bringing these issues to light.

On January 1, 1977, Canada established a 200 mile fishing zone. This was done following many years of careful preparation and a host of bilateral and multilateral negotiations.

Prior to the extension of jurisdiction in 1977, Canada negotiated bilateral agreements with, inter alia, France, Norway, the Soviet Union and Spain. I suggest it is noteworthy to see that Spain was included at that time, prior to the extension of the jurisdiction in 1977. These agreements anticipated and cleared the way for the establishment of the 200 mile zone. Multilaterally, Canada was one of the handful of countries chiefly responsible for bringing about a consensus on the 200 mile fisheries limit at the United Nations Law of the Sea Conference. This consensus—I stress consensus—on fisheries jurisdiction helps to transform customary international law and enables countries like Canada to adopt the 200 mile limit without provoking chaos and conflict with other countries.

While working to advance Canadian fisheries interests at the Law of the Sea Conference, Canada was also pursuing regional initiatives to the same end, in particular through the International Commission for the Northwest Atlantic Fisheries. Beginning in 1972, we obtained through the International Commission for the Northwest Atlantic Fisheries steadily growing recognition of the coastal states' preferential rights to the harvest of fisheries resources off their shores. In 1975, we obtained, once again through this international commission, a 40 per cent reduction in foreign fishing effort in 1976 for groundfish, as well as a reduction in the total allowable catches for depleted stocks and higher quotas for Canadian fishermen for stocks of particular importance to them. In 1976, we obtained, once again through the International Commission for the Northwest Atlantic Fisheries, a further reduction for 1977 in total allowable catches that we considered necessary, together with estimated allocations for Canadian fishermen generally corresponding to their harvesting capacity. In effect, this amounted to recognition of extended Canadian fisheries jurisdiction even before this extension had taken place.

Furthermore, in the closing weeks of 1976, Canada secured an agreement on amendments to the International Commission for Northwest Atlantic Fisheries Convention that restricted the Commission's management authority to the area beyond national fisheries limits, and left management within 200 miles to the authority of the coastal state, while also leaving Canada with the right to board and inspect foreign vessels beyond the 200 mile limit under the International Commission for the Northwest Atlantic Fisheries' scheme of joint international enforcement.

The efforts made by Canada and other countries in bilateral and multilateral forums created the conditions essential for the extension of Canadian jurisdiction: the extension was consistent with international law and had won international political acceptance.

We in Canada are neither boy scouts nor superpowers. We could not impose our will on others by force, even if we believed it were proper to do so. Nor are we among the countries of the world that can pretend to play David out to slay Goliath, hoping that sympathy for the little guy can win our battle for us. We were able to enforce our jurisdictional claims because they were accepted by other countries. It would have been much more difficult to impose them if other countries had been determined to resist.

Had Canada acted in defiance of international law, then not only would it have become much more difficult to enforce Canadian law and regulations within the areas of claimed jurisdiction, but Canada would have been less able to rely on international law in order to safeguard its other interests as well, including those in the fisheries sector.

Canada relies on international treaties, generally accepted principles of international law and international co-operation in order to protect, for example, its valuable salmon fisheries. This is of particular importance on the West Coast where, in the words of the report of the Commission on Canadian Pacific Fisheries Policy, presented in September, 1982, it said:

—the five species of Pacific salmon are by far our most important fishery resource in both quantity and quality.

If the Canadian Pacific salmon fishery were open to unrestricted foreign high seas fisheries it would provide for fewer benefits to Canadians than it does today. It is international law and international co-operation which prevents that situation from arising. International law and co-operation are also of importance to Canada's East Coast salmon fishery. It benefits from provisions of Canada's fishery treaty with the European Community as well as the provisions of the Atlantic salmon convention.

We also rely on international law and international co-operation in order to protect Canada's fishing interests with respect to our continental shelf fish stocks, some 10 per cent of which are outside our jurisdiction. Canadian concerns here are addressed in part by the Northwest Atlantic Fisheries Agreement. It is, however, essential that we continue to obtain the co-operation of other countries to ensure the proper conservation and management of these outside stocks and appropriate allocations for Canadian fishermen.

The last example I will cite of a fisheries resource that requires international co-operation if it is to be protected, is halibut, a straddling stock. The halibut fishery is among the oldest on the Pacific Coast. The fishery began in the nineteenth century off the coast of Washington State, and significant Canadian participation began during World War I.

Landings by Canadian and U.S. fishermen peaked in the 1920s, at some 70 million pounds, then declined to about 30 million pounds in the 1930s. Recognizing the need for co-operation, Canada and the United States included a halibut treaty in 1923. I might digress at this moment to say that the 1923 treaty marked the importance of a milestone in Canadian history because it was the first international treaty that Canada signed in its own right and not by the United Kingdom acting on Canada's behalf. The conservation programs established pursuant to the treaty were successful in rehabilitating the stocks so that landings rose to 75 million pounds in 1962. The halibut treaty was revised in 1979 and is still in force and makes a significant contribution to the productivity of the stock.

Bill C-373 seeks to address the question of outside stocks mentioned a moment ago. It, however, would seek to govern those stocks without any international political or legal support. Such a claim to jurisdiction would be very difficult to enforce, if adopted, and would harm the initiatives that Canada has taken to protect Canadian fisheries interests. For the long term, it would likely undermine the international co-operation that is necessary to protect those stocks not already fully protected by the establishment of the 200 mile zone.

Mr. Speaker, I congratulate the Hon. Member for bringing forward this very timely matter, which is just as timely today as it will be tomorrow and in the foreseeable future. I commend him once again for keeping this in mind because the more we have control over and the better we manage the Grand Banks and other areas, including the continental shelf, the better it is for Canada and all Canadians.

Mr. Ted Miller (Nanaimo-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to also speak on Bill C-373 today, and I would note that, as the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) said, this Bill was introduced for first reading in 1980.

I think it is reflective of the lack of ability of the federal Government to deal with the Grand Bank, and particularly the Flemish Cap—the nose and tail of the Grank Bank—that we still find this Bill is as pertinent today as it was in 1980, and it is reflective of another failure of the fishing industry off the East Coast, that is, the agreement which failed between the United States and Canada on Georges Bank and the very valuable fishery in that area, in particular the very valuable scallop fishery.

So we have a situation again where, for the purposes of conservation, to say nothing of the implications for employment and foreign exchange in those fisheries, we have a Government which has failed to come to some international agreement with a nation which, granted, has had a long history of fishing off the Grand Bank, and that is Spain. But the problem still exists that our stocks on the Grand Bank beyond 200 miles are indeed being threatened by overfishing, just as the stocks within 200 miles have been threatened by overfishing in the past.

We have been able to demonstrate in Canada that given the opportunity to manage stocks, we can foresee a revival of fish stocks on the Grand Bank and off our East Coast in general.

Nevertheless, despite the agreements under the Law of the Sea—and I think we all recognize that there are some tremendous benefits to Canada from the Law of the Sea and from the signing of that treaty earlier this year in Jamaica—we are still faced with a situation where we really do not have control over some of the fish that are transboundary fish. They do not know what the 200 mile limit is and obviously the federal Government has not been able, either through the Department of Fisheries and Oceans or, more particularly, through the Department of External Affairs, to come to a suitable agreement with Spain, just as they failed to come to suitable agreements with the United States with respect to Georges Bank.

To the credit of the Canadian fishermen, they are not prepared to enter into a fishing war off Georges Bank with their counterparts in the United States, despite losing hundreds of millions of dollars of revenue, because the U.S. fishermen and the United States administration, and in particular the U.S. Senate Foreign Relations Committee, sees fit to allow their fishermen, the scallop fishermen in particular, to break any international understanding, even if was not an agreement, finally signed.

I think this Bill is timely. I think it should go to the Fisheries and Forestry Committee for further study. I think it would indicate to the Spanish Government the commitment of the House of Commons that we come to an agreement on stocks that are being exploited and which are damaging employment opportunities, not only here in Canada, but which will certainly in future affect employment in Spain both of fishermen and onshore workers.

The situation in the fishing industry in Newfoundland, as many of us know, is very critical. Communities in Newfoundland are losing their fish processing plants, particularly in Burin and on the Grand Bank. There is a great deal of doubt whether those fish plants will continue in operation. The employment situation in the Province of Newfoundland is deplorable, as it is in most Provinces. So I see a great deal of merit in sending this Bill to committee and for the committee to study the implications that the Hon. Member for St. John's East pointed out.

However, when we are discussing marine resources beyond the 200 mile limit, I think we can also study the mechanisms within the limit to protect and conserve marine resources. There is certainly some question involving protection of our fisheries in Atlantic Canada from pollution caused by offshore oil exploration. We know that when Bill C-148 was being discussed in the House and in committee, we really did not have any input from the Minister of the Environment (Mr.

Roberts) or the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. De Bané), two Ministers who should have been more prominent in the discussion of offshore exploration for natural gas and oil. Certainly, if Canada ever gets to the point where it starts further exploration of other mineral resources on the East or West Coast, this Bill would give opportunity to the Members of the Committee on Fisheries and Forestry to assess more accurately our capabilities of managing, conserving and protecting marine resources within the existing 200 mile limit.

Therefore, speaking on behalf of the New Democratic Party, I think the Bill has merit. We would certainly like to see it referred to the committee and would give our support and congratulations to the Hon. Member for St. John's East for presenting the Bill as far back as 1980.

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to have the opportunity to say a few words about this Private Members' Bill, Bill C-373. I note that it was given first reading on May 2, 1980, when the Law of the Sea Convention was in the process of being negotiated. On December 8 and 9 of last year, if I remember correctly, the Law of the Sea Convention was signed in Montego Bay, Jamaica, by a number of countries. That did not make it international law. It will become effective upon the deposition of the ratification instruments by 60 nations. Canada did sign, of course. One of the interesting things is that Spain did not, its objection to this particular convention being matters concerning international straits. Obviously, it had Gibraltar in mind. Incidentally, as I hope to show before my allotted time has expired, there is another matter which we should be able to persuade Spain to accept which would resolve this very delicate matter in terms of the existence of the flounder stocks off the coast of Newfoundland, off the Grand Banks.

The matter at issue concerns the extension of the very extensive provisions respecting "conservation, protection and management" of the living marine resources beyond the 200 mile limit, where Canada already has very extensive jurisdiction.

The territorial sea concept is a very particular one dealing with the first 12 miles from the baselines off our coast. There we are not solely concerned with marine resources, although they are there too. The clauses of the treaty mainly deal with the passage of vessels, military and otherwise, free traffic including submarines and the over-flight. However, the text of this particular Bill deals with the territorial sea and its extension out of the edge of the continental shelf for purposes of the conservation, protection and management of marine resources. It has been clearly stated that marine resources means the living marine resources of the sea. The Hon. Member for St. John's East very carefully and fully explained the matter at issue. The extension involves hundreds of square miles, not thousands of square miles. It is a small portion. The graphic illustration on page 16 of the document to which he made reference, entitled "A Promise of Abundance", published in 1980 by the Economic Council of Canada, shows just what amount of territory is involved.

An effort ought to be made to secure co-operation from all those members of the North Atlantic Fisheries Organization in order to preserve the stocks for them and for the rest of mankind. Canada has a responsibility in that exclusive economic zone, as well as privileges, and its responsibility is to care for the stocks of fish which are to be found there and breed there. Its responsibility is to establsh that amount of fish which can be taken without destroying stocks. This small portion just beyond the limits is recognized in the Law of the Sea over which Canada does not have jurisdiction.

Flounders, as I remember correctly, are groundfish. They sit on the bottom of the sea, and that is certainly part of the problem. They are scooped up by draggers from the bottom of the sea inside the elusive economic zone. If they are destroyed in their breeding time, they will cease to be an economic resource for Canada or any other country, even those who fish and throw their catches over the side because they do not want them.

It is interesting to consider the provisions of the Law of the Sea Convention. Article 76, for example, defines the continental shelf. We are discussing the edge of the continental shelf at the moment. It defines the continental shelf of a coastal state as extending "beyond its territorial sea throughout the natural prolongation of its land territory to the outer edge of the continental margin". This is a very good illustration. It states that the "coastal state shall establish the outer edge of the continental margin" wherever it extends beyond the 200 nautical miles in a manner which fixes "points which are not more than 60 nautical miles from the foot of the continental slope". That is a very clear definition of how far out this Bill seeks to extend Canada's jurisdiction.

Canada's jurisdiction is undisputed and will be undisputed when the Law of the Sea Convention is ratified and becomes operative throughout the world. By the anomaly of geology, I suppose, the plate on which Newfoundland sits, the Grand Banks, extends just beyond those 200 miles.

For those Hon. Members who are wedded to metric I might suggest that 200 miles refers to 200 nautical miles, 240 statute miles or 370 kilometres. That is the breadth of the sea over which Canada has jurisdiction and can make arrangements with foreign fishermen to fish within that area on the basis of quotas. And that is basically—and I am over-simplifying perhaps—one of the things which the North Atlantic Fisheries Organization purports to do within that area and beyond. There is a general agreement out in the North Atlantic that fisheries will be managed, but one particular country has so far refrained from becoming a member of that Organization, as we have heard described.

• (1750)

The Law of the Sea Convention extends a number of powers to the coastal states, which they may exercise out to the edge of that shelf. On the East Coast the edge, as we have already seen, extends beyond the 200 miles. We have also seen how that extension is defined within the terms of the Law of the Sea Convention. Canada, having signed the Law of the Sea

Convention in Jamaica last month, I am sure will abide by its provisions. Within that 200 mile limit, which is known in the Law of the Sea Convention as the "exclusive economic zone", Canada, as the coastal state, exercises, as its name implies, exclusive economic powers limited only as prescribed in the Convention, relating to innocent passage, as I mentioned, over-flight and other matters relating to commercial navigation.

For present purposes, however, in this Bill we are considering only conservation, protection and management of living resources, and those rights already exist in the Convention within that exclusive economic zone. Those extra hundreds of square miles beyond were described, I believe, as the "nose and tail". I would describe it from this picture as the nose and chin, even, because it is almost a human face here, but I will accept the nose and tail description of the Grand Bank, those few square miles. It should be no great problem, I should think within the context of the North Atlantic Fisheries Organization, and bilateral agreement to have that extension worked out.

What are the exclusive economic sovereign rights of Canada within that area? Article 56 of the Law of the Sea Convention makes it quite clear what the coastal states can do and to what extent its sovereign rights are exercisable. Those sovereign rights exist for exploiting, conserving and managing the natural resources, living or non-living, of the waters superjacent to the sea-bed and of the sea-bed. With respect to "sea-bed" we are talking about flounders. They are on the sea-bed. As the Hon. Member said, we are not talking about drilling rights, mining rights, over-flights, or hampering of commercial traffic. We are dealing solely with the moving resources, the living resources of that area which already exist within the exclusive economic zone, together with marine scientific research which is involved in preservation and protection of the marine environment, another necessary power which the coastal states ought to be able to exercise in order to conserve, protect and manage any resource.

The rights and duties of other states within that area are also significant, and they appear under Article 58. In that exclusive economic zone all states enjoy, subject to relevant provisions, the freedoms referred to, and so on. In exercising those rights and performing those duties, however, those states, other than the coastal states, shall have due regard to the rights and duties of the coastal state, which concerns management, and shall comply with the laws and regulations adopted by the coastal state. We are considering, again, those laws and regulations relating to conservation.

In Article 61 one finds that among the management rights which the coastal state enjoys, are those of determining the allowable catch of the living resources in its exclusive economic zone. That is what we seek in this Bill, Mr. Speaker, to be extended those few hundred square miles to the nose and tail of the Georges Bank.

The territorial sea which is mentioned in the Bill is already included within that exclusive economic zone, so we can think of it not in terms of the technical definition of the territorial sea, but rather as part of the exclusive economic zone which this Bill seeks to extend. To all intents and purposes, therefore, this Bill does no more than seek to extend jurisdiction over fisheries and fishermen for preservation over a few extra square miles or square kilometres which it now exercises within the exclusive economic zone, seaward beyond the edge of the 200 mile limit, so that it may conserve, protect and manage those stocks which flow into and out of, which move back and forth, in and out of the exclusive economic zone.

This is not an outrageous demand, Mr. Speaker, given the peculiarities of the continental shelf off the East Coast, and taking fish breeding grounds into account. What this Bill does not seek to do, and I believe this is most important, it does not seek to extend drilling rights. They are already there at a price. Nor does it seek to impede the passage of any commercial vessel or waterborne traffic, nor to hamper the passage of aircraft.

There is one matter that I would like to mention in conclusion. Perhaps we could somehow persuade Spain to accept a portion, anyway, of Article 64 of the Convention dealing with highly migratory species. Section 64 provides that the coastal state, and other states, whose nationals fish in the region for the highly migratory species—this is in Annex 1— shall co-operate directly and through appropriate international organizations with a view to ensuring conservation and promoting the objective of optimum utilization of such species throughout the region, both within and beyond the exclusive economic zone. In regions for which no appropriate international organization exists, the coastal state, and other states, whose nationals harvest these species in the region, shall co-operate to establish such an organization and participate in this work. That provision is now within the Law of the Sea Convention, Mr. Speaker. It may be difficult, but I do not think it is impossible, that Canada should be able to persuade the Government of Spain to abide by this Article even if it is unwilling to abide by the full text of the agreement.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I would like to move that the subject matter, at least of this Bill, be referred to the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry for further study.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): The Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) rises on a point of order.

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, it was never the intention of the special committee on rules, when we brought in these provisional orders, that Hon. Members would be deprived of three full hours for private members' time, and I think we would do well to bear that in mind, because I would ask the House now if there would be a disposition, if there were unanimous consent, to go beyond six o'clock, in order, at least, that we may hear from the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Tobin), who is here representing the Government and is very anxious to make a speech.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): I thank the Hon. Member for St. John's East for his suggestion. Of course, the Chair is in the hands of the House. At this time normally it should see the hands of the clock. However, by unanimous consent, if there is unanimous consent, we could suggest that the Chair did not see the clock at this time. Perhaps the Chair could have an indication as to how long the debate should proceed. To complete the full hour, was that the suggestion of the Hon. Member? Perhaps I should first ask if there is unanimous consent to continue the sitting.

● (1800)

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): These seems to be consent. I would like to inquire now how long the debate should carry on.

Mr. McGrath: I think this is a rather important point because we are starting under our provisional rules, and I think it is important for Your Honour to bear in mind what I said at the commencement of my point of order. It was the clear understanding of the Committee, when we recommended Private Members' hour on Wednesday afternoon, that we would not be deprived of three full hours. We have no control over Routine Proceedings, so it would be a good practice to follow that we go beyond six o'clock if we are in fact deprived of the full three hours. Certainly I would not see it go much beyond ten minutes.

[Translation]

Mr. André Maltais (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, the request by the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) seems very interesting to me, except that some Hon. Members on the Government side have made commitments for tonight. I think we could perhaps bring up that subject matter another time as it is most interesting and worthy of a debate. I, for one, had intended to speak on this subject since my constituency is directly related to Newfoundland and the Atlantic, so it seems to me that we should immediately postpone this debate and bring it up at a later date to give Hon. Members the opportunity to participate if they so wish.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): There is not unanimous consent.

[English]

There being no unanimous consent, and it being six o'clock, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at eleven o'clock pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 62—PROTECTION OF THE ENVIRONMENT

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena) moved:

That this House condemns the Government for its failure to adequately protect the Canadian environment from toxic and hazardous waste and for its subservience to the vested interests of the chemical and industrial waste producers and, in particular, for its failure to expedite the clean-up of the Great Lakes.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have an opportunity to speak this morning, and particularly to move the motion condemning the Government for its subservience to big industry. I am going to spend my time this morning dealing with the two major sides of the issue, one being the serious problem of no proper toxic and hazardous waste handling sites in Canada and the lack of law at both the provincial and federal levels; and also, in relation to the United States, the very serious problem we have encountered, not only under the present administration of Mr. Reagan but, in terms of the last 40 years, what has been happening to the Great Lakes and the water supply which provides water for four million Canadians and most of the 48 States in the U.S.

It appears, Mr. Speaker, through the documentation I am going to put on the record today, that there is really a conspiracy of inaction on both sides of the border to turn the entire Great Lakes system into a dump. The reason I say that is that very few Canadians know, and very few Hon. Members of this House seem to know, that the water which is now flowing out of the St. Lawrence River came down as rainfall and ran into the Great Lakes at about the same time as Columbus came to North America. It takes about 500 years for the water to recirculate throughout the Great Lakes sytem and ultimately to go out into the Atlantic. What has happened over the last four years is that the big businesses, particularly the chemical industry and the war industry in the United States, have consciously chosen certain areas near the Canadian border to store improperly large amounts of toxic and hazardous waste. Perhaps the largest of those is the Niagara Escarpment where, over the past 40 years, things such as entire trains have been driven there. Big pits have been dug in the ground and they have simply driven the train right into the ground and buried it because it is contaminated with radioactivity.

Four years ago, the U.S. Government, in collusion with the U.S. Army, dumped millions of gallons of radioactive waste from the Manhattan project directly into the Niagara system, and you can still see a huge tower there if you go to Niagara Falls which is filled with radioactive waste from the Manhattan project.

Tied in with all of that are the more serious chemical dumps, such as S-site, Hyde Park, 102nd Street and the Love Canal, which have gained their great notoriety not because of the work of Government bureaucrats and politicians, but because of concerned citizens and a few concerned medical experts such as Dr. Beverley Paigen, who started to study why there were so many stillbirths, so many spontaneous abortions, why people were getting lesions, why children were going deaf, why there were personality disorders, and so on, in relation to these dumps.

Why would a large chemical company sell for $1 an area where they knew houses and schools were going to be built, knowing full well those wastes were not like old paper bags and rotten logs, but that we were talking about a long-term pollution problem which was going to cause serious damage? Where big business cannot buy politicians—here I am talking about Canadian politicians, Liberals and Conservatives, and in the United States, Democrats and Republicans—where they cannot buy them to keep them from forcing the proper clean-up either through the introduction of the law or through the introduction of a clean-up fund, the companies simply go around it.

I will give an example of this on the U.S. side and an example on the Canadian side. Under President Carter, what was known as the "super fund" was set up which taxed all of the chemical industry in the United States, rated on the amount of waste products they produced. Now there is $1 billion sitting in that fund. The money is not being spent for two reasons; one, big business has gone to Reagan and said: "Look, if you make us clean it up it is going to lower our profits. We are in a recession. You cannot make us do that. We have been getting away with it for a long time, anyway." On the other hand, if Reagan allows the super fund to be spent, he knows that part of the super fund expenditures would include the expenditure of tax dollars. Taxpayers in municipalities and States, in the United States, and federal politicians, would say: "Why are we paying for it? Why do we have to have this super fund? Why are we involved in the clean-up?" Inevitably, there would be a public outcry. There would be a fall in the stock market. At the very least, these chemical companies would start to become unpopular. Those are the two reasons on the U.S. side why they will not spend the super fund and big business simply will not clean up.

On the Canadian side, we simply do not have proper law. It should be constitutional, but the Government refuses to accept the concept of having the environment dealt with in the Constitution. In a few moments I am going to go through some of the constitutional problems we are having now in terms of law, the correlation between federal and provincial jurisdiction, and the real lack of law and regulations to deal with these kinds of contaminants.

Knowing that we have such paltry law in Canada now, one example which I have raised many times in this House, Mr. Speaker, is Amax. In the middle of the 1979 federal election, the Liberal Government decided that that particular company, Amax, required a special dumping permit which exceeded federal guidelines by 8,000 times. The Member of Parliament at that time was a Liberal Cabinet Minister who is now the President of the Liberal Party, but the net goes much further, Mr. Speaker, The present Lieutenant-Governor of Ontario, Mr. Aird, was on the Amax international board. When he stepped down to become the Lieutenant-Governor, he was replaced by the former President of the United States, Gerald Ford. So there we have the international connection of big business. What happened after that? It is very clear Mr. Aird's firm continued to do the legal work for Amax.

An Hon. Member: Senator Aird.

Mr. Fulton: Senator Aird, a well-known bagman for the Liberal Party. He simply went to the Cabinet and said: "Look, I need some kind of special permit for my buddies in Amax; they want to dump one million metric tons into the fishing ground". Of course,the local media for months and months said: "Oh, it is just the Nishga Indians; they are just trying to force their land claims. It has nothing to do with pollution." But then some independent scientists came on board, church groups and trade unionists got involved, and they finally managed to get rid of the former Minister of Fisheries and Oceans because I understand that some 80,000 letters ended up going to the Prime Minister's Office. I tabled in this House correspondence regarding that issue. There is real concern about such paltry law. First, we should beef it up, but even where we have, Canadians are concerned because politicians, certainly in the Liberal Party, seem to be prepared to run around the law and provide big business with whatever kind of dumping permit they want.

The problem is right across Canada, and let me deal with it from the Canadian side first. In British Columbia alone 266,000 dry tons of hazardous waste was produced last year. It was all improperly dumped. There is no safe site in British Columbia, none anywhere in Canada. Last year ten million dry tons were produced and a million of those were toxic, hazardous waste, dangerous to human life, dangerous to wildlife and to our water supply. So it is right across the country. If a Canadian, some Member of this House, decided to poison his or her husband or wife and put the same kinds of stuff into a glass of water and fed it to their spouse day after day, under the Criminal Code in Canada they would be prosecuted and probably convicted for attempted murder. But the big companies can dump it in the Great Lakes.

On the American side, the U.S. military and big chemical companies can dump it into the water supply. Laws are diverted or changed, politicians are bought, and what is happening right now is that toxic waste is going into the Great Lakes system. By the conscious inaction of not bringing in new laws and taking the appropriate action, the decision has been made—perhaps knowingly, perhaps unwittingly—by politicians on both sides to allow 20 per cent of the fresh water supply of this planet to become polluted and turned into a septic dump.

There have been statements such as this, Mr. Speaker. Our task force met with the Vice-President of Hooker in New York State a year ago. We asked him what he was doing. The Curtin decision was coming down, and it is totally inappropriate. We are following the same route on the S-site dump, going through the court and getting improper clean-up. What does the Vice-President of Hooker have to say to concerned Canadians? He stands up, after showing us some phony movie, and says: "Well, look, Mr. Fulton, we are waiting so that we can have genetic engineering make some progress, so they can engineer some bugs. We will take containers of bugs, throw them into these toxic pits and they will eat all the problem away." The man has been living in Disneyland too long, Mr. Speaker. He drank out of a Mickey Mouse cup. It gives you some idea of the way these large corporations are prepared to deal with public concern.

Mr. David Suzuki spoke in my riding quite recently, in Kitimat, Mr. Speaker. There were a lot of young people there and he wanted to give some explanation of the concern he has for the way the Canadian parliamentary system is going. I think it is something all of us in this House need reflect on. The average understanding of modern science by Members of this House right now is the same as that of elementary school children. A grade seven child in Canada right now has a better understanding of science than Members of this House. We really need to get to work on that because this issue of toxic waste is no joke. It is something which is coming on us in the same way typhoid fever did at the turn of the century, which is why we got the original 1909 Boundary Waters Treaty.

At the turn of the century, 446 Canadians out of every 100,000 were dying from typhoid fever because of sewage and other kinds of pollution going into the Great Lakes. We got the Treaty and started to move on it. The United States is not attempting to live up to the Great Lakes Water Quality Agreement of 1978. I do not condemn Canada in this matter because we are at least going to live up to the requirements in relation to phosphorous and so on, but there are some enormous loopholes in the Agreement and they are there by the design of the Government in office at the moment in its support of big business.

On garbage day, Mr. Speaker, would you go out of your house and throw your garbage over the fence into your neighbour's yard? You would not, for a number of reasons. There are laws against such actions and there is the law of decency. You could be prosecuted for doing it and you could go to jail. There is a law for individual Canadians, but our neighbours in the United States are dumping literally thousands of tons of this material on the Escarpment, knowing full well that for the next 40 years it will go into our water supply.

Gallup polls show that 75 per cent of Canadians support the clean-up and preservation of the Canadian environment, even if it means accepting a lower standard of living. The same Gallup polls indicate that Members of this House of Commons and members of the legislatures in the country are rated in the same category as convicted sex killers. We have to wonder about that, Mr. Speaker. Why are Canadians prepared to make that kind of economic sacrifice? It is so that they can fish with their grandchildren, so that they can drink clean water, so that they can see trees growing around them and see the odd fox running about.

Politicians will not respond, however. Each week more money is spent on cat food in the Province of Ontario than is spent by the federal Government to deal with the Great Lakes and acid rain problems in the country. More money is spent on cat food than on environmental protection, which is the greatest problem we will face in this century in this country.

Acid rain is a serious thing but the problems of dioxin, mirex and so on are a moving problem. We can deal with the courts on the U.S. side and we can clutch at straws, but we have had the Curtin decision—an utter, abject failure. The EPA tells people to go ahead and move back into the Love Canal area while nine out of eleven renowned U.S. scientists advise people not to move back into the area because the EPA studies are inaccurate and incomplete. They advise that to move back would endanger life.

The whole issue is profit maximization, Mr. Speaker. Big business says that if they have to put a prophylactic around waste, if they have to contain the waste properly and permanently and have to recycle it, their profits will go down. So they go to Ronnie in the States and say: "Ronnie, don't make us spend from the super fund, don't make us clean up; we want high profits and we want deregulation".

Deregulation on this issue means that the health of four million Canadians and one million Americans along the Great Lakes is seriously endangered. We know that one two-hundredths of a drop of dioxin will kill you where you sit, Mr. Speaker. If a beam of sunlight comes through a window and a fleck of dioxin-laden dust, weighing one ten-thousandth of a gram, floats into that sunlight, that amount can kill an entire family. In the Great Lakes region, just one-quarter ounce of dioxin could kill five million people. A ton of it is sitting in Hyde Park and they are just repumping the leachate. That is all the United States is doing. Two hundred tons of contaminated stillbottoms is sitting in S-dump, leaching into the Niagara. It is going underwater into Canada, into Lake Ontario and contaminating the Lake.

We can study the migration patterns of that stuff coming across the Lake and we can tell that the water is becoming more and more polluted. According to the general accounting office in the United States, according to our DOE officials, according to the IJC, the Lake is becoming more and more polluted with dangerous waste.

All that is happening is a couple of frivolous little court cases. The Minister of the Environment tells us that we are employing quiet diplomacy. But stuff is moving across the Lake, Mr. Speaker, and is now being found in the tissues of dead people in this country. In that cadaver from Kingston, dioxin was found in the body tissues. The stuff is moving through the biosphere. It moves in the air, in the water, across the Lake.

The answer being given by the Liberal and Conservative Parties in this country is that the matter will be studied. When people start to get diseases and die, then they will say: "We must put in water filtration systems; we must raise municipal and other taxes". I have some answers that are going to short-circuit that and I hope the House will support me in pursuing them.

• (1120)

What we need is constitutional law. I am glad to see the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) here because in his constituency there are terrible problems in relation to toxic waste.

I wrote to every fire chief in Canada and had responses from most of them. The Government had never written to them nor had any other Member of Parliament. They were concerned about the waste in their communities. They do not know how to fight most of those fires. They see it going into the water supply. It is going into the Ottawa River which is not fit to swim in any more. One cannot fish in the Great Lakes. We cannot sell our eels to West Germany; they are contaminated with mirex. The situation is serious. We need proper constitutional law, and I am going to come to specific recommendations in that regard in a moment.

I am making a very serious proposal to the House today, which is to put a head tax on Americans coming into Canada. I say that in all seriousness, and I am going to explain why. Over 30 million Americans came into Canada last year, many because they have relatives here, many to fish or to hunt or as tourists. What I am saying is that if we were to charge them a head tax of $5 or $10 at the airports, at the border crossings as they came in, and we had proper information there, we could explain to them that the reason we were doing this is the toxic waste coming from Niagara, the Hanford site, and because of what is happening to our water system and our environment from acid rain. We could say: "Here is a card; what state are you from? Here is your Congressman, here is your Senator. We are charging this tax, we are raising money, because we are going to go about this in a serious way."

Supply

When 75 per cent of Canadians support reducing their standard of living to clean up, I think it is about time we sent a strong message to those Americans, our brothers and sisters from the United States, who are prepared to take a message back to the brontosaurus in the White House. That is the description used by an American who is interested in preserving the Great Lakes.

The next step is that instead of just monitoring what is happening in the Great Lakes, we have to have a proper, complete, thorough study of the costs of complete carbon filtration so we can get pure water back out of those Lakes. That is a figure this House needs to know, because we are talking billions and billions of dollars. The complacent administration of Mr. Reagan desires to be buddy-buddy with big business interests, not to protect the health of the citizens, but to protect the profit structure of big business. We need those figures so we can send the proper message.

There are a lot of council members in southern Ontario who would like to go to the their voters and say: "Look, if the federal Government does not move and get some action out of the U.S. pretty quickly on stopping this crap from going into our water system, we will have to raise the mill rates pretty drastically". For St. Catharines, we are talking about hundreds of millions of dollars for proper water filtration. For Ontario, we are talking billions. I think we need to get that message out.

The fourth item is that a large delegation needs to go from this Chamber, along with concerned citizens and scientists, to Congress. I am not talking about three or four, I am talking about 50 or 100 Members of this House. We need to talk about acid rain and we need to talk about toxic waste; that is the issue of this decade in terms of personal health in this country.

I would like to put a few quotes on the record so that the Minister, when he speaks today, will have something to respond to.

An Hon. Member: It is about time.

Mr. Fulton: We will see when I finish whether or not the Minister is going to be so eager to speak and face questions in this House. Here is an article from August, 1980 entitled: "MP angered as Ottawa backs U.S. waste pipeline". It reads:

> The federal Government has conditionally supported a U.S. pipeline that would dump one million gallons of treated chemical waste a day into the Niagara River, despite the fact it cannot accurately predict the damage to nearby water supplies.

That was a concern raised by a Liberal Member. Another article was entitled: "Knew about hazards, U.S. put toxic wastes into river, report says". It is very clear that this is a letter from Union Carbide to the U.S. Army. It reads:

> Plan 2 (using shallow wells) is favoured because our law department advises us it is considered impossible to determine the course of subterranean streams and, therefore, the responsibility for any contamination could not be fixed.

• (1125)

I have all kinds of stuff that I will be putting on the record one way or the other today, but there are a couple of quick shots that I would like to get off before I run out of time. The first is in relation to the Minister's most recent comments about the S-dump. On december 8, 1982, we find in The Gazette the following: "U.S. dump no threat to our water: Minister." Then there is a picture of the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Roberts). But what happens less than a month later? Headlines in The Globe and Mail read: "Leakage turns water into "toxic brew"." What about this headline in The Toronto Star? "Ottawa starts study of poisons in water". And in the Toronto Sun we find this headline: "5 million lives at risk".

A month ago the Minister was telling Pollution Probe that there was no problem with the dump. But suddenly the dump is the biggest issue in the country. As far as the Tories are concerned, I ran across something most interesting about them. The Tories have an environment critic but they do not allow him to ask any questions. I suppose that is because of a caucus decision not to. The only question that has been raised by the Hon. Member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser) and the Hon. Member for Hillsborough (Mr. McMillan) in the last three years concerning the environment was whether or not to permit the importation into Canada of raccoon dogs. There is the Tory policy on the environment. At least the Hon. Member for St. Catharines (Mr. Reid) has asked a couple of questions concerning Niagara and I am grateful that he has done so; but Tory policy is to worry about raccoon dogs being imported into Canada.

[Translation]

Mrs. Hervieux-Payette: Mr. Speaker, my colleague from the New Democratic Party has painted a very bleak picture of the environmental situation in Canada. However, I am sure he has not gone to see for himself what has been done in recent years, and I think the Minister would probably be the best person to provide a list of our achievements in this area. In any case, I can assure the Hon. Member that the Members from Quebec whose ridings are located on the shores of the St. Lawrence, as mine is, are aware that eventually, the water from the Great Lakes will pass their doorstep. I must say that I am rather surprised at the Hon. Member's attitude, when he asks us to lay down the law instead of consulting with the scientific community, which, for instance, has just published reports on acid rain tending to support our Canadian theories on the subject. I think we have made progress in recent years, thanks to the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Roberts).

Finally, the obvious question after listening to my hon. colleague's speech is: What other measures does the New Democratic Party have to recommend, besides a head tax on all Americans coming into Canada? In any case, the number of tourists has dropped, and in the final instance, international relations and our reputation as a good neighbour would suffer.

In fact, although the Hon. Member's purpose is to get at the big companies, it would be the individual citizen who would be punished and would have to pay.

Mr. Speaker, perhaps the Hon. Member could inform the House how he intends to ask industry to become self-regulating. I also think he should take a look at what has already been done. In my riding, Mr. Speaker, there are a number of chemical industries and all the oil refineries that have invested millions of dollars in recent years. Furthermore, we must not forget that this is a joint responsibility. The Hon. Member tends to overlook the fact that provinces and municipalities also have a role to play here, and that citizens should insist on their discharging those responsibilities. Instead of listening to all this gloom and doom, I would rather hear some specific solutions to the problem.

[English]

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to respond to the Hon. Member's question. I would have hoped the Hon. Member for Montreal-Mercier (Mrs. Hervieux-Payette) would have listened to the recommendations I made which were to deal with the issue. The whole issue of constitutional law is something that has to be looked at very carefully.

Let me quote briefly to the Hon. Member from a report to Congress by the Controller-General in relation to the Great Lakes. I am sure the Hon. Member knows that the biological symptoms are there now for all to see. In the St. Lawrence the local population of whales is now biologically sterile as a result of the effluent that is entering the St. Lawrence from the Great Lakes. We should not forget, as I said earlier, that the water coming down as rainfall and entering the Great Lakes takes 500 years to circulate and to exit into the St. Lawrence. It takes a long time for the Great-Lakes to clean themselves. I am not just talking about a head tax alone, but that is one of the ways to mobilize our friends and neighbours to the south of us so as to get to the politicians who have been bought by big industry.

Let us be very clear about this. Big business has said very clearly that it will not clean up its dumps. Big business will not put a prophylactic around its waste, nor will big business recycle waste. President Reagan will not spend money from the super fund. He will not clean up. We are now taking the worst of all alternatives, which is to allow the courts in the United States to come up with completely inappropriate resolutions.

• (1130)

Here is what the Controller-General in the United States had to say about this issue:

> As early as 1970 EPA and IJC recognized that toxic pollution is potentially a greater threat to the Great Lakes than eutrophication. Toxic pollution could endanger human health, destroy Great Lakes commercial fishing, and ultimately render the lakes useless for a variety of desirable activities.

In fiscal year 1981, the IJC Toxic Substances Committee reported that more than 30,000 chemical compounds were produced in the Great Lakes Basin. To date, over 450 of the chemical compounds have been found in the Lake. Here is what the EPA has to say about what they will do:

> EPA generally concurs with our discussion of toxics, except for three points. First, EPA cites that some evidence indicates that controls over toxic pollutants can be effective.

That is a great statement.

> Second, EPA points out that the Food and Drug Administration sets allowable limits of toxic levels in fish.

That is interesting, since the EPA itself, before Reagan came into office, said that there should be no dioxin level allowed in drinking water. None whatsoever. The third point:

> And finally, EPA believes that the issue of laboratory capacity and capability is not an issue peculiar to the Great Lakes.

EPA has a three-year backlog on fish samples which have been taken from the Great Lakes which have not been tested because they say they do not have the lab capacity.

We are dealing with an administration that will not deal with the issue on both sides of the Canadian-U.S. border. I suggest that we need to go to Congress with a major group to look at some kind of a head tax and to educate our American friends who are coming here that we are being seriously damaged in terms of health, recreation and tourism by their actions on acid rain and toxic waste.

We need to take action with law. The toxic and hazardous waste Bill was passed in July, 1980, and we still have not been presented with regulations for the first third. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) says that it will be up to five years before we receive that and constitutional legal experts in Canada say that those regulations will simply not be able to deal with this issue of toxic and hazardous wastes.

Mr. Nickerson: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I was of the impression that the new rules called for questions to be short and succinct. According to my calculation, the last question took some five minutes and the reply was nearly five minutes. If that is the case, almost the entire ten-minute question period is taken up with just two Members participating.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) completed his remarks at 11:26. The Hon. Member for Montreal-Mercier (Mrs. Hervieux Payette) began at that time and completed her remarks not later than 11:29. We again heard from the Hon. Member for Skeena for a period of approximately three minutes. I will now recognize the Hon. Member for Perth (Mr. Jarvis).

Mr. Jarvis: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton). I pose it on the presumption that he does not wish to minimize the force of his argument by inadvertent inaccuracy.

I understood him to say that the flushing period or purification period in the Great Lakes was 500 years. Does he not distinguish that that flushing period is in Lake Superior, where I think his figure may be accurate, as compared to the flushing period in Lake Erie, for example, which is a fraction, as I understand it—I hope he will correct me if I am wrong—of the purification period in a lake such as Lake Superior?

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, it is good question. I am reading from a document in front of me which says that a drop of water that entered the top of Lake Superior has been wandering through the Great Lakes since Christopher Columbus stumbled upon America in 1492; that today, almost 500 years later, that drop of water is spilling into the Gulf of St. Lawrence. The Hon. Member is quite correct. I am talking about from the top of the Great Lakes system on through. Some lakes do flush more quickly than others.

Mr. Fretz: Mr. Speaker, I am sure that the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) would not want to mislead the House. While I appreciate many of the remarks which he made this morning, his first remark—he can correct me if I am wrong—indicated that we could not fish in the Great Lakes or eat fish from the Great Lakes. I want to tell him that that is not true. I live on Lake Erie and there is perch, bass, pickerel, trout and salmon fishing, all of which are edible.

I am not here to defend the present Government, but I want to say that the quality of Lake Erie is improving. Tourism is important to my riding. Swimming is available at beautiful beaches and there is sport fishing. The Hon. Member's statement that we cannot eat the fish from the Great Lakes is not true. I would like him to correct that statement.

My second question concerns the Hon. Member's remarks about the Hon. Member for Hillsborough (Mr. McMillan), who is not here today, and his derogatory remarks about raccoons. Has the Member checked Hansard to indeed verify that the Hon. Member for Hillsborough has not raised questions on the environment other than that question? If not, I would like him to correct it for the record.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, with regard to the first question concerning fish, I think if the Hon. Member checks Hansard he will see that I was thinking about certain areas of the Great Lakes that are now permanently closed to the commercial fisheries because of high levels of PCBs and dioxin. There are also some other areas closed simply because of localized pollution.

I would like to quote from Dr. Beverley Paigen to indicate why I say the problems in relation to the fishery in the Great Lakes are becoming serious. Dr. Paigen is a renowned scientist in the United States in relation to Great Lakes pollution problems. The task force document states:

> Paigen stated that Lake Ontario has been tremendously affected by toxic chemicals in the Niagara River. 'I don't feel that these (Lake Ontario) fish are fit for human consumption,' the scientist famous for her involvement in the Love Canal said. 'I would not eat the fish.'

We are not talking about all of the fish or all of the species in the Great Lakes, but our eel populations have been banned from sale in West Germany because of the high levels of mirex. Commercial fisheries, particularly trout and some other species in various localized areas of the Great Lakes, are now closed for export and catchment. There are areas where they can be caught but there is an interesting juggle in this area. We can eat fish with 20 parts per trillion whereas the United States allows 10 parts per trillion. The EPA, after a very serious review of the dioxin question, decided that there should be no level of dioxin allowed in drinking water. I find it strange, if there should be no levels of dioxin in drinking water, that it can be allowed in fish that we eat.

With regard to the second question, I had my staff check Hansard for questions by the Hon. Member for Vancouver South and the Hon. Member for Hillsborough on the environment. With respect to environment questions in this session, the only one that we found is listed under wildlife. It was not about raccoons, it was about the import of raccoon dogs from Europe. He was opposing the importation of raccoon dogs.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I hesitate to intervene in the proceedings, but I should perhaps explain that the ten-minute period for comments and questions has expired. I know from signals that the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Roberts) wanted to join in that ten-minute exchange; unfortunately, time is not available.

Mr. Rose: We are not answering questions today.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I would like to respond to the point of order which was raised earlier by the Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson). If Members would like to consider a period of 90 seconds, which is the time allowed for statement just prior to Question Period, as being an appropriate amount of time during this exchange for question and comments, then a 90-second question or answer could be considered, if Members so wish, as a reasonable guideline. Certainly the Chair would be pleased to co-operate in that manner.

Mr. Jarvis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. You made a suggestion that does not cause us any particular problem, except for this one caveat. This is a suggestion that we may attempt during this particular day's debate but it does not necessarily set any precedent for any future debate. I quite agree with your suggestion on that understanding.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): That is understood and agreed.

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I gather that the time for my opportunity to pose a question has passed. I am not surprised that the Hon. Member for Mission-Port Moody (Mr. Rose) should shout that they will not answer any questions today.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I am sure, with the number of Members in the House today, that we could get unanimous consent and I would be pleased to answer any number of questions that the Minister would like to put to me.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Does the Hon. Member wish me to put that motion for unanimous consent?

Mr. Fulton: Yes.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Hon. Member for Skeena seeks unanimous consent of the House to permit the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Roberts) to ask a series of questions.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): There is not unanimous consent.

Mr. Roberts: Mr. Speaker, this is a very serious subject, but I do not think the motion which has been presented to us is very serious. The subject which underlies it is. I would like to take at least a few moments to put on the record what has been done, not only over the past year but a little bit before that as well. It was not in any way given reference by the hon. gentleman who moved the motion, either because he was not aware of what had been done or perhaps, more probably because it would not support the rather distorted motion which he has presented to the House.

• (1140)

Just in terms of this Parliament, a variety of actions have been taken within a larger context. Just to note a few of them specifically, there has been the passing of the Transportation of Dangerous Goods Act. The Hon. Member referred to it and indicated that he thought the regulations would not be brought forward for another "four or five years", I believe that was the phrase he used. That is simply not true. Some of the regulations have been gazetted. They have been undertaken after an extensive process of publication. The rest are expected to be presented very soon.

There has been the signature in July, 1982 of something like $65 million worth of expenditure from Canada, in conjunction with the Province of Ontario, directed to the further clean-up of the Great lakes water systems, particularly through the support of sewage facilities.

There have been very strong efforts, led by Canada, at the international level. Environment Canada chaired committees of the OECD directed to bringing into line, into some coherence, the international assessment, treatment and study of the production of chemicals. There has been a complete attempt to develop an international system for rating, providing, if you like, a passport for chemicals as they are developed so that, internationally, we can co-operate and co-ordinate our efforts to control the hazards of toxic chemicals.

There has been no awareness on the part of the Hon. Member that over the past three years, through cost-sharing agreements with the Provinces, we have financed extensive studies to detect existing hazardous dump sites and also to bring forward the information and plans needed to provide a network of clean-up facilities in order to remove and destroy existing hazardous sites and also to deal with the coming on to the market of toxic, hazardous goods.

There has been no indication that the Hon. Member understands that the federal Government, in co-operation with the Provinces, has offered to provide Crown land, if it should be requested, in order to provide needed disposal sites in this country.

There has been no recognition that considerable research is being done in these areas, that something over $75 million a year is being expended by the federal Government on research into toxic areas.

There has been no indication that the Hon. Member even realizes that the Toxic Chemicals Management Program has been established within the federal Government. It was established in 1980 and is designed to provide a "cradle-to-the-grave" management approach to the handling of toxic chemicals, not only to prevent newly-produced toxic compounds from entering the environment, but also to clean up, to remove, those which are known to be present. The program provides a focus for all of Environment Canada's toxic chemical-related activities. We are expanding and developing the program and, in conjunction with the Canadian Council of Resource and Environment Ministers, we are assessing priorities at the national and regional levels.

The Toxic Chemicals Management Program includes measurement to ascertain concentrations present in the environment, inventories—that is, an assessment of the quantities and point sources of toxic releases—and characteristics research, for instance, impacts on wildlife toxicity, bioaccumulation and persistence.

We are concentrating our work on four essential areas of concern: pesticides, radionuclides, new chemicals and existing chemicals. Part of this work is being done in other departments, of course. For instance, pesticide evaluation is undertaken by Agriculture Canada. The examination of radionuclides is being rearranged to provide new policy direction within the Department of the Environment, and the study of new chemicals is being considered internationally with respect to manufacturers' pre-marketing data to provide adequate protection against potentially harmful chemicals.

In his speech, the Hon. Member gave no sign of recognition that he is even aware that these developments—which are known, I think, to most Hon. Members of the House—have been taking place.

The resolution which the New Democratic Party has presented focuses largely on the Great Lakes. Therefore, let us consider what has been happening in that area. Since the signing of the Great Lakes Water Quality Agreement in 1972, which will come to the end of its next phase by 1985, $1.3 billion will have been spent on the upgrading of sewage plant systems in Ontario, exactly because of the past impact they have had on the Great Lakes.

There has been the passing of the phosphorous limitation regulations in 1970 and 1973. The Hon. Member for Erie (Mr. Fretz) in speaking about Lake Erie, correctly pointed out that, as a result of these phosphorous regulations, the quality of the water in Lake Erie has been enormously strengthened and the fisheries have been returning to prosperity.

There was no sign of recognition on the part of the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) of the passing of the Environmental Contaminants Act in 1976—

Mr. Blaikie: You gave $6.5 billion to the oil companies just last spring, so don't brag about $1.3 million.

Mr. Roberts: —which was directed to the control of such things as PCB, mirex, mercury and so on. There was also a revision of the Great Lakes Water Quality Agreement in 1978 to focus exactly on toxic chemicals. I have already mentioned the creation of the Toxic Chemicals Management Program in 1980.

It is true, of course, as the Hon. Member indicated, that a large part of the problem that we have in the Great Lakes and the Niagara River stems from sources on the American side. An important part of what we must do is to spur the United States on to greater and faster action, and that we have been doing. We have been doing it through diplomatic processes directly with the American Government and with the International Joint Commission. We have been doing it through direct contact on the part of myself and my counterparts in the United States, and officials with their counterparts. We have been doing it through the Niagara River Toxics Committee which was established to devise a study plan and to recommend actions for cleaning up the Niagara area. We have been doing it through the consultative committee of senior officials which has met six times within the past year to co-ordinate and implement our action program. We have been doing it through the support of private groups in Canada which are pressing their environmental concerns in a variety of American forums. None of this seems to be recognized by the Hon. Member who presented the motion.

What the federal Government is not doing—it could be a matter for some debate and controversy, and I would be glad to have the views of Hon. Members—is using the—

Mr. Blaikie: So you could ignore them.

Mr. Roberts: —United States court and regulatory process. We are not bringing presentations through the American court and regulatory systems. We are not doing that because we believe that that effort on the part of the federal Government would likely be counter-productive. If we attempted to use the American court system to resolve these problems, it is quite likely that the American administration would say: "If you have chosen to use the court system, you must live with it. It is a lengthy and expensive process and you must abide by its results. Do not come to us to respond to your problems; you, have gone to the courts to deal with them." We believe that that would be counterproductive.

We believe that through direct negotiations with the United States, we can impress upon them their obligations to us, which are not necessarily legal obligations, but, rather, are moral and political obligations of a good neighbour to another. Therefore, we have not chosen the court process, not because we are opposed in principle to doing so, but, rather, because we do not think that that is the best way to promote Canadian interest.

However, we have been anxious to support others who use the American court process, such as the special interest groups which have standing before the American court process. We have opened up our advice, expertise and knowledge to them and they have expressed their thanks for what we are doing.

It is fair enough to ask, if those are the methods we are using, is there any reason to believe that they are succeeding? Indeed, there is some evidence to that effect. I believe it is because of the kinds of interventions that we have made with the United States authorities that, for instance, the American administration has responded to the problem involving the Niagara Falls, New York sewage treatment plant, which is the major polluter of the Niagara region. I think it was as a result of interventions on our part that the permit was issued in November, 1982 to proceed with that project and the funds to support it were unblocked in Washington.

At one stage the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) referred to something which was a bit garbled. I was not quite sure what he was referring to when he spoke in support of a pipeline development; I think he was referring to the SCA issue in the Niagara Peninsula. It was as a result of our interventions with the American authorities, both the United States Government and the State of New York, that the SCA waste facility permit was tightened. It was made to conform with those guidelines which should be met. That is a result of our efforts. We have been monitoring the situation. We know that the effluent which has been coming from the SCA facility, certainly up to this point, does have a risk point which seems to meet adequate standards.

It is because of action on our part that we brought forward the two comprehensive base line reports in 1980 and 1981. It is because of our work that we were able to bring forward the Canadian Niagara River Program in August, 1982. I hope the Hon. Member has had a look at it. It was not clear from his remarks whether he has. It was partially as a result of technical assistance which we provided to environmental groups that improvements in court orders in the United States have taken place. I am not arguing that all of the court orders are completely satisfactory from our point of view, certainly they are not but they are an improvement over what would have happened otherwise.

I have already mentioned the support we gave to interested groups, the creation of the Niagara River Toxics Committee and the bilateral consultation committee of senior officials. What has been the effect of those bilateral consultations? I can cite some examples of what they have done. Funds for the Niagara Falls sewage treatment plant were allocated. There has been increased funding on the part of New York State for responding to Niagara problems. We have provided much improved controls through the Niagara River Toxics Committee.

The United States Environmental Protection Agency brought forward a Niagara frontier agenda which was a clearer response to problems than existed before. The United States has rewritten 25 major industrial discharge permits to take into account the kinds of concerns that Canadians have been expressing. There has been a speeding up of hazardous waste landfill site litigation in the United States. The United States K Corps of Engineers has been investing much more money into the study of dump site impact on groundwater quality.

I am not arguing that this is the best of all possible worlds. I am not arguing that there is still not a lot to be done. What I am arguing is that there is evidence that the impact of our interventions with the United States is having a favourable effect.

If we are acting on the situation, why is the situation becoming worse, and why did we not act before? The answer is that the situation is not getting worse. As we have already mentioned, there has been a decline in the phosphorous levels in Lake Erie. There has been a decline, since its detection, of mirex in the Great Lakes by a ten-fold span. The same is true of PCBs, DDT and dioxin. Over the past eight, nine or ten years in each case there has been roughly a ten-fold decline in the levels which have been found in the Great Lakes.

It is not that the situation is not improved. It is improving but needs to improve even further. The quality of water in the Great Lakes is improving. What is really happening is that our mechanisms of scientific detection have become so sophisticated in relation to these problems that we face an information explosion. We are now able to detect very minute quantities of a whole range of substances not previously detected in the Great Lakes water. Our knowledge is growing exponentially. As it grows, we act. However, we cannot act until we know what situations we face. One of the real problems is that we are now able to detect such minute quantities that we have the capacity to frighten people if we are careless and irresponsible, as I think the Hon. Member for Skeena has been in discussing these issues; we are able to frighten people in some circumstances without being able to give them iron-clad assurances of the significance of what we are finding.

To try and put it graphically, we know that chlorine is a tremendous poison, yet small quantities are put without hazard into swimming pools. It is poisonous, yet at a certain level it is not only satisfactory but is perhaps conducive to health. One could say that salt is made up of two terrible poisons, sodium and chlorine, yet in that combination they are harmless.

What we are able to do now with our scientific techniques is to indicate the presence in such small quantities of many substances which are normally thought of as poisonous without being able to say that at that level they constitute any hazard. There are really serious problems which are posed to us in the situation we now have. There are real problems of how we manage and act, given the information explosion that is occurring in toxic chemicals, how we manage the assessment of what we are finding and how we establish priorities for looking at them.

I can say to all Members of this House that an ordinary cup of coffee contains hundreds of substances. The aroma of a cup of coffee contains something like a dozen substances which could be considered to be toxic, yet we are not able to assess the significance of finding those toxic substances in such small amounts. If we multiply that example by others, when we have this extraordinary range of information, to say nothing of the synergistic effects of the combination of these chemicals, how are we to manage their assessment? How are we to both inform and educate the public at the same time?

The second very serious problem we have is how to bring into line the evolution of our approach to environmental matters, with proper public assessment of them. Originally, ten years ago, the general approach to pollution problems, that we took was roughly that which is still used in a rather emotional way by the Hon. Member for Skeena. That is, the policeman approach—stop whatever is happening; find out what is happening and stop it.

Mr. Fulton: The honest cop.

Mr. Roberts: Yes, the policeman's role, the honest policeman's role. There is nothing dishonest about saying there are hazards out there, let us find out about them and stop them. But we have moved beyond the simple policeman's role, the honest cop role to a somewhat more sophisticated approach of attempting to develop preventive pollution measures; not simply to find out what has happened and stop and correct it, but to try and act in order to prevent such situations recurring.

As we have done that more and more, we have found that we move into different areas of planning and managing levels of risk in relation to these situations. We can never assure people that everything they deal with will be absolutely safe, but we have to manage the advantages and disadvantages of the situation. We have the problem of not being able to give people 100 per cent assurance. We have the problem of trying to persuade them that there are better ways of managing our affairs so as to minimize risk.

It is a problem which is reflected in a particularly acute form in the NIMBY syndrome; that is, "Not in my back yard; we do not want anti-pollution clean-up plants close to us because there is some risk". No scientist will ever be able to assure you that there is absolutely no risk. There has to be an acceptance of risk in some areas if there is to be markedly less risk in the general treatment in society.

Those are serious matters. They are ones I would like to see Members more involved with in this House than they have yet been. I would like to see Members from all Parties asking for more briefing and information. Remarkably little of that comes to us.

There has been tremendous progress in relation to environmental protection. A great deal has been done; much remains to be done. I believe the record not only of the past three years but of the past ten years shows that federal and provincial Governments have been organizing themselves to respond effectively as our information increases, but questions still remain that deserve to be dealt with seriously.

I wish the Hon. Member who moved this motion had treated some of these questions seriously rather than indulging in what was largely a misguided, rather silly rhetoric about the corruption of politicians and the evils of big business. The complexity and seriousness of these questions has really gone far beyond that level of debate. I know he is an intelligent Member and really does care about these problems, but I would invite him to apply his intelligence and sincerity to them in a responsible way.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest when the Minister indicated his concern with toxic wastes entering our environment and asked Members of Parliament to come forward for briefings and to seek more information on this very complex topic. I want to ask the Minister about a certain report that would help shed some light on a contaminant that people feel is entering the environment around Kamloops, British Columbia. This is a report on the Development of Source-Testing Methods Applicable to Non-ferrous Smelters. I have been trying through his office to obtain a copy of that report for my constituents for some months. I wonder if the Hon. Member would indicate when I might expect to receive a copy?

• (1200)

Mr. Roberts: I am sorry, I cannot give the hon. gentleman that information but I will seek to get the report and provide it to him just as quickly as possible. I do not have it with me. I will try to expedite it.

Mr. Jarvis: I have two questions within the 90 seconds, if I can do it. The Minister discarded the possibility of proceeding by way of litigation in United States courts. About two years ago he was quoted in The Globe and Mail as saying: "My officials are exploring the possibility of suing U.S. polluters in American courts". I took the Minister's remarks to mean that the decision not to sue was a polticial one, and yet this quote indicates, or would appear to me to indicate, that it was a technical consideration that he asked his officials to investigate. I would like him to clarify that.

Second, when the Minister says "the situation is improving" vis-à-vis the Great Lakes, I really wonder if he feels that is the yardstick as compared to whether the U.S. is fulfilling its obligations under the Canada-U.S. Great Lakes Water Quality Agreement, which included the projected rate of clean-up, together with the funding, to accomplish that projected rate. Would that not be a more accurate yardstick than what the Minister is suggesting, that the situation generally is improving?

Mr. Roberts: I will try to answer briefly as well. In relation to the first question, Mr. Speaker, we did, as the Hon. Member said, look into the question of the federal Government using the American court system. As a result of that assessment, both legally and politically, I decided that it was likely to be counter-productive. I want to underline that I am not opposed, and indeed we would provide some assistance to others who wish to use the court system, but we felt it would be counter-productive for the federal Government to invoke the American courts because that in practical terms would limit the range of remedies which we would otherwise be able to explore with the American administration. We looked at it and, as a result of looking at it, we came to the conclusion which I have expressed.

With respect to the second question, yes, of course, we must not only look to the past at the level of improvement that has taken place, but we must look ahead and do what we can to persuade the United States to meet its requirements. While we are concerned about cutbacks in the United States administration generally in the Environmental Protection Agency, to the best of our ability to see at the moment there has not been a reduction in American expenditure allocated to the specific Niagara clean-up area. I mentioned the past record because I think it is important for people to understand that progress is being made. It is too easy to frighten people about impending horrors in these very difficult situations. It is important, I believe, for people to understand that the situation has been improving, which does not undermine in any way the importance of what the Hon. Member suggested, that of looking ahead to see what needs to be done to keep ourselves on the clean-up schedule.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I would ask a question dealing with the Great Lakes and St. Lawrence system. There has been a great deal of concern expressed about the seepage of waste from the ground from municipal sewage. Has the Government any plans to have our representatives on the International Joint Commission look at that matter? We recently appointed a new chairman of the Canadian section, a very capable person. Are there any representations being made by the Government to the Commission so that the Canadian members may approach American members to continue the pressure, which must be continued, I believe, if the objective of the Ministry is met?

Mr. Roberts: Yes, Mr. Speaker, in a general way there is a continuing process of notification and of report, and the IJC presents its assessment in reports and recommends action to both American and Canadian Governments in a continuing way. Migration in the bedrock is also a matter which we will be referring to them as well. We do need a bit more information, however, than we have at the present time.

That is why I announced a few days ago that we are undertaking a crash program to try to detect exactly what the contours of that migration are, so we have a better knowledge of exactly how serious a problem we face in making representations both to the United States Government and also in communicating information to the International Joint Commission.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, again with respect to various jurisdictions, what relationship exists between the Government of Canada and the Government of the Province of Ontario? I have particularly in mind the fact that the City of Brockville is intending to establish a landfill site on a piece of land adjacent to the St. Lawrence River. I believe this is seen in the community to hold a great potential for damage, at least, to the St. Lawrence River system. Is this the kind of case, if it was brought to the Minister's attention, specifically beyond today, that the Minister might take up with his Ontario colleagues? Is it the kind of case that the federal Government may see fit to intervene in in order to protect the environment along the St. Lawrence River?

Mr. Roberts: The questions are short, Mr. Speaker, but they raise complex matters. I would say first that generally there is a close system of co-operation. I will refer specifically to the Niagara situation, then expand later. There is the Toxic Committee which involves New York State, Ontario, the United States Government and the federal Government jointly; it is basically a committee of scientists and experts looking into the matter and suggesting remedial approaches.

There is also the management liaison committee, which involves these four Government also, to handle implementation. There is, therefore, a close process of consultation and working together through those instruments.

The Great Lakes Water Quality Agreement, to expand the scope of my answer, involves the provincial Governments as well as the national Governments on both sides of the border. We have signed with the provincial Government the Canada-Ontario Agreement within that framework. That is another means through which we can discuss these problems with the provincial Government. As I mentioned in my remarks, we have recently signed an agreement for another $65 million worth of expenditure in relation to sewage treatment within that Canada-Ontario Agreement.

On the last point, I would have to say that we have tried to work in a co-operative way with all of the Provinces, both in the assessment of the legacy of the past in terms of toxic situations, and through cost-sharing agreements in supporting remedial plans to respond to these situations and to respond to the problems of the new chemical generation. The Province of Ontario, if memory serves me correctly, had already undertaken this kind of work without the spur of federal contribution, as we have done with most of the other Provinces. We do, through the Canadian Council of Resource and Environment Ministers, discuss these problems, both generally and in detail. I am relatively satisfied with the co-operative arrangements and I think we can find somewhere in that mix an effective instrument for drawing to the attention of the Government of Ontario, say, the Brockville situation. I would only ask the Hon. Member to give me more details about it so I can do that effectively.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, I have two very brief questions. I noticed that the Minister in his comments touched on a couple of pieces of Canadian legislation, and I think that he would not want to leave the impression with those who are going to read this debate, or who are watching it, that the laws which are on the Canadian books are in any way effective. The Canadian Environmental Law Report has this to say about the two pieces of legislation he touched on. First, there is no hazardous waste management law at the federal level in Canada. The federal Environmental Contaminants Act of 1976, while welcome, is not a hazardous waste management law. It only deals with new substances and substances in use.

On the second one it referred to, the Transportation of Dangerous Goods Act, the Canadian Environmental Law Report has this to say: "The recently enacted Transportation of Dangerous Goods Act may provide only a partial answer to the hazardous waste problems or no answer at all".

I was quite amazed that the Minister considered the analysis which I had drawn in terms of the relationship between big business and Governments at this point in time as "shocking and irresponsible". Perhaps he would like to comment on what the IJC had to say last year, which was quoted in The Globe and Mail, headlined: "Politics, budget, tie its hands as lakes are poisoned". On that very point, the Minister told the press in December that the S-site dump was no problem, and then this month, three weeks later, he says it is a major problem and the headlines are: "Five million lives at risk". Perhaps the Minister would like to talk about shocking and irresponsible headlines in that respect.

Mr. Roberts: I have three comments, Mr. Speaker. First, I would be quite prepared to consider seriously, if Hon. Members of the House wish that to happen, changes which would strengthen the role of the federal Government in relation to pollution problems. I think it deserves very serious consideration—and much clearer expression on the part of the Hon. Member, rather than simply saying "constitutional changes, constitutional changes"—as to what is the best approach in terms of federal-provincial responsibility, the Provinces exist, they do have responsibilities in this area. The approach we have followed in this Government is not to seek confrontation over jurisdictional responsibility but to seek co-operation in responding to the problem. Now, it is quite possible to argue seriously that the entire area should move to the hands of the federal Government. If that is what the Hon. Member means, then I think he should bring that forward in detail and make some assessment of what provincial response to it would be. I think it is arguable, but I do not think it is responsible simply to say: "Constitutional change, that is the solution", without looking at those problems in a serious way.

• (1210)

As to recent statements about the S-dump, I do not think I ever said that it did not constitute a problem. Indeed, we have been working very closely with public interest groups in the Niagara area to respond to those problems, as well as making representations ourselves. What I said is that there was no indication that the S-dump leakages had significantly lowered water quality standards in Lake Ontario. I reiterated that statement in my press release earlier this week, if the Hon. Member would read it. It is not that there is not a threat in the sense there may be problems developing, because quite clearly we are concerned about it; but what we can do is reassure people that up to this point there does not seem to have been a lowering of the water quality or failure to meet safe standards as a result. So one can look at a threat either as something actual or as something in the future.

As to irresponsibility, Mr. Speaker, I apologize because I missed the first few moments of the Hon. Member's speech, but when I came into the House he was talking, I thought rather glibly and irresponsibly, about buying politicians. If I remember correctly, he referred to Liberals and Conservatives in talking about buying politicians. Later on he said that politicians are bought.

I think that is irresponsible and frivolous, Mr. Speaker. It smears Members of Parliament, Cabinet Ministers and politicians in other countries. If the Hon. Member has any specific and verifiable evidence of that happening, he should provide it to the proper authorities. I do not think he should make allegations like that unless he is serious about them. That is what I was referring to when I talked about what I think is an irresponsible approach to very serious problems.

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to speak to the motion today regarding the need to protect adequately the Canadian environment from toxic and hazardous wastes. I am also pleased to hear the Minister say that he is willing to look at suggestions and recommendations to strengthen the role of Government, and I hope that includes strengthening the role of Parliament, in what is a very serious debate today and a very serious matter for the people of Canada.

I want to say that I live only a ten-minute walk from Lake Erie, and my riding of Erie is located in the heart of the Great Lakes Basin. So the ongoing battle to clean up the Great Lakes is of great concern to me because of the threat to the health and well-being of my constituents.

I realize to some degree the problem confronting the International Joint Commission in endeavouring to obtain the stated purpose of the Great Lakes Water Quality Agreement of 1978, which is, "To retore and maintain the chemical, physical and biological integrity of the waters of the Great Lakes Basin Ecosystem," in light of the continued urban growth of this highly developed industrial and agricultural region which now has a population of over 37 million people. I not only now realize this problem, but I realized it back in December, 1979 when I sought and obtained the unanimous consent of this House to my motion under Standing Order 43, which read as follows:

> In view of the fact that a (U.S. Company) has been dumping thousands of gallons of . . . harmful chemicals into the Niagara River on a daily basis, and in view of the fact that the continuation of this method of disposal has a potentially harmful and lasting effect on the health of all citizens, Canadian and American, who live along the river, I move . . . that the Government express its concern . . . and urge the Government of the United States to look directly into this matter and take what action is necessary so as to alleviate the potential danger of such a continued disposal method of harmful chemicals.

Then again, on February 3, 1981 I raised this matter in the House as follows:

> —recent press reports . . . indicate that American industry and Government dumped toxic and radioactive wastes into the Niagara River during the Second World War. If these reports are well founded, the health of residents of the Niagara Peninsula is seriously threatened. Therefore I move . . . that this House urge the Secretary of State for External Affairs to investigate the veracity of these stories immediately and to report his findings to the House.

I am sorry to report that this motion did not receive unanimous consent.

Two countries, Mr. Speaker, with different priorities and policies have this common problem and must learn to co-operate in order to come to an agreement on measures of protection and prevention satisfactory to the people of both nations. It would apear that the original state of the Great Lakes can never be restored, but reasonable objectives are attainable. The Boundary Waters Treaty states that:

> These waters whose shoreline or banks are shared by the two countries shall not be polluted on either side to the injury of health or property of the other.

Residents should expect to have pure drinking water and uncontaminated waters as well for fishing, swimming and boating. Certainly the denial of these basic rights to residents on the shores of the Great Lakes would be considered as injury of health or property.

It is disturbing to report that the levels of toxins in fish and waterfowl in this area is significantly higher than it was in 1978 when the Boundary Waters Treaty was signed. On April 15, 1981 I again raised with the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Roberts) the matter of dumping effluent into the Niagara River, and I quote:

> Recent press reports indicate that as a result of malfunctions in the Buffalo sewage plant, millions of gallons of improperly treated waste are being dumped daily into the Niagara River. Therefore I move . . . that this House urge the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Roberts) to verify these reports, and upon determining their truth, to inform the United States Government immediately of Canada's deep concern about pollution in this international waterway.

I did not receive unanimous consent for this motion.

As the Member for Erie, I am concerned that little action is being taken to ensure adherence to the terms of the Boundary Waters Treaty. In July, 1982 I urged the Minister of the Environment to speed up the appointment of a third Canadian representative on the International Joint Commission so that there would be a strong Canadian voice on the Commission when such crucial issues as the clean up of the Great Lakes were being discussed. A third member has since been appointed. On January 24, 1983 the Minister of the Environment issued a press release announcing new Canadian action to investigate S-area contamination. This followed hard on the heels of an extensive Canadian federal investigation which showed that S-area poses a greater threat to Canadian waters than any other United States landfill uncovered to date.

Therefore, it seems ironic to me, Mr. Speaker, that the Minister would make this statement six weeks after the Hon. Member for St. Catharines (Mr. Reid) raised the question in the House with the Minister.

My colleague referred to the very discouraging report issued by the New York Department of Health that toxic chemicals contamination in the Lake Ontario-Niagara River Basin is increasing rather then decreasing. With more pollutants escaping now than anticipated and with the report that Canadian water treatment plants are not equipped to remove them from drinking water, this is serious indeed. The Department of National Health and Welfare makes that alarming statement regarding the inadequacy of the Canadian water treatment plants, and considering that some of these toxic chemicals are deadly, I echo my colleague's question to the Minister: Has the time not yet come for an emergency Summit meeting and the establishment of an international task force?

• (1220)

Since 1978 the Niagara Falls, New York system has been discharging contaminated water and raw sewage containing chemicals into the lower Niagara River. The Minister is well aware of this. Also, there has been a contamination of the bedrock structure along the river. Since the Minister has been saying that the federal Government is taking some action, I want to ask him if he will table the representations which have been made in writing by either himself or the Department of External Affairs?

What is the purpose and the effect of the 1978 Great Lakes Water Quality Treatment Agreement if nothing more can be done? The actions proposed in the Minister's statement are as follows: first, a study of the plume of toxic chemicals believed to be moving southward from S-Area through underground layers beneath the Niagara River and into Canadian territory; second, increased funding through the Great Lakes Water Quality Program for comprehensive analyses of drinking water quality in Lake Ontario; third, additional funds to the Department of Fisheries and Oceans to conduct a comprehensive analysis of Lake Ontario fish for chemicals emanating from S-area, including dioxin; and fourth, that monitoring for chemicals in the river will be intensified to include classes of contaminants indicated as present in S-area.

I agree with the Minister and the Government that these actions are important and fine but in themselves they are not enough. I repeat, as well as these actions there should be an emergency Summit meeting and the establishment of an international task force to get Parliament involved with our United States' counterparts.

In the Minister's statement, he admits that the United States Government made public a revised complaint against Occidental Chemical Corporation, formerly the well-known Hooker Chemicals and Plastics Corporation, in late December, recognizing the seriousness of the contamination as well as the direct infiltration of S-area contaminants into the Niagara Falls, New York drinking water treatment plant.

At the conclusion of his press release, the Minister pledged that the federal Government will continue to press the U.S. for a complete clean-up of S-area and will be consulting with American officials on the development of comprehensive studies to define the extent of contaminant movement, remedial measures and the monitoring and evaluation of remedial programs.

The August, 1982 report of the International Joint Commission notes 24 different regions in the Province of Ontario that have been identified as problem areas. The Niagara and St. Clair Rivers are two of our freshwater sources which are most seriously in need of an extensive clean-up. Human health concerns have to be given the highest priority and much more work needs to be done in eliminating the sources of pollution in these areas and undoing the damage which has already been done. Identification of problem areas alone is not enough. I repeat, it is not good enough!

On January 25, 1983 my colleague, the Hon. Member for St. Catharines, addressed the Minister's statement on the safety of drinking water, and I quote from pages 22193-4 of Hansard:

> Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment who will recall answering a question of mine some six weeks ago by stating that the S-Area does not constitute a threat to the quality of the drinking water of some four million Canadians. On what basis would the Minister make such a statement to this House, and then yesterday issue a press release indicating that this S-Area is somewhat of a new and pressing problem which should be eradicated almost immediately? . . . since he has had knowledge of it for some considerable length of time.

The Minister replied, in part, as follows:

> There is no evidence whatsoever that the standards of drinking water in the Niagara River or Lake Ontario are beyond those which are established as being safe. There is no indication in the present situation of any conflict with the existing safe water guidelines. That does not mean we should not be concerned about leakages or the migration of fill. There are problems which should concern us.

And well they should, Mr. Speaker. In a subsequent answer the Minister said:

> What is new in this situation is not changes in the quality of water; what is new is the evidence of migration, underground, of potentially dangerous products to Canadian territory. That is the new element of the situation which I discussed yesterday. I brought forward an action program which will help us deal with that.

My colleague's recommendation, and I repeat his words once again, is as follows: "The establishment of an international task force and the holding of an emergency Summit meeting with the latest findings." This must take place; this must happen.

The Globe and Mail for January 25, 1983, on page 1, reported on the leaking which turns water into "toxic brew", quoting federal scientist Douglas Hallet who said that some of the hundreds of chemicals found in the S-area dump include reactives, which can combine in the ground to form new and unknown chemicals as they mix. Mr. Hallet called the chemical brew "just as dangerous as radiation", and said it contains substances known to cause cancer, mutations and birth defects.

Mr. Hallet said he believes the dump contains dioxin, the deadliest of all chemical wastes. That is frightening. The report in The Globe and Mail goes on to say that the S-area is one of four major chemical dumps polluting the lower Niagara River. The other three, Love Canal, the Hyde Park dump and the 102nd Street dump, and dozens of other dumps, are believed to post some hazard to the region.

I want to conclude my remarks by urging the Minister to take seriously the recommendations made earlier this week by my colleague, the Hon. Member for St. Catharines. I will repeat them although I have done so earlier in my address. The Government should seriously consider the establishment of an international task force to study this immediate and most serious matter and to arrange an immediate Summit meeting without delay. Let us get the Parliament of Canada active in this very serious problem. If the Minister takes this action, I am sure he can count on the support of this Party. We need to be good stewards of the environment which has been entrusted to all of us.

Mr. Roberts: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Hon. Member if he does not realize that the kind of task force he is asking us to establish has already been established and is operating. I refer to the Niagara Chemicals Toxic Committee which brings scientific and pollution experts together. It is exactly what he has asked us to do. Does he not realize that his suggestion is not only worthy of consideration but that it has been implemented already by the Government?

Mr. Fretz: Mr. Speaker, I believe what we need is the involvement of Members of Parliament, not only a task force such as has been indicated by the Minister, but one that involves Members of the House who represent the people.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, I appreciated the comments of the Hon. Member who just spoke. I wonder if he has anything to say about why so few questions have been raised by his Party regarding the Niagara and Great Lakes issue. In this, the longest session of Parliament, the only questions on the Niagara and Great Lakes issue that I am aware of from his Party were those raised by the Hon. Member for St. Catharines.

When the Hon. Member says that his Party is willing to become involved in legislative action, task forces and so on, why has his Party not raised this issue in the House and what action is his Party prepared to take to bring the issue to the floor?

Mr. Fretz: I wonder where the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) was when I was speaking. A number of times I indicated occasions on which I have raised the issue in the House. In December, 1979 I received unanimous consent for a motion, and several times since I raised the issue of the environment and, more particularly, the Niagara River and the Great Lakes. Perhaps the Hon. Member should stay in the House if he would like to ask questions of those who are delivering a speech.

• (1230)

Mr. Gilbert Parent (Welland): Mr. Speaker, thank you for recognizing me. I congratulate the NDP for bringing this very timely topic up for discussion in the House. I also note that the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Roberts) is here and has been here throughout this debate. I am glad he is here to hear the comments which I will be making because they affect very specifically the Niagara Peninsula, where I live. My words will follow the comments of the Hon. Member for Erie (Mr. Fretz). We have adjacent ridings and the problems we are facing now are ongoing problems which we have had for a number of years.

I would also point out, with respect, that a provincial Member of Parliament, Vince Kerrio from Niagara Falls, spearheaded the formation of a discussion and action group in the Niagara Peninsula some six or seven years ago. The Minister nods his head because it was Mr. Kerrio and his very able research assistants who brought this particular problem of the Niagara Basin and the Niagara River to the attention, first of all, of the provincial Parliament and, of course, we have had discussions in the House on numerous occasions.

The Hon. Member for Erie states quite correctly that he and other Members from the Niagara Peninsula have brought this problem to the floor of the House by making statements, raising 43s and asking questions of the Minister, and much has been done; but there is much more that can and must be done if we are to rectify this particular problem.

In my remarks, I would like to deal, first of all, with toxic wastes generally and their disposal. Then I would like to address myself specifically to the problems we are facing in the Niagara Peninsula. Following that, I would be happy to receive questions or comments from my other colleagues and address myself to them. It was noted earlier that there were problems across Canada, but Ontario and Quebec, the most industrialized provinces, in my opinion, have done studies and uncovered worrisome problems in our own area.

We talk about the complacency of the public. I do not think there is any complacency among thinking people, but one antidote to complacency, if there is any, might be a brief consideration of polychlorinated biphenyls, the PCBs that we talk about. In concentrations of a mere one part per billion, they can kill certain living organisms. During the 50 years that they have been in use, there has been constant leakage of them into the environment as well as deliberate dumping.

Environment Canada has determined that there are over 17 million pounds of PCBs needing disposal in the Province of Ontario alone. Fortunately, almost all of these are securely stored, but in my opinion they ought to be destroyed.

Facts such as these are intimidating and even discouraging, yet they must be faced. At this moment there are over 50,000 chemicals on the market and almost 35,000 have been classified by the United States Environmental Protection Agency as being either definitely or potentially hazardous to human health. New concoctions are being developed at the rate of over 1,000 a year. These are some of the hard facts; it is not scaremongering to speak of them. If our society wants the benefits that chemicals can give us, then we must control and manage them and dispose of hazardous wastes in a responsible manner.

We must be sure that dangerous chemicals remain our servants, because once they get out of hand they become very cruel masters indeed. Toxic wastes, as mentioned by the Hon. Member for Erie and the Minister earlier, must be safely neutralized. Every barrel of waste casually sealed and stuck haphazardly into the ground becomes a ticking time bomb primed to go off at any time.

Fortunately, the news in this area is not all bad. It is gratifying to see the consensus that has developed among the public, Government and industry that the problem of hazardous wastes must be attacked on a broad front, and soon. I am pleased that there are encouraging things to report as well.

Perhaps the easiest way to handle hazardous wastes is to ensure that they are not allowed to cause trouble in the first place. We would be well on the way toward conquering the hazardous waste problem if a proper program of monitoring toxics could be devised and instituted, with strict, so-called cradle-to-grave tracking of chemicals whose dangerous properties would be known and registered before a product came on the market, and with control systems set up to ensure that wastes are delivered only to authorized facilities. I am going to deal with that a little later in my discussion.

It is to this end that Canada strongly supports the chemical management program of the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development, the OECD, and we are a member of that body.

It is important to co-ordinate our tactics on the national level as well, and this is exactly what the Department of the Environment is trying to do. The proposed regulation under the Transportation of Dangerous Goods Act will require the development of necessary systems and administrative arrangements between the federal and provincial transportation and environmental agencies for controlling the movement of international and interprovincial shipments of hazardous waste. We have all seen what can happen when these hazardous wastes are transferred from city to city, from Province to Province or nation to nation, and we have such a mishap as we had in Mississauga just a few years ago with the derailment of one of the trains.

Another initiative that Environment Canada has taken is the establishment of our Toxic Chemicals Management Centre. Scientists here will oversee the identification and assessment of problems caused by toxics and recommend solutions. The primary purpose of the Centre is to draw up priorities and thereby influence the allocation of those resources. I am talking about people, equipment and money which we use to deal with toxics. For example, priority lists of key chemicals or waste streams will be regularly published and updated. The idea is to anticipate needs and not just to react to those terrible emergencies which will be facing us. With the help of this Centre, the Department of the Environment, Canada's Health and Welfare Department and certain other federal Departments will co-operate in monitoring, testing, research and control activities in air, water and other programs.

Nonetheless, we still have a long way to go on the score of public confidence. While it is true that the public has often been burned, so to speak, and that chemophobia is rampant—the fear of chemicals—it is probably impossible that unanimous consent to build a treatment facility, no matter how safe, could ever be obtained anywhere.

Now I direct myself to what do we do with the wastes we now have on our hands? Much could be done to tell the public of the great advances in the development of safe waste technology which have already been made. We have a lot to learn from the Europeans in this regard. The waste treatment centre in Nyborg, Denmark, for example, processes waste, recovers oil and solvents, safely incinerates combustible materials and detoxifies inorganic wastes to the maximum extent possible. Its performance satisfies the most rigorous environmental and health standards, and the treatment centre is a welcome part of its community.

Within a one kilometre radius of that plant are a public beach, a park, a golf course and a residential neighbourhood. The plant is jointly owned by Government and industry and is integrated into a total system which includes the sites that produce the waste and a collection network. Such treatment centres could provide local employment and serve as magnets to attract industry, all in an environmentally safe manner. It is not at all utopian to speak of such facilities. They already exist and are already in service.

Some three weeks ago I had representatives of just such a company come to see me. Its head offices are located in the Niagara Peninsula, but it operates throughout Ontario and Canada. Its representatives explained what can be done with these hazardous wastes and how to dispose of them safely. I have set up a further interview with them and I am going to tour the plant in the very near future. I am happy this company is located in my area and I am happy it is giving us some of the answers that we so desperately need concerning the problem of waste management.

We have greatly increased our ability to recycle waste, and the capability to detoxify safely or incinerate hazardous waste is, for all practical purposes, right here and now, at hand. This is a matter of will. Society must shoulder the burden of responsibility for the life style it demands, a life style made possible by chemicals.

One expert in the field has remarked that we have technical solutions for waste problems, but what we do not have are the social solutions. Everyone is in favour of a safe landfill site, but not in his or her home town. There is even a term for this attitude; perhaps Hon. Members have heard of it. It is called the NIMBY syndrome, which is short for "Not in my back yard". The NIMBY attitude will and must be overcome.

Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, this attitude is all too understandable, especially given events of the type that have been going on in our own back yards, especially in the ridings of the Hon. Members for Erie, Niagara Falls (Mr. MacBain), Lincoln (Mr. Mackasey), as well as my own, that of Welland, which are here in Ontario and in the Niagara Basin. I am referring to cross-boundary pollution, since this is an area that is obviously a federal responsibility.

The chemical waste situation in the Niagara area, as was pointed out by the provincial member for Niagara Falls, Vince Kerrio, could well serve as a microcosm for the entire problem. One can recite the whole dreary litany that we have all come to know so well: disposal of toxic wastes in a manner that conformed to standard practice decades ago but has now proved to be grossly inadequate; lack of co-ordination between Government and industry planners; a public that feels it has been kept in the dark and is now embittered and rightly so; constant and paralyzing wrangling over who is or is not at fault and who is to pay for the clean-up. I think the people of our area and across Canada have had their fill of that; the script has been all too predictable.

The situation is further complicated by the fact that three levels of Government are involved on each side of the border. When we have to bring this many groups together, we can see that the problems multiply accordingly.

The real tragedy in all this, of course, is that while lawyers argue over responsibility, and while debates about who is to pay drag on and on, the hazardous chemicals that have leached into the water table are constantly continuing their insidious work.

[Translation]

In Welland, in my riding, which is not as close to the Niagara River where all this is going on, a number of people from the riding are working on this problem. In fact, in Welland, our drinking water comes from the same river, and in all sincerity, Mr. Speaker, plans are not enough. We must have action, based on what we know today, and we must do whatever is necessary to destroy the toxic wastes the river contains, which are causing illness in our area.

[English]

Take two examples. First, the Hyde Park landfill in Niagara Falls, New York. From 1953 to 1975, 80,000 tonnes of chemical wastes, including materials contaminated with dioxin, were deposited at this location. Dioxin has been detected in the sediments of the creek leading from the site to the Niagara River itself.

Second, the Niagara Falls sewage treatment plant in New York which was mentioned by the Minister. This is a plant that began operation in December, 1977. Almost from the start it had serious problems, and its carbon absorption beds were taken out of operation after only six months. Because of this, effluent, both human and industrial, is discharged into the Niagara River after what I and many people believe to be inadequate treatment.

Regrettably, and I must say this to the Minister and to all colleagues in the House, the steps being taken to rectify the situation at the plant are proceeding much too slowly. Even if a decision were made tomorrow about what steps are to be taken to correct the situation, we still would not be out of the woods because an adequate plant would not be fully operational for at least two years after the first day remedial work began. Meanwhile, waste of every description is pouring into our waters. In its efforts to stay on top of the situation, Canada has asked repeatedly for assurance that the various water quality agreements will not be violated, and it has also asked for co-operation in monitoring the river so that we will be able to tell exactly what hazardous wastes are contaminating our waters.

The Department of the Environment staff actually did their own sampling for the Niagara Falls sewage treatment plant. Environment Canada has had to invest an extraordinary amount of time and resources to maintain a watching brief on the progress of these issues. Studies carried out in May, 1981 give us great cause for concern. They confirm that pollutants are not being adequately treated before discharge into the Niagara River. In all, 41 organic compounds and heavy metals were indicated in the samples taken. These include 25 priority pollutants named by the Environmental Protection Agency in the United States.

Mr. Speaker and my colleagues, I do not mean to imply that we Canadians are guilt-free when it comes to polluting the Great Lakes with hazardous wastes. There are far too many sources of pollution on our side of the border as well. We must take the responsibility for what we have done to our Great Lakes and to our rivers. Nonetheless, it is a cold fact that, when all dischargers within the Niagara River's watershed are considered, the total United States point source discharge exceeds total Canadian discharge by more than two billion litres a day. Let me repeat that. The total U.S. point source discharge exceeds total Canadian discharge by more than two billion litres a day.

This is not acceptable. This cannot go on in this, one of the most highly populated areas of Canada. It cannot be allowed to go unchecked, and this applies to both sides of the border. I call upon the Minister, his cabinet colleagues as well as all my colleagues in the House to refrain from making this a partisan issue. This is a Canadian issue, one which all of us must address.

While we must be realistic in facing these facts, there is no need to give only the gloom and doom despair side of it. Environment Canada has established a firm foundation on which to base our efforts for effective waste management in the Niagara region. There are many precedents for fruitful international co-operation in the Great Lakes Basin. The recent consultations with the U.S. Government on the subject of dioxin provide but one example.

We have an effective monitoring and tracking program already in place and can analyze and track pollutants to their source with a great deal of precision. Laws are already on the books that can force polluters to clean up their act and manage hazardous waste in a responsible manner. Perhaps most important of all, the federal Government has demonstrated that it is willing, even anxious, to join with provincial and local Governments, and with the United States, in a co-ordinated effort to solve the crisis in waste management that so urgently confronts us.

I ask that all Members put aside bi-partisan ideas with regard to this pollution problem. I ask that we join together in asking, urging and demanding that our Minister and this Government act positively to solve this problem as soon as possible.

Mr. Jarvis: Mr. Speaker, I thought the contribution made by the Hon. Member for Welland (Mr. Parent) was excellent and I hasten to compliment him on it. One issue that he dealt with was the treatment of hazardous waste, mentioning that we have a lot to learn from the Europeans. I presume he is referring particularly to the Danish example at the Kommunekemi plant near Nyborg.

Does the Hon. Member share with me the regret that we have to learn a lot from the Europeans in terms of handling hazardous wastes? Does he know of any country that would be more identified as having the responsibility for dealing with nuclear wastes than Canada?

I fail to understand why we are so far behind other countries when we should be a world leader in high technology regarding nuclear wastes. People from Denmark and other countries involved in this area should be coming here to see the Canadian example, rather than our having to go to Denmark to study the Danish example.

Mr. Parent: Mr. Speaker, I was referring to all pollutants. I will address myself directly to the problem posed by the Hon. Member with regard to nuclear wastes. However, I was also thinking of the wastes that they are taking out of their sewage system and how their water system has been recycled for a number of years. I believe that we have a great deal to learn from them in this area.

With regard to our nuclear waste, the Hon. Member knows that the Minister of State for Mines has a program under way to determine ways to take care of our nuclear wastes. Since we are the creators of the CANDU reactors and market them, I agree with the Hon. Member that we should be taking a lead role in using that nuclear waste, hopefully for the betterment of the people. I believe we should be looking for ways to use these wastes to our advantage rather than simply disposing of them. I hope that we take this into consideration in the future.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, I would also like to compliment the Member on his comments. He gave a well deserved blast to the present Cabinet.

I would like him to comment on one of the points I raised in my speech, which is the fact that people in Ontario spend $50 million a year on cat food while nowhere near that amount is being spent in relation to the clean-up of the Great Lakes annually by the federal Government, either in studies or on sewage treatment funds. In the United States, where my real concern lies with respect to the Niagara problem, the EPA has put up $500,000 this year to take a look at all the dumping which occurs in the Niagara Escarpment.

As a result of the Hyde Park court decision and the present proposals concerning the evolution of the S-dump court process, does the Hon. Member not think that there is some further steps that Canada should and could be taking, either going to Congress or somehow motivating Americans who come to Canada, or by making a change to Canadian law? Does he think there is some way his Party can do more?

I agree that it should not be a partisan issue. All Members should be involved because it is a very serious issue. However, the money is not being put forward and the legislative protection is not being provided. In the United States, 68 per cent of the EPA's budget has been cut. They will not clean up the dumps at Niagara. The U.S. Government will not clean them up. Has the Hon. Member of his Party thought about how they will be cleaned up, particularly in light of the amount that is being spent by Cabinet? I think that is a reflection of the concern shown by Cabinet on this serious issue.

Mr. Parent: I will address myself to four points which were raised by the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton). First, he said that I was blasting the Minister. I was urging the Ministers. In urging them, I do not in any way try to downgrade what they have done. They have taken positive steps up to this point, but I am urging them to do more.

Second, unlike the Member for Skeena I am not an expert on cat food. I cannot debate whether people in Ontario spend $50 million on cat food and not as much to clean up the Great Lakes. I would hope that the provincial Government would address itself to that issue because the Province of Ontario borders on all of the Great Lakes. I am sure we are studying the problem federally.

With regard to the Hyde Park problem in the U.S. and our dealings with the Americans generally, I do not know if it was the Hon. Member who suggested that we tax Americans who come across the border in order to remind them that they are polluting our country. If he did, I dissociate myself from that view completely. I would venture to say that proportionately there are as many Canadians going to the United States as Americans coming here. It would simply create problems between the two countries that we do not need right now.

I would comment finally on the subject of working hand in glove with the United States. We are dealing with two democratic countries. We have always worked on the theory of advice and consent. I suggest it is to our great credit that we have been able to discuss our problems over the years and find solutions in an amicable way. I believe there is such a thing as moral arm-twisting. I would prefer that we be involved in this area of trying to convince our neighbours to the south that it is not only beneficial to us but to them to clean up one of the greatest treasures of the world, and I am talking specifically about the Great Lakes.

Perhaps the Hon. Member for Skeena is aware that at the turn of the century more fish were caught in the five Great Lakes than were taken out of the ocean. We had an entire fishing fleet within the continent, and, God willing, it will return some day.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, I have a brief comment to make. Like all my colleagues, I appreciate the concern which the Hon. Member for Welland (Mr. Parent) has expressed. He hearkens back to the days when we were able to take these great numbers of fish out of the Great Lakes. I suggest that the thrust of his speech is compromised by his unwillingness to admit the culpability of the political Party and the Government which he has been associated with for so many years. If we want to really consider this problem, let us address it seriously and honestly and admit that the Party of which he has been a Member has been in Government, with only one small interruption, since 1963.

Many people and interested groups have been trying to bring this problem to the attention of his Party and Government since that time. They have been called doom-cryers and nay-sayers and have been accused of trying to frighten the people unnecessarily. The fact is that those people who have made it their business to know of these matters have been telling the Liberal Party and Liberal Governments about this for the last 20 years.

Mr. Roberts: It was 1975.

Mr. Blaikie: People have been talking about environmental pollution and the toxic time bomb long before 1975. The fact that you think the problem only occurred in 1975 tells me something about how aware of the situation you are. I am addressing the Hon. Member who seems to be more concerned about it than you are.

Mr. Roberts: You do not know what you are talking about. Get the facts straight.

Mr. Blaikie: How does the Hon. Member explain why he does not give credit where credit is due, or in this case blame where blame is due?

Mr. Parent: Mr. Speaker, in this day and age people want to find a scapegoat and someone to blame. This involves taking the full responsibility, as the Government should, for whatever it has or has not done and, as the Hon. Member pointed out, taking the credit as well as the blame.

We do take credit for many of the things that were done with regard to trying to control this problem. To the extent that we were in power, we take as much blame as we should as the Government in power. I remind the Hon. Member that there was a time between 1972 and 1974 when the Hon. Member's Party actually had the run of the country, since there was a minority Government at that time. I ask the Hon. Member why this was not brought up at that time and why they did not force the issue.

I would accept whatever blame I must as a Member of Parliament, but I would also compliment the present Minister and the former Minister of the Environment for the work they have done so far. I encourage and urge them to continue that good work in attempting to rectify this problem once and for all.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The House will note that it is one o'clock. I have been advised that the Hon. Member for Beaches (Mr. Young) may wish to seek the consent of the House to table a paper. Perhaps this should be done now since it is consistent with the discussion.

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, I have spoken to Members on both side of the House as well as the Minister and asked their agreement to table a task force report on the issue before the House at the present time. I believe I have their agreement, so I would seek unanimous consent to table this report.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The House has heard the Hon. Member for Beaches (Mr. Young). Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Agreed and so ordered.

The Chair will call it one o'clock. I might note that the Hon. Member for Beaches will be seeking the floor immediately following Question Period. The Hon. Member will be deemed to have been recognized before one o'clock.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

RAILWAYS

GILSON REPORT—PROPOSED CHANGES TO CROWSNEST PASS RATES

Mr. Jean-Guy Dubois (Lotbinière): Madam Speaker, last week under the provisions of Standing Order 21, I mentioned a committee that was looking into the Crow rate and the Gilson Report. There is a great deal of discussion on this topic in Quebec at the present time, with many meetings—often for political reasons, although some people would disagree. In this connection, Madam Speaker, I would like to make it clear that the Federal Quebec liberal caucus is taking a very close look at the Gilson Report and especially the changes in the Crow rate. Since the middle of August, the Quebec caucus has been taking an active interest in this subject, and many farm organizations and individuals are sending invitations to Federal Liberal Members in Ottawa, with a few day's notice, to a meeting to discuss the Gilson Report. However, I would like to remind the House and also our Quebec farmers that Federal Liberal Members would rather stay here in Ottawa to make sure that the decisions that are made will be in the best interests of Quebec.

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

RECRUITMENT ADVERTISEMENTS

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Madam Speaker, I would like to call the attention of the House to a matter of utmost importance to many young people not only in my riding of Erie but, indeed, throughout the nation as well. We are all familiar with commercials on television sponsored by the Department of National Defence showing exciting action shots of the activities taking place in the Armed Forces today. Naturally, they have prompted many teenagers to go down to the recruiting offices with visions of adventurous careers in their mind. Imagine their surprise and disappointment when they are told that openings are few and they will have to join a long waiting list.

Such happenings bring two questions to mind. First, if there are few openings for new recruits, why spend thousands of dollars on expensive TV time only to entice hundreds of people who will be turned away? This is just another catastrophic waste of money by a debt-ridden Government. Does it not make sense, then, in a time of high unemployment, to allocate extra funding to the Department of National Defence, so that it can take on more young people, taking them off the unemployment rolls and starting them on the road to a new career?

Mrs. Appolloni: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fretz: Thank you for that support. Why waste a lot of time talking about job creation when we have a very legitimate way to create jobs by training more young men and women in the Armed Forces?

My colleague, the Hon. Member for Rosedale (Mr. Crombie), has raised this subject three times in the last few weeks, and each time did not receive a satisfactory answer. This is a simple proposal and it deserves—

Madam Speaker: Order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

CALL FOR REINSTATEMENT OF STANDING ORDER 43

Mr. Bill Yurko (Edmonton East): Madam Speaker, this House settles most matters or issues by division. Such is the nature or foundation of the parliamentary system of Government. However, one of the most fundamental processes also used for action is unanimous consent of all Members of the House on matters falling within our constitutional bounds. This action by unanimous consent is perhaps the most fundamental basis of our democratic system of Government.

Equally vital, and perhaps the second most fundamental right and privilege of the House and its Members, is the ability to put before the House a matter of urgent and/or pressing necessity for consideration and decision by the House. This fundamental privilege was enjoyed by Members of the House under Standing Order 43.

As a result of the new rules adopted by the House on an experimental basis for a one year trial period, Standing Order 43 has been superseded by Standing Order 21, permitting Members to make 90-second statements. These statements are not decision-oriented.

Madam Speaker, as a Member of this House I will do all I can to reinstate Standing Order 43 at the end of the one-year trial period and thus restore one of the most fundamental rights of Members of this House to put before it matters of urgent and/or pressing necessity.

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Lalonde: Good luck!

Mr. Deans: Under Standing Order 43 he could not have done that.

HUMAN RIGHTS

CALL FOR RELEASE OF ANATOLY SHCHARANSKY BY SOVIET AUTHORITIES

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, in 1978 Soviet authorities decided to silence human rights and Jewish activist, Anatoly Shcharansky, by sentencing him to 13 years of imprisonment on a trumped-up charge of espionage. Since that time he has become a world-wide symbol of resistance to Soviet efforts to stamp out fundamental human rights.

I am sure all Hon. Members of the House will join with me in calling on Secretary Andropov to release Mr. Shcharansky in the name of humanity, and allow him to join his wife in Israel.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Smith: On November 19 last this House unanimously expressed its concern for Mr. Shcharansky. Since October 22 the Government of Canada has, on four separate occasions, made representations to Soviet officials, in both Ottawa and Moscow, on behalf of Mr. Shcharansky. However, to date, his plight since commencing his hunger strike remains unknown, as prison officials have consistently refused to allow his mother and brother to visit him in prison.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) will be meeting with Mrs. Shcharansky today, and I am sure all Members of the House will indicate their interest in Anatoly Shcharansky's well-being and assure Mrs. Shcharansky that we stand solidly behind her in her crusade to free her husband.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

S.O. 21

EXCISE TAX

EXEMPTION URGED FOR CHARITABLE ORGANIZATIONS

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, the federal Government has refused the rescind its excise tax on publications distributed by the Canadian Cancer Society and other charities. As a result, between $50,000 and $100,000 a year in donations to the Canadian Cancer Society will go to the Government rather than to research and education, which is what the Society is all about in the first place.

I am concerned about the statement that the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Bussières) made whereby he made it appear as though the excise tax was confined to imported materials. In actual fact the Society informed the Minister on March 12, 1982, that an estimated 90 per cent of the problems of the Canadian Cancer Society relate to federal sales tax on Canadian produced materials rather than imports. Clearly, the Minister is misinformed and, as a result of that misinformation, the volunteers who are the backbone of the Society continue to have an added burden which could be lightened if the federal Government would move in this matter.

I ask the Government to respond to this request. Specifically, I ask it to pass an immediate remission order which would exempt Canadian charities, including the Canadian Cancer Society, from federal sales tax on Canadian produced materials, or to effect such a change in the budget to be brought down by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) this spring.

ANATOLY SHCHARANSKY—SUGGESTION PRIME MINISTER APPEAL TO SOVIET LEADER

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Madam Speaker, I would like to address the House on an important matter to which reference has already been made by the Hon. Member for Don Valley East (Mr. Smith), that is, in connection with Anatoly Shcharansky.

Mr. Shcharansky has been in prison for six years, a large part of it in solitary confinement and, worse, in the confinement of a punishment cell. He has endured the ravages of a hunger strike, the pain of forced feeding, and the deprivation of any human contact with his family, particularly with his aged and ill mother who, herself, has undergone many hardships in her vain attempts to see her son.

I would urge the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) to appeal on behalf of the Government, Parliament and the people of Canada, directly to the Leader of the Soviet Union, Mr. Andropov, that Mr. Shcharansky's case be reconsidered on humanitarian grounds and that the Soviet Union see fit to allow Shcharansky his freedom and permission to join his wife outside the Soviet Union.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

AGRICULTURE

HIGH CANADIAN INPUT COSTS

Mr. Robert Daudlin (Essex-Kent): Madam Speaker, Members of the House and the Government know that the North American market essentially establishes prices for farm commodity products and, more precisely, that Canadian products such as corn and soy beans find their prices set on the Chicago market. Input costs in Canada are essentially exactly the same as those of the American producers, and find themselves, in large instance, established by the prices of inputs such as sprays and fertilizers which have natural gas or petroleum as their base.

A few years ago the border was closed to Canadian farmers importing those products, in order to try to help create a Canadian industry. Without reflecting on whether or not that cause has been established, and whether that end has been met, we now find that U.S. prices for those input costs, particularly fertilizers and herbicide sprays, have been going down dramatically over the last year, whereas in Canada the same companies are producing the same products for Canadian farmers at the maintained high prices without seeing any fall. It is time that a message go from this House and this Government to those companies to indicate that Canadian producers must have equality, and that prices must fall or the border will be reopened.

AIR TRANSPORT

LICENSING OF NORTHERN COMMERCIAL OPERATORS

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Madam Speaker, yesterday when I was cut off I was in the middle of an important statement on the licensing of northern commercial air carriers. I can assure you, Madam Speaker, that my presentation was pre-timed to 90 seconds precisely, as required by Standing Order 21.

However, it took five seconds for the microphone to be turned on. I then had to wait another five seconds for a certain racket emanating from the unruly Members of the NDP to subside. Another five seconds were stolen from me by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) with certain needless, extraneous remarks. Therefore, it is sad to relate that I was unceremoniously gonged right in the middle of my presentation. Never mind, Madam Speaker, today you are privileged to hear the second thrilling instalment.

I was saying that because of the Air Transport Committee system, healthy competition is turned into backbiting complaints and niggling legal manoeuvres. I therefore suggest that the Air Transport Committee institute a streamlined licensing procedure for the smaller northern operators, exchanging excessive protection for the ability to initiate a new or improved service in a timely manner.

Madam Speaker: I just want to tell the Hon. Member that the timing is done very carefully. If he feels that he could not finish his presentation, it was probably because he gave it slower than when he timed it in his office. Things are done very carefully here.

Mr. Deans: See what you have done, you have cost us 15 seconds!

INCOME TAX

EFFECT OF PROPOSAL TO ELIMINATE SPOUSAL DEDUCTION

Mrs. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Madam Speaker, Canadians continue to protest recent irresponsible statements by the Minister responsible for the status of women. Her call for the elimination of tax exemptions for spouses would cause financial hardships for families, older couples, and single parents. Poor women would be deprived of benefits because they pay no income tax. It is not too late for the Minister to apologize publicly for her insulting putdown of women who contribute to society through their unpaid work in the home and the community.

The New Democratic Party believes there must be tax reforms to benefit low and middle-income families. Highest income earners must pay their fair share. This would provide funds for tax credits and increased family allowances. We ask that a major review of federal income programs and tax benefits for families be undertaken to determine the most equitable means of paying compensation to the principal parenting person. Benefits should be adjusted to family needs, whether or not the parent works in or out of the home. Women must have choices with access to jobs and to affordable child care.

UNFAVOURABLE WEATHER CONDITIONS—CONSEQUENCES FOR QUEBEC APPLE GROWERS

Mr. André Bachand (Missisquoi): Madam Speaker, Quebec apple growers have suffered tremendous losses in their orchards as a result of unfavourable weather conditions during the winter of 1980-1981. A study made in August, 1982 by Agriculture Canada showed that 31 per cent of our standard apple trees died, which means 291,000 trees. Although all apple producing areas in Quebec were affected, the number of apple growers who were severely affected was highest in the orchards north of Montreal and around Missisquoi.

On December 15, 1982, representatives of the Fédération des producteurs de pommes du Québec had a meeting in Ottawa with the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Agriculture and representatives of the various agricultural organizations concerned, and submitted a complete file on the losses suffered by the Canadian apple-growing industry as a result of unfavourable weather conditions during the winter of 1980-81.

Madam Speaker, our apple growers hope the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) will soon make a decision in their favour, providing urgently needed financial assistance and thus preventing a number of bankruptcies.

FINANCE

IMPACT OF TAXES ON ALBERTA CO-OPERATIVE

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, the Bow River Gas Co-op in Alberta, with some 600 members, covers approximately 2,300 square miles, has 180,000 acres under irrigation, and 60,000 acres of dryland farming. The burden placed on these farmers by the National Energy Program and federal taxes is an excellent illustration of why the farmers of Canada are so depressed, and of why more than 400 farmers went bankrupt last year.

Farming and the high cost of energy go hand in hand. This Co-op irrigates 180,000 acres by mechanical means with the use of natural gas; 27,000 tons of fertilizer produced by natural gas were used on 240,000 acres, and the tax on the natural gas used was $1,134,000,000. In addition, the Co-op paid the federal Government $270,000. The Canadian Western Natural Gas Company, which supplied part of the area with natural gas, paid the federal Government $513,000 in direct taxes. All of these federal taxes have to be added to the cost of production, plus the provincial and municipal taxes, with the result that there will be more and more farm bankruptcies and less production as farmers will not be able to fertilize their land. If the Liberal Government is sincere in wanting to keep food plentiful and our farms in operation, it better be realistic and remove this excessive tax on natural gas.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

TRUST COMPANIES

GOVERNMENT KNOWLEDGE OF POTENTIAL LOSSES

Hon. Bill Jarvis (Perth): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Finance. It relates to Crown Trust, Seaway Trust and Mortgage, and Greymac Trust and Mortgage. The Minister admitted outside the House last week, or possibly the week before, that he, his predecessor, or the Government was aware for over a year that problems existed with respect to the operations of these companies, including Seaway and Greymac Mortgage Company, two companies for which the federal Government and the Minister have a direct and exclusive responsibility.

Upon learning over a year ago of problems existing in the operations of these two companies, what action did the Minister or his predecessor take in order to minimize or mitigate the potential losses that could be suffered by Canadians who had dealings with either these two mortgage companies or their associated trust companies?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, I attempted, in response to a question similar to the one the Hon. Member has asked today, to point out the responsibility that I exercise as a designated person under the federal Loans Companies Act. Under that Act when the superintendent becomes alarmed about a particular company, there is a process whereby the superintendent reports to the Minister. If the Minister shares that concern, under Section 73(1)(2) of the Act he is required to give an opportunity to the principals of the companies involved, in this case Seaway Mortgage Company and Greymac Mortgage Company, of responding to the problems that are identified by the superintendent.

I have indicated that at the present time I am in the process of receving submissions from the principals of these companies. I must make a decision after they have completed their submissions. Only at that time will I really have had a full opportunity to assess whether in fact there are grounds for misgivings or difficulties in those companies. I repeat, at this time it is not possible under the law in a practical way to answer the hon. gentleman in specifics.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL DISCUSSIONS

Hon. Bill Jarvis (Perth): Madam Speaker, we have been trying unsuccessfully for over two weeks to find out what action was taken over a year ago when this was first brought to the attention of the Government. With respect to the trust companies for which the Minister has a responsibility in terms of the Canada Deposit Insurance Company, did he or his predecessor, as the Minister responsible for CDIC, initiate or participate in discussions with the Province of Ontario regarding the operations of the three trust companies upon learning a year ago that there may have been some problems or irregularities within those three trust companies or any of them?

• (1420)

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, the difficulty in attempting to respond to the question of the hon. gentleman is as a result of the fact, as I am sure he must know, that the trust companies which are under the control of the provincial Government now, which are subject to special legislation of the provincial Government, either have common directorships with the companies for which the federal Government is responsible or, indeed, have shared joint projects with the companies for which I have responsibility, and for which those hearings are now under way. It is again practically, legally and, I submit, morally impossible for me to keep these five companies distinct and separate. Therefore it is not possible to respond in specifics to the Hon. Member's question.

When the principals have had an opportunity of responding to difficulties identified by the superintendent, when I have exercised the responsibility which is given to me specifically under the legislation, then, and only then, would I be in a position to respond in detail.

Mr. Jarvis: What I am trying to find out is not the details of the exercise of responsibility. I am trying to find out if the responsibility was ever exercised.

ACTION TAKEN BY FEDERAL GOVERNMENT

Hon. Bill Jarvis (Perth): Madam Speaker, with respect to the legislation creating the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation, the Act, Section 11(g), gives them power, and I quote: " . . . to make or cause to be made such inspections of a member institution as may be". It not only gives them power to investigate, but Section 12 then says that the Corporation shall not only have the power to investigate but may have the power under Part II of the Inquiries Act in conducting the investigation.

If the Government knew, or the Minister or his predecessor, over a year ago of the problems or irregularities of Crown, Greymac, and Seaway, all member institutions to which this Act and the powers of investigation apply, why was nothing done? And if something was done, what, and when during this past year?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, indeed I have indicated that the Superintendent of Insurance of Canada, a member of the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation, has indicated publicly that a number of steps were taken with respect to those companies which fall under his direct jurisdiction. I will repeat for the third time that I cannot go into the specifics of those because it would not be fair to the people who are the owners of the companies.

It would not be fair in justice, or in anybody's sense of justice, to have public debate while in effect a hearing is under way. More than that, the Province of Ontario is conducting an intensive investigation of Crown Trust, Greymac Trust, and Seaway Trust, and the papers are full of all of these things. For me to add, or attempt to expand upon the information which is coming from the Province, would not be very useful at this time at all.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, the question put by my friend, the Hon. Member for Perth, was a very simple one; it was "when". That question has not been answered. It would seem not to add to any confusion to answer that question. The Minister has the information. He should answer it.

CANADA DEPOSIT INSURANCE CORPORATION—BORROWING POWERS

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): I have another set of questions I want to ask the Minister, Madam Speaker. Press reports today indicate a federal liability of approximately $100 million in deposit insurance for Crown Trust. Why then has the Canadian Deposit Insurance Corporation been permitted, by an Order in Council dated January 7, 1983, to borrow up to $500 million from the Consolidated Revenue Fund? What is this money to be used for? How many other trust companies does the Government expect to collapse, and if it does not, why was this borrowing for the first time taken to the full limit?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, I would have hoped that the action taken by this Government recently to indicate that it recommended and supported the increase of deposit insurance coverage from $20,000 to $60,000 would have alerted the Hon. Member to the fact that the Government, out of prudence, would have to ensure that the fund, which is responsible and is the basis for that kind of protection, had some kind of infusion or extra protection, if a case warranted. I would further draw the attention of the Hon. Member to the Bill which was tabled in this House to effect that. This Bill, which is public knowledge and has been public knowledge, which I hope will be supported by the Hon. Member and his Party, of course, has to take into account that additional potential risk involved.

It is simply a matter that if the people of Canada through their elected representatives, both Conservatives and Liberals, have urged the Government and the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation to increase its coverage of the risk in order to protect Canadian depositors, it only follows that that Fund has to be adjusted to meet those kinds of risks. I would hope we have support from the Hon. Member for that move.

CORPORATION'S DEBT

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): It is implicit in the hon. gentleman's answer that, first, there are no other trust companies which this Government expects to collapse, and that is the question which I asked. It is also implicit that the funds are just to deal with the amount of money with respect to the problems which are presently facing depositors.

Section 37 of the Act allows the Corporation a total outstanding debt to the Consolidated Revenue Fund of not more than $500 million. Could the Minister tell the House how much is outstanding at the moment, and does that amount include what will be borrowed to bail out Crown Trust?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member's question really reflects the difficulty of following rumours and newspaper reports about the problems which have given rise to all this publicity, namely, the legislation in the Ontario provincial House. This Government has not said that Crown Trust will be a claim on the fund. I hope that there will be no claims against the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation as a result of any of these matters. It is my hope also that the Province of Ontario will soon be able to resolve those difficulties. I believe that the sooner this matter is brought to a head and resolved, it will be to the benefit not only of those depositors but of other people who must have some misgivings as a result of the very question asked by the hon. gentleman.

I have no knowledge if there is a claim by Crown Trust or with respect to Crown Trust. I hope there is not, but, again, I can only repeat my last answer that if the insurance is to be increased to $60,000, then the Government, out of prudence, and the Corporation with actuarial advice, has to move to a higher limit.

REQUEST FOR SPECIAL AUDIT OF CORPORATION

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation Act allows the Auditor General to audit annually the accounts and financial transactions of the Corporation. In fact it says he "shall". Is it the intention of the Government to have a chat with the Auditor General, and the officers of the CDIC, to see whether or not, given the real dearth of information which we have experienced here in this House as a result of the problems of the trust companies which have been the subject of discussion for two weeks, a special audit could be made of that Corporation so that, with respect to the affairs of that Corporation, Hon. Members of this House can have a greater idea of what has happened than they have yet received from any Minister of the Crown in the federal Government?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, I think that the hon. gentleman would have the opportunity to explore that kind of question during debate and consideration of the Bill which is before the House, which is a Bill to increase the coverage from $20,000 to $60,000 for each depositor. The hon. gentleman can rest assured that all of the officers of the Crown associated with the Company, the Minister of Finance and officials, of course, had to review this very type of question in preparation for the submission of that Bill to the House, which asks for an increase of the deposit insurance limit, and also asks that the amount of call which the Corporation could make on the Government be increased. All of that information will be available to the Hon. Member.

Oral Questions

BROADCASTING

PAY TV—GOVERNMENT POSITION ON TELEVISING OF PORNOGRAPHY

Mr. Mark Rose (Mission-Port Moody): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Communications. For the last three weeks the Minister and the Chairman of the CRTC have played ping-pong with the very serious issue of sexual violence, stereotyping and degradation of women over Pay TV. All of us realize that broadcasting is a federal matter, but we have reached the ludicrous position where the federal Government and federal regulators and policy makers refuse to take responsibility for what is going on.

The CRTC Chairman's non-solution is that he will get together a group of the producers of porn and they will regulate themselves. To make matters worse, the Commission's draft regulations on Pay TV do not contain the protection which now exists for AM and FM Radio or broadcasting, dealing with indecent or profane material, and the protection of minority groups.

My question is simply this. Is it the Government's policy, through its inaction, to give tacit approval to a pornographic television industry in Canada? If not, then what does the Minister intend to do about it?

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, I really wonder where the Hon. Member has been for the last week and a half. On a number of occasions Members on this side of the House, and a Member of his own caucus, have raised the question time and time again. We, as a Government, indicated very real concern, and we also indicated a number of steps which could possibly be taken. Therefore I am really quite delighted that yesterday afternoon the CRTC issued a public statement calling for all Pay TV licensees to come in and meet with them to examine this whole question and establish guidelines.

Furthermore, the statement indicates quite clearly that they are reviewing proposed Pay Television network regulations, taking into account concerns expressed relating to sexual exploitation. They go on to say that they subscribe to the philosophy expressed in the recommendation made by the task force on sex role stereotyping to the CRTC, notably Section 3, which includes the statement that the Commission should also discourage the portrayal of gratuitous violence against women and expect Pay Television licensees to do the same.

If the Hon. Member reads the public notice issued yesterday by the Chairman of the CRTC, or the press release issued at that time, I think it is quite clear that the CRTC is very much concerned about some of the developments aired in this House by Members on both sides, and is indeed taking the action it ought to take under the Broadcasting Act.

Mr. Rose: Madam Speaker, I do not think it is so much a question of where this Hon. Member has been for a week. I was working, on a parliamentary tour with a parliamentary committee, and was unable to be here. I think the real question is where has the Minister been on this whole issue? That is the essential question.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REQUEST FOR INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION

Mr. Mark Rose (Mission-Port Moody): Madam Speaker, since protection against violence, and degradation of women, bigotry, and racism, exist in the AM and FM regulations, I would like to know why the Minister is willing to slough off this very serious matter on a regulatory body which, on the one hand, says it is going to do something about it, and on the other hand says it does not have the power to do very much about it. When does the Minister intend to introduce parallel broadcasting legislation in this House so that we will not have some bunch of bureaucrats telling us what we can watch or not watch, and so that the Parliament of Canada can express itself on this very serious matter?

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, I am indeed willing to take into consideration the fact that the Hon. Member was on tour and he missed the furor caused across the country by the decision of First Choice to go ahead with some of the programming he mentionned. I would like to point out to him that, after a good deal of consultation with Members of the House, including obviously Members on this side but also with Members of the Hon. Member's own caucus, the matter was indeed brought to the floor a number of times in the course of the past week.

I would also point out to the Hon. Member that the CRTC does indeed operate under the Broadcasting Act, particularly under Section 3 which indicates quite clearly that the first responsibility for programming content rests on the licence holders themselves. That means the Broadcasting Act expects licence holders to act in a responsible fashion. If they do not, then the CRTC has the power to call them in, as the CRTC has done.

Mr. Rose: When? Never!

Mr. Fox: I would also point out to the Hon. Member that the Act was passed with the unanimous consent of this House including Members of his own Party.

AGRICULTURE

CHANGE IN VALUATION DATE—LIBERAL ELECTION PROMISE

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. Is he awake?

An Hon. Member: Yes.

Mr. Benjamin: Old clean Gene, running for leadership of the Tories.

Mr. Nystrom: Well, if he wants to run for leader, perhaps he can give me a straight answer to this question.

In the 1980 election campaign the Liberal Party and the Minister of Agriculture made a promise to the farmers that they would change valuation day for capital gains on farmland from 1971 to 1974, and then index that to reflect inflation in the cost of farmland. I would like to ask the Minister the following question, and I hope he will be serious, cut the bull for once, and tell us why the Liberal Party has not fulfilled the promise it made in 1980, and whether or not it is his intention to keep that campaign promise before he is so rightfully defeated in the next election?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, we can expect a decision on that soon.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Blaikie: That is the shortest answer I have ever heard you give.

PORTS

TRANSPORTATION OF DANGEROUS CHEMICALS THROUGH PORT OF VANCOUVER

Mr. Chuck Cook (North Vancouver-Burnaby): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport who will know that a great deal of controversy and public concern have been created in the Vancouver area by conclusions contained in a Master's degree thesis concerning liquid petroleum gas tanker safety in the Port of Vancouver. He should also be aware that his officials in Vancouver have dismissed out of hand the method of inquiry and the findings of the report, even though the Harbour Master admits he has only glanced at the thesis.

Have the Minister's officials had time to undertake a more detailed study of the points raised in the thesis, and can the people of Vancouver expect a federal inquiry into the handling and transportation of all dangerous chemicals to and from the Port, as well as within its boundaries?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, let me first say that in the last two years in the Port of Vancouver about one million tonnes a year have been handled without an accident. I am talking about chemical goods, of course. Secondly, this MA thesis will probably be more read than any MA thesis in the history of the country. The Department will be examing some aspects of it. They are re-examining now, for example, the speed in the port and the tug assistance and matters of this kind brought out in the thesis to which my hon. friend is referring.

I would like to underline, and I will send him a letter on the subject, the number of regulations, and administrative and physical measures that exist in the Port of Vancouver concerning the transportation of dangerous goods. I repeat that we have not had an accident—cross my fingers—in the last two years in this type of transportation.

Mr. Cook: Madam Speaker, I must compliment the Minister of Transport. That is perhaps the most satisfactory answer he has ever given me to any question dealing with the Port of Vancouver in my history of almost four years in the House of Commons.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REQUEST THAT DEPARTMENTAL OFFICIALS PARTICIPATE IN CITY INQUIRY

Mr. Chuck Cook (North Vancouver-Burnaby): Madam Speaker, Mayor Harcourt will be making a recommendation to Vancouver City Council to set up a joint task force to look into LPG shipments in the port. In view of the fact that an accident in that port could involve damage to over 500,000 people, can the Minister give this House of Commons the assurance that his officials will participate in that Vancouver City Council inquiry?

• (1440)

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I am aware of a number of these inquiries which have taken place, but I am not aware of this particular one. If there is a purpose to be served in respect of safety by joining such groups, my hon. friend can be assured that the Department will do so.

CRIMINAL CODE

DEFINITION OF PORNOGRAPHY

Mr. W. Kenneth Robinson (Etobicoke-Lakeshore): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice. Recently the Minister told the House of Commons that he is studying whether the country's anti-pornography laws need to be strengthened. I should like to ask the Minister what changes, if any, he would propose to these laws, given that pornographic material is not only "obscene" but also encourages dangerous trends in a society already prone to violent crimes? Also, given the recent trends in such cities as Toronto, where there has been a tremendous increase in sexual assaults, would it not be prudent to tighten the definition of obscenity as requested in the report of the Justice Sub-Committee on Pornography, and also to provide an explicit definition of pornography?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Madam Speaker, as the Hon. Member said, we are indeed looking at the definition of pornography. As he also said, some years ago the report of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs—which I recall I chaired and the Hon. Member participated in—recommended that the concept of degradation of the human person be added to the Criminal Code. Naturally, that is one of the possible revisions to the Code that is under consideration.

At the same time I think I should say that we believe that the actual definition in the Criminal Code is much more serviceable than is often realized. It quite often happens that provincial attorneys general fail to take full advantage of it. There is no better example of this than the one that has come up many times in the House, having to do with videotapes in British Columbia. As a result of our insistence that the Criminal Code is adequate for that purpose as presently constituted, the Attorney General of British Columbia has finally taken action in a number of cases, and the issue is now before the courts.

HOUSING

CANADIAN HOME OWNERSHIP STIMULATION PROGRAM—APPLICATION IN WESTERN CANADA

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister responsible for Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation and deals with an extension of the Canadian Home Ownership Stimulation Program to December 31, 1983, for certain northern areas of Canada. It is my belief that the extension and the boundaries set by the Government discriminate against western Canada. For example, in Quebec the north-south limit is the 48th parallel, in Ontario it is the 46th parallel, and in Manitoba it is the 55th parallel. What the Minister and his Corporation are saying is that Flin Flon, Manitoba, at the 54th parallel, is in southern Canada, while Sudbury and other communities on the Canada-U.S. border are in northern Canada. Will the Minister tell the House why this Program discriminates against western Canadians living in the North?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I do not have a map in front of me, but the fact is that these changes, made at the request of some Members of this House on all sides, were the subject of considerable examination. I will ask for a re-examination of them and, if a case can be made, I will be very happy to change them. I certainly do not intend to discriminate against anyone.

INDUSTRY

LAYOFFS IN SOUTHEAST BRITISH COLUMBIA COAL PROJECTS

Mr. Sid Parker (Kootenay East-Revelstoke): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. He may know that B.C. Coal Resources in Sparwood, British Columbia, has announced a total shutdown for six weeks now, and for another month during the summer. That means that 1,500 workers will face temporary layoffs and 400 workers have been given an indefinite layoff.

At the same time as these layoffs are happening because of lack of markets, the federal Government is spending hundreds of millions of dollars opening up new coal projects in northeastern British Columbia. Could the Minister give the workers and the communities in southeastern British Columbia his assurance that he will protect their jobs by permitting the southeastern coal projects to supply the markets until such time as they approach their production capacities?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, the Government of Canada does not decide which country buys coal and from whom. I think it is important that the Hon. Member recognize that the Government of Canada substantially assisted British Columbia in developing the northeast coal mines.

The major customers for British Columbia coal are in the Pacific Rim countries, particularly Japan. Production in the steel industry all around the world is down, consequently the biggest customers have cut back on supplies. I wish we had control over the market. I wish we could make an order, but I am not aware that we control the Japanese steel industries or can tell them where to buy their coal.

EMPLOYMENT

REQUEST FOR EXTENSION OF WORK-SHARING PROGRAM

Hon. Bud Cullen (Sarnia-Lambton): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration but I shall direct it to his competent Parliamentary Secretary. The work-sharing program has had fantastic success in Canada. Having been successful, some of the corporations and unions involved asked that the time frame be extended. That request has been acceded to. Now, over the winter period, some firms are asking for a further extension that will carry them over the tough winter period. Will the Department look into the possibility of extending that particular program which is bringing terrific benefits to areas all across the country?

[Translation]

Mr. Rémi Bujold (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, the work sharing program has indeed been very successful in this country, especially if we consider the present state of the economy. The Department of Employment and Immigration is looking at all possible ways of keeping the maximum number of Canadians employed. The program is now being analyzed. With other members of Cabinet, the Minister of Employment and Immigration will be giving this matter careful study, and he will be making a decision very shortly.

INCOME TAX

PAYMENT OF REBATES—POSSIBILITY OF TAX CHANGES

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Revenue. The Minister will know that the income tax forms have gone out to millions of Canadians. A directive has also gone out from the departmental offices to the effect that no rebates will be paid until, perhaps, the middle of May, due to the changes that might be made in the Income Tax Act through Bill C-139. In view of the fact that the Government is just starting to debate that Bill and that there have been suggestions that it intends to make 100 changes, does the Minister have any intention of sending directives to taxpayers to assure them that they will not have to fill out the present income tax form and then, at some later date, have to change it?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, on a previous occasion, the House was informed of the fact that Revenue Canada district directors had advised all Hon. Members that T-1 forms had been mailed, and that most Canadian taxpayers had probably received them. Hon. Members were also invited to advise people who had any questions to complete their T-1 forms as soon as possible and return them to the Department. It was also pointed out, as the Hon. Member mentioned, that refunds could not be sent out until the Bill to amend certain provisions of the Income Tax Act was passed in the House. Departmental officials believe they will be able to proceed with analyzing tax returns reasonably soon, which means that taxpayers would be receiving their refunds within a reasonable length of time. Furthermore, since the standing committee has already finished its preliminary studies of the Bill, I am convinced that the House will be in a position to pass the legislation amending the Income Tax Act without causing any delay in sending out the cheques.

[English]

REQUEST FOR POSTPONEMENT OF FILING DATE

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Madam Speaker, ordinarily Canadian taxpayers would be starting to send in their income tax form immediately. There has been a delay of almost a month already. There is always a period of congestion when those forms are made out, and this puts an extra-heavy load on accountants who do the job for the taxpayer.

I wonder if the Minister and his Department are giving consideration to telling the Canadian people that they will have another month or two, or whatever is required—whatever is taken off the original period—until the Bill is passed. In that way they would know, when making out their income tax forms, on what basis they were doing it.

• (1450)

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, at this very moment we can assume that the vast majority of taxpayers have received their T-1 or T-2 forms and have already started to complete their tax returns. In fact, many Canadians, owing to the Government's generosity when it brought down its last budget, will be entitled to higher tax refunds than last year. In fact they are rushing to complete their T-1 forms. I do not think that circumstances warrant extending the deadline. The T-1 and T-2 forms are actually going to reach the Department very soon, and we shall then make every effort to expedite analysis of the returns and send out the cheques as soon as possible.

RAILWAYS

CROWSNEST PASS RATE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport who has been trying to get a consensus from farm organizations to change the statutory grain rates, and resting his whole case on getting a consensus because the Prime Minister said the Crow rates would not be changed without a consensus. I would like to ask the Minister, since whatever consensus he thought he had collapsed around his ears last week, and since farm organizations could not agree with either the Gilson, the Snavely or the Argue proposals, all of which are no good, does the Minister intend to proceed to announce a plan based on either of these proposals, or does he plan to announce something different? Further, how can he make any announcement when he has no consensus?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, if our hon. friend has a bit of time this afternoon he might look back at what the Prime Minister said on the subject. The Prime Minister, and I have checked chapter and verse of this bible, has said repeatedly that he would not contemplate a change to the Crow unless the people of the west wanted to change the Crow.

My hon. friend has just said that the different votes in the West were on whether it should be the Gilson-Snavely formula, or the Argue formula. He has not said that there has not been a vote on not changing the Crow, there has not been a vote in favour of maintaining the Crow, and that is of the essence.

To answer the last part of the Hon. Member's question on the subject, following the decision of Cabinet yesterday, I will be in a position to make an announcement on the Government's plan on Tuesday in Winnipeg.

Oral Questions

NATIONAL DEFENCE

LOSS OF JOBS AT CANADIAN FORCES BASE COMOX, B.C.

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence. It pertains to the loss of approximately 474 jobs from CFB Comox. As the Minister knows, the devastation in the forest industry has caused a great deal of economic dislocation, as well as the announcement recently that we are going to lose approximately an additional 474 paycheques from the valley. There was also a statement made yesterday that there may be a reduction in Search and Rescue.

Could the Minister indicate that he would be prepared to meet with representatives and officials from the Comox Valley, looking for some possible offsets on this matter, and could he also indicate whether his Parliamentary Secretary was correct in indicating that with the removal of 409 Squadron we may see a slight reduction in Search and Rescue efforts there?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, on the question of Comox I believe my Parliamentary Secretary answered the question very ably yesterday, and what he said was true. Yesterday we issued a communiqué on this fact because we did not want false rumours circulating, speculation on what was going to happen in Comox because of the phasing out of the Voodoo 101, which made it necessary for us to modify the configuration of our deployment for the air defence of Canada.

An Hon. Member: For strategic reasons.

Mr. Lamontagne: For strategic reasons, there is no doubt about it. Despite the fact that the consequence will be a reduction of 450 people in the strength of the base, I would like to stress that only 17 of those 450 are civilians; the rest are strictly military people. We already have had the commander of the base meet the people of the community there to explain to them what will happen, and to ensure that if we can be of any help to them in trying to supplement in some ways that they might feel would compensate, we are ready to discuss that. If those people want to come and see me here I will be very glad to receive them. By the same token, if I am out west at a certain point in time, I will be very glad to meet them then also.

As far as search and rescue is concerned, there is no diminution of the capabilities of Comox.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

POLLUTION OF NIAGARA RIVER—REQUEST THAT MINISTER VISIT DUMP SITE

Mr. Gilbert Parent (Welland): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment. It follows on questions posed earlier in the week with regard to the ongoing dialogue between this Minister and the Minister in the United States on the pollution problem in the Niagara region.

In view of the fact that the S-area dump is established in New York State adjacent to the Niagara region and in view of the fact that it is alleged that there is leaching into the Niagara River, would the Minister, give an undertaking to visit this site along with his senior officials and the Hon. Member for Niagara Falls, so that they may ascertain firsthand if there is a danger from this leaching further polluting the waters of the Niagara River?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of the Environment): Yes, Madam Speaker, In fact I had planned to make such a visit last Monday but the local concerned group, Operation Clean, since I had offered to take part in fund raising activities on its behalf, gave me some indication that it would like to delay the visit until it is actively organized. I would be very happy to give the Hon. Member that undertaking and to involve him and other Members of the House in such a visit. I already have projected it, and as soon as we can arrange a suitable date I will be back in touch with him.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER MEET GOVERNOR OF NEW YORK STATE

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Madam Speaker, this is supplementary, and directed to the Minister of the Environment. Based on the evidence already known about the problem within the Niagara River, and particularly arising from the chemical leaching from waste dumps in New York State, I think the last thing that this particular problem needs is another visit from the Minister. What this particular problem needs is some direct political action.

I would like to ask the Minister whether on his visit he would also contact the Governor of New York State, and ask him for a meeting where Canada's real concerns in this matter can be properly expressed in a political way rather than in a public relations way, as the Minister has just indicated he is willing to do?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of the Environment): Madam Speaker, I am really surprised. If there is anybody who has been leaping on bandwagons in the hopes of catching newspaper headlines in this issue, it is the New Democratic Party.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Roberts: Just this morning they were urging us to undertake stronger efforts, to develop visits and meetings on the part of myself and other Members, and now he says that those visits are no longer needed. I wish the NDP Members would talk to each other and get themselves straight on something other than their simple desire to garner newspaper headlines.

As I have already indicated, I will be happy to get in touch with anyone, including the Governor of New York.

An Hon. Member: Always too late, anyway.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER ARRANGE MEETING

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. This kind of question will not be resolved by the Minister engaging in political putdowns of Opposition Members who are attempting to find a resolution to the problem. It is time that the Minister started to become political with the people who can directly resolve this question. I ask the Minister again will he attempt to set up a meeting with the Governor of New York State, so that we can come to some rational and reasonable solution of this particularly serious problem? I ask him again, yes or no?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of the Environment): Madam Speaker, I would certainly welcome any rational or reasonable approach coming from the NDP, and I would hope that the Hon. Member would sit down rather quietly and discuss the matter with the Hon. Member for Skeena who, this morning, was lashing around accusing politicians not only on both sides of the House but on both sides of the border of corruption, and of being bought off. If that is not playing superficial, emotional, disruptive and irresponsible politics, I do not know what it is. I wish they would get together, be rational and reasonable and constructive, but I am not going to hold my breath.

TABLING OF REPORTS OF CLERK OF PETITIONS

Madam Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the Clerk of the House has laid upon the Table reports of the Clerk of Petitions stating that he has examined the petitions presented by Hon. MRS. CÔTÉ—OLD AGE SECURITY

Mrs. Eva Côté (Rimouski-Témiscouata): Madam Speaker, I have the honour of presenting a petition of behalf of my constituents. The purpose of the petition signed by 941 citizens from my riding is to request that the minimum age in order to be eligible for Old Age Security benefits be brought down to 60 years. The nature of this petition is to request that the House enact the appropriate legislation. The petitioners hope, Madam Speaker, that in your examination of their petition you will find the petition in order and give full weight to the urgency and strong commitment of their plea, so that the Government will accept it.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. NICKERSON—ALLOCATION OF TIME DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Would the Chair be kind enough to explain the rationale behind the allocation of questions in today's question period? I was of the understanding that the ratio between the Conservative Party and the New Democratic Party was normally three to one. Today, the ratio appears to have been made on the basis of the number of Members of each Party present in the House.

It is quite obvious, as a result of the Winnipeg convention, that there are not many members of the Progressive Conservative Party here. However, I wonder whether a precedent has been created this afternoon whereby questions are to be allocated on the basis of the number of Members of each Party in the House present at the time?

Madam Speaker: The only rationale that applies is the privilege of the Speaker to recognize Members the Speaker wishes to recognize. However, the Hon. Member must realize, considering the number of Members of each Party in the House today, that, some kind of shifting had to take place.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

NOTICE OF ALLOCATION OF TIME TO CONSIDER REPORT AND THIRD READING STAGES OF BILL C-131

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, I wish to inform the House that there have been consultations among the representatives of the Parties and that it has not been possible to reach an agreement pursuant to Standing Order 80 or 81 with regard to the allocation of time to the report stage and third reading stage of Bill C-131, an Act to amend the Old Age Security Act (No. 2), and that, therefore, at the next sitting of the House I shall propose a motion pursuant to Standing Order 82 to allocate one sitting day to each of the said stages of the said Bill.

[English]

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Minister has the right to do that if she wishes to, certainly. I am not quarrelling with that. I have some doubts as to whether she should or not, but that is her prerogative.

My recollection was that the Government's order of business had to do with the tax bill at the first of the week. That is a recollection of mine, which may be imperfect. Is it the intention of the Government to bring on the tax bill as has been announced, or will the order of business be changed so that we will be dealing with Bill C-131 on the Old Age Security payments?

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the tax bill will be dealt with at 11 o'clock on Monday. In the event the motion of which the Minister has given notice were to be moved, it would not be moved until we reached "Motions" on the Order Paper, which would be Monday afternoon.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, let me be clear and put the question another way to make it easier for my friend. Is it the intention of the Government to move the motion at three o'clock on Monday?

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, I do not want to make a commitment, but I believe that is the most likely probability.

RRAP—INFORMATION SHEET "HIGHLIGHTS"

Question No. 4,504—Mr. Stewart:

Did CMHC produce an information sheet entitled "Highlights" for home-owners in rural areas regarding the Residential Rehabilitation Assistance Program (RRAP) and, if so (a) how many of the sheets were printed (b) what was the total cost of (i) production (ii) printing (c) what were the reasons, if any, for using (i) a glossy format (ii) two-tone colour (d) what would be the total cost of printing and producing the sheet using a non-gloss, black and white format?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): I am informed by Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation as follows: Yes. (a) 15,000 copies were printed in the initial run; because of program changes, an additional 15,000 revised copies were printed.

(b) (i) and (ii) The total cost of production, including federal and provincial taxes amounted to $1,461.68. Printing costs including federal and provincial taxes amounted to $3,001.23 for the original printing and $2,064.35 for the second printing.

(c) (i) and (ii) The same consideration was given to the development and presentation of this consumer program promotional item as is given to others produced for CMHC programs. The two colours were used because green is the program identification colour and black is the most legible colour. This is the only promotional consumer item used exclusively for the Residential Rehabilitation Assistance Program in rural areas. Because it is referred to frequently, reused, hung on walls and kept on desk tops, the information sheet was laminated to protect it from wear and tear.

(d) The cost of producing this same sheet using a non-gloss, black and white format is estimated at approximately $1,243.68, including federal and provincial taxes, plus approximately $2,100 and $1,700 (including federal and provincial taxes), respectively, for the initial printing of 15,000 copies and the reprinting of 15,000 copies.

REVENUE FROM TAXES ON GASOLINE

Question No. 4,508—Mr. Mitges:

Since the introduction of the National Energy Program and the signing of the Energy Pricing Agreement with the producing Provinces, how much revenue has the Government received from taxes at both the well head and the pump?

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Following are the amounts collected between October, 1981 and September, 1982.

Excise tax on gasoline	$ 520,316,336.52
Marketable pipeline gas	1,068,146,927.64
Canadian ownership increase (gas)	258,362,273.15
Natural gas liquids	121,157,160.48
Canadian ownership increase (gas liquids)	22,623,491.69
Petroleum and gas tax collections	1,488,516,548.60
Resource royalties tax collection	113,879,471.88
Total	$ 3,593,002,209.96

CANADA LABOUR CODE—MINISTERIAL PERMITS

Question No. 4,519—Mr. Parker:

1. For the past 24 months, by month, how many ministerial permits were issued under Section 29.1(1) of Part III of the Canada Labour Code?

2. For the same period, by month, how many applications were made for ministerial permits under the Section?

3. For the same period, by month, what is the average number of days specified for the permits issued under Section 29.1(2) of Part III of the Canada Labour Code?

4. Is there an established policy by which decisions are made concerning the granting of overtime permits and, if so, what is this policy?

5. Has the Minister cancelled any overtime permits in the past 24 months under Section 29.1(4) of Part III of the Canada Labour Code and, if so, for what reason?

6. For the past 24 months, by month, how many joint applications have there been for overtime permits under Section 29.1(6) of Part III of the Canada Labour Code?

7. How many of the permits requested in Part 6 were granted?

8. For the past 24 months, by month, what is the total number of hours of work permitted under Section 29.1(1) and (2) of Part III of the Canada Labour Code?

9. What is the total number of hours of work permitted in cases where joint applications were made?

10. For the past 24 months, by month, how many permits were issued by the Minister of Labour under Section 33(1) of Part III of the Canada Labour Code?

11. What classes of employees have been identified under Section 33(1) of Part III of the Canada Labour Code as being eligible for permits allowing excess hours of work?

12. Is there a policy outlining what reasons will be accepted as "exceptional circumstances" in permitting excess hours of work under Sections 33(1) and (2) of Part III of the Canada Labour Code and, if so, what are the exceptional circumstances?

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Minister of Labour): 1, 2, 3, 6, 7 and 10. See the table below.

4, 8 and 9. Not applicable since permits granted under Section 29.1 provide for a modified work schedule and do not authorize the working of overtime hours.

5. No.

PAMPHLET "FAMILY LIFE: THE METRIC WAY"

Question No. 4,586—Mr. McCuish:

1. Did the Metric Commission publish a pamphlet entitled "Family Life: The Metric Way" and, if so (a) what was the total cost for the design, production and distribution (b) how many copies were printed and distributed to date (c) who was responsible for the design and production?

2. Was the contract awarded outside the Government and, if so, in what manner was it awarded?

Mr. David Berger (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): 1. Yes. (a) approximately $57,000; (b) approximately 3.8 million printed and distributed; (c) Ove Design Group (Ottawa and Montreal) was responsible for the design. Interweb Inc. of Boucherville, Quebec was responsible for the printing.

2. Yes. The contract was established on the basis of a competitive tender by DSS.

Question No. 4,598—Mr. Neil:

1. Was the brochure "Family Life: Metric Way" mailed out recently with Family Allowance cheques?

2. Did the Metric Commission share in the cost of the postage required for the mail-out and, if so, what was the Commission's share of the cost?

Mr. David Berger (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): 1. Yes. 2. No.

REFERENCE TO LIST OF PETITIONERS

Question No. 4,636—Mr. Domm:

1. Did the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs refer to a list of names of petitioners in the House of Commons on December 9, 1982 and, if so (a) was the list prepared by the Minister's office (b) what was the (i) cost incurred (ii) time involved in its preparation?

2. Did the Minister state that a number of the signatures were false and, if so (a) what number (b) which signatures?

Mr. David Berger (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): 1. No, the Minister made reference to a petition which was tabled in the House of Commons by the Hon. Member for Peterborough. (a) (i), (ii), (b) (i), (ii) Not applicable.

2. No. (a) and (b) Not applicable.

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURN

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, if question No. 4,337 could be made an order for return, this return would be tabled immediately.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker: The questions enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary have been answered. Is it the pleasure of the House to have Question No. 4,337 deemed made an order for return?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

CIVILIAN INTERNMENT CAMPS

Question No. 4,337 —Mr. Towers:

1. Were civilian internment camps established in Canada before, during, or after World War II and, if so (a) on what date was the Order in Council authorizing construction passed (b) on what date did construction begin (c) how many camps were erected and where were they located (d) on what date were the camps considered redundant and closed down?

2. How many Canadian citizens or persons with Canadian landed immigrant status were interned?

3. How many internees were of (a) Japanese (b) German (c) Italian (d) other ethnic origins?

4. Were any then Members of Federal or Provincial Parliaments or Municipal Councils incarcerated and, if so, in each case (a) for what reason (b) what was his/her name?

5. What criteria were used in determining who should be incarcerated?

6. Did any internees lose their lives from other than natural causes while in custody?

Return tabled.

[English]

Mr. Taylor: Madam Speaker, I notice that all of the questions answered today are in the four thousand category. I want to ask for the fourth or fifth time what is happening to question 2,328. It has been on the Order Paper for almost two years. Surely we can get an answer one of these days?

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, I will be happy to look into that matter on behalf of the Hon. Member.

Mr. Taylor: Madam Speaker, that is what the Parliamentary Secretary said for the fourth or fifth time; I wish that happiness would materialize.

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Madam Speaker: The questions enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 62—PROTECTION OF THE ENVIRONMENT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Fulton:

That this House condemns the Government for its failure to adequately protect the Canadian environment from toxic and hazardous waste and for its subservience to the vested interests of the chemical and industrial waste producers and, in particular, for its failure to expedite the clean-up of the Great Lakes.

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, prior to the lunch break I asked Members on both sides of the House, including the Minister, if there would be agreement to permit me to table a report that was put together by a group of Members from my caucus. This document is entitled "An Environmental Task Force: A Report on Toxic Chemical Pollution".

Mr. Tousignant: It is not a very good report.

Mr. Young: I want to thank Hon. Members for allowing me to table this document. I just wanted to say that before I start my remarks this afternoon. I would suggest, though, that the Liberal Member on the other side who probably has not yet had an opportunity to read the report do so, because he would probably be a much more informed Member if he does that.

We had a repeat performance by the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Roberts) at the end of Question Period of the kind of performance to which we have become accustomed on this issue in the last two or three-year period. Questions were put to the Minister primarily by Members on this side of the House, particularly myself and the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton), who is the mover of the Motion before the House today. The Minister's response has perhaps been expected in the past, but I would have thought from his statements earlier this week, wherein he seemed to indicate that his mind had been opened and he had suddenly become aware there was a problem in the Niagara Peninsula, that he would not have proceeded with the same kind of political put-downs, or attempted put-downs, that he had utilized in the past in an effort to dismiss the seriousness of this matter. It is not enough to address that particular problem with statements such as "If you ask questions on this you are nothing but an alarmist. You people in the NDP are scaring people. It is totally irresponsible to raise this question in the House."

The Minister has gone to the point where he advised us in response to a question from me that we were talking through our hats and did not know what we were talking about. We have become used to those kinds of statements from the Minister, disappointing though as they may be. I suppose we are expected to absorb that in the natural course of things. I expect the Minister to do that, although I am disappointed that he does so.

I object, as one Liberal mentioned earlier in the debate today, when people who are attempting to express their concerns in their communities and find answers about possible hazards to the health of people who live in those communities or, in this case, whether Lake Ontario is a safe source of drinking water, are put down by politicians and bureaucrats and dismissed as being NIMBYs. I am sure that is a new word to most Members in the House but it is one that is used quite extensively to dismiss people in those communities as being either reactionary or at least irresponsible in terms of their perceived obligation toward a Government initiative and their support of that initiative. A NIMBY, as some bureaucrats like to label a number of citizens, stands for the "Not in my back yard" syndrome. That is the kind of put-down that is made to dismiss the concerns which many of those persons have about the possible dangers of chemical dump sites or other Government programs to their immediate family and community.

In the course of the Minister's remarks earlier today, he attempted again to dispel the very real dangers that exist as a result of the chemical wastes which are leaching from the dump sites on the New York State side into the Niagara Gorge, the Niagara River and on into Lake Ontario. He continues today, as he has over the past several years, to say that there is no evidence that this is happening. I suggest to the Minister that, quite to the contrary, there is sufficient evidence which clearly shows that dioxin, the most dangerous chemical known to man, is leaching from those chemical dump sites into the Niagara River and on into the drinkig water supply of the residents around Lake Ontario. Even Members of his own Department, some of whom are very qualified individuals, have confirmed this fact.

I might note for Hon. Members that dioxin is so dangerous that an individual from the Minister's Department has estimated that a shovel full of that chemical dumped into Lake Ontario would kill the entire lake. Yet it is being allowed to leach into the lake uncontrolled as a result of the Minister's inaction in demanding a political intervention with politicians on the American side of the border.

During the course of our investigation into this matter, officials from the Environmental Protection Agency in the United States told us quite bluntly that the Reagan administration was not becoming overly concerned about this question and was prepared to sit back and listen unduly to the chemical industry in the United States because Canada is not applying enough political pressure on the U.S. Government to make it confront the problem. The Government has merely passed diplomatic notes to the United States up to this point as a political response to this problem. This does not include some of the testing which has been carried out in the Niagara Peninsula recently. The Government's only political response so far has been to lightly slap the U.S. administration on the wrist and ask it to take action. Frankly, the United States Government will not take action until the Canadian Government demands that it do so.

We asked some members of the New York State Assembly to outline for us what they thought the problems were. The Environmental Committee of the New York State Assembly met with us when we were in Niagara Falls. To our great surprise, they did not engage in any rhetoric as the Minister is prone to do. They were not interested in blaming Canada or the U.S. Government for the problem. Instead, they considered it an issue which must be approached in a non-partisan manner. They agreed that the pollution should be cleaned up and were not interested in making political points on the issue. In fact, they told us that their committee had invited our Minister of the Environment to appear before them so they could hear the Canadian concerns directly and raise them with their colleagues. We were told that the Minister of the Environment refused to speak to them. He said that this issue was not on his list of priorities. He was more concerned, to use their term, with the sexy issue of acid rain. One must wonder, particularly after listening to the answers to questions we have asked the Minister in the House, whether there is a perception on that side of the House that there are more political or Brownie points to be made on acid rain than on the question of toxic waste pollution of our lake system.

Mr. Orlikow: He is not doing anything about acid rain.

Supply

Mr. Young: As my colleague for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) reminds me, the Minister is not doing much about acid rain either, even after the establishment of a task force of Members of the House. They made an extensive investigation into the problems of acid rain and tabled an excellent and well-documented report in the House which spells out the problem very well. However, the Minister is still incapable of taking action. I am beginning to wonder if that Minister is a political eunuch in terms of his responsibility in his portfolio.

Mr. Orlikow: And he wants to be leader.

Mr. Young: And he wants to be the leader of his Party. Good luck to them.

I should remind the House that we conducted our investigation with very limited research support. We used our own staff members who admittedly only had layman's experience on the question. However, we discovered facts that the Minister did not seem to have. When we presented these facts to his environmental officials, they accepted those facts and indicated that on their superficial examination of them they believed that we gathered information in one week that was as accurate as theirs. I am not discrediting those officials for I believe they have done a tremendous job under the circumstances.

For example, we found that in Lake Ontario alone there are 400 known, identified chemicals that simply come from industrial waste pollution. One chemical on its own, in isolation, may or may not cause a problem, but the burning question out there involves the fact that no one knows because no one has studied it. No one knows what effect the combination of any of those 400 chemicals will have on one another. We all know that one chemical on its own may be a stable element, but we do not know what happens when different chemicals combine.

No one has ever done any study on that subject, and I think it should be done for a number of reasons. First, it is the Minister's responsibility to ensure that that drinking water is safe for the people who consume it; second, it is necessary in order to satisfy the concerns which have been expressed by people in Ontario and by politicians in the House on their behalf.

There is absolutely no question but that these problems are very real and they exist. I mentioned the Minister's officials earlier on and said that I did not want to criticize them because I think they do a good job under the circumstances. I want to tell Hon. Members that when Hooker Chemicals was before the U.S. court concerning the American Government's attempt to force it to clean up its act, our Government would not even intervene before the court. One of the Minister's top officials was forced to take his vacation time in order to give expert testimony in the U.S. court about what was happening to Lake Ontario. That is what a conscientious public employee whose boss would not even allow him to go in the name of the Department had to do. I think that is shameful on the part of the Minister and it is a damn disgrace on the part of the Government, especially when one considers some of the expert testimony which was given to us.

For example, Dr. Berkes, Professor of Urban and Environmental Studies at Brock University, told us this in St. Catharines:

> The Environmental Baseline Study of the Niagara River issued in 1980, concluded that water taken from Niagara-on-the-Lake, Niagara Falls and Fort Erie met "federal and provincial criteria for acceptable drinking water".
>
> The report does not add that drinking water quality in these waters was within guidelines only because there are no guidelines for a vast number of potentially hazardous chemical substances.
> Assurances that drinking water meet Government standards are misleading and irresponsible.

Again, in terms of the attempted put-down concerning people who are asking questions about this serious matter and are referred to as being "NIMBY" or persons afflicted with the NIMBY syndrome, Professor Farka, Professor of Man-Environmental Studies at the University of Waterloo, stated the following in a brief he presented to our task force:

> In fact, the situation is quite different. The factual situation is that the major industrial liquid waste proposals made in Ontario to-date have been inadequate and incomplete on technical grounds. Thus it is no wonder that they have been rejected on a combination of technical, social, political, and environmental grounds. Those who use the NIMBY Syndrome for the failure of these proposals are in fact using NIMBY as a scapegoat to cover the inadequacies of these proposals.

During the course of one week we talked to residents who have been voicing their concern over the last several years about what is happening in the Niagara River. We attended public meetings and went to these people's homes, speaking to them individually. I want to ensure the House that those individuals to whom we spoke were expressing a common concern. Some of them were rather fearful that they would have to raise their children in that particular community because of the unanswered questions concerning the safety of the drinking water supply, and that fear was not alarmist, it was very real. I am sure that if the Hon. Member for Niagara Falls (Mr. MacBain) rises to speak in the debate, he can confirm that these are extremely rational, sane people. The arguments they presented to us were, for the most part, not emotional; they were very reasoned and well thought out. They had done their own research and had listened to people from the scientific community. This experience extremely impressed myself and my colleagues on that particular committee.

I will repeat what I said during Question Period, and I meant it sincerely. The Minister responsible for this particular Department should do no less than accept his full responsibility to the Canadian people and to this House. He should insist upon a meeting between himself and the Governor of New York State, and should sit down and rationally discuss this question and come to some form of an agreement to clean this situation up for the safety of all Canadians.

Mr. Ethier: Mr. Speaker, I would like to draw your attention to a correction which should be made. Perhaps the Hon. Member for Beaches (Mr. Young) would like to correct his statement. He said the Minister said that there was no dioxin leaching into the river. I think it was the Department which discovered that dioxin was leaching into the river and made it public. I think that accusation was wrong and the Hon. Member should correct it. He should not leave the impression that the Minister said that. In fact, what he did say was that Environment Canada was the Department which discovered that dioxin was leaching into the river and made it public. Therefore, I would invite the Hon. Member to correct his statement.

Mr. Young: Mr. Speaker, perhaps the Hon. Member asking the question may wish to correct his particular question, because it was not the Canadian Department of the Environment which discovered dioxin in Lake Ontario. It was the Environmental Protection Agency, in 1976, I believe.

Mr. Fulton: It was in 1973.

Mr. Young: The Hon. Member for Skeena advises me that it was 1973. I am quite willing to check Hansard, but the Minister gave me a response to a question concerning the presence of dioxin in Lake Ontario and some fish species, and he minimized the source of dioxin. I am going by recollection here. I could be proven wrong and will stand corrected if I am, but I believe he said that one could get as much dioxin from cigarette smoke or car exhaust, or some such thing.

[Translation]

Hon. Bill Jarvis (Perth): Mr. Speaker, first of all, I want to say that in my opinion, the Minister should be present in the House for this debate. I know he was in the House this morning, but he left right after question period. Of course, I am pleased to see the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Ethier), but since we seldom have an opportunity to discuss environmental matters in the House, I think the Minister should be here.

[English]

I am delighted that the matter was brought before the House. I compliment the Hon. Member for so doing. I have serious reservations about some of the things that he said, and I am not sure that I appreciate the style in which he made his presentation.

Mr. Young: Me?

Mr. Jarvis: No, I am referring to the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton).

Mr. Young: Good.

Mr. Jarvis: I claim some understanding of the frustrations, having been the spokesman for our Party on matters of environment for two or three years. It is a very frustrating experience because one is so seldom able to get the matter on the floor of the House. One sees the Government moving very slowly or not at all. One is exposed to all kinds of citizen pressure, both from individuals and groups. I understand all of those frustrations and I compliment him for bringing the matter before us.

At this stage in the debate, I doubt that the issue needs any definition, but that will not deter me. I think other Hon. Members will have shared with me the experience of the Time magazine cover story of September, 1980, about two and a half years ago. It was a very compelling story. If it helps to define that which they say may not need defining, I wish to quote from it. It is entitled "The Poisoning of America". I will quote briefly from the opening paragraph as follows:

> Of all of man's interventions in the natural order, none is accelerating quite so alarmingly as the creation of chemical compounds. Through their genius, modern alchemists brew as many as 1,000 new concoctions each year in the U.S. alone. At last count, nearly 50,000 chemicals were on the market. Many have been an undeniable boon to mankind, mitigating pain and disease, prolonging life for millions and expanding the economy in myriad ways by stimulating the creation of new products. There is, however, a price to pay for an industrial society that has come to rely so heavily on chemicals: almost 35,000 of those used in the U.S. are classified by the federal Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) as being either definitely or potentially hazardous to human health.

Therefore we, as part of the North American continent, have these very obvious and dramatic problems. First, in some cases there is our inability to even identify the chemical and its toxic nature. Second, we are unable to control the introduction of these chemicals into the environment. Third, we are unable to determine how long the toxicity lasts or how pervasive these chemicals are in terms of their toxicity. Part of the problem is this enormous uncertainty.

One thing is certain. We in North America have on our hands an extraordinarily complex problem, one which will cost enormous sums, not only to clean up now but to control in the future. The dramatic example, of course, has been in the Niagara Peninsula. Much of the debate today has centred on that. The Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) used much of his allotted time to deal with that issue. As I understood it, his proposition was that the present administration in the United States has caved in to business interests. He may be right. I have nothing to substantiate that. He obviously feels very strongly, and he may be correct. It may even go beyond that. It has been the unhappy and maybe the necessary experience of many of us that in times of economic stress, Government expenditure in certain areas, one of which is the environment, is often the first casualty.

Therefore, I am not prepared to admit to the argument advanced by the Hon. Member that the total fault lies with big business. Part of the problem may be simply the economic recession we are now in. Whatever the cause of the failure of the United States to fulfil what I believe to be its obligations under the Canada-U.S. Great Lakes Water Quality Agreement, we do have this problem.

In my view, the Canada-U.S. Great Lakes Water Quality Agreement has been breached. I put this to the Minister following his intervention in the debate. The agreement called, first, for a projected rate of clean-up and, second, for the commitment of funds to accomplish the clean-up at that projected rate. I do not believe that either of those conditions have been met, either the rate of clean-up or the funds to accomplish this.

The Minister said that the situation is improving. When I had an opportunity to question him, I put to him that I very much doubt that that is the yardstick by which we should judge our performance. In my view, the yardstick is whether that water quality agreement has been fulfilled in terms of its time performance and its funding to accomplish the time performance.

Were I as a Minister to judge the performance, I would do it on the basis of that agreement and not on the fact that on a certain date certain chemicals had less presence in the Great Lakes than last year, the year before or ten years ago. There is a very clear document by which we can judge our performance and that of our southern neighbours.

Incidentally, in other areas the situation is not improving. As I say, we focused on the Great Lakes. There are other areas. I think of acid rain. I have been the very fortunate owner of a log cabin on a Northern Ontario lake which is springfed. When I go to that cabin now, I am presented with a booklet which says how much fish out of this lake I can eat. I am not threatened. I never catch fish that big, which is an admission of my frailties as a fisherman.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Or the judgment of the fish.

Mr. Jarvis: Or the judgment of the fish, as my hon. friend points out. To receive a booklet which states how many pickerel I can eat in a certain period of a certain size and to come to the dock and see a great, big, black, red and white sign erected by either the Department of the Environment or the Department of Fisheries and Oceans, portrays dramatically and graphically how much fish I or a visiting American tourist can eat.

That has some rather serious economic consequences. If I were an American tourist visiting Northern Ontario for the first time with my wife and young children to see nature because in my country it had been devastated, I am not sure that I would be content and peaceful having my family spend their holiday period at a lake which is posted like that.

That lake is 100 miles away from Sudbury. Whether that is the cause, I do not know. I am not saying it is the big business interests in Sudbury that are causing me concern about a lake that I have loved and cherished for almost 30 years. I do not know. However, when the Minister, all of a sudden, says that things are improving, I say to him that they are sure not improving in some places. They sure are not improving in many lakes in Northern Ontario.

I understand the focus on the Niagara Peninsula. My family were fruit farmers in Grimsby. The Niagara Peninsula is my heritage. I know it and love it. I can understand the focus that has to be on it, but may I say it goes beyond that.

With respect to our relationship with the United States Government, State governments and agencies, the Minister has had the luxury of an economic recession. Were we not in the stress economically in which we find ourselves, I do not believe that any Minister or Government would get away with what has happened in the last two years in the Niagara Peninsula. People are so preoccupied with other issues, so very concerned about economic issues that the by-product has been little or no public attention focused on the environmental issues, specifically those in the Niagara Peninsula. The Hon. Member for Skeena quoted some headlines. I will do the same as follows:

Chemicals pour into river;

Curbs fail; river called a "sewer";

Niagara River health threat serious;

Pollution de la Niagara: "un désastre national";

TNT found in pipelines at hazardous waste site;

Deadly chemical is found in Lake Ontario gull eggs;

U.S., Canada ponder warning public off fish caught in Lake Ontario;

Leakage turns water into "toxic brew".

Every provincial or federal Minister of the Environment is always concerned with alarmist headlines in newspapers. I guess you can be concerned, but there is nothing you can do about it. You will get that kind of headline.

If we were not in the situation we are in today where people are so concerned about other matters, no Government and no Minister of the Environment, federal or provincial, could stand up in the face of that kind of headline. He would have the citizens of this country screaming at him. The Government has not been forceful in pursuing its economic aims, if indeed those aims have been well defined. There are all kinds of examples.

I remember very well, and I am glad he is here, the Hon. Member for Niagara Falls (Mr. MacBain) sitting opposite receiving a telegram from the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in 1980. I will not get into that at any length, but it was the subject matter of some headlines. I very much question whether what I interpreted to be a strong commitment contained in that telegram during an election campaign was fulfilled. The endless delay in appointing the representative to the IJC is another example of what I firmly believe is the Government's lack of diligence in pursuing the best interests of our fellow Canadians.

• (1540)

The Hon. Member for Skeena made, what I guess could best be called, a very strident presentation, and I hope that the stridency with which he advanced his arguments will not deter the Minister from taking from those arguments at least one very good idea. The Hon. Member for Skeena, as I understood him, said that the backbenchers, both in the Opposition and the Government, had a potential role to play. I am not sure that I want to be among 100 Members of Parliament marching on Washington. I am not sure that is a tactic which would be the most effective, but the idea of the Opposition Members and the Government backbenchers participating in a meaningful dialogue with our United States counterparts is excellent. I will support it. Just do not ask me to march with a placard with 99 others up Pennsylvania Avenue. That is not a style with which I would be very comfortable. But the basic idea is good.

There is, for good reason and not so good reason, a natural tendency for Ministers to reject the intervention of both their own backbenchers and Opposition Members in pursuing Government policy. I do not know why that is. I can speak, of course, from the vast experience of some seven months as a Minister, but I suppose the pressures of Cabinet meetings, speeches and committees, added to the burden of having to deal with the Hon. Member for Skeena's 100 MPs going to Washington, is just too much for any Minister, but I would hope that this Minister, if he is serious about conveying our message to the U.S., would take up the idea. I do not believe the Hon. Member for Skeena claims any patent rights to it because I believe the Hon. Member for Welland (Mr. Parent), and my colleague, the Hon. Member for Erie (Mr. Fretz), mentioned the participation of MPs. I think that could be a very worth-while exercise. I do not believe we have to leave it to the Canada-U.S. Parliamentary Association, or even necessarily that Standing Committee of the House which is dealing with it, but I would urge the Parliamentary Secretary, through the Minister, to think about that idea because it has been supported by all Members of the House.

I would like to deal now with a broader issue because it has been raised as well, that is, the hazardous waste problem. That matter was raised very well, I believe, by the Hon. Member for Welland. He was, I believe, quoting from a publication from Environment Canada in 1981 entitled, "The Hazardous Waste Problem. Let's find some common ground". The publication covers such matters as, what are hazardous wastes; where do they come from; why they are such a big problem; the environmental and health considerations; the large volume of them; the limited number of treatment and disposal facilities; the fact that there is no magical solution; the technology. It even goes on to deal with the Danish example, and the Hon. Member dealt with that at some length in his remarks. As I read this whole document, I think the bottom line is that our main problem, despite some problems in technology, is the political problem. I will just quote from page 7 of that Departmental publication which reads:

—the technology for treatment of hazardous wastes is immediately available. The difficult issue is to decide where the treatment facilities should be located and where the end products of the treatment process are to be deposited, presumably in chemical landfill sites.

The solution to the problems of location will involve some public debate and compromise.

We talk about the the NIMBY syndrome, "not in my back yard". Nobody wants a hazardous waste deposit site in his back yard. Were it to come into Perth County, I would be the first on my feet on a point of order, in Question Period, during proceedings under Standing Order 21, the "Late Show", and everything else. We would all react the same. And if we think that we are going to package this waste and take it up to the Arctic; we are not. First of all, it is not practical. And my hon. colleague, the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) does not want it up there any more than I want it in Perth County. We all feel that way.

The Department in this document has identified this problem, and it is politicial. I do not know how practical this idea is, I have not thought it all the way through, but we should look at the example in the Danish community of Nyborg. The Kommunekemi facilities, at Nyborg, this international model, this demonstration for the world in terms of technology, is located in close proximity to a number of facilities, including a residential area. I think there is a recreational facility close by, and so on. In any event, I suppose it is not much different a community than many communities in my riding or any other Member's riding which is in a rural or semi-urban area.

Because nobody wants this waste, why not take the lead as a federal Government and say to any number of communities, "We propose to put a hazardous waste disposal site somewhere. It will be a model for high technology. It will bring substantial capital investment, and high skilled people, well paid, into your community. It will become, hopefully, a model for other Canadian communities and for other countries in the world"? In other words, instead of saying, "We are going to dump some hazardous waste on you", let us say to any number of communities which are interested, "We are seeking a site for a model high technology waste disposal site, and the communities which are interested, whether in the Niagara Peninsula, Southwestern Ontario, or Sarnia, or wherever, can send representatives to Denmark to see what it means to the economy of that country in terms of payroll and jobs and the visitors that it attracts." Even the Government of Canada in its own publication is touting Nyborg, Denmark. What is wrong with that idea, Mr. Speaker? I have no idea if any communities would react, but it seems to me that if we are faced with the seriousness which the Department says we are faced with, this NIMBY syndrome, something has to happen; either that, or we are going to dump it on somebody. I do not want it in my riding and I do not want to see it forced on any of my colleagues. But what is wrong with trying my suggestion? We are all interested in high tech. We want to get on the high technology bandwagon. That is the sign of the future.

I do not know whether I have been constructive. I would like to make two points in summation. First, I think the Minister should pick up on the participation of backbenchers and Opposition Members in terms of our relationship with the U.S. on this problem. Second, I hope we can take some positive steps with respect to the hazardous waste disposal problem by encouraging communities to investigate the viability and the advantages of being a model for such an installation in Canada.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member who just spoke. I would like to put to him what I think is a difficult question for all of us, but particularly for the Hon. Member and his colleagues in light of the difficulties which have already been well expressed, with respect to cleaning up what hazardous waste we have and creating a society in which we have the facilities to dispose of the hazardous waste which will be created in the future so that, hopefully, we will have a society in which we will create less hazardous waste which has to be dealt with.

We are in a recession, but even if we were not in a recession, there would be the difficult problem of how to reconcile a vision of the economy, which I believe the Hon. Member and his Party are known to have, which relies on the profitability of certain enterprises as the reason for their existence, and at the same time have a society in which shortcuts are not taken and in which all the technology which can be developed will be developed and will be used to protect society from hazardous waste. How can you expect to get that kind of responsibility when at the same time you regard the profit motive as the engine of the economy? I say in all seriousness that there is a very difficult question there for anyone who wants to come to terms with this, but particularly for those who hold high the profit motive as the reason for people being in business, in manufacturing or engaged in these activities which create that waste in the first place and who so often in the past have not felt any responsibility for it.

Mr. Jarvis: I suppose I can answer that in two ways. That of which I stand accused by the Hon. Member is quite true. The accusation is quite accurate and I plead guilty to it, if I have to. I believe, though, were I to show the private sector the potential profitability of being in the waste disposal business, then I think I would have a very positive response from the private sector. I am not sure whether the Hon. Member is asking me about the polluters or those dealing with the result, but I have answered the second part. If he is talking about the polluters, I have to go a long way back to when I was environment critic, and I do not claim an immediate expertise but I found, in several instances, part of the problem was that the private sector that stood accused of polluting did not know what the rules were because they were changing so dramatically. Time Magazine points out very well how fast things were moving. A polluter did not even know he was polluting until all of a sudden, someone said there is a toxicity factor in the particular chemical which he had been disposing of in a barrel on an ordinary municipal site. That has happened many times.

The second thing that happened was the multitude of various Government levels, often with different regulations, with which the business person was dealing. I found that if an industry, for example, was made aware of the problem, it was conclusive that this damage was being done, and given a reasonable time in which to correct it, and even given tax incentives—as the Hon. Member knows, we have given I think rather liberal tax incentives for some pollution control equipment—that industry has normally responded reasonably well. I hesitate to accuse the Member of dealing too dramatically in absolutes, but I am afraid I am going to have to. It is much easier, in dealing with the environment, to say it is either black or white. I know that, I have been there and dealt with groups for whom I have had a profound respect. But I do not think it is that simple.

I am sure I have not satisfied the Hon. Member. Likely that is because of my lack of experience and knowledge in the area. But in recalling those days in 1976 to 1978 when I was dealing with this, I was beginning to feel a little bit better about the private sector's response to this issue.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, I am interested in the notion the Hon. Member has of interesting the private sector in regarding waste disposal as profitable. I am wondering who will pay. Who will make it profitable for the private sector to become involved in that kind of enterprise? My worry is that the only way it can become profitable for the private sector is for someone to pay them to do that. The only people I can imagine doing that are the public. What I find wrong with that, or regrettable at the very least, because I want to see things cleaned up and at some point I may not care how it gets cleaned up, is the public will then be paying the cost of what all along should have been borne by the private sector. This is especially so in those cases, and I think you would have to admit that there are many cases of people knowing about the pollution but stalling and hiring lawyers to keep the thing going.

So I agree with the Hon. Member that there have been companies caught legitimately unawares, but there are also plenty of them who just kept things going in order to sell, as Reid sold to Great Lakes Paper after they polluted the English Wabagoon River system. So who is going to pay for it? If it is the public, is it not regrettable that after all this time the public has to pick up those costs? It is only the public that can pick up those costs because, although they are privately caused, they have to be publicly addressed.

Mr. Jarvis: I am afraid I have to disagree that the public inevitably is going to pay. I am not the greatest forecaster in the world; I am the one who said that Nixon was innocent as they dragged him kicking and screaming from the White House. That shows you what kind of a forecaster I am. I just could not believe that anyone could be that stupid.

Mr. Blaikie: I thought you were being a bit naive.

Mr. Jarvis: Maybe it is my exposure to the Party to my left which has created that naivete, I do not know. No, I would envisage a future wherein by Government law or regulation, a Hooker chemical or any chemical producer, would have to dispose of their waste in a certain way. Therefore, in my philosophy, a market is created by Government regulation for the private sector because the chemical producer must then deal with someone in the private sector whose business it is to dispose of waste.

Now perhaps the Hon. Member can make the connection that the public is paying for that, but in my view that is one of the best forms of the functions of the private sector. The market is created by Government regulation. We do it every day; we make a fortune for accountants and lawyers in this House, and I do not know why we do not give the people who want to deal in waste disposal a bite at the apple. They are part of the private sector.

Mr. Al MacBain (Niagara Falls): Mr. Speaker, Hon. Members will be familiar with the proximity of the problem to my riding of Niagara Falls and will sympathize because of that fact. I was pleased to listen to the debate this afternoon and find a remarkable absence of hot rhetoric and cheap partisan remarks, and I appreciate that. I can say to Members opposite from both Parties that the people from my riding and others in the area appreciate the serious concerns expressed here this afternoon. To those people in Niagara Falls and the millions who border on the Niagara River and the Great Lakes Basin, the matter is extremely serious. It is more serious than perhaps anything else affecting the residents of that area.

With respect to one matter raised by the Hon. Member for Perth (Mr. Jarvis), I would like to mention, as you are probably aware, Mr. Speaker—and I know the Hon. Member for Beaches (Mr. Young) and others are aware of it—that there is a complete breakdown of the pollution control plant in Niagara Falls, New York, and chemicals and municipal waste are going untreated into the Niagara River. As a matter of interest, the House should be aware of the fact that we have a commitment—I will not say an ironclad commitment—from the powers that be on the other side of the river, that by the fall of 1984 the serious defect in the pollution control plant in Niagara Falls, New York, will be rectified. I hope that the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Roberts) will keep pressure on the authorities across the river and see that the commitment is fulfilled.

• (1600)

When the new plant, as rectified, is in operation the authorities across the river intend to see to it that the hazardous chemicals will be removed at the point of discharge into the sewers by the users of water which carry the pollutants and not at the pollution control plant. That would answer, in part, a move that has apparently taken place in the United States and with which I agree. It is a partial answer to the question put by the Hon. Member for Perth. I would be interested in hearing whether the Hon. Member for Beaches agrees that the chemicals should be removed at the point of discharge rather than attempting to control pollution at the plant.

The Hon. Member for Perth accepted the suggestion of the Members of the New Democratic Party who spoke that the Minister of the Environment should look to backbenchers for support in his fight against pollution. That makes a lot of sense to me and I agree with the suggestion. He also suggested that hazardous chemical treatment was very closely connected with the chemical pollution of our waterways, and I do not question the relevancy of that.

The Hon. Member for Perth also referred to what he considered to be an undue delay, and what I know to be a serious delay, in the appointment of the co-chairman of the International Joint Commission by the Government. While I was disappointed at the delay, I am informed that the appointment of Mr. Seaborn was an excellent one, and we look for great things from him.

The Hon. Member for Perth also said that in hard times, economic problems tend to replace environmental concerns. I suppose that is correct, but it would be unfortunate if we allowed the weak economy to wield an undue influence. We cannot sit back and say that because times are bad we will let pollution continue unabated. I know that no Member of the House would suggest that. As the Member from Niagara Falls, I refuse to even consider that possibility, but I appreciate that there is such a tendency.

Earlier this afternoon we were told that the Minister of the Environment and his officials will visit the S-Area dump in the very near future. I hope that Members of Parliament who are particularly concerned with this because of their proximity to the Niagara River and Great Lakes area, will be included in the party. Regardless of anything that has been said by other Members to the contrary, I welcome the visit. I am behind anything that will bring this matter more forcefully to the attention of the Government. It is not enough that the Minister and his officials should meet with the Governor of New York and others, as has been suggested, although anything along that line could only be helpful.

The very distinguished Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Ethier) is in the House this afternoon, and I hope he will get the Minister in a corner sometime soon and ask him if he is going to continue financial support for Operation Clean in Niagara-on-the-Lake in its fight with respect to the hearings on the S-Area dump. That is perhaps the largest and most hazardous chemical dump in the proximity of the Niagara River. It is only 1.5 kilometres above the pollution control plant in Niagara Falls, New York. I hope the Parliamentary Secretary will keep pressure on the Minister for financial help for the good work being done by the volunteers of Operation Clean and even for increased funding. The people of my riding would certainly appreciate that.

The Hon. Member for Perth suggested that there had been a breach of the 1978 Great Lakes Water Quality Agreement, and that is a very serious allegation. Sometimes I am as concerned as he is that there has been such a breach, and I think the question must be addressed by the Government. If there has been a breach and no remedial action is taken within a reasonable time, then I think we must enforce those portions of the agreement which give redress to Canada.

I have addressed the excellent speeches I heard this afternoon, Mr. Speaker. The subject concerns me primarily as one interested in the Niagara River and the Great Lakes Basin because of the proximity of my riding. I should like to return to my prepared notes now with regard to a more specific area of concern in the Niagara River.

We would be remiss in not recounting our considerable efforts in successfully combating accelerated eutrophication of the Lower Great Lakes—Lake Erie and Lake Ontario. You will recall that in the late sixties, headlines were rampant with the spectre of a dying Lake Erie. Widespread complaints from the good people of the Lower Great Lakes Basin decried the fouling of clean beaches with smelly deposits of algae. Cities and towns complained of malodorous drinking water. Schools of dead fish, choked by the lack of precious dissolved oxygen, cluttered our shoreline, leaving in the putrid waters coarse species of fish. Sport fishing, a national pastime in Canada, an important economic activity in the Great Lakes valued today at some $500 million was threatened. There has been some improvement, and I am thankful that those in authority did not give in. That is not to suggest that the problem has been resolved.

Tabling of Documents

Clearly, the lakes were suffering. In response, the Government, in concert with the U.S. Government, requested the International Joint Commission, in 1964, to undertake a scientific investigation to determine the root cause of these problems. The study clearly defined the cause. Untreated and partially treated sewage contains large amounts of phosphorus.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I apologize for interrupting the speech of the Hon. Member but I wish to seek the unanimous consent of the House to table a document. Prior to that, you ought to know, Mr. Speaker, that I have had discussions with the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker), the energy critic for the New Democratic Party and the House leader and they all agreed that they would give unanimous consent.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): That is true, Mr. Speaker. We are prepared to give our consent to the tabling of the document.

Mr. Skelly: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Parliamentary Secretary seeks unanimous consent to revert to Tabling of Documents for the purpose of tabling a document related to Energy, Mines and Resources. Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 62—PROTECTION OF THE ENVIRONMENT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Fulton:

That this House condemns the government for its failure to adequately protect the Canadian environment from toxic and hazardous waste and for its subservience to the vested interests of the chemical and industrial waste producers and, in particular, for its failure to expedite the clean-up of the Great Lakes.

Mr. Al MacBain (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): When I was interrupted, Mr. Speaker, I was referring to the problem of phosphorus in the Great Lakes Basin and the tributaries that flow into it. Phosphorus was identified as the key nutrient element which spawned the growth of nuisance algae. These algae bloomed in the summer and then sank to the lake bottoms or washed up on our shorelines. As it rotted it used up the precious store of dissolved oxygen critical to the support of aquatic life. Also as it rotted it released some more phosphorous into the lakes which further exacerbated the problem. The problem was so severe that in the late summer large portions of the bottom waters were totally devoid of dissolved oxygen.

Studies undertaken by Canadian and American scientists had determined that the reduction of phosphorous was the key factor in stemming this uncontrolled growth cycle known as an accelerated state of eutrophication.

In signing the 1972 Canada-U.S. agreement, immediate phosphorous control was a primary objective, and Canada proceeded to take the following actions. First, Canada pressed for and gained agreement with the United States to set phosphorous target levels for Lake Erie and Lake Ontario. To achieve these lower levels, the countries then agreed on an equitable reduction of phosphorous inputs.

The Canadian strategy was twofold. We would remove phosphorous from municipal sewage treatment plants and limit phosphorous contents in household laundry detergents. In 1970 and 1973 phosphorous content in laundry detergents was limited to 5 per cent and 2.2 per cent respectively under the federal Canada Water Act. Canada and Ontario undertook a successful $6 million research and development effort from 1972 to 1976 to build phosphorous removal facilities in sewage treatment plants. As a result of this effort and the accelerated funding for the construction of sewage treatment plants, all plants with a capacity greater than one million gallons per day discharging directly into the lakes were provided with phosphorous removal facilities. This was accomplished co-operatively with the Province of Ontario.

We must remember that phosphorous control on the Canadian side was only achieved because of a massive effort in building and updating sewage treatment plants at the estimated cost of $1.3 billion by all levels of Government in Canada.

By comparison, the United States has spent some $7 billion, which we would expect, given their greater population of the Great Lakes Basin. This huge investment of resources under the 1972 agreement has paid off in concrete results. These are, one, in 1972 an estimated 80 per cent of the sewer population in the Canadian portion of the Great Lakes Basin was served by sewage treatment facilities adequate to meet the water quality objectives of the agreement, including phosphorous removal. Today this figure has increased to 99 per cent.

Statistically, significant decreases in total phosphorous levels in localized areas of Lake Ontario have been achieved since 1972. Springtime concentrations along most of the north shore have dropped an average of 12 per cent. In a 20 mile stretch in the Toronto area, the decline is estimated to be 35 per cent. The decrease in chlorophyll, a measure of algae growth, in Lake Ontario has resulted in cleaner water and better swimming conditions.

In 1977, Canada essentially met the target set for phosphorous discharges from municipal waste treatment plants on Lake Erie.

Decline in phosphorous concentrations has been noted in the nearshore of the western basin of Lake Erie and at the mouth of the Detroit River. Chloride and iron concentrations, plus suspended and dissolved solids loads, are also decreasing in the river.

The average total phosphorous concentrations along the south Indiana shoreline of Lake Michigan have declined to levels comparable to those of the open lake.

Studies have provided a basis for determining the magnitude and sources of contamination to the lakes from land use activities. Recommendations of the International Joint Commission as to the remedial programs appropriate to addressing these problems are pending now.

Under the 1978 Canada and United States agreement, the parties capitalized on increased knowledge of phosphorous pollution. Further measures were instituted in the new agreement to control phosphorous from non-point sources and atmospheric deposition of phosphorous. At present this Government is finalizing a supplemental annex to the 1978 agreement with the United States which calls for controls of phosphorous from urban and agricultural runoff. These new requirements, which will be presented to Cabinet shortly, will call for a further reduction of 2,000 tons in the Lake Erie Basin and approximately 1,200 tons in the Lake Ontario Basin. The achievement of these reductions will be pursued in the most cost effective manner. Happily, the upper lakes are not threatened by eutrophication at this time due to low concentrations of population living around them. We are, however, mindful of the necessity to maintain their quality; therefore target loads have been developed for Lake Huron and Lake Superior and are currently being finalized by both parties.

The efforts that this Government has successfully put forward in combatting eutrophication is no small accomplishment. Lake Erie is alive and mending. The prognosis for Lake Ontario is also good as far as eutrophication is concerned. While our attention has been rightly diverted to the problem of toxic chemical contamination, it is good to know that we have met the challenge with regard to phosphorous control.

I said at the beginning that my riding was particularly concerned about pollution in the Niagara River and the Great Lakes Basin. I see the Hon. Minister of the Environment is back in the House, and perhaps I can remind him directly that I do hope he will continue his financial support of Operation Clean, which is a voluntary organization in Niagara-on-the-Lake, which is also in my riding. Hopefully, notwithstanding the present restraint program in Ottawa, additional financial support will be found for Operation Clean, because they are the ones at the moment who are in the fight at the S-dump hearings. Any support, financial and otherwise, that can be given to Operation Clean by the Government of Canada will be appreciated by myself and by all Members of this House who are genuinely interested in controlling pollution in the Niagara River and the Great Lakes Basin.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Chair is looking for Hon. Members who may wish to enter into the ten minute period of exchange and comment and question, and obviously I will recognize those Hon. Members or Ministers in relation to that.

So that the matter is clear, following that, whatever time it may take, the Chair will recognize the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) for the purpose of entering into the debate.

Mr. Roberts: Mr. Speaker, in view of the comments addressed to me by the Hon. Member at the end of his speech, I think I should say to him, or perhaps I should pose it in the form of a question: is he aware that within the last few days, I believe, a letter has been sent, but certainly the decision has been taken, to provide additional support for Operation Clean exactly because we are concerned that they be supported in their efforts in relation to the S-dump fight in the United States? If he is not aware of that perhaps I can indicate to him that that decision has been taken because of the concerns expressed by the group and because of the concerns expressed, I have to say, by their Member of Parliament.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, I have a very brief question for the Hon. Member for Niagara Falls (Mr. MacBain). I know he represents the constituency where the real centre of this debate is. I just wonder if he would undertake, with some of his colleagues and also with the Minister, to try to unfreeze the funds that have been earmarked for Environment Canada's work on toxic chemicals. They have been frozen by Treasury Board; that sum is about $2.5 million, and I wonder if he would undertake to try to see that those funds are unfrozen as soon as possible.

Mr. MacBain: Mr. Speaker, with respect to the statement by the Minister of the Environment, I must say I have not been in my riding for almost a week and I did not have the information that he placed before the House, but I appreciate very much receiving the information.

With respect to the frozen $2.5 million, I can only say that the Minister himself is in the House at the moment and of course is much more powerful in these matters than a Parliamentary Secretary, but I will give as much support as I can when I have reviewed the matter.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 62—PROTECTION OF THE ENVIRONMENT

The House resumed consideration of the Motion of Mr. Fulton:

That this House condemns the Government for its failure to adequately protect the Canadian environment from toxic and hazardous waste and for its subservience to the vested interests of the chemical and industrial waste producers and, in particular, for its failure to expedite the clean-up of the Great Lakes.

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to enter this debate and to follow my friend, the Hon. Member for Niagara Falls (Mr. MacBain). I listened with great interest to what he had to say concerning the dreadful problem that we in this part of Ontario only read about rather than live in the midst of and experience. I am certain there is a great deal of worry and concern in the Niagara Falls area.

Let me preface my next remarks by saying that I am pleased the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Roberts) rose and indicated that some further funding would be available to the group dealing with the S-dump hearing called "Operation Clean." He anticipated what I was going to say. Sometimes Ministers in these times of restraint look for support for worthwhile undertakings from other Parties in the House of Commons. I happen to represent, at least today, another Party in the House of Commons, and had he not said that, I would have indicated my support for him. Nevertheless, I want the Minister and my hon. friend from Niagara Falls to know they have my support.

I think it is very important that we should not lose sight, even in a period of restraint, of the importance of the priority with respect to the environment and what it can do for us in terms of the quality of life in our country.

I am certain that groups in Niagara Falls who have been working on the matter must be very pleased. I am sure the Hon. Member for Niagara Falls is also very pleased.

I hope I am not being unkind to our friends in the United States by saying that I suppose what has happened to the pollution control plant that will not be put back in place in Niagara Falls, New York, until 1984, is something being repeated again and again in various parts of the United States because of the policy of the United States Government with respect to its priorities. I do not think we should necessarily criticize a Government of another country for a particular policy, but we should never allow that Government to be unmindful of the danger that we, as their neighbours to the north, regard that kind of breakdown and change in a relationship. I think that is the case. Following the State of the Union message and the results of the State Congressional elections in the United States, I suspect that, notwithstanding the fact that there are protestations to the contrary by the President of the United States that his policy has not changed, in fact, a change is coming.

There must have been a message ot the Government and the administration of the United States as a result of those elections. If I may put it in my own terms, the message was that there is something else just as important, or at least to be considered, as the balance sheet in the setting of priorities. I regard that as the message that has come as a result of some of the changes I have read and heard about recently in U.S. policy.

This reminds me of a good story told me by the Hon. Member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton). There was a person in his riding who did not want to be seen walking into a public house or a place where alcoholic beverages are served. What he did was to walk backwards into the public house. If somebody took this person's picture it would look as if he were walking out. I have a feeling that what appears to be the United States policy of staying the course is not quite so, and that perhaps the importance of the environment and the importance of preserving the environment in the United States will now come to the fore. If the environment becomes important to American policy makers, we will be the beneficiary of some of those changes.

I regret very much what the Hon. Member for Niagara Falls said about the breach by the United States of the 1978 Great Lakes Water Quality Agreement. That is very serious for Canada. I believe its importance should be brought home day by day in this forum and in other forums, using all the facilities we have.

I have differences of opinion with the Minister of the Environment from time to time, but I support him and I say to the House that I believe he is personally and absolutely committed to the cause of improving the environment, whether in Niagara Falls or elsewhere.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): I have served in a government and I know that from time to time one's own personal commitments are sometimes sublimated within the problems that governments face. I suspect that if it is seen in the House, and perhaps as it has been alleged in the House, that there has not been a great enough push with the United States and in Canada concerning environmental problems, much of that lack has to do with the priorities set by the Government as a whole.

A cabinet Minister with a government is not independent. He is subject to the eventual setting of priorities by a government as a whole, and we must remember that. However, the Minister of the Environment is absolutely committed to this issue. Those who worry in times of great trouble that we must concentrate on the bottom line and ignore every other consideration, are wrong. There are countries much more troubled economically than Canada that have taken another view.

In the United Kingdom, notwithstanding its great financial difficulties, there was work done at great cost in the clean-up of the Thames and in energy conversion from coal. That kind of experience must have been repeated over and over again and ought to be remembered by all of us. There are no absolutes. If we take a single-minded approach to any policy, then we only damage ourselves. There has to be a balance. In the balance, all of the important elements have to be considered. Certainly one of those, in terms of industrial development, has to be the investment in the environment, which is particularly important to Canada.

How does one invest in the environment? I see nothing wrong with grants being made to corporations that employ Canadians. Grants would allow plants to convert. I see nothing wrong with that. That is being done. I see nothing wrong with our policy of research and development as we try to move to 1.5 per cent of our Gross National Product. Part of that percentage concerns pollution control in the industrial setting. I see nothing wrong with an examination of the tax system in order to determine if tax credits can be used for the purchase and installation of environmental control machinery.

I think we must recognize that there are a number of levels of Government in this country which should be concerned with the environment, whether in the Niagara or the St. Lawrence River area where I grew up and have my home. If there is one fault with the national life in Canada, it is that there has not been sufficient co-operation between many levels of responsible Governments. I think that Canadians have paid a price for the breakdown in federal-provincial relations. We have paid that price in the environment, in terms of unemployment and with respect to a whole host of good programs. We have wasted time and energy as a result of bickering between levels of Government.

I suggest that there is a place for Government co-operation in matters concerning the environment, as there is in many other areas. I would like to give the Minister a specific example. I discussed this with him in Brockville. The City of Brockville is situated on the banks of the St. Lawrence. I live beside that river whenever I can in the summer. I grew up there and watched it grow. No one can live beside a river like that and not have it become a part of you to appreciate. The City of Brockville, a progressive city in eastern Ontario, has decided to install a landfill site for municipal garbage on land that abuts on the river. This is a convenient site for the city since it happens to be in the township of Augusta. Therefore, it does not have to put the garbage dump in its own municipality. If this site were situated anywhere else, I believe that the federal Government would not have any jurisdiction at all. However, due to the possible leaching problems from the landfill site into the river, there is a place in that apparatus for more than just consultation. While consultation is important, if there is an environmental assessment hearing about this dump because of its involvement with the St. Lawrence, it gives the federal Government the opportunity to move in and prevent its establishment.

That was the case I wanted to raise with the Minister. I will give him more particulars, if he wishes, because it is important that we stop projects such as these before they begin. I would ask him to go to the Minister of the Environment in Ontario to discuss this issue since a river is involved.

This issue has created some problems in the area. We have had problems with the St. Lawrence and Great Lakes system in any event.

I want to deal with another area in which co-operation is important. The Minister will recall that his Department had suggested that a study be conducted to determine where a new site might be placed in the National Capital area for the disposal of toxic waste from federal Government installations. There were four or five sites set out. Unfortunately, this matter was handled improperly. The public relations for this proposal were very bad and, as a result, I should think that it has been abandoned. I believe it is right that it should be abandoned. As the Hon. Member for Perth (Mr. Jarvis) said, the approach to these matters is extremely important.

However, the problem is still there. The public servants who work in the laboratories and those who live in the surrounding communities are still subject to the improper storage of that chemical waste. I believe if this problem is to be solved it will require co-operation between the federal, provincial and municipal Governments in this part of Ontario if something is to be done here. For instance, at one time there was a proposal by the provincial Government for a central development for the purposes of the storage of those chemical wastes. I believe that is a proper approach to take. I do not see the logic of the federal Government building one site, the provincial Government building one site, and other companies perhaps having their own sites. All levels should be involved in that area.

My final point once again concerns the United States. We live beside the United States and we have to live together. The good Lord put us on the northern half of the western hemisphere, and we have to learn to live together. I believe that as much support as possible from all sides of the House of Commons should be given to such organizations as the International Joint Commission. The Hon. Member for Niagara Falls is right. The appointment of the Canadian joint Chairman was good. If I were in a position to find someone to qualify for that position, I could find no one more qualified than the appointment that was made. I believe that we have a good combination in Mr. Seaborn and our group on the Commission being coupled with the Hon. Robert McEwen of the United States who lives on the banks of the St. Lawrence outside of Ogdensburg, New York and who feels exactly the same as I do about the importance of the Great Lakes and the St. Lawrence waterway and who is prepared to make some noise about the progress in cleaning up the environment.

I would like to suggest to the Minister that he consult with the Chairman of the Canadian section of the International Joint Commission to see if we cannot raise the consciousness of Members of the House of Commons in regard to the importance of that tributary.

I realize that the Minister wrote to various caucus groups and did not receive a great response. Perhaps the reason is that all Members of Parliament are involved. I am talking about Members of Parliament and Senators who represent constituencies contiguous to the river on the Canadian side, and Congressmen and Senators who are interested in the development and preservation of the river and lakes system on the American side. They can become familiar with and express their views on the problems facing both sides in terms of the water quality agreement, the environmental problems, as well as the financial problems on both sides.

I have found that the use of the Canadian-United States interparliamentary group has meant the exchange of ideas and the development of understanding. It is a slow process but one that ought not to be abandoned or discarded merely because it is slow. It is a good process. There will be Governments come and gone, Members of Parliament come and gone, but we can build up an expertise, an understanding and a commitment to cleaning the environment, not only with the Minister but with many Members of the House of Commons.

I have not used all my time but there are other Members who wish to speak. I feel very privileged to have taken part in this debate today, and I want to thank the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) for putting this motion forward so we may deal with a subject that is quite often neglected in the House of Commons.

Mr. Denis Ethier (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I also wish to compliment the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) for introducing this motion and giving us an opportunity to debate this very serious and complex problem that toxic and hazardous wastes disposal sites cause if not adequately stored or disposed of in safe and guaranteed leak-proof underground sites. This seems to be the case at the dumpsite upstream from Niagara Falls. I compliment the Member for introducing this motion.

[Translation]

However, that is as far as I am prepared to go in the way of compliments, and I may even be tempted to withdraw this one, having listened very carefully to the statements made by the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton).

[English]

Honestly, I have never heard so many erroneous statements and scare tactics in one single speech. Granted, an Hon. Member during his intervention may commit one or two errors in stating his case, but to carry on during his whole presentation, with false accusations and erroneous statements is not what is expected of an hon. gentleman in this House. Public debate is most welcome and healthy, but one should not use exaggeration in making one's case.

• (1640)

I want to compliment the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker). I think he was very positive in the suggestion which he brought forth.

The Niagara River Basin and its importance to the Canadian economy and people have been long recognized by the Government. This 37 mile-long river passes through an industrial complex of steel, petrochemical and chemical manufacturing industries which have been the economic lifeblood of this area for the past 30 years. The river itself has provided these industries with a cheap and easy source of hydroelectric power. It has been used by them, in return, as a sewer for their chemical waste.

In the early 1940s, we thought we could have it all and still use the river as a source of drinking water. The Niagara River soon became taxed beyond its limits. We began to see the gross earlier signs of pollution. Those were related to bacterial contamination and were obvious to the eyes and nose. I am speaking of oil slicks, foam, scums and persistent unpleasant odours, as well as visible discoloration of the water. These, the more obvious and crude types of pollution, were, in retrospect, relatively easy to rectify. Limits were placed on discharges of phosphorous and conventional pollutants which quickly removed these signs of pollution. However, within a very short period, more insidious types of chemical pollution began to come to life. They were not visible or easy to identify, but they were there all the same.

The discovery of dioxin by our environmental scientists was the key to the heightened awareness of the extreme danger of these chemicals in the river. In addition, the problem was compounded by the revelation that the major source of the dioxin was the many landfill sites in Niagara Falls, New York. Since dioxin was just one of the many chemicals deposited over the years on these landfill sites, the identification of the problem and the solution became complicated beyond our expectations.

The monitoring of toxic chemicals such as dioxin through the Great Lakes Surveillance Program has led to a more intensive investigation of toxic chemical sources of the Niagara River. Dioxin is a primary example of the legacy which has fallen to us through inadequate control of toxic chemical waste in the past. There is no known source of dioxin currently coming into the Great Lakes Basin. It is the disposal of trichlorophenol waste in landfill sites created in the 1940s and the active dumping of this waste through the 50s, 60s, and up to 1974, which is the suspected cause of extremely high levels of hazardous chemicals now being found.

The first site to come to public attention was the now infamous Love Canal in Niagara Falls, New York. We all know the tragic series of events which eventually led to the full scale investigation of that site. In fact, Love Canal is only one of 215 such sites identified in the American counties of Erie and Niagara Falls. In the case of Love Canal, the Hooker Chemical and Plastics Corporation, now called Occidental Chemical Corporation, had dumped tons of toxic chemicals in a trench close to a residential neighbourhood. The first shock-waves emanating from Love Canal centred around the health of residents. Our Government quickly became aware of the possibility that chemicals from that site might be leaching into the Niagara River, thereby endangering the health of the Canadian public and environment.

Investigations on Cayuga Creek and Black Creek, which enter the Niagara River from the U.S. side, have shown great cause for concern since high levels of leachate from the Love Canal landfill site are evident in the sediment and fish from these Niagara River tributaries. We are presently investigating the extent of the contamination of these tributaries to identify all the pathways of movement of contaminants from the Love Canal into the Niagara River Basin in order to advise U.S. authorities as to what will constitute, in our opinion, an effective clean-up program.

In fact, the largest landfill site in Niagara Fall, New York, is the Hyde Park site, another Hooker site which, up until 1973, was an open lagoon containing a toxic brew which spilled down Bloody Run Creek directly into Niagara Gorge. Hyde Park landfill site is known to contain up to two and a half tons of TCDD—dioxin—alone and has been the subject of intensive investigation by the Government.

These investigations point to the movement of contaminants into the deep bedrock beneath the landfill and the leaching of toxic waste onto the face of the Niagara Gorge and into the Niagara River. This information was provided to public interest groups in Canada, which, together with their counterparts in the United States, presented oral testimony to the U.S. District Court of New York which is charged with resolving the fate of this site. At the same time, our Government was making active representations to the United States Government for a speedy and complete clean-up of this site, citing international obligations under the Boundary Waters Treaty Act of 1909 and the Great Lakes Water Quality Agreement of 1972.

I would like to point out that all actions on landfill sites on the Niagara River have occurred during the past several years. Investigation of these sites by the U.S. and Canadian authorities is still under way. It is essential that a complete information base be established before we can determine what clean-up technology would be effective and would prevent these chemicals from entering the environment in the future.

The most recent landfill site we have investigated is the S-Area site, situated just 200 yards from the bank of the Niagara River and constructed on land reclaimed from river waters some years ago. Our preliminary investigation has shown this to be the most serious direct source of contaminants moving from the landfill site into the Niagara River to date. As the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Roberts) announced on Monday, portions of landfill containing toxic waste seem to be moving directly into the river and onto Canadian territory. This is the most serious direct example of transboundary chemical pollution we have yet encountered on this river.

In order to determine whether the chemicals from this site are actually on Canadian territory, we will be conducting a further investigation in early spring. At the same time, we are intensifying our efforts to identify chemicals from the S-Area site in fish sediment and water taken from the river. The Department of National Health and Welfare will be testing drinking water on the Canadian side of the Niagara River for these chemicals.

The S-Area landfill has been the subject of intensive consultation with U.S. authorities. Several meetings between the four Governments involved have been held since the summer to present Canadian concerns over the migration of plumes of contaminants moving into and under the Niagara River and the potential hazards created by them. It is our position that the movement of contaminants is not yet well enough defined to determine what remedial technology should be used to either contain or remove the site as a source of contamination to the environment. After our study of S-Area, we will be continuing our investigation with Hooker Site 102nd Street. This particular landfill is situated directly on the bank of the Niagara River and contains toxic waste similar to that deposited in the other three landfills we have previously considered.

We have begun to negotiate with the United States with regard to the release of all confidential data pertaining to this site before the United States court. Action is actively under way. This will enable us to obtain a comprehensive understanding of the dangers of this site and its effect on the Niagara River.

• (1650)

Another major concern on the Niagara River is the continued toxic waste effluent coming from the Niagara Falls, New York, sewage treatment plant. This discharge presently provides a major loading of toxic chemical waste to the Niagara River from the chemical industries in the area. This treatment plant, originally designed to process and remove highly contaminated chemical wastes, broke down shortly after it was inaugurated and has been in a state of disrepair for the last three years. This means that chemical waste receives only primary treatment and is contributing to the toxic chemical loading of the Niagara River. Numerous diplomatic and technical moves, including direct sampling by Canadians of the effluent from this plant, have been undertaken to press the United States for speedy and effective repairs.

I would like to emphasize that the toxic chemical pollution of the Niagara River is not a simple problem to describe, let alone solve. I have mentioned past discharges from industries which are further compounded by inadequate treatment. These vast landfills, which amount to over a quarter million tons of toxic waste, contain chemicals the identity of which we have yet to discover, and additional new chemicals produced by compounded reaction to each other.

It is a long journey down a dark and twisting path with very few guideposts along the way. Our approach has been to recognize the problem in its entirety while methodically investigating and dealing with the problems on a case-by-case basis. Our progress has been steady and sure, but the complete understanding of these problems lies in the future, as does their resolution.

The excellence of our scientists and engineers provided us with information on which to base our negotiations with the United States. We will use all methods at our disposal to continue to press Canada's case for a complete clean-up of these sources of toxic chemicals to the river.

[Translation]

I would now like to say just a few words about a new phenomenon—I would call it chemophobia—and I am referring to these warnings we are getting practically every week that some new chemical product is hazardous to our health. Far be it from me to criticize the public and the media for getting worried about every new crisis or new discovery that crops up, but I think there is a tendency to make things seem worse than they actually are. I would even go so far as to say that sometimes the facts are concealed to make a better story.

The Government is taking action and is trying to correct the situation. Some Hon. Members may be aware of the program that has been established under the Environmental Contaminants Act. The Department of the Environment and the Department of National Health and Welfare are responsible for evaluating and rating certain industrial chemicals. Unfortunately, not many products have been evaluated, but the Department is now extending its activities to a far greater number of chemical products and by-products. To co-ordinate and integrate all these activities, the Department of the Environment has created the Toxic Chemicals Management Centre. People working at the Centre are responsible for collecting all available data on chemical products and their effects, and for subsequently recommending appropriate action. As these people increase their knowledge of substances used in industry, the effluent content, the impact of chemical products that have already entered the environment on humans, animals, birds, fish, air, water and soil—as these people get a better picture of the general situation, they can then zero in on certain specific situations. For instance, in factories A, B and C, we have to watch out for chemical product X, or we should give factory D a warning about its disposal methods, or product X is more hazardous than we thought and its use should therefore be prohibited, and so on. Of course all this is not going to be done behind closed doors. The priorities of the Toxic Chemicals Management Program must be open, to scrutiny by industry and other interested parties and the public. That is how the Department will be able to establish a certain level of credibility. It will not necessarily eliminate our chemophobia, but it may help to make us less alarmist.

Finally, a few words about our environmental legislation as it relates to the use of chemical pollutants. The three most important statutes that are concerned with toxic chemicals are: the Environmental Contaminants Act, the Clean Air Act and sections of the Fisheries Act relating to pollution control. This legislation was entirely adequate at the time it was passed, but that is no longer the case, in view of the challenges I mentioned earlier. We must therefore prepare new legislation on environmental protection.

I shall give a few examples of various areas that require our attention. The OECD has published international guidelines on laboratory testing of new chemicals. These guidelines have now been approved and we shall therefore have to apply them. I am aware that the United States has decided to reverse its initial position and now relies on the good faith of the parties concerned with respect to product testing. I am sorry that our main trading partner made this decision, but on the other hand, I am very pleased to note that practically all other member countries in the OECD intend to make these tests compulsory. The new system has a tremendous advantage in that we will be able to obtain far more information and greater reliability.

However, the OECD program applies only to new chemicals. What about the tens of thousands of chemicals that already exist? I know that many products have been tested to some degree, and that a few have been tested quite exhaustively. However, this is only the tip of the iceberg. What are we going to do about the vast number of substances about which we know very little? We shall have to be pragmatic and set our priorities.

As soon as Parliament passes new legislation, we shall make sure that the main responsibility for testing will lie with industry. Other changes will have to be made as well. For instance, our present legislation on water pollution is aimed at protecting fish and not humans. We have to do something about this. The public wants increased protection, and we shall have to act accordingly. I firmly believe that it makes sense to have a comprehensive system for the management of toxical chemicals. Moreover, if we want to maintain our credibility with the public, we shall have to act quickly. I am convinced that we can make chemicals work for us, and that we will succeed.

In concluding, Mr. Speaker, once more, I want to ask my hon. colleagues who are going to take part in this debate to refrain from scare tactics when the subject is environmental protection. We often get carried away in the heat of the debate in our statements about the hazards caused by certain industries, without first having checked the extent of the damage that can be caused by such pollutants or toxic chemicals.

I heard the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) who put the motion and who almost scared the people who live in the Niagara Falls area out of their wits when he said that in water, dioxin was an extremely dangerous chemical. We know that. Everybody in Canada does. But to what extent—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. I am sorry to have to interrupt the Hon. Member, but his time has now expired, and we have now reached the stage of the debate set aside for questions.

[English]

The Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) is rising on a question?

Mr. Taylor: No, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): The Hon. Member for The Battlefords-Meadow Lake?

Mr. Anguish: I have no questions, Mr. Speaker. I am rising to speak.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): I recognize the Hon. Member for The Battlefords-Meadow Lake (Mr. Anguish) for the purpose of making a speech.

Mr. Fretz: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) was standing to make a speech when you asked. He indicated he did not want to ask a question but was standing to make a speech.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): I can appreciate that, but there were two Members rising. It is the duty of the Chair to inquire at the beginning of the question period if Members are rising to put questions. I proceeded to do that with the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) and then the Hon. Member for The Battlefords-Meadow Lake (Mr. Anguish). In any case, it was the Chair's intention and the Chair's discretion to recognize the Hon. Member who has been given the floor to make a speech.

• (1700)

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): The Hon. Member for Bow River is rising on the same point of order?

Mr. Taylor: I think I should make it clear, Mr. Speaker, that I checked with the Deputy Speaker before you came in and he indicated we are still following the three and one rule. Consequently, there have been only two Progressive Conservative speakers since the last New Democratic Party speaker. However, I will defer to the Hon. Member for the Battlefords-Meadow Lake (Mr. Anguish), but surely we should follow these rules, if that is the rule.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): On that point of order, the Hon. Member for Bow River should know there is no rule. Standing Orders, and custom and practice grant to the Speaker discretion in recognizing Hon. Members. However, the comment made by the Hon. Member for Bow River is well taken by the Chair in regard to the practice of allocating time to one side of the House and then to the other and from one Party to the others. However, I checked with my predecessor in the chair before assuming my duties today and it would have been his intention, in any case, to recognize the Hon. Member for The Battlefords-Meadow Lake, in view of the fact that this is an Opposition day. The motion is presented by the New Democratic Party, and in a sense it was that Party's initiative to put the motion before the House. And it is the Chair's feeling that sufficient time should be given to Hon. Members of that Party to express their opinions. It is the Chair's intention to recognize the Hon. Member for Bow River as the next speaker in any case.

Mr. Doug Anguish (The Battlefords-Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a brief intervention in the 20 minutes I have on the NDP Opposition motion moved by the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton), which reads as follows:

> That this House condemns the Government for its failure to adequately protect the Canadian environment from toxic and hazardous waste and for its subservience to the vested interests of the chemical and industrial waste producers and, in particular, for its failure to expedite the clean-up of the Great Lakes.

Each year, Mr. Speaker, Canadian industries produce approximately one million tonnes of hazardous waste material, and this causes some very serious problems for our society in terms of its effect on our environment, our wildlife, and on the human beings who have to live next to some of the dump sites, or some of the illegal dumps where these hazardous waste materials have been disposed of over the years.

In the past, it was always thought that one of the best ways to protect the environment was to not supersaturate the environment with an excessive amount of pollutants and eventually nature would take care of itself. However, as chemicals have become more complex, research has become more complex and we understand the problems of hazardous waste a bit better, we find that some of the chemicals today, like dioxin in the Great Lakes, have produced some very, very serious problems. Dioxin is not biodegradable and when it is pumped into a natural system, nature itself cannot take care of the pollution which occurs. In Canada there are several dumping sites, almost all of which are totally inadequate for dumping hazardous waste. As a result, we find there has been dumping into the Niagara River system, and into the Great Lakes. In fact, there is a great amount of dumping which ends up in the Great Lakes.

In the beginning, to be fair to those who dumped the waste many years ago, I suppose they did not know any better. They did not know what the long-term effects of some of these dumping of hazardous and toxic waste could be to our environment. But in this day and age, with our expertise and our research, we know there can be very detrimental effects upon our entire environment. We should be building effective repositories for these waste materials which are harming our society so very much.

I am very concerned about the transportation of hazardous wastes also. The problem of transporting this material through densely populated areas by rail or tanker trucks has caused some very anxious moments to people throughout recent history in Canada where there have been accidents. In fact, life and environment have become endangered. I know that the Department of Transport is looking at this problem now. They have looked at it in the past. I suggest they come up with a few more constructive ideas in terms of transportation of hazardous waste. I know, for example, that no one from the federal Government has been in very close contact with volunteer firefighters, for example, who sometimes find themselves coming into contact with hazardous material and have no knowledge of how to cope with it. I would encourage the federal Government to look at some kind of information program for the Volunteer Firefighting Association across Canada. The volunteer firefighters have to contend with these problems sometimes and they should know exactly what they are dealing with and how they can deal with it.

Dioxin, as I mentioned, is not bio-degradeable. One very small drop in a pitcher of drinking water could cause the death of an entire family if they were to drink that water. These are very dangerous chemicals, indeed. The waste disposal, as I have already said, is inadequate, and we should be addressing this problem very seriously so the waste can be treated, if it needs to be treated, before it gets out into our environment. Certainly the best way to take care of this problem is not to be cleaning up after the fact, but to prevent the pollution problem to begin with. In terms of the cost of cleaning up, I think that the "dumpers", if they do it intentionally and illegally against the wishes of the Government and the people of Canada, should be responsible, and in the case of illegal dumping, should have total responsibility. They should clean up the waste after it has been dumped. Either they should be required to hold insurance, or else there should be some kind of a holdback program on the profits of those companies by the federal Government. When a contractor builds a complex for the Government, whether federal or provincial, there is usually a holdback of 10 per cent, and sometimes 15 per cent, until the building is actually erected and found to be in sound and safe condition. Then the rest of the money is turned over. I submit that a possible way of dealing with those who dump hazardous waste could be that, at the end of the year when their profits are tabulated, their profits could be held back by the federal Government until they act in a responsible manner. If they act in a responsible manner and if there is no unsafe dumping of hazardous material, then the profits can go back to the company. That should be coupled with insurance. I think there should be great emphasis put on these people so that they do not abuse the very privileged position which some of them hold.

I would like to move to a few local concerns. I am very concerned about the problem of acid rain, which is not only a Canadian problem, it is an international problem, because of the very fact that the pollutants get into the atmosphere, the sulphates and nitrates which cause acid precipitation, and they come down with no recognition of international boundaries.

Environment Canada, I know, has a testing station at Cree Lake, in the riding which I represent. They are monitoring very closely the amount of acid precipitation in that area of Saskatchewan which, incidentally is just on the edge of the Cambrian Shield in the northern part of my home province. Acid rain could become a very serious problem in Western Canada. I hope it never gets to the point at which we have seen it affect the Province of Ontario where there are hundreds and hundreds of lakes which are dead. They support no life in terms of organic material, fish, or insects which used to be around those lakes. They support no life, and I would not want it to move any further than it has already.

Another situation I would like to talk about, Mr. Speaker, is that which occurred on January 24, the Government of Canada, DREE and the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce announced an incentive of some $74,000 plus to Canadian Seed Coaters Limited of Brampton, Ontario who indicated a desire to open a new facility for the processing of canola, or rapeseed as it is traditionally known, in the Battlefords area. The total project will cost some $215,000 and provide seven new jobs. I commend this company for moving into the Battlefords area. I think it is very good to see them recognize the benefits derived from being located in northwestern Saskatchewan. I also welcome the jobs provided in a time of rising unemployment because there is a great need for more jobs throughout Canada. I am also pleased to see that the farmers of that area, who buy treated rapeseed, will now be able to buy it from a local processor. I have some concern, however, about this company and its activities. I would like to put those on the record since they have a direct connection with the motion put forward today by the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton).

That company is going to be using a chemical called Lindane in the treatment of the canola. There is not much information around as to how they are going to use this chemical or bring it into the Battlefords area, so I would like to say a few words about Lindane itself. The process to be used in the plant is twofold. One, they use Vitavax rs Flowable which provides the canola seed with a coating of protection from the Flea beetle and fungal diseases which attack the seed once it is in the ground. I am thinking of Blackleg which is a problem there right now. They are also using what is called super phosphates as a fertilizer and they will also coat the seed with that. I want to put on the record that we should be watching very carefully the Vitavax rs Flowable process. Vitavax is made up of three chemicals: Carbathiin and Thiram, which prevent fungal diseases from growing on the plant. The other chemical, the one I am more concerned about, is Lindane. As far as Lindane is concerned, the United States Environmental Protection Agency, in June of 1980, recommended banning its use. I quote:

> After careful consideration the agency has concluded that the risks of use on these crops, even reduced by protective measures, outweigh the benefits of use in so far as the benefits are presently known and therefore recommends cancellation.

I guess what they are saying is that the detrimental effect of the use of Lindane can quite well outweigh its benefits. Now I am not supporting or denying that statement, but I want to put on record the very serious concern some people have expressed regarding Lindane. Many people who advocate its use say that it is a very dangerous chemical, but what are the alternatives to not using it? They maintain that careful use of Lindane can be an asset to those in the agricultural sector when it is used for coating canola seed. However, there are problems with humans when it comes to the use of Lindane. The EPA says that exposure to Lindane in humans can cause symptoms of acute poisoning. Therefore, the people who are going to be using this chemical want to know what is going to be done to protect them from exposure to Lindane in the plant where the seeds are going to be treated. The symptoms of this acute poisoning appear in a kind of chronological order. First, there is dizziness, headaches; nausea and vomitting set in, which can be followed by diarrhea, tremors, a noticeable weakness, convulsions, heart problems, eventually a bluish tinge to the complexion and some kind of eventual circulatory collapse. The EPA is also particularly concerned that this chemical produces acute effects in children even more significant than it produces in adults. The EPA produced a report, and Agriculture Canada circulated a report from the Winnipeg Free Press which said:

> The report also cited the case of a two and a half month old infant who died after being treated for scabies with a lindane product. A concentration of 110 parts per billion of lindane in the child's brain was considered the most probable cause of death.

Lindane is also used in other products such as flea soap for pets, and we should be very careful of this product because of its very dangerous effects. Workers who must be exposed to Lindane, Mr. Speaker, are advised to wear long-sleeved shirts and pants and some kind of protective clothing to avoid exposure of the arms and legs to this chemical. They should wear gloves to prevent exposure to their hands, and to a degree some protection of the face. It is also very important that they wear disposable masks or masks of some kind, so that they cannot inhale dust particles or fumes from the Lindane. I would like to see the new company moving into the Battlefords make sure that it observes these very simple measures of protection for its workers.

As to not following a proper procedure, Mr. Speaker, there was a case of a farmer dying in Manitoba. A Mr. Kerr, who farmed near Cardale, some 50 kilometres northeast of Brandon, died of kidney failure last spring, nine days after he was admitted to hospital with symptoms of chemical poisoning. This man had stirred some Vitavax with his arm in a tub, and of course the chemical entered through the pores of his skin and that was the eventual cause of his death.

Lindane has been used extensively in Saskatchewan. The 1978-79 report of the Saskatchewan Environmental Advisory Council said that Lindane was widespread in rivers, lakes and other surface water in the Province, particularly in the Qu'Appelle River district. Bottom sediments, where agricultural chemicals accumulate and serve as a sink for toxic substances, pose not just an immediate but also a long-term potential threat to the environment. Lindane is among the more than 100 chemicals involved in fraudulent and inadequate safety tests carried out by industrial biotest laboratories in the United States in the late 1970s. Right now Lindane is one of the chemicals being re-evaluated by the Department of National Health and Welfare, but the results of those tests are not known yet. I urge that those results become known very quickly, and if there is any alternative to the chemical Lindane in the seed-coating process, I would like to see Agriculture Canada recommend it to anyone who wants to go into the business of coating seeds.

According to Steven Safe, a biochemist at Guelph University and an expert on toxicity, Lindane is slow to degrade and can accumulate in human fat cells. If one is exposed to it over a long period of time, the chemical can accumulate in the body and cause some of the side effects I have referred to. He has said that the problem with widespread use is that when Lindane gets into the water system, it can get into other organisms. It is very important to keep Lindane from getting into our food chain as it is so very detrimental to health.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I should like it on the record that I want to know from the company that will build the seed coating plant in the Battlefords, what it is going to do to provide safe working conditions for the people who work there. I think it should provide adequate information to those farmers who buy their product so that they do not handle it in a way that may be dangerous. I understand that there will be very little chemical waste from the plant, but I should like to know their plans to dispose of what waste there is.

I have welcomed the company into the Battleford area, Mr. Speaker. If it acts as a responsible citizen in the community, providing jobs and services, then as the local Member of Parliament I will be a friend and supporter of the company. On the other hand, if the company acts irresponsibly, as many others have been allowed to, I will be a thorn in its side for as long as it remains in the Battlefords.

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, when the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) spoke this morning, he said that the critic on the environment for this Party had only asked one question on this subject and that referred to a raccoon dog. When he was questioned about this by the Hon. Member for Erie (Mr. Fretz), he said that his researcher had gone through Hansard and all that could be found was a reference to a raccoon dog. He was critical of the PC Party and indicated that perhaps the PC caucus had given him instructions not to speak on the environment. I want to tell the House that the PC caucus does not give instructions like that. When someone is appointed to a job they are expected to do that job in the best interests of the country. I would like to point to some of the statements that have been made by our critic for the benefit of the Hon. Member for Skeena. The Hon. Member for Erie did the research during the noon hour. I am sure the Hon. Member for Skeena would not want to deliberately mislead the House.

On March 7, 1981, as reported at p. 8690 of Hansard the Hon. Member for Hillsborough (Mr. McMillan), our critic on the environment, asked about the control of acid rain in the United States. He then put a supplementary question and received an answer from the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Roberts).

On April 21, 1981 as reported at p. 9334 of Hansard, the Hon. Member for Hillsborough put a question to the Minister of the Environment about negotiations with the United States on the acid rain treaty. He followed that with a supplementary question, and both were answered by the Minister of the Environment.

On March 20, 1981, as reported at p. 9721 of Hansard the Hon. Member for Hillsborough presented a motion under Standing Order 43 regarding the dumping of chemical wastes in the Niagara River.

On May 27, 1981 he again put questions to the Minister of the Environment regarding negotiations with the United States on action to combat acid rain, and also on the possibility of legal action against United States industries.

On February 19, 1982 the PC critic again put questions to the Minister of the Environment, requesting that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) meet the United States President to discuss acid rain controls, and asked for the Minister's view of this.

On April 27, 1982 our critic directed a question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources regarding the Ontario application to increase export of electricity to New Jersey and, in a supplementary question, asked for the position of the Minister of the Environment on the project.

On June 11, 1982, as reported at p. 18371 of Hansard, the Hon. Member for Hillsborough, put questions to the Minister of the Environment regarding the cancellation of a deal to export Ontario nuclear generated electricity to New Jersey, and inquired about the delay in the Government's decision.

On July 22, 1982, as reported at p. 19585 of Hansard, our very energetic critic on the environment, who endeavours to do his work conscientiously, again put questions to the Minister of the Environment regarding negotiations with the United States on acid rain. He asked a supplementary question about the Ontario Hydro installation of anti-pollution devices.

There are eight questions on record, Mr. Speaker, rather than just one, and none about the raccoon dog. We did not even find that one. I hope the Hon. Member for Skeena is sorry that he gave misleading information to the House.

I would now like to deal with one or two matters, but I shall not take too long with them because I know a lot of other Members want to speak in this debate.

I commend the Hon. Member for bringing the motion forward. The protection of the Canadian environment, and the provisions of clean air and good water is everyone's business. Too often we think that these matters are only the business of Government. Certainly Government has a responsibility for the environment. In Alberta there is a Clean Air and Clean Water Act, and I believe most other Provinces have something similar. It is important to set standards that everyone can follow.

I should like to deal with the matter of good water in the Canadian environment, and I will refer to a rather different type of poison from those we have heard about today and that is, parasite poisoning.

Giardia lamblia organisms exist in two forms, as a living parasite and as a cyst. Only the cyst form is infectious to man, however, since the living parasite is destroyed in the digestive process. The Alberta provincial laboratories personnel who provide Parks Canada with testing services, discovered the giardia cyst. The gardia lamblia parasite causes vomiting, stomach flu, and sometimes, paralysis. Once it occurs in an area it continues to be a problem. It can be caused by poor handling of food anywhere in Canada. Probably the most common form is that it comes in the form of cysts from beavers. That is where the colloquial name has come from, "beaver fever". This cyst has got into the water supply in the townsite of Banff, and of course once it is in there it is very difficult to deal with.

• (1730)

The matter was reported to the Hon. Minister of the Environment, and the Minister decided he would have a study made in regard to this, which he did. He appointed a very excellent firm of consulting engineers, the Stanley Associates Engineering Ltd., and a very excellent report came out. The report indicated that the Banff water system has no facilities except chlorination to control giardia lamblia cysts, and chlorination becomes less effective at temperatures below 5 degrees Centigrade. It is worse in the winter months, and this is now the second year, when this has caused concern and sickness, and it is a very worrying thing. If notices continue to be handed to everybody who goes into the park and notices are posted in all public places not to drink the water, it is going to have the effect of keeping people away from that beautiful tourist area, which has taken years to develop and is now a world renowned area. People will not go to places if they are going to get sick while they are there.

Any consideration of water must also take into account the population which the system will serve. At the present time the Banff townsite has a population of probably 17,000, and the engineering firm said that by the year 2005 the population will be 35,000. That includes a reasonable amount of the one million people who travel through there, mostly in the summer months.

In view of the water projected demands, as the report indicates, the need for expansion of the water system is evident. I am not going to deal with that aspect today, but I am going to deal with this matter of the cysts that are in the water, and urge the Department to take a very definite stand in putting in an effective water filtration system.

Normally, in the Province of Alberta, if water does not reach a certain standard, the municipality is required by law to put in a water treatment system. Banff, of course, being under the control of the federal Government, does not come under the provincial regulations. If Banff was a normal town in Alberta, the town would have been ordered to find the money and put in a water treatment system, because it is essential that every municipality and every Government is careful to make sure we have good drinking water. Infected water is what is worrying the people of Banff today.

The importance of putting in a water treatment system has received a great deal of study. It is an expensive process. The engineers have come up with a suggestion that $10.2 million would provide a system that not only provides water that meets all the qualities of good drinking water but provides a water treatment system that would serve the people for many, many years. I think this is essential. When we say $10.2 million, it certainly sounds like a lot of money, but we have to remember that the federal Government has, in the last full fiscal year, collected more than $6.5 million from the Banff area, and that has been going on for many years because a million or more people go there, from all parts of the world, every year.

I think it is essential that we stop trying to use palliatives or bandaids in this particular area and face the issue and put in a water treatment system. That is the only cure. Medical people tell me there is no other way of effectively destroying the cysts and stopping the spread of this disease. What I hope never happens is that someone will die from this disease, and that is quite possible. I have a stack of letters from people who have become sick, very, very ill, from the water. Water was the common cause, the health unit doctor tells me. So it is essential that we get a water treatment system in Banff at the earliest possible time.

I strongly recommend to the Minister and the officials of Parks Canada that the recommendations of Stanley Associates Engineering be followed and acted on immediately. It is over a year since this has become a problem, and surely we should put our money where our mouth is and make sure that the people in that area have good, clean drinking water. That is an important part of our environment.

I think that any national park within a Province should come under the rules and regulations of the standards set by that Province in regard to clean air and clean water. I think the national parks, because they are a separate entity, should not be excused from the standards that have been set by the provincial Governments. Certainly a number of people are concerned about it.

I want to give just one or two indications of how widespread the concern is. In the Banff School District, the Chairman of the Banff Community School Committee, which is an elected body, wrote to the Hon. Minister on June 21, 1982. It reads:

> It has come to our attention that Parks Canada has not yet made a decision whether to install a water treatment plant in Banff, therefore we would like to strongly recommend that Parks Canada take immediate action to have such a plant built.
> The problem of giardia lambia in the Banff water system still persists and it is a severe health hazard to the residents of Banff. In addition, one must consider the millions of tourists who visit the town annually and have no facilities with which to boil water to ensure that it is fit for consumption.

That is from local people.

Then we had a letter from a medical doctor from Quebec from the Laurenval School Board which reads:

> I have just returned from a two week conference with the Canadian Education Association at Banff, Alberta.

He goes on to say:

> The presence of giardiasis in the Banff water supply is a potentially dangerous situation with long-term ill effects possible.

This is from a medical doctor from Quebec who is very concerned that no action is being taken about this, and it is a serious matter. An ordinary, everyday citizen wrote that she suffered a great deal of illness, and she wonders why we are finding new wells and then putting that water into the water system that already has cysts in it. We could go on and on. I do not want to take the time of the House with regard to that but it is not just simply the local people who have complaints. It is people who are highly trained and people who realize what this giardis lambia can do to the human body. What the long term effects of it are is still something which is even more questionable.

The Department now has the set-up, and I think that Parks Canada will make a very serious mistake if they now start to try to bandaid this problem by digging new wells and doing this and that and the other thing. It will never be cheaper than it is right now to put in a water treatment system. A water treatment system is going to be required eventually, and it will never be cheaper than right now. I strongly urge the Department to give this serious consideration and to not let this situation continue.

I have one other letter from a medical doctor from Ontario who is very concerned about this. He wrote his own Member and said:

> I thought you would be interested—

• (1740)

He went on:

> Worse, however, John told me of the water supply in Banff, Alberta. Apparently the municipal water supply is provided from the National Park and is the responsibility of that Department.

And he said:

> In every hotel room he states was a notice warning not to drink the water, but so far apparently nothing has been done to correct this.

We cannot overemphasize the importance and the necessity of good water and good air. Again I say it is the responsibility of every one of us to do our part in keeping our air and water pure. There is also a greater responsibility upon those in Government to make sure that town sites with 10,000 or 18,000 people will not be subjected to water that has cysts and parasites in it. That situation should be corrected at the earliest possible moment.

Mr. Bloomfield: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor). Is this a local natural problem in the water table in the Banff area or is this an artificial pollutant that has come from some surface source?

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, the medical doctor told me that two beavers were found in the water supply system. The beavers were removed and were analyzed by the Health Department. The Health Department found cysts in the beavers. It was concluded that the cysts came from the beavers in that area and that the beavers got into the water system somehow. I believe that is the cause of the cysts in the water.

Mr. Bloomfield: Mr. Speaker, do I understand that the system is contaminated, the pipes and the delivery system into the town?

Mr. Taylor: Yes, Mr. Speaker. This system brings water into the town. Parks Canada, in an attempt to help out, dug two wells with the idea of adding chlorine and so on to eradicate the cysts. But in bringing the water into the town supply, the water from the wells had to be joined into the water supply in which the beavers were found. Some dissolving occurred, but the cysts are still there and people are still getting sick. We need a water treatment plant, and with the use of chlorination this should provide one of the purest water supplies in the country.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, I have a brief question for the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor). But before putting it, I want to mention something which I checked earlier. I have great respect for the Hon. Member for Hillsborough (Mr. McMillan). I checked with one of my staff and it is true we had a misunderstanding with respect to the raccoon dog issue.

However, the Hon. Member for Bow River gives me an opportunity to follow up on something on which I also checked with my staff concerning comments made by earlier speakers in the Progressive Conservative Party regarding the relationship between big business and the chemical companies. Knowing that the Hon. Member is very long of political tooth, I thought I would put the question to him. The Special Committee on Acid Rain identified some of Canada's main polluters. Of the six they looked at, the contributions to the Conservatives and Liberals between 1974 and 1981 were as follows: Inco Ltd, $418,000; Algoma Steel $122,000; Hudson's Bay, $66,000; Falconbridge Nickel, $62,000; and Suncor $34,000. An amount of $514,000 was given to the Liberals and $508,000 was given to the Tories. Nothing was given to the New Democratic Party by any of those companies.

Mr. Nickerson: I am not surprised, you are not worth anything.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Fulton: When we talk about pressure tactics, the companies mentioned above were identified as among the ten largest polluters in Canada. How do political Parties and Members of Parliament in those Parties that get such huge sums—and we are talking about a half a million dollars—divorce themselves from that kind of pressure?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. I have doubts as to the relevance of the Hon. Member's question. It hardly relates to the remarks made by the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) during the course of his speech. However, with the indulgence of the House perhaps we could allow a comment from the Hon. Member for Bow River.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I think the Liberal Party can speak for itself. But the Progressive Conservative Party accepts donations in amounts ranging from five cents up. If people who believe in our cause want to contribute, they contribute with no strings attached. Under no obligation do we sell the health of the people for donations to the Party.

Mr. Jim Schroder (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, while I do not agree with the tone and the detail of the resolution today, I welcome the chance to speak in this debate. I would certainly not be telling you anything new or startling if I were to say that the public perception of the chemical industry these days is not a very flattering one. In fact, this was the subject of an article on the editor's page of a recent issue of Chemical and Engineering News. The title of the article was "Chemophobia," that is, fear of chemicals. It was about a phenomenon so widespread that this term has been coined to characterize it. It is interesting that we seem to like to put things into context and perhaps change our language in order to make something more relevant. Chemophobia reminds me of a story that I read. Unfortunately, I cannot remember who the author was, but he wrote: "We no longer live in the slums. We live in the inner city." He wrote, "Once I was poor and then I was needy. Next I was deprived, and the last thing I knew I was disadvantaged. I still did not have a nickel to my name, but I sure had a great vocabulary." We can add chemophobia to our vocabulary.

It is one of the ironies of our society that we demand the standard of living that chemicals, among other things, have given us, and we are unwilling to see that standard decline. Yet, at the same time, we seem reluctant to pay the full price that the safe use of chemicals demands. The thrust of the article was that chemophobia has reached such proportions that the chemical industry has been, to a certain extent, paralyzed by it, and is on the defensive as a result.

A good part of the public's wariness stems from the sheer intimidation that a layman feels when confronted by a seemingly impenetrable mass of scientific jargon, more of the so-called Newspeak like chemophobia. This, and the fact that chemicals are all around us and not necessarily to be feared, was neatly brought home in an article run in a quality periodical. I believe it was the New Yorker. The ad simply consisted of an attractive and appetizing picture of a "natural" orange. Appended to this was a list of the chemicals it contained, which was as long as your arm.

I think it was the Hon. Member for The Battlefords-Meadow Lake (Mr. Anguish) who discussed a problem which was very complicated which, in turn, indicated how complex the whole problem is.

I am glad to have an opportunity for a few moments to talk a little bit about the science of toxicology, what a toxicologist does and the role he plays in helping us to solve this most complex problem. Recently I had a chance to read a planning study about the establishment of a Canadian centre for toxicology. This was developed by the University of Guelph and the University of Toronto. While the study talks about centres in Guelph and Toronto, it looks as though this plan could easily be expanded to have national scope. I am very proud of the fact that one of the universities that is involved in this study is the University of Guelph which happens to be my Alma Mater. I think it is important to realize the potentials of an institute such as this and to see how lacking we really are in basic knowledge of many of the problems that are related to toxic substances in our environment. There are other terms which are again part of our Newspeak. We talk about things that are either gross or microscopic and we talked about micro or macro. We have no difficulty with chemicals which appear in such high concentration that they can be tasted and seen. They provide some warning about their presence. The major problem we will face in the future concerns those chemicals that are present in amounts that are infinitesimal. These chemicals only cause problems after they have been consumed constantly in these small amounts.

• (1750)

A fortunate fact to remember is that our environment contains natural sentinels to detect environmental problems. The Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) talked about the beaver. No doubt, they were finding this illness in beavers. The fact that they found a cyst in the beaver and that the beavers were probably dying gave us some indication that there was a problem. This happens very often in our environment.

I would like to elaborate on the institution of toxicology. The proposal is to create this institution called the Canadian Centre for Toxicology. Although it will draw heavily upon existing strengths in toxicology of the University of Guelph and the University of Toronto, it will be an autonomous institution operated in partnership with Governments, industry, labour and universities. I think this is an important consideration. It will have the credibility of an independent organization which adheres to the highest standards of scientific integrity. It will interface with other institutions across Canada to form an integral part of the total network, and will foster a co-operative approach among these organizations.

What will be the intent of this organization? They go on to say in this report that the dangers which the increasing use of toxic chemicals present to human health and the environment are now the subject of acute and valid public concern. They go on to say that these concerns arise because we do not know enough about these chemicals to weigh their long-term effects. The public does not believe that existing regulations provide adequate protection, and they demand more assurance. In some instances, the public in pressing for action, has been ill-informed but it is clear that some toxins do pose risks to human health and to the environment. The extent of these risks is poorly understood.

This new institute for toxicology wants to see major new efforts being made to obtain data on these compounds to regulate them wisely and therefore be able to reduce the risk of their use. Incidents of damage will continue to occur, and some will be disastrous, but unless such incidents are prevented, extensive and costly corrective action will be needed. We are seeing evidence of this today, costly, corrective, after-the-fact solutions.

Another danger we have is that public pressure might force unwarranted removal of important chemicals from the market and place our resource and secondary industries at a competitive disadvantage. I find the description in this proposal about the statement of need and intent to be very relevant to the debate today.

Another area in which we are deficient in Canada is research. I would like to talk for a moment about research in toxicology and what that means. First, what is a toxicologist? A toxicologist is a scientist in his or her own right. It is the science that deals with the effects of poisons on living organisms, from micro-organisms to man. It also deals with the effects on the entire living systems, a type of ecotoxicology. As well, toxicology increasingly deals with controlling, curing and avoiding the harmful effects of toxic chemicals on life.

Toxicology must determine the impact of toxic substances on man and his environment so that decisions can be made on the use of toxicants based on a valid system of risks and benefits.

I hope I have made it quite clear that I am very supportive of this institute of toxicology which these two universities have established and for which they are attempting to receive support.

I would like to close by saying that there are probably fewer than 200 trained toxicologists in Canada. If the science of toxicology is to be pursued, we naturally must train more of these scientists. During the last 30 years, a series of disasters have focused attention on the inadequacy of the science of toxicology. I do not need to mention thalidomide, methyl mercury, dioxin or PCBs. There is a whole list.

I would like to draw to your attention the fact that the necessity for training toxicologists, for learning more about these toxic substances and therefore developing a high category of toxicologists in Canada is very important. If for no other reason, I took part in this debate today to bring the importance of this science to the attention of the House.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I had hoped to have a few minutes to participate in this debate. Since there are only approximately two minutes remaining, I would just like to express my dismay and displeasure at the lack of leadership we have had from the Government across the way in environmental problems in the last 15 years. In fact, they have been in Government for the last 20 years, going back to the days of Lester Pearson. We are still polluting our lakes and air and creating an exceedingly unhealthy environment for all Canadians. I suggest that it is a damning indictment of a Government that is more concerned with the profits of its friends in the companies and corporations and with lining the pockets of the rich. I include my friend, the Minister of Agriculture, (Mr. Whelan), who is a born again capitalist like Ronald Reagan, as are the other Ministers in the Cabinet.

It is sad that they make that their priority while letting the environment suffer. The Great Lakes are being polluted and we are producing millions of tons of wastes every year. There are very few controls. The fish are being poisoned.

Mr. Bloomfield: Mr. Speaker, is this a speech or is it a question?

Mr. Nystrom: I was trying to make a three-minute speech because one of the culprits in poisoning our environment is the Minister of Agriculture as a result of his very loose regulations.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. It being 6 p.m., it is my duty to inform the House that in accordance with Standing Order 62(11), the proceedings on the motion have expired.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

AGRICULTURE—REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE FOR BEEF INDUSTRY

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I asked the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) a question in the House which reads as follows:

> In view of the very depressed situation in the Canadian beef industry this year, with low cattle prices last fall and continuing high input costs for interest and farm machinery repairs, is the Minister planning to implement the provisions of the Anderson-Vandermeulen Report on the beef industry, or provide stabilization payments to producers this winter? What action is planned by the Government?

The Minister went on to say that he was having a series of discussions regarding this matter. I asked the Minister this question because on August 28 of 1981, the Minister of Agriculture announced that he was establishing a commission consisting of Mr. E. H. Anderson and Mr. H. M. Vandermeulen to report on the state of the beef cattle industry in Canada. The press release indicated the whole range of tremendous problems facing the Canadian Agriculture Industry today, including input costs. In relation to Mr. Anderson and Mr. Vandermeulen, the press release also stated:

> They will report to Mr. Whelan by January, 1982, on how the interests of Canadian consumers can be best served in a manner consistent with Canadian economic development while, at the same time, permitting the industry to expand and producers to make a living commensurate with their risk-taking, labour and management ability.

In fact, that report was made just about a year ago.

Mr. Anderson came to my constituency and held meetings with a number of beef producers both on Manitoulin Island and in the District of Algoma. We had a good chance to discuss the very serious problems with a representative group of producers. At that time, interest rates were much higher. The Government has taken some steps relating to reduction in interest rates for farm credit loans. We discussed with that group their interest in stabilization programs and the continuing problem of imports from offshore. Of course, this past fall we had difficulty when the Americans cut off our imports; not of live cattle but, rather, of red meat.

Those producers outlined a complete list of rising input costs, such as fertilizer, machinery and fuel costs, and gave a complete rundown of problems facing their industry. Most of those circumstances have not changed. Now, only a year later, input costs continue to rise. In fact, the returns for beef producers have not increased at all. This past fall, prices for cow-calf operators and general beef producers have continued to be unacceptably low.

Likewise, during our meeting at Algoma, we discussed stabilization and the problem of reconciling Provincial programs. Some of the western Provinces, such as Saskatchewan and Alberta, have extensive stabilization programs for their cow-calf producers. We discussed the control of imports, the cost of interest and money and so on.

I must say that both Mr. Anderson and Mr. Vandermeulen really approached the problem with a very sympathetic ear to the producers. I hope the Minister will be able to make that report public. I know the producers would like to read it. In any event, I hope the Minister and the Government will move very soon on the provisions of that report. Of course, it would be much better if it could be made available to Members of Parliament and the general public in order that they could see those recommendations. I am sure many of them are worthwhile.

• (1805)

The other question I put to the Minister was whether the industry would qualify this year for stabilization payments. Traditionally they had to be stabilized at 90 per cent of the average over the last five years. The Government should move to bring that to at least 100 per cent, and reconcile on a national basis the various provincial programs. Some Provinces have such programs. As far as I know, there is no stabilization program in Ontario this year. I hope the Minister will move on a national program.

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, it is always a pleasure to answer the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) concerning the beef industry. Some people may be surprised that the constituency of Algoma has such a large beef industry. I have visited many times with the Hon. Member and I realize the importance the beef industry holds for his constituency.

I want to begin by recalling the conditions in the industry which caused me to ask for the Anderson Vandermeulen Report. We have had several types of reports and studies. I said that we needed somebody to put those together in order to come up with some solutions.

From 1979 to the present, beef producers in Canada have faced the most difficult period since the Second World War. Hog prices as well were low to 1980 and 1981, and began to pick up only in mid-1982. Bankruptcies among beef and hog producers in 1981 were very high; much higher than in 1982. Beef and hog producers in some regions of Canada appear to have been hurt worse than in others. Beef producers in the Grey-Bruce Peninsula of Ontario and parts of the Alberta industry appear to have been suffering the most. The Province of Alberta produces approximately 42 per cent of total beef production in Canada. Hog producers in Quebec have suffered major losses resulting in the first downturn in that industry in Quebec in some years.

I want to recall this, and I am sure the Hon. Member is aware of it. I proposed 100 per cent income insurance to the Provinces in 1978 for all products; beef, pork and all other agricultural products. This was turned down by the Provinces at that time. The same people are now asking me to please come forward with a plan which will stabilize this industry. They do not say, "like the one you proposed in 1978". That is what I proposed then. Even farm organizations turned it down. I had Cabinet approval. We then had the Clark Government which took the authority away from its Minister. They queashed the idea, saying it was too costly. Some Members on that side are now asking for that type of plan.

Because of the difficulties faced in this industry I asked Mr. Anderson and Mr. Vandermeulen to explore all its aspects, every part. As the Hon. Member for Algoma said, some Provinces do not have plans. Some cannot afford one, and some have hit-and-miss programs. They are all saying they want a national plan.

The study included not only an examination of farm-level marketings, but as well the packing, wholesale and distribution of red meats. The report was finalized in 1982, with translations and that type of thing, and it is now before Cabinet. We have had one or two discussions on it, and we hope to finalize them in the next three weeks.

As far as stabilization is concerned, there will be no payment if we just use 90 per cent. If we use 90 per cent of the five-year average, there will be a payment. We have made certain recommendations in accordance with the laws we have to abide by, the Agricultural Stabilization Act, 1975. I want a program that will get the most returns from the marketplace and not from the Treasury of the nation.

PRIVACY—MISUSE OF PERSONAL INFORMATION STORED IN COMPUTERS

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Protection of privacy now lags far behind available computer technology. An unprecedented amount of information about Canadians is now in computer banks and we will see a very dramatic increase in the near future, but we have little or no protection against abuse or misuse of that information.

In answer to my question in the House on January 25, the Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan) confirmed that the question of creating a new offence for the misuse of personal information is now under consideration. I would also like to see the Government give some leadership to those in the information industry, encouraging them to draw up voluntary guidelines respecting the use of information in their banks. Some industry spokesmen have said that the only privacy protection they can offer clients is their word, because the potential problems are complex, and they will have to wait for some years to see what the problems really are in order to develop appropriate ways of dealing with them. I would prefer to see a serious effort made now to increase confidentiality protection, and to build some measures of protection into new computer programs from the beginning.

Most Canadians welcome the exciting development of new technology which has delivered many new services and greater efficiency in many areas, and has unlimited potential to add to the quality of life. However, each new computerization of data compiled by hand, and each consolidation of information in data banks, spreads personal data further and further afield from the person who has responsibility for it.

Having good medical information in computer banks covering the years of one's life may be of great help if one arrives in a strange hospital and a good history is needed, but there is also potential for embarrassment if, for instance, that information is known and is used to make the case that someone has health problems and is not fit for a job which he or she very badly wants. So at every side there is an advantage and a potential problem.

Many home owners are now using computerized security services; doors and buzzers are wired to a device attached to the cable line and the systems send an electronic alert to the cable company in case of medical emergency, burglary or fire, so that the cable company can phone for ambulance, police or fire brigade, as the case may be. Many of these systems are being purchased by people who are very pleased to have an additional sense of security. In the interest of providing that security, the systems sweep the home at frequent intervals. Information about a family's routines, if it fell into the wrong hands, could in fact be used by the very criminals from whom the system was supposed to protect the home owner. The quickly developing two-way computer system which enables viewers to do credit card shopping, banking and select from electronic newspapers at home has enormous potential value in terms of convenience, particularly for people at home caring for young children or sick relatives, or for handicapped persons. There is potential to enlarge their frontiers enormously. However, information about financial transactions going into the wrong hands could be misused.

I raise this matter not in the interest of being sensational or over-emphasizing the problem, but rather in the interest of promoting reasoned, practical safeguards and solutions now while there still is time and before we are overtaken by events.

• (1815)

Mr. Al MacBain (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson) raises a very serious matter and there can be no suggestion in my reply that there was any sensationalism either in the presentation or the subject matter she raises.

The Privacy Commissioners' Study was commissioned specifically to obtain guidance on whether the Government should act to regulate the use of the Social Insurance Number in Canada. While Ms. Hansen recommended that there was no need to regulate the use of the Social Insurance Number, she did point out that there was a problem associated with data-linkage, which is part of a more widespread problem concerning the unauthorized use of personal information. This is the very subject addressed by the Hon. Member for Trinity this evening.

The Commissioners' recommendation was that an offence be included in the Criminal Code to prohibit dishonest dealings with personal data provided to obtain a benefit or service, under compulsion of law, or has been placed for private use in the custody of another. The recommendation has significant federal-provincial implications since the area of data protection outside the federally regulated sphere to a great extent involves the Provinces. Although the Provinces have not yet acted in this area, the use of the Criminal Law power by the federal Government to regulate the use and exposure of personal information might, without provincial involvement, be viewed by them as intruding on some aspect of their responsibility. The Privacy Commissioners' recommendation has been brought to the attention of provincial Governments and their views upon it have been sought. However, because of the nature of the issue, any proposal to act upon it would have to be subject to future consultation.

The proposal to create such a criminal offence is being reviewed as part of the Criminal Law review. Some part of the recommendation, as it relates to computerized personal data, may be incorporated as part of the recommendation regarding computer crime.

We are also looking at the wider issue of the general protection of privacy, more in line with what the Hon. Member was directing us to this evening. In some countries in western Europe this whole protection of computerized data is dealt with in a regulatory scheme. There is built in a process of review by the regulatory body to ensure compliance with the conditions of the licence. That use and disclosure scheme could be similar to the one now presently contained in the new federal Privacy Act.

Is my time up, Mr. Speaker?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): I am afraid it is. The Hon. Member for Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands (Mr. Manly).

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE—SUGGESTED SCHOOL ATTENDANCE FOR RECIPIENTS

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, on December 8 I asked the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) if he would introduce changes to the Unemployment Insurance Act. I wanted to see some changes which would allow unemployed workers to improve their job qualifications by attending school while collecting Unemployment Insurance. I asked the question in light of the 1.5 million Canadians unemployed, for whom no jobs exist. The Minister chose to downplay the unemployment crisis in Canada and simply repeated the obvious fact that the Act already had some provisions for training. He did not deal with the fact, which I had mentioned in my question, that there were long waiting lists for UIC sponsored training programs. The Minister's answer did, however, faithfully reflect the policy of his Department and Government. It denied a tragedy taking place in Canadian homes and communities through unemployment, and ignored the possibilities for constructive action which could and should be taken. Many laid-off workers want to use the misfortune of unemployment as an opportunity for further training. Now is the time the Government should take seriously the need for and possibility of improving the skills of Canadian workers. Let me give a couple of examples from my own constituency, even though this is a national problem.

• (1820)

I know a young father, who is very concerned because he is beginning to develop some symptoms of the nervous disease known as "whitehand" which affects workers who have to use vibrating tools such as power saws. He knows he cannot continue as a faller in the woods forever. He would like to use the time when he is laid off to take vocational training. All of the UIC sponsored programs in his area of interest, however, have waiting lists of up to two years. He does not want to waste the time when he is unemployed, but he has no choice. If he goes ahead on his own and enrols in a course, his Unemployment Insurance payments will be cut off. As a married man with a family, he cannot afford that and he worries that a few years ahead whitehand might make it impossible for him to keep his faller's job. This is the time it should be possible for him to take a training program.

Another young man worked at the Chemainus sawmill which was closed indefinitely last year. When he enrolled in a school to train as a mechanic, his Unemployment Insurance payments were cut off. When he appealed, his appeal was denied. I should like to read some excerpts from a letter he wrote which outlines his case. He begins:

> I have been unemployed for some months now. I have been cut off of UI because the umpire, board of appeals etc. felt I am some sort of leech. This is not true. I am pursuing diligently even DESPERATELY the difficult task of finding work. I am only running into dead ends everywhere. I will take any job anywhere, anytime, anyplace—
> Eventually I want to be a mechanic. The board of review seems to have seized on this to suggest I am picky about the jobs I will take. They say I want more than minimum wage. I ask you, WHO DOESN'T? I have worked at less than minimum wage on most of the tasks I have found since I lost my job.
>
> It is the only work I can find. I took the attitude that maybe these small jobs might lead to something better, but unfortunately they did not. They did not last.
>
> I want a job that is permanent and full time. This is my idea of a job. The board of review seems to think because of this I will not take other jobs. This is untrue, my record speaks for itself. A review of my report cards will show I take any job I can get.
>
> I am going to school to try to improve my chances of getting a job. What is wrong with that? I asked manpower to sponsor me but they refused. They said they would add my name to the wait list. There is a four year wait. The course is being cut permanently in about 5 months. So I took the course anyway on my own initiative. It is a lot of money but I am desperate for a job and in today's job market it seems my chances are getting worse and worse.
> I am an insulted person, if manpower phoned me up and said they had a job for me I would not hesitate to take it.

The board of review had some interesting comments on the case. It found him a very direct and forthright youth, and said that they certainly admired his tenacity and ambition.

Surely in this period of unemployment, changes could be made to the Act which would allow unemployed workers greater scope of education. If they are taking training for jobs and trades in which a skill shortage is likely to occur, they should be allowed to do so while continuing to receive unemployment insurance benefits. We should not see another lost generation ahead of us, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

Mr. Rémi Bujold (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) previously answered part of the Hon. Member's question here in the House. As he pointed out at the time, we do not have to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act to enable people receiving benefits to go to school. The Act already contains a provision, namely Section 39, which provides that individuals directed to authorized training courses are eligible for unemployment insurance benefits for the duration of the course and for six additional weeks. These measures are not linked exclusively to the occupational training program since they apply to practically all authorized courses.

Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, in its expenditures for job creation and training courses for the unemployed, the Govenment is not restricted to funds coming out of the Unemployment Insurance account. People who are not eligible for unemployement insurance benefits can receive allowances providing them with some financial assistance while they receive training. Of course, Mr. Speaker, there are long waiting lists. But the House will agree that our most recent legislation on occupational training concentrated on courses that would prepare students for existing jobs. Not long ago, we had a very important conference here in Ottawa to discuss employment opportunities in the years to come, and the possibility of organizing training courses in such a way that the vast majority of unemployed Canadians would be able to receive training in high technology subjects and thus re-enter the labour market.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. In accordance with the provisions of the order of Friday, January 21, 1983, the House stands adjourned until Monday at 11 a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

At 6.25 p.m., the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

INCOME TAX

AMENDMENTS TO STATUTE LAW

The House resumed from Monday, December 13, 1982, consideration of the motion of Mr. Lalonde that Bill C-139, to amend the statute law relating to income tax (No. 2), be read the second time and referred to a Committee of the Whole.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would like to inquire whether it is the Government's intention to proceed with the time allocation motion that was introduced on Friday last after the Question Period this afternoon.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Definitely, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, this opening session of this week is part of the experience of this House in hit-and-run contact with the subject of income tax. Bill C-139 had its origin on that nefarious night of November 12, 1981. Then there was another interlude. There were some letters of clarification. There was an interlude until June 28 last. Then there was a statement, which was no other than a budget message, from the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) in the latter part of October when this House resumed its sittings.

In that time we have seen the economy of Canada take a further precipitous drop, much of it, I suggest as a result of that disastrous night of November 12, 1981. Stacking it on, we also saw the effects of the national energy policy. The confidence of business and of individuals in Canada did not just fly out the window; it jetted out the window. We know what followed thereon. The Government said that we were into a world-wide recession. Balderdash! We created most of our own.

The National Energy Program took the most successful part of the Canadian economy, lopped off its head and pierced its bod's with any number of doubled-edged swords. That tattered remains of a government can only be called a disgraceful gang of plunderers of the Canadian economy. Because of the National Energy Program and the subsequent actions taken by the Canadian Government, had they been financiers in the private investment field, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Chrétien) the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) could have been up on charges of manipulating the market and driving down the value of corporate stocks, both foreign controlled and Canadian owned, to the extent that that confidence so needed in the investment market by both Canadians and foreigners was gone.

We are now trying to sweep up some of the debris that was left by the former Minister of Finance. What a disastrous term of office he had. The Government has adopted a time allocation frame of mind. This Bill is 300-odd pages long. It is extremely complex and I am sure that 90 per cent of the Members of the Government do not know what it contains. Yet we will be told that we have to deal with it in a matter of a few days, both on second reading and in Committee of the Whole, because the Government's timetable is in such a shambles.

I should like to refer to the committee report of October 5, 1982, Mr. Speaker. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn), shared the Chair for that committee with the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans). Usually five of us attended meetings, although sometimes there were only four Members there. Once the attendance actually went up to seven Members but I think that was the highest number that was ever present. I think the chairmen of the committee will agree that it was not really consultation as we examined the budgetary process.

At those sessions in late August and in September we obtained observations from various bodies in Canada. The committee met morning, afternoon and evening in order to accommodate witnesses and hear explanations from officials of the Tax Planning Branch of the Department of Finance. Officials from the Department of National Revenue attended as well, but they were not heard. Those of us who attended the sessions derived a good deal of knowledge about the way officials in the Department of Finance think. To them this was consultation, but to me it was only consultation after the event.

I want to see the budgetary process changed, Mr. Speaker. In over 20 years, on both sides of the House, I have been involved in budgets and it has been a most frustrating experience. When I was Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Revenue I participated, with my colleague who was then the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance, in interdepartmental considerations of income tax changes. That was purely an in-house operation and as Parliamentary Secretaries we had to be exceedingly tough and tell the officials that certain things they proposed just would not fly. That is not enough, but is not the type of process one wants.

I will not talk this morning about individual points of detail; I would have to speak for two hours and I am allowed only 20 minutes. These points will be coming up in future discussions, in which I intend to participate fully. But we should understand what we are after, and that is, at this time of year, a statement of budgetary intentions wherein the Government generally lays out its program—how much money will be required and what areas of Government revenues are suffering. Then we could have Hon. Members of the House and of the other place, the public, major economic associations, manufacturing groups and individuals make their comment, and some time in October we could settle on the budget and get it through. This would tell people precisely what they may anticipate.

Since November 12, 1981 we have had nothing but a great degree of uncertainty in soft costs and capital cost allowances. The premiums for medical services in private plans were added on to the income of individuals for whom payments were made; the previously very successful income-averaging contracts, the IAACs, were cancelled; and we went into forward averaging. This is all fine for a socialist Government. It is purely a socialist proposition because the money has to be paid by the individual to the Government and then may be claimed back under the plan, whereas, under income-averaging contracts, it went into private investment and represented a great deal of money. We will get to discussing the other deterrents of participating in forward averaging.

No, this is not the way we should proceed with regard to dealing with the budget. We certainly should not have to deal with a collection of all the left over sweepings on the floor, having been discarded by the tax proposals of 1970 following the Carter report. There is much discarded, disreputable Carter tax theory implemented or included in the November 12 budget. Of course, the Minister did not want to understand, his colleagues did not understand what they were doing and Government backbenchers were in some sort of euphoria, not wanting to know. What I charge them with is not wanting to know what is in the budget and what it means to Canada. Only when people come to them, small-businessmen, for instance, who say "You are killing us with the tax on the dividends to small business" does anything happen.

Incidentally, the theory in the tax program branch is that returns on dividends to an owner of a small business are equivalent to an employee's salary from that small business. As far as the individual is concerned, that is his return. But the small businessman has sleepless nights; he has to worry about meeting payrolls. He has high blood pressure as a result of these activities. He has all the worries. The Finance Department grandiloquently says he should only be getting a salary, that his return is equivalent to a salary. What nonsense.

There is a theory in the Finance Department which has been applicable for years. The Government has a right to every dollar earned by an individual because as the Minister responsible for the Status of Women in her startling proposals said the other day, a spouse's allowance is a tax expenditure, a child allowance is a tax expenditure, the personal allowance given to each taxpayer is a tax expenditure and every incentive is a tax expenditure. In other words, the Crown is giving up that money.

What does the word "expenditure" mean but a putting out of money? This is tax money being put out by the Government. That is absolute socialism right to the rotten core of it. All of that money belongs to the Crown. People have shed sweat and worried and have done all those things that are required to earn that money, be it by way of salary or be it by way of initiative and capability—the doers and the movers in this society—and it is not right. God only knows what the Government thinks. It talks about patting the pioneers on the back. It talks about all the things that have been done, that older generations deserve the accolades of the new generations. But that was not done by telling people that they were working for the Government and that the Government, the state, was allowing them to keep a certain proportion of their earnings. What was allowed to be kept? One can go through all of the documentation of the Finance Department and its philosophy, which is that everything a taxpayer, corporate or individual, is allowed to keep is a tax expenditure to be controlled by the Minister of Finance and his minions. That is the philosophy. That is the end result. I will hear the views of the former Parliamentary Secretary, but that is the net result.

• (1125)

We are told that the net result of an increase in child allowance will be increased tax expenditures. We are told that incentives with regard to multiple residences, or MURBs, are tax expenditures. That is nonsense, I believe. I have had a lifetime of exposure to these matters and I find it incomprehensible and an abuse of language for the Government to say that everything that the taxpayer keeps in income tax represents an expenditure by the state. In other words, we all exist for the benefit of the state. That is a total denial—

Mr. Evans: That is false.

Mr. Lambert: Let the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre show how the operation of the philosophy of income tax under the Liberal administration is other than that.

I see you are getting anxious, Mr. Speaker, and I recognize that I have had my 20 minutes. I hope to raise this subject again in some other guise because this is a matter which must be brought to the attention of the people of Canada.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Standing Orders of the House now provide for a ten-minute exchange period for questions and answers. Are Members rising to put questions to the Hon. Member who has just spoken?

Mr. Jim Peterson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Economic Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert)—

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I trust that this will be in the spirit that motivated the committee to provide this exchange and that it will not be statement or diatribe that cannot be answered or that the period will be occupied by others for the whole time.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The Chair recognizes the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of State for Economic Development (Mr. Peterson).

Mr. Peterson: Mr. Speaker, I rise not to ask questions of the Hon. Member for Edmonton West but to respond to some of the charges he has made. I believe I do this in the spirit which he has just articulated in order to suggest to Members of the House the directions that we perhaps should be pursuing in the future with respect to our fiscal policy, monetary policy and the development of our general economic climate in Canada.

The Hon. Member for Edmonton West laced his remarks with hyperbole and misinformation. For example, is it Canada's fault or is this Government to blame for the situation which is taking place in energy throughout the entire world, a world of chaos? Absolutely not. Can he say that the budget of November 12 is responsible for the recession in Canada?

Mr. Lambert: Yes.

Mr. Peterson: Is it responsible for the recession in the United States, in the entire western industrial world, or the entire world? This type of hyperbole does not help us find the constructive solutions which we have an obligation to find for the people of Canada.

In that spirit, I believe that we on all sides of the House should look at what we can do and suggest for both the short and long-term benefit of Canada's economy. For the short term, I suggest we must provide the support mechanisms which will enable viable businesses to weather our current recession.

Over the longer term, we must set our goals for the productivity of Canadians. By this I mean we must set our goals on becoming world leaders in producing certain products both in our existing industries and in the industries and technologies of the future.

• (1130)

What is the role of a Government in this quest, this pursuit of our short-term and our long-term objectives? There are many roles for the Government to play, but the most important, I believe, is the role involved in creating a favourable monetary and fiscal regulatory environment, a favourable climate in these areas in which the private sector in Canada can thrive to the maximum extent possible.

Dealing with monetary policy first, I believe that individual businesses, big and small, and investors in Canada cannot survive a tremendous resurgence in interest rates such as we have experienced in the past. It would be incredible today if interest rates were again to skyrocket. What would be our alternatives if interest rates in the United States start to go back up to the unprecedented high which we saw one year ago? We have a number of alternatives available to us and I just want to mention perhaps two. If we were to keep our interest rates lower than those in the United States, naturally foreigners would come here to attempt to borrow on Canada's capital markets. We could protect our capital markets from this type of foreign borrowing which would have the tendency to drive our rates up even higher. We could protect our capital markets, which would then have low interest rates, by resorting to techniques such as the interest equalization tax which was used by the United States for over a decade. This would be one approach we should consider.

Another approach, and I believe it merits the serious consideration of Members of this House, would be to allow a modest or reasonable drop in the exchange value of the Canadian dollar as against the American dollar. This would certainly have some adverse impacts, but I think that on the whole looking at this type of approach might produce some positive benefits for Canadians. I would like to hear discussion on that type of point.

On the monetary side, as well our financial institutions have a very important role to play in both the short term and the long term. Let us consider our banks. In helping the private sector through the current recession, our financial institutions in Canada have an obligation to make available after-tax financing to our small businesses through the Small Business Development Bonds and other programs put in place by our Government.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Siddon: Where did you get the idea, Jim?

Mr. Peterson: We have created the environment in which these types of instruments can be issued to provide less of a cash drain on businesses in difficulty.

Our financial institutions have an obligation to make small businesses in difficulty aware of these instruments and to cooperate with them in every way possible to see that those who need assistance get that type of financing. That is why we put these measures in place. I am also concerned, with the tremendously huge financing which the banks have given to our bigger companies both in Canada and offshore. With the recession coming on, and with what our finance Committee found out about the banks being highly leveraged, I am concerned that our banks do not try to pull back their lines of credit as they affect small businesses in Canada.

It is much easier, we know, to go to small business people who have been building operations over the years and say to them, "We are calling your lines of credit". Small businesses do not necessarily have the clout of the billion dollar corporations here and abroad. Our financial institutions cannot, if it is their tendency, pull back those lines of credit from viable small businesses.

Unfortunately, I know of a couple of bad examples. People have come to me whose small businesses, employing 30 to 80 people, have not been adversely affected because of the recession, but even though they have maintained their businesses and have not defaulted on any bank loans, their bankers have come to them and said: "We will pull your loans". That is irresponsible. It creates additional unemployment. It is our small businesses which need that help in these tough times. Banks and financial institutions might be having difficulty with some big loans, but they have an obligation to support our small businesses.

I would also hope that we could get through many of the measures which have been before the House for a long period of time so that we could go on to new types of legislation, such as that dealing with our loan and trust institutions, so that they could enter into commercial lending and become an added source of funds, particularly for small business.

I also believe it would be worthwhile to study the investment powers of our major financial institutions; for example, our insurance companies and our loan and trust institutions. As Hon. Members are aware, they have the power to invest only 8 per cent of their funds in small, unproven enterprises, enterprises which do not have a proven track record. These institutions currently have very little ability to promote venture capital, to go out and help people who have an idea and are prepared to back it with all their managerial and technical ability, to get those new small businesses of the future going. The big institutions do not have the power to get into those areas.

I believe we should consider the possibility of increasing the size of the basket clause of our financial institutions. We might even consider the possibility that, in return for increasing their investment powers, they would have a greater obligation to consider the new types of ventures which the inventive genius of the Canadian entrepreneur is coming up with all the time.

The second area, after monetary policy and the role of our financial institutions, which I believe we must study in order to create a favourable type of economic environment for a recovery is our regulatory environment. The Task Force on Regulatory Reform made numerous recommendations as to the ways by which we can reduce the burden of regulation on the private sector. I am pleased to say that the former President of the Treasury Board and his successor have succeeded in implementing many of those reforms. I am delighted with the commitment of the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray) to continue on that path and to bring in additional reforms which will increase the consultative process and the opportunity for business, for labour and for environmentalists to participate with the Government in determining what types of regulations would best serve the needs of all Canadians.

Fiscal policy is the third arm of the trio of areas we must study in order to help restore and bring about the type of economic environment we want in Canada. We face a dilemma in this area. Business investors need fiscal certainty. They must be able to compute their cash flows, their return on investment, for a reasonable period of time. Otherwise, one cannot expect them to make the investment or commitments we need from the private sector. We must ask ourselves, is this need for fiscal certainty, a climate for fiscal stability, incompatible with the concept of tax reform? I do not believe it necessarily is.

The answer, I believe, depends on how one goes about the process of tax reform. First, there are many areas in our Income Tax Act, in our codes, which require rethinking. If we go about rethinking these changes in close consultation with the private sector, in co-operation, where we do it openly and allow much opportunity for input from those who will be affected in the short term and the long term, we will have the ability and knowledge to avoid changes which would upset that climate of fiscal certainty which is a key to economic recovery.

Secondly, for those who might be affected by reform, we can have generous resort to grandfathering clauses. In other words, we can say: "We are going to change the law, but since you made your investment and business decisions under the former law, you can continue for a reasonable period of time as if the former law under which you made your decisions continues to apply". I believe that type of spirit and co-operation can create the necessary fiscal environment.

What are some of the areas which I believe we, as Members from all sides of the House, should be looking at for reform? One is capital gains. Have we taken a good look at the effect inflation has on capital gains? How much of the gains people experience on their investments are merely inflationary and do not represent real gains? What about the farmers? Should we be reconsidering more realistic valuation dates for farms? What role do farms play in providing the retirement income of people who choose to leave their farms?

I would also like to ask, what about the role of investors and entrepreneurs? If, for example, a business person takes his small savings, say $5,000, and through diligence and entrepreneurial flair builds that operation up into a million dollar company and then wants to sell it, there would be taxes payable in the area possibly of $250,000. We have to ask ourselves, should we leave that $250,000 in the hands of the entrepreneur to reinvest in Canada and create more jobs, or should we leave it in the hands of the Government? Who can best go out and bring about economic recovery by creating new jobs? I believe that one of the things we should reconsider is the possibility of a rollover where an investor reinvests in Canada to create jobs here in Canada.

Another area I think we should look at is tax simplification for small businesses. Some of the most difficult and complicated provisions in the Income Tax Act relate to small businesses. I do not think that only accountants and lawyers should make money out of these types of provisions.

Research and development is the key to our economic growth in the future. We believe we should take a very expanded view of what research and development involves. There are companies in Canada who do not fall within that traditional concept of research and development. They have perhaps made design changes to such things as furniture. I know of one furniture company which has come up with new designs, and in spite of the fact that the furniture business is in difficulty in Canada, this one company is selling around the world. Their new designs and new products create new jobs for Canadians.

I think we should, in consultation with the private sector and the Opposition Parties, look at our incentives. Right now, under certain circumstances the private sector pays only 20 per cent of new research and development undertakings and initiatives. That is, in some cases, if they are increasing over the previous couple of years the investments they are making in these areas. Maybe we should get rid of that requirement for incrementality. Let us start talking about this and examining it together.

What about new venture capital for research and development for the new high tech, for the new sunrise industries? We have instruments called scientific research investment contracts which have been the brainchild of the private sector. Maybe we should be creating new types of investment vehicles on a federal basis that individuals can put their money in. There would be a tax conduit principle so that these types of operations can be institutionalized.

We know from the past what we have been able to do in terms of MURBs to help housing and create rental housing for Canadians. We know what we have been able to do with drilling funds in order to spur that type of investment. We know what we have been able to do for films. To me, one of the most important areas is to get this new technology operative and create new jobs. We should be looking at new mechanisms for facilitating that type of investment.

I also believe we have a tremendous opportunity in Canada because of the infrastructure that we have. The service industries that we have in Canada, our financial institutions, our accounting firms, our legal firms, our banks, our insurance institutions; all of these have given us a tremendous advantage when it comes to international competition. Should we not be looking at the possibility of expanding Canada's role as an international financial capital?

We should be looking at provisions in our tax treaties and in our Income Tax Act. This would enable foreigners to seek the stability of the Canadian environment, of the North American climate, to come here with their money, bring their money in, have their investments serviced here, have headquarters here for international operations and have the multinational corporations situate here in Canada using our service industries, using the stability that we have brought in the past to this type of circumstance.

These are just a few of the approaches which I believe we should consider on a non-partisan, non-confrontational basis, as Members of this House and in consultation with the private sector, with business and with labour. We are going to get a consensus for economic action in the 1980s by working together, government, business and labour, and I welcome the breakthroughs that have been made by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde), particularly in building the bridges of communication to the labour leaders in Canada. He deserves tremendous credit for having done this. He deserves great credit for having responded to the representations made by numerous people in the private sector in the drafting of his mini-budget of last October. This type of consultation, this type of input, this type of co-operation is critical to our future. I commend the Minister of Finance. It is the path and the process of the future. It is what we need.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Again, the Standing Orders provide for a ten-minute question and answer period. Are there Hon. Members seeking to ask questions?

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of State for Economic Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Peterson) was very eloquent about the fiscal certainty that is required, and I would ask him if he feels that the introduction of a budget in November, 1981, followed by a retreat in December, in April, and various retreats from that budget, plus the introduction of enabling legislation 15 months later, contributes to or detracts from fiscal certainty for the lawyers and accountants that he talks about?

Mr. Peterson: Mr. Speaker, first of all, a great deal of consultation went on immediately after that budget came down so it is very unfair for certain Members of the Official Opposition to suggest that Liberal backbenchers were sitting there unaware of what was happening. We were in the vanguard of bringing to the Minister's attention—

Mr. Lewis: I bet you were.

Mr. Peterson: We have been listening, Mr. Speaker. We were the ones who went to the Minister and brought the concerns of the private sector to him, and there is nothing new about this. We have taken our role in these areas extremely seriously.

The Hon. Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis) has also alluded to the fact that there has been a delay in bringing in these types of measures. Let me say this. His finance critic, the Hon. Member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson), said in his speech on this particular Bill at page 21531, and I quote:

> As I said earlier, the Government House Leader wants the Bill passed in eight sitting days, by December 22. That is totally irresponsible. Let us not forget that it is basically the same bureaucrats—

He also said that we, "do not need this legislation before mid-February next year".

This is what the Member for Etobicoke Centre said. He is proposing a filibuster by the Opposition rather than getting these things through, as the Member for Simcoe North has quite rightly suggested. We should be working together to get these measures through, to create a tax certainty; I welcome him and I hope he will talk to the Hon. Member for Etobicoke Centre to ensure that happens.

Income Tax

• (1150)

Mr. Lewis: Just one other question, if I may, Mr. Speaker, on a different matter about which the Parliamentary Secretary spoke. The Parliamentary Secretary will know that the original concept of the Small Business Development Bond was debt consolidation for small business. It has now been changed so that small businesses have to be going broke before they can get a small business development bond, if they can get one. Is that what the Parliamentary Secretary meant when he said the Government created the environment for the Small Business Development Bond?

Mr. Peterson: The point which the Hon. Member is bringing up is exactly the one which I was making—the necessity for our financial institutions to utilize the Small Business Development Bond and the Small Business Bond to provide help, as a bridging mechanism, for those small businesses which are in difficulty and have to weather the recession. We want them to be whole, to come out of this recession. We want them to maintain their employment levels. We want them to be poised for a "take-off". This type of approach is critical to helping those small businesses which have cash flow difficulties.

I suggest there is no magical solution that we in Ottawa are going to be able to bring about to do this. We can help try to create the instruments and the climate under which these things can go; but let us face it, it requires the co-operation of our financial institutions which are in the lending business as well.

I called today on the financial institutions, and I hope the Hon. Member for Simcoe North will as well, to work with our small businesses to help them get through this recession, whole and ready and poised to take off in the future.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, the November 12 budget created a number of monsters, and now we are removing them two years later. The point raised by the Hon. Member, that the Government had nothing to do with creating or worsening the depression, is very difficult to understand. For instance, the November 12 budget virtually stopped the sale of farm lands in Western Canada because it made it necessary for a person who was selling by instalments to pay the total capital gains on that land before he even received the money. How can the Hon. Member say that the Government's programs did not worsen and deepen the depression in this country?

Mr. Peterson: I do not quite understand exactly what the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) is getting at. The statement by the Hon. Member was to the effect that our programs stopped the sale of lands in Western Canada, but I seem to remember he stood up in this House a month ago to complain of sales which took place in his riding. But that is neither here nor there. What we have—

Mr. Taylor: The sale of park land in Banff to an ex-Cabinet Minister has nothing to do with the sale of farm lands.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Parliamentary Secretary has the floor.

Mr. Peterson: I suppose the Hon. Member for Bow River is referring to the capital gains reserves that people who sold land and did not get cash for the entire amount could take advantage of, and the changes which have been made in this particular provision. The Hon. Member will realize, that, perhaps as part of his representations in this area, the reserves for farms and for small businesses have been increased. Therefore, for one who is going to sell land, we have increased the reserve period in order to try to make the reserve provisions and capital gains conform to what would be the normal business practice in these areas.

If the Hon. Member has specific examples of where a sale would take place in the ordinary course, on an arm's length basis, say, but that reserve is not adequate, then I ask him to benefit all of us with his research and thinking in this area and sit down with us in order to come forward with some constructive alternatives. There is one thing I can assure the House of. The Minister of Finance has been extremely open to good, concrete suggestions as to how we can make our tax system work more productively for Canadians.

Mr. Domm: Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of State for Economic Development (Mr. Peterson). I would like to return for just a moment to the issue of Small Business Bonds, and in particular his statement that the Government today is trying to create an atmosphere which will allow the economy to come out of its present recession. I am sure the situation in the Parliamentary Secretary's riding is no different from the situation which I find in Peterborough, and that is that farmers and small businessmen—and I have the letters to substantiate it—cannot obtain Small Business Development Bonds in order to come out of this recession because the banks will not make them available. The Government has the power, does it not, to demand that the banks make these Small Business Development Bonds available to farmers and businessmen who are going out of business at an ever increasing rate? When will the Government act?

Mr. Peterson: Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member has raised a couple of points; one, have we in effect, through that budget, driven Canada into recession? Let us not get involved in hyperbole. The western world is in a recession. If the Hon. Member wants to deal with specific examples of issues, I think that is the constructive way to proceed.

With respect to small businesses, we have introduced the small business investment grants for new capital purchases as well, but let us get down to the SBDB and the SBB, which I raised and which I am concerned about. The Hon. Member has quite rightly pointed out that small business persons have come to us and said; "We just cannot get any from the bank. Small branches of the bank do not know what they are all about or just don't tell us about them."

Is the Hon. Member saying that we, as a federal Government, should go to those institutions and legislate that they have a responsibility to give an SBDB to every person who asks for one? I do not believe, the way our system works, that we want Government interfering to that extent, because I do not know how we could do it. There is a credit judgment to be made. I believe, therefore, the proper approach is the one which I have been calling for. Let us let our financial institutions know that we consider they have a responsibility—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to interrupt the Parliamentary Secretary, but the ten-minute period of question and answer has expired. At this stage the Chair recognizes the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom).

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a few words on the tax Bill before us today and to stress one theme, and that is that we have a taxation system in Canada which is very unfair, one that generally gives the breaks to the wealthy people, to the big corporations, at the expense of the poor, the ordinary working person, farmers and small business.

An Hon. Member: Nonsense.

Mr. Nystrom: I hear a Conservative Member saying nonsense to that. I would like to see that Party back up that kind of statement. Perhaps the Hon. Member says nonsense because the Conservative Party over the weekend has invented a new math where you can win a game 67 to 33, but all of a sudden the team getting the 33 per cent wins the day. I find that is very sad for a political Party—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nystrom: —which wishes to govern this country some day.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: With all due respect to the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville, the issue before us is a budget resolution and I believe the Hon. Member should confine himself to the subject.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I was responding to some of the Conservative Party heckling when I referred to the fact that our taxation system is one that favours the rich in this country and the very large corporations, and I would like to see any Conservative Member of this House get up and explain the contrary. Indeed, it is the ordinary citizens, the poor people in this country, who pay more than they should be paying. It is the ordinary citizen in this country who historically is getting shafted by Government policies.

• (1200)

In fact, the Bishops' report of January 5 stated that the lowest 20 per cent of the people in this country in terms of income received only 4 per cent of the country's income while the top 20 per cent got over 40 per cent. If that is not proof of the allegation that I am making, that the tax load and the whole system of Government in this country is unfairly on the backs of the poor and the ordinary citizens, I am not sure what is. I invite the Members of the Conservative Party, if they want to govern this country some day, to think about compassion, justice and a sense of—

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. For the information of the Hon. Member, the Progressive Conservative Party did not bring in either of these budgets. Follow the rules. We did not bring in the budget. We did not even support it. Blame the people who brought it in.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I call to the attention of the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) that there is a ten-minute question and answer period provided under the Standing Orders of the House at the end of the Hon. Member's speech.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I guess that proves the point that the Conservative Party are really Liberals in a hurry.

When we deal with a Bill of this sort, we should be out to change the system and change it radically so that the ordinary citizen of this country gets a fair break from the tax laws. That has not been the case historically.

An Hon. Member: That is what MacEachen says.

Mr. Nystrom: We have a Conservative Member saying "That's what MacEachen says". If he wants to believe MacEachen, he can believe MacEachen. We in this Party do not. We want to present some alternatives to the Canadian people.

Miss MacDonald: Whoever believed MacEachen?

Mr. Nystrom: I do not know whoever believed MacEachen, but one Member of the Tory Party apparently does.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: With all due respect to the Hon. Member, the usual practice is to refer to Members of the House by constituency, or their function in the case of Cabinet Members.

Mr. Nystrom: As I was saying, we have a very unfair taxation system in this country. The Bill before us today will make it even more unfair by loading more and more on the ordinary income person. For example, there is the provision for a partial deindexation, applying the six and five program to indexation in Canada. According to calculations, that will raise $1.7 billion in 1983-84, depending on the inflation rate. The tables I have show that when you partially deindex the taxation system, the lower income person pays more than his or her fair share. The wealthier person will get off much easier.

Let us take the example of a single person earning $7,500 a year. When you partially deindex the taxation system to take into account the six and five program, that person will pay an extra $113 in income tax in 1984, which means a tax increase for that person of 15.7 per cent. The person earning $10,000 will pay an extra $119, for an increase of 14.7 per cent. The person earning $50,000 will pay an extra $591, which is an increase of only 4.1 per cent in that person's income tax. A person earning over $100,000 will have an increase in percentage terms of only 2.5 per cent. Is that just and fair? I maintain that it is not. We need a taxation system in this country based on the ability to pay. As the Bishops pointed out, those who earn the least, the 20 per cent at the bottom, earn only 4 per cent of the national income. They should get hit less hard than those earning $50,000, $60,000, $70,000 or $100,000 a year.

The same applies to the married taxpayer. A taxpayer earning $20,000 a year, with two dependants under the age of 18, with partial deindexation will have to pay an extra $254, an increase of 21.7 per cent. A wealthy person making over $100,000 a year, with the same two dependants, will have an increase of 3.2 per cent. I maintain, and suggest to the Government and this House, that it should be the opposite way. Someone making over $50,000 or $100,000 a year should pay even more income tax. Someone earning under $30,000, $20,000 or $15,000 should pay less income tax. That is the only way if we want a fair taxation system, one that is based on compassion, reason and ability to pay. That has not been the case in this country under Liberal and Conservative Governments for the past 100 years.

Let us look at the corporate tax rate. A few minutes ago we heard from the Hon. Member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert). He shed a lot of crocodile tears because of companies that are paying so much in taxes. He said that because they paid so much tax, they will not expand and they will not invest. He asked what this would do to the job situation and so on. If you look at the record, Mr. Speaker, you find that corporations in Canada have paid less and less in taxes over the last five or six decades while the individual has had to pay more in taxes. I maintain that is not fair.

Let us look at the statistics. In 1952, 53.7 per cent of federal Government revenue came from corporations and 43.6 per cent from individuals. In 1962, ten years later, 40.1 per cent comes from corporations and 59.9 per cent from individuals. In 1980, just a couple of years ago, 30.5 per cent came from corporations and 69.4 per cent came from individuals.

The share of taxes paid by ordinary citizens in this country has increased from 46 per cent in 1952 to 69.4 per cent in 1980, while the share paid by corporations went down from 53.7 per cent in 1952 to 30.5 per cent in 1980.

I suggest that the priorities of this Government are the wrong ones. Instead of trying to redistribute the tax load in Canada in a more fair, equal and compassionate direction, the Government has redistributed the tax load in the opposite way by bringing in all kinds of incentives, tax cuts, tax credits and tax loopholes for the very wealthy and the corporations in this country. Time and again it has loaded it on to the ordinary citizen.

It strikes me as strange that whenever the country is in trouble, the solution is to give more incentives to the rich so that they will do better, and the solution for the poor is to tighten their belts so that they will do better. That is not fair. It is not the kind of Canada that I, and I suspect the majority of Canadians, want.

It is not only the federal Government; we must take into consideration the provincial Governments as well. When we look at their taxation system, such as unemployment insurance contributions and so on, we find the same trend developing. In terms of federal and provincial revenues, in 1950 corporations paid 49.2 per cent. In 1980, corporations carried 23.3 per cent of the national tax load. In 1950, individuals paid 50.7 per cent; in 1980, their share had risen to 76.6 per cent. That is neither fair nor just. The principal thing that we in this House should be doing is to change that kind of tax system, bringing in many of the recommendations made in this country over the years for a more fair and just tax system.

If we change the tax system so that the poor, the ordinary worker, the farmer and the small-businessman have more income, they will spend it. They will buy consumer goods. They would buy the necessities of life in order to look after their families. In the process, this would create jobs. We must stimulate consumer spending in this country. We need a tax cut, not for the large companies, but for the ordinary citizen. Large companies have never in the past responded to that kind of incentive and never will. We must get rid of a tax system which is a system of socialism for the rich and free enterprise for the poor. It is socialism for the rich because, year in, year out, Governments in Canada have given millions and millions of dollars to large companies. In fact, if we had taken equity in the CPR every time we gave it millions of dollars to upgrade rail lines, improve facilities and purchase hopper cars, we would own and control it now. The same is true of many other corporations in the country. We do not give that kind of assistance to ordinary people. We do not give that kind of assistance to the single mother, the unemployed, or the small-businessman or small farmer unfortunate enough to go bankrupt. That is the kind of thing we want to change.

In 1982 the budget levied a corporate surtax of 5 per cent which will be reduced in 1983 to 2.5 per cent. That perpetrates the kind of unfairness and lack of compassion that the country shows for the ordinary citizen.

On the other hand, only about .07 per cent of our GNP is in the form of a wealth tax. In the United States, about .42 per cent of the GNP is taken up by wealth tax, while in Switzerland 1.02 per cent goes to wealth tax. If we want to base our taxation system on fairness, then I suggest we examine what other countries are doing to help the ordinary citizen. But so far that has not been done.

Another point I want to raise has been referred to by the Parliamentary Secretary, and that is whether the valuation day for farmers should be changed. In 1980 the Liberal Party promised that it would be. I am sure Hon. Members opposite recall that they were to change valuation day from December 31, 1971 to December 31, 1974 and that it was to be indexed so that there would be a more appropriate reflection of the inflation in land prices. Nearly three years have passed and that promise has not been fulfilled. I do not think it is a question of whether it should be fulfilled. The Government made a commitment and it must deliver. This is very important because land prices are being inflated day in and day out. If the valuation day is not changed and some form of indexation adopted, then small and middle-sized farmers will be paying the largest increase in taxes, in this case through capital gains.

Those are a few of the points that should be made, Mr. Speaker. In Canada we have a taxation system that is extremely unfair and regressive and which loads taxes on the ordinary citizen, the ordinary worker, the farmers and the poor in the country. They pay all kinds of consumer taxes and sales taxes which are regressive. At the same time, we allow the wealthy all kinds of incentives and investment tax credits and allow large corporations to pay less than their fair share. That is not the kind of Canada I want. I want a Canada based on freedom for the individual to do his utmost. That cannot happen while he is saddled with extremely high taxes.

We have an immense deficit and I am afraid that, as it increases, the ordinary person will have to pay the price, through increased taxes and programs like six and five which will hit him the hardest. The six and five program is a good example of what happens. If someone is making $10,000 per year and is limited to a 5 per cent increase, that amounts to $500. But if someone is making $50,000 per year the increase is $2,500. Where is the equity in a program which was supported by the federal Liberal and Conservative Parties? There is no equity in it, Mr. Speaker, but I suggest that neither Party is willing to stand up for the ordinary citizen or to represent him in this House. We should be making some real changes to benefit the ordinary citizen, rather than throwing more and more to the big companies and the wealthy people in the country.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there any Hon. Members who wish to put questions to the Hon. Member who has just spoken? The Hon. Member for Peterborough (Mr. Domm).

Mr. Domm: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member seemed to say that we have to do two things; first, we have to get more taxes from large corporations, and second, we have to reduce the federal deficit. I wonder if the Hon. Member would support the principle that we should not be giving interest-free money to PetroCan and that, if it paid its own way, that would help reduce the deficit?

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I am a very strong supporter of PetroCan. I think it should be a much bigger oil company than it is today. We should be doing what other industrial states have done long ago, and that is, have a national oil company that would expand and keep oil money in Canada. I believe Crown corporations should pay their fair share, as is done in Saskatchewan. In that Province they make their fair contribution to the provincial treasury. The Government moved very late in the oil industry. By now, PetroCan should be the largest oil company in Canada.

I believe that foreign ownership in general has made this country poor and has cost many, many jobs. Government statistics show that foreign companies import four times as much as Canadian firms. Foreign ownership has prevented us from having a rational and planned industrial system. It has fragmented the industrial base that we do have and has allowed a good deal of R and D to go south of the border and into other countries.

We are the only industrialized country in the world that has allowed so much foreign ownership and I think the time has come when that should end. It can be ended in the oil industry by making sure that Petro-Canada expands.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fisher).

Mr. Fisher: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Domm: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I will allow a short supplementary to the Hon. Member for Peterborough (Mr. Domm).

Mr. Domm: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member intentionally skirted the question. He delivered a fine speech today about reducing the federal Government deficit and collecting more taxes from Crown corporations.

My supplementary question is the same as my original question. Does the Hon. Member support interest-free Government money going to Petro-Canada in order that it can expand, thus reducing the viability of the federal Government and, in other words, increasing our deficit? Is he giving a speech of accountability—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. With all due respect, the Hon. Member's question should be short and to the point.

Mr. Domm: Surely a minute, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The Chair is trying to apportion time among Members. The Hon. Member has been permitted an original question and I have invited him to put a supplementary question. I think he has put his question and I am inviting the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) to reply.

Mr. Nystrom: I support that, Mr. Speaker. I think we should use the taxation system and the resources we have in the country to Canadianize. We must make sure that Canadians control their destiny. I do not see what is wrong with that. If the Hon. Member wants to stand on the side of foreigners owning and controlling vital parts of our economy, that is his business; but I do not believe in it.

I made a speech today saying that private corporations have been paying less and less, and I said that system must end. In 1952, foreign corporations contributed 53 per cent of the revenue and today they contribute 30 per cent. We must change that system, and fast.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Speaker, in September the Finance Committee held eight public sessions, many of them double sessions and several additional days were made available for private discussion. Later, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) acknowledged the good work done by the Committee and many public groups acknowledged the important forum it provided.

The Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) said that he and his Party are standing up for the ordinary citizen against the undue advantages given the rich. May I ask why he and his colleagues made only one appearance at the Committee since September? I believe the transcript will show that standing up for the ordinary citizen amounted to one brief, 20-minute discussion with one witness. Perhaps the Hon. Member could tell the House why this standing up was not a little more forceful.

• (1220)

Mr. Nystrom: I am sorry, I cannot answer that question. I am not a member of the Finance Committee. I am just saying what is the position of my Party and what is my position as a Member. We have a taxation system which is very unfair. I think we will have to change that system, but I cannot answer the question because I am not a member of the Committee.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Speaker, I have a very brief supplementary question. I applaud the Hon. Member's position. It is a logical one; it is well-stated. Why does he not do something about it?

Mr. Nystrom: We would love to have a chance to do something about it. Perhaps the day will come very soon when we will have a people's Government in charge of things here in Ottawa.

Mr. Crouse: Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom). In his remarks he stated that the thought we should have an expanded Petro-Canada operation. Only last week I received a telephone call from a small gasoline outlet operator in my constituency. He asked me just what he could do with regard to our state-owned oil company. I asked him what was the problem. He said that he was operating a small service station and that one of his customers was a small taxi operation which had a fleet of five cars. The Petro-Canada operator adjacent to the man who called me contacted the taxi operation and said: "Look, we will put in a tank which will provide gasoline for your fleet at the wholesale cost, providing you buy your gas from Petro-Canada". Of course, the taxi company followed that route and as a result the small, independent operator, his wife and two children, lost that taxi business. This was the straw which broke the camel's back. Not only did the small operator lose the taxi business, but he lost the oil business and the servicing of that fleet.

I see Mr. Speaker motioning. I am coming to my question. Why would the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville and his Party want to see the expansion of Petro-Canada which, in effect, is putting small, independent businessmen out of business—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member will have an opportunity to make a speech later, if he wishes. The Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom).

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, there have been hundreds of cases where the Exxons of the world have trampled over small, independent people for many decades.

Mr. Crouse: But this is not Exxon; it is Petro-Canada.

Mr. Nystrom: I do not see the Hon. Member's point. I think this country needs a Canadian-owned oil company which controls the majority of the Canadian petroleum business. This is what most enlightened countries in the world have done. It works very well for them and it could work very well for us.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans).

Mr. Crouse: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair is having great difficulty apportioning time to Hon. Members seeking to be recognized. The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre.

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, I was interested in the Hon. Member's comments. I agree that some form of indexation of capital value about which he was talking for farmland would definitely be appropriate. He also said something about the fact that there should be a wealth tax and that tax policy should reflect the needs of the less fortunate as well as average Canadians in our society. Could he tell us what is the average value of a grain farm in his riding? Would he be suggesting that a wealth tax be applied to the sale price of farmland in his riding? I understand that farms sell in his riding in the range of between a quarter and half a million dollars.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I call to the Hon. Member's attention the fact that questions should be short. The Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville has a very brief opportunity in which to reply.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I think that any wealth tax should be placed basically upon the wealthiest 5 per cent or 10 per cent of the Canadian population. Many years ago the Saskatchewan Government removed the estate tax for over 90 per cent of Saskatchewan farmers. I am talking here just about the very, very wealthy in society. Those people should be paying a much greater share of the income tax.

Mr. McDermid: What is your definition of wealthy?

Mr. Nystrom: What is my definition of wealthy? I have given you several definitions.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair hesitates to interrupt the Hon. Member but the ten-minute period of questions and answers has expired. At this stage the Chair recognizes the Hon. Member for Lambton-Middlesex (Mr. Ferguson).

Mr. Siddon: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I believe the debate commenced this morning with a speech from this side. Then there was one from that side and one from the NDP, so in the natural rotation I would presume that you would return to this side of the House.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair is having some difficulty with the business of time allocation, but in this case the Chair will recognize the Hon. Member for Lambton-Middlesex and then the Hon. Member for Richmond-South Delta (Mr. Siddon).

Mr. Ralph Ferguson (Lambton-Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, first I want to pay tribute to the Members of Parliament who joined with me during the month of September and sat on the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs to listen to businessmen, construction people and professionals from across Canada make proposals that would lay the groundwork for, and give us insight into, the changes required in order to come up with a more equitable tax system. I am referring particularly to the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans), the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fisher), and the Hon. Member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert), who certainly had a tremendous input into the Committee and was a very active participant on a regular basis.

I was somewhat disappointed. I hoped perhaps there could have been more regular attendance before that Committee because the calibre of submissions was extremely good and each was backed up by a level of common sense which made it easily understood by all involved. I could not help but be somewhat alarmed by the lack of knowledge of the Small Business Bond. Under the Small Business Bond Program banks do not pay income tax on interest earned. If they are in a non-profit situation—and their profits have been dropping badly because of the recession in the western world for the last several months—naturally they will not have as much profit to invest as they had, for example, a year ago when many bonds were negotiated between the borrower and the lender. I know there is a great need for this, but in fact they are not in a taxable position. We as a Government cannot force them to make loans even if they are in a taxable position because it has to be negotiated, I say again, between the borrower and the lender.

Also I should like to comment briefly on some of the submissions that were made. Some of them pointed out to all members of the Committee that there were sectors of the economy where perhaps the capital cost allowance factor needed adjustment due to the short life period of the particular equipment purchased. I am talking here about submissions that were made and the cross-examination of the persons from the Canadian Construction Association.

Also I should like to touch upon the issue raised by the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) concerning the application of the capital gains tax. This is another issue which was raised within Committee. I believe it was the Canadian Chamber of Commerce which made the proposal that perhaps one of the most equitable ways of applying a tax in that particular area would be to tie it to the length of tenure or the length of ownership.

• (1230)

I sympathize with the situation the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville has described of a farming operation on which perhaps a farmer or his family have worked for several generations to build up an equitable and viable operation, only to be faced with a system of taxation that in the last few years, during an inflationary spiral, has made it very difficult to cope with the transfer or sale of that property. In one sense, perhaps it has slowed down the takeover of Canadian land by foreign owners. But in the other context we have to be very careful that we do not destroy the family farm concept.

I would like to see consideration given not only to the suggestion made by the Canadian Chamber of Commerce but also to an alternative system of indexing in this same situation. Indexing has already been accepted by our country. We index our personal income tax base, our pensions and various other aspects of our economy that affect people's lives. This may be a good time to look at this.

If we look back over the last several months, in particular the four months prior to December 1, the rate of inflation on a monthly basis has been running at approximately one-half of 1 per cent. In contrast to the way the inflationary impact is calculated in the United States, we calculate ours on the 12-month moving average. Consequently, if we consider inflation in the four months prior to December 1 to be at a rate of approximately one-half of 1 per cent, then we realize that Canada's inflation rate has been running at 6 per cent during that time, and there was negative inflation during the month of December, then we have achieved our purpose as far as the inflationary spiral is concerned, although it may not appear that way when one looks at the 12-month moving average and compares it to the monthly averages in the United States.

However, there is another area that perhaps we should examine very closely. Canadians are great savers. In the year 1981 I believe Canadians salted away something like $17 billion in savings as far as private investors are concerned. This money is badly needed in the small business and farming sectors.

Another possible vehicle to examine is that of finding another way to channel some of these savings back into the investment sector, particularly into those areas where it is so badly needed. Perhaps this could be examined in committee. Maybe we can come up with a vehicle that would ensure security to the investor and stability to the owner. I believe this can be done. I speak as a private Member of the House of Commons when I make this suggestion.

Mr. Nickerson: You can't; you are a Parliamentary Secretary.

Mr. Ferguson: I believe this suggestion would give us a boost in the arm. We have resources in Canada which are not available in other countries in the world. We are the second largest country in the world as far as geographical area is concerned. This huge diversity in our economy spread over such a large country has made it very difficult to apply a tax system that is completely equitable to everyone.

It is in this context that I am most appreciative of the way organizations submitted briefs to us during the month of September. There were those of us who did not take any holidays but stayed to work to ensure that the proposals coming from the business community could be closely examined in committee and the appropriate suggestions sent on for consideration for the upcoming budget later this year.

I mentioned earlier briefs were submitted by the Canadian Chamber of Commerce and the Canadian Construction Association. We also had briefs from the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, the Canadian Bar Association and the Canadian Institute of Professional Accountants. All of these organizations had something to contribute.

One of the problems we have as a governing body, and I speak in this context for all Members of the House of Commons, is the diversity of our economy here in Canada. We have to work toward a solution that is fair and applicable to all of Canada. After the committee ended its work and Parliament resumed sitting, we had a submission by the Canadian Federation of Retail Farm Equipment Dealers in Canada, who asked for consideration of the proposal that the investment tax credit be applied to used equipment. This was an area which the dealers found was creating problems for them. They were carrying huge inventories of farm equipment which were not moving because of the investment tax credit on new equipment as well as the half-year depreciation allowance, and coming toward the end of the year it is to a person's benefit to buy new equipment instead of used equipment.

With all of the input we have had to date and the adjustments made in the budget papers, I think it accurately reflects the requirements that will be in place as our economy starts to turn and we achieve the level of stability required in the small business, agricultural sectors and other sectors that contribute to the welfare of this nation.

I was interested to note that, as of November 20, there were more oil wells drilled and completed in Canada from January 1, 1982 to November 20, 1982 than there had been in any other year since 1977, with the sole exception of 1980. That is an indication that the oil and energy sector has started to turn. I see some puzzled looks on the other side of the chamber, but bear in mind that I said oil wells drilled and completed, not oil and gas wells. I see an Hon. Member looking at me curiously, but I would have to ask him why drill another gas well when we have so many drilled and capped for which markets are not available? I notice that the National Energy Board has provided permits to increase our exports that I hope will bring those capped wells back into production and give some new life to the economy in that sector.

It is also interesting to note that the plans announced toward further development, not only in the Arctic and the Beaufort but in the offshore, show that very large companies have faith in our Canadian tax system and are willing to make those kinds of expenditures that will create additional jobs and bring our economy back to the level of prosperity that we had a few years ago before the world recession set in.

In spite of the fact that we in Canada think we are very hard pressed—indeed we are; our unemployment figure is far higher than we would like to see it—when we compare our situation to other industrialized nations in the western world, we do have the basic human and natural resources that should allow us to take advantage of the quick recovery that we hope will start this coming summer.

In closing, I want to point out that we have made a tremendous number of changes to the Income Tax Act. I believe these changes are well spread out and cover a wide range of concerns, from the automobile standby charges to the liabilities of directors of corporations, withholding tax and so on. These changes have been brought about as a result of the Government consulting with concerned individuals as well as from the representations made to the committee by the people of Canada when it sat in the month of September.

We hope that consideration will be given in the budget later this year to some long-term proposals which will have to be implemented over the next few years in order to meet the needs of a changing society and a changing business world.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Again, we have a period of ten minutes for questions and answers. Are there Hon. Members rising to put questions?

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I see that the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fisher) is in position now and I have a question for the previous speaker. The previous speaker referred to large inventories of farm implement dealers. Does the Hon. Member feel that the reduction of capital cost allowance to one-half of the amount that is normally allowed to purchasers in the year of acquisition will stimulate or reduce the sale of farm implements?

Mr. Ferguson: Mr. Speaker, the Farm Equipment Dealers' Association indicated that any adjustment to the capital cost allowance with respect to used equipment would have a neutral impact on that used equipment. They were more concerned about the application of the investment tax credit being extended to used equipment so that they would be able to sell it off of their lots and not have to carry it as inventory.

I should point out to the Hon. Member that it is normal for the manufacturers of farm equipment to carry the cost of new equipment on those lots until the day of sale or until a buyer makes an offer through a rental agreement. If this happens, the liability is assumed by the purchaser at that point. However, if that dealer takes in a trade on that piece of equipment, that is his liability, of course. That is their concern. They wanted to ensure that the investment tax credit provision was extended to cover that used equipment in order to lower their own inventories. I have to agree that it will clear their lots and resolve a very heavy debt burden that they are carrying at the present time. Obviously, the Hon. Member does not understand.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I call to the attention of the Hon. Member for Lambton-Middlesex (Mr. Ferguson) that questions and answers should be short.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, my question referred directly to the purchase of new farm equipment. Does the Hon. Member feel that by taking half of what was normally the capital cost allowance, the sale of farm implements will be stimulted or reduced?

Mr. Ferguson: Mr. Speaker, I have to emphasize again that the retail farm equipment dealers themselves said that it would have a neutral impact upon used equipment.

Mr. Siddon: On used equipment. We are talking about new equipment.

Mr. Ferguson: Naturally, if the capital cost allowance was left as it was, it would have a positive impact on the purchase of new equipment. There is no doubt. But the way it was being applied was very unfair, because if I were to purchase a new combine late in December at a cost of $120,000, I could not use it until the following August. I would be glad to meet with Hon. Members opposite to explain farming operations to them. You do not harvest wheat in December, January or February; you harvest in July and August. Consequently, I hope the Hon. Member would realize this situation, and if there is any adjustment to be made, perhaps we should be considering a different rate for the first part of the year and another for the last half of the year, or the time when the equipment is being used.

I wish to point out as well that there was a great abuse of capital cost allowance by some sectors of business, where they were buying a fleet of equipment, trading it in after three months of operation and taking the full depreciation. As a result, the ordinary taxpayer was, in fact, having to absorb this loss of revenue which the Government was not receiving.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, my question to the Hon. Member concerns the capital gains tax and valuation day. Why has his Party not kept the campaign promise which it made in 1980 that the valuation day would be changed from 1971 to 1974 and then indexed? The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) said on Thursday, I believe, that the Government would be keeping the promise very soon.

My question is two-fold. Why has his Party not fulfilled its promise up to now; and how soon can the farmers of Canada expect the Liberal Party to deliver on that promise?

Mr. Ferguson: Mr. Speaker, I think I indicated in my remarks that there is diverse opinion as to how this should be applied. The Chamber of Commerce suggested that it should be tied to the length of tenure. This is one aspect which they suggested should be carefully considered and it is being examined very carefully. The other suggestion was for a system of indexing or a change in valuation day. This affects various sectors of farming in different ways. As the Hon. Member is aware, the land tenure period in the Prairies where a lot of grain is grown will be much different from a cash crop area or a tobacco growing area where the farmer usually works very hard for 12 months of the year, rather than having a period of holidays during the winter months or at least taking it easy. They have to work all year round, as a livestock farmer does. We have to examine how this plan will be applied and what its impact will be. I have been working on it.

I am sorry that there was not a representative of his Party in the committee when this was discussed with the Canadian Federation of Agriculture. This was one of the points raised by the Canadian Federation of Agriculture. I trust that a solution will be found shortly that will apply in an equitable manner to all Canadian farmers.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member why a farmer would buy a combine in January when he does not use it until August or September. As well, both the Hon. Member and his Minister have stated that the Small Business Bond was brought in to help the farmer. How can it help the farmer if the banks will not issue it?

Mr. Ferguson: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) raised a very valid point. I was explaining to his colleague that one does not harvest wheat in December, January or February, but it has sometimes been the practice to buy a piece of equipment in the last month of the fiscal year in order to take advantage of the depreciation rates. This is one of the abuses of the system that was taking place and is why we had to make an adjustment in the capital cost allowance. If we study this, there may be some sectors of the economy for which we may have to make a further adjustment, as we did for the automobile companies. I quite agree that it is not often that we harvest wheat or anything else in January or February.

However, just to give the Hon. Member a little further enlightenment, I must advise him that I am a farmer from southwestern Ontario and in some years I have had to harvest corn and soybean during the winter months because we had a very wet fall and we had to wait for the ground to freeze. One year I bought a combine—a used combine, incidentally—during the month of December because the fields were so soft that we could not use a conventional machine. Therefore, I bought one with huge flotation tires in order to rescue the crop and feed the people of Canada, which would not have been possible otherwise.

With respect to the second part of his question concerning the Small Business Development Bond issue, I share his concern. The Small Business Bonds were a good instrument when they were brought in and served a very useful purpose. However, when it came to the point at which the banks were not making profits as large as they were when they were first implemented, the banks withdrew. It was only business sense to them that if they were not paying income tax, the Small Business Bond was of no advantage to them. Consequently, they became very difficult to obtain.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The period of question and answer having now expired, the Chair recognizes the Hon. Member for Richmond-South Delta (Mr. Siddon).

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Mr. Speaker, while the frustrations of these question sessions are most felt by the Hon. Member next expected to speak, I must say that I believe these exchanges are very valuable to the House and to the people of Canada. In particular, they reveal the difficult dilemma of Members of Government in being faced with questions which the Canadian people have been asking with regard to the November 12 budget for more than a year. The answers appear to be the same today as the Government has been giving all along.

When we asked about the impact of reducing first year depreciation by 50 per cent on an item which is on the fast depreciation rate of three or five years, for example, it was impossible for Government Members to argue against the fact that this measure of the budget of November 12, 1981, included in Bill C-139 before us, does not destroy jobs. In fact, some 20 per cent of the automobiles manufactured in Canada are purchased for lease or rental and are normally written off over three years. Suddenly, the operating costs of a lease or rental equipment business have been increased by imposing this change. Therefore, the turnover rate of these vehicles is slower and the output from our Canadian automobile and equipment manufacturing industry is reduced. That means the loss of hundreds of thousands of jobs.

Therefore, I am very pleased that we are giving Government Members, backbenchers in particular, an opportunity to reveal some of the hypocrisy in the position the Government has taken under the leadership of, first, the former Minister of Finance, who introduced the budget over a year ago, and now, more recently, the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde), who has had to jump through hoops and try to justify the introduction of Bill C-139 at such a belated stage of this process.

This particular budget has now been changed 47 times. The Liberal Government has had to retreat from many of the measures and the basic principle on which it was predicated. In fact, it is no longer anything like the budget first introduced on November 12 of 1981. Nonetheless, the major and damaging elements of the budget have largely been retained. This is why members of this Party in particular do not intend to see this budget measure, the Ways and Means motions, go through the House in great haste.

I, for one, resent the implication given in a letter sent out by the Minister responsible for Revenue Canada to my constituency office suggesting that we tell taxpayers that they should urge their Members of Parliament to get this Bill through expeditiously, otherwise they will not be receiving their tax rebates in a timely fashion. I think that is a form of intimidation and blackmail which is absolutely unacceptable to Members of the House.

As we well know, the Government has already been busily collecting tax in accordance with the provisions of the budget of a year ago for a full year. In terms of the tax year ending April 30, 1982, those measures were implemented without the support of legislation or the consent of this House. Now the Government intends to tax in the present taxation period, applying the rules which we again have not adopted as law. Nonetheless, the Minister of Finance has the gall to tell Canadian taxpayers that if Members of Parliament do not get this Bill through the House quickly, then their tax rebates will not be received by April 30, or perhaps not received at all.

Mr. Cosgrove: That is a fact.

Mr. Siddon: That is the double standard which the Government regularly applies. If the Government takes, it takes without the benefit of the law. If it is required to give back, it also disregards its moral obligation to do so and then tries to accuse Opposition Members of being the problem.

Mr. Cosgrove: Followed your leadership.

Mr. Siddon: It is important that we very carefully study the provisions of this enabling legislation, Bill C-139. It is very interesting that, in fact, the Canadian Tax Foundation is due to start work on the major issue of restructuring Canada's taxation system. Therefore, one must ask the question, given all of the blunders and retractions of the measures of the original budget, why we are now in such a big rush to implement some of the remaining features which are so damaging to the Canadian economy?

When people in the New Democratic Party and Members of Government say, "We are only trying to be fairer to the ordinary Canadian and extract more revenue from corporations and the wealthy", they do not realize that many of those large corporations have declared a 50 per cent reduction of profits in the past year, that that has a direct relationship to the hundreds of thousands of people they have been laying off, that many of the small businesses and individuals of Canada have declared bankruptcy, personal and corporate, at a rate which is 50 per cent larger than it was in 1980, and that this all translates into the loss of employment.

Therefore, although we argue that our economy is in rough shape because of world oil prices and other factors, Members on the Government benches opposite evade the truth. The truth of the matter is that the November 12 budget was the trigger for a colossal decline in the Canadian economy. The Government now has no right to blame the Opposition for delaying this Bill when we feel the measures contained within it have been the trigger for the economic catastrophe that is unfolding in our country.

On November 12, 1981 the Government projected $66 billion of revenue. The projection of October 28 of last year was $55 billion. In other words, the Government's revenue predictions have dropped by $11 billion in one year. At the same time, because of additional unemployment and job program costs, we have seen the financial outlay increase substantially. The budget of November 12, 1981, which was supposedly to raise $9 billion of additional revenue from Canadians over the previous year, has in fact destroyed the revenue base of the Government of Canada.

That confirms a theory that we on this side have discussed in the House several times. In an academic sense, it is called the "Laffer hypothesis", but for ordinary-minded people, this theory merely says that if one continues to raise corporate and personal taxes without limit, one will pass a point beyond which one will reduce the total revenue flow to Government. This theory, this down-to-earth, practical fact, is at the heart of our present economic dilemma. The Government has passed over the peak on what is called the "Laffer curve", and we are now taxing businesses and corporations to the extent that it is no longer worth being in business. That is why the revenues of the Government of Canada have fallen $11 billion over the last year and expenses have increased some $11 billion, so that, for the financial year 1982-83, we will see a total deficit approaching $30 billion. This confirms the theory that Government cannot continue to tax and increase tax without limit.

I read that when the Minister of Finance introduced this Bill shortly before Christmas, he said: "Canadians, as a whole, understand that their Government cannot continue to spend more and more while it taxes them less and less", the implication being that the Government had to raise taxes to pay for spending. Of course, the true nature of the problem is that the Government is spending far too much and doing little about reducing the extravagance and waste for which it is responsible. It is not taxation which is in dispute so much as the lack of fiscal restraint.

I think that if we merely consider the recent Auditor General's report—may I call it one o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

POLITICAL PARTIES

NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY POSITION ON OIL PRICES

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Madam Speaker, you may find this hard to believe, but there were other interviews being broadcast and statements being made over the weekend that did not emanate from Winnipeg.

News reports of the interview of the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) with Standard Broadcast

News indicate that nothing has changed about the warm and cozy relationship between the Socialist NDP and the present Liberal Government.

The New Democrats are saying that energy agreements should not be renegotiated in order to bring down the cost of gasoline for consumers to reflect the falling world price. Canadians today are paying $2 a gallon for gasoline. According to Newsweek magazine, on the American side of the border they are paying $1.50 for a similar amount of gasoline, even considering the exchange rate. In spite of the fact that Americans are paying for their oil at the world price, Canadian consumers are paying more. Obviously the system put in place by the Liberal Government is not working, or the Government is perpetrating a fraud on consumers. Yet here we have a prominent spokesman for the NDP, that Party's former energy critic, urging that that system remain in place and that Canadian oil prices should not be renegotiated, even though the world price is falling.

The NDP cannot resist attacking the Conservatives for voting with the Liberals when there are useful amendments to be made and worth-while legislation presented. But when it comes to being in bed with the Liberals to perpetuate this fraud, the NDP believes it is perfectly all right to bilk Canadian consumers at the pumps, when the reality is that gasoline is considerably cheaper in the United States.

COMMUNICATIONS

FIRST CHOICE PAY TV LICENCE—CRTC ROLE

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Madam Speaker, when granted its licence as a national Pay TV network, First Choice Canadian Communications Corporation undertook to ensure a Canadian pay TV system that would benefit Canadian viewers and the Canadian program production industry.

At the public hearing in connection with the application of First Choice for licensing, their expressed philosophy of Canadian programming focused on "quality" and "high production values", with a stated aim to increase the amount of Canadian drama. This was called into question when earlier this year First Choice signed a one-year contract with Playboy Enterprises and when they advertised themselves as "the Playboy Channel".

Members of this House, as well as the many Canadians who expressed their concern about this issue, are greatly encouraged by the response of the CRTC. The CRTC is empowered by Parliament under the Broadcasting Act to review the performance of licensees and to call them to account for indications of failure to meet programming commitments or conditions of licence.

I am pleased to see that the CRTC has reiterated its support of the recommendations of the Task Force on Sex-Role Stereotyping—particularly Section 3, which opposes "the portrayal of gratuitous violence to women", and that the CRTC is reviewing its Pay TV regulations to take into account concerns relating to sexual exploitation.

CROWSNEST PASS RATE—PROPOSED MINISTERIAL ANNOUNCEMENT

Mr. Len Gustafson (Assiniboia): Madam Speaker, western farmers are faced with one of the most difficult economic periods in the history of farming. Increased costs of production and falling grain prices will pose major difficulties for grain producers. It would be absolutely impossible for western farmers to pay increased freight rates at this time. Considering the economic problems they face, I call on the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) to announce in Winnipeg tomorrow a positive plan of action that will not put farmers in western Canada at an economic disadvantage which they cannot afford to face at this time.

PROGRESSIVE CONSERVATIVE PARTY

POLITICAL CAREER AND QUALITIES OF LEADER

Mr. Henri Tousignant (Témiscamingue): Madam Speaker, with considerable astonishment and consternation, Canadians this weekend witnessed the final moments and tragic end of the political career of a party leader. A political organization which claims that it alone has the God-given qualifications for leading the destinies of Canadians, has chosen at a time when it is fifteen points ahead in the public opinion rolls, to sacrifice in fact to literally assassinate its leader.

After sailing in troubled waters for the last two years and after weathering the storm, so to speak, now that better days are on the horizon, the captain is being asked to leave the helm just when he is about to deliver his cargo.

As politicians, we are all fully aware of the precarious position we are in. However, I am sure that I shall be interpreting the feelings of many Canadians in expressing my sympathy for the person who bore the brunt of these actions, and that whatever his future political orientation may be, we shall always recognize his tremendous sense of fairness, his search for justice and his profound understanding of liberalism-qualities which, in fact, cost him the leadership of his party.

EMPLOYMENT

NECESSITY FOR LONG-TERM JOB CREATION PROGRAM

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Madam Speaker, I might say at first that the Hon. Member for Hamilton-Wentworth (Mr. Scott) completely misinterpreted our position on energy prices. We want low energy prices; that is why we want to keep the Alberta agreement. It provides for 75 per cent of world price. I suggest that the Hon. Member read that agreement and read what I said yesterday to the press. I think we have a good record in that we have been pretty consistent on our position there.

The Liberal Government has deliberately created unemployment to fight inflation over the last few years. It has done this on the backs of working people. Canada—

Some Hon. Members: No, no!

Mr. Waddell: It is true. That is the policy. Canada needs new direction. The first priority should be job creation. We need a long-term direction involving better control of our investment process; we need more, not less, Canadianization, and so on. In the short run we need immediate job creation.

The Government has spent $1 billion to create 70,000 jobs in 13 programs. These are part-time, restrictive jobs that pay the minimum wage and just put people back on UIC at lower rates. We need a long-term job creation program. If the federal government is serious about job creation it would opt for long-term meaningful jobs and not this short-term job creation which is merely a drop in the bucket.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

STAFFING OF OVERSEAS TEACHING POSITIONS

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Madam Speaker, teaching positions in the Department of National Defence's dependants schools overseas provide unique cultural, social, and educational opportunities, according to the Department's own literature. For this valid reason, there are often more applicants than there are positions available.

Although the Department of National Defence maintains that it makes every effort to comply with the stated policy of providing geographic representation in overseas assignments of teachers, a simple review of the statistics shows that this is not the case. Despite many applicants with excellent qualifications only one teacher from the Northwest Territories has been selected in the last ten years. It is evident that systematic discrimination is being practised against teachers from the N.W.T.

The selection committee is to meet in a couple of weeks or so, and it is imperative that the errors of the past be remedied at this time.

Despite the slightly higher costs of hiring teachers from the North, Territorial teachers must be judged on their own merits and given the same consideration and opportunity as teachers from southern Canada.

RAILWAYS

CROWSNEST PASS RATE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Madam Speaker, since it appears to be the intention of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) to propose changes to the Crowsnest Pass grain rates in Winnipeg tomorrow, I would like to make the point again today that my Party objects to the opening of an agreement that was to have remained in force in perpetuity.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has assured the House on several occasions that changes to Crow would occur only if consensus was reached among the affected parties. We heard the Minister of Transport report last week in this House that no consensus had been reached. Apparently the Government has decided to reverse its policy, change the rules, and act unilaterally without a consensus.

The existing Crow rate contract was never opened up and placed on the table for renegotiation. The vast mineral wealth in the Crowsnest Pass region that was a part of the original agreement was not on the table. No recognition has been made of the gifts of money, land and equipment that went into the original contract. Neither is any recognition given to the extreme cost increases already faced by farmers, or has any recognition been given to the great economic disincentives to grain export, under the analysis of either Gilson, Argue, or Snavely. Because of the contradictory and disruptive nature of the proposals on the table, I urge the Government to maintain the Crow rate and implement the Hall Commission proposals for rail upgrading instead.

YOUTH

SUGGESTED ESTABLISHMENT OF PARLIAMENTARY TASK FORCE TO EVALUATE FEDERAL PROGRAMS

Mrs. Ursula Appolloni (York South-Weston): Madam Speaker—

[Editor's Note: And the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) having entered the Chamber:]

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Thank you.

Mrs. Appolloni: —we on this side of the House are deeply conscious of the need to encourage the participation of youth at all levels of Canadian society, to respond to youthful idealism, to study youthful aspirations, and to give recognition to what young people are saying and doing. Rapid technological and sociological change present to today's youth a challenge, the magnitude of which has probably never been experienced by past generations. We believe Canadian youth can and will respond to this challenge, but our duty is to listen to the youth constituency, and to elicit its views.

We, therefore, recommend the setting up of a parliamentary task force on youth which would serve to update the 1970 report by the Secretary of State, to investigate and evaluate federal programs affecting youth, make appropriate recommendations, and which would prepare a plan and submit its recommendations for the International Year of Youth scheduled for 1985.

INCOME TAX

PREPARATION OF RETURNS—PROPOSED DELAY IN PAYMENT OF REBATES

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Madam Speaker, the chaos, uncertainty and delay in 1982 tax refunds because of the current tax situation will certainly rate as the greatest monument to confusion since the Tower of Babel. Millions of Canadians are now being asked to complete personal income tax forms which are not in accord with existing tax law. They are being asked to complete the forms when the levies have not been approved by Parliament.

My sympathy goes out to the millions of taxpayers who are owed refunds and who will have to wait months for their money. My sympathy also goes out to the employees of Revenue Canada who will be forced to examine each and every return individually because of needless inefficiency and bumbling on the part of the Government. In future, when tax forms are being drawn up and printed, the bureaucrats should interpret tax law as it is, and not what they think it is going to be at some point in the future.

RAILWAYS

PROCUREMENT OF FREIGHT CARS

Mr. Stanley Hudecki (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, at the present time short-term cyclical employment at National Steel Car in Hamilton is followed by periods of mass lay-offs. This causes incalculable hardship to the workers and their families, and also leads many experienced workers to look for employment elsewhere. In the near future Government will have to make a concentrated effort to expand the rail network in western Canada in order to allow the production of a larger number of freight and tank cars to move grain and raw materials to port.

In order to smooth out the peaks and valleys in the demand for railway freights cars and tank cars in Canada, I would like to suggest that the federal Government give due consideration to a recommendation made by the United Steelworkers of America which proposes that all orders for such freight cars in Canada be routed through a national procurement agency. Such an agency would be able to identify opportunities for import replacement and increase efficiency. Standard specifications for various types of cars could be developed. Smaller orders would be combined to enable manufacturers to operate with longer production runs. Such an agency could project and plan orders months and years ahead.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

TRANSFER OF PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND CARLOAD OPERATION TO NEW BRUNSWICK

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): A few days ago, Madam Speaker, Canadian National Railways announced plans to move most of its Prince Edward Island carload centre to Moncton as part of an over-all rationalization of heavy freight operations in the Atlantic region. A mere holding operation will be left behind in Charlottetown to administer the movement of heavy freight to, from, and within the entire Province. Only a handful of jobs will be lost, but much more than employment is at stake. The demise of this important service to P.E.I. shippers constitutes yet another body blow to what little remains of the railway system in the very Province which entered Confederation in 1873 to save its railway.

I implore the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) to do all he can personally to convince CN to reverse its decision concerning the P.E.I. carload centre because that facility is a necessary part of the economic base of the Province and we cannot, therefore, afford to lose it.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

ENERGY

PRICE OF GASOLINE CHARGED TO CONSUMERS

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy. It is my understanding that, under the federal Government's oil pricing agreement with the producing Provinces, if world prices fall there is supposed to be a corresponding drop in Canadian prices. According to Newsweek magazine, world prices are falling. Is the Government still committed to the contract that Canada is going to be at 75 per cent of the world price, no matter what the world price is? And, if so, when will Canadian consumers see a corresponsing drop in the price of gasoline at the pumps?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I believe the Hon. Member is mistaken. The policy is not that the commitment is that the price of oil in Canada will be 75 per cent of oil prices. There are three components in the price of oil in Canada. There is the international price for international oil, and for new oil, and 75 per cent of the world price for old oil. This is the policy of the Government, and it still applies.

Mr. Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): It seems that, every time we ask a question on this subject, the Government blames everybody else for the high price of oil, OPEC, the Provinces, Alberta, the weather. The federal Government never has anything to say about taking action to offer relief to the consumers.

PETROLEUM COMPENSATION CHARGE AND CANADIAN OWNERSHIP TAX

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Madam Speaker, let us deal with one area the federal Government can do something about, and that is the petroleum compensation charge and the Canadian ownership tax. Should world prices continue to drop, will the Government make a corresponding reduction in the petroleum compensation charge and the Canadian ownership tax, or drop those taxes altogether?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member should be aware that since the beginning of the month the petroleum compensation tax has been dropped by $4 a barrel. On top of this, in terms of the Canadian ownership charge, when the payments for the acquisition of Petrofina are terminated sometime at the end of March or mid-April, perhaps some of the money will be kept there for the investment which we had proposed to make in Dome Petroleum in order to ensure this corporation remains a viable corporation in Canada.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Madam Speaker, the fact remains that my constituents do not understand the Government's policy of protecting us from the world price when all they need to do is drive across the border into New York State and fill up their tanks with gasoline at a cheaper price than they can do so in Ontario. Is the Minister of Energy offering no hope to Canadian consumers that there will ever be a reduction in the price of gasoline at the pumps in this country? Or is he going to take the advice of his friends to the left here not to negotiate any new oil-pricing agreement?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I am not surprised that the electors of the Hon. Member do not know the policy of the Government, because he does not know it himself. He should know, if he is a little informed, that the average price of a gallon of gasoline in Canada is about the same as in the United States, and sometimes a little lower. There is a major variation in price, depending on the provincial sales tax and the same thing exists in the United States. The level of tax varies from state to state. This applies not only in Alberta, but there is a fantastically high level of tax in Quebec. Ontario taxes might be too high, but you should talk to Bill Davis about that.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

INCOME EXEMPTIONS APPLICABLE TO WAR VETERANS ALLOWANCE

Mr. Mel Gass (Malpeque): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Veterans Affairs. On July 15, 1982, and November 19, 1982, I asked the Minister about the possibility of raising the casual earning exemption for recipients of the War Veterans Allowance. The Minister assured me that he expected a report very soon and that it would be responded to immediately. Tomorrow is February 1, 1983, and I would like to know what the status of the alleged report is, and when its recommendations will be made public.

● (1420)

Hon. W. Bennett Campbell (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Madam Speaker, the report that I referred to has been received. A proposal has been presented to Cabinet and is presently under consideration.

REQUEST THAT INCREASED EXEMPTION APPLY RETROACTIVELY

Mr. Mel Gass (Malpeque): Madam Speaker, my supplementary is directed to the same Minister. I am concerned as to whether the recommendations in the report, if they do recommend increased earnings for war recipients, will be made retroactive to 1982.

Hon. W. Bennett Campbell (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Madam Speaker, the proposal which I put forward does make a provision for retroactivity.

PIPELINES

CONSTRUCTION OF PROPOSED WATER PIPELINE TO SERVE REGINA AND MOOSE JAW, SASK.

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Madam Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. It is with regard to the proposed water pipeline from Lake Diefenbaker to Buffalo Pound. Last November I asked the Minister about federal assistance to help finance the pipeline. He agreed then that the pipeline was an important project for Saskatchewan and that the federal Government would be prepared to discuss funding with the Province as soon as the provincial task force completed its study. That report has now been made public. It has recommended the pipeline as the best solution to the Regina and Moose Jaw water problem.

Has the Saskatchewan Government contacted the Minister regarding the pipeline? What is the status of the negotiations? Has the federal Government changed its position in support of funding for this project?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, I do not think it was my colleague, the Minister of Employment and Immigration, who responded to that question. I believe it was myself. I had requests from two provincial Cabinet Ministers in Saskatchewan with respect to assistance in dealing with the water problem in Saskatchewan several weeks ago. I stated at that time that If they decided on a pipeline, it will be left to the Province of Saskatchewan to make a request. We indicated that we would consider any proposal that they put forward.

I understand through the media that the Saskatchewan Government has now put a proposal forward using a pipeline rather than an open canal, which was favoured by some other people in Saskatchewan. We will look at that proposal when and if it is submitted, however, I have not received any specific information from the Province since they made their decision last Friday.

FINANCING OF PROJECT

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Madam Speaker, the Conservative Government of Saskatchewan has offered a proposal which the cities of Regina and Moose Jaw cannot afford to accept. It would completely tie up the capital budgets and borrowings of those cities for the next 20 years.

This is an important project. It would not only guarantee an adequate supply of good clean water, but would also create much needed jobs. It would be a shame if this project were lost because of a jurisdictional dispute between the federal and provincial Governments. Will the Minister provide some leadership in attempting to work out a realistic financing scheme with the Province and the cities?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, as I indicated in a letter to the Mayor of Regina, as well as to my counterpart in Saskatchewan, we are prepared to look at any particular project. I do not want to get into a jurisdictional battle between the City of Regina and the Province of Saskatchewan. Clearly, this is the responsibility of the municipal and provincial Governments. However, because it is of importance to the people of Saskatchewan, we have indicated that we will look at any proposal and decide accordingly.

Oral Questions

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

POLLUTION OF NIAGARA RIVER—PROPOSED ACTION BY PROVINCE OF ONTARIO

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment. The Province of Ontario has indicated that it will attempt to enter a United States lawsuit over the S-Area chemical dump unless the federal Canadian Government receives assurances from the United States that our concerns about the pollution will be met. When will we get those assurances?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of the Environment): Madam Speaker, I have seen the same reports on which I gather the Hon. Member is basing his question. They puzzle me a little bit. There are negotiations under way which are taking place within the context of a court ordered process in the United States. Those are negotiations between the United States Government and the company in the United States. We are in touch with the American Government on those negotiations. We are pressing on them concerns which we would wish to have the company take into account, in the hope that the company and the United States Government will reach the proper safeguards in a proper negotiation.

There is not a negotiation between the Canadian and American Governments, as the newspaper seemed to imply. There is a process of communication and consultation.

I have no objection whatsoever to the provincial Government entering the court process. My only concern, when they undertake that kind of activity, is that they make sure they touch base with other people who are concerned, to ensure that the action is one that will be useful. I hope in this case that they will be concerned not simply with whether their action might affect the federal Government's interest, but that they will make sure that they are in touch with the public interest groups, the pressure groups in the Niagara area who may endorse an intervention by the Ontario Government or have some concerns about it. That is the area they should be concerned about, not about whether there will be some specific results within the next seven days or so on the part of the federal Government.

ACCESS TO INFORMATION ON DUMP HAZARDS

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the same Minister. It has been indicated that a confidential agreement exists between the United States Government and the American firm Occidental, formerly Hooker Corporation, that is keeping information about the hazardous dump from Canadians. What effort is being made to acquire this information?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of the Environment): Madam Speaker, my answer would follow on my first one. It seems the Hon. Member is referring to negotiations which are under way, which are directed by the court and which are inherently negotiations between the company and the American Government, which is a confidential process. We are being kept in touch with the development of those negotiations.

The Hon. Member has talked in terms of some agreement holding back information, or some secret agreement. I am not aware of what he is referring to, unless he is referring to the negotiating process which has been encouraged by the American Court authorities. The nature of that legal discussion is such that it is not a public discussion, but a discussion going on between lawyers at the present time. We are in a general way aware of what is being discussed. We are not a party to those negotiations.

NORTH ATLANTIC TREATY ORGANIZATION

CANADIAN NAVAL CONTRIBUTION

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Defence. Last fall the Minister attended a NATO meeting in Brussels where the allies agreed to increase their conventional capabilities and invest more money and effort in high technology weaponry. Will the Minister tell the House what Canada will be doing to improve its NATO capability in the area of high technology weaponry, or must the Canadian navy continue to look on NATO exercises as a spectator sport?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, I would think that, as an ex-Defence Minister, the Hon. Member would have respect for the navy. Our navy is doing a very good job with NATO. The communication I have received from most NATO people in charge of naval operations is that the Canadian Navy is doing a very good job in so far as helping NATO in its anti-submarine warfare roles.

The Hon. Member knows very well that we are in the process of examining how, in the next few years, we can rebuild our navy. As he knows, the program calls for six new frigates to replace the older ones. The Government is doing a considerable amount. Actually, we are in fact following what the former Minister of National Defence was proposing when he was Minister.

Mr. McKinnon: The Minister knows very well that the men and women of the Royal Canadian Navy are second to none. However, their equipment lags far behind.

MODERNIZATION OF VESSELS

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. We are spending over $200 million on a destroyer life extension project, as he knows, to extend the life of 16 ancient destroyers.

Gatineau has just come out of the DELEX Program, a 24 year old vessel having its life extended another eight years. It does not provide for, nor has it had installed any form of anti-missile capability. The lessons of the Falklands point to the necessity of that. These ships will not be able to defend themselves in the event of hostilities. Will the Minister tell us why they are only doing half the job of modernizing those vessels?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member should know that behind the policy of the DELEX Program, which is a program to modernize our vessels, we are cognizant of the time that we will in fact be able to use these vessels. For the old class of 56 or 57, for example, we will refit them so that they can be used for another seven or eight years, until the new frigates are in service. There is no use spending millions of dollars on something that we will not be able to use in five or six years. However, on the newer class frigates there will be a more complex DELEX Program so that they will be useful for a longer period of time. It is just a question of judgment.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

STANDARD OF SERVICE IN RURAL AND URBAN AREAS

Mr. Maurice Harquail (Restigouche): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Postmaster General. It has to do with the problems we all face respecting the new Canada Post Corporation, both with regard to urban and rural deliveries. We know that the tampering with Saturday delivery in rural areas has not been acceptable and is not satisfactory. I know from speaking to people in the west and in the Atlantic Provinces that there are some very serious problems.

• (1430)

We know that there has been a lot of humour, and that a lot of stories have been told, about the reasons for the problems. Speaking on behalf of many Canadians, I feel that it is time we looked at these problems seriously and try to determine what the direct, effective solutions are, rather than creating a number of groups or carrying out additional studies.

In my own area there are a number of what I consider to be minor problems, but it has taken two years to settle them. I have called this week "Post Office Week" because I want officials of this new corporation to attend to these things. I would ask the Postmaster General to look into these matters personally. I am concerned especially with Saturday delivery and with post offices being closed at 5 p.m. rather than 6 or 7 p.m.—

Madam Speaker: Order.

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, I appreciate the frustration of the Hon. Member and will convey his remarks to the officials of the new corporation. I am sure they will follow up on his recommendations.

RAILWAYS

CROWSNEST PASS RATE—LEGALITY OF PROPOSED GOVERNMENT ACTION

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Madam Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Transport. In view of the terms of the Transport Act, and in view of the plans to make a statement on the Crow rate tomorrow, would the Minister, even at this late date, give serious consideration to asking the law officers of the Department of Justice whether the whole procedure is legal, keeping in mind the recent decisions of the Supreme Court?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, the Department of Justice has been involved in the process and is now involved in drafting the legislation that will follow our actions of tomorrow. If there were something illegal in what we are about to do, I am quite sure they would have brought it to our attention.

INDUSTRY

RAILWAY ROLLING STOCK CONTRACTS SOUGHT FOR SYDNEY STEEL COMPANY

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. At the outset I should like to express my appreciation for his action in reactivating the business plan for Sydney Steel.

Further to the statement that his colleague, the Hon. Member for Hamilton West, made a few minutes ago, may I ask the Minister what kind of action we can expect to have on allocation of railway rolling stock in order to relieve the very serious economic problems that exist in the Hon. Member's constituency in Hamilton West and mine in Nova Scotia. Economic conditions are very serious in both places and a substantial order for railway rolling stock for Hawker-Siddeley would have enormous economic leverage.

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, I appreciate the Hon. Member's compliment with respect to Sysco. Concerning the potential for the rail transportation sector in terms of industrial benefit, I think that tomorrow when my colleagues, the Minister of Transport and the Minister of Employment and Immigration, announce changes in the Crow Rate the Hon. Members will see substantial benefit possibilities for the whole industrial sector in Canada. Also he will see that there will be substantial opportunity for the rail transportation oriented industries in Nova Scotia.

As well, Madam Speaker, my colleague, the Minister of State for International Trade, is also working on a couple of projcts around the world, one in Nigeria, for example. These are some of the possibilities for the company in his riding to sell rail cars.

Mr. MacKay: Madam Speaker, I appreciate that answer.

PROSPECT OF ORDERS

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Madam Speaker, I gather that the Minister is telling us that there is a definite prospect of some orders in the not too distant future?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, there are definite prospects, but I want to introduce one caveat. The most important aspect to ensure success, and the main reason for the six and five program and many of our other programs, is that our industries must be competitive. There are tremendous prospects in the transportation sector all around the world. That is one of the reasons why we have been trying to encourage Canadians to be competitive in order that we maximize the potential benefits to employees all across the country.

HOUSING

FUNDING FOR RENOVATION PROGRAM ON VANCOUVER ISLAND

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Public Works. Applicants for the RAPP-P Program for rental units in my constituency have been told that their proposal falls within the rules and guidelines but that no funding has been allocated for the Victoria area office in 1983. Could the Minister tell the House why no funds have been set aside for this kind of labour-intensive program on Vancouver Island during a time of record unemployment?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I do not have those facts in my mind at the moment, but I will check and inform the Hon. Member.

Mr. Manly: Madam Speaker, I would appreciate it if the Minister would look into this.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER SEEK FUNDING

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Madam Speaker, the RAPP-P Program does two things. It improves housing conditions for Canadian people and it stimulates the economy by promoting sales of goods and services and by providing employment.

If the Minister believes in the value of the RAPP-P Program, is he willing to go back to Cabinet and get decent funding, not only for Vancouver Island but for all Canada?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, I am absolutely committed to the program of home renovation. In fact I think it is a very useful economic tool in terms of job creation. It is for that reason that, in a statement he made in the House in October, the Minister of Finance allocated more money for it. The budget is allocated very fairly by region by officials of the corporation, but there are cases where that budget has been fully committed for the present fiscal year.

I will look into this and report to the Hon. Member, but surely his question should not reflect a lack of commitment on the part of a Government which has put almost $1 billion into housing in 1982-83.

AGRICULTURE

IMPACT OF LOST QUOTAS ON DAIRY FARMERS

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Madam Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. He knows that a number of farmers are facing bankruptcy and that a number are financially burdened by the difficulties they face. Included in this are a number of dairy farmers who have lost their market share quota, in many cases through no fault of their own. These dairy farmers are heavily penalized, to the extent of approximately $28 per hectoliter for any production outside the market share quota. This further exacerbates their difficult position.

Is the Minister actively looking at this serious problem? Does he propose any interim measures to alleviate this very difficult situation for the dairy farmers?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, I do not think we have received any official representation. I saw a report that the Hon. Member had met with dairy farmers in his constituency office. The administration of that Board comes under the authority of the Alberta Government, and the Alberta Marketing Board administers that program.

I understand that this is the first time in 12 years that they have faced a cutback in milk production in the Province of Alberta with the Board quota and the traded quota to other provinces before. That is strictly an administrative problem as far as I am concerned. They are saying that supply management does not work, but I am sure the Hon. Member knows that his Premier runs supply management. He will remember how he turned the valves down on oil and gas at one time.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mazankowski: Madam Speaker, I cannot imagine how the Minister of Agriculture can bring oil into a very difficult problem faced by the dairy farmers. The fact is that, whatever role the Dairy Board has in the Province of Alberta, it is functioning within the ambit of the total supply management concept.

ROLE OF FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the fact that this particular problem affects between 30 and 40 per cent of the producers in northern Alberta, would the Minister exercise a little compassion, look at the problem, and try to come up with some recommendations to his Department? Would he ask them at least to make recommendations to the financial institutions that finance these particular producers, so that there could be some leniency in that particular area?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member knows that, when it comes to the needs of farmers, no one could be any more compassionate than I can.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mazankowski: You talk about it and do very little.

Mr. Whelan: Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member also knows that the industrial dairy program is one that we have something to do with. It is an organization put together at the request of the Provinces. The Canadian Dairy Commission administers this program.

Every farmer producing industrial milk is being asked to share in the cutback across Canada. If it is brought to my attention that there is some area where people are suffering undue hardship, naturally I will make that kind of representation.

It has been reported in the press that they are suggesting that we should withdraw the program. Surely they do not want to go to what is the case in the United States where it costs $250,000 per hour in subsidies, and where they are piling up mountains of skim milk powder surplus and butter surplus. They do not know what to do with it. They are putting it on the world market at depressed prices and taking our markets away from us. I can think of one country to which they sold 60,000 tons of skim milk powder and gave it 20,000 tons as well. Yet they do not call that cutting prices. We are in rough competition, but we have a good program and we want to keep it good.

MINES AND MINING

THREE-MONTH CLOSING OF TIMISKAMING MINES

Mr. John A. MacDougall (Timiskaming): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Mines. Two iron ore mines in Timiskaming, the Adams Mine and the Sherman Mine, will each be shutting down for a three-month period during the spring and summer. This will be the third shutdown for the Adams and the second for the Sherman.

• (1440)

As well as the 800 permanent jobs involved here, there will be a complete loss of any summer job opportunities for students. The Minister has said repeatedly that action is being taken to help the mining industry. Just what action is she taking now to resolve the problems in the mining industry?

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of State (Mines)): Madam Speaker, I advise the Hon. Member to contact our Department to see what programs we can put into effect in those areas. Through Section 30 and NEED we have put a great many out-of-work miners back into the work force. I would suggest that he contact us as soon as possible to get those programs which will put them to work moving into those areas of the country.

Mr. MacDougall: Madam Speaker, that is short term; we are looking for permanent employment.

REQUEST FOR TAX INCENTIVES TO ASSIST INDUSTRY

Mr. John A. MacDougall (Timiskaming): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Finance. The mining industry needs more than assurances. It needs action now. Will the Minister please make provisions in the new budget to provide incentives and assistance to our mining industry?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I have heard the representations of the Hon. Member. Obviously I will put them together with other representations I have received, and examine them seriously.

THE ECONOMY

REQUEST FOR MORE STIMULUS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. On the weekend I visited the communities of Guelph and Waterloo, part of the so-called Golden Horseshoe in southern Ontario. In that area 31,000 jobs were lost in the month of December alone. A man in Guelph, who had heard the Minister speaking earlier in the week on the news about the need for more stimulus in the economy, put the following question to me. He asked me to ask it of the Minister, which I should like to do. He said, "If there is a need for more stimulus, why does the Government not do it now instead of waiting another two months for a budget?"

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I am glad that the Leader of the New Democratic Party is travelling a little bit in the country and that he keeps us informed of his visits and travels. I suspect the question he asked today must have been heard by the citizen to whom he referred from his own mouth last week, because it is the same as the one he asked then.

The answer I am giving him is that there is over $2 billion of stimulus resulting from the budget of my predecessor last June and my economic statement of October 27. That stimulus of over $2 billion is being injected into the economy at the present time. If my friend wants to show a little patience, he will see later this week other announcements which will have significant impact in terms of activity in the economy.

As far as additional stimulus which might be required is concerned, one way we can ensure the economy will recover faster is to ensure passage at the earliest possible opportunity by the House of the very important Income Tax Act that we started to consider this morning. In all my consultations across the country I have received one clear message, that the private sector wanted certainty and stability, and that it wanted this legislation to be implemented without further delay. I hope the Conservatives in particular will now see the light and realize that it is in the best interests of the economy to pass that legislation without delay.

Mr. Broadbent: I am sure the private sector, like other Canadians, wants certainty and stability, but it does not want the senility—

An Hon. Member: Then resign.

Mr. Broadbent: —or sclerosis that we are getting on the other side of the House.

REQUEST FOR MONEY INJECTION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, the Minister talked about the amount of money the Government is spending so far. I do not know why he would take pride in the fact that this money was injected when we lose, as I mentioned, 31,000 jobs a month in one small part of the country. Since it costs us some $45 million a day in terms of lost revenue to the federal Government alone, with current levels of unemployment, this will mean that if the Government takes no further action in terms of stimulus for job creation for another two months, when we are supposed to get a budget, we will lose $2.7 billion. I ask the Minister to inject some of that money into the economy now to provide jobs for people, so that they will be paying taxes instead of collecting unemployment insurance out of the country's financial resources.

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I agree. It makes a lot of sense to inject additional funds into the Canadian economy at the present time. In fact, that is what the Government is doing. As I have said before, since last June, the Government has allocated more than $2 billion in additional Government spending in our economy to help the unemployed. These funds are now being spent and have not yet been completely used up. The Minister of Employment and Immigration and other Ministers are doing everything they can to ensure that these funds will be used as quickly as possible by Canadian and especially by the private sector. In fact, I would ask the private sector in Canada to co-operate with our efforts in this area, and I hope that we shall have the support of the Hon. Member for an expeditious passage through Parliament of the tax legislation now before the House, measures which should help get us on the way to economic recovery.

[English]

Mr. Broadbent: The Minister mentioned what his Government has been doing since last June. I can tell him that we have been losing thousands of jobs almost every day since then. In the past 16 months we have lost 450,000 jobs in the manufacturing sector alone.

SASKATCHEWAN WATER PIPELINE PROPOSAL

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I would like to take another specific project and see if I can at least get a commitment from the Minister on it. The communities of Regina and Moose Jaw need improved water facilities. Just prior to the weekend the Government of Saskatchewan announced a proposal to these cities to provide a pipeline which would, in fact, put an unbearable financial burden upon the municipalities, and under present circumstances they cannot abide by it. Since such a pipeline in these communities, where unemployment has risen by 55 per cent in the past year, would provide at least 400 jobs in the steel building part of the project alone, will the Minister of Finance show some financial long-run sense and some short-run compassion and offer these municipalities and the Province of Saskatchewan substantial amounts of federal funds to get the project under way now?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, it is a cruel judgment on 15 years of NDP Government that these towns are short of water at the present time.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: You are getting pretty low, Marc.

Mr. Lalonde: I urge the Hon. Leader of the NDP to listen to my answer as I listened politely to his question. If we look at the fiscal capacity of a town like Regina or Saskatoon and compare it with the fiscal capacities of most cities in the country, and if we take the fiscal capacity of the Government of Saskatchewan and compare it with the fiscal capacities of most provincial Governments in the country, I would urge my hon. friend to realize that those cities and the provincial Government of Saskatchewan are indeed in a very good fiscal position. They can go into the market and borrow money on their own for those public works projects, without necessarily having to wait for the "great white father" in Ottawa to come with money.

Discussions with my provincial colleagues, the Ministers of Finance, have shown in that respect that they have a greater sense of responsibility than the Leader of the New Democratic Party. They have recognized that they themselves also have a responsibility to participate in ensuring that all Governments contribute to the stimulation of the economy. They have recognized their own responsibility in this regard.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

STATUS OF TREATY INDIAN VETERANS

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Veterans Affairs. Has the Minister determined how many treaty Indian World War II veterans, who were denied full veterans' benefits because of their treaty status, are presently making representations to his Department for their lost benefits? How much longer will these treaty Indian veterans have to wait for what all other veterans received automatically?

• (1450)

Hon. W. Bennett Campbell (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Madam Speaker, I have met with representatives of the Saskatchewan Indian Veterans Association as well as having exchanged correspondence with the Alberta Indian Veterans Association. I have asked both parties to bring forward all of the cases where there are concerns. We are now analyzing each individual case and providing a detailed response to everyone of them.

REQUEST THAT OFFICIALS INVESTIGATE SITUATION

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is also directed to the Minister of Veterans Affairs. Would the Minister consider sending two or three gentlemen from his Department across the country to search out the veterans who served their country in a time of need but who have been denied their veterans allowance and benefits because of their treaty status? Many of them, from every reserve across Canada, are without these benefits and do not know that they were even entitled to them. Will the Minister have people from his Department, which is responsible for veterans affairs, assigned to find these men and give them the recognition they deserve?

Hon. W. Bennett Campbell (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Madam Speaker, the Indian Veterans Association in both of those Provinces has been working with treaty Indian veterans on the reserves. We also have two counsellors working out of the Saskatoon office who are working specifically with reserve Indians.

CROWSNEST PASS RATE—PROPOSED MINISTERIAL ANNOUNCEMENT

Mr. Bill McKnight (Kindersley-Lloydminster): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. Can he explain why he is making an announcement in the City of Winnipeg on Tuesday regarding the statutory rates for the movement of grain instead of making that announcement in the House of Commons where it should be made? The Minister should be questioned in the House of Commons where he can respond to those who want to ask him questions, instead of hiding in the City of Winnipeg making that announcement.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I am sure the people of the City of Winnipeg will not welcome that question. Winnipeg, of course, is the centre of the world when it comes to grain matters!

The announcement will be made in Winnipeg by two of us, the Minister of Employment and Immigration being one. The announcement will be made in Montreal also. The Minister of Agriculture will travel to Halifax, Toronto, and Montreal.

Mr. Mazankowski: Who will make the announcement in the House?

Mr. Pepin: The Minister of Regional Economic Development will be making the announcement in the House and answering questions. I am sure the Prime Minister will answer quite a few as well. We are not neglecting any major city of Canada, or the House of Commons.

FISHERIES

REQUEST FOR RELEASE OF KIRBY TASK FORCE REPORT

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. Today is the last day of January, and the Minister knows that the Kirby Task Force report was promised to be released in November, then in December, and again in January. The Minister also knows about the crisis in the Atlantic fishing industry. The industry is on hold, waiting the release of that report and the critical recommendations contained in it. When will the report be released? I hope the Minister will not be content with saying "Soon."

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, I can say to the Hon. Member, the former Minister of the Department, that his impatience will end in the very near future.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. De Bané: Madam Speaker, I will not limit myself to what the Hon. Member has suggested, that is, to table the Kirby report. I will propose a policy to the Atlantic fishermen which has been adopted by the Canadian Government. I will go even further than the recommendations—

Mr. Crosby: They are already tabled in The Globe and Mail.

Mr. De Bané: —by assuring the Hon. Member that his impatience will end very quickly.

QUERY RESPECTING POSSIBLE DISCUSSIONS WITH BANKS

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, may I ask the Minister—and I hope the banks will exercise the same patience that he is expecting from me—whether he has discussed the implementation of the recommendations in the report with the Atlantic provincial governments and with the banks? Has the Minister taken a decision, and has he discussed with the banks one of the recommendations, that of setting up Crown corporations to operate some of the major companies that are having financial difficulties?

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, I can say to the Hon. Member at the outset even today that the involvement of all the participants in the fisheries in the implementation of any policy is a prerequisite for the Government. I can assure the hon. Member that every participant in the fishery will have much input in the implementation of the policy.

FORM OF REPORT

Hon. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. It has been asked before, and his answers have been equivocal. Will the Minister release the Kirby report in the exact form in which it was submitted to the Cabinet, so we can test what the Government has decided to accept from it as against the recommendations?

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Absolutely, Madam Speaker.

HOUSING

PLIGHT OF HOME OWNERS WITH HIGH INTEREST RATE MORTGAGES

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. He is aware, I am sure, that there are significantly large numbers of Canadians who are locked into mortgage interest rates in excess of 18 per cent as a result of the extraordinary increase that took place in interest rates over the course of the last year. Has the Minister considered a program that would allow those people to get out from under the tremendous burden that has been placed upon them? Will he bring forward some recommendations, as to how the Government or the private institutions which loaned the money will deal with those individuals who had to sign for the renewal of their mortgages or lose their homes?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, generally in those cases there is a way of getting out of those commitments except that obviously there is a penalty. That a penalty is incurred is the problem in most instances.

It is a complex issue, and we are examining it. I have received representations from Liberal backbenchers in this regard, and I am examining this matter with my colleagues to see, whether anything can be done. I want to stress, however, to my hon. friend a problem arises from the fact that, in many instances, financial institutions have also been borrowing money at high rates in order to finance those mortgages. Some institutions will find themselves in difficulty if they re-open those mortgages having gone into the market selling medium-term bonds on which they have to pay 17 per cent or 18 per cent interest. There is a real difficulty there. I do not want to leave my friend with the impression that it is an easy matter and we can just say, "Cancel those mortgages and no problems will arise". There are difficulties.

FISHERIES

ALLOCATION OF NON-SURPLUS STOCK TO EUROPEAN ECONOMIC COMMUNITY

Miss Coline Campbell (South West Nova): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. It concerns the recently announced allocation of non-surplus stock to the European Economic Community, without obtaining a commitment to market access in the Community. As the Minister is aware, many people feel very strongly about allocation of non-surplus fish for any reason, particularly without a true market concession. Does this mean that the Government will be allowing further encroachments in the future by foreigners on our non-surplus fish?

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, as we know, a long-term agreement was signed over a year ago by my predecessor and the Common Market Commission. In the last year it was obvious that the Common Market had not lived up to the obligation to which it had committed itself. Recently I met with the head official of the Common Market here in Ottawa. He readily agreed that the Common Market has not lived up to its commitment.

The policy devised in consultation between myself and the Secretary of State for External Affairs is that we will calculate exactly the percentage to which the Common Market did fulfil its obligation, which is to give us access to that market in return for fishing allocations. We will give the Common Market exactly the percentage to which it had committed itself. Furthermore, I hope in the very near future, in the context of the new fisheries policy, to be able to announce what our policy is concerning foreign fleets in our waters.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

ALLOCATION OF TIME TO CONSIDER REPORT AND THIRD READING STAGES OF BILL C-131

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare) moved:

That, in relation to Bill C-131, an Act to amend the Old Age Security Act (No. 2), one sitting day shall be allotted to the consideration of each of the report stage and the third reading stage of the Bill; and

That fifteen minutes before the expiry of the time provided for government business on those days, any proceedings before the House shall be interrupted, if required, for the purpose of this Order and, in turn, every question then necessary in order to dispose of the stage of the Bill then under consideration shall be put forthwith and successively, without further debate or amendment.

She said: In opening the debate, Mr. Speaker, on our motion to allocate time for Bill C-131, an Act to amend the Old Age Security Act (No. 2), I have a few comments I would like to submit to the attention of the Members of this House.

I believe it would be useful to recall, briefly, that the purpose of debate is to give all Members an opportunity to submit their opinions and put forward their arguments regarding a bill—usually tabled by the Government—to say whether they are for or against, and to explain their reasons, thus enabling this House to reach a decision on the bill, to amend it if necessary and then proceed with the next stage of public bills.

[English]

The debate on Bill C-131 which has already taken place in Parliament has achieved this purpose. The proposal to limit indexation of the Old Age Security Pension to 6 per cent in 1983 and 5 per cent in 1984 was first announced in the budget at the end of last June as part of the Government's six and five program. Bill C-131, which follows up on the intention stated in the June budget, was introduced in the House in October, 1982. This five-page Bill consisting of two Clauses explains quite simply and clearly that instead of the usuaal full automatic indexation according to the cost of living, we will reduce the indexation to 6 per cent as of when the Bill is passed this year and 5 per cent next year. This notifies senior citizens that all those who are in receipt of the supplement, even a small portion of it, will see that fully indexed, to make up for the small loss on their basic pension.

The debate on this Bill began on November 18, when second reading debate started. The Bill was approved in principle. It was then referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs where it was studied in detail for another four days. The Committee considered briefs and heard witnesses. In total, 71 Members have spoken at various stages of debate on this Bill.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I have no intention of repeating the arguments pro and con made on both sides of the House with respect to this bill. Its purpose is to reduce inflationary expectations and to make a joint effort to bring the rate of inflation down to the lowest possible figure—when the Budget was brought down six months ago we had double-digit inflation—that is, we want to restrict the indexing of Old Age Security pensions of approximately 1.1 million pensioners, and this means only those who have other sources of income and do not receive the Guaranteed Income Supplement.

I have said time and time again—in the House, in committee, on radio and television, in correspondence and in meetings with the general public—that this Bill will not take away even one penny from the fully indexed pensions and the supplement of pensioners who are in need. I want to make it perfectly clear that all pensioners receiving the supplement, even if it is only $2 a month, as well as all pensioners receiving the Spouses Allowance, will continue to receive fully indexed pensions and supplements.

I think the case for time allocation for the remainder of the debate—a measure we were unfortunately obliged to impose—is easily made if we look at the content of the speeches reported in Hansard. Government Members who spoke in favour of the Bill clearly confirmed, in their own words and according to their respective points of view and perspectives, that the Bill would not have the slightest harmful effect on the majority of pensioners receiving the supplement and would only mean a very small sacrifice, less than 50 cents per month, for other pensioners in Canada who are not receiving the supplement.

Although it is obvious the Bill contains very clear assurances to that effect, Opposition Members who spoke to the Bill generally had a list of horror stories that were supposed to result from this legislation. They mentioned elderly Canadians who would be losing their homes or their apartments, or would be forced to move because they would no longer be able to pay the rent, and so on. Some stories were even more dramatic. All this cannot be taken seriously. It is very easy to get public sympathy for the problems of the elderly, but it is a little harder to convince people who do not need the supplement that 50 cents less per month per cheque will mean that they are going to lose their homes or will have to move elsewhere. This is the kind of exaggeration that has lost the Progressive Conservatives, especially, their credibility in this debate. They did all this in letters to senior citizens' clubs and in paragraphs published in the parliamentary bulletin which they can get free since it is paid for by the House of Commons; they can send it to their constituents, and describe the so-called horrors and catastrophic consequences of this Bill.

The fact remains that the pensions of all senior citizens who do have alternate sources of income have been increased. People received their pension cheques about a week ago and they got $3.70 more. Furthermore, only about 50 cents will be subtracted, once the Bill is passed, from the cheques of those who do not need the supplement. I know that for some people this is a lot, and that every cent counts. I know, especially in the case of senior citizens who are just above the cut-off point and are therefore not eligible for the supplement. I think we are all quite aware of this, but the decision we have to make is not about the cheque for February or March, but the increasing lifespan of each of these senior citizens, and what they will need to live on.

I have been Minister of National Health and Welfare for only five years, but during that time, I have seen indexing increase rapidly from year to year. This year, if the predictions made in June were correct and remain consistent, we would probably have had to give something like 11 per cent. Well we were lucky, because since June, since that Budget, the average inflation rate has dropped to 7.6 per cent. But am I doing senior citizens a favour by giving them an 11-per-cent indexation? No. Indexation is not an increase, it is only a way to maintain the value of the dollar. So—

• (1510)

[English]

I would just like to remind all Hon. Members that this Bill would do the most, in the long run, for senior citizens as well as all other Canadians, in winning the six and five battle against inflation.

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if you have noticed that just about every time a Liberal Cabinet Minister stands up these days, it is to impose closure. That seems to be the major reason for their being in the House, to enforce closure on one piece of legislation or another. Closure has indeed become such a commonplace procedure with the Government that we now actually expect, each parliamentary week, to start out with a closure motion, a Government motion to limit debate, such as we have seen concerning Bill C-131. This is legislation which is aimed against the senior citizens of Canada.

I was interested to hear this afternoon that the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) had so convoluted her argument that she has now convinced herself that this Bill will be of benefit to the senior citizens of Canada. She said: "This will benefit them". I would like her to go out and actually speak with some of the senior citizens of this country.

The Bill will reduce the income which hundreds of thousands of senior citizens would have received had this piece of legislation not been introduced. At second reading we had 17 hours of debate on the Bill. That is less than three days in the House of Commons to consider what the Government is doing to senior citizens. At that time, a number of Hon. Members spoke. Fourteen Liberal Members rose to speak in praise of the Bill. They agreed with the punitive measures being taken by the Government against citizens in this country. Twenty-three Conservatives and eight New Democratic Members opposed it, as it ought to be opposed.

In committee we had only four sessions to hear witnesses. Every single witness and every group and organization appearing before us, crowded into those four sessions, violently and strenuously opposed the measures in the Bill. Therefore, after condensed committee hearings and limited debate at second reading, we now come back to the House for report stage, the stage at which important amendments can be intorduced and when the Government can perhaps be persuaded to modify this punitive legislation, and when it might also be persuaded of the error of its ways.

However, what has happened? Even before we reached report stage, even before we had a chance to introduce amendments and debate them, the Government moved to cut off debate, to limit it. It does not want to hear arguments against this atrocious piece of legislation and obviously does not want to consider any measure whatsoever which could possibly improve it. Therefore, once again this House faces closure. Once again, the heavy hand of the Government sweeps down to cast aside all opposition to its point of view. Once again, any semblance of respect for the principles of our parliamentary system, parliamentary democracy, is just scattered to the four winds.

This is not a new spectacle. Certainly, it is not a new spectacle as far as the Government is concerned and it is not a new experience for the House or, indeed, for the Canadian people. We are becoming very well acquainted with the Government's methods, its manipulations and its use of closure over and over again. Over and over again, it seeks to enforce its will by the imposition of silence, because it fears the expression of debate.

It says: "You do not like what we are doing. You do not like why we are doing it. You do not like how we are doing it. Therefore, we will cut debate off. We will limit debate. We will have our way and no other." However, seldom have we seen this particular means, closure, imposed on such a petty Bill as Bill C-131. Seldom have we seen the Government so determined to act, and for what? Is it to reduce its massive deficit? Is it to cut the waste and extravagance which it created? Is it to get Canadians back to work? Is that the reason the Government is introducing this measure? Is it really to cut back on its massive expenditure?

The Government now has a deficit of between $25 billion and $30 billion. The passage of a Bill like this would give the Government an additional $15 million, a mere pittance compared to the $70 million which it spends on self-serving Government advertising to puff itself up. But it is not a pittance to senior citizens. I would very clearly tell Government Members and the Minister, if she had thought to remain in the House, that the $15 million which she is grabbing from the senior citizens of the country is not a pittance to them.

The Minister for National Health and Welfare has told us, as she did in the debate following the introduction of the Bill, that it was up to senior citizens to lead the fight against inflation, yet the Government has just finished an orgy of self congratulation for having brought down inflation, for having brought it under control, as it said. If it believes that it has brought inflation under control, why does it think it is necessary to proceed with the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss MacDonald: Perhaps, because of closure, we will never know the answer to that question. We will never know why it says one thing and does another. There will be no chance for it to explain—and perhaps that is the reason for closure, because it cannot explain and certainly does not want to make the effort. Therefore, we are left to wonder why the Government is proceeding with Bill C-131 and the other Bill in that unholy trio, Bill C-133. We are left to wonder, too, how Hon. Members opposite can actually support these measures taken against senior citizens and the women and children of Canada.

• (1520)

I wonder, when I look at this Bill, if it is only Members on this side of the House who through their actions are shown to represent the senior citizens of this country. I know that all Members in this House on both sides represent senior citizens, but obviously it is only the Members on this side of the House who feel they have to stand up and speak out on behalf of the elderly of this country.

The Minister said in her comments that this Bill was easily explained to the senior citizens of this country. I invite her to come to any of the senior citizen organizations in Kingston and the Islands and give them that easy explanation that she is talking about.

I wonder if backbenchers opposite who are standing up and supporting this Bill can really be unaware of the impact that it is making on the lives of the elderly in this country, the impact on those who live just on the threshold of the Guaranteed Income Supplement, or who live just outside of it, but who are going to have to bear the burden of this particular legislation. Or is it because the Liberal backbenchers have been deceived by their leaders, by the people sitting in the front benches of the Liberal Government? Have they been deceived as the nation was so clearly deceived when the Minister of National Health and Welfare promised on November 4, when she spoke on national television, and I quote:

> All social programs, that means in particular pensions and all benefits for children, will remain the way they are.

Well, they have not. She made that statement and in the next couple of days she moved to change it. Let us make no mistake. This Bill was conceived in deceit and it is being born in deceit. The legislation is a deceit and closure is a deceit.

Now, these may be deceptions that the Hon. Members opposite can swallow, but Members on this side of the House, Members in the Progressive Conservative Party, cannot swallow this kind of deceit which the Minister of National Health and Welfare is seeking to impose today.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I do not think it will be news to you or to Members of the House who are here today to find out that we do not intend to support this proposal of cutting off debate on Bill C-131.

I do not understand why the Government continues to force these measures on the public of Canada. I do not appreciate at all the arguments put forward, either by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) on behalf of this Bill, or last week by the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray) on behalf of the legislation which cut the incomes of public servants who are on pension.

I do not understand what it is that the Government is attempting to achieve. On the one hand, they claim, and I think quite rightly, that the amounts of money they are taking away from people are insignificant. An insignificant amount to the Government may not necessarily be an insignificant amount to an individual or to a couple trying to survive on an old age pension and some earnings from other sources.

It may well be—I say this but I do not believe it—that last year, when the Government brought forward the six and five program,there was something somewhere to justify it. That is entirely possible. I personally did not believe it then, and my Party did not believe it then. We still do not believe, even with the benefit of hindsight, that last late July and August there were conditions which justified the six and five program as it was laid before Parliament at the time, which resulted ultimately in the legislative changes to the old age pensions, to the superannuation fund and to Family Allowances.

Let us assume for the moment there was some reason. Let us be generous and think that perhaps last summer there were conditions which existed which justified that particular course of action being followed. Those conditions certainly no longer exist. By almost every single standard you can apply, taking into account every social and economic commentator who comments on the Canadian economy and the social standing of people within the Canadian economy, they now agree that what we need in Canada is to stimulate the economy. What we need in Canada is to provide more purchasing power, more consumer purchasing power, to stimulate Canadians' ability to purchase while at the same time improving their sense of optimism about the future of the country.

I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that to cut the incomes of those who are in receipt of the lowest incomes in the land, to cut the incomes of those who served this country hard and well and long for their entire life, to use them as the scapegoat, so to speak, for the inadequacy of past Government performance, is just unacceptable to the vast majority of Canadians today.

We have to realize who it is we are speaking about. We are speaking about people who came through the Depression and who, for the most part, were unable to garner any savings in their lifetime, who generally speaking worked at a time when pension plans were somewhat less generous than they may be today, for some who worked at a time when there was not the opportunity to get into an RRSP fund, if they had the money, and salt away a little bit, tax-free, for the future. We are talking about people on whose backs and as a result of whose work this country was built.

We give them little enough in return for their contribution over the years. The amount that they receive now from the Old Age Security program that we have in place is woefully inadequate when measured against the cost of surviving in this dog-eat-dog atmosphere that has been created by successive Liberal and Tory administrations, federal and provincial, over many, many years. To contemplate reducing even that income is to do them a grave disservice but, more importantly, it will undoubtedly work a serious hardship on many of them.

The action that the Government took last year in August, followed up by its proposals for reductions in the cost of living adjustment on old age pensions, Family Allowances and superannuation for retired civil servants has had such an onerous effect on the vast majority of those who would have been in receipt of it. How do you say to someone whose income is $300 or thereabouts that they are not able to receive an increase commensurate with the increase in the cost of living, that they will simply have to absorb any shortfall? How do you say that to people in that category when you know full well that their municipal taxes will rise, that that will reflect itself in their property tax if they own a home or in their rent if they happen to live in an apartment? How do we say that when we know full well that the cost of heating oil and natural gas will rise, and those people, whether they have to share that cost with others in rental accommodation or pay it themselves if they own a home, will not be able to recover an equal amount from their cost of living adjustment? How do you tell those people that the inadequate amounts that they had previously will be even less adequate after we pass this legislation?

What worries me about the Government's move to restrict debate is that I am convinced that if the Government would open up its mind, its ears, and listen, and if it would analyze more carefully both the benefit to the Government's tax coffers from the saving, and the cost to be borne by the senior citizens who will be affected, it would come to the conclusion, as I have, that with the changing economic conditions, to put in place this kind of legislation now is unjustifiable. To suggest for a moment that we ought to pass it post haste in order that we can somehow or other impose it immediately without debate, is to deny that the conditions and the minds of the people in this country have changed.

I do not want to harp on the position put forward by the Bishops, but it is worthy of note that the Bishops, representing significantly large numbers of Canadians, have said that we have to pay more attention to the inadequacies of our social service system. I suggest this would be a good place to start. The presidents of the major banks have said that the direction being followed by the Government of trying to squeeze the economy back into shape is no longer an appropriate direction to follow, that we have to move toward a more stimulative direction in order to generate economic activity, and in that way improve the economy of the country as a whole, the job opportunities, the tax flow to the Government, and the Government's ability to meet its commitments. When you take a look at the two groups of individuals as far apart in their responsibilities as the Bishops, on the one hand, and the presidents of the banks, on the other, and you find them coming to virtually the same conclusions about the direction in which we should be going, and you compare that with the direction followed by the Government, you find that the Government is going in exactly the opposite direction from the recommendations made by both of these bodies. You cannot help then but feel there is something wrong with the way the Government is pursuing its policies, there is something wrong with the methods it is using in developing its policies, and something drastically wrong with the Government's understanding of what is happening in this country as it is affecting the majority of Canadians.

I say to you, Mr. Speaker, as I started, I end; this is no way to deal with the people who built the country. We can afford to give them adjustments in their incomes commensurate with the cost of living, and we ought not to tolerate interference of the type the Government is bringing about, both in the pension programs and in the processes of Parliament in dealing with them.

Mr. Hal Herbert (Vaudreuil): Mr. Speaker, I find it utterly incomprehensible that we are once again going through this rather ridiculous procedure of establishing a time at which this House can come to a decision on a Government measure. I listened to the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald). She did not talk to the motion. She talked to the Bill. The Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) did the same thing. In the case of the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands, I must admit I was not surprised, but I was somewhat disappointed in the case of the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain because he is a Member of the Committee which is looking at the regulations of this House. I feel I will be speaking precisely to the motion which is to limit debate, and I object strongly to the fact that we have to go through this ridiculous exercise.

An Hon. Member: We do not have to.

Mr. Herbert: If the Hon. Members had spoken to the motion, I would perhaps understand why they are now alleging we do not have to go through this exercise. In any civilized democracy, Mr. Speaker, it is generally assumed that the Government has the right to pass its legislation and to pass its programs. The Opposition Members are supposed to bring to the attention of the public their objections to the Government programs, and should try to get the public to force the Government to make changes. That I understand. But, particularly in this Canadian Parliament, which most of us say is modelled on the Mother of Parliaments, Westminster, there is no effort made on the part of the Opposition to come to a mutual agreement to limit debate on a Bill. It is not a matter of how many days. They just say, "We are not going to let the measure pass", thus obliging the Government to bring in the measure to limit debate.

I feel that this House is in disrepute in the minds of the public. I received a call last week from a lady who was angry because the pension cheque of her husband, who was not well, is going to be delayed. But she was blaming the Government. I understand her point of view, and I tried to point out to her, as a Government Member, that our antiquated procedures here are such that the Government, instead of passing its legislation in December, when it wanted, was obliged to come into this new year of 1983, and then had to go through this crazy procedure we have this afternoon of wasting time debating a motion which will bring the issue to a vote on the floor of the House in one or two days' time. The lady, frankly, did not understand. She turned to me and put a question which I found most difficult to answer. She said, "But you are the Government." In other words, she was saying, "Why don't you do something about it?" That is what I want to address my attention to here.

It should not be necessary in a civilized society for us to go through this exercise every time we want to bring a matter to a concluding vote. If Members of Her Majesty's Official Opposition really believe that one day they may form the Government, then they ought to start thinking about changing the regulations of this House. As I said to some friends of mine in the Social Credit Party a few years ago, "Give me half a dozen stalwart MPs in this House and I will tie up this operation so it will never work." They said, "But we don't want to do that because we believe the Government has the right to govern." I said "I'm glad to hear that from a small minority Party." If I can now get that message through to Her Majesty's Official Opposition which always talks about its hopes of forming a Government, I would suggest to them that unless they look at these rules under which we are presently operating, they are going to find themselves in the same position in which the present Government finds itself. It makes absolutely no sense that we should be spending time this afternoon debating a motion to limit debate when we should be debating, instead, the merits of the Bill.

I also suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the only way we could be debating the merits of the Bill this afternoon is by reaching mutual agreement among the Parties in this House that the matter will come to a conclusion at a specific time. I also suggest that the motive of the Hon. Members of the Official Opposition is somewhat self-serving. They want to go on the record in the House not because anyone is listening, any more than anyone is listening to me right now. They want to go on the record because they want to be able to pass on their comments in their mail-outs to their constituents to illustrate what they have been doing and what their point of view is. We have a way to resolve that. Let us follow the process at Westminster. When there are a lot of Members who want to speak, by mutual agreement they carry on past the normal closing hour until midnight, until two o'clock, until four o'clock in the morning, but the Opposition accepts that when they finish talking at four o'clock, there is a vote and the matter comes to a conclusion.

Unless the Opposition accepts that a Government has the right to govern, and pass its legislation, we are going to continue to operate in the way we have been, having to force through on every individual issue, a debate and an unnecessary vote in order to come to the end of the debate on a particular Bill. The most ridiculous part about this, in my opinion, is when we look back at the operation as it existed last year when we had the ringing of the bells with respect to an omnibus Bill.

The Government may have bowed to some pressure here, but I find it strange that it did not put the three Bills, Bills C-131, C-132 and C-133, in the same package. After all, last year we got approval of Her Majesty's Official Opposition for the six and five program and Bills C-131, 132 and 133 are the Bills which carry out that program. I am not discussing the merits. I voiced my objections to one of those Bills in this House. What I am saying is that, because of the objection last year to an omnibus Bill, we were not able to put those three Bills in one package and pass them in a normal, civilized fashion.

As I look at the way we operate in Canada, I find it difficult to come to any conclusion as to where we are going when we talk about changing the rules in order that the Government may be able to assume its role of introducing its program as it has stated, and we are doing now what was stated many months ago, and come to a conclusion. Let the Opposition speak against the measures. Let the Opposition try to inform the public and, if it wants, let the Government hang itself. That is the attitude of the Opposition in Britain. The Government will have its way and the electorate will decide. Maybe we should do more of that in Canada.

Mr. Young: Why bother having an election?

Mr. Herbert: Why? Because our democratic process says, and the Hon. Member should know, that an election puts in a Government for a period ordinarily of four years. They should be able to execute their program during those four years. At the end of four years the electorate will say whether the Government has done a good job. It is not the business of this House to pass every single measure back to the electorate for the electorate's decision. It is the Government's decision. The Government will stand or fall at the next election based on their program and their ability to pass their program.

At the start of this session, going back almost three years, we discussed the reform of Parliament. So far we have brought in the relatively easy measures. I suggest that we wait no longer, that we get rid of this ridiculous procedure that we have at the present time. We can allow extended debate. That is not an issue. I do not mind if we debate all night, but at the end of a fixed period of time, say a maximum two days of extended debate, we should come to a decision on a particular stage of the Bill, whether it be second reading, report stage or third reading. On that basis, there will be a minimum of six days of extended debate on any Bill. But the Government would know that that is the limit. It would not have to go through the ridiculous process we are going through this afternoon.

I plead with the Opposition, if they feel that they want to form the Government of this country, to recognize that the Government must govern. It must get its program through. Stop this nonsense. We expect the NDP to try to hinder this type of social legislation, but with the approval of Her Majesty's Official Opposition, we would come to an agreement and that would be the end of it.

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, you may find this hard to believe. I had to go back and check my figures. However, this is the fifteenth time that this Government has brought down the guillotine during this current session of Parliament. On this day, the four hundred and forty-fourth sitting day of this thirty-second Parliament, we are well into the longest session in Canadian history. At that, the Government is averaging one time allocation foreclosure motion every 30 days, one a month. What this Government wants to do, as stated by Members opposite, is to bring a matter to a vote. They make the decision when the matter shall come to a vote, so they bring down the guillotine. I find this a shocking abuse of parliamentary democracy.

The Hon. Member who just spoke said that we should get rid of this ridiculous procedure. Let us get rid of the right of the Opposition to tell the Government that it is wrong when it tries to close off debate. The President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Gray), about two weeks ago, now that they average closure once every two weeks, called our opposition to choking off Parliament irrelevant. I call this sickening procedure dictatorial, pure and simple.

Not only does the Government persist in cutting off debate every time it presents obviously bad legislation, but with the recent time allocation just before Christmas with respect to the Canagrex Bill, they really outdid themselves. They moved time allocation on report stage and third reading at the same time. Now suggestions are coming from the other side of the House that we should have lumped Bills C-131, 132 and 133 into an omnibus Bill and brought down the closure motion on all of them at the same time. It would be like the omnibus energy Bill on which we had to resort to extraordinary measures to get the Government to act in a democratic way.

What really seems so unnecessary is the way the Government treats the parliamentary Opposition. I guess it can only be explained by the Liberal legislators' fear that their Bills will be exposed for the poorly drafted, badly executed pieces of legislation that they really are.

In the case of Canagrex, while there are still some clauses which are meeting with strong opposition, particularly from some of my western Canada colleagues, the proposed Canagrex Bill had had time to be absorbed by those who will be affected by it. Its exposure during the Christmas-New Year's recess, resulted in greater understanding and acceptability of Canagrex, as the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) and the farmers have been learning.

The point is that some of these pieces of legislation need a good deal of airing both in this House and across the country. Yes, they take time. However, the Government gets upset when there is mounting concern across the country about an issue that the Government cannot justify. Then it brings down the guillotine.

This is why there is an opposition in a parliamentary democracy. I know the Government does not believe in an opposition. They will get to understand what opposition is when we form the Government. That is why we are here, waiting until we can form the Government. I am talking now about Official Opposition, of course.

This Government, under the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has always regarded Parliament as a nuisance and MPs as nobodies 50 feet away. Indeed, the Liberal Cabinet regards MPs as nobodies in this Chamber, including their own Members of Parliament.

Many of my colleagues have dealt with the substantive aspects, the downright niggling, unfair aspects of Bill C-131. I firmly believe this time allocation measure will be regarded by senior citizens across this country as one more nail in the coffin of this Liberal administration. Any MP who votes for this measure to close it off, to choke it off and go for riding on the backs of our senior citizens will, I suspect, find their own contract with the voters annihilated come the next federal election.

What they are doing is using a procedural motion to reduce the income of senior citizens. As I said, my very real concern is the astounding frequency with which this arrogant and dictatorial Government sees fit to lower the boom on this and all manner of other pieces of legislation.

I confess that in the interests of an efficient Parliament, allocation of time properly used is not altogether bad. An agreement between all Parties might make time allocation desirable for certain pieces of legislation, but is it a proper use of this motion to cut off debate on an issue that will do a great deal of harm to a great many people in this country? I can remember when Standing Order 75C was first introduced in the early seventies by the then House leader, Hon. Donald Macdonald. He is the man now in charge of our economic destiny. At the time the Government was embarrassed to use the full force of the closure motion which, before the rules were changed, was Standing Order 33. Instead, they brought in Standing Order 75A, b and c, all of which constitute time allocation in one form or another. The then President of the Privy Council went to great pains to soothe the fears of the Opposition and of the media who were all wondering what would happen when Standing Order 75C came into effect. He told them that this would not be used as a routine measure but would only be used under very special circumstances. So much for the Hon. Donald Macdonald's commitment to the House. He is no longer a Member of the House and does not have to stand by that commitment, but it is frightening to think that he is now in charge of our economic destiny.

When I first came to Parliament and watched the House of Commons in action, it was the Black Friday in 1956 when the full force of closure was used in the pipeline debate. It also brought down the Government of the day. I remember the flag debate when closure was used. That was also a very special moment in our history.

It is the slow strangulation process which the Government seems bent on, with a fixed bottom line date when everything must be completed according to its desire, its will, its timetable—it is the sheer deviousness of the thing that is making us sick on this side of the House.

Never in the history of this country have so many closure motions been faced by a Parliament. During this Parliament, Members of Cabinet have moved closure 15 times in this House. Closure was moved shortly after the introduction of the constitutional resolution. Cabinet cannot do this, Mr. Speaker. Cabinet cannot deny Canadians the freedom of speech which this House represents unless that Cabinet is sustained by its backbenchers. I say to Hon. Members opposite that they must examine their consciences on each and every occasion that a Cabinet Minister suggests it is a good idea to move closure. On this side we do not feel that it is ever a good idea, particularly when it affects the constituency that bringing down the guillotine will, in this case.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I say that this legislation is unfair, and even if the Liberal Government cuts us off, senior citizens will remember how unfair it has been to them.

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, at the outset, I think it is important to clear up some of the remarks made by the previous speaker.

First of all, the matter we are debating is not closure and anyone who suggests that it is, does not understand the rules. There is a fundamental difference between closure, which was introduced by the Conservative Borden Government in the naval debate prior to World War I. The closure measure, known as Standing Order 33 under the old rules, is fundamentally different from time allocation which falls under Standing Order 75 and, in this particular instance, Standing Order 75C.

My friend, the Hon. Member for Hamilton-Wentworth (Mr. Scott) said that under certain conditions, when there is an agreement, time allocation is a proper thing. The first two parts of Standing Order 75 cover the circumstances where there has been an agreement between two of the major Parties or among all three Parties and has never been used. The only occasion on which time allocation has been used Standing Order 75C, has been when there was no agreement.

Of course we would like to have agreement on how much time should be spent debating Bills in the House. The reason we have used this particular provision is that agreement has been impossible. It is very important for the public to understand that to refer to this provision as closure is wrong, misleading and unfair.

Let us see how much time has been spent in debating this Bill, Mr. Speaker. On November 18 we spent two hours; November 25 three hours 30 minutes; November 30, four hours 50 minutes, and December 10, two hours 23 minutes.

When we were discussing what would be a reasonable period of time to spend on a Bill on second reading under the new rules, a lot of us were influenced by what happens at the Mother of Parliaments, in Westminster. On second reading of a Bill, the standard procedure there is that in very few circumstances does debate exceed one day, with no automatic adjournment. If it is a controversial Bill it is usually debated into the small hours. Some Members suggested we should give consideration to that. In view of the fact that we were not going to have evening sittings under the new rules, it was thought it might be reasonable to assume that we could have two days' debate on second reading.

Of course, on second reading the nature of the debate is that the Bill be discussed in general principle. The type of amendments which may be moved at second reading are very limited. That is why, under the new rules, we provided for one round of speeches and then allocate eight hours, with the 20 minute and 10 minute time limit. Eight hours is approximately two full days, when Question Period and Routine Proceedings are excluded.

More than eight hours has been spent on second reading of this Bill. Under the new rules, the 10 minute time limit on speeches would automatically have come into effect some time ago. At report stage, the purpose is not to do again what was supposed to be done at second reading, that is, debate the general principles of the Bill, but to debate the amendments of which notice has been given, and changes that may have taken place in committee. This has been done exhaustively on this Bill.

The only conclusion that a fair and objective-minded person can come to is that the Opposition, for political reasons, has decided to dig in its heels and not allow this matter to come to a vote without time allocation. That is a legitimate political move, but to paint it in other terms is to mislead the House and the public.

We recognize what is going on and we have said that we have an obligation to the public to bring in the six and five program across the board. That is part of the price we pay for being in Government. Sometimes we have to do things that are not particularly popular. If we are to get inflation under control, then certain Bills must be proceeded with. This one is part of the over-all six and five program. I do not expect the Opposition to allow any of the six and five Bills to go through without making us bring in time allocation—which is not closure. I anticipate that we will have to do that.

I think what you really have to decide before this motion comes to a vote, Mr. Speaker, is whether a reasonable time has elapsed for debate on this Bill. Any fair-minded person would conclude that it has and that we are now hearing arguments being repeated for the umpteenth time. This may not be particularly popular medicine, but I submit that it is leadership and it is responsible.

• (1600)

In addition to referring to this as closure, Hon. Members opposite have frequently talked about a decrease. When one caps an increase, that is not a decrease. I think the public are ill-served by that sort of political rhetoric. The motion before us today is reasonable and responsible. It shows that in fact the Government is giving leadership. We are not backing away from or shirking our responsibilities. Under all circumstances, and given the position of the Opposition, we are quite justified in the motion allocating the debate to one day for each of the two remaining stages.

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I found the address of the Hon. Liberal Member who just sat down very amusing. He does not agree that a rose by any other name is still a rose. If we follow his logic, instead of going out and buying roses to put on the table, we should go out and buy some stinkweed. Then he would tell us that it was not a stinkweed, that it was a rose.

Mr. Smith: A rose is a rose.

Mr. Taylor: He can call it whatever he likes, but it is still closure. He should not forget that he can call a rose a stinkweed but that does not make it a stinkweed, and vice versa. I would hate to have anybody call a stinkweed a rose and put it on my table. I do not like the smell of it, but I like the smell of a rose. I do not like the smell of closure, or whatever they call it. Closure is becoming the tyranny of the majority.

A few moments ago the Hon. Member was trying to justify this debate. As a matter of fact all Liberal Members are doing that. I would like to refer to the debate which we have had on this important issue affecting the incomes, the lives and health of thousands of people of the country. On November 18 we had debated it for just an evening, not a day. On November 25, which was a Thursday, we debated it right through the day. On November 30, which was a Tuesday, we debated it right through the day. Then, after two and a half days of debating this important issue, the Liberals brought in closure on December 2, and it was a one-day closure at that. Then the Bill was called on December 10, debated one day and closed off. The Hon. Member said that there had been a long debate. If we counted it up, we would see that there has been three and a half days of debate, that is all. That is counting the day of closure. Surely that is not too long to debate a matter which is affecting the people who helped to build the country. We must not forget that. Then we came to report stage. On December 21 we had a full day. Then on Wednesday, December 22, we had just a short day.

I wish the Hon. Member would not leave. He should get these things straight in his mind before he goes out and tells the same type of stuff to other people. There were two days at report stage, and that is all. Now they are bringing in closure again. Do they say that two days is too long a debate at report stage? At report stage there were six Liberal, five NDP and nine Progressive Conservative speakers. That is 20 speakers altogether from the House of Commons which is comprised of 282 Members on an important issue affecting the lives of people who helped build the country. These are the people who made it possible for Hon. Members and me to sit here. The Hon. Member said that that was too much. I say that this is the tyranny of the majority.

When the Hon. Member from Quebec spoke a few moments ago, apparently he was fed up with the Government calling closure and wanted different rules adopted. We live in a democracy, not a totalitarian state. Although sometimes it is difficult to distinguish from the policies the present Government advances; it is still a democracy, and a democratic Government is supposed to reflect the thinking of the people, not tell the people what is good for them. This is not a totalitarian state wherein the Government knows all that is good for the people and tells them what is good for them. The Government should be listening to the people. If the Government would listen to them, it would not bring in this type of legislation in the first place. Also the Government should realize that while it is the Government of Canada, it has representation from far less than all of Canada. It has no representation in the three western Provinces. Surely the Government should be making a special stand in trying to find out what those Canadians think, but it does not want to listen to the representatives of those people. It wants to close us off and not listen at all. Then it claims it is a national Government.

The people of Canada do not want this type of legislation. They do not want closure advanced every time we have an important Bill. If there is debate on a Bill which goes on and on and the arguments become repetitive, that is one thing, but the arguments in this debate have not yet become repetitive. There are many things still to be said about our old age pensioners. That is exactly what the Bill is stopping. It is stopping us from telling what the people of the country want.

I wonder if Hon. Members opposite ever thought about going into a senior citizens' home where there are a hundred people and asking them what they think about these things. We should be reflecting the thinking of the people. If a large majority of the people do not want legislation which denies senior citizens a reasonable living—and I am sure a large majority do not—the Government should not bring it in. That is not reflecting the thinking of the people. It is telling the people what is good for them. That is not my idea of democracy.

Also the Hon. Member for Quebec suggested changes. They have been in power for 40 years or so. Surely they have had lots of time to bring in other changes if they wanted to do so. The people are becoming tired of closure. It has happened twice in this one debate. We had one day and now we have a two-day closure on this one. Government Members are suggesting that because they call it a different name, that because they call it time allocation, it is not closure. They are stopping debate, and to me that is closure.

Indexing was brought in by a federal Government which was representative of all Canadians. This Government is not. It should recognize that it has very little representation in some Provinces and none in others. It should be going out of its way to find out what people think, the people who are not represented on that side of the House. It should not be cutting off debate on this side where the people have sent representatives to speak for them. We are speaking for them. Indexing was brought in so that senior citizens could have a reasonable standard of living. If we cut off indexing, we will affect the standard of living of a great number of senior citizens. I tell the Government that if it cuts off indexing senior citizens will not have a reasonable standard of living.

Senior citizens have already gone through their restraint period. They went through the hungry thirties when they had to scrape for everything they could get. Many of them went hungry in the hungry thirties, but they continued to work to build an economy that would surely recognize the virtues of the pioneers. But now they are being betrayed. They thought that at least when they got a pension they would be okay. Indexing was added by a national government so that when the price of food went up they could still have a reasonable standard of living. But now that is being denied them. A part of their pension is being cut off. The Government is telling them that they are getting too much.

How many Hon. Members opposite have had senior citizens come to them when an overpayment was made by mistake by a Department? The senior citizen gets a letter telling him or her to pay it back. But senior citizens do not have money to pay it back. The Government says, "We will take more from your pension each month and you will have to go without a little bit because the Department made a mistake. You have to pay for it." That has happened to me many times when pensioners in my riding get an overpayment. They think the Department knows what it is doing. They think the Government knows what it is doing. Senior citizens spend their money on things that are needed. Their money is not spent on any extravagance. Their money is spent on necessities, and when a mistake is made by the Department, they, the pensioners, have to pay it back. Senior citizens have to cut back again next month. All they are asked to do is cut, cut, cut. Now this Government is asking them to cut more. This Government is also bringing in closure to stop us from even giving Parliament their plea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Before I recognize the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Tousignant), may I deal with the proceedings of the adjournment motion this evening?

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 45, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the Hon. Member for La Prairie (Mr. Deniger)—Air Transport—Alleged refusal of permission for Wardair to compete with Air Canada and Canadian Pacific Airlines; the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson)—Penitentiaries—Cancellation of university courses—(b) Request that decision be deferred—(c) Provision of free university tuition to inmates; and the Hon. Member for Kootenay West (Mr. Kristiansen)—Forestry—Inquiry respecting Government programs and policies.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

ALLOCATION OF TIME TO CONSIDER REPORT AND THIRD READING STAGES OF BILL C-131

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Miss Bégin:

That, in relation to Bill C-131, an Act to amend the Old Age Security Act (No. 2), one sitting day shall be allotted to the consideration of each of the report stage and the third reading stage of the Bill; and

That, fifteen minutes before the expiry of the time provided for government business on those days, any proceedings before the House shall be interrupted, if required, for the purpose of this Order and, in turn, every question then necessary in order to dispose of the stage of the Bill then under consideration shall be put forthwith and successively, without further debate or amendment.

[Translation]

Mr. Henri Tousignant (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, to hear the Hon. Members opposite, you would think the world was going to collapse, and to see them raising their arms heavenwards like the chorus in a Greek tragedy, people must think this country is headed for a complete breakdown. Mr. Speaker, this is the worst display of bad faith I have ever seen. It is absolute hypocrisy, and I cannot believe my ears when I hear people talking about rights having been breached and our democratic system being attacked in Parliament. Imagine, since the beginning of this debate, more than 57 speakers have been given the floor during more than 20 hours of debate here in the House, and in the final instance, more than 22 hours will have been spent on debate and we shall have heard about 69 speakers. It is really unbelievable. As my hon. colleague from Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert) said earlier, the way the Members opposite are acting now is indeed an affront to our democratic system. They have found a new weapon to obstruct the proceedings, namely, by using up all allotted time to force us to impose closure. And when we do impose closure, they are all shocked and claim we are preventing Opposition Members from speaking in the House.

Mr. Speaker, just what is the proper procedure in any legally constituted assembly? For instance, in a company, if at a meeting one of ten directors does not agree, can he obstruct the proceedings indefinitely and demand that people listen to what he has to say all night long, or all week, because that is the democratic way of doing things? I do not think so, Mr. Speaker. At meetings, people have to finish their business some time. However, the business of the House that should have been finished before the House adjourned for Christmas has not been finished yet. Of course, the debate can go on and on, until the summer recess, and the business of the House can be left to stagnate, and this is how the Opposition is trying to give Canadians the impression that it is defending their interests and that they have nothing to gain if this Bill is passed, especially senior citizens, who they say, will have lost a considerable part of their purchasing power. However, in 1984, full indexation would have meant only $50 more, I believe. So if we consider that by that time, the rate of inflation will have gone down, it is quite clear that people's purchasing power will not have been eroded at all.

The Members opposite are trying to give people the impression they will be in dire straits, that they will suffer and that they will have to tighten their belts. Well, on the radio at noon, it was said that according to an international Gallup poll, Canadians are the happiest people in the world—the happiest people on this planet, Mr. Speaker. Funny that 95 per cent of Canadian respondents said that they were quite happy with their situation, in referring to their jobs, their social life, and so on—95 per cent actually said they were very happy. We are the happiest people in the world. So, when a few moments ago, the Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) asked the Government why we were doing this, and whether it was going to create jobs or reduce the deficit, and so on, and when the Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) asked the Government to take a serious look at the consequences of such action, they could not understand how this measure would in the final instance benefit all Canadians. They are wondering why we did this. Mr. Speaker, we merely want to be consistent. We have already imposed the 6 and 5 policy on federal employees, and we know perfectly well this is not going to mean millions of dollars for the Government nor is it going to reduce indexing by 50 cents for all Canadians, but we do not want to give any particular group special treatment. It seems to me this should not be difficult to understand. Legislation is supposed to apply to everyone, and is not meant to please some people and upset others. So we must be consistent, and that is why we must take this action.

Mr. Speaker, pensioners are really not going to be affected the way people are trying to make it seem. Actually, pensioners who are now receiving the basic pension will be capped at 6 per cent, while those receiving the Guaranteed Income Supplement will receive full indexing. As far as family allowances are concerned, they will be indexed at 6 and 5 per cent. On the other hand, the child tax credit will be increased to $343, which means that people in low-income groups will probably benefit from this arrangement. Canadians seem to understand this quite well, and they are not very worried, but the Members opposite are trying to juggle their figures and juggle people's feelings, with the result that they are spreading fear and anxiety among senior citizens. In fact, as was said earlier, this group has known poverty, the depression and the rest, and the Government is certainly not trying to breach their rights—on the contrary. We appreciate the work they have done for Canada, and we want to maintain, and if possible improve, their situation from year to year.

It is therefore clear, Mr. Speaker, that the duty of elected representatives and governments is to make themselves the voice and the agents of justice for the benefit of the community. The Government intends to proceed in this fashion and will continue to do so.

Since my time has now expired, I shall step down, as I see the Speaker is going to cut me off.

• (1620)

[English]

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, it is with no great pleasure that I rise to speak on this motion to invoke closure once again. It appears that it is becoming a regular habit of the Government to get all its legislation through the House by closure. I think it is particularly tragic that the Government seems to be moving a series of closure motions on a group of Bills through which the Government has decided—hard to believe as it is—who will suffer because of its mismanagement. Last week, it was the retired civil servants and retired Armed Forces personnel who were made to suffer. This week it will be the old age pensioners. I do not know who it will be next week. The Government may think of taking its troubles out on crippled children or someone else. However, the Government's bad humour over its incapability to run the country in a logical and sensible fashion is getting to be almost more than a person can stand.

I would like to deal with the subject of closure. The Parliamentary Secretary wishes to indulge in semantics by saying that this motion does not constitute closure but simply stops debate. It is interesting to look back and see the opinion that was held in what might be said the olden days, before we had the likes of this Government. I was reading an old Hansard dated May 21, 1956. The debate at that time concerned the northern Ontario pipeline. Mr. George Drew was speaking. He said, as reported at page 4160 of Hansard:

> There has never been a similar application of closure in this Parliament or at Westminster. On the first occasion when closure was applied here the bill was introduced on December 5, 1912, and closure was applied on April 10, 1913.

That is four months later. That is how the Canadian Parliament functioned for a long time. The House was given a very reasonable amount of time before the Government swung the axe of closure on a debate.

This is no longer the case. The Government announces closure ahead of time. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) announced closure when he did not even intend to use it. I suspect the reason why the Government rushes into closure motions now is that it becomes a habit-forming.

I would like to quote from an old Hansard once again. On May 29, 1956, as reported at page 4422, the Right Hon. John Diefenbaker said:

> Yesterday the Prime Minister, endeavoured once more, by a technique so crude as to be transparent, to return out of the kindness of his heart a portion of the rights of parliament. The Prime Minister has always been a great student of history. One has to go back to the days of James or Charles in order to see similar conduct, conduct which was generally believed to have ended for all time; but that spirit of tyranny came back during the days of John Wilkes in the mid-eighteenth century. It is, therefore, interesting to read that in 1621 parliament, then dominated by the sovereign, not by the sovereign's chief minister, asked that something be done to restore freedom to parliament, and that at that time this was said: > —in the handling . . . of those businesses every Member of the house hath, and of right ought to have, freedom of speech to Profound, treat, reason, and bring to concusion the same.

However, we do not have that freedom or right any longer. We do have the right to come here and debate for two or three days a vicious Bill such as this which cuts the standard of living enjoyed by old age pensioners in this country.

I listened very carefully to the speech given by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin). I would like to give her notice now that I will have a question for her during third reading about her statement on how this Bill will not hurt those people on the Guaranteed Income Supplement, even if that GIS payment is as small as $2 a month. While I do not have the exact figures, let us use the figure of $250 a month for old age pension, and $250 for the Guaranteed Income Supplement. Let us say, for example, that someone had a private pension of $248 a month and the old age pension. Those pensions combined would total $498 a month. That person would then need a $2 Guaranteed Income Supplement. According to the Minister's remarks today, does this mean that the pensioner will get indexation from then on of his or her old age pension, plus full indexation of his private pension, plus whatever it takes to get him to the limit of the minimum income? I hope the Minister will be able to clarify that for us tomorrow because many people in my constituency are worried about it.

I might say that I have the honour to represent a wonderful group of people in my constituency, of whom 23,295 are old age pensioners. A great majority of these pensioners are women. There are 6,385 widows in my constituency of Victoria. These pensioners do not understand what the Government is doing. They are scared to death of what they hear the Government is doing. Frankly, I would appreciate it if someone on the Government side would tell us if the Government will even allow pensioners to live at a standard of living which is 5 per cent lower than it would have been, had this Bill not been introduced. The result of this legislation is that people will have to lower their standard of living this year by 5 per cent.

I would like to quote from a letter which I received. I am glad to be able to read it into the record because this gentleman misunderstood the Government's intention, as one easily can with a Government like this. In his letter, dated October 14, 1982, he said:

> I have heard over the radio that the Government may not be able to continue payment of Old Age Pensions and if this happens I will be in deep trouble.
> My wife Kathleen has been in Central Care Home, 844 Johnson Street, Victoria, B.C. nearly three years now and I use her pension and my own to pay for her care. We are both over 80 years of age.

He continues his letter, but I think you can understand from that that the people who write to me are worried. That letter is from Mr. John P. Wyseman of Stafford Street in my constituency.

I just cannot understand why the Government is proposing this legislation at this time. I am sure Members on all sides are pleased that inflation is going down. Surely it will not be long before we experience 6 per cent to 7 per cent inflation. Why scare the people? Why go after the people the way in which the Government is doing? It is really beyond me. Why not wait a few months, perhaps with a six month hoist, and if the promises of lower inflation that are given on the financial pages these days are true and if the United States gets down to their target area of 2 per cent or 3 per cent inflation, the Bill would not be necessary. We could then continue to do what is right and fitting, which is, to treat our senior citizens with the dignity and generosity for which Canada is noted. Instead of that, we seem to be seized with the idea of hurting the most defenseless people in our society. I wish that it would stop.

• (1630)

Mr. Jim Peterson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Economic Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, the Bill before us deals with our senior citizens. The Hon. Member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon) has indicated to us that many senior citizens are apprehensive concerning the intentions of our Government toward them. Therefore, I welcome the opportunity of explaining in brief what the six and five program is and how it relates to Canada's senior citizens.

There can be no doubt but that we are asking Canada's senior citizens to engage with us in the process of helping to build a stronger economic future. That is why there is a capping of certain payments going to senior citizens, but we have not capped nor put any limit on the amount of Old Age Security benefits which are related to a test of one's income, that is, the Guaranteed Income Supplement.

Mr. Nickerson: That is called welfare.

Mr. Peterson: It is not limited. Therefore, we can ensure that those senior citizens who are most needy will have the benefit of full indexing.

The Hon. Member for Victoria, quite correctly, pointed out that inflation is falling. We hope very much, fervently, that it will fall to 6 per cent or an even lower level. That way we will all be able to move ahead and there will be no one who falls behind.

A number of Hon. Members opposite have spoken of closure. We are debating time allocation. They have called it a draconian measure. I believe that when one takes away the hyperbole and the partisan rhetoric, one finds that there is a certain amount of hypocrisy in that statement. Hon. Members in the Official Opposition did vote for our six and five program in this House, and all the constituent elements were before all Hon. Members when it was voted upon. However, if their concern is for senior citizens, then let me tell Hon. Members that I join in that concern and so do other Hon. Members on this side of the House.

There are far too many senior citizens in our country today who are below the poverty level. Sixty-five per cent of senior citizens living below the poverty line are women living alone because they are single, separated, divorced or widowed.

Mr. McKinnon: It will be lower next time.

Mr. Peterson: I do not think it is anything of which anyone in this House can be proud.

An Hon. Member: It is the Liberal legacy.

Mr. Peterson: Mr. Speaker, when Hon. Members opposite start to shout partisan, stupid rhetoric rather than helping us to address the problems and get on with the issues, then I think they are doing a disservice to our senior citizens. I humbly submit that those people will not be raised above that poverty line simply by an indexing or deindexing measure relating to the Old Age Security payments which will probably be anyway at the 6 per cent level in terms of inflation. It requires a much more massive assault on our entire pension system.

I welcome the efforts of Hon. Members opposite to join with us and deal with the very serious issues concerning retirement income for Canadians which are before us and which have been tabled in a Green Paper on pension reform.

Pensions funds developed by the private sector cover very few of our pensioners. Only about 10 per cent of retirement income is derived from private pensions plans. In particular, these private plans do not meet the needs of women in our work force.

Women are inclined to work part time in certain circumstances. They will often have to move from one job to another in order to accommodate their spouses. Women often drop out of the work force in order to bear and raise their children. Women in this country earn a disgraceful level of income when compared to that of men. It amounts to about 60 per cent. We have not achieved equality, equal pay for work of equal value. We must look on pensions as being joint family assets and not simply the asset of the contributor who, under most plans, receives more benefits than the survivor who, in most cases, is the spouse.

Therefore, I ask Hon. Members opposite to join with us in this serious process we have started of looking at pension reform, particularly to help the people about whom I have spoken. That is the real way of dealing with the big problem before us. We should not simply nit-pick the six and five program.

Another aspect which we must also consider very carefully involves the very important role played today by senior citizens in our society, one which I believe can and should be vastly expanded.

The 1980 report by Statistics Canada on voluntarism in our country showed the very big contribution made by volunteers in Canada. In the one year considered, 2.7 million adults worked as volunteers. They donated over 373 million hours of work, which boiled down to 212,000 person years which, if we had to pay for it at going rates, would have constituted additional wages of $3.5 billion in that particular year.

I hope that because of our amendment as well as the Charter of Rights, we will see women and women's groups becoming much more active in enforcing their rights which are on the books and to which they are entitled as human beings and as Canadians.

We also find that because women have lower incomes, they have much lower pensionable earnings. This is what creates the problem for women who are retired and who must live on this type of low income. This is why so many of them live below the poverty line. Quite frankly, it is a disgrace. This is why we must consider very carefully many improvements in terms of pension reform. We must worry about earlier vesting, improved portability and better protection for spouses under our private sector plans. Under the Canada Pension Plan, we must consider increasing the maximum pensionable earnings which can go into the plan and also consider child rearing and drop-out provisions. We must be concerned about survivors' benefits and the consequences of separation of marriage breakup and credit splitting between spouses.

Senior citizens have a great deal to contribute in our society. Just because a person reaches retirement age does not mean that he or she should be put on the ash heap of humanity. Senior citizens should not be forgotten immediately, because they have much to contribute from everything that they have learned through their education, from on-the-job training and from life experience. Many of our volunteers are senior citizens. This type of effort must be given the recognition which it deserves. We could not do without them and we want more from them.

Mr. Darling: You sure do!

Mr. Peterson: It calls for a changed attitude.

Mr. Darling: You sure do! You want your other 50 cents!

Mr. Peterson: It calls for a changed attitude by us toward our senior citizens and toward the useful and constructive role that they can play in developing our country. It calls upon us to make better use of the talents that are there. I cite to Hon. Members one program only. It is the Canadian Executive Service Overseas under which retired people who are experienced can go to developing countries. They get no salary for it. Transportation is paid. They will have accommodation in the host country, and they will be able to bring to bear their skills there, to work. I think that type of program is one that we should all work on expanding, taking advantage of the talent and particularly the compassion that these people have.

● (1640)

Our senior citizens have seen tough times but they know how to cope with them as well and they can bring a great deal to the way we want to build our society. We could never afford their services if we had to pay for them on a full-time basis.

Let us join together to give senior citizens the due recognition that they deserve and, more particularly, their due place in our society so that they can continue their valuable contribution.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that a communication has been received from Government House as follows:

Government House
Ottawa

January 31, 1983

Madam,

I have the honour to inform you that the Honourable Julien Chouinard, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, in his capacity as Deputy Governor General, will proceed to the Senate Chamber today, the 31st day of January, 1983 at 5.45 p.m., for the purpose of giving Royal Assent to certain Bills.

I have the honour to be,
Madam,
Your obedient servant,
Edmond Joly de Lotbinière,
Administrative Secretary to the Governor General

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

ALLOCATION OF TIME TO CONSIDER REPORT AND THIRD READING STAGES OF BILL C-131

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Miss Bégin:

That, in relation to Bill C-131, an Act to amend the Old Age Security Act (No. 2), one sitting day shall be allotted to the consideration of each of the report stage and the third reading stage of the Bill; and

That fifteen minutes before the expiry of the time provided for government business on those days, any proceedings before the House shall be interrupted, if required, for the purpose of this Order and, in turn, every question then necessary in order to dispose of the stage of the Bill then under consideration shall be put forthwith and successively, without further debate or amendment.

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, I have listened with great interest to the contributions that have been made on this debate by Members on the Government side of the House. One of the more interesting ones was the one just made by the Hon. Member for Willowdale (Mr. Peterson) on the benefits that society derives from those individuals who volunteer their time to work, within society. If I may, I do not mind suggesting to the Member for Willowdale that it would be a great idea if he were to sit down with the Minister responsible for the Status of Women and have a chat with her about the things that he just said, because I think she could benefit from that.

I also listened with some interest to the Hon. Member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert) who complained at great length that Members of the Opposition perhaps did not act in a very civilized manner by allowing the Government to get its own way in terms of allowing the legislation that they perceive to be important to go through expeditiously in this House. He seemed to indicate that the Opposition should in fact only oppose to the extent that the Government desired any form of opposition. Quite frankly, after listening to the Hon. Member for Vaudreuil, I developed a new appreciation for the need for a strong opposition to the Government in this particular House, because the kind of democracy that he perceives is certainly not one that I would desire or indeed that I believe the vast majority of Canadians would desire to be put in place in this House.

Also, in listening to the Hon. Member for Don Valley East (Mr. Smith), in this particular debate, I found that he took the tack that I have heard for so many years coming from the Government side, which is that there is an increasing tendency to blame everyone for the country's ailments. Whether it be on economic questions, whether it be on oil pricing, it is never the Government that accepts the blame for all these things. It is always international markets, international conditions that are to blame and the fact that inflation is an international phenomenon. Now what we hear from the Government side is that senior citizens are to blame for inflation, and they are asking senior citizens to mobilize to bring down the country's inflation. One of these days I would hope, and I am sure most Members on this side of the House and most Canadians would like to hear it, that the Government just for once would stand up and accept some responsibility for its own actions, rather than try to blame everyone else, as I said, in this case senior citizens, recipients of Family Allowances, public servants, for the high inflation in the country. Just for once I would like to hear them stand up and say, "Perhaps we had a role to play in bringing about inflation".

Miss MacDonald: Admit a mistake!

Mr. Young: They could say that perhaps it is through measures that they could implement in the House and in the country that inflation could be brought down. But I think I am going to wait a long time before I hear this Government make that kind of concession both in this House and to the Canadian people.

The Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) correctly pointed out that she did not understand why the Government was initiating this indecent haste to pass this legislation through, what we like to call closure and what the Government complains is not in fact closure, it is something else. But by any name it is closure and designed to cut off debate on this extremely important Bill and in effect put a gag on Parliament, and especially the Opposition Members, who have a responsibility to express the views of those Canadians who strongly disagree with what this Government is trying to do. In my view I was elected to do exactly that, and I deeply resent any measure on the Government side which says, look, you guys are opposing this to such an extent that it is hindering us in implementing this piece of legislation, albeit bad legislation. I think that is my right to do that as a person who represents the constituency of Beaches.

One of the reasons why I really resent this Government measure at this time to limit debate on this Bill is that I sat on the committee, as did other Members present in the House, and we took a look at this piece of legislation. We said to the Government, "You have had this intent since last June, and the legislation was finally referred to committee last December". I believe it was referred on Thursday or Friday and went into committee on Monday. The Opposition Members said to the committee, "This piece of legislation has such serious implications for the seniors in this country that we believe they should be given the opportunity to appear before this Committee." They can then give us their views on this legislation and tell us what impact, in their view, this legislation would have on their future incomes.

We said that simply giving this committee one week to study this piece of legislation will not give people the right to do that. As a result, we submitted a list of people who we thought should be called because they represented large segments of the population. Those people were contacted and we heard from many of them. We certainly did not receive a wide input from many Canadians who may have wished to appear before that committee to express their concerns about this piece of legislation. I think that is a crying shame because I know of many individual Canadians who have spoken to me since then who said that they felt badly because they would have likely to appear before the committee to talk to us and, hopefully, to make the Government Members understand what the true impact of this legislation was going to be on them.

There certainly seems to be an awful lot of confusion about the impact of this legislation. The Member for Willowdale, in his contribution to this debate, told us that in his view this would not add to any great numbers being driven into poverty as a result of the 6 and 5 legislation. He is totally off track with most other Canadians who have taken a look at this piece of legislation. Some very authoritative organizations which have studied the impact of the 6 and 5 program on seniors have estimated that at the end of the two-year period there will literally be a couple of hundred thousand elderly Canadians, who now have incomes above the poverty level, who will have incomes below the poverty level at the end of the two-year period. If the Government reintroduces full indexation of pensions at the end of the two-year period, and that is a big "if", because I have never heard any assurance that it will do so, the indexations on which the pensions are calculated will be much, much smaller than they would have been without the six and five program. We have pressed the Government to give us figures to show what the true impact will be, and the Government still has not done that. Surely, if they are imposing this kind of legislation on over two million senior citizens in this country, at the very least they should have done the calculations which would have clearly shown what the impact will be at the end of the two year period, and they have failed to do so.

• (1650)

Until such time as they do that, Mr. Speaker, I am going to continue to stand up and protest any attempt by this Government to gag the Official Opposition or the Members of my own Party. I totally disagree with the concept and I will oppose it today, tomorrow, next week and over the next two years. In fact, I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, that we in this Party, and I am quite sure I speak on behalf of the Conservative Party, intend to make this issue a major issue in the next election campaign.

Mr. Jim Schroder (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, this debate today has ranged far and wide, but the major reason for the debate is to talk about the reasons for time allocation, and to debate on the use of time allocation. I will reverse the words of the Hon. Member for Hamilton-Wentworth (Mr. Scott) and say that obstruction is a shocking abuse of the time of the House and that the tyranny of the minorities is what we see in many of these cases preventing good legislation. I would like to draw the Hon. Member's attention to the fact that a Member of his own Party suggested that time allocation is a gentle form of ending debate.

Why do we have to have time allocation? Presumably, it is to make better use of the time of the House of Commons. I can appreciate the fact that when people have something to say, they should have an opportunity to say it, and that we should be able to see Bills going through the proper stages and eventually coming back to the House for passage.

I would just like to quote to the House the exchange which followed the introduction of time allocation on second reading of this Bill. The Hon. The House leader of the Official Opposition made the statement that whoever it was in the New Democratic Party who made the accusation that they are Liberal stooges is wrong because their sympathies with respect to Bill C-131, the Old Age Security Act, are precisely the same as those of the NDP. He then went on to say, "We intend to vote against both of those measures", which are Bill C-131 and Bill C-132. Then the House leader for the New Democratic Party said as reported at page 21173 of Hansard:

However, voting against a piece of legislation is one way to indicate opposition. We are not only opposed to the point where we want to vote against it, but we are opposed to the point where we do not want to facilitate its passage in any way.

I would gather from that, that even if there were amendments which were acceptable, they would not be willing to see this Bill passed. Therefore, I think that we have no alternative but to look toward some reasonable use of the time to get this Bill passed. I would like to read you something from the Halifax Chronicle-Herald, which I found quite interesting. It is entitled "Parliament's pique". However, most of us would like to think we would always be referring to it as "Parliament's peak". It says this:

No one would deny Parliamentarians their support of political prerogatives, steadfast stands on principle, and opportunities to make their opponents appear to be the progenitors of weak or defective thinking. It is, after all, an adversarial forum whose members have long held opposing views on many matters.

But one expects—

And this is what is important. It says that one expects the Government to govern, and they expect it to govern well, while the Opposition opposes—and I think the important words I am going to bring out in this next message read:

—while the Opposition opposes for an allotted period before the majority proceeds to approve the issue it has raised.

I will read that for you again. You were not listening. It reads:

—while the Opposition opposes for an allotted period before the majority proceeds to approve the issue it has raised.

What happens, of course, is that in normal debate, the Government claims the Opposition delays passage, and it has been suggested that the Government has the majority and has the Speaker, and one assumes that it could easily make the rules of procedure work. But that is exactly what we are not able to do. We are not able to make the rules of procedure work. The Opposition Members have vented, overly so, considerable rage over the proposal and have squandered their consideration with procedures which have long strayed from the point. There are many matters which demand the earnest attention of the House, but they are being similarly mishandled. Therefore, if there is any reason for having time allocation and trying to put the debate in proper perspective, I hope you will appreciate that that is the argument I am trying to put forward.

What has happened with the time spent on this Bill? You have already had the numbers of those who have spoken on this Bill, how many speakers we have had, how much time we have had, but the important thing is that although it is time allocation, we are still discussing the Bill, and by the end of the day there will be approximately 70 speakers on this Bill. What really bothers me is that we seem to be talking about the senior citizens as if they were a sort of mindless body, and we have not only to speak for them but also to think for them. I would like to read you something which was in the Ottawa Citizen, written by Marjorie Gillies on January 25, 1983. She says, the following:

Although some seniors have expressed dissatisfaction with the government's imposition of a six and five per cent restraint increase on retirement income for the next two years, Bert Hanmer—

Mr. Hanmer is a retired Canadian Legion national service bureau director.

—says the majority of pensioners aren't upset by the limitation.

Mr. Hanmer is vice-chairman of the Council on Aging in Ottawa and Chairman of the Economics of Aging Committee. He is a pension specialist. He goes on to quote figures which we already know, that 54 per cent of Canadians over 65 will not even be affected by the restriction. Then he continues:

You know, most elderly Canadians will tell you they have little to complain about today—

It is interesting that when one hears the other side of the story, one is told that really it is not the truth, it is not right. But I also receive letters from my constituents and I also see people in my constituency. I have yet to see the pressure that has been told is there by Members of the Opposition. I think most seniors are grateful to take some part in this battle against inflation.

• (1700)

What happened in committee? That is interesting. This was one of my first experiences in trying to organize debate in committee. Actually we had to go out and seek out people to come and make presentations before the committee. Most said they had read about the Bill, examined it and chosen not to make any kind of presentation to the committee.

In any event, we had five groups appearing before the committee. They spoke mostly—

Time Allocation

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. The Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson).

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for recognizing me at this point in time. According to my calculations, I have two minutes in which to register my indignation that for the fifteenth time this Government has used closure during this single session of Parliament.

The reasons on this particular occasion are ones which we cannot possibly condone. The explanation given by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) was that she had heard enough from Opposition Members of Parliament, that in her consideration there was no necessity for debating the matter any longer. I remind the Minister that it is not up to her to decide whether debate has gone on a sufficient length of time. These matters are covered by the Standing Orders of the House of Commons. They are for no one individual to decide.

I was disappointed with the presentation by the Hon. Member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert). He proposed that we have a permanent system of closure in this House, that once a Bill is presented, it automatically be subject to the guillotine, that it automatically be cut off. It is my submission that three and a half days is not sufficient time to debate this issue, namely, the hidden policy in this Bill which is the end of universality. Unless we are prepared to accept and condone the tyranny of the majority, as the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) so succinctly put it, we must vote against closure on this occasion when it is so completely unwarranted.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. It being 5:03 o'clock, the two hours provided for the consideration of the motion now before the House, under the provisions of Standing Order 82, have expired. Accordingly, under the terms of the Standing Order, it is my duty to interrupt the proceedings and put every question necessary to dispose of the motion.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): In my opinion, the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Call in the Members.

The House divided on the motion (Miss Bégin) which was agreed to on the following division:

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 4,320, 4,537 and 4,543.

[Text]

SALTWATER FISHING LICENCES

Question No. 4,320—Mr. Wenman:

1. What was the total amount of revenue collected from saltwater fishing licences from (a) Canada as a whole (b) the East Coast (c) the West Coast in 1980 and 1981 and what are the projections for 1982 and 1983?

2. What were the total number of licences issued in (a) Canada as a whole (b) the East Coast (c) the West Coast in 1980 and 1981 and what are the projections for 1982 and 1983?

3. What was the total cost of administering the collection of these fees in (a) Canada as a whole (b) the East Coast (c) the West Coast in 1980 and 1981 and what are the projections for 1982 and 1983?

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): 1. Revenue collected from saltwater fishing licences:

(a)	1980—$ 910,990.00
	1981—$4,083,511.50
	1982—$3,460,000.00	(projected—East Coast only)
	1983—$3,460,000.00	(projected—East Coast only)
(b)	1980—$ 657,460.00
	1981—$2,476,170.00
	1982—$3,460,000.00	(projected)
	1983—$3,460,000.00	(projected)
(c)	1980—$ 253,530.00*
	1981—$1,607,341.50
	1982—not available
	1983—not available

* A tidal water sportfishing licence was introduced in April, 1981. Prior to this date only foreign vessels were required to purchase licences. After April, 1982 personal licences both Canadian and non-Canadian fishermen were required.

Order Paper Questions

2. Number of licences issued:

(a)	1980—149,393
	1981—410,815	(large increase due to introduction of tidal sportfish licence on West Coast)
	1982—141,464	(projected—East Coast only)
	1983—141,464	(projected—East Coast only)
(b)	1980—141,517
	1981—141,464
	1982—141,464	(projected)
	1983—141,464	(projected)
(c)	1980— 7,876
	1981—269,351	(large increase due to introduction of tidal sportfish licence)
	1982—not available
	1983—not available

3. Cost of administration:

(a)	1980—$1,320,000	(estimated)
	1981—$1,874,500
	1982—$1,600,000	(projected—East Coast only)
	1983—$1,600,000	(projected—East Coast only)
(b)	1980—$1,300,000
	1981—$1,600,000
	1982—$1,600,000	(projected)
	1983—$1,600,000	(projected)
(c)	1980—$ 20,000	(estimated)
	1981—$ 274,500
	1982—not available
	1983—not available

Non-resident sportfish licences were sold during 1980 in local district fishery offices, Vancouver Headquarters and through a limited number of independent agents. The new tital water sportfish licences are now sold through contracted agents.

IMF CONFERENCE—TRANSPORTATION SERVICES

Question No. 4,537—Mr. Mazankowski:

1. Were transportation services provided by the Government to the IMF Conference held in Toronto in September, 1982 and, if so, what were such services and what was the cost of the services?

2. Were private firms hired to provide transportation services and, if so, were tenders accepted for those contracts?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of State (Finance)): 1. The following transportation services were provided to the joint annual meetings of the International Monetary Fund and the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development in accordance with the standard requirements of these organizations.

(a) 180 official cars for Governors and senior IMF/IBRD officials for official use within Metropolitan Toronto. Cars were leased from General Motors Canada for $1. The cost of gas, maintenance and parking was approximately $68,125.

(b) Rental of five cars and two vans from Avis for use as pool cars and standby replacement cars—cost $8,626.

(c) Rental of three minibuses for 29 days to transport small groups between Toronto International Airport and the Sheraton Centre Hotel—$29,025.

Order Paper Questions

(d) Fifty-four 40-passenger buses for seven days to transport delegates between Toronto International Airport and downtown hotels—$17,050.

(e) Shuttle service (40-passenger buses) for delegates between hotels and to official functions—$98,440.

(f) Signs for buses and cars—$5,051.

(g) Costs for drivers recovered by Department of National Defence for salaries and travel costs of militia personnel and for travel costs of regular force personnel—$400,000 (estimated, final costs not yet known).

(h) Accommodation for drivers and support staff—$110,000 (estimated, final costs not yet known).

(i) Two-way radios installed in ten vehicles—$8,475.

2. Department of Supply and Services invited tenders for all cars. All buses were rented through Gray Coach lines or the Toronto Transit Commission as these are the only services allowed to handle such assignments on the streets of Toronto.

WESTERN GRAIN STABILIZATION PROGRAM

Question No. 4,543—Mr. Gustafson:

1. Will the Government consider allowing farmers to opt out of the Western Grain Stabilization Program and, if not, for what reason?

2. Since the inception of the Program, by year, what amount was paid out to western farmers?

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Department of Agriculture and the Canadian Wheat Board as follows:

1. At present, the Government is not considering a change in the Western Grain Stabilization Act to permit producers to opt out of the program in an unrestricted manner. Provisions in the Act allowed participants to opt-out within the first three years of participation. Producers who participated in the program from its inception had until December 31, 1978 to opt out. Participants who joined the plan since its inception may still opt out if they have not reached the third year of their participation.

Provisions in the Act to limit opting out were put in place to prevent producers from only participating in years when a payout is projected. If opting out was left unrestricted, this could affect the actuarial soundness of the program in that funds would not be built up to stabilize producer incomes as provided in the Act.

2. Since the inception of the program in 1976, two payments have been required, one of $115 million in 1978 and one of $253 million in 1979 for a total of $368 million.

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, if question No. 4,579 could be made an order for return, these returns would be tabled immediately.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker: The questions enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary have been answered. Is it the pleasure of the House that Question No. 4,579 be deemed to have been made an order for return?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

INCOME TAX—COLLECTIONS AND REFUNDS

Question No. 4,579—Mr. Lewis:

By month, for the fiscal year (a) 1979-80 (b) 1980-81 (c) 1981-82 (d) 1982-83 to date, what were the income tax gross collections and refunds for (i) corporations (ii) individuals (employer remittances plus direct payments)?

Return tabled.

Mr. Blenkarn: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Question No. 3,628 was asked on January 25, 1982. It has not been answered. It is a rather easy question although it does have nine specific points to it. It is in regard to the budget of November 12 and the way the present Bill C-139 is to be proceeded with. The answer should have been produced. It has been over a year now since it was placed on the Order Paper. Can the Parliamentary Secretary tell us why the answers have not been forthcoming?

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, I do not know the exact stage at which the answer is in preparation on that particular question. But, of course, as of today we have answered 83.3 per cent of all questions asked in this session. I will be delighted to look into that matter on behalf of the Hon. Member to see what I can find out for him.

I ask, Madam Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Madam Speaker: Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

INCOME TAX

AMENDMENTS TO STATUTE LAW

The House resumed, from Monday, December 13, 1982, consideration of the motion of Mr. Lalonde that Bill C-139, to amend the Statute Law relating to Income Tax (No. 2), be read the second time and referred to a Committee of the Whole.

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Mr. Speaker, before the House rose before lunch I was commenting on a statement which the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) made when he introduced the Bill for second reading debate. He said, as reported in Hansard at page 21521:

> I believe that Canadians as a whole understand that their Government cannot continue to spend more and more while it taxes them less and less.

I was making the point at one o'clock today that it is not merely adequate to try to raise revenue, particularly when one realizes that there is no more revenue left in the pot. The more important objective which this Government has failed to pursue is to reduce the waste and extravagance in the Government's spending program. I was about to remind the House of the $100 million thrown away to bail out Consolidated Computer; the failure of Eldorado Nuclear and the massive amount of waste in that connection; the $600 million annual subsidy to Canada Post and to Air Canada; the lack of financial control and accountability on the part of Crown Corporations as well as the bail-outs of Dome and Maislin which are completely inexcusable. If we do not bring this kind of excessiveness and waste under control, this country is indeed doomed. We cannot continue to rearrange the income tax system and raise new tax levels levied against corporations and businesses. In fact, if we look at the 50 per cent increase in bankruptcies and the 50 per cent decline in corporate profits over the past 12 months, we can see that the only way our nation's economy will be brought back under control is to introduce a much higher degree of awareness in the importance of restraint.

I would like to note that the Minister of State for Mines (Mrs. Erola) herself has some accounting to do to this House. Her travel budget increased from $28,000 in 1981 to $58,000 in 1982. That is a 109 per cent increase. The Minister of Energy's (Mr. Chrétien) travel expenses were even worse. His travel expenses went up by 263 per cent over the previous year.

Mr. Darling: He is energetic.

Mr. Siddon: The Minister of Energy is energetically travelling the country from one end to another. The Minister of State for Mines has a departmental budget which increased from $171 million in 1981-1982 to $223 million in 1982-1983. In fact, the amount is $230 million if you add the supplementary estimates. There is a more than 35 per cent increase in spending by that Department alone. Although the Minister's officials did a very ambitious review of mineral policy in the 1981 period, they now admit the report which resulted from that review is very much outdated. Some of the initiatives it recommended were totally contradicted by initiatives of the November 12, 1981 budget. Certainly that report totally ignored the declining competitive position of Canada with respect to other major world producers of minerals.

The Auditor General commented on this serious deficiency outlined in that report entitled "A Mineral Policy for Canada." It is this kind of misdirected energy and misuse of financial resources that now leads the Government to come before this House to ask for further changes in the income tax laws which were originally intended when the infamous November 12 budget was introduced a year and two months ago to increase Government revenues by some $11 billion. The consequence, of it, because of many of the adverse effects of that budget, was to reduce Government revenues by some $10 billion. Yet here we are debating measures which have already proved to be failures and the Government wants to implement them and make them law. The Government also has the audacity to tell the Canadian people that if we do not make these measures law, those who would otherwise receive income tax rebates will not get them after the taxation year-end on April 1 arrives.

Here is a double standard in telling Canadians that they cannot have their income tax rebates because the budget may not become law at that point while at the same time insisting that tax returns be filed according to the provisions of the November 12, 1981 budget and subsequent corrections. That double standard is absolutely inexcusable.

I would like to discuss some of the specific measures of the Bill as they pertain to Canada's mining industry. At the very beginning, at page one of the policy analysis undertaken by the Minister of State for Mines, we are told that the junior mining industry of Canada is in severe economic difficulty and that, "Unfortunately, this sector of the mineral industry has fallen on hard times because of technological changes which have increased the cost of exploration and taxation changes which have reduced the after tax profitability of new mine investment for junior mining companies."

We can then compare the measures of the November 12 budget with the Minister's recognition that the mining industry is already being excessively taxed, particularly the junior mining sector. We see that the Government is penalizing people further, those who would invest in IAACs, Registered Retirement Savings Plans and other investment instruments, and people who would want to capitalize mining ventures are penalized with the withdrawal of one-half year's depreciation in the first year of acquisition of a capital asset. We see that the Government, through the November 12 budget, is making it much less attractive for Canadian investors to take some risk in helping to provide increased employment for those in the mining sector.

Early in 1982, a team of Revenue Canada tax auditors went to Vancouver and began to audit and reassess a large number of mining company employees who had been taking stock options in return for services rendered to those mining companies. These were professionals such as engineers, geologists, managers, surveyors and the like. While previously, these types of stock options were only to be taxed at the capital gains rate, 50 per cent of the return, Revenue Canada is now taxing these earnings at the full income return and taxes them retroactively, going back as far as five years.

Income Tax

The Minister of State for Mines has been contacted by the B.C. and Yukon Chamber of Mines. It has been pointed out to her that this measure alone which has been taken by Revenue Canada will extract some $600 million in anticipated revenue that those companies and shareholders would have enjoyed when those stock options were converted to legitimate shares in the subsequent mining companies that materialize from these junior exploration ventures.

In fact, this change of rules runs completely contrary to the kinds of ideas that appeared in the Minister's policy paper. They are detrimental to development of mining and opportunities in that industry. In fact, as the B.C. and Yukon Chamber of Mines has pointed out, rather than strengthening the mining industry at a time when it needs to be strengthened, the Government is making it much more difficult for such companies to operate.

There are problems with the roll-over of one mining company, a junior mining company, to an operating company. The Government implied in the November 12 budget that it would make those roll-overs subject to capital gains tax. It has now decided that this is not such a good idea. However, it is not prepared to say it will rescind the measure. It will now study it in a special committee for many more months.

That is the other major difficulty with many of the measures that were first introduced in the budget of November 12, 1981. They have never been withdrawn. Many of the measures are being studied to death. In the meantime, there is a tremendous reluctance on the part of investors and companies to take any investment risks and expand their capital worth because they do not know what the rules will be a year or two from now. The instruments for saving for retirement such as LAACs, RRSPs and registered profit-sharing plans are also having a serious impact on many of our constituents. The change from the use of the income averaging annuity contracts to the other mechanism that is being proposed by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) is, in fact, costing many investors much additional taxation on revenue that they have not yet received.

I see that my time has come to an end. I just want to say that as long as we have an opportunity to debate this important measure in the House, we must continue to point out a number of the deficiencies which are having a very detrimental effect on the economy of Canada at the present time.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I am not rising to ask questions of my colleague. Did you intend to give the House the opportunity to ask questions?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I thank the Hon. Member. It is a problem for the Chair, under the new rules, to determine whether Members are rising for the purpose of exchanging questions and answers or to debate. Perhaps I could ask if there are Hon. Members who are seeking the floor for the purpose of exchanging questions and comments. Otherwise, I will recognize the Hon. Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis) for debate.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to have an opportunity finally to address a few remarks to Bill C-139. I think it will be useful to review the process through which this legislation finally came to the House of Commons after 15 months of controversy.

The House will remember that in November of 1981 the then minister of finance, the Hon. Member for Cape Breton Highlands-Canso (Mr. MacEachen), brought in a budget which was completely wrong for the times. That budget created and caused a greater recession than we had as a result of the efforts of his colleagues in the Cabinet. It created quite a stir in the country amongst small business people, farmers and employees, all of whom were adversely affected by this disastrous budget.

The House will also remember that in an almost unprecedented step taken by the Government, the Minister came into the House on December of 1981 and made a statement on motions in which he withdrew several of the measures in the budget which were completely out of step with the times and out of step with what was required to rejuvenate the Canadian economy. Through the spring of 1982 there were further retreats and, finally, another retreat in July. As responsible Members of the Opposition, our reaction was to send some 65 Members of the Progressive Conservative Party across Canada to hear from the public. We took briefs from several dozen interested parties, including individuals and organizations consisting of labour unions and the business community. We received a very representative opinion from the people, which is something the Minister of Finance neglected to get. As a result of the pressures from the Progressive Conservative Party, several revisions were made to the budget.

We were then treated to an amazing act when there was a Cabinet shuffle in the fall of last year. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) returned from an extensive investigation of western Canada, travelling in a private railway car, and shuffled the Cabinet. I should mention that this Cabinet shuffle per se put the then minister of energy, mines and resources in the position of Minister of Finance. In my riding, several hundred of my constituents are farmers. One of them noted that the Cabinet shuffle was rather like rotating one's crops in a dead field. In any event, the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) spent the fall gaining credit for consulting with the financial community and withdrawing things that his colleague, the previous Minister of Finance, had said that he would do. It was rather an unusual way to gain political points, but we on this side understand that the Minister of Finance was trying to undo some of the disasters of the previous Minister.

• (1750)

At this point we should zero in on one thing with respect to Bill C-139. After 15 months, the Government has finally brought into legislation, which we can debate in the House of Commons, a disastrous budget. Throughout the 15-month period, there has been a great deal of uncertainty and my colleagues, both in the accounting and legal professions, find themselves in the position of being unable to advise clients with any certainty whatsoever. That delay is unacceptable to the Canadian people.

I suggest to Your Honour that we would do well to take a hard look at the method used in the United Kingdom. In the United Kingdom, the budget is normally brought down in March. It goes through six days of debate. At the same time, the enabling legislation is introduced in the House of Commons, and after the six-day debate, there is a vote on the acceptability of the budget and, within three to four months, the legislation must be passed. I suggest to the House that the Government should have to bring in its legislation, which is bad, a little quicker, because I do not think there is any way that the Canadian people should be forced to put up with what they have had to put up with as a result of the delays of the Government.

I want to address certain specific items in Bill C-139 which are completely wrong for the times. The Government has decided, in this country called Canada, that it will restrict shareholder loans for employees to buy homes. On the one hand, it is very proud of enforcing mobility rights in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms while, on the other hand, through its inability to understand this country, it is bringing in taxation adjustments which militate against companies being able to send their employees around the country.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

[Translation]

A message was delivered by the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, as follows:

Madam Speaker, the Honourable Deputy to the Governor General desires the immediate attendance of this honourable House in the Chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, Madam Speaker, with the House went up to the Senate Chamber.

And being returned:

Madam Speaker: Order. I have the honour to inform the House that when the House went up to the Senate Chamber the Deputy Governor General had been pleased to give in Her Majesty's name the Royal Assent to the following bills:

Bill C-98, An Act to amend the Canada Agricultural Products Standards Act—Chapter No. 133.

Bill C-620, An Act to change the name of the electoral district of Missisquoi—Chapter No. 134.

Bill C-647, An Act to change the name of the electoral district of Saint-Michel—Chapter No. 135.

Bill C-133, An Act to amend the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act (No. 2)—Chapter No. 136.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[Translation]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 45 deemed to have been moved.

AIR TRANSPORT—ALLEGED REFUSAL OF PERMISSION FOR WARDAIR TO COMPETE WITH AIR CANADA AND CANADIAN PACIFIC AIRLINES

Mr. Pierre Deniger (La Prairie): Mr. Speaker, in an article that appeared in the Ottawa Citizen on January 11, a journalist for that paper wrote that the Government intended to refuse permission for Wardair to compete with Air Canada and CP Air for certain regular flights. I asked the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) for his comments, to find out whether a decision had been made, and if so, how it would benefit the Canadian user and Wardair. The Minister's answer was rather disappointing, especially since I had taken the trouble to give him notice of my question. In fact, the Minister merely answered that he had had a meeting with the president of Wardair, and that details about the future of this company would be disclosed very shortly. In his short reply, the Minister did not mention the article in The Citizen, so I imagine that there is still some hope. This is why I want to confirm this evening my support to Wardair and re-emphasize the need to deregulate the industry.

At the present time, Canadian air policy is a failure. It benefits a few national carriers and a couple of regional carriers, at the expense of Canadian consumers and businesses and Canadian businessmen interested in air transport. Let us consider the case of Wardair. Its main competitors, Air Canada and CP Air, now have full access to its chartered flight market, while it has no access to the markets of Air Canada and CP Air, which of course distorts completely the rules of the game. The result is obvious. Wardair cannot compete, just as Quebecair could not compete against Air Canada for the rich Florida market. In fact, I believe that Canada is the only country which still differentiates between chartered and regular flights. This is why Transair went bankrupt and Wardair and Quebecair are in serious financial difficulty. As we all know, Mr. Speaker, the United States have long abandoned that distinction. In the case of Wardair, there are only two solutions. The first would be to allow the company to become a regular carrier on certain routes or to prevent certain carriers or their subsidiaries from offering chartered seats in addition to their regular seats. The second solution would be to limit competition and is therefore unacceptable in my opinion. The first solution is the only valid answer to the problem of our nonsensical air policy.

I wonder whether the Minister realizes the trememous damage caused by the status quo to certain carriers and to Canadian consumers.

In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, it is important to point out that the Canadian air industry no longer needs crutches. Federal regulations should be limited so that any new airline can enter whatever market it wishes and established companies can decide what type of plane to use or what market to serve without any federal restrictions. We should allow strong competition for prices and not impose any restriction as to service quality. Such a policy, Mr. Speaker, would enable Quebecair and Wardair to survive if they deserve to do so because of the quality of their services and attractive rates. Passengers of these airlines will determine their future. If not, the rules of the market will apply and the competition will take care of these carriers. Whether such companies prosper or not will be decided not by regulations, but by the people using them.

Mr. Speaker, I hope that these comments will not fall on deaf ears because they should be considered before a final decision is made concerning the future of Wardair.

• (1805)

[English]

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, first of all, I wish to congratulate the Hon. Member for La Prairie (Mr. Deniger) for taking advantage of this period in our Parliamentary process to highlight certain policies in which he believes. I also want to congratulate him as he, in his capacity as Vice-Chairman of the Parliamentary Standing Committee on Transport, had great input in developing Canada's domestic air policy. For this, my thanks to him and his constituents.

As the Hon. Member knows, Wardair has asked for Government approval to become a scheduled domestic and international airline. He will recall that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) stated in the House on January 19 that he has met with the President of Wardair to discuss Mr. Ward's concerns, and that a response would be forthcoming in due time. Since the matter is still under consideration, I cannot say what the final decision will be.

Some claim that granting Wardair's request to become a scheduled airline would be a good idea because this would help to lower fares. On the other hand, the addition of more wide-bodied aircraft capacity in search of passengers already comparatively well served in terms of price, capacity and frequency, may result in carriers dropping scheduled services in their smaller markets and increasing prices because they have been driven to smaller aircraft with higher unit operating costs.

Wardair is undoubtedly facing difficult financial times. Despite advice to the contrary, from a number of sources, it has added substantially to its fleet of large aircraft, at high interest rates, in anticipation of traffic growth which just did not materialize. All airlines have found that traffic demand has grown much more slowly than expected. In some scheduled markets traffic has dropped drastically in the past year. To adjust, airlines have mothballed, sold or leased out some of their larger wide-bodied aircraft. They have cut back on their schedules, reduced staff, and have tried to stimulate traffic with attractive promotional fares. Despite all this, Mr. Speaker, major Canadian carriers probably suffered about $85 million to $100 million in net losses last year.

• (1810)

In short, it is unclear whether the public interest would be met by allowing Wardair to compete for the high density long-haul domestic and international scheduled markets for which its large aircraft are most suited. The matter is being carefully considered. As soon as the Minister makes a decision, he or I will notify the Hon. Member for Laprairie accordingly.

PENITENTIARIES—CANCELLATION OF UNIVERSITY COURSES. (B) REQUEST THAT DECISION BE DEFERRED. (C) PROVISION OF FREE UNIVERSITY TUITION TO INMATES

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I am rising to pursue a question which I asked of the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) on January 24 last in which I was critical of the apparent decision of the Solicitor General to cancel all post-secondary university education programs in the federal penitentiary system. At the time the Minister indicated that his decision was final and that he was not prepared to entertain any further consideration of the very great advantages of this program.

Since the announcement of the termination of these programs, effective at the end of the contracts in question, there has been widespread criticism of this decision right across the country. I want to emphasize that this criticism has come from all sectors of the correctional community and, indeed, from even beyond that. It is by no means a partisan question. For example, even the leader of the British Columbia Liberal Party, Shirley McLaughlin, has taken the Government and the Solicitor General to task in a telegram sent to the Solicitor General, urging him to have another look at his wrong-headed plan to cut post-secondary programs for federal penitentiary inmates.

The programs in question are offered through four institutions at a number of prisons throughout the country. By far the most successful and popular program, the one affecting the greatest number of prisoners, is the program which is offered through the University of Victoria affecting some 150 prisoners as well as a number of support staff. It is offered at four institutions, Matsqui, Kent, William Head and Mountain Institution.

As well, other programs affected include the program offered by the University of Manitoba, the Stony Mountain institution; the program offered by Queen's University at Collin's Bay Institution; and, finally, the program offered at Laval Institution by Laval University. All of these programs are going to be terminated, effective some time this year, unless the Minister can be persuaded to change his mind.

The decision to terminate all post-secondary university education programs in the federal penitentiary system is a profound mistake. As I said in the question which I asked of the Minister on January 24 last, it represents an exercise in colossal correctional stupidity. Not only are these programs which I just enumerated going to be cancelled, but as well all paid for university level correspondence courses are going to be cancelled. In other words, effectively we are seeing the gutting of all post-secondary education programs within the federal penitentiary system.

The response has been immediate and angry. I am just going to quote a number of people involved. Even the Minister's own director of academic education indicated to me that this was certainly not a decision he made; it came down from on high. As he said, the programs in question are the finest programs of their type in North America. That was Doug Griffin, the chief of academic education.

As well, the co-ordinator of the program at the University of Victoria, Douglas Ayers, stated that the decision in question by the correctional services was a mistake, cancelling probably the only program shown to have a positive effect on prisoners. The unemployment rate following involvement in this program, the rate of recidivism, which is considerably lower than that for other prisoners, changes in residential, marital, friendship patterns, and a number of other indicators, all make it very clear that this program is by far the most successful program with the federal penitentiary system.

A gentleman who evaluated the program, Mr. Ross, although he was somewhat critical of the methodology involved in Dr. Ayers' study said, and I quote:

> My observation of the program and my discussions with the prisoners and faculty lead me to think that the UVIC program actually epitimizes many of the principles and practices involved in the vast majority of effective correctional programs.

He further said:

> —I consider the principles and goals of the UVIC program to be eminently reasonable and the strategies to be, if not entirely unique, innovative and thoroughly in accord with information currently available about strategies for effective correctional intervention. Given the type of offenders, the length of their sentences and the nature of the setting, it may even be said that it approaches the ideal in its theory and practice, if not in its evaluation.

● (1815)

I do not have time to read from the evaluation of Doug Drouillard who did an evaluation on behalf of the Department of Supply and Services. His assessment was that the program was positive and beneficial.

The Chairman of the Citizen's Advisory Committee at the William Head Institution said that programs that contribute to reduced crime should not be the first to be axed in a cost-saving effort.

The Warden of the institution has made his views on the subject very clearly known and has stated that the axing of the program was a mistake which could have very serious consequences on prisoner morale and could lead to incidents and disruptions within the prison. He and other federal prison directors tried, apparently in vain, to persuade the Government that this was a mistake.

There was no consultation whatsoever either with wardens or with the Citizen's Advisory Committee before the decision was taken. I emphasize that the decision reinforces the worst kind of warehousing concepts within the federal correctional system and flies in the face of the unanimous recommendations of the 1977 Subcommittee on Penitentiaries. If the Government wants to cut costs, and certainly that is an understandable objective, there are many other areas where the costs could be cut within correctional services.

I was pleased to be able to attend the graduation ceremonies at Kent Institution and the Matsqui Institution in 1981. All persons involved in the program expressed their pride in an obviously successful and positive program.

This is an example of a decision which, if not reversed, in many ways represents a threat to the community that is supposed to be protected. The recidivism rate of the people involved in the program is 14 per cent as opposed to an over-all recidivism rate of well over 50 per cent. While we are talking about saving money, we should seriously consider the fact that we may very well end up spending more money if the people no longer involved in the program return to the federal penitentiary system at a cost of $20,000 or $30,00 per year.

The cancellation of these programs is a profound mistake which reinforces the most backward and archaic correctional principles, namely that prisoners are there to be warehoused and nothing else. It does nothing whatsoever to protect the community and ultimately may have the opposite effect.

I should like to close by quoting from a letter sent to the Solicitor General by Keith B. Jobson, Chairman of the Citizen's Advisory Committee. His concluding paragraph reads as follows:

> Considering the morale of the institution, the contribution the program makes to dynamic security, the success of the program in terms of reduced recedivism, the need to keep an open door to CCC's and CRC's in times of overcrowded conditions, the contribution of the program to reduced prison costs generally, the importance of the Program in meeting CSC objectives respecting improved community-prison contacts and relations, the contribution of the program to CSC objectives of providing opportunities for inmates to come out of prison better citizens than when they went in, considering its low cost ratio per inmate at William Head, and the large part of the prison population involved in the program, we urgently request your reconsideration of the decision to eliminate post secondary education programs at William Head.

I urge the Minister to take that plea very seriously, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): As you know, Mr. Speaker, the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) likes to reply to questions in person. Unfortunately he is not able to be here tonight, but has asked me to reply on his behalf.

On January 24 the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) raised questions pertaining to the recent cancellation, by the Correctional Service of Canada, of post-secondary educational contracts in federal penitentiaries and asked whether the Solicitor General would agree to defer a final decision on the matter.

As the Minister has previously stated, the post-secondary educational programs were good programs—he agrees with the Hon. Member—and the inmate students did benefit from them. But they have also proven to be too expensive to maintain. The programs cost $3,500 per inmate per year and 232 inmates or 2.3 percent of the inmate population are involved in them. As you know, Mr. Speaker, these are times of economic restraint and the Correctional Services of Canada must also exercise restraint. Cancelling these programs will mean savings of $541,428 in 1983-84, and $744,062 in 1984-85, for a total saving of $1,285,490 in 1982-83 dollars.

• (1820)

Although funding for post-secondary programs has been cut, inmates will be able to continue taking correspondence courses at their own time and expense. I hope these inmates will also rely on group meetings and self-help as learning methods. The service is undertaking to explore alternative sources of funding post-secondary educational programs. This could include grants from private foundations, loans, bursaries and scholarships for current students who might qualify.

The service will also continue to enhance primary education training, to raise the base level of literacy and to focus greater attention toward functionally illiterate inmates. Approximately 66 per cent of the CSC inmate population has an education of less than grade ten; of these about 18 per cent are functional illiterates.

As the Solicitor General said on January 24, he believes that the federal Government has a responsibility to rehabilitate offenders who are behind bars. We will continue to exercise that responsibility, but when programs across the country are being cut back for people who are not in prison, inmates and others who support inmates have to understand that restraint also has to be applied within the correctional service. Accordingly, the Minister is not prepared to defer his decision.

Finally, even though this funding is being cut, the Solicitor General believes that the inmates who have been benefiting from the programs will have the initiative to find other ways within our system to achieve a higher education.

FORESTRY—INQUIRY RESPECTING GOVERNMENT PROGRAMS AND POLICIES

Mr. Lyle S. Kristiansen (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, on October 27, 1982, I directed a question to the Minister of State for Economic Development (Mr. Johnston) regarding what plans the Government may have had for assisting unemployed people in the forest industry across the country, particularly action in terms of assisting both employees and the industry in which they normally work. I asked what proposals they were putting together to ensure that more of those people could be employed constructively during the spring just immediately ahead of us. The answer from the Minister at that time was most inadequate and very generalized. I hope this evening we may have some clearer answers as to just what is taking place.

Under the Employment Bridging Assistance Program, we have had a series of problems. I know the Government is aware of these problems and has made some attempts to resolve them, and I refer to people being dropped from the UIC rolls as they enter EBAP. Sometimes their benefits are mysteriously stopped, as was the case for many last December, and are restarted after they have been enrolled in the program. This is causing some demoralization on the part of many unemployed forestry workers who were hoping to make contributions, not only to themselves but to the long-term welfare of their own industry. Why get off UIC with a regular cheque and go to something more constructive if one ends up with no income at all? They also have their families' interests to look after.

In my own constituency the Salmo Workers Employment Society was formed. In fact, it was the first program under EBAP in the forest industry in British Columbia. Over the past few months they have developed a considerable amount of expertise, with the continual employment, on a revolving basis, of some 50 unemployed woodworkers in a variety of projects. What they are concerned about now—and I suspect this will happen in many similar programs across the country—is that as their benefits expire they will no longer be eligible to stay on the program. While we have talked about NEED as a separate program to be utilized by people who run out of UIC benefits, we need a better system of integration so that we do not lose the potential worth and expertise these people have gained through some of the worth-while programs which have been conducted.

Unfortunately, in terms of numbers, we still have a problem. There is still a problem in that while there is an increasing emphasis by the federal Government on getting involved in some of the reforestation and forest management areas, recently the provincial Government, at least in British Columbia, cancelled and wiped out its long-term forest management program, despite the fact that there is a new forest subsidiary agreement between the federal Government and that Province. How do we guarantee in both situations that we come out of the downturn with a stronger resource base for the industry than we have had in the past, instead of making it worse as is now happening with many companies trying to highgrade the little timber we have left in some of our areas?

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has made a statement that the Employment Bridging Assistance Program has created only 15 per cent of the projected 10,000 jobs. I am pleased that he has given me the opportunity of correcting his statement on behalf of the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Ethier).

The Program has not yet run a full year but already it has produced more than 5,000 jobs in the forestry sector. Across the country we have approved 9,300 potential positions.

Interest in the Program is steadily increasing now that the normal growing pains and birth pains of the Program are over. The Government has recently acted in a number of ways to increase the effectiveness of the Program. For example, we have recently taken action in co-operation with CEIC to accelerate payment to the workers.

The Canadian Forestry Service has also increased its level of contributions to overhead costs which has allayed some particular concerns of potential project sponsors in British Columbia. We are working in co-operation with the majority of unions and with the Workmen's Compensation Board, to achieve the best possible success for the Program. Productivity on Section 38 Projects is very high, and we are satisfied that the Projects provide high quality forest management work in British Columbia.

In addition to the very successful Programs carried out under Section 38 of the Unemployment Insurance Act, the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Roberts), along with the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy), is promoting new programs that will allow the participation of unemployment insurance exhaustees, and will provide for useful forestry work. I will mention here the Canadian Employment and Immigration Commission's new NEED Program, the New Employment Expansion and Development Program, to which the Hon. Member referred, and the extension of the Canada Community Development Program, CCDP, which will support local organizations in the development and management of short-term employment opportunities for unemployment insurance exhaustees. As well, the Canadian Forestry Service is looking into new programs that will ensure long-term employment in the forestry sector.

The Hon. Member inquired about new policies regarding employment and forest development to meet Canada's wood supply needs and to ensure market expansion. On September 2, the Minister announced a policy for forest renewal which provides an assessment of forestry expenditures and responsibilities and emphasizes the need for renewal in order to meet future timber production goals. I see, Mr. Speaker, that I must now conclude.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I am sorry, I must interrupt, but, as the Parliamentary Secretary is aware, the rules for the late show are rather rigid.

The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m.

At 6.30 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

OLD AGE SECURITY ACT (NO. 2)

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Wednesday, December 22, 1982, consideration of Bill C-131, an Act to amend the Old Age Security Act (No. 2), as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs; and the motion of Mr. Dantzer (p. 21795).

Mr. Gordon Gilchrist (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, I am not usually inclined to speak on non-scientific or non-economic issues to an empty House of Commons and to Government Members who do not listen anyway. However, I have a few remarks to make on a topic about which I feel very strongly, both for the deleterious effect it will have on senior Canadians' ability to live in dignity, or even to survive in some cases, as well as the breach of faith and contract which this represents between the Government and its citizens.

All Canadians acknowledge and support restraint and moderation in spending. Indeed, Government spending is exactly what should be restrained, but that should not come from past contractual obligations, or from needy senior Canadians who cannot defend themselves. Most Canadians are more than willing to share the burden of reducing inflation, including our seniors, and most Canadians are able to adjust their lifestyle to their incomes. Not all are, of course, and certainly not the unemployed; but the 87 per cent of Canadians who are working are able to maintain a reasonable lifestyle, even if some belt-tightening is required.

The real tragedy of this, the richest country in the world, is that one in seven Canadians cannot find work, and because of the loss of tax revenues from these unemployed, the Government now wishes to break its moral obligation to defenceless senior Canadians.

The tragedy rests in the failure of the Government to have invested wisely in the productive aspects and in the job-producing aspects of a healthy Canadian economy over the past 20 years. If instead of selling off our valuable natural resources to other nations we had devoted our tax dollars to the support of advancing technologies and the manufacture of all the products needed by less well-endowed nations, there would today have been more jobs than there would have been Canadians to fill them.

If we had invested wisely in the infrastructures of a sound productive economy, we would not be debating this disgraceful Bill today. What we, the citizens of the richest and most literate country in the world, should be debating is how we could be improving the Canadian lifestyle and the lifestyle of other world citizens who are not blessed, as we are, with either our resources or our abilities. But here we are today, the supposed leaders of our country, debating the cutting back—the cutting back on the moral obligation to aid many of our senior Canadians, both men and women, who have, through no fault of their own, unless age is now a fault, left the work force and are now no longer able to influence or add to their own income to offset the inflationary costs which are largely the result of this Government's failed economic policies and massive bureaucratic overspending.

There may be no written contract between the Government of Canada and retired Canadian seniors, but there is a clear and strong moral contract between the Government and people who have given 40 or 50 years of their lives to building this country, paying their taxes and raising their families and who now are the taxpayers of today.

• (1110)

Has the Government surveyed or in any way asked today's taxpayers, the sons and daughters of today's seniors, if they in fact want the moral responsibility to their parents' retirement withdrawn? I think the public of Canada would give a resounding no to such a breach of moral contract.

Let me quote the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) when she introduced this "mean and wretched measure", as described by the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald). The Minister said:

> We are asking 1.1 million old age pensioners to help lead the way in the fight against inflation. I am very conscious of the sacrifice we are asking of them.

I doubt that very much. I doubt that she, any other overpaid and underperforming Minister of this Government, any of the rest of us Members or, for that matter, most of the working public, can have any possible conception of the trapped feeling, the despair and anguish of a senior Canadian who is too old to work and is unable to meet the daily and weekly costs of an existence which the rest of us have defined as the poverty line.

The Minister claimed that the so-called Guaranteed Income Supplement, which is not deindexed, will protect the 600,000 or so of the hardest hit pensioners, particularly single pensioners whose income is less than $8,900 per year or married couples under $15,000 per year, and those two out of every three unattached women over 65 who live below the poverty line.

If the old age pension is already inadequate for these seniors, so that they are already in need of an income supplement to bring them up to or past the poverty line, then why is the Government making the problem even worse by reducing the impact of the already inadequate old age pension? How does taking money out of one pocket and putting it in another save money? How can putting more seniors on the extreme dependency list by reducing the increase of their basic pension plan help the pride and self-respect of a person's retirement years? How can the Government of the richest country in the world even consider a pension plan which would only keep its retired citizens in a state of poverty?

What a joke is the term "Guaranteed Income Supplement" when one looks at the record of the Government! The dictionary definition of "guarantee" is: "Give one's word that something will happen; given as security for fulfilment of conditions".

Canadians well know the record of the Liberal Government in giving its word—its word about no wage and price controls, its word about 18-cent gasoline, its word that it would reduce Canada's annual deficit. We have seen the Government go back on deals made on Canada lands through the National Energy Program. We have just witnessed the passing of legislation to renege on or to flatly break the Government's contract on pensions to public employees, RCMP members and people in our Armed Forces. If the Government is prepared to break written deals, it should come as no surprise to Canadians that it will readily break moral or unwritten contracts with its seniors.

It is interesting to note that private sector pensions, those provided by life insurance companies, do not have the privilege of reneging on their amounts or conditions. The Government sees to it that private company pensions may not withdraw any rights, conditions or amounts which have been promised, and this is how it should be. Why, then, should Canadians tolerate a Government which can break its word, its social contract with Canadian taxpayers? Can it be that the Government old age pension plan is failing? Obviously, the answer is yes. None of the private sector plans has failed or been cut back. This is because they are, by law, actuarially funded so that money will be there when needed. At the very least, actuarial funding should be a condition of Government pensions, or we will be continually facing the cutting back in promised pensions similar to what we are seeing today.

In Canada's aging society it will be impossible to sustain various pension plans we now have on the books. The 2.1 million so-called "old people" of today will become 3.4 million by 2001, which is just 18 years away. Instead of breaking its social pension contract with Canadians, the Government should be introducing legislation not to increase pensions but to improve them, consistent with many of the recommendations of the Senate special committee report of 1979, particularly as it relates to gross underfunding in general, and the terrible inequities and injustices suffered by women under present provisions in particular. What good is a pension plan that has no money? Thanks to lack of planning the only way the rest of us will get a pension will be to increase the taxes on our children.

As I said earlier, private pension plans must, by law, be actuarially funded so that the money must be there when the time comes to pay it out. Not so Government pensions. This was brought out clearly when this House debated the large pension increases voted on by Members of Parliament for themselves. If the money had had to be found to buy such pension increases for Members of Parliament through a private pension company, it would have been a different story and Members and Senators would not have been able to afford to vote themselves pensions of a size double that allowed other Canadians. Imagine the unbelievable cost of $1.2 million for a pension for our new Senator Pitfield. By the time he retires, it is estimated that he will have been paid some 15 times as much money as the average Canadian pensioner. How is that for equity and social justice Liberal style?

Of course, I support the principle of the 6 per cent and 5 per cent wage guidelines in our fight to bring inflation down, but I do not subscribe to the breaking of a moral or a written contract with just a selected few Canadians, rather than all Canadians.

I would also support a major economic policy drive to increase Canadian production, productivity and other measures which would lower inflation to below 6 per cent per year. Then the pensions of seniors would not need to go up over 6 per cent and this Bill will have been proven to have been unnecessary.

What we need is economic action, not negative legislation. If any Liberal Member, after voting himself or herself a huge pension increase just a year and a half ago, were to rise in support of this despicable cutback in pensions to deserving seniors, then hypocrisy will have been elevated to a new level in this House of Commons and Liberal social justice to a new low.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to speak on behalf of my Party, the New Democratic Party, on Bill C-131, an Act to amend the Old Age Security Act. Before I do so, I have one comment on the words of the last speaker. He said that the Conservative Party, of which he is a member, supported the principle of six and five and then he said that he is against this Bill. It seems to me that the Conservative Party must have foreseen, if it supported the principle of six and five—this phony Liberal principle—that in fact the Conservatives would be faced with Bills like this one which will affect old age pensions. As well, the Conservatives would be faced with Bills that would affect children, Family Allowances, Public Service employees, retired army people, retired policemen and other retired employees of the civil service. The Conservatives must have known that. Is the Conservative Party of Canada so divided and so mixed up in its leadership fights and its Members so preoccupied with stabbing one another in the back that they are to the point where they are muddled in their thinking?

What we are seeing in Canada is the disintegration of the Conservative Party. Those of us who come from Western Canada are concerned that we really have an Opposition in this House. Therefore, it falls to us in the New Democratic Party to provide an Opposition, a real Opposition, to this terrible Trudeau Liberal Government. That is the task we will begin today.

I am pleased to begin on behalf of constituents of mine, old people and young people, who are concerned and have written to me about the effects of the six and five program. This Bill robs a million pensioners of benefits. I use the word "robbed" because it limits the indexing of Old Age Security to 6 per cent in 1983 and 5 per cent in 1984. It means, as well, that older people will be out of pocket as a result of reductions in benefit levels in the two-year period 1983 to 1984.

• (1120)

Second, it means that when and if indexing is reintroduced in 1985, the calculation will be computed on a lower base than it would have been if full indexing had been permitted over that period. Therefore, pensioners in Canada will suffer a permanent reduction in the amount of Old Age Security benefits. Our calculations are that it will be close to $300 that old age pensioners will lose. Over half of this group is women who are in particular need of money.

I ask the Government, where is the equity and justice in this six and five program when it takes $300 from the pensioners in Canada? There are Governments in this country which bail out the big companies, such as $500 million for Dome. This Government takes $300 away from each pensioner in Canada but provides $500 million for large oil companies and the banks who back the debts of Dome.

In my Province of British Columbia, the Government has even bailed out a ski hill, Whistler Mountain. The B.C. Government is prepared to bail out speculators and developers of a ski hill while this Government is prepared to take $300 from each pensioner in Canada. That is the type of justice we see in Canada and the people will realize it.

We in the NDP, as the real Opposition now in Canada, must point this out to the Canadian people. We will certainly do that in Western Canada, where I come from. Those who are watching or who read this debate must realize that the six and five program is a phony program. I see the Minister nodding his head. We have a depression in this country which was caused by the Government. It was its policies, like those of the United States and Great Britain, to bring in monetarism and put interest rates as high as possible to squeeze the economy, which have caused the economy to take a nosedive.

The Minister will say that it is an international problem. That is partly true, but Canada has the worst record, if one sees the OECD figures. There has been a drop of 5 per cent in our GNP. This country has the worst performance record.

It is Government policy to induce a depression. It has done this by making the interest rates so high that people could not afford to borrow and, therefore, would not spend. The entire economy is in a recession—some call it a depression.

How does the Government propose to recover from this recession? It proposes to do it on the backs of the working people, on the backs of old age pensioners and retired civil servants and on the backs of children. It is a gutless policy.

I have asked some people in my riding to write about this type of policy. I want to relay to the House some of those letters. I have one letter from Mrs. Margaret McNeill of East 33rd Avenue in Vancouver. She says that she is concerned about high interest rates that are going up, increases on taxes on low wage earners and the six and five limit on Old Age Security while there is no limit on prices. She knows that when she goes to the local store the prices are not restricted or controlled. However, her pension is controlled. It is a shame to fight our economic difficulties on the backs of old people.

Mr. Park of Normandy Drive in Vancouver says that he is waiting to receive his old age pension. He understands that the inflation rate is near 10 per cent. He says, "I have to ask myself, is this what I went overseas for in World War II?" I see the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Campbell) in the House. How does he feel about a letter like this from a veteran who lives in Vancouver? This man went overseas and fought for our country and is about to become a pensioner, but he has to suffer because his pension is cut back.

We are talking about people who are making less than $9,000 a year. It is all very well for us who make $60,000 a year to restrict the pensions of elderly Canadians. It is a shame and a scam. It is the most unjust piece of legislation we have seen in the House for a long time.

• (1125)

I could read more letters. I have in my hand a letter from Mrs. Adams who lives on Fraser Street in another part of my riding, and she wrote about her difficulties. These old people are proud people. They have fought for and served the country. They are prepared to make sacrifices and have made sacrifices for Canada. But why must we fight a Government-caused recession on the backs of these people? I say it is unjust and that eventually the young people of this country will realize that if it can be done to old age pensioners today, it can be done to them when they get old, with a Government like this.

In our society we once respected our old people. I hope that some people in society still do. However, it is certainly a mark of Government disrespect to make old people poor through a law like this.

I will conclude by saying that once I was the energy critic in my Party and I watched $8.7 billion being earmarked for grants to oil companies. I saw grants given to Chrysler, to Maislin and to Dome Petroleum. Then we saw the money being taken away. Therefore, we in the New Democratic Party, unlike those in the Conservative Party who are so divided that they find trouble even being logical about this matter, certainly oppose the six and five principle. We will fight, and we will to our dying breath, the injustice of this legislation, which fights our present economic problems on the backs of the people who can least afford it, namely old age pensioners in Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Campbell (Cardigan): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I know the Hon. Member would not want to mislead the House in his comments with reference to veterans, but I am sure he is aware that benefits through the Department of Veterans Affairs to veterans are not affected by the six and five program; that in fact, as of January 1, benefits increased by 11.5 per cent—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. That is not a point of order; that is a point of debate.

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, in addressing Bill C-131, I may point out that we are discussing the dire consequences of a policy set by the present Government some fourteen years ago.

You will remember that at the time, inflation was already a problem, and I recall quite distinctly the words spoken by the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), who boasted here in the House that: We have wrestled inflation to the ground. Those were his very words. However, we also know that it was not true, and that the following year, the Government tabled a motion in the House to adjust Old Age Security pensions if inflation were to exceed 4 per cent. Because the Government failed to act then, in 1971 it brought in full indexing of Old Age Security pensions. And even then, nothing had been done to wipe out inflation. All the Government did was add another cushion to lessen the shock of inflation. That is all very well, and it could go on for ever, but today, we have a situation where the Government has decided to impose its 6 and 5 program. For the edification of the young New Democratic Party Member who has just left the House, the 6 and 5 program applies to salaries in the Public Service, some Crown corporations and a few other corporations and to various individuals, but it does not affect veterans' pensions nor the Guaranteed Income Supplement. Today—and I think it is rather peculiar, although the people concerned are recipients—people receiving a special allowance as an income supplement, since they are going to lose about $35 a month, will receive compensation. What they lose on their Old Age Security pension, they get back in the form of a supplement. So they get indexing to cover inflation, and that seems to be the privileged class under the Old Age Security Act, namely, people whose individual income is less than $8,900. I know there is a certain percentage of people in this situation, but honestly, Mr. Speaker, what about people, especially in Quebec, in the country, who have worked all their lives and saved up and have made modest investments which today provide them with a retirement income. Everywhere we are encouraging people to save for their retirement, because the State—oh, I know that the New Democratic Party and many members of the Liberal Party expect Canadians, upon reaching the age of 65, to go to the Government authorities and say: Look here, I have no money and no possessions and I have spent my last cent. Now it is up to you. No, that is not the Canadian way. The vast majority of our senior citizens have additional sources of income. They are not living in abject poverty, but the Government seems to be favouring those who are. People who have saved up are being told: Look here, you are going to be penalized for this, whether you are a public servant or a former bank clerk or a teacher or whatever, you have savings in the bank, so we are going to take away your savings. Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, the 6 and 5 is being imposed twice, since under the provisions of Bill C-139, indexing of the personal deduction will be capped at 6 per cent this year and 5 per cent next year. The deduction was introduced by Mr. Turner in 1973, after the 1972 election when he said that Mr. Stanfield's policies would bring this country to bankruptcy. If that is the case, he has certainly benefited from this program. Pensioners, however, who have been able to provide for a modest income by dint of saving carefully, are twice penalized. I think this is extremely unfair, and to me, it is certainly not part of the 6 and 5 program we supported in July. The program we supported then applied to salaries and not to pensions or family allowances. However, in other areas the Government is ignoring its own 6 and 5 policy. Some people are being given fantastic raises well above the 6 and 5 levels. That is why my colleagues and I are opposed to the 6 and 5 as it applies to indexing of Old Age Security pensions. Needless to say, Mr. Speaker, we shall vote against this Bill.

• (1130)

Mr. André Maltais (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I did appreciate the remarks of the Hon. Member who has just spoken concerning the six and five policy. I would say that each and every one of us agrees with the basic suggestion that the rate of inflation must be reduced at all costs and that the Government had to come up with a policy designed to rid ourselves of that cancerous growth which is undermining our economy as well as those of the North American continent and of other countries which are traditionally oriented towards expansion and contemporary economic development.

Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, in this debate on the six and five per cent program, it is often too easy to make demagogic speeches and keep on asking who should have full indexation, who should have capped indexation, and we might proceed in stages and wonder whether it is fair to anyone. In my opinion, the underlying principle of this whole issue is to devise a formula whereby the full load will be shared by all Canadians.

It stands to reason of course that senior citizens would deserve full indexation. As I said before in this House, perhaps they would even deserve much more than what they are getting now if we keep in mind the fact that among Canadians they are the ones who did make it possible for our economy to flourish very rapidly. However, what we must not forget is the fact that—and I am talking about the basic element of the entire issue—if we manage to reduce the rate of inflation to 6 and 5 per cent and even to bring it down to zero, elderly people will be the first to benefit because, as the previous speaker said a moment ago, they have worked hard throughout their active years, they have faced their responsibilities and they were able to set a few dollars aside for their retirement. It was extremely difficult for them to save that money during those long harsh years, and they now find that inflation is robbing them of what little savings they do have. Senior citizens whom I have met in my own constituency and during my travels all tell me the same thing: Do try and get rid of inflation and we shall be able to live with what the Government gives us and, in some cases, with what we have saved. As for those who have no savings and no investments, they say: We shall get by with the Old Age Security and the Income Supplement for senior citizens.

In fact, what these people want is to be able to get full value for their money. This is what they want. When we speak about the six and five program for senior citizens, since inflation is now going down and will soon be under six and five per cent then, everyone will benefit, starting with the senior citizens.

I listened to the Hon. Member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) when he spoke earlier, and he gave the impression that the Government was voluntarily trying to treat senior citizens unfairly with its six and five program. There is no discrimination, Mr. Speaker, since, under the six and five program, those who do not have a reasonable guaranteed income will receive a fully indexed income supplement. Therefore, if the Hon. Member for Edmonton West wants to speak about discrimination, I must point out that taxwise the program applies differently to wealthy people and to those with lower incomes, because there are two formulae. This is the purpose of the program, to have formulae which are fair for everyone. It would be wrong to treat everyone in the same way. Everyone must be treated on the basis of what they have or do not have. In this regard, I believe that the House would agree that the six and five program has been adjusted on the basis of each individual's responsibilities and income. This is an important consideration in this debate, but the public is being asked to believe that the Government has been insensitive to the needs of senior citizens.

As I understand it, Mr. Speaker, the new rules allow us to come back to this during the question period later on. So if there are any questions later, there will be no problem. Perhaps there could be a debate on the subject. Once more, however, I want to make it clear that the Government has been very sensitive to the needs of senior citizens. I agree, the formula may not be perfect, since there is no such thing as a perfect situation or a perfect regulation. However, it was necessary to find a formula that could be adapted as closely as possible to the needs of this group, in much the same way this was done by the Government for our veterans, considering their very specific needs. As far as families are concerned, people with children receive special consideration in the form of the child tax credit, and as a result, the Government has given people who are particularly burdened with responsibilities as a result of inflation, the mechanisms that will help them to help themselves. Now, is it the best formula? Is it the ideal formula? I can only say that it is probably the best formula in the circumstances. If we compare our situation with what is happening in the United States, anyone can see that the Canadian Government has probably taken the most progressive approach in its efforts to control inflation, an approach that is sensitive, unlike other countries which are taking extremely drastic action with severe consequences for everyone concerned. Only yesterday, the President of the United States announced he was reducing the deficit by eliminating as many social programs as possible.

The Member for Edmonton West pointed out that when the Progressive Conservatives supported the 6 and 5 policy, it was on the understanding that it would apply only to salaries. In fact, we have applied the program to salaries, and that as far as senior citizens, mothers, people with families and veterans are concerned, the Department has given everyone an equal share of the burden. That is an important part of bringing down inflation to 6 and 5, which should not be overlooked.

Mr. Speaker, there is one last point I should like to make. It has to do with the fact that if all those measures enable us to reduce inflation down to nothing—and I am convinced we will be successful—the six and five program will lapse by itself. But still, it will have been instrumental in our fight against that cancerous growth which, whether we like it or not, is the root of most of our current problems in Canada. Canadians have been asking their Government and their Members of Parliament to find a truly acceptable solution in certain fields and to take compulsory action in others, with a view to shoring up our economy.

That is the price we have to pay if we are to set the country back on its proper course, as all Canadians want, including younger people. Seen in that light, the six and five program does offer an interesting challenge because, as the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) explained in his speech, on October 27, 1982, the money saved will be reinvested to create jobs. The Minister of Finance did say that $1 billion would be earmarked for creating jobs. Had the six and five program been launched only as a means to reduce public expenditures without any intention of using that extra money to create jobs, it might not be as good. But, in short, Mr. Speaker, the program is good because its impact can be felt on two fronts: it will enable us to strengthen the economy by reducing inflation and to free some funds to create jobs for young Canadians. If they stand to benefit, the program has to be very good as well for senior citizens and parents because those people are urging us to create jobs for younger people who in turn want our economy to flourish. When we are moving ahead as a country, every Canadian is better off, including the elderly and those who have families. All Canadians will be proud to have a Government which has found an effective way to solve the problem without being unduly harsh towards its citizens.

• (1140)

[English]

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, this Bill has to be debated in terms of the whole picture of the six and five program, as the previous speaker mentioned. When I spoke on Bill C-131, I tried to put the perspective before the House as to where the Bill fitted into the course of parliamentary action over the last 40 years. In case there is anyone in the House who was not here at that time, I took as my starting place the official history of Canada from 1939 to 1957 called "The Forked Road", by Donald Creighton, just deceased a couple of years ago. He was then our leading historian. "The Forked Road" is the final copy in a series of 18 volumes of Canadian history, written by Canadians for Canadians and paid for by the Government of Canada. It was called "The Canadian Centenary Series".

I had a little fun the last time I spoke by saying I had never found another Member of Parliament who had read it, even though copies were handed out free to Members. They were too busy. I would plead at this time that some Members take the time to read what were these forks in the road that we chose in the war years and following. I mentioned one, that Members of all Parties had accepted the concept of the social revolution which is world-wide and will continue to be the main force for probably another 100 or 200 years. I pointed out that there was a Keynesian consensus that we all had to follow, as the economic victims of Keynes.

There was also the question of who should govern. That was the philosophy of elitists. Some of these forks in the road have to be considered again. This legislation or group of Bills we are now putting through have to deal with the question of how we can apply some slowing down to the expansionary nature of our cost-push inflation.

I think it is well known that both Government Members and the Official Opposition supported the concept that we should reduce the rate of income growth for the next two years to an expected rate of inflation of about six and five. But they have run along with that a lot of other connotations and thoughts which could only be described as the result of diseased thinking of the mandarins. To reach this exalted position of being an elitist in Government, according to their own words you must be consistent. What you do for one person, you must do for everyone, regardless of written contracts, moral obligations or common sense. Everything has to be consistent.

In the case of those employed in Government service in the last ten years, they have not only paid for their indexing, they have paid double and the figures show it. The Government made money out of that huge amount of money they took from civil servants to pay for indexing. In this case, however, it is a little different, and to understand the difference I think you have to know just a little about the history.

I believe it was the Hon. Peter Heenan, Minister of Labour in 1924, who first brought in the old age pension at $20 a month. How welcome that was to people who had no chance to build some security for their retiring years. The old age pension of $20 a month was a great mark of acceptance in Canada of the social revolution. I might say in passing that the Hon. Peter Heenan called himself a Liberal-Labour and he was our next door neighbour when I grew up, so I have some knowledge of him.

Then jumping ahead to the "six buck boys" of 1956, we had a very good Minister of Finance who was persuaded that the time had come to raise the old age pension. He was persuaded by this elite corps which had now expanded and taken more control than they had in the earlier days. They said all we can afford is $6, so they were named the "six buck boys", raising the pension from $40 to $46.

Then we have the Diefenbaker period and we got it up from $55 eventually to $65, aiming for $100. Then a Conservative by the name of Stanfield took advantage of discussions we had in caucus and proposed that, with inflation beginning to rise, everyone—those on fixed incomes particularly but even those working under contract—should be indexed so that they could protect themselves against inflation and stop the Government from reaping profits out of inflation.

That proposal by the Hon. Mr. Stanfield was accepted by all parties of this House, and I think sincerely and honestly. Naturally, as it was accepted the civil service stepped in and charged all Government employees an extra amount to pay for indexation. I covered all that in my remarks on Bill C-133.

In the case of Bill C-131 that we are discussing, the situation is different. The difference is that there is no contract on paper concerning indexation, but there is a moral contract with all parties who supported it in the House. It is generally assumed by many that the Old Age Security cheque is a handout from the Government. When that program was introduced in its modern form it was supported by a program of taxation of two, two and two—2 per cent of this tax and 2 per cent of that tax, to be put into this Old Age Security amount. These people have paid all their working days without even knowing it was for their old age pension. So it is a non-written contract.

I want to conclude, Mr. Speaker, by saying that even though I can honestly and gladly support restraint of six and five on the growth of income for people still working, it goes against the grain of all of us to take advantage of people with whom we have a contract, written or unwritten. I suggest that by worshipping this concept of the rationalists that everything has to be the same regardless of contract or principle, we do ourselves and this Parliament an injustice by putting this Bill through.

I would like to remind everyone that there is no country in the world which has done better for its senior citizens at all levels than this nation of Canada. Why spoil it by going through this because civil servants say we have to be consistent? For such a small thought, that of consistency, we destroy our own reputation as being fair and equitable.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I rise to support the amendment in opposition to Bill C-131, which will limit pensions for old age pensioners. Prior to beginning I would like to refer to the previous speaker on behalf of the Conservative Party. He said that, of course, he quite willingly supported six and five controls over the wages of people who still have income. Then in the next breath he said he opposes the breaking of contracts, whether they are written or unwritten. I would like to remind the speaker for the Conservative Party that when he and his colleagues voted for C-124, they in fact voted for the Government to break contracts with hundreds of thousands of Canadian workers. They supported the Liberal Government in breaking collective agreements which that same Government had negotiated in good faith with its own employees. So the Conservative Party cannot have it both ways.

Bill C-131 is one the New Democratic Party has to oppose. New Democrats across the country, like old age pensioners across the country, recognize that this Government lacks the proper priorities in spending and taxation. The Government is asking people who were born before 1920 to make sacrifices. These are the people who were in their teens during the great depression. These are the people who fought in World War II. These are the people who worked in this country when wages and prices were low, and now that they have reached what we call their golden years, the Government of Canada is saying that they must sacrifice again. The Government of Canada and all Canadians should recognize the sacrifice those people have made. They should recognize that these people have sacrificed during the depression, the war and their working years, and that they should be given adequate and reasonable old age pensions. They should not be the victims of a public relations program divined by some Liberal strategists in the Senate. These are the people who have made sacrifices for Canada and it is time that the Government recognized their contributions.

• (1200)

Earlier I spoke about the lack of priorities. If the Government really wants the restraint program in order to make more money available for job creation, then why is a former Deputy Minister of Finance receiving a salary in excess of $100,000 per year although he does no work for the Government? What kind of priority is that? He will receive $30,000, $40,000 or $50,000, although he is not working. That would pay the old age pensions of a lot of senior citizens.

At the same time, why does the Government introduce tax legislation which will, in effect, reduce the taxes of those people at the higher end of the income scale? Why are we asking old age pensioners to make the sacrifice at the same time as we reward those with high salaries? Does that make sense? Is that the priority of the Government?

Why is the Government so lenient in taxing the banks? The banks are making good profits at the present time but are restricting the salaries of their workers. Why is the Government not taxing the banks at a higher rate? That really is an example of its lack of priorities.

The Government has issued a green paper on pension reform but it is really just more public relations. At the time the paper was introduced we were debating bills which would affect old age pensions and Government pensions, yet the Government talks about pension reform. That is sheer hypocrisy, Mr. Speaker.

We have often heard Government spokesmen speak in this House about the plight of women in the country. I would remind the House that it is women who will suffer most under the six and five legislation. The legislation affects not only the women in the work force who tend to receive lower salaries, it affects not only women who worked for the Government and received lower Government pensions and also earned lower salaries, not only widows of former Government workers who also receive low pensions, and not only women who receive the Family Allowance—because that is often the only income they have in their own name—and this legislation is a direct attack on the women of Canada. They are the people who need the old age pension the most. If the Government were sincere in asking for sacrifices, it would have given full indexation to these men and women and would raise taxes for those people at the top of the income scale.

That is not Government policy, nor is it Government strategy. Its strategy is to invoke the public relations program designed in the other place by Senator Keith Davey, whose one and only purpose on the payroll of the taxpayers of Canada is to get the Liberal Party re-elected to Government. This is a public relations program and the leaked documents that have come our way prove that.

I will not support that, Mr. Speaker. I recognize the sacrifice of the people born prior to 1920. I mentioned the depression and World War II. Some of these people also fought in the Korean War. They made sacrifices for Canada and they deserve the recognition and support of the Canadian people now.

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, it is a privilege to be given the opportunity to speak on Bill C-131 and to add my voice to the many others in the House and across Canada that are violently opposed to the latest dictatorial attitude of the Government of taking their inefficiency out on the senior citizens. That is the one group in Canada that can least defend itself.

Yesterday I heard some Members say that approximately 75 Members out of 282 have participated in the debate. The Government seemed to think that was too many speakers. I am quite sure that there are 282 Members of Parliament who have a great many senior citizens in their ridings. If those people who have worked so hard and paid taxes for so many years had their way, they would want to know where their Member stands.

Yesterday the Government introduced closure, although I am aware that it does not like that word, believing it is too cruel. Time allocation, which is the same thing, prolongs the agony a day or two; it is closure in all but name.

We must consider whether this Bill will seriously injure a group of citizens. I am aware that the reduction, beginning next month, will amount to only 50 cents per month. The Government will claim that that is peanuts and ask why we argue about it. If it is peanuts and does not mean much, then why did the Government propose it in the first place? Why did it not go after some other sectors of the economy that could better afford a reduction?

Our friends to the left support this Bill and each of the other Bills, as do we, but they have taken great exception to our support of Bill C-124 last August. Mr. Speaker, there is a great deal of difference between reducing the salaries of Members of Parliament and reducing to 6 per cent the increase given to members of the civil service who, we are well aware, are not among the most underpaid sections of the economy. We therefore agree that six and five is a good thing to aim for, but it should be aimed where you can get the money most easily and without harm.

If we look back at what our senior citizens have contributed to this country over the years, we see that it is a rather severe and draconian action to single them out and say they are going to have to bear their share of the burden. We should ask ourselves whether senior citizens have contributed to inflation. If that can be proven, then I suppose they should bear the blame.

I see the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) in the House. I have great admiration for the Minister and I know she is a very sympathetic person. I wish I could have been a fly on the wall in the Liberal caucus. I think the Minister probably said: "For God's sake, leave the senior citizens alone". I do not expect the Minister to divulge confidences in the Liberal caucus or the Liberal Cabinet, but I have enough confidence in her to think that that is what she did. She was sure talking to a tough bunch of nuts who said, in plain English, "to Hell with it"; and as a result senior citizens have to feel the weight of it.

Also it was pointed out by the Minister, because she had to make the best of a bad case, that the amount was not so much and that senior citizens who were in the direst of straits would obtain some benefit through the full indexation of the GIS. This will help them, but there are those people who are neither fish nor fowl and will probably be hurt. They are just a bit over the poverty line. Probably the $50 a year at the present time will put them below the poverty line. Therefore, I consider this an absolute calamity.

Someone spoke about a tragedy and a calamity and was asked to define the difference. Let me say that Bill C-133 was a tragedy for pensioners, members of the RCMP and all other people who had their pensions reduced. Certainly that Bill was a tragedy, but this Bill dealing with old age pensions is a calamity. The best example of the difference between those terms, as I heard the other day, would be this: Suppose the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) fell into the river, that would be a tragedy; but if someone fished him out, that would be a calamity.

This is the most important Bill of them all. Certainly we are opposed to them all, but if we can take our choice or our druthers, it would be Bill C-133 to cap the increase given to old age pensioners. They should be left alone.

The next Bill which will be coming up for discussion will be the one on Family Allowances. Certainly some mothers or persons who are designated to receive Family Allowance cheques are in pretty good income brackets. That Bill will not be too severe on them, but it will hurt those in the lower income brackets. It is very important to try to protect those who are hardest hit by inflation. Thank the Lord that inflation is starting to come down and will hopefully reach bottom.

Let me return to our senior citizens. The Government should have certainly left this group alone. I am well aware that some Hon. Members across the way voted against—

Mr. McKinnon: What do you mean by "left alone"?

Mr. Darling: I mean that this particular Bill C-133 should be thrown out and that senior citizens should be left alone. They did not have the nerve to monkey with or reduce the amounts on this one in January because it was written into the legislation. Naturally the Treasury Benches are looking forward to having this Bill rammed through so that they will at least be able to get their pound of flesh when the February cheques are ready for issuing.

As I was about to say earlier, there were certain Government Members who rose, spoke against and voted against Bill C-133. Of course, that Bill affects a significant segment of the economy, but the Bill before the House presently will affect literally tens and hundreds of thousands who are in much more serious financial positions—the pioneers of our land, the ones who worked so hard when there were not the benefits that are available now.

I know that my time is drawing to a close. It could be pointed out to me that I should not be speaking on the Bill because I have a conflict of interest. I have reached that august plateau where I, too, am a senior citizen. The Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Bussières) is certainly getting his pound of flesh back from me, and I am not worried about it. I hope that certain Members on the other side will rise and voice their opposition to this very important Bill, as they did to the other one.

[Translation]

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, it is with great pleasure that I now rise to speak against this Bill on behalf of all Canadian senior citizens, of all their children, and also, I believe, of all Canadians across the land.

[English]

Bill C-131 will limit the increase in the basic old age pension to a maximum of 6 per cent in 1983 and 5 per cent in 1984. Previously, this pension has been fully indexed to the rate of inflation as measured by the Consumer Price Index. If consumer prices in fact rise faster than 1.5 per cent a quarter in 1983, and it is projected that they will rise by 1.2 per cent a quarter, this Bill will result in a sacrifice in real purchasing power by those who receive the old age pension and do not receive the Guaranteed Income Supplement or spousal allowance.

The other day some of us talked with considerable anxiety about Bill C-133. The principle there was different. It involved the principle of breaking a contract between the Government and its public servants. This Bill has no contractual element. The principle here is social benefits in a just society. One does not have to qualify for OAS, other than having spent 65 years working, paying taxes and contributing to Canadian society.

What is the Government's priority in terms of deciding to cut back on social payments such as this? It is a test of the Government's strategy for hard times. What do Liberals opposite think when we can no longer afford, in their view, a certain level of expenditure? Who do they think should be cut first? Who gets cut next? Do they have any batting order? Has anyone in Government ever applied his or her mind to the priorities which should exist within a just society? Are they adopting ostrich-like tactics and putting their heads in the ground, just going from crisis to crisis? Should not we all at least know what are the guidelines for determining the priority so that they can be seen to be just and thus, although unpalatable, at least have a chance of some public support?

What are the defects in the Bill? In my opinion, the prime defect in this Bill is that it creates the impression, or reality, that the Government, thinking that it has to cut somewhere, picks the weakest members of society on which to bring down its axe. I am referring to those who cannot fight back or those who do not have alternative sources of income. We know that the Bill, by definition, affects those in the country who have the least available alternative means of support.

Some years ago the life insurance industry conducted a study. As I understand it, it determined that those people with the highest level of incomes had the best chance of living longer lives. In other words, all other things being equal, if one had a decent income in old age, one's chances of living longer were better. The Government is doing precisely the opposite by applying, in rough language, the boots to senior Canadians. Senior Canadians are not persuaded that they should be treated this way. They ask why the Government should use brute force on them. The Government has hardly even attempted to persuade the elderly that there is not enough food for everybody, so to speak, and therefore in the interests of the whole family it would make it hardest for those who are no longer able to work. In fact, that is the tradition of the Government on this issue. The obvious conclusion is that the Government has a new set of priorities.

In the last election campaign the Liberals said that they would increase the Income Supplement by $35 per month. What will they say in the next election campaign when they will have to look voters in the eye? Will they say that they are the Government which decided that people receiving Old Age Security must be comfortably well-off, although everyone knows that is not the case, and therefore they cut from them?

[Translation]

I believe that just before an election, this Government is willing to do anything for the voters, including our senior citizens. However, in a somewhat difficult period such as the present one, those who are the first victims of a Government attack are the weakest economically, such as senior citizens. Is this a fair Government? I believe that it is the most cynical Government in the free world. This is a Government made up of the most callous people. What other Government in the free world is now doing the same thing to its senior citizens? There! I can hear no reply from Government Members.

• (1220)

[English]

I am not suggesting, Mr. Speaker, that there should not be cuts. There should be cuts for Mr. Ed Clark with his $200,000 gift to go to Paris with his family for 18 months. Maybe there should be cuts in the $1 million we have paid to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) over the past 10 years so that he can eat caviar and drink champagne and have his children supported, not a penny from his own pocket. Maybe we should make some cuts in the Prime Minister's perks. Maybe we should cut out such things as sending Janet Smith from the Privy Council Office to Paris and the Riviera to study French for I do not know how many months. That cost us about $13,000. Are there not enough people from Quebec, from Ontario, or from the West who are capable of teaching Janet Smith French without having to send her to France?

In passing, the argument of the Government was that it would cost slightly more to send Miss Smith to a language school in Quebec in terms of cash outlay than to send her to the Riviera. That is the most obtuse piece of logic I think I have ever heard from the Government. Of course, that money is going out of the country. Of course, that affects French teachers in Quebec and it hurts the balance of payments of Canada. How can you speak to Government Members when they do not listen?

I would like to refer to a suggestion made by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton). He suggested, quite properly, that if there are to be cuts, these cuts should be made from those in the working population who can bear a reduction better than the retired people. I believe he also suggested that perhaps we should make some cuts in the amount of money we are pouring into Canagrex or into other sacred cows. Maybe we should take the Auditor General's advice and get control of spending once again—

Old Age Security Act (No. 2)

Mr. Schroder: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I know my hon. friend would not like to mislead the House, but this Bill does not have anything to do with cuts or saving money. It has to do with reducing inflation to six and five.

Mr. Lambert: By reducing Government expenditures.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Schroder) is debating; he is not rising on a point of order. The Hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Kilgour).

Mr. Kilgour: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member opposite is a distant cousin of mine, it turns out. Our families' roots began in the region of Guelph. With respect to him and to you, Mr. Speaker, he does not have the slightest comprehension of what causes inflation.

I respectfully submit that one of the causes of inflation is spending about 25 per cent more in a year than is taken in by way of revenue. The Government has been doing that now for some years and in large measure has been printing the difference. If the Minister who is heckling from the other side went down to his basement and printed as much new money on fresh new bills as the Government has done over the last ten years, he would be put in jail for printing counterfeit money.

I suggest Hon. Members look at what happened in Germany in the 1920s and at what is happening in Argentina today. A government that prints money as fast as this Government has done can only create inflation. For the Hon. Member to get up and say that cutting back on Old Age Security payments will fight inflation is absolute nonsense.

The point I was trying to make, which was made by the Hon. Member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain, is that if you are going to cut payments to people, then cut those being paid to the working population, not those paid to people on pension. Cut anything, cut MPs' salaries, but for Heaven's sake, do not cut money from the thousands and thousands of Canadians across the land—

[Translation]

—all those in every part of the country who count on the OAS.

[English]

This is clearly a stop-gap, an ill thought out, crisis-coping measure that we are dealing with today. It is the measure of a Government that has lost the confidence of the people across Canada. With respect, Mr. Speaker, Canada is a ship without a rudder with a captain who no longer cares in which direction we are going. He is like Captain Queeg who was down in the engine room playing with his beads and took his ship on to the rocks. This country is being taken on to the rocks by this Government.

I would urge Hon. Members opposite to vote against this Bill in the interests of all their constituents.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Is the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary rising on a point of order?

Mr. Maltais: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question to the Hon. Member.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): This can be done only with unanimous consent because the time allotted to the Hon. Member has now expired.

[English]

Is there unanimous consent for the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Maltais) to put a question to the Hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

[Translation]

Mr. Maltais: Mr. Speaker, I should like to know what means other than those proposed by this government would the Hon. Member advocate to bring down the inflation rate.

Mr. Kilgour: There are a number of steps the government could take to fight inflation. I have already mentioned reducing the budgetary deficit. That is one measure. We might also follow the example of Japan, West Germany and Switzerland. Obviously, the governments of those three countries have been much more successful than ours and those of all other countries in their fight against inflation. Those three governments have implemented a series of policies especially aimed at fighting inflation. For instance, the government of West Germany has lowered the so-called trade barriers to alleviate price competition. A government can promote investments. For instance, the government of West Germany grants a tax exemption to every resident who invests in housing. This keeps the manufacturing industry going. There is less unemployment. There are more people paying taxes and, therefore, providing the government with more revenues. In short, there are a number of steps the government could take to fight inflation. Also, Mr. Speaker, I suggest that a careful study of the policies of these three counties would help us determine what anti-inflation measures Canada should implement. I can say that such anti-inflation measures have been very successful in those three countries.

Mr. Maltais: Mr. Speaker, I have another question for the Hon. Member.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): I repeat that the unanimous consent of the House would again be required.

• (1230)

[English]

The Parliamentary Secretary again rises to seek unanimous consent to put a further question to the Hon. Member who has just spoken. Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

[Translation]

Mr. Maltais: Mr. Speaker, I just want to remind the Hon. Member that the present Government has already implemented the programs he just mentioned in those three countries. For instance, the Government has offered $3,000 to prospective homeowners; it granted tax cuts, such as the child tax credit, and offered a whole series of incentives to promote investments in Canada. Better still, through FIRA, it is trying to strengthen industry with a greater Canadian ownership.

However, I should like to ask the Hon. Member whether those countries have not precisely cut public spending and practically eliminated indexation, while the Canadian Government is still indexing at least at the 6 and 5 per cent level not only the benefits of senior citizens, but also the allowances for those families that need it most.

Mr. Kilgour: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is correct in saying that the Government has just changed its policy, but the problem is not as simple as that, because for ten or fourteen years, the present Government has been fighting private enterprise, foreign investment, the oil industry and our own manufacturing industry. The flight of capital from this country has been enormous. It is common knowledge that last year, $1 billion left the country. There is $8 billion which cannot be found in the national accounts. So we have had a tremendous flight of capital from our country, and now it is a matter of confidence, of encouraging people, for instance, to build plants in Canada. The petrochemical industry in Alberta is a good example. Do you know that a company near Medicine Hat is now having a petrochemical plant built, not in Canada but in New Zealand? Why? Because the tax levied on the petrochemical industry is $1.05 per 1,000 cubic feet.

As the Hon. Member from Alberta said earlier, we cannot sell the product on the international market because it is too expensive. I think in Alberta, construction of nine or perhaps eleven plants was either cancelled or delayed because of this tax. One plant can provide, I think it was 800 or 900 jobs for two years, during the construction period.

We should have a Government that . . . The Hon. Member mentioned that since the 1980 election, FIRA has been telling foreign investors: Do not bother to come, we do not need you. It is quite true that three months ago, the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) changed his mind. Now, you may come.

But let me give you another example in connection with FIRA.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. I am sorry to have to interrupt the Hon. Member, but although he did agree to answer a question by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Maltais), he should confine himself to the subject now before the House. I am afraid that we are now discussing an entirely different matter.

Mr. Kilgour: As far as the other subjects are concerned, if I may not go on with my examples—although they are quite good ones—of the problems created by FIRA in this country, I would say that none of these three countries has similar measures because to my knowledge, these countries are incapable of introducing a measure that is unfair, harsh and ridiculous in the extreme as far as the economy is concerned. For instance, when, thanks to the Government, senior citizens see their purchasing power go down, unemployment and economic problems for our country are the result. Kenneth Galbraith, in fact, any economist will tell us that a drop in purchasing power creates major problems for the economy.

[English]

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, I had the pleasure of speaking on this Bill earlier in the debate. Now that closure has been imposed on the debate on Bill C-131, I would like to add a few remarks in the brief ten minutes that I have.

First, I wish to condemn the Government in the most emphatic terms for its obvious attack on old age pensioners. The Government's appeal that old age pensioners must join all Canadians in contributing and sacrificing to help the Government reduce inflation borders on immorality. It is an appeal for sacrifice to today's senior citizens, our grandparents and parents, who more than anyone are used to sacrifice. They have sacrificed all their lives to raise their children. They made a sacrifice when they came to this country and went without year after year so their children and grandchildren could get the best education and enjoy a better standard of living. They knew what sacrifice was.

One has only to visit senior citizen homes such as the New Horizons Drop-In Centres across the country to learn of these sacrifices. Talk to the pioneers who broke the land with nothing more than an axe so that they could build and pass on something to their children: they know what sacrifice is; the Government does not have to tell them.

I say it is immoral for the Government to zero in on the senior citizens and for the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) to say that senior citizens know their responsibility to the Government. That Government is spending $40 million on television and radio advertising year after year. In the year when the Government is asking senior citizens to relinquish $260 of their pension which they received because of their sacrifices, the estimated total advertising budget for all federal Government departments is $70 million. This money is spent for advertising its six and five program and how it will beat inflation. This same Government increases its deficit spending by 18 per cent to 20 per cent. That does not make sense to me.

Although the Government has told us of the need to control inflation, it is its own spending which has caused that high inflation. The Government injects money into the market which, in reality, should not be there. I cannot think of anything worse than the money the Government has wasted on advertising. It is immoral for the Government to increase its spending by 18 per cent while turning on a particular segment of our population which least deserves the treatment it is being given by this Government. They are citizens of Canada whom we represent in this House and we must protest that treatment. They were the pioneers who did without.

I am sure that if Hon. Members would reflect upon that for a moment they would remember what their grandparents must have gone through to ensure that they would receive a better education and a higher standard of living. Surely every family experienced the same thing. All of us did not live in affluence 50 years or 75 years ago. I still see those sacrifices in the northern parts of Alberta today. I still see people who spent their whole lives building communities by clearing the land in order to have something to pass on to their children. I have seen that and I know that Hon. Members have seen that. Go to northern Quebec, where many generations of families have lived and passed on the fruits of their hard work to their children. The Government is saying: "Thank you, senior citizens, thank you, pioneers; the people who laid the foundations and built Canada, thank you very much, but now we will reduce your Old Age Security". That is utterly sickening. It is immoral.

• (1240)

The Government and the Minister of National Health and Welfare know full well, as the Minister stated in the House, that the senior citizens know where their responsibilities lies. The Government makes that appeal to the very people who do know what sacrifice is all about.

I am utterly ashamed that Members in the House would allow and vote for an attack on the senior citizens. It does not sound like very big dollars are involved. It will amount only to about $90 or so this year, and amount only to $250 or $300 next year. For some senior citizens, that is equivalent to two months' rent next year. For some senior citizens, that means the difference as to whether they have meat on the table or not. We know that Hon. Members opposite agree that it will affect some senior citizens who have private incomes and will not hurt them very much. However, there is a borderline group of 50,000 to 75,000 senior citizens who do not deserve the treatment they are receiving. It is wrong.

I think that every Hon. Member, if he searches his conscience, will know full well it is wrong and immoral. I would ask them to search their consciences and think back to the tremendous sacrifices made for them by their parents and grandparents. Those are the kinds of people we are touching. If they do this, they will vote against the Bill and against closure.

Mr. Darling: Right on.

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I rise with a little sadness to take part in the debate. I support the amendment which is being proposed right now, but it is certainly no solution to the problems which Bill C-131 will inflict on over one million elderly Canadians.

I have a few comments on the debate so far, not only in terms of closure being brought in, but also concerning the peculiarity of the debate. I have not heard any high-rolling speeches from Liberal Members which can be sent out to pensioners across the country as to why this is so good for them. I heard one Liberal Member say that the six and five, in relation to Bill C-131, deals with inflation. The elderly in my riding, whether in Smithers, Atlin, Cassiar or on the Queen Charlotte Islands, know that the six and five program being brought in is not helping them with inflation. It is taking food from their mouths and part of their rent money. It is taking all kinds of funds away from them because inflation will remain higher. The Consumer Price Index will remain higher in 1983 and 1984.

I would like to hear some Hon. Members opposite stand up and give speeches, because I have sent copies of the ones they have given thus far to people in my riding. In those same packages I have also included speeches put on the record by Conservative Members and by those in my caucus. I have received some interesting comments in reply, which I will draw on some time later in my speech today.

In touching on the issue of Liberals not really standing up and sending a strong message out there, I would also say that a very strange boomerang kind of message is being sent out by the Tories. I remember watching them stand up in the House when the six and five program was brought in in principle. They were pretty quick to get on the bandwagon and try to send the signal out to the business community that they were all in favour of six and five and that they would fight to see that it was applied in principle throughout.

Right at the moment that a Liberal backbencher rose and said that the six and five program, in relation to OAS, is to fight inflation, the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Campbell) pointed out that for veterans it was in fact indexed at 11.5 per cent as of January 1 of this year. Again, the peculiarity of the kind of legislation which is now being brought forward by that side of the House is that it will not affect veterans. We are gradually seeing the whole concept of the means test rolled in, not only in relation to pensions and the OAS, but ultimately in relation to the GIS as well.

Let us run through a few facts so that we know exactly what we are dealing with. In relation to the 6 per cent being applied in 1983 instead of the Consumer Price Index, which would certainly be a few percentage points higher, even according to the Government's own estimates it will be 1 per cent above the 10; so we are looking at roughly a 50 per cent cut in the kind of indexing which should have come forward. With respect to the 5 per cent in 1984, it is very much an unknown.

We have seen the inability of two Ministers of Finance to really come to grips with the problems this country is facing. While the whole interest rate issue is designed by Government, various Members on the Government side are always trying to say: "Well, it is the international scene; there is nothing we can do. It is the United States, Europe and Japan". However, the House of Commons and the Government do have control over interest rates. They have control over the Governor of the Bank of Canada and interest rates could have been rolled back; but it was a depression by Government design. High interest rates simply squeezed consumers. They could not borrow or get loans. They had to refinance mortgages. Rents went up. All kinds of problems were shot into the structure of the Canadian economy. Taking in closure, taking in the fact that there is no Liberal sending out signals as to why this is so good, leaving it up to the Opposition to point out why it is bad, it really leaves a vacuum out there for the elderly in terms of assessing why Bill C-131 is being brought in.

The biggest loss is the kind of trust which Parliament has lost over time. Members of Parliament and members of legislatures are next to convicted sex killers in terms of having the lowest level of respect and support of any group within Canadian society. If we consider trust, how can the elderly, those now over the age of 65, put any trust in Government? What will come next? In the next two years, each of them will have $300 taken away. What will happen a few more years down the road?

In any critical assessment of what has happened in the last 31 or 32 years of pensions in this country, one finds that there is a watermark close to each election. I would not doubt that some time in 1984 the Government will make some kind of an announcement that pensions will go up. Then we will have pension reform and the green paper will be reactivated. We saw this in 1971, right before the 1972 federal election.

Mrs. Mitchell: Set-ups.

Mr. Fulton: We know what the Liberals are up to in terms of their set-ups and strategies to keep the elderly and workers in this country confused.

Concerning trust, how can those who are in their late fifties or sixties plan? The whole pension scheme is very much an unknown. To give an example, if hospitals are suddenly short of beds, or if there are line-ups of people because there is a sudden wave of sickness in Smithers, Vancouver or Ottawa, the first thing the hospital administration does is not to close the hospital or to limit the number of beds, although that is certainly something promoted by certain people in our society. However, when we really need an inflation net, when we really need something in relation to the Consumer Price Index, whether it is in relation to the Unemployment Insurance Fund or pensions, and when the Government gets a little sticky for cash, from whom does it take it? It takes it from those who are the least able to organize. Big business has full-time lobbyists here in Ottawa. If the Government tried to take money away from big business, there would be all kinds of chaos and hell to pay. However, since it is going against pensioners all across Canada, many of them living in rural areas with insufficient income to get together and organize and to come in a mass lobby to Ottawa, they are the ones who get their teeth kicked out. They are the ones, as the Tory Member said, who get jackbooted and blackjacked first by the Government.

What about Dome? The Government gave over $500 million to Dome. The whole contract was based on high interest rates, cost of living increases and the Consumer Price Index. All of these things are done by economists to protect a big corporation like Dome which really should not have that kind of protection.

The Government poured $100 million into Consolidated Computers here in Ottawa and then tossed it up for auction and received $100,000 for it. The same amount, $100 million, was thrown away on a poorly assessed and analyzed Government enterprise. That money, which could have gone to pensioners, was thrown away instead.

When Bill C-131 is implemented after closure, perhaps after an amendment or two, what will happen? The Liberal Party, on its own Richter scale of misery, will have gone up again. The Liberals are once again the ones who are going after those who can least afford it and have the least capability of fighting back.

In relation to the pensioners, the first step will be a net income reduction in benefits for the first two years, 1983 and 1984. Second, if full indexation is restored—we do not know whether or not it will be but I am sure that will be tied to some kind of an election promise in the next election campaign—those pensioners will never be able to regain in terms of indexation what they lose in these next two years. There are over one million Canadians, more than half of them women, who will be affected by this Bill. They will have a reduced income based simply on the Government's own figures, not on the figures of the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) which have been jiggery-pokery in one way or another. They have been calculated to be a net loss of $300 to pensioners during 1983 and 1984 for those getting OAS only, and $604 in the following two years, as a result of rendering the regular formula of indexation worthless. The total loss over the next four years is going to be in the neighbourhood of $900.

I can speak certainly for the elderly in my constituency, the Queen Charlotte Islands, Prince Rupert, Terrace, Kitimat, Hazelton, Smithers and on up to the Yukon, representing many native villages where there are many, elderly people. In Cassiar, Atlin and Good Hope Lake, and a number of very small communities, there are elderly but no homes for the elderly, unlike most cities across Canada. There are no special services, there are no Meals on Wheels for many of them.

Taking $900 away from these people means perhaps the loss of little gifts that they were going to give to their grandchildren or special meals they were going to prepare for themselves, or perhaps some clothing, something for their apartment, their rental dwelling or for the home they live in. It is not really very much money when Members of Parliament are talking about it, but when I speak to the elderly and I read the mail coming in from the elderly to my office, it is a question of trust. It has been a very painful experience for them to see the Government squandering money to big business. Big business, Mr. Speaker, as Liberal Members opposite know, owes right now legal taxes that they are supposed to pay comparable to our existing deficit. Is the Government attempting to collect that money from big business? Not likely.

It is unfortunate at this point in the debate that the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) is not here, but I took the time to read some of the debates that he was involved in, going back more than 30 years, and the fight that was put up by Members such as the Member for Winnipeg North Centre and others in this House that brought forward in 1951 the first real kind of pension program that we had in this country. We have been fighting ever since to get away from the concept of means tests.

Mr. Speaker, a pension in this country is a right. The Government is tampering with that right and Members are saying there is no written contract and so on. It is a right, and a trust to the elderly in this country has been broken. I feel ashamed for any Member who would get up and vote for Bill C-131 in this House.

Mr. Sid Parker (Kootenay East-Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, it is also a sad day for me to rise and speak on the amendment and to Bill C-131.

The amendment is a worthy one and I want to make it clear that we will be supporting it because at the end it states that the Guaranteed Income Supplement will be added on to the Old Age Security benefit. So therefore, those who qualified for the Guaranteed Income Supplement would in fact, be indexed. It is a very small token, and we do not agree with the six and five concept.

I want to speak for a moment about the comments made by the Hon. Member for Manicouagan (Mr. Maltais). He said the Liberal Government is sympathetic to our senior citizens, yet not one of their Members is getting up and telling the real story here. I want to tell that Hon. Member how sympathetic they are in my riding, where senior citizens come up to the railway station and try to get on the VIA Rail passenger train. There is no accommodation available for them, although they have actually booked on that train. When they get to the station they find that the Government, through its program of cutbacks and so on, has not enough equipment on the train, so they cannot board the train. The Government has abandoned lines in many parts of Canada which senior citizens helped to build, yet those are the very kinds of travelling systems that our senior citizens need and desire. Is that being sympathetic to these people?

For a moment, if I may, I would like to revert to the original Bill that caused all these problems, Bill C-124. The Hon. Member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling) has indicated—

[Translation]

Mr. Maltais: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Maltais) on a point of order.

Mr. Maltais: Mr. Speaker, I simply want to point out that the remarks made earlier by the Hon. Member do not reflect at all what I said. If he wants to quote me, I would urge him to read the blues. That would be much easier than speaking off the top of his head in the House.

[English]

Mr. Parker: Mr. Speaker, I would like to quote from the "Budget in Brief" of June, 1982 which caused this problem. For the Hon. Member for Parry Sound-Muskoka to say that the Conservative Party agrees with the six and five program for working people in the public service sector but he does not agree, and his Party does not agree, with Government policy on Old Age Security pensions, Family Allowances or Public Service pensions, I think is being very, very misrepresentative as to what happened. The "Budget in Brief" states very clearly, and I quote:

> Public sector compensation restraint program will constrain rates of pay of federal government employees to increases of no more than 6 per cent in the first year; no more than 5 per cent in the next year.

This will create a savings of about $250 million the first year and $550 million the next year. The Conservatives supported that program. I know the Conservatives have a problem counting, but I did not realize they had a problem reading, because if they had gone on a little bit further they would have seen this:

> A 6 per cent limit on increases in indexed social payments . . . comes into effect with the January, 1983 increases; stays in effect for two years—

Very clear. The next page applies to Family Allowances, to people receiving Public Service pensions or old age pensions, but does not affect people who receive the Guaranteed Income Supplement. It gives a very clear indication of what the Government was going to do. At the bottom of the page it says:

> It will generate $45 million this year and $315 million next year for reallocation.

It does not say anything about inflation. It says that the Government is going to take this money from these programs and reallocate it. I would like to ask the Government, when it is taking this money from senior citizens, from children and Public Service people who are on retirement, and it is going to reallocate it, does that mean it is giving it to the railways? Does that mean it is giving it to Dome Petroleum? Because if that is what the Government is doing, I think it is a sin and does not show very much sympathy from that side of the House.

The Government is ashamed of this Bill, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) is ashamed of it, and that is why they have brought in closure on almost every one of these Bills, to try to control debate, to try to stop this side of the House from identifying the problems they have.

Senior citizens in my riding are experiencing expenses that many people cannot cope with. How they are doing it, I do not know. If there is a major snowfall, it means hiring someone to help senior citizens in many parts of my riding open up their path to get in and out of their homes. It means extra heating costs.

I want to refer for a moment to the point made by the Hon. Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields), who said that if the Government had to do this, it should do it to the working people. My goodness, he has identified the working people as being the ones the Government should attack, but he did not attack the profits. He did not say the Government should attack the excessive profits the banks are making, or the excessive profits that other people are making. But the Conservatives and the Liberals have an obscene way of dealing with things.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. Perhaps the Hon. Member may wish to call it one o'clock.

It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this afternoon.

GARRISON DIVERSION

RESTORATION OF UNITED STATES FUNDING

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Madam Speaker, the United States Government has just announced that more than $22 million has been proposed to continue the completion of the Garrison Diversion project. This is in addition to the $4 million which was overwhelmingly voted against and then re-instated last month.

As reported in Time magazine of January 3, 1983, Congressman Silvio Conte stated publicly in Washington that Senator Mark Andrews of North Dakota persuaded the House-Senate Conference Committee to restore the proposed funding for the water diversion project. Congressman Conte further declared that Senators knew they must vote in favour of these moneys for Garrison or risk having Senator Andrews put a halt to their own projects.

In view of the fact that the best interests of Canada are not being taken into consideration when funding for the Garrison Diversion Project is voted upon, and the recommendations of the International Joint Commission are being totally ignored, it is all too obvious that immediate representation by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) must be made to the United States Government to resolve this ludicrous situation.

EMPLOYMENT

AIR CANADA PROGRAM

Mr. Claude-André Lachance (Rosemont): Madam Speaker, I want to call the attention of the House to the anxiety felt by Air Canada employees as a result of the announcement made by Air Canada in the Fall of 1982 that there would be a 10 p. 100 reduction in manpower. Air Canada subsequently submitted to the International Association of Machinists and Aerospace Workers a six-point program designed to avoid the layoff of 585 employees. Unfortunately, this six-point program was never officially negotiated and between January 3 and the end of March, 359 employees will be laid off in Montreal alone and perhaps even more will lose their jobs in the Spring. Since air local 1751 has stated publicly that it is willing to immediately begin negotiations with Air Canada in an effort to stop its members from being laid-off, the Department of Labour should urge the corporation to immediately discuss with the unions the details of the single six-point proposal it made last Fall.

In conclusion, it should be pointed out that the union has indicated its willingness to accept any management proposal for a work sharing program.

TRUST COMPANIES

CALL FOR PASSAGE OF LEGISLATION INCREASING DEPOSIT INSURANCE LEVELS

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, the Government brought Bill C-142 before the House as a matter of urgent necessity. Thousands of people have claims against the Crown, Greymac, and Seaway companies, and at this point can only receive $20,000 toward their claims. The balance of their money is tied up. There is no protection, and they can get nothing. This Bill could be passed through this House in one day and the urgent concerns of these depositors, many of whom are retired, would be alleviated if they were covered up to $60,000.

S.O. 21

The Government has had a white paper on trust companies before the House and the Government is aware that there are real concerns with respect to the administration of matters involving the Department of Insurance and in connection with all of the powers the Government has over trust companies, mortgage companies, insurance companies, and banks. These security problems should be referred to a special committee of this House forthwith so that the House can make the necessary inquiries, hear evidence, and assist the Government in introducing new legislation, and organizing its supervisory and licensing powers. Let us get Bill C-142 passed. Let us get all matters concerning financial institutions before a special committee of this House. Let us get on with it.

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

FAILURE TO MEET COMMITMENT TO WORKERS AND TAXPAYERS

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Madam Speaker, Canadians were again treated to wise words from the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Lumley) today when he vowed that to wring jobs from Chrysler he would "play hardball". Where has this Minister been and what has he been doing that he is only now deciding to get tough? Is there any reason for Canadians to believe that the Government will deliver job security to the industry now, and not just more empty promises and fewer and fewer jobs?

Canadians last year gave up $1.6 billion in duties at the border under the auto agreement, while the United States only gave up $500 million. That was a $1.1 billion giveaway, and for that Canadians received considerably less than $1 billion in new investment. That is only 7 to 8 per cent of new investment in North America, and much less than our fair share.

While Chrysler seems to be leading the way in reneging on its promises to Canadians, the entire industry is not meeting its commitment to Canadian auto workers or taxpayers, and it is time the Government showed the auto manufacturers that it will not accept any more excuses.

DISARMAMENT

SUPPORT URGED FOR BAN ON CHEMICAL WEAPONS

Mr. Garnet M. Bloomfield (London-Middlesex): Madam Speaker, recent allegations emanating from Afghanistan contend that Soviet MIGs dropped cannisters that emitted a crippling brown gas on Moslem rebels. I am very concerned that such reports are becoming more and more commonplace in recent years. This being the case, and in light of the fact that the UN Committee on Disarmament is convening in New York today, February 1, 1983, to consider an agreement on the prohibition of chemical weapons, I would urge the Government of Canada to champion the call for a full and verifiable ban on all chemical weapons, at the United Nations.

A convention on the Prohibition of the Development, Production and Stockpiling of Bacteriological (Biological) and Toxic Weapons was entered into in 1972, but the problem of chemical weapons remains. In the UN the emphasis is on gaining agreement to prohibit the development, production and stockpiling of chemical weapons, and on the destruction of existing stocks.

The horrific results of such weapons can no longer be tolerated by any thinking nation. For the sake of all humanity, and in the pursuit of humanity, I strongly urge the Government of Canada to instruct the Canadian delegation at the UN Committee on Disarmament to work tirelessly to ensure that the negotiations which will begin today will be successful so that the spectre of chemical weapons can be finally removed.

RAILWAYS

CROWSNEST PASS RATE—EFFECT OF ANNOUNCED CHANGES

Mr. Len Gustafson (Assiniboia): Madam Speaker, the announcement in Winnipeg today by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) is startling and bad news for the western grain producers. The Government has absolutely disregarded some of the important economic factors that exist in the farming economy. The cost of production has increased at least 25 per cent while the price of grain on the world market has dropped significantly.

Farm bankruptcies have increased by 65 per cent over the past year. It will be impossible for grain producers to accept responsibility for increased freight rates. Yet the Government and the Minister of Transport by their announcement today seemingly turn a deaf ear to presentation after presentation made by farm groups.

I call upon the Liberal Government and the Minister responsible to reconsider an action that will be financially impossible to bear for the western grain producers.

FINANCE

NON-TAXATION OF WORKERS IN NORTHERN CITIES

Mr. André Maltais (Manicouagan): Madam Speaker, on behalf of the workers in the northern cities of Fermont, Gagnon, Shefferville, Labrador City and Wabush, I would like to ask the officials of the Department of Finance to review their recommendation to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) that the allowances of northern workers be taxed because of the hardship imposed on these people who have created a very strong economy in the region. Furthermore, taxation of northern workers' benefits might be a deterrent to the hiring by the companies involved of qualified employees to work in those regions.

I would also like to point out that the Committee set up by the Minister of State for Mines and Resources (Mrs. Erola) has suggested essentially that the tax exemption for northern workers be maintained. I believe that I am speaking on behalf of all the people who work north of the 55th parallel and who are affected by this measure.

I therefore ask the Minister of Finance to check with his officials with a view to getting more detailed recommendations on this group of workers, and I hope that substantial changes will be made to this policy, in accordance with the suggestions of the federal-provincial industrial and labour committee, which requires that the taxation benefits for northern workers remain unchanged.

GARRISON DIVERSION

INCREASE IN ALLOCATION OF UNITED STATES FUNDING

Mr. Terry Sargeant (Selkirk-Interlake): Madam Speaker, I was dismayed, as I am sure every Manitoban was, to learn that the administration of President Reagan plans to allocate a record $22.3 million to the Garrison Diversion Project in North Dakota. That is a five-fold increase over this year's interim allocation of $4 million.

The effect of allocating this money and proceeding with the Garrison Project will be devastating on the Province of Manitoba. At risk is a multi-million dollar commercial fishing industry, the quality of drinking water for many Manitoba communities, as well as tourism and farming in the Province. For native people, many of whom are dependent on Manitoba's lakes not only for their livelihood but for the very food on their table, the stakes are particularly high. In short, a decision to allocate these funds and to proceed with Garrison will damage not only the Manitoba environment but the Manitoba economy as well.

But there is hope. Because the House of Representatives did initially vote to deny the interim funding for Garrison in December of 1982, the door is still open to convince our American counterparts of the negative impact that approving this funding for Garrison will have on Manitoba. Therefore I urge the Government to make serious representation to the U.S. administration to stop this funding, and once again to send an all-party parliamentary delegation to Washington to convince members of Congress to vote against the Garrison allocation when the vote comes to be taken this summer.

INCREASE IN NUMBER OF FARM BANKRUPTCIES

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Bruce-Grey): Madam Speaker, over the past several years the Canadian farm industry has been experiencing serious financial problems. Farm bankruptcies in 1982 increased by 57 per cent compared to 1981, and by 85 per cent relative to 1980. Continuation of these financial problems could seriously jeopardize traditional Canadian agricultural practices.

There are 86 members of the Canadian Farm Survival Association in Ottawa today to explain to Members of Parliament the importance of immediate action to resolve the farm financial crisis. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) is asked to address the problems of these farmers facing bankruptcy by immediately supporting appropriate bankruptcy legislation. He is also asked to provide long-term solutions by supporting proposals put forward for commodity price stabilization on a national basis, and also to support measures which would improve financing through agribonds and expanded Farm Credit Corporation refinancing resources.

TRADE

NEED TO INTENSIFY INTERNATIONAL MARKETING EFFORTS

Mr. Maurice A. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Madam Speaker, Canadian trade performance in recent years has been one of the bright spots in our economy, but to remain competitive in the 1980s we must intensify our international marketing efforts, particularly for manufactured goods.

New manufacturing orders in Canada rose in November by a substantial 7.4 per cent over the previous month. While gains over one month do not provide a guarantee for the future, there are other signs of an improving climate. The rise in December's Consumer Price Index was the lowest in more than four years, and the index has been registering a single-digit figure for the last five months. Encouraging also are growing indications of the willingness of business and labour to adopt a co-operative stance in resolving our economic difficulties.

Awareness of Canada's place in the world economy is crucial if we are to weather current conditions and be positioned to take advantage of recovery, when it comes. We have moved into 1983 in a mood of generally cautious optimism, though there are also many informed observers who consider that the next 20 years could be very prosperous years for Canadians. Nonetheless, there are great challenges before us, and our success in meeting these challenges will in no small part rest on the support and active co-operation of informed Canadians. This in turn will depend on the efforts of Members of this House to broaden public perception of the stake of the individual Canadian in the health and vigour of both our own and the world economy.

RAILWAYS

CROWSNEST PASS RATE—ANNOUNCEMENT OF CHANGES

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Economic Development who, I understand, is responding to questions relating to the announcement by the Minister of Transport concerning the Crow rate. This announcement by the Liberal Government has effectively killed the Crow, and in turn given us a turkey. This proposal is not only complex, it is going to be costly, divisive, and will create a great deal of uncertainty and apprehension in the agricultural community.

The proposal provides for a freight rate structure which will double freight rates for producers by 1985, increasing them to five times the present amount by the year 1990, or roughly $1 a bushel. Given that, and the fact that producers are under very severe pressures of huge input cost increases and declining prices, how does the Minister expect the producers of Canada to pay this added cost, or has he something in mind which will assure the producers of Canada that their grain prices will increase in a fashion similar to that of freight rates?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Minister of State for Economic Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Madam Speaker, I will not take advantage of the very obvious opening the Hon. Member for Vegreville gave me in his preamble. However, I might say, on behalf of the Minister of Transport and other Members of the Government, in fact the entire back bench who are associated with this initiative—

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Just let us have their names.

Mr. Johnston: —that it is quite the opposite of what the Hon. Member alleges. This is really quite an historic day which sees the introduction of a new regime which is fair to producers, which will create an enormous amount of industrial benefits, and which is fair to the country as a whole.

As to the impact on producers themselves, the Hon. Member knows full well that it is being phased in and that, even after the phase-in, my understanding is that the cost will be something like 14 per cent of the revenue from grain sold as opposed to, say, 20 per cent in the case of coal, and that is at present-day values. So in fact producers will continue to enjoy very substantial benefits.

In addition, as the Hon. Member also knows, this is an opportunity for western Canada to diversify its industrial and agricultural base, and I must say I am rather disappointed at the attitude adopted by the Hon. Member who I would have thought would have been most supportive of the very creative steps taken by this Government, in particular by the Minister of Transport, in leading the reform of this very important issue.

Mr. Mazankowski: Madam Speaker, talking about openings, may I simply say this is a very sad day for the western grain producer. It is going to be very destructive and will add further to the difficulties the producers of western Canada face. The fact of the matter is we are going to have a doubling of their freight rates by 1985, while at the same time, today, grain prices are equal in real terms to the price level of 1972-73.

REQUEST FOR DEFERRAL IN INCREASING FREIGHT COSTS

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Madam Speaker, is the Government not cognizant of the additional burden which is going to be placed on producers? How are they going to meet this additional cost? It can only lead to further bankruptcies and foreclosures in the western agricultural community. Given that fact, would the Minister not consider recommending to his colleague, the Minister of Transport, a deferral of these increased producer freight costs until such time as farm input costs stabilize and grain prices increase?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Minister of State for Economic Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Madam Speaker, I do believe the Hon. Member is speaking with surely his tongue in cheek at least. He well knows the distortions caused as the result of the Crow rate and that these distortions have to be eliminated. Surely he is aware, for example, that at the present time grain traffic accounts for 20 per cent of railway traffic and 3.5 per cent of revenue. Surely the Hon. Member for Vegreville is aware of that.

Now, the fact is that, as I said in my response to his first question, if we assume an increase of shipments, for example, to 41 million tonnes in 1991-92 from the current 31.1 million tonnes, the rate that western grain producers will be paying after Government payments will be $27.21 a tonne. This rate would still represent only 14 per cent of the present price of wheat, that is, I repeat, the present price of wheat. I hope that the Hon. Member will agree that it is very unlikely that we will not see substantial increases in the price of wheat during that period of time, to the end of the decade.

I must say that I find that the facts upon which the Hon. Member is proceeding are really quite unfounded. The regime would appear to be extremely favourable to the producers in the long term and, more important, extremely favourable—

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Madam Speaker, I want to lodge my protest that the Minister of Transport is not making a statement in the House of Commons, which is the proper place for a statement to be made, to the representatives of the people across Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: The negative impact of this proposal put forward by the Minister of Transport today in Winnipeg particularly affects the Saskatchewan farmer. It is a body-blow to the Saskatchewan farmer. The Magna Carta, the statutory Crowsnest rate, has been destroyed. That is unacceptable to the western farmer.

ADEQUACY OF GRAIN TRANSPORTATION SYSTEM

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, I want to ask the Minister of State for Economic Development this question. The Government has made a statement to the effect that farmers in western Canada should accept this situation on the basis that there will be guarantees of service for grain transportation in western Canada. Where are those guarantees to the farmers of western Canada with respect to the ability of the railways to carry grain to export points?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Minister of State for Economic Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Madam Speaker, if the Hon. Member has carefully reviewed the material which was distributed to Members of the House this morning and to the press, he will have seen that there will be $16.5 billion in direct investment in the transportation system. The whole intent of that, of course, is to open up the transportation system, to eliminate the bottlenecks that have existed, and to provide efficient and effective transportation not only for grain, which represents approximately 20 per cent of the volume, but for other commodities which surely are of equal interest to Saskatchewan, such as sulphur and potash and, of course, the coal carriers are affected as well.

The whole purpose of this exercise is to make the transportation system more effective and also to diversify the agricultural base. It is my understanding that Saskatchewan represents approximately 60 per cent of grain shipments. Saskatchewan, with an efficient transportation network to move that grain, will probably see 60 per cent of the increased volume to which I referred a moment ago, which is estimated to rise to 41 million tonnes during the decade. That in itself represents something like $2 billion additional annual production at today's prices. If the present ratio is maintained, 60 per cent of that will be in the Province of Saskatchewan.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Madam Speaker, what the Minister is saying is that the western grain farmers should buy a pig in a poke from this outfit. I can assure him that they will not accept that.

REQUEST THAT CHANGES BE POSTPONED

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, I want to put a question to the Minister specifically with respect to the statement made by the Minister in his release in Winnipeg. In an announcement made today the Minister has stated that the Government is committed in principle to generally distance-related freight rates.

Does that mean that the Government is considering a variable rate structure? If not, will the Minister stand in his place and give the House the assurance now that the Government will not permit variable rates?

Finally, in view of the fact that this is going to have serious, negative consequences in western Canada, will the Minister not agree to put the whole proposal out to summer fallow?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Minister of State for Economic Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Madam Speaker, I must say that I am disappointed at the rhetoric. I wish the Hon. Member would take some time and examine the substance of these proposals.

The proposals which have been put forward will not only have very beneficial impact in terms of the very constituencies that these gentlemen who have been questioning me represent, but they are designed and intended to create long-term, economic development opportunities for the Hon. Member's Province, for western Canada and, in fact, for the country. It is unfortunate that the Question Period today will not permit us the timeframe—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mazankowski: It sure is.

Mr. Johnston: —to expose to Hon. Members the enormous potential that this initiative represents for the country as a whole as well as for the Member's particular Province.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Madam Speaker, I would simply say to the Minister that the proposal put forward by the Minister of Transport is a bureaucratic boondoggle to put the control of western grain production in the hands of the bureaucrats and the Government of the day.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER OF TRANSPORT MAKE STATEMENT ON MOTIONS

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, I want to ask the Minister if he will not now agree—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Madam Speaker, I can understand why the NDP are so sensitive on this issue. It is because they have been on the back burner on it all along.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I can understand why the Prime Minister smirks in his seat and why the Minister of State for the Wheat Board is hiding in Paris. He did not have the courage to come back to Canada when this was announced.

I want to ask the Minister whether he will give a commitment that at least the Minister of Transport will make a statement on motions in the House, so that we can ask somebody who purports to know something about the issue, some questions about this very serious and, as the Minister said, historic announcement.

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Minister of State for Economic Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Madam Speaker, the Minister is usually in the House. He will be in the House, and I am sure he will welcome any questions the Hon. Member wishes to put during Question Period.

REASONS FOR GOVERNMENT ACTION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, since a question of basic principle is involved in this important matter, I should like to go to the Prime Minister with a question.

A historic bargain was reached in this country on the Crowsnest Pass freight rate, according to which our prairie farmers were guaranteed a certain rate. In return the CPR got billions of dollars in land, mineral rights and other material. Canadians all across the land benefited from the value of export sales provided by our prairie farmers.

Considering that the Prime Minister has said a number of times in the House that no change in these historic freight rates would be made without a consensus coming from prairie farmers, would he explain to the House today why he and his Government have reneged so completely on this deal and sold our prairie farmers down the drain?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member is referring to my earlier statement about a consensus. I have had someone look up the report of what I said. It seems to me that I said we would do exactly what we have done. In Hansard for February 13, 1981, as reported at page 7213, I stated:

> At the present time our policy is not to touch the Crow rate, but if there is a general feeling in the west that the question must be reopened, then we would be happy to do so.

I think it is fair to say that just about everyone in the West agreed that the Crow rate should be reopened and that the question should be looked at. If we look at the two largest umbrella groups in the West, the Western Agricultural Conference and the Prairie Farm Commodity Coalition, we see that they made it quite clear that the Government had to take action. We took action. The difference is that we knew that once we took action there would be the reactionaries, being both Parties in the Opposition, who would prefer to keep the status quo forever.

I think there is a realization amongst sensible people in the West that if we wanted to have a decent transportation system there had to be a reopening of the Crow. We reopened it and we brought about a solution after a great deal of consultation. The Gilson Commission participated in that consultation and came up with recommendations. We have had, I dare say, the courage to reopen this very difficult question when the NDP and the Tories would prefer to sit back and have no policy position but to say that forever nothing must change in Canada.

Mr. Broadbent: Madam Speaker, the position of this Party is very clear. We want improvement in our grain handling system but we do not want the cost of that improvement to be forced on the backs of our prairie farmers. That is the issue.

CONTRIBUTION BY RAILWAYS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): I should like to put a supplementary question to the Prime Minister. Is he aware that, as a result of the announcement made today, the cost to our farmers will be about $1 billion per year, while at the same time the CPR will continue to reap the benefits of the historic handouts that they got? If the Prime Minister acknowledges that that is the fact, then why is the Government of Canada using this method of improving our grain handling facilities? Why does the Government not make the CPR put up some money, or why does it not turn to some other sources of revenue to improve our railway system, instead of punishing prairie farmers?

• (1430)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, under the arrangements which were arrived at, both railways will be investing some $16.5 billion and all the taxpayers of Canada will be investing some $3.7 billion. When the Hon. Member projects the costs of the farmer to the end of the decade, he forgest that in the proposal we are making there will be a reopening of this and a rediscussion of the issue in Parliament after the 1985-86 year.

I wonder if it is not reasonable or if it is inconceivable, with taxpayers paying a very large sum of $3.7 billion—this is general taxpayers from all parts of Canada, from Nova Scotia to British Columbia—and with the railways, the CPR and the CNR, paying some $16.5 billion to improve the rail system, that western farmers should also be asked to look at some of their costs, not in terms of the historic bargain because they are being guaranteed what they received in the past, but whether they should not be asked in all fairness to look at some part of the increased costs over the future. That is the position the Government has taken. That is the position, I must say, which has been reasonably supported by many influential farmers' groups in the West.

Naturally there is no absolute consensus because it is a very difficult problem. Nobody likes to pay anything if he can get somebody else to pay. Once again, given that the transportation system had to be completely changed, and given that the Crow rate, as was recognized increasingly by farmers themselves and their organizations, had to be looked at again, somebody had to come forth with a solution and somebody had to come forth with negative criticisms. It was predictable who would bring up solutions: a Government which is intent on axing—on acting and on reforming—

Some Hon. Members: On axing!

Mr. Trudeau: —not an Opposition which is absolutely determined to be negative about everything.

Mr. Broadbent: I would be happy to send over to the Prime Minister a list of a half a dozen farm groups representing farmers on the Prairies who are opposed to this policy. I say to the Prime Minister that he should check his numbers as well. He will find out that under this agreement the CPR intends in fact to spend less in the coming fiscal year for our railway system than it spent in the recent past under the Crow. Instead of doing their share, they will be doing even less than their share, and we in this Party do not accept that.

REQUEST THAT FARMERS BE POLLED ON ISSUE

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, if the Prime Minister is really committed to living up to his promise in the House to do what the farmers want to have done in western Canada, will he not go to the farmers? Will he not take the proposal which he had his Minister reveale in Winnipeg today instead of in the House, put it into a plebiscite, send it out to every prairie farmer, and hear what the farmers of Canada have to say on it?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the Leader of the New Democratic Party is making two contradictory proposals. First he would want the Minister to be in the House today, and then he wants us to take it to the farmers.

Mr. Broadbent: Can't he do both?

Mr. Trudeau: The Minister has chosen to take it to the farmers, who have a more open mind on this subject than the Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party.

GOVERNMENT POSITION ON CREDIT LEGISLATION

Hon. John Wise (Elgin): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs I want to direct my question to the Minister of Finance. It is sad that on this so-called historic day we see, as a result of an act of the Government, another nail being driven into the coffin of many grain producers, regardless of whether they be in western Canada or eastern Canada.

We have here in Ottawa today a number of food producers from the Canadian Farmers' Survival Association. I think the reason these people are here today should be obvious to all of us. This Association wants to determine the official position of the Government with reference to the re-enactment or reinstatement of the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act, 1934. Would the Minister, on behalf of the Government, provide us with some information on what is the official Government position with respect to that particular Act?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I should like to take this opportunity to pay tribute to the contribution made to this debate by the Hon. Member for Lambton-Middlesex. He has brought this issue to the attention of the House and of Cabinet in a very forceful, systematic, and constructive way. Various proposals have been put forward, including the one by the Hon. Member for Lambton-Middlesex himself. The Government is examining all of these specific proposals. The Farmers' Survival Association, in particular, suggested the possibility of a number of amendments to the Bankruptcy Act. My colleague, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, is examining this proposal very attentively at the present time. I expect that my colleague will be in a position to make recommendations to his colleagues in the near future in that regard.

Mr. Wise: I appreciate the Minister's very reasonable response to that question.

PRIVATE MEMBER'S BILL

Hon. John Wise (Elgin): Madam Speaker, I recognize that the Hon. Member for Lambton-Middlesex in fact has a Private Member's Bill on this subject. I think the confusion arises from the fact that there have been a fair number of press reports in that part of the country indicating that it is the Government's intention to incorporate that Private Member's Bill into Bill C-12, respecting the Bankruptcy Act, which is now before the House. There have been very clear press reports indicating that that will be done. Could we obtain a concrete assurance from the Minister of Finance that in fact these press reports are true?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I can confirm that the Government has a great deal of sympathy for the type of approach proposed by the Hon. Member for Lambton-Middlesex. However, as I indicated, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs is examining the detailed implications of such a measure, and he is expected to report to Cabinet in the near future.

CROWSNEST PASS RATE—ESTABLISHMENT OF WORKING GROUP

Mr. Charles Mayer (Portage-Marquette): Madam Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of State for Economic Development to clarify some questions concerning the announcement made today in Winnipeg. It has already been pointed out that the announcement is a very complex one. Also I suggest to the Minister that it is incomplete in the sense that a working group, comprised of bureaucrats and producer organizations, will be put in place to decide how the money will be distributed to producers. Could the Minister enlighten us as to what kind of process that will be? Is the working group in place? When will it report? What are its terms of reference? What other areas of enlightenment can he shed on this very complex subject?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Minister of State for Economic Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Madam Speaker, concerning the issue of the process of payment, there are some details which remain to be worked out. When that has been accomplished, of course they will be made available. The over-all principles of payment as set forth in the Gilson Report—the broad lines, of course—have been adopted. Further details will follow in due course.

Mr. Mayer: It is very important that the Minister should understand that a very complex set of proposals has been put in front of us today and that the bureaucrats have had a long time to work at it and understand it.

PRODUCERS' UNDERSTANDING OF GOVERNMENT PROPOSALS

Mr. Charles Mayer (Portage-Marquette): Madam Speaker, could the Minister give us some assurance that producers throughout the country will have a chance not only to have equal input into the decision that will be made as to how to distribute the payments, but to understand the full implications of it before the Government implements the proposals it has put forward today?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Minister of State for Economic Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Madam Speaker, the Government in all areas of this kind has followed an elaborate process of consultation. I can assure the Hon. Member that the interest of all affected groups will be taken into account.

MULTIPLIER EFFECT OF FARM SPENDING

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Economic Development. Railway investment plans have been described by the Minister of Transport as a good deal for Canada since they provide a multiplier effect of just over $2 for every dollar invested by the railways. This is due to the jobs and investment created in the spin-off from that investment. Is the Minister aware that the multiplier effect from farm spending is between 3.5 and 7 times each dollar spent? Could he explain to the House why they chose to shortcut those spending plans instead of letting farm dollars go the usual route? They have shortcut them and moved them over to the railways to generate only $2 for every dollar, instead of allowing them to go through the regular channels and create 3.5 to 7 times each dollar spent. What kinds of offsetting proposals is the Government planning to overcome this reduction or restriction to the Canadian economy, which will probably amount to somewhere between $3 billion and $6 billion by the end of the decade?

• (1440)

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Minister of State for Economic Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Madam Speaker, I find that question somewhat convoluted.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Johnston: The fact is the investment by the railways is absolutely essential to increasing, in an effective and efficient manner, grain exports from the West, which I pointed out in my earlier response are anticipated to rise by ten million tonnes over the decade. For that grain to get to market, Madam Speaker, it is essential that these investments be made.

It is a fact that these investments will carry with them very beneficial industrial spin-offs that are of value, of course, to the whole country. Besides that, I come back to the point that the basic Crow benefit of $651 million will continue to be paid to the farmers of western Canada. This will permit them options to diversify further and to undertake other areas of agricultural activity, which may very well create a much greater and much more viable agricultural sector in the West and also in the food processing sector itself. Surely the Hon. Member, who comes from Saskatchewan, should be appreciative of the benefits that this proposal will have for the very constituents for whom he is now pleading a case, a case founded on shifting sand indeed.

Mr. Althouse: Madam Speaker, it is because I am from Saskatchewan that I am concerned. I am concerned as a Saskatchewan farmer, not just about my own constituents who will be affected by this move, but I am concerned also about employees of Massey-Ferguson, employees of fertilizer companies and so on. They are going to be laid off because there will not be as much money expended on that part of the economy since the money is being used in a less efficient method here.

REQUEST FOR OFFSETTING PROGRAMS TO MEET FARMERS' COSTS

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Madam Speaker, I am also concerned about some of the assumptions made by the media and by the ministry. It appears the whole thrust of the argument in the proposal by the Minister of Transport is that shipments out of the country will increase. But it has been assumed that shipping grain is like shipping coal, that the last units are the ones that make the most profit for the shipper. This is not the case with grain. What programs are being contemplated by the Government to take into account the fact that the last units of production in farming are the most expensive, and to account for the fact that we are already beyond the point of being able to pay for those last units? They are costing more than the market will return. What offsetting benefits or programs are being proposed to handle that aspect?

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Get him to repeat the question.

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Minister of State for Economic Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Madam Speaker, I thought I made it clear a few moments ago that Saskatchewan, with 60 per cent of grain exports, and with the additional potential of $2 billion in revenue at present day prices over the decade of which we are speaking will realize a benefit of approximately $1.2 billion in additional revenue because this initiative will ensure that the grain gets to market in an efficient manner.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Johnston: One of the complementary initiatives is, of course, the construction of something like 3,800 hopper cars.

An Hon. Member: Here we go again.

Mr. Johnston: If Hon. Members are interested in the answer, Madam Speaker, I would suggest that they give me an opportunity to provide the facts.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Johnston: The Hon. Member knows that is contained in the material before him. As the Prime Minister pointed out, what is being asked here is a participation in the cost in future. The Crow benefit to the tune of $651 million will continue to be paid to the prairie grain farmers.

An Hon. Member: Sit down.

Mr. Johnston: It is these additional costs in the future which they are being invited to share in with the other taxpayers of Canada.

Mr. Deans: They are not being invited to share at all. It is like inviting the old age pensioners to share.

NATIONAL REVENUE

GARNISHEEING OF SMALL BUSINESS ACCOUNTS

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Revenue. The collection departments of the National Revenue offices across Canada, certainly of British Columbia, are garnisheeing 100 per cent of accounts receivable of small businesses even though that will mean those businesses cannot pay their employees. When did that directive go out from his office, and why?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, if accounts of certain businesses were garnisheed, it was certainly not done because of any specific instructions from the Department of National Revenue. These businesses were clearly defaulting on payments, either for income tax or deductions at source, so it is not a matter of specific instructions but of the administration of our tax laws.

[English]

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Madam Speaker, we know the Government is short of money, but is it a small business policy of the Government now to shut down businesses in order to extract every last ounce of blood it can from those small businesses?

Is it part of the Minister's policy to send out third person directives without the knowledge of the business affected by those directives?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, I fail to see why the Hon. Member insists on the credibility of his statements, I explained to him that when it was necessary to garnishee the bank account of a company or person, it was because the company or person had seriously defaulted on income tax payments. If a person or company has defaulted on income tax payments, the other taxpayers who do pay their taxes every month are in fact paying as well for those who do not, and the Hon. Member should realize this.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ROLE OF CANADA IN MIDDLE EAST PEACE PROCESS

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. The President of Egypt met with the House of Commons and Senate Foreign Affairs Committees this morning. He had discussions with the Prime Minister yesterday. The President discussed the Canadian role in the peace process in the Middle East, and his Minister of State has said that Canada should play a more active role.

Will the Prime Minister tell us whether he agrees that Canada should play a more active role in the Middle East peace process? If he does, how does the Prime Minister see us playing a more active role?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, for the time being I think the preferred option would be to support President Reagan's initiative of last September, which is well known to the Hon. Member, I am sure. We have indicated our support for that as well as for other options. If the Hon. Member would urge us to be more active, I suppose we could support that option more actively and appeal for the help of the Opposition to make it appear to be a united House of Commons which is encouraging President Reagan to follow up on his proposal.

Mr. Crosbie: Madam Speaker, if the Prime Minister needs any help from us, we have already stated our support for President Reagan's initiative.

CONSTRUCTION OF ISRAELI SETTLEMENTS ON OCCUPIED LANDS

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Madam Speaker, the President of Egypt said this morning that Canada could help influence Israel because we have many connections there. I presume he has asked the Prime Minister to increase our activities in that direction to get a Middle East settlement. Could the Prime Minister tell the House whether we are opposing further construction by Israel of settlements in the Gaza Strip and on the West Bank? Can the Prime Minister tell us what representations we have made? Does the Prime Minister think that the peace process can proceed without the freezing of those settlements by Israel? What is our position on that?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, our position has been stated several times by the Secretary of State for External Affairs. It is to the effect that we do oppose the settlement policy on the West Bank. It is part of Resolution 242 which we support, that all lands occupied by Israel should be evacuated, and that includes the West Bank. We have stated those positions publicly. We have stated them also to the Government of Israel.

My inclination at this stage would be to feel that our influence—our joint influence, since the Tory Party is joining the Government on this—would be to increase our pressure on the Americans to carry through with their plan, because I do not feel that it is very likely that we will get the present Government of Israel to change its settlements policy.

ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

GOVERNMENT'S PROPOSAL FOR TRANSPORTATION OF WESTERN GRAIN—CONSEQUENCES FOR QUEBEC FARMERS

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Economic Development. Considering the concern raised by the new Western grain shipping plan, especially among Quebec farmers, could the Minister, in view of today's statement, inform the House whether he held prior consultations with the Quebec Farm Producers' Union or other farm organizations in Quebec to find out whether today's proposal would be acceptable to Quebec's agricultural industry?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Minister of State for Economic Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Madam Speaker, I have the impression that my colleague, the Hon. Minister of Transport, had consultations throughout the province and across Canada. In fact, he is well aware of the concern mentioned by the Hon. Member for Joliette. In any case, Madam Speaker, I would like to point out that this concern is ill-founded and although a number of representatives of the Parti Québécois have tried to dramatize the situation across the province, we have been given the assurance, by independent studies, that there is no reason for people to be concerned about this policy.

STATEMENT BY MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE—INQUIRY WHETHER AGRICULTURAL PRODUCERS UNION OF QUEBEC WAS CONSULTED

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Madam Speaker, I have also heard the Members of the Quebec Government expressing their concern, but I have also received letters from representatives of the Quebec Farm Producers' Union who were worried and were demanding positive action on the part of Members of the Government. Therefore, I am just asking the Minister whether he can provide some clarification, since the Minister of Agriculture in a letter to the Quebec Farm Producers' Union has stated that the apprehended negative effects would and should disappear as a result of the statement made today by the Minister of Transport. I am just asking the Minister whether he can give the House the assurance that the Quebec Farm Producers' Union will be able to set aside its concern as a result of this announcement or whether the Government did not bother to consult the Quebec Farmers' Association before making this statement?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Minister of State for Economic Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Madam Speaker, I certainly do hope that today's announcement will lay to rest all previous concern. However, I may add that steps have been taken to reassure Quebec farmers, and that the Canadian Livestock Board is there to monitor the new policy. As I said before, independent studies have been made which gave us the assurance that there is no problem, that no markets and no incomes will be lost, and so on. In any case, we have taken steps to set up a monitoring mechanism to determine exactly what the effects will be, not only in Quebec but also in the Atlantic Provinces.

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

CHRYSLER CORPORATION—MINISTER'S NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. For the last few months he has purportedly been doing battle with Canadian Chrysler Corporation, only to wring out of them a lot of hollow promises and no action. Today he is reported to have said that he will begin to play hard ball with Chrysler, at long last. What specific assurances can he give the House and the Canadian UAW workers that no more jobs will be lost, either to those who are on lay-off or who have existing jobs?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, I had a meeting with the UAW yesterday in which we discussed a number of possibilities to assist me in my negotiations with Chrysler. I would hope that the Hon. Member would be as positive about these negotiations as the UAW was yesterday.

Mr. Blackburn: One can hardly be optimistic if one looks at the Minister's track record so far. It has been a dismal failure.

AMOUNT OF DUTY REMISSION

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Madam Speaker, when one considers that both Chrysler and AMC, through the remission of duties, owe the Canadian Government and the taxpayers about $300 million, can the Minister consider this to be hardball? What will he do to make sure that either the remissions are paid or Chrysler lives up to the original agreement?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, with respect to the preamble to the Hon. Member's question, we have obviously been doing something right. There are over 43,000 workers in Chrysler plants in the United States who are unemployed and only some 240 in Canada. Obviously the Government of Canada and Chrysler Canada have done something positive.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lumley: Second, with respect to duty remission and the Government of Canada fulfilling its obligations, this will be undertaken during negotiations with the Chrysler Corporation.

CROWSNEST PASS RATE—RELATIONSHIP OF FREIGHT RATES TO GRAIN PRICES

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Since the price of grain is at the 1972-73 level in terms of purchasing power, and since the Economic Outlook Conference did not predict any foreseeable increase in the next year or two, why has the Government totally rejected the proposal whereby any possible increase in freight rates would be geared to increases in the price of grain and instead took the other course, which was simply slapping on an increase regardless of an increase in grain?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Minister of State for Economic Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Madam Speaker, I did not hear the question.

Mr. Korchinski: Madam Speaker, I will repeat the question. Since the Economic Outlook Conference did not predict any foreseeable increase in the price of grain and since the purchasing power is at the 1972-73 level, why has the Government totally ignored the proposal whereby the increase of any freight rate would be related to the price of grain?

Mr. Johnston: Madam Speaker, I will infer that that question is addressed to me. I did not hear anyone say that it was addressed to me. I will assume so since I am taking questions on the subject.

As I pointed out earlier, the present wheat freight rates per tonne represent on average less than 5 per cent of the price of a tonne of wheat and, of course, that is not the case with respect to all other commodities. That is not a fair freight rate under the circumstances. The regime which has been implemented and phased in, which maintains the Crow benefit payment to farmers in a phased-in fashion, seems to me to take into account the fact of the current economic situation with respect to grain production. Therefore, over the period, one would expect to see an increase in the value of those crops, quite substantially beyond even the $2 billion which would be a result of a ten million tonne increase at current price levels.

Even then, at current prices, as I pointed out in an earlier answer, the freight cost would only represent 14 per cent of the value of the wheat sold. So, it strikes me as very fair indeed to the producer.

APPLICATION OF FINANCIAL RESTRAINT PROGRAM—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Madam Speaker, may I ask the Minister why the Government totally ignored its own six and five program and, instead of sticking to a six and five increase, it slapped on a 100 per cent increase in the next ten years?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Minister of State for Economic Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Madam Speaker, I think the exchange that has taken place here today illustrates full well the importance of the initiative that has been taken. The facts that have been brought out on the floor of the House by myself and the Prime Minister on this side clearly demonstrate, I believe, that we should be able to look forward to the support of all Parties in terms of moving this very important initiative through the House—

Mr. Blenkarn: Answer the question.

Mr. Johnston: —and particularly out of committee in a timely manner. I look forward to see the Hon. Member participate in those deliberations.

Oral Questions

APPLICATION TO RATES OF RESTRAINT GUIDELINES

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Madam Speaker, I want to repeat the question asked by the Hon. Member for Mackenzie. I am addressing it to the Minister responsible for Economic Development. Why did the Government not stick to its six and five program when it came to increases in the rates?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Minister of State for Economic Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Madam Speaker, the fact is—

Mr. Blenkarn: Answer it.

Mr. Johnston: Let us look at the facts. They are that the basic Crow benefit, the gap in 1982-83, is being paid to the grain producers and, in fact, there is no inflationary increase in the current period. The increase next year will be 3 per cent which is lower than 6 per cent or 5 per cent; the following year it will be 3 per cent, which is lower than 6 per cent or 5 per cent; and the following year it will be 3 per cent, which is lower than 6 per cent or 5 per cent—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Johnston: It would be wonderful if that is the rate of inflation at that time. In fact, beginning in 1986, the grain producers will be required to pick up the first six percentage points. Let us hope that it is not that high if our campaign is successful, as it appears to be. But they will be required to pick up the first six percentage points which has an historical basis in terms of Canadian inflationary experience. Therefore, I would suggest that the program is very much in keeping—

Madam Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member for Moose Jaw.

• (1500)

EFFECT OF ACREAGE PAYMENT ON GRAIN GROWERS

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. I am rather confused, because the Government's own documents indicate that between 1982-83 to 1985-86, a four year period, the net increase to the grain producer will be from $4.89 a tonne to $9.35 a tonne. In less than four years there will be an increase of 91.20 per cent.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Neil: That does not sound like six and five should.

The other question I have is with respect to the proposed acreage payment. Has the Government conducted a study to determine what effect this acreage payment will have on the grain producer? I understand that the acreage payment program is to be spread around all the producers and the impact will be upon those people who presently benefit from the Crow rate. Has a study been done on this aspect, and will the Minister agree to table such a study?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Minister of State for Economic Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Madam Speaker, I am not in a position to say specifically what studies are available on the subject, but I can assure the Hon. Member that there was an enormous amount of deliberation and study by everyone, including Mr. Gilson, in terms of proposing a regime which would have a beneficial effect not only on the grain producer but also on the whole agricultural economy in western Canada, with the capacity of that economy to diversify and also with the incentive, if you like, which will be injected in that economy, which will enable the rail transportation system itself to be modernized and to become more effective and efficient. That is the underlying reason for this initiative, which is widely supported by everyone familiar with the bottlenecks and difficulties which have arisen in the past with respect to the transportation of grain in western Canada.

ELECTORAL BOUNDARIES READJUSTMENT ACT

TABLING OF REPORT OF COMMISSION FOR THE PROVINCE OF NEW BRUNSWICK, 1983

Madam Speaker: In accordance with Section 19 of the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act, Chapter E-2 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1970, I have the duty to table an authentic copy of the report of the Electoral Boundaries Commission for the province of New-Brunswick, 1983.

As Hon. Members will know, Standing Order 46(4) provides that the reports laid before the House in accordance with an Act of Parliament are deemed to have been permanently referred to the Committee designated by the member tabling the report. In this case, I suggest that the report be deferred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections. However, the statute under which the Electoral Boundaries Commission submit their reports to the House determines the procedure to be followed with regard to these reports.

DISPOSITION OF STRIKING COMMITTEE REPORT

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, last week the Hon. Member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) asked me if we would be designating an Opposition day this week and I told him that I would do so at the beginning of this week. I would now like to designate Friday of this week as an Opposition day.

[Translation]

At the same time, since it is important for the Committees to become operational as soon as possible in accordance with the new rules, the Hon. Member for London-East (Mr. Turner) yesterday tabled a report concerning the striking of the Standing Committees of the House. I would like to inform my colleagues in the House that we intend to move that this report be concurred in as soon as possible, namely tomorrow, immediately after the oral question period.

[English]

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, earlier this week the Government House Leader (Mr. Pinard) said that on Thursday we would be discussing the third reading stage of the legislation now before us. Is he saying that he will be giving notice to concur in the Striking Committee report, to take effect some time next week?

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: No, Madam Speaker. What I have said is that on Wednesday, that is tomorrow, we shall move for concurrence in the report after the oral question period. The report was tabled yesterday and notice was given yesterday as well. This requires a notice of 48 hours and we shall therefore be able to move for concurrence on Wednesday, which is tomorrow. Since this concerns the striking of the Committees, I do not believe that any other subject can be more important for Hon. Members on both sides of the House. I also believe that it is urgent that this report be debated. We want it to receive concurrence as soon as possible and we believe that this can be done tomorrow by allowing Members on both sides of the House to speak on a day normally set aside for private members' business.

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: Naturally, when notice is given it will become a Government Order. I am just trying to ascertain with some degree of certainty whether it is correct that Thursday will be set aside for debate on the third reading stage of the legislation now before us, the Old Age Security legislation, that Wednesday will be a normal Private Members' day, and that Friday of this week will be an allotted day. Am I correct in those assumptions?

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, as I have just stated, tomorrow, we shall debate, if necessary and if the Opposition so wishes, the report of the Striking Committee which was tabled yesterday by the Hon. Member for London-East (Mr. Turner). We gave notice of our intention yesterday and we plan to move for concurrence in this report tomorrow. Of course, if the report is approved without debate, we shall proceed to private members' business. However, if the report is debated for an hour, there will be one hour less for private members' business.

I would also like to confirm that, on Thursday, we shall proceed with third reading of Bill C-131 and that, as I have already indicated, Friday will be an allotted day.

I hope this time everything is clear.

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: Unfortunately, it is abundantly clear. What the Government House Leader is saying, knowing full well that we intend to debate that report, is that we either shut up or we do not get our Private Members' day.

Some Hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Nielsen: The whole day is taken up with Private Members' Business. I can give him notice now, as I have done before, that we will be debating that report. He knows that fact, yet he comes in here and steals the Private Members' day under the new rules. He pleaded for some acts of good faith on the part of Hon. Members throughout the House. I do not consider his action in trying to pre-empt Private Members' day in this underhanded fashion to be any display of good faith on his part or on the Government's part.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Pinard: I am very much surprised by the reaction of the Hon. Member for Yukon. The reason the report of the Striking Committee in relation to the Standing Committees was tabled only yesterday was because of the very request of the Hon. Member for Yukon in the Striking Committee. That report could have been tabled earlier because the Committee was ready to table that report any time last week. It was at his request that we waited until the last ten sitting days, in conformity with the new Standing Orders, to table that report.

On the very same Striking Committee, the Hon. Member for Yukon was the one asking that, as early as possible after the tabling on that report, we move concurrence in that report so that we—

Mr. Nielsen: That is not true.

Mr. Pinard: —could allow the committees to work. That was your own request.

Mr. Nielsen: That is not true.

Mr. Pinard: There is nothing else than the functioning of committees that interests more Private Members. That is why we are calling the motion tomorrow for debate. Therefore, I am surprised by that reaction. We want the committees to work as early as possible.

Mr. Wilson: Twisting the truth.

Mr. Pinard: I have been very courteous today in rising 24 hours in advance and letting my colleague know that we intended to do that. Theoretically, we could have waited until the last minute. However, I wanted to give him fair notice. That is an additional reason I am surprised by his negative reaction.

I am telling him now that we want to allow the committee system to work as early as possible. That is in line with and consequential to the request made by the Hon. Member himself. He is free to allow this report to go without further debate because, after all, it is the first time since I have been a Member of Parliament in the last nine years that a Party has forced that kind of Striking Committee to meet. It will be the first time in many years that a political party will have forced debate on the report of such a Striking Committee.

What I am saying is that what we are doing is proper. We are giving proper notice and we thought and still think that we are doing only what the Hon. Member wanted us to do.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, that is a deliberate distortion of the truth. What I requested in the final meeting of the Striking Committee, and the Government House Leader well knows this, is only that the report be introduced on the last possible sitting day, which was last Monday. There was no request whatsoever to bring on debate on that report as soon as possible. I would have expected that to occur, but I would not have expected it to occur at the expense of a whole Private Members' day; and that is what the House Leader is attempting to steal from us.

I am sure that if he had been following the normal parliamentary courtesies he would have expressed his intentions, which no doubt he knew of when he met with the Striking Committee and when he discussed this matter with myself and the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans), the Acting House Leader for the New Democratic Party. But he did not do that, knowing full well as he sat there what he intended to do this week. I find that totally not in keeping with the kind of good faith that he has been asking us to display and which we think we have displayed in the adoption of these experimental rules. Indeed, I find his action most underhanded and despicable in attempting to undermine Private Members in this way.

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I fail to understand why the Hon. Member gets so upset. After all, if he reads the recorded notes of the Committee which met last week, in the third meeting he himself asked the Chairman of that Committee, the Government Whip, when he intended to move concurrence of that report. I remember very well that the Government Whip answered him, "As early as possible after the tabling of the report". It was after that answer that the Hon. Member for the Yukon suggested and pressed very much in the Committee that in fact we do not table that report before the last allowed day, which was yesterday.

Today, all he is getting is what he asked for. For other reasons—and I do not want to impute any motives to him—he seems to have different views today. What I am saying is that we did not know last week he would react this way when he was pressing for us to table the report yesterday and that we move concurrence in that report as early as possible to allow the committees to work in the House of Commons and in the parliamentary system. Now must we conclude that he is not interested in seeing the committees work?

He is saying that tomorrow is Private Members' day. We have had a very hard time to find three Bills to be dealt with for Private Members' Business tomorrow. That is a fact, because colleagues on his own side are not ready to proceed. The committee system is very important for Private Members. If they want to debate it, why do they want to use Government time to do it? We have three days a week, as I explained last week, to deal with urgent and important business for the Government; therefore, our intent is still there. But if he has very strong reasons and he is able to convince himself that he is right, changing his mind today, then we might consider dealing with this matter some time next week. I think it is unfortunate that we have to wait that long to have the committee system work.

I would have expected that the Hon. Member would have facilitated, in a spirit of parliamentary reform, the adoption of that report, because once again it is the first time in many, many years that the House Leader of the Official Opposition forces a debate on the report of a Striking Committee.

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, it is not the Official Opposition which is forcing a debate on that report, it is the intransigence of the Government House Leader in his unreasonable treatment of the recommendations of the Special Committee which intended flexibility in numbers on those committees but have been required to submit to the diktats of the Government House Leader.

When he speaks of the actions of the Government Whip with respect to the timing of the tabling of the report and the debating of it, he will well recall that when I asked the Government Whip that question as Chairman of the Striking Committee, he did not answer but looked over to the Government House Leader in order to get his answer.

No one suspected that any attempt would be made to steal Private Members' days in this underhanded way. What the Government should do if it wants to treat Parliamentarians fairly—there are all kinds of Private Members on this side who were not canvassed and who have Bills that can be debated tomorrow—and if he wants to act in good faith, let him designate Friday for the debating of the report of the Striking Committee.

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, I listened to this exchange with some interest. I want to offer the comment that perhaps it is the kind of consideration that ought to take place at a meeting that could be called between the House Leaders in order to try to find an alternative that would satisfy even the noisy Tory in the back row.

I think it would be better, in the interests of the civility of the House, if we did not have the debate tomorrow. I do not see any reason why we should, in all fairness, create a conflict unnecessarily, and quite obviously we are going to have that conflict. I do not think that will facilitate the implementation and good working of the new House rules.

So keeping that in mind, I would like to ask the Government House Leader and the Opposition House Leader if it might not be more appropriate for us to discuss this—

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): It would have been.

Mr. Deans: Well, we can still do it. We could attempt to find an alternative date on which to have the debate as quickly as possible, perhaps even to agree on a time limit in order to have the debate dealt with in a reasonable way and not have the animosity that is quite evidently growing in the House of Commons continue.

Mr. Lewis: Madam Speaker, I enter this debate in support of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen). The Government House Leader made the point in reply that they were having great difficulty finding Private Members to bring forward their Bills.

I would remind the Government House Leader that during Question Period, in reply to questions from the Hon. Member for Elgin (Mr. Wise) with respect to amendments to the Bankruptcy Act put forward by the Hon. Member for Lambton-Middlesex (Mr. Ferguson), which are going to be debated tomorrow, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) gave him great credit. Great credit does not go anywhere unless the Private Members' hour can go forward. Therefore, the Government House Leader is eliminating the Private Members' hour during which there is going to be consideration of a Bill which will help the farmers of Canada.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. MAZANKOWSKI—ANNOUNCEMENT OF GOVERNMENT POLICY OUTSIDE HOUSE

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Today once again we have witnessed a callous affront to this institution of Parliament by a very autocratic Government. This is the fourth occasion that a very important matter of substantive Government policy having to do with very major changes to Western grain transportation has been announced outside the House.

I remind you, Madam Speaker, that such similar announcements were made back on February 8, 1982, June 28, 1982, August 4, 1982, and again today we had a very, very substantive announcement.

Once again Parliament has been circumvented. I believe major announcements of Government policy should be made in this House of Commons. The fact of the matter is that the issue itself is very complex. It has raised a number of important questions, questions which Members on all sides of the House should have an opportunity to clarify, but the answers that we received to questions on this very important subject in the House today have been far from satisfactory and far from complete.

I draw your attention to Standing Order 18(4) at page 13, where is outlined, as it is even in the Business of the House, the procedure for calling for Statements by Ministers. Just to reflect on that for a moment, Standing Order 18(4) provides:

> (4) On Statements by Ministers, as listed in section (3) of this Standing Order, a Minister of the Crown may make a short factual announcement or statement of government policy. A spokesman for each of the parties in opposition to the government may comment briefly thereon and Members may be permitted to address questions thereon to the Minister. The Speaker shall limit the time for such proceedings as he or she deems fit.

That is a very, very important function of the parliamentary process, a function which has been denied as a result of the actions of this Government.

Madam Speaker, I draw this matter to your attention and I wish you would take it under advisement. It is not the first time that I have raised it, and I will continue to raise it because it does impair our ability to discharge our responsibilities as effective Members of this House of Commons.

• (1520)

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member has raised a very interesting question. I congratulate him on the way he raised it and on the way he has explained it. Unfortunately, the Standing Order to which he has referred indicates that there is a discretion that can be utilized by a Minister. A Minister does not have to make a statement, but "may" make a statement. I quote from page 13 Standing Order 18(4):

> —a Minister of the Crown may make a short factual announcement or statement of government policy. That is consistent with the previous Standing Order 15.

Many rulings have been made by the Chair to the effect that there is that discretion. On the other hand, I agree with the Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) that more often in this House we should witness statements made by Ministers, allowing a short, controlled debate on the subject of policy raised in the statement.

Unfortunately, at least since I have been dealing with House business, first as Parliamentary Secretary and then as House Leader, there have been demonstrated abuses with regard to the length of time used in dealing with comment on the statement, causing the Government often to lose a whole day which could be used to deal with urgent business. Possibly we could agree at some point. It would be possible for any reasonable spokesman from the Opposition to negotiate in advance a reasonable length of time for questions and remarks following such a statement in order to allow the Government to proceed with additional business on the day the statement is made. It would then be possible for Ministers to make more statements in the House. I will be open-minded to that kind of discussion or agreement.

For the time being, unfortunately, we have on one hand Ministers who do not want to spend a whole day in the House on a statement while the Government has a pressing necessity to deal with urgent business. On the other hand, we would like to allow the Opposition the opportunity to express its views and to ask questions.

I am not saying that this opportunity does not exist even when Ministers make statements outside the House. Questions can be asked in Question Period of Ministers that particular day or on days following. This Friday will be an Opposition day. The Opposition will have the opportunity of raising this matter in their motion. Nevertheless, I would be open-minded toward allowing more statements, provided we had a commitment or agreement from the other side not to abuse the length of time allotted to asking questions of Minister who make statements. I look forward to discussing that with my counterparts in the near future, if they are still willing to negotiate in good faith.

Finally, in so far as tomorrow is concerned, I admit that I am much surprised by the reaction of the Hon. Member for Yukon. I was expecting him to applaud. Since he is not applauding but shouting and crying, I will reconsider with pleasure—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The Minister is not now discussing the point of order raised by the Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski). I must remind him that if he is rising now, he must discuss the point or order.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: You are right, Madam Speaker, but I just wanted to make things perfectly clear. With regard to the business for tomorrow, the decision is not final. I am prepared to reconsider my suggestion and to postpone this debate until the following Wednesday so that following consultations we might come to an agreement. There have been consultations in the past but they did not bring any positive results. I hope this time, that the results will be more encouraging but if such is not the case, we shall proceed on the following Wednesday to the striking of Committees and the adoption of the report.

[English]

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Madam Speaker, I am very happy to hear the Government House Leader say that he will reconsider the matter and allow us a normal Private Member's day tomorrow. I thought I heard him say, however, that he may be disposed to carry the notice to concur on to the following Wednesday which, of course, would be just as objectionable. However, we can discuss that.

In any event, I was going to alert the Chair to the possibility of a point of order tomorrow questioning the ability of the Government to displace Private Members' day, now Wednesday, by this device. Quite frankly, I very much doubt that the Government has the prerogative of displacing Private Members' day by the use of this kind of device. While I attribute the best of motives to the Government House Leader in changing his mind, I am very doubtful that it could have been done in the first place and I would have raised that point tomorrow.

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, I am glad there is a reconsideration for tomorrow. I want to raise—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. We are discussing two matters at the same time. I am a little bit uneasy about orderly discussion in the House. I want first to rule on the point of order brought forward by the Hon. Member for Vegreville. We can then continue discussion of Government business.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Madam Speaker, may I be heard on this point of order?

Madam Speaker: I do not think the House needs to be further enlightened on the point of order.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: It is quite clear in the Standing Order which deals with Statements by Ministers that the Standing Order is permissive, but does not place an obligation on the Government to make statements of Government policies under Statements by Ministers. It is purely permissive.

I appreciate the point of order brought forward by the Hon. Member for Vegreville. He probably feels very much aggrieved by the situation. However, it is the choice of the Government to make its statements at whatever time the Government feels it must.

DISPOSITION OF STRIKING COMMITTEE REPORT

Madam Speaker: Now that we have cleared this particular point of order, I see that it is the desire of Hon. Members to return to the discussion of Government business. In the interest of what appears to be a desire to come to some kind of agreement, I will allow the House to return to that discussion and I will recognize for that purpose the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans), who had the floor before I ruled.

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, I had wanted to raise a point very similar to the point raised by the Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski). I want to make one comment, if I may, on the statement made by the Government House Leader.

The Government House Leader said in response to the question about the making of statements that if he could get agreement for a short debate on Statements, he might consider implementing once again the practice of having Ministers make statements.

I consider that to be a direct attack on the Speaker. It is quite clearly the responsibility of the Speaker to determine the length of time to be allocated for reply to statements made by any Minister in the House. It is not the responsibility of the House Leader, it is not the responsibility of the Opposition House Leader and it is not my responsibility to set up in advance some agreement as to how long will be taken. It is directly the responsibility of the Speaker to determine when there has been sufficient discussion on any statement made.

I therefore suggest, in the interests of the people who are most affected by the actions being taken by the Government today, that a Minister of the Crown should stand in his place today and make a statement with regard to the changes to the Crow rate. It should be done now. I have nothing further to say on the other matter.

Madam Speaker: I did want to comment on what the Minister said about possible abuses of the time allocated to Statements by Ministers. I was distracted by the number of Members who were eager to take the floor at that time. I think it is fair to remind the House that the time taken under Statements by Ministers by the different intervenors in the House is determined by the Speaker. The Speaker goes by rule-of-thumb. Depending on how much time the Minister takes, the other statements are more or less related to that period.

The Speaker has interrupted some Members who have taken more time than the Minister had taken to make the statement. If my memory is correct, we have not had any exceptions to that. Questions then follow. That, too, is regulated at the discretion of the Speaker. We have had periods of two hours for questions, including the statement. Depending on the number of Members who wanted to ask questions, I did not think at that time that was excessive. However, if the time to be allocated to these kinds of statements is to be discussed and negotiated between the Parties, I think that would make my job even easier.

• (1530)

[Translation]

Mr. Claude-André Lachance (Rosemont): Madam Speaker, I would like to draw your attention to a comment made during the previous debate by the Member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen), a comment he may wish to withdraw, since it is more or less a false accusation, and I do not think that is in keeping with the Rules of the House. He said that the Members on the Committee had bowed to the wishes of the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) in the debate on the number of Members now on the Committees and on the Striking Committee's report. I should like to point out to the Hon. Member and to Members on both sides of the House, that the Committee has decided not to intervene in this difference of opinion between the Parliamentary House Leaders, and if I misunderstood his comments, perhaps the Hon. Member would like to withdraw them.

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, in the best interest of the work of that committee, I think I should make it abundantly clear that if the Member has that interpretation of what I said, it is quite wrong. I was referring throughout to the Striking Committee and not to the Special Committee of which he is a member.

Mr. Cosgrove: Madam Speaker, a propos of the discussion between the Government House leader and the House leader for Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition, I would like to point out that the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn), a Conservative Member, indicated in Parliament today, presumably with the approval of his House leader, the agreement of that Party to deal expeditiously with Bill C-142, which was introduced in order to bring some security to depositors in organizations covered by the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation. It is impossible for this Government to deal with that item and send it on to committee if we cannot even agree to find a forum under which to debate the issue of striking those committees. I would have thought that in the interest of those people looking for additional security—

Madam Speaker: Order. The Hon. Minister is into debate. I think we all realize that the Parties now want to negotiate some kind of solution to that particular problem. I understand the Hon. Minister's desire to have that report debated promptly, but I think it will probably happen if the Parties agree.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, in his comments, the Member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) doubted the Government had the right to put motions on Wednesday, since it is a Private Members' Day. I want to make it clear that we do not agree at all with this view, that a motion can be put on a Wednesday just as on any other day on which Government Orders are dealt with, that there is no basis for this view and especially, there is nothing in the Rules or parliamentary procedure to support this reasoning. Therefore, we reserve the right to put our motions whenever it is necessary to do so. I agreed to postpone the debate on the Striking Committee's report until a later date, probably not later than next Wednesday, because the Hon. Member's reaction took me by surprise. We shall discuss the matter later, and I hope we will be able to agree, and otherwise, we reserve the right to call this motion on a Wednesday, either tomorrow or next week.

Madam Speaker: The Hon. Member did not raise the question. He said that he was thinking of raising it tomorrow, because he had some doubts as to the Government's right to cancel the Private Members' hour, but he did not really raise the question.

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: That is entirely correct, and I should hasten also to correct the misapprehension the Government House leader might have with respect to what I said. I do not question the Government's right to give notice on a Wednesday; what I question is the right to allow a Government order of the day, such as that notice would trigger, to displace a private Bill.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. Let us not have that debate now. We will have it in due course.

Mr. Nielsen: It was not a debate; I was simply correcting him.

Madam Speaker: Yes. Well, it is a hypothetical situation for the time being.

Mr. Nielsen: His statement was not.

Mr. Taylor: Madam Speaker, the Government House leader mentioned it was difficult to find Members who wanted their private Bills brought forward. I would like to remind the Hon. Member that Bill C-628, an Act to amend the Criminal Code concerning computer crime, has been on the books for almost two years, and I have almost begged the Minister of Justice and other people involved to bring forth this Bill. So certainly there are Bills ready to go on Private Members' day and I thought the Government House leader should know that.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: I shall remember that, Madam Speaker. The problem is that the Hon. Member may be ready but not necessarily on the day we want the Bill to be debated. Of course, the Bill is ready to be debated, but when we call Members, sometimes we are told: Yes, I am ready, but not tomorrow, I would rather do it next week or the week after. We had quite a few problems getting ready for last Wednesday, and I am told that this has also been the case for tomorrow's sitting. So I repeat what I said, and my statement stands.

[English]

Mr. Taylor: Madam Speaker, the Government House Leader implies I have been called and had turned down the opportunity. I have never been called up. I am ready to go any time I am called. I am begging to go; it is an important Bill.

Madam Speaker: I am sure the Hon. President of the Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) will take note of that.

PETITIONS

MR. CULLEN—THE PLIGHT OF THE PETROCHEMICAL INDUSTRY IN SARNIA

Hon. Bud Cullen (Sarnia-Lambton): Madam Speaker, I have a petition signed by 11,000 of my constituents. The wording of the petition is theirs, and is as follows:

To the Honourable the House of Commons in Parliament assembled.

The Petition of the undersigned humbly sheweth tha. the Petrochemical industry is in trouble in Sarnia and in Canada because of the federal Government's Petrochemical Feedstock Taxation Policy; and that thousands of jobs are in jeopardy in both the short and the long term; and

That Canada's petrochemical industry—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Cullen: It is hard to hear, what I am saying. The petition goes on:

—is a major manufacturing sector contributing to Canada's economy, and Canada needs it; and

That the Chemical Valley in Sarnia is one of Canada's most important petrochemical centres; and

That Sarnia and all its citizens are concerned for the future of the industry, their community, their families, and indeed the country; and

That there is inequality in the costs of petrochemical feedstocks between the industry in Eastern Canada and Western Canada.

Madam Speaker: Order. I am afraid the Hon. Member is taking some latitude in what is allowed in presenting a Petition. The title of the Petition should be read out in the House and that is about all.

Mr. Cullen: Madam Speaker, I appreciate that censure. The problem I have is that the wording was prepared by them and is not mine. The wording is that of the petitioners who felt they were complying with the rules. I think they might feel they were shortchanged if I had not read it all, so I will just finish up with the prayer.

Madam Speaker: The Hon. Member, who knows the rules, might have advised them of what they could do.

Mr. Cullen: Madam Speaker, I agree that is right, and next time I am sure they will ask me. I thank you for the admonition. The prayer is:

As in duty bound your petitioners will ever pray.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

MR. HERBERT—CENTRAL AMERICA—REQUEST THAT CANADA ESTABLISH A SOCIAL AID POLICY

Mr. Hal Herbert (Vaudreuil): Madam Speaker, I should like to table a petition on behalf of the Development and Peace Movement of the Vaudreuil-Soulanges area. It is signed by 3,424 of my constituents who urge the Canadian Government to denounce human rights violations in El Salvador, Guatemala, Nicaragua and Honduras, to develop its own economic assistance policy with regard to Central American countries, and to support the organizations which champion human rights in those countries.

ELECTORAL BOUNDARIES READJUSTMENT ACT

AMENDMENT TO CHANGE THE NAME OF THE ELECTORAL DISTRICT OF DAUPHIN

Mr. Laverne Lewycky (Dauphin) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-672, to change the name of the electoral district of Dauphin.

• (1540)

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I see the Hon. Member wants to make a brief statement. I am sorry, but we have passed that time and he did not rise. Will the House agree to allow the Hon. Member to make a brief statement?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Lewycky: Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I have just a brief comment on the background of the Bill.

Both the village and the rural municipality of Dauphin were incorporated in 1898, and subsequently gave their name to the Dauphin federal constituency which was created in 1903. Since its inception, the constituency of Dauphin has sent nine Members of Parliament to Ottawa, and I am honoured to serve the constituency in this the year of its eightieth anniversary.

The former village of Dauphin is now a thriving town of 10,000 people, and given its rich history of representation in Ottawa and its continued role as a major geographic, economic and cultural centre, it is important that the name "Dauphin" remain as part of the title of the constituency. Some 110 miles northwest of the town of Dauphin is the second largest town in the riding, Swan River. In its own right, Swan River is an important geographic, economic and communications centre, acting as both a focal point for the surrounding region and as means of access to Manitoba's North. Incorporated in 1908, the town has since experienced continuous population growth, in spite of the fact that there has been a move from rural to urban areas.

Historically, Swan River has been part of the Dauphin constituency. It is so under the current Parliament and under the new boundary commission proposal, and it remains in the Dauphin constituency. Therefore, given Swan River's distance from the riding's other major centre, Dauphin, and the need to emphasize its importance within the riding as a whole, given its geographic, historical and socio-economic distinctiveness, and given the overwhelming support for the constituency name change from constituents, I introduce first reading of this Bill with the motion that on May 11, 1983, the seventy-fifth anniversary of the town of Swan River, the Dauphin federal constituency henceforth be known as the Dauphin-Swan River federal constituency.

Madam Speaker: The Hon. Member has taken quite a lot of liberty in the statement that he is allowed to make at this time, but I am sure that his constituents will be very happy.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 4,589, 4,595 and 4,672.

[Text]

STUDY TO ASSESS TRANSPORTATION FREIGHT AND PASSENGER ENERGY CONSERVATION

Question No. 4,589—Mr. Mazankowski:

Was a study conducted on behalf of the Department of Transport regarding the "assessment of freight and passenger conservation options" and, if so (a) what were the terms of reference (b) to whom was the study contracted (c) what expertise does the contractor have in rail transportation (d) what was the cost (e) what impact, if any, will the results of the study have on VIA Rail Canada Inc. and on the consideration of changes to the Crowsnest Pass rate?

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): A study to assess transportation freight and passenger energy conservation is under way.

(a) The objective of this study is to identify and analyse all meaningful transportation fuel conservation strategies and assess their limits in terms of socio-economic impacts.

(b) The Department of Supply and Services, on behalf of Transport Canada, contracted this study to Jouko A. Parviainen & Associates of Oakville, Ontario.

(c) The project team includes Mr. R. O. Maughan, of Maughan Railway Consulting Services, Inc. Mr. Maughan is a transportation specialist in Rail Freight.

(d) The estimated cost is $81,315.

(e) The study report will be made available to the railways. The study should be useful for the promotion of freight and passenger energy conservation in rail transportation.

GREY CUP, 1982

Question No. 4,595—Mr. McCuish:

1. Were the pre-game and half-time shows organized for the 1982 Grey Cup Game sponsored by a government Department and, if so (a) which Department (b) what was the total cost?

2. Were any of the participating groups or individuals paid for their attendance at the Grey Cup Game and, if so, in each case (a) who were they (b) how much were they paid?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice): 1. (a) The Canadian Unity Information Office sponsored the half-time show for the 1982 Grey Cup on behalf of the Government of Canada. (b) cost: $77,504.

2. (a) The 48th Highlanders of Canada, (Canadian Forces Reserve Unit Band). Totem, an agency involved in co-ordinating native dancers for special events; (b) Highlanders: $5,097 (as a prerequisite to clearance for the band from the American Federation of Musicians), Totem: $1,500 paid to cover transportation and meals for fifty native dancers.

SENATE OF CANADA

Question No. 4,672—Mr. Kilgour:

For the most recent years for which Government records were kept, what was the aggregate cost (a) per day (b) per year to the taxpayer of the Senate of Canada?

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): The information requested is available in the Estimates and in the Public Accounts for each year since 1867. In recent years the Senate has been funded by Parliament Vote 1.

EMPLOYEES OF DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE ATTENDING UNIVERSITY

Question No. 4,101—Mr. Neil:

1. In each year 1975 to 1982, how many employees of the Department of Agriculture were given extended absences to attend university to study for either a Masters degree or a PhD and, in each case (a) what was his/her name (b) what were his/her qualifications when he/she joined the Department (c) on what date did he/she join the Department and on what date was he/she given the extended absence (d) for what period is his/her extended absence and which university will he/she be attending (e) what remuneration was paid during his/her period of extended absence?

2. Is an employee on extended absence under contract with the Department to return and work with the Department after completing his/her studies and, if so, what are the terms of the contract?

Return tabled.

Mr. Smith: Madam Speaker, I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Madam Speaker: The questions enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary have been replied to. Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S.O. 30

[English]

RAILWAYS

ANNOUNCED CHANGES IN CROWSNEST PASS RATES

Madam Speaker: I have a notice of motion for an emergency debate by the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent).

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I ask leave, seconded by the Hon. Member for Humboldt-Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse) to move adjournment of the House under Standing Order 30 for the purpose of discussing a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration, namely: the announcement this morning by the federal Government of its intention to break unilaterally, the historic Crowsnest Pass Freight Rate Agreement; an agreement which dates back to 1896 and which guarantees to grain farmers freight rates in perpetuity and which provides in return to the CPR, material, land and mineral rights; an agreement which the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) had promised a number of times in the House of Commons would not be changed without a consensus among grain farmers. An agreement thus unilaterally broken constitutes a complete breach of trust between the Prime Minister and the Government on the one hand and those affected by the agreement on the other hand.

Madam Speaker: There can be no doubt that the matter raised by the Hon. Member for Oshawa is important. The Chair must be satisfied that all the conditions laid down by the Standing Order are being met in this case.

Section (16)(a) states that the matter proposed for discussion must relate to a genuine emergency. In his proposed motion, the Hon. Member for Oshawa states that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has promised a number of times in the House of Commons that the agreement would not be changed without a consensus among grain farmers. The matter has therefore been raised before in this House, and indeed in numerous ways. For example, on February 26, 1982, a supply motion was moved and debated which read in part as follows:

That this House condemns the Government for abandoning the historical and statutory rights of western grain producers by proposing an end to the Crowsnest Pass freight rate.

I must also point out that the Hon. Member stated in his notice the matter to be:

—the announcement this morning by the federal Government of its intention to break unilaterally the historic Crowsnest Pass Freight Rate Agreement;

No indication is given in the notice as to when a decision may be taken or implemented. Under those circumstances, the Chair finds no justification for the contention that the matter calls for immediate and urgent consideration. The House, in all probability, will find the opportunity in the near future, as it has, for instance, during the Question Period, to discuss this matter in another context.

Finally, the Chair has serious reservations in connection wth the terms in which the proposed motion is couched. That type of motion is perhaps more in the nature of a non-confidence motion. May I quote in part from a ruling made by Mr. Speaker Lamoureux on June 29, 1971, as will be found on page 7434 of Hansard of that date. It reads:

I would indicate to the Hon. Member that in my view this is not the kind of motion or the kind of subject which ought to be considered under the terms of Standing Order 26. This is essentially a motion of non-confidence. It is a substantive motion. It does not deal with a matter which is a sudden occurrence.

Under these circumstances, it is with regret that I must decide that the matter is not proper to be discussed at this time under the terms of Standing Order 30.

Mr. Broadbent: Madam Speaker, for technical reasons I am not entirely surprised by your ruling and I respect that judgment. However, we did not know earlier today that the Government was going to make such an historic announcement affecting farmers throughout Canada, particularly in the prairies. I had hoped that the Government would at least have the courtesy to make a statement on motions, so that we would have a chance to debate the matter. This not having been done, Madam Speaker, I move the adjournment of the House.

Madam Speaker: I am very sorry, but the House cannot accept the motion to adjourn the House because the House at the present is under an order of the House. There is some order of business that has to be completed before any such motion could be in order.

I regret to have to say to the Hon. Member that I cannot accept his motion to adjourn the House. Standing Order 8.(3) reads as follows:

When it is provided in any Standing or Special Order of this House that any business specified by such Order shall be continued, forthwith disposed of, or concluded in any sitting, the House shall not be adjourned before such proceedings have been completed except pursuant to a motion to adjourn proposed by a Minister of the Crown.

For that reason, and based on this Standing Order, I cannot accept the motion of the Hon. Member. It is out of order.

Orders of the day.

OLD AGE SECURITY ACT (NO. 2)

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-131, to amend the Old Age Security Act (No. 2) as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs, and the motion of Mr. Dantzer (p. 21795).

Mr. Sid Parker (Kootenay East-Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, before the lunch break I was speaking about the amendment to Bill C-131 and referring to the comments made by the Conservative Party, specifically those of the Hon. Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields) and the Hon. Member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Kilgour). The latter Member stated in his speech that his Party considered that the application of the six and five program to working people was not a problem and that they could support it. He said they were opposed to its application to Family Allowances and pensions. They knew full well from the statements and the "Budget in Brief", that it was tied to the Family Allowance, to pensions, and to the various programs.

● (1550)

The Conservative Party and the Liberal Party have openly attacked social programs for which we have fought so hard over the years. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) fought in the House to gain these programs, and now they are being eroded away with the help of the Conservative Party. For Conservative Members to rise in the House at this time after supporting Bill C-124 is a disgrace to the intelligence of the people of Canada. Canadians know that they supported the basic program, Bill C-124, which created the problem we are having today. This was well spelled out in June when the Government presented the program. Today we saw a prime example of what was taking place in the House. At that time I spoke about some of the things which were happening with regard to the six and five program. I said that the President of CP Rail, Ian Sinclair, had been appointed chairman of the blue chip committee to expound on the virtues of the six and five program. At that time the President of the Treasury Board danced to the tune of the President of CP Rail, and the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) danced to the tune of that program. Now we have the Minister of State for Economic Development (Mr. Johnston) dancing to that tune.

We have a situation where the Government of Canada and the Official Opposition are supporting the kind of structure wherein big companies dictate the policies which are eroding the very basic social programs for which we have fought so hard.

I see Mr. Speaker motioning to me. I thank the House for the opportunity of participating in this debate.

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to rise once again and participate this time in report stage of Bill C-131. I recall very well at second reading the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay-Nipigon (Mr. Masters) telling us that his mother liked the capping of her pension, and the Hon. Member for Mission-Port Moody (Mr. Rose) talking about whether she was going to kneecap him or he, her. In any event, his mother did not write me. The Bill has been through committee and it is back here for report stage. It is not my intention to talk about my mother. I suppose I could because she is a recipient of the old age pension as well. Rather, I think it is pertinent to talk about the need of Canadian pensioners for this meagre income, if that is all they have, which was promised to them by their Government and is now proposed to be reduced. I use the word "reduced" in its proper sense. The Government says that they will still get an increase, but anyone would know that the purchasing power of these pensions is being reduced.

I heard the comments of the NDP Member who spoke before me. He was critical of the fact that the Progressive Conservative Party opposed this Bill at the same time as it supported the six and five program. I find that to be the most natural coupling of ideas. We on this side know, even if the Party to my left has no idea of any economic realities, that the Government must exercise some restraint.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clarke: Mr. Speaker, when one pricks a balloon one gets a lot of hot air out of it. If they will allow me to continue, let met say that we on this side know that the Government must begin to balance budgets. There are only two ways of doing this. I remember many people coming before the Standing Committee on Public Accounts and presenting ways of balancing budgets, eliminating deficits or whatever. There are only two ways. One is to restrain expenditures and the other is to increase revenues. The policies of the Government opposite have given us neither of those two things. They have given us reduced revenues and increased expenditures. How have they done this?

They have gone through and increased estimates all the way along the line, normally far in excess of any reasonable amounts which might have been expected because of inflationary gains or anything like that. Then, because of their other economic policies, they have thrown 1.3 million Canadians out of work. Not only do these Canadians cease to be taxpayers contributing to the general revenues of the country, but they become a serious drain, through unemployment insurance, which has amounted so far this year to $8 billion. That is not a way of balancing budgets.

Now, having succeeded in getting the budgets so far out of whack that there will probably be a $26 billion deficit this year, not counting unemployment insurance payouts, the Government decided to practise more restraint through this Bill by reducing the increase due to old age pensioners. I choose carefully the words—increase due to them. Generally speaking, these Canadian pensioners have been through one depression. Some of them might say that they have been through two or three. They have been through more than one war. Some might have even been through four wars. They have contributed throughout their whole lives to this country. For the most part—and I am not speaking of the well-to-do ones—they are depending on the country now for their very existence through this relatively meagre old age pension. To take away the ability of the pensioners of Canada to keep up is a reprehensible move by the Government.

It is not as if there were no other way to solve the problems of Government. In the recent budget adjustments—and I cannot remember which of the last three since none of them has been fully brought into effect—there was a proposal to reduce the highest marginal rates of personal income tax. From a certain economic or business point of view that is commendable. It is a way of creating more capital pools, which are very important for creating jobs in Canada. It is a better way for the Government to get more tax revenues, because higher tax rates penalize producers and it encourages things like underground economies. If by a simple adjustment they increased the tax rates, not reduced them as much as they propose now, they could have acquired the extra revenue from general taxpayers—and this is a very small amount about which I am talking—including higher income pensioners. I am sure they would not mind contributing a little of their highest-end income in order to save the most needy of our pensioners from this reduction in their purchasing power.

What I am saying is that there were many ways in which the Government could have attempted to balance budgets. We on this side support its attempts at restraint. This is why we supported Bill C-124. We could see that the six and five program had its attractions and in many ways was a necessary evil. However, to try to balance budgets on the backs of pensioners who have been through wars and depressions and are at the mercy of the Government now for some degree of dignity and well-being in their old age, is a measure which we deplore and with which we do not agree. This is why we have spoken consistently against this unfair and unnecessary attack on Canadian senior citizens.

• (1600)

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton South): Mr. Speaker, in rising to speak at report stage of Bill C-131 and particularly to give support to the amendment introduced by the Hon. Member for Okanagan North (Mr. Dantzer), I want to pay special tribute to his leadership on the entire question of pensions which has enabled the House to take a good look at all the implications of the changing demographic scene in Canada. This has now led to a special study in which my colleague, the Hon. Member for Okanagan North, will play a very important role.

I am struck once more by how the Government want only breaks its commitments in the name of six and five. Just as in the case of Public Service pensions with Bill C-133, the Government is indulging in the gamesmanship of six and five to breach its obligations arbitrarily and unilaterally. It was nearly nine months ago, on April 20, 1982, that the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) told the conference on industrial relations:

> We have no intention of changing the "rules of the game". We want to maintain the indexing of Old Age Security Pension and Supplement every three months, and to retain the universality of the basic OAS pension.

Now I ask you, Mr. Speaker, what about the question of credibility of the Minister of National Health and Welfare in the light of that statement? What about the question of the credibility of the Government with senior citizens who only have us on this side of the House to raise their case that inflation and the ravages of inflation must not be fought on the backs of people who are the most defenceless?

This present about face reminds one of 1974 with the "Zap, you're frozen" statement of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) or of the 1980 pledge of cheaper energy prices. We see now how hollow those promises were. Credibility is surely the most essential bond between a Government and its electorate, especially that part of the electorate that is the most vulnerable, our senior citizens. To the very limited extent that this Liberal Government maintains any credibilty with the Canadian people, then Bill C-131 damages it still further.

My second major objection to this piece of legislation now before us at report stage is that it fights inflation on the backs of those who are least able to bear it. It is true that the Government is compensating the least advantaged through the Guaranteed Income Supplement, which brings their income to the level that it would have been otherwise. But that does not help the approximately 1.1 million pensioners who are just slightly above the cut-off or poverty line.

Last summer I went on an extensive door-to-door tour of my constituency of Edmonton South. I spoke literally to hundreds of people, many of them senior citizens. Time and again they spoke of life on the brink of poverty with shoestring budgeting. It may well be that Bill C-131 will cost the senior citizens "only" $290 over 1983 and 1984 in lost indexation that otherwise would have accrued to them, but I submit that this sum is too much for them to bear. A public opinion sounding which I took in my riding, moveover, revealed that fully 62.2 per cent of all my constituents supported increased, rather than reduced, support for senior citizens.

I also have reservations about the Government using GIS to make up the loss in Old Age Security. Since the Guaranteed Income Supplement is means tested, that suggests we are getting away from the principle of universality. It may be that Bill C-131 is thus the thin edge of the wedge; the beginning of a process by which government pensions will become a privilege and not a right.

Through these measures, the Government claims that it will be saving some $31 million. The figures seem to vary as to what exactly will be saved. I do not think the Government even knows, except that it will be a rather minor amount relative to the totality of the federal budget deficit of some $23 billion. I wonder whether it is worth breaking a fundamental commitment to the senior citizens of this country for this sum. Why does the Government not look at cutting the deficit through saving in Government advertising, which costs are now approaching $100 million a year? What about many other expenditures which the Government can cut? Many of them the Government has made over the past decade largely to increase its own political popularity. Why does the Government not take a good, hard look at those kinds of things to try to approach some degree of sanity in the $23 billion deficit level rather than going to the senior citizens first, the most vulnerable people? To make senior citizens an exception to the Government's six and five program might be doubly appropriate as a reflection of the Government's confidence in its own anti-inflation program. If the Government is so certain that inflation will fall, then payouts for Old Age Security will fall correspondingly. Hence, why is this ever optimistic Government breaching a trust and causing hardship to cap pensions which, when inflation falls, will not mean capping in any event?

Above all, the Government is being quite hypocritical in maintaining, as the Minister of National Health and Welfare did on second reading of this Bill, that Bill C-131 is "asking 1.1 million Old Age Pensioners to help lead the way in the fight against inflation"?

Finally, I object to this Bill because it is an ad hoc approach to a basic issue facing our society, which is the caring for the elderly in a manner which is economically viable, and above all socially just. We have spent literally hours of parliamentary time debating public service pensions, and now Old Age Security. Would it not have been more profitable to begin consideration of the broader question on aging and some action following the United Nations Conference on Aging which took place in Vienna in 1982? What about a long-range approach to consider all the implications of demographically changing lines in our society, in which we know we are entering, what is to be called the greying of our society?

To this end at the start of the new session, if there is ever going to be a new session and an end to this interminable first session that has brought such misery to the people of Canada, I will be proposing a motion to consider the subject of aging in its entirety; to consider all of the aspects of aging today, both demographically and economically. I will make some proposals in a Private Member's motion at that time, Sir.

Once more, I urge the Government to reconsider its short-term palliative Bill C-131. It breaks the Government's word, it creates hardship and it is hypocritical. Against these points, the gamesmanship of six and five is no defence whatsoever.

• (1610)

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): It is with a great deal of pleasure, Mr. Speaker, that I rise to speak on Bill C-131. Before I make my introductory remarks, I would like to comment on some of the input from the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Quadra (Mr. Clarke) who spoke previously. He seemed to have some problem in understanding why we ridicule his Party on their position on Bill C-124 before it came into law and on their present position of opposing the legislation relating to civil servant pensions and old age security. I think that most of us are confused about the Conservatives' position on leadership and a number of other matters. The Hon. Member suggested that we do not understand the economics of the issue. I fail to see how anyone can understand their actions after witnessing what they did last weekend and seeing their position on Bill C-124 last summer which invoked the six and five program.

I think people should be very aware of the Conservatives' view of that legislation at that time. There was an amendment moved by the NDP, which the Conservatives voted against, that the six and five legislation not apply to pensions. We are not talking about confusion; we are talking about blatant hypocrisy. That Party cannot have it both ways. They will either have to stand up on principle or put up and shut up. That is about the size of it.

It is rather interesting to see some of the responses that the Conservatives made to this legislation. They had many opportunities to have all their Members turn up and vote against the legislation, but their record is atrocious. As a matter of fact, when their Whip was asked where his people were on many occasions, he stated that they were out at static cling conferences and quilting bees. When the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) was asked what his Party's policy would be on some of these economic issues that affect senior citizens, his response, as reported in Maclean's magazine was, "If we told them what we would do they certainly would not elect us in the forthcoming election." I suggest that we are looking at issues that distinguish between truth and hypocrisy on the part of the Conservative Party.

The legislation we are discussing today ultimately deals with the economic policy of the six and five program. Anyone who is evaluating the economy and the six and five policy and who has any integrity will see that this legislation is destructive.

The Liberal Party has failed to instil any sense of direction in the people of this country in attempting economic recovery. It has, instead, imposed its six and five policy on pensioners, those who depend on Family Allowances and others in our society who cannot afford the kind of restraint the Government is imposing upon them. If the Government had imposed that kind of restraint on Michael Pitfield, perhaps its credibility might be somewhat stronger today. I would suggest that the Liberal Government of Canada is probably one of the most discredited groups in the country today. It has discredited itself because of its blatant economic attack on pensioners, retired civil servants and those who depend on the Family Allowance income. It is a totally wrong direction to take toward economic recovery.

The previous speaker mentioned that we are anticipating a new budget and speech from the Throne if this session ever ends. It is amazing that we have not heard one constructive suggestion from the Government in the time that we have been here. It has only caused chaos and conflict in the country up to this time, and this legislation in front of us now is no exception. I hope that the Government will resolve to find programs that will assist the country so that we may see a new Speech from the Throne and a new budget. Hopefully, there will be measures in the budget that will provide assistance to the senior citizens in this country, instead of hammering the pensioners and retired civil servants as this legislation does.

It has been many years since the Government last introduced any constructive measures to assist senior citizens. At that time the Government added a paltry sum of $35 to the base rate of pensions, and allowed it to increase through indexation. However, that foundation of indexation has been chopped out as a result of the present legislation. That $35 increase was a sham. We should be considering a program to support senior citizens instead of being faced with this legislation in the House.

I find it very offensive that the Government is totally ignoring the diversity of this country. This is evident when one sees the assumptions made in the Bill. Senior citizens who live in rural areas such as the area I represent find the cost of living extremely high. They find the cost of food, housing, transportation and other services extremely high. At this time they need every nickel they can manage to eke out of what is already a very inadequate pension. They do not need their pensions cut back by a six and five program. The Government's assumptions are totally inaccurate when dealing with senior citizens. Instead, we should be considering an increase in pensions to meet the cost of living, and certainly an increase in the base of those pensions.

I would like to deal with housing as it affects senior citizens. There is a great shortage of decent housing for senior citizens in many communities. What housing is available is generally high cost. Provincial Governments, which have traditionally taken responsibility for carrying on senior citizen programs, have reduced revenues, with the result that senior citizen housing programs are in a state of collapse. Therefore, there are hundreds of senior citizens in small communities such as Powell River waiting for access to decent and reasonably priced housing. We should be considering matters such as this, instead of trying to find ways to cut indexing on senior citizens' pensions. They should be provided with additional services. As well, the Government should be considering ways to offset the high cost of living.

Intermediate care for seniors is another area of concern. Many senior citizens do not have access to intermediate and extended care facilities. Many of the facilities in this country are without adequate funds and have very limited programs. Many of these facilities are merely human storehouses where people are put out of sight of the community. In many cases they are the most appalling spectacles I have ever laid my eyes on. Yet the Government sits on its thumbs doing nothing for senior citizens who need those types of services. The hypocrisy is astounding.

We should be considering the provision of better recreation facilities for seniors, instead of capping their pensions at six and five. We should be providing adequate recreation and community support services for seniors so they could enjoy their declining years, instead of worrying about what the Government has in store for them in its next measure.

Most senior citizens are confined because of inadequate transportation services. They are becoming less active and, in some cases, they are in declining health and thereby confined to their homes. They are not able to participate with family and friends in the community. The Government's role, both federally and provincially, is absolutely disgusting in this regard.

Finally, I would suggest that the matter comes down to straight politics. There are three Parties in the House. I believe the Conservatives have clearly illustrated that they are absolutely in bed with the Liberals on this particular issue. They favour the restraint program. It is not Dome, Massey Ferguson or Chrysler who are being told to tighten their belts. It is not Ian Sinclair or the Royal Bank of Canada. Those two Parties, the Conservatives and the Liberals, chose to make senior citizens tighten their belts and probably take their belts off and tighten them around their throats. This hypocrisy must end.

Those two Parties have to take their heads out of the sand and recognize that we cannot have it both ways. We have to stand up on this principle and provide adequate funding for these people and abandon this self-destructive approach of the six and five program, especially as it is applied to seniors, retired civil servants and people attempting to live on Family Allowance.

• (1620)

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, as I join in the debate today, I suppose we are coming to the end of this trio of discriminatory legislation which the Government has seen fit to bring out. I might just briefly recall the remarks of the Hon. Member who spoke previously. He said that the Tories were in bed with the Liberals on this matter. Certainly we are not in bed with the Tories—with the Liberals on this matter.

An Hon. Member: We know you are not in bed with the Tories.

Mr. McKinnon: As I said the other day, when there is some noise in this House, it always comes from that small pack of lonesome souls on the left-hand side who are better at making noise than at making sense.

There are three Bills which we sometimes discuss. The NDP have been ostensibly or supposedly speaking on Bill C-131 today and on Bill C-133 a few days ago, but all their speeches have really been on Bill C-124. They like to claim that these are part of Bill C-124. Bill C-124 was the six and five legislation which, for the most part, applied to civil servants who are in the work force, with all that entails. Bills C-131 and C-133, which we oppose, are designed to apply against senior citizens. Some of them are more senior than others. My constituency has several of both kinds.

Bill C-131, which we are discussing today, hits at the old age pensioners and their pensions. The bill which we discussed a couple of days ago, Bill C-133, applied to retired civil servants. However, these are elderly people. Bill C-124 was made to apply against people still in the work force, still with bargaining capabilities, still with flexibility in their lifestyles and their choice of occupation. Not everyone has it, but some have. Of course, it is of interest that Bill C-124 called for a pay cut in the salary of MPs, which would lead to a pay cut in their pensions later on, and the NDP opposed the Bill. We voted in favour of that pay cut for MPs and it was passed. We have cheerfully paid the 5 per cent ever since and will continue to do so.

I see that the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Campbell) has entered the House. A little earlier today he spoke on a matter of some interest to me with regard to veterans. Concerning the indexation of veterans' pensions, the Minister has at times used terms which would lead people to draw the wrong conclusion. A matter of terminology is involved which is unfortunate. I am certain that the Minister does not intend to mislead some of the pensioners, but he does.

The Minister included a note with the last cheques sent out from the Department to disabled veterans and their widows and to those who receive the War Veterans Allowance. There may be others, but that is the general group to whom the cheques are sent. To the general public, a "veteran" means someone who served in a war or, I suppose, served in the forces for a long time. Indexation certainly does apply to many people who served in World War II. Disability cheques, not veterans' cheques, are received by those who suffered disabilities during their service, probably in World War II or even in peacetime, although they are the rare exceptions, believe me.

In any event, the message included in those cheques sent out stated:

Dear friend,

Having heard a good deal about the Canadian Government's assault on inflation, you may have had some concern about the effect of the "six and five" program on your own pension. I am pleased to inform you that "six and five" restrictions do not apply to disability pensions or widows pensions.

That is fine, so far. It continues:

Effective January 1, 1983, disability pensioners and recipients of widows pensions will receive a cost of living increase of 11.5 per cent.

It is fine until that point, but then the Minister states:

The Canadian Government considers veterans to be a very special group of citizens.

He does not mention disabled veterans or widows of veterans, but he says that veterans are a very special group of citizens. He states:

It is for that reason the purchasing power of your cheque is being maintained by the addition of a full cost of living increase. It is the Government's way of saying "Thank You" to Canadian Veterans and their dependants for unselfish service when it was needed.

The problem there is that a great number of veterans who draw the old age pension and perhaps a small disability pension believe that they will not suffer from this legislation, but they certainly will, because if they are drawing the Old Age Security payment, they will be limited to the 6 per cent increase throughout the term of this year.

Today, the Minister again rose in response to a speech made by someone in the small group to our left, I believe, to point out that veterans' pensions had not been subject to a capping of indexation. It depends on what kind of a veteran one is. In terms of the veterans' disability pension, the Minister is correct. If he is referring to other pension cheques received by people who are veterans, he is incorrect. I would hope that he, being the gentleman that I know he is, would clear that up, possibly with another memorandum which he could send out with next month's cheques.

I would like to discuss briefly the position now of the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin). It can only be embarrassing, I assume, because of what she has allowed to happen as a result of this program. The Government has seen the old and infirm as its first target in its effort to show that it knows what restraint means. There is doubt that it knows what restraint means at all. Its intimate knowledge is far removed, I can assure Hon. Members. There is no indication that there will be any restraint in the Government's public attitude toward self-aggrandizement, self-advertising and looking after its friends in a variety of positions. Its attitude is exemplified in a letter issued on the subject a month or so ago which stated:

The people who will have this reduction in living standards imposed on them are single people with current annual incomes as low as $8,640 and coupled with current annual incomes as low as $11,760. These are not the nation's rich who are being asked to pay for the recession and the Government's fiscal problems.

I entirely agree with that letter. There is no doubt but that there is a vast area that is left above those rather small incomes, in this day and age. I suppose there are enough people, if there were any justice in this world, to upset the Government. However, I doubt that they will be doing that.

I am glad to see that the Minister of National Health and Welfare is entering the House. She has not yet resolved, to my satisfaction, a problem concerning pensions which I mentioned yesterday. If she would not mind dealing in rough figures, perhaps she could outline what would happen to a pensioner receiving Old Age Security payments of, say, $250 a month—I believe it is approximately $253 right now—and also receiving a private pension of $248 a month, bringing the total just below the area in which one would receive the Guaranteed Income Supplement. I believe the Minister said yesterday that even if one received a supplement of as little as $2 a month, indexation would apply. I want to know if the indexation would include the indexation of the private pension, because if there is a minimum income which everyone is to receive, it will escalate at the rate of the Consumer Price Index. In order to fill the gap, the example of $2 which the pensioner draws on the Guaranteed Income Supplement would have to increase by perhaps $25, from $2 to $27 in the next month, from $27 to $50, or something like that. I want to know whether that will in fact keep pace with the Consumer Price Index for all of that person's income, not just for the Guaranteed Income Supplement. If so, this would amount to supplementing a private pension, and I feel that that is something the Government should consider and upon which it should make a clear policy statement.

I have completed my remarks, and if the Minister wishes to reply to my question, she will certainly have my concurrence.

[Translation]

Miss Bégin: Mr. Speaker—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Is the Hon. Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) rising on a point of order?

Miss Bégin: No, Mr. Speaker. I thought that under the new system with which I am not yet familiar, I had to reply immediately to the Hon. Member, failing which, the official record would show that the Government had refused to reply. When are we supposed to—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): No. Order, please! There is no question and answer period provided for at the report stage. With the unanimous consent of the House, however, including, of course, the Hon. Member who has just resumed his seat, the Minister could perhaps entertain a question.

• (1630)

[English]

Has the Minister the unanimous consent of the House to reply to those matters raised by the Hon. Member who has just spoken?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Miss Bégin: Mr. Speaker, I am glad to answer that question because we all care for pensioners. The answer to the Member's question is that if a person receives the basic OAS and a pension from a private source of whatever nature, which is small enough that that person qualifies also for a very small GIS, say $2 or $5 a month, then that pensioner is considered to have a total income so low that his or her full OAS and the small GIS is fully indexed. Do I answer correctly?

Mr. McKinnon: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. That is the worst possible news I could have received. I had hoped that their income would rise to some level that the Minister has in mind, not just a small supplement to each of them because of indexation.

[Translation]

Mr. Roy: Mr. Speaker—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please! I apologize to the Hon. Member for Laval (Mr. Roy)—

[English]

Mr. Skelly: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether on the same grounds that the Minister had an opportunity to put a question, I would like to—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. I suppose that could be done if there was unanimous consent.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): There is not unanimous consent.

Mr. Skelly: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I wonder if you would make some judgment as to whether the Hon. Member's remarks were factual in that he failed to indicate to the House that he had voted against an amendment—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. I am afraid that is not a point of order, it is debate.

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Roy (Laval): Mr. Speaker, for several reasons I am pleased to speak to the Act to amend the Old Age Security Act (No. 2), but since my time is limited due to the fact that the debate will be ending in a few minutes, I must try and clarify certain aspects which have been left in doubt.

The way the two official Opposition parties see it, it is a disaster, but, as the Minister has kept repeating at the report stage, at second reading or in Committee, it is not a disaster but indeed the application of a principle aimed at capping indexation in all sectors at 6 per cent the first year and 5 per cent the second year. But the Minister, the Cabinet and the Government have protected the elderly. Those who benefit from income security will not be affected; therefore, all such elderly people will receive their full pension with no change in the indexation. Spouses as well will benefit from it, Mr. Speaker. If they figure on the list of income security recipients, they will not be affected in any way whatsoever. Members opposite are somehow on a witch hunt if they expect the people to believe that, but they will not succeed. All one needs to do is to meet with senior citizens, as I have done recently. As the Opposition claims, those people were under the impression that they would lose part of their pension and that they would be driven right out of their homes. That statement has been made in the course of the debate, Mr. Speaker. Let us call a spade a spade. I read in yesterday's Hansard that the Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) had said that a number of Members had spoken to the Bill, but that in committee, and I am quoting from page 22342:

—we had only four sessions to hear witnesses. Every single witness and every group and organization appearing before us, crowded into those four sessions, violently and strenuously opposed the measures in the Bill.

The Hon. Member is implying that the committee did not sit long enough. In fact, I was responsible for chairing all sessions held by the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs. When Members so requested, the Minister was always available and always attended Committee sessions to answer questions put by Members. The reason we had only four sessions is that we had no other witnesses who wanted to appear before the committee and give evidence. Mr. Speaker, the list of witnesses shows that the most concern was shown, not by senior citizens, but by the Opposition, who wanted to play politics, because they even invited members of the Public Service Alliance of Canada to fill the room where one of the Committee sessions was held, and all associations and organizations who, through the Clerk, asked to appear before the Committee, were duly received.

In fact, many times the Clerk had to call witnesses on the telephone to get them to appear before the Committee. So if the Member for Kingston and the Islands says that there was a restriction on the number of witnesses, I can inform the House that that is absolutely not true. All witnesses and associations who wanted to appear before the Committee were duly received, all the time normally available was indeed used, we extended the time during which the Committee was supposed to sit and once, when the Minister was appearing before the Committee one evening, Opposition Members said after a half-hour of debate: We have no further questions. The evidence contained in the issues of the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs shows that anyone who wanted to appear before the Committee was admitted, and that included any Members who wished to take part in the debate. However, the same issues always comes up. It was implied that the senior citizens were being victimized by the six and five program. Hon. Members opposite have never realized that inflation is the worst problem for people on a fixed income and that this is why we want to curb it. If inflation continues to increase at the same rate as in the past, obviously the gap between have and have-not in our society will widen. We only have to look at the Senate report on poverty to realize to what extent some people become the victims of inflation, and these people are always those on fixed incomes. This is why the Government is attacking this cancer in our economy, namely inflation, and we are now witnessing a reduction in the inflation rate. The gap caused by inflation is closing up.

Mr. Speaker, senior citizens know who is responsible for our pension scheme in Canada. They know that it is the Liberal Government and the Liberal philosophy. the New Democrats spoke about it, but the Liberals acted. Mr. Speaker, you come from a very beautiful area and you certainly have often seen ships going by and gulls flying over them. The gulls think of themselves as captains of the ships, but they simply fly over them and leave their visiting card as they pass. But the captain is the master on board. While the New Democrats talk about pensions, the Liberals act, they pass legislation and for 25 years now have been providing pensions to senior citizens and widows who need them, by amending the Old Age Security Act.

Mr. Keeper: You are cutting down pensions!

Mr. Roy: Mr. Speaker, I believe that it is important for these people to feel secure. We have to consider how far-ranging this debate has become.

The Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands asked the Director General of Planning, Evaluation and Liaison, Mr. Allen, the following question: "What would be the cost during the first month, that is January, for the people affected? I am not speaking about those who receive the income supplement as they will not be affected. I am not speaking about spouses whose income is guaranteed as they will not be affected. I am speaking about those who receive only the basic pension; by what amount will their January cheques be cut?" This was the reply given by Mr. Allen to the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands: "Let me qualify my answer. We are projecting a reduction of about 50c. per pensioner in January 1983, that is 50c. for each pensioner who has a sufficient income and does not receive any supplement." I repeat that the figure quoted was 50c. per pensioner in January, but the Opposition has amplified this throughout the debate and has even suggested that some senior citizens will lose their homes.

Mr. Speaker, this shows to what extent the Opposition is willing to play politics on the backs of senior citizens, but we only have to meet with these people to realize how much confidence they have in the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin), who with the continuing support of Government Members, has always protected them and defended them in Cabinet.

• (1640)

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member for Laval (Mr. Roy).

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Is the Hon. Member for Laval willing to accept a question since there is only one minute left to the time allotted to him?

Mr. Roy: Certainly. This is my reason for giving the Opposition the chance to ask questions, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): The Hon. Member for Winnipeg-St. James (Mr. Keeper).

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, NDP Members propose and Liberal Members dispose. NDP Members are now suggesting that the Government should pay full pensions to the pensioners. Why is the Liberal government not withdrawing this bill?

Mr. Roy: Because the Liberal Government is responsible for running the country in much the same way as the captain at the helm of his ship. While the NDP Members are like seagulls, chirping and taking wing, the Liberal Members are assuming their responsibility of governing the country. Inflation was the main factor limiting the development of our economy and this is why various programs have been set up. Inflation is slowing down from month to month. And when inflation reaches its normal level, if this is still possible, then we will increase benefits to old age pensioners and, I am sure, Mr. Speaker, that the Liberal philosophy will once again be implemented.

[English]

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, in defence of this Bill, the Hon. Member for Laval (Mr. Roy) overlooked something which some of us would probably remember a little better than he would. The first accommodation provided for senior citizens or others who might need accommodation away from home was provided by organizations in this nation. They might have been provided by the CWL, The Women's Institute, The Eastern Star, or what have you. I happen to have had some personal experience with them in my Province.

When they were established, the old age pension, so-called at that time, gave the citizen residing in those homes the full cost of his or her resident requirement, including food plus a few dollars, $3, $4 or $5 which might buy some cigarette tobacco, chocolate bars once in a while, or whatever. There was a little bit left over from the pension for that purpose.

No matter how you slice this cake, there is no residence away from home for senior citizens within the price of the old age pension cheque. Not only is that accommodation no longer available as it was at that price, it now requires an additional payment of $30, $40, $50 or $100 a month in those homes which were long since bought and paid for and where there is no capital cost. They cannot survive on their old age pension. Supplementary payments are required.

The relative value of the old age pension today versus that of its initial conception is below the value that was intended. In addition, it is now proposed to limit the indexing of it to six and five. People now residing in those homes will be even worse off. They will have to get other public support in many instances in order to reside in those homes. That is an utter and complete condemnation of this Government and its management of the affairs of the senior citizens of this land. This is one reason why this concept is so thoroughly opposed.

Of course, they have arrived in this position because they ignored the advice of some of their predecessors, even in their own Party. They ignored the advice of economists who used to say we should have cyclical budgeting, that we should have a surplus when times are good so that we can afford a deficit when times are not so good. That went out the window long ago with the extravagance of Liberal politics.

Budgets have been increased successively to the point that the Government now finds itself so constrained that it cannot index the old age pension. That is the gravest condemnation that this Government could receive.

There has been some discussion about war veterans pensions. I do not think this issue should have been left entirely as it was. I do not criticize anyone who made a comment, but we should point out that those who served in the Armed Forces for a period of years and earned a retirement pension now find themselves subject to six and five in respect of their pension as do other people. Do not try to tell all of those who have been in the army that they are not subject to six and five, because a great many of them are.

So much for the Government's lack of wisdom as it abandoned the cyclical process of financing the requirements of this nation. This is probably the end result of its lack of economic wisdom which has been evident throughout this land. The people of Canada should know this. If they do know, or ever did know it, they should again be reminded.

It was my privilege to sit in this House when John Turner introduced a budget. I can still see him as he defended that budget. As we criticized it, he defended it just like an evangelist. One would have thought it was the best thing since sliced bread. My comment on that budget was that it was the beginning of the step toward an 80 cent dollar. In his budget, he paved the way for the extravagance of Government to this day. In his budget he set an example for successive increments and deficit financing.

I made a remark at a gathering which happened to include some bankers, one of whom was within earshot, a rather responsible senior banking person. I made that remark to him in 1973. He asked me what I thought about the budget. I said, "Well, Mr. Bell, this is the first of the steps that the Liberal Government will take to bring us to an 80 cent dollar." He looked at me and said, "For any Member of Parliament to be as irresponsible as to make a statement like that about the stability of his own dollar is real heresy."

• (1650)

I said, "That might be so, Sir, but my prediction will rest upon what this Government does this year and what it continues to do in successive years". I do not take back my statement that this is the basis for the 80 cent dollar. And the evangelistic Turner stood across the floor of this House and defended that extravagance with a verve that could hardly be understood in view of the way he is presented to the Canadian public today. Those were the budgets which started us toward the position where we can no longer extend to civil servants, old age pensioners or retirees from the army the indexation for which they paid and which this Government committed itself to extending to them. This is unquestionably an absolute reneging by the Government of Canada on its contractual arrangement with those people. It is criminal that we should have to neglect the needs of this nation so badly and that we should have conducted our financing with so little forethought.

But it is even worse than that, Mr. Speaker. We have today a group of farmers who are going bankrupt. We are in a financial position where we are not going to index pensions for civil servants or any retirees. Nor are we going to put enough money into the Farm Credit Corporation to extend to farmers the bridge financing they so badly need. We are, however, going to put billions behind such crummy corporations as Maislin. Where is the judgment of this Government with respect to the needy people of this land? How can we put literally billions into guarantees for outfits such as Dome, Chrysler, Massey-Ferguson and Maislin and then say to our old age pensioners: "I am sorry, but we cannot index your pension"? Does the public not understand the hypocrisy which this Government is practising?

Why am I concerned about this, Mr. Speaker? It happens that the latest statistics indicate there are approximately 8,700 people in the constituency of Carleton-Charlotte who are over 65. These people, constituting 19 per cent of the voters in my riding, are going to be affected one way or another. Now, let us carry that a little further. There are roughly 3,000 who do not get the GIS, which means there are 5,700 who do. So the 3,000 do not get indexation. I know some of those people, Mr. Speaker, and they are scraping the bottom of the barrel to get by now. When the Government uses a broad brush in this policy of retrenchment, it is not being equitable. It has not recognized the real and pertinent need of some people.

It would be popular in the eyes of Canadians, perhaps, to say to a retired deputy minister or a retired director general with 35 years of service: "We are not going to index your pension". Of course, no Member of the Government would admit that a deputy minister who retired five years ago is now getting more pay in pension than he drew when he was employed. So he is all right, he is looked after, but the little guy below the poverty line is the one who is going to suffer.

What about the army retirees I mentioned earlier? What about those who have had short service in rather menial jobs and they retired five or ten years ago? They have been struggling to exist and their pension will not be indexed except to the extent of 6 per cent. They have not had the opportunity a retired deputy minister or director general has had to be receiving more in pension than they ever earned. These people are going to suffer because the pension they accumulated over, say, ten years of service does not amount to much.

I see that I have used up my time, Mr. Speaker, but I want to say to you that the broad brush approach of hitting everyone over the head with a club does not work. We need a compromise between the insanity of that approach and the need of many people.

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills): Mr. Speaker, I also rise on the report stage of Bill C-131 to express my extreme disappointment that the Government is attacking a certain segment of our society under the guise of six and five. Government Members need to realize right from the start that the only reason that we have these cutback Bills is the years and years of deficit we have had, the years of Government spending more money than it was taking in. Those deficits led directly and inevitably, as they have since the beginning of organized society, to inflation. Inflation, Mr. Speaker, is simply too many dollars chasing too few goods. As societies in the past have learned, inflation impacts upon different segments of society in different and unfair ways. It always attacks people with fixed incomes most severely. Those people, of course, are old age pensioners.

We all know that inflation of 3 per cent to 4 per cent causes the value of a dollar to drop by 50 per cent in maybe 15 or 20 years, so that by the time a person who has retired at age 65 with a pension of $1,000 a month reaches 80, that pension will be worth about $500. Now inflation of 3 per cent or 4 per cent can be coped with, but when you get into inflation rates of 10 per cent, 15 per cent and 20 per cent, the value of money drops by 50 per cent within three, four or five years. And that is how inflation impacts so severely on the seniors. That is why they need to have the indexation, Mr. Speaker. Therefore, this cutback is totally unfair and clearly the result of deliberate actions by this Liberal Government, backed by Liberal Party policies.

There is no doubt that our friends to the left, the NDP, also support that, because they continually call for more Government spending. So they have to be roped in, and Canadians need to understand that. Every person receiving Old Age Security who votes for the Liberal Party in the next election, is voting for more of the same, and for his own self destruction. Every retired federal civil servant now realizes, the few who voted for the Liberal Party in the past, that he had been sabotaged, and if he votes for the Liberal Party in the future he is going to get more knives in the back. The situation is exactly the same for the youth of this country, Mr. Speaker, because those deficits simply mean that the next generation will have to accept a much lower standard of living in order to pay for our expenditures today.

Now, Mr. Speaker, none of us would do that to our families, we would not impose a debt on the next generation. Indeed, most of us work in order to leave a little bit of capital for the next generation so that they can have a leg up, so that they can be a little bit ahead. It is in that way that we have increased the standard of living in our western society enormously since the times of kings and queens when our ancestors were serfs. But, Mr. Speaker, when the Government has deficits, it is imposing a mortgage on that next generation, just as surely as if it were cutting off their legs. As a result, they are less able to cope in life.

Surely, in times of inflation, 6 and 5 per cent is not a reasonable settlement of the problem. Six per cent of our income of $65,000 means that from January 1 this year all Members of the House, including Members of the New Democratic Party, will accept an increase of about $3,900. Yet we expect senior citizens, whose income may be about $3,000, to take an increase of $180. That is not right, Mr. Speaker, and this is not a Bill that I can support.

While I am a Conservative in terms of the importance of generating wealth and I know that we must have the capital of the nation owned and controlled by individuals, I know that millions of individual decisions on capital, whether they relate to small farms or little businesses, will lead to a much wiser result than a decision made by a king, a Prime Minister and a Cabinet, or a bureaucracy. As a Progressive Conservative, I believe that in times of inflation we cannot have percentage settlements in terms of social legislation. The rich get incredibly richer and the poor do not advance.

The Minister could have introduced a flat rate of $1,000 across the board. In that way, senior citizens and those people who are hurt the most could recover the actual increase in the cost of living, and people making $60,000 or $90,000 would get $1,000.

The Minister, with her $100,000 income, cannot convince me that her actual cost of living has gone up by $6,500. That is how much more she will take out of the economy this year, compared to last year. I do not believe that the Minister is working any harder than she did last year. Her productivity has not increased one whit, yet she is going to take $6,500 more out of the Canadian economy, compared to the senior citizen who is living below the poverty line and will get $180 more. That is not what we should stand for in this House, particularly when there is a solution.

In times of inflation we should go from percentage settlements to flat, across-the-board settlements. That would bring the Canadian people closer together and make them more equal in opportunity and the amount taken out of the economy.

I will resume my seat so that the Minister may rise, during my time, and answer that point.

Miss Bégin: I cannot, and you know the rule very well.

Mr. Thacker: Stand up and speak, Madam Minister.

Miss Bégin: Read your book.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills (Mr. Thacker) has the floor.

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) will not rise.

Miss Bégin: I cannot rise.

Mr. Taylor: Stand up if you are going to make a speech.

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, I am sure the House would grant unanimous consent for the Minister to rise and answer the question I am putting to her. Normally at report stage, if it were not for the fact that the Government has imposed closure, she would have to rise, and she would rise.

Miss Bégin: I cannot. Read your rules.

Mr. Thacker: It is only because of the closure motion that she cannot answer. I will sit down now, because I want to ask the House for unanimous consent for the Minister to rise and answer the question why the Government introduced percentages rather than a flat, across-the-board settlement during times of inflation.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for the Minister of National Health and Welfare to rise at this point?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There appears to be consent.

Miss Bégin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Hon. Member knows very well that the rules prevent me from speaking at report stage and that I can only answer questions at third reading, but I appreciate the unanimous consent that Members have given me.

I answered the Hon. Member while he was speaking, but he may not have heard. A flat component in the income tax system always plays in favour of the wealthy. I think the Hon. Member is not familiar with the income tax system.

If he wants to be a little more specific and explain in exactly what form that amount of money would reach people, maybe then we could talk business. I am not sure if he is doing that or playing politics.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Lethbridge-Foothills had ten minutes, and that is the normal time allowed. He may continue with unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to speak today on behalf of my constituents in Burnaby, particularly old age pensioners and those close to pension age. I am strongly opposed to Bill C-131 which, in many ways, constitutes an attack on the standard of living of some of the people of our society who are the most vulnerable to increased costs.

I want to make it very clear that in my view the Liberal Government and its Conservative allies should hang their heads in shame. They are attacking the victims of inflation in an inequitable and unfair way. I say the Liberal Government and its Conservative allies, because this Bill flows directly from Bill C-124 which the Conservative Party supported vigorously last summer. Let there be no mistake, Mr. Speaker, Bill C-124 and the accompanying documents were very explicit in the reference to pensions and the fact that there would be cuts in real terms, in old age pensions as well as pensions granted to retired public servants, retired members of the RCMP and retired members of the Canadian Armed Forces.

No one should have been surprised, of course. Indeed, the point was made on many occasions by Members of the New Democratic Party during debate on Bill C-124 that Conservatives and Liberals together were supporting legislation which would ultimately lead to cuts in old age pensions. I can assure, you, Mr. Speaker, that every old age pensioner in the constituency of Burnaby is under no illusion about the fact that it was the Liberals and Conservatives who laid the ground work for Bill C-131.

The Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), who has fought for many years for improved pensions for all Canadians, has expressed his anger and outrage at the fact that once again the Government attacks old age pensioners and erodes the protection that he and Members of this Party fought for over the years.

The effect of this Bill will be a decline in the standard of living of literally thousands and thousands of elderly people across the country. Some one million Canadians are affected, half of them women. That attack flows directly from the Liberal-Conservative Bill C-124, the six and five guidelines. It is fundamentally unfair by virtue of the fact that the total savings effected are something in the order of $105 million. What is so objectionable about the Bill is that there is no fairness, no equity, no justice whatsoever in the manner in which this sacrifice is demanded.

I could give a number of examples but because my time is limited I will only give a couple. Recently the taxation statistics were released by the federal Government. They show that the Income Tax Act is so riddled with loopholes that over 2,000 people in Canada with incomes of over $50,000 per year paid not one penny in income tax, and over 150 Canadians with incomes over $200,000 per year paid not a penny in income tax.

What kind of nerve does the Government and its Conservative allies have to ask old age pensioners to sacrifice their standard of living without asking for some kind of sacrifice from the wealthiest people—those who make over $50,000 and those who make over $200,000 per year and who are not being asked to make any sacrifice? They do not pay any taxes whatsoever.

The Conservative Party has been silent when there have been calls for tax reform to close the loopholes and ensure an element of equity. As Carter said back in the 1960s, "A buck is a buck is a buck" and should be taxed as such.

• (1710)

As well I would note that at the same time as the Government is proposing a cut in real terms in old age pensions for thousands of Canadians, it is proposing to spend billions and billions of dollars on purchasing fighter aircraft, F-18s. What kind of priorities does the Government have when it would cut the standard of living of old age pensioners and spend billions of dollars on weapons of destruction which are not needed? Surely these kinds of priorities cannot be defended either by the Liberal Government or by its Conservative allies.

The effect of this Bill is like a direct tax on those who are over 65 years of age in society. If anyone were to suggest that it be done directly, that indeed there be a tax on some one million Canadians who are entitled to the old age pension but not the GIS, I am sure there would be a justifiable cry of anger across the country. But because it is being done in this underhanded way, perhaps it is not quite as clear. I assure you, Mr. Speaker, that we in this Party will be making very clear to old age pensioners from one end of the country to the other exactly what is the effect of this Bill.

The fact of the matter is that it reduces incomes by more than $300 over the next two years for the average old age pensioner and, just as important, it reduces the base for future increases of the old age pension. This is a permanent cut in the standard of living of old age pensioners. It has been argued that those affected are those who can afford to bear the burden because they are not receiving the GIS. As the National Council of Welfare pointed out, over 100,000 poor and near-poor elderly Canadians will have their incomes reduced as a result of the limitation on indexation of the Old Age Security. These are the people who cannot afford this cut in their standard of living.

There is no control whatsoever on prices. As one of my constituents pointed out to me, it would be one thing to ask old age pensioners to take a cut in their standard of living if at the same time there was an assurance that the prices of the goods and services they need would be cut. That is not the case. While old age pensions are being cut in real terms, is there any control whatsoever, for example, on the price of food, on the price of clothing, on energy prices, on the price of transportation or housing? These are the costs which most directly affect old age pensioners. The federal Government and its Conservative allies are doing nothing whatsoever to control these increases in costs.

It may be that because there are no organized lobbies such as those of the powerful and rich Canadian Bankers' Association and others, that perhaps because there is not a vocal or outspoken lobby, the Government thinks it can get away with it. Once again I assure all Members on the Government side of the House who support this legislation that their voters will be reminded of the fact that they took part in a cut in the standard of living of their constituents. These cuts have a particularly devastating impact upon women because cuts in pensions disproportionately affect women.

I see that my time is drawing to an end. In conclusion, once again I emphasize the fact, as many of my constituents in Burnaby have pointed out, that these cuts are unfair. They are inequitable and basically represent an attack on the victims of inflation rather than coming to grips with the real economic problems of the country. Certainly we cannot accept that kind of attack either by the Liberal Government or by its Conservative allies.

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we have been debating Bill C-131 since November 18. By now we have had ample opportunity to examine its every detail through first reading, second reading, Committee meetings, and now through report stage debate.

At the beginning of yesterday's debate, the Minister said that we had already heard 71 Members speak on the debate of this particular Bill since last November. I would not need to speak if I were not concerned that much of the rhetoric we have heard about the details has effectively buried the basic reason for introducing and passing Bill C-131. I cannot remain silent and let that happen.

We on the Government side of the House must remind the Opposition and the public that we regard the scourge of inflation as a devilish force which erodes the purchasing power of those who can least afford it—those on fixed incomes, the welfare poor, the working poor and the unemployed. That is precisely why we have begun this massive program of six and five to reduce inflation. We are not yet able to say that we can stop inflation, but we have to reduce it because it is ravaging the savings of the elderly and hurting the working poor. Yes, we have decided that even to bring inflation down to 6 per cent would require the efforts of all Canadians.

We on the Government side of the House decided that it would mean an all-out effort on the part of the Government. We decided that we had to begin with ourselves, with our Public Service and with what the Government was paying out of the taxpayers' coffers. It had to apply to all Government programs. Only if we proved our sincerity and determination to apply this to every aspect could we appear to be credible or could we hope to get others to follow our example. We must set the example and appear credible if we are to succeed in calling upon and involving the co-operation of the Provinces to join us in applying six and five to their Public Services and to all their programs where their taxpayers are paying out money. Otherwise, the private sector knows that the war against inflation could not succeed if it alone were left to fight the battle.

There are some people receiving Old Age Security pensions who happily have additional incomes. They can and should and probably want to join in to do their part in the battle against inflation. That is why Bill C-131 exists. It ensures that they also are included. It is in their interests and the interests of everyone that inflation comes down. We have set our hearts and our minds to the battle against inflation through the six and five program. This is our resolve. Bill C-131 is only a part of that program.

We shall keep faith with all groups, that no one group will alone have to exercise restraint. We are all in it together. We shall not waver and flinch just because of our success, because of political expediency or because of the petty politics played by Opposition Parties.

It is distasteful to me as a Liberal to hear the Opposition lecturing us about compassion for the elderly. I am a Liberal precisely because it was a Liberal Government that brought in Old Age Security in the first place, that brought in spouses allowances, that brought in the Canada Pension Plan, that brought in the Guaranteed Income Supplement and that brought in medicare, all of which have taken away the fear and horror of becoming older that existed in the past. It is rather tragic to hear the Opposition Parties lecturing us, when we have brought in all this concern and compassion, that we should be compassionate for the elderly.

Mr. Taylor: You are the ones who are taking it away.

Mr. de Corneille: Also it was a Liberal Government which gave full indexing to the Old Age Security pension, to the Canada Pension and to the Guaranteed Income Supplement. We did this precisely to try to shelter the aged from the ravages of inflation.

How dare those Parties lecture us when now, in order to protect the elderly and all other vulnerable people in our society, we say that we must introduce six and five to reduce inflation.

Mr. Taylor: How dare you rob the old.

Mr. de Corneille: They conveniently ignore the fact that through Bill C-131 we are living up to our policy and tradition of protecting the vulnerable.

Mr. Taylor: You are robbing the hungry.

Mr. de Corneille: When they stop shouting I shall continue. It is really getting to them to hear some facts for a change. They are bleating and crying out in agony to hear the policy of the Liberal Government throughout all these decades to protect the aged and those who need protection.

Mr. Taylor: What are you talking about?

• (1720)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The Parliamentary Secretary has the floor.

Mr. Taylor: Let him tell the truth then.

Mr. de Corneille: We do this by making sure that those who are elderly and need supplements will get an extra increase just to make sure that they will be covered to a level of full indexation. That is how much we care. We put a 6 per cent inflation limit for those who can afford it and give full indexation in effect to those who need the GIS. And that is fair.

Mr. Schroder: That is a fact.

Mr. Keeper: Ask the Bishops.

Mr. de Corneille: I hope that I have put Bill C-131 back into the context of the battle against inflation, to protect the elderly who have more to lose from the ravages of inflation than any others in our society.

Mr. Taylor: Tell the Minister that.

Mr. de Corneille: As a Liberal, I am proud of our record, proud of our policies of sincerity, and of our consistent battle to maintain dignity for those who are elderly. I hope that when this legislation on six and five is passed and this battle against inflation is won we shall quickly resume our forward march to new legislation on behalf of the single pensioner, which probably will be received with great disapproval from those on the opposite benches who will not want any further social progress.

Mr. Thacker: You embarrass even the Pharisees.

Mr. de Corneille: But we shall carry forward and march to new legislation on behalf of the single pensioner and for a more effective pension scheme for all Canadians.

Mr. Taylor: Who wrote that stuff?

Mr. de Corneille: I pledge myself to continue my work on this course.

Mr. Bruce Halliday (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, when one observes the Parliamentary Secretary who has just spoken one finds him to be very quick to learn from the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). He said what he thinks the people want to hear, but then he and his Government went ahead and did the very opposite.

Mr. Friesen: And that is a fact.

Mr. Halliday: We hear the Hon. Member over there talking about concern for the social needs of the people of this country. And then the very Bill which the Hon. Member for Eglinton-Lawrence (Mr. de Corneille) is talking about is a Bill to take away a social program from the people. It is that kind of hypocrisy with which his speech was laden. I hope the Hon. Member for Eglinton-Lawrence takes a second look at his speech in the clear light of day and realizes what he has been saying and compares it to what his Government has been doing over the last number of years.

Many things have been said about Bill C-131, but I want to look at it in the context of this Government over the last ten or 15 years. We have a context here of a Government that has been elected and tries to govern on the basis of sloganeering. For instance, we have heard such things as, "The land is strong; we are going to wrestle inflation to the ground"; "the just society", and now we have the six and five program which the Government has chosen to bring forward precisely at this time because the Government thinks it has guessed well. The Government thinks it has chosen an opportune time to suggest to the Canadian people that a program of six and five, if it is publicized and marketed enough, will tie in fortuitously with the natural improvement in the economy which is bound to come. The Government has a special committee set up of people in the Prime Minister's office and from the Senate who are pushing and marketing this program of six and five. This is a slogan for the survival of the present Liberal Party.

We were provided a few months ago with a loose leaf document which is two or three inches thick. One extracted from that book, among other things, two pages with the heading "6 and 5 Strategy for the Next Three Months". It is interesting to see what this special committee of the Government proposes as strategy for the next three months. It explains what the Minister should do, what the ordinary Liberal backbencher should do. There are many points on the list, but No. 11 on the list reads:

> Continued efforts be made to cut back Government expenditure in the spirit of 6 and 5 and demonstrate commitment to restraint;

That is the priority this Government puts on some type of expenditure restraint. No. 11 on that list is a marketing gimmick to try to sell to the people of Canada the need at long last to have some restraint in government spending. But we know the Liberal Government does not mean that. We have heard just this afternoon about the big gift to Maislin. We know about the $600 million that was spent recently to buy an oil company that will return no new oil to this country at all. It is pure hypocrisy to think that the Government is serious about this. We know the Government's past record does not conform with that at all.

As we look at this whole thing in perspective, not only is this a needle into the senior citizens of this country, just as this phoney issue of six and five is, but we have this problem of closure and allocation of time. In this session we have had 15 instances when the present Government has instituted allocation of time or closure in order to cut off debate. As a matter of fact, since the beginning of this year, every single piece of Government legislation that has come before this House has been cut off by this Government. This Government has limited debate by the Opposition. This Government does not want to hear the truth about this kind of social program and how it is affecting in an adverse way the lives and the ability of our senior citizens to enjoy their lives in their advancing years. This is a double whammy at our senior citizens. This Government attacks them by slogans, trying to convince and con them into going along with this. We have heard the Parliamentary Secretary say the seniors want to be a part of this. He actually said that the senior citizens want to be a part of this restraint program for they get less real income. I do not believe that is true. I think he will hear when the next election comes that they did not appreciate his speaking on their behalf suggesting that they want to have less income at this time.

Mr. de Corneille: We will see.

Old Age Security Act (No. 2)

Mr. Halliday: There are a lot of problems with Bill C-131, Mr. Speaker. I want to touch on just a few of them. When the Minister appeared before the committee she made the suggestion that the Government was going to look after anybody who was on GIS. That was very benevolent of the Minister. We appreciate the fact that she is at least willing to show some concern for those who are GIS recipients. She was intimating, although she did not say so in so many words,that the bulk of Canadian pensioners were eligible to receive GIS. Of course, that is not true. With all due respect to the Minister, she was a little bit misleading to the senior citizens.

Miss Bégin: No.

Mr. Halliday: Only 15 per cent of the pensioners in Canada get the full benefit of GIS.

Miss Bégin: Fifty-five per cent do get some.

Mr. Halliday: The Minister says that 55 per cent do get some. That is true. Some get a very little bit. But I was saying that only 15 per cent of all pensioners are provided with the full provisions of GIS. We must not forget that it leaves an awful lot, 85 per cent, of senior citizens who will suffer to a greater or lesser extent from this drop in income which the Minister has provided.

Miss Bégin: That is not true.

Mr. Thacker: They can't hack that over there.

Mr. Halliday: Another thing that bothers me is the refusal of the Government to accept the very reasonable amendment proposed by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Okanagan North (Mr. Dantzer). He is our expert critic on the subject of pensions. He pointed out by way of his amendment, which the Government turned down, that the plans of the Government are not to provide this increase in the OAS payments at the end of 1984 as we proposed in our amendment. We felt that we could probably go along with this reduction for a two-year period, as the Minister suggested, if she would agree to increasing it up to the regular level again for 1985 and onward. But the Government and the Minister refused to do that. Therefore, what we find is that our senior citizens will suffer for the rest of their lives from a lower level of payment, no matter what the indexing feature is in future years. Because of what is being done now all senior citizens who are on OAS will receive less.

● (1730)

What concerns me about attacking senior citizens' pensions is that they suffer the most from this Government's penchant to increase various kinds of sales taxes inordinately. Seniors are unable to escape the marked increases in taxation on commodities such as oil, gas, heating fuels and other products which they need. Their expenditures tend to be high because of the increases they are faced with in the various Provinces.

Increases that are based simply upon the Consumer Price Index do not adequately meet their added cost of living which seniors must meet daily.

Another most inequitable factor which the Government has not faced up to is that a large majority of the 10 or 11 million people in the work force in Canada are not susceptible to the six and five program—unfortunately for the program—while the small sector of senior citizens who are not in the work force are included among those who have to submit to that six and five program. It may have been justifiable if they were in the work force.

I do not think I could conclude any better than by quoting a sentence from a statement made by a representative of the Professional Institute of the Public Service of Canada at a hearing of the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs. She saids:

> In the world-wide Christian tradition, in terms of the sinking ship, women, children and the elderly go first to ensure that they may escape any harm. In this sinking ship, women and the elderly are expected to plug up the holes and keep the ship afloat.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Marceau (Jonquière): Mr. Speaker, as I rise to take part in this debate on Bill C-131, I would like to explain briefly my four reasons for doing so.

The first is that I have had an opportunity to observe the work of the Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs, of which I have been a member for many years, and to look carefully at our objectives and the reasons why we now have to introduce such a Bill, which is clearly unpleasant and politically damaging.

However, Mr. Speaker, I must point out that although many groups were invited to appear before our Committee, all those wanting to express their views have had the opportunity to do so because all those interested in speaking were able to appear. We can therefore conclude, Mr. Speaker, that there are more intelligent people than we might think. There are more people who are aware that when a Government takes its responsibilities, it receives public approval. In view of the reactions we heard in Committee, we can see that, while those people might not accept all our reasons, they still understood that we had to do something and that what we did was necessary and urgent.

Mr. Speaker, my second reason for taking part, probably very briefly, in this debate, is that, as Government Members, we are often criticized for blindly following Government policy while not having the courage to approve it publicly, and for not assuming our responsibilities as members of the Government team. I must therefore say that if I have decided to take part in this debate and state that I shall support this Bill, it is because I feel that it is my duty as member of a Government which realizes that, under the present conditions problems have to be faced and we accept the responsibilities that these problems involve. It is therefore as a Government Member that I shall vote for this Bill, probably with regret, as all of my colleagues, because the capping of people's pensions and incomes is not a pleasant thing to do. It would probably be much easier to present the same arguments as my colleagues opposite, but I can understand their position because they have no choice but to say that if they were in our place, they would do something else and choose another solution? It is an easy thing to say when they already know that they will never be in our place, when they were in the past, their major decisions were generally about the same as those of a Government which is trying to act responsibly!

Mr. Speaker, my third reason for taking part in this debate is that I find it absolutely shocking and surprising that some people try to imply that members of the Liberal Party are working against senior citizens. It is simply ridiculous to believe that a Government Member or a Member of Parliament, a responsible citizen, can work against a particular group in society, especially those who have given their life, their health and their energies to build our country. This is an unfair distortion of the difficult and unpleasant decision that we must make concerning this Bill. I certainly do not want to pose as the great defender of senior citizens, but like other people, I realize that if one group in our society deserves better protection and assistance, it is certainly those who have reached retirement age.

Mr. Speaker, I would say that is exactly what we have been doing for several years since this Government took office, and I would like to commend the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) who has shown leadership in that field. She has been working extremely hard to bring additional assistance to the elderly, with the full support of her colleagues in Government and, I am glad to point out, of our colleagues opposite.

Mr. Speaker, I think we all agree that it is unfortunate that we should be forced to limit the increase in the income of the elderly, but our situation is like that of a sick person who goes to see a physician and is told: "I will have to do some surgery. You will feel some pain, but you will be much better off in the end". Would anyone ever suggest that this physician is hurting his patient on purpose? Is it not rather because the physician knows full well he has to do that if he wants his patient to recover? Well, Mr. Speaker, that is the way I look at the situation. We are acting in the interest of the elderly, in the interest of others who cannot cope with runaway inflation, and in the interest of those who have limited incomes. So much so in fact that if inflation cannot be controlled, their predicament will go from bad to worse. That is why we have decided to set a limit on the increase.

I was listening to my colleague from Burnaby (Mr. Robinson)—who is a Committee Member and who attends our meetings now and then—when he said that there will be a decrease of $300. I would be tempted to tell my friends opposite that their calculations are not always according to the book, and they have just given me a proof of that. Indeed, I have every reason to believe that the Minister of National Health and Welfare is quite right when she states that the January cheque will show $251.12 and that the monthly amount will drop by 50 cents down to $250.62 once this Bill becomes law. That means $6 for a full year. I am not a chartered accountant, I have no degree in accounting, but I just cannot understand how anyone would say publicly that senior citizens will be hit as hard as the Hon. Member for Burnaby said they will be, when in fact the loss will be no more than $6. True, the basic pension will not increase at the same rate, but that is a problem we will solve in due time. The important thing to remember is what we have done and why. Mr. Speaker, I conclude by saying that I will vote in favour of this Bill, but I hope that we will not have to take similar action in the future, that inflation will go down as we expect, and that senior citizens will be better off in the long run.

● (1740)

[English]

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Mr. Speaker, in the three minutes left to me in the debate at report stage on this Bill which will cap pensions of senior citizens, I would like to make just three short but very important points. I think that the Bill is wrong for the following reasons: first, it is based upon the premise that if one is powerful enough, one can do anything one wants. I remember how, with great fanfare during the last election campaign, the Government announced the extra moneys that it would give to those who required supplementary benefits. As soon as we came into this session, the Government did indeed pass that legislation. But now, almost at the first opportunity, when there is pressure for funds on the part of the Government, what does it do? It takes away. We return to the old adage that if a Government is big enough and powerful enough to give something, it is also big enough to take it away. First, it creates the dependency, and then it creates the withdrawal.

The second reason this is wrong is that it punishes those who follow the dictates of thrift and planning. Here we have a policy which is based on capping the increases on OAS, but not on the supplement. I understand the rationale of the Government in that those who are the poorest deserve to have as much protection as possible. However, one should take into consideration the figures given to the House and to the Minister by the Hon. Member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon), to which I think the Minister was very carefully listening. I also think she was genuinely surprised by the disparity among people which will be created by this particular legislation.

Miss Bégin: No, I am not.

Mr. Friesen: Well, I hope you were surprised.

Miss Bégin: Absolutely not.

Mr. Friesen: This group of people who have saved all of their lives and have invested in private pension plans will now be punished because the OAS will be capped, but the supplement will not. That is wrong in principle and the Government cannot prosper if it does things that are wrong in principle.

The third reason this legislation is wrong is that the role of a government, the first duty of a government, ought to be to protect those who are defenceless. In the past year we have seen the Government protecting the banks and the super corporations such as Dome, Massey-Ferguson and the trucking company, and now it wants to attack people on pension. It is wrong to attack those who are most vulnerable.

Just over a year ago, in November, the Government floated a bond at over 19 per cent interest. Within a year, those interests rates dropped by about 40 per cent. Because the Government planned poorly, it cost the taxpayer an extra $2 billion, and now it will punish the pensioners for it.

Mr. Speaker, it is wrong in principle.

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It being 5.45 p.m., pursuant to order made Monday, January 31, 1983, it is my duty to interrupt the proceedings and put forthwith every question necessary to dispose of the report stage of the Bill.

[English]

Accordingly, the question is on the motion of Mr. Dantzer. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion, the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Call in the Members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Dantzer) which was negatived on the following division:
