DR. BUCKE ON WHITMAN.

Some Interesting Personal Reminiscences of the Late Poet.

The Doctor's Mysterious Attraction Towards Whitman—His First Acquaintance and Confirmed Friendship—An Amusing Incident—The Poet's Faith.

The lecture on "Personal Reminiscences of Walt Whitman," by Dr. R. M. Bucke, superintendent of the Insane Asylum, this city, in St. Thomas Friday night under the auspices of the Collegiate Institute literary society, was largely attended and is highly praised by the press and by prominent citizens who were on the platform. As the late poet's closest personal friend, standard biographer and literary executor, the doctor was unusually to speak of one whose character and works he so ardently admired.

The lecturer said he first heard the name of Walt Whitman in 1867, while practicing in Sarnia, when Dr. T. Sterry Hunt asked him if he had heard of him, and quoted a line or two. He had a conviction then that Whitman was an exceptional man. Walt Whitman was born in 1819, and the first edition of "Leaves of Grass" was published in 1855. The war coming on had interrupted his work. In 1867 the poet published a fourth edition himself and sold it. It was also sold by an obscure bookseller. The lecturer procured a copy in 1872 with some difficulty, and read it. when the conviction was forced upon him that this man had some message for him, though he could not then understand him. After studying him for two years, the meaning began to dawn upon him. He continued studying the poet till 1877, when he determined to visit him, and wrote him to that effect, but received no answer. He went, however, and when he met Whitman he was struck, almost amazed, with the majesty and the beauty of his presence. That meeting and subsequent intercourse had resulted in the placing of the lecturer's spiritual existence on a better plane. He had to cross the Delaware River to go to his home, and now that the poet has crossed another river, the lecturer believed that he would clasp that hand again when he had crossed it. He visited the poet at various times between 1877 and 1880, and Whitman spent four months at the doctor's residence in 1880, concluding with a trip on the Saguenay River. An amusing incident occurred in connection. The lecturer wrote a poem on it, which Whitman inclosed to a magazine. By mistake it was credited to Whitman, and a criticism of the magazine stated that it was the best Whitman had ever written. Nothing can be funnier than to see Whitman on his defense.

Watching by his deathbed, as the lecturer did, he saw for the first time how a heroic soul can meet death. He was not afraid to live. He was not afraid to die. He quoted from words pronounced at his grave by a friend: "His was one of the noblest, bravest, sweetest souls that ever lived in human clay." Whitman could not be understood and appreciated in his life, but as sure as the sun shines he will take his place among the greatest and best of his race.

The chairman, Judge Ermatinger, Prof. Warner, Messrs. Pakenham and McGeary, United States Consul Husshur and Rev. B. Clement made complimentary remarks on the lecture, and the doctor read Whitman's "Prayer of Columbus" to show that he had faith in God."

AN S. A. CAPTAIN MURDERED

By the Man Who Professed to Love Her —She Refused to Desert Her Colors.

SPOKANE, Wash., May 7.—Capt. Ida Bennett, of the Salvation Army, was murdered Friday evening by her lover, Daniel W. Hoskins. Hoskins had been persistent in his attentions to Capt. Ida Bennett for the past two months, and insisted that Miss Bennett should desert the army and marry him. He went to the barracks to get his final answer. After talking with her for a few minutes he pointed a pistol at her crying, "You wronged me and you know it," and fired. She reeled backward and he fired again, both bullets reaching her heart. He then turned and fired two bullets through his own brain and fell dead beside the woman he loved. Capt. Bennett was a native of San Bernardino, Cal., and had been connected with the Salvation Army for about two years. She was widely known over the Pacific coast, and was beloved by all members of the army with whom she had come in contact.

Hoskins came here several years ago from Arkansas, where he had been a sheriff and a deputy United States marshal. He was about 43 years of age. Since coming to Washington he had been a laborer. His wife died a few years ago and some of his children are in an orphan asylum.

A mans' wife should always be the same especially to her husband; but if she is weak and nervous, and uses Carter's Iron Pills, she cannot be, for they will make her "feel like a different person," at least so they all say, and their husbands say so too.
