BOOM IN OCEAN TRAFFIC

Eighty Liners Have Already Arrived in Montreal This Season

A despatch from Montreal says: Since navigation opened on the St. Lawrence River for the season of 1911 no less than eighty ocean-going vessels and upwards of 700 lake steamers, canal boats and barges, have used the harbor each for the embarking or discharging of passengers or general cargo. The total shipments carried away by vessels bound from Montreal to other points has increased all round by at least 50 per cent.

The eighty ocean-going steamers which have come up to Montreal within the past five weeks have brought to this country fully 55,000 passengers. Assuming that ten per cent. of this number represented returning Canadians, transient English visitors and Americans passing through, it is safe to say that the stream of new arrivals coming into the country via the St. Lawrence route has averaged 10,000 weekly. Last season the arrival in one week of 5,000 or 6,000 was considered excellent.

Strings of vessels coming down the canal from Fort William, Port Arthur and Kingston are filled up to the hatchways with grain and merchandise, while boats coming from Chicago have carried on a single trip as much as 125,000 bushels of grain. Cargoes of 50 000 and 75,000 bushels are of common occurrence.

MUZZLE ALL DOGS.

Board of Health May Again Order That Canines be Chained.

A despatch from Toronto says: With the approach of the hot weather and the consequent danger of rabies in cases where people are bitten by dogs, it is very probable that the Provincial Board of Health will again order that all dogs in the province must be muzzled during the summer months. Already several cases of dog bites have been reported, and as there were so few cases reported last summer when all dogs were muzzled, it is expected that a similar order will be issued shortly. Orders already have been issued that all dogs in Scarboro Township must be kept "on chain" for ten days as a result of a bite inflicted by an animal on Gordon Henderson at Agincourt.

WIFE SLAIN BY HUSBAND.

New Westminster Man Put Three Bullets Into Her Head.

A despatch from New Westminster, B. C., says: Henry Jobes, machinist's helper, 427 Fourth Street, murdered his wife early on Saturday morning. The murder was discovered by his son, William Jobes, who, when he went to work in the morning, heard his father had bought a revolver the previous day. He immediately hurried home. Entering the house, William at once proceeded to the kitchen and found his mother lying dead on the floor with three bullet wounds in her head.

KING AND QUEEN VISIT ZOO.

Unexpected Trip to Inspect Animals From South Africa.

A despatch from London says: The members of the Royal Family, including the Queen-Mother Alexandra, on Saturday visited King George and Queen Mary to present their congratulations on the King's birthday. The King and Queen, with their children, made an unexpected visit on Saturday to the Zoological Gardens to inspect a collection of two hundred animals, which have newly arrived as a Coronation gift to the King from the Union of South Africa.

COCHRANE IS EXEMPTED.

Liquor May be Sold Within Ten Miles of Railway Construction.

A despatch from Ottawa says: Liquor licenses may now be granted by the provincial authorities in Cochrane, Ont., without objection from the Dominion Government. An Order-in-Council, which appears in the Canada Gazette, exempts this municipality from the operation of the act forbidding the sale of liquors within ten miles of the construction of the National Transcontinental Railway.

POLICE CHIEF MURDERED.

George Bell of Red Deer, Alta., Shot by Highwayman.

A despatch from Red Deer, Alberta, says: Geo. Bell, chief of the local police, was fatally shot by a masked highwayman on Thursday night when he interrupted the robber in the act of holding up two men.

C.N.R. COMPLETED PURCHASE

Nearly 8,000 Acres Bought on Mount Royal Island.

A despatch from Montreal says: It is stated that Canadian Northern interests on Thursday completed the last deal which places the company in possession of about 8,000 acres of land, stretching in unbroken continuity from the present scene of building operations in Outremont to the Back River, on both sides of Cartierville, and that this huge deal involves the disbursement of between $7,000,000 and $8,000,000. The land has been acquired primarily for the purpose of giving the Canadian Northern right of way across the island for its tracks, but it will ultimately mean the opening up of a huge district for building lots, and, in the opinion of real estate men, a highly profitable investment for the company.

FOR HALIFAX HARBOR.

Improvements to Cost in the Aggregate About $2,000,000.

A despatch from Ottawa says: Tenders for extensive harbor terminal improvements at Halifax, costing in the aggregate about $2,000,000, will be called for by the Department of Railways and Canals next week. The plans as finally settled provide for the construction of four new piers each 800 feet long and 235 feet wide. The improvements will meet the needs of the port for many years to come and will be completed as speedily as possible. A vote of $600,000 was put through Parliament before the House adjourned to enable the work to be proceeded with at once.

KING NOT PRESENT AT BALL.

Death of Great-Uncle of Denmark Modifies Entertainments.

A despatch from London says: The death of King George's great-uncle, Prince John of Denmark, is causing modifications in some of the Coronation entertainments. The Duke of Devonshire's ball at Devonshire House on Wednesday night was one of the most brilliant functions of the season. It was to have been graced by the presence of King George and Queen Mary, but owing to the death of Prince John the King did not attend, and the Queen remained only for dinner, leaving before the dancing began. The Duke and Duchess of Connaught and several other members of the Royal Family attended the ball, however.

CUSTOMS REVENUE SOARS.

Total Amount for Month of May Was $6,953,155.

A despatch from Ottawa says: A record in the import trade of the Dominion for the month of May is shown by the Customs collections. The figures show a gain of over 20 per cent. as compared with May last year, and they are a little over half a million in advance of the Customs revenue for any preceding month in the history of Canada. The total revenue for the month was $6,953,155, an increase of $1,173,829 over May of last year. For the first two months of the fiscal year the increase is $1,628,263.

LAWLESSNESS IN MANITOBA.

Bernie Residents Appeal to Attorney-General for Protection.

A despatch from Bernie, Man., says: Driven into concerted action by recent acts of lawlessness, the residents of this village at a mass meeting on Thursday decided to appeal to the Attorney-General of Manitoba for relief. Asserting that neither life nor property is safe, they have asked the department to investigate various cases of burglary, arson, house-breaking and petty thefts, and the petition states that the people of this village are afraid to sleep for fear they will be burned to death in their beds. The petition concludes by saying conditions here are a disgrace to civilization, and asks the department to take immediate action to bring the guilty to justice. A similar state of affairs existed here a few years ago, when several members of a gang were sent to the penitentiary for various terms.

A despatch from Ottawa says: Hon. Alexander Henderson, commissioner of the territory, has been granted six months' leave of absence from June 15th preparatory to retirement from the post. The new commissioner will be Arthur F. Wilson, who is now acting commissioner.

SEVEN DEATHS RECORDED

Caused by Terrific Thunderstorm and Rain in England

A despatch from London, England, says: The exceptionally high temperature that has prevailed during the month of May culminated on Wednesday evening in a terrific thunderstorm in London and the southern and western suburbs. Many persons were killed by lightning, which also struck numerous churches and other buildings. An electric wire fused in the building of the Royal Exchange and started a fire, which, however, was speedily quenched. The storm was accompanied by a deluge of rain which caused a landslide on the Southeastern Railway near Merstham, blocking that line, and also flooded the Great Western Railway at Ealing, deranging traffic. The full fury of the storm was felt at Epsom shortly after the races had ended, and thousands of the spectators were drenched. Altogether seven deaths as the result of the storm have been recorded. Five of these—two policemen and three civilians—occurred in the neighborhood of Epsom Downs.

CORONATION DAY.

June Twenty-Second is Declared a Public Holiday.

A despatch from Ottawa says: Coronation Day, June 22nd, has been officially proclaimed a public holiday. The Royal Proclamation is as follows:—

"Whereas, Thursday, the 22nd day of June, in the year of our Lord, 1911, has been fixed for our Coronation:

"And whereas, we are desirous that the said day should be observed as a day of general thanksgiving and rejoicing throughout Canada:

"Now, therefore, know ye that we have thought fit, by and with the advice of our Privy Council for Canada, to appoint and set apart Thursday, the said 22nd day of June, as a public holiday to be observed as a day of general thanksgiving and rejoicing by all persons throughout our Dominion of Canada."

PRINCESS TO BE HANGED.

Great Excitement Among the Natives in the Punjab.

A despatch from Calcutta says: A letter mailed at Amritzar, Punjab, May 15, says that there is great excitement there because a native princess has been sentenced to be hanged for murdering her lover, Kahan Chand. Arsenic was given to the man, in milk. The murderess is Ranee Sahiba, the widow of Dyal Singh, a prominent Punjabi. She has appealed from the sentence.

LIGHTNING STRUCK BATTERY

Officer Killed and Six Men Injured by Storms in France.

A despatch from Paris says: A terrific thunderstorm which broke out on Friday night did considerable damage here and in the provinces. At Grenoble a battery of artillery while manoeuvring was struck by lightning and an officer was killed and six men were injured. At Evreux a bolt set fire to the law courts building, which was destroyed, with all of its archives.

KILLED BY A TRAIN.

Tracklayer Near Woodstock Ignored Warnings.

A despatch from Woodstock, Ont., says: Kalvin Mather, aged 45, whose home is near Hickson, was instantly killed two miles east of the city by the engine of a Grand Trunk Railway freight on Friday afternoon, in full view of a large number of tracklayers who are working at that point. Mather was leaning over adjusting a rail joint, and although yelled to by a number of workmen, he seemed not to take any notice of them nor of the fast approaching freight. He was struck and hurled down an embankment, and was dead when the men picked him up.

FOUND IN WELLAND CANAL.

Girl Had Been Missing from Home for Ten Days.

A despatch from Thorold says: Owen Cummarford, while walking along the banks of the old Welland Canal, between locks 22 and 23 on Sunday morning, discovered the body of a young girl, which was identified as that of Gertrude Dale, age 16, who had been missing from home over a week.

A $4,000,000 DEAL.

Mackenzie & Mann After Coal Lands on Vancouver Island.

A despatch from Vancouver, B. C., says: It is reported that Mackenzie-Mann interests intend buying the Western Fuel Company's lands and mines on Vancouver Island at a figure said to approximate $4,000,000. Negotiations are said to be now pending upon an option secured some time ago.

CHOLERA SCARE IN VENICE

300 Cases are Reported and Visitors Leaving City.

A despatch from Vienna says: Visitors are quitting Venice on account of cholera scare. It is reported in Vienna that there are 300 cases of cholera in Venice and that the water is contaminated. The Venetian authorities deny that there is a single case.

TENDERS HAVE BEEN CALLED

Contractors Given to August 1 to Submit Bids for H.B. Line

A despatch from Ottawa says: Advertisements for tenders for the first 185 miles of the Hudson Bay Railway, starting from the present terminus of the Canadian Northern Railway at The Pas, on the west side of the Saskatchewan River, were sent out on Thursday by the Railway Department. Contractors are given until August 1 to submit tenders. The contract will be let as speedily as possible after that date, and it is expected that by the end of next year steel will be laid on nearly all of this first half of the line to the Hudson Bay terminal.

Tenders for the remaining portion of the road will be called for early next year, as soon as the route is finally located. The Railway Department will supervise the construction of the road. Chief Engineer Armstrong, who has had charge of the Government survey of the road for the past two years, will be the chief engineer in charge of construction, with headquarters at Winnipeg.

Tenders for the construction of the Halifax & Eastern Railway and for the line round the north shore of the Bras d'Or Lake in Nova Scotia, the extension of the Intercolonial system provided for before the adjournment of Parliament, will be called for in a week or so. The surveying of the lines is now nearly completed.

HOW TO TREAT SKIN TROUBLES

Greasy Ointments of No Use—The Trouble Must be Cured Through the Blood

It is not a good thing for people with a tendency to have pimples and a blotchy complexion to smear themselves with greasy ointments and such things. In fact they couldn't do anything worse, because the grease clogs the pores of the skin making the complaint worse. When there is an irritating rash a soothing boracic wash may help to allay the pain or itching, but of course it doesn't cure. Skin complaints arise from an impure condition of the blood and will persist until the blood is purified. Dr Williams' Pink Pills have cured many cases of eczema and skin disorders because they make new, rich blood that drives out the impurities, clears the skin and imparts a glow of health. Mrs. S. L. Peterson, Brandon, Man., says: "I suffered for years from eczema, which brought with it other troubles, such as a poor appetite, headaches and weakness. The portions of my body affected by the eczema gave me constant torture from the itching and heat. I tried several doctors and all sorts of lotions and ointments, but did not get the least relief. Finally I was advised to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and decided to do so. After using the Pills for some time the irritation and heat began to grow less and I seemed in better health otherwise I continued taking the Pills for several months and every vestige of the trouble disappeared, and my skin is again as free from blemish as in youth. Given a fair trial Dr. Williams' Pink Pills will not disappoint those suffering from skin eruptions or weakness of any sort."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills cure all those troubles due to poor blood simply because they make new, rich, red blood. That is why these pills cure common diseases like anaemia, rheumatism, lumbago, sciatica, neuralgia, headaches, indigestion, St. Vitus dance, and the general weakness and special ailments that only women folk know. Sold by all medicine dealers or by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

QUEER PETS.

A Woman Sets Forth the Charms of Various Small Reptiles.

With many women there are fashions in pets just as in dress, says the Queen. The year 1908 was the year of the marmoset, 1909 favored the "real live teddy bear," while last year saw the introduction of the hamster. The writer has had considerable experience with reptiles and thinks women might do worse than give some of them the next call.

Some of the small tortoises," she says, "are inexpensive but in purchasing them one should be careful to secure strong, healthy, specimens with undamaged shells. From time to time there come upon the market rarer and more expensive species. Some of these are very beautiful and well worth the fancy prices asked for them, for although sixpence or a shilling will purchase an ordinary tortoise anything up to half a guinea may be asked for the rarer kinds.

Some of the American terrapins, especially when quite young, have most beautiful coloring and markings. One that I possessed was bright green with marking in the form of concentric circles on each scale, and yellow, zebralike stripes on the head and neck. Some of the land tortoises also are scarcely less attractive. The Indian starred tortoise, for instance, has yellow, star-like markings all over its shell.

"Then there are tree frogs and fire frogs which can be kept together in the same vivarium. The tree frog is about one and a half to two inches long and is normally bright green in color, though at times it may change to fawn, pale gray or dark olive green. Each toe is provided with a small adhesive disc or pad which enables the frog to adhere to any smooth surface even to a perpendicular pane of glass. It will feed on flies and bluebottles which may be placed alive in the cage. On perceiving its prey it climbs as near as possible to it and then springs upon it from a distance of sometimes more than a foot, opening its mouth as it springs and fixing the insect with its tongue which is also provided with an adhesive disc.

"The fire frog on the contrary, is more lethargic in its movements until it has caught its prey. This, however, must not be taken as a sign that it is not equally voracious. Though barely an inch long it will tackle worms more than twice its length nor will it release its hold when once it has seized its prey. A fire frog may be angled for like a fish. You have only to attach a meal worm or caterpillar to a thread and dangle it in front of the creature's nose and it will at once seize it and may be drawn up. Sometimes two frogs will seize the same worm at the same time one at each end. Then ensues a most amusing tug of war.

"The coloring of the fire frog is remarkable. Viewed from above it is usually dull gray, though occassionally some specimens are dark green. The under parts, however, from which it takes its name, are spotted with orange red. One more curious trait about it is the habit to be observed in some specimens of curling up like a dried leaf when touched. The back is then bent and all four limbs are curled up over it until the lips of the snout and all the toes nearly touch. It is difficult to explain the reason for this action, but it is apparently designed to be in some way protective. Possibly the position is assumed in order to display the warning red color of the under side."

SHOOTING JAPANESE RAPIDS.

Those of the Hodzu River Afford an Exciting Experience.

The rapids of the Hodzu River near Kyoto must fill even the most blase of tourists with excitement. A train from Kyoto climbs slowly and painfully upward until finally it deposits its passengers at a quaint little siding.

From here, says the Wide World, one goes to the river bank and embarks in a rude, flat-bottomed boat which is pushed out by four men into the middle of a broad river, reed-edged and sleepy.

For a few minutes one glides dreamily along; then rounding a curve, one suddenly hears the roar of water and the boat tears down a rapid, just missing the docks on each side. The high banks race past, death appears imminent, and then, with one mad swirl it is all over and the boat is on the quiet unruffled stream once more.

This happens again and again for nearly an hour. At first ones' whole mind is filled with the conviction that an accident must happen, but gradually comes a delicious feeling of safety as one notes the marvellous skill these men show in piloting the boat through the seething rapids and one is able to appreciate the beauty of the scene.

BABY'S TEARS TURNED TO SMILES

The well baby is a happy baby—always cooing, gurgling and smiling. It is only the sickly baby who is cross, fretful and cries. The smile or the tears indicates baby's state of health. Mothers, if you want your baby to smile—the smile of good health and freedom from pain—give him Baby's Own Tablets. They never fail to turn the tear into a smile. Concerning them Mrs. Jas. Hutcheson, Marysville, B. C., writes:— "Your Baby's Own Tablets have been a great comfort to me while baby was teething. He was cross and fretful, but as soon as I began giving him the Tablets the effect was wonderful. He became a good natured baby right away and is now big, fat and healthy. The Tablets are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

JAPANESE HOUSES.

The modern Japanese house is built of wood with a tile roof and no cellar. Its doors are made of sliding shutters so that it is possible to make doors anywhere and leave the house open at any point. There are no bedrooms needed in a Japanese home because any of the rooms can be transformed into a bedroom by putting a thick comforter on a straw mat. Japanese houses are kept exceedingly clean and shoes are removed on entering the house, so the dust of street is not carried in.

ANTIQUITY OF TOBACCO.

The idea that tobacco has only been known in Europe since the discovery of America is incorrect. In fact the Medes and Persians a long time before our era smoked narghiles, as ancient sculpture proves. A philologist has suggested that the Greeks and Romans smoked tobacco at least in their colonies. In the Malay Archipelago the use of cigars and cigarettes is said to date much further back than the discovery of America. The word "cigar" seems to show that man's solace and comforter did not originate in the West Indies, but is most likely derived from "sakara," an Arab word meaning smoke.

HE'S A CONVERT TO A GROWING BELIEF

THAT DODD'S KIDNEY PILLS ARE THE SURE CURE FOR KIDNEY DISEASE.

Mr. Renie Moulaison was treated by two doctors, but found his relief and cure in six boxes of Dodd's Kidney Pills.

Surette Island, Yarmouth, N. S., June 5 (Special).—Renie Moulaison, a fisherman of this place, is a convert to the growing belief that Dodd's Kidney Pills are the sure cure for Kidney Disease.

"My trouble started with a cold," Mr. Moulaison states. "My muscles would cramp, I had backache and I had dizzy spells. My head often ached and I had a tired, nervous feeling while specks of light flashed in front of my eyes.

I suffered in this way for over two months and was treated by two doctors, but they didn't seem to be able to do much for me. Then I started to improve. I took six boxes in all and now I am glad to say I am cured."

If you have any two or three of Mr. Moulaison's symptoms you may be sure your Kidneys are not in good working order. Bad Kidneys mean Backache, Rheumatism, Heart Disease or Bright's Disease unless attended to. The one sure way to cure them is to use Dodd's Kidney Pills.

Waiter—"Everything here is cooked by electricity, sir." Customer—"Well, take this egg away and give it another shock."

Minard's Liniment used by Physicians.

She—"But why is it you get engaged so often, Mr. Jones?" He—"Oh, because I haven't the courage to get married."

Sores Heal Quickly.—Have you a persistent sore that refuses to heal? Then, try Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil in the dressing. It will stop sloughing, carry away the proud flesh, draw out the pus and prepare a clean way for the new skin. It is the recognized healer among oils and myriads of people can certify that it healed where other oils failed utterly.

First Sweet Damsel—"He said I had a face like one of Raphael's angels." Second Sweet Damsel—"Oh, well, the faces of Raphael's angels were painted, you know."

WAKING HIM UP.

A traveller who put up for the night at the leading hotel in a small town had, before retiring, left explicit instructions to be called for an early train.

He was very much in earnest about the matter, and threatened the boy with all manners of punishment if that duty was neglected.

Early in the morning the guest was disturbed by a lively tattoo upon the door.

"Well?" he demanded sleepily.

"I've got an important message for you," replied the boy.

The guest was up in an instant, opened the door, and received from the boy a large envelope.

He tore open the envelope hastily, and inside found a slip of paper on which was written in large letters:

"Why don't you get up?"

He got up.

Cucumbers and melons are "forbidden fruit" to many persons so constituted that the least indulgence is followed by attacks of cholera, dysentery, griping, etc. These persons are not aware that they can indulge to their heart's content if they have on hand a bottle of Dr. J. D. Kellogg's Dysentery Cordial, a medicine that will give immediate relief, and a sure cure for all summer complaints.

The new housemaid had a bad habit of standing with her mouth agape, and her mistress didn't like it. "Mary," she said sharply, one day at dinner, "your mouth is open again." "Yessum," Mary explained, "I opened it."

FACT AND FANCY.

Some say that whipping a boy makes him stupid—others that it makes him smart.

In Corea women have no names. Even when they bear sons they are only deemed worthy of being called "the mother of Hassan," "the mother of Amru," etc.

Leaders of men are seldom followers of fashion.

In olden times a favorite dish was thin slices of young deers' horns fried in butter.

No person's two ears are anywhere near alike.

The money that escapes the tax-collector might well be called "untold wealth."

The best isinglass is made from the swimming bladder of the sturgeon.

A Simple and Cheap Medicine.—A simple, cheap and effective medicine is something to be desired There is no medicine so effective a regulator of the digestive system as Parmelee's Vegetable Pills. They are simple, they are cheap, they can be got anywhere, and their beneficial action will prove their recommendation. They are the medicine of the poor man and those who wish to escape doctors' bills will do well in giving them a trial.

Harry—"What did Kate say when you proposed to her?" Frank—"She said 'Yes.'" Harry—"Then she is really going to marry you?" Frank—"Oh, dear, no! What put that in your head? The question I asked was: 'Do you prefer to remain single rather than accept me?'"

COSTLY POTATOES.

Though it was introduced into England in the reign of Elizabeth, the potato was long regarded as a luxury. There is a record of the payment of half a crown a pound for potatoes for the table of Queen Elizabeth, though at the same time her Majesty obtained some of inferior quality for a shilling. And even to-day we can pay a fancy price if we wish. Did not seven pounds of the Eldorado potato fetch $3,500 in 1903?—London Chronicle.

PRIZES FOR VIRTUE.

The French Academy spends vast sums of money every year for virtue prizes. Every commune in France has one or more prizes for virtue. France has 22,000 mayors, and one of their annual functions is to award a prize to some deserving young girl.

Away With Depression and Melancholy.—These two evils are the accompaniment of a disordered stomach and torpid liver and mean wretchedness to all whom they visit. The surest and speediest way to combat them is with Parmelee's Vegetable Pills, which will restore the healthful action of the stomach and bring relief. They have proved their usefulness in thousands of cases and will continue to give relief to the suffering who are wise enough to use them.

KING WAS REPORTER.

King Albert of the Belgians has the distinction of being the only Royalty who has served an apprenticeship as newspaper reporter. For four years he was marine correspondent of a Belgian daily.

At the Yarmouth Y.M.C.A. Boys' Camp, held at Tusket Falls in August, I found MINARD'S LINIMENT most beneficial for sun burn, an immediate relief for colic and toothache.

REST AND HEALTH TO MOTHER AND CHILD.
MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP has been used for over SIXTY YEARS by MILLIONS of MOTHERS for their CHILDREN WHILE TEETHING, with PERFECT SUCCESS. It SOOTHES the CHILD, SOFTENS the GUMS, ALLAYS all PAIN; CURES WIND COLIC, and is the best remedy for DIARRHŒA. It is absolutely harmless. Be sure and ask for "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup," and take no other kind. Twenty-five cents a bottle.

"I hope they don't give my little boy any naughty nicknames in school?" "Yes, ma; they call me 'Corns.'" "How dreadful! And why do they call you that?" "'Cause in our class, you know, I'm always at the foot."

Ask for Minard's and take no other.

AIR MATTRESS NOT NEW.

As we at the present time enjoy the luxury of an air or pneumatic mattress, we are apt to regard them as modern improvements. It is, however, a long hark back to the original blown-up bed. They are certainly known and used as early as the sixteenth century. An old cut accompanying an early translation of Vegetius, A.D. 1511, shows armed soldiers reclining on an inflated mattress, a bellows being connected with one corner for convenience in blowing up. The sleeping soldiers look as if they had entirely forgotten "war's alarms."

WISE GEORGE.

"Maud," he said softly, waking her from a day-dream, "when we are married, dearest, I wouldn't like my little wifie to be worried and bothered at all."

"No, pet," she said, "I'm sure you wouldn't. But why that remark, George?"

"I've been thinking, sweet, what an awful trouble it would be gathering up crumbs from the Turkey carpet we've decided on for the dining-room."

"Oh, George, how thoughtful of you!" she murmured. "You've such a head for trifles."

"I have it," said he; "we'll toss—tails for Turkey carpet, head for linoleum."

It fell linoleum, and as George tucked his double-headed penny safely in his waistcoat pocket he whispered:

"Such a head for trifles, did you say, petsie?"

THE MARCH OF CHOLERA.

Professor Chantemesse of the Academy of Medicine, Paris, has made a special study of the progress of the cholera epidemic of 1910. He shows that of 200,000 persons attacked in Russia, nearly 100,000 were killed by the disease. The river Danube opened a way for the epidemic into the heart of Europe, but owing to the careful guard maintained, not many cases got in. There were some in Germany, as well as in Roumania, Servia, Hungary, Croatia and Slavonia. Italy was reached by way of Brindisi, on the Adriatic Sea. A considerable number of cases developed in Naples, and four got as far as Marseilles. Professor Chantemesse utters a warning concerning the probable outbreak of the epidemic next summer, and insists that a more strict surveillance over immigration along the recognized "cholera routes" is needed. Emigration is the great agent for the spread of this disease.

ZAM-BUK SAVED THIS BABY

Mrs. M. Barrett, 600 Mowat St., Montreal, says:

"A horrid rash came out all over my baby's face and spread until it had totally covered his scalp. It was irritating and painful, and caused the little one hours of suffering. We tried soaps and powders and salves, but he got no better. He refused his food, got quite thin and worn, and was reduced to a very serious condition. I was advised to try Zam-Buk, and did so. It was wonderful how it seemed to cool and ease the child's burning, painful skin. Zam-Buk from the very commencement seemed to go right to the spot, and the pimples and sores and the irritation grew less and less. Within a few weeks my baby's skin was healed completely. He has now not a trace of rash, or eruption, or eczema, or burning sore. Not only so, but cured of the tormenting skin trouble, he has improved in general health."

Zam-Buk is sold at all stores and medicine vendors, 50c. a box, or post free from Zam-Buk Co., Toronto, for price, 6 boxes for $2.50. A certain cure for all skin diseases, cuts, burns, etc., and for piles.

Rev. E. G. Powel; of Exeter is secretary of Exeter District

Rev. J. E. J. Millyard of Hensall is the new secretary of London conference.

Mr. T. Baker purchased another auto for his livery last week, bringing it home Saturday evening. Mr. John Hunkin has purchased the auto formerly owned by S. Martin & Son. This makes about a dozen autos owned in town with several more to follow, if all reports are true.

Don't swear any more. It is a silly, belittling practice, fraught with evil of a black type. If you were served right the law of the land would snap you up so quickly it would make your head swim. People don't have to listen while some fellow makes the atmosphere lurid with profanity. Not because he is angry, but for the simple reason that he forgets that he is a man.

Our company politeness is generally superficial, because we are little or nothing for those we try to be polite to. It is assumed. But if we are interested in those at home and are anxious to make their lives pleasant, we will endeavor to give expression to that interest, and in doing that we will be doing a really polite thing for such feelings. The cultivation of the expression will be the best possible education in true politeness.

The following directors were elected for the ensuing year at the Annual meeting of the South Huron Farmers' Institute in Brucefield,—Stanley,— Alex. Mustard, Thos. Fraser, W Murdock, W W. Forest, D. B. McNaughton, Robert Snowden, John Moffatt, John A. McEwen; Hay—W. Caldwell, John Geiger, Fred Willert, Robert Turnbull. Stephen—W. D. Sanders, S. Hogarth, John Love E. Shapton. W. Morlock. Usborne—Robt. Gardiner, J. T. Allison, J. Johns, Chas. Monteith. Tuckersmith— George Weir, Alex Grey, R. D. McLean, P. McKay, R. McKay, Thos. Shillinglaw. Hensall—Robt. Hacrett, J. W. Oriwein. Exeter—E. Christie, T. B. Carling, B. S. Phillips. Seaforth—M. Y. McLean. The regular Institute meetings will be held as formerly at Brucefield and Exeter, supplementary meetings will be held at Elimville in Usborne; Shipka in Stephen Zurich, Hensall and Varna, and at Strong's in Tuckersmith. The dates for these meetings will be announced later on. At a subsequent meeting of the new board of directors, Mr. John T. Allison of Usborne was elected president; John Elder, Hay, Vice-president, and B. S. Phillips, Exeter, secretary and treasurer. It was also decided not to hold an excursion to the Experimental Farm at Guelph this season.

On Saturday morning last we were handed small sheaves of fall wheat and of rye, the former measuring four & a half feet in length, and the latter six and a half feet. This is a remarkable good growth of grain for so early in June. They were grown on the property of Mr. Abraham Dearing, east of town.

"R. E. Manning, the genial and popular local manager of the Royal Bank, left this morning for Denver, Col., and will on Wednesday next be married to Miss Nettie W. Fisher of that city, youngest daughter of the late A. S. Fisher, formerly of Clinton.—Clinton News Record. Mr. Manning is an Exeter Old Boy.

Harry Garside, a G. T. R. brakeman of London, narrowly escaped instant death while on duty at Hensall on Monday. Cars were being shunted when one of them struck the unfortunate man, breaking several ribs and pieces of the broken bone penetrated his lung. He was immediately taken to the hospital at London where he now lies in a rather critical condition.

Shareholders of the Sovereign Bank will soon find themselves members of the International Assets, Limited, the official title of the corporation formed with the consent of the existing banks to prevent the imposition of the double liability on the Sovereign shares. The president & general manager of the bank, respectively, have issued a circular to the subscribers that stock in the International Assets will be allotted.

Bell, who is establishing an Indian agency at Fort Smith, has taken a couple of buffalo herders with him in order to round up the four hundred wild buffalo wandering round the Plains of the Peace River Valley, the only herd of wild buffalo on the American continent to-day.—From Rod and Gun for June. Ever since we read the above item and saw the stock of ammunition and firearms in the trunk of two of our young men who recently struck out on a trip to Peace River District, we have been wondering whether Sandy and Jimmy are the buffalo herders referred to above.

LITTLE SON DIED.—William J., the infant son of Mr. and Mrs. William J. Smith of Detroit, died suddenly about 4.30 a.m. Friday last at the home of the former's parents, Mr. and Mrs. S. Smith, London Road South. The little one was taken ill shortly after midnight and died three hours later, apparently from stoppage of the bowels and heart failure. The funeral took place to the Exeter cemetery on Sunday afternoon. Mr. and Mrs. Smith, who were spending a short holiday here, have the sympathy of their many friends in their loss, this being their second little one that has passed away in infancy.

COMMUNICATION

To the Advocate,--

I notice in your last issue you called the attention of the citizens of our once loyal town to a celebration which should have been held on June 22nd, our King's Coronation Day. The Reeve and some of the Council were spoken to and asked to call a public meeting but I note nothing has been done. This celebration was intended for the scholars (particularly) of our Public school, so that they might remember a great historical day. As it is almost too late to get up a day's celebration I would ask that a big bonfire be built down on the newly acquired land, near the pond, and that a subscription be raised to get a good fire works display for that evening. Being close to the water there could be no danger, and it would cause a mild excitement. I see in the Old Country large bonfires are to be started in each parish simultaneously and rockets 'ab libitum.' Could this be accomplished? Who will start it?

Yours truly,

Loyalist.

MOORESVILLE.

One of the prettiest weddings seen this season was solemnized at St. Patrick's Roman Catholic Church, Biddulph, on June 8th, at 10 o'clock, when Miss Julia Irene Lamphier was united in matrimony with Mr. Thomas Nagle, a prosperous young farmer of Missouri. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Fr. Hanlon, Parish Priest of Biddulph. The bride looked charming attired in a beautiful white embroidery dress over silk and wearing a magnificent white hat, trimmed with two beautiful willow plumes, she also carrying a bouquet of white roses. The bride was ably assisted by her sister Miss Laura as bridesmaid, who wore a pretty yellow figured silk muli with hat to match, made of yellow silk braid and trimmed with two white willow plumes and velvet ribbon, she also carrying white roses. Mr. Edward Nagle of Toronto, a brother of the groom, performed his duties well as groomsman, and the two little Miss Browns, cousins of the bride, made charming little flower girls, strewing lillies of the valley ahead of the bride and groom. The dining-room was beautifully decorated for the occasion with white ribbon, evergreens and carnations. The table was in the form of a horse shoe and an arch being built in the centre with white bells covering the bridal party. A grand dinner was served. Many beautiful presents were given, the bride receiving a couple of checks and a handsome piano from the groom, showing the high esteem in which she is held. Guests were present from New York, Toronto, Stratford, London, St. Marys, Lucan and Centralia, to the number of 150. Mr. and Mrs. Nagle left on the 5.20 train for Niagara Falls, Detroit and other points, amid showers of confetti and rice. The bride's going away suit was navy blue silk, trimmed with all over lace and a beautiful black hat. On their return Mr. and Mrs. Nagle will reside on the groom's fine farm in Missouri near St. Marys.

Each of the above meetings will commence at 8 o'clock.

All are cordially invited. Front seats reserved for ladies.

Mr. McLean will be assisted at the Crediton Meeting by Mr. M. S. Sebell, M. P., South Oxford. At the Dashwood meeting by Mr. Thomas McMillan, ex-Reeve of Hullett. At the Exeter meeting by Hon. W. L. MacKenzie King, Minister of Labor in the Dominion Cabinet, and by Mr. A. W. Smith, M. P. of North Middlesex.

Heavy Wind Storm

BARN DESTROYED

A heavy wind storm visited this section on Sunday afternoon and destroyed two barns belonging to Mr. James Frayne on the second of Usborne, as well as doing damage to fruit and shade trees in the district.

Dark and threatening clouds arose in the northwest shortly before 3 o'clock and with scarcely a moment's warning the wind accompanied by a heavy shower of rain swept across Exeter, destroying a tree or two here and there but doing no particular damage until it struck Mr. Frayne's barns. The main barn stands north and south, and a few days before he had moved a barn from his north farm and had it placed to the east of the main building. The whole was then jacked up on blocks preparatory to putting a foundation underneath. The main doors were to the west and the wind had a clear sweep into the barn, and owing to the other barn being placed to the east the wind had no outlet, with the result that both buildings, with the exception of the northwest corner of the main barn, were blown off the blocks and flattened to the ground. Mr. Frayne had a wind insurance policy for $1000, one-half only being allowed when a barn is on blocks or being moved. The owner's loss will be considerable, besides being a great inconvenience at this time of the year.

Besides other parts of Hay Township, the Sauble Line was hard hit, several barns being unroofed, and fruit and shade trees destroyed. A fine new barn belonging to Jos. Bedard was flattened cement foundation and all.

At Grand Bend Park many trees were blown over, and the cement cottage of Mr. Wm. Southcott of London was totally wrecked.

At Rodgerville the roof of John Willis' barn was blown off, part of it alighting on Alf. McTaggart's barn, and the other half being away out in the field.

The story is told that a man in Hay drove a team off horses at a breakneck speed for 40 rods to escape a barn roof that was flying over his head, only to be beaten by the roof, which landed a few feet in front of the team.

Around Brucefield fences, barns, trees and chimneys were badly damaged.

NEW TRAIN SERVICE TO "LAKE OF BAYS."

An important feature that will be inaugurated during the coming season will be new train service to the "Lake of Bays" district. A standard Grand Trunk passenger train will leave Toronto with through coaches, parlor cars and dining car at 10.15 o'clock in the morning, daily except Sunday, for Huntsville, reaching the latter point at about 3 o'clock in the afternoon, connecting with the steamers for points in the "Lake of Bays" district, and affording passengers the opportunity of reaching their destination in time for dinner.

The Sunday evening boat service from the Wawa hotel, Britannnia, Point Ideal Portage, Deerhurst and other important calling ports on "Lake of Bays" to Huntsville will be run on same schedule as for season 1910, during the months of July and August, and which will be a boon to week-enders desiring to return to the city for business on Mondays.

STAFFA.

The home of Mr. Bert Kerslake was the scene of a quiet wedding on Wednesday last, when his sister, Miss Mary, was united in marriage to Mr. Thomas Kemp, Hibbert Tp., the nuptial knot being tied by Rev. Rural Dean Doherty of Hensall. The young folks have our sincere good wishes.—The ladies' aid of Grace Church are busy preparing for their annual strawberry festival in Hibbert Town Hall on Tuesday evening, 20th June next, when a excellent program will be rendered.

Baseball

The Juniors went down to defeat on Thursday evening on the local diamond at the hands of the Centralia. Juniors. Nine innings were played, resulting 7-2. Exeter had a number of costly errors, but the visitors had a little the better of the game all through. Clarence Duplan umpired.

The senior ball team played a game with Brinsley at Centralia Friday night and won out, the score being a heavy one, after the nature of a cricket match, 15-12. T. Boyle umpired. Following is the line-up,—Exeter, Carling 2, Bellwood 2, Hoskins 2, Boyle 2, Steer 2, Fisher 0, Binney 2, Brintnell 1, Mallett 2—Total 15. Brinsley,—Bradley 1, Craven 2, Weir 1, Dorman 2, Dorman 2, Riley 1, Miller 1, Falder 0, Flynn 0.—Total 12. Fisher sustained a sprain in one ankle, which has made him do the limp act since.

HALF MILLION CEMENT PLANT FOR ST. MARYS.

St. Marys is to have one of the largest cement works in Ontario. The stock of the company which is capitalized at $500,000, has been all subscribed by some of the leading financiers of Toronto and the United States, Mayor F. G. Sanderson of St. Marys, also being financially interested. The company has bought the Legge farm of one-hundred acres, the rock and clay formation of which will produce the finest Portland cement. The works will employ one-hundred and fifty men and have a capacity of 1200 barrels daily, and will be completed by April 1, 1912. The town council will guarantee the bonds of the company for $40,000 and will give them exemption from taxation for ten years.

FORTUNE FAVORS THE BRAVE;

OR, A LOOK INTO THE PAST

CHAPTER XIX.

It was Nancy who spoke first.

She was leaning against the massive tree, a world of emotion and agitation expressed in her sweet face.

"What—what are you doing here?" she asks, feebly, almost inaudibly. "How did you get in?"

Derrick looked mystified, but only for an instant; his heart was beating almost to suffocation; strong man as he was, he trembled at the violence of the joy and bitterness mingled that suddenly came upon him.

"I beg your pardon for intruding. Believe me, I had no idea you were here, or I should not have come."

Nancy was breathing in short gasps, her eyes had left his and were wandering round in a nervous, hunted way, which sent an angry pang to his heart.

"You—you have startled me!" she murmured. "No one ever comes here. How did you come? Why did you come?"

There was a desperate ring of sorrow in that last question.

"I jumped the gate over there," he explained in low, eager tones. "I want to get back to the Hall, and thought this part of the grounds was a short cut. I——"

"Part of the Hall grounds," Nancy repeated, with her eyes still going about nervously, as if in search of something or some one. "You—you have made a mistake—this is not Ripstone property."

"Not Ripstone! Then where am I?"

He went a step nearer to her in his surprise.

"These are the manor grounds, and—and my home!"

Nancy's lips trembled as she uttered the words that should have been pregnant with tenderness, but which, uttered in her low, pathetic voice, carried only too truly the sad plaint of despair.

Derrick stepped back involuntarily; he was utterly surprised and overwhelmed with pained annoyance.

"I entreat you to pardon me," he said, in tones that were choked beyond recognition. "Indeed, I knew nothing of this—it is a terrible blunder to have made; but, believe me, I have blundered in ignorance. I did not know that this was the manor property. I did not know that—that you were even in the neighborhood. I can but offer my sincere apologies and depart at once."

He had half turned aside as he spoke, and, therefore, did not see her sudden gesture of despair and anguish—nor the tears which welled up in her glorious eyes and blinded her so that she had to press her hand over them to relieve them; but as he waited a moment for her to answer, and found she was silent, he turned again, and then he saw that she was utterly powerless to speak, for she was weeping—weeping very silently, but none the less bitterly.

In one stride he was beside her—honor, self-restraint, everything forgotten in the rush of mad, passionate love and emotion that swept over him.

"Nancy—Nancy! Oh God! don't—don't, I can't bear it—I can't bear it!"

He had her two trembling hands in his firm grasp, robbed of their shelter, Nancy bowed her head to hide her tears. Now her self-reproach, her remorse was gone, for Derry did not, could not surely hate her if he spoke like this.

For an instant they stood quietly, though the pulses of each thrilled with mingled ecstasy and misery.

"I have frightened you by my sudden appearance, dear," the man said at last, speaking in tones of the deepest tenderness and sadness. "I who would sooner cut off my right hand than give you a moment's pain. Can you forgive me, Nancy?"

Her fingers closed round his for an instant.

"Oh! don't speak like that!" she cried, brokenly. "Forgive you—you!" Then she wrenched her hands from his grasp. "Go—go at once," she whispered, eagerly, intensely; "don't ask me why—only go."

He hesitated for an instant.

"I can't go," he muttered, almost fiercely; "you ask too much of me; think of all I have endured, of all I have suffered since that summer night! Nancy, you wrecked my life then. Now that we have met, I have a right to know why you did this; why you—you who love me—yes, who love me still—you can't deny it!—why you acted as you did and married this man—this awful brute! Answer me — I will know!"

Nancy's two hands were clenched together against her heart; two fierce spots of color burned on either white cheek; she was swaying to and fro uncertainly in her agitation.

"What if I say I will not answer you?" she murmured, huskily. Then, with a sudden change, she held out one hot, trembling hand toward him. "Derry, my — my darling!—yes, my darling!—do you love me?" she asked him, with strange, unnatural calmness. Then, before his lips had time to open even, while he held her hand in an iron grip between his own: "Yes—yes, I know your answer. You are true, stanch, loyal—my brave, my hero! Then—if you love me—you—you will not make me suffer more—you will not stay now to question me on the past, the present or the future! You will leave me at once—when—when you know what pain your presence brings!"

Derry stood for one instant silent, motionless. He was barely conscious of what fierceness he put into the agony of the grasp that held her hand; a lump rose in his throat and nearly choked him; her pale, pathetic face, so sweet, so pure, so wholly given up to the intensity of her love for him, struck his heart with the deepest pain he had ever felt in his life.

The sudden gleam of happiness that would come when he learned that this girl was still his—his by love's powerful right—did not linger long. It was followed by a rush of despair, of anguish.

Her eager, strangely nervous appeal gave him an additional pang.

"It is very, very hard," he muttered, when at last speech came, "to find you, to know that all these past weeks, when I have been reviling you, you have been true in your dear heart—to me!—to stand beside you and hold your hands, and yet to hear you say that I must go at once!—go! Nancy, do you understand what that means? We may never meet again—try and realize what that will mean to both of us!"

He was quivering from head to foot. The events of the last few minutes had completely and utterly unnerved him. The sudden shock of coming upon Nancy, the anguish that followed on the brief ecstasy awakened by her avowal of love, all acting on a mind already nervous and unhinged with the struggles it had undergone and endured of late, robbed him of every scrap of strength.

His face had grown paler even than the girl's wan one looking up at him. The flushed, stalwart young fellow who only a few moments before had leaped the gate so lightly and easily seemed to have no kinship with this pale, haggard creature.

The very dogs seemed to understand that something dreadful was happening, for they stood with sad, patient eyes, gazing up at those two distraught faces as though they offered silent sympathy and help.

The man's weakness gave Nancy strength.

"I know—I understand," she said, in quiet, low tones. "But even so—dearest—it yet must be done!"

"Then your words were false just now! You do not love me! You could not love me, and tell me to leave you!"

He loosened his hold on her as he spoke.

Tears welled into Nancy's blue eyes and rolled down her cheeks—those pale, wan cheeks, that were so different from the rosy ones she had owned back in the summer months.

She made a little gesture of despair—so forlorn, so full of desolation, that it struck him to the heart.

His arm went out suddenly toward her, as if to infold her and hold her to his breast; but she did not see the movement, for her head was bent, and some innate touch of purity and delicacy withheld him from his purpose.

"Forgive me, dearest one!" he said, in low, hurried tones. "I—I did not know what I was saying, Nancy! Tell me that you forgive me, dear!"

"There is no need for forgiveness between us," the girl answered, gently, choking her tears with difficulty. Then she turned to him: "But you must go. Yes—yes, for my sake, you will go! Do not make my——"

She stopped; it almost seemed as if she choked herself.

"Nancy—tell me—does—he—oh! I can't say it! You are unhappy with him. I will not ask you again to give me the reason of this marriage, the reason for ruining our love, our life! But this you must answer me—it is my right—I demand to know—does he treat you well?"

She was silent for a moment. Ah! if she could but have flung herself on his broad breast, and have wept out all the horrors, the miseries, of her brief married career, what a comfort, a relief, it would have been! But she dared not do this. Were she to tell Derry one quarter of the truth of her wretched existence, who knew what he might not do?

Besides this, her honor compelled her to be silent. Whatever happened, she was Crawshaw's wife! She had married him knowing what he was. To utter complaint was therefore out of the question. And even were this not so, she would have shrunk from letting Derrick Darnley, of all people, into the dark truths of her present life.

With a magnificent courage she conquered her longing to cling to him as the first friend she had met for months, to beg him to shield and protect her, to remove her from the horrible surroundings which made up her daily existence. She even forced a wan, faint smile to her lips.

"Don't—don't," she said, though the smile soon went, and a quiver came instead. "I have everything that money can buy—and what woman wants more?"

Darnley's dark eyes dwelt on her face tenderly.

Then, with a sudden movement, full of chivalry and homage, he stooped and kissed her hand; the next moment he would have turned away, but she stopped him.

"Derry, tell me—tell me of Dorothy—my sister, my more than friend! She is in trouble, and I am here—here, so close, and yet so far away from her! Ah! in all my trials, there has been none greater to bear than this!"

The words seemed to escape her unconsciously, forced from her overcharged heart by the fulness of her bitterness, and Darnley was more than answered. He knew then that his fears had been only too well founded ,and that Nancy had more to fight against in her present life than vulgarity and uncongenial surroundings.

But as she had been brave and refused to complain, so he would honor her courage. He saw she did not know how plainly she had given him the knowledge for which he had asked. She had been thinking of Dorothy, and in the sympathy and love she gave to her girlfriend, her sister, her bitter cry of despair had escaped her unnoticed.

In a few gentle words he gave her the last hopeful news of Sir Humphrey.

"Ah!" she breathed, fervently, clasping her hands together, "that at least is a glimpse of sunshine to me! They were so good—so very, very good to me. Sometimes when I am sitting alone dreaming, it seems as if all that happiness which came to me through their goodness never belonged to me. It was some other creature who lived up at the Hall and basked in the sunshine and flowers, was beloved by dear Dorothy, petted by Sir Humphrey, made much of by every one." Her voice had grown choked as she spoke hurriedly. "Then," she went on, feverishly—"then I wake to know that the sunshine has gone, that I have lost Dorothy, and that though she is in sore distress, I do not even go to her and offer her comfort. It is a horrible thought!" she said, with a shudder. "She has called me—yes, I have heard her voice, and yet—yet I do not move a step to help her. Oh, will God punish me for my ingratitude? Will He make me suffer more?"

BOVRIL

Assists Digestion

It makes a gravy or sauce which is delicious in flavor and which also is a great aid to digestion.

A little Bovril makes Soups of all kinds more nourishing.

A SPONGE MARKET.

Bids for "Strings" are Handed to the Auctioneer.

Sponges grow to perfection at the bottom of the blue waters of the Gulf of Mexico and are found in greater abundance within a radius of twenty-five miles of Tarpon Springs than elsewhere in the waters of the United States, and are of a superior quality. They are excelled only by those caught in the Mediterranean Sea.

Sponges are taken by divers who go down in waters twenty to fifty feet in depth. These divers often meet with exciting adventures and are constantly exposed to danger from sharks and other denizens of the deep. Their pay is based on the value of the sponges taken, and runs from $50 to $200 a week.

When sponges are first taken they are filled with animal life. They are washed as clean as possible, are assorted, and placed on "strings" four feet ten inches in length. They are then ready for sale. There are four grades, in the following order: Wool, yellow, wire and grass.

The sponge market is a lot about an acre in extent in the centre of which is a large building or shed. The sponges are placed in piles of 100 to 150 "strings" all round this building. The sale is conducted in a peculiar way. The buyers examine the sponges and when the auctioneer opens the market and calls for bids they write their offers on slips of papers and hand them in. The auctioneer examines the highest bid, which may be refused by the owner, but the same sponges are not offered for sale twice the same day. They may be put up once more, and if not sold then must be taken away and incorporated in a new lot. The sales take place Tuesdays and Fridays, and the amount realized averages about $12,000 a week.

THE DIET IN RHEUMATISM.

Red Meats Not the Only Article of Food to be Avoided.

If there is a disease more than any other that is caused by improper diet, and that can be helped most often by a diet properly adjusted to the capacity of the patient, it is rheumatism, in almost every one of its forms.

There is a popular belief that meat, especially red meat, is the only archfiend that carries into the system uric acid and the other members of the purin group, but this is not correct. Tea, coffee, chocolate, cocoa, peas, beans, asparagus, onions and a few other foods all contain the purin bodies to some extent. Animal soups and malt liquors are also guilty.

All alcoholic liquors are objectionable, some, of course, more than others. By many the white meat or chicken or other fowl is considered much less pernicious than red meat, such as beef, mutton, lamb, etc.; by others this is contradicted. Excellent authorities, however, state that whatever may be true theoretically the so-called red meats seem most objectionable practically.

Increasing the easily digested animal foods, allowing milk, eggs, a small amount of cheese, broiled or roasted meats, beef, lamb and chicken in small quantities once a day often brings a happy result. Combine with these farinaceous foods, such as rice, farina, tapioca, wheat bread, etc., and suitable vegetables and fruits. Such procedure may give just the relief the overworked machine is craving. During acute attacks of rheumatism the diet should consist of milk, buttermilk, milk toast, gruels, etc. This should continue so long as there is any fever. All meats and other objectionable articles mentioned above should be excluded until recovery is assured. Alkaline waters are valuable, and excellent results follow the use of generous quantities (at least three pints daily) of any pure soft water taken between meals.

When we hear some people talk we wonder how it is possible for them to change their minds.

On the Farm

TIME FOR COW TO FRESHEN.

Winter dairying has been advocated for many years on the ground that it is more profitable. In the first place, there is not as much work on the farm in the winter time to claim the attention of the owner as there is in the summer. During the summer months the fields must be tended, the crop gathered, repairs made on building, etc., while in the winter the dairyman has an opportunity to devote the greater portion of his time to his cows.

When proper methods are used in preparing a ration for a cow, it is very doubtful whether it costs any more to feed her in the summer than in the winter, especially when we take into consideration that a drought is apt to come during the month of July and August and force the dairyman to feed grain and hay. Moreover the price of land has been steadily advancing, making pasturage more and more expensive. With the use of the silo the growing of clover or alfalfa makes it possible for the dairyman not only to prepare a very good ration, but a very economical one. Further, cows that calve in the fall will produce more milk in a year, as a rule, than those that drop their calves in the spring. If a herd is properly fed during the winter season the milk yield will be sustained throughout the winter and when they are turned to grass in the spring the stimulating effect of the grass will usually increase their milk flow and there will be no heavy shrinkage in milk flow until the cows are ready to go dry.

Another reason for having the cows calve in the fall is that it gives the calf a better opportunity to develop. When calves are born in the spring they are apt to be troubled considerably by flies to whose ravages they are very susceptible. Fall born calves receive closer attention from the feeder than if born in the spring, as there are not so many things claiming his attention. For the first few months of the calf's existence, it can make but little or no attention, which is no drawback, as the fields are demanding all the time that a farmer can give.

In many respects we consider fly time the hardest and at least the most aggrevating time to produce milk and the more cows that are dry at this season of the year, the better, so far as the milker is concerned. We recognize, of course, there are circumstances and conditions which make it more profitable for men to have their herds calve in the spring, and dairymen supplying cities with milk must have their herds calve at all seasons of the year, but as a general thing we believe it is more profitable and more satisfactory to have the herd calve in the fall.—Hoard's Dairyman.

STOCK IN SUMMER.

Nothing contributes more to the thrift of live stock than persistent attention to its needs. The spasmodic enthusiast whose devotion to his charges is in proportion to the immediate impulse is never a real stockman. Physical well being cannot be administered in bulk. The animal which is comfortable, without hunger or thirst from day to day, and not subjected to disease, maintains a healthy, steady advance in growth, flesh or milk production. Every period of hardship, however short, is accompanied and followed by stagnation of nutritive processes and the possible loss of progress already made.

The pasture season is hailed as a relief from daily ministration to the comfort of stock, but that idea is generally overworked. The natural advantages of grazing and hospitable weather are easily dissipated by carelessness. Short pasture, a stale water supply, insufficient shade and protection from flies, vie with the ravages of disease, parasites and preventable accidents in annoying the stock and robbing the stockman.

As the summer advances there is a strong temptation to allow animals to fare as best they may while the entire attention of the farm help is given over to the crops. This course cannot be safely followed. When attention lapses accidents seem most prone to come.

Even if complete arrangements are made for carrying stock past the harvest rush of work with the minimum of attention, responsibility cannot be laid aside. A few years ago a farmer busy cutting wheat did not see his flock of sheep from one Sunday until the next. In the meantime several lambs were killed by dogs, and a fat ewe, unable to get up after rolling over on her back, had perished after an evident struggle of a day or two. Ponds and streams sometimes go dry with amazing suddenness in harvest time, with consequent suffering to animals. Blackleg may get in deadly work among the calves of a herd when frequent inspection and timely vaccination would have nipped the epidemic at its inception.

In a hundred ways the revenue from summer pastures may be lost by the man who is too busy here and there to attend to all of his interests. The stockman can never shake off responsibility. His fidelity to it measures his success.—The Breeders' Gazette.

Most of us feel that we could get along nicely on double our income.

"What is your idea of a heroine, John?" asked the wife of his bosom, and she looked up from the novel she was reading. "A heroine, my dear," answered John, "is a woman who could talk back, but doesn't."

$3,600 in Cash Prizes for Farmers

READ the conditions of the Prize Contest we are conducting for the farmers of Canada. $400.00 in prizes will be awarded to each Province. These prizes will be divided into four groups, consisting of:

PRIZE "A"—$100.00 to be given to the farmer in each Province who will use during 1911 the greatest number of barrels of "CANADA" Cement. PRIZE "B"—$100.00 to be given to the farmer in each Province who uses "CANADA" Cement for the greatest number of purposes. PRIZE "C"—$100.00 to be given to the farmer in each Province who furnishes us with the photograph showing the best of any kind of work done on his farm during 1911 with "CANADA" Cement. PRIZE "D"—$100.00 to be given to the farmer in each Province who submits the best and most complete description of how any particular piece of work (shown by photograph sent in) was done.

Every farmer in Canada is eligible. Therefore, do not be deterred from entering by any feeling that you would have little chance against your neighbor. For remember, Prizes "C" and "D" have no bearing whatever upon the quantity of cement used.

As a matter of fact, your success in this contest will depend to a great extent on your careful reading of our 160-page book, "What the Farmer Can Do With Concrete." In this book—sent free on request to any farmer, full instructions are given as to the uses of concrete, and plans for every kind of farm buildings and farm utility. You'll see the need of this book, whether you are going to try for a prize or not. If you have not got your copy yet, write for it to-night. Simply cut off the attached coupon—or a postcard will do—sign your name and address thereto and mail it to-night.

Hints for Busy Housekeepers.

Recipes and Other Valuable Information of Particular Interest to Women Folks.

SEASONABLE RECIPES.

Rhubarb Short Cake.—No. 1 — One and one-half cups flour, one and one-half teaspoons baking powder, one-fourth teaspoon salt, one-half cup butter, scant, milk enough to moisten. Mix flour, salt and baking powder. Rub the butter into this. Moisten with enough milk to make a stiff dough. Spread thin on a well buttered tin. Skin and cut thin a pound and a half of rhubarb. Add a cupful of sugar and shake well. Pour over this a custard made of a half cupful of sugar, yolks of two eggs, and a cupful of rich milk . Bake twenty-five minutes.

No. 2—At night set a sponge with three-fourths of a pint of milk, one teaspoon salt, and one yeast cake, flour to thicken. In the morning cream one-half cup of butter, one-half cup of sugar, and two eggs. Add a little nutmeg and a little lemon rind. Add sponge to this and beat well, then add enough flour to make a thick batter. Pat in well buttered tins—it will make three—and let rise again. One can be used for the rhubarb cake and the other two can be made into coffee cake by spreading generously with butter and sprinkling sugar and cinnamon on top. For the rhubarb cake boil a sauce of two pounds of rhubarb and a cup and a half of sugar. When cool add the yolks of two eggs. Pour this on the dough when raised and bake fifteen minutes. Make a meringue of the whites of eggs and brown lightly. It is much nicer if the meringue is omitted and whipped cream is served in its place on top.

New Fruit Salad.—One can sliced pineapple, one-half can white cherries, two oranges. Arrange the slices of pineapple on lettuce leaves. Mix the cherries and sliced oranges, and place upon the pineapple slices. Pour over each serving a large tablespoon of mayonnaise dressing; sprinkle each with chopped pecan nuts. This recipe serves eight people.

STRAWBERRIES.

Strawberry Kiss.—Whites of three eggs beaten stiff, add one cup of granulated sugar, one teaspoonful vanilla, one teaspoonful vinegar pinch of salt, continue to beat for a few minutes. Put in a loose bottom cake tin that has been buttered and bake for a half hour in a very slow oven. When ready to serve add one quart of strawberries that have been cut in half and sugared, cover with whipped cream and serve same as short cake. This quantity is enough for six persons.

Strawberry Jam.—Use fine scarlet berries, weigh and boil them for thirty-five minutes, keeping them constantly stirred. Add eight ounces of good sugar to the pound of fruit, mix them well off the fire. Then boil again quickly for twenty-five minutes. Take off the scum and pour into jars or glasses.

Preserved Strawberries. — Procure fresh large strawberries when in their prime, but not so ripe as to be soft. Hull them and weigh them, take an equal weight of sugar, make syrup, and when boiling hot put in the berries. A small quantity only should be done at once. If crowded they will become mashed. Let them boil twenty minutes or a half hour, turn into tumblers or small jars and seal while hot. In pouring hot fruit into glass put in a silver spoon first; it will temper the glass and keep it from breaking. Do not use tin, iron, or pewter spoons for stirring fruit as they convert the color of red fruit into a dingy purple and impart besides a very unpleasant flavor.

PRESERVING.

Strawberry Preserve.—Pound for pound of berries and sugar. Pour sugar on with very little water and boil until thick syrup. Cool a little to test it. Remove from fire, add berries and the juice of one lemon for each two quarts of berries, then cook twenty minutes more to make thick and seal.

Tasty Relish.—Two quarts of sliced rhubarb, one pound raisins, one-half pound English walnuts, four oranges (chopped), three pounds sugar. Cook altogether thirty minutes and put in glasses.

Plum Conserve.—Three pounds of blue sweet plums, three pounds of granulated sugar, one pound of seeded raisins, one-fourth pound of English walnuts, two oranges; pit the plums, chop the oranges and walnuts; cook all together three-fourths of an hour, or until thick, and put in glasses and seal. A fine relish.

DESSERTS.

Maple Pudding.—One cup of milk, three-quarters cup of maple syrup, one cup of sugar, one egg, one-half box gelatin, one pint of whipped cream, one dozen macaroons, one cup of nuts. Scald milk, sugar, and maple syrup, beat egg and add the above to it; set on the stove until it thickens, add gelatin which has been previously dissolved and let cool. Whip the pint of cream and add nuts and macaroons; add this to the first part and put in a mold. Cut in slices and serve with whipped cream. This serves sixteen.

Fruit Foam.—One-half box gelatin, one-half cupful of water, two and one-half cupfuls of fruit juice, three eggs. Soak gelatin in cold water until dissolved, heat fruit juice (strawberry, raspberry, currant, or grapes), pour over gelatin, sweeten to taste, stir all together, and strain and cool. Beat whites of eggs stiff, beat into the jelly until it is a solid foam, pour into a wet mold, and serve with whipped cream. Prepare day before using.

Macaroon Pudding.—Beat the yolks of four eggs with one cup sugar and two teaspoonfuls of gelatin. Boil one pint of sweet milk, pour over the eggs and heturn to double boiler until it thickens, then add the four beaten whites. Pour into a mold into which has been placed one dozen crushed macaroons. Serve ice cold with whipped cream.

Lemon Pudding.—Scald one pint of milk, add a large cup of bread crumbs and one tablespoon of butter. Let boil up once and set aside to cool. When cool stir into the milk the beaten yolks of three eggs, one-half cup of sugar and the grated rind of one lemon. Bake twenty minutes. Beat the whites of the three eggs, add one-half cup sugar and the juice of the lemon. Spread over the top of the pudding and brown.

A Pudding Help.—All set puddings will be found to have a much more delicate flavor if the pudding dish is placed in a pan of water in the oven to bake.

Rice Pudding.—Wash one cup rice thoroughly. Drop it in one quart boiling water. Let boil twenty minutes. Take two cups cooked rice, six tablespoons sugar, two cups milk, one teaspoon butter, one-half teaspoon salt, two eggs well beaten. Season with nutmeg and bake in cups placed in pan of water. Serve with sweetened cream seasoned with nutmeg.

Fruit Chop Suey.—Crush one quart of strawberries, place in dishes, ready to serve, which have been lined with crisp lettuce leaves, garnish berries with small cubes of oranges, beat white of one egg to a stiff froth, sweeten to taste, drop on center of fruit, place a ripe berry in this, add sliced bananas, and serve. This will serve six persons, and prove not only a palatable dish but also an attractive and economical dessert.

HOUSEHOLD HINTS.

Traces of mud may be removed from black materials by rubbing with slices of raw potato.

Stains in table linen may be easily removed by plunging the articles in pure boiling water. Soap and water would have the effect of fixing the stains.

Carpets are made bright and almost new by sprinkling with coarse salt, and sweeping briskly with a damp broom. The color is restored, and the carpet is not injured by this process.

New walking shoes sometimes "slip at the heels and cause a nasty blister. This can be prevented by rubbing the inside of the shoes at the heel with a piece of dry soap before putting them on.

Gilt frames should not be washed, merely rubbed with chamois. If dull they should be brushed with a liquid strained from the boiling of four onions in water which has been tinted to a golden color by flowers or sulphur steeped in it

Before laying carpets spread newspapers over the floor, and if you have any fear of moth, scatter some pryethrum powder about.

When frying fat catches fire, do not pour water on it, as it only spreads the flame. A handful of earth or flour will quickly quench the flames.

Wrap stale loaves in a cloth, dip into hot water for half a minute, take off the cloth, and bake for a quarter of an hour in a steady oven. This will make them like new bread.

Never sweep dust from one room to another, nor from upstairs to the lower part of the house. Always take it up in a dustpan where you have previously placed some damp tea-leaves.

When cooking spinach cook in a cheese-cloth bag, easily lifted and drained dry.

Pad the ironing board on both sides. Use one side for white goods; the other for colored.

A teaspoonful of glycerine added to the rinse water makes woollen blankets come out like new.

Clean the rust off the wire clothesline with a woollen cloth dipped first in kerosene, then in sand soap.

To insure finely flavored coffee beat the dry ground coffee before adding boiling water.

When preparing meringue add one-half teaspoon of baking powder to each beaten white of egg. Will be wonderfully improved.

Powdered magnesia will effectually remove grease stains.

Sift cornmeal into the boiling water for porridge, and lumps will be less apt to appear.

Cut bars of laundry soap in half, place on top shelf to dry, and the soap will last longer.

To prevent tomato soup from curdling add hot tomatoes (with soda in) to the thickened milk.

When making mustard add a few drops of vinegar if you wish it to keep.

A NEW KIND OF LIBRARY.

Belgian Government Connects It With Post-office Banks.

A new kind of circulating library is to be tried by the Belgian Government. At Brussels a central library consisting at the outset of 10,000 volumes is to be created and any inhabitant of any part of Belgium who owns a post office savings bank book will be entitled to borrow from it and receive by mail any book for a fortnight upon having two cents checked off his account at the post-office. His deposit serves as a guarantee for payment for books not returned.

As there are about 1,500 post-offices in Belgium, this will amount to the creation of a circulating library with some 1,500 branches, whose risks will be more than covered by the deposits in the savings banks.

CZARVITCH BUILDS SHIPS.

Has a Toy Navy Yard With Naval Engineer as Tutor.

Six-year-old Grand Duke Alexis, heir to the throne of all the Russias, seems to have inherited a taste for shipbuilding from his illustrious ancestor Peter the Great, who went to Holland 200 years ago, at the age of 25, in disguise, and worked for wages as a ship's carpenter under the name of Peter Timmerman, lodging in a small house in Saardam.

Little Alexis has had a complete miniature navy yard constructed and fitted out for him on the borders of a lakelet in the grounds of his father's palace at Tsarskoeselo. There he amuses himself wth building model ships, war and other craft, under the expert tuition of a naval engineer.

MICROBES BY THE MILLION.

Germs are the latest weapon of doctors. There has been a curious case under treatment at St. Bartholomew's Hospital, in London, England, for some time, and 400,000,000 microbes have been reared for the cure of one patient. Chronic empyema is the trouble—an inflammation of the coverings of the lung. From the lung secretions germs were collected, and the descendants of these—of three distinct tribes—when they have grown to a set microbe strength are killed by heating. Then 10,000,000 dead microbes of each variety are injected, in solution, under the skin of the patient's arm, and, at intervals, larger doses are given, till, finally, 100,000,000 germs can be injected at one time! The skin trouble known as acne is another which the specialist nowadays treats by injecting microbes. About fifteen injections are made, the first alone sometimes containing over 300,000,000 microbes.

QUEEN VICTORIA AND BIBLE.

At Night She Visited Prince Consort's Room to Read It.

Addressing the Church Missionary Society the other evening, Lord Blytheswood, known as the Rev. Sholto Douglas before his succession to the peerage, stated that he once preached by command at Windsor, and after the service he received a most gracious message from Queen Victoria to visit the Castle. "I was brought at last to a private passage, and was told that down that passage at night her Majesty came along to the room where the late Prince Consort died. On a chair in that room was a large Bible, and on that chair every night the Queen read the Bible, which had been such a blessing to the country over which she reigned so long."

It's better to be long headed than headlong.

But a practical joke isn't funny when the reaction sets in.

Why do friends of the bride always cry at a wedding, while the friends of the groom always give him the laugh.

Doctor—My dear lady, you are in perfect health. I can't find a thing the matter with you. Patient — I wish you'd try again, doctor. I do so want to go away to recuperate.

Wife—"John, there must be a lot of iron in your system." Husband—"Why do you think so?" Wife—"Because you invariably lose your temper when you get hot."

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

INTERNATIONAL LESSON, JUNE 18.

Lesson XII.—The downfall of Samaria, 2 Kings 17. 1-18. Golden Text, Prov. 29. 1.

Verse 1. The twelfth year of Ahaz—One of the worst of the kings of Judah. See lesson for last Sunday—Word Studies.

Hoshea son of Elah—There are no special manifestations of strength in the character of this king. To be sure he is singled out of all the kings of Israel, for commendation (rather negative) to the effect that, while he had done some evil, it was not as the kings of Israel that were before him. But he had none of the faith nor the positive qualities of the reformer. Doubtless he did not replace the calf at Dan which the Assyrians had taken away. But he lacked the energy to bring back the old worship. Indeed, he seems to have lived with one eye upon the Assyrian power and the other upon his own interest. He was an opportunist, as he was a puppet. It would have required a man of broad, disinterested statesmanship, courage, and unyielding trust in God, to steer the already battered ship through the stormy waters of this eventful era.

3. Hoshea . . . brought him tribute—This humiliation was the result of the differences which had existed between Ahaz, king of Judah, and Pekah, king of Israel. The former had called in Tiglath-Pileser to defend him against Pekah and the king of Syria. When Pekah had been disposed of, Hoshea, who was a conspirator, was given this vassal sovereignty in Samaria. From inscriptions we learn that the tribute was a heavy one, ten talents of gold ($200,000) and 1,000 talents of silver ($1,250,000).

4. The king of Assyria shut him up—This is all we know of the fate of Hoshea, except a possible hint in Micah 5. 1. Some conjecture that a battle was fought, and the king captured, before the walls of the capital. At any rate, the cause of this sudden vengeance is not hidden. Hoshea was playing a double and losing game. If his cessation of payment of the annual tribute had been followed immediately by the arrival of the Egyptian forces, he might have won. But his ruin was in the procrastination of King So. When it was too late Hoshea tried to propitiate Shalmaneser with gifts. But the Assyrian monarch was aware of his duplicity.

6. Ninth year of Hoshea — Samaria was taken B. C. 722. Sargon, probably a usurping officer of the army, had succeeded Shalmaneser the year before. Samaria was not destroyed. The inhabitants who were carried away in captivity were replaced by foreign colonists, under Assyrian governors.

Placed them in Halah—North of Thapsacus, on the Euphrates. Sargon reported the number as about 27,000. The record of these wholesale deportations of men, women, and children, flocks and wagons, is preserved on the tablets in Sargon's palace at Khorsabad. The Habor is the same as the modern Khabour, a river in northern Assyria, flowing into the Euphrates.

8. Kings of Israel—Jeroboam, who introduced the calf-worship, and Ahab, who was responsible for Baal-worship in Israel, are especially in the thought of the writer as he digresses to summarize the lessons of his story.

9. Tower . . . fortified city—That is, they set up their secret bowers and wicked images not only in populous but also in sparsely settled places, such as sheepfolds and vineyards.

13. By every prophet—Israel had failed in her high mission in spite of the warnings and exhortations of such men as Ahijah, Elijah, Elisha, Micaiah, Jonah, Amos, Hosea, Nahum, Oded, and Jehu. The mention of such names shows how much more God had given to Israel than to Judah.

16. Asherah—Singular of Asherim. Lewd images, presumably of the Phoenician goddess Ashtoreth. The worship of the starry host of heaven was borrowed from the Assyrians. It is never mentioned in the Mosaic law until after the Israelites had come in contact with these eastern peoples.

17. Caused their sons . . . to pass through the fire—These were rites connected with the worship of Moloch, learned from Ammon and Moab. They were prohibited in both Leviticus (18. 21) and Deuteronomy (12. 31; 18. 10). Ahaz is said to have made his son pass through the fire (2 Kings 16. 3). The purpose of this hideous sacrifice was apparently to propitiate the Deity by the yielding up of the most precious possession.

Divination and enchantments — These were practiced by means of belomancy (Ezek. 21. 21-22), and necromancy. The curse of all this, and the selling of themselves for immoral purposes, connected with the heathen idolatries, was, that it led the people farther and farther away from God, till they forgot both their dependence upon him and their responsibility to him.

51 CALLED HER MOTHER.

Boer Woman had 27 of Her Own Besides 24 Step-Children.

In the district of Kroonstad, in the Transvaal, lives the Widow Van Wyk, whose history, matrimonially and otherwise, is—not to put too fine a point upon it—somewhat out of the common, says London Tit-Bits. Born on October 20, 1832, Mrs. Van Wyk at the age of 18, married Petrus Jacobus Lubbe. At the end of two years she became a widow with one child. After being a widow for ten months, says the Volkstem, she married Nicolaas Marthinus Pretorius, a widower with four children. After living with him for a year and five months he also died, leaving her with five children. After five months she married for the third time, David Stephanus Pieterse, a widower with seven children.

With him she lived eleven years and had seven children, when he also died. After five years' widowhood she married for the fourth time, Daniel Lodewikus Cronje, a widower with eight children. With him she also lived eleven years and had four children, when he, too, died. Five years later she married, for the fifth time, Hendrik Klopper.

With him she also lived eleven years and had ten children, when he also died. After two years she married for the sixth time on this occasion, with Coenraad Hendrik Van Wyk, a widower with five children, and with him she had four children.

After having lived together for eleven years, he also died. She had thus fifty children, who called her mother and about 270 grandchildren. She is still alive at the age of 78 years.

GUARDS FROM THE TOWER.

The Bank of England is to be Protected by Them.

Hereafter the Bank of England is to be protected by the guards from the tower instead of by one of the battalions at Chelsea or Wellington Barracks. With this change in the old custom of having the guards march nightly to the bank will be revived.

Providing a garrison for the bank dates back to 1780, the time of the Gordon riots. The mob had already taken Newgate, and was ready for a frolic in the nation's treasury, but the files of grenadiers overawed the rioters, who departed very peacefully toward Bunhill fields.

Since that time the bank has had a nightly guard of Grenadiers or Coldstreams to strengthen the garrison of clerks and porters who patrol the building. The soldiers are made very comfortable, the commanding officer being provided with a dinner for himself and two friends and an allowance of wine.

The vaults of the Bank of England frequently contain $250,000,000 in money. The lock of the vaults requires several keys, each in possession of a different person. Access is obtained through heavy iron doors to where untold gold lies piled on trucks (to facilitate removal) or heaped against the walls in sacks.

PINEAPPLE'S MANY VIRTUES.

Invaluable in Destroying Poisonous Tissues as in Diphtheria.

Fresh pineapple juice has great value as a digestive. A small amount will digest a considerable piece of steak or any other animal tissue. Boiling, however, seems to kill the enzymes in the pineapple, so that after canning it loses its digestive power.

The peculiar property of pineapple juice makes it of value in many ways. For instance, in diphtheria, it is used as a gargle, and the diphtheria membrane disappears like magic at its touch. It seems to have the power of picking out all non-living animal tissues and rapidly digesting them, leaving all living tissues. In cases of quinsy, pineapple juice digests all poisonous tissue, often giving quick relief.

Sometimes it is not best to incise or lance a boil, and the yellow cap may often remain upon the boil without opening, holding back the pus. The application of pineapple juice invariably establishes free drainage within a short time.

For administration in the stomach pineapple acts, adds the Family Doctor, as a preventive rather than a cure. It cannot quickly correct an acute attack of indigestion, though it may prevent an attack.

Lots of bachelors would make good husbands, if the girls could only make them think so.

Q.—Why is an acquitted prisoner like a gun? A.—Because he is taken up, charged, and then let off.

Griggs—"Weren't you surprised that the customs inspector didn't find those things you smuggled in?" Briggs—"Oh, no; my wife stowed them away. She can pack things in a trunk where she can't even find them herself.

A "BRIGHT" GIRL.

Lady Henry Stanley Tells Two Good Stories.

John Bright, the famous English statesman, was intimately acquainted with Mr. Charles Tennant, and used often to visit him at his home. Mr. Tennant's daughter, Lady Henry Stanley, had many pleasant recollections of the great orator and statesman, some of which are included by R. B. O'Brien in his biography of "John Bright." Lady Stanley says:

My father and John Bright were great friends, and Mr. Bright called constantly to see us throughout his life. I used to love to look at him and hear him talk.

I remember one thing that happened when I was quite a little girl, about eight or ten. I knew that Mr. Bright was coming to see my father, and I thought that my father would not allow me to remain in the room to hear them talk, and I determined to get under the sofa, and so listen to Mr. Bright. Well, they both sat on the sofa, and after a time things got a bit uncomfortable for me, for the sofa began to bend under their weight, and I had to dodge and creep about to escape getting crushed.

In wriggling about, I pushed my feet from under the sofa. The conversation suddenly ceased, and Bright said:

"Why, Mr. Tennant, there is something under the sofa! Look!" and so my father pulled me out, and I said that I wanted to hear Mr. Bright talk, and that was the reason I got under the sofa.

I remember another day, when I was something older, that Mr. Bright called at the house and everybody was out. When the servant opened the door he told Mr. Bright that no one was at home. I was upstairs.

I asked the servant who had called. He said, "Mr. Bright," whereupon I dashed away from the maid who was attending to my toilet, rushed downstairs, and ran into the street, following Mr. Bright as fast as I could. I got up with him just as he was entering Palace Yard. I put my hand into his arm and swung him right round, and said:

"Now you must come back with me. I know you called, and they said everybody was out, but I was not out."

He laughed and came back with me, and then I gave him tea, and he talked away to me.

LIVELY FLOWERS.

A New Species Discovered in an African Forest.

Natures protective schemes are varied and curious, and deceive the human as well as the animal intelligence. J. W. Gregory in "The Great Rift Valley" describes a new flower which he came across in an African forest. He says:

Walking through the woods, my attention was attracted by a large brightly colored flower like a foxglove. It had been raining heavily, and everything was so sodden with moisture that collecting was useless. I would have passed this specimen had I not noticed some white, fluffy patches below the flower, which I recognized as a certain kind of lichen which does not usually grow on flower stems. I pushed my stick through the bush to pull the flower toward me, when, to my surprise, all the flowers and buds jumped off in all directions.

There were similar clusters near, and when Mr. Watson came up, I pointed out one and asked him if he knew its genus. He said he did not, although he had seen it before. He tried to pick one, and was as surprised at the result as I.

The arrangement of the insect colony was that of green buds above and pink flowers below. We never would have dreamed that they were insects, although Mr. Watson was an enthusiastic botanist.

The female lays its eggs as it walks up the stem; the lowest hatch first, which fact explains the apparent indifference in flowers and buds. Whether the insects can resume this arrangement on the stem after having been disturbed, I do not know. We watched for hours, but not one came back.

GOING AHEAD.

"I wanter give notice, mum!" blurted Mary Ann, one morning.

Mrs. Skinniflint looked pained and surprised.

"May I ask why, Ann?" she inquired.

"Well, mum, if you wanter know the truth, I'm engaged to be married."

"Indeed! I am surprised!" said Mrs. Skinnflint freezingly. "But let me warn you against these frivolous, marriage-seeking young men! You would do better to stay with us, if you have not given the matter the most serious consideration!"

"Yes, mum, but I have," answered the precautious domestic. "I've been to two fortune-tellers, and a clairvoyant, and looked in a sign-book, and dreamt on a lock of his hair, and visited an astrologer and a palmist, and they all say, 'Go ahead, Mary Ann—go ahead! Oh, no mum, I ain't a one to marry reckless-like!"

TO CONSERVATIVES

The South Huron Conservative Association will hold their Annual Meeting and Convention in the Skating Rink, at Hensall, on Tuesday next, June 20, at 2 o'clock sharp. It is important that a full representation of each polling sub-division of the riding as constituted for Dominion Purposes, be present, as a candidate will be chosen to contest the riding for the House of Commons. A number of able speakers, local and from a distance, will address the meeting. Election of officers and other business will come before the meeting.

Hogs in Chicago this week are 6.30 In Exeter the price is 6.80. Surely that is one reason why you farmers should not be anxious for reciprocity.

The total relative savings on all authorized text books, contracts for which have been let by the Ontario Government, will exceed $1,000,000 during the life of the contracts.

It is estimated that over 85 per cent. of the farms in Saskatchewan have mortgages on them. In and around the Battleford district over 95 per cent. of the farms carry plasters.

Many a man flies off in a passion and roars like a fool if something goes wrong, until those who are near him wish he would move along. He is disgusting and foolish, but he thinks he is cutting an exceedingly wide swath. When a man has a real grievance it may be a relief to him and excusable if he lets out a yell and bursts off a button or two, but when he goes raving and tearing around for a trifle he shows less sense than the fellow who did not know enough to come in out of the wet.

While it is well for the Opposition to be on its guard there is no necessity for it being stampeded. An election may come at almost any time but few here believe that it will come much before 1912. There is no necessity for hurried-up conventions or helter skelter organizations. It is well to be prepared in good time, but it is in the highest degree unlikely the possibility of an election will be even more considered by the Government until after redistribution. No party would dare to condemn the western people to underrepresentation in the next parliament. The census will show that the country west of Lake Superior is entitled to thirty-more seats in the House of Commons. To bring on an election before redistribution would be to leave some one million people in Western Canada without adequate representation in the Dominion parliament. The Redistribution Bill cannot be drafted until after the census figures are known and it can hardly be presented to the House until some time in September. If any jerrymander is attempted there will be a stubborn fight and it will be remembered that it took five months to get a redistribution bill through Parliament after the Census of 1901

CENTRALIA

The McLaren and Butt Nuptials.—One of the prettiest weddings seen in a long time was solemnized at the parsonage at high noon on Wednesday, June 7th, when Mabel E., daughter of Rev. W. H. Butt, was married to John A. McLaren, manager of the Canadian Brass Works, Galt. The ceremony was performed under a canopy of evergreens and daisies and lilies of the valley, Rev. W. H. Butt officiated, assisted by A. T. F. Butt, of Parkhill. The drawing room was beautifully decorated for the occasion, the bridal party standing beneath a canopy of evergreens, bespangled with daisies. At high noon, following the ringing of the church bell close by, and the playing of the wedding march, the bride, leaning on her father's arm, entered the room preceded by the ring-bearer and flower girl, the latter strewing lilies of the valley along the way. Little Miss Virginia Butt, of Detroit, niece of the bride, was flower girl, and Wallace McLaren of London was ring-bearer. The wedding march was played by Rose Brown of Toronto. Miss Laura Butt, sister of the bride, sang with touching pathos that beautiful and appropriate song entitled, "Love's Coronation." The bride was handsomely gowned in a dress of duchess satin, trimmed with silk chiffon embroidered insertion, and wearing a long flowing veil, and carrying a large bouquet of bridal roses. The guests, numbering nearly forty, relatives from Detroit, London, Galt, Ayr, Kippen, Exeter, sat down to a sumptuous wedding breakfast, when toasts were drunk to the health of the bride and groom. The bridal party left by auto in the after noon for London, where they took the C.P.R. for Toronto and other points in the east, including the Thousand Islands, Montreal and Quebec. The bride's going-away dress was light grey worsted, trimmed with grey silk to match. The groom's gift to the bride was a magnificent piano, to the flower-girl a gold signet ring, to the pianist a gold locket and watch fob, and to the soloist a pair of gold cuff-links. The presents to the bride were numerous, costly and useful, demonstrating the popularity of both bride and groom. Mr. and Mrs. McLaren will be at home to their friends at 78 Rose street, Galt, after August 1st.

AILSA CRAIG—In the presence of a welcoming committee of about the whole town, 60,000 young pickerel, averaging about 6-10000th of an inch in length were planted in the Sauble on Wednesday afternoon.

All kinds of flower and vegetable plants at L. Day's, Exeter.

Mr. and Mrs Clark of Lions Head, have returned home after a few weeks visit with Mr. and Mrs. Jas. Clark.

Mr. Christian Zwicker has returned to his home in London after a short visit here with his son Charles.

Miss Eva Hirtzel of Capac, Mich., is spending a few weeks here with her parents.

Miss Ollie Goldthorpe of Goderich spent the week end in town visiting her sister Miss Ella Goldthorpe, principal of our school.

Ira Brown is spending a few days in Toronto.

Don't forget the base-ball match on Friday evening between the Exeter team and our stars. We hear all kinds of rumours that the neighboring town is coming out in full force to give us such a fleecing that we won't get over it this summer. The game is looked forward to with great interest.

Dr. Orme, Godfrey Nicholson, J. H. Holtzman and F. W. Clark autoed to London on Tuesday.

Miss Clara Haist and friends of Reed City, Mich., are spending a few weeks here with relatives.

The male chorus of the Evangelical Church has reorganized. The following officers have been elected; Pres. Herb. Eilber; Vice-Pres; Fraser Brown; Sec'y Treas. Garnet Sweitzer. Rev. Burn will conduct the chorus. Several new members have joined the chorus and considerable interest is being shown in the work.

Rev. Robert Hicks has returned from the recent session of the Methodist Conference. We are pleased to state that he has been returned pastor here for another year. Rev. Hicks is doing good work in this neighborhood.

Dr. and Mrs. Orme and Mr. and Mrs. Herb. Eilber autoed to the Bend last Thursday and spent the day there.

H. Eilber, M.P.P. made a business trip to Toronto on Tuesday.

Childrens' Day Service will be held in the Evangelical Church on the 25th inst. A good program is expected in the evening from the choir and members of the Sunday school.

Death of Bertha Finkbeiner.—The cruel hand of death has plucked another promising young life from our midst, and the happy home of Mr. and Mrs. Mathew Finkbeiner, north of here, has been saddened by the cruel blow which will be felt for many a long day. We refer to the demise of their beloved and much esteemed daughter, Bertha who passed away on Thursday last at the age of 21 years, 4 weeks. Miss Finkbeiner has been a long sufferer from pulmonary trouble. From its inception she has been gradually on the decline the end coming as a happy release to her sufferings. The deceased underwent treatment at the Sanatorium at Byron for several months during the winter, but all to no avail the disease having gained such headway that skill and treatment rendered no assistance. The deceased was of a lovable nanature—a favorite with all who formed her acquaintance. Her demise will be most deeply regretted, more particularly in the household of which she will be much missed, this being the first break in the family. Besides the sorrowing father and mother she is survived by eight sisters and four brothers all of whom have the sincere sympathy of a sorrowing public. The funeral took place to the Crediton Cemetery on Sunday and was largely attended.

KIRKTON.

The first league game of baseball of the season was played at Fullarton between Kirkton and Fullarton. Kirkton got 12 runs in 8 innings, and Fullarton 19 runs in 7 innings. P. Burns of St. Marys umpired.

The St. Marys club defeated Fullarton 3-2 in a league game on June 7. The game went ten innings. Perry Doupe of Kirkton umpired.

Mr. Warren McGill of Usborne sold a span of horses to Mr. W. R. Elliott of Centralia the other day for which he realized the sum of $790. This was an exceptionally fine team, but who says it does not pay to raise good horses?—The Post Office has been changed and is now located with Messrs. Hackney & Madge.

Standing Wheat Competition.—Considerable interest was manifested in the standing fall wheat field crop competition last year in connection with the Kirkton Fall Fair, but that of this year promises to be even more interesting and keener competition will prevail. The following is a list of those who have entered, together with the variety of wheat sown, viz,—I. F. McCullough, Blanshard, W. A. Kirk, Usborne, Robt. Berry, Usborne, Hugh Berry, Usborne, (Abundant); R. R. Copeland, Usborne, Wilbert Sparling, Blanshard, Jas. Brown, Blanshard, C. A. Barnett, Blanshard, John Kennedy, Blanshard, Geo. Kent, Blanshard, Perry Doupe, Blanshard, Wesley Shier, Usborne, Wes. Heywood, Usborne, N. A. Sweitzer, Blanshard, Wm. Hollingshead, Blanshard, (Dawson's Golden Chaff); Russell Craigo, Blanshard, (American Banner); H. J. Armstrong, Blanshard (variety not given.)

GREENWAY.

Mr. W. J. Brown went to Berlin last week, where he received treatment from the hands of an osteopathic physician who replaced a bone in his hip which had been dislocated as the result of a hurt he had received some time ago. We are glad to see that he has returned much improved.

CROMARTY

A Curiosity.—Mr. W. L. McLaren came across a curiosity the other day, in the shape of a gosling with four legs and two tails, and it was alive when hatched. Two of the feet were in the usual place, while another set came out at the side of the breast. One tail was in front and the other at the back of the body, while the head, with an almost perfect bill, was attached to the side of the body. One pair of feet were facing in one direction, and the other in the directly opposite way. Had the egg from which it was hatched been a double yolked one, Mr. McLaren says he would not have been surprised at the result, but it was only a single yolked egg. Unfortunately his curiosity did not live long.

DASHWOOD

E. M. BROKENSHIRE, Dashwood, Conveyancer, Deeds, Wills, Mortgages and all legal documents carefully and promptly prepared. Charges moderate. Issuer of Marriage Licenses.

Our public school will hold their annual picnic at Grand Bend on Friday June 16th.—The heavy wind storm which passed over here last Sunday did considerable damage in the neighborhood. The large bank barns of Mr. Thomas Turnbull of the Sauble Line were blown down.—A heifer belonging to Mr. Louis Willert of the 14th Con. of Stephen was killed by lightning on Sunday last.—Miss Anderson, Millinery at Siebert & Co's left for her home in Hagerville Tuesday.—Mr. and Mrs. Duncan Snider, who have been visiting in Columbus Ohio, for the past few weeks, returned Saturday last as far as London where Mr. Snider was taken suddenly ill with appendicitis and was operated on Monday.—Mr. Wm. Snider was to London Tuesday to visit his son Duncan who is in the hospital there.

Lutheran Church Picnic.—Although the weather was not very favorable a great number of people turned out to a Sunday School picnic held on the Lutheran church premises of Dashwood. It was the first picnic of this kind held on the church property, but it certainly proved a success. The bowling alley which was put up temporarily was the hit of the day, not only for the great number of pins that were hit by some "expert" bowlers, but also for the fun caused by the balls that were rolled off the aley. Besides this there were races and games of all kinds, and numerous prizes were handed out. In the evening a hearty supper was prepared in the basement of the church by the women folk, so that everyone could leave for home full of joy over the happy time spent; and we are certain that they would all appreciate a picnic like this every season.

Miss Rose Preeter Becomes the Bride of Mr. Edward Kraft.—On the afternoon of June 7th, at 4 o'clock two of Stephen's most popular and well established families were united, the occasion being the marriage of Rose E., second daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Preeter, to Mr. Edward Kraft, eldest son of Mr. and Mrs. Henry L. Kraft. The unique ceremony was performed in Zion's Lutheran church, Dashwood, Rev. G. Thun officiating. The spacious and magnificent church was crowded to the doors with guests numbering over two hundred and many spectators. Under the melodious strains of Lohengrin march, beautifully rendered by Miss Laura Preeter, sister of the bride, the bridal party marched slowly up the aisle, the ushers, Mr. S. Adams of Walkerton and Mr. W. Weido of Zurich preceeding. The bride was accompanied by her father to the altar, where each of the bridal party took their respective positions. The bride presented an exceedingly pleasing appearance, being dressed in a most exquisite gown of duchess ivory satin polette, effectively trimmed with wide silk insertions and silk overlace. She wore a long, flowing veil, caught up with lily of the valley and bridal roses, and carried a liberal sheaf of carnations, entertwined with green fern. The bride was attended by Miss Laura Kraft, sister of the groom, who likewise presented a picture appearance, and wore a charming gown of pink passore silk, and carried a large spray of pink carnations, embodied in fern. She also wore her favor from the groom, it being a gold brooch, set with brilliants. The groom was assisted by Mr. Fred Preeter, brother of the bride. He wore a gold initial tie pin, it being a gift from the groom. The flower girls were little Miss Elda Preeter of Dashwood, cousin of the bride and little Miss Millie Schafer of Parkhill, cousin of the groom, and the two little girls presented a winsome appearance, being gowned in similar girlish attire of pulest blue tussore silk, each carrying a basket of carnations and sweet peas, and trailing asparagus fern. They also wore their favors from the groom, which were gold initial bracelets. After the ceremony the bridal party departed from the church, under the soft tones of the Tannhauser march, rendered in very sweet melody by Miss E. Eidt, organist of the church. The bridal party proceeded the guests to the home of the bride's parents, where the reception was held. The guests were there received in a very happy manner by Miss E. R. Keys, an intimate friend of the bride. The bride and groom in the decorated parlor received many hearty congratulations from their friends, while the march, "Hearts and Flowers" was being softly played by Miss Laura Preeter. After congratulations a sumptuous repast was partaken of. The house was beautifully decorated Many handsome presents were received, showing the popularity of the young couple. They are too numerous to mention. One, however, was a bedroom suite from the choir, of which both were members. Guests were present from many points in Ontario, and from Michigan, and they all, together with their many friends wish them happiness and prosperity. They will reside on Lot 23 Con. 12, Stephen.

SKIN SUFFERER TRIED EVERYTHING—THEN D. D. D. CURED

This was the experience of Mrs. Geo. Newman of orangeville, Ont. She wrote in January, 1910,

"I was terribly troubled with eczema on my face, neck and hands for four years. I tried everything I had heard tell of, then saw your advertisement in the paper, sent for a trial bottle of D.D.D., used it on my face and got well. It is now two years and no return of the eczema. I consider I am cured and it certainly was a blessing to me."

No matter how terribly you suffer from eczema, salt rheum, ringworm or any other skin disease, you will feel instantly soothed and the itch relieved at once when a few drops of this compound of Oil of Wintergreen, Thymol, Glycerine, etc., is applied. The cures all seem to be permanent, too.

For free trial bottle of D. D. D. write the D.D.D. Laboratories, Dept. E. A., 49 Colborne St., Toronto.

Coronation Picnic.—Thames Road School picnic will be held on June 22 in Mr. T. Hunkins' grove. Baseball and sports of all kinds.

One day last week Mr. August Guhr undertook what appeared at first to be a hopeless task in the way of moving a large boulder on the farm of Mr. G Jeffrey, Thames Road. The huge stone it is estimated weighed over 30 tons, and it was hauled by Mr. Guhr's dredging machine about 40 rods. This is probably the largest stone that has every been moved so great a distance in these parts. August never undertakes anything that he cannot master.

"What's flour gluten, Bud?"
"It's what makes your dough rise, Rose."
"Yes"—she encouraged.
Added Bud very sagely:
"Makes it rise in the mixer and expand "in the oven. It's the elastic part of "flour—absorbs all the water and milk "—and things."
Rose grew interested.
"FIVE ROSES, said Bud, is exceedingly rich "in gluten. I s'pose because it's all made "from Manitoba wheat. Takes up a lot "more water—makes those fat loaves—"lasts longer too."
"Saves money, doesn't it?" asked Rose.
Bud in a big voice:
"The fat loaf makes the fat pocketbook."
Use FIVE ROSES always.
And Rose said YES.

MEN-YOU NEED NERVE

Wonderful Nervous System

EARLY INDISCRETIONS AND EXCESSES HAVE UNDERMINED YOUR SYSTEM

The nerves control all actions of the body so that anything that debilitates them will weaken all organs of the system. Early Indiscretions and Excesses have ruined thousands of promising young men. Unnatural Drains sap their vigor and vitality and they never develop to a proper condition of manhood. They remain weaklings, mentally, physically and sexually. How you feel? Are you nervous and weak, despondent and gloomy, specks before the eyes with dark circles under them, weak back, kidneys irritable, palpitation of the heart, bashful, debilitating dreams, sediment in urine, pimples on the face, eyes sunken, hollow cheeks, careworn expression, poor memory, lifeless, distrustful, lack energy and strength, tired mornings, restless nights, changeable moods, premature decay, bone pains, hair loose, etc.

This is the condition our New Method Treatment is GUARANTEED TO CURE

We have treated Diseases of Men for almost a lifetime and do not have to experiment. Consult us FREE OF CHARGE and we will tell you whether you are curable or not.

THE KING TO VISIT CANADA

May Take Western Route to India, Where He Will Be Crowned Emperor

A despatch from Montreal says: A special to The Herald from Ottawa says:—"It is reported here, from a reliable source, that a visit will be made to this country by his Majesty King George. The King will visit Canada en route for India, where he will be crowned as Emperor. His Majesty will visit all important cities in the Dominion during his journey across the country, and will sail for India from Vancouver."

Should this report prove to be true, the event it forecasts will make King George's reign epochal, establishing, as it would, the precedent of the Sovereign of the Empire visiting the outlying portions of the British dominions after his accession.

King George will tour Canada before the end of this year, for he is to arrive in Bombay on December 2, and make his State entry into Delhi on December 7. He is to be crowned on December 12. Plans have been made to enable one hundred thousand persons to see the ceremony. The King is to reach Calcutta on December 30.

DIED IN POLICE CELLS.

Serious Charges Made Against Winnipeg Associated Charities.

A despatch from Winnipeg says: John E. Hetherington, an Englishman, collapsed in the police cells after three days' imprisonment awaiting trial on a charge of vagrancy, preferred by the Associated Charities, and died on Wednesday. Secretary Folke had the man arrested, claiming he would not work. Hetherington said he was sick. His wife, who has three children, pleaded for bail while her husband was awaiting trial, but was refused. She claimed he was ill and had worked when he was able and was kind to her. In a statement to the papers the wife says her husband had been murdered by the Associated Charities. No doctor was called to the station when the man collapsed. The Coroner is investigating, and the Sons of England have taken up the case.

MANY KILLED IN MEXICO.

Between 60 and 70 Dead and Injured by Earthquake.

A despatch from Mexico City says: Sixty-three were killed, seventy-five wounded and property worth $100,000 was wrecked on Wednesday by an earthquake shock, which shook the Mexican capital and injected a note of tragedy into what was to be a day of pure rejoicing over the arrival of Francisco I. Madero, jun. At Buffavista the railway tracks were twisted. The shock was followed by an explosion of gas at the artillery barracks, which added horror to the scene. The oscillations moved from north to south, and opened fissures in the streets. The adobe houses crumpled, but the dead in these cannot be numbered at present.

GERMAN TRADE GROWING.

Both Imports and Exports Last Year Showed Increase.

A despatch from Berlin says: The German imports in 1910 increased $112,500,000 and the exports increased $196,250,000 as compared with the figures for 1909.

TOGO AND NOGI CHEERED.

Japanese Deputation for Coronation Arrived Wednesday.

A despatch from London says: One of the chief events of Wednesday was the arrival of the Japanese deputation to the Coronation, including Prince and Princess Higashi Fushimi, the Prince representing the Emperor, and the Japanese war heroes, Admiral Togo and General Nogi. There was no official reception, because the deputation is not due officially until June 19. The Prince and Princess will spend the intervening time at Eastbourne, a watering place on the coast of Sussex, while Admiral Togo and General Nogi will remain in London. The two war veterans were cheered as they drove around Hyde Park in the afternoon.

Queen Mary on Wednesday received at Buckingham Palace the committee representing the Marys of the Empire, who presented to her Majesty their Coronation gift—a check for $60,000.

CANADIAN TROOPS ARRIVE.

Lord Mayor of Liverpool and Civic Party Meet Contingent.

A despatch from London says: The Empress of Ireland arrived at Liverpool at noon on Friday with the Canadian Coronation troops aboard. They were welcomed by the Lord Mayor and a distinguished civic party. The local Territorials also paraded. The Canadians marched through some of the principal streets, arousing the keenest pleasure amongst the Liverpool crowds.

CAN DINE 20,000 PEOPLE.

Greatest Eating House in the World Opened at Berlin.

A despatch from London says: The greatest eating house in the world has been opened in Berlin. It is the new Zoological Garden restaurant, in which 10,000 people can dine at the same time beneath the roof, while the open-air terraces for use in summer can accommodate another 10,000 diners. There are 1,000 waiters and a kitchen staff of 500 persons.

WILL EXPLORE JAMES BAY

Government Geological Staff Has Started on a Long Trip

A despatch from Toronto says: Mr. S. C. Ells, one of the Department of the Interior geological staff, started on Wednesday from Cochrane, Ont., with four companions on a trip of exploration that will extend as far north as James Bay. They are acting in the interest of both the Federal Government and the Temiskaming and Northern Ontario Railway Commission, and will be in the field constantly from now until October next, when they will return and deliver a report on the nature of the country, which will have considerable effect on the question of building a railway through the region.

They have been instructed to examine the Moose River basin and the southern shore of James Bay, looking both to possibilities for navigation and resources of agriculture. All the chief rivers on the north side of the Height of Land empty into the Moose estuary, and the expedition will strive to ascertain the extent of the annual deposits of silt at this point, which are believed to leave a wilderness of shallows on the southern shore of the bay when the tide is out. If they can find a harbor where the water is deep enough for ships, and at the same accessible to the land for a railway, it will have considerable bearing on the negotiations to obtain a Hudson's Bay port for Ontario from Manitoba, as it may thus be rendered unnecessary to ask the other province to give up any of its territory.

There was some good cows among the offerings, and they brought 5 1-4c. Sales of selected lots of hogs were made at $6.75, very heavy weights at $5.75, and stags and sows at $5 to $.25, and $5.50 per cwt., weighed off cars.

Toronto, June 13.—A hundred choice cattle fetched $6.15, and several bunches sold at $6.20, but the conspicuous feature of to-day's market was not the high figures reached so much as in the large number of cattle that sold over $6 per cwt. Cows were firm at $4 to $5.50, and bulls at $4.75 to $5.30. Milkers are steady. Sheep and lambs were no more in demand, but hogs are now quoted up to $7 per cwt, fed and watered, and $6.70 f.o.b.

Buffalo, June 13.—Cattle—Prime steers $6.30 to $6.50; butcher grades, $3 to $6.25. Calves—Cull to choice, $5 to $9.25. Sheep and lambs—Choice lambs, $7 to $7.25; cull to fair, $5 to $6.75; yearlings, $5.50 to $6; sheep, $2 to $5. Hogs—Yorkers, $6.40 to $6.45; stags, $4.50 to $5; pigs, $6.20 to $6.25; mixed, $6.40 to $6.45; heavy, $6.30 to $6.35; roughs, $5.25 to $5.40.

AYLMER WOMAN DROWNED.

Mrs. Robt. Stevens Falls Off Wharf Trying to Save Dog.

A despatch from Ottawa says: Mrs. Robert Stevens of Aylmer, on Thursday afternoon tried to save her dog, which fell from the Aylmer wharf, and she herself fell in and was drowned. Her daughter called for aid, but a man in a boat came up too late. The woman was forty years of age, and leaves a family of three and a husband.

DISORDERS IN VANCOUVER.

Strike More Serious, and Government Can Do Nothing.

A despatch from Vancouver, B. C., says: The strike is becoming more serious here daily, and disorders are increasing. The Government can apparently do nothing to pacify either side. Other forces are threatening to join in a complete tie-up of the city.

FOUND NOT GUILTY.

Captain of Vessel Wrecked With Loss of Life Goes Free.

A despatch from Victoria, B.C., says: Captain A. A. Sears, charged with manslaughter in connection with the loss of 21 lives in the foundering of the steamer Iroquois, was on Thursday acquitted by a jury at the assizes. The jury was out only a short time.

G. T. P. TO SPEND MILLIONS

Grand Trunk Pacific Makes an Agreement With Prince Rupert

A despatch from Prince Rupert, B. C., says: There is a feeling of optimism here as a result of the City Council's meeting with the Grand Trunk Pacific officials on Wednesday night on the assessment question. The officials present were President Hays, Manager Chamberlain, Solicitor D'Arcy Tate and others. The agreement was signed on Thursday night and the people will vote on it in ten days' time. The company is to pay $15,000 a year for ten years on all railway lands here, valued at several million dollars; give the city 100 feet of water frontage; give a number of sections for parks, etc.; give sixty acres for a cemetery site; agree to start work at once on a two and a half million dry dock and a station and machine car shops, round houses, etc., costing over one million dollars, and agree that this is to be the definite Pacific terminal of the Grand Trunk Pacific. A hotel to cost a million dollars will be started as soon as a site is selected. The plans of all these works are prepared and are here, and there is great elation over the agreement.

DIAMONDS FOUND IN QUEBEC

Mr. Johnston Leaving for Germany to Seek Method of Extracting Them

A despatch from Ottawa says: A new discovery of diamonds in Quebec has been made, and Mr. R. A. A. Johnston, mineralogist of the Geological Survey, will leave for Germany in a few weeks in connection with the effort being made to discover a satisfactory commercial process of extracting these diamonds from the chromite in which they are found. Should such a process be discovered, and the labaratory staff of the survey is now working upon it, it would be of inestimable benefit to Canada, not only as regards the creation of a diamond industry, but in connection also with the profitable mining of chromite. A satisfactory laboratory method of separating the diamonds has already been found, and Mr. Johnston's visit to Germany with a number of samples of the Canadian diamond, it is hoped, may lead to the discovery of an equally good commercial method.

ALL WATERS CONTAMINATED.

No Pure Drinking Fluid in Canada, Says Expert at Montreal.

A despatch from Montreal says: That there is no pure drinking water in Canada is a statement made by Dr. T. A. Starkey at the Canadian Medical Association's meeting on Friday morning. Dr. Starkey, who is an authority on such matters, said he did not believe there was a lake or river in Canada that was not in some way contaminated and should not be used as drinking water without filtration. The cause of this state of affairs, he said, was due to the great increase in population of the Dominion during the last few years.

LOOKED SERIOUS.

Pedestrian, Bicycle, Motor Cycle and Auto in Mix-up.

A despatch from London, Ont., A young man jumped off a street car on Dundas street, at Waterloo, on Friday night. As he touched the payment he was struck and knocked down by a bicycle. In an instant a motor cycle piled into the mix-up, and then an automobile threw the entire mass to the one side. The spectators thought somebody would be surely killed, but all escaped with a few scratches, the man who caused the trouble hurrying away without giving his name.

UNPRECEDENTED INFLUX.

The C. P. R. Carried 34,000 Immigrants in May.

A despatch from Montreal says: An unprecedented influx of immigrants through Quebec and Montreal during the month of May is reported by the Canadian Pacific Railway, the actual paid transportation showing a total of just over 29,000 people, and as this does not include children carried free, who bear an average proportion to adult passengers of one in five, the actual total is probably nearer 34,000. These figures represent third class travellers only.

MEXICO WELCOMES HERO

Madero Receives Ovation Such as Was Never Accorded Diaz

A despatch from Mexico City says: Francisco Madero, the nation's hero, was welcomed to the city on Wednesday with glad cries of "Vive Madero," amid the ringing of church bells and the crash of band music. His train reached the railway station at precisely 12.15 p.m., and it is estimated that more than 150,000 people had collected in the street at the Colonia Station, around the national palace, and in the vicinity of Madero's house. There was an almost solid mass of humanity throughout the entire distance of two miles from the station to the palace. Such enthusiasm was never before seen in Mexico City and such a demonstration was never accorded Diaz even in the days of his popularity.

The crowd that awaited Madero was distinctly different from crowds which Mexico City is accustomed to see. There were no dress clothes, no silk hats in evidence, as the crowd along the line from the station to the palace was topped with the straw somberero of the common people. Everything demonstrated the fact that it was the people's reception to the national hero.

HER COURAGE PROVED FATAL

Heroine of Two Wrecks on Pacific Coast Dies From Overstrain.

A despatch from Victoria, B. C., says: Mrs. Minnie Paterson, the heroine of two frightful wrecks on the North Pacific coast, is dead at her home at Alberni. Her constitution could not withstand the strain of her exertions.

On Dec. 8, 1906 Mrs. Paterson, who with her husband kept the light at Cape Beale, made a memorable journey over five miles of cliff and bogs to send the Government steamship Quadra from Bamfield to rescue Capt. Allison and nine others on the barque Coloma, ashore and helpless in the rays of the Cape Beale light. She also made heroic efforts to rescue those doomed in the sinking of the steamship Valencia off Vancouver Island the same year, in which 140 lives were lost. Since then her health had failed steadily. The Canadian Government gave Mrs. Paterson a silver service and she received several medals.

THREE MEN DROWNED.

Canoe Containing Five Filled in Squall on Lake Penag.

A despatch from Sudbury says: Archibald Tutt, aged 31; Jael Hunter, aged 26, and George Girard, aged 20, were drowned in Lake Penag on Monday. They were crossing the lake with Thomas Chambers and another man in a Peterboro' canoe, when a squall sprang up. The heavily laden canoe filled with water. The men clung to it, but the three mentioned became exhausted and sank. Chambers and the other managed to hang on to the submerged craft and drifted ashore, after being in the water about two hours.

Tutt, who came from England a few years ago, lived in Webbwood and leaves a young widow and a week-old child. Hunter came from Burk's Falls, and Girard from Arden. All three were employed on the Cleveland-Sarnia Lumber Company's drive. The bodies were recovered.

BEER WAS TOO STRONG.

Fines of $357 Collected at Cobalt From Saloonkeepers.

A despatch from Cobalt says: Fines totalling $357 were collected in court on Friday afternoon as a result of the prosecution of saloonkeepers charged with keeping liquor for sale. Late in May Inspector Morrison came to Cobalt, and on an inspection of saloons took samples of beer on sale. In every case the percentage of alcohol was over the amount prescribed, some samples going 9 per cent. Most of those arraigned pleaded guilty, and altogether eleven were fined $25 and $4.75 costs each. Four asked for adjournment for a week, which was granted.

SHOT WIFE AND FRIEND.

Killed His Infant Child, Barricaded House and Suicided.

A despatch from Halle, Saxony, says: A painter named Heitel at daybreak, on Wednesday, entered a house where his wife, with whom he had quarreled, was sheltered by a woman friend, and shot both women and his infant child. He then barricaded the house and stood off the police for three hours. Finally the officers prepared to force the door and let in a pack of savage dogs, whereupon the painter killed himself.

FADING AT THIRTY

When Woman Should be in the Prime of Charm and Beauty

At thirty to thirty-five a woman should be in the prime of charm and beauty, and yet many women begin to fade before then. Wrinkles appear and the complexion grows sallow. Dark rings surround the eyes, and headaches follow, with backaches and low spirits. The cause of this is simply need of blood nourishment. Good, pure blood is the life of a woman's beauty and health. It is good blood that brings the glow of health to the cheek, brightness to the eye, and elasticity to the step, and the general happiness of good health. When woman feels jaded and worn out her blood supply needs attention, and the one unrivalled and sure remedy is Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, which supply the rich, red blood that repairs the waste, dispels disease and restores the brightness and charm of womanly health.

Mrs. H. G. Hart, Winnipeg, Man., is one of the thousands of sufferers who owes her present health to Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. She says: "I had suffered for a long time, not knowing what the trouble was. I had doctored with several doctors, but only seemed to be growing worse. The last doctor I had told me the trouble was anaemia, that my blood was turned to water and that my condition was serious. But his treatment, like the rest, did me no good. I got so bad that if I excited myself, or went up stairs, I was completely out of breath and felt as if I was going to suffocate. My heart would palpitate violently, and at times I would suffer with terrible pains from it. I had a yellow complexion, my lips had lost their color, and I had no appetite and could not eat. I grew so weak I could hardly drag myself along, and my feet seemed to have weights on them. I was so completely run down that I thought I was going into consumption. At this time a friend urged me to take Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. After taking a few boxes I found my health improving, and after taking the Pills for a couple of months I was entirely well, and have since enjoyed the best of health, and I feel that I can never say enough in praise of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills."

These Pills are sold by all dealers in medicine or sent by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

A TROPICAL FOREST.

As Far As Can Be Seen It Is Devoid of Animal Life.

A part of the Malay Peninsula is covered by an almost unbroken forest. The native population occupies but a small extent of ground; and that part, when abandoned, quickly goes back to wilderness again. So dense is the growth that even at midday the woods are dark and full of gloom. The paths along which the cutters of rattan make their way are not more than a foot and a half wide. They are kept as passable as much, perhaps, by beasts of prey as by men. To this forest Mr. Maxwell has devoted the entertaining pages of his book, "In Malay Forests."

After an hour's walk along a forest path, a casual observer might say that, so far as he could see, the forest contained no flowers, no butterflies, no birds, no life of any kind. But if you sit upon a fallen tree trunk and look round, you may see a little more.

High in a tree, and almost out of sight, you may see an occasional flower, and lower down, perhaps, your eye may light upon a spray of blossoms that a careful scrutiny shows to be a miniature orchid.

There are few butterflies in the forest, but now and then, if you are by one of the openings among the trees, which are to the winged creatures what the paths are to us, you may see a moth or a butterfly pass by, flapping its heavy velvet wings.

You seldom hear a bird, but if you are quiet and wait long enough some tiny sunbird may come your way, or a jungle-hen may creep out from under a bush, and scratch for ants' eggs in an open space where a tree has fallen. If you know where to look for them, you will see the tracks of four-footed animals, but you will not see the animals themselves.

In a forest which you know to be so extensive, you have a right to expect more than you have seen. Ants, a butterfly, even a bird, do not and cannot represent the life of this great gloomy place. But more you cannot see.

You are the centre of a small circle whose radius varies from fifteen to thirty yards. Inside this circle you can see more or less distinctly; outside it everything is hidden. Even so huge an animal as an elephant is sometimes invisible at fifteen yards, and almost always invisible at thirty yards.

Wherever you go you carry with you that little circle outside which lies the unknown. The path that lies behind you is, as soon as it passes outside that circle, as full of the unknown as the path before you or the tangle on each side. So little do you see that the feeling comes over you that you are alone in the midst of mysterious, hidden things. The feeling that immediately follows this is that these mysterious things are not merely hidden, but are specially hidden from you. The circle that moves with you is the veil drawn against you. You could imagine that you were a trespasser, or at all events regarded as such.

Then you have the horrible feeling that from behind the tree trunks watching eyes are looking upon you. It is bad enough at any time if you are alone and all is quiet; it is worse as the sun sinks and light fades; it is worse if by any ill chance you happen to know that you have lost not only your way, but your sense of direction.

At all times you may see things happen of which the reason is hard to divine. Although not a breath of air can be felt to move, a frond of a palm may begin to sway gently backward and forward, while all the other fronds of the same tree remain as motionless as the trees round. You examine the palm to see if there is possibly a rat or some other animal at its base, but can discover nothing. Sometimes one single leaf amidst the numbers on a branch may begin without any apparent cause to be violently agitated, and will as suddenly stop.

BE CAREFUL OF PEANUTS.

Whatever you swallow down your "Sunday" throat or your windpipe, be sure it is not a peanut, for if you do there is grave danger of death. So declared Dr. Chevalier Jackson, of Pittsburg, at the recent congress of the American Laryngological Association. He asserted that while it was possible to remove some foreign bodies from these two organs with comparative ease and safety, the majority of cases where particles of a peanut were lodged were fatal.

A MOTHER'S PRAISE OF BABY'S OWN TABLETS

Mrs. Allen Mason, Carleton, N. B., writes: "I have used Baby's Own Tablets ever since I have had children, and that is going on fifteen years. I have always found them entirely satisfactory for all the ailments of little ones and feel that I cannot praise them too highly." Mrs. Mason's praise is just that of thousands of mothers who consider Baby's Own Tablets the only safe and sure remedy to keep in the house for their little ones. The Tablets are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

"I wonder," said the Sweet Young Thing, "why a man is always so frightened when he proposes?" "That," said the Chronic Bachelor, "is his guardian angel trying to hold him back."

For Sprains and Bruises.—There is nothing better for sprains and contusions than Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil. It will reduce the swelling that follows a sprain, will cool the inflamed flesh and draw the pain as if by magic. It will take the ache out of a bruise and prevent the flesh from discoloring. It seems as if there was magic in it, so speedily does the injury disappear under treatment.

A POINTED QUESTION.

A little, city-bred boy who had never seen a cow, while on a visit to his uncle's in the country walked out across the fields with his grandpa. Seeing a cow, he was greatly excited, and asked:

"What is that, grandpa?"

"Why, that is only a cow," was the reply.

"What are those things on her head?"

"Horns," said his grandpa.

The two walked on.

Presently the cow mooed loud and long.

The boy was amazed. Looking back he exclaimed: "Which horn did she blow, grandpa?"

"Did you tell your sister I was here?" asked the caller. "Yes, sir." "Good boy. And what did she say?" "She said: 'Oh, dear!'"

TRIED AT LAST WHEN OTHERS ALL FAILED

AND DODD'S KIDNEY PILLS CURED THE POSTMASTER.

F. Tippins had suffered for years and spent hundreds on doctors and medicines, but found the real cure at last.

Tippins P. O., Que., June 12 (Special).—If Dodd's Kidney Pills have a more enthusiastic friend anywhere in Canada than Mr. F. Tippins, postmaster here, we would like to hear from him. And Mr. Tippins is always ready to tell why he praises the great Kidney Remedy.

"After recovering from an attack of Grippe," the postmaster says, "I took a pain in my back. I suffered for nearly three years and it kept growing worse all the time. I was attended by all the doctors around, but got no relief, and I got so bad I had to keep to my bed. After spending about $200 on doctors and medicines I gave up all hope.

"One day I told my wife to go and get me a box of Dodd's Kidney Pills and that would be the last medicine I would try. After using about half the box I began to feel better, so I kept on taking them. When I had taken two boxes I was able to get up, and ten boxes cured me completely."

Dodd's Kidney Pills cure where all other medicines fail.

QUEEN AND DEBUTANTES.

Suggests That the Presentation Dresses Be Made Shorter.

Queen Mary is anxious that debutantes who are being presented at court this season should appear to the greatest advantage, any with that in view she has given several hints to dressmakers regarding the fashioning of presentation gowns.

Besides the edict practically forbidding ultra-tight or hobble skirts at court which was issued recently, she has made several practical suggestions. One is that young girls should have their court dresses made slightly shorter in front, as in their nervousness they often trip over trailing skirts as they rise from the required courtesy and make very graceful exits in consequence.

Also the Queen thinks that all trains should be made of some heavy material like velvet or very rich satin rather than the gold and silver tissues and real laces which have been used of late years, the reason for this being that the debutante in her hurry to withdraw after her obseiance to the King and Queen crumples her train over her arm in an ugly manner when it is flimsy and light, whereas when it is heavy it falls in graceful folds no matter how carelessly she grasp it.

AT THE ZOO.

The old gentleman on a visit to the Zoo paused before a cage containing kangaroos.

"What animal is that?" he inquired of a keeper.

"That is a native of Australia," replied the keeper.

"What!" exclaimed the old gentleman. "And my sister married one of them!"

NORWAY'S INCOME TAX.

Married Men Are Favored, But Everybody Must Pay Something.

How should you like to pay an income tax on next to nothing? If you were a Norwegian living at home and earning $134 a year you would be taxed on one-tenth of it if you were unmarried; on about one-twentieth of it if you were married and had no children. If you had children you still would be taxed on one-fiftieth of it. Rate high—17.2 per cent. With an income of $536 a year you would be taxed, if unmarried, on more than half of your income; if married and having no children, on about 40 per cent. of your income; having one child, about 37 per cent.; two children, on about 31 per cent.

Unmarried and having an income of $2,680 a year in Norway, your income tax payment would be $421.22; married, with one child, $389.94; married, with six children, $355.17. All that you would get off your income tax (married) for having six children would be $66; all that you would get off by having five more children would be $44 and six bits. Married or unmarried in Norway, you would escape paying an income tax only by having an income less than $83.08 a year. Think of paying an income tax out of $7 a month!

The Beauty of a Clear Skin.—The condition of the liver regulates the condition of the blood. A disordered liver causes impurities in the blood and these show themselves in blemishes on the skin. Parmelee's Vegetable Pills in acting upon the liver act upon the blood and a clear, healthy skin will follow intelligent use of this standard medicine. Ladies, who will fully appreciate this prime quality of these pills, can use them with the certainty that the effect will be most gratifying.

Johnson, the fancy dealer, had left his boy Jimmy in charge of his shop.

The first customer was an old lady who was out to buy a present for her son. She was very difficult to please, and Jimmy began to get impatient. At last the lady picked up a little satchel.

"Are you sure this is real alligator-skin?" she inquired.

"Positive," replied Jimmy. "I shot that alligator myself."

"It looks rather soiled," remarked the lady, sniffing suspiciously. But Jimmy was equal to the occasion.

"That, madam," he replied, "is where it struck the ground when it fell off the tree."

WAITING HIS TURN.

A miner took his boots to get soled, but was not in a hurry to pay for them. After a few weeks had elapsed, the shoemaker called to ask for his money.

The miner's wife answered the door, and on being told by the shoemaker that he had called for the money for the boots, she shouted into the house and told her good man what was required.

"What!" exclaimed the miner. "He wants the pay for soling the boots? Tell him it's not his turn. Why, the chap that made them hasn't got paid yet!"

MARRIED—A very pretty wedding took place at 12 o'clock noon on June 14 at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Taylor, when their daughter, Miss Effie P., became the bride of Mr. Myron Manford Culbert of Biddulph, Rev. R. Hobbs performing the ceremony in the presence of only the immediate relatives of the contracting parties. The house was decorated with white hyderangea, roses and maiden hair ferns. The bride and groom were unattended except for the little ringbearers, Harold and Ross Hern, nephews of the bride. They carried the ring in a basket of white hyderangea and maiden hair ferns. The bride entered the parlor leaning on the arm of her father, dressed in cream silk sublime, trimmed with cream silk overlace and insertion, and carrying cream roses and maiden hair ferns. The travelling suit was a dark shade of King's blue French broadcloth, with hat to match. The young couple left the same evening on the 5 train for Toronto, Pickering and The Thousand Islands. After their return they will reside on the groom's fine farm near Lucan. The groom's gift to the bride was a beautiful gold watch and chain. The Advocate joins the host of friends in congratulations and best wishes.

HICKS' FORECASTS FOR JUNE.—A reactionary storm period will make itself severely felt on and touching the 20th, 21st and 22nd. This period is at the exact centre of the summer solstice and great electrical manifestations will mark this period, and in all this part of the month we may look for an excess of lightning all round the heavens, in early evenings and through the nights. As we have often said, this solstice lightning is very grand and awe-inspiring, but for the most part it is perfectly harmless. Of course the electric bolts of an on-coming thunder storm are fraught with danger, but the noiseless, panpramic flashing all over the clouds, banked around the horizon these solstice evenings, is as harmless as moonshine—beautiful to behold and full of life and health to the vegetable kingdom as well as to all animate life.

TRESPASSERS TAKE WARNING. —Warning is hereby given that children and others found trespassing on the Canning Factory pea fields will be prosecuted.—Exeter Canning Co.

DEATH OF E. H. FISH.—There passed away at the family residence, Exeter Wednesday morning about 3 o'clock a former well-known and much respected business man of Exeter in the person of Edward H. Fish, at the age of 61 years, 11 months and 9 days. Deceased had been a long sufferer from acute rheumatism, which followed by a severe attack of kidney trouble, about a week ago, caused his death. For many years the late Mr Fish conducted a barber shop in the premises now occupied by Mr. E. Willis, the greater part of his life being spent in Exeter. Owing to ill health he retired from active business about six years ago, since which he has been in failing health. He leaves a sorrowing widow and two daughters, Miss Annie at home and Miss Frances of Boston, also one brother, Henry, of Glenwood Station. Deceased was a member of the Ancient Order of Foresters, under whose auspices the funeral takes place Friday to Exeter cemetery. The family have the sympathy of their many friends.

Baseball

Perhaps the biggest crowd of rooters that ever went out of town with the Exeter base ball team went along with the boys on Friday evening to Crediton, anticipating a good game if not a victory for Exeter. In the former they were not disappointed as the game was an excellent one, but the victory went to Crediton 11-9. Carling in the box for Exeter pitched a good game, there being but six hits off him, while the Exeterites got thirteen hits off Teddy Brown, the Crediton twirler. Exeter got a good lead in the 3rd when they scored 4 runs, but Crediton's 5 in the 4th and 3 in the 5th due largely to a bunch of errors, won the game, as the visitors were unable to overcome the lead, although Exeter got 5 in the last four innings. Crediton people say it was the noisest bunch of rooters that ever struck the burg, a bus load of Exeter girls being particularly enthusiastic regarding the game.

The following is the line up and score

Palmer	1	King	Fahner 2
Boyle	2	Bissett	2
Carling	1	Snell	1
Mitchell	1	Young	1
Duplan	0	R.	Fahner 2
Hoskins	1	F.	Kerr 1
Bellwood	1	I.	Fahner 1
Brintnell	1	F.	Brown 1
Steer	1	H.	Fahner 0

Exeter	0	0	4	0	0	1	1	0	3	—	9
Crediton	0	0	1	5	3	0	0	2	x	—	11

The third game of baseball between Zurich and Exeter Juniors was played on the grounds here Tuesday evening, resulting in a win for the visitors, 11-5, due almost entirely to a long succession of errors on the part of several Exeter players. A good crowd was present. E. Wurm umpired.

Exeter and Kirkton play a double-header in baseball here Thursday.

EXETER MAN'S LOSS

Clandeboye, June 20.—The large grain storehouse here was completely destroyed by fire this afternoon, caused from a spark from the G. T. R. engine. The sparks lodged on the roof and the volunteers could not prevent the building from burning. It was with the greatest difficulty that the station was saved. The building belonged to R. G. Seldon of Exeter, and the business here was carried on by Hay Bros. of Listowel. There was no grain in the building. Loss about $2000.

A number of Exeter people were in Seaforth to see the races last week.

ROBERT DONNELLY DIES.

Lucan, June 15.—Robert Donnelly, whose father, mother, two brothers and cousin were murdered in the famous Donnelly tragedy, in Biddulph, Feb. 4, 1880, died very unexpectedly at his home in Lucan yesterday, as a result of a paralytic stroke. Mr. Donnelly himself was one of the figures in the events that occurred before the murder, but at the time of its occurrence he was in Kingston, where he had been sent on a charge of having shot at a constable. Mr. Donnelley contended throughout that he had not shot at the man, and made an affidavit to that effect, but the constable swore that Donnelley did the shooting, and he was sent down. Mr. Donnelley was 60 years old, and is survived by his wife. The funeral, which was held to St. Patrick's Cemetery, Biddulph, on Saturday, was conducted by Father Hanlon.

COUNTY COUNCIL DOINGS

At the request of Clinton Public School Board Clinton was put back in the East Huron Inspectorate.

W. B. Weidenhammer of Exeter was placed on the board of H. S. Examiners.

The Sterling Bank was given one-half the County's account.

$25 was granted for first and second prizes for fat animals from Huron Co. at Guelph Winter Fair.

Government and Municipal ownership of Telephone lines was approved.

The usual school grants were made.

High Constable Whitesides of Hensall was given a salary of $200 and fees.

The county rate was fixed at 1 7-10 mills.

The 1911 expenditure was estimated at $78,345.

MAY BE PARDONED

William Carroll, under sentence of death for killing a lumberman in New Ontario, may be pardoned on the ground that he is an escaped lunatic from the London asylum for the insane. Two sisters and a brother of the condemned man are Mrs. Thompson of London, Mrs Revington of Biddulph and A. J. Carroll of Bothwell. Carroll is said to have become insane as a result of brooding over the death of his wife. Some years ago he escaped from the asylum and went first to Bothwell, afterwards to the north country. The attorney general has assured the relatives that if his insanity is proved he will certainly escape the capital punishment.

Conservative Convention

J. J. MERNER OF ZURICH CHOSEN FOR THE DOMINION HOUSE

The Convention of the Liberal Conservative Association of South Huron, as well as the annual meeting of the association took place in the skating rink in Hensall on Tuesday afternoon, and was a largely attended and most enthusiastic meeting. The officers were elected for the ensuing year, addresses were delivered by many prominent men in the party in the riding, as well as the present local member, Mr. H. Elber. A number of good men were placed in the field by nomination, finally resulting in the unanimous choice of Mr J. J. Merner, a thorough business man, farmer and merchant, of unimpeachable character, well-known in the riding; in short a first-class candidate in every respect, and those present at the meeting were enthusiastic in their belief that he would redeem South Huron.

J. Williams of Zurich, who has been president for many years, opened the meeting by a short talk on organization, after which the old officers were unanimously re-elected, a strong executive, one member from each municipality, was elected, and good chairmen appointed for each polling subdivision.

The officers are—Pres., J. Williams; Vice., John McNaughton; Sec., Harry Horton; Treas. T. B. Carling.

Executive—McKillop, John Scarlet of Leadbury; Seaforth, John McKinnon; Tuckersmith, Henry Horton of Hensall; Hensall, John Macarthur; Usborne, S. Hunter, Exeter; Exeter, J. W. Taylor; Stephen, John Sherritt, of Harpley; Hay J. Williams; Stanley, John McNaughton of Varna; Bayfield, Dr Woods; Goderich Tp., John Middleton of Clinton.

Chairmen of Sub-Divisions.—McKillop,—1, Jas. O'Sullivan; 2, Jas. Hilland, 3, Jas. Smith; 4, Geo. McGee. Seaforth—1, J. C. Greig; 2, M. Broderick; 3, J. Turner; 4, M. McLeod; 5, Adam Hays. Tuckersmith—1, Harry Colbert; 2, Geo. Aberhart; 3, J. K. Wise; 4, J. Moffatt; 5, Mathew Clark, 6, Robt. Brownlee. Hensall—Garnet Smallacombe. Usborne—1, Richard Coates; 2, John Moir 3, Wm. Atkinson; 4, Thos. Hunkin. Exeter—1, W. J. Carling; 2, L. H. Dickson; 3, T. H. McCallum; 4, Ed. Maguire. Stephen—1, Wm. Anderson; 2 W. D. Sanders; 3, Godfrey Nicholson; 4, Alonzo Hodgins; 5, B. Cunningham; 6, Dr. McLaughlin; 7, James Baxter; 8, J. B. Hodgins; 9, Stephen Webb. Hay—1, John Hawkins; 2, Geo Joynt; 3, Wm. Field; 4, Henry Neeb; 5, Hy. Pfile; 6, John Hoffman; 7, Wm. Caldwell; 8, Geo. Pollick. Stanley—1, Wm. Glenn; 2, Robt. Morrison; 3, J. W. Reid; 4, Wm. Rathwell; 5, Wm. Evans. Bayfield—Robt. McMurray. Goderich Tp.—1, Chas. Naftel; 2, John Cox, 3, John Stewart; 4, Robt. Cluff; 5, Thomas Churchill; 6, Adam Cantelon.

NOMINATIONS

The organization completed nominations were then called for, with the result that the following good men were placed in the field,—H. Elber, J. J. Merner, Henry Horton, M. Broderick, John Sherritt, H. Spackman, J. Williams, T. B. Carling, J. W. Taylor, W. D. Sanders, John Macarthur.

Short and enthusiastic addresses were made by all the nominees, all of whom, with the exception of Mr. Merner and Mr. Broderick, declined to stand for the election. A ballot was then taken and Mr. Merner receiving the majority of the votes, he, on motion of Mr. Broderick and seconded by Mr. Horton, was made the unanimous choice of the convention, amid the cheers of everyone present.

On a motion of Messrs. John W. Taylor and Stephen Webb a resolution was unanimously carried, expressing the utmost confidence in Mr. R. L. Borden and Sir James Whitney, and recording the convention's determined opposition to the reciprocity agreement.

H. Elber, M. P. P., was then called upon to address the meeting which he did in his usual forceful and convincing manner, complimenting the convention on their thorough business methods, the good feeling and unanimity shown, congratulating the province on the good government of Sir James Whitney, particularly in regard to the Hydro-Electric, the government railway, education, and assistance to farming industry. Regarding Dominion affairs he denounced in no uncertain terms the action of the present member for the riding, Mr. M. Y. McLean, on his famous disloyalty talk, and his opposition to the investigation of the Farmers' Bank, when he (Mr. McLean) stated on the floor of the House that the stockholders went into it knowing what they were doing, and that he had no sympathy for them. Such a man, Mr. Elber said, was not fit to represent any riding, and that he felt that if there was no change made in the riding Mr. McLean would be defeated.

STARVED NERVES

The Cause of Neuralgia—It Must be Treated Through the Blood

Neuralgia is a cry of the nerves for more and better blood. It literally means that the nerves are being starved. Like every other part of the body the nerves receive their nourishment through the blood. There is therefore no doubt that Dr. Williams' Pink Pills will cure the worst cases of neuralgia. They actually make new, rich blood, carrying to the starved nerves the elements they need, thus driving away the sharp, torturing pains which nearly drives the sufferer wild. So many cases of neuralgia have yielded to treatment through Dr. Williams' Pink Pills that every sufferer from this dreaded trouble should lose no time in giving the Pills a fair trial. Mrs. Sophia H. Johnson, Mozan, Sask., says: "For upwards of ten years I was a periodical sufferer from neuralgia. It located in the side of my face and in the jaw, which would actually click every time I opened or closed my mouth. At times the pains would be almost unendurable, and as time went on, my whole nervous system seemed to be affected. I was constantly doctoring, but the doctor did not seem to be able to give me permanent relief, and at last I decided to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. I got a half dozen boxes, and before they were half gone I felt much better, and by the time I had used them all every symptom of the trouble had gone, and I was enjoying a comfort I had not known for years. I have since remained in the best of health, and can only say I owe the joy of living without pain to Dr. Williams' Pink Pills."

Sold by all medicine dealers or by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

THE MAGUEY PLANT.

The Mexican Planter's Wealth is Mainly in the Cactus.

When a Mexican owns field after field of maguey he is considered wealthy, for these plantations are quite valuable, says the Houston Post. After a slip of maguey is planted it does not require much care, because the climate of Mexico just suits it. When the century plant is seven years old it is said to be full grown and worth about $12. Then a large, fleshy cone with flowers in it grows amidst the heavy green leaves. This is just what the planter has been waiting for. Then he cuts the cone, leaving a bowl-like hollow in the heart of the plant. Two or three times a day this maguey bowl fills up with sap, so that it has to be drawn out by the gardener, who puts it in a pigskin vessel which he carries on his back. It is said that a healthy plant gives the Mexican over a gallon of this sap every day. Perhaps you would not like this juice, but when the children of the hot lands drink it fresh from the plant they call it "honey water." When the juice is put in large vats and fermented it is called "pulque," but then it is not good for the Mexicans, for those who drink it become sleepy and stupid.

No part of the maguey is wasted. The roots of the century plant make such good food that they are often boiled and eaten. Sometimes the leaves are used for fuel, but often they are dried and put on the outside of houses, just as we would use shingles.

When the Mexican wants some very cold water he makes a trough of fresh green maguey leaves and pours water into it. As the oil evaporates from the leaves the water in the trough becomes so cold that it almost freezes. Itn't that a queer water cooler The century plant leaves are so very stringy or fibrous that they furnish materials for making a kind of coarse thread which the Mexicans weave into cloth. Sometimes heavy twine or rope is made from the fibre, too. When this rope is twisted into coarse mats the Mexicans use them for chairs in the day and beds at night. Even the stickers or thorns are useful, for they serve as needles or nails.

When a large white caterpillar crawls over the maguey he had better beware that a Mexican does not see him, or else he will soon be cooking in a pot, for the poor man who works in the field thinks that such a dish is a luxury.

INDIA'S NATIVE PRINCES.

Wonderful Divergence in Appearance and Character.

India is governed by the British, but only part of it is governed directly by them. Of the 1,766,642 square miles of India 690,000 square miles are under the rule of the native princes, as are 66,000,000 out of the 300,000,000 inhabitants. There are some 6,000 native chiefs, big and little, from the Nazim, the ruler of Hyderabad, with its population of 11,000,000, its territory of 82,698 square miles and its revenues of $12,000,000, down to a petty chief, with a few square miles of territory, and a few thousands a year of revenue.

There is as much variety in their breeding and bearing, and ability as in their territories and revenues. Some of them trace their ancestry straight back to the first conquerors from the North; others are descended from Arab, Tartar, or Afghan invaders; others are the descendants of court favorites and their ancestral right to rank is as illegitimate as some of the proud names in England and France, while others are heirs of rough soldiers who grabbed what they could and held it when the Mughal empire went to pieces.

Some are highly educated, others ignorant; some are Anglicized, some Pariscized, devoting much time, those to cricket, racing, polo; and these to such European travel as they are permitted, and lazy licentiousness both at home and abroad. There are fine gentlemen among them, as chivalrous and as proud as any noble in Europe, and there are others who are mere naughty schoolboys. There are not a few who spend their money on schools and colleges and museums, on irrigation works and tramways, on roads and bridges and model prisons, and who pride themselves on the efficiency and smartness of their Imperial Service troops; and others who throw thousands about on motor cars, jewels, dancing girls, or favorite wives, and hideous Brummagem furniture and pictures. There are burly, heavy-shouldered, big-hipped, gross-featured princes who look like brown caricatures of Ruben's women, and there are lithe, muscular, fine-featured fellows, who look fit for a tussle with a tiger, and show their breeding even in their finger-tips.—Scribner's

THE EXPLOSIVE.

Giants That Man Has Succeeded in Conquering.

The fairy story of a large and powerful genie confined in a small jar is no more wonderful than is the true story of a bit of powder packed in a cartridge; when the powder is exploded it propels far and with terrific speed. A Chinaman first discovered the power of explosives when he invented gunpowder, and it has proved to be the greatest of all the forces that have changed the maps of nations, writes Raymond Perry in St. Nicholas.

Explosives so powerful have been discovered now that no gun can be made strong enough to be discharged more than a comparatively small number of times; and there are machine guns, submarine mines and torpedoes—engines of destruction so powerful that no battle either on land or sea could last more than a few hours. Indeed, it is predicted that soon no two nations will dare to go to war, so terrible would be the consequences to themselves and the rest of the world.

While explosives are needed less and less for war than formerly, they are used more and more in the victories of peace. When the genie was let out of the jar he built great palaces for his master and transported him great distances by land, by sea and in the air; and that is just what the giant explosive is doing to-day for man, his master. The power of dynamite is blasting rock for the foundation of skyscrapers and bridge piers, and boring tunnels through the solid mountains; while gasoline the new explosive, is used for transportation in automobiles on land, in motor boats in the water, and in aeroplanes in the air, thus finally accomplishing the dream that man has cherished for centuries—the marvel of human flight.

A REEL JOKE.

It was the elder's day at the plate, and he was shaving himself prior to church time, when he made a slight cut with the razor on the extreme end of his nose. Calling his wife, he asked her if she had any court plaster.

"You will find some in my sewing-basket," she said.

At church, in assisting with the collection, he noticed everyone smile as he passed the plate. Very much annoyed, he asked one of his assistants if there was anything wrong with his appearance.

"I should say there was," answered the assistant. "What is that upon your nose?"

"Court plaster," was the reply.

"No," said the friend; "it is the label from a spool of cotton. It says, 'Warranted 200 yards.'"

Toronto's dry dock will be the first of its kind in Canada.

FOR TEETHING BABIES

There is only one medicine for teething babies—that is one that will make teething easy and at the same time can be given with absolute safety. That medicine is Baby's Own Tablets—every box of which is sold under the guarantee of a government analyst to be free from all those injurious opiates and narcotics which make "soothing" stuffs so harmful. Concerning the Tablets, Mrs. George Leblanc, St. Pamphile, Que., says: "I used Baby's Own Tablets for my baby when he was teething and constipated and found them an excellent remedy. The Tablets are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

SUBLETTING A CONTRACT.

A benevolent old lady happened one day to be visiting a school where a young incorrigible was undergoing punishment for a series of misdemeanors.

The teacher cited him as "the worst boy in the school—one I can't do anything with. I've tried everything in the way of punishment."

"Have yo utried kindness?" was the gentle inquiry.

"I did at first, but I've got beyond that now."

At the close of the visit the lady asked the boy if he would call and see her on the following Saturday. A boy arrived promptly at the hour appointed. The old lady showed him her best pictures, played her liveliest music, and set before him a delicious lunch on her daintiest china. Then she thought it about time to begin her little sermon.

"My dear," she began, "were you not very unhappy to have to stand in the corner before all the class for punishment?"

"Please, ma'am," broke in the boy, with his mouth full of cake, "that wasn't me you saw. It was Pete. He gave me ten cents to come here and take your jawing."

The Pure Food Law stopped the sale of hundreds of fraudulant medicines. They could not stand investigation. Hamlins Wizard Oil has stood the test of investigation for nearly sixty years.

EXPERIENCED.

"How long have you been married?"

"So long that I've got so that I can hook a dress with one hand."

A stitch in time saves nine, and every house fly killed early saves a thousand at least later on. Wilson's Fly Pads will kill many times more flies than any other article.

Husband—"My dear, I thought we were going to practise economy for a time." Wife—"So we are, dear. I went down and countermanded the order you gave your tailor for a suit, and bought a bonnet that cost only half the amount."

The ease with which corns and warts can be removed by Holloway's Corn Cure is its strongest recommendation. It seldom fails.

SAILOR'S DEFINITION.

Teacher—Freddy, what is a dromedary?

Little Freddy—Please, teacher, a dromedary is a two-masted camel.

Housekeepers are strongly advised to commence the use of Wilson's Fly Pads early, because a few flies killed in June would otherwise become a host by August.

In order to rid ourselves of dry, lonesome monotony, it is necessary to have a personality and let it assert itself.

A Cure for Rheumatism.—A painful and persistent form of rheumatism is caused by impurities in the blood, the result of defective action of the liver and kidneys. The blood becomes tainted by the introduction of uric acid, which causes much pain in the tissues and in the joints. Parmelee's Vegetable Pills are known to have effected many remarkable cures, and their use is strongly recommended. A trial of them will convince anyone of their value.

There are pleasures, and occupations, and duties for each day of our lives, and we must do things to-day which are of to-day.

ODDITIES OF ENGLISH WORDS

There are in the English language but two words in which the five vowels occur in their alphabetical order—abstemious and facetious. Abracadabra and dirigibility are examples of the very few words in which the same vowel occurs five times in succession as the base of as many distinct syllables. Unintelligibility has the greatest number of syllables in proportion to the number of letters. Straightforwardness and great-granddaughter have the greatest number of letters in proportion to the number of syllables.

CHILD BURNED WILL.

English Court Allowed the Claim of Widow.

At Christmas time, when everything was cheerful and one could divert oneself as one would, a little girl of eight drew open an unlocked drawer and came on a piece of blue paper, with no writing whatever on one side of it. When she produced doll's houses and trees, kite-flying episodes, and wonderful fashions to her heart's content, she tore up the paper and put it in the fire. It was her father's will.

This free and unfettered exercise of the artistic faculty produced some difficulty in the English Probate Court recently. Her mother, Mrs. Golden, the widow of a butler, moved to obtain probate of her husband's will. The eight-year-old limner was cited as defendant.

Counsel for the widow said that Mr. Golden made a will leaving his property to his wife, but it was not forthcoming at the time of his death. The question at issue was whether he revoked it or not. Judgment was eventually given for Mr. Golden's will of June, 1909, in favor of the wife, on the terms set out in the claim.

If attacked with cholera or summer complaint of any kind send at once for a bottle of Dr. J. D. Kellogg's Dysentery Cordial and use it according to directions. It acts with wonderful rapidity in subduing that dreadful disease that weakens the strongest man and that destroys the young and delicate. Those who have used this cholera medicine say it acts promptly, and never fails to effect a thorough cure.

She longed for a new hat. So she began to worry her husband for a new dress. He—"A new dress! Can't afford it. If you wanted gloves, or a new hat, I wouldn't mind. But a new dress!" She—"Well, don't get flurried, dearest! You know I always give in. So just buy me a new hat."

For Mother Graves' Worm Exterminator has ranked as the most effective preparation manufactured, and it always maintains its reputation.

"Yes," said Mrs. Wordsworth; "the family are most interesting. John dances divinely, Tom sings like an angel, Susanne paints with great taste." "And Henry?" "Oh, Henry! Well, he's rather a dull sort of a fellow, you know. He only works and supports the others."

Ask for Minard's and take no other.

"What am oratory, Brudder Jackson?" "Brudder Simmins, I will elucidate. If you says black am white, dat am foolish. But if you says black AM white, an' bellers like a bull an' pounds on a table wif bofe fists, dat am oratory, an' some people will believe you."

REST AND HEALTH TO MOTHER AND CHILD.

MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP has been used for over SIXTY YEARS by MILLIONS of MOTHERS for their CHILDREN WHILE TEETHING, with PERFECT SUCCESS. It SOOTHES the CHILD, SOFTENS the GUMS, ALLAYS all PAIN; CURES WIND COLIC, and is the best remedy for DIARRHŒA. It is absolutely harmless. Be sure and ask for "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup," and take no other kind. Twenty-five cents a bottle.

Harker—"Doesn't Cuttem, the tailor, remind you of a doctor?" Parker—"I should say not. He reminds me of that little bill I owe him every time we meet."

For Burns and Scalds.—Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil will take the fire out of a burn or scald more rapidly than any other preparation. It should be at hand in every kitchen so that it may be available at any time. There is no preparation required. Just apply the oil to the burn or scald and the pain will abate and in a short time cease altogether.

"Oh, love," sighed the sentimental lover, "I would these were the knightly days of old, that I might go forth and perform some brave deed to prove my love." "But so you may, George," interrupted the girl. "Go forth and speak to father."

ANTICIPATION.

The new maid seemed eminently satisfactory, but the mistress of the house thought a few words of advice would be just as well.

"And remember," she concluded, "that I expect you to be very reticent about what you hear when you are waiting at table."

"Certainly, madam, certainly!" replied the treasure. But then her face lit up with an innocent curiosity. "May I ask, madam, if there will be much to be reticent about?"

A Pill that Proves Its Value.—Those of weak stomach will find strength in Parmelee's Vegetable Pills, because they serve to maintain the healthful action of the stomach and the liver, irregularities in which are most distressing. Dyspeptics are well acquainted with them and value them at their proper worth. They have afforded relief when other preparations have failed, and have effected cures in ailments of long standing where other medicines were found unavailing.

The boy of the family, the smart little son of an editor, had just passed his ninth birthday, and delighted in stirring things up whenever he found a chance. On his way to school one day he popped into a confectioner's. "Say, mister,' he called out, "do you keep fondants?" "Oh, yes," replied the confectioner, "we've kept them for years." "Well," returned the boy, starting for the door, "just advertise in pa's paper, and then you won't keep them so long."

Don't ignore the few house flies you see in June. Unless you commence using Wilson's Fly Pads early your house will be overrun by them in midsummer.

MEAT HELPS.

To preserve beef steak and chops, saturate a piece of thin white cloth in white wine vinegar. Place meat on a platter, first wetting platter with a little of the vinegar, then spread cloth over meat. In this way meat can be kept without ice for two days, by moistening the cloth with vinegar when it begins to dry. The meat will not taste of the vinegar.

Recipes and Other Valuable Information of Particular Interest to Women Folks.

STRAWBERRIES.

Strawberry Salad.—Cut large strawberries in halves lengthwise, sprinkle with powdered sugar, and let stand until thoroughly chilled. Serve in nests of white lettuce leaves, with whipped cream flavored with mayonnaise dressing, well seasoned with salt and paprika. Garnish with halves of strawberries and chopped pistachio nuts.

Strawberry Croquante.—Decorate a mold with strawberries which have been dipped in melted jelly and arrange closely together around bottom and sides of mold; set away on ice to become firm. Dissolve three heaping tablespoonfuls of gelatin in one cupful boiling water, add one cupful sugar, two cupfuls strawberry juice, and when cool fold in two cupfuls of cream, which has been whipped stiff. Pour into decorated mold, Set away to stiffen, and turn out and serve when set. This recipe requires three pints of berries.

Strawberry Trifle.—Spread some small pieces of sponge cake and strawberry jam and fill up a glass dish with them. Slice some ripe strawberries over top, and then pour over custard made as follows: To three cupfuls milk add one heaping tablespoonful of gelatin, three eggs lightly beaten, and four tablespoonfuls sugar. Cook in double boiler until thick and creamy. Set away till cold and when ready to serve pour over top one cupful sweetened cream beaten stiff, and dot here and there with large ripe strawberries.

Preserving Strawberries. — Put unhulled berries in a colander and allow cold water to run through them to remove sand and harden barries; hull carefully. Crush one pint of berries in an enameled kettle and add one full cup of sugar, granulated preferred. Juice will be formed with such weight that berries will not float on top of juice when in the jar. Let crushed berries and sugar boil hard, shaking kettle to prevent sticking. Drop remainder of berries in boiling syrup and cook five minutes, skimming thoroughly. Have jars ready placed on cloth, wrung out of cold water, and fill in berries with a silver spoon. Two boxes of strawberries when cooked will fill one quart Mason jar, which is enough to cook at one time.

Strawberry Souffle.—Put two cups strawberries washed, hulled, and cut in halves, in an earthenware pudding dish. Then sprinkle with sugar, pour over a souffle mixture, and bake in a moderate oven from thirty-five to forty-five minutes. For the mixture: Melt three tablespoons butter, add one-fourth cup flour, and stir until well blended; then pour on gradually while beating constantly, one cup of scalded milk. Beat the yolks of four eggs until thick and lemon colored, and add gradually while beating constantly one-fourth cup of sugar . Combine the mixture and cut and fold in the whites of four eggs beaten until stiff and dry.

ASPARAGUS.

Canapes of Asparagus.—Take slices of bread about two inches thick, and stamp them out into neat rounds with a biscuit cutter. With a smaller cutter mark a circle in the center of each round and scoop out the crumbs to the depth of an inch, taking care to leave the sides and bottom quite firm. Arrange these in a shallow dish and pour over them a half pint of milk, to which a beaten egg has been added. Then take up carefully and slip into a kettle of boiling fat. They will brown almost immediately and must be removed when a pale golden brown. Drain on soft paper. Cut the tender part of asparagus into pieces of an equal size, rejecting that which is woody. Wash and simmer in salted water until tender. Drain. But a heaping tablespoonful of butter into o saucepan with a tablespoonful of flour; then add a quarter of a pint of water in which the asparagus was cooked; let it come to a boil; add the asparagus, the juice of a lemon, and a teaspoonful of fine chopped parsley. Fill the canapes with this; arrange on a platter and garnish with cress or parsley and sliced lemon.

Asparagus Soup.—Put two dozen asparagus stalks in boiling salted water (just enough to cover), with a small onion, a few sprigs of parsley, and a stalk of celery. Cover closely and cook twenty minutes or a half hour, until tender. Take out the asparagus with a skimmer and strain the water from the other vegetables. Press the asparagus through a purse-strainer and return to the water in which it was cooked. Make a white sauce by cooking together one heaping tablespoonful of butter and a level tablespoonful of flour. Stir until smooth, add the asparagus and water. Allow it to boil a few minutes, then add a half pint of sweet cream or rich milk, and season delicately with salt, white pepper, and a grating of nutmeg, or tablespoonful of lemon juice as preferred. Do not allow it to cook after adding the cream, but while scalding hot, pour gradually over the well beaten yolks of two eggs. Serve with croutons or crackers.

ECONOMICAL RECIPES.

Delicious Rice Waffles.—Three-quarters cups flour, two tablespoons sugar, two and a half teaspoons baking powder, one-quarter teaspoon salt. Sift thoroughly together. Into this work two-thirds cup cold cooked rice; use tips of fingers. Add one and one-quarter cups milk, one egg, one tablespoon melted butter.

Bread Griddle Cakes.—One and one-half cups flour, one cup stale bread crumbs, three teaspoons baking powder, one teaspoon salt, two tablespoons sugar, one-half cup boiling water, three-quarters cup milk, one egg, well beaten, two tablespoons melted butter. Add boiling water to the bread crumbs and let stand five minutes. Add the milk, sift together, thoroughly the flour, salt, sugar, and baking powder, and add to the bread mixture; then add the egg and butter. Fry, as griddle cakes.

GOOD DESSERTS.

Chocolate Pudding.—Three eggs, separate and beat yolks light; add one cup of sugar and beat, three tablespoons of milk and beat, three tablespoons of cocoa or one ounce of chocolate; beat; one cup flour, beat; two tablespoons of baking powder; fold in whites of eggs last. If you use cocoa, add one-half teaspoon of cloves. Steam twenty minutes in small molds or forty minutes in large ones. Fill molds half full. Serve with vanilla sauce or whipped cream .

Strawberry Dessert.—Make a rich crust and fill with berries partly mashed and mixed with sugar. Cover with sweetened whipped cream and serve. Short cake—Make an angel food and bake in two tins. Put strawberries between and serve with whipped cream sweetened.

PRESERVING HINT.

Instead of waiting till later in season and buying berries and fruits in large quantities try this plan. Each time strawberries are purchased for table buy an extra pint or quart and make a glass or pint jar of jam. It can be made while washing the dishes or doing any work in the kitchen and takes no extra time. It is quickly made, can be cooled, sealed and set away the same day and the expense will not be noticed, while the fruit closet will be filled without effort. This is a perfectly practical and satisfactory plan and can be applied to all fruits.

VALUABLE HINTS.

An obstinate headache will often disappear if the head behind the ears be bathed with hot water.

Brushing moth holes in furniture with paraffin will arrest their progress. The holes should be filled with paraffin wax.

Removing grass stains. Before wetting rub the stain with molasses and wash in the usual way. Used on either white or colored material.

Valuable china and glass may be saved from chipping by placing a heavy Turkish towel at the bottom of the basin in which it is washed.

If a pan is burned or blackened rub the inside of it with a hard crust of bread dipped in salt and afterward wash it with hot soda and water.

Add a little soda to the water in which you wash plates and dishes. The soda loosens the grease on them and gives the china a good shiny surface.

To set green, blue lavender and pink colors in wash goods, soak in alum water. Black, dark blue and gray should be soaked in strong salt water.

Cornstarch for iodine stains. Cover the stain with the cornstarch, wet in cold water or milk. Let stand until stain disappears. Change cornstarch if necessary.

Wash a saucepan in plenty of hot water; but never wash cake tins or frying pans. Wipe them well with a piece of paper, which is afterward burned, and polish them with a dry cloth.

Keep a bottle of ammonia at hand to use when acid takes the color from any fabric. Apply a little of the ammonia immediately, and in almost every instance the color will be restored.

When using a bottle of glue the stopper may be prevented from sticking by rubbing a fresh one with a little lard or grease of some kind and using that in place of the old sticky one.

When cooking mush for fried mush do not cook as long as for eating, but pour into a deep pan after stirring ten minutes. When cold dip the slices in beaten egg and they will fry crisp.

It is wise to wash the egg beater directly after it is used. If this is impossible save yourself trouble later by plunging it at once into a bowl of water so the egg cannot harden on it.

Be very careful to keep the lids of saucepans clean, for the flavor of one dish may cling to a lid which has not been washed and spoil a second dish which is prepared in the same dish.

Vases, vinegar cruets and other bottles may be cleaned with a handful of raw rice in soapsuds vigorously shaken. The rice is better than shot for this purpose and polishes as well as cleans.

For scorched articles use peroxide. Wet two cloths; place one beneath and one on top and watch the space become clear in fifteen or twenty minutes. Let stand this long without disturbing.

Pudding cloth, jelly bags, and so on should be well washed, scalded and hung up to dry. It is not necessary to iron them, but they should be smoothed and folded before they are replaced in the drawer.

Stand saucepans, fish kettles, etc., in front of the fire for a few minutes after washing them, so that they may be thoroughly dried inside. This makes them last longer and helps to keep them in good condition.

A LAKE OF SODA.

But the Small Boy Must Not Expect Too Much.

Wonderful as have been the reports of the vast soda deposit at Lake Magadi in East Africa, says Current Literature, the tendency hitherto has been to deem the stories fantastic. Now, however, the mystery has been cleared up by the report of an expedition which penetrated quite to the interior of Britain's remote possession—as far, indeed, as 15 miles from the frontier of German East Africa. The ascertained facts according to the Chemical News, are more surprising than were the first reports. What, in the case of an ordinary lake, would be water consists at Magadi of a solid deposit of soda, with a hard surface looking like pink marble. During the wet season—which in this region is very short—the surface is covered with a few inches of water. Immediately after the cessation of the rains the whole surface becomes dry with the exception of a margin about 30 yards wide. Even during the wet season the amount of water on the surface in no way renders impracticable the working of the deposit. For many years "Indians" from Nairobi, who use this soda for washing purposes and as snuff, have been removing it from the lake without regard to the season.

URGE USE OF GASOLINE.

French Automobile Club Would Have Farmers Save Money.

The use of gasoline motors for farm work is being promoted by the French Automobile Club, a special committee of which holds meetings at intervals of several years, and bestows prizes for the power plants of cultivators, sixteen awards of cash or medals having been recently made.

Original applications or developments by tht farmer himself are specially encouraged. The winner of the first prize, M. Yvonnet Thovareck, made use of a 1 1-2 horse-power motor for driving nine pieces of farm apparatus, including straw cutter, root cutter, grindstone, circular saw, well pump and a variety of dairy machines. The various devices are belted to different counter shafts, all in one building.

This use of power has added much to the efficiency of the farm, and is estimated by the owner to save him $600 a year. Another prize taker, M. Tniebaut, has made use of a second-hand tricycle motor for driving a thrasher and other machines.

MEDICAL HANGMEN.

Although it is common knowledge that medical men are exempt from serving on juries, the cause of their immunity is not generally known. Namely, that in ancient times when doctors were not held in the high esteem that they merit to-day, their occupation (like that of butchers and executioners) was held to be too bloodthirsty to permit of them serving impartially as jurors. Although it now sounds curious to hear medical men classed with hangmen, still, in the early days, their work was much mixed up. Not only were executioners granted a license by King Frederick II. of Denmark in 1597 (which is still in existence) "to set bones and treat wounds," but the public executioner was supposed to be able to perform surgical operations as well. Apropos of this, there still exists, treasured in Mr. Pierpont Morgan's famous library, a book upon the treatment of various diseases by Andreas Liebknecht, a public executioner of Copenhagen, who during the close of the seventeenth century enjoyed European fame as a physician of no small repute.

WHERE BLACK RULES WHITE

ABOUT THE HIGH TIMES THEY HAVE IN HAYTI.

A Beautiful Land with a Glorious Climate—Magnificent Scenery.

Hayti is probably the most turbulent country in the world. Out of its last twenty-seven presidents, twenty-three had either to flee for their lives or were assassinated or killed in battle.

It used to be a French possession, and a mangled French is still spoken there; but for the last century or so it has been an independent black republic. The Haytians believe themselves to be the most civilized nation on earth, but it is comic opera kind of civilization. The cities, for instance, are fitted up for electric light, but the electricity does not work, and nobody tries to make it. Hayti is so shiftless that it has no foreign trade to speak of, so there are very few whites on the island. The few who do live there keep very quiet, for Hayti despises them.

No white person is allowed to own land. This law alone is sufficient to prevent a large white population collecting there.

TITLES ARE CHEAP.

Hayti used to be known as the land of the dukes with the absurd names. Some sixty years ago it started a peerage, and every peer chose the name whose sound struck his fancy. One black nobleman was the Duke of Marmalade, another the Duke of Lemonade. There was also a Marquis of Ginger Pop.

But the peerage has been abolished. Nowadays Hayti is chiefly known as the land of generals. The latest statistics—which, Hayti fashion, are twenty years old—show an army consisting of 6,500 privates, 7,000 regular officers, and 6,500 generals. Those generals who have no horses ride on mules, and the army is clad in the cast-off uniforms of half the regiments of Europe. Some of the men parade without boots, some with cigarettes in their mouths, some with long sticks of sugar-cane there; some have rusty swords, the rest walking-sticks.

CELEBRATING THE EVENT!

There are many civilian generals as well. Country squires are usually generals. As every respectable Haytian has a passion for frock-coats and silk hats, perspiring generals are often to be seen working in the fields frock-coated under a burning tropical sun.

Hayti has a navy composed of six third-class cruisers, but even Hayti does not take that navy very seriously. When foreign vessels put into Haytian ports they are plagued by Haytian tars trying to sell for a few pence brasswork and engine-room fittings!

Hayti is steadily slipping back into barbarism. Some years ago the municipality of Port de Paix showed sufficient enterprise to construct waterworks. The town was well piped, and hydrants were placed at short intervals all along the streets. Decorative fountains and drinking-troughs were put at every corner. The natives were delighted. For a week they gave themselves up to fetes, balls, and processions, to celebrate the great event. But at the end of the week they went and tore up the whole system. Now they tie horses to the hydrants and pick their way in the main streets among fragments of pipes, and are happy. It would seem they haven't much use for fresh water.

WITH ITS GRIM SIDE.

There is a grim side to Hayti's relapse into savagery. Voodooism is getting a greater hold than ever it had. Voodooism is simply a sacred form of cannibalism, practised by high and low. At intervals these frock-coated generals retire to the depths of the jungle and worship the snake-god, sacrificing and eating children in its honor. All respectable inhabitants of Hayti hotly deny that this is so, but travellers have seen. At least two of Hayti's recent presidents were known Voodoo-worshippers.

Hayti is a beautiful land. It has a glorious climate, some of the loveliest mountain and forest scenery in the world, and the most fertile of soils. The Haytian is a lazy, good-humored child. But somehow there is an uncanny atmosphere about the island, and most of the few travellers who have found their way there have confessed to heaving a sigh of relief on seeing the coast-line fade on the horizon.—London Answers.

There are six daily newspapers in Toronto, 49 weekly papers, 20 semi-monthly, 76 monthly, eight quarterly, and one directory company.

Mrs. Snappem (who has been suffering from toothache)—"Thank goodness, I've had that tooth out at last!" Mr. Snappem—"Happy tooth!" Mrs. Snappem—"What do you mean?" Mr. Snappem—"It's out of the reach of your tongue."

HISTORY IS NOW A DELIGHT.

English Schoolmistress Teaches Children by Plays.

The dramatic way of teaching children history bids fair to replace the time-worn text-book method, judging by the success of an experiment tried at an English school in Winchelsea.

The children, instead of being learners of dull, dead facts, have been living factors in the history of the period about which they are learning—by the simple expedient of getting them to act part in historical plays.

Recently twenty-one of them went to Lonbdon to act the play of "Saxon and Norman," by permission of Lady Evelyn Mason. The play was under the auspices of the Village Children's Historical Society, the object of which is to broaden the village children's minds.

Hitherto Harold the Saxon King, the Norman Conquest, William the Conquerer, and the rest have been mere names signifying harrassing lessons. To-day, Harold and William, the Saxons and the Normans, are all very interesting people indeed, and quite as real as pirates and redskins. All because they have themselves acted in the play of "Saxon and Norman" in their leisure time and their school time, too.

Miss Passey, the headmistress of the school, commenting upon the effect on their work, said that when an inspector recently came to question them he did not plough any. "It has made them very keen on history," she added, "and we had very good reports from two other inspectors, for there was not a single question in history they could not answer.

Another noticeable effect was that unlike the ordinary village children one meets, these little actors and actresses are anything but shy, and speak up and answer as readily as city children. When asked questions in history they answered at once correctly, and seemed to take a living interest in the people they spoke of, just as though they were familiar acquaintances or story-book friends.

"The school has now done four historical plays," Miss Passey said, "namely, 'Saxon and Norman,' twice: 'Robin Hood,' 'The Spanish Armada,' and 'Caedmon.' Not only does this acting teach them history and stimulate their liking for it, but it makes them intelligent and able to speak well, clearly and pleasantly."

Little Allen Eastwood, aged seven, one of the youngest children in the cast, rehearsed a portion of his part. He had evidently learned to gulp down promptly any shyness, for he spoke his lines in a clear, big voice, and, what is more, understood exactly what they meant. Charles Turner, aged twelve, plays the part of Harold, whose character, likes and likes he discussed as if he were an intimate friend, and described how he hated Normans.

EAT RYE BREAD.

Case of Maria Jonesco, Who Is Hale and Active at 115.

There is living in Kishineff, Russia, a hale and active old lady, Maria Jonesco, who has just celebrated her 115th birthday. She was born in the Bessarabian Village of Strashen in 1796. She is a childless widow. Her sight and hearing are still nearly perfect, she is comparatively active on her feet, her silvery hair is abundant, she has lost only four teeth and has never in her life made the professional acquaintance of a doctor.

Maria Ionesco, who still conserves a naturally sunny disposition and a happy temperament, attributes the lengthy tale of her years to a black bread diet. She has never eaten white wheaten bread since her early girlhood, and the rye bread she has always consumed has been known in Russia as soldatski khlyeb, or soldiers' bread, which is the blackest and heaviest and purest of whole rye foodstuffs.

NO LUCK.

The tradesman rendered his bill, waited for several weeks, and then wrote:

"Please, sir, I want my bill."

Back came the bill with these words:

"Certainly; here it is."

The bill was again returned, and the tradesman wrote:

"Kindly send me the amount of my bill."

The answer came promptly and politely:

"Certainly. It is $5.00."

The next week the tradesman again wrote:

"Will you send me a cheque for my bill?"

The answer came in the shape of a blank, unsigned cheque, with the message:

"By all means. Here is a cheque. I have the bill."

In desperation the tradesman then wrote:

"I want my bill paid."

And back came the answer:

"So do I."

Then the tradesman gave it up.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL STUDY

INTERNATIONAL LESSON, JUNE 25.

Lesson XIII.—Review. .. Golden Text, Mic. 6. 8.

QUESTIONS FOR SCHOLARS.

Lesson I.—Elisha Heals Naaman the Syrian.—How did Naaman hear of the wonderful prophet in Samaria? Who sent him to Israel to be cured of his leprosy? What did the king of Israel fear when he could not cure him? Who did cure Naaman? How was the cure performed? What did Elisha do with the proffered reward? What wicked thing did his servant, Gehazi, do? How was he punished?

Lesson II.—Elisha's Heavenly Defenders.—How did Ben-hadad try to capture King Jehoram? What did he think when Jehoram always escaped him? What did his servants tell him? Where was Elisha? How did Ben-hadad try to capture him? How did Elisha's servant feel when he saw the Syrians surrounding them? What vision was given him? How did Elisha treat the Syrian army?

Lesson III.—Easter Lesson. — The Resurrection Morn.—For what purpose did the women go to the tomb on Easter morning? Who reached the tomb first? What did she find? Whom did she tell? What did they believe? To whom did the risen Jesus first appear? What was she doing at the time? What did he send her to do?

Lesson IV.—Joash Repairs the Temple.—Who ruled over Judah just before Joash? How had she become queen? How was Joash preserved from death? How was he proclaimed king? What became of Athaliah? What did Joash direct the priests to do? How did they carry out his command? What did Jehoiada prepare to receive the people's gifts? How was the money spent?

Lesson V.—God's Pity for the Heathen.—Who sent Jonah out as a foreign missionary? Where was he sent? How did he try to shirk his duty? How was he brought back to his duty? What was the result of his preaching? Why was Jonah displeased at God's mercy upon Nineveh? What lesson did God teach Jonah?

Lesson VI.—Uzziah, King of Judah, Humbled.—Along what three lines did Uzziah strengthen Judah? What old enemies did he overcome? How did he fortify Jerusalem? What works of peace did he construct? Who helped him in these enterprises? What irreverent act did Uzziah commit? Why was this act wrong? Who rebuked him? How did he take the rebuke? How was his pride humbled?

Lesson VII.—Isaiah's Vision and Call to Service.—Who was Isaiah? What vision had he? Where did he see the vision? In what year did this occur? Of what did the vision make Isaiah feel conscious? How was he assured of forgiveness? To whom was he sent as a messenger? What result was to follow his preaching? What was the final hope of Judah?

Lesson VIII.—Song of the Vineyard.—To what does the song of the vineyard compare Judah? Where was the vineyard planted? How was it cared for? What harvest was expected of it? What did it produce? How did Judah resemble the vineyard? How had the wealthy oppressed the poor? How did many of the people spend their days and nights?

Lesson IX.—Micah's Picture of Universal Peace.—Who was Micah? In what kingdom did he prophesy? What fate did he warn the Jews of? Of what final hope did he tell? What condition will follow the knowledge of the Lord by all peoples? What will become of wars? How shall the nations show their love for God? Who shall be their examples?

Lesson X.—Israel's Penitence and God's Pardon.—How did Hosea regard Israel? What did he appeal to Israel to do? Whose help did he ask them to forsake? What evil practices did he urge them to abandon? How did he say God would regard Israel's penitence? What promise did he make concerning Israel's future prosperity? What did he say about the ways of the Lord?

Lesson X.—Hezekiah's Great Passover.—Who had closed the temple? Who reopened it and had it cleansed? Whom did he invite to come to Jerusalem? For what purpose did he invite them to come? When was the passover celebrated? How long did the celebration continue? What did the people do when they returned home?

Lesson XII.—The Downfall of Samaria—Who was the last king of Israel? Who exacted tribute from him? How did Hoshea seek to avoid paying the tribute? What did the Assyrian king do then? How long did the siege of Samaria last? What was done with the Israelites? What finally became of them? What was the cause of Israel's destruction?

THURSDAY, JUNE 22, '11

Canada buys more automobiles from the United States than any other country. During the nine months ending with March we imported $8,8844, 447 worth of motors from across the line, while Great Britain took $1,657,000 worth and Germany $545,000 worth. Our neighbors appreciate the Dominion as a market.

Mr. Borden opened his campaign in Manitoba by a magnificent speech at Winnipeg on Monday night last. Mr. Borden's policy for Canada is a broad one. Would give the Prairie Province control of their public lands, extend the boundaries of Manitoba in accordance with the province's present demands; build Hudson Bay Ratiway, and operate it by independent commission; State control of terminal elevators; a tariff policy independent of Washington; permanent Tariff Commission of independant able men and no reciprocity until mandidate from people. This is the policy for Canada and should appeal to every right thinking Canadian.

BREWSTER.

The Methodist picnic was held on Friday at Grand Bend and all report a good time.—The fisherman caught a sturgeon here the other day that weighed 45 lbs., at 12 1-2 cents per lb. and calves 45 lbs. that sold for $175.—Big picnics at Grand Bend every day. —Mr. Curt. Ollie Haggart and Mr. Herm of Dawn are visiting around here.—Mr. Peter Disjardine still continues very ill We are glad to say that Mrs. P. Baker is able to take a drive.—Master Robert Latta is on the sick list.—

PARKHILL MAN SHOT.

PARKHILL, June 19—The remains of Archibald Morrison, of Wanda, Alberta have arrived in Parkhill, Mr. Morrison had been working with his team, breaking praire, about one and a half miles from his home. He carried a rifle as the great majority of them do out in the West, to shoot coyotes and gophers. When found he was lying behind his plow with his head on a cushion.

After the accident he had unhitched the horses from the plow and unchecked two of the horses.

The bullet entered his body on the left side, near the groin, and came out under his left shoulder. His body was discovered on the following Thurs. June 8, and it is supposed he had been dead two or three days, as the horse that was unchecked was in a famished condition.

EXCURSIONS TO WESTERN CANADA

The Grand Trunk Railway System announce that on Tuesdays, June 27th, July 11th and 25th, August 8th and 22nd, September 5th and 19th, 1911, Homeseeker's excursions will be run to Western Canada from all stations in Ontario and Quebec, via Chicago and Duluth, or via Chicago, St. Paul and Minneapolis, at reduced round trip fares.

The well-known double track line of the Grand Trunk from the east to Chicago appeals to the traveller, and with the superior train service that is offered by this line, including the famous "International Limited" from Montreal daily at 9.00 a.m., and which is the finest and fastest train in Canada, many passengers will be attracted this way. The route via Chicago is a most interesting one, taking passengers through the principal cities and towns in Canada and in the States of Michigan and Indiana. In addition to this a choice seven lines between Chicago and St. Paul and Minneapolis is offered.

Owing to the great number of Canadians, who reside in Chicago, St. Paul, Minneapolis, Duluth and other cities en route, there is no doubt that the Grand Trunk will find many patrons who will take advantage of the opportunity thus afforded them for a brief visit at the stations with their friends.

Canadian citizens are exempt from so-called Immigration Examination, and there is no detention at any point.

Baggage is carried through the United States in Bond without requiring any special attention on the part of the passenger. Inspection is not necessary at any of the points at the Border.

Another feature that will appeal to the homeseeker is the comfortable transfer at points like Chicago, St. Paul, and Duluth into freshly ventilated clean cars, avoiding the necessity of travelling a long distance in the same car.

In addition to the above routes, the sale of tickets is also authorized via Sarnia, and the Northern Navigation Company's magnificent Steamers across Lake Huron and Lake Superior.

For further particulars apply to any Agent of the Grand Trunk Railway System, or write to Mr. J. Quinlan, District Passenger Agent, Bonaventure Station Montreal, or Mr. A. E. Duff, District Passenger Agent, Union Station, Toronto.

HICKS' FORECASTS FOR JUNE.

A regular storm period is central on the 26th, the new moon falling on the same day. In every probability this will prove one of the most decided periods of disturbance during the month. The barometer should be consulted with care as we enter this period, and if it falls to very low reading, a result to be expected, storms of violent character are probable. All storms during the last half of June will be erratic in character—will move in direction out of the ordinary, often doubling back over their tracks after they have supposedly passed off to the east. We believe there will be too much rain in June, for best agricultural interests, except in the east and south. A marked seismic period is central on the 26th, covering the 23rd to 29th.

Next Sunday special services will be held in the Evangelical Church. It being the annual Childrens' Day Festival in the morning, there will be a special sermon by the pastor in the interest of the young people and in the evening a program will be rendered by the choir and members of the Sunday school. All should come and enjoy these special services.

M. Y. McLean, M.P. addressed a meeting in the Town Hall on Monday night in the interest of Reciprocity. On Tuesday a number from here attended the Conservative Convention in Hensall.

Meeting of this kind are usually a sign that it won't be long before an appeal will be made to the electorate for their vote.

Edward Morlock bought a McLaughlin Automobile in London last week. He is the first farmer around here to own one. It is expected that more will follow suit. The horse is getting used to the iron steed and has become perfectly reconciled to his fate.

Our merchants are selling large quantities of strawberries this week. They are of a splendid quality and quite reasonable in price.

Ira Brown has returned after a few days in Toronto.

The raising of the rafters for the new church sheds was begun on Tuesday.

Mr. and Mrs. Solomon Beaver and friends autoed here from Sandusky Mich last Friday and are spending a few days in our midst visiting relatives.

Quite a number from here took in the strawberry festival in Shipka on on Wednesday night. They report having had a good time.

This is Coronation Day. Long Live King George and Queen Mary.

The Misses Olivia and Pearl Holtzman of Chicago and Arthur M. Holtzman of Naperville, Ill. are spending their holidays here with their parents.

Peter Pahner has returned to his home in Reed City, Mich., after a few weeks visit here.

Mr. Will Morlock of Aurora, Ill., spent a few days here with his aged parents Mr. and Mrs. Mathew Morlock.

On Saturday evening, the home of Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Holtzman was the scene of a very pretty and interesting event It being their silver wedding. Upwards of a 100 guests were present and many valuable gifts were presented to them. The dining room was prettily decorated with streamers and silver bells. Rev. E. Burn made a very impressive address to which the one-time bride and groom responded. Mr. and Mrs. Krug and Mr. and Mrs. Ankerman, Mr. and Mrs. Sol. Holtzman of Chesley motored here for the occasion. We extend to Mr. and Mrs. Holtzman our heartiest congratulations and trust they will be spared to live many more years of happy wedded life.

On Friday evening, the Exeterites swarmed in on us with autoes, waggons buggies and bicycles. Each rooter carried a pennant or a megaphone. It appeared to be the one aim of their lives to give our town the worst beating in base-ball known for years. The recreation grounds haven't been crowded since the Victoria Day Celebration three years ago. Teh rooters got busy at the very beginning of the game and made it so unpleasant to the spectators who could neither see the players or even hear the decision of the umpire that finally the Trustees of the town stepped in and made the hot-air fans go to another side of the diamond. Tom Carling of the Exeter team played splendid ball the first four innings and had lots of steam. The visiting team made four runs in the third innings After that our boys appeared to come back to their own. Our King got one of Tommy's curves at the end of his bat and slammed it out to the fence making a home run. This brought our people to their feet. In the fourth innings, we rolled in five more. There were some costly errors on both sides Teddy pitched good ball and Bullie behind the bat worked like a machine. The game finally ended with a score of 11 —5 in our favor. After the game noise, nothing but noise was in the air and many of our people who had paid their good money to see a game of fast-ball were disgusted with the rooters. We trust next time things will be a little more decent. Cheer when a good play is made no matter which side makes it but the continual roar at nothing in particular makes it tiresome. Our boys expect to play the return game in Exeter in the near future and are looking forward to giving the boys of the neighboring town a fast game.

GRAND BEND.

Mr. Jos. Oliver, who recently went to a London hospital, was operated on last week and he is now doing nicely.—S. Bossenberry and J. Shafer were in our burgh Wednesday.—H. Bossenberry was in Parkhill and also attended Seaforth races.—Mr. Benore of Point Edward was in our burgh last week.—Mr. Harold Walper fell 31 feet at Mr. Hayter's barn raising last week and has been under the doctor's care since, but we are pleased to note that he is doing nicely.—Miss Edna Walper, who has been taking a course in nursing, was called home last week to look after her brother, who met with the accident at the barn raising.—C. Buchanan of Greenway spent Sunday under the parental roof.—Mr. H. Bossenberry is building a bowling alley.—Mr. T. Fitton and son, Saxon of Exeter were here Monday.—Mr. Paul Gravelle of Bad Axe, Mich., is visiting his brother, A. Gravelle.

BRINSLEY

The infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Cunningham is in a serious condition as a result of her little two-year-old brother in his play striking her on the head with a board in which was a rusty nail, which penetrated the skull. A doctor was immediately summoned; this followed and there is little hope of recovery. The mother fainted at the sight and it is a great drawback to her improving health after an illness of 2 months.—Rev. Bloodsworth, rector of the English Church here, will preach his farewell sermon June 25. He will be succeeded by Rev. Connors of Owen Sound.—Miss Mabel Cunningham has been called home again to nurse her sick friend, Mrs. Fr. Cunningham.

Dunlop for a few days.—Mr. Arthur Kellermann of Naperville College, arrived home Tuesday.—Mr. George Kellerman raised his new barn on the Goshen Line, Tuesday. Everything passed off luckily.—Mr. M. Y. McLean, M.P. South Huron, held a Reciprocity meeting to a medium-sized audience in Zimmer's Hall Tuesday evening.—Messrs. Herman Zimmer and Otto Restemeyer, Misses Linda Willert, and Sadie McIsaac took a trip to Grand Bend in Dan. Hartlieb's auto Sunday.—The Police Trustees are busy this week making cement sidewalks.—Mr. and Mrs. Fred Rinker returned home Monday night after visiting with friends in Pigeon, Mich.—Mr. and Mrs. J. Doerr of Auburn spent Thursday with the latter's brother, Mr. Geo. Koch.—Mr. Henry Guenther's new auto arrived here Tuesday. We are glad to report that Mr. Duncan Snyder is on the way to recovery.

KHIVA.

Mr. and Mrs. S. Holt of Grand Bend and Mr. Homer and Miss Jane Cunningham of Clandeboye spent Sunday with B. Cunningham.—Miss Freda Finkbeiner of Shipka spent Sunday with Thelma Witzel.—The Khiva Picnic was held at Grand Bend on Saturday. All report having had an enjoyable time.—Mr. Wm McCann of Humber Bay visited with his parents a few days last week.—Mrs. Wm. Cunningham and daughter, Miss Jennie Cunningham of Clandeboye and Mrs. Yager and daughter, Miss Tillie, of Exeter spent a few days last week with B. Cunningham.—A number from here attended the wedding on Tuesday of Miss Mary Hoffman to Mr. Alfonso Leyes.—Miss Louise Pahner of Crediton spent a few days last week with her sister, Mrs. Geo. Ratz.—Miss Minnie Sherritt spent Sunday at her home in Corbett.—Mr. Thos. McCann and Em. Ford left last for the West.—Mrs. F. Barry received the sad news on Monday of the death of her daughter, Mrs. Freeman of Dakota.—A number from here attended the strawberry festival at Shipka Wednesday evening and report having had an enjoyable time.—Miss Ella Wilhelm of the Goshen Line called on Miss Emma Cunningham Monday.

ELIMVILLE

We are sorry to hear that Mr. George Kerslake is still very low. We hope he will soon be able to be around again —Mr. John Cooper called in his neighbors on Monday evening and raised his summer kitchen.—Mr. and Mrs. John Caldwell of Hensall spent Sunday with Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Godbolt, jr., of Elimville.—Mr. Wesley Parkinson intends holding a sale of fifty acres of hay on Friday next. Any person wanting hay will do well to attend the sale.—Mr. and Mrs. Will Hunter spent Sunday in Seaforth, the guest of Mr. Jas. Martin.—Rev. Mr. Watson preached his farewell sermon on Sunday last. Mr. Watson has withdrawn from the ministry and intends going to the States, where he has accepted a position.—Mr. and Mrs. John Greason spent Sunday with Mrs. Greason's parents in Missouri.—Another week and the farmers will be busy haying, as hay will be nearly two weeks earlier this year.

KIRKTON.

Mr. and Mrs. John Somerville visited in Goderich last week.—Mr. Harris is unable to attend to his duties at the Molsons Bank owing to illness.—Mrs. Urquhart went to Toronto on Friday of last week to reside with her daughter Mrs. Yule.—Mr. and Mrs. White, Toronto, are the guests of Mrs. W. A. Kirk.—

CENTRALIA

Ladies Aid Concert July 1st at 8 p. m. in Centralia Methodist Church First class program. Come and hear the celebrated Tenor singer, C. J. Pink of London, Miss Stony of Markham, Reader; Miss Elliott Soprano. Everybody welcome. Tickets 25 cents.

Mr. John Colwill and Mr. Dennis O'Brien have exchanged barns to the advantage of both.—Mrs. John Colwill of Exeter, who has been visiting her son, Elijah, fell the other day and broke a couple of ribs which will confine her to the house for some weeks. No very serious results are anticipated.— Miss Lillian Elliott took part in an entertainment near Parkhill on Monday evening.—Quite a number from here took in the picnic at Thalen Tuesday afternoon.—We are pleased to say that Jas Hodgins, whose life for a time was despaired of, is now able to be around again.—The great event we are looking forward to is the Dominion Day Celebration which is an annual affair of more than local interest. Preparations are being made for a great gathering in Epworth Park on the 1st.

Mr. W. T. Colwill won a case in the London courts last week. He shipped a car load of hay from Exeter to James Kelly, in North Bay, and then sued for $200, the balance due him for the fodder. There was no defence and so he gets his claim and costs.

Beware of Ointments for Catarrh that Contain Mercury, as mercury will surely destroy the sense of smell and completely derange the whole system when entering it through the mucous surfaces. Such articles should never be used except on prescriptions from reputable physicians, as the damage they will do is ten-fold to the good you can possibly derive from them. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, O., contains no mercury, and is taken internally, acting directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. In buying Hall's Catarrh Cure be sure you get the genuine. It is taken internally and made in Toledo, Ohio, by F. J. CHENEY & CO. Testimonials free.

Sold by all Druggists, Price 75c. per bottle.

Take Hall's Family Pills for constipation.

Prize Lists, Entry Forms, and advertising matter of different kinds in connection with the Western Fair of London, Ontario, have been sent out by the management. One Thousand Dollars in cash has been added to the prizes this year. Breeders and Stockman should make calculations to include this popular Exhibition in their circuit this year. Exhibitors at the London Exhibition always reports large sales of their stock as a result of attending It is fully expected that this year will eclipse them all, and therefore all who have worthy stock of any kind cannot afford to miss it. The dates this year are September 8th to 16th. If you have not received a prize list write the Secretary, A. M. Hunt, London, stating the kind of entry form you wish and it will be promptly sent.

ECZEMA WAS SPREADING TILL D.D.D. CURED IT

This is a translation of a letter written us in French on April 16, 1910, by Mr. Dan. Babineau, Cap Lumiere, N.B

"I had been suffering with eczema for about 6 months, and had consulted several doctors who did not do me any good. The disease was spreading and I was most uncomfortable. I thought I would go crazy. All my friends were telling me I would lose my hands unless I found the right treatment.

One day I read in the Messenger about your D.D.D. treatment and asked for a sample. It did me so much good that I immediately ordered two large bottles. It took eight bottles altogether to cure me of this terrible disease. I shall never be without a bottle of D.D.D. in my home."

The records of ten years of complete cures of thousands of the most severe cases show that D.D.D. stands to-day as the absolutely reliable eczema cure.

Write to-day for free trial bottle to the D.D.D. Laboratories, Dept. E.A., 49 Colborne St., Toronto. It will give you instant relief.

Rev. Father Morriscy

Father Morriscy's "No. 11" Cures Stomach Troubles.

When your stomach is working right you never know it is there. But when it feels as heavy as lead—when you have Heartburn, Belching of Wind, Sourness, a gnawing hunger, with distress after eating—when you feel irritable and depressed — then you may know that the digestive fluids in the stomach are not sufficient to digest what you eat.

Father Morriscy's "No. 11" Tablets supply these fluids in concentrated form. Each tablet, dissolved in the stomach, will digest 1¾ pounds of food, which is more than an average meal.

Read what Father Morriscy's treatment did for Mr. Gosline, of Salmon Lake. He writes Nov. 30, 1908:

"I was troubled with indigestion, so severe that I really thought I had cancer of the stomach. I took much doctors' remedies, till I was forced to seek another resource, and this was the Rev. Father Morriscy. His treatments worked miracles, until I have been entirely cured, so that now I do not look to the quality of the diet but to the quantity."

THE KING AND QUEEN IN THEIR CORONATION ROBES

THE WORLD'S WHEAT CROP

Increased Area of Spring Wheat in the Dominion a Feature

A despatch from Washington says: A bumper harvest of wheat in British India, estimated at 369,000,000 bushels, surpassing all previous yields, and a record area sown to Spring wheat in Western Canada, where 90 per cent. of the Dominion wheat is grown, giving rise to seemingly extravagant estimates of probable yield, are the features of the world's review of May agricultural news announced by the United States Department of Agriculture on Thursday. In other respects foreign agriculture in general made average seasonable progress.

In Argentina, the great wheat and flax seed exporter of the southern hemisphere, the Autumn sown crops have entered their first month of the trans-equatorial Winter in vigorous condition and on probably largely increased areas. The recently gathered corn crop there turned out badly and little or no surplus will be available for export. The corn crop of South Africa also is reported damaged by drought and there probably will be none for export.

GREAT PAGEANT OF THE EMPIRE

The Most Wonderful Spectacle Ever Witnessed on the Streets of Old London.

An annex to the main entrance to Westminster Abbey is in course of erection. In the seating arrangements the plan is the same as that which was adopted at King Edward's Coronation in 1902. There will therefore be no fixed seats, but the nave of the Abbey will be furnished with new chairs of Chippenhale pattern upholstered in silk. These the users of them will be given the opportunity of purchasing as mementoes. The Earl Marshal's Office has been besieged with applications for permission to be present from all sorts and conditions of people. Peers and Peeresses have a prescriptive right to attend, but even these will be excluded if they have not asked for and received permission to attend.

The Earl Marshal has received applications for permission to be present at the Coronation next June from over 100 Peers and Peeresses who had no legal claim to be present at the ceremony in 1902. There are no fewer than 38 new Earls and Countesses, and the remainder is made up of Peers and Peeresses who have succeeded to the family title, and of those who have had new Peerages conferred upon them.

It is the desire of his Majesty that the overseas dominions should take a prominent and distinguished part in the great State pageant, and at the present time the question is being considered whether some special act in the consecratory ceremony cannot be entrusted to the representatives of Canada, Australia, South Africa and New Zealand. Every one of the countries mentioned, as well as India, Newfoundland, and practically every portion of the Empire, will be more adequately represented both in Westminster Abbey and in the royal procession through the streets of London than has ever been the case before. The officers of the Home District Command, who have been made responsible for the military arrangements, are making provision for the accommodation of some 3,000 soldiers, representing every part of the King's dominions abroad. Five hundred officers and men are going from India, 600 from Canada, over 300 from Australia and other parts of the Southern Hemisphere, while such places as Nigeria, Uganda, Borneo, Hong Kong and other far-away outposts of civilization will be fittingly represented. It is to be the greatest pageant of Empire yet seen in London. The navy, the home army and the Territorials are also to be represented by the biggest force ever concentrated in the Metropolis, and for their accommodation the Royal Parks will be covered with military encampments. In addition to carrying out the internal arrangements at the Abbey, the Office of Works has the task before it of erecting stands along the line of route of the Coronation procession between Buckingham Palace and Parliament square.

CONCERT HALLS HONORED

An unprecedented feature of the Coronation year will be the introduction of concert hall performances by Royal command. Male Royalties have visited London music halls privately, but the hall-mark of Royal patronage has never yet been bestowed upon the vaudeville stage.

In response to a petition signed by leading vaudeville managers the King and Queen will "command" a performance when they visit Edinburgh after the Coronation ceremonies. It is stated that other engagements preclude a similar act on their part so far as London is concerned.

ROBES AT AUCTION

Those of George IV. Were Once Sold at Phillips' Rooms

It is a fact, generally forgotten, that the Coronation robes of George IV., which, it has been suggested, his Majesty King George V. may wear at the coming ceremony, were once sold at auction. With other official costumes of George IV. they were "put up" at Phillips' auction rooms in Bond street in 1831.

The magnificent Coronation mantle of purple velvet was sold as "Lot 95" for a paltry $275, though it was probably worth $1,500 at least. Another splendid crimson velvet Coronation mantle, which, according to the auctioneer, cost $2,500, brought on the same occasion $235.

Other items on the catalogue were "the Coronation ruff of superb Mechlin" and the Coronation coat, waistcoat, and trunk hose.

And these sumptuous vestments—or most of them—passed into the hands of Madame Tussaud, though it is extremely doubtful if they were ever allowed to grace a wax figure.

A "Coronation" Engine.

To mark the completion of the 5,000th engine constructed at the London and North-Western Crewe works, a leviathan locomotive is being built, to be christened "Coronation." It is to cost over $20,000 to build, and its horse power will be about 1,300. It is expected that the engine will be ready in June, and will be used for the train by which the King and Queen are to travel by the West Coast route on their visit to Wales.

GREATEST SHOW IN THE WORLD

Mr. Frank Lascelles Tells of the Organization of the Grand Pageant at Crystal Palace.

A colossal task is nearing completion at the Crystal Palace, London. Within a space of 250 acres the whole of the British Empire is being represented by hundreds of buildings, scenery, and exhibits. The Festival of Empire, as the great exhibition which will be opened from May to October has been called, is the most ambitious effort which has ever been made to demonstrate to us the vastness and possibilities of our overseas dominions. In addition there will be a great pageant, in which 15,000 performers will take part, illustrating the Empire's history and development from the very earliest down to the present time. Our colonies have subscribed thousands of pounds towards the expenses, and thousands of men have been employed on a patriotic project in every way worthy of the Coronation year of His Majesty King George V.

"The public," said Mr. Frank Lascelles, Master of the Festival—who is famed all the world over for the magnificence of the pageants he has organized—to Tit-Bits the other day, "have little idea of the enormous work which has been involved in producing this great Festival of Empire. Our colonies have been ransacked for ideas and for many months past we have been co-operating with the various colonial Governments in order to make the Festival thoroughly representative in every way. And it is really surprising how people in this country have entered into the idea with zest and enthusiasm. Take the 15,000 amateur performers, for instance, who are to take part in the great pageant. Not only are they buying their costumes and paying for their railway fares during the run of the Festival, but they are willingly bearing the expenses entailed by six or seven weeks' rehearsals. It is a splendid illustration, is it not, of the patriotism which has been instilled by this great idea?"

Amazing Figures.

And the gigantic scale and thoroughness with which this pageant is being carried out is strikingly illustrated by the facts and figures which Mr. Lascelles kindly provided. An amphitheatre for 10,000 spectators has been erected, and for considerably over a year hundreds of skilled workmen have been engaged in preparing costumes and properties; and in every case the utmost care has been taken to ensure historical correctness, even to the minutest details. By loan and purchase Mr. Lascelles has secured twenty historical State coaches, including one which belonged to Queen Victoria, and another which was the property of Napoleon III. A thousand horses and cattle, 400 complete suits of armour, nearly 7,000 weapons, and close upon 10,000 helmets and shields—these are a few of the properties which will be used during the great pageant of the Festival of Empire.

"But, of course," said Mr. Lascelles, "whilst the pageant is one of the central features of the Festival it by no means stands alone. In the grounds there will be some 300 buildings, ranging from the $200,000 reproduction of the Parliament Buildings of Ottawa, Canada, to decorative kiosks. All the colonial buildings will be exact reproductions of the Parliament Houses of the respective colonies, and in each case will be two-thirds of the size of the originals. Altogether these various Government buildings cost well over $500,000, and I might mention that Canada alone is spending no less than $350,000 on the various projects for representing that vast colony at the Crystal Palace.

The All-Red Route.

"What is the total cost? Well, it is difficult to say at the present time. The Committee of the Festival of Empire has spent over $1,500,000 already, and this is quite apart from the money expended by the various colonies themselves."

"In the first place," said Mr. Lascelles, "we are paying close upon 6,000 workpeople engaged on the preparations for the Festival. Then there is some $150,000 worth of machinery, and $300,000 expended on the erection of a mile and a half of electric railway, which we have termed the All-Red Route, and which will run through the various scenes of the Empire, as depicted in the grounds of the Crystal Palace. A two-minute service will be maintained throughout the day by ten cars, and on each train guides will explain details and objects of interest en route as the train takes the visitors on a tour embracing Newfoundland, Canada, Jamaica, Malay States, India, Australia, New Zealand, and South Africa.

Diamonds Galore.

"Perhaps one of the most interesting facts regarding the realistic representation of South Africa on the All-Red Route is that, at a cost of many thousands of pounds, visitors will be able to see gold and diamond mines in full operation. The De Beers Company are spending $10,000 on the representation of a South African diamond mine, and, I might mention, are actually showing $10,000,000 worth of real diamonds."

"And what of the inside of the Palace, Mr. Lascelles?"

"Ah! that will be no less interesting, for we intend to hold an All-British Exhibition. Six hundred stands are being erected, and there will be an unrivalled collection of British arts and industries. By the way, I might mention that one of the largest statues in the world will be erected in the centre of the Crystal Palace terrace—namely, a statue of the King, 60ft. high, dominating, as it were, His Majesty's Empire in miniature."

London will be the holiday city of the world this year, and it is safe to affirm that millions of visitors will find their way to the Crystal Palace to witness the wonders of this great Festival of Empire.

MAGIC BAKING POWDER NEW STYLE LABEL

A DESCRIPTION OF CORONETS

Many of Those Used at the Edward Coronation in 1902 will be Worn in June

"Numbers of persons," declared a London jeweler and silversmith, "imagine coronets to be composed of 24-carat gold, and studded with priceless gems.

"Well, the fact is, we often supply peers or peeresses with beautifully finished, light-weight coronets in silver gilt for less than twenty pounds. A peer's coronet must fit him like a hat; but those for peeresses are half the size. Peeresses, thus having plenty of room on their heads—happily for us—wear tiaras as well as coronets. In this way:

"The tiara, high in front, sloping down each side, is placed well forward on the noble brow. With hair bunched on top of the head, puffed out at the sides, the coronet rests on top of the hair, behind the tiara. Plenty of work there will be at the last moment, of course, altering tiaras for the Coronation, so that they may be worn in this way, for many of them are of the 'all round' pattern.

"Most of the coronets donned in June next will be those used for the last Coronation. I estimate that two thousand new coronets were then turned out, at an average of $90 apiece—$180,000 in all.

"One peer told me of the rescue of his coronet for the 1902 ceremony.

"His lordship's plate-chest was crammed. To make room, odds and ends were cleared out. Sorting these, he encountered his coronet. The butler, fairly staggered, said he had been pushing it into one odd corner and another for years past, till he could come across the other part of "the old cruet."

"The most gorgeous Coronation item, though that comes the way of workers in precious metals, is the pallium, or Royal mantle of the King. It is of English cloth of gold—remember the 'Field' of it in history?—woven from finest gold thread, gold as pure as will stand the strain of being so used, almost without alloy.

"There are very few skilled weavers capable of making cloth of gold. It is exceedingly slow work, and as each inch of the material is formed, it is carefully wrapped up, so that it shall retain its glorious flood of color. Such new, absolutely unsoiled cloth of gold looks more like a blaze of brilliant sunshine than anything you ever saw.

"Many of the State robes will have Indian embroidery—gold and silver thread on silk.

"An ounce of the pure metal is drawn out into a thread half a mile long for the embroiderers to use. The pattern is always original, the embroiderers, trained from childhood, 'making it up' as they go along. Thus no two existing patterns are alike, and one robe can always be distinguished from another, which saves marking. The work is usually done in India, but for the Coronation some of the most expert craftsmen of Delhi, where the best come from, are being brought over here.

"The famous, crimson velvet, with which Westminster Abbey will be ablaze, I find on inquiry costs about a pound a yard, bought by the piece. A piece measures some forty yards, and though the velvet is quite plain, without any pattern, such a length takes four months to make.

"British-spun pure silk linings are used, the proper lining for the crimson—really almost purple—velvet being white corded silk, costing about eight shillings a yard.

"So, although coronets themselves are not exactly pure gold jewels, one way and another the little bill tops up."

RITES AND CEREMONIES

Many Chief Actors in Edward's Coronation Have Passed Away

As far as the rites and ceremonies of the Coronation are concerned, the precedent of 1902 will be strictly followed. In that particular respect the duties of the Earl Marshal and the Lord Chamberlain have proved much lighter than they were eight years ago. The greatest changes that will be noted in the pageant that attends the Coronation of King George and Queen Mary will be in the dramatic personae. Of the chief actors in the last great historic event of the crowning of a great historic event of the crowning of a British King and then Primate and the then Archbishop of York are no more. Lord Salisbury and the Duke of Devonshire have been gathered to their fathers, and among others who figured largely in the brilliant spectacle of eight years ago, and who have gone over to the majority, are the late Lord Derby and the late Earl Spencer—two of the four Knights of the Garter who held the canopy for the King's annointing. Many others who played a prominent part in the public life of a decade ago will next June be found absent, and the exigencies of political life will have forced many others into the background.

FLOWERS FOR THE CORONATION.

One firm in Hertfordshire planted 50,000 Coronation rose trees, all timed to bloom in June. They are being grown in all sorts of designs. One of these is a statute of the King, consisting of about 1,500 roses.

A GREAT FEAST FOR CHILDREN

Preparations for the Coronation Entertainment to 100,000 Youngsters

The work of preparing for the Coronation entertainment which the King will give to 100,000 poor children of London at the Crystal Palace on June 30th, is well under way.

Sir William Carrington states that the committee entrusted to carry out the King's wishes, declares absolute impartiality is to be shown so that schoolchildren of every denomination should be properly represented.

Although not officially stated, there is every reason to believe that the King and Queen will be present in the course of the afternoon at the entertainment at the Crystal Palace. Most probably they will be accompanied by Princess Mary and one or two of her brothers.

It is assumed that the chosen 100,000 will be marshalled like an army and converge upon Sydenham by various routes. Probably the local railways for a certain time in the day will concentrate their energies on the transport of this army. Every child will bear his or her own name and address in writing, and will also carry a distinguishing ticket or rosette, indicating by color and by numerals the particular school and locality. It is hoped, also, that each girl will wear a white dress or sash and each boy a white tie. Once within the gates of the Crystal Palace, there should be little difficulty. The staff there is accustomed to invasions of football enthusiasts for the Cup Final numbering from 100,000 to 140,000, and in the summer various organizations bring to Sydenham many thousands of children.

The King's guests will arrive between 11 and 12.30 and stay until between 6 and 7 o'clock. Dinner and tea will be served, if fine, at long trestle tables on the grass, but if wet the meals will be served in relays within the Palace. For dinner the children will have cold meats, pies, pastries, with lemonade; and at tea bread and butter, jam and cakes.

Each of the favored children will be given from the King a specially designed Coronation beaker of Royal Doulton ware. They are to be of the same shape as those made for King Edward, and on the occasions of the Jubilees of Queen Victoria. His Majesty has supplied a special portrait of himself in the uniform of an Admiral of the fleet for reproduction on the beaker.

Apart from a generous programme of amusements and a monster tea, the children will be given probably their first glimpse of the greatness of the British Empire. The King has chosen the Crystal Palace, with its Festival of Empire, as the venue for this reason—to impress on the juvenile mind some understanding of the vast community of English-speaking countries of which they form no inappreciable part.

Mr. Frank Lascelles will superintend the direction of a special performance of the Pageant of Empire, lasting half an hour. A Royal box is to be erected for Their Majesties.

Subsequently the children are to be taken in batches for a trip round the Empire on the "All-Red Route" Railway. This will enable them to see the Parliament buildings of Newfoundland, Britain's oldest colony, with its papermaking and whaling and other industries, together with the harbor of St. John's; the great wheat prairies and cattle ranges of Canada, and the Parliament buildings at Ottawa; various Crown colonies, with a Malay village and a sugar plantation in Jamaica.

India will be visited, and Delhi, where the King is to be crowned in person Emperor of India. From India the young voyagers will travel to Australia and New Zealand, and finally to South Africa, where the gold and diamond mines will be shown in operation.

CORONATION DRESS

The Names of the Seven Royal Trains Bearers

The Queen having decided that her train at her Coronation shall be borne by seven daughters of Earls, is now considering what their costumes shall be. According to precedent, they will all wear white, and will be dressed precisely alike. Her Majesty will present to each of her attendants a handsome souvenir of the occasion, and this will probably be the only ornament they will be permitted to wear. The pages who attend the King wear a quaint uniform of scarlet, white and gold, and carry old-fashioned three-cornered hats with plumes under their arms.

The following are the train-bearers:

Lady Eileen Butler, daughter of the Earl of Lanesborough.

Lady Mary Dawson, daughter of the Earl of Dartrey.

Lady Mabell Ogilvy, daughter of the late Earl of Airlie and the Countess of Aarlie.

Lady Victoria Carrington, daughter of Earl Carrington.

Lady Jean Cochrane, daughter of the Earl of Dundonald.

Lady Eileen Knox, daughter of the Earl and Countess of Banfurly.

Lady Adelaide Spencer, daughter of Earl Spencer.

It is probable that further appointments will be made, necessitated by the weight and length of her Majesty's train.

FORTUNE FAVORS THE BRAVE;

OR, A LOOK INTO THE PAST

She turned her distraught face to him, her blue eyes shone with a fire of beauty, but it was the beauty of bitterness and despair. It seemed as though she did not really realize what was happening at the moment. Derrick Darnley's heart chilled suddenly at her expression. What mental agony she must have suffered to have brought such a look on her young face. Never, surely, was mortal man more tried than Derrick Darnley at this time. He had but to stretch out his arms and fold them about that slender, sorrowful form; to boldly defy the whole world, and holding her secure to his heart, carry her away from this life, which seemed to be beset with vague and horrible surroundings at every turn.

But though he was her lover—though temptation ran like fire in his veins—he conquered it all. The woman must come first. She was in sore trouble. He must comfort her.

"Don't reproach yourself, my dear one," he said, tenderly, drawing her two clenched hands down from her breast, against which in her mental anguish she was pressing them with the most painful force. "There is no ingratitude in your heart. Don't you believe that Dolly knows this—they both know it? You are as dear to them as you were before you left them. Nancy, I am going to do what you ask. I must leave you, my darling, but I can't go while you are in such distress. It is more than I can bear to see you like this." His hold tightened unconsciously as he saw that her eyes had resumed the hunted expression they had worn when they first met. It was a look which sank into his heart. What could it be? Was it fear that brought it?

"Nancy!" urged by some uncontrolable feeling, he broke off and put his hand into his coat pocket. "Nancy—if ever you should want—help—help of any sort, send to me there. You will not call on me in vain."

He pushed a scrap of paper—in reality one of his cards, crumpled up by his nervous fingers—into her hand, and at that very moment the dogs growled, there was a soft, stealthy footstep, and an ominously quiet voice rang in their ears:

"My master is inquirin' for you, Mrs. Crawshaw."

Nancy drew her hand hurriedly from Darnley's hold, while every drop of blood receded from her face.

"I—I am coming," she said faintly. "Tell your master I am coming, Fenton."

Fenton, otherwise William, the discharged servant from the Hall, stood perfectly still; but his pale eyes went first to the array of dogs, and then rested on the stalwart form standing beside his mistress.

A sudden rush of passion filled Mr. Darnley's breast.

There was something in the man's manner which roused his anger to its uttermost; he also seemed to have some remembrance of the sallow, insolent face.

He waited an instant for Fenton to obey Nancy's order; but apparently that was exactly what Fenton had no intention of doing.

Nancy turned to Darnley.

"Go," she whispered. "I am glad—give my heart's best love to—Dorothy—we may meet again some day."

Derrick Darnley took her outstretched hand, but he did not move away. On the contrary, he looked straight into Fenton's face, with its impertinent smile lingering round the corners of the mouth.

"Your mistress gave you a message; why don't you take it?" he asked, curtly.

Fenton took absolutely no notice of the question, only stood still and smiled on, while Nancy, with a new look of dread growing on her face, was about to move hurriedly away, when Darnley stopped her.

"Stay," he said, in a tone of determination; "stay, Mrs. Crawshaw. This man has dared to be insolent to you. He is no servant of mine; but that has nothing to do with it. I shall punish him all the same."

His hand fell as he spoke with iron force on Fenton's shoulder, and the craven bully began to tremble in every limb.

Crawshaw's wife moved forward hurriedly.

"No, no!—oh! no," she breathed. "Mr. Darnley, you must not. I—Fenton——"

In mingled dismay and disgust Mr. Darnley loosened his grasp, and in one second Mr. Fenton had made a very good and quick escape.

"So," said Darnley, passionately, "you submit to this man's impertinence! Nancy, what has come to you?"

His tone cut her to the quick, but it gave her strength.

"This is no place for you, you had better go," she answered him quietly.

He drew away from her.

"You are right," he answered, huskily; "this is no place for me. I'll leave it at once. I shall breathe freer when I am out of it. Come, dogs; we are not wanted; we will be off."

He waited one instant in a wild hope that she would speak, then he turned on his heel and walked swiftly back through the sombre trees, the rank weeds and grass, to the iron-fringed gate which he had leaped so proudly, little imagining, poor fellow, whither his leap would lead him.

Nancy listened to his footsteps dying away, then all the pent-up strength, courage, longing, despair and boundless love burst its bonds.

"Oh, Derry, don't go—don't go! Oh, it is all too much for me! I can't bear it!—I can't bear it!"

She put her folded arms against the old trunk, and buried her hot eyes on them.

"If I might die now!" she said to herself.

CHAPTER XX.

It would be difficult to find a more gloomy or unprepossessing domicile than the pile of gray masonry called the Manor House, the artistocratic, uncomfortable place which poor Nancy called her home.

Left for years to fall into decay by its owner, who boldly declared a supreme contempt and horror for his ancient heritage, the manor had been for good two years in the market before a purchaser or tenant was forthcoming sufficiently inclined to accept the property in its ramshackle condition.

It is more than probable that even Crawshaw would have rebelled from the purchase, greatly as his soul longed for some such place; but, as it happened, he did not see the manor until the sale was effected by his trustees, and then, although he stormed a trifle at the gloominess at first, his vulgar, bumptious mind soon found satisfaction and conceit in the fact that he was the actual owner of a fine country mansion and estate.

The furniture and appointments were all included in the sale, and as the family who had held the manor in their possession for years had been as poor as the proverbial church mice, it is not necessary to add that the furniture was both shabby, dirty and old in the extreme.

Perhaps it was owing to this that the owner was glad to get rid of an expensive estate to keep up; but be that as it may, Thomas Crawshaw got the Manor House for a ridiculously low sum, a condition of things which would, in all likelihood, never have happened had he been a poor man.

Gloomy, dingy, shabby at is was, had love been there to shed sunshine around, Nancy would have grown fond of the place, for it had many quaint, queer nooks, all capable of being made cosy and pretty; and a woman's artistic hand allowed free play in the large, gaunt rooms would soon have metamorphosed them; but Nancy, poor child, was not given even this small pleasure. Though her husband was so rich—though each day fresh documents were forwarded him by his lawyers and trustees with news of more money, and still more money, to swell his banking account, Thomas Crawshaw derived no pleasure or advantage from his wealth; he was mean to an extraordinary degree; so mean that the servants engaged to attend him refused to remain and serve so niggardly a master—so mean that Nancy found time, even in the midst of all her misery, to wonder and muse over so strange a mind which could take pleasure in stinting all around him, when it was in his power to do such good.

She had not been his wife three days before she awoke to the fact that, cruel and contemptible as she had imagined this man's nature to be, she had not done one quarter's justice to the despicable, mean, cowardly spirit of the creature it was her lot to call husband.

She had often, back in the old days, heard her aunt, in eulogizing Thomas Moss, call him a careful man; but no amount of imagining could have summed up the full disgust which his daily, hourly deeds of meanness woke in Nancy's breast.

She had been glad to leave London, where they had only stayed a week, abandoning the continental trip as being altogether too expensive—yes, glad, for her generous, delicate mind had been shocked and disgusted at every turn by some action more repulsive to her than the last.

Crawshaw could do nothing without a fuss and a row—ostentatiousness and loudness was his motto—to him there was only one important motive in life, a continual parade before the world of himself and the magnitude of his importance.

To attempt to describe the agony—there is no other word for it—that a proud, refined girl like Nancy had to endure during that one week in the London hotel, would be impossible. If she had only been permitted to lock herself in her rooms, and hide her face from the astonished and amused glances of the servants, who soon gauged the great man at his true worth!

But this did not please Mr. Crawshaw. He had not married a wife to keep her hidden away, and he meant to flaunt her as well as the rest of his possessions in the eyes of the world.

In all this Baines would have been more than a comfort to the poor girl; but Baines was gone, and a French-woman, engaged she knew not by whom, was in the faithful woman's place, to help Fenton, the valet, in his self-allotted task—or was it an appointed one?—Nancy could not tell—of spying on her every action, and reporting the same to their master.

She had welcomed the departure from London more than words could express. Away from the public gaze she would grow stronger, more able to bear the horror of herself and her life.

So she had reasoned with herself; but she had reckoned without her host.

In all her dreams she could not have imagined a more miserable existence than that which followed on her arrival at the Manor House.

She found herself, to her amazement and her fear, nothing less than a prisoner, with an impertinent maid on one side as a jailer, and Fenton as a second on the other.

The weather broke almost immediately on their return to the country, and then commenced Nancy's trials. She was expected all day to be at attention to amuse and interest her husband. She was prevented from indulging in any occupation that might have been pleasant to herself. Her walks were stricted. She could not even pass up the broad, ghostly staircase without noticing that either Marie or Fenton were creeping softly after her. It was vain to nurse a wild hope that she might see Dorothy or some one of the Hall household. Crawshaw very speedily informed her of his intention to separate her entirely from that "stuck-up lot," and that if she dared to disobey him she knew what he would do.

Indeed, one of his greatest delights was to pour out a long torrent of abuse on these people, who were so dear and sacred to Nancy as her dead mother, deriving additional pleasure when he saw the girl wince, though he could never rouse her enough to make her defend them, as he hoped, and so prolong the discussion. Once, and once only, she had turned on him and had cried passionately that he should cease. "It is a defamation to hear their names on your lips. If you must abuse them I shall not stay to listen!" and with that she had swept out of the dining-room, leaving Crawshaw too unsteady on his legs to follow her, for he never stinted himself at dinner-time, and evading Fenton, she had run swiftly upstairs, locked herself in her room, and burst into tears.

Tears, however, were a luxury denied to her often. She would not give her husband the chance of taunting her with weakness, as he certainly would have done. She kept them for the night hours when she lay awake and alone, locked in, in her great, grim bedroom, listening to the soughing of the trees out in the woods beyond which sounded like a dirge in her troubled ears.

EVER PRAISED.

"Prayer also shall be made for Him continually; and daily shall He be praised."—Psalm 72: 15.

We hail Thee, King Anointed,
Great David's greater Son;
For at the time appointed
Thy kingdom was begun.
Thou camest from oppression
Our captive souls to win—
To "take away transgression
And make an end of sin."

Thou art all succour bringing
To those who suffer wrong:
To Thee the frail are clinging;
In Thee the weak are strong.
Thou givest songs for sighing
And day in place of night;
For those condemned and dying
Are precious in Thy sight.

All prayer and praise unceasing
Each day to Thee ascend;
Thy kingdom is increasing:
Thy reign shall never end.
The tide of time shall never Exhaust Thy wondrous fame;
For Thine shall be for ever
The one all-glorious name.

On the Farm

CROP ROTATION.

Weed eradication has long been a subject of experimentation at the Minnesota Station. Spraying with sulphate of iron has been practised, with more or less beneficial results, proving, however, a better retarder of weeds and of weed seed development than an actual exterminator. The best results in destroying weeds have come from rotation of crops, according to Prof. A. D. Wilson, superintendent of the Division of Extension and of Farmer's Institutes, at the Minnesota Experimental Station. Two one-tenth acre plots have been cropped under different systems of cultivation over a period of sixteen years. One plot was cropped to a five-year rotation system of corn first year, grain second, grass third and fourth and grain fifth year. The other plot was devoted to wheat each year, the land being ploughed early in the fall, carefully disked and prepared for seed. The rotated plot is now substantially free from weeds. The wheat plot is infested with wild oats, though the station has practised careful hand-pulling of weeds over the several years of experimentation. The two-years that the rotation plot grew grass the hay has been cut so early that weeds had no chance of maturing seed. When the plot was in corn, thorough stirring of the ground was practised, and weeds were killed before they ripened.

COOKED POTATOES FOR HOGS

Cooked potatoes make a very good feed for hogs where fed in connection with a grain ration. In cooking in the ordinary feed cooker or large kettle, only a small amount of water should be used, as it takes much less fuel to cook them with a small rather than a large amount of water. The water will be converted into steam and, with the kettle covered over, this will effectually cook all the tubers, so that there will not be any large amount of water in the kettle when cooking is finished. This will not prove injurious to the pigs with round potatoes. Frosted potatoes, however, would not seem to be a wholesome feed for pigs since a frosted potato soon decays and there is no more unhealthful food for man or beast than decayed vegetables.

VALUE OF A COW.

H. B. Gurler has some ideas on the value of a good cow, and these same ideas are worthy of consideration. He says that when a cow produces 200 pounds of butter per annum at a food cost of $39 and a labor cost of $12.50 is worth $35, the cow that produces 400 pounds of butter annually is worth $400, and that the owner can make net $16 more from her after paying interest on the $400 than he can from the cow that produces 200 pounds of butter. There is no more labor connected with the 400 pound cow than there is with the 200 pound cow. The price at which the butter had been credited—i.e., twenty cents per pound—is the net price from the creamery after the making had been paid for. In this herd the increased cost of feed for the 400 pound was more than offset by the increased amount of skim milk, so we have the 200 pounds of increase of butter as net profit over the 200 pound cow. Two hundred pounds of butter at twenty cents is $40. We have $400 invested in this cow, which, at 6 per cent. interest is $24, which we will deduct from the $40, and we have left $16 to the credit of the 400 pound cow.

Fat and feed are worth considerably more than it is stated by Mr. Gurler, but they illustrate the point he wishes to make — the difference in cows.

"THE SELKIRK," Palatial New Hotel of the Grand Trunk Pacific at Winnipeg.

The above is the plan which has been approved by the Grand Trunk Pacific management for the new hotel which the company intends to erect in Winnipeg. This hotel, which in appearance and luxuriousness of appointments is to be the equal of the Chateau Laurier, at Ottawa, will cost in round figures one million dollars. It will be situated on Broadway, near the Manitoba Club, and close to the new Union Station. It has been definitely decided to call the hotel "The Selkirk," which not only has the merit of being a highly distinctive and appropriate name, but also one which is historically associated with Winnipeg and with the development of the West generally. Messrs. Ross and Macfarlane, of Montreal, are the architects for the hotel. They are now working on the detailed plans, and construction is to commense forthwith.

This hotel will be the first of a chain of similar hotels to be erected throughout the West by the company. To-day the management announced the purchase of a centrally situated site opposite the Edmonton Club on McDougall Avenue, Edmonton, for the erection in the near future of another large hotel. The Company has also just closed a deal by which it secures a very advantageous site for a new station to be erected in the city of Calgary.

THE CAUSE OF CONSTIPATION

Constipation is, in some cases, the direct result from a torpid or slow acting liver, brought about by the withholding of the flow of bile. This condition is commonly allied with more or less indigestion and dyspepsia partly due to the constipation itself.

Many persons have found it comparatively easy to overcome such conditions with a treatment of "Rexall Liver Salts."

In our judgement, we feel that this preparation is remarkably well fitted to overcome these conditions and recommend them to you with the understanding that any money you may have spent with us for the preparation will be refunded in case there are no beneficial results. In conversation with Mr. Sandy Purdon, census enumerator for part of Exeter, he expressed himself as not having encountered a single incident of an unpleasant nature in the whole of the work, which seems to be an exception to the general rule, and speaks well for the people of Exeter. He says the story that old maids are diffident about telling their ages is all a myth.

A horse belonging to Mr Daniel Wood and which was left tied by the line to a telephone post south of the Bank of Commerce, became frightened by an auto and broke away Thursday evening about 9.30 o'clock, and broke the half-mile record to the owner's home south of town. Besides the breaking of the bridle and shaft which was done in getting away, no further damage was done.

There is just one week more of school and then swarms of youngsters will be turned loose for eight weeks or more of unadulterated joy. The official closing is set for June 30, but it is expected that many of the youngsters will get ahead of the schedule and have a few days extra holidays. The entrance examinations are set for June 26, 27 and 28. The promotion examinations will be held at the same time, so that it is not at all probable that much work will be done the last two days of school.

WEDDED.—A very pretty June wedding was solemnized on Thursday, June 15th, at 12 o'clock, noon, at the home of the bride's mother, Mrs. A. Sheere, Huron Street, Exeter, when her eldest daughter, Miss Gertrude, became the bride of Mr. George H. Hockey of Brantford, formerly of Exeter. The ceremony was performed by Rev. R. Hobbs in the presence of about forty of the immediate relatives and friends of the contracting parties. The bride and groom were unattended. The bride was gowned in cream silk and wool bengaline, with satin trimmings, and carried white roses. The ceremony over all enjoyed a sumptuous wedding dinner. A large number of beautiful and costly presents were received, among them being the groom's gift of a beautiful pearl crescent. The groom also presented Mrs. L. Billings, who played the wedding march with a beautiful gold pin forming a brooch. Among those in attendance from a distance were Mr. and Mrs. Aquilla Sheere of Lansing, Mich., and Mr. Garfield Sheere of Brantford. The same evening Mr. and Mrs. Hockey left in the auto, in which the groom arrived, for Brantford, where they will make their future home, the going-away dress being a navy-blue diagonal serge. The bride and groom were very popular in Exeter and will have the best wishes of a host of friends.

MISS J. J. ALLAN EYE SIGHT SPECIALIST will be at the Commercial Hotel, Exeter, on SATURDAY next, JUNE 24th—one day.

LIVERY BUSINESS SOLD.—Mr. W.G. Bissett, Exeter's oldest business man, disposed of his livery business here Wednesday to Mr. Geo. Crawley of Lucan. For sometime Mr. Bissett has been in poor health and he will now take a well-earned rest. Mr. Crawley needs no introduction to the people of Exeter nor the travelling public, having for several years conducted the livery business on the opposite side of the street, now owned by Mr. Baker. George is a thorough liveryman and we welcome him and Mrs. Crawley back to our midst. Mr. Crawley has taken possession.

SNELL—BAKER—A pretty June wedding took place at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Newton Baker, Andrew street Exeter, on June 28th, when their daughter, Miss Fleeda B. became the bride of one of Usborne's popular young men, Mr. Milo O. W. Snell, son of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Snell of Usborne. The ceremony was performed by Rev. J. A. Snell of Baldoon, uncle of the groom, at 5 o'clock, in the presence of about 75 guests, the young couple being stationed in the parlor under an arch of ferns and roses. The bride, who was given away by her father, was gowned in dewdrop net over cream satin, wore the customary veil and orange blossoms and carried a bouquet of cream roses. They were unattended, except by the little cousin of the bride, Miss Verda Hill, dressed in allover embroidery and carring pink and white carnations. Mendelsohn's wedding march was played by Mr H. K Ellber of Crediton. The ceremony over a dainty supper was served on the lawn, after which the evening was spent in social amusements. The young couple take the Thursday morning train for Toronto and Niagara Falls for a short trip, the bride's going-away gown being Alice blue shirt, Tuscan coat and hat to match. They have the best wishes of a host of friends for a life of prosperity and happiness. Mr. and Mrs. Snell will be at home to their friends at the home of the bride's parents after July 18th.

TRIVITT MEMORIAL SERVICES SUNDAY.

Sunday was a red-letter day in connection with the Trivitt Memorial congregation.

The threatened rain of the morning held off throughout the day and with the exception of a light shower, just sufficient to lay the dust, the day continued fine.

His Lordship Bishop Williams opened the services of the day at 10 a.m. with Morning Prayer and Holy Baptism, when the Rector's little daughter, Frances Patricia, was baptised. The grand parents, Mr. and Mrs. R. M. Hobbs of Birr, acted as god-parents.

The service proper opened with the anti-communion service at 11. The choir rendered the musical parts beautifully, the Kyrie and Ter Sanctus being especially fine.

The Bishop preached a very plain and practical sermon from the words, "No man liveth unto himself." He showed that the world is only a part of the universe, not created for itself, but for God's glory, and the use of man; that all life, whether animate or inanimate, was not created for itself. From the history of nations he showed that no nation could live to itself. The United States tried and failed. They were forced into the vortex of European politics and wars. China tried it and failed.

Not only in the life of nations, but of individuals, no man liveth to himself. We offer our contribution, whether of good or evil.

The Bishop showed eloquently how every individual exercises influence and asked all professing Christians to be careful of their lives, when these lives exercised such an influence for good or evil upon mankind.

After the address the Apostolic rite of Confirmation, or "laying on of hands," was administered, when twenty four candidates were admitted into full fellowship and communion with the church. The Lord's Supper was administered, when over one hundred communicants, including the newly confirmed, partook of the Sacrament. The church was well filled and the Bishop expressed himself as highly pleased with the evidences of growth in connection with this congregation.

In the evening the members of Lebanon Forest Lodge, A. F. & A. M. paraded for Divine Service, when the Rector preached from the text, "Except the Lord build the house they labour in vain that build it. He opened with an illustration of the third and successful attempt to build the Eddystone lighthouse on the South coast of England which bears the inscription of this text as its motto.

The 127th Psalm, from which the text was taken, was written by Solomon King of Israel, and refers to the building and completion of the temple at Jerusalem. Of this temple the preacher pointed out that,—

(1) God was the Architect of His own building. The patterns were given "By writing, through the spirit, God's hand was upon him,"—I Chron. 28-19. Solomon could not deviate one hair's breadth from this pattern. Some idea of the magnitude of the work can be gathered from the number of workmen —70,000 burden bearers, 80,000 timber hewerers, 3,600 overseers—total 153-000 men, working seven years. The work of the temple was done by mixed races—principally the Phoenicians—who gave two great personages, Hiram King of Tyre and Hiram Abi, the great architect. The natural features of a country determine to a large extent the life of the people.

The British Empire owed much of her influence to the contributions of the many races and languages that comprise that Empire. The same is true of the Church of Jesus Christ, gathered out of every nation and language, but all contributing their quota upon the universal altar of truth and righteousness.

The temple was built on holy ground. God never forgets. Where Abraham offered his son, Isaac, where David offered sacrifice, this was the spot chosen for the site of the temple, a central point, a conspicuous point 2462 feet above the sea.

Much of the truth of the Eastern mind is conveyed in symbol and sign, hence the mystic atmosphere of this writing and work. The great pillars before the temple were symbolical representations of eternal truth, difficult for the Western mind to grasp, let alone appreciate. They were suggestive of strength and stability. Yet 423 years afterward this mighty temple was razed to the ground, its gorgeous covering stript off, its furnishings of silver and gold carried away to ornament heathen temples. Why? Because the Jew failed to understand that stability rested not with external things, but its foundation must be the eternal attributes of God himself.

The speaker reminded the brethren of the order that their strength lay in exemplifying the fundamentals of their order—truth, justice, mercy and charity.

SUICIDE NEAR HENSALL

On Wednesday morning much surprise and regret was felt on its becoming known that Mr. Guy Caldwell of the 2nd concession Tuckersmith had committed suicide. Nothing unusual had been noticed in Mr. Caldwell's actions of late that would indicate that he contemplated any such rash act. On Wednesday morning last he arose about four o'clock, it was supposed to feed his horse, as was his usual custom. Not returning to the house Mr. William McDougall, his father-in-law, went out to ascertain his whereabouts, when to his great surprise and horror he discovered Mr. Caldwell's body suspended by a rope in the barn, and lifeless. Sometime ago Mr. Caldwell disposed of his farm to Mr. Wm. Sproat of near Seaforth, and it has since been learned that some person had stated to Mr. Caldwell that he had sold the farm too cheap, and that the would-be purchaser would have given him $1000 more for it. Mr. Caldwell endeavored to buy the farm back, but Mr. Sproat was satisfied with his bargain and refused to sell. The loss of the sale at the higher price must have worried him and to him life must have lost its charm when he could commit so rash an act. The funeral took place Friday to the Hensall cemetery. Besides his sorrowing wife he is survived by three children—two sons and one daughter; also his parents, Mr. and Mrs. John Caldwell, of Tuckersmith, and four brothers and four sisters. The sad event has cast a gloom over the whole community as Mr. Caldwell was respected and esteemed by a large circle of friends.

RECIPROCITY DISCUSSED

The Reciprocity Agreement of the Laurier Administration was discussed at length by Hon. William Lyon Mackenzie King and Mr. M. Y. McLean in the James street church shed onn Friday evening last. A large and interested audience was present and the best of hearing was given the speakers. The chair was taken by Mr. H. Smith, the President of the Association, who introduced the speakers, and on the platform were a number of prominent Liberals.

W. L. Mackenzie King, the Minister of Labor in the Laurier Administration, appeared for the first time before the electors of Exeter and vicinity. One could scarcely say he measures up to the reputation accorded him by the Government papers. He is fluent, but not accurate, ready but not convincing. Does not take his audience seriously and tries to reconcile the very questions his arguments show are opposites. His repeated references to Reciprocity in the phrase, "since this agreement came into force", and referring to Mr. Haultain as "the Premier of Saskatchewan" is scarcely excusable and if intended to deceive is very improper. His methods rather suggest the work of the unscrupulous promoter who tries to befuddle rather than enlighten, to perplex rather than to instruct. In the terms of the boy on the street he simply "put up a big bluff", but in doing so he reckoned without regard to the intelligence of his audience, whose lack of enthusiasm must have been depressing.

The latest phase of the Reciprocity Agreement is that it is a great temperance movement, intended primarily for that purpose. In attempting to answer Rev. Mr. Sharp (who took exception to the statement of Mr. McLean that farmers would receive 31c. a bus. more for barley for malting purposes, on the grounds that the government should not countenance any such arrangement so detrimental to temperance principles) Mr. King was funny when he made the astounding statement that Reciprocity would make barley so high that malters could not afford to buy it, hence the product of the brewery would be diminished to that extent. Arguing from the same premises the price of wheat will be so great that the millers will not be able to buy it, and starvation must be the inevitable result.

Another statement which must have left his supporters wondering was made in connection with his argument that the agreement would give us the consuming market of the United States, which had ceased to be an exporting country—the 8,000,000 would get the 80,000,000 market. Very plausable, but this smooth gentleman spoiled it all when a few moments afterward speaking of our railway in which the Canadian people have spent several hundred million dollars in the construction and running east and west, that if they could not compete with the lines running north and south, so much the worse for our lines. But, exclaims this fertile mind, will the agreement affect our railways? We are 500 miles nearer the British markets than the nearest United States port. What will be the result? Why the United States shippers will ship their manufactured articles to Europe over our lines. Now this is the Conservative argument, that the millers of St. Paul and Minneapolis will take our wheat, manufacture it into flour and ship it to the British markets in competition with ours, and we are pleased now to know that we have this statement substantiated by no less an authority than William Lyon Mackenzie King.

The repeated references to the part taken by Sir John Macdonald in connection with reciprocity are misleading. Such flippant statesmen as Mackenzie King are not worthy to take the name of Sir John Macdonald in their lips, let alone intrepret his mind and policy. With the solidifying result of Confederation, the construction of the C.P.R., the binding closer of the ties of Empire, Sir John Macdonald had the vision of mighty empire, knit together by the bonds of trade and commerce and loyalty to that Empire—a vision as strong in his mind as the continental vision of Canada and the United States under one flag of Sir Wilfrid Laurier and Mackenzie King.

EXETER 7; CREDITON 6.

About four hundred enthusiastic baseball fans saw the return game on the local diamond Monday night, when for the first time in several seasons Exeter defeated their old opponents, the Crediton Stars, 7-6. And to say that the locals and their supporters were highly pleased is to express it mildly, and all the more so since it was no chance victory, but a hard fought game in which the team that played the best ball won out.

There were not over half-a-dozen errors on each side, although they were usually very costly; but the result is too good to mar it with any adverse criticism. Carling for the locals pitched superb ball, and to cap the climax scored the winning run, which tickled him and his admirers mightily. The playing of Steer on first and Hoskins behind the home plate are specially worthy of mention; while the others of the home team played creditable ball. Crediton boys put up their usual game. "King" Fahner doing the pitching. King has a most disconcerting smile, but it did not stay with him throughout the game as it usually does. Along about the middle of the game the locals began to hit him freely, the smile wore off, he threw a wild one or two, and King was taking a little trip in the flying machine. The locals kept on hitting hard, and as will be seen by the score below they stole the game from the visitors when they thought they had it cinched. Crediton made a great rally in the ninth, securing two and making the score a tie, due largely to a series of bad throws by Exeter. At this point a dispute arose and it was sometime before the game was resumed. However they finally did get started and Carling scored the winning run, with one man out, when the rain, which had been threatening for sometime, came pouring down, and all rushed for shelter. Boyle and Holtzmann umpired. Following is the line-up and score,—

Crediton		Exeter

Kirkton and Exeter juniors played morning and afternoon games of baseball here on Coronation Day, the locals winning both games, the visitors being outclassed as to pitchers and hitters. Few errors were made, but the visitors were unable to connect with the balls tossed by Harry Sweet in the first game or Reg Bissett in the second game. Melv. Hoskins did the receiving in the morning while Harry Fuke occupied the post behind the home plate in the afternoon. Geo. Palmer umpired. The scores—Morning—Exeter 12, Kirkton 5; afternoon, Exeter 11, Kirkton 2.

The Juniors drove to Centralia Friday night and defeated the home team 11-5.

Mr. Allen Hobbs of Toronto was here over Sunday.

Mrs. Whiteford is ill at her home on South Boundary.

Persons who are inclined to the breaking of the laws in regard to game will do well to take notice that Mr. James Beer, Game Warden, is home from the west. Last week it cost a Stephen man about $10 for fishing on the Lord's Day and catching maskinonge out of season.

GEORGE V. CROWNED BRITAIN'S KING

Scene in Westminster Abbey One of Unparalleled Magnificence

London, June 22.—The fifth George of England was crowned to-day. Sacred and historical ceremonial was borne out in venerable Westminster with the symbolism and ritual language which carried the minds of the beholders back to the days of romance and chivalry, even to the time of those who lived before Alfred.

A GORGEOUS SPECTACLE.

George V. sat for his hallowing where English Kings before him had been consecrated for more than 800 years. No language can exaggerate the effect of the crowning in Westminster Abbey as a State spectacle and a scene of visible symbolism. From six o'clock, when the doors opened, until after nine, the moving pictures silently and gradually composed themselves into one harmonious setting, only needing the addition of the central figures to complete the scene. Great galleries stretched upwards on either side of the "Theatre" for the peers and peeresses and commoners of the realm. On the south side of the chancel stalls was a Royal box for members of the English Royal family, and on the north side of the chancel the judges' gallery. The central aisle and nave were lined with superimposed galleries, which were occupied by diplomats, Royal representatives and other distinguished persons. These were all carpeted. The bluish grey floor was covered with a wonderful garter blue carpet of nine hundred square yards. On the altar stood the abbey's glittering gold service. On a table beneath the Royal box was ranged the still more magnificent gold service of St. George's Chapel at Windsor, whose burnished richness made the most brilliant color note of all.

On the sides of the galleries hung priceless and ancient tapestries. Rare, centuries old, Persian rugs lay before the thrones. Above, behind and around everything stretched the ancient grey stonework of the abbey, the mellowed stained glass of the painted windows blending softly with all.

A WONDERFUL PICTURE.

When nearly seven thousand spectators had taken their seats there was to be seen as wonderful a picture of sheer color as a painter could dream of. The abbey had lost some touch of its austerity save in the ceiling's misty heights, but there was no loss of beauty. It was light and fairy-like, the dark ruby velvet of the peers and peeresses, the scarlet tunics of the soldiers and the black velvet court suits giving just sufficient strength to the spotless ermine capes of the judges and peers. Pale mauves, yellows, light blues, pinks, and pearly greys were chiefly worn by the ladies, who, with the exception of the bare-headed peeresses, wore on their heads white feathers or white airy rosettes with white streamers hanging behind. The colors glittered in the front of these and jewels sparkled on bare necks and bosoms. It was a wonderful blended whole, in which without search the detail was practically lost.

From nine to ten o'clock not a minute passed without its picture. At nine o'clock the white-robed choir entered and stood in the chancel. Then from the altar the abbey canons, robed in their long, richly-colored capes, took the articles of Royal regalia and preceded by the choir, which was now singing "O God, Our Help in Ages Past," bore them to the robing room at the west entrance.

At ten o'clock all stood again as a glittering company of foreign princes walked up the aisle and took their places in the chancel. Then followed the Diplomatic Corps, foreign envoys and minor royalties, and then, in truth, the choir stall became as it were a map of the world, stretching from Ethiopia to Japan.

ARRIVAL OF PRINCE OF WALES

Following these came another assemblage which touched the hearts of the people within and without the abbey as did none other to-day, not even the King and Queen themselves. It was the Prince of Wales with his sister and his brothers, followed by 19 princes and princesses of the British Royal family. But all eyes were for the boy prince and his sister and brothers. Grave and serious looked the young prince as he walked with a dignity beyond his years at the head of this Royal group dressed in the mediaeval costume of the Garter. He looked every inch a prince, but the modesty and diffidence of the human boy could plainly be seen, adding, not detracting, from the princeliness of his bearing. His company obtained a place alone opposite the peers facing the north line of the throne on raised dais and facing east the serried ranks. The peers arose and bowed low as the Prince, before taking his seat, turned and bowed to them. The Princess Mary followed, walking along looking every inch a princess. She was well able to give effect to her long ermine-lined blue train, which was held up by a lady-in-attendance. The downcast eyes, slightly bent head and girlish coiffure alone spoke the child. Behind her came her young sailor brother, dressed as a naval cadet, and the two little princes in Scotch garb.

The Duke of Connaught made a separate arrival. He bowed low to his young grand-nephew, the Prince of Wales, who rose and returned the bow, as he did henceforth to all who passed him. The Duke of Connaught sat on a chair to the right of the Prince of Wales.

THE QUEEN'S ARRIVAL.

At 10.45 the abbey music ceased. A clash of bells, a roll of drums and a fanfare of trumpets without were heard, and then an expectant hush fell on the great congregation. Romantic tension held its every hour. Then slowly, very slowly, the Queen's procession advanced up the aisle. Heralded by a psalm and preceded by the clergy and great officials of her household, the bearers of her regalia and many of the noblest of her husband's subjects, she passed along an obeisant avenue of princes, lords and ambassadors. The Bishops of London and Oxford supported her on either side, and six daughters of earls bore her train, on which were worked emblems of every portion of the British Empire.

"Viva the Maria Regina!" thrice repeated by the clamant voices of the Westminster School boys, broke the silence. It was followed by "Vivat, Vivat, Vivat!" louder still. To the strains of the anthem, "Oh, Pray for Peace," the Queen crossed from the north chencel to a seat in the south in front of the Royal box and knelt in prayer.

Then silence fell again, to be broken by a second roll of drums and a fanfare of trumpets. The King was coming.

KING PALE BUT CALM.

The King was pale but calm. He looked neither to the left nor to the right, as one in a dream. "Vivat Georgius Rex et Imperator, Vivat, Vivat, Vivat," came a full-throated chorus thrice from the Westminster boys. Entering the chancel on the south side, the King halted before the Queen, who stood behind the faldstool. Husband and wife looked for a moment into each other's eyes and then, after the exchange of a grave bow, the King passed to his own chair beyond the Queen's and both knelt in prayer.

KING TAKES THE OATH.

The Archbishop of Canterbury next advanced to the seated King and asked:

"Sir, is your Majesty willing to take the oath?"

"I am willing," replied the King in low but distinct tones.

After taking the oath and kissing the Bible his Majesty moved to the great Coronation chair of King Edward, and was there anointed on the crown of his head, his breast, palms and both hands as has been the usage of English kings for a thousand years. During the anointing four Knights of the Garter held the gold-colored silken canopy behind the chair, but not over the King.

After the anointing the King knelt for the blessing. Then he stood to be invested with the colobium sindonis, the supertunica and the girdle. Then, sitting in the great chair, the King looked as though he were clad in solid gold armor as the spurs and swords were presented. After rising the King ungirt the sword and offered it, scabbarded, at the altar, thus dedicating it to the service of God. He then handed it to one of the Knights of the Garter, who unsheathed it, and the naked sword of justice remained exposed till the close of the ceremony.

The Imperial mantle or cape of gold, flowing to the ground, was then taken from the altar and placed in his hands, and then replaced on the altar; and the Royal Sceptre, with the great Cullinan diamond flashing fire, was placed in his right hand, and the Sceptre with the Dove in the left hand.

Thus the King walked to the throne on a raised dais, where the Archbishop of Canterbury crowned him. It was the supreme moment.

"God Save the King" poured out from thousands of voices in the abbey, while outside at Hyde Park, the Tower of London, and Windsor forty-one guns thundered a salute which echoed around the world, for by arrangement the same salute was fired throughout the Kingdom and the dominions. How far-flung was the line of this regal salute can best be gathered by the various times coinciding with 12.32 p.m. in London. In New Zealand it was 1.11 a.m. to-morrow, at Vancouver, B. C., 4.10 a.m. to-day, at Calcutta 6.25 to-night, and at Jamaica 7.25 this morning.

As the crown was placed on the King's head the peers simultaneously donned their coronets.

His Majesty was crowned in St. Edward's chair. After wearing it for a minute the King removed the crown and replaced it with a lesser one. Then, carrying the sceptre, he walked east to the throne, on the dais, in which he was placed by the archbishops bishops and peers.

Next followed the picturesquely symbolical ceremony of homage. The Prince of Wales first advanced, doffed his coronet and knelt at the foot of the dais. Then ascending, he kissed the King on both cheeks, and then knelt and kissed his hand. The Prince of Wales alone kissed the King on both cheeks and on the hand.

The Duke of Connaught followed. He doffed his coronet and knelt on the bottom step. He arose, ascended and knelt on the top step. Then he stood and, bending forward, touched the crown with his right hand, kissed the King's left cheek, and then retired. So did the senior Duke, Marquis, Earl, Count and Baron.

CROWNING THE QUEEN.

Then at the altar followed the simpler ceremony of crowning the Queen. Four gentlemen bore a canopy behind her, and they were followed by four duchesses. As the Queen walked east from the altar to take her seat on the throne to the King's left, but two steps lower on the dais, the King arose, holding a sceptre in either hand. With the sceptre in her right hand, the Queen walked slowly and majestically. Six white-clad bearers held her train, and apparently took off all the weight from close up to the shoulders to the very end of its 18 feet of magnificence. But as the Queen ascended the three shallow steps to the throne the enormous weight with which the train and gown pressed upon her could be seen. She went up like a little child, slowly, and getting both feet on the same step before ascending the next one.

Their Majesties then descended from the dais and advanced, attended by a glittering throng as before, to the altar, where they handed over the sceptres and crowns, and made obligations according to the ritual in the service. They then partook of Holy Communion. The full ritual was completed. The choir sang the "Gloria," and the Archbishop of Canterbury pronounced the Benediction. The choir sang the "Te Deum."

Meanwhile their Majesties, who had reseated themselves on their thrones, descended and advanced again to the altar. They passed by different doors into St. Edward's Chapel, the regalia which had been lying on the altar being returned to their former bearers. Standing before the altar of the chapel, the King delivered the sceptre and dove to the Archbishop, who then laid it on the altar.

The King was then robed in purple velvet and with the crown on his head, the orb in his left hand, and the sceptre and cross in his right, the Queen carrying both sceptres, passed through the choir, attended as on the entrance, but with the order of procession reversed. The band played and the choir sang the National Anthem as their Majesties proceeded to the west entrance to go forth to the enthusiastic plaudits of their people.

So with prayer and benediction the time-honored ceremonial was performed of the crowning and saering of a King who holds office "By God's ordinance" as the head of both Church and State.

BRITAIN'S GREAT ARMADA

Saluting Line of Twenty Miles Greets King and Queen

Portsmouth, June 25.—George V., the sailor King, passed through the sunlit waters of the Solent yesterday afternoon between steel lanes formed by the greatest armada ever assembled. Fighting craft representing practically every navy of the world participated in this splendid sea pageant. It was viewed by people from nearly every clime. Although essentially designed as a spectacle, it could not be otherwise than a parade of the fact that England cherishes her title of "Mistress of the seas."

As a picture and an object lesson the review was stupendous in beauty and singnificance.

One hundred and sixty-seven ships of all classes, with a total displacement of 1,022,000 tons, and costing about 100,000,000 pounds, was the showing made by England. The fleet included 32 battleships, 25 armoured cruisers, nine protected cruisers, 29 torpedo craft. The total number of the officers and men was 160,000.

The arrival of the King shortly before 1 o'clock was announced by cannon from Nelson's old flagship Victory. As the reverberation echoed over the Solent every ship of the armada blossomed out as if by magic with flags of every hue.

The breeze flaunted millions of pinions contained in dressing ship, transforming the picture from neutral tints to gorgeous tones.

His Majesty was received by Admiral Sir Arthur Moore and staff and escorted aboard the Royal yacht Victoria and Albert, which broke out the Royal Standard. Promptly two torpedo boats nosed into the lane, showing the path to the four yachts participating in the review. As the King, standing on the bridge in the uniform of an admiral, came abreast of the first warship, the latter's guns boomed a royal salute. The first crash was the signal for all the ships to take up the salute.

PEALS OF OLYMPIAN THUNDER

Instantly the quiet prevailing the moment before was followed by peal on peal of Olympian thunder, which hurled against the shores of either side of the Solent and was hurled back again to the armada. The face of the waters was covered by a smoke pall, which, raising, revealed the Royal yacht advancing majestically, her black hull and gold-trimmed yellow stays and superstructure gleaming in the sun.

Around the decks of every leviathian was an unbroken chain of blue-jackets manning ship. Red lines above disclosed marines. With the silencing of the guns began volleys of cheers sent across the waters to the King from every ship. Also there was the melody of the National Anthem from all of the bands. There was a manifest ferfor, perhaps never before attained at a similar review in the Solent, because it was known by every man and officer that to-day was the last time that a British navy distinctly of the Motherland will ever be assembled, because Canada, Australia and other colonies are forming their own navies.

THEY BLAZED WITH LIGHT

Warships of Seventeen Nations at Spithead Illuminated

Portsmouth, England, June 23.—Notwithstanding a dismal drizzling rain, both the City of Portsmouth and the fleet at Spithead were brilliantly illuminated to-night. Vessels representing seventeen nations, which had come to greet the newly crowned king, vied with the gigantic gathering of British warships in making a beautiful spectacle. The long lines of vessels moored in Spithead blazed with light, hulls and masts outlined with electric lamps glowing brilliantly against the dull skies and reflecting their images in the water upon which they rode at anchor.

Despite the rain, every kind of craft, crowded with sightseers, made trips among the warships. The display continued until midnight, when upon signals flashed from the flagships the lights were suddenly extinguished.

Meanwhile, the town was full of animation. Bluejackets of all nations fraternized in the heartiest manner and visited together the various places of entertainment.

MILLIONS WITNESS THE PROCESSION

Contingents From British Countries on Every Continent

London, June 23.—King George and Queen Mary to-day showed themselves to the masses as distinct from the more favored classes who were able to obtain access to the circumscribed area of yesterday's pageant.

To-day's procession was on an even grander scale than that of the coronation. The route was more extended, including a circuit of some of the most populous districts of the capital and the crowds that looked on were correspondingly greater. Then, too, their Majesties were accompanied by a larger escort.

The scenes along the route were to a great extent a repetition of those of yesterday with a much greater crowd of spectators.

The procession began to form in the yard of Buckingham Palace and the adjacent streets at nine o'clock, and two hours later it was under way.

Between lines of cheering thousands the Royal party made stately progress from Buckingham Palace by way of Constitution Hill, Piccadilly, Trafalgar Square, through the city over London Bridge, by Borough road and Westminster Bridge, thus making a complete circuit.

FOUR SQUADRONS OF CAVALRY.

The pageant included four full squadrons of cavalry representing all branches of that arm of the service, Life Guards, Dragoons, Hussars and Lancers, each accompanied by its own band and a section of Horse Artillery. These were followed by all the naval and military aides-de-camp on duty, the War Office staff, deputations of foreign officers, the Royal Suite, the members of the Royal family, and the foreign Princes and the colonial, including the Canadian and Indian escorts, who immediately preceded the State carriage.

In the Royal equipage with the King and Queen rode Field Marshal Kitchener and the bearer of the Royal Standard.

The Royal escort brought up the rear.

AN UPROARIOUS WELCOME

Seats for many thousands had been erected along this long route and the progress of the King and Queen was indeed a royal one. Everywhere they received an uproarious welcome from the visitors in the hotels, from the stands of Piccadilly, Trafalgar Square and the Strand; from the business men of London proper who had brought their wives and children to the city for this day, and again from their Majesties' humbler subjects south of the river.

The decorations of yesterday remained in Piccadilly and those in the other streets traversed were not less spectacular. In the Strand there were rows of masts, each bearing a red lion and underneath a red velvet drapery with a lion rampant in the centre.

CANADIANS ESCORT PREMIER

A contingent of Canadians escorted the first carriage occupied by Sir Wilfrid Laurier, Premier of Canada, and Premier Fisher, of Australia. This was followed by other carriages carrying Premier Morris, of Newfoundland, Premier Botha of the Union of South Africa, Premier Ward of New Zealand, the Governors and Commissioners of smaller colonies, each escorted by troops from their respective countries.

They were followed by the ever-popular troopers, the Northwest Mounted Police, and an African force organized on similar lines.

NEW HEALTH AND NEW STRENGTH FOR SUFFERING WOMEN

Aching Backs, Tired Limbs and Splitting Headaches Need Not be Endured

In silent patience nearly every woman endures suffering that casts a shadow over half her existence. An aching back, tired limbs, attacks of faintness, and headaches and backaches, need not be part of a woman's life. Such trials indicate plainly that the system requires the new blood that is supplied through the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. These Pills are valued by suffering women who have used them above all other medicines, because they give the rich, red blood that makes women well, bright and at their best. Mrs. Fred Collard, Poplar Point, Man., says: "I can give you but a very small estimate of the suffering I endured before I began using Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. After the birth of my first child I suffered intensely from ailments that too often afflict my sex. This was complicated by an attack of bleeding piles, and the agony of the days and nights I endured is almost past comprehension. I tried many remedies, but they did not help me in my trouble, and from a healthy young woman weighing 140 pounds I fell away in weight to 95 pounds. I grew so weak I could hardly walk across the floor, and there were times I hardly knew what I was doing, so great was my agony. I went to Brandon and consulted a doctor who said that nothing would help me but an operation for both my troubles, and that I would have to remain in the hospital for at least eight weeks. Being a farmer's wife I felt that this was impossible, and while in Brandon I met a friend who strongly urged me to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, telling me that they had cured her trouble similar to mine, after an operation had proved of no benefit. She had such strong faith in them that she gave me the first box, and I began using them. It was not long before I found much relief. I continued to use the Pills all the rest of that summer, and the result was they restored me to perfect health. I told the doctor what Dr. Williams' Pink Pills had done for me, and his reply was that he considered what they had done for me little less than a miracle. I have since recommended the Pills to many others who have suffered from woman's troubles, and they always produced beneficial results. I hope that this statement will be of benefit to some other suffering person."

These Pills are sold by all medicine dealers or may be had by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

WISE SAYINGS.

Reliability is the essence of success.

Men make houses, but women make homes.

A hearty laugh is one of the best soul-restorers in the world.

Unless we believe that we are in the world for some great purpose, and that every human soul is of supreme value, we shall not get social evils swept away.

Women are just as old as they look; and they look as young as they can.

We shall make little progress against the sins of society unless we learn to be stern about the sins of ourselves.

JAPANESE HEALTH RULES.

Recommended to Those Who Hunger After Long Life.

The following sanitary regulations appearing in a recent issue of the Jiji are recommended by the Japanese Herald to those hungering after long life:

First—Spend as much time out of doors as possible. Bask much in the sun and take plenty of exercise. Take care that your respiration is always deep and regular.

Second—As regards meals, eat meat only once a day and let the diet be eggs, cereals, vegetables, fruits and fresh cow's milk. Take the last named as much as possible. Masticate your food carefully.

Third—Take a hot bath every day and a steam bath once or twice a week if the heart is strong enough to bear it.

Fourth—Put on roughly-woven underwear (cotton fabrics are preferable) and clothes; a comfortable collar, light hat of any material and well-fitting boots.

Fifth—Early to bed and early to rise.

Sixth—Sleep in a very dark and very quiet room, with windows open. Let the minimum of sleeping hours be six or six and one-half hours, and the maximum seven and one-half hours. In case of women rest of eight and one-half hours is advisable.

Seventh—Take one day of absolute rest per week, on which you must refrain from even reading and writing.

Eighth—Try to avoid any outburst of passions and strong mental stimulations. Do not overtax your brain at the occurrences of inevitable incidents or of coming events. Do not say unpleasant things, nor listen, if possible, to disagreeable things.

Ninth—Be married! Widows and widowers should be remarried with the least possible delay.

Tenth—Be moderate in the consumption of even tea and coffee, not to say tobacco and alcoholic beverages.

Eleventh—Avoid places that are too warm (especially steam-heated) and badly ventilated rooms.

Twelfth—In order to promote the functions of those bodily organs which are liable to weaken by age and disease, supply yourself with nutriment taken from the same organs of other animals. But in such cases the advice of the most competent medical authorities should be carefully consulted.

The Japan Herald adds: "The Jiji might have made up the round dozen of suggestions by informing its readers how—in these days of high duties and coming higher ones—they can obtain the money to purchase the various articles of food stuffs calculated to lengthen life. A Japanese workman, keeping a wife and children on something under one yen a day, would doubtlessly be quite satisfied with meat at one meal per diem. When rent, doctor's bills, clothing, fuel and the thousand and one minor expenses falling to the lot of the housekeeper had been met there would be little chance of the family surfeiting itself with eggs, cereals, vegetables, fruits and fresh cow's milk."

BABY'S LIFE THREATENED BY SUMMER COMPLAINT

The life of every baby is threatened during the hot summer months by that dreaded trouble—summer complaint. Thousands of children die every summer from this trouble—thousands of happy homes are made dark and sorrowful because a precious little life has been snuffed out. But mothers, though you fear this trouble, you can yet fight it—yes, fight it and defeat it with Baby's Own Tablets. Concerning them Mrs. Jos. Steffs, Coutts, Alta., says: "During the hot summer days my little boy took ill with summer complaint. He was seized with vomiting and nothing helped him till I got Baby's Own Tablets. They relieved him and made him a strong healthy child." The Tablets are for sale by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

ONLY HIS PAST LIFE TAINTED

"But why does your father object to me?" demanded the humble suitor.

"Because," explained the haughty beauty of proud lineage, "papa says his ancestors have always been gentlemen of leisure, and you have to work for a living."

"Well, tell him I don't expect to after we are married," replied the humble suitor.

No person should go from home without a bottle of Dr. J. D. Kellogg's Dysentery Cordial in their possession, as change of water, cooking, climate, etc., frequently brings on summer complaint, and there is nothing like being ready with a sure remedy at hand, which oftentimes saves great suffering and frequently valuable lives. This Cordial has gained for itself a widespread reputation for affording prompt relief from all summer complaints.

THE CANADIAN ORDER OF FORESTERS.

The Thirty-second Annual Meeting of High Court—The Sessions are Largely Attended—Most Representative Meeting Held in Years.

A large representation of delegates present at the opening session of High Court of the Canadian Order of Foresters betokened the deep interest throughout the Dominion in the welfare of this great fraternal Insurance Society, which now includes nearly 80,000 Canadians in its membership.

Great enthusiasm characterized the gathering, and rightly so, as the year just closed was the most successful in the history of the Order, and to this may be added the fact that the delegates are for the first time meeting in the commodious Assembly Hall of the Canadian Foresters' Building, 22 College street. The new building is up to date and thoroughly equipped, and is a credit to the members of the local Courts, who undertook the work and carried it to so successful an issue. The magnificent structure is a tribute to the spirit of fraternity, which prevails among the members of the City of Toronto, and the result of their united efforts is a splendid object lesson to the delegates from other centres.

The sessions of High Court were presided over by the High Chief Ranger, J. A. Stewart, and all the other High Court Officers were in attendance.

After receiving reports of the High Court Officers, which were distributed to the delegates in printed form, the meeting received the various civic deputations.

The report of J. A. Stewart, High Chief Ranger, was replete with facts and figures, showing the Order to be in a most flourishing condition, maintaining and even surpassing its record for previous years.

On the last of January, 1910, the Order had a membership of 73,985, and there were initiated during the year, 8,280 new members, being an increase of 911 over the previous year. During last year 3,663 members lapsed and 498 died, leaving the net membership at the close of the year 78,104.

The increase in the Insurance Reserve of the Order during the year, amounted to $276,186.13. On January 1st, 1910, the amount on hand in this Branch was $3,002,308.29, and at the close of the year, $3,287,494.42.

The standing of the High Court Sick and Funeral Benefit Branch is also most satisfactory. During the year no less a sum than $147,224.96, covering 6,132 Claims, was paid in this Branch. The amount to the credit of this Fund at the commencement of the year was $170,773.82, and at the close $207,223.20.

The report of Geo. Faulkner, High Secretary, covering the general work of the Society, was next in order, and showed in detail the large volume of business transacted through his department.

The amount of Insurance Premiums received during the year was $644,077.82, which with the large sum of $133,690.75 derived from interest on investments, made the total receipts in this Branch $777,768.57. There were 498 Death Claims paid, amounting to $501,582.44, leaving the sum of $276,186.13 to carry to the Reserve, which at the close of the year was $3,278,494.42.

The amount of Sick and Funeral Benefit fees received during the year was $175,863.29, and interest $7,811.05, making the total receipts in this Branch $183,674.34. There were 6,132 Sick and Funeral Benefit Claims paid, amounting to $147,224.96, leaving $36,449.38 to the Reserve, which at the close of the year amounted to $207,223.20.

There were 78,104 members in good standing, at the close of the year, carrying $78,102,000.00 Insurance.

There were issued from the High Secretary's Office 8,123 Insurance Certificates and 7,483 Membership Certificates, or a total of 15,606, and in addition there were endorsements made on 1,629 Insurance Certificates.

The report of Robert Elliott, High Treasurer, showed the funds of the Order to be in a most satisfactory condition. The income in the several funds was as follows: Insurance $777,768.57, Sick and Funeral Benefit $183,674.34, and General Fund $102,899.78. Total Income, $1,064,342.69. The total expenditure in these funds was $748,052.87. The surplus income over expenditure amounted to $316,289.82.

The Insurance Reserve Fund at the close of the year was invested as follows:

Municipal and School Debentures	$3,218,797.30
Dominion of Canada Stock	150,000.00
Deposited in Chartered Banks	20,000.00
Current Accounts in Chartered Banks	39,697.12
	$3,278,494.42

The total assets of the Order amounted to $3,559,322.09, and its liabilities $28,517.97. Assets over liabilities $3,530,804.12.

The report of Dr. U. M. Stanley, Chairman of the Medical Board, showed the average death rate since the commencement of the Order to be 5.22 per 1,000 membership. There were submitted to the Medical Board during the year 10,106 applications, the largest number for any year in the history of the Order, of which 9,215 were accepted, and the remaining 891 rejected. The number of applications was 1,290 more than for the previous year.

The report of W. G. Strong, Superintendent of the Organization, showed that during the year there were 8,280 iniations as against 7,369 for the previous year, an increase of 911.

At the close of the year, there were 1,069 Courts in the Order, representing a membership of 78,104. There were 517 Courts in Ontario, 180 in Quebec, 56 in Nova Scotia, 71 in New Brunswick, 14 in Prince Edward Island, 65 in Saskatchewan, 37 in Alberta, 17 in British Columbia and 112 in Manitoba.

Among those in attendance are the following:

J. A. Stewart, High Chief Ranger, Perth, Ontario; J. A. A. Brodeur, High Vice Chief Ranger, Montreal, Que.; Geo. Faulkner, High Secretary, Brantford, Ont.; Robt. Elliott, High Treasurer, Brantford, Ontario; Dr. U. M. Stanley, Chairman Medical Board, Brantford, Ont.; W. M. Couper, Montreal, Que.; A. P. Van Someren, Saskatoon, Sask.; R. W. Wigmore, St. John, N.B.; R. C. Gavin, Toronto, Ont.; T. E. McLellan, Galt, Ont.; Members of the Executive Committee; W. L. Roberts, High Auditor, Brantford, Ont.; J. P. Hoag, High Auditor, London, Ont.; W. Walker, High Registrar, Montreal, Que.; W. G. Strong, Superintendent of Organization, Brantford, Ont.; Lyman Lee, Solicitor High Court, Hamilton, Ontario; Hon. Minard's Liniment Co., Limited.

Dear Sirs,—This fall I got thrown on a fence and hurt my chest very bad, so I could not work and it hurt me to breathe. I tried all kinds of Liniments and they did me no good.

One bottle of MINARD'S LINIMENT, warmed on flannels and applied on my breast, cured me completely.

DEPARTED.

He—"I come from a very good family."

She—"I imagine they were pleased to have you go."

Relief for Suffering Everywhere. He whose life is made miserable by the suffering that comes from indigestion and has not tried Parmelee's Vegetable Pills does not know how easily this formidable foe can be dealt with. These pills will relieve where others fail. They are the result of long and patient study and are confidently put forward as a sure corrector of disorders of the digestive organs, from which so many suffer.

Secretary—"Where is Smith?" Office Boy—"He isn't here, sir. His wife sent round to say the baby was asleep, and he's gone home to see what it looks like."

Housekeepers are strongly advised to commence the use of Wilson's Fly Pads early, because a few flies killed in June would otherwise become a host by August.

"Why do you call your boy 'Flannel'?" "Because he always seems to shrink from washing."

Minard's Liniment Cures Diphtheria.

Stranger—"I understand that the measles broke out in this town recently." Constable—"Yes, sir. But our head constable caught them!"

As a vermifuge there is nothing so potent as Mother Graves' Worm Exterminator, and it can be given to the most delicate child without fear or injury to the constitution.

QUITE SAFE.

"I insulted that man in the grossest way, and he is twice as large and strong as I am."

"Really? You are brave!"

"Yes, I insulted him, and just when he was most furious I calmly hung up the receiver of the telephone and rang off."

WHY THEY MARRY.

"Do you mean to say that you married for money?"

"In a way I did. I got married because I couldn't afford to stay engaged any longer."

Don't ignore the few house flies you see in June. Unless you commence using Wilson's Fly-Pads early your house will be overrun by them in midsummer.

You complain of ingratitude; were you not repaid by your pleasure in doing good?—Devis.

A Purely Vegetable Pill. — The chief ingredients of Parmelee's Vegetable Pills are mandrake and dandelion, sedative and purgative, but perfectly harmless in their action. They cleanse and purify and have a most healthful effect upon the secretions of the digestive organs. The dyspeptic and all who suffer from liver and kidney ailments will find in these pills the most effective medicine in concentrated form that has yet been offered to the suffering.

Joe—"And you mean to say that Jack has not married Miss Brown? Why, the girl was absolutely throwing herself at him the last time I saw them." James—"My dear fellow, did you ever know a girl who could throw straight?"

Minard's Liniment Cures Distemper.

When it is necessary to make several cakes at once, save yourself the tiresome beating of the batter by putting the required ingredients in their usual order into a small ice cream freezer. A few minutes of turning the crank results in a fine, smooth batter necessary for a successful cake.

REST AND HEALTH TO MOTHER AND CHILD.

MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP has been used for over SIXTY YEARS by MILLIONS of MOTHERS for their CHILDREN WHILE TEETHING, with PERFECT SUCCESS. It SOOTHES the CHILD, SOFTENS the GUMS, ALLAYS all PAIN; CURES WIND COLIC, and is the best remedy for DIARRHŒA. It is absolutely harmless. Be sure and ask for "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup," and take no other kind. Twenty-five cents a bottle.

Fair Girl—"My father made his fortune when he was a young man. Would you like to know how he did it?" Gallant Youth—"Not particularly; but I would like to know if he still has it."

A stitch in time saves nine, and every house fly killed early saves a thousand at least later on. Wilson's Fly Pads will kill many times more flies than any other article.

"What did your wife say when you got home the other night?" "Nothing at all. She just sat down at the piano and played 'Tell me the old, old story.'"

Binks—"They say that successful men are usually bald." Winks—"Yes; I notice they come out on top."

Minard's Liniment Cures Garget in Cows.

THE POWER OF TEARS.

The explorer was entertaining his friends with some yarns of the Arctic regions.

"And once" he related. "I was cornered by a huge polar bear, and didn't have a bullet to protect myself. Tears came into my eyes as I thought of the home I should never see again."

"What then?" asked his breathless friends.

"Why the tears froze as hard as a rock, and, ramming them in my gun, I fired, and killed the bear."

And then tears fell from the eyes of the listeners also.

Lover—"I thought you were going to scream for your mother when I kissed you." Mabel—"I was afraid to. Mother is in the next room, and she would have heard me!"

CO-OPERATE WITH THE PRESS

When addressing a meeting of the retail merchants in Barrie a few days ago Mr. E. M. Trowern, secretary of the Dominion Association advised close co-operation with the local papers. In the course of his address he had some pertinent remarks in regard to the encroachments of the city departmental store. He said the towns of Ontario do not thrive and grow the way they should. The city seems to be swallowing all the population up. "Why is it the people send their money out of town," was a comment by Mr. Trowern. "The circulation you are losing right now is something enormous. You should co-operate more heartily with your local papers, who, understand, are doing a good work for you. You retail merchants pay 40 per cent of the taxes. Surely you should protect your own interests.

ELIMVILLE

Rev. Watson and family leave Thursday for the United States. We wish Mr. Watson success in his new field of labor.—A large number from outside points attended the Sunday anniversary services. The mass meeting in the afternoon was well attended. Dr. Quackenbush and Rev Powell of Exeter addressed the school, the doctor giving a very interesting talk to the children.—Mrs. Wm. Veal and daughter Minnie are visiting friends in London and Strathroy.—Mr. Elaris Snell of Toronto and Orville of Guelph are home under the parental roof to attend the wedding of their brother Milo to Miss Fleeda Baker of Exeter.—Mr. and Mrs. Richard Hunter of Exeter spent Sunday at the old home.—Miss Hall of Zion spent Sunday the guest of Annie Elford. — The Misses Squires of Whalen spent Sunday at their sister's, Mrs. John Herdman.—Farmers are starting haying this week, and it will not be long before the voice of the binder will be heard in the land.—The Misses Herbert of Lucan Sundayed with their sister, Mrs. Jas. Heywood.

WHALEN.

Mrs. Frank Millson of Mannington, West Virginia, left Monday for her home after a pleasant visit at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Millson, brother of her late husband. A number of our young people attended the celebration in London on Thursday, and some were rather late getting home. — The anniversary held here on Sunday and the strawberry festival on Tuesday were a decided success. The services of Sunday conducted by Rev. W. H. Butt were largely attended and proved interesting and profitable. The program on Tuesday was real good. The baseball was an interesting event, being keenly contested and resulted in a tie. The receipts totalled to about $125.—Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Ogden and Mr. and Mrs. John Hazelwood attended the anniversary services at Kirkton on Sunday.

Jones—Brooks Nuptials—A very pretty wedding took place at the residence of Mr. Philip Brooks, Whalen, on Wednesday, June 21st, when Miss Jennie L. Brooks was united in marriage to Mr. George Jones of Manitoba, by Rev. W. H. Butt of Centralia. Only relatives of the bride were present and the bridal couple were unattended. They were married on the verandah beneath an arch of green and bunting. The bride was dressed in grey Pekin DeSore, trimmed with all-over lace and carried a boquet of bridal roses. The presents were were numerous and valuable among which were bank Cheques from father and mother. The groom's present was a gold watch chain set with pearls. The groom is a wealthy farmer, who has been 24 years in Manitoba. The bridal couple after spending their honeymoon in Toronto and at Niagara Falls will leave Owen Sound in the 1st of July for their future home in the west. The best wishes of all who know the bride will be with her and her partner.

LUMLEY.

The remains of the late Guy Caldwell were interred in the cemetery here on Friday last.—Mr. and Mrs. T. Venner visited friends in Staffa on Sunday.—We are pleased to report improvement in Mr. Geo. Kerslake of Elimville, formerly of this vicinity.—Mr. and Mrs. G. Hobkirk visited friends near Hensall on Sunday.—Mr. and Mrs. T. Jackson of Listowel visited the latter's mother here for a few days the first of the week.—Mr. W. Slavin of Chiselhurst and his brother-in-law Mr Last of Kinloss Tp., were visitors here Sunday.—Mr. and Mrs. John Glenn visited relatives near Zurich on Sunday.—A quite a staff of men are working on the bridge here.

THAMES ROAD.

A very pretty wedding took place on Wednesday, June 28th at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Thos. Pasmore, when their daughter, Miss Stella, became the bride of Mr. Arthur Gardiner, son of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Gardiner, all of this township. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Powell of Exeter and Rev. Fletcher of Thames Road, in the presence of a large number of relatives and friends at 5.30 in the afternoon. The young couple were unattended. The ceremony over a sumptuous supper was served and the balance of the evening spent in social amusements. Mr. and Mrs. Gardiner will have the best wishes of a host of friends. They will reside at the old Gardiner homestead, North Thames Road.

Mrs. (Dr.) Orme and Mrs. Garnet Baker of London are camping at the Bend this week.

The entrance examinations were held in our school this week. Mr. Beaton of Zurich acted as examiner.

School closed to-day for the midsummer holidays. We are sorry to learn that Miss Goldthorpe, who has taught the senior room the past year, will not continue her teaching as she has decided to attend Normal this fall She has proved an excellent teacher and her decision will mean quite a loss to the section.

A number from here attended the wedding of Miss Fleda Baker to Mr. M. Snell in Exeter on Wednesday.

Charles Zwicker purchased a Ford Touring Car on Monday. This makes the fourth Ford in our town, and the sixth car.

Mrs. Nicholas and Mrs. Lingelback of Tavistock spent Tuesday in town visiting Mr. and Mrs. Daniel Oestreicher.

Mr. Sol. Schlueter of Pigeon, Mich., spent last Sunday in town the guest of Mr. Samuel Brown.

While edging some timber one day last week, Will Oestreicher gave his leg a severe cut with the axe and is now obliged to lay off work for a few weeks.

Mr. and Mrs. John Wind and grandchildren Doris and Fern Schroeder are spending a few weeks in Detroit visiting their children.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry Elliber, M.P.P. attended the funeral of the late Peter Douglas in Blake on Monday. Mr. Douglas was for many years a Director of of The Hay Township Farmer's Mut. Fire. Ins. Co. as well as being a member of the License Board of Commissioners.

Next Sunday, the first Quarterly services for the year will be held in the Evangelical Church. It will be the the initial appearance of the Rev. Litt, the newly appointed Presiding elder. Mr. Litt is well and favorably known having been resident pastor on two occasions. His many friends will be pleased to again have the opportunity to hear him preach.

Last Wednesday evening, quite a number from here took in the Strawberry Festival in Shipka.

Miss Clara Haist visited friends in London a few days last week.

Last Sunday was the special Children's Day Festival in the Evangelical Church. In the morning, the Rev. Burn preached a very appropriate sermon to the young people, taking as his sermon, the life of Samuel. In the evening an excellent program was rendered by the scholars of the Sunday school and the choir. The different exercises given by the juniors were exceptionally well rendered. The male chorus sang a number of fine selections. A very pleasing feature of the program was when the offering was taken up. Four of the juniors walked down the aisles carrying little baskets tastily decorated. The days proceedings was a treat all through, and this year's festival can be numbered as one of the most successful held in recent years.

Mr. Finkbeiner of Milverton spent a few days in town last week visiting Mr. and Mrs. Wind.

Wouldn't it be a good idea if our business men got to-gether and put up some money for a road sprinkling apparatus. Since the dry weather has set in and the dust so thick, life is very uncomfortable.

On Monday evening our base-ball team played the return game in Exeter. A number of fans accompanied the boys. The game throughout was very orderly and the good people of Exeter deserve credit for the gentlemanly way in which the evening was spent. There was only a fair crowd present and on account of the rain coming at the last innings the game had to come to an end. There is some dispute as to the score. Our boys claim a tie and the Exeter team claim one ahead. Tom Carling of the Exeter team pitched good ball throughout. King of the hometeam was working under a severe disadvantage having sprained his leg at the Bend the day before but in spite of this, he worked hard and struck out quite a number. The following is the result of the game from the Crediton view point.

DASHWOOD

E. M. BROKENSHIRE, Dashwood, Conveyancer. Deeds, Wills, Mortgages and all legal documents carefully and promptly prepared. Charges moderate. Issuer of Marriage Licenses.

Mr. Ezra Tieman is erecting a dwelling on Fried street on the lot he purchased from Mr. Chas. Guenther.—Miss Mary Otterbein of Berlin called on her father for a short time Monday.—Chester Gaiser and Milfred McIsaac having completed their course at Chatham Business College have returned home. Milfred has secured a position at Exeter in the Molsons Bank.—Entrance examinations are being conducted in the school this week.—Mr. Aaron Musser has had his dwelling painted which improves its appearance very much, and makes it a neat and comfortable home.—Mr. Thos. Klumpp is busy these days sawing wood for the farmers.—

On Wednesday, the 21st inst., the residence of Mr. and Mrs. C. Finkbeiner was the scene of a festive occasion, it being the marriage of their second daughter, Minnie E., to Mr. Percy Humble of Sarnia. Over 200 guests availed themselves of the opportunity of being present to witness the ceremony. The marriage vow was taken before Rev. J. H. Grenzebach in the presence of the assembled guests, under an arch of evergreens upon the lawn. The groom was supported by his brother, while the bride was attended by her sister, Miss Catharine The little ring-bearer looked a picture dressed in pink and white. The ceremony and congratulations over the guests repaired to the dining-room and partook of a repast such as Mrs. Finkbeiner well knows how to prepare. The bride and groom were taken for a short automobile tour after the suppen was over. Minnie was a general favorite as was evidenced by the large number of beautiful and costly presents she received from her friends. The happy couple left the next day for a short trip and will return to spend a few days at their respective homes, after which they will settle down to the sterner realities of life in the town of Sarnia. The bride will be much missed here as she was a general favorite with all, and has long since been a faithful member of the Evangelical church choir, and also of the Y. P. A. Mr. Humble can congratulate himself on securing such an estimable bride.

Obituary.—This week we record the death of a familiar figure of our village. We refer to the demise of John Voelker, which sad event occurred on Friday, June 23rd. John was well and favorably known in this community, having lived here almost all his life, and during that time had more or less dealing with the public. In years gone by he conducted a threshing business but of late years he has been engaged in the implement business. He was also a member of the Hay Township council for several years. In all his business transactions he was strictly honest and upright, and thus he gained the respect and esteem of all who knew him. The funeral on Sunday afternoon was largely attended, the spacious Evangelical church being crowded to the doors, and many could not gain admittance. In the absence of the pastor, who was attending camp meeting, the funeral was conducted by Rev. E. Burn of Crediton. His remains were laid to rest in the Goshen Line cemetery. Peace to his memory. The mourning friends have the sympathy of the entire community.

MOUNT CARMEL.

A very pretty wedding took place at the R. C. Church Tuesday, June 20th, when Miss Mary Huffman, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. M. Huffman, was united in matrimony with Alfonso Joseph Leyes, a prosperous baker of Hamilton. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Fr. Forster, P.P. The bride was most charmingly attired in a beautiful white satin dress, and wore a wreath and veil. She was assisted by her sister Christina as bridesmaid, who wore a pretty pale blue silk with hat to match. Mr Joseph McManus of Parkhill performed the duties of groomsman. Guest were present from Seaforth, Centralia, Berlin and Hamilton. CENTRALIA

Ladies Aid Concert July 1st at 8 p. m. in Centralia Methodist Church. First-class program. Come and hear the celebrated tenor singer, C. J. Pink of London, Miss Storry of Markham, Reader; and Miss Elliott, Soprano. Everybody welcome. Tickets 25c.

Mrs. E. Colwill and Mrs. John Colwill, sr., are both improving nicely we are glad to say.—Mrs. Jas. Neil, who has been in London Hospital undergoing an operation of a serious character, is home again, and though very weak is improving nicely, though slowly.—A large congregation was present Sunday evening to hear Rev. Mr. Butt's farewell discourse. He leaves for London with the best wishes of all after a very successful pastorate of 3 years, a few years intervening the two terms of 4 years each.

A surprising incident occurred at the close of the Sunday School on Sunday afternoon when Mrs. (Rev.) Butt, the Bible Class teacher for the past four years was presented with an address and a handsome rocker in recognition of her valuable services. Mrs. Butt was taken completely by surprise. The following is the address.—

To Mrs. Butt,—We, the members of the Centralia Methodist Sunday School, of which you have been an esteemed member and teacher during your past term of four years with us, have taken advantage of the present opportunity to express to you our hearty appreciation of the valuable services you have rendered us in our Christian work. As a teacher of no mean ability, and as a true follower of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, your pure example has in many ways helped to raise the standard of moral principles to a higher state amongst us. Your Christian teachings and influence have helped in the formation and development of a higher and better character, and we will ever hold dear the pleasant memories of those days which were made the brighter for your presence.

As you take your departure from this Sunday School to another field of labor you carry with you our best wishes and we will ever watch with interest your success in the glorious work of winning souls for the Saviour.

To remind you of the very enjoyable and helpful associations of the past which will not soon be forgotten, we present you with this chair, which we trust will be a comfort to you in your resting hours.

In closing we would express to you the hope that the Almighty may spare your life for many years of happiness and usefulness, and then when our work on earth is done may we all meet around God's throne in Heaven to live with Him for ever.

Signed on behalf of Centralia Sunday School, J. J. Colwill, Superintendent; J. H. Duplan, Secretary.

Centralia, June 25th, 1911.

At the regular monthly meeting of the Ladies' Aid Society the following address, accompanied with a beautiful and costly hand-bag was presented to Mrs. Butt,— Centralia, June 1st, 1911.

To Mrs. Butt,—

Dear Friend, Associate Member of the Centralia Ladies' Aid Society,—We your friends cannot allow the pleasant relationship so long existing between us to be severed without expressing our deep regard for you, and our sincere regret at the prospect of so soon having to say farewell.

We shall greatly miss your presence in our meetings, and long remember your attitude toward every good work. During the years that have gone you have won our confidence and esteem. We hope to have an interest in your sympathy and prayers.

We ask you to accept this small gift as a token of our appreciation of your worth and we wish you and yours long life and prosperity, annd the continued favor of Heaven.

Signed by Ladies' Aid Society, Centralia, Mrs. T. W. Neil president; Mrs. W. J. Parsons, secretary.

NEWS OF THE WEEK

After the morning service in the Methodist church, Oakwood, Sunday, a fatal accident occurred immediately east of the village. Mr. William Coad's horse the back of a rig driven by James Web became frightened and sprang into the back of a rig driven by Jas. Webster. Mrs. Coad was instantly killed and Mr. Webster suffered severe internal injuries, and his condition is critical.

Nervous Condition

RESULTS FROM KIDNEY TROUBLE

Sick kidneys make you feel sick in a number of ways and it is now known that a nervous condition often results from kidney trouble. When the kidneys are sick the whole nervous system becomes irritated causing headache, dizzy spells, fits of "blues," neuralgic attacks, rheumatic pains, weak eyesight, dull tired days, and a constant inclination to worry over trifles.

Schroeder of near Dashwood has purchased the farm of Wm. Schatz, 14th con., who will move to Dashwood to reside.—The death took place on June 20th of Catherine Thiel, widow of the late George Thiel, at the age of 78 years. She is survived by a number of grown-up sons and daughters.—Mr. and Mrs. Louis Foster mourn the death of their two and half year old daughter, Edna, which sad event took place June 18th.—St. Peter's church, Drysdale, was the scene of a pretty wedding when on June 20th, Miss Emelia, daughter of John Laporte, was married to Irving Gumbleton of Detroit. Rev. D. L. Brisson, an uncle of the bride, officiated at the marriage, and Revs. Frs. Stroeder and Landreville assisted him. Miss Flore Laporte acted as bridesmaid for her sister, and the best man was Louis Beneteau of River Canard. After a trip to Montreal they will reside in Detroit.

PARKHILL.—The death occurred Monday here of William Stanley, J. P., after two months' illness, at the age of 77 years. The deceased was for 22 years the senior member of the firm of Stanley, Dwight & Co., of Lucan, millers. He moved to Parkhill in the year 1894. He was a Justice of the Peace for a number of years and as such issued the warrants for the arrest of the accused in the Dornelly tragedy

CLINTON—On June 20th, the home of Mr and Mrs. Wm. Simpson, was the scene of a pretty wedding, when Anna May Robinson, eldest daughter of Mrs. Simpson, was united in marriage to Mr. Norman Scott Rankin of Calgary Alta.

SEAFORTH—A very sudden death occurred here on Tuesday morning in the person of Mrs. James Reid, the result of a stroke sustained that morning. Mrs Reid, whose maiden name was Mary Davis, was in her 74th year, and is survived by her husband and family of 3 sons and four daughters.

CLINTON—By the death of Mrs. Jos. Townsend, which occurred June 23rd we lost one of our most valued ladies. Although not well for some time she was able to be around until two days before when she underwent an operation.

LUCAN.—Death has not only saddened the home of Dr. W. T. and Mrs. Havergal, but also the whole town, in the sad death of their daughter, Mary, here on Monday, June 19th, at the age of 10 years, 11 months and 4 days. She underwent an operation recently and it was quite successful, but complications followed and her lungs became affected and it proved too great a strain for her already weakened constitution. She was of cheerful disposition, and a general favorite with all. The funeral took place Wednesday to St. James' cemetery.

Recipes and Other Valuable Information of Particular Interest to Women Folks.

SCOTCH SCONES.

Griddle Scones.—One pound of flour, a quarter teaspoonful of salt, one tablespoonful of butter, one teaspoonful of baking soda, one teaspoonful of cream of tartar, one teaspoonful of sugar. Rub the butter finely into the flour; add the other ingredients, then make quickly into a soft dough with buttermilk. Divide into four pieces, make each piece smooth and round; roll out, divide each piece into four small scones. They ought not to be handled much or they will be tough.

Oven Scones.—Rub two ounces of butter finely into one pound of flour, add one ounce of sugar, a quarter of a teaspoonful of salt, one teaspoonful of carbonate of soda, two teaspoontuls of cream of tartar. Beat up one egg, put half of it into a cup, then with one-half of it and some sweet milk make the other ingredients into a soft dough. Knead it a little on a floured baking board, divide it into five pieces, make them smooth and roll out, not too thinly; cut them into four small cakes. Lay them on a greased baking tin, brush them over with the egg, and bake them in a hot oven for ten minutes. Two ounces of sultana raisins may be added. The dough should always be lightly handled.

Potato Scones (No. 1).—These may be made with potatoes left over a dinner, but they are much nicer prepared with potatoes freshly boiled. Put potatoes, mashed, on a baking board, and add as much flour as potatoes will take in. Then form in little rounds, pat lightly out with the hand; add a little flour; bake on a griddle. When cool roll up in a towel till wanted. These will not keep more than a day, and can be used at once.

Potato Scones (No. 2).—Six or eight potatoes, flour, salt, and a little sugar. Peel and boil the potatoes, with salt in the water; steam and mash. Take out a large tablespoonful on the bake-board, and add to it half a teaspoonful of sugar and one tablespoonful of flour. Knead this until it feels firm; it will take up nearly all the flour; then sprinkle some flour on the board, roll it round and quite thin. Cut in quarters; prick all over with a fork, and put the scones on a hot griddle for about five minutes. Serve hot.

Potato Scones (No. 3).—One pound of cold potatoes, one ounce of butter, one or two tablespoonfuls of milk, about quarter pound of flour and a pinch of salt. Peel and mash the potatoes, warm the milk and melt the butter in it. Mix the potatoes, milk and butter, add the salt, and work in as much flour as the paste will take up. Roll it out very thinly; cut in rounds. Place them on a hot floured griddle, and cook for about three finutes on each side.

COOL DRINKS.

Egg Milk Shake.—Put two tablespoonfuls of finely crushed ice in a glass; add two and one-half tablespoonfuls of syrup, one egg, and two-thirds of a cupful of milk. Shake thoroughly and strain into a glass for serving. A little nutmeg or cinnamon may be added if desired.

Cocoa Eggnog.—Beat the white of one egg until stiff and add gradually while beating constantly one teaspoonful of sugar, one teaspoonful of breakfast cocoa, and a few grains of salt. Add to one-half the mixture while beating constantly three-fourths of a cupful of cold milk. Turn into a glass and pile remainder of liquid on top.

Pineapple Lemonade.—Make a syrup by boiling two cupfuls of water and one cupful of sugar ten minutes. Add the juice of three lemons and one can of grated pineapple. Cool, strain, and add one quart or four cupfuls of ice water.

Canton Punch.—Chop one-half pound of Canton ginger and add one cupful of sugar and four of cold water. Let stand thirty minutes. Bring gradually to the boiling point and let boil fifteen minutes. Add one-half cupful of lemon juice and one-half cupful of orange juice. Cool, strain, and dilute with crushed ice.

DESSERT HELPS.

Sour Cream Icing.—Icing of sour cream and chopped almonds. Whites of two eggs, one cup sugar, one-half pint sour cream, one-quarter pound shelled almonds, one teaspoon gelatin. Cover sugar with water and boil until it "ropes," then pour it slowly over the well beaten whites of two eggs, beating constantly. Stir in the sour cream, which should be just clabbered, not old. Add a heaping teaspoon of gelatin dissolved in hot water and set away to thicken. When cool mix in the almonds, blanched and run through the chopper. A delicate filling for angel food.

Hard Sauce Hard Sauce. rarar

Hard Sauce.—One cupful of powdered sugar, one-third cupful of butter, one-quarter cupful of cream, two tablespoonfuls of boiling water. Work butter and sugar together. Add boiling water and beat. Then add cream and beat until foamy. Add teaspoonful of lemon extract.

Orange Pudding.—Make a custard (cooking it in a double boiler) of one pint of milk, one tablespoonful of cornstarch, yolks of three eggs, three-fourths of a cupful of sugar; boil it until it thickens. Then remove and set aside until it cools. Have the whites of three eggs in the meantime where they can cool. While the custard is cooling break three or four oranges into shreds, removing all seeds and pulp and sugar well. Whip up the egg white until stiff and fold gently into the custard; then lay on top the shredded orange, after removing some of the juice, and serve with or without whipped cream.

TESTED RECIPES.

Jumble.—Measure one quart each of cherries (after removing stones), currants, gooseberries, and raspberries, after washing and stemming. Place in preserving kettle with a cupful of water and when scalded add five pounds of sugar and cook slowly, stirring frequently, until of the consistency of jam; then seal in jars. This combination is as good as it is unusual.

Spiced Gooseberries.—Place in a preserving kettle five pounds of gooseberries, capped and stemmed, one pint of vinegar, four pounds of sugar, and two tablespoonfuls each of ground cinnamon and cloves. Cook all slowly for about two hours, stirring it often during the last half hour, as it scorches easily. Seal in jars. This keeps indefinitely and is excellent with either cold meats or to serve with steaks.

LITTLE HELPS.

Try mixing lemon and vanilla extracts in equal quantities. It will give a new flavor to the cake which is really more delicious than using either extract alone.

Scaling Fish.—The busy housewife will have no further dread of preparing fish for any size family if she will try dipping the fish in scalding water—the scales are then removed with no difficulty and much time saved.

Washing Lace Curtains.—To do up lace curtains nicely without stretchers, wash and starch without much rubbing or wringing and hang lengthways on the line. Place opposite scallops together and pull the whole curtain straight. The starch will stick the opposite halves together, no pins being needed. The curtains will be straight and even and no ironing will be necessary—only a pressing of the scallops.

Mock Candied Cherries.—It is sometimes impossible to procure candied cherries for festival occasions, but if large cranberries are carefully prepared as follows you may have a dish of dainties just as good as the most expensive of candied cherries. Wash and pick over carefully one quart of fine cranberries. Place in a saucepan one cupful of water and three cupfuls of sugar and let this boil for about five minutes. Place the cranberries in a large flat dish and pour the boiled water and sugar over them. Let them stand for about eight hours. Then place berries and syrup on stove and boil until quite transparent but not until berries break. Drain off syrup. Place berries on large platter on which brown paper has been spread. Sprinkle with granulated sugar. When thoroughly dry pack in wooden box, if possible, in layers with paraffin paper between.

Flannels.—To a two gallon pail of cold water take one-third bar of any good soap, excepting naptha, dissolved, and one heaping tablespoonful of borax, also dissolved. Stir cold water, dissolved soap, and borax well together, and put in flannels. Let stand two or three days and then rub soiled parts lightly with the hands, rinse twice in cold water, wring dry, shake and dry quickly, without freezing. Flannels washed in this way do not shrink, remain soft, and wear longer. For a family of six it takes about three pails of water. Blankets washed in this way never mat, but remain fluffy and soft until worn out. Hang blankets outside to dry when there is a little wind and it does not hurt them to remain in the suds a day or two longer waiting for a good drying day. Crocheted or knit shawls, jackets, or caps washed this way and dried on a sheet, not hung up, in any warm place, are like new again.

From one and a half millions in 1901, the number of horses in Canada has risen to nearly two and a quarter millions at the close of 1910.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL STUDY

INTERNATIONAL LESSON, JULY 2.

Lesson I.—Isaiah's Prophecy Concerning Sennacherib, Isa. 37. 14-38. Golden Text, Psa. 46. 1.

Verses 14-20—The prayer of Hezekiah in the temple.

14. Spread it before Jehovah — The act was symbolical, intending to bring to Jehovah's attention the haughtiness of the Assyrians. The letter contained the threat of Sennacherib, to the effect that no nation had yet resisted him successfully. This warning was reinforced by the events which had brought the Assyrian forces through a series of conquests to Jerusalem. It was a time of severe testing. But the King of Judah was no doubt fortified by the assurances of Isaiah.

15, 16. Hezekiah prayed—His invocation of Jehovah consists, first, of an address to him as the God of Israel, the reference to the cherubim signifying no doubt the two figures which were over the ark in the Jewish temple. But Jehovah is also the God of all the kingdoms of the earth, a doctrine of the solitary divinity of Jehovah derived from the fact that he alone has created heaven and earth.

17. Sennacherib, who hath sent to defy the living God—See Isaiah 36. 18-20.

19, 20. The work of men's hands . . . Thou art Jehovah, even thou only—The two ideas stand in contrast. The worthlessness and nothingness of idolatry are often pointed out by such contemptuous references to wood and stone (see Deut. 4. 28; 28. 36; 29. 17; Isa. 2. 20; 17. 8; 31. 7). In this extremity of the nation Jehovah is to show that in him alone abides the true power of actual Godhead.

21-35—The prayer answered in the form of a message from the great prophet. This word of the Lord has two distinct sections: (1) verses 22-29, which is essentially a poem taunting Sennacherib because of his pride and declaring his doom. Verses 30-32 are a sort of postscript, addressed to Hezekiah. (2) The rest of the message foretells the certain deliverance of Jerusalem.

22. The virgin . . . hath laughed thee to scorn—Isaiah anticipates the retreat of the Assyrian king, and thinks of Jerusalem as intact. In the Old Testament, shaking the head means to act derisively.

23. Whom hast thou defied?—Sennacherib is blind to the sort of being he has been trifling with, none other than the Holy One. He has exalted his voice in arrogance, and lifted his eyes in pride, not against Israel, but against the living God.

24-25—Through his messengers the Assyrian has made vain boasts, and these are the blasphemy against Jehovah. With swelling pride and extravagant hyperbole he brags of his triumphs over all barriers. As a matter of fact no Assyrian army had set foot in Egypt, and Sennecherib was not to see his dream realized.

26. I have done it—Unconsciously the aggressive Assyrians had been only the instruments in the hand of Jehovah. It was he who, through them, had been subjecting the fortified cities and their inhabitants to such humiliations as those indicated in the blasting of the unripened grain (27).

28. I know . . . thy going out—Compare Psa. 139. 2. All the activities of the Assyrians are under the closest scrutiny of Jehovah. Their raging and arrogancy (29) are not to go by unnoticed. With hook and bridle Jehovah is to drag them back like wild beasts.

30-32. The sign—By a series of natural occurrences, Judah is to be made certain of her deliverance from her trials, according to the prophecy of Isaiah and the eternal purpose of Jehovah. This year (701) the people must eat what groweth of itself, the scanty crop which springs up from the shaken grain of the previous harvest. Then, with the devastation and waste of war on all sides, they must still another year suffer lack, subsiding upon the bare products which spring from the roots of the corn. But after these two years of suspended operations in the fields they will be able to plant and reap freely, for their enemies will be gone.

33. Therefore—Some think that this word definitely unites this section with the "whereas" in verse 21. At any rate, verses 33-35 contain in emphatic form the substance of the promise of deliverance from the threatened invasion.

35. For mine own sake—This is one reason for preserving Jerusalem, that Jehovah may justify his way with Israel his people ,and so preserve his own glory before the nations. In addition, he is willing to do it in order to preserve the glory of the throne of David, his servant.

36. The angel of Jehovah went forth—Sennacherib, while besieging Libnah, one of the unlocated, defensed cities of Judah, got news of the advance of the forces of Tirhakah, the Egyptian, whom he set out immediately to confront. His precipitous retreat is now a part of history. The Assyrian army reached the outskirts of Egypt, at a place called Pelusium. There the awful calamity befell him as here described, 185,000 soldiers meeting their fate. The instrument of this disaster was undoubtedly a pestilence, inasmuch as the neighborhood of Pelusium was noted in antiquity for its power of plague. From Egyptian sources, through Herodotus, we find that by night a multitude of field mice ate up the quivers, bowstrings and shield-straps of the Assyrians. This is probably a picturesque way of describing the pestilence, the mouse being a symbol of sudden destruction.

38. Smote him with the sword — See above. This was twenty years after his leaving Palestine. In that time he conducted several successful campaigns, but never again attempted to invade Palestine. He had learned his lesson, that the Lord is God alone.

HOW TO BUILD A LOG CABIN

DIRECTIONS FOR THOSE WHO WISH TO BUILD.

One House So Constructed Cost Six Hundred and Thirty-Seven Dollars.

The most delightful type of house for a summer home in the woods is the one built of logs, and if a location is chosen where good timber is plentiful, it need not be an expensive kind of dwelling to put up. In selecting a site, the exposure, drainage and the best possible view must be considered.

The logs for building require almost no treatment, though the bark must be removed from some wood before it can be used.

UNSKILLED LABOR USED.

Three unskilled men built a house under the direction of one experienced carpenter, who also understood the construction of a chimney and knew how to handle the plumbing. When the logs were peeled the ends of each were notched so that they would fit together evenly. Then they were laid one on top of the other to form the square body of the house, and the space between them was filled in with plaster. Of course, the simplest and most inexpensive form for a log house is the square box type, the partitions of which are built of milled lumber, but a much more artistic interior can be had if the partitions are of logs, also. In order to get this effect, the centre room of this house was built first and the other rooms pieced on, the logs being notched to fit and make a closely matched joining. The doors and windows were cut out after the walls were up to the desired height.

MAKING THE FURNITURE.

The only milled lumber used in the construction of this house was the flooring, shingles, door and window sashes, joists and mud sills. All of this material was in the rough, except the flooring. The door and window casings were made from small split logs, and the porch steps from large ones. The chimney is brick.

Most of the furniture in this home was made of logs by the carpenter after designs originated by the owner. The lighting fixtures are particularly delightful, being fashioned of pine branches and cones and supported on heavy iron chains. The fireplace was built of rough stone from a neighboring quarry, topped with a huge log. The buffet on the opposite side of the living room was a rustic affair, also topped by a monster log, which received no other treatment than to have a slab removed to present a flat surface for a shelf.

AS TO FURNISHING.

There are great possibilities in the furnishing of such a house, and the fact that the furniture need cost little or nothing will give unbounded scope to the work that may be attempted. Chairs, settees, tables, stools, a group of shelves, a simple dressing table, and even a frame for a bed might be attempted by an amateur carpenter with good success. Pine cones for candle holders, rustic jardinieres filled with woods ferns make attractive additions to a living room of this nature. Rough home-woven rugs on the floor, a Navajo blanket for a couch cover, simple white and Swiss curtains at the windows make the room very attractive.

It is unusual to find a well-equipped bath-room and kitchen sink in an inexpensive log house in the woods, and the expense would be greatly reduced by omitting the plumbing. The total cost of the house was six hundred and thirty-seven dollars. Milled lumber was the heaviest item, being two hundred and twenty-five dollars; labor was next, being two hundred dollars; plumbing was one hundred and fifty dollars; masonry, forty dollars; plaster, fifteen dollars; and hardware seven dollars.

HOME OF THE GREAT GUNS

MANY OTHER THINGS MADE AT THE KRUPP WORKS.

Materials for Railroads, Engines, Tools and Mills are Turned Out.

Essen, the home of the great Krupp gun works, is one of the most conspicuous examples of a one man town. It is practically just a hundred years old. In 1811 when the first crucible furnace for casting steel was set up by a poor hard-working young man, Frederick Krupp, the total population of Essen was under 4,000.

In 1891 it was 183,500, of which the Krupp contingent numbered about 84,000. This, and a great deal more, says Cassiers Magazine, is essentially the work of one man, and it is unparalleled in the history of industry. The corporation now owns iron and coal mines and over 4,000 houses.

The products from Krupp's are varied. Compare this with the highly specialized condition of the industries in this country. The Krupp's fame is chiefly associated with war materials, but all kinds of finished or unfinished materials for railroads, engines, tools, mills and other industrial appliances are turned out in large and small quantities.

The shops have been built at different dates and vary accordingly, but as a whole they possess in a marked degree that order and cleanliness which are the most distinguished features of German factories. This extends to the foundaries, where one usually finds dust,

SMOKE AND CONFUSION.

A specialty here is the casting of very large ingots of crucible steel. It is a remarkable sight and an object lesson in German methods. Ingots of eighty-five tons are cast, a feat which is not attempted in any other place. The steel is melted in small crucibles, which are carried by hand and therefore contain no more than two men can lift.

Scores of such crucibles go to the making of an ingot of considerable size and they occupy many furnaces, which are ranged on both sides of the foundry, with the ingot mould in the centre. At the signal the furnaces are opened and the crucibles drawn out and seized by a small army of workmen, who run them down to the mould and pour them in.

It is clear that to do the thing on a large scale perfect method in preparation and order in execution are necessary. The manoeuvre is carried out with military precision and promptness. In a moment the place is aglow with the white heat of the furnace, the figures run from all sides and come staggering down in pairs with the pots full of liquid steel. It is a scene of intense activity, but without confusion.

One after another the glowing pots are emptied; the molten lead runs like thick soup and plumps into the mould

WITH A BRIGHT SPUTTER.

In a few minutes it is all over; the furnaces close again, the used crucibles are thrown aside and already the cast mass begins to congeal and change color, while presently it dulls to yellow and the tint deepens as you watch. The steel so made is the purest known, close grained, homogeneous and uniform throughout.

This is not done in the United States, where the impatience of hand processes, which is characteristic and had led to such remarkable development of automatic machinery, has its weak side. The most recently built workshops at Krupp's are quite up-to-date in their construction—light, spacious and airy; but they are no way superior to the ones in Sheffield, England.

The most striking feature of German iron and steel factories is their clean, orderly and well kept condition. These qualities seem to be universal, and they extend to the dirtiest and most untidy departments. The German foundries were a revelation to me. They are as clean and well kept and almost as light as any other shop.

ONE CROWNLESS KING.

Of the long line of kings which have ruled our land since the days of William the Conqueror, nearly 900 years ago, there has only been one uncrowned king. King Edward V., the boy-king, who met an untoward fate in the Tower of London in 1483, is the only monarch who reigned without receiving the Church's blessing or the formal homage of his subjects. Some people include Lady Jane Grey among our monarchs. If this doubtful claim is allowed, our only uncrowned queen ranks with Edward V., and deprives him of one distinction.

Four man eating lions were recently captured at Gwalior in India by means of fly-papers, which, getting on the faces of the animals, made them an easy prey.

DEMAND FOR BRITISHERS

SOLDIERS WHO FOUGHT UNDER FOREIGN FLAGS.

Admirals and Generals Who Enjoyed Great Reputations in Their Adopted Country.

The republics of South and Central America have always found foreign leaders since the days when the great Admiral Cochrane enabled them to break loose from the yoke of spain.

At the present time the little fleet of Ecuador is under the command of a native of co. Waterford named Power. Admiral Power, who also holds a commission in the army of tht same republic, is a fine looking man, with kindly brown eyes, and a firm, but quiet manner, and his rich Irish brogue has survived thirty years of exile. He is full of pluck, and not long ago, after suppressing a fierce outbreak of revolution, coolly drove through Quito in an open carriage, quite unattended. It was a brave deed, for every window might have sheltered an assassin.

Again, Columbia's best naval officer is Captain Harry Marmaduke, who is a tall and sinewy native of the United States. He has reorganized the Columbian navy, and is so popular that he had more recruits in his first six weeks than he could find room for in his ship.

ADMIRAL KILLICK,

who commanded the navy of the black republic of Hayti, was a Scotsman. A fine fighter, he died, facing terrible odds, under the fire of the German cruiser Panther.

Scotsmen have always been to the fore in the field of war. The most famous of modern Scottish fighters who have taken service for other countries is, of course, Kaid Maclean, who for many years was supreme in Morocco.

Another natie of North Britain who enjoyed a great reputation in a foreign country was General Macdonald, who died four years ago at Warsaw. Born in 1853, General Macdonald joined the Russian army at the age of twenty, and rose rapidly. He was employed by the Government in the construction of fortresses in the Far East, and saw fighting in Turkestan. The Russian "Novoe Vremya" says that his Scottish birth explains his "tireless energy, enterprise, and love of work."

Mulai el Hafid, the present Sultan of Morocco, owed much of the success which he formerly enjoyed to Kaid Belton, who began his career in the South African War.

A YOUNG ENGLISH OFFICER,

In 1907, when a captain in the Border Regiment, he retired and went to Morocco, where he offered his services to the new Sultan. The latter asked a good many questions but neither accepted nor refused the offer. A month passed idly. Then one day Captain Belton received an imperative summons to proceed to a certain spot, where he found a force of four thousand men, whom he was requested to manoeuvre in review order.

Seeing that Belton knew nothing of the language, it was no easy matter to handle these wild legions; but the Englishman performed his task so well that he was at once made Commander-in-Chief.

China has always had numbers of foreigners in her employ. In July last the Chinese Government offered Lord Kitchener any terms he liked to name to go to China, and take over the formation of the entire army system of the Empire. Commander-in-Chief of the army of the most populous Empire on earth is not a position to be sneezed at, but Lord Kitchener is too important an asset of the British Empire to be spared.

REAR-ADMIRAL GAMBLE.

Turkey, however, has an Englishman at the head of her new navy. Rear-Admiral Gamble, M.V.O., is getting three thousand a year from Turkey to supervise the reconstruction of her effete navy. The new Turkish navy is to cost £17,860,000, and will be manned by 30,000 officers and men.

At the same time that Admiral Gamble was lent to Turkey, another English naval officer took service with another foreign power. Lieut. J. M. Bugge (retired) has given his services to the little black republic of Nigeria. At present Nigeria's navy consists of one steam yacht, armed with six little guns and a searchlight, but no doubt it will soon increase both in ships and men.—London Answers.

In 1904 there were only two motor-cabs in London. By 1909 they had grown to 3,956, and at the end of March this year the number was 7,165.

Dated 1492, the original marriage agreement between Beatrice, Queen of Hungary, and the King of Poland has just been sold in London for $77.

Built in the year 700, the mansion belonging to Count Matuschke at Winfel-on-the-Rhine, Germany, is held to be the oldest inhabited house in existence.

FORTUNE FAVORS THE BRAVE;

OR, A LOOK INTO THE PAST

CHAPTER XXI.

So the days had gone by in one key, only varied for Nancy by two things—first, the dismissal of Marie, which was an inexpressible comfort; and, secondly, by the news of Sir Humphrey's accident and illness, which was bitter pain.

If she could have crept out at night, she would have walked over the rough, wet country that stretched between the manor and Ripstone, barefooted, to offer her love, help, sympathy to Dorothy; but escape for an hour was impossible, and so she had to live day after day burdened with suspense and self-reproach added to all her other troubles.

She had accepted all the insults and miseries which Crawshaw put upon her as part of the sacrifice demanded for her uncle's safety; and knowing this, she made no complaint, only every now and then, when goaded and tired beyond all endurance, the wild thought came to her to resist it all—to appeal to this man's generosity, his heart, if he possessed one, and entreat him to be more merciful, to lighten her dark path if ever so little. But she never did this.

She knew too well the result of such pleading. She knew upon what terms alone Crawshaw would consent to alter his present conduct, which arose as much from infuriated vanity as any other reason; and sooner than agree to those terms, she resolved to suffer a hundredfold more than she was called upon to bear now. Even had he been a less pitiful, contemptible creature, she would never have permitted herself to listen to his love. Love! It was such utter degradation to associate the word with such a man as Crawshaw! Would love have tormented and ruined her happiness as his cruel passion and revenge had done! Love is self-sacrificing, self-forgetting, self-abnegating. What claim could Thomas Crawshaw lay to any one of these?

She had been coerced into a marriage, she had accepted the sacrifice with all its attendant miseries. She had—so she imagined, poor child!—saved her uncle from shame, perhaps from death—there her task ended. Sooner than let this man touch her lips—the lips which Derry had kissed—she would have fallen dead at his feet.

And Crawshaw knew this was no melodramatic, empty threat. There was an intensity, a quiet passion about the girl as she uttered it which told him she meant every word. When he had realized this he had vowed to himself that, come what may, he would yet break her stubborn will, her disgust and hatred of himself, and bring her humbled at last to the dust at his feet.

Only one gleam of pleasure came to Nancy out of all this grim darkness—the thought that her uncle was safe and happy. Yes, actually happy at last, for Dr. Grantley had written, telling her that he had heard from Henry Chaplin, giving news of himself and his wife. The latter was returning to England at once, but Nancy's uncle had made friends with some scientific and literary men, who found his brain and information so useful that they had offered him the post of secretary to some society in Melbourne, which not only gave him a salary, but sent him into the seventh heaven of delight.

This letter had reached Nancy the very morning on which Derrick Darnley had started off for his walk with the dogs; and having escaped Fenton's lynx eyes, she made her way to a quiet nook in the lonely woods to read it over and indulge in aimost the first faint gladness she had felt for months.

"Poor uncle—dear uncle!" she said to herself, with tears in her blue eyes. "I have saved him and made him happy. Does he ever think of me, I wonder? Does he ever realize what I have done? But I won't let myself doubt him. He loves me—he will never forget me!"

But all the same the poor girl's aching heart longed for some warm word of love and greeting from the man who had indirectly been the cause of all her trouble. She had folded the letter up and put it away in her pocket, and then had sat with bent head thinking, wondering in the old, sad fashion till the dogs had rushed upon her, and with a great start and a mingled sense of fear, ecstatic delight and deep sorrow, she had raised her eyes and seen Derrick standing before her.

What followed has been told.

* * * * *

When, at last, she recovered strength enough to conquer her agitation and emotion, Nancy drew her cloak about her shoulders, and turned slowly back along the unkept paths and weed-grown walks to the Manor House.

She had dried her tears, but her face was very white, even her lips were robbed of their pretty red hue, and her eyes were circled with deep ,black marks.

As she progressed slowly toward the large, ugly door, she came up on Fenton, who was evidently waiting and watching her.

At first this man's presence had been almost more than Nancy could endure, and she had been vaguely amazed at the familiarity which existed between her husband and his valet; then, for a time, she had grown accustomed to the insolent, sallow face which haunted her wherever she went; of late, however, since her mail had been dismissed, Nancy's horror of this man had increased; he seemed like some evil spirit skulking about the place, and at night, when she was safely locked in her room, she had caught faint sounds of riotous singing and laughing, which told her all too plainly that the master of the Manor House was enjoying himself as he liked best, and that his confidential servant was assisting him in the laudable task of getting loathsomely intoxicated in as short a time as possible.

Nancy never, by any chance, took any notice of Fenton; but she knew that the man hated her for what had occurred in the past, and that he delighted in offering her every conceivable insult and indignity now that he had the chance.

As she passed him silently and entered the house, the man followed her, and with much fuss and noise closed the great door after them, and having shot the bolts and turned the key, took out the latter and put it in his pocket, whistling ostentatiously the while. If he had expected the girl to make any remark he was disappointed.

Nancy went straight upstairs with her usual firm step, but her heart had suddenly sunk. What could this mean but that the very small amount of liberty which she had hitherto been allowed was to be taken from her? Was there more horror and misery to come?

CHAPTER XXII.

Sir Humphrey Leicester improved wonderfully after his nephew's arrival at the Hall.

"And it is all through you, Derry," Dorothy declared, warmly, as each day passed and left the patient a degree nearer recovery. "No, don't shake your head; I know it is!"

And certainly it seemed as if Miss Leicester's words were true, for the sick man was never so happy as when Darnley was sitting at his beside with Dorothy presiding at her old post.

Dorothy, too, apparently, derived not only pleasure but health from her cousin's presence; her cheeks lost their wan look, her golden curls were no longer dishevelled, her pretty, dainty figure was fresh and trim, and matched her lovely face; indeed, every one in the house declared Miss Dorothy to be her old self, and one and all united with the girl in delighting in Mr. Darnley's appearance; that is, all except Aunt Priscilla, Countess of Merefield. To her Derry was nothing more nor less than an obstructionist.

Why should he be here and Merefield be away? It was altogether wrong!

So opined Merefield's mother to herself, and as Mr. Darnley had an unpleasant habit of diving beneath Lady Merefield's evangelical surface and exposing the very undeniable worldliness that existed there, she may be forgiven for not altogether loving him.

She had not only just recovered from her annoyance over the question of Nancy Hamilton and Sir Humphrey's most quixotic dealings with the girl, when another trouble came in the dogged determination of her son to depart for a lengthened sojourn in foreign parts, and on the top of that and the real anxiety to do Lady Merefield justice she had some affection for her half-brother—about Sir Humphrey came this visit of Derrick Darnley, while her son was miles away and not able to make any stand against this most dangerous young man.

It certainly was enough to try any mother, and it must be admitted that if Lady Merefield had had her way she would have immediately dismissed Mr. Darnley, and brought Merefield back to the Hall without his leave or by his leave.

However, as this could not be managed, the next best thing was to circumvent Mr. Darnley in his supposed matrimonial projects whenever she with decency could do so.

Lady Merefield's manoeuvres were all lost on the young man; he had too muct painful matter for thought to permit himself to notice such a trivial matter, but Dorothy was not so blind.

"Aunt Priscilla might be my governess or my nurse," she declared, petulantly, one cold, blustering morning, as, wrapped up in her fur cloak, and with a cap set jauntily on her golden hair, she went down the terrace, a pretty picture if Darnley had had eyes to see it, to join him for an hour's brisk walk in the grounds.

Derrick Darnley, who had been standing with his hands in his pockets, staring wistfully across to where the Manor House stood and sheltered Nancy, woke from his thoughts with a start; the memory of those deep-blue eyes and that wan face was too keen to be wiped out by Dorothy's fair loveliness.

"What is up now, Dolly?" he asked, half confusedly.

"She actually wanted to come out with me for a walk to see that I did not fall down or catch cold, or some such nonsense. I declare I believe Aunt Priscilla thinks me a baby incapable of taking care of myself."

Darnley smiled faintly. He knew exactly the true meaning of all this solicitude on Lady Merefield's part.

"Perhaps she would not object so much to your taking a walk alone," he said. "It is a certain individual named Darnley whom she regards as being so undesirable a companion."

Dorothy gave him a sharp glance from her beautiful eyes.

"Aunt Priscilla is a silly old thing!" she said, irreverently.

"No, she is only a mother."

They were pacing down the avenue away from the Hall as Darnley said this.

Dorothy Leicester colored faintly, but made no answer, and her cousin, having first asked her permission, took out a cigarette and lit it.

"Aunt Priscilla is possessed of one desire," he observed, as he flung away the match. "She wants to get me away from the Hall again."

Dorothy's cheeks flushed angrily.

"As she is not mistress here," she said, rearing her small head proudly, "her wishes are of very little concern."

"Possibly."

They walked on in silence for a few minutes. The man's thoughts had gone to their only task now dwelling on Nancy—what she was doing, how it was faring with her, and if she had forgiven him his harsh words when they had parted, nearly ten days ago?

Ten days!—it was more like ten long years!—and not once during that time had he even heard her name breathed by any living soul!

At night, when all was still and quiet, he had stolen down into the damp, cold air, and paced to and fro, thinking of the girl whom he knew now to be his own love—his very own—and yet whom he must not even see or approach, for fear of dishonor and evil falling upon her.

His heart was racked, too, by doubt and fear. He tormented himself by imagining what sort of life the poor child led in that desolate, dismal place—alone, without friend and relation—alone with her husband, and exposed to the insults of his servants.

Her husband! The very word sent a cold shiver through his veins—a shiver of mental agony.

Had Dorothy been less engrossed with her own feelings, she must have noticed the great change that had come upon her cousin, have wondered at his grimly-set face, and marvelled sadly over his taciturn manner, so different from his former brightness and pleasantness. But Dorothy was too happy in the consciousness that he was near her to remark all this, or to imagine for an instant that he had some sorrow so great as almost to crush him to the ground.

For Derrick Darnley was suffering far more now since he had met Nancy again, and discovered that he had wronged her by his harsh thoughts, than he had ever done in the very first moment of his trouble. He was haunted by her sacred, miserable face. He feared and dreaded he hardly knew what. At times the longing to rush over to the manor and bear her away from all her horrible surroundings, became almost unbearable. It was by the greatest effort that he subdued this, and brought himself to realize the fact that he could and must do nothing—absolutely nothing—for this girl, who was more to him than life itself.

"EARTH RECEDES."

(The last words of the late D. L. Moody.)

I know that my Redeemer lives
And soon will unto me appear:
To me the victory He gives;
His perfect love casts out all fear.
My soul to heights of bliss He leads
Where I shall dwell forevermore;
For now from me the earth recedes,
And I behold heaven's open door."

Most gladly I in Him believe
Who did for all my sin atone:
To Him in confidence I cleave;
I stand complete in Him alone.
All that my waiting spirit needs
He gives from love's unbounded store;
And while from me the "earth recedes,
My Lord presents the open door."

For all the measure of success
Which in His service I have known
His name I magnify and bless
And render praise to Him alone.
For all His own He intercedes;
He brings them to the radiant shore:
He bears me, while the "earth recedes,
In triumph through the open door."

My heart with grateful fervor glows
To Him who led me through the strife:
In grace divine He now destows
Abundant entrance into life.
My soul with living bread He feeds,
And I His wondrous name adore:
While from my sight the "earth recedes,
I praise Him for the open door."

HEALTH

EXERCISES FOR THE NECK.

It is a fact that most people who have passed the age of childish sport stand in need of some form of definite exercise in order to keep their muscles from settling down into the sluggish inactivity of middle age, which brings so many physical drawbacks in its train. Normal children exercise without being told to do so, because it is their nature to play, and play is the very best form of exercise, especially if it takes place outdoors. But most of those who have passed from childhood do not keep supple and limber with play, and therefore it follows that they must, or should, do it with work.

There are certain special exercises that are not attended to nearly enough. They are the movements of the neck and throat which control the head movements. Any one can test this for himself by slowly turning the chin from shoulder to shoulder and back again, performing what is called the resistant exercise—that is to say, forcing the head slowly round and at the same time making the opposing muscles resist the impulse. The immediate result will in most cases be an astonishing lameness and stiffness, so great as to cause actual pain, but is only the measure maw waf fafw the pain is only the measure of how much the exercise is needed.

The joining of the head to the body is intended to be as supple and as comfortable as it is strong, and when it gives its owner the feeling of being like a lot of old machinery that needs oiling, that is just what it is, and nothing will put it in shape so quickly as constantly repeated resistant exercises.

They should be not only from side to side, but also forward and backward, first pressing down until the chin almost rests on the neck, and then back until the face is almost horizontal. The backward exercise is very valuable, as the muscles at the base of the skull can give a lot of trouble unless they are kept up to their work.

The value of the exercises will be recognized when it is remembered that exercise of the neck muscles must necessarily improve the circulation of the blood through the head. Poor circulation anywhere in the body soon gives rise to pain and trouble, and it is small wonder that that should be the case in the region where the most delicate special organs are placed, to say nothing of the brain, which controls them all.

The exercises should be resistant because twice as much can be done in half the time with them. They are, in fact, exercise with an apparatus, only the apparatus is the muscles themselves, and they can be recommended for the purpose as both inexpensive and handy.—Youth's Companion.

MONEY WEARS QUICKLY.

Wastage Through Circulation on British Coins.

It is the duty of each loyal subject not merely to refuse gold coin that is under a certain weight, but to break it.

"Every person," the Act reads, "shall, by himself or others, cut, break, or deface such coin tendered to him in payment and the person tendering the same shall bear the loss."

But in spite of this Act it is a risky business interfering with coins which you may suspect to be under weight or spurious. Some months ago a Grimsby woman offered a half sovereign in payment of goods to a local shopkeeper. The latter put the coin in a testing machine, and as it broke in two, refused to take it.

The coin, however, was pronounced by experts to be perfectly genuine, and when the case was taken into a court of law the shopkeeper was ordered to refund ten shillings to the customer.

Money, both gold and silver, wears out at a startling rate. It is reckoned that there is usually a hundred million pounds in gold in England, a very large proportion of which is locked in the strong rooms of banks. Yet of that which is in active circulation the wastage is so great that during every twelve months seventy thousand pounds' worth of gold and silver are rubbed off into fine dust.—Pearson's Weekly.

$3,600 in Cash Prizes for Farmers

WHEN you enter the Canada Cement Prize Contest, your dealer will assist you. Consult him in reference to conditions of the contest. Refer all questions of doubt to him to decide. Confer with him when his experience and advice and his knowledge of our plan would seem helpful.

Don't hesitate about doing this. We have requested him to assist to the best of his ability any farmer in his locality competing in this contest—whether it's a matter involving the application of cement, or how to go about winning one of the prizes offered in this contest. Do you realize that you have as good a chance as the next man to win one of these prizes? There are four for each Province, as follows:

PRIZE "A"—$100.00 to be given to the farmer in each Province who will use during 1911, the greatest number of bags of "CANADA" Cement. PRIZE "B"—$100.00 to be given to the farmer in each Province who in 1911 uses "CANADA" Cement on his farm for the greatest number of purposes. PRIZE "C"—$100.00 to be given to the farmer in each Province who furnishes us with photograph showing the best of any particular kind of work done on his farm during 1911 with "CANADA" Cement. PRIZE "D"—$100.00 to be given to the farmer in each Province who submits the best and most complete description of how any particular piece of work shown by accompanying photograph, was done.

Contest will close on November 15th, 1911, and as soon as possible thereafter, prizes will be awarded.

Be sure and get a copy of our Contest Circular, telling all about the contest. Ask your dealer for one or use the attached coupon, if you find it more convenient.

In writing us, mention whether you have received your copy of "What the Farmer Can Do With Concrete," a profusely-illustrated 160-page book, which tells you how to build with concrete, so that you can do much of the work yourself. It's a mighty handy and useful book, and should save you many a dollar. Farmers who have received it, say it is splendid. Write to-night and it will go back to you with Prize Contest Folder, by return mail.

Please send Circular and Book.

WANTED

Parties to sell locally the latest Washing Machine; no boiler required; works easy; no wear nor tear; sells cheap; good money in it. Every home wants one. Communicate at once with the Martin Trunk Company, Picton, Ont.

Whatever you undertake do it well. Let the stamp of completeness be impressed on each act so that thoroughness may be a characteristic of every effort. There is so much that is slipshod it is very refreshing to come across work or effort so well finished that "Well Done" may be pronounced upon it in all sincerity.

THE CAUSE OF CONSTIPATION

Constipation is, in some cases the direct result from a torpid or slow acting liver, brought about by the withholding of the flow of bile. This condition is commonly allied with more or less indigestion and dyspepsia partly due to the constipation itself.

Many persons have found it comparatively easy to overcome such conditions with a treatment of "Rexall Liver Salts."

In our judgement, we feel that this preparation is remarkably well fitted to overcome these conditions and recommend them to you with the understanding that any money you may have spent with us for the preparation will be refunded in case there are no beneficial results. LOCAL DOINGS.

People who talk too much never talk well.

Saturday is Canada's 44th birthday, and a public holiday.

Miss Emily Brooks is confined to her room through illness.

Few of us become round shouldered from carrying other people's burdens.

Russell May entertained the Young Men's Bible Class of James Street church Monday evening.

On Monday E. N. Lewis, M. P., of Goderich was again chosen by the Conservatives of West Huron for the House of Commons.

The girl friends of Miss Fleeda Baker tendered her a kitchen shower at the home of Miss Jennie Hardy Thursday evening last.

Look at the Label on your paper and if the date does not show that you are paid in advance, drop in and settle as we need the cash.

No American money or mutilated coin will be received at the Post-office here, as the Post Master General has sent out word to that effect.

The Canning Company will commence the season's pack of peas to-day. The factory is now equipped with a rock well at a depth of 300 feet.

The Presbyterian Sunday School picnicked at Grand Bend on Coronation Day, and a large number of children and parents went along for the day's outing.

The Entrance candidates have been writing on their examinations this week. We wish you success, boys and girls. Mr. McKay of Hensall is the examiner here.

Our information was not correct last week when we stated that Hay Bros. of Listowel were carrying on the grain business in Clandeboye. Mr. R. G. Seldon, the owner of the building, which was burned, has been carrying on the business for some years. Mr. Seldon's loss will be about $2000. He will rebuild at once.

Clarence Miners, who went to Saskatoon last April with his father, Wm. Miners, to take charge of the post office at Saskatoon, has received a call from the Superintendent of the Sask. Division, whose head office is at Moose-Jaw, to come at once and enter the civil service as mail clerk, running from Saskatoon to Wilkie.

The Ladies Guild of the Trivitt Memorial Church will hold their annual Garden Party on the Rectory Grounds on Friday evening, July 7th. The London Harpers (four pieces) will furnish the music. Admission —Adults 15 cts. Children 10c.

At the I.O.O.F. District Meeting in Hensall on Wednesday of last week W. J. Murray of Exeter Lodge was elected D. D. G. M. for this district. The work has fallen into good hands, as there is no more painstaking and enthusiastic Oddfellow among the younger members of the order than the newly-elected District Deputy Grand Master.

Coronation service was held in the Trivitt Memorial church here on Thursday last at 9.30 a. m. Special forms were distributed among the congregation and the service conducted by the Rector, Rev. D. W. Collins was beautiful in its character and quite in keeping with the occasion. The discourse delivered by the reverend gentleman was an able effort and deeply interesting to those fortunate to be in attendance.

On Sunday afternoon about thirty of the members of Exeter Lodge of Oddfellows drove to the cemetery, and with appropriate ceremony decorated the graves of their fifteen departed brethren, by depositing a pot flower on each grave. This annual decoration is a beautiful thing, showing the desire of the brethren that the memory of the departed as well as their graves should be kept green.

Charlotte Nicholas, an Indian girl, who had been spending a few hours picking strawberries for Reeve Taylor, on Monday fell from the verandah steps to the cement walk, cutting a big gash in her knee and injuring the knee-cap. She was unconscious for 20 minutes, but in the evening she was in condition to be moved to the home of her uncle, Isaac French, Stephen. She will be laid up for some time.

BROKE HIS ARM.—Mr. Alex McPherson, while engaged in painting at the home of Mr. J. A. Stewart, had the misfortune to fall from a ladder on Friday afternoon, with the result that he broke both bones of his left forearm, near the wrist. The injured member was immediately attended to, but the accident will necessitate Mr. McPherson's being off duty for several weeks.

FIREWORKS.—The bonfires and fireworks on the north and south banks of the river at the dam on the evening of Coronation Day attracted a large number of people, and the scene in many respects proved to be a very interesting and pleasing one, quite a fitting celebration in recognition of the Coronation of King George V. The celebrations of the day were in the hands of Mr. N. D. Hurdon, than whom there is no more loyal and enthusiastic Britisher in Ontario.

HICKS' FORECASTS FOR JULY.—A reactionary storm period is central on the 2nd, 3rd and 4th, with the Moon on the celestial equator and at first quarter. By the second expect very marked rise in temperature, falling barometer and vicious electrical storms in the west. During the 3rd and 4th these storms will pass east, preceded by excessive warmth. In eastern parts of the country a hot wave and thunder storms should not surprise the people. A regular storm period covers the 9th to the 10th, with probability of being prolonged. Rains will fall over many sections of the grain-growing regions. We believe that a very serious lack of general rains will be upon very wide sections of the great agricultural regions to the northwest, from the middle of July until late in September. A possible reaction to fair and cooler may come on and touching the 10th and 11th

The census enumerators for South Huron have completed their returns and and same have passed into the hands of Commissioner Essery. Commissioner Essery, in accordance with his oath of office refuses to make any statement regarding the returns, but as far as we can learn the towns and villages in his district have during the past ten years fallen off in population, while on the other hand the population in rural districts has increased, a fact which would hardly seem probable.

L. O. L. ATTEND CHURCH

The L. O. L. of Exeter, augmented by a number of their brethren from Lucan and Saintsbury, including County Master Hodgins and District Grand Master Coursey, to the number of 50 paraded to the Trivitt Memorial church on Sunday morning, July 2nd.

The Rector, Rev. D. W. Collins, preached from the text, "Other men have laboured and ye have entered upon their labours."

The speaker reviewed the history of the early British church, the Anglo Saxon church and influence of the Norman Contest, followed by the gradual usurpation of the Papacy, resulting in the Reformation.

The reign of Mary was particularly dwelt upon. In that reign about 300 many of them prominent in the higher councils of the English church, suffered martyrdom. "They laboured and we have entered upon their labour." The result of that struggle is the civil and religious liberty we enjoy to-day. The Orange order grew out of the stormy times of James II., and William and Mary. When the last great struggle for Papal supremacy was waged in England It was necessary for men to band themselves together for protection, and out of this organization sprang the Orange society.

In conclusion the speaker warned the members of the Order of the sacred trust committed to all true men and asked them to be worthy of their Order.

On the return to their lodge a hearty vote of thanks was passed and tendered to the Rector and Wardens of the Memorial church.

Baseball

THAT CREDITON—EXETER GAME

The Crediton ball team claims that the game played with Exeter in Exeter on Monday of last week was a tie, 7—7. This is certainly not correct and it is disappointing to think that the Crediton people would try to distort a count to effect a tie. Review the matter. At the end of the eighth innings the score stood 6—4 in favor of Exeter. Crediton went to bat and made two in the ninth, but claims three which was certainly wrong one man having made the circle of the bases after being called out by both umpires. But for sake of argument let us suppose they got three runs. Then Exeter went to bat and got one run, with but one man out, then the storm came on and the innings was not finished. Surely there is no possibility of calling that a tie. In such cases the official score reverts back to the end of the eighth innings, which was Exeter 6, Crediton 4. Now the Crediton baseball boys know that the score of 7—6 or 6—4 cannot be got away from. Consequently they should take defeat like the men they are, and not quibble about nothing. The defeat was no disgrace to them. They were outplayed. That's all. The Exeter boys have been in the same boat many a time.

Crediton Juniors put it all over Exeter Juniors on Monday night in a game of ball here, winning 14-3.

USBORNE.

DEATH—The sad death occurred on Wednesday evening last of Ethel Margaret Hill, wife of Mr. John Robert Munn, Con. 1, Usborne at the age of 21 years, 10 months. Death was due to child birth. A little son was born to the parents on Tuesday evening, and the mother took convulsions passing away twenty-four hours later. The bereaved husband has the sympathy of a wide circle of friends. The funeral was held to Rogerville cemetery on Friday afternoon.

Teacher Honored by Pupils.—On Thursday last the pupils of S. S. No. 3, Usborne, presented their teacher, Miss Greason, with a beautiful silver biscuit jar and silver butter knife before her departure. The address was as follows—

Dear Teacher—On the eve of your departure from among us, we, your pupils, cannot let this time pass without showing you in some way that you have endeared yourself as teacher to all your pupils. During the time you have been our instructor you have ever been patient and painstaking with us, and although at times we have not done our best to please you we wish you at this time to forget all our past misdeeds and think of us only as your pupils who wish you well in whatever sphere of life you may be. As a tangible way of expressing our good will to you we here present you with this silver biscuit jar and silver butter knife, hoping that these articles may be of use to you and that they will ever remind you of the many pleasant days you spent with us at Plugtown School. We feel that we are losing a dear and kind friend, but know that our loss will be some one else's gain. We wish you God speed and pray that your future may be even brighter than the past has been.

Signed on behalf of the school by May Hodgert, Fern Francis, Jennie McCullagh, Tena McCurdy, Leonard Harris

The address was read by Miss Jennie McCullagh and the presentation made by Misses Fern Francis and May Hodgert. Miss Greason was taken by surprise, but warmly thanked her pupils for their beautiful gifts and many acts of promptness shown to her during the two and a half years spent with them. The teacher also expressed her deep regret at leaving and hoped that they'd be as kind to her successor as they had been to her.

STEAMERS IN A COLLISION

One Sunk and Passengers Rescued With Difficulty

A despatch from Quebec says: The steamer Aranmore, a few miles below Murray Bay, in a dense fog at 1 o'clock in the morning, ran down and sank the steamer General Wolfe. Both boats were owned by the same firm, Halliday Brothers, of this city. There on board the General Wolfe report that they saw nothing of the other ship until the shock occurred. The Aranmore struck the Wolfe on the starboard side, causing her to swing around, and then, after the recoil, struck her again on the port side. The General Wolfe sank in 35 minutes and lies in 30 fathoms of water, having carried down with her a valuable cargo, consisting in part of two or three hundred cases of salmon destined for the United States, especially bought up by a dealer for the Fourth of July market. Both ship and cargo are insured.

Immediately after the shock both vessels launched their lifeboats, and all the passengers and crew of the Wolfe were rescued.

Most of the passengers of the wrecked vessel were residents of the coast. In the confusion and darkness seven of the passengers fell into the water, and their cries for help are described as heart-rending. These cries were their only means of being saved.

GERMANY SENDS GUNBOAT

French Feeling Aroused Over Intervention in Morocco

A despatch from Berlin says: Germany took direct action in Morocco and ordered the gunboat Panther to Agadir, the most southern port of Morocco, twenty-three miles southeast of Cape Ghir.

The official announcement says that the step was taken at the request of German firms in South Morocco for protection to the lives and property of Germans and native proteges in Morocco, and that unfriendly intentions toward Morocco are not involved.

Agadir is near Mogador, a fortified seaport on the Atlantic, upon which, according to earlier rumors, Germany has designs.

Astonishment is the word used in semi-official circles to describe French feelings over the action of Germany in sending a gunboat to Agadir, Morocco.

It is declared that the move is not in accordance with the spirit either of the Algeciras act or the Franco-German agreement of February, 1909, which recognized Germany as having pre-eminent commercial rights in Morocco, but France as having predominant political rights.

It is pointed out that France is capable of maintaining order and protecting foreign interests in Morocco, for which purpose she despatched an army to Fez and Mequinez.

BLIND LOVERS TO MARRY

Couple Born without Sight Take Out License to Wed.

A despatch from Fresno, California, says: Behind a marriage license issued on Wednesday to Ernest L. Morris, a well-known blind piano tuner, and Effie M. Sullivan, of Iowa, also blind, is an unusual romance. Although they have known each other from childhood, neither has seen the other, for they were born blind.

Love began in the Iowa State Home for the Blind when Morris, now 29, was 10 years old, and his bride-to-be, now 35, was 16. They learned to read and write there, and ever since have kept up correspondence. Recently Morris asked the girl to join him in California, and she consented.

CHOLERA IN ITALY.

It is Increasing in Naples and Palermo.

A despatch from Rome says: Cholera is increasing in Italy. Returns show that there are 97 cases in Naples and its environs, 92 cases at Palermo and 49 cases elsewhere.

KILLED ON THE "DIPS."

Man Stood Up in Car at Hanlan's Point.

A despatch from Toronto says: Standing up in one of the rapidly-moving cars on the roller coaster at Hanlan's Point, Fred Swallow overbalanced himself and fell out, receiving injuries from which he died later in St. Michael's Hospital. Swallow was struck by a car which followed the one in which he was a passenger. It is against the rules for anybody to stand up in the cars while on the journey. His car had just left the lowest dip when he stood up and fell out. His right leg and arm were broken and he was internally injured. The injured man was hurried over in a special ferry and Dr. Allan at the foot of Mr. J. A. Stewart, had the misfortune to fall from a ladder on

SCORE INJURED IN WRECK

Express Train Crashed Into a Freight Locomotive

A despatch from Philadelphia says: The engineer and one passenger were probably fatally injured and 20 other passengers badly cut, bruised and scalded on Wednesday night when an express train bound for Chestnut Hill collided with the tender of a freight locomotive at the entrance of the Philadelphia and Reading Railway's tunnel at 21st Street and Hamilton Avenue.

Benjamin H. Dolan, aged 48 years, is the injured engineer. One of his legs was broken in three places and he was so badly scalded that physicians despair of saving his life.

The passenger who is believed to be dying is Ernest W. Evans, aged 27, of Asbury Place, Chestnut Hill. His skull is badly crushed and he was severely scalded.

After the engine had crushed into the tender, the first coach of the train slipped past the obstructions, but the following coaches were thrown on their sides. The cars were filled with passengers bound for the suburbs. When they were overturned the escaping steam from the damaged locomotive caused a panic.

TRAGEDY IN A SHANTY.

John G. Taylor Held for Murder at Vancouver.

A despatch from Vancouver says: John G. Taylor, a resident of the city for the past eighteen years, and now in his seventy-sixth year and a veteran of the Civil war, existing chiefly on his monthly pension, is to-night in police custody facing the charge of murder. The dead man is Eli McCutcheon, a logger, thirty years of age, unmarried, and formerly of Nanaimo. According to the police, the tragedy followed a row in a shack in the east end of the city, in which Taylor lived alone. McCutcheon and several companions had visited the old man late in the afternoon. There was not, it is said, any drinking, but a dispute arose, ending in Taylor ordering all to leave. McCutcheon declined, and the old man is said to have instantly fired a rifle, the bullet entering McCutcheon's thigh. All vanished leaving McCutcheon to bleed to death.

DIVED HEADLONG FROM CAR.

Miraculous Escape of Shackled Lunatic.

A despatch from Montreal says: With legs shackled to his sides Georges Kepla, a lunatic, took a headlong dive through the window of a Grand Trunk train near Coteau on Wednesday night.

Although the train was travelling at 25 miles an hour, the man was picked up conscious, suffering only from a deep scalp wound.

Kepla was one of five undesirables being taken from the asylum at Seattle, Wash., for deportation to Germany from Montreal.

Nearing Coteau he became restive and the shackles were put on, but despite this he evaded the United States immigration officials in charge of the undesirables and dived headlong through the window.

Five people whom were riding in the wagon were killed and the sixth person in the wagon and the train conductor were severely injured.

AERONAUT'S DARING FLIGHT

Lincoln Beachey Circled Over the Falls in Aeroplane

A despatch from Niagara Falls, N.Y., says: The many famous feats in Niagara's short but hazardous path has braved nature's gravest perils, were outdone in the sensational flight of Lincoln Beachey, the aviator, who swept down from an immense height in a rain at dusk on Wednesday night, circled twice over the Falls, then dove down under the great steel bridge, on down the Gorge almost to the Whirlpool Rapids, rose again, and, skimming the wooded bluffs, soared off again to safety on the Canadian side.

More than 150,000 people stood transfixed with awe as the birdman's air craft rocked and rose over his perilous course. It was the first time an aviator had ever flirted with the deadly currents of the canyon. His flight is looked upon as the most daring ever made by an aviator.

At moments as he flew above the cataract and between the precipitous walls of the lower river, Beachey and his white machine were obscured in spray and mist. Racing down the Gorge, his speed approached sixty miles an hour.

The start was made from the baseball ground adjoining Niagara University, about a mile from the Falls, and, after the perilous journey, a safe landing was made in a field on the outskirts of Niagara Falls, Ont.

"There was just one time I was afraid," the hero said. "That was when I got down between these two great walls and the plane began to rock and swerve. I was afraid the Gorge had me. The water was only a few feet below. That's why I did not go all the way to Lewiston. I had had enough for one day and was quite happy after I got over the cliff and was over in Canada."

TWO MEN KILLED

Within a Few Yards of Each Other Near Winnipeg.

A despatch from Winnipeg says: Two fatalities occurred within a few hundred yards of each other on Thursday evening at Fort Rouge. A Canadian named Sherlock got on the Grand Trunk Pacific train going west, instead of the Canadian Northern for Prince Albert, and finding out his mistake at the Pembina subway, a mile from the station, jumped from the train, crushing his head in the fall.

The other case was that of a foreigner, Alex. Signuk, who picked up a live wire while at work in the C. N. R. shops, Fort Rouge. He was dead when help arrived. Inquests are likely in both cases.

AVIATOR'S LUCKY ESCAPE.

Fell 500 Feet and Lives to Tell the Tale.

A despatch from Chicago says: John J. Joyce, an aviator, fell 500 feet in a biplane at Hawthorne Park Wednesday and escaped with only slight injuries. He broke through five telephone wires, one trolley wire, and a heavy wooden backstop for a baseball diamond. The backstop was wrecked, and the biplane was literally ground to pieces, but Joyce escaped with only a sprained ankle, a scratched face and a possible minor fracture of small bones.

DELIVERED GOODS AT SEA

Aviator Landed Merchandise on Board Steamer

A despatch from New York says: The first piece of merchandise ever delivered at sea by aeroplane fell on the upper deck of the giant White Star liner Olympic on Wednesday as the steamed through the Narrows, outward bound on her maiden eastward passage.

W. Atlee Burpee, of Philadelphia, had contracted for delivery before sailing with a New York and Philadelphia department store, which in turn engaged the services of Thomas Sopwith, the English aviator. With Richard R. Sinclair, secretary of the Aero Club, holding the package, Sopwith rose from the aviation grounds at Garden City, spied out the Olympic as she bore down the Hudson, aimed his flight to meet her in the Narrows, and set his course over land and sea.

Even from the pier end, passengers on the Olympic are no more than animated dots of white and black to those on shore. Presumably there was to be seen among those dots a scurrying to and fro, as of bits of paper blown by the wind. Sopwith had been sighted bearing down on them from afar. Working nearer and nearer, he circled the ship as low as he dared, hovering overhead for an instant and then made back for shore, landing safely on the grounds of the Crescent Athletic Club at Bay Ridge. While Sopwith controlled the aeroplane Sinclair dropped the package at the given signal.

FIRE ON U. S. BATTLESHIP.

Magazine Flooded to Prevent an Explosion.

A despatch from New York says: Fire in the after turret of the battleship Ohio, in the naval yard at Brooklyn on Wednesday, necessitated the flooding of the powder magazine below, as a precaution against an explosion. The fire smouldered for half an hour along the heavy rubber insulation of electric wires and a quantity of cotton waste. A rethot rivet dropped on the insulation, and started the blaze.

The powder magazine, situated about seven feet below the turret, contained a ton and a half of powder, and a large quantity of other ammunition. There were no officers and men on the Ohio. The battleships North Dakota and Alabama were at anchor near by, and there was considerable excitement on board all the ships as well as in the navy yard.

WIELDED AXE ON HUSBAND.

Ottawa Magistrate Justified this Wifely Act.

A despatch from Ottawa says: According to Magistrate O'Keefe, on Wednesday morning, Mrs. A. Paquet was quite justified in using the axe on her husband last week to defend herself, but he did not believe in using an axe unless in extreme cases.

The magistrate let the accused go on suspended sentence. He warned her that an axe was a formidable weapon to use except in cases of extreme emergency. The bench, however, considered that the prisoner was goaded to use the axe and had done so without intent to kill.

Paquette, arraigned on a charge of drunkenness, was also released in view of his punishment with the axe.

INFANTILE PARALYSIS.

Investigation Being Made by Conservation Commission.

A despatch from Ottawa says: An investigation into the prevalence of infantile paralysis is being conducted by the Dominion Conservation Commission. Circulars are being forwarded to every medical practitioner in Canada asking for particulars of the cases with which he has had to deal. Investigations are also being conducted into the housing conditions in Canadian centres of population, and the existence of slum districts.

Municipal building by-laws and building regulations are being examined, and a comparison made with those in use in the better regulated cities of foreign countries.

ORIGINAL CHARTER FOUND.

Queen's University Recovers Highly Prized Document.

A despatch from Kingston says: Queen's University is in possession of a very valuable document, being that the original charter granted the university over sixty years ago, and which in some way or other had disappeared from sight, vanishing, no man knew where. It came to light, however, in an unexpected quarter, when Col. S. C. McGill, managing director of the Frontenac Loan Co., ran across it in the vaults of that company. It was enclosed in a tin casing, and was in splendid condition, with the signature of Queen Victoria herself well preserved and the great seal quite intact.

Hints for Busy Housekeepers.

Recipes and Other Valuable Information of Particular Interest to Women Folks.

DAINTY DISHES.

Date sandwiches are novel for afternoon tea. Stone and chop finely some dates, add a squeeze of lemon juice. Cut some thin slices of bread and butter, spread with the chopped dates, and cover with slices of plain bread and butter. Press together. Cut into fancy shapes, and serve.

Colcannon is a good dish. Take equal quantities of cold potato, carrot, and cabbage, with onion to taste, and chop all together finely. To every pound of vegetable allow one ounce of dripping. Melt it in a saucepan, and the vegetables, pepper and salt them well, and pour into a greased mould. Bake for half an hour, turn out, and serve hot.

Macaroni Pie is a good way of using up cold meat. Grease a pie-dish, scatter breadcrumbs over, and line with boiled macaroni. Fill the dish with some finely chopped cold meat, seasoned with salt, pepper, and sweet herbs, and put a layer of macaroni over. Moisten with a little gravy. Cover with breadcrumbs, put a few bits of butter on the top, and bake for thirty to forty minutes.

Pork Chops.—Trim the chops neatly, and press into a pear shape. Dip them in milk and then in flour, and fry for about twenty minutes in their own fat. Drain on thick paper. Cut some raw potatoes into chips and fry in the fat from the pork. Serve the potatoes in a heap in the centre of the dish with the chops round, and garnish with parsley.

Spring Pudding.—Put four ounces of flour into a basin and add a pinch of salt. Break an egg into it, work it into a smooth paste, and add gradually half a pint of milk. Let this batter stand for an hour. Cut one pound of pink rhubarb into one-inch pieces and place in a pie-dish, grate a little lemon-rind over, and sprinkle with sugar. Pour the batter carefully over the fruit, and bake in a sharp oven for three-quarters of an hour. Serve at once.

Chester Pudding.—As you object to suet puddings, try this recipe: Work together two ounces of butter and two tablespoonfuls of brown sugar, then add a well-beaten egg, and gradually stir in two tablespoonfuls of molasses and a teaspoonful of milk. Mix half a teaspoonful of baking-powder with half a pound of flour, and mix it with the butter, molasses, etc. Place in a greased mould and steam four or two hours, and serve with any nice sweet sauce.

Soda cake is rather a rich cake, but if well baked will keep some time. Rub half a pound of butter and lard into one pound of flour. Add half a pound of castor sugar, one ounce of chopped peel, a quarter of a pound of sultanas, and a quarter of a pound of currants. Beat three eggs, add to them half a pint of milk to which has been added a small teaspoonful of soda. Stir into the dry ingredients, beat well, pour into a greased tin, and bake for two hours or two hours and a half. The oven should be quick when the cake is first put in, but should be allowed to cool somewhat after.

Mutton a la Neapolitaine.—Procure about two pounds and a half of neck or loin of mutton, remove the bones and some of the fat, taking away all the suet. Place a little dripping in a stewpan, when hot put in the meat skewered into a neat roll, and brown nicely. Add an onion, a carrot, a small piece of mace, pepper and salt. Pour over one pint of water, and simmer for an hour. Take up the meat, add a squeeze of lemon juice and a little Yorkshire relish to the gravy, thicken and color it, and pour over the meat. Garnish with chopped gherkins.

SALADS.

Dulip Salad.—Scald ripe tomatoes, remove skins, and chill thoroughly; then with a sharp knife cut from blossom end to the stem and into points, and press open, leaving a round bulb of the seeds in centre; place one spoonful of mayonnaise tinted green on each top. Serve dry, more dressing may be added.

Chrysanthemum Salad.—Shred crisp cabbage, and immerse minutes; drain and drill, then lean roughly on to a bed of foliage. Mix two tablespoonfuls of tarragon vinegar, one tablespoonful of salad oil, one teaspoonful of celery salt, dash of pepper, pour over salad, garnish with tiny sweet peppers and hard boiled eggs. Allow to absorb dressing before serving.

Henrietta Salad.—Pull cooked fish into flakes, cut cooked carrots, beans and savoy cabbage into small pieces, mix with fish, lay on bed of endive; pour on two tablespoonfuls of vinegar, one tablespoonful of oil, one teaspoonful of salt, dash of paprika; when serving garnish with sliced tomatoes, hard boiled egg quarters, and mayonnaise. To be palatable it must be chilled before serving.

BREAKFAST HINTS.

Creamed Calf Brains.—This dish is especially good. Parboil calves' brains, chop fine, mix with one cupful of cold cooked peas seasoned. Make a sauce of one cupful of sweet milk, one-half cupful of cream, one level teaspoonful each of salt and pepper. Add the peas and calves' brains. Heat and pour over slices of crisp toast.

Baked Bananas.—Slice in half lengthwise five perfect bananas free from skin. Bake for ten minutes. Remove to a hot plate and pour over them one cupful of sweetened pineapple juice.

HOW TO WASH BLANKETS.

It is generally believed that blankets are the most difficult things in the house to wash properly. As a matter of fact they are about the easiest, as will be seen if the following method is adopted.

Cut a bar of good soap into small pieces and boil them in two quarts of water until dissolved. Then add half a pound of powdered borax.

Put the mixture into half a tub-ful of cold water and let the blankets soak therein for about two hours. Then rinse in six or seven waters until the last water is quite clear.

There is no need whatever to scrub; and after the last rinse the blankets should be hung out to dry without wringing.

HOUSEHOLD HINTS.

Metal kitchen spoons should be washed to get rid of the grease, and then scoured with salt and sand.

Verdigris may be removed by rubbing with liquid ammonia.

Raw potato dipped in bathbrick will remove stains on knife-blades and other steel articles.

Tasty Pork Chops.—Add a teaspoonful of finely chopped onion to a beaten egg and a good pinch of sage.

Pure glycerine is a wonderful stain eradicator. Smear a coffee or tea stain with it, and then rinse in warm water.

Steel that is exposed to damp may be kept from rusting by the application of a good coat of copal varnish.

Meat should be hung in a cool, airy place but not in a strong draught, for that makes it dry and unpalatable.

When roasting meat in the oven put a small basin of water in to prevent any disagreeable smell of the oven getting overheated.

When boiling pudding put a saucer at the bottom of the saucepan in which the pudding is cooked, and there will be no danger of its sticking.

To clean a badly stained bath, there is nothing better than paraffin. It will remove old stains and leave the paint uninjured.

Dusters, and the best, too, are made out of old cotton dresses, and chintz covers. These are nice and soft, and better for use than new material.

Keep bedrooms sweet by admitting plenty of fresh air. Avoid woollen curtains, and above all else, an old carpet. Nothing is more likely to give a close smell to a bedroom.

White floor matting may be scrubbed with bran water. Put two pints of bran into two quarts of water and boil it. Strain, and when cool, use for scrubbing the matting.

Flowers in a sick-room should have the water changed daily, and if they are hard-stemmed like chrysanthemums they should have their stalks wiped to remove any slime that may adhere.

To renovate a Brussels carpet, mix a tumblerful of spirits of turpentine in a pail of water. Dip your carpet broom in this, shake well, and brush the carpet. Constantly dip the brush into the water so that the dust which is taken up will be got rid of.

A Fire Escape.—If you are nervous of fire, have a length of fireproof rope fixed to a staple in the floor by your bedroom window. Coil it and put a table or box over to hide it. Should fire occur, it is the work of a few moments to pass it out of the window, and there is your escape.

A Good Whitewash.—Put six pounds of whiting into a bucket and crush out the lumps, then mix it into a cream with cold water. Dissolve three ounces of powdered glue in water, heating it till it is quite dissolved, then pour into the whiting while hot, stirring it well in. This whitewash must be of the consistency to be applied with a whitewash brush.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL STUDY

INTERNATIONAL LESSON, JULY 8.

Lesson II. The suffering servant of Jehovah. Isa. 52. 13 to 53. 12.

Golden Text, Isa. 53. 6.

Verse 13. My servant shall deal wisely—The idea contained in these words is, that the suffering servant is to carry forward his work so prudently as to be sure of success. This is implied in what follows. Humiliated as he is, and afflicted, his ultimate exaltation is to vindicate the purpose of God in his suffering.

14. Many were astonished—The reason was, that his visage was so marred. The sight of physical torture and weakness in a minister of Jehovah was incomprehensible.

15. Shall he sprinkle many nations—Better, startle many nations. They shall hear the unheard of, namely, that a sufferer is able to triumph so gloriously. The problem of pain is the acute problem of the ages. The unseeing eye can discern no utility in suffering. Kings shut their mouths, and the nations stand in awe before the everlasting glory of the crucified Galilean peasant, risen and exalted on high.

1. 3—The central thought is found in the opening words, unbelief has been unable to accept the suffering Servant, or to see the strong arm of Jehovah's power and purpose revealed in him. He came with no regal pomp of a conquering Messiah. Dying upon a cross, he was a stumbling block to Jews and foolishness to Greeks. All this is represented by the prophet as already past, because he views the future as already accomplished.

2. A tender plant—a root—Not a noble tree, but a lowly shoot struggling in dry soil. Thus humility and obscurity of the servant, as he grew up in the presence of Jehovah, awakened in his people no admiration. This is the confession of a universal human habit, the habit of forgetting, in our sense of the ugliness and helplessness of pain, that it has a motive, a future, and a God.

3. He was despised—Not only were his people not attracted to him. They repelled him. They looked for a mighty revelation of strength, triumph over sorrows and grief. So they resented it, that One who claimed to be the minister of Jehovah should not rise above the common lot of suffering.

4-6—He hath borne our griefs—This is the sober second thought concerning the suffering Servant. The first judgment was the common one, that his afflictions were a divine punishment—he was smitten of God. But now it is apparent that he was wounded, not for his own, but the transgressions of the people. There is no more pronounced statement in Scripture of the substantial character of the death of our Lord. It is a striking picture of the sinless One, bearing the burden and responsibility of the sins of men, in order to deliver them.

5. With his stripes we are healed—Not only are Christ's sufferings vicarious; they are also redemptive. "The peace, the healing, is ours, in consequence of the chastisement and the scourging that was his."

6. Laid on him the iniquity of us all—Note the steps by which this great interpretation of the sufferings of the Servant is reached. First, incredulousness, then, disgust and aversion; then, reckoning the Servant's pains a penalty for his sins; then, a recognition of the substitutionary character of these sufferings; and finally, a conviction of their redeeming worth.

7-9—The theme here is the injustice done the innocent Servant, and his remarkable silence under persecution. Compare Matt. 26. 63; 27. 12, 14.

7. He opened not his mouth—This is unique in the Old Testament. Under torture he makes no confession of guilt, for he knows himself to be guiltless. He suffers in silence for he knows that his sufferings has endless value for others. Compare the cases of David, Hezekiah, Jeremiah, and Job. All strive and are loud under pain.

8. By oppression and judgment he was taken away—He did not die in the ordinary course of events, but was violently cut off from the land of the living by a tyrannous abuse of law. Added to that, his own generation were utterly blind to the fact that this judicial murder had a vicarious value that it was for the transgression of his people.

9. Made his grave with the wicked—In the end he was associated with evil doers in death. Rich man is probably only a phrase here, as often in the Psalms for the wicked. So stupid were the people who judged him, that they accounted him worthy of death rather than a malefactor's death, though he had done no violence, and they could find no fault in him at all.

10-12—We now return to the root idea that all this proceeded out of the good pleasure of Jehovah. This accords with the teaching of Jesus himself, that his suffering at Jerusalem was the climax of an eternal purpose, and not merely the chance result of the machinations of a perverse generation.

10. Offering for sin—Compare Num. 5. 7, 8, and Lev. 5. 14-16; 6. 1-7. Christ's death makes possible the forgiveness of our sins, for since death is the penalty for sin, and faith makes us one with him, he can and does die in our stead, setting us free. Our Father, against whom we have sinned, sees the travail of the soul of his Son, and is satisfied (11).

11. Shall my righteous servant justify many—Recalling the words of Paul: "That he might himself be just and the justifier of him that hath faith in Jesus." The death of the righteous Christ is God's righteous reason for reckoning as righteous the unrighteous sinner.

12. He shall divide the spoil with the strong—Again recalling Paul's words: "Him also hath God highly exalted." Though despised and rejected of men, he is honored of God, and that not because of any signal victory, but because he bare the sin of many in willing sacrifice.

HIS OWN QUARTER-DECK.

Jack Hired a Stage-Coach All to Himself.

Nowhere are the lines of rank more sharply drawn than in the navy. On board ship Jack never dreams of crossing the mark, but off service the personal ego sometimes reasserts itself, and did even in the old days. In "Naval Yarns" W. H. Long cites an instance of this which happened more than one hundred years ago. On the return of Admiral Rodney the British seamen received their first instalment of prize-money, amounting to eighty pounds per man.

One of the London seamen hired the London stage-coach to take the trip to London with his lady. In those days there were not many public conveyances, and Jack took the whole coach for himself and companion. Just as the vehicle was about to start, a naval officer came up and requested the coachman to open the door.

"The coach is full, sir," said the coachman, touching his hat.

"How can that be? There are only two in it."

"True, your honor. One of the crew of the Magnificent has engaged the coach for himself and party."

"Oh, if that's the case, let me see him, and I'll soon settle the matter," responded the officer, who opend the door and tried to enter. Jack stopped him.

"What ship? Where are you steering to? Don't you know I'm captain of this craft?"

"I know it, Jack," answered his officer. "You must give me a berth on board for London."

"This is my ship," insisted Jack, "and nobody shall come on board but I says the word."

"Lieutenant Goodwin wants to take a berth in your cabin," interposed the coachman.

"He never axed me into his cabin aboard the Magnificent. However, he may go on the deck if he likes. Hope he'll look out for you and see that you're steady at the helm, and don't serve us the same trick one of you landlubbers did three years ago, when he ran foul of a landmark and pitched us overboard."

The lieutenant took Jack's reply in good part, mounted to the top of the coach, and was rolled off to London.

LOVELY LISBON.

"One of the cheapest cities in the world to live in is Lisbon, Spain; and it's a city worth living in, too, with its blue skies and quaint streets. Palms grow in the public gardens, and bananas in the centre of the city. Lisbon is a fine place to spend a holiday. You may live at a decent hotel at an inclusive charge of about 75c a day. Of course there are drawbacks. You may go to bed at a reasonable hour, hoping to get sleep, but up till one o'clock at the earliest, there is a constant turmoil in the corridors, and the row starts about six in the morning again. And the moments when human activities are at rest are adequately filled by the nocturnal music of innumerable cats and the scurryings of rats.

PAUPERS AT AUCTION.

The culture of the Finlanders is not incompatible, it would seem, with an institution that savors strongly of the old slave markets of ancient Rome and the Orient of more recent days, comments the London Standard. The Finnish poor law system puts up able-bodied paupers at auction, displaying them in the market-place, where they are examined by employers of labor desirous of finding cheap workmen. The bidding works downward, the authorities handing over to the lowest bidder the chosen pauper, for the person acquiring the right to his labor receives an allowance from the authorities for his upkeep, the amount being that of the "lowest tender."

Madge—"Don't you think a girl should marry an economical man?" Dollie—"I suppose so, but it's just awful being engaged to one!"

LONDON'S ALIEN POPULATION

A NIGHT WITH THE GERMANS IN THE METROPOLIS.

Little Fatherland in the Middle of the Capital of the British Empire.

Sometimes, on a Sunday night, when the wander spirit seizes me, and I long to shake the English dust from my feet and go abroad for a time, I stroll along to a foreign club in the vicinity of Finsbury Square, says a writer in Pearson's Weekly. I am the only Englishman present. It is the haunt of Germans, the young, the old, and the middle-aged.

There, in London's heart, in the middle of the capital of the British Empire, within fifteen minutes' walk of the British House of Commons, I sit with a stranger's feeling, with that curious sense of insecurity that comes to the average traveller in a land thousands of miles from his own.

Stout, heavy-faced old settlers thunder out "Hochs" near a gas-laden bust of the Kaiser as they raise their lager beer jugs and applaud Wagnerian music. The motherly frau sips light wine, munching a liver sausage sandwich; young Fritz, a hairdresser from the Black Forest, pounds his way across the room to a demure traulein, with corn-colored hair and big grey eyes, to suggest a plate of sauerkraut and black bread and sweetwater, whose home address is "something strasse, Berlin," shakes his head as I give my order, and says, "Leagleesh me not speak."

WHEN LONDON SLEEPS.

About the time when you true-born Britons are retiring to bed, the club wakes up—that is to say, the chairs and little tables are pushed near the wall so as to give space to the dancers. With the first strokes of midnight comes the first bar of the opening waltz, and dancing is kept up for hours. It is a sight which ought to be seen by all who scoff at this talk, as they put it, of a probable invasion. The Germans are not coming; they are here, a sufficient number, at any rate, to prove of very material assistance to their invading compatriots.

Where the club is situated is one of the most congested districts in all London, and nearly all the residents are German waiters, tailors, bakers, hairdressers, and servants, nurses and governesses, living cheaply until they find berths.

The German language is over every shop door and window. German faces stand out white and eager in the darkness of the gloomy doorways. There are German cafes innumerable, all crowded; there are German lodging houses in dozens—all packed.

The preacher at the street corner here addresses his hearers in the German language, and the little ring of Christian workers sing the hymn in the same tongue. If you inquire your way of a settler who is ill-informed as to the district, he shakes his head, and says, "Nein," which means "No." The next man you meet, should he know the place you are seeking, will not say "Yes," but "Jah."

SPIES—NOT GOOD SORTS.

Germans—Germans everywhere. They are all well-dressed, and most of them are in work. If they can't get a place where wages are paid they offer their services for board and lodging with an opportunity to learn the English language.

And Englishmen are only too willing to find them employment. We welcome them. We marvel at their quickness in picking up our vowels and our verbs, and we feel flattered at their intense interest in the geography of our country. You can hear Londoners describing these Germans as "good sorts"—young men of manners and culture, whose politeness is a pattern to be copied—whose enthusiasm about England and the English is conclusive proof of their friendliness towards us.

And all the time most of them are spies—spies with a capital S. They are more dangerous than Anarchists. They have a suave manner and soft speech. Unlike the revolutionary, they do not frown at you, they smile at you. Instead of pistols they carry notebooks, and when they pick up a piece of information which they think will be of use to their Fatherland, they sell it to a secret agent from Berlin who spends his time in this country finding out the latest for the benefit of his Government.

During my wanderings in the German quarter I met a young man from Frankfort. He was the essence of amiability, and I spent many happy evenings with him as my guide through the quarter. One night I inquired, casually, what business he was engaged in. His reply was evasive, and I let the subject drop. He was missing from his usual haunt a few nights later, and I have not seen him again. I have since had unquestionable proofs that he was a spy in the pay of the Kaiser. But he got nothing out of me.

It is the secret agent to whom the penniless German waiter goes when he is fresh from the Continent. He wants a job in a large hotel or restaurant, and he knows he will have to pay for a place because of the big tips that are given. The secret agent lends him the money on condition that he keeps his ears open when the English diplomat is dining with his friends.

But it is useless to look for the spy; you would never suspect him. It has taken me years to satisfy myself as to the profession of even two or three. They are the most and most genial fellows in the German quarter, and they take the precaution not to live in it.

WHERE THE WINE FLOWS.

Their London homes are at Kensington and in the south-western suburbs. I have seen them occasionally at the London railway termini, extending a welcome to German officers in multi. And then I have gone down to the docks to see the rank and file arrive. Droves of them there were. Representatives of German employment bureaux were there, and as they led their charges to the Hundworkerheim, which is a temporary home for German emigrants, I thought of those leading the Israelites to the Promised Land. But there was no Red Sea food here. The foreigners were sure of a home in the German colony near Fitzroy Square.

It is a great night when they crowd round the fires at the cafes, and the little restaurants and lodging-houses. Welcome everywhere. The good Rhine wine flows freely, and the home-made cake from the villages of Hanover is cut into little slices and handed round, and that strange noise you hear as you pass is the German equivalent to "Rule Britannia."

An old lady came here from Leipzig years ago recognizes a newcomer from the same place and rushes across the room to embrace him.

"And how is, Rudolf?" she inquires in English.

The freshman does not understand her speech.

"Poor boy," the old lady says, patting him on the back. "Not yet know Leagleesh. Of course of course."

A SONG OF THE HOMELAND.

"But he will know it soon," a dozen voices call. "He will know it soon."

And then the little orchestra strikes up with Faust or Traviata, and the voices lower to whispers.

Now, as the musicians reach a song in the opera that is world-famous, an old tailor with a heavy moustache and the figure of a Falstaff rises slowly and deliberately with a queer dreamy look in his eyes and breaks into melody. His voice is rich and full, and when he sits down there is not a dry eye in the room.

It is a song of the homeland, of German love and beauty. And in a few seconds the newcomers are showering invitations on the old man to join them in a favorite beverage.

But the German immigrant picture I like most to ponder is the picture I have seen in the Thames sometimes, in the early morning, as the stars began to fade away, and the white and green and red lights of the moving craft vanished, and the crimson shafts from the Eastern quiver darted quickly across the whitening sky.

The central figure was a great ship steaming upwards through the Pool. Bunches of eager white faces were at the port-holes, and leaning over the vessel's sides, their strained eyes towards London, their star of hope. Crowning round was a German settler come to give an early welcome to his relatives.

While away west, on London Bridge, a band of homeless Britishers stood wondering, and cursing and shivering.

NATIONS AT TEA.

In England, France and Germany tea is made in much the same pleasing way but in other countries the method of enjoying the cup which cheers is more picturesque ceremony. In China, for example, a large, artistic cup is set in a brass or silver holder, and in this cup the tea is placed and covered with boiling water. A little saucer which just fits it is placed inside the cup to keep in the steam and flavor of the tea. When it is drawn it is poured from the big cup into dainty little ones no bigger than an eggshell. The method followed in Japan is almost similar. Tea-making in Russia is a simple process involving merely the use of a samovar and a slice of lemon or of lime. In Java tea is served in broad flat cups, and flavored with Batavia arrack, and in Formosa it is steeped with tea flowers and one or two orange flowers. For their tea-drinking the Uruguayans employ silver tubes, each of which has at the end a ball-like strainer known as a bomba or bombilla. In Martinique an aromatic tea is used, and a peculiar liqueur made by the monks and by the old French housewives is added.

Men who give up anything give up everything.

If they don't hurt us, we can afford to laugh at the mistakes of other people.

CREDITON.

Old Sol. is working overtime just now. Everybody remarks how hot it is. At night we resort to the balconies, lawns and hammocks for a breath of cool air. Some of our people are feeding their hens cracked ice to keep them from laying hard boiled eggs. The thick dust adds to the misery. It is to be hoped that a change will take place very soon.—The Misses Ollie and Pearl Holtzman have returned to Chicago where they will continue their studies in the Deaconess Hospital.—Charles Ewald of Akrona, Ohio, is visiting his parents for a few days.—The Misses Edna and Gertrude Eilber of Ubly, Mich., are visiting their uncle Mr. H. Eilber M.P.P. and other relatives.—Mr. and Mrs. Russel Huxtable, Harry Beaver and Harry F. Eilber of Hamilton spent the holidays here.—Mr. James Mills of St. Thomas has been visiting Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Sambrook the past week.—Herb Young was in London on Saturday and Sunday visiting his parents.—Fred Irish of the Bank of Commerce staff is spending his holidays at home.—Mrs. Valentine Ratz of New Hamburg is visiting her daughter Mrs. Chas. Zwicker this week.—Thomas Trevethick and wife and nephew Victor Keetle spent the holidays in London.—Dominion Day passed off quietly. Our people spent the day mostly by going to the Bend or Centralia.—Rev. J. G. Litt, P. E. of Berlin conducted the first quarterly service in the Evangelical church last Saturday and Sunday.—Mr. and Mrs. Dan. Sweitzer leaves to-day for a few months' visit with Will Lewis and wife in Algonquin Park.—Miss Madeline Bertrand is visiting her uncle and aunt, Mr. and Mrs. Israel Smith of Hamilton.—Mrs. Mary Beaver was taken suddenly ill with heart trouble on Sunday and at one time her condition was quite serious. We are pleased to learn however that she is improving.—F. W. Clark is putting in a furnace in the dwelling he recently bought from H. Beaver.—Miss Marion McDiarmid of the Victoria Hospital Nurses Staff London spent Monday in town the guest of Mrs. Herb K. Eilber.—On Monday evening our Brownies went to Exeter to play that team a return match and truly 'browned" the boys of that town by a score of 14—3. The youngsters are highly elated over their victory.—On Saturday our 'Stars" left in two autos for Fullerton to play that town a double-header but on the way out one of the autos was put out of business by a bad tire and our boys managed to get five miles from their destination by 4 p.m. Telephone connection was then made and the other auto was then put into requisition to take the other members of the team to town. Only one game was played which resulted in a score of 6—5 in favor of the Fullarton boys. They got four runs in against our boys in the first innings. It will be seen by the final score that some splendid ball playing was done during the remainder of the game. The condition of the ground is blamed for the big score in the beginning. The game was played on a sod field and the player couldn't judge a ball at all. Teddy pitched like a 'league comer". Ikey and King made connection with the ball and several times in the right place and made him look a comet. heT new recruit Bill Motz surprised them all. His work was splendid and when he shoots that left-hand at the first base the ball goes fast and fiery. The boys are still talking of this splendid treatment received in Fullarton. Everything was done to make it agreeable. Although the visiting team, the ywere repeatedly cheered when good work was done. We can assure the team when it comes here for a return match that we will give them the same glad hand. Now to the crippled auto. It had been left five miles out of town. In the meantime the experienced and professional tire-fixers got busy and felt perfectly sure of their job. The boys piled in and everything was as happy as a marriage bell when the bumps began again. The repair kit was brought out again and the tire repaired for the seventh time. As it was getting past midnight, the boys thought they might as as well wait until morning and give the patch another chance to stick. The soft stones were picked out for pillows and the weary workers soon forgot home and mother and were passing the time in Slumberland. At daybreak the funeral procession started again and so continued until 7 a.m. when the car arrived in town with a tired bunch of boys.

HARPLEY

Mr. Thos. Fallis accompanied by his brother, Mr. W. B. Fallis of California, spent part of last week visiting with friends in Detroit.—Mrs. Manuel Hodgin visited at Mr. F. B. Hodgins a few days last week.—The fall wheat in this vicinity is ripening fast and promises to be a fair crop.—Messrs. Thos. and Robert Turnbull accompanied by Mrs. W. B. Turnbull and Mrs. M. Baker of Brewster passed through our burg in an auto Friday enroute for Sarnia to attend the funeral of the late Mrs. R. J. Turnbull. Many friends sympathize with the bereaved relatives. Deceased was a former resident of Brewster.

ELIMVILLE

The death occurred at the family homestead, River Road, Blanshard, on Monday of Mrs. Robert Bonis one of the oldest of the first settlers of this section, and the mother of one of Blanshard's most highly esteemed families It is over sixty years since Mrs. Bonis came with her husband to Usborne and she resided here until 30 years ago when theymoved to Blanshard Township The remains were brought here for interment on Wednesday of last week. She was in her eightieth year.

CENTRALIA

The 1st of July has come and gone again and we believe that Centralia had her share of the visitors, the day being about ideal. Strawberries and cream were served on the park by the ladies and the proceeds for the afternoon amounted to about $220. In the evening the Ladies' Aid Concert was a success andthe church well filled. Mr. Pink of London, Miss Storry of Markham and Miss Lillian Elliot supplied the program and every number was well received and also well rendered, as each number was highly encored and responded to. The proceeds amounted to nearly $51.

The baseball tournament proved the great attraction of the day, and three good games were played. In the draw Granton and Exeter came together for the morning game; and Brinsley and Centralia for the afternoon game. Granton had a noted pitcher from Forest, one Waddell by name but not "Rube". He proved easy compared with Carling for Exeter and the game resulted as follows.—

Exeter		Granton
Palmer, 1st,	2	Lang	1
Boyle, 2nd,	1	Waddell	2
Carling, p.,	1	Morrison	0
S. Bawden 3rd,	1	Downing	0

Granton 0 0 0 1 0 0 0 3 0—4
Strike Outs—Carling 13, Waddell 8
Umpires—T. Boyle and P. Simpson.

The Centralia Brinsley game in the afternoon ran into a long score and ended in favor of Centralia, 19-13.

The evening game was played between the winners of the morning and afternoon games, Exeter and Centralia and resulted in a victory for Exeter, 5-2, Exeter thus getting the $15 prize and Centralia the $10 prize. The game in detail follows.—

Mr. John Wilson, while working on the house of Mr. Thos. Mitchell, had the misfortune to fall and fracture his hip and also break a bone in his wrist. He is getting along nicely, but will be confined to the house for several weeks.—The sacred concert given by the choir on Sunday evening was perhaps one of the best given in Centralia. The choir rendered several beautiful selections, assisted by C. J. Pink of London and Miss Elliott, and Mrs. A. Andrew of Exeter. Mr. Pink and Miss Elliott each sang a beautiful solo. And the choir feel quite elated at the results, as the collections during the day were for the choir to provide music. The leader, Mr. A. Hicks deserves credit for the able manner and success the choir are making.—The weather man has been handing out some extremely hot record-breaking weather for a few days. A good rain would be welcome as vegetation is about at a standstill and the farmer reports the wheat ripening up so fast.—Rev. Blatchford preached his initial sermons on Sunday and he made an excellent impression on his hearers.—The visitors over the holiday were many. Mr. Geo. Hicks and his daughter of Iowa, are guests of Byron Hicks; Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Wood at the Misses Wilson's; Mrs. Hedden of London with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. R Handford; Mr. A. McNevin of London at J. English's.—Miss Kate Elliott of London at home; Mr. C. Pink of London at A. Hicks; Mr. Geo. Andrew and niece of Elimville with Mr. and Mrs. S. Andrew. Dennis O'Brien wears a broad smile over the arrival of a new girl.—The baseball boys presented Harold Swann with a beautiful gold-headed umbrella on Saturday evening last. Harold has been one of the pillars of the club and will be greatly missed.

CHISELHURST

Rev. J. E. J Millyard of Hensall on Sunday afternoon preached for the first time in the Methodist church here to a very large congregation, despite the very sultry weather. On Thursday last his pupils presented him with an address and a 'Gentleman's Companion" The following is the address.

DEAR MR. SWAN.—

We the pupils of S.S. No. 4 Usborne learn withregret that you are about to leave us. When we think of the days that are gone and you as our teacher we feel that you have done all you could to helpus along in every way that would make us better girls and boys. We thank you for your Christian example. You have you often told us that we are imitators We believe we are and we wish to be like youin this respect. When we think of the work you are about to engage in working for the master we feel that it is a step higher. We therefore say good-bye with less regrets than we otherwise would. Please accept the 'Gentleman's Companion" as a slight token of our appreciation of you rwork and example. Our wish is that you may often come to see us. If this cannot be we want the next best to hear from you for we know your letters will always bring cheering news.—Signed in behalf of the pupils. Leda Harding, T. Skinner, V. Pincombe, F. Coates. Mr. Swan made a suitable reply and thanked the children for their present.

BETTER THAN SPANKING

Spanking does not cure children of bed wetting. There is a constitutional cause for this trouble. Mrs. M. Summers, Box W. 840, Windsor, Ont., will send free to any mother her successful home treatment with full instructions. Send no money but write her to-day if your children trouble you in this way. Don't blame the child, the chances are it can't help it. This treatment also cures adults and aged people troubled with urine difficulties by day or night.

WOODHAM

On Tuesday afternoon, June 28, a very interesting ceremony took place in this village,when three foundation stones were "well and truly laid" in the new Orange Hall. At six o'clock the Rev. W. R. Vance, acting chair, called L. O. L. 492 to take charge of the stone bearing the lodge number. Worshipful Master J. W. Skinner directed the brethern in the beautiful service of the order. Bro. Whitfield Switzer read a list of former masters of the lodge, the names of the present officers, the present officers, the building committee and of the contractors. These names to be placed in the stone. The honor of laying the stone was graciously passed over to Mrs. Brethour, sr., who for 50 years loyally supported her late husband in building up the society. The silver trowel used on this occasion was presented to Mrs. Brethour by Miss Marjorie Switzer, who in return was presented with an engraved silver cup. The fifel and drum band gave hearty support to the proceedings.

The second ceremony was laid upon the Canadian Order of Chosen Friends which was presented in the person of M. L. Beavers. In a short address Mr. Beavers pointed out the unique character of this order, in that it receives as members both men and women. He was then presented with a trowel from the hand of Miss Hazel Brethour, who also received a cup.

FAIRFIELD

The Trustees and Supporters of S. S. No. 1, Stephen, together with their wives and families met at the school on Thursday evening last and enjoyed a pleasant social time, the occasion being the last day of the term and the departure of the teacher, who has been beloved and appreciated during her term here. Speeches, songs, etc., and a dainty supper of ice cream, etc., were dispensed, and the teacher presented with a cabinet of silver and an address,which follows.—

June 29th, 1911.

To Miss Dorothy Cooper,

Dear Miss Cooper,—We, the Trustees and supporters of S. S. No. 1, Township of Stephen, having learned of your contemplated departure from among us, have met this evening for the purpose of expressing in some tangible way our appreciation of the kindly interest you have taken in the welfare of our children during the time you have been with us.

During the past two and a-half years in which you have taught in our section you have become endeared to our hearts by the untiring care and watchfulness you have exercised over our children in their moral as well as their mental training, and we hope the pleasant relationship formed in the school and in the section will not soon be forgotten.

We assure you we have every reason to regret our loss, but we pray that every success may attend you. We have no doubt that our loss will be another's gain.

In order to show our esteem and our friendship, we ask you to accept this cabinet of silver, hoping that in the coming years it may recall some pleasant recollections of the days spent in our midst.

Signed on behalf of the Trustees and section by Wm. J. Bowden, Wm. J. Robinson, Wm. White.

LUCAN—A very pretty wedding was solemnized on Wednesday afternoon at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Sproule, Lucan, Ont., when their daughter, Annie Lilistan, was united in marriage to Mr. George Albert Pring, of London. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. Mr. Lowe, of Trinity Church Lucan.

Always the cook says: "Stir Your Flour"
No lumps, you see. Aerates the flour, making it lighter.
Put FIVE ROSES in your sifter.
Never soft and sticky — never lumpy, musty, weedy.
Never coarse.
Milled superfine from Manitoba's greatest wheat.
Fine, granular, very dry.
Nothing remains in the sifter—FIVE ROSES is free, heavy.
And your bread is more porous, more yielding, more appetizing.
And more Digestible.
Because the particles are finer, easier to get at by the stomach juices.
Use this very fine flour—superfine.
FIVE ROSES.

THREATENED WITH PARALYSIS

Peter E. Simmons relates his experience: "I was troubled with Nervous Debility for many years. I lay it to indiscretion and excesses in youth. I was failing, discouraged and didn't care whether I worked or not. I had tried everything who looked at me guessing my trouble imaginative disease at night. Sometimes my back ached, had pains in the back of my head, hands and feet were cold, tired in the morning, nervous, nights longer were short, over sensitive, bad memory, poor, sick. Finally in the Sunday paper I read the doctor said he found people like. I took all kinds of medicines and tried many Electrical appliances, were as electric belt for strengthening, but received little benefit. I was induced to consult Drs. Kennedy & Kennedy, though I had lost all faith in doctors. Like a drowning man I commenced the New Marvelous Treatment and it saved my life. The improvement was like magic. I could feel the vigor going through the nerves. I was cured mentally and physically. I have sent them many patients and continue to do so.

EXCURSIONS TO WESTERN CANADA

The Grand Trunk Railway System announce that on Tuesdays, June 27th, July 11th and 25th, August 8th and 22nd, September 5th and 19th, 1911, Homeseeker's excursions will be run to Western Canada from all stations in Ontario and Quebec, via Chicago and Duluth, or via Chicago, St. Paul and Minneapolis, at reduced round trip fares.

The well-known double track line of the Grand Trunk from the east to Chicago appeals to the traveller, and with the superior train service that is offered by this line, including the famous "International Limited" from Montreal daily at 9.00 a.m., and which is the finest and fastest train in Canada, many passengers will be attracted this way. The route via Chicago is a most interesting one, taking passengers through the principal cities and towns in Canada and in the States of Michigan and Indiana. In addition to this a choice seven lines between Chicago and St. Paul and Minneapolis is offered.

Owing to the great number of Canadians, who reside in Chicago, St. Paul, Minneapolis, Duluth and other cities en route, there is no doubt that the Grand Trunk will find many patrons who will take advantage of the opportunity thus afforded them for a brief visit at the stations with their friends.

Another feature that will appeal to the homeseeker is the comfortable transfer at points like Chicago, St. Paul, and Duluth into freshly ventilated clean cars, avoiding the necessity of travelling a long distance in the same car.

In addition to the above routes, the sale of tickets is also authorized via Sarnia, and the Northern Navigation Company's magnificent Steamers across Lake Huron and Lake Superior.

For further particulars apply to any Agent of the Grand Trunk Railway System, or write to Mr. J. Quinlan, District Passenger Agent, Bonaventure Station Montreal, or Mr. A. E. Duff, District Passenger Agent, Union Station, Toronto.

BRUCEFIELD.—The marriage of Jean Ross, youngest daughter of the late Rev. Jno. Ross of Brucefield will shortly take place at the home of Mr. A. McIntosh, Toronto. She will be married to George McKay, eldest son of the late Dr. McKay of Formosa, China, Presbyterian Missionary. After their marriage they will remain in the West while Mr. McKay finishes his studies. After that they intend to go out to Formosa, where they will take up missionary work.

Father Morriscy's Remedies

Now on Sale in Ontario

When Father Morriscy, the famous priest-physician of Bartibogue, N. B., died a year ago last spring, he left his prescriptions to the Sisters of the Hotel Dieu, at Chatham, to be used for the benefit of humanity and of the church.

Not being in position to make up and distribute the prescriptions themselves, the Sisters arranged with a number of gentlemen, who had been Father Morriscy's friends, to do it for them. These gentlemen working under the name of the "Father Morriscy Medicine Co., Limited," had by the first of the year placed the remedies in nearly every store in the Maritime Provinces.

So gladly were they received, and so satisfactory has been their record of cures, that the Sisters and the Company have decided to place them on sale throughout Canada.

Father Morriscy's "No. 7", for Rheumatism and the Kidneys—"No. 10", Cough Cure and Lung Tonic—"No. 11", Stomach Remedy—"No. 26", for Catarrh, and "Father Morriscy's Liniment"—can now be obtained from most dealers in this Province. If yours does not keep them write the Father Morriscy Medicine Co., MONTREAL, QUE.

FORTUNE FAVORS THE BRAVE;

OR, A LOOK INTO THE PAST

CHAPTER XXII.—(Cont'd)

If Mr. Crawshaw's household had been differently arranged these vague fears would never have come; but the curious way in which he buried himself and his belongings in the Manor House, was alarming to a heart so anxious as Darnley's.

It was altogether so unlike what one would have imagined Thomas Crawshaw would have done. People had expected a flare and a fuss to be going on perpetually at the parvenu's house; this extraordinary isolation of himself, with all his pomp and glory, was altogether not to be accounted for.

For all the outside world knew there might not have been a soul at the Manor House, and yet Darnley was only too well convinced, by careful watching in his long walks, from every one of which he scanned the manor grounds, that Mr. Crawshaw was still there.

A hundred times he had gone forward, intending to jump the gate and search once again in the gloomy woods for even one glimpse of his beloved; but he had restrained himself. His vague fears might be, after all, myths, and were he caught trespassing on the manor property, the position would neither be beneficial to Nancy, nor dignified for himself. Once again his mind was forced back to the old point; there was nothing to be done nothing! nothing!

All this old, weary turmoil of thought came to him as he walked on by his cousin's side.

Few men would have resisted the pleasure of glancing now and then at the lovely girl so close at hand; but Darnley even forgot her very existence, to say nothing of her presence.

It was a cold, raw morning, and the empty branches of the trees waved and moaned in the bleak wind, making a sort of sad harmony to his thoughts.

"You are not very lively to-day," Dorothy laughed, slightly, after a while, breaking the long pause.

The man started.

"I beg your pardon, Dolly," he said, hurriedly, "I—I did not sleep very well last night, and I am not up to much this morning."

Dorothy loked at him anxiously.

"I wish you would see Dr. Roberts when he comes to-day," she said, slowly.

Darnley laughed outright at that; it was not a very merry laugh, however.

"Dear little cos, I am all right, nothing the matter with me except laziness. I have been idle too long; I must get back to work as soon as Uncle Humphrey is a bit stronger."

"I—we hoped you would have stayed over Christmas, Derry."

"Why, that is weeks on yet, and, to tell you the truth, Dolly, I have a fancy I shall go abroad at Christmas this year."

Dorothy made no answer at first; the bright, happy look had gone out of her face as quickly as the sun hides behind a cloud.

"You will join Aunt Anne?" she questioned, after a pause.

He shook his head.

"No, I shall go East, if I go at all."

"And meet Merefield," Dorothy added, her manner grown very quiet all of a sudden.

"And meet Merefield, as you say. By the way, Dolly, what took Merefield away?—It was quite a new idea of his. I always look upon our dear old Merefield as the most conservative man I know, and the least adventurous. Travelling seems quite out of his line."

Dorothy had grown very red for a moment, but the color was dying away again quickly.

"Merefield went because—well, because he is a stupid boy."

Derrick Darnley looked at her confused face.

"Which, being translated, means," he said, gently, "that Miss Dorothy Leicester is at the bottom of this sudden and wild visit to the East. Am I not right?"

Dorothy nodded her head.

"Quite right," she repeated, briefly.

Darnley paused for an instant, then he said, with almost a touch of tenderness in his voice:

"Poor old Merefield; I am sorry for him; he is such a good chap, Dolly. I wonder you have the heart to treat him badly."

"Is being honest and true to myself treating him badly?" asked the girl, suddenly; her lips were trembling, and her breath came quick and short. "I could not do as he wanted, Derry, so there was an end of the matter."

"I am sorry," was all Darnley could say, as he ceased, "not only on his account—your father had set his heart on the match, Dolly."

"I would do much to save my father any pain, but this I cannot do."

The man beside her gave her an impatient glance; it seemed to him that she was strangely obstinate on this question, with the obstinacy of a spoiled child.

"What is there against Merefield?" he asked, urged, he knew not exactly by what feeling, to get to the bottom of this matter; "he is as good a man as ever walked the earth, and simply worships you, Dorothy."

She made no reply, and her silence suddenly assumed a new aspect in Darnley's eyes.

He came to a standstill—a wave of sympathy and affection swept over him. Was he wronging her?

"Dear little Dorothy," he said, taking her hands in his, "forgive me for probing the wound so closely; I see, I understand there is some one else who comes before Duncan, is that not so, dear?"

Dorothy's cheeks were glowing with a lovely color, her eyes were downcast, he could not read the expression in them, but he had no need to do that, for she answered him very softly, and he knew that he had guessed right the very first time.

"Yes," she said, slowly, "there is some one else who—who comes before Duncan."

Darnley gripped her hands still closer.

"Dear little cousin," his voice was as tender as a woman's, "how blind I have been not to see this! Won't you confide in me, Dolly, trust in me? Perhaps I might help you, dear, and if there is any difficulty smooth it away."

The girl looked up at him startled and pale.

"Don't you understand?" she whispered, with a blush of modesty coming and going on her face, her heart thrilling at his firm clasp. "Don't you understand that it is——"

Dorothy stopped, it was not easy to go on.

"Do not be frightened; speak out, dear."

Once more she glanced up at him, there was nothing to help her in his face, nothing but kindly sympathy and brotherly affection.

"There is nothing to say," she murmured, almost with a sob. "Let us go on."

"Wait!"

Like a flash of lightning across a dark sky the truth had suddenly come to Derrick Darnley. He loosened his hold, and almost staggered back in the sudden amazement and pain that the knowledge brought. It was an impossibility to speak at first; but he roused himself—this matter must be put right without an instant's delay.

"Wait, dear," he said, gently, "there is no need to put your thoughts into words. I have guessed your secret, child, and I am sorry. How sorry you can never—never know, my dear little cousin. My sister Dorothy, whom I have loved ever since she was a golden-haired baby, listen to me now." He came nearer again, and took her hands in his once more. "You must root out this folly from your young life—root it out now, at once. I know this man for whom you have, perhaps, broken poor Merefield's loyal, loving heart. We will not utter his name, it is enough I know him well—none better—and knowing him, I tell you, dear, that if you refuse to believe me you will bring nothing but blight and disappointment on your future. He can be nothing to you, for he is not free; it is best to tell you this, dear," as poor Dorothy flinched and tried to draw her hands away. "Yes, best, cruel as I may seem now, for his life, his heart, his very soul has passed out of his keeping, and he belongs absolutely to another woman. He can't help himself; it is fate—blame fate, not him; but you are so young, a mere child. You have drifted into the madness of loving this man as a leaf drifts down the stream. Then, dear cousin, be warned, be guided by me—cast him out of your heart as worthless and dead, for such he will always be to you. Dear—dear Dorothy, forgive me"—for the girl had wrenched her hands from his and buried her face in them—"don't make my unhappiness still greater by the reflection that I have hurt your gentle, loving self. Only tell me that you will forgive me, dear, and I shall be satisfied."

Dorothy hesitated a moment, then lifted her face from her hands; there were tears on her dark lashes, but a wan, faint smile was round her pretty lips.

"Forgive you, Derry," she repeated, rather weakly. "Why, of course, dear—there is nothing to forgive—it—it has all been one foolish mistake, and the sooner I forget it the better."

She drew her cloak round her with a trembling touch.

"I—I think we have been out so long papa may want me," she said, uncertainly.

She turned to go back, but she had only taken one step before she was beside him again.

"Derry," she whispered, her face dyed with a deep red flush, "promise me—promise me that you will not despise me for—for—my——"

The man bowed his head and pressed his lips to her small, trembling fingers.

"Dear Dorothy, dear, sweet Dorothy, what brother ever despises his sister?—and you are my sister, you know."

Dorothy gave him one glance of thanks from her moist eyes, then turning, ran swiftly away, leaving Darnley almost overwhelmed with regret and vexation that he should have been so blind.

"Poor child," he muttered, sorrowfully, "but, thank God! she is only a child, and will grow out of this strange fancy. Ah! if my path could only be as straight and happy in the future as Merefield's will be! I must bring him home—Dolly is really fond of him, and all will go well yet."

His eyes went across the wintry landscape to the corner which held his very life, and the old troubled shade fell over his face again.

CHAPTER XXIII.

To Lady Merefield's inexpressible delight, at the end of a fortnight's stay, Derrick Darnley suddenly declared his intention of returning to London.

Sir Humphrey was now so well on the road to convalescence that there was no excuse ready to urge the young man to reconsider his proposal, and to the countess' surprise, Dorothy seemed to offer neither remonstrance nor objection to her cousin's departure.

"You are quite right to go," she said briskly, as they sat at luncheon. "It must be very dull down here, Derry; and you can do a heap of things for me in town."

No one, seeing her bright face, with its pretty smile, could have guessed how much it cost Dorothy to utter these commonplace words.

Darnley himself felt a sense of complete satisfaction as he heard them.

"It was only a fancy—a child's fancy," he told himself. "She has forgotten all about it," and he dismissed the matter from his mind henceforth forever, which was just what Dorothy wished him to do.

Now that the scales were fallen from her eyes the girl had time and comprehension to see the change in this man.

She noticed his deep, troubled silences, his worn, anxious face, and the pain that never left his mouth. It scattered at once the sensation of shamed modesty that had followed on that brief conversation in the avenue, and it went very far to help to cure Dorothy of her hopeless love for him. Very far, but not far enough; for, despite her brave, calm bearing, the proud, spoiled child of fortune was suffering almost more than she had done in the first days of her father's illness.

But Dorothy had more than thought for herself in her heart, and when she had got over the first sharp pangs her one desire was an earnest one to help him in some way; she did not care how.

She was musing over this while Darnley assured her that Ripstone was never dull, and chatted away to Lady Merefield—suddenly grown most gracious towards him—about his plans and projects for the future.

Lady Merefield was pleased to be much interested in these.

"You must be a very clever young man," she declared, "to get so much money for a few designs."

Derry laughed shortly in reply.

His hopes and ambitions had all gone to the wall of late. He had lost many a good thing while he had been away on his American trip. For a time he had loathed his profession, and all belonging to it, but all at once a curious hatred of inactivity, and a longing to be back at work, had come to him; and so he was going.

If he stayed on here, so near to Nancy, he should end by losing all self-control, and acting in some desperate way that would be but adding, perhaps, fresh sorrow to her lot.

Yes, he must go, and go quickly. Yet he dreaded to leave her alone, without even a friendly hand to comfort and console her.

Once or twice he had longed to break the silence, and utter her name to Dorothy; but something—he scarcely knew what—had checked him. Perhaps it was a conviction that Dorothy had made several overtures of friendship to the Manor House, and had had to submit to insolence and vulgarity which her love for Nancy alone prevented her from resenting.

EXPECT AND ATTEMPT.

Almighty One, from Thee we draw
Each breath by which we live:
We thank Thee for the man who saw
This light which Thou dost give.
He said, while he so bravely trod
Where other lights were dim,
"Those who expect great things from God
Attempt great things for Him."

And we who in Thy name believe
Shall find it even so;
We shall all needful strength receive
As forth for Thee we go.
With this in view our feet are shod,
While all our lamps we trim;—
"Those who expect great things from God
Attempt great things for Him?"

"Increase our faith," O Lord, we pray;
With power our lives enfold:
Take all our doubts and fears away
And make us brave and bold.
Henceforth in Thee we put our trust,
Our all Thine own shall be:
Since we "expect great things," we must
"Attempt great things" for Thee.

Until each soul that yet survives
Is taught Thy name to own,
Our gifts our treasures and our lives
We yield to Thee alone.
That which of old Thy servants heard
We now expect to see:
Let us according to Thy word
"Attempt great things" for Thee.

MANY KINDS OF KNIVES.

One Firm Has 9,000 Patterns on Its Books for Germany Alone.

An extraordinary thing about the cutlery trade is the variety of knives made. At the Suffolk works in Sheffield, for instance, they have 10,000 different patterns on the book. They make sometimes 3,000 patterns to order at one time, says Cassier's Magazine.

The same thing is true of the large cutlery works at Solingen, in Germany. One firm has 9,000 patterns for Germany alone. New ones are constantly coming out.

The Suffolk works have averaged ten new patterns a week for two years. This is a trade that will not be standardized, which is one reason why America has failed hitherto to compete.

POOR BABY.

"Nurse, has the baby had a powder?"

"Yes, ma'am."

"And those hypophosphites?"

"Yes, ma'am!"

"And the magnesia?"

"Yes, ma'am."

"Did you put a poultice on his back?"

"Yes, ma'am."

"And a cold compress on his chest?"

"Yes, ma'am."

"And he's no better?"

"No, ma'am."

"How strange! I think we had better send for the doctor."

Mother—"Don't you think you've had enough pudding?" Freddie—"No, ma; I don't feel ill yet!"

PURIFIED HIS BLOOD

Dr. Morse's Indian Root Pills Healed Mr. Wilson's Sores

When the sewers of the body—bowels, kidneys and skin ducts—get clogged up, the blood quickly becomes impure and frequently sores break out over the body. The way to heal them, as Mr. Richard Wilson, who lives near London, Ont., found, is to purify the blood. He writes:

"For some time I had been in a low, depressed condition. My appetite left me and I soon began to suffer from indigestion. Quite a number of small sores and blotches formed all over my skin. I tried medicine for the blood and used many kinds of ointments, but without satisfactory results. What was wanted was a thorough cleansing of the blood, and I looked about in vain for some medicine that would accomplish this.

At last Dr. Morse's Indian Root Pills were brought to my notice, and they are one of the most wonderful medicines I have ever known. My blood was purified in a very short time, sores healed up, my indigestion vanished. They always have a place in my home and are looked upon as the family remedy."

Dr. Morse's Indian Root Pills cleanse the system thoroughly. Sold by all dealers at 25c a box. 6

THE FARM

Useful Hints for the Tiller of the Soil

THICK VS. THIN FARMING.

"Thick" and "thin" farming sounds like very awkward terms but after all are not such a bad way of putting it. When we spread out our work becomes thin and our crop thinner. It we concentrate our work on a small crop the crop is heavier.

It is hard to say just how much crop one man and team can tend, as conditions vary with the locality. In one locality one man may handle twice as much crop as in another, owing to difference in soil condition, length of season, rankness of weeds, climate, length of drouths, length of days. It is safe, however, to say that when a man is planning his work for the season and is planning for the full capacity of his team, if he will reduce his crop a generous third he will find that the crop is still beyond the capacity of his team and many things must be neglected.

If the season is favorable the thin farmer does well. If the season is a bad one he cannot save his crop and may have a complete failure. If crops are well put in, well tended and well drained they may be cut short by extremes of drouth and moisture, but failures are almost impossible.

NEWLY HATCHED CHICKS.

Remember that when the chick is hatched it has enough food supplied by nature in the yolk of the egg to last it for several days. It is, therefore, not necessary to crowd a lot of food into the chick for fear that it will die from hunger. There seems to be an inclination on the part of beginners to force the little chick to eat. They are overloaded. It has been demonstrated that a chick will live without food for five days, but on the sixth will begin to droop and finally die from starvation; it simply means that it is not necessary for chicks to be forced to eat before the third or fourth day. At the end of 24 hours or even 36, it may be well to give them a little water or milk slightly warmed, and then a little egg and bread crumbs mixed together and placed where they can get it if they want it. If they do not care to eat or do not seem to know enough to eat just let them go. Don't force them to stay out and keep putting them back where the food is when they want to take a rest and sleep. They are little and look as though they did not know what to do, but nature has provided some intuitive power that makes them want to eat a little and rest and doze for a time. They are like a baby who eats a little and then sleeps only to awaken to eat a little more. Little and often is the rule for feeding the baby chicks.

Cleanliness is an essential factor in having success with baby chicks. The brooder house must be kept clean and free from litter that has been soiled and droppings that have not been absorbed. Many diseases will crop out through foul conditions. The runways should be well spaded daily to insure fresh ground and pure conditions. The best litter for the young chicks to work in is cut clover and later when they get a little older barn sweepings. The cut clover is a good absorbent and will keep dry a long time in the coop, if properly ventilated. There should not be too much litter on the floor of the brooder house while the chicks are a few days old, but as they grow the amount should be increased in order to make them scratch harder for their food. This exercise makes for strong legs and good appetites.

WASTED HINTS.

A sea captain's wife tells this story of a maiden lady, sister of one of the owners of the ship on which she once made a long voyage. She had very decided opinions on most matters, and she and the captain had many spirited arguments at the dinner-table.

The captain's wife, a meek, submissive little soul, fearing that in the heat of argument her husband might say something to offend their august passenger, was in the habit of kicking him on the shins to hint at moderation. Nevertheless, all these reminders passed unheeded.

One day she administered a more vigorous kick than usual, and noticed an expression of pain flit across the face of the matron who sat opposite her.

"O, Mr. Brown, was that your shin?" she asked.

"Not at all, Blinkie," said the matron meekly; "it's been my shins ever the voyage, ma'am."

WEAK STOMACHS MADE STRONG

Through Tonic Treatment with Dr. Williams' Pink Pills

After all has been said about indigestion and stomach trouble, there is only one way to get a real cure. The stomach must be made strong enough to do its own work. Indigestion disappears when the stomach has been made strong enough to digest ordinary plain food. This strength can only be given the stomach through the tonic treatment supplied by Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, which enrich the blood, strengthens the nerves and thus enables the stomach to perform the duties which nature intended it should. In every neighborhood you can find people who have been cured of indigestion or other stomach troubles after a fair use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills and this is the best proof that they are the one remedy to suggestibly do this. Mrs. D. B. McLean, Sterling, N. S., says:—"For a couple of years I suffered very much from indigestion with most of the accompanying painful symptoms. As a result I became very much run down, and as the medicines I tried did not give me any relief I grew melancholy and unhappy, and felt as though my constitution was breaking down. Quite accidently, my attention was called to Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and I decided to try them, and I am happy to say that they effected a complete cure, and made my stomach as strong as ever it had been. I am glad to say a few words in praise of the medicine that cured me, and I hope my experience will benefit some other sufferer."

Enrich the blood and you banish most of the every day ailments of humanity, and you can enrich the quickest and best by the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. Sold by all medicine dealers or by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

TO AN AUTHORITY.

A country schoolmaster was examining his class.

"If a carpenter wants to cover a roof 20ft. by 40ft. with boards 1ft. broad and 10ft. long, how many will he want?" asked the schoolmaster.

A new boy took up his hat and made for the door.

"Where are you off to?" asked the master.

"To find a carpenter," replied the boy. "He ought to know better than we fellers."

If allowed to roam over your house those few innocent looking house flies may cause a real tragedy any day, as they are known to be the principal agents for the spread of those deadly diseases, typhoid fever, diphtheria and smallpox.

For Asthma and Catarrh.—It is one of the chief recommendations of Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil that it can be used internally with as much success as it can outwardly. Sufferers from asthma and catarrh will find that the Oil when used according to directions will give immediate relief. AS INSTRUCTED.

"I'd like you to help me a little," said a vagrant, poking his head into a country store.

"Why don't you help yourself?" asked the proprietor.

"Thank you, I will," said the tramp, picking up a bottle of pickles and two loaves of bread, and then vanishing.

WHEN THE WORM TURNS.

The strangest animal in the world is a little green worm found on the coasts of Brittany and Normandy. On a fine, warm day, when the tide goes out, myriads of these "convoluta paradoxa" can be seen on the sands; but the moment the incoming tide touches them they vanish underground. Their mode of living is very extraordinary. When hatched, they feed voraciously on tiny sea-plants. In a week or so their bodies become filled with these green plants, and then the worms strike. They refuse absolutely to eat any more, and the labor of nourishing them is thrown on the plants. The little green plants live inside the worms, just in the same way as outside, getting their food from the air which is digested by the worms. But, as age advances, the plants cannot keep up with the demands of their hosts. Then the worms turn on their guests, and devour them all. But this seals their fate. They are too lazy to feed in the regular way, and so they quickly die of starvation.

SUPERSTITIOUS JAPANESE.

It is doubtful if any syllable in the Japanese language occurs more frequently than "shi." Yet no Jap would willingly use it in the first day of the year, or he will certainly have bad luck for the remaining three hundred and sixty-four. And in the land of Nippon most people believe in the evil power of the fox. To his evil eye is attributed all manner of ill-luck. Yet Brer Fox is supposed to be the servant and protector of Imari, one of the gods of old Japan; and more from a sense of fear than anything else, the Japs worship Imari through his guardian spirit the wily fox. Nor would a Japanese child kill a frog, for should they do so, then surely paralysis will seize them. A tea-leaf in the cup means a guest is coming, according to the Jap. The direction from which he will come is told by the position of the leaf.

SAFETY FOR CHILDREN DURING HOT WEATHER

Every mother knows, or should know, the danger her baby runs during the hot summer months. Summer complaints come quickly and develop so rapidly that often before the mother realizes her baby is ill he is beyond all help. Every mother of small children should keep a box of Baby's Own Tablets in the house. A Tablet now and then will keep baby's bowels working regularly and his little stomach sweet—this is the secret of keeping baby healthy and of warding off cholera infantum, diarrhoea, dysentery and all other dreaded summer complaints. The Tablets are guaranteed free from all injurious drugs and may be given to the newborn babe with perfect safety. They are sold by all medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Chappie—"I'd just like to know what you mean by being engaged to both Cholly and me at once?" Miss Pinkie—"Why, bless you, there is no harm done; you can't either of you afford to marry me, you know."

It is a Liver Pill.—Many of the ailments that man has to contend with have their origin in a disordered liver, which is a delicate organ, peculiarly susceptible to the disturbances that come from irregular habits or lack of care in eating and drinking. This accounts for the great many liver regulators now pressed on the attention of sufferers. Of these there is none superior to Parmelee's Vegtable Pills. Their operation though gentle is effective, and the most delicate can use them.

Youngly—"Did you ever notice that the matrimonial process is like making a call? You go to adore, you ring the belle, and you give your name to the maid." Cynicus—"Yes, and then you're taken in."

REST AND HEALTH TO MOTHER AND CHILD.

MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP has been used for over SIXTY YEARS by MILLIONS of MOTHERS for their CHILDREN WHILE TEETHING, with PERFECT SUCCESS. It SOOTHES the CHILD, SOFTENS the GUMS, ALLAYS all PAIN; CURES WIND COLIC, and is the best remedy for DIARRHŒA. It is absolutely harmless. Be sure and ask for "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup," and take no other kind. Twenty-five cents a bottle.

PROOF AT LAST.

During some recent manoeuvres a private had his skull badly injured. The doctor told him that the brain was exposed.

"My brains exposed?" the injured one cried in surprise.

"Yes, my man!" replied the doctor.

"Please, doctor, do write and tell my father about them," said the private, "he always swore I had none!"

The Heiress—"But why should I marry you? I don't love you." Her Suitor—"Oh, that's all right. I shan't be at home very much, you know."

"Where are you going for your summer vacation?"

"Don't know yet. But I suppose it will be some place forty miles from a bath tub."

A Cure for Fever and Ague.—Disturbance of the stomach and liver always precede attacks of fever and ague, showing derangement of the digestive organs and deterioration in the quality of the blood. In these ailments Parmelee's Vegetable Pills have been found most effective, abating the fever and subduing the ague in a few days. There are many who are subject to these distressing disturbances and to these there is no better preparation procurable as a means of relief.

"I wouldn't be in Brown's shoes just now." "Why not?" "He left them in the cellar, and they dumped four tons of coal on them before Brown was up."

Gents,—I cured a valuable hunting dog of mange with MINARD'S LINIMENT after several veterinaries had treated him without doing him any permanent good.

Prop. of Grand Central Hotel, Drummondville, Aug. 3, '04.

Remember that though words cannot break bones, they often break hearts.

Why is it that so many people suffer with Lame Back? Hamlins Wizard Oil will cure it and for Aches, Sprains, Bruises, Cuts, Burns, etc., there is nothing better.

Peckem—"You are not married yet?" Youngbach—"No, but I'm engaged, and that's as good as being married." Peckem—"It's a whole lot better, if only you knew."

Nearly all infants are more or less subject to diarrhoea and such complaints while teething and as this period of their lives is the most critical, mothers should not be without a bottle of Dr. J. D. Kellogg's Dysentery Cordial. This medicine is a specific for such complaints and is highly spoken of by those who have used it. The proprietors claim it will cure any case of cholera or summer complaint.

A penn'orth of practice is worth a pound of preaching.

Minard's Liniment Cures Distemper.

Do not be quick until you are sure.

After making a most careful study of the matter, U. S. Government scientists state definitely that the common house fly is the principal means of distributing typhoid fever, diphtheria and smallpox Wilson's Fly Pads kill the flies and the disease germs, too.

LOCAL DOINGS.

Mr. Wm. Fletcher is on the sick list.

Mr. Wm. Jacobi is ill of appendicitis at his home in Exeter North.

July 13th is the date of the James street Sunday school picnic to Grand Bend.

Miss Victoria Miners has accepted a position as teacher in Goderich for the next year.

The manufacture of the new Canadian Silver Dollar at the Mint in Ottawa will start shortly.

The wrinkles caused by worry are the results of worrying over something that worry could not help.

A. E. Millson, divinity student, occupied the James Street pulpit Sunday and preached interesting sermons.

Mr. Chas. Box, Stephen, lost a mare, valued at $200, last week, as a result of being struck by lightning when pasturing in a field.

Rev. Powell of the Main Street gave a most interesting and profitable address at the James Street League on Tuesday evening.

The service at the Trivitt Memorial church on Sunday evening was conducted by the rector on the lawn at the rear of the church. The innovation was a very acceptable one and much appreciated by both rector and congregation.

Hot, Hotter, Hottest.—That is the kind of weather we have been having of late 101 in the shade was registered in Toronto on Sunday and Monday beingu the hottest on record, while in Exeter it reached 98, and it felt just as hot as it really was.

When cane-bottom seats become slack through use they are uncomfortable and unsightly. Sponge both sides of the cane thoroughly with hot soapsuds in which a handful of salt has been dissolved, then stand the chairs in the open air. Treated like this, the seats will become as firm as when new.

An Exeter Old Boy, Mr. Arthur E. Wood, son of Mr. and Mrs. John Woods of town, was married in Winnipeg on June 28th, to Miss E. M. Brush of Toronto. Afterward the young couple left for Welwyn, Sask., to reside, Mr. Wood being manager of the Home Bank in that town. Friends here will wish the young people every prosperity.

The artesian well at the Canning Factory was completed last week at a depth of 305 feet. The water is of the very best quality and in abundance, the test being a most satisfactory one. The work of drilling was done by Messrs Mitchell & Statton of Grand Bend, who did an excellent job and the directors are highly pleased with the results.

Mr. D. Hartleib's auto met with a mishap Friday evening near Mr. James Walker's, London Road South, when a wheel and axle broke, and the machine overturning, landed himself, Misses T. Yager and N. Walters and Mr. W. May in the ditch. Luckily the machine was stopped when it overturned and no one was injured in any way.

The extreme heat of the past week has been a record-breaker being the hottest spell known in half a century, the thermometer registering Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday between 101 and 102 in the shade. Although there are no prostrations reported people generally are suffering and sweltering under such intense heat. The crops will be more or less damaged, particularly the late ones. The pasture is fast drying up and a few more such days will completely destroy it.

The late Mrs. Margaret Airth was born in Scotland, where she married James Wilson in 1857, coming to Canada the same year. Mr. Wilson died in 1878 five children surviving, James and Malcolm of Lakefield, Mrs. John McFarlane of Hamilton, L. D. and Miss Annie of Exeter. In 1889 Mrs. Vincent married James Airth of Exeter, who predeceased her several years. Deceased had been in declining health for several years. She was of a retiring disposition and esteemed by all who knew her.

Mr. Frank Hunt, of London, a former Exeter young man was married in that city on Thursday last to Miss Margaret Morris also of London, but late of Manchester England. The affair was of a quiet nature, only the immediate relatives being present and took place at the home of the bride's uncle and aunt, Mr. and Mrs. Farnworth, King Street. The happy couple are now on a honeymoon trip to Niagara Buffalo, and other points. The Advocate joins in best wishes for their future happiness and prosperity.

The Ladies Guild of the Trivitt Memorial Church will hold their annual Garden Party on the Rectory Grounds on Friday evening, July 7th. The London Harpers (four pieces) will furnish the music. Admission —Adults 15 cts. Children 10c.

WON CUP.—The Exeter Company of Volunteers brought home the Silver Cup on Friday last from the Goderich Camp. The cup was given them for High Average Company shooting at the ranges. A number of the former members of the the Exeter Band were gotten together and marshalled by Mr. N. D. Hurdon met the volunteers at the station and escorted them down town, where after an address by Mr. Hurdon and the usual cheers they were disbanded. The boys seem to have thoroughly enjoyed life at camp, and they now look fit for any work.

HICKS' FORECASTS FOR JULY.—A reactionary storm period is central on the 12th, 13th, and 14th, with possibility of threatening conditions following over from the preceding storm period. Falling barometer, increase of temperature, with cloudiness and moderate rains, will be due Wednesday the 12th to Friday the 14th, all followed by change to fair and cooler weather up to the 16th. Don't forget that all storms and weather changes progress from west to east they do not strike the whole country at the same time or day. A Seismic period is central on the 11th, affecting the 4th to the 14th.

TWENTY-FOURTH YEAR. EXETER, ONTARIO, THURSDAY, JULY 13, 1911. SANDERS & CREECH

Local Items

Notwithstanding the fact that heavy rains have fallen in nearly every district in Western Ontario very little rain has fallen here and it is now several weeks since we had a good rain. A light shower fell Monday but it was only sufficient to lay the dust. Rain is badly needed. Pastures and late grains are suffering severely.

The new Canadian copper cent, just issued has on the obverse side the likeness of George V, consisting of head and of George V. consisting of head and bust, wearing the imperial crown, robe of state, and collar of the Garter, and looking to the left, with the inscription: Georgius V. Rex et Ind. Imp." On the reverse side are the words, One Cent, Canada" the date of the year within a beaded circle, surrounded by a wreath of entwined maple leaves with plain edge.

The Canadian Farm of last week speaking of the country press, says; 'Party politics may divide the men of the press, but nothing else will and behind it all there is a sincere devotion to duty and to their country's best interests. And in no section is this more forcibly shown than among those who edit and publish the country weeklies. For the most part, these men receive little of this world's goods. They work early and late—result, the man in country gets the news both local and foreign, dished up to him in good form fifty-two times a year, and all for the sum of one dollar. In no other business on earth is so much value given for the money, a fact that the average reader does not fully appreciate. The country weekly editor continues in business just the same, and by so doing is making for the well being and prosperity. What would the small town be worth without its daily or weekly paper; It would never be heard of beyond a small radius. People in towns and cities and in the country as well, sometimes forget how much they owe to the press of the day in the upbuilding of this land and in making its resources known abroad.".

WEDDED.—A quiet wedding took place on Thursday, July 6th, at the home of the bride's parents, Exeter, when Miss Della, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Nelson Kestle became the bride of Mr. John Walper of Harrow, formerly of town. The ceremony was performed at one o'clock in the presence of the immediate relatives only. After a dainty supper the young couple took the evening train for their home in Harrow. They have the best wishes of their many friends.

OURSELVES AND OTHERS

In casually glancing through the advertising columns of the Toronto Globe some two weeks ago we noticed the following advertisement,—

'NEWSPAPER PLANT FOR SALE. (describing presses and type) new, cost $2,800, sell $1600 cash. F. J. Wickwire, Crediton, Ont.

Not knowing that Brer. Wickwire was interested in a multiplicity of newspaper plants, the natural conclusion was that our friend was offering his Crediton plant for sale, and we made note of the matter in the following words,—

'We note by the Daily Globe that Mr. F. J. Wickwire is offering the plant of the Crediton Star for sale."

Apparently we inadvertently did The Star and its editor a very great wrong as in the last week's issue he states,—

'We are advertising a newspaper plant for sale, but not that of The Star. We appreciate the desire on the part of The Advocate in assisting to make the fact known, but to advertise something they know nothing about, is done, we feel sure, with a view to knocking The Star, rather than securing a sale for us."

All of which goes to show how little we know of other people's business, what a great mistake we made, what a strong desire we had to do some injury to our friend in Crediton, how we must have distorted our imagination to have taken such an absurd view out of one little advertisement, how anxious we were to assist him to make a sale, and, besides many other little ideas we might get from this sad mistake, how sorry we should be for him, for ourselves and for our mistake, and how humbly we should apologize, which we most certainly do. We would not injure him for anything, and we would be pleased to know that he has a half-dozen of plants for sale, or to keep, just as he pleases.

Not content with getting after The Advocate last week, The Crediton Star took a drive at The Times regarding a remark of the latter that The Star writer of the report of a ball game must have had a pipe dream. The Star says,

'The Times writer, who by the way indulges in pipe dreams, must have been awakened from a dream in which he was not sure whether he had been hugged or mobbed."

We do not understand the language, or what it all means, but guess it must mean something, as our friends across the way had a lengthy front-page item last week that listens like a pipe dream. But that should not be surprising, as everybody knows it was pretty hot weather the early part of last week.

Mr. M. M. Doyle shipped a car of horses to Winnipeg yesterday.

Miss Melissa Spicer is at present confined to her bed through illness.

Dr. Tennant shipped two cars of horses for the Western market Wednesday.

150 tickets were sold at the station here yesterday for the Orange celebration at Goderich.

James street Methodist church Sunday school will picnic at Grand Bend to-day (Thursday.)

Mr. John Harvey, of Usborne, is confined to his bed, suffering from an attack of appendicitis.

Ernest Harvey is learning the hardware business with Mr. W. J. Heaman, commencing his duties Monday.

An excellent portrait of Rev. D. W. Collins, rector of Trivitt Memorial church, appeared in the Buffalo Courier of Saturday last.

It is estimated that 40,000 harvest hands are needed in the West this year. A conservative estimate placed the wheat at 200,000,000 bushels.

Advocate ads. bring results.— Last week the notice regarding "Rope Lost" brought the loser and finder together. The advertising columns of The Advocate do the job every time.

Mr. John Gill, who has recently passed through a severe and critical illness is again able to be on our streets, and while being reduced considerable is much improved and shows signs of a complete recovery.

A number from here attended the football match at Brucefield on Monday evening between the team of that place and Preston. The game was a fast and interesting one and resulted in favor of Preston, in a score of 1 to 0.

Mr. Fred Hector arrived home from the Coronation on Tuesday morning last He reports a most pleasant voyage, both going and coming and the sights of the Coronation gorgeous in the extreme. Beautiful weather favored the great event throughout and it was not until he nearly arrived home that he experienced any extreme heat.

HAND MANGLED.—Mr. Jas. Sanders of Exeter North an employe of the Exeter Canning Factory, met with an unfortunate and painful accident at the factory on Tuesday morning last. He was engaged in working around the carriers, and in some way got his right hand caught between the sprocket and the chain, with the result that the hand was badly mangled. The wound was dressed by a surgeon, but it will be some time before he will have the use of the injured member.

Tenders for the heating of the Town Hall were received as follows,—T. Hawkins & Son 253.00, W. J. Heaman $300 Clare Bros., $175.00. Day—Rivers. — That the tender of Clare Bros be accepted, same to be put in according to specifications, council to remove all material in connection with old furnace, the property of the council.—Carried.

Rivers—Day—That the reeve and clerk borrow $1000 for current expense.—Carried.

Walper—Rivers—That caretaker of the cemetery see Mr. F. Green to ascertain what he would deliver gravel at per cord at the cemetery, and report at the council's next meeting.—Carried.

Messrs. Fuke and Treble waited on the council regarding the starting of a new band, asking what the council was prepared to do provided a band could be gotten up. The acting reeve stated that they would not do anything now but were in hearty sympathy with the movement. He asked them to do what they could in the matter of organizing and report at the next meeting of July 11st, to which date the council then adjourned.

"Was Mackenzie King Right?"

The leading article in the Exeter Times of last week, 'Was Mackenzie King Right"? must have been a welcome advent to the advocates and supporters of the proposed reciprocity agreement—to see the independent Times throw off its hypocritical mask, and appear in a feverish espousal of the pet political scheme, introduced as an emergency to tide the present government over a critical period and enable them to retain their present hold upon office.

Now that The Times has shown its hand and come out in its true colors we may expect it to slavishly adhere to the dictation of the Government organs, by a strong partizan advocacy of Reciprocity, and no doubt its motto will be the one recently coined by a supporter of the government, and which so admirably expresses the spirit and attitude of the party in power,—' What has England ever done for Canada."

It is rather late in the day for The Times to explain its silence in failing to criticize the Conservative meeting held as long ago as last winter. Our answer to the charge of cowardice made by our contemporary is this. We fearlessly took advantage of the first opportunity in commenting upon the Liberal meeting. That Mackenzie King had left town was not our fault. Our criticism would have been just the same had he remained. Surely the Times man must have been so infatuated with the defence of his idol, that he was blinded to every detail of our statement. We did state his arguments, and if the Times has failed to comprehend that fact we will repeat them. 1st—By the proposed Reciprocity agreement the price of barley would be such that malters could not afford to purchase it, hence the diminution of the product of the brewery. Even the Times in its report of the meeting made the same statement. 2nd—The Canadian route to Great Britain being 500 miles nearer Canadian ports than the nearest United States ports, the United States shippers of flour, meat and all articles for consumption would ship in competition with our manufacturers and shippers over our roads, to the markets of Great Britain. 3rd—Sir John Macdonald was an ardent advocate of Reciprocity. In fact The Times would leave the impression that it was the chief plank in his Governmental platform.

We repeat our criticism again. The first two arguments we criticized were surely made without consideration or estimation of the intelligence of his audience. Would Mackenzie King make the same arguments on the floor of the House? The arguments were unworthy of the man, unworthy of his position in the Government, unworthy of the occasion and an insult to the intelligence of his audience. The Times dare not come out publicly and defend these arguments and leave the cheap clap-trap expressions of "rushing in to besmirch" and "stabbing when his back is turned" to the paucity of thought and lack of debatable material on the part of the writer.

Our readers are left to judge the merits of the charge of cowardice against us in our attitude toward the meeting of a few weeks ago and the attitude of the aggregation across the street toward the meeting of last winter.

Coming now to the only part of our criticism, which has been replied to, namely, the attitude of Sir John Macdonald towards reciprocity, we repeat that the views of Sir John A. upon this question, as it affected the public mind of his day, has been misrepresented, his motives maligned, and his policy distorted.

Mr. Fielding, in his address in the House when he introduced the measure, made the statement, that Sir John Macdonald and the Conservative party have always been pledged to reciprocity, and this malicious misrepresentation of facts has been reiterated and slavishly adhered to by his henchmen in the press and on the platform throughout the length and breadth of the country. Mr. Fielding and his followers would not dare make this charge if the great patriot and statesman were alive to refute such an insinuation.

In his last election address to the people of Canada he writes;—

"As in 1878, in 1882 and again in 1887, so in 1891 do questions relating to trade and commerce of the country occupy a prominent place in the public mind. Our policy in respect thereto is to-day what it has been for the past thirteen years, and is directed by a firm determination to foster and develop the varied resources of the Dominion by every means in our power, consistent with Canada's position as an integral portion of the British Empire."

"The adoption of this policy (reciprocity with the U. S.) would involve among other grave evils discrimination against the mother country * * * * It would in my opinion inevitable result in the annexation of this Dominion to the United States."

"For a century and a half this country has grown and flourished under the protecting aegis of the British Crown * * * * To you Canadians I appeal, and I ask you what have you to gain by surrendering that which your fathers held most dear? Under the broad folds of the Union Jack we enjoy the most ample liberty, and at the same time we participate in the advantages which flow from association with the mightiest Empire the world has ever seen. * * * 'We enjoy the prestige inspired by the consciousness of the fact that behind us towers the majesty of England. The question which you will shortly be called upon to determine resolves itself into this: Shall we * * * * * submit ourselves to direct taxation for the privilege of having our tariff fixed at Washington with a prospect of ultimately becoming a portion of the American union?" * * * As for myself, my course is clear. A British Subject I was Born—A British Subject I will Die. With my utmost effort, with my latest breath will I oppose the 'veiled treason' which attempts by sordid means and mercenary proffers to lure our people from their allegiance. During my long public service of nearly half a century I have been true to my country and I appeal * * * to the young hope of the country * * * to give me their united and strenuous aid in this my last effort for the unity of the Empire and the preservation of our commercial and political freedom."

It is refreshing to turn from the half hearted expressions of loyalty to the Empire, so characteristic of the government leaders and representatives of the present day, to the clear clarion notes of conception and devotion to the Empire bequeathed us by our fathers, so beautifully and clearly depicted in the noble words and burning enthusiasm of Sir John A. Macdonald.

If the above quotations are not sufficient to show the Times writer the position of Macdonald, there are more to follow.

Baseball

The Exeter "Midgets" want baseball games with any good strong aggregation—ages ranging from fourteen to fifteen. Write Joe Craig, Exeter.

The Junior Ball team drove over to Zurich on Thursday afternoon and played a twelve innings game with Zurich Juniors, to a tie 6—6. The home team got their last run in the 6th and Exeter tied it in the 9th. No runs were made in the last three and the game was called owing to the darkness. It was a great exhibition. Reg Bissett twirled for Exeter and he received fine support. Geo. Palmer umpired.

The Juniors defeated Dashwood on Tuesday night at Dashwood, 13-11.

ATTEMPTED SUICIDE.

After being summoned to appear before Magistrate Hawkshaw on a drunk and disorderly charge, Thos. McCann of Lucan attempted to commit suicide by taking a large dose of laudanum. McCann had been drinking for some time, and it is thought he became despondent after the summons had been served on him, and decided to end it all. He then went home and nothing more was heard from him until he walked out of the house and cooly told Daniel Whelan, a neighbor, that he had taken a dose of poison, and that he was going to end it all. Mr. Whelan noticed the dazed condition of McCann and fearing that he had taken the drug summoned Dr. Orme After working on him for over four hours the doctor was able to bring him around sufficiently to walk and keep from going to sleep again. After he recovered sufficiently he was taken before Magistrate Hawkshaw and sentenced to six months in the central prison on the drunk and disorderly charge.

INFANT NEAR HENSALL RUN OVER BY TRAIN

Hensall, July 11.—The infant son of Mr. Frank Marshall, sectionman, of this place, was run down by the L. H. and B. train yesterday afternoon a few miles north of the town. The child's left leg was cut off at the thigh and he lies in a very critical condition at the Clinton Hospital. It is supposed the child was going to meet father and fell sleep, with part of its body across the rails. The train was at once stopped, the little sufferer placed in the baggage car, and the train flagged back to Hensall, where Dr. McDirmid was called in attendance. Miss McBain, a trained nurse from Ingersoll, on her way to spend a vacation at Goderich, gave valuable aid, and remained in the baggage car with the physician and patient until Clinton was reached, where the child was hurried to the hospital.

TO HELP FRUIT-GROWING

An Investigation to be Conducted by Experts

A despatch from Ottawa says: The Minister of Agriculture has authorized a special inquiry to be made into the fruit-growing industry of Canada, under the direction of Mr. J. A. Ruddick, dairy and cold-storage Commissioner. The well-known fruit-grower, Mr. W. H. Bunting of St. Catharines, has been engaged to conduct the inquiry. He will be assisted by the Federal officials and by the local officials of the different Provinces and districts. His report will be available for the Dominion conference of fruit-growers, that is to be held at Ottawa some time next winter. The investigation will be conducted with a view of securing some reliable data respecting the area and extent of land adapted to fruit-growing in the various Provinces, varieties of fruits which have been found to be most profitable and successful in the several Provinces or subdivisions of the same, general trend of the industry towards concentrating the production of large quantities of standard varieties, difficulties which are likely to be encountered, methods of production, facilities for distribution and marketing, possibilities of over-production, etc.

A PHENOMENAL GROWTH

Dominion Customs Receipts for Three Months Amounted to $29,239,646

A despatch from Ottawa says: The Dominion financial estimate for the first quarter of the current fiscal year just issued shows the continued growth of revenue. For the three months ended June 30 the Customs revenue was $2,500,000 in excess of the receipts for the first quarter of 1910-11. This rate, if continued, would mean an increase of $10,000,000 for the fiscal year, which would bring the Customs receipts up to the phenomenal figure of $80,000,000 for the twelve months.

The total revenue for the three months ended June 30 amounted to $29,239,646, an increase of $2,904,793 over the first querter of last year. Expenditure on consolidated fund account was $8,935,732, an increase of $102,625. Capital expenditure is returned at $2,303,730, a decrease of $846,305.

For the month of June the revenue amounted to $10,666,205, an increase of $1,053,528 over June, 1910. Expenditure on account of consolidated fund was $5,165,911, an increase of $92,145. Capital expenditure for the month was $1,815,585, an increase of $163,246.

BABY TAKES FLY-POISON.

Draught Fatal to Nineteen-months-old Child.

A despatch from Toronto says: The nineteen-months-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Bond, 11 Milan street, died on Wednesday from the effects of taking a quantity of fly-poison. It appears that the little tot drank the poison from a saucer on the window sill in the presence of her five-year-old brother. Subsequently, when the child became dangerously ill, the little brother told his mother what the baby had taken. Four doctors were summoned and administered emetics, but without avail.

RESCUED TWO GEREKS.

Dog and Master Saved Foolish Bathers.

A despatch from Niagara Falls, Ont., says: Charles Weiderhold, a musician, and his dog rescued two Greeks from drowning in the Niagara River, on Wednesday, just off the plant of the International Paper Company. Weiderhold went to the river to give his dog, a large St. Bernard, a swim. The Greeks disrobed nearby and plunged into the water. They could not swim, and were soon beyond their depth. Weiderhold plunged in, clothes and all, and succeeded in bringing one to the bank, while the dog caught the other by the arm and had hauled him to shallow water by the time his master returned.

BEER SALES INCREASE.

No Less Than 63,000,000 Barrels Sold Last Year.

A despatch from New York says: No less than 63,000,000 barrels of beer were sold in the United States during the 12 months ending June 30 last, or an increase over the previous 12 months of 6.21 per cent., according to the annual report of the beer and whiskey sales made public here to-day by the United States Brewers Association.

GOVERNMENT ANNUITIES.

More Than a Million Dollars Already Invested.

A despatch from Ottawa says: As a medium for safe investment and for provision for old age, Government annuities are steadily growing in favor. According to latest reports there are now over 2,100 annuitants from all parts of the Dominion investing their savings with the Government, and the total amount received from the annuitants is now nearly one and a quarter million dollars.

KILLED BY LIGHTNING.

Farmer Was Struck While Drawing Hay Near Barrie.

A despatch from Barrie, Ont., says: A heavy electric storm passed over here Thursday morning. A farmer near Gilford, named George A. Magee, was killed while drawing in hay, the horses being also killed and the barn burned.

REVOLT IN LISBON CITY

Fierce Fighting by Seamen Quartered in Barracks

A despatch from London says: A great fight has taken place between the populace and the seamen quartered in the barracks in Lisbon. The seamen, incited by Monarchist agitators, attempted to raise an armed revolt. Revolvers and knives were used with deadly effect.

The Government called out all available troops, both cavalry and infantry, and after severe fighting managed to quell the riot and restore order.

The city is in a state of panic, according to the despatches, and elaborate precautions are being taken by the authorities to suppress any further revolutionary movement. The Government is informed that the leader of the Monarchists has recently received another important addition to his funds in the shape of a remittance of $410,000 from Brazil.

TRAPPED IN SAFE.

Five Children Suffocated While at Play in Russia.

A despatch from Moscow says: Five children have lost their lives in a most tragic manner at Poboyanka, in the Akkerman district.

They were playing at home in the absence of their parents and climbed into a large iron safe with a massive lid, which was held up by a prop of wood. One of the children must have accidentally knocked the prop away, for the lid fell, and owing to the automatic catch, became immovable from the inside.

The parents on their return were afarmed at the disappearance of the children, and searched for them in every likely place, but in vain. It was only after a long delay that they thought of the safe.

IMPORTATION OF CATTLE.

Has Been Prohibited During the Foot and Mouth Disease.

A despatch from Ottawa says: A cable received on Wednesday evening from the British Board of Agriculture through the High Commissioner announces an outbreak of foot and mouth disease at Hounslow, Middlesex, England. Thirty-one pigs and one head of cattle are affected. A ministerial order was passed at once by the Dominion Government, cancelling all permits for the importation from England of cattle, sheep, swine or other ruminants, other than those actually, at this date, embarked on board vessels bound for Canada. This will effectually prevent the importation of animals of the above classes till after the disease is stamped out. Horses are not affected by the order. The different steamship companies have been notified by telegraph of the prohibitory order.

BLOODLESS REVOLUTION.

President of Paraguay Made a Prisoner and Resigned.

A despatch from Buenos Ayres says: The local newspapers report another bloodless revolution in Paraguay. The garrison at Asuncion revolted and made a prisoner of President Jara, who forthwith resigned. Congress then selected Liberato Rojas, President of the Senate ,for provisional President pending new elections.

FIRE AT WINNIPEG FAIR

Grand Stand Destroyed and Buildings Badly Damaged

A despatch from Winnipef, Man., says: Fire of a mysterious origin destroyed the grand-stand at the Winnipeg Exhibition grounds on Thursday night. The racing stables caught fire, and were saved by the firemen. The scenic and arts building, recently constructed, also caught fire. Never before has Winnipeg seen such a spectacular fire, and it was the first time on record that each one of the eleven halls has attended a blaze. Flames could be seen from all parts of the city, and that all the buildings on the grounds were not reduced to a heap of ashes is considered miraculous. The loss is estimated at $70,000, which is partially covered by insurance in a number of insurance companies.

Every man in the employment of the city will be put to work on the exhibition grounds, for the association is determined to have at least a temporary grand stand for the annual fair.

While the fire was still burning a meeting of the directors of the Industrial Exhibition Association was held in one of the adjacent buildings, the Mayor and Aldermen of the city being present. The outcome of their joint deliberations was that the grand stand would be rebuilt immediately. The Engineer of construction and the Street Commissioners Departmnt put a thousand men at work clearing the ground of debris, and five hundred carpenters got busy on the new structure, so that the exhibition was only delayed one day. It was announced by the directors that the opening day of the exhibition would be July 13, instead of July 12.

WILL BE BUILT IN CANADA

Ships for Canadian Navy to be Constructed Here

A despatch from Ottawa says: It is stated that the contract for the construction of the ships of the Canadian navy has been definitely awarded to the British-Canadian Shipbuilding and Dock Company, which has its headquarters at Sydney, Nova Scotia. The company includes among its directors: Sir Henry Pellatt, of Toronto; Hon. J. M. Gibson, Lieutenant-Governor of Ontario, and Sir Charles Ellis, chairman of the John Brown Company, of Clyde Bank, Scotland, which constructed the Lusitania and the Mauretania, and who is prominent in British shipbuilding circles. The plans for the company's plant at Sydney are now well under way and will shortly be submitted to the Government for approval. They call for an expenditure of $6,000,000 and include the placing in position of a dry-dock, which will be one of the largest in the world, its length being put at 1,040 feet and its width at 110 feet. It is hoped to have the plant in operation within two years and to have the naval ships well advanced towards completion inside of five years.

KILLED 484,320 FLIES.

San Antonio Boys' Slaughter Pile 3 Feet High and 5 Long.

A despatch from San Antonio, Tex., says: One and a quarter million dead flies in one heap, contributing a pile three feet high and five feet wide, represents the slaughter wrought by small boys as the result of a fly-killing contest which closed here recently.

Robert Basse carried off first prize of $10, with an official record of 484,320 dead flies.

SMALLPO XI NMANITOBA.

Nineteen Cases Reported and Passenger Traffic Stopped.

A despatch from Winnipeg, Man., says: Alarming smallpox conditions have broken out in the eastern part of this province. Nineteen cases are reported at Port Alexander, on the Winnipeg River. There are other cases near Mapleton, in the Selkirk district. Dr. Grain, M.L.A., Provincial Health Officer, has prohibited all passenger traffic to or from Lac du Bonnet and Point du Bois, where the outbreak originated.

PICTON MAN DROWNED.

Body of Wm. Welsh Found in Canal at Rochester.

A despatch from Rochester says: The body of William Welsh, 50 years old, was found floating in the Erie Canal. Welsh was a bricklayer, and came here from Picton, Ontario, where relatives reside. His wife became insane a few years ago, and was committed to the Rochester State Hospital. Since that time Welsh worked here and in Syracuse. He came here from Syracuse a month ago. The remains were decomposed, which indicated that he had fallen into the water at least four days ago.

HOW THE MAINE WAS SUNK

Gen. William H. Bixby Says the Explosion Was Internal

A despatch from Washington says: The loss of the battleship Maine in Havana harbor was caused by the explosion of her three magazines. No such effect as that produced upon the vessel could have been caused by an explosion from without.

Such is the opinion of General Wm. H. Bixby ,chief of engineers, U.S.A., who has returned from a personal inspection of the work of raising the Maine.

General Bixby said that a portion of the deck over the magazines was blown upward and laid backward, and there were numerous conditions of the hulk as it lies in Havana harbor which prove this. No explosion from the outside, said the General, could have caused the same results.

"What the primary cause of the explosion was," said General Bixby, "never will be learned."

General Bixby does not believe that the bodies of those who lost their lives will be found on the Maine. He says they are probably two hundred feet or more from the wreck in the mud.

DEADLY ANAEMIA

Casts a Shadow Over the Lives of Thousands of Women and Growing Girls.

"Not enough blood" is the simple meaning of the term anaemia, though it should scarcely need explaining, for, unfortunately, anaemia is one of the greatest evils in this country, afflicting women of all ages, including young girls. The signs of bloodlessness are plain enough—pallid lips and cheeks, and aching back, frequent headaches, with breathlessness heart palpitation and great weakness. The only effective treatment is to strengthen and build up the blood, and it is just by this power of making new, rich blood that Dr. Williams' Pink Pills have cured anaemia in more cases than it is possible to place on record. Among the host cured of this trouble by Dr. Williams' Pink Pills is Miss C. N. Roberge, of Sorel, Que., who had been in poor health for several years. Miss Roberge says: "I believe that if I had not taken Dr. Williams' Pink Pills my illness would have proved fatal. The trouble came on so gradually that I can scarcely tell the point at which it did begin. The first noticeable symptom was loss of color and a feeling of lassitude. Then I began to lose my appetite, had frequent headaches, and spells of dizziness, and became unable to do any housework without being completely exhausted. Finally my trouble became aggravated by a persistent cough. I took several kinds of medicine, but did not get any relief. At last I was advised to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills and decided to do so. After I had taken several boxes there was a noticeable improvement in my condition and I continued using the Pills until I had taken nine boxes. The result in my opinion was marvellous. My appetite returned, my nerves were strengthened, my weight increased, headaches disappeared, and I am enjoying the best health of my life. In gratitude for what Dr. Williams' Pink Pills have done for me I give this statement in the hope that it may bring new health to some other sufferer."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills cure all those troubles due to poor blood, such as anaemia, indigestion, rheumatism, neuralgia, St. Vitus dance, partial paralysis, and the troubles which attack girls budding into womanhood and women of mature years. Sold by medicine dealers everywhere, or by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

MORE HOLY THAN RIGHTEOUS

At a religious meeting a lady persisted in standing on a bench, thus spoiling the view of others, though repeatedly requested to sit down. An old gentleman at last rose and said, gravely:—

"I think if the lady knew that she had a large hole in each of her stockings she would not exhibit herself in this way."

This had the desired effect; she immediately sank down on her seat. A young minister standing by blushed to the temples and said:—

"Oh, brother, how could you say what was not a fact?"

"Not a fact!" replied the old gentleman. "If she had not a large hole in each of her stockings, I would like to know how she gets them on."

Time Has Tested It. — Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil has been on the market upwards of thirty years and in that time it has proved a blessing to thousands. It is in high favor throughout Canada and its excellence has carried its fame beyond the seas. It has no equal in the whole list of liniments. If it were double the price it would be a cheap liniment.

THE BONE OF CONTENTION.

"Mother's compliments," said the youngster to the butcher, "and she's sent me to show you the big bone brought with the piece of beef this morning."

"Tell your mother next time I kills a bullock without bones in it I'll make her a present of a joint," said the man of meat, with a grin.

"Mother's compliments," continued the boy, "and she says next time you find a bit of sirloin with a shoulder of mutton bone in it she'd like to buy the whole carcase as a curiosity."

No one need fear cholera or any summer complaint if they have a bottle of Dr. J. D. Kellogg's Dysentry Cordial ready for use. It corrects all looseness of the bowels promptly and causes a healthy and natural action. This is a medicine adapted for the young and old, rich and poor and is rapidly becoming the most popular medicine for cholera, dysentery, etc., in the market.

BATTLES UP IN THE AIR

INVASION BY AEROPLANE TO BECOME A REALITY.

Battles of the Future Will be Won or Lost With Flying Machines.

"Wake up, England!" is the cry of the British aviator, who, with his mind full of the rapid strides which such European rivals as France and Germany are making in aviation matters, and the encouragement which these countries are offering to inventors, is fearful lest we should be left behind in the race for aerial supremacy, and the cry is one which should be heeded; for, although the danger of an invasion by aeroplane seems such a remote possibility that some of us scoff at the suggestion, and although flying machines have yet scarcely proved reliable enough for practical purposes, there is no doubt that they are going to play a very important part in the future history of the world.

It was only a few days ago, on the occasion of the flying meeting at Hendon, arranged by the Parliamentary Aerial Defence Committee, that Mr. Hamel succeeded in beating the telegraph by carrying a despatch to Aldershot and back again, while Mr. Grahame-White, from a height of 500 feet to 600 feet, while travelling at forty miles an hour, dropped oranges and plaster of Paris bombs within a marked area about the size of a battleship's deck, hitting, so to speak, the bull's eye every time.

Although the dropping of bombs from a fast-moving machine on to any but the largest objects is a very difficult matter, with practice the percentage of hits is likely to increase rapidly, and a considerable number may be expected to land in a rectangle of 100 yards by 20 yards, from heights well above 1,000 feet. With reduced heights, of course,

THE ACCURACY INCREASES.

Large areas, such as camps and bivouacs of considerable bodies of troops, rail and other depots, supply stores, appear suitable objects for the attack by small explosives and incendiary bombs; whilst big railway bridges, arsenals, dockyards, railway centres, etc., suggest themselves as objectives for the larger bombs."

Fifty machines, making two trips each per day, within a radius of a hundred miles, could drop each day 15,000 pounds, or about six and a half tons of bombs, on any selected area. Colonel Capper, however, does not think much damage could be done by single machines, but remarks that several flying squadrons of ten or a dozen machines would prove of the highest importance during a campaign.

It has been suggested that it would be an easy matter to destroy a squadron of flying machines with artillery or infantry fire. As a matter of fact it would be extremely difficult to do so if the machines were flying at any fair height. It must be remembered that the flying machine travels from fifty to seventy miles an hour, and it is obvious that a hit in such circumstances would be very difficult to secure, even by the best artillery in the world.

Moreover, quick-firing guns have but a small angle of elevation, and even a field howitzer could hardly hope that its shells would reach a height of 3,000 feet, so that at a very considerable height a flying machine would be absolutely immune.

FLYING MACHINE VS. AIRSHIP

"But what about meeting the attacks of other flying machines?" some reader may ask. For this purpose every military flying machine must be armed with a quick-firing small-bore gun or rifle, and the aeronaut must be trained to use it whilst in rapid flight. In addition, a few small deadly explosive bombs should be carried for the destruction of hostile airships.

Aairships will be of little use in warfare when it comes to fighting flying machines. They are slow in speed and are not calculated to manoeuvre at heights much over 6,000 feet, and even by sacrifice of all fuel and ballast can hardly reach 10,000 feet, a height which flying machines can speedily attain. No airship will be able to engage in war without a small squadron of flying machines to guard her, and in a fight between flying machines the victory will go to that which can fly and rise fastest, manoeuvre easiest, and shoot the straightest.

DIRECTORS OF CORONATION.

Perquisites and Privileges Connected With Coronation.

For months past men like the Duke of Norfolk, the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Lord Chamberlain, the Earl of Granard as Master of the Horse, and the Dean of Westminster have been working many hours every day, planning and settling the details of the Coronation ceremony and procession. The Duke of Norfolk as Earl Marshal and Chief Butler of England, is responsible for the successful organizing of the Coronation, and, as head of the Heralds' College or College of Arms, has had to deal with a hundred and one problems of dress and decoration in connection with the ceremony.

It is he who plans, on paper, the marshaling of the procession, the positions taken by the great officers of State, the proper care of the Regalia, and the crowning of the King and Queen, all strictly in accordance with precedent. He is assisted largely in his labors by the Archbishop of Canterbury, who arranges the religious part of the ceremony, while to the Dean of Westminster falls the task of preparing the Abbey for the historic occasion. Then, again, the Lord Chamberlain is responsible for the housing of the foreign representatives attending the Coronation, while the Master of the Horse attends to the Royal equipage.

And as a reward for this work these directors of the Coronation, as they may be termed, derive from their various offices perquisites which, apart from their intrinsic worth, are extremely valuable on account of their historic associations.

The Archbishop of Canterbury, for instance, will receive the velvet chair on which the King sat during the ceremony, and with it will go the cushion and the footstool. The quaint perquisite of the Lord Great Chamberlain used to be the King's bed and bedding and the furniture of the room in which his Majesty slept the night before the Coronation in addition to forty yards of crimson velvet and the Royal nightgown. He now contents himself with the forty yards of velvet and the profits and fees of his office.

Robes for the Dean and three chaplains and for sixteen of the clergy are the perquisites of the Dean and Chapter of Westminster, and, most valuable of all, they claim the wood used for the stands and other erections in the Abbey, which is worth several thousand pounds. Perhaps the most valuable perquisite of all connected with the crowning are the splendid purple robes which form a most important part of the Queen's costume. These, once the ceremony is concluded, become the absolute property of the Mistress of the Robes.

And talking of privileges, it might be mentioned that the Lord Mayor of London, from time immemorial, has claimed as his right, as chief ruler of the city, attendance upon the Sovereign, both in the procession and during the actual ceremony in the Abbey, where he stands on the left of the Coronation chair, holding the City sceptre and mace. This mace, which is sometimes called the Crystal Sceptre, is one of great antiquity. The head is set with uncut rubies, large pearls, and sapphires, and is of fifteenth-century workmanship.

When it was necessary to hold a Coronation banquet in Westminster Hall—a custom which was only discontinued by the late Queen Victoria and King Edward—the Lord Mayor had the right to attend with twelve citizens, act as assistant to the King's butler, and present his Majesty with wine in a gold cup. After the King had drunk, the cup was returned to the Lord Mayor, who retained it as his fee.

FORTUNATE!

There was a shivering sound of breaking glass heard in the drawing-room. "James! Have you broken another goblet!"

"Yes, madam; but I was very fortunate this time. It only broke in two places."

"Well, and you call that being 'fortunate,' do you?"

"Yes, madam; you can't imagine what a bother it to pick them up when they break into a hundred pieces."

THE GREAT ALEXANDER.

There was a chap who kept a store,
And, though there might be grander,
He sold his goods to all who came,
And his name was Alexander.

He mixed his goods with cunning hand,
He was a skilful brander;
And since his sugar was half sand
They called him Alex-sander.

He had his dear one and she came,
And lovingly he scanned her:
He asked her would she change her name,
A ring did Alex-hand-her.

"Oh, yes," she said, with smiling lip,
"If I can be commander."
And so they framed a partnership,
And called it Alex-and-her.

THURSDAY, JULY 13, '11

Latest newspaper reports on the number of casualties in the United States due to the celebration of the 4th of July, show that 38 lives were sacrificed and 1,217 were injured, as compared with 44 killed and 2,485 injured last year, and 62 killed and 3,346 injured in 1909. Fireworks claimed 18 victims firearms 12, gunpowder five and toy pistols three. And all this after all the talk about a saner Fourth.

While work, and hard work at that is necessary to make farming pay, a higher order of intelligence is required to make the greatest success than was the case fifty years ago. Conditions have changed and are changing. The virgin soil no longer gives forth an abundance by a mere tickling of the surface and a sowing of the seed. To manage a farm successfully to-day requires an intimate knowledge of soils, the ingredients needed in supplying plant food, and how to treat them so that the plant will get the maximum of nourishment from them. The man who knows this is no "clod-hopper." To possess an intimate knowledge of how plants grow, how live stock are best fed and cared for, and how the orchard can best be made to give an abundance of fine flavored fruit, places a man on a plane above the average required for other callings.

The social ostracism that once characterized agriculture is fast passing away. While there are still people in cities and towns who look upon the farmer as a being beneath them in social status, and his calling as one in which no person who aimed for distinction, many men of wealth and social position are turning to the land. A noticeable movement in this direction is going on in Canada. During the past few months, several men of wealth and high social position in Toronto have purchased farms in the neighborhood personally engage in farming, the fact that they are acquiring farms and fitting them up to be farmed in a business-like and up-to-date fashion, shows that it is not a mere past time. It is becoming fashionable to own and operate a farm, and whether these kind of farmers make money on their venture or not, they will get the farmers viewpoint and become more or less champions of his interests and advocates of more attention being paid to agriculture by the governments of the day. One thing that has helped to make the farmer in Great Britain the best farmer the world over, has been the interest taken in agricultural by the nobility and gentry of the United Kingdom.

McGILLIVRAY.

The oldest citizen of the west of McGillivray passed away on July 3rd, in the person of Thos. Mark, in his 83rd year. The deceased was born in England and came to Canada 72 years ago, living in Markham for 3 years, after which he and his brothers moved to McGillivray, forming what was commonly known as the Mark Settlement. The deceased died on his old homestead, where he had lived for 69 years, having hewed out a home from the virgin forests. He is survived by three brothers and four daughters.

MOUNT CARMEL.

Thos. Lane and Hugh Ryan left last week for Gravenhurst Hospital. Their many friends hope they will return with their health much benefitted. Miss Mary Hall returned home from London.—Mr. and Mrs. Quarry attended the funeral of the letter's brother, Arch Bishop O'Connor of Toronto, on Tuesday last. —John Coughlin of Langdon, N. D., called on friends here last week.—Lewis Rowland has engaged Andrew Querrin for the harvest. Mr. Rowland makes no mistake as Andrew is a good man.—Mrs. John Barry attended the Biddulph Picnic last week.—Rev. Fr. O'Neil of Columbus, Ohio, is visiting Fr. Forster this week. Fr. O'Neil is a native of this parish, having moved with his parents to the States about 25 years ago, when Father O'Neil was about six years old. It gave the people of Mt. Carmel, and also Father O'Neil much pleasure to be present here on Sunday.—Miss Clara Glavin of Chatham is home visiting her parent.—Frank Guainan returned home on Saturday evening.—John Kilgallen of Ottawa is visiting his sister Mrs. Jos. Glavin.—The rain Monday afternoon was much appreciated.—Mrs. Thos Ryan and sister Miss Fitzgerald of Chicago is visiting at the home of Thos. Ryan.

HARPLEY

Mr. and Mrs. W. B. Fallis and two little daughters of Ontario, Cal., who have been spending a couple of weeks visiting relatives and friends in this vicinity, left Monday morning for Hamilton and Niagara Falls.—Misses Lydia and Hazel Sherritt visited their sister, Mrs. A. Webb of the A B Line over Sunday.—Miss V. M. Hodgins, a teacher of New Liskeard, arrived on Wednesday of last week to spend the holidays with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Hodgins.

BREWSTER.

Mrs. P. Baker is in poor health owing to the intense heat.—The 12th of July is to be celebrated in Goderich this year Guenther's big car will carry a load up.—Mr. W. Wade and Mr. and Mrs. Gus Latta and family, Mr. and Mrs J Luther and Mr. H. Stanlkae were visitors at J. J. Ragin's Sunday.— Miss Mabel Green is home.—We had a light shower to-day, the first in about five weeks. —The sermon to the Orange Order in Corbett Sunday was well attended.—Mr P. Baker is the first in this section to cut wheat, he having cut a field July 8.

DASHWOOD

On Friday night the junior baseball team from Crediton played with the junior team of this place, the result being 7-6 in favor of the visitors. On Tuesday night the Exeter team played our boys, the score being 13-11 in favor of Exeter. The boys proved to be a jolly lot and will be welcomed back any time. One thing is needed and that is a good diamond on which to play, as no team can do justice to the game on a rough field. We hope some one will take the matter up, as we are sure it could be brought to a successful issue.—Miss Nettie Brokenshire is spending her vacation at her aunt's, Crediton East.—The farmers are busy cutting their wheat and finishing the hay crop. —M. E. M. Brokenshire was at Crediton Sunday.—Mr. Henry Guenther has added an auto car to his livery, which is giving good satisfaction.—Mr. J. K. Goetz is having a foundation put under his barn. Messrs Bettschen & Henheffer have the contract and will make good —Mr. and Mrs. Humble left Monday for their home at Sarnia.—Several from this community attended the funeral of the late Peter Desjardine on Friday last, interment being made at Grand Bend.—Street Commissioner Schaefer has completed the laying of the cement walks for this year and so far has made a good job. Of course everyone would like to have a walk, but they can't all be built in one year.—Dr. McLaughlin has his garage complete and in usage, the only drawback being its location.—Mr. Thos. Klumpp has been busy the past few days setting his machines in order so as to be ready when the call comes for threshing.

From another source.

Berry picking is the order of the day. —Mr. and Mrs. Ted. Harness and daughter of Exeter spent Sunday with the latter's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Fred Gentner.—Mr. C. Malinsky, a student of Concordia Seminary, St. Louis, Mo., visited for a few days with his friend Mr. Emil Schroeder, and also preached a pleasing sermon in the Lutheran church Sunday evening.—Mr. Samuel Brenner, after spending the vacation with his parents, returned to Stratford Monday, being accompanied by his mother, who will visit her son William at that place, and her daughter at Drumbo. —Mr. Fred Noll and sons left for their home in Milverton Monday, after spending a week with Mr. and Mrs. Louis Klinstiver.—Mr. Otto Moser of Berlin renewed old acquaintances in town last week. His friends were all pleased to see him.—Mr. Chas. Guenther wears a broad smile these days, a daughter having arrived at his home last Saturday.

CENTRALIA

The rain on Monday was greatly appreciated, as it was badly needed, this section not having any rain since June 4th.—The Trustee Board of the Methodist church held a meeting on Monday evening and decided to do considerable improvements to the parsonage, which is badly in need of repairs.—Mr. John Wilson is improving nicely, while Mr. Trothan still continues very low, with but slight hopes of his recovery.—Miss Lewis of London spent the past week visiting her sister, Mrs. T. Neil.—The Blatchford boys are home for their vacation. The boys are good ball players and will no doubt be quite a help to our boys, hence will be warmly welcomed.—Mr. Aldsword of Waterloo spent a couple days the guest of Miss Alla Wilson.—About 200 took in the excursion to Goderich on the Glorious 12th.—Mr. P. Bawden of Exeter is putting up the brick work on the house of T. Mitchell this week.—Mr. Byron Hicks and his sister entertained a load of their relatives and friends to a picnic at Grand Bend on Saturday last. They report a good time, but some of them came home pretty well used up. 20 hours out of bed was too much for some of them.—Oh, but you should have seen the game of baseball on Friday evening last between the married and single men—the losing side to pay for the ice cream. Well, the married men took their change along with them, for they expected to have to put up the coin, but the game was full of brilliant plays and the stick work was of a high order. Hodgins in the box did some clever work, and with Mitchell, Davis and Boyle on the sand bags reached for everything that came their way. The Captain, T. Willis, playing short with Elliott, Andrews, Bloomfield and Mills handled the out-field and picked up all the long shots. W. Parsons umpired and gave some good decisions in favor of ———. The score, Oh, I guess we hadn't better tell on them, because they want to play again.

INDUSTRIAL TRUSTS

Former Ontario Residents Tell of Their Injurious Effect in the United States

Mr. John M. Downie, a resident in Ontario a few years ago, but now a broker in San Francisco, wrote to the St. Thomas Times recently, showing the injurious effect upon the United States of the large industrial trusts. Mr. Downie said:

"I could cite a half dozen instances of the ruinous workings of the trusts right here in San Francisco. If it was not for the United States Steel Trust and other big trusts, this town would be 25 per cent. better off than it is. The Union Iron Works, a few years ago, running as an independent concern, gave employment to 10,000 men in San Francisco. The United States Steel Company looked on it, saw that it was good, and proceeded to gobble it up. . . . To-day about 500 men are employed just doing repair work. That is what the trusts do to a country. Instead of having a thousand independent factories scattered all over the country helping to build up and make prosperous hundreds of different communities, they concentrate in one or two places, and make one plant do what otherwise would give employment to a dozen."

Ivan Jones, of Parkhill when out in the woods shooting with a 32-self cocking revolver on Saturday, unconsciously pulled the trigger, and discharged the weapon, severing the small toe of his right foot.

Miss Lillian Gaiser intends to start a class in music in the near future. She is well qualified as a teacher, having spent two years at the London Conservatory and is the holder of five certificates.

The farmers on the 6th con. are kept busy drawing water for their cattle. In many places wells and cisterns are completely dry and pasture almost burnt.

Miss Elsie Gaiser, daughter of Wm. B. Gaiser, succeeded in winning Mayor Beattie's medal given at the recent exams. of London Collegiate. Miss Gaiser was a month late in starting school, but by diligent study was successful in winning this coveted prize. Mr. Gaiser's little daughter, Addie, aged 9 years, succeeded in making 94 per cent. out of a possible 100 in her exams. for the primary piano held in the London Conservatory. Considering her age this is truly remarkable. Mr. and Mrs. Gaiser can certainly be proud of their daughters' achievements.

Owing to the excessive heat last Sunday, the services in both churches were shortened.

Monday's rain was a welcome one indeed but it was not enough to do much good. Grain has ripened very quickly the past week. Our farmers are busy cutting the wheat just now.

The Sunday School picnic of the Evangelical Church was held at the Bend yesterday A large number were in attendance, and all report having had a goad time. More particulars will be given in the next issue.

Charles Ewald who has been visiting his parents for a few days returned to his place of business in Akron, Ohio, last Saturday.

John Sweitzer was in Muncey a few days last week engaging a number of Indians to help pull this season's flax.

Roy Schlucter of Pigeon, Mich., is visiting his uncle Mr. Sam Brown.

Berry-pickers are seen every morning bright and early going to the bush to pick berries. There appears to be a good crop this year.

The local lodge of the L. O. L. took in the Orange Walk in Goderich yesterday. Quite a number of our people accompanied them.

It is reported that there will be a base-ball game here on Friday evening with Zurich but as yet no definite arrangement have been made. Bills will be out in ample time. The new recruits of the Star team are making good.

Mr. and Mrs. James Hodgins are camping at the Bend this week.

Mrs. Glomicza and children of Philadelpha returned to their home in Philadelphia on Monday after a week's visit with Mr. and Mrs. A. Ewald.

We notice in the Toronto papers that Elmore Truemner of Dashwood a former pupil of our High School Dept. was successful in passing his examinations in the Normal School in Hamilton. Congratulations Elmore.

Nature Stops

WHEN THE KIDNEYS GIVE OUT.

Do you feel that you simply can't go any farther—that you must have rest for that lame and aching back — relief from that constant dead-tired feeling—freedom from those stabbing, darting pains?

Booth's Kidney Pills

It is nature's warning that the kidneys are giving out and you need the help of Booth's Kidney Pills, the guaranteed kidney remedy. In every machine there is one part that works the hardest and gives out first. The kidneys work night and day, and naturally a life of unusual activity doubles the duties of the kidneys and in time the strain tells. The kidneys give out and nature cries "stop." Booth's Kidney Pills are sold by all dealers, 50c., postpaid from The R. T. Booth Co. Ltd., Fort Erie, Ont. There is no pill just as good. Send for a Free box. The test will prove the truth of our statement.

Burglary—Some time Friday night last some person or persons entered the home of Mr. James Dick and carried off over ninty dollars in bills. The family were at the back of the house while the front doors and windows were open. The money was not missed until Mrs. Dick went to get some money to pay the milkman. Strange to say a gold watch and a number of gold coins owned by Mrs. Dick were not taken by the burglar.

FOR SALE BY TENDER.

Tenders will be received up to and on July 5th, 1911, by Thos. Cameron auctioneer, Farquhar, for the beautiful up-to-date home of the late Wm. Bawden of Exeter, containing 12 acres of land. The house is of solid brick structure and is in good repair. It is most advantageously situated on the high ground north of the river. The drainage and cellerage is unexcelled. The house is equipped with a good furnace, bath room, lavatory, hard, soft, hot and cold water, and possesses other modern conveniences; good outbuildings and large orchard of choice winter fruit. This is no doubt one of the finest homes in the County, and as there is only a short time to wind up the estate will positively be sold to party sending in highest tender (provided they can comply with the terms and conditions.) Easy terms of payment. For forms of tender and terms and particulars apply to Thos. Cameron, Farquhar; S. G. Bawden, Exeter, or to Dickson & Carling, Solicitors for Estate, Exeter.

BIDDULPH.

Mr. James A. Tunrer of Biddulph Tp. was united in marriage to Miss Emma Ryan on Wednesday, June 21st, at 11 a.m. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Wm. Lowe of Trinity Church, Lucan, at the home of the bride's parents Mr. and Mrs. F. A Ryan, Con 3, Biddulph. While the wedding march was being played by Miss Ida Ryan, sister of the bride, the bridal party took their places on the lawn, beneath a beautiful arch of orange blossoms. The bride, given away by her father, was unattended and carried a bouquet of white carnations and wore a gown of white minora shanting silk mull, with trimmings of valenciennes lace and satin ribbon, her only ornament being a pearl crescent, the gift of the groom. After the ceremony was performed and congratulations the guest numbering about seventy repaired to the dining room where luncheon was served. The happy couple followed by several of their friends motored to Lucan station where they took the train for Hamilton, Niagara and other points. Presents numerous, useful and beautiful were given by loving neighbors and friends of the bride and groom.

LINEMAN KILLED.

St. Marys, July 5—Andrew Lee, an employe of the W. L. and H. commission, while up a pole on Tracy street just before the electrical storm started, before 4 o'clock in the afternoon, grabbed a live wire which sizzed around his head and he fell to the ground dead. Deceased leaves a widow and a small family.

ST. MARYS.—Mrs. Peter Forsyth, a widow of 84 years of age, residing alone in a cottage was found dead on July 5th, about 3 o'clock. A doctor was sent for, and he pronounced heart failure as the cause of death.

ST. MARYS.—The hired man, who was struck by lightning and killed on the farm of Adam Smith, up the river, was Chas. Holmyard, 18 years of age, a Barnardo boy. He had just insured his life with Scott Whaley, a London life insurance agent, 10 days ago for $1000, which will go to the Barnardo Home, Toronto.

FREE TO YOU—MY SISTER FREE TO YOU AND EVERY SISTER SUFFERING FROM WOMEN'S AILMENTS.

I am a woman.
I know woman's sufferings.
I have found the cure.

I will mail, free of any charge, my home treatment with full instructions to any sufferer from women's ailments. I want to tell all women about this cure—you, my reader, for yourself, your daughter, your mother, or your sister. I want to tell you how to cure yourself at home without the help of a doctor. Men cannot understand women's sufferings. What we women know from experience, we know better than any doctor. I know that my home treatment is a safe and sure cure for Leucorrhœa or Whitish discharge, Ulceration, Displacement or Falling of the Womb, Profuse, Scanty or Painful Periods, Uterine or Ovarian Tumors or Growths, also pains in the head, back and bowels, bearing down sensations, nervousness, creeping feeling up the spine, melancholy, desire to cry, hot flashes, weariness, kidney and bladder troubles where caused by weakness peculiar to our sex.

I want to send you a complete 10 days treatment entirely free to prove to you that you can cure yourself at home, easily, quickly and surely. Remember, that it will cost you nothing to give the treatment a complete trial; and if you should wish to continue, it will cost you only about 12 cents a week, or less than two cents a day. It will not interfere with your work or occupation. Just send me your name and address, tell me how you suffer, if you wish, and I will send you the treatment for your case, entirely free, in plain wrapper, by return mail. I will also send you free of cost, my book—"WOMAN'S OWN MEDICAL ADVISER" with explanatory illustrations showing why women suffer, and how they can easily cure themselves at home. Every woman should have it and learn to think for herself. Then when the doctor says, "You must have an operation," you can decide for yourself. Thousands of women have cured themselves with my home remedy. It cures all, old or young. To Mothers of Daughters I will explain a simple home treatment which speedily and effectually cures Leucorrhœa, Green Sickness, and Painful or Irregular Menstruation in Young Ladies. Plumpness and health always result from its use.

Wherever you live, I can refer you to ladies of your own locality whom I know and will gladly tell any sufferer that this Home Treatment really cures all women's diseases and makes women well, strong, plump and robust. Just send me your address, and the free ten days' treatment is yours, also the book. Write to-day, as you may not see this offer again. Address:

Hints for Busy Housekeepers.

Recipes and Other Valuable Information of Particular Interest to Women Folks.

DAINTY DISHES.

To use up cold pork cut it into neat slices, sprinkle it with pepper and salt, fry on both sides, and serve with apple sauce.

Potato and Cod Salad. — Take some cold potatoes and cut them into slices, mix these with about an equal quantity of cold, boiled cod. Pour over them a thick salad mixture and serve.

Marmalade Sauce.—This is very good with boiled puddings, but perhaps best of all with boiled batter. Set a gill of water and two tablespoonfuls of marmalade in a small saucepan, add a teaspoonful of brandy. Boil up and strain over the pudding.

Mashed Cabbage.—Boil the cabbage until tender, drain it, and chop like spinach. Then add to it a teaspoonful of butter, half a teaspoonful of vinegar, pepper and salt to taste. Return all to the saucepan, make it very hot, and serve with sippets of fried bread.

A Good Sunday Pudding.—Take six ounces each of flour, stoned raisins, currants, breadcrumbs, two ounces of chopped peel, and one teaspoonful of mixed spice. Mix with a cupful of milk and half a cupful of molases. Mix well and boil for eight hours. This pudding can be made several days before it is needed.

Stuffed loin of veal makes a nice little roast, and is good either hot or cold. Bone the meat and lay it skin side downwards on a board. Cover it with slices of lean bacon or ham; chop the kidney and stew over, and then spread with a layer of highly seasoned veal stuffing. Roll up and sew the flap. Cover with greased paper and roast, removing the paper for the last half hour so that the joint will brown nicely. Make a nice gravy, flavor it with tarragon vinegar ,and pour round; garnish with rolls of fried bacon and slices of lemon.

Try Ham Steaks.—Cut thick slices from a raw ham, put them into a frying pan with a small cupful of water, and cook slowly, turning once or twice till the water has evaporated and the steaks are light brown. Dredge lightly with flour. Have ready a sauce made by boiling a teacupful of milk, a small piece of butter, a teaspoonful of mustard, and a few grains of cayenne. Arrange the steaks on a dish and pour the boiling sauce over them, garnishing the dish with triangular-shaped sippets of toast.

Economical White Soup.—Put one pint of water to boil with one pint of milk. Directly it reaches boiling point throw in an onion, and two ounces of macaroni, broken into short lengths. Simmer gently for an hour, and then add some breadcrumbs, and cook for a quarter of an hour longer. Pass all through a wire sieve, return to the pan and season to taste with white pepper, salt, and a few grains of powdered mace. When in the tureen scatter a little chopped parsley over. Hand-grated Parmesan cheese can be used with this soup.

Bachelor's Cake—Rub four ounces of butter and lard into one pound of flour, then add half a pound of currants, three ounces of chopped peel, six ounces of sugar, and half a teaspoonful of mixed spice. Dissolve one small teaspoonful of carbonate of soda in a gill of tepid milk, and beat into the dry ingredients, making a stiff batter. Pour into a well-greased tin, and bake for about one hour and a half in a moderate oven.

Baked Lemon Pudding.—Place three ounces of breadcrumbs or pieces of bread in a basin, then pour over one pint of boiling milk. Cover with a plate and set to cool. Beat the yolks of two eggs till very light with three ounces of caster sugar. Warm two ounces of butter and add to the other ingredients with the grated rind of a large lemon. Beat all the ingredients with the soaked bread, and pour the mixture into a greased piedish. Bake till set, then spread with lemon curd, and on the top heap the frothed white of egg. Return the pudding to the oven to brown slightly. Scatter chopped almonds over and serve.

HINTS FOR THE HOME.

Never forget to put a pinch of salt into every bottle of food baby takes; it is most necessary for its health.

Lace collarettes and muslin can be stiffened without starch; instead, put a lump or two of sugar in the rinse water.

Hang woollens out on the line dripping wet, without wringing them at all. If dried in this way they will not shrink.

New tin dishes are apt to give a disagreeable taste to everything placed in them unless water and ammonia are first boiled in them.

When delicately-colored wall paper has become soiled it may be cleaned by gently rubbing with a soft flannel sprinkled with plaster of Paris.

The appearance of black bedsteads is greatly improved when they receive an occasional rub with a cloth moistened with parafin. Use a non-fluffy duster for removing traces of the oil.

Vaseline has quite a number of domestic uses. When the brasses are cleaned it is like extra work to rub them over with vaseline and polish with a soft duster; but this willsave much work ultimately, as, after this treatment, they will not readily tarnish.

Let children understand that disobedience is sure to be followed by punishment. A child seldom disobeys Nature more than once in touching a hot lamp-glass. It will soon learn to obey you as well. Never allow it to ask why. You know; that is enough.

In cases where it is impossible to obtain a filter, water may be purified by adding to it powdered alum in the proportion of one tablespoonful to four gallons of water. Stir quickly and allow it to stand. All that is impure will then sink to the bottom, and the pure water on the top may be poured off for use.

There is danger of giving house-plants too much rather than too little water in winter. During the short days and long nights, with little sunshine on the soil, it is hard to keep the earth at a temperature in which the plants can grow vigorously. All the surplus water added lowers the temperature and retards growth.

The care of small articles of dress is quite as important as that of the larger garments. Much can be done, for instance, towards preserving the appearance of a hat if it is always kept in a box. Boot-trees are a necessity to the woman who wishes to look trim in the matter of footgear. Coat-hangers, too, are a cheap but effective means of keeping mantles, blouses, and so forth neat and shapely. The occasional use of a hot iron and a little care in folding will keep veils fresh and new for a long time. A veil is soon ruined if it is left tied around a hat, especially if it is damp at the time.

If you would have your hair nice and shiny, yet not greasy and sticky, do this: At night, before you retire, comb your hair free from all snarls first. Then break an egg and separate the yolk from the white. Pour in water to almost the bulk of the white. You may use toilet water or put a few drops of perfume into the water, or if you prefer you need not scent it. Then beat it until the water and egg are mixed. Separate your hair into small strands, dip your comb into the egg, and moisten the hair well, then twist the strand around until it is like a little rope. Next put a kid or whatever kind of curler you use at the end nearest the head, and wind the hair onto the curler. You need only do this every other night. It keeps the hair in curl beautifully, and if there is any trace of oil it immediately eradicates it. This also acts as a tonic to the hair. Your hair will look naturally wavy and there will seem to be twice as much as usual.

TO ESCAPE APPENDICITIS.

A simple way to prevent appendicitis was recently described by a well-known physician. Every night and morning, he advised, go on your knees, bend backward until you sit on your heels, and, at the same time, bend the upper part of your body forward as far as possible. Do this six or ten times. You may vary the exercise by standing with heels together and toes pointing straight forward, and then stooping in a sitting posture until the knees touch the chest. Do this also six or eight times slowly. The effect is to stir up the intestine in the neighborhood of the vermiform appendix, and to keep it free from the obstruction which is the primary cause of appendicitis.

WHERE GAMBLING PAID.

"I am afraid your husband plays cards at his club every night for money, too!" said the anxious mother to her newly-married daughter.

"That's all right, mother," cheerfully responded the young wife. "He gives me all his winnings——"

"What! Do you——"

"And he always plays with Mr. Jimson."

"What difference can that make?"

"Mrs. Jimson makes her husband give her his winnings, too, and then she gives the money to me, and I hand her what my husband has won from hers, and so we both have about twice as much money as we should get otherwise."

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL STUDY

INTERNATIONAL LESSON. JULY 16.

Lesson III.—Manasseh's wickedness and penitence, 2 Chron. 33. 1-20

Golden Text, Isa. 1. 16, 17.

Verse 1. Manasseh—The account in 2 Kings 21, from which the first ten verses of this chapter seem to have been taken, adds the name of Hephzibah, the king's mother.

2. Did that which was evil — A common formula for sins connected with worship. In the verses which follow a catalogue of these sins is given, their chief condemnation being that they were a repetition of the abominations of the Canaanites. This was especially true of the Baal and Asherah cults.

3. Built again the high places—Hezekiah had destroyed the country sanctuaries as seats of corruption (2 Kings 18. 4, 22). The account in Kings mentions altars to a single Baal, and "an Asherah" (evidently referring to some one Baal, like the Tyrian Baal of Ahab, and the erection of some single symbolic past representing the goddess Astarte. The Chronicler, on the other hand, has in mind distinct Canaanitish Baals at each place, with corresponding poles. All this was a restoration of the practices of the house of Ahab (2 Kings 10. 18, and 1 Kings 16. 31).

Worshipped all the hosts of heaven—This deifying of the stars, sun, and moon was taken over from Assyria, and was something entirely new in Judah. From the frequent mention of this form of worship in the pre-exilic literature (Jer. 8. 2; 19. 13; Zeph. 1. 5). it is evident that it became immediately prevalent. The flat roofs of the houses afforded ample opportunities.

4. Built altars in the house of Jehovah—That is, altars to Baal and other foreign deities. The two courts (5) were the great court, or inner one, immediately surrounding the temple, and the court inclosing the palace.

6. Also—Here follows a list of six practices expressly prohibited by the Deuteronomic code: (1) Made his children pass through the fire—Ahaz was the first Judaean king to perform this rite, which consisted in actually sacrificing and burning the victims. In later years of the kingdom, this mode of worship was not infrequent. The valley of the son of Hinnom (so called perhaps from some hero who encamped there), was situated south and southwest of Jerusalem, and was the seat of human sacrificial worship. Later it came to be termed "Valley of Slaughter." (2) He practiced augury—This was done by observing the motions of the clouds (compare Lev. 19. 26; Judg. 9. 37, etc). (3) Used enchantments—Compare the story of Joseph (Gen. 44. 5). The play of light upon the liquid in a cup was regarded as an omen. Other omens are included. (4) Practiced sorcery — See articles, Sorcery and Magic, in Hasting's Dictionary of the Bible. This was an extensive field, and in general signified some mode of obtaining help from the deity by recourse to magical arts. (5) and (6) Manasseh also fostered people possessed of supposed powers of divination, and who professed to have intercourse with the spirits of the dead (compare 1 Sam. 28. 7, and Acts 16. 16). Ventriloquism was one of the devices resorted to by these wizards (Isa. 8. 19).

7. The graven image of the idol—Jehovah had ordained that no name should forever be localized in the temple but his own, whereas this act made Asherah (perhaps the female deity Astarte) the presiding genius of the house of God.

9. Manasseh seduced Judah—His influence for evil was stronger than that of any previous king of Judah. Many years after Jeremiah attributed to him the disasters which he prophesied should befall the nation.

10-13—The captivity, repentance, and restoration of the king. For various reasons, especially because of the silence of Kings with regard to this part of the story, some have regarded this as a sort of allegory of Israel in exile.

11. The king of Assyria.—Esarhaddon, or Asurbanipal. The Assyrian inscriptions mention Manasseh as a vassal. Perhaps he had been involved in an insurgent movement against the king, which was aided by some of the Palestine states. The fetters by which he was dragged to Babylon were probably hooks (margin) thrust through the nostrils or lips.

13. Brought him again to Jerusalem—There is nothing improbable in this. Necho, king of Egypt, received similar treatment from Asurbanipal.

14. An outer wall—Outside the already existing rampart of the citadel, on the ridge "above the present Virgin's spring, Manasseh constructed another line of fortification, which he carried northward past the temple mount and round its southern slops." The fish-gate was in the northern wall of the city. It is supposed fish passed through it from Tyre. Ophel was an artificial mound south of the temple inclosure.

18. The rest of the acts of Manasseh—For such a long reign, certainly few deeds are recorded, and most of them reflect little credit upon this king. His prayer, or what purports to be, is found in the Apocrypha, just before 1 Maccabees. The words of the seers, or prophetic counsel given him, together with the prayer were to be found in the original book of kings, a much older document (unpreserved) than our Kings.

19. Hozai—The sayings of the seers. These historical data must have formed a part of the now lost records from which the Chronicler and the author of the Kings drew.

20. In his own house—2 Kings 21. 26 says he was buried in the garden of Uzza; doubtless one laid out by Uzziah in the court of the palace. In this garden Manasseh may have constructed a house.

ROCKY MOUNTAIN FOREST RESERVE.

Work Done up to the Present in Organizing its Administration.

The setting aside of the Rocky Mountain forest reserve has been one of the most important advances yet made in the industrial history of Canada's central west. Not only is it important for the preservation of the forests along the slope with a view to the future supply of timber, but the preservation of these forests and their proper management means much for the preservation of the waterpowers and the maintenance of that steady and permanent water-flow which means so much for their value. Moreover, the regulation of the water of these streams, so as to provide a steady flow throughout the year and not to have a torrential flow in spring and (what is of even more importance) the drying-up (complete or partial) of the streams in summer, is of the utmost importance to the farms of the prairie provinces. Were the rivers to run short ,the resulting lack of moisture in the soil would seriously interfere with the quantity of grain and other produce reaped from the fertile prairie.

During the whole of the past summer (1910) two parties of the Dominion Forest Service were in the field marking out the boundaries of the reserve. Both these parties started from Calgary; one worked south and succeeded in getting as far south as the international boundary, while the other, working north, reached a point almost due west of Lacombe (Alta.). During the coming summer the location of the boundary will be continued, and it is expected that the entire eastern boundary of the reserve (which extends some forty to fifty miles north of the latitude of Edmonton) will be determined.

The general principle governing the fixing of the boundary of the reserve was that only forest land should be included in the reserve, all land fit for farming (unless in area so small that it was not worth while to make the exception) being excluded from the reserve. The altitude, or height of the country above sea-level, was one of the chief considerations in fixing the line.

It was found that the boundary fixed by the Order in Council by which the reserve was set apart was, to a considerable extent, unsuitable. It included, in the words of one of the writers, "only alpine country, a large portion of which is above the tree limit and the remainder unsuitable as regards timber supply for years to come. Large portions of it have been burned over, leaving bare, eroded hillsides which were formerly covered by a thin soil and coniferous wood growth. Much country east of the line has a very thin soil and is at a very high altitude and so is unfit for agricultural settlement." Many valleys, however, were found which will be quite suitable for grazing.

Fires have created terrible havoc with the forests of the region. In the part from Calgary north Mr. Caverhill estimated that eighty per cent. of the territory covered has been burned over within the past fifty years, and that even within the last twenty-five years forty-eight per cent. of the entire area has been devastated. Mr. Edgecombe estimates that at least sixty per cent. of the area from Calgary southward has been fire-swept. Even last summer Mr. Edgecombe's party lost three weeks through having to fight fires.

The nature of the timber found on the slope has been directly determined by this repeated firing. The abundance of lodgepole pine (a species nearly related to the jack pine so often found on old burns in the east) is the most abundant timber, and much poplar (of two or three species) is found. These trees are the first to spring up on burned-over land, and by their vigorous growth get far ahead of the slower-growing spruce and red fir. In the northern part of the region reported on about seventy-five per cent. of the area is covered with lodgepole pine in pure stand, that is, without the mixture of any other tree.

In the southern part Mr. Edgecombe found that the lodgepole pine required thirty years to attain a diameter of five inches and sixty years to reach the diameter of nine inches. The spruce (Engelmann) and red (or Douglas) fir took, respectively, ninety and one hundred and ten years to reach the diameter of twelve inches.

Both gentlemen remark on the danger to the reserve from forest fires, and make recommendations as to the protection of the areas traversed.

Through all the territory reported on game was plentiful. Special mention is made of the bull, cutthroat and grey trout, among the fish, and, among the game birds and animals, in their respective districts, duck, grouse and prairie chickens, deer, moose, elk and sheep and many kinds of fur-bearing animals.

Among the mineral resources of the area are the coal-beds, oil-fields (in the south) and quarries of building stone.

EFFECTS OF HOT WEATHER.

Curious Examples Produced by Heat Waves.

We have had some pretty warm days recently, but nothing like the heat which prevails in some parts of the American continent every summer.

Chicago suffers greatly in this respect, and the inhabitants resort to all kinds of expedients to cool themselves. One day, when the atmosphere was more than usually oppressive it actually provoked a dumb man to speech!

His name was Louis Mendelson, and he had not been known to speak for the long period of twenty-one years. But on the day in question the heat became so intense that even the speechless could no longer keep silent about it.

To the amazement of the persons addressed, he suddenly burst out with the question: "Is it hot enough for you?" Quite a common remark, but it surprised those who happened to hear it.

It was a startling effect which the heat had on a couple of young ladies at Douglas, in the Isle of Man, last summer. Well-dressed, they were strolling along the Marine Promenade, when the sun's rays made the water so inviting that they simply walked into it just as they were.

Such indifference to their spick-and-span array almost took the spectators' breath away. This, however, did not trouble the two damsels, who splashed about and cooled themselves, while a laughing crowd of holiday makers enjoyed the unique scene.

Then the twain made for terra-firma, boarded a tramcar, and proceeded to their lodgings to change their damp garments for dry ones.

A somewhat different construction was placed on the action of a well-dressed son of Erin whom the heat had goaded into plunging into the Thames.

When he took his plunge with his clothing on, the river watermen pulled off to the rescue. This was more than the bather had bargained for; and, when he saw his would be rescuers preparing to use a boathook, he felt it would be better to "take his hook" than be taken by theirs.

This, however, proved impossible, and, to convince them that he was not on self-destruction bent he roared at the top of his voice: "Can't you let a fellow have a quiet swim on a day like this?" But his roar was nothing to the roar of laughter which went up from the spectators at this unexpected sally.

What was described as a "Startling scene on the Terrace" was reported in the newspapers one hot summer not long since. Passengers on boats on the Thames, passing the Houses of Parliament, were treated to the unique spectacle of numbers of our usually grave and dignified legislators sitting in their shirt sleeves.

A few, indeed, were even minus their waistcoats, a breach of the proprieties which some of those who witnessed it would not have deemed possible if they had not seen the scandalous fact with their own naked eyes.

They seemed to consider it a heinious crime for a Member of Parliament to dispense with his waistcoat. However that may be, there are precedents for dispensing with superfluous apparel under the same conditions in the law courts of the United States, if not in this country. An amusing incident of this kind happened in the town of Cincinatti.

While an important action was proceeding in the Court of Common Pleas, the presiding judge, Mr. Justice Jelke, observed that several of the jurymen were suffering considerably from the sweltering atmosphere of the court.

He at once gave them permission to take off their coats, and by way of example proceeded to divest himself of his own. The learned counsel appearing in the case immediately followed suit—this is not a pun—and shirt-sleeve freedom became general in the room.

TRUTH ABOUT QUEEN MARY

CLEVER WOMAN WHO IS ACCOMPLISHING THINGS.

Thoughtful and Kindly — Much Nonsense Printed About Her in London.

A great deal of nonsense has been printed in England about Queen Mary. If half of it were to be believed one might think the Queen a narrow-minded prude, a snob, and a killjoy. As a matter of fact she is a clever, level-headed woman, thoughtful and kindly, who takes her great position very seriously.

That she objects to this set or that set, to people of one nationality or another, is entirely untrue. No intimate or personal knowledge of the court is necessary to prove this. The lists of presentations, the names of those entertained by the King and Queen and of those who entertained them are sufficient proof to the contrary. It is true enough that both King and Queen set their faces against the rickety, rackety, gambling and liquor drinking crowd, but in this they have the full sympathy both of the greater public and the greater nobility.

A well-known writer on social matters, who knows personally the people and affairs of society, writes of the Queen as follows:—

"The promise of Princess Mary is more than fulfilled in the reality of Queen Mary.' Such was a phrase yesterday from one of those best acquainted with the court.

"There can be no doubt that the Queen has had an extremely difficult career. As a girl she was the companion of her cheery brother, but socially she was suppressed by the overpowering geniality of her remarkable mother, whose volubility of manner was in curious contrast to her daughter's severe self-restraint. Her engagement to the two brothers had the effect of increasing Queen Mary's strong natural tendency to shyness.

"Then as Princess of Wales it is now universally admitted that she suffered socially from being kept in the background. It was only when she herself was in Ireland or in Greater Britain or when the present Queen Mother was abroad that our Queen Consort had, in slang phraseology, 'any sort of a chance.'

"Yet wise folks always declared that when her time came she would prove a remarkable woman, and no one estimated her more highly that did King Edward. He made no secret when she could conquer her reserve of manner she would set her mark on the nation. Now the hour has come, and it is no exaggeration to say that those about the court are even more interested in the Queen than in the King.

"Think what this naturally stolic lady is accomplishing. She has set the nation the purest example of what a good woman should be as daughter wife and mother she is exercising a judicious effect on the moral tone of the court and therefore on the nation; she does the right thing well and she has the thoughtful brain that forsees and prepares for eventualities.

"She is the perfect type of domesticity. One delightful trait to which justice has never been done in print is that the Queen is 'awfully good to girls.' Most august ladies are occupied with the elders around them but the Queen is invariably thoughtful for the young.

"She never opens a book except to read aloud to her children and she rarely glances at the social columns of her daily newspapers, relying on those round to keep her posted in such topics. But on all forms of industrial development associated with women, on every branch of domestic economy and charity, she evinces all her mother's interest combined with a grasp and breadth peculiarly individual".

THE SPECULATOR'S HARVEST.

Even as long ago as Queen Victoria's Coronation—seventy-three years—money was plentiful, for over $1,000,000 was paid for seats on the route. This figure was given by the Chancellor of the Exchequer. The price of a seat varied from $2 to $25, and then, as now, speculators made a great harvest. Many people let the fronts of their houses for sums ranging from $250 to $1,500. Several houses in St. James's Street were let for $1,000 each, and, after paying all expenses, the speculators were $1,00 to $1,500 to the good for each house.

The Judge—"Have you anything to say in your defence?" The Prisoner—"The man from whom I stole was insured against burglary."

"Do you think buttermilk will prolong one's life, Colonel Soakesby?" "Ahem! I have no doubt, Miss Plumper, that if a person had to drink buttermilk every day it would make life seem longer."

Mabel—"Yes, Fred and I are engaged, but don't tell anybody." Lucy—"Why not?" Mabel—"Well—er—you see, Fred doesn't know it yet, and I want to surprise him."

FORTUNE FAVORS THE BRAVE;

OR, A LOOK INTO THE PAST

CHAPTER XXIII.—(Cont'd)

Before he left the Hall that day Derrick Darnley found that this conviction was based on truth.

He had been to take farewell of his uncle and was passing down the stairs, when he met Baines coming up.

"Are you going away, sir? I am sorry," the maid said ,almost involuntarily, "oh! I am sorry, sir."

There was such genuine disappointment in Baines' voice that Mr. Darnley stood silent for a moment, and then made a gesture for the woman to follow him downstairs.

"You have something on your mind, Baines," he said, when they were alone in the hall. "What is it—speak out—you are not afraid of me, surely?"

"I only meant as Miss Dorothy would miss you, sir."

He looked at her keenly.

"No, that is not quite all, Baines."

Baines cast a hurried glance all round.

"Well, sir," she confessed, nervously, "it isn't all. I am so anxious and worried-like about Miss Nancy, I can't never give her her married name."

"About Mrs. Crawshaw, Baines—what of her? What are you afraid of?"

Mr. Darnley's tones were almost sharp in their eagerness, yet it was an indescribable relief to speak to this kind-hearted woman on the subject that had been oppressing him so long.

"What do you fear, Baines?" he repeated, swiftly.

"That's just it, sir!" Baines put out her hands with a sort of desperate gesture. "I don't know what I do fear, but the horrible dread's there, all the same. He's a awful man, Mr. Derry; it don't do to deceive ourselves about that, and the poor child little knew what she were doing when she married him. What she did it for, hating him as she did, I can't never make out! But there, that's over, so it ain't no good talking about it now. I hope you'll forgive me, Mr. Derry, for troubling you like this, but I've got to anxious of late. It ain't natural, now, is it, sir, that she should be shut up in that gloomy place and never see a soul! You know Miss Dorothy went over three or four times, and wasn't even let put her nose inside the grounds. She didn't say much, sir, but it went near to break her heart, all the same!"

Baines stopped to take breath; lost in her own excitement, she did not notice how pale and strained Darnley's face had grown.

"He wouldn't let me go with Miss Nancy, sir, and she'd clung to me in the morning and seemed to find comfort in holding my hands, sir; and then, when he come to the station he sends me away. Oh, I can't get that poor child's face out of my mnd! It haunts me, sir—if I could only see her and know she was well I should feel better, but though I go and walk round and round the manor grounds, and I do it many a time, sir, I can't never see her."

Baines paused again, waiting for Mr. Darnley to speak, but words would not come easily; it was almost two minutes before his lips opened.

"And—and you are afraid of what?" he asked again.

"Lor', sir, I fear anything with a brute of a drunkard like that."

Darnley staggered, as though he had been struck.

"A drunkard!" he repeated, huskily. "Be careful, Baines," he said, hurriedly; "that is a very strong word to use."

Baines looked at him, startled by his tone.

"A strong word but a true one, sir. Ask any of the men, and they'll tell you the same. Why, Mr. Crawshaw scarce ever drove back to the manor sober, and Bailey, the man as valeted him before he took on William, told me himself that his master had had a attack of tremens when they was aboard just before they come to the manor. Oh, it's only too true, sir, believe me."

Baines had spoken almost resentfully, but that all went as she looked at the man's anguish-stricken face and heard his muttered:

"Good God! how awful! how awful!"

Baines looked at him with sudden enlightenment in her eyes.

"I'm sorry I've told you, sir," she said, softly; "but I have been so troubled of late, feeling as if something would happen some day, that I hope you'll forgive me, Mr. Derry."

Derrick Darnley was standing staring at the marble floor beneath him; he felt that there was no escape from Baines' words. Did they not confirm the vague apprehensions that had weighted his heart ever since he had seen Nancy!

A drunkard! a man whose brain and reason might be drowned at any moment in the liquor's fiery poison. Then she was in danger! How blind they must have been back in the summer not to have seen this, not to have known it! Now, passing in quick succession through his brain, came many little signs which he knew all pointed to the truth of what Baines had said, a truth which made Nancy's strange isolated position doubly hideous.

What was to be done?

Unconsciously this question escaped his lips. Baines shook her head.

"Indeed, sir, that's what I've asked myself many's the time, and yet I can't get at nothing. You see, Miss Nancy is his wife, sir, and we have got no real evidence as he treats her badly, it's only what I thinks and fears. Perhaps I'm all wrong, sir, and she ain't unhappy; but if there's any truth in faces, Mr. Derry, there was a broken heart written on hers the day she married that man."

Darnley was silent for a moment, then he asked very quietly:

"Does Miss Dorothy know this?"

"What, about Mr. Crawshaw? No, sir; and I don't mean to let her; she's fretting hard enough about losing Miss Nancy as it is."

Again Darnley paused. Baines was quick to see the fierce battle in his face, and she hastened to soothe him.

"You mustn't get thinking anything will happen really. I'm a stupid old woman, you know. And, after all, sir, you can't do no good now. You may be sure I shall keep my eyes open, and let you know when you can."

Darnley turned, and grasped her hand.

"You are a good soul, Baines," he said, huskily. "Watch—watch carefully, and promise to send for me if you get doubtful or anxious. You are right. I can't do any good now. We can only wait—wait and hope for the best. But this has hit me hard, Baines—hit me very hard."

And with a break in his voice he turned and walked away.

It was the sense of utter hopelessness to move in the matter which oppressed him so horribly. If he could but have gone fiercely to Nancy's rescue, and torn her from this man's keeping ,he would have been almost deliriously happy. It was the knowledge that he must stand by quietly, and let her suffer without help from him or any one, that was eating into his heart; and look which way he might, he could see no light.

The dark cloud of despair was rapidly falling upon him, and encircling him in its cold, grim embrace. With Derrick Darnley it was night indeed—a night without a dawn to follow.

* * * * *

The room allotted to Nancy as her own was one of the largest and gloomiest in the whole of the Manor House. At first, with natural womanly timidity, the girl had shrunk affrighted from the dismal corners and curious shadows; but the ghostliness had been greatly dispersed by the presence of Marie walking jauntily about—and this was the one and only comfort Nancy had derived from her maid—and gradually she had grown accustomed to the huge, shabby apartment, with its dusty, old-fashioned hangings and ugly furtniture; indeed, of late it had been a very sanctuary to her.

Here, at least, she was safe from the insolent intrusion of William, free from the intelerable oppression of her husband's vulgar society.

As she entered it on the evening that followed that eventful afternoon, it had never seemed so welcome to her. With a sigh that was half a sob, the girl flung herself down before the hearth, on which a fire was burning brightly, and wrapping her cloak closely round her, sat gazing into the coals with dim, sad eyes.

The vague feeling of apprehension awakened by Fenton locking the hall door in that loud and ostentatious manner soon vanished in the flood of bitter, hopeless, yet sorrowfully sweet thought that filled her mind.

Derry loved her—loved her still! Ah, no one could ever know what inexpressible joy that knowledge brought to the girl! She had been able to send a message to Dorothy, her dear sister; that, again, was a happiness she had never dreamed would be hers when she awoke that morning.

The burden of reproach and ingratitude at least would not be hers now. Dorothy would know, and would understand the fault was not hers.

How dear, how noble, how handsome Derry had looked! She could feel the firm touch of his strong hands on hers lingering yet. With a sudden, passionate gesture, Nancy bent her lips to her hands and kissed them.

"If I could only have told him all!" she mused, sorrowfully, shivering and creeping nearer to the fire. "And yet, what good could it do? It could not give us back the past; it could not wipe away the present."

And so ran her thoughts while the evening grew into dusk, and the firelight flung queer shadows into the dark corners of the room.

Her heart was thrilling even yet with that strange mixture of dread and delight that came at Derry's sudden appearance; her limbs were trembling from cold, anxiety and excitement.

Gradually a drowsy sensation crept over her; she pulled a big chair up to the hearth and flung herself into it.

"When Janet comes to tell me dinner is ready, I shall tell her to say I am not well; I do not want any," she murmured, sleepily, and then her head rested back, and a peaceful slumber fell upon her.

Janet was one of the few domestics Mr. Crawshaw tolerated about the house. She was a hard-faced, stolid woman, whom Fenton had engaged, with a cook and scullery maid, in London. These two latter had gone long since, frightened out of their wits by the desolation of the Manor House, and disgusted with its master; but Janet stayed on, taking things very quietly.

If she had any sympathy or liking for her young mistress, she never showed it by word or sign, only she might have been seen sometimes trying to arrange Nancy's huge, comfortless bedroom, so that the girl might be more cosy in the one corner she could with any degree of truth call her home.

Since Marie had gone—and Nancy had not the smallest idea why the Frenchwoman had been dismissed, except, perhaps, on the plea of extravagance — Janet had been thrown into closer contact with Mrs. Crawshaw.

There was no attempt whatever at anything like conversation or confidence between them; and yet the girl liked the quiet, stolid woman, and felt a certain amount of comfort and protection in her presence; though had Mr. Crawshaw had an inkling of this fact it is most probable his wife would never have seen Janet again.

Nancy had grown tired of ruminating on this man's strange, vindictive nature. Think as she might, she could arrive at no really good reason for his behavior to herself; it was not in her to comprehend the mixture of vulgar passion, mean spite and jealousy with which Crawshaw regarded her. She only knew that the dislike which had come so unconsciously for Thomas Moss in the old days was nothing to the loathing which filled her heart now for Thomas Crawshaw, a loathing which was growing stronger each day as the horrible conviction forced itself upon her that the man was nothing more nor less than a drunken brute. She regarded him indeed as an animal without mind or reason, who, instead of responding to the good fortune which had come to him so unexpectedly, was using it to debase himself, till he sank into utter and hopeless degradation. It was a curious thing that a man who, in poverty and hardship, had striven well to rise in life, should when wealth was lavished upon him, and all need for struggle over, have so speedily lost all ambition, and have given himself up to the awful and pernicious habit which could not but end horribly.

Nancy had tried to argue the matter out time after time; she had sometimes reproached herself. Perhaps if she had been kinder to him her husband might have been stayed on the downward course, and been turned to some good account; but against herself and these generous impulses Nancy was forced to see that nature would have been too strong, and that had she sacrificed herself it would have been all in vain, and strong, brave, good as she was, Nancy could never have made the sacrifice when the real moment came.

HEART RIGHT
When He Quit Coffee.

Life Insurance Companies will not insure a man suffering from heart trouble.

The reason is obvious.

This is a serious matter to the husband or father who is solicitious for the future of his dear ones. Often the heart trouble is caused by an unexpected thing and can be corrected if taken in time and properly treated. A man in Colorado writes:

"I was a great coffee drinker for many years, and was not aware of the injurious effects of the habit till I became a practical invalid, suffering from heart trouble, indigestion and nervousness to an extent that made me wretchedly miserable myself and a nuisance to those who witnessed my sufferings.

"I continued to drink coffee, however, not suspecting that it was the cause of my ill-health, till, on applying for life insurance I was rejected on account of the trouble with my heart. Then I became alarmed. I found that leaving off coffee helped me quickly, so I quit it altogether and having been attracted by the advertisement of Postum I began its use.

"The change in my condition was remarkable. All my ailments vanished. My digestion was completely restored, my nervousness disappeared, and, most important of all, my heart steadied down and became normal, and on a second examination I was accepted by the Life Insurance Co. Quitting coffee and using Postum worked the change." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

"There's a reason," and it is explained in the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

PROFITS OF DRAINING.

Prof. W. H. Day has recently been making some calculations on the financial side of drainage. A farmer has 50 acres that is rather wet, but although not drained it gives say $15 per acre. The value of the crop for five years in succession, together with compound interest, would be $4,144 at the end of the five years. If however, he were to drain 10 acres of the land each year, and if the drainage increased the value of the crop by $10 per acre (which is a low estimate), then the value of the crop for five years, with interest, would be $5,748. After paying for the drainage, with interest, he would have left $4,124, the same within $20 as if he had not drained, but if he drained the whole 50 acres at once, then the five crops, with interest, would be worth $6,908. This after paying for the drainage would leave him a balance of $5,121, which is $977 more than if he had not drained. During the next five-year period drainage by the installment plan would net him $1,604 more than not to drain at all, and the complete drainage would enrich him by $2,764 more than no drainage.

The price allowed for drainage in the calculation was $28 per acre, and the increase in the crop was placed at $10 per acre. As a matter of fact, the increase is usually worth much more than this, so that the computation is somewhat unfair to drainage, however it is better to err on the safe side.

But the increase in crop is not the only return from drainage. The value of the land is largely increased. This is illustrated in the case of a certain farm in Lincoln county. It was bought for $6,000 about two years ago. Last year $2,000 was spent in draining it, and it has since been sold for $12,000.

The Department of Physics, O. A. C., over which Professor Day has charge, has a large staff engaged in making drainage surveys for farmers wishing to drain, but they are kept very busy. Those who wish surveys made this fall should apply at once, as there are nearly as many applications in as can be attended to this season.

The terms on which surveys are made are explained in Bulletins 174 and 175, which may be had free from the Department of Agriculture, Toronto.

CARE OF THE CALF.

If the cow fails to lick the calf soon after birth, it should be rubbed dry with a piece of burlap or some straw and, if necessary, helped to get its first meal. The first milk or "colostrom" that is taken from the udder of the dam, is the best possible food for the young calf. This milk contains a large per cent. of protein and is a wonderful laxative and tonic, working on the digestive system of the calf.

After the calf has had access to its dam for the period of 48 to 72 hours, they may be separated and the calf taught to drink. It should have its mother's milk for the first week or ten days; then it may have a mixture of milk. Its first week of existence will depend largely upon the breed and the size of the calf, ranging from six to ten pounds a day, and this may be worked up to 26 and 20 as the calf advances in age. It is customary to have the whole milk from three to four weeks, then gradually change over on separator milk by adding a small lot of separator milk to the whole each day until the change has been entirely made. The calf may have the separator or skimmed milk until it reaches six months of age or even longer. Great care should be exercised at feeding times that the calves are kept separate, so that they will not acquire the habit of sucking each others ears, etc.

"Do you know him?" asked a gentleman of an Irish friend the other day, in speaking of a third person. "Know him!" said the Irishman. "I knew him when his father was a little boy!"

$3,600 in Cash Prizes for Farmers

ARE you going to build that new horseblock, sidewalk or dairy house of cement? Then insist on your dealer supplying you with the "CANADA" Cement. Not only will this ensure your getting a pure, uniform and strictly high-grade cement, that will guarantee the lifelong permanency of the thing you build, but it will also entitle you to enter our Prize Contest. And in this contest you stand a good chance of winning a prize that will perhaps more than pay you for the cost of the work. Every farmer in Canada who uses "CANADA" Cement is eligible to compete. Four prizes will be awarded in each Province and these prizes will be divided as follows:

PRIZE "A"—$100.00 to be given to the farmer in each Province who will use during 1911 the greatest number of barrels of "CANADA" Cement.

PRIZE "B"—$100.00 to be given to the farmer in each Province who uses "CANADA" Cement on his farm in 1911 for the greatest number of purposes.

PRIZE "C"—$100.00 to be given to the farmer in each Province who furnishes us with the photograph showing the best of any particular kind of work done on his farm during 1911 with "CANADA" Cement.

PRIZE "D"—$100.00 to be given to the farmer in each Province who submits the best and most complete description, of how any particular piece of work shown by photograph sent in, was done.

Notice how we have purposely planned and imposed certain necessary conditions in order to give large and small users of cement an equal opportunity.

As an illustration of this: In prizes "C" and "D," the quantity of cement used has no bearing whatever on the result. The farmer who sends us the best photograph of as small a thing as a watering trough or a gate post, has as much chance for prize "C" as a man who sends a photograph of a house—and the same applies to prize "D."

Don't hold back from entering because you think you don't know anything about concrete work. It's very simple. Besides, we have a 160-page book that we will send you free on request, which tells you all about concrete and how to make and use it. In this book, you'll find complete instructions for the making of almost everything you can think of in the way of farm utilities, floors, vats, troughs, stairs, posts, etc.

This free book—entitled "What the Farmer Can Do With Concrete"—will not only inform you—it will also greatly interest you. So send for it anyway, whether you intend to try for one of the prizes or not.

We congratulate Miss Ida Armstrong on obtaining her life teacher's certificate last week from the London Normal, also Miss May Jones on obtaining an interim teacher's certificate, and Miss Ida Rowe on obtaining a five-year certificate as teacher.

Rev. S. F. Sharp left on Monday morning for Auburn, N. Y., where he will take a special summer course in the ministery at the University, after which he will visit at Holly, N. Y., with Mrs. Sharp and daughter, Miss Margaret, who left for that place with Mr. Sharp Monday.

We have again been favored with the usual early treat of tomatoes by Mr. Chas. Birney, Section Foreman G. T. R. Mr. Birney has one of the finest gardens in town, being always in the lead with early tomatoes, and an appreciable fact is that the Advocate shares in a part of the early product.

Mr. F. E. Willis on Friday last caught one of the largest pike ever caught in this neighborhood, being 3 feet, 3 inches in length. Dr. Sweet the same day caught a pickerel eighteen inches in length and weighing four pounds Mrs. August Guhr the same day caught a pike and also a pickerel, but little shorter than the two above mentioned.

Miss Anne Sanders, who for the past ten months has been engaged on the Record staff, left on Saturday for her home in Exeter where she will spend the summer. In losing Miss Sanders The Record loses a very efficient helper. She was an active worker in the Methodist church and league, also a member of the church choir. While in Jarvis she made many warm friends who were sorry to see her depart from our midst and many kind wishes will follow her wherever her duties may take her." — Jarvis Record.

PUBLIC MEETING WOMAN'S INSTITUTE.—The Quarker Oats Company, under the direction of Miss M. Goldie, graduate of Macdonald Institute, will give a practical demonstration and talk on the value and preparation of Cereals, in the Town Hall, on Tuesday, July 18, at 3.30 o'clock. Everybody welcome.

Mrs. Hastings.

HICKS' FORECASTS—A Regular storm period begins on the 16th, and extends to the 23rd. We prolong this period to the new moon on the 25th for the reason that the storm periods are often drawn forward in their culmination by pending new moon dates. A probable storm crisis will fall on the 19th, 20 and 21, causing rain, wind and thunder, leaving high temperature and threatening conditions to continue over the 23rd.

SUCCESSFUL GARDEN PARTY.—The annual Garden Party under the auspices of the Ladies' Guild of the Trivitt Memorial Church was held on the rectory lawn Friday evening, and was probably the most successful financially and otherwise, ever held by The Guild. The weather was ideal for such an event. A cool and refreshing breeze tempered the air and the entertaining surroundings made it pleasant for all. The grounds were beautifully illuminated with electric lights, and the refreshments, consisting of ice cream, lemonade and choice cakes, etc., were served by a number of attentive young ladies of the congregation. The music furnished by Tony Vita's orchestra of London was of a high order, and contributed much to the pleasure of all. Every selection was beautifully rendered and loudly applauded. It may be said also that the orchestra was most liberal in the number of selections, a fact which was much appreciated. The proceeds amounted to $100.

BAND ORGANIZATION—There is every prospect of Exeter having a band in the near future. Mr. Ed. Treble has been authorized by the council to commence organization, and already a goodly number have signified their intention of becoming members. The new organization will be composed of entirely new blood, with the exception of Mr. Treble, who will have charge of the organization and tuition. The town is possessed of a large number of first-class instruments, and if any further requirements are necessary the council is prepared to furnish same. It is sometime now since Exeter has had a band and the new band should be encouraged and assisted in every way possible. Every town of any importance has a band and there is no reason whatever why Exeter should not have one. We have the men and material and all we now require is the effort to organize. As organizer and leader the selection of Mr. Treble is a good one, and the work could not have been entrusted to a more capable and competent man. Any person wishing to join the new band should make application to Mr. Treble

Mr. Jabez Welsh and daughter Miss Gale of Kalamazoo, Mich., are visiting with Mr. W. J. Bissett. Mr. Welsh is an Exeter Old Boy, but left these parts many years ago for the states. He reviews many of the boy-hood experiences in the old town with pleasure.

Little or no consolation can be taken out of the pleasant and cool change in the weather Tuesday night, if it be true what Bro. Andre, whose fame as a faith healer in connection with the shrine at Cote des Neiges, predicts. He says that on July 22 it will be so hot that people will die like flies by hundreds and thousands.

TWENTY-FOURTH YEAR. EXETER, ONTARIO, THURSDAY, JULY 20, 1911. SANDERS & CREECH

Local Items

Following the hot wave that recently brought death and suffering to the whole country, this week's weather promises to furnish suprises. In the other direction with the result that unusually low summer temperatures probably will prevail.

A representative of the Underwriter's Association was here on Tuesday and the fire alarm sounded about 11 a.m. The brigade was quickly on the scene, and soon excellent streams of water were flowing from the tank connections. Unfortunately, however, the gasoline engine did not start as quickly as usual and the power connection was consequently a little slow.

For the third successive year, in the Bisley Camp Rifle Shoot Canadian marksmen have won the Mackinnon cup, which is open for competition in shooting at the long ranges to teams of twelve men, representing the territorial forces and local militia of the different units of the Empire. Canada's team led that of England by 12 points, making an aggregate score of 1,581 out of a possible 1,600. The teams representing England, Ireland, Scotland, New Zealand, Guernsey, S. Africa, and India, followed Canada in the order named.

Early reports from the Porcupine District in New Ontario gave the loss last week from bush fires of from 300 to 500 people, but later reports state that it will probably not exceed 100. Even the lesser number, however, places it as one of the worst bush fires ever experienced in Canada. The financial loss will be nearly a million dollars. Many people were made homeless and the suffering among the women and children has been terrible. The Dominion and Ontario Governments and many towns and cities immediately sent relief in the form of tents and food, and large relief funds have been subscribed.

Over 30 lodges took part in the 12th July celebration at Goderich, and fully 6000 visitors were in the town that day, and some difficulty was experienced in feeding them, as the eating houses were not prepared for the large crowd. Besides the parade and the judging of the various bands a series of addresses were given in Court House Park A. M. Todd, past county master, was chairman, and gave an address of welcome to the visitors. He was followed by Mayor Cameron, who gave the freedom of the town. Half a dozen more addresses were given, the principal speakers being Rev. W. H. Cooper, of Milverton; Rev. T. H. Farr, of Blyth Rev. William Lowe, of Lucan; Rev. T. H. Condell, of Bayfield, and Rev. J. Pollick, Goderich.

Miss Hettie Welsh was home from London over Sunday.

Mr. and Mrs. Aquilla Snell are spending a short time at Port Franks.

Mr. Alfred Wilcox and lady friend of Detroit are visiting in Exeter North.

Mrs. Walper of London visited her father, Mr. S. J. Etherington, Tuesday.

Mr. and Mrs. Duncan McDougall of Comber are visiting in this neighborhood.

Mrs. T. B. Carling and daughters, Misses Eva and Martha, were in London Friday.

Dr. A. C. Ramsay and family of Hamilton are visiting relatives here for two or three weeks.

Miss Louise Bacrett arrived home on Tuesday from a visit with her brother George at Gladstone, Man.

Mr. and Mrs. Cardinal and daughter and Mr. and Mrs. Ericson of Rochester, N. Y. were visitors at W. G. Bissett's on Monday.

Mrs. G. E. Anderson went to Harrisburg on Tuesday, to assist her daughter, Mrs. Vrooman, who is moving this week to Copetown.

The following are among the number who were successful at the medical Council in the Final, Intermediate and Primary exams held in May at Toronto. —Final, Wm. Geiger, Hensall; Edward Vernon, St. Marys; Intermediate, H. McGavin, Seaforth. Primary, S. J. Coulter, Hensall; A. N. Kitt, Lucan.

RAIN—After three weeks of dry, hot weather the slashing shower of Friday evening, followed by the soaking rains of Saturday and Sunday, came as a happy relief. It is a little late to be of much use to the grains, but grass, roots and vegetables will be helped considerably.

RUNAWAY ACCIDENT.—On Tuesday evening last about eight o'clock Mr. David Wynn and Mr. Frank Mallett, experienced a rather bad mix-up, in which the horse owned by Mr. Wynn was badly injured and Mr. Wynn badly shaken up. They were driving home from Blanshard, where they had been putting up lightning rods, and when opposite Mr. Wm. Rollins', London Road, they met an auto, and when passing the horse bolted into the ditch, upsetting the rig and occupants, and the horse falling on the shaft broke it, the broken end piercing the horse's side behind the front leg, penetrating about a foot towards the breast. Mr. Mallett escaped with little or no injury, but Mr. Wynn besides being badly shaken up, sustained injury to one of his legs. The broken shaft was removed from the horse and Dr. Sweet was called, who dressed the wound; and it is thought that the horse will recover from its wound.

Miss Ethel Armstrong is visiting in St. Thomas.

The Trivitt Memorial Church Sunday School will picnic at Grand Bend today (Thursday).

NEARLY A BLAZE—A very mysterious blaze was discovered at the Canning Factory by night watchman, Thos. Kernick on Tuesday night last about 12 o'clock. The blaze started in the north east corner of the East building under one of the vihers and was making rapid progress. A few pails of water however soon put it out. Luckily it was discovered in the nick of time, otherwise the whole building would have been in ruins.

GRAND BEND GIRL DROWNED AT DETROIT

Mabel Mason, the 19yr old daughter of Joseph Mason, of Grand Bend, was drowned in the Detroit River on Monday night and in drowning nearly dragged to his death Samuel Parr, who was trying to save her.

There were four young men and two girls in the gasoline launch Lillie, of Windsor. Fire from the gasoline tanks, caused by the engine back-firing, drove the party to leap from the flames into the river. Neither of the girls could swim. Mary McGovern of Woodstock, the other girl, was rescued by Kenneth Baker, Windsor. The five survivors were taken from the water by Al Simmons, who dragged them into his launch when, exhausted by their water-soaked clothes, they were on the point of sinking. They started from Windsor early in the evening to enjoy the coolness of the river. They stopped at Field's boathouse to replenish the gasoline supply, and had got about fifty feet from the dock on the return to Windsor, when the gasoline tank blazed up. There was no explosion, but the gasoline instantly ignited the woodwork of the 20-foot launch and swept the suddenly terrified party before it into the river.

BITTEN BY STALLION

Mr. George Coward of Usborne met with a misfortune early Tuesday morning, by which he had the skin of his left arm below the elbow torn off by a stallion. He was returning the animal to the stable, and instead of tying it up with a double halter as usual before removing the bridle, he removed the bridle and fed the animal some oats. The horse grabbed him by the arm. Mr. Coward, who is a strong man and experienced in the ways of stallions, succeeded in swinging himself out of the door, and with the greatest difficulty prevented the beast dragging him back into the stall. His coat sleeve was torn off. The skin of the arm below the elbow was torn around the arm and ripped off down as far as the wrist, and on to the hand, requiring many stitches to close. The muscles and cords of the arm were laid bare and the wound is a very severe one. Drs. Hyndman and McGillicuddy were called to dress the wound.

USBORNE.

DEATH OF JOHN HORNEY—The sad death occurred on Saturday evening last about six o'clock of John Horney, a prominent farmer of Usborne Township, near Lumley, at the age of 47 years, 3 months and 10 days. Deceased had been ill only ten days, and confined to his room for one week. Death was due to appendicitis and other complications. From the time of his taking his bed on the previous Saturday his illness assumed a serious nature, and, although he had always been a strong healthy man, his chances of recovery appeared slight from the first. His death came as a shock to his relatives and numerous friends who have the sympathy of the whole community.. Deceased was a Methodist in religion and a conservative in politics, and was highly esteemed by all who knew him. He was a native of Usborne, being a son of the late Hy. Horney, and resided in that township all his life. Three years ago last March he married Miss Mary Jane Horton, daughter of William Horton. Besides the widow he is survived by his mother, five sisters, and one brother, Mrs. John R. MacDonald, Mrs. A. A. Spencer, Mrs. W. J. Statham and Miss Esther of Exeter, and Miss Mineretta of Chicago, who is at present home on a visit. The funeral took place on Tuesday afternoon to the Exeter cemetery and was very largely attended

Quite a number of our young people drove to the Bend on Sunday last. Unfortunately they had quite a wet day.

Mr. and Mrs. Edwards of Toronto are spending their holidays the guests of Mr. and Mrs. Duplan.

Mrs. Wes. Hodgins is visiting her mother who is quite ill at Clandeboye.

The baseball match on Friday evening last with the Hensall team was won quite easily by the home team, although many good plays were made by the visitors. The score was 13-5.

Mr. Victor Blatchford returned to Windsor after spending his vacation under the parental roof.

Miss Schraum is visiting with Mrs. Frank Colwill.

Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Brock of Zion spent Sunday with Mr. and Mrs. Trotham here.

Quite a number of the hired men went on strike the past week. Some have hiked to the city, and others by coaxing have gone back to work again.

Mr. Thos. Falls of Lucan spent Sunday with friends in the burg.

This is berry-picking time. The berries are quite plentiful this year and of a very good quality.

The Town Trustees have engaged J. English and Dan Oestreicher to build the cement water tanks for Fire Protection. They are putting down one at the Grist Mill at present.

Wouldn't it be a good idea if our town fathers would spend a little of money and cut the weeds along the cement walks. They have become quite rank and make it unpleasant for the ladies dresses especially.

Henry Steinacher has returned home from Chicago, Ill., where he attended the funeral of his brother.

Claude Bluett, B.A. and son Evelyn of London spent Tuesday and Wednesday in town renewing old acquaintances The bowlers were especially pleased to see him.

Ira Brown is spending his holidays camping at the Bend this week.

Harry Kuhn, wife and Mrs. Kienzie motored to Delhi last week and spent a few days there with friends.

Mr. and Mrs. John Wind and two grand-children returned home from Detroit last week after a pleasant visit with their children.

The rain on Saturday and Sunday was a very welcome one indeed and it has done a great deal of good to the crops and made life worth living.

The Evangelical Sunday school picnic which was held at the Bend last Wednesday was well attended. The day was ideal and all had a very enjoyable time.

Miss Lillian Gaiser, the newly appointed assistant organist of the Evangelical Church took charge of the organ for the first time last Sunday.

Mrs. Jacob Elber, Mrs. B. Brown, and Moses Falst have returned home after a few week's visit with relatives in Pigeon and Elkton, Mich.

Flax pulling has started. The Indians from the Muncey reserve have arrived and have been allotted different pieces by the Flax company.

Our threshers have been giving their mackinery a general over-hauling at Morlock's shop.

EXETER 3; CLINTON 2.

Exeter baseball team defeated Clinton in a seven innings game on the local diamond on Friday evening last. Score—3 to 2, with an innings to spare. A heavy shower of rain, the first in three weeks, fell just as the game was about to commence, but it cleared up in half an hour and the game was played on wet grounds, with here and there a big pool of water. In spite of the wet the game was a good one. Six hits were made off Carling, and he struck out 10 men, against four off Doherty, who struck out six. "Shorty" Cantelon of Clinton umpired, and while not too well up on the fine points of the game he divided up pretty well. Following are the players and score.—

Exeter		Clinton
Boyle	1	Manning	1
Carling	0	Johnston	0
Brown	0	McKay	0
Bellwood	0	Twitchell	0
Hoskins	0	Mairs	0

NORTHERN ONTARIO HORROR

Mining Towns Wiped Out and Nearly One Hundred Lives Lost

Cobalt, July 12.—The loss of life in Porcupine district, as the result of yesterday's fire, will probably reach nearly a hundred, while the property loss will reach $1,000,000.

In four short hours, commencing at 12.30 noon yesterday, the fire wiped from the Standard Mines right through to the shores of Porcupine Lake, where it ate up that town, the site of South Porcupine, Pottsville and part of Golden City, as well as many small buildings along the lake front. While part of the loss of life occurred in the vicinity of Porcupine Lake, the greatest havoc was around the main mines, notably West Dome and Big Dome. Here the entrapped miners, cut off from escape by the flames, were forced to take to the shafts for safety, and pened in by the flames, perished. This was notably true at Dome and West Dome Mines, wnile at Preston East Dome safety was sought in an untimbered shaft, and there was no loss of life. The streets of South Porcupine were strewn with dead human beings, horses, dogs, and cattle, while along the mine roads the charred corpses of those who failed to escape the flames, and perished in the seething furnace that swept over the 25 miles of country in front of a 60-mile gale.

It is known that of the staff of 300 at the Dome but a few were saved, while at the West Dome but three out of 84 employes are known to be alive. Along the highway between West Dome and South Porcupine, over a comparatively open section, there were six charred bodies.

Early in the morning dense clouds of smoke could be seen in the south-west, but little attention was paid to this in the towns, because of the apparent remoteness of the fire. A small fire also broke out in Lakeview, Porcupine Townsite, but this excited little notice because of the frequency of bush fires during the past two or three weeks. As noon approached, however, thick clouds of smoke reached the zenith, marking the approach of the fire, and soon the sun was obscured into a burning red ball of fire. At 12.30 the fire had covered an area of 25 miles in length and over 2 miles in width and had reached the base line of Tisdale, carrying with it the Standard and Imperial mines in Delora, Philadelphia in Shaw; and the Eldorado and United in Southern Whitney. At 1.15 p.m. the seriousness of the situation was realized in South Porcupine when the fire call was sounded on the Dome Mine whistle, with repeated blasts from whistles in other sections. By this time the sky was black with smoke and residents of South Porcupine began to pack valuable and light baggage for the hurried departure. It was not long before the flames had reached the Foley and O'Brien, having enveloped the Preston, East Dome, the Dome, West Dome, Big Dome and what remained of the Dome Extension after Sunday's fire.

The smoke hung low and dense in suffocating clouds over South Porcupine and in half an hour the shacks in the outlying section of the town had been reached. This was the beginning of the end.

It became apparent at once that the town and possibly all the inhabitants were doomed, for the width of the fire was sufficient for it to sweep over the entire town of South Porcupine and around both sides of Porcupine Lake. When the fire reached the frame buildings of the town there was a roar that could be heard for miles.

In twenty minutes South Porcupine was completely in flames and in three hours there were but corpses and a few smouldering embers where the most flourishing town of the camp had stood. Men, women and children crowded to the water front at the first warning, because it was plainly evident that the town could not live in the face of the fire and the fierce gale behind. Launches and canoes, scows and and boats were pressed into commission and women and children were first packed into the boats and sent to Pottsville and Golden City. Panic and chaos prevailed. Men fought with each other for their families and it was necessary for police officer Murray, with the assistance of Jack Gardener, to stand off the panic-stricken foreigners who stood by and rushed for each boat as it came in. Men were hurled into the water and many rushed in as the only place of safety. Thirty launches and as many canoes soon had the women landed in safety on the other side of the lake. There was one exception and only one, and that the most pitiful of all. Mrs. William Ghor with a baby in her arms, refused to leave the town until she had some news of her husband. Mr. Ghor, like the others who perished in the town, had gone back in an effort to save his valuables and with his clerk was penned in the building. For over two hours Mrs. Ghor, with the child in her arms, stood in the water of the lake, 100 feet from shore, calling for her husband and refusing to leave until he was found. Even after all had deserted the town and the fire had died out, she remained intent on shore waiting for the recovery of her husband's body. To add to the terror of the situation while the fire raged, there were scores of horses, cattle and dogs running wild through the town, their scorched bodies now lining the streets with bodies of the dead men.

FURTHER DETAILS.

Out of the chaos and confusion of the first day following the fire affairs are becoming adjusted to such an extent that the terrible import of it all can be realized. But never will it be half appreciated as it is by those who went through it. Doctors, nurses and medical supplies arrived during the night and no time was lost in getting to work. Hunger, the usual follower of such terrible incidents, is the one thing that those not otherwise injured had to fight against, and bread and provisions were rushed in as fast as possible. With the exception of what remained in the few stores of Golden City, there remained nothing to eat. Considerate friends down the country are looking after this, however, and there will be no danger from that point.

At the beginning it was believed that the greatest loss of life occurred at the mines and in the bush, where many prospectors must have perished, but the towns gave up the greatest number of dead, and 200 as a total is a conservative estimate of those who lost their lives. There was no loss of life in Pottsville, and at first it was thought that South Porcupine's loss numbered but four, but since then five bodies, whether of men or women is not known, have been found in the rear of where the Empire Theatre stood, making it apparent that they were endeavoring to make their escape to the north of the zone of flames.

Porcupine Lake has given up 41 victims drowned by plunges into the lake, by suffocation while standing in the water, or by being swamped when in canoes.

Along the Shaw-Deloro line on the trail were found eight bodies of unknown dead, and on the south side of Porcupine Lake three more were added to the six on the trail between the Dome Mine and South Porcupine. Coffins are being built out of rough lumber.

Joseph Tracey tells a vivid story of the disaster as it visited the West Dome property. It appears that Manager Weiss and those who perished did not take to the shaft as a last resort, but thinking the property well cleared was fairly safe from the fire, went there to get away from the dense smoke, with them was Mr. Tracey. As the fire approached, he went up the ladder to the surface and there found the bent frame and shafthouse ablaze. He tried to extinguish the fire, but could not, and so shouted down the shaft for the others to come up and find some other means of escape. He then rushed for the swamp, back of the power-house and there buried in muskeg, escaped the flames which consumed the others.

"Shotgun Bill" King, prospector for Heinze, was among those who came out of the shaft after Mr. Tracey, but he perished on the surface at the mouth of the shaft. It is probable that Mrs. Burt, whose body was found half way up the main, was also trying to follow.

Among the narrow escapes was that of the little daughter of Dr. Hartigan, a veterinary in Pottsville. In some way the little girl was lost in the fire, and made her way to the Shuniah Hotel. Her cries for her mother were heard as the hotel was about to be enveloped in flames, and she was taken out by Mrs. Lindsay Morton, who with her own daughter, was making for a raft which was going out into Porcupine Lake. The little girl was later placed with her mother in Golden City.

McManigal, the Los Angeles dynamiting informer, is on the verge of nervous collapse.

SOME STIRRING NARRATIVES

Details Given by Those Who Passed Through Fire

Disaster Intensifies as Refugees Unfold Terrible Calamity.

A despatch from Toronto says: Further details of the awful disaster in Northern Ontario, with additional estimates of the dead running from 75 to 100, were brought to Toronto Thursday evening by miners and prospectors, who arrived from the north on the Grand Trunk train from North Bay which reached Toronto at 11.15. Every man who was seen expressed the opinion that the death list will run up to at least 300. Many of those who stepped from the train last night were without any clothing except that which they wore, and most of them had no coats. Their boots were scorched white, showing where they had walked over the hot ground. Many anxious friends were waiting for the arrival of the train, and as the survivors stepped to the station platform they were at once surrounded and hurried away, some to hotels, some to private residences, and others hurried to Turkish bathhouses.

Mr. J. J. Moss, a mine operator from Reno, Nevada, was among those who saved their lives by standing shoulder deep in the waters of Porcupine Lake until the fury of the flames subsided. He said that fully 400 people fled to the lake, and expressed the belief that twenty or thirty in his vicinity had drowned. He joined a party of seven of the Imperial Bank staff, who had placed the gold and money belonging to the bank in a canoe to save it. "It took all the strength of the eight of us to prevent the canoe from being swamped by the waves," said Mr. Moss. His clothing showed the effects of the long immersion in the rough waters of Porcupine Lake. Mr. Moss, however, had been able to save his valises and their contents by burying them in a rut in one of the streets of South Porcupine.

R. Brown, news agent on the train which arrived last evening, came through from Englehart. "In addition to the people who were on the ground when the fire broke out," he said, "there were 300 prospectors who had arrived on Saturday and Sunday, and they were all going into the woods. They must have perished. On Wednesday night 55 people slept in a Pullman car at Cochrane, while others slept in the T. and N. O. station, in day cars, box cars, and cattle cars. They were glad to get anywhere in order to snatch a few hours' sleep. When he left the north 27 bodies had been taken from the Dome Mine. Five or ten more were in sight, but had not been taken out. Matheson was completely cut off by the fire. Coming down from Englehart to North Bay the train passed through a section of the country which is burned over, and the heat from the ground was so intense that both sides of the coaches were scorched."

SAW MILLS BURNED.

Buildings of Riordon Paper Mills in Quebec Burned.

A despatch from Calumet, Que., says: Fire totally destroyed the sawmills of the Riordon Paper Company here. The clerk in charge had barely time to telephone the news to the head offices of the company in Montreal. Three hundred men are employed by the mill, and, in company with the men from the company's Hawkesbury mill, across the river, successfully checked the spread of the flames to the neighboring cottages and to the piles of lumber in the vicinity of the mill.

A fire engine and ten men were sent out from Montreal to help in the work of preventing further damage, and finally extinguished the flames.

The loss will be about $1,000,000.

27 FAMILIES HOMELESS.

Disastrous Fire in St. Jerome—Loss is Over $150,000.

A despatch from St. Jerome, Que., says: The most disastrous fire in the history of this town occurred Wednesday afternoon, breaking out at three o'clock between two sheds. A strong breeze and the long spell of hot weather, which had rendered the wooden buildings which form the greater part of the town dry as tinder, made the blaze almost uncontrollable, and before it was subdued it had ravaged the entire business section of the town, laying waste an area of over three acres. The damage is estimated at over $150,000. Twenty-seven families have been rendered homeless.

CONTRACTS SIGNED.

Work Will Begin at Once on Sudbury-Port Arthur Line.

A despatch from Toronto says: Contracts for the construction of the Port Arthur to Sudbury division of the Canadian Northern Railway, the greatest link in the company's transcontinental system not yet built, were signed on Thursday. The work will be done conjointly by the Foley Brothers, of St. Paul, and the Northern Construction Company, of Winnipeg, who will start operations at once, putting between four and five thousand men in the field. It will not be possible to arrive at the exact cost of the undertaking until it is well advanced, as the work is to be paid for at so much per yard of blasting and digging, per mile of track-laying, etc, but a rough guess places it at about $50,000 average per mile for the entire distance of 551 miles from Port Arthur to Selwood Junction, the present terminus of the Canadian Northern Ontario, a few miles northwest of Sudbury.

IS 103 YEARS OLD.

Aged Guelph Woman was Able to Answer Census Man.

A despatch from Guelph, Ont., says: The oldest person whose name was received during the taking of the recent Dominion census in Guelph was that of Mrs. Hubbard, who lives in St. James Ward. The old lady is in her 104th year, having been born in May, 1808. She is still in good health and was able to answer all the questions intelligently.

HEROIC DEEDS AT HOLOCAUST

Scenes Witnessed During Progress of Great Fire

A despatch from Cobalt, Ont., says: Acts of heroism throughout Porcupine during the progress of the fire are too numerous to mention in detail and the horrors of the holocaust too gruesome to print. As one man expressed it, after the fire, "To go through this, one could travel through hell with a smile on his face." One man was led through the town with both eyes burned out and moaning only because his partner had perished. Another with his face and arms a mass of blisters and still another with his body opened by burns.

Harry Roche, a mining engineer, and A. S. Shields, representative of the J. B. O'Brien Co., beat their way back through the town when the flames were at their height and brought out with them an unknown man who was so seriously burned that a portion of his hand fell off when he was picked up. Little will ever be known of the experiences on some of the properties or in the bush, as only the dead remain. A few have, however, already come to light. For example, at the United Porcupine, where were the three Flynn brothers, who had heretofore never separated, two are now alive and one remains behind a charred mass. At the United Porcupine property there was no shelter from the flames, and the men sought refuge on an outcropping of rock. There Andy Yuyll, the foreman, perished with Frank Flynn and Joseph Fletcher, while another named Dwyer, a Colorado miner, is missing. On the same rock, J. L. Flynn and Joseph Flynn watched their brother burn to death, J. L. Flynn receiving serious burns on arms and face. With them was Gilbert Gibbs, whose features were burned beyond recognition, and whose arms and body were scorched. The flames came upon these as on others with such rapidity that even blankets or towels to wrap about them could not be obtained, and yet these hardy men survived the furnace of flames, and after the fire had passed made their way over five miles into Porcupine in spite of their injuries. At the Philadelphia, when it became evident that the mine must go, Manager E. P. Ashmore, Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Shovel and others retreated toward town. With the party was C. E. Adams, a resident of Philadelphia, who was at the property in the capacity of bookkeeper. He was in poor health, and died in the arms of Manager Ashmore of heart failure. It was necessary to leave Adams' body behind to the flames. The men from the Eldorado all escaped. What occurred in detail at West Dome, the centre of the most terrible part of the catastrophe, will probably never be known, but it is apparent that so old and experienced a miner as Robt. A. Weiss would never have led his associates into a timbered shaft in time of fire unless all other means of escape was cut off. However, there are in the West Dome shaft 27 bodies, including that of Mr. Weiss.

Lord Strathcona signed the roll amidst a great demonstration.

ANIMALS OF THE NIGHT.

The Badger is Ungainly but Very Quick.

He came down the hill through the mists at even, a long, low, grey shadow, gliding mysteriously through the deepening gloom. He seemed altogether out of place in English scenery, and the mists distorted him almost to the size of a bear. He was, however, a badger.

At the bottom of the hill he suddenly met something coming up out of the woodland ditch, and for an ungainly beast his spring was mighty quick. The big paw — you could see the long claws gleam like steel knives in the new moonlight—scooped out and round—whoosh! Then he leapt back a clear yard, and swore openly, and danced an uncanny dance of sheer rage, holding up the while the paw that had struck. It was blood-stained. As for the foe, he was a hedge-hog, and in his fighting pose—that is to say, curled up carefully—was about as assailable as a porcupine.

The badger removed to discover roots of a certain lily to his liking, and on these he fed in the still dark among the great columned aisles of tree-boles, where the heavy scent of woodland flowers hung on the air like incense, and nameless beasts came and went, rustling like ghosts over the leaves.

Then a rabbit squealed, and the badger flung up his pig-like snout. It worked. He picked up the scent and with head out, and every very bristly bristle erect, began to follow it up. It led to an open space washed with moonlight, and a very young rabbit, who had just died suddenly. Something round and uncouth was beside the rabbit, and this time the badger's spring was not too slow. He scooped that hedgehog over, and slew him quickly. Thereafter he fed.

Passing then from the wood, he struck a rustling cornfield, where the rabbits had their innumerable lanes, and the corncrakes raspjed their exasperating note eternally. Here also he fed, but on corn this time; and, not content, must needs roll on what he could not eat, to the horror of the partridges, troubled for their nests, and the scandal of a hare with leverets, who rushed upon him with quite unhare-like grunting, and struck him in the chest, so that he ran away from sheer amazement.

So, digging out a boiling wasps' nest with splendid unconcern, and feeding on the grubs therein, home he went over the downs a full half-hour before the first star had paled in the east.

The nightjars were still chewing like fishing-reels, and the little pipistrelle bats taking their mazy dawn-flight, as he stole down to his den in the black and serried pinewood. The den—called a "set"—looked like the beginnings of a mine. It was in a sand-pit, a collection, not of holes merely, but of caverns, in which others besides badgers found a home.

Ten minutes later his wife, followed by her four small young—a string of grey shadows in the gloom—came down and went to ground in another chamber. Came then a pause, during which a lark suddenly shot up singing, though it was still dark.

Then a longer, lower, blacker shadow slid out of the night, and vanished in a smaller holt. He was a polecat, last of his kind in those parts—a brigand with a character that would not even stand the faint light of dawn. Again a pause, whilst lark after lark took up the strange, unearthly chorus.

A faint thinning of the gloom became apparent; trees stood out; shadows receded, a and stoat, snaky and alert, galloped down to the earthworks and vanished. Later, just as the first thrush struck up his song, the stoat's wife and her string of young followed.

Swiftly marched the light over the trees, and bird after bird threw itself into the now swelling, throbbing chorus rising voluminously to meet the sun. Then—red, lean, and grinning—there trotted down to the great holes the latest of the robbers, the old dog-fox. He paused at the mouth of the dirtiest hole of all—as the badger's were the cleanest—gave an insolent, swaggering whisk to his tail, and dived below.

It was day.

BABY'S OWN TABLETS CURE SUMMER COMPLAINT

Baby's Own Tablets should be kept in every home where there are babies or young children. At no time of the year is baby in such danger as in summer. At the first sign of illness the Tablets should be given to the little one, for summer complaints come on so quickly that unless prompt aid is at hand baby may be beyond help in a few hours. The Tablets never fail to relieve the sick child, and if occasionally given to the well child will keep him well. Mrs. Desire Martin, St. Denis, Que., writes: "I have a baby three months old who suffered from colic and constipation. Castor Oil was of no help at all, but Baby's Own Tablets speedily cured him, and now I always keep them in the house." The Tablets are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

BAD HABITS IN THE OFFICE.

To Perform Toilet in Public is Evidence of Ignorance.

Miss O'Malley took out her piece of chamois skin and gave her face a thorough going over with it. Then she extracted from her handbag an eyebrow pencil and smoothed out her eyebrows. When she had satisfied herself by a minute inspection in a small hand glass as to the appearance of her face, she opened the drawer of her desk, took from the back compartment a full set of manicure utensils, and proceeded to manicure her nails with the utmost insouciance. All this she did before she even began to "go through the motions" of working.

The "boss," coming in unexpectedly early, noted her toilet operations and frowned a little. He obviously didn't like it, but felt helpless about coping with the situation.

Miss O'Malley blushed just a trifle when she saw that he was looking at her, but shrugged her shoulders and remarked to herself that if he didn't like it he knew what he could do.

It is quite surprising, all things considered, the number of girls who need to be told that they should avoid giving the offices in which they work the appearance of beauty parlors.

Even if a girl is unfortunate enough not to have been taught at home, the newspapers and magazines are full of advice to the business woman, and it seems strange that any girl should fail to know that it is neither good business nor good manners to manicure her nails or anoint her face with cold cream in the office.

It seems impossible in these days that any one should not know how exceedingly ill-bred it is to do these things in public, but it is a fact that many girls perform these smal operations in full view of every one who may chance to come in.

Frequently it is the girls who try to combine too much pleasure with business who are the offenders. They are more often the ones who rush in considerably after the last moment with hair half combed and shirtwaist more than half unbuttoned.

An occasional dab with a chamois skin is unavoidable, as we all know, but it does seem as if the conventionalities were deserving of the tribute of having this done in the most retired place in the office, if it is impossible to take the time to go to the lavatory and do it.

It is unquestionably a laudable thing to polish one's boots, but one can scarcely blame the boss for being annoyed when he comes in and finds his stenographic force with its feet propped up on the rounds of the vhairs and its hands busy with the dauber and polisher.

The office boy will probably think it is amusing when he sees you rubbing your nose with a powder rag, but to the man higher up it will be merely an evidence of ignorance or ill breeding.

"GOOD-NIGHT!"

He said "Good-night," and he held her hand
In a hesitating way,
And he hoped that her eyes would understand
What his lips refused to say.

He held her hand, and he murmured low:
"I'm sorry to go like this,
It seems so frigidly cold, you know,
This 'Mister' of ours, and 'Miss.'

"I thought—perhaps——" And he paused to note
If she seemed inclined to frown;
But the light in her eyes his heart-strings smote,
As she blushingly looked down.

She said no word, but she picked a speck
Of dust from his coat lapel.
Such a small—such a wee little, tiny fleck,
'Twas a wonder she saw so well.

And it brought her face so very near,
In that dim, uncertain light,
That the thought, unspoken, was made quite clear,
And I know twas a sweet "good-night."

NOTES OF THE SHEEPFOLD.

No use to buy pure bred sheep if they are to be allowed to starve and rustle around for themselves.

A scrub will do better under such conditions.

Never buy a ram whose wool is scanty on the belly and legs. He should be well covered and the fleece should be uniform.

In selecting a ram always pick out one that stands square on his legs, shows courage and masculinity. A slow, poky animal will prove a disappointment.

If a ewe keeps her lamb in fine fat condition up to the time of weaning, be sure she is a good mother, and keep her.

The real value of a sheep cannot be determined, particularly as a breeder, until it is one year of age.

A dairy farm of a dozen cows can maintain a flock of fifteen or twenty sheep almost without expense.

Silence is often the strongest protest that can be offered.

HINTS FOR THE HOME.

A kitchen golden rule is to clean as you go, and so save unnecessary labor and fatigue.

Paste for paperhanging should have a teaspoonful of powdered alum added to every pound of flour.

Before using a new saucepan boil it well out with sodawater to which a few potato parings have been added.

When roasting potatoes under the meat, they should first be parboiled, and then lighlysprinkled with coarse salt before serving.

Never leave a metal spoon in a saucepan if you wish the contents to boil quickly, for the spoon is the means of carrying off a great deal of heat.

Keep old kid gloves and use the finger tips to cover the corks of bottles when travelling. It tied on tightly you need have no fear of leakage.

To remove ink stains apply a paste of salt and lemon juice to the stained part of the cloth. Leave it foran hour or two, and if necessary repeat the application.

When boiling green vegetables, add as much borax as will lie on a ten cent piece to the water in which they are boiled. This will improve both color and flavor.

A rump steak should be cut about one and a quarter to one and a half inches thick, and then, if broiled over a clear fire for eight to ten minutes, it will be cooked to perfection.

Housewives complain that milk puddings and custards curdle in cooking. If the milk is scalded, and allowed to become cool before adding the eggs, it will not curdle.

While stoning raisins have ready a basin of hot water to keep dipping the fingers in. It keeps them clean and the stones sink to the bottom of the basin, saving time and trouble.

To Polish an Iron.—On to a smooth piece of board, such as a box cover, nail half a sheet of emery cloth. This kept at hand when ironing, and used to rub the irons on, will keep them in perfect order.

When repairing wall paper do not put on a square patch, but cut edges as much as possible after the pattern. On a plain paper it is a good plan to tear the paper, as this makes a thinner edge, which adheres closely.

Vinegar is not Used as it should be in the preparation of tough meat. Put one tablespoonful into the water in which meat is to be boiled, and you will have a tender joint. Meat which is to be stewed should first be dipped in vinegar.

For gilt frames on no account use ordinary dusters, for they wear off the gilt and deaden the brightness. Instead use a feather or light dusting-brush.

To Make Buttered Toast.—Toast the bread before a brisk fire, slightly moisten with hot milk or water, then butter. Toast made in this way is very tasty, and requires a less quantity of butter than in the ordinary way.

Browning for Soup and Gravy—Put a very small lump of dripping in the frying pan, add to it half a pound of coarse brown sugar, and a tablespoonful of salt, and stir over a clear fire till a dark brown, then add half a pint of boiling water; boil up, and when cold bottle for use.

BREAD WITHOUT FLOUR.

French Machine Transforms the Wheat Directly Into Dough.

In France bread has been made without flour in a machine that transforms the wheat directly into dough. This machine shows a large screw turning loosely in a case on the inner surface of which is a screw thread running in an opposite direction.

Between the main threads on the cylinder are smaller threads and the depth of the groove becomes progressively smaller from one end to the other, so that it will hold the entire wheat grain as it enters the machine at the same time accommodating only the pulverized wheat at the exit.

The wheat is prepared by a thorough washing, after which operation, says Harper's Weekly, about a pint of tepid water to a pound of grain is added, the whole mixture being allowed to stand some six hours. Then the grains of wheat have swollen to twice their ordinary size.

The mixture is then treated with yeast and salt and is poured into the machine. It falls between the threads of the moving screw and of the fixed contrary screw, which simultaneously crush the envelope and body of the grain, making of them ahomogeneous mixture that forms a smooth paste.

Bread made by this process contains a succession of holes whose size increases as they approach the crust, which is thin. The odor given off is said to be especially agreeable.

Tell a girl she is beautiful, and it will be no news to her if she really is.

Sober second thought may not show up until the morning after.

Minard's Liniment Cures Distemper.

"I, say, Jack," said Mrs. Smith to her husband across the breakfast-table one morning, "how extravagant you are—actually eating jam on buttered bread!" "What nonsense you talk, dear!" said Mr. Smith. "Nothing could be more economical. The same piece of bread does for both!"

An Always Ready Pill.—To those of regular habit medicine is of little concern, but the great majority of men are not of regular habit. The worry and cares of business prevent it, and out of the irregularity of life comes dyspepsia, indigestion, liver and kindney troubles as a protest. The rundown system demands a corrective and there is none better than Parmelee's Vegetable Pills. They are simple in their composition and can be taken by the most delicately constituted.

Cholera morbus, cramps and kindred complaints annually make their appearance at the same time as the hot weather, green fruit, cucumbers, melons, etc., and many persons are debarred from eating these tempting things, but they need not abstain if they have Dr. J. D. Kellog's Dysentery Cordial and take a few drops in water. It cures the cramps and cholera in a remarkable manner and is sure to check every disturbance of the bowels.

REVENGE AT LAST.

To punish her little girl a lady put her in a closet. For fifteen long minutes the door was locked without a sound coming from behind. Not a whimper nor a sniffle. At last the stern but anxious parent unlocked the closet door and peered into the darkness. She could see nothing.

"What are you doing in there?" she cried.

Slowly and with emphasis a small voice made reply:

"I'm thpittin' on your new hat, and I'm thpittin' on your new dreth, and I'm thpittin' on your new thatin thlipperth, and—and—"

There was a breathless pause. "And what are you doing now?" anxiously cried the mother who had been vainly trying to locate the hidden baby.

"Waitin' for thum more thpit!" said the voice of vengeance.

FAME, INDEED.

The doctors crowded round the bedside of the man who was ill.

"We congratulate you most heartily," said the spokesman. "After examining your case carefully we have come to the conclusion that you are suffering from an entirely new disease. Again we congratulate you."

"But what for?" inquired the patient. "Am I likely to recover?"

"That we cannot say," replied the doctor. "It is very doubtful as yet."

"Then why congratulate me?"

"We are going to name the new disease after you!"

A Boon for the Bilious.—The liver is a very sensative organ and easily deranged. When this occurs there is undue secretion of bile and the acrid liquid flows into the stomach and sours it. It is a most distressing ailment, and many are prone to it. In this condition a man finds the best remedy in Parmelee's Vegetable Pills, which are warranted to speedily correct the disorder. There is no better medicine in the entire list of pill preparations.

ABSOLUTE PROOF.

A man who had received a jury notice pleaded deafness as his excuse for not attending.

"I really am deaf," he said to the clerk who was enrolling the names.

"Prove it," said the clerk.

The man hesitated, then his face brightened as an organ commenced to play in the street outside.

"Can you hear that organ?" he said.

"Yes," replied the clerk.

"Well, I can't," replied the man triumphantly.

Wire Wounds.

My mare, a very valuable one, was badly bruised and cut by being caught in a wire fence. Some of the wounds would not heal, although I tried many different medicines. Dr. Bell advised me to try MINARD'S LINIMENT, diluted at first, then stronger as the sores began to look better, until after three weeks, the sores have healed, and best of all, the hair is growing well, and is NOT WHITE as is most always the case in horse wounds.

Minard's Liniment Cures Diphtheria.

People who are always talking about their achievements would be more interesting if they would only talk about ours.

It is an undisputed fact that one packet of Wilson's Fly Pads has actually killed a bushel of house flies. Fortunately no such quantity can ever be found in a well kept house, but whether they be few or many Wilson's Fly Pads will kill them all.

Before marriage a woman thinks she ought to have a protector, but after marriage she discovers that she has a husband to protect.

It Eases Pain. Ask any druggist or dealer in medicines what is the most popular of the medicinal oils for pains in the joints, in the muscles or nerves, or for neuralgia and rheumatism, and he will tell you that Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil is in greater demand than any other. The reason for this is that it possesses greater healing qualities than any other oil.

NOT WHAT HE EXPECTED.

"You say you would die for me, George?"

There was a tender ring in the maiden's voice as she put this question to the man who adored her.

"Of course I would, darling!"

"That is noble of you, George."

"Noble! Oh, Maud, if you only knew me. It is nothing to what I would do. I do not fear death, disgrace, poverty—anything. For your sake I would brave all. What do you ask of me?"

"I don't want you to die, George; it's only——"

"Name it, my darling. I will do it!"

"All I ask is this, then, George: Please don't call here again!"

ORGANIZATION

After every general election the political doctors of the defeated party hold a post mortem to decide what caused the disaster. They invariably return the same verdict "Lack of Organization." One is tempted to wonder why these wiseacres do not now and then hold a consultation before death; if there is anything wrong with the party why not make a diagnosis when there is time to apply a remedy.

Does the Conservative party suffer from lack of organization?

We are apt to assume that the Government party is organized aright. It is the natural enough trait of human nature to overrate the enemy. It is not a bad trait; it is certainly preferable to underrating the enemy. If we assume that the Liberals are organized, it is because we assume that the Government has enough prestige, influence and money to perfect an organization throughout the country. Some people get into the way of supposing that a Government can never be defeated. But Governments are overthrown and hopelessly defeated in spite of their influence, money and organization. In 1905 the Ross Government of Ontario had an elaborate machine. It benefitted from the policy of Sir Oliver Mowat, which centralized all power in Toronto. Yet this organization proved absolutely useless against the public opinion which swept the Ross Government from power and inaugurated the Whitney Government with a magnificent majority. In 1908 the Government of Sir James Whitney was confirmed in power, not by organization, but by the force of public opinion which manifested itself irrespective of party in giving Ontario's Premier an increased majority. As a matter of fact Conservatives in the rank and file have complained that the Whitney Government was not interesting itself in carrying that election. The people, however, were so thoroughly attached to Sir James and his policies that they took care of the results without much aid from the politicians. No organizations by the Liberals, however perfect, could have kept Ross in power in 1905 or could have defeated Whitney in 1908.

But if the Conservatives backed by a tremendous public opinion were able to overthrow the Ross Government in 1905 and to sustain the Whitney Government in 1908, it by no means follows that organization is not an important factor in deciding an election. The anti-reciprocity sentiment may count for a good deal in the coming Federal contest and it may be so strong in some localities as not to require the aid of political organization; but it is none the less true that "elections are not made by prayers" and that they are largely made by organization.

This word "organization" is loosely used. Many people complain of the lack of organization without being at all able to point out how things could have been better done. It is clear at the outset that every National party entering a National campaign should have some National organization. The party in control of the Government has this almost automatically. The sixteen ministers of the Crown reside at Ottawa all the year with large salaries, with all their clerical help paid by the Government and with every opportunity to make a platform for the party and to look after its candidates in various parts of the country. The Opposition has no such advantage. The Leader of the Opposition and the Chief Whip are always in Ottawa and in close touch with one another and with Opposition members of Parliament. They must, as things are at present, constitute themselves a National executive committee and see that the organization of the party is perfected.

TOO DRY FOR BIG YIELDS

It may seem a little bit like rubbing it in to make any extended comment upon the hot weather of the past weeks and the prolonged season of dry weather, especially in Ontario. And yet it is of far-reaching importance. In some parts of the country the probable yield from hay and grain crops has been cut in two. Hay has been cut a couple of weeks earlier than usual, owing to the hot dry weather making it necessary if the farmer desired to get any crop at all. Fall wheat has ripened earlier also, and last week saw the harvesting of this crop pretty general all over Western Ontario. The cooler weather at the end of the week may help the grain to fill out better than if the hot spell had been prolonged, but even this will not make up for the general shrinkage in yield because of the want of rain. Spring crops also are suffering, and the returns from this season's harvest in Ontario are likely to be considerably reduced. Fruits, corn and root crops are also suffering, and the outlook is anything but optimistic. Pastures too are drying up, and there is talk of a milk famine in Toronto and elsewhere. On the whole this dry, hot spell has been more serious in its effect upon the crop in Ontario than any experienced for some years past. It has been pretty general in its application, and few farmers have escaped.

REFINED WOMEN THE WORLD OVER USE IT.

Every woman knows that there is nothing so good for hair and scalp trouble as Parisian Sage. If Parisian Sage is used two or three times a week it will keep the scalp nice and clean and remove dandruff. It makes the hair lustrous and fluffy, and keeps it from falling out.

We urge every woman who loves radiant and fascinating hair to go to W. S. Cole to-day and get a large 50 cent bottle of Parisian Sage. He guarantees it to cure dandruff, falling hair and itching scalp, or money back.

A certain gentleman, Mr. J. E. Thompson of Norfolk County, a fruit grower, has, according to the Times, always been a Conservative, and now proposes to vote for the Reciprocity party. A half column is devoted to the case. Undoubtedly there are half-a-dozen other cases of this kind in Ontario. The men may be sincere too, and, on the other hand, they may be soreheads, which is hard to tell at this distance. However, a few such cases do not amount to much as compared to the great defection from the Liberal party on the question of Reciprocity. What about the sixteen prominent Liberals in Toronto? What about the Liberal M. P's., Sifton and German, whose criticisms of the pact have never yet been answered?

ELECTIONS ONLY SIX WEEKS OFF

Ottawa, Ont. July 17.—From three to six weeks more and then a general election, with reciprocity as the issue seem to be the accepted programme for the Canadian law makers who are today returning to the capital for the resumption of business, where it was dropped on May 19th, when the adjournment took place.

PRICES IN THE STATES

Consumable Commodities That Have Dropped In Price Since April, 1910

There has been a decided recession in the various markets for consumable commodities in the United States since a year ago, when the great body of consumers in different parts of the republic protested against the high cost of living in the form of anti-meat-eating leagues and by many petitions to the Government at Washington. The Pioneer Press, of St. Paul, Minnesota, recently published the following table which shows prices of various commodities in April, 1910, and April, 1911:

	1910. April,	1911. April,
Navy beans, per bush	$2.55	$2.25
Cornmeal, per bush..	2.10	1.50
Lard, per lb.....	.18	.12½-.15
Cheese	.17½	.13
Salmon, per doz. 2-lb. cans	1.65	2.00
Rolled oats, per 100 lbs.	2.50	1.90
Ham (whole)	.16½	.12½
Bacon	.18½	.14
Flour (best) per bbl.	6.00	5.00
Eggs	.25	.15-.16
Butter (best grades) .	.33-.35	.28
Chickens	.24	.18
Sirloin steak	.22	.20
Porterhouse	.26	.24

The Pioneer Press concludes by saying: "Butcher, grocer and consumer express gratification at the showing that the month of April makes in comparison to the same month in 1910. The dealers, especially, express themselves as well pleased with the 'drop,' because more goods will be sold and business will be better than for some time."

GRAIN AND BREADSTUFFS

Some Figures of the Trade in These Commodities

The Canadian Miller, in its May number ,contains the following historical sketch of the grain and breadstuffs trade between Canada and the United States, showing the gradual increase in imports from the latter country:—

A brief summary of the development of trade between Canada and the United States in grain and breadstuffs since Confederation may be of interest just now. Statistics are not complete, and there have been changes in classification which alter the results in some items. In 1874 our imports of dutiable breadstuffs of all kinds were $64,328 from the United States. By 1880 these grew to over a million dollars, and from that down to 1896 they ranged from a million and a quarter to over four million dollars per year. They then dropped below the million mark till 1902, when they were $1,220,000, and they have risen steadily, till in 1910 these imports fro mthe United States were $1,740,000 out of a grand total of $2,589,000 from all countries. The list of free breadstuffs imported from the United States made a total of $15,447,000 in 1874, and these large imports were maintained till 1879, when the National Policy was enforced, when they dropped to nothing for three years, and the grand total up to 1889 was only about $10,000 of free breadstuffs. The imports were small till 1896, when they were $99,288, and next year they jumped to $720,000, and in 1898 they jumped further to $6,968,000. The free imports have ranged since then from two millions to eight millions a year, the figures in 1910 being $4,636,000. These figures include raw grain as well as manufactured cereal products.

Turning to exports, we shipped wheat to the United States to the value of $2,494,000 in 1868, and this varied from a few thousands in some years to over two million dollars, averaging about a million till 1894, when it dropped to $76,000. Since 1903 it has ranged all the way from $100,000 to nearly three million. Taking all grains, our exports in 1868 to the United States were $6,699,000, and varied from four millions to thirteen millions till 1893, when for the first time it was under two million, since which it has in some years gone as low as $204,000. It rose, however, from $635,000 in 1908 to $2,958,000 in 1910.

Our exports of wheat flour in 1869 to the United States were $423,000, and remained above the $100,000 mark till 1878, since when they have been insignificant till 1904, when they were again above $100,000. In 1908 Canada exported flour to the value of $122,000 and in 1910 $571,000. Our export there of all other manufactured grain products were $86,000 in 1896, and have been small all the way down the years till 1910. The grand total of our exports of grain products were $850,000 in 1868, but since the eighties were below $100,000, except in one year, down to 1904. In 1908 they were $126,000, and in 1910 $582,000. These returns are given in round numbers.

He was accompanied by his nephew Alfred.—Miss Gertrude Magel of Detroit is visiting relatives and friends here, at present.—

On July 9th after several months' illness, our esteemed townsman, Mr. Jacob Ort breathed his last. He had reached the age of 68 years and 27 days, and less than a year ago he was considered one of the strongest of men, with an extremely rugged constitution. Some months ago he began to show signs of failing health and he gradually grew weaker, his illness being caused by a growth forming in the kidneys. He leaves to mourn his loss a widow and a grown up family of sons and daughters, who have the sincerest sympathy of all in their bereavement. The deceased came to this section about ten years ago from Oxford County.

EXCURSIONS TO WESTERN CANADA

The Grand Trunk Railway System announce that on Tuesdays, June 27th, July 11th and 25th, August 8th and 22nd, September 5th and 19th, 1911, Homeseeker's excursions will be run to Western Canada from all stations in Ontario and Quebec, via Chicago and Duluth, or via Chicago, St. Paul and Minneapolis, at reduced round trip fares.

The well-known double track line of the Grand Trunk from the east to Chicago appeals to the traveller, and with the superior train service that is offered by this line, including the famous "International Limited" from Montreal daily at 9.00 a.m., and which is the finest and fastest train in Canada, many passengers will be attracted this way. The route via Chicago is a most interesting one, taking passengers through the principal cities and towns in Canada and in the States of Michigan and Indiana. In addition to this a choice seven lines between Chicago and St. Paul and Minneapolis is offered.

Owing to the great number of Canadians, who reside in Chicago, St. Paul, Minneapolis, Duluth and other cities en route, there is no doubt that the Grand Trunk will find many patrons who will take advantage of the opportunity thus afforded them for a brief visit at the stations with their friends.

Another feature that will appeal to the homeseeker is the comfortable transfer at points like Chicago, St. Paul, and Duluth into freshly ventilated clean cars, avoiding the necessity of travelling a long distance in the same car.

In addition to the above routes, the sale of tickets is also authorized via Sarnia, and the Northern Navigation Company's magnificent Steamers across Lake Huron and Lake Superior.

For further particulars apply to any Agent of the Grand Trunk Railway System, or write to Mr. J. Quinlan, District Passenger Agent, Bonaventure Station Montreal, or Mr. A. E. Duff, District Passenger Agent, Union Station, Toronto.

Try this Thirsty Flour

A very thirsty flour. Absorbs a lot of water.
Because it contains so much gluten.
Manitoba wheat is wonderfully rich in sturdy gluten.
And, think of it, FIVE ROSES is milled exclusively from the very cream of the Manitoba wheat berries.
So FIVE ROSES must be awfully thirsty, don't you see.
In your mixing bowl it greedily absorbs more water.
So you get more loaves than usual without using more flour. You use less.
Your flour lasts longer, doesn't it?
Less trips to your dealer.
That's how FIVE ROSES saves money.
Actually saves YOU money.
Use this economical flour.

Hints for Busy Housekeepers.

Recipes and Other Valuable Information of Particular Interest to Women Folks.

DAINTY DISHES.

Shortbread.—Take half a pound of flour, a quarter of a pound of butter, three ounces of caster sugar. Knead well together, roll out, cut into shapes and place in a shallow tin. Bake slowly.

Poached Eggs and Fried Onions.—Take three or four Spanish onions, slice them, and fry in dripping till a nice golden color. Have ready some squares of buttered toast, lay the onion on them, and sprinkle with pepper and salt. Poach some eggs and lay one on each square of toast.

Dainty Gooseberry Pudding. — Stew one pound of gooseberries gently, and then beat to a pulp; it should then measure one pint. Add to it four ounces of breadcrumbs, four ounces of white sugar, one ounce of butter, and lastly one beaten egg. Pour into a greased piedish, and bake for half-an-hour. Scatter sugar over, and serve.

Fish cooked in paper is most delicate. Take some thin white paper, rub it over with melted butter or oil, lay the fish in, and just fold the edges together. Bake in a moderate oven. Serve in the paper, and hand round sliced lemon with it. This is far more tasty than frying, and is less trouble.

Dandelion Wine. — Soak six quarts of dandelion flowers in one gallon of water three days and nights, then strain through a cloth and add to liquid three pounds of granulated sugar, juice of two lemons and three oranges, one-half cake compressed yeast. Let this stand four days and nights, then strain again. Put in stone jar. Keep straining until no scum remains, then bottle.

Iced Tea.—Iced tea should be made several hours before needed. Set upon ice. When ready to use, sweeten and drink without milk or cream. Use cracked ice to put into the glass. The tea should be extra strong, and do not be stingy with the ice. Always keep tea in air-tight cannisters, in order that the flavor may be retained. Tea has great value as an excitant of respiratory action and is a promoter of digestion.

Onion toast makes a good supper relish. Take half a dozen young onions, boil them, changing the water twice so that they may not be too strong. When cooked, drain and chop finely. Place the onions in a basin, with half an ounce of butter, a quarter of a teaspoonful of pepper, and some salt. Stir all together, place the basin in a saucepan of boiling water until the contents become hot. Have ready some slices of buttered toast. On the centre of each place a slice of hard-boiled egg, cover with onions, and serve at once.

A stewed joint of beef makes a nice change when served hot, and is excellent cold, especially for sandwiches. Get three pounds of rump of beef and cut away the skin and fat. Put this into a stewpan with one quart of broth or water, and let it boil up. Season with salt and pepper, a bayleaf, some whole allspice, and an onion stuck with cloves. Let this simmer gently for two hours and a half, then shred half the peel of a lemon finely and add to the gravy. Take up the meat, and place it where it will keep warm. Thicken and color the gravy, flavor with hot sauce and lemon-juice, and pour over the meat.

Nut and Orange Bread.—Half pint each of liquid yeast and water, one teaspoonful of lard, one teaspoonful of salt, one-half cupful of white sugar, one-half cupful of chopped nut meats, one cupful of stale light bread crumbs, and flour to make a stiff dough. Knead until elastic and glossy. Cover and place to rise. When well risen, which should be in two hours, work in one large well beaten egg. Dip into a shallow baking pan to the depth of little over one-half inch. When light bake for thirty minutes in a moderate oven; keep covered for first ten minutes of baking. Make a carmel of one cupful of white sugar, a tablespoonful of water, and the same amount of grated orange peel. Let cool, and when the bread is cold pour the caramel over the top, smoothing with a knife, and dot with thin slices of sweet orange. The bread crumbs are a great improvement and the result is a feathery, delicious coffee bread.

HOME HINTS.

Tar stains should be well rubbed with oil before washing.

After baking a cake leave it in the tin for five minutes before turning out.

To polish patent leather use a mixture of one part of turpentine with three parts of sweet oil.

When seasoning soup use whole pepper and spices, putting them in after it has boiled up.

To preserve gum arabic add a few drops of oil of cloves to it and it will keep perfectly sweet.

Iron pillowslips lengthwise instead of crosswise if you wish to iron the wrinkles out instead of in.

When hashing cold meat add a little chopped parsley. It will improve both the taste and appearance.

Select lamp wicks which are soft and loosely woven, they will burn far better than the others.

Dry your duster before polishing your furniture, and you will then have no smears left behind.

Rice and other milk puddings must cook very slowly to be good. it is only in this way that the starch grains have time to swell and thicken the milk thoroughly.

Carpets should be turned round every six months where there is much wear. Constant turning in this way causes the carpet to wear evenly.

Orange flavoring is delicious for puddings and custards. Save the peel of oranges, preferably of Tangerines, dry it in the oven, and then store in tins for use.

To stiffen a net or lace blouse do not use starch, but instead a very weak solution of gum arabic. This will give a little substance to the material without making it horny, as is the case with starch.

Warming boots so often spoils them. The heat is most injurious to the leather, and causes it to crack. Leather which has been heated needs an application of grease to prevent its being ruined.

Your white straw hat can probably be cleaned with a mixture of lemon-juice and sulphur (the juice of a small lemon and a teaspoonful of sulphur). If, however, the straw is very sunburnt, buy one of the many straw varnishes advertised and make it some other color.

To remove blood from thin silk or unwashable fabrics mix common laundry starch with water, the consistency of cream, put a little dab in a dish, lay the spot upon it, spread another dab on top, leave until perfectly dry, shake out. If the first application does not take it all out repeat the operation.

Washing Recipe.—In an ordinary wash boiler put one and one-half inch water; then put in three-fourths to one bar good laundry soap, thinly sliced. Let it come to a boil, then put in one and one-half to two tablespoonfuls kerosene oil. When the soap is all dissolved add enough water to fill boiler two-thirds to three-fourths full. Then put clothes in. After boiling five to eight minutes they can be removed thoroughly white and clean. Without changing the water youcan boil two or three successive batches of clothes. This method beats all the washing machines ever made. In this way clothes require no rubinbg. It saves nine-tenths of the labor on wash day. Try it and be convinced.

SAGACIOUS HORSES.

They Know Their Duty So Well as to Require no Attention.

The old war steed cannot compare with the Covent Garden (London) horse for cunning and artfulness. Three times these patient creatures travel from the country districts surrounding London to the central vegetable market every week of their lives, and they get to know the way so wll that they will walk direct from the packing sheds at home to their stand in the market without the slightest guidance from the driver, says London Answers.

The majority of the main roads leading into the metropolis are used by tramway cars directly the inner suburban area is reached, and it is a fact that the market-garden horse, with its driver curled up fast asleep, will draw on to the tramline for greater ease in hauling. On hearing the noisy gong, denoting the approach of a tram, it will forsake the track, and duly return to it the moment the swifter vehicle has passed.

Many a horse has been backwards and forwards to market for twenty years, and in the small hours of the morning will thread its way through Piccadilly with a heaped-up load and a dozing driver in perfect safety.

Three miles an hour is the pace of the market horse, and the drovers in charge are seldom fully awake. On some of the roads friendly policeman actually waken the men, though it is a technical misdemeanor to be found slumbering whilst in charge of a vehicle.

No whims of fashion up to date
Wore Mary at the cottage gate—
No harem-skirt or mushroom hat;
And yet she looked, beside the green,
In every phase a village queen,
And something even more than that.

LUNATIC KINGS.

Royal Imbeciles on European Thrones.

The melancholy fach which has lately been chronicled, apropos of the sixty-third birthday of King Otto of Bavaria, to the effect that, while this monarch is physically as robust as ever, there is no change in his mental condition, recalls the tragic story of the throne of this State of the German Empire. It is twenty-five years ago that King Otto ascended the throne, succeeding his brother, King Louis II., who went mad and committed suicide by drowning himself in Lake Staremberg, while attempting to escape from the restraint which he had been placed by the Government. King Otto lives in a lonely castle, Furstenried, cut off from the rest of the world, with four keepers who attend him night and day, never leaving him for a moment. Except doctors, no visior, not even a relative, ever enters the King's presence, as any communication from the outside world rouses him to frenzy. Indeed, his own mother was compelled to refrain from seeing him.

During the insanity of these two monarchs Bavaria has been ruled by their uncle, Prince Leopold of Bavaria, and it might be mentioned that the grandfather of King Louis and King Otto—Louis I., although a well meaning and intellectual monarch—was forced to abdicate, on account of his connection with the notorious Lola Montez, an adventuress whom Louis created Countess of Lansfeld and allowed $25,000 a year.

The pathetic history of King Otto reminds one of that of Murad V., Sultan of Turkey, who ascended the throne of the Ottoman Empire in May, 1876, only to be removed three months later on account of his insanity. For thirty years he lingered behind the gilded bars of his prison palace at Constantinople, and ultimately died without recovering his sanity.

King Frederick William IV. of Prussia, grand-uncle of the present Kaiser, spent the last five years of his life in a state of insanity, under the most strict kind of restraint, owing to the volent character of his mania, although his queen insisted that he was in his right mind and that he had been proclaimed as mentally incapable merely to satisfy the unscrupulous and impatient ambition of his brother, the Regent, who died as the Emperor William. Then again the late King of Holland, by reason of his dissipated life, became a physical wreck towards the end of his reign, and for practically two years before he died in 1890 the people were ruled in his name by his consort, Queen Emma, who also acted as Regent until her daughter, Queen Wilhelmina, came of age in 1898.

George III. is the only British monarch, who in modern times, has been placed under restraint and deprived of his authority because of insanity, though similar measures were at one time contemplated with regard to his son, George IV., the monarch who has been described as "a bad son, a bad husband, a bad father, a bad subject, a bad monarch, and a bad friend," and whose conduct while on the throne, was characterized by an eccentricity which bordered on lunacy.

The insanity of George III. was really brought about by the dangerous illness of his youngest and favorite child, Princess Amelia. The unlikelihood of her recovery preyed upon him and hastened the attack of mental derangement which incapacitated him from reigning, although he had previously suffered from this malady. He died hopelessly insane, at Windsor, after losing his sight as well as his senses.

King John of Saxony, grandfather of the present ruler of that country, was mad during the last year of his life, and his freaks were a perpetual source of terror to his relatives and to the members of his Court, while the Czar Paul, who reigned in Russia at the beginning of the nineteenth century, was a dangerous maniac. So much so, that the members of his household who assassinated him were hailed as public benefactors.

LECTURE UNHEEDED.

An old gentleman with very practical ideas of philanthropy was wont to walk about the city and endeavor to do his share of bettering the world by means of street lecturing. In pursuance of this habit he was one day remonstrating with a group of urchins on the cruelty of dog-fighting, and terminated his remarks by pointing across the street to where a lady was standing with a couple of dainty-looking poodles by her side, saying— "Now, supposing, after what I have said, those two dear little dogs were to start fighting, what would be the first thing you would do?" Whereupon one of the street arabs, assuming a critical air, with hands thrust in trouser pockets, answered, "Well, guv'nor, I fink I'd 'ave tuppence on the black 'un!"

Gerald: "Darling, do you like to put your dear head on my shoulder?"

Geraldine: "Yes, the padding in your coat is so restful!"

ASTOUNDING POLICE BLUNDERS.

There are many instances in England I could name where police blundering could easily be proved, says a writer in London Tit-Bits. My space is limited, and therefore I shall deal only with such cases as have come under my own personal notice, and about the blundering of which little or no question can be raised.

The first police blunder—a terrible one, too—I met with was the Whitechapel murder case, in which the names of Wainwright and Lane figured most prominently thirty-five years ago.

Henry Wainwright—chief actor in the gruesome tragedy—was not blameless, but that fact affords no excuse for the police supineness displayed.

Briefly, and because they have never been made known to the public before, I give the actual circumstances and the version of the same put forward by the prosecution. The young woman, Lane, was murdered by Henry Wainwright as the result of his being in want of money and her constant demands for the same. The man was in receipt of $35 per week, and actually gave Lane $100 the night before the murder!

Said the prosecution, the accused took his mistress to his warehouse, shot her, and buried her remains beneath the flooring. No one but the prisoner had the keys of the warehouse after closing hours, said the prosecution. This warehouse had been given up by Wainwright long before enacting the cruel deed and the keys had been in the keeping of an mployee, Thomas Wainwright (Henry's brother), and others. The empty warehouse was unlocked and could be entered at any time even by strangers.

Wainwright gave $100 to Thomas to be given to Lane a few weeks before the crime for the purpose of establishing her in a little business. Thomas kept this for his own use.

Henry became an accessory after the fact by aiding his brother in the removing of the remains. Had the former spoken he could have saved his neck, but he would not betray his own flesh and blood, although his own flesh and blood betrayed him.

Eight years after the execution of Henry, Thomas died. He made a death-bed confession, owning up to his own guilt and his brother's complete innocence of the crime, either in intent or act.

This victim to most cruel and gross bungling left a sealed envelope in the hands of the Governor of Newgate after demanding and obtaining the latter's solemn promise that the seal should not be broken until after the execution.

The contents of that envelope have never been made known to the world even to this day.

Of all criminals it is doubtful if any ever knew more of the police and their methods than did Charles Peace, prince of burglars, murderer, modern Don Juan, etc. A standing joke of Peace's was to chaff the police about their utter inability to trace out the ever busy and mysterious burglar who had held London and suburban householders in constant fear—meaning himself.

This criminal was both slight and small of stature, but of great daring, cunning, and agility. His favorite disguise took the form of face contortion—a trick he possessed to a marvellous degree; added to this were spectacles formed of blue glass, and so that they completely hid his eyes even from a side view. These were made by himself. At times, too, Peace appeared as a man with a "hooked arm," a piece of timber with a hook at one end. This he had also made himself, the timber—hook end outwards—being short enough to be held in the coat sleeve by the slightly withdrawn hand.

We have heard much of armed alien criminals of late, but Peace was no alien, and coolly shot a police constable dead who attempted his arrest. This was not his only cruel and cowardly murder. He also shot dead the husband of one of his lady friends. This latter act brought about another police blunder. Blind Justice would have stopped short only at the hanging of its victim had not Peace himself owned up to the deed. His own end was in view, and the career of one of the most dangerous enemies to society is marked by this one commendable act.

Louis Beck's sufferings as the result of the most fatuous and obstinate error on the part of the police must have been unspeakably great. A Swiss, a cultured gentleman, well placed in society, and whose real record stood without blemish, he was arrested on a charge of robbing women of jewelry by means of plausible stories and general misrepresentation.

Seven years' penal servitude twice over, and a third term threatened, before his blind persecutors saw the light! Credit to whom credit was due: it was a police officer who discovered the real culprit and brought the truth to light at last.

The failure to track down and secure Jack the Ripper stands out as the most complete and colossal example of inefficiency it is possible to find in connection with any police organization ever instituted in any period of history and any part of the globe.

As a matter of fact, Jack the Ripper was not only seen, but might also have been arrested! I now make this known for the first time. The occasion was that of the Pinchen street deed. The act took place under an archway, of which there were several. A police-officer was on the spot in time to see the closing of the eyes of the poor victim. He saw the form of a man creeping off in the darkness. This was no phantom, but a living person, for the officer heard his receding footsteps.

The constable did not follow the murderer, but remained by the prone body of the woman. I made it my business to see the officer in question as soon as possible after learning the startling circumstance. This constable was young, and had, I was informed, been in the force for nine months or thereabouts. My endeavor to interview my man proved a failure. He might have been completely deaf and dumb. Not even did he so much as open his mouth, as if in fear of his very life in the event of a word escaping from his lips.

Had he been instructed by his superior officers not to breathe a syllable concerning his tragically deplorable want of smartness—to use as kind a word as possible—or was he suffering from the effects of extreme fright?

A PRESIDENT'S ESCAPES.

President Diaz Has Had Exciting Career.

Porfirio Diaz, "the dazzling Diaz," as he has been aptly named, who has been seven times President of Mexico, and is just now engaging the attention of the whole world on account of his strong action anent the American War, has himself had a career full of the most exciting of hairbreadth escapes. Once, while in prison, he had just completed the excavation of a gallery from under his bed to the street, cutting through the thick cement of the flooring of his cell, when he was removed to another prison. From this he made his escape through the roof, with the aid of three ropes and at the imminent risk of breaking his neck.

But most amazing of all was his escape from the ss. City of Havana. Some officers had arrived on board to take charge of him, and it looked like short shrift and a long rope for Diaz, when a splash as of a man overboard was heard by the watch at night. Diaz was at once sought for and found missing, and, as the sea was infested with sharks, the prisoner was given up as lost, especially as a ship's buoy which was missing at the same time was thrown up empty on shore.

Nevertheless, remembering that it was the daring Diaz that they had to deal with, vigilance was not relaxed; and the steamer, on arriving at Vera Cruz, was carefully overhauled by troops, but in vain. The commandant of the port then surrounded the vessel with boats manned by soldiers to preclude all possibility of Diaz escaping. But he did. After having been for seven days and nights sewn up, half suffocated, in a sofa-seat in the purser's cabin, he contrived to pass disguised as a sailor, through the cordon of blockading boats. The purser had befriended him on his extrication from the sea, but the sofa in which he was hidden was several times sat upon by the very officials who were searching for Diaz!

LANGUAGE OF GLOVES.

They Are Now the Rival of Stamps and Flowers.

Ever since stamps were invented they have had a special langnage of their own, which lovers have used. Flowers, too, have serveu their part in the sending of messages too tender for lips to speak.

Now gloves have appeared as a rival. If you drop a glove on the floor it indicates "Yes"; while by rolling the gloves in the right hand means an answer in the negative. Unglove the left hand partially, and you express the fact that you are really quite indifferent.

To be quite definite, turn the glove inside-out, and the watcher will read "I hate you"; or, if you wish to be more gentle, tap the chin with the gloves, which only means "I don't like you any longer." Smoothing the gloves stands for "I wish to be near you"; while dropping both gloves plainly says "I love you." "Do you love me?" is asked by wearing a glove on the left hand with the thumb uncovered; while turning the gloves round tne finger is a warning to take care as others are watching.

A VILLAGE QUEEN.

In plain print frock I saw her stand,
A bunch of roses in her hand,
A pair of roses on her cheeks;
So simple, yet so full of grace,
With health and beauty on her face,
And on her lips the smile that speaks.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL TUDY

INTERNATIONAL LESSON, JULY 23.

Lesson IV.—Josiah's devotion to God, 2 Chron. 34. 1-13. Golden Text, Eccl. 12. 1.

Verse 1. Josiah was eight years old—Compare the early age at which Manasseh and Joash came to the throne. In general this account agrees with the record of Josiah's reign found in 2 Kings 22, 23. Both accounts relate the reformation, the renewing of the temple, the finding of the book of the law, the keeping of the passover, and the last sad days of the king. Where there are differences, they can be explained by a difference in the point of view of the two writers.

2. Did that which was right — Similar statements are made regarding other kings, but of Josiah alone is it said that he turned not aside to the right hand or to the left. In Kings, this is all that is related until the king's twenty-sixth year is reached. The Chronicler, on the other hand, is not willing to let so many years go by in the life of so pious and zealous a ruler without his taking some definite stand against the prevalent idolatry. Accordingly, here the reformatory work begins when Josiah is still a lad.

3. Began to purge Judah—In Kings the finding of the book of the law comes first, and then the revolution in worship. However that may be, it is certain the work was thorough, even ferocious. Graven images were either of wood or stone; in fact, the word is used for any sort of idol. Together with the molten images every variety of idol is meant. There was no mincing, no compromise. Everything that had the appearance of idoatry was abolished.

4. The sun-images—Pillars of stone set up as a sort of accessory of the altar, of which they were the primitive expression, and dedicated to the sun god. They were forbidden by the Deuteronomic law (Deut. 16. 22).

Made dust . . . and strewed it upon the graves—In Kings the dust of the Asherim was scattered upon the graves of the common people. This statement of the Chronicler indicates the fierce zeal with which the king sought to visit retribution even upon the resting-places of the apostate dead.

5. Burnt the bones of the priests—Not only was this a desecration of the shrines where they had sacrificed. It also served as a punitive measure, afflicting the souls of the departed priests.

6. Even unto Naphtali—As in the case of Hezekiah, the reform extended into the Northern Kingdom though, strictly speaking, it was not a part of Josiah's realm. Simeon, though south of Judah, was reckoned with the northern tribes technically, in order to make up the ancient number ten.

Their ruins—A difficult reading, meaning, perhaps, the idolatrous temples, or the desolate sites of cities laid waste by the Assyrians.

7. All the land of Israel—The Northern Kingdom is meant. The energy of Josiah was unsparing. By extermination these local sanctuaries in every section of the country, north and south, he struck a death blow to the worship of idols; for, once confined to Jerusalem, the worship of the people would most naturally become the true worship of God in the temple.

8-13—The repair of the temple. The original account, as found in 2 Kings, is amplified by the Chronicler, by the addition of several important details (compare 2 Kings 22. 3-7).

8. When he had purged the land—Implying that the work of sweeping away the abominations of idolatry consumed several years.

10. They delivered it—The marginal reading here is more intelligible. The workmen that had oversight gave the money to the workmen that wrought. The money was probably collected throughout the country by the Levites.

11. The houses—The chambers of the temple, the Holy Place and the Holy of Holies. The temple had not merely fallen into natural decay, but had suffered at the hands of several of the kings of Judah (compare 2 Chron. 24. 7).

12. Levites . . . that were skillful with instruments of music — The names given are of course nothing more, historically. "We are reminded of the walls of Thebes which rose out of the ground while Orpheus played up on his flute."

13. Also they were over the bearers of burdens — The care with which the Chronicler speaks of these various functions of the Levites is in entire keeping with the spirit of the two books. Everything which emphasizes the ceremonial and ritualistic side of the life of the kingdom is eargerly recorded. According to Josephus, Herod used the priests as carpenters and masons when he rebuilt the temple.

FORTUNE FAVORS THE BRAVE;

OR, A LOOK INTO THE PAST

CHAPTER XXIII.—(Cont'd)

All this had passed from her mind as she lay sleeping in the big chair. Janet had come up at dinner-time and had refrained from waking her, telling Fenton his mistress was not well, and could not leave her room, in a curt way, that was not to be gainsaid, and the evening hours slipped by till the clock in the hall below chimed eleven, and Nancy awoke. Awoke with a shiver, to find her room prepared for the night, and the fire burning low on the hearth.

It was months since she had slept so long together, and she felt dazed and nervous when she opened her eyes. With trembling fingers she lit her candles and threw off her cloak, then she loked at her watch.

"Eleven o'clock. Janet must have come in an hour ago. How good of her to move so quietly."

Then Nancy gave a hurried glance round the room and perceived a tray standing on a table near.

"What is that—some supper? Oh, how kind of her! I shall thank her to-morrow."

Tears rose to Nancy's eyes at this unexpected kindness; she was not accustomed to it now, and it almost pained her.

She sat down to eat, but, though it was hours since she had taken food, she was not hungry. A vague, uneasy sensation was upon her; she felt that something was going to happen, and she did not know what.

"I am very silly," she said, nervously, to herself. "It is because I have been asleep so long," and so, with a strong effort and determination to crush down this feeling, she began to unfasten her masses of red-brown hair, trying to still her quivering fingers the while, but her eyes would go in a hunted way round the room and her heart was beating in a strange, heavy manner that almost choked her.

Sudden! she started and turned round with bated breath.

Her vague apprehensions had been only too well founded; something was going to happen.

Stealthy footsteps sounded along the passage, her door was touched, the handle turned; with a wild pang Nancy realized she had not locked it as usual before going to sleep; the next moment it was pushed open, and her husband stood in the room.

With a gasp for breath Nancy retreated suddenly; there was an indefinable horror pervading Crawshaw at this moment—his face was curiously white and set, his eyes were wild and glaring.

He came slowly across the big room nearer and nearer to the shrinking girl till he reached the big chair; he put his hand on it and steadied himself.

"Sit down, Nancy, my girl, sit down," he said, in thick, slow accents, "don't be frightened—I want to talk to you—I shan't keep you long."

Nancy never stirred a limb, but stood with a world of horror in her eyes fixed upon her husband, an inarticulate cry for mercy and help filling her heart.

In that moment she saw the whole of her danger—she was alone with a mad-man—a man mad with drink!

CHAPTER XXIV.

For one instant comprehension, sight, the sense of acute fear and loathing left Nancy; the next she had recovered herself, and calling up every scrap of courage and nerve power, faced the horror of the moment.

"I am tired," she said hurriedly, and as clearly as her nervousness would permit. "I—I will talk to you to-morrow. Please leave me now."

Crawshaw's eyes seemed to flash fire at her.

"Sit down," he reiterated quietly, but with a nasty tone in his voice; "sit down, I say. I'm master here. I'm your master, Nancy, and I'll be obeyed, by God! I will."

Nancy's proud spirit leaped at the insult implied in his words, but she had to set this feeling on one side and temporize—only let her get him away and then she could lock herself in and be safe for a time at least.

With all the outward calmness she could assume, she moved another chair forward and sat down on it, quivering in every limb as she did so.

"Not there—here!" Thomas Crawshaw commanded; "here where I can see your face."

Her heart seemed to stop beating.

"I prefer to—to remain here," she said, as gently as she could, wishing wildly that she could reach the door and rush from his white, awful face and glaring eyes.

"And I say you're to sit here!" shouted the man, striking the top rail of the arm-chair he grasped. Don't you understand! I shall have to treat you different I can see. I've let you have your own way too much, and this is what it's come to—that you, my wife, as I thought was a respectable girl, you go creeping out into the woods, my woods, and meet that stuck-up lover of yours on the sly! Oh, I know—I know. You're a quiet lot, you are, but it's the quiet ones is the worst, after all; but there's going to be an end of it—an end, I say. I didn't make you my wife for this sort of thing, I can tell you, as you'll pretty soon find out."

His words had come in one thick, hurried flow, sometimes so quickly as to be inaudible. Nancy sat quite still as he finished. What was she to do? How could she argue with him in this condition? To attempt to speak was but to bring down a flood of insult and abuse on her head. She pressed one hand to her throat and one to her beating heart, bewildered, alarmed almost beyond description.

Her silence was like fuel to the flame of mad anger in the man's infuriated brain.

"Come here—d'ye hear me!" he shrieked, rather than shouted. "What, you won't come!" In one stride he was beside the girl, and had clenched her two wrists in an iron grip, dragging her trembling, and in a fainting condition, to her feet. "I've got you now, Miss Nancy," he muttered, with a short, wild laugh. "Ah! ah! you can't escape now. You've hated me, have you? You've treated me like dirt, have you? You've been my wife, and let that man make love to you? Well, now I'm going to set all that right! You're mine!—mine!—mine! I ain't going to give you up to no one, and they won't come and help you this time. Oh! dear, no; and why? because they're too frightened. They know I'm mad!" His white face, with its burning eyes, bent lower and lower to hers. "Yes, mad, and too strong for the lot of them. You didn't know, did you, Nancy—you didn't guess I was so clever as to hide it from you? Ah! ah! what a good joke. You never thought as how Thomas Moss would be even with you, and pay you out for all your pride; but he did. He got the better of you, Nancy, and all by a trick!"

He laughed that wild, horrible laugh again, while she, gasping for breath, was struggling in vain to free herself from his iron grasp; to open her lips and force a cry for help from her parched throat. The agony of the moment was awful; yet not one word escaped her. She knew that every syllable he uttered was true: it made her helpless, miserable position a thousand times more terrible, for there was no one to come to her aid—no one to save her from the fury of this maniac. Weakened gradually by her vain efforts to release herself, Nancy was forced backward till she found herself in the arm-chair with her two wrists held in that vice and that ghastly face bending over her.

"It was a trick—yes, a good trick," muttered Crawshaw, his tones rising and rising till they were a shout. "You thought your uncle had done it all, you swallowed the bait so easily—ah! ah! Oh! she was clever, was that fine lady mother, your lover's mother—she put it into my mind. Clever! clever! clever!"—he wagged his head to and fro; "and we won, poorfool, we won, and now you're mine; those dainty, proud lips are mine; this red hair, and those blue eyes—blue as the sky—are mine. I say. Come, kiss me, Nancy—wife! Mine at last! Kiss me!"

With almost superhuman strength the girl forced herself from the chair, and wrenched her hands from his.

Stupefied with drink, he staggered back for a moment and reeled against the wall; but as she drew up her trembling form and turned to rush to the door, he had recovered himself.

With a shriek of mad anger he was upon her, and had clasped her in his strong arms, while a flood of imprecations, passionate triumph and exultation burst from his lips.

The cloud of red-gold hair was swept across Nancy's face, and almost suffocated her; her brain reeled beneath the full horror and alarm of the moment.

"Oh, God help me! Help me!" she cried, in utter desperation.

She was like a poor, caged rat, with not one loophole of escape.

Suddenly Crawshaw ceased shouting; he stood very still. Nancy's heart was beating like a sledge hammer in her ears. She felt him brush the hair from her face and drag her on a few steps; the next moment she opened her eyes, to close them again with a piercing shriek.

Crawshaw had dragged her close to the table, on which stood her supper tray. His hand had closed round a knife, and had lifted it menacingly in the air.

"I'm going to kill you, Nancy—to kill—kill—kill!" he whispered, in soft, thick tones, that chilled her to the heart. "I'm going to see the red blood stream down your white skin! You are mine, and I shall kill you if——"

Nancy heard no more for a time—it seemed an hour to her; it was only a moment.

Her eyes shut. Dimly she had felt something or some one jerk Crawshaw away from her, while she staggered back against the bed-post.

Then all at once she awakened to the truth. A voice rang shrilly in her ears:

"Run—run!—the passage—quick! I will come—run!"

She turned her distraught eyes on a corner of the room, where something was growling and struggling like a savage beast. In the same misty fashion she saw a strong, tall figure, which seemed familiarly like Janet's, but which was strange, too, bending over this something.

With her breath coming quick and fast, and limbs which gave way at every step, she crawled to the door. Run she could not, for her strength, her courage, was gone; and out in the passage she stumbled, and fell against the wall in a semi-swoon, ignorant that Fenton, followed by the gardener and one of the other servants, had rushed past her into her bedroom, with a blanket and a stout rope in their hands.

How long she lay like this she never knew. The next thing she was conscious of was the curious sensation of being carried rapidly through the cold, damp, night air; and when she opened her eyes it was to meet the kind, troubled gaze of Janet's honest eyes bending anxiously over her.

"She is not hurt, thank Heaven;—not even a scratch!" she heard some one say; and then with a broken cry of horror, as memory returned for one moment, she clutched at Janet's strong hands, and then fell backward again in another merciful fainting fit more severe than the last.

Derrick Darnley heaved a short sigh of relief as he was bowled along in a hansom swiftly through the crowded London streets.

Here, in the very heart of realism, and prosaic, everyday life, his vague fears about Nancy were considerably and suddenly decreased.

"I did right to come away. The country, and especially the country about Ripstone, is fearfully dull and depressing in this wet weather. It makes a fellow imagine all sorts of horrors. If I had stayed there much longer I should have done something mad and foolish, which would have done her more harm than good. Baines spoke the truth," he mused on, gloomily, as he sat staring at the familiar landmarks; "she is his wife, and until we have strong, conclusive proof that he treats her badly, we must content ourselves as best we may."

At his club Derry found a letter from his mother:

"It is most annoying"—she wrote—"that Grey and Boulding must insist on seeing me about that Lincolnshire property at this time of the year, of all times! I am just comfortably settled in my apartment; Nice is filling pleasantly, and I strongly object to travel in this weather. However, I must come, and so there is an end of the matter. I am glad you have returned to England, and also to hear of Humphrey's steady improvement. I want to have a long talk with you when I arrive. I expect to be in town on the fifteenth. Perhaps you can arrange to come and see me at once, as, needless to say, I shall not remain an hour longer than I can possibly help. My health is far too important to me to risk an English winter.

"Your affectionate mother,
"ANNE DARNLEY."

WRONG SORT.

Perhaps Plain Old Meat, Potatoes and Bread may Be Against You for a Time.

A change to the right kind of food can lift one from a sick bed. A lady in Welden, Ill., says:

"Last spring I became bed-fast with severe stomach trouble accompanied by sick headache. I got worse and worse until I became so low I could scarcely retain any food at all, although I tried about every kind.

"I had become completely discouraged, and given up all hope and thought I was doomed to starve to death, until one day my husband, trying to find something I could retain, brought home some Grape-Nuts.

"To my surprise the food agreed with me, digested perfectly and without distress. I began to gain strength at once. My flesh (which had been flabby) grew firmer, my health improved in every way and every day, and in a very few weeks I gained 20 pounds in weight.

"I liked Grape-Nuts so well that for four months I ate no other food, and always felt as well satisfied after eating as if I had sat down to a fine banquet.

"I had no return of the miserable sick stomach nor of the headaches, that I used to have when I ate other food. I am now a well woman, doing all my own work again, and feel that life is worth living.

"Grape-Nuts food has been a God-send to my family; it surely saved my life; and my two little boys have thriven on it wonderfully." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

THE EYES OF LIZZETTE.

(Cy Warman in July Canada Monthly.)

The eyes of Lizzette were like miniature seas,
With ripples that laugh and willows that weep
On the shore; where the low-bending boughs of the trees
Deepen and soften the shadows that creep
At night, near the water-edge. Can I forget
The far-away, ocean-like eyes of Lizzette?

Dear eyes of Lizzette! I shall see them no more,
They are curtained in sleep—she is gone, she is gone,
With her beautiful eyes to the evergreen shore;
Death winged her way 'twixt the dusk and the dawn.
There's a mound on the mountain-side where we first met,
And the columbine blows o'er the eyes of Lizzette.

THE FARM

Useful Hints for the Tiller of the Soil

A DIPPING VAT FOR SHEEP.

A farmer owning as many as 25 sheep should have a good dipping vat. These may be made of wood, metal or concrete. For a smaller number of sheep than 25 the barrel used to scald the pigs will do if the farmer feels that he cannot afford to purchase or build a vat.

A good galvanized vat ten feet long and four feet deep made purposely for dipping can be purchased for about $12. There are smaller sizes than this that can be purchased for less money. Concrete vats can be built at a normal cost. Three or four farmers can club together and purchase one of the galvanized tanks and haul it to their respective farms as it is wanted. A dipping vat for sheep should be narrow enough to prevent the sheep turning around in it, and deep enough to swim large sheep. The length of the vat should depend upon the number of sheep a man keeps on his place, as the longer the vat the greater the number of sheep which can be dipped in a day. There is considerable variation as to the width of vats found on different farms, and as a usual thing they are wider than necessary. Then, too, the narrower the vat the less the dip required to fill it. A vat twenty inches wide at the top and eight inches wide at the bottom is a fair average as regards width, although some very practical sheepmen construct their vats as narrow as sixteen inches at the top and six inches at the bottom when the vat is four feet deep. The size of sheep kept on a farm must, of course, be taken into consideration.

The dipping is best located in the driveway of the hog house and can be used for the dipping of sheep and young pigs. It is built entirely of concrete, the walls of which are six inches in width with the exception of the partition between the vat and dry chamber, which has a thickness of nine inches. The end of the vat into which the hogs and sheep are plunged is perpendicular, while the opposite end is provided with an incline which is quite deeply creased so that the animal can walk out. The floor around the end of the vat from which the sheep emerge is so graded that all drippings return to the vat. There are sewer connections with this outfit, the valve of which is located in the dry chamber. The end of the sewer pipe in the vat is provided with a grate and trap so as to catch bits of wool and droppings which would otherwise clog the pipe.

The dry chamber allows the attendant carefully to control the dipping, break up thick scabs with a brush, and if necessary help the sheep up the incline and also go to the aid of a sheep quickly if it shows signs of strangling. A vat of this kind in a building should be closed. This can be done by placing two-by-four-inch pieces into the concrete six inches from the top of the floor and three feet from the ends of the vat—allowance for these pieces should be made while the vat is being constructed. They should be inserted loosely so that they can be taken out at dipping time. A niche two inches wide and two inches deep should be left at the ends of the vat and dry chamber. Then by laying two-inch plank on these overlays and on the niches in the ends the floor will be strong enough to hold heavy loads and be level with the floor of the building. This vat is inexpensive.

If the sheep are badly afflicted with scab, the thick scabs should be softened previous to the dipping of the sheep by pouring some of the dip on these places and rubbing them with some smooth instrument, or the scabs can be softened while the sheep are being dipped, by rubbing the thick scabs with a brush. Care should be taken, however, not to draw blood, as on coagulation it will protect the mite from the dip.

Lambs do not need to be dipped for so long a time as older sheep, as their wool is short. They are also more delicate in constitution, hence cannot stand the dipping as well as older sheep.

Always water sheep before dipping, otherwise they may drink the dip which is sometimes found in little puddles in the dripping pens.

Don't expect to land where you expect when you jump at a conclusion.

HICKS' FORECASTS FOR JULY. — A reactionary storm period falls on the 24th, 25th and 26th. This period falls at the centre of the Mercury period, at the close of the Venus period, and at new Moon, in perigee and at extreme north declination. Expect excessive heat at this time, with low barometer and fierce thunder gusts. Squalls and local downpours will visit localities, but far-reaching general rains are not indicated. Mercury cloudiness and moderate drizzle may touch most parts for several days, including much of the mercury period. A seismic period of very positive character extends from the 22nd to 28th, central on the 25th.

BOWLERS AT SEAFORTH.—The two rinks of bowlers who went to Seaforth Tournament did not get in the money, although W. W. WEXLER—SOLOKOFF—A very pretty wedding was celebrated at the home of Mr. and Ms. B. Lewis, 174 Hamilton Rd., London Sunday when Miss Rebecca Solokoff was united in marriage to Mr. Maurice Wexler, of Exeter. The wedding ceremony was performed by Rabbi Philipp. The bride, who was daintily gowned in white mull, with wedding veil and wreath of lily of the valley, was attended by Miss Ethel Siegkind and Miss Mollie Fisher. The groom was assisted by Mr. Hymie White and Mr. Israel Leff. The bride was given away by Mrs. S. Weinstein. Following the ceremony a delightful wedding dinner was served, about 75 guests being present from New York, Chicago, London, Exeter, Toronto, and Detroit. Mr. and Mrs. Wexler left on Tuesday on a wedding tour to western points. On their return they will reside in Exeter.

A NARROW ESCAPE—Conrad O'Brien of Centralia had rather a thrilling experience while driving into town from the west yesterday forenoon. As he approached the railway crossing on King street the south train was approaching. O'Brien was warned to look out, but nothing daunted drove in front of the engine. In an instant the whole outfit was shot over the fence into the ditch. O'Brien had the skin knocked off his hand but was otherwise uninjured, the horse had a strip of flesh torn from its side but will recover. the buggy was a total wreck. The escape of the man and horse from serious injury or death was something wonderful. Those who witnessed the occurrence closed their eyes when the engine struck the rig while some of the ladies nearly fainted O'Brien himself seemed inclined to look upon the occurrence as a huge joke.—From The Hensall Observer.

This being his first visit to the city in ten years, he is very enthusiastic over the development of the city during his absence. Mr. Taylor reports that there was an excellent crop of strawberries in the east this year, he having secured 3,800 boxes in his own gardens.—Winnipeg Free Press.

HICKS' FORECASTS FOR AUGUST—A Regular Storm Period, in progress at the close of July, will bring Mercurial cloudiness and summer storms to eastern parts of the country, during the first two or three days of August. The quadrature of Jupiter, blending with other causes, will aggravate all disturbances about this time. A reactionary Storm Period has its center on the 5th and 6th. On and touching these dates, look for marked increase of temperature, falling barometer and moderate to light, misty rains. We do not believe that rains will be sufficient for crops that are not matured by early August, except in narrow local belts and along the middle eastern sections.

ST. MATTHEWS' BOWLERS VISIT—The visit of the St. Matthews' bowlers of Toronto on Wednesday and Thursday of last week was the occasion of a very pleasant time, although a downpour of rain, when the games were less than half through, broke up the game for Wednesday evening. The visitors, numbering twenty in all, were on a tour of Western Ontario, and played in Waterloo, Berlin, Stratford, Mitchell, Seaforth, Clinton, Goderich, Exeter, London, Ingersoll, Woodstock and Brantford. They were a fine lot of players but had been unable to win until they struck Goderich, where they came out on top by a small margin. On account of the shortness of the evening game here the visitors gave the boys an extra hour on Thursday morning. St. Matthews was about 20 shots up on the five games, both morning and evening. A pleasant feature of the visit was the fact that Messrs. Will and Tom Jackson, of the Jackson Manufacturing Co., came down from Clinton with the visitors and made enjoyment for everybody. At 8 o'clock the visitors were entertained to supper at the Central Hotel, after which an hour was spent in speech and song by local men, Messrs. Jackson, and Rev. Mr. Pedley, of the St. Matthews Club. The touring bowlers expressed themselves as greatly pleased with their visit to Exeter, and complimented the local club on the condition of the green, claiming that it was the best they had played on during the tour. "Billy" Jackson thought the grass was nearly perfect, but hardly equal to Clinton's. The visitors were greatly delighted with "Capt." Hurdon's Bowling Song, and applied themselves so diligently to learning it, that on leaving town at 10 o'clock on Thursday morning they had tune and words learned so well that they were formidable rivals of the "Capt's" own particular crew.—

"Bowling, bowling, bowling on the green
Bowling, bowling, the best you've ever seen;
Oh, nothing can surpass
Bowling on the grass;
That good old ancient game called bowling."

We would not for anything intentionally omit the score, but the truth is the boys almost without exception, lost their score cards, due probably to the fact that they became too heavy to carry.

Sir John Macdonald Against Reciprocity

The reply of the Times of last week was considerably modified in its tone and prescribed in its scope, compared with its article in a previous number. It is certainly pathetic to watch the attitude of the government and its supporters toward the great national question so fraught with consequences, in which the very life and continuance of the Empire is involved. The principal stock in trade is the precarious difference in price of barley, wheat and hogs, fluctuating according to the manipulation of the trusts in the United States compared with the steadier market of Canada. This is the most sordid of appeals.

The other argument is the attitude of Sir John A. Macdonald to this question. It is a true saying that a pigmy cannot comprehend a giant, or partizan a judge. Neither can a traitor understand a patriot. To the former it is a birthright and a heritage to be bartered away for a mess of pottage, regardless of the future; to the latter it is the self-sacrifice and faithfulness and discipline of the present, with the vision of the future stretching out and away to unknown and unnumbered blessings of home and country and empire.

Between these two types of citizenship the present reciprocity agitation classifies the people of Canada, and it is the very irony of fate, that the great statesman of Canada, the man whose mind and voice played so large a part in laying the foundations of the British Empire, the man who gave his life in the cause of the unification of the empire, should be made to seem to assist the very men who are endeavoring to dismember it.

No one can deny that there was a time when the United States offered us the only foreign market for our surplus products. And statesmen of all schools of politics sought to secure this market. These were the pioneer days, before the advent of the transcontinental railway, the opening up of our mighty waterways, the erection of our terminal elevators and shipping facilities to the markets of the world, before the refrigeratory cars and cold-storage equipments.

But since Confederation and the inauguration of the National Policy, which has been adhered to and loyally supported by the Liberals as well as the Conservatives, all these pioneer conditions have changed. We no longer depend upon the markets of the United States but have become their strongest competitors in the European markets, and no one knows this better and feels it more severely than the United States themselves. What advantage can it mean to the farmer of Canada to be offered a market that is regulated at Liverpool and London, and to which we have free and unlimited access? But there is a great advantage to the trusts of the United States to have access to our extensive natural resources, especially now that theirs are almost depleted.

The charge of the Times that we were guilty of garbling the statements issued by Sir John A. Macdonald are as silly as the arguments of Mackenzie King, which they espoused. We were prevented printing the full text of his famous address because of want of space, and hence gave what was bearing on the subject under discussion, but we challenge the Times to print this address in full and then leave the question of garbling to the judgment of the readers as to which account is the more accurate. We are reminded that "the devil can quote scripture for his purpose" and certainly the Times in quoting the early utterances of John A. as expressive of his later sentiments and matured judgment upon this great question is most unjust, and Shakespeare's scathing utterance aptly applies.

The childish explanation that Sir John was combatting "Unrestricted Reciprocity" is not to the point; for whatever name it goes under, whether Commercial Union, Reciprocity, or Continental Annexation, it is one in its root and principle—it is the determined effort of a body of men to interfere with the growth and development of the British Empire.

Lord Rosebery, when unveiling the bust erected to the memory of John A. Macdonald in the Crypt of St. Paul's Cathedral the year of his death, said, "We recognize only this that Sir John Macdonald had grasped the central idea that the British Empire is the greatest secular agency for good now known to mankind; that that was the secret of his success, and that he determined to die under it, and strove that Canada should live under it." This in addition to the famous letter received in Ottawa after the death of the great statesman, from another equally great empire builder, Cecil Rhodes, who after Sir John's last victory, fought out on the lines of opposition to reciprocity, was congratulated by Cecil Rhodes upon his stand, and in words that have become historic, "You, Sir, in Canada and myself in South Africa, are fighting for the same principle, the unification of the Empire."

One thing is certain that when the record of the members of the present government leaders is written no such testimonials to their loyalty and devotion to the Empire can be written or pronounced, as these thrilling words of witness by Lord Rosebery and Cecil Rhodes, to the integrity and devotion of Sir John A. Macdonald to the person and throne of Britain's monarch and the Empire over which he rules.

Baseball

Exeter Junior Ball Team took the Dashwood team into camp on Friday evening last on the local diamond and won out by a score of 10-1.

The Exeter Ball Team lost their second game for the season on Thursday to Ailsa Craig on the latter's diamond. The locals seem to have had a real off-day, and the Craig team piled up a score of 17 to 6.

Exeter won out by a close margin on Monday night in a game of baseball with Fullarton, 13-12. The score ought to have been about 10 to 1 but the locals played a couple of pretty loose innings, and the visitors scored heavily The game was not a first-class exhibition of ball.

Our Senior Ball Team goes to Clinton to play a game this afternoon.

ELIMVILLE

Mr. Thomas Small of Elimville, the veteran well digger, has found a new feature in well digging. Last week he sunk one fifteen feet and would not go any further for fear of digging the bottom out of the well, and bricked it up dry. Some curious people want to know where the water is going to come from, but that is one of Mr. Smale's secrets.—The voice of the threshing engines' whistles is again heard in the land.—We are sorry to hear that Mrs. Brimacombe is very low and is not expected to recover.—Mr. and Mrs. Ernie Rowcliffe spent Sunday with the former's brother, Mr. Byam Rowcliffe. —Mr. Joshua Johns is having extensive repairing done to his house, which when completed will be one of the most up-to-date houses in the Township.—Mr. Wes. Horn spent Sunday and Monday in London with his brother-in-law, Mr. E. Avery.

BIRTHS

CROPS ARE A GOOD AVERAGE

Expert of Agricultural College Makes Prediction

A despatch from Guelph says: Profess r C. A. Zavitz, of the O. A. C., says the crops of Ontario will, on the whole, be a good average this year. "The recent rains, of course, had their greatest influence on the pasture, which was being badly burned up by the heat, causing a shrinkage in the milk supply, which was felt all over. Next to this the greatest influence will be on the potatoes and root crops and corn, which were badly in need of rain.

"The grain crop," he said, "is very well advanced, and it would not do so much good as to the roots. The straw of the Winter wheat is uniformly good over the province, except in some districts where it was Winter killed. The Spring straw is short, but the heads are filling out well, and the yield of grain will be good, though the straw will be light.

"Harvesting has generally commenced in this section, including Wellington, Perth, Waterloo, and on to Middlesex, and the harvest is a good one, and on the whole the crops will be well up to last year, except in straw. Apples, the principal orchard crop in this district, will be light. Raspberries are fresher in flavor since the recent rains."

MASKED BANDITS HELD UP A TRAIN

Robbed Passengers in Day Coach and Sleeper of About $500

A despatch from Grand Forks, N. D., says: Train No. 2, the eastbound North Coast Limited, on the Northern Pacific Railroad, was held up by three masked robbers near Buffalo, North Dakota, about 11 o'clock Thursday night. The robbers secured about $500 in cash, by going through the passengers, and shot Engineer S. P. Olsen, of Fargo, twice, in order to make him stop the train, and made a successful escape in an automobile, which they had awaiting them near the scene of the robbery.

The performance as executed was one of the most daring ever perpetrated in this part of the country.

Heavily armed and shooting recklessly, in order to intimidate the passengers, they first lined the train crew up at one end of the car, and then proceeded to search the passengers in the day coach one by one. In all they secured about $500 from this part of their robbery.

The sleeping car was entered, and, in order to awaken the occupants of berths, a shot was fired down the centre of the aisle.

After searching the occupants of the berths they climbed out the diner, and over the baggage and the express car to the engine. They ordered Engineer Olsen to stop the train, so they could get off, and when he refused to comply with their wishes two shots were fired directly at him, one glancing off his watch, and the other striking him on a rib, injuring him slightly.

After being wounded, and seeing that the men were desperate, Engineer Olsen stopped the train, and the three men, who were all masked with polka-dot handkerchiefs, jumped quickly from the train.

CROP ON APPLES WILL BE LIGHTER

Report of Conditions in Canada by Department of Agriculture

A despatch from Ottawa says: The report of the fruit division of the Department of Agriculture states that the prospect for apples has diminished slightly since last month's report, except in British Columbia, where prospects have rather improved, and it is now estimated that shipments from that province will be 85 per cent. of last year's crop, which was very heavy.

The hot, dry weather does not appear to have materially affected the apple crop prospects in Eastern Canada, although correspondents especially in Ontario, have exhibited apprehension that the crop will be very much shortened. There are reports of sun scald in the counties north of Lake Erie, and the counties on Lake Huron and inland to York County.

Nova Scotia still expects to have the greatest crop on record, due partly to the increased acreage, but also to the heavy yield.

Pears will be light in all sections.

Plums promise to be a fair to medium crop in Ontario and Nova Scotia.

Early and late peaches will be a good crop. Peaches of the Crawford type are reported as somewhat light.

There is an increased acreage of tomatoes in Ontario.

WOMAN AVIATOR KILLED.

Was Trying for Pilot's License at School When She Fell.

A despatch from Par s says: Denise Moore, who is described as an American sports-woman, resident in Algiers, was killed this afternoon at Henry Farman's aviation school at Mourmelon. She fell a distance of 120 feet. She was trying for a pilot's license.

TIMBER LIMITS ARE BURNED

Fire Causes Much Damage in Squamish, British Columbia.

A despatch from Vancouver, B. C., says: Damage estimated at half a million has been caused by forest fires at Squamish, according to advice brought by the Government launch Skinner, which arrived in Vancouver from the scene of the conflagration Thursday night. The timber belt through which the flames fought their way, it is stated by officials of the Provincial Timber Inspector's Office, is one of the finest in British Columbia.

The fire, which is said to have originated near the limits of the Newport Timber Camp has almost wiped the camps of that company out of existence, it is stated. The Newport Timber Company possesses large holdings in the Squamish district and had over 120 men employed at the time the fire broke out. Since Monday, last week, when the outbreak was first reported, every man in the camps, together with a large force of fire wardens, has been fighting the flames in an effort to protect the timber still standing.

When the outbreak was found to be uncontrollable, the donkey engines used in the camps, were buried in mud and left there, attention being turned to saving the horses and some of the lighter parts of the camp equipment. The stables and sheds, it is reported, have all been burned, as well as other outbuildings in the camps.

FINED FOR POACHING BAIT.

Newfoundland Court Inflicts Penalty on U.S. Fishermen.

A despatch from St. John, N. B., says: Pleading guilty in court here on Thursday to charges of killing bait illegally off Cape Race, 17 members of the crew of the Gloucester, Mass., fishing schooner Arethusa were fined $50 each or three months' imprisonment and their dories, seines, and gear were confiscated.

The Arethusa is anchored at the French Island of St. Pierre and it is believed here that the owners of the vessels will pay the fines of their men.

MINERS DASHED TO DEATH.

Cage Rope Snapped and Men Fell 1,500 Feet.

A despatch from Bessemer, Mich., says: The rope attached to a cage in which twelve miners were descending into the Anvil mine here this afternoon parted when half way down. Two of the men, both foreigners, were hurled over the side, and fell to the bottom of the shaft, a distance of fifteen hundred feet, being dashed to pieces. The cage was equipped with patent clutches and fell only a few feet before it stopped, saving the lives of the other ten men.

KING'S PRIZE FOR CANADIAN

Private Clifford of the Royal Grenadiers Empire's Best Shot

A despatch from Bisley, England, says: Of the hundred competitors from all parts of the Empire who shot in the final stage of the King's Prize match on Saturday, Private W. J. Clifford of the 10th Royal Grenadiers, Toronto, proved the best. With a score of 319 out of a possible 350, he has outstripped his nearest competitor in the race by six points. While his Majesty's prize of £250 has on two previous occasions come to Canada, the other winners of it have been Canadians only by adoption. It has now for the first time been won by a native-born Canadian.

Lord Kitchener, who was visiting the ranges with Lord Cheylesmore, watched Clifford's final shots, and on its being evident that he had won his Lordship shook hands with the latest King's Prizeman, offering him congratulations. Bearing a branch of maple leaves in his hands, Clifford was then carried around the camp by his comrades, the band playing "See the Conquering Hero Comes."

Later in the afternoon Lord Kitchener distributed the prizes, when there was another wild demonstration in favor of the "game little Canuck," as Clifford has come to be known at Bisley. By winning the King's Prize Clifford also takes the Standard of Empire Cup, which is awarded to the member of the overseas militia making the highest score in the King's Prize. It is doubtful if the performance of this Toronto man in winning both the King's Prize and the Prince of Wales Prize will be repeated in many years by a Canadian. It has never been done before.

Lieut. F. H. Morris of the 46th Regiment, Bowmanville, who is the next Canadian in order, was tenth for the King's Prize. He was third in the same competition last year, when he won the Standard of Empire Cup.

In taking both the King's Prize and the Prince of Wales' Prize together with his other winnings in other matches, Clifford will bring home with him in the neighborhood of $2,000 in prize-money, in addition to medals of various descriptions. His will be about the largest individual winnings by any Canadian in recent years.

TWO NEW VESSELS FOR THE PACIFIC

C.P.R. Has Ordered Steamers for Service to Japan

A despatch from Montreal, Que., say: "So far as Canadian steamships are concerned no arrangements have been made for an increase in rates either for passengers or freight, as the result of the increased wages to various employes since the recent seamen's strike," said Vice-President G. M. Bosworth, of the Canadian Pacific Railway, on his return from a business trip to England on Friday. As far as he knew nothing had been done in this connection and he was not in a position to predict a change.

Two new steamships for the Pacific, to be delivered in the Spring of 1913, had been ordered, to cost $2,500,000 each. The new vessels will be put on the Vancouver service to Japanese and Chinese ports, and a fortnightly service will be inaugurated. One of the present Empresses will be taken off that service and placed on another Pacific route.

CHOLERA SUSPECT DEAD.

Member of the Crew of Ocean Liner Dead.

A despatch from Quebec says: Alexander Hargu, the sailor who with the rest of the crew was taken from the steamer Bendu at the because he was supposed to be stricken with Asiatic cholera, died on Friday night. His body was interred there.

John Somers, of Montreal, received a telegram that his sister, Mary, was dead. He left to attend the funeral at Plattsburg, but fell off the train and was killed.

BLAMES CIGARETTE FOR BUSH FIRES

Chief Forester Atkinson Investigates the Situation at Porcupine

A despatch from Porcupine, Ont., says: With a view of devising some means to prevent forest fires in this district, F. V. Atkinson, Chief Forester of the Dominion Conservation Commission, and also honorary inspector for the Quebec Government, came to camp. Mr. Atkinson cut short his holidays to make the trip into Porcupine immediately following the fire, and since then has covered considerable territory and made many pertinent suggestions. His claim is that with the proper regulation, fires, which ultimately result seriously, can be prevented. While the argument is by no means original with him, Mr. Atkinson speaks most bitterly against the careless cigarette smoking in the bush. He claims that this is the origin of hundreds of fires, where cigar or pipe smoking would not start one.

Mr. Atkinson believes that a patrol system should be organized and that such an organization should be as active as a city fire department, seizing every opportunity to extinguish a fire where one is reported, no matter how small it may be. Such an organization is suggested with a chief head and sub-chiefs, each responsible to the chief, and each having charge over patrol men. Now that the bush fires in the north country have wrought so much damage and have incurred such a loss of life, it is likely that some suggestion of this kind may be acted upon. Mr. Atkinson has been a forester and a conservationist for 30 years and he maintains that disastrous bush fires can be prevented in practically every instance.

NEW AREA OF COAL LANDS

Important Discoveries Made in Bighorn Basin, Alberta

A despatch from Ottawa says: That alarmists who predict Canada's fuel supply is on the verge of exhaustion will be prophets without honor in their own country for some little time yet is indicated by a geological survey report just issued. It is on the Bighorn coal basin in Alberta, where in it is estimated there are 6,000,000,000 long tons of coal in an area of about 187 square miles that are workable.

The Bighorn basin is about 55 miles north-west of Banff, 140 miles south-west of Edmonton, and 70 miles south of the Grand Trunk Pacific and Canadian Northern Railway surveyed routes.

HOW TO OBTAIN A GOOD COLOR

A Treatment to Restore the Blood Supply That Has Been Most Successful

There is only this to tell people who are pale, weak and bloodless. You are pale and weak because you haven't enough blood and you won't be better until your blood supply is increased. You should not lose any time in increasing your blood supply, for people who neglect anaemia, often slip into a deadly decline. When you have increased your blood supply you can reasonably expect to have a good color, to have lost that tired, breathless feeling, to have a good appetite and get good nourishment from your food. Now the only quick and always effective way to get a supply of new, rich, red blood is to take Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. Every dose helps to make new blood, and this new blood coursing through the veins, brings health and strength to every organ and every part of the body, making weak, ailing people bright, active and strong. This has been proved in thousands of cases of which the case of Mrs. George Clark, Abbottsford, B.C., is a fair sample. Mrs. Clark says: "After spending two years and six months in a hospital training for a nurse, I began to fail in health, was very pale and the least exertion would leave me out of breath. After graduating I came to British Columbia to take up my profession as a private nurse. The first case I took I found I was not able to go on with my work. Doctors' tonics failed me, and acting on my own judgment, I purchased a supply of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. Before I had finished them I was really surprised at the result. The color came back to my face. I gained in strength and by the time I had used nine boxes I was back at my work as a nurse. I have since married, but still have my friendly feeling for Dr. Williams' Pink Pills."

Sold by all medicine dealers or by mail at 50 cents a box, or six boxes for $2.50, from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

HALF MOOSE, HALF ELK.

A Product of a Region Where the Deer Family Congregates.

"No other locality is known where so many of the genus Cervus are contained together as in Kittson county, in the north-western corner of Minnesota," said Charles Hallock, the sportsman and nature student. "Within an area of less than seventy-five miles are found moose, elk, caribou and the distinct varieties of blacktail and whitetail deer.

"The two latter, scarcely ever found together, meet there. The caribou is seldom found elsewhere in company with either of them. There the elk contests the easternmost limits of his present range, and the caribou occupies the most southern confines of his, while the lordly moose, noblest of the Cervidae, ranges the middle ground of that great northern thoroughfare of migration which reaches from Nova Scotia to Alaska without a break or interruption.

"I have seen a rare freak of nature, a product of that occupancy of a single range by so many different representatives of one genus, which shows the horns of a moose and an elk, each perfectly developed on one frontal bone, but all one antler, half moose, half elk. What the animal that wore these horns was like I was unable to ascertain. I should not suppose though that hybridity would manifest itself in the horns alone. Under the conditions of habitat hybridity would not only be quite possible but even natural."

SHARKS PREFER WHALE.

Mr. Frank T. Bullen has introduced to a Hull (England) audience to the delights of whaling. It was a singular thing, he said, but he had never seen or heard of a shark attacking a man when there was a whale about. He had seen a man washed off the back of a whale, and although there were 200 or 300 sharks busy all round the whale, they never paid any attention to him at all. A mere miserable morsel of a man was no use to them when there was a whale about. He spent the whole of one Christmas afternoon until sunset on the back of a whale which in rolling, had wrecked their boat. They knew the sharks were underneath and the great problem they tried to solve was how long it would take them to get through the basement and come to the superstructure.

WAY TO COOK PICKEREL.

A Recipe Said to Make a Despised Fish Equal to Trout.

"The trouble with your finical fishermen who decry the pickerel not only as fish to have sport with, but as fish to eat, is," said a New York man who champions that fish of small pulchritude and much jaw, "that they don't know how to cook the pickerel after they have caught him. I confess that I didn't know how myself until I heard Manly Hardy, the old Maine woodsman, deliver himself on the subject one day.

"'People who come to Maine from other States,' said he, 'seem to think that trout are the only fish to eat, but most of our Maine people, who are where they can get both pickerel and trout, don't put the former aside for the latter, not by a good deal. They regard pickerel as at least the equal of trout; and pickerel have also the saving quality of not palling on the palate nearly so quickly as trout will.

"'The way we cook pickerel to have them better than trout is simple but effective. Take a large pickerel, say from two to four pounds, clean it nicely and split it clean down the back. Then split it again under the backbone so as to remove that bone and most of the small ribs. Then rub with fine salt, putting most of it on the thickest parts of the fish. Lap the sides of the fish together or put two fish flesh to flesh and let it lie for several hours or over night, so as slightly to corn the fish, as the salting must not be too heavy.

"'When the pickerel is wanted for cooking, wash it clean, place it fully spread out on a wire broiler and broil before a hot fire. When both sides are thoroughly cooked serve with plenty of fresh butter spread on, and if you do not call it equal to any fresh water fish that swims, brook trout not excepted, then I don't envy you your judgment on the edible qualities of fish. And cooked in that way pickerel is just as good when cold, and that is something that can't be said of any other fish I know of.'

"After trying Hardy's recipe for cooking a pickerel I found that he had understated its results if anything. I venture to say that if some of these carpers at pickerel will paste that recipe in their hats and treat a pickerel according to its directions they will no longer look askant at the misjudged fish, but will be ready to take their rods and trolls and go out for many a bout with him, and ever after declare that when a pickerel has a fair chance in water free from weeds or lily pads he can fight as long as most trout of the same size.

"And they won't have to go more than fifty miles away from New York in almost any direction to find the material a-plenty to warrant them in saying so, either."

A QUEER DIET.

People Who Eat Earth—Some Find It Very Agreeable.

No collector of national foods includes earth or clay among them, yet this is a favorite dish with many hundreds of thousands of people up and down the earth. Even in Europe they are not difficult to find. In one district of Sweden, it is called Degenfors, the poor folk make use of a white clay, usually found among the roots of the trees there, by mixing it with rye flour, and then baking this abnormal provender in a very slow oven. They also use the stuff for soup. The quarrymen of Kiffhausen have for years beyond the memory of man "buttered" their slices of black bread with fine white clay; and in Siberia the inhabitants along the banks of the Amoor partake of a similar clay, which they call "rock butter." On analysis this strange food is found to be composed for the most part of finely pulverized flint and felspar, lims, clay, oxide of iron, and a residuum of some unknown organic matter which yields ammonia and an oil.

Earth eaters are frequently to be found in the East. The sea-going Dyaks always have a supply of yellow ochre on their expeditions as a reserve in case the stores should run out, and in the Malay Peninsula a white oleaginous clay is used for the same purpose. In Java little cakes of yellowish fatty earth are sold in the market, and women buy and eat them to preserve their slender figures.

The Ainos are enthusiastic earth eaters. In the north end of their island is a valley where alone the material can be dug, but it is carried to all parts. They boil it with the root of the wild lily, and when a certain proportion of the clay has settled, the remainder is poured off and eaten like cream.

The potters of Scinde also include earth in their dietary. Among their weekly expenses an allowance is always made for the amount of "chaniah" which they and their wives and families consume. This "chaniah" is a white oily earth also much used for glazing the finer grades of their pottery.

Pieces of a friable stone, "lapis ollaris," form a staple dish with the aborigies of New Caledonia. The explorers, Cloquet and Brischet, when travelling in New Caledonia, could get no other food for several days, but found no inconvenience arising through eating five ounces daily of this strange food. The Ottamoc Indians of South America live exclusively on fish and earth. During the seasons of flood when there is no fishing, they are dependent wholly on their clay for food, and manage very comfortably with it. They find it so agreeable that during the rest of the year they eat a ball of it for dessert. Evidently clay agrees with them, for the Ottamocs are amongst the tallest, strongest and best nourished aborigines of South America.

PIGS AS LAWN MOWERS.

Suburban Field of Usefulness Open to the Guinea Variety.

A curious but successful experiment is being made on a number of private lawns in Kent and is about to be tried by a golf club in the neighborhood of Greenhithe. The idea is the novel one of substituting the guinea pig for the mowing machine and the weed killer.

Around the lawn is arranged a low wire barrier and into the enclosure are turned a number of guinea pigs or better, a passage is made from their hutch to the lawn. According to the Consular and Trade Reports the animals at once attack all the worst weeds, the plaintains first, then the dandelions and daisies.

These broad leaved plants, which no mowing machine will touch, are killed by the persistent cutting of the guinea pig's teeth. When they have finished the weeds which are broad leaved and succulent they proceed to the grass. In a short time the lawn looks as if it had been cut by the closest machine. The persistent cutting of the leaves kills the weeds, which can stand almost any other treatment, but does no harm to the grass.

One lawn formerly a mass of weeds has been made to grow nothing but the finer grasses. Another is still under process of treatment. The half of it in which the guinea pigs were first set to work has been cut quite even and very close. For golfing it is as fast again as it was under the administration of the mowing machine and not a weed is visible. The other half, where the animals have just been turned loose, is a mass of dandelions.

In this neighborhood it has been found that the guinea pigs do not suffer at all by being left to work in winter as well as in summer. Indeed, they are healthier than under the usual treatment of those who keep them as pets. An astonishing demand for the animals has grown up in the neighborhood, and if the inland golf clubs, which have great difficulties with plantains, take to the new method the guinea pig population is likely to go up in the ratio that the natural fecundity of the animal suggests.

A Medical Need Supplied.—When a medicine is found that not only acts upon the stomach, but is so composed that certain ingredients of it pass unaltered through the stomach, but is so composed that certain ingredients of it pass unaltered through the stomach to find action in the bowels, then there is available a purgative and a cleanser of great effectiveness. Parmelee's Vegetable Pills are of this character and are the best of all pills. During the years that they have been in use they have established themselves as no other pill has done.

SHEEP AND SWINE.

Prices Higher in Canada than in United States.

Prices of sheep are much lower in the United States than in Canada, due to the fact that Ontario specializes on pedigreed flocks, as appears later on. In the United States they range from $2.50 per head in Texas to $5.30 in Illinois and Iowa, while in Canada the range is from $4 in Nova Scotia to $7 in Ontario, Manitoba, and Saskatchewan.

Prices of swine are slightly higher in Canada than in the United States. In the eastern border States, Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, and New York, they range from $10 to $11.50 a head; and in the central border States the range is about the same. In the wester border States the range of prices is from $10.40 to $11.10. In the great agricultural States of Indiana, Illinois, and Iowa, prices of swine vary little from those already quoted. In western Canada from $12 to $13, prices is from $10 to $13 and in western Canada from $1 2to $13. The highest American price is $11.80 a head in Wisconsin as against the highest Canadian price of 13 a head, which is quoted for Quebec, Manitoba, and Saskatchewan.

"The camen can go eight days without water," was the intelligence imparted to a little boy by a would-be instructor. "So would I, if mother would let me," rejoined the lad.

There is no poisonous ingredient in Holloway's Corn Cure, and it can be used without danger of injury.

Servant (to woman at the door)—"The mistress was too very ill last night, and can't see anyone. Them's my orders." Woman—"Yes. Will you say that Miss Sims, the dressmaker, is at the door?" Servant (after a brief absence)—"You are to walk upstairs, mum.'

MOISE DEROSCE.

Hotel Keeper, St. Philippe, Que.

"My dear," said a wife who had been married three years as she beamed across the table on her lord and master, "tell me what first attracted you to me? What pleasant characteristic did I possess which placed me above other women in your sight?" And her lord and master simply said: "I give it up!"

Some persons have periodical attacks of Canadian cholera, dysentery or diarrhoea, and have to use great precautions to avoid the disease. Change of water, cooking, and green fruit, is sure to bring on the attacks. To such persons we would recommend Dr. J. D. Kellogg's Dysentery Cordial as being the best medicine in the market for all summer complaints. If a few drops are taken in water when the symptoms are noticed no future trouble will be experienced.

The Vicar (to sexton)—"Why don't you see that the seats in the church are dusted now and then, Evans?" Evans (the sexton—"I do, sir; the congregation does it every Sunday morning, sir.

American and Canadian scientists tell us that the common house fly is the cause of more disease and death than any other agency. Wilson's Fly Pads kill all the flies and the disease germs too.

The sun comes out every morning to make war on disease germs; don't let the traitors hide in your house and fight them under your bed but turn them out of doors and watch them get licked.

KAISER'S TASTE IN MUSIC.

The German Emperor, in composing the hymn to Eagir, says the Gentlewoman, has followed the example of Frederick the Great, who shon not only as a bandmaster but as the inspirer of several very stirring marches. Few people are aware that the Kaiser has an excellent barrytone voice and is musically gifted beyond the ordinary. His taste in music is very catholic. Sullivan's operas he knows backward and forward and his favorite is "Pinafore," which he can whistle from end to end. But tht favorite of all his English songs is "Oh, Listen to the Band!" which he used, to whistle incessantly. For Basque melodies he has a special weakness; and with his keen sense of beauty no one will be surprised to hear that he sets his face against the noise of the "Sturm-und-Drang" of modern music.

HAROLD HATES IT.

"Mother," said little Harold. "Didn't father say yesterday that we must save money?"

"Yes, dear."

"And he would like me to help, wouldn't he, mother?"

"Yes, dear."

"Then, mother, I've got an idea that'll save quite a lot of money."

"What is it, Harold?"

"Why, you wash me two or three times a day, mother don't you?"

"Yes."

"Well, look what a lot of money you'd save if you only washed me once a month. I wouldn't mind it, mother, really I wouldn't?"

Worms feed upon the vitality of children and endanger their lives. A simple and effective cure is Mother Graves' Worm Exterminator.

"Yes," said the musician in a reminiscent mood, "my wife fell in love with me and married me when I was learning to play the cornet." "Are you sure," asked his friend, "that she married you because she loved you, or to make you stop practising on the cornet?"

The female house fly lays from 120 to 150 eggs at a time, and these mature in two weeks. Under favorable conditions the descendants of a single pair will number millions in three months. Therefore, all housekeepers should commence using Wilson's Fly Pads early in the season, and thus cut off a large proportion of the summer crop.

"Mary, is there a single good thing about these great wide hats that women are wearing?" "Yes, John, there is; when two women meet they can't kiss each other now."

REST AND HEALTH TO MOTHER AND CHILD.

MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP has been used for over SIXTY YEARS by MILLIONS of MOTHERS for their CHILDREN WHILE TEETHING, with PERFECT SUCCESS. "What have you got tnat piece of string tied round your finger for?" "My wife put it there to remind me to post a letter." "And did you remember?" "O; she forgot to give it to me."

Oil for Toothaches.—There is no pain so acute and distressing as toothache. When you have so unwelcome a visit r apply Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil according to directions and you will find immediate relief. It touches the nerve with soothing effect and the pain departs at once. That it will ease toothache is another fine quality of this Oil, showing the many uses it has.

WHY THE SQUIRE LAUGHED.

Inspector (cross-questioning the terrified class)—"And now, boys, who wrote Hamlet?"

Timid Boy—"P-p-please, sir, it wasn't me."

Inspector (the same evening to his host, the squire of the village)—"Most amusing thing happened to-day. I was questioning the class, and asked a boy 'Who wrote Hamlet?' and he answered tearfully, 'P-p-please, sir, it wasn't me.'"

Squire (after loud and prolonged laughter)—"Ha! ha! That's good; and I suppose the little beggar had done it all the time."

Pills for Nervous Troubles.—The stomach is the centre of the nervous system, and when the stomach suspends healthy action the result is manifest in disturbances of the nerves. If allowed to persist nervous debility, a dangerous ailment, may ensue. The first consideration is to restore the stomach to proper action, and there is no readier remedy for this than Parmelee's Vegetable Pills. Thousands can attest the virtue of these pills in curing nervous disorders.

Canada is seventh on the list of the wheat producing countries of the world The countries producing more wheat than we do are British India, United States, Russia, Italy, Hungary and France.

Five years ago as is learned from a report of the Ontario Railway Board there were less than 2000 telephones in the farm houses of Ontario; now there are 50,000 representing a capital investment of $4,000,000, 90 per cent. of these systems having been organized by farmers.

The report of the Minister of Education shows that the salaries of school teachers in Ontario are still on the upward grade. In town schools the average salary for male teachers last year was $1,000, an increase of $16 in rural schools the average salary has increased $22, being $484. Female teachers in these schools are receiving $17 more, the average being $339. The total amount expended on public school in the province last year was $17,321,189 on 5,918 schools, with a total school population of 401,268. The cost per pupil increase from $17,52 to $17.84 As compared with this 82c. increase in public schools there was an increase in cost per pupil in high schools of $5.57 the average yearly cost now being $48 pupil.

WHY I BUY AT HOME

Because my interests are here.

Because the community that is good enough for me to live in is good enough for me to buy in.

Because I believe in transacting business with my friends.

Because I want to see the goods.

Because my home dealer "carries" me when I run short.

Because every dollar I spend at home stays at home and works for the welfare of my community.

Because the man I buy from stands back of the goods.

Because I sell what I produce here at home.

Because the man I buy from pays his part of the town and county taxes.

Because the man I buy from helps support my school, my church, my home.

Because when ill luck, misfortune or bereavement comes the man I buy from is here with the kindly greeting, his words of cheer and his pocketbook, if need me.

This gets right down to the root of the matter and covers the ground pretty thoroughly. Confronted with such a formidable list of reasons, what man would continue to buy from a catalogue

And the same reasons should make the merchant and business man get his printing at home and advertise more extensively, but some do not.

A FEW EPIGRAMS

Good digestion is the main ingredient of a satisfactory dinner, but it must have help.

Some men are so cross grained in their disposition that it is all they can do to keep on good terms with themselves.

No man should buy a suit of clothes so loud that his other creditors can hear it calling.

If money were fathoms below the root of evil there would still be people who would be willing to dig for it.

A man, sometimes thinks he could reform a town, only to find one small boy more than his match.

Exercise is a necessity, otherwise many of use wouldn't take it as a gift.

If a new baby won't get a man a raise in salary his case is hopeless.

A lie will travel faster than the truth, but it will not be the first to arrive at the destination, because it must double on its tracks so often.

Advice to children not accompanied by example might as well be thrown at the birds.

Buyers report that aeroplanes come high, but what could they expect.

On Monday morning the east gable of the new church sheds was blown down, as well as the rafters which had been erected. A portion of the south wall has been razed to the ground as well. There has been considerable expense incurred to date and to have this misfortune occur makes it very regrettable. The committee intend taking steps at once to rebuild as soon as possible.

Mrs. Christian Zwicker of London is visiting with her son, Mr. Chas Zwicker

The Misses Edna and Gerty Elber and Miss Ella Link visited their aunt, Mrs. Wm Kuntz at Exeter on Tuesday.

Our bowlers went to Exeter one day last week. Very little is said, but from the little we heard we learn that our sports were walloped. They say the genial postmaster made some excellent running shots.

Last Friday evening the Zurich boys came here to play our boys a game of ball. We dont know if they brought their usual team or not; anyway they made a poor showing and couldn't connect with Teddy's curves at all. Teddy was in splendid shape and with the good support received in the field, very few errors were made. Special mention must be made of the recruits, Motz and Rau. They appear to have gotten over their stage fright and are slugging and running like professionals. It's almost a shame to tell the score, but it is 13-0 in favor of the home team. The Famous Stars. 'Nuff said.

Mr. Roland Elber of Ubly, Mich., is visiting his uncle and aunt, Mr. and Mrs. H. Elber.

They will leave for their Western home early in August, and will carry with them the best wishes of a large circle of friends.

A BAD ACCIDENT.—Miss Edna Duncan, daughter of Mr. John Duncan, met with an unfortunate and painful accident on Friday last, which might easily have resulted in her death. Her father was drawing in hay and unloading it with a hay fork, while Miss Duncan was leading the horse attached to the raising ropes. In going up the embankment leading to the barn the horse became choked with the collar, and staggered and fell, and rolled out over the embankment, taking Miss Duncan with it. In the tumble the horse rolled over her, with the result that Miss Duncan sustained a dislocated hip and a fractured thigh. Drs. Campbell of Kirkton, Wishart of London and Browning of Exeter were called and dressed the injuries and the patient is now resting easily and doing as well as can be expected.

AT WORK IN 3 WEEKS

$4 Worth of Father Morriscy's "No. 7" Cured Her of Inflammatory Rheumatism.

Mrs. Agnes Edgar, of Grand Falls, N.B., had a terrible time with Inflammatory Rheumatism. Anyone who has had this most painful disease will understand her suffering—and her joy when she found Father Morriscy's "No. 7" had cured her. She says:

"I took Father Morriscy's Prescription for Inflammatory Rheumatism. I had suffered everything with it, but in three weeks after starting Father Morriscy's Prescription I was able to do my work, and after taking four dollars worth of medicine I was well. I highly recommend it any sufferer with Rheumatism."

Rheumatism comes from bad kidneys. The poisonous Uric Acid which they should remove stays in the blood, accumulates in joints and muscles, and causes agony. Father Morriscy's "No. 7" puts the kidneys right, removes the Uric Acid from the blood and the whole system, and cures the Rheumatism soon. A box at your dealer's, or from Father Morriscy Medicine Co. Ltd.

Hints for Busy Housekeepers.

Recipes and Other Valuable Information of Particular Interest to Women Folks.

DAINTY DISHES.

Lemon flavoring that will keep a long time, can be made as follows: Grate off the yellow rind of a lemon, squeezing on this the strained juice, and then adding as much sugar as the juice will absorb. Cover tightly in small jars.

Baking Powder Biscuits.—The old method of making powder biscuits was the minute they were cut and in the pan to pop them in the oven. Try letting them rise from fifteen to twenty minutes before baking, and notice the difference in size, lightness, and taste.

Gingerbread.—One cupful of light brown sugar, one cupful of molasses, three-fourths of a cupful of butter, three eggs, one cupful of sour cream, one-half teaspoonful of soda, one heaping teaspoonful of ginger, one teaspoonful of cinnamon, one teaspoonful of cloves, and three cupfuls of flour.

Scalloped Potatoes.—You will find this a very nice way of cooking potatoes, which are not quite good enough to serve plainly boiled. Put a layer of sliced uncooked potatoes in a baking-tin with salt and pepper and a very light dusting of flour. Fill the tin in this order, and then pour in sufficient skim-milk to moisten thoroughly. Bake in a rather quick oven until the potatoes are cooked.

Stuffed breast of mutton is a very good dish. Get the butcher to remove the bones. Lay the meat flat on a board and cover it with a savory stuffing of breadcrumbs, sweet herbs, parsley, and chopped mutton suet. Season all highly and moisten with a little milk. Put a good thick layer of this over the meat, roll it carefully, and sew the edges. Then roast slowly till done.

Komla (Norwegian dish).—Grate five raw potatoes and one boiled one, add one teaspoonful salt, one cupful flour; mix well. Drop from spoon into boiling water in which you have a small piece of salt pork or corned beef, boil about three-quarters of an hour. A few pieces of carrot or yellow turnip may be boiled in with the dumplings. Fry bacon or salt pork until crisp, slice thin four onions, fry in fat until brown and serve with the komla.

Baked Currant Pudding.—Pick, wash, and dry a quarter of a pound of currants and chop finely a small piece of candied peel. Shred a quarter of a pound of suet and work it into three-quarters of a pound of flour, add a teaspoonful of baking-powder. Make all into a batter that will just pour with one egg beaten in a little milk. Pour into a greased piedish, and bake in a steady oven for one hour and a quarter. Hand sugar with this, as there should be none cooked in it.

Devonshire Pudding.—Wash and boil half a pound of rice in water till tender, then set aside till cool. When cold, sprinkle flour lightly with it, add a quarter of a pound of chopped suet, four ounces of washed currants, half a pound of self-raising flour, one egg, four ounces of sugar, half a teaspoonful of spice, and, if you can spare it, a little candied peel. The rice must cool before being used. Bake in a piedish in a slow oven for two hours.

Stew of Meat and Haricot Beans.—For this, with care, the remains of the breast of mutton may prove sufficient, or a little more meat may have to be purchased. Cut the meat into small pieces and fry them lightly with an onion sliced, dredge all thickly with flour, and stir till browned, then add sufficient stock or water to cover, and let all stew gently for at least an hour. The haricot beans, which must vary in quantity to your requirements, should be soaked over night, put on in cold water, brought to the boil, and cooked for three hours without salt. When nearly done add salt, cook for a little while, and drain thoroughly. Place a dish in a circle, place the stewed meat in the centre, and serve.

CARE OF UMBRELLAS.

Every woman will admit that the attention bestowed on an umbrella to keep it in good order is not labor wasted. How often have our bonnets and hats been saved by an umbrella, when we have been caught in a sudden downpour with no shelter near?

After one of these downpours on arrival home the umbrella should not be stuck in the stand and left to drain, as the moisture, gradually accumulating in the silk, just above the ferrule, causes it to rot and go into holes in a very short time. It should be placed open in a dry, airy room, until it is thoroughly dry.

Inconsiderate people roll up their umbrellas while still damp, and then think the silk must have been of poor quality when they find it so holey.

When put away the umbrella should be left unrolled, for if it is constantly kept in a tight roll the creases are apt rapidly to wear through.

One's best silk umbrella should never be put in the stand where the common property ones are kept as anyone coming in in a hurry and placing stick or umbrella in the same place is very liable unintentionally to poke a hole right through, and no amount of darning or covering the place with blackcourt plaster will ever restore the umbrella to its original beauty.

THE SEWING ROOM.

Putting in Sleeves.—When putting in sleeves put the under arm seam of the sleeve just the length of your second finger ahead of the underarm seam of the waist. I find this an easy way and they are always sure to be in correctly.

Turning up Hem in Skirt.—Have the person for whom skirt is intended put it on. Then take a yard stick, put the end of it on the floor, and have the person turn slowly aroundwhile you mark it with tailor's chalk every little ways the number of inches it is desired from the floor. If two inches, mark it all the way around two inches up on the yard-stick. Sew on the braid and turn up hem. I find that if a basting thread is put in around where it has been chalked, it helps a great deal, as the chalk is liable to get rubbed off and is not as plainly seen as a thread. This is a good way and is easily and quickly done.

HOME HINTS.

When peeling apples pour boiling water over them, and the process will be more easily carried out.

Tan boots will not easily stain if they are well polished several times before being wornfor the first time.

Squeaking Boots—Prick the soles of the boots so as to let out the air from between the soles. This is the cause of the trouble.

Carrots should be scrubbed and scraped, not peeled, for the nourishment lies in the red pulp. This part is not at all indigestible.

Sunlight and air are the finest dispellers of disease. They should, therefore, be freely admitted to every house.

To clarify fat after frying, throw into the fat a few slices of raw potato and cook to a golden color. This will purify the fat wonderfully.

When beating white of egg be sure that the plate is perfectly dry. If the process is carried out in the open air it will be very quickly accomplished.

An undefinable smell of cooking can generally be traced to a dirty oven. Wash the oven thoroughly with soda and hot water and the smell will vanish.

To Color Kitchen Walls. — Dissolve some permanganate of potash in water, and add sufficient of this solution to the whitewash to make it the color your require.

To cleanse a frying-pan in which fish or onions have been cooked, fill it with water, and bring it to the boil, then drop in a red-hot cinder. Afterwards rinse in the usual way.

Black leather bags will be much improved if polished occasionally with a good boot cream. This cream nourishes the leather and prevents it drying and cracking, as is so foten the case with bags, especially those not constantly in use.

Darning Hint.—After finishing darning a stocking, beat down the darned places with a flat object, for instance, the end of the darning spool. Then the darned spot is nice and smooth, causing no discomfort or irritation to tender feet.

Use for Old Stockings.—Excellent dust cloths can be made by splitting and sewing together the upper halves of old silk or fine cotton hose. Place these dust cloths in an airtight pail with a few drops of kerosene sprinkled on them and leave stand twenty-four hours. Then all dust can be gathered more easily without the scattering of any particles.

OBEYING FATHER.

"What!" said the little girl.

The father was rather fastidious as to speech, so he said to the five-year old:

"You should never say 'What!' my dear; always say 'I beg your pardon.'"

That the little girl took the command too much to heart was made clear the other day when the maiden, pointing to a blossom, said:

"'I beg your pardon' is the name of that flower?"

MEXICAN VILLAGE LIFE.

Quiet of the Place in the Day—Pay Day at the Mines.

The little village of Panuco de Coronado, in the State of Durango, represents an average Mexican village, one that can be duplicated anywhere in the northern two-thirds of the country. It is typical even in its legend — —all mining towns here have the same. Once upon a time its mines yielded so much rich ore that the owner could pave with silver the street leading from his house to the church on the occasion of his daughter's marriage.

Panuco, like all Mexican villages, is a transplanted bit of the Orient. There is the same low, adobe house with flat roof and no chimney and usually no window. Women carry tae same jars of water on their heads and men clad in loose white cotton trudge lazily behind their little burros or more likely add their weight to the already overburdened animals. The glaring sun beats down from a tropical sky on the same palm and cactus, and a general air of emptiness and silence peryades the streets.

The universal building material is adobe, which is faced with plaster only in the better houses. These are always built in the form of a hollow square—the rooms opening into the patio in the centre. The more pretentious homes have windows, barred on the outside because the houses are built snug up to the street, which gives them the appearance of cells in a prison.

There is no patch of green or anything bright to relieve the uniform dust brown color of house and street, writes Jessie Fawler in the Los Angeles Times, no spear of grass is in sight, and all the flowers are kept in the patio. The particular village can boast of two trees, one cottonwood on the outskirts and one pepper berry.

To enter one of these huts is to step in on a mud floor, rarely a brick one, to see a few earthern bowls and saucers in one corner, a little pile of charred ashes in another, and a rude altar made of a couple of packing boxes, decorated with a few gaudy bits of tinsel and scraps of ribbon and empty beer bottles with withered flowers, an offering to the virgin of Guadaloupe who looks down from the walls. Chairs, bed and table are luxuries not commonly found. Mexican women are fond of flowers and the patios are bright with blossoms throughout the year.

One traveller describes a Mexican village as "sun, silence and adobe," and this is one's first and last impression. Whatever life is, is around the plaza: for away from here one sees only an occasional water carrier or a peon closely wrapped in his serape squatting on the ground in the sun. Pigs and dogs are everywhere. They come from every open doorway and follow us, yelping and barking. A dozen dogs are not too many for an average family. And the pigs—they sleep in the middle of the street, and not until our horses' feet are almost on them do they grunt and lazily move a step to the right.

But in the evening all is changed and the place is full of life and stir. Everybody comes out to enjoy the music and to stroll around and around the plaza. Men and women do not walk together unless married or engaged, but the men walk three or four abreast on the inside of the promenade and the women on the outside in the opposite direction. Through the open doors of the pulque shops may be seen groups of men drinking the nauseous beverage.

These shops, as well as all the stores, are not known by the names of their owners, but by some such fanciful name as "Flowers of the May," "Afternoons in April" and "The Surprise." No village is too small to have its band, and a good one too, that plays at the plaza one or two evenings a week throughout the year. The natives are very musical and one hears everywhere the tinkle of the guitar or mandolin playing some native air, like the plaintive "La Golondrina" or possibly the latest importation from home.

One does not peed to read the sign "Esquela para ninas" painted in big black letters on a low plastered building to know that it is a school for girls, for the children study in concert and—well, pulmonary troubles are not common at this altitude. Primary education is compulsory throughout the republic and so every village has two schools, one for boys and another for girls.

Pay day comes once a month. Work at the mines stops for the day and by 7 o'clock the men and women begin to gather around the office and set up their little stands for the sale of dulces, limes, pomegranates, sugar cane and oranges. By 9 o'clock the place has taken on quite a holiday aspect. Groups of senoras, each with a black eyed baby in her lap, sit on the ground and crochet lace or idly gossip. Men wrap themselves close in their serapes and wait stolidly for 10 o'clock, when they will be paid off.

All the people, men, women and children, come from miles around on foot, on burros, on ponies and in all sorts of nondescript wagons. The hacendado comes in front from some neighboring hacienda, looking very picturesque in his silver bespangled buckskin, while his pony, with silver trimmed saddle is a match for his rider. When they have all been paid they must next get rid of their money at the store.

Each man wears around his waist a square piece of white cloth folded diagonally and tied so that the point hangs down in the back. This cloth serves a double purpose; it acts as a belt to hold up the trousers and as a receptacle for all purchases made. The man removes this cloth, spreads it out on the counter at the store and into it are dumped his purchases—packages of cigarettes, boxes of matches, a few cakes of soap, two or three kilos of corn and perhaps a couple of meters of cloth.

No wrapping is used, but everything, lard excepted, is dumped into this cloth. Crackers he takes either inside his hat or on the outside. He never looks at the quality or asks the price, for it is a case of Hobson's choice. Time is no object with these people, so it is almost night before the last one goes away.

The fiesta of Santa Cruz, the day of the holy cross, is the miner's day of the year, when all the mines throughout the country stop work. Crosses are placed on all unfinished buildings as well as a huge one in the plaza, and are decorated with flowers, bits of ribbon and glass, while around the main cross are placed palmillas with their five feet stocks of beautiful flowers. There is incessant firing of guns throughout the day and the celebration ends with music and dancing in the evening.

HYGIENIC AUSTRALIA.

Health Conditions There Said to Be the Best in the World.

Health conditions in Australia are better than in any other country of the globe if the low death rate of 10.95 a thousand a year may be accepted as an index, says the Medical Record.

The death rate from tuberculosis has steadily been declining during the last twenty-five years and now is less than 9 per cent. of the total deaths, which is a lower percentage than any published by any other country which compiles its statistics in an equally accurate manner.

In New South Wales the notification of cases of pulmonary and throat tuberculosis has been compulsory for over ten years. The walls and ceilings of houses in which cases occur are sprayed with a solution of formalin and the floors are washed with a solution of corrosive sublimate.

The effectiveness of the educational campaign is shown by the fact that open air sleeping is more general than in any other country. There is scarcely a dwelling house constructed nowadays in Australia even a laborer's cottage, which is not provided with a suitable verandah for outdoor sleeping. There is very little expectorating on the sidewalks or other public places.

Ordinances to prevent the contamination of milk and other foodstuffs are well observed. In shops where fresh meat is offered for sale it is customary to find sheets of water running over the front windows and walls for the purpose of catching dust. All large cities, like Sidney, Melbourne, Adelaide and others have tuberculosis sanatorium and also a large number of beds for chronic cases. The Greenvale Sanatorium, near Melbourne, will compare favorably with similar institutions in Europe and America.

Gratifying progress has been made in isolating chronic and more particularly open cases of tuberculosis. In New South Wales, Victoria and South Australia it is estimated that at least [illegible] per cent. of these cases have been placed in hospitals and a good proportion of the remainder under supervision. The health officials believe that only a few years will elapse before every case of pulmonary and throat tuberculosis will be under such control as to reduce the danger of transmitting the infection to a minimum.

NOT HALF COSY ENOUGH.

An old countryman, compelled to sit in a suffocating smoking compartment in a crowded excursion train, gazed open-mouthed through the window at a lady on the platform, who was giving the porter exhaustive instructions regarding the storage of her bicycle.

"See that you find it the best place in the van, porter, and fix it very securely, and don't let any one play with the bell. And close the windows so that no one can get in, and cover up the handle bars, and make sure that the train doesn't shake it when it goes over the points."

The porter promised slavish obedience, pocketed his tip, and turned to go away.

"One moment, young feller," cried the old woman, leaning out of the carriage window and catching his arm. "I want to get out of here. It ain't half cosy enough. Here's five cents; now show me the way to the cycle van!"

First Lady—"Mrs. Smith is too young to go shopping alone." Second Lady—"Why is that?" First Lady—"She's liable to get excited and buy something."

THE ETIQUETTE OF BOWING

MUCH ATTENTION DEVOTED TO DIFFERENT BOWS.

Queen Mary Says Bowing Contrivance Makes Her Seasick.

So much attention has been devoted to the defference in the bows by which Queen Alexandra and Queen Mary acknowledge the salutations of the public when driving, stress being laid on the fact that Queen Alexandra bows from her waist, whereas Queen Mary only bows her head, that it may be as well to explain that there is a reason for this, which may be described as mechanical.

If Queen Alexandra bows from herwaist it is because, like her mother-in-law, Queen Victoria, like the late Empress of Austria, and Queen Christina of Spain, she has a species of mechanical contrivances fixed to the seat and back cushions of her carriages, which enables her to bow continuously from the waist, without any exertion or fatigue, while the carriage is in motion. It is something in the nature of the sliding seats used in rowing. Queen Mary declines to make use of this contrivance, on the plea that it disposes her to seasickness, a malady by which she is extremely prone; and it is because without this contrivance she would be overcome by fatigue if compelled to bow continuously from the waist, that she merely contents herself with an inclination of the head, which she endeavors to make as gracious as possible, but which is less suggestive of old-fashioned courtesy than a

BOW FROM THE WAIST.

This matter of bowing in response to the salutations of the public is a perpetual source of differences, and even disputes, among the members of royal and imperial families, and has created no end of bad blood amongst them. According to the rules of etiquette, it is only the lady of highest rank in the carriage or party who is permitted to respond to the salutations of bowing, and when, for instance, during the late reign the then Princess of Wales was driving with her mother-in-law, Queen Alexandra, the former was precluded from acknowledging any salute, even on the part of her personal intimates. The Countess of Flanders, mother of King Albert of Belgium, in the days when her sister-in-law, the late Queen Henrietta of the Belgians, was still alive, absolutely refused to drive anywhere with the latter, on the ground that it was injurious to her dignity to be unable to return salutations addressed to her personally.

The most distinguished courtesy paid by old Emperor Francis Joseph to his royal guests, when driving them back to the railroad station at Viena, is when he absolutely declines to acknowledge any of the salutes of the people lining the street, leaving that entirely to his visitor, so as to convey to the latter the impression that the popular homage is addressed to him, the guest, and not to himself, the Emperor.

BIRD SONGS DIFFER.

The Crow Sometimes Gives Quite a Musical Sound.

Some people cannot see any difference at first between the songs of the robin and the wood thrush, but to the initiated they have nothing in common.

Beginners usually see little difference between the songs of the Baltimore oriole, the robin, the scarlet tanager and the rose-breasted grosbeak. Yet the oriole's lay is almost a pure whistle, the tune varying much with different individuals; the robin's song is a bold warble, a little strident in places; the tanager sings a weaker, finer note, like an undeveloped horse robin; and the grosbeak has a beautiful warble, rather loud at times, but perfect, pure and mellow.

A bird may have two or more distinct songs. Some commonly have three, while no two individual birds of certain species ever sing precisely the same tune. Occasionally a very gifted individual will eclipse the performance of all rivals. The caw of the common crow is well known, but its love notes and its conversational abilities when ministering to its young are seldom recognized. In early spring or late winter the crow often gives forth quite musical sounds.

Many singers not ordinarily gifted have beautiful flight songs. It is not generally known that individual meadow larks are fine singers when in flight.

"Tommy, Tommy," remonstrated his teacher, "why are you so naughty? I've had to whip you six times this week." "Because, teacher," replied Tommy, "grandpa says the good die young, and I ain't taking any risks."

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL STUDY

INTERNATIONAL LESSON, JULY 30.

Lesson V.—The finding of the Book of Law, 2 Chron. 34. 14-33. Golden Text, Psa. 119. 11.

14. Hilkiah . . . found the book—The fact that it was found at the time the money was being brought into the temple for the necessary repairs, makes it seem a natural inference that the book was hidhen where the money was kept.

Given by Moses—This detail is not given by 2 Kings, the older record. The Chronicler has in mind the entire Pentateuch, whereas, as noted above, the account in Kings implies only the book of Deuteronomy. Many critical students of the Old Testament now believe the main portion of Deuteronomy was written, not by Moses, but at a later time, and was made up of materials of an earlier date.

16. Shaphan carried the book to the king—A comparison with 2 Kings 22. 9 shows that this mention of the book should not have been made at this point. Its introduction here, anticipating the narration in verse 18, makes an awkward statement. What this scribe actually did was, first of all, to report to the king the completion of his work in connection with the repair of the temple, which had been intrusted to the care of the Levites.

18. Read therein—The writer recognizes the repair of the temple, which had been intire Pentateuch to the king, and so says he read only portions of it. Admitting that it was the book of Deuteronomy that was read, the statement in 2 Kings that "Shaphan read it" is at once credible and natural.

19. He rent his clothes—The denunciation and cures found in Deut. 28 would be apt to move the king deeply as he thought of his people's neglect of the covenant of Jehovah.

20. Ahikam—Spoken of by Jeremiah (26. 24) as a worthy courtier who defended the prophet on a critical occasion, and the father of Gedaliah, who governed the cities of Judah after the fall of Jerusalem.

The king's servant—Some special office of whose nature we are not certain.

21. Go . . . for great is the wrath of Jehovah—The king was fearful of the threatening calamity which the reading of the law led him to expect.

22. Huldah the prophetess—The term was applied to several women in the Old Testament—Miriam, Deborah, the wife of Izaiah, Noadiah (Neh. 6. 14). Huldah must have been a woman of acknowledged repute as a prophetess, inasmuch as the messengers of the king sought her out at once, when directed to "inquire of Jehovah." We have no further information concerning her than what is contained in this, and the parallel account in 2 Kings 22. 14.20. Her husband's grandfather was keeper of the garments kept for special festive occasions at the palace.

24. All the curses—See Deut. 28 15.28. A more terrible fate for the city and the nation could hardly be imagined.

28. Gathered to thy grave in peace—As Josiah was slain in the battle of Megiddo, these words, if taken literally, are at least a testimony to the genuineness of the prophecy. As a matter of fact, because of his personal piety and humility, the king was spared the agony of witnessing the evils which befell his people.

29. All the elders—No official class is meant, but rather the heads of houses and clans.

30. All the people—It was a popular assembly, consisting of all classes and ages.

31. Made a covenant—Literally, "cut a covenant," an expression that arose from the custom of cutting sacrificial victims in pieces, between which the parties involved walked. This, however, was no essential part of a covenant. The oath of the covenant was the principal feature.

32. Caused all . . . to stand to it—That is, to keep the law. According to the account in Chronicles (see lesson for July 23), the reforms of Josiah had preceded the finding of the law book, and had sprung, not from the reading of the law, but from the natural desire of a pious king. The following verse, therefore, may be regarded as a summary of the reform work of Josiah.

33. All his days they departed not—But after his death, in the reign of Jehoiakim, the people fell back into the old habits.

Churchwarden Brown: "Excuse me, Mr. Smith, but are you aware that you put a bad half-dollar in the contribution plate this morning?"

Mr. Smith: "Yes; I owe the heathen a grudge for eating a missionary uncle of mine!"

FORTUNE FAVORS THE BRAVE;

OR, A LOOK INTO THE PAST

CHAPTER XXIV.—(Cont'd)

It was not exactly the kind of letter a son might expect to receive from a mother who had not seen him for months; but Derrick knew his mother too well by this time to be disappointed at any lack of womanly or maternal warmth.

He folded up the epistle and put it into the envelope, with a tiny sigh that escaped him unconsciously. Perhaps, had his mother been there to hear it, she might have changed a little in her manner towards him; for, as has been stated before, with all her cold worldliness, Mrs. Darnley had some love in her nature, and this love was all her son's.

However, she did not hear it, and Derrick was never likely to woo more warmth from his mother in his present hopeless and unhappy condition of mind.

The fifteenth of December would be due in a week's time, and bearing this in mind, Derrick determined suddenly to accept an invitation contained in another letter to go over to Ireland for a week with a few bachelor chums, their cheery society would at least take him out of himself for a while before finally returning to his work.

How little do we poor mortals know of the strange workings of life!

On the evening of the day following the one that saw Darnley's departure for Ireland, a four-wheeler stopped at the door of his chambers, and a tall woman, respectably attired, alighted from it and rang the bell.

On being told that Mr. Darnley had started the evening before for Ireland, she seemed perplexed as to how she should act next, and, turning slowly, went back to the cab, where she held a short, whispered conference with some one inside.

"Can you give me Mr. Darnley's mother's address, please?" was the result of this.

The woman of the house hesitated.

"Is it very important?" she asked dubiously.

"Very," was the curt reply.

"Well, Mrs. Darnley lives at either 300 or 305 Park Street, Park Lane, but she ain't at home now, I know. She's coming next week, so Mr. Darnley told me."

With a word of thanks, the inquirer turned and re-entered the cab as the door of the chambers was closed.

"And now, ma'am what shall you do?" asked Janet of Nancy, as they progressed slowly through the streets back to the humble lodging which had sheltered them since their hurried flight from the Manor House the previous night.

"I shall wait and see Mrs. Darnley," was the resolute reply.

Nancy flung back the thick veil that had shrouded her face, and sighed deeply.

"How can I ever thank you, Janet? How can I ever show my gratitude to you?" she said, in low, hurried, nervous tones. "What—what would have become of me but for you?"

"You promised me you would not talk of it again, ma'am," answered Janet, in her quiet, stolid way. "After all, I did no more than my duty as a woman."

"And to think I doubted you, and thought you hard and heartless at times!" the girl murmured. "Janet, I shall never forgive myself for those thoughts!"

"Better turn your mind to others, ma'am, now that you are free from your troubles."

"But shall I be free long?"—the old hunted look came into those sweet blue eyes. "Janet, I feel—I know—they will follow me, find me, and take me back, and that will kill me, Janet—it will kill me! I could not go back after all that horror!"

"Now, be comforted, my dear, be comforted. I tell you they won't find you, in the first place; and, in the second, your husband won't be able to leave his bed for weeks, maybe. I know something about delirium tremens, ma'am."

Nancy shuddered.

"You are right, I will not think about it any more, or I shall go mad; only I swear—yes, I swear it—if I am forced to go back, Janet, to—to him, I will kill myself sooner than endure—— Surely—surely!" she exclaimed bitterly, "it cannot be right, it is not human to force any creature to lead such an existence! Oh! Janet, I can feel his arms round me now! I can see that knife flashing in the firelight! It was horrible—so horrible!"

Shuddering and trembling in every limb, the girl crouched back in the corner of the cab, and burst into a flood of tears.

Janet did not check this; indeed, she welcomed it as being a certain relief to Nancy's overcharged heart and brain, she had been growing very anxious all through the long day just passed as she had watched the girl's white, contracted face, and saw the mental suffering in her eyes.

This was the very first moment that Nancy's calmness had given way since she had regained consciousness in the lodge-keeper's cottage, and Janet knew it was the best thing that could happen to her.

The past forty-eight hours had contained enough mental trouble to crush the stoutest heart.

When Nancy had opened her eyes after her second fainting fit, she had been too prostrate to utter a sound for nearly an hour; but, after that, as the full horror of what had occurred returned to her, she had become feverishly awake, and finding that she was actually free from the prison walls of the Manor House, she had determined, without a second's hesitation, to escape from it once and for all before she was drawn back into the mesh again.

And here, in this her hour of greatest need, she suddtnly found a friend.

Janet proved once more the truth of the old proverb of not judging by appearances; her quiet, matter-of-fact manner was the very best nerve tonic to Nancy in her excited, distraught condition.

In a few curt words she explained how it was she had been able to come so effectually to her young mistress' rescue—how she had seen that Crawshaw had been on the verge of madness, as he had been drinking heavily for days, and overhearing him in a quarrel with Fenton declare that he would bring his wife to her bearings, she had waited and watched outside Nancy's bedroom in the passage for his coming.

Her height and strength stood her in good purpose a few moments later, when, having shouted to Fenton to bring help without delay, she had grappled with the infuriated man herself, literally holding him down by almost superhuman force while Nancy had managed to crawl away, and Fenton, for once frightened into sobriety, had rushed in with the two other men and secured the raging drunkard with no little amount of difficulty.

"And now, ma'am, if you will let me advise you, you will go over to Ripstone Hall as fast as you can be driven," she had said, when all was told; but to her surprise, Nancy absolutely refused to do this.

"No, I will not drag Miss Leicester into my trouble and disgrace," the girl had answered, in low, quiet tones. I shall go to London; I have work to do there—will you help me, Janet?" she asked, suddenly, turning to the woman; and Janet's answer had been to hold out her roughened hand in silence and clasp Nancy's slender one.

Without protesting or trying to urge the girl to what was obviously the easiest thing she could do under the circumstances—claim the protection of the house that had been her home—she had set about arranging their speedy departure without more ado.

It was impossible to leave before the morning—no one would stop them, for Fenton had ridden over post-haste to the nearest town for a doctor, and Thomas Crawshaw was lying down tied to his bed, lost to everything in the mad horrors of delirium tremens.

"Yes, I will go to London," the girl said once or twice, as she had sat staring out at the gray, cold dawn that crept above the leafless trees of the manor woods; "I will go to London."

A sudden gleam of hope had come to her. Those words of Crawshaw's about tricking her into a marriage—what if they should be true? They might be the ravings of a lunatic—but again they might have escaped him when he was not master of himself or his secrets.

She would go to London, at any rate, and search it out; her aunt, by this time, might be returned from Australia. Dr. Grantley was there to help, and with grim determination the girl resolved to go to Darnley's mother and question her on this subject to find out if she really had had a share in the matter.

Her heart beat in a quick, nervous way as she planned all this deliberately.

If it should be true—then justice and right should protect her from this man.

If she found this false—the mere mad ravings of a drunken mind—well, there was always one way of escape, and death—dark, mysterious and awful death—would be better than a continuance of her past misery.

So together she and Janet arranged everything, aided and abetted by the lodge-keeper's wife, who herself stood at the door and waved farewell and hearty good wishes to the young mistress of the Manor House as she was borne swiftly away in a humble cart with her new but faithful and good friend beside her.

Arrived in London, Janet had taken the girl to some respectable though poor lodgings, kept by a relation of hers. This was done for two reasons—to escape detection and to avoid expense, for the only capital they possessed was a few pounds Janet had saved from her wages and the diamond rings which Crawshaw had insisted on Nancy wearing above the plain gold one that marked her as his wife.

They had done nothing all through the long day that followed their arrival. Nancy was physically and mentally exhausted, and lay on the small, hard bed with such a set, white face that tears came uninvited to Janet's eyes as she glanced at the girl every now and then. But the next morning all lethargy was gone, and Nancy was excitedly eager to be out early.

She was met by disappointment at the first outset. Dr. Grantley was not in town, and therefore she could discover nothing about her aunt till two days later, when the doctor was expected home, and might be able to tell her if Mrs. Chaplin was back in England. No one else could give her this information.

After this Nancy sat down and struggled with herself. She did not know where to find Mrs. Darnley, but she had carefully treasured the card which Derrick had slipped into her hand that morning in the woods.

From him she could learn his mother's whereabouts at once, yet she shrank from going to him at this moment. Her womanly modesty warned her that it would be a severe trial to both of them, and yet—yet she hungered to know the truth, to learn if Crawshaw's words had been spoken in earnest; it meant so much to her—so very much.

She never doubted that the law, that justice, would come to her rescue if she could prove these words true; or that freedom would be given her immediately, once it was known that she had been tricked into her hateful marriage; and freedom was all she asked at this moment—freedom from the horror of living as she had lived the last few montns.

Her eagerness won the day, and so it came to pass that she and Janet drove to Mr. Darnley's chambers together as evening was drawing on.

Nancy had decreed that he was to know nothing of her presence there. Janet was to ask for him, and get his mother's address without disclosing the fact that her mistress was near.

The result of the drive has been seen, and perhaps Nancy's tears came not only from the natural reaction, but from the sense of pain and disappointment that arose when she learned that Derrick was not in London.

Though she was firm as to their not meeting, still it had been an indescribable comfort to her to think that she was near him—her dearest, her living realization of all that was good, noble and honorable.

A SPOON SHAKER.

StraightFrom Coffeedom.

Coffee can marshall a good squadron of enemies and some very hard ones to overcome. A lady in Florida writes:

"I have always been very fond of good coffee, and for years drank it at least three times a day. At last, however, I found that it was injuring me.

"I became bilious, subject to frequent and violent headaches, and so very nervous, that I could not lift a spoon to my mouth without spilling a part of its contents.

"My heart got 'rickety' and beat so fast and so hard that I could scarcely breathe, while my skin got thick and dingy, with yellow blotches on my face, caused by the condition of my liver and blood.

"I made up my mind that all these afflictions came from the coffee, and I determined to experiment and see.

"So I quit coffee and got a package of Postum which furnished my hot morning beverage. After a little time I was rewarded by a complete restoration of my health in every respect.

"I do not suffer from biliousness any more, my headaches have disappeared, my nerves are as steady as could be desired, my heart beats regularly and my complexion has cleared up beautifully—the blotches have been wiped out and it is such a pleasure to be well again." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

HEALTH

WATER SUPPLY.

The healthiness of the household is largely affected by the character of the water supply, which must be considered both as regards its degree of hardness and its purity.

Hardness results from the presence of lime and magnesia dissolved in the water.

"Temporary hardness," which is removed by boiling, is due to carbonates, "permanent hardness" to sulphates of lime and magnesia.

Hard water is readily detected by its behavior with soap.

Every householder knows how with certain waters the soap precipitates in flaky particles before it is possible to produce a lather. This means that part of the soap is used up in softening the water, or, in other words, that there is a daily waste of soap.

Hard water causes the limy deposit in kettles and boilers, and in time chokes up the hot-water pipes, involving danger of explosion if means are not taken for clearing them from time to time.

It is also unpleasant for domestic use, causing roughness of the skin and "chapping" in winter, and is a fruitful cause of many bodily derangements, including dyspepsia, glandular swellings, gout, and rheumatism.

Every grain of lime per gallon of water constitutes one degree of hardness, and it has been laid down by authorities that no public water supply should exceed 10 degrees.

When this is exceeded it is worth while to instal a softening apparatus in connection with the domestic system. An efficient water softener consists of a separate cistern in which a certain definite amount of "anticlaire," or other softening agent, is introduced automatically into the water as it leaves the main, and a filter system for intercepting the limy deposit which results.

Well water may be similarly treated if forced into a cistern before use.

Even more important than hardness is purity. This may be affected by the presence of an undue amount of mineral or other matter in suspension, generally visible to the eye, and the remedy is efficient filtration.

On the other hand, the water may be contaminated by the presence of organic matter and disease germs. If this is suspected, it is best to have the water examined by an expert.

Generally, it may be said that water from surface wells should always be viewed with suspicion. Deep well water is safe if not contaminated in the cistern.

THE FARM

Useful Hints for the Tiller of the Soil

UTILIZING FARM WASTES.

When an animal dies upon the farm instead of sending the carcass to the phosphate factory or dumping in some out of the way place, if the body is reduced by the owner, several loads of the best fertilizing material will be the result. The carcass should be drawn to a suitable spot and placed upon a bed composed of four or five loads of soil or muck, then covered thickly with quicklime and at least a dozen loads of soil placed upon it. Let it remain undisturbed for nearly a year and the result will be several dollars' worth of a good fertilizer for all crops. In this way all dead animals may be utilized, using less soil or muck as size of animals warrants.

Bones furnish valuable fertilizing material also, and should be saved. To 100 pounds of bones add the same quantity of wood ashes, 25 pounds of lime, and 12 pounds of salsoda finely pulverized. Let remain about three weeks. Add water to moisten well. After decomposing it should be turned out upon a dry place and mixed withdry soil to prepare it for use.

If diluted sulphuric acid is poured over bones, they will be ready for use sooner, and will prevent escape of ammonia. Caustic lye may be used also in reducing bones speedily.

A good fertilizer is made by gathering the refuse from pigeons and poultry houses, with muck leaves and wastes of different kinds. Stable manure may be added.

Unslacked lime should not be mixed with manure, as better results are had by the use of lime and ashes by themselves; if used together a large portion of the ammonia will be liberated and wasted. But if a large amount of soil, muck or other absorbent matter is added to the compost, then ashes or lime may be used, as the carbonic acid will be produced in decomposition in sufficient quantity to take up the ammonia as fast as it is set free.

A cow produced in a year about 3½ cords of solid manure, and three cords of liquid manure. This if all saved, would equal in value her milk. Yet not one out of 20 farmers save or make an effort to save the liquid manure. It is comparatively easy to construct a water tight basin in the stable yard in which liquids may be deposited. Gutters can be made at the rear of cow stables and the liquid refuse carried from there to the basin in the yard.

By turning to account all the farm "waste" mentioned many dollars can be saved which have been heretofore spent in the purchase of commercial fertilizers.

FOR THE HOG RAISER.

It is common sense that a mature sow will produce larger and more perfect pigs than a very young one.

Do not attempt to raise fall pigs without having first prepared a perfect system of housing for the winter.

Spring pigs can get along very well without shelter except from rain until fall, then if you are so shiftless as to fail to provide shelter they are better able to stand cold and rain.

Some people claim that a hog is a scavenger by nature, but he certainly thrives better on clean feed and decent surroundings.

Free range for hogs does not mean that they should be allowed to run in the highways and through the neighbors' fences.

Every inclosure for the hog should be perfectly tight, and with the excellent wire fences that are now manufactured this is an easy matter.

A NOVEL AFFAIR.—The junior patrons, under the age of 14 years, were treated to a Phonograph concert in the Phonograph parlors in the rear of Powell's Bazaar, by J. W. Powell, Monday night. There were nearly 70 children as well as several adults, who came with the little folks. The selections given were mostly comic, while one was a reproduction of a recitation made by Charlie Ford son of Al. Ford, butcher. When asked whose voice this was, the children answered Charlie Ford. This was given to show what could be accomplished with an Edison Phonograph. The little folks were greatly pleased with the concert. This is the second Mr. Powell has given, an Edison Triumph Phonograph was used.

HICKS' FORECASTS FOR AUGUST. —A regular storm period extends from the 6th to the 14th, having full Moon on the 9th, and Moon on the Equator on the 13th. This period will bring threatened clouds, fall of barometer and violent, blustering winds. Relief from great warmth will follow disturbances at this time, and many sections will get light to moderate rains, but not sufficient for general agricultural needs. The 9th is the centre of a marked seismic period, extending about four days before and after that date. On and about the 13th a crisis of electrical and seismic disturbance.

TRIVITT MEMORIAL CHURCH.—Sunday last marked the fifth anniversary of the able ministry of Rev. D. W. Collins in the Trivitt Memorial Church, a fact which he briefly referred to at the close of his sermon on Sunday morning. He stated that his five years ministry in Exeter had been five of the most happy and pleasant years of his whole life. It was a source of great satisfaction to him to see the marked and steady progress being made in the parish and trusted that the future would be equally favored. In the evening the congregation had the pleasure of listening to a discourse from Rev. R. J. M. Perkins of Ingersoll, a former rector, who dealt with his subject in an able and interesting manner, showing that he has lost none of his old-time vigor and earnestness as a preacher. In his opening remarks he expressed the pleasure of having an opportunity of again addressing the congregation of the Trivitt Memorial church and referred briefly to his ministry in Exeter, stating that he was delighted to see that the church had and was making healthy progress in God's work. He had always retained a warm and deep regard for the Congregation of Trivitt Memorial Church, and always would.

STRUCK WITH A SLEDGE.— The fates seemed to be against the Yellow Bros. of Usborne on Monday last, Joe Yellow having lost his barn, and Richard narrowly escaping instant death the same day by being struck in the head with a sledge. He was working with his brother Joseph at the time and standing in front of him. When Joseph was swing the sledge the head flew off the handle striking Richard in the head with such force that he was rendered unconscious and thought to have been dead. He, however, survived the blow and regained consciousness, and apart from the severely bruised scalp in not much the worse.

Baseball

Exeter Junior Ball Team went to Centralia Friday night and won out by a score of 13 to 12.

Exeter and Centralia juniors will play a game of ball on the local diamond on Thursday at 6 p.m.

There seems to be nothing much to say about that game of baseball in Clinton on Thursday afternoon. The score tells the tale, 14 to 1, against Exeter. The boys have no excuse to make, but simply state that it was Exeter's "off" day and Clinton's "on" day.

Ailsa Craig and Exeter played a good game of ball here Monday night up to the last few innings, when the locals went up in an airship and never returned, allowing the visitors to pile up a big score. The final result was 12-5 in favor of Craig. The boys feel as though they have gone stale on the game and will holiday for two or three weeks in an endeavor to recover form.

Dominion Election September 21st.

On Saturday morning the Dominion Cabinet decided on immediate dissolution of the House, and fixed the date of the election for Thursday, Sept. 21st. The matter came somewhat as a surprise to both Liberals and Conservatives who were not members of the Cabinet, although it was felt that the dissolution would take place the following week. The election campaign will be of only seven weeks duration, and will likely prove one of the most strenuous in the history of Canadian politics. Premier Laurier and Leader Bordon both state that they are ready for the contest, and have issued manifestos to the people. Hon Clifford Sifton states that he will not be a candidate, but is out against the reciprocity pact, and will do all in his power to prevent the return of the Government to power.

The election coming before redistribution and before this year's voters' lists have been prepared will necessitate the constituencies remaining the same as before, and also the use of lists prepared from the voters' lists of 1910.

In South Huron the Conservative candidate is Mr. J. J. Merner of Zurich., who was chosen at a convention held in Hensall two months ago; and the Liberal candidate will in all probability be the present member, Mr. M. Y. McLean of Seaforth. Conservatives confidently expect that Mr. Merner, who is a strong candidate, will redeem the riding.

BARN BURNED BY CHILDREN.

The fine large barn owned by Mr. Joseph Yellow, Lot 18, Concession 2, Usborne, was totally destroyed by fire on Monday morning last. The fire originated by Mr. Yellow's children striking matches in the barn. They were playing in the barn and discovering Mr. Yellow's vest, which he had left in the buggy, took matches out of the pocket and struck them, with the result that the straw was set on fire and soon the whole building was in a blaze, and together with all the contents was destroyed, including a large quantity of hay, grain in the sheaf, two horses worth about $400, four calves, nine pigs, a number hens, two buggies and other articles. The loss is partly covered by insurance in the Usborne & Hibbert Fire Insurance Co.—$900 on the barn and $500 on contents.

LUCRATIVE POSITIONS

It is generally conceded that owing to the Chain of Seven Colleges with which our Clinton Business College is connected, that its graduates get the best positions. Many young men who graduated two years ago are now receiving $1000 to $3000 per year, and young women from $60 to $110 per month. The Clinton Business is one of the largest schools in the Province, and the demand for its graduates is many times its supply. Mr. Spotton has solved the life problem for thousands, and placed them on the "High Road to Success", and he is in a better position than ever to do the same for you. You will be welcomed at any of his town or city schools. We understand that he trained 1200 students last year, and anticipates a large increase during the incoming year. It would be well for the young people to get his advice; if he thinks you are not adapted for Commercial pursuits he will frankly tell you.

HENSALL MAN DISAPPEARS

W. Perkins of Hensall, owner of the Commercial Hotel, which was burned down there some time ago, left his home over a month ago to go to Hamilton to buy some bar fixtures for a new hotel which he has erected where the old one was burned. Before leaving he paid $600 to the contractors as a partial payment on the new building. He did not have very much money on him as he intended paying for his goods on arrival here. That was the last his family heard of him. Enquiry at Hamilton elicited the information that he had never reached that place, and for a time his wife suspected that he had met with foul play. Enquiry was made in London, but none of his friends there had seen him. A man returning from Vancouver recently told a Hensall resident hat he saw Perkins in Vancouver but it is said that this story is improbable, considering the fact that he had no reason to leave home, and that his business was in good condition.

WALT MASON ON DRY WEATHER

J. Pluvius turned not the crank that operates his water tank. He watched the people wail in woe, but not a bit did he relent, he didn't seem to care a cent. Old Vulcan heard the people's wails, where he was making horseshoe nails, and said "Say, Pluve, turn on the drink those people below are on the blink." But Pluvius replied, Gee whiz. You'll teach me how to do my biz; I tell you Vulc, those mortal men must have a lession now and then For many years I've sent them rain, and crops have grown on every plain, Prosperity was at their doors, where now the the wolf of famine roars. And while I kept their planet wet, there was a carnival of debt. Men blew their substance wild and free, as though it grew upon a tree. Their stock of luxuries enlarged, they bought fool things and had them charged. Men threw their money at the stars, and traded homes for chug-chug cars, and rioted at every chance, like drunken sailors at a dance. And as I cooked their blamed old earth, to teach them what good fortune's worth. When they have chewed on husks a while they'll learn to save their little pile."

On Sunday evening the Rally Day program of the Y. P. A. was rendered in the Evangelical church. A very large audience was in attendance. Special anthems were sung by the choir and an exercise by the Juniors. The male chorus gave two splendid selections. They are making marked progress under the leadership of Rev. Burn. The topic, "Our Glorious Legacy," was taken by Garnet Sweitzzer, Frazer Brown and Arthur Holtzmann. The first taking it from a national standpoint, the second the educational system and the latter the religious opportunities which have presented themselves. Miss Ella Link, the president of the Alliance, then followed with an address on "The obligations of the Y. P. A. Worker." All addresses were well delivered and proved very instructive and interesting. The Y. P. A. is at present in a very prosperous condition. The Alliance having had twenty-five new members added to their roll. The evening's program was a treat for all who attended.

Last Wednesday our fans were given the privilege of seeing one of the fastest games of ball played on our diamond for a number of years. The Parkhill boys came over and played good clean ball, and had it not been for the rank decisions of the umpire the game would have been a pleasure to see. The players of the visiting team were all jolly, good fellows and the best of harmony prevailed until the tenth inning, when the umpire failed, or did not want to see our catcher put a runner out on home plate. As the night was rapidly approaching and the players still disputing the umpire's decision the crowd left. The score in the tenth inning was 6-5 in favor of the Parkhill team. Our boys scored two runs in the first inning. King started the ball out into the field. "Home run" Bissett followed with a mighty hit and hustled King around the diamond. In the third inning one of our players threw high to the catcher, letting in two runs, and tied the score, and so it was neck to neck until the end of the game, Teddy pitched good ball. Waddel was the pitcher for the visitors and the old timer, Charlie Barnes, caught. The following is the great story of the game in innings;

USE OF COCAINE SPREADING

Montreal Chief of Police Makes It a Feature of His Report

A despatch from Montreal says: The feature of the annual report of the Superintendent of Police for the year 1910, which has just been made public, is the letter dealing with the increasing use of cocaine in Montreal. Chief Campeau says in part:

"In submitting the annual report of the operations of the police department for the year 1910, I think it my duty to speak of the increasing use of cocaine which is spreading amongst the younger element of the city especially. Since July last, the police of Montreal have made over 150 arrests on charges of using or selling the drug. This number is alarming and the attention of the authorities is drawn to this fact particularly. Offences are repeated in more than normal proportions, and this is due to the facility with which one can procure the poison and the brazenness of those who sell this pernicious product.

POOR CHANCE FOR AVIATORS.

Box Kites Shot Full of Holes From Deck of Battleship.

A despatch from Provincetown, Mass., says: The modern battleship is not likely to have much trouble in disposing of such enemies as come by aeroplane, if the aerial marksmanship of the gunners abroad the battleship New Hampshire is any indication. The tests were made more difficult by being held at night. Huge box kites, pulled through the air by a fast torpedo boat, were the targets. Under the eye of the warship's searchlights the flying marks, supposed to be hostile biplanes, were riddled with bullets from the rifles of sharpshooters and an automatic Colt field gun of eight calibre, which pumped 400 steel pellets a minute. The kites were easily hit at 300 and 500 yards.

GRAIN INSPECTOR ARRESTED.

Detectives Claim to Have Unearthed a System of Robbery.

A despatch from Winnipeg says: Secret service men of the Canadian Pacific Railway claim to have unearthed a huge robbery game by which hundreds of cars have been looted in the local yards. Charles Thomas, a Government grain inspector, is under arrest. A number of other arrests, detectives claim, will follow. All grain inspectors have access to all freight cars, the detectives say. For several months complaints have been general about looting of C. P. R. freight cars in the local yards. Thomas came to Winnipeg two years ago from Kansas City.

CANADA'S NEW COINAGE.

Design for New Fifty and Ten-Cent Pieces are Received.

A despatch from Ottawa says: An extra of the Canada Gazette proclaims the design for the new 50-cent and 10-cent pieces. For the 50-cent pieces the obverse impression will have the effigy of King George with the Imperial crown and robe, and the inscription "Georgius V., Rex Et Ind. Imp.," and for the reverse "50 cents, Canada," the year, a wreath of maple and the Imperial crown. The impression of the 10-cent piece will be the same except for the denomination.

NINE MILLION TIES USED

Expenditure on One Item of Railway Construction in Canada

A despatch from Ottawa says: The forestry branch of the Department of the Interior has collected statistics with regard to the cross-tie consumption in Canada for 1910. There were 9,213,962 cross-ties purchased in 1910 by the steam and electric roads of Canada at a cost of $3,535,228. This is a decrease of 35 per cent. from the number purchased in 1909. The average cost of these ties at the point of purchase was 38c per tie. Three kinds of wood, cedar, jackpine and hemlock, furnished 77 per cent. of all the ties purchased. Cedar itself supplied 40 per cent. of the total consumption, and its use is increasing yearly in proportion to other species. Oak, which makes an expensive tie, costing 74c each, was used principally by an United States company having mileage in Canada. Of the total number of ties purchased 70 per cent. were hewn ties. The only important species which has a majority of sawn ties was oak. Sawn ties cost on the average 36c per tie and hewn ties cost 3c. more. The steam railways used 95 per cent. of all the ties, and these ties cost them on the average 38c. The electric railways used 302,540 ties—an increase of 183 per cent. over 1909. They paid for their ties 41c. each. Although on the average they use smaller ties, this excess of 3c in the cost is due not only to the disadvantages incident to contracts for smaller quantities of materials, but also to the fact that the electric roads are more likely to purchase tie at points where the price includes transportation charges.

C.P.R. LINER HIT SUNKEN ROCK

The Empress of China is Stranded on the Coast of Japan

A despatch from Tokio says: The British steamer Empress of China on Thursday struck a sunken rock off the Province of Boshu. Her passengers were landed safely. It is expected the vessel will be refloated.

The accident occurred near the scene of the wreck of the Great Northern steamship Dakota in the Spring of 1907. Submerged rocks extend about a mile from the coast, which is swept by dangerous currents.

As soon as word of the accident was received here Vice-Admiral Sato, the Minister of Marine, despatched the cruisers Azo and Soya, of the Japanese training squadron, to the assistance of the distressed ship. The cruisers took off the mails and baggage of the Empress and aided in removing the 185 passengers to the mainland. The passengers were temporarily housed in temples and a school building, and later proceeded by train to this city.

The ship's bottom was badly damaged, and if the craft is saved it will take three months to repair her.

FUEL IS SCARCE.

Saskatchewan Likely to Suffer by the Miners Strike.

A despatch from Regina, Sask., says: The Government from information secured from all the coal dealers in the province, has issued a report on the present situation. Reports on scarcity of fuel are confirmed, and it is found that with the exception of a little supply which towns on the Soo Line get from the Souris Valley the only source from which coal is brought here is the district where the mines are now closed.

HUNDRED LIVES LOST.

Bodies of Number of Victims of Typhoon in Tokio Recovered.

A despatch from Tokio, Japan, says: More than 100 persons are believed to have lost their lives early on Wednesday in the typhoon which swept over Tokio and Yokohama during the night. Forty bodies were recovered in the morning in the Suzaki district, including 23 occupants of a house of ill repute, which was washed away before the tenants could escape. The property loss will be large. Many fishing vessels and small coastwise craft are missing.

Anyway a man never tells how a girl proposed to him.

EXPLOSION IN WESTERN CITY

Saskatoon In Darkness, Water Supply Cut Off, Three Men Injured

A despatch from Saskatoon, Sask., says: Three men were injured, two seriously, and the city is in darkness indefinitely as the result of a boiler explosion at the city power plant early on Thursday afternoon. The boiler had been leaking all morning, and power was shut off pending repairs, but the leak got worse, and the fires were ordered to be drawn. While being drawn a boiler tube exploded, clouds of scalding water and superheated steam immediately enveloping the whole boiler room. I. Sullivan, a coal wheeler, received the first blast, being blown over a coal pile, but luckily escaped with bruises and a scratched hand. Immediately after came a discharge with the combined force of the three boilers, which were connected, the centre being the source of the trouble, the whole force aggregating 450 horse-power.

Andrew G. Sangster, superintendent of power; Harry Johnson, chief engineer, and Jack Kemp were the three men involved, the first and second-named being badly scalded all over the body. Johnson had the flesh scalded almost off both arms and hands, and Sangster was also terribly scalded.

As the superintendent and chief engineer were injured and only subordinates left to handle the trouble, it is impossible to state when the plant will operate again, as the only means adopted for relieving the tension thus far has been the calling into requisition the services of the forty-horse-power city traction engine, ridiculously inefficient.

The city is devoid of water supply, and business in all shops operated by city power is at an absolute standstill.

PEOPLE IN DISTRESS.

Twenty-Nine Families Burned Out North of Sydney.

A despatch from North Bay says: Late advices received from the townships of Hanmer and Capreol, north of Sudbury, reveal distressing conditions among the settlers there. Twenty-nine families were burned out in the recent fires, and lost everything. The families are all large, and mostly French-Canadians. Supplies have been sent in from Sudbury, but the people are destitute and in urgent need of assistance, as women are sleeping on the bare boards with only one blanket to cover them. About two hundred human beings are in need of immediate assistance, and the condition of these settlers is pitiable, as the supplies furnished them thus far do not begin to meet their pressing needs.

HOW TO STAY YOUNG.

Try to Keep a Clean Slate So Far as Infectious Diseases Go.

"There's no way of preventing old age itself," writes Woods Hutchinson in Hampton's, "save by the rather heroic remedy of dying early, which is scarcely worth while for this purpose alone.

"It is perfectly possible, however, to prevent most of the limitations and cripplings, which alone make old age to be dreaded, by the exercise of our intelligence and our determination.

"Many, if not most of the changes we associate with old age, which we have in mind when we think of growing old, which in our pompous technical terminology we allude to as 'senile degenerations,' are the result of infectious diseases and bad hygienic habits.

"For instance, remote at first sight as the connection may seem, many of the disabilities of old age are the results of those lightly regarded and almost despised infections called 'children's diseases' and 'common colds.'

"It seems ludicrous to think of a grandfather who has not fully recovered from the measles or of a grandmother who is still suffering from the effects of whooping cough, but such long delayed Nemeses as these are of painfully frequent occurrence.

"A healthy first childhood is the best assurance of a happy second one. If you are only sufficiently unfortunate in your environment in early childhood and youth you may have a full group of senile symptoms and die of old age at 45. A large percentage of the mass of humanity, both men and women, do so die, old before their time.

"If you want your child to reach a healthy, happy, uncrippled old age guard his cradle and his nursery with jealous care against the demons of the little fevers of infancy and childhood. Even the so-called dulling of the old man's senses is due nine times out of ten to ailments of childhood.

"The failure of his hearing is due to successive attacks of uncured or untreated colds which spread from his throat up to his eustachian tube to the drum and the bones of his middle ear; the dimming of his eyesight is due to that decay of the vitality of the centre of the crystalline lens which we call cataract, a decay caused by the infection shocks and overwork and underfeeding strains of life.

"Three-quarters of the cripplings of the old men or women which chain them to their chairs or make their old bones a torture to them half the night long are not due to any normal or necessary process connected with advancing years but to some form of rheumatism which is almost invariably an infection or the result of some form of infectious disease.

"Every infectious disease that you can cross off your vital slate means five more chances on the scale of a hundred for a happy and comfortable old age. On the other hand, all the so-called senile changes may be produced at a pitifully premature period—and in actual life are so produced with painful frequency—by either underfeeding or overwork at an early age or by confinement in foul air without proper exercise.

"Careful studies and measurements have shown that our time of actual maturity and arrest of growth in physical characters, such as height, weight and chest girth, is much later than formerly supposed. Instead of reaching, as was at one time, confidently stated, our full strength at 23, and our full chest girth at 25, as a matter of fact we continue to increase slowly until 35, 38 and even 40 years of age.

"By living a healthful, active, happy life and keeping up all our interests we can grow and develop and adjust ourselves and feel that we are growing until we are one day suddenly dead, without ever realizing in any distressing or painful way that we are growing old at all.

"Already old age has gone quite out of fashion. The civilized, educated man or woman of 70 is younger than the savage of 40 or the peasant of 50. What with steady spread of regular vacations and country or suburban homes and walking clubs and golf and gardens and automobiling and travel of all sorts those who would have considered old once are now only 70 or 75 year young.

"Not only is there no definite period in adult of later life when these so-called senile changes begin, but there is no period at which they become accelerated or start to progress at a more rapid rate than before. In fact, the extraordinary paradox exists that what we term old age is the time of life in which we are growing old least rapidly. The only thing that makes it appear otherwise is that we have been steadily growing old all our lives long and the thousand imperceptible accumulations have mounted to a pitch which we can recognize."

It is not difficult for a girl to love almost any young man that her parents are willing to object to.

Misery loves company that will listen to a job lot of hard luck stories.

WHEN SUMMER COMES GUARD YOUR BABY

The summer months are the most dangerous of the year for the little one. The complaints of this season come so quickly that often a precious little life is beyond aid before the mother realizes baby is ill. Colic, diarrhoea and cholera infantum are all rife at this time. The mother must guard her baby's health every minute. She must be careful of his food and careful that his stomach is kept sweet and his bowels move regularly and freely. To do this nothing can equal Baby's Own Tablets—they are mothers best friend at all times of the year, but more especially in the summer, when, if given occasionally they act as a preventive of those dreaded summer troubles, or if they do come on suddenly the Tablets will just as quickly remove the cause and baby will soon be well again. The Tablets are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

ENGLISH SCHOOL BOYS.

Training that no Longer Fits Men for the Tasks to be Done.

For three hundred or more years the whole aim of a public school education has been to fit a boy, not for work, but for the overseeing of work. Until comparatively recently for the sons of gentlemen, and more especially of country squires, which class formed the huge bulk of the public school, there were but three careers; the overseeing of the estate itself for the eldest son; the army, which then demanded little or no expert knowledge, and the church, which amounted to the overseeing of the parish and the position of the squire's right hand man. Even when, say about the middle of the last century the merchant class began to invade the public school it was customary after a very brief period of probation for the merchant's son to take up the position of partner rather than apprentice.

To this end, therefore, that the finished product might become an efficient overseer of labor, was the whole system of education directed. And well indeed it served its purpose. I venture to say, writes a correspondent in the National Review, that never again will England see such good landlords, such good magistrates, such good clergymen or such splendid leaders of soldiery as she saw last century.

But times have inevitably changed and in the main of course for the better; at all events the design of giving a more equal chance to every human being born into the world is a great one. To be a landlord at all now is next door to a criminal offence, while in every profession the tendency is rapidly growing to have at the head of affairs those who have been through the mill from the very bottom. But one would ask, how far has the curiculum afforded by our great public schools been altered to meet this change? In the main hardly a jot, and it is almost a truism to say that an ordinary grammar school education fits a boy for the struggle of life better than six years at Eton. Here, then, we see turned out year by year a large and ever increasing class, containing in many ways the very cream of our manhood, for which there is at home an ever decreasing demand, and which, moreover, we find to our dismay our oldest and finest colonies do not appreciate.

Luckily the world is large and opportunities are great, and there still remain vast tracts of country where what are held to be the very faults of his education will prove to be valuable assets. Of such countries second to none rank the highlands of British East Africa. And why? Because it is. I venture to affirm, in the face of inevitable criticism, essentially an overseer's country.

THE CLEVEREST WOMAN.

Facts About One of the Discoveries of Radium.

Madame Curie, one of the discoverers of radium, who has been called the cleverest woman in the world, has been seeking, through a London house agent, a "little house in rural England not far from London, with a garden in which a little girl could play." These were all the particulars "the cleverest woman in the world" gave the man of business of her requirements. It seems the doctors have ordered change of air for the particular little girl in question—a small person who is the apple of her mother's eye, and of far more account than all the radium in the universe.

Madame Sklodakska Curie is still a young woman, being not much over forty. Her features are distinctly Polish, but her forehead is wider than one is accustomed to see in a woman. She is tall and well built, and her manners are a trifle distant—some call her austere. As in the fitness of things, her hair is her "crowning glory," and it is arranged in a large roll behind her head, absolutely innocent of tongs or curlpins. Again and again has society, especially Parisian society, tried to lure her into its centre, but the more it seeks her the farther she flees from it, and now society is getting tired of pursuing, and leaves her alone.

In the Forth Bridge there is a horizontal pull of 10,000 tons on the chief spans, and a weight of 100,000 tons on their bases. Half-a-dozen British ironclads might be hung upon them without causing any undue strain.

The Pill That Leads Them All.—Pills are the most portable and compact of all medicines, and when easy to take are the most acceptable of preparations. But they must attest their power to be popular. As Parmelee's Vegetable Pills are the most popular of all pills they must fully meet all requirements. Accurately compounded and composed of ingredients proven to be effective in regulating the digestive organs, there is no surer medicine to be had anywhere.

Clean Stomach, Clear Mind.—The stomach is the workshop of the vital functions, and when it gets out of order the whole system clogs in sympathy. The spirits flag, the mind droops and work becomes impossible. The first care should be to restore healthful action of the stomach and the best preparation for that purpose is Parmelee's Vegetable Pills. General use for years has won them a leading place in medicine. A trial will attest their value.

FOLLOWED.

A gentleman was once night returning hime, when he found that he was followed by a man. Not wishing to be overtaken, he hurried forward. The more he hurried, however, the more the man hurried. Coming to a church he thought that he would get rid of his follower by walking round it. He felt alarmed when he found that the man followed him round.

Summoning his courage, he sharply said: "What are you following me for?"

"If you please, sir," said the man, "I am going to Mrs. Brow's, and the porter at the station told me that if I followed you I should find her home next door to yours."

PINED FOR HER DOG.

A pathetic little story came to light the oher day in the advertising columns of the Paris, France, papers. A lady offered $60 reward for the return of a little dog belonging to her daughter. The child is an invalid. Her dog, whom she loved more than anything on earth, had disappeared, and the child was literally dying because the dog had gone. The advertisement brought no response for several days, but the other day a little girl, poorly dressed, rang the bell at the invalid's flat, and she carried the dog in her arms. She had found the dog ten miles out in the country.

THURSDAY, AUG. 3, '11

The final result of the next election will largely depend on what gains the Conservatives can make in the province of Ontario. Ontario has been appropriately called the workshop of the Dominion and with "white coal" of Niagara added to her other sources of power this province bids fair to become one of the great manufacturing centres of the world. Nearly every city and town in Ontario has been built up especially during the last ten years by the foundation and increase of manufacturing enterprises. The great American manufacturers have invested hundreds of million dollars in branch plants throughout the province. Hence there is every reason to believe that Ontario will vote overwhelmingly for a continuance of the National Policy.

Not only have our Ontario towns and cities benefitted but the farmers have prospered amazingly by the largely increased purchasing power of their home market. Few Ontario farmers have far to go in order to find a profitable and generous market for their products. Upon the reciprocity issue alone there is no doubt but that the people of Ontario are overwhelmingly in favor of the Conservative Party.

Opposition to reciprocity, however, will not be the only factor against the Government in the approaching election campaign. The Government would be glad indeed to have its past record forgotten and to have a mere plebescite upon some question like reciprocity concerning which honest and patriotic men may differ in opinion. Any issue indeed would be welcomed by the Prime Minister and his followers upon which it is possible to divide honest men.

The statement is often heard that no Government can ever be put out of power because of graft or corruption. It is true that in 1908 the Laurier Government managed to hold on to office, although scandalous maladministration of the public funds had been proved against it. But it must also be remembered that Sir Wilfrid Laurier in 1908 made a pathetic appeal to the people. He said in effect that he was an old man on the brink of the grave and that he did not like to have his public career ended by a popular verdict to the effect that his Government had been a corrupt one. He said he would only ask one term more and ask that for the purpose of cleansing the public service. His prayer was answered but no one has yet heard of the promised house cleaning. No corrupt officials have been brought to justice and no stolen money has been returned to the Treasury. The Prime Minister has apparently made no effort to implement his promise. It is marvellous that he should be so audacious as to appeal for another term when he has not kept a single pledge on the strength of which he obtained his present term of office. It is no wonder that he wants to talk reciprocity. If he has nothing else to talk about he would talk about the weather rather than discuss his speeches and promises of 1908.

One reason for bringing on reciprocity was to get rid of the naval issue. The Navy made the Government unpopular in Quebec and ridiculous in the English speaking provinces. It is a great navy but it will be a greater one before we are done with it. Those who know such matters must be amused at the Government's estimate of $15,000,000 as the cost of an entire navy. Not long ago New Zealand presented what was called her "Dreadnought" to the Imperial Navy It is in fact an armoured cruiser of the first class and not a Dreadnought at all But this one ship cost nearly $9,000,000 We are told that here six armoured vessels can be built and a flotilla of smaller vessels at an aggregate cost of $15,000,000 An efficient navy for Canada could not cost less than $150,000,000 Either the Government does not intend to make our Canadian Navy of any use to the Imperial fleet or it is deceiving the people by talking about a $15,000,000 Navy.

Statements Showing the Rapid Increase in the Live Stock Industry in Canada

The total value of live stock on the farms of Canada in 1910 was $593,768,000, which was $34,979,000 more than in 1909. The price per head of horses was $130.72 in 1910, of milch cows $42.60 against $36.35, of other cattle $30.90 against $28.81, and of sheep $6 against $5.89. Swine alone showed a drop in average price, being $11.30 per head against $11.80. The total value of horses was $293,398,000 for last year against $278,789,000 for 1909, of milch cows $126,613,000 against $103,601,000, of other cattle $131,781,000 against $127,326,000, and of sheep $15,819,000 against $15,735,000. The value of swine fell from $34,368,000 in 1909 to $31,157,000 in 1910.

The highest average price of horses was in Saskatchewan, of milch cows, other horned cattle and sheep in Ontario, and of swine in Quebec. Horses three years old and over reached the highest price in British Columbia, where the average was $225. Swine per 100 pounds live weight ranged from $6.50 in Manitoba to $9.62 in Quebec. The price of unwashed wool was 18 cents in 1910 and 17 cents in 1909 and of washed wool 24 cents for each year. These are the figures of the Dominion Bureau of Statistics.

When the Western Canadian farmers waited upon the Dominion Government in December, their leaders presented certain statistics representing their financial position. Mr. F. W. Green, for instance, referred to "The vast aggregate wealth represented by this delegation Each member of the western part of it we estimate has half a section of land valued with its equipment at, at least, $10,000. There are 30,000 in our Western organizations which means an investment of $300,000,000. If, as our friendly rivals declare, we are only 25 per cent. of the Western farmers, we would represent the enormous aggregate wealth of $1,200,000,000."

"If we reflect that the farmers who are here (Ottawa) from the Western prairies," said Sir Wilfrid Laurier in his reply, "and those whom they represent have been in the West, in their present homes, not more, on the average, than twenty years, we cannot but think that to have accumulated wealth to the amount of $300,000,000, does not argue a very bad condition of things at all. And if we reflect that the actual accumulated wealth of all the farmers of the Western prairies is $1,500,000,000, I still repeat that although things are not as good as they might be, they are not so very bad."

Deafness Cannot be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars free.

Do you know the character of the soil on your farm and the kind of crops it will produce to the best advantage? If you do not you are working largely in the dark. You may be growing one kind of crop on soil that is best suited to grow some other kind. If every farmer had an analysis made of the soil on his farm and could be told the best kind of crops to be grown on the different kinds of soil, it is safe to say that the annual yield from the land would be greatly increased. Only recently the Government appointed a commissioner to make a study of the fruit growing areas in Canada with a view to finding out which particular line of fruit culture is best suited to the different districts. The same kind of an investigation into the kind of soil on each farm or in each district would be valuable in enabling the farmer to judge what crop he could best grow. It would be a gigantic task but the idea is worth consideration.

THE STRENGTH OF A CHAIN

Is that of its Weakest Link. Father Morriscy's No. 10 Forges it Anew.

The chain of the physical system is only as strong as its weakest link. When that link breaks, the chain breaks, and serious illness followed by death often results. The weak link with many people is the throat and lungs. In fact, statistics show that over twenty-five per cent of all deaths can be directly traced to diseases of these most important respiratory organs. Weakness here is very dangerous.

During his long and successful practice, Father Morriscy, the learned priest-physician, was often called upon to treat bronchial and pulmonary affections. He soon found that it was not enough to make temporary repairs on the "link," but that it had to be forged anew, in order permanently to strengthen the chain.

After much study, he succeeded in devising a prescription that would secure this result, by not only giving prompt relief but also by rebuilding and strengthening the delicate cells and membranes of the throat and lungs.

This prescription, Father Morriscy's Lung Tonic, or No. 10, has cured thousands. It is absolutely free from any dangerous drug, being compounded from Nature's own roots, herbs and balsams.

No. 10 stops the cough, relieves the soreness and strengthens and fortifies the system against future attacks. Even in the early stages of consumption it has proved helpful, but the wise plan is to take it in time, and avoid serious disease.

In our climate it is well to have a reliable and tested remedy like No. 10 always on hand. Take it at the first appearance of a cold, and keep the chain of life strong and capable of resistance.

Trial size 25c. per bottle. Regular size 50c. At your druggist's or from Father Morriscy Medicine Co., Ltd., 90

EXCURSIONS TO WESTERN CANADA
The Grand Trunk Railway System announce that on Tuesdays, June 27th, July 11th and 25th, August 8th and 22nd, September 5th and 19th, 1911, Homeseeker's excursions will be run to Western Canada from all stations in Ontario and Quebec, via Chicago and Duluth, or via Chicago, St. Paul and Minneapolis, at reduced round trip fares.
The well-known double track line of the Grand Trunk from the east to Chicago appeals to the traveller, and with the superior train service that is offered by this line, including the famous "International Limited" from Montreal daily at 9.00 a.m., and which is the finest and fastest train in Canada, many passengers will be attracted this way. The route via Chicago is a most interesting one, taking passengers through the principal cities and towns in Canada and in the States of Michigan and Indiana. In addition to this a choice seven lines between Chicago and St. Paul and Minneapolis is offered.
Owing to the great number of Canadians, who reside in Chicago, St. Paul, Minneapolis, Duluth and other cities en route, there is no doubt that the Grand Trunk will find many patrons who will take advantage of the opportunity thus afforded them for a brief visit at the stations with their friends.
Another feature that will appeal to the homeseeker is the comfortable transfer at points like Chicago, St. Paul, and Duluth into freshly ventilated clean cars, avoiding the necessity of travelling a long distance in the same car.
In addition to the above routes, the sale of tickets is also authorized via Sarnia, and the Northern Navigation Company's magnificent Steamers across Lake Huron and Lake Superior.
For further particulars apply to any Agent of the Grand Trunk Railway System, or write to Mr. J. Quinlan, District Passenger Agent, Bonaventure Station Montreal, or Mr. A. E. Duff, District Passenger Agent, Union Station, Toronto.

Representative farmers, appointed by Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta Governments will meet and engage laborers on arrival at Winnipeg.
Free transportation will be furnished at Winnipeg to points on Canadian Pacific where laborers are needed, east of Moose Jaw and Saskatoon, including branches, and at one cent a mile each way west thereof in Saskatchewan and Alberta
A certificate is furnished with each ticket, and this certificate, when executed by farmer showing that laborer has worked thirty days or more, will be honored from that point for a second class ticket back to starting points in Ontario, at $18.00, prior to Nov. 30th, 1911.
Tickets are good only on special Farm Laborers trains, which will be run from Toronto and Ontario points to Winnipeg without change, making trip in about 36 hours, and will be issued to women as well as to men, but will not be issued at half fare to children.

Hints for Busy Housekeepers.

Recipes and Other Valuable Information of Particular Interest to Women Folks.

TESTED RECIPES.

For Thickening Soups or Gravy.—Work half an ounce of butter carefully into rather more than that quantity of flour. Stir this into the hot liquid and let it come to the boil. Cook for three minutes.

Currant Loaf.—Set two pounds of baker's dough to rise as soon as you get it. Work into it three ounces of currants, two ounces of sugar, and set to rise again. Bake like an ordinary loaf. This makes excellent bread and butter for tea.

Thick milk is peculiar with children. Boil one pint of milk and pour it on to a tablespoonful of flour, wet with cold milk, and make it into a smooth paste. Boil the flour and milk for ten minutes, stirring all the time, add a pinch of salt in cooking. Serve with brown sugar.

Hot Sauce for Chops.—After frying the chops, make a little brown sauce by stirring into the fat a dessertspoonful of flour. When browned, add a quarter of a pint of water, and stir till it boils. Add a tablespoonful of chopped piccalilli or chutney, and a tablespoonful of chopped parsley, and serve.

Baked Suet and Jam Pudding.—Into half a pound of flour rub a quarter of a pound of suet, with a teaspoonful of baking powder and a pinch of salt. Beat an egg with a little milk and make all into a batter that will just pour. Line a piedish at the bottom with jam, put this batter on the top, and bake in a steady oven for one hour and a quarter.

Queen Mary Pudding.—Take six ounces of breadcrumbs, six ounces of caster sugar, four large eggs, and one teaspoonful of vanilla flavoring. Beat the eggs and mix well with the other ingredients. Pour into a greased pudding basin and bake for an hour. Serve hot with sauce or jam.

Prune Tart.—Soak some good prunes and scald them. Remove the stones, keep the kernels, and set them with the fruit in a saucepan with a little sugar. Simmer the fruit for ten minutes, pour into a basin, and, when cooled, flavor with lemon-juice. Line a flat tin with short paste, put in the prunes and syrup, cover with pastry, and bake in a moderate oven.

Spanish Rice Pudding.—Boil a teacupful of rice slowly in about one pint and a half of milk, until the liquid is absorbed, then sweeten and flavor with cinnamon. Butter a dish, spread it with rice, then add a layer of jam; continue in this way till the dish is full. Beat up the white of an egg to a stiff froth, sweeten and flavor it, and place in the oven for twenty minutes to brown nicely.

To Pickle a Tongue.—Mix together two ounces of saltpetre, two ounces of bay salt, one ounce of sal prunella, three handfuls of common salt, one pound of treacle. Place a tongue in this, turn and rub it every day. It will be ready in three weeks, but may stay longer. A little cochineal added to these proportions improves the color. After taking out the tongue, use the pickle for a piece of beef.

Cocoa Mould.—Crush all lumps out of one tablespoonful of cocoa, three tablespoonfuls of cornflour, and two tablespoonfuls of sugar. Mix these gradually into a quart of cold milk, place in a china lined saucepan, and boil for fifteen minutes, carefully stirring. Directly the mixture begins to thicken, take the pan off the stove and beat it up thoroughly, then let it simmer only. Turn into a wet mould to set.

Osborne Pudding.—Rub four ounces of dripping or lard into half a pound of flour, half a teaspoonful of baking-powder, one cupful of currants, one cupful of treacle, and the same quantity of milk. Rub the fat into the flour, add the baking-powder, mix to a stiff dough with cold water. Roll out to a long strip, spread the treacle over, and scatter the fruit on this. Roll up as for roly-poly, and place in a greased piedish. Pour the milk over, and bake in a steady oven for one hour.

Roast Leg of Veal.—Take out the bone from a loin of veal, fill the cavity left with veal stuffing, and skewer into a good round fillet, binding it in shape with tape when half cooked. Put a paper over the fat and baste frequently till you are sure the meat is quite done, for veal requires to be very well cooked. Just before serving pour some melted butter sauce over the joint, and pour a good gravy round.

Bachelor Pudding.—Peel and chop sufficient apples to weigh half a pound. Take the same quantity of breadcrumbs, a tablespoonful of flour, two ounces of currants, and two ounces of sugar. Work these ingredients together, then moisten them with one egg beaten up in milk. Mix all thoroughly, pour into a greased pudding basin, and boil two to three hours. Turn out to serve, and pour a nice sweet sauce over.

Sheep's Head au Gratin.—Take a singed sheep's head, have it split open and thoroughly cleaned. Place in a saucepan with an onion, two carrots, and a stick of celery, add sufficient water to cover, and boil gently for three hours, or till the meat slips from the bones. Arrange the meat on a dish and press it into shape. Pour over some good brown gravy, and on the meat some browned breadcrumbs. Serve very hot with potatoes and vegetables.

HOUSEHOLD HINTS.

Never allow meat to remain in paper, or it will quickly taint.

Uncooked potatoes fried in fat, purify it better than anything else.

Raisins are easily stoned if first steeped for a few minutes in boiling water.

Stains on knives may be removed by rubbing with raw potato dipped in bathbrick dust.

Oilcloth will last for several years if well polished with beeswax and turpentine.

Hang saucepan lids on nails in an airy part of the kitchen, then they will be perfectly sweet.

Flour baked till it is well browned makes a very good coloring for gravies.

When peeling apples put them into cold water to prevent their becoming discolored before being cooked.

Boots hardened with the wet, should be lightly rubbed with vaseline to make them pliable again.

Bent whalebones can be straightened by soaking in water for a few hours, then bending into shape and drying.

A wet umbrella should never be placed ferule downwards to dry, nor should it be opened. Instead, shake it well and stand it handle downwards to drain.

A Sanitary Hint.—Pour hot strong soda water down all waste pipes every week. If this is done regularly on a certain day the pipes will be kept in good order.

Stair pads save the wear of the carpet, but they cost money. Try instead laying a thickly folded newspaper over the tread. It is most efficacious and costs nothing.

Tea-leaves will remove the odor of fish from plates and dishes. Wipe plates used for herrings and haddock, with tea-leaves before putting them into the washing-up bowl.

Picture glasses should be cleaned with a rag dipped in methylated spirit. Water is not advisable, as it is apt to run under the glass, when the damp would spoil the picture.

To clean bedroom ware which gets stained on the inside. Where there is much deposit in the water the jugs, etc., get very much stained. Empty them, and then rub well with some dry salt.

For Tin Ware.—Take a quarter of a pound of household soap, melt it with a very small quantity of water, and then stir in a heaped tablespoonful of powdered whiting to form a paste.

A striped silk blouse may be washed thus: Make a lather, not too strong; when luke-warm put in the blouse and squeeze it in the lather till quite clean. Rinse and then roll tightly in dry towel. After a quarter of an hour, iron, using hot irons. Treated in this way the color will not run.

Harness Blacking.—Melt four ounces of mutton suet with twelve ounces of beeswax, twelve ounces of sugar candy, four ounces of soft soap dissolved in water, and two ounces of finely powdered indigo. When thoroughly dissolved and mixed stir in half a pint of turpentine. Lay this on with a sponge, and then polish with a brush and cloths.

"My hair is falling out, old chap!" a solicitor confided to a medical friend. "Can you recommend something to keep it in?" "Certainly!" was the agreeable reply. "A cardboard box."

"I tell you, you can't beat my wife for presence of mind," said the man at the club, proudly. "Listen to this. One day last week an old gossip of our neighborhood called, and I left her and wife alone in the parlor. An hour later, having the impression that our caller had departed, I bounced into the room with, 'So the old cat has gone, eh?' Well, as I lifted my eyes, there was the woman herself in front of me. But my wife—bless her—was there with the goods. 'Yes, dear,' she said, calmly, 'I sent it to the cats' home in a basket first thing this morning.'"

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

INTERNATIONAL LESSON, AUGUST 6.

Lesson VI.—Jeremiah Tried and Acquitted, Jer. 26. Golden Text, Psa. 27. 1.

Verses 1-6—At some noteworthy gathering of the people from far and near, the prophet takes his stand in an outer court of the temple at Jerusalem, and proclaims words of solemn warning, mingled with proffers of mercy from Jehovah.

1. In the beginning—In the next lesson we shall come upon a time in the fourth year of the reign of Jehoiakim when the prophet's relations with the king and people reached a critical stage, and he was no longer listened to. That crisis had not yet arrived. But Jeremiah had already declared the certainty of a captivity lasting for seventy years (Jer. 25. 11). What he does in this chapter is to set forth the difficulties under which he has announced the will of God in the prophecies of the chapters preceding.

2. Stand in the court—The outer court where it would be most easy to get a hearing before the people assembling from the cities of Judah.

Diminish not a word—Through Moses, Jehovah's people had been commanded neither to add to nor diminish the message received by them from Jehovah (Deut. 4. 2). Standing as he did in peril of his life, it would be natural for the project to wish to suppress the harsher portions of his warning.

3. It may be they will hearken—Jeremiah's judgment of the condition of affairs in Judah is depicted in his arraignment of Jehoiakim (Jer. 22. 13-17). But none could more fitly have declared not only the wrath of Jehovah against a guilty people, but also the everlasting love and compassion of Jehovah, and his long-suffering. Offers of peace and pardon were still held out, but on this and another occasion (Jer. 36) the people and their leaders contemptuously refused to change their course. Compare Jer. 7.

5. Rising up early and sending—A phrase peculiar to Jeremiah and occurring frequently in his prophecy.

6 Shiloh—A town of Ephraim, central in position, which accounts for its choice by Joshua as the resting place for the ark and tabernacle. Though a town of considerable importance in the time of the Judges, it became excessively idolatrous, and so lost the ark in the days of Eli, and fell into the cruel hands of the Philistines. In Jeremiah's day it was a village of no special significance. In this way was Jerusalem to be made contemptible among the nations.

7-15—The charge against Jeremiah by the prophets and priests before the princes and people, and his defence.

7. Prophets—These were the false prophets, who, however, had the ear of the populace. They were in constant opposition to Jeremiah, both in Jerusalem and Babylon (23. 9, 28. 1, 29. 1). They succeeded in neutralizing his message with their lying flatteries.

8. Made an end of speaking—That none offered to molest him till he had concluded his address shows that, in spite of incredulity, they still cherished a half reverencording to the Mosaic law (Deut. prophet. It was only after he had done speaking that the people laid hold on him and declared that, according t the Mosaic law (Deut. 18. 20), he must be put to death. Their charge was one of blasphemy—Jeremiah had spoken without the command of Jehovah.

9. Why hast thou prophesied in the name of Jehovah?—It was incomprehensible to them that such things should befall Jerusalem as came upon Shiloh.

10. The princes—It is thought these were the heads of prominent houses of the tribes, who had brought with them to Jerusalem in a time of disorder the prestige of their local reputation. The power which they here exhibit had gradually grown up through their employment in important offices about the court, and is an evidence of the decay of the monarchy.

The entry of the new gate—this was the place ordinarily chosen for trials. For the building of this gate, see 2 Kings 15. 35.

11. Prophesied against this city—The case of Stephen comes naturally to mind. The threat of desolation to both city and temple was still fresh in the ears of the people.

12. Jehovah sent me—This was the burden of the prophet's defense. The firmness of conviction with which he faced his accusers is seen in the repetition of these words, with the additional affirmation, of a truth, in verse 15. He did not shrink in fear from the worst they might do; only he would have them remember that it was God, and not any one man, against whom they were fighting.

16-24—The princes and people take up the charges made by priests and false prophets, and declare Jeremiah innocent. The cases of Micah and Uriah are cited.

16. He hath spoken . . . in the name of Jehovah—Though the elders of Judah were doubtless worldly-minded men, yet they judged this case without the fanaticism which characterized the priestly and prophetic class. They saw that Jeremiah was in earnest and carried no brief for himself or any class, but came direct from Jehovah.

18. Micah—One of the minor prophets. His prophecies were given in the days of Jotham, Ahaz, and Hezekiah. A comparison of verse 18 with Micah 3. 12 will show that the elders of the land, representing the people in the case, were giving an exact quotation. The precedent of the action of king Hezekiah, in listening to warnings fully as stinging as those pronounced by Jeremiah, was a well-chosen one.

20. Uriah—It is unlikely this case was introduced by the elders at this particular time. It seems more probable that Jeremiah himself introduced the illustration later in order to show how great was the peril of a man who, like him, made such a prophecy against the sacred city.

Kiriath-jearim—A town on the road to Joppa, about ten miles northwest of Jerusalem. It stood on the border of Benjamin and Judah, and had for twenty years been the resting place of the ark (1 Sam. 6. 21).

23. Slew him with the sword—This arbitrary and cruel procedure on the part of the present king, was made possible by the fact that Jehoiakim was a vassal of Egypt (2 Kings 23. 34).

24. Ahikam the son of Shaphan—He was one of those sent by Josiah to consult Huldah. Later he was made governor of the land by Nebuchadnezzar. In this position he had occasion to stand by his friend Jeremiah again.

CHOCOLATE AND MUSIC.

Are Used by Swiss Prison Chief to Reform Convicts.

The convict prison of Witzwyl, in the Canton of Berne, one of the largest institutions of its kind in Switzerland, has a new governor, who is determined to introduce "reforms." In order to make the convict give up his daily allowance of tobacco and stop chewing and smoking, the governor is trying to "persuade" the prisoners to exchange tobacco for chocolate of equal value; but he admits that he has not met with much success.

The new governor also believes that music "soothes the savage breast," and he was glad when recently four wandering Bohemians, with guitars and violins, arrived at Witzwyl, under escort, to serve a short sentence. Several times a week they play in the evening to cheer up their fellow prisoners.

HOW CHINESE TRAP EAGLES.

Use Tame Birds as Decoys for Wild Ones.

Thousands of Chinese hunters trap wild eagles in Mongolia every year by the employment of tame eagles as decoys. They carry the tame eagles on their shoulders, and when a likely locality is reached they arrange nets, within which are placed large quantities of bait, usually small fish. Operating lines are stretched to a distance of about 500 yards from the nets, and when the wild birds have joined the tame ones at the feast these nets are brought into action. The value of the capture depends upon the condition of the feathers, which are used for fans. Only the largest feathers are of use, and a fan of black feathers, white near the middle, brings as high as $25.

WHAT SHE WOULD SAY.

Charles Higgins was engaged, but somehow he didn't feel altogether happy, so he decided to break off the engagement.

"Dearest," he whispered, as he sat alone with his beloved, "what would his pet say if Charlie told her that he could not marry her?"

The maiden pondered.

"His pet would say," she cooed, "that she has a big brother who is a champion boxer, and this big brother would probably make things uncomfortable for Charlie. And she would also say that she has a lot of letters that would make it very expensive for him, too."

Charlie also pondered.

"Ha! Ha!" My precious," he murmured at last. 'But Charlie hasn't said it, has he?"

"No, of course not," said the girl. "He knows better."

So they are to be married in October.

Labor is the foundation of many a fortune—but not necessarily of the laborer's.

THE NEW SIRDAR OF EGYPT

FIELD MARSHAL LORD KITCHENER APPOINTED.

He is Expected to Keep the Natives Quiet—Career of the Great Soldier.

The appointment of Field Marshal Lord Kitchener, British agent to Egypt, seems to have satisfied every one. The status of the British Agent to Egypt probably will be improved a more important title and a higher salary attached.

Command of the British troops on the Mediterranean, heretofore held by a general at Malta, will be transferred to Lord Kitchener. The home country expects him to crush with a strong hand the growing dissatisfaction of the natives in Egypt.

It was through his military genius that the army in Egypt was rehabilitated. He became sirdar, or commander-in-chief, and firmly established the supremacy of Great Britain in that country.

CROMER MAKER OF EGYPT.

Lord Kitchener's latest appointment makes him indirectly the successor of Lord Cromer, the predecessor of the late Sir Eldon Gorst, who is known as the maker of Egypt, and was British Agent and Consul-General in Egypt from 1853 to April 12, 1907, when he resigned.

Two important events occurred during Cromer's "agency" in Egypt. In 1883 the restored Khedive abolished the joint control of England and France, and on the recommendation of the British, appointed an English financial adviser. The Anglo-French convention of April 4, 1904, further removed restrictions which incumbered the management of Egyptian finance.

GOT KITCHENER THE JOB.

It was Cromer who secured the appointment of Kitchener as commander-in-chief of the Khedive's army, which was ultimately to make life and property as safe as in London as far south as Omdurman and beyond. It was Cromer who damned the Nile at Assouan, to increase the irregated area of the valley. And it was Cromer who, satisfied with the work already done, proposed in 1906 a change in the internal administration of Egypt which he believed the country was ripe for.

AS HE IS.

Lord Kitchener's services in the Boer war added to his military renown and made him the popular idol of the Empire.

A tall, lithe, clean-limbed figure, deliberate in movement, still and piercing eyes of deep blue, complexion sunburned a dull brick red, a square, cleft chin, a resolute mouth, shaded by long moustache, the face stern, cold, inflexible. Such is Lord Kitchener.

Born in Ireland of English parents, in June, 1850, his boyhood was passed in that country. Rather a bookworm than an athlete, he showed but little capacity for outdoor sports, his talents leaning chiefly toward mathematics. He entered the army as a lieutenant of Royal Engineers in 1871, and first saw service in the Franco-Prussian war, having offered himself to the French authorities, and was actively engaged on several occasions, but owing to an attack of pneumonia was invalided back to England.

BEGAN IN PALESTINE.

At the earliest opportunity he sought service abroad, and was sent to Palestine under the auspices of the Palestine exploration fund. In this work he was connected with many well-known men, such as Farrar, Holman Hunt, Walter Besant and Sir Charles Warren. After spending six years of danger and adventure surveying Palestine, which had not then been civilized by Cook's tourists, and was overrun by roving bands of robbers, he was removed to Cyprus to organize the courts and put the civil service on a firm basis. In 1879 Lord Beaconsfield appointed him one of his military vice-consuls in Asia Minor, and he subsequently returned to Cyprus and made a survey of the entire island.

MASTERED LANGUAGE.

During these years Kitchener had obtained a mastery of the Arabic language and character, which was to stand him in good stead later. When the Egyptian army was being drilled by the English officers in 1882, he volunteered his services and was appointed one of the two majors of cavalry.

When the ill-fated Gordon was shut up in Khartoum it was Kitchener who managed to smuggle through the little news of the outer world, which Gordon received, and who assiduously sent news to Khartoum northward, unfortunately in vain.

CONQUERED THE SOUDAN

In 1892 Kitchener was appointed sirdar, or commander-in-chief, of the Egyptian Army. Then commenced the conquest of the Soudan. Without a single pause the work went forward. Kitchener is never in a hurry. With rigid self control he feels the ground firm beneath him before advancing a step forward where others had used camels he conceived the idea of a railway, and turned a raid into an irresistible conquest.

IN SOUTH AFRICA.

Then came South Africa. He went out to Cape Town as Lord Roberts' chief of staff in December, 1899, when three British armies lay checkmated and confusion ruled supreme at the base. He brought order out of such a chaos of mismanagement as has rarely faced an officer. On him fell the brunt of all the secret preparations that ended in Lord Roberts' brilliant dash into the Orange Free State, the relief of Kimberley and the capture of Cronje.

The recent work of Lord Kitchener has been that of organizing the military forces of the empire.

MUNICH TO TAX CATS.

Keeping of Felines Endangers Public Health, Says Council.

Not content with having raised the cost of dog licenses from five marks to twenty marks a year, the Munich City Council has now decided to impose a tax on cats. The supporters of the new impost contend that the keeping of cats involves danger to the public health, besides frequently constituting a nuisance to the neighbors. When owners have to take out a yearly license it is thought that cats will be better cared for and that they will not be allowed to increase and multiply indiscriminately, as at present. It is thought, too, that with a lesser number of cats the wanton slaughter of singing and other small birds might be diminished.

PASS THE SALT.

"I have had many wonderful experiences," remarked the returned explorer. "But one of the most curious occurred when I was gold-hunting in California.

"I came to a valley between two mountains where I found a most wonderful echo. So deep was it that several hours elapsed before you received a reply to anything you shouted.

"It suddenly struck me that I might be able to make use of this echo to good effect, and when I went to bed that night I put my plan into execution. Before I lay down to rest I shouted at the top of my voice:

"'It's time to get up!' and, would you believe it, gentlemen, the echo awoke me at eight o'clock the next morning by shouting those identical words in my ear!"

A SAFE CURE.

"Doctor," sighed the haggard man, "I'm in a terrible state! I haven't slept a wink for nearly a week. The cat next door howls all night. Can you do anything for me?"

"Yes, I think so," said the doctor. "Let me see. This powder here will work the trick, I think You'll sleep now all right."

"Oh, thank you, doctor! When do I take it?"

"You don't take it, my dear sir You give it to the cat!"

EXPLAINED.

The milkman stood before her nervously twirling his hat in his hands.

"So," she said sternly, "you have come at last?"

"Yes, madam. You sent for me, I believe," he replied.

"I wished to tell you that I found a minow in the milk yesterday morning."

"I am sorry, madam; but if the cows will drink from the brook instead of from the trough, I cannot help it."

SERVED HIM RIGHT.

Conjuror—"My assistant will now guess without assistance how many hairs any gentleman present has on his head.'

Member of the Audience—How many are there on mine?'

Assistant—"Two million four hundred and fifty-seven thousand six hundred and twenty-four."

Conjuror—"If the gentleman will count his hairs he will see that the number is correct."

Oil for Toothaches.—There is no pain so acute and distressing as toothache. When you have so unwelcome a visitor apply Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil according to directions and you will find immediate relief. It touches the nerve with soothing effect and the pain departs at once. That it will ease toothache is another fine quality of this Oil, showing the many uses it has.

FORTUNE FAVORS THE BRAVE;

OR, A LOOK INTO THE PAST

CHAPTER XXV.

Mrs. Darnley was sitting in her charming little drawing-room, which, all dismantled as it had been when she had departed for Nice, yet looked cosy and pretty in the afternoon dusk and the fireglow. She was resting back luxuriously, glancing through a pile of letters which awaited her, one of which was from Lady Burton, giving a long and exultant account of dear Maude's engagement to the young Sir Richard Boothby, one of the catches of the matrimonial market.

"Boothby!" sneered Mrs. Darnley, as she flung the effusion into the fire. "It should be Boodle, as being nearer noodle! Poor creature! I suppose he has been caught blindfolded. Well, if all reports concerning him are true, they will be well matched—not a brain between them!"

With which kind remark Mrs. Darnley took up her tea and sipped it.

The sneer left her face after a while, and a frown came instead, contracting her smooth, handsome brows.

"After all, brains do not mean everything; if one's children are lunatics—well, they can be managed so much the better."

It had been a bitter blow to Mrs. Darnley that her son should have been so utterly crushed by Nancy Hamilton's apparent falseness and her speedy marriage, and in her heart there was a strong wave of jealousy to strengthen the dislike she had always felt for poor Nancy.

"I shall speak openly to Derrick," she mused on, "and tell him it is his bounden duty to marry Dorothy. The girl is over head and ears in love with him, and the marriage is desirable in every way. Thank Heaven that creature is safely out of his path; it was a strong measure, but a good one, and I don't regret my share in having given her a husband and a fortune."

And yet an uncomfortable expression passed over Mrs. Darnley's cold, haughty face as she said this to herself, an expression which deepened into something almost like consternation, as the door was opened at that moment and her maid announced:

"Mrs. Crawshaw."

Mrs. Darnley put down her tea cup with a hand that trembled slightly, then rose to her feet.

"Mrs. Crawshaw!" she repeated, as if doubting her ears; then suavely, "This is indeed a surprise! To what do I owe the honor of this visit?"

Nancy flung back her thick veil; her face was very pale, but calm.

"I wish to speak to you on a very important subject," she answered, quietly; "I shall detain you only a few moments. The importance of my business must be my excuse for this intrusion."

Mrs. Darnley bowed.

"Will you sit down, and may I give you some tea? Pray excuse the very bald appearance of my room, Mrs. Crawshaw, I really did not anticipate any visitors; I am returning to Nice almost immediately."

Nancy did not take the chair placed for her, she felt she must get to her subject at once. She came a step nearer, refusing with a gesture the offered tea.

"Mrs. Darnley," she said, hurriedly, "will you answer me one question? You must forgive me for putting this question to you, but my position is a desperate one, and it is no time for false sentiment.

"What question can you have to ask me?"

Mrs. Darnley spoke coldly and resentfully, but her hands moved nervously, all the same, as she replaced the tea cup on the tray.

Nancy's blue eyes rested upon her for an instant.

"I want to ask you this — were you aware of the reason which forced me to become Thomas Crawshaw's wife?"

Mrs. Darnley paused, then she prevaricated.

"This is; indeed, an extraordinary question," she said, in sharp, clear tones; "I really fail to understand you, Mrs. Crawshaw."

"Under ordinary circumstances I grant it would be extraordinary; under the present ones, no," the girl answered, feeling all at once that she was getting close to the truth. "Two nights ago my husband, in a drunken fit of madness, attempted to take my life; before he did this, however, he poured out a torrent of abuse upon me, and mingling in with this he taunted me with having been easily deceived, declaring that he had tricked me into marrying him, and that you—you, Mrs. Darnley, had helped him. I have come to you to know if this be true! If I am wronging you by asking the question, I will humbly beg you to pardon me."

There was dead silence in the room, broken only by the ticking of the clock; then Mrs. Darnley rose from her chair and faced the girl.

"And if I say that it is true," she said, with strange deliberation, "what then?"

Nancy shrank back from her.

"What—what could have made you do such a thing?" broke from her pale lips. "What had I ever done to you that you should deliberately wreck my life, my whole happiness, as you have done?"

"I will tell you what you did," the other returned, fiercely, "you stole my son's heart from me; you crept in where I should have been alone; you bewitched him, and it was necessary to save him from you."

Nancy stood motionless, speechless, and the other woman, seeing this, went on swiftly, moving restlessly to and fro as she spoke.

"I did not intend to stand by and see my son ruin himself and his career for you; if it had to be done again, I would do it. After all, what do you want more? You have money, and money can do much for persons of your status."

The insult made Nancy wince. She half turned away, but as she was going she looked back.

"I beg to tell you that my solicitors will require you to confirm what you have just told me," she said, in a quiet, very cold tone.

Mrs. Darnley started as if she had ben shot.

"What—what are you going to do?" she asked, hurriedly, for once frightened out of her calmness. "You surely are not mad enough to think you can get freedom through this?"

"Mad or no, I am going to try," was the girl's firm answer.

Mrs. Darnley gasped.

In that second, visions of disgrace, public dishonor, perhaps punishment—for if she had not actually forged that letter of Henry Chaplin's, which had been the chief instrument in working on the girl's mind, she had been a consenting and active party to the fraud — flashed hideously clear before her eyes. This must be prevented at all hazard—at any cost.

"And Derrick—have—have you no thought for him?" she murmured, huskily. "If—if you do this—I shall be disgraced, and my shame will be his shame."

A mist rose before Nancy's eyes, she paused. Then she said in a low voice:

"Your son has nothing to fear; he has done nothing dishonorable—your shame cannot touch him."

Mrs. Darnley drew a deep breath.

She had one more card left, she must play it without delay; it was a cruel, a wicked act, but there was no other escape from the net that was closing round her.

Bending forward, her face white to the lips, she looked at Nancy.

"Don't be so easily deceived," she murmured, "if I am dishonored, so will Derrick be also, since—since he too, was party to the trick, as you call it, which gave you, a penniless girl, such a magnificent fortune! Yes—Derrick stands with me in this."

"It can't be true—it can't be true!"

Nancy stretched out her hands and retreated till she reached the wall, where she rested a moment, stunned, overwhelmed with this awful statement.

The mother waited with sickening anxiety for the girl to speak, and as no words passed the strained, white lips, she spoke herself:

"Do you know why he did this?—because he wished to be free, and yet see you well cared for. He thought it was for your good to marry this other man—my son is poor and——"

But Nancy stopped her with an imperative gesture.

"Don't say another word," she said, in low, husky tones; "I—I have heard enough."

"And you will do nothing? Promise me you will do nothing."

Mrs. Darnley almost knelt in her eagerness and despair.

Nancy looked at her in silence. There was no need for words. Her eyes spoke when her lips refused to move, and after a while she turned away and walked steadily out of the room, out into the cheerless streets, with a heart as cold as ice in her young breast. Mrs. Darnley stood motionless for nearly a quarter of an hour when she was alone. Then she shuddered. She felt abased, degraded by what she had done.

"Derrick, it was for you — for you!" she whispered, and she shivered again. "What an escape!" she muttered, pacing to and fro. "But am I safe? Will she betray me?" She passed her hot hands over her eyes, then, as the vision of Nancy's face returned to her, she drew a deep breath; it was an expression of convincing relief: Derrick would never know the truth from Crawshaw's wife.

Then Mrs. Darnley started, and came to a standstill. Her quick ears had caught the sound of footsteps running up the stairs. She had forgotten until then that the hour she had appointed to see her son was near.

"He is coming," she said to herself, and with a swift movement she flung herself into her chair and took up her book.

The strong call on her nerves brought back her real self.

"How fortunate that she has been gone so long! A quarter of an hour earlier they must have met," she thought, and the next moment she was greeting Derrick with her usual cold smile, and not a sign of the humiliation she had felt so surely left on her handsome face.

* * * * *

Janet watched and waited for Nancy's return, and as hour passed hour she grew nervous.

"What can have happened?" she mused, anxiously. She stood all the time at the little window gazing down the street, and in her hand was crushed a telegram.

"Can she have seen? Can she know already?" she muttered again and again. "But it seems impossible. Who could tell her? Thank Heaven I sent that young lady at Ripstone Hall our address! If I hadn't done that we should never have known this news. Dear—dear! I wish she would come!"

And at that very moment her sharp eyes described the slender, black-robed figure walking wearily along.

"I have been nearly frightened out of my life, ma'am," she cried, as she ran to greet Nancy and draw her into the room. "Dear heart, how cold and white you look!"

And forgetful of all else, Janet began to chafe the girl's icy hands and remove her bonnet and cloak.

"I am all right only tired—only tired!"

Then Nancy's eyes fell on the buff-colored envelope Janet had thrown hastily on the table.

"What is that, Janet? What has happened?"

Her eys grew wide with fear. Was she traced already?

"Can you bear some great news, ma'am? Yes, I see you can. You are as strong and brave as a lion. You see, I disobeyed you, ma'am, and let Miss Leicester know you were safe, for I thought the poor young lady would fret her heart out, maybe, when she heard what had happened that night. I've heard from her every morning since I wrote, God bless her! and now she has sent this. Let me hold your hand, child, while you read it."

Nancy's heart seemed to rise in her throat. For one instant she could see nothing plainly, the next moment she was staring down at the written words, her fatigue, misery, Derrick Darnley's cruel treachery, all forgotten, as she read:

"Bring your mistress here at once. Mr. Crawshaw died this morning."

CURED OF CONSTIPATON

Mr. Andrews praises Dr. Morse's Indian Root Pills.

Mr. George Andrews of Halifax, N.S., writes:

"For many years I have been troubled with chronic Constipation. This ailment never comes single-handed, and I have been a victim to the many illnesses that constipation brings in its train. Medicine after medicine I have taken in order to find relief, but one and all left me in the same hopeless condition. It seemed that nothing would expel from me the one ailment that caused so much trouble, yet at last I read about these Indian Root Pills.

That was indeed a lucky day for me, for I was so impressed with the statements made that I determined to give them a fair trial.

They have regulated my stomach and bowels. I am cured of constipation, and I claim they have no equal as a medicine."

For over half a century Dr. Morse's Indian Root Pills have been curing constipation and clogged, inactive kidneys, with all the ailments which result from them. They cleanse the whole system and purify the blood. Sold everywhere at 25c. a box. 2

THE BARGAIN HUNTER.

Story of a Man Who Bought a Book from Franklin.

One fine morning, when Franklin was busy preparing his newspaper for the press, a lounger stepped into the store, and spent an hour or more looking over the books, etc., and finally, taking one in his hand asked the shop boy the price.

"One dollar," was the answer.

"One dollar," said the lounger; "can't you take less than that?"

"No, indeed; one dollar is the price."

Another hour had nearly passed when the lounger said:

"Is Mr. Franklin at home?"

"Yes, he is in the printing office."

"I want to see him," said the lounger.

The shop boy immediately immediately informed Mr. Franklin that a gentleman was in the store waiting to see him. Franklin was soon behind the counter, when the lounger, with book in hand, addressed him thus:

"Mr. Franklin, what is the lowest you can take for that book?"

"One dollar and a quarter," was the ready answer.

"One dollar and a quarter! Why your young man only asked me a dollar."

"True," said Franklin, "and I could have better afforded to have taken a dollar then than to have been taken out of the office."

The lounger seemed surprised, and wishing to end the parley of his own making, said: "Come, Mr. Franklin, tell me what is the lowest you can take for it?"

"One dollar and a half."

"A dollar and a half! Why, you offered it yourself for a dollar and a quarter."

"Yes," said Franklin, "and I had better have taken that price then, than a dollar and a half now."

The lounger paid down the price, and went about his business—if he had any—and Franklin into the printing-office.

A HYMN OF PRAISE.

Our Father in heaven, to Thee
Our hearts and our voice we raise,
For Thou hast ordained us to be Employed in the service of praise.

For us Thou dost all things provide,
While unto Thy promise we cling;
For Thou art our Keeper and Guide,
Our Father, and Saviour, and King.

A path for our feet Thou dost make;
Thou rulest the land and the sea:
We know Thou wilt never forsake
The souls that are trusting in Thee.

Help us in all knowledge to grow
And set our affections above:
And through us lead others to know
The measureless wealth of Thy love.

FALSE HUNGER.

A Symptom of Stomach Trouble Corrected by Good Food.

There is with some forms of stomach trouble, an abnormal craving for food which is frequently mistaken for a "good appetite." A lady teacher writes from Carthage, Mo., to explain how with good food she dealt with this sort of hurtful hunger.

"I have taught school for fifteen years, and up to nine years ago had good, average health. Nine years ago, however, my health began to fail, and continued to grow worse steadily, in spite of doctor's prescriptions, and everything I could do. During all this time my appetite continued good, only the more I ate the more I wanted to eat—I was always hungry.

"The first symptoms of my breakdown were a distressing nervousness and a loss of flesh. The nervousness grew so bad that finally it amounted to actual prostration. Then came stomach troubles, which were very painful, constipation which brought on piles, dyspepsia and severe nervous headaches.

"The doctors seemed powerless to help me, said I was overworked, and at last urged me to give up teaching, if I wished to save my life.

"But this I could not do. I kept on at it as well as I could, each day growing more wretched, my will-power alone keeping me up, till at last a good angel suggested that I try a diet of Grape-Nuts food, and from that day to this I have found it delicious, always appetizing and satisfying.

"I owe my restoration to health to Grape-Nuts. My weight has returned and for more than two years I have been free from the nervousness, constipation, piles, headaches, and all the ailments that used to punish me so, and have been able to work freely and easily." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

Read the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs. "There's a Reason."

THE FARM

Useful Hints for the Tiller of the Soil

THE ORCHARD.

Three years of spraying, pruning and cultivation will bring an orchard that you are ashamed of into a condition that you will be proud of.

If you think of setting out an orchard and have had no experience, better hire a good man to show you how.

If you can get a man from your neighboring experiment station you will indeed be fortunate. If not, the ntry to get the man who grows the best fruit in your country.

The inexperienced planter thinks he is getting a bargain when he buys trees three or four years old, but experience will show him that yearlings are better and he should never plant anything over two-year-olds.

Always buy clean, straight trees with short stems and even then do not be afraid to prune before planting.

POTASH AND ITS USES.

All fruit crops and most vegetables where starch is a constituent part require the presence of potash as one of the mineral elements of the soil. The only known source of potash was wood ashes when the value of this element of plant food was first recognized, but ashes now play but a very unimportant part commercially, having been superseded by the potash salts from Germany. This does not mean that they should be disdained by farmers having even a limited supply, such as comes from the fires for domestic use, but should be carefully saved and applied where most needed.

Kainit is a form of potash fertilizer which is extensively used as a direct application, especially on cotton as a specific to prevent blight, and on corn to drive away cutworms and rot lice, as a constituent of home-mixed fertilizers, and is also an ingredient of low-grade commercial fertilizers. It is not the best form in which to secure potash when it has to be shipped far, as the available plant food consists of about 12.5 per cent. of actual potash, equal to 23 per cent. sulphate, the remainder being sulphate and chloride of magnesia and chloride of sodium, all of little if any value as plant food.

It is best therefore, when a high grade article is desired, to use sulphate or muriate of potash. Sulphate of potash is suitable for every crop and soil. It contains forty-eight pounds of actual potash in each 100 pounds. It is the right form to use for tobacco, potatoes and fancy fruit and vegetables. The manufacture of sulphate is more costly than that of muriate, hence the selling price of sulphate is somewhat higher. Its mechanical condition is the best of any of the potash salts, it being in the form of a fine, heavy, dry powder.

The muriate of potash used for fertilizing purposes contains 50 pounds of actual potash in each 100 pounds, a higher per cent. of actual plant food than is furnished. It is suitable for all crops except tobacco, potatoes and a few fruits and vegetables raised for exhibition purposes. It can be applied long in advance of planting the crop without danger of loss by leaching. It is suitable for use on swamp-land, and a pound of real potash in this form costs less than in any other. At the low cost of potash, and since it may be bought direct from the importers, it seems wise on the farmer's part to "get a plenty while getting it."

This is also true in applying potash; use plenty, for it unites with other elements in the soil, forming combinations which are available for plant food, but are not quite so foluble in water as the potash alone. Of course in sandy soils the loss of any plant food is greater than in soils of a clayey nature, hence the former soils must be fertilized mostly for present needs, unless care is taken to apply barnyard manure or to otherwise fill the soil with humus. The humus question is one, however, that deserves the consideration of every farmer, whether he uses commercial plant foods or not, for decaying vegetable matter in the soil improves its mechanical condition, thus making it work easier, and it also is a medium through which the roots of plants can secure air, and, more than all, it fortifies the soil against both deluge and drought and prevents the baked condition which users of commercial fertilizers sometimes complain of, and which is so easily prevented.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN AND THE TARIFF.

Manufacturer and Farmer Should Have Protection.

It was Abraham Lincoln who gave popularity to the Protectionist side of the tariff question when he said:—"When we buy goods abroad we get the goods and the foreigner gets the money; but when we buy goods at home we get back the goods and the money." This sound philosophy characterizes another of the late President's famous homilies:

"The farmer and the manufacturer," the president once said, with his chaacteristic shrewdness, "are both in the same boat and I reckon they've got to learn to navigate the craft together or they'll upset." "He compared the case of a Pennsylvania farmer," continues the historian in question, "and a Pennsylvania iron implement maker whose properties adjoined. Under a protective policy the farmer supplied the ironmaker with bread, meat, vegetables, fruit, fodder for horses, etc. and the ironmaker supplied the farmer with all the iron, iron implements, etc., which he needed. Assuming that a change is made and the Protective policy abandoned, the farmer then discovers that he can buy his iron implements cheaper from Europe than from his neighbor, assuming that he sells a sufficient quantity of flour in Europe to enable him to effect the purchase of the iron. He ultimately discovers that the cost of carriage to the coast, transportation by sea to England, insurance and cartage on arrival, does not enable him to receive such a good reward for his labor as he formerly did when selling his flour to his neighbor, the ironmaker. He therefore, determines to sell his flour as before to his neighbor. But meantime the farmer discovers that while he has been purchasing his iron implements from Europe his neighbor, the ironmaker, has been compelled to stop his works and dismiss his employees not having sufficient work for them. The farmer, therefore, now finds that he has more wheat than he knows what to do with; also, that he is no longer able to sell his fruit, vegetables, fodder, meat, horses, etc., to his neighbor, the ironmaker, as he has gone out of business. In fact, he finds that through buying abroad in the cheapest market he has destroyed the home market for his own products and thrown a number of his fellow-countrymen out of employment."

Many a man who isn't a liar doesn't tell all the truth he knows.

Thursday, August 10th has been proclaimed Civic Holiday in Exeter by the acting reeve, W. H. Levett.

Rev. Keatle, jr., will occupy the James Street pulpit for the next few Sundays, in the absence of Rev. Hobbs, who will remain at Muskoka another month.

Rev. Mr. Raney of St. Patrick's Church, Biddulph, will occupy the pulpit of the Trivitt Memorial Church, Exeter, on Sunday next, both morning and evening.

A new comet is said to be visible early these mornings by the aid of ordinary opera glasses. The comet rises in the northeast at 1.20 a.m., and sets in the northwest at 7.12 p.m.

Messrs. McDonell & Carling are having the north part of the Pickard Block put in shape for Mr. James Beverley, who will move his furniture and undertaking business therein shortly.

Rev. D. W. Collins is taking his holidays and will be absent from the pulpit four weeks. The vacancy will however, be filled by clergymen in the neighborhood and Mr. C. Duplan of Centralia.

Mr. Harry Jennings, who has been engaged at the Rose Taylor Planing Mills, has severed his connection with the firm, and secured a position in London, leaving Monday morning to commence his duties.

Some of our merchants suggest that if our town people would do their shopping early on Saturdays they would get a much better service, and would also give the storekeepers a little chance to handle their country customers.

Thos. Sanders, who wrote at Clinton on the second part of the examination for entrance to the faculties of education at the University, is to be congratulated on his success in passing, as is also Ed. Willis, who passed Part I. of the same examination.

Hon L. P. Brodeur announces that in future Empire Day will be celebrated throughout the Empire on June 3rd, the King's birthday, and Victoria Day as a public holiday, will be abolished in Canada The passing of the old holiday will be regretted, and the 3rd of June, though by the almanac not far away, will never seem quite as appropriate a day for a holiday as the "Twenty-Fourth."

A severe lesson in honesty among those persons who find lost sums of money, articles of value, etc., is much needed. It is either not generally known, or the knowledge is disregarded, that an effort must be made publicly to restore to the loser anything picked up by persons on the street or other places, and until this is done the finder rests under the suspicion of having stolen the article in question.

Model school sessions will open on September 5 and applications for admission must reach the deputy minister by Aug 15, on a form to be supplied by him. No one will be admitted to a model school who does not not agree, if successful in obtaining a teacher's certificate, to teach thereon, in Ontario for at least the first year of his or her teaching experience. A violation of this agreement will lead to the cancelling of the teacher's certificate.

The rink of bowlers, skipped by R. G. Seldon, who went to London Tournament last week, met with the fate of many an other good rink, losing in one, two, three style. Messrs. Seldon and Taman however, entered the contest in Scotch Doubles and after eight games succeeded in getting into the finals in the second event, getting a prize of a handsome hand-painted nut bowl each. The boys played magnificently all through the doubles, and are to be congratulated on their success.

Mr. Jas. Frayne, of Usborne called the neighbors together Friday last and raised the frame work of a fine barn on his farm. The old time-honored custom of choosing sides was followed Mr. John Snell, and Mr. Dan Dew being captains. The work commenced with a rush and everything went to-gether like a clock much to the credit and mechanical skill of the framer, Mr. James Brintnell. The race for victory was taken on both sides, but Mr. Snell's stalwarts vanquished their opponents by a small margin. Mr. Frayne will have one of the best barns in the township when finished.

RECEPTION TO GRAND MASTER.—On August 17th the Oddfellows of Exeter intend tendering a reception to one of their members, Bro. S. A. Poplestone, who is now the Grand Master elect of the Grand Lodge of Ontario. The features of particular interest to the public will be the addresses to be given by prominent Oddfellows and the Band Concert in the evening on the School grounds, to which, of course, there will be no admission fee. A cordial invitation is extended to all Oddfellows and the public generally to the public reception on the school grounds. The Band Concert will be no ordinary affair as one of the best city bands will be present, and we trust all will unite in doing honor to our former townsman. Full particulars next week.

BAND ORGANIZED.—At a meeting on Monday evening of the members of the new band in their practice room, next the Town Hall, the following officers were elected,—Pres., D. B. Sanders; Vice Pres., Gordon Manns; Sec-Treas., Earl Southcott; Leader, Ed. Treble; Managing Committee., W. Hern, L. Penhale, Ed. Harness, together with the leader. The following is a list of the members, E. Treble, leader, J. Walper, T. Walper, Ed. Harness, E. Southcott, F. Sheere, A. E. Andrew, G. Manns, Herb. Southcott, L. POWELL'S BAZAAR

The Very Latest in Life and Accident Assurance.

The most liberal policy in the history of Assurance is now being issued by

The Canada Life Assurance Co'y of Toronto

In addition to the regular rates for Life Assurance the company will issue a TOTAL DISABILITY POLICY for the following rates per $1,000.00,—

Age at Entry	Annual Premium	Age at Entry	Annual Premium	Age at Entry	Annual Premium
20-33	.25c	41	.45c	49	$1.00
34	.30	42	.50	50	1.10
35	.30	43	.55	51	1.25
36	.35	44	.60	52	1.40
37	.35	45	.65	53	1.60
38	.40	46	.70	54	1.85
39	.40	47	.80	55	2.10
40	.45	48	.90

This disability provides for the assured as follows,—

Should he become wholly and permanently disabled from injury or disease so that he could not follow any gainful occupation, no further payments would be necessary; the company will assume the risk as if the premium had been paid, and if the assured so desires the policy would be paid to him in 20 annual instalments.

Without prejudice to any other cause of total disability, the company will consider the loss of sight of both eyes, or the severance of both hands at or above the wrists, or of both feet at or above the ankle, or one entire hand and one entire foot as total and permanent disability.

Also policies are now issued upon the lives of women without extra charge on the whole life and limited payment plan, as well as the endowment.

In 1910 the company allotted to policy-holders $2,000,000 in profits and have given an average dividend on premiums paid of $12.86 per cent. for the past 20 years.

The 64th yearly report recently printed, shows the Canada Life Assurance to be one of Canada's most prosperous and safest financial institutions.

TWENTY-FOURTH YEAR. EXETER, ONTARIO, THURSDAY, AUGUST 10, 1911. SANDERS & CREECH

Local Items

Don't fail to hear the London City Band on the School Grounds, Exeter, on Thursday evening, Aug. 17, on the occasion of the reception to Grand Master Poplestone. Admission free. See particulars in another column.

Mr. Rich. Welsh, of Kalamazoo, Mich., was called here Sunday owing to the serious illness of his mother, Mrs. Wm. Welsh. Owing to pressing duties he was obliged to return home immediately, leaving Monday evening.

Mr. John Delbridge of Usborne, who had the misfortune to have his hand cut off in a cutting box, has now secured a substitute. It is not so good as the old one, and never will be, but it is a remarkable piece of mechanicism in its way, and likely to add much to the comfort and convenience of the wearer. To describe it intelligently is almost impossible. It works on a system of hooks, hinges and levers, so arranged that the ordinary motions of the elbow cause them to close and grasp the desired article, or let it go. Awkward though it appears to be, its capabilities are considerable and its grasping power is very great; so great indeed that if it ever grasps human flesh it would never break away again without being torn from its fastenings. Curiously enough this invention is the product of a man, who himself, equipped with a pair, makes and sells them as a means of livelihood.

KIRKTON.

Mr. John McCurdy of Toronto, late of Kirkton is improving slowly. He is leaving this week on a visit to La Crosse, Wisconsin, in the hope that he may be benefited by his stay there.

SEA COAST RESORTS

PROCLAMATION OF CIVIC HOLIDAY FOR THE VILLAGE OF EXETER

I hereby proclaim, Thursday, August 10th, 1911, Civic Holiday for the Village of Exeter and call upon all citizens to govern themselves accordingly.

W. H. LEVETT,
Acting Reeve.

ENTRANCE TO NORMAL.

The followin is the result of the recent examinations for Entrance to Normal School, in Huron County, those names in Capitals being Exeter candidates. The appeal examiners have already examined the papers. Applications for admission to Normal Schools must be made to the Minister of Education before Sept. 5th.

The possible effect of the hot weather on the candidates writing on this examination has been fully considered and every allowance deemed necessary has been made. It is worthy of note that the percentage of successful candidates is much higher than in either 1909 or 1910.

The Greatest Treat in Years.

You are all invited to attend the Reception and Band Concert to be held on the Exeter School Grounds on the evening of August 17th, in honor of Mr. S. A. Poplestone, who has been elected to the office of Grand Master of the Independent Order of Oddfellows of Ontario. One of London's best city bands will be in attendance. An informal reception will be held at the Railway Station at 6 o'clock, p.m., on the arrival of the band, the honored guest and others. The guests will be taken to their stopping places in automobiles. A Procession will leave the I.O.O.F. Hall at 7.30 and march to the grounds. L. H. Dickson will be the chairman of the evening. W. H. Levett, as acting reeve, will welcome the guests on behalf of the town. J. G. Stanbury will welcome and congratulate the Grand Master on behalf of the lodge. Past Grand Master Bro. F. R. Blewett, K.C., of Stratford, will deliver an oration on Oddfellowship. Short Speeches and a first-class No. 1. Band Concert, such as the people have not heard in years in Exeter, will be the program of the evening. Everybody welcome; Everybody come; Everything free.

GRAND BEND

Mr. and Mrs. Jos. Brenner left Monday for Alberta, where they will visit for sometime.—Miss Pearl Zapfe and sister from Stanley visited at C. Green's Sunday.—Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Balkwill of Exeter visited here Sunday.—Messrs. E. Christie, W. Snell, S. Lamport of Exeter and Mr. Adams of Strathroy called on Ed. Gill Thursday. They were a jolly crowd.—Mr. H. Bossenberry had a horse break its leg last week, and had to be killed. He has since bought another from Sam. Grafton.—Messrs. Dadson of Hensall visited at A. Gravelle's Thursday.—Quite a number from around here went berry-picking Monday, but turned home with emply pails.—Mrs. Jno Ross was on the sick list for a few days last week.—Remember Gala Day August 17. Everybody welcome. Sports of all kinds and fire works at night.

BRINSLEY.

Injured Child Dies.—The little daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Cunningham, who sustained serious injuries in an accident some few weeks ago, by her litte brother playfully striking her on the head with a piece of board, from which protruded a nail, and which penetrated the skull to the depth of half an inch, died from the effects of the injury on Tuesday evening last, August 8th. The child at first gave every promise of recovery, but poisoning set in, followed by convulsions, strokes of paralysis and total blindness, which proved too great a strain on her little constitution and she passed away. The bereaved parents have the sympathy of all in their sad affliction.

FARQUHAR.

Messrs. John Bray, Percy Duncan and Thos. Hodgert are among those going West this week, and W. Pollen and Andrew Campbell intend going soon.—Mr. John Scott of Hibbert threshed for farmers in the vicinity last week and report wheat better here than in Hibbert, but even then it is not equal to last year.—If the weather continues good this week, will see most farmers here through harvesting.—Mr. George Coward, who had his arm bitten by a horse some time ago, is getting on well and intends going to the city for treatment for the covering of the wound.—Bethany church will hold their anniversary on Sunday and Monday, August 20th and 21st. Rev. Robert Miller, formerly of that place will conduct the services on Sunday afternoon and evening and Monday evening the usual tea will be held.

(Too late for last week.)

Miss Ettie Allen returned to her home in Stratford on Tuesday, after spending a mont visiting in this locality.—Mr. Henry Rundle met with a painful accident one day last week. He was driving a load of grain up the bank into the barn, when the whiffletrees gave way and allowed the wagon to run back and upset, Mr. Rundle in some manner getting caught and had the small bone of his ankle broken. His brother William is looking after the farm during his confinement.—Mr. Jos. Bruce has returned home, after an absence of fourteen years, during which time he has been in British Columbia and the Western States, lately mining in California. He will spend the remainder of the summer around his old home in Hibbert. Mr. Bruce thinks this a more prosperous country than the States and intends to remain in Canada in future.—Mrs. David Bruce of Cromarty got a bad shaking up last week. She was driving and when near Staffa some part of the harness broke and the horse took fright and run away, throwing Mrs. Bruce and little child out of the buggy. The little one was not much hurt, but Mrs. Bruce had a small bone in her shoulder broken, which necessitated her remaining with a friend in Staffa for a few days. She returned to her home on Sunday last and is now convalescing.

Thin Hair on Top

If Parisian Sage, the hair grower that W. S. Cole guarantees, will not cause hair to grow where the hair is thinning out, nothing on this earth will.

And we say to everybody, you can have your money back if Parisian Sage isn't the best hair grower, hair saver, hair beautifier and dandruff cure on the market to-day.

It stops itching scalp and falling hair and makes hair grow thick and abundantly, or money back. 50 cents for a large bottle. Parisian Sage makes the hair soft and brilliant and promotes growth.

T. B. Carling, Clerk.

MARVELLOUS GROWTH

Rural telephone expansion forms one of the most striking features of this twentieth century agriculture. Statistics based on the recent census in the United States are not yet available, but some figures recently published show that for the five years from 1902 to 1907, there was an increase of 449 per cent in the number of rural phones in the United States. Expansion was greatest in many of the southern states, though this may be accounted for by the fact that these were late in taking up the rural phone. In 1902 there were 226,966 rural phones in the United States, as compared with 1,464,733 in 1907. No figures are available showing the number of rural phones in use in Canada. These will, no doubt, be available after the June census is published. That they will show a very large number of phones in use in Canadian farm houses there is no reason to doubt. The movement, however, has only had its beginning in Canada in recent years, and the next decade will show a much larger development of the rural phone idea.

STEPHEN COUNCIL

The Council of the Township of Stephen convened in the Town Hall, Crediton on Monday, August 7th, at 10 a.m. All members present. Previous minutes approved.

HENRY EILBER, Tp.y Clerk.

Baseball

Centralia and Exeter Juniors played a close game of baseball Thursday evening on the local diamond, finally ending 8—6 in favor of the visitors. At the end of the ninth innings the score stood 6 all, but Centralia got two in the tenth. Austin Duplan pitched for Centralia, and Reg. Bissett did similar duty for the locals.

Alisa Craig and Exeter Juniors played a good game of ball Monday evening here, the former winning 7-5. But for a costly bunch of bad throws on the part of Exeter players the score would have been in Exeter's favor.

BOWLING

Four rinks of Seaforth bowlers took advantage of Monday being their Civic Holiday and came to Exeter to spend the afternoon on the greens. The visitors were a fine lot of fellows and the games were thoroughly enjoyed by everybody. Each rink played two 15-end games with the result that Exeter was up one point on the first round and three points on the second round. Following are the scores.—

HIGH PRICE FOR HORSES.

Mr. Larry Barry of the 2nd Concession of McGillivray delivered a team of fine geldings here to Mr. McCaig of Montreal on Thursday last, for which he received the handsome sum of $700.00. This is only one instance of many where farmers of this and other sections throughout Ontario receive anywhere, according to quality, from $450.00 to $700.00 a team for their horses, and even higher prices than these have been received right in this section. Then some people will tell us that Reciprocity will be a good thing for the farmer. The farmer would do well to study his interests at this particular time, as there can be no doubt but what reciprocity would depreciate every Canadian horse at least 25 per cent. In Huron County alone, in one year ending June 30th ,1909, the farmers sold $678,618.00 worth of horses for the great West and city markets. It has been estimated that the horse market of Ontario is worth to the farmer over $10,000,000 a year. The farmer should consider this and not allow an industry so valuable to slip through their hands just to satisfy a lot of clap-trap politicans. Then again what can be said of horses can be said of cattle, hogs, sheep, eggs, fruit and other commodities.

Hints for Busy Housekeepers.

Recipes and Other Valuable Information of Particular Interest to Women Folks.

DAINTY DISHES.

Save all cold vegetables, including potatoes, chop them, then fry together with a liberal seasoning of salt and pepper.

Rice and Raisin Pudding.—Make a rice pudding in the usual way. When half cooked add a good handful of stoned raisins, stir in carefully, cover the top of the pudding with a thin layer of breadcrumbs, and on it put little bits of butter. Bake till the rice is cooked thoroughly.

Grape jam should be made from fruit grown out of doors. Wash the fruit carefully and stew gently till tender, then pass through a clean sieve. To every pound of pulp allow one pound of loaf-sugar. Bring to the boil and cook fast for twenty minutes. Pour into pots and cover at once with egged paper. If liked, a little lemon-peel may be used to flavor the preserve.

Savory rice is a very nice change from the ordinary rice pudding. Wash three ounces of rice and boil it in milk till quite tender, adding pepper and salt. Butter a dish, spread half the rice on it, sprinkle one ounce of cheese on it, add the rest of the rice, scatter the rest of the cheese on the top, put little bits of butter over, and brown in a quick oven. The rice may be cooked in stock with a flavoring of vegetables instead of milk.

Cheese Crusts.—This is a good way of using up remains of cheese. Toast some thin slices of bread, cut into rounds of equal size, and allow two rounds to each person. Mix together two ounces of grated cheese, a tablespoonful of cream, and half an ounce of liquefied butter, with cayenne and salt to taste. Put a tablespoonful of this mixture between two croutons, press them together. Scatter parsley on each, and if you can spare it some chopped hard-boiled eggs. Make hot, and serve.

Vegetable Soup.—Place an ounce of butter in a frying-pan. Slice into it a small onion, one carrot, one turnip, and two potatoes. Stir till all the vegetables are slightly browned, then place them in a stewpan, add two tablespoonfuls of rice and two quarts of cold water. Simmer gently for one hour and a half and strain through a wire sieve. Return to the saucepan, add two tablespoonfuls of cornflour moistened with cold water. Stir continuously till it boils, then add a seasoning of pepper and salt, and serve.

Meat jelly is most nourishing for anyone who has tired of beef tea Cut two pounds of shin of beef into small pieces about the size of nuts, carefully rejecting all fat; add a little salt, place it in a covered jar, which put into a saucepan of boiling water, and let it stew gently for eight hours, adding more water to the saucepan when required. About an hour before taking it up stir in half an ounce of isinglass; strain and press through a sieve, then put aside for use. Before serving, scrape off every particle of fat that may have risen to the top.

HINTS ON CAKE-MAKING.

In every branch of cookery the greatest care must be exercised to follow the rules exactly, and ingredients must all be weighed, not thrown in haphazard quantities anyhow, but precisely in the manner indicated. Attention to little things may mean the complete success of the cake.

Everything used in cake-making must be perfectly free from damp, or the result will be heaviness and generally a "sad" condition, as Yorkshire people say.

In mixing sugar and butter heat the latter gently before beginning and in mixing eggs and sugar do not attempt to add more than three eggs without adding a little flour every now and then.

Some fruits, such as cherries, are better when rubbed with flour so as to prevent their sinking to the bottom of the tin.

Flour should be perfectly free from lumps; currants and raisins cleaned and dried.

All tins should be well buttered, and in case of scorching it is a good plan to cover them with a piece of parchment paper.

As much care is necessary in the baking as in the mixing. Sponge and all light cakes, with those small ones baked in patty tins, require a quick oven, whilst ordinary cakes of the sultana and seed species are most successful when cooked in a moderate oven. The oven should not be opened until at least twenty minutes after the cake has been put in, and if it has to be closed again it must be done gently.

When the cake appears cooked, insert a knitting-needle, and if it is perfectly clean, then the cake is done.

USEFUL HINTS.

A little lard in the starch will do much toward keeping irons from sticking to the clothes.

Save the fat from all meats and poultry and use in place of lard, except for pie and biscuit.

Steaming is far better than boiling for fish, fowl, and meat. Try this method and you will be unwilling to give it up.

To stop nosebleed—Place a piece of brown or tissue paper over the teeth of the upper jaw and the bleeding will stop at once.

One housekeeper says she puts a rolled racker into a squash pie for thickening when she has no egg, and the result is good.

To Fry Bacon Without Shrivelling—Lay strips with edges slightly overlapping in a cold fry pan and fry slowly until crisp.

When the drawers of the dresser, chiffonier, etc., stick, remove the drawer and rub the slides well with paraffin and save your temper.

A strip of emery tacked to a small square board is almost indispensable in the kitchen, for one can quickly sharpen the carving knife on it.

When stewing pears add the juice of a lemon and the grated rind, and two inches of cinnamon to every eight or twelve pears, according to size.

Wide-mouthed bottles are much better for keeping tacks than boxes. Then one can tell at a glance whether the tack is of the desired length.

A good dressing for sabbage is made as follows: One egg, one tablespoon mustard, half cup vinegar, half cup sweet milk, salt and pepper to taste.

Bicarbonate of soda should be found in every house, and in a conspicuous place. For burns there is nothing better, as it quickly relieves the pain.

Hot water in mixing batter has a tendency to make cake whiter. Sponge cake, which should be as yellow as possible, is better made with cold water.

To prevent matting from becoming yellow on the floor, wash off occasionally with a large coarse cloth which has been dipped in a strong solution of salt water.

When eggs are frozen in the winter putting them in cold water will draw out the frost. If a frozen egg must be boiled, put salt in the water and it will not run out of the shell.

Cook a can of tomatoes slowly with several slices of bacon. If already fried, all the better. Add an onion cut fine, bread crumbs, and seasoning. Makes an appetizing change.

When the knob comes off your granite pot lid, leaving a hole for steam to escape and burn your fingers, take a common screw, put up from underside, screw into a cork, and behold a new lid!

Cut new napkins apart; double them lengthwise and dip the raw edges into boiling water to the depth of one inch; then hang them up to dry without wringing. They will fold and hem easily.

Borax, in the first place, is one of the most powerful antiseptics known. When used to wash the head—as much as one can hold in the hollow of the hand to about a quart of water—it destroys dandruff.

Most culinary failures come from the habit of guessing. Weigh everything that is to be weighed and measure carefully all the other ingredients. Do this even if you have made the article repeatedly.

The poisonous articles to keep mice away are dangerous if there are children. Mice do not like the smell of peppermint, and a little oil of peppermint spread around their hiding places will keep them away.

Good Furniture Polish—Drain off your leftover coffee, and when you have a quart mix with a tablespoonful of sweet oil. Wash the furniture with this and polish with a dry cloth. If the coffee is strong it will cover all scratches.

If buttonholes have to be made on a material that frays badly, proceed as follows: Mark the position of buttonhole with a thread, then run a line of machine stitching around the thread. Then cut the hole and buttonhole it in the usual manner.

A white felt hat which is required to do duty for a second season, may be easily cleaned with powdered magnesia. Make a paste of it with cold water and lay over the soiled parts. When quite dry brush it off with a clean brush.

INTERNATIONAL LESSON, AUGUST 13.

Lesson VII.—Jehoiakim Burns the Prophet's Book, Jer. 36. Golden Text, Isa. 40. 8.

Verses 1-10—Jeremiah's roll dictated to Baruch, and read to the people.

1. The fourth year of Jehoiakim—About B. C. 605. It is likely these events occurred after Jerusalem became subject to Nebuchadnezzar. Jeremiah had already prophesied this disaster and the prolonged captivity which was to follow. The people were in a state of fear, and it was an opportune moment for the prophet to repeat the warnings which he had uttered from time to time for many years.

2. Take thee a roll . . . and write—A similar command came to Isaiah, but in his case the roll was rather a tablet, covered with wax. Jeremiah's roll was made of pieces of skin stitched together, and attached to rollers of wood on each end. On this, in columns parallel t the rollers, he was to inscribe the words of his prophecies, uttered during the twenty-three years of his public career. These utterances are recorded in the chapters which precede this one. No doubt there is a certain amount of condensation as he would have to rely partly upon memory and partly upon fragmentary records.

3. It may be that the house of Judah will hear—The same offer of pardon as was made previously (compare Jer. 26. 3). The attack by Nebuchadnezzar ought to have intensified this appeal.

5. I am shut up—Not imprisoned (see verse 19), as in Jer. 33. 1 and elsewhere, but restrained by some cause, presumably by the people's indignation over his recent predictions.

6. The fast-day—A day especially appointed in connection with the national danger.

9. In the ninth month—December. It was perhaps the first anniversary of the capture of the city. The only stated legal fast took place in the seventh month.

10. Gemariah—He was brother of the friendly Ahikam, mentioned in the last lesson. The place of reading described was one that would be most likely to bring the message within the hearing of all the people coming in from the cities of Judah at the new gate.

11-19—The roll also read in the presence of the princes.

11. Micaiah—It was in the door of his father's chamber that the book was read, and the son carried the news of what had taken place to his father, who was otherwise engaged in another chamber with the princes of Judah. For the position of these leading men, see last lesson.

12. He went down—From the temple to the king's house, which stood on lower ground. Elnathan was spoken of in the last lesson.

15. Sit down now, and read it—There are several evidences that the princes looked with favor upon Jeremiah and his attendant. Baruch's position was the one ordinarily assumed by an Oriental teacher (see Matt. 5. 1).

17. How didst thou write?—They desired to know precisely how much responsibility rested upon Baruch, and how much upon Jeremiah, in order that they might give a true account to the king.

20-26—The reading of the roll before the king.

21. Stood beside the king—Literally, "above the king," he being seated, while the princes were standing.

22. The winter-house—Both summer and winter houses were enjoyed by these people of the East. But they were almost always separate parts of the same house. In general, the inner, or protected portion of the house, was used in winter, while the external (often upper) and airy part of the house served for summer.

23. The brazier—A depression was built in the centre of the room, and this was filled with charcoal (much like a warming-pan) for heating purposes. Jehudi had unrolled only a few columns (leaves) when the king, in spite of the intercession of some of the princes, ruthlessly cut the roll into shreds with a scribe's knife (penknife), and threw it into the fire.

24. They were not afraid — The king's contempt for Jehovah's message inspired them with no terror. How different had been the conduct of Jehoiakim's father, Josiah, when the Book of the Law was found. With a sad heart he rent his garments. Through this act was proclaimed the nation's impenitence and the sealing of its doom. It was God's final proffer of mercy.

27-32—Jeremiah bidden to rewrite the roll, and to add a threat concerning the destruction of the city.

29. The king of Babylon shall certainly come. This, of course, does not mean that the Babylonian king had not come already. His attack upon Jerusalem in the first instance, a year or so before this, was by no means as severe as that which Jeremiah here predicts. The fulfillment took place in a few years, in the reign of Jehoiakim's son, Jehoiachin, and still further in the wasting of the city at the end of the reign of Zedekiah.

30. None to sit upon the throne of David—Jehoiachin, within three months from his accession, was hurried away a captive to Babylon. No child of his succeeded to the throne.

His dead body shall be cast out—The assertion in 2 Kings 24. 6 that he "slept with his fathers" is in no way controdictory to this prophecy. The same account is silent concerning his burial. The fact that Baruch included this in Jeremiah's prophecies, after the death of Jehoiakim, shows that he felt no difficulty as to its fulfillment. Kings and Chronicles both give only brief accounts of these times.

32. Another roll—Its contents are doubtless preserved for us, to a large extent, in the book of Jeremiah as we have it, chapters 1-35.

MODERN IDEAS ABOUT SLEEP.

Many Persons Take Too Much of It —The Nature of Dreams.

Sleep is no longer indefinitely considered a wandering abroad of the soul, writes Fred W. Eastman in the Atlantic, but is now known to be a temporary poisoning of the brain cells by the waste products resulting during the day from the activity of the body in general.

Thus when a muscle cell or a nerve cell acts nutritive material stored within its walls is broken down into substances that are of no value and merely impede further action of the cell unless removed. Normally these waste products are washed out by the blood stream which at the same time provides new cell food, and is finally itself purified by the excretory organs, the lungs and the kidneys.

In the course of the day, however, production is in excess of removal and then the clogging effect of these substances is manifested by fatigue in muscles and brain, the extreme degrees of which results, in the latter organ, in the inability to act, which we now know as sleep. The third of our time thus spent out of commission is therefore really due to the inadequacy of the excretory organs for purifying the blood.

Perhaps, on account of popular opinion and personal habit, we waste much time in a jellyfish condition that would be more profitably spent in active pursuit of our ambitions. The answer of course depends upon the nature of our occupation. If there is much muscular effort involved with a corresponding large amount of waste in the cells and blood, eight hours or more are probably necessary.

But if our work is of a sedentary nature and mainly of the brain there is naturally a smaller quantity of accumulated waste and less time is required for its removal. Many are the instances of great men, past and present, who have lived healthfully and worked unceasingly and strenuously on only four or five hours sleep, or half the laborer's portion.

Dreams are due to an increase of sensation and circulation over that which exists in profound sleep. Observations made upon patients with cranial defects show that when we are dreaming the brain is greater in volume than in deep sleep, and less than when we are awake. Thus this intermediate volume of blood would indicate that dreams are an intermediate stage between unconsciousness and wakefulness, and their incomplete and irregular intelligence would indicate the same thing.

This increased circulation is usually due to sensory stimulation affecting the vasomotor centre and causing a return of blood to the head, with resultant increased consciousness. Contrary to popular belief dreams in themselves do not contribute to light or broken sleep in which they are present.

Such a condition is due to the ever present stimuli, which according to their strength or the degree of irritability of the cells maintain even in sleep a varying degree of consciousness, of which the dreams are merely a manifestation. Therefore the fatiguing effect often also attributed to dreams is not due to them but to the lighter degree of sleep and less complete cell restoration which they accompany, and which are due to some irritation.

LONDON'S GREAT FUR SALES.

An interesting sight in London is one of the great periodical sales of raw skins and furs held at a fur warehouse in the city. The magnitude of the trade and the vast amount of money involved would surprise any one who visited one of these sales for the first time. At the premises in Great Queen street one can wander from floor to floor piled with thousands upon thousands of skins until one begins to wonder where all the creatures they once clothed lived.

MAKING SAFE INVESTMENTS

DISTRIBUTION OF RISK FIRST AIM OF WISE INVESTOR.

Investing Not So Easy as It Sounds —Why Farm Investments are Not More Popular—Return Too Low—Reason Small Investor Should Try Something Else.

There is, in Canada, a growing amount of capital which is seeking investment. The experience of the United States during a similar period of its existence, when the lack of investment knowledge enabled sharpers of the "get-rich-quick" type to steal hundreds of millions of dollars from the savings of the thrifty, has prompted the publisher of this paper to devote in future some space each week to the publication of investment information. To this end they have secured the services of one of the foremost financial writers in Canada to fill this column each week with general information on financial subjects in the hope that it will prove useful in helping our readers to judge for themselves the merits of investments.

The following article is introductory in nature. During the next few months the various kinds of investments will be dealt with and their good and bad points criticized. For example the merits of mortgages will be contrasted with those of bonds and investment stocks of various sorts. The proper sort of investments for women will also come in for consideration. These will not be dry, technical articles but will be interesting and simple and may save you from putting your money into losing ventures at some future time. The impartial and reliable character of the information in this column may be depended upon. The writer of these articles and the publisher of this paper have no other interests to serve in connection with this matter.

(By "Investor.")

The man who remarked, "Almost any fool can make a fortune, but it takes a wise man to keep it," was much more than half in earnest when he spoke. Keeping a fortune, or even a modest amount of savings, does not mean merely keeping it safe. A well-chosen hole in the ground will do that. But, so to invest ones money that it not only remains safe, but also brings in a substantial income, is a problem which takes much thought.

To the average man, the term "investment" has no very clear meaning. As often as not, we hear men state that they have "invested" in a mining stock, when even the term "speculation"—which involves taking a certain amount of chance—would be much too mild a word. To others, investment at once brings up thoughts of mortgages. Yet between these two extremes—the well-secured farm mortgage on the one hand, and the highly speculative mining stock on the other—lies a great field of opportunity supplying a variety of investments to suit all tastes and all requirements.

WHAT ARE INVESTMENTS?

Now, as to what constitute investments.

Strictly speaking, an investment is anything which we may buy that will bring us in an income, and retain its value, i.e., can be disposed of without material loss. Thus, the purchase of a good farm which may be leased or worked so as to bring in a good return on its cost, is an investment. But this is a very small and relatively unimportant field for the investment of our money. Not everyone has sufficient capital to buy a farm, and, as a rule, the rental of a farm is not a high enough return on the investment to make it worth while. For one must remember that out of this return sufficient must be laid away each year to rebuild all buildings at the end of, say, thirty years. Part of the return from rent represents a payment for depreciation on buildings, etc., which, despite repairs every year, come that much nearer the time when they must be rebuilt. Perhaps if they are well constructed, thirty years is too short a time to allow, but it is never unwise to err on the side of safety.

There is, however, in addition to the small return and the risks of a dishonest or unfortunate leasee, one very sound reason why a person with limited capital should not invest in farm real estate, unless, of course, he is a farmer, who intends to operate it himself, and in this case a high return on the amount invested represents to no small extent the payment to the farmer of his own salary—though many do not realize this fact—and varies in proportion with his skill as an husbandman, as any farmer knows. Everyone knows the old adage, that it is foolish to put all one's eggs in one basket; the same applies to investments, but with greatly increased force. One should never, under any circumstances, so invest money that, should a fire, a failure, or other unforeseen accident occur, all would be lost. Our capital, even if it is very small, should be distributed over a diverse field. And in this distribution, it should be remembered to make the spread cover a wide field, not only in class of investment, but in location. In this manner, for example, the failure of crops in Central Ontario would not affect mortgages held in that part of the Province; depression in Canada would not affect municipal bonds. Many other examples can be easily thought of. Therefore, in investing always aim to divide the risk. This "distribution of risk," as it is called, is the first step of the wise man who aims to keep his "fortune" big or little.

TRIALS BY WATER.

A Distinctly Unpleasant Way of Proving One's Innocence.

Throwing people into the water to let it determine their innocence or guilt was widely in use in the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries. A Synod of West Prussia forbade its use in 1745. Sporadic cases, however, occurred during the whole of the nineteenth century.

Prof. E. P. Evans wrote in 1895 of its use in Dalmatia, where in some districts it was still customary to throw all the women into the water on a specified day to see whether they would sink or swim.

A rope was attached to each in order to save from drowning those who proved their innocence by sinking, while those believed to be guilty because they floated were also rescued and made to promise to forsake their evil ways on pain of being stoned.

A traveller has described a modern survival of the ordeal used in detecting thieves in southern Russia, says the Dietetic and Hygienic Gazette. All the servants of the household where the robbery occurred were assembled and as many balls of bread were made as there were suspected persons.

A sorceress then addressed each one of the number, saying that the particular ball of bread which she held in her hand would sink or swim as the party addressed was guilty or innocent. She then flung it into the water.

Boiling water was used in ordeals by the Persians and it is referred to in the Avesto. It contained both the sacred elements, water and fire, suggesting the deluge past and the fiery doom of the future. In the simplest form of the hot water test the bare arm was plunged to the wrist in trivial cases, and to the elbow in more serious trials, usually to bring out rings or coins thrown therein.

In Tibet plaintiff and defendant settle their cause judicially by plunging their arms into boiling water containing a black and a white stone, when he who brings up the white stone wins the verdict. A King of the Goths in the seventh century, with the sanction of the Council of Toledo, recommended the boiling test for crime.

INTERIOR OF THE EARTH.

Hardly as Much Known About it as About the Stars.

The interior of the earth is scarcely more accessible than the stars to direct experimentation, and is less known through valid indirect evidence. Some information is given by earthquake shocks which, though local in origin, shake the whole earth. By collating the records of seismegraphs in various places it has been learned that the velocity of the earthquake wave is three or four miles per second in the upper strata of the earth and more than ten miles per second in the central nucleus.

The earth, as a whole, may be compared to a great spherical bell which when struck makes only two or three complete vibrations per hour. As the note emitted by a piano string depends on its length, thickness, and tension, so the "note" of the earth bell and the velocity of waves in its different parts give some indication of the state of the concentric strata of which the earth is composed.

The information thus obtained is very incomplete, and scientists have endeavored to fill its voids by means of various plausible hypotheses. A review of our present knowledge of the earth, recently presented to a French Scientific Society, contains two remarks of especial interest, concerning the variations of gravity and pressure in the earth's interior.

If a shaft were sunk vertically to the centre of the earth and an object, suspended from a spring balance, were lowered down the shaft, the weight of the object, as indicated by the dial of the balance, would at first increase, as the descending object approached the deeper and denser strata. After passing a certain depth, however, the weight would begin to diminish to the centre and it would continue to diminish to the centre of the earth, where its value would be zero, because the object would there be equally attracted in every direction.

The pressure increases enormously with increasing depth below the earth's surface. It must be about 200,000 atmospheres at a depth of 400 miles (1-10 the earth's radius), 4,000,000 atmospheres at 2,000 miles (half the radius), and more than 1,000,000 atmospheres at the centre. At such pressures the materials of the earth though heated above their melting points, are probably quasi-solid and as rigid as glass or steel. Hence the velocity of propagations of vibrations must exceed the velocity of sound in ordinary solids, such as cast iron, in which it is 20,000 feet per second.—Scientific American.

FORTUNE FAVORS THE BRAVE;

OR, A LOOK INTO THE PAST

CHAPTER XXVI.

A year had rolled away—twelve long calendar months. It was Christmas time—a good, sensible, seasonable Christmas, with frost and ice in abundance, and a clear, bright, wintry sky above.

London was very full, people were rushing here and there, bent on emptying their purses on the least provocation. There was an air of good nature prevailing; and if some por wretch stood shivering, with blue, wan face, in the gutter, the embodiment of hunger, sorrow and despair, he was, after all, in the minority, to judge by the hundreds of comfortably clad forms that hurried past him, breathing an atmosphere of peace and prosperity.

In two days' time the church bells would ring out the tidings that another Christmas was born, bidding all rejoice.

At one of the largest houses in Grosvenor Square a carriage drew up on this bright December morning, and a girl, carefully wrapped up in furs, sprang lightly out.

"Is Mrs. Crawshaw at home, Batts?" she asked of the footman who opened the door, and receiving an answer in the affirmative, she ran up the handsome staircase with all the assurance of one who was familiar with every nook and corner.

"Not in her boudoir," she murmured, putting her head in at the door of a charming little apartment. "Oh! Janet, there you are! Where is Mrs. Crawshaw?"

"You'll find her in the dining-room, miss. She's been there all the morning."

Dorothy flew downstairs again, and into the room named; there she came to a full stop.

"Well, what is happening?" she queried, as she beheld a perfect avalanche of baskets and parcels strewn on the table and the floor. "Is this an amateur grocer's shop, may I ask, Mrs. Crawshaw?"

Nancy laughed as she came forward and kissed her friend.

"You are just in time to help us, Dolly," she observed. "You have met my cousin, Darcy Hamilton, have you not?" indicating a rather handsome young man, who was apparently very busy.

Miss Leicester's manner was only moderately warm as she acknowledged Mr. Hamilton's greeting.

"So like Nancy! She has forgiven these people their neglect and unkindness to her when she was a poor little baby. Of course, they are very glad to acknowledge their relation, now she is one of the richest widows in England. Ugh! I hate them all!" So declared Dorothy, mentally, giving a vicious tug to her sable boa, as, in obedience to Nancy's commands, she removed her furs.

"Now perhaps you will tell me what all this means?" she inquired again, as she recovered her temper.

Nancy smiled. She had grown into a beautiful woman during the year that was gone. She was still as youthful and fresh as ever, but the girlish simplicity had left her face, and the traces of deep thought and sorrow lived in her wonderful eyes.

Now in her gray gown, made of some soft, clinging material, with her hair piled picturesquely on the top of her small head, it would have been difficult to find a more delightful object for the gaze to rest on.

"I am superintending the arrangement of my poor people's Christmas gifts," she explained. "They are all to be distributed to-night. I don't know what I should have done if Darcy had not offered to come and help me."

"You know I am only too delighted, cousin Nancy!" was the warm reply, spoken honestly; for, despite Dorothy's hard verdict, Darcy Hamilton was a thoroughly good-hearted young fellow, who would have fallen in love just as easily with his cousin when she had been poor and unhappy as he did now when she was a millionaire.

"It seems to me you don't want me to do very much," Dolly observed, after a few moments' chatting, as she watched Nancy giving her orders to t' two servants, who were working away like bees.

"Sit still, and let me look at you," Nancy replied, with a proud tender glance at the girl. "That is all I ask."

"You will have plenty of opportunity of doing so all next week, my darling."

Nancy looked round hurriedly.

"What do you mean, Dolly?" she asked. "You know, dear, I told you that——"

"Oh, yes; you told me plainly enough! But that makes no difference. You are coming down with us to-morrow, Miss Nancy, whether you like it or no. So there is an end of the matter!"

"Dolly, dear, it is impossible!"

"Is it—I don't think so!" Then jumping up and flinging her arms round the dainty form, "Darling, you must come—you can't refuse me—and papa—poor, lame papa—he will be broken-hearted if you don't spend your Christmas with us. We shall all be alone—only Merefield is coming, and you don t mind him. Now, you are hesitating, Nancy. Why don't you say 'yes'? Mr. Hamilton, do persuade her!"

"I will if I can. I should like her to be with you above all things, Miss Leicester. I am sure it would do her good," the young man answered, promptly.

Nancy's face wore a constrained expression; she could not bear to refuse these dear ones, and yet to go back to the Hall—was she strong enough to bear the memories that must come?

As her cousin spoke she woke from her musings.

"I am afraid I must say no, Dolly, darling; I have asked Darcy to spend his Christmas with me, now that Sir John and Lady Hamilton are away, and——"

"Oh, don't think of me, Nancy!" began Darcy.

"Is that your only excuse?" cried Dorothy. "Why, that is easily settled. Of course, Mr. Hamilton will come, too. Oh! no, no; I won't listen to anything more; I just command you to pack up at once, both of you, and be prepared to travel down with daddy and me to-morrow. Oh! how lovely it all is!" and Dorothy executed a dance descriptive of joy, which came to a premature stop as Nancy inquired, hurriedly:

"And you will really be alone, Dolly, dear?"

"Really; only Merefield. There is no one else to come; Aunt Priscilla is away, so is Derry, and Aunt Anne can't come, for the very good reason that she has not been asked. Daddy agreed with me that we would dispense with the usual crowd of cousins this year. I don't mean anything rude, Mr. Hamilton; you must put it all down to my delight at having captured this most aggravating young person. Now, Nancy, beware; play me false and—well, I won't even breathe what my vengeance will be like, or I shall frighten you into fits!"

And with the Dolly flung her arms about Nancy, and again kissed and hugged her wildly.

"And now I must go. No, don't trouble to come to the door to see me off, Mr. Hamilton; stay and help to get all this work done, or we shall be having some horrible excuse about having to remain, etc. Good-bye, darling; you have made me so happy! What! you will come, Mr. Hamilton? Well, if you catch cold, it is your own fault, and if you are ill at Ripstone you won't enjoy yourself a bit. Take care of Nancy, and——"

And so, laughing gaily, Dolly flitted out of the room, and Nancy was alone.

"It must have happened some day, I suppose," she said to herself, with a heavy sigh, as she stood gazing into the fire; "but I wish I could have refused Dolly. She thinks to make me very happy. How little she knows!"

* * * * *

Dorothy, determined that there should be no slipping through her fingers at the last moment, went herself to fetch Nancy and escort her to the station.

She found Dr. Grantley with Mrs. Crawshaw, and a spot of excitement on Nancy's cream cheeks.

"Uncle Henry has come home, Dolly!" she explained, hurriedly; "dear old Uncle Henry! I shall be so glad to see him again!"

She could never forgive herself for having been made to doubt Henry Chaplin's integrity for one instant, and her warm, generous heart turned with a double wealth of love to the weak, kind, courteous student, who had been her best and oldest friend, when she discovered how she had wronged him.

Dolly's face fell.

"And—and now you won't come with us! Oh, Nancy!" she said, with tears of disappointment.

"Oh, yes, she will," declared Dr. Grantley, decisively.

"Mr. Chaplin has gone to spend Christmas with his wife and children in ——shire, where, thanks to this good Samaritan's generosity"—with a touch on Nancy's shoulder—"he will find, let us hope, not only a comfortable, but a pleasant home."

Dorothy's face beamed.

"Oh! if Mr. Chaplin wants to see her before she returns, there is plenty of room at the Hall."

"Are you going to put up all my belongings, Dolly?" Nancy asked, with a faint smile.

"Yes," was the prompt reply, "if that will ensure you being there."

And then, after having tried hard to press Dr. Grantley to join them, and having accompanied Nancy while she went to send her uncle a loving telegram, with Christmas greetings, Miss Leicester drove off in triumph to the station, where Sir Humphrey, looking hale and hearty, despite his lame leg and crutch, and Darcy Hamilton were awaiting them.

"I expect we shall have a pitched battle between Janet and Baines," Dorothy declared, laughingly, as they were all driving through Ripstone village to the Hall, a few hours later, amid the courtesies and respectful greetings of the tenants. "You have no conception of what jealousy there is harbored in my maid's honest breast for your abigail, Mrs. Crawshaw."

Nancy made no reply. She had grown very pale and her deep-blue eyes wandered over the well-remembered spots with a look of pain in them so great that it distressed Dorothy. She said nothing, however, judging it kinder to leave the girl alone.

"It will bring back all the old horror and trouble at first," she thought to herself, "but that will soon pass."

But she had no knowledge of how much suffering this journey through Ripstone village meant to Nancy, for she knew nothing of the brief romance that had been born here in the summer that was long dead, buried and forgotten, and so she was ignorant and unconscious of how great a sacrifice of feelings Nancy had made when she had consented to join their Christmas party at Ripstone Hall.

"Welcome home, Nancy dear—welcome home!" said Sir Humphrey, as he stood, hat in hand, at the open door of his well-loved house "There's a good piece of mistletoe somewhere about, I am sure, so you must not be angry if I steal a kiss."

"Twenty if you like," Nancy answered, lifting her sweet red lips to his; then she was kissed by Dorothy, and then she found herself in a crowd of servants, who greeted her with warm though respectful words of welcome.

A mist of tears rose before her eyes, and her lips quivered, but Dolly was quick to create a diversion.

"Your old room, Nancy," she said; then, as she slipped her hand through Nancy's arm, she whispered: "Here is Baines. Now for a good free fight. I saw Janet rearing her head like a Trojan a moment ago."

The quiver turned into a smile, and the tears were bravely kept back as Baines was greeted, and then the two girls were alone in the dear, old, well-remembered bedroom.

"Oh, darling! I am so glad to have you here—so glad!" cried Dorothy, with real joy ringing in her tones. "It is like old times, Nancy. It makes me so happy!"

And then, when she had gone round and seen all was as it should be, Dorothy, anxious that Janet's feelings should not be hurt, herself went to see to the good creature's wants, and Nancy shut the door and was alone.

What a flood of memory, bitter and sweet, came to her as she stood in this little room—the unconscious happiness that preceded the birth of love—the few brief hours of ecstasy—the shock that cut that ecstasy short—the mental agony that followed. How it all came back to her! The gardens and grounds that had lain bathed in the summer sunshine now stretched cold and barren in the winter's rime before her—a fit emblem of her desolate heart.

(To be continued.)

THE AMEER'S VENGEANCE.

When Sir Charles Euan-Smith, who died not long ago in England, was in the market place of an Afghanistan town he was fired at by a native. He lodged complaint with the Ameer, who appeared to take no notice of the incident, merely remarking, "That's all right." Sir Charles complained again and met with the same reply. He still thought that the Ameer was treating a serious matter with less consideration that it deserved, but thought it advisable to say no more on the subject. About a week afterward he was invited by the Ameer to ride with him. They rode for some distance outside the town and passed gibbet after gibbet. At length Sir Charles said: "Your Highness has been busy of late." "Oh, no," replied the Ameer, "they are your little lot." He had taken all the members of the would-be assassin's family and hanged every one of them.

NIAGARA DISTRICT NEEDS PROTECTION.

Enough Peaches in Georgia Alone to Supply America.

The relationship between Canada and the United States as regards the fruit industry, and the manifest need of a Protective tariff for Canadian fruit growers have been clearly shown in a series of articles by Dr. George Charles Buchanan of Beamsville, Ont., President of the Ontario and Western Co-operative Society. Dealing with the Niagara peninsula Dr. Buchanan says:—

There are in the Niagara Peninsula about 350 square miles of land on which fruit can be well grown, not counting such districts as Ancaster and Dundas. Between Toronto and Hamilton there is another 100 square miles; in all at least 288,000 acres.

Not all of this is peach land, not even probably 20 per cent. of it. But very little of it is of no use for any fruit. Much can be made fine peach land by drainage, or good apple, plum or grape land; some is only good for berries, but all of it is in a good fruit climate. The unplanted land is waiting to double or quadruple in value, whenever the market demands more fruit.

It may be assumed that the value of this land for general farming is not over $100 per acre, and that for fruit purposes it is worth $500 per acre; although much of the peach land is worth $1,000 per acre; and that where it has to be drained, draining will average about $20 per acre.

It can further be stated that peach land at $1,000 per acre is known to pay a good return on the investment in the hands of practical growers. If we take the very low estimate of 10,000 acres planted at $500 per acre we have a value of $50 000,000 for the orchard and berry lands.

Now as our home market grows, and in our home market we have no competition, every acre of this 288,000 has potentially the same value, and fully half is unplanted.

There are in Canada about 8,000,000 people, the United States claim 93,000,000. However that may be, our present soft fruit acreage is fully equal to supplying Canada. It is safe to say there is not over 12,000 acres of peaches in Eastern Canada. If this supplies 8,000,000 people it would take 150,000 acres to supply 93,000,000 people, but there are 180,000 acres of peaches in Georgia alone.

ANGRY SAMOAN WOMEN.

Armed With Whips and Sticks They Attacked a Male Critic.

The latest news from the South Seas brings a story which illustrates, in a fashion at once comic and serious, the chief difficulty of the German empire-builder in Samoa, to wit, the readiness of the German settler to intermarry with the native women. The white population of the German colony is about 500, and there are already about 1,100 half-castes. Of the twenty married German officials, no fewer than twelve have Samoan wives. As the native girls nearly always speak English and refuse to learn German, the frequency of these mesalliances causes particular disquiet in colonial circles in the fatherland. In April last a German settler named Michaels took it into his head to express these truths in a letter to the colonial newspaper, adding that quite apart from race considerations the Samoan women made inefficient and unworthy wives. Seldom has an author had more gratifying proof of his power to arouse interest and inspire action. The very next morning a deputation of several hundred Samoan women of various shades waited upon him armed with whips, sticks, and gardening tools. The police were just in time to rescue Michaels by taking him into custody. But the dusky amazons scored in spite of the police, for the authorities had to bundle their calumniator out of the island as the only means of preventing serious trouble.

HOW FIREFLY LIGHTS.

To find out just how and why the tiny firefly is ableat will to transform itself into a living lamp a series of very interesting experiments have just been conducted by F. Alexander Dermott and Charles G. Crane of the Hygienic Laboratory of the United States Public Health and Hospital Service in Washington. The investigation necessarily called for consderable delicate microscopical study of the light producing organs of the firefly. It was found that the insect produces its light by oxidation, that is, by practical combustion.

A woman who visited the British museum recently inquired of an attendant: "Have you no skull of Cromwell? I have been looking all round for a skull of Oliver Cromwell." "No, madam," replied the attendant. "We never had one." "How very odd!" she exclaimed; "they have a fine one in the museum at Oxford!"

Useful Hints for the Tiller of the Soil

FEEDING COWS FOR MILK.

In ninety-nine cases probably out of a hundred where cows in a herd are not producing satisfactory profits the results are due to a lack of system in the management. In the first place the breeding of the herd may be at fault, but this is not always a criterion, and the farmer is not justified in jumping to hasty conclusions. The cow is really a machine for the purpose of turning roughage, meal, grass, roots, etc., into milk. One does not know whether or not a machine has profitable capacity until it is put to the test. If a farmer weighed the milk of his herd of, say, ten cows and fed the cows alike, he might come to the conclusion that all the cows were doing well, or he might come to the very opposite conclusion, that they were all unprofitable. In both cases he might be wrong. The only correct basis on which to estimate the yield of a herd of cows is individual performance. Then he knows that certain cows are making good use of the food they consume; others are making poorer use, and perhaps still better use. As soon as the question of individual production is solved he is at once in possession of the data necessary to determine whether or not he is feeding the cows, so they will have a chance to show what they can do. Many farmers feed cornstalks, hay and some roots, and expect their cows to yield large quantities of milk. Often the quantity of hay is limited, and the whole ration is wheat bran, cornmeal and oil-meal mixed equal parts by weight. This should be fed twice daily. Each cow should receive as many pounds of this grain ration a day as she produces pounds of butter fat in a week. For example, if a cow produces nine pounds of butter fat in seven days she should be fed nine pounds of grain a day, or four and a half pounds night and morning. If one does not know how much butter fat his cows are producing or how much milk each individual yields he is in the dark as to how each should be fed. When the meal ration is setled, then the roughage, whatever form it takes may be fed with a liberal hand. If the ration be well balanced good cows will do justice to themselves and yield profit to their owner, even on dry feed.

HOW MANY TO AN ACRE.

The number of cattle to be grazed per acre must be determined by the experience of the farmer himself. Under no circumstances is overstocking to be practised, if the supply of grass proves defective, sell offff the supernumerary animals; if the feed be abundant, buy more stock or convert the excess of grass into hay. It is an undecided question whether it is right or not that cattle, sheep and horses should be allowed to feed together in the same field. There are many farmers who will have no such trinity, and others who positively object to sheep. Twelve of the latter to the acre is the rule. By horses, are understood, not working horses that are too worn out to roam about in search of food, and that prefer the soiling plan, but colts which are all for play and disturb the other occupants. Cattle do not bite the grass clean; sheep eat the heart out of clover, thereby killing it; they also pick out their food daintily; the horses nip, as it were, between both. Sheep fold the soil, which is no small gain, but are not liked by either cattle or horses. There is still another matter to be decided and which influences the number of cattle to be maintained. Are they to be soiled or left to graze? The latter is the least troublesome, but fewer head can be kept. In soiling the green stuff must be cut twice a day and left some hours to heat down. That implies a great deal of carting away manure. But then there will be more stock supported. If the cattle be left out during the summer nights in a paddock that outdoor relief will be prized. The milking can take place in the stable as well as in the field. In the rich grass land of Normandy the cattle are there fed by the picket plan. Every animal has a tether of six or nine yards that works on a swivel, so that this surface of fodder must be fed bare; the herder changes the sweep of the tether twice a day. At night the animals are housed. The water is specially supplied from pumps to the troughs.

A FINE MEMORY.

Blinks, after inviting to dinner his friend Jinks, who had just returned from abroad, was telling him what a fine memory his little son Bobby had.

"And do you suppose he will remember me?" said Jinks.

"Remember you? Why, he remembers every face that he ever saw."

An hour later they entered the house, and, after Jinks had shaken hands with Mrs. Blinks, he called Bobby over to him.

"And do you remember me, my little man?"

"Course I do. You're the same fellow that dad brought last summer, and ma was so cross about it that she didn't speak to him for a whole week."

LUCKY MISTAKE.

Grfocer Sent Pkg. of Postum and Opened the Eyes of the Family.

A lady writes from Blookline, Mass.:

"A package of Postum was sent me one day by mistake.

"I notified the grocer, but finding that there was no coffee for breakfast next morning, I prepared some of the Postum, following the directions very carefully.

"It was an immediate success in my family, and from that day we have used it constantly, parents and children, too—for my three rosy youngsters are allowed to drink it freely at breakfast and luncheon. They think it delicious, and I would have a mutiny on my hands should I omit the beloved beverage.

"My husband used to have a very delicate stomach while we were using coffee, but to our surprise his stomach has grown strong and entirely well since we quit coffee and have been on Postum.

"Noting the good effects in my family I wrote to my sister, who was a coffee toper, and after much persuasion got her to try Postum.

"She was prejudiced against it at first, but when she presently found that all the ailments that coffee gave her left and she got well quickly she became and remains a thorough and enthusiastic Postum convert.

"Her nerves, which had become shattered by the use of coffee have grown healthy again, and to-day she is a new woman, thanks to Postum." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich., and the "cause why" will be found in the great little book, "The Road to Wellville," which comes in pkgs.

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

The Times last week contains a little squib in which it states that the late Sir John A. Macdonald in his last election address was in favor of Reciprocity. Our contemporary in its overwhelming desire to show that Sir John favored Reciprocity in his last election campaign is willing to go to any length, but we challenge The Times to prove their statement. Their quotations from Sir John's addresses were not from 1891, but from a much prior date, when as everybody knows, all Canadian states men were more or less in favor of reciprocity. Their reference to a climb-down on our part is pure twaddle, and on a par with the small boy's saying "your another", simply because they could not answer our arguments. In 1891 Sir John was decidedly opposed to reciprocity, notwithstanding any quibbling on the part of the Times, and they cannot deny it without perverting the truth. They windup with the absolutely silly statement that Reciprocity will mean a reduction of taxes to the amount of $7,000,000, and that two markets are better than one. There is not the least foundation for the statement that there will be a saving in taxes, and the two market argument applies to the advantage to be gained by the United States, who have millions more to sell than we have.

It is reported some good flash-lights were taken of the Jully crowd.

WOULD NOT HELP CANADIAN WHEAT

Free Trade of No Benefit to the Producer Here, as the United States Has a Surplus Production

The possibilities of Canada gaining through free trade in wheat with the United States were shown in the following extract from an article published a fortnight ago in The Toronto News:—

"So far as wheat is concerned, and it is the chief breadstuff that United States would like to get from Canada, our neighbors do not need Canadian wheat for their own consumption. Their chief purpose in getting free wheat from Canada would be to export it through their ports, and to use it for milling purposes, thus benefiting their own courses of transportation. Prices would not be helped in any way, because the United States has a surplus production of wheat that will make that country an exporter of flour and grain for the next hundred years. The following figures show how the volume of wheat production is increasing in the States:—

	Bushels
1908	634,000,000
1909	664,000,000
1910	737,000,000

"In connection with these statistics showing the increase in the total annual yield of wheat in the United States it is most important to note the words of Mr. C. L. Olmsted, chief of the Bureau of Statistics at Washington, who has just recently issued the results of a study of the subject of population and subsistence. He contests the view that agricultural production will fail to keep pace with the growth of population, and he shows that the agriculture of the United States, after passing through a phase of decadence, incident to the exploitation of new land, has obtained a secure footing in the contrary direction toward improvement.

"The general trend of production per acre was a declining one during the two decades 1876-1885 and 1885-1895, but in the decade 1896-1905 and from 1906-1909 the mean production per acre has steadily increased. Mr. Olmsted shows that the mean production per acre for the four years, 1906-1909, has increased over the preceding ten years as follows:—

Wheat (per acre)	9.6	per cent.
Corn "	7.1	"
Rye "	6.5	"
Buckwheat "	4.6	"
Potatoes "	15.5	"
Tobacco "	6.7	"

Death of Miss Earl. It is our sad duty this week to record the death of a much esteemed and respected resident of this neighborhood in the person of Miss Carrie Whilemena Earl daughter of the late William Earl of Usborne. The deceased has been a long and patient suffer. Miss Earl was first afflicted with King's-evil which afterwards developed into cancer. About a year ago she was operated on at the London Hospital for the removal of the trouble, but this only brought temporary relief. Soon her condition became serious, her affliction on times being almost unbearable, hence death came as a happy relief to her sufferings. Miss Earl was highly respected by all who formed her acquaintance and deep sorrow prevails at her death. Besides her mother She is survived by five sisters and two brothers. She was aged 35 years, 11 months and 21 days. Funeral to-day (Thursday) at 1.30 to the Exeter cemetery.

Deafness Cannot be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars free.

A Real Lung Tonic

Rev. Father Morrisey

There are many preparations that will relieve a cough—few that will cure it. The first class, containing such drugs as Opium and Morphine, simply deaden the irritation and stop the cough, but do little or no permanent good.

"Father Morrisey's No. 10"

does not contain a trace of these dangerous drugs, but is an absolutely safe and scientific preparation of Nature's own remedies—Herbs, Roots and Balsams.
It entirely removes the irritation that caused the cough, by cleaning out the mucus, stopping the inflammation and healing the delicate membrane of throat and lungs.
Moreover, it tones up and strengthens the whole system, particularly the lungs, and protects against future coughs and colds.
Trial size 25c. per bottle. Regular size 50c.

THREE NATIONS ARE UNITED

Pacts Between Britain, France and United States Signed at Washington

A despatch from Washington says: In President Taft's study in the White House on Thursday afternoon a remarkable scene was enacted, when France, Great Britain and the United States pledged their faith in the substitution of arbitration for bloodshed in the settlement of all international disputes.

The two treaties—the first of their kind ever entered into between any two nations of the world—were signed shortly after 3 o'clock on Thursday afternoon. The informality and simplicity of the ceremony added to its impressiveness.

Copies of the treaties were lying on the President's study table as Mr. Taft and Secretary Knox and the representatives of the two European Governments entered the room.

Secretary Knox and Mr. James Bryce, the British Ambassador, seated themselves on opposite sides of the table. President Taft stood on Secretary Knox's right and near him were Viscount De Saint Phalle, vice Consul of the French Government at New York, and second Secretary Ovey, of the British Embassy, who witnessed the signatures of their Governments.

Secretary Knox had provided a special pen for th occasion, but Mr. Bryce picked up one at random, and finding its point not to his liking, reached for another. Then he bent over the treaty, and Secretary Knox followed his example. There wa no other sound in the room as the pens scratched over the parchment. Mr. Bryce laid down his pen first and extended his hand to the President.

Secretary Knox then laid aside the copy of the Anglo-American treaty and nodded to Viscount De Saint Phalle. The latter moved up closer to the desk and witnessed the signature as Mr. Knox's pen scrawled over the second document.

President Taft immediately after the signing of the treaties affixed his signature to the messages of transmittal which completed arrangements for sending the pacts to the Senate.

The entire ceremony did not extend over an hour.

SUCCESSFUL ORGANIZATION

OF BIG CANADA BREAD COMPANY

Mr. Cawthra Mulock of Toronto Announces Plans for Establishment by New Company of Modern Plants in all the Larger Cities of Canada.

Toronto, Aug. 7 (Special).—The establishment of another large industry for Canada will result, from the negotiations closed here today by Mr. Cawthra Mulock, for the organization of Canada Bread Company, Limited. The company will have modern bread manufacturing plants in Montreal, Toronto and Winnipeg, and it is the intention to arrange in the near future for the erection of plants in all the other larger cities of the Dominion.

The company, when immediate plans of extensions and new plants are completed, will have a weekly output of 1,000,000 loaves, giving it an annual production of about 50,000,000 loaves.

According to announcement made here to-day by Mr. Cawthra Mulock, included in the new company are five of among the largest bread manufacturing companies in Canada, among them being the Bredin Bread Company of Toronto; Stuart's, Limited, Montreal; Geo. Weston, Limited, Toronto, known as the "Model Bakery"; W. J. Boyd, Winnipeg, and H. C. Tomlin, Toronto, known as the Toronto Bakery Company. The businesses taken over have all grown from very small beginnings, and are to-day among the most successful in their respective fields in the country. The services of the men who have made the different businesses pre-eminently successful are being assured to the new company, Mr. Mark Bredin, head of the Bredin Bread Company, Toronto, and regarded as perhaps the most successful bread manufacturer that Canada has yet had, will be general manager, while the Board of Directors will include Geo. Weston, President of Geo. Weston, Limited, H. C. Tomlin, of the Toronto Bakery Company, and W. J. Boyd, of Boyd's Bakery, Winnipeg. Canada Bread Company, Limited, is at the outset being placed in a very strong financial position by the sum of $1,000,000 being placed in the treasury to provide for the erection of new plants and the extension of the present ones, and, at the same time, supply ample working capital.

When seen to-day, Mr. Mark Bredin, the General Manager, pointed out that the new big bread company, with its modern up-to-date plants, would be in a position to turn out a more uniform and better grade of bread, while the systematizing of the distribution will insure to the company the saving of enormous sums that are now being wasted, owing to the customers of the different bakeries being very largely spread over all sections of a city.

CHOLERA IN ITALY.

Official Report of Cases and Number of Deaths.

A despatch from Chiasso, Switzerland, says: An official communication from the Italian Government shows that from July 21 to July 26 inclusive cholera cases were reported as follows: Naples, 68 cases and 20 deaths; province of Naples, 157 cases and 78 deaths; town of Palermo, 130 cases and 64 deaths; province of Palermo, 75 cases and 38 deaths; province of Avellino, 7 cases and 3 deaths; province of Benevento, 3 cases and no deaths; Calltanisetta, 11 cases and 4 deaths; province of Campobasco, 5 cases and 2 deaths; province of Caserta, 30 cases and 14 deaths.

RADIAL CARS IN COLLISION.

Motorman, Conductor and Several Passengers Injured.

A despatch from Hamilton says: A very serious accident occurred about 10 o'clock on Wednesday night near station twelve on the Hamilton Beach, where two radial cars collided. The accident occurred during a heavy fog, which hung over the beach all night. Car 305 was standing at station twelve, when car 307 ran into it. Motorman Staver and Conductor Moore of the rear car were badly injured, and several passengers were also bruised. The rear of car 305 and the front of car 307 were demolished. The injured men were taken to the City Hospital.

N. Y. CITY POPULATION.

Passes Five Million Mark, According to Census Figures.

A despatch from New York says: The population of New York city passed the five million mark on August 1, according to figures prepared by the Health Department. The statistician estimates that the city now has 5,000,400 residents, a gain of about 230,000 for the past year. The official figure of the United States census for 1910 was 4,706,883.

NEW ENEMY OF POTATO BUG.

Beetle Discovered Which Will Exterminate Other Pests.

A despatch from London, Ont., says: Edward H. B. McKone, a science teacher, of this city, has discovered what he believes to be a new species of beetle so far as this country is concerned, and which will in time wipe out the Colorado beetle, better known as the potato bug. The new beetle resembles a milk leaf beetle, and it preys upon potato bugs, destroying many of the pests in twenty-four hours. It was found in a potato field near Devizes, a short distance from London, and it is said that where the newcomers were plentiful the Colorado beetles were scarce. Several specimens have been sent to the Ontario Agricultural College, Guelph.

HAT AND COAT ON ENGINE.

Tragedy Discovered and Body of Victim Found Mangled.

A despatch from St. John, N.B., says: The finding of a man's hat and coat on the cowcatcher of a locomotive which was being cleaned at Moncton on Thursday told the tale of an awful accident. A search revealed the body of a man lying near the track at Sunnybrae, a suburb of Moncton, in a fearfully mangled condition. The bones of the leg were forced through his trousers, both legs were cut off, and the trunk so badly crushed that identification was impossible.

A despatch from Montreal says: William Brennan, who claimed to have no permanent address, was on Thursday morning fined $500 or three months in jail on a charge of peddling cocaine in the streets.

OWNS PART OF HAMILTON

London Man Advances Claim to Three Hundred Acres

A despatch from London, Ont., says: If what David Welch, of 580 Dufferin Avenue, says is true, he owns a large-sized chunk of Hamilton, and he is going to try to recover what belongs to him right away. Welch says he holds deeds to 300 acres situated in the heart of the Ambitious City, which is part of a grant made by the Crown a century ago to one Caleb Reynolds. The balance of the grant changed hands legally, but Welch, whose wife is an heir of Reynolds, claims that the 300 acres referred to were not sold, but were squatted upon, and that the present deeds are not good. The land is situated along Burlington Bay, and includes much property, a rough estimate of the value of which is $20,000,000. Caleb Reynolds was a United Empire Loyalist, and after losing everything in the American Revolution, he came across the border, and the Government made him a grant of several hundred acres.

OTTAWA RIVER IS LOW.

Water is Twenty-One Feet Lower Than in May.

A despatch from Ottawa says: An examination of the lockmaster's book showed the startling fact that the water in the Ottawa River had sunk about twenty-one feet since last May. Last May the water stood twenty-eight feet eight inches in the Ottawa River. Since that time it has been sinking rapidly, until now the water stands at seven feet eleven inches, and bids fair to go much lower if there is no serious rainfall. In the Ottawa River it has not affected navigation so far. In the Rideau the water is extremely low, and it may become dangerous for the boats of the Rideau Lakes Navigation Company to make their trips.

WANT BEST APPARATUS.

Montreal's Fire Department Will Have New Equipment.

A despatch from Montreal says: The Board of Control has taken steps to have the city's fire department the most up-to-date in America, the latest being to call for tenders for five automobile fire-fighting machines and two of the latest steam pumps. They will increase the efficiency of the brigade by one automobile truck to haul the aerial ladder, one automobile truck to haul the 1,200 gallon steam engine, one combination engine with a capacity of 1,000 imperial gallons, one auto hose wagon to carry 1,000 feet of hose, one auto waggon to carry 2,000 feet of hose, one 1,000 United States gallon steam pump, and one 800 United States steam pump.

NEW VARIETY OF WHEAT.

Only Ninety-five Days Between Seeding and Cutting.

A despatch from Brandon, Man., says: Unless there is something freakish about the growth of the new unnamed variety of wheat just cut at the Experimental Farm, farmers will undoubtedly be much interested in this grain. This new variety of wheat was sown at the Experimental Farm in April and was cut on July 31, so that there are only ninety-four or ninety-five days between seeding and cutting. Last year Marquis wheat, which is a very early variety, occupied one hundred and seventeen days between seeding and cutting, and Red Fife was one hundred and twenty-three days. If the new variety, which is not yet named, lives up to the record it has this year, farmers may find it a much more suitable variety for the country than is other spring wheats.

"There is no doubt about it," said Mr. Noter, "he is a cultivated musician." "And what is your idea of a cultivated musician?" asked his friend. "One who plays things you don't care to hear, and talks about them in a way you can't understand."

MANY ATTRACTIONS.

Two Weeks of Solid Enjoyment at C. N. E. This Year.

The Canadian National Exhibition of 1911 fairly bristles with special attractions. The Coronation Procession, an exact reproduction of the London pageant, features the bill, but it has a close competitor in the Festival of Empire with its hundreds of troops in all the varied uniforms of the service and its twelve military bands to furnish the necessary music. The aquatic events, too, are important, comprising two international yacht races, an eight-oared race between the all-conquering Argonauts of Toronto and a picked crew from the crack New York clubs, a single scull race between Butler, champion of America, and Scholes, winner of the Diamond Sculls at Henley, war canoe races, and motor boat races. Add to these the acres of exhibits, the machinery in motion, the horse races and athletics, the vaudeville and fireworks, and the thousand and one other attractions of the Big Fair, and it must be admitted that two week's solid enjoyment have been arranged for the hundreds of thousands of visitors.

HUGE MINING CONCERN.

An $8,000,000 Company Organized by Hammond.

A despatch from Dawson City, Y.T., says: The biggest mining concern ever organized for the Yukon, excepting the Yukon Gold Mining Company of Guggenheim's, is a new eight million dollar company reported from London by cable as having been formed by South African Gold Field Company's capital, on advices of John Hays Hammond. It is believed here that the concern takes extensive holdings on Union Quartz and other creeks organized during the last two years by Arthur N. Treadgold in his giant fight against Yukon Gold. It is also reported that the company absorbs the Northern Light, Power & Coal Company, which invested three million some years ago, installing electric power. Treadgold had already acquired vast holdings of the Canadian Klondike Mining Company, including the Boyle Concession & Dredges.

TELLER FOUND DEAD IN BED.

Revolver Beside Him, But Cause for Suicide Unknown.

A despatch from Lethbridge, Alta., says: Hugh B. McLaughlin, teller and accountant of the Molsons Bank at Diamond City, was found lying dead on a bed in his room at the rear of the office on Wednesday night by D. C. Morrison, Manager, when he returned from lunch. A revolver lying beside McLaughlin showed the cause of death, but whether it was through suicide or accidental is uncertain. No cause for suicide is revealed, as the teller's accounts are correct.

HAMILTON ASYLUM BUILDING

Modern Fire-Proof Two-Storey Structures May Replace Old Style

A despatch from Hamilton says: It is quite possible that the disastrous fire at the Insane Asylum, which caused the death of eight patients, will result in a complete change of policy in the erection of asylum buildings. The old three, four, and five-story structures will likely give place to two-story modern steel fireproof buildings with iron stairways and a balcony around the exterior of the second story, the same as a number of asylum buildings in the States. Provincial Architect Heakes discussed the matter with Building Inspector Anderson and Col. John S. Hendrie. Chief Ten Eyck says that if there had been a balcony around the top floor of the building here more lives would have been saved, as it would have been easier for the men to run up the stairs and rip off the screens. As it was, many of the firemen had to risk their lives climbing along the coping on the outside to get to windows where patients were penned up. Attention has been called to the fact that the asylum hose was rotten, bursting at almost every length under the pressure.

POLICE DESTROY WHISKEY.

Three Hundred Bottles Confiscated and Sellers Fined.

A despatch from Porcupine says: Three hundred bottles of confiscated whiskey were destroyed on Wednesday morning by the police authorities. C. Demetro was fined $100 and costs for selling liquor without a license, and P. Fister was fined $200 and costs for the same thing. Napoleon Giroux skipped his bail for the same offence, which the authorities have collected; it was $250.

TRIED TWO DOCTORS WITH NO BENEFIT

Then Dr. Williams' Pink Pills Wrought a Lasting Cure

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills have made so many remarkable cures in serious cases that people are liable to overlook their value as a tonic for the blood and nerves in debility and general run-down conditions. That such conditions are the cause of much misery and unhappiness is fully known to those who suffer from them and the need of curing them is as vital as is relief from diseases with higher sounding names. We commend the following statement to any one suffering from weak, thin blood, or shattered nerves. Mrs. Mae Macabe, Gleichen, Alta., says: "A few years ago I became run down, not seriously ill, but just tired and weak all the time. I consulted our family doctor, who gave me tonic after tonic with no effect. I gradually got weaker and weaker until I could not do my work. Then I went to another doctor, who pronounced my case one of decline, and recommended a warmer climate with complete rest. This I could not afford, and I began to worry and fret, until I became a complete nervous wreck. One day while visiting a neighbor an old gentleman who was taking Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for partial paralysis recommended them to me. I sent out and got three boxes, but without much faith that they would help me, but before they were gone I noticed an improvement and I continued taking the Pills, constantly growing stronger, until I had taken seven or eight boxes, when I was completely cured. I could do my work as easily as ever I had done in my life, and the doctor told me that he could scarcely believe the change in me, as he had not had the least hope that I would be strong again. Now I always keep the Pills on hand and if I feel fatigued or weary take them for three or four days so as not to get run down."

Sold by all medicine dealers or by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

"What a hideous ruffian the prisoner is," whispered the old lady at the police-court. "I feel quite afraid when I look at him." "Hush!" said her husband. "That's not the prisoner. That's the judge!"

A Pill That Lightens Life.—To the man who is a victim of indigestion the transaction of business becomes an added misery. He cannot concentrate his mind upon his tasks and loss and vexation attend him. To such a man Parmelee's Vegetable Pills offer relief. A course of treatment, according to directions, will convince him of their great excellence. They are confidently recommended because they will do all that is claimed for them.

REST AND HEALTH TO MOTHER AND CHILD.

MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP has been used for over SIXTY YEARS by MILLIONS of MOTHERS for their CHILDREN WHILE TEETHING, with PERFECT SUCCESS. It SOOTHES the CHILD, SOFTENS the GUMS, ALLAYS all PAIN; CURES WIND COLIC, and is the best remedy for DIARRHŒA. It is absolutely harmless. Be sure and ask for "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup," and take no other kind. Twenty-five cents a bottle.

QUITE TRUE.

"Worry wears out more people than work does," said the ready-made philosopher. "Of course it does," replied Mr. Growcher: "for the simple reason that so many of us would rather put in our time worrying about work than doing it."

HORSEFLESH IS CHEAP.

Is Eaten by Poor People of Most European Countries.

The sending of British commissions and delegations to Germany to investigate material conditions has been all the fashion. Political parties and leagues and societies advocating this or that have had inquisitors ransacking the fatherland from frontier to frontier, and their findings have been embodied in tons of reports, some instructive, but most of them unconvincing and stupid.

Hundreds of "Free Trade Leaguers" and "tariff trippers" have sought the secret of German prosperity, and their junketings have produced deductions wonderfully expressed, as might have been expected, the predilections of the visitors have found ample support as a consequence of the investigation. Free traders discovered that Germany was not prospering because of protection, and vice versa. Employers of labor invariably learned that the toiling masses were poorly paid and worked more hours than at home. In fact, every investigator seemed to discovers what he wished to find. Nearly every delegate published his "report" with the result that England has had a plague of leaflets. Hundreds described what they believed they saw, but one tripper tersely told what he did not see, and this was the best report of the avalanche. Here is what he said of Germany: "No unemployed standing at street corners. No drunkenness or brawling. No hooliganism. No slums of poverty, as in England. No discourtesy. No begging or hawking. No deformed persons. No land out of cultivation. No ragged children. No late trains."

The alarming discovery was made that thousands of poor subsist on horseflesh, and, to prove the horror, scores of investigators brought home the public advertisements of horseflesh merchants. These produced an outburst of righteous indignation. About a hundredth part of the meat eaten in Germany is horseflesh. It is sold openly as such, and it is held to be wholesome and palatable, and is rigidly inspected by health officials. Probably every Continental country has people who eat horseflesh on account of its cheapness (in Germany it sells at 8 or 10 cents a pound). Other British investigators pounced upon the black bread as unfit for human beings, comparing it detrimentally with the armor-coated loaves of rural England.—Review of Reviews.

A Powerful Medicine.—The healing properties in six essential oils are concentrated in every bottle of Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil, forming one of the most beneficial liniments ever offered to the use of man. Thousands can testify as to its power in allying pain, and many thousands more can certify that they owe their health to it. Its wonderful power is not expressed by its cheapness.

THE CRY "HURRAH!"

"Hip! Hip! Hurrah!"—the distinctly British cry—is surprisingly modern. The "Hip!" and the "Hurrah!" do not seem to have come together before the nineteenth century. In the eighteenth "Hip!" amounted to just "Hi!" or "Hullo!" while "Hurrah!" was then usually "Huzza!" It is very like the Cossack shout "Ora!" but it is supposed to have been a German cry of the chase, adapted by German soldiers to war, and borrowed from them by the British, perhaps first of all at the time of the Thirty Years' War. "Hurra!" is said to have been the battle-cry of the Prussians in the War of Liberation (1812-13). Still, the curious fact that seventeenth and eighteenth century writers call "Huzza!" a sailors' shout lends support to the conjecture that it may really have been the hoisting cry, "Hissa!"

A husband was being arraigned in court in a suit brought by his wife for cruelty.

"I understand, sir," said counsel, addressing the husband, "that one of the indignities you have showered upon your wife is that you have not spoken to her for three years. Is that so?"

"It is," quickly answered the husband.

"Well, sir," thundered the counsel, "why didn't you speak to her, may I ask?"

"Simply," replied the husband, "because I didn't want to interrupt her." Case dismissed.

HIS BIT OF LUCK.

After suffering a roaring toothache for fourteen days, Tommy consented to visit the dentist's.

"But he'll kill me!" asserted the nervous youngster on the verge of tears. "I know he'll kill me!"

But it was a case of choosing between two evils.

He went with his nurse, and when he returned, greeted his mother beamingly.

"Not dead!" bantered mamma.

"No," answered Tommy; "'cos just before the dentist killed me the toof came out!"

A BIT TOO BAD.

"You look very tired," remarked James to his friend Pilson.

"I'm nearly dead," replied the tired one. "Last night I didn't get a wink of sleep because Johnson's cat was howling so."

"Couldn't you do anything?"

"Wait. I got up, opened my window, and heaved a boot at the cat, just as Johnson came out to bring the cat in."

"Wasn't that all right?"

"No. The boot hit Johnson, and he threw it back over the wall and broke my cucumber frames. But that wasn't the worst."

"What happened then?"

"Why, he went back indoors and left the cat howling away outside!"

Bill was a Far West cowboy, and noted for his craftiness. It was impossible to trust him. He got finally into the toils of the law, and at his trial he pleaded guilty.

He did well, for the case against him was strong and irrefutable. Nevertheless, the jury in its verdict declared him innocent.

The Judge was thunderstruck. "Innocent!" he said. "Innocent! But the man himself pleads guilty!"

"We know that," said the foreman of the jury, "but he is such a liar that we can't believe him!"

BREAD MANUFACTURING INDUSTRY ESTABLISHED ON SOUND BASIS

Canada Bread Company, Limited, With Its Plants in Larger Cities of Canada Will Have Output of 1,000,000 Loaves Per Week, or Annual Production of 50,000,000 Loaves. Company is in Strong Financial Position.

Toronto, Aug. 7 (Special).—It was a happy suggestion for the consumer of bread which was made to Mark Bredin, of Toronto, some time ago, which suggestion, taking root, has, with the co-operation and financial assistance of Mr. Cawthra Mulock, resulted in the formation of the Canada Bread Company, Limited.

It was only to be expected that sooner or later scientific and sanitary methods would be adopted in the manufacture of the most essential article in the diet of the nation, namely, bread. When one considers the enormous improvements which have been made during the past decade in nearly every branch of industry, he is simply astonnded that such an important industry as that of the manufacture of bread should so long have been neglected. In the iron industry, the textile industry, and in scores of other industries there has been introduced during the past few years specialization and standardization. Economies have been effected either through the merging of various interests in such a manner as to distribute operating costs over an enormously larger output than previously, or by various methods which the pressure of competition or the strenuous methods of modern life have brought about.

It would almost seem as though the only business to be neglected was the most important and basic industry of all, namely, that of the manufacture of bread.

LARGE CAPITAL REQUIRED.

That success would attend the efforts of anyone having the capital and the courage to adopt modern methods in the conduct of the bread industry was a foregone conclusion, but for some reason or other, although the idea had frequently been discussed and several efforts were made towards the end referred to, all of these came to nought until Cawthra Mulock, co-operating with Mark Bredin and other enterprising bread manufacturers, devised a plan to bring together several of the largest and most up-to-date plants in the city of Toronto. In order to get the full advantages for the purchasing department, it was advisable to bring in also as many of the businesses in other cities as were acceptable, the result being that a large Montreal bakery and a large Winnipeg bakery were included.

COMPANY IN STRONG POSITION.

The Canada Bread Company starts with an enormous advantage over any other business of a similar character in the Dominion of Canada. At the outset is its enormous requirements, and the advantages which will result in the purchasing department. In a business which expects to shortly consume such enormous quantities as 520,000 bags of flour, 364,000 pounds each of compressed yeast and malt extract, and 572,000 pounds each of shortening and sugar, to say nothing of coal for fuel, it can be readily appreciated what advantages will accrue in the matter of discounts and cost of material. It should not be forgotten, also, that the business starts with an ample capital to accomplish its financing in the most advantageous manner. After paying for the various plants which are being taken into the consolidation, $1,000,000 will remain in the treasury of the company for the carrying on of the business and for further extensions, from time to time, to plants, as the same may be decided upon.

Great as these advantages may be, they are not one whit greater than those which will accrue from the adoption of scientific methods of manufacture and from the proper systematizing of deliveries. As may readily be imagined, the cost of fuel is one of the principal items in the cost of bread. Few, however, who have not paid some considerable attention to the question, will be aware of the enormous saving which can be effected through the use of the modern oven—one in which one batch of bread may follow the other without refiring the furnace. It is stated on the best of authority that the employment of these "continuous ovens" reduces the cost of fuel from 15c. per barrel of flour to 8c per barrel.

The probabilities are, however, that the greatest saving of all may be effected in the matter of delivery. It would appear that the wagons of the average small bake-shop deliver an average of 1800 or, say, 2000 loaves of bread per week. It is a certainty that the Canada Bread Company will deliver at least an average of over 4000 loaves per week.

These particulars go to show what necessity there was from the standpoint of the consumer for such an organization as the Canada Bread Company, and, at the same time, what profits there will be from the standpoint of the shareholder. With such economies as referred to above, it is not difficult to see that an enormous future is in store for the Canada Bread Company. Because of the adoption of the latest type of machinery and most modern systems, it will not only be able to supply a better quality of bread, but the cost of production and delivery will be enormously reduced. It is the expectation of the directors that, from time to time, plants will be established in other centres and that the plants already taken over in the cities of Toronto, Montreal and Winnipeg will be added to at the earliest possible moment.

The company with its existing plants and those which will be immediately erected in Montreal and Winnipeg will shortly have a weekly output of 1,000,000 loaves, giving it an annual production of over 50,000,000 loaves.

Citizens can let the cows run at night, horses can be let run or tethered at pleasure on the street, bicyles can be ridden on sidewalks, signs can be extended over the street if the merchants so desire, but one thing people cannot do, namely, gather in a group and sing Now the singing by a chorus of our boys has been much enjoyed by music loving people, but somebody lacking an ear for music has complained and the Chief has acted.

Huron County House of Refuge is run the cheapest of any refuge in Ontario and much of this is due to Keeper and Mrs. Mutch for the able manner in managing this Institution. The average weekly cost per inmate is the lowest but this by no means follows that the inmates are poorly fed as we have been informed that dinner and supper, the year round, is practically never the same, and to look at the inmates will show that appearances show that good meals are always served. Maintenance $6,598.29; inmates 87; cost 99 3-4 The highest cost per inmate per day is that of Northumberland and Durham counties, $4.47; and the lowest excepting Huron is Leeds and Grenville $1.37

Mr. David Tait of St. Paul, Minn., was a few days the latter part of the week shaking hands with old friends. In reviewing the history of his younger days it happens that just one-quarter of a century ago (August 4) "Dave" won the seventy-five yard foot race against Jas. Quirk, Wm. Boyd and A. Robinson, all famous sprinters. "Dave" could certainly go some in those days, but avoirdupois has played such a prominent part in his make-up in later years that he could only qualify now in the fat man's race.

Mr. John Holman, whose home is in Salem, Oregon,, but who has been on an extended tour throughout the United States and Canada is now visiting relatives and friends in and around Exeter, the object of his visit being to attend the Old Boys' Reunion at London and he was the first to sign the register in that city as a London old boy. When in London last year Mr. Holman promised to be in attendance at the re-union and he has made good, having come all the way from Santiago, a distance of 3835 miles. The Cause of Constipation

Constipation is, in some cases, the direct result from a torpid, or slow-acting liver, brought about by the withholding of the flow of the bile. This condition is commonly allied with more or less indigestion and dyspepsia, partly due to the constipation itself.

Many persons have found it comparatively easy to overcome such conditions with a treatment of

Rexall Liver Salts

In our judgment we feel that this preparation is remarkably well fitted to overcome these conditions, and recommend them to you with the understanding, that any money you may have spent with us for the preparation will be refunded in case there are no beneficial results.

Local Items

The man who makes himself at home doesn't necessarily make the home.

Mr. and Mrs. Simon Campbell and daughter Miss Vera returned Tuesday evening from a two months' visit in Regina.

We are indebted to Mr. W. H. Wenzel of Crediton, who is now on a prospecting tour throughout the west, for a copy of a Saskatoon paper.

Mr. Geo. Mantle, who has been conducting a flour and feed business in connection with coal and wood, will discontinue the former and will continue the coal and wood business in the old stand.

HICKS' FORECASTS FOR AUGUST.—A regular storm period covers the 20th to 25th, central on the 22nd. Earth's autumnal equinox will bear on this period, Moon being in perigee and new. Tidal dangers and equinocial storms are indicated for the gulf regions at this time. A seismic wave is also coincident with this storm period, central on the 23rd. Prematurely cool weather and frosts are apt to occur over much of the interior and north during the period from the 20th to 26th.

BOWLING TOURNAMENT.—On Thursday and Friday of next week, August 24 and 25, the Exeter Lawn Bowling Association will hold their first tournament, open to rinks from any club in the world. Three events will be played in the rink competition, for which valuable prizes will be given. In addition the "Bawden Trophy", a large and handsome silver cup, presented by Mr. S. G. Bawden, will go to the winners of the first event, to be held for one year. The trophy when won three times by one club becomes the property of that club. Twelve greens are being put in first class condition, and it is expected that a large number of rinks will take part in the competition.

SCOTCH DOUBLES—Mr. James Bawden last week presented the Bowling club with two handsome gold watch chains for a local competition in Scotch Doubles. The first draw was immediately made and it is desired that the whole competition be completed this week.

DRANK BLUE VITROL.—Mr. James Willis of Exeter North on Wednesday of last week made an unfortunate mistake, which might easily have proven fatal. He was assisting Mr. James Jeckell, London Road North, in his farm work, and desiring a drink he proceeded to find a bottle of cider, which was there for the purpose, but unfortunately he got hold of a similar bottle containing blue vitrol, and took a mouthful before he found his mistake. A doctor was immediately summoned and a stomach pump put in operation. Relief was at once given and with the exception of a sore mouth and throat Mr. Willis was in a few days enjoying fair health again

DEATH OF MRS. HARVEY.—There passed away at the home of her son-in-law Mr. W. J. Howey, on Thurs. last, an old and much esteemed resident of Usborne in the person of Caroline Wakelin, widow of the late Richard Harvey who passed away after a comparatively short illness caused by an accident About five weeks ago Mrs. Harvey while going down a short stair fell, with the result that her hip joint was fractured. At the time the fracture was reduced it was expected she would recover, but seemingly her advanced age was against her, and after a period of intense suffering she passed away. She had been visiting the different homes of her relatives in this locality and had just about completed the rounds when the accident happened. The late Mrs. Harvey was a native of England and came to Canada when quite young first settling near Bowmanville. Early in her twenties she married her late husband, Richard Harvey, who predeceased her a little over eight years. Shortly after their marriage they moved to Usborne, where she has continuously resided ever since. She a kind hearted neighbor, a good wife and mother and commanded the respect of all who formed her acquaintance. She was the mother of thirteen children, ten of whom are living. She is also survived by three sisters. The funeral took place to the Exeter cemetery on Saturday.

The Greatest Treat in Many Years

You are all invited to attend the Reception and Band Concert to be held on the Exeter School Grounds on the evening of August 17th, in honor of Mr. S. A. Poplestone, who has been elected to the office of Grand Master of the Independent Order of Oddfellows of Ontario. One of London's best city bands will be in attendance. An informal reception will be held at the Railway Station at 6 o'clock, p.m., on the arrival of the band, the honored guest and others. The guests will be taken to their stopping places in automobiles. A Procession will leave the I.O.O.F. Hall at 7.30 and march to the grounds. L. H. Dickson will be the chairman of the evening. W. H. Levett, as acting reeve, will welcome the guests on behalf of the town, J. G. Stanbury will welcome and congratulate the Grand Master on behalf of the lodge. Past Grand Master Bro. F. R. Blewett, K.C., of Stratford, will deliver an oration on Oddfellowship. Short Speeches and a first-class No. 1. Band Concert, such as the people have not heard in years in Exeter, will be the program of the evening. Everybody welcome; Everybody come; Everything free.

GRAND MASTER S. A. POPLESTONE

We notice by the minutes of the recent Oddfellows Grand Lodge Meeting at Niagara that in addition to Bro. S. A. Poplestone holding high office, Bro. Perry T. Coupland of St. Marys is the Grand Warden, and Bro. R. S. Crocker of Toronto, formerly of Exeter, is the Grand Marshall. The report of the finance committee showed a strong growth, and that the order in Ontario was never in a better condition. Sixteen lodges were instituted during the year, and at the end of June there were 383 lodges, having a membership of 40,000.

THE EXETER SCHOOL

The Exeter School Board announces the re-opening of the High School or Continuation Class Section for Monday, September 5th, at 9 a.m., when all intending students are desired to be present. The aim of the board is to provide a thorough education for the various walks of life—Commercial, Industrial and Professional, and to train carefully those under their care for a good, true, and honorable Canadian Citizenship.

The course covered is complete for Model, Normal and University Entrance. Special emphasis is given to the Commercial department. Students are given a complete Commercial training.

As a rural High School full attention is given to the special needs of the farmer and artisan.

The School stands government approved, and is thoroughly equipped as to play grounds, labratory needs, library and staff. The work has received full approval from both public and continuation inspectors. The results at the last departmental examinations rank the Exeter School among the first in the Province.

The staff remains, with one change, as before, and stands for the H. S. Section as follows,—W. B. Weidenhammer, B.A., honor graduate of Toronto University, Specialist in Moderns and English, takes charge of Moderns, Higher English, Mathematics and Science; Miss E. M. Robb (First-class) Classics, English, History and Reading; Miss M. Campbell (First-class) the Commercial and Junior Work. The H. S. Section is open to all who have passed the H S. Entrance, and parents and guardians are asked to see that registration of students is made with the least possible delay. For information as to Courses apply to the principal.

BARN BURNED

The barn owned by UMr. Wes. C. Huston, and leased by Mr. Wm. Robinson on the 3rd con. of Stephen, was struck by lightning during the electrical and rain storm early Tuesday morning and was burned to the ground, together with the contents,—a large quantity of pressed straw, owned by Mr. W. T. Colwill, which had been pressed and packed in the barn the previous day. The barn was not much used, consequently there was no insurance on it. The loss to Mr. Colwill is considerable.

MAKING SAFE INVESTMENTS

WHAT CONSTITUTES THE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN BONDS AND STOCKS.

Various Securities in Which We Invest—Bonds and Shares Product of Modern Times—Explaining Difference Between Bonds and Debentures—How Bond Interest is Paid.

This column is written with the sole aim of supplying reliable information for the us and protection—in financial matters—of the readers of this paper. Its impartial and reliable character may be depended upon. The writer of these articles and the publisher of this paper have no other interests to serve in connection with this matter.

Excepting purchases of real estate and loans secured by real estate mortgages, most investments are represented by what are generally known as "securities." Thi term includes bonds, stocks, debentures, shares and all manner of documents to show in what you have invested your money. Sometimes even, as in the case of Canadian bank stocks, you liave nothing to show, your name and number of shares entered in the "stock ledger" being the only evidence of your interest.

Two centuries ago, if a Sir William Mackenzie had conceived the idea of building a great railroad like the Canadian Northern, he would have found it impossible to have raised the money. There were at that time few, if any, fortunes of eighty million dollars (which the road has cost). No one had thought of the idea of dividing up into small amounts the indebtedness of a company desiring to borrow money on a mortgage. In short, it could not have been built unless the King and Parliament had undertaken it.

Then, too, if a miller wished to build a flour mill requiring a large amount of capital, he would have had either to have put up the money himself or taken in some partners. He could not have taken in many, for it would have been too cumbersome under the old laws. Moreover, the idea of our joint stock companies had not been thought of.

Now-a-days, however, it is quite different. Lawyers have learned that mortgages can be subdivided into equal parts each part as secure as the whole, and involving no very great expense. In this manner a railroad can mortgage its property, just as an ordinary individual can. But the railroad, instead of one mortgage, can issue for its huge indebtedness a large number of small mortgages, running from $100 up to $5,000 (or, in fact, any amount) in face value. These small mortgages are called bonds. Most bonds contain on their face a copy of the mortgage of which they form a part, and are personally signed by the necessary officers of the railroad. Most bonds, too, have attached what are called "coupons," which are small certificates of interest, which are cut off and cashed—at any bank—on the date when the interest is due. Bonds, of course, may be issued by all kinds of companies. Governments and municipalities, too, issue them.

The word "Debentures" is in many cases used in reference to bonds. Strictly speaking, however, a debenture is a promissary note not secured by a mortgage. They, like the bonds, are divided into small amounts, and are issued for money borrowed, just as a man gives his note to a bank when borrowing.

Thus we see that bonds are merely mortgages, and mortgages, as everyone knows, are "promises to pay," secured by land or some other valuable, marketable object. Debentures, too, are promises to pay, but often without any security whatever, other than that involved in the financial standing of the issuing company. Shares of stock, however, are quite different. They involve no promise on the part of the issuing company to repay the amount they represent. When you purchase shares in a company you become a partner. In the old days, when a man started a business, he had to put up all the capital himself, or gather together a few partners to help him out. Now, however, a company requiring a million dollars to operate will issue ten thousand shares, each representing one ten-thousandth part of the proprietorship of the company—that is, a $100 interest. These proprietors (which the shareholders actually are) cannot demand the repayment of the money they have put into the company any more than an ordinary partner can demand his money back from his other partners in a business. He can only get his money out by selling his share in the business to someone else. Just so with the shareholder, except that in the case of many of our large joint stock companies there is a regular market for these shares, which are bought and sold daily at a price determined largely by the amount of shares to be sold, and the number of buyers and their eagerness to buy.

The chief point to be remembered is that shares of stock are not at all like bonds, for, as we pointed out above, bonds are "promises to pay," and must be repaid at a fixed date, while shares involve no such promise.

There is one other feature, too, in which bonds and stocks differ. Most bonds carry a fixed interest payable at regular dates. Stocks do not carry any interest. Their return consists in a division of profits after all obligations of interest, costs of operation, etc., are provided. They may carry no "dividend," as the payment is called, or they may carry a large one; but it merely represents a division of surplus profits. Bond interest, on the contrary, is a fixed charge, and must be paid, or the mortgage on the company may be foreclosed.

PURPOSES OF COMPANY

Canada Bread Company, Limited, has acquired as going concerns the plants and businesses of the Bredin Bread Company, Limited, of Toronto; Geo. Weston (The Model Bakery), of Toronto; H. C. Tomlin (Toronto Bakery), of Toronto; Stuarts, Limited, of Montreal, and W. J. Boyd, of Winnipeg. In the case of Boyd, the real property is excluded, but a parcel of vacant land in the City of Winnipeg, about two acres in extent, is substituted. The first three companies have been in operation for almost thirty years, and the last two for close to twenty years. They have all grown from small beginnings till they are now among the largest in their respective fields in Canada. The combined output of the companies at present is, approximately, 600,000 loaves of bread per week. It is intended, by extensions to the present plants and the erection or acquisition of new plants, to forthwith increase the output of the Company to one million loaves per week, with other extensions to follow in the other large cities at a later date.

POSITION OF BONDS

For full particulars, reference may be made to our prospectus, which is accompanied by a letter from Mr. Mark Bredin, the Vice-President and General Manager of the Company. We draw attention to the following points:

1. The present $1,250,000 of 6 per cent. First Mortgage Sinking Fund Thirty-year Gold Bonds are secured by Trust Deeds to Guardian Trust Company, Limited, Toronto, constituting a first mortgage on all the property, real, personal, or mixed, now owned or hereafter acquired by the Company, as more fully described in said Trust Deeds. In the Trust Deeds it is specially stipulated that of the $1,000,000 cash being placed in the treasury, the sum of $500,000 shall be held by the Trustee, to be used only in the redemption of bonds or in investment in additional plants and real estate, thus increasing the fixed assets under the mortgage. A Sinking Fund of 1 per cent. is operative from August 1st, 1911.

2. The assets of the companies already taken over stand in excess of all liabilities and without any allowance for good-will, trade marks, etc., at $841,428.70. There has also been placed in the treasury $1,006,221.08 of cash, which, besides furnishing funds for the purchasing or construction of additional plants, will provide ample working capital.

3. The earnings of the present plants, as per certificate of Messrs. Price, Waterhouse & Co., after allowing for depreciation, amounted from April 30th, 1910, to April 30th, 1911, to $107,016.14, to which may be added $35,000, being interest at the rate of 3½ per cent. on $1,000,000 cash in the treasury pending its employment on extensions. It is estimated that, with the economies to be effected, the earnings on these plants will shortly amount to $180,000 a year, or nearly two and one-half times the bond interest.

4. With the extensions that it is proposed to effect forthwith, the Company, by the end of its first fiscal year, should be in a position to show earnings of $260,000 a year, equal to three and one-half times the interest requirements on the bond issue, and with all the additional plants that will be provided with the cash now in the treasury, the earnings should steadily gain to over $530,000 a year, or more than seven times the bond interest requirements.

5. The Company, with its plants situated in the larger cities of the different provinces of Canada, will be in an exceptionally favorable position to benefit by the marked economies that will be possible in manufacturing and, more especially, in distribution, and all the time will be turning out a more uniform product under the most sanitary conditions.

6. The practical men who have made the different companies particularly successful will be identified with the management and direction of the new Company. Mr. Mark Bredin, who is probably one of the most successful bread manufacturers in Canada, will occupy the position of Vice-President and General Manager, while the services of the heads of four of the different companies taken over and of an efficient representative of the fifth have been assured to the Company.

SUBSCRIPTIONS

Subscriptions should be made on the form accompanying the prospectus, and are payable as follows:—

10 per cent. on par value on application, and
88½ per cent. on par value on allotment.

98½ per cent.

OR

In instalments as follows, in which case interest at the rate of 6 per cent. will be charged from date of allotment:—
10 per cent. on par value on application.
13½ per cent. on par value on allotment.
25 per cent. on par value on 1st Sept., 1911.
25 per cent. on par value on 1st Oct., 1911.
25 per cent. on par value on 1st Nov., 1911.

98½ per cent.

Upon final payment by the subscriber for all the bonds allotted, the Guardian Trust Company, Limited, will deliver the bonds, together with fully paid-up shares of the Common Stock of the Company equivalent at par to 25 per cent. of the par value of bonds allotted.

Application will be made to list the bonds and common stock on the Toronto Stock Exchange.

Copy of the trust mortgage and legal opinion of A. M. Stewart, and certificates of Price, Waterhouse & Co., and Canadian-American Appraisal Co., are open to inspection at the offices of the Guardian Trust Company, Limited, Toronto.

"DELIGHTFUL POISON."

How Wine Happened to Have That Name Given It In Persia.

The making of wine is said to have originated with the Persians, who discovered the process quite by accident. One of their earliest kings, Jensheed, who, it is said, was only five or six generations from Noah, was the discoverer or rather a woman of his household was.

"He was immoderately fond of grapes," says the narrative, which is found in Sir John Malcolm's "History of Persia," "and desired to preserve some, which were placed in a large vessel and lodged in a vault for future use. When the vessel was opened the grapes had fermented and their juice in this state was so acid that the King believed it must be poisonous.

"He had some vessels filled with it and 'Poison' written upon each. These were placed in his room. It happened that one of his favorite ladies was affected with nervous headache; the pain distracted her so much that she desired death. Observing the vessel with 'Poison' written on it she took it and swallowed its contents. The wine, for such it had become overpowered the lady, who fell down into a sound sleep and awoke much refreshed.

"Delighted with this remedy, she repeated the doses so often that the monarch's poison was all drunk. He soon discovered this and forced the lady to confess what she had done. A quantity of wine was made and Jensheed and all his court drank of the new beverage, which from the circumstance that led to its discovery is to this day known in Persia by the name of Zeher-e-Khoosh, or 'the delightful poison.'"

Last quarter there were 209 births, 61 marriages and 100 deaths at Wishaw.

SUMMER MONTHS FATAL TO SMALL CHILDREN

The summer months are the hardest of the year on small children. Cholera infantum, diarrhœa, dysentry and stomach troubles are all common at this time and many a precious life is snuffed out after only a few hours' illness. As a safeguard mothers should keep Baby's Own Tablets in the house. An occasional dose of the Tablets will prevent stomach and bowel troubles, or if the trouble comes on suddenly will bring the little one through safely. Mrs. Larry DeGrace, Mizonette, N. B., writes: "Last summer my baby suffered greatly from her stomach and bowels and nothing helped her till I began giving her Baby's Own Tablets. They regulated her bowels, sweetened her stomach, and now she is a big, healthy, happy child." The Tablets are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

THE ONLY OBSTACLE.

"Lady," said the fortune-teller, shuffling the cards, "the fates decree that you will visit foreign lands. You will mingle in the Court life of kings and queens. Conquering all rivals, you will marry the man of your choice—a tall, dark, handsome gent of distinguished ancestry; in fact, a peer of the realm."

"Will he be young?"

"Yes, young and rich."

The visitor in her excitement clutched the seer's arm.

"But how," she cried eagerly, "how am I to get rid of my present husband?"

The Foe of Indigestion.—Indigestion is a common ailment and few are free from it. It is a most distressing complaint and often the suffering attending it is most severe. The very best remedy is Parmelee's Vegetable Pills taken according to directions. They rectify the irregular action of the stomach and restore healthy action. For many years they have been a standard remedy for dyspepsia and indigestion and are highly esteemed for their qualities.

REST AND HEALTH TO MOTHER AND CHILD.

MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP has been used for over SIXTY YEARS by MILLIONS of MOTHERS for their CHILDREN WHILE TEETHING, with PERFECT SUCCESS. It SOOTHES the CHILD, SOFTENS the GUMS, ALLAYS all PAIN; CURES WIND COLIC, and is the best remedy for DIARRHŒA. It is absolutely harmless. Be sure and ask for "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup," and take no other kind. Twenty-five cents a bottle.

SHE'LL GET IT.

Hub—"You don't need another new dress, dear."

Wife—"No, darling, but I must have one."

Dr. C. Gordon Howitt, Dominion Entomologist, says, referring to the infantile death rate from intestinal diseases and diarrhoea spread by the house fly, he believes that the so-called harmless fly is yearly causing the death of thousands of infants, as well as spreading the germs of typhoid fever. Wilson's Fly Pads are the only thing that will rid your house of these dangerous pests.

NO DISCRIMINATION.

"Does your new baby cry much at night?"

"Laws! it cries at anything."

When Holloway's Corn Cure is applied to a corn or wart it kills the roots and the callosity comes out without injury to the flesh.

Of course it is all right for a bride to wait until her husband is sound asleep, then wake him up and ask him if he's asleep yet.

A SOFT ANSWER.

"Always remember, Ferdinand," said his loving parent, "that 'a soft answer turneth away wrath.' So if any little boy or girl hits you, be your mother's own sweet darling, and don't lose your temper."

Then Ferdinand trotted off to school, and when he came home to lunch his mother asked him:

"And did my boy remember what he was told?"

"Yes, ma. A boy called me a fool, but I did as you said."

"And what soft answer did you make?"

"I hit him in the eye with a soft tomato!"

EXTRACT FROM A LETTER.

"Oh, Alice, I must tell you about a boy stopping here at our boarding house who is a perfect little gentleman. The other day he brought his sister in to dinner and introduced her as follows: 'Ladies and gentlemen, this is my sister.' Then, turning to the girl, he added: 'My sister, these are ladies and gentlemen.' We all roared."

HAVE YOU A BAD SORE?

If so, remember these facts—Zam-Buk is by far the most widely used balm in Canada? Why has it become so popular? Because it heals sores, cures skin diseases, and does what is claimed for it.

Remember that Zam-Buk is at the same time healing, soothing, and antiseptic. Kills poison instantly, and all harmful germs. It is suitable alike for recent injuries and diseases, and for chronic sores, ulcers, etc. Test how different and superior Zam-Buk really is. All druggists and stores at 50c. box. Use also Zam-Buk Soap. Relieves sunburn and prevents freckles. Best for baby's bath. 25c tablet.

OH, YOU GIRLS!

Daisy—"I shall write Alice this afternoon. Have you any message?"

Dolly—"What! Writing to that horrid cat? Oh, give her my love."

WASN'T THAT ENOUGH?

Randall—"My wife plays and sings and recites."

Rogers—"Has she any other defects?"

Wise mothers who know the virtues of Mother Graves' Worm Exterminator always have it at hand, because it proves its value.

AN ANGLER'S ELYSIUM.

According to advertisements all summer resorts are alike. They are the best ever—but if fishing is better anywhere else than it is in "Georgian Bay" we do not know where it is. There is a greater variety of fish in this water than anywhere else, and they are always hungry. The only place where you can afford to fish is where the fish are numerous, big and delicious in flavor, and that place is Georgian Bay—so the fishermen say. Suppose you send for booklet issued by the Grand Trunk Railway System free, telling about the home of the bass, pickerel, pike, and the noble trout family. Address A. E. DUFF, Union Station, Toronto.

Sexton of the Brighton Cemetery, England, and for many years verger at the Parish Church, Mr. William Shelly has officiated at 30,000 funerals, 1,000 baptisms, and 600 weddings.

Its Virtue Cannot be Described.—No one can explain the subtle power that Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil possesses. The originator was himself surprised by the wonderful qualities that his compound possessed. That he was the benefactor of humanity is shown by the myriads that rise in praise of this wonderful Oil. So familiar is everyone with it that it is prized as a household medicine everywhere.

HOW IT IMPRESSED HIM.

An American, who was entertaining a distinguished English gentleman, was showing his visitor round Newport.

"You observe," remarked the host, "that when we Americans devote ourselves to pleasure, we do so regardless of expense."

'I'd hardly put it that way," responded the witty foreigner. "Rather, you devote yourselves to expense regardless of pleasure."

"There is one time when you may be sure people are fishing for scandal." "What is that?" "When they are talking with bated breath."

A Sure Corrective of Flatulency.—When the undigested food lies in the stomach it throws off gases, causing pains and oppression in the stomachic region. The belching or eructation of these gases is offensive and the only way to prevent them is to restore the stomach to proper action. Parmelee's Vegetable Pills will do this. CANCER IN CLAY PIPE.

London Expert Also Warns Against Alcohol and Curries.

One of the interesting statements in Dr. E. F. Bashford's (London, England), report to the imperial cancer research fund is that peculiar customs render persons especially liable to cancer. Dr. Bashford mentions specifically the practice of eating very hot rice in China, the use of kangri in Kashmir, and the chewing of the betel nut.

It is not only in the East, however, that customs conducive to cancer prevail. Inquiring at the laboratories of the imperial cancer research fund a correspondent was told that the smoking of clay pipes was one danger.

"Such pipes get very hot and the clay often sticks to the lips," it was stated. "Any smoker who wishes to run the least possible risk of this dread disease should taboo such pipes, especially short ones.

"Alcoholic excesses which may lead to irritation of the stomach also introduces the risk of cancer. Curries and highly seasoned food generally, if taken habitually, are also a source of danger."

There are trades which render the workers more liable than usual to cancer. The workman who runs most risk is the chimney sweep, whose body is covered with soot. Unless the sweep is extremely careful to keep his skin thoroughly clean the aniline products in the soot will cause irritation, which may end in cancer. In the same way workers in aniline factories run considerable risk and all persons who make use of X rays are particularly liable to cancer.

"Hallo! Chumley, where did you get that black eye?" "Oh! Only a lover's quarrel." "A lover's quarrel! You don't mean to say your girl did that to you?" "Oh, no! It was her old lover, I mean."

Any man who repeats half he hears talks too much.

Don't make spiced fruit too sweet; four pounds of light brown sugar to seven pounds of fruit is a good proportion.

Wilson's Fly Pads are sold by practically all Druggists, Grocers and General Stores throughout Canada. They kill many times more flies than any other article.

WE ARE THE LARGEST EXCLUSIVE FURRIERS IN THE BRITISH EMPIRE

We pay all Mail or Express Charges to your town, no matter where you may live, on all purchases of $100.00 and over. When buying by mail from this house you are protected by the following guarantee:

THE SELLERS-GOUGH GUARANTEE

"If on receipt you find that the furs for any reason are not satisfactory, write your name and address on the outside of the package and return them in ten days in good condition, stating why the goods are returned, and we will pay the transportation charges both ways and exchange or refund the money in full."

and have reached this position by merit and merit alone. Our styles are exclusive and correct, and our immense turnover enables us to give values that are impossible in the ordinary way of doing business. We guarantee every fur that bears our label.

FURS EXCLUSIVELY

Our entire capital and time are devoted to the making and selling of furs. We are specialists in the truest sense of the word, and, as such, we can give you greater satisfaction in both quality and style than if you bought in a general way. Our styles, values, and quality are exclusively Sellers-Gough. Compare them with what you have been accustomed to.

Our entire business is manned in every department by an expert—nothing is left to chance. Every fur and fur garment sold in this store is examined personally by a member of the firm before it is allowed to leave our institution. This assures you of not only correct style and fit, but also correct quality and thorough workmanship.

ALTERATIONS REMODELING — We can make your alterations and remodeling now better and cheaper than later on in the season, when we have more than we can attend to. Write to us for estimate, and do it right away.

THURSDAY, AUG. 17, '11

Cut the weeds and keep Exeter clean and tidy. There is no excuse for Civic Ugliness. The quality of citizenship is reflected in the appearance of the town, and good citizens in every community could not occupy themselves in a more desirable movement than in organizing some united effort to produce in their civic surroundings, that which appealing to the eye, will have a tendency to develop in the heart and mind, all that is expressed in the words, "The True, the Good, and the Beautiful."

One of the striking characteristics of successful persons is their faculty of readily determining the relative importance of different things. There are many things which it is desirable to do, a few are essential, and there is no more useful quality of the human mind than that which enables its possessor at once to distinguish which the few essential things are. Life is so short and time is fleeting that much which one would wish to do must fain be omitted. He is fortunate who perceives at a glance what it will do, and what it will not do, to omit. This invaluable faculty, if not possessed in a remarkable degree naturally, is susceptible of cultivation to a considerable extent. Let any one adopt this practice of reflecting, every morning, what must necessarily be done during the day, and then begin by doing the most important things, first, leaving the others to take their chance of being done or left undone. In this way attention first to the things of first importance, soon acquires the almost irresistible force of habit, and becomes a rule of life. There is no rule more indispensable to success

WOMAN BURNED TO DEATH

Lucan, August 15—Through the explosion of a gasoline stove at her home here about 11 o'clock this morning, Mrs. William H. Downing was so severely burned that she died this afternoon at 4 o'clock. In the house with Mrs. Downing there was only her little son, aged about six. Her clothing caught fire when the stove exploded, and she ran out on the street, calling for help. Two women neighbors were close at hand and came at once to her assistance. Dr. Ormearrived almost at the same time, and the fire was soon extinguished, but not before the unfortunate woman's clothing had been burned off her body almost from neck to feet. She suffered greatly before the end came.

Mr. and Mrs. Harry Hunkin of Bornholm and Mrs. Thos. Richardson of Seaforth were guests of Mr. and Mrs. D McInnis over Sunday.

EXCURSIONS TO WESTERN CANADA

The Grand Trunk Railway System announce that on Tuesdays, June 27th, July 11th and 25th, August 8th and 22nd, September 5th and 19th, 1911, Homeseeker's excursions will be run to Western Canada from all stations in Ontario and Quebec, via Chicago and Duluth, or via Chicago, St. Paul and Minneapolis, at reduced round trip fares.

The well-known double track line of the Grand Trunk from the east to Chicago appeals to the traveller, and with the superior train service that is offered by this line, including the famous "International Limited" from Montreal daily at 9.00 a.m., and which is the finest and fastest train in Canada, many passengers will be attracted this way. The route via Chicago is a most interesting one, taking passengers through the principal cities and towns in Canada and in the States of Michigan and Indiana. In addition to this a choice seven lines between Chicago and St. Paul and Minneapolis is offered.

Owing to the great number of Canadians, who reside in Chicago, St. Paul, Minneapolis, Duluth and other cities en route, there is no doubt that the Grand Trunk will find many patrons who will take advantage of the opportunity thus afforded them for a brief visit at the stations with their friends.

Another feature that will appeal to the homeseeker is the comfortable transfer at points like Chicago, St. Paul, and Duluth into freshly ventilated clean cars, avoiding the necessity of travelling a long distance in the same car.

In addition to the above routes, the sale of tickets is also authorized via Sarnia, and the Northern Navigation Company's magnificent Steamers across Lake Huron and Lake Superior.

For further particulars apply to any Agent of the Grand Trunk Railway System, or write to Mr. J. Quinlan, District Passenger Agent, Bonaventure Station Montreal, or Mr. A. E. Duff, District Passenger Agent, Union Station, Toronto.

No More Dandruff

W. S. COLE KNOWS WHAT IS MAKING CLEAN SCALPS

In order to rid your scalp of filthy dandruff you must kill the germ. There is a hair dressing called Parisian Sage which is now sold in every town in Canada. It is guaranteed by W. S. Cole to eradicate dandruff, stop falling hair splitting hair and scalp itch in two weeks or money back.

If you have dandruff get a large 50c. bottle to-day and rid yourself of it. Remember that if dandruff germs are not destroyed in time, the hair will surely fall out and baldness will follow.

Deafness Cannot be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars free.

Most Canadians Have Catarrh

Our Changeable Climate is Responsible.

Where the atmosphere is damp, with sudden changes in temperature, almost everybody has Catarrh, in some form or other. The ordinary cold in the head inflames and weakens the membranes lining the nose and throat, and starts a discharge. The next cold is more easily caught, and soon the patient is never quite free of it.

As Catarrh develops the discharge increases—drops into the throat, especially at night—and takes on an offensive odor. Besides being exceedingly disagreeable, there is great danger of the disease extending to the lungs, stomach, or bowels.

Though it is very difficult to cure, Father Morriscy devised a combined internal and external treatment that has cured thousands. The Tablets tone up and invigorate the system, and assist Nature in throwing off the disease, while the salve, applied up the nostrils, clears out the discharge and heals the membranes. Combined treatment, 50c at your dealer's, or from Father Morriscy Medicine Co., Ltd., 20

BLACK HANDERS ARRESTED

Seven Men and One Woman Held in Toronto Jail

A despatch from Toronto says: With the arrest on Friday of seven men and one woman, the police believe they have broken up the headquarters of the Black Hand Society in Toronto, which for several months past has been keeping two-thirds of the Italian colony in the central part of the city in a state of terror.

As a result of information gleaned by the police, following the surrender of Frank Griro on a charge of murdering Francesco Seiaone, Sergeant of Detectives Alex. Mackie and the entire staff of detectives on Friday visited three restaurants conducted by Italians in York street, and placed under arrest fourteen people, and seized several dirks, letters and other articles. Of those brought to headquarters eight were detained, the remainder being given their freedom after giving satisfactory explanations for their presence in the places. After being examined those detained were taken to the jail.

As soon as certain individuals in the Italian colony learned that Griro was behind the bars they were not slow to enlighten the authorities upon some of the conditions under which the alleged Black Hand organization was being operated in Toronto. Fearing that some of the ringleaders might make their escape the police deemed it best to act promptly in the matter. Shortly after 2 o'clock the detectives visited 160 York street, a restaurant conducted by Joe Muselino, where they found seven men and two women; 165 York street, a fruit store, kept by Salvatori Sciarone, a brother of the murdered man, where there were five men, and 174 York street, a barber shop, conducted by James Rapola, who admitted selling the revolver to Griro, who fired the fatal shots. Rapola was the only occupant of the place.

The prisoners, who were very excited, when taken to headquarters stoutly denied any connection with the Black Hand organization in Toronto, though, according to information conveyed to the police, the headquarters of the organization in Toronto was located at Muselino's restaurant. A few days ago there arrived in Toronto a secret service detective from Naples, who figured prominently in the famous Camorra trial now in progress in Naples. He was walking along the street when he recognized two alleged Black Handers, who escaped from Naples following the commencement of the trial. As soon as they got a glimpse of him they boarded a street car and got away. This satisfied him that they were here for the purpose of operating, and their description was immediately given to the authorities.

Subsequently it was learned that they had been loitering around the places visited by the police in York street, but when the officers lined up the inmates in the different places the two much-sought individuals were not among the number. That the place kept by Muselino was used almost exclusively for those connected with the society as a meeting place the police feel certain. Muselino formerly kept a restaurant at 125 11th street, Niagara Falls, N.Y., which up till a few months ago was recognized as the headquarters of the Camorra Society in Canada.

Following the circulation of some mysterious letters on the Niagara frontier, where a large number of Italians were engaged in construction work in connection with the different power plants, Muselino was ordered to close the place and get out of the city. He came direct to Toronto and opened the restaurant on York street, which, it is alleged, was used as a blind to cover up any operations in Toronto and vicinity.

MONTREAL CARS COLLIDE.

Wm. Stuart Killed and Several Other Persons Injured.

A despatch from Montreal says: Mr. William Stuart, a real estate agent, was killed and several people injured on Thursday evening, when a St. Catharine street car crashed into a crowded terminal car on the Bout de L'Isle line at the corner of St. Catharine street and La Salle avenue. The motorman of the St. Catharine street car, Elzear Langlois, was badly cut about the head and arms, the front of his car being smashed in when it struck the rear of the terminal car. The rear platform of the terminal car, where Mr. Stuart had been standing, was badly damaged. Langlois stated that the accident was due to the failure of the air brakes on his car to work. There is a steep grade on St. Catharine street by La Salle avenue, and owing to the air brakes not working he was unable to check his car when he saw the terminal car attempting to cross ahead of him.

STREAMS IN ROCKIES.

Secretary of Conservation Commission Will Investigate.

A despatch from Calgary says: With a view of ascertaining the source, power and possibilities of streams in the Rockies in eastern British Columbia and western Alberta, Mr. James White, Secretary of the Canadian Conservation Commission, Ottawa, will leave Calgary, where he is at present attending the Irrigation Convention, with two assistants.

SET SICK WIFE'S BED ON FIRE

Farmer Was Anxious to see If She Really Was Ill.

A despatch from Ottawa says: Charles Dubois, a farmer from St. Pierre de Wakefield, was brought to the Hull jail by Baliff de Coeli, of Hull, on a warrant charging him with assault on his wife and members of his family. He is alleged to have set fire to the bed on which his wife lay sick, just to ascertain if she was really ill or not. When the unfortunate woman jumped from the bed to escape being burned, it is claimed, he swore she was shamming sickness and made her work around the house. On another occasion, it is alleged he chased the whole family into the woods with two sticks of dynamite. Four years ago he stabbed a neighbor in the course of a quarrel and bit off the top of the man's thumb.

NO TWO CENT RATE.

U. S. Government Declined Australia's Proposed Arrangement.

A despatch from Melbourne, Australia, says: The United States Government has declined the Australian proposal for a reciprocal two-cent postage arrangement. Josiah Thomas, Postmaster-General of the Commonwealth, took the matter up with the Post-Office authorities at Washington a month ago. The question has been the subject of an agitation since the discontinuance of the mail service between Australian ports and San Francisco.

BRITISH M.P.'S TO BE PAID

A Resolution Was Moved by Mr. Lloyd-George and Carried

A despatch from London says: A resolution to pay members of the House of Commons $2,000 annually for their services was carried by a vote of 256 to 159. The resolution was moved by Mr. Lloyd-George in the House of Commons on Thursday. The Chancellor of the Exchequer said that Great Britain was the only country in the world that did not pay members for their work in Parliament, which now-a-days was so strenuous that the members had little time to attend to anything else.

The Unionists opposed the payment plan on the ground that it would be a violation of the principle of grantuitous public service, as well as improper for members to vote themselves salaries. Arthur Hamilton Lee, Unionist member for the Fareham division of Hants, who moved the official Unionist amendment against salaries, argued that the effect of the Chancellor's bill would be to keep out the best types and fill Parliament with professional politicians. Mr. James Ramsay MacDonald, Labor leader, denied that the measure would cause corruption, and said that it would "tend to help the tide of purity which is flowing over American politics."

RAN AMUCK WITH RAZOR.

Discharged Prisoner Sent to Jail for Thirty Days.

A despatch from Porcupine says: Tuesday night William Leroy ran amuck with a razor down the crowded street of Golden City. Wednesday he received from the Magistrate thirty days. Leroy two weeks ago was discharged from the prison gang on the Pearl Lake road. He tore up the ticket with which all convicts are furnished to get out of the country, and has been a nuisance ever since. Tuesday night he secured whiskey and brandished a razor, happily without accident.

MURDERED FOR THREE CENTS

3,000 French Sailors Witness Execution of Two Seamen.

A despatch from Toulon, France, says: Upon the order of their superiors, 3,000 men from the French fleet and garrison witnessed the execution of two seamen named Guegen and Lemarechal. The men were convicted by courtmartial of having murdered a comrade named Carrel in order to rob him of three cents. They were ordered to be shot in the presence of their fellows in the service.

FLOUR GOES UP.

Rise in Wheat Leads to Action by Milling Companies.

A despatch from Winnipeg says: All prominent milling companies have raised the price of flour 10 cents per sack of 100 pounds, and 20 cents a barrel of 196 pounds. The new price went into effect on Wednesday at noon. The increase is due to the rise in the price of wheat, October option being particularly responsible.

STEWARDS ARRESTED.

They Had Refused to Put Mail Ashore and Went on Strike.

A despatch from Montreal says: Fifty-seven men, comprising the entire contingent of first and second-class stewards on board the Allan Liner Victorian, were arrested and driven to jail on the arrival of that vessel from Liverpool on Friday evening. Their arrest was due to the fact that they had refused to perform their duties at Rimouski and during the voyage up the river from that point. The entire fifty-seven were taken into custody without a blow being struck and without any signs of trouble, and they seemed somewhat surprised that the company should have called in shore law to settle the difficulty. The trouble started when the vessel arrived at Rimouski on Friday morning and the stewards refused to assist in putting the mail ashore. This has been a grievance for some time, and was the cause of some little trouble last year, but since the spring, when the Allan Liners took to putting all the mail, except that for the Maritime Provinces, ashore at Quebec, the amount handled at Rimouski has been so small as not to cause trouble

SENTENCED TO CHAIN GANG.

Woman Must Don Bloomers and Work With Prisoners.

A despatch from Iola, Kansas, says: Iola city officials, with the exception of Municipal Judge Smeltzer, are up in arms because a woman has been sentenced to don a pair of bloomers and join the street gang from the city jail. Judge Smeltzer on Tuesday sentenced Mrs. Ella Reese to the street gang and ordered that city officials provide her with the bloomers. Street Commissioner Glynn refused to have a woman in the chain gang. Mrs. Reese did not go to work breaking rock or sweeping the streets on Wednesday because the bloomers had not been provided, and the officials say they will not allow the woman to carry out the sentence imposed upon her.

The thermometer in the side streets of Berlin on Friday registered 99 in the shade.

OUR TRADE WITH BRITAIN

Report on External Business Is Issued by Trade Correspondent

A despatch from Ottawa, says: John Bain, Imperial trade correspondent for this district, on Thursday issued a report on the external trade of the United Kingdom, as it affects Canada, for the six months ending June 30.

The total values of the merchandise imported into the United Kingdom from Canada and exported from the United Kingdom to Canada, during the first six months of each of the years, 1910 and 1911, were as follows:

Imports into the United Kingdom from Canada, 1910, £10,599,000; 1911, £8,481,000.

Exports from the United Kingdom to Canada, of United Kingdom to Canada, of United Kingdom produce, 1910, £9,511,000; 1911, £9,464,000; of foreign and colonial produce, 1910, £1,439,000; 1911, £1,478,000.

The exports to Canada were thus about the same in value as last year, but the imports from Canada were lower by two millions sterling, of which nearly one and one-half millions were due to diminished imports of wheat. Britain's wheat imports from Canada were £3,825,000 in the first six months last year, while in the same period this year they were only £2,422,000. Bacon and hams, however, show an increase from £695,000 to £1,027,000.

RIOTING AT LIVERPOOL.

Desperate Street Fights Between Strikers and Police.

A despatch from Liverpool, England, says: Serious rioting growing out of the strike which is in progress here occurred on Sunday afternoon. One policeman was killed by being struck on the head with a brick, and many persons were injured. An altercation between a policeman and strikers during a transport workers' demonstration at St. George's Hall started the trouble, which culminated in a general melee. After order had been restored and the strikers scattered, they gathered again in the Islington quarter and resumed their attacks upon the police and with serious results. One hundred thousand men were gathered in groups about St. George's Hall listening to speeches by labor leaders, and the scenes of violence following the attack upon a policeman necessitated the calling out of the police reserves. When they arrived one party of fifteen policemen was surrounded and disarmed, the rioters attacking them with their own bayonets. In the fight the commander of the police was dangerously wounded. During the course of the day forty policemen and sixty civilians were injured, many of them seriously. The temper of the rioters is shown by the fact that they even attacked the ambulance surgeons and the firemen who were called to extinguish incendiary fires.

DISORDER IN GLASGOW.

Street Car Strikers Attack Police With Stones.

A despatch from London, says: While the strike troubles in London are ended, the situation in the provinces is rapidly growing worse. In addition to rioting on Sunday at Liverpool, there were serious disorders at Glasgow, where the street car service had to be completely closed down. Thirty thousand workers met on Glasgow Green, and the strike leaders threatened drastic measures if the non-union men continued to take the places of strikers. Scuffles with the police led to wild scenes of disorder, in which there were stone throwing on the part of the workmen and baton charges by the police. Much damage was done to street cars by the strikers before the service was suspended. Cars were pulled off the tracks, and their trolley poles removed, windows were smashed and timbers were laid on the rails or strikers sat on the tracks in a body in order to impede the progress of the cars. Many persons were injured.

CONGO IN REVOLT.

Entire Province Has Risen and Seized Belgian Magistrate.

A despatch from Brussels says: The entire Oriental province of the Congo Free State, according to despatches received here on Thursday, is in revolt. The natives are said to have carried off a Belgian magistrate and are holding him as

A BRUTAL HUSBAND.

Set Fire to Mattress and Broke Wife's Jaw.

A despatch from London, Ont., says: Crazed by drink and angered by the thought that his wife, whom he had repeatedly abused in the past few weeks, would leave him as soon as the place in which they were living, was sold, Thomas Murray, of Second Street, London Junction, is alleged to have set fire to a bedtick in his house on Wednesday afternoon, and after Mrs. Murray had extinguished it, he struck her on the jaw, breaking it three times, and choking her. She ran to a neighbors for assistance, and while she was away, he is alleged to have set fire to the house a second time, this time being successful in burning it down.

UNHAPPY SPAIN.

Execution of Naval Mutineers Outcome of Republican Plot.

A despatch from Madrid says: The Spanish Government affirms, in explanation of the summary court-martial and execution of twenty-six men of the battleship Numancia, who mutinied while the vessel was at Tangier on Saturday, that the revolt was a Republican plot, in which about one hundred sailors were implicated. The Republicans appear especially active throughout the country, and the Government is correspondingly on the alert.

BIG STORAGE ELEVATOR.

Montreal Harbor Commissioners Will Make Extensive Additions.

A despatch from Montreal says: The harbor commissioners have further extended their plans with regard to the building of grain elevators, and have determined to add a storage elevator with a capacity of 850,000 bushels to the new elevator, which is to have a capacity of 1,772,000 bushels, now in process of construction. The whole will be completed by May, 1912, and the addition will be erected by next Fall. When complete the elevator will be able to handle 40,000 bushels inward per hour and, at the same time, 60,000 bushels outward. With this addition the capacity of the port will be over 5,000,000 bushels.

BIG RECEPTION PLANNED.

Duke of Connaught Will be Welcomed Officially at Montreal.

A despatch from Montreal says: It is planned by the City Council to tender an official reception to the Duke of Connaught upon his arrival in Montreal on or about Oct. 12, on his way to Ottawa to assume the Governor-Generalship. The letters have been written to Earl Grey's secretary and Mr. Jos. Pope, Under-Secretary, asking for the details of the time of the arrival of his Royal Highness, but no particulars can be furnished them.

CROP CONDITIONS DECLINE

The Report From Washington Is the Worst For Ten Years

A despatch from Washington says: A tremendous decline in the condition of crops, general throughout the country, and traceable to drought during the last month, as indicated by official figures and estimates made on Wednesday in the monthly crop report of the Department of Agriculture. The report is the worst, as to general crop conditions, that the department has issued for any single month since 1910. The area most seriously affected extends from New York and Pennsylvania westward to the Rocky Mountains, embracing all of the great corn, wheat and hay-producing States in the country. In the Southern States, with the exception of Virginia and North Carolina, ample rains served to maintain generally favorable conditions throughout the past month. These conditions thus far continue to be favorable. Conditions on the Pacific coast and North-Western States are regarded as excellent, though during July that territory suffered from a brief but excessively hot period.

FORTUNE FAVORS THE BRAVE;

OR, A LOOK INTO THE PAST

CHAPTER XXVI.—(Cont'd)

Sinking down by the cosy fire, Nancy gave herself up for a moment to the sad train of her reflections. She allowed the skeleton to come that had elasped—for the first time since that cold, glooomy day, when, wandering through the cheerliers London streets, she had shudderingly realized life was false, hollow, cruel. Had not his own mother betrayed him, no one should have convinced her of Derrick Darnley's chameful treachery.

She recalled all the misery of that time, the cold, the fatigue, the helplessness, then her return to the lodgings, and the news that freedom had come indeed—freedom not brought about by any doing of hers, but in an awful if natural way.

If it had not been for Janet, the girl would have probably sunk beneath the anxieties and trouble which followed on that day. The faithful woman took everything on her shoulders, and when she found that Nancy absolutely refused to go to the Hall, or, indeed, anywhere near to the scene of the horror she had gone through, she moved her young mistress to a good hotel, telegraphed to Fenton peremptorily to send the address of the dead man's trustees and lawyers, which Fenton, frightened and sobered, did at once; and when the lawyers came on the scene the rest was easy. For Dorothy Leicester, leaving her father in good hands, travelled up to be with her adopted sister in this time of trouble, and, shielded by loving care, Nancy was protected and tended as though she had been a child. But Dorothy's strenuous efforts, it was found unnecessary to have Nancy present at the inquest held on her husband's dead body, an inquest which gave forth the verdict of "suicide whilst in a state of unsound mind," and to the brave loyalty of the loving girl Nancy owed her escape from the hideous details which were dragged forth of the cunning way in which Thomas Crawshaw had eluded the watchful eye of his keepers—for the doctor so hastily called in had straightway set two men to guard him, having seen at once the homicidal taint that marked his delirium.

It was through Dorothy and Dr. Grantley together that Nancy was never told exactly what caused her husband's death, and the mental torture she had endured was so great that she asked no leading questions, and, indeed, shunned the subject as much as was possible. She was spared much worry with the lawyers, also, for Crawshaw had been master of his fortune too short a time to permit him to have made many complications; and, in fact, as has been shown, he was far more inclined to hoard his money than to squander it.

The young widow had at first astounded and annoyed the trustees and lawyers by her steadfast refusal to accept the fortune which had come to her; and it is very doubtful if they would ever have brought her to a reasonable frame of mind had not Dorothy stepped in at a good moment, and by simple common-sense argument, and an artful suggestion as to the amount of good Nancy could do her Uncle Henry and others, had induced the girl to change her mind.

All this bustle and work had been very good for Dorothy, it helped to heal the wound which had been inflicted on her gentle heart that morning in the Ripstone grounds. She was learning to forget Derrick Darnley, to grasp the wisdom of his words to her, and, all unknown and undeclared, a soft, warm feeling for poor Lord Merefield was creeping into her heart. It was, perhaps, because she was lonely without either of her cousins — for Darnley had started off suddenly a year ago to Canada, in connection with some large engineering scheme—and thrown back thus, without Merefield to tease and torment, and follow her about like a faithful dog, Dorothy gradually began to feel that she wanted him very much indeed. With the young man at home, too, it is not impossible that the girl would not have suffered such pain and hurt modesty as had followed upon that memorable interview with Darnley.

As it was, Nancy was quick to notice that the girl never, or very rarely, mentioned her cousin Darnley's name now; and, our heroine was not averse to this new arrangement; for, with the bitter disappointment and wrong that lived in her heart for this man, it would not have been easy to discuss him in a light, frivolous way, or to have listened, as heretofore, to a long and never-ending category of his good qualities from Dorothy's lips.

Once, and once only, had Miss Leicester spoken openly about him.

"Aunt Anne is broken-hearted about this Canadian business," she had said to Nancy, as they were drinking tea together in Mrs. Crawshaw's drawing-room, "and I can't understand it. I saw Derry just three days before he went, and he never said a word to me about going, only seemed brighter and more like himself than he had been for weeks past."

Nancy made no reply, but her hand trembled a little.

It must have been that very time that a few simple, tender words, full of apparent deep and unalterable love, had come to her, which, after reading swiftly, she had deliberately torn in two and returned to Derrick Darnley with the following curt words:

"Mrs. Crawshaw begs to inform Mr. Darnley that henceforth she desires to hold no communication with him, either by word or letter."

Had Dorothy known this, any perplexity which had arisen respecting her cousin's strange emigration to Canada might possibly have been explained, and another drop of bitterness added to the cup of reproach and remorse which was Mrs. Darnley's daily portion now-a-days.

But Dorothy did not know—and, as far as Nancy was concerned, was never likely to. All the latter asked was that she might never meet this dear, cruel, treacherous man again, and that she might be at peace.

Ripstone Hall was very gay on this Christmas Eve.

"We must all hang our stockings up, you know," Dorothy cried "and Duncan will put in some rich and regal jewel he has brought from the East; won't you, Duncan?"

Lord Merefield, who had made his appearance two hours after they had arrived, made no reply to this, but only glared at poor, innocent Darcy Hamilton, round whom Dorothy was flitting lightly, for the sheer purpose of teasing her cousin, who had returned, looking bronzed and older and very attractive to the dainty, golden-haired Dolly.

"Well, then, if you won't give us any of your Eastern spoils, you must wake up, sir, and dance—yes, dance. You must open the servants' ball with the cook — you hear, sir?—and Nancy, you must take Foster."

Dorothy was like the proverbial fairy to-night; her eyes were sparkling, her cheeks flushed, her whole face full of new and old happiness mixed.

"Daddy, you must take Mrs Starr. Oh, nonsense! Of course, you can dance. You are not so lame as all that. Mr. Hamilton had better take Baines. And now there is Janet. Oh, Nancy, who shall dance with Janet?" And Dorothy stopped still, with a comical look of dismay on her face.

They were all standing round the big fire in the hall.

Nancy laughed.

"What an awful thing, Dolly!" she replied. "Now what are you going to do?"

"Suposing the lady herself has no objections, what do you say to my dancing with Janet?" said a voice, quietly, from the background; and turning, they saw Derrick Darnley's tall form, still enveloped in his overcoat, with his hat in hand.

Nancy turned deadly white, and for a moment all sense left her; but Dolly ran forward with her old frankness, and with outstretched hands to welcome her cousin back again.

"Well, this is a surprise!" cried Sir Humphrey, as he clasped his nephew's hand. "Where do you spring from?"

"It is a long journey, uncle, but I can give it you in a few words. I arrived in Liverpool this morning, and suddenly felt a longing to see the old place once again; so, without changing a garment—yes, I am very dirty, Dolly; I really must cleanse myself before I dance with Janet—I got into the train to come here. I must have missed you at Easton, Merefield, old fellow, for it was not until I was standing on the frozen platform at Stainer, where I got out by mistake for Ripstone, that I saw your face pass me like a flash of lightning."

"Got out at Stainer!" exclaimed Sir Humphrey. "Made a mistake! Why, Derry, lad, that's not like you. And how have you come from there, eh?"

"Walked," was Mr. Darnley's laconic reply.

Dorothy was busy taking his scarf and hat, and helping him to remove his coat, while his eyes were fixed on that slender figure in the long, black velvet gown, turned so resolutely from him, with the magnificent hair coiled low on the white neck.

Sir Humphrey was soon shouting for some one to bring Mr. Dornley something to eat, and Miss Leicester drew her cousin to the fire.

"Nancy, here is Derry come to join us. Haven't you a word for him?"

Nancy, who was laughing and talking with Darcy Hamilton, turned round quietly.

"How do you do?" she asked, in cold, languid tones. "You must be frozen, I am sure, and we are monopolizing all the fire. Come along, Darcy, we will go and have a look at the ball-room, and prepare ourselves for the festivity. Dolly, if you want me, dear, you know where I am."

And gathering up her velvet train, Mrs. Crawshaw put her small hand on her cousin's arm, and walked away, laughing, with what sounded like good merriment to the others, but which rang in her ears as a hollow mockery.

Darnley stood staring after her as she went.

"Who is the man?" he asked Dorothy, sharply; and, as she told him, he relapsed into silence again, until a servant came to lead him to his room, when, with a forced smile, he said:

"I shall be down directly, Dolly," and he went quickly away.

Once alone in his room, he stood with clinched hands and compressed lips.

Incredible as it seemed, he could find no solution to the extraordinary change in Nancy except that her wealth had brought this change. Money must have hardened her heart and set her for ever away from him.

Going up to the broad mantle-shelf, he buried his face on his folded arms.

'What use to try and get at any other reason?" he asked himself, bitterly, as the moments passed, and then he roused himself. 'She has told me plainly she doesn't want to have anything more to do with me. Well, that ought to be clear enough. I'm a fool to torture myself any more. After all, I'm not the first man to have made a big mistake about a woman!"

With a shrug of his shoulders, therefore, he roused himself and dressed rapidly, and as he stood for a moment before joining the others, he came to the dtermination that he would leave again as soon as he could get away.

STRONGER THAN MEAT.

A Judge's Opinion of Grape-Nuts.

A gentleman who has acquired a judicial turn of mind from experience on the bench out in the Sunflower State, writes a carefully considered opinion as to the value of Graps-Nuts as food. He says:

"For the past 5 years Grape-Nuts has been a prominent feature in our bill of fare.

"The crisp food with the delicious, nutty flavor has become an indispensable necessity in my family's everyday life.

"It has proved to be most healthful and beneficial, and has enabled us to practically abolish pastry and pies from our table, for the children prefer Grape-Nuts and do not crave rich and unwholesome food.

"Grape-Nuts keeps us all in perfect physical condition—as a preventive of disease it is beyond value. I have been particularly impressed by the beneficial effects of Grape-Nuts when used by ladies who are troubled with face blemishes, skin eruptions, etc. It clears up the complexion wonderfully.

"As to its nutritive qualities, my experience is that one small dish of Grape-Nuts is superior to a pound of meat for breakfast, which is an important consideration for anyone. It satisfies the appetite and strengthens the power of resisting fatigue, while its use involves none of the disagreeable consequences that sometimes follow a meat breakfast." The passing of the loose peasant blouse is promised; also the combination of red, white, and blue.

Not many changeable taffets garments are seen, but they are expected to have a great run a little later on.

WITH YOU.

Matthew 28:20.

To Thee we look, our risen Lord;
We triumph in Thy faithful word;
To Thee we give all praise.
Upon Thy statement we rely;
For Thou hast plainly said, "Lo, I Am with you all the days."

Our every need shall be supplied;
For Thou dost with each one abide
Who Thy command obeys;
Forth at Thy bidding we shall go;
For Thou, we do most surely know,
Art with us all the days.

We will Thy precious word proclaim;
Baptize disciples in Thy name,
And walk in all Thy ways;
May we rejoice Thy will to do;
For in this work we know that Thou
Art with us all the days.

With us in the darkest days Thou art—
With us when dearest friends depart
And grief its sceptre sways;
No more have we to walk alone;
For Thou whose love is freely shown
Art with us all the days.

Thy glorious Gospel we will preach,
To Thy disciples we will teach
All that Thy word conveys;
Upon Thy presence we depend;
For Thou, as Saviour, Leader, Friend,
Art with us all the days.

WHERE PROTECTION HELPS THE FARMER.

Keeps Out Meats and Butter From the Antipodes.

An instance of how a Protective Tariff protects the farmer of Canada is seen now and then, when the Customs Officers hold up for duty some shipment from far-off Australia or China.

On March 18th last, 750 carcasses of frozen lamb from Australia were landed at St. John, N. B. 250 carcasses were sent to the William Davies Co., Limited, Toronto. The greater part of the remainder were shipped to Montreal. This lamb was purchased at nine cents per pound delivered in bond at Toronto.

Under existing conditions the duty was three cents per pound. This made the lamb cost twelve cents per pound laid down in Toronto.

Fresh dressed lambs were selling in Toronto at that time at 12½c. to 13c. per pound.

Hence, after paying this duty there was not much difference between the prices of the Australian and Canadian lamb.

The duty protected the Canadian farmer against the Australian product.

But under Reciprocity the duty on this frozen lamb will be only 1½c. per pound, so that similar shipments could be laid down in Toronto at 10½c. per pound, two or three cents per pound cheaper than the price for the home raised products.

Referring to the lambs which were sent to Montreal. When they reached Montreal, Canadian lamb was selling at 10½c. The Australian lambs were sold at 9½c. delivered ex cars Montreal duty paid, the owners apparently being contented to undersell the Canadian market by one cent per pound.

Now, if you wish to see the effect upon the live stock market of the receipt of this Australian lamb in Montreal, turn up the Montreal papers of March 20th, in one of which, for example, the headline was, "Sheep Sold Lower in Local Markets."

If, with the three cent duty on every pound, frozen lamb can be profitably imported from Australia, it seems almost conclusive that reducing the duty will also reduce the price of Canadian lamb accordingly.

And not only does Australia export frozen meat, but it exports butter as well. It exports annually between fifty and seventy-five million pounds of butter.

Australian butter can be laid down now in bond at Montreal at 23c. per pound. A duty of four cents per pound keeps it out of competition with the Canadian butter now selling at 26c. per pound.

Under Reciprocity, which would do away with the duty of four cents per pound, the Eastern Townships butter would have to compete during the winter months with Australian butter which cost only 23c. per pound in Montreal

DEATH OF MRS. WELSH.—One of those events which cause feelings of sadness and regret in the heart of old neighbors and acquaintances, and of grief and pain to those near and dear, occurred at the home of Mr. Wesley J. Bissett on Saturday evening last, Mary Thomas, widow of the late William Welsh having passed away at the great age of 83 years, 1 month and 19 days. For the past few years deceased at times has been in very poor health in fact her condition would become so alarming that her life was despaired of, but she would rally and in a few days was up and around as bright as ever. This time, however the attack was of an unmistakable nature and she succumbed, heart trouble being the immediate cause of her death. The deceased was a native of England and came to Canada about sixty years ago, first settling in London. Five years later the family moved to Exeter, and she has continuously resided here ever since. Mrs. Welsh was of kind and gentle disposition, a good mother and was much esteemed by all who formed her acquaintance. She was a member of Main street Methodist church and was constant in her devotions at means of grace when health would permit. She leaves to mourn her demise three sons and five daughters—William of Kansas, Mo.; Richard and Jabez of Kalamazoo, Mich.; Mrs. W. J. Bissett, town; Mrs. Floyd, Kalamazoo; Mrs. J. R. Inksater, Paris; Mrs. (Dr.) Holloway, Peterborough; Mrs. (Dr.) McDowell, Listowell. The funeral took place to the Exeter cemetery on Tuesday at 2.30 o'clock. Those present from a distance were Mr. Inksater, Dr. Halloway, Dr. McDowell, and Mrs. John Waters of London.

The Cause of Constipation

Constipation is, in some cases, the direct result from a torpid, or slow-acting liver, brought about by the withholding of the flow of the bile. This condition is commonly allied with more or less indigestion and dyspepsia, partly due to the constipation itself.

Many persons have found it comparatively easy to overcome such conditions with a treatment of

Rexall Liver Salts

In our judgment we feel that this preparation is remarkably well fitted to overcome these conditions, and recommend them to you with the understanding, that any money you may have spent with us for the preparation will be refunded in case there are no beneficial results.

TWENTY-FOURTH YEAR. EXETER, ONTARIO, THURSDAY, AUGUST 24, 1911. SANDERS & CREECH

Local Items

Mr. and Mrs. A. J. Snell and daughter of Lansing, Mich., arrived Tuesday evening in their auto to visit relatives for a few days.

Mr. James A. Stanley of Winnipeg and family who have been visiting in Brantford, are spending a few days with Mr. and Mrs. John McLaughlin.

Mr. Ed. Fowell, when driving his auto near Bayfield one day last week, had the misfortune to be run into by a big touring car, which turned in too quickly when passing Mr. Fowell, causing the latter's car to take to the ditch and hit the fence, damaging it considerably. The ladies who were with Mr. Fowell were somewhat injured, but have since recovered. The offending car was owned by Mr. Faill of Stratford, who has agreed to pay damages.

A very pleasant time was spent at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Davis, Exeter North, on Wednesday evening. A few of the bride's friends assembled and presented her with a handsome silver cake basket. The evening was spent in games and music. Ice cream and cake were served by the ladies. The presentation was read by Miss Violet Houlden, but owing to its late arrival at the office we are unable to publish the address.

DASHWOOD

The Misses Ruth and Ada Grenzobach have returned to their home here, after spending a few days with friends at Tavistock and elsewhere.—Mr. Milton Harris spent Sunday with friends in this village.—The Misses Amelia and Lettie Witzel and Mrs. Burns are visiting their mother in this place.—Several from here attended the Gala Day exercises at Grand Bend on Thursday last.—Mr. and Mrs George Smith of London spent a few days with their friends here during the week.—Mr. Chester Gaiser has taken a position with the Molsons Bank.—Mr. Edwin Koehler of the Molsons Bank staff is enjoying his holidays.—Mr. John Oestreicher left yesterday (Wednesday) for the West where he has secured a school.—The political pot is beginning to boil. Talk about the great questions at issue, the one which concerns the people of this community most is the issuing of the certificate to the promoters of the Farmers' Bank, in which so many of our good people lost their hard earned cash, and for which they will hold the Government responsible on the 21st of September. Many who are otherwise Liberal will record their votes against the government candidate for the stand he took on that question when it was before the House.—On Sunday next the Y. P. A. will observe Rally Day, when a good program will be given.—The annual Children's Day Festival was observed here last Sunday and proved to be a huge success. The principal speakers in the afternoon were Rev. Burn of Crediton, who spoke on the life of the boy Samuel. Mr. Arthur Holtzmann a student of North Western College also Crediton spoke on the taking up of the Cross daily, and Rev. Brown of Zurich spoke on Timothy's life. Each address was full of thought for meditation There were also some exercises by the children. In the evening the principal speakers were Mr. A. Meilic, president of the Zurich Sunday School, who spoke on the effects on sin and compared it to a spider's web, the different sins being another thread thrown around the unwary ones until they are almost hopelessly bound up in sin. The pastor also spoke on the evil effects of associating with evil companions, and clearly showed that the evil ones will most surely prevent those inclined to be good. The exercises by the children throughout were well rendered. The choir acquitted themselves in a creditable manner. A solo by Miss Oestreicher was well received. The quartette by Mr. Oestreicher and three of his sons went to show what can be accomplished in the home by right living. Altogether the program was very good. The offering amounted to over $37 which will go to the mission cause.

From another source.

Rev. and Mrs. Eggers and daughter of Hespler spent a few days with Rev. and Mrs. G. Thun last week.—Miss Nora Siebert of Ann Arbor, Mich., where she is training as nurse, is spending her vacation under the parental roof.—Miss Tillie Hartleib of Kansas City, accompanied by Mrs. Chas. Oddfellows Honor the Grand Master.

The Oddfellows of his home lodge, No. 67, Exeter, together with town and country people to the number of three thousand united on Thursday evening last to do honor to an Exeter Old Boy, Mr. S. A. Poplestone, on his return to town after being elected to the highest office in the gift of Oddfellowship in Ontario, that of Grand Master of the Grand Lodge.

The affair took the form of a reception at the station on the arrival of the 6 o'clock train, a number of speeches of welcome and congratulation on the school grounds, and followed by a band concert.

The reception committee, consisting of Bros. A. E. Fuke, L. H. Dickson, W. W. Taman, W. J. Heaman, and R. N. Creech together with Acting-Reeve W. H. Levett and many other citizens and brethren met the train and extended the hand of congratulation and fellowship to Grand Master Poplestone and Past Grand Master Blewett of Stratford; and after a selection by the members of the Citizens Band of London, who arrived on the same train, the distinguished guests were conveyed in automobiles down town, Mr. Poplestone to his home to have supper with his aged mother and Mr. Blewett to the home of Mr. W. J. Heaman.

The remainder of the band arrived by automobile from London at 7 o'clock, having been delayed on the road, and at 7.30 the procession commenced to the school grounds, the band leading, followed by over one hundred Oddfellows from Exeter, Hensall, Seaforth and other places, and they in turn followed by the guests, speakers and reception committee in automobiles—the whole accompanied by an immense concourse of people.

At the grounds which were lighted by numerous electric lights, a platform had been erected, and gaily decorated with bunting, etc., and here the speakers were seated.

The program which followed was taken charge by Bro. L. H. Dickson and consisted of the Chairman's address, an address of welcome and congratulation on behalf of the town by acting Reeve Levett, an address of congratulation on behalf of the Lodge by Past District Deputy J. G. Stanbury, the reply of Grand Master Poplestone, an address on Oddfellowship by Past Grand Master Blewett—the addresses being interspersed by selections by the members of the band, who afterwards gave a most pleasing concert.

L. H. Dickson, who made an excellent chairman, explained the occasion of the assemblage, spoke in eulogistic terms of the worth of Bro. Poplestone as a man and citizen, and of pleasure he felt in assisting in thus doing honor to one who had been elected to the high office of Grand Master of the Oddfellows of Ontario.

Acting Reeve Levett in a few well chosen words congratulated Bro. Poplestone, and on behalf of the citizens extended him a cordial welcome to his native town.

J. G. Stanbury extended the congratulations of Exeter Lodge to the distinguished guest, and referred fittingly to the untiring efforts of Bro. Poplestone in building up his mother lodge, in extending the work of the order in Ontario, to the strong battle of ballots he put up in his climb to the chief office, and to the fact that the home lodge and many sister lodges stood in a solid body at his back. He also thanked Bro. Blewett for the active part he had taken in electing Bro. Poplestone.

Bro. Poplestone expressed his very great appreciation of the grand reception and hearty congratulations extended to him on this occasion by his home lodge and the citizens of the neighborhood. There is no town or village or city just as good as Exeter, he said, because this was the home of his mother, to whom he paid a fitting tribute, because this was his old home, because this was the home of his mother lodge, and because he had met nowhere a better class of people than in Old Exeter. He spoke briefly of the different occasions on which he had been honored by Exeter brethren, and referred feelingly to many of his old friends who had stood so nobly by him.

F. R. Blewett said that such an occasion and such an assembly should make a man do his best, and he felt it a very great pleasure to meet so many Oddfellows, and ladies, particularly when the occasion was to do honor to his old friend and brother, Grand Master Poplestone. This was a very pleasing reception and anything he might have done should be considered only as a labor of love, as he had long recognized the value of Bro. Poplestone as an Oddfellow. He then gave a very interesting and profitable address on Oddfellowship, going into the history of the order, the amount of benefits paid, the large membership, the homes for aged brethren, the work of the Rebeccas, and explaining the principles of the order as indicated by Friendship, Love and Truth.

The band concert which followed ended a most enjoyable evening.

The committee desires particularly to thank those who gave the use of their autos for the occasion, Dr. Quackenbush and Bros. Wes. Snell, J. A. Stewart and W. Martin.

Much of the detail of the arrangement fell to the lot of Bro. A. E. Fuke, who deserves great credit for the manner in which the whole affair was planned and carried out.

PARKHILL MAN KILLED

On Sunday Fred Kenneman, a section man, was killed by an engine, while riding on a "Egger" inspecting the tracks. The trainsmen say they whistled repeatedly to warn him. The pilot of the engine threw him 40 feet, and broke his arms, legs, back and neck. He moved to Parkhill from Lucan some years ago.

A Word from Muskoka

To The Advocate.

Dear Sirs,—I feel sure that a large number of your readers as well as the James Street Congregation, will be pleased to read a few words from their old friend and pastor, Richard Hobbs.

We are having a most delightful outing on the beautiful Lake Muskoka. They tell us that although we are only about 120 miles or so from Toronto we are about 600 feet above the city. So that in about three hours run we are breathing another atmosphere, and thousands are finding this out, especially from the United States.

I wanted more especially to assure all my friends that though taking what is called a holiday, I have been planning and studying for larger, and I trust, more efficient service. In the first place the Financial District meeting of the Exeter District is to be held in the Methodist Church, Centralia, on the 5th September next. The business part of the meeting will be transacted in the morning at 10 o'clock. A spiritual conference in the afternoon and a mass meeting at night. Rev. A. McKibbon, conference evangelist is to be with us in the afternoon and evening. We hope that all the Epworth Leagues and Sunday Schools on the district will be well represented at the evening service.

Beginning with Sunday Oct. 8th in the James Street Methodist Church Mr. W. L. Clark, who is especially devoted to the work of helping young men and boys into the right way of living, will be with us for one week. We hope all Exeter and countryside will co-operate in this grand work. Later on in the year that eminent lawyer evangelist, Asa Gordon, Esq., of Ottawa, with his devoted wife, will hold revival services in Exeter. We hope that all the churches in our beautiful town will unite in this campaign for the salvation of souls and the upbuilding of believers.

Richard Hobbs.

Liberals Chose M. Y. McLean

The Liberals of South Huron met in convention at Hensall on Friday last, when M. Y. McLean, late member for this riding in the House of Commons, was again selected to contest the constituency. A large number of delegates and others were present.

The convention assembled at 1.30 in the afternoon, with Mr. H. Smith, Hay, president of the association, in the chair.

Nomination being called for eight names were presented, M. Y. McLean, Seaforth; Peter Lamont, Zurich; Jacob Kellermann, Dashwood; Alex. Mustard, Brucefield; Thos. W. Shillinglaw, Tuckersmith; J. G. Stanbury, Exeter; Hy. Smith, Hay; and Warden Owen Geiger, Hensall.

In short speeches all withdrew except Messrs. McLean, Lamont and Mustard. On a vote being taken Mr. McLean was declared the choice on the first ballot, Mr. Lamont being a close second, and Mr. Mustard having a small vote. The nomination was then made unanimous.

Other speakers besides the nominees were J. H. Fowler of London and Wm. Proudfoot, M.P.P. of Goderich.

Reciprocity and other matters were discussed.

GOOD POSITIONS.

The Clinton Business College is a worthy link in a chain of Seven Business Colleges located in the cities of London, Peterboro, Welland and the towns of Orangeville, Walkerton, Wingham and Clinton. Owing to its High-grade work it is affiliated with the Commercial Educators' Association of Canada. It is freely admitted that owing to these connections, its student get the very best positions. Fall Openings are on Aug. 28th., and Sept. 5th, but at this school each student is instructed privately at his or her own desk, students may enter any day. Many students study all at home and others partly at home and finish at at the College. As Spotton Colleges are the largest trainers in Canada and have thirty years experience, it would be well for young people to get their training there. Last year Mr. Spotton trained over 1200 young people and placed them in good positions. What he has done for thousands of others he can do for you.

KIRKTON OLD BOYS' RE-UNION.

Labor Day, Sept. 4th is to be a great day in Kirkton, being the Reunion of the Old Boys of Kirkton, Usborne and Blanshard. Preparations are being made for a big time. At 10 a. m. a baseball game will be played between Usborne and Blanshard. At 11 a. m. the children's races and sports commence. They are of great variety and for all ages. At 4 p. m. the senior sports take place, tug of war, races, putting-the-shot, etc. Amos Doupe is chairman of the senior sports and Hugh Kirk of the Junior sports.

INSANE MOTHER'S ACT.

Wiarton, Ont., August 17.—A terrible tragedy was enacted during the night at Lion's Head, 22 miles north of here, when Mrs. Thos. Pettigrew, aged 40 years, during a fit of temporary insanity, murdered her two children and afterwards committed suicide by hanging herself. The victims, a boy and a girl, aged 12 and 10 years, respectively, were strangled to death while in bed, the father, a carpenter by trade, being absent in the country.

BIRTHS

Salter—In Exeter, on Aug. 21, to Mr. and Mrs. M. Salter, a daughter.

Northcott—In Exeter, Aug. 16, to Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Northcott, a son.

Knight—In Exeter, on Aug. 16th, to Mr. and Mrs. John J. Knight, a son.

Stanlake—On the Lake Road, Aug. 14, to Mr. and Mrs. Nelson Stanlake, a son

Finlay—On Town line, Hay, on Aug. 11, to Mr. and Mrs. Finlay, a son.

McGregor.—In Tuckersmith, on August 7th, to Mr. and Mrs. D. F. McGregor, a daughter.

Bagshaw—In Tulleville, Sask., July 28 to Mr. and Mrs. James Bagshaw, a daughter.

MARRIAGES

Wrenshield—Hall—At Hensall Aug. 16, Charles Wrenshield of Detroit, to Miss Bertie Hall of Exeter North.

Smith—Smith—On Aug. 16, at the residence of the bride's mother, Woodham Mary Elizabeth, daughter of Mrs. Thos Smith, to Mr. James H. Smith, B. A. Inspector of Public Schools, S. Perth.

Clark—Gilfillan—On Aug. 16, at the residence of the bride's parents, Woodside Farm, Kirkton, Isabella Mabel, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Gilfillan, to Mr. John Harrison Clark.

DEATHS

Atkinson—In Exeter, Aug. 18, Jane Brophey, relict of the late Richard Atkinson, aged 82 years, 10 months.

Westman—In Biddulph, on Aug. 11, Mrs Isaac Westman, beloved wife of Isaac Westman, aged 87 years.

CARD OF THANKS.

The family of the late Mrs. Atkinson wish to thank the friends and neighbors for the many kindnesses shown them during their mother's illness and subsequent death.

CAREER OF ADMIRAL TOGO

EVENTS IN THE LIFE OF THE GREAT JAPANESE SAILOR.

As a Young Man He Attended a Naval College in Greenwich, England.

Admiral Togo, of all Japan's great men, is the most Japanese at heart, so it has been said by foreigners who have lived in the empire, and who know at first hand as much of the Japanese character as any foreigner may know, according to a writer in the New York Sun. This means that aside from the purely technical aspect of his training as a commander over modern battle fleets the victor of Tsushima is at heart of the old school of mediaeval Satsuma fighting samurai such as we see on the vases and kakemonos, terrifying in aspect under grinning war masks. Even under the modern conditions, which have changed and bewildered Japan his code has been the ancient code of Bushido, and his life off the quarterdeck of his flagship is as nearly like the lives of his forefathers as he can order it.

"NO RETURN."

On the eve of the departure of the Japanese fleet under his command for Port Arthur, and the beginning of the great struggle with Russia, this admiral of a modern fleet of steel, called his officers to the Mikasa and there, under the shadow of an eight-inch gun breech in his cabin he addressed them. On the table before him lay the "three and a half inches of honor"—the short dagger of harakiri, which in the code of the samurai is the last recourse of a warrior in defeat. Togo made no allusion to the unsheathed dagger. "To-night we shall attack the enemy," he said. "From that voyaging there is no return."

HIS LIFE.

The biography of his early life is scanty in detail. He was born in Kagoshima, the capital city of the Lord of Satsuma, in December, 1847. Satsuma, a province in the southermost island of the Japan group, has been from the age of fable the land of fighters. Togo was born of a family of fighters. His father was a samurai, a retainer of the Lord of Satsuma under the old feudal regime; his mother was a daughter of a sumurai. A few days after her child had been born she took him to the shrine of the guardian god of the clan, laid him upon the altar and, after the old custom, dedicated the infant to "the defence of the Land of the Gods and to the service of the Prince."

STERN SCHOOLING.

The boy's schooling was that of all youths of the fighting clan of Kagoshima. Archery, the use of gun and sword, rigorous training of the body and the development of the mind through reading of the classics, these were the elements of his training. Above all else, after the old code, he was taught absolute self-effacement, the control of all passions and the ability to maintain silence. At the age of 16 he became a sailor on the single warship owned by the Lord of Satsuma, and at 21 he was a petty officer aboard the little cruiser Kasuga, one of the infants of the Imperial navy just then in process of building.

FIRST WAR.

The youngster's first engagement came when, in the Enmoto rebellion of 1868, which was all of a part with the civil wars of the Restoration, he helped serve a gun aboard one of the primitive warships against the defences of the Lord of Enmoto. In 1871 he was sent to England by the Government along with thirteen young men to learn the craft of modern warfare. He spent seven years there in a military school near Portsmouth and in the Thames Nautical Training College and returned aboard the warship Hiyei, which had just been completed in an English shipyard for the Japanese navy.

In 1887, when Count Saigo, a powerful man of the south, quarrelled with the still weak Government of the Emperor, and the Satsuma rebellion followed Togo fought on the side of Saigo because he was a Satsuma man and all his loyalty was of the old feudal order of personal allegiance. Saigo was defeated and killed, but Togo lived to become chief of the Emperor's defenders on the sea.

WAR WITH CHINA.

Togo came suddenly into the eye of the whole world at the outbreak of the war between Japan and China in 1894. He was then commander of the cruiser Naniwa. While cruising in the Yellow Sea Togo encountered the steamship Kowshing, flying the British flag and carrying 1,100 Chinese soldiers bound for Asan. Togo stopped the transport and sent an officer over with peremptory orders that Capt. Galesworthy, the Englishman in command, should put about and follow the Naniwa to the Japanese fleet. The Chinese officers aboard refused to allow Galesworthy to comply with these orders, nor would they permit him and his crew of white men to put off from the Kowshing in the steamer's boats on Togo's orders.

JUSTIFIED.

For four hours the Naniwa lay at a distance away from the transport while Togo tried to bring the Chinese to terms. In the end the Japanese commander fired a shot through the hull of the transport and she sank with all on board. For a time Togo's action threatened to involve his country in international difficulties, but subsequent investigation justified him completely. He served through the rest of the war.

WAR WITH RUSSIA.

When the war with Russia for which Japan had been preparing for many years, seemed inevitable early in 1890, Togo was made vice-admiral in command of the entire navy of the island empire. He assembled his fleet at the great naval base of Sasebo; then on February 6, after diplomatic negotiations with Russia had been broken off but before a formal declaration of war had been made, Togo sent part of his fleet to convey transports full of troops to Corea, and on the night of February 8 he launched his torpedo flotilla at the unsuspecting Russian ships in Port Arthur. Immediately after the little Vice-Admiral completed the investment of Port Arthur from the sea side and on April 13, after heavy bombardments of the forts by Togo's fleet, Vice-Admiral Makaron made the fatal sally which resulted in the loss of the first class battleship Petropavlovsk through contact with a string of floating mines which the wily Japanese commander had strung in his advance.

BARRED LETTERS FROM HOME.

After long weeks of investment interspersed by bombardments of their land fortifications the Russians again made a showing outside the Tiger's Tail on August 10th and after a running fight had to retreat beaten to the support of the land batteries. This ended the naval campaign of 1890, and Togo was not called upon to do serious work until the Baltic fleet under Rozhdestvensky was despatched from Libau on October 15th, and after many vicissitudes sailed up tnrough the Tsushima Strait toward the Japan Sea.

"You must not distract my mind by sending me letters while I am in command of tne fleet," Togo wrote to his wife during the months of strain in which the fleet under his command was preparing for the final conflict with the Russians on the sea. So he devoted himself strictly to the business in hand and he hid his fleet in the Corean port of Masanpho upon the approach of the blundering Russians, ready to dart out and annihilate them in his good time.

THE GREAT VICTORY.

On the morning of May 27, 1905, contact with the Russian fleet was established by Togo's scouts. At 1.55 o'clock that afternoon, when the two fleets were less than five miles apart, Togo hoisted this message on the signal halyards of the Mikasa: "The fate of the empire depends upon this battle. Let every man do his best." Then the two fleets engaged.

In less than forty-five minutes the Russians were overwhelmed, but it was not until two days afterward that the last of the Russian ships, except three which limped into Manila, were either destroyed or captured. During the first minutes of the fight, when shells were spattering about the Mikasa, Togo refused to leave the place he had chosen there, and it was not until several of his officers had begun to drag him to the conning tower that he agreed to shut himself in behind steel.

After the battle his return to Japan was made a triumph such as the island empire had never witnessed. He was made a count by imperial decree and head of the naval staff.

PROPEL BOATS BY BUBBLES.

Australian Has New Device for Air Power of Vessels.

Inventer Schroeder, an Australian, has devised a system of propelling boats by air bubbles. His idea is to force air through a system of holes in the bottom of the vessel, which are so arranged that there is practically an air cushion between the bottom and the water. Only small engine power is required, as the inventor does not rely on the forcible expulsion of air for his motive power, but on the lifting power of the air bubbles themselves. By shutting off the air from some of the holes near the stern, the bow can be made to rise so that the ship goes astern. The boats are expected to be able to travel at unheard of speeds, and are non-capsizable. The invention has already been tested by the admiralty experts.

THE KINDS OF HEAT STROKES

NONE OF THEM ARE USUALLY SEVERE CONDITIONS.

Recovery is Result of Loosening Clothes and Giving Cold Water and Ammonia.

Heat collapse is not usually a severe condition. The patient suddenly turns giddy and falls; his skin is moist and cool; his breathing hurried but never sterterous; his pulse small and soft; his pupils dilated his temperature remains at or falls below the normal, while there is no complete loss of consciousness as a rule.

Recovery gradually ensues, says the London Lancet, when the patient is taken into the shade, his clothes are loosened, cold water is dashed on his head and ammonia held to his nostrils. Far different, however, is it with heatstroke.

This may be either direct or indirect. In direct heatstroke or sunstroke the attack may occur in more than one form. In one form the persons affected are mostly more or less untrained to severe exertion as, for instance, young soldiers newly arrived in a hot country and unaccustomed to the fatigue of marching. It is especially likely to affect them when the air is moist, so that the skin action becomes diminished. Violent headache is first complained of; the march, however, is still continued, until the patient at length falls down in vonvulsions, with teeth firmly clenched,

INSENSIBILITY ABSOLUTE.

In a second form the subject, streaming with perspiration, becomes steadily paler, with bloodshot eyes, swollen veins, respiration shallow and quiet, until he slips to the ground. Consciousness is not as a rule entirely lost, and revival occurs if the patient be relieved of all impediments to free respiration.

In a third form the patient becomes exceedingly thirsty without any feeling of fatigue and suddenly falls down in a comatose state. In a fourth variety the soldier, for example, after a long march in the sun is seized with a racking headache, which becomes more and more agonizing. Great intolerance to light sets in and unconsciousness follows. If the patient recovers the intense pain in the head may not disappear for weeks.

In cases of indirect heat stroke the patient is attacked indoors. The temperature may run to 110 degrees, and in case of death remains high for some time thereafter.

To consider the various theories advanced as to the causation of heat stroke, there is first the caloric theory, which attributes the attack to the action of intense heat per se. It is supposed that the intensity of the heat disturbs the regular action of the heat regulating centres of the body. To this, however, it must be objected that stokers of the steamships in the Red Sea are scarcely even affected by the HEAT OF THE FURNACES.

Next there is the autotoxic theory, according to which the high temperature causes the blood to become poisonous to the nerve cells, especially those of the vasomotor centres and cardiac ganglia. Then there is the microbic theory of Dr. Sambon, which, however, does not seem to be supported by the facts.

The view that in the opinion of the Lancet best accounts for heat stroke is the actinic theory of Col. F. Maude, R.E. This distinguished officer had suffered from several attacks of sun stroke, when he conceived the idea that the rays of the sun which caused such attacks were not the heat rays, but the actinic rays situated at the other end of the spectrum.

It occurred to him that if he lined his helmet with red to cut off these chemical or actinic rays, just as the photographer lines his dark room with red for the same reason in developing, he would obviate the disastrous effects of the sun. He tried it, with the result that for many years he experienced no further ill effects from the sun.

An officer who did not believe in the theory, however, one day surreptiously abstracted the red lining from Col. Maude's hat as he was about to expose himself to the sun, with the result that Col. Maude again suffered from sunstroke and experienced great chagrin at the supposed until the repentant officer told him what he had done.

Another officer who had previously suffered on three occasions from sunstroke, causing him to be invalided for nearly five years, also lined his helmet with red, with the result that as each succeeding hot weather season came round he was enable to live without and discomfort from the sun, although he had previously suffered severely from headaches.

The plan of lining the head coverings with red or orange flannel therefore certainly seems to deserve a more extended trial. As regards diet, moderation must be practised both with meat and drink. Alcoholic drinks should never be taken by those exposed to a hot sun. The best beverages are tea and coffee.

HEALTH IN AUSTRALIA.

Observation of Regulations Results in Low Death Rate.

Health conditions in Australia are better than in any other country of the globe if the low death rate of 10.95 a thousand a year may be accepted as an index, says the Medical Record.

The death rate from tuberculosis has steadily been declining during the last twenty-five years and now is less than 9 per cent. of the total deaths, which is a lower percentage than any published by any other country which compiles its statistics in an equally accurate manner.

In New South Wales the notification of cases of pulmonary and throat tuberculosis has been compulsory for over ten years. The walls and ceilings of houses in which cases occur are sprayed with a solution of formalin and the floors are washed with a solution of corrosive sublimate.

The effectiveness of the educational campaign is shown by the fact that open air sleeping is more general than in any other country. There is scarcely a dwelling house constructed nowadays in Australia, even a loborer's cottage, which is not provided with a suitable verandah for outdoor sleeping. There is very little expectorating on the sidewalks or other public places.

Ordinances to prevent the contamination of milk and other food stuffs are well observed. In shops where fresh meat is offered for sale, it is customary to find sheets of water running over the front windows and walls for the purpose of catching dust. All large cities, like Sydney, Melbourne, Adelaide, and others, have tuberculosis sanatoria and also a large number of beds for chronic cases. The Greenvale Sanatorium, near Melbourne, will compare favorably with similar institutions in Europe and America.

Gratifying progress has been made in isolating chronic and more particularly open cases of tuberculosis. In New South Wales, Victoria, and South Australia it is estimated that at least 50 per cent. of these cases have been placed in hospitals and a good proportion of the remainder under supervision. The health officials believe that only a few years will elapse before every case of pulmonary and throat tuberculosis will be under such control as to reduce the danger of transmitting the infection to a minimum.

WHITE MAN DOOMED.

Professor Thinks Fair Skinned Races Will Vanish From Earth.

If we are to take seriously the predictions of Prof. Lionel W. Lyde, of London University, the outlook for the white man on the face of this earth is gloomy indeed. Much has been written at one time and another regarding the the ability of the white man to live in the tropics and to retain his bodily and mental vigor. The consensus of opinion, as pointed out by The Medical Record, has been that he cannot do so, but after a time he will surely deteriorate, physically and mentally.

Furthermore, white natives whose ancestors have lived three or more generations in the tropics are not, with rare exceptions, the peers either in body or mind of their relatives living in the temperate zone.

Prof. Lyde not only insists that the white man cannot live in health in tropical countries, but he also professes to believe that the white man is doomed to vanish from the face of the earth, giving way to the colored races. The English professor bases his belief on the theory that the original color of the human skin was dark brown, the variations of that color being the results of the weakening or strengthening of the pigment under different climatic conditions.

Taking ordinary precautions it may be possble for the white man, two years of acclimitization, to live in the tropics even more immune from tropical diseases than the black. But this period of immunity lasts for only about seven years, after which the deteriorating effects of the strong solar light and heat begin to show themselves on the white skin, and render the possessor thereof peculiarly susceptible to tropical diseases. In consequence the permanent settlement of the tropics by white men is impossible. But while the pigment with which the colored races is provided is indispensable for life in the tropics, it is a source of no danger in the temperate or frigid zones; therefore the dark or yellow man can intrude into the domain of the man of fair skin with little or no danger.

A VALUABLE SUGARSTICK

SWINDLING THE UNITED STATES CUSTOMS.

Smugglers Require a Combination of Ingenuity and Brass-Bound Impudence.

Twenty-four years ago the writer passed, for the first time, through the New York Customs. He had two big trunks full of kit; but less than half an hour's delay in a large, draughty wooden shed was enough to convince the officials that he was not a smuggler, and a payment of four dollars and fifty cents—18s.—duty on a new English saddle was all that was demanded.

Things are very different nowadays. The Customs Houses in New York, Boston, and other big American ports, are regular inquisitions. To deal with women, who are the worst offenders, clever female inspectresses are employed, and not only are their skirts searched for lace, but their hair was probed to see if diamonds or other precious stones are concealed in the shining coils.

CIGARS RUBY BRAND.

The modern smuggler must be endowed with a combination of ingenuity and brass-bound impudence.

"Anything to declare?" asked the officer of a smartly-dressed first-class passenger, who arrived the other day in New York on a big Hamburg-American liner.

"Yes; two boxes of cigars!" was the reply.

They were handed over for examination, and a duty of a dollar was demanded, and paid on each box. Had the officials only known it, there were hidden inside those cigars cut rubies of a value of something over $35,000.

The man who caused the United States Customs officials more trouble than any other person was a certain famous gem smuggler. It is said that, in all, he imported $1,500,000 worth of stones without paying a penny in duty.

His dodges were endless. On one occasion he hid $125,000 worth of diamonds in a rattle, and gave it to a baby—child of one of the steerage passengers—to play with while the officials were conducting their search. At another time he had a consignment of diamonds cast into a lump of sugarstick. The sugar was transparent, but so, too, were the stones, and anyone could examine the lump of sweetness without the least suspicion that it was anything but what it seemed to be.

BETRAYED BY A GIRL.

On this occasion, again, he employed a child to help him carry through the deception. A five-year-old girl was borrowed, and taught to call him uncle. She carried the lump of candy in her hand as she left the ship, and when one of the Custom House officials asked if he might have a bite, she cried. The trick was successful.

It was years before he was even suspected, for he was clever enough to announce openly that he was importing gems, and he always declared a goodly number of stones. Eventually, he was betrayed by a girl. He had induced her to help him under promise of marriage. When she found out that he already had a wife, she made the whole story public, and he was not only heavily fined, but sentenced to a term of imprisonment.

Diamonds are hidden in the hollowed-out heels of boots, in cakes, of soap, in the corks of perfumery bottles, and in the hollow legs of dolls.

There are in the Customs Museum in New York over a hundred different articles in which precious stones have been discovered. Among these are a score of 32-calibre revolver cartridges. The smuggler had taken out the contents of the cartridges, replaced the powder with diamonds, and then put the bullets back.

The trick would never have been discovered had not the would-be smuggler been so pleased with his own ingenuity that he boasted of it to a friend. A Customs secret service spy overheard him, and he was arrested on arrival.

Perhaps the cleverest dodge of all for smuggling diamonds was that practised for years by a lady smuggler. She hid them in the artificial grapes which adorned her hat.

There is a heavy duty on silks imported into the States. Uncle Sam was swindled by one firm who sent over packages of, apparently, cotton quilts, and which paid duty as such. They were mere dummies stuffed with silk.

WHEN DUTIES GO UP.

Another unscrupulous smuggler was, professedly, an exporter of olive oil. It was a long time before the Custom House accidentally discovered that the flasks were dummies with a large compartment in each, containing fine French brandy.

Smugglers like to see duties go up. Some years ago the tariff on opium imported into the States rose from six dollars to ten dollars a pound. Duty-paid imports dropped one year from $1,040,000 to $200,000.

This did not mean that any less opium was brought in—merely that it was being smuggled.

Quantities of the drug came in hidden in blocks of coal in the stokeholds of trans-Pacific steamships. When the ship came into port the cases were extracted from the coal, and dropped overboard with floats attached. Fishing boats came out by night, and picked them up.

An immense cargo of opium was once brought into Puget Sound hidden in large balks of timber, bored and plugged to hold the cases.

COFFIN AND THE CORPSE.

Coffins are always looked upon with suspicion by the Customs. Some time ago, a lead casket, accompanied by sorrowing relatives in deepest mourning, was unloaded at New York. The authorities smelt a rat, and insisted upon its being opened. To their discomfiture it was found to contain a corpse.

But at that moment an inspector caught an eye keenly watching his movements from behind a black-bordered handkerchief. He explored further, and found silks and laces enough to stock a small shop.

PRACTICAL RECIPES.

Fig Layer Cake.—Cream one cup of sugar and one-third cup butter till light, add three eggs without separating, beating five minutes between adding the first two eggs and ten minutes after adding the last egg; add teaspoon vanilla and one-half cup milk. Sift twice two cups flour with two even teaspoons baking powder; add to the batter and beat until light and smooth. Put in two layer cake pans and bake in a quick oven twenty-five minutes. When cool fill with fig paste. Fig Paste—Chop one pound figs fine, add one cup of boiling water, one-half cup sugar, juice of one-half lemon; simmer gently till it makes a smooth paste. Cool before using.

White Fruit Cake.—Whites of ten eggs, one pound of flour, three-fourths pound of butter, one pound of best raisins (seed them) one-half pound crystallized cherries, one-half pound crystallized pineapple, one-half pound citron, one-half pound blanched almonds, one small tumbler of sherry. Cut the fruit up . Clip raisins in two or three pieces; cut almonds across about three or four times with a penknife. Flour the fruit as for other fruit cake and add last to batter. No baking powder is used.

Ginger Cake.—Two cups light brown sugar, two cups flour, one cup sour cream, one tablespoon of orange peel chopped fine (the white part must be omitted), ginger, cloves and cinnamon to make one tablespoonful, three tablespoons of melted butter (not warm), one teaspoon soda. Mix this well and then stir in two well beaten eggs. Sprinkle the buttered pan well with toast or cracker crumbs. Bake in moderate oven thirty or forty minutes.

Salad Dressing.—Salad dressing is best made at home. This recipe will stand the test of time. Use a small graniteware saucepan and in it stir a teaspoon of sugar, a little salt and dry mustard according to taste, three tablespoons of vinegar, and three of cream. When well mixed add two well beaten egg yolks, place in a pan of boiling water and cook and stir till the mixture is like cream. The quantity can be doubled or trebled, for if placed in a cool place the dressing will keep indefinitely.

SAUCE SUGGESTIONS.

The inexperienced housewife is sometimes at a loss as to the proper sauces to serve. The following list, if pasted in the recipe book, will often prove beneficial:

1.—Cream sauce with sweetbreads.
2.—Orange salad with roast chicken.
3.—Celery sauce with quail.
4.—Stuffed olives with fish balls.
5.—Horseradish sauce with boiled beef.
6.—Horseradish and fried onions with liver.
7.—French dressing with sardines.
8.—Mint sauce with lamb.
9.—Yorkshire pudding with roast beef.
10.—Hard boiled eggs and parsley with boiled salmon.
11.—Cream gravy, strawberry preserves with fried chicken.
12.—Oyster dressing for turkey.
13.—Celery and onion dressing with roast duck.
14.—Tart grape jelly with canvasback duck.
15.—Currant jelly with roast goose.
16.—Cucumber catsup with corned beef.

HORRID THING.

Wife (excitedly)—If you go on like this I shall certainly lose my temper.

Husband—No danger, my dear. A thing of that size is not easily lost.

Just about the time a man gets comfortably fixed in this world it is time for him to move.

FORTUNE FAVORS THE BRAVE;

OR, A LOOK INTO THE PAST

CHAPTER XXVII.

The servants' ball went off right merrily, and Janet was heard to declare that never—no, never—did any one ever dance like Mr. Derrick Darnley!

Once during the evening Nancy had disappeared, and Dolly, giving search, found her in the library, with pen in hand, writing, or pretending to do so, at any rate.

"Now what is it!—what are you worrying about, darling?"

Nancy seemed to wake from some troubled thoughts and start.

"Mrs. Starr tells me that Fenton has been asking for me; she says the poor man is in great poverty and distress."

"And you are goin gto help him, of course!" Dorothy was full of rightenous indignation. "A creature who never lost an opportunity of insulting you whenever he got the chance—who was a spy on you and——"

"Still, Dolly dear, I can't let him starve; and I have so much; what do a few pounds more or less matter! It is Christmas time, remember; and, you know, we must all be charitable and forgive now."

Dorothy's only answer was a kiss, and a very tender one.

"I may argue just as much as I like, but you will be firm all the same; I know you. Now I must go back; you will come, darling, soon?"

"In a moment," Nancy answered.

She filled up the cheque she had written for Fenton, then, putting it in an envelope to give to the housekeeper, she rose to move away, when an uncontrollable impulse made her turn to the fire and stand there.

She was very miserable; with all her heard resolutions and bitter contempt, her love lived as strongly as ever for this man.

Yes, despite everything, and the long year's training she had given herself, she knew she loved him still, her heart was still thrilling with the excitement Darnley's presence brought. Even while she knew him, by his own mother's word, to be unworthy and dishonored in her sight, she yearned for him; his near presence tortured her.

While she was standing quietly, Janet came in with some letters in her hand.

"The second post has just come, ma'am, and brought these. Miss Dorothy thought you might like to lay them. The poor man is so overweighted with Christmas cards he could not get here before."

Nancy thanked her maid and took the letters; there were only three for her; one from her uncle, another, full of grateful thanks from the vicar of the parish, whom she had helped so generously; and the third, with loving greetings, from her old friend, rD. Grantley. Her new relations, Sir John and aLdy Hamilton, had sent her a costly present before she left town. Nancy received it with pleasure, for she had a kindly thought for these people, through her sincere liking for her cousin, Darcy.

She little knew what hopes were built on that liking by the ambitious mother and father!

The inclination to remain alone and continue her sad, hopeless thoughts deepening, Nancy drew up a chair and sat down in it before the fire.

The back was turned to the door, and half-an-hour, perhaps an hour had passed, when some one entered abruptly and Lord Merefield's voice said, sharply and anxiously, as Nancy rose with a start:

"There, old fellow, sit there; I'll be back with some brandy in a second."

He pushed, or helped some one to the couch as he spoke; and Nancy, grown very pale, caught a broken whisper:

"Leave—me—me quite alone, Merefield—quite alone—for—moneot."

The whisper was so eager, Lord Merefield could do nothing less than obey; but, as he turned, Darnley's head fell back against the chair, and he had fainted dead away.

In a second Nancy had moved hurriedly forward.

"What is it?" she cried, agitatedly. "What has happened?"

Lord Merefield muttered an explanation hurriedly. One of the wreaths of evergreens bad taken fire, and, in falling, had caught a cotton gown, setting it on fire. The whole place threatened to be in a blaze had not Darnley sprung forward and extinguished the flames with his hands.

"And—and has hurt himself! Oh, go and fetch brandy; send Janet with oil and cotton wool. Oh, Lord Merefield, go quickly!"

Nancy's face was white to the lips, and, as Lord Merefield rushed away to do her bidding, she crept back to that still form and bent over it.

How brave, how noble, he had been! He was her hero again—her best beloved! The memory of his treachery was forgotten altogether in that moment.

With a shudder she glanced at the poor, burned hands, then, kneeling down, she bent still lower over the white lips.

Not a breath escaped them. An agony, an awful agony of fear came over her.

"Oh, Derry, Derry, my darling, speak to me! Speak, only speak to me! Oh, God, if he sould be dead!"

Involuntarily her lips touched his, and, as though he had been electrified by that touch, a sigh ran through the man's frame, and he opened his eyes.

At first there was nothing but vagueness, like one who is blind, and then a swift contraction, as pain and sense returned. He closed the lids for a second, then opened them again, before she had time to move from her knees.

"Nancy—is it you—really you, my darling?" came in faint accents fro mhis lips, while such a look of joy came into his eyes as bewildered her, even in the midst of her anxiety.

"You are better," she whispered, as she rose softly.

He gave a quick sigh.

"It—it is nothing. I am all right. I told Duncan not to make a fuss—not to frighten Dolly, or—or any one."

He was trying to move himself into a sitting position. He could not touch anything with his hands; they were covered with blisters, and were completely useless.

Nancy saw his difficulty, and a lump rose in her throat.

"Let me help you," she murmured; and, coming forward, she put her white arms round him.

The man's pale face flushed, his breath came in quick gasps. It was like a glimpse of heaven to be held in that embrace.

"I—I am so heavy," he panted. "You must not. You—you will hurt yourself."

He put out his right and to gently push her back, but as the injured flesh rubbed her gown, he uttered a groan, and his eyes closed again, as in another faint.

Nancy's own eyes were full of tears.

"Oh, what shall I do?—what shall I do?" she cried, in anguish. "Derry! Derry!"

The dark lashes were lifted for an instant.

"You are sorry, dear?" he asked, with a look of unutterable tenderness. "You are sorry for me, Nancy? My darling!—my darling!"

His head sank forward, and was pillowed on the girl's soft, white throat, as the door opened, and Lord Merefield, followed by Janet, came hurriedly in.

Merefield made no sign as he saw Nancy's arms round the half-sunken form; he only poured out some raw brandy and put it to Darnley's lips. Then, as Nancy saw Janet already busy with the poor, maimed hands, she gently disengaged herself and went softly away—a broken sob in her throat and a mist of tears in her eyes.

* * * * *

An hour later a knock at her door aroused her. She had flung herself down in an agony of grief when she reached her room. Her ears rang still with Derry's tender, loving words; her pulses thrilled yet with the memory of how close his dear face had been to hers.

"I love him!—I love him!" she said, over and over again to herself. "He has wronged me more than any woman was wronged before; still I love him! Oh, Derry! if—if only you had been true and noble, as I thought you!"

She started to her feet as the knock came.

"If you please, ma'am, Mr. Darnley sent me to ask if you would kindly go and speak to him," said Janet, careful not to notice her mistress' white face and disrodered hair.

"Is he better?" asked Nancy, faintly.

"He seems much easier, ma'am; Miss Leicester has been with him up to now, but he is alone again, ma'am, and wishes to see you very badly; will you go, ma'am?"

"Yes, I will go."

Nancy's heart was beating so wildly she could scarcely speak.

Without a glance at her reflection in the glass, she went down the broad staircase, a lovely vision, with her white neck and arms gleamin gfrom out the black velvet gown, her hair falling in soft, ruffled curls on her brow and round her throat. She hesitated an instant before she opened the library door.

Derry was lying back in a chair as she entered, but as his ears caught the sound of her dress, he rose slowly and with some difficulty; both hands were bound up with lint and white bandages. There was a flush on his face and a strange look in his eyes.

"This is kind of you, Mrs. Crawshaw," he said, in quick, low tones; "I dared scarcely hope you would come so soon."

His eyes went to her delicate throat; was it a dream, or had his lips rested close to it just now?

"You—you want to see me?" Nancy replied, standing, with one hand leaning on the table, a graceful, lovely figure.

The man bowed.

"I have a very painful task to perform," he said, after a pause; "but I owe it to myself to do it." He heaved a short sigh. "A year ago, Mrs. Crawshaw, you went to see my mother, and in that interview, which until to-day I was utterly ignorant had taken place, she—she made a statement to you, did she not?"

How pale his face had grown—white to his very lips!

"She did."

Nancy, too, had become, if possible, paler. Darnley moved a step nearer.

"On the table, Nancy, there lies a letter! It is from my mother—read it—read it, and give me your sympathy, for God knows I nee dit to-night; it is not ofte na man is made to suffer through his mother as I have suffered through mine!"

Nancy picked up the letter with a trembling hand. It was a very long one. Mrs. Darnley had written it many days ago, and, according to his cabled orders, it had been forwarded to him with his other correspondence to Ripstone from his club.

It was a confession, pure and simple, of her share in the fraud which had induced Nancy to become Thomas Crawshaw's wife; and a second one, full of bitter contrition for her falsehood to Nancy, wherein she had dishonored her son to save herself.

Ill and utterly miserable, the mother had at last found strength to own her sin at this Christmas time, and to implore her son's forgiveness.

Nancy's lips quivered as she put the letter down. A flood of self-reproach and remorse rushed into her heart. She moved forward.

"Derry," she whispered, "Derry."

As she lifted his dark eyes, she flung herself at his feet.

"That I should have been so easily deceived! That I should have wronged you so, my own—my best beloved!"

Heedless of onjuring them further, he stretched out his maimed hands to help her to rise, and seeing this, she got up quickly and clung to him.

"Nancy, don't tempt me—is it love that makes you turn to me? Is all doubt dead, dear? Can you take the son, remembering what his mother has——"

She silenced him by putting her fingers on his lips; and, as he opened his arms, she buried her face on his breast and burst into tears.

"Forgive me! Oh! forgive me!" she sobbed.

As he kissed her brow, her wet eyes, and lastly her sweet, trembling mouth, with all the old passion and joy restored, Derrick answered:

"Forgive you, my precious! when I, too, have wronged you! I have called you worldly, mercenary, hard, cruel, I know not what. Ah! we have gone through a great trial, my darling. Thank God! our love has lived through all. Lift up your lips and kiss me, Nancy; if you could only know how I have longed, hungered for their touch, my dearest one!"

Nancy nestled to him, heaving a happy sigh now and then; and then, by slow degrees, Derry drew from her the story of what had passed between his mother and herself. She glanced up at his darkened face as she finished.

"But you will forgive her, dear," she urged, involutarily, as she realized what Anne Darnley must have suffered before she had brought herself to make atonement. "Please—please say you will forgive her."

The man paused.

"She has kept us apart a whole year—a whole terrible year. Ah, Nancy! even now I had not quite believed you were really in my arms. Yes—yes, my sweetheart, I will forgive, and we must teach ourselves to forget—we have so much to forget!"

He held her very tightly in his arms, and kissed her softly, with whispered words of joy that dazed her. And then they were silent—in the heart of both there was a prayer and a great thanksgiving.

THE END.

HEALTH

SHINGLES.

A person of an etymological turn of mind, seeing a case of well-marked shingles, with the little blisters so closely set as almost to overlap one another, might think the affection well named from the shingles of a roof, but the word is really a corruption of the Latin cingulum, meaning a girdle. The term was applied because of the arrangement of the eruption, which encircles the body, or one lateral half of it, like a belt. The scientific term is zoster, or zona, from the Greek words for girdle or belt.

Shingles, or zoster, is a skin eruption due to disease of one of the cutaneous nerves which run from the spinal cord round the body to the middle line in front. The eruption always follows the course of the affected nerve, ceasing abruptly at the front, unless the nerves on both sides are affected, when in encircles the body just like a girdle. This complete form is fortunately rare.

The eruption consists of a succession of hard blisters like those of a cold-sore or fever-blister, so common on the lips. It begins in the form of reddish patches, upon which pimples and then small blisters form. These blisters are arranged in groups along the course of the affected nerve, or they may, in severe cases, run together, forming an almost unbroken line round one-half of the body or face.

For the first three or four days the contents of the blisters are watery; then they become cloudy, the patches turn brown, and finally dry and form yellowish crusts. For a few days or a week preceding the eruption neuralgic pains are felt in the part to be affected, and during the eruption the pain is often very acute. In children, curiously enough, the pain may be absent.

The attack is usually ushered in by fever, sometimes slight chills, and a feeling of general illness. The eruption may appear all at once, or may occur in several successive crops, taking a week or more for its full development.

The most serious form is that of the face, for it often results in severe scarring, and may even attack the eyeball. The pain usually subsides when the eruption appears.

There is no treatment which will certainly cut short the attack, and the most that can be done usually is to protect the blisters from irritation of the clothing or other injury. This is done by applying soothing powders of starch or oxid of zinc, painting the blisters with collodion, or applying court-plaster. After the attack the patient may need tonic treatment for a while.

There is generally only one attack. Where there are repeated recurrences there is usually some underlying fault of constitution which calls for careful, systematic medical treatment.—Youth's Companion.

AT THE PARSONAGE

Coffee Runs Riot No Longer.

"Wife and I had a serious time of it while we were coffee drinkers.

"She had gastritis, headaches, belching and would have periods of sickness, while I secured a daily headache that became chronic.

"We naturally sought relief by drugs without avail, for it is now plain enough that no drug will cure the diseases another drug (coffee) sets up, particularly, so long as the drug which causes the trouble is continued.

"Finally we thought we would try leaving off coffee and using Postum. I noticed that my headaches disappeared like magic and my old 'trembly' nervousness left. One day wife said, 'Do you know my gastritis has gone?'

"One can hardly realize what Postum has done for us.

"Then we began to talk to others. Wife's father and mother were both coffee drinkers and sufferers. Their headaches left entirely a short time after they changed from coffee to Postum.

"I began to enquire among my parishioners and found to my astonishment that numbers of them use Postum in place of coffee. Many of the ministers who have visited our parsonage have become enthusiastic champions of Postum." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

FACTS ABOUT OUR HOME MARKETS.

No Need to Turn Elsewhere for Trade in Farm Products.

The old fable about the dog with the piece of meat in his mouth, jumping into the water after a shadow, and in the end losing the good morsel he had at first, may be applied very aptly to the country, which has splendid markets at home, but becomes discontented, and although not half realizing the importance of its natural heritage, looks abroad for trade it knows not of. Such is the position in which some people would place Canada in her present relations with the United States. But the facts do not warrant Canada looking away from her home market.

The home market is taking eighty per cent. of the produce of the Canadian farms at good prices.

The demand of this market is increasing and it will continue to increase as the country grows.

It has the advantage of nearness, stability, cheapness of transportation and quickness of returns.

The Canadian farmer is familiar with its conditions and requirements.

And yet, withal, the Canadian farmer is inclined to look beyond this market with longing eyes to the market of the United States, forgetting, perhaps, that the United States farmer is looking with just as longing eyes at the Canadian market.

There are at least twelve farmers in the United States looking longingly at the Canadian market to one farmer in Canada looking at the United States market.

Let us remember that there are at least twelve times as many farmers in the United States as there are in Canada, and so, while one Canadian farmer will get entrance into the markets of the United States, twelve American farmers will get entrance into our home markets. They have already succeeded in selling immense quantities of farm products in Canada, in spite of the duty. They have sold twice as much in Canada as Canadian farmers have sold in the United States.

With reciprocity in farm products the twelve American farmers will crowd the one Canadian farmer pretty closely in his own home market.

The surplus production of the United States farmer would be liable any time to demoralize the home market of the Canadian farmer.

It will cost the American farmer no more to bring his farm products to Canadian towns and cities than it will cost the Canadian farmer to carry his to the United States.

These American products are pretty well kept out now by the tariff wall. With this removed they will enter twelve to one.

We must remember, too, that the Americans have the earlier season, and that their products will therefore be upon our markets before our products are salable and get the early price.

LITTLE HINTS.

Furniture Polish.—The best and cheapest furniture polish is cedar oil. It can be purchased from any good furniture house. Take a yard of cheese cloth, divide it in half. Now wet one piece in cold water and ring dry; then pour on as much oil as you have water; now rub the furniture lightly; follow with dry cloth. This may be used on the finest furniture, and also on polished floors. It requires very little rubbing.

Caviar Sandwiches.—A dainty sandwich to serve with iced tea is made of caviar. Take a slice of bread and cut from corner to corner, thus making four little diamond shape pieces. Spread the caviar on two opposite pieces of bread, and on the other two pieces place a small piece of lemon. This makes a cool lunch for hot afternoons.

Nut Balls.—One cupful of cold chopped veal, twelve chopped blanched almonds, one-half teaspoonful of salt, one egg, pepper to taste, and one cupful of tomato sauce. Mix the meat, almonds, and seasoning and moisten with the well beaten egg. Roll into balls the size of a walnut and set in a baking pan. Pour over them the hot tomato sauce. Cook in a hot oven twenty minutes. Serve on a platter garnished with water cress.

A CHANGE OF TUNE

It is not many months ago that Sir Wilfrid Laurier in one of his speeches said,—

"Canada to-day is not in favor of reciprocity. There was a time when Canadians, beginning with myself, would have given many things to obtain the American market, but THANK HEAVEN, THOSE DAYS ARE PASSED AND OVER."

Nor was it long ago that Sir Wilfrid declared,—

"There was a time, when we were wanting reciprocity with United States, but our efforts and our offers were put aside and negatived. We have said good-bye to that trade and we now put all our hopes upon the British trade."

Nor are all the people yet dead who heard Sir Wilfred in impassioned and ringing tones cry,—

"But I have found that the best and most effective way to maintain friendship with our American neighbors is to be absolutely independent of them."

Any comment on these quotations from Sir Wilfred's speeches of a year or two ago is quite superfluous. What has brought about such a remarkable and sudden change on a matter of such vital consequence to the future of this country? Will Sir Wilfred kindly explain? No, he won't. An explanation is impossible—but all Canadians can still echo his pious sentiments "Thank Heaven, those days (when we favored reciprocity) are past and over."

VI.

If I Were Farming Again

By ARTHUR HAWKES.

A rather inconsequent slogan was concocted in a Montreal newspaper office the other day and telegraphed all over the country as the battle-cry of the Liberal party in this election. It is "Let the farmer have his turn."

When clever politicians conspire to make a slogan they generally make a mistake. The cleverer the politicians the bigger the mistake.

The slogan doesn't really hit off the situation, except from the point of view of those who, like Sir Wilfrid, have decided that they want Free Trade as it is in England. Sir Wilfrid's speeches in the West last year frequently contained this doctrine. If you are for unconditional free trade it is no use trying to make out you are for the National Policy. So you mustn't talk about letting the farmer have his turn—as if he were not capable of taking care of himself. To have free trade as it is in England means that wages would have to come to the English level, and the power of wages to buy grain produce would be correspondingly weakened.

Half the controversy that troubles the world arises not because people give different answers to the same question, but because they ask different questions, and they approach public affairs from different points of view. In this Reciprocity business one man sees only a few schedules. Another discerns a change in the temper of the national life.

Many people tell us that the farmer thinks of nothing but price. I believe they are mistaken, important as the price is. I am very chary of talking to farmers about their relationship to a commercial-political question, because, having left the farm, I leave lecturing to farmers to those who know nothing about farming except what they see in the papers and observe from train or automobile. The best I can do is to size up the situation as I believe I would if I were farming again, remembering the long days of toil, the short nights of rest, the aching limbs and hardened hands, that used to belong to one's daily rustle with the earth.

The farmer who takes wide interest in public questions is the man above all others who should be able to grasp the great forces that originate and govern political action, because he is detached from many petty things that afflict city people, and because his closeness to nature helps him to discern the processes of national change and growth which are always behind political action. In politics—not the fussy little manoeuvreings between rivals for office that we sometimes dignify by the name—it is dead true that whatsoever a country sows that will it also reap.

Another consideration that would influence me, I think, as a farmer having to decide my attitude towards a vital national question would be the knowledge that most likely some, if not most, of my children would leave the farm, and that I should be ambitious for them to achieve the best possible result in other walks of life, and I should remember that nearly all the best services of the nation have been performed by rubes who were raised on the farm.

I would have a peculiar interest in the development and dignity of my province and of my country, from a patriotic point of view. I should know that in the building up of Canada the climactic factor has played a vital part. Just as the far north of Canada is the backyard of the southern portions of the Dominion, so, unless there has been something to check the flow of trade south across the boundary line, instead of there being big cities in Canada manufacturing for the farmers, and buying his produce at good prices, our industrial centres, without which no country can be really prosperous, would have been in the United States.

I should inquire how the United States had become such a great manufacturing country, and should read carefully what Mr. James Wilson, the Scotsman who is Secretary of the Agriculture of the United States, has said:—

The American farmer brought about the building of the American factory because he wanted a home market. The home market is the best to be found anywhere, because our peole live well and are all able to buy the best farm produce, that is, all who are willing to work. It may be said, without much exaggeration, that the American farmer is responsible for the upbuilding of the factory. He has voted steadily for half a century to give protection to the extent of the difference in cost of production between this country and any country that desires to sell in our markets. Was that right or wrong? Was it wise for the farmers to do that? There was no market at home. They wanted a market as near the factory as they could bring it.

Having read that I would dig into the Dominion Government reports, which show that in 1909 prices received by the farmer had risen over those of the ten years before 1899, like this:—

Grain and fodder, including thirteen selected standard commodities, 19.9 per cent. Cattle and cattle products, hogs and hog products, sheep and sheep products, fowl and turkeys, 48.6 per cent. Dairy products, 33 per cent.

And that the price of goods the farmer has to buy have not risen to an equal extent, as this list shows:—

Woollen goods, 33.3 per cent.; cotton goods, 25 per cent.; boots and shoes, 25 per cent.; metals and implements, 2.1 per cent.; imported goods—decrease, 4 per cent.

The staple lines, which represent over 90 per cent. of the farmer's expenditure, have only increased 14.3 per cent., while the goods he sells have increased 35.7 per cent.

Deafness Cannot be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

SEVEN YEARS PAIN FROM ACUTE NEURALGIA

Cured Through the Use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills

Neuralgia is not a disease—it is only a symptom. It is the surest sign that your blood is weak, watery and impure, and that your nerves are literally starving. Bad blood is the one cause—good, rich, red blood its only cure. There you have the real reason why Dr. Williams' Pink Pills cure neuralgia. They are the only medicine that contains, in correct proportions, the very elements needed to make new, rich, red blood. This alone reaches the root of the trouble, soothes the jangled nerves, and drives away the nagging, stabbing pain, and brace up your health in other ways. Mr. M. Brennan, an ex-sergeant of the 2nd Cheshire Regiment, now a resident of Winnipeg, Man., says: "While serving with my regiment in India, on a hill station, I contracted a severe cold which brought on acute neuralgia, at times lasting for three weeks. I was constantly suffering almost every month in the year for over seven years, the pain being sometimes so severe that I wished I was dead. On my return to England I seemed to get no better, though I spent large sums of money for medical advice and medicine. Then I came to Canada, and about a year ago saw the advertisement of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills in a Winnipeg paper. Although I had begun to think my complaint was incurable I told my wife that I intended giving the Pills a fair trial. I was suffering from terrible pains when I began taking the Pills, but before the second box was finished the pain began to disappear, and under a further use of the Pills it disappeared entirely, and I have not had a twinge of it during the past year. Only those who have been afflicted with the terrible pains of neuralgia can tell what a blessing Dr. Williams' Pink Pills have been to me, and you may be sure I shall constantly recommend them to other sufferers."

These Pills are sold by all medicine dealers or by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

ENGLAND'S LARDER.

It Might be Stripped Pretty Quickly if She Had a War.

With ships bringing foreign food supplies into England at the rate of £434 worth every minute of every day in the year Great Britain cannot accumulate a stock of provisions large enough for a year's supply, some experts say not enough for half a year.

"Others doubt if we could hold out for three months without foreign supplies," says the Queen, "and all agree that three weeks war, or even threat of war, would enormously increase the price of foodstuffs. In the ordinary way the proportion of food and drink brought over the sea is over 42 per cent. of our total imports, being in round figures £230,000,000 out of a total of £550,000,000. Of this sum £70,000,000 goes for grain and flour alone, and nearly fifty millions for meat, in addition to sixty-three millions for food and drink not otherwise specified, and excluding fifty millions for food, drink and tobacco subject to duty.

"What we as a nation have to fear is not invasion but starvation. To the great mass of the people of this country the question is not Shall we win or lose in war? but, shall we have enough food to live on when the next big war comes? It is to meet such an emergency that the use in this country of silos for grain, or national granaries, has been advocated.

"The cost of creating and maintaining silos might be considerable, though we suppose the cost of a single dreadnought would easily cover it; but as an insurance against panic it would well be worth the expense, while as a safeguard in time of war and against imminent famine it would be invaluable, and might easily turn defeat into victory and disaster to safety.

"Gibraltar is provisioned for two years and Malta has silos which keep corn good for as long as four years, thus supporting the truth of the Biblical statement that Joseph in the dry climate of Egypt fed the people with corn stored for seven years. The idea is the gradual collection of an amount of wheat equal to one year's import and its automatic renewal by exchanging it for a new grain as it arrives at the different ports."

SUITED FOR A LAWYER'S OFFICE.

A HUNTER'S FEAT.

Weird Adventure While Capturing Cubs of Lioness.

Munchausen had an adventure with a lion which appears quite tame in comparison with the doings of an Indian hunter, Nizam Shah, who recounts his story in "Sarasvati" (Allahabad). The record of his feat has been translated for the Literary Digest whence the following is taken:

The hunter followed a trail through a rocky ravine until he came to a point where the jungle was dense and the rocks rose high on all sides. He climbed a tree to reconnoitre, and from his high perch gazed right into the cave into which the lioness had jumped. It was now dark, so Mizam made him as secure as he could in the tree till day dawned. The lioness left her den shortly after daybreak, but he could not get a shot, and an hour after her departure began slowly to make his way to the cave. The rest of the story is given in the narrator's own words: On looking into the pit I found the lioness' two cubs—about as large as cats—playing with each other. This spectacle delighted my heart . . . but since the cave was about eight cubits deep and the rock was perfectly perpendicular, I felt puzzled as to haw to get into it. After much cogitation I found that a low branch of a tree was hanging part way into the pit. This would help me to get down. I deposited my gun on the rock, and made up my mind to use the limb of the tree to assist me in entering the cave. My weight made the branch hang a little lower down, and I was thus able to reach the bottom of the hole. Presuming that their mother had returned, the cubs came out of their nook and slowly walked over to where I was. Thereupon I took off my coat and bound the little beasts up in it, then taking hold of it I began to figure how I could get away with my booty. Now, for the first time I missed the branch of the tree which had helped me descend. But horror of horrors, it was not within my reach. After I had got down, the minute my weight was removed, it had resumed its former position, leaving me absolutely helpless.

Now I began to hear a noise which I at once took to be proceeding from the lioness. I quietly sat down. Instead of looking into the cave, she turned her back toward it, being attracted by the rifle which I had deposited upon a stone, roaring at it in a terrifying manner. The rays of the sun, falling directly upon the steel barrel, made the gun shine brightly, and claimed the attention of the big beast, who switched her tail, which was hanging into the pit. My very desperation made me think and act fast. I at once grabed hold of the tail that was hanging over the edge of the pit. The lioness gave a jump and quick as a flash I was landed outside, and, as luck would have it, near my rifle. I had the presence of mind left to grasp the gun and fire it at the lioness, killing her instantly. After this the rest was easy.

NEW OFFICIAL SECRETS BILL.

Great Britain to Draw Line Against Spies Altogether.

The publication of the text of the new bill which is to take the place of the official secrets act of 1880 indicates the changed opinion in the British Isles upon the subject with which these legislative measures deal. While the existing act was mainly directed against the theft or misappropriation of confidential documents, the new bill is of a different character.

In it spying is specifically described as an offence, and any person who, with a purpose prejudicial to the safety or interests of the state, approaches a prohibited place and makes plans and sketches or obtains plans which might be useful to an enemy, will be liable to penal servitude.

In the old law this punishment could only be awarded to a person communicating or intending to communicate secrets to a foreign state, but the last named term is absent from the new bill in which the wrongful communication of information to "any unauthorized person," is treated as a misdemeanor.

Another new feature of the bill just introduced is the widening of the scope of the clause which defines a "prohibited place." As Lord Haldane said, the places barred from public access under the old law were too few. Nowadays it might be just as important that persons should not go into a private dockyard where a British man-of-war was building as that they should not go into a government dockyard.

Therefore the definition in clause three of the new bill is made very comprehensive, and now embraces any work of defence, factory or dockyard, camp or office, telegraph or signal station belonging to the government, or any other place for the storage of instruments or plans of war.

Beyond this, power is given to be exercised in time of emergency to prescribe other places as prohibited on the ground that information concerning them, or their actual destruction, would be useful to an enemy. Thus, any railway, road or channel could be declared prohibited for the time being as well as any works where war materials were being stored or repaired.

Cucumbers and melons are "forbidden fruit" to many persons so constituted that the least indulgence is followed by attacks of cholera, dysentery, griping, etc. These persons are not aware that they can indulge to their heart's content if they have on hand a bottle of Dr. J. D. Kellogg's Dysentery Cordial, a medicine that will give immediate relief, and is a sure cure for all summer complaints.

TWO OF A KIND.

Private Jones wanted a week's furlough, so he approached his captain with a pitiful tale of a sick wife who needed him sorely.

The captain was not convinced. He suspected Private Jones of exaggeration, so he said:

"I'm afraid I can't grant you leave. I have received a letter from your wife, and she says she hopes I won't allow you to come home as you behave very badly towards her."

Private Jones saluted, and turned to leave the captain's presence, but paused at the door to say:

"Captain, may I say something to you as man to man?"

"Certainly," replied the captain.

"Well," said Private Jones, "all I want to say is that you and I are two of the finest liars living. I'm not married at all!"

The Flies that are now in your kitchen and dining-room were probably feasting on some indescribable nastiness less than an hour ago, and as a single fly often carries many thousands of disease germs attached to its hairy body, it is the duty of every housekeeper to assist in exterminating this worst enemy of the human race. Wilson's Fly Pads kill flies in such immense quantities as cannot be approached by any other fly killer.

THE LIMIT OF CHEEK.

Brown is a brave man, and when the other night he heard a noise downstairs he promptly arose, took a poker, and proceeded to investigate the cause.

On reaching the hall, the light of the candle he carried revealed a burglar in the act of leaving the house

"Hi!" cried Brown. "Come back!"

The burglar turned and gazed in surprise at Brown.

"What's the matter?" he inquired. "Have I forgotten anything? Ah! of course. The silver candle-stick you are carrying. Thank you so much."

Then, before the astonished Brown could realize what had happened, he seized the candle-stick and vanished into the night.

Mrs. M. Barrett, 600 Mowat St., Montreal, says:

"A horrid rash came out all over my baby's face and spread until it had totally covered his scalp. It was irritating and painful, and caused the little one hours of suffering. We tried soaps and powders and salves, but he got no better. He refused his food, got quite thin and worn, and was reduced to a very serious condition. I was advised to try Zam-Buk, and did so. It was wonderful how it seemed to cool and ease the child's burning, painful skin. Zam-Buk from the very commencement seemed to go right to the spot, and the pimples and sores and the irritation grew less and less. Within a few weeks my baby's skin was healed completely. He has now not a trace of rash, or eruption, or eczema, or burning sore. Not only so, but cured of the tormenting skin trouble, he has improved in general health."

Zam-Buk is sold at all stores and medicine vendors, 50c. a box, or post free from Zam-Buk Co., Toronto, for price, 6 boxes for $2.50. A certain cure for all skin diseases, cuts, burns, etc., and for piles.

MINNICOGANASHENE.

A hard name to pronounce, called locally "Minnicog." This is a picturesque summer resort on one of the largest islands of the Georgian Bay, only 3 1-2 hours run by the Grand Trunk Railway System from the City of Toronto, Canada, and beautifully situated among the 30,000 islands of that territory. Splendid hotel accommodation, good fishing, fine boating, and no hay fever. Bass, trout, pickerel and pike abound. For illustrated descriptive matter and all information, write to A. E. DUFF, Union Station, Toronto.

No, Alonzo, the cigarette habit doesn't always cause weak minds. In a great many cases it merely indicates them.

A Mild Pill for Delicate Women.—The most delicate woman can undergo a course of Parmelee's Vegetable Pills without fear of unpleasant consequences. Their action, while wholly effective, is mild and agreeable. No violent pains or purgings follow their use, as thousands of women who have used them can testify. They are, therefore, strongly recommended to women, who are more prone to disorders of the digestive organs than men.

FELT SAFER NOW.

"Why, Tommy," exclaimed the Sunday school teacher, "don't you say your prayers every night before you go to bed?"

"Not any more," replied Tommy; "I uster when I slept in a folding bed, though."

TRANSPORTATION MONOPOLY

Arabs Controlled the First Parcels-Post.

The first parcels-post difficulty that we recall occurred at the close of the fifteenth century. Arabs controlled the overland routes from India to the Mediterranean and so monopolized the spice trade, which they worked in partnership with the Venetians. Directly after Vasco da Gama reached India by sea, however, Portugal sent thither a fleet of trading ships. In spite of bitterest opposition on the part of the monopolistic Arabs the ships succeeded in securing cargoes of spices and other Oriental wares which they brought to Europe. The result was a panic in Venice, the price of spices there falling fifty per cent. That the Arabs had made thrifty use of their monopoly is indicated by the fact that, in spite of this fall in prices, the Portuguese are said to have sold their spices at a profit of six hundred per cent. Probably the Arabs argued, like our express companies, that they were really benevolent persons and engaged in trade mostly for their health.

The dearness of transportation at that time was a matter of small importance, for commerce was chiefly confined to articles of luxury. Only barons could buy spices anyway. Now-a-days, when transportation enters into the cost of the necessaries of life, there seems decidedly less excuse for tolerating a monopolistic toll upon it.

The Pill That Brings Relief.—When, after one has partaken of a meal he is oppressed by feelings of fulness and pains in the stomach he suffers from dyspepsia, which will persist if it be not dealt with. Parmelee's Vegetable Pills are the very best medicine that can be taken to bring relief. These pills are especially compounded to deal with dyspepsia, and their sterling qualities in this respect can be vouched for by legions of users.

WATER AND SALT FOR CALVES

Calves, like other farm animals, get thirsty even though milk forms a large part of their ration. Calves three months of age will drink as much as five quarts of water daily per head. They like to drink often, sipping a little at a time. A half barrel cleaned and replenished twice daily, will serve nicely as a water trough. Another good device is an automatic waterer which may be easily cleaned, situated a little above the floor to keep out the litter. Salt is essential to the development of the calf, as of other animals, and should be kept continually available.

WOMAN'S TERRIBLE CRIME

Strangled Children, Placed Them in Bed, Then Hanged Herself.

A despatch from Lion's Head, Ont., says: The body of Mrs. Thos. Pettigrew was found hanging dead in the kitchen of her home here by neighbors on Thursday morning, and in a bed upstairs were the bodies of her two children strangled to death. The children were a boy and a girl, James and Hazel, aged 10 and 12 years. From the condition of the house it is evident that they were able to put up some sort of a struggle for their lives, but the frantic woman finally over came them, and by tieing pieces of thin rope around their necks they were slowly strangled to death. After undressing them and placing them side by side in bed, the woman then tied a piece of rope to the bottom of the bed in another room. The end of it was put through a stove-pipe hole in the floor. Coming downstairs the woman then tied the loose end around her throat, mounted a table and jumped off. The deed is thought to have been the result of insanity brought on by years of illness. Her husband, a carpenter, was away from home at distant work. Cries were heard from the house about midnight. Noticing no life about the place, the door was broken down.

TWO MEN HURT IN WRECK.

Freight Train on the T. and N. O. Railway Piled Up in Ditch.

A despatch from North Bay says: A freight train on the T. and N. O. was wrecked on Friday six miles north of here, several cars leaving the track and piling up in a ditch. Two men, beating their way on top of a box-car, were hurled beneath the wreckage and seriously injured. Louis Leblanc is in New Liskeard Hospital, and may die. John Labelle was dug out of the wreckage with a badly cut head, but was able to continue his journey, after his injuries were dressed.

MONTREAL REAL ESTATE.

Sir Max Aitken and English Interests Purchase Block of Land.

A despatch from Montreal says: Sir Max Aitken and certain English interests on Wednesday purchased the block of land surrounded by St. Catharine, St. Alexander, St. Edward and Bleury streets, paying $377,000 for the property. Part of the property was owned by C. A. Workman, who purchased it four years ago for $92,000, and received $175,000 on Wednesday.

STANLEY RHODES KILLED.

Nephew of Cecil Rhodes Met Death in Automobile Accident.

A despatch from London says: Stanley Rhodes, a nephew of Cecil Rhodes, is dead as the result of injuries which he received in an automobile accident on Wednesday. His wife, who was formerly Miss Mabel Russell, and a Gaiety chorus girl, is also reported dead as a result of the accident.

DEATHS IN MONTREAL.

A despatch from Montreal says: The month of August so far has set a record for the number of accidental and violent deaths in Montreal and vicinity. Up to this time over eighty cases of this kind have already been reported to the morgue.

KILLED IN AUTO ACCIDENT.

Montreal Party Came to Grief While Crossing a Bridge.

A despatch from Montreal says: Two persons were killed and two others badly injured at Rosemere, twenty miles from Montreal, on Thursday night, when an auto carrying four passengers, skidded off the wooden bridge and plunged into the waters of the River Jesu. The dead are Mr. Joseph Gorman, an ex-Mayor of the municipality of Outremont, and a woman whose name could not be ascertained. The two persons injured were Mr. Joseph Egan of Montreal, and a woman whose name it was impossible to learn. The accident occurred at 11 o'clock, when after a run through the country the auto was being driven back over the bridge from Rosemere to St. Rose on the other side of the river.

AFTER FIFTEEN YEARS.

James McCracken, of London, Strikes It Rich in Alaska.

A despatch from London, Ont., says: After being absent and hearing nothing from his people for fifteen years, Mr. James McCracken has written home that he has struck it rich in the goldfields of Alaska, and is now residing in Fairbanks. He left London when but a lad, and the letter reached his mother, who is in a paralyzed condition. His father has been dead for some years. His people had believed him dead.

TWO NEW STEAMERS.

Canadian Pacific Places Orders for the Pacific Route.

A despatch from Montreal says: Vice-President G. M. Bosworth, of the Canadian Pacific Steamship Lines, announced on Friday that the company had placed an order in England with the Fairfield Shipbuilding Company of Glasgow for two new steamers for the Vancouver-Hong Kong service of the company. They will be 595 feet long, 16,000 tons, and will be equipped with engines of 16,000 to 17,000 horse-power. They are expected to maintain a speed of 20 knots.

SPRING WHEAT PROSPECTS

The Condition of the Grain in the Domion Is Ninety Per Cent.

A despatch from Washington says: The foreign crop report for July was issued on Wednesday by the U. S. Department of Agriculture. In western Canada spring wheat prospects appear to have maintained their excellent promise. The condition at the end of July for the whole of Canada was given at 99 against 77 last year. The total yield of winter wheat is estimated at 17,706,000 bushels, compared with 16,610,000 in 1910.

The cereal harvest in Europe on August 1 had reached the latitude of the British Isles. In the west it was from one to three weeks early, and in the east from two or three weeks late. The total crop is not likely to equal that of last year.

In Argentina and Chili, where autumn-sown crops are now passing through the mild winters of those countries, weather conditions have been reported favorable, and indications point to a good yield of wheat, oats and flaxseed.

In India weather conditions have been untoward, but lately some improvement has been noted.

SUCCESS OF BREAD ISSUE.

Indicates Growth of Toronto as a Financial Centre.

Toronto, August 21 (Special).—Toronto has every reason to be pleased with the success that has attended the issue made by Messrs. Cawthra Mulock & Co., of the bonds of Canada Bread Company, Limited, because the favorable reception with which it is meeting indicates that Toronto must have made very considerable progress as a financial centre. Many of the larger houses would have hesitated making an issue during the holiday season, but Mr. Mulock's foresight and courage seem to be bringing him the success he deserves. The favorable reception it has received is all the more notable because the issue is being brought out at a time when the market conditions both in Wall Street and in Toronto are most unfavorable.

KING ASSENTS TO VETO BILL.

Remarkable Scene in the House of Lords.

A despatch from London says: The Veto Bill, limiting the powers of the upper chamber over legislation originating in the House of Commons which resulted in one of the most serious legislative conflicts in the history of the country, became a law on Friday, the King's assent thereto being given through a royal commission in the House of Lords. When the Royal assent was signified, the members of the Lower House present, broke out in loud cheers. A demonstration on their part had never before been heard in the Upper Chamber.

ARCTIC EXPLORER MISSING.

Given Up as Lost by Traders of Mackenzie River District.

A despatch from Seattle, Wash., says: A special from Dawson, Y. NEW SHIPBUILDING PLANT.

Tenderers for New Navy Will Build Vessels at St. John.

A despatch from St. John, N. B., says: John Reid, representing Cammell, Laird & Company, the British shipbuilders, whose tender for building the Canadian navy is the lowest, conferred with the Mayor and Aldermen on Thursday over the financial offer to locate the Canadian plant here. Mr. Reid and the Mayor gave out a statement that if the firm is awarded the contracts and the bounty offered by St. John equals that offered by other places the firm favors locating at this point. Another conference is to be held. The location of the shipbuilding plant here would mean the employment at the outset of one thousand men, to say nothing of steel works which would inevitably follow the establishment of the shipbuilding plant.

Big Average Yield Predicted From Many Points in the West.

A despatch from Winnipeg says: Crop bulletins from almost two hundred districts of the West, received on Friday, claim an average yield of 25 bushels to the acre. Five thousand farm hands arrived in the city on Friday, and are completely assigned to various districts, where harvesting is in full swing. With an average temperature of 47 and very little rain during the past twenty-four hours, fields are taking on the harvest hue, and there is but slight anxiety apparent over the possibility of frost arriving before the grain has been cut. On the whole the replies are splendidly reassuring. Not one single point reported damage from frost, and there are only few isolated cases of hail.

Rust has appeared in quite a number of districts, but though correspondents responded to the enquiries only three of them reported material damage from this source. Seventy-five per cent. of them stated that their districts were unaffected by rust, while, with the exception of the three localities already noted every place heard from maintained that the crop was too far advanced to fear serious injury from rust. Wheat, oats and barley yield will be 20 per cent. in excess of other years.

ALBERTA CYCLONE.

Shack, With Occupants, Carried Into Air and Woman Hurt.

A despatch from High River, Alta., says: Information received here confirms the report of a cyclone which devastated part of the Black Diamond district, twenty miles north-west. A shack in which a woman and a child were living was carried a hundred yards, when the floor fell out, hurling the occupants to the earth, but with slight injury. The shack was then carried heavenward and demolished. Another woman, seeing the storm coming, took refuge under a bridge, and was severely injured by flying rocks and gravel. Roads in the path of the storm were rendered impassable by falling timbers. The cyclone was local and did not touch any larger buildings of the district, or great loss of life would have been inevitable.

PEASANTS WOUNDED.

Fight Between Soldiers and Parishioners Over Church Property.

A despatch from Lisbon says: An attempt by Government officials to take an inventory of the Church property at Licela on Monday resulted in a fight between the parishioners and the troops, during which many persons were wounded. The priest had closed the church and refused admittance to the officials, and when a detachment of military forced the doors the pastor assembled 300 persons of his congregation and resisted the soldiers. The peasants were not dispersed until a large number had been injured. The inventories in several northern districts have been temporarily suspended, and a number of priests have been placed under arrest.

INTIMIDATED WORKMEN.

Labor Leader in Montreal Given Five Days in Jail.

A despatch from Montreal says: Judgment was rendered on Friday by Judge Leet in the case of Jules Gratton, a local labor leader, accused of intimidating workmen and preventing others from seeking employment during the progress of the carpenters' strike. Gratton was condemned to five days in jail. The judgment of the court is important, as being a test case, in which the whole business interests of the city are concerned, as well as the labor unions, who are following the matter.

WILL BE GREAT SHOW.

Every Stall and Pen at C. N. E. Will be Full.

There is stabling at the Canadian National Exhibition for 1,500 horses, 1,200 cattle, 900 sheep and 600 pigs, and at the rate reservations are being made it is assured that there won't be a vacant stall or pen when the Exhibition opens. The entries from across the line are much more numerous than usual, the large additions to the amount of prize money and the $500 special prizes having attracted wide attention.

NEARLY HALF A BILLION.

Estimated Value of the Real Estate in Montreal.

A despatch from Montreal says: City Treasurer Robb has prepared a statement of the financial status of the City of Montreal. The city will float on November 1st a loan of $7,000,000. According to his statement, the assessed value of taxable real estate in the city in 1910 was $320,000,000, and the assessed value of non-taxable real estate was $110,000,000, making the total assessel value of the real estate in town $430,000,000. The borrowing power of the city is limited to 15 per cent. of its assessable values. As the debt of the city, including the new bond issue of $7,000,000, is $55,000,000, a good borrowing margin is left.

SIX-HORSE TEAMS.

Champions of America Will be at C. N. E. This Year.

A big competition in six-horse lorry teams is promised for this year's Canadian National Exhibition. The famous Morris team of Chicago, which claims the championship of America, will be here and it is understood that Graham Bros., of Claremont, and The Shedden Co., of Toronto, will be among the other entries. As there has always been an idea that Canadian teams could be produced to beat the Chicago champions, the competition should be exceedingly interesting.

CIGARETTES CAUSED FIRE.

A Warehouse and a Hotel Damaged at Ottawa.

A despatch from Ottawa says: A fire occurred here on Wednesday night with losses estimated at $100,000. Two boys smoking cigarettes while tending to a team of horses, set fire to the warehouses of Provost & Allard, wholesale grocers, and did $20,000 damage there. The flames then caught Chevrier's Hotel on Murray street, which was completely gutted, and some of the shantymen therein had to be carried out by the firemen, owing to being under the influence of liquor. The fire scorched many near-by houses, and between the fire and water cost $100,000 damage ere it was over.

EARTHQUAKE IN PORTUGAL.

Frightened People Fled Into the Streets From Their Beds.

A despatch from Lisbon says: A series of earthquake shocks, gradually increasing in violence, were felt in southern Portugal late on Wednesday night. At Meriola, Albuferia and other points near the coast considerable damage was done and some persons injured. The frightened people rushed from their beds to the streets. The first tremor continued for ten seconds. At Lagos the disturbance was accompanied by a tidal wave, which caused a panic among those living near the coast.

LOCAL DOINGS.

Mrs. C. Birney visited this week at Belgrave.

Miss Annie Blagett is recovering nicely from her recent illness.

Owing to the election Zurich Fair is to be held on September 27 and 28.

Mrs. F. J. Mallett, Jr., who underwent an operation last week, is recovering nicely.

Mr. M M. Doyle, who has been quite ill of typhoid fever at Port Arthur, is now, we are pleased to say, recovering nicely.

Rev. Doherty of Hensall occupied the pulpit of the Trivitt Memorial church on Sunday last, preaching two excellent sermons

Centralia and Exeter Juniors played a game of ball Thursday afternoon on the local diamond, the visitors winning 8 to 6.

Dr. Roulston's household effects will be moved next week into the residence recently built by Mr. J. N. Howard on Main-street.

Mr. Charles Tebbutt, formerly teacher of Stephen, has accepted a position for 1912 on the staff of the Stratford Collegiate Institute at a salary of $1200.

Mrs. McDougall and son of Lucan visited last week at Mr. Fred Luxton's, returning Saturday, accompanied by Miss Minnie Luxton, who will spend a few days in Lucan.

The All-Stars, Giants, and Pirates, 3 Exeter baseball teams, are playing a series of ball games. The first Monday night resulted in the All-Stars defeating the Giants, 7-6.

Rev. McKibbon, the evangelist of the London Conference, occupied the James street pulpit Sunday, and preached very acceptable sermons. He will also take the services next Sunday.

Word was received by Mr. A. Wright Saturday of the death of the little five-months'-old son of his daughter, Mrs. Ed. McTaggart at Fort William. The parents will have the sympathy of their friends in their bereavement.

An interesting event took place at Hensall on August 16th, when one of Exeter North's young ladies, Miss Birdie Hall, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Isaiah Hall, became the bride of Mr. Charles Wrenshield of Detroit. After spending a few days here the happy couple left Tuesday for Detroit, where they will reside. The Advocate joins the numerous friends in congratulations and good wishes.

Mr. Richard Treble underwent a most unpleasant experience on Wednesday afternoon of last week. A severe thunder and lightning storm was on at the time and as he was about to enter the office door of Mr. Crawley's livery barn, he received a shock which rendered him unconscious. In falling he broke his nose and a bone in his left wrist. The injuries were immediately attended to and are now doing nicely.

Recent reports from Ontario indicate that 1911 will not be as lean a year as was expected a few weeks ago. A mixed farming country like Ontario is not likely to meet a total failure in crops in any single year. A shortage in one line is usually counterbalanced by good yields in some other line. This season, while there will be no bumper crop, the nearer we get to the close of harvest and the fall season, the more does it appear that yields in most lines will average up fairly well.

At the recent Normal School Entrance Examinations Miss Mildred Braun, Miss Gladys Kestle and Harry Triebner of the Exeter School were granted Model School Entrance Standing, they having made the required percentage for that certificate. This entitles them to go to one of the new Model Schools recently opened. They with several others from town have applied to attend at Clinton. This makes three more to be added to the list of successful candidates from the Exeter Continuation Department.

A MEAN ACT.—Some time during the latter part of last week some mean person or persons, presumably boys, entered the shed at the rectory, mixed up a quantity of paint that was there with coal oil, and then proceeded to paint everything in sight. They entered the kitchen, daubed the cook stove, the window and a dozen and one other things.

SPECIAL SERVICES.—The Anniversary and Harvest Thanksgiving Services in connection with the Trivitt Memorial church will be held on Sunday, September 3rd, at 11 and 7 p. m. Rev. Professor Jeakins, rector of St. Paul's church, Clinton, one of the ablest preachers in Ontario, will conduct both services. The church will be tastefully decorated for the occasion and special music will be rendered by the choir. A special thank offering will be taken up at each service.

DEATH OF MRS. ATKINSON.—After a protracted illness there passed away on Friday last another of our oldest and most respected citizens, in the person of Jane Brophey, widow of the late Richard Atkinson, at the advanced age of 82 years and 10 months. Mrs. Atkinson has been in failing health for the past two years or more, caused only by the infirmities of old age, hence her demise was not in the least unexpected. The deceased was a native of Ireland, being born in the County of Galway in the year 1828, coming to Canada with her parents in 1836. They first settled in Montreal where they lived for eleven years, then moved to the township of McGillivray. At about the age of 17 she married her late husband, Mr. Atkinson, and resided in Biddulph until about 23 years ago, when they moved to Exeter, and that same year the husband died. Mrs. Atkinson was of a kind-hearted nature, ever solicitous to the welfare of her family, and was respected by all who knew her. She was a member of the Trivitt Memorial church and was faithful in attendance when health permitted. She is survived by a family of four sons and three daughters.—Richard of Manitoba, George, John and William of Exeter, Mrs. John Wilson of Alpena, Mich., Mrs. Al Hooper of Clinton, and Mrs. John May, London Road South. The funeral took place to the Exeter Cemetery on Monday, being conducted by Rev. Racey of Saintsbury, assisted by Mr. Clarence Duplan

THE EXETER SCHOOL

The Exeter School Board announces the re-opening of the High School or Continuation Class Section for Monday, September 5th, at 9 a.m., when all intending students are desired to be present. The aim of the board is to provide a thorough education for the various walks of life—Commercial, Industrial and Professional, and to train carefully those under their care for a good, true, and honorable Canadian Citizenship.

The course covered is complete for Model, Normal and University Entrance. Special emphasis is given to the Commercial department. Students are given a complete Commercial training.

As a rural High School full attention is given to the special needs of the farmer and artisan.

The School stands government approved, and is thoroughly equipped as to play grounds, labratory needs, library and staff. The work has received full approval from both public and continuation inspectors. The results at the last departmental examinations rank the Exeter School among the first in the Province.

The staff remains, with one change, as before, and stands for the H. S. Section as follows,—W. B. Weidenhammer, B.A., honor graduate of Toronto University, Specialist in Moderns and English, takes charge of Moderns, Higher English, Mathematics and Science; Miss E. M. Robb (First-class) Classics, English, History and Reading; Miss M. Campbell (First-class) the Commercial and Junior Work. The H. S. Section is open to all who have passed the H S. Entrance, and parents and guardians are asked to see that registration of students is made with the least possible delay. For information as to Courses apply to the principal.

HICKS' SEPTEMBER FORECASTS—A regular storm period is central on the 3rd, covering the 1st to the 6th. It will be natural to expect decided fall of the barometer, with all other attendant changes to active storm conditions during this period. Very warm and humid conditions, with south wind and low barometer will admonish of equatorial storms. The 3rd, 4 th and 5th will be the crisis of the period. A reactionary storm period is central on the 8th, 9th and 10th. The annual magnetic and electrical crisis also falls within this period, extending forward to about the 15th. Look for fierce equatorial storms on or near the 9th and 10th, followed by change to much cooler weather and frosts to the north. Seismic period 6th to 11th, central on the 8th and 9th.

KICKED IN THE FACE.

Peter Oke, son of Mr. Wm. Oke of Hurondale, had a narrow escape with his life on Sunday last. While going around a horse on the farm the animal kicked viciously at him, striking him in the face and inflicting painful wounds which necessitated several stitches to close. The wounds are very painful and his face is badly swolen.

HARPLEY

Miss Rona Hickey who has been visiting relatives at Grand Bend for a week returned home on Monday.—Mrs. John Sherritt spent a few days with her daughter Mrs. J. L. Amos, of Brinsley last week.—Mr. Rich. Jennison and family of Parkhill visited at Mr. J. J. Taylors on Sunday.—Mrs. W. H. Nickles is spending a couple of weeks in Parkhill.—Messrs. Thos. Love and Robert Taylor took in the circus at Pt. Huron Monday.—Rob and Colin Love visited their cousins of Brewster for a few days.

Probably one of the happiest groups that have met at Grand Bend this season was that of the two families of Love's, which met on the 22nd, when about seventy-five old and young, gathered around one table. This is the first gathering of the families, the predecessors of whom were two first cousins named Hugh Love, who came from Scotland in 1843, and were distinguished as "Big Hugh" and "Little Hugh". The day was all that could be desired, and the people from Kippen and Hillsgreen met with their Stephen kin about 11 a.m. After earnest greetings dinner was served by the ladies—chicken hot and chicken cold, and still more chicken. And the way that young and old did eat was surprising. The afternoon was spent boating, roaming, and on the merry-go-round. After supper the gathering broke up to meet at Bayfield next year on a date to be decided later.

A SERIOUS CHARGE

David Wilson, a farm laborer, of Grand Bend, was arrested last week, on a charge of indecent assault preferred by Miss Anna Smith, a 15-year-old girl, living at the Bend. Wilson met the girl in Grand Bend, it is alleged, and asked her to go for a drive. She consented and he then took her to a stable about half a mile outside the village, where the horse was supposed to be. There, it is claimed, he attacked the girl. She put up a plucky fight and for some time they wrestled in the building. The young woman was nearly overcome, when a man who happened to pass the stable heard the struggle and investigated. He seized Wilson and held him, and Constable Oliver was immediately summoned, and the man arrested. Constable Whitesides, of Hensall, took him in charge, and preferred a very serious charge against him. The first charge against the prisoner was withdrawn, and later another that of indecent assault, was preferred. He was taken before magistrate Petty at Hensall, on Friday last and was committed, but was released in bail. Wilson is 24 years of age, and well known about the village of Grand Bend. He has sailed considerably, having acted cook on several boats. Of late he has been employed as a farm laborer in the neighborhood of Grand Bend.

GOOD POSITIONS.

The Clinton Business College is a worthy link in a chain of Seven Business Colleges located in the cities of London, Peterboro, Welland and the towns of Orangeville, Walkerton, Wingham and Clinton. Owing to its High-grade work it is affiliated with the Commercial Educators' Association of Canada. It is freely admitted that owing to these connections its student get the very best positions. Fall Openings are on Aug. 28th., and Sept. 5th. but at this school each student is instructed privately at his or her own desk, students may enter any day. Many students study all at home and others partly at home and finish at at the College. As Spotton Colleges are the largest trainers in Canada and have thirty years experience, it would be well for young people to get their training there. Last year Mr. Spotton trained over 1200 young people and placed them in good positions. What he has done for thousands of others he can do for you.

STEPHEN COUNCIL

The council of the Township of Stephen met in the Clerk's office, Crediton, on Friday evening, Aug. 25, at 7 p.m. at the call of the reeve for general business.

All members were present excepting Councillor Love.

Kellerman—Yearley—"That By-law No. 181 being a By-law to appoint Alonzo Hodgins collector of taxes for the year 1911 having been read the third time be passed and signed by the Reeve and Clerk and the Seal of the corporation attached thereto".—Carried.

Yearley—Sanders—"That the abutments on Halst's Bridge be lowered 12".—Carried.

Sanders—Kellerman—"That the iron work for Ford's Bridge be awarded to The Hamilton Bridge Works Co. Limited, of Hamilton.—Carried.

Kellerman — Sanders — "That Joseph Lawson be allowed to take the gravel for the abutments and floor of Halst's Bridge from Trebner's Pit if satisfactory material can be procured and if it complies with the specifications and contract and that Mr. Lawson make an allowance off his contract of $35."—Carried.

The council adjourned to meet again for the regular monthly business meeting on September 4th, 1911 at 1 p.m.

HENRY EILBER, Tp. Clerk.

PRUNES TO COST MORE

Prunes will be high this year, and this boarding house staple will be scarce. The market is bare at the present time, and when they do come in it is expected that they will cost at least 15 cents a pound, if not a couple of cents more.

EXETER BOWLING TOURNEY

The first Tournament of the Exeter Bowling Association last week was a decided success from every point of view. The weather while threatening on Thursday and Friday remained free from rain, and the different events were run off in good time. Twenty-eight rinks were in competition, twenty-one being from outside points. The London Thistles were represented by three rinks, Seaforth three and Clinton three, Hensall, Granton and Dashwood two each, St. Marys, Lucknow, Ripley, Stratford, Ingersoll and Blyth one each. The Bawden Trophy and club bags were won by Langford of London, with Dr. Sellery of Hensall second. Heaman of London got the Association, with Colling of Seaforth second. The Consolation went to McInnes of Ripley by a default from Stevenson of Clinton, who took second. The first in the Scotch Doubles was won by Carling and Elliott, and the second by Bawden and Creech. The visitors paid many a compliment to the Exeter bowlers on the excellent condition of the green and the valuable prizes. The decoration committee had the place nicely decorated, and during the whole tourney the ground was the scene of an animated crowd of interested players and spectators. An interesting incident was the fact that Hugh Spackman was a member of the Langford trophy-winning rink (that rink having come one man short), and he has since been made an honorary member of the London Thistle Club. The success attending this tournament is a strong warrant to the local bowlers to make the event an annual affair. Following are the results in detail.—

FLY WORSE THAN TIGER.

The house-fly is born in offal—no where else. The manure pile and the cesspool are his home. It is from these haunts that he comes to visit the kitchen, the dining room, and the nursery. He drags his feet across the bread, dips them in the butter, wipes them on the meat, and bathes in the milk. He seeks out the sickroom and sips the excretions of the consumptive, the typhoid fever patient, and the child with summer complaint.

MOUNT CARMEL

The annual picnic held in connection with Mt. Carmel parish took place on Tuesday afternoon and evening, when a large crowd assembled and an enjoyable time was spent. Seven rinks of bowlers competed for the silver vase, and it was won by Jack Hoover's Clinton rink. The usual sumptuous tea was served. After tea an open air program was given, one of the features of which was a debate on reciprocity by Messrs. Smith and Elliott, Liberal and Conservative candidates, respectively, in North Middlesex, M. Y. McLean of South Huron and Mr. J. P. Nunan of Brant. Mr. Babb of Lucan and Mr. Will Farrell of Woodstock gave several solos, and the latter did some pleasing step dancing. The London Harpers furnished the music. The picnic will go on record as one of the most successful ever held.

SOMETHING ABOUT MOROCCO

IT IS TO THE WEST WHAT EGYPT IS TO THE EAST.

Its Bearing on Europe—The Powers Attracted by Its Strategic Position.

For many years things in Morocco have been going from bad to worse, says The New York Sun. Anarchy in a more or less pronounced form has held sway in most parts of the Shereefian Empire. Not only has the greater part of that Empire got out of hand of the central authority at Fez, but even that portion which was more immediately under the eye of the Maghzen, and therefore, at least in semblance, under Governmental control, has become the prey of rival Moroccan pretenders. Now if Morocco was in far off Arabia or in farther India or in farthest China one would not feel that its condition was such a menace to the peace of Europe and of the world. It could go to pieces gradually or quickly, as the case may be; it could even be divided among the hungry European powers craving for colonial expansion, and no upheaval in world-politics would necessarily result.

But the geographical position of the country and the complexity of interests of which it is naturally the centre make of it more than a mere pawn in the intricate game of chess which is being played upon the political board. It bears the same relation to many problems dealing with the west as Egypt does to those of the east. Both countries are intimately connected with the concerns of Europe. Both are Mediterranean powers: the one guards the eastern, the other the western end.

A PREY TO THE POWERS.

The failure of Morocco to move forward of its own accord has made it a natural prey to one or the other of the great European colonizing powers. England's commercial interests in the country have always been great, but another powerful claimant was on hand: France, and her position as a great Mediterranean power and as a neighbor to Morocco made her claim in every sense a valid one. The rivalry of these two powers in Morocco threatened to become acute; but Egypt was on Great Britain's hands. There, too, France was the great competitor of England, and an obstacle to the consolidation of England's influence. To be free of this incubus was an absolute necessity. The treaty of 1904 paved the way for the laying of the old conflict between the two countries in a manner that does honor to the two statemen who carried it to a successful issue. France now believed that she had a free hand in Morocco.

Unfortunately Germany came upon the scene of world activity at a time when the greater part of the globe which is available for the founding of colonial empires was either within the grasp or in the purview of other powers. Though she has repeatedly asserted that she has no lust for overseas dominions and is only desirous to become the open door for her ever-increasing commerce, facts belie such words. She soon saw the possibilities of Morocco, not only because of its inherent riches, but also because of its political worth and its evident inability to stand upon its own legs. She went about the business with her accustomed thoroughness.

A CHECK UPON GERMANY.

Now it is widely held that the "act" which resulted from the Algeciras Conference in 1906 was in a large measure a diplomatic check upon German aspirations, as it placed the organization of the Moroccan police under Spanish and French military officers. Though she did not succeed in breaking through the Anglo-French entente cordiale or in cutting into the Hispano-French understanding, Germany was successful in making her voice heard and in asserting her right to be consulted in all great world-problems that come up for discussion in which European interests are at stake. And she drew a cord across the French path in Morocco.

On two occasions Germany has given the plainest of hints that she had claims in Morocco; one at the time of the Casablanca incident in 1908, when German deserters into the French Foreign Legion were forcibly seized by the German Consul; the other on July 1 of this year when a German warship suddenly made its appearance in the harbor of Agadir. On both occasions Germany acted with the same brutal abruptness which had characterized the Imperial intervention at Tangier.

AGADIR'S IMPORTANCE.

The choice of Agadir as the spot for the new intervention has been made with consummate skill. It is a natural harbor; some say it is the best harbor along the whole coast of Morocco. It is on the Atlantic. It is the approach to the region of Sus, which is known to be rich in mineral ores and where far-reaching concesssions, though not uncontested, have been made to the Mannesmann firm, and the German "Morocco1Mine Syndicate." It cannot be said to be in the "sphere of interest" which either Spain or France has pegged out for itself. But more than this: the holder of the port of Agadir can in time of war menace the trade of the Atlantic, and that trade is largely British.

The official reason put forward by Germany for this action is the request for protection made by certain German firms doing business in Agadir. But the whole country around that place has been perfectly quiet: no lives of German subjects have been in danger, and German commercial interests there as in the whole of Morocco, are very small when compared to those of England and France.

A TERRIBLE RECORD OF CHILDREN'S DEATHS

As every mother knows the death rate of little ones in Canada during the hot summer months far exceeds that of any other season of the year. The reason for this is that the excessive heat brings on those dreaded troubles, cholera infantum, diarrhoea, dysentery and other stomach and bowel complaints. These come on so quickly and with such little warning that often baby is beyond help before the mother realizes he is ill. During the hot summer months the mother must be constantly on her guard to see that baby's bowels are working regularly and his little stomach is kept sweet and pure. Baby's Own Tablets should always be kept in the home as they are the mother's greatest friend. A dose now and then will prevent these troubles, or if they do come on suddenly they will be quickly banished by the Tablets. The Tablets are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Man Tells of His Brother Dying Century and a Half Before

The presiding magistrate at a police-court in Syria was astonished to hear a witness, when asked if he had any brothers, reply that he had one, but that he died 148 years ago.

Pressed for an explanation, witness stated that he was the issue of a second marriage. His father married his first wife in 1769, at the age of nineteen, and the following year there was born a son, who died when only a few months old. The latter's father married again in 1820, at the age of seevnty, and witness was born the year following.

Being eighty-nine years of age when giving evidence, the interval since the death of the first child was thus extended to over 140 years.

AN ARCHBISHOP'S RECREATION

Riding was a favorite diversion of the late Archbishop Maclagan, and in addition to this he was a good whip, and frequently drove a pair; while another recreation in which he indulged in the winter, when opportunity offered, was curling on the ice. He had also a great love of animals.

It is not generally known that his Grace was an artist, and painted cleverly in water-colors. The inhabitants of Keswick at one time became quite accustomed to the sight of the archbishop seated sketching on the private landing-stage of the beautiful estate of Fawe Park, which borders the Derwentwater, and was rented by Dr. Maclagan for his holidays, and there are several admirable little works of his in existence.

"I punished you merely to show my love for you," said the father. "T-that's all right," sobbed the little felow, "It's a g-good thing I ain't b-big enough to return your l-love."

"Won't you please give me an order?" pleaded the persistent traveller. "Certainly!" replied the crusty proprietor. "Get out!"

AN IMPRESSIVE SIGHT

Giant Iceberg Seen in the South Atlantic

Probably one of the largest icebergs seen of recent years near the track of ocean-going steamers was viewed from the liner Oravia as she passed the Falkland Islands in the South Atlantic on her way to Liverpool. A graphic description of the monster berg was given by an officer of the ship. "The night was cloudy," he said. "There was a cutting wind and the temperature of the sea was down to 33 degrees when the great iceberg came into view—a huge mass 500 feet high, partly covered with mist, a long shelving shore of ice, with the sea breaking upon it as upon a wide, desolate beach. When the moon appeared the sight was one never to be forgotten. We gazed upon what seemed to be a floating city of ice as large as Liverpool, with its towers, its temples, its tapering monuments, shooting up in fantastic architecture, shimmering in the moonlight like polished silver. It is the lot of few to see such a sight." Everyone on board the Oravia was spellbound by the majestic beauty of the scene. The berg, which was visible for some hours, is supposed to be the detached portion of a permanent Antarctic icefield.

THE NAVY'S DIRIGIBLE

An Accident Has Occurred to Delay the Launching of the Mysterious Craft

Few undertakings have been respon- the rigid dirigible balloon that is being built at Barrow for the Navy. Early in the year it figured in the War Secretary's statement in the House of Commons as evidence of the Army Council's attentiveness to the subject of aerial navigation. At frequent intervals it has been described in the newspapers, usually in the redundant terms of appreciation, which, in connection with aeronautical matters, the public appear to love. Thus, the size, speed, cost, armament and general utility of the new vessel, were all tremendous; it was being built under an armed guard, its secrets evidently being of the highest import, and so on, for the past ten months.

It now appears certain that the launching will not take place this year; that there has been an accident by which part of the vessel has been destroyed.

Dr. J. D. Kellogg's Dysentery Cordial is prepared from drugs known to the profession as thoroughly reliable for the cure of cholera, dysentery, diarrhoea, griping pains and summer complaints. It has been used successfully by medical practitioners for a number of years with gratifying results. If suffering from any summer complaint it is just the medicine that will cure you. Try a bottle. It sells for 25 cents.

GOOD REASON WHY.

"Why don't you speak for yourself, John?" asked Priscilla.

"Because," answered John, "I have not had a chance to get a word in edgewise."

Fresh Supplies in Demand.—Wherever Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil has been introduced increased supplies have been ordered, showing that wherever it goes this excellent Oil impresses its power on the people. No matter in what latitude it may be found its potency is never impaired. It is put up in most portable shape in bottles and can be carried without fear of breakage.

CONSOLING.

Struggling Passenger (on railroad train)—"This window sticks so I can't get it up."

Conductor—"Yes. Wood is swollen a little by the rain. It'll be all right in a few days."

It is better to avert a war than to fight and win; better to prevent sickness than to cure it. Keep a bottle of Hamlins Wizard Oil in the house and see how much suffering it saves.

LOGIC.

"Earlie, why don't you comb your hair?"

"'Cause I ain't got a comb."

"Well, why don't you tell your mamma to buy one?"

"'Cause then I'd have to comb my hair."

It is a fact beyond dispute that one packet of Wilson's Fly Pads has killed a bushel of house flies. This is more than could possibly be caught on three hundred sheets of sticky paper. All Druggists, Grocers and General Stores sell Wilson's Fly Pads. Be sure you get the genuine Wilson's.

"What was the happiest moment of your life?" asked the sweet girl. "The happiest moment of my life," answered the old bachelor, "was when the jeweller took back an engagement-ring and gave me sleeve-links in exchange."

Corns are caused by the pressure of tight boots, but no one need be troubled with them long when so simple a remedy as Holloway's Corn Cure is available.
