What the bond houses and municipalities are hoping for is, of course, a reversal of form in London, and a renewed demand for our municipal debentures. This would mean that many bonds purchased during this year will show a very handsome increase in price of two to four points. It would also make a very good demand for many debentures which city councils have been afraid of issuing owing to the lack of demand from London. For though practically all our municipal debentures are sold to Canadian bond houses, most of these place the greater percentage of the large issues in London.

That is one reason why the London market is so important. Another reason is that the English investor is satisfied with a lower yield than the Canadian and so most of our low yield bonds are sold there.

Moreover, our railroads do practically all their financing in London. Last December the Canadian Northern sold no less than $35,000,000 of bonds in one block in London at a comparatively low rate. It would have taken years to have placed those bonds in Canada. The railroads need more money to keep up to the great expenditures they are making on new construction. The pessimist referred to in the first sentence had better talk to some of our railroad presidents before he persuades himself as to the accuracy of his statements.

THREE NEW LEPERS.

Now 22 Inmates of the Lazaretto in New Brunswick.

A despatch from Ottawa says: The Director-General of Public Health, Dr. F. Montizambert, reports that three new cases of leprosy were admitted to the Leper Lazaretto at Tracadia, N.B., during the year, and one death occurred. According to him there are at this date twenty-two patients there, twelve males and ten females. Eighteen are of French Acadian origin, two of English, one of Icelandic and one of Russian origin. The Minister of Agriculture sanctioned the gift of a small organ for the use of the patients to relieve the monotony of their lives. The Leper Lazaretto at Darcy Island, B. C., has not been occupied by any leper since the last one was deported, previous to this year.

THE FEDERAL REVENUE.

For First Three Months of Year the Gain Exceeds $8,000,000

A despatch from Ottawa says: The financial statement for the first three months of the fiscal year, closing on June 30, shows total receipts of $37,838,110, as compared with $29,239,646 for the same period last year. For the month of June alone, the receipts were $13,181,174 as compared with $10,666,205 in June, 1911. The big increase is practically all due to increased customs collections. The total expenditure for the three months, so far as accounted for at the end of June, was $12,481,931, as compared with $8 935,732 for the like period in 1911. In addition, there have been expenditures chargeable to capital account, amounting to $1,533,920, as against $2,303,730 for the first three months of 1911. During the first quarter of the fiscal year, the debt has been decreased by $6,021,138, as compared with $3,739,960 for the same period last year.

IMPROVE VICTORIA HARBOR.

Government Will Spend a Million on the Pacific Port.

A despatch from Ottawa says: It is understood that the Government has decided to call for tenders in the near future for the construction of important harbor improvements at Victoria, B.C. The work will probably cost over a million dollars. The contemplated improvements will do much to increase the importance of Victoria as a Pacific port.

A NEW NORTHERN RAILWAY

Edmonton Will Be Given Connections With Hudson Bay and the North.

A despatch from Edmonton says: Financed by British capitalists of international repute, holding a Federal charter, which provides for 1,800 miles of new railway construction, giving Canada a new transcontinental line, with Fort Churchill on the east and Port Essington on the west as terminals, and connecting Edmonton with Lac la Riche, Fort McMurray and Lake Athabasca, the Northern Territorial Railway will commence a survey of its route from Edmonton north-easterly in the course of the next few days, and before the close of the season a start will probably be made on the actual construction of the grade. The corporation is capitalized at $40,000,000, and under the charter, which was granted by the Dominion Parliament at its last session, has bonding powers amounting to $40,000 per mile. The length of this new transcontinental from the coast to Fort Churchill will be 1,450 miles.

TORONTO CORRESPONDENCE

INTERESTING NOTES FROM THE CAPITAL OF THE PROVINCE.

Lacrosse and Base Ball—A Municipal Abattoir—Toronto's Harbor—The Late Mr. H. P. Dwight.

Something is the matter with Canada's national sport. "Big Four" championship lacrosse games between the best teams in the world that money can hire draw a scant 2,000 spectators, while mediocre base ball between eastern league teams on a Saturday will easily bring together 6,000 to 10,000 persons. Even motor cycle races, a newly established sport, of doubtful staying powers, attracted 15,000 people the other day.

Some critics say that the trouble lies with the "Big Four" organization. Already there are rumors that the N. L. U. will be revivified next season and will get a team in Toronto, probably R. J. Fleming's Torontos, for the Tecumseh management and the N. L. U. officials show no sign yet of burying the hatchet.

ROUGH PLAY THE TROUBLE.

But the trouble probably lies deeper than any mere question of league organization. In the writer's opinion it dates back several years, when brutal play was allowed to play a prominent part in the decision of the big league lacrosse contests. Big crowds attended the games, "games" by courtesy, for many of them were disgraceful exhibitions. It is hard to say why the brutality was permitted. It may have been incompetent officials, or a mistaken idea on the part of the management that the crowds wanted to see a sort of Spanish bull fight, or just a species of depravity on the part of the players themselves, or a combination of all of these. For a period the best player was the man who could lay out the most opponents and not get caught at it. The result was inevitable. A large proportion of the decent public got disgusted and cut out lacrosse. And even those who delight in seeing the gore fly want to be in decent company. So the attendance fell off, and when the penalties became more numerous the games became farcical from their one-sidedness. And the attendance dropped some more.

Therein seems to lie the real trouble with Canada's national game in the big leagues. It can be built up again, but it will probably take some years of hard and careful work.

CITY ENTERS BUTCHER TRADE.

The City Council has committed itself to an expenditure of $300,000 for a municipal abattoir; in other words, a municipal wholesale butcher shop, and thus expresses a determination not to let the meat business of Toronto fall into the hands of a meat trust, such as dominates the famous Chicago stock yards, and through them most of the cities of the United States.

It will be interesting to see how the problem works out in Toronto. Toronto has been in the cattle market business for many years; in fact for a long time it had a monopoly in that department. But it did not take full advantage of its opportunity, with the result that now the city cattle yards are altogether too small, are inconveniently situated, and a big proportion of the business is going to the privately-operated union stock yards, which occupy commodious premises at West Toronto.

It is said the Union Stock Yards form a potential nucleus for a Canadian meat trust. One of the most active firms operating there is the Canadian branch of the Swift Co. of Chicago. Recently the two largest Canadian firms, the Harris Abattoir Co. and Gunn's, which formerly bought cattle both at the city yards and the Union Stock yards, announced that in future they would buy only at the latter. And it is said the fourth large firm, Park-Blackwell, will shortly follow suit.

The result is that the city, to save its cattle market, is forced into the abattoir business. A municipal abattoir will enable the small independent wholesale butchers, of whom there are perhaps a score, to kill their animals and distribute to the retail trade economically; and their business, on the other hand, will keep the city cattle yards going.

Without the city abattoir, and with the big firms buying only at the Union Stock Yards the business in the city yards would soon dwindle to insignificant proportions, the independent wholesale butchers would be compelled to go to the big fellows for their supplies, and the whole business would be effectually centralized in perhaps four firms.

This is what the City Council wants to prevent.

A HARBOR, BUT NO PORT.

Toronto's new harbor Commission has not got much to show for its efforts yet. But, of course, it has not been on the job long enough to have had a chance.

As everyone knows, Toronto has one of the finest harbors, if not the very finest, on the great lakes. And yet the amount of shipping it accommodates is practically negligible. For example, the tonnage of the Sault canals for the month of June was 10,700,000 tons, as compared to 7,400,000 tons in June, 1911. While Toronto harbor's traffic for the month was only 271,000 tons, as against 251,000 in June, 1911.

Relatively, the lake shipping from Toronto has been dwindling year by year for the last generation. It is only citizens well on in years who remember when the waterfront used to be dotted with grain elevators and the docks were always busy.

Perhaps the day of grain traffic by boat from Toronto is past, but there are plans on foot to make Toronto again a great port for other purposes. That's the chief purpose of the new Harbor Commission. The city owns a large acreage on the waterfront, and to this acreage it is hoped to attract large industral factories. Docks and wharves whose cost will total many hundred thousands of dollars are being projected. At present when a boat from the Atlantic works its way up through the St. Lawrence canals it cannot find a place to dock. But that is to be quickly changed. The sympathy of the Dominion Government has been enlisted and extensive dredging operations are now under way. But, of course, the great boon will be the new Welland canal and the deepening of the St. Lawrence route Then Toronto hopes to be a real ocean port and also on the highway from the ocean to the head of the Lakes. If the factory development progresses, as hoped for, Toronto harbor will change from a piece of pretty scenery to the centre of a hive of industry.

THE PASSING OF H. P. DWIGHT.

The passing of Mr. H. P. Dwight, President of the G. N. W. Telegraph Company, removes one of Canada's landmarks. The oldest surviving telegrapher in America, his reminiscences went back to primitive days in Canada. He "discovered" Hon. George A. Cox, took him into the employ of the G. N. W. Co as office boy, and taught him the language of the wire. Senator Cox was a prominent mourner at the graveside.

Mr. Dwight was one of the most likeable men. The bent of his mind was well illustrated by the chief hobby of his later years. It was the Royal Canadian Humane Society which had for its chief purpose the rewarding of deeds of bravery. To hear of a deed of heroism, no matter how unspectacular the circumstances and reward, the hero was a source of pleasure which never lost its power.

He took a keen interest in public affairs up to his last days, but never succumbed to the modern theories of public ownership with which he was always somewhat out of sympathy. He was a frequent correspondent of the newspapers over the signature "Dw," but he was always moderate in the expression of his views and no newspaper declined to publish his letters, even when they were opposed to the publisher's policy. He was possibly private ownership's sanest advocate.

Quarantine Station Reports a Bad Year Among the Immigrants.

A despatch from Ottawa says: In a report to the Minister of Agriculture, Dr. G. G. Martineau, of the quarantine station, Grosse Isle, Quebec, states that the year ended March 31, 1912, has been a bad one as far as quarantinable disease is concerned. Six passenger vessels arrived in quarantine with smallpox on board, two with cholera, and one with typhus fever. Two births and seven deaths occurred in the hospital during the year. The doctor announces that two very uncommon cases have made an appearance, cholera and typhus fever.

Three hundred and sixty-seven vessels underwent quarantine inspection during the year ending March 31, 1912, a decrease of eleven as compared with last year, due to labor strikes in Great Britain during the summer. The total number of passengers examined was 193,313, an increase in the year of 18,146. Infections or contagious diseases was reported or discovered at the quarantine station in every passenger boat sailing to that port on one or more occasions with the exception of two, and the patients transferred from vessels to hospitals were 102.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

A significant point of view is that of the head of a great English firm, Mr. Seebohm Rowntree, who has written to the London Daily Mail criticising the churches for not arousing the classes to a keener sense of the inequalities of fortune which are "so utterly opposed to the great principle of brotherhood. Had they played their part in making us vitally conscious," writes Mr. Rowntree, "that all our opportunities and talents and possessions should be regarded as a trust, to be utilized not for our own ends but for the benefit of the community, we should never have heard of labor unrest. It is because we have forgotten our trust that labor rises and says to us: 'If neither love nor justice can induce you to share the good things of the world with your co-workers on fair terms, we who have suffered for generations must demand our share by force.'

"We must recognize that if justice is to be done to the workers it will mean sacrifice on the part of the rich. No doubt, as the demand for higher wages and better conditions of work becomes more insistent, the employing classes will improve their methods of organization, and in many industries great improvements can be made in the lot of the workers without materially lessening the earnings of capital. But this will not solve the problem. The poverty at one end of the social scale will not be removed except by encroaching heavily upon the great riches at the other end. I think during the next few years we shall see labor organized more effectively than ever before, successfully demanding a much larger share of the wealth annually produced."

This great English business man sees very much farther than most men of his world. But the hurrying events of recent years in Great Britain must be illuminating to many of the propertied classes. The organization of labor is becoming more inclusive, more militant, and more effective each year, while the pressure of economic necessity supplies an ever increasing propulsion upon the English masses. The increase of the cost of living relative to wage increase is substantially greater, and is felt even by the classes above the wage earner acutely. Meanwhile political and social philosophy is modifying the thought of the educated classes. The movement toward large social readjustments based on the economic revolution of the last century is growing in depth and power, and perhaps the most important question in the world of European civilization is whether these readjustments can be brought about without revolution. If this be possible anywhere, it should be in England.

MORE ABOUT CLOVER.

How to Deal With Weeds Which Contaminate Clover Seed Crops.

In the production of alfalfa seed the weeds to be especially watched are ragweed, ribgrass, bladder campion, trefoil and sweet clover. Usually it is only the perennial weeds which contaminate the seed if the killed-out and thin places of field are taken care of with a scythe.

In alsike, the docks are sometimes common. They should be pulled when in blossom after the ground has been softened with a rain, or they may be picked out when cutting the seed and burned. The campions, especially night flowering catchfly or sticky cockle, when in blossom shoot up above the alsike and if not too thick may be either pulled or the tops cut off with a sickle. It would be necessary to hand-pull wild mustard from alsike and spud out any ox-eye daisy. Trefoil is hard to deal with in alsike.

In red clover most of the wild mustard disappears with the first cutting. The rest must be hand-pulled. Docks should be cut or pulled if they appear after the crop is removed for hay and any other perennials must be dealt with in a similar way. Ribgrass and campion seeds are altogether too common in red clover seed, as are also those of ragweed and foxtail. Sweet clover is becoming quite prevalent and is most easily removed from the first crop by pulling or spudding after a rain.

THE PERFECTION OF GLORY

A High and Mighty Thing, Significant of the Presence of a Kingly Being

Then flew one of the seraphim unto me, having a live coal in his hand, which he had taken with the tongs from off the altar.—Isaiah vi. 6.

These words are taken from the description of a thrilling experience that Isaiah, the seer of Israel, had in the House of God. He had gone there seeking God, in response to an impulse that, some time or other, stirs every mind. He had a never-to-be-forgotten experience — inspiring, uplifting. In a vision of the Eternal One received there the evident concern of the Lord of Glory for the seer himself filled the life of Isaiah with power and strength for the rest of his days, though they were often fraught with hardship and despair.

The picture is inspiring and appropriate for us, because it is prophetic of the genius of the House of God to-day—it foreshadows what the worship of the Church of Christ was to mean to men, when God should establish it in the earth.

Note the experience of the seer in that place of worship. God was there and the place was filled with the perfection of glory. Reverence was there—reverence of

THE UNCHANGING TRUTH.

Authority was there—the unquestioned authority of perfect Goodness. Holiness was there—the divine Purity and Righteousness. Love and compassion were there—perfect and supreme, beautifying and transforming all. More—Forgiveness was there, divinest of all virtues. Isaiah felt most keenly his own wretchedness, and that of the sin of the world. "Woe is me," he cries, "for I am of unclean lips, and I dwell in the midst of a people of unclean lips." Then in repentance was made opportunity for forgiveness. There flew one of the seraphim unto him with the live coal from off the altar, saying, "Lo, this hath touched thy lips and thine iniquity is taken away, and thy sin is purged." And he was a new man, forgiven and purged.

These are the blessings held forth to men most fully in the Gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ. We are assured that God may be found, unquestionably, in His Word, the Bible. This Word, ministered to meet the greatest, the first need of men, is held forth to every seeking life. And more—that He can be found is assured by the fact, in addition to man seeking God, He has come into the world

SEEKING MEN.

He sent His Son that the Son, being lifted up, might draw all men unto Him. This is the strongest, greatest message ever told to men. It promises oneness with God in His eternal perfections and perfect life. Many can testify to having this experience in the House of God, actual and real, as did the seer Isaiah of old.

Again, see the benefits this experience gives. In finding God, the Truth. "Ye shall know the Truth," says Christ, "and the Truth will set you free." We find goodness, with its precious blessings, purity and righteousness with their resplendent beauty, love as broad and deep as the sea, and forgiveness, sweetest of all blessings, purifying and ennobling life. These are the fundamental blessings—the ones that transform manhood and womanhood, that create character and send us out into life and its tasks fitted to do and to triumph. We then gain more than meat and drink—we gain God's kingdom.

Isaiah's experience in the House of God may be the common experience of mankind. It is possible for us all to realize the blessings of the life and kingdom of the Eternal One.—Rev. F. J. Baum.

Fashion Hints

COIFFURE MODES.

A word on the subject of fashions in hairdressing cannot come amiss when the season's fashions are considered. And certainly the vista opening before us is a pleasing one, for there is a charming simplicity characterizing the new modes which cannot fail to appeal to artistic and cultured taste.

Indeed, this simplicity is the keynote of the new modes in hairdressing, elaboration being avoided in every way, and it is "more matter with less art," or rather, the art which disguises art, that is conspicuous, that has been the case of recent years. In Paris this feeling is carried almost to an extreme, and some coiffures are seen in which the hair is plainly tucked up on the neck in a manner almost unpleasantly reminiscent of the early Victorian net.

Leaving such exaggerations on one side, however, there can be nothing but praise for the gracious swathing of the head with plain untwisted coils.

LARGE HATS.

Hats are immense, and there does not seem any prospect for the present of their growing smaller. They are veritable cart wheels, and actually much larger than the wheel of a perambulator. Much of their effect depends upon the angle at which they are pinned upon the hair.

It is not always easy to succeed with this angle, and a hat bought in a shop is, consequently, occasionally a very bad disappointment. There ought to be laws of latitude and longitude whereby the purchaser might learn exactly the angle which the brim should bear to the line of the eyes.

Those who dislike large hats have the alternative, and a very agreeable one, of the rather large turban, with the trimming massed on the top, or one straight feather standing up at the left side. Another alternative equally agreeable is that of the "plateau," which can be arranged before the looking glass in as many curves as may suit the wearer.

RETURN OF THE GIRDLE.

The colored sash and girdle is coming back, this pretty fashion which has been lost for the past few years in the vogue for Empire and one-piece effects, will be welcomed by many. There is, no doubt, that a touch of color at the waistline adds greatly to the becomingness of the white frock, while the smart effect on a gown of chiffon or lingerie is not to be questioned. Soft shades of blue, rose, ecru, green, red, lavender as well as black are mostly seen, in some cases the crushed girdle ends in a crossover finish at the left side; other styles show a narrower girdle with military sash ends, that is one short end coming under the girdle and falling over the top. The military girdle is quite the newest thing, the ends finished with embroidery, fringe or fancy ornaments are smart, while the latest modes show the use of printed chiffon in East Indian colorings.

WHITE PIQUE IN VOGUE.

White pique is being revived. It is seen in coats, suits and dresses. A rouleau effect of a very simple nature on the skirt is the latest note in these plain frocks. It is shown on one made of white pique which has a waistband of pevenche-blue silk, a piece let in on the neck of the same; also pipings on the sleeve.

A broad band of black velvet ribbon on which blue buttons are mounted, appears on the blouse, and is brought down to front the waistband.

The fulness necessary for walking is secured by the arrangement of the slight draping of the side panels of the skirt into the back panel. The front panel is, of course, absolutely plain. The effect is of a double skirt at the side, and the arrangement, while it requires to be managed by a master hand, has an assured popularity before it in the plain summer frocks.

GEORGE BRYAN BRUMMEL

ENGLISH LEADER OF FASHION IN 18TH CENTURY.

Was Nicknamed "Beau Brummel" on Account of His Loud Dressing and Foppishness.

Beau Brummel was the nickname given to George Bryan Brummel, a man who was famous in his day as the arbiter of fashion and for representing the perfection of taste in the matter of dress. No anecdotes of his very early years are known except that he cried because his juvenile stomach was not infinitely distended so that he could eat more of his aunt's delicious tarts.

Brummel first came to notice at Eton, as a student, twelve years old, where he was called Buck Brummel. There he distinguished himself, not at cricket playing, or fighting, but as the introducer of a gold buckle for the white stock, by never being flogged, and by his ability at tasting cheese. Then Brummel went to Oriel College, where he made his mark by a studied indifference to discipline, a dislike of study, and an aversion to steel forks, long before silver ones were common at the tables of the middle classes to which his parents belonged.

He became one of the competitors for a prize to be given for the best poem. He failed, and in disgust he left college at the age of seventeen, having been there less than a year. However, if he had little learning, he had learned two things, how to gain celebrated friends, and how to cut any of his acquaintances who ceased to be of any benefit to him.

JOINED THE ARMY.

By the death of his father Beau Brummel received £25,000, which he spent in living, and when that was gone he subsisted on what he obtained by gambling, borrowing and begging. He obtained a coventry in the Tenth Hussars, of which George, Prince Regent, afterwards George IV., was colonel—a regiment of fops, the most expensive, best-dressed and worst-moraled in the British army.

A walk Brummel chanced to take on the terrace of Windsor was a lucky circumstance for him. The prince-colonel observed him, asked who that exceedingly well-dressed person was, and the Beau was introduced. An acquaintance was followed by an intimacy which later the coxcomb developed into unbounded impudence.

By this step his reputation was made, which he kept up for some years. He had an immense fund of good, but not witty sayings. His friends pronounced him a charming companion, he entered the highest circles of England and his rise in his regiment was rapid. In three years he was at the head of the troop, to the disgust of the older officers.

In 1798 Brummel sold his commission. His reason for it was never thoroughly explained, but the unsettled state of Europe at that time rendered it highly probable that his regiment might be sent into active service and he preferred a drawing-room to a battlefield.

PRINCE OF BEAUX.

He then commenced the profession of a beau, and became known as the Prince of Beaux, while his patron was called the beau of princes. At this time he was perfect in point of figure, with an intelligent but not a handsome face. He had light brown hair, a nose somewhat Roman, and a beautifully shaped hand. Dress at that time became very untidy. Many of the leading men of the day affected supreme contempt for all outward adornments and the mode of a gentleman's dress had come to be as slovenly as possible.

Brummel, who had been conspicuous from boyhood for the neatness of his attire, now determined to be the best-dressed man in London. He took care to display to the best advantage his fine figure in a perfectly-fitting frock coat. But his chief forte lay in his cravat, which before his time was a piece of limp cambric loosely fastened around the throat. He took care to have it slightly starched. Standing before his glass with shirt collar erect and of a prodigious height, he generally applied the cravat to the throat. At first it measured a foot in width. Then bending down artistically the collar, followed by his chin, with slow and regular movements and twelve inches were reduced to four and the tying of the knot followed. He never tried the same cloth but once, and if he failed, off it came, was thrown aside and another tried.

FLATTERED BY KINGS.

He may be excused for being vain, for he was flattered by kings or their representatives, the prince even spending hours in the morning in the Beau's room watching the progress of his toilet. A duchess thought it necessary to warn her daughter to be careful of her behavior when the celebrated Beau Brummel was present, and a creditor was satisfied with a bow from a clubhouse window, and a word from him would ruin a tailor. He sacrificed his manners to his appearance, for he would not remove his hat in the street, after it had been placed in a correct position, to bow to a lady.

Beau Brummel had a famous collection of snuff boxes and was celebrated for the care he took in opening the lid of the box with the thumb of the hand that carried it and delicately taking a pinch with the fingers of the other. He was, in short, a well-dressed snob, but he was flattered and invited everywhere to such a degree that he thought himself a great man.

He boasted that he had but to beckon to the Dukes of Argyle and Jersey and they would come, and he held all but the peerage in disdain. It seems strange that a man of his disposition should be tolerated at a club, if any of the many anecdotes told about him are true. The houses of the British nobility he regarded as inns to be visited by him with valet and portmanteau, with or without invitation, and to be spoken of afterwards as "a house to spend one night in."

He boasted of the prince: "I made him what he is and can unmake him," just the sort of saying to irritate

A BRAINLESS PRINCE.

Brummel dined with the prince, and, carrying his impudence a little too far, he requested the regent to ring the bell. He did so, and when the servant came he ordered "Mr. Brummel's carriage." It may have been the remark made some time before about the Beau having made the regent, or it may have been the sarcasm on the prince's corpulency, but, at any rate, the bell was rung, and it sounded the knell of Brummel, who, however, had a little revenge.

The prince prided himself on his figure, and as he grew broad with years and good living, resorted to stays to preserve it. The Beau, meeting him in company with another gentleman, inquired very coolly, but loud enough for the prince to hear: "Who is your fat friend?" The coolness, presumption and impertinence of the question, perhaps the very best thing the Beau ever said, cut the prince, but gave him the nickname of Dandy Killer.

For a while Brummel patronized the regent's brother, the Duke of York, but he soon got deeper and deeper in debt. He struggled along, and often, with some success, to keep his place among the dandies and wits. Creditors became troublesome, he received the nickname of George the Less in contradistinction of the prince, who was called George the Great, and he came to the conclusion that it would be better to cross the channel.

For the remainder of his life the Beau lived in France, part of the time in a government consulship position, and the remainder of the time supported by his former friends. He finally sustained a paralytic shock, from which he never recovered. His creditors closed around him and he was cast into prison. He showed signs of imbecility; all care of his person went, and from carelessness and disease his habits became so loathsome that an attendant could hardly be found for him. Admission was at last obtained for him into the asylum of the Bon Sauveur, Caen, where he died on March 30, 1840.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

INTERNATIONAL LESSON, JULY 21.

Lesson III.—The growth of the kingdom.—Matt. 4. 26-32, Matt. 13. 33. Golden text, Matt. 6. 10.

MARK. 4. 26-32.

Verse 26. And he said—Not necessarily on the same occasion on which the words recorded in the verses preceding were spoken. Mark has gathered together, rather, several of the utterances of Jesus bearing on the same general theme, even as has Matthew in the thirteenth chapter of his Gospel.

So is the kingdom—The parable which these words introduce is recorded only by Mark. In teaching it supplements the parable of the wheat and the tares, which we shall study in our next lesson.

As if a man should cast seed upon the earth—Deliberately sow his seed with the full expectation that the growth and harvest would follow in due season.

27. Sleep and rise night and day—Go about his daily affairs with no concern regarding the outcome of his sowing venture—live normally, observing the natural routine of toil and recreation.

Spring up and grow—Of its own accord, without the assistance of man, who does not so much as know the secret processes of its germination and development.

28. Beareth—Or, yieldeth.

Of herself—The soil itself furnishes the mosture and nourishment needed for the growth of the seed. The teaching of the parable hinges on the thought of this verse. . . .

Blade . . . ear . . . full grain . . . —The stages of growth are specific, as the processes of nature are orderly. The normal method by which the kingdom of heaven is to be established among men is that of gradual development, both in the individual life and in society at large.

29. When the fruit is ripe—Literally, when the fruit alloweth.

Putteth forth the sickle—Literally. sendeth forth—makes all the arrangements for gathering in the harvest.

30. How shall we liken the kingdom?—There are still other aspects of the Kingdom which Jesus sets forth in this and subsequent parables.

31. A grain of mustard seed—In all probability the seed of the common mustard plant is meant, which in warmer climates grows to a height of twelve or more feet.

Less than all the seeds—That is, smaller than any other seed familiar to those to whom Jesus was speaking, not literally the smallest seed upon the earth.

32. Greater than all the herbs—Those known to the Jews and common in their fields and gardens.

Birds . . . lodge under the shadow thereof—Finding rest and shelter, as well as food, among the branches.

MATTHEW 13. 33.

Another parable—Added here because of its similarity in thought to the parable of the mustard seed.

Like unto leaven—Or, yeast.

Three measures—The word in Greek denotes the Hebrew seah, a measure containing nearly a peck and a half.

Till it was all leavened—Made light by fermentation.

HEALTH HINTS.

People often suffer from weak, undeveloped lungs without suspecting it. True, small, feeble lungs are usually associated with a small, narrow, or sunken chest, but not invariably. By means of the misuse of physical culture it is possible to develop large chest muscles, thus acquiring a big chest measurement, while the lungs remain small and ill-nourished.

Again, lung mischief is often so slow and insidious in its approach that the trouble is not discovered until it is firmly established. Here, however, is a simple test which will tell you whether your lungs are healthy or not.

Take as deep a breath as you can, and then, in a slow but distinct voice, count from one onwards as far as you can without taking in more breath. The number of seconds you can continue counting is a pretty reliable index to the state of your lungs, so you should have someone to time you.

If your lungs are sound and normally developed your range will be between twenty and thirty-five seconds, there is no need to be alarmed; probably your lungs are merely in need of exercise, to be readily obtained by regular deep breathing in pure air. A range of less than ten seconds, however, points to more or less mischief, and you should not delay in having your lungs examined by a medical man.

He who hesitates is lost—especially when he is found out.

Some recent figures published by the Census Office at Ottawa further emphasize the growth of urban population at the expense of rural communities. They show at least that the relative positions of urban and rural population in Canada are quite different from what they were ten years ago. In 1901 the rural population was 3349516 and the urban population 2021799. The figures for 1911 were 3924394 and 3280444 respectively. During the decade urban population has increased two and one-half times faster than rural population. The percentage of increase shows a still greater rate of progress in urban centres, the figures being 17.16 per cent. increase in rural population during the ten years as compared with 65.25 per cent. increase in urban population. In Ontario there are more people living in towns and cities than in the country, the figures for 1911 being, rural 1,194,785, and an urban population of 935,978. Not only has the urban population, but the number of people living on farms in Ontario in 1911, was not as large by 52,144 as it was in 1901. This may not be a large falling-off numerically speaking but it is significant in showing the tendency of people to flock to the towns and cities, and explains, to some extent at least, the reason for the high cost of living. There is enough land in Ontario to maintain a rural population of at least a third more than in the cities, and until the balance is properly adjusted Ontario cannot be said to be making very rapid strides agriculturally.

The man who is most wanted for positions of trust is the one who does not work for mere selfish gain, but for the love of the task. If he does his work for the love of it and not out of consideration alone for the result, he will serve his own interests best, for he will do his work well and thereby make himself indispensible to his employer; and when the time comes to choose a man for a higher position the choice will fall upon him who has done his work well.

The hot spell has been broken. Rain and fallen and our farmers are beginning to feel better. On Wednesday night, the worst electrical storm of the season passed over this district. Although there wasn't a heavy rain fall, the thunder and lightning was something terrific. Mr. Sims lost a considerable quantity of thresher's supplies for the coming season. The blow is a hard one as this is the second barn lost by fire. Christian Halst, north of the village, had three horses killed and three more dazed and blinded They were standing near a wire fence when the bolt came and when found the dead animals were lying across the fence. She returned home that night, but sometime during the night her heart failed and she was breathing her last when found in the morning. Her death at the age of 23 years and 9 months comes as a hard blow to her husband with his little son. Her remains were interred in the Exeter cemetery on Saturday, the Rev. USBORNE COUNCIL

Council met in the Township Hall on July 6th. All members present. Previous minutes read and approved.

No tenders were received for the construction of Branch B, Elimville Drain repairs, so the letting of the work had to be again postponed.

Although eight bridge contractors were written to only one tender was received for the construction of the two small bridges—one 12 foot span on the Biddulph boundary, and one 8 foot span on Tuckersmith boundary. The contracts were let to John Hunkin, Exeter, at what was considered a reasonable price.

The contract for new outlet to Anderson Drain and Repairs being completed the contractor was paid the contract price, and the clerk instructed to prepare an assessment to cover the cost of the work.

The Report of the Engineer for extra assessment on Fish Creek Drain was adopted and the clerk instructed to prepare the necessary by-law and to reduce the assessment so as to raise the amount actually needed.

A few accounts were passed and orders issued in payment. Council then adjourned to meet on Saturday, August 3rd at 1 o'clock.

The Act respecting Money Lending passed at the last session of the Legislature, came into force on July 1st. It requires the registration of all loan companies. The fee for registration has been fixed by the Government at $25. Any money lender violating the provisions of the Act will incur a penalty of $200, and on conviction for a second or third offence will be liable to imprisonment for a period not exceeding six months. A corporation convicted of a second or subsequent offence will be required to pay a fine not exceeding $1,000.

CAUGHT A TARTAR.

Retort of a Witness That Broke Up a Cross Examination.

"The purpose of a cross examination in a law case," said a judge, "is to try to break down the testimony of a witness, but sometimes even the smartest lawyer catches a tartar and instead of breaking down the witness he himself is all broken up. I will never forget an answer made to me by a Hebrew witness who was the complainant in a burglary case in a county court. He charged the young gentleman whom I was defending with breaking open the door of his apartment above his tailor shop. On direct examination he testified that the alleged burglar had broken the chain on the inside of the door. I started in to cross examine with that ease of manner which characterizes every lawyer who has a good point up his sleeve. In my sweetest tones I asked:

"'Now, my dear sir, you say this boy broke in your door?'

"'Yes, sir.'

"'And you say he broke the chain that was fastened on the inside?'

"'Yes, sir.'

"'Now will you tell me how any man on the outside of a door could possibly unfasten a chain that was on the inside?'

"Quick as a flash he blurted out: 'How should I know? vy don't you ask him? Dat's his business. I'm a tailor. He's a tief!'

"That cross examination came to a full stop then and there."—Brooklyn Eagle.

WANTED AN EXCHANGE.

A Curious Adventure in Which the Czar Nicholas Figured.

The Czar Nicholas was very fond of masquerade balls and one night appeared at one in the character of his Satanic majesty, with grinning face, horns and tail, and seemed to enjoy the character very much.

About 3 o'clock in the morning he went out and, throwing over him some rugs, called a cab and ordered the coachman to take him to the Quai Anglais. Being very tired, he fell asleep. When he awoke he found the coachman had taken the wrong direction, for the Quai Anglais was in the most fashionable part of the city, while around him were only miserable hovels.

Nicholas began to remonstrate, but the driver, paying no heed to him, drove through a stone archway into a cemetery. Then, taking a long knife from his girdle, he opened the door of the cab and said:

"Give me your money and your furs or I will kill you."

"And do you give me your soul," cried Nicholas as he threw off his furs and disclosed his personification of the evil one.

Overcome with terror, the coachman fell senseless on the ground, while the emperor himself drove the cab back to town and afterward used more care in the selection of a coachman.

An Easy Medical Degree.

Time was when medical degrees were obtained at St. Andrews without all the difficulties of today, and the story is told concerning a learned professor of old, who had advised a particular student whom he had never seen in the flesh and of whose work he knew but little, to call upon him at his house so that he might be examined for his degree. The morning was a brilliant one, and the learned gentleman found it impossible to resist the attractions of the links. Before setting out, however, he had left a message with one of the maidservants, and a conversation like the following ensued on the arrival of the student at the appointed time: "Are you the gentleman who was to call this morning about a degree?" asked the girl on opening the door. "I am," was the reply. "Well," said the maid, "I was to tell you that it was all right. You have passed!"—Scotsman.

HAPPY THO' MARRIED?

There are unhappy married lives, but a large percentage of these unhappy homes are due to the illness of the wife, mother or daughter. The feelings of nervousness, the befogged mind, the ill-temper, the pale and wrinkled face, hollow and circled eyes, result most often from these disorders peculiar to women. For the women to be happy and good-looking she must naturally have good health. Dragging-down feelings, hysteria, hot-flashes or constantly returning pains and aches—are too great a drain upon a women's vitality and strength. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription restores weak and sick women to sound health by regulating and correcting the local disorders which are generally responsible for the above distressing symptoms.

MRS. DICKOVER.

"I suffered greatly for a number of years and for the past three years was so bad that life was a misery to me," writes MRS. H. F. DICKOVER, of Utica, Ohio, Route 4. "The doctors told me I would have to go to a hospital before I would ever be better. A year ago this winter and spring I was worse than ever before. At each period I suffered like one in torment. I am the mother of six children. I was so bad for five months that I knew something must be done, so I wrote to Dr. R. V. Pierce, telling him as nearly as I could how I suffered. He outlined a course of treatment which I followed to the letter. I took two bottles of 'Favorite Prescription' and one of 'Golden Medical Discovery' and a fifty-cent bottle of 'Smart-Weed,' and have never suffered much since. I wish I could tell every suffering woman the world over what a boon Dr. Pierce's medicines are. There is no use wasting time and money doctoring with anything else or any one else."

The Medical Adviser by R. V. Pierce, M. D., Buffalo, N. Y., answers hosts of delicate questions about which every woman, single or married ought to know. Sent free on receipt of 50 stamps to pay for wrapping and mailing only.

This idea seemed to rouse him. He became much more like himself, and as they walked down the Strand the conversation dragged much less. For the first time he spoke of the work that awaited him on his return to Bergen, and Roy began to think that his scheme for diverting him from his troubles had been on the whole a success.

"We must arrange what day you will come down to us at Brixton," he said, as they turned down Arundel Street. "Would to-morrow suit you?"

"As far as I know, it would," said Frithiof, "but if you will just come into the hotel with me we will find out if there is any message from my father. If there is nothing, why I am perfectly free. It is possible, though, that he will have business for me to see to."

Accordingly they went into the hotel together, and Frithiof accosted a waiter in the entrance hall.

"Anything come for me since I went out?" he asked.

"Yes, sir, I believe there is, sir. Herr Falck, is it not?"

He brought forward a telegram and handed it to Frithiof, who hurriedly tore open the orange envelope and began eagerly to read. As he read, every shade of color left his face; the telegram was in Norwegian, and its terse, matter-of-fact statement overwhelmed him. Like one in some dreadful dream he read the words:

"Father bankrupt owing to failure Iceland expedition, also lost Morgan's agency."

There was more beyond, but this so staggered him that he looked up from the fatal pink paper with a sort of wild hope that his surroundings would reassure him, that he should find it all a mistake. He met the curious eyes of the waiter, he saw two girls in evening dress crossing the vestibule.

"We ought to be at the Lyceum by this time!" he heard one of them say to the other. "How annoying of father to be so late!"

The girl addressed had a sweet, sunshiny face.

"Oh, he will soon be here," she said, smilingly, but as her eyes happened to fall on Frithiof she grew suddenly grave and compassionate; she seemed to glance from his face to the telegram in his hand, and her look brought him a horrible perception that after all this was real waking existence. It was a real telegram he held, it was all true, hideously true. His father was bankrupt.

Shame, misery, bitter indignation with the Morgans, a sickening perception that if Blanche had been true to him the worst might have been averted, all this seethed in his mind.

By this time he had partly recovered, was sufficiently himself again to feel some sort of anxiety to read the rest of the message. Possibly there was something he might do to help his father. He read on and took in the next sentence almost as a glance.

"Shock caused cerebral hemorrhage. He died this afternoon."

"Frithiof felt a choking sensation in his throat, if he could not get out into the open air he felt that he should die, and by an instinct he turned toward the door, made a step or two forward, then staggered and caught at Roy Boniface to save himself from falling.

Roy held him up and looked at him anxiously.

"You have had bed news?" he asked.

Frithiof tried to speak, but no words would come, he gasped for breath, felt his limbs failing, saw a wavy confused picture of the vestibule, the waiter, the two girls, an elderly gentleman joining them, then felt himself guided down on to the floor, never quite losing consciousness, yet helpless either to speak or move and with a most confused sense of what had passed.

"It is in Norwegian," he heard Roy say. "Bad news from his home, I am afraid."

"Poor fellow!" said another voice. "Open the door, some one. It's air he wants."

"I saw there was something wrong, father," this was in a girl's voice. "He looked quite dazed with trouble as he read."

"You'll be late for the Lyceum," thought Frithiof, and making an effort to get up he sunk for a moment into deeper depths of faintness; the voices died away into indistinctness, then came a consciousness of hands at his shoulders and his feet, he was lifted up and carried away somewhere.

Struggling back to life again in a few moments he found that he was lying on a bed, the window was wide open and a single candle flickered wildly in the draught, Roy Boniface was standing by him holding a glass of water to his lips. With an effort he drank.

"You are better, sir?" asked the waiter. "Anything I can do for you, sir? Any answer to the telegram?"

"The telegram! What do you mean?" exclaimed Frithiof. Then as full recollection came back to him, he turned his face from the light with a groan.

"The gentleman had, perhaps, better see a doctor," suggested the waiter to Roy. But Frithiof turned upon him sharply.

"I am better. You can go away. All I want is to be alone."

The man retired, but Roy still lingered. He could not make up his mind to leave any one in such a plight, so he crossed the room and stood by the open window looking out gravely at the dark river with its double row of lights and their long shining reflections. Presently a sound in the room made him turn. Frithiof had dragged himself up to his feet, with an impatient gesture he blew out the flickering candle, then walked with unsteady steps to the window and dropped into a chair.

"So you are here still?" he said, with something of relief in his tone.

"I couldn't bear to leave you till you were all right again," said Roy. "Won't you tell me what is the matter, Falck?"

"My father is dead," said Frithiof, in an unnaturally calm voice.

"Dead!" exclaimed Roy, and his tone had in it much more of awe and regret.

"He is dead," repeated Frithiot, quietly.

"But how was it?" asked Roy. "It must have been so sudden. You left him well only three days ago. How was it?"

"His Iceland expedition had failed," said Frithiof, "that meant a fatal blow to his business; then, this morning, there came to him Morgan's telegram about the agency. It was that which killed him."

"Good God!" exclaimed Roy, with indignation in his voice.

"Leave out the adjective," said Frithiof, bitterly. Business is business, you see, one can't sentimentalize over old connections."

Roy was silent, he had no glib, conventional sentences ready to hand. And then as he contrasted that bright, homely room at Bergen with this dark, forlorn hotel room in London, a feeling that he must get his companion away into some less dreary atmosphere took possession of him.

"Don't stay all alone in this place," he said, abruptly. "Come home with me to-night."

"You are very good," said Frithiof, "but I don't think I can do that. I am better alone, and indeed must make up my mind to-night as to the future."

"You will go back to Norway, I suppose?" asked Roy.

"Yes, I suppose so; as soon as possible. To-morrow I must see if there is any possibility of getting back in fair time. Unluckily, it is too late for the steamer, which must be starting at this minute from Hull."

"I will come in to-morrow, then, and see what you have decided on," said Roy. "Is there nothing I can do for you now?"

"Nothing, thank you," said Frithiof. And Roy wished him good-night and went on.

The next day he was detained by business and could not manage to call at the Arundel till late in the afternoon. Noticing the same waiter in the hall who had been present on the previous evening, he inquired if Frithiof were in.

"Herr Falck has gone, sir," said the man; "he went off about an hour ago."

"Gone!" exclaimed Roy in some surprise. "Did he leave any message?"

"No, sir, none at all. He was looking very ill when he came down this morning, but went out as soon as he had had breakfast and didn't come back till four o'clock. Then he called for his bill and ordered his portmanteau to be brought down and put on a hansom. And so he drove off, sir."

"You didn't hear where he was going to?"

"No, sir; I can't say as I did. The cab, if I remember right, turned along the Embankment, toward Charing Cross."

"Thank you," said Roy. "Very possibly he may have gone back to Norway by the Continent."

And with a feeling of vague disappointment he turned away.

CHAPTER X.

When Roy Boniface had gone Frithiof sat for a long time without stirring. He had longed to be alone, and yet the moment he had got his wish the most crushing sense of desolation overwhelmed him. Mechanically he drew down the blind, struck a light, and noticing that on the disordered bed there lay the crumpled pink paper which had brought him the bad news, he picked it up, smoothed it out, and read it once more.

There was still something which he had not seen in the first horrible shock of realizing his father's death. With darkening brow he read the words which Herr Gronvold had weighed so carefully and counted so often.

"I will provide for your sisters till you can. Impossible for you to return in time for funeral. My advice is try for work in London. No opening her for you, as feeling will be strong against family."

It was only then that he actually took in the fact that he was penniless—indeed far worse than penniless—weighed down by a load of debts which, if not legally his, were his burden none the less.

And yet it was out of this very torture of realization that his comfort at last sprung—such comfort at least as he was at present capable of receiving. The name of Falck should yet be redeemed; and a glow of returning hope rose in his heart as he remembered his father's parting words, "I look to you, Frithiof, to carry out the aims in which I myself have failed, to live the life I could wish to have lived." Yet how different all had been when those words had been spoken! The recollection of them did him good—brought him, as it were, back to life again—but at the same time they were the most cruel pain.

Perhaps he perceived this, for he raised himself, banished the mind pictures which had absorbed him so long, and began to think what his first practical step must be. He would lose no time, he would begin that very moment. The first thing must of course be retrenchment, he must leave the Arundel on the morrow and must seek out the cheapest rooms to be had. Lying on the table was that invaluable book "Dicken's Dictionary of London." He turned to the maps at the beginning, and decided to try the neighborhood of Vauxhall and Lambeth.

Next came the question of work. And here the vastness of the field perplexed him—where to turn he had not the slightest idea. There was also in Fleet Street a Scandinavian club; he would go there and get a list of the members; it was possible that he might meet with some familiar name, and at any rate he should hear of his own language spoken, which in itself would be a relief. This arranged, he tried to sleep, but with little success; his brain was too much overwrought with the terrible reversals of fortune he had met with that day, with the sorrows that had come to him, not as "Single spies,

But in battalions!"

Whenever he did for a few minutes sink into a doze, it was only to be haunted by the most horrible dreams, and when morning came he was ill and feverish, yet as determined as before to go through with the programme he had marked out.

On the Farm

SEEDING THE GRASS LANDS.

Too much importance can not be given to the selection of pure grass seed, for there is no greater failure or disappointment in farm management than to fail to secure a good stand if grass or clover.

Every year I am becoming more and more favorably impressed with the value of alsike clover, although we have used it for a number of years in all of our grass and seed mixtures, writes a correspondent.

We have repeatedly failed to secure a favorable stand of common red clover, and to our surprise the alsike would come along and make a good stand and we would be enabled to harvest a very profitable grass crop. Many times red clover will not thrive for the reason that the soil has become somewhat acid, but the alsike will make a very good crop notwithstanding the acid condition of the soil.

Another valuable characteristic of alsike clover is the fact that it will stay in the soil several years, and if permitted it will reseed itself. Alsike clover grows but little after mowing and no second crop can be expected from it. Both in this respect, as well as the longer time it requires to mature its maximum crop, alsike clover stands after red clover.

Its great and undeniable advantage, on the other hand, lies in the fact that it is more hardy than the common red clover and can be successfully cultivated on moist soils and land that is flooded at certain times during the year on which red clover will not grow.

If alsike clover seed is mixed with pasture grass mixtures, it yields rich and certain grazing crops, and when cultivated on arable land red clover seed should be sowed with the mixture with which the field is seeded.

In this way a great advantage is gained in the fact that the first year after sowing the fodder may be harvested chiefly consisting of red clover and in the following years after the red clover begins to deteriorate the alsike comes in, in its place, and yields rich and certain crops, with the timothy and other grass seeds with which the meadow is seeded.

On our farm we follow the same general methods of culture that we practice in growing red clover, with the addition of the following: As the alsike has a tendency to lodge when it is in full vegetation, we find that it is advisable to sow it with other grass seed, by preference with timothy and red clover. The crops by this means are very rich and the timothy supports the clover, so that it does not fall to the ground and rot.

While alsike does not yield as large crops to the acre as common red clover of equal stand, yet it is very profitable, and in actual feeding value I have found but little difference ton for ton when it was being fed to a herd of dairy cows, and for feeding horses and all kinds of young stock I have found it greatly superior. The time of cutting and curing will make more real difference than the variety.

Alsike clover is not considered by soil experts to be as good a soil improving crop as common red clover for the reason that it lacks the branching root system of the red clover, but it is a legume (nitrogen gatherer) and hence on many soils where the red variety cannot be used as a nitrogen gatherer.

It is my honest opinion that there are many farmers who have given up growing clover who could make a success of growing alsike clover instead of experimenting with red clover.

I have found in actual practice that it is a better business proposition to sow a mixture of grass seed that will make a certain stand under the usual conditions than to spend large amounts of hard-earned money to experiment with a crop so uncertain as red clover, on any fields where it is not practically sure to make a good stand.

HELPS FOR SWINE BREEDER.

Scientists now say that the use of virus on pigs from a sow that has been treated for cholera by the use of virus is seldom affected by the disease. They thrive better than other pigs if they are treated with the virus and in that case are seldom attacked.

The pig made pot-bellied by feeding on straw or running on pasture without any grain is an easy victim of disease, because it is lacking in nutrition.

Dollar for dollar, middlings and corn, milk and corn or corn and alfalfa or clover is a far cheaper feed than the corn alone.

Young pigs suffer from indigestion through overfeeding or from feeding on one ration alone, just the same as young children do.

Pigs, and, in fact, all hogs, should have ready access at all times to salt and ashes. Charred corn cobs are always excellent.

The farmer who grows a liberal supply of roots for his hogs seldom has much trouble from the ordinary diseases to which swine are subject.

The reason why hogs so eagerly devour coal ashes, rotten wood and such material, is because they do not have, while in close confinement the material their system demands. At large they root such material from the ground.

"HE WHO PASSED."

The Romance of a Novel Restored a Lover.

Not often is a book review the means of clearing up a misunderstanding between sundered lovers, but this joyful sequel followed upon the publication of a review in a London (England) paper of a novel called "He Who Passed."

The story is by a woman who describes how and why she refused to marry the man she loved. The obstacle was an incident in her past life, and rather than confess it she allowed him to pass out of her life. As the book bears the stamp of an authentic experience, and is a thrilling human document, it sold widely, and in course of time a copy of the review, giving a synopsis of the story, fell into the hands of a man living in the tropics.

He was profoundly affected by what he read, and secured a copy of the book at the earliest possible moment, to find that he was the man described in its pages, as well as to discover why his offer of marriage had been declined. The sequel comes off early in the fall when "He Who Passed" will marry the woman who suffered so bitterly from his passing.

1912 FARMERS' PRIZE CONTEST

WE held a contest last year in which 36 prizes were offered. This year there will be three times as many prizes (108) and therefore three times as many chances for you to win one of them. You do not have to use a large quantity of cement to win a prize. Many of last year's prize-winners used comparatively little cement.

THE contest is divided into three classes and in only one of these (Class "A") does the amount of cement used count in deciding prize winners. Class "B" is for doing the best concrete work (the size makes no difference). Class "C" is for sending in the best and cleanest description of how any piece of concrete work was done.

THERE will be four prizes (First, $50; Second, $25; Third, $15; Fourth, $10) in each class in each Province. Thus you have only to compete with other farmers in your own Province, and not with those in all parts of Canada. This gives you the best possible chance to win a $50 prize.

IT COSTS NOTHING TO ENTER—There are absolutely no "strings" to this offer. There is no entry fee or red tape to bother with. You cannot lose, because the improvements you make of concrete in competing for the prizes will be more than worth their cost. We have a book, "What the Farmer Can Do With Concrete," that will give you all the information about the use of concrete you can need. It will be sent to you free when you ask us for complete particulars of the Prize Contest. Ask for particulars to-day. Just say "Send me, free, your book and full particulars of the 1912 Prize Contest," on a post card and mail it to-day. Address Publicity Manager,

SAVE THE CHILDREN.

Mothers who keep a box of Baby's Own Tablets in the house may feel that the lives of their little ones are reasonable safe during the hot weather. Stomach troubles, cholera infantum and diarrhoea carry off thousands of little ones every summer, in most cases because the mother does not have a safe medicine at hand to give promptly. Baby's Own Tablets cure these troubles, or if given occasionally to the well child will prevent their coming on. The Tablets are guaranteed by a government analyst to be absolutely harmless, even to the newborn babe. They are especially good in the summer because they regulate the bowels and keep the stomach sweet and pure. The Tablets are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

CRUEL PRISONS IN SIBERIA.

A Story of Horrors Told by Mlle. Marie Shkolnik.

Mlle. Marie Shkolnik, who has recently arrived in London, England, after escaping from a Siberian prison, describes the sort of living misery to which prisoners are subject. Mlle. Shkolnik received a sentence of imprisonment for life as the result of her participation in a political disturbance in that community.

"Criminal and political offenders," she stated, "share the same punishment, the conditions being precisely the same for both classes. After being taken to Irkutsk by train, women and men in groups of from eighty to 160 set out upon the horrible march of from 150 to 200 miles to the prisons. They cover some twenty-five miles a day, resting at night in small wayside erections, which are full of vermin.

"We were given about 5d. a day with which to purchase food, but this sufficed to buy bread and water only, so that those who had no money of their own had to be content with that. Men were chained as they walked, but the women were allowed to go free, although the soldiers were extremely rough.

"The prison was over a hundred years old, having been built for the men prisoners who were formerly required to work the gold mines in the vicinity. Here the women were herded in parties of thirty and forty in cells built to accommodate a dozen people.

"There are always a number of children, for feeding whom no provision is made until two years have elapsed, the children meanwhile sharing the starvation allowance of their parents. The women are set to work making mattresses. All their work, including the sorting of wool, is done in the room in which they live, and as a result deaths from consumption are so frequent that no notice is taken of them. The women are entirely in the hands of their captors, and none escape violation, either by the officials or the Cossacks."

Mlle. Shkolnik owed her escape to a serious illness which caused her removal to Irkutsk in order to undergo an operation. She escaped by a means which she cannot divulge, lest her story should involve punishment for those concerned.

The chief warder of the prison was suspected of having aided her in her escape. It was discovered that he had a considerable sum of money in the bank, and it was suggested that she had purchased her freedom at the price of £3,000. Mlle. Shkolnik states that she never in her life held communication with the official in question.

WOULD SCREAM FOR HOURS WITH ECZEMA

Baby Dreadful Sufferer. Could Not Keep Him from Scratching. Every Joint Affected. Used Cuticura Soap and Ointment and He Is Well,

"Enclosed find my son's photo and I feel by writing these few lines to you I am only doing my duty, as my son was a dreadful sufferer from eczema. At the age of two weeks he began to get covered with red spots on his legs and groins, which mother thought was red gum or thrush; but day by day it grew worse until every joint and crevice were affected and baby started screaming for hours day and night, such a thing as sleep was out of the question. I took him to two of Sydney's leading doctors; one said it was one of the worst cases he had seen, the other did not think it so serious; one ordered ointment for rubbing in, the other a dusting powder. I followed their prescriptions for over four months and still baby kept getting worse. I could not keep him from scratching so great was his agony.

"When he was five months old I tried the Cuticura Remedies and I am very thankful to say my baby is to-day free from all his suffering. His groins were bleeding when I started and other parts affected were the lower part of his body, under the knees, arms, in arm joints, eyebrows and neck; but after twice using Cuticura Ointment I began to see a difference and by the time I had used one tin, along with the bathing with Cuticura Soap, baby was nearly cured. I still kept on using the Cuticura Soap and Ointment, and now, thank goodness, he is quite well and, although he is now ten months old, has not had any further return of the trouble." (Signed) Mrs. G. Martin, 2 Knight St., Erskineville, Sydney, N.S.W., Mar. 31, 1911.

Cuticura Soap and Ointment are sold throughout the world, but a liberal sample of each, with a 32-page book on the care and treatment of the skin and hair will be sent free on application to Potter Drug & Chem. Corp., 60 Columbus Ave., Boston, U.S.A.

ONE WAY TO PACK A TRUNK.

Can Economize in Space as Well as Pennies.

A woman who is constantly travelling and yet who finds it most necessary to economize in space as well as in pennies, has found the following plan for packing her one trunk a most excellent one. At the bottom of the trunk she has a partition made large enough to carry one large or two small hats. This is strongly made, so that it cannot easily be broken. At the side of the partition she places a wooden box filled with sawdust, in which are her bottles of medicine. Here, too, she lays her shoes, each pair carefully rolled in linen covers. On one set of shoes she puts her pair of rubbers, and inside the shoes she places her boxes of pills or powders which would not go into the box of medicine.

Then she has six or eight pieces of heavy cardboard cut to exactly fit the trunk. These she covers with linen or chintz, so that they look exactly like large envelopes, with straps or strings to fasten down the flaps. In these huge envelopes she pins her dresses, shirtwaists, etc. Two or three dresses can usually be put in each envelope. Everything is kept absolutely flat, and nothing can be pushed to one end of the trunk when it is stood on end.

At the top of the trunk is a shallow tray, in which she puts her laces, ribbons, veils, and gloves, etc. The underwear is rolled and placed around the edges of the trunk, or is folded flat and laid between the envelopes.

SALLOW FACES.

Often Caused by Tea and Coffee Drinking.

How many persons realize that tea and coffee so disturb digestion that they produce a muddy, yellow complexion?

A ten days' trial of Postum has proven a means, in thousands of cases, of clearing up a bad complexion.

A Washn. young lady tells her experience:

"All of us—father, mother, sister and brother—had used tea and coffee for many years until finally we all had stomach troubles more or less.

"We all were sallow and troubled with pimples, breath bad, disagreeable taste in the mouth, and all of us simply so many bundles of nerves.

"We didn't realize that tea and coffee caused the trouble until one day we ran out of coffee and went to borrow some from a neighbor. She gave us some Postum and told us to try that.

"Although we started to make it, we all felt sure we would be sick if we missed our strong coffee, but we tried Postum and were surprised to find it delicious.

"We read the statements on the pkg., got more and in a month and a half you wouldn't have known us. We all were able to digest our food without any trouble, each one's skin became clear, tongues cleaned off, and nerves in fine condition. We never use anything now but Postum. There is nothing like it." Name given by Canadian Postum Co., Windsor, Ont.

"There's a reason," and it is explained in the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

WOMEN AS LION TAMERS.

Have More Patience and Meet with Fewer Accidents.

A woman seems especially adapted for training animals, both domestic and wild, as her motherly instinct is an esential factor; animals, like children, requiring patience, sympathy, vigilance, intelligence and firmness. In the case of the lion women are more successful than men as trainers and have fewer accidents.

Claire Heliot, for nine years a star lion tamer, but now retired, who greatly loved her twelve lions, declares that the most potent features in the art of animal training is the ability to impress the fact that the trainer can be depended upon to deal kindly with her charge. She began training lions when 22 years old. First she would feed them with meat from her hands, then she would sit for days three hours at a time in the cage with an iron bar and a whip in her hands, getting closer each day. In a months' time she patted their manes. In four months she taught them tricks and then exhibited them. She had twelve in her group. She never whipped her lions, only made believe by cracking the whip over their heads. Though a German, this trainer always spoke French to her lions, the language being quicker and thus more commanding. She loved her work, though finding it hard, and when she retired kept some of her favorite lions to play with.

A HAPPY VAGABOND.

Barrister, Who Revels in His Rags, Refuses to Work.

A man in rags, who proved to be of good family and once a barrister at the court of Marseilles, France, was arrested in Paris for being without visible means of support.

"Why don't you work?" he was asked by the magistrate.

"I do not like to work," was the ingenious reply.

The prisoner went on to say that although he was a lawyer in a good position, social obligations and the necessity of wearing good clothes became irksome to him twenty years ago. He left Marseilles, his family, his friends, and respectability, to tramp the roads of France, where he could not breathe in the trammels of convention.

After some years he got tired of tramping, and enlisted in the Foreign Legion under a false name. He remained with the corps for ten years, and then came back to France to tramp the roads again, begging as he went.

The magistrate offered to find this incurable vagabond food and lodging in a home, but he refused, and was therefore sent to prison.

TWO FAMOUS BANDS.

Coming from England for the Canadian National Exhibition.

Two famous bands from England will make the musical attractions at the Canadian National Exhibition this year something long to be remembered. The Scots Guards Band from Buckingham Palace, the third of this famous brigade of bands brought across the ocean by the Exhibition people, will alternate with the Besses o' Th' Barn, which all lovers of band music recognize as Britain's best brass band. Two such musical attractions have never before been brought together on the continent.

THE NAPOLEON HAT.

Almost every season brings forward some millinery creation on the order of the Napoleon hat, a type which is most becoming to some piquant faces. This little French shape shows nothing but a single handsome feather mount in brilliant colorings.

It Eases Pain.—Ask any druggist or dealer in medicines what is the most popular of the medicinal oils for pains in the joints, in the muscles or nerves, or for neuralgia and rheumatism, and he will tell you that Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil is in greater demand than any other. The reason for this is that it possesses greater healing qualities than any other oil.

WITHOUT AN ARGUMENT.

"Do you have any trouble getting your daughter to practice her music?"

"Not at all. I simply say that it is time to wash the dishes, and she goes right to the piano."

ARSENIC IN VEGETABLES.

Arsenic has been found as a normal constituent in man and animals, and now Drs. Jadin and Astrug, two French biologists, show that it may be derived from edible plants and fruits. They examined thirty-nine vegetable substances, and obtained arsenic from all, the quantities ranging from 0.25 part per million in almonds and beans. Other vegetable matters, containing arsenic are the common cabbage, the turnip, the potato, cultivated mushrooms, black truffles, Japanese rice, red haricots, grey peas, split peas, lentils, artichokes, salsify, chicory, lettuce, spinach, green peas, celery, carrots, watercress, cauliflower, wild asparagus, hazelnuts, filberts, chestnuts, apples, pears, oranges, pineapples, and bananas.

INSECT STINGS AND SUMMER SORES.

Insect bites and stings, blistered feet and sunburn! These three things, or any one of them, may spoil some days of your vacation, or make your work a bore! Zam-Buk is the remedy you need! It takes the "burn" out of these red, inflamed patches where the sun has got home on you; it eases bad mosquito bites, and it soothes and heals blistered feet and hands.

In the hot weather young babies suffer greatly from heat spots and chafed places. Here, again, Zam-Buk will give almost instant ease!

For cuts, burns, and more serious skin diseases, such as eczema, blood-poisoning, etc., and for piles, Zam-Buk is absolutely without an equal. All druggists and stores 50c. box or Zam-Buk Co., Toronto.

NOW-A-DAYS.

"Why, he's marrying her, isn't he?"

"Yes, but now-a-days that's no longer any proof."

The Pill That Leads Them All.—Pills are the most portable and compact of all medicines, and when easy to take are the most acceptable of preparations. But they must attest their power to be popular. As Parmelee's Vegetable Pills are the most popular of all pills they must fully meet all requirements. Accurately compounded and composed of ingredients proven to be effective in regulating the digestive organs, there is no surer medicine to be had anywhere.

It takes a silly woman to trust a man who couldn't get credit for a 3-cent head of cabbage at the corner grocery.

Minard's Liniment Cures Distemper.

Both men and women want to conceal their age, and for much the same reason. Men wish to appear older than they are in order to rule sooner, and women wish to appear younger than they are in order to rule longer.

Cholera morbus, cramps and kindred complaints annually make their appearance at the same time as the hot weather, green fruit, cucumbers, melons, etc., and many persons are debarred from eating these tempting things, but they need not abstain if they have Dr. J. D. Kellogg's Dysentery Cordial and take a few drops in water. It cures the cramps and cholera in a remarkable manner and is sure to check every disturbance of the bowels.

SUPREME TEST.

"Is she fond of children?" "Very. She'll even rent her houses to people who have them."

PUNISHMENT FOR DRUNKS.

The punishment for intoxication in St. Petersburg is to make the offender, no matter what his social position, sweep the streets. Well-attired gentlemen, some of them in dress suits, are occasionally, it is said, seen sweeping the streets after a night's carouse.

Clean Stomach, Clear Mind.—The stomach is the workshop of the vital functions and when it gets out of order the whole system clogs in sympathy. The spirits flag, the mind droops and work becomes impossible. The first care should be to restore healthful action of the stomach and the best preparation for that purpose is Parmelee's Vegetable Pills. General use for years has won them a leading place in medicine. A trial will attest their value.

Gentlemen,—Last August my horse was badly cut in eleven places by a barbed wire fence. Three of the cuts, (small ones) healed soon, but the others became foul and rotten, and though I tried many kinds of medicine they had no beneficial result. At last a doctor advised me to use MINARD'S LINIMENT and in four weeks' time every sore was healed and the hair has grown over each one in fine condition. The Liniment is certainly wonderful in its working.

of the bowels is an absolute necessity for good health. Unless the waste matter from the food which collects there is got rid of at least once a day, it decays and poisons the whole body, causing biliousness, indigestion and sick headaches. A Regular Storm Period covers the 19th to the 24th, being central on the 21st. Falling barometer, high temperature and electrical storms will develope in western sections at the beginning of this period. The Venus influence, and the Moon being on the equator on the 19th, will insure thunder storms on and next to that date. The 22nd, 23rd and 24th, will bring a culmination of bluestering, ominous storm clouds, with violent summer gusts of wind and local showers. Look for such phenomena at the first stages of this period, followed by a drop in temperature that will be very grateful to sweltering humanity.

The London, Huron and Bruce is being re-railed from Clinton to Wingham a distance of twenty-four miles. The rails heretofore in use were made in Barrow, England, and were put down when the road was constructed in 1875. They have stood the wear and tear remarkably well, much better than the rails of more recent make. Those now being laid are 80 pounds to the yard and have been in use on the main line, where they have been replaced by rails twenty pounds heavier to stand the strain of the big freighters. It is expected they will answer for the lighter traffic of the L., H. and B. for some time to come.

The bowlers had a good time on the Exeter greens Thursday afternoon last when they were visited by two rinks from St. Marys and one from Dashwood. As usual those in charge of the score cards did not hand them to the secretary and we are unable to give the result in detail. However the St. Marys rinks, consisting of Messrs. Wylie, Sanderson, Dickson and Clark, skip, Brown, Richardson, Brook and Anderson, skip, were 2 shots up on the three games that each rink played. Mr Clark won from Heaman, and from Creech, but lost to Taman. Mr Anderson lost to Bawden and to Taylor, but won from Collins. The total result of the two games with Dashwood was a tie, Web Miller winning from Hurdon and D Tieman losing to Seldon. Features of the game were the defeats of Creech and Heaman, the former losing 13 to 2 and the latter 19 to 8.

LONG STALK.—Last week we were handed an exceptionally long stalk of timothy hay by Mr. John Winer of Stephen. It measured 5 feet, 10 inches.

In the public schools of Baltimore the eyes of 53,087 pupils were examined by the tests ordinarily used, and the results are interesting and suggestive: 9,051 pupils were found to have such defective eyesight as to make school work unsafe: 53 per cent. of the children were not to be in the enjoyment of normal vision, but curiously enough the percentage of defective eyesight decreased with the age of the pupils. The report recommends yearly examinations thereafter of the pupils' eyesight. The large percentage, nearly one-fifth of the total number examined, found to be in no condition to do school work at all, is a warning to parents and school authorities all over the country. It shows great negligence and ignorance on the part of parents, where the responsibility rests in the first place, and where periodical examinations of the pupils' eyesight by school authorities will place it at last."—Philadelphia Inquirer.

Children of bright parents are not naturally stupid. When study is disliked, study is painful. Suspect their eyes rather than condemn their intellect. We make a specialty of examining children's eyes with our famous method of looking into the eye. We prescribe glasses only when absolutely necessary and guarantee satisfaction. The holiday time gives an excellent opportunity to bring in the children.

That the making of a cheque "in full of account" does not prevent the recipient from claiming more money if he is lawfully entitled to.

There are a number of people who think that merely affixing a five cent stamp to a letter registers it. Our postmaster informs us that he has found a number of letters in the post box which have had a five cent stamp affixed to them and which were quite evidently intended to be registered. People sending letters through the mail in this way are merely throwing away their money and have absolutely no claim against the post office department in case of loss.

The Right Worshipful Brother is an enthusiastic mason and an excellent speaker, and he will do honor to the position to which he has been elected.

DEATH—One of Exeter's aged residents passed away on July 17th, in the person of Charlotte Beechem, relict of the late John Herbert, at the age of 86 years. Deceased had been ailing for about a year, but had been confined to her room for only two weeks. She suffered from no particular illness, her demise being entirely due to the infirmities of old age. Born five mile from the Niagara, near the Chippawa Reserve, in 1826 she lived there for some years. In 1844 she married Mr. Herbert, who predeceased her three and a half years. During the first 20 years of her married life she lived on the 6th of Usborne, then for a few years in Biddulph, and for the last 30 years in Exeter. Four children survive, James of Biddulph, Mrs. Daniel Hicks of Usborne, Mrs. Jos. Simpson and Mrs. Robert Kelland of London. She is also survived by one sister and two brothers near Brantford. The funeral took place to the Exeter cemetery on Friday afternoon last.

HICKS FORECAST FOR JULY—A reactionary storm period centers on the 27th and 28th, the Moon being full and in apogee on the 28th. Black threatening storm clouds will return at this time, with thunder and bluster and and light scattering rains. Those who watch their barometers and hygrometers may know for a certainty, long before the storms strike, about how much wind and rain will come with the storms. Isn't it worth your while to know these things? Another moderate and brief respite from summer heat will come behind these storms. A seismic period, central on 28th, covers three to to four days before and after that date. Don't forget to watch telegraphic reports at all these seismic periods. The Venus period being central early in August and extending its influence over the most part of both July and August, the probabilities are increased for rainfall; but, as best the prospects for a sufficiency of well diffused rains are not favorable, Drouth will probably be serious in all central to western regions.

DEATH OF WILLIAM JOHN HARNESS.—A very sad and rather sudden death occurred at Victoria Hospital, London, on Sunday evening last, when Mr. William John Harness, a well-known resident of Exeter, passed away, at the age of 49 years and 2 days. The deceased got up Thursday morning last apparently enjoying his usual health, and had fed the team of horses which he had been driving for Mr. W. H. Levett, but before leaving the stables he was suddenly seized with sharp and excruciating pains across the abdomen. He at once returned to his home and a physician was called, who after a careful examination advised that he at once go to the hospital. That same morning he took the train for London and shortly after dinner was operated on at Victoria Hospital for the removal of the trouble, which was caused by a long standing rupture. The operation was a success, but complications of an adverse nature setting in his condition soon became alarming, and growing gradually weaker passed away Sunday evening about six o'clock. The deceased was born near Port Hope, but most of his life was spent in Exeter and vicinity. About 21 years ago he married Miss Lizzie Oliver of Millbrook, and to the union nine children were born, eight of whom survive, besides the sorrowing wife, his mother, two sisters and two brothers all of whom have the sympathy of their many friends. His remains were brought home for burial, the funeral taking place from his late residence, John Street, on Wednesday to the Exeter cemetery.

THE WESTERN FAIR SEPTEMBER 6TH TO 14TH

The management of this popular Exhibition will spare neither trouble or expense this year to make it the best that has ever been held. A new fire-proof Art Building is being erected near the entrance to the Grounds which will be filled with beautiful and expensive paintings for which very liberal prizes are being offered. This will help very materially the congestion of exhibits of other years in the Main Building. If space is wanted it should be applied for at once. The butter and cheese exhibit promises to be extra large this year. In addition to the prizes offered by the association there are good specials in cash and silverware. Many new and special exhibits will be made in the machinery Department. The Live Stock department is one of the strong features of the Exhibition as the very best always come to London The agricultural and Horticultural exhibits will no doubt fill the building to overflowing, of the very best, while the Poultry Building will probably have to be enlarged to hold the birds on exhibition. Prize lists, entry forms, and all information sent on application to the Secretary, A. M. Hunt, London.

ONLY A MONTH;

OR, A CURIOUS MYSTERY EXPLAINED.

CHAPTER X.—(Cont'd)

The Swedish minister received him very kindly, and listened to as much of his story as would bear telling with great patience. "It is a very hard case," he said. "The English firm perhaps consulted their own pockets in making this new arrangement, but to break off an old connection so suddenly, and as it chanced at such a trying moment, was hard lines. What sort of people are they, these Morgans? You have met them?"

"Oh, yes," said Frithiof, coloring. "One of the brothers was in Norway this summer, came to our house, dined with us, professed the greatest friendliness, while all the time he must have known what the firm were meditating."

"Doubtless came to see how the land lay," said the minister. "And what of the other brother?"

"I saw him yesterday" replied Frithiof. "He was very civil; told me the telegram had been sent off that morning about the affair, as it would not bear delay, and spoke very highly of my father. Words cost nothing, you see."

The consul noted the extreme bitterness of the tone, and looked searchingly into the face of his visitor. "Poor fellow!" he reflected; "he starts in life with a grievance, and there is nothing so bad for a man as that. A fine, handsome boy, too. If he stays eating his heart out in London he will go to the dogs in no time."

"See," he said, "these Morgans, though they may be keen business men, yet they are after all human. When they learn at what an unlucky time their telegram arrived, it is but natural that they should regret it. Their impulse will be to help you. I should advise you to go to them at once and talk the affair over with them. If they have any proper feeling they will offer you some sort of employment in this new Stavanger branch, or they might, perhaps, have some opening for you in their London house."

"I can not go to them," said Frithiof in a choked voice. "I would rather die first."

"I can understand," said the consul, "that you feel very bitter, and that you resent the way in which they have behaved. But still I think you should try to get over that. After all they knew nothing of your father's affairs; they did not intentionally kill him. That the two disasters followed so closely on each other was but an accident."

"Still I could never accept anything from them; it is out of the question," said Frithiof.

"Excuse me if I speak plainly," said the consul. "You are very young, and you know but little of the world. If you allow yourself to be governed by pride of this sort you can not hope to get on. Now turn it over in your mind, and if you do not feel that you can see these people, at any rate write to them."

"I can not explain it all to you, sir," said Frithiof. "But there are private reasons which make that altogether impossible."

The blood had mounted to his forehead, his lips had closed in a straight line; perhaps it was because they quivered that he compressed them so.

"A woman in the question," reflected the consul. "That complicates matters. All the more reason that he should leave London." Then, aloud, "If you feel unable to apply to them, I should recommend you strongly to try America. Every one flocks to London for work, but as a matter of fact London streets just now are not paved with gold; everything is at a standstill; go where you will you will hear that trade is bad, that employment is scarce, and that living is dear."

"If I could hear of any opening in America I would go at once," said Frithiof. "But at Bergen we have heard of late that it is no such easy thing even over there to meet with work. I will not pay the expenses of the voyage merely to be in my present state, and hundreds of miles further from home."

"What can you do?" asked the consul. "Is your English pretty good?"

"I can write and speak it easily. And, of course, German too. I understand book-keeping."

"Any taste for teaching?" asked the consul.

"None," said Frithiof, decidedly.

"Then the only thing that seems open to you is the work of a secretary, or a clerkship, or perhaps you could manage translating, but that is not easy work to get. Everything now is overcrowded, so dreadfully overcrowded. However, of course I shall bear you in mind, and you yourself will leave no stone unturned. Stay, I might give you a letter of introduction to Herr Sivertsen; he might possible find you temporary work. He is the author of that well-known book on Norway, you know. Do you know your way about yet?"

"Pretty well," said Frithiof.

"Then there is his address—Museum Street. You had better take an omnibus at the bank. Any of the Oxford Street ones will put you down at the corner, by Mudie's. Let me know how you get on; I shall be interested to hear."

Then, with a kindly shake of the hand Frithiof found himself dismissed; and somewhat cheered by the interview, he made his way to the address which had been given him.

Herr Sivertsen's rooms were of the gloomiest; they reeked of tobacco, they were ill lighted, and it seemed to Frithiof that the window could not have been opened for a week. An oblique view of Mudie's library was the only object of interest to be seen without, though, by craning one's neck, one could get just a glimpse of the traffic in Oxford Street. He waited for some minutes wondering to himself how a successful author could tolerate such a den, and trying to imagine from the room what sort of being was the inhabiter thereof. At length the door opened, and a gray-haired man of five-and-fifty, with a huge forehead and somewhat stern, square-jawed face, entered.

"I have read the consul's letter," he said, greeting Frithiof and motioning him to a chair. "You want what is very hard to get. Are you aware that thousands of men are seeking employment and are unable to meet with it?"

"I know it is hard," said Frithiof. "Still I have more chance here than in Norway, and anyhow I mean to get it."

"I am tired to death of young men coming to me and wanting help," he remarked, frankly. "You are an altogether degenerate race, you young men of this generation; in my opinion you don't know what work means. It's money that you want, not work."

"Yes," said Frithiof, dryly, "you are perfectly right. It is money that I want."

Frithiof rose.

"However worthless, we unlucky have to live," he said, coldly. "And as I can't pretend to be interested in 'culture,' I must waste no more time in discussion."

He bowed and made for the door.

"Stay," said Herr Sivertsen; "it will do no harm if you leave me your address."

"Thank you, but at present I have none to give," said Frithiof. "Good-morning."

He felt very angry and very sore-hearted as he made his way down Museum Street. To have met with such a rebuff from a fellow-countryman seemed to him hard, specially in this time of his trouble. He had not enough insight into character to understand the eccentric old author, and he forgot that Herr Sivertsen knew nothing of his circumstances. He was too abrupt, too independent, perhaps also too refined to push his way as an unknown foreigner in a huge metropolis. He was utterly unable to draw a picturesque description of the plight he was in, he could only rely on a sort of dogged perseverance, a fixed resolve that he must and would find work; and in spite of constant failures this never left him.

He tramped down to Vauxhall and began to search for lodgings, looked at some half-dozen sets, and finally lighted on a clean little house in a new looking street a few hundred yards from Vauxhall Station. There was a card up in the window advertising rooms to let. He rang the bell and was a little surprised to find the door opened to him by a middle-aged woman who was unmistakably a lady though her deeply lined face told of privation and care, possibly also of ill-temper. He asked the price of the rooms.

"A sitting-room and bedroom at fifteen shillings a week," was the reply.

"It is too much, and besides I only need one room," he said.

"I am afraid we can not divide them."

He looked disappointed. An idea seemed to strike the landlady.

"There is a little room at the top you might have," she said; "but it would not be very comfortable. It would be only five shillings a week, including attendance."

"Allow me to see it," said Frithiof.

He felt so tired and ill that if she had shown him a pig-sty he would probably have taken it merely for the sake of settling matters. As it was, the room, though bare and comfortless, was spotlessly clean, and, spite of her severe face, he rather took to his landlady.

"My things are at the Arundel Hotel," he explained. "I should want to come in at once. Does that suit you?"

"Oh, yes," she said, scanning him closely. "Can you give us any references?"

"You can, if you wish, refer to the Swedish Consul at 24 Great Winchester Street."

"Oh, you are a Swede," she said.

"No, I am a Norwegian, and have only been in London since yesterday."

The landlady seemed satisfied, and having paid his five shillings in advance Frithiof went off to secure his portmanteau, and by five o'clock was installed in his new home.

It was well that he had lost no time in leaving his hotel, for during the next two days he was unable to quit his bed, and could only console himself with the reflection that at any rate he had a cheap roof over his head and that his rent would not ruin him.

Perhaps the cold night air from the river had given him a chill on the previous night, or perhaps the strain of the excitement and suffering had been too much for him. At any rate he lay in feverish wretchedness, tossing through the long days and weary nights, a misery to himself and an anxiety to the people of the house.

He discovered that his first impression had been correct. Miss Turnour, the landlady, was well born; she and her two sisters—all of them now middle-aged women—were the daughters of a country gentleman, who had either wasted his substance in speculation or on the turf. He was long since dead, and had left behind him the fruits of his selfishness, three helpless women, with no particular aptitudes and brought up to no particular profession.

Miss Charlotte, the middle one of the three, who had more heart than the rest, tried to persuade him to see a doctor.

"No," he replied, "I shall be all right in a day or two. It is nothing but a feverish attack. I can't afford doctor's bills."

She looked at him a little compassionately, his poverty touched a chord in her own life.

"Perhaps the illness has come in order that you may have time to think," she said, timidly.

Frithiof was in no mood to respond to her well-meant efforts to convert him, and used to listen to her discourses about the last day with a stolid indifference which altogether baffled her.

CHAPTER XI.

By the Saturday morning he was almost himself again as far as physical strength was concerned, and his mind was healthy enough to turn resolutely away from these useless broodings over the past, and to ask with a certain amount of interest, "What is to be done next?"

When Miss Charlote came to inquire after her patient, she found to her surprise that he was up and dressed.

"What!" she exclaimed. "You are really well, then?"

"Quite well, thank you," he replied. "Have you a newspaper in the house that you would be so good as to lend me?"

"Certainly," said Miss Charlotte, her face lighting up, as she hastened out of the room, returning in a minute with the special organ of the religious party to which she belonged. "I think this might interest you," she began, timidly.

"I don't want to be interested," said Frithiof, dryly. "All I want is to look through the advertisements. A thousand thanks, but I see this paper is not quite what I need."

"Are you sure that you know what you really need?" she said, earnestly.

Had she not been such a genuine little woman, he would have spoken the dry retort, "Madame, I need money," which trembled on his lips.

"You see," he said, smiling a little, "if I do not find work I can not pay my rent, so I must lose no time in getting some situation."

UNEASINESS IN FRANCE.

Predicted That Another Revolution May Result.

The general uneasiness which the prevalence of socialism, the increase in the price of living, and the general political discontent in France had brought with them, encouraged the Bonapartists, who have been quiescent recently, to hold a monster meeting at the Salle Wagram, Paris, the other evening. The Marquis de Dion was the principal speaker. Five thousand people listened to him and applauded to the echo his plea for "a consular republic." The implication, of course, was that Prince Napoleon would be the Consul.

Although there is little likelihood of a monarchy, an empire, or even a consular republic in France in the immediate future, there is no doubt whatever that the French people are ripe for another revolution. Nobody is quite satisfied with the present form of government. Everybody feels, no matter what class he belongs to, that he is overtaxed and over-red-taped. There is a general feeling that the real rulers of the country (who are not merely the Government, but all the members of the two Chambers, and far too many of their friends) are much too expensive a luxury.

If General Boulanger were alive there might easily be a coup d'etat to-morrow. By turning out the congregations, the nominal rulers of France have set the many-headed in power, and they are harder masters than either the priests or even the nobles ever were. The bourgeois is a long-suffering animal, but he is beginning to kick against the pricks. The Socialist element has so swelled a head that its demands are rapidly becoming more than the bourgeoise will stand, and in France, when unrest has become as general as it is now becoming, a flare-up is inevitable.

A well-known politician said the other day that war of one kind or another must break out in France within the next five years. His meaning was that if war with another nation did not come to turn people's thoughts away from their home troubles, a civil war, with or without bloodshed, a revolution peaceable or otherwise, would be a necessity.

DETECTIVE DOYLE.

Sir Arthur Conan Doyle sat at a dinner on one of his visits to New York beside a lady who asked leave to consult him about some thefts. "My detective powers," he replied, "are at your service, madam."

"Well," said the lady, "frequent and mysterious thefts have been occurring at my house for a long time. Thus, there disappeared last week a motor horn, a broom, a box of golf balls, a left riding boot, a dictionary, and half a dozen tin plates."

"Ah," said the creator of Sherlock Holmes, "the case, madam, is quite clear. You keep a goat."

4,274,414 Persons Are Registered as Christians.

The recently undertaken census of the Commonwealth of Australia has led to the publication of some interesting details concerning the religious professions of the population. Out of a total of 4,274,414 persons registered as Christians the following are allotted respectively to the principal denominations: Church of England, 1,710,443; Methodist, 547,806; Presbyterian, 558,336; Congregational, 74,046; Baptist, 97,074; Protestant (undefined), 109,861; Roman Catholic, 921,425.

It should be noted that the total number of men in Australia is 2,313,035, exceeding the total of women, which is 2,141,970. There is little discrepancy between the numbers of women and men allotted to the various Christian denominations, but whereas 516 men registered themselves as atheists and 7,559 as of "no religion," while 55,766 objected to stating their religious beliefs, the corresponding figures for the female population are athesits, 63; no religion, 1,692; and 27,370 who would not state belief—a striking disparity.

On the Farm

DON'T FOR THE MILKERS.

One—Don't put the can under the cow until her udder is clean.

Two—Don't begin to milk the cow with a wet tail until you have tied it.

Three—Don't tie it too short.

Four—Don't put your fingers in the milk. If you want to soften the teats milk a drop into the palm of your hand and rub them with this.

Five—Don't let your pail get too full when you are milking a young cow.

Six—Don't crack the seat of your stool on the cow's back if her tail goes in your eye.

Seven—Don't strap a heifer if you can help it. She is generally restive because the milking hurts her.

Eight—Don't fodder the cows until the milking is finished or you will have a lot of dust in the milk.

Nine—Don't talk while you are milking.

Ten—Don't on any account milk any curd, blood or rope into your milk can. If you find any slime inside the sieve find out where it comes from.

Eleven—Don't have your nails long.

Twelve—Don't half do the job unless you want to dry the cow.

IN THE CHICKEN YARD.

The average chicken does not pay for his keep and he should be sent to the block as soon as he weighs four pounds, unless he is to be kept for breeding.

Let a strange dog rush through the poultry yard and the excitement will affect the egg supply for that day.

When hens have no sentiment there is no doubt they are extremely nervous at times—particularly during the breeding season—and should be so placed that they cannot be disturbed.

It does not matter so much about the breed as it does about the kind of treatment your hens receive.

Of course, if you are going in for poultry to sell on the market you must select the fowl that will produce the most meat, and if for eggs the breed that will produce more eggs than meat. Then it is "up to you" to get the most out of them, as the slang does.

NOTES OF THE HOG LOT.

Sometimes a week's chill rains or cold weather will set the pigs back a month in their growth.

After all that may be said in favor of other pastures, clover stands at the head when it comes to the right thing for pigs.

A great many farmers do not realize that grass supplies a feed entirely different from corn and that it is a bad practice to change entirely and suddenly from one to the other.

When the pigs are taken out of the pasture this fall they should not be turned suddenly into the corn fields or fed all the new corn they can eat. Make the change gradually.

If a hog dies on the farm, no matter from what cause, take no chances, but remove the body a long distance from the feeding lots and burn it.

ORCHARD NOTES.

Many growers say that weeds are as valuable as fertilizer as clover and cow peas if they are turned under every year.

The grower who will sort his apples into two or more grades, packed well, will get more money for his fruit than the one who throws all kinds together in a barrel and places a layer of the best ones on top.

The city dealer profits by the laziness of the grower by grading and repacking his badly assorted fruit.

That corky old apple, the Ben Davis, still holds a high price in the city markets because its fine appearance deceives the ignorant buyer.

INVISIBLE INK SECRETS.

There are several ways in which two persons can correspond with each other unknown to even the people before whose eyes the very letter is held. Young ladies, for instance, may use new milk as ink. When dried this is invisible, but if coal dust or soot be scattered upon the paper the writing becomes legible. Diluted sulphuric acid, lemon juice, solutions of nitrate and chloride of cobalt or of chloride of copper write colorless, but on being heated the characters written with the first two become black or brown, and the latter green. And when the paper becomes cool and the writing disappears, leaving the paper blank again. Two good invisible inks are made by saltpetre dissolved in water, and equal parts of sulphate of copper and sal ammoniac dissolved in water.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

It is a curious thing, when all is considered, that so few women take up the high following of architecture. It is an occupation which calls for no such amount of labor as a normal woman could not perform, and one in which the experienced and the peculiar taste of women would be valuable. All housekeeping women know the disadvantages of living in houses designed, constructed, and provided with accessories according to the ideas of men. They know also the ill-concealed irritation of the architect whose preconceived ideas are opposed to those of his practical feminine client.

Take, for example, the mere question of gas jets or electric lights depending from the ceiling. In seventy-five cases out of a hundred the height has been decided upon by men and are too high for the woman of average height to reach. Or take the matter of kitchen sinks. Men have decided upon a certain height for them, and only hysteric importunities can induce them to raise them so that they will not give the woman working at them a pain in the side. Women are worn out taking unnecessary steps about the house because rooms do not bear the right relation to each other. The closets are not numerous nor commodious enough to enable the housekeeper to preserve order. The pantry shelves are too high, there is too much distance between them; and there is not the right provisions made for food.

Windows are unnecessarily high, floors are not prepared in such a manner as to retain their good appearance; proper room is not provided for beds; the small drawing rooms of bungalows and apartment houses are so broken up with needlessly wide doors, with consoles and windows, that there is no place for living in them, or, at least, of giving them the apearance of anything more than an antechamber. Wall space is necessary to comfort. It is the settle, the book shelves, the piano, the pictures on the wall, the open fire, and the reading table with its good lamp that make a comfortable living room. Yawning door space, gaping windows, rattling consoles, and a pest of draperies never will do it. Women who understand home-making know that. What they wish for is not an architect's effect but a chance to make each member of the family comfortable. And they know how to do it, but they are forced to take up with man-made rooms, which have a certain effect, but which are lacking in real home adaptability.

Now, a woman architect would understand what women wanted. She would realize that home is a woman's world. That her ingenuity, her talent, her physical strength are put to the test there, and she would—or, at least, it may be assumed that she would—be patient with feminine ideas and would learn to adapt herself to them, and, in turn, to adapt them to the demands of consistent and artistic architecture. It is quite conceivable that women architects of ability would find themselves much in the favor of their house building sisters.

A KIND CAT.

How She Opened a Closet Door and Let Her Friend Out.

There were two cats in the family, one young and one old. The two were not very good friends. The young cat was good-natured and ready to be civil, but the old one was very dignified, and quite jealous.

One day the young cat and her mistress were both standing in front of the kitchen range, when the good mistress noticed that the cat was giving her most beseeching looks, which she did not understand at all.

The creature was extremely fond of sleeping in a basket. Her blanket was close by, and the lady said in answer to the appeal, "Do you want to get into the basket, then why not do it yourself and not wait for me to put you there?" With this she was about to turn away, when to her surprise the pussy walked over to the sink and lay down upon her back. After working for some minutes she shoved her paws under the closet door, and with an effort to pull it open, when out walked the old cat, who it seemed had been accidentally imprisoned there. This is true, and certainly showed both cleverness and kind feeling in the young cat, who knew the plight of her companion and wanted to help her.

HEALTH

BRUISES.

A bruise or contusion is an injury to the soft tissues beneath the skin, when the skin itself is not broken. The discoloration that attends a bruise is caused by blood escaping from the ruptured blood-vessels and filtering into the tissues. A bruise may be trifling or serious; there may be only the smallest superficial discoloration of the skin, or there may be large collections of blood in the cavities of the body.

Some people bruise so readily that they are quite unable to account for large black bruises that appear on the surface of their bodies. Also some parts of the body bruise more readily than others. That is the case with the sides of the chest, and with the orbit of the eye, as seen in the very common "black eye."

A severe bruise is accompanied not only by discoloration, but by pain, tenderness and local swelling, and in some cases by severe shock and mental depression. The doctor's treatment is directed to limit in the escape of blood. If he sees the patient soon after the accident he applies elastic pressure to the injured part, and gives it a gentle stroking. Later on he uses a more vigorous form of kneading massage that would have been useless, and even harmful, at first.

Even if a bruise is not seen by the doctor until swelling has already set in, the application of the elastic bandage is useful, for it tends to drive the effused blood away from the injured part, and send it back into the general circulation. If there must be delay in the application of the bandage, the interval is best filled by gentle bathing with cold water. Warm water is often used, but that is a mistake, for although warm water may relieve the pain, it will not check the bleeding—quite the contrary, in fact. Remember that blood in the tissues is matter out of place, and any treatment that invites it must be wrong.

In some very severe cases so much blood may have collected that absorption is very slow. Time and trouble can often be saved by tapping the bruise with a hollow needle; but that is of course a matter for the physician to decide. —Youth's Companion.

HEALTH AND FOOD.

The unwisdom of eating too much salt is empjhasized by Dr. Alexander Bryce in "The Laws of Life and Health." "Spices and condiments possess no nutritive value," he writes, "but are used as relishes, and are supposed to aid digestion by stimulating the organs to pour forth more gastric fluids. But as this is chiefly mucus they do more harm than good. They are also productive of many cases of chronic catarrh of the throat, on account of their local irritant qualities.

"Health cannot be maintained without a due proportion of mineral salts in our food, but the only one which need be added to our daily menu is salt, or chloride of sodium. This is continued in all the fluids and tissues of the body, giving relish to the food and improves the appetite. Most of us are inclined to add too much salt to our food after cooking, and probably ten times too much is already added during the process.

"Where any special mineral ingredient is required by the system it may be more agreeable taken in the form of food. For example, iron is found in prunes, apples, lettuce, figs, beans, peas, potatoes, asparagus and cabbage; phosphorus in beans, peas, rice; chrorine in milk, lentils, asparagus and cabbage; sodium in lentils, figs and asparagus; potassium in beans, lentils, peas and potatoes.

"Green vegetables are chiefly used because of the mineral salts which they convey to the system in a natural form. For this reason they should be cooked by a steaming process, as the French do, and not boiled, when their valuable saline constituents are lost."

HUMAN CANCER.

The Germ of Plant Cancer Has Been Found.

(By Chas. M. Bice, Denver, Col.)

The greatest of pathological problems, that pertaining to human cancer, seems on the eve of solution at last.

The fact that cancer in plants is caused by a germ has recently been conclusively established by the scientists of the U. S. Dept. of Agriculture, and the germ isolated and identified. It has been observed under a powerful microscope, at its work, and has been photographed. It has been bred artificially on what is called "agar" jelly and other substances.

The great value of this discovery lies in the fact that cancer in plants and in human beings is substantially the same thing, structurally, and in the mode of growth.

In both cases the cancer is the development of "cells gone crazy," as the saying goes, and which seem to act as devouring parasites.

For half a century pathologists, everywhere, have been working on the cancer problem, and every considerable city in Europe has its cancer laboratory, but so far no results worth mentioning have been the outcome; and it may be said that medical science knows no more about the true nature of cancer, or its cause to-day, than it did a thousand years ago. Of course, there have grown up countless hordes of quacks who have professed to have found a certain cure for this deadly malady, and in their so-called "Literature," they picture the human cancer germ (a thing no human being has ever beheld) and give their credulous readers the exact shape of it, generally the most hideous their imaginations can devise.

But despite their so-called "sure cures" this deadly malady is on the increase, and is steadily claiming a greater number of victims. It may be said to be the only disease that can show an increase, as the causes of all others have been ascertained, and in most cases either a cure or an effectual way to prevent them has been found. Doctor Roswell Park, the most eminent American authority, says, that if cancer is not checked it will ere long kill more people in this country than consumption and typhoid combined. Last year it caused over 30 000 deaths in the U. S.

It has long been suspected that human cancer is the work of a germ, and experts have been diligently at work to find this germ responsible for so much human suffering, but so far have failed utterly, and so most of the great authorities have fallen back upon the very remarkable theory that there is no real cancer germ, and that the cancer cell itself is the destroying parasite. According to this theory, a group of natural cells undertakes to rebel against their usual functions, and proceeds to grow enormously at the expense of the other cells of the body, which it literally devours. It is well known that a human being, at the start, is a single microscopic cell, which multiplies under proper conditions of subdivision, to form various structures. Certain of these go to make skin, others to form bone, tendons, muscles, etc., but occasionally it happens (according to this theory) that a few skin cells find their way into the cartilage, or some bone cells are pushed into the structure of a gland, and if some external irritation be applied, they are started to growing on their own account, and assume the character of a parasite, and thus cause cancer.

Now, this is only a theory, pure and simple, and does not admit of demonstration. A resort is had to it for the sole reason that a germ has not been found.

Once discover the cancer germ and this whole theory, or surmise, falls to pieces, for it is not based on proven facts. But the question arises, if there be a human cancer germ, why has it not been discovered? The same question was asked with regard to plant cancer, which, until recently, was declared by these theorists in most positive terms to be a mere growth, not due to any specific organism. No germ was found, said the theorist, therefore none existed, but the researches and experiments of Drs. Erwin F. Smith and Dr. C. O. Townsend, of the Dept. of Agriculture (U.S.), were rewarded, recently, with the discovery of the plant cancer germ. These men have proved their claim by using the microbe to reproduce the cancer disease in healthy plants. Their method was simply one of inoculation by pricking the healthy plant with a platinum needle previously dipped in a "culture" of the germ.

Experiments are now underway to inoculate rats with the germ of plant cancer, and if this can be accomplished it will be an important step toward proving that human cancer is caused by a germ and not merely by disordered cell growth.

The plant cancer germ is a rod-shaped organism, apparently rounded at the ends, and provided with an appendage called a "flagellum," which enables it to wiggle or move in any direction. While this germ is extremely minute, that is not the reason it has hitherto escaped detection. It has escaped discovery because it hides itself inside of the cancer cell. It has the power of excreting a peculiar poison of its own, which causes the nucleus of the cancer cell to divide into two cells, and these two to split into four, the four into eight, and so on, thus making an enormous cell growth of a wholly abnormal character, at the expense of the other cells of the plant, which it literally devours.

This explains what has been often observed to happen to plants. They suddenly develop what is known as "root tumors," or "crown galls," which do a great deal of damage to cultivated plants, often ruining peach trees, dwarfing rose bushes, and almond orchards.

This germ has now received a name, and is called "bacterium tumefaciens." It not only affects the cell in which it hides, but many adjacent cells, while the "daughter cells," it seems, have the power of continuing the characteristics of the "mother cell," splitting and multiplying with extraordinary rapidity.

As a result, it takes but a short time to produce a vast proliferation of cellular tissue, often forming nest-like masses, similar to those which occur in certain types of human cancer.

If reviewed under a powerful microscope the structures of the plant, and the human cancer, differ in no important respect.

Often, during microscopic observations of plant cancer cells, these rod-shaped germs have been seen moving about slowly within the living cells of the affected plant, and as many as a hundred have been counted in a single cell, but generally the number is less, and frequently none are seen.

It is estimated that less than one per cent. of the cells appear to be occupied by the cancer germ, but out of twenty-four different species of plants experimented upon the cancer germ is exactly the same.

There is no doubt that this organism is what is called a "wound parasite," as it seems able only to find an entrance to the plant through bark or skin breaks, caused by insects, or by other injuries. But once established within the plant tissues, it derives its food from the cells of the host plant, and while it does not destroy them, it surely stimulates them to an abnormal and exceedingly rapid division.

It is true, as in human cancer, that the cancer cells are the immediate cause of the mischief in plants, but it is not to be inferred that the germ of plant cancer is also identical with the germ of human cancer. There may conceivably be the same but if so it remains to be proved. But in view of the striking similarities between plant cancer and human cancer, there is much reason for believing that the latter is attributable to a specific organism, which should be looked for inside of the cancer cells.

Both plant and human cancer can be communicated to healthy plants and animals, respectively, in the same way, thus strengthening the inference that they are caused in substantially the same manner, namely, by a germ.

In cases of infection, the primary tumor soon branches out into the healthy tissues, suggesting a resemblance to claws. Hence, the word "cancer," meaning a crab. In a human being, or other animal affected, columns of cells burrow down into the flesh, and even into the bone, disintegrating and destroying the tissue, while along these cancer branches secondary tumors form, hence if cut out the growth has a tendency to return. In all these respects the same descriptive points apply to both plant and human cencer. Thus a person attacked by an external cancer is not killed by the original tumor, usually, but by a subsequent infection of some vital organ breaking it down, whereupon the victim succumbs.

One of the curious things about cancer is the fact that healthy people are as liable to it as the enfeebled and sick. But the same thing is true of plants. In human beings cancer, as in plants, is merely a local disease at the start.

There is never more than one original point of attack, and nearly always it is in some non-vital part. No cure has ever been found, except to cut the tumor out, and such a removal is successful in checking the malady only when the operation is performed before the malignant growth has had time to extend its roots deep into the tissues. Cases of cancer are rare before forty, and from that time on the danger is progressively greater. The germ of human cancer once found, the next step will be to find a "serum," or "vaccine," which will act as a cure, or a preventive of the disease. Our scientific heroes are on the right track at last, and we may hope they will soon master the situation.

RIOTOUS AND REBELLIOUS

When Deep and Reverential Silence of Admiration is the Truest Praise

"To Thee, silence is praise!"—Psalms, lxv. 1.

How the angels must laugh when some scientist, digging deep in his favorite field of research and unearthing some hidden process or method of God which moulds and shapes an apparently insignificant detail of His creation, proclaims his "find" with glee, heralds afar his "discovery" and incidentally applauds his own astuteness in reading the process and unravelling the method! Man, the very woods are full of such! The lowliest weed of the underbrush contains within its swelling, growing rootlet and stem a hundred marvels and mysteries for human ingenuity to puzzle over and then despair of compassing. How does this tiny plant extract red coloring matter to adorn its beauteous petals withal, from exactly the same soil and sunshine and moisture from which its closest neighbor extracts, for similar purpose, a blue pigment? Who can tell how the trick is done? Who can do it himself?

"Canst thou by searching find out God?" The Talmud tells that a certain precentor in a synagogue, owing to the presence of a distinguished visiting rabbi, felt himself called upon to add a few adjectives to the usual ritual-formula which addresses God as "the Great, the Mighty and Awful." The rabbi listened to the accumulated eulogies, and then quietly asked him:—"Hast thou said all? To God, silence is the truest praise!"

When one is confronted with instances of God's love and wisdom in our lives, when unforeseen circumstances so shape and bend the march of events that we find ease where we looked for trouble, enlargement where we saw only stress, we come to understand that the hand of God has marvellously and mysteriously wrought in our horizon. The resultant gratitude will find expression perhaps in filling eyes and welling words at first; but then will come the time when deep and reverential silence is the truest praise, and we shall feel that we have mounted a step in the knowledge of the nearness of God and His working.

When the destinies of nations, too, are swayed before our own eyes, and the countless forces and influences which constitute world politics lend themselves to some unexpected solution of difficulties, avoidance of war or re-establishment of concord among the great ones of earth, let us not fail to pay our tribute of esteem to the men who have eased the way; but in reverent silence likewise give praise to Him who marvellously and mysteriously breathes inspiration, moulds men't minds, places the proper hands in control and smooths difficulties ere they be insuperable.

And when sorrows overtake us, trials and sufferings heap themselves upon us, or when perhaps only the dull grind of all straitened lives seems open to us—cheerless, hopeless, aimless—let us remember that He who has placed us there wants us there. We can, if we will, like the forest plant, extract from the rotting soil, the scanty moisture, the limited sunshine, radiant flowers, red or blue, as may be our nature and our gift. We may feel our privations deeply, see no end to our dark prospect and admit no reason why we should be so disadvantaged while others prosper; riotous and rebellious in thought—as sometimes we are tempted to be—let it be a "riotous" silence toward God, to mute our hearts and reverently bow before His dispensation; and then make the very best growth our allotted circumstances permit.—Rev. F. De Sola Mendes.

The fact that truth lies at the bottom of a well is probably the reason why the truth is often so fearfully watered.

There is nothing more universally commended than a fine day; the reason is that people can commend it without envy.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

INTERNATIONAL LESSON, JULY 23.

Lesson IV.—The wheat and the tares, Matt. 13. 24-30, 36-43. Golden Text, Matt. 13. 30.

Verse 24. Another parable—One of a group of eight parables mentioned in the introductory notes to our last lesson, which compare.

Verse 25. While men slept — At night. It should be noted that no particular men are designated, it being the stealthiness of the enemy, rather than any negligence on the part of the men who slept, which this part of the parable emphasizes.

26. When the blade sprang up—When it grew tall and brought forth fruit. Resemblance to the grain was so close that it was not detected until the time when the ears of grain began to form.

27. Servants—Literally, bond-servants.

28. An enemy—Literally, a man that is an enemy.

Wilt thou then that we go—eagerness of men to judge their fellows is a common human trait which even Christians do not escape.

29. Haply—Perchance.

Root up the wheat with them—The similarity between the wheat and the tares noted above made this a real danger, but added to this the roots of the plants would be intertwined in the soil, and thus it would be almost impossible to remove the one without uprooting the other.

30. Gather up first the tares—This would be impossible in actual practice, in harvest fields with which we are familiar. In ancient times, however when the grain was all cut with a small hand sickle, and harvesting was not so complicated or extensive a process as now, and especially among people with whom time counted for little, this separation of the tares from the wheat at harvest time was not an impossibility.

36. In verses 31-35, which intervene, are recorded two other parables which Jesus spoke in connection with the one under consideration. It was not until after he had finished speaking that he left the multitudes, and went into the house, the house referred to being probably that of Peter, at Capernaum.

37. The Son of man—A title used by Jesus frequently in referring to himself.

38. The field is the world—Probably Jesus intended with the term world to designate actually the whole world, though some have thought that the interpretation of the parable requires a limitation of the word to that part of the world included in the kingdom which he was to establish. Such a limitation, however, seems wholly unwarranted. In interpreting the parable we must remember that it is not intended that the details of any of Christ's parables should be forced further than Jesus himself carried the interpretation. Each parable emphasizes one main thought or teaching and any endeavor to interpret details of the figurative language leads into difficulty.

The sons of the kingdom—All believing disciples.

39. The end of the world—Margin, the consummation of the age.

41. All things that cause stumbling, and them that do iniquity—Not persons only, but things also that are evil and a hindrance to the final consummation of God's plans shall be removed.

43. The righteous shine forth as the sun—Jesus doubtless had in mind the prophecy of Daniel: "And they that are wise shall shine as the brightness of the firmament; and they that turn many to righteousness, as the stars for ever and ever."

GRAINS OF GOLD.

Prosperity demands of us more prudence and moderation than adversity.

If a preacher has anything worth saying he can say it in ten minutes.

The sincerity of a Christian ought to be perfect and so well known that every one can go by his simple word.

Believe me, the talent of success is nothing more than doing what you can do well, and doing well whatever you do without a thought of fame. If it come at all it will come because it is deserved, not because it is sought after. And, moreover, there will be no misgivings, no disappointments, no feverish, exhausting excitement.—Longfellow.

Let us do our duty in our shop or our kitchen, the market, the street, the office, the school, the home, just as faithfully as if we stood in the front rank of some great battle and we knew that victory for mankind depended on our bravery, strength and skill. When we do that the humblest of us will be serving in that great army which achieves the welfare of the world.—Theodore Parker.

THURSDAY, JULY 25, '12

It may be that farmers are to a large extent to blame for the opinions held by many in regard to their position and place in the country. The man who does not laud his own calling and believe it to be the best in existence, cannot expect others to do so. It is well to remember, however, that agriculture is one of the oldest and most noble of callings. In many European countries to-day the man who owns and works a farm, or even rents one, has a social status ahead of that of the store-keeper or business man. One has only to study the agriculture of Great Britain to be convinced of this fact. Both in the United States and Canada there has been a tendency in the past to belittle the calling of the farmer; and, as we have already stated, the farmer himself is in some measure responsible for it. While clothes do not make the man, yet some little pride in one's personal appearance in public is necessary. The people who settled on the land in this country in pioneer days had little of this world's goods, and no matter what desire they may have had for personal adornment they could not afford any extensive outlay in this respect, and so when they appeared in public were not as well dressed as those in other callings, and consequently they were looked upon with a scorn and sometimes a contempt that neither they nor their calling deserved. In time, however, many of these old pioneers, no matter how shabby their dress, could buy out many a city man dressed in fine linen and farting sumptuously every day.

It is understood that the financing of the Chicago and Milwaukee Electric Railway in which the shareholders of the defunct Sovereign Bank are interested, has been practically completed. The road has been in the hands of a receiver since January, 1908 and for a time it was thought that it was an asset on which the shareholders of the bank could not count to any great extent. The financing has been effected by the issue of $10,000,000 bonds of which only $4,500,000 are to be sold at present. This amount will be used as follows, to retire underlying bonds $1,800,000; to retire receivers certificates, $1,000,000 and for improvements, $1,000,000 while the balance will remain in the treasury.

Mrs. Wm. Wilson returned to her home in Copplestone after visiting here with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. C. B. Horney.

According to revised figures obtained at the end of June the total area under wheat this year is 10,047,800 acres, compared with 10,377,159 acres as returned by the Census of 1911 was 1,097,900 acres, but winter killing has reduced this area to 781,000 acres. The area sown to oats is estimated at 9,464,600 acres, compared with 9,233,550 acres in 1911. In the three Northwest provinces spring wheat covers 9,029,000 acres in 1911 the increase being in Saskatchewan and Alberta. Including fall wheat the total wheat acreage in the three provinces is 9,246,100, compared with 9,801,293 acres in 1911, the decrease being accounted for by the large area of fall wheat winter killed in Alberta. Oats in the three provinces occupy 5,037,000 acres and barley, 826,000 acres as compared with last year's census figures of 4,563,203 acres for oats and 761,738 acres for barley.

The Kincardine Reporter last week published a very creditable Old Boys' Re-union edition last week, contained in which were the portraits of the town officials and many of the leading business men of the town. The edition is very worthy of the occasion and reflects credit on its able editor, J. J. Hunter.

NEWSPAPER LAWS

1—A postmaster is required to give notice by letter returning the paper does not answer the law, when a subscriber does not take his paper out of the Office and state the reason for its not being taken. Any neglect to do so makes the postmaster responsible to the publisher for payment.

2—If any person orders his paper discontinued he must pay all arrearages or the publisher may continue to send it until payment is made and collect the whole amount whether the paper is taken from the office or not. There can be no legal discontinuance until payment is made.

3—Any person who takes a paper out of the Post Office, whether directed to his name or not, or whether he has subscribed or not, is responsible for the pay.

4—If a subscriber orders his paper stopped and the publisher continues to send, the subscriber is bound to pay for it if he takes it out of the Post Office. This proceeds upon the ground that a man must pay for what he uses.

5—The courts have decided that refusing to take newspapers or periodicals from the Post Office or removing leaving them uncalled for, is prima facie evidence of intentional fraud.

STATES THAT PARISIAN SAGE IS BEST HAIR TONIC

"I had a bad case of dandruff. My scalp was full of dandruff and it came out thick and scalpy. My hair came out badly; often I nearly cried on account of losing my pretty head of hair. I heard of PARISIAN SAGE and only had to use two bottles, before the hair stopped coming out, the scalp became clean, and all the dandruff disappeared. The hair became silky and one big reason that I liked PARISIAN SAGE was that it kept the hair smooth, silky, and clean, with no traces of stickiness.

I believe this tonic to be the best on the market as there has been no return of dandruff, or hair falling out whatever. I am glad to publicly endorse the use of PARISIAN SAGE. I have often endorsed its use and am glad to do it." 33 E. Bond St., Corry Pa.

PARISIAN SAGE, the delightful hair dressing and beautifier sold by W. S. COLE and druggists everywhere. Guaranteed for falling hair, dandruff and scalp itch. Large bottle 50 cents.

DRAINAGE DEMONSTRATION

The Ontario Agricultural College is emphasizing the value of drainage again this summer, for which purpose drainage demonstrations are being held in many parts of this province. On Thursday, August 1st, 1912 at the hour of 7 p.m. o'clock one of these demonstrations will be held on the farm of Mr. A. G. Smillie, Hensall, concession 3, Lot 7 Tuckersmith Township. This meeting should be of special interest as some difficult places to drain are involved. Besides the discussion of the particular problem of Mr. Smillie's farm there will be a demonstration of methods of finding the fall over a ditch, determining the grade, digging true to the grade, etc.

THE SECRET OF LONG LIFE.

Do not sap the springs of life by neglect of the human mechanism, by allowing the accumulation of poisons in the system. An imitation of Nature's method of restoring waste of tissue and impoverishment of the blood and nervous strength is to take an alterative glyceric extract (without alcohol) of Golden Seal and Oregon grape root, Bloodroot, Stone and Mandrake root with Cherrybark. Over 40 years ago Dr. Pierce gave to the public this remedy, which he called Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. He found it would help the blood in taking up the proper elements from food, help the liver into activity, thereby throwing out the poisons from the blood and vitalizing the whole system as well as allaying and soothing a cough.

No one ever takes cold unless constipated, or exhausted, and having what we call mal-nutrition, which is attended with impoverished blood and exhaustion of nerve force. The "Discovery" is an all-round tonic which restores tone to the blood, nerves and heart by imitating Nature's methods of restoring waste of tissue, and feeding the nerves, heart and lungs on rich red blood.

Mrs. Dorr.

"I suffered from pain under my right shoulder blade also a very severe cough," writes Mrs. W. Dorr, of New Brookland, S. C., to Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y. "Had four different doctors and none did me any good. Some said I had consumption, others said I would have to have an operation. I was bedridden, unable to sit up for six months—and was nothing but a live skeleton. You advised me to take Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery and Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets. When I had taken one bottle of the 'Discovery' I could sit up for an hour at a time, and when I had taken three bottles I could do my cooking and tend to the children. I took fourteen bottles in all and was then in good health. My weight is now 167 pounds.

MOTHER-OF-PEARL WORK.

Method by Which the Designs Are Built Up Bit by Bit.

Wonderful is the work of the designer in mother-of-pearl. With tiny segments of this iridescent material he builds up a beautiful design bit by bit, section by section.

First, from the cabinetmaker he receives the woodwork upon which his design will be formed. It may be the top of a carved chest, a portion of a stool or table, or some dainty nick-nack to delight a lady's heart.

Then upon the wood he roughly draws the design and gathers together the crude pieces with which to form the mosaic in the wood. Selecting a piece of mother-of-pearl, he fits it in a vise, and then with a tiny file he shapes it to occupy the required space. Deftly he sets the section in the wood, fixing it with warm paste to fill the crevices.

Another piece is then selected, fashioned and secured, and so day after day till the piece is complete. The design is then rubbed with pumice stone to give enhanced color, varnish is applied, and the finishing touches are given.

Tonquin, a division of French Indo China, furnishes the finest native in layers of mother-of-pearl. — Pearson's Weekly.

A MUSICAL RIOT.

One of the Attractions at an Old Time Virginia Celebration.

Here is a program observed in the celebration of St. Andrew's day in an old Virginia town in 1737:

That a fiddle be played for by twenty fiddlers, every person to bring his own fiddle. After the prize is won they are all to play together and each one a different tune and then be treated by the company.

That twelve boys of twelve years of age do run for 112 yards for a hat at the cost of 12 shillings.

That a flag be flying on said day thirty feet high.

That after dinner the royal health, his honor the governor's, is to be drunk.

That a pair of silver buckles be wrestled for by a number of brisk young men.

That a pair of handsome shoes be danced for.

That a pair of handsome silk stockings of one pistole value be given to the handsomest young maid that appears in the field.

It is probable, says the Ohio State Journal, our tastes are too much changed to enjoy such a list of attractions, but one may imagine what fun they must have caused.

Ocean Cannibals.

Such fierce carnivorous fishes as exist in the depths of the ocean are unknown at the surface. There is a "black swallower" which devours other finny creatures ten times as big as itself, literally climbing over its victim, first with one jaw and then with the other. Another species is nearly all mouth, and, having no power of locomotion, it lies buried in the soft ooze at the bottom, its head alone protruding, ready to engulf any prey that may wander into its cavernous jaws. There is a ferocious kind of shark resembling a huge eel. All of these monsters are black as ink. Some of them are perfectly blind, while others have enormous, goggling eyes. No ray of sunlight ever pierces the dark, unfathomed caves in which they dwell. Each species is gobbled by the species next bigger, for there is no vegetable life to feed on.—Spare Moments.

As Others See It.

Every two or three weeks I approach my house from the unusual side and make a note of the effect of porch, windows and the curtains. Then I try to go into the house as a stranger. Pictures which have become so familiar that they were a part of the wall I see the need of changing, and so I see things all through the house. I think more than anything else I find the rooms overcrowded and fussy and something can be banished. Of course I can't always do these things at the time, but I make a note of them. This has worked so well with my house that I am trying it for myself. When dressed for the street or house I step to the glass and say, "Let me present you to Mrs. ——," and try to look at myself as a stranger, and I see many things to improve. It is a good thing to "see ourselves as others see us."—Harper's Bazar.

The Lobster's Color.

The shell of the lobster is imbued with a black or bluish pigment secreted by the true skin, which also gives out the calcareous matter after each molt, so that lime and pigment are blended together. This pigment becomes red, pale and intense in water at a temperature of 212 degrees Fahrenheit, and the same effect is produced by the action of alcohol, ether and various acids.

A Sad Discovery.

"How does Brown like the high position he was recently promoted to?"

"Not very well."

"But I thought it was paying him $10,000 a year?"

"So it is. But he's discovered that his employers expect him to earn it."—Detroit Free Press.

E-M-F 1909 Studebaker FLANDERS 20 1909

A Real Car at a Low Price

The Studebaker-Flanders "20" is first of all a sturdy, handsome car. Your natural pride and the judgment of your neighbors are satisfied.

But deeper than appearance—in design, in construction, down into the detail of every cotter pin and lock nut, the Studbaker-Flanders "20" is a splendid automobile. By changing the transmission or using only the sheer necessities of automobile manufacture, we could considerably cheapen it. But then it wouldn't deserve the Studebaker name. Remember that for 60 years the name "Studebaker" has stood for the best that can be built. There are no hidden weaknesses in the Studebaker-Flanders "20". It is all good, a true Studebaker car.

GODERICH—While working on a bridge between Detroit and Belle Isle for the Detroit Bridge Company, James Albert Quaid, of Goderich aged 38 years, lost his hold and was thrown into the river. Before he could be rescued life was extinct. The body arrived on the Grand Trunk train.

MITCHELL—The property owners of Mitchell voted on a by-law to raise $10,000 for the purpose of fitting up the mill dam and adjacent property as a public park, road improvements, and tending the water mains. Considerable opposition was offered to the proposed schemes, but the promoters of the by-law succeeded in clearing with a majority of 63.

GODERICH TOWNSHIP—At 11 o'clock on Wednesday the residence of Mr. Geo. Sturdy, Goderich Township, was the scene of a very pretty wedding, when his only daughter, Dorothy Linda, was united in marriage to Mr. Thomas George Laing, of Weyburn, Sask. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Dr. E. Medd, of Goderich.

WHEAT SOWN AREA IS LESS

Oats and Barley are Somewhat Ahead of Last Year—Crop and Stock Bulletin

A despatch from Ottawa says: A bulletin on the crops and live stock of Canada was issued by the Census and Statistics Office on Wednesday. According to the revised figures obtained at the end of June, the total area under wheat this year is 10,047,300 acres, compared with 10,387,159 acres as returned by the census of 1911. The area sown to fall wheat in 1911 was 1,097,900 acres, but winter killing has reduced this area to 781,000 acres. The area sown to oats is estimated at 9,494,600 acres, as compared with 9,233,550 acres in 1911, and to barley 1,449,220 acres as against 1,403,969 acres in 1911. In the three northwest provinces spring wheat covers 9,029,000 acres as against 8,946,965 acres in 1911, the increase being in Saskatchewan and Alberta. Including fall wheat the total wheat acreage in the three Provinces is 9,246,100, as compared with 9,301,293 acres in 1911, the decrease being accounted for by the large area of fall wheat winter-killed in Alberta. Oats in the three provinces occupy 5,037,000 acres, and barley 826,100 acres, as compared with last year's census figures of 4,563,203 acres for oats and 761,738 for barley.

Whilst not equal to the exceptionally high figures recorded this time last year, the condition of spring sown crops is generally good. The highest figures for spring cereals are recorded in Prince Edward Island and British Columbia, the per cent. condition ranging from 97 to 99 in the former and from 90 to 95 in the latter Province, the average for the Dominion being from 80 to 89. Fall wheat remains low, being only 70 for Canada, 73 for Ontario and 71.6 for Alberta. Last year the condition was also low, viz., 75 for Canada; the average of the four years, 1908-1911, was 81.5. Spring wheat is 89.73 per cent., compared with 94.78 last year and 88.25 the four years' average; oats 86.43, against 94.46 in 1911 and 90.42 average; barley 88.58, against 93 in 1911, and 89.28 average. Rye is 87.84, peas are 80.08 and mixed grains 84.98. Hay and clover show a condition per cent. of 85.59, against 84.97 in 1911; alfalfa 90.59, against 82.31, and wheat, oats and barley range from 80 to 88 per cent., figures which are exceptional records by from about 10 to 15 per cent.

The estimated numbers of live stock show further decreases except as regards horses and dairy cattle, the former being 70,400 and the latter 14,500 more than last year's estimates. The census figures of 1911 are not yet available. The condition of all live stock in Canada is uniformly excellent, the number of points being 97 horses, 98 cattle, 97 sheep and 96 swine.

ENDURED TERRIBLE AGONY.

Sad Plight of An Old Lady Owing to Paralysis.

A despatch from Ottawa says: Mrs. Brunet, aged seventy-two, of 117 King Edward Avenue, a paralytic, is dead as the result of terrible burns received when, in endeavoring to pick up a key from the floor, she upset a candle, igniting her clothes. The old lady as a result of paralysis was unable to utter a sound or move to call for assistance, and was only discovered some hours later by occupants of the house, silently suffering terrible agony.

WILL GO TO CANADA.

Retiring Naval Officers Think it is the Best Vantage Ground.

A despatch from London says: A naval expert who knows the sentiments of the officers of the fleet states that many declare they will go to Canada when retiring on the reserve list, for a twofold reason, sure material prosperity and the best vantage ground from which to observe the expansion of the Empire in over-seas territory.

PLENTY OF RAIN IN WEST

Samples Show as Good Head and Clean Straw as Ever Exhibited at This Period

A despatch from Winnipeg says: Crop conditions in the three prairie provinces were never better nor more promising at this time of the year. This is the report being sent out by the Canadian Pacific Railway, and is the general result of reports sent in by its agents from every sub-division on the Western lines.

The situation in Manitoba is greatly improved over one week ago. Last week some points still needed rain, but now every district has been greatly relieved. While generally cool, the weather has been good for sturdy growth and filling of the heads. Seventy-five per cent. of the grain is now out in head and a large part of it shows a fairly long head, although on some of the light land owing to previous dry weather the head is a little shorter than it would otherwise have been. There was a slight touch of frost throughout Southwestern Manitoba last Saturday and Sunday nights, but no damage was done except on some low-lying land in the vicinity of Napinka, and this was confined to a very small area. There was also some hail in different sections, but the aggregate damage is very small.

What is true in Manitoba is equally true in Saskatchewan. Splendid progress has been made during the past week, there being a fairly good growth of straw and the heads filling well.

All authorities in Alberta state that conditions there were never better. There has been an abundance of rain, and on the light lands the crop looks better than it has in a number of years. It is fully expected that with the average warm weather and plenty of sunshine the fall wheat will be ready for cutting the first part of August. Samples sent in from different sections show as good head and clean straw as was ever shown at this time of year.

TORONTO CORRESPONDENCE

INTERESTING BITS OF GOSSIP FROM THE QUEEN CITY.

In the Happy Summer Time—Where Torontonians Spend Their Holidays—Visitors From the States.

In midsummer holiday time Toronto people scatter to the ends of the earth. There is no one place or locality or district that can be described as Toronto's summer resort. So many places are available that the population seeking rest and recreation gets diffused in a way that is unusual, even for the largest cities.

For the mos' part, they stay in Canada, though an increasing number have the time and money to take an ocean voyage and European tour, and a number of others seek the mountains of New England or the seashore of Maine, Connecticut or New Jersey. But the popular resorts for those who wish to stay within striking distance of the city are Lake Simcoe, which is becoming surrounded by settlements of Toronto summer visitors, Georgian Bay, the Muskoka Lakes, the Lake of Bays district, the Kawartha Lakes and the other localities of central Ontario, which are honeycombed with lakes and streams.

THE REAL SUBURBANITES.

A population of several thousand find summer houses along the north shore of Lake Ontario, so close that the men folks can get to the city for business by train every day. These settlements extend almost as far as Hamilton on the west and a similar distance to the east. Some of these enthusiasts have built residences suitable for all the year habitation, but the winter "suburbanites" have not multiplied fast as yet. Still others cross the lake to the Niagara and Grimsby districts, and smaller groups scatter all over the Province. Scarcely a town but has its quota of Toronto holidayers.

But they nearly all get back in time for the Exhibition, and Toronto is happy if they only bring all their summer friends with them.

COTTAGES COST $500 FOR SUMMER.

Toronto Island, deserted to the east winds and mountains of ice in winter, is itself the center of a dense summer population. It is only a sandbar which, while providing a delightful beach, gives little encouragement to vegetation. But it remains tremendously popular, as evidenced by the fact that comparatively small, rough-finished frame cottages command rentals of $500 and more for the summer months.

CITY FULL OF VISITORS.

But Toronto shows no signs of quietness, even in the dog days, for it is itself a summer resort. Traffic on all the downtown streets is as dense in July as it is in April. It is only when one visits the better residential streets and sees long rows of houses with the blinds drawn and no sign of life anywhere visible that one realizes that the holidays are in full swing.

Every day American visitors throng the retail districts. Many of them come by boat from Niagara. American railways from all over the States run excursions to Niagara Falls and from that point thousands daily make a one-day trip across Lake Ontario to Toronto. The crowd at the foot of Yonge street after the arrival of a boat often seems to be composed entirely of visitors from Kentucky, Tennessee or other southern points. They are easily distinguished from brightcheeked Canadians by their sallow complexions, and the little peculiarities of their clothes, and when they speak, by their delightful southern drawl.

GETTING A BIRD'S-EYE VIEW.

If their visit is but for the day the favorite thing to do is to take a sightseeing motor bus, and have a "joy ride" around the city. The guides give them a lot of so-called information about men and places, most of which will scarcely bear examination. But they go away happy because they at least think they have learned a lot about Toronto and Canada, and there is no people under the sun more desirous of superficial knowledge than the Americans.

But many of them stay more than a day, and perhaps make further excursions into Canada. The traffic is increasing year after year, which indicates that those who come must carry back favorable impressions.

DANGER OF FLAG INCIDENTS.

One thing that continually threatens to mar the visits of our American cousins is the ever-present danger of a flag incident cropping up. Perhaps it is an over-zealous Yankee patriot, or it may be a materialistic Canadian merchant seeking customers, who invites trouble by an improper use of "Old Glory." The trouble is that we on this continent have not yet learned the etiquette of flag flying. The universal rule is that if it is desired to display the flag of a foreign country, the flag of the soil on which it stands must top it on the mast. If this rule were universally followed there would be no reason for anyone to feel insulted, and no reason for any complaints.

"HERB" LENNOX'S PICNIC.

"Herb" Lennox's picnic in North York has become an annual midsummer institution. It is announced that, now that Tammany Hall of New York has gone out of the picnic business, "Herb's" is the greatest political picnic in America. No disrespect is intended by the use of the nickname "Herb." That's what he likes to be called, and the name under which he advertises the picnic. It helps to make votes, and besides he really likes it.

North York is one of those constituencies which shows more loyalty to men than to parties. This is illustrated by the fact that it is nearly the same riding that now gives Lennox a thousand of a majority that used to give Sir William Mulock a four-figured majority nearly every election. "Bill" had his own ways of keeping in touch with his constituents, the picnic is "Herb's" way—one of them. It also gives him an opportunity to show a lot of his city friends the beauties of Lake Simcoe. The farmers and their families come in thousands. There is dancing and sports and a good time generally, with a suitable seasoning of speeches for the more serious-minded, speeches which, it does not need to be added, contain only good Conservative doctrine.

A HYDRO-ELECTRIC LOSS.

There is general regret at the retirement of P. W. Sothman from the chief engineership of the Hydro-Electric Commission to go into private practice. In his profession Sothman is regarded akin to a genius. By birth he is Danish and talks English only with a decided, but very attractive, accent.

His hobby is airships. He has designed more than one, and has constructed models. Many times have his reporter friends pleaded with him to let them print an airship story about him, but he always refused. He was too busy working for the Government, he said.

Sothman used to be very short-sighted. Then when on a big engineering job in Liberia he met with an accident which sent many thousand volts of electricity through his body. He was knocked senseless and badly scarred by the burns, but his short-sightedness vanished.

He applied to the Hydro-Electric Commission through an advertisement in a New York engineering paper. And it was a lucky day when he came to Canada. He proposes to stay here.

76 NEW POSTOFFICES.

June's Record—Most of Them in Rapidly Filling West.

A despatch from Ottawa says: Seventy-six new postoffices were opened in Canada during the month of June. The great majority of them were in the western provinces, thus indicating the rapid settlement of new districts by the record influx of immigration this year.

TRYING TO CLOSE THE GAP

Work on the Transcontinental is Being Rushed in North Ontario

A despatch from Ottawa says: Major R. W. Leonard, the chairman of the Transcontinental Railway Commission, has just returned to Ottawa, and lost no time in issuing an absolute denial to newspaper assertions that he has increased the grades of the railway. There has been no change in the grades, he declared, that will effect the hauling capacity of a locomotive either eastbound or westbound to the extent of a single pound. Neither has he any intention of making any such change.

Major Leonard has just completed a long trip, in which he went as far west as the Yellowhead Pass in company with Hon. Frank Cochrane, Minister of Railways, and in particular went over the line east of Winnipeg for the purpose of doing everything possible to hurry on the work, and expedite the completion of the road. The track is laid from Winnipeg to a point near Lake Nipigon. There then occurs a gap which by this time is reduced to about a hundred miles. Another gap of about the same length occurs in Quebec, some distance east of Cochrane, and there is a short gap in Quebec on the south side of the St. Lawrence, a short distance east of Levis.

While Major Leonard will not commit himself to a definite statement, he has some hope of closing the Lake Nipigon gap this Autumn, so that the line may be available for hauling this season's wheat east to Cochrane and down by the Timiskaming and Northern Ontario to Montreal. Every effort is being made. The issue is largely a matter of conditions. If they prove favorable, it may be accomplished. Next year the line should be in operation as a grain-carrying route.

MAKING SAFE INVESTMENTS

A RECENT AND ACCURATE DEFINITION OF THE TERM "INVESTMENT."

A Couple of Examples as to Why It is Incorrect to Call Even the Most Conservative Common Shares Investments When Using the Term in its Strict Meaning.

The articles contributed by "Investor" are for the sole purpose of guiding prospective investors, and, if possible, of saving them from losing money through placing it in "wild-cat" enterprises. The impartial and reliable character of the information may be relied upon. The writer of these articles and the publisher of this paper have no interests to serve in connection with this matter other than those of the reader.

(By "Investor.")

Some of the writers on investment, whose opinions are most respected, claim that putting money in shares is not investing it. This definition of an investment is something which one may purchase in the shape of a negotiable security which involves the payment of interest and the repayment of the capital at some fixed time in the future, or under certain definite conditions. In other words, an investment is always a loan, and any securities which do not represent money loaned are not, according to their definition, an investment. True, they say, some securities almost fulfil all the requirements of an investment that are not loans, but strictly speaking they are not investments.

There is a good deal to be said for their position, for undoubtedly that description comes very close to a general definition. Unfortunately some mortgages cannot be considered investments, nor yet some shares cannot be accurately described as speculations. However, it is a fairly accurate definition, and pretty well on the safe side.

Take such a security as Consumers' Gas Company of Toronto shares. These are used as an illustration because the Company is so situated that the hypothetical cases which I shall suggest cannot take place in connection therewith. I make this statement to reassure any holders of Consumers' Gas stock, who might otherwise feel uneasy at reading these suggestions.

Now, Consumers' Gas stock is as nearly a true investment as it is possible for a stock to be. It has no speculative side. Its returns are limited by law to 10 per cent. on the par value, which represents about 5 1-4 per cent on the present market price of the shares. Its earnings have been steadily growing, and it is well managed. It commands a ready market with very few fluctuations in price. Its assets are substantial and valuable. Apparently it is a pure quibble to say it is not an investment.

Suppose, however, the recent annexations to the City of Toronto required a sudden expansion in the company's system of mains and in its plant. A less substantial company would find it necessary to issue securities more attractive than ordinary stock to raise the money, and conceivably the Consumers' Gas Company during some such period of stress as occurred in 1892, 1902 or 1907 might find it necessary to sell bonds to raise this money. These bonds would, of course, come ahead of the common stock, and that stock would, by the issue of bonds, become less satisfactory as an investment. Indeed, it might happen that as earnings are limited to a sum sufficient to pay 10 per cent. on the common stock, that in order to pay the bond interest it would be necessary to cut the return on the junior security.

Or, suppose, under stress of a coal strike or some other unforseen contingency the Company's earnings fell below the 10 per cent. mark. It would be necessary to cut the dividend in order to keep within the earnings. But a bond in a similar position couldn't be denied its interest. In a period of stress such a company could raise by means of a loan from its bank enough money to take care of such a temporary contingency. But the law and the ordinary principles of good business would prevent the directors taking similar steps in connection with the dividend in such a case.

That is why a stock should not be called an investment. Many people will find fault with this attitude, but when we come right down to facts nothing can be devised which will come ahead of a mortgage—and therefore of bond, which is secured by mortgage; but if a contingency arises it is a very simple matter to slip in a couple of bond issues and all descriptions of preferred stock between the common stock and the assets. And even if there is nothing between, the common shareholders has no right to demand, or expect to get his money back. He is merely a partner in the enterprise.

SIR DONALD'S PREDICTION.

Believes the West Will Have 250,000,000 Bushels This Year.

A despatch from Winnipeg says: Sir Donald Mann, in Winnipeg on Wednesday, denied that the New York-Montreal-Toronto syndicate would buy the Winnipeg street railway. "As far as I know there are no negotiations now for the purchase of the street railway stock. At the present time it is worth more in market than prospective purchasers are offering. In regard to the main line, as things are going now, grading will be completed from New Westminster inland for a distance of 350 miles. The intervening gap will also be covered with contractors by the end of the year. I have never seen the crops looking better, and unless some unforeseen accident occurs I believe the crop will run as high as a quarter of a billion bushels," said Sir Donald.

TO STRENGTHEN WEAK NERVES

The Blood Supply Must be Made Rich, Red and Pure

When you build up the blood you strengthen the nerves, because the nerves get their food through the blood. You cannot reach the nerves with medicine except through the blood—this is a great medical truth few people realize. Nervous people are pale people. They are nervous because they are pale. The blood is so thin and watery that it cannot nourish the nerves. Starved nerves mean sciatica, neuralgia, nervous prostration, paralysis.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People are a real nerve tonic. They supply plenty of nourishing red blood to the exhausted nerves, thus enabling them to do the work nature intended they should do. This is the simple secret of the success of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills in curing nerve troubles. As to their value in cases of sciatica, Mrs. Job Palmer, Fenelon Falls, Ont., says: "For seven weeks I suffered untold agony from sciatica. I tried everything to ease the pain, but it steadily grew worse. Liniments had no more effect upon the trouble than water. Then the doctor told me to apply a hot iron to the afflicted part and I did so morning after morning, but my leg had become so numb with the pain that I could hardly feel the heat of the iron. I never expected to be able to walk again, my leg was so drawn up. I had tried so many things that I had given up hope, yet at the urging of my brother I decided to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. To my surprise in two weeks I was able to stand on my feet with but little pain, and soon after I was able to walk about again. I continued taking the Pills for about two months, but some time before I discontinued their use my leg had become normal again, and the agony of the trouble had disappeared, and I have not since had a twinge of it. Words fail to express my gratitude for what the Pills did for me and I most strongly recommend them to all sufferers from sciatica."

The every day mission of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills is to cure cases like the above, and they will not disappoint if given a fair trial. Sold by all medicine dealers or by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockvile, Ont.

TOWNS WITHOUT TAXES.

Germany and France Have One Each.

It was recently reported from Germany that there was a little town within the empire in which there were no taxes. The town possessed benefactions, the revenues from which enabled it to pay its way without the intervention of the tax gatherer.

France never likes to be outdone by anything German, so a Paris contemporary has set itself the task of finding a parallel. Something more than a parallel has been discovered, for not only are there no taxes but hte timbers on the communal lands are sufficient to grant each person a small annuity. This happy land is Montmarion, in the Midi. There are seven electors in the hamlet, so to avoid anything like rivalry the seven return themselves to the local council. Cutting down the trees and selling them is sufficient to provide a livelihood for these simple people, whose tastes are so modest that they may be termed by some uncivilized.

The Best Treatment for Itching Scalps and Falling Hair

To allay itching and irritation of the scalp, prevent dry, thin and falling hair, remove crusts, scales and dandruff, and promote the growth and beauty of the hair, the following special treatment is most effective, agreeable and economical. On retiring, comb the hair out straight all around, then begin at the side and make a parting, gently rubbing Cuticura ointment into the parting with a bit of soft flannel held over the end of the finger. Anoint additional partings about half an inch apart until the whole scalp has been treated, the purpose being to get the Cuticura ointment on the scalp skin rather than on the hair. It is well to place a light covering over the hair to protect the pillow from possible stain. The next morning, shampoo with Cuticura soap and hot water. Shampoos alone may be used as often as agreeable, but once or twice a month is generally sufficient for this special treatment for women's hair. Notwithstanding Cuticura soap and ointment are sold everywhere, those wishing to try this treatment may do so without expense by sending to "Cuticura," Dept. 4M, Boston, U. S. A., for a free sample of Cuticura soap and Ointment, with 32-p. book on skin and hair.

TO THE MANOR BORN.

Lord Charles Beresford and the Duke of Argyll were travelling together on the Great Western Railway, in England. The only other occupant of their compartment was a prosperous drummer, whose success had been due to natural talent for business rather than to sound education. The noblemen found their companion entertaining, so they listened to his talk until a small station in Gloucestershire was reached. Here Lord Charles Beresford alighted, and was met by a servant of the people with whom he was going to stay. The drummer leaned out of the window, open-mouthed and wide-eyed. He saw his lordship bowed into a splendid carriage and driven off down a country lane. Drawing his head within the carriage again he turned to the duke and said:

"Oos 'im?"

"He is Lord Charles Beresford," the duke replied.

"Well, now!" said the drummer. "Fancy the likes of 'im 'obnobbin' with two cads like you and me!"

SHUT THAT WINDOW.

After spending the greater part of the evening with friends John decided that home was the place for him, and, arriving there, he elected to sleep in the front garden. Next morning, happening to look up, he saw his wife observing him from an open window. "Shut that window!" he yelled. "Do you want me to catch my death of cold?"

A WINNING START.

A Perfectly Digested Breakfast Makes Nerve Force for the Day.

Everything goes wrong if the breakfast lies in your stomach like a mud pie. What you eat does harm if you can't digest it—it turns to poison.

A bright lady teacher found this to be true, even of an ordinary light breakfast of eggs and toast. She says:

"Two years ago I contracted a very annoying form of indigestion. My stomach was in such condition that a simple breakfast of fruit, toast and egg gave me great distress.

"I was slow to believe that trouble could come from such a simple diet, but finally had to give it up, and found a great change upon a cup of hot Postum and Grape-Nuts with cream, for my morning meal. For more than a year I have held to this course and have not suffered except when injudiciously varying my diet.

"I have been a teacher for several years and find that my easily digested breakfast means a saving of nervous force for the entire day. My gain of ten pounds in weight also causes me to want to testify to the value of Grape-Nuts.

"Grape-Nuts holds first rank at our table."

TO DESTROY PORPOISES.

A new use has been found for the submarine by the French ministry of marine. The artificial porpoises are to fight and kill the natural porpoise. It has been discovered that hungry porpoises on the French coast have almost ruined the sardine industry, which mints millions for the people of the coast towns and the Channel isles. To remedy this state of affairs, torpedo boats and the submarines are being sent under "sealed orders" to scour the waters of the channel and make things so hot under water for the blunt-nosed acrobats of the waves that those who survive will take to the Irish Sea, the North Sea or the Bay of Biscay.

BIG AND LITTLE RELIGION.

This story comes from Australia, where all conversation turns eventually to matters educational, because every parent is painfully anxious that his sons shall pass the standard which will free them from certain years of military service. A visitor was conversing with his host's small son and opened as a matter of course with the words: "Do you go to school now?"

"Yes."

"And what do you learn? Reading, writing, sums?"

"Oh, yes, and I learn religion, too."

"Religion?"

"Yes. I learn the little religion, which teaches that we all come from Adam. But my elder brother is in a higher class; he learns the big religion, and that teaches that we all came from monkeys."

SIEGE OF DELHI.

Greatest of Historical Spectacles at the C.N.E. this Year.

The Siege of Delhi will be the historic spectacle at the Canadian National Exhibition this year. There is no more terribly picturesque scene in English history than this sketch from the great Indian mutiny. The rich and varied costumes of the natives of different castes mingled with the uniforms of the English officers give to it color that cannot fail to delight the eye, while the tragic drama cannot fail to be of enthralling interest. Every detail is to receive the strictest attention to make this the greatest of the many historical spectacles that the Canadian National has become famous for.

When I want any good headwork done I always choose a man, if suitable otherwise, with a long nose.—Napoleon.

Constant application to pleasure takes away the enjoyment, or rather turns it into the nature of a very burdensome and laborious business.—Burke.

There is only one road to human prosperity, and it is the same for a nation as for an individual. That is the honest road of hard work under free institutions, and when they tried to teach people that they could be made rich by some short cut they were doing that which was thoroughly dishonest.—Mr. Walter Long, M.P.

LAMENT OF THE RISE IN BEEF.

The water wagon passes
Right by my humble door,
They call to me to climb it—
I will not board it more.
I have a gnawing hunger
Its fluid does not slake
I want the butcher wagon
That used to stop with steak.

The loud bandwagon passes
With statesmen clustered thick,
They call to me to join them
And save the country quick.
Alas! they fill no stomach,
Its place they cannot take—
The good old butcher wagon
That used to stop with steak.

HER REPLY.

There are drawbacks even to being the wife of a wealthy man, as Mrs. Rich found out. Although they have only been married a few weeks, she hardly ever has a quiet hour with her husband. It's business from morn till night, and in the evening he only begs for peace and rest. So the other day she came down to dinner in a sombre black frock. "Why on earth, dear," said Mr. Rich, eyeing her gown with distaste, "are you wearing that frock? Why, it's half-mourning." "Of course it's half-mourning," replied the lady, with much meaning. "Don't you always say when you come home from the office that you are half dead?"

Wire Wounds

My mare, a very valuable one, was badly bruised and cut by being caught in a wire fence. Some of the wounds would not heal, although I tried many different medicines. Dr. Bell advised me to use MINARD'S LINIMENT, diluted at first, then stronger as the sores began to look better, until after three weeks, the sores have healed, and best of all, the hair is growing well, and is NOT WHITE as is most always the case in horse wounds.

Oil for Toothache.—There is no pain so acute and distressing as toothache. When you have so unwelcome a visitor apply Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil according to directions and you will find immediate relief. It touches the nerve with soothing effect and the pain departs at once. That it will ease toothache is another fine quality of this Oil, showing the many uses it has.

An Irishman was going along the road when an angry bull rushed at him and tossed him over a fence.

The Irishman, recovering from his fall, upon looking up, saw the bull pawing and tearing up the ground, as is the custom of the animal when irritated, whereupon he smiled at the animal and said, "If it was not for your bowing and scraping, and your humble apologies, you brute, faix, I should think that you'd thrown me over this fence on purpose."

The Exeter bowlers, who visited Mitchell, Berlin and St. Marys last week, while going to and from the Masonic Grand Lodge, had a most enjoyable trip, but were not very successful in their games, losing two in Mitchell, two in Waterloo, and three out of four in St. Marys.

The junior baseball teams of Exeter and Lucan met on the local diamond on Thursday evening and played an excellent game in spite of the wet grounds. The result was a victory for the visitors by a score of 4-3. Exeter boys were coming very strong at the finish and but for the early darkness, we believe, would have won out.

Mrs. Robert Pickard, of Winnipeg a former resident of Exeter who has been visiting with her sister Mrs. Sheere, of Bathurst street, London for some time, was struck by a locomotive at the G. T. R. depot recently and was somewhat seriously injured. She sustained a number of bruises. Mrs. Pickard crossed a vacant lot from Bathurst street to the depot, and as she reached the tracks was struck by a locomotive.

The Raspberry Festival held on Mr. E. Christie's Lawn, under the auspices of the ladies of the Presbyterian church on Friday evening last was a most enjoyable affair and was largely attended. The festival had been postponed from the previous evening owing to the rain of Thursday afternoon. Friday evening, however, was a most favorable one and the result was a very successful festival. Music was furnished by the Exeter Band, and their many selections were greatly appreciated. The proceeds amounted to $62.00.

The following from a western writer is of interest to our readers,—"If you come from Huron Grey, or Bruce, you are pretty sure of a hearty welcome in almost any part of southern Manitoba. All along this way from Morden to Napinka, the rugged Scotch and Irish offspring of the Old Ontario counties have established new homesteads and built up towns and villages, now among the oldest communities in the province. At Morden the President of the Board of Trade and the editors of the local newspapers can talk for hours almost about their boyhood days in Goderich, and farther west in Pilot Mound and Crystal City, the twin town of Manitoba, the latest news of Exeter, Ontario, forms the topic for conversation of interminable length.

Three rinks from the Granites of St. Marys visited the Exeter bowlers Friday afternoon last with the result that Exeter was up several points. After tea the visitors went on to Hensall for a game. The scores here were,—

The judgment handed down by the high court established that in cases where the waters of a navigable lake or river overflows the adjoining land the owner still retains his ownership. The theory that the Crown has a roadway beside a navigable stream is upset. The judge decided that a title to land held it whether it was under water or otherwise. Another very important decision was given in the case of Stanley vs Perry The court said that land gained by deposits arising from natural or artificial, where the accretion was gradual, the land so formed becomes the property of the adjacent soil. By another authority it is established that land formed gradually and imperceptibly by the action of the water, goes to the owner of the adjacent soil. These decisions are valuable to many persons having land affected by water.

Contracts have been left for the pulling down of the damaged Auburn bridge and the erection of a new and larger structure. Joseph Lawson, of Crediton will do the cement work, for $7.00 per cubic yard, and this it is calculated will aggregate $6,500, which is also the contract price at which Hill & Co., of Mitchell, will erect the new iron superstructure with cement floor. The new bridge will be 190 feet long, 40 feet longer than the old one, and the approaches it is expected will cost $400 or $500, which makes the total cost in the neighborhood of $13,500. The old bridge is being taken down County Clerk Lane was at Stratford last Saturday, at a joint meeting with Perth officials to consider the matter of several bridges, only one of which that at Kirkton, is Huron interested in. The contract for this was let to the Stratford Bridge Co., at $1495, the structure being 49 feet long, and the cost will be equally borne by the two counties.

It doesn't take a very ambitious man to leave debts behind him.

Mrs. Thos. Dinney of Stephen, who has been ill, and in a very critical condition, has been slightly improving for the past few days and now gives promise of recovery.

In the public schools of Baltimore the eyes of 53,067 pupils were examined by the tests ordinarily used, and the results are interesting and suggestive: 9,051 pupils were found to have such defective eyesight as to make school work unsafe; 53 per cent. of the children were not to be in the enjoyment of normal vision, but curiously enough the percentage of defective eyesight increased with the age of the pupils. The report recommends yearly examinations hereafter of the pupils' eyesight. The large percentage, nearly one-fifth of the total number examined, found to be in no condition to do school work at all, is a warning to parents and school authorities all over the country. It shows great negligence and ignorance on the part of parents, where the responsibility rests in the first place, and where periodical examinations of the pupils' eyesight by school authorities will place it at last."—Philadelphia Inquirer.

Children of bright parents are not naturally stupid. When study is disliked, study is painful. Suspect their eyes rather than condemn their intellect. We make a specialty of examining children's eyes with our famous method of looking only the eye. We prescribe glasses only when absolutely necessary and guarantee satisfaction. The holiday time gives an excellent opportunity to bring in the children.

Rev. D. W. Collins has just completed six years as rector of the Trivitt Memorial church. At the close of the service on Sunday night the reverend gentleman referred briefly to his pastorate in Exeter, stating that it had been six of the happiest years of his life, and he hoped that the good feeling and harmony that had characterized the past years would continue in the future. During Mr. Collins stay in Exeter he has labored earnestly, faithfully and with marked intelligence, having the respect and esteem of not only the members of his own congregation, but all the other denominations. His church is in a better financial position than it has ever been. Probably as high a compliment as can be paid a minister is that he wears well—and this applies to Rev. Collins. FAREWELL ADDRESS TO MRS. S. BUCKINGHAM BY W.M.S.

The Women's Missionary Society of James Street Church held their July meeting and annual picnic in the park on July 23rd, when the following address was presented to Mrs. Buckingham.

Dear Mrs. Buckingham,—

We are mindful to-day that we are soon to miss your familiar face from our midst. There are those whose going is but lightly felt, but your cheerful Christian spirit has so endeared you to those of us who have been your associates through the long years, that it is with the deepest regret that we come to this hour of farewell. This occasion brings to memory the fact that you are a charter member of our local organization, which means that in former days we enjoyed your active co-operation, and in these latter days your sympathy, that we all realize has been more to the Women's Missionary Society of James Street church than you have ever surmised. Although we grieve over your departure we thank God for the many long years you have been loaned to us, and that while some physical disability is almost sure to mark advancing years, yet we further record our thankfulness that you have been so highly favored as to be ever at your best mentally. We would assure you again of the love that we bear to you, and that when you are gone we will not forget to frequently breathe the prayer, "God bless our true friend and comrade Mrs. Buckingham." We would comfort each other with the reminder that prayer and kindly thoughts can span the miles stretching between Exeter and Kansas City, and many times will our prayerful thoughts travel that road. We ask that in your hours of intercession we may not be forgtten. May God watch between thee and us while we are absent one from the other.

Signed on behalf of our Auxiliary by M. E. Hooper, Pres.; S. P. Snell, Rec.-Sec.

GIRLS LURED AWAY.

Goderich, July 26th.—Information was laid before Crown Attorney Seager by a local man and his daughter and her friend, both young girls under sixteen years of age, were spirited away to years of age, were spirited away to Port Huron by a man who calls himself Henderson. It is suspected to be a case of white slave traffic, and that the girls are being lured to Chicago, under the pretence that they are to be employed in a Chicago restaurant. Both girls are very prepossessing. Considerable excitement prevails about town over the disappearance of the two girls, and word of their arrest is eagerly waited by the police here. One girl comes from Lucknow.

BOY DROWNED AT ST. MARYS

St. Marys, July 26—A sad drowning fatally occurred this afternoon in which Tommy Hughes, the six-year-old son of Edward Hughes, an Englishman, lost his life. The little lad, along with a boy named Rendor, was playing along the cement face wall of the Thames dam, a few feet north of the Royal Edward Hotel Park. Both boys had been paddling in the water amusing themselves, when young Hughes slipped on the cement work and was thrown into deep water. The Rendor boy ran away to give the alarm, and told two men that he met, but they paid no attention to his story, and, before others were notified, the boy was in the water upwards of half an hour. A number of young men went into the water to get the body. Reg. McRobb brought young Hughes' body to the surface. Life was apparently yet in the body, as the legs moved. Before medical aid arrived every effort was made to resuscitate him, but in vain as life was extinct.

TURNED TURTLE AT ST JOSEPH

On Sunday afternoon G. G. Lee, a well known merchant and hotelman of Goderich, was badly hurt in an auto accident when his machine turned turtle in a ditch a mile north of St. Joseph.

Lee was driving and lost control of the machine. His wife escaped with minor injuries, and his daughter was pinned under the machine, but was only slightly injured, but Mr. Lee had five ribs broken, was injured internally and was badly shaken up. It is expected that he will recover, although his escape is a miracle.

Hennessey of Clandeboye were visitors at Mr. Wes Hodgins' Sunday.—Mr. and Mrs. Baker of Hensall visited their son here on Sunday.—The ice cream social given by the Ladies' Aid of the Methodist church was well attended, and an excellent program was rendered which was very much enjoyed by the large number in attendance. The proceeds amounted to about $19.00.—Mr. Thos. Essery and sister, who have been visiting relatives here, returned to their home in Palmerston yesterday.—Jas. Godsave visited on the Sauble Line, Biddulph, Sunday. About forty motor-bicyclists passed through here on their way to Grand Bend Sunday. It was reasonable to expect that a number were obliged to halt here for repairs.

A very interesting game of baseball was played on the local diamond between Lucan and the home team Tuesday evening—a pitchers' duel between A Duplan and E. Collins—resulting in favor of the home team, 3-0. Both of the pitchers handed up a good brand of ball. A. Duplan was very effective in pinches.—Wes. Hodgins umpired in a satisfactory manner.

Morley spent Sunday with her sister, Mrs. Sherwell in London Township.—The ice cream social given here on Friday evening by the ladies of the W. M. S. was a grand success. A large number gathered from various parts to partake of the splendid supper, which the Whalen ladies know how to provide. Then the drill by the children and the program in the church was very pleasing to all. The autograph quilt gotten up by the members of the society all told brought $57.50.—Messrs. Harvey and George Parkinson purchased a fine span of horses near Elginfield on Monday.

MITCHELL—Misfortunes have fallen thickly upon the Berry family here. On Thursday, while Mr. Berry was tying a horse in its stall the animal bit the first finger of his right hand off at the joint. Twenty-three years ago Mr. Berry had all his fingers and thumb on his left hand taken off in a threshing engine. About six weeks ago his son, Herbert, was putting some eavestroughing up, when the scaffolding gave away and he fell to the ground and broke his arm. On Saturday last, another son, Wilbur, an auto expert, who works in Stratford, had his leg broken while cranking an auto.

ONLY A MONTH;

OR, A CURIOUS MYSTERY EXPLAINED.

CHAPTER XI.—(Cont'd)

She brought him one of the daily papers, and with a little sigh of disappointment removed the religious "weekly," leaving Frithiof to his depressing study of the column headed "Situations vacant."

Alas! how short it was compared to the one dedicated to "Situations wanted."

"A correspondence clerk wanted," made him look hopefully at the lines which followed, but unluckily a knowledge of Portuguese was demanded as well as French and German; while the corn merchant who would receive a gentleman's son in an office of good position was prudent enough to add the words. "No one need apply who is unable to pay substantial premium."

Out of the whole list there were only two situations for which he could even inquire, and he soon found that for each of these there were hundreds of applicants.

Each week brought him, of course, letters from Norway, his uncle sent him letters of introduction to various London firms, but each letter brought him only fresh disappointment.

At first certain aspects of London life had startled Frithiof; but he speedily became accustomed to them; if he thought of them at all it was with indifference rather than disgust. One day, however, he passed with seeming abruptness into a new state of mind. Sick with disappointment after the failure of a rather promising scheme suggested to him by one of the men to whom his uncle had written, he walked through the crowded streets, too hopeless and wretched even to notice the direction he had taken, and with a miserable perception that his last good card was played, and that all hope of success was over.

To gain an honest living was apparently impossible, the world afforded him no facilities for that, but it afforded him countless opportunities of leading another sort of life. Why should he not take what he could get Life was miserable and worthless enough, but at least he might put an end to the hideous monotony of the search after work, at least he might plunge into a phase of life which would have at any rate the charm of novelty.

It was one of those autumn days when shadow and sun alternate quickly; a gleam of sunshine now flooded the street with brightness. It seemed to him that a gleam of light had also broken the dreariness of his life. If he sinned he would do so deliberately. He looked the two lives fairly in the face now, and in his heart he knew which attracted him most. The discovery startled him.

"Why not? why not?" urged the tempter. And the vague shrinking seemed to grow less; nothing in heaven or earth seemed real to him; he felt that nothing mattered a straw. As well that way as any other. Why not?

Still the thought of Sigrid held him in check, the remembrance of her clear blue eyes seemed to force him to go deeper down beneath the surface of the sullen anger and disappointment which were goading him on to an evil life. Was it after all quite true? Had he really tried everything?

Two or three times during his wanderings he had thought of Roy Boniface, and had wondered whether he should seek him out again; but in his trouble he had shrunk from going to comparative strangers, and, as far as business went, it was scarcely likely that Roy could help him.

Again came the horrible temptatio. again that sort of terror of his own nature. He turned once more to the picture of the Romsdalshorn; it seemed to be the one thing which could witness to him of truth and beauty and a life above the level of the beasts.

Very slowly and gradually he began to see things as they really were; he saw that if he yielded to his temptation he could never again face Sigrid with a clear conscience. He saw, too, that his only safeguard lay in something which would take him out of himself. "I will get work," he said, almost fiercely. "For Sigrid's sake, I'll have one more try."

But he felt, as thousands have felt before him, that he was handicapped in the struggle by his loneliness, and perhaps it was this consciousness more than any expectation of finding work which made him swallow his pride and turn his steps toward Brixton.

CHAPTER XII.

By the time he reached Brixton it was quite dusk. Roy had never actually given him his address; but he made inquiries at a shop in the neighborhood, was offered the loan of a directory, and having found what he needed was soon making his way up the well-swept carriage-drive which led to Rowan Tree House.

To his surprise the door was suddenly flung open as he approached, and a little boy in a velvet tunic came dancing out on to the steps to meet him.

"Roy, Roy!" shouted the little fellow merrily, "I've come to meet you!" Then speedily discovering his mistake he darted back into the door-way, hiding his face in Cecil's skirt.

She stood there with a little curly-headed child in her arms, and her soft gray eyes and the deep-blue baby eyes looked searchingly out into the semi-darkness. Frithiof thought the little group looked like a picture of the Holy Family. Somehow he no longer dreaded the inside of the house. For the first time for weeks he felt the sort of rest which is akin to happiness as Cecil recognized him, and came forward with a pretty eagerness of manner to greet h'm, too much astonished at his sudden appearance for any thought of shyness to intervene.

"We thought you must have gone back to Norway," she exclaimed. "I am so glad you have come to see us. The children thought it was Roy who opened the gate. He will be home directly. He will be so glad to see you."

"I should have called before," said Frithiof, "but my days have been very full, and then, too, I was not quite sure of your address."

He followed her into the brightly lighted hall, and with a sort of satisfaction shut out the damp November twilight.

"We have so often spoken of you and your sisters," said Cecil; "but when Roy called at the Arundel and found that you had left without giving any address, we thought you must have gone back to Bergen."

"Did he call on me again there?" said Frithiof. "I remember now he promised that he would come, I ought to have thought of it; but somehow all was confusion that night, and afterward I was too ill."

"It must have been terrible for you all alone among strangers in a foreign country," said Cecil, the ready tears starting to her eyes. "Come in and see my mother, she has often heard how good you all were to us in Norway."

She opened a door on the left of the entrance hall and took him into one of the prettiest rooms he had ever seen; the soft crimson carpet, the inlaid rosewood furniture, the book-shelves with their rows of well-bound books, all seemed to belong to to each other, and a delightfully home-like feeling came over him as he sat by the fire, answering Mrs. Boniface's friendly inquiries; he could almost have fancied himself once more in his father's study at Bergen—the room where so many of their long winter evenings had been passed.

Mrs. Boniface was one of those very natural, homely people whose commonplace remarks have a sort of flavor of their own, and Cecil had something of the same gift.

At last the front door opened and footsteps sounded in the hall, little Lance ran out to greet Mr. Boniface and Roy, and Frithiof felt a sudden shame as he remembered the purse-proud tradesman that foolish prejudice had conjured up in his brain—a being wholly unlike the kindly, pleasant-looking man who now shook hands with him, seeming in a moment to know who he was and all about him.

"And so you have been in London all this time!" exclaimed Roy. "Whereabouts are you staying?"

"Close to Vauxhall Station," replied Frithiof. "Two or three times I thought of looking you up, but there was always so much to do."

"You have found work here, then?"

"No, indeed; I wish I had. It seems to me one may starve in this place before finding anything to do."

"Gwen wishes to say good-night to you, Herr Falck," said Cecil, leading the little girl up to him; and the bitter look died out of Frithiof's face for a minute as he stooped to kiss the baby mouth that was temptingly offered to him.

"It will be hard if in all London we can not find you something," said Mr. Boniface. "What sort of work do you want?"

"I would do anything," said Frithiof. "Sweep a crossing if necessary."

They all laughed.

"Many people say that vaguely," said Mr. Boniface. "But when one comes to practical details they draw back. The mud and the broom look all very well in the distance, you see." Then as a bell was rung in the hall, "Let us have tea first, and afterward, if you will come into my study we will talk the matter over. We are old-fashioned people in this house and keep to the old custom of tea and supper. I don't know how you manage such things in Norway, but to my mind it seems that the middle of the day is the time for the square meal, as they say in America."

If the meal that awaited them in the dining-room was not "square," it was, at any rate, very tempting; from the fine damask table-cloth to the silver gypsy kettle—from the delicately arranged chrysanthemums to the Crown Derby cups and saucers—all bespoke good taste and the personal supervision of one who really cared for beauty and order. For the first time for weeks Frithiof felt hungry. No more was said of the unappetizing subject of the dearth of work, nor did they speak much of their Norwegian recollections, because they knew it would be a sore subject with him just now.

Meanwhile in the study a very matter-of-fact conversation was being held.

"What I want to find out," said Mr. Boniface, "is whether you are really in earnest in what you say about work. There are thousands of young men saying exactly the same thing, but when you take the trouble to go into their complaint you find that the real cry is not 'Give me work by which I can get an honest living!' but 'Give me work that does not clash with my tastes—work that I thoroughly like.'"

"I have no particular tastes," said Frithiof, coldly. "The sort of work is quite indifferent to me as long as it will bring in money."

"You are really willing to begin at the bottom of the ladder and work your way up? You are not above taking a step which would place you much lower in the social scale."

"A fellow living on the charity of a relation who grudges every farthing, as taking something away from his own children, is not likely to trouble much about the social scale," said Frithiof, bitterly.

"Very well. Then I will, at any rate, suggest my plan for you, and see what you think of it. If you care to accept it until something better turns up, I can give you a situation in my house of business. Your salary to begin with would be but small; the man who leaves me next Monday has had only five-and-twenty shillings a week, and I could not without unfair favoritism give you more at first. But every man has a chance of rising, and I am quite sure that you, with your advantages, would do so. You understand that, as I said, it is mere work that I am offering you. Doubtless standing behind a counter will not be very congenial work to one brought up as you have been; but you might do infinitely worse, and I can at least promise you that you will be treated as a man—not, as in many places you would find it, as a mere 'hand.'"

A SUMMER DRINK WHICH STRENGTHENS

A delicious summer drink is iced Bovril. Mix a spoonful in a cold split soda water. This is both cooling and strengthening. Cold bouillon served alone or with toast or crackers is an exquisite afternoon refreshment. Make a quantity of Bovril with boiling water in the usual manner and cool it in the ice box. Many hostesses are serving this bouillon which is always excellent.

The best way to buy Bovril is in the 1 lb. bottles. These are by far the most economical, being retailed usually at $1.75, and contain eight times as much as the bottle usually sold at 35c.

We will gladly send on application a very useful leaflet on invalid and general dietetics, which explains why Bovril aids digestion and enables you to absorb the full nourishment from your ordinary diet.

KNIFING A SHARK.

Brave Deed of a British Sailor at Santa Lucia.

Whether sharks really eat human beings or not, no one likes to be chased or to see a friend chased by one of them. And so, whether William Tozer actually saved his shipmate's life or not, he did a very brave thing, in a very neat and workmanlike manner.

When George Kirstell, teward of the British steamship Ramsay, fell overboard while the steamer was coaling at Santa Lucia, Captain Mallen and the officers and crew, most of whom were on deck, laughed heartily at the plight of the steward. Kirstell was in no particular danger, for he is a strong swimmer, but he was not in a pleasant humor, with the soaking his clothes were getting and the merriment of the crew at his expense.

A strong tide had swept him away from the steamer, but he was leisurely swimming back, when those on deck saw the fin of a shark coming through the water in his direction with alarming speed.

They shouted a warning, and the steward swam as he never had before, while Captain Mallen set about getting a life-boat over the side. But the captain and crew soon realized that before the boat could reach Kirstell the shark would overtake him.

They lowered away, but before the boat was in the water Kirstell's efforts had brought him almost beneath the overhang of the stern, and the shark was less than a dozen feet behind. The men who had not manned the life-boat turned aside in dread of seeing Kirstell dragged beneath the water, when William Tozer, the third officer, a big Englishman, sprang on to the rail and dived overboard. In one hand he clutched his big sailor's knife, its blade ready opened.

His body scarcely raised a ripple as it cut into the water, but an instant later there was a tremendous commotion where the shark had been coming on. Its tail lashed the water, and the big fin thrashed up and down. Then it disappeared amidst the reddening water, and a moment later Tozer rose to the surface, to catch a long breath and strike out easily for the steamer.

When he and Kirstell had been hauled aboard, the young third officer explained that he had merely performed a trick common to many of the natives of the south seas, where he has cruised for many years. He had timed his dive to come up beneath the shark, and had ripped him open with the big knife. There was some danger if you missed the shark the first time, he confessed.

INTELLECTUAL PILLS.

To Increase Man's Physical and Mental Vigor.

It took a German scientist to invent the intellectual pill.

The basis of this is a drug called antikenotoxin, which has the quality of neutralizing the poisons which are said to be the cause of mental fatigue.

Dr. Weichardt, professor at the University of Erlangen, Germany, recently demonstrated that the muscles of animals suffering from physical or mental weariness secrete a certain poison, to which he gave the name kenotoxin. Then it was shown that antikenotoxin injected into a man increased his physical and mental vigor.

This led Prof. Lorentz to think of utilizing antikenotoxin to stimulate brain work. He considered that errors of calculation, for example, should be set down to fatigue.

He found that problems given to his class in mathematics at the beginning of the lesson were solved in five minutes by three students; in eight minutes by thirty-three; in ten minutes by sixteen. Other similar problems, given at the close of the lesson were solved in five minutes by one student; in eight minutes by twenty-seven; in ten minutes by twenty-three. Evidently, said the professor, it is mental fatigue that causes the slower work.

On a subsequent day Prof. Lorentz vaporized antikenotoxin in the class-room first before the close of the period and then set his pupils problems as before. The result was that they were solved in three minutes by three students; in four minutes by thirty-one, and in ten minutes by one. And the solutions contained fewer errors than usual.

This was the origin of Dr. Lorentz's intellectual pills. European physicians are still a bit sceptical, saying the pills must be subjected to more thorough tests.

PANSIES GIVE A SURPRISE.

Seed Must Have Lain Dormant More Than a Century.

The Rev. Tertius Poole, Vicar of Culmstock, in Devon, England, tells a curious story of the results of ploughing in a grass lawn the year before last for the purpose of turning it into a rose garden. He says the lawn had not been disturbed for quite a hundred years. A parishioner who is 95 years of age says that his father used to mow it when he was a child. Since it has been ploughed in it has been covered with an amazing assortment of pansies of splendid quality.

"No seed," says the vicar, "has been sown nor have there been any pansies nearby. The only solution I can give is that the seed must have lain dormant in the soil for more than a century."

One of the pansies, it appears, is of an altogether unusual type, being like a gold and bronze butterfly.

Occasionally we meet a grown man who can eat almost as much as a small boy.

If young stock are reduced to starvation rations in a drought-stricken pasture they not only cease to grow but they suffer a let-down in condition from which they are very slow to recover.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

Some time ago Philip Snowden, the leader of the socialist element in the British commons, bluntly told organized labor that it was not gaining anything by continual strikes, and that the whole strike policy had failed utterly. As Snowden is not an active labor leader, his position was ascribed to his theories and faith in socialistic legislation. But Keir Hardie, one of the most militant of labor leaders, has also admitted the futility of general strikes. He tells the British workmen that legislative action produces better and permanent results. He instances the minimum wage act and other measures. Public sentiment bows to necessity when parliament gives the sign, but tie-ups and strikes only offend it. Mr. Hardie would have no strikes and more political action by labor. He doubtless feels that one or the other of the parties would always make terms with labor and grant all that can be granted under existing conditions.

Of course, the syndicalists and other extreme "direct action" men in the ranks of labor scoff at reliance on politics and legislation. What they preach is bitter warfare, seizure and expropriation. But their propaganda will not make much headway. It is too destructive and too savage. It will bring disaster to those who act upon it. Political action within certain limits is logical and unavoidable. Labor is heard in every legislature and its demands are considered with less and less prejudice or dogmatism. Still more can be accomplished by trade agreements, by joint boards, by publicity, investigation and impartial arbitration than by compulsory legislation. In few cases indeed is governmental intervention possible. But there is simply no limit to the scope of voluntary arrangements for conciliation, mediation and arbitration, for profit-sharing, co-operation and other preventives of strikes and ill will.

The most haphazard, random observation of various moths will give one a feeling of profound gratitude that nature did not see fit to endow such other enemies of man as mosquitoes with anything like the same industry, pertinacity, ingenuity, and shrewdness. If mosquitoes had anything like the ambition and determination of the moth this would be an itching world. A mosquito accepts a screen as an impasse and, like any genial Micawber, merely hums around waiting for something to turn up. For a thing that seems to get as much amusement out of its disorderly life it is singularly sluggish in pursuit of its pleasures. It may use some fineness in manoeuvering if its victim is accessible, but even then it is apt to employ a direct action which frequently brings it to grief.

The moth—stupid, blundering thing that it is, with a foolish appetite for hot lamp chimneys, lighted gas jets, candles, etc., and a destructive liking for woolen goods—is a wonderfully persevering nuisance, and about the time a mosquito gives up in disgust or despair a moth buckles down earnestly to work. It will examine every inch of a screen, work over the edge where the net is tacked, inspect every place where pieces are joined, test every bit of the frame, try to squeeze itself between the screen and the frame at almost every tack, and, failing in all these attempts, it will undertake the chimney route or go around to the door and wait its chance to slip in—all this for the opportunity of dropping into a hot chimney and cracking it. Observing the moth, one is grateful that it does not bite.

HE HAD TO.

McGinnis kept a public-house and lived with his family upstairs. One day his barman shouted to him:

"Guv'nor, shall I trust Jim O'Leary for a drink?"

"Has he had the drink?" called back McGinnis.

"He has."

"Thin thrust him."

Sibyl—"When Steve proposed to me he acted like a fish out of water." Maud—"Why shouldn't he? He knew he was caught."

HEALTH

MALARIA.

Nearly twenty years ago malaria was proved to be a blood disease due to a minute organism that destroys the red corpuscles. This organism is always introduced into the body through the bite of a certain kind of mosquito. When the mosquito bites a sufferer from malaria, it takes in the germs with the sufferer's blood. The germs multiply in the intestine of the mosquito, and travel through its body—unfortunately doing it no harm—to the proboscis. When that mosquito bites another human being, young germs escape into the victim's blood, and there grow into the adult forms that cause the disease.

Many persons still believe that malaria can come from the ground, or the water, or the air, and they cite instances of the appearance of the disease in places where there are no mosquitoes. Careful inquiry, however, will show one of three things: that the victim has had malaria before, and that his present attack is a relapse; that there are a few mosquitoes in the place, after all; or that the disease is not really malaria.

Other persons say that although they have been frequently bitten by mosquitoes, they have never had malaria. That, however, proves nothing, for there is only one kind of mosquito in which the malaria germ can grow, and even that kind cannot transmit malaria unless it has first bitten some one suffering from it.

The way to prevent malaria is to destroy all mosquitoes, for only an expert can distinguish the particular mosquito that carries malaria. It is not enough to kill them after they have entered the house; they must be prevented from breeding. That we can easily do, for the eggs are laid in stagnant water, and the wrigglers live in the water until their wings are grown. If mosquitoes cannot find pools, water-barrels and other collections of still water, they will not lay their eggs; and if pools that cannot be drained or screened are covered with oil, the wrigglers cannot get to the surface to breathe, and so never grow into mosquitoes.

Mosquitoes in a room can be killed by closing all the doors and windows and then burning a mixture of one part of saltpetre with three parts of dried and powdered jimson-weed. It is still better to keep the doors and windows effectually screened with wire netting that has twenty meshes to the inch.—Youth's Companion.

HAY FEVER.

Summer catarrh, as it is often called, is one of the most remarkable maladies peculiar to the summer months, and very often a source of much distress to those who suffer from it. The mucous membrane of the bronchial tubes and upper air passages is irritated by the pollen of certain grasses that is floating in the air, quite unseen of course, during the summer, generally from May to September. Sneezing, running of the nose and eyes make the patients life a burden and he may also exhibit the symptoms of asthma, difficulty of breathing, and a sense of oppression. Men are more liable to this disease than women, and the class of people who suffer least often from hay fever is the one most exposed to its causes, namely, farmers and agricultural laborers in general. Those who live in the country are far less likely to be attacked than the town dweller, and persons of a strongly marked nervous temperament are more apt to suffer than others. The duration of an attack is variable, but may be set down as six weeks, though there are cases where the patient suffers throughout the summer. It is unfortunately true that with most people the trouble is annual, and no sooner does the warm weather come than their misery begins, unless they can leave the district. Change of air indeed is the best remedy, and as no investigation has yet discovered a preventive, the only treatment when change is impossible must consist of palliative measures. Iodide of potassium, the salts of bromine, arsenic, and strychnine have been prescribed with success. Patients should remain indoors, especially during the prevalence of sunshine, which increases the irritation. A quinine and iron tonic will be found useful in many cases, and the patient's should take plenty of light, nourishing food.

"What," asked a husband severely, "is more ridiculous than a woman with a hobble skirt?" "A man with a hobble mind!" replied his wife.

"Did you enjoy your summer holiday?" "Great! We shared a cottage with another family, and when we weren't quarrelling we weren't on speaking terms."

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

INTERNATIONAL LESSON, AUGUST 4.

Lesson V. The worth of the Kingdom. Matt. 13. 44-53. Golden Text, Matt. 6.33.

Verse 44. Kingdom of heaven—The nature and importance of the Kingdom are emphasized in the following parables which are recorded by Matthew only, rather than the method of its propagation as in the previous lessons. For fuller discussions of the Kingdom of Heaven see Lesson Text Studies for June 2 and 9.

Hidden in the field—Modern conveniences, such as banks and safety vaults, were unknown in that day. Treasures were buried for safe keeping. This finder of the treasure hid it again until he could arrange for the purchase of the field.

In his joy—Or, for the joy thereof. Because of his discovery and appreciation of its value.

All he hath—The discovered treasure was of more value than all his possessions, illustrating the superlative worth of the Christian religion as a personal possession. The blessings of the Kingdom are of vastly greater consequence than all that the world affords.

Buyeth that field—It is not to be understood that every phase of the parable is worthy of imitation. There is scarcely any figure or illustration in which the analogy can be successfully carried out in full detail. Only that part of the parable which has a direct bearing upon the truth to be taught is to be considered. The transaction alluded to here was itself contrary to the ethical teachings of Jesus, as the man who sold the field was not aware that it contained the treasure. It nevertheless serves to teach the eagerness with which one should seek to possess the Kingdom.

46. One Pearl—A single pearl, in comparison with which all others were of little worth. Having sold all he purchased the one. The seeker after spiritual truth must be willing to sacrifice every unworthy aim to that end.

47. A net—A dragnet. This particular kind of net was employed near the shore. It was of an oblong shape and of great length. Weights of lead were attached to the lower edge while the upper edge was supported by corks. Reaching as it did from the bottom of the lake to the surface, when drawn toward the shore it gathered every fish which happened to be in its path.

Every kind—Good and bad, and every sort of each, illustrating, as does the parable of the tares, verses 24-43, that the church on earth includes all classes.

49. End of the world—Or, the consummation of the age. Compare Dan. 12. 13; Heb. 9. 26. Since the Kingdom is eternal, the ending of one period would mean the beginning of another. Even in the event of the literal destruction of the world there would be a "new earth" (Rev. 21. 1). The significant point is that it shall be a time of judgment.

Sever—Separate. This is to be done by angels, not men, the inference being that the separation shall be just and complete.

50. Furnace of fire—Compare verse 40.

Gnashing of teeth—An indication of disappointment and rage.

52. Every scribe—Used in the sense of a religious teacher. Scribes were also copyists of the Scriptures.

Disciple to the kingdom—The Kingdom of heaven is here personified as a teacher. Whoever would teach the principles of the Kingdom must adopt those principles and imbibe their spirit. The true Christian teacher is to be characterized by the method and spirit of Jesus.

A householder—One who maintains a well-kept house.

Things new and old—As the faithful housekeeper, because of frugality and thrift, is prepared to serve an unexpected guest with lavish supply, so the true Christian teacher is ever prepared both to present the fundamental principles of the Kingdom and to apply the same as need might suggest.

53. Departed thence—Left the seaside near Capernaum for Nazareth.

NIAGARA MEMORIAL.

The above is a copy of the design for a cairn to be erected at Niagara Falls by Toronto, the Niagara Parks Commission, and the people of the town, as a memorial to the hero of the ice bridge tragedy.

The inscription on the cairn will be as follows:

To the memory of
BURRELL HEACOCK, of Cleveland, Ohio,
aged 17 years,
who lost his life in an heroic attempt to rescue Eldridge Stanton and his wife, of Toronto,
Ontario, when the ice bridge in the Gorge immediately below was swept down the river and into the Whirlpool Rapids,
February 4th, 1912.

Another brown bread sandwich easy to prepare is cut very thin, and each slice spread with cheese and a strip of sweet peppers.

An appetizing sandwich for a picnic is made from slices of brown bread on which is spread a mixture of chopped green peppers, to which is added a can of sweet peppers or pimentos, a little minced parsley, bound together with a highly seasoned mayonnaise.

THE GOD OF ALL COMFORT

This Thought Makes Endurance Possible as Does the Infant's Clinging Arms the Mother's Anguish

Sickness, death and disappointment cut into every life. Sorrow is as common as night time. None escapes it. Tears may blind with despair or furnish media for a rainbow of hope. Some are crushed by losses; others reprice possessions profitably. Stoicism cannot erect manhood. Daily happenings must build character as gymnasium exercise does muscle. We can explain few of earth's terrible accidents. As a child trusts love and so banishes fright, even so must mankind have a consoling faith in the Omnipotent Father. He is a "God of all comfort."

This God shows material abundance to be unnecessary for happiness. Jesus had not where to lay His head, yet He continued to be

A KING.

Bismarck with all his power said in late life:—"I have counted all the hours in which I have been happy and they do not equal twenty-four." Over against this we may put the words of the persecuted and imprisoned Paul: "I have learned in whatever state I am therewith to be content." Solomon said, "Godliness with contentment is great gain." Any other satisfaction might be that of a glutton at his feasting who would only lay up "goods" and hear the call "Thou fool, this night shall thy soul be required at thy hands." Before his death the Earl of Shaftesbury who had lived such a serviceable Christian life lost his fortune. He declared, "I am thankful for losing my fortune, for thus God was able to show me that I did not need it to be happy."

This God shields us from an overburden. Old day theology accredited affliction to be a punishment. Man's cupidity and carelessness bring accidents, but they come upon the innocent and guiltful alike. Then the innocent suffer as redeemers of man; they serve to awaken others to law observance and a realignment of values. Out of every loss comes an

UPLIFTING OF HUMANITY.

They who suffer contribute to this uplift and thus so add to their nature that they will be larger on earth and in heaven.

This God promises future reaping. Man universally and spontaneously believes in an existence after death. Remove this hope and men would go in a circle, like blizzard blinded travellers, instead of advance. But Jesus' resurrection gives potency to His declarations. "Where He is" there we shall be also. Tears, pains, partings are then impossible. Life's sowings will be reaped. All things will work together for good. Wounds will be covered with pearls and tears be turned to diamonds. No other message can assuage the staggering pain death partings bring.—Rev. Christian F. Reisner.

SEASONABLE DISHES.

Berries in Border. — Make a blancmange from two cups of milk, one-quarter cup of cornstarch, a saltspoon of salt, three rounding tablespoons of sugar, a teaspoon of vanilla and the whites of three eggs beaten stiff and stirred in after the blancmange has cooked ten minutes and it is taken from the fire. Turn into a border mold and when firm turn onto a large plate and fill the center with fresh raspberries sprinkled with powdered sugar.

Red Raspberry Ice.—Put one quart of water and one and two-thirds cups of sugar in the preserving kettle and boil for 20 minutes. When cold add two cups of mashed berries, strain through a cheesecloth bag, add two tablespoonfuls of lemon juice and one of rose extract and freeze.

Frosted or Crushed Currants.—Use large firm clusters of currants for this dish. Have in front of you a soup plate containing the whites of three eggs mixed with five tablespoonfuls of cold water, another plate filled with sifted powdered sugar at your right, the bowl of currants at your left. Dip each bunch of currants in the water and white of egg, turn it over and over in the sugar and lay on a chilled platter to dry. When all are done sift more powdered sugar over the fruit and arrange carefully on a glass dish.

Currant Punch.—Take two cupfuls of pure red currant juice, a quart of water and a cupful of sugar. Simmer together five minutes and cool. Slice two lemons and two oranges thin and pour into a bowl with a large piece of ice and add the juice. Or mix red currant jelly with boiling water and sugar, and pour over fresh currants in a bowl.

Currant Pudding.—Wash the currants and pick from the stems. Sift four cups of flour with six level teaspoons of baking powder, then rub in one-quarter cup each of butter and lard and mix with one and one-half cups of milk or enough milk to make a soft dough. Roll out half an inch thick and cut a round to fit the bottom of a buttered pail, put on a layer of currants and sprinkle with sugar. Repeat the rounds and fruit until the mold is more than half full. Cover closely and steam two hours; serve with liquid sauce.

Currant Fluff.—Beat white of egg to stiff froth, add knife-tip of salt and scant dessert spoon of home-made currant jelly. Beat till smooth and rosy. Pile on slice of cake or sugar cookie. This amount is really large enough for two persons if egg is large.

Mrs. Morse's Spiced Currants.—To six quarts currants, stemmed and washed, allow four pounds white sugar, two tablespoons cloves, two tablespoons cinnamon, little salt, one pint sugar. Boil half an hour and bottle.

Currant Pie.—Beat the yolks of two eggs with one tablespoonful of flour; when smooth, add two tablespoons of water, one cup of sugar and cup of crushed ripe currants. Turn into a pie plate lined with good paste and bake. Beat the whites of the eggs until stiff, add two tablespoons of sugar, spread this over the pie and brown delicately.

Currant Jam.—Use two quarts of either red or white currants, from which the stems have been removed; three pounds of sugar, one pound of chopped raisin, and two oranges peeled and sliced. Boil 20 minutes

Green Pea Soup.—Wash a small forequarter of lamb in cold water and put it into a soup pot with six quarts of cold water; add to it two tablespoonfuls of salt, and set it over a moderate fire. Let it boil gently for two hours, then skim it clear; add a quart of shelled peas and a teaspoonful of pepper; cover it and let it boil for half an hour. Then having scraped the skins from a quart of small, young potatoes, add them to the soup; cover the pot and let it boil for half an hour longer. Work one-quarter of a pound of butter and a tablespoonful of flour together, and add them to the soup 10 or 12 minutes before taking it off the fire. Serve the meat on a dish with parsley sauce over it, and the soup in a tureen.

FOR THE PICNIC TABLE.

A veal loaf is always appetizing in the woods. An excellent recipe is: Three pounds and a half of finely-chopped veal—the leg best—mixed with three well-beaten eggs, into which is stirred a grated nutmeg, a tablespoon each of black pepper, thyme and salt, a teaspoonful of onion juice and a dash of cayenne. Add three tablespoonfuls of cream and three water crackers rolled fine. Mix in a long loaf, dot with butter and bake about an hour in a moderate oven, basting frequently.

Veal loaf may be sliced thin and packed in paraffin paper in a flat box, but dries out less if taken to the picnic whole. Carry a sharp carving knife, as thick slices are unappetizing.

Deviled eggs are usually more popular than plain hard boiled ones. Boil the eggs fully half an hour, throw at once into cold water and do not shell until chilled. Cut the eggs in half lengthwise, run the yolk through a sieve and mix to a paste with a saltspoon of mustard, cayenne pepper, salt and a tablespoonful of finely chopped parsley to a dozen eggs. Oil or melted butter can be used for mixing the paste.

Deviled eggs carry better if both halves are filled, then put together and each egg wrapped in waxed paper. Or they can be put in a shallow tin box, with waxed paper between the layers. On hot days keep the box near the ice on reaching the picnic grounds.

Left over cold chicken or veal makes an excellent hot dish for a picnic. Cut the meat into small cubes at home and wrap in waxed paper. Make a white sauce from a tablespoonful butter and one of flour to every pint of milk. This is the allowance for a quart of meat. Season highly with salt, pepper and a little onion juice. An after-dinner coffee cup of sherry improves the flavor.

Nothing is better than fresh scrambled eggs at a picnic, unless it is fried potatoes. Boil the potatoes at home—in their jackets—and take a good supply of butter for frying. A pound can be carried in a tin kettle with ice packed around it. Have sharp knife for slicing and a fork or short cake turner for stirring.

A "rabbit" is unusual and appetizing in the woods. For this use a rich cheese. Thin with cream. Put a tablespoonful of butter in the skillet, when melted, add seasoning—salt, cayenne, a teaspoonful of mustard — then add milk and the cheese by degrees. It should first be cut fine. When nearly done, the well-beaten yolk of an egg can be added. The "rabbit" must not be started until everything else is ready for the picnic feast.

QUEEN MARY'S SPOONS.

Her Majesty's Collection Now Almost Complete.

The unique spoons that Queen Mary brought home with her from India make her collection almost complete, nearly every country being represented by one or more specimens. Some of the most interesting are those showing the earliest forms of spoons and their development. Fingers were made before forks, as you know, and apparently, although the spoon cannot boast any such antiquity, it made quite an early appearance into civilized life.

Some of the spoons that her Majesty bought in India are of great age and are exquisitely chased and jewelled. The queen's set of apostle spoons compare favorably with any in existence. Another valuable recent addition to her collection was a set of quaint long-handled spoons from Russia, sent to her as a birthday present by the Czarina.

A CHILD'S PATIENCE.

Lady Henry Somerset, whose labors in behalf of the children of the London slums are constant and earnest, tells this affecting story of the way in which her interest in these little ones was aroused.

I was moved in that direction by the rare patience and imagination of one little boy. His example convinced me that patience was one of the qualities I needed most, and in seeking it I grew into that work.

I was in a hospital on visiting-day, while the doctors were changing a plaster cast which held the crippled boy's limb. The operation was exceedingly painful, I was told. To my surprise, the little sufferer neither stirred nor winced, but made a curious buzzing sound with his mouth. After the doctors left I said to him:

"How could you possibly stand it?"

"That's nothing," he answered. "Why, I just made believe that a bee was stingin' me. Bees don't hurt very much, you know. And I kept buzzin' because I was afraid I'd forget about its being a bee if I didn't."

A BIG HOUSE.

An immense block of flats is to be erected at Clapham Junction, England, with the idea of simplifying the housekeeping problem and doing away with the need for a separate staff of servants. In the basement there is to be a large fruit and vegetable market designed to cope with the requirements of the district. About the market will be an arcade containing large shops. The upper floors will be divided into 200 dwellings, ranging in size from five to two rooms, and 300 bachelor apartments of one room each. Each dwelling will have its own telephone and its own bathroom. At the top of the building and extending over its entire area will be a glass-covered roof-garden, with skating rink, children's playground and bandstand. The centre of the building will be occupied by club premises, a restaurant, and other public rooms.

Wireless messages will be sent a cross the Atlantic and to other parts of the world by a new system, according to experts, within four months not only much faster than by the present systems, but also with such precision that it will be possible to send pictures by this means. The inventor claims that he will be able to send at the rate of 200 words a minute.

It is stated that the rural mail delivery service in Canada is to be improved within the next three months to the extent of providing at every farmer's gate all the facilities necessary for transacting a general postoffice business. When the courier drives up to the mail box in front of the farmer's home, he will be prepared to sell stamps, issue postal notes or money orders and to accept letters for registration.

Why it pays to buy advertised goods. —Because the advertiser has done something to inspire confidence. He has not only explained the value and usefulness of his product, but has put his personality and reputation behind his statements. He can be trusted because his very business existence is at stake. He believes in his goods to the extent of investing his capital, not only in making the goods right, but in advertising. The advertising is not only a protection to the trade name, but it is the advertiser's guarantee of quality.

A half-naked Zulu woman, or a Turkish woman in trousers may not be immodest. The woman generally is who appears in public in a flimsy, low-cut waist, a short, tight skirt, semi-transparent stockings, and high-heeled cloth pumps. The sensuality of the orient which the Mahommedan confines to his harem, parades daily through our main throughfares. To-day it is getting to be a question whether the American girl needs protection from the snare of the fowler any more than the American boy needs protection from the snare of the American girl. Some of the costumes seen on our streets would have made Babylon gasp.—Detroit Free Press.

For forty years the Legislature of Ontario has maintained at Brantford a school for the education and instruction of the blind children and youths of the province, of both sexes, without charge for board, tuition or books; and in that school hundreds have been taught to read and write, to sing and play on some musical instrument, and to do some useful work, the remuneration for which suffices or assists to provide an independent livelihood. Of course no amount of instruction can make a blind person as competent as he would be with sight, but it is surprising to see how much and what a variety of things, the blind can accomplish by touch and hearing, under proper guidance.

LUCAN.

Residents of Lucan and district hear with regret of the death of William F. Hawkshaw at Sudbury Tuesday of this week. He had been engaged as fire ranger in the vicinity of Sudbury for the past few months. Mr. Hawkshaw, who succumbed to an attack of typhoid fever of but five days duration, was, until the time of his departure for New Ontario engaged in the grocery and crockery business in Lucan for many years. He was 45 years of age. Deceased was a brother of Reeve Hawkshaw of Lucan. The remains were interred in Clandeboye on Wednesday.

Hanna, Abundant 94, 4th, Percy Sparling, Dawson's, 93½ 5th, Perry Doupe, Abundant, 93; 6th, Nelson Watson, Abundant, 91½; 7th, Jas Moore, Abundant, 91. Mr. Jos. Orchard was the judge.

McGILLIVRAY

The home of Mr. Ninian, of McGillivray sustained the greatest loss which an earthly home can know, when his wife, Nellie, passed away on Monday July 22nd, while still in the prime of life. Mrs. Grieve was the daughter of the late Rod. and Mrs. Mary Davidson of Strathroy. She was born at Nairn June 6th, 1870. She taught school in McGillivray and East Williams. She is survived by her mother, her husband and five children.

CLANDEBOYE

David Collins of this place met with a very painful accident Monday morning. Mr. Collins got into his buggy without untying his horse, and it backed up and pulled the bridle off. The horse ran away. Mr Collins was thrown out of the buggy. He was knocked unconscious, but after a few minutes was brought to. He sustained a few deep cuts about the face and hands.

James Simpson, aged 78 years, one of the oldest residents of the district died very unexpectedly, at his home here Thursday from an attack of heart failure. Mr. Simpson had not been in good health for some time. He had resided in this vinicty nearly all his life. Besides his wife, a grown-up family survives.—Wheat cutting is in full progress here and the crop will be a splendid one. Farmers estimate that they are already about half through with their cutting. Oats will in all probability be a record crop in this district as the fields are in magnificent shape.—Beans are coming along excellently. Large quantities were put in, and the crop will be a most profitable one. —Farm lands keep up in price. While many people have gone to the West from this district, many more have come back, and as fast as farms become vacant they are picked up.

Last week Mr. Frank Sims was presented with a purse of over $400.00, which had been collected in the neighborhood from his friends for the purpose of assisting him in rebuilding the barn which was recently destroyed by fire. Mr. Sims was taken completey by surprise and deeply appreciates the kindness of his friends for their thoughtfulness in thus remembering him in his hour of need. He has bought the Hotel barn from Sam Brown and intends taking it down and rebuilding it some time this summer.

It is with deep regret that we are again obliged to refer to the death of another of our respected citizens. We refer to the wife of Mr. George Lawson, who passed away last Friday the 26, inst at the age of 70 years. Mrs. Lawson and her husband moved to the village three years ago and since their residence in our midst have won many friends. She was an affectionate wife and mother and above all a kind neighbor. She has been in poor health for some time and the best of medical aid failed to check the disease with which she was afflicted. Her remains were interred in the Exeter cemetery. The Rev. Jefferson of the Methodist church officiating. The funeral was one of the largest held in the village for several years. Deafness Cannot be Cured by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars free.

FORESAW HER DOOM.

Warnings of Her Tragic Fate That Came to Empress Elizabeth.

In "My Royal Clients" M. Paoli, the famous French detective, writing of the unfortunate Empress Elizabeth of Austria, who was so foully murdered in Geneva in 1898, says that two strange incidents incline one to the belief that the empress received a presentiment of her tragic end.

"On the eve of her departure for Geneva she asked Mr. Barker to read her a few chapters of a book by Marion Crawford, entitled 'Corleone,' in which the author describes the detestable customs of the Sicilian Mafia. While the empress was listening to the harrowing story a raven, attracted by the scent of some fruit which she was eating, came and circled round her. Greatly impressed, she tried to drive it off, but in vain, for it constantly returned, filling the echoes with its mournful croakings. Then she rapidly walked away, for she knew that ravens are harbingers of death when their ill omened wings persist in flapping round a living person.

"Again, a lady in waiting told me that on the morning of that day she went into the empress' room, as usual, to ask how she had slept and found her imperial mistress looking pale and sad.

"'I have had a strange experience,' said Elizabeth. 'I was awakened in the middle of the night by the bright moonbeams which filled my room, for the servants had forgotten to draw the blinds. I could see the moon from my bed, and it seemed to have the face of a woman weeping. I don't know if it is a presentiment, but I have an idea I shall meet with misfortune.'"

And it was a few hours later that Lucchini killed her with a three cornered file clumsily fitted to a wooden handle.

Where the Cold Is Warm.

I have seen sunshine, oh, sunshine as splendid as yours, among my beloved mountains in Switzerland! You know what cold is and what warmth is, but do you know what warm cold is?

Did you ever live a whole winter through glowing because the frost was so warm? Do you know the wonders of blue ice, pink snow and 40 degrees of frost, while the men skate in panamas and the girls with open parasols?

And the splendor of colors in the morning sky; everything in the solar spectrum—red, orange, yellow, green, blue, indigo, violet: at each moment a new combination. And then the sun is up, and the intoxication of it all makes you wonder if you ever lived before.—Dr. Aked in Christian Herald.

Wouldn't Act a Lie.

Theater Manager—You say you object to having real food on the table in the banquet scene, Mr. Greesepaynt? Why, the rest of the company are delighted at it!

Mr. Greesepaynt—Yes, but my part requires me to rise from the table after a couple of mouthfuls and say: "I cannot eat tonight—a strange dread comes over me. I will seek the quiet of yonder apartment for a time."—McCall's Magazine.

Unfair.

"I s'pose it's all right," said Mr. Newrich, "but it doesn't seem fair."

"What doesn't seem fair?"

"For Matilda to scold because I want to eat dinner in my shirt sleeves. I don't make any fuss about her party dresses, an' they haven't any sleeves at all."

Both Exempt.

"Do your daughters help their mother with the housework?"

"We wouldn't think of expecting it. Muriel is temperamental, and Zasa is intense."—Pittsburgh Post.

THE WOES OF PARTY LINE

Neighborhood not far from here,
Put in a telephone last year,
Farmers built a rural line,
Instruments all "talk up" fine.
All you had to do was ring
Every bell went ting-a-ling,
One for Swanson, two for Boggs,
Long and short for old man Scroggs,
Every neighbor had his call
Twist the crank and that was all.
Mighty nice when work was through
To gossip for an hour or two
With your neighbors one by one
Mighty nice but lots more fun
To overhear some other two
Telling what was not for you:
Every time the signal rang
To the phone each farmer sprang
Slyly grinned and softly took
The receiver from the hook:
Other people's secrets dear
Poured into his large red ear.
Slapped his hands and said,
'I swun"
Telephones are lots of fun—
Somehow in a week or two,
Trouble dark began to brew
Farmer Jones got fighting hot
Heard Scroggs calling him a sot
Heard Smith telling what he knew
Paid him off with two black eyes
Johnson heard young Ezra Bogg
Underbid him on his hogs.
Bogg o'erheard a sneaking churl
Making love to his best girl.
Women too were in the muss
Raised a most tremendous fuss
Everyone from Scroggs to Jones
In glass houses throwing stones
Now the line has silent grown
Wires all rusted, poles o'erthrown
Twenty friends are deadly foes
Each one full of grief and woes
Each too mad to speak a word
Cause of things they overheard!

BEFORE TREATMENT
Peter E. Summers relates his experience:
"I was troubled with Nervous Debility for many years. I lay it to indiscretion and excesses in youth. I became very despondent and didn't care whether I worked or not. I imagined everybody who looked at me guessed my secret. Imaginative dreams at night weakened me—my back ached, had pains in the back of my head, hands and feet were cold, tired in the morning, poor appetite, fingers were shaky, eyes blurred, hair loose, memory poor, etc. Numbness in the fingers set in and the doctor told me he feared paralysis. I took all kinds of medicines and tried many first-class physicians, wore an electric belt for three months, but received little benefit. I was induced to consult Drs. Kennedy & Kennedy, though I had lost all faith in doctors. Like a drowning man I commenced the NEW METHOD TREATMENT and it saved my life. The improvement was like magic—I could feel the vigor going through the nerves. I was cured mentally and physically. I have sent them many patients and continue to do so.

GREAT BRITAIN PREPARING

43 Destroyers in 18 Months, and 8 Small Cruisers to Germany's 2

A despatch from London says: In the debate on the naval estimates in the House of Commons on Wednesday Winston Spencer Churchill, the First Lord of the Admiralty, replying to the criticism that he had made inadequate provision to meet the menace he had described, said, "We are spending £45,000,000 this year and we are going to spend more next year. We are raising the personnel of the navy to 141,150 by 1913 and to 146,000 in 1914. As regards construction, Germany this year is laying down two new battleships and we four. Next year Germany is laying down one extra and we two. This year Germany is laying down two small cruisers; we are laying down eight. Germany in the course of the next 18 months is laying down 21 destroyers; we 43. There is no pause for panic or alarm."

WHOLE WORLD PREPARING.

A despatch from Paris says: That the world is not yet on the eve of the cessation of the struggle between Great Britain and Germany for naval supremacy is the prevalent opinion in France after careful study of the recent speech by Winston Churchill in the House of Commons. The continuance of the rivalry between those two countries causes a note of regret here, but there is an inclination to believe that if it must go on France should learn a lesson from England's procedure and herself increase her navy.

The Matin, commenting on the subject, says it is in a position to declare that Italy and Austria at the instigation of Germany, are about to build additional super-Dreadnoughts, in regard to which nothing has been permitted to transpire. Italy is to construct six of these vessels, each of 20,000 tons displacement and capable of steaming at a speed of 25 knots, while Austria is to build three, each of them displacing 26,000 tons. The newspaper continues: "The fulfilment of this programme will destroy the present naval equilibrium in the Mediterranean and give a big advantage to the Triple Alliance."

H. K. THAW STILL INSANE.

Public Safety Demands That He Remain in Asylum.

A despatch from White Plains, N.Y., says: Harry K. Thaw, in the eyes of the law, is still insane and must remain in the asylum where he was placed on February 1, 1908, after he killed Stanford White. Justice Keogh of the Supreme Court on Friday denied Thaw's application for freedom. The Court took the ground that Thaw's release would be detrimental to public safety.

BEES SWARM IN SCARECROW.

Farmer Finds Trousers Legs Filled With Honey.

A despatch from Kingston, N.Y., says: When Ellis Osterhout, a Plattekill farmer, saw bees swarming about an old scarecrow in his corn field on Tuesday he investigated and found that a big colony of bees had taken possession of the figure. The trousers legs were filled with honey. Osterhout left the bees at work. He says he will not hive them until later in the season, when more honey has been stored.

SQUINT-EYED MEN BARRED

Dominion Railway Board Issues Series of Rules on the Subject

A despatch from Ottawa says: Men who squint or are cross-eyed can no longer become engineers, firemen, trainmen or brakemen on Canadian railways.

Following its recent judgment the Dominion Railway Commission has issued a series of uniform rules governing the determination of visual acuity, color perception and hearing of railway employees, and among them is a clause banning the squinting or cross-eyed man. This is not the only defect barred. Applicants must not be accepted if they use glasses for near vision, though when the distant vision of an employee can be improved by good glasses their use is encouraged. Color blindness is also barred, and good hearing powers are stringently insisted upon. Applicants must be able to hear and repeat names and numbers spoken in a conversational tone at a distance of twenty feet.

Employees must be re-examined in all these particulars after any illness or accident which might have affected them, as well as before promotion.

MAKING SAFE INVESTMENTS

MUNICIPAL MARKETS NOW APPEAR TO BE VERY LOW, AND IMPROVEMENT LIKELY.

Therefore, a Good Time to Buy Bonds—There are Some Other Ways for a Man to Use His Money—Mining Stocks Offer a Simple Way to Get Rid of It.

The articles contributed by "Investor" are for the sole purpose of guiding prospective investors, and, if possible, of saving them from losing money through placing it in "wild-cat" enterprises. The impartial and reliable character of the information may be relied upon. The writer of these articles and the publisher of this paper have no interests to serve in connection with this matter other than those of the reader.

(By "Investor.")

The market for municipal bonds has been pretty quiet during the past few months. Prices have declined and the amount of business has slackened, all because of the fact that the London market is not in a receptive mood. The reasons for London's present attitude are several. First, of course, comes the uneasiness in the political situation; then the same feeling respecting the foreign situation. The tremendous amount of issues of recent years has, too, caused a glut in the market. And, finally, there is always necessary a period of digestion after any prolonged period of satisfying hunger—financial or physical—and England has been gobbling up everything that has offered for a long time past, and is now quietly enjoying a rest, while the process of assimilation proceeds.

In Canada there is no great slackening in the demands for municipals, although there are, of course, quiet spells. The quietness in England has resulted in a lowering of prices in many cases, and consequently there are many municipal bonds on the market at present selling considerably below the prices of even a year ago. It is quite possible that if the London market remains quiet for a long period these prices may shade a bit further. Happily, however, the probability of a long period of quiet in England is not likely, and as a natural corollary prices are not likely to depress further. Probably after a period of quietness the prices will begin to move upward, for there is observable at present a tendency for money to cheapen, and with cheaper money bonds cannot fail to respond with an advance in price. Indeed, it appears quite likely that within the next two years some of the prices quoted at present will appear as low as those of 1907 do now.

Many people do not like municipal bonds as investments because they are not exciting and their yield is small. All of which is quite true. But the average man when he puts away his savings in a bank is not going to complain because there is no run on the institution in which he deposits his mosey, though, goodness knows, it is exciting enough when it happens. He may complain, however, that the rate is too low, and in that he has his own remedy in his own hands—he can buy bonds.

If he buys industrial bonds he takes a certain amount of risk, varying in proposition to the certain or uncertain character of the business. Bonds of companies supplying the necessaries of life, such as the bonds of the large packing companies, flour mills, etc., are, usually speaking, safe enough for the average man. To repay him for his slightly greater risk these bonds pay a considerably better rate of interest. If he wants to take a lesser risk than the more speculative industrial bonds, but hesitates over buying the more stable industrials, he can purchase the debentures of western towns, which are by no means gilt-edged, yet are safe enough short of a national calamity. But if he wants a high degree of safety Canadian city debentures, railroad equipment bonds and bonds of most public service companies would answer his purpose. Indeed, if he were to buy municipals at the present time he would, as suggested above, stand a very good chance of making a modest profit through an increase in the market value of his holdings.

If, however, he is a speculator he can buy shares, and stand a fair chance of making a profit if he uses discretion and does not buy on margin. At the present time, though, I do not think shares a wise thing to buy. Most of them are pretty high, and "pretty high" means a good chance for a fall.

If he is really desperate, and wants to make a "pile" or lose all, he has always recourse to the mining market. There his chances are about 1,000 to 1 against his making anything, but there is always someone glad to sell some mining stocks for real money. If he would rather have the mining shares than his money here's his chance. They often make nice wall paper—or insoles for boots that are too large. It's rather expensive, however.

TORONTO CORRESPONDENCE

INTERESTING GOSSIP FROM ONTARIO'S CAPITAL.

"The People's Bob" and His Characteristics—Toronto Baseball Club—The City's Finances.

R. J. Fleming, "the people's Bob" of bygone days, has been in trouble again with the public. This time the trouble has been with his Electrical Development Co., which is supposed to bring Niagara power to Toronto to run the street railway and all the factories which have not gone over to the Hydro Electric for their supply. Every time there has been a little thunder in the air and a cloud in the sky the power has gone off, once for five hours, leaving the people dependent on the street cars to get home the best way they knew how and closing down scores of factories. What the trouble is no one outside the confidence of "R J." knows. He says it won't occur again and you can believe him or not as you like.

R. J. SHEDS HIS TROUBLES.

It is a good thing that "R. J." carries his troubles lightly. He tells a characteristic story on himself. One evening he was driving home alone "up the hill" to his comfortable residence beyond the city limits; and therefore beyond the city taxgatherer. His big touring motor car caught up to a lady pedestrian laboriously climbing the incline. Neighbor-like he asked her to take a "lift." She accepted, and explained that she had been unable to find room in a street car.

"If there's one man in Toronto I detest," she said vehemently, "it's that man Fleming. Do you know him?"

The general manager confessed that he did.

"Do you know any good about him?" she asked.

"No," said Mr. Fleming dubiously, "not much."

FLEMING'S ABILITY.

There has always been an impression that Sir William Mackenzie chose Fleming because of his "city hall influence," but this is doing the manager an injustice. Doubtless the real reason of the choice was that Mr. Fleming is a man of great executive capacity, such as the street railway really needed.

Mr. Fleming is a product of Toronto—of the more or less despised east end. As a barefoot lad he played on the muddy banks of the Don. Later he was caretaker of Parliament street Methodist church, and recently told of getting up at 4 o'clock on Sunday mornings to light the fires. When he grew up he started a coal and wood yard and then went into real estate. He took to municipal politics as a duck takes to water. He was elected alderman, and did good work on the assessment committee. When it was announced he was to run for Mayor people thought it a joke. But he ran and was elected. That was in 1891, when he vanquished E. B. Osler, now Sir Edmund. Five times afterwards he was elected, and left the Mayor's chair to become Assessment Commissioner, thence to the street railway.

Mr. Fleming has had reverses; he invites them by his energy and his daring. He was caught financially in the land boom in the nineties, and he has suffered defeat at the polls. But he has a philosophical temperament. The scars of the land smash are now being wiped out, for his salary is said to be in the neighborhood of $20,000 a year, with an occasional $10,000 bonus thrown in.

THE BASEBALL PROSPECTS.

When the Toronto Baseball Club struck third place in the Eastern League the croakers said they had reached their limit. Indeed, before the season opened bets at even money were made that the Leafs would not finish one, two, three. During the losing streaks some of the criticism was directed at Manager "Joe" Kelly. They said he did not maintain discipline, and that he did not supply the inspiration necessary to make his team of all stars get together. But he may fool the critics properly by the end of the season.

When the team loses at home after a winning streak on the road the players' excuse is that the Island grounds, where they not only play, but practise and live, are damp and give them rheumatism.

There is a growing feeling that professional baseball in the last few years has been taken too seriously by the newspapers, and through them by the public. Baseball is all right, but after all it is chiefly a commercial proposition, based on human optimism. And it is rather too much to expect every one of eight teams to be a pennant winner every year.

A TAXPAYING MONTH.

The last week of July is interesting to the Toronto taxpayer because he is then required to pay the first instalment of the year's taxes. The other instalments fall due in September and November respectively. A system of penalties ensures prompt payments. And for the last few days before the final date the approaches to the City Treasurer's office are thronged with a stern and unenthusiastic crowd of thrifty ratepayers.

Financing Toronto has become a serious matter. The expenditure this year will run well over $9,000,000, a sum much beyond the requirements for the ordinary activities of the government for the entire Province of Ontario. Here are some of the big items which go to make up such an impressive total:

Debt charges	$2,340,136
Courts	135,024
Police Department	689,508
Jail	47,830
Public Schools	1,647,041
High Schools	229,141
Technical Schools	98,819
Separate Schools	118,158
Hospitals	125,000
Board of Health	122,967
Isolation Hospital	56,756
Law Department	36,350
Assessment Department	87,909
Charitable Grants	94,950
Roadways	147,389
Snow Cleaning	58,664
Engineering Salaries	48,060
Street Cleaning	519,336
Street Watering	83,367
Maintenance of Stables	59,592
Waterworks	408,913
Firemen's Salaries	314,700
Fire Hydrants (water)	157,950
Street Lighting	247,205
City Hall Maintenance	69,229
Architect's Salaries	42,815
Official Salaries	150,056

Not all of the $9,000,000 expenditures has to be raised by direct taxation. The waterworks department, for example, provides nearly $1,000,000 revenue. The street railway company, under its agreement, now yields almost another $1,000,000 annually. Licenses contribute over $200,000. The exhibition may yield a profit of $60,000. But when all the sources of revenue have been exhausted there remains a substantial sum of $5,286,965 to be raised by taxes. This is raised on an assessment of $345,598,145. Reduced to what the individual pays this means that a man with property assessed at $5,000 has to put up $92.60, which, with his local improvements for sidewalks, pavements, etc., brings his taxes to more than $100.

As may be judged from the size of the annual debt charges, the city's debt has reached large proportions. The gross debt stands at $43,000,000, reduced by cash $1,000,000 and investments of $9,000,000 to a net amount of $33,000,000. Offsetting this in part is the fact that the property owned by the city is worth at least $20,000,000.

Nevertheless, it came as something of a shock to many citizens to learn that the Mayor and the City Treasurer had failed to sell $5,000,000 more bonds in England.

An old man, William Ford, who was lost in the woods for several days, died in a London hospital as a result of his sufferings.

COST OF LIVING IN GERMANY.

Total Extra Cost for Beef Is $18,000,000 Per Annum.

A despatch from Berlin says: While the total charges of the German army and navy, including this year's increases, is less than $5 per head per year, a German economist, Dr. George Goldstein has computed that each Berliner will pay 21 marks (or approximately $5) more for meat this year than he would have paid ten years ago. For the nominal family of five or six this represents an extra drain on the family exchequer of $25 or $30. Dr. Goldstein arrives at his figures by taking the total dressed weight of cattle, sheep, swine, etc., slaughtered for Berlin consumption annually and multiplying this by the increase in the retail prices per pound as shown by the official statistics over the average price ten years ago. For greater Berlin the total extra cost is about $18,000,000 per annum.

TO OPERATE FAST FREIGHT.

C.N.R. Montreal-Ottawa Service First—Later to Toronto.

A despatch from Montreal says: Sir Donald Mann was in Montreal on Wednesday, personally superintending the operations in connection with the boring of the tunnel under the mountain for the entrance of the Canadian Northern into Montreal. Sir Donald expects that the line which the company is building between Ottawa and Toronto will be opened late in the fall, and as a measure preparatory to this Mr. D. B. Hanna, the Vice-President and General Manager, has just completed arrangements for the opening of a fast freight service between Montreal and Ottawa with a view to extending it to Toronto. The company has also established its own cartage company in Ottawa to collect and deliver freight.

BANK ROBBED OF $2,000.

Knock Two Northern Crown Officials Unconscious.

A despatch from Vancouver says: Two robbers, one a short and the other a tall man, held up the Northern Crown Bank at Central Park, six miles out of Vancouver, at 10 o'clock on Thursday evening. They had been loitering in the vicinity for half an hour, having come there with a horse and rig. They covered Manager C. C. Temple with a gun and also held up his assistant, Tompkins, both of whom were having lunch. They attempted to force Temple to open the safe, but he refused, and one struck him over the head with a piece of lead pipe. They put Tompkins out of business in the same manner, and then broke open a cash box and stole $2,000. They got away in their rig. When Temple recovered consciousness he telephoned for help, but the robbers have not been captured.

OUT WAITER SERVES THE KING

TELLS OF THE DUTIES HE HAS TO PERFORM.

6,000 Pieces of Gold Plate Used at Coronation Dinner at Buckingham Palace.

"I am one of those waiters who are employed by all the great restaurants and large caterers who look after the big entertainments given by the very well-to-do in the way of balls, big dinner parties, garden parties and yachting parties," said a restaurant free lance waiter to a London (England) reporter.

"I am out six days a week and sometimes seven, during the season. When the King gives an entertainment at Windsor Castle or Buckingham Palace, from 50 to 100 out waiters are often requisitioned to help the permanent staff of Royal servants. My duties at the Royal entertainments consisted simply in helping to polish the gold plate and wash the glass and china.

"On the occasion of the great Coronation dinner at Buckingham Palace last year I went to the Palace at 10 in the morning, and I and about 30 others were employed until 6 o'clock in the evening in polishing the massive gold plate dinner service and

BIG GOLD TABLE PIECES.

There were 6,000 separate pieces to be polished. This was done, of course, under the supervision of one of the Royal servants. Then we were drafted into a sort of huge scullery, where there were a dozen big, white-tiled sinks, with hot and cold water taps.

"There was an immense table in the centre of the room, laden with cut glass tumblers, decanters and glasses. There were about a couple of thousand of them, which we had to wash and polish, and after dinner they had to be washed and polished again.

"One of the most splendid entertainments I was ever at was given by a great millionaire at his home in Carlton House terrace, where a fountain, which had been put in the supper room specially for the occasion, kept throwing up a spray of iced scented water throughout the evening, and made the air of the room beautifully cool. This, I believe, cost the giver of the entertainment £200 for the hire of it for the night.

"Often I go to a big country house for a ball or dinner party. Sometimes 30 or 40 out waiters will go down by special train, taking all the plate and glass required for the entertainment, for, of course, few even of the very richest people keep enough plate and glass to do for an entertainment at which may sit down to supper. All the plate sent out on hire is solid silver, and is in charge of the head waiter, who is responsible for its safety, and he has to see every piece counted into the packing cases when the entertainment is over.

"At all these big entertainments given by the very well-to-do there are always some detectives present, whose duty it is to keep a watch on us. This is as much for our protection as anything else, so we don't object, because, if anything is taken the detectives can testify that none of the out waiters, at all events, touched it.

"We don't get much in tips, but a smart out waiter gets better paid than an ordinary waiter, and he may rise to the position of manager of the out staff, when he would get £300 to £400 a year."

Eczema 25 Years Cured by "Cuticura"

Mme. J. B. Renaud Montreal

Leg Like Raw Flesh from Knee Down

"I have been treated by doctors for twenty-five years for a bad case of eczema on my leg. They did their best, but failed to cure it. My own doctor had advised me to have my leg cut off, but I said I would try the Cuticura Remedies first. He said, 'try them if you like but I do not think they will do any good.' At this time my leg was peeled from the knee down, my foot was like a piece of raw flesh and I had to walk on crutches.

"I bought a cake of Cuticura Soap, a box of Cuticura Ointment and a bottle of Cuticura Resolvent. After the first two treatments the swelling went down and in two months' use of the Cuticura Remedies my leg was cured and the new skin grown on. The doctor could not believe his own eyes when he saw that Cuticura had cured me and said that he would use Cuticura for his own patients. But for the Cuticura Remedies I might have lost my life. I am truly grateful for the wonderful cure that Cuticura wrought and I always recommend it most highly as a sure and economical cure for skin troubles." (Signed) Mme. J. B. Renaud, 277 Mentana St., Montreal.

For more than a generation Cuticura Soap and Ointment have afforded the speediest and most economical treatment for skin and scalp humors. Sold by druggists and dealers everywhere. For a liberal sample of each, with 32-p. book, send to Potter D. & C. Corp., 49 Columbus Ave., Boston, U. S. A.

THIMBLES 228 YEARS OLD.

They Are Symbol of Industry All the World Over.

There was a time when that useful protective covering for industrious fingers, the thimble—which dates from 1684—was very costly. Indeed, only well-to-do women could afford to wear one. Afterward, however, they were made of lead and other common metals, and to-day you can get quite a serviceable article for a halfpenny, says London Answers.

The Dutch finger hat (finger hood) became in England the "thumb bell," from its bell like shape. It was originally worn on the thumb to parry the thrust of a needle pointing through the stuff, and not, as at present, to impel it.

All the world over the thimble is a symbol of industry. The gift of one to a little girl is taken as a hint that she should learn to sew or that her clothing needs mending.

Fashion in thimbles is very luxurious in the East. Wealthy Chinese women have thimbles carved out of mother of pearl and sometimes the top is a single precious stone.

HOT WEATHER AILMENTS

A medicine that will keep children well is a great boon to every mother. This is just what Baby's Own Tablets do. An occasional dose keeps the little stomach and bowels right and prevents sickness. During the hot summer months stomach troubles speedily turn to fatal diarrhoea or cholera infantum and if Baby's Own Tablets are not at hand the child may die in a few hours. Wise mothers always keep the Tablets in the house and give their children an occasional dose, to clear out the stomach and bowels and keep them well. Don't wait till baby is ill—the delay may cost a precious life. Get the Tablets now and you may feel reasonably safe. Every mother who uses the Tablets praise them and that is the best evidence that there is no other medicine for children so good. The Tablets are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

SOME QUAINT OLD WORDS.

Few of the Old Collective Terms Used in Sport and Venery.

Any sportsman would be highly amused at the ignorance of his questioner if asked to explain what is meant by a "covey" of partridges. Most sportsmen, continues the Pall Mall Gazette, would promptly correct a speaker who talked about a "walk" of snipe, instead of a "wisp," although they would not be justified in doing so. A very few might be able to say that a "bevy" of quail is the proper term to use.

But these are only a very few of the old collective terms used in sport and venery, and, indeed, in every-day life, to denote a number of any particular sort of birds, beasts, fish, or even human beings. It is not generally known, for instance, that it is as correct to talk about a "gaggle" of women as it is to talk about a "gaggle" of geese; let us hope that it was not a likeness in characteristics that caused the identity in name.

All kinds of animals, wild and tame, had "collective" names allotted to them. Who ever hears now of a "pride" of lions, a "lepe" of leopards, or a "sloth" of bears, all common words in bygone times for a collection of these various animals? A "singular of boars" and a "sounder of swine" are terms still familiar to the pig-sticking fraternity of India and elsewhere; but a "route of wolves," a "harrass of horses" and a "rag of colts" have passed from the mouths of men. A "stud of mares" is still in common use, although in a slightly different sense from its original meaning.

A "team of oxen," a "drove of kine" and a "flock of sheep" are familiar to all, but a "pace of asses," a "barren of mules" or a "skulk of foxes" are three terms that have quite disappeared. Furthermore, you can find in the old books a "down of hares," a "nest of rabbits" and a "clowder of cats," but it is more correct to speak of a "kendal of kittens." A "shrewdness of apes" and a "labor of moles" are two delightful terms, the aptness of which need not be pointed out.

Turning to the birds, especially those formerly hunted with hawks, we find that most of them were also given collective names. All are familiar with a "covey of partridges," a "flight of doves," a "building of rooks" and a "brood of hens," and a few perhaps with a "spring of teal," a "muster of peacocks," a "walk of snipe" and a "fall of woodcock." But what of a "sege of herons" (or bitterns), a "herd of swans," a "dopping of sheldrake" and a "covert of coots"? Who now speaks of a "nye of pheasants," a "congregation of plover," a "badelynge of duck" or a "sordsute of mallard"? A "murmuration of starling," a "watch of nightingales" and a "charm of goldfinches" are three exquisitely pictorial expressions, which it is a great pity should ever have become lost to the English tongue; apart from these, a "host of sparrows" is a term that still remains with us, a strange tribute, indeed, to the impudent gatherings of these ubiquitous feathered pests.

Dr. O. Gordon Hewitt, Dominion Entomologist, says, referring to the infantile death rate from intestinal diseases and diarrhœa spread by the house fly, he believes that the so-called harmless fly is yearly causing the death of thousands of infants, as well as spreading the germs of typhoid fever.

WILSON'S FLY PADS

HE KNOWS HIS ROAD.

Few men can ride over 1,500 to 2,000 miles of railroad and not only know every mile of it, but also have located the route and been finally responsible for its construction. Yet this is the record of M. H. MacLeod, general manager of the C. N. R. Western lines, of which he was chief engineer before becoming general manager.

His knowledge of the road and country led to his appointment. Before his appointment, Mr. MacLeod, along with Vice-President Hanna, was making an inspection trip over the Western lines. There joined the party one of the heads of an American steel corporation making railway equipment, a shrewd judge of men, who backs his favorable estimates of men with millions of capital. He saw what was going on and heard the discussion that took place in the observation end of the private car. On the second day he leaned over to a fellow-traveller and said: "They are looking for a general manager, and the papers are talking about some one from the States. There is the man they need," pointing to MacLeod. "I'd make him general manager right now. Why, he knows everything about the system, and the way he handled the Boards of Trade and Town Councils of the towns we passed through, shows he knows how to handle men. Yes, sir, that's the man I'd appoint general manager." A month afterwards Sir William Mackenzie appointed the man who "knows everything about the system" to the position of general manager of the Western lines.

Mr. M. H. MacLeod.

HATBAND A SAFE DEPOSIT.

Pawnbroker's Wife Made a Strange Discovery.

A prolonged litigation was cut short at Aberdeen, Scotland, the other day by a discovery in an old silk hat which a pawnbroker's wife was endeavoring to sell. In order to make it fit the purchaser she slipped her fingers under the band to remove what seemed to be padding.

Taking the wad out she discovered that it was a bunch of bank deposit receipts for the amount of £600. Fortunately the pawnbroker knew that the hat had belonged to a gentleman who had died three years previously. He restored the receipts to his executors and was informed that the money represented had given rise to a bitterly contested lawsuit.

The dead man's lawyers were specially overjoyed at the discovery, as they had been under serious suspicion of carelessness in losing the receipts. Nobody had been aware of their client's habit of using his hat as a safe deposit box.

BRITAIN'S MERCHANT FLEET.

Comprises Practically One-half of of World's Steam Tonnage.

An idea of the rapidity with which the sailing ship is disappearing is conveyed in figures given in the new volumes of "Lloyd's Register."

The world's sailing fleet now totals little more than 4,000,000 tons, whereas the merchant steamers of the globe are in excess of 40,000,000 tons. On the assumption that one ton of steam is equal to three of sail, steamships now do thirty times as much of the carrying trade of the world as sailing ships.

Of this huge total of steamshipping the British flag boasts practically one-half, as much as 17,700,000 tons being registered in the United Kingdom, and 1,600,000 tons in British colonies. It may be conjectured too that the British half comprises the newer and more economically worked moiety.

While 340,000 tons of shipping has been added to the United Kingdom register since 1911, Germany has increased her tonnage by 162,000, Japan by 141,000 and Norway by 138,000.

NEW GOVERNMENT BUILDING

Magnificent Structure for Exhibits at Canadian National.

The new government building at the Canadian National Exhibition is being rushed to completion and will be ready for the year's Fair. It will cost $160,000, of which the Dominion Government pays $100,000, the Ontario Government $25,000 and the City of Toronto the balance. It will be used for Provincial, Dominion and Educational Exhibits.

By the way they shirk,
Keeping wondrous busy
Avoiding honest work!

Minard's Liniment Cures Diphtheria.

BE CHEERFUL.

There's nothing sweeter in the land
That meets with more resentment
From misanthropes on every hand
Than simple, sweet contentment.

It cheers you like the summer sun
That shines when it is raining,
Or like the smile of anyone
Whose days are swiftly waning.

Be cheerful, and it matters not
Which way the winds are blowing;
However hard may be your lot,
Whichever way you're going—

Uphill or down the winding vale,
Through sorrow, failure, trial,
The best of us will often fail,
And meet with strange denial.

It costs you nothing to be gay—
The very birds are gladsome.
So tuck your worries well away;
I say it, and I've had some.

"I thought she married him to reform him?"

"So she did."

"But he's just as wild as ever."

"Yes. She can't keep him home at nights long enough to start the reformation."

The Foe of Indigestion.—Indigestion is a common ailment and few are free from it. It is a most distressing complaint and often the suffering attending it is most severe. The very best remedy is Parmelee's Vegetable Pills taken according to directions. They rectify the irregular action of the stomach and restore healthy action. For many years they have been a standard remedy for dyspepsia and indigestion and are highly esteemed for their qualities.

Pain Flees Before It.—There is more virtue in a bottle of Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil as a subduer of pain than in gallons of other medicine. The public know this and there are few households throughout the country where it cannot be found. Thirty years of use has familiarized the people with it, and made it a household medicine throughout the western world.

"Jinx's daughter bids fair to become a humorist." "That so?" "Yes. I was visiting there last night and I told her she had her mother's voice and her father's features, and she asked me if I thought suicide a sin."

We have no hesitation in saying that Dr. J. D. Kellogg's Dysentery Cordial is without doubt the best medicine ever introduced for dysentery, diarrhoea, cholera and all summer complaints, sea sickness, etc. It promptly gives relief and never fails to effect a positive cure. Mothers should never be without a bottle when their children are teething.

WAS ALL WORN OUT.

The teacher of a Sunday School class tells of the excuse for being late offered by one of her pupils, a boy of ten years.

"I asked him: 'James, why were you so late to-day?'

"'I couldn't help it,' he explained.

"'And why not?' I asked.

"'Well,' he said, 'I dreamed that I was running, and running, and running, and when my brother woke me up I was so tired that I went back to sleep again, 'cos I'd been running such a long ways.'"

LOCAL DOINGS.

A man out looking for sympathy gets to be awful careless of the truth.

Two or three rinks of bowlers intend going to the Berlin tournament next week.

The bowlers are making preparations for their tournament which will be held in August.

The Harrow Sentinel which has been published in the village of Harrow for several years ceased publication with last week's issue.

The junior baseball team drove to Lucan Friday evening and played the return game. The Lucan team won 7—5 Willie Greig umpired.

Mr. Metcalf, student of Huron College, London, will occupy the pulpit of the Trivitt Memorial Church on Sunday next —both morning and evening.

There remains but one hotel in Hibbert Township, that at Dublin. Last week the commissioners cut off the license of the only other, that at Staffa.

The sacrament of the Lord's Supper will be observed in James Street Methodist church at the close of public worship next Sabbath morning and evening.

Messrs. W. W. Taman and W. J. Heaman took in the Scotch Doubles at the London Tournament last week, and won two and lost two games, failing to reach the prize money.

Parties sending in news items are requested to sign their names as otherwise the items cannot be published. The most innocent looking items sometimes have a hidden meaning reflecting on others, and to protect ourselves from unscrupulous persons we must insist on having the name of the sender.

It has been announced that Rev. Canon Sage of St. George's church, London, will preach the 22nd Annual Harvest Thanksgiving Sermons in the Trivitt Memorial Church on Sept. 1st. The Rev. Canon Sage is one of the foremost preachers in the diocese of Huron, and the congregation is to be congratulated on securing such an able preacher for the occasion.

Mrs. John G. Webb of Stephen, who recently underwent two critical operations at Victoria Hospital, London,—one for appendicitis and the other for the removal of a large tumor, from which her life was despaired—was able to return to her home in Stephen last week, and is now doing nicely with good prospects of a complete recovery. This is indeed pleasing to her many friends.

In a report on loan corporations issued by the Government last week it was shown that there is $28,000 on deposit in certain loan companies in Ontario which has never been claimed, the amounts varying from 25c. up to over $1000. Persons who can prove to the satisfaction of the government that the money is theirs undoubtedly can get it. Some of the money has piled up from savings accounts deposited by people who have forgotten them or by people who have since died. Others are due to unpaid dividends where shareholders have not been located.

Richard Moore, an Oxford Township farmer, possesses a freak colt which is now two months old. The young animal has the unusual number of seven feet and an eighth foot, which was only connected by a small ligament, fell off a few days after its birth. The extra feet are attached to each leg immediately behind the regular feet and growing out from the fetlock. The supplementary feet are slightly smaller than the others. The colt is a handsome young specimen and the owner has already refused $1,000 for his curiosity.

At the regular meeting of the W C. T. U. held in Main Street Methodist Church last Monday evening, a unanimous and hearty resolution of appreciation was passed and ordered to be forwarded to the Hon. Sam Hughes, Minister of Militia, for his fearless enforcement of the anti-liquor law in the canteens during the summer encampments. When asked about the canteens Col. Hughes said,—"It is the business of an officer to see that there is no liquor in the camps. I know the militia business and I know the evils connected with it. Liquor is one. The liquor business in the camps has to be stopped or I'll know the reason why."

Two Dashwood rinks minus one man came out on Thursday afternoon last and played a game with the local bowlers. The afternoon game was interrupted by the rain but a 21-end game was played at night, with the following result—.

A Regular Storm Period is central on the 1st, covering July 30th to August 4th. By the 2nd, the barometer will fall to marked storm conditions in western and central regions, the temperature will rise to great warmth, and storms of lightning, thunder, wind and rain will break into very violent gusts and gales in many localities, as the general storm area passes eastwardly across the country. The Venus influence will be strong at this time, and vicious electrical storms, with hail in north-western to northern regions, will be followed by sudden change to unseasonably cool for two or three days. Local cloudbursts will most likely occur, here and there, in central to eastern states, but there will be great shortage in widely distributed rains. A reactionary Storm Period has its central days on the 7th, 8th and 9th. At this time the thermometer will again rise to very high temperatures, the barometer will fall, and black, threatening storm clouds with probability of violence, will pass from west to east over the country. Great bluster and threatening storm period may be looked for, but rains will probably not prove as copious and general as needed. Another break in the temperature will give temporary respite from summer heat about the 9th, 10th and 11th.

FOR THE WOMAN WHO THINKS AND FEELS.

Some women complain that they periodically suffer from dull and heavy feelings, or dizziness in the head, nervousness, pain and bearing-down feelings which should not occur to the normal healthy woman. But most every woman is subject to these pains at some time in her life, due to abnormal conditions in life, such as corsets, over-taxed strength, bad air, poor or improper food, wet feet, sluggish liver, etc. A regulator and female tonic made from native medicinal roots with pure glycerin, and without the use of alcohol, called has proven its value in thousands of cases, like the following:

MRS. MARTIN.

MRS. DONA M. MARTIN, of Auburn, Nebr., Route 1, Box 84, says: "I thought I would write you in regard to what your medicines have done for me. I have used them for thirty years for female trouble and general weakness with the very best result, and they have saved me hundreds of dollars in doctors' bills. I buy the 'Favorite Prescription' and 'Golden Medical Discovery' and take them together. I never was disappointed in your remedies and take pleasure in recommending them to any suffering lady. I am now almost fifty years old; at forty-five I took your medicines, both kinds, and I passed that period very easily and left me fat and healthy. I feel like a young girl.

"If any lady cares to write me, I will gladly tell her more about the good work of your medicines."

With nine longitudinal stitches in his heart, John Thompson lies in the Pennsylvania Hospital, and the surgeons have every reason to believe he will recover from stab wounds he received. It was necessary to saw away three of his ribs to repair the injuries to the heart.

In the public schools of Baltimore the eyes of 53,067 pupils were examined by the tests ordinarily used, and the results are interesting and suggestive: 29,051 pupils were found to have such defective eyesight as to make school work unsafe; 53 per cent. of the children were not to be in the enjoyment of normal vision, but curiously enough the percentage of defective eyesight decreased with the age of the pupils. The report recommends yearly examinations hereafter of the pupils' eyesight. The large percentage, nearly one-fifth of the total number examined, found to be in no condition to do school work at all, is a warning to parents and school authorities all over the country. It shows great negligence and ignorance on the part of parents, where the responsibility rests in the first place, and where periodical examinations of the pupils' eyesight by school authorities will place it at last."—Philadelphia Inquirer.

Children of bright parents are not naturally stupid. When study is disliked, study is painful. Suspect their eyes rather than condemn their intellect. We make a specialty of examining children's eyes with our famous method of looking into the eye. We prescribe glasses only when absolutely necessary and guarantee satisfaction. HENSALL

Mr. Henry Ricker and two daughters of the 4th concession of Hay, had a very narrow escape from serious injury on Saturday night last. They were driving into Hensall with some produce when they met an auto going in the opposite direction. Shortly after passing the auto the horse made a plunge into the ditch which at this point was quite deep. The rig upset and the horse started off at breakneck speed. Luckily, however, the cross-bar of the shafts and parts of the harness broke, and the horse was freed from the rig, otherwise results might have been serious, as all were encased in the top with little chance of escape if the breakages had not taken place. The horse was captured about half a mile up the road none the worse. The man of the auto conveyed the man to Hensal and the ladies to their home.

ONLY A MONTH;

OR, A CURIOUS MYSTERY EXPLAINED.

CHAPTER XII.—(Cont'd)

Possibly, when he first arrived in London, Frithiof might have scouted such a notion if it had been proposed to him, but now his first question was whether he was really qualified for the situation. Those hard words which had so often confronted him—"Experienced only"—flashed into his mind.

"I have had a good education," he said, "and, of course, understand book-keeping and so forth, but I have had no experience."

"I quite understand that," said Mr. Boniface. "But you would soon get into the way of things. My son would show you exactly what your work would be."

"Of course I would," said Roy. "Think it over, Flack, for at any rate it would keep you going for a time while you look round for a better opening."

"Yes, there is no need to make up your mind-to-night. Sleep upon it, and let me know how you decide to-morrow. If you think of accepting the situation, then come and see me in Regent Street between half past one and two o'clock. We close at two on Saturdays. And in any case, whether you accept or refuse this situation, I hope you will come and spend Saturday to Monday with us here."

"You are very good," said Frithiof, thinking to himself how unlike these people were to any others he had come across in London.

As Frithiof walked home to Vauxhall he felt more at rest than he had done for many days. They had not preached at him; they had merely given one of the best gifts that can be given in this world, the sight of one of those homes where the kingdom of heaven has begun—a home, that is, where "righteousness and peace and joy" are the rule, and whatever contradicts this reign of love the rare exception.

CHAPTER XIII.

Strict economy in gas was practised by the Miss Turnours, and Frithiof had to grope about for matches. "Attendance," too, did not apparently include drawing down the blind, or turning down the bed.

Looking honestly into his own mind he detected there something that urged him to snatch at this first chance of work, lest, with fresh failure and disappointment, the very desire for work should die within him, and he should sink into a state which his better nature abhorred. The clatter of tongues still ascended from below. He took off his boots, dropping first one and then the other with a resounding thud upon the floor, after the manner of men.

The next morning he went to the Swedish Embassy to ask advice once more.

"I am glad to see you," said the consul. "I was hoping you would look in again, for I met old Sivertsen the other day, and he was most anxious to have your address. He said you went off in a hurry, and never gave him time to finish what he was saying."

Frithiof smiled.

"He did nothing but inveigh against the rising generation, and I didn't care to waste the whole morning over that."

"You have too little diplomacy about you," said the consul. "You do not make the best of your own case. However, Sivertsen seems to have taken a fancy to you, and I advise you to go to him again; he will most likely offer you work. If I were you, I would make up my mind to take whatever honest work turns up, and throw pride to the winds. Leave your address here with me, and if I hear of anything I'll let you know."

Frithiof, somewhat unwillingly, made his way to Museum Street, and was ushered into the stuffy little den where Herr Sivertsen sat smoking and writing serenely. He bowed stiffly, but was startled to see the sudden change which came over the face of the old Norwegian at sight of him.

"So! You have come back, then!" he exclaimed, shaking him warmly by the hand, just as though they had parted the best of friends. "I am glad of it. Why didn't you tell me the real state of the case? Why didn't you tell me you were one of the victims of the accursed thirst for gold? Why didn't you tell me of the hardness and rapacity of the English firm? But you are all alike—all! Young men nowadays can't put a decent sentence together; they clip their words as close as if they were worth a mint of money. A worthless generation! Sit down, now, sit down, and tell me what you can do."

Frithiof, perceiving that what had first seemed like boorishness was really eccentricity, took the proffered chair, and tried to shake off the mantle of cold reserve which had of late fallen upon him.

"I could do translating," he replied. "English, German or Norwegian. I am willing to do copying; but there, I suppose, the type-writers would cut me out. Any way, I have four hours to spare in the evening, and I want them filled."

"You have found some sort of work then already?"

"Yes, I have got work which will bring me in twenty-five shillings a week, but it leaves me free from eight o'clock, and I want evening employment."

Herr Sivertsen gave a grunt which expressed encouragement and approval. He began shuffling about masses of foolscap and proofs which were strewn in wild confusion about the writing-table. "These are the revised proofs of Scanbury's new book; take this page and let me see how you can render it into Norwegian. Here are pen and paper. Sit down and try your hand."

Frithiof obeyed. Herr Sivertsen seemed satisfied with the result.

"Put the same page into German," he said.

Frithiof worked away in silence, and the old author paced to and fro with his pipe, giving a furtive glance now and then at the downbent head with its fair, obstinate hair brushed erect in Norwegian fashion, and the fine Grecian profile upon which the dark look of trouble sat strangely. The consul's account of his young countryman's story had moved him greatly, and he was determined now to do what he could for him. He rang the bell and ordered the Norwegian maidservant to bring lunch for two, adding an emphatic "Straix!" (immediately), which made Frithiof look up from his writing.

"You have finished?" asked Herr Sivertsen.

"Not quite. I can't get this last bit quite to my mind. I don't believe there is an equivalent in German for that expression."

"You are quite right. There isn't. I couldn't get anything for it myself. What have you put? Good! very good. It is an improvement on what I had thought of. The sentence runs better."

He took the paper from the table and mumbled through it in an approving tone.

"Good! you will do!" he said at the end. "Now while we lunch together we can discuss terms. Ha! what has she brought us? Something that pretends to be German sausage! Good heavens! The depravity of the age! This German sausage indeed! I must apologize to you for having it on the table, but servants are all alike now-a-days—all alike! Not one of them can understand how to do the marketing properly. A worthless generation!"

Frithiof began to be faintly amused by the old man, and as he walked away from Museum Street with a week's work under his arm he felt in better spirits that he had done for some time.

With not a little curiosity he sought out the Bonifaces' shop in Regent Street. The inner shop was consecrated to instruments of all kinds, and through this Frithiof was taken to Mr. Boniface's private room.

"Well," said the show-owner, greeting him kindly. "And have you made your decision?"

"Yes, sir, I have decided to accept the situation," said Frithiof.

"I forget whether I told you about the hours," said Mr. Boniface. "Half past eight in the morning till half past seven at night, an hour out of that for dinner, and half an hour for tea. You will have of course the usual bank holidays, and we also arrange that each of our men shall have a fortnight some time during the summer."

"You are very thoughtful for your hands," said Frithiof. "It is few, I should fancy, who would allow so much."

"I don't know that," said Mr. Boniface. "A good many, I fancy, try something of the sort, and I am quite sure that it invariably answers. It is not in human nature to go on forever at one thing—every one needs variety. Business becomes a tread-mill if you never get a thorough change, and I like my people to put their heart into the work. If you try to do that you will be of real value, and are bound to rise."

"Look," said Roy, showing him a neatly drawn-out plan of names and dates. "This is the holiday chart which we worked out this summer. It takes my father quite a long time to arrange it all and make each dovetail properly with the others."

They lingered for a few minutes talking over the details of the business, then Roy took Frithiof down into the shop again, and in the uninterrupted quiet of the Saturday afternoon showed him exactly what his future work would be.

"I am afraid all this must be very uncongenial to you," said Roy.

"Perhaps," said Frithiof. "But it will do as well as anything else. And indeed," he added, warmly, "one would put up with a great deal for the sake of being under such a man as Mr. Boniface."

"The real secret of the success of the business is that he personally looks after every detail," said Roy. "All the men he employs are fond of him; he expects them to do their best for him, and he does his best for them. I think you may really be happy enough here, though of course it is not at all the sort of life you were brought up to expect."

He began to know intuitively how things would strike Frithiof, and as they went down to Brixton he prepared him for what he shrewdly surmised would be the chief disagreeable in his business life.

"I don't think you heard," he began, "that there is another partner in our firm—a cousin of my father's—James Horner. I dare say you will not come across him very much, but he is fond of interfering now and then, and sometimes if my father is away he gets fussy and annoying. He is not at all popular in the shop, and I thought I would just warn you beforehand, though of course you are not exactly expecting a bed of roses."

When they reached Rowan Tree House they found a carriage waiting at the door.

"Talk of the angel and its wings appear," said Roy. "The Horners are calling here. What a nuisance!"

Frithiof felt inclined to echo this sentiment when he found himself in the pretty drawing-room once more and became conscious of the presence of an overdressed woman and a bumptious little man with mutton-chop whiskers and inquisitive eyes, whose air of patronage would have been comical had it not been galling to his Norwegian independence.

"The Bonifaces have no sense of what is fitting," she said afterward to her husband. "The idea of introducing one of the shopmen to me! I never go into Loveday's drawing-room without longing to leave behind me a book on etiquette."

"She's a well-meaning soul," said James Horner, condescendingly. "But countrified still, and unpolished. It's strange after so many years of London life."

"Not strange at all," retorted Mrs. Horner, snappishly. "She never tries to copy correct models, so how's it likely her manners should improve. I'm not at all partial to Cecil either. They'll never make a stylish girl of her with their ridiculous ideas about stays and all that. I'll be bound her waist's a good five-and-twenty inches."

(To be contnued.)

VARIETY IS THE SPICE OF LIFE

The preparation of appetising and nourishing food is often a perplexing matter, but variety in food is essential and the troubles of the housewife have been greatly lessened by Bovril which is the most convenient form in which a complete food can be prepared. In a minute you can have comforting and nourishing bouillon or Bovril Tea. Bovril Sandwiches, thin bread and butter with Bovril spread lightly between, or hot buttered toast with a little Bovril are positive delicacies. Bovril is excellent for gravies and soups and a little used in reheating meat adds a choice piquancy and improves digestibility.

EAGLE ATTACKS DOG.

Bird Would Have Conquered If Farmer Had Not Taken Part.

From Shidzuoka comes a graphic account of a bloody combat between an eagle and a dog, says the Japan Advertiser. A few days ago, at about 8 a.m., while one Ano was engaged in farming at the foot of a hill called Awagatabe in a suburb of Shidzuoka, he saw his favorite dog scamper away in unusual excitement. The farmer, struck with curiosity, followed in the direction in which the dog ran and was amazed to see the animal jumping about and barking furiously in a thicket near the bottom of a large pine tree.

On closer scrutiny he found the dog was waging a savage battle with a large eagle nearly five feet in height. The bird would descend upon the dog and attack it with its powerful talons, while the dog would spring away alertly trying to bite its enemy. The exciting combat continued for some time, but at last threatened to end in the defeat of the dog.

The farmer fetched a hatchet and rushed to the succor of his pet, raining upon the eagle repeated blows. The dog, encouraged by this help, attacked its antagonist with redoubled vigor, and after a while the eagle fell to the ground quite exhausted and covered with blood. Ano took the captive home in triumph and has since been keeping it in his house.

The eagle proved to be of enormous size and is said to be attracting great curiosity among the villagers.

PREFERS THE COUNTRY.

As a writer of fiction, Mr. Max Pemberton enjoys great popularity both in England and on this continent. Thousands of schoolboys have revelled in "The Iron Pirate," Mr. Pemberton's first great success. Since then he has written over a score of novels which appeal to lovers of wholesome, exciting fiction.

Mr. Pemberton, who lives at Bury St. Edmunds, is of the opinion that creative work done in the country is decidedly better than that done in the town. Describing his methods, he states: "I do my work between eleven and one o'clock in the morning and five and seven in the evening. The two hours before dinner are the best in the day, but I generally get my ideas when I first awake in the morning. This is all very commonplace, but it is true. My experience tells me that you can do, in the country, a good day's work in three hours, whilst in London you do a bad day's work in seven. That is why I have cut myself free from telephones, and gone where the taxis are at rest."

CRUEL OLD PUNISHMENTS.

Offenders at Sea Had a Hard Time if They Were Found Out.

Old time punishment for offences at sea was most severe. The code of the time of Richard I. of England, drawn up for the government of his fleet on the crusades, provided "that whoso killed any person on shipboard should be tied with him that was slain and thrown into the sea. And if he killed him on land he should in like manner be tied with the partie slaine, and be buried with him in the earth."

In Elizabeth's time a thief was to be ducked three times, towed ashore at the stern of a boat and marooned with a loaf of bread and a can of beer. Mutiny was punishable by the culprit's being hanged by his heels "until his brains were beaten oute against the shyppe's side." The penalties imposed for sleeping on watch were progressive.

For the first offence the man was to be "headed" with a bucket of water, on the next occasion he was to be strung up by his wrists and to have two buckets of water poured into his sleeves, the third time he would be loaded with weights and bound to the mast and "for the fourthe time he was to be hanged to the boltsprite, with a can of beere, and a biscotte of breade, and a sharp knife, and so to hang and choose whether he would cutte himself down and fall into the sea or hange still and starve."

Among the rules issued by Raleigh for the governing of his South American expeditions in 1617 was that no man should be allowed to gamble for his arms or clothes, "on the pain of being disarmed and made swabber of the ship." A general punishment for blasphemy at this time was for the offender to be bound to the mainmast with an iron bit between his teeth, the alternative being a scraping of the tongue.

All sorts of odd and frequently hideous punishments are to be found described in old manuscripts. In 1775 a man found drunk aboard or ashore was taken care of until the following morning, when, in the presence of the ship's company, he was presented with a pint of salt water, which he had to drink.

The dreaded "cat" is probably the best known of these old naval punishments. Whipping was provided for at least as long ago as the fifteenth century, and in Drake's time the regular trouncing of the ship's boys by the boatswain on Monday morning was regarded as the only means of insuring a fair wind for the rest of the week.

On the Farm

SUMMER CARE OF PIGS.

Many farmers think that they cannot afford to feed the pigs liberally during the summer season. The pigs are allowed to shift for themselves in many instances and of course do not make much growth, but one may see a pretty good profit in feeding at the present high price of both feed and pork, writes Mr. A. J. Legg.

The hog will just about live on the pasture they can gather from the field and what grain is given them goes to growth and anyone who has tried it has found that only a moderate ration fed to the shoats on pasture will make a good growth throughout the season.

Early spring pigs of any good breed can be made to average a pound of gain a day by the time they are eight or ten months old, and a large part of this can be made on pasture.

The pig that is fed enough food to keep it growing rapidly from the start to finish is usually the most profitable porker.

In some section where there is sufficient waste crop to fatten the hogs it may be profitable to allow the shoats to shift for themselves.

However, usually the hogs that are allowed to shift for themselves and get fat on the waste are easy victims of cholera and swine plague.

If there is a fair profit in feeding hogs the business should be conducted in as careful and business-like way as the feeding of cattle and sheep.

DAIRY NOTES.

One way to save feed bills is to protect the cows from flies during the summer and the cold weather in the winter.

The length of the stall should be adjusted by the size of the cow, and always used by the same cow.

Excellence is always relative. Its relative degrees can only be gauged with accuracy when accurate records are kept.

Nothing ever came so near turning December into June for dairy cattle and sheep as the silo.

The silo lends itself admirably to efforts at intensive farming.

Breed for type, but strive to secure individuals that possess to a certainty the characteristics which you desire your favorite type of dairy cow to possess to perpetuate in your herd.

We should never be deluded into thinking that an animal with a pedigree entitling her to registration is more valuable than another simply on account of such registration.

Individual excellence is the only safe guide to be depended upon in selecting cows to build up a good herd.

The best cows are none too good when measured by their profits, but all of us cannot afford to go out and buy the best; hence we should try to do the best we can with those we have until we can secure better.

IN THE SHEEP FOLD.

One sign of an overfed sheep is the frequent stretching and spreading out of the legs. When these symptoms are observed give a bran mash and an ounce of linseed oil.

It is a mistake to send the buck lambs to market, as they are never desirable and bring down the average of the shipment.

When a buck lamb is about three months old it begins to develop coarseness and a disposition to fight.

A farmer from Maitland, Mo., writes: "Will dipping sheep affect the quality of the wool?" Perhaps not if the sheep is not clipped for two or three months afterwards, but why dip when the wool is long? This should always be done immediately after shearing.

POULTRY HINTS.

Hens suffer from overfeeding as much as starving.

Even a warm rain is bad for very young chicks, and arrangements should be made so they can get to shelter quickly when the showers come.

If many chicks are raised it is a good plan to keep a large kettle near the poultry-house in which the drinking vessels can be boiled at least once a week. A handful of common soda thrown in the water will help.

At the first sign of droopiness in a chick separate it from the rest of the flock and if it does not quickly recover use the axe and bury the body.

GOOD HORSE SENSE.

Never feed a horse when it is very warm.

You cannot begin to feed and train a colt too early.

Excessive sweating in a horse indicates weakness.

Drive a colt the first time with a fast walking horse.

Handling colts from the start obviates breaking and substitutes training.

OUTGROWN HIS CAR.

"So you've sold your automobile?"

"Yes. I've outgrown it."

"Outgrown it? Do you mean you've tired of it?"

"Not at all. I've simply grown too stout to crawl underneath it any more."

NOTES AND COMMENTS

While William Hard is writing about the menace of female parasitism, Sir Almroth Wright of London, a distinguished biologist, is making a passionate protest against the militant woman. Woman should be up and doing, says Mr. Hard. There is gross immorality in her supine indolence. She should be working side by side with man. She should be a producer and hold up her head in the world. Nay, contends Sir Almroth Wright, male and female cannot safely work side by side save when they are incomplete. It is futile for woman to match her powers with man, because she is in an abnormal condition during a large part of her life. Militant suffrage is hysteria; it is immorality — a subtle offense against her own nature. Peace between the sexes will only come, says the London physician, when woman ceases to believe and to teach all manner of evil of man. It will come when she ceases to impute to him her own natural disabilities, and when she no longer wishes to work at his side.

The peculiar thing about these two diametrically opposed articles is that they each seem right and completely convincing. Which is another way of saying that both are good reading. Of course, it's a little hard for women to read them, because they are engaged in taking care of their homes for the sake of the men with whom the London biologist supposes them to be at outs; and because they are such busy "parasites," as Mr. Hard has it, with the cooking to do, and the odd sewing to manage, and the house to keep tidy, and the children to care for. If they had time to feel perplexed, no doubt they would; for to follow the advice of both gentlemen is obviously impossible. They can see that if they would hold Mr. Hard's regard they must on no account be parasites, though some of them, who are pretty well worn out with the summer's work, feel that they would like to be for about a month during the hot season.

And it is obvious that if ever they are to win a smile of approval from Sir Almroth Wright they must never, never be militant; and that no matter how vigorous and sane they feel they must remember that they are no more than irresponsible slaves of hysteric emotion, and that they must be very careful about using their talents and abilities for fear that they will offend against some sort of Gog and Magog that the scientists and sentimentalists have united to set high on a pedestal before which they fall down and worship.

Owing to the increasing cost of leather prices of shoes have been advancing for the last three or four years. Leather now costs, it is said, 72 per cent. more than at the beginning of 1908 because the world's supply of hides has not increased in proportion to the need of leather. The automobile has caused part of the enlarged demand, and more people are wearing shoes than ever before. Now another advance, of 20 per cent., is to be made in shoe prices by September 1.

This is becoming a sad world for "the ultimate consumer." He must pay more for wearing apparel soon, for woollen cloth is also going up. The cost of anthracite coal already has been advanced. Some of us may even have to give up automobiles if the high pressure continues; others may return to the barefoot stage, at least in summer. But stock raisers ought to be happy over the present condition, and perhaps discontented "ultimate consumers" ought to turn to stock raising. The world needs more meat as well as more leather.

A $50,000 VEGETABLE GARDEN.

Suburban Life Magazine for August tells of a man in St. Louis who has a successful vegetable garden on a plot of land valued at $50,000. "Get your feet on Mother Earth and let her draw away your troubles and cares" declares this business man. "When man is for very long out of touch with the first principles of nature, he begins to weaken. He may think he is doing himself and his descendants a great good, and is fast progressing when he bustles about making a great fuss over his artificial way of living, but he isn't. Nature, sooner or later, makes him realize that he cannot stand in judgment on his own actions. Why, the modern business man makes more noise going down town to his work in the morning than does the whole universe in its wonderful progress through endless space."

HEALTH

WHOLESOME SKEPTICISM.

The veil of mystery that used to envelop the science and practice of medicine has been torn away. Medical topics are freely discussed in newspapers and magazines, and indeed many of the great metropolitan papers have medical editors who write editorial articles on hygiene and the prevention and cure of disease. The daily newspapers announce any important discovery in medicine often before it can be published in the medical journals.

On the whole, physicians approve this publicity, for a patient who is intelligent and who understands the reason for a prescribed treatment is likely to follow instructions carefully and faithfully.

At first, however, this sort of publicity did much harm. Whenever, for example, a "cure" for tuberculosis or cancer was announced in the papers, false hopes were roused, and not only the author of the "cure" but physicians in general were importuned to use the remedy at once before it was too late. Even now a cruel disappointment is often the result of these premature announcements, for many people are prone, in spite of much experience to the contrary, to believe that whatever they see in print must be true.

But people are coming to recognize that just as one swallow does not make a summer, so one apparent cure of cancer does not prove that a specific remedy has been found. Cancer is the strangest of diseases. A cancer often grows and grows again, in spite of operations by the most skilful surgeons; yet, on the other hand, it sometimes ceases to grow as the result apparently of the simplest form of treatment, and it may even disappear of itself. Hence there are many reputed "cures" of the disease.

The most recent of these so-called remedies is selenium, which is a chemical element belonging to the sulphur group that experimenters in Germany are said to have used with success in treating cancer in mice, and with which a New York physician is reported to have cured, or apparently cured, cancer in man.

That this announcement has caused no such excitement as followed the discovery of tuberculin twenty years ago is gratifying evidence of the growing intelligence of the public. People now read such announcements with interest, and with hope for the future, but they have learned to wait for more definite proof than a newspaper paragraph can supply.—Youth's Companion.

CZAR SHOWS TERROR.

Nicholas of Russia Fears Plot to Assassinate Him.

As the Czar and Czarina were on their way from Livadia, in the Crimea, to Moscow recently, they halted at the seaside town of Galton, where a charity flower day was organized. Vendors were drawn from members of the aristocracy traveling with their majesties and from the imperial family itself. Zealously guarded kiosks were placed along the sea promenade, and there the Czar, the Czarina and their children sold flowers to privileged customers. The royal party collected $4,000 in half an hour.

The Czar went to Moscow after an absence of seven years to unveil his father's statue. When the royal train arrived from the Crimea and the local dignitaries met him with the bread and salt of welcome he refused to leave his state compartment, saying he knew a plot had been hatched against him. It took over an hour's persuasion to induce him to drive into the city. Then he gave orders that the horses were to go at a gallop. He was white as death and too much agitated to acknowledge the salutes of the crowds.

The day before he arrived the police entered all houses on the route, told the people to remove from their cellars what they might want during the Czar's stay, then locked and sealed them up, taking away all keys. People were forbidden to appear on balconies or in windows during the royal progress on pain of being instantly shot.

The Czar's nerves took a turn for the worse when Premier Stolypin was shot within a few yards of him at Kieff. He says he trusts nobody and knows he must die a violent death, but wants to put off the evil moment until his son grows up.

His four daughters appeared for the first time in public in Russian court dress when their grandfathers' statue was unveiled.

Miss Elderby—"Do you really think that women propose?" Oldbach—"If they don't there are a great many marriages I cannot account for."

Diner—"Waiter, bring me a glass of water." Waiter—"Certainly, sir, but you already have one glass." Diner — "One is not enough. Get me another. I want to strengthen this soup."

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

INTERNATIONAL LESSON, AUGUST 11.

Lesson VI. A troubled sea and a troubled soul. Mark 4.35 to 5.20.

Golden Text, Psa. 46. 1, 2.

Verse 35. On that day—The particular afternoon of the day on which Jesus sat in a boat and taught the multitudes in parables. Unlike Luke (8. 22), Mark associates the events so that he remembers the very day.

The other side. — The eastern shore of the lake, about opposite Capernaum.

37. Storm of wind—Greek, a great squall. Matthew calls it a "tempest" (8. 24).

38. The cushion—On the helmsman's seat. The mention of the cushion and other little boats indicates the careful detail of Mark's narrative.

39. Peace, be still—Silence, be muzzled. He addresses the waves as though speaking to an unruly ox. The Greek word carries with it not only the meaning that the sea should become quiet, but also that it should remain so.

A great calm—"In contrast with the great storm."

40. Have ye not yet faith?—This question seems to indicate the principal lesson which the incident is intended to teach. In view of all the preceding miracles it would seem that these men, who had been intimately associated with Jesus, should have been confident of his power and disposition to care for them, yet the incident discloses a woeful lack of faith. The startled appeal to their sleeping Master bespeaks the distrust which possessed them when confronted with danger. The stilling of the storm is one more incident added to the long list of miracles which were designed to inspire the disciples with a constant faith in Jesus as the master of every situation.

41. Feared exceedingly—At first on account of their danger, later because of the mysterious power which Jesus exercised.

Even the wind and the sea obey him—Recorded in all three synoptic Gospels, indicating the marked impression made, that not only were disease and demons subject to Jesus, but the natural elements as well.

5. 1. Gerasches—Luke 8. 26 gives this rendering, while Matthew 8. 28 reads Gadarenes. The city Gersa, or Kersa from which the proper noun Gerasenes is derived, was situated on the eastern side of the lake, about midway from north to south, and about a mile from the shore. The shore at the point opposite is narrow and steep, dropping abruptly from the high tableland to the water's edge. Here there is another heap of ruins designated by the same name. The proper noun Gadarenes, on the other hand, comes from Gadara, a city six miles southeast of the lake and south of the Hieromax or Yarmuk gorge. Gadara was fortified in ancient times and was one of the principal cities of Decapolis. Compare verse 20. Because of its importance it was known more widely outside of Palestine than was Gersa, and this fact may have led to the substitution of Gadarenes for Gerasenes by some ancient copyists. When we rommeber how often the manuscripts of our Gospels were copied and recopied during the many centuries preceding the invention of printing, the wonder is that more copyist's errors of this kind than actually do occur are not found in the Gospels.

2. Straightway—A common word in Mark's rapid sketch of events.

Tombs—Caves in the limestone cliffs in the vicinity of Gersa.

A man—Matthew mentions two. Luke, however, mentions only one. It is not improbable that there were two of whom one was the fiercer and acted as spokesman.

Unclean spirit—Compare Lesson Text Studies for March 10 for note on Demon Possession.

6. Worshiped him—Paid him reverence. This was an act of obeisance which did not necessarily amount to the worship of deity, but was a common means by which one person acknowledged the superiority of another. The demons clearly recognized the mastery of Jesus over them.

7. What have I to do with thee?—The utterance of the man, impelled by the demon, which had nothing in common with Christ.

Thou Son of the Most High God—As though he recognized the deity of Christ. It is to be noted that although men were slow in recognizing Jesus as divine the demons identified him immediately.

9. Legion—So called because they were many. A legion was a department of the Roman army numbering 6,000 men. The language of the demoniac was of course figurative. It was as though he said, "I feel as though I were possessed of a thousand devils."

10. Out of the country—Luke 8. 31 reads "into the abyss." The demons feared being driven into torment, while the possessed man feared he would be driven from his asylum among the tombs.

13. He gave them leave—Matthew 8. 32 records that Jesus gave the command, "Depart." There is no intimation, however, that they were commanded to enter the swine.

ve ya drin Itc m w am e . .-

About two thousand—As estimated by the terror-stricken swineherds.

14. In the city—Gersa.

15. In his right mind—No longer controlled by demons.

They were afraid—Of the mysterious power which overcame the demons and resulted in such destruction.

16. Declared unto them how it befell him—Told a simple story of the incidents and their results.

18. As he was entering into the boat—The incident resulted in Jesus departing at once without having an opportunity to teach.

That he might be with him—A request prompted by both fear and devotion.

19. Go to thy house—The demoniac became an apostle to those whose doors were closed to Jesus.

20. Decapolis—A group of ten cities lying south and east of the Lake of Galilee.

WILLIAM'S VACATION.

Sister Sue.

My brother William, he's come home
To spend vacation here with us,
And were all tickled half to death
As over him we make a fuss.
He is so big and looks so grand,
His clothes are just the swellest yet,
And he has all the city ways—
He'll make a hit out here, I bet.

Sammie.

My brother Will is back from town,
And he knows lots and lots of things;
He's got a brand new lot of slang,
And all the latest hits he sings,
I'm learning fast, and by the time
He has to pack his grip and go
Of vaudeville jokes and turkey trot
I'll know enough to start a show.

His Ma.

My little Willie, bless his heart!
Has come to spend a week with me.
He works so awful hard in town,
That he is all tired out, you see.
And then the food they serve him there—
He says it isn't fit to eat.
I'm making him some tarts and pies,
And I am sure they'll be a treat.

His Pa.

We have a visitor to-day,
But what it is I can't make out,
The queerest lookin' lot o' togs—
You'd laugh to see it walk about.
I saw a hat with gaudy band,
I saw a shirt that's full of frills,
I saw a pair of ugly shoes,
I saw a cane—but where is Bill?
—Peyton Boswell in N.Y. Herald.

WHAT WOULD YOU TAKE?

What would you take for that soft little head
Pressed close to your face at time for bed;
For that white dimpled hand in your own held tight,
And the dear little eyelids kissed down for the night?
What would you take?

What would you take for that smile in the morn,
Those bright, dancing eyes and the face they adorn:
For the sweet little voice that you hear all day
Laughing and cooing—yet nothing to say?
What would you take?

What would you take for those pink little feet,
Those chubby round cheeks, and that mouth so sweet;
For the wee tiny fingers and little soft toes,
The wrinkly little neck and that funny little nose?
Now, what would you take?
—From "Heart Throbs," National Magazine.

MID-SUMMER ACTIVITIES.

"Summer, to we human beings, instead of being the time for the greatest activity, is the time for the least effort. As I lie in my hammock under the widespread branches of the hackberry-tree, it has been interesting to me to contrast my laziness with the unceasing activities of the insect world. I have watched a colony of ants by the hour, and have marveled at their incessant labors! never weary, never resting, running hither and thither as though the king's business demanded haste.

"Bees are flying from flower to flower, busily intent on gathering honey from my garden flowers. They seem to find a plentiful supply from my late roses and lilies; from the heliotrope and mignonette; from the nasturtiums and the sweet peas; from the phloxes and sweet william.

"The butterflies are never resting these days, but, like the bees, are seeking refreshment from the nodding blossoms. They make a beautiful picture, as they rest on the petals of a late rose, the sun shining upon their gay iridiscent colors. True creatures of the midsummer are they, too fragile to outlive these warm summer days, and succumbing to the first cold breath of autumn."—Suburban Life Magazine for August.

THE KEYNOTE OF RELIGION

The Pure in Heart are Blessed, for They Shall See God, the Reality

Pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father is this, to visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and to keep himself unspotted from the world.—James i., 27.

Sympathy and self-respect are the keynotes of religion. How may we define religion but as that which doth bind us, even as ligaments bind our bones, to the real thing, which is God? Only when we realize that we are sons of God bound by tender yet strong ties of "love divine all love excelling" have we ambition to live, undefiled, unspotted lives. The undefiled are they that have kept from real evil. The unspotted are those whose spiritual robes of utter whiteness are not splashed with the mud and mire of actual sin. We see daily in others, and sometimes, thank God, if we look at ourselves, a vision of wonderful holiness in the eye that beholds we recognize the nobility, unconscious of itself, of those who have kept themselves innocent of the great offence of physical evil.

Purity is more than avoiding impurity—it is the vision of righteousness made one's own. To be undefiled is to have a definite standard of personal responsibility which loves to express the very heart and mind of God. To keep unspotted is to have washed one's robes in the Precious Blood, that they may be representative of the grace and tender mercy of God, in giving external whiteness of personal adornment as an outward and visible sign of the soul's horror of evil; and all this constitutes the attitude of self-respect which is, first of all, God-respect and then the appreciation of respect of self as a son of God. Faith in God as a person is extended to faith in personality as of God and reverence for personality everywhere, as divine, yet human; human, although divine. Self-respect expresses itself in quiet dignity of carriage, in fearless glance of soul to soul; of glorious reverence for courage,

TENDERNESS AND TRUTH.

It is the splendid assertion of a manhood of complete sincerity, conscious of ability, by the power of God, to conform through free will to the will of God in the "glorious liberty of the children of God," and from all this follows the perfect sympathy which comes from realizing the brotherhood of humanity in God and its weakness, instability and uncertainty apart from God.

Yes, religion is the real thing in life when men who attempt to express it are just sincere, pure and true, having "Holiness as an invincible shield." Service is the real expression of religion when it has in it the love of God to bring peace, pardon and power to others. Many, very many, hunger and thirst after the righteousness which, if we possess, we may bring as a wonderful benediction to the weary and heavy laden.

HENRY W. R. STAFFORD.

CLOTHES OF STONE AND IRON

Wool produced in Furnaces Makes Durable Garments.

The Russians manufacture a fabric from the fibre of a filamentous stone from the Siberian mines, which is said to be of so durable a nature that it is practically indestructible. The material is soft to the touch and pliable in the extreme, and when soiled has only to be placed in a fire to be made absolutely clean.

Iron cloth is largely used to-day by tailors everywhere, for the purpose of making the collars of coats set properly. This cloth is manufactured from steel wool and has the appearance of having been woven from horsehair.

Wool not the product of sheep is being utilized abroad for the making of men's clothing. This is known as "limestone wool," and is made in an electric furnace.

Powdered limestone, mixed with certain chemicals, is thrown into the furnace, and, after passing through a furious air blast, it is tossed out as fluffy white wool. When it comes from the furnace the wool is dyed and made into lengths like cloth.

A pair of trousers or a coat made of this material cannot, it is claimed, be burned or damaged by grease, and is as flexible as cloth made of sheep's wool.

An English manufacturer has succeeded in making a fabric from old ropes. He obtained a quantity of old rope and cordage, unraveled it and wove it by a secret process into a kind of rough cloth. The resultant material he dyed a dark brown. A suit of clothes made from this queer stuff was worn by the manufacturer himself, and it is said that he has a large trade in this line in the British colonies.

A novelty in dress material for women is spun-grass cloth, which may, it is said, be had in white, green, lilac, pink and yellow shades. The inventor of this was an Austrian, and his invention is said to have resulted in the production of a material as bright and flexible as silk.

It doesn't take a man long to tire of posing as a good example.

When washing glassware try dropping a few drops of blue into soapsuds. Then wash the pieces in the ordinary manner. You will like the way the glass will sparkle, and how clear it will look after this simple yet most effective treatment.

ELECTRIC MOUSE TRAP.

A "Shocking" Method of Putting An End to House Mice.

The world has been moving so rapidly that in some lines inventions have not kept pace with progress in other directions. This is especially true of mousetraps. The mousetrap we use to-day is of the same inhuman, barbarous design that was employed by our grandfathers to rid their homes of rodents. However, a mousetrap has just been invented by Thomas B. Wells of Spring Lake, N.J., which ends the lives of rodents silently, painlessly, and in a manner most humane.

The invention has been entirely perfected, and has been installed in a most elaborate fashion at the Wells home in Spring Lake. Every room in the house is equipped with the device and connected with a dial which registers each electrocution.

The dial is located on the wall of

Mr. Wells' bedroom, and not only does a bell ring when the current passes through the body of a rodent, but the indicator shows in which room the unfortunate and unwelcome animal came to his untimely but humane end.

The electrocuting device, with all its ramifications, was built by Mr. Wells from blue-prints of his own design, and it is his boast that he has in his home the finest and most perfect mouse-killing equipment in America.

Each "death chair" is a board about the size of a telephone book. Its surface is covered with metal, and at one end is a spark coil. Above the spark coil projects a wire, to which a piece of cheese is attached. When a mouse touches this cheese he is instantly electrocuted, for the contact closes the circuit, as he has to stand on the metal surface to which the secondary wires are connected.

Each "death chair" is equipped with four storage batteries, which furnish sufficient "juice" to transport the rodents from this world into the next. Wires connect each trap with the indicator and bell in Mr. Wells' bedroom, so that inspection is not necessary. In the morning Mr. Wells has merely to ask his butler to remove the dead from the east bedroom, the west sitting-room or the play-room as the case may be.

This does not impress Mr. Wells as being at all modern, and he is at work on an improved "death chair," which will dispose of the bodies in a more up-to-date manner. One plan is to have a trap through which the bodies will fall, after rigor mortis, into an electric incinerating box. If this improvement is added a mouse will be reduced to ashes within a few minutes from the time his demise is recorded on the indicator.

While this is carrying the idea to a more or less absurd degree, it is not at all unlikely that Mr. Wells will attempt it. He is of a mechanical turn of mind, and he has an elaborately equipped workshop in his home. He has practically completed a Bleriot monoplane, every detail of which he has made himself from the inventor's original blue-prints.

THURSDAY, AUG 8, '12

One of the largest problems of farm economy to-day is the labour question. One hundred or more years ago this question was not nearly so prevalent, and the farther back you go in the years the less the cry of help wanted. This is not a retrogression but the most material indication of the forward march. In the progress of civilization. In the early days the majority of the people lived on the farm and grew and made all the necessities for their simple life. Now we have a vast city and town population to keep up and supply with food. As these people who were formerly supplying their own food and now not doing so, we have to get somtime or something to take their place, thus we have to resort to the machinery which the town and city brethern made and for which we supply them with food By this means the work is done and a saving of time and material effected. In getting the cream from the milk, much valuable space is secured, the cream and the milk are obtained in a cleanly manner thus saving health to our stock, and the quality of butter is improved. An item which speaks to most modern people is the immediate dollar. By using shallow pans as much as three per cent. of butter-fat is lost in the skimmilk, while a good separator will only show a loss of 0 per cent. This is a saving of 20 lbs. of butterfat on 10,000 lbs. of milk which at a value of 25c. per lb. amounts to $7.25. Another instance is the gasoline engine. By this system of co-operation with the city brethern both time and money are saved and we see that either of us is not indispensable to the other but each is necessary for the best welfare of both.

The word comes from the west of a bumper crop for 1912. Thirty, forty and fifty bushels per acre is predicted and a smile of satisfaction spreads over the face of the westerner as he tells the story. One should discount these statements somewhat, as a forty bushel wheat crop is a rare thing, even in this fertile prairie land. Yet conditions are satisfactory and the outlook at this date for a record crop is very bright indeed. There have been frequent rains of late and these have been pretty general all over the country. Had they come a few weeks earlier some sections would not be complaining of short straw. But even then the recent rains have helped much, and taking the country as a whole, there have been few years when the prospects were as bright for a bountiful harvest as they are just now. Of course unfavorable conditions may arise even yet. Hail frost and the like may come along any time and destroy the farmer's brightest hopes But barring the unforeseen, Western Canada will reap its greatest wheat crop this season.

FIFTY THOUSAND MEN REQUIRED

Farm Laborers' Excursions—This Years Wheat Crop Will Be the Largest in THE HISTORY OF CANADA

The wheat crop of 1912 will be the greatest ever harvested in Manitoba Saskatchewan or Alberta, thus requiring the farm laborers of the East to recruit and assist in harvesting the World greatest bread basket.

The Governments of the respective Provinces state that fifty thousand men will be required for this year's harvest. These will have to be principally recruited from Ontario, and the prosperity of Canada depends on securing labor promptly. The Canadian Pacific, on which Company will practically fall the entire task of transporting the men to the West, is already making special arrangements for this year. Excursions from points in Ontario to Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta will be run and special trains operated, making the trip in about thirty-six hours and avoiding any change of cars or transfers. This will be a day shorter than any other route. See display ad. in this publication for dates, rates and conditions. Consult any C.P.R. agent for full particulars, tickets, etc.

MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT

According to the Dominion census of 1911, the provinces of Canada will be represented in the next house as follows, compared with their present membership.

	Present Membership	After Redistribution
Ontario	86	82
Quebec	65	65
Nova Scotia	18	15
New Brunswick	13	12
Manitoba	10	15
Saskatchewan	10	15
Alberta	7	12
British Columbia	7	12
Prince Edward Is	4	3
Yukon	1	1
Total	221	232

Ontario's loss is due to the decline which is taking place in the rural population. The big gain in ridings goes to the West, the number of seats being based on the census population. Let us explain, Quebec remains stationery with 65 seats, that being fixed under Confederation. The multiple for Quebec is taken as the basis for the number of seats in the other provinces, which gain or lose according to increase or decrease in population.

SELLING YOUNG VEAL

The revised Ontario Statutes for 1912 have been sent out, and one of the new sections is worth noting by those who have been in the habit of selling very young veal. Section 102 provides that no meat of calves under four weeks old shall be sold or kept for sale, and the penalty for a breach of this law is a fine of from 10 to $50.

Moreover, in the case of such meat being found in anyone's possession, the onus of proving that it is not for sale, is to rest on the person having the meat.

It has been a matter of common knowledge for some years that calves of two days old and upwards have been sold each year to be used in one form or another for human consumption, and it is against this practice that the law is aimed.

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars free.

STEPHEN

Death of Miss Finkbeiner.—The death of Melissa Finkbeiner, beloved daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Matthew Finkbeiner, at her home, concession 7, Stephen, on Sunday morning last, was an event of wide regret among an entire community of friends and acquaintances of deceased. Her death came after an illness extending over several months, in which loving hearts and hands did all they could to assist her uneven struggle against the fatal sickness. Her trouble had its inception over a year ago, being anaemia, and in December last her case developed into pneumonia, followed by pulmonary trouble and she gradually declined until death claimed her. Miss Finkbeiner was born at the present home of her parents and was much beloved by the family and held a place of deep love and high esteem in the hearts of all who had formed her acquaintance. Besides the sorrowing father and mother she is survived by seven sisters and four brothers, to all of whom deep sympathy is expressed by many friends. The funeral took place to the Crediton cemetery on Tuesday, the casket bearing many beautiful floral tributes.

BATTLE OF THE KEGS.

A Bloodless Naval Conflict of the Revolutionary War.

All wars have their humors and jokes, and the Revolutionary war was no exception. Jan. 5, 1777, figures in history as the date of the battle of the kegs, and, though bloodless, has been celebrated in verse. Six months after the Declaration of Independence, while the British fleet was stationed at Philadelphia, the Americans undertook to destroy the ships by means of improvised torpedoes, which, set afloat in the river above the city, were to carry death and destruction among the enemy.

The alleged torpedoes were shaped like kegs, and when the British land forces discovered them floating down the river they were drawn up and ordered to fire on everything that came within range. The officers remembered the Trojan horse and feared every keg might contain an armed rebel. As the kegs came floating down there was great excitement and much firing, but no casualties. The only explosions were from the British guns, for the torpedoes were a failure.

The incident furnished much amusement to the patriots and was cleverly versified by Francis Hopkinson, a prominent lawyer of the day, one of the signers of the Declaration of Independence and the first district judge of Pennsylvania by appointment of Washington. He was one of the most popular writers of the day, and "The Battle of the Kegs" had a great run among the patriots and distinct influence in the way of military inspiration. Francis Hopkinson was the father of Joseph Hopkinson, author of "Hail Columbia."—Indianapolis News.

The Boy.

A writer in the Biblical World, speaking of "The Minister and the Boy," says: "To behold in the boy a rough summary of the past and to be able to capitalize for good the successive instincts as they emerge is to accomplish a fine piece of missionary work without leaving home. * * * The fire worshiper, the fierce tribesman, the savage hunter, the religion making nomad, the daring pirate, the elemental fighter with nature and rival of every kind, the master of the world in making, comes before you in the unfolding life of the ordinary boy. * * * He is an abridged volume on ethnology."

Apple or Onion?

No one would for a moment imagine any one mistaking an onion for an apple. But don't be too sure. Some day when you have nothing else to do cut a small square of onion and a square of apple of the same size, close your eyes and hold your nose tightly and then get some one to hand you one of the squares without telling you which one it is. You would be well advised not to wager any money on being able to tell by chewing which it is. The explanation is that a large part of what we call taste is really smell.—Pearson's Weekly.

The Strange Part.

Mr. Dresser (with evening paper)—Here's strange news! A New York child hid for thirty hours in her mother's clothes closet!

Mrs. Dresser—I should say it is strange. Imagine a New York woman not changing her clothes in that time! —Judge.

Ordeals.

"It must be a terrible thing to go through the 'third degree.'"

"It must be, indeed," replied Mr Bingdad. "I'll bet it's even worse than trying to answer all the questions a twelve-year-old boy can ask."—Washington Star.

That they are sinners few are willing to deny; that they are sinning few are ready to admit.

VARICOSE VEINS CURED
NO NAMES USED WITHOUT WRITTEN CONSENT.
Confined to His Home for Weeks.

"Heavy work, severe straining and evil habits in youth brought on Varicose Veins. When I worked hard the aching would become severe and I was often laid up for a week at a time. My family physician told me an operation was my only hope, but I dreaded it. I tried several specialists, but soon found out all they wanted was my money. I commenced to look upon all doctors as little better than rogues. One day my boss asked me why I was off work so much and I told him my condition. He advised me to consult Drs. Kennedy & Kennedy, as he had taken treatment from them himself and knew they were square and ... METHOD TREATMENT. My progress was somewhat slow and during the first month's treatment I was somewhat discouraged. However, I continued treatment for three months longer and was rewarded with a complete cure. I could only earn $15 a week in a machine shop before treatment, now I am earning $21 and never loose a day. I wish all sufferers knew of your valuable treatment.

HAIL STORM IN MANITOBA

Many Wheat Fields Were Levelled, Making Them Worthless For This Year

A despatch from Winnipeg says: A heavy storm, which swept over the central southern belt of Manitoba on Saturday afternoon and evening, has done excessive damage among many farms in that area. The storm appears to have originated at some point just west of Brandon, and to have swept right across the Province in a south-easterly direction, doing the greatest damage in the neighborhood of Austin and Sidney, and farther to the south in the vicinity of Manitou and Morden. At this latter point a strip of about two miles wide and twenty miles long was swept by a violent hailstorm, which levelled crops and made many of the fields practically worthless, from the farmers' point of view, for the present year. At Killarney, Boissevain and Souris there was no storm on Saturday, and the rain of Friday was the latest complaint in these parts. At Portage there was heavy rain, but no hail. At Morris there was much damage done by hail, but at Emerson rain was heavy, but no hail was experienced.

In Glenboro' district the wind was heavy enough to overturn buildings, and the hail flattened out crops in a narrow strip, causing damage which cannot be estimated until it is seen whether the crop will revive. The damage in Morden district, which was hardest hit, is conservatively estimated at $100,000. Many buildings were wrecked. At Virden the hail was heavy, and did great damage. Near Manitou a strip five miles long by three wide was practically hailed out, although some farmers report they are still hopeful that the flattened wheat will pick up and ripen yet. In Brandon district the damage was not very great, hail falling only in spots, but where it did appear it cut the crop to pieces. In Brandon city the hail stripped the leaves from the trees like a knife and destroyed garden stuff, but a mile out of town there was little if any trace of hail at all.

"WHITEY" LEWIS ARRESTED.

One of the Four Gunmen Charged With Killing Rosenthal.

A despatch from New York says: "Whitey" Lewis, one of the four gunmen charged with killing Herman Rosenthal in front of the Hotel Metropole early in the morning of July 16, was arrested on Thursday night in Fleischmanns, Delaware county, this State, just as he was about to get on a train. His arrest put in the hands of the police two of the gunmen whom "Billiard Ball" Jack Rose and "Bridgey" Webber say they hired at the instigation of Lieut. Charles A. Becker to murder Rosenthal. The other is "Dago Frank" Cierosici, who was captured several days ago. "Lefty Louie" and "Gyp the Blood," as Harry Horowitz is known, are still in hiding.

SQUADRON OF WARSHIPS.

Germany's Reply to Speeches of Winston Churchill.

A despatch from London says: The Express prints a rumor that the Krupps have for months past been making guns and munitions for a new German squadron of nine battleships, for which the armor plates have been ordered in England. It is understood that the squadron, which may be completed in a year, is Germany's reply to Winston Churchill's speeches at the time he took the portfolio of First Lord of the Admiralty. It may be noted that the Express is consistently and in an alarming manner anti-German.

A DOCTOR'S CANCER CURE.

Physician Produces 44 Patients Cured Without Operation.

A despatch from Berlin, Germany, says: Dr. Adolf Zeller has presented before a conference of physicians forty-four patients, whom he declared he had entirely cured of cancer without an operation. Ten of the original fifty-seven are still under treatment, and only three have died. The method of treatment has not yet been divulged.

TYPHOID FEVER EPIDEMIC

Ottawa's Regular Hospitals Filled and Emergency Ones Being Opened

A despatch from Ottawa says: The Ottawa typhoid epidemic continues to grow. As tests of the city water have shown no contamination for ten days or more, these are cases which apparently were long in developing. The city hospitals are full and an emergency hospital has been opened, but seven deaths have occurred to date. A proposal is now made that the city defray the hospital expenses of the typhoid patients. In the meantime the civic authorities are unable to decide on a course of action toward securing a permanent supply of pure water.

Dr. McCullough's ultimatum calling for a filtration plant on Lemieux Island and a tunnel under the river to the pumping station, has not been acted upon. The city has accepted part of the plan, but Dr. McCullough, backed up by his colleagues of the Provincial Board of Health, holds out for speedy action on the complete proposal. Conferences here and in Toronto have failed to relieve the situation and now Mayor Hopewell has gone to New York to look up an expert.

Ottawa, Aug. 1.—About 60 more cases of typhoid fever have been reported in the last 24 hours, the total number registered at the City Hall now being 575. There are 48 cases at the Emergency Hospital. By wards the fever patients are located as follows: Rideau 23, Ottawa 47, By 37, St. George 52, Central 48, Wellington 145, Dalhousie 120, Capital 61, Victoria 10, from outside city 12. It is expected that by to-night the official list will exceed 600.

MAKING SAFE INVESTMENTS

PROVIDING A SINKING FUND TO OFFSET DEPRECIATION.

The Way the Executors of One Estate are Taking no Chances with an Inheritance—When Holding Industrial Common Stocks a Sinking Fund is a Valuable Adjunct—Particularly so if Company is Engaged in Mining.

The articles contributed by "Investor" are for the sole purpose of guiding prospective investors, and, if possible, of saving them from losing money through placing it in "wild-cat" enterprises. The impartial and reliable character of the information may be relied upon. The writer of these articles and the publisher of this paper have no interests to serve in connection with this matter other than those of the reader.

(By "Investor.")

In a paper recently it was announced that the executors of a Canadian estate had decided that large holdings of a certain industrial stock would have to be sold because the beneficiary of the estate persisted in treating the entire dividend from the stock as income. The executors contended that as the stock was that of an industrial company the owner should set aside as a sinking fund part of the annual return on the stock.

Theoretically the executors were entirely correct in their attitude. Practically it would depend a great deal on the nature of the business in which the company was engaged. As a rule, however, their proposed action was admirable. Industrial companies depend for their success on a great many things which can be altered by politics, nature, finance and the whim of the populace. By politics through tariffs and taxes; if the tariff on the products of certain of our industrial companies was lowered or wiped out the shareholders would find their securities worth but little. The bondholders would alone use up most of the profits. Nature could affect industrial companies in many ways. Pulp and timber companies by fire could conceivably be wiped out. Floods might destroy mills, though this possibly is scarcely applicable to any but the smallest single plant industries. Finance could affect an industrial company through its bankers and through the market for its securities, and finally, on the whim of the people many industrial companies depend for their business. Patent breakfast foods are examples of public whims. Few of these retain their popularity for more than a few months or years.

When one owns an industrial common stock, or even the preferred of some of the companies engaged in a precarious business—I have in mind Amalgamated Asbestos, which, of course, went up before even a large sinking fund could save the shareholders—it is always well not to treat the whole amount of the dividends as income. Part should always be treated as capital and put by in a sort of sinking fund to reinvest as it grows large enough in this way—if the holding is large, two per cent. of each five received in dividends should be saved. Thus, from a ten per cent. dividend six per cent. could be spent and four per cent. put by to be treated as capital. If after ten or twelve years the company was still "in the ring" the sinking fund would have amounted to sufficient to offset a very substantial depreciation in value and would, through reinvesting the income from the sinking fund, amount to the par value of the investment in a few years more. Of course, where the sum invested is small it is scarcely worth while bothering about it in this way. It is wiser to sell the stock if one cannot afford to take any chances with one's capital.

In the case of mining stocks this is, of course, the rule. It is figured out that the life of the average mine is ten years. One should, therefore, put by at least ten per cent. of the cost of the mining stock every year, if the mine is a comparatively new one and a greater precaution if the mine is older, always provided it pays sufficient dividends. Of course, anyone who buys non-dividend paying mining stocks is a gambler and won't be interested in this sort of thing. But if you must buy mining stocks buy those paying dividends, and figure that ten years will exhaust the supply of ore. If at the end of ten years the mine is still working you are so much to the good. If, alas, it has shut down you lose, as you probably will.

TORONTO CORRESPONDENCE

INTERESTING BITS OF GOSSIP FROM THE QUEEN CITY.

The World's Walking Champion—Liberals in New Ontario—Yacht Races—The City's Many Parks.

Cynical critics of the Toronto street cars attach great significance to the fact that the sole lone world's championship Toronto secured at the Olympic Games was that for walking. But that single championship was very much worth while. Walking may not be considered much of a sport or even an exercise, but it is very much of both, as George Goulding, world's champion, walks. From the moment he strikes his pace every muscle in his body seems to be in motion—his hands, arms and body all seem to be helping his legs along. Not that he has the ungainly pump-handle jerkiness which some walkers think gives them speed, for his motions are every one graceful and he moves forward with a speed that is impressive, so impressive that it generally gets the nerve of any competitor. Goulding's style has been criticised, but the best authorities say it is a perfectly legitimate walk. He is probably the best the world has seen. And that's something for Toronto to be proud of. No wonder it gave him a warm welcome home.

SOME POLITICAL AMENITIES.

The idea of a leader of the Opposition taking his whole party on a trip through New Ontario was a novel one, and Mr. Rowell has been receiving a good deal of non-partisan praise for conceiving and carrying out his dog-day jaunt. To take 116 representative old Ontario citizens, even if they are vote-hunting, into New Ontario, cannot help but be good for both Old and New Ontario. The government, too, is getting credit for the spirit it showed in connection with the undertaking. A Temiskaming and Northern Ontario Railway private car was placed at the disposal of Mr. Rowell, and government officials at various points were instructed to look after the comforts of the party.

The growing interest in the hinterland is further evidenced by the Toronto Board of Trade's second expedition into it in force.

YACHTING HAS FEW CONVERTS.

With international yacht races at Toronto and at Chicago, the first week in August sees the climax in the season's interest in yachting. For some reason or other yachting does not increase in popularity here. There is doubtless much more money invested in pleasure boats in Toronto than ever before, but that is because every once in a while some millionaire takes it into his head to spend $100,000 on a steam yacht, and expensive motor boats also are increasing in number. But in the old-fashioned dinghys and other sailing craft where every man works for his passage, there is not much advance. Possibly accidents have held popularity in check. An amateur in a sailboat is about as awkward and as dangerous a combination as one ever sees, and the occasional fatal upset that happens always results in a lot of sailboats being put on the market, and makes a lot of other people decide to find sport some other way, despite the many natural advantages offered by Toronto's bay.

TORONTO SPREADS WESTWARD.

There are many people living who remember when it was quite an expedition to visit the Humber river, which flows into Lake Ontario some five miles west of the foot of Yonge street. In the old days excursion boats ran from the harbor to the Humber mouth. That was long before the "Banish the Bar" era, and if the ashes of some of the Humber buildings recently destroyed by fire could talk, they could tell of many gay goings-on, when the merrymakers from the then distant city arrived in force.

Now we seem to be within reasonable distance of the time when the whole valley of the Humber from its mouth up to Lambton Mills, two miles north, will be taken into the city limits, and at the same time will come in the intervening territory, which includes the settlement at Swansea and Runnymede. Mr. Home Smith, one of the most far-seeing and energetic of the younger citizens, has, with the backing of a syndicate, bought up nearly all the property on both banks of the river. The high ground on the banks will make attractive residential sites, commanding as it does views of the beautiful Humber Valley panorama, and of the lake. A year ago he offered to present the city with the bed of the river and the low-lying ground beside it. He attached certain conditions which the civic authorities balked at, but now the time seems ripe for Toronto's next big annexation scheme to go through. When it does they say that the author of the idea will stand a good chance of going into the millionaire class.

One of Mr. Home Smith's conditions was that the city would construct and maintain a driveway up the Humber Valley. This would connect with the sea-wall and boulevard, which some day, it is hoped, will decorate the city's waterfront from the Exhibition grounds westward, and would provide one of the longest and most picturesque city driveways to be found anywhere in the world.

Now, Acting Mayor Church has improved on the plan with the suggestion that at the mouth of the Humber a new city park should be established. The site, he says, should be as large as Queen's Park, which contains 37 acres. The location is excellent, and if the entire project is worked out Toronto will have reason to be proud.

TORONTO'S PARK SYSTEM.

This is the season when the city gets the full benefit of its breathing spaces. Queen's Park, which is probably the best known because of its accessibility and the location there of the Parliament buildings, is by no means the largest park in the city. That distinction falls to High Park in the west end with its 335 acres, chiefly in their state of natural beauty. This was the magnificent gift to Toronto of the late Mr. Howard, who lived on the property and whose quaint old residence, with monument near by, keeps green his memory. It is not altogether satisfactory to know that descendants of the city's benefactor are not far removed from poverty; for the property, if put on the market now, would yield a stupendous sum.

High Park is traversed by a network of roadways, and has been spoiled for many citizens in recent years by the advent of motor cars, which make the winding paths a nightmare to the mothers of impetuous children.

Then there is Exhibition Park, with its 234 acres, and Centre Island Park with 218 acres. Riverdale Park with its developing Zoo has become the most interesting spot in the city for children. It has 108 acres. Then there are literally dozens of smaller park areas. Alexander Park on Bathurst street, with its seven acres, was formerly the residence of Sir Casimir Gyowski, and is a delightful retreat. The Allan Gardens at the corner of Sherbourne and Carlton, with its statue of Robert Burns and plant houses, has 10 acres. Bellwood's Park in the west end, with 5 acres, is in itself a delightful bit of scenery. The Grange, Goldwin Smith's former residence, contributes 6 acres in the heart of the city. Then there are some 30 acres in the Rosedale ravines and a great number of other open spaces and gardens running from half an acre upwards. Altogether, the city has over 1,600 acres of park land. On the warm summer evenings they are well filled, particularly when the band plays.

CHILDREN LIKE RIVERDALE.

The Riverdale Park Zoo is the special delight of "Danny" Lamb, formerly an alderman, and now the ultra strict member of Toronto's Board of License Commissioners. By purchases, gifts and trades he has built up a collection that is already the children's delight. He has an elephant, six lions, a tiger, leopards, polar bears, Canadian, Japanese, Russian and Syrian bears, kangaroos, wolves, monkeys, llamas, raccoons, deer, birds of various kinds, including eagles, storks, cranes, parrots, peafowl, wild fowl; also several alligators and a large number of reptiles. Needless to say, they constitute a never-failing source of interest to the younger generation and to the grown ups too. Every afternoon and Sunday Riverdale is crowded with thousands of children and their guardians.

STRIKE BLOCKS TRAFFIC

Immediate Relief Needed to Unload Vessels at C.N.R. Docks at Port Arthur

A despatch from Port Arthur says: Immediate relief will have to be forthcoming in order to prevent a blockade of the traffic of coal as a result of the strike at the Canadian Northern docks. The railway and wholesale dealers have orders placed for the winter supply, the majority of which in previous years had been carried west before the fall rush of wheat. Without men to unload their cargoes the steamers Wainwright, Sheldon Parks and Charles Hobbard, three of the largest American type, are being held up. The Wainwright has about half its cargo unloaded and will have to remain until the strike is settled. The other two vessels will most likely have the destination of the cargoes changed to Fort William, Duluth or Superior.

The militiamen have been withdrawn, as it is thought the city and C.N.R. police can look after the situation. Chief of Police Angus McLellan and the two Italian strikers are resting somewhat easier, according to advices from St. Joseph's Hospital. It is now thought that the foreigners as well as the chief will recover, although the improvement in their condition is exceptionally slow.

SCORE OF FIREMEN HURT.

Nearly $250,000 Damage by Fire at Montreal.

A despatch from Montreal says: Fire which caused nearly a quarter of a million dollars' damage, and more or less serious injury to a score of firemen, broke out at the Montreal Abattoir Company's plant shortly after noon on Thursday. The building was a four-story structure, but owing to the intense heat, bad smoke, and a somewhat poor water supply, the firemen found it a difficult fire to fight. Over twenty firemen were overcome by smoke, and Fireman Martineau, who fell three stories, was taken to the hospital. The fire raged all afternoon, and at 4 o'clock over twenty had been pulled out of the building by comrades, overcome by the ammonia fumes from the cold-storage plant.

BRITISH CONTRACTORS WIN.

Awarded One of the Largest Bridge Contracts in Recent Years.

A despatch from London says: The largest individual bridge contract placed in Great Britain since the building of the Forth Bridge has just been secured by British engineers in severe competition with Belgian, German and American structural firms. The contract comprises the whole of the steel work required for the new railway bridge which will be built to carry the Eastern Bengal State Railway over the Lower Ganges. The bridge will consist of fifteen main spans, weighing 1,300 tons each, and will involve an expenditure of about £1,125,000.

BEDBUGS FIVE CENTS EACH.

Experimenters Use Them to Fight Insects in Orchard.

A despatch from Washington says: A man has been found who not only wants bedbugs, but is willing to pay five cents each for them if they are delivered alive. G. M. Zimmer, superintendent of the United States Agricultural Experiment Station at Vienna, Va., has hung out a sign reading:—"Will pay five cents for each bedbug up to $5 worth." Mr. Zimmer complains that he has been unable to buy all the bedbugs he desires. He puts them at work exterminating another insect which is destroying an orchard on the Experimental Farm.

SHOT DOWN IN COLD BLOOD.

Brakesman Dying While Gunman Eludes Police.

A despatch from Calgary, Alberta, says: Brakesman Roy Blair is dying in Banff Hospital. A gunman who late Wednesday night shot him as he stood in the doorway of a refrigerator car at Morley is at large, and has so far eluded the posse of police and Indians that is scouring the foothills.

CUSTOMS RECEIPTS GROW.

July Returns Are the Largest Ever Collected.

A despatch from Ottawa says: Evidence of the great prosperity of the Canadian people is found in the Customs receipts for the Dominion during the month of July which totalled $19,715,708. Not only is this the largest amount ever collected during any month, but the increase over the corresponding month last year, viz., $3,018,223, is also a record one. With the rapidly increasing returns the revenue of the Dominion from Customs alone will be over $100,000,000 this fiscal year, as the returns show that for the four months of the present fiscal year ending to-day $36,250,028 were collected, an increase over the corresponding four months last year of $10,322,000.

PEACE CELEBRATION.

United States Senate Favors the Project.

A despatch from Washington says: The movement to celebrate the one hundredth anniversary of the treaty of Ghent was advanced on Wednesday by the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, which agreed to favorably report Senator Root's bill to authorize the President to appoint a Peace Centennial Commission of seven to confer with Commissions of Great Britain and Canada, and report to Congress a plan for an appropriate celebration. No salaries go with the jobs, but $100,000 would be appropriated for expenses.

SUCCESSION DUTIES FALL.

Receipts for July Better Than Half of Last Year.

A despatch from Toronto says: Succession duties received by the Provincial Treasurer for the month of July amounted to $83,452. For the same month last year the duties amounted to $154,382. So far this year the succession duties are $200,000 behind last year's figures. For the nine months of the fiscal year ended July 31, $621,206 was collected through this department, while last year's figures amounted to $847,251 for the same period.

TONIC TREATMENT FOR THE STOMACH

The Modern Method Most Successful in Treating Indigestion

The old-fashioned methods of treating indigestion and stomach troubles are being discarded. The trouble with the old-fashioned methods was that when the treatment was stopped the trouble returned in an aggravated form.

The modern method of curing indigestion and other stomach troubles is to tone up the stomach to do its normal work. Every step towards recovery is a step gained not to be lost again. The recovery of the appetite, the disappearance of pain, the absence of gas—all are steps on the road to health that those who have tried the tonic treatment remember distinctly. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are a tonic medicine, every constituent of which is helpful in building up the digestive organs, and is therefore the very best remedy for chronic cases of stomach trouble. The success of the treatment is proved by thousands of cases like the following: Mr. W. W. Swain, Grand Valley, Ont., says:—"For several years my mother had stomach trouble from which she got no relief whatever until she began the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. She was treated at different times by three doctors, but their efforts did not avail. Then she was advised to try an electric belt, but it proved worthless. She suffered much during this time and food became distasteful. The trouble also affected her nerves and her general health was on the verge of a breakdown. One day a friend who was in asked her to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. Without very much hope that the Pills would prove successful when other medicines had failed, we nevertheless got her a supply. In a few weeks we could see a decided change, and got six more boxes. By the time these were used mother was almost well, and she kept on taking the Pills for a short time longer and was completely cured. She is now a healthy and strong woman and is never bothered with her stomach in any way. I hope this statement will bring relief to other sufferers."

Why experiment with medicines of doubtful value, when you have such positive evidence of the benefit following the use of Dr. William's Pink Pills? Sold by all medicine dealers or by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

TOO MANY PRELIMINARIES.

"Can't you get any work?" asked a woman of the tramp who had applied at the back door for food.

"Yes, ma'am," he replied. "I was offered a steady job by the man who lives down the road in that big white house."

"That's Mr. Oatseed. What was the work?"

"He wanted me to get up at 4 in the morning, milk 17 cows, feed, water and rub down four horses, clean the stables, and then chop wood until it was time to begin the day's work."

"What did he want to pay?"

"I dunno, ma'am. I didn't stop to ask."

Minard's Liniment Cures Distemper.

"Do you mean to say that you flirted with your wife all evening at the masked ball and didn't know her?" "That's right! But she was so deuced agreeable—how was I to know her?"

Pimples So Bad He Was Ashamed

Tried Everything but Did It No Good. One Box of Cuticura Ointment Took Pimples Away.

'About seven years ago pimples broke out all over my face and neck. When they would first come out they would be big and red, then after a while they would turn white, and matter would come out. Sometimes they would itch so I could hardly sleep. I was ashamed to go down street, my face looked so bad. I went to several doctors and got medicine, which did me no good, and bought ointment, salves and patent medicines, but none of them would cure my face and neck. A friend advised me to try Cuticura Ointment. I got one box, and it took the pimples away before I had it all used up. I can say it is a wonderful remedy. Any sufferer who has pimples should use Cuticura Ointment if they want a sure cure. I never had any soap equal to Cuticura Soap." (Signed) Aylmer Mathers, Parkhill, Ont., Dec. 24, 1910.

Sores All Over Baby's Body

"When my baby boy was six months old, his body was completely covered with large sores that seemed to itch and burn, and cause terrible suffering. The eruption began in pimples which would open and run, making large sores. His hair came out and finger nails fell off, and the sores were over the entire body, causing little or no sleep for baby or myself. Great scabs would come off when I removed his shirt. We tried a great many remedies but nothing would help him, till a friend induced me to try Cuticura Soap and Ointment. I used the Cuticura Soap and Ointment but a short time before I could see that he was improving, and in six weeks' time he was entirely cured. He had suffered about six weeks before we tried the Cuticura Soap and Ointment, although we had tried several other things and doctors too. I think the Cuticura Remedies will do all that is claimed for them, and a great deal more." (Signed) Mrs. Noble Tubman, Dodson, Mont., Jan 26, 1911.

Cuticura Soap and Cuticura Ointment sold by druggists and dealers everywhere. Send to Potter Drug & Chem. Corp., 36 Columbus Ave., Boston, U. S. A., for a liberal free sample of each, with 32-p. booklet.

A FOUNTAIN OF PUNCH.

Provided by a British Officer for Entertainment of Guests.

Some of the papers have recently devoted attention to the origin of punch, that famous seventeenth century drink which has long lost its popularity in England, though it still survives to some extent on the Continent.

Owing to its intimate connection with rum one might easily have imagined that punch originated in the West Indies. In fact, however, it actually came from the East Indies and the name is said to be derived from the Sanskrit "Pansacha," five, on account of its five ingredients — arrak (afterward rum), tea, sugar, lemon and hot water.

The most magnificent bowl of punch the world has ever seen was probably that provided by the Right Hon. Edward Russell, who, when commanding his Majesty's forces in the Mediterranean in 1691, entertained 6,000 guests at Alicante, where a large marble fountain was filled with the liquor, the ingredients being: Four hogsheads of brandy, a pipe of Malaga wine, 2,500 lemons, twenty gallons of lime juice, eight hogsheads of water, five pounds of grated nutmegs in weight, 300 toasted biscuits and thirteen hundred weight of fine white sugar.

MILES OF MYSTERY.

Despite the wonderful advance of exploration in various parts of the world, the Royal Geographical Society of London have recently declared that no fewer than 20,000,000 square miles of the earth yet remains unexplored. Africa has the largest unexplored area, nearly 6,500,000 square miles; while North America contains no fewer than 1,500,000 square miles of virgin territory. The largest continuous stretch of unexplored country is in Liberia, Africa. The tract consists of about 2,000 miles, all of which is within 200 miles of the sea. Regions adjoining the Congo, the basin of the Upper Nile, parts of Morocco, Abyssinia, Somaliland, have yet to be surveyed, mapped out, and, if suitable, commercially exploited.

UNNOTICED.

"Did you kiss the bride?"

"Yes."

"And congratulate her mother and father upon the happy event?"

"Yes, indeed. I had a nice little chat with both of them."

"And I presume you met all the out of town relatives?"

"I think I did. In fact I'm almost sure I did. Some of them seemed to be very entertaining people."

"And I suppose, of course, that you gave the groom your best wishes"

"The groom? No. I didn't. Now you speak of it, I don't remember seeing him there at all."

FAMILY RUNT.

Kansas Man Says Coffee Made Him That.

"Coffee has been used in our family of eleven—father, mother, five sons and four daughters—for thirty years. I am the eldest of the boys and have always been considered the runt of the family and a coffee toper.

"I continued to drink it for years until I grew to be a man, and then I found I had stomach trouble, nervous headaches, poor circulation, was unable to do a full day's work, took medicine for this, that, and the other thing, without the least benefit. In fact I only weighed 116 when I was 28.

"Then I changed from coffee to Postum, being the first one in our family to do so. I noticed, as did the rest of the family, that I was surely gaining strength and flesh. Shortly after I was visiting my cousin, who said, 'You look so much better—you're getting fat.'

"At breakfast his wife passed me a cup of coffee, as she knew I was always such a coffee drinker, but I said, 'No, thank you.'

"'What!' said my cousin, 'you quit coffee? What do you drink?'

"'Postum,' I said, 'or water, and I am well.' They did not know what Postum was, but my cousin had stomach trouble and could not sleep at night from drinking coffee three times a day. He was glad to learn about Postum but said he never knew coffee hurt anyone." (Tea is just as injurious as coffee because it contains caffeine, the same drug found in coffee.)

"After understanding my condition and how I got well he knew what to do for himself. He discovered that coffee was the cause of his trouble as he never used tobacco or anything else of the kind. You should see the change in him now. We both believe that if persons who suffer from coffee drinking would stop and use Postum they could build back to health and happiness. Name given by Canadian Postum Co., Windsor, Ont.

TWO FAMOUS BANDS.

Are Coming from England for the Canadian National Exhibition.

Two famous bands from England will make the musical attractions at the Canadian National Exhibition this year something long to be remembered. The Scots Guards Band from Buckingham Palace, the third of this famous brigade of bands brought across the ocean by the Exhibition people, will alternate on the main band stand with the Besses O' Th' Barn, which all lovers of band music recognize as Britain's best brass band. Two such musical attractions have never before been brought together on the continent.

OFTEN THE CASE.

"Where do all the people who have automobiles get the money that is necessary to afford them?"

"Many of them don't."

Cucumbers and melons are "forbidden fruit" to many persons so constituted that the least indulgence is followed by attacks of cholera, dysentery, griping, etc. These persons are not aware that they can indulge to their heart's content if they have on hand a bottle of Dr. J. D. Kellogg's Dysentery Cordial, a medicine that will give immediate relief, and is a sure cure for all summer complaints.

The Pill That Brings Relief.—When, after one has partaken of a meal he is oppressed by feelings of fulness and pains in the stomach, he suffers from dyspepsia, which will persist if it be not dealt with. Parmelee's Vegetable Pills are the very best medicine that can be taken to bring relief. These pills are specially compounded to deal with dyspepsia, and their sterling qualities in this respect can be vouched for by legions of users.

Beet sugar to a total of fourteen million tons is produced every year.

A Powerful Medicine.—The healing properties in six essential oils are concentrated in every bottle of Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil, forming one of the most beneficial liniments ever offered to the use of man. Thousands can testify as to its power in allaying pain, and many thousands more can certify that they owe their health to it. Its wonderful power is not expressed by its cheapness.

ARRESTED.

"Uncle, I didn't know doctors were policemen."

"Neither did I, dearie. Why do you think they are?"

"Because when I was sick the doctor said he was goin' to arrest the fever, and I'm sure he did, because it never came back!"

KING WHO WOULD BE LOVED.

An eccentric monarch was Frederick the Great, whom his subjects called "Old Fritz." One day, in passing along the streets of Berlin, he noticed that a man left the sidewalk as he approached and crossed over to the other side of the street. The king called him back, and asked why he had done so.

The poor fellow began to tremble, and stammered, "Because—you are—the king, and I—am afraid of you."

"Afraid of me!" shouted the monarch. "I don't want my subjects to be afraid of me, but to love me. I will teach you a lesson!" and he began to beat the man with his cane, crying out:

"Next time when you meet me, don't cross the street, but greet me with eyes that betoken love! Do you understand?"

And the unlucky culprit, cringing beneath the vigorous blows of the royal walking-stick, promised that he would not fear but love the king.

"My dear," said Mr. Clarkson, "I don't want you to think I have any desire to criticise you for the way you manage, but, really, we must try to live within our income." "Within our income! Goodness! And be regarded by everybody in our set as eccentric!"

HAVE YOU A BAD SORE?

If so, remember these facts—Zam-Buk is by far the most widely used balm in Canada! Why has it become so popular? Because it heals sores, cures skin diseases, and does what is claimed for it. Why not let it heal your sore?

Remember that Zam-Buk is at the same time healing, soothing, and antiseptic. Kills poison instantly, and all harmful germs. It is suitable alike for recent injuries and diseases, and for chronic sores, ulcers, etc. Test how different and superior Zam-Buk really is. All druggists and stores at 50c. box. Use also Zam-Buk Soap. Relieves sunburn and prevents freckles. Best for baby's bath. 25c. tablet.

"Where can I get a drink in this town?" asked a travelling man who landed at a little town in the oil region of Oklahoma of the 'bus driver. "See that millinery shop over there?" asked the driver, pointing to a building near the depot. "You don't mean to say they sell whiskey in a millinery store?" exclaimed the drummer. "No, I mean that's the only place here they don't sell it," said the 'bus man.

Gentlemen,—In June, 98, I had my hand and wrist bitten and badly mangled by a vicious horse. I suffered greatly for several days and the tooth cuts refused to heal until your agent gave me a bottle of MINARD'S LINIMENT, which I began using. The effect was magical; in five hours the pain had ceased and in two weeks the wounds had completely healed and my hand and arm were as well as ever.

A little lad was desperately ill, but refused to take the medicine the doctor prescribed. His mother finally gave up. "Oh, my boy will die, my boy will die," she sobbed. Presently a voice piped up from the bed. "Don't cry, mother. Father'll be home soon and he'll make me take it."

TO DRY UMBRELLAS.

Should Be Opened So That the Air Can Get At It.

At this time of year, when there is more or less rain, it pays to be careful of your umbrella. A wet umbrella should never be rolled up, nor even placed in an umbrella jar point downward, because that allows all the moisture to run down to the point, where it cannot get any fresh air and it will soon rust the ribs and rot the cloth.

Many persons will stand a wet umbrella in a sink or wash basin, which would not be so bad if they would only place it point up so that the air could get to the part to which the water drains. The right thing to do is to open or hang it somewhere that the drippings will not do any damage. This lets the air get to every part of it and it will soon be dry again.

A good umbrella, properly taken care of, dried open every time it is used, will last for 10 or 15 years; but one that is put away wet or point down in a hall stand jar will not last more than a season.

Out of a total number of 22,165 candidates who tried the entrance examination into the High Schools this year in the province 13,693 passed, or about 61.8 per cent. This is somewhat higher than last year's figures, when 13,027 passed out of 22,198 who tried —about 58.6 per cent. These figures given out by the department of Education are fairly complete, only a very few cases being withheld for consideration.

In 1911 and former years the Department of Education paid 40 per cent. of rural school salaries of Principals over $300 and up to $600, the maximum being $120; and for assistants 40 per cent. of salary from $200 up to $600, giving a maximum of $1.60. For 1912 the 40 per cent. will be paid on salary of Principals over $350 up to $600, and for assistants over $250 up to $600, making the maximums $100 and $140, respectively, being a reduction of $20 for every teacher in salary grant.

A valuable cow belonging to Mr. Sid. Sanders, while pasturing on the old mill property, Huron street, fell into an old well on Monday. Had it not been discovered when it was it could not have lived much longer, as it was cramped in a very uncomfortable position in several feet of water. A number of men, however, were called and after considerable difficulty succeeded in getting the animal out in an almost exhausted condition.

KIPPEN—Another of the early settlers of this section was called home in the person of Mrs. J. Workman, who died at the home of her son-in-law, Mr. Wm. Butt of the second concession of Tuckersmith. For some time deceased has been an invalid and for a considerable time almost helpless.

These with the Bawden trophy will make the Exeter tournament one of the best in Ontario.

BADLY BITTEN.—A Clandeboye correspondent says:—Mr. Url Cunningham of Camrose, Alta., who has been visiting relatives here, was severely bitten by a dog Friday last. Mr. Cunningham had been to the post-office for mail and was returning to his mother's home, when he was attacked by the dog and severely bitten. He was assisted to his mother's home and Dr. Orme was summoned, who dressed the wounds. The physician is of the opinion that there may be a possibility of the dog being mad, and hydrophobia may set in. The dog will be tied up and a close watch kept on it for several days to ascertain if it shows any symptoms of being mad.

A Regular Storm Period embraces the 11th to the 16th, central on the 13th. The Moon is new and in perigee on the 12th, and on the celestial equator on the 15th. The center of the Venus period is on the 13th, co-incident with the center of this Vulcan period. The autumnal equinox of the Earth is also present at this time. Look for marked fall of the barometer in western parts by the 12th, and during the 13th, 14th, 15th, and 16th, violent storms of rain, wind and thunder, with destructive hail northward will pass eastwardly across the country. West India storms, hurricanes and tidal waves very probable in the gulf and south coast regions. An unseasonable change to cooler, with frosts, possibly in the north, will come with the rising barometer behind these storms. A seismic period—one that will be heard from—involves the 9th to 15th, central on the 12th. Watch and see.

NO ONE STRONGER THAN HIS STOMACH.

The celebrated Dr. Abernethy of London was firmly of the opinion that disorders of the stomach were the most prolific source of human ailments in general. A recent medical writer says: "every feeling, emotion and affection reports at the stomach (through the system of nerves) and the stomach is affected accordingly. It is the vital center of the body * * * *." He continues, "so we may be said to live (through) the stomach." He goes on to show that the stomach is the vital center of the body. For weak stomachs and the consequent indigestion or dyspepsia, and the multitude of various diseases which result therefrom, no medicine can be better suited as a curative agent than

Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery.

Mrs. Murkem.

"Several months ago I suffered from a severe pain right under the breast-bone," writes Mrs. G. M. Murkem, of Corona, Calif. "Had suffered from it, off and on, for several years. I also suffered from heart-burn, did not know what was the matter with me. I tried several medicines but they did me no good. Finally, I was told it was my liver. I did not dare to eat as it made me worse. Whenever I swallowed anything it seemed that I would faint—it hurt so. I grew very thin and weak from not eating. Was told to take Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. I took five bottles of it, and could feel myself getting better from the first dose. I could eat a little without pain and grew strong fast. To-day I am strong and well and can do a big day's work with ease. Can eat everything and have put on flesh wonderfully. I will say to all sufferers write to Dr. Pierce. He has my undying gratitude."

Do not forget the Thursday half-holiday, commencing in July.

Mrs. Thos. Prior has been ill during the past week.

Better take your holidays when you can get them. But take them.

Many a man who is afraid to take a chance loses his money on a sure thing.

Rev. Yelland occupied the Main Street pulpit Sunday, the pastor being on his holidays.

About the toughest thing that can happen to a man is to go contrary to his wife's wishes and then fail.

Mr. S. G. Bawden is on the sick list at present, but able to move about, and with a prospect of an early recovery.

Some people are such firm believers in luck that they would rather look for a four-leafed clover than hustle for a job.

The Exeter Junior baseball team drove to Dashwood Tuesday and played a game of ball, the score being 8-5 in favor of Exeter.

Dr. Johnston of Montreal, who is camping at the Bend, preached Sunday morning in Caven Presbyterian church. In the evening the service was dispensed with.

The exceedingly wet weather of the past few weeks has been very detrimental to the harvesting of the various grains, and a spell of dry weather is now earnestly wished for by the farmers.

Union services will be held in the Main Street and Presbyterian churches on Sunday next, Main Street in the morning and the Presbyterian church in the evening, Rev. Powell preaching at both services.

Up to date 1,139 cheques for the Fenian Raid grant of $100 have been sent out by the finance department of the Dominion. Careful inquiry is being conducted into each claim and the process is necessarily slow.

The Exeter Bowling Tournament commences next Wednesday, and the bowlers are busy getting everything in shape for the entertainment of a large number of rinks. The greens are in good condition, and handsome prizes have been ordered through various merchants and will be on exhibition in A. Marchand's window the latter part of the week. Besides the prizes two handsome trophies will be played for—the S. G Bawden trophy which was won by Langford's rink of London last year, and the South Huron Trophy, donated by J. J. Merner and H. Elber, the members in the Dominion and Provincial Parliaments, respectively.

BUGGY SMASHED.—A horse belonging to Mr. Silas Stanlake, Jr., of Stephen, ran away from Mr. L. Russell's blacksmith shop on Saturday last and before it was captured it had completely wrecked the buggy. The horse, however, escaped injury.

RUNAWAY.—A horse belonging to Mr. Henry Jones, London Road south, driven by his two sons, and which had been left standing in the James street Methodist church shed on Tuesday night caused considerable excitement by breaking the bridle and running away. On leaving the shed it proceeded down the street at a lively pace, but had not gone far when it ran amuck of Mr. John Gill's fence, damaging it considerably. It then proceeded towards home with unabated fury still attached to the rig, but when about to turn in at the home gate the rig swung off the small bridge across the deep ditch, with the result that it was smashed to atoms. The loss is considerable as it was a brand new buggy. Luckily the horse escaped uninjured.

INJURED IN RAILWAY ACCIDENT—Mr. Walter Westcott received word last week from the West that his brother, Mr. John T. Westcott and wife of Hamilton, formerly of Exeter, who are on a visit with friends and relatives there, were last week injured in a railway accident. Later particulars state that both are doing as well as can be expected. After the accident they were taken to Saskatoon, and they have now left the hotel where they were taken to stay with relatives. Mrs. Westcott is still in bed with her back badly injured. Mr. Westcott was thrown through the car window, sustaining several bruises and cuts about the face and body. All the coaches left the track and the ties were torn to pieces. Twelve others in the same car were injured in the wreck. Had Mr. Westcott's suit case not gone through the car window ahead of him he would undoubtedly have been injured much worse. The C. P. R. doctor is still looking after them.

BASEBALL—Dashwood juniors came out on Thursday afternoon and met defeat at the hands of the Exeter juniors, by a score 9-13. The same evening Lucan seniors came up and met their Waterloo with the locals, 11—0. Following is the line-up and scores,—

SEAFORTH BOY SHOT

Tommy Blues, son of Thos. S. Blues, of Seaforth was shot and almost instantly killed at the butts Monday. During rifle practice of the cadets young Blues, who had taken the place of the regular scorer, had registered an outer for one of the cadets, who took considerable longer with his next shot and it is thought Blues took the delay as evidence of doubt of the previous shot, and, pulling up the danger signal stepped immediately in front of the target just as his comrade fired. Medical aid was immediately summoned but death had been almost instantaneous, the bullet entering the right side under the collar bone and coming out the back at the left side. Young Blues was thirteen years old and a favorite.

Frithiof breathed more freely when the Horners had left Rowan Tree House, and indeed every one seemed to feel that a weight had been removed, and a delightful sense of ease took possession of all.

"Cousin Georgina will wear ospreys to the bitter end, I prophesy," said Roy. "You'll never convince her that anything she likes is really hard on others."

"Of course, many people have worn them before they knew of the cruelty," said Cecil, "but afterward I can't think how they can."

"You see, people as a rule don't really care about pain at a distance," said Frithiof. "Torture thousands of these herons and egrets by a lingering death, and though people know it is so they won't care; but take one person within hearing of their cries, and that person will wonder how any human being can be such a barbarian as to wear these so-called ospreys."

"I suppose it is that we are so very slow to realize pain that we don't actually see."

"People don't really want to stop pain till it makes them personally uncomfortable," replied Frithiof.

"That sounds horribly selfish."

"Most things come round to selfishness when you trace them out."

"I'm going to make tea, Roy," said Mrs. Boniface, laying down her netting, "and you had better show Herr Falck his room. I hope you'll often come and spend Sunday with us," she added, with a kindly glance at the Norwegian.

In the evening they had music. Roy and Cecil both sung well; their voices were not at all out of the common, but no pains had been spared on their training, and Frithiof liked the comfortable informal way in which they sung one thing after another, treating him entirely as one of the family.

"And now it is your turn," said Cecil, after awhile. "Father, where is that Amati that somebody sent you on approval. Perhaps Herr Falck would try it."

"Oh, do you play the violin?" said Mr. Boniface; "that is capital. You'll find it in my study cupboard, Cecil; stay, here's the key."

Frithiof protested that he was utterly out of practice, that it was weeks since he had touched his violin, which had been left behind in Norway; but when he actually saw the Amati he couldn't resist it, and it ended in his playing to Cecil's accompaniment for the rest of the evening.

To Cecil the hours seemed to fly, and Mrs. Boniface, after a preliminary round of tidying up the room, came and stood by her, watching her bright face with motherly contentment.

"Prayer-time, darling," she said, as the sonata came to an end; "and since it's Saturday night we mustn't be late."

"Ten o'clock already?" she exclaimed; "I had no idea it was so late! What hymn will you have, father?"

"The Evening Hymn," said Mr. Boniface; and Frithiof wondering a little what was going to happen, obediently took the place asigned him, saw with some astonishment that four white-capped maid-servants had come into the drawing-room and were sitting near the piano, and that Mr. Boniface was turning over the leaves of a big Bible.

"I will lift up mine eyes unto the hills from whence cometh my help," read Mr. Boniface. And as he went on, the beautiful old poem with its tender reassuring cadences somehow touched Frithiof, so that when they stood up to sing "Glory to Thee, my God, this night," he did not cavil at each line as he would have done a little while before, but stood listening reverently, conscious of a vague desire for something in which he felt himself to be lacking.

"I wish I could be like these people," he thought to himself, kneeling for the first time for years.

And though he did not hear a word of the prayer, and could not honestly have joined in it if he had heard, his mind was full of a longing which he could not explain.

He owned as much to Cecil the next day when, after breakfast, they chanced to be alone together for a few minutes.

"Have you found any Norwegian service in London, or will you come with us?" she asked, unconsciously.

"Oh," he replied, "I gave up that sort of thing long ago, and while you are out I will get on with some translation I have in hand."

"I beg your pardon," she said, coloring crimson, "I had no idea, or I should not have asked."

But there was not the faintest shade of annoyance in Frithiof's face.

"The services bored me so," he explained.

"Oh," said Cecil, smiling as she recognized the boyishness of his remark; "I suppose every one goes through a stage of being bored. Roy used to hate Sunday when he was little; he used to have a Sunday pain which came on quite regularly when we were starting to chapel, so that he could stay at home."

"I know you will all think me a shocking sinner to stay at home translating this book," said Frithiof.

"No, we sha'n't," said Cecil, quietly. "If you thought it was right to go to church of course you would go. You look at things differently."

She found him pens and ink, tore a soiled sheet off the blotting-pad, drew up the blind so as to let in just enough sunshine, and then left him to his translating.

"What a strange girl she is," he thought to himself. "As frank and outspoken as a boy, and yet with all sorts of little tender touches about her. Sigrid would like her; they did take to one another at Balholm, I remember."

Then, with a bitter recollection of one who had eclipsed all others during that happy week on the Sogne Fjord, the hard look came back to his face, and taking up his pen he began to work doggedly at Herr Sivertsen's manuscript.

The next morning his new life began, he turned his back on the past, and deliberately made his downward step on the social ladder, which nevertheless meant an upward step on the ladder of honesty and success. Mr. Horner, who was the sort of man who would have patronized an archangel for the sake of showing off his own superior affability, unluckily chanced to be in the shop a good deal during that first week, and the new hand received a large share of his notice. Frithiof's native courtesy bore him up through a good deal, but at last his pride got the better of him, and he made it is perfectly apparent to the bumptuous little man that he desired to have as little to do with him as possible, that James Horner's bland patronage speedily changed to active dislike.

"What induced you to choose that Falck in Smith's place?" he said to Mr. Boniface, in a grumbling tone.

"He is a friend of Roy's," was the reply. "What is it that you dislike about him? He seems to me likely to prove very efficient."

"Oh, yes; he has his wits about him, perhaps rather too much so, but I can't stand the ridiculous airs the fellow gives himself. Order him to do anything, and he'll do it as haughtily as though he were master and I servant; and as for treating him in a friendly way it's impossible, he's as stand-offish as if he were a Croesus instead of a poor beggar without a penny to bless himself with."

"He is a very reserved fellow," said Mr. Boniface; "and you must remember that this work is probably distasteful to him. You see he has been accustomed to a very different position."

"Why, his father was nothing but a fish merchant who went bankrupt."

"But out in Norway merchants rank much more highly than with us. Besides, the Falcks are of a very old family."

"Well, really I never expected to hear such a Radical as you speak up for old family and all that nonsense," said James Horner. "But I see you are determined to befriend this fellow, so it's no good my saying anything against it. I hope you may find him all you expect. For my part I consider him a most unpromising young man; there's an aggressiveness about his face and bearing that I don't like at all. A dangerous headstrong sort of character, and not in the least fit for the position you have given him."

With which sweeping condemnation Mr. Horner left the room, and Roy, who had kept a politic silence throughout the scene, threw down his pen and went into a subdued fit of laughter.

"You should see them together, father, it's as good as a play," he exclaimed. "Falck puts on his grand air and is crushingly polite the moment Cousin James puts in an appearance, and that nettles him and he becomes more and more vulgar and fussy, and so they go poking each other up worse and worse every minute."

"It's very foolish of Falck," said Mr. Boniface. "If he means to get on in life, he will have to learn the art of rising above such paltry annoyances as airs of patronage and manners that jar on him."

Meanwhile, down below in the shop, Frithiof had forgotten his last encounter with James Horner, and as he set things in order for the Saturday afternoon closing, his thoughts were far away. The instant two o'clock sounded the hour of his release, he snatched up his hat and hurried away; his dreams of the past had taken so strong a hold upon him that he felt he must try for at least one more sight of the face that ha unted him so persistently.

Feeling as though some power outside himself were drawing him onward, he followed with scarcely a thought of the actual way, until he found himself within sight of the Lancaster Gate House. A striped red and white awning had been erected over the steps, he caught sight of it through the trees, and his heart seemed to stand still. Hastily crossing the wide road leading to the church, he gained a better view of the pavement in front of Mr. Morgan's house; dirty little street children with eager faces were clustered about the railings, and nurse-maids with perambulators flanked the red felt which made a path-way to the carriage standing before the door. He turned sick and giddy.

"Fine doings there, sir," remarked the crossing-sweeper. "They say the bride's an heiress and a beauty too. Well! well! it's an unequal world!"

"Got a copper about you, sir?" he asked.

Frithiof, just because the old man made that remark about an unequal world, dropped a sixpence into the outstretched palm.

"God bless you, sir!" said the crossing-sweeper.

Like one in a nightmare, he reached the church door. The organ was crashing out a jubilant march; there was a sort of subdued hum of eager anticipation from the crowd of spectators.

"Are you a friend of the bride, sir?" asked an official.

"No," he said, icily.

"Then the side aisle, if you plase, sir. The middle aisle is reserved for friends only."

He quietly took the place assigned him and waited. It did not seem real to him, the crowded church, the whispering people; all that seemed real was the horrible sense of expectation.

An icy numbness crept over him, a most appalling feeling of isolation. "This is like dying," he thought to himself. And then, because the congregation stood up, he too dragged himself to his feet. The march had changed to a hymn. White-robed choristers walked slowly up the middle aisle; their words reached him distinctly—

"Still in the pure espousal,
Of Christian man and maid."

Then suddenly he caught sight of the face which had more than once been pressed to his, of the eyes which had lured him on so cruelly. It was only for a moment. She passed by with her attendant bridemaids, and black darkness seemed to fall upon him, though he stood there outwardly calm, and just like an indifferent spectator.

Yet through all the whispering and the subdued noise of the great congregation he could hear Blanche's clear voice. "I will always trust you," she had said to him on Munkeggen. Now he heard her answer "I will" to another question.

After that, prayers and hymns seemed all mixed up in a wild confusion. Now and then, between the heads of the crowd, he caught a vision of a slim, white-robed figure, and presently Mendelssohn's "Wedding March" was struck up, and he knew that she would pass down the aisle once more. Would her face be turned in his direction? Yes; for a little child scattered flowers before her, and she glanced round at it with a happy, satisfied smile. As for Frithiof, he just stood there passively, and no one watching him could have known of the fierce anguish that wrung his heart.

A GENEROUS FOE.

A very unusual kind of sportsmanship was shown by the Maori chief who was taken prisoner by the British after a hot engagement. His captors were talking to the man, and one of them asked him why he had not captured the British provision and ammunition trains a few days before, when he had the chance.

The chief gave a loud, scornful laugh.

"You fool!" he cried. "If we had stolen your food and powder, how could you have fought us?"

EVERY DAY THE SUN SHINES.

Heat and Light and Power for Nothing.

Has the sunshine really been harnessed at last? Can its life-giving properties definitely be utilized for supplying motor power. It would really appear as though they could. At any rate, a Frenchman, M. Charles Winter, has just achieved a most remarkable result.

By means of a special battery and a particular chemical solution, this modern wizard has undoubtedly succeeded in storing electricity which gives a small current. The battery consists of two thin platinum plates, one of which dips into a solution of perchloride of iron, the other being in contact with a mercury salt. When placed in the sunlight a chemical change takes place in the contents of the battery and charges it with electricity!

When the current is used up it leaves the battery in its original condition again, and it is ready for the life-giving sunshine once more.

It is difficult to realize at once what a tremendous change even in domestic economy alone such a sunshine storage-battery would bring about.

First and foremost every house would surely have its own electric light. And most houses would probably be electrically heated as well, for heating would then cost much less than coal. And cooking would almost certainly be accomplished by electricity.

A thrifty housewife would be able to put out her storage batteries in the daytime, and the house would practically run itself in the evening.

If there was any doubt about the supply running a bit short towards morning, the batteries could be put out at three o'clock on a summer's morning and you could have your cup of tea at seven o'clock, your warm bath, and your breakfast later without the slightest difficulty, and all at a comparatively small cost. The only trouble would be foggy weather.

As regards the cost, it would mean practically only the initial one of purchasing the batteries. For practical and commercial purposes it would be impossible to use platinum for everyday use owing to its expense. But it is the idea and the definite achievement which count.

Now that the storage of electricity by sunlight has actually been achieved there is nothing to stop the further development. A commencement in a revolutionary discovery has been made.

With a battery of 500 large cells placed on the roof during the day, it would be possible to store enough electricity, through the agency of sunlight, to keep six lamps going at night. This has already been proved.

There is no reason at all, when a substitute for platinum has been found, why the practical storage of electricity by sunlight should not be developed at a rapid rate.

If the progress were maintained at the same rate as in other discoveries, it would not be long before sunshine stored the batteries of motor cars, heated and lighted houses and streets, and generally kept the modern world going.

It would not be absolutely necessary that there should be sunshine, either, the whole time. Ordinary daylight will achieve the same result.

MOST LUXURIOUS TRAIN.

The Russian Royal special train is the heaviest and most luxurious in Europe. When it was constructed it was devised to stand a charge of dynamite, and it cannot be taken fast over most of the European lines, because their metals are too light. The train contains a small chapel, with an icon of peculiar sanctity, a library, bath-rooms, drawing-rooms, dining-room, and bed-rooms. The servants' quarters are at the rear, and consist simply of an ordinary van-like carriage arranged with sleeping-bunks, as if on board ship. The train is so made that it can be changed to fit the Russian or the mid-European gauge.

WOODEN culverts are unsightly, dangerous, expensive, short-lived.

which not only cannot be washed away, but actually grow stronger with age and use.

Every farmer owes it to himself to insist that the money he pays for road-taxes be spent to the best advantage. As a ratepayer, he is entitled to the best roads that can be made with that money. When culverts are washed out, and the road rendered impassable, he not only suffers inconvenience but may also be caused financial loss by inability to get necessary supplies in time for spring planting. And at best, with wooden culverts, part of the money that should be used to make better roads must be spent every year for repairs.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

In England the whole medical profession, with few exceptions, is striking against Lloyd-George and his national insurance act. Negotiations long and patiently conducted failed to bring about a settlement. Lloyd-George offers the physicians $1.50 annually per person insured for medical attendance on the sick; the profession asks $2.12 per person as a minimum. The difference is by no means trifling. Lloyd-George says it would double the income of the profession and involve an additional tax of $20,000,000 a year.

So the whole profession is boycotting the insurance act and "defying" the government. The insured get the other benefits, but not medical attendance. How long this will last no one knows, but Lloyd-George ridicules the notion that the physicians' strike, if continued, will cause the collapse of the whole scheme. He is confident he "can deliver the goods" in any case, and dispense with the physicians entirely. That will mean leaving medical attendance out of the scheme, and permitting the insured to make their own medical arrangements.

Meantime, one of the effects of this singular strike, it seems, is a decided boost among the physicians for the idea of a "nationalized medical service." Only Socialists have heretofore advocated this; but now doctors who regard themselves as moderates and conservatives publicly propose, or cheer, the nationalization of the medical service. They expect good pay, of course, from the state, notwithstanding Lloyd-George's alleged unreasonableness in driving a hard bargain with them in the insurance act affair. This is a strange world, truly, and it's a wise cause which knows its consequences.

THE SUMMER WRAPS.

It may be of heavy linen crash and of any color desired, but it should be lined with a contrasting color.

Tan is pretty lined with rose pink or pale blue, and lavender is stylish with a lining of the tan.

Whichever color is used for the lining of these useful top coats should cover the buttons which fasten the coat front and trim the collar and cuffs.

Pongee is also a strong favorite for the dressy separate summer wrap. Any of the season's colors are good made up in this fabric and the lining may be of satin or silk in contrast, the material used for lining serving as facing for the collar and cuffs.

Throw tie of black satin with lining of light blue, rose, pale yellow or lavender are designed for the dressy evening frocks.

The evening wrap of broadcloth is still shown and will be worn by many who cling to the graceful lines and the friendly warmth of this fabric.

SMARTNESS OF WHITE.

The woman of limited income should not be tempted by colored linen frocks. They are not a wise investment when gowns must necessarily be few in number. They are almost sure to fade, and even while they possess all their original glory they cannot be touched up and variated by colored cravat and belt, as the white outfit can. Such is the imperishable beauty of white that even the inexpensive material known as sailcloth, which can be bought for about 30 cents a yard, can be made to look smarter than the average colored linen. Those venturing upon costumes of sailcloth should, however, to make assurance doubly sure, see that the material has been well shrunk before it is made up.

A NEW BRACELET.

If you have an old-fashioned black onyx armband set with pearls wear it. It is again fashionable.

A large band looks smaller below a black bracelet, and one woman with rather red hands wears an inch-wide band of velvet around each wrist, for which she has jeweled clasps, changed to match her gowns.

Sometimes these velvet bracelets are set with large diamond or pearl buttons or pinned with a cameo or a seed-pearl brooch.

A fashionable series of bracelets that can be had in French jewelry is made of thin hoops studded with colored stones. An emerald hoop, a diamond, a ruby and a pearl one are worn together.

Mrs. Gotham—Don't you think those doughnuts are an improvement on the last ones I made? Mr. Gotham—Oh, yes, dear; the holes are larger.

HOME

DAINTY DISHES.

Nut and Vegetable Pie.—One cup fresh lima beans (the dry ones will do), one cup almonds and peanuts mixed, one cup thin white sauce, two hard-boiled eggs, two or three small onions sliced, six medium-sized potatoes, seasoning of salt and pepper. Wash one-half of the potatoes, cook the beans and potatoes and blanch the nuts. Place a layer of beans in the bottom of the baking dish, then a layer of nuts and egg, followed by a layer of diced potatoes. Repeat until the materials have been used. Pour over all the white sauce. Cover the top with the mashed potato, brush over with egg and milk and bake for thirty minutes in a hot oven.

Apple Meringue Pie.—Choose ripe, juicy apples; pare and cook until tender; season with nutmeg and lemon; sweeten to taste; press through a sieve and fill a nicely baked shell with the mixture. Cover with a meringue made by beating to a stiff froth two or three egg whites and adding a tablespoon of powdered sugar to each white. Flavor to taste. Bake in a moderate oven until meringue is firm.

Cheese Souffle.—Two tablespoons butter, three tablespoons flour, one half cup milk, one-half teaspoon salt, a dash of paprika, three-quarters cup grated cheese and three eggs. Make a white sauce of the butter, flour and milk in a double boiler. Add seasonings and grated cheese and stir until the cheese melts. Remove from the hot water and add the well-beaten yolks of eggs. Allow the mixture to cool, then cut and fold in the stiffly-beaten whites. Turn into a buttered baking dish and bake in a moderate oven very slowly. It is well to stand any custard or souffle mixture in a pan of hot water to avoid cooking too quickly. This mixture may be baked and served in individual molds or ramekins.

Stuffed Tomato Salad.—Choose small tomatoes, remove the skins and pulp. Fill with either diced cucumber and onion or with cabbage and green pepper salad. Serve on fresh nasturtium leaves, using blossoms for garnish.

Frozen Pudding.—One quart milk, four eggs, three-quarters cup sugar, one-quarter pound each of dates, figs and nuts, vanilla. Make a soft custard of the milk, eggs and sugar. When cool freeze, adding the fruits when half frozen.

Sour Cream Cookies.—One cup shortening, one cup sour cream, two cups light brown sugar, two eggs, one teaspoon soda. Flour to make dough soft enough to handle. Flavor as desired. This makes a soft cooky.

Glorified Rice.—Two tablespoons rice, washed and cooked in salted water and well drained; one-fourth box gelatin soaked in one-quarter cup cold water, one cup of cream whipped, one-quarter cup sugar. Any kind of fruit, dates, prunes, cherries, peaches, etc. Dissolve the hydrated gelatin over hot water. Whip the cream and add to it the sugar, rice and gelatin. Turn into a mold rinsed with cold water. Part of the fruit may be added to the mixture, or it may be arranged attractively on the serving dish. Serve with soft custard or whipped cream. Fresh fruits, such as berries, peaches or plums, are more apropriate at this time of the year.

Hard-Cooked Egg and Noodle Scallop.—Boil eggs until hard. Cook noodles in boiling water until tender. Arrange alternating layers of noodles and sliced eggs in buttered baking dish, covering each layer with thin white sauce. Have a layer of mushrooms in the middle. Cover the top with buttered crumbs and grated cheese. Bake until very hot.

FLIES AND FOOD.

The intelligent housekeeper of this generation has at her command a wealth of scientific knowledge that may be applied to the solution of problems in home sanitation.

Of great value are the means which have been devised to prevent the spread of disease by insects and other forms of animal life. In the nature of things the importance of this matter was not recognized until it had been shown with certainty that such animal life played an important part in the transmission of disease.

Two varieties of mosquitoes are conceded to be absolutely necessary to the transmission, respectively, of malaria and of yellow fever, since the organism that causes these diseases must first undergo a complicated series of changes in the body of the insect before it is capable of producing a new case.

Thus, the mosquito bites a yellow-fever patient and takes the micro-organism into its body, and there for some 12 days it is developed to the stage of maturity, after which time and not before the mosquito can convey the disease by biting. In such cases the insect is called an "intermediary host." Both diseases are now successfully fought by exterminating the breeding places of the mosquito and by the screening of dwellings. The canal zone, with the cities of Panama and Colon, are the best examples of this method.

The case against flies is well proved and yet they are allowed to infect the joint of meat exposed by the butcher, the bread and sweetmeats of the confectioner's counter, berries and other fruits, the edge of milk pails, the kitchen table and utensils and the food of our table.

USEFUL HINTS.

Ink stains are sometimes removed by soaking in sour milk and then rinsing in a weak solution of chloride of lime.

Iron rust stains yield to the following treatment: Soak the stain in lemon juice, sprinkle with salt and bleach several hours in the sun.

Fine ginghams and percales will emerge from the tub with the gloss and dressing of new material if dipped in sweet milk instead of starch.

Bread boards and other wooden utensils may be kept white and stainless by scrubbing with soap and lukewarm water, to which may be added a little common soda or household ammonia.

When cooking spinach cook in a cheesecloth bag, easily lifted and drained dry.

A teaspoonful of glycerin added to the rinse water makes woollen blankets come out like new.

An ordinary dish mop, moistened with kerosene is better than rag or brush to remove dust coils.

In a mixture of two ounces of salt to a pint of water good eggs will be found to sink, while indifferent ones will always float.

To take out a scorch from a shirt-front, or any article, lay it where the sunshine will fall on it. It will leave it clean and white.

Canned fruit should be opened an hour or two before it is used. It becomes richer after the oxygen of the air has been restored to it.

Next time you make mustard, mix it with milk instead of water, and you will find that it will not become dry, but will keep fresh until it is used up.

To keep yolk of eggs fresh, if only the white is needed, cover the yolks gently with a little cold water so as not to break it, and it will keep fresh several days.

Never allow silver to stand overnight without washing. If impossible to "do dishes," take enough time to wash the silver in warm water, wipe it dry, and put it away carefully.

A good way to use up odd pieces of soap is to put them all into a pan with a little water and let simmer until dissolved. Add enough silver sand to form a stiff paste, roll into balls, and set in a cool place to harden. This will be found excellent for scrubbing kitchen tables, wooden doors, etc.

Loops for hanging garments are always wearing out and breaking, particularly on cloaks and coats. To make a durable loop cut a strip of kid from an old kid glove, roll into it a piece of coarse string, and sew the edges of the kid neatly together. This loop, fastened securely to a garment, will stand any amount of pulling without wearing or breaking.

You won't travel very far if you tread on other people's toes.

IN THE JURY ROOM

Experience of an Ancient Institution.

Like every other well-regulated inhabitant of these islands, I have been taught to believe that trial by jury is the "palladium of British liberty." I have never known just what sort of a thing a palladium is, but it sounds good, and I have been always rather sorry for those benighted foreigners who haven't got one, says a writer in London Answers.

I have heard of people who make use of unbecoming language whenever the postman brings them invitations from "George Rex" to help him in deciding disagreements with some of his least desirable subjects; but I had no inclination that way when I got my first jury summons. So far from being annoyed, I bubbled over with pride at the thought that at last I was considered worthy to take a hand at the crank that worked the justice machine, and I could not refrain from imparting the glad fact to the last policeman I came across as I was going home that night.

He looked at me as if he thought I was trying to take a rise out of him, and then said that he supposed I knew there was no pay hanging to the job, and that I would have to settle for my own refreshments? I replied, with dignity, to the effect that I was quite aware of the rights and responsibilities that were coming to me; upon which he remarked, as he turned to resume his beat, that he had never before come across a juryman who was fond of the job. He won't meet one when he sees me again!

I looked forward to the day when I was to "be and to appear" much in the same way as one longs for the commencement of an overdue holiday, and the week that elapsed between the receipt of the summons and its fulfilment was a very long one; but the great day came at last, and I found myself in the jury-box with eleven other "good men and true"—by prescription.

The first prisoner was an interesting-looking young woman, very neatly and becomingly dressed, who was charged with shoplifting. I caught myself hoping that she wasn't guilty almost as soon as she entered the dock.

The clerk of the assize addressed her by name, and continued: "The jurors who are now about to be sworn are the jury who are to pass between you and our Sovereign Lord the King upon your trial. If, therefore, you object to them, or any of them you must do so as they come to the book to be sworn, and you shall be heard."

That was gabbled over as if it were a mere formality, and I doubted if the poor girl in the dock understood it at all. I hardly grasped it myself.

Then we were sworn, one by one, to "well and truly try the issue joined between our Sovereign Lord the King and the prisoner at the bar whom I shall have in charge, and a true verdict give, according to the evidence."

If we had acted up to that oath we would certainly have found a verdict of "Guilty" without leaving the box, for the stuff was found on her; and we heard incidentally during the proceedings, though that knowledge ought to have been kept from us, that she had been convicted of the same offence several times previously.

But it took us two hours to arrive at a verdict, and then it was "Not guilty." I didn't like the nasty tone in which the judge told us, when we brought in that verdict, that the responsibility was ours, not his.

It was the way we reached the conclusion that gave the first crushing blow to my faith in trial by jury. The juror sitting on my left was a foreigner, who, when we put our heads together in the box, announced that he was "willing to go mit der crowd." I voted for "Guilty," and the man on my right said that he thought we ought to acquit the girl on account of the temptation the big stores put in women's way.

"But there is no doubt the woman took the things," I whispered. "How can we possibly say she didn't?"

"If you was in business, and had these places takin' the bread out of your mouth, you wouldn't hold with 'em, perhaps," he said. "I say 'Not guilty.'"

"And so do I," said a young fellow behind. "Let's give the poor girl a chance."

"Well, gentlemen?" said the judge.

"I'm afraid we are not agreed, my lord," said the foreman.

The judge with a lift of his eyebrows, asked if he could assist us, and, being answered in the negative, directed us to retire.

When we got to the jury-room, and took a vote, it was found that we were eight for conviction and four for acquittal.

Among the eight was the foreigner who had announced his willingness to "go mit der crowd."

One of the four started arguing that the woman could not possibly be guilty of larceny, as she had not got away with the goods, and called those who differed uncomplimentary names. As the judge had directed us to the effect that the theft was complete when the woman concealed the goods about her person, this was pointed out to him; but he said that he was there to use his common-sense, and wasn't going to take any notice of what the judge had said.

The foreigner was the first to go over to the minority, and then, one by one, those four pig-headed dunderheads "convinced" four more, thus leaving only the foreman, another man, and myself who stood out for a verdict of "Guilty."

At last, when the judge had sent for the third time to ask if there was any prospect of our agreeing, the foreman pointed out to we two who were sticking out with him for a conviction that we agree to disagree it would be pretty rough on the girl, who would be kept in suspense until she could be tried over again; and he suggested that we should cave in.

"After all," he said, "it isn't as if we were giving way to a conviction, when we believed the prisoner ought to be convicted."

There was a difference, of course, and as I was utterly sick of the whole business, I agreed to this undoubtedly guilty prisoner being let off, and the other man followed my lead.

I fancy the person who was most surprised at the verdict was the prisoner herself.

In the next case we had the prisoner pleaded "Guilty"; but the judge persuaded him to withdraw the plea, and then directed us to find the man "Not guilty," as the magistrate ought not to have committed him for trial, but to have dealt with the case himself, as a conviction on indictment could not be sustained for a first offence of that description.

That was a simple enough problem, in all conscience; but, amazing to relate, there were ten of that dunderheaded jury who couldn't see why they should bring in a man "Not guilty" when he himself had admitted the opposite.

We two in the minority did manage to get the others to follow the judge's direction after an hour's argument; but even then one of them wanted to add a rider to the effect that although we found the man "Not guilty," we thought he ought to be punished, all the same.

Of the other cases we tried there was one in which there was a large element of doubt, but there were only three of us who wanted to give the prisoner the benefit of it. I didn't feel that it was a case where I ought to stick out to the bitter end, and so, when I was the last dissentient left in, I agreed to a conviction; but I have never been able to convince myself that I did the right hing.

I have discussed juries since with several friends who have served on many juries, and I have been assured that my experience is by no means an unusual one. If that is so, it is very evident that trial by jury is not the good thing that we have been led to believe.

TURNING SORROW INTO JOY

It is the Discovery and Realization of the Truth Which Brings This to Pass

"And ye shall be sorrowful, but your sorrow shall be turned into joy.—John, xvi., 20.

We seldom think of sorrows as blessings, although many of our joys are but transmuted sorrows. Moral and spiritual values are learned only through the discipline of sorrow, just as discriminating vision is attained only by means of darkness and shadows. Some sorrows are the product of a morbid temperament and a brooding imagination and are as purely artificial as the fog in a kitchen from a boiling tea kettle. A cool breeze dispels the one and common sense will cure the other.

Sorrows are the emotions which arise when we contemplate the failure of cherished hopes and expectations, as miasma rises from the deadness and decay of summer's beautiful foliage, brought low by the winds and rains of autumn. And yet, out of this store of vital nutriment many a seed and plant builds up new life, transforming death and decay into

LIFE AND BEAUTY.

In like manner, truth finds lodgment in the heart, absorbing the vital forces from ruined hopes and expectations, and turns the emotions of sorrow into those of joy. The enchantment of nature's laws, which turns the bitterness of the root and its environment into the sweetness of the fruit, is outrivalled by the higher laws of truth and grace which turn the bitterness of sorrow into joy.

Ignorance and indifference to truth are continually producing great harvests of sorrow in the lives of mankind, as ignorance and neglect on the farmer's part produce harvests of noxious weeds. And these must be ploughed back into the soil that the yield of grain may be the richest; even as our mistakes and sorrows may also make fuller and better the true and lasting joy.

Truth and loyalty to it are the two forces which govern the destiny of man. The more of truth we grasp and the more thoroughly we obey it the larger our realization of life and joy.

at great truths mean the turning of brief joys into sorrows, as surely as surface springs dry up in early summer. Deep and earnest pursuit of truth will lead to fountains of light and joy which fail not, even as the deep cleft rock sends forth perpetual refreshment.

Most of all will the religious life turn sorrow into joy, because religion, after all, is simply a great passion for truth and an equal passion for its realization. Anything less than this is not worthy the name of religion. Obedience to the truth will, step by step, turn our sorrows, born of ignorance and imperfections, into enduring joys. Truth will dissolve the very last shadow, and we shall behold the Author of Truth Himself, and "the mystery of God shall be finished," and our final sorrow shall be turned into our greatest joy, for "death shall be swallowed up in victory."

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

INTERNATIONAL LESSON, AUGUST 18.

Lesson VII.—The ruler's daughter, Mark 5. 21-43. Golden Text,, Mark 5. 41.

Verse 21. Crossed over again — Immediately after healing the demoniac on the eastern shore of the Lake of Galilee, Jesus and his disciples returned to the western shore. Mark, in characteristic fashion, interweaves the incident of healing into his narrative. He does not follow the chronology given in Matthew 9. 1-18, but seems to select incidents which he considers of great importance.

22. Falleth at his feet—Though a distinguished citizen and of dignified social position, his parent grief brought him in self-humiliation to the feet of Jesus.

23. My little daughter—According to Luke 8. 42, an only daughter.

At the point of death—Luke records that she "was dying."

24. Thronged him—Crowded close about him.

The narrative is interrupted at this point by the incident of the healing of the woman with an issue of blood, verses 25 to 34. Although Jairus's case was urgent, Jesus took time to honor the faith of the woman who touched his garment. However, the interruption has the literary value of sustaining and ointensifying the interest in the main narrative.

35. While he yet spake—To the woman who touched his garment.

Why troublest thou?—This may represent a subtle effort on the part of Jairus's aristocratic friends to have nothing further to do with the Galilaean peasant. It is more likely, however, that the question was the result of their belief that the child was past restoration and further solicitation would cause Jesus useless trouble.

36. Not heeding the word—Or, overhearing. Jesus overheard what was not addressed to him and paid no attention to it.

Fear not, only believe—An exhortation to steady, unwavering faith in the face of the aparently greater difficulty. Here, as in many other places, faith is represented as the condition upon which the miracle is to be effected. In other instances, such as the healing of the woman with an issue of blood (verses 25-34), the condition of the healing is personal faith. In this instance it is substantial faith. The child is dead, so that she has no power to believe, but the father's faith is accepted as sufficient ground for restoration of her life.

37. Peter, and James, and John —Jesus's "inner circle" of friends who were with him at the transfiguration (Mark 9. 2) and in Gethsemane (14. 33). Only the three disciples were taken, that the strictest secrecy might be maintained concerning this unusual miracle. It had been the habit of Jesus on numerous occasions to enjoin secrecy in regard to his miracles, his object being to avoid as much as possible the unwelcome notoriety which they produced. Yet he desired that some of the disciples should have the benefit of such a lesson.

38. Weeping and wailing greatly —The lamentation of hired mourners, the number and commotion of which had increased to meet the requirements of the family's social standing.

39. Not dead, but sleepeth—Sleep was a common symbol of death. The statement did not in any sense detract from the reality of death. Jesus uttered it in the consciousness that he would raise the child to life again.

40. Laughed him to scorn—The conduct of the hired mourners, who knew the girl to be dead.

Put them all forth—Except the five mentioned.

41. Talitha cumi—The actual Aramaic words which Jesus spoke, meaning "Maiden, arise." Recorded only by Mark.

42. Straightway—The return to life was effected instantly.

43. No man should know — The report of such a miracle would so increase the popularity of Jesus among the people and create a corresponding hatred among the Jewish leaders as to hinder the more important work of teaching the principles of the Kingdom.

RETIRING FROM THE FARM.

The following article by W. C. Palmeter, agricultural editor, Agricultural College, N. Dakota, will be found well worth reading.—Retiring from one's work is one of the most serious steps that a man can take. Especially is this true of the farmer. Usually it means moving to town. Life in town is entirely different from life on the farm. One accustomed to farm life can hardly adapt himself or herself to town life at that period in life. This results in being out of touch with one's environment, in the absence of activities to keep one occupied. From being an important factor in the farm community one often becomes a negligible one in towns, or even worse—a knocker.

Why move to town? The reasons given for moving to town are many—educating the children, modern conveniences in the home, less work, etc. Schools in town are as a rule better than those in the country, but the reason they are better is that the town people tax themselves so as to have the money necessary to maintain a good school. By consolidating the schools and putting up the school tax as high in the country as in the city just as good schools can be provided in the country as in the town.

The modern conveniences can be had in the country now as well as in the town and usually at a less cost. Less work in town—less work of some kinds—but after all no one can be contented and healthy unless the mind is occupied. The one who is used to active, muscular work for a good many years will not remain healthy without some exercise.

A good way for a farmer to retire is to select a lot of five to fifteen acres on the old farm and build on it the modern house a small barn, also with modern conveniences, and a poultry house. Here one can live the life that one is used to in the way that has become second nature to him. Here there will be something to hold one's attention and to supply some work to take the place of the accustomed activity. The school problem can be solved by consolidating the schools. In this way as good schools can be had in the rural districts as in the towns. In fact it will be a better school as it will be in close touch and harmony with the farm and farm life. In most cases it is a real mistake for the farmer to retire to town and especially so when the things that he moves to town can not be had on the farm and with all the advantages of the country in the bargain.

SAD AND SERIOUS.

Young man, do you ever sit down and think seriously for a minute at a time? You may be well now, and earning good wages, but how much are you saving? Are you waiting anxiously for pay day?

If sickness should overtake you, have you enough money to keep you in forced idleness for a month without falling into a debt you may never pay?

This is sad thought, but the most solemn warning may not cause you to think seriously until it is forever too late. The thoughtless reader will put this down as a fogey idea, and laugh at the writer, but we know for a fact that far too many take no thought of the future.

Young girl, are you not doing a foolish thing to tie yourself down to a life of misery with a young man who doesn't know enough to make provision for a rainy day? Are you not partly to blame for giving foolish young men encouragement in their foolishness? Do you want to marry a young man and take him to your parents' home the first time he meets with an accident, or happens to be laid up through sickness of any kind? Don't if you value your future happiness, chase after the young man who has some "go" in him. The young man who can shine in company is often very short of polish when he is in his own home.

Old man, you who have reached the age when you should be able to take things easy, but can't afford to do so, do you ever think of the mis-spent hours and squandered money that would serve you a good purpose now if you had it? When you have to turn out of bed every morning, wet or dry, cold or hot, do you think of hours of ease and comfort you might now enjoy were it not for the improvidence of your younger days? It is too late now, old man for you to benefit, but the younger generation should learn something from your experience and escape the rocks on which you made shipwreck.

TAKE CARE OF YOUR HAIR WHILE YOU HAVE HAIR TO TAKE CARE OF.

It's a safe ten to one bet that the young man who uses PARISIAN Sage as an occasional hair dresser will never grow bald.

There's a reason, of course, and it's a very good and sufficient one.

Dandruff germs cause falling hair and falling hair means thinner hair and in due time baldness.

PARISIAN Sage prevents baldness, by destroying the cause of baldness—the little persistent vociferous dandruff germ.

If you have dandruff or itching scalp it means that dandruff germs are sapping the vitality from the roots of your hair. Get rid of all their troubles by using PARISIAN Sage.

It is not a dye, mind you, neither does it contain poisonous sugar of lead or even sulphur. It is a scientific preparation that abolishes dandruff, stops falling hair and scalp itch, and makes hair grow luxuriant.

Many young women as well as men are growing bald and for the same reason.

Use delightful, refreshing PARISIAN Sage; it nourishes the hair roots, it the roots are not dead, and brings to every user a head of glorious hair—radiant and fascinating. Large bottle for 50 cents at drug stores and toilet counters. See that you get PARISIAN Sage.

W. S. COLE guarantees it.

Deafness Cannot be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars free.

REBUKED AN EMPEROR.

Gluck Didn't Like the Way Joseph II. Sang His Music.

Gluck, the composer, was not of the sort of men of whom courtiers are made. One day he attended at the court at Vienna a concert at which the Emperor Joseph II. and one of his archdukes sang a fragment from one of Gluck's compositions. Naturally enough, the imperial artists glanced at the composer to see how he was impressed by the honor they were doing him. They were shocked to observe that he was making a series of extraordinary and significant grimaces. The emperor stopped and inquired whether he and the archduke were not singing the bit according to Gluck's idea of how it should be done.

"My idea!" exclaimed Gluck. "Why, sire, I am the poorest walker in the world, but I would vastly rather take a walk of six leagues than be forced to hear a composition of my own interpreted in such a way as that."

Joseph II. was brave enough to take no notice of the criticism, but the court was quite convinced that if such a reproach had been addressed to the Czar Nicholas the composer would have prosecuted his musical studies from that time forth under the unfavorable surroundings of the Siberian mines.

It was the composer Weigl, a man of very different temperament from Gluck, who when the Emperor Francis Joseph played the first violin in the performance of one of his overtures threw himself at the monarch's feet and exclaimed, "Ah, sire, will your majesty benignantly condescend to grant my prayer and favor me once more with a most gracious F sharp?"—New York Press.

GUARDING A SECRET.

The Number of Persons Who May Share It With Safety.

In the realm of the multiplication table, where, for example, two and two can be relied on to make exactly four, reckoning is easy, but when you leave the field of abstract numbers and deal with persons strange results sometimes appear. Such a case is described in Lady Dorothy Nevill's book, "Under Five Reigns."

With regard to the number of persons who may safely be trusted with a secret, there is no proverbial authority for believing it to exceed two. We are told in several languages that "the secret of two is God's secret, the secret of three is all the world's," and the Spaniards say, "What three know all the world knows."

A gentleman who had gained possession of a valuable commercial secret confided it to a friend who appreciated its value. A short time afterward this friend came to ask permission to communicate it, under oath of eternal secrecy, to a friend of his who would be likely to assist in utilising the secret to the best advantage.

"Let me see," said the original possessor of the secret, making a chalk mark on a board at hand. "I know the particulars. That makes one."

"One," agreed his friend.

"You know them," continued he, making another mark by the side of the one already made. "That makes"—

"Two!" cried the other.

"Well, and if you tell your friend, that will be"—making a third mark.

"Three," said the other.

"No," was the reply—"111."—Life.

The First Society of Authors.

A society for the protection of authors was founded as long ago as 1735. Authors themselves were not members of the society, which was instituted for their benefit by noblemen and gentlemen, who subscribed 2 guineas annually in addition to an entrance fee of 10 guineas.

Their purpose, as defined by themselves, was "to assist authors in the publication and to secure to them the entire profits of their own works"—that is to say, they published books, but took no fees for doing so. They were amateurs, however, engaged in trade in competition with professionals, and their enterprise was unsuccessful. The society was wound up in 1749, and the balance in hand (£20 12s.) was presented to the Foundling hospital.—London Author.

Had Foresight.

"That man Mehitable married has a lot of foresight," said Farmer Corntossel.

"He looked kind of worried and scared at the weddin'," replied his wife.

"That's what makes me think he has foresight."—Washington Star.

WESTERN BANK ROBBERY

David Walters and Alice Davis Taken into Custody at Palmar House, Toronto

A despatch from Toronto says: Clever work by Detective Richard Tipton, assisted by other members of the Toronto Police Department, resulted in the arrest at the Palmer House on Saturday night of David Walters and Alice Davis, who are believed to be members of the gang of safe-blowers who stole more than $350,000 from the Bank of Montreal at New Westminster, B. C., on September 14, 1911. Walters' right name is said to be Walter Davis. A search of the personal effects belonging to the pair resulted in the recovery of $2,020 in bills of the series taken from the bank. There was also $7,185.50 in bills, gold and silver, making a total of $9,205.50, all of which the police believe is part of the proceeds of the big haul. From records in the detective office it appears that Walters had previously been arrested in the United States under the names of O'Day and Ferguson.

Some time ago the police received a tip that some of the stolen bills were being circulated in Toronto. Accordingly Detective Tipton sent to the bank for a complete list of all the money missing. These lists were sent to the hotels, cigar stores, theatres and other places in the city where a large amount of money is handled, with instructions to report to the police in case any attempt was made to pass bills of the series described.

MAKING SAFE INVESTMENTS

WHY BONDS FLUCTUATE IN MARKET PRICE.

Their Value is Governed by Law of Supply and Demand, Like That of Everything Else—Unpopular Bonds Often Steady in Price Owing to Narrow Market—Gilt-Edged Securities Appear to Have Reached "Rock Bottom."

The articles contributed by "Investor" are for the sole purpose of guiding prospective investors, and, if possible, of saving them from losing money through placing it in "wild-cat" enterprises. The impartial and reliable character of the information may be relied upon. The writer of these articles and the publisher of this paper have no interests to serve in connection with this matter other than those of the reader.

(By "Investor.")

A man who had never invested was talking the other day. "If these bonds are such gilt-edged securities, why is it they fluctuate in price. Here a few years ago Toronto debentures sold at a price to yield only 3 3-4 to 4 per cent., and now you can buy them at a much lower price, where the return is 4 1-4 to 4.30 per cent. Then, perhaps, in a year's time the price will have gone up again, and you will be lucky if you can get them where the return is better than 4 per cent."

The value of almost everything is governed by the law of supply and demand. If more people want to buy than there are those who want to sell the price goes up. If, on the other hand, the buyers are fewer than the sellers the price goes down. There is nothing particularly mysterious about it. Moreover, the number of people who want to buy or sell high-grade bonds depends on the loaning value of money. When money is very cheap they buy the expensive, low-yield bonds. When money is dear they turn to those of higher yield. Consequently, when money is dear low-yield bonds tend to decline in price until their yield approximates the more nearly the loaning value of money, while when money is plentiful and the average rate low the reverse takes place.

At the present time money is commanding a high rate, and, as a result, the price of high-grade bonds has declined. Furthermore, the past year has seen a large number of small fires, houses, factories, warehouses, etc., and the usual number of large ones, several towns having been practically wiped out by fire. The result has been, of course, that the insurance companies have had severe losses. Now, when an insurance company has a loss they must either pay it up in cash as soon as the amount has been proved or frighten all their policyholders into cancellation, losing their good name and consequently their means of existing and making an income, or raise the money promptly and pay off the losses. To raise money it is often necessary to sell some of their investments, and as the high-grade, low yield bonds always command a ready market these are sold, sometimes at prices one or two points below the market in order to facilitate a ready sale. This, of course, tends further to depress the market for high-grade bonds. It also means that these companies are temporarily out of the market for bonds during a period more or less prolonged, in which they are catching up the usual amount of cash reserve they consider it prudent to carry.

This has happened this year, and so a very substantial buying power has been removed from the market for high-grade bonds temporarily.

Everything considered, the best judges of the bond market are of the opinion that the price of bonds has about reached "rock bottom." Money is showing an unmistakable tendency toward lower prices, and while England has been out of the market now for a considerable period any resumption of buying from that quarter, not to mention our own fire insurance companies, will cause high-grade bonds to resume their former heights or at least move up from the very attractive prices they now command.

It is easily seen, then, that fluctuations in bond prices are natural. A stationary price often infers the narrow market that is usually the lot of unpopular securities, nobody wanting to buy and holders hesitating to sell for fear of breaking the market for their own security.

OVER ONE HUNDRED KILLED

Explosion of Black Damp Caused a Disaster in a Mine in Germany

A despatch from Bochum, Germany, says: An explosion of black damp and coal dust on Thursday morning in the Lorraine shaft of the coalfield in the village of Gerthe, four miles from Bochum, cost the lives of 103 miners, according to the official report. Two others were severely and twenty-three slightly injured. Death was practically instantaneous in all cases. The cause of the explosion has not yet been definitely ascertained, but it is thought that a blast reached a big pocket of gas. The day shift of 650 men had just descended into the workings and were distributing themselves along the various levels, when a serious fire damp explosion occurred. The detonation was heard at the surface, and the officials on duty immediately formed rescue parties of the men belonging to the night shift, who rushed back to the pit mouth together with the villagers. The rescue crews, which did such good work at the time of the French mine disaster at Courrieres, near Lens, on March 10, 1906, when 1,230 miners were killed, arrived here early in the afternoon, but were unable to penetrate the galleries, owing to the flames and the poisonous gases.

THE ILLUSTRATION FARMS

Commission of Conservation Will Send Experts to Guide the Owners

A despatch from Ottawa says: For the purpose of demonstrating to Canadian farmers how they may get the best out of the land in the most economic manner, the Commission of Conservation has chosen a number of farms throughout the Provinces for illustration purposes. In each case the Commission has chosen farms whose owner agrees to be guided by the agricultural experts provided. These are F. C. Nunnick, the Commission's agricultural expert, and John Fixter, formerly farm superintendent of Macdonald College. The illustration farms have already been chosen in the eastern Provinces, and both Mr. Nunnick and Mr. Fixter are now in the west arranging for illustration farms in the Prairie Provinces. In Ontario there are eight farms, in Quebec six, and New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island and Nova Scotia three each.

The Ontario illustration farms are as follows: Lanark county, farm owned by W. Hands of Perth; Essex county, farm owned by Nelson Peterson, Ruthven, and farm owned by R. F. Taylor, Essex; Norfolk county, farm owned by A. M. Culver, Simcoe; Waterloo county, farm owned by Paul Snyder, Elmira; Ontario country, farm owned by Thomas Hall, Brooklin; Dundas county, farm owned by Whittaker Bros., Williamsburg.

TORONTO CORRESPONDENCE

WHAT IS TRANSPIRING AT THE HUB OF THE PROVINCE.

The City's Hotel Accommodation—Figuring on Who'll be the Next Mayor—Harvester Excursions.

Attention is being called to Toronto's lack of hotel accommodation. Complaint is made that we are losing tourist business, conventions and other gatherings, which bring business to the merchants, because we do not provide places to sleep and eat. Certainly in the last seven or eight years since the King Edward Hotel was completed, in a period when this city has increased in population by over fifty per cent., there has been comparatively little increase in the hotel accommodation.

The question has zest because intertwined in it is the problem of liquor licenses. No doubt the liquor men are making the most of the lack of accommodation. They say it is due to the insecurity of the license situation. Not only do they criticize such radical proposals as Mr. Rowell's "Abolish the Bar" platform, but local option and license reduction campaigns are also to them an anthema. Even if the bar is not abolished at one fell swoop they fear that one of these days we may have a local option campaign in Toronto, and they are not sure what the result would be.

HOTEL CAPITAL SHY.

Every little while a story is circulated that some one is prepared to spend a million dollars or more in a new palatial hotel, but that they are prevented from doing so by the instability of the license situation. There is an excellent site for a hotel at the corner of Bay and Front streets, unbuilt upon since the fire, and opposite the site of the new Union Station. With the retail business moving up Yonge street there would seem to be an opening in that district. While the extreme north end, with its increasing railway business, also looks attractive. But the hotel men's capital is timid.

Temperance people declare that hotels—big hotels in big cities—can be made to pay without liquor licenses. The best examples in support of this theory are, perhaps, to be found in Atlantic City, although it is doubtful if anyone needs to go dry in Atlantic City, even if he is staying at a temperance house. No doubt, some of the big Toronto hotels make big money out of their liquor licenses. According to rumor, the profits of the King Edward bar are almost fabulous, and some of the others do a rushing trade. In others, such as the Queen's, the operations of the bar are more incidental. But in the vast majority of the 110 licensed hotels in the city the bar is the chief industry. They provide only rooms and meals to keep within the law. In fact, in some you might always find all the rooms "full," and if you asked for a meal you might not be refused it, but you might have to wait an hour for it.

There is admittedly a lack of middle-class hotel accommodation. In this Toronto suffers like all big cities. The man from the average home finds when he travels that he either has to pay for luxury that he does not want, or that he has to put up with uncomfortable rooms and distasteful food.

WHO'LL BE NEXT MAYOR?

Though the municipal elections are still almost five months away, mayoralty candidates are already jockeying for position. It has been assumed that Mayor Geary will not again seek re-election. He has had three years of it, which, under ordinary circumstances, is supposed to be enough for any man. The last two terms he has had on easy terms; last election he had no opposition and the year before no really serious opponent. But the Mayor's chair he attained in the first place only by hard struggles. The first time he was a candidate he offered himself as a lamb for the slaughter. That was in the historic fight that Dr. Beattie Nesbitt made for the position. Nesbitt's opponent was Joseph Oliver, a Liberal. Nesbitt was beating the party drum for all he was worth, and would certainly have beaten Oliver in a single contest. Recognizing this, influential Conservatives who did not relish the idea of Nesbitt in the city's chief magisterial position induced Geary to run, with the almost openly avowed purpose of splitting the Conservative vote, so that Oliver would be elected. The plan worked, and it is G. R. Geary Toronto has to thank for keeping Dr. Nesbitt out of the Mayor's chair in the days when the Farmers' Bank was just getting under way.

THE ROCKEN-GEARY FEND.

Some might have been afraid of the loss of prestige which a defeat would bring, but it did not work out that way in Geary's case. When Oliver relinquished the office, Controller Hocken aspired to the succession. Under other circumstances, Hocken might have beaten Geary, for his sources of strength in the Conservative party were much the same, and apparently about equally as strong as Geary's, and he had many influential friends among the Liberals. But the Liberals who don't expect many of the sweets of office in Toronto remembered Geary's service to Oliver and there is little doubt that in the strenuous struggle that resulted Liberal votes decided the issue.

That was three years ago. After a year's absence from Council Mr. Hocken returned to the Board of Control. He did not again essay to defeat Geary, though the animosity kindled between them has never died out, and not infrequently blazes up at board meetings. But all the time Controller Hocken has regarded himself as the logical successor of Mayor Geary. And at the moment he probably expects that in the year of grace, 1915, it will be Mayor Hocken.

His chances are, undoubtedly, good, but there are several possibilities which have to be reckoned with. In the first place, Geary has not definitely announced that he will not be a candidate again. During the present term his name has been frequently mentioned in connection with permanent civic and other positions. But should he seek a fourth term as Mayor, Controller Hocken may give him another fight, and unless Geary completes the year more aggressively than he has begun it Hocken might oust him.

CHURCH A NEW ASPIRANT.

But, probably, the darkest shadow across Controller Hocken's mayoralty aspirations is cast by Controller Tommy Church. Many people do not take Church seriously, but he gets votes. During Mayor Geary's absence in England he has been acting mayor, and has been stirring things up in a way that has drawn some favorable comment, even from his critics. He is erratic, is handicapped by a serious deafness, and lacks stability. But he is energetic and hail fellow well met. He is strong with the Conservative organizations, with the Sons of England, the Orange association, even as Controller Hocken. While, not being as extreme as Hocken, who is editor of the Orange Sentinel, in his anti-Catholic pronouncements, he might get most of the Catholic vote. Hocken is strong with the Church vote, Church would appeal to "the boys." So that in a straight contest between the two it would be hard to pick the winner.

And then there would be the danger of a third candidate. Perhaps some dark horse Conservative, or maybe a Liberal. J. J. Ward, Controller for many years, but defeated last January, a Roman Catholic Liberal, has long had aspirations to be Mayor of Orange Conservative Toronto. He wanted to run when Geary and Hocken were fighting it out, but as his expectation of election was based on purely partisan support, leading Liberals who wish to keep party politics out of civic affairs as far as possible, counselled otherwise. He sacrificed hope then, but he might not do so again with Hocken and Church as contenders.

Altogether the mayoralty contest this year promises to be one of the most interesting in many years.

THE CALL OF THE WEST.

The days of the harvester excursions to the Northwest are with us again. It is an interesting sight to journey down to the Union Station and see one of these excursions get under way, for, of course, Toronto is the chief concentrating point for eastern Canada and most of the excursionists begin their main journey from here. There they are by the hundreds, representing, before the season is out, nearly every municipality and school section of old Ontario. The majority are men, mostly young men, but there is a goodly smattering of women, too. In recent years they are not as in the old days, all Canadians, but often half are new arrivals from the Old Country, who are glad to take advantage of the phenomenally low fare to get as far west as they can. The farm life of the prairie appeals more perhaps to the Scotchman than to the Englishman, into whose blood the virus of city life has often entered and who does not warm up to the idea of going away off a thousand miles from anywhere.

For the most part it is a serious-minded crowd. Sometimes a few young bloods make trouble and give the whole party a bad name. They are not out for a frolic, but to most it is a serious business. Canadians are a pretty serious people anyway. Some have their plans all made to remain in the West. But the majority are modern Joshuas, going to have a look around, and come back if they don't like it. As Ontario knows to her cost many of them find it a land which promises "milk and honey" in a figurative sense at all events. And they never come back—at least to stay.

Fifty thousand of them are wanted this year. The job of finding that number devolves, not on the government in either of the western provinces, or the Dominion, but on the railways. The railways put the problem up to their district passenger agents. Each one is expected to get so many. And so the country is flooded with posters, station agents are told to get busy, the newspapers are loaded up with free notices and the restless ones respond. The job falls on the railways because if the crop was not harvested they would be the heaviest individual losers and besides, the harvest excursions coming at a time when the western farmer is counting his money, are the most effective immigration boosters yet discovered. And every settler moved to Western Canada means more business for the railways.

YOUNG GIRL'S BRAVERY.

Though Unable to Swim She Saved Her Little Brother.

A despatch from Brockville says: A second brave and successful attempt at rescue from drowning here within two weeks took place on Saturday afternoon. Alfred Massey, aged three years, son of Daniel Massey, Water street, was playing on the platform of a launch house. In attempting to reach some brush and pull it from the water the little boy fell in. He was going down the second time when his sister Nellie, aged fourteen, attracted by his screams, ran to the dock, and without waiting plunged into the water, which at this point is fifteen feet deep. The young girl cannot swim, but secured a hold on her brother and managed to keep herself and him afloat until the father, learning of what had happened, rushed to the scene, jumped in and landed his two children safely on the boathouse platform.

FORTUNE TELLER'S SECRET.

What Happened When She Told the Geisha.

A fortune-telling woman named Matsu, who has a place of business in a small shelter in Theatre Street, Yokohama, told a geisha, whose name was not made public, on Monday that a great fire would occur in the Theatre Street district next week, Wednesday or Thursday, and that the whole district would be wiped out, says the Japan Advertiser. The far-seeing fortune teller told the geisha to be sure and tell no one else, as it was a valuable secret. The secret cost the geisha half a yen. Then there happened the following:

The geisha got her trunks and boxes together and packed up what she could conveniently get into them. She sold for a song all the trinkets and gifts which are presumed to be so plentiful in her profession, and disposed of a lease upon desirable quarters that she had worked for years to obtain.

The neighboring women stood around and watched the proceedings, much disturbed with curiosity. They asked questions, but were not told the reason. "Go see Matsu," replied the girl.

On Thursday the geisha had all her earthly possessions transferred from her residence to a godown, across the front of which there were printed in large red letters: "Fireproof." The neighbors who had suspended their labors for several days trooped down the street after the luggage when it left the geisha's house and were amazed to find where it had been placed. Therefore a number immediately consulted Matsu, who knew the value of a secret.

As a result some fifty families who reside in the district were startled when the female members came dashing home with the awful news of the approaching conflagration and they began packing up the family possessions preparatory to leaving.

One innocent and harmless husband protested, but was squelched, so he informed the police. The police called to investigate the exodus. They discovered the cause and endeavored to laugh the frightened natives out of their scare, but to no purpose. A large portion of the population of one block of Theatre Street near the western end have removed their chattels and have ceased labor and industry while awaiting the conflagration.

In one street of Paris, the Champs Elysees, there have been during the past twelve months 580 accidents, of which 30 have proved fatal.

MRS. G. A. SELBY AND CHILD

Uses Only Cuticura Soap for Prize Baby

"I have always used Cuticura Soap and no other for my baby, and he has never had a sore of any kind. He does not even chafe as most babies do. I feel that it is all owing to Cuticura Soap for he is fine and healthy, and when five months old won a prize in a baby contest. It makes my heart ache to go into so many homes and see a sweet faced baby with the whole top of its head a solid mass of scurf, caused by the use of poor soap. I always recommend Cuticura, and nine times out of ten the next time I see the mother she says 'Oh! I am so glad you told me of Cuticura.'" (Signed) Mrs. G. A. Selby, Redondo Beach, Calif.

Although Cuticura Soap is sold by druggists and dealers everywhere, a postal to "Cuticura," Dept. 2M, Boston, U.S.A., will secure a liberal sample, with 32-p. book on the care of skin, scalp and hair.

YOU'VE GOT TO TAKE A CHANCE.

If you go across the ocean, your ship is liable to sink.

True enough, but if you travel on land your train is liable to be wrecked.

If you just jimmy around the home town, your automobile is liable to blow up or throw a tire and precipitate you quickly into a ravine on your elbows and shoulder blades.

If you go buggy riding your horse is apt to shy at a piece of paper in the road and kick you into the middle of the following week.

If you go out walking an automobile is liable to scramble you up or a footpad is liable to tap you suddenly yet firmly upon the dome of thought.

But if you sit still at home a hundred things are liable to happen you. You may have a fit, some weary wayfarer may come along and sell you a lot of Turkish rugs, lightning may strike the house, and then there is always the possibility of an earthquake.

At the very best you have got to take a chance whether you want to or not.

Fail to Select Food Nature Demands to Ward Off Ailments?

A Ky. lady, speaking about food, says: "I was accustomed to eating all kinds of ordinary food until, for some reason, indigestion and nervous prostration set in.

"After I had run down seriously my attention was called to the necessity of some change in my diet, and I discontinued my ordinary breakfast and began using Grape-Nuts with a good quantity of rich cream.

"In a few days more my condition changed in a remarkable way, and I began to have a strength that I had never been possessed of before, a vigor of body and a poise of mind that amazed me. It was entirely new in my experience.

"My former attacks of indigestion had been accompanied by heat flashes, and many times my condition was distressing with blind spells of dizziness, rush of blood to the head and neuralgic pains in the chest.

"Since using Grape-Nuts alone for breakfast I have been free from these troubles, except at times when I have indulged in rich, greasy foods in quantity, then I would be warned by a pain under the left shoulder blade, and unless I heeded the warning the old trouble would come back, but when I finally got to know where these troubles originated I returned to my Grape-Nuts and cream and the pain and disturbance left very quickly.

"I am now in prime health as a result of my use of Grape-Nuts." Name given by Canadian Postum Co., Windsor, Ont.

"There's a reason," and it is explained in the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

London Will Be Shown in Miniature When It Is Completed.

If all goes well and there are no serious delays, three or four years hence the London County Council will have completed what it is believed will be the most wonderful map in the world. Seventeen years have already been consumed in its preparation, and $85,000 has been expended on research and labor connected with it. A further expenditure of about $25,000 is looked forward to with equanimity by the authorities.

The great map will really constitute a twentieth century London edition of England's famous Domesday Book. For it will show practically every building in the 116 square miles that go to make up Greater London, setting forth, as far as possible, the more important owners.

It has often been said that London was owned by a few great landlords, such as the Duke of Westminster, Lord Howard de Walden, Lord Cadogan, the Duke of Bedford, and the Duke of Norfolk.

That is, of course, true in a general way, but this map shows that there are no fewer than 36,000 private owners who each possess enough property to make a noticeable showing on its face.

The map will not be issued to the public, but is really being prepared for the use of the County Council itself. Although its cost has been enormous, it has already paid for itself by providing immediate data in street widening and improvement cases in which the County Council was concerned. It is being drawn to the scale of five square feet to the square mile, so that the completed map, which, of course, will be made in sections, will measure 580 x 580 feet, or 1-82 of a square mile in area.

Further extension is being made to their shipyard by Messrs. Caird & Co., Greenock.

The average annual output of the world in rubber is 90,000 tons, valued at $900,000,000.

COLORS WHICH REPEL FLIES.

Hints for Those Who Wish to Rid Themselves of the Pests.

If you want to drive away flies have the walls of your rooms papered of painted blue, pale violet, dark brown, or lemon yellow.

The advice is based on the outcome of experiments made by a French scientist and recounted by Dr. L. O. Howard, Ph.D., a well-known American public health authority, in his just published book, "The House Fly."

To test the effect of color on the flies a box with glass walls was procured, and the walls were pasted with bits of paper, all of the same size, but of different colors.

The number of flies standing on the different colors were counted, the result being as follows:

Clear green	18
Rose	17
Clear yellow	14
Dark grey	9
White	9
Dark red	8
Black	7
Dark yellow	5
Red	4
Orange	3
Pale rose	3
Very clear green	2
Blue	1
Pale violet	1
Dark brown	1
Lemon yellow	1

Dr. Howard mentions some useful ways of repelling flies. Laurel oil, which the butchers of Geneva use to keep flies from their meat, may be tried with advantage so health and comfort.

NO FORGOTTEN MEMORY.

Grown old in the service of his master and mistress, James was a privileged retainer.

He was waiting at table one day, when a guest politely asked for a fish fork. Strangely enough, the request was ignored.

Then the hostess noticed the episode, and remarked in a most peremptory manner:

"James, Mrs. Jones hasn't a fish fork. Get her one at once!"

"Madam," came the emphatic reply, "last time Mrs. Jones dined here we lost a fish fork."

James has now been relegated to the garden.

A STRANGE RISK.

Lloyds Will Insure a Girl Against Elopement.

They will take any risk at Lloyds. It should be understood that this great corporation has nothing to do with it, but that the brokers issue the policies as individuals. Here are a few specimens of risks actually insured:

The uncle of a rich heiress took out a policy for ten thousand guineas against her eloping with a certain man before a specified date. He paid a thousand guineas premium and the girl did not elope, so the broker was in a thousand guineas.

A young man sued by a girl for damages for breach of promise to marry eight hundred guineas for a policy covering any amount of money the jury might award to the plaintiff. It gave her seven hundred pounds, so the broker made more than a hundred pounds profit.

A cablegram arrived at the office of a ship owner stating that one of his steamers was on the rocks in a dangerous place. The owner took out a policy for £5,500, to be paid to him if the ship was lost. He paid for this a premium of £5,000. The ship was saved so he lost the money.

WONDERFUL PROGRAMME.

Great List of Special Attractions for the C. N. E.

The programme of special attractions for the Canadian National Exhibition has just been issued. It is featured by the Imperial Cadet Review and Competitions with representative corps from all parts of the Empire, and the two famous bands from England, the Scots Guards Band and the Besses O' Th' Barn Band, but these are a small part of the programme. There is enough vaudeville for half a dozen ordinary shows, a historical spectacle, the Siege of Delhi, sixty numbers of Imperial fireworks nightly, Wellington's Zouaves, the Cadet Tatoo, Motor Boat Races, Swimming Races, War Canoe Races, Athletic Meet, Baby Show, etc. It is a truly wonderful programme.

Their fine qualities as a corrector of stomach troubles are known to thousands and they are in constant demand everywhere by those who know what a safe and simple remedy they are. MAKING GOLD FISH.

A large trade in goldfish is now being carried on in Sicily, the coloring being obtained by keeping silver fish in water containing certain chemicals in the form of peat, chalk and iron. After a couple of weeks in this "mixture," the fish are transferred to another bath composed of iron and tan, which has the effect of coloring them red, or black and red, or black, red and silver—according to the length of time they are left in the solution. These fish fetch a better price than the ordinary silver fish, found in large quantities in that region, but it is remarked that so far they die young.

Local insurance agents have received notice that the new statute passed recently by the legislature provides that from August 1st all fire insurance policies issued must be new ones and that all agents must refuse to renew a policy, but must issue in its place an entirely new one. The purpose of the new legislation is to make all policies uniform. The new act is much more stringent than the old one and provides better conditions for those insuring. It will result in the agents being forced to do much more work. It was an easy matter to renew an old policy at its expiration, but now the agents will be forced to issue new ones. A renewal is permitted by the act afterwards.

Very low barometer will warn of danger at this period, with best indications for general rains. Another seismic period involves the 24th to 30th, centering on the 27th.

For The Nervous Woman,

Or the woman who experiences hot flashes nothing is so good to soothe, quiet and calm the nervous system as a pure glyceric extract of native medical plants, skill, made without alcohol, which has been sold by druggists for the past forty years, and most favorably known as Doctor Pierce's Favorite Prescription. In younger years some women suffer from dizziness, or fainting spells, hysteria, headache, bearing-down feelings and pain. All these symptoms of irregularity and female disturbance are relieved by the use of this famous "Prescription" of Doctor Pierce.

As a powerful, invigorating tonic "Favorite Prescription" imparts strength to the whole system, and in particular to the organs distinctly feminine. For over-worked, "worn-out," "run-down," debilitated teachers, milliners, dressmakers, seamstresses, "shop-girls," house-keepers, nursing mothers, and feeble women generally, it is an excellent appetizing cordial and restorative tonic.

MRS. MCDONALD.

"My disease was called retroversion," writes MRS. LYDIA MCDONALD, of Marcellus, Mich., Route 1. "I had nervous chills and numb spells and they would leave me very weak. Then I had inflammation and the doctor said I had a floating kidney. I doctored seven months with two doctors, and thought I would have to have an operation. Then I started taking his medicine. After taking three bottles of Dr. Pierce's medicine I have not had any nervous chills or weak spells. I am better than for years.

"My daughter is now taking the 'Prescription' and Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, also the 'Pellets' for constipation and work, and says, 'These medicines have helped her more in a month than in a short time. We have great faith in your medicines for female troubles.'"

Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets induce mild natural bowel movements.

WEDDED IN WINNIPEG.—One of those pleasant events in which an Exeter young lady contributes to the happiness of another western home, was solemnized at Winnipeg on Thursday evening last, when Miss Lois Birney daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Birney of town, was united in marriage to Mr. D. F. Ferguson, principal of the Dominion Business College of that city. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Elliott, in the presence of a few friends. The bride was attired in a beautiful cream satin, trimmed with pearl, while her travelling suit was navy blue, with black picture hat. The bride is well and favorably known in Exeter, having lived here nearly all her life. Her winsome and sunny ways and sweet disposition have won her countless friends, as was testified by the many and costly presents bestowed upon her prior to her departure for Winnipeg. We are confident that when the Advocate wishes the newly wedded couple a long and useful life and continuous prosperity, we only echo the fervent wishes of the host of intimate friends of the bride.

T. BAKER'S CAR TURNS TURTLE

Mr. Thornton Baker of Exeter, J. Hudson, J. Huntley, James O'Neil and F. Smallacombe of Hensall had a very unpleasant experience on Thursday evening last, when a bump into a crossing on the Main Street of Hensall caused damage to the steering rod of Mr. Baker's auto, with the result that he lost control of the machine, and when he shut off the engine and applied the brakes the car turned completely over and lay up-side-down on a comparatively smooth road. Mr Baker was pinned underneath the steering wheel and rendered unconscious. His wrist and shoulder are somewhat bruised. Jimmy O'Neil was caught under the front fender and the hot water which poured over him scalded him considerably. J. Hudson got his arm broken and F. Smallacombe his arm cut. All with the exception of Mr. Hudson are fully recovered. The engine cover, fenders, windshield, radiator and top of the car were damaged, but the body of the car, and the engine are as good as ever. Mr Baker was able to bring the car home by its own power on Friday. The owner had just finished a trip with several travellers and the Hensall boys had got in the car for a short run around a village block when the accident happened. Their escape from more serious injury may be considered a lucky one.

ONTARIO APPLE CROP

The apple crop this year promises to be very good indeed. One large firm of orchardists who have leased apple orchards all through Ontario report that they expect 100,000 barrels of apples against 33,000 last year. Part of this is due to improved methods of caring for the orchards. The early fruit are only a fair crop, Astrachan and Yellow Transparent being light, and Duchess turning out a medium crop. Spies are light, and Greenings a good average while Baldwins and Ben Davis are a heavy crop. It is expected that the price of fruit will be much lower this year than last.

FATAL AUTO ACCIDENT.

While on his way from Grand Bend to Sarnia during the evening of Aug. 18th William Dillon, a merchant of Sarnia, was so horribly burned when his big touring car caught fire after overturning near Arkona, that he died two days later, after being taken home to Sarnia.

When he turned out to pass a buggy on a narrow road his car went over the edge, and overturned twice before it came to a stand, bottom up, at the foot of the embankment A boy named Lucas was thrown out, but Mr. Dillon, who was driving, was pinned under the steering wheel. In a few seconds a fire started, and as the gasoline leaked out in various places, burned fiercely. Lucas, although badly shaken up, realized Mr. Dillon's position, and made frantic efforts to release him. He worked desperately right in among the flames When he finally succeeded in getting Mr. Dillon out not a particle of the latter's clothing remained, and he was horribly scorched from his neck to his feet. Lucas was badly burned also. So fiercely did the fire rage that in a few minutes nothing remained of the car except the engine and steel work.

HIGH SCHOOL COURSES OF STUDY

Taken up in the H. S. Department of the Exeter Continuation School.

The Lower School Course is covered in Form I. and II. The Middle School Course is covered in Form III. Each of these courses requires two years, though students with exceptional ability may do it in a shorter time. These courses cover the work required for the following Examinations,—Lower School Normal Entrance, Model School Entrance, Middle School Normal Entrance and Jr. Matriculation. Besides the above courses special attention is given to the Commercial Department, in which a two years course for a Commercial diploma is taken up. To complete these courses in the prescribed time students must be regular in attendance and must faithfully perform their work, not only in school hours, but in the exercises required for home work. Parents, therefore are advised to see that their children are prompt and regular in attendance and do carefully all exercises given for home work, as no pupil, especially in Forms II. and III., can expect to make the progress required without doing from 1½ to 2½ hours of home work every night. Parents should also consult with the principal regarding the best course for their child with a view to its future occupation, and watch carefully the monthly reports to note the progress made, to ensure the best results.- School re-opens Tuesday, September 3rd.

BURGLARLY AT WINGHAM.

Wingham, Aug. 19.—The National Hotel was the scene of the most extensive burglary in Wingham for some time. Some time on Friday evening thieves succeeded in getting away with about $1000 in jewelry and papers from the private apartments of Mr. and Mrs. B. J. Doyle, proprietor of the National. Mr. McCurdy, a roomer at the hotel for some time and a machinist in A. Crawford's garage, has been arrested on suspicion, but the dragnet is still out for a couple of accomplices, whom they expect to land shortly. One of these is a woman. The jewelry consisted of diamond rings, a lady's gold watch and chain, a necklace and several other articles. By a mere chance the thief overlooked $500 in cash, which was beneath some clothes in the next drawer.

A POPULAR SCHOOL

It is freely admitted that among the High Grade Commercial Schools of Canada, the Clinton Business College stands in the fore front. In point of attendance this college is only exceeded by three or four in Ontario. It is affiliated with the Commercial Educators' Association of Canada, and its management last year trained and placed in excellent position over two thousand young people thus making them the largest trainers in Canada.

Recently Mr. Spotton visited Colleges in Detroit, Cleveland, Buffalo, Rochester, Syracuse, New York, and Boston, and with the knowledge of Business Science gained from his tour, he promises the most modern training that man be procured.

Thousands of ambitious young people are studying entirely at home by means of the Home Study Department, while they follow their regular work; others are studying partly at home and will finish at college. The Clinton Business College guarantees positions. Last year the demand for its graduates was many times the supply. All interested in bettering their condition should write, call, or phone for particulars. This institution re-opens Sept. 2 and 3.

CAHPTER XIV.

The cemetery just outside the Stadsport at Bergen, which had called forth the eager admiration of Blanche Morgan in the previous summer, looked perhaps even lovelier now that winter had come with its soft, white shroud. The body of Sigurd Falck rested beside that of his wife in the midst of all this loveliness, and one winter afternoon Sigrid and little Swanhild came to bring to the grave their wreaths and crosses, for it was their father's birthday. They had walked from their uncle's house laden with all the flowers they had been able to collect, and now stood at the gate of the cemetery, which opened stiffly owing to the frost. Sigrid looked older and even sadder than she had done in the first shock of her father's death, but little Swanhild had just the same fair rosy face as before.

"No one else has remembered his birthday," she said, as they entered the silent grave-yard. "See, the snow is quite untrodden. Sigrid, when are they going to put father's name on the stone?" and she pointed to the slanting marble slab which leaned against the small cross. "There is only mother's name still. Won't they put a bigger slab instead where there will be room for both"

"Not now," said Sigrid, her voice trembling.

"But why not, Sigrid? Every one else has names put. It seems as if we had forgotten him."

"Oh, no, no," said Sigrid, with a sob. "It isn't that, darling; it is that we remember so well, and know what he would have wished about it."

"I don't understand," said the child wistfully.

"It is in this way," said Sigrid taking her hand tenderly. "I can not have money spent on the tombstone, because he would not have liked it. Oh, Swanhild!—you must know it some day, you shall hear it now—it was not only his own money that was lost, it was the money of other people. And till it is paid back how can I alter this?"

Swanhild's eyes grew large and bright.

"It was that, then, that made him die," she faltered. "He would be so sorry for the other people. Oh, Sigrid, I will be so good; I don't think I shall ever be naughty again. Why didn't you tell me before, and then I shouldn't have been cross because you wouldn't buy me things?"

"I wanted to shield you and keep you from knowing," said Sigrid. "But after all, it is better that you should hear it from me than from some outsider."

"You will treat me like a baby, Sigrid, and I'm ten years old after all—quite old enough to be told things. . . And oh, you'll let me help to earn money and pay back the people, won't you?"

"That is what Frithiof is trying to do," said Sigrid, "but it is so difficult and so slow. And I can't think of anything we can do to help."

"Poor dear old Frithiof," said Swanhild. And she gazed away over the frozen lake to the snow mountains which bounded the view, as if she would like to see right through them into the big London shop where, behind a counter, there stood a fair-haired Norseman toiling bravely to pay off those debts of which she had just heard.

Very sadly they left the cemetery, pausing again to struggle with the stiff gate, while Swanhild held the empty flower-baskets.

"Can't you do it?" exclaimed the child. "What a tiresome gate it is! worse to fasten than to unfasten. But see! here come the Lundgrens. They will help."

Sigrid glanced round, blushing vividly as she met the eager eyes of Torvald Lundgren, one of Frithiof's school friends. The greetings were frank and friendly on both sides, and Madale, a tall, pretty girl of sixteen, took little Swanhild's arm and walked on with her.

"Let us leave those two to settle the gate between them," she said, smiling. "It is far too cold to wait for them."

Now Torvald Lundgren was a year or two older than Frithiof, and having long been in a position of authority he was unusually old for his age. As a friend Sigrid liked him, but of late she had half feared that he wished to be more than a friend, and consequently she was not well pleased to see that, by the time the gate was actually shut, Madale and Swanhild were far in advance of them.

"Have you heard from Frithiof yet?" she asked, walking on briskly.

"No," said Torvald. "Pray scold him well for me when you next write. How does he seem? In better spirits again?"

"I don't know," said Sigrid; "even to me he writes very seldom. It is wretched having him so far away and not knowing what is happening to him."

"I wish there was anything I could do for him," said Torvald, "but there seems no chance of any opening out here for him."

"That is what my uncle says. Yet it was no fault of Frithiof's, it seems hard that he should have to suffer. I think the world is very cruel. You and Madale were almost the only friends who stood by us; you were almost the only ones who scattered fir branches in the road on the morning of my father's funeral."

"You noticed that?" he said, coloring.

"Yes; when I saw how little had been strewn I felt hurt and sore to think that the others had shown so little respect for him, and grateful to you and Madale."

"Sigrid," he said, quietly, "why will you not let me be something more to you than a friend? All that I have is yours. You are not happy in Herr Gronvold's house. Let me take care of you. Come and make my house happy, and bring Swanhild with you to be my little sister."

"Oh, Torvald!" she cried, "I wish you had not asked me that. You are so good and kind, but—but—"

"Do not answer me just yet, then; take time to think it over," he pleaded; "and indeed I would do my best to make you very happy."

"I know you would," she replied, her eyes filling with tears. "But yet it could never be. I could never love you as a wife should love a husband, and I am much too fond of you, Torvald, to let you be married just for your comfortable house."

"Your aunt led me to expect that, perhaps, in time, after your first grief had passed—"

"Then it was very wrong of her," said Sigrid, hotly. "You have always been my friend—a sort of second brother to me—and oh, do let it be so still. Don't leave off being my friend because of this, for indeed I can not help it."

"My only wish is to help you," he said, sadly, "it shall be as you would have it."

And then they walked on together in an uncomfortable silence until they overtook the others at Herr Gronvold's gate, where Torvald grasped her hand for a moment, then, looking at his watch, hurried Madale away, saying that he should be late for some appointment.

Fru Gronvold had unluckily been looking out of the window and had seen the little group outside. She opened the front door as the two girls climbed the steps.

"Why did not the Lundgrens come in?" she asked, a look of annoyance passing over her thin, worn face.

"I didn't ask them," said Sigrid, blushing.

"And I think Torvald had some engagement," said Swanhild, unconsciously coming to the rescue.

"You have been out a long time, Swanhild, now run away to your practicing," said Fru Gronvold, in the tone which the child detested. "Come in here, Sigrid, I want a word with you."

Fru Gronvold had the best of hearts, but her manner was unfortunate; from sheer anxiety to do well by people she often repulsed them. To Sigrid, accustomed from her earliest girlhood to come and go as she pleased and to manage her father's house, this manner was almost intolerable. She resented interference most strongly, and was far too young and inexperienced to see, beneath her aunt's dictatorial tone, the real kindness that existed. Her blue eyes looked defiant as she marched into the sitting-room, and drawing off her gloves began to warm her hands by the stove.

"Why did you not ask Torvald Lundgren to come in?" asked Fru Gronvold, taking up her knitting.

"Because I didn't want to ask him, auntie."

"But you ought to think what other people want, not always of yourself."

"I did," said Sigrid, quickly. "I knew he didn't want to come in."

"What nonsense you talk, child!" said Fru Gronvold, knitting with more vigor than before, as if she vented her impatience upon the sock she was making. "You must know quite well that Torvald admires you very much; it is mere affection to pretend not to see what is patent to all the world."

"I do not pretend," said Sigrid, angrily, "but you—you have encouraged him to hope, and it is unfair and unkind of you. He told me you had spoken to him."

"What! he has proposed to you?" said Fru Gronvold, dropping her work. "Did he speak to you today, dear?"

"Yes," said Sigrid, blushing crimson.

"And you said you would let him have his answer later on. I see, Of course you could not ask him in."

"I said nothing of the sort," said Sigrid, vehemently. "I told him that I could never think of marrying him, and we shall still be the good friends we have always been."

"My dear child," cried Fru Gronvold, with genuine distress in her tone, "how could you be so foolish, so blind to all your own interests? He is a most excellent fellow, good and steady and rich—all that heart could wish."

"There, I don't agree with you," said Sigrid, perversely. "I should wish my husband to be very different. He is just like Torvald in Ibsen's 'Ett Dukkenhjem,' we always told him so."

"Pray don't quote that hateful play to me," said Fru Gronvold. "Every one knows that Ibsen's foolish ideas about women being equal to men and sharing their confidence, could only bring misery and mischief. Torvald Lundgren is a good, upright, honorable man, and your refusing him is most foolish."

"He is very good, I quite admit," said Sigrid. "He is my friend, and has been always, and will be always. But if he were the only man on earth nothing would induce me to marry him. It would only mean wretchedness for us both."

"Well, pray don't put your foolish notions about equality and ideal into Karen's head," said Fru Gronvold, sharply. "Since you are so stupid and unpractical it will be well that Karen should accept the first good offer she receives."

"We are not likely to discuss the matter," said Sigrid, and rising to her feet she hurriedly left the room.

Upstairs she ran choking with angry tears, her aunt's last words haunting her persistently and inflicting deeper wounds the more she dwelt upon them.

"She wants me to marry him so that she may be rid of the expense of keeping us," thought the poor girl. "She doesn't really care for us a bit, for all the time she is grudging the money we cost her. But I won't be such a bad friend to poor Torvald as to marry him because I am miserable here. I would rather starve than do that. Oh! how I hate her maxims about taking what you can get! Why should love and equality and a true union lead to misery and mischief? It is the injustice of lowering woman into a mere pleasant housekeeper that brings half the pain of the world, it seems to me."

But by the time Sigrid had lived through the long evening, bearing as best she might the consciousness of her aunt's disappointment and vexation with her, another thought had begun to stir in her heart. And when that night she went to her room her tears were no longer the tears of anger, but of a miserable loneliness and desolation.

She looked at little Swanhild lying fast asleep, and wondered how the refusal would affect her life.

"After all," she thought to herself, "Swanhild would have been happier had I accepted him. She would have had a much nicer home, and Torvald would never have let her feel thats he was a burden. He would have been very kind to us both, and I suppose I might have made him happy—as happy as he would ever have expected to be. And I might have been able to help Frithiof, for we should have been rich. Perhaps I am losing this chance of what would be best for every one else just for a fancy. Oh, what am I to do? After all, he would have been very kind, and here they are not really kind. He would have taken such care of me, and it would surely be very nice to be taken care of again."

WATCH YOUR CHILDREN'S HEALTH

If any of your children seem to be pale and anaemic, growing too fast or too slowly, don't start doctoring them. Food is the keynote of a child's growth and health. Some children, owing to constitutional weakness, or as a result of children's diseases, will not thrive on food from which stronger ones benefit. In such cases the addition of Bovril to the diet will produce marked results.

Bovril is concentrated beef in its best and most palatable form. Stringent scientific tests have shown that it is a great body-builder. It is in itself a highly condensed food, but it possesses the remarkable power of enabling the system to draw the full store of nutriment from ordinary food. Give your child between meals, once a day, a cup of warm milk, in which you have stirred a spoonful of Bovril, and try a dash of Bovril in your gravies, sauces and soups. It will be not only the delicate ones who will appreciate the added zest, all will benefit from the increased nutrition.

TRAVELLING LIGHT.

Yet De Latocnaye Was Able to Appear at Dinner in Full Dress.

Sir Charles Napier was once delightfully pictured in Punch as setting out for Scinde with "his soap" and very little besides. De Latocnaye, a Breton emigre of 1796, who travelled in Ireland, chiefly on foot, and invariably turned up at the houses of his friends with almost no visible baggage, carried nearly as simple an outfit. Yet in some mysterious way he was always able to appear at dinner in full dress. In his book, "Promenade en Irlande," De Latocnaye tells how he accomplished this feat.

"I had my hair-powder in a bag made of a lady's glove; my razor, needles, thread, scissors and a comb all went into a pair of dancing-pumps. In addition, I carried two pairs of silk stockings, breeches of such fine stuff that they would fold up as small as my fist, three cravats, two very fine shirts, three pocket-handkerchiefs, and a dress coat with six pockets.

"Three of these pockets I kept for letters, portfolio, and so forth; in the others, whenever I was going to call at a decent house, I stowed away my belongings, which were packed, some in the pumps, the rest in one of the pairs of stockings.

"At other times," he concludes, with more than French vivacity, "I tied the three parcels in a handkerchief and carried them at the end of my walknig-stick, on which I had managed to fix an umbrella."

Thus equipped, he stayed at Lord Kenmare's for a week, at Hazelwood and at Florence Court for the same length of time, at Lord Altamont's and Ballynahinch for longer still, no doubt to the astonishment of housemaids as well as of hosts. But he was never disturbed by his lack of luggage, and steadily refused all proffered loans of clothing.

By the time De Latocnaye got to Sligo the weather had broken, and he was obliged to add a spencer to his wordrobe.

"Here's a little problem for you. Jones bought a dog for $10, and sold it for 15 per cent. profit, to Smith. Smith sold it to Robinson for 23⅓ per cent. profit, and Robinson unloaded it on Perkins for 5 per cent. more gain. Then Perkins sold the brute at a 10 per cent. loss. Now, the question is, what did Perkins sell it for?"

"Gosh! Too complicated for me. What did Perkins sell it for?"

"Because it bit one of his children on the leg!"

ANIMAL HAPPINESS.

The dairyman who is looking for results will not allow the dog or the small boy to worry his cows. He knows that if he wants a well-filled pail they must not be frightened, but kept quiet and content.

The grower of beef cattle is sure to weed out the one that is continually bawling, when it should be grazing, for the simple reason that there is more waste than gain of adipose tissue at such a time. The stock content to feed upon the good pasture at hand, rather than busy themselves trying to break into forbidden fields, possibly not nearly as good, are the ones that make the most gain in weight.

The hen that is dogged every time she finds a nice soft place to scratch is not the one that makes the best egg record. She may be hard on the garden, but a good fence would easily fix that. Do not discourage her natural efforts and then expect her to do her best for you.

The horse that is compelled to fight flies continually cannot get in a full day's work, or at least if it does there is less in stamina which eventually tells on the life work of the animal. Neither can it do its best with an ill-fitting harness. The horse that is comfortable and in good spirits is the one which makes the record.

A flock of sheep harassed by dogs soon show the trouble in their general condition as surely as in their manner. Fleetness of foot is not one of the characteristics of the animal and when this is enforced as a means of preservation it is to the detriment of the flock.

The farmer and his family, as well as his stock, accomplish more when carefree and in a happy turn of mind. All Nature is fresh and cheerful. It is profitable for us to be likewise!

CROWDING OUT THE HENS.

Where not many years ago nine out of ten farms had never heard of an incubator, to-day the word is passing from farm to farm that the profits are larger, the work less onerous, the hatches more sure, and the hens are taking fewer holidays, laying more eggs. Not all on account of the incubators, but primarily on account of the incubator, and, secondly, on account of the large amount of book knowledge distributed with it.

The farmer's wife is doing her share in the profit-making. She always has done it, but now she is getting recognition as a partner in the business.

This is having—it has had—its effect, and the result is, farmers are now posted on poultry profits. They will continue to be posted, and those who have been operating incubators will go back to hen incubation only when they return to the old custom of treading out the grain with oxen—only when they are prepared to put the cream separator on the shelf.

Poultrymen who are in the business commercially—whose living depends upon the profits—would as soon think of threshing grain with the old-time flail as they would of hatching chicks or ducklings with hens or ducks. The thought would be absurd. Without the incubator they would have to go out of business.

NOTES OF THE HOG LOT.

If a thin sow has more pigs than she can suckle to advantage, take part of them away and raise them on a bottle.

They should be taken away when only two or three days old, and they will then quickly learn to take milk through the ordinary nursing bottle with a rubber nipple and in a short time will learn to drink from the trough.

Bad practice to sell good brood sows and replace with young gilts, as continued breeding from immature sows will produce a weak strain.

In selecting a brood sow watch the herd at feeding time. The thriftiest always get to the trough first, and these are the ones to buy.

Never buy a brood sow with short legs and short, chunky body. She must have big feeding capacity in order to produce plenty of milk.

LEARN TO GRAFT.

Why not urge the boys to experiment in grafting different kinds of fruit trees? Dig up some small fruit trees, such as plum, cherry, apple or peach, some of which can be raised by planting the seed. The plum and cherry trees can be found almost any time where the sprouts come from the old trees. Then get some limbs from a tree of the same kind and of a choice variety and bury them all in a box of dry dirt in the cellar. At any time during the winter or spring graft them and put them back in the dirt till time to plant out.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

An English specialist on insanity, Dr. Tredgold, expresses the opinion that England is going to the bow-wows as a nation because of a decline in the vitality of her population. The average death rate from illness, he says, has steadily increased in the last two generations; the proportion of infant deaths due to constitutional defects is as high to-day as it was thirty-five years ago, and the insane have increased enormously, so that there are to-day 280,000 mentally affected persons in England and Wales.

Dr. Tredgold's close study of a specialty may account for his dismal outlook and his interpretation of certain statistics. To those who believe that the world is progressing, not going backward, and that the leading modern nations are destined to be leading for many years to come, such utterances will seem absurd. Statistics must be used with full knowledge of the way in which they were prepared and of changing conditions, or they are worse than useless, while at best they are an imperfect guide. They must be correlated to other evidence. When everything is considered there is too much against Dr. Tredgold's conclusions. Every modern nation is working toward obtaining and securing social justice; science is lessening disease and teaching us how to live rightly; improvement, not degeneracy, is coming.

Whether women are morally better than men is a very old question which is not likely to be answered satisfactorily by statistics. But some figures in the reports of the recently taken British census are interesting as bearing on the subject.

There are in British prisons 1,000 men to 139 women; in certified reformatory industrial schools, 1,000 men to 278 women; in workhouse establishments, 1,000 men to 655 women. The workhouse, of course, means poverty, but that may come from moral degeneracy or lack of moral fiber. These figures make a showing in favor of women which is increased by consideration of the fact that the census shows 1,340,000 more females than males in the kingdom's population of 45,365,000.

It can be argued, of course, that women's wrongdoings are more often secret than men's; that most women and girls are sheltered in homes and have fewer opportunities of committing offenses against the law; that often they are not prosecuted for acts that men would be prosecuted for doing, and that timidity rather than real goodness causes very many women to refrain from crime. But the figures alone are strongly supportive of the popular impression that women are better than men.

WONDERFUL CULTIVATION.

Spanish Soil Gives a Yield of $656 to the Acre.

The most intensely cultivated region in Europe is that part of the Province of Valencia, Spain, which lies between the mountains and the Mediterranean. It has a rainfall of only about seventeen inches a year, but so fertile is the soil and so skilled are its workers that it produces crops worth an average of $656 an acre.

There are districts, he says, where 100 acres support 160 families, and where single families live on the product of four-tenths of an acre. Farms are rented for $29.50 an acre, and the tenant pays 45 cents an hour for pumped water, which flows in a stream of 200 gallons per minute.

Almost all farming is done by hand, as minutest attention is given to crops and even to individual plants. The average production of the principal crops is as follows, in metric tons of 2,204 pounds: Oranges, 400,000 tons; olives, 65,000; carob beans, 72,000; peanuts, 13,500; melons, 36,000; grapes, 87,000; peppers, 12,000; tomatoes, 27,000; wheat, 62,000; barley, 18,000; corn, 33,000; rice, 200,000.

"Always mind your own business," said the sage. "It doesn't pay to get mixed up in other people's quarrels." "Oh, I don't know!" replied the young man. "I'm a lawyer."

Beat egg light, add to it the milk and stir the dry mixture. Turn into a buttered pan and stand in a warm place for one-half hour. Bake three-quarters of an hour in a moderately hot oven.

TO PREVENT MOLD.

The appearance of mold as growing on bread, cheese and other foods, is familiar to every housewife; mildew on cloth is a less commonly recognized form of mold.

The spores of the different varieties of mold are everywhere present, and they need only warmth and moisture to enable them to grow on many kinds of food. These organisms are always at work in damp cellars and in dark and damp corners of rooms; they are borne on the feet of insects, and they are on the skins of all fruits, and in the dust flying in the air.

They are not fond of light and they require no great abundance of air, flourishing best on foods that are piled close together, leaving a small, undisturbed air space and moisture. They always start on the surface and throw their thread-like filaments down into the substance below.

Take, for example, a fine, ripe apple and closely examine the skin. If it is in good condition and attractive, it is almost certain that the flesh is protected in the natural way by an unbroken skin, which resists the entrance of molds and other micro-organisms. If, however, the apple has begun to spoil, it is almost certain that the skin has been broken.

When fruits touch each other, the point of contact is likely to be more moist than the rest of the fruit, and for this and other reasons it is a favorite place for the starting of mold or other growth. If the skin is perfectly firm and we rub it with a clean cloth to dry it and to remove as many as possible of the mold germs, then wrap the apple in soft paper and put it in a cold place, precautions have been taken which should hinder, or prevent, decay. If, however, the fruit is kept in a warm and damp place, and touching other fruits, its decay is certain.

In dealing with all varieties of microscopic life we have learned that to prevent them from getting a start is the all-important thing. The growth, once begun, is difficult to arrest.

The first requisite is absolute cleanliness in the storage place. This is not to be attained by the use of soap and water alone. Fresh air, sunshine and whitewash are important aids. Shelves should be washed clean and then dried, but the undue use of water should be avoided, as moisture is one of the chief requisites of growth.

A cellar may be kept dry by placing in it dishes of unslaked lime, which takes up the moisture with avidity. When the lime crumbles apart, losing entirely its crystalline character, it has become "slaked," will take up no more water and must be renewed.

The growth of most molds is retarded by light ventilation and low temperature. Light and ventilation are important. The right degree of cold for each different product has been studied experimentally, and a knowledge of low temperature in relation to the growth of bacteria and fungi forms the basis of the cold-storage industry.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

INTERNATIONAL LESSON, AUGUST 25.

Lesson VIII.—The visit to Nazareth,, Luke 4. 16-30. Golden Text, John 1. 11.

Verse 16. Came to Nazareth—In the course of the Galilaean preaching tour. At first it would seem that St. Luke places the incident immediately after the temptation, but according to Matthew 13. 53-58, and Mark 6. 1-6, it undoubtedly occurred much later, as Luke himself later suggests in verse 23. Nazareth is not mentioned in the Old Testament, but gained its prominence from being the home of Jesus. It is situated on the southern end of the Lebanon Mountains, and has an elevation of 1,600 feet above the sea. Situated some distance from the main highways, it has all the characteristics of a rural town. Its present population is about 11,000.

Had been brought up—With the exception of the brief period in Egypt, thirty years of Jesus's life were spent here.

As his custom was—A sidelight on the religious training of Jesus and the devoted life which he lived.

The sabbath day—The seventh day, which was the Jewish Sabbath. The change of the Sabbath day from the seventh to the first day of the week did not come about until after the resurrection. It was essentially a change from a Jewish Sabbath to a Christian Sabbath, or "Lord's Day" (Rev. 1. 10). After the resurrection the disciples began the custom of meeting each first day of the week, itself the day of the resurrection, to celebrate that event, which to the disciples was the greatest of all Christian events. Naturally the day itself became the greatest of all Christian days, so that gradually the observance of the seventh day was abandoned, and that of the first day became a fixed custom. See Acts 20. 7; 1 Cor. 16. 2.

Stood up to read—The Law and the Prophets were read standing. The reading was done by any ordinary member of the congregation, even by boys under age.

Delivered unto him—By the hazzan, or attendant, verse 20.

17. The book—Or, roll. The reading of the roll necessitated the use of both hands, the right unrolling, and the left rolling up the parchment. At the conclusion of the reading the document was re-rolled and thus made ready for use again. This was done by "holding the roll beneath the chin and turning with both hands."

Found the place—Isaiah 61. 1, 2 and 58. 6. Possibly his own selection, but more likely the lesson which the Jewish lectionary prescribed for the day. It referred to the future deliverance of the Hebrew exiles from Babylon by the Righteous Servant of Jehovah. Jesus represents the prophecy to be fulfilled in himself as Saviour.

18. Spirit of the Lord—Realized by Jesus at his baptism. In Isaiah these words are spoken by the Righteous Servant of Jehovah, whom Jesus identifies with himself. As such he has received the special anointing of the Holy Spirit.

Anointed—A figure taken from the practice of anointing kings and prophets as they enter their respective offices, and smybolizing divine appointment and authority.

Good tidings—Or, the gospel.

Proclaim release — The original reference to the Babylonian exiles is given a spiritual significance. It now means release from the traditionalism and legalism of the Pharisees and from sin.

Recovering of sight — Spiritual blindness is to be relieved through the revelation of truth in Christ.

Bruised—Those who suffer from the unjust exactions of a religious system.

19. Acceptable year—Literally, when the exiles would return. Jesus now causes it to mean the inauguration of glorious privileges and benefits of the gospel message.

20. Eyes of all—In amazement because of their familiarity with his humble life, his reported fame, and his spiritual presence.

21. To-day hath this scripture been fulfilled—The open assertion that he fulfilled all the conditions of the prophecy.

22. Bare him witness—Corroborated the reports concerning the effectiveness of his preaching.

Joseph's son—A very common person. The family had no prominence in the community whatever; Joseph was a carpenter by trade, and as far as the people could see Jesus was in no way distinguished above his brothers. Compare Mark 6. 3.

23. Physician, heal thyself — As though to say, "Raise yourself in our estimation, by means of a miracle, from the common citizen we know you to be, to the Teacher of God which you claim to be."

Heard done at Capernaum — The exact site of the city has long been in dispute, but the most probable location is at the northern end of the plain of Gennesaret, on the north-western shore of Lake Galilee. The region was thickly populated and the scene of much miracle working and teaching, the reports of which had reached Nazareth.

24. No prophet is acceptable in his own country—A commonly accepted fact which Jesus illustrates from history. Read 1 Kings 17 and 2 Kings 5.

28. All filled with wrath—Wonder and amazement had given way to anger and violence.

29. Brow of the hill—A precipice southeast of the city.

30. Passing through the midst—They were overawed by his mysterious influence and he went his way unharmed.

HOME HINTS.

How to Wash Glasses.—Glasses which are used for milk or any milky substances should always be washed in cold water in preference to hot, as the latter is apt to leave a cloudy appearance and necessitate a great deal more labor in the washing. The same rule applies to perfectly new glasses which have not been used.

When buying bacon notice that the rind is thin, the lean tender and adhering to the bone, and the fat firm with a pinkish hue. If the fat has yellow streaks in it the bacon will taste nasty and rancid.

To Make Brooms Wear Well. — It is a good plan to dip brooms in very hot soapsuds once a week. This toughens their bristles, and the brooms not only last longer, but also sweep better than if they were kept perfectly dry

The Cold Joint.—Any boiled or roasted meat that can be eaten cold should be cooled in its gravy or liquor, and a boiled ham should always be cooled before skinning, and in its liquor; the taste is altogether different, and the meat does not dry nearly so much.

Loose Knife Handles. — Knife handles that have become loose can be refastened to the blades. Make a mixture of equal parts of quicklime and powdered resin, half fill the hole in the handle, made the part which goes into the handle hot, and insert it firmly in the hole. Let it remain without moving until quite cold, when it will be perfectly firm again.

Eat Plenty of Toast.—Bread that has been toasted until it becomes brown has had the starch in it largely converted into dextrine, and hence, so far as the brown portion is concerned, one of the processes of digestion is gone through before the bread is taken into the stomach. It will be found that the thinner the slices of bread, and the more thoroughly they are toasted, the easier digestion will be, and when all portions of the slice of bread are thoroughly toasted—not burned, but changed to a deep brown color—it will be found still more easily digested.

SHE DIDN'T KNOW MOTHER.

Boys will be boys, except when they are little wretches, and Tommy was no exception.

He had broken one of the school rules, and the teacher told him to tell his mother about it, and also about the punishment he had received. This was foxy of teacher. She thought mother might thrash him again.

The next morning she asked:

"Well, Tommy, did you tell your mother about your bad behaviour yesterday, and how I punished you?"

"Yes, miss," replied Tommy quickly.

"Well, what did your mother say?" was teacher's next question.

"Said she'd like to wring your neck, miss," replied Tommy calmly.

NEW TESTAMENT TEACHING

The Future was to be the Messianic Age, Holy and Marked by the Presence of God

Israel was a nation of hope and promise. Unlike other peoples its golden age was in the future, not in the past. From the earliest beginning of national consciousness it was a gradually developing belief that Israel had a special mission, separate from the rest of the world, yet in some important degree connected with the spiritual life of the world. The divine purpose for humanity was believed to lie implicit in the unfolding history of this people. The Hebrew records preserved the first promise made to the race, a promise that, though the struggle between good and evil should be long and bitter, yet in the end the good should triumph. This divine purpose manifested itself in the selection of certain individuals or tribes, through whose life the disclosure of the plans of God was to be made. But it was not a selection for favor, but rather for service.

Israel was the chosen people of God, but not for its own sake. It had a ministry for the world. Its leaders were prophets, priests, and kings, and these men, especially the prophets, were unique in their character and work. Their counterpart is not to be found in any other history. But in the last analysis the nation as a whole was regarded as royal, as priestly, as prophetic. What these special men did as leaders for the nation, Israel as a unit was to do for the world. Herein lay its unique office. But from the time of Amos and Hosea it was seen that the nation as a whole was unprepared for such a ministry. The religion of Jehovah was set aside too often for that of other gods, or was mixed with unworthy elements that robbed it of its effectiveness.

A CLEANSING PROCESS

alone could purify the people and make them worthy of their high ministry; and the agency through which this regeneration was to be wrought was recognized by all the prophets of that period as being national overthrow by Assyria and later Babylonia. Only such a purification as should come through disaster and suffering could avail to prepare Israel for its true mission. But after this period of suffering had passed the "remnant" or survivors would be worthy and a glorious future should be expected.

The consecration of kings and priests was signified by their anointing with holy oil. From this word "anointed" or "Messiah" grew up the idea of the future glorious time as "anointed" or "Messianic." The conception of a person who should stand as the common deneminator of the new period of national salvation and purification is first presented by Isaiah. In his rebuke of King Ahaz for presumptious disregard of God the prophet announces the birth of a child, in whose day, soon to dawn, and under whose leadership as a conqueror, and yet a prince of peace, the national deliverance was to be achieved, after which there would come the period of happiness and peace. That Isaiah expected this child-king of the house of David in his own day seems certain; and herein is disclosed one of the interesting factors of prophecy.

The outlines of the coming of things were apparent to the eyes of the prophet, but the hour of the arrival was not so clear. The drama of redemption was contracted into a single scene, but its larger meaning lay implicit in the slowly unfolding movements upon which they looked. Deliverance from Assyria came, but not through the rise at that time of the Messianic king. Yet the vision was true, for the larger outlines of the Messianic time yet ahead fitted in no small degree the local distress and the certainly unforeseen deliverance. It remained for a later prophetic utterance to set forth of the true character of the Messianic work and the outlines of the Messianic figure. The Evangelical Prophesy discloses the Messianic hope in its fullest light, and does this under the figure of the suffering servant of God. Here at first Israel as a whole is the servant. Though fallen upon unhappy days, yet this very time is one of purification; and, now that the process of purgation is reaching its completion, it is time to prepare for the larger things to come. Redemption is not to be wrought by war and strife, as was the earlier view, but by peaceful methods, and therefore the figure of the king no longer appears, but the servant in a humble and yet successful work.

Presently, however, the idea that the nation as a whole can do the great work appears to be abandoned. Too many are indifferent. The remnant, the best part of the nation, is all that can be counted upon in such an enterprise. This remnant will save not only the apostate part of the nation, but the world at large. But even the remnant was weak and unable to accomplish the divine work; and at last one rises from the remnant, a representative of both it and the whole nation, able to do that which both had failed to accomplish, the divine servant, the Messiah. In Isaiah lii., 13, liii., 12 the success of the servant's mission is set forth in terms that show the blending of the personal and the national ideas about the Messianic figure. That this conception of the Messiah finds its fulfilment in the historic work of Jesus Christ is the teaching of the New Testament.—Dr. Herbert L. Willett.

Young Folks

CHEERFUL HEART.

Annabel had been cross. The trouble began when her mother asked her to do an errand. She grumbled before she started and after she returned. When she had to wheel baby brother she grumbled again. When she had to practise her music-lesson for an extra half-hour, she shed tears all over the piano keys.

When mother had gone up-stairs with baby brother, Uncle Louis told her the true story of Cheerful Heart.

"In an Indian school in New Mexico," he said, "there was an orphan boy who had never known any home until he was brought to the government school. He had never had anything he could do without. Many of the Indian boys had partly civilized parents, and they lived in houses all their lives and spoke good English. But in all the hundred boys in that school, not one was loved so well as Cheerful Heart."

"That's a funny name for a boy," Annabel had forgotten to pout by this time.

"So it is. His real name was Albert Wilson, but he was so happy, so kind and obliging, they couldn't help calling him Cheerful Heart. He smiled whenever he spoke, and looked as happy as a king when he could do a favor."

"Perhaps he didn't have many chances," ventured Annabel, "and that made it easy."

"My dear, he had nothing but chances. The teachers, matrons and pupils were saying all day long, 'Come here, Cheerful Heart,' or, 'Go there, Cheerful Heart,' or, 'Where's Cheerful Heart?'"

"Did he really like it?" the question was asked rather shyly, because Annabel was thinking.

"If you could judge by his happy face, he did. Remember that he was poor, and had no home to visit, no parents to love him, no baby brother to pet. But his black eyes sparkled, his red-brown face shone and his merry laugh bubbled all the time.

"'He's the most unselfish boy I ever met,' his teacher said to me. 'We took him in here because he needed us, but he has turned the tables, for we all need him.' It must be nice to have people feel that way toward one, mustn't it, Annabel?"

The little girl nodded. She did not feel like talking just then. Uncle Louis had one thing more to say. "Annabel, if Cheerful Heart was ready to do so much for others when he had so little himself, what do you think about the children who have good times and happy homes, and yet behave disagreeably and in a way to make the Indians name them 'Cross Patch'?"

"They ought to be ashamed, Uncle Louis. I'm going to try to be a Cheerful Heart, too." — Youth's Companion.

HOPELESS.

Mistress—"Mary Ann, the soup for lunch was spoiled again. I really believe that if you tried to boil some water you'd let it burn."

Deafness Cannot be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars free.

Not Just What He Said.

A well known parson, preaching to a crowded congregation at a church where in his younger days he had been curate, alluded to the many changes that had taken place. He contrasted the attendance with that of days gone by and remarked, "At one time in this church there was not a soul—er—person in the gallery."

If they've arrived at the dignity o' sawin' wood I alwus tell 'em to saw the biggest fust. If they asks why, an' they mostly does, I say, 'So's you'll only have the little sticks to saw when you gets tuckered out.'

"An' I tell ye now," concluded Erastus graciously, quite as if the camper had asked for "pointers" on a back yard job, "it's jes' the same with pilin'. Put the big sticks to the bottom. It's mighty bilious exercise a liftin' of 'em to the top."—Youth's Companion.

MAN AND THE SOIL.

Dr. R. V. Pierce of Buffalo, author of the Common Sense Medical Adviser, says "why does not the farmer treat his own body as he treats the land he cultivates. He puts back in phosphate what he takes out in crops, or the land would grow poor. The farmer should put back into his body the vital elements exhausted by labor, or by ill-health induced by some chronic disease." Further, he says, "the great value of my Doctor Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery is in its vitalizing power. It gives strength to the stomach and purity to the blood. It is like the phosphates which supply nature with the substances that build up the crops. The far-reaching action of is due to its effect on the stomach and organs of digestion and nutrition. Diseases that begin in the stomach are cured through the stomach. A bilious spell is simply the result of an effort made by the liver to catch up when over-worked and exhausted. I have found the 'Discovery' to be unsurpassed as a liver regulator and rich blood-maker."

MISS LOTTIE KNISELY of Perth, Kansas, says: "I will here add my testimony of the effectiveness of your remedy upon myself. I was troubled with indigestion for two years or more. Doctored with three different doctors besides taking numerous kinds of so-called 'stomach cures' but received no permanent relief. I was run down, could not sleep at night with the pain in my chest, caused by gas on the stomach. Was weak, could eat scarcely anything although I was hungry nearly all the time. About one year and a half ago I began taking your 'Golden Medical Discovery,' and after having taken several bottles am nearly cured of stomach trouble. Can now eat without distress and have gained fifteen pounds in weight.

I thank you for your remedy and wish you all success in your good work."

C.P.R. TRAIN WAS DERAILED

Engine and Baggage Car Toppled Over Near Bethaney Junction

A despatch from Toronto says: The Canadian Pacific passenger train to Havelock was wrecked on Thursday morning about half a mile west of Bethany Junction, while travelling at a good rate of speed. Although the engine and four coaches left the rails, only five people were injured, and these sustained only bruises and abrasions.

The reports received at the Canadian Pacific offices here show that no passengers were among those hurt, although some were slightly shaken up when the coaches left the rails. The list of injured includes only employes of the railway, and these were all travelling in the engine and baggage car at the time of the accident.

Following is the official list of the injured:—

Engineer Bennett, of Havelock;
Fireman Nelson, West Toronto;
Geo. T. Brown, mail clerk, 4 Gloucester Street;
D. Mackay, mail clerk, Toronto;
T. Vodden, trainman, West Toronto.

The feature of the accident was the fact that there were no serious injuries received by the passengers or train hands. The engine left the rails, and becoming overbalanced, turned over and fell from the tracks on its side, while the baggage car was wrenched from its front trucks and splintered about the side. The other cars were not damaged, and the engine fell on soft earth and escaped serious injury.

The reason the engineer and fireman escaped serious injury was that they jumped from the cab when they saw that the engine was toppling over. The injuries sustained by the two were caused by their jumping and chiefly consist of scratches and bruises resulting from their striking stones after they jumped to safety.

Winnipeg Immigration Chief Says Labor Situation is Acute

A despatch from Ottawa says: W. D. Scott, Superintendent of Immigration, has received the following telegram from J. Bruce Walker, of Winnipeg, the representative of the branch at that city:—"Crop conditions for the past ten days have been splendid. The outlook continues of a most gratifying character. Labor conditions in the West are acute. Between 40,000 and 50,000 men are urgently needed, 90 per cent. of whom must come from Eastern Canada. Cutting is general in Southern Alberta, while ten days from now, if weather continues favorable, the harvest will be general throughout the entire West."

TWO MEN DROWNED,

Rowboat Capsized and Bodies Not Yet Recovered.

A despatch from Manitowaning says: William Tucker, of this village, started to spend a vacation with a party of tourists at Sandfield, on the farther side of Lake Manitou, last week. He had as an assistant in the rowboat a young man named William Lockyer. The other members of the touring party at Sandfield after the disappearance of Tucker and his companion for two days began to be uneasy, and began a search of the lake. The Tucker boat was found overturned near shore with a suitcase and Tucker's coat under it. The oars were found floating some distance away. The alarm became geenral, and soon a number of persons in rowboats, motor-boats and steam tugs were engaged in dragging for the bodies. After five days' dragging the bodies are not yet found. The general opinion is that the bodies in this deep water will not rise. Tucker was unmarried and belonged to a prominent family here.

MAKING SAFE INVESTMENTS

WHY BOND HOUSES SELL BONDS INSTEAD OF HOLDING THEM.

They are Dealers in Bonds Just as the Grocer Deals in Groceries—Their Money is Made in a Quick Turnover—Salesmen Just as Necessary in a Bond Business as in a Wholesale Grocery Business.

The articles contributed by "Investor" are for the sole purpose of guiding prospective investors, and, if possible, of saving them from losing money through placing it in "wild-cat" enterprises. The impartial and reliable character of the information may be relied upon. The writer of these articles and the publisher of this paper have no interests to serve in connection with this matter other than those of the reader.

(By "Investor.")

Some people wonder "If bonds are so good, why do bond dealers want to sell them?" Moreover, if this new issue of stock they see advertised is so likely to increase in value, why don't they hold it and then sell it.

Now, in the first place, bond dealers, and those who handle new stock issues (I would call them promoters had not that word come into disrepute as a result of its connection with mining stock flotation) are merely dealers, as their name implies. A grocer buys preserved fruit and sells it to his customers. He makes his profit on that transaction and by turning over enough preserved fruit in the year he makes it pay him to handle it. If at that same time he knew that the fruit crop was a poor one and that he would probably have to sell his preserves higher the next year, would he be likely to hold his in his storeroom in order to make a greater profit? Not if he was wise. While he was holding his present supply he would probably loose a chance of turning over his stock three or four times, and that turnover would be much more satisfactory than holding on the chance of the speculative profit.

Moreover, a bond dealer is not an investor. The expense of handling bonds is very great and the profit relatively very small—the percentage is far less than that which the grocer makes on his purchases from the wholesaler. And though the grocer may think very highly of the goods he deals in we would think him very foolish if he shut up shop and just kept his supply of goods on his shelves to use for his own food, even though he had sufficient to last him the balance of his life. There is, however, a very important reason why most grocers couldn't do this, and that is because their business is done on credit. They buy from the wholesaler and borrow money from the bank to do so, repaying the bank when they have sold the goods. (Of course, in some cases they get credit from the wholesaler, but in that case they really borrow from him). The bond dealer does the same thing. He buys a million dollar issue of bonds and borrows money from his banker to pay for it, paying off the banker when the bonds are sold. It would be unwise, indeed, to criticize him for attempting to sell his bonds.

"Well, if your bonds are good why do you have to send men out to sell them," asked one man once of a bond salesman. "Why don't you just advertise them in the papers. If they are so good the investors will buy them." A good many people do buy bonds from reading newspaper advertisements, but in the present day it is so difficult for people to tell the good from the bad in advertisements that they seldom buy from what is advertised unless they know the house offering the bonds. It requires a personal interview with most investors to get their business, just as no wholesale grocer would trust to a newspaper advertisement to get the country grocer's orders. It is the same idea exactly. And the salesman who gets the most business gets the greatest salary, and so he has to "hustle." It isn't because they can't sell bonds in Toronto that they seek you out in the country, but because they want your business and your neighbor's. The more business they get the quicker the turnover and consequently often they can afford to sell bonds at a less profit than a house whose business is smaller and whose turnover is slower. That is why it pays to send out salesmen.

IMPERIAL ARMY OFFICER.

Man Was Caught Sketching at Point Levis Forts.

A despatch from Quebec says: While proceeding from No. 1 fort, Levis, to No. 2, a sub-conductor of the Ordnance Corps found a gentleman sketching the forts. He immediately called the attention of the guard and placed him under arrest for neglecting his duty. Then he took hold of the man who was doing the sketching. The latter stated he was an officer in the Imperial army and had been employed as a military surveyor by the Ottawa Government. He proceeded to Quebec with the sub-conductor, and was handed over to Major Robertson at the brigade office. The case is a peculiar one and more may be heard of it.

TORONTO CORRESPONDENCE

WHAT IS TRANSPIRING AT THE HUB OF THE PROVINCE.

Dr. J. O. Orr and the Canadian National Exhibition—The Meredith Family—Dr. Hasting's Regulations.

For fifty weeks in the year Dr. J. O. Orr is a private citizen; for the remaining two weeks he becomes a public institution. Those two weeks are, of course, the period of the Canadian National Exhibition, of which he is the General Manager.

Dr. Orr is not a Doctor by courtesy. He has not been honored with a D. D. from a theological college or with an L.L.D. from a university, although he has been appointed a member of the Board of Governors of the University of Toronto by the Provincial Government, an appointment which at the time provoked considerable comment. Dr. Orr earned his title like any other M. D., by putting in five years plugging at the Medical College. But it is a long time since he has practised medicine. He had in him always the instincts of the showman. He has the capacity for attracting crowds and for entertaining them, and so it came about naturally that when there came a vacancy in the management of the Exhibition, and when the same exhibition had fallen upon evil days, the Board of Directors, searching for some one with a genius for the show business, should let their choice fall upon the active doctor.

THE DOCTOR'S JOB.

Managing the big show is not such a hard business now as it was ten years ago. It goes with its own momentum now. So many various organizations have taken hold of various departments, pledging their prestage to make a go of them that there would be a pretty good show now if there was no central management at all. But there is still plenty of work for an active manager. If there is to be a growth there must be improvement in all departments, and what is even more important, there must be fresh novelties of a more or less spectacular nature. These are the hardest things in the world to get. Another great showman, P. T. Barnum, declared that the public likes to be fooled. This is scarcely true now-a-days. The public wants its money's worth. If it is going to be fooled, it wants to be fooled in a real smart way. It won't stand for fakes, and the fact is that about fifty per cent of the "special attractions" which try to get space at exhibitions are fakes. It's up to the doctor to separate the fakes from the "square deals," and when he makes a mistake there is a howl from the public.

Every year in the "private citizen" period of his life Dr. Orr spends several weeks in the Old Country, and some of the most interesting attractions of recent years have resulted from those visits. The exhibition has been able to enlist the sympathy of such men as Earl Grey, who provides the Doctor with letters of introduction when he goes abroad, and in this way he gets close to the people who can give him the things he wants. If the Doctor could some time only give an exhibition of old world "Red Tape," he would be happy.

THE DOCTOR AND ART.

A lot of time is spent, too, in getting in touch with people who have valuable paintings which they are willing to loan for the art exhibit. Few of these are to be had on this continent, but Europe has them by the car load, if one only knows how to go about getting them. On the subject of paintings there is a continuous feud on between the Doctor and the Artists Association. The artists think the pictures that are put in the Exhibition gallery ought to be high class artistically. The Doctor doesn't object to high art, but if he can't get with it some subject that has a strong popular appeal he doesn't give a hang for high art. For example, it has been found from long experience that battle scenes and pretty women are the subjects that make the people come and look. But your connoisseur might find more high art in some quiet landscape with a few sheep in the foreground. The Doctor lets the artists have their own way to some extent—he lets them stick up their landscapes and sheep over in the corner—but he takes pains to see that his battle scenes and pretty women stand right out on the middle of the wall.

BOARD HAS FINAL SAY.

While Dr. Orr is the active manager, and is expected to supply the motive power in initiating and sane judgment in making recommendations, he has the advice, and is under the direction, of a Board of Directors, which includes many leading citizens. During fair time the Board meets daily, sometimes several times on one day, and throughout the year it keeps in close touch with the plans under way. All these men give their time without remuneration, having in mind only the welfare of the city and whatever personal honor and glory that may come incidentally. The present President, Mr. J. G. Kent, has been preceded by such men as Mr. George H. Gooderham, M.P.P., Mr. W. K. McNaught, M.P.P., and Mr. W. K. George. The Board of Directors is elected by the Exhibition Association, which meets once a year, and is composed of representatives of various organizations, but dominated largely by the Toronto City Council, Board of Trade and Manufacturers' Association. While there is room for criticism of the method of representation in the association, there remaining in it a suspicion of the system of pocket boroughs, it must be admitted that the results attained have not been bad.

A HURRY UP APPOINTMENT.

The almost unseemly haste with which the City Council rushed through the appointment of Mr. T. G. Meredith as Corporation Counsel in succession to Mr. H. L. Drayton has given rise to no litle comment. Needless to say, there is many a Toronto lawyer who does not relish the idea of a $15,000 a year plum going to an outsider (for Mr. Meredith hails from London) and who think that they are just as capable of handling the job as he is. They point out that Mr. Meredith, in his London practice has never been called upon to handle cases of the importance that he will be required to deal with as Toronto's Corporation Counsel, and that his appointment was just a leap in the dark. At the same time the Meredith family has generally, in mental capacity, proved equal to any job they have undertaken. A family that has produced one Chief Justice, one ordinary Justice and a Bank manager ought to be able to provide a Corporation Counsel for Toronto. In family ability the Meredith family resembles the Oslers. At the same time it is not altogether unnatural that there should have been some comment about T. G.'s speedy appointment. It calls attention to the fact that while Sir William Meredith never attained office as Prime Minister of Ontario he is to-day one of the most influential men in it. This remark is, by the way, because Sir William may not have known anything about the city counsel appointment.

SIR JAMES AND SIR WILLIAM.

In Provincial matters, however, it is doubtful if Sir James Whitney has a higher regard for anyone's opinion than for that of his predecessor in the leadership of the Conservative party. Loyalty to old friends is one of Sir James' most likeable qualities, and his loyalty to Sir William Meredith has manifested itself more than once. Toronto may find that an alliance with the Meredith family may not be unprofitable, even if it does cost $15,000 per annum.

DR. HASTING'S CAMPAIGN.

Dr. Hastings, who for the past year has been the city's Medical officer of Health, continues to keep in the limelight. That is not to say that he is a self-advertiser, but he keeps himself talked about by reason of his enthusiasm for his work, which is a vastly different thing. He has made of the health office of the city a live institution and has brought it into closer contact with the daily lives of the people than perhaps any other department of government, municipal, provincial or federal. He has just concluded a vigorous swat the fly campaign, thereby arousing the interest of every housekeeper in town. He has been insisting on covered garbage tins for every house, and has demanded that the fruit dealers who make elaborate sidewalk displays must keep fruit covered over. He has been protesting against noises as being injurious to public health and has even gone so far as to advise against the keeping of any early-crowing roosters within the city limits. He has succeeded in making outside closets made illegal, a sweeping order which affects about one-quarter of the homes in the city. He has abolished the common drinking cup at public fountains and is installing a type of fountain that can be used without a cup.

IS THE DOCTOR FUSSY.

Some people think the Doctor is fussy. And perhaps he is over careful. But the man who is responsible for the general health of a modern city has quite a care on his shoulders and he realizes the catastrophe in the shape of epidemic that always hangs over any one of the big centres of population as other people don't. However, most people give the M. H. O. credit for "doing something."

The criticism which he probably feels is that which is coming from the working people. A good many of his innovations, while making for the general comfort and health of the city, mean considerable expense to the poorer people. New garbage tins, for example, are an item. The abolition of roosters cuts off a source of revenue for many more. Covering up fruit brought a big protest from the small merchants, while the installation of inside closets has brought an expense that thousands of families can ill afford, though it has brought a rich harvest to the plumbers.

PARLIAMENT BUILDINGS QUIET.

One of the dullest places in Toronto these August days are the offices at the Parliament Buildings. The staff are depleted by reason of holidays. The ministers are often away and business is pretty nearly at a standstill. The only excitement is caused by the motor bus loads of American tourists who make hourly pilgrimages to the seat of provincial government. They troup through the corridors, look at the maps and the paintings on the walls, peep in at open doors, and if they are in good humor tip the guide who has shown them through. But it is a very vague notion of Canadian institutions that many of them get. There are frequent inquiries if the King ever comes here, and this year a great many fair tourists asked to see the Duke of Connaught.

WITNESSED HUSBAND DROWN

Professor of Victoria College Met Death at Go Home Bay.

A despatch from Toronto says: Rev. George J. Blewett, professor of ethics and apologetics at Victoria College, was drowned at Go Home Bay on Wednesday morning, in full view of his wife, whose efforts to rescue him were unavailing. Professor Blewett, who was not a good swimmer, had gone in bathing alone. His wife, who was watching him from their cottage, saw him sink.

She quickly pushed out a boat to help him, but he never came to the surface again.

The body was recovered within a few minutes, but all efforts at resuscitation were futile. Death is believed to have been due to heart failure rather than drowning.

Prof. Blewett was a young man who had already achieved an internaitonal reputation, and who had prospects of even greater distinction. He was born in North Yarmouth, Elgin County, nearly 39 years ago, and received his earlier education at the St. Thomas Collegiate Institute. In 895 he graduated from the University of Toronto, winning the Governor-General's medal.

FISH'S BITE COSTS FINGER.

Guide Who Hooked Big Pickerel Develops Blood Poisoning.

A despatch from Monticello, N. Y., says: Suffering from blood poisoning, resulting from the bite of a large pickerel two weeks ago, "Dan" Smith, a guide, of South Fallsburg, had the index finger of his left hand amputated. It is believed the operation will save his life. Smith was removing the hook from the fish's mouth when his finger was pierced.

YOUNG BRIDE KILLED.

Hayfork Fell on Her Head as She was Helping Husband.

A despatch from Brantford says: Mrs. Addison Fairchild, a bride of two weeks, met with a tragic death at the home of her husband at Mount Pleasant on Saturday. She was helping in the harvest and was struck on the head by a large hay fork. She died within twenty minutes, before medical aid could be summoned. The deceased was a Bowmanville girl.

TURKISH TROOPS ROUTED

Retreated With Allies After Battle Which Lasted All Day

A despatch from Rome says: It was officially announced on Friday that Lieutenant-General Garioni, commander of the Italian troops in Tripoli, had succeeded in establishing a base at Zuara, a town about 66 miles west of the City of Tripoli, where the Turks and Arabs had concentrated their forces, and had stubbornly resisted the advance of the invaders.

The Italians successfully carried out the operation of cutting the large Turco-Arab force from the caravan routes to the Tunisian frontier.

The battle lasted all day along a front four miles in extent, and ended in the retreat of the Turks, who left numerous dead on the field. The Italians lost six men killed and 98 wounded.

INVITING SICKNESS

People Whose Blood Supply is Scanty Are in Danger of a Breakdown

Thin or impure blood is an invitation to sickness. The blood is at work day and night to maintain the health, and any lack of strength or purity in the blood is a weakness in the defence against disease. Anaemia is the doctor's name for lack of blood. Its surest symptom is palor. Anaemia does not confine itself to age or sex, though it is particularly common to young girls between the ages of 14 and 17, when nature makes peculiar demand upon the blood supply. The same lack of blood, however, prevents full recovery after la grippe, fevers, malaria, and operations, and is present in old age, and in persons who have been under unusual mental or physical strain. In all cases of bloodlessness Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are the best medicine known to medical science. They actually make new pure blood, which brings with it a healthy appetite and new strength and vitality. Mrs. George Roy, Clair, Sask., says: "I have tested the value of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills time and again when a poor condition of the blood might have led to more serious trouble. I am a woman of forty and as occasion required I have used the Pills off and on since girlhood. I have proved their value in the ailments that afflict my sex, and I have never known them to fail. I also gave them to my son for nerve trouble which we thought would result in St. Vitus dance, but the use of the Pills prevented this and made him well and strong. I do not know any better investment than to keep half a dozen boxes of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills in the house, as they will save more expensive doctor's bills."

You can get Dr. Williams' Pink Pills through any medicine dealer or by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

PRESS THE BUTTON.

Device That Will Make Railway Accidents Impossible.

Almost incredible are the possibilities attaching to an invention that has nearly been completed and which will make railroad accidents practically impossible. Since the first demonstration of the "railophone," which renders possible telephonic communication with a railway train in motion, was given about a year ago, the inventor, Mr. von Kramer, has made great strides. In conjunction with Professor Kapp, of Birmingham (England) University, he has evolved a sensitive detector, by means of which, he states, "it is possible to pick up those feeble currents which are received by the train and to relay them up into stronger currents to operate electric bells or hooters, or even to put on the brakes of train or to stop them at the will of the signalman at the station." Thus a signalman 10 or 20 miles away may press a button and the train stops automatically. Another feature of the railophone is that trains equipped with it can automatically bring back their signals to the danger position if they have been inadvertently left open by the signalman, and as any such forgetfulness is recorded at the time it occurs, the instrument settles the question of who is to blame if a driver passes a signal which should be against him.

OLD LADY ALMOST CRAZY WITH ECZEMA

A Remarkable and Convincing Statement of the Success of Cuticura Soap and Ointment in the Treatment of the Pain, Itching and Burning of Eczema

"I, the undersigned, cannot give enough praise to the Cuticura Remedies. I had been doctoring for at least a year for eczema on my foot. I had tried doctor after doctor all to no avail. When a young girl I sprained my ankle three different times, paying little or no attention to it, when five years ago a small spot showed upon my left ankle. I was worried and sent for a doctor. He said it was eczema. He drew a small bone from the ankle about the size of a match and about an inch long. The small hole grew to about the size of an apple, and the eczema spread to the knee. The doctors never could heal the hole in the ankle. The whole foot ran water all the time.

"My husband and my sons were up nights and day wheeling me from one room to another in the hope of giving me some relief. I would sit for hours at a time in front of the fireplace hoping for daybreak. The pain was so intense I was almost crazy, in fact, I would lose my reason for hours at a time. One day a friend of mine dropped in to see me. No more had she glanced at my foot than she exclaimed, 'Mrs. Finnegan, why in the world don't you try the Cuticura Remedies!' Being disgusted with the doctors and their medicines, and not being able to sleep at all, I decided to give the Cuticura Soap and Cuticura Ointment a trial. After using them three days that night I slept as sound as a silver dollar for eight long hours. I awoke in the morning with but very little pain, in fact, I thought I was in heaven. After using the Cuticura Remedies for three months I was perfectly restored to health, thanks to the Cuticura Soap and Ointment. I will be sixty-four years of age my next birthday, hale and hearty at present." (Signed) Mrs. Julia Finnegan, 2234 Hebert St., St. Louis, Mo., Mar. 7, '11.

Cuticura Soap and Ointment are sold throughout the world. Send to Potter D. & C. Corp., 47 Columbus Ave. Boston, U. S. A., for free sample of each with 32-p. book.

SAVED LAUDER'S LIFE.

Wearing his kilts, Mr. Harry Lauder, the comedian, played a novel part on the sands at Blackpool, England, recently. His concern for dumb animals, especially pit ponies, is well known, and when he was invited by the Mayor of Blackpool to distribute the prizes in a competition for donkeys, Mr. Lauder eagerly responded. Having fixed medals to the winning donkey's bridles, the comedian mounted a sandhill and indulged in interesting and amusing "patter."

He related some of his experiences as a pit boy. He told how, when going through a drift in a coal mine, his pit pony suddenly stopped. "Immediately I struck him with the whip," Mr. Lauder proceeded: "He turned round to the side of the little tub I was sitting in, and I am not exaggerating when I tell you that about 10,000 tons of stone fell. Had it not been for the cuteness of the hearing of that pony we should both have been buried alive. I owe my life to that Shetland pony. Instead of licking my pony because he didn't go on, when I saw what happened I jumped out of the tub and put my arm around his neck and kissed him."

WELL PEOPLE TOO.

Wise Doctor Gives Postum to Convalescents.

A wise doctor tries to give nature its best chance by saving the little strength of the already exhausted patient, and building up wasted energy with simple but powerful nourishment.

"Five years ago," writes a doctor, "I commenced to use Postum in my own family instead of coffee." (It's a well-known fact that tea is just as injurious as coffee because it contains caffeine, the same drug found in coffee.) "I was so well pleased with the results that I had two grocers place it in stock, guaranteeing its sale.

"I then commenced to recommend it to my patients in place of coffee, as a nutritious beverage. The consequence is every store in town is now selling it, as it has become a household necessity in many homes.

"I'm sure I prescribe Postum as often as any one remedy in the Materia Medica—in almost every case of indigestion and nervousness I treat, and with the best results.

"When I once introduce it into a family, it is quite sure to remain. I shall continue to use it and prescribe it in families where I practice.

"In convalescence from pneumonia, typhoid fever and other cases I give it as a liquid, easily absorbed diet. You may use my letter as a reference any way you see fit." Name given by Canadian Postum Co., Windsor, Ont.

THE MONTESSORI SYSTEM.

How It Develops the Faculties in the Child.

The most conspicuous achievement of Dr. Maria Montessori's interesting educational methods, says Josephine Tozier in The World's Work of London, is the way in which her little pupils begin spontaneously to read and write—or "explode into writing," as Madame Montessori herself graphically puts it.

Ordinarily, children are taught to read and write by means of a long succession of monotonous and, to them, meaningless tasks imposed upon them by the teacher. By the Montessori method there is no coercion, there is no attempt even to persuade the child. He unconsciously masters the means of expression through toys and games devised so to develop his faculties that they will respond quickly and accurately to the demands of his mind.

About four years ago Maria Montaessori, an Italian physician and teacher, opened in Rome the first "House of Childhood," and began to apply her revolutionary methods of education to the teaching of little children. Her work has set on foot a new educational movement throughout Europe, and there are now Montessori schools in Boston and New York.

The flies that are now in your kitchen and dining-room were probably feasting on some indescribable nastiness less than an hour ago, and as a single fly often carries many thousands of disease germs attached to its hairy body, it is the duty of every housekeeper to assist in exterminating this worst enemy of the human race.

At first the children entertain themselves with toys selected to appeal to the senses of touch and sight. Meanwhile the teacher makes a careful study of the peculiarities of each pupil, but does not attempt any actual discipline.

Indeed, children are in the "House of Childhood" sometimes for several weeks before any real lessons are given them. They are required, however, to be tidy in their persons and in their dress. Now, all children love to dabble in water, particularly when soap plays a part in the game; in the Montessori schools, under judicious guidance, the washing of the hands and face becomes, even with the youngest, a cleaning process.

Doctor Montessori uses light gymnastics to give the little ones command of their limbs and to bring about the proper co-ordination of their muscles, but the gymnastic exercises continue only a few minutes at a time. Then follow house cares,—that is, the arrangement of tables and the washing of dishes,—and then building with blocks and the matching of colors.

The first of the tactile exercises—the one that eventually leads to writing—is carried on by means of rough and smooth paper. The child is taught to distinguish between rough and smooth by having his hands drawn first over one surface and then over the other. Then the child has its fingers brought into conact with squares of cloth; that is, with yielding surfaces. Next, the child receives wooden tablets in order that he may learn to discriminate between the weights of two different objects. Then the pupil has geometrical forms in metal, which he places on paper and the outlines of which he traces with a colored crayon. These outlines he fills in with color. This last exercise Doctor Montessori regards as of the greatest importance, for it trains the fingers to direct the pencil or crayon.

When the child's sense of touch has thus been actually developed, he receives an alphabet, each letter of which is mounted on a separate piece of sandpaper. He traces the outline of each letter with his fingers as it is pronounced by the teacher. The sound of each letter becomes so strongly associated with the muscular movements necessary to produce it that when he hears a word spoken of which the letters are known to him, his fingers instinctively make the motions that they have so often made in tracing the sandpaper alphabet. If he has a crayon in his hand the record becomes visible, and he begins to write.

"THE LADY OF THE LAMP."

The City of London's memorial to Florence Nightingale is rapidly nearing completion and is expected to find a place in the lobby of the Guildhall early in the autumn. It is a marble statuette 3 feet in height. Miss Nightingale is shown setting out upon one of her heroic errands of mercy. The "Lady of the Lamp" stands bareheaded in the simple dress of the Victorian period, which preceded the crinoline. In her left hand she carries a candlestick, while with her right hand she is shielding her eyes from its light. The portrait and model were founded on a statuette in the possession of Sir Harry Verney. Walter Merrett is the sculptor.

TATTLE ABOUT TEA.

Little commonplace matters are so very often lost sight of in the stress of life. And the one and only way to make a drinkable cup of tea is a small fact overlooked in the education of most, and yet it is a thing which every man, woman, or child should know how to do correctly. To begin with, if possible, an earthenware teapot should be used. Silver, plated, copper, and other metal vessels do not seem to possess the virtues of making a real good cup of tea. Then, of course, the pot must be scrupulously clean. However, in time even the most cleanly-kept teapots are liable to become objectionable owing to the rapid accumulation of tannin on the inside. Thus it would be wise, if perfection of brew is to be obtained, occasionally to place soda in the boiling water used for the washing of this utensil. Before putting on the tea—one teaspoonful for each person and one for the pot—the latter must be heated with hot water. Then fresh water must be brought to the boil, and poured on the tea, without lifting the kettle from the fire.

INSECT STINGS AND SUMMER SORES.

Insect bites and stings, blistered feet and sunburn! These three things, or any one of them, may spoil some days of your vacation, or make your work a bore! Zam-Buk is the remedy you need! It takes the "burn" out of these red, inflamed patches where the sun has got home on you; it eases bad mosquito bites, and it soothes and heals blistered feet and hands.

In the hot weather young babies suffer greatly from heat spots and chafed places. Here, again, Zam-Buk will give almost instant ease!

For cuts, burns, and more serious skin diseases, such as eczema, blood-poisoning, etc., and for piles, Zam-Buk is absolutely without an equal. All druggists and stores 50c box or Zam-Buk Co., Toronto.

Relief for the Depressed.—Physical and mental depression usually have their origin in a disordered state of the stomach and liver, as when these organs are deranged in their action the whole system is affected. Try Parmelee's Vegetable Pills. They revive the digestive processes, act beneficially on the nerves and restore the spirits as no other pills will. They are cheap, simple and sure, and the effects are lasting.

If attacked with cholera or summer complaint of any kind send at once for a bottle of Dr. Kellogg's Dysentery Cordial and use it according to directions. It acts with wonderful rapidity in subduing that dreadful disease that weakens the strongest man and that destroys the young and delicate. Those who have used this cholera medicine say it acts promptly, and never fails to effect a thorough cure.

ETIQUETTE ON WARSHIPS.

Etiquette plays quite an important part on a modern battleship, and the Navy enforces many little forms and customs. In the wardroom, where the officers and midshipmen dine, the commander does not sit at the head of the table. That place is reserved for the president of the mess. The commander invariably sits at his right hand, while the former changes every month. Evening-dress is a steadfast rule; so much so that the man who has to take a watch after dinner, and who has no time to change, sits at a table by himself. The toast of "The King," in the Navy is drunk sitting. Tradition has it that a certain king once proposed a toast, and, jumping up, hit his head against a beam above. Orders were given, the story goes, that all toasts were to be drunk sitting in future. "The "middy" on a warship is just like a fag at a public school, with the officers as his prefects or monitors. Midshipmen have to make themselves generally useful to the latter.

Costiveness and Its Cure.—When the excretory organs refuse to perform their functions properly the intestines become clogged. This is known as costiveness and if neglected gives rise to dangerous complications. Parmelee's Vegetable Pills will effect a speedy cure. At the first intimation of this ailment the sufferer should procure a packet of the pills and put himself under a course of treatment. The good effects of the pills will be almost immediately evident.

It Makes New Friends Every Day.—Not a day goes by that Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil does not widen the circle of its friends. Orders for it come from the most unlikely places in the west and far north, for its fame has travelled far. It deserves this attention, for no oil has done so much for humanity. Its moderate cost makes it easy to get.

Exeter took the strongest line of baseball players they had to Lucan Thursday afternoon last and succeeded in defeating the best the Irish town could scrape up, by a score of 7-5. The game was a good one and the boys gave their pitcher excellent support, some of the best catches of the season being made in the field.

What about your summer visitors? Surely you can supply us with the names of two or three visitors easier than we can look after them. One thing is sure the news is always welcome at this office.

Have you made your Will? You have put it off for a long time and jollied and joked about it, but a more sensible thing would be to arrange your business affairs while in health and strength so that at your going away your wishes would be carried out on account of decisions you had arrived at in your last Will and testament. It does not follow that the preparation of such a paper would hasten your demise. Do it now.

Two rinks of bowlers started out from Granton on Thursday last to play in Exeter, but one load experienced a runaway when out a short distance and were forced to return. Three bowlers in an auto arrived, however, Messrs. Clatworthy, Powers and Dann, and they with J. W. Bawden, played three games with Exeter rinks, skipped by W. B. Weidenhammer, Jas. Taylor and W. J. Heaman. Exeter was up a little in each of the three games.

Prof. Hemstreet, the famous Hypnotist, will give an exhibition in the Exeter Opera House Sept. 4th and 5th, and as Hypnotism is now being taught in all the up-to-date medical schools and is being used in our great hospitals in the treatment of diseases of the nerves, and as an anaesthesia, and this entertainment being a scientific demonstration, appeals particularly to the educated and refined, no one should miss seeing it.

REV. MALOTT MARRIED.—A quiet but pretty wedding took place at the home of Mrs. Haynes, Church street, St. Marys, on August 14th, when her youngest daughter, Caroline, was united in marriage with Rev. Frederick B. Malott, B.A., B.D., pastor of the Methodist Church, St. Marys. hTe ceremony was performed by the Rev. Dr. Manning of London. The bride was becomingly gowned in maize silk with drapings of ninon and carried roses. She wore the groom's gift a diamond and sapphire ring. The bride and groom left for a month's trip to Muskoka, the bride wearing a tailored suit of black and white tweed with hat to match.

HICKS' FORECASTS FOR AUGUST—The general disturbances at this time promise to be aggravated and prolonged into the reactionary storm period, central on the 29th, 30th and 31st. The moon passes over the celestial equator on the 29th, near its full. The autumnal equinox of the earth will also bear heavily on this period, the Jupiter, the Venus and the Mercury periods adding their forces to the strong combination. The barometer should be carefully watched during the last ten days of August, especially in the gulf regions, and all indications of West India storms should be promptly heeded. August promises to go out with storm, and threatening weather generally, passing eastwardly over the country. Change to much cooler, and possibly frost northward will attend high barometer at close of the month. A seismic period, 24th to 30th, central 27th. Watch and clip telegraphic reports.

A machine for pulling flax is being tried near Zurich. It is patented by an Ottawa man who is directing the operations of the machine, which is doing the work well. The machine is drawn by horses like a mowing machine, and the flax is pulled by belts and rollers and bundled like sheaves. Five acres of flax can be pulled per day whereas by the hand method it would take twenty men to handle that much. Three men operate the machine.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry Francis of Crosswell, Mich., are visiting with their son Mr. Henry Francis of Usborne. Mr. and Mrs. Francis, who are former residents of that township, are remarkably well, considering their age, both being 83 years old. While here a four-generation photo will be taken of the aged gentleman, his son, grandson and great grandson. Mr. John Francis of London was also a guest at the same home last week.

If you wish to keep bread from moulding do not keep it in the cellar, but in the pantry. Keep it in a tin. Scald the tin out with boiling water each time you bake, and set tin in the sun for an hour or two. Do not keep any cloth or paper in the tin—they draw moisture. If you find specs of mold forming on the bread dip the loaves quickly in cold water, then put them in a moderate oven for half an hour. This is a nice way to freshen bread.

MARVELOUS HYPNOTIC EXHIBITION.—Two very large audiences greeted Prof. Hemstreet at the Armory on Wednesday and Thursday nights, and to say that the people were pleased is putting it mildly. Wednesday night when he called for volunteers from the audience a dozen of our best young men responded. He opened his entertainment with a number of marvelous feats of mind reading, and after satisfying the most skeptical that there was no fake about his work, and that it was the result of scientific investigation he asked his committee to remain upon the stage and be hynotized, and they being willing the fun began, and it was a continual laugh to the end of the show. Prof Hemstreet, we understand is booked to play in some of our neighboring towns, and we can assure the people who attend his exhibition that they will get their money's worth, for he does all that he advertises to do and more.—In the Opera House, Exeter, on Sept. 4th and 5th.

If you have a piece of property to sell, and you have the ability to describe it in an ad in the same simple way you would use if a man called up on your telephone, and asked for you to tell him about it, then your classified advertisement, published with a little persistence, will sell your property to the buyer who needs it most.

Do not forget the Thursday half-holiday, commencing in July.

The marriage is announced of Dr. R. D. Mace, son of the late George A. Mace and Mrs. Mace, Rosedale, formerly of Exeter, to Mary Catharine, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. A. Dodd, Trochu, Alberta.

ANNIVERSARY AND HARVEST THANKSGIVING SERVICES.—The Anniversary and Harvest Thanksgiving services of the Trivitt Memorial Church Exeter, will be held on Sunday next, Sept. 1st, at 11 a. m. and 7 p. m. when Rev. Canon Sage, B. A., D. D., rector of St. George's Church, London, one of the ablest and foremost preachers in Ontario, will conduct both services. The church will be tastefully decorated for the occasion and special music will be rendered by the choir. A thank offering will be taken up at each service.

HEAVY STORM

The storm of Sunday night seems to have been general and very heavy all over. In Exeter it was very severe, the thunder and lightning were terrific, and the downpour of rain lasted several hours. Near Zurich hail accompanied the storm and did considerable damage. Wm. Ross, who lives one mile north of Brucefield, had three valuable horses killed while in the pasture. They were worth $900. Robt. Murdock's barn and Mr. McGill's house at Brucefield were struck, but not burned. At Grand Bend the summer visitors, it is said, thought the wind up of the world had come.

NEARLY DROWNED AT GRAND BEND

The ten-year old son of Mrs. Griffith who resides here, narrowly escaped drowning on Sunday evening when he fell off the breakwater pier at Grand Bend, and was only saved by the heroic efforts of Roy Clinger of London. The lad was playing quite a distance out on the breakwater at the time. He walked too close to the edge and losing his balance fell over into the water, which is quite deep at this point. A couple of ladies saw him disappear, and they screamed for help. Clinger, who is an expert swimmer, was some distance away, but on hearing the cries he hastened to the spot with several other persons. Young Griffith had gone under the water twice before the party arrived, and he was going down for the third time when Clinger dived, and managed to grab one of the drowning boy's outstretched arms and brought him to the surface. The two were hauled out of the water, and it looked then as though the rescue had been made too late. Young Griffith was unconscious, and his face was turning blue. After fifteen minutes hard work the little fellow began to show signs of returning life. He soon revived.

HURON PRESBYTERY

Clinton, Aug. 22.—At a special meeting of the Presbytery of Huron held in Willis Church, Clinton, to-day, two very hearty and unanimous calls were sustained. One of these was from St. Andrew's Church, Blyth, to Rev. W. D. Turner, of Norval and Union Presbytery of Toronto. The other was from Auburn and Smith's Hill congregations to Rev. Robert McCallum, of Waldemar These congregations have been vacant since May last, owing to the transfer of Rev. Mr. Small from Blyth to St. Andrew's Hespeler, and Rev. J. J. Small, of Auburn, to Port Elgin. These are good pastoral charges.

MRS. W. N. MANNING DEAD.

Mrs. Alexandra Manning of 377 Maitland streets, London, wife of Mr. Wilber N. Manning, of the Sherlock-Manning Organ Company, and a former resident of Exeter, died very unexpectedly at St. Joseph's Hospital Thursday afternoon. Mrs. Manning, who was well known in London, and a prominent member of the Dundas Centre Methodist Church, was formerly Miss Alexander E. M. Taylor, the daughter of the late Mr. Alexander Taylor, one of the pioneers of Clinton. The funeral services were held in London on Friday afternoon and the remains were forwarded to Clinton for interment there on Saturday.

A POPULAR SCHOOL

It is freely admitted that among the High Grade Commercial Schools of Canada, the Clinton Business College stands in the fore front. In point of attendance this college is only exceeded by three or four in Ontario. It is affiliated with the Commercial Educators' Association of Canada, and its management last year trained and placed in excellent position over two thousand young people thus making them the largest trainers in Canada.

Recently Mr. Spotton visited Colleges in Detroit, Cleveland, Buffalo, Rochester, Syracuse, New York, and Boston, and with the knowledge of Business Science gained from his tour, he promises the most modern training that man be procured.

Thousands of ambitious young people are studying entirely at home by means of the Home Study Department, while they follow their regular work; others are studying partly at home and will finish at college. The Clinton Business College guarantees positions. Last year the demand for its graduates was many times the supply. All interested in bettering their condition should write, call, or phone for particulars. This institution re-opens Sept. 2 and 3.

Successful Tournament

McDONELL OF HENSALL WON THE BAWDEN TROPHY

STEVENSON OF LONDON THE SOUTH HURON TROPHY.

TAMAN OF EXETER THE CONSOLA'N

The Second Annual Tournament of the Exeter Lawn Bowling Association held on Wednesday, Thursday and Friday of last week was an unqualified success in every way. 44 rinks entered the tournament and although nearly every town within thirty miles had a very heavy rain on Tuesday night, Exeter escaped, and only one of the rinks that entered failed to appear. Rain delayed the games for two or three hours on Thursday afternoon, however, but the whole tourney, which consisted of three rink events and one Scotch Double event was wound up on Friday evening.

The greens were in excellent condition and the committee on decoration had spared no pains to make the grounds an attractive spot for players and spectators.

Many keenly contested games were played, but perhaps, none showed so good a finish as that of the finals in the S. G. Bawden Trophy event between Exeter Old Boys' rinks, those of C.A. McDonell of Hensall and Dr. McTaggart of Blyth, when it became necessary to play two extra ends to decide the fact that the Hensall quartette were to take home the trophy and the club bags, while the Blyth boys got the cut glass berry bowls. The donor of the trophy made the presentation after the game at noon on Friday. The South Huron Trophy, donated by Messrs. Merner and Eilber was won by John Stevenson's rink of the London Rowing Club after a warm final game with Skip Langford's rink of the London Thistles, Mr. Merner made the presentation of the trophy and the cut-glass water pitchers to the winners and the Thermos Bottles to the runners up. The finals in the consolation were played between W. W. Taman's Exeter rink and W. Allen's Lucknow rink, the former winning, 18-16. The prizes in this event were four cut glass celery dishes and four brass trays.

RUNNING SHOTS

With seven rinks in the contest no two Exeter rinks came together in a game.

Hoover of Clinton did not bring his prize-winning quartette or the result might have been different.

St. Marys was the only town that failed to send a rink.

Taman's was the only Exeter rink to get in the money.

Charlie McDonell's running shots won the trophy.

In the finals McTaggart's rink played the more consistent game.

Taman saved his rink on several occasions by a magnificent draw.

The band music during the evenings was greatly appreciated.

It was the best advertisement Exeter has had in a long, long time.

The Exeter boys who didn't get a prize are having their own troubles, but "every dog has his day."

Lucan had hard luck. They arrived late and lost a game by default, then won a game by default, and not being able to stay went home without actually playing a game.

OR, A CURIOUS MYSTERY EXPLAINED.

CHAPTER XIV.—(Cont'd.)

And then she began to think of her aunt's words, and to wonder whether there might not be some truth in them, so that by the time the next day had dawned she had worried herself into a state of confusion, and had Torvald Lundgren approached her again might really have accepted him from some puzzle-headed notion of the duty of being practical and always considering others before yourself. Fortunately Torvald did not appear, and later in the morning she took her perplexities to dear old Fru Askevold, the pastor's wife, who having worked early and late for her ten children, now toiled for as many grandchildren, and into the bargain was ready to be the friend of any girl who chose to seek her out. In spite of her sixty years she had a bright, fresh-colored face, with a look of youth about it which contrasted curiously with her snowy hair. She was little and plump and had a brisk, cheerful way of moving about.

"Now that is charming of you to come and see me just at the very right minute, Sigrid," said Fru Askevold, kissing the girl, whose face, owing to trouble and sleeplessness, looked more worn than her own. "I've just been cutting out Ingeborg's new frock, and am wanting to sit down and rest a litle. What do you think of the color? Pretty, isn't it?"

"Charming," said Sigrid. "Let me do the tacking for you."

"No, no; you look tired, my child; sit down there by the stove, and I will tack it together as we chat. What makes those dark patches beneath your eyes?"

"Oh, it is nothing. I could not sleep last night, that is all."

"Because you were worrying over something. That does not pay, child; give it up. It's a bad habit."

"I don't think I can help it," said Sigrid. "We all of us have a natural tendency that way. Don't you remember how Frithiof never could sleep before an examination?"

"And you perhaps were worrying your brain about him? Was that it?"

"Partly," said Sigrid, looking down and speaking nervously. "You see it was in this way—I had a chance of becoming rich and well to do, of stepping into a position which would have made me able to help the others, and because it did not come up to my own notion of happiness I threw away the chance."

And so little by little and mentioning no name, she put before the motherly old lady all the facts of the case.

"Child," said Fru Askevold, "I have only one piece of advice to give you—be true to your own ideal."

"But then one's own ideal may be unattainable in this world."

"Perhaps, and if so it can't be helped. But if you mean your marriage to be a happy one, then be true. Half the unhappy marriages come from people stooping to take just what they can get. If you accepted this man's offer you might be wronging some girl who is really capable of loving him properly."

"Then you mean that some of us have higher ideals than others?"

"Why, yes, to be sure; it is the same in this as in everything else, and what you have to do is just to shut your ears to all the well-meaning but false maxims of the world, and listen to the voice in your own heart. Depend upon it you will be able to do far more for Frithiof and Swanhild if you are true to yourself than you would be able to do as a rich woman and an unhappy wife."

Sigrid was silent for some minutes.

"Thank you," she said at length. "I see things much more clearly now; last night I could only see things through Aunt Gronvold's spectacles, and I think they must be very short-sighted ones."

Fru Askevold laughed merrily.

"That is quite true," she said. "The marriages brought about by scheming relatives may look promising enough at first, but in the long run they always bring trouble and misery. The true marriages are made in heaven, Sigrid, though folks are slow to believe that."

Sigrid went away comforted, yet nevertheless life was not very pleasant to her just then, for although she had the satisfaction of seeing Torvald walking the streets of Bergen without any signs of great dejection in his face, she had all day long to endure the consciousness of her aunt's vexation, and to feel in every little economy that this need not have been practiced had she decided as Fru Gronvold wished. It was on the whole a very dreary Christmas, yet the sadness was brightened by one little act of kindness and courtesy which to the end of her life she never forgot. For after all it is that which is rare that makes a deep impression on us. The word of praise spoken at the beginning of our career lingers forever in our hearts with something of the glow of encouragement and hopefulness which it first kindled there; while the applause of later years glides off us like water o ffa duck's back. The little bit of kindness shown in days of trouble is remembered when greater kindness during days of prosperity has been forgotten. It was Christmas-eve. Sigrid sat in her cold bedroom, wrapped round in an eider-down quilt. She was reading over again the letter she had last received from Frithiof, just one of those short unsatisfying letters which of late he had sent her. From Germany he had written amusingly enough, but these London letters often left her more unhappy than they found her, not so much from anything they said as from what they left unsaid. Since last Christmas all had been taken away from her, and now it seemed to her that even Frithiof's love was growing cold, and her tears fell fast on the thin little sheet of paper where she had tried so hard to read love and hope between the lines, and had tried in vain.

A knock at the door made her dry her eyes hastily, and she was relieved to find that it was not her cousin Karen who entered, but Swanhild, with a sunny face and blue eyes dancing with excitement.

"Look, Sigrid," she cried, "here is a parcel which looks exactly like a present. Do make haste and open it."

They cut the string and folded back the paper, Sigrid giving a little cry of surprise as she saw before her the water-color sketch of Bergen, which had been her father's last present to her on the day before his death. Unable to pay it, she had asked the proprietor of the shop to take it back again, and had been relieved by his ready consent. Glancing quickly at the accompanying note, she saw that it bore his signature. It ran as follows:

"Madame,—Will you do me the honor of accepting the water-color sketch of Bergen chosen by the late Herr Falck in October. At your wish I took back the picture then and regarded the purchase as though it had never been made. I now ask you to receive it as a Christmas-gift and a slight token of my respect for the memory of your father," etc., etc.

"Oh!" cried Sigrid, "isn't that good of him? And how nice of him to wait for Christmas instead of sending it straight back. Now I shall have something to send to Frithiof. It will get to him in time for the new year."

Swanhild clapped her hands.

"What a splendid idea! I had not thought of that. And we shall have it up here just for Christmas-day. How pretty it is! People are very kind, I think!"

And Sigrid felt the litle clinging arm round her waist, and as they looked at the picture together she smoothed back the child's golden hair tenderly.

"Yes," she said, smiling, "after all, people are very kind."

CHAPTER XV.

As Preston Askevold had feared, Frithiof bore the troubles much less easily. He was without Sigrid's sweetness of nature, without her patience, and the little touch of philosophic matter-of-factness which helped her to endure. He was far more sensitive too, and was terribly handicapped by the bitterness which was the almost inevitable result of his treatment by Blanche Morgan, a bitterness which stirred him up into a sort of contemptuous hatred of both God and man. Sigrid, with her quiet common sense, her rarely expressed but very real faith, struggled on through the winter and the spring, and in the process managed to grow and develop, but Frithiof, in his desolate London lodgings, with his sore heart and rebellious intellect, grew daily more hard and morose. Had it not been for the Bonifaces he must have gone altogether to the bad, but the days which he spent every now and then in that quiet, simple household, where kindness reigned supreme, saved him from utter ruin. For always through the darkest part of every life there runs, though we may sometimes fail to see it, this "golden thread of love," so that even the worst man on earth is not wholly cut off from God, since He will, by some means or other, eternally try to draw him out of death into life. We are astounded now and then to read that some cold-blooded murderer, some man guilty of a hideous crime, will ask in his last moments to see a child who loved him devotedly, and whom he also loved. We are astonished just because we do not understand the untiring heart of the All-Father who in His goodness often gives to the vilest sinner the love of a pure-hearted woman or child. So true is the beautiful old Latin saying, long in the world but little believed," Mergere nos patitur, sed non submergere Christus" (Christ lets us sink may be, but not drown).

Just at this time there was only one thing in which Frithiof found any satisfaction, and that was in the little store of money which by slow degrees he was able to place in the savings bank. In what way it could ever grow into a sum large enough to pay his father's creditors he did not trouble himself to think, but week by week it did increase, and with this one aim in life he struggled on, working early and late, and living on an amount of food which would have horrified an Englishman. Luckily he had discovered a place in Oxford Street where he could get a good dinner every day for sixpence, but this was practically his only meal, and after some months the scanty fare began to tell upon him, so that even the Miss Turnours noticed that something was wrong.

"That young man looks to me underfed," said Miss Caroline one day. "I met him on the stairs just now, and he seems to me to have grown paler and thinner. What does he have for breakfast, Charlotte? Does he eat as well as the other lodger?"

"Dear me, no," said Miss Charlotte. "It's my belief that he eats nothing at all but ship's biscuits. There's a tin of them up in his room and a tin of cocoa, which he makes for himself. All I ever take him is a jug of boiling water night and morning!"

"Poor fellow!" said Miss Charlotte, sighing a little as she plaited some lace which must have been washed a hundred times into her dress.

COULD ILL BE SPARED

The word Bovril has become a household word throughout the world. Bovril itself has become an established part of the food supply of all civilised people. If there were no Bovril every hospital would be that much poorer, every doctor would be at a loss to find a true substitute, every nurse would be thrown on her own resources to provide nourishing invalid food. If there were no Bovril, athletes in training would be less fit, and competitors in games would lose a great support.

If there were no Bovril, children would miss the quickly made hunger satisfying sandwich. Housekeepers would be less ready to meet an emergency demand for food. If there were no Bovril the camping party and the picnic party would be more difficult to feed. If there were no Bovril, life in the cottage would entail a far greater amount of cooking and fewer tasty dishes than at present. But there is Bovril and its uses are so many and so well known that life is made pleasanter and its burdens made fewer.

Keep Bovril on hand.

BEFORE OR AFTER.

"I thought that in the fifteen years of my practice of medicine," said a physician, "I had answered almost every possible foolish question, but a new one was sprung on me recently. A young man came in with an inflamed eye, for which I prescribed liniment—to be dropped into the eye three times a day. He left the surgery, but returned in a few minutes, poked his head in the doorway and asked:

"Shall I drop this in the eye before meals or after?"

Prosperity is a great teacher; adversity is a greater. Possession pampers the mind; privation trains and strengthens it.

"In financial trouble? What is it?" "Oh, I promised to pay Brown ten dollars to-day, and I've got it, and he knows I've got it, and he knows I know he knows I've got it!"

On the Farm

SOUND, COMMON SENSE.

Have the cows come fresh in the fall. If this practice were followed generally, there is little question but that at least 50 pounds of butter-fat per year would be added to the average product per cow in the state. Having cows freshen at this time brings the heaviest milking during the winter, when one has the most time. It brings the care of the calves in the winter; it allows the feeding of the skim-milk to the calves in the winter, while they need it; and to the young pigs during the early summer, when it means so much to them. Calves dropped in the fall are ready for grass as soon as it comes in the spring. Cows freshening in the fall will, if well cared for, give a good flow of milk in the winter; and when the grass comes a good flow during the early summer; and most of them will be dry during harvest and fall work, when there is plenty to do without a lot of milking. The average price of butter will also be higher, because of a larger portion of it being produced during the winter, when prices are invariably higher than in summer.

TEACH OBEDIENCE.

A good trainer and a good driver seldom uses the word "whoa," but when he does use it he means for the horses to come absolutely to a standstill. A horse can understand that, and will obey that, if he is taught it. Begin at the beginning to teach him if he does not stop when he hears te command something painful and sudden will happen. Do it instantly and with firmness, not with unnecessary severity, but with sufficient force to cause immediate effect. That horse will never forget the lesson. Never suffer him to lapse into disobedience.

It is a comfort to drive a horse that knows enough to stop when commanded, and lives are saved by this obedience, too. Once rightly trained and afterward influenced to remain obedient, the horse obeys automatically, stopping at the command "whoa" even when badly frightened by cars or automobiles, or any other "scarey" objects.

FEEDING VALUES.

Based on the average farm price of feeds for the last ten years, oats are worth on the farm $19.37 per ton, and feeding of the skim-milk to the calves is worth $17.50 per ton, and has a feeding value of $21.98; corn is worth $13.63 per ton, and has a feeding value of $22.66. In other words, at the average farm price, a dollar's worth of feed in oats costs 92 cents; in barley, 80 cents; and in corn, 65 cents. The feeding value is figured on the basis of bran at $20 per ton. On this same basis, a dollar's worth of food nutriments could be supplied in clover hay for 40 cents; in fodder corn 57 cents; and in timothy hay for 60 cents; in ensilage for 78 cents.

In view of the above facts, it is plain that a combination of corn and clover will make a most economical feed.

DAIRY HELPS.

Never cover milk while warm in the cans as it will produce a musty odor.

The milker who will thump a cow for squirming under the attack of flies ought to be hoisted out of the barn on the toe of the dairyman's boot.

Why should the hired man be expected to work ten hours or more in the harvest field and then while hot and dirty tackle the milking job.

In some states the law is that all milk after July 1st must be pasteurized before leaving the creamery. In Denmark milk is pasteurized at all times.

Need not expect to keep up the milk flow during the tailend of summer unless you have plenty of soiling crops to feed. Dead grass does not produce milk.

A $5 bill will buy a detective in the form of a Babcock tester which will show up every cow in the herd that does not earn her keep.

ORCHARD NOTES.

Many farmers who have been growing fruit for years do not know that the apple and most other fruit trees form fruit buds in the late summer months.

In very dry weather fruit buds are formed quite early and in case of a wet fall immature fruit buds sometimes change into leaf buds.

Most small fruits form their fruit buds in the spring.

A Missouri correspondent writes: "I have been told to apply strong kerosene emulsion to my apple trees for scab. Is this better than Bordeaux mixture?" No. Bordeaux mixture is effective, but kerosene is not. The only way to apply Bordeaux mixture is by spraying so that every part of the tree is covered. This cannot be done with a swab.

AREATED MILK.

All milk should be areated as soon as taken from the cow. This can be done by passing it through the sepaartor, but it is not as good as a device which divides the milk into many fine streams and then allows it to flow over a wide surface in thin sheets with plenty of ice to keep the surface cool.

If nothing better can be had, milk may be areated by placing the cans in a trough of cold water and diping the milk with a long-handled dipper and pouring it back into the can until it is thoroughly cool.

Butter may be kept cool in hot weather by filling a basin with cold water, and putting the buter on a plate on the top of the basin.

"Yes, sir; when we were ambushed, we got out without losing a man or a horse or a gun or—" "A minute," chimed in a small, still voice.

CANARY A HOSPITAL PET.

Bird That Brightens the Lives of English Incurables.

"How is Dinky this morning?" "Did she come in last night?"

These are the first inquiries which patients at the Royal Hospital for Incurables at Putney Heath, London, England, make every morning on rising. Dinky is a bird that brightens their days.

There is probably no tamer, no more intelligent bird in London than Dinky. She is a canary. Every morning she leaves her cage and flies to a horse trough about two hundred yards away, where she takes her daily dip.

In the wards she saunters from patient to patient, and her chirrup seems to bid them "good morning." When she has made sure that every one has seen Dinky she leaves the patients to spend the day with the sparrows.

Punctually at 5 Dinky returns to the wards, where speculation is generally rife among patients as to whom she is going to have tea with.

Dinky likes to please everybody, and she chooses her hostess in turn. After tea she takes leave and makes again for the open.

SPARKLING WATER, cool and sweet, refreshes the farmer who builds a

Concrete Well or Tank

THE FARMER, above all others, appreciates good water. He drinks more water than the city man. The city-dweller is dependent upon the public water-supply for the purity of his water, while the farmer can have his own private source of water, and thus be sure that it is pure and healthful.

MAN hasn't found a better drink than cool water, properly collected and stored. But in order to keep water fresh and pure, a tank or well casing that will keep out every possible impurity must be used.

CONCRETE IS THE IDEAL MATERIAL FOR TANKS AND WELL-CASINGS.

IT is absolutely water-tight, protecting your water from seepage of all kinds. It cannot rot or crumble. It is easily cleaned inside. Time and water, instead of causing it to decay, actually make it stronger.

THERE are scores of other uses for concrete on your farm—on every farm. If you would like to know of them, write for our book, "What the Farmer Can Do With Concrete." The book is absolutely free.

OUR Farmers' Information Department will help you to decide how to build anything, from a porch-step to a silo. The service is free—you don't even have to promise to build. When in doubt ask the Information Department.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

Because of the declining birth rate in France much attention is being given in that country to the preservation of health by public measures. Professor Chantemesse, inspector general of hygiene, asserts that a quarter of a million lives are needlessly lost every year in France through inattention to the elementary laws of hygiene. Deputy Joseph Reinach blames absinthe for the trebling of suicides in the last fifty years, the doubling of the number of cases of insanity in the last thirty years and the death of 150,000 persons from tuberculosis each year.

Professor Chantemesse would give greater powers in hygienic matters to the central government and would strengthen the laws requiring physicians to report cases of infectious diseases. He shows that France has a death rate of 20.5 to 21 per 1,000 of population, while Sweden and Denmark have death rates of only 14 to 15 per 1,000.

To induce the French people to increase their birth rate seems beyond the power of French statesmen, but they may be able to deal more effectively with the problem of preserving the living. Longevity, however, is largely a result of individual habits. A campaign of education in health seems to be needed in France.

One of the difficult and important tasks before the new Chinese government is to suppress the production and use of opium that has been caused by the disorder of the revolutionary period. The present condition of the opium traffic is full of trouble also for the British government of India.

Under successive agreements between the British and Chinese governments the importation of opium from India to China was lessened gradually each year and the Chinese government suppressed the home production by a like amount, the latest agreement, made in May, 1911, providing for abolition of all trade in the drug by 1918. In consequence Indian merchants have accumulated a large stock of opium in China, the value of which has been lessened by the large native production due to the revolution. Now the Indian merchants are urging the Indian government to prohibit at once further exportations to China, so that they may dispose profitably of their stores.

Britain is committed to the policy of abolishing the opium traffic as soon as possible, but India taxes the opium exported to China and the government has figured on an income of some $17,000,000 this year from that source. The prospects of the new Chinese government being able to suppress native production soon are not bright, so there is a new tangle over a traffic which unquestionably, on moral grounds, should be abolished.

"I say, old fellow, have you heard about that young lady who poured a jug of water into her fiance's straw hat?"

"No," replied his friend, getting ready to hear an excellent little anecdote.

"Neither have I," said Jimkins, as he began to walk quickly away. "It hasn't leaked out yet."

HOME

SALADS FOR HOT DAYS.

The appetite jaded by heat may be tempted by salads only when those salads are seasonable. Heavy meat concoctions and most of the fish mixtures are not suitable for hot weather.

The ideal summer salad has three requisites—it must be light, appetizing in appearance and icy cold. French dressing is more seasonable than mayonnaise, also more digestible, and fruits and vegetables are preferable to nuts, fish or meats. It is hard to get headed lettuce in summer, but if the young, tender leaves of the garden lettuce are crisped by being put in a cloth on the ice they are improved.

Salad being both cooling and nourishing, may be eaten at both lunch and dinner. To prepare it easily have lettuce always crisping in the refrigerator and also have a pint bottle filled with a thick French dressing. This should be well shaken before using and any left in the salad bowl may be strained and poured back.

It is economical to use left-over vegetables and fruit from dinner of the previous day. Particularly nice is one made of tomatoes cut in eighths, asparagus, shredded green peppers, thinly sliced cucumber, a cake of Neufchatel cheese and a liberal supply of Chili sauce. This is well marinated with French dressing flavored with onion or chopped onion may be mixed through the salad. Serve on a bed of lettuce.

This salad may be mixed with string beans, peas or small lima beans. Cream cheese is good through the mixture, and it nothing else is convenient grate American cheese thickly over it.

A rather heavier salad is made from hard-boiled eggs cut lengthwise. Remove yolks and rub to a paste with anchovies. Refill and put a slice of anchovy on each section. Serve on hearts of lettuce.

Another nice mixture for a plain lettuce salad are squares of cream cheese sprinkled thickly with caviare. Place these in the centre of the lettuce and surround with a border of crisp bacon broken very fine. Cover with French dressing seasoned with chutney.

Green peppers are invaluable for a summer salad. Served whole, they are delicious when filled with cold boiled corn, mixed with a highly seasoned mayonaise. A spoonful of the dressing should be put on top of each cup. Another good filling is cold slaw and shredded peppers well mingled. A pretty salad is made by arranging a bed of tender green lettuce leaves, or young nasturtium leaves, and on it putting a row of shredded green peppers, another row of cheese balls and an outer border of shredded pimentos. The canned ones may be used. Cover with a thick French dressing. If onions are liked, small pearl onions can be sprinkled over the cheese balls.

A delicious fruit salad is a round of tender pineapple placed on a lettuce leaf. On top of the pineapple dot berries in season, strawberries, raspberries, blackberries or currants, and in the centre of the berries have a round of cream cheese. Border the fruit mixture with mayonnaise and put a little in the centre of the cheese.

Black cherries served cold make a delicious salad with mayonnaise dressing. They may be stuffed with an English walnut or cream cheese if the big variety is used.

Apricots stuffed with cream cheese mixture or with plain cream cheese make a nice salad. As this fruit is rather tasteless, a drop or two of Worcestershire may be mixed in the dressing.

GOOD RECIPES.

Puff Pastry.—Rub half a cupful of butter into four cupfuls of flour beat up the yolk of one egg, with a few drops of lemon juice and a little cold water, add them gradually to the flour, making it into a firm paste. Put a cupful and a half of butter into a basin of cold water, wash and squeeze it, then flatten out into a cake. Roll out the paste into a long strip, lay the butter on one end of it, wet the edge slightly and fold the paste over. Press out with a rolling pin and roll out lengthwise, have the paste so that the two open edges are parallel with yourself after folding it in three. Roll from you and never from side to side, using gentle pressure. Then fold in three. Put the paste away to cool for 20 minutes. Now arrange the paste with the open ends in front and roll out again lengthwise, and fold in three as before. Repeat for the third and fourth time, and put to cool for another 20 minutes. Now give the fifth, sixth and seventh rollings, and again cool for 20 minutes. The paste is now ready for the final rolling out.

Frosting a Cake.—Boil one and one-half cupfuls of sugar and one cupful of water till it forms a soft ball when tried in cold water, then pour on to the stiffly beaten whites of two eggs, pouring in a steady stream and very slowly, adding, while beating, one teaspoonful of vanilla extract and one teaspoonful of lemon extract, beat until thick. Spread on cold cake. It is an error to think that a palette knife is the best instrument for icing a cake. A good sized table knife is much better on account of the greater stiffness of the blade.

Jelly Rolls.—Beat up four eggs with one cupful of sugar for 20 minutes. Remove the beater and sift in two cupfuls of flour and one teaspoonful of baking powder, add four tablespoonfuls of milk and one teaspoonful of lemon extract. Mix carefully and pour into a large flat buttered and floured cake tin and bake in a hot oven for 12 minutes. Turn out on to a sugared paper, spread quickly over with hot-melted jelly and roll up at once.

A Vanilla Pudding.—One and a half heaping tablespoonfuls of powdered gelatine, two cupfuls of milk, half a cupful of sugar, one cupful of whipped cream, three eggs and one and a half teaspoonfuls of vanilla extract. Put the gelatine into a saucepan, add the milk and sugar, then dissolve. Beat up the eggs, then add the milk, stirring all the time, return to the pan, and stir over a slow fire till it thickens. Strain into a basin, add the vanilla extract, and when cool fold in the whipped cream. Pour into a wet mold, and when solid serve with any kind of stewed fruit.

A BOUQUET FROM A MIDGET.

Queen Mary receives a bouquet from Anita (Lady Little) after which the Queen shakes hands with the little lady. Miss Anita is thirty years of age, and is said to be the smallest lady in the world. The scene is "Shakespeare's England" at Earl's Court.

DO YOU WASH FRUIT.

A German investigator, having estimated by careful experiments the number of bacteria to be found on market fruit, tried different methods of washing it without injuring the flavor. He washed grapes, apples and pears that had been exposed to street dust, each time examining the wash water for the number of bacteria present.

While the first wash water yielded large numbers, the second contained only a few, and the third a negligible number. A basin of water was used for the purpose, the fruit being moved about in it. When running water was used, five minutes' time was allowed. Fruits with a firm, smooth skin should be rubbed before washing with a clean cloth to start the dirt.

The cleaning of delicate berries is a difficult matter. Such fruit should be purchased with care to avoid all that are too soft or which show sand or other visible dirt. Strawberries, because they grow so near the ground, should not be purchased after a rain, which will spatter them with muddy drops. Only the freshest and cleanest berries should be served raw; more doubtful specimens should be cooked. By immersing them in water a few at a time and handling carefully, such fruits may be washed without much loss of flavor.

Dried figs and dates are very commonly eaten without cooking, or even washing, and yet they have been exposed for an unknown length of time to the contagion brought by dust, flies and dirty hands. In how many houses are oranges washed before they are brought to the table, or the lemon before it is sliced for the tea or lemonade, or before the skin is grated for flavoring? Yet the skin is often very dirty.

Shelled nuts purchased in market should always be washed and scalded before they are used, as they are commonly exposed to dust.

RELIGION IS A NECESSITY

And the Instrument by Means of Which Men Come to the Fullness of Complete Manhood

Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect.—Mathew v. 48.

Men were made in the image of God, and their Creator expects them to be like Him in richness, spiritually and health of character. We cannot be perfect in the sense of being sinless, but it is possible for men to become godlike in breadth of sympathy toward their fellows and in the spirit of their daily service. To approach this perfection is to approach godlikeness.

In our modern American life the necessity for a deep, reasonable, normal religious experience is growing more evident every day. The enormous burdens under which men live, commerically and socially; the subtle and persistent forms of temptation; the vast new questions raised by scientific discoveries; wrought in our social relationships by industrial progress—these all place a burden upon the individual, while at the same time they open before him enlarged possibilities. We need the soothing inspiration of unchangeable realities. As a great astronomer has said, a study of the stars is a good cure for nervous disorders. There is no escape from the effects of our daily toil, except in the exalted region of religious contemplation.

THE FUNDAMTNTAL CHANGES

Religion is another name for health—mental, moral and physical. It is like an adequate foundation beneath our lofty modern buildings. It gives a sense of security, calms the mind and presents to the imagination a full field for its powers. Peace, like the gentle dew from heaven, rests upon the soul; and thus baptized into the mystery of his godlike relationships, one sustains the shocks of daily life unmoved and undismayed.

The greatest discovery of the twentieth century will be the rediscovery of Christ. The message for the new age is a message of simple, universal, vital, spiritual truth.

Men to-day, in the fever and anguish of their desperate struggle for existence in this world, require which is true, not only for the intellect but for the heart; which meets the hunger of the whole man; which is capable of reconciling his warring powers and relating all the worlds of his being into a harmonious system. Such a truth must be alive and personal. It must be large enough to throw light upon the relationships of time and eternity. It must flash its light into the dark mysteries of the grave. It must alleviate and purge the ravages of sin. It must satisfy the cravings of the reason. It must react upon the nervous organism, producing health. It must assist in those readjustments so necessary to our social well being. I believe that Christianity, in the person of its Founder, presents to the world this truth; and the man who opens all the doors of his nature to its incoming will be able to understand, even if not yet he has attained the mighty meaning of the text:—"Be ye perfect."—Rev. Dr. Charles A. Eaton.

A SPIRITUAL MESSAGE

THE TRADE IN LEECHES.

Nothing to What It Used to Be—Paris the Source of Supply.

Forty years ago there were in Paris alone ten wholesale dealers in leeches, each of whom sold between 300,000 and 400,000 leeches monthly, for which they received on an average about $50 a thousand.

To-day there is only one dealer in the capital and he gets from 6 to 7 francs ($1.20 to $1.40) a hundred. His name is Leya and he handles about 130,000 per month, says the Medical Brief, his best market being the United States. He has sometimes half a million in stock.

In former times the Paris poor law administration purchased 80,000 francs ($16,000) worth a year; This was in the thirties and forties of the nineteenth century; the administration now finds itself amply supplied with $40 worth annually.

The great breeding ground for French leeches was the marshes around Bordeaux. A poor peasant named Bechade was the creator of the industry. He rented a tract of marsh land for about $60 and this, when properly stocked with leeches, became worth $5,000.

Bechade collected the leeches by buying all the worn out horses he could get hold of and driving them into the marshes five or six times a month, especially in April, May, June, October and November. Bechade's business flourished, and when he died he was worth a million francs.

After a while the French leech trade was ruined not only on account of the great decline in the demand, but on account of the accessibility of other sources of supply brought about by the improved facilities of transport, fast trains bringing them in a short time from Turkey, Bohemia and Dalmatia and to a more limited extent from Algeria and Russia.

MUSHROOMS.

By Dr. J. B. Dandeno, M.A., Bowmanville.

Deaths occur in this country every year owing to the fact that many people who use mushrooms as table food are unable to distinguish with certainty the poisonous from the others. Cool, damp weather is favorable to the growth of such fungi, consequently they are usually most abundant in the fall.

These fungi, so-called mushrooms or toadstools, or whatever else, may be roughly, in view of their use as food, classed into three groups—(1) Those which are edible and good, (2) those which are poisonous, (3) those which are indifferent, neither poisonous or good.

The chief things to be kept in mind are the characters of the poisonous forms. These all, practically all, belong to one genus and have three points of distinction which may easily be recognized by everyone. They have white "gills," ie., they are white under the cap (not pink, black or brown). They have a ring round the stalk. This is nearly always apparent. They have a sort of cup of flaky material round the base of the stalk. At times this is not easily distinguished. These three characters distinguish the genus Amanita or Death's Cup. No amateur should meddle with the white-gilled fungi, though many of those forms are among the best. None of the pink, black or brown-gilled forms is deadly. Few of the yellow-gilled fungi are good. Avoid them.

Avoid all the white-gilled and yellow-gilled mushrooms. Avoid all old or spoiled specimens of any kind.

The pink, black or brown-gilled are safe, though the pink is the most delicious.

Puff-balls are not poisonous.

Morels are all good.

Hydnums are all good.

A few points of this character may often be made of service when appearing in the papers. It is all right to have them stowed away in scientific books and monographs, but it is through the papers that it reaches the people.

Many a man's best friends are those who know him least.

Probably more men would kiss their wives if it was forbidden.

Some people act foolish and then get sore because others notice it.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

INTERNATIONAL LESSON, SEPT. 1.

Lesson IX.—The death of John the Baptist, Mark 6. 14-29. Golden Text, Rev. 2. 10.

Verse 14. King—A title given by courtesy. His real title was tetrarch, that is, a ruler of one fourth part of a country.

His name—The name of Jesus, whose miracles had attracted wide attention.

These powers—The reported miracles of Jesus.

15. Elijah was a traditional belief, founded on Mal. 4. 5, that Elias or Elijah would reappear as the forerunner of the Messiah.

A prophet—One of unusual prominence, such as the more distinguished Old Testament prophets. The emphasis here is upon the idea that Jesus possessed the spirit and power which characterized the ancient prophets rather than upon the thought of identifying him with any particular one.

16. John, whom I beheaded — Many theories were advanced as to Jesus's identity, but this one most readily appealed to Herod's stricken conscience. Even so wicked a man as he could not escape the compunctions of a guilty conscience and it was natural for him, with his consciousness of guilt resting upon his mind, to behold in any and every pure and holy man and worker of miracles the re-embodiment of this same John whom he caused to be beheaded.

17. In prison—A dungeon attached to the Castle Machaerus, one of Herod's palaces on the east coast of the Dead Sea, known as the "Black Fortress." Here the banquet later described was held.

Herodias, his brother. Philip's wife—She was the daughter of Aristobulus, another son of Herod the Great, and therefore a niece of both her husbands. Philip was Antipas's half brother, who had been disinherited and who lived a quiet life in Rome.

18. Not lawful—Astipas had divorced his first wife, but Jewish law forbade a man marrying his brother's wife under any circumstances (Lev. 20. 21).

19. Set herself—With a vengeful and hateful spirit.

20. Herod feared John—Hard-hearted and corrupt as he was, Herod recognized the justice of John's rebuke and admired the moral courage with which it was administered.

A righteous man—John's convincing words were supported by the fearless and Godly life which he lived.

Kept him safe—From the vengeance of Herodias. Matthew says it was because he feared the multitude (14. 5).

Much perplexed—It was a conflict waged within a weak man who wished to obey the truth but who was fast in the meshes of sin.

Heard him gladly—He was fascinated by the words of John, though he had no power to profit by them.

21. A convenient day—Herodias awaited an opportunity for vengeance.

His lords—Military officers who conducted the affairs of government.

22. The daughter of Herodias herself came in and danced—An almost unprecedented thing for women of rank or even respectability. The dances were usually performed by hired dancers.

She pleased Herod—Better it; that is, the dancing.

23. Sware—Swore, took an oath. Compare Esth. 5. 3.

Half of my kingdom—As Herod was a vassal of Rome, it was not his to offer. His rash vow is the direct result of sensual fascination and the excitement produced by the wine at the banquet. Wrapped in the delusion of these combined evils, the judgment of the statesman and ruler yielded to reckless proffers, the import of which could be fully realized only when sobriety and gravity returned.

25. Straightway with haste—Both women knew that nothing but the king's oath would cause him to do a thing really contrary to his desire. The king's word once given, they seized their opportunity with haste.

27. Straightway—The king, at last entrapped, hastened to fulfil his reckless pledge.

29. In a tomb—Probably near Machaerus. Matthew (14. 12) adds "and they went and told Jesus."

FISH THAT TAKE COLD.

Fish are not equipped to combat rapid changes in temperature because the temperature of the water in the ocean, lakes and rivers beneath the surface remains virtually stable. Some fish, such as carp and trout, when taken from warm water and placed in water several degrees cold take cold. The cold attacks the skin and the fins and various portions of the skin present a cracked, ridgelike appearance. If returned to warm water the fish usually recover, but sometimes the disease, which seems to be a sort of eczema, eats into the muscles of the fish and proves mortal.

A TWISTER AND TRAITOR.

Taft has not only proven himself to be a twister, but he is a traitor to all national ethics. He has failed civilization, but most of all, he has failed his own country. Academically a champion of international fair dealing and arbitration he has proved traitor to these doctrines under the first great test. In signing the Panama Canal bill he consents to a cold-blooded violation of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty. In advising Congress to declare that it is no violation he files in the face of Senator Root and the best lawyers in the United States.

The President has rejected the advice of all the American newspapers and adopted the ethics of the Hearst journals. He has listened to the argument that "this is America's canal, built in American territory with American money, and we can do what we like with it. If the Hay-Pauncefote treaty stands in the way, so much the worse for the treaty. British bluster is not going to prevail in the United States."

It is a pitable spectacle this surrender of Congress and the President to the baser elements in the nation. There is little doubt that the occupant of the White House would assume an altogether different position were it not that an election is pending and that he wishes to catch the mob vote for his party. It is understood that Washington will refuse to submit the objectionable bill to The Hague. If so, it will be a case of the Republic against the world. Certainly after this Canadians and all other peoples will be chary about entering into treaties with a nation that has broken faith in this amazing manner.

Educational experts are becoming properly exercised over the failure of the school system to turn out pupils trained adequately to enter upon the duties they are to take up in after life. It is easier, however, to point out the defects than to suggest an effective remedy. The public school curriculum is laid out apparently with the object of preparing pupils to pass into the high schools, in spite of the fact that the large majority of the scholars do not enter the latter. Again in the High schools the sole aim appears to be to fit the students for admission to the Normal schools and Universities, notwithstanding that the percentage proceeding that far is very small. Through the course from the primary to the highest grade each teacher has charge of from 20 to 40 pupils of different dispositions and varying mental capacity, and is expected to bring them by means of a uniform series of lessons to a certain standard of proficiency. It is an impossible ideal and when the boys and girls quit school they fine themselves in possession of a miscellaneous assortment of information of little practical value, most of which they proceed to forget as soon as they conveniently can. And yet no one seems able to suggest an improvement, that is within the limit of our means.

USBORNE.

An Old Resident Dies.—This community mourns the loss of another of its oldest and most respected residents, in the person of Mr. Robert Alexander, who died at his home North East Boundary, on Sunday, August 25th, at the good old age of 87 years and 8 months. The deceased had enjoyed his usual health up to about a month ago, when he was taken down with illness, but it was not until about a week previous to his death that his condition assumed a serious aspect. Infirmities of old age was the cause of death. Mr. Alexander was a native of Ireland, but came to Canada about sixty years ago. After being in the country about ten years he settled in Usborne, where he continuously resided ever since, having cleared the farm on which he lived and subsequently died, being lot 20, N. E. B. The deceased was twice married, his second wife being Miss Gibson, by whom he is survived, together with one son and one daughter—David on the homestead and Mrs. Josiah Creery of Usborne. The late Mr. Alexander was a man of excellent qualities, and was esteemed and respected by all who knew him. He was a member of the Presbyterian church and a staunch Conservative. The funeral took place to McTaggart's Cemetery on Tuesday last.

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars free.

MOORESVILLE.

Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Hodgins announce the marriage of their only daughter, Lizzie, to Mr. George H. Bere of London, the wedding to take place Sept. 25th, 1912.

The body of Miss Charlotte Edwards a maiden lady of 58 years of age, was found early Friday afternoon lying on the floor of her house at Mooresville. The last time the woman was seen was on Monday night, when she was in conversation with one of the neighbors. Not noticing her about for a couple of days afterwards, little notice was taken of the fact by the residents of the village, as she quite frequently went visiting for several days at a time. The neighbors, becoming anxious, however, at the extended non-appearance of the lady, broke in the door of her house Friday afternoon and found the lifeless body stretched out on the floor. The doctors claim that she had been dead four or five days. Although the direct cause of her death is still a mystery, heart failure is believed to have been responsible for the affair. No marks of violence or anything to indicate that there had been foul play were in evidence.

THE ROCK PTARMIGAN.

A Bird of Storms and Ice, Raw Mists and Bleak Winds.

In order to make the acquaintance of the ptarmigan it is necessary either to journey into the snows and ice of the far north or to climb up to the very highest glacier valleys among the frozen peaks of the Rockies or Cascades, where circumpolar conditions are reproduced. While this curious bird is essentially a subarctic type, it is occasionally found among the isolated fields of eternal snow as far south as Colorado and northern New Mexico.

The rock ptarmigan is a bird of storms and ice and raw mists and bleak winds, in the summer gray as the rocks among which he lives, in winter white as the whirling snows in the midst of which he survives after every other feathered living thing, save only the fearless eagle, has fled to the lower valleys.

His brother, the willow ptarmigan, lives lower down by 500 or 1,000 feet, among the dwarfed shrubs which mark the upper edges of tree life, and, while similar in size and structure, is of a less somber plumage and more friendly disposition than the ghostly gray specter of the upper world, the rock ptarmigan. The males of the willow ptarmigan especially are beautiful birds, brownish gray upon the backs and wings, with rich reddish brown throats almost chestnut in color and dazzling white breasts.—Country Life In America.

Violins Old and New.

There is a general impression that very old violins and violoncellos are much superior in tone to similar instruments of modern construction. The point was debated by a number of Paris musicians, who decided in favor of the modern instrument. Six ancient violoncellos were chosen, including a Stradivarius, a Theckler, a Cappa, a Postenda and a Guarnerius, together with six modern instruments. These were played alternately by Senor Casals, who was hidden from sight, the instruments being indicated to the jury by a number and marks awarded according to beauty of tone. The modern instruments aggregated 1,484 marks and the ancient instruments only 883, although the six ancient 'cellos represented a value of £6,000 and the modern ones £160.—London Express.

A Chinese Columbus.

According to a Chinese chronicler, Hui Sen, who lived in the sixth century of the Christian era, North America was known to the Chinese under the name of Fusang or Fusu. It was said to be a continent lying 6,500 miles to the east of Asia. The chronicle states that in the year 453 five Buddhist priests sailed from China for Fusu, landing in Mexico, where they taught their religion to the natives, built temples and set up enormous statues of their gods all over the country. Traces of a Mongolian civilization have been found in Mexico. There exists in particular a statue of a god resembling not the Aztec god, but one of the grotesque deities of the Chinese.—Harper's.

Deceit.

TWENTY YEARS-

Makes a great difference in most women. They are troubled with "nerves"—they suffer from backache, headache, sleeplessness, a sensation of irritability or twitching, hot flashes, dizzy spells, or many other symptoms of female weakness. The local disorder and inflammation should be treated with Dr. Pierce's Lotion Tablets and the irregularity and weakness of the female system corrected and strengthened with Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. The strain upon the young woman or the woman of middle age—upon the nerve and blood forming structures—may be too great for her strength. This is the time to take this restorative tonic and strength-giving nervine and regulator. For over forty years sold by druggists for woman's peculiar weaknesses and distressing ailments. The one remedy so perfect in composition and so good in curative effects as to warrant its makers in printing its every ingredient on its outside wrapper. The one remedy which absolutely contains neither alcohol nor injurious or habit-forming drugs.

Mrs. Scott.

Following letter selected at random from a large number of similar ones and cited merely to illustrate these remarks:

"In the winter of 1898 I became greatly run down and irregular," writes Mrs. Hiram Scott, of Swan Creek, Mich., Route 1, Box 48. "I slowly took on gray years, and at last resolved to apply to the doctors for help. They said I had inflammation, enlargement and laceration. I was so bad eleven weeks and got no better. The doctor said I would have to have an operation, but to that I would not listen. My husband purchased two bottles of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. When I started to take the remedy I could not walk across the floor, but after I had taken three bottles I could feel myself gaining, so I dropped the doctor and took Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. Only for it I think I would be dead. I can truly say it really believe it saved my life. I feel better now than in twenty years."

A EUGENIC MURDER.

Man Kills His Wife to End Her Sufferings.

A Viennese (Austria) clerk named Haas, who shot his wife dead in a railway carriage and then endeavored to commit suicide, has just been acquitted by a jury at Leoben. He was found guilty, however, of carrying a revolver without license, and had to pay a fine of $1.87 before being released.

There was no denial of the facts. The man had deliberately shot his wife and then turned the weapon upon himself, inflicting a slight flesh wound, which, however, caused him to be unconscious until the train reached a station and the police came ond arrested him. Herr Haas pleaded, nevertheless, that his wife was in the last stages of consumption, and that he had shot her because her sufferings had made him frantic.

Witnesses, including her physician, testified that this was so and also that the pair had lived in perfect harmony. Two doctors called by the prosecution deposed that the depression caused by the illness of his wife was sufficient to make Haas not responsible for his act. Thereupon the jury returned the verdict of not guilty, but insisted that he should be punished for carrying a revolver without a license, since he had himself admitted that when he purchased the weapon he had no idea to what use he was to put it, and therefore at that time must have been perfectly sane.

TYPHOID EPIDEMIC OVER.

Ottawa's Medical Officer Issues Reassuring Message.

A despatch from Ottawa says: Dr. W. T. Shirreff, Medical Officer of Health, on Friday night issued a most reassuring message to the citizens of the capital, informing them that the typhoid epidemic had run its course and that he city water was now fit for drinking. Bacteriological tests of the water supply for the past five weeks show conclusively that it is now free from all contamination and fit for consumption without boiling or otherwise treating it. "The causative reason for typhoid has now been removed," he states, "and every precaution has been taken to protect the all-steel intake pipe, which is now being used exclusively."

SMALLPOX IN MONTREAL.

Thirteen Patients are Now in the Hospital.

A despatch from Montreal says: With thirteen smallpox patients in the Isolation Hospital, and many houses disinfected and under supervision, there has developed in the city the nucleus of a smallpox scare. No fewer than five cases have come in th's week. Eight were reported last week. The majority of these are from three families, all of whom obtained the infection at Les Eboulements, on the St. Lawrence, below Quebec. The Provincial authorities did not know that there was smallpox there until the cases were discovered in Montreal and the infection was traced back.

TWO DOLLAR BILLS POPULAR.

Marked Increase in Circulation of Small Notes.

A despatch from Ottawa says: Returns received by the Finance Department show that the circulation of small notes is substantially larger than it was last summer. Comparing the circulation of July 31, 1912, with that of July 31, 1911, there is an advance in one dollar notes of approximately $500,000, in two dollar notes of approximately $800,000, in four dollar notes of over $360,000; or in all of between $1,600,000 and $1,700,000. In addition there is the additional circulation of the new five dollar note, which at the end of July was $6,078,000; this is practically balanced by the decreased use of large notes, which are usedf exclusively by banks. In the three weeks of August which have elapsed the circulation of fives has increased to approximately $8,250,000.

HUNGER STRIKE IN JAIL.

Mary Leigh and Gladys Evans Are Being Forcibly Fed.

A despatch from Dublin, Ireland, says: Mary Leigh and Gladys Evans, two suffragettes, who were sentenced here on August 7 to five years' imprisonment on charges respectively of wounding John E. Redmond, leader of the Irish Parliamentary party, with a hatchet thrown at Premier Asquith's carriage, and of setting fire to the Theatre Royal, have started a hunger strike. They are being forcibly fed by the jail officials.

CHILDREN BITTEN BY DOG.

Sent for Pasteur Treatment, as Animal was Thought Mad.

A despatch from Chatham says: James and Isabella Bennie, children of Robert Bennie of Leamington, were seriously injured at the home of Alexander Farquaharson, in Tilbury East township on Wednesday, by being bitten by a mad dog. The canine attacked them while they were playing on a swing. People in the neighborhood assert positively that the animal was mad, and the children have been removed to Toronto, where they will undergo treatment at the Pasteur Institute.

BRITISH INSURANCE ACT.

London Draper Heavily Fined for Disobeying It.

A London despatch says: The first prosecution under the Insurance Act took place at the Lambeth Police Court, when William Hurlock, seventy years old, a prominent Liberal, who has been in business as a draper in Walworth road, South London, for more than fifty years, and who employs about a hundred persons, was arraigned. He had openly announced his intention to disobey the act and was fined $25 on each of three summonses for refusing to lick stamps and $25 costs on the first summons. Permission was given to state a case for appeal. A number of other cases are awaiting trial.

ATTEMPT TO WRECK A TRAIN

Section Man Discovered That Spikes and Angle-Bars Had Been Removed

A despatch from Winnipeg says: The discovery of a deliberate attempt to wreck Canadian Pacific passenger train No. 108 on the Stonewall branch at a point two miles south of Komano was made by a sectionman early on Friday morning. The train is due in Winnipeg at 8 a.m., and between 6 and 7 o'clock it was discovered that spikes had been extracted and angle bars pulled out until they stretched outside the ties. Marks indicated that men had been working on the wrecking job some hours, and the displaced material had all been carried away. The wrecking crew has been unable to discover either spikes or bars. The sectionman went north to the nearest wire point and stopped the south-bound train. If this line had not been regularly patrolled as usual early Friday morning before trains go over it a disastrous accident would have resulted. Chief Bell of the Canadian Pacific Police is working on the ground with a body of men, and it is hoped that the wrecker will be rounded up

BIG DEMAND FOR HARD COAL

Big Companies' Stocks Should be Filling Up for Winter, But Are Depleted

A despatch from Winnipeg says: Reports from the Pennsylvania anthracite field show that the demand, in spite of every effort to avoid a shortage, is likely to be overwhelming on account of a mass of belated orders accumulated during the strike period of the spring. Stocks of the big coal companies throughout the country, which at the present time should be filling up for winter demands, are in many cases being absolutely depleted. Prices are accordingly rising in Winnipeg. Pennsylvania hard coal has gone up from ten and a half to eleven dollars a ton. Manitoba and eastern Saskatchewan are dependent on this supply, though further west it comes into competition with hard coal from Crow's Nest.

The shortage can be judged of by the following figures of shipments from Pennsylvania: April, 1911, 5,804,915 tons; April, 1912, 266,625 tons; May, 1911, 6,417,362 tons; May, 1912, 1,429,457 tons. First seven months, 1911, 32,113,648 tons; same period, 1912, 22,382,132 tons.

Much of the Canadian prairie west is dependent for its fuel supplies on outside sources, and these figures present an alarming prospect. Local coal dealers are anticipating a further rise in prices.

MAKING SAFE INVESTMENTS

AN INTERESTING COMPARISON OF BONDS AND MORTGAGES.

The Experiences of Two Men, One of Whom Invested in Bonds and the Other in Mortgages—Bonds are Readily Negotiable, Mortgages are Not.

The articles contributed by "Investor" are for the sole purpose of guiding prospective investors, and, if possible, of saving them from losing money through placing it in "wild-cat" enterprises. The impartial and reliable character of the information may be relied upon. The writer of these articles and the publisher of this paper have no interests to serve in connection with this matter other than those of the reader.

(By "Investor.")

A few years ago—it was in the panic year of 1907—a man possessed a mortgage which he wanted to sell and couldn't—next tried to realize on it by using it as collateral security at a bank for a loan. Now, under the Bank Act, banks are wisely prevented from loaning on such fixed security as mortgages. You see, a bank's business is essentially a cash business, and its assets have to be such as may be readily turned into cash. They may, therefore, buy bonds or loan on bonds or stocks, but not on mortgages.

So, of course, the bank couldn't loan this man any money on the mortgage. At one bank, however, he knew the general manager, and knowing that the mortgage was a good one and the man honest the banker loaned him the money on his note, taking his verbal promise not to use the mortgage without paying off the note.

That is one of the greatest drawbacks to loaning money on a mortgage—it is so difficult to cash it in if one requires the money unexpectedly, or even to get a loan on it.

During the same year a man had some bonds which he had bought as an investment. Now, 1907 was a year when, as everyone will remember, money was exceedingly scarce. As a result he had to raise some money, and to do so he went to his banker with the bonds. "Certainly," said the banker. "We can loan you up to 90 per cent. of the value of those bonds"—they were bonds of fairly well-known municipalities—"or you can, of course, sell them and get about 98 per cent. of what they cost you."

This man didn't want nearly 90 per cent. of the value of the bonds, nor did he particularly want to sell them, so he borrowed what money he needed and put up the bonds as security. So soon as the stress was over he paid off his loan and put his bonds back in his strong box.

Mortgages are, without doubt, a very excellent form of investment and one which people with lots of money and with no occasion to have to realize on them at short notice may purchase if they use care. They are, of course, in many ways a nuisance because they involve a whole lot of attention to details. Insurance, titles, valuation and upkeep are matters which require more or less attention and the best legal advice is necessary in drawing them up and searching the titles. But for those with lots of time to attend to such matters they are satisfactory.

On the other hand bonds, carefully chosen, involve no more bother than the cutting off of coupons every half year and depositing them in the bank. Of course, anyone buying bonds must look into the matter very carefully. Bonds carrying bonuses of common stock are necessarily speculative and should be avoided by those who cannot afford to take chances. On the other hand, in the case of industrial bonds, the assets should amount to at least twice the bonds issued and the greater this proportion is the better. Earnings, too, should be over twice the amount required for bond interest. If a company issuing bonds has outstanding shares on which it has been paying dividends all the better; for the bond's interest comes before the stockholders' dividends, whether they own preferred or common stock. A careful investor, however, will not buy a bond of a company which cannot show at least earnings for the past three years which average well in excess of the amount required for bond interest.

In municipals one need not be so exacting. No villages and small towns be avoided—one may buy with confidence.

HAS FOUND CANCER GERM.

Dr. Odin Also Says He Has an Anti-Cancer Serum.

Dr. Gaston Odin, a Paris, France, physician, announces that he has discovered the microbe of cancer and that he has succeeded in isolating and cultivating it. He also declared that he has found an anti-cancer serum which, whether or not it leads to a permanent prevention or a cure, will show with certainty if the cancer parasite is present in the blood.

Dr. Odin, who has been conducting his research for a decade, claims that Professor Matruchot, of the faculty of science, and Professor Lannois, of the faculty of medicine, at the University of Paris, have verified his discovery, which he asserts has definitely proved the correctness of the theory of the parasitical nature of cancer.

STRIKE OF SHIPS' OFFICERS

Mercantile Marine of Great Britain is Seething With Discontent

A despatch from London, England, says: The culminating strike of the series which has crippled the British carrying business during the past two years is threatened by the officers of the mercantile marine. The movement began on Thursday, when the newly-formed union of shipmasters and mates tried to prevent the Canadian Pacific liner Mount Royal from sailing. The Chief Officer was dismissed, and the union demanded his reinstatement. A substitute was obtained by the company, however, and the vessel left port. The officers are well organized; they are violently discontented, and they propose to put forward before the end of the year what they consider their legitimate demands. Failure to meet these on the part of the ship-owners will, they say, be met by a strike, "which may starve the nation."

Inadequate salaries is the foremost count in the indictment against the companies. Masters of some of the largest passenger ships are paid no more than $2,000 a year, and most of them have families ashore to maintain. Entire denial of vacations, seven days' work weekly, with long hours while in port as well as at sea, and the liability to loss of certificates through one error of judgment, are some of the hardships being discussed.

Other recent strikes have failed, largely because the strikers were unskilled laborers whose places could be filled. The officers of ships, on the other hand, are a special class, and a general strike by them would leave the owners almost helpless.

BABY'S GREAT DANGER DURING HOT WEATHER

More little ones die during the hot weather than at any other time of the year. Diarrhoea, dysentery, cholera infantum and stomach disorders come without warning and when a medicine is not at hand to give promptly the short delay too frequently means that the child has passed beyond aid. Baby's Own Tablets should always be kept in the home where there are young children. An occasional dose of the Tablets will prevent stomach and bowel troubles, or if the trouble comes suddenly the prompt use of the Tablets will cure the baby. Mrs. Adelore Ouillette, St. Bruno, Que., writes: "My baby was troubled with his bowels, but Baby's Own Tablets soon set him right again." The Tablets are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

"GRIP FAST."

An Incident of the Terrible Titanic Disaster.

The Countess of Rothes, who in the terrible Titanic disaster first took the tiller of the lifeboat she was in, and later pulled an oar for three hours in heart-breaking pursuit of the lights of a receding vessel, might well have recalled, as she labored, the motto of the house of Leslie, to which the earldom of Rothes belongs. It is "Grip fast."

More than one of the family mottoes to be found in Burke's "Peerage," that fat and formidable volume so frequently seen on British center-tables, had its origin in some traditional adventure of a far-away ancestral founder. Some belong to noble English houses; more to those of Scotland.

Bartholomew Leslie, far back in the days of William the Conqueror, saved from drowning the Scottish Princess Margaret. As he rose beside her in the water, after leaping to the rescue, he bade her grip fast his girdle, and he would swim with her to shore.

"Gin the buckle bide," said the princess. But she held fast, and so did the buckle; and a grateful sovereign granted her rescuer a coat of arm bearing three golden buckles, and the motto "Grip fast." The earldom of Rothes is one of the few in which the title, when there is no male heir, descends to a daughter.

A Scotch motto of even more interesting origin is the curious one borne by the Conynghams: "Over, fork over." Apart from its history, it has a suggestion of "stand and deliver" about it; besides, "fork over" is certainly slang. Nevertheless, it arose, like that of the Leslies, from the circumstances of a royal rescue. According to family tradition, Malcolm Conyngham, who lived in the reign of that "gracious Duncan" whom Macbeth slew, escaped after the murder with Prince Malcolm, Duncan's son, from Scotland.

At one time when closely pursued, Malcolm Conygham saved the prince by concealing him in a barn and forking hay over him. When Prince Malcolm, after Macbeth's overthrow and death, came to the throne, he generously rewarded his faithful friend, and granted him a pitchfork to be honorably borne upon his arms, with the words, "Over, fork over" inscribed beneath.

Toronto Man Cured of Intolerable Itch

Mr. J. E. Hooper, Toronto.

By Cuticura Soap and Cuticura Ointment

"I just want to say a good word for Cuticura Soap and Ointment. Four or five years ago I was in Port Arthur, and I had an attack of the itch. It certainly was an intolerable nuisance. The itching was principally at nights before I went to bed. The thighs were especially affected.

"I went to two doctors about it, and tried more than one remedy. I was beginning to think the complaint was incurable, when I was telling my trouble to a barber, and he said that he would guarantee to cure me. He told me to take a hot bath, use Cuticura Soap, and then apply Cuticura Ointment. I took his advice, and, sure enough, the itch vanished. I had probably been troubled with the itch for two or three months before I tried Cuticura Soap and Ointment, and they completely cured me of that intolerable nuisance. After one warm bath with Cuticura Soap and use of the Cuticura Ointment I was never troubled with the itching again. Anything in this testimonial I would be prepared to swear to in a court of law." (Signed) J. E. Hooper, 268 Parliament Street, Toronto, Jan. 10, 1911.

For more than a generation Cuticura Soap and Ointment have afforded the speediest, simplest and most economical treatment for skin and scalp humors. Sold by druggists and dealers everywhere. NEW NAVAL DIRECTOR.

Mr. E. H. Tennyson d'Eyncourt, who has just been appointed to the high and responsible post of Director of Naval Construction at the British Admiralty, in succession to Sir Philip Watts on his retirement, now enters Government service for the first time. He has been at Elswick, with Messrs. Armstrong, Whitworth, and Co., in the Naval Construction Department of the great firm for the past twenty years, except for temporary service of one year with the Fairfield Company on the Clyde. Recently on Sir Andrew Noble's retirement he was made a member of head works board of local directors.

In selecting Mr. E. H. Tennyson d'Eyncourt for the office of Chief Constructor of the navy from outside the Admiralty, Mr. Winston Churchill and his board have followed the precedent set by two former Admiralty Boards. Sir William White was brought from Elswick to Whitehall in 1885, and in 1902 the Admiralty again looked to the great northern shipbuilding establishment for Sir W. White's successor, Sir Philip Watts, whom Mr. Tennyson d'Eyncourt replaces.

THE WAY OUT.

Change of Food Brought Success and Happiness.

An ambitious but delicate girl, after failing to go through school on account of nervousness and hysteria, found in Grape-Nuts the only thing that seemed to build her up and furnish her the peace of health.

"From infancy," she says, "I have not been strong. Being ambitious to learn at any cost I finally got to the High School, but soon had to abandon my studies on account of nervous prostration and hysteria.

"My food did not agree with me, I grew thin and despondent. I could not enjoy the simplest social affair for I suffered constantly from nervousness in spite of all sorts of medicines.

"This wretched condition continued until I was twenty-five, when I became interested in the letters of those who had cases like mine and who were getting well by eating Grape-Nuts.

"I had little faith but procured a box and after the first dish I experienced a peculiar satisfied feeling that I had never gained from any ordinary food. I slept and rested better that night, and in a few days began to grow stronger.

"I had a new feeling of peace and restfulness. In a few weeks, to my great joy, the headaches and nervousness left me and life became bright and hopeful. I resumed my studies and later taught ten months with ease—of course using Grape-Nuts every day. It is now four years since I began to use Grape-Nuts, I am the mistress of a happy home, and the old weakness has never returned." Name given by Canadian Postum Co., Windsor, Ont.

HE RAN NO RISK.

The tramp sat, serene and dirty, on the back-door step, eating the breakfast for which he had whined, and the servant stood looking at him curiously.

Presently the Knight of the road observed the attention she was paying him.

"Wotter yer lookin' at me for?" he asked, in idle curiosity. "Think I'm a long-lost cousing?"

"No," replied the maid coolly; "but I must say you remind me of a man I useter know."

"Sweetheart!" asked the tramp coyly.

"None of your business!" was the maid's retort. "But something happened to him which'll never happen to you!"

"What's that? Died a millionaire, did he?"

The maid's reply was crushing:

"No; he was accidentally drowned while bathing!"

WHY WE WEAR COLLARS.

Some Out-of-the-Way Facts About Our Clothes.

Starch was never heard of in England until after Queen Elizabeth came to the throne. This statement may sound a little startling, but it is quite true, nevertheless.

Elizabeth's father, bluff King Hal, was the first English monarch to wear any sort of neck band. That was very plain, about an inch in depth, and made of lace. Yet only fifty years later, an author of the times — Henry Peacham — writes:

"He is not a gentleman or in the fashion, whose band of Italian work standeth him not at least £3 to £4. Yea, a seamstress in Holborn told me that there are some of £60 price a piece!"

Fancy paying such a sum as $3,600 a dozen for one's collars!

The origin of the present starched collar was the ruff. In the year 1564 Queen Elizabeth first used a coach. Her coachman came from Holland. He was a man named Boenen, and his wife brought with her from that country the art of clean starching.

Soon afterwards, a certain Madame Dinghen came from the Netherlands, and started a laundry with clear starching in London. A very good thing she made of it, for the daughters of worthy citizens crowded to her to learn the art, and she charged them $25 a piece Twenty-five dollars was a lot of money in those days—equal to at least $100 of modern money.

As soon as starching became common, starched ruffs took the place of the thin band of lace, and, like all new fashions throughout history, this one ran absolutely riot.

Ruffs grew so large that they had to be supported by special wire frames. They were worn nine inches deep. Men and women adopted them. Special implements were used for starching them; these were known as "setting sticks," "struts," and "poking sticks." The first two were made of wood or bone, the latter of iron.

Higgins, a tailor, whose shop was at the corner of the Haymarket, invented a patent support for ruffs, and made a fortune out of it. He called it a "Piccadil," and it is said that this was the origin of Piccadilly.

Charles I. is usually seen in pictures wearing a falling band of lace; but when he first came to the throne he wore the ruff. It was not until the fourth year of his reign that he took to the well-known lace neckwear.

The falling band became as extravagant as the ruff; it was made of point lace, and cost a small fortune.

The Civil War ended this fashion, and when Charles II. came back he brought with him the wig known as the peruke, which covered the back and sides of the neck. The result was that "bands" of lawn such as judges still wear as part of their official raiment came into vogue.

Laced cravats followed in the time of William and Mary, to be soon superseded by the "stock," buckled behind the neck and plaited in many folds. This fashion was very long-lasting, and we have all read how the famous "Beau" Brummel would use a dozen a morning, until he got one tied to his perfect satisfaction.—London Answers.

BRIDGE OVER THE GANGES.

Sacred River to Be Spanned—Changes in River Bed.

The task of bridging the Ganges, the great river of northern India which issues from an ice cave at the foot of the Himalayan snow bed, has been assigned to a group of English engineers, says the Pall Mall Gazette.

This bridge, which is over a mile in length, is to carry the Eastern Bengal State Railway over the Ganges from Damukelia to Sara Ghat, the place of pilgrimage, to which hundreds of thousands of devout Hindus repair once a year to wash away their sins in the sacret river.

Spanning the river, the bridge will be carried on steel trestles, which in turn will be supported on massive steel grilles in granite piers. The contract consists of fifteen main spans, each 359 feet long and fifty-two feet high, and weighing 1,300 tons.

The Ganges is essentially a river of great cities; Calcutta, Patna, Benares, Allahabad, all lie on its course, and the ancient capitals of Agra and Delhi are on the Jumna, higher up. Great changes take place from time to time in the river bed of the Ganges, which considerably alter the face of the country. Extensive islands are then thrown up, and many decayed and ruined cities that are then discovered attest the changes in the river bed in ancient times. The bridge will cost about £1,250,000 to build.

72 YEARS' SERVICE.

Prizes for laborers who have been in the service of one employer or on the same farm for the longest period, offered in connection with the Hunts Agricultural Show, have disclosed some wonderful records. One man of eighty-three, named John Laxton, has a record of seventy-two years' service, and another man of sixty years has a record of fifty-three years. In the prizes for sheep-rearing one shepherd had 153 lambs from 104 ewes, and another 118 lambs from seventy-eight ewes.

No person should go from home without a bottle of Dr. J. D. Kellogg's Dysentery Cordial in their possession, as change of water, cooking, climate, etc., frequently brings on summer complaint, and there is nothing like being ready with a sure remedy at hand, which oftentimes saves great suffering and frequently valuable lives. This Cordial has gained for itself a widespread reputation for affording prompt relief from all summer complaints.

The most delicate can take them without feeling the revulsion that follows the taking of ordinary pills. This is one reason for the popularity of these celebrated pills, but the main reason is their high tonical quality as a medicine for the stomach.

DEAD BODY ON BORDER.

A Russian smuggler was shot recently by Cossacks just as he was crossing the Austrian boundary, not far from Czernowitz. The body fell across the frontier, the head in Russian territory, the trunk on the strip of neutral ground which forms the frontier, and the legs in Austria. No one is competent to deal with the removal of the body, as it fell in different countries. It was still lying at the time of writing, unburied, the head guarded by Cossacks, the rest by Austrian gendarmes.

TOO MUCH OF A GOOD THING.

"I was very happy," said the professor, "when, after years of wooing, she finally said, 'yes.'"

"But, why did you break the engagement so soon after?" asked his friend.

"Man, it was she that dissolved it."

"Really," said the friend. "How did that happen?"

"It was due to my accursed absent-mindedness. When, a few days later, I called at her home, I again asked her to marry me."

LOCAL DOINGS.

Monday next is Labor Day.

School re-opens next Tuesday.

Some women would rather be graceful than gracious.

A woman who pretends to laugh at love, is like a child who sings at night when he is afraid.

One way for a man to find out just what a woman really thinks of him is to make her angry.

The Junior baseball team drove to Centralia Monday evening and were defeated, 7—5, in a good game.

An eastern man tried to end his life with a corkscrew. Instead of merely sticking to the stuff inside the bottle.

After two or three nice days the very heavy rain of Sunday night was a great disappointment to farmers who were hopeful of being able to draw their oats on Monday

Mr. I. Armstrong received a telegram on Monday, announcing the death of his nephew, Mr. George Armstrong, eldest son of Mr. William Armstong of Little City, Mich., formerly of Exeter. He was aged about 45 years. The funeral took place Tuesday.

Mrs. Enoch Follick received the sad news on Tuesday of the death of her brother, John Fenwick, who died at his home, Gull Lake, Man., last week, aged about 70 years. Mr. Fenwick, formerly resided near Sarepta, having farmed there for many years.

Mr. Percy Mollard, who is engaged with Mr. W. D. Shindere of Stephen was painfully injured on Friday last. He was about to drive the horses out of the stable when one of the number kicked at a colt, and Mr Mollard being near the colt which had moved in the meantime received the blow in the abdomen, which rendered him unconscious for some time. He is, however, now recovering.

Mr. Ben. Crunnican of the Postal service, Chicago, Ill., was in town Tuesday shaking hands with old friends. Mr. Crunnican was a former resident of Exeter, having spent the greater part of his younger days with his parents here, but left Exeter in 1880. Mr. C. and the writer were school mates in the seventies and many the scene incident to our boyhood days were recalled with pleasure and happy thought.

Mr. Wm. Stewart of town has just received a letter from the Minister of Agriculture, appointing him fruit inspector for Ontario at a liberal salary. His duties commence at once. Mr. Stewart will leave shortly for Fort William on his official duty. The minister has made no mistake in selecting Mr. Stewart for the position. He is a man of long and varied experience in the apple business and is particularly qualified for the position to which he has been appointed.

One's loyalty to the town one lives in is always to be commended and is invariably admired. Local pride is a great business builder, and attracts worthy citizens to the place. Every citizen should be a practical booster for the town which gives him a residence. We should say good things of municipality effort. Commend the tidy streets and attractive homes, the enterprising business men. We should support our public institutions and especially the efforts to provide a liberal education for every child within our corporation limits, and as good an education for the poor man's family as for the rich, and at an expenditure he can afford.

HICKS' SEPTEMBER FORECASTS.—A regular storm period is central on the 5th, embracing the 3rd to the 8th. By the 5th low barometer, rising temperature, cloudiness and gathering storms will appear in western sections, and during the 6th, 7th, and 8th, rain and threatening conditions generally will pass in regular progressive order eastwardly across the country. The probabilities are that the rainfall during these storms will be moderate. The barometer will remain below normal, and the temperature will not fall, as ordinarily, after the passage of these disturbances, giving a continued spell of very warm weather, except in the extreme northern parts of the country.

A Remarkable Hypnotist Coming to Exeter.—We are pleased to announce the coming of Prof. Hemstreet, who is rated as the most marvellous hypnotist before the American people. He has played many of our neighboring towns and has created the greatest wonder and excitement by the strange power he undoubtedly possesses, and the press and public all speak in highest praise of his entertainment wherever he has appeared. The Professor carries no subjects but depends upon his audience for his committee, thereby eliminating all possibility of collusion. Any of our local skeptics are invited upon the stage if they are anxious to be shown. Prof. Hemstreet will be at our opera house Wednesday and Thursday nights, Sept. 4th and 5th. Admission 15c. children 10c., reserved seats 25c. Plan of hall at Cole's Drug Store.

A writer in Rural New York, in discussing the causes of lightning striking barns, says that a vacant barn is seldom struck by lightning, but a barn full of hot hay is often struck. His theory is that the heat rising from the barn full of new hay or grain makes the air light and offers a channel for the lightning to travel in. Dust particles a current of moist air, or a current of hot air will afford such a channel. Moral—Throw open the barn doors so that the air inside and outside the barn may be uniform.

HEMSTREET THE HYPNOTIST.—Prof. Hemstreet, the noted travelling hypnotist gave most excellent and laughable performances at the Masonic Opera House in Orange on Monday and Tuesday night last. There were large and enthusiastic audiences in attendance. The professor called for a volunteer committee and a large number of young men quickly responded, who went on the stage and were hypnotized, and then the fun began. The vast audiences were kept convulsed with laughter at the succession of comical antics made by the boys."—At the Opera House, Exeter, on Wednesday and Thursday, Sept. 4th and 5th, 1912. SOME BALL GAME.—1-0 for a nine innings ball game played in less than one hour, is some game. That was the score in favor of Exeter boys in Clinton on Thursday afternoon last. The one lone run was made by "Ginger" Elliott on an error by Clinton on an overthrow to first base in the ninth. There was but one error on each side but Clinton's proved costly. Tommy Carling pitched great ball, and when hit received the finest of support on the bases, and in the garden. 13 strikeouts were recorded in favor of Tommy, while his opponent in the box got but three. Clinton, however, gave their pitcher magnificent support. A large number of fans went along to root for Exeter, and they were well repaid for their trip.

THE LATE MRS. STANCOMBE—After an illness of several months, caused mainly by the infirmities of age, there passed away near midnight on Sunday, Sept. 1st, at her residence, Carling Street, Exeter, a highly respected resident of town in the person of Mrs. Margaret E. Stancombe, at the age of 74 years, 4 months and 6 days. Deceased, whose maiden name was Miss Easterbrook had been twice married her first husband being Mr. Anning and her second husband Mr. Stancombe, both of whom predeceased her some years. She was a faithful and consistant member of the Main Street Methodist church, and in her daily life she showed that she was following in the footsteps of her Master. The funeral service was held in the Main Street church on Tuesday afternoon, and interment took place in Exeter cemetery.

Edward, a young son of Mr. Herbert Axt, narrowly escaped serious injury Tuesday afternoon. He attempted to climb on a moving wagon by stepping on the spokes of the wheel, with the natural result that his leg slipped between the spokes, and stopped the wheel. ANNIVERSARY AND HARVEST THANKSGIVING SERVICES.—The Anniversary and Harvest Thanksgiving Services of the Trivitt Memorial Church were held on Sunday last, and were of a particularly bright and interesting character. The weather in the morning threatened rain but otherwise was fine and continued so throughout the day. The congregation in the morning was large, but that of the evening taxed the church to its utmost capacity. The interior decorations, composed of grain and flowers were beautiful for such an occasion, and it was a pleasure to be in attendance at the services. Rev. Canon Sage, B.A., D.D., rector of St. George's church, London, delivered two excellent sermons, being practical and much appreciated. In the morning he preached from St. Matthew VI., 34.—"Be not therefore anxious for the morrow, for the morrow will be anxious for itself. Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof." His discourse was a most instructive and fascinating exposition of that portion of scripture. The sermon in the evening was from Psalm LXV., 13.—"The pastures are clothed with flocks; the valleys also are covered over with corn; they shout for joy, they also sing" The discourse was an interesting review of the harvest institution from the earliest ages, and the thankful observance which has always marked it. It was a beautiful exposition of the joys of Messiah's Kingdom, as typified by the "Joy of Harvest". The full choir assisted by members of the Presbyterian church choir, rendered the anthems, chants and hymns with deeply pleasing effect, while Mr. Markham presided at the organ in his usual efficient manner. The solo parts by Miss Birdie Boyle and Mr. Joseph Senior were admirably rendered. The total collection at both services amounted to nearly $160.

GENERAL BOOTH'S FUNERAL

Workmen, Weeping Women and Children Marched in the Great Procession.

A despatch from London says: The body of the late General William Booth was laid on Thursday beside that of Catherine Booth, his wife, in Abney Park cemetery, amid signs of deep respect from men and women of all classes. Representatives of reigning houses and of Presidents of Republics, joined round the grave with many thousands from the masses whom the founder of the Salvation Army had tried to uplift. Delegates of legislative bodies, civic corporations, the army, the navy, business men of all branches, workmen who had sacrificed their day's wages, weeping women and children of whom the General was a true frend, marched shoulder to shoulder in the great procession which followed the body of the General to its last simple resting place. The coffin was borne from the great doorway of headquarters ot the hearse, which was decorated only with dry palms placed over the "Blood and Fire" banner draping the casket. The celebrated battle flag which the General had planted on Calvary was placed at the head of the coffin, and as this was done the flags of the foreign deputations and of English provincial corps dipped in salute. At the same time the vast crowd reverently uncovered their heads. Then the General's campaign cap and favorite Bible were lifted on to the platform of hte funeral car.

The scene was a most impressive one, as the delegates from the provinces and abroad, stepping slowly to the solemn strains of the "Dead March in Saul," played by forty bands, marched past the funeral car, and came to the full salute as they stepped by the coffin. A guard of honor composed of the chief local and foreign officers of the Salvation Army, stood at attention round the hearse. Each corps was preceded by a group of battle flags. As the strains of music from each band died away after it had passed the coffin another band took up the melody.

Leading the hearse when the procession started was a carriage filled with splendid floral tokens sent by dignitaries and distinguished friends of the late General. Immediately after the hearse a selected bodyguard of staff officers of the Salvation Army swung into line, preceding the mourners of the family, who were led by General and Mrs. Bramwell Booth. Then came forty-eight brigades of members of the Army and these were followed by a rear-guard composed of officers from the international headquarters and the emigration staff. The procession was over a mile in length, and those composing it carried Salvation Army banners.

A short distance from the starting point in Queen Victoria Street the coffin passed the Mansion House, the Bank of England and the Stock Exchange. As General Booth had been an honorary freeman of the City of London, the Lord Mayor appeared on the balcony of the Mansion House and saluted the coffin.

The procession took three hours to traverse the five miles from the starting point to the cemetery gates. All along the line, on both sides of the streets, enormous crowds looked on. These became more dense as the approach to the cemetery was reached.

The service was a very simple one, consisting of singing of Salvation Army hymns. General Bramwell Booth and his sister, Miss Eva Booth, commander-in-chief of the Salvation Army in America, delivered speeches, while the General's youngest daughter sang a solo.

TORONTO CORRESPONDENCE

INTERESTING GOSSIP FROM THE CAPITAL OF THE PROVINCE.

Duke of Connaught's Visit—St. Alban's Cathedral—Those Ugly Ruins.

On his latest visit to Toronto his Royal Highness the Duke of Connaught again showed himself to be every inch a Prince and a gentleman and with interests and sympathies as human as the most democratic could wish. Torontonians, however, cannot forget that he is a Prince of Royal blood. At the ceremonies at the Exhibition at which his Royal Highness officiated some of the local dignitaries were obviously quite overawed. Not so Rev. Dr. Briggs, the venerable steward of the Methodist church, who was present in the capacity of unofficial chaplain for the purpose of invoking Divine blessing. In mellifluous phrases and resonant tones he delivered a prayer that would have graced a revival meeting. He did not forget to ask care and guidance for his Majesty and his Royal representative, but the record as a Field Marshall of the man who stood beside him and his avowed interest in the cadet and similar movements did not prevent the reverend doctor from asking frustration of the plans of those who delight in war.

After Dr. Briggs' invocation the proceedings were about as stiff and formal as one could imagine. President J. G. Kent read a stiff little address of welcome to which he did not add one word of informality. Throughout the entire proceedings he looked somewhat uncomfortable. Then his Royal Highness read an address in reply. And the small Boys present noted that when he took his eyes off the manuscript he sometimes had to pause to find the place again. This reading finished, his Royal Highness bowed and started to retire, the audience standing. There was a hushed silence. It was George H. Gooderham, M.P.P., who broke in with "three cheers for the Duke and Duchess." He didn't even say which Duke and Duchess. The audience was so overcome by the informality of this proceeding that it almost forgot to cheer. Another silence. "And the Princess too," piped another voice. But the crowd could scarcely cheer at all for gasping.

ROYAL LADIES OBSERVE AND OBSERVED.

Of course, the Duchess of Connaught and the Princess Patricia, the former sitting on the left of President Kent at the front of the draped Royal box, and the latter immediately behind her father on the right, were the cynosure of much observation, particularly from the feminine portion of the crowd. Everyone said they were glad to see the Duchess looking so well after her recent illness. Indeed, it was a surprise that she came to Toronto at all on this trip. Following the English fashion, both the Duchess and the Princess wore heavy veils, which made it almost impossible to observe their features, but it was evident that behind this fortification they were quietly and critically observing as many of his Majesty's subjects as they could in the time allowed.

The occasion was graced by the presence of a number of politicians, including Hon. G. E. Foster, looking mellower and serener with the passing years. Hon. J. S. Duff, who easily makes the transition from overalls on the farm to frock coat for Royalty, the immaculate Hon. Dr. Pyne and a number of others.

There was more informality at some of the other functions attended by the Royal party. Noteworthy was the monster garden party organized as a golden jubilee by the Royal Canadian Yacht Club, but which was sadly marred at the end by a terrific thunderstorm, which swept and drenched the island home of the club like a young cyclone. On every occasion the Duke showed interest, even enthusiasm, in the proceedings. Evidently he spoke with absolute sincerity when in one of his addresses he said: "I have learned enough about your city and your citizens to be able to identify myself with your aspirations, your difficulties and your successes."

CATHEDRAL AT LAST UNDER WAY.

It is thirty-seven years since ground was broken for Toronto's Church of England Cathedral, and yet to-day the city is still without a cathedral. True, St. James, at King and Church streets, with its fine edifice and historical associations, dating back more than one hundred years, is commonly referred to as St. James Cathedral, but, properly speaking, it is not such. On various occasions attempts have been made to give it the status as well as the popular designation of a cathedral, but all have come to naught. One of the chief difficulties in the way is the fact that St. James' pews are not free, a condition essential to a cathedral. And it would be no easy matter to free the pews in St. James, because many of them have been held in the same families for generations, and are surrounded with associations that it would be difficult to disturb.

Properly speaking, St. Albans is the cathedral of Toronto. As such it should be the seat of the Bishop, but hitherto it has been little more than a name. As stated, it is nearly forty years since the site, away in the northwest section on upper Howland Avenue, then far from the centre of population, was acquired, but the only portion of the church edifice that has been constructed is the nave, or eastern wing, and up to the present this small section with its west end boarded up in primitive style, has accommodated the congregation. It is difficult to explain this extraordinary delay. It means, for one thing, that the ambitions of the cathedral promoters have been away beyond their powers of achievement. Some said that if Canon Cody had been elected Bishop of Toronto he would quickly have made the cathedral a reality. They based their supposition on the success he has made of St. Paul's.

However, an energetic committee under the direction of Bishop Sweeney, has been grappling with the financial problem involved, and have made such substantial progress that the corner stone has now been laid for the south transept of the building. The ceremony was performed by the Duke of Connaught, and it is hoped that such happy auspices foreshadow an early realization of the long-delayed ideal.

FIRE RUINS AFTER EIGHT YEARS.

Although it is more than eight years since Toronto's big fire, almost the first thing that meets the eye of a visitor reaching the city by way of the Union Station is a view of the section of the ugly ruins lying between Front street and the Bay. This unpicturesque sight occupying one of the most valuable areas in the city, lying unproductive all these years, tells the story of a long feud between Toronto and the railway corporations. Immediately after the conflagration, the railways took advantage of the situation to lay claim to what property they wanted for a new terminal station. The city, on its side, considered the time opportune to make a demand that the railways, which by their increasing tracks and operations, have practically destroyed the naturally attractive waterfront, should do something to mitigate this evil. The result was a demand that the railways should elevate their tracks on a viaduct high enough to permit the street passage to run underneath undisturbed to the waterfront. The various matters arising out of these demands and counter demands went for adjudication to the Dominion Railway Board, which, after years of argument with seemingly endless appeals, declared for a viaduct as demanded by the city. Of course the railways protested vigorously and have succeeded in hanging the whole matter up. In view of the record so far it would be unwise to underestimate their further delaying powers, but it does look now as though they had about reached the end of their tether, and that before next year's exhibition visitors come to town the scene of desolation on Front street will be replaced by one of busy construction on the new station and track elevation work. The Grand Trunk railway has now professed its readiness to go ahead with the work. As the time of writing the Canadian Pacific is still protesting that it will not contribute its share, and if some means of overcoming this attitude cannot be discovered the work may be still further indefinitely delayed.

COERCING A RAILWAY.

The latest order of the Railway Board is unequivocal and specific, and the only things the Canadian Pacific can do now are to appeal to the Dominion Government, or to stubbornly defy the Board's order. Neither of these courses is likely to be effective. True, the only penalty provided in case the railway refuses to obey the order is a fine of $100 a day, which, amounting to only $36,500 a year would be but a fleabite to that wealthy corporation. But the Railway Board cannot afford to be defied, and will doubtless find some method of making the recalcitrant company toe the scratch. It might get Parliament to pass legislation providing severer penalties, or it might order the construction to be made and collect the Canadian Pacific's share through the courts.

Meanwhile the eyesore of the conflagration ruins is but the smallest of many inconveniences the city is undergoing, due to the delay. The level crossings at Yonge and Bay streets used by thousands everyday on their way to the boats are intolerable nuisances, to say nothing of being death traps. And then there is the dungeon which goes by the name of Toronto's Union Station. It probably holds the distinction of being the most inadequate and most inconvenient station which any city of Toronto's size anywhere can boast. On a busy day when thousands of people are seeking their trains and truck loads of baggage are being unceremoniously hauled around the passenger platforms it represents about the acme of discomfort.

The railways say the new station would long ago have been a completed fact if it had not been for the city's demand for a viaduct. For this reason the viaduct ought to be all the more appreciated when it comes, though there are those who maintain that the viaduct is all a huge mistake, and that a system of overhead bridges would have been much more practical.

MONTREAL'S DEATH RATE.

Jews at Other Extreme of the Vital Records.

A despatch from Montreal says: That the highest death-rate is among "other Catholics," which is the form in the health statistics used to denote all Catholics not French-speaking, is the conclusion arrived at by Dr. Louis Laberge, Medical Health Officer, in compiling statistics for his report for the past twelve months. The percentage of deaths as against births is as follows:—Other Catholics, 66.71; French-speaking Catholics, 59.40; Protestants, 59.10; Jews, 33.14. The statistics show a total of 17,637 births during 1911, and 9,974 deaths, or a difference of 7,663.

PASSED CENTURY MARK.

John Whinney, Formerly of Muskoka, Dies at St. Catharines.

A despatch from St. Catharines says: The death occurred on Wednesday at the Industrial Home in this city of John Whinney, who had reached the ripe old age of 101 years. He had made his home there for many years, formerly residing in Muskoka. He was still in fairly good health until a short time before death. Had he lived until next Hallowe'en he would have reached his 102nd birthday.

He pleaded guilty to all five charges.

KILLED ON TRACKS.

Wife in Toronto and Son on Harvester Excursion.

A despatch from Brockville says: Nathan Purvis, a well-known resident of Lyn, five miles west of here, was killed on the B. W. & N. Railway tracks between here and Lyn on Thursday afternoon, his body being terribly mangled. Purvis had been here, and was walking home along the tracks, on which, it is said, he lay down and fell asleep. His wife is in Toronto and his son on the way to the West on a harvesters' excursion.

Money for Passage Home Cabled by Government to Vancouver Cadets

A despatch from Ottawa says: The Dominion Government has just come to the rescue of a company of Canadian cadets who are far from home. Some weeks ago arrangements were made for a visit of cadets from Vancouver to Australia, the funds being provided by private subscription. The cadets in due course said au revoir to the shores of Canada and started across the Pacific. They were given a royal reception in the Commonwealth, and a somewhat extended itinerary was arranged for them there. The Canadians were scoring peaceful victories in unbroken succession, when the disquieting discovery was made that the funds hereinbefore mentioned were dwindling with unexpected and alarming rapidity. The financial situation became more acute as the tour continued, until at last the company was confronted with the possibility of having to spend the rest of its days in Australia for lack of the means to return. In this painful extremity an appeal was made to the Government at Ottawa.

The consideration given to the supplication of the Canadians expatriated in the Antipodes was careful, but sympathetic. It has been decided that a perfectly good company of youthful citizens is worth bringing back to Canada, and, following this decision, the sum of one thousand dollars is being sent by cable to Capt. Davey, who is in command of the cadets.

MAKING SAFE INVESTMENTS

WHAT A BOND REALLY IS AND HOW YOU GET YOUR INTEREST.

An Example of How Bonds are Issued—A Big Mortgage Divided in Equal Parts—What the "Coupons" are and How They are Used.

The articles contributed by "Investor" are for the sole purpose of guiding prospective investors, and, if possible, of saving them from losing money through placing it in "wild-cat" enterprises. The impartial and reliable character of the information may be relied upon. The writer of these articles and the publisher of this paper have no interests to serve in connection with this matter other than those of the reader.

(By "Investor.")

"What are these stocks you are selling anyhow?" asked a man of a bond salesman this week.

Now to explain just what a bond is to a person who is entirely unacquainted with the general terminology of finance is by no means an easy matter. The easiest way to do it is to take him a bond and show it to him.

Although this matter has been explained in this column about a year ago it is perhaps permissible, in view of the fact that there is so much uncertainty on the question to refer to it again.

Now, take a large company like the Massey-Harris Company, which, by the way, has issued no bonds, so we may use it as an example. Suppose they should want to buy some more land to extend their factories (as they did a year ago) and it so happened that it was not possible to raise the necessary money from their shareholders. The amount required, let us say, to buy the land and erect and equip the plant is $2,000,000. Now conceivably they could go to one man and borrow the money from him on a mortgage. That is quite possible, but altogether improbable, for no one man would be likely to care to put so great a sum into one security. To get around this difficulty here's what they do.

They go to a big bond house and tell them the circumstances and offer them the mortgage, which they buy. Their plant, equipment, lands, and all other assets are mortgaged to a trustee, usually a trust company. The trust company, instead of turning over to the bond house this mortgage, turns over to it 2,000 small mortgages, each one representing one two-thousandth of the $2,000,000 mortgage of a par value of $1,000 each. Every one of these would bear on its face an abbreviated form of the big mortgage and each would be signed by the president and the secretary of the Massey-Harris Company. Each would also be endorsed by an officer of the Trust Company to show that it was properly issued. In other words, the bond is merely a subdivided mortgage, each bond ranking equally with every other bond and equally secure. In this way the bond house which buys the mortgage, instead of having to place the whole mortgage with one man, may sell it to 2,000 investors, giving each a thousand dollar bond.

But this is not all. Suppose this issue we are speaking of has fifteen years to run. The interest, as is usual with industrial bonds of this nature, will be at the rate of six per cent. per annum, payable half yearly. When the bond is printed it has in addition to the abbreviated mortgage another sheet containing "coupons," one for each interest date, or thirty in all. Each one is a small bond, or better, a small cheque, signed by the secretary of the company, the first one stating that on January 1st, 1913, (or whenever the interest is due) a certain bank will pay to bearer $30. The next one will state that on July 1st, 1913, the same bank will pay the bearer $30, and so on until the bond matures, and is paid in full. All the owner of a bond has to do is to take out his bond at the time the interest is due, take a pair of scissors and cut off the coupon. This he deposits in his bank just as he would a cheque, and spends the money. (Of course, the mortgage may be subdivided other than in the manner suggested.) Most bonds are now issued in denominations of $1,000, $500, and $100. But whether they are $5,000 each—as many old issues were divided—or $100, at the present time, the principle is the same, and the bonds are equally secure. The half-yearly coupon on the $100 bond is only $3, instead of $30 on the $1,000 bond, but the security is exactly the same.

When you get a chance have a look at a bond. That will make it much clearer.

NARCOTIC IMPORTS.

Big Increase in Canada in First Four Months.

A despatch from Ottawa says: According to a Government return the importation of narcotic into Canada has grown heavily in the first four months of the current fiscal year. The importation of pure cocaine was one hundred and thirty-seven ounces as against thirty-five in the whole of last year. In the four months nine hundred and thirty-three pounds of crude opium was brought in. The total importation of this last year was five thousand and seventeen pounds; powdered opium imports in four months were one hundred and forty-four pounds, as compared with two hundred and fifty-five for the whole of last year.

FOUND SNAKE IN MILK.

Montreal Woman Made Startling Discovery.

A despatch from Montreal says: After opening a bottle of milk on Thursday morning Mrs. Rosa Lamothe, Workman Street, was horrified when a small snake sprang to the ground and lay there hissing. Having recovered from her fright Mrs. Lamothe telephoned the Health Department, which sent an inspector to the house to kill the reptile. The snake was of the harmless variety, and it is supposed that it either fell into a milk-pail or was in the water with which the bottle was washed.

WEST CALLS FOR MORE MEN

Wages Offered Are Half as Much Again as Two or Three Years Ago.

A despatch from Winnipeg says: "We are still short 25,000 harvesters to meet the requirements of the west," said J. Bruce Walker, Dominion Commissioner of Immigration, Thursday morning, "and I am extremely anxious that every effort should be made to obtain them. I concede that the harvesters' specials have been filled to overflowing with a splendid class of workers, but I am afraid that our friends in Ontario have failed to appreciate the urgent needs of the western farmers for this year's crop. The estimate of 50,000 is not in the slightest exaggerated; not more than 20,000 from eastern Canada have reached Winnipeg to date.

"Deputy Minister Harcourt of Edmonton wired me on Thursday: 'There are not enough men for harvest in this province as yet. Advisable get railway companies run more specials.'

"Deputy Minister Mantle of Saskatchewan wired me: 'Saskatchewan has about one-half number of men required. Strongly advise supplementary excursions.'

"Western farmers are paying $3 to $3.50 per day with board for good, experienced harvesters. This is fifty per cent. of an increase over the wages of two or three years ago, whilst the harvesters' expenses have not increased."

POTATO YIELD VERY HEAVY

Dealers are Buying Very Lightly, Expecting the Prices to Decline

A despatch from Toronto says: The consumer is at last to get relief from the high prices of potatoes. The potato crop reports from all potato growing districts show an unusually heavy yield. The western part of Ontario and the vicinity of Orangeville, as well as the Maritime Provinces and the Delaware Valley, all have excellent yields. The acreage this year has greatly increased.

Since last week the price of tubers has fallen off 35 per bag wholesale. In a few days the retail prices will be 85 to 90 cents per bag, whereas last winter, Torontonians paid $2 per bag for potatoes imported from Ireland. The local dealers, both retail and wholesale, are buying very lightly, expecting the drop to take place any time now.

The cool weather for the past month, followed by rains, has played great havoc among the field crops, but it has been ideal for potatoes, and unless rain followed by a very hot sun overtakes the growers before harvesting operations are completed, the yield will be a record-breaker

NERVOUS BREAKDOWN

Usually Due to Overwork and Worry—A Tonic is Needed

Overwork and worry give rise to nervousness, sleeplessness, headaches, lack of ambition and lack of interest in your work, weak back, indigestion and sometimes a complete breakdown of the nervous system. On every hand you find victims of this kind and often they do not know what to do for themselves. If these are your symptoms you need a tonic, and the only way to tone up the nerves is through the blood. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are a direct nerve tonic because they enrich and build up the blood, and it is through the blood that the nerves are fed. Under their tonic influence nervousness, with all its attendant evils, disappear, and the worried sufferer again enjoys health and strength. Proof of the value of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills in nervous troubles is given by Mrs. Lara Scheving, Lundar, Man., who says:—"I was attacked with nervous trouble which almost drove me to distraction. It would be almost impossible for words to describe my condition. The least thing would startle me and leave me trembling for an hour. I had nervous headaches, and slept very badly at nights, some nights not at all. My appetite grew poor, and I was really a physical wreck. I had been to several doctors and had taken many different medicines, but without any benefit. Then I read of a case similar cured by the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and I sent for a dozen boxes, fully believing it would take at least that many to cure me. You can judge of my gratitude, however, when I found that after using only half a dozen boxes I was again enjoying the best of health, and have since remained well and strong. I used the remainder of the pills among my children when they seemed out of sorts, and have found them at all times to be the very best of family medicines."

You can get Dr. Williams' Pink Pills through any dealer in medicine or by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

MEETING OF RAT-CATCHERS.

Famous Vermin Exterminators Have Picnic in England.

The rat-catchers of the world made merry recently on the village green of Padworth, near Reading, England.

For a few moments Londoners had an opportunity of seeing the followers of this ancient art, for they assembled in an office in Southwark Street on whose doors printed words proclaimed doom to the rat.

It was a suitable meeting place, for this office was the domain of Mr. Phillips, the rat king, who, possibly, has slain more rats than any man living.

There was Piker, of Birmingham, famous throughout the Midlands as a worthy slayer of vermin. There was The Snoozer, of Liverpool, and Slusher, of Buenos Aires, whose kindly face gave no suggestion of a man who delights in slaughter. There were other huntsmen, too, from all corners of the kingdom—men whose quarry is to be found in the under-world, who go to the meet in sober raiment, sportsmen who scorn pink, though they be heroes of many an exciting chase.

They set off behind high-spirited steeds, to the accompaniment of a merry blast on the horn, and, judging by their conversation, there is an uncomfortable time coming for their prey.

Imagine experts from diverse parts of the world exchanging views on the most up-to-date methods of rat-catching, discussing with glee new devices for luring their victims to their doom, and you have an idea of how unpopular the Padworth picnic must have been with the rat community.

MAN OF MANY SUPPERS.

Court Ball Comedy of a Small German Capital.

An amusing story of an incident at a masked ball given at the capital of one of the smaller German principalities is being told in Berlin, writes the Berlin correspondent of the London Daily Mail.

In one of the rooms of the court a buffet had been set out, and the attendants there soon came to remark the unusually active appetite of one guest, duly masked and cloaked, who consumed extraordinarily large quantities of the more expensive delicacies and wines. After several minutes of vigorous eating he would leave the buffet and disappear among the throng of dancers. Soon, however, he would be back again, his appetite apparently as strong as ever.

After the fourth visit at short intervals of this hungry guest the head waiter called the attention of the master of ceremonies, who waited at the buffet until the masked stranger once more returned. He was again served with a full supply of food and wine, and as he turned away was politely asked to show his invitation card.

At this some confusion was noticed in his bearing, and the master of ceremonies requested him to remove his mask and cloak. To the astonishment of the servants and the amusement of the guests there was revealed the shamefaced figure of one of the soldiers of the guard on duty in the hall below. The guards had found a spare domino lying in the hall and they had been putting it on one after the other during the evening, so as to be able to go boldly into the ballrooms and eat their fill at the buffet unchallenged.

So amused at the story was the Grand Duke that he refused to allow the greedy soldiers to be punished.

THIRTEEN YEARS.

Unlucky Number for Dakota Woman.

The question whether the number "13" is really more unlucky than any other number has never been entirely settled.

A So. Dakota woman, after thirteen years of misery from drinking coffee, found a way to break the "unlucky spell." Tea is just as injurious as coffee because it contains caffeine, the drug in coffee. She writes:

"For thirteen years I have been a nervous wreck from drinking coffee. My liver, stomach, heart—in fact, my whole system being actually poisoned by it.

"Last year I was confined to my bed for six months. Finally it dawned on me that coffee caused the trouble. Then I began using Postum instead of coffee, but with little faith, as my mind was in such a condition that I hardly knew what to do next.

"Extreme nervousness and failing eyesight caused me to lose all courage. In about two weeks after I quit coffee and began to use Postum, I was able to read and my head felt clear. I am improving all the time and I will be a strong, well woman yet.

"I have fooled more than one person with a delicious cup of Postum. Mrs. S. wanted to know where I bought my fine coffee. I told her my grocer had it and when she found out it was Postum she has used it ever since, and her nerves are building up fine.

"My brain is strong, my nerves steady, my appetite good, and best of all, I enjoy such sound, pleasant sleep." Name given by Canadian Postum Co., Windsor, Ont. Get the little book in pkg., "The Road to Wellville." "There's a Reason."

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

SOME QUAINT HOTELS.

The hotel that stands out most distinctly in tourists' recollection is one in Iquique, where, even while you are sitting at the dining-tables, vendors come in from the streets to sell you food. At this same hotel they have two charges for baths—two dollars if you insist upon clean water, and about one dollar if you are willing to take a second turn at the tub. Another instance of a quaint hotel is the town of Africa, in Peru. Here they are using at the present time the hull of an old American man-of-war, which was taken inland by a great tidal wave many years ago, and has since been fitted up as an hotel, and is in great demand.

The last battle on English soil was fought at Jersey, the largest of the Channel Islands, in 1781.

ANTS AS REMEDIES.

In Europe Preparations Made From the Insects are Used.

Among the last of the remedies provocative of nausea of the imagination to disappear from the list of official remedies have been preparations made from ants. Such preparations, however, have not obtained much recognition in this country, even among the wise old women in domestic practice—though in parts of Europe they are yet in use. Ant baths, made by boiling ants in water, are yet in use by Bavarian peasants for rheumatism and gout, and also in Hessen and Hungary. Bohemia, it is said, for paralysis of the lower limbs patients are placed in an anthill and allowed to remain until the while body is covered with the insects, which are then shaken off, when the cure is effected. In Brandenburg an aching tooth is rubbed by means of a crust of bread, and the crust is then placed in an anthill.

MR. SIDNEY BUXTON, M.P.
President of the British Board of Trade.

Impoverishment of blood is cured by means of an egg buried in the hill of the large red ants. The egg must have been laid by a pure white or black hen, and must have been found when still warm. In Oberwalz the crushed eggs and larvae of ants stirred up with cream are used as a remedy for colic. A salve made from wood ants, dog fat and coal dust, is said to be used by Hungarian gypsies against goitre. There is in use in Montenegro the "ant suture" in domestic surgery. Those who had been bitten by ants had noticed that the heads remained clinging to the skin when the body was torn away, being held in place by the powerful mandibles. The idea was thus suggested that the ants' jaws could be used to close the edges of wounds. The edges of the cut are pressed together, an ant is held so that its jaws will grasp both sides and its body is cut off. Several are applied along the wound and serve instead of the usual catgut stitches.

AN OAK MINE.

Mines of wood are found in the south of Russia, where they were discovered very recently when the bed of a river was dragged. Not very deep in the earth but covering an extent of 200 square kilometers a forest of oaks was found where it had been buried by some unknown cataclysm centuries ago. The wood is in perfect preservation. The man who found the entombed forest has drawn from his mine many trunks of trees measuring from forty to sixty meters high and at least eighteen inches in diameter. The mine is worth a fortune, for the wood is of the first quality and as a result of its long rest underground it has taken the most varied colors, ranging from dark brown to pale rose and running through all the shades of blue and yellow. One hundred and fifty thousand of the ancient oaks have been turned over to the cabinet makers.

PREVENTED MURDER.

German Picked Up Letter, Read It, Then Told Police.

Under ordinary circumstances if a German picks up a sealed letter on the street he must return it to the post-office or to the addressee without opening it.

Luckily this rule was disregarded by an inhabitant of Crossen-on-Oder, who picking up a letter, opened it, and found that it was a communication from the wife of a woollen manufacturer, Robert Witzker, who informed a school teacher recently transferred to Crossen that she had completed arrangements for poisoning her husband and marrying the school teacher.

The incriminating letter was handed to the police, who kept a sharp watch upon Frau Witzker.

A few days sufficed to produce evidence that the letter was genuine. Quantities of poison of various kinds were found in receptacles belonging to her, and kept in her father's house. She and the teacher were arrested, presumably just in time to prevent the murder.

Always Serviceable.—Most pills lose their properties with age. Not so with Parmelee's Vegetable Pills. The pill mass is so compounded that their strength and effectiveness is preserved and the pills can be carried anywhere without fear of losing their potency. This is a quality that few pills possess. Some pills lose their power, but not so with Parmelee's. They will maintain their freshness and potency for a long time.

STREET SAVINGS BANKS.

For some time in Vienna (Austria) street savings banks have been in vogue with considerable success. These savings banks are an adaptation of the penny-in-the-slot machine. Anyone passing wishing to deposit a small sum drops his money into the slot. Instead of receiving bon-bons or chocolate in return, he gets a ticket for the coin deposited. The tickets are later honored on presentation at the Government Department. Encouraged by the success of the Vienna experiment, the people of Paris are to introduce the same system into their streets.

THURSDAY, SEPT. 5, '12

A big reception awaits Premier Borden when he returns to Ottawa from his visit to England. This is his first return from a trip abroad and the city is preparing to give him a royal welcome. The city fathers have taken up the matter and he will be tendered a non-political civic welcome. There will be an automobile parade, an address at the city hall, and other festivities. The Conservative Association of Ottawa is completing preparations for a monster banquet on September 10th to the Premier. The premier will be the guest of honor and all of the members of the cabinet will be guests. It is expected that most of the Conservative members of the House will be present.

If possible, 1912 is a worse year for reciprocity than was 1911. The bad faith of Congress and the President in the Panama canal matter has convinced Canadians that it would be fatal to base their business on any agreement with a country that will break a treaty when it sees any material advantage in so doing. Nor is it forgotten that Mr. Taft was the chief author of the reciprocity compact and that while he was forcing it upon the Canadian Ministers, he was boasting in secret to his friends that it would drain off to Chicago and New York the trade and money reserves of the Dominion.—Toronto News.

It is up to the teacher to put life into their work in the school and prove to the pupils that they are in earnest and most desirous for the success of the scholars. The stream will not rise higher than the fountain and an instructor who is lacking in ambition and enthusiasm will not likely see many evidences of possession of these qualifications in those whose names are inscribed in the register. It is a very happy condition of affairs when unanimity is manifested in school affairs that ensures such a lively interest that failure is next to impossible. Many a pupil can date their decision to achieve to the optimistic thoroughness of a level-headed teacher. There is an important part for the home to play in this inbuement and no small responsibility placed on the School Board. Sometimes a good, plain, friendly cheery chat with teachers and scholars might give the key-note for the term. Let the school know you expect results and lend a hand to the attainment of the same.

BREAK UP THE OLD PASTURES.

This is a bit of advice which farmers in general would do well to follow. Some of our most troublesome pests find their breeding-places in land that has been left for some years under grass. Wire worms and white grubs, which are often-times very destructive to crops of all kinds, increase and multiply in such places where they feed upon the roots of the grass. Wire worms in their adult stage are known as Click Beetles, oblong, dull-colored creatures. White grubs turn into what are commonly called June bugs, or May beetles. These worms take from two to three years to grow to maturity and during that long period they feed upon roots and are out of sight and out of reach. There is a popular idea that salt will kill these creatures and the question is often asked, "How much salt should be used per acre?" Like many other popular superstitions, there is nothing whatever in this material for the purpose. Enough salt to affect the grubs would completely prevent the growth of any vegetation and it is doubtful if any amount whatever would kill the insects. Many other substances have been tried but so far without success. The remedy is, therefore, to break up the breeding places. This should be done by plowing the grass fields deeply late in the fall in order to expose the grubs and their winter quarters to the frost and rain, and also to the various animals and birds which feed upon them. The safest crop to grow during the first year is peas. After that a hoed crop, preferably turnips, would be the safest; after the second year there will probably be no grubs left. During the first year any that there are in the ground would feed upon the sod that had been plowed under and would let the growing crop pretty well alone. To grow corn, grain, potatoes or mangles at the outset would be very risky indeed. Besides these two insects, old pasture lands, especially where the soil is dry, are productive breeding-places for grasshoppers which spread from these fields to the crops. In the Southern Counties of Ontario, bordering on Lake Erie, there is another serious pest which also breeds in old pastures where the soil is light or sandy. This is known as the Rose Chafer. The beetle appears usually in great swarms about the time the roses come into bloom and devours not only these flowers, but all sorts of others that may be growing in the garden. The worst damage it does is to the blossoms and young fruit of grape vines, of which it is particularly fond. These four serious pests, which are extremely difficult to control, may be greatly reduced in numbers, if not got rid of altogether, by a short rotation of crops and especially by keeping pastures not more than three years under grass.—C. J. S. Bethune, Ontario Agricultural College, Guelph.

Death of Miss Barry.—A sudden sorrow seemed to have fallen over our community last Thursday morning, August 29th, when the tidings were received that the angel of death silently crept into our midst and claimed as its victim one of our always ready and willing parishioners, in the person of Miss B. Barry. Miss Barry had been in poor health all summer, but a short time ago seemed to be improving rapidly towards recovery when she suddenly took worse and despite the greatest attention and care passed peacefully away on Saturday morning. Her remains were conveyed to St. Peter's church, followed by a very large concourse of people, which testified to the esteem and regard she was held. Requiem High Mass was celebrated by Rev. Father Forster assisted by Rev. Father Goodwin. The entire community extend their heartfelt sympathy to the remaining brothers and sisters, but whild her life was closed we trust her gentle spirit is enjoying a reward of a good life lived.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials.

Address: F. J. CHENEY & CO., Toledo, Ohio.

Sold by Druggists, 75 cents.

Take Hall's family pills for constipation.

HARNESSING A SHARK.

Cruel Revenge That Has the Sanction of Immemorial Custom.

The shark's jaws are pried open to the fullest extent. A stout eight foot spar of tough timber, 4 by 4 inches in cross measurement, is fixed transversely far back in the angle of the jaw, the ends projecting on either side. A strong rope leading from the ends of the spar is drawn close and tightened with a clove hitch round the fish's tail behind the wide tail flukes. It is thus the sailor harnesses his enemy.

The clamp of the cruel jaws drives the two inch long teeth deep into the tough spar. The tight line holds it in place, and, struggle as he may, the shark fails to move the spar an inch from its position. As a finishing touch the sailor drew his knife blade across the shark's eyeballs and let him go.

Bitted and bridled, blinded, with jaws wide gaping, he swam through a limitless sea in never ending fatuous circles. The queer furnishings he bore scared away others of his kind. Lonely and silent, he passed like Cain among the fishes till starvation and sheer misery ended his existence.

Cruel? Of course it was. But surely, like the venomous snake, the shark has long put himself beyond the pale of human mercy. Soft hearted as he usually is, the sailor man has a long memory. The shark has followed for weeks in the shadow of his ship and has watched each man of the crew with greedy, malevolent eye. There is a heavy debt against all the shark tribe for many a lost mariner, and when the chance comes to settle old scores the sailor pays it to the full. Besides, the thing has the sanction of immemorial custom. It was some old Phoenician, trading out of Tyre to the far Cassitorides, who probably first put the trick in practice.—Wide World Magazine.

Old Laws of Scotland.

On the statute book of Scotland is still an act passed in 1425 ordering that "na man play futeball," because it is "esteemed to be unprofitable sport for the common gude of the realme and defense thereof." There is also a statute against alien immigration, passed in 1426, and authorizing "all his majesty's subjects" to "take, apprehend, imprison and execute to death the said Egiptians (gypsies), either men or women."

CHAPTER XV.—(Cont'd)

"I feel sorry for him," she added. "He always bows very politely when I meet him, and he is remarkably good-looking, though with a disagreeable expression."

"When one is hungry one seldom looks agreeable," said Miss Charlotte. "I wish I had noticed him before."

"Suppose," she said, timidly, "suppose I were to take him a little of the stewed beef we shall have for supper."

"Send it up by the girl," said Miss Turnour, "she is still in the kitchen. Don't take it yourself; it would be awkward for both of you."

So Miss Charlotte meekly obeyed, and sent up by the shabby servant girl a most savory little supper. Unluckily the girl was a pert cockney, and her loud abrupt knock at the door in itself irritated Frithiof.

"Come in," he said, in a surly tone.

"Look here," said the girl, "here's something to put you in a better temper. Missus's compliments, and she begs you'll accept it," and she thrust the tray at him with a derisive grin.

"Have the goodness to take that down again," said Frithiof, in a fit of unreasoning anger. "I'll not be treated like your mistress's pet dog."

Something in his manner cowed the girl. She beat a hasty retreat, and was planning how she could manage to eat the despised supper herself, when at the foot of the stairs she met Miss Charlotte, and her project was nipped in the bud.

"It ain't no use, miss, 'e won't touch it," she explained; "'e was as angry as could be, and says 'e, 'Take it away! I'll not be treated like your mistress's pet dog,' says 'e. So, bein' frightened, I ran down-stairs agen."

Miss Charlotte looked troubled, and later on, when as usual she took up the jug of hot water, she felt nervous and uncomfortable, and her knock was more timid than ever. However, she had scarcely set down the jug on the floor when there came sounds of hasty footsteps in the room, and Frithiof flung open the door.

"I beg your pardon," he said. "You meant to be kind, I'm sure, but the girl was rude, and I lost my temper. I ask your forgiveness."

"I am so sorry the girl was rude," Miss Charlotte said. "I wish I had brought it myself. You see, it was in this way: we all thought you looking so poorly, and we were having the beef for supper, and we thought perhaps you might fancy some, and—and—"

"It was very good of you," he said, touched by the kindness. "I regret what I said, but you must make allowance for a bad-tempered man with a splitting headache."

"Is that the reason you tie it up?" asked Miss Charlotte.

"It keeps it cooler," he said, "and I can get through more work."

She glanced at the table, and saw that it was covered with papers and books.

"Are you wise to do so much work after being busy all day?" she said. "It seems to me that you are not looking well."

"It is nothing but headache," he said. "And the work is the only pleasure I have in the world."

"I was afraid from your looks that you had a hard life," she said, hesitatingly.

"It is not hard outwardly. As far as work goes it is easy enough, but there is a deal of monotony about it."

And as he glanced out at the sunny street and heard the sound of horses' hoofs in the road, a wild longing used to seize him for the freedom and variety of his life in Norway, and the old fierce rebellion against his fate woke once more in his heart, and made him ready to fly into a rage on the smallest provocation.

One day he was sent for to Mr. Boniface's private room; he was quite well aware that his manner, even to Roy himself, whom he liked, had been disagreeable in the extreme, and the thought crossed his mind that he was going to receive notice to leave.

Mr. Boniface was sitting at his writing-table, the sunlight fell on his quiet, refined face, lighted up his white hair and trim beard, and made his kindly gray eyes brighter than ever. "I wanted a few words with you, Falck," he said. "Sit down. It seems to me that you have not been looking well lately, and I thought perhaps you had better take your holiday at once instead of the third week in August. I have spoken to Darnell, and he would be willing to give you his turn and take the later time. What do you think?"

"You are very good, sir," said Frithiof, "but I shall do very well with the August holiday, and, as a matter of fact, it will only mean that I shall do more translating."

"Would you not do well to go home Come, think of it, I would give you three weeks if you want to go to Bergen."

"Thank you," he said, with an effort; "but I can not go back to Norway."

"Now, tell me candidly, is it the question of expense that hinders you?" said Mr. Boniface. "Because if it is merely that, I would gladly lend you the money. You must remember that you have had a great deal to bear lately, and I think you ought to give yourself a good rest."

"Thank you," replied Frithiof, "but it is not exactly the expense. I have money enough in hand to pay for my passage, but I have made up my mind not to go back till I can clear off the last of the debts of—of our firm," he concluded, with a slight quiver in his voice.

"It is a noble resolution," said Mr. Boniface, "and I would not for a moment discourage you. Still you must remember that it is a great undertaking, and that without good health you can never hope for success. I don't think you get enough exercise. Now, why don't you join our cricket club?"

"I don't play," said Frithiof. "In Norway we are not great at those games, or indeed at any kind of exercise for the mere sake of exercise. That is an idea that one only finds among Englishmen."

"Possibly; but living in our climate, you would do well to follow our habits. Come, let me persuade you to join the club. You look to me as if you needed greater variety."

"I will think about it for next year; but just now I have work for Herr Sivertsen on hand which I can't put aside," said Frithiof.

"Well, then, things must go on as they are for the present," said Mr. Boniface; "but at least you can bring your translating down to Rowan Tree House, and spend your holiday with us."

"You are very kind," said Frithiof. "I shall be only too delighted."

And the interview seemed somehow to have done him good, for during the next few days he was less irritable, and found his work in consequence less irksome.

CHAPTER XVI.

But the change for the better did not last long, for Frithiof was without the motive which "makes drudgery divine." And there was no deyning that the work he had to do was real drudgery.

About the middle of July the Bonifaces went down to Devonshire for their usual summer holiday, and Frithiof found that, as Roy had predicted, Mr. Horner made himself most disagreeable, and never lost a chance of interfering. A miserable-looking dog unluckily made its way into the shop one morning and disturbed Mr. Horner in his sanctum.

"What is the meaning of this?" he exclaimed, bearing down upon Frithiof. "Can you not keep stray curs off the premises? Just now too, with hydrophobia raging!" And he drove and kicked the dog to the door.

Now there is one thing which no Norseman can tolerate for a moment, and that is any sort of cruelty to animals. Frithiof, in his fury, did not measure his words, or speak as the employed to the employer, and from that time Mr. Horner's hatred of him increased tenfold.

He was sitting at his desk one morning adding up a column which had been twice interrupted, and which had three times come to a different result, when once again the swing-door was pushed open and a shadow falling across his account-book warned him that the customer had come to the song counter.

The customer was evidently an Italian. He was young and strikingly handsome. Beside him was a bright-eyed boy who looked up curiously at the Norseman, as though wondering how on such a sunny day any one could wear such a clouded face.

Now Frithiof was quite in the humor to dislike any one, more especially a man who was young, handsome, well dressed, and prosperous looking; but some subtle influence crept over him the instant he heard the Italian's voice, his hard eyes softened a little, and without being able to explain it he felt a strong desire to help this man in fiinding the song which he had come to inquire about, knowing only the words and the air, not the name of the composer. Frithiof, who would ordinarily have been inclined to grumble at the trouble which the search involved, now threw himself into it heart and soul, and was as pleased as his customer when after some little time he chanced to find the song.

"A thousand thanks," said the Italian, warmly. "I am delighted to get hold of this; it is for a friend who has long wanted to hear it again, but who was only able to write down the first part of the air."

And he compared with the printed song the little bit of manuscript which he had shown to Frithiof. "Now, was it only a happy fluke that made you think of Knight's name?"

"I know another of his songs, and thought this bore a sort of likeness to it," said Frithiof.

"You know much more of English music than I do, most likely," said the Italian, "yet surely you, too, are a foreigner."

"Yes," replied Frithiof; "I am Norwegian. I have only been here for nine months, but to try and learn a little about the music is the only interesting part of this work."

The stranger's sympathetic insight showed him much of the weariness, and discontent, and Heimweh which lay beneath these words.

"Ah, yes," he said, "I suppose both work and country seem flat and dull after your life among the fjords and mountains. I know well enough the depression of one's first year in a new climate. But courage! the worst will pass. I have grown to love this England which once I detested."

"It is the airlessness of London which depresses one," said poor Frithiof, rolling up the song.

"Yes, it is certainly very oppressive to-day," said the Italian; "I am sorry to have given you so much trouble in hunting up this song for me. We may as well take it with us, Gigi, as we are going home."

(To be continued.)

SOAP FOR THE LETTUCE.

Mrs. Newlywed—"Good gracious, Clotilda! Haven't you washed that lettuce yet? And your master ready for his luncheon! Here, give it to me! Where's the soap?"

DEAFNESS PREVENTABLE.

Doctor Urges Treatment of Symptoms in Children.

Dr. MacLeod Yearsley, recently at the British Health Conference, contributed a valuable paper on "The Prevention of Deafness in Children," in which he stated that most of the cases of deafness which occurred after birth were preventable. He ennumerated the common causes of deafness in adults which were traceable to neglect of the same in their childhood, and urged that if the early symptoms of defective hearing were checked there would be far fewer cases of deafness among adults. This is knowledge that cannot be too widely diffused, seeing that deafness is said to be very prevalent just now among schoolboys.

It is said that there are people who have money and do not know how to enjoy it.

On the Farm

ECONOMY IN BUILDING.

Does every farmer realize that a square building can be built cheaper than one in the shape of an oblong, although the floor space is the same? To understand this, observe a particular example, writes Mr. L. Edie.

In a square building that measures 40x40 feet, there will be 1,600 square feet of floor space, the distance around the building will be 160 feet, or there will be sides to the equivalent of 160 feet wide.

But if, as is often the case, the buildings were made 100x16 feet, this distance around the building or the total width of the four sides would be 232 feet, while the floor space would be 1,600 square feet.

Although these two buildings will have the same floor space, yet the man will have to pay for building 72 feet more of sides in the oblong building. There will be a similar waste in the construction of the roof of the oblong barn.

Supposing that 1,000 square feet of lumber would need to be bought, the lumber alone would cost about $30 at least. When the extra labor used in the building, the cost of repairs and the interest on this sum are considered, anyone can understand that it is an expense to be avoided.

Probably this matter is of the most importance in the construction of poultry houses and dairy buildings; although even in such buildings the form cannot always be made square, yet the arrangement can be made in such a way that there will be no needless waste.

In arranging fields the same points should be observed. In two ten-acre fields, one 40x40 rods, the other 80x20 rods, the former will require 1,600 rods of fence, the latter 2,000 rods. This extra 40 rods of fence would cost about $10 and the annual repairs about $2.

This may seem a simple matter and yet a litle forethought in this way would save many farmers no small amount of money.

WATERING COWS.

Inasmuch as it has been proved by actual experiment that the average cow will drink 1,600 pounds of water a month, great care should be exercised to provide her with water. That is true enough, but there are two other points that need to be also included.

One—This water should be pure. Impure water is just as hurtful to the health and vigor of a cow as it is to a human being. It produces disease just the same. It reduces the amount of milk the cow would naturally give.

Two—The water should be easy of access for the cow, both in the pasture and the barnyard. With a large herd of cows, say 30 to 50, it is a good plan to have two or three watering tanks in the yard, where the cows are watered out of doors. It is worth while also to have a man remain in the yard while they are drinking, to drive the master cows away from the tanks as soon as they have drunk their fill. In turning cows out to drink, it is a good plan to first turn out the underlings and the most timid ones, giving them plenty of time to get what water they want undisturbed. Lots of money can be lost with a herd of cows by being indifferent or careless on this water question.

ECONOMICAL FEEDING.

It is not always the heaviest feeders who get the best result. Every animal requires certain nutrients, that enable it to perform its best work. If these nutrients are not supplied in the proper proportion, it means that the animal must consume and adjust larger amounts of some of the elements that it can use, in order to get enough of the others. Economical feeding requires that nutrients be supplied to animals in the proportion needed. As a rule, farm feeds are lacking in protein. If one is feeding cornstalks or wild hay, the farm grains will supply enough protein to meet the animals' needs for best work. This is especially true of dairy cows and young stock. When this form of roughage must be fed, some such feed as bran, middlings or oilmeal must form a reasonable proportion of the grain ration, in order that the protein supply may be maintained.

FACT AND FANCY.

It was the eve of their wedding-day, and he was bidding her good-night.

"To-morrow, my darling," he whispered softly in her ear, "we begin our journey as bride and bridegroom—pilgrims of life together. Hand in hand will we journey down life' rugged road. We shall need to set out with a glorious equipment of faith and hope and courage, that neither of us may faint or fall by the wayside before the journey is ended. Will we not, darling?"

"I—I—— Oh, yes; to be sure!" she replied. "Only I am really worried about the train of my dress. It didn't hang a bit nice when I tried it on to-day. What were you saying, dear?"

THE LIKING FOR JEWELLERY

ORNAMENTS FOUND IN OUT-OF-THE-WAY PLACES.

The Tricks of Trade to Take Advantage of Inexperienced Buyers.

The love of jewellery is very deeply rooted in human nature. It is, perhaps, difficult to decide whether it is its ornamental side or its symbolical character which has usually made the more direct appeal. Nowadays it is generally frankly worn for its beauty, except such things as medals and orders, civic chains and Masonic and ecclesiastical jewels.

In former times, however, a very large proportion of personal ornaments had also the element of meaning. Sometimes they were charms to ward off ill luck, or amulets endowed with magic powers. Often they were insignia of rank, or had a religious significance. But whether they were worn simply as ornaments or as possessed of mystic powers, in almost every age some of the best decorative art of the day has been lavished on them. Often when household furniture and other things that we now deem necessities of existence had sunk to a very low standard, says the London Chronicle, the jewellery and metal work were still of the most exquisite character.

MacIver Percival has written a fascinating volume which he dedicated to minor collectors, those who love old things, but can not afford to pay large prices for them. The field is a wide one wherein we may search, he tells us.

CURIOUS FINDS.

Sometimes a find is made among the oddments of a provincial jeweller, put aside to be broken up for the gold which they contain. A pawnbroker's in Edinburgh has yielded a very fine Flemish pendant; and in a London West End shop a charming eighteenth century buckle has been bought for a few shillings.

Even of more splendid things the collector must not despair (though being over-sanguine may lead him into the toils of the forger), and he should keep his eyes open, and know all he can of all sides of his subject, so as to be ready for any chance that may come his way. Was not the "Tara" brooch, now the pride of the Dublin Museum, offered to a metal dealer for eighteen pence—and refused?

The Romans had an enthusiasm for precious stones amounting almost to madness. Many instances of this love of gorgeousness occur in Roman history. Servilia, the mother of Brutus, received as a gift from Julius Caesar a pearl valued at £50,000. Cleopatra's earrings alone were valued at £161,000. Lolli Paulina, the wife of the Emperor Caligula, adorned herself for an ordinary betrothal feast with emeralds and pearls worth nearly £350,000. This extraordinary extravagance is noted again and again, and we find that nearly a quarter of a million was given for a single piece of jewellery.

AN ANCIENT ORNAMENT.

The ring, Mr. Percival points out, is not only one of the most ancient of personal ornaments but also at various times it has been endowed with all kinds of mystical and emblematic qualities. It has been associated with religion, with law, with love, with death; in one form or another, in fact, it seems to be bound up with most of the fases of life.

During the Middle Ages, rings were made in a very high bezel, the sides often ornamented with fine filigree work and enamels, and a small stone set in the top. During the seventeenth century faceted stones of mixed colors were very much used for ornamentation, and with the eighteenth the diamond began its reign and has been the ring stone ever since.

Of artificial stones, practically all are soft and can be scratched with a file except some of the scientific gems; they are, in fact, glass, variously colored. Old glass pastes that have seen much wear are often scratched and dimmed, and if they do not show any trace of this even at the angles, an examination with a magnifier often shows little bubbles and lines, which prove they have been melted. These are quite different from the flaws in real stones, which show the crystalline character of the gem.

TO DISCOVER FRAUDS.

One way of distinguishing them is to hold them to the lips (they must not be warmed by having been worn); the real stones feel cold, while the paste feels soft and warm. Doublets are more deceitful than paste and harder to detect, especially with colored stones. If a pale stone has a rich colored glass case it not only makes a large stone out of a small one, but improves the color immensely. This, however, may be easily detected by applying a test for hardness underneath.

An even more sophisticated form has been invented which has a thin layer of stone cemented to the base as well. These triplets, as they are called, are very likely to betray the unwary. Suspected stones should be removed from their settings and soaked in hot water or chloroform, which dissolves the cement and the whole thing falls to pieces.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

There has been considerable discussion in England over the suggestion that the National Trust for Places of Historic Interest or Natural Beauty should acquire some beautiful old village for the purpose of preserving it as it stands and maintaining it forever against innovation and change. Under the ownership thus proposed no new building would be allowed within a certain distance of the main street and all additions would be made to conform to the original design. It is pointed out that the typical villages of the past with their peculiar charm are becoming rarer with the progress of time, and it is urged that if they are to be sayed at all it is important that the work of saving them should not be long deferred.

The purchased property, it should be understood, would not be kept up as a museum or show place. The life of the village would go on as of old under the new landlord, a sort of public ownership being substituted for private ownership. The villages are now occupied by tenants who are answerable to the private owner, and they would continue to be tenants of the trust when the new plan was in operation. The scheme is based on a system of ownership of which we know little in this country.

There is, moreover, a hint in the discussions of the scheme to which we can give a local application. The London Spectator would solve the question of ways and means by having a private donor come forward with the gift of a village to the nation. A collector, it says, sends to the British Museum a valuable vase or bronze, another presents or bequeaths to the National Gallery a wonderful picture or collection of pictures. "Men will readily give each other the work of men's hands; it is a far rarer thing to dedicate to mankind the work of nature or man's work in natural surroundings," but here is a fine opportunity for a new experiment in giving. Philanthropists in this country might well follow out this reasoning for its bearing on the acquisition of public parks. There is not a municipality in Canada that has parks enough. There is not one that would not be benefited greatly by gifts of park lands. There is hardly one in which a benefaction of the kind would not count for more than most of the treasures of collectors.

SLACK BARRELS.

Barrels Made in Canada Worth Million and Half Dollars.

That Canada is fast losing her possibilities as a producer of tight cooperage is brought out by statistics compiled by the Forestry Branch of the Department of the Interior. These show that, whereas 2,768,000 oak staves were cut in the Dominion in 1911, 7,293,000 were imported.

In the manufacture of slack cooperage, used for the dry rough commodities such as lime, potatoes, apples, dry fish, flour, cereals, etc., which predominate in Canada's products, elm is the principal wood employed, forming over 50 per cent. of the total consumption. Spruce is rapidly coming into more general use as a source of stave supply, eleven million more spruce staves and nine million fewer elm staves having been used in 1911 than in 1910. When elm is exhausted birch will probably take its place, being comparatively flexible and available in great quantity.

The total value of the materials used in the slack cooperage industry in Canada for the past year was $1,465,702. In 1910 it was $1,595,119 or some $130,000 more. Imports and exports of materials and finished product were, respectively, $329,992 and $135,463, an excess of imports over exports of $194,529.

The total amount of material used, according to an estimate of the Forestry Branch, was over 62,000,000 feet, board measure. Through checking, loose methods of manufacture, etc., there is also a great deal of waste not accounted for. The unlimited supplies of spruce in New Ontario may yet be utilized for the manufacture of barrels.

If headaches occur after bathing the trouble is probably due to water in the head, and future headaches can be prevented by placing a piece of cotton-wool in each ear.

HOME

FRUIT DAINTIES.

Spiced Peaches.—Four pounds of peaches, one cupful of vinegar, one tablespoonful of cinnamon, one tablespoonful of cloves, three pounds of brown sugar, one teaspoonful of ginger, one teaspoonful of salt, and one-eighth of a teaspoonful of red pepper. Boil the sugar and the vinegar. Scald the peaches, remove the skins and cook in the syrup. The spices in a bag and cook with the peaches. When the peaches are tender pour into stone jars, reheat the syrup every day for a week, pouring when boiling over the peaches. All kinds of small fruits may be spiced in this manner.

Huckleberry Pie.—Clean, pick and wash one pint of huckleberries; then drain them. Beat the yolks of two eggs and four heaping tablespoonfuls of sugar until light, add one tablespoonful of milk, then the drained berries. Line one pie plate with rich pastry, pour on it the berry mixture, put in the oven and bake a light brown; remove from the oven, spread with a meringue made of the whites of two eggs beaten stiff and four tablespoonfuls of sugar added. Brown nicely. The whites can be beaten with the yolks and sugar if preferred.

Bananas en Casserole.—Peel six ripe bananas, scrape off the coarse threads and cut the bananas in halves, lengthwise, and the pieces in halves, crosswise. Put the pieces into a casserole. Melt a small glass of apple jelly in one cupful of boiling water and pour over the bananas, then squeeze over them the juice of half an orange; cover the dish and let it cook in a moderate oven for half an hour. Serve from the casserole as a sweet entree with roast beef or mutton or with beefsteak.

Grapefruit Sherbet.—Six grapefruit, three cupfuls of sugar, two cupfuls of water, two tablespoonfuls of powdered gelatin and the whites of two eggs. Put the gelatin into a saucepan, add the water and the strained juice of the grapefruit and bring to boiling point. When cool freeze partially, add the whites of the eggs beaten up and finish freezing.

Apple Fluff.—Two cupfuls of grated sour apples, five tablespoonfuls of powdered sugar, a quarter of a teaspoonful of grated nutmeg and three whites of eggs. Add the sugar to the apples while grating them, then add the nutmeg and the whites stiffly beaten. Beat thoroughly for ten minutes. Serve in dainty glasses.

Pineapple Dainties.—Cook one cupful of grated pineapple, one-fourth of a cupful of sugar, the grated rind and strained juice of one lemon, a pinch of salt and two yolks of eggs until thick, but do not allow it to boil. Chill and fold in half a cupful of stiffly beaten cream. Spread between slices of fresh or canned pineapple, decorate with a star of whipped and sweetened cream flavored with half a teaspoonful of orange extract. Put half of a walnut meat on the top of each star of cream.

KITCHEN KINKS.

Elasticity is restored to rubber by soaking it in one part ammonia and two parts clear water until the desired results are obtained. This is specially true in the case of rings or other articles that have become stiff and brittle.

Keep a piece of sandpaper handy to the sink where the dishes are washed. It will prove invaluable. When a stubborn spot on a burned kettle refuses to move through the aid of a wire dishcloth, use a piece of sandpaper. It is an aid in cleaning a gas stove. Fold a piece over a knife and you can quickly remove all grease or dried food that sticks to the corners.

Cut sheets of tinfoil and place under the flower vase doilies and you will have no trouble with any dampness affecting the best polished furniture.

Every woman knows the irritation of finding a favorite waist, petticoat or corset ready for the laundry just as she wants it most.

A clever housewife, however, has thought out a way to launder such an article of clothing quickly. Wash the garment and starch as usual, but instead of hanging it out in the open air, lay flat on a very heavy Turkish towel.

Then, beginning at one end, roll the towel and garment as tightly as possible. If laid in a warm place the towel will have absorbed enough moisture in a very short time to permit the garment to be ironed.

Before washing any piece of willow furniture brush it thoroughly, so as to remove every particle of dust. Otherwise no amount of washing will get the furniture clean.

WASHING DISHES.

The bacteriologist finds no kitchen clean enough and the ordinary methods of washing dishes he is likely to call a "smear."

Dishes have been tested to determine the number of organisms that remain on them after "ordinary" washing as compared with a method that requires an application of hot water with the help of soap or, better still, carbonate of soda, a thorough rinsing in hot water, and wiping with a sterilized cloth (that is, one which has been in boiling water since it was used before). By this latter method the dishes were practically sterile, while many organisms were left on the dishes that were washed by the "ordinary" method.

One might ask what harm will they do. Oftentimes none, but if the bacteria are those which convey disease, dirty dishes may be the means of giving it to well persons. But most of all, persons who are at all thoughtful of such things do not want any dirt which may be prevented by good methods, simply because dirt in itself is sufficiently unpleasant.

In washing milk utensils it is first necessary to remove with warm water all traces of the milk before scalding water is used. Because of the cream adhering to the sides soap is used also, but the greatest care must be taken to remove by repeated rinsing every trace of soap. A telltale flavor of soap in the morning cream has more than once revealed careless habits in the kitchen, and made it evident that all the soap was not removed in rinsing. The utensils must then be dipped into absolutely boiling water for a moment.

It is an important matter to wash the milk bottle in which milk is now commonly delivered to customers. By this we refer to the washing of the full bottle before it is opened. It is safe to say that this is seldom done. But notice the bottle as it is brought into the kitchen, the milkman grasping it with his hand over the top.

These hands perhaps more often than not have harnessed his horse, have been grasping the reins all the morning, have opened and shut doors, run along stair railings, have perhaps wiped mouth or nose, and yet the thoughtless housekeeper or cook, regarding the white cap as full security from the outer world, pours out the milk over a very dirty bottle brim.

Milk bottles should be put under the hot water spigot for a moment and wiped dry with a clean cloth before opening.

Most housewives agree that milk bottles should be carefully rinsed before they are returned, perhaps more from a feeling for cleanliness than for absolute necessity, as the milk bottles in all well-managed dairies are thoroughly scrubbed and washed before refilling. If such violations of this practice as recently came under observation are noted, when the driver of a dairy wagon washed out some milk bottles in a public drinking fountain provided for horses, refilled them and disposed of them to other customers, complaint should be made to the dairy and, if this is not sufficient, to the board of health.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

INTERNATIONAL LESSON, SEPT. 8.

Lesson X.—The Mission of the twelve, Matt. 9. 35 to 10. 15; 10. 40 to 11. Golden Text, Matt. 10. 40.

9. 35-38.

Verse 35. Went about—Made a circuit of Galilee. This was the third preaching tour.

Gospel of the kingdom—Or, good news concerning the fact that the Kingdom had come, and relating to its constitution and the nature of its benefits.

36. The multitudes—Which crowded about him for sympathy and instruction.

Distressed and scattered — The figure of a flock of sheep among which wild beasts have gone, wounding and devouring some and scattering the rest. The reference is to the common people, who had become the victims of the scribes and Pharisees.

As sheep not having a shepherd—Mark introduces this statement just previous to the feeding of the five thousand (6. 34). A sharp denunciation of the religious leaders of the people is here involved. They were blind leaders of the blind (Matt. 15. 14). Instead of giving instruction which would help the multitudes to find their way into the Kingdom, they raised obstructions which hindered them (Matt. 23. 13), and imposed burdens "grievous to be borne" (Matt. 23. 4).

37. The harvest—The souls to be garnered into the Kingdom are likened to the precious grain. According to Luke, these words were also addressed to the seventy (10. 2).

38. Pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest—The advice was also a challenge to the twelve to become volunteers.

10. 1-15.

1. His twelve disciples—They had been chosen early during his second preaching tour (Mark 3. 13-10; Luke 6. 12-19). Matthew enumerates them here for the first time.

Gave them authority—An indication of the continual expanding of the Kingdom.

2. Twelve apostles—The writer changes the title here because of the new commission. Previous to this time they had been called simply "disciples."

Simon, who is called Peter—Peter, or Cephas, was his surname. It was an Aramaic name, meaning "the rock," which Jesus gave to Simon the first time they met (John 1. 42).

ARCHBISHOP OF CANTERBURY

Whose ecclesiastical position, curiously enough, entitles him to a seat on the British Board of Trade.

Andrew—Who brought Simon to Jesus (John 1. 35-42) and the first missionary of the Kingdom.

John—The "beloved disciple" who, with Andrew, had been a disciple of John the Baptizer.

3. Philip—Like Simon and Andrew, he was a native of Bethsaida (John 1. 44).

Bartholomew—Probably the Nathanael of Cana of Galilee (John 1. 45; 21. 2).

Thomas—Called Didymus, the twin (John 11. 16), who disbelieved in the resurrection (John 20. 24, 25).

Matthew the publican—A collector of taxes in Capernaum. Publicans were the "grafters" of that day. He is called "Levi" by Mark (2. 14) and Luke (5. 27). Like Simon and Saul, when he became a disciple he received the new name "Matthew," which means "The gift of Jehovah." He is the writer of the Gospel which bears his name.

James the son of Alphaeus — Called James "the less" (Mark 15. 40). He is not to be identified with James the brother of Jesus.

Thaddaeus — Meaning "the hearty." He is also called Lebbaeus, which means "the courageous." Both are epithets. His real name was Judas, son of James (Luke 6. 16). See also John 14. 22.

4. Simon the Cananaean — "The Zealot" (Luke 6. 14; Acts 1. 13). So called because of his membership in a sect which had a revolutionary attitude toward the Roman government.

Judas Iscariot—Literally, a man of Kerioth, a village of South Judah, near Hebron (Josh. 15. 25).

5. Way of the Gentiles—Any road leading to a Gentile district or city.

6. Samaritans—Descendants of Babylonians who were brought into Palestine by Sargon to replace the Jews who were carried into captivity (2 Kings 17. 24ff.).

7. Preach—Make a proclamation, as heralds.

8. Freely give—They were to generously exercise their gift of miracle working.

9. Purses—Or, girdles, which were provided with pockets. The apostles were to provide nothing but the simplest equipment, relying upon the reward of their labors to supply their simple needs.

10. Two coats—Shirts, or under tunics.

Shoes—They were to wear only the coarser sandals, which were less pretentious and better adapted to travel. (Luke 22. 35; Mark 6. 9).

11. Search out who in it is worthy—Those who would receive the message kindly and consider the apostles' visit as a favor.

12. Salute it—With the common salutation, "Peace be unto you" (John 20. 21).

14. Shake off the dust of your feet—The dust of heathen territory was considered "unclean" by the Jew, who wiped it from his feet when passing into the holy land (Acts 13. 51). The implication is that those Jews who would not receive the apostles were no better than heathen.

15. Sodom and Gomorrah—Cities in the region of the Dead Sea destroyed in the time of Abraham (Gen. 19. 14).

10. 40 to 11. 1.

In the verses that intervene between this passage and the preceding (10. 16-39) Jesus instructs and exhorts his disciples with reference to their personal standing and behavior as his representatives in the great task of evangelizing the world. Then in verse 40 he takes up again the thought of verses 11-15 which refer to those to whom their message of salvation is to be proclaimed.

Him that sent me—The heavenly Father.

41. He that receiveth a prophet in a prophet's name—He that welcomes and entertains an apostle because he is an apostle, that is, for his work's sake.

42. These little ones—Even the least among the righteous.

DISCOVERIES YET TO COME

The Race Has Only Had Its First Breath, as Compared With Its Long Career in Eternity

Every wonder that man has yet performed has been done just as Christ healed the sick. Man has come by slow and hard work into unity with the power that ruled everything, and he is conquering everything. Into the original idea which the ruler of things had comes a Morse, and distance is so conquered and used by man that we converse over continents. Field so stepped into oneness with the power which creates that seas do not divide its children. Bell so found a unity of idea in his own mind with the habits of the omnipotence of the world—which we call laws—that the cadences of the human voice tell the soul's tides unto another through miles. All these would be called miracles if men had not found out and told each other of the ways which the power of the universe travels.

"We see Him, even Jesus." — Nineteen centuries ago did He tell the sons of men, His brothers, how He found the territory unknown; and how they might find it, while He urged them to go out and take the lands which lie between man and the power which he feels, which Jesus had made known unto them as their own, to be settled and tilled by them forever. Since that day there has been a great fact in the world, to urge on the sovereignty of man over all things. Paul and all of us are heartened.

"WE SEE HIM—EVEN JESUS."

"When we think of what He did by being at one with God, and that we dare not say that anywhere in the rising exultation of Jesus His immortal "Follow Me" ceases to sound, we are overwhelmed with the prospect in the future for our ignorant and sin-cursed race.

By being at-one with this eternal power, He smiled as an infant, as Castelar says, "holding in His little fingers the world of the future, and reflecting in His heavenly eyes the horizon of new and redeeming ideas." By being at-one with this majesty of the universe, He made traditionalism tremble into dust in its citadel, and captured from the ashes of its dissolution the unharmed spirit of man.

By being at-one with the genius of the universe, He loosened in His youth the fetters which had weighed down the soul of man, and refused to accept the gift of all things from the hand of evil, that he might subdue all things by His courageous goodness.

By His oneness of will with the everlasting omnipotence which travels everywhere, He treated death as His slave, and life as His helpmeet. By His unity of mind with that which we call force, He made nature His maid-servant, and she led joy into the house of mourning and life into the gates of death. By His identity of soul with that which He called Father, He flung from His cross the phantom of death, smote the wrong of earth with fatal blow, dealt to evil its destruction, snatched from the jaws of hell the destiny of this race, and after showing a passage-way ascended from the scene of his triumphs to a greater triumph unto his Father.

"We behold Him, even Jesus"—and can any outline suggest the stature of coming humanity? We have only begun the discoveries. These shall be called children's toys in comparison with those to come. Their grandeur will consist in the fact that they helped our advancing to something better, and how much better those shall be that are to come, must be computed by the immortality and nobility of the human soul.

As yet, all things are not subjected, though they are subdued, to the plan of that Son of Humanity. "But we behold Him—even Jesus," and find out what He did by being at-one with the unseen power. If by any means He shall bring us into that unity—and He promised it and is doing it—we can judge of what lies before us.—Frank W. Gunsaulus.

HEALTH

CATARRH.

It is not necessary to describe at length the symptoms of nasal catarrh; every one is quite familiar with them. Catarrh may vary greatly in severity from the occasional "cold in the head" which comes and passes, and is regarded by many people as an inevitable experience of the winter, to a serious chronic and purulent catarrh, which is often called incurable, but which can be either cured or ameliorated by proper treatment.

When the ordinary catarrhal cold does not yield to treatment and disappear, but threatens to run on indefinitely, a specialist should be asked to make a thorough examination, not only of the nose and throat, but of ears and teeth as well. Septic reinfection may occur from any of these sources; a discharging middle ear or decaying teeth may prolong a nasal catarrh indefinitely.

Permanent catarrh is also caused by incorrect habits of living, especially by insufficient ventilation, particularly in the sleeping-room. Most sufferers think their catarrh is due to "exposure," by which they mean too much fresh air; but if they would breathe all the fresh air they can get, avoid crowded rooms, dust, and stuffiness, and learn to sleep with wide-open windows, they would be surprised at the powers of resistance they would develop.

But it must be remembered that a person whose air-passages are normal in structure and condition will have fewer colds, even breathing had air, than one with obstructed passages will have in spite of all the good air in the world. Fresh air is of no use to a person who cannot draw it in.

Victims of catarrh would do well to use only paper handkerchiefs. They are cheap and light, and can be destroyed after each use, a precaution which is not only a matter of justice to others in the family, but a real safeguard to the patient, who otherwise is in constant danger of reinfection.—Youth's Companion.

CARE OF THE FEET.

Women who spend hours caring for their hands pay little attention to their feet. They are such hard-worked members of the body that they deserve better treatment.

Feet are best kept in condition by shoes that fit. Never economize in shoe leather and do not yield to vanity and get footgear that is too small.

Frequent bathing keeps the feet from being tired and swollen, and it prevents roughness of the skin that leads to callous spots.

Water, in which a bit of washing soda has been dissolved, is restful. Hot salt water is equally refreshing, while a vigorous rubbing with alcohol will quickly relieve a burning sensation.

Pumice stone, used frequently, keeps the skin smooth. It is especially necessary on the heel and on the ball of the foot, where the weight of the body rests in walking.

Never cut the nails too short, as they are more likely to become ingrown. And file them smooth with sandpaper, so they will not catch and pull the threads of your stockings.

Occasionally visit a chiropodist. He will detect any irregularity in the growth of nails, and money and pain are saved.

And remember that one's disposition is quickly affected by painful feet.

A WORD TO THE WISE.

The preverbial advice, "Cobbler, stick to your last," had an apposite exemplification in the following anecdote:

A colored man was brought before a police judge, charged with stealing chickens. He pleaded guilty, and received sentence, when the judge asked how it was he managed to lift those chickens right under the window of their owner's house when there was a dog in the yard.

"Hit wouldn't be of no use, judge," said the culprit, "to try to 'splain dis thing to you all. Ef you was to try it, like as not you would git yer hide full o' shot, and git no chickens, neither. Ef you want to engage in any rascality, judge, yo' bettah stick to de bench, whar yo' am familiar."

GERMANY EATS MORE MEAT.

The consumption of meat in the German Empire for the first quarter of 1912 shows a considerable advance over the same period in 1911, and the highest per capita consumption for a number of years. Economists do not, however, regard this as an indication of increased property, but quite the reverse. They find the cause in the severe drought of last summer and the consequent failure of all fodder crops. As winter came on the farmers were compelled to sell off their stock because of lack of fodder, and this brought about a decided drop in prices, in which is seen the cause for the increased meat consumption.

Mr. Merchant, Eatons are beginning to invade the country weekly with another advertising campaign. The Thornbury Herald last week ran a column and a half advertisement for this firm, specially designed to catch the country mail order trade. When will town merchants learn that the success of any business depends on advertising, and that the inroads being made on their district's trade, is largely the result of extensive advertising by the departmental store. The moral is "Go thou and do likewise."

Last Thursday was the last of the Thursday afternoon holidays for this summer, and, as last year, we believe they have been a success. These half-holidays have become well established in Exeter now and there seems to be no dissatisfaction whatever on their account.

The marriage took place on Aug. 28 of Mr. Sylvanus Cann to Miss Mary E. Ferguson, at the home of the bride's mother. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Powell in the presence of about thirty guests. Many handsome gifts were received. Mr. and Mrs. Cann will reside in Exeter.

Owing to the heavy rains in Wingham last Wednesday it became impossible for the finals in the Association bowling event to be played that day, and Dudley Holmes of Wingham granted the honors to the S. G. Bawden rink of Exeter, without playing. The prizes were handsome 400-day clocks.

We are in receipt of a neatly gotten up little book on Northern Ontario, issued by the Ontario Government. It is replete with information on the subject of Ontario's great northland. There are also many illustrations showing the great natural resources in farming lands, forests and mines. Copies may be had by writing the government.

It is funny how some people discover the great importance and influence of a newspaper when they get into a scrape They live for years without subscribing and when asked to advertise say, "It doesn't pay.' But the minute they get into a scrape they rush to the newspapers and request them to say nothing about it.

A quiet wedding took place at the Main Street Methodist Parsonage on Tuesday morning last about 8 o'clock when Mr. William Conelt, one of Hays' popular farmers was united in marriage to Mrs. Smith, of the same township, the ceremony being performed by Rev Powell. Mr. and Mrs. Conelt took the train the same morning to spend a short honeymoon in Toronto.

For the second time Mr. S. G. Bawden had an axle break in his auto. He was taking a load of baseball fans to Clinton Thursday when the left back axle broke two miles north of town. A new axle was put in a day or two afterwards. The boys were taken on to Clinton by Mr. Betty of Hensall.—And still another. While on his way to London Tuesday of this week, another axle broke at Ilderton.

The Dominion Government this week has sent out many thousands of cards warning the people about the danger of the potato canker, which it is feared has obtained a foothold in Canada. It is desirous of stamping out the disease at once and such can be done if every potato grower will inform himself of the nature of the disease, how to detect it in the tubers and then do his duty. Concealment of an outbreak of the disease is punishable by law. A letter to the Central Experimental Farm, Ottawa, will secure you all the information necessary.

That two children, aged eight and three years, respectively, daughter and son of Hector Sutherland of Listowel, died recently from eating what they thought to be mushrooms, is another evidence of the fact that the greatest care must be taken by all persons gathering mushrooms. There are so many varieties of this delicious edible that it is often difficult for an inexperienced person to discriminate between the good and the bad, and no one should eat them before being absolutely certain that they are good.

For the past two seasons the fruit growers and dealers have been disappointed in the production of the fruit farms. This year, however, the crop especially plums, has exceeded the expectation of everybody, and the trees are loaded and groaning with fruit. It is a beautiful sight to see the plums in their various ripening stages of different colors. The apples, too, promise to be a good crop, and the fruit growers are well repaid for their labor in pruning and taking care of the orchards. With such an abundance of good things it will certainly not be necessary for the housewife to resort to dried apples and prunes this winter.

HICKS' SEPTEMBER FORECASTS.—A Reactionary Storm Period involves the 10th, 11th and 12th, the Moon being in perigee on the 9th, new on the 10th, and on the equator on the 11th. It must also be remembered that a maximum crisis of electrical and magnetic unrest falls each year from about the 8th to the 15th of September, being central on the 11th. This tendency will be greatly aggravated this year by the added force of the Moon's conjunction with the Earth and Sun on the 10th. Look for the great barometric fluctuations, very warm weather and unusual manifestations of electricity and magnetism. Auroral lights, phenomenal currents in telegraphic wires, thunder storms, volcanic outbursts and seismic disturbances are among the things to be expected. The crisis of this period will fall on and near the 10th, 11th and 12th. The period will fall on the 10th, involving the 8th to the 13th. High barometer and much cooler weather, with probable frosts northward will come out of the northwest from about the 12th to 15th.

QUEBEC WELCOMES BORDEN.

Quebec, Sept. 6.—Quebec gave a remarkable reception this afternoon to Right Hon. R. L. Borden, Premier of Canada, on his arrival from the old country, where the Dominion Premier created such a great impression. Quebec was the first to greet him, and Quebec certainly did so in splendid style, the splendid hospitality of the ancient capital being exhibited in its most brilliant manner.

The demonstration in honor of Mr Borden was totally devoid of politics. It was a purely civic one, and Liberals as well as Conservatives united in doing honor to the man who is now at the helm of Canadian politics. Accompanying Mr. Borden was Hon. Mr. Pelletier, postmaster-general, and most of the cabinet ministers were present here to receive the returning ministers.

Mayor Drouin read the address and Hon. Mr. Borden replied. When the premier started his remarks in French he was loudly cheered. In replying, Hon. Mr. Borden expressed the sincere appreciation of himself and his colleagues for the cordial and gracious reception which the city of Quebec was extending them upon once more reaching Canadian soil.

The most elaborate function of its kind ever held in Ottawa was the banquet tendered at the Chateau Laurier Monday night to the Hon. R. L. Borden, who had as his hosts the Conservative Association of Ottawa. The magnificent main dining hall of the hotel was filled with nearly 500 guests and there would have been more had the accomodation of the room been greater. While the gathering was essentially of a local character many members of Parliament and party men from Ontario, Quebec, and the Maritime Provinces were present to join in doing homage to their honored leader. It was not an occasion for the announcement of any party policy, but rather one of proper rejoicing for the return of the chieftain who has won the hearts of the British people, and whose fundamental purpose is to solidify the bonds that connect the widely scattered dominions and the mother country.

SMASHED AT BRUCEFIELD

Two G.T.R. flangers and a big snow plow were smashed to pieces at Brucefield on Monday evening. The apparatus was on the way from Wingham to London to be repaired and put in shape for the winter. The plow was running between the flangers, and when the leading flanger broke away from the rest of the train the whole three pieces of apparatus piled up in a heap, wrecking each badly.

NEARLY DROWNED AT GODERICH

Goderich, Sept. 9.—While bathing in the river at the C.P.R. abutments yesterday Willie Thompson, the 7-year-old son of William Thompson, blacksmith, nearly met his death. He started out in seven feet of water to cross to the other side, but finding it too far he turned back and became exhausted and sank. He was noticed by Bruce Noble and Bob Clark, two local scouts. Immediately they went after him. Noble who reached him first, was pulled under by the struggling boy, but managed to free himself and caught him from behind. With Clark's assistance he was pulled ashore. The rescuers will probably receive life-saving medals.

CLINTON MAN SUICIDES.

Rochester, N.Y., Sept 8.—Despondent because he had failed to fill the position of floor walker at the Duff-Powers department store, Henry B. Smith, 21 years old, of Clinton, Ont., went to his room in Windsor Street late last night and turned on the gas. His dead body was discovered this morning after policemen had forced open the door to his room. After telling his landlady where she could find her room rent he went to his room, closed the window, plugged the keyhole, and then turning on the gas, lay down under the bed cover and pulled it over his head, and awaited this death. He had but $4 in his pocket when found.

LOST HAND IN MACHINE

Oliver Pollard, a young man whose home is in London, had his left hand cut off at the wrist while helping at a threshing on the farm of Dan Henderson, near Ailsa Craig, on Saturday afternoon. Pollard was trying to pull some grain out when his sleeve caught and before he could recover himself his hand was drawn in and horribly mangled. It was amputated later by Dr. Hamilton, who was called. The injured man suffered greatly from the shock.

CHAPTER XVI.—(Cont'd)

And then with a pleasant farewell the stranger bowed and went out of the shop, leaving behind him a memory which did more to prevent the blue devils from gaining the mastery of Frithiof's mind than anything else could possibly have done. When he left, however, at his usual dinner hour he was without the slightest inclination to eat, and with a craving for some relief from the monotony of the glaring streets he walked up to Regent's Park, hoping that there perhaps he might find the fresh air for which he was longing.

"Come along, will you!" shouted a rough voice behind him. He glanced round and saw an evil-looking tramp who was speaking to a most forlorn little boy at his heels.

The child seemed ready to drop, but with a look of misery and fear and effort, most painful to see in such a young face, it hurried on, keeping up a wretched little sort of trot at the heels of its father, who tramped on doggedly. Presently the tramp paused outside a public-house.

"Wait for me there in the park," he said to the child, giving it a push in the direction.

And the little fellow went on obediently, until, just at the gate, he caught sight of a costermonger's barrow on which cool green leaves and ripe red strawberries were temptingly displayed. Frithiof lingered a minute to see what would happen, but nothing happened at all, the child just stood there patiently.

"Have you ever tasted them?" said Frithiof, drawing nearer.

The boy shook his head shyly.

"Would you like to?"

Still he did not speak, but a look of rapture dawned in the wistful child eyes.

"Sixpennyworth," said Frithiof to the costermonger; then signing to the child to follow, he led the way into the park, sat down on the nearest seat, put the basket of strawberries down beside him, and glanced at his little companion.

"There, now sit down by me and enjoy them," he said.

And the child needed no second bidding, but began to eat with an eager delight which was pleasant to see.

"Eat, too," said the child, pointing to the basket.

And Frithiof, to please him, smiled and took two or three strawberries.

"There, the rest are for you," he said. "Do you like them?"

"Yes," said the child emphatically; "and I like you."

"Why do you like me?"

"I was tired, and you was kind to me, and these is real jammy!"

But after this fervent little speech he said no more. Then before long the father reappeared, and the little fellow with one shy nod of the head ran off, looking back wistfully every now and then at the stranger who would be remembered by him to the very end of his life.

The next day, something happened which added the last drops to Frithiof's cup of misery, and made it overflow. The troubles of the past year, and the loneliness and poverty which he had borne had gradually broken down his health, and there came to him now a revelation which proved the final blow. He was dining at his usual restaurant. Too tired to eat much, he had taken up a bit of one of the society papers which some one left there, and his eye fell on one of those detestable paragraphs which pander to the very lowest tastes of the public. No actual name was given, but every one knowing anything about her could not fail to see that Blanche Romiaux was the woman referred to. The most revolting insinuations, the most contemptible gossip, ended with the words, "An interesting divorce case may soon be expected."

Frithiof grew deadly white. Feeling sick and giddy, he made his way along Oxford Street, noticing nothing, walking like a man in a dream. Just in front of Buzzard's a victoria was waiting, a remarkably good-looking man stood on the pavement talking to its occupant. Frithiof would have passed by without observing them had not a familiar voice startled him into keen consciousness. He looked up hastily and saw Lady Romiaux—not the Blanche who had won his heart in Norway, for the lips that had once been pressed to his wore a hard look of defiance, and the eyes that had ensnared him had now an expression that confirmed only too well the story he had just read. He heard her give a little artificial laugh in which there was not even the ghost of merriment, and after that it seemed as if a great [illegible] had descended on him. He [illegible] mechanically, but it was chiefly by a sort of instinct that he found his way back to the shop.

"Good heavens, Mr. Falck! how ill you are looking!" exclaimed the head man as he glanced at him. "It's a good thing Mr. Robert will be back again soon. If I'm not very much mistaken, he'll put you into the doctor's hands."

"Oh, it is chiefly this hot weather," said Frithiof, and as if anxious to put an end to the conversation, he turned away to his desk and began to write, though each word cost him a painful effort, and seemed to be dragged out of him by sheer force. At tea-time he wandered out in the street, scarcely knowing what he was doing, and haunted always by Blanche's sadly altered face. When he returned he found that the boy who dusted the shop had spilled some ink over his order-book whereupon he flew into one of those violent passions to which of late he had been liable, so entirely losing his self-control that those about him began to look alarmed.

"I can bear it no longer," he said to himself. "I have tried to bear this life, but it's no use—no use."

Yet after awhile there rose within him a thought which checked the haunting visions of failure and the longing for death. He remembered the face which had so greatly struck him the day before, and again those kindly words rang in his ear, "Courage! the worst will pass."

At length cloisng time came. He dragged himself back to Vauxhall, shut himself into his dreary little room, pulled the table toward the open window, and began to work at Herr Sivertsen's translating. But at last he was at the very end of his strength. A violent shivering fit seized him. Work was no longer possible; he could only stagger to the bed, with that terrible consciousness of being utterly and hopelessly beaten, which to a man is so hard to bear.

Later on, when the summer twilight deepened into night, and he could no longer make out the harbor, and the shipping, and the familiar mountains, he buried his face in the pillow and sobbed aloud, in a forlorn misery which, even in Paradise, must have wrung his mother's heart.

* * * *

Roy Boniface came back from Devonshire the following day, his holiday being shortened by a week on account of the illness of Mrs. Horner's uncle. As there was every reason to expect a legacy from this aged relative, Mr. Horner insisted on going down at once to see whether they could be of any use.

Like many other business men he relieved the monotony of his daily work by always keeping two or three hobbies in hand. The mania for collecting had always been encouraged at Rowan Tree House, and just now botany was his keenest delight. He was contentedly mounting specimens on the night of his return, when James Horner looked in, the prospective legacy making him more than ever fussy and pompous.

"Ah, so you have come back; that's all right!" he exclaimed. "I had hoped you would have come round to us. However, no matter, I don't know that there is anything special to say, and of course this sad news has upset my wife very much."

"Ah," said Roy, somewhat skeptical in his heart of hearts about the depth of her grief. "We were sorry to hear about it."

"We go down the first thing to-morrow," said James Horner, "and shall, of course, stay on. They say there is no hope of recovery."

"By the bye," said Mr. Horner, "I have just remembered to tell you that provoking fellow, Falck, never turned up to-day. He never even had the grace to send word that he wasn't coming."

"Of course he must be ill," said Roy, looking disturbed. "He is the last fellow to stay away if he could possibly keep up. We all thought him looking ill before we left."

"I don't know about illness," said James Horner, putting on his hat; "but he certainly has the worst temper I've ever come across. It was extremely awkward without him to-day, for already we are short of hands."

"There can hardly be much doing," said Roy. "London looks like a desert. However, of course I'll look up Falck. I dare say he'll be all right by to-morrow."

But he had scarcely settled himself down comfortably to his work after James Horner's welcome departure when the thought of Frithiof came to trouble him.

Like most people, Roy was selfish. With an effort he tore himself away from his beloved specimens, and set off briskly for Vauxhall, where, after some difficulty, he found the little side street in which, among dozens of others precisely like it, was the house of the three Miss Turnours.

A little withered-up lady opened the door to him, and replied nervously to his question.

"Mr. Falck is ill," she said. "He seems very feverish; but he was like it once before, when he first came to England, and it passed off in a day or two."

"Can I see him?" said Roy.

"Well, he doesn't like being disturbed at all," said Miss Charlotte. "He'll hardly let me inside the room. But if you would just see him, I should really be glad. You will judge better if he should see the doctor or not."

"Thank you, I'll go up then. Don't let me trouble you."

"It is noise he seems to mind so much," said Miss Charlotte. "So if you will find your way up alone, perhaps it would be best. It is the first door you come to at the top of the last flight of stairs."

Roy went up quietly, opened the door as noiselessly as he could, and went in.

"I wish you wouldn't come in again," said an irritable voice from the bed. "The lightest footstep is torture."

"I just looked in to ask how you were," said Roy, much shocked to see how ill his friend seemed.

"Oh, it's you!" said Frithiof, turning his flushed face in the direction of the speaker. "Thank God you've come! That woman will be the death of me. She does nothing but ask questions."

"I've only just got back from Devonshire, but they said you hadn't turned up to-day, and I thought I would come and see after you."

Frithiof dragged himself up and drank feverishly from the ewer which stood on a chair beside him.

"I tried to come this morning," he said, "but I was too giddy to stand, and gave it up. My head's gone wrong somehow."

"Poor fellow! you should have given up before," said Roy. "You seem in terrible pain."

"Yes, yes; it's like a band of hot iron," moaned poor Frithiof. Then suddenly starting up in wild excitement. "There's Blanche! there's Blanche! Let me go to her! Let me go! I will see her once more—only this once!"

Roy with some difficulty held him down, and after awhile he seemed to come to himself. "Was I talking nonsense?" he said. "It's a horrid feeling not being able to control one's self. If I go crazy you can just let me die, please. Life's bad enough now, and would be intolerable then. There she is again! She's smiling at me. Oh, Blanche! you did care once. Come back! Come back! He can't love you as I love! But it's no use—no use! she is worse than dead. I tell you I saw it in that cursed paper, and I saw it in her own face. Why, one might have known! All women are like it."

And then he fell into incoherent talk, chiefly in Norwegian.

SIR HERBERT'S WIT.

Sir Herbert Beerbohm Tree, the famous English actor-manager, has a reputation as a wit also.

When he appeared at the Palace recently, a fellow variety artist, given to hailing everybody by Sir A. Beerbohm Tree.

Christian name, saluted him with "Hallo, Herbert!" Sir Herbert, who was accompanied at the moment by Lady Tree, responded by shaking hands and asking leave to introduce "My wife, Maud."

One day, at rehearsal Sir Herbert asked a youthful actor to "Step back a little." The player did so. Tree eyed him critically—and went on rehearsing. After a time he repeated the request: "A little further back." The youth obeyed. Surveying him, Tree went on with his work. Shortly afterwards he again asked him to step still further back. "If I do," expostulated the youth, "I shall be right off the stage." "Yes," said Tree, "that's right."

POVERTY A WHIP AND SPUR.

"Appetite for Achievement" Grows Stale on a Diet of Sweets.

Poverty is capital—a creative force, a whip, a spur, an incentive. Ambition dies on a diet of truffle and goose liver, says a writer in Woman's World.

Hard schools teach great lessons. An unearned dollar is a fool maker. Those who do not understand how to make money can't retain it. Don't mind these few Spartan years. They are blessings. The appetite for achievement stales on sweets—hunger lends zest to doggedness.

You must work—you have no choice. You must earn or you can't eat. There's no helping hand behind you—you've got to seize the opportunity before you.

Responsibility is riding on your shoulders, but duty broadens character. Pack your chest with courage and begin to win. What you've missed in training you can make up in steadiness and readiness. Education at its best merely points out the most competent method, and if you keep your eyes open and put your heart in your tasks common sense will show you as much as a text book. You are ignorant of theories, but theory after all, isn't nearly so important as practice.

You can't achieve more than you believe. Your reward will be proportionate to your effort. Whatever you can grasp with clean hands is your property, but you'll be knocked about, blocked and fought by every man who wants what you seek. If you have a yellow streak you haven't a show.

The years that face you are full of promise. To-morrow is always mightier than yesterday.

The newcomer profits by the trials and struggles of the past, and more knots have been untied, more problems have been solved in this single generation than in any previous century.

Legislation is tearing whip after whip from the hand of Privilege—hours are shorter, sanitation is better, and facilities of every sort are at the disposal of all who wish to improve their minds and bodies.

But we offer no charity—only cowards and shirkers whine for concessions. We want the greatest ability at the top, so we are merciless to quitters. It's the only way in which we can truly test efficiency.

When you are discouraged, weep on your own shoulder—pluck is ashamed to display its tears.

Hold hard to hope—fling your faith in the teeth of ridicule, disaster and enmity.

Dream far—we build close to the stars in this century. Think with unleashed imagiantion.

CAUSE AND EFFECT.

Travelling in the wild and woolly west, a gentleman entered a small township in order that he might make the purchase of a watch and chain.

The storekeeper was very pleased to oblige, but as he wrapped up the articles purchased he included with them a fearsome-looking revolver of very respectable dimensions.

"I say," observed the astonished traveller, "what are you doing? I didn't offer to buy a revolver."

The watchmaker, puzzled in turn, and thinking his customer must have lost his sense and reason, replied:

"But you have bought a gold watch. If you are going to keep it in these parts, you'll want the gun, too!"

NOTES AND COMMENTS

The president of the British Medical Association, Sir James Barr, has expressed himself as favoring practical eugenics. In his annual address he expressed regret that some physicians had advocated large families regardless of the quality of those born. If every parent would consider, as Sir James said, moral responsibility first, we might in a few generations have "a pure, moral and highly intellectual race." It is certain that the duties and responsibilities of parenthood are more appreciated now than formerly—perhaps more than ever before. The efforts of the real race improvers should be to increase the moral sense in old and young. With that fully developed the question of population will take care of itself.

Fewer babies are being born in all civilized lands, but more are growing up to maturity than in the last generation. The average life has been prolonged, and it will still further lengthen with the advance of knowledge and zeal for right living. Race improvement is coming, but it must be sought by every individual as well as by statesmen, scientists and moralists.

Lovers of the beautiful in landscape will sigh over the discovery of coal in Kent, one of the fairest counties in England. This land of smiling gardens and picturesque cottages is to be profaned by numerous black pits, heaps of coal and refuse, industrial railways and grimy villages, according to the present outlook, for its coal measures have been found to be extensive and valuable. They contain not less than ten billion tons of coal of high value, enough to supply the whole United Kingdom for thirty-seven years at present rate of production.

More coal, of course, means greater wealth for Britain, and her economists will rejoice, for the problem of coal exhaustion has been a serious one in the national mind. The new field is thirty miles nearer London than any other, and it is predicted that it will capture the London market and supplant South Wales in a large part of the export trade.

Though coal has long been suspected in Kent, none was discovered until 1906. Subsequent borings have revealed such a wealth of the mineral that shafts for mining are now being sunk and production will begin within two years. Tourists and artists have but little time in which to see Kent undespoiled.

PITY THE POOR PEERS.

Court Dress Regulations Do Not Allow Trousers.

Although Lord Sandhurst has not yet occupied the office of Lord Chamberlain for more than a few months, he is having a busier time than ever fell to the lot of his predecessor, says a London correspondent. He has not only lived through a fierce deadset against the dramatic censorship vested in his office, but has struck at such abuses as the sale of special permits to the Royal Enclosure of Ascot.

His department has also been busy in revising dress regulations for the royal household and the Court. The officials of the orders of chivalry and heraldry are particularly pleased with the result, as the new regulations will deck them more brightly than ever.

Gold mountings are to be provided for ebony staves, and the tabards of all the Kings-of-Arms are to be of velvet. Lord Colebrook, captain of the Gentleman-at-Arms, together with his men, will have to submit to the novelty of having two silver portcullises on the back skirts of their uniforms instead of one.

But the new dress reforms not only concern courtiers and officials, but such oversea magnates as at some future day aspire to be presented to King George. Black velvet trousers and patent leather boots have been banned by the Lord Chamberlain in favor of black velvet breeches and black leather shoes. King Edward permitted trousers to be worn, it is said, out of deference to the susceptibilities of courtiers whose legs looked lean in stockings. But the new regime shows no mercy to the spindle-shanked, who henceforth will have to keep away from the royal precincts if they are unduly sensitive about their lather limbs.

LIFE IN THE PERSPECTIVE

Beyond are Remaining Parts of Knowledge to be Made Complete for Us in Years to Come.

For now we see through a glass darkly; but then face to face; now I know in part; but then shall I know even as also I am known.—I. Cor. xiii., 12.

We cannot see very far. We do not know very much. The dense mystery of the world veils our vision like a fog. The universe wears an inscrutable face. It is not possible to predict the course of human history. We are forced to accept the limitation of short vision and partial knowledge.

One way to accept the limitation is to chafe under it. There are men who can do nothing but rebel when they cannot comprehend. Partial knowledge exasperates them. They have not learned that the half loaf is better than no loaf at all. Fretful children, impatient with the revelations of God, they pour out their souls in a long wailing "Why?"

The other way is to make the most of partial knowledge. This is the way of faith. It recognizes the measure of vision and knowledge we possess to-day as the promise of larger vision and knowledge.

NOW WE KNOW IN PART.

The young peasant, climbing for the first time out of the secluded valley where he was born, reaches a spot from which he can look off at neighboring hills. From loftier elevations his eyes rest on yet more distant ranges. Finally from a summit his vision sweeps an unimagined expanse of hill and dale, mountain, plateau, plain and valley and catches glimpses of remotest peaks. Henceforth he will always view life in the valley as part of a larger life extending beyond the encircling hills. And he will become a larger man for the broader vision.

You ought to live in the present. In religion as in every vital sphere absorbing interest must centre in the things of to-day. But your present life ought not to be detached. It will be full of dignity and of more than transient value in the degree that you know it to be comprehended in the eternal purpose of God.

But now-a-days the temptation for men is to become detached by narrow attention to the present. They wither up because the petty triumph and the puny satisfaction of the hour cannot nourish the soul. When, through faith in a life which you now know in part only, you have realized at once the momentary and the eternal character of your present, you will begin to live with calm sincerity and tranquil earnestness.

CONSCIENCE WILL SPEAK.

Its judgment will be affected by your training and prejudice. But you will know it as an echo from the Eternal in your soul. Sorrow will come. You will not perfectly understand it. But you will take it as part of that ministration of toil and pain by which the Heavenly Father redeems and disciplines and attests to the human soul its immortal value to Himself. Death will arrive. His summons will not dismay you. For it will release you from a life where you have known in part faith with fear, love with shame, loyalty with perfidy, and usher you into a life where you shall know faith and love and loyalty without shade of deficiency or shadow of defeat.—Rev. Dr. Henry M. Brown.

HEALTH

INFLAMMATORY RHEUMATISM

Acute inflammatory rheumatism attacks people of all ages and conditions, and is dreaded not only because of the intense pain that accompanies it, but also because it often leaves behind it a permanently injured heart. This complication is especially frequent in children. Severe pain, with redness and swelling of the joints, makes the diagnosis easy in most cases of inflammatory rheumatism in adults, but in young children these symptoms may be too slight to be observed, while at the same time the heart is suffering serious damage.

So-called "growing pains" may be the beginning of an attack of acute rheumatism; or a child, although it does not give up its play, may complain that there is pain in the soles of its feet when it stands. If these pains are accompanied by the least redness or swelling of any joint, and if there is also fever, the diagnosis of inflammatory rheumatism is clear.

The child should be put at once to bed, and kept there all through the acute stage of the disease. In this way the attack may sometimes be shortened, and the shorter it is the less danger there is of the heart being affected. The medical treatment of the case should be in the hands of a competent physician. Fortunately, there are to-day remedies for the quick control of rheumatism that were unknown a few years ago, when it sometimes ran a course of many weeks.

While the pain is severe, the clothing should be arranged with a view to the greatest possible comfort for the patient. The nightdress should be of soft flannel, and should fasten all the way down the front, because the profuse sweats characteristic of this disease make frequent changes necessary. It is well to have a soft blanket under the patient, and the bedclothes must be light, as well as warm. Where the joints are much swollen and very painful, the clothes will have to be lifted away from the body by a wooden cradle. The nurse must be deft and careful, because in the acute stage the least clumsiness may cause the most acute agony, so that even a heavy footfall is dreaded by the patient. —Youth's Companion.

POWER OF THE COMPRESS.

There is nothing in such bad odor now-a-days as old-fashioned health-remedies. In the country "herbs" are still the cure for every ailment. But in the towns folks seek the doctor at once should illness overtake them.

And one of the simplest and least known of the bygone cures, in the opinion of many, is the cold compress. This is simply a piece of linen dipped in cold water and placed on any portion of the anatomy afflicted; over the wet linen a strip of flannel is pinned, to keep in both heat and moisture.

A compress to the head will cure a headache quicker than any powder; while one to the throat on going to bed at night relieves a sore throat, swollen tonsils, and huskiness in double-quick time. Well wrapped round the centre of the body, the compress is an absolutely reliable cure for indigestion and its attendant evils, including spots and pimples.

The cold rag when first applied will cause something of a shock to the patient; but this soon passes, as heat generates with extraordinary rapidity. A used compress should be thoroughly washed before applying a second time. The beauty of this simplest of all cures is it can only do good, because it does not harm.

NOW SEE HEART BEATS.

The Device is in Regular Use in a London Hospital.

A device by which one may see the heart beat is now in regular use at the London (England) Hospital Medical College.

It is the invention of Mr. H. S. Soutar, one of the registrars of the hospital, and records every movement of the heart and the muscles of the heart of a patient a hundred yards away. With electrical connection the same result could be obtained a hundred miles away. All the patient has to do is to place his or her hands in a solution of warm salt water, and the electric current from the hands, which are the positive and negative poles, is carried by wires to the instrument which shows the heart-beats.

This consists of a very fine capillary thread of tube glass, silvered to render it a conductor of electricity. The thread is suspended between the poles of a very powerful electric magnet. The minutest current passing through the suspended thread deflects the thread. Thus, as the heart beats the thread "kicks," and the movement is shown on a recording apparatus, the shadow of thread being thrown by a powerful arc light. By means of a chart the heart-beats are permanently and accurately recorded, without any distress to the patient, who may remain in bed.

A DISTINCTION.

Mrs. Nag—I suppose now you wish you were free to marry again?

Mr. Nagg—No. Just free.

RESULTS OF EXPERIMENTS WITH AUTUMN SOWN CROPS THROUGHOUT ONTARIO.

Three hundred and twenty-eight farmers throughout Ontario conducted experiments with autumn-sown crops during the past year. Reports have been received from thirty-one of the counties of the Province. The average results of the carefully conducted experiments with autumn-sown crops are here presented in a very concise form.

Winter Wheat.—Five varieties of winter wheat were distributed last autumn to those farmers who wished to test some of the leading varieties on their own farms. The average yields per acre of straw and of grain are as follows: Imperial amber, 1.5 tons 24.3 bushels; American wonder, 1.5 tons, 21.8 bushels; Crimean red, 1.9 tons 21.5 bushels; Banatka, 1.4 tons 21.2 bushels, and Tasmania red, 1.8 tons 21.0 bushels.

It will be seen that the Imperial amber has given good results throughout Ontario as well as at the Ontario Agricultural College. The American wonder, which gave an average of 2½ bushels per acre less than the Imperial Amber, is a white grained variety resembling very closely the Dawson's Golden Chaff. The Crimean Red winter wheat has been grown at the College for ten years, and is one which yields very well indeed. It possesses wheat of excellent quality, but the straw is somewhat weak. The Banatka produces grain of excellent quality for bread production.

Winter Rye.—Two varieties of winter rye were distributed in the autumn of 1911. The results show that the Mammoth White variety came at the head of the list in yield of grain with an average of 23.9 bushels per acre. In experiments throughout Ontario for the last six years, the Mammoth White surpassed the common rye by an annual average of fully four bushels per acre.

Fertilizers with Winter Wheat.—In the co-operative experiments with different fertilizers applied in the autumn to winter wheat, the average yields of grain per acre for eight years are as follows: Mixed Fertilizer, 23.5 bushels; nitrate of soda, 22.5 bushels; muriate of potash, 21.5 bushels, and superphosphate, 21.2 bushels. On similar land, cow manure at the rate of twenty tons per acre, gave an average yield of 25.8 bushels per acre, and the land which received neither fertilizers nor manure gave an average of 18.1 bushels per acre. The superphosphate was applied at the rate of 320 lbs. and the muriate of potash and the nitrate of soda each 160 lbs. per acre. The mixed fertilizer consisted of one-third of the quantity of each of the other three fertilizers here mentioned. The usual cost of the fertilizers, as used in this experiment, is between four and five dollars per acre.

In another experiment it was found that nitrate of soda applied in the spring gave 1.3 bushels per acre more than when applied in the autumn. Nitrate of soda increased the yield of wheat more than common salt when applied either in the autumn or in the spring.

Winter Emmer and Winter Barley.—A comparative test of winter emmer and winter barley was made throughout Ontario in each of the past three years. The average result for the three years show that the winter emmer gave 1,830 and the winter barley 1,812 pounds of grain per acre. Satisfactory results from this experiment were received from only four farms in 1912, and according to each of those reports the winter emmer surpassed the winter barley in yield of grain per acre.

Hairy Vetches and Winter Rye for Fodder.—Three good reports have been received from farmers who tested hairy vetches and winter rye as fodder crops. In each instance the hairy vetches gave a considerably larger yield of green crop per acre than the winter rye, the average for the hairy vetches being about 25 tons of green crop. This large yield is due principally to the comparatively wet, cool summer.

Distribution of Material for Experiments in 1912.—As long as the supply lasts, material will be distributed free of charge in the order in which the applications are received from Ontario farmers wishing to experiment and to report the results of any one of the following tests: 1, Three varieties of winter wheat; 2, two varieties of winter rye; 3, five fertilizers with winter wheat; 4, autumn and spring applications of Nitrate of soda and common salt with winter wheat; 5, winter rye; 6, hairy vetches and winter rye as fodder crops. The size of each plot is to be one rod wide by two rods long. Material for numbers 3 and 4 will be sent by express and that for the other by mail.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

INTERNATIONAL LESSON, SEPT. 15.

Lesson XI.—Judgment and mercy. Matt. 11. 20-30. Golden Text, Matt. 11. 28.

Verse 20. Then began he to upbraid—Matthew records this reproach as occurring immediately after his charge preparatory to sending forth the twelve, while Luke places it, perhaps more correctly, at the close of the Galilean period, after he had "stedfastly set his face to go to Jerusalem" (Luke 9. 51).

Most of his mighty works—Or, powers. Perhaps a closer rendering of the Greek would be "those very numerous mighty works" or miracles. The synoptists use the term "mighty works" frequently, while John avoids it.

21. Chorazin — Situated about two miles north of Capernaum. There is no record of miracles performed here, though John states that many things were done by Jesus which were not recorded (21. 25).

Bethsaida—The home of Andrew, Peter, and Philip, situated a short distance north of Lake Galilee and east of the Jordan.

Tyre and Sidon—Heathen cities situated on the Mediterranean coast. Jesus and his disciples seem to have been well received on their visit here (Mark 7. 31).

Sackcloth and ashes—Symbols of extreme grief. For examples see Jonah 3. 6; Dan. 9. 3; Isa. 58. 5.

22. More tolerable—The heathen cities which had received very little of the gospel would be held less responsible than the Jewish cities which had been enlightened by both teaching and miracles.

23. Capernaum — A flourishing city on the northwest shore of the lake. This was the home of Jesus during his Galilean ministry (Matt. 9. 1) and the scene of many miracles.

Shalt thou be exalted unto heaven?—This question reveals the haughty and self-sufficient attitude which the prosperous inhabitants of the city assumed. Their self-satisfaction permitted of no acceptance of the important spiritual truths which Jesus presented.

Go down unto Hades — Some manuscripts read be brought down. The men of Capernaum were proud of their flourishing city but failed to appreciate Christ's teaching. Their humiliation, therefore, will be equal to that of the heathen cities (Isa. 14. 13-15). Condemnation of the inhabitants as well as the desolation of the city is prophesied. For a discussion of "hades" see introduction to Lesson Text Studies for May 5.

Sodom—A city situated near the Dead Sea, destroyed because of its wickedness (Gen. 19). Wherever this name appears in the New Testament it is cited as an example of the execution of divine judgment (Luke 10. 12; 17. 29; Rom. 9. 29; 2 Peter 2. 6; Jude 7).

25. At that season—In Luke's record (10. 21. 22) this paragraph occurs after the return of the seventy.

These things—This refers to the "mighty works," which were not understood in those Jewish cities which would not receive them as evidences of divine wisdom and power.

Wise and understanding—The reference is to the orthodox Jews, and especially to the scribes and Pharisees, who were versed in every detail of the Mosaic law and observed it faithfully, but failed to grasp the principles of the gospel because they did not comply with the condition of simple faith which Jesus imposed.

Babes — The disciples of Jesus were thus characterized because of their acceptance of the gospel by simple faith. In contrast with the learned doctors of the law, they were ignorant men. The implication is that if the erudite interpreters of the law are to become disciples of Jesus, they must approach him with the same simple faith as his humble followers.

27. All things have been delivered unto me of my Father—In verse 25 Jesus has declared that the Father is Lord of heaven and earth, which serves to reveal the nature of the things committed unto him by God. At the creation Christ was given supreme power over the universe, and even during his earthly existence he exercised his authority in some degree (John 3. 35; 13. 3; 17. 2), while after the resurrection full authority was again restored with all its accompanying glory (Matt. 28.18). The possession of such power by Christ verifies the assumption of John (1. 3) and the Epistles (Col. 1. 16-17) that he is the creator and sustainer of the universe. The phrase involves the consciousness of Jesus of his existence with the Father before his earthly advent and the fullness of his revelation and authority.

No one knoweth the Son—No one is fully able to recognize or understand the Son except the Father. This is especially true since Jesus enjoyed personal fellowship with the Father from the beginning (John 1. 2).

To whomsoever the Son willeth to reveal him—One phase of the mission of Jesus was to make known the character of God to men. He, as Son, alone has the power to do this, and he will reveal him only to those whom he deems worthy.

28. Come unto me—The invitation represents Christ as Mediator between God and men, and as having all the necessary authority to relieve them of their burdens. The section which these words introduce is peculiar to Matthew.

Rest—Refreshment.

29. My yoke—The figure is that of an ox drawing a heavy load which is lightened by another sharing the yoke. The yoke is made for two, thus Jesus shares the burdens of his disciples.

30. Easy—Rather, kindly; it does not chafe. As compared with the ordinances prescribed by the law, the programme of Jesus was exceedingly simple. He was also a sympathetic teacher, having none of the harshness and arrogance of the Pharisees and scribes.

POTATO ROT.

(Potato Blight.)

(By Dr. J. B. Dandeno, Bowmanville.)

Potato blight is the most serious disease which affects the potato. It is usually first noticed in August and on cool, wet seasons. When the season is favorable to the growth of this fungus the whole crop is generally destroyed, and many farmers think there is no remedy, simply let them rot in the field. The disease has made its appearance in this locality this year, and it is with a view towards saving the crop that this note is published, because the crop can be saved if taken in time.

Life History of the Fungus.—This fungus is a parasite which attacks chiefly the leaves of potatoes, and later on, the tubers. It produces spores in great abundance on the greyish structures developed on the surface of potato leaves. These spores are transferred from plant to plant by any motion, such as wind or cultivation. In a few days, if the weather be damp a whole field may become infested. The destruction is very rapid. Many of the spores are washed into the soil and if they come into contact with the tubers these are liable to infection, and when once infected a rotten tuber is the result.

Appearance.—The fungus appears first on the leaves as a grey, downy substance, on the under side of the leaf. This changes the leaf quickly (a few hours) to a dirty, brown color at first, not crisp, but flabby and wilted. The disease has been called "downy mildew" because of its appearance.

Remedy—As soon as the disease appears on the leaves prepare to harvest the crop. There is no direct remedy. Some potato growers cut down the tops with a mower and rake up to burn. This does not always save the crop, although it prevents further infection from the leaves and will check the influence of the rot to a certain extent until the potatoes are harvested. Of course the potatoes are not yet fully mature, and premature digging is not the best method of harvesting, but it is much better than losing the crop, which will undoubtedly result if the tubers are left in the ground.

When the crop is harvested, market them if possible. If not possible or not convenient the tubers should be dried thoroughly in the sun, then spread out on the barn floor and sprinkled over with slaked lime. They should be covered over to keep out the light, because sunlight causes a bitter taste.

Summary.—Glance over the crop every day, and at the first signs dig the crop. When once the tubers commence to rot it is too late. Those farmers who use a good fungicide, as bordeaux or lime-sulphur along with the Paris green or arsenate of lead, will not be troubled with the "Rot." If you can not recognize the disease from the above description send freshly diseased leaves to those who can.

DON'T GET UP IN A HURRY.

Don't jump up the first thing your eyes are open. Remember that while you sleep the vital organs are at rest. The vitality is lowered and the circulation not so strong. A sudden spring out of bed is a shock to these organs, especially to the heart, as it starts pumping the blood suddenly. Don't be in such a hurry. Stretch and yawn and yawn and stretch. Stretch the arms and legs, stretch the whole body. A good yawn and stretch is better even than a cold bath. Take time. It will keep you young and add years to your life.

ANXIOUS TO PLEASE.

Shopper (after thirty minutes' inspection of the stock)—Well, I don't intend to buy to-day. I was just looking for a friend.

Tired Clerk—Well, please wait a moment, madam. There is one more blanket left on the shelf. Maybe you'll find your friend in it.

THURSDAY, SEPT. 12, '12

This is a land of surprise. A subscriber seven years in arrears gave us a call the other day. He got five cents worth of old newspapers on ten months' credit, or six per cent off for cash on furnishing approved joint notes. He took the credit.—Watford Guide-Advocate.

Little Dutch cards tell you some facts, for they say:—"If you want to get in the swim, you must plunge"—That means to the merchant who wishes to prosper in selling his goods, he must get in de shwim and advertise what he has to sell, keep his goods before the public and give the farmers and townfolk a chance to buy at home.

Do you ever try to realize how big a country this Ontario of ours is? Here are a few facts worth thinking over as you look at a map of the province. It extends nearly twelve hundred miles from east to west and over a thousand miles from south to north. The northernmost point of Ontario is as far north of Toronto as New Orleans is south. The "clay belt" of Northern Ontario (which is practically all a splendid country for farming) is larger than the whole of old Ontario. The whole province is over three times the area of Great Britain and Ireland; is almost exactly twice as large as France, and is almost twice as large as the Empire of Germany. Inside the territory of Ontario could be got all six of the New England States—Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, and Connecticut, and Empire state of New York, the great states of Pennsylvania, Michigan, Illinois and North and South Dakota, and yet room would be left for the State of New Jersey.

A condition is never so bad but what it might be worse. The forty-day rain in Ontario has caused no little concern among farmers as to the outcome of the harvest. Many have given up hope of saving the grain crop in even passably good condition. Farmers who have their wheat in stook, as not a few have are confronted with sprouted grain, and a yield that will be of little use other than for feed. The oat crop, too, which promised to be a good one, is also seriously injured, and the outlook generally, so far as Ontario's grain harvest is concerned, is not the brightest. But there is a bright side to the situation after all. Not for many years have pastures looked so well at this time of the year as this season. There is good succulent food in abundance for stock in most places, and the fall should be a very successful one on the feed score. The after grass from meadows and grain fields, seeded in the spring is most luxuriant. The second crop of clover was never better than this season. This will mean increased feed supply or bigger yields of clover seed if it comes to maturity. On the whole therefore, the outlook for the Ontario farmer is not all dark and gloomy. At this distance it looks as if the farmer will begin the winter with his supply of fodder and feed of all kinds larger than it has been for some years back. Of course it will be some time yet before the yield of corn and roots can be estimated with exactness. Just now these crops give promise of a good yield in most places. Ontario is a stockman's country more than it is a grain country, and if the feed bin is full it overflowing the farmer's position is not altogether one to be pitied.

CHARATER IN THE BACK

Have you ever noticed that the back views of men and women are intensely characteristic of the persons? Then look carefully at the very ordinary young man who has passed you. He has one hand in his pocket, and shoulders slightly stooped. From what you can see of him, his head is bent, and every now and again he gives an aimless little kick at some object in his path. What back view could be more eloquent of indecision of character? Now glance at the receding back of the man who has passed you by. Why does it fill you with an instinctive sense of reliability? Because there is strength in it, not necessarily physical, but mental. The back is straight and alert. The head is held well back, the arms swing easily, and the walk is buoyant confident, hopeful. Now direct your gaze across the street a moment. There goes a girl who, under a cursory scrutiny looks the personification of what wealth can do. Walk behind her a little way, and take good stock of the back view presented to you. You soon discover that the end of a fringe net hangs down onto the coat collar. The collar of the blouse is done up with a large pin. The middle seam of the skirt is not in its place. There is a hole in the stocking just above the ankle, and the shoes, in spite of being expensive, need repairing. Evidently the wearer is an untidy, shiftless woman.

A WEST HURON TRUSTEES ASSOCIATION

A number of Trustees' Associations have been formed in different parts of Ontario. It has been felt by many that a Trustees Association for West Huron would give our schools an uplift. With this object in view Trustees met and decided to call a meeting to be held in the Collegiate Institute Goderich, on Thursday, Sept. 26th, commencing at 1.30 p.m. to which all schoo. Trustees, are invited, for the purpose of organizing a Trustees' Association for this inspectorate.

The announcement will be found, on page 11 of the West Huron Teachers' Institute program, a copy of which has been sent to the teacher to be given to the Secretary of the School Board.

It is only by united action that Trustees will secure those changes which they believe will benefit their children and other schools. If at least one representative from each School Board, attends the meeting on the 26th inst., a strong Association may be formed whose influence will be felt in education al matters throughout the district, and will give greater uniformity and satisfaction in the management of the schools. STEPHEN

Died Suddenly.—A very sudden and unexpected death occurred in this township on Friday morning last, when Mrs. Sarah Dorrell, who has of late been residing with her daughter, Mrs. John J. Cornish, on the 4th Con., passed away without a moment's warning. The deceased had been assisting her daughter in the household duties and had sat down for a few moments, when she was suddenly seized with a pain in the region of the heart and expired in a few moments, heart failure being the cause of death. The deceased was a native of England, coming to Canada with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Westcott, when quite young, and the greater part of her life has been spent in this neighborhood, the early part of her life having been spent in Usborne and the latter in Stephen. Mrs. Dorrell was a lady of many good parts, kind and affectionate, and much beloved by her many friends. She is survived by one daughter Mrs. John J. Cornish of Stephen, and one sister, Mrs. Humphrey Dayman, of Whitewood, Man., and two brothers, James and Christopher of the West. The funeral took place to the Exeter cemetery on Sunday last.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials.

The Explanation.

Robert Henri, the artist, said in New York of a bogus "old master:"

"Some of these experts must be very ignorant, judging from the facility with which they are duped. They must be ready to swallow anything. It's like the Velasques story.

"An auctioneer, you know, put up the picture, saying:

"'Here we are, ladies and gentlemen—this exquisite Velasques—"Battle of Waterloo." What am I bid? One million nine hundred thousand'—

"'But,' interrupted an expert in a puzzled voice—'but I thought Velasquez died before the battle of Waterloo?'

"'So he did, sir,' explained the auctioneer, 'so he did, but this, you see, is one of dear old Velly's posthumous works.'"—New York Tribune.

"Barber's Music."

Barbers in the old days might well charge heavily, for theirs must have been a nerve racking existence. Zitherns were provided instead of newspapers, and customers used to strum on these while waiting for a vacant chair. Dekker, writing early in the seventeenth century, refers to "a barber's cittern for every man to play on." The term "barber's music" was a common one in the days of Pepys, who on June 5, 1660, records, "After supper my lord called for the lieutenant's cittern, and with two candlesticks, with money in them for symballs, we made barber's music, with which my lord was very well pleased."—London Standard.

Curt and Concise.

A certain surly old Yankee who runs a small summer hotel on the Massachusetts coast once received a rambling letter from a prospective guest, who wrote to engage "two large, sunny rooms overlooking the ocean and connecting with private bath." One may imagine the lady's surprise at getting the following curt reply: "Dear Madam—All rooms face the ocean, and that's your bath."—Lippincott's.

Something to Try.

Tweed & Cheviot, tailors, wrote to Livingstone Bigfront as follows:

"We must have something on account by Saturday next. What can we count on?"

And Mr. Bigfront promptly replied, "Ever try an adding machine?"

GOLD ON A BIG SHIP

How Bullion In Transit Is Guarded on an Ocean Liner.

LOCKED IN ROOMS OF STEEL.

After the Treasure Is Safely Stowed Away There Is Little Danger of Its Being Stolen During the Voyage. Shipping and Checking the Kegs.

The natural assumption would be that in the safeguarding of the treasure which the various countries are constantly sending one another by the big ocean liners there would be required the vigilance of many men. This, however, is not generally the case, since, once the gold is stored away in the rooms set apart for that purpose on the big ships and the vessel is well out at sea, no armed guards are necessary.

Taking the specific case of one liner sailing under the British flag, we find that it has two strong rooms, the smaller of the two being in close proximity to the captain's office. This one compartment has no doubt sheltered gold enough to pay the cost of the liner many times over. The walls, the roof and the ceiling are lined with two inch steel plate, and the room contains nothing in the way of fixtures save shelving. The locks, which are of the double variety, are rendered still more secure by steel hasps covering the keyholes, and they are provided with massive padlocks. The strong rooms, being in the most frequented portion of the vessel, where persons are passing them at all hours of the day and night, thus receive the best protection, after all. There are two sets of keys, one of which is retained by the agent in charge of the consignment of gold and the other of which remains with the captain.

In the case of the British vessel mentioned there is another and larger specie room, situated next to the provision department. This is about twelve feet in length by four in width. It frequently happens that both strong rooms are filled to their utmost capacity, and on one occasion this liner carried some $50,000,000 in gold bullion packed in small kegs bound with steel hoops.

Gold usually is brought to the vessel on which it is to be shipped the day before the date of sailing, and it is stored away carefully before passengers embark. It arrives at the pier in ordinary trucks under the guard of armed men. The customary method of getting the gold on board is to haul the kegs up an inclined chute to the deck by means of a hoisting engine, but this method is not followed invariably. Sometimes each keg is placed in a sling and carried on board by men detailed for this service.

The receipt given by the steamship company sets forth that so many kegs have been received for shipment, not for any stated amount of gold to the value of so much. The kegs bear the government seal in many instances, and in such cases, when they have been safely put in the strong room, the iron doors thereof are sealed with government wax, the impression being broken only when the official on the other side comes to receive the gold. The kegs are checked thrice—when they are taken from the trucks, when they reach the gangway and when they are placed in the strong room.

Although no armed guard stands by the strong room, two men watch the room constantly so long as the ship is in sight of land. As a matter of fact, there is little danger of any one stealing gold in transit on a ship. It would be necessary that he should shoulder a keg weighing some 200 pounds and vanish with it without being seen. Masters of vessels declare gold is the safest cargo of any to handle.

The total weight of one consignment of gold shipped by the British vessel in question amounted to something like 36,000 pounds, or sixteen tons, and the freight charges amounted to $12,000, or, roughly speaking, one-eighth of 1 per cent. Specie thus shipped is insured at its full value.—New York Press.

Mark Twain's Profanity.

William Dean Howells read the "Tom Sawyer" manuscript and thought it the best story he had ever read. Clemens consulted him regarding the use of a certain vigorous expletive. Howells advised that it be cut out. Clemens wrote back:

Mrs. Clemens received the mail this morning, and the next minute she lit into the study with danger in her eyes and this demand on her tongue: "Where is the profanity Mr. Howells speaks of?" Then I had to miserably confess that I had left it out when reading the MS. to her. Nothing but almost inspired lying got me out of this scrape with my scalp. Does your wife give you rats like that when you go a little one sided?—Harper's.

Odorless.

"Now, children," said the teacher, "who can tell me what the word 'odorless' means?"

Willie Jones was sure he knew.

"Well, Willie, what does it mean?"

"Odorless means without a scent," he piped.

"Right. Now who can give a sentence using the word correctly?" continued the teacher. "You may answer, Jimmie."

"Please, ma'am, when you are odorless you cannot ride in the trolley cars."—Youth's Companion

FOREST.—Harry Payne, aged 12, driver for Mahler Bros., was instantly killed Sept. 3, by being crushed under a heavy load of apple boxes which he had just loaded onto his wagon from a G. T. R. car. His team became frightened and ran away. Payne was thrown heavily to the ground, the rig passing over him. He lived only a few moments, after being picked up.

SEAFORTH—Mrs. A. W. Bleasdell of Fernie, B. C., died on Thursday morning at the home of her sister, Mrs. A. Young, in this town. She has been here since early in May and has been confined to bed ever since. Mrs. Bleasdell was the second daughter of the late Alexander Wilson of Silver Creek and a sister of Mrs. A. Young and Messrs. Robert and Alex. Wilson of Seaforth.

SEAFORTH—A very pretty matrimonial event was solemnized at the home of Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Stiles, Wilson street on Tuesday, when Miss Lucy Stiles, sister of Mr. Stiles was united in marriage with Mr. Archibald Miller of Bayonne, New Jersey.

CLINTON—License Inspector Johnson, of Centre Huron, is determined to have a rigid enforcement of the liquor law. Yesterday he was in Brussels and secured several convictions through Magistrate Leckie. Charles Meadows, Louis Bosan and John Rose, three listers were each fined $10.00 and costs for breaches of the act. Harry James, of the American Hotel, Brussels, was assessed $25 and cost for supplying liquor to an Indian," and Cliff Watson, of the Graham House, Clinton, contributed $10 and costs for selling liquor to an intoxicated man.

A WOMAN'S GOOD LOOKS

Depend on her general health and freedom from pain. Many a woman looks old before her time because of those irregularities which are essentially feminine. Starting from early womanhood, she suffers from frequently recurring derangements that upset her womanly health. If she be beautiful she grows into that mellow age without wrinkles and crowfeet about the eyes or the blue circles underneath. It is invariably the rule that such women suffer little, or not at all, from womanly derangements which sap the health and leave in the face the tell-tale story of pain and suffering. Dr. R. V. Pierce, the famous specialist in the diseases of women, found a prescription in his early practice that soothed the organism peculiar to womanhood—oiled the machinery, as it were, of the human system—and helped the woman to pass those painful periods that scar-lined and aged her face. This remedy became the well-known Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, that has benefited thousands of women and saved them from misery and suffering at different periods in life.

MRS. PIERCE.

MRS. HARKELY E. PIERCE, of 244 Bright Street, Sarnia, Ont., writes: "I am now a well woman after suffering for three years and doctoring with several different doctors, each one saying it was something different, and the last one, after putting me through a thorough examination, said I was suffering from a growth, which, in time, would result in cancer, and said I would not live more than two years if not operated upon right away. I became hopelessly discouraged but would not consent to the operation as I was too weak and too much afraid, but at last, through the advice of a friend, I tried Dr. Pierce's medicines, and after using two bottles of the 'Favorite Prescription' I immediately felt a change. I also used two boxes of 'Healing Suppositories' and eight boxes of 'Lotion Tablets,' and can safely praise the name of Dr. Pierce's medicines to all who suffer from any female disease, for these medicines are all they are claimed to be, and I hope will help others as they have helped me."

SHIPPING PROBLEM SOLVED

Unbroken and Unbreakable Line Round the World —Gigantic Scheme of Empire Interest

A despatch from London, England, says: The Daily Telegraph of Thursday morning gave prominence to the communication of a correspondent whose opinion should carry some weight and who is in close touch with the financial situation. "The financial papers," he declares, "have been at great pains in endeavoring to explain the causes of the recent fluctuations in shipping shares, but they have struck wide of the mark." After referring to Premier Borden's visit, he says: "It is not necessary for all the chief members of the Cabinet to spend their holidays together without some real reason. We may rely upon this, that the shipping problem between the Mother Country and the various colonies has been thoroughly thrashed out. We are on the eve of a statement from some authoritative person who will propound a new theory as regards the relations between this country and the dependencies. It forms a part of the naval scheme, and has for its ultimate object the linking up of the colonies with the heart of the Empire.

"The British Government must control, or nominally control, all shipping whose chief ports are in this country. It is a gigantic scheme, but when the various amalgamations which have taken place and those which are propounded are fully gone into it will be seen that the shipping of this Kingdom forms an unbroken and unbreakable line round the world, guarded by the greatest navy ever known in history."

MAKING SAFE INVESTMENTS

SPECULATION VERSUS GAMBLING.

Speculation in the True Meaning of the Word Takes Time—Buying on Tips Dangerous—Few Speculators—Some Essential Points of Difference.

The articles contributed by "Investor" are for the sole purpose of guiding prospective investors, and, if possible, of saving them from losing money through placing it in "wild-cat" enterprises. The impartial and reliable character of the information may be relied upon. The writer of these articles and the publisher of this paper have no interests to serve in connection with this matter other than those of the reader.

(By "Investor.")

The other day a man said to me, "It's all very well for you to talk about the dangers of speculation. Just because a few men lose money you condemn the whole game. It's just as reasonable to suggest closing all drug stores because a few men buy poison and kill themselves, or to condemn apple pie because some people eat too much and suffer as a consequence. You're partly right, and in your enthusiasm you condemn wholesale."

In the first place, I do not condemn speculation. Speculation and gambling are two entirely different things, yet the word speculation has come to have a meaning with the public which is synonomus with gambling in stocks. In speculation one studies the situation, and having taken the pros and cons into consideration, buys some security which should advance in value over a course of a few years. A gambler buys a stock because the market is strong, and it should advance a few points in a few days. The former takes an intelligent business chance; the latter—well he just gambles.

Most people who dabble in the stock market are gamblers, because they merely follow the "dope sheets" and jump in and out, scalping a point here and losing a point there. Such men, in about 95 cases out of 100, eventually lose all they have put up, and sometimes all they have. The average man in a commercial business is a speculator. He buys something people want and figures to sell it to them at a price greater than he paid for it. But if he were to go along a street and see a car load of lumber and buy it without first examining it to see if it were sound and not all culls; without first figuring on whether he wasn't paying more than the lumber was worth, and without enquiring whether there was any demand for lumber, he would be gambling. And that is just exactly what most so-called speculators do in the stock market.

A man looked at the quotations in the paper last year and saw Black Lake Asbestos preferred stock selling around sixty, let us say. He sees it is a seven per cent. dividend payer. It looks cheap; other seven per cent. shares are selling at about par. Why it's a great opportunity. He buys, and in a few months can't give it away. Had he been a speculator he would have studied the situation surrounding that special security, and so would have known that the market for asbestos had all "gone to pot." That the company was doing business at a loss and the prospects for its earning enough to pay the interest on its bonds were very slim. "But," you say, "to do that takes too much time, and I can't afford to spend much time in that sort of thing."

Quite so. Speculation takes so much of a man's time that very few people are in a position to speculate. Sometimes a man comes in contact with some large corporation in the way of business, and gets to know all about its business and prospects. He may, from his observations, have reason to believe that the company is growing rapidly in prosperity and prestige. He buys the stock, puts it away and wakes up some morning a year or two later to find that he has made a nice profit. He has speculated, but if he had not taken advantage of his opportunities he would certainly never have found the time necessary for getting together all the information essential to intelligent speculation in the stock of that particular company, or of any other.

It isn't the scanty information one gleans from the financial pages of the daily press that enables one to speculate intelligently. That amounts to little more than scraps of news to egg on the stock gambler. First hand study and hard work are the prime essentials for the successful speculator. Few people can give enough of their time to this sort of thing, yet, unless they do, they are foredoomed to failure.

"Speculation is dangerous," as the Irishman said, "because people don't speculate." They gamble, and that is the height of folly.

WHOOPING-COUGH RAGING.

Fifty-four Deaths in Toronto in Five Months.

A despatch from Toronto says: Whooping-cought has carried off fifty-four children in this city in the past five months. There were fourteen deaths from this disease last month alone: six in July, fourteen in June, eleven in May, and nine in April. In the past five months there have been thirty-two deaths from scarlet fever, usually regarded as a much more dangerous disease than whooping-cough. Dr. Hastings, City Medical Health Officer, advises prompt precautions in cases of whooping-cough, which he regards as an exceedingly dangerous thing.

FATAL AERIAL MANOEUVRES.

Two More British Army Officers Were Killed.

A despatch from Stevenage, England, says: Two more British army officers lost their lives while flying on Friday. Capt. Patrick Hamilton had taken Lieut. Stewart with him as a passenger in his biplane. The two officers had flown for a considerable time, when a strong wind suddenly sprang up, and in endeavoring to make a headway against it one of the wings of the aeroplane collapsed. The machine fell to the ground from an altitude of 250 feet and was completely destroyed. The bodies of the two officers were found in the wreck.

ARTHUR OF CONNAUGHT.

Rumored That He May Be Created Duke of York.

A despatch from London says: The Pall Mall Gazette of Friday evening states that Prince Arthur of Connaught will receive a signal honor in the shape of a Dukedom on his return from Japan. It is probable the title, which will carry a seat in the House of Lords, will be the Duke of Kent.

AUGUST SHOWED INCREASE.

The Ontario Succession Duties Advanced $5,000.

A despatch from Toronto says: Succession duties received by the Ontario Government for August this year totalled $49,340.26, which is $5,299.20 in excess of receipts for August, 1911. For the past ten months up to August 31, the dues from succession totals $670,546.41. During the first ten months last year $891,294.37 was received, showing a decrease in the present year so far of $220,747.96.

THE WEIGHING OF CHEESE

Producers Complain that No Allowance is Made for Overweight.

A despatch from Kingston says: The members of the Royal Commission appointed to enquire into the complaints received by the Department of Agriculture, relative to the alleged unfairness in the methods followed in weighing butter and cheese, opened their session in the City Council Chambers on Thursday afternoon. Those who appeared before the commission strongly advocated the appointment of an official Government referee to act at Montreal in cases where disputes arose over short weight. The present system, they claimed, was unfair to the producer, who was charged for cheese that was under weight and was allowed nothing for cheese that was over weight. They invited an inspection of their scales, which the commission said would be made. Some of those who gave evidence could assign no reason for shortage in weight, but others said that the shipping of cheese that was too young might be the cause. Dr. Edwards, who was instrumental in having the Government appoint the commission, was in attendance, and explained that he did not charge dishonesty in the weighing at Montreal, but thought that rules were very unfair.

The commission will meet in Cornwall on the 13th of September and then adjourn for several weeks.

So far as known, only one man lost his life. LIFEBOATS FOR ALL.

British Board of Trade at Last Revises Its Rules.

A despatch from London says: As an outcome of the Titanic inquiry the Board of Trade has issued revised rules for increasing the safety of lives at sea. The rules become effective on Jan. 1, 1913. They provide that foreign-going passenger steamships and emigrant ships and foreign-going sailing ships carrying passengers shall be required to furnish lifeboat accommodation for all on board. The lifeboat equipment, which has been increased, must be in the boats as soon as the ship leaves the harbor and there remain throughout the voyage. The number of persons to be carried in each boat must be marked on it.

TORONTO CORRESPONDENCE

INTERESTING GOSSIP FROM THE CAPITAL OF ONTARIO.

After the Exhibition—Imperialism at the Fair—The City's Counsel—The Civic Abbatoir.

The week following Exhibition finds Toronto with something of the "morning after" feeling. The streets, bereft of their flags and bunting, and their immense throngs of people seem by comparison dull and deserted. And there is a noticeable reaction in most lines of trade, both retail and wholesale. The two weeks of Exhibition are probably as active in the retail district as any in the whole year. So profitable is every day that many of the largest stores have given up the idea of observing Labor Day, which comes in the middle of the fortnight as a holiday, but keep their staffs at their posts to cater to the great numbers who find it a convenient day to shop. Those who cater particularly for an out-of-town trade take care, too, that they offer bargains sufficiently valuable to attract further business during the year. This, of course, doesn't do the out-of-town merchant any good, but he has some measure of revenge when Toronto shoppers in turn go off to Buffalo or New York to make purchases, which generally never meet the eye of the customs officials on the border.

For the wholesalers the period, too, was one of unprecedented briskness. Many of them kept their offices open day and night.

FARMERS DIDN'T TURNOUT.

The exhibition authorities have to admit that this year the attendance of farmers was not up to previous records. For this the phenomenally bad weather and late season is made to bear the blame. But on the whole the attendance was remarkable. Jupiter Pluvius did his worst and failed. The Labor Day attendance, breaking all records on a day which did not have a glint of sunshine, and with the rain sometimes coming down in torrents, was particularly astounding. Of course it has to be borne in mind that Toronto, according to the figures of the Assessment Department now coming in, has 35,000 more people of its own than it had this time last year. It is difficult to realize how fast the place is growing. The increase of a single year is greater than the whole population of most of the other cities of the Province, and as great as the population of a good sized county. Whether this rapid concentration of population is an altogether unmixed blessing for the rest of the Province is a question which will bear serious consideration.

But Torontonians are whole-heartedly proud of their Fair. There used to be a disposition in some circles to regard it rather disdainfully. All that has passed now. And with rigid adherence to the truth it can be said that the Exhibition of 1912 surpassed all previous efforts. In nearly every department there was a noticeable sprucing up, and there were several new feautres.

STRONG ON IMPERIALISM.

The distinctive note was probably the tinge of Imperialism that was injected. There were cadets from all parts of the Empire, Newfoundland, New Zealand, Australia, England and Ireland giving daily exhibitions and nightly forming into a living flag. There was the Kings uncle. There were the bands from the mother land. And the siege of Delhi from India as a nightly spectacle.

All this was deliberately planned, for those in charge of the Exhibition's fortunes are ardent Imperialists. It cost $40,000 to bring the cadets. The bands cost $12,000 more. And it was probably not by accident that many of the speeches at the directors' luncheons echoed the alarms of war.

Those who are not in active sympathy with the propaganda were inclined to ask what was the connection between these sentiments and a purely industrial and agricultural exhibition, which might be supposed to glorify, if anything would, the blessings of peace.

A $15,000 JOB A-BEGGING.

The resumption of activity in municipal politics after the summer holidays found the most pressing issue to be the question of the city counsel appointment. The refusal of Mr. T. G. Meredith to accept the position hastily offered him left just a little shamefacedness. To have a $15,000 Toronto job turned down cold was just a trifle humiliating. But no doubt the receiving of the offer did not hurt Mr. Meredith. He has a comfortable home in London, and at sixty a man does not lightly sever the connections of a lifetime.

With the ground cleared for a local man, the question on everyone's lips was, "Will Mayor Geary get it?" He himself said no word, but, of course, at the salary, or even half the salary, it is a position that would attract any young lawyer. The criticism of Mayor Geary's chances arose partly from the fact that he has not devoted much time to law. Politics has been his forte. On the other hand he had to recommend him an exceptional knowledge of current municipal problems.

An arrangement by which Mayor Geary would succeed Mr. Drayton as City Counsel, Controller Church as member of the Hydro Electric Commission, leaving the field comparatively clear for Controller Hocken as the next Mayor, was spoken of as the "deal" that was under way. And people are not generally enthusiastic about "deals."

TO HEAD OFF CIVIC ABBATOIR.

The proposal of the city to spend a third of a million dollars on a civic abbatoir and cattle market extension drew a skilful open letter from the Harris Abbatoir Company, which offers the city a free site and a seat on the Board of Directors if it would abandon its old base of operations and move out to the Union Stock Yards at West Toronto. The supporters of the civic scheme were inclined to regard this offer as simply an indication that the private packing interests feared the effect of the city's plan, and wanted to head it off, and it was promptly turned down. Despite the frank statement of low profits on the part of the packing companies it is probably stating the situation fairly to say that in this vital line of food supply the public regards the private interests with some suspicion. Consequently, it is likely that for weal or for woe the city will go ahead with its ambitious plan for the sake of ensuring competition as far as possible in the meat trade.

BIG MONEY IN SUBURBAN FARMS.

The prosperity of Toronto is at all events extending some distance out into the surrounding country. A concrete example will illustrate. Ten years ago a farmer without means rented 100 acres about 20 miles from Toronto. He took a long lease, but at the end of four years had made sufficient progress to buy. He paid $8,000, which seemed a big price in those days. He devoted himself to market gardening and small fruits. The labor problem was an obstacle, but he had a fairly large family that he was able to keep at home, and he was resourceful in getting help, so that often he had as many as fifteen men, women and children in his fields in the busy season.

The wet weather this year has just suited his sandy soil, and he has never had such a successful season. At the moment he is busy marketing his green corn. He has been selling it since the first of August, but just now it is at its best. On one day he sent to Toronto 1,200 dozen—14,400 ears. For the last week his receipts from corn alone were $700. And corn is but one of his products. He has refused $40,000 for his 100 acres, a figure, no doubt, fixed by speculation, and by the desire of wealthy citizens to secure country homes, but he calculates that the farm is still worth more than that to him as a going concern. A fair return he has for ten years work, even if it has been hard work. Many men in gold mining cannot show anything like the record. It's a pity that all the farmers of Ontario have not shared in this man's prosperity.

THE BALL TEAM'S GLORY.

With the Toronto baseball team holding on to the leadership in the International League by its eyebrows the Toronto fan—the real dyed-in-the-wool kind—was in a querulous mood. Convinced that the 1912 aggregation was the finest baseball team that ever appeared in this league, he thought that their place was far out in front of the race. So, whenever the team lost a game, and particularly on the day it lost both ends of a double header to Rochester, he was not particularly pleased if told that the team that played the best ball won.

The great rally of the team in the latter half of the season in which they came from sixth place to the top was a splendid piece of work, and raised a load from the fans' heart, because he had just about given up hope. It is said that previous to the rally the owners and management talked to the players in pretty plain terms. This talk, assisted by the acquisition of two or three big league pitchers, Kent, Drucke and Maxwell, seemed to have a marvellous effect, and the team immediately started on its winning streak. But there is not much left of the pitching staff that began the season, and in this respect the early criticisms were all justified. Nor is the play in the field always of the gilt-edged variety. Nor is the team exceptionally speedy on the bases. The one department it has shone in has been batting. Nearly every man has developed into an old-fashioned slugger, and most of their victories have been won, not by keeping the other fellows score down, but by running up a score on their own account.

Probably the player who has acquired the most popularity during the season is Benny Meyer. For several seasons he has been used as a spare man by various teams, and came to Toronto in that capacity. But he has hit like a fiend, run wild on the bases and developed fairly well in the field, so that he has made a place for himself among the regulars.

35,000 MEN DISTRIBUTED

More are Needed for Harvest in the West, But the Weather Is Helping.

A despatch from Winnipeg says: Thirty-five thousand harvesters have actually been distributed over the wheat fields, is the statement made by J. Bruce Walker on Thursday morning in answer to a query whether 25,000 harvesters had reached the city during the harvesters' excursions.

"We needed fifty thousand, and the demand cannot be supplied this year. The weather conditions are helping matters considerably, as the crops are not all in a condition to be reaped. In the sections where the crops are ready the harvesters are all busy, and when the other districts are ready I am going to urge the railroads to provide transportation for harvesters who finished to the points where most help is needed. It is the only way left for us now in order to save thousands and thousands of dollars for the farmers. Of course, out of the large number of men who came from the east on harvesters' tickets a large number never saw fields, and just took advantage of the cheap rate to the west. Next year we must overcome this in some way and have the harvesters selected in the east before our crop is ready. Just how this can be done the future will unfold."

REWARD FOR JACK BENNETT.

Attorney-General's Department Offers the Sum of $200.

A despatch from Brantford says: A reward of $200 has been offered for the capture of Jack Bennett, wanted here for the murder of Emily Antone at Middleport a few weeks ago. The reward is offered by the Attorney-General's Department.

SHOT WIFE IN QUARREL.

Peterboro Man Feigned Sleep When Later Arrested.

A despatch from Peterboro says: Following a quarrel in their home on Aylmer Street on Thursday morning, William Leal secured his rifle and shot his wife, the bullet striking the woman in the left cheek. He was arrested in his room feigning sleep. The woman will recover unless complications set in.

SEWAGE IN OTTAWA WATER.

Report of Engineers Regarding Intake Shows Bad Conditions.

A despatch from Ottawa says: The engineers who examined Ottawa water intake presented their report at the judicial enquiry on Wednesday. The document reveals conditions of a most shocking nature. Faulty construction is shown in the concrete work, and many joints of the steel pipe were found gaping widely, allowing sewage from a 12-inch sewer which parallels the clear water pipe to percolate in. Aside from this report, the most important evidence before Judge Gunn was that of the medical health officer, Dr. Shirreff. Although warned by the city bacteriologist at various periods from May to July that the water was showing signs of contamination, he did not issue the public warning against the use of the water until July 9, depending on increased doses of hydrochloric to purify it. The fever outbreak began on July 10.

The destruction of the house fly is a public duty. Almost every American State Board of Health is carrying on a crusade against him.

His filthy origin and habits, and the fact that his body is generally laden with disease-producing germs, makes him one of the greatest enemies of the human race.

If the housekeepers of Canada will use

WILSON'S FLY PADS

persistently, this peril will be tremendously reduced.

THINGS THEY DO IN SIAM.

Dote on Perfumes and Chew Tea, Instead of Drinking It.

Perfumery is extensively used in Siam, and eau de Cologne, Florida water, scented hair lotions and oils, face creams and cosmetics are in constant demand. German, French and English firms send out salesmen every year or six months to look after this trade. Few, if any, American perfumes are to be found on the Siamese market. The people here prefer jasmine, rose and violet scents.

Ordinary kerosene lamps are used in most Siamese houses outside of Bangkok, as only that city has electric lighting and coal is too expensive for use in producing illuminating gas. The greatest demand is for wall lamps, which are used in the thousands of houseboats which line the rivers and canals of Siam and in the homes of the peasants. Such lamps sell at 25 to 50 cents each, but, according to consular and trade reports, nearly every kind of lamp finds a sale in Siam. Only the most ordinary lamps are made in this country by the Chinese tinsmiths, the rest being imported.

Instead of being used as a beverage, the leaves of the tea plant, after being fermented, are rolled into balls, one of which is placed in the hollow of the cheek and allowed to remain there until the soluble contents have been exhausted by the saliva. This use of tea is common in northern Siam. The tea plant is cultivated to only a small extent, but is found wild on hill slopes. In lower Siam tea drinking is indulged in to a considerable extent, especially among the Chinese.

Most of the tobacco produced in Siam, about 3,000,000 pounds a year, valued at $500,000, is consumed at home, the exports last year amounting to only 10,267 lbs., most of which went to Hongkong. The tobacco leaf grown there is said to be of peculiarly fine texture and would probably displace foreign tobacco in the local markets if it were cured by modern methods.

At present the leaves are kept in the dark until partly dry, then folded lengthwise one upon another, cut into cross sections and exposed to the sun for a day or two, after which they are ready for consumption. One of the chief uses for tobacco in Siam is for cigarettes. A considerable quantity of native tobacco is mixed with areca nut and betel leaf and used for chewing, the imported tobacco never being used for this purpose.

Cured of Shingles and Eczema

Mr. J. H. Jarvis, Kingston

By Cuticura Soap and Ointment. Chest Raw, Bleeding and Itchy.

"I just want to say a good word for Cuticura Soap and Ointment. In November, 1909, I had what the doctors call shingles and eczema. My chest was raw and bleeding and itchy. I was that way all winter. It was not so bad in the summer. In September it got worse. I had the best doctors treating me, but did me no good, and I was all run down in health. In November, 1910, it got worse again. I sent to you for a sample cake of Cuticura Soap. You sent it to me and I got a box of Cuticura Ointment. I have used two boxes and on the third one it has cured me of shingles and eczema. I am delighted with them and do feel pleased to think I have something I have confidence in. Should anyone be suffering as I did, I hope that they will do as I did, and I am sure of the results. I am recommending them from experience." (Signed) J. H. Jarvis, 7 Ann St., Kingston, Ont., May 30, 1911.

For more than a generation Cuticura Soap and Cuticura Ointment have afforded the speediest and most economical treatment for itching, burning, scaly and bleeding skin and scalp humors, of young and old. A single set is often sufficient. Cuticura Soap and Ointment are sold throughout the world, but to those who have suffered much, lost hope and are without faith in any treatment, a liberal sample of each with 32-p. booklet on the skin will be mailed free, on application. Address Potter Drug & Chem. Corp., 135 Columbus Ave., Boston, U. S. A.

APHORISMS.

Many men who now are walking on the ties with itching feet, sacrificed, by too much talking, pleasant homes on Easy Street.

If your wife does daily labor to provide the kids with crusts, you cannot impress your neighbor with your views upon the trusts.

Love will grow in strength and ardor, Cupid wear his sweetest grin, where there's beefsteak in the larder and potatoes in the bin.

Mules are great; we praise them loudly; sing their virtues through the years, till they get swelled up, and proudly go to bragging of their ears.

When the tyrants grind our faces or upon our bodies walk, it's because we're keeping cases much too closely on the clock.

It is well that some are carving furrows on the fertile farm, for the country would be starving if we all viewed with alarm.

Mary had a woolly creature which achieved such lasting fame that it soon became a feature of the moving-picture game.

Truth is loaded down with shackles which she strives to break in vain; nearly every hen that cackles adds a fresh link to the chain.

Swat your children with no swatters; punishment has little sense; never whip your sons and daughters till you must in self-defense.

Probably a tiresome bore or something worse you will be called, if you sell a hair restorer while your dome of thought is bald.

A FOOD CONVERT.

Good Food the True Road to Health.

The pernicious habit some persons still have of relying on nauseous drugs to relieve stomach trouble, keeps up the patent medicine business and helps keep up the army of dyspeptics.

Indigestion—dyspepsia—is caused by what is put into the stomach in the way of improper food, the kind that so taxes the strength of the digestive organs they are actually crippled.

When this state is reached, to resort to tonics is liking whipping a tired horse with a big load. Every additional effort he makes under the lash diminishes his power to move the load.

Try helping the stomach by leaving off heavy, greasy, indigestible food and take on Grape-Nuts — light, easily digested, full of strength for nerves and brain, in every grain of it. There's no waste of time nor energy when Grape-Nuts is the food.

"I am an enthusiastic user of Grape-Nuts and consider it an ideal food," writes a Maine man:

"I had nervous dyspepsia and was all run down and my food seemed to do me but little good. From reading an advertisement I tried Grape-Nuts food, and, after a few weeks' steady use of it, felt greatly improved.

"Am much stronger, not nervous now, and can do more work without feeling so tired, and am better every way.

"I relish Grape-Nuts best with cream and use four heaping teaspoonfuls as the cereal part of a meal. I am sure there are thousands of persons with stomach trouble who would be benefited by using Grape-Nuts. Name given by Canadian Postum Co., Windsor, Ont. NEW USE FOR BAGPIPES.

Unscrupulous Milk Vendor Caught by Police.

For some time the French police have suspected a milk vendor, named Noziere, of watering his milk. Several times samples of milk which M. Noziere was delivering were submitted to the experts of the Paris Municipal Laboratory, and each time these were declared to contain a large proportion of water. The milk vendor protested his innocence, and even invited the police to witness the milking of his cows. This they did, but the "pure" milk samples which were taken away on these occasions were always found to be well-watered.

The solution of the problem was forthcoming the other day. An inspector called at M. Noziere's place quite unexpectedly and asked the vendor to milk a certain cow. The official, who kept a vigilant eye on the milker, noticed that he fumbled with his right hand in the vicinity of his waistcoat pocket.

"What are you doing?" asked the inspector. "Oh, it is only my braces that hurt me," answered the milk dealer; but in a second the inspector had unbuttoned the waistcoat and discovered there an ingenious contrivance of two small rubber pipes, connected with rubber bags containing water.

By the pressure of his elbow on the bags the unscrupulous vendor could, with but little risk of detection, add a considerable quantity of water to the milk pail.

There are probably no fish in the sea as large as those reported by anglers to have got away.

SUMMER COMPLAINTS KILL LITTLE ONES

At first signs of illness during the hot weather give the little ones Baby's Own Tablets, or in a few hours he may be beyond cure. These Tablets will prevent summer complaints if given occasionally to the well child and will promptly cure these troubles if they come on suddenly. Baby's Own Tablets should always be kept in every home where there are young children. There is no other medicine so good and the mother has the guarantee of a government analyst that they are absolutely safe. Mrs. Chas. Lapierre, Les Boules, Que., says:—"Baby's Own Tablets are the best medicine a mother can give her little ones and I always keep them in the house." The Tablets are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

THE CHEAPER PLAN.

"Eat six times a day if you would be healthy," is the advice offered by a doctor. Owing to the present cost of living it will be cheaper to pay doctor's bills.

"Yes," said Tom Poorman, "I've been invited to her wedding, but I'm not going." "But," urged his friend, "do you think you can afford to have your absence noticed?" "Better than I can afford to have my presents noticed. That's the trouble."

THE STOVE PIPE KIND.

"Skirts are to be fuller next season," remarked Mrs. Hillside.

"If I am any judge," said Hillside, "skirts are about full already."

Faultless in Preparation.—Unlike any other stomach regulator, Parmelee's Vegetable Pills are the result of long study of vegetable compounds calculated to stimulate the stomachic functions and maintain them at the normal condition. Years of use have proved their faultless character and established their excellent reputation. And this reputation they have maintained for years and will continue to maintain, for these pills must always stand at the head of the list of standard preparations.

HE WON'T GO FISHING.

Hon. William Harty, of Kingston, who has lived through a stormy political career and amassed a fortune in business, has a side to his nature which his closer friends may guess at, but can never entirely fathom. This is manifested chiefly in a hatred of physical cruelty. He is a hard fighter in a political campaign, but the infliction of suffering in any form, whether it affects man or animal, is his most bitter abhor-rence, and he will go far to prevent it. This humane tendency is carried even to the extent of refusing to go fishing, entailing as it would the sacrifice of living creatures for the sake of sport. Such a strange characteristic is not the result of any fad or some personal code, but is a natural outcome of a high sensitiveness to pain.

It Testifies for Itself.—Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil needs no testimonial of its powers other than itself. Whoever tries it for coughs or colds, for cuts or contusions, for sprains or burns, for pains in the limbs or body, well know that the medicine proves itself and needs no guarantee. This shows why this Oil is in general use.

"This is the third time you have been here for food," said the woman at the kitchen door, to the tramp. "Are you always out of work?" "Yes'm," replied the itinerant. "I guess I was born under a lucky star."

PAYMENT WAS SUSPENDED.

In a large suit lately tried the plaintiff had testified that his financial condition had always been a good one. The opposing counsel took him in hand for cross-examination and undertook to break down his testimony on this point.

"Have you ever been bankrupt?" asked the counsel.

"I have not."

"Now, be careful," admonished the lawyer, with raised finger. "Did you ever stop payment?"

"Yes."

"Ah! I thought we should get at the truth," observed counsel with an unpleasant smile. "When did this suspension of payment occur?"

"When I had paid all I owed."

TO REMOVE DUST FROM EYE.

Small substances like cinder dust, small chips of stone or metal can usually be removed from the eye by simple methods. If the common way of catching the upper lid by the lashes and pulling it away from the eyeball and down over the lower lid does not result in dislodging the particle, try this: Make a loop of horsehair and pass it under the lid. Sweep from the outer lid toward the nose and draw down. This will usually clean the eye. If it does not, the upper lid must be turned inside out, which is easy to do, and the particle, which can easily be seen now, removed with a soft handkerchief or piece of cotton.

A WONDERFUL DISCOVERY

An eminent scientist, the other day, gave his opinion that the most wonderful discovery of recent years was the discovery of Zam-Buk. Just think! As soon as a single thin layer of Zam-Buk is applied to a wound or a sore, such injury is insured against blood poison! Not one species of microbe has been found that Zam-Buk does not kill!

Then again. As soon as Zam-Buk is applied to a sore, or a cut, or to skin disease, it stops the smarting. That is why children are such friends of Zam-Buk.

Again. As soon as Zam-Buk is applied to a wound or to a diseased part, the cells beneath the skin's surface are so stimulated that new healthy tissue is quickly formed. This forming of fresh healthy tissue from below is Zam-Buk's secret of healing. This is why Zam-Buk cures are permanent.

Only the other day Mr. Marsh, of 101 Delorimer Ave., Montreal, called upon the Zam-Buk Co. and told them that for over twenty-five years he had been a martyr to eczema. His hands were at one time so covered with sores that he had to sleep in gloves. Four years ago Zam-Buk was introduced to him, and in a few months it cured him. To-day—over three years after his cure of a disease he had for twenty-five years—he is still cured.

All druggists sell Zam-Buk at 50c. box, or we will send free trial box if you send this advertisement and a 1c. stamp (to pay return postage). Address Zam-Buk Co., Toronto.

Impurities of the Blood Counteracted.—Impurities in the blood come from defects in the action of the liver. They are revealed by pimples and unsightly blotches on the skin. They must be treated inwardly, and for this purpose there is no more effective compound to be used than Parmelee's Vegetable Pills. They act directly on the liver and by setting up healthy processes have a beneficial effect upon the blood, so that impurities are eliminated.

BREAKING IT GENTLY.

Two very great friends—a Scotsman and an Englishman—met in the smoking-room of an hotel, and the Englishman at once proceeded to monopolise the conversation, as he usually did.

The Scotsman bore it for a long time, then he broke in quietly:

He paused, and then went on gently:

"And I wouldn't speak a single word the whole time!"

In every line of business the demand for labor is insistent. The farmers cannot get the help they need, manufacturers are behind with their orders from the same cause, and construction is being held lack by the inability of contractors to find men. He received the following reply.—"Old twenty-nine came down the line and killed your hog, we know; but razor-backs on railway tracks quite often meet with woe. Therefore, my friend we cannot send the cheque for which you pine. Just plant the dead, place o'er his head, "Here lies a foolish swine."

HICKS FORECASTS—A regular storm period is central on the 16th, covering the 15th to the 20th. The barometer will fall, temperature rise and renewed storms of rain and wind will pass eastwardly across the country during this period. Keep in mind that equatorial, or West India storms are probable at each or any of these September periods. The gulf coast regions should take special note of this fact. A sharp brief rise of the barometer, stiff gales and change to much cooler, will follow on western flanks of these storms. A reactionary storm period is coincident, with the centre of earth's autumnal equinox on the 21st, 22nd and 23rd. This period will, in a great measure, fill the time between the preceding and succeeding regular storm periods, causing a prolonged time of threatening weather, with many violent storm areas passing from west to east over the country in regular progressive order.

Clinton ball team put it over Exeter in the Friday evening game on the local diamond to the tune of 7-1. Tommy Carling, the Exeter pitcher, was a little off color for the first two or three innings and his support was very indifferent, with the result that Clinton had the game corraled in the early stage The latter part of the game was a better exhibition and worth seeing. Tommy had five strike-outs to his credit and Tasker for Clinton had four. The line up,—

DEATH.—Early Friday morning last the death occurred at her home, Main street, Exeter, of Mary Downs, wife of Mr. Frank Wright, blacksmith, in her 65th year. Deceased had been ill for about nine months of dropsy, and although the end came gradually it was no less surely. Early in life she resided in Bowmanville, where a brother and sister now live. She and Mr. Wright were married in Hensall and have resided in Exeter for the past 15 years. The funeral took place to the Exeter cemetery on Saturday afternoon.

Joe Craig was up from London this week.

Crystal City Man., Courier.—Mr. John Manning is the proud possessor of a most unique specimen of a potato, weighing 4 lbs, 6 oz., and having 15 projections. When questioned closely as to his part in the production of this enormity Mr. Manning admitted that he planted this seed and expected the Almighty to do his part, but when he (Mr. Manning had begun excavations in the potato hill it looked as if he had struck his winter supply of the humble but indispensable tuber.

Exeter Fall Fair.

Notwithstanding threatening probabilities for rain the Exeter Fair was a huge success, in point of attendance, exhibits and financially. The gate receipts amounted to about $575.00. Never in the history of the fair was there a keener competition in the horse rings, in both heavy and light horses, and the judges were many times at their wits end on their decisions. The cattle sheep and hogs were also well represented by a class of animals that speaks highly of the quality of stock raised in this community. The poultry comprised many excellent birds of merit and the root, vegetable and horticultural exhibits were of a very high order. The handiwork of the ladies formed a magnificent array and the competition was keen. A very noteworthy piece of mechanical art in the Palace was a parlor table made by Mr. Garnet Heywood of town, which reflects in a great degree the mechanical genius the maker possesses. The table is made up of 11,538 pieces of varied kinds of wood, the whole being beautifully designed and placed together in a way that makes it nothing short of a mechanical marvel. Mr. Heywood was upward of two and and a half years in building it.

The speeding contests were good, particularly the 2.40 trot, in which the Doll, Jack Hunter and The Rabbit made a good race.

During the first heat in the 240 class just as the horses were entering on the home stretch two of the horses clashed, with the result that the drivers were both hurled from their seats, and a general mixup ensued, and it looked at first as though serious damage would be done but luckily only one cart was damaged, that of C. Elber & Son.

The concert given in the Opera House, Fair night was well patronized, but the attendance would have been much larger had the weather been more favorable, the heavy rain preventing many from being present. Will J. White and Donald C. MacGregor both maintained their previous reputations. Mr. MacGregor, baritone, sang with remarkable effect and his songs won for him a pronounced triumph. Will J. White was indeed pleasing in all his selections. W. J. never fails to please in Exeter. To put it mildly he is real good. Miss Florence MacKay, makes an excellent accompanist, displaying remarkable musical ability.

Meanwhile Roy turned over in his mind half a dozen schemes, and at length decided to leave Frithiof during one of the quiet intervals, while he went for their own doctor, Miss Charlotte mounting guard outside the door, and promising to go to him if he seemed to need care.

Dr. Morris, who was an old friend, listened to Roy's description, and returned with him at once, much to the relief of poor Miss Charlotte, who was frightened out of her senses by one of Frithiof's paroxysms of wild excitement.

"Do you think seriously of him?" said Roy, when, the excitement having died down. Frithiof lay in a sort of stupor, taking no notice at all of his surroundings.

"If we can manage to get him any sleep he will pull through all right," said Dr. Morris, in his abrupt way. "If not, he will sink before many days. You had better send for his mother, if he has one."

"He has only a sister, and she is in Norway."

"Well, send for her, for he will need careful nursing. You say you will take charge of him? Very well; and to-morrow morning I will send in a nurse, who will set you at liberty for a few hours. Evidently he has had some shock. Can you make out what it was at all?"

"Well, last autumn, I believe; indeed, I am sure, he was jilted by an English girl with whom he was desperately in love. It all came upon the top of the other troubles of which I told you."

"And what is this paper he raves about? What is the girl's name? We might get some clew in that way."

"Oh," said Roy, "she was married some months ago. She is now Lady Romiaux."

The doctor gave a stifled exclamation.

"That explains all. I suppose the poor fellow honestly cared for her, and was shocked to see the paragraph in this week's 'Idle Time.' Your friend has had a lucky escape, if he could but see it in that light. For the husband of that heartless little flirt must be the most miserable man alive. We shall soon have another of those detestable causes celebres, and the newspapers lying about in every household will be filled with all the poisonous details."

As Roy kept watch through the long nights and days that followed, as he listened to the delirious ravings of his patient, and perceived how a man's life and health had been ruined by the faithlessness of a vain girl, he became so absorbed in poor Frithiof, so devoted to him, that he altogether forgot his specimens and his microscope.

Roy used to be haunted by the thought that he had telegraphed for Sigrid Falck, and that he should have to meet her after her long journey with the news that all was over. And remembering the bright face and sunny manner of the Norwegian girl, his heart failed him at the thought of her desolation. But Frithiof could not even take in the idea that she had been sent for. Nothing now made any difference to him. Sleep alone could restore him. But sleep refused to come, and already the death-angel hovered near, ready to give him the release for which he so greatly longed.

CHAPTER XVII.

Although it was the middle of August, a bitterly cold wind blew round the dreary little posting station of Hjerkin, on the Doverfield, and at the very time when Frithiof lay dying in the intolerable heat of London, Sigrid, shivering with cold, paced drearily along the bleak mountain road with her aunt. Apparently the subject they were discussing was not at all to the girl's taste, for as they walked along there were two ominous little depressions in her forehead, nor did her black fur hat entirely account for the shadow that overspread her face.

'Yes," said Fru Gronvold, emphatically, "I am sorry to have to say such a thing of you, Sigrid, but it really seems to me that you are playing the part of the dog in the manger. You profess absolute indifference to every man you meet, yet you go on absorbing attention, and standing in Karen's light, in a way which I assure you is very trying to me."

Sigrid's cheek flamed.

"I have done nothing to justify you in saying such a thing," she said, angrily.

"What!" cried Fru Gronvold. "Did not that Swedish botanist talk to you incessantly? Does not the English officer follow you about whenever he has the opportunity?"

"The botanist talked because we had a subject in common," replied Sigrid. "And probably the officer prefers talking to me because my English is more fluent than Karen's."

"And that I suppose was the reason that you must be the one to teach him the spring dans? And the one to sing him the 'Bridal Song of the Hardanger'?"

"Oh!" exclaimed Sigrid, with an impatient little stamp of the foot, "am I to be forever thinking of this wretched scheming and matchmaking? Can I not even try to amuse a middle-aged Englishman who is disappointed of his reindeer, and finds himself stranded in a dreary little inn with a handful of foreigners? I have only been courteous to him—nothing more; and if I like talking to him it is merely because he comes from England."

"I don't wish to be hard on you," said Fru Gronvold, "but naturally I have the feelings of a mother, and do not like to see Karen eclipsed. I accuse you of nothing worse, my dear, than a slight forwardness—a little deficiency in tact. There is no occasion for anger on your part."

Sigrid bit her lip hard to keep back the retort that she longed to make. In warm weather Hjerkin is a little paradise, but on this windy day, under a leaden sky, it seemed the most depressing place on earth.

"I shall go in and write to Frithiof," said Sigrid at length. And escaping gladly from Fru Gronvold, she ran up to her room.

"Here we are at Hjerkin," she wrote, "for a month, and it is more desolate than I can describe to you, uncle and Oscar out shooting all day long, and scarcely a soul to speak to, for most of the English have been driven away by the bad weather, and two girls from Stockholm who were here for their health are leaving this afternoon, unable to bear the dullness any longer. If something doesn't happen soon I think I shall grow desperate. But surely something will happen. We can't be meant to go on in this wretched way, apart from each other. I am disappointed that you think there is no chance of any opening for me in London. If it were not for Swanhild I think I should try for work—any sort of work except teaching—at Christiana. But I can't bear to leave her, and uncle would object to my trying for anything of the sort in Bergen. I can't help thinking of the old times when we were children, and of the summer holidays then. Don't you remember when we had the island all to ourselves, and used to rush down the fir-hill, and to frighten poor old Gro?"

She stopped writing because the thought of those past days had blinded her with tears, and because the longing for her father's presence had overwhelmed her; they had been so much to each other that there was not an hour in the day when she did not miss him.

Swanhild came dancing to meet her.

"Major Brown has got us such beautiful trout for supper, Sigrid, and uncle says I may go out fishing, too, some day. And you'll come with us, won't you?"

"You had better take Karen," said Sigrid, listlessly. "You know I never did care much for fishing. You shall catch them and will eat them," she added, with a dreary little smile. And throughout supper she hardly spoke, and at the first opportunity slipped away quietly, only, however, to be pursued by Swanhild.

"What is the matter?" said the child. "Are you not coming to the sitting-room?"

"No," said Sigrid, "I am tired, and it is so cold in there. I am going into the kitchen to buy some stamps. Frithiof's letter ought to go to-morrow."

As she spoke she opened the door of the roomy old kitchen, which is the pride of Hjerkin. Its three windows were shaded by snowy muslin curtains, its spotless floor was strewn with juniper, the walls, painted a peacock-blue, were hung with bright dish-covers, warming-pans, quaint old bellows and kitchen implements. There was a tall old clock in a black and gold case, a pretty corner cupboard in shaded brown, and a huge old-fashioned cabinet with cunning little drawers and nooks and corners, all painted in red and blue and green, with an amount of gilding which gave it quite an eastern look.

"Ah, how cozy the fire looks!" cried Swanhild.

"Bless your heart," said the kind old landlady, "sit down and warm yourself."

And one of the white-sleeved servant-girls brought a little chair which stood by a long wooden settle and put it close by the fire for the child, and Sigrid, her purchase made, joined the little group. Sitting there in the fire-light, she felt more at home than she had done for many months.

"Come, Swanhild," she said at last reluctantly, "it is ten o'clock, and time you were in bed."

And thanking the landlady for her kindness, the two sisters crossed over the court-yard to the sitting-room.

"Where in the world have you been?" said Fru Gronvold, knitting vehemently. "We couldn't think what had become of you both."

"I went to the kitchen to get some stamps," said Sigrid, coldly.

"And it was so lovely and warm in there," said Swanhild, gayly, "and Fru Hjerkin has been telling me such beautiful stories about the Trolds. Her mother really saw one, do you know."

After this a cold good-night was exchanged, and Fru Gronvold's brow grew darker still when Major Brown called out in his hearty way:

"What, going so early, Miss Falck? We have missed you sadly to-night." Then, as she said something about the English mail, "Yes, yes, quite right. And I ought to be writing home, too, instead of playing."

"That means that he will not have another rubber," thought Sigrid as she hurried down the hill to the dependence, "and I shall be blamed for it."

"The only comfort is," she thought, "that the worst has happened to us; what comes now must be for the better. How the wind is raging round the house and shrieking at the windows! And, oh, how dreary and wretched this life is!"

And in very low spirits she blew out the candle, and lay down to sleep as best she might in a bed which shook beneath her in the gale.

"NA-DRU-CO DYSPEPSIA TABLETS

Proved of Great Value to Me"

There is only one explanation for the numbers of enthusiastic letters that we receive praising Na-Dru-Co Dyspepsia Tablets, and that is that these tablets certainly do cure any kind of stomach trouble.

Here is a typical letter from Miss Eliza Armsworthy, Canso, N.S.:

"It is with pleasure I write to inform you that your Na-Dru-Co Dyspepsia Tablets have proved of great value to me. I tried remedy after remedy but without any lasting good. Having heard of your tablets curing such cases as mine I decided to give them a fair trial. They proved satisfactory in my case."

The remarkable success of Na-Dru-Co Dyspepsia Tablets is such a success as can only come to an honest remedy, compounded according to an exceptionally good formula, from pure ingredients, by expert chemists. If you are troubled with your stomach just ask your Druggist about Na-Dru-Co Dyspepsia Tablets, compounded by the National Drug and Chemical Co. of Canada, Limited, and sold throughout the Dominion at 50c. a box. 142

GENERALS AND KHAKI.

Cocked Hats and Coat Tails Disappear From British Army.

The British War Office contemplates another gigantic reform in military rigging. The generals are to be deprived of their cocked hats, and their coats tails are to be shorn away when they are in command of troops in the field. Their present splendors are to be replaced by the khaki general service dress such as is worn by officers of lower rank.

Some of the officers are not pleased at the change, though Roberts and Kitchener adopted it in the South African campaign. The fact that they will no longer be conspicuous marks for sharpshooters doesn't seem to compensate them for having to look like any other soldiers.

What kind of a silo will yours be?

Wood—or Concrete?

IF you were to build two silos—one of wood, the other of concrete—side by side, and then could see them as they will look after five years of service, you wouldn't have to think twice to decide which is the best material. In a few years more there wouldn't be much of the original wooden silo left—the repairing you'd have to do would be as troublesome and cost as much as the building of an entirely new one. But the passage of five, ten, fifteen or even twenty years will make no difference to the hard-as-rock wall of the concrete silo.

CONCRETE SILOS LAST FOREVER

WIND, rain, fire and lightning are alike defied by concrete. You need no insurance against its destruction, because it cannot be destroyed. Concrete silos are best for another reason. The concrete keeps the ensilage at an even temperature, so that it "cures" better, and therefore contains more food-value for your stock.

YOU CAN BUILD ONE YOURSELF

NO matter whether you have ever used concrete or not, you can build a concrete silo. Our book, "What the Farmer Can Do With Concrete," gives all the information you will need, not only about silos, but about scores of other uses for concrete on the farm. It isn't a catalogue, nor an advertising circular. A handsome book of 160 pages, well illustrated, and written for farmers. It is free. Just send your name and address on a postcard or in a letter and the book will be sent free by return mail.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

The location of the Garden of Eden has been determined so many times with such absolute and authoritative finality, albeit each time in a different place, that not all the critics will take seriously the announcement of Sir William Willcocks, the English engineer who has been for several years in the employ of the Turkish Government engaged in irrigation and reclamation work in Mesopotamia. Sir William is of the old-fashioned school that firmly believes Eden was a definite region, and his work in the valleys of the Euphrates and the Tigris convinces him that the historical and Biblical Eden was below the junction of these two rivers, and not far above this point, as many scholars and archaeologists have believed.

He has recently set forth his view in great detail before the Royal Geographical Society, and is in no wise disconcerted by the comment that he makes the site of Eden identical with the region of the Arabian Nights. Sir William believes, moreover, that the ancient Eden was made an earthly paradise by much the same engineering methods as are now employed there again after the lapse of ages, and he is so enthusiastic that he urges England to bargain Egypt for Babylonia. In the meantime, the hunt for Eden will go on—a never-ending search in which every human heart seeks the earthly Paradise by methods and pathways all its own.

An Italian engineer has formed a plan which is to be carried out by the government for irrigation works that are expected to change greatly agricultural and industrial conditions in Italy. Lakes are to be formed in the mountains capable of supplying water when it is needed to vast areas of land now arid and of providing power for manufacturing purposes. Italy's lack of native coal has held her back from industrial advancement; the "white coal," as the Norwegians call it, can be obtained abundantly from the mountain streams and trasmitted economically by electric currents to the whole peninsula.

Through such utilization of natural forces the face of the earth seems destined to be changed greatly and the economic rank of nations altered. In every mountainous country of Europe and in America power production plus irrigation can work wonders. The water wheel may soon be more useful than the steam engine and civilization will gain in many ways with the change. Engineering projects and statesmanship are more vitally connected than ever before.

JUSTICE IN FRANCE.

Death for Murdering Daughter—One Year for Slaying Father.

A melancholy story concerning the assassination of a beautiful young woman by her mother was told to the jury at Rouen, France. The victim, Marie Gauthier, aged 20, was insured for $1,000, and it was to obtain the insurance money that her mother, a widow of 41, who kept a small grocery store at Bouelles, strangled her, and then placed the corpse in an outhouse in a hanging position as if Marie had committed suicide.

Throughout the trial the prisoner maintained that she was innocent, but the evidence was overwhelming. The two little brothers of the murdered village belle testified against their mother, and related how, during the night of the crime, they heard their sister repeatedly call out, "Mamma, mind, you are strangling me."

When the body was discovered hanging to a nail, Mme. Gauthier explained that her daughter had committed suicide, and that she had been very melancholy for some time. This was proved to be untrue, for the girl was to be married in September, and had told all her friends joyfully of her betrothal. The murderess was sentenced to death.

While Mme. Gauthier's trial was proceeding at Rouen, the jurymen of the Allier Department were considering the case of a son who murdered his father. They were in a lenient mood, and the parricide was sentenced to only one year's imprisonment.

Louis Auclair, a youth of 19, was trying to break open the desk in which his father kept his savings, when M. Auclair, senior, unexpectedly arrived and caught his son by the collar. They struggled, and to free himself the son seized a revolver and shot his father dead.

TESTED RECIPES.

Oranges.—In tropical countries a favorite orange dish is made by slicing them, either peeled or not, into a dish and sprinkling with salt and red (cayenne or Chilpiquin, the little globular) peppers to taste. Very palatable and very stomachic and wholesome, corrective of bilious conditions.

Green Peppers.—Mexican cooks, who excel in the use of these piquant vegetables, first toast them over coals or on a stove until the thick outer skin blisters; then when it is cooled, peel it off. This not only removes the unpleasant and indigestible tough skin but imparts a different and far more agreeable taste to the peppers, whether of the sweet or the hot varieties.

Peppers with Corn and Tomatoes.—Six large green peppers, one and a half cupfuls of corn cut from the cob, half a cupful of tomatoes, chopped, one egg, slice of onion, one cupful of stock, salt, pepper and dust of red pepper. Dip the peppers in hot grease and remove the thin outer skin. When cold cut across the stem end of the pepper, remove the seeds and membrane from the peppers, then wipe dry. Make a stuffing of all the other ingredients except the stock. Fill the peppers with the stuffing and tie with a white cord. Place in a buttered baking dish, add the stock and bake until tender. Baste often while cooking. Serve hot.

Caramel Tapioca Pudding.—Soak a cupful of tapioca in two cupfuls of milk over night. In the morning put these into a double boiler with a pint of sweet milk and cook until the tapioca is tender. Take from the fire; beat in the yolks of three eggs; sweeten to taste, and add half a glass of brandy. Pour into pudding dish to get cold. To make the caramel—Brown a cupful of sugar in a saucepan over the fire, stirring as it browns. When of the right color add a cupful of boiling water and cook to a syrup. When it is cold add the stiffened whites of three eggs; beat well and long, pour upon the puding in the dish. Serve ice cold.

Silver Cake.—Half a cup of butter and two cups of powdered sugar, creamed together. Three-quarters of a cup of milk (or half milk and half water), one teaspoonful of lemon or of rosewater, whites of six eggs well beaten, three heaping cupfuls of flour, half teaspoonful of soda, and a teaspoonful of cream of tartar. Use a white frosting. You may make it in a loaf or as a layer cake or it may be used as the base of a white fruit cake. If for the latter, add a grated cocoanut, half a pound of sliced citron, and a pound of blanched almonds, shredded finely. Dredge the fruits and nuts with flour and stir into the cake batter.

Creamed Radishes—Peel the radishes and lay in ice cold water, slightly salted, for an hour. Have ready boiling water, a little salt in a saucepan, put in the radishes and cook tnder. Drain off the water and pour in a second supply boiling hot. Bring to a boil; drain the radishes and turn into a deep dish. Cover them with a good drawn butter founded upon milk instead of water; season with pepper and salt, and serve when they have stood in the sauce in the open oven for five minutes to let the dressing sink into them. What are left over may be made into a salad next day (cold). Cover with French dressing and surround with crisp lettuce leaves.

USEFUL INFORMATION.

Maiden-hair fern will keep perfectly if laid between the folds of a damp cloth. It is so apt to shrivel if put in water.

A little vinegar put in the frying pan and then boiled up on the stove removes the odor of fish or onions from the utensil.

Your black crepe de chine blouse will look almost as good as new if it is dipped in cold tea and then ironed.

Joints of meat should be carefullp wiped with a damp cloth before cooking. They are apt to get musty while hanging in the shop.

Silver will not need as much rubbing if before cleaning it is washed in hot soap and water with a little liquid ammonia in it.

Paint stains will often yield to alternate applications of turpentine and benzine. Try this, using turpentine first.

A small brush, such as can be bought for five cents at any oil store, should hang over the sink. Use it for scrubbing the handles of cups and jugs.

Salt for table purposes will not cake if it is dried and pounded, and has a little cornflour mixed with it. It should be passed through a sieve.

A flour dredger which costs nothing can be made of an empty mustard or cocoa tin. Bore a number of small holes in the cover and it is ready for use.

To get rust off keys and locks leave them to soak, for forty-eight hours and then rub well with newspaper. Soaking a second time may be necessary.

Sateen cushion covers are apt to lose their gloss after washing. Add borax to the final rinsing water, and you will be surprised what a nice gloss will come when ironed.

To Clean Hard Felt Hats.—Procure one pint of cheap benzine, and then, with a piece of black material dipped into it, rub the greased part till perfectly clean. Hang in the open air to disperse the smell.

To Clean Willow Furniture.—Provide yourself with a coarse brush dipped in strong salt and water; scrub each piece well; dry with a soft cloth. The salt cleans the willowware well and also keeps it from turning yellow. Straw matting may be cleaned in like manner.

To Clean Hair Brushes.—Mix a little household ammonia in lukewarm water and wash the brush in this, taking care not to wet the back. If a brush be very dirty add a little soap to the water, or rub it upon the bristles. Then rinse in clean water. Hang in the air to dry. If the brush be laid upon the back, the water will run down into it and injure the wood or ivory of which it is made. If laid with the back up, the wet bristles are bent by the weight. Never let the bristles rest upon anything while they are damp. Suspend the brush where the air will reach it from all sides.

When winter comes, be sure to keep a pan of water upon stoves and furnace. It will soften the air and ward off headache, also prevent furniture from warping and falling apart. If you have hot air registers keep a wet sponge in each. It requires little care to do this, and the effect in tempering the dry heat and keeping down dust is incalculably beneficial. Once a week (say, every Saturday) scald the sponges. You will be amazed at the dirt they have accumulated, thus saving furniture and lungs that much.

THE ONE AND ONLY.

"John, don't you dare to wear that old straw hat out with me. Get the one I cleaned for you."

"This is it, dear."

HEALTH

ACUTE BILIOUS ATTACK.

Biliousness is a term covering a group of symptoms such as headache, nausea and vomiting, that are usually attributed to the disordered action of the liver. The word is more popular with the laity than with the doctors, for the reason that it does not often correctly describe the condition. It is true that the liver does its work better at one time than another, and that there are people with whom it never does it very well. But it is also true that in most cases of "biliousness" the difficulty is principally with the stomach or the bowels, whereas the trouble with the liver is only a sort of rebellion against the intolerable burdens unfairly laid upon it. The treatment of such cases will naturally be unsuccessful unless it is directed to the organs actually at fault.

Acute bilious attacks may occur at any age, and sometimes afflict certain members of a family for generation after generation, from childhood to old age. Children of northern parents who are born in the tropics seem to be especially susceptible. Emotion, fatigue or severe physical exercise will often bring on an attack, especially exercise that produces irregular vibrations, such as swinging, motor-riding and railroad travel.

Many sufferers from bilious attacks are obliged to avoid certain articles of diet. As a general rule, they are injuriously affected by sweets, excess of fats, mackerel, sardines, pork, liver, pastry and shell-fish.

The attack itself is marked by vertigo, faintness, acid eructations and griping pains, although the latter are not always present. There is always profound exhaustion and semistupor, like that seen in seasickness.

Fortunately, a bilious attack tends to cure itself, first by the throwing off of the irritating bile, and second by the rest to the digestive functions resulting from the complete loss of the appetite. Treatment should follow the hints given by nature. The patient should lie down in a darkened room. If the headache is severe, ice-water cloths or a menthol preparation may be used, and nothing should enter the mouth except a small piece of ice from time to time, to allay thirst, or a glass of hot water to assist the vomiting and help to cleanse the stomach.—Youth's Companion.

HEALTH HINTS.

That tooth is raging again; the dentists and chemists will not be out of bed for several hours. Why not try the application of common salt dissolved in warm water—as strong as possible. Salt is always ready to hand—and it often cures toothache when everything else has failed.

It is also a tonic; in some cases it allays irritation and pain or sensations of heat; and it can also reduce the size of tumors.

Soap, again, another everyday article, is often of immense service in indigestion, when properly used, and it makes a most valuable liniment for sprains and bruises when combined with spirit-of-wine. Blanched lettuce is an excellent soporific, and has cured acute cases of insomnia.

Scrapings of raw potato, or even a piece of newspaper, will greatly reduce the pain of a burn; a drink of lemon-juice and coffee will often give immediate relief in neuralgic headache; and the application of scraped horseradish will often effect the same result.

Spanish onions eaten late in the day irresistibly send many people to sleep; the ash of burnt wood in water has often been of service in acute dyspepsia; and the humble potato may be turned to numberless uses. Its stalk, considered as a textile plant, produces in Austria a cottony flax; in Sweden sugar is extracted from its root; by combustion its different parts yield potass; its tubercles, made into a pulp, are a substitute for soap in bleaching; it yields vinegar by exposure and spirit by distillation; its starch is the equal of Indian arrowroot; and it can be made to furnish two kinds of flour and a gruel.

WORDS AND PHRASES.

Anecdotes Telling How the Language Has Been Enriched.

Many readers are doubtless acquainted with the old rhyme:

Two noble earls, whom, if I quote,
Some folks might call me sinner;
The one invented half a coat,
The other half a dinner.

The lines refer to a former Earl Spencer, who made a short overcoat, ultimately termed a "spencer," fashionable for some time, and the Earl of Sandwich, who hit upon the idea of having his meat between two pieces of bread, in order that he might take a meal without leaving the gaming table.

In his remarkably interesting and informative book, entitled "The Romance of words," Mr. Ernest Weekley, a well-known authority on modern languages, thus refers to the Spencer story:

"His lordship," he says, "when Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, being out a-hunting, had, in the act of leaping a fence, the misfortune to have one of the skirts of his coat torn off; upon which his lordship tore off the other, observing that to have but one left was like a pig with one ear! Some inventive genius took the hint, and, having made some of these half-coats, out of compliment to his lordship, gave them the significant cognomen of 'spencer.'"

Mr. Weekley also mentions that "hurly-burly" is said to owe its origin to Hurleigh and Burleigh, two neighboring families "that filled the country round them with contest and violence"; and that the word "Boh!" used to frighten children was the name of Boh, a great general, the son of Odin, whose very appellation struck immediate panic among his enemies.

"There are many objects which bear the names of individuals. Such are 'albert,' 'china,' 'brougham,' 'victoria,' and 'wellington' boots. Middle-aged people can remember ladies wearing a red blouse called a 'garibaldi.' Sometimes an inventor is immortalized—e.g., mackintosh, shrapnel, both due to nineteenth century inventors. The more recent 'maxim' is named from one who, according to the late Lord Salisbury, has saved many of his fellowmen from dying of old age."

Again, "billycock" is apparently derived from the description of the Oxford "Blood" in his "bully cocked hat," worn aggressively on one side. "Pinchebeck" was a London watchmaker, and "doily" is from Doyley, a linen draper of the same period. Etienne de Silhouette was a French Finance Minister in 1759, but the application of his name to a black profile portrait is variously explained. "Negus" was first brewed in Queen Anne's reign by Colonel Francis Negus.

NOT LIKELY.

"Mary, did anyone call while I was out?"

"Yes. Mr. Bartie Plantagenet."

"Bertie Plantagenet! I don't know anybody of that name!"

"Probably not, mum; he called to see me!"

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

INTERNATIONAL LESSON, SEPT. 22.

Lesson XII.—The feeding of the five thousand, Mark 6. 30-44.

Golden text, John 6. 35.

Verse 30. The apostles—The literal meaning of the word "apostle' is "one sent with orders." The name is applied to the twelve whom Jesus selected from among his numerous disciples. It is descriptive of their official work rather than of their discipleship. The names of the twelve are recorded by Luke (6. 12-16) and Matthew (10. 2-4).

Gather themselves together unto Jesus—After they returned from their missionary tour described in Mark 6. 7-13.

31. Come ye . . . and rest a while—The necessity for rest is partially shown in the next clause. This is hardly the full reason, however, as Jesus sought intervals of quiet fellowship with the twelve in which he might more carefully prepare them for their future work. Matthew gives an additional reason, namely, the profound grief which overcame Jesus when he heard of the death of John the Baptist (14. 13).

32. A desert place—Not a sandy waste, but simply an uninhabited region. The place mentioned was probably back from the northeastern shore of the Lake of Galilee, not far from Bethsaida (Luke 9. 10). Their point of departure was probably Capernaum.

33. On foot—Or by land.

Outwent them—The multitude arrived before Jesus and the twelve. The distance around the northwestern shore was little farther than the course across, and perhaps even shorter than that followed by the small sailing boat.

34. He came forth—Out of the boat. John's account differs, however, stating that Jesus had spent some time in the mountain before emerging into the presence of the waiting multitude (John 6. 3-5).

As sheep not having a shepherd—This unusually strong figure makes clear the hapless condition of the people. Like sheep, they were dependent upon the guidance of shepherds. The scribes and Pharisees, who were the religious leaders, were themselves blind to spiritual truth, so that the people were left to wander aimlessly without spiritual guidance.

35. The day was now far spent—It was late in the afternoon of the same day on which they had arrived at the desert place. We need not, therefore, think of his discourse to the multitude on this occasion as having been an unusually long one.

36. Somewhat to eat—In their haste to follow Jesus they gave little thought as to where their quest would lead them, so that they had neglected to provide food.

37. Two hundred shillings' worth—The reference is to the silver denarius, a Roman coin, which was more nearly equivalent to the English shilling than any coin with which we are familiar. Its actual value was between sixteen and seventeen cents. It represented a day's wages in the time of Christ, so that its purchasing power was much greater. The question represents the impossibility of providing for such a multitude, as so large an amount was beyond the meager purse of the twelve.

38. Five, and two fishes—An amount sufficient for about one person.

39. Sit down by companies—Or recline "in parterres," a term used for flower beds of many colors, perhaps suggested to the writer by the colored clothing of the different groups.

Green grass—This realistic touch of Mark's story indicates his habit of close observation and love of the pictorial. It also makes known to us the season of the year, which was spring, about the time of the passover (John 6. 4), since in Palestine the grass is green for only a short period following the winter rains.

40. In ranks, by hundreds, and by fifties—Herein is suggested the orderly arrangement of the people to render convenient the distribution of the food. Gereach describes the formation as follows: "Two long rows of one hundred, and a shorter one of fifty persons. The fourth side remained—after the manner of the table of the ancients—empty and open."

43. Twelve basketfuls—Ordinary Oriental traveling bags. Inasmuch as we are led to believe that Jesus and the twelve carried as litle "luggage" as possible on their tours (Matt. 10. 9, 10), we may suppose that these bags were secured from among the people, many of whom were on their way to Jerusalem to attend he feast of the passover (John 6. 4). There was one "basket" for each apostle

44. Five thousand men—Not including women and children (Matt. 14. 21).

VOICE OF CONSCIENCE

Whatever Religion Serves Man Best is the Altar Where He Ought to Worship.

Iron sharpeneth iron.—Proverbs, xxvii., 17.

The frictional rubbing and polishing process of one piece of iron against another illustrates in a unique fashion how contact and resistance may become mutually helpful and render friendly assistance. When competition is free from imposition it helps business. When partisanship is free from bitterness it helps statesmanship. Difference of opinion has encouraged scholars to take long and tiresome journeys in the search after truth. Knowledge is the result of the mind at work. Questions and answers sharpen the wits. Power is the connection of the positive and negative. Fundamentals are accepted rules that have become reconciled by mutual agreement. No question is understood thoroughly until the for and against are heard.

It is difficult to define truth, because truth to one man may not be truth to another, and yet both may be right. It is the same with wrong. However, there are two universally recognized spirits in this world that are diametrically opposed to each other. They are called Good and Evil. Whatever their source may be we shall not attempt to explain. It is sufficient for us to know that

THEY ARE HERE.

On the side of Good we find righteousness, justice, tolerance, knowledge, love and happiness. On the side of Evil there are ignorance, superstition, intemperance, misery and selfishness. The individual who rubs against the destructive forces and overcomes them with Good grows stronger with every stroke. The one who forsakes the voice of the conscience grows weaker. But there is no time for idleness, and there is a constant struggle to do the right.

We believe the only right one man has to claim his freedom of thought and manner of worship is to give his neighbor the same privilege without persecuting him. It is insincerity that provokes ridicule.

In the last analysis each individual must be his own defender before the Supreme Ruler and render his account for himself and not upon the basis of what the multitude had been doing. The contention that shows the strength of will that would obey God not only will win admiration, but will turn many toward righteousness who would be otherwise inclined to follow the crowd and bow down before the unbleating and golden calf erected and dedicated to the worship of Baal. The challenge of Joshua turned the hearts of the children of Israel back to the God of Abraham.

THE TAUNT OF THE PROPHET

on the mount when he laughed at the priests of Baal drove them to despair and madness:—"Possibly the god of Ashteroth is absent on a journey. Cry louder and he may hear you." The man who is willing to deliver his soul that his body may have enough to eat and to drink would not fittingly represent the pillar of beauty or strength in the Temple of Life.

The spirit of the triumphant soldier is the same spirit that the man of God ought to possess when seeking eternal life. It was the fearlessness of Caesar that compelled the unwilling boatmen to carry him across the River Apus. It was Pizarro who drew the line on the ground and said to his adventurous followers:—"On this side lies Panama and poverty, and on this side Peru and gold." Stepping across the line, he said, "The brave will follow me." It was the Christian warrior Paul who wrote: "Therefore, my beloved brethren, be ye steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, forasmuch as ye know that your labor is not in vain in the Lord." It was Christ who said, "Be of good cheer. I have overcome the world."

TEACHERS' AGREEMENTS.—Without a doubt there is need of a change in the School Act which permits a teacher to cancel an engagement with a school board on two months' notice, even although the teacher has just previously signed an agreement to teach for a year. Of course the school board has a like privilege of cancelling an agreement on the same notice, but this is rarely, if ever, taken advantage of by a board. A case in point has just come up in connection with the Exeter school. Miss Campbell, teacher of Commercial work in the H. S. Department, who had signed an agreement for the present school year, and who during the vacation was successful in obtaining a specialist's certificate in her work, received an offer from the Sarnia Collegiate Board to become head of the commercial department there, at a considerable increase of salary. Naturally she wished to accept, and, as she was within her rights according to the Act and to her agreement, the School Board had nothing to do but allow Miss Campbell to go to Sarnia at the end of this week, it being better to make the change now at the beginning of the term, than two months hence), and the Board engaged Miss Cruickshank of Sarnia to take the work here. It need not be supposed that Exeter school is a loser by the exchange, for, although Miss Campbell had done excellent work during her time here, Miss Cruickshank is very highly recommended and has had seven years experience in commercial work, as against Miss Campbell's one year. But, in our opinion, this privilege of breaking an agreement should be withdrawn, as no such condition would be tolerated in any other walk of life.

Goetz.—Mr. Louis Restemeyer, sr., and Mr. Sam. Baker were in Goderich this week on the jury.—Mr. and Mrs. John Preeter and family of Zurich spent Sunday in town with friends.

In an exciting game of baseball on the Dashwood playgrounds some ministers of the Canada district, who held their convention here from the 4th to 9th September proved that they have not forgotten their baseball ability, practised at College, by defeating the senior team of Zurich by a score of 2-1. The Zurich boys were very sure of winning the game, but did not know that they were competing with some star players of old Concordia College. Rev. Orzen, pitcher for the ministers, had the other aggregation guessing, and certainly would have delivered "the pillar" in Keeler style had the ball been dry. Zurich started the game with their team at bat and went out in order by popping the ball in the air; the ministers scored a run on a draw from Rev. Prauschke a stolen base, and a hit by Rev. R. Effert. Their opponents tied the score in the third on account of some excusable errors, due to the slippery ball. On to the 5th innings the score stood 1-1, but in the last half of the fifth the Concordians, seeing that it was time to do something as darkness proved that the game could not continue, and they did not fall in their attempt—Orzen fanned, Schroeder was struck and Orzen ran for him; Prauschke, the reliable little player, hit a slow one in front of the plate, which the catcher fielded; the throw hit the runner on the head and bounded, and Orzen scored, but the Zurich boys in their ignorance of baseball and lack of understanding of ball rules, called this an overthrow to first, and raised a howl when Orzen scored, but the ministers, not in mood to quarrel, excused the ignorance of the opponents, took the odd side of the decision, only to see Orzen trot home with the winning run when Effert hit one between first and second. The feature of the game was the grandstand and big league catch of Rev. Prauschke, who playing short caught a Texas leaguer along the left field foul line after a hard chase, rolling over several times after completing the feat. This was not new to the fellows who had seen him play at College years ago. The ministers who participated in the game were, Rev. Orzen of Gaeline; Rev. Schroeder of Pembrok Rev. Prauschke of Palmer Rapids, s.s., Rev. Effert of Tavistock, f.; Rev. Wuggazer of Sebringville, c.; Rev. Side of Cobalt, c.f.; Rev. Graelpner of Elmira, l.f.; Rev. Mainisky of Stratford, 2nd; Teacher Walthers of Elmira r.f.; Rev. Boese of Berlin and president of the Synod, umpired the game in fine style. Features of the game that have been omitted and which deserve mention are the mis-judge of a fly in right field by Chas Fritz, and also the base throwing of E. Wurm who nearly caught a man running from second to third. Mr. Wurm saw several big league games recorded in the paper and from them knows how to catch a runner.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials.

VARNISHING DAY.

It Brings Many Surprises at the English Royal Academy.

When the hanging committee of the English Royal academy has completed the work of "hanging," the artists whose pictures are exhibited on the academy walls are forwarded a piece of pasteboard known as a "varnishing card." This card is the first intimation the artist receives that his picture has passed triumphantly through the processes of judging and "hanging," and it allows him to visit the academy on a particular day—"varnishing day"—just before the galleries are thrown open to the public. Hundreds of knights of the brush are to be found in the galleries of Burlington House on "varnishing day" and here and there are flights of steps and improvised platforms covered with artists putting the last loving touches to their canvases. Here, perched on the top rung of a pair of steps, is a young lady with smiling face scraping her picture with a palette knife and putting in fresh spots of paint occasionally, while on the floor at her feet is a young man whose features are the picture of misery, his eyes roaming toward the ceiling. His canvas is hopelessly skied, and he is silently abusing the members of the hanging committee for their lack of judgment.

"Varnishing day" brings many surprises to the exhibitors. One man will find his canvas wrongly named, and another, an impressionist, may be startled to discover that his glorious sunset, over which he has taken so much pains, is upside down. And for the first time he realizes that an impressionist's pictures can be turned about any way without greatly endangering the effect.

Turner had one of his paintings hung upside down, and old academicians well remember that a little canvas, "A Sleeping Nalad," was once, owing to lace of space, placed on the wall in an upright position and renamed "The Waking Nalad."—National Magazine.

FUNNY FRILLED LIZARD.

Carries an Umbrella, Has a Whip Tail and Walks Like a Bird.

The frilled lizard is found in Australian woods, being tolerably abundant in north Queensland and the Kimberley district of Western Australia. It lives on beetles such as are found on the tree barks. It is about three feet long, measured from head to tail point. What makes it remarkable consists of two things—its hurried walk and its fighting anger.

It carries a sort of natural umbrella top about its neck, which it elevates suddenly with an alarming effect even to ordinary lizard killing dogs, searing them as an umbrella opened in the face of a charging bull; hence it is called the frilled lizard. Its teeth are not of much use as a defense against a vigorous animal, but when it fights it uses its long, lithe tail in a way to bring long bruises on one's hands—in fact, could it be properly trained, it might serve as an automatic switch, which, like the magic rub-a-dub-dub stick, would at the word administer a thrashing to the disobedient child.

From the scientific point of view the creature's peculiar method of ambulation is most interesting, because it presents an absurdly grotesque appearance at such times, more especially from the rear. It walks bipedally or on two feet, like a bird, and so much does it resemble a bird in its walk that it seems to be the connecting link between the ancestors of birds and the lizards of today.

A Real Disciplinarian.

The other night we heard a father speak thusly: "William, your mother tells me that you must have a dose of castor oil before retiring tonight. It is your bedtime now. Take your medicine and go to bed at once."

"But, papa, I don't wanta take no caster oil."

"You must take it, and immediately."

"Aw, papa, I dowanter!"

"William, if you don't take that medicine I'll put you right to bed this minute without giving you a drop of it."

William was so scared that he took it. That's the way to enforce discipline.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Eye Photographs.

An image impressed upon the retina of the eye remains there an appreciable time. This is the reason why a torch swung rapidly seems to be a circular flame. The sensibility of the retina is different at different times of the day. Every one has noticed how on waking in the morning and looking at the bright window, then closing the eyes, he will observe an impression or phantom of the window for an appreciable time after his eyes are closed.

Domestic Bookkeeping.

"And what's your reason for increasing the servants' wages, pray?" her friend asked.

"Because my husband complained that my dress and millinery bills equaled the household expenses, and I want to show him they do not."—London Tit-Bits.

"Goodness knows, my dear! You might just as well ask me where daddy goes!"—London Answers.

KIRKTON

September 8th was a red letter day in the history of St. Paul's church, Kirkton, when the edifice was consecrated by his lordship, the Bishop of Huron. The bishop was met at the entrance by the rector of Rev. Geo. W. Racey, and Messrs M. F. Irvine, John Morpeth, church wardens. After a petition had been read asking him to consecrate the church and a prayer offered, the consecration service was then proceeded with, after which the bishop preached a most masterly and eloquent sermon from the Haggai 2.7. This was followed by the administration of the holy communion to which a large number remained. His lordship preached another powerful sermon in the evening basing his remarks on 2 Cor. 4.18 and was listened to with rapt attention by the large number present, which not only taxed the seating capacity of the edifice, but also filled the three aisles. The musical part of the service was well rendered by the choir under the able management of Mr. Alfred Paul. Miss Hoskin, of London who is visiting friends here, sang two solos most effectively.

Why Women Are Not RICH.

Man is a millionaire many times over in the possession of blood cells. Woman is not quite so rich, for scientists have proven that the normal man has five million—the woman only four and a half million to a cubic millimetre of blood.

A decrease in number of red blood corpuscles and a person "looks pale"—in fact, is anaemic, the blood does not get the right food and probably the stomach is disordered.

Dr. R. V. Pierce found years ago that a glyceric extract of golden seal and Oregon grape roots, queen's root and bloodroot with black cherrybark, would help the assimilation of the food in the stomach, correct liver ills and in Nature's own way increase the red blood corpuscles. This medicine he called Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. By assimilating the food eaten the system is nourished and the blood takes on a rich red color. Nervousness is only "the cry of the starved nerves for food," and when the nerves are fed on rich red blood the person looses those irritable feelings, sleeps well at night and is refreshed in the morning.

J. D. LIVELY, Esq.

"I was attacked with a severe nervous disease, which was caused by a disordered stomach and liver," writes MR. JAS. D. LIVELY, of Washburn, Tenn., Route 2, Box 83. "All my friends thought I would die and the best physicians gave me up. I was advised to try Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, and derived much benefit from same. My case had run so long, it had become so chronic that nothing would effect a permanent cure, but Dr. Pierce's medicine has done much for me and I highly recommend it. I heartily advise its use as a spring tonic, and further advise ailing people to take Dr. Pierce's medicines before their diseases have run so long that there is no chance to be cured.

FRUIT SHOULD BE GRADED

Special Market Commissioner at Winnipeg Says Care Must Be Taken.

A despatch from Toronto says: Competition for the fruit trade of Western Canada is so keen that Mr. James Parnell, Special Market Commissioner at Winnipeg, in a report issued on Thursday, warns Ontario shippers that only the very best must be offered if they expect to control the market. Ontario fruits are acknowledged to be better quality than British Columbia shipments, but shipments from the Pacific Province and the western States show excellent stock, well graded and packed, which reaches the market in a splendid condition.

Mr. Parnell suggests that prices for apples are likely to decline. Good sales are reported in the country, but city buyers are making light purchases in the hope of cheaper prices later on. "With the keen competition between east and west it looks as if the growers will have to take lower prices. Shippers should exercise great care in packing their apples, as there is an extra staff of inspectors on, who are examining carefully each shipment, and all shipments should come up to the 'fruit market act.'

"Many of our Ontario growers are shipping out fruit that will hold its own with the best of quality, pack and condition on arrival. In other cases, however, too little attention is being paid to grading and packing, some varieties of plums and peaches being shipped here that will not hold up and are arriving in bad shape, which has a tendency to lower the prices of fruit coming in right."

Mr. Parnell states that the market has been crowded all week with foreign fruit, which has caused quite a drop in prices.

MAKING SAFE INVESTMENTS

LONDON'S APATHY HAS REDUCED PRICES OF MUNICIPALS.

Prices Lower than for Many Years—Likelihood of Further Reduction in Opinion of Experts is Remote—Many Bargains on Market.

The articles contributed by "Investor" are for the sole purpose of guiding prospective investors, and, if possible, of saving them from losing money through placing it in "wild-cat" enterprises. The impartial and reliable character of the information may be relied upon. The writer of these articles and the publisher of this paper have no interests to serve in connection with this matter other than those of the reader.

(By Investor.)

The apathy of the London market for Canadian municipal debentures has continued all summer, and now with the beginning of autumn there appears to be no improvement in the situation. The result has been that such municipalities as have recently come on the market with bonds have been forced to sell them at abnormally cheap prices or have had to seek temporary relief through financing by means of short-term notes or treasury bills. Investors, therefore, start this fall season with numerous opportunities for purchasing cheap municipal debentures or occasional chances to purchase securities maturing from six to twelve months of fairly high yield, but secured by the assets of excellent municipalities. Just this week, for example, one house is offering one year notes of a suburb of Vancouver at a price to return the investor five and one-half per cent. on his money. Many of the larger cities of the middle West are now returning from 4 3-4 to 5 1-4 per cent.—a fact that has not taken place since the bad year of 1907.

The question that many investors are asking is not whether debentures are cheap at present, but whether or not they may not become even cheaper. This question is not easy to answer and I can only express an opinion based on the opinions of many of the most expert bond men in Canada. But while their opinions are well worth having they are unfortunately hampered by not being gifted with prophetic powers and their knowledge of the future is only that based upon probabilities. What they think is this: The market has now reached a point where debentures are returning as high a rate of income as they have within the past fifteen years or more. General conditions are excellent, and prices are unquestionably attractive. Therefore, although London may not again come into the market for some time to come the absorbtive power of Canada and the States will prove sufficient to keep the market from going any lower. This, coupled with the fact that municipalities will considerably moderate their financial requirements for the next few months will probably keep prices at about the present level. Any resumption of buying on the part of London, however, will soon exhaust the present supply of securities and the result will be a beginning to an upward movement that will tend to replace prices somewhere near the levels of a year or eighteen months ago.

It cannot be said that this feeling was general a few months ago, but so far as I can learn the above reflects pretty well the general opinion now. Municipal debentures are cheap and there is a fair demand for the bargains. Should the demand follow the usual course and come up to the average enquiry of October and November there should be no question of the stability of the present level of prices and possibly even an advance in some cases.

At all events, if one has money to invest at the present time there are many unquestionable bargains in municipal debentures, and the likelihood of these bargains falling further in price is remote. As one hard-headed investor remarked the other day:— "It is only a beginner who expects always to buy at the bottom and sell at the top and this is near enough the bottom to suit me."

TRIBUTE TO DEAD EMPEROR.

Nogi, Famous General, and His Wife, Commit Suicide.

A despatch from Tokio, says: General Count Maresuke Nogi, Supreme Military Councillor of the Empire, and his wife, the Countess Nogi, committed suicide on Friday night, in accordance with the ancient Japanese custom, as their final tribute to their departed Emperor and friend, Mutsuhito. The taking off by their own hands of the famous General and his wife was as dramatic as it was sad. The General cut his throat with a short sword and the Countess committed hari-kari. Following the Samurai custom, the couple had carefully prepared their plans for killing themselves and timed them so that they would be coincident with the departure forever from Tokio of the dead Emperor.

CHILD KILLED IN ELEVATOR.

Attendant in Halifax Building Failed to Close Car Door.

A despatch from Halifax says: Enid Griffith, a three-year-old girl, was killed in the elevator shaft in the Metropole Building in this city on Thursday. The child was in the elevator with her aunt. The elevator boy omitted to close the door as the elevator went up from the third storey. The child had hold of the grill work on the edge of the shaft. The elevator going up, left the girl hanging by her hands. In a moment she dropped to the bottom and was killed.

AMERICANS STILL COMING.

175,000 Will Have Crossed Into Canada by End of Fiscal Year.

A despatch from Ottawa says: According to W. J. White, who returned on Wednesday from an inspection of Canadian immigration agencies in the United States, the American influx to the West is continuing at a rate unprecedented. Mr. White estimates that in the current fiscal year 175,000 people will cross the border. They are not settling in particular localities or any one province, he says, but are scattering everywhere that good land is available. Mr. White speaks optimistically of the crops.

TORONTO CORRESPONDENCE

SOME INTERESTING GOSSIP FROM THE QUEEN CITY.

The Minister of Lands and Mines—Northland's Possibilities—Trades Union Movement—Exhibition Criticism.

While Provincial politics in general are enjoying a rest considerable public attention is centered on the work and personality of the newest member of the Cabinet, Hon. Mr. Hearst, who, a few months ago, succeeded Mr. Cochrane as Minister of Lands and Mines. The other day when Sir James Whitney was asked to address a public gathering he contented himself with a few words and introduced Mr. Hearst in his stead, "one of my young men," the Premier described him. Mr. Hearst took Northern Ontario as his text and delivered an important address on its possibilities. Coming from Sault Ste. Marie, where he is a leading lawyer, the subject is close to his heart.

Mr. Hearst does not resemble his photographs. They do not reproduce his sandy complexion or his almost fiery hair and moustache. In manner of speech Mr. Hearst is not unlike his leader, Sir James Whitney. He has the same downrightness and something of the same force of deliverance. Assuming that those qualities in speech reflect similar qualities of the head, it is not difficult to understand why the Premier selected him out of his large following for promotion.

SILVER CAMPS REVIVING.

All the news from the northland serves to strengthen the optimism that has been developing during recent years. The known agricultural area is widening. Instead of 16,000,000 acres in the clay belt the figure has now risen to 20,000,000 acres. Settlement is slow, but the point is rapidly being reached when it will be cheaper to clear New Ontario farms than it will be to buy prairie lands. Then it ought to be easy to divert the westward stream of immigration to the north. The mining industry is making progress. The news from Porcupine continues to be encouraging in a moderate way. One mine is understood to have produced a quarter of a million dollars of gold up to the first of September. But the feature of the summer's work has been the revival of the silver camps. In Cobalt twenty-three properties have been reopened. And in Elk Lake and Gowganda operations are under way in twenty-two camps. And, doubtless, there will be a fresh crop of wild cats for the unwary.

LABOR UNIONS IN ONTARIO.

The annual meeting in Guelph of the Dominion Trades and Labor Council, held in Ontario for the first time in several years, has served to call attention to the progress and present strength of the Trades Union movement in this province. While the organization is strong numerically and has secured in some trades an almost masterful position it is not without its weaknesses. It would be more exact to say that it has not yet taken advantage of its opportunities for the improving of the condition of the great body of workers.

Up to the present in Canada, the great objective of the trades unions has been to increase wages, and the one weapon they have used for this purpose has been the crude and often-dangerous and cruel form of warfare known as the strike. In innumerable cases strikes or threats of strikes have been successful, and it would be impossible to estimate the advances in wages the unions have to their credit by this means. Possibly in many trades they have doubled the rate of pay they would have receiving if there were no unions. In other trades they have failed, and the curious fact is that in the strongly unionized city of Toronto many of the largest industries are absolutely non-union, or open shops. The employers in some of these industries have no objection to high wages, and voluntarily pay the union scale or higher, but it is also unfortunately the case that some of the others pay absolutely inadequate wages. There are many competent workmen in Toronto to-day, working 10 hours a day, receiving not more than $10.00 a week. If there is a family of any size, with no other wage earners in it, this means, with rent and the cost of clothing and provisions what they are, that these people are on the ragged edge of penury. Compare such wages with those that prevail in such a trade as the printers, who are at present negotiating a new scale and have refused to accept a minimum rate of $21.00 a week for an eight-hour day.

WORKINGMEN POOR POLITICIANS.

Some of the labor leaders are coming to realize that the question of wages, while of vital importance, is but one of many things which are of the utmost importance to the working classes' material condition. The question of land values in its relation to rent is one of these. So is the question of public ownership of natural monopolies. So is the question of taxation, including that most powerful and all embracing engine of taxation, the tariff. These things affect the earning power of the workers just as much as the rate of wages he receives. But the strike is useless as a weapon to grapple with them. And so far the labor unions of Canada, knowing only the strike as a weapon, have done practically nothing toward grappling with these problems. The labor man needs a new weapon. He scarcely knows yet what it is. He realizes clearly only that there is need of something, that conditions are rapidly stratifying into a form which does not bode best for the classes generally. Some day he will see that what he needs is political organization. But at present the efforts in the Province to organize a workingman's political party have fallen flat. That party's dependable strength in the city of Toronto is probably not more than a few hundred voters.

KIER HARDIE SCENTS TROUBLE.

Kier Hardie, the powerful but somewhat intemperate Scotch socialist labor leader, a former collier, but the match in mental equipment for political leaders anywhere, has been telling his Canadian brothers some plain facts along these lines. He declared that in some respects privilege has already become entrenched in Canada in a way that it will take generations to rectify, if it can ever be rectified.

No doubt one reason organized labor has been slow to agitate in political questions is that well organized labor has been so successful in keeping its wages up to a good standard, that it has thought the other matters were of trivial importance. Besides, on some of the most important issues labor men are by no means united in their opinion. A good example is the tariff question. At the moment some of the most forceful men in the unions in Toronto are free traders, or, at least, low tariff men. But while the union men of the city would follow these leaders over a precipice if a strike were involved it is doubtful if more than a small fraction would follow them in a free trade campaign. Judging by concrete results the labor men of Toronto are strongly protectionist.

One result of the Canadian labor men's large attention to the question of wages has been to arouse against him some resentment on the part of the great army of other workers and salaried people generally who are disposed to accept the statement that much of the high cost of living must be charged to the unions with their unending demands for higher wages. As a matter of fact, the interests of the union man, the farmer, the storekeeper, the clerk are largely in common. The problem is to find a basis for united action.

CRITICS OF THE BIG SHOW.

Now that the Exhibition is over, loyal critics who would not say a word while its success was in the balance, are raising their voices in protest on account of conditions in some of the departments. The chief complaint is that the Fair has been losing its agricultural character. It is a significant fact that the entries in live stock this year were much below those of previous years in point of number, and no satisfactory explanation has been forthcoming of why this was so. The live stock sheds and accommodation generally for this class of exhibits are far below what they ought to be and no doubt before another year a great change will be made in this regard. Those in charge of the Exhibition realize that if the Fair is to be truly representative of National, as it is termed, it must not be allowed to become lopsided.

ESTIMATE OF WESTERN CROP

G. T. P.'s Report Shows 179,828,000 Bushels of Wheat, Half of Which is Harvested.

A despatch from Montreal says: According to figures compiled by the Grand Trunk Pacific the western wheat crop this year will reach 179,828,000 bushels. Their report shows that an average of over 50 per cent. of the grain had already been harvested, but the work has been greatly delayed from one end of the prairies to the other by heavy rain. In several places it is reported that the early cut grain has begun to sprout, but in the majority of districts no damage has yet been done to it. Thrashing has not yet commenced, and in some places it is feared that unless the weather clears a promising crop is going to be badly damaged. There has been no frost to hurt. The yield generally is a large one.

Estimates carefully prepared by experts for the company place the total crop as follows: Wheat, 10,584,000 acres, at 17 bushels per acre, 179,828,000 bushels; oats, 5,245,000 acres, at 42 bushels per acre, 220,290,000 bushels; barley, 1,500,000 acres, at 32 bushels per acre, 48,000,000; flax, 1,111,000 acres, at 11 bushels per acre, 12,210,000 bushels. The total wheat crop last year was 177,109,000 bushels, so that this year's estimate places the yield at between two and three million bushels in excess of that of last year.

LIFTED BY BLAZING BALLOON

Aeronaut, 2,000 Feet Up, Cut Loose Just in the Nick of Time.

A despatch from Toledo, Ohio, says: Hundreds of terrorized spectators on the county fair grounds on Thursday watched the fight against death made by Frank Armstrong, an aeronaut, when he was carried 2,000 feet into the air by a blazing balloon. Armstrong was preparing to make an ascension and was straightening out his parachute rigging when the balloon caught fire and his helpers let go. Fighting to release his parachute, the aeronaut was carried up in a tangle of ropes. He succeeded in cutting loose a moment before the flames reached the parachute, and the blazing balloon collapsed. Armstrong made a successful drop, landing inside the race-track.

OUR LADY OF THE SNOWS.

Sir Percy Girouard Tells How People Abroad Regard Canada.

A despatch from Montreal says: Sir Percy Girouard, formerly Governor of British East Africa, is in Canada on a visit. "I am afraid Our Lady of the Snows is a back number so far as the popular imagination is concerned. A great change has come over opinion abroad in regard to Canada," he said in an interview. "People no longer think of it as a polar country. They now regard it in the true light, as a land where there are greater agricultural opportunities than anywhere in the United States, and as a country with one of the finest climates in the world."

Lord Charles Beresford is still prophesying the crack of doom, and is as firmly convinced as ever that there is no hope for the navy unless things are done exactly as he desires.

asked him whether he had any desire to enter a profession.

"I'm going into the navy!" he replied.

"And why the navy?" inquired the Marquis.

"Because I'd like to be an admiral like Nelson."

"Pshaw! like Nelson," exclaimed his father. "But even if you join the navy, why do you think you'll become an admiral?"

"Because I mean to!" replied young Beresford.

BRITAIN BEST CUSTOMER

Exports of the Dominion to the United Kingdom Last Year Worth Over $150,000,000.

A despatch from Ottawa says: Corrected customs for the year ending March 31, 1912, show that the aggregate foreign trade of the country was $874,637,794, made up of exports of $315,317,250, and imports of $559,320,544. The total duty collected was $87,576,036, as compared with $73,312,367 in 1910.

The United Kingdom was the best customer of Canada, taking $151,853,413 of her exports. The United States took $120,534,634. Of the duty collected $49,177,584 came from the United States, and $22,367,069 from Great Britain. The percentage of duty on all goods imported for consumption was 16.

THE TRUE CAUSE OF RHEUMATISM

Due to Acid in the Blood—Can Only be Cured Through the Blood

Not many years ago even doctors thought that rheumatism was only a local pain caused by exposure to cold or wet. Now they know that the trouble is caused by the blood becoming tainted with uric acid. This condition of the blood causes the muscles to contract, stiffens the joints and irritates the nerves. If not promptly treated the stiffness spreads and the pain grows worse until you are a helpless cripple, tortured day and night. If the disease touches the heart it means sudden death. You cannot cure rheumatism with liniments, plasters or hot cloths, as so many try to do. You must go right to the root of the trouble in the blood. The scientific way to cure rheumatism is to take Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, which make new, rich blood that goes right to the root of the trouble. They sweep out the poisonous acid, loosen the aching joints and muscles and bring ease and freedom where before had been pain and misery.

Miss Beulah Sheppy, Morpeth, Ont., says: "Following an attack of measles I took inflammatory rheumatism. My joints became swollen and the pain was almost unendurable. I doctored with two doctors, but the pain was only relieved while I was taking their medicine, and soon returned. For six months I continued to suffer in this way. Then I tried electric pads, but they failed to do me any good. Finally a friend persuaded me to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and I had not been taking them long before I found relief. I continued using the Pills for a time and soon found myself in perfect health and feeling like a new person. I never lose an opportunity to recommend Dr. Williams' Pink Pills as I cannot say enough in favor of them."

Sold by all medicine dealers or by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

When one is inclined to worry the remark of an old lady should be recalled:—"Yes, dearies; I'd have had an awful heap of trouble in my time if most of it had happened."

Comfort for the Dyspeptic—There is no ailment so harassing and exhausting as dyspepsia, which arises from defective action of the stomach and liver, and the victim of it is to be pitied. Yet he can find ready relief in Parmelee's Vegetable Pills, a preparation that has established itself by years of effective use. There are pills that are widely advertised as the greatest ever compounded, but not one of them can rank in value with Parmelee's.

RASH SO BAD BABY CAME NEAR DYING

Head Broke Out. Spread to Arms, Legs and Entire Body. Itched So He Would Scratch Until Blood Ran. One Box of Cuticura Ointment and Nearly One Cake of Cuticura Soap Cured Him. Has Had No Return.

"When my boy was about three months old, his head broke out with a rash which was very itchy and ran a watery fluid. We tried everything we could but he got worse all the time, till it spread to his arms, legs and then to his entire body. He got so bad that he came near dying. The rash would itch so that he would scratch till the blood ran, and a thin yellowish stuff would be all over his pillow in the morning. I had to put mittens on his hands to prevent him tearing his skin. He was so weak and run down that he took fainting spells as if he were dying. He was almost a skeleton and his little hands were thin like claws.

"He was bad about eight months when we tried Cuticura Remedies. I had not laid him down in his cradle in the daytime for a long while. I washed him with Cuticura Soap and put on one application of Cuticura Ointment and he was so soothed that he could sleep. You don't know how glad I was he felt better. It took one box of Cuticura Ointment and pretty near one cake of Cuticura Soap to cure him. I think our boy would have died but for the Cuticura Remedies and I shall always remain a firm friend of them. He was cured more than twenty years ago, and there has been no return of the trouble. I shall be glad to have you publish this true statement of his cure." (Signed) Mrs. M. C. Maitland, Jasper, Ontario, May 27, 1910.

For more than a generation mothers have found a speedy, agreeable and economical treatment for their skin-tortured little ones in Cuticura Soap and Ointment. Although they are sold by druggists and dealers everywhere, a liberal sample of each may be obtained free, from the Potter Drug & Chem. Corp., sole props., 53 Columbus Ave., Boston, U.S.A.

CASTING CANDY TOYS.

Manufacturers Are Getting Ready for Christmas.

About now is the time when candy manufacturers begin casting candy toys for the holiday trade, those various figures of hard, transparent candy that have been so long familiar.

The season for the manufacture and sale of these goods now lasts annually for four months, from September to December. Fifty years ago these hard candy figures which young folks so much fancy were likely to be given to the children at Christmas only, along with their other Christmas gifts, but in later years they have come to be used as well for gifts at fairs and festivals, and so their season has been extended, but the toys themselves remain in the same old time forms in which they have been handed down through generation after generation. It is doubtful if the children would like to see them changed.

There are still made the same familiar candy horses and candy dogs and boats and flower pots and houses and fishes and cats and rabbits and men, all just as before, and now as ever the little children to whom these figures come stand them up to see if they will stand alone and then in due time they pick up a candy horse and bite off its head, and then finally they eat the rest of it, all just as they have always done and they like them as much as ever.

But while these candy toys in their shapes remain the same there have been some changes in the details of their manufacture. In old times they were made in just two colors, red and yellow, and with perhaps two flavors, lemon and wintergreen, whereas now they are turned out in many separate colors or tints and in many flavors. Here, for instance, is one candy manufacturer, who makes these toys in twenty or more different shapes and each one in nine separate colors and in nine separate flavors.

They are cast in iron moulds. These goods are known as assorted clear toys and they are put up for the trade in boxes of five pounds and in pails of thirty pounds. Their production is started early to give time for distribution, and already the casting of these toys for the present season has begun. They are turned out annually in millions.

RIGHT HOME.

Doctor Recommends Postum from Personal Test.

No one is better able to realize the injurious action of caffeine — the drug in coffee—on the heart, than the doctor. Tea is just as harmful as coffee because it, too, contains the drug caffeine.

When the doctor himself has been relieved by simply leaving off coffee and using Postum, he can refer with full conviction to his own case.

A Mo. physician prescribes Postum for many of his patients because he was benefited by it. He says:

"I wish to add my testimony in regard to that excellent preparation —Postum. I have had functional or nervous heart trouble for over 15 years, and a part of the time was unable to attend to my business.

"I was a moderate user of coffee and did not think drinking it hurt me. But on stopping it and using Postum instead, my heart has got all right, and I ascribe it to the change from coffee to Postum.

"I am prescribing it now in cases of sickness, especially when coffee does not agree, or affects the heart, nerves or stomach.

"When made right it has a much better flavor than coffee, and is a vital sustainer of the system. I shall continue to recommend it to our people, and I have my own case to refer to." Name given by Canadian Postum Co., Windsor, Ont. Read the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs. "There's a reason."

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

SLEW 5,000 BULLS.

Statue to Spain's Most Famous Toreador.

The citizens of Cordova are about to erect a statue to Spain's most famous toreador, Legartijo, who participated in 1,700 bull fights and slew over 5,000 animals.

When it was represented to the Mayor that Cordova had given birth to many deserving sons who still awaited their monuments, he replied that the municipality had considered all that, and had come to the conclusion that Legartijo was its most illustrious child. The philosopher Seneca had been a failure inasmuch as Nero, his pupil, did him no credit; the great Capt. Gonzalvo, the poet Gonzora, and others had undoubtedly possessed great merit, but had not endeared themselves to Cordovians in such a measure as Legartijo.

Although twenty years had passed since his retirement from the arena, his memory was ever green. His stately, elegant bearing, skilful, rapid mode of attack, and the absolute precision of his death-stroke had transformed the bull-fight into a high-class exhibition of science and art.

The design, which will be carried out in white marble, represents Legartijo in an attitude of perfect repose, his right hand resting on the hip, his left retaining the folds of the mantle flowing to the ground, his eyes calmly observant, as Spaniards have so often seen him watching the struggle of his colleagues until the moment for his decisive interference had come.

Dr. O. Gordon Hewitt, Dominion Entomologist, says, referring to the infantile death rate from intestinal diseases and diarrhœa spread by the house fly, he believes that the so-called harmless fly is yearly causing the death of thousands of infants, as well as spreading the germs of typhoid fever.

CHILD COVERED WITH ECZEMA

Zam-Buk Worked Complete Cure.

Mrs. A. J. Cameron, of Melita, Man., writes: "When my little boy was six weeks old he had eczema. The sores simply covered his face and head, and I had to tie his hands to keep him from scratching and making them bleed. The doctor gave me several kinds of ointment, but they did no good. I then tried fourteen boxes of an advertised remedy. Still there was no improvement! I tried another ointment, and several medicinal soaps, but the poor little fellow still continued to suffer. One day a friend said, 'Why don't you try Za-Buk?'

"I began with this balm, and a week's treatment made a great difference. I persevered, and within a month every sore was healed! Thanks to Zam-Buk his scalp is perfectly healthy; and his hair has grown again."

THE USAGES OF ROYALTY.

A patriotic Scotsman was present at a meeting of a certain society, at which an eminent Shakespearian scholar dwelt on the virtues of his favorite author. At the close of the meeting the Scot approached the lecturer, and the following dialogue took place:

"Ye think a fine lot o' Shakespeare, doctor?"

"I do, sir," was the emphatic reply.

"An' ye think he was mair clever than Rabbie Burns?"

"Why, there is no comparison between them."

"Maybe no, but ye telt us tonicht it was Shakespeare who wrote 'Uneasy lies the head that wears a croon.' Now, Rabbie would never hae written sic nonsense as that."

"Nonsense, sir?" cried the indignant doctor.

"Aye, just nonsense. Rabbie would hae kent that a king, or a queen, either, diena gang to bed wi' the croon on his head. He wad hang it over th' back o' a chair."

HICKS' SEPTEMBER FORECASTS.—A regular storm period is central on the 28th, extending from the 26th, to October 1st. The mercury period comes at this time, the moon in full, on the celestial equator, and at an eclipse node on the 26th. All these, being near the centre of earth's autumnal equinox, call for very active and violent disturbances. Hurricanes in the south, and inland storms generally, are to be expected. A very low barometer anywhere, at this presage danger. The 26th is the centre of a seismic period, involving the 23rd to the 29th. Earthquakes will be reported in many directions. The month will end with change to very cool. In the extreme north and northwestern sections, rain will end in dashes of snow and sleet, followed by freezing temperatures at night.

"No," says some one, "He's one of the newspaper guys."

I see a man pushing his way through the lines,
Of the cops where a fire brightly glitters and shines.
"Chief Kenion?" I ask, but a fireman replies,
"Oh, no, why, that's one of those newspaper guys."

I see a man start on the trail of a crook
And he scorns all assistance, but brings him to book.
"Mr. Burns?" I enquire. Some one scornfully cries—
"Burns? Naw. He's just one of them newspaper guys."

I see a man knock on a president's door
And the sign "No admittance" completely ignore.
"Is this Morgan that privacy's rights he denies?"
"Morgan? Shucks. It's just one of those newspaper guys."

And some day I'll walk by the great streets of gold,
And see a man enter unquestioned and bold,
"A Saint?" I'll enquire, and old Peter'll reply,
"Well, I should say not; he's a newspaper guy."

WINCHELSEA

Sad Death.—This week it becomes our solemn duty to record the death of Sally Westcott, beloved wife of Mr. John Delbridge, of the 9th Concession of Usborne, who passed away at St. Joseph's Hospital, London, on Sept. 19, under circumstances which are indeed sad, and carries with it wide regret among an entire community of friends and acquaintances of the deceased. In July last Mrs. Delbridge noticed a small growth on her breast, but she did not think seriously of it at first, fearing, however, that it might develop and cause trouble she at once consulted the family physician, who treated her for a time, but as the growth continued to increase in size and otherwise gave her trouble it was deemed advisable to operate and on September 12th she was taken to St. Joseph's Hospital. The operation was performed the following day and while it was pronounced a success as far as the operation was concerned, complications set in and she gradually sank until death claimed her. Mrs Delbridge was a native of the township of Usborne, being a daughter of the late George Westcott, and she has been continuously resided in the township ever since. She was married to John Delbridge, her now bereft husband, in 1871, and to the happy union eight children were born, six of whom survive—three sons and three daughters George and Charles of Usborne, Frank-lin of Claresholm, Alta., Miss Beatrice, Dora and Ila at home. Mrs. Delbridge was a woman of many lovable qualities—kind hearted and true and commanded the esteem and respect of all who knew her. She was a member of the Elimville Methodist church and was admired for her consistent Christian character. She was also a valued member of the Chosen Friends society at Elimville. Besides the sorrowing family she is survived by one brother and two sisters—Mr. Wm. Westcott of Usborne; Mrs. Chas. Kydd of Wappella, Sask., and Mrs. Wm. Snell, Winnipeg. The funeral which took place on Monday and conducted by Rev. Steadman of Elimville, assisted by Rev. Hicks of Hensall, was one of the largest that has ever been held in the community. The funeral service of the Chosen Friends was conducted at the grave, and the floral tributes on the casket were many and beautiful.

Card of Thanks.—Mr. John Delbridge desires to convey to the neighbors and friends his sincere thanks for the many kindnesses shown him and the family during the illness and subsequent death of his wife.

ONLY A MONTH;

OR, A CURIOUS MYSTERY EXPLAINED.

CHAPTER XVII.—(Continued.)

"My life is slipping by," she thought to herself, "and somehow I am not making the most of it. I am harder and colder than before all this trouble came, I was a mere fine-weather character, and the storm was too much for me. If I go on hating auntie perhaps I shall infect Swanhild, and make her turn into just such another narrow-hearted woman. Oh, why does one have to live with people that rub one just the wrong way?"

She fell asleep before she had solved this problem, but woke early and with a restless craving, which she could not have explained, dressed hastily, put on all the wraps that she possessed, and went out into the fresh morning air.

Leaving the steep high-road, she struck off to the left, intent on gaining the top of Hjerkinsho. All around her lay one great undulating sweep of gray country, warmed by the bright sunlight of the summer morning, and relieved here and there by the purple shadow of some cloud.

"If one could always be in a peace like this," she thought, "surely life would be beautiful then! If one could get out of all the littleness and narrowness of one's own heart, and be silent and quiet from all the worries and vexations and dislikes of life! But if one could always have a great wide open space like this that one could go into when one began to get cross—"

After a time she rose and walked quietly home, full of an eager hopefulness, to begin what she rightly felt would be a new life.

Poor Sigrid! she had yet to learn that with fresh strength comes harder fighting in the battle of life, and that of those to whom much is given much will be required.

They were very cheerful that morning at breakfast. Afterward, when they were standing in a little group outside the door, she even passed her arm within Sigrid's quite tenderly, and talked in the most amiable way imaginable of the excursion which was being planned to Kongswold.

"Look! look!" cried Swanhild, merrily, "here are some travelers. Two carioles and a stolkjaerre coming up the hill. Oh! I hope they will be nice, and that they will stay here."

The arrival caused quite a little bustle of excitement, and many speculations were made as to the relationship of the two sportsmen and the two ladies in the stolkjaerre.

"Is there any one of the name of Falck here?" asked one of the travelers as he dismounted from his variole. "We were at Dombaas last night and promised to bring this on; we told the landlord that we meant to sleep at Fokstuene, but he said there was no quicker way of delivery. Seems a strange mode of delivering telegrams, doesn't it?"

"Why, Miss Falck, I see it is for you," said Major Brown, glancing at the direction.

She stepped hastily forward to take it from him, with flushed cheeks and trembling hands; it seemed an eternity before she had torn it open, and the few words within half paralyzed her.

For a moment all seemed to stand still, then she became conscious of the voices around.

"Oh, we were almost blown away at Fokstuen," said one.

"But such fladbrod as they make there!" said another, "we brought away quite a tinful."

"Nothing wrong, my dear, I hope?" said Fru Gronvold. "Child, child, what is it? Let me read."

Then came an almost irresistible impulse to burst into a flood of tears, checked only by the presence of so many strangers, and by the necessity of explaining to her aunt.

"It is in English," she said in a trembling voice. "From Mr. Boniface. It says only, 'Frithiof dangerously ill. Come.'"

"Poor child! you shall go at once," said Fru Gronvold. "What can be wrong with Frithiof? Dangerously ill! See, it was sent from London yesterday. You shall not lose a moment, my dear. Here is your uncle, I'll tell him everything, and do you go and pack what things you need."

The girl obeyed; it seemed as if when once she had moved she was capable only of the one fear—the terrible fear lest she should miss the English steamer.

"I have murmured and rebelled," she thought to herself, "and now God is going to take from me even a chance of making up. Oh, how hard it is to try too late!"

"We have been looking out the routes, dear," said Fru Gronvold, coming into the room, "and the best way will be for you to try for the Friday afternoon boat from Christiania, it generally gets to Hull a little before the Saturday one from Bergen, your uncle says."

"When can I start?" asked Sigrid, eagerly.

"You must start almost at once for Lille-elvedal; it will be a terrible tiring drive for you, I'm afraid—eighty-four kilometers and a rough road. But still there is time to do it, which is the great thing. At Lille-elvedal you will take the night train to Christiania, it is a quick one, and will get you there in ten hours, quite in time to catch the afternoon boat, you see. Your uncle will take you and see you into the train, and if you like we can telegraph to some friend to meet you at the Christiania Station; the worst of it is, I fear most people are away just now."

"Oh, I shall not want any one," said Sigrid. "If only I can catch the steamer nothing matters."

"And do not worry more than you can help," said Fru Gronvold. "Who knows? You may find him much better."

"They would not have sent unless they feared—" Sigrid broke off abruptly, unable to finish her sentence.

Then came the wrench of parting with poor Swanhild, who broke down altogether, and had to be left in the desolate little bedroom sobbing her heart out, while Sigrid went downstairs with her aunt, bade a hurried farewell to Major Brown, Oscar, and Karen; then, with a pale, tearless face, she climbed into the stolkjaerre, and was driven slowly away in the direction of Dalen.

At length the final change had been made. Ryhaugen was pleased, and they drove on as rapidly as might be for the last stage of their journey. At any other time the beautiful fir forest through which they were passing would have delighted her, and the silvery river in the valley below, with its many windings and its musical ripple, would have made her long to stay. Now she scarcely saw them; and when, in the heart of the forest, the skydsgut declared that his horse must rest for half an hour, she was in despair.

"But there is plenty of time, dear," said her uncle, kindly. "Come and take a turn with me; it will rest you."

She paced to and fro with him, trying to conquer the frenzy of impatience which threatened to overmaster her.

"See," he said at length, as they sat down to rest on one of the moss-covered bowlders, "I will give you now while we are quiet and alone the money for your passage. Here is a check for fifty pounds, you will have time to get it cashed in Christiania;" then as she protested that it was far too much, "No, no; you will need it all in England. It may prove a long illness; and, in any case," he added, awkwardly, "there must be expenses."

Sigrid, with a horrible choking in her throat, thanked him for his help, but that "in any case" rang in her ears all through the drive, all through the waiting at the hotel at Lille-elvedal, all through that weary pourney in the train.

Yet it was not until she stood on board the "Anglo" that tears came to her relief.

The bustle and confusion on the steamer, the busy sailors, the weeping emigrants, the black mass of people on shore waving their hats and handkerchiefs, some sobbing, some singing to cheer the travelers, and behind, the beautiful city of Christiania with its spires and towers, all this had to Sigrid the strangest feeling of unreality; yet it was a scene that no one present could ever forget.

CHAPTER XVIII.

On the following Monday afternoon, Roy Boniface, pale and worn with all that he had been through, paced the arrival platform at King's Cross Station. His heart beat quickly as the engine darted into sight and one carriage after another flitted past him. For a minute he could nowhere see her; but hastening up the platform, and closely scanning the travelers, he at length caught sight of the golden hair and black dress which he had been imaging to himself, and heard the clear voice saying, with something of Frithiof's quiet decision:

"It is a black trunk from Hull, and the name is Falck."

Roy came quickly forward.

"Frithiof?" she asked, as she took her hand in his.

"He is still living," said Roy, not daring to give an evasive answer to the blue eyes which seemed to look into his very heart.

"I will see to your luggage," he said; "but before you go to him you must have something to seat; I see you are quite worn out with the long journey, and unless you are calm you will only agitate him."

She did not speak a word, but passively allowed him to take her to the refreshment-room and get her some tea. To please him she tried hard to eat and drink, and before long they were driving to Vauxhall, and all fear lest she should break down was over.

"Now," she said at last, "tell me more about his illness. What brought it on?"

"The doctor says it must have been brought on by a great shock, and it seems that he heard very sad news that day of Lady Romiaux."

"I knew it was that wretched girl in some way," cried Sigrid, clinching her hand. "I wish she were dead!"

"She is, as Frithiof incessantly says, 'Worse than dead,'" replied Roy. "It is a miserable story. Apparently he got hold of some newspaper, read it all, and was almost immediately broken down by it. They say he was hardly himself when he left the shop that night, and the next evening, when I saw him, I found him delirious."

"It is his brain that is affected, then?" she faltered.

"Yes; he seems to have been out of health for a long time, but he never would give way. But if only we could get him any sleep he might even now recover."

"How long has he been without it?"

"I came to him on Tuesday evening; it was on the Monday that he read that paragraph, just this day week, and he has never slept since then. When did my telegram reach you, by the bye?"

"Not until Thursday. You see, though you sent it on Wednesday morning, yet it had to be forwarded from Bergen, as we were in an out-of-the-way place on the Dovrefield."

"And you have been traveling ever since? You must be terribly worn out."

"Oh, the traveling was nothing; it was the terrible anxiety and the slowness of everything that almost maddened me. But nothing matters now. I am at least in time to see him."

"This is the house where he is lodging," said Roy, as the cab drew up. "Are you fit to go to him now, or had you not better rest first?"

"No, no, I must go to him directly" she said. And, indeed, it seemed that the excitement had taken away all her fatigue; her cheeks were glowing, her eyes, though so wistful, were full of eagerness. A

BIG TRAIN ROBBERY.

Mystery in France Cleared Up After More Than Eight Months.

Eight months of inquiry into the sensational robbery of the Indian mail train between Paris and Dijon, on the night of November 16 last, has proved that the extraordinary feat, which, it was supposed, only a thoroughly organized band could accomplish, was committed by a raving maniac, single-handed. The express, which left the Gare de Lyon in Paris at 8.35 p.m., consisted almost exclusively of mail vans. Three of them were broken into while the train was going at speed of sixty or eighty miles an hour. About 100 mail bags were ripped open, bonds and scrip of various descriptions were stolen, and certain amounts of cash disappeared. Suspicion fell on a former postal employe named Bazencourt, who was traced to Belgium, and who was arrested as he was trying to negotiate some of the scrip, on which he had made clumsy erasures and changes. He was extradited, and in the course of the examination it was learned that he had been discharged by the postal authorities on account of his eccentricities.

There was a suspicion that he was not entirely sane. The magistrate asked him for his reason for robbing the mails. Bazencourt, who had fully admitted having committed the deed quite alone, was proud of his achievement, and complained that he was not allowed to carry out his scheme to the end, which was to buy a menagerie, to become famous as a tamer of wild animals, make a fortune, and reimburse those whom he had robbed.

In addition to the twenty-seven first prizes of $50 each, there will be eighty-one other cash prizes, ranging from $10 to $25 in our

1912 PRIZE CONTEST FOR FARMERS

This contest is along the same lines as the one which was so successful last year, except that there are three times as many prizes, and therefore three times as many chances for each contestant to win. Every farmer in Canada who uses "Canada" Cement is eligible to compete. The conditions are such that large and small users of cement have equal opportunities to win a $50 prize.

The contest is divided into three classes, and there are first, second, third and fourth prizes ($50, $25, $15 and $10) in each class.

CLASS "A"—Prizes to be awarded to the four farmers in each province who use most "Canada" Cement on their farms in 1912.

CLASS "B"—Prizes to be awarded to the four farmers in each province who send photographs of the best concrete work done with "Canada" Cement on their farms in 1912.

CLASS "C"—Prizes to be awarded to the four farmers in each province who send the best description, telling how any piece of concrete work was done with "Canada" Cement. (Entries for this prize must be accompanied by photographs of the work.)

In addition to thus being divided into classes, so as to give small users of cement an equal chance with those who use more, the Contest is also divided into nine divisions, one for each province. So you see you need only to compete with the other farmers of your own province, and not with those all over Canada.

Don't think that because you have never used cement, you cannot win a prize. Many of last year's prize winners had never used cement before they entered the Contest. We will send you a free book, "What the Farmer Can Do With Concrete," that will not only help you in the Contest, but will tell you everything you could want to know about the use of cement on the farm.

NOTES AND COMMENTS

London, England, is an old and well-governed city; its people are accustomed to police regulations, and most of them have been familiar from childhood with city conditions. But the authorities of the metropolis are now trying to devise means of preventing street accidents.

In 1881 127 persons were killed and 3,400 were injured in the streets of London. In 1911 410 were killed and 15,254 were injured. Of the 410 deaths last year 122 were caused by horse-drawn and 288 by motor vehicles. Sir John Macdonald recently stated that in London 94 per cent. of the fast vehicles and 20 per cent. of the commercial vehicles are now mechanically propelled. Horse-drawn carts, vans and carriages (excluding cabs and omnibuses) kill 80 to 90 persons a year and injure 4,000 to 5,000.

The problem of safety in London therefore, must deal largely with the regulation of horse-drawn vehicles as well as motor vehicles. It is evident that modern city streets are perilous in the old as well as the new world, and much must be done in the way of regulation. We may be approaching the day when pedestrians and vehicles will, for safety's sake, not occupy the same level.

"Unsinkable," "fireproof," "safe excursion boats," "healthy summer resorts"—a fifth of these self-deceptive expressions is "pure spring water." If water comes bubbling up out of the ground in the country, clear and cold, it is concluded at once that surely it must be absolutely free from possibilities of disease. Cool, refreshing well water on a farm must certainly be much better, so most people seem to think, than city water that has been piped for miles.

Medical experience, however, shows that there is much more danger in the cool, fresh water of the country than in the tap water of the cities. Well water is particularly dangerous. Unless the conditions near the well are very favorable contamination is comparatively easy. Many a city dweller who indulges in this cool, fresh spring or well water develops disease from it. At times a tolerance for the impurities in water seems to be acquired by those who have been indulging in it frequently, while those who take it for the first time may suffer. Pure spring or well water may be as fatal in its own way as the "unsinkable" ships or the "fireproof" buildings.

HINTS FOR THE HOME.

Drains should be tested every year by an expert, if you wish to keep a clean bill of health. Cracks in the pipes or joints, however slight, may cause you a great deal of trouble.

Young babies should be carried alternately on either arm. A deformity of some kind may result if always carried on the same side, and any tendency to squint will be encouraged.

Flour should be sifted for all kinds of puddings, cakes and pastry. It insures freedom from lumps, and makes every dish lighter. The extra trouble is not worth consideration.

Rice and macaroni require quick boiling to burst the starch contained in them, and to prevent burning.

Black velvet may be cleaned by immersing it in motor spirit, and rubbing the stained parts with a piece of flannel. Hang in the air to dry. Use the petrol in a room without a fire or light, or in the garden.

To Curl Celery.—Clean the celery thoroughly and then with a sharp knife, starting from the top, cut slits one inch long down both sides. Lay the celery in water again for two hours. When put in a glass for serving the celery will stand in curls.

Clean pans in the kitchen have more than one advantage, besides that of appearance. A clean saucepan gets hot much quicker than one that has a thick outer coating of soot and grease, which may actually be scraped off with a knife! That this is no exaggeration can be but too easily proved. Each time that a stewpan or frying-pan is used, fill it with clean cold water, adding a small piece of soda. This when hot should be emptied away, and the inside of the saucepan and lid scoured with soap and sand quickly, and the outside freed from all dirt by means of a stiff brush kept for that purpose only. The box of sand should be as indispensable as the jar of soda. Nothing makes tables and shelves so white as a good scour with soap and sand.

Fashion Hints

SEEN IN PARIS SHOPS.

The new gold and silver ribbons have picot edges.

Hats of crin, especially in black, are coming into use.

Original tailored costumes are made of toile de Jouy.

Neckruffs of tulle or chiffon taffeta will be seen this fall.

Plaid ribbons are seen to a slight degree in new neckwear.

The transparent tunics for evening gowns are holding their own.

The ideal model for an evening gown of brocade is the princess.

Girdles of soft silk, satin, or leather are fastened with huge buckles.

Khaki color and white is a favorite combination for the linen trotting suit.

Norman bonnets of supple silk are the newest headgear for automobile use.

In millinery the tendency to fancy ornaments, the older the better, is increasing.

The side frill is no longer fashionable. The double frills for coats and for waists are seen everywhere.

It is certain that the return of plaited skirts means that checks will be a favored novelty. Stripes will also be featured. Wide stripes in skirts will be worn with jackets in plain colors.

Neckwear will be a very important item of dress this fall. The new directoire coats absolutely demand good neckwear. The stock with cascade jabot is shown among the new models for fall.

Some of the early fall dresses and waists have a round neck finish. The most popular low cut is about one inch below the collar line. For yokes with high collars, Brussels net is in high favor.

A new collar shape is that which extends well out on the shoulder, in epaulet effect. An embroidered net collar shaped in this fashion is edged with Irish and has Irish medallions inserted on each shoulder.

A very chic and becoming toque is made of swathed silk or gauze or lace, soft and symmetrical, yet carelessly arranged in long folds around the frame and finished at the left side or in front with a feather.

It extremely fashionable, the new fall hat should be made of two materials—velvet and moire, velvet and plush, velvet and fur, velvet and tulle, velvet and ottoman, velvet and satin, or velvet and leather, in two colors.

The girls' and young women's suits show belts and belted effects. A few have Russian blouse coats; the coat buttons high up to the throat in military effect.

Seventeenth century buckle patterns are being revived. They are copied in chiseled metal, enamel, silver, and gilt, and can be transferred to different pairs of slippers.

Some of the new afternoon dresses show plaitings beneath polonaise effects, and they emphasize the Japanese note. They are made of rich brocades, metal laces, epingle, and velvets.

The new suits show three-quarter short front coats with standing half roll collars, open throat, and trimmed with braided fur. Ribbed velvet, panne, and sable cloth are the favorite materials.

The new frocks have wide girdles. Satin, taffeta, crepe de chine, tulle and velvet are used. They meet the yoke line in front and extend half way up the back. They are plaited and fit smoothly.

There is a craze for gowns of white charmeuse or rich crepe de chine. They are made on princess lines and fastened with crystal buttons extending fro mthroat to the hem of the skirt. A few of the more daring are worn with a black velvet ceinture with sash ends lightly resting on the dress at the side or at the back. Then, the white suede shoes are decorated with cut ornaments. With this is worn a large black hat trimmed with a simple ribbon bow with a picot edge.

Sweet Potato Custard.—Beat until light five eggs, three-quarters of a cupful of sugar, and one-quarter of a teaspoonful of salt. Add three cupfuls of scalded milk. Pour this mixture over three cupfuls of sweet potato,—previously boiled and grated,—one tablespoonful of butter, and one-half teaspoonful of cinnamon. Beat, and bake in a buttered pudding-dish. Serve with a hot sauce.

Golden Cream Cheese.—Mix one cupful of grated cheese (dry pieces may be used), one tablespoonful of corn-starch, one-half teaspoonful each of salt and mustard, and a shake of Cayenne pepper. Add four teaspoonfuls of butter, and four tablespoonfuls of milk. Beat until smooth, and cook over hot water until well blended and creamy—about ten minutes. Turn into a jelly tumbler and keep in a cool place. This is delicious on crackers. Two thin slices of bread with the cheese spread over them, sprinkled with peanuts or walnuts, make a good sandwich.

A CLEVER ONTARIO WOMAN FARMER.

WHO WILL CONTROL THE PANAMA CANAL.

(By Chas. M. Bice, Denver, Col.)

Doubtless the most important question before the English and American people to-day is the one which has just arisen respecting the rights of the two nations in the use of the Panama Canal, now nearing completion. This "Key" that opens a ship passage way between the two great oceans was built by the U. S. at a tremendous cost. Forty millions were paid to France for the remnants of her failure, consisting of antiquated machinery and material, and ten millions to the Panama Republic for the ten mile strip of land, or rather of rock, across the isthmus in 1904, and many hundreds of millions paid for excavating and fitting the canal for use, which will be 48 miles long, 150 feet wide, and 40 feet deep. Solid mountains of hard rock had to be blasted and removed, and the total cost, when completed, will reach figures that will stagger the imagination.

It is now about five-sixths done, and at the present rate of progress it is not expected to take long to complete it.

Grave complications have grown out of the interpretation of what is known as the "Hay-Pauceforte" Treaty between Great Britain and the U. S., and especially as to the meaning of the following paragraph therein:

"The Canal shall be free and open in time of war as in time of peace to the vessels of commerce and of war of all nations, on terms of entire equality, so that there shall be no discrimination against any nation or its citizens or subjects in respect of conditions or charges of traffic or otherwise."

Prior to this treaty the two nations were under what was called the "Clayton-Bulwer" Treaty, which stood in the way of America's building the canal by herself.

In 1901, the U. S. succeeded in inducing Great Britain to agree to a substitute treaty, and the Hay-Pauceforte agreement was the result. This treaty grants to the U. S. so far as Great Britain is concerned, the right to build, own and operate such a canal as a strictly American enterprise. To quote the exact language of the treaty, it provides among other things that the U. S. "shall have the exclusive right of providing for the regulation and management of the Canal."

The legislation pending in congress proposes to give to the U. S. free use of the canal for all her coast-wise vessels, and to this, Great Britain has filed a vigorous protest at Washington, which may yet involve these powerful nations in serious difficulties. Let us dispassionately consider the situation, and see if we can learn the true issue between them.

The American merchant marine, except for coast wise traffic is practically nil. We cannot build ships as cheaply as other nations, because of our tariff, and the high scale of wages that prevail in this country, and no ship, not built in this country, is allowed to sail under the American flag, or engage in coast-wise trade. When this canal is formally opened, as it is expected to be, January 1, 1915, the U. S. coast will be practically continuous from Maine to Washington State inclusive.

It is proposed to allow American coastwise ships free use of the canal and to charge all foreign ships a toll of not to exceed $1.25 a ton, and this is the precise proposition that Great Britain and Canada have so vigorously protested against. These questions seem to have divided the President's Cabinet, Congress and the two old parties.

The difficulty is centered in the meaning that is to be given to the term "all nations" in the aforesaid quotation from the treaty, and whether the U. S. herself is included, so that her vessels must be put on an equality, and pay the same tolls as other nations; or does this clause simply mean that the U. S. shall treat all other nations alike? It is difficult to see any real ground for controversy in the interpretation of this clause of the treaty, where if it should be construed as including U. S. coastwise vessels, and as requiring that they shall pay toll the same as foreign vessels, the payment must be to the U. S. and could easily be remitted again, a matter it would surely be beyond the right or power of any other nation to call in question. A remission of toll dues is in the nature of a subsidy, and Great Britain, France and Germany have always granted subsidies to their ships that go through the Suez Canal.

The Panama Canal is not strictly an "international water way," for it was constructed artificially at the sole cost of the U. S., and entirely within its own territory, or territory of which this country has a perpetual lease from the Panama Republic.

It will be observed that the U. S. proposes to exempt from toll only her vessels engaged in the coastwise trade, and as no foreign vessel has ever been permitted to enter that trade, the exemption clause cannot affect foreign nations in the least, for there is not any competition in the coastwise trade.

It is otherwise with American vessels engaged in foreign trade where competition is sharp and brisk, and all such American vessels are obliged to pay the same toll as foreign vessels have to pay for the use of the canal.

The building of this canal will save hundreds of millions of dollars in transportation expenses to the nations of the world, and no matter what is charged as a toll, if at all within reason, foreign shipping will still benefit by hundreds of millions, because of American energy. The canal practically cuts the trip from the east to the west in two, by putting a lane of water in the middle of the American continent. As a part payment for this great outlay for the world's benefit, America very modestly demands that her own coastwise ships, the ships of the nation that built the canal without charge, and this, considering the diminutive size of our merchant marine, is surely a very insignificant compensation for the work the U. S. has done in bringing to a successful termination such a gigantic undertaking. It was evidently taken for granted at the time the treaty was drawn up that the ships of the nation that built and that would own the canal, should be exempt from toll in its use, and the clause in the treaty referred to was inserted to prevent discrimination between foreign vessels in the general use of the Canal, and the compensation they shall pay was made equal for all such vessels. It is a self-evident proposition that the nation that built and that owns the canal should have the free right to use it as she sees fit, so long as she accords the right of use to all other nations on terms of equality as to payment of tolls. So far, the only protest seems to have come from Great Britain. France and Germany have offered no objection, and even Japan, more deeply interested than any other nation, makes no protest against allowing the ships of the U. S. to use her own canal free.

Disraeli enabled Englishmen to make millions every year in profits on the Suez-canal investment, and England gives back to English ships in the form of a subsidy, every dollar that her ships pay when they go through the Suez Canal. Then why would not the U. S. be justified in doing the same thing for her vessels in the use of the Panama Canal, which American enterprise built and which America owns? What is the use of hypocritical pretense? Why go around "Jack Robinson's Barn" and enact the farce that all American vessels shall pay toll at one end of the canal, that they may receive the same toll back at the other end of the canal, in the shape of a subsidy, which no nation could seriously dispute the right of this country to do if it should so choose?

It would be a strange logic, indeed, that would prohibit the nation that spent her millions to build the canal, and that owns it absolutely, from giving special privileges to its own ships if it saw fit so to do.

It has been suggested that the opposition of Great Britain is a commercial, and hence a selfish, one, because the free use of the canal to American coastwise vessels would seriously affect the trade of her colonies—Jamaica, Barbadoes, Bahama Islands and British Honduras, in tropical fruits, such as oranges, lemons, bananas, pineapples, etc.—by the lower freights that would bring similar fruits from California in competition, etc. But lower freights and lower prices of these fruits would surely benefit the greatest number of people, and put these delicacies within the reach of all, and this would be a very great blessing, and one that cannot come too quickly.

CHAS. M. BICE.

Denver, Colo, Aug. 29, 1912.

THE ORIENT AND OCCIDENT

The Eternal Fatherland of God and the Universal Brotherhood of Man

I have on my desk one of the bells from the temple of heaven taken from the Orient, to which I hope it will be returned some day. I often feel that it is not out of tune with the other bells of that other heaven in the occidental mind and called Christian. Indeed, I am sure that the full chorded music of the real Temple of Heaven will never come until we have the tones of the bells of faith which sound in the oriental mind. All great religions have been born in the East and they must be interpreted in the air of their birthplace. Christianity has suffered very much from the chill and superlative activity, the overworking passion for exploit in the western mind. Christianity is a gift from the Orient to the Occident; and we will never understand some of its finest passages until it is once more seen and heard in the atmosphere

OUT OF WHICH IT CAME.

You have to take a pearl sometimes back into an ocean cave, or at least to a pool at the edge of the sea out of which it came, in order to revitalize it, and then the iridescence startles into glorious life to the eye.

At the World's Congress of Religions representatives of their religion and of ours joined together in the only prayer in which we could all join, and that is our Lord's Prayer, which begins when we say "Our Father." We see no peace either for the mind of the individual or for our nations except in the realization of this vision. There must be a supreme Fatherhood above us all, and this is its logical result, namely, a universal human brotherhood on the earth. Men of the Orient know that Jesus has their secret. He begins his reforms first with ideas, with thinking and not with things. As we need their atmosphere and point of view to understand this oriental Christ, in his method of progress, so they need his mastery and guidance to take what is the result of their brooding and contemplation and the conclusion of any noble pursuit after the Absolute and make it real.

The order of progress, in the mind of Jesus, was first, "the new heavens," and then "the new earth wherein dwelleth righteousness." First a dream, then a duty, and then a deed; first the far-away vision, then a conviction to be obeyed; then the consequent and blessed reality. First a true idea of God, and ultimately the working out of that,

A TRUE IDEA OF MAN.

All beneficent revolutions which have enlarged and strengthened the privileges and opportunities of humanity have come and succeeded and left their unvanishing blessings because of the invincible power of this principle. It has overturned thrones of boastful privilege, and it has created constitutional governments upon the ruins of tyrannies. It has crowned the wrecks of old autocracies by forms of civilization, young and self-respectful. There is not a single throne on earth forgetful of the principle of the eternal fatherhood of God and the universal brotherhood of man, which will not speedily be dissolved in the morning time and the sure triumph of this idea. The mere forms of republican institutions, the gigantic experiments of democracy, will fail as surely and pass away as enchanting dreams, if we neglect to put into legislation, into our commerce, into our education, and into our temples of politics and religion the sovereign idea that God is the Father of all, and that all men are brethren.—Rev. Frank W. Gunsaulus.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

INTERNATIONAL LESSON, SEPT. 29.

Lesson XIII.—Review. Golden Text, John 6. 63.

PRACTICAL LESSONS.

Lesson I.—On a day of sunshine I went into a room absolutely dark. The occupant had drawn the curtains down tight. Christ was the light of the world, but he could not bring light to those who loved darkness.

Lesson II.—The Word is a living seed. Plant it amid favoring conditions and you have the miracle of spiritual life, just as when you plant a seed you have the miracle of plant life.

Lesson III. — Spiritual growth, our Lord tells us, is like plant growth—first the blade, and then the ear, and then the full corn in the ear. The blade may be very small and the harvest very great.

Lesson IV.—Like the disciples we would put an end to wrong-doing, here and now. But in trying to root out wicked members of church and Sunday school we may do more harm than good, "like striking a heavy blow at a fly on a Venetian vase."

Lesson V.—"Put God first" is a fine motto. When the sun was put in the center of our system the astronomers were able to bring order out of chaos. They would have stayed in the dark forever if they had insisted that the heavenly bodies move around the earth. "Seek ye first the kingdom of heaven," said the Master.

Lesson VI.—Our hope lies not in the absence of storm, but in the presence of Christ who is able to control the tumult—not only that of wind and wave but that of troubled soul and mind.

Lesson VII.—Jesus in restoring the daughter of Jairus to life proved that the soul does not die with the body. Death does not end all.

Lesson VIII.—If people should think to put out fire by tearing down the firebell we should call them exceedingly foolish. When the people of Nazareth rejected Jesus they were rejecting their Physician, their Deliverer, their Joy-Bringer.

Lesson IX.—John's success lay in the fact that he preserved his manhood untarnished amid great temptation. No man's life is a failure who is himself a moral success.

Lesson X.—Christ always uses men to reach other men. He sent out twelve men and not twelve angels. The children of Israel were brought out of Egypt by a man—Moses. In military hospitals it has been found that the best nurses are soldiers who had been wounded.

Lesson XI.—Capernaum had a great advantage in Christ's personal teaching and miracles. We are responsible for our advantages. We expect the steamship to cross the sea faster than a sailing vessel. Have we not had greater religious advantages than Capernaum?

Lesson XII.—Jesus conferred a great privilege on the disciples in making them the agents of his bounty when the five thousand were fed. He could have rained manna from heaven, or summoned angels to help, but he chose a lad with his lunch, and his twelve disciples.

A Chilblain Cure.—Soak the feet and hands twice or thrice a week in hot water, which has common salt dissolved in it, in the proportion of half a pint of salt to a gallon and a half of water.

Carrots should be scrubbed and scraped. The skin is extremely thin and the nourishment lies in the red pulp. The yellow inside is wooden and indigestible, hence the reason for this treatment is easily seen.

THURSDAY ,SEPT. 26, '12

Sir Wilfrid Laurier says he is a strong admirer of Mr. Borden, except his politics. The vast majority of the people of the British Empire are strong admirers of Mr. Borden's politics, too.

You may be extraordinarily brilliant and capable of putting a deal through that requires brain tact, and personal charm and knowledge and all the other traits that go to make a successful worker, but if you lack the ability to be on time, you might as well be without the other necessary traits. Business today will not wait for anybody. It is always progressing—always a few steps ahead, and the least you can do is be on time. This applies to the office girl as well as to the saleswoman, the office manager, or the woman lawyer. You cannot afford this one sloppy habit.

The following table gives the 1912 wheat production of the countries which have so far made their official reports to the Institute.

	Thousands of bush. 1912	Thousands of bush. 1911
Prussia	90,471	95,741
Belgium	15,295	14,617
Bulgaria	63,750	72,005
Denmark	3,885	4,469
Spain	112,416	148,497
France	335,041	320,182
England & Wales	58,568	59,956
Hungary	183,601	190,100
Italy	165,523	192,397
Luxemburg	654	641
Roumania	89,417	93,857
Russian Empire	749,942	500,091
Switzerland	3,399	3,324
Canada	206,029	215,951
United States	690,000	621,328
India	366,930	374,845

Egypt	28,948	38,046
Tunis	4,226	3,635
Total	3,192,547	2,990,813

The 1912 production of wheat in the countries which have so far reported to the Institute is 106.7 per cent. of that of 1911. The production of rye in the countries reported is 1,588,000,000 bus or 117.7 per cent. of last year; corn 3,616,000 of last year, oats 3,297,000,000, or 117.8 per cent. of last year corn 3,616,000,000, or 117 per cent of last year.

The extracts from the regulations passed by the enrollment board for administrating the Act governing the licensing of stallions are of the most importance to the horsemen of Ontario. They have waited long for the coming into force of this Act, and now that it has come into operation will no doubt give it their hearty support. It marks the beginning of a new era in horse breeding in this province. That the industry has flourished so well and so long under former conditions is a matter of wonder to those who have studied horse breeding in other countries. The success attained has been accomplished by education and by appeals to intelligent farmers to breed only the best. That is no doubt the best plan provided generally successful results are obtainable. But though the best of educational methods may prevail, there is a lack of uniformity in method, and there are many people who go on the assumption that one horse is as good as another, and that nothing matters so long as the supply is kept up. It became necessary, therefore, that something should be done to check this retrograde movement, and to at least so regulate the service of stallions that the farmer would know something of the breeding and kind of animal travelling through the country. The present stallion Act was passed for this purpose and its coming in force at this juncture is very timely.

PARKHILL—Mr. James Lipps passed away at his home in Parkhill, on Sept. 16th in his 45th year. He was born in Sanilac, Mich., and lived there until eleven years ago when he came to Parkhill. He has been a great sufferer for months but few were aware that his condition was so serious because he so seldom complained. He leaves to mourn his loss his wife and two young children.

Don't Grow Bald Young Man

TAKE CARE OF YOUR HAIR WHILE YOU HAVE HAIR TO TAKE CARE OF.

It's a safe ten to one bet that the young man who uses PARISIAN Sage as an occasional hair dresser will never grow bald.

There's a reason, of course, and it's a very good and sufficient one.

Dandruff germs cause falling hair and falling hair means thinner hair and in due time baldness.

PARISIAN Sage prevents baldness, by destroying the cause of baldness—the little persistent vociferous dandruff germ.

If you have dandruff or itching scalp it means that dandruff germs are sapping the vitality from the roots of your hair. Get rid of all their troubles by using PARISIAN Sage.

It is not a dye, mind you, neither does it contain poisonous sugar of lead or even sulphur. It is a scientific preparation that abolishes dandruff, stops falling hair and scalp itch, and makes hair grow luxuriant.

Many young women as well as men are growing bald and for the same reason.

Use delightful, refreshing PARISIAN Sage; it nourishes the hair roots, if the roots are not dead, and brings to every user a head of glorious hair—radiant and fascinating. Large bottle for 50 cents at drug stores and toilet counters. See that you get PARISIAN Sage.

W. S. COLE guarantees it.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials.

BUSY CELL TOILERS.

The Marvelous Work They Constantly Perform in the Blood.

The blood cells are important members of the cell community and are exceedingly numerous, there being over 75,000,000,000 of the red blood cells alone. These red blood cells move in the blood currents, carrying through the arteries each its little load of oxygen, which it transports to the distant tissues that they may be invigorated and vitalized anew, and, returning, carrying through the veins the debris and waste products of the system to the great crematory of the lungs, where the waste is burned and thrown off from the body.

Like the ships that sail the sea, each cell carries its outgoing cargo and returns with another one. Some of these cells perform the office of special repairers, forcing their way through the walls of the blood vessels and penetrating the tissues in order to perform their special tasks.

There are several other kinds of cells in the blood besides the carriers just mentioned. There are the wonderful soldier and police cells, which maintain order and fight battles when necessary. The police cells are on the constant lookout for germs, bacteria and other microscopic disturbers of the peace of the body.

When these tiny policemen discover vagrant germs or criminal bacteria they rush upon the intruder and, tying him up in a mesh, proceed to devour him. If the intruder be too large or vigorous a call for assistance is sent out, and the reserve police rush to the assistance of their brothers and overpower the disturber of the peace.

Sometimes when the vagrants are too numerous the policemen throw them out from the body by means of pimples, boils and similar eruptions. In case of infectious diseases an army corps is ordered out in full strength, and a royal fight is waged between the invading army and the defenders of home and country.—William Walker Atkinson in Nautilus.

CHINESE SIGNBOARDS.

Poetic Gems to Attract Business to Shops in Peking.

W. Simpson in "Meeting the Sun" writes: "I saw in Peking a list of signboards, and a few samples of them will illustrate their general character: 'Shop of Heaven Sent Luck,' 'Shop of Celestial Principles,' 'The Nine Felicities Prolonged,' 'Mutton Shop of Morning Twilight,' 'The Ten Virtues All Complete,' 'Flowers Rise to the Milky Way.'

"In these signs we can see that the Chinese can combine the soul of a poet with the pocket of a shopman. Contrast such efforts with 'The Noted Eelple House' of the London streets, and one must feel that we are outer barbarians. Carlyle quotes a Chinese signboard, 'No Cheating Here,' but I could not find anything like it in the list. 'Good and Just According to Heaven' ought to satisfy the ideal notions of the author of 'Sartor Resartus.'"

"The Honest Pen Shop of Li" implies that other pen shops are not honest. The "Steel Shop of the Pockmarked Wang" suggests that any peculiarity of a shopman may be used to impress the memory of customers. Snub noses, squint eyes, lame legs and hump backs might all be used in this way.

A charcoal shop calls itself the "Fountain of Beauty," and a place for the sale of coal indulges in the title of "Heavenly Embroidery." An old rice wine establishment is the "Neighborhood of Chief Beauty," a description the realization of which it is hard to conceive anywhere in Peking. "The Thrice Righteous" one would scarcely expect from an opium shop.—London Globe.

Blocked by an Iceberg.

Discussing the iceberg question, Professor John Milne of London writes that the year he visited Newfoundland one of these ice mountains had stuck in the Narrows, which is the entrance to St. John's harbor. The capital of Newfoundland was bottled up. "A fort pounded at the intruder for a time, but it might as well have pounded at the Karakoram mountains. The monster stopped all traffic either in or out. On the third day, however, it heeled over and sailed away."

Awful Ignorance.

Young Man With Lavender Tie, Pink Shirt and Bright Purple Socks—Say, Jim Lawrence is a queer duck. He pronounces his words so queer! The other day he was telling some girls about going to the Blank inn for a "tahbledote" dinner. As soon as we left the girls I asked him what he meant and come to find out he meant table de hotey! Ha, ha, ha!—Chicago Tribune.

Her Discourse.

"My dear," mildly expostulated her husband, "I said only half a dozen words and you have talked about them for forty-five minutes."

"Well," snapped Mrs. Vick-Senn, "the preacher does that sort of thing every Sunday morning and you never kick about it."—Chicago Tribune.

At Sixes and Sevens.

"I married my first husband for money and my second for love."

"Then you are very happy now, I suppose?"

"No. Alas, no! You see, my first husband married me for love and my second for money."

A Special Favor.

Customer—I want a ton of coal. Dealer—Yes, sir. What size? Customer—Well, if it's not asking too much, I'd like to have a 2,000 pound ton.—Brooklyn Life.

KIPPEN—We are sorry to have to state that reports say that Ed. Cudmore's health isn't at all what we would wish it to be. About two months ago he went to the hospital in Red Deer, Alta., to be treated for diseased bone. The operations appeared to be successful, and he and Mrs. Cudmore left for his sister's in Vancouver, but later reports say he isn't very well. He and his cousin, Mr. Westcott, were running a very successful business in Hairkirk, Alta.

CLINTON—Mrs. Donald Ross has sold her cottage on Isaac street to Mr. Em. Jackson and will in future reside in Toronto, where her two sons are attending university.

VARNA—Mr. Andrew Reid, of the Parr Line, had a very valuable brood mare severely injured recently by coming in contact with a plow handle. The handle pierced through her side, breaking a couple of ribs and entering her lung. It broke off, and it was with great difficulty that the broken part was removed. There are hopes now for the mare's recovery.

MORAY—Mr. David McEwen, who had Mr. Lewis Hope's farm rented during the past year has purchased a 50 acre farm on the townline from Mr. James Georgham. Mr. McEwen will take possession of the property sometime during the present fall and Mr. Hope who moved to Clandeboye, will return to his farm again.

"You are the first man I ever permitted to kiss me."
"And you are the first girl I ever kissed. Will you marry me?"
"I wouldn't marry a liar."
"I would."

HOW TO PRESERVE YOUTH AND BEAUTY.

One great secret of youth and beauty for the young woman or the mother is the proper understanding of her womanly system and well-being. Every woman, young or old, should know herself and her physical make up. A good way to arrive at this knowledge is to get a good doctor book, such for instance, as "The People's Common Sense Medical Adviser," by R. V. Pierce, M. D., which can readily be procured by sending thirty-one cents for cloth-bound copy, addressing Dr. Pierce, at Buffalo, N. Y.

The womanly system is a delicate machine which can only be compared to the intricate mechanism of a beautiful watch which will keep in good running order only with good care and the proper oiling at the right time, so that the delicate mechanism may not be worn out. Very many times young women get old or run down before their time through ignorance and the improper handling of this human mechanism. Mental depression, a confused head, backache, headache, or hot flashes and many symptoms of derangement of the womanly system can be avoided by a proper understanding of what to do, in those trying times that come to all women.

MRS. WILLIAMS.

MRS. G. H. WILLIAMS, of Lynnhaven, Va., wrote: "It is six years since my health gave way. I had female trouble and all the doctors (I employed three) said I would die. I was not able to do my work, had to hire someone all the time. Finally, I read in the papers about Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, and decided to try it. I had not taken but one bottle until I found it had done me good. I took, in all, five bottles of 'Favorite Prescription' and two of 'Golden Medical Discovery,' and now I am able to do all my housework, and have gained fourteen pounds. I advise all women who suffer from female trouble to try your 'Favorite Prescription.' It's the only medicine on earth."

You feel yourself a man and know marriage cannot be a failure. Don't let quacks and fakirs rob you of your hard earned dollars.

THREATENED WITH PARALYSIS

BEFORE TREATMENT

Peter E. Summers relates his experience:
"I was troubled with Nervous Debility for many years. I lay it to indiscretion and excesses in youth. I became very despondent and didn't care whether I worked or not. I imagined everybody who looked at me guessed my secret. Imaginative dreams at night weakened me—my back ached, had pains in the back of my head, hands and feet were cold, tired in the morning, poor appetite, fingers were shaky, eyes blurred, hair loose, memory poor, etc. Numbness in the fingers set in and the doctor told me he feared paralysis. I took all kinds of medicines and tried many first-class physicians, wore an electric belt for three months, but received little benefit. I was induced to consult Drs. Kennedy & Kennedy, though I had lost all faith in doctors. Like a drowning man I commenced the NEW METHOD TREATMENT and it saved my life. The improvement was like magic—I could feel the vigor going through the nerves. I was cured mentally and physically. I have sent them many patients and continue to do so.

SPREAD OF POTATO CANKER

Importation of Potatoes From Europe Is Prohibited by Order-in-Council—Hard to Eradicate.

A despatch from Ottawa says: An Order-in-Council has been passed amending those sections of the Destructive Insect and Pest Act, which deals with the potato canker, by the substitution of a clause prohibiting the importation of all potatoes from Europe in addition to Newfoundland and other points mentioned.

Potato canker is a virulent fungus disease which has done tremendous destruction in Europe during some years past. Until last year importation of potatoes from Great Britain and Ireland and other European points had not been heavy either to this country or the United States, but the failure of the crop last year and the high prices led to heavy importation.

As the potato canker is a disease which not only absolutely destroys the tubers, but is very hard to eradicate, and will remain in the soil for seven or eight years, the most strenuous precautions are justified. In Great Britain a great deal of very costly work is being undertaken in regard to this pest. The United States have recently taken action by passing an Act prohibiting the importation of potatoes from Great Britain and Ireland and several countries in continental Europe and Australia.

MAKING SAFE INVESTMENTS

SOME FINANCIAL TECHNICALITIES EXPLAINED.

The Man Who Thought the Term Gold Bond Meant a Bond Secured on Real Estate Made a Very Poor Guess—"And Interest" Does Not Imply a Bonus for the Purchaser—Quite the Reverse.

The articles contributed by "Investor" are for the sole purpose of guiding prospective investors, and, if possible, of saving them from losing money through placing it in "wild-cat" enterprises. The impartial and reliable character of the information may be relied upon. The writer of these articles and the publisher of this paper have no interests to serve in connection with this matter other than those of the reader.

(By "Investor.")

The other day a man went into a bond house in Toronto, and, before investing, asked a few questions about bonds, which showed at once that he was entirely unacquainted with that form of investment. It also showed that many expressions puzzling to the uninitiated are such ordinary expressions of every day use in financial circles that it is extremely difficult for a financial man to explain matters to a layman who has had absolutely no experience in financial affairs in a few words.

New, the first question this man referred to asked was, "What does 'Gold Bond' mean?" "I suppose," he continued, "it means that it is secured by real estate," though why he should have thought so I have no idea. A "first mortgage gold bond" merely means that the bond is a first mortgage on the property in question and that when it falls due its repayment may be demanded in gold if the bondholder so desires. Some years ago, when governments were less stable than they are now, paper money had a very uncertain value—sometimes paper currency would not be worth 50 cents on the dollar. Indeed, during the war of the Rebellion in the States in the last days of the Confederacy, the paper money of the Confederacy was so discredited that a man paid $100,000 (in paper money) for a pair of boots, which he could have bought for $5 in gold. At that time people who loaned good money to corporations did not like to feel that perhaps they would be repaid at the maturity of their loan in discounted paper currency or in silver coins worth 50 cents on the dollar, as Mexican money is worth to-day. So they made provision that they were to be repaid in gold and thus there came into existence the "gold bond." In Canada at present it is merely a name without significance; but some day, perhaps—after a prolonged war—Canadian paper money may not be worth 100 cents on the dollar, and then the term "gold" on the face of a bond will be a source of deep satisfaction to the owner; for gold is always worth its face value—$20 an ounce—as it is the standard of value and it alone does not fluctuate in value so far as its cash price is concerned.

* * * * *

"What does 'and interest' mean?" was the next question. The bonds to which the investor referred were quoted at 100 "and interest." Peculiarly enough, his idea was directly opposite the truth. He thought that it meant that when he bought bonds now whose interest had been paid on July first he got the interest from that date up to the present as a sort of bonus.

Suppose the interest was paid in July. John Smith owned $10,000 of the bonds then. He had $10,000 invested and his interest was six per cent. Obviously if he sold the bonds on January first he would have received the full six months interest for he would have just cut off the January coupons. But he sells them in October first, let us say. He has had his $10,000 invested for 3 months, and so, of course, should get his interest for that length of time. He can't cut off the coupons for they represent the whole six months interest, so the purchaser pays him his $10,000, and also the interest for three months at six per cent., or $150. On January first the purchaser gets his interest from the coupons—$300, which, less the $150 he paid John Smith, leaves him $150 net, or six per cent. on his $10,000 for the three months from October first to January first. So his is not out of pocket. That is what it means to sell bonds at 100 "and interest." Sometimes one sees that bonds have sold at 100 "flat." In this case the bonds are sold at 100 and the interest for the three months—or for whatever time it has accumulated is thrown in; but in that case the market price usually adjusts the interest. Thus, six per cent. bonds, which sold at 100 on the last interest date usually sell at 103 on the day before the next one, and back at 100 on the day after.

FIRST MOTOR LINES.

Christian X. Reaches New York From New Orleans.

A despatch from New York says: The fleet of craft in New York harbor looked with wondering eyes upon a strange new vessel which glided swiftly and noiselessly, without smokestack or sails, through the shipping to her dock. She was the Christian X. of the Hamburg-American Line, 7,300 tons burden, the first motor ship which has visited the port, and she came in from New Orleans to get fuel oil to run her to Hamburg. Her captain said that she consumed ten tons of oil a day. He calls her the first ocean automobile.

A despatch from Montreal says: News of the Duke of Connaught, as the new dry dock for Montreal is called, came to hand Friday when a wireless message was received from one of the Dutch tugs towing the dock by the Canadian Vickers, Ltd.

The position given shows that the dock is about half-way on her long journey by an extreme southerly route from Barrow-in-Furness to Montreal. 2,000 KILLED AND WOUNDED

Sanguinary Battle Near Town in Tripoli on the Mediteranean Coast—Italian Losses Light.

A despatch from Rome says: The most sanguinary engagements of the war in Tripoli were fought near Derna, a town on the Mediterranean coast, 40 miles north-east of Bengazi. The Italians lost 61 men killed and 113 wounded. The Turks and Arabs left more than 800 dead on the fields. Forty-one prisoners, including an Arab chief, fell into the hands of the Italians.

The battle opened at daybreak, when a force of Turks and Arabs surprised and attacked the Italian lines. The fight raged for four hours, but the superior Italian artillery, supplemented by brilliant bayonet charges, finally routed the Mussulmans, who fled in disorder.

General Reisoli, commander of the Italian army in Tripoli, in his report to the War Office estimates that the Turks and Arabs must have lost 1,000 men killed, including those who were carried off, and that more than 1,000 others were wounded.

TORONTO CORRESPONDENCE

Toronto's Steady Growth—Hon. James Duff—Racing and Its Evils—Exhibition Aftermath—Criticism of Council.

As yet there is apparent no let up in Toronto's remarkable growth. Building permits issued last month were $2,000,000 more than for the corresponding period last year. And that these are not merely paper permits is indicated by the reports from all the building trades. Every department reports record business. Nor is the total of building permits swollen by any unusually large individual structures. The Union Station and Yonge Street Bridge are still in the phantom class. The unusual feature of the building activity is the great number of extensions and alterations as distinguished from new buildings that are under way. Established businesses are making money their trade is expanding and they are preparing to take care of the growth.

Already, too, this term all records for public school attendance have been broken and many youngsters have not yet returned to their classes. Early in the month the new record of 45,656 pupils at school on one day, had been reached, and it is expected that the figure will go over 50,000 shortly.

These signs of the times fill business men settling down for another year's operations after the holiday season with satisfaction. One hears occasionally expressed some nervousness about the real estate situation, but so far criticism has been directed chiefly to the flotation of subdivisions far outside the city. The inflated prices to which this class of real estate is raised by boom times is indicated by the fact that some recently recorded sales have been at prices which were no higher than those recorded in the boom of 25 years ago.

"JIMMIE" DUFF AS A LION.

With the season of fall fairs in full swing it is the turn of Hon. Jas. Duff, Minister of Agriculture in the Queen's Park Cabinet, to step into the limelight. They say that he did not get his share of attention at the Toronto Exhibition this year, but there are other fairs in places where votes count for more than they do in Toronto where he has been the lion of the occasion.

Not that "Jimmie" Duff is much of a lion. Ordinarily he is as mild-mannered as one of the lambs that sports on his rich and prosperous farm up in Simcoe County. He is not ferocious in stature, for he is several inches under the average height. But he must have a streak of iron in his soul for his full name is the Honorable James Stuart Duff, and his parents came from the north of Ireland. It goes almost without saying that he is an Orangeman. They say there is an Orange lodge on the corner of his farm, and that thanks to the activities of the Duff family it is one of the most aggressive in the province. On the stump and in the Legislature "Jimmie" Duff is a ready speaker. The well rounded phrases that are the stock in trade of the stumping politician flow easily from his lips. He has a "straight-from-the-shoulder" manner that can be depended upon to bring cheers from "the boys" on his side of the House. And he has a jaunty independence that sits well. Strolling down from the Parliament buildings these cool evenings, with his hands deep down in his pockets, his hat setting close to his ears and a half-smoked cigar in his teeth, he makes a figure that the Stranger looks at twice, though he might not guess he was Minister of Agriculture.

"Jimmie" Duff's critics say he lacks aggressiveness in the management of his department. But at all events he is himself a successful farmer. Politics are not his first love, though he has been in the House for fourteen years. But if you were to ask him, I think he would say he likes the game. His is a genial soul, to whom hand shaking and the other arts of electioneering come as second nature and of the qualifications of Cabinet timber vote-getting is not the least.

MORE HORSE RACING.

The "merry-go-round" is still with us, "merry-go-round" being the graphic description applied to the Canadian horse racing circuit, under whose system Ontario enjoys or endures, according to the sympathies of the observing, a period of continuous racing, lasting from May until October. Toronto gets about a month of this sport and supports it handsomely. The fall meeting at the Woodbine is less crowded and less gay than the spring function, but it is in its way quite as impressive. It provides the same cross section of society, ranging from the black leg to the society leader. It provides the ladies who go in for that sort of thing the first opportunity to display their new autumn gowns and millinery. Happy is she who has a fresh outfit for each day of the function.

Social reformers, who would abolish racing and the gambling that is rampant in connection with it, seem for the present to have run into a street with a dead end. The game was probably never as flourishing as it is in this year of grace 1912. And the serious-minded wonder how long the country is going to put up with it. An interesting incident was furnished the other day when Mr. Abe Orpen and one or two others pleaded guilty in the police court to taking bets contrary to the law and were fined $1,000 each. The announcement furnished a wild gasp of surprise. Not because anyone doubted the existence of illegal betting, but because anyone, particularly Mr. Orpen, had been "caught with the goods." Betting on the ponies is an everyday incident to hundreds of Toronto workmen and others who can scarcely be described. In a factory some one man takes the bets. Where he places them the others may not know, possibly do not care. They are happy if the horse they backed wins, which may not be often. The bets are paid promptly. Of course all this is illegal, but it is not being stopped.

The serious defalcations of two bank clerks gave some promise of lifting the lid from a serious canker, but nothing came of it, and the canker remains. The youths were the victims of crookedness, and some one made a killing. Who, no one professes to know. Whoever it was took unnecessary chances. Because there is no game harder to beat than horse-racing, even without dishonesty. And there's always a steady supply of young lambs and old ones too, ready to be fleeced.

DISSENSIONS IN EXHIBITION BOARD.

The stories of dissension in the Board of Directors of the Exhibition Association continues. It is fortunate they did not leak out until after this year's fair was safely past, but the trouble may not be smoothed over in time for next year. The most interesting rumor is to the effect that there is a plan on foot to supplant the two present vice-presidents, who, in the ordinary course of events, would look for promotion and elevated to the presidency Mr. J. C. Eaton. In many respects Mr. Eaton would make a most acceptable president. He is a cordial supporter of the Exhibition, and if he were in the chief executive's place would, no doubt, revolutionize many things, not only by reason of the resources he has at his disposal, but by his remarkable capacity for organization.

But it is natural that the two men now in the vice-presidential chairs Mr. Noel Marshal and Mr. Joseph Oliver, should expect some immediate reward for the hard work they have put in.

In connection with the election of the Board there is generally a good deal of intrigue and wire pulling. A year or two a member of the Board gave offense in some quarters. He had also ambitions, but when the next election came around he was quietly knifed. The myster- is who knifed him? Under the circumstances the exhibition has been fortunate in its selection of officers from year to year and that it continues to be served by public-spirited citizens.

ATTACKING CITY COUNCIL.

Criticism of the methods and personnel of the City Council has been growing in volume throughout the year. One of the local dailies has started a campaign of systematic attack. Day after day its columns contain violent charges of incompetence or worse, while its billboards all over the city blazon the same message. Other papers confine their criticisms to particular sections of the council.

Consequently there is likely to be a lively contest next January. But the surprising thing is, how few are the changes in the personnel of the Council from year to year, and it is doubtful if this year will be any notable exception. When a man gets to be alderman he gets so much free advertising by having his name constantly in print that he builds up a reputation which makes his re-election almost certain. Even criticism in a city as big as Toronto, where the candidates can know personally only a small fraction of the electors, seems to help him. Unconsciously he gets the reputation of being a big man. Unless he makes some mistake or is dishonest, which rarely happens, he has a great advantage over all newcomers.

Nevertheless, there seems to be a vague, but widely held, idea that a commission form of government would be an improvement on the present elective system. Judging by the vote last year on the question of establishing a harbor commission, a proposal to make the change would carry on a plebiscite. But the existing council will not likely let it go to a plebiscite. Which, to many observers who believe that the cure for the evils of democracy is more democracy, is a thing to be thankful for.

Morgan, jun., with the ransacking of every room while Mr. Morgan and his forty servants slept through it all is confessed, the police say, by John Bernauer, whom they arrested late on Friday. In his possession were found seven watches, medals, diamond pins and other articles of jewellery belonging to the young financier.

The burglary occurred last January, but the news of it was not made public until some time afterward, when Mr. Morgan informed the police that he would pay a reward of $5,000 for the recovery of the stolen articles, many of which were priceless to him for their associations.

HAMILTON TRAGEDY.

Man Kills His Wife, Then Blows Off His Head.

A despatch from Hamilton says: William G. Wills, 118 Tisdale St., shot and killed his wife, and shortly after turned the weapon on himself and blew part of his head off.

Wills was a man well liked by his friends, but it is told of him that of late he had been drinking heavily. He was a color-sergeant in the 13th Royal Regiment, and had some reputation as a crack shot. Thursday afternoon he and his wife quarreled over a sum of money that the eldest boy had earned. It is stated that Wills wanted to get the money, but his wife refused to part with it. She then walked out of the house by the back door and down an alley towards the street, where she stopped at a gate looking into the road.

Wills, in the meantime, had secured a gun loaded with buckshot. He went out on the back verandah, and, spying his wife leaning over the gate, took careful aim and fired. Part of the shot took effect in the woman's head, killing her instantly. Wills, on seeing that he had accomplished his purpose, went upstairs to his bedroom, where he reloaded the gun, pointed it directly at his face, and pulled the trigger.

The oil set fire to her clothing and she ran into the street. A neighbor, Thomas Nichol, extinguished the flames and in so doing burned his hands severely. Mrs. Eveland had before seeking aid placed her baby in a place of safety. The fire in the house was extinguished before serious damage was done.

BUILDING THE "IGLOO."

How the Eskimos Erect a Snow House in Labrador.

Only one thing, the assurance of a night's shelter of comparative comfort, makes a winter's sledge journey across the desolate, interminable wastes of Labrador bearable. The method of securing this shelter is described by Dr. S. K. Hutton in "Among the Eskimos of Labrador."

"What will you do if you cannot reach home?" I asked Johannes, one afternoon, as we labored through the drifting snow, in the teeth of an arctic storm.

"Stop and build a snow house," said he.

"Will you be able to find good snow in this weather?"

"Find good snow?" said Johannes, with a look of surprise. "I can always find good snow."

When the afternoon light began to grow dull, he pulled out one of the big snow-knives, an appallnig weapon, with a bone handle and a blade a yard long Brandishing this, he trotted from side to side, prodding here and jabbing there. He was "finding snow." Soon Julius stopped the sledge, and they held a consultation

When the place was chosen,—it was a gently sloping hillside, for there the snow hardens the best,—my drivers were soon at work. Each man armed himself with his huge snow-knife, and between them they marked a circle on the snow. Then Johannes retired to the middle and began to dig. He first made a wedge-shaped hole, to give himself a start; and then from the sides of the hole he carved great slabs of the frozen snow. I judged them to be about six or eight inches thick, two or three feet long and eighteen inches high. and they were nearly as heavy as stone.

Johannes just tumbled them out of his hole as fast as he could cut them, and as the hole grew I saw that the slabs were all slightly curved. Julius seized each slab as it toppled out, and carried it gingerly to the edge of the circle. He set the slabs on edge, side by side, and chipped them a little from the top, so that they leaned inward. He pared away the first few with his knife, so that the lowest ring formed the beginning of a spiral. He followed the spiral up, propping each slab against its neighbor, and chipping its edge so that it leaned well inward.

Meanwhile Johannes got nearer and nearer the wall with his digging, and his work got harder and harder, for instead of tumbling the slabs out, he had to pick them up and hand them to Julius over the leaning wall. I thought the wall looked frail and unsafe, but Julius seemed to think otherwise, for he crawled up on it and leaned over to see how Johannes was getting on inside. As a matter of fact, his weight only pressed the slabs together a bit more firmly.

At last the spiral was finished all but the "key-stone." Julius sprawled on the side of the house, while Johannes's hands shoved a big slab through the opening that still remained at the top. Julius laid it over the hole, and chipped the edges away with his knife until it gently dropped into place.

A scraping and trampling noise was next heard inside the house; that was Johannes smoothing the floor. Meanwhile, Julius was filling all the crevices with snow, to keep the wind out.

Soon Johannes was ready to come out. His sword poked out suddenly and slashed a doorway in the wall, and then the man himself crawled out. The house was finished.

CAREFUL DOCTOR.

Prescribed Change of Food Instead of Drugs.

It takes considerable courage for a doctor to deliberately prescribe only food for a despairing patient, instead of resorting to the usual list of medicines.

There are some truly scientific physicians among the present generation who recognize and treat conditions as they are and should be treated, regardless of the value to their pockets. Here's an instance:

"Four years ago I was taken with severe gastritis and nothing would stay on my stomach, so that I was on the verge of starvation.

"I heard of a doctor who had a summer cottage near me—a specialist from N. Y.—and as a last hope sent for him.

"After he examined me carefully he advised me to try a small quantity of Grape-Nuts at first, then as my stomach became stronger to eat more.

"I kept at it and gradually got so I could eat and digest three teaspoonfuls. Then I began to have color in my face, memory became clear, where before everything seemed a blank. My limbs got stronger and I could walk. So I steadily recovered.

"Now, after a year on Grape-Nuts I weigh 153 lbs. My people were surprised at the way I grew fleshy and strong on this food." Name given by Canadian Postum Co., Windsor, Ont. Read the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs. "There's a reason."

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

TENDERNESS REPAID.

A Farmer's Kindness Saved the Life of His Little Daughter.

It was a glorious day in the middle of harvest and the workers were busy in the cornfield. The mighty reaper was going its round, its huge blades cutting and slashing with almost startling rapidity and speed. As it approached a corner of the field several birds were seen to rise suddenly from among the long stalks. The farmer himself was there and on noticing the birds he thought that there would be a nest there. He was a kindly man and as the reaper approached the spot he felt a twinge of pity for the helpless little nestlings, but to stop the reaper would mean trouble, which he knew his men would not take quietly.

The reaper tore along and was almost on the spot, when the farmer sprang forward—he could not let it happen. "Stop!" he cried. 'Stop! There's a nest here. Stop till I remove it." With grumbling and comments on his "softness," which were quite audible to the farmer, his men unwillingly obeyed.

The farmer hastily strode forward to the spot where the birds had risen, and there he saw—which transfixed him with horror—instead of a nest, his own little three-year-old daughter, sound asleep, with a posey of wild flowers clutched in her chubby hand. But for his kind heart in wishing to save the birds he would have seen his own child torn to an awful death.

WHY MITFORD WEPT.

It was the habit of Lord Eldon, in recalling the time when that great but not entirely noble Englishman was attorney-general, to close his speeches with some remarks justifying his own character.

At the trial of Horne Tooke, Eldon, speaking of his own reputation, said, "It is the inheritance I have to leave my children, and by God's help, I will leave it unimpaired."

Here he shed tears, and to the astonishment of those present, Mitford, the solicitor-general, also began to weep.

"Just look at Mitford!" said a bystander to Horne Tooke. "What on earth is he crying for?"

"He is crying to think what a small inheritance Eldon's children are likely to get!" replied Tooke, whose wit was ready and biting.

BREAD A FOOD FOR AGES.

Unleavened bread was common in the days of Abraham. In early England people had no other method of making bread than by roasting corn and beating it in mortars, then wetting it into a kind of coarse cake. In 1596 rye bread and oatmeal formed a considerable part of the diet of the middle classes. During the reign of Charles I. barley bread was used. White wheat bread did not become popular until recent years when bread baking at home ceased to become common and bakeries began to thrive.

When ironing and folding tablecloths fold one week in three and the next in four. This will prevent them from wearing thin at the folds.

Cholera and all summer complaints are so quick in their action that the cold hand of death is upon the victims before they are aware that danger is near. If attacked do not delay in getting the proper medicine. Try a dose of Dr J. D. Kellogg's Dysentery Cordial, and you will get immediate relief. It acts with wonderful rapidity and never fails to effect a cure.

MAKING OF DRUG FIENDS.

A Canton, Ohio, concern was convicted of selling a soft drink containing cocaine. The court considered a $25 fine sufficient punishment. A St. Louis house sold a powder for infants that was said to making "teething" easy; it contained opium. A $10 fine was sufficient punishment. An "agreeable and efficient tonic" was found to contain cocaine, although the presence of this drug was not stated. In this case the court suspended sentence. "Some day," says the Journal of the American Medical Association, "a court may be found that will consider the crimes of making drug fiends of young people, of poisoning babies with opium mixtures, or of killing women with headache powders, as serious offenses."

QUITE OPTIONAL.

"When does the half-past five train leave?" asked a man of a railway porter.

"Five-thirty," was the reply.

"Well," continued the querist, "the church clock is twenty-seven minutes past, the post-office clock is twenty-five minutes past, and your clock is thirty-two minutes past. Now which clock am I to go by?"

"Yes can go by any clock yer like," responded the porter, "but yer can't go by the train, for it's gone!"

A WONDERFUL DISCOVERY

An eminent scientist, the other day, gave his opinion that the most wonderful discovery of recent years was the discovery of Zam-Buk. Just think! As soon as a single thin layer of Zam-Buk is applied to a wound or a sore, such injury is insured against blood poison! Not one species of microbe has been found that Zam-Buk does not kill!

Then again. As soon as Zam-Buk is applied to a sore, or a cut, or to skin disease, it stops the smarting. That is why children are such friends of Zam-Buk.

Again. As soon as Zam-Buk is applied to a wound or to a diseased part, the cells beneath the skin's surface are so stimulated that new healthy tissue is quickly formed. This forming of fresh healthy tissue from below is Zam-Buk's secret of healing. This is why Zam-Buk cures are permanent.

Only the other day Mr. Marsh, of 101 Delorimer Ave., Montreal, called upon the Zam-Buk Co. and told them that for over twenty-five years he had been a martyr to eczema. His hands were at one time so covered with sores that he had to sleep in gloves. Four years ago Zam-Buk was introduced to him, and in a few months it cured him. To-day—over three years after his cure of a disease he had for twenty-five years—he is still cured.

All druggists sell Zam-Buk at 50c. box, or we will send free trial box if you send this advertisement and a 1c. stamp (to pay return postage). Address Zam-Buk Co., Toronto.

A CURE.

Judge—"Why did you steal the gentleman's purse?"

Prisoner—"I thought the change would do me good."

To Men Who Live Inactive Lives.—Exercise in the open air is the best tonic for the stomach and system generally; but there are those who are compelled to follow sedentary occupations and the inactivity tends to restrict the healthy action of the digestive organs and sickness follows. Parmelee's Vegetable Pills regulate the staomach and liver and restore healthy action. It is wise to have a packet of the pills always on hand.

THAT DECEPTIVE.

MINARD'S LINIMENT is also a good article to keep off the mosquitoes.

HYDRO-ELECTRIC FOR EXETER.—Reeve Heaman and Councillors Scott and Rivers were in Goderich Tuesday attending the meeting held for the discussion of Hydro-Electric for the municipalities in the County of Huron. A large number of delegates were present from different parts of the county, thus making it a representative gathering. The meeting was addressed by Mr. Gabby, Chief Engineer for the Hydro Electric commission who went into full detail on the matter of power, its extensions and the steps that would be necessary for the different municipalities in the county of procure it. In conversation with Reeve Heaman he informed the Advocate that he had no doubt whatever but what we would have Hydro-Electric established in Exeter and in running order before nine months had rolled around. The rate he said for Exeter would be $34.09 per horsepower. He further informed us that everything possible was being done to secure the power for Exeter and that representatives of the Hydro-commission would be here within a few days to make final arrangements.

Goderich, Sept. 24th.—For some time back, the town has been waiting some definite report on hydro power from the commissioners. Yesterday Engineers Gabl and Yates met the town council in the courthouse. There were representatives from the municipalities of Clinton, Seaforth, Exeter, Hensall, Zurich and Blyth.

The proposition which they put before the meeting was that if 1,500-horsepower was guaranteed they would develop the Maitland River Power Company and sell it at $27 per horsepower. In the meantime, if it was wanted at once, they would construct a line from Seaforth for the same figure. No difficulty is felt here as 700 horsepower will be used here alone, Clinton Hensall and Exeter making up the balance.

When Maitland power is available and the horsepower is increased to 2,400 which it will be in two years, the rate will be reduced to about twelve dollars. Definite figures will be on hand on Thursday night, and as far as Goderich is concerned it looks as though hydro is here.

SAINTSBURY

An Old Resident Dies.—The past week sees another of the veteran residents of this district removed from the scenes of his former toil. We refer to the demise of Francis Davis, Sr., at the good old age of 82 years, 6 months and 2 days. Deceased had been in rather feeble health for several years from the infirmities of old age, but there appeared to be no noticable change until the Friday previous to his death, when he was taken down and gradually sinking. It was plain to be seen that the dissolution was not far distant and he passed away on Wednesday morning, Sept. 25. Born in Belfast, Ireland, deceased came to Canada with his parents when he was but sixteen years of age, first settling in Carlton County. In 1851 he came to Biddulph Township and settled on the farm on which he died—Con. 5, having lived there for over 60 years. Two years after coming to this township he married Maria Brown, who predeceased him within a few days of nine years. He is survived by five sons and one daughter—Nassau, Frederick, Aaron, Francis J. and W. J., and Mrs. W. J. Smith—all of Saintsbury. He is also survived by one brother Samuel of London, and one sister, Mrs. J. B. Hodgins of Toronto. The deceased was a member of the English church, and in politics was a staunch Conservative. He was a valued member of the Orange order, and few have passed away with a better record. He was a man of sterling character and integrity; his big heart was at all times overflowing with kindly thoughts for those in trouble and he was honorable in his dealings. The funeral took place to St. James cemetery, Clandeboye, on Friday.

ELIMVILLE

Death of Mrs. Coultis—The death occurred at the family residence here on Monday evening of Caroline Harvey, wife of Henry Coultis, at the age of 55 years and 5 months. Deceased had been ill for four or five years of lung and bowel trouble, but this summer took a trip to the West, and returned home feeling somewhat better. Three weeks ago she became much worse and took her bed, gradually sinking until the end came. She was highly esteemed by all who knew her. Besides the husband she is survived by one son, Nelson, and one daughter, Almeda, both at home. She was a sister of Messrs. Charles, Thomas and Joseph Harvey of Exeter. The funeral took place to the Elimville cemetery on Wednesday afternoon.

ORDERED TO LEAVE COUNTRY

Stratford, Sept. 28.—Mr. and Mrs. William Bugg of Blanshard, who are held in connection with a charge of having cruelly starved six-year-old Jimmie Bugg, were given six weeks to get out of Canada, or to go to Penitentiary, and, in addition, were ordered to pay the costs of prosecution, here to-day by Judge Barron. Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Bugg were found guilty by his honor of child neglect in allowing little Jimmie Bugg to become a living skeleton, apparently for the want of nourishment. In imposing the sentence the judge said to Mrs. Bugg: 'On the whole your treatment of the child was inhuman, and neither you nor your husband will have anything to do with him in future.' His honor frankly stated that he did not believe a word of the stepmother's evidence to the effect that she had treated the little lad as well as she knew how. He warned both parents that if at the expiration of the six weeks they are in Canada they will not escape the law. Little Jimmie is nearly ready to leave the hospital, and will be placed in a foster home in due time.

Teachers Convene

The 35th annual meeting of the West Huron Teacher's Association was held in Goderich on Thursday and Friday last, at the Collegiate Institute. About 120 teachers were present.

After registration and opening exercises had been dispensed with, short lectures were given on physical culture and military drill by Wm. McKay, of Hensall, and C. J. McGregor, of Launer; H. R. Long spoke on arithmetic for senior third classes, Mrs. Helen Mayberry of Stratford Normal School, also gave a very interesting talk on French and drawing from models.

Entertainment at Night.

In the evening an entertainment was given, to which many citizens turned out. Miss Sharman, as president, occupied the chair and gave an excellent address on duties of teachers. Dr. Mackin gave a very concise and clever address on medical inspection of schools Rev Mr. Fotheringham made a brilliant address on teaching that was greatly appreciated by all those present Dr. Strang also gave a short sketch of his trip to the West, telling of meeting some pupils whom he taught 45 years ago. Vocal solos were given by Misses Stoddart and McCaul and Mr. and Mrs. Hunter at duet. A fancy drill was gone through by a class of Miss Parsons'.

Election of Officers.

Friday morning the following officers were elected:—President, Miss A. E. Conkit, Hensall; vice-president, Miss M. A. Talley, Dungannon; sec.-treasurer, W. H. Johnston, Kippen, councilors, Miss Sharman and Miss Miners, Goderich; W. H. Graham, Crediton; Mr. Rydall, Hurondale, H. R. Long and Inspector Tom; A. M. Robertson, Goderich and W. B. Weidenhammer, Exeter. Short papers were given by Miss Murray of Exeter, J. P. Hume, B. A. Goderich and Mrs. Helen Mayberry. W B. Weidenhammer was nominated for the advisory Board of Ontario.

The resolution committee reported as follows;

Resolved—

1. That, whereas the Department has raised the minimum salary from $300 to $350, it should also raise the maximum to $650.

2. That the teacher be permitted to continue the use of the School & Home, and Helps, as heretofore, being such a time-saver to the rural teacher.

3. For the election of public school representatives to the Advisory Council, the Province be divided into electoral districts, with one representative for each district

4. That at least 50 per cent. of the marks in literature be assigned on prescribed work for entrance examination.

55. That all lessons in our present Readers containing objectionable or slang phrases be eliminated and that more suitable selections replace them.

This association believes that it is very desirable that one of the members of the Advisory Council of the Education Department should be from this western division of the province, and they have great pleasure in placing in the field for election to that position Mr. W B. Weidenhammer, B.A., principal of the Exeter Continuation School. Mr. Weidenhammer is eminently fitted for the position, as he has not only taught in the public schools in Ontario, but has had similar experience in Manitoba He would thus ably represent the public and continuation schools of the province. Other Teachers' Associations are requested to give their hearty endorsation and support to Mr. Weidenhammer.

Trustees' Department

A meeting of public school trustees of the inspectorate was held on Thursday afternoon. F. W. Gladman of Exeter was appointed chairman and Samuel Martin of Exeter secretary. There were representatives present from Exeter, Stephen, Usborne, Goderich township East and West Wawanosh. A trustees' department for West Huron was organized and it was decided to meet next year at the same time as the teachers.

CHAPTER XVIII.—(Cont'd.)

A hospital nurse, whose sweet, strong face contrasted curiously with her funereal garments, was sitting beside the mattresses, which for greater convenience had been placed on the floor. Frithiof lay in the absolute stillness of exhaustion, and Sigrid, who had never seen him ill, was for a moment almost overcome. It seemed hardly possible that the thin, worn, haggard face on the pillow could be the same face which had smiled on her last from the deck of the steamer when he had started on that fatal visit to the Morgans. He was talking incoherently, and twice she caught the name of Blanche.

"Try if you can get him to take this," said the nurse, handing her a cup of beef-tea.

He took it passively, but evidently did not in the least recognize her. His eyes, which for so many days had seen only the phantoms of his imagination, fixed themselves on her face, and by degrees a light of recognition dawned in them.

"Sigrid!" he exclaimed, in a tone of such relief that tears started to her eyes.

She bent down and kissed him.

"I have come to take care of you. And after you have been to sleep we will have a long talk," she said, gently. "There, let me make your pillows comfortable."

"Talk," he said. "It is so good to hear Norse once more."

"I will talk if you will try to sleep. I will sit here and say you some of Bjornsen's songs." And, with his hand still in hers, she said, in her quieting voice, "Jeg har soght," and "Olaf Trygvason," and "Prinsessen."

This last seemed specially to please him, and while, for the sixth time, she was repeating it, Roy, who had been watching them intently, made her a little sign, and, glancing down, she saw that Frithiof had fallen asleep. No one stirred, for they all knew only too well how much depended on that sleep.

For the next day or two Frithiof realized little. To the surprise and delight of all, he slept almost incessantly, waking only to take food, to make sure that Sigrid was with him, and to enjoy a delicious sense of ease and relief.

"He is out of the wood now," said Dr. Morris, cheerfully. "You came just in time, Miss Falck. But I will give you one piece of advice: if possible stay in England and make your home with him, he ought not to be so much alone."

"You think that he may have such such an attack again?" asked Sigrid, wistfully.

"No, I don't say that at all. He has a wonderful constitution, and there is no reason why he should ever break down again. But he is more likely to get depressed if he is alone, and you will be able to prevent his life from growing too monotonous."

So she lived through those quiet days in the sick-room. One day Roy, coming in at his usual hour in the morning to relieve guard, brought her a fat envelope which he had found waiting for her in the hall. She opened it eagerly, and made a little exclamation of disappointment and vexation.

"Anything wrong?" he asked.

"Oh," she said, "it seems so ridiculous when I had been expecting such great things from it."

"Have you made any other attempts?" he asked.

"Oh, yes," said Sigrid, "I began to try in Norway and even attempted a story and sent it to one of our best novelists to ask his opinion."

"And what did he say?"

"Well," she said, smiling, "he wrote back very kindly, but said that he could not conscientiously recommend any one to write stories whose sole idea in taking up the profession was the making of money."

Roy sat musing over the perplexities of ordinary life. Here was he with more money than he knew what to do with, and here was the woman he loved struggling in vain to earn a few shillings.

"My father and mother come home to-night," he said, at length, "and if you will allow me I will ask them if they know of anything likely to suit you. Cecil will be very anxious to meet you again. Don't you think you might go for a drive with her to-morrow afternoon? I would be here with your brother."

Sigrid gladly assented, and the next day both Mrs. Boniface and Cecil drove to the little house at Vauxhall. Roy brought Sigrid down to the carriage, and with a very happy satisfied feeling, introduced her to his mother, and watched the warm meeting with Cecil.

"I can't think what would become of Frithiof if it had not been for all your kindness," said Sigrid. "Your son has practically saved his life. I am sure, by taking care of him through this illness."

"[illegible] worst is over now, I [illegible] Boniface. "That [illegible] comfort."

At the first moment Sigrid had fallen in love with the sweet-natured, motherly old lady, and now she opened her heart to her, and they discussed the sad cause of Frithiof's breakdown, and talked of past days in Norway, and of the future that lay before him.

"What makes me so miserable," said Sigrid, "is to feel that his life is, as it were, over, though he is so young; it has been spoiled and ruined for him when he is but one-and-twenty."

"But the very fact of his being so young seems to me to give hope that brighter things are in store for him," said Mrs. Boniface.

"I do not think so," said Sigrid. "That girl has taken something from him which can never come again; it does not seem to me possible that a man can love like that twice in a life-time."

"Perhaps not just in that way," said Mrs. Boniface.
