BEHIND THE DOOR

BY EDMUND DOWNEY.

AUTHOR OF "A HOUSE OF TEARS" "RED POST PARK" ETC.

COPYRIGHT, 1894, BY TALLCHER & SONS.

"That's a very simple matter, surely."

"You never know. The other doctor, who assisted Dr. Percival at the post-mortem, may have some new light to throw on the case."

"That isn't very likely."

"Perhaps not. But what I want to do before Monday is to collar those 13 Bank of England notes."

"I wish you luck."

"Which means you do not think I am going to succeed. Oh, pray, don't apologize!"

"I suppose there is no use in enquiring what your plans are?"

"At present my plans are merely to sleep in the house to-night. To-morrow I will ask you to keep me company for the night in the house. If I hit any nails on the head I will show you fairly and squarely how and when I have hit them. If I fail I shan't drag you down with me in my failure."

Detective Goringe rose and lit his pipe. "Now then, inspector, the keys of No. 13 and your best wishes for my enterprise."

"Both are at your service," said Briggs, opening his desk and quickly producing the keys of Mrs. Davorn's house.

"Thanks,' said Detective Goringe, as he placed the keys in the pocket of his light overcoat. "I will see you to-morrow night, then, in Felspar road. Let nobody be aware I am in the house or in the neighbourhood—or that anybody is in the house. Come about 11, quietly. Perhaps before we part on the Monday morning I shall have a round unvarnished tale to deliver."

"That's your present opinion evidently," said the inspector, smiling.

"And that's your joke, Briggs," said Detective Goringe, putting on his pot hat. "Good night."

CHAPTER XIX.

A MIDNIGHT MARAUDER.

As the night was free from rain or fog Detective Goringe decided to take a ramble through Clayfields and ruminate upon the case which he had come to investigate.

It was 10 o'clock when he left the police station, and after wandering aimlessly through several streets he found himself in Crescent road, the principal road in Clayfields. It was a broad highroad, flanked with good houses and a plentiful sprinkling of trees.

The detective had no object in view when he started from the police station, except to get to Felspar road and sleep there, or keep a vigil there, for the night. He now felt in no humour for sleep, and walked quietly along Crescent road until he came to the corner of Felspar road, which stood at right angles to it.

Here he stopped for a moment and then decided to continue his walk. As he strode along, glancing occasionally across the roadway at the dwelling houses, which were nearly all lit up and looked bright and cheerful, his eyes were attracted by the dull flame of a doctor's lamp. "Percival's house, of course," reflected Goringe, standing opposite it. "Sort of business I shouldn't like to belong to. Patching up live bodies, ripping up dead ones. Ugh!"

As he stood gazing at the house, reflecting upon the hardships and anxieties of a doctor's life, he saw Percival's hall door being opened. Instinctively he stepped back some paces until he was completely shadowed by a large tree, which stood on the edge of the pathway, almost equally distant from two street lamps.

"Um!" said the detective, with a low growl, as he watched a young man descending the steps of Dr. Percival's house, the light from the hall enveloping him in a vivid glow. "A sort of out of the frying pan into the fire young man! Shouldn't wonder if he'd do something odd before my present job is fixed. He knows he is no longer being dogged, nor in imminent danger of being run in. Hello! There he goes down Felspar road. That's not his way home. One would think that road would be marked 'no thoroughfare' for him. But a young man in love is perhaps not a fair subject for dissection. You can only have opinions about him, and they may be all wrong. This sort of thing my friend Briggs would be delighted to hear. I suppose it is the old story of the moth and the candle."

And growling like a surly dog Goringe continued his walk along the Crescent road.

He was now far away from the case which had brought him to Clayfields. His thoughts had wandered back to a well-nigh forgotten period of his life, when he, too, had been as young as Maurice Leclerc, and as deeply in love.

It was close upon midnight when Goringe put the latchkey into the door of 13 Felspar road. He had determined to get into the house, and go to bed in the dark. He was a little tired. There was no occasion for a night watch. He could do all he wanted to do next day.

To Goringe fear was unknown, and as he stood in the hall of the empty house no sensation disturbed him, except that he felt unusually tired.

"Long walks evidently don't agree with me," he reflected, as he mounted the stairs, and made straight for Steinworth's bedroom. He had a little difficulty in finding the right key, but he soon discovered which it was, and unlocking the door he entered the room, and then fastened the door from the inside with the brass bolt. He placed a chair near the head of the bed, at the side which was farthest from the door. On the chair he placed his coat and waistcoat, and on the top of these his watch and loaded revolver. Then he took off his boots, and arranging a blanket over himself, fell asleep quickly.

It was broad daylight when Goringe awoke. He jumped alertly out of bed, and saw by his watch that it was close upon 8 o'clock.

'I must chance lighting a fire in the kitchen," he thought as he stripped off his shirt, and proceeded to the washstand. "Never thought I could feel absolutely in want of a hot cup of coffee. Hello!" he exclaimed, "no water in the ewer. I suppose I can have a douche in the scullery." He threw his coat over his shoulder, and proceeded down stairs.

The kitchen door was at the far end of the hall. It stood wide open, and as Goringe entered the kitchen he saw that the kitchen window was partly open.

He was not an emotional man, but the open window caused him to bite his nether lip, and to stamp furiously on the floor.

"There's no mistake about this window, anyhow," said he, with a strange smile, as he proceeded quietly and slowly to examine the hasp. "This has been forced during the night. Perhaps the burglar has been as unconscious of my existence in the house as I have been of his. Rummy business! What a triumph it will be for Briggs to hear this!"

Goringe entered the scullery, washed himself with a brave show of unconcern, and then started to make his breakfast.

As soon as his hunger and thirst were appeased—he found ample materials in the pantry for his wants—he took his stand at the kitchen window. Opposite the window was a high wooden fence, with a cemented path about three feet wide lying between the window and the fence. The house at the other side of the fence had no gable window and exhibited only a blank wall of dull, yellow brick.

"An excellent place to plant an easily-opened window, surely!" mused the detective.

Closing the window he proceeded leisurely to the two sitting-rooms on the ground floor. There was no sign of a disturbance of any kind in either of the rooms. Then he walked upstairs and entered the room which Mrs. Davorn used to occupy. Here there were unmistakable traces of a recent disturbance. Goringe could easily remember how the room had been arranged after its last tenant had been taken from it. Everything was now pulled about, the floor of the room was littered with portions of the bedding (some of which had been ripped and torn), broken boxes and rumpled linen.

"This comes of Briggs taking his men off. I suppose I may hazard an opinion when I am all by myself. No doubt this is either the work of some one who heard Vickery's evidence and thought he would have a try for the notes—perhaps I disturbed his operations at midnight—while the house was deserted, or perhaps it is a blind. Anyhow I'm in a nice hole. This is what comes of sentimentalizing when there's work to be done."

Going down on his knees the detective tried to sort out the litter on the floor, in the hope of picking up something which might give him a clue as to the style of man the marauder was.

"Not a professional hand," he soon decided. "An amateur of the worst kind, and, therefore, my job is all the more difficult."

Goringe could scarcely control his rage—rage directed wholly against himself. At the bottom he was a man of violent temperament, but he had amazing powers of self-control. For a dozen years he had not felt so angry; he would be the laughing stock of the Yard. Here was a house broken into while he was practically in charge of it. The whole blame, and worse than the blame, the jeers, would all be for him.

"Not a clew to the intruder," he groaned, rising to his feet. "That cemented path outside the kitchen window will hold no footsteps, and it leads right down to the front gate. The devil and the jerry builder, as usual, in league with one another. And all the gravelled paths surrounding the house—the garden at the back, and the bit of a forecourt in front—are as hard as brass. A daring scoundrel, whoever he was, almost deserving of a reward."

Goringe now fell to wondering if he had been forestalled in the finding of the notes—the notes which he was morally bound to discover. But a grim smile lit up his face as he pondered over this problem. "This is the only room that has been entered," he reflected, glancing round the apartment. "If the intruder was only an outsider, fired by Vickery's confession, he would have made straight for that worthy inventor's room. Or perhaps he was disturbed by my arrival, and had simply commenced an exhaustive search of the premises. Confound him, whoever he is!" groaned Goringe, fiercely.

Then the detective strode out of the room, and mounted to the first-floor landing. He passed into Steinworth's bedroom, completed his toilet, and taking the keys of the house from his pocket, he opened the door of Vickery's room. Nothing was disturbed here. The window was securely hasped.

Goringe paused for awhile, glancing round the room, taking in every object in it.

"No," he said at length, "there has been no one here since I saw the inside of these four walls last."

Again he descended the stairs, and entered Mrs. Davorn's room. He kicked some of the boxes out of his way as he stepped across the floor, and then he proceeded to a pile of torn linen which had evidently been taken from the bed.

"Hello!" he cried.

"Hello!" he cried, as he picked out from the litter a piece of rumpled cambric. He opened it out, and fixing his eyes on one corner he saw two letters neatly embroidered.

"M. L.," he read, a puzzled expression stealing into his ordinarily passive face.

CHAPTER XX.

IN THE DARK.

Shortly before 11 o'clock on Sunday night, Inspector Briggs, attired in plain clothes, set out from the station, and wended his way toward Felspar road. Very few houses in the road exhibited any lights as the inspector turned the corner, and the pathways were shorn of pedestrians, partly owing to the drizzling rain, and partly owing to the fact that Felspar road was a quiet, and very-early-to-bed road on Sunday night.

A subdued ring of the hall doorbell brought Goringe to the door. Inspector Briggs, notwithstanding his big frame, almost slid through the half-open door like a shadow.

"Let us go upstairs," said Goringe, in a low voice. "I am using the front bedroom—the man Steinworth's room. The blind is drawn up, and the light from the street lamp finds its way into the room."

"Well, partner," said the inspector, as he seated himself upon a chair in the bedroom, "what's the news? Are we going to share the spoils to-night, or are you to take the whole burden of failure on your shoulders, and confess you're stumped?"

"Before we begin our business proper," said Goringe, ignoring the inspector's questions, "I have a report to make to you in your official capacity. I would have gone round to the station this morning only that I decided it was best for me to keep dark, and I took the liberty of keeping my report back until you called."

"Report of what?"

"An entry was made here some time last night—probably between the hours of 10 and 12 o'clock, possibly later."

"Phew!" whistled the inspector. "What does this point to? Mean to say any one entered the house while you were in it?"

"That is a matter we can discuss later. I did not arrive here until midnight. Now, Briggs, I am going through what may seem to you a bit of tomfoolery. Put that last little burglary job out of your head for the present, and I think we may safely start operations. I am now going to try and demonstrate to you how the money was stolen."

"Do you still think that the notes are warm? But I suppose I mustn't ask such a question."

"I have no objection to answer you, though I am a little disturbed by this last entry into the house. I have not changed my mind—the notes are still in the house."

"All right. But do you think it is better to search for them in the dark than with the aid of a light? My bullseye is at your service."

"Thanks. We may require it later. At present I prefer the dark. Now, will you seat yourself in Mrs. Davorn's room? I will remain here for the present."

"Do you want to be locked in?" asked the inspector, with a suspicion of playfulness.

"Not just yet. Recollect I am serious. I am going to stake all I'm worth—I mean my reputation—on the experiment."

"Is this to be a final perforamnce, or a dress rehearsal, or what?"

"There has been no rehearsal, Briggs, but flippancy doesn't agree with you nor with me. I am in a very irritable mood now. Pray be serious. Now will you get down to the room which the dead woman occupied, and sit there until I come to you, with the door closed—not locked? And don't speak to me again until I speak to you."

"All right," said Inspector Briggs, rising to his feet.

He could not help feeling amused at the notion of Goringe converting himself into a kind of thought reader, but he felt the detective was in no humour to be played with. With noiseless steps he passed out on the landing, descended the five steps, and entered the room in which Mrs. Davorn had died.

Here he seated himself, and in a few moments he found that his playful propensities had deserted him, and that he felt more uncomfortable than ever he had felt in his life. He sat in the dark for several minutes, a prey to the most uneasy thoughts. Practically he was unarmed. He had no revolver—nothing but his whistle and a pair of handcuffs.

What on earth was Goringe doing? Perhaps the man had gone suddenly mad and had decoyed him into the lonely house. But that was too foolish a thought to harbour. And yet it was all very strange, Goringe's manner most of all. Not a sound in the house. He could not sit here in the dark much longer. Not unless he could hear a noise—something which would direct his thoughts from that hideous bed in the corner where the woman had died. Was it murder? Was it, as the doctor said, a natural death?

Inspector Briggs was seated facing the door. As he was about to make some noise, to shuffle his feet or stand up, and listen even to the creaking of his own boots, he thought he saw the bedroom door moving. His eyes could now distinguish objects in the room. No sound had reached his ears. He sat gazing spellbound at the door, which gradually moved inward with no noise.

In a moment, just as the inspector felt he could bear the horrid silence no longer, he saw the figure of Goringe entering the rooom.

The detective, still moving noiselessly, walked to the bed, remained alongside it for some moments—an appreciable space of time, during which Briggs felt as if some strange terror, the like of which he had never experienced before, held him in thrall—and then Goringe, still without making a sound, gave one sigh, which seemed to escape from him involuntarily, and approached the press in the room where the money had originally been placed. Here he remained for some moments, and then, without uttering a word or making a sound, he disappeared from the room, leaving the door half open as he passed out.

"Very neatly done, certainly," said the inspector, speaking in a low tone in order to reassure himself that he could use his tongue. "He would make a first-class burglar. Seemed almost as if he were practising a bit of sleep-walking."

He stood up, and advancing to the door he found Goringe on the small landing outside.

"See," said the detective, almost in a whisper, as Briggs, alarmed at the apparition, and still more alarmed at the voice, close to his ear, stepped back a pace, "it was quite easy to steal the notes and make no noise. Not a creaking step nor a squeaking hinge has marred the experiment."

"You almost scared me out of my senses with your clever acting—pantomime, I believe they call it. What next?"

"Now, I shall go down stairs and arrange the hasp of the window. Then I shall ascend the stairs to the front landing, and when I tap three times distinctly at the door of my room will you step up and see if I am securely locked in from the outside?"

"The deuce you will!"

"Don't raise your voice. Now get back to your room."

"The dead room. It has quite given me the shivers, I can tell you, to be sitting in it. How long do you mean to keep me there?"

"About as long as the thief took to make himself secure. Probably half an hour."

"Heavens! I should be dead of the cold and the darkness and the silence in half an hour."

"A little 'black hole' won't hurt you for once in a way. But you must not play the spy on me. I do not anticipate failure, but if I do fail I want to fail my own way and let no one be the wiser. Have I your word?"

"Certainly. Honour bright."

"Now, then, in you go again. Shut the door; you need not close it tight or lock it unless you like."

Inspector Briggs stepped back and closed the door, and again he sat down in his chair, a prey to thoughts which were anything but comfortable. It seemed to him as the whole tragedy—murder, or whatever it may have been—was being enacted over again, and that he was powerless to impede the criminal.

After some minutes he found that sitting was positively unbearable, so he rose and commenced to walk up and down the bedroom, making as little noise as possible. Very soon he heard a creaking noise as he continued his promenade. "No doubt," he reflected, "Goringe is now on the march upstairs, and has caught a creaking step. What is his game, I wonder? Of course it is now plain the wily rascal has some reason of his own for fixing his mind on Steinworth, after all his pretences. What could the other fellow, Vickery, have meant? To accuse himself of a crime which, at the time he did make the confession, he must have believed was a hanging job, could scarcely have been done for the purpose of easing his mind about the minor offence. And if he collared the notes, what did he do with them? Goringe, of course, must mean that it was Steinworth who stole the money, but Goringe isn't infallible. Awfully good that last job—the pride of his profession allowing a burglar to proceed to work under his very nose! What could he have been doing with himself from 10 to 12 last night? And what in Heaven's name is he up to now?" as a strange sound, a sound of something being moved, caught the quick ear of Inspector Briggs.

"That's not his three taps anyway. I wonder is he at the door? And I wonder still more is he going to make a good clean job of locking himself in? If he does that, I'll begin to believe he is clever. If he finds the notes, I'll begin to think he is very clever. If he discovers what happened in this house on the night of the 9th, and the early morning of the 10th, I'll feel inclined to put him down as a wizard."

Inspector Briggs now came to a halt. He felt it was possible he might not be able to overhear the summons from the next landing if he did not reseat himself and remain still. He found his chair, and sat down, turning over the case in his mind, trying to reconcile one fact, or one supposed fact, with another, and wondering occasionally what on earth Goringe was doing. He felt that quite half an hour, making due allowance for his impatience, had elapsed, and he was beginning to contemplate another constitutional up and down the dark room, when he heard the summons from the first floor—the three taps, clear and distinct.

Inspector Briggs arose with alacrity. He opened his long, light overcoat, and fingered his bullseye, and then, with a sense of intense relief, he mounted the five steps leading to the first-floor landing.

He marched straight to Steinworth's door, and then he heard Goringe's voice. "See if both doors—Vickery's and this—are securely locked."

The inspector turned his bullseye on the door at his right—the door of Bernard Vickery's room. The key was in the lock. He tried the door. Locked. Then he turned to Steinworth's door. The key was in the lock. He tried the door. Locked.

"He is clever," said Inspector Briggs to himself.

Goringe's voice again was heard: "Now, Red Riding Hood, open the lock, and walk in."

CHAPTER XXI.

A RETURN VISIT.

"I am afraid," said Inspector Briggs as he stood inside Albert Steinworth's room, "that Red Riding Hood is not equal to the task of teaching her grandmother to suck eggs."

"You're a dear, good fellow," said Goringe. "The strain is off now. I have been treating you somewhat hardly, trying your temper perhaps. But you'll forgive me, I know. And now I'll disclose my secret thought to you. But first and foremost take this in your hand and say after me, The evidence you shall give in this case shall be the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth."

Almost mechanically Briggs, who was a trifle bewildered by the sudden change from grave to gay in Goringe's manner and voice, was about to lift to his lips the oblong packet which the detective handed to him.

"Turn your bullseye on that testament, inspector," said Goringe.

"You don't mean it surely!" exclaimed Briggs, as he flashed the light on the packet. "The notes!"

"Yes. I haven't counted them yet, but I fancy they are in order."

"You are very clever," said Briggs, fingering the packet lovingly.

"Not half so clever as you think. But let me explain my discovery to you, and also let me tell you that I am not in a position to-night to clear up more than half of the mystery. I am still puzzled, but, as I have already stated, the strain is off. I have performed my share of the work, and I feel free to deliver myself and my thoughts to you—in fact, if you wish it, to revel in suspicions and opinions."

"I think you have cleared up everything except the extraordinary lie told by Mr. Vickery. You have locked yourself into this room, leaving the key in the lock outside. Even the foreman of the coroner's jury couldn't do that."

"It is a strangely simple trick after all."

"Something of the Columbus and the egg type, no doubt."

"Columbus need not have played it down so low as breaking the shell. A well organized shaking of the egg would have been sufficient—that is, unless it was an egg specially constructed for sale in the London market."

"Shall we light up the room? Although the darkness isn't like it was in that horrible deathroom below, still it prevents you from explaining your experiment to me. I am anxious to have a good look at that puzzling door now," manoeuvring with his bullseye.

"No. Not yet. I want to enlighten you, and to seek enlightenment from you in the dark. In the first place, I want to know, was the search of the house on the 11th a thorough one?"

"As thorough a job as I ever superintended."

"If there had been in Mrs. Davorn's room a handkerchief which ought not to have been there—say one belonging to Dr. Leclerc—would you have noticed it?"

"How can you ask me such a question?"

"Then if I find such a handkerchief of Dr. Leclerc's in the dead woman's room, I may take it that it got there since the 11th?"

"Certainly."

"Miss Rodney had left the house then?"

"Yes."

"I have found a handkerchief marked with the young doctor's initials in the dead woman's room."

"When?"

"Early this morning. It may be a blind, but it is confusing for the moment. Hello, there goes 12 o'clock!"

"That's a rummy business about the young fellow's handkerchief."

"I fancy it will explain itself later on. You see I am, as I told you, ready to flounder in a quagmire of opinions to-night. Now I have another opinion to put before you. I have given some thought to that person who entered this house last night. It was some one who knew the house, some one who calculated it was empty, and some one who had an object which I can partly fathom. The object was doubtless a laudable one to get hold of the notes. But Mr. Thief was confronted with a locked door—this door, in which there was no key. It would not suit him to break open the door."

"Why?"

"That I will explain later. It would not suit him to break open the door. Therefore, the next best thing was to get an impression of the lock, after this was obtained, he entered Mrs. Davorn's room for some reason which I cannot fathom. If he knew where the notes were, there was no occasion for him to waste precious time knocking that room to pieces, unless he fancied there was more money there, or unless—this is only an opinion, remember—his object was to attach suspicion in the wrong quarter."

"I can see you are harbouring another of those fearful opinions. You fancy the same man will return again, and will come the next time with a key to open the lock of this door."

"That is my very humble opinion. In order to help Mr. Thief in his laudable search for the hidden treasure I have carefully opened the kitchen window to-night, leaving the kitchen and the window in the same condition as I found them this morning. The outer world is of opinion this is an empty house, guarded only by a ghost. My lighting of the kitchen fire this morning was a quiet operation. There has been no light in the house since nine o'clock, and London doesn't awake much earlier on Sunday. Now let us stop talking, go out on the landing and listen for a sound in the kitchen."

"And suppose we have our watch for nothing? Suppose Mr. Thief doesn't arrive?"

"Then, we are none the worse off. When the morning light comes, we may abandon hope until to-morrow night, and then I will tell you how the door was locked from the outside."

"I shall collapse from the cold, the darkness and the suspense by six o'clock."

"What a sybarite you are!"

"A what?"

"No matter. I mean you ought to be a gentleman of England living at home at ease, if a night's vigil alarms you."

Detective Goringe and Inspector Briggs were now standing together on the landing speaking in the faintest of whispers.

"Lock both doors—Steinworth's room and Vickery's—put the keys in your pocket, and we can both return to the top of the house and interview the treasure hunter from above, or I'll make a better suggestion. Let me lock you into Steinworth's room. You can hide yourself in one of the cupboards there or under the bed and watch the visitor's proceedings. you what is called an object lesson in the mystery of the door. It will be better than a demonstration from me at second-hand. I will lock you in and take the keys upstairs with me."

"Lend me your revolver. I saw you fingering one."

"Certainly. You won't want it, I expect, but it may help to make you feel less lonely, poor fellow! You have a pair of handcuffs—yes. Why, with a revolver and the handcuffs, and a bullseye, you will feel quite as if you were having a levee. Lonely indeed! But what do you think of my idea?"

"An excellent one, if we are going to have a visit from your guest." Inspector Briggs smiled a quiet smile all to himself in the darkness. "If not, it will be the devil's own wearisome job."

TOO LITTLE BLOOD.

Is the Cause of Most of the Misery in Everyday Life--Improve the Blood and Disease Will Not Exist.

Among the many thousands who testify to the value of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills as a blood and nerve tonic is Miss Mary Jackson, Normandale, Ont., who says:—"I have used Dr. Williams' Pink Pills and have derived such great benefit from them that I consider it my duty to let others know their worth. For upwards of three years I suffered from anaemia, and grew so weak that I could scarcely walk about the house. I had no color in my face, my lips and gums were bloodless, I lost all ambition, suffered from headaches and dizziness, and fell away in weight until I weighed only ninety-four pounds. I doctored a great deal, but it did not seem to do me any good. I was then advised to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills and before I had taken them ten days I felt better and my people could see a change in me. I continued using the pills for some weeks and am now in the very best health. Every depressing symptom has passed away and I have gained fourteen pounds in weight. I think there is no medicine can equal Dr. Williams' Pink Pills and I strongly recommend them to all weak and ailing girls."

Miss Jackson's experience should bring hope to all the weak, ailing girls and women. What those pills have done for her they will do for others. Every dose adds tone and vigor to the blood and nerves, brings a glow of health to sallow cheeks, a sparkle to the eyes and a ruby redness to pallid lips. No other medicine has done so much to bring comfort and health to weak girls and women. If you are ailing give the pills a fair trial and new health and strength will be yours. Do not accept any pink colored substitute; the genuine pills always have the full name "Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People" printed on the wrapper around every box. Sold by medicine dealers everywhere, or by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 by writing The Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Solving a Great Problem.

Some years ago a tobacconist discovered the utility of tinfoil for wrapping tobaccos. Theretofore paper had been exclusively used for the purpose, but it did not serve to keep the moisture of the atmosphere away from the tobacco nor preserve the natural moisture of the tobacco from the effects of a dry or heated atmosphere. Paper also absorbed the aroma of the weed and was not sufficiently lasting; therefore tinfoil was used for wrappers. But it became costly and could only be rolled to a certain thinness, beyond which the ingenuity of man seemed to find it impossible to go. The fact was that no rollers could be made to sustain the pressure necessary to mashing the tinfoil to a leaf sufficiently thin to suit the manufacturer.

Many ingenious inventors struggled with the proposition for months and gave up the problem as unsolvable, when a simple workman about the shop one day, after rolling two sheets to the customary thinness, put the two sheets together into the rollers and made both half as thin as they were before. This was as simple as standing an egg on end, but it created a revolution in the manufacture of tinfoil for tobacconists' use and made a mint of money for the discoverer.

JAPS HAVE LANDED 30,000 MEN.

The Japanese army corps landed at Chemulpo, Corea, totalling about 30,000 men, has already been deployed between Seoul and Ping Yang. The advance guards are even northward of the latter place. Owing to the partial thaw the roads are bad, and the transportation of provisions and war munitions is most difficult.

RUSSIA WILL NOT PASS THE DARDANELLES.

There is no truth in the rumors of negotiations among the powers concerned respecting the passage of the Russian Black Sea fleet through the Dardanelles, says the Paris correspondent of the London Times. The disturbance of international equilibrium, which it might and probably would entail, can hardly be a matter of indifference to other powers besides Britain.

RUSSIA HATES UNCLE SAM.

The statements that the American warship Vicksburg refused to take the Russians aboard from the sinking ships at Chemulpo, and also that orders were supposed to have been given to American ships to proceed north, have added to the steadfast impression at St. Petersburg that the United States is financially backing Japan, and the constantly growing aggravation against America, which all at that place now admit, is assuming serious proportions.

MARKET REPORT.

Weekly Review of Prices Culled From The Commercial.

GRAIN AND PRODUCE.

WHEAT—The past week in the wheat market has been one of nervous activity and gradually advancing prices. This, as a matter of course, is more vividly exhibited in the action of the American speculative markets than in the slower and more deliberate trade in actual wheat, which if left to itself without the stimulus of modern speculative operations, would probably not become very exciting at any time nowadays. The principal cause of activity is the speculative sentiment generated by the world's political situation, and the uncertainty about complications to which it may lead. In the past, war in which European nations were engaged has caused bread to become dearer, and some people in the grain trade, but more especially the public outside of it, are imbued with the idea that general war will again mean former war prices for bread. Doubtless this will be so to a greater or less extent for a time under speculative influence, but unless the yield of wheat from this year's crops in the northern hemisphere is going to show a serious deficiency, the present comparatively high prices of wheat will be of temporary duration. If the other hand, this season's crop prospects develop any serious shortage in these crops as the months go by, present prices might come to look quite moderate. Manitoba wheat has been very strong during the week, under the influence of the operations in the American markets. The Winnipeg option market has been very active, and over one million bushels per day traded in, and on the week there is an advance of 7c per bushel, the May option closing at 97c. Cash wheat has been very firm, but not active, severe weather and heavy snow over the country causing almost complete stoppage of movement by road and rail. At the close of business prices were : 1 northern, 93½c; 2 northern, 90c; 3 northern, 86c; No. 4 wheat, 77½c; feed wheat, 54c; No. 2 feed, 44c; spot or February delivery. And for May delivery : 1 northern, 97c; 2 northern, 97c; 2 northern 94c; 3 northern, 90c; and No. 4 wheat, 81c, all in store Fort William or Port Arthur.

FLOUR—The market has again advanced under the influence of wheat. Leading millers have added another 5c to their price. We quote Hungarian Patent, $2.60 per sack of 98 lbs, delivered to the trade; Glenora Patent, $2.45; Strong Bakers, $2.10; and XXX, $1.80. These prices are subject to usual trade discounts.

MILLFEED—Shorts has advanced $1 per ton. We quote : Bran, $16 per ton, in bulk, delivered to the trade; shorts, $19 per ton.

GROUND FEED—It is expected oat chop will advance again this week. We quote : Oat chop $26 per ton, delivered to the trade; barley chop, $20; mixed barley and oats, $23; oil cake, $27 per ton.

OATS—The market is firm and 1½ to 2c higher. Deliveries are light owing to storms in the country, and this has no doubt had something to do with the increase in price. It is believed that there are still a lot of oats in farmers' hands. We quote : No. 1 white oats, 34 to 35c for carlots on track, and feed grades, 23 to 24c. Farmers' loads at country points bring 28 to 29c, and on the street here 30 to 31c per bushel.

Barley—Deliveries are very light, and the market has advanced 2c per bushel. Malting grades are bringing 38 to 40c per bushel in carlots on track here, and feed grades 37 to 38c.

FLAXSEED—Market nominal.

HAY—Receipts are light. Fresh baled is worth $12 for good quality in cars. Loose hay on the street is worth $12 to $14 per ton.

BUTTER—Some Manitoba creamery has been shipped to the coast, and the market is firm at last week's range. Choice creamery in boxes is worth 23 to 24c per pound delivered to the trade.

BUTTER—Dairy—Really choice is scarce. Fresh table butter in bricks will bring 22c per pound and tubs 16 to 17c delivered here. Round lots of ordinary stock 12 to 14c.

EGGS—There is nothing doing in eggs owing to failure of receipts. Case lots of fresh eggs would bring 30c per dozen at commission houses, subject to candling, and strictly fresh gathered are worth 40c per dozen at retail. Ontario pickled or limed bring 23 to 25c wholesale.

DRESSED MEATS—Demand is good and the market steady. We quote : Beef, 6½c per pound for city dressed; ½ to 1c less for country; veal, 8½c for choice weights; mutton, 8½c; lamb, frozen, 8½c, delivered to the trade here. Dressed hogs are quoted at 6c for medium weights, with heavies 1c less.

HIDES—Receipts are moderate and the market steady. We quote : Country frozen hides, 5½c per pound, less 5 pounds tare. No. 1 city butchers' hides are worth 6c per pound; No. 2's, 5c; and 3's, 4c; sheepskins; No. 2's, 5c; and 3's, 4c; sheepskins,

TALLOW—No. 1 tallow is worth 3¾c per pound delivered at Winnipeg, and No. 2, 2¾c.

Getting Stingy.

Constance—Why so lachrymose, Gertrude? Is there any perceptible diminution of his love?

Gertrude—No, but of late he evinces a disinclination to talk about his money.

His Old Master.

He (showing his country cousin a portrait in his art gallery)—What do you think of my old master?

She—Pleasant face the old gentleman has. How long did you study with him?

Physically, Not Financially.

She—I thought you said your father was a big contractor.

He—So he is. He weighs 325 pounds.

SUICIDE NEAR DUCKS.

Rancher Put an End to His Life With Rifle Bullet.

On Wednesday morning Rodney Ralph Maclean, a young rancher in Paxton valley, about four miles from the Grand Prairie road, committed suicide by blowing off the top of his head with his rifle. When found the unfortunate man was sitting in his house quite dead, and between his knees, with the butt resting on the floor, was the rifle with which he had put an end to his existence. He had evidently gone about the task with great deliberation. Lying across the trigger was a broom handle, and having placed the muzzle where he wanted it, directed at the centre of his forehead, he held it steady with his hands and discharged it by simply pressing the broom handle with his foot. The top of his skull was blown completely off, and was found lying on the floor.

Wm. Hendersonof Portage, Fell on Sawing Machine Sustaining Nasty Injury.

A distressing accident occurred at Portage la Prairie on Wednesday evening, by which William Henderson may lose his left arm. Henderson was engaged with a gasoline wood-sawing outfit back of the Albion hotel, and just previous to closing operations for the day at six o'clock, his foot slipped, throwing him against the circular saw, which was in motion. Te young man's left arm came in contact with the saw, and before he could recover himself it was was called, and Henderson was almost severed. A local physician sequently taken to the hospital, but it is doubtful if his arm can be saved.

Early on Wednesday morning Admiral Togo attempted to bottle up the Russian fleet at Port Arthur, but his effort was detected by the battleship Retvizan, which, with the assistance of the land batteries, sunk four vessels. The engagemeqt has been officially reported to the Czar by Viceroy Alexieff. Japanese officers state that they have 70,000 soldiers at Ping Yang, and that a land battle will occur within a week. Chinese bandits are active, and are assisting Japan.

Japanese Engineers.

The Railway Age credits the story that over 200 Japanese engineers are employed in disguise as Chinamen along the Chinese Eastern railway. They perform various kinds of menial service and hold themselves in readiness for aggressive work. It is expected that so much of the Siberian road will be destroyed by these men that it will be effectively crippled for war purposes. On the other hand Russia has from eight to two hundred men for every five versts of the road, all of them prepared to defend their country's interests.

Even More Apropes.

A good story is going the rounds of a prominent Presbyterian clergyman who was presented with twins the day before Christmas, says the New York World. He had prepared a sermon far Christmas morning on the subject, 'Unto Us a Child is Born.' When the twins arrived he thought the text might be too apropos. He thereupon excavated another sermon from the barrel, and preached upon 'Art Thou He who should Come or Look We for Another ?' Even with this thoughtful substitution, the congregation had to smile just a little.

THE LENTEN SUMMONS

PREACHER SOUNDS UNIVERSAL CALL TO ALL CLASSES.

TO ANNUAL SPIRITUAL DUTIES

"Sanctify Ye a Fast; Call a Solemn Assemblage," Applies to the Rich and the Poor Alike, the Social Devotee, the Business Man, the Humble Worker and the Homekeeper—The Spring Fast.

Entered according to Act of Parliament of Canada, in the year 1901, by William Baily, of Toronto, at the Dep't of Agriculture, Ottawa.

Los Angeles, Cal., Feb. 21.—In this sermon the preacher sounds the Lenten call to all classes—the social devotee, the business man, the humble worker and the homekeeper, the rich and the poor alike—as a summons to the annual duties of the season of spiritual preparation. The text is Joel i, 14, "Sanctify ye a fast; call a solemn assemblage."

The Presbyterian Church has enrolled among its leaders many intellectual theologians. Entitled to a prominent place among them by his learning, philosophic acumen and sanctified common sense is Dr. Francis L. Patton, formerly president of Princeton University and now President of Princeton Theological Seminary. Many of his weighty utterances have impressed me, but none more than one he made on the value and usefulness of the Episcopalian Church.

His words in substance were: "I believe the Episcopalian Church is one of the most effective churches in existence to-day. I believe in its ritual; I believe in its teachings. If I were not a Presbyterian, I would certainly be an Episcopalian. But, though I love and honor the Episcopalian Church, I also believe that the most absurd of monstrosities is a Presbyterian in his form of worship trying to ape an Episcopalian. While we are Presbyterians let us remain Presbyterians. When we want to become Episcopalians in our form of worship, in responsive readings and in all that the Episcopalian service implies, let us become Episcopalians. But do not let us try to change the Presbyterian pulpit into a chancel or the grand old simple service of the Presbyterian Church into a concert by a surpliced choir and into the liturgy of the Episcopalian Church."

Amen, say I, to the sound advice of Dr. Patton. The simple doxology, the two or three congregational hymns, the chapter read from the Bible, the earnest prayers and the doctrinal as well as practical sermon can never be excelled as a service for the grand old church which the names of John Calvin and John Knox and Thomas Chalmers and Thomas Guthrie and Lowell Mason and William Taylor and John Hall have made immortal. But, though I would not have the Presbyterian Church adopt a ritual, I still insist that the Episcopalian Church has not an exclusive title to all the good things she may hold dear. Especially do I affirm that she has not a sole right to her spring fast, which starts with Ash Wednesday and closes with Easter's dawn. 'Way back in Joel we read the command, "Sanctify ye a fast; call a solemn assemblage." If that divine command is still in force for us as for God's ancient people, is there a better time for its observance than the period preceding our commemoration of the passion and resurrection of our Lord? It was at this season of the year, too, that the Master withdrew to the desert before the beginning of his ministry and there, fasting for forty days, prepared for the ordeal of his temptation. It will be well for Presbyterians as for Episcopalians to meditate on that experience of our Lord and draw near to him in our hearts. We must have self abnegation for sin before we can truly have closer union with God. Therefore the purpose of this sermon is to show why the Episcopalian Lent should become a Presbyterian Lent, also why the "spring fast," which is the time of the "lengthening of days," should be observed all the world over by all Christians, no matter to what individual churches they may belong.

The Episcopalin Lent, in the first place, calls a halt to the social dissipations now being practiced in all the large cities. It cries, "Peace, be still!" to the social whirlpool, which is gradually sucking down its many struggling victims as Peter was once being drawn into the depths of the Galilean lake. It says to the women of the "social abyss," "You have something higher to live for than a nightly round of receptions and parties and a never ending succession of afternoon teas." It says to the young men of the "social abyss," who, under the power of stimulants, are trying to work in the store day by day and to dance almost every night until 1 or 2 o'clock in the morning, "Young man, you had better stop and consider to what purpose you are devoting the best energies of your life." It warns the social devotee of the spiritual danger of his course, as a noted New York capitalist warned him of the financial danger, when some time ago he said: "The young men who will not succeed in business are those who night after night may be found in the ball-rooms and the dance halls and at the city clubhouses drinking a little, playing cards a little and eating expensive dinners. They are sometimes called the drones of society. This is a misnomer. Like some small insects that sport for a day in the summer sunshine, they are minute destructives. Their lives in the economy of social life make one of the petty agencies of degeneration."

Was not the capitalist right? Are not the ball-room and the dance hall and the clubhouse a continual menace to success in business? Can a young man go to a progressive euchre party and play cards until 11 o'clock and sit down to a midnight banquet and then be in the right physical and mental trim to sell goods in the store the next morning? Is not the social shrine also a very poor foundation upon which to build the altar of Jesus Christ? Is not most of its influence spiritually depleting? Some time ago I read a wonderful book entitled "The Call of the Wild." The central figure of that story was a magnificent dog, a cross between a St. Bernard and a Great Dane. He was stolen from his California home and sent far north into the Klondike regions, where he was compelled to drag the miners' sleds over the Alaskan snows. Jack London, the writer, with a master hand traces him from a great, big, loving house dog down and down until he is a dog thief among dog thieves. He traces his degeneracy down and down until at last the bayings of the wolves call him into the darkness of the northern forests, and "the call of the wild" is answered by "the response of the wild."

Is not society's call too often "the call of the wild?" In the social world when you give a banquet do you not for the most part ask only those in your own social set? Do you obey the divine command, "When thou makest a dinner or a supper call not thy friends nor thy brethren, neither thy kinsmen nor thy rich neighbors lest they also bid thee again and a recompense be made thee. But when thou makest a feast call the poor, the maimed, the lame, the blind, and thou shalt be blessed, for they cannot recompense thee, but thou shalt be recompensed at the resurrection of the just." Is not society's call often "the call of the wild" because it is a call to selfishness, the call of only doing good to them who do good to you? Is it not often the call merely of wealth to associate with wealth and social caste with social caste? Oh, ye worshipers at the social shrines, better heed to-day the Lenten call! Better snuff out the many lights of the ball-rooms and the banquet halls! Know ye not that during the "spring fast" the lowly Nazarene is knocking at the door of your hearts trying to get in?

The Episcopalian Lent, in the next place, is a protest against business absorption. It says to the merchant, the manufacturer and the professional man: "You have a right to work. Indeed, you must work and work hard if you are to support your family and meet the financial necessities which are yours. But, oh, man, you have no right to make the acquisition of money the chief object of your life any more than you have a right to live to eat. 'By the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread.' But that sweat should not make thee indifferent to God or to the higher purposes of life, for which thou wert created."

But the great danger of money making is that the acquisition of wealth may become a passion. The calls of the money market become so great and urgent that an average business man does not feel that he has time to stop and think about his relations to God. But though the business world would demand all of a man's energies, the Lenten season comes into a busy merchant's life and says, "Oh, man, you should never be too busy to take time to think of your responsibilities to God!"

The Episcopalian Lent, in the next place, is a time for spiritual housecleaning. As the "spring fast" immediately succeeds the time when the business man takes an account of stock, we find the spring fast comes just before the days when the housewives are turning the houses upside down in their semi-annual attacks upon the dust and the moths. It is the time which we husbands dread, but it is the housecleaning time, which every prudent wife declares is essential for the physical health of her family. It is absolutely necessary to keep physical dirt out of a house, yet in spite of all precautions it will keep creeping in everywhere. Although the workmen in the Philadelphia mint are as careful as they can be, the dirt and the fine particles of gold will sift through the floor cracks. So great are these siftings that every year the floor is taken up and the dirt is separated from the gold, and thousands of dollars' worth of gold are thus collected for the United States treasury. In spite of all our precautions the minute, innumerable stains of sin will creep into the heart. Therefore each year it is very desirable to obey the call to the Lenten spring fast.

Once a year is certainly not too often to take a spiritual accounting and to conduct a serious self examination. The call to a fast should reach the ear of every Christian. What does that mean? Shall our wives and mothers and sisters go to the grocer and the butcher and the baker and say, "We do not want any more meat or vegetables or bread for the next forty days?" Does it mean that all the members of a home shall go without physical nutrition, as Dr. Tanner fasted for forty days and Leonard Tress fasted for fifty days and Rev. C. H. Dalrymple fasted for thirty-nine days and Milton Rathburn fasted for thirty-six days and Estella F. Kuenzel fasted for forty-one days? Oh, no. The habit of fasting, inspired by boastful folly and the desire of seeing how long we can live without tasting food, is just as sinful as the opposite extreme of gluttony, to see how much one can eat without utterly destroying the smooth workings of the digestive organs.

Spiritual housecleaning does not mean the complete abstinence from physical food. It does mean emphatically the reconsecration and the rededication of the domestic fireside to Jesus Christ through self abnegation. It means that we shall have prayers at the cradle. It means that we shall have prayers in the bedroom and prayers in the parlor and prayers in the sitting room and prayers in the kitchen and have the dining room spread with a gospel banquet of the "bread of life."

The Lenten season in the home means simply the spiritual preparation for Christ to visit the home. When Martin Farquhar Tupper, the famous English poet, came to visit us in Brooklyn we gave to him the very best room in the house. We gathered together the most famous literary men of the city to meet him. At that party Horace Greeley came, and William Cullen Bryant came and read his "Thanatopsis," and George William Curtis came, and I think John G. Whittier came. I well remember my mother giving to me Tupper's popular book, "Proverbial Philosophy," and saying: "Read that book. You should know who Martin Farquhar Tupper is before he comes, and then you can honor him as he should be honored." In like manner the Lenten season in the home is an appropriate time for the spiritual preparation for Christ's coming to the home. The children should be told all about him and be prepared to welcome the Saviour as a friend. The cook and the chambermaid should be told all about him, so that they may know how Christ loved Martha, the busy cook, as well as the gentle Mary who sat at his feet. Home friends should be told all about him, so that they also may come in and honor the divine guest. We should prepare to greet Christ not as a stranger, but as a long loved and anxiously awaited friend.

The Lenten season is an annual plea for the spiritualization of the church. Ministers of the different Protestant Churches are more and more getting into the custom of going into a "retreat" at least once a year, where by fasting and prayer they may spiritually prepare themselves for their ecclesiastical ministrations. At least once a year as church members we should go into a spiritual "retreat." In that "retreat" we should call upon our Heavenly Father that the Holy Spirit may bless us in our relationship with our midweek prayer meetings and Sunday schools and Christian Endeavor Societies and bless us in our relationship to his great church at large.

After Jesus Christ drove the money changers out of the temple, were the attempts to secularize the house of God into a place for mere educational and literary and musical and social and financial enjoyment forever abandoned? Do not some of us, consciously and unconsciously, fall into the error of coming to church merely on account of the oratorical gifts of the preacher? Did not thousands upon thousands of worshipers sit at the feet of a Beecher, a Cumming, a Rowland Hill and a John Wesley, not because they were worshiping God, but rather because they were worshiping a brilliant man?

We know that the finest living musical composer of Italy leads the Vatican choir and the finest organist of all London is master of St. Paul's famous organ and that Plymouth church was not more noted for the fact that it had one of the greatest of musicians, who was able to make its organ pipes weep and sob as well as sound a mighty hosanna. Are not some of our churches on account of their wealth being more and more secularized into mere social clubs? Do not many professional men go to church not for the spiritual good they may get out of those churches, but that they may be able to come in touch with those who worship in those congregations? Is it not becoming more and more the custom for the members of the church boards of trustees to judge of the success or the failure of the church by the criterion of money—by the way that church in its collections is able to take in as well as give out wealth?

Oh, yes, my friends, the church members should heed the Lenten summons. They should heed the spiritual call, which soars above the discordant ones of the busy marts even as the clear note of the thrush may be heard above the bedlam of the woods sounding the reveille of the morning. They should hear the Lenten call which says to the clergyman, "Oh, ordained undershepherd of the Christian pulpit, down on your knees and pray!" Lent calls to the elders and deacons and Sunday school officers, "Down on your knees and pray!" It calls to the lay members, whether bediamonded and in silks or in humble homespun, "Down on your knees in prayer!" Oh, that we might all heed the spiritual Lenten call and make Christ's church a veritable "house of prayer."

Thus, my friends, the spring fast calls to the men in the social world and to the men in the business world and to the men in the home and to the men in the church to come to prayers. It calls at this time because on the coming Ash Wednesday we shall celebrate the beginning of one of the most triumphant and yet saddest times of all Christ's earthly existence. The Jordanic baptism was just over. Christ was about to begin his divine mission. We know not how far the human nature he assumed may have obscured for the time the divine attributes he possessed. It may be that in those forty days of solitary thought and prayer he realized more clearly than in his former years the sublimity of his work and of his sacrifice. He saw what his work was to be. He saw how he must carry the burden of man's sins and die for man and be resurrected before he could return to his Father's throne.

May this coming spring fast of the Lenten season be to you also a time of spiritual awakening. May it be a time when you will not only realize that God has a glorious earthly work for you to do, but a time when you can realize that after work is done you shall live on and on and with Christ and never die. May you during the next coming forty days be much in prayer, much in earnest beseechment. May you also feel and know that the way you are to be best fitted for that earthly work is by the depth of your repentance as well as by the height of your glorious and triumphant faith.

BANNOCKBURN FIELD

SCENE OF BATTLE THAT GAVE SCOTLAND HER INDEPENDENCE.

A Black (Coal) Country on a Small Scale—An Annual Event of Importance—Field Itself Is Distinguished From Other Fields by a Huge Flagstaff—Famous Bored Stone, the One Solitary Relic of 1314—Brock's Brae.

Bannockburn, the scene of the battle that gave Scotland her independence nearly five centuries ago, has still an indirect association with the profession of arms. It is a busy, thriving little place, where tweeds and carpets are made, but its most notable industry is the weaving of tartans for the Highland regiments. It is a black country on a small scale, and there is plenty of coal to supply Stirling and all the factories round. An annual event of importance is the horse and cattle fair, held on the third Tuesday in June, when dealers and drovers and farmers assemble, not far, probably, from the spot where Bruce broke his battleaxe in cleaving the skull of De Bohun. Visitors to Bannockburn spend little time in the town, and push on to the battlefield, on which the one conspicuous object that distinguishes it from other fields is a huge flagstaff. It is 120 feet high, and was erected in 1870 by the Dumbarton and Stirling Oddfellows. Near it is the famous Bored Stone, the one solitary relic of 1314, enclosed in an iron grating. This large block of granite is sunk in the earth, and there is a hole in it in which, according to tradition, the Bruce's standard was fixed on the day of battle. The hill or rising ground here is known as Brock's Brae, and on it the Royal pavilion was erected.

Near at hand is the hamlet of St. Ninians, and at a second village, Newhouse, two large stones are pointed out as marking the scene of the fight between the forces of Bruce's nephew and Sir Robert Clifford. The Bannock, from which the historic field is named, is a small burn or streamlet running down to the Forth. Originally the field was known as the New-park; and Barbour, writing 50 years after the battle, mentions a park with trees through which the English had to pass before they could attack. Vestiges of the park still remain, and the stumps of the trees beneath which Edward's men advanced exist to this day. An adjacent farmhouse is called the Park, and a mill on the south side of the burn, Park mill, is about opposite the spot where the centre of the Scottish army was drawn up. On the left was the morass, now known as Milton Bog, part of it a mill pond, where the fatal pits were dug and covered over with green turf. A mile away, at the Bloody Fold, a body of the English foot are said to have made a desperate stand before finally quitting the "stricken field." A rumor that Bannockburn might be sold to a builder gave rise to a report that Mr. Andrew Carnegie had been asked to buy the ground and present it to the Scottish people.

Stirling County is rich in battle grounds. South-east of Bannockburn lies Sauchieburn, a sinister name in Caledonian history. There in 1488 King James III. was defeated by his rebellious subjects. The wounded monarch managed to make his way to a mill, and there he was afterwards found to have been stabbed to death by the hand of a mysterious assassin, who was never discovered. Beaton's mill, the scene of this royal tragedy, lies in a hollow by the Edinburgh road beyond St. Ninians.

Olive Oil as a Medicine.

Olive oil is the choicest and most palatable of all foods. It contains the largest amount of nutriment of any other food, the total amount being nearly 100 per cent., while the best grains and legumes contain less than 90 per cent., animal meat from 22 to 29 per cent., fruits and vegetables contain less still. One ounce of olive oil per diem facilitates intestinal digestion, encourages the action of the bowels and aids digestion in a remarable way. The vegetarian diet is generally too poor in fats. A teaspoonful of olive oil given three times a day to an anaemic child is a wonderful help toward health. For the scrofulous child it builds up tissue. Pure olive oil improves with age and may be kept for any length of time without deterioration of it is kept in a dark place and in an even temperature (the ice box), to retain that very fruity flavor, but if it is exposed it is very easily contaminated. It quickly takes up all foreign odors. Its manufacture must be under the best sanitary conditions.

Thoughts Have Life.

There is much of truth in this exquisite verse of Ella Wheeler Wilcox, who is a disciple of telepathy:

Thoughts do not need the wings of words
  To fly to any goal;
Like subtle lightnings, not like birds,
  They speed from goal to goal.

Hide in your heart a bitter thought;
  Still it has power to blight;
Think love, and though you speak it not
  It gives the world more light.

FRANK OR FERNIE

MORE ABOUT THE SMELTER

Choice of Site lies Between Fernie and Frank.—Construction Will Commence As Soon as Site is Selected.

Messrs. Fernau and Lefebvre were interviewed by the Nelson Daily News upon their return to Nelson after their trip along the line. The interview practically corroborates the article on the zinc smelter proposition that appeared in these columns last week. The following appeared in Tuesday's Daily News.—

C. Fernau, consulting mining engineer of Newcastle-on-Tyne, and Oscar Lefebvre, representing Henri Samuel, banker, of Brussels have returned from a visit along the line of the Crow's Nest railway. They stopped at several points and went as far east as Frank, Alberta. As a result of their visit they have definitely decided to locate the zinc smelter at either Fernie or Frank. It will require a trip to the east to confer with the coal companies there before the site will be finally determined on. So far as the erection of a lead smelter is concerned, the idea of erecting it for the present has been abandoned, as they found it impossible to secure contracts for a stable quantity of silver lead ore to keep the proposed smelter in operation.

In speaking about the trip over the Crow's Nest line and its results, Mr. Fernau said: "We have just returned from a week's trip over the Crow's Nest line during which we visited Frank, Fernie and other points. Our object was to find, if possible, suitable sites for the location of a lead smelter and a zinc smelter. We were much struck with the enormous quantity of coal to be found in the measures of the Crow's Nest pass, and the really good quality of the fuel produced, when compared with the usual American product. We fully recognize the fact that it will always be an available and cheap source of fuel for the reduction works of the Kootenays. We have decided to erect the zinc smelter at either Fernie or Frank. We can only decide on which one of these two points it will be after our return from a visit to Montreal. We will require from 30 to 50 acres for the enterprise. The initial cost of the enterprise will be $150,000, and it will employ from 60 to 75 persons with prospects of that number being increased to four or five times as many by the end of three years. Our idea in locating the zinc smelter where cheap fuel can be had direct from the mines is that it is cheaper to haul the zinc ore and the zinc concentrates to the fuel than it would be to haul the fuel to where the zinc is produced.

"As for the zinc enriching plant, it is to be located at Rosebery, on Slocan lake. Work on this plant will be commenced just as soon as the snow leaves the ground. The plans and specifications are all ready, and this will be the first of our plans to take material shape, although the zinc smelter plant will be constructed just as soon as we can arrange about the site.

"We failed to obtain the necessary contracts for lead ores to keep the proposed lead smelter supplied with ore, and at present we are not considering the scheme. It might, however, be taken up later if the conditions justified it."

Messrs. Fernau and Lefebvre leave today for Three Forks and after a few days there will return to Nelson. From here they will make a tour of the Boundary country and then the start for the return to Europe will be made.

C. P. Walker's company played this very humorous comedy to a thoroughly appreciative audience on Saturday night. As predicted when they played "Jones" the house was packed to the doors and many had standing room only. The play is full of pure, unadulterated fun from the rise of the curtain until Smith and the wife are finally driven from their comfortable New York home to seek refuge from their well meaning relatives who persisted in coming to stay with them. Millard Reid and Lydia Millard had the star parts, which they interpreted in a very realistic manner. They were ably supported, with but one or two minor exceptions, by the other members of the company. Miss Dupont as the "cook lady" was a decided hit. E. J. Brady and Miss Pryce as General and Mrs. Billetdoux had important roles which were well sustained. E. P. Higgins portrayed the German Count to perfection and Robert Price had in Major Duncombe a better character in which to display his ability The excellence of the play as a whole reflects great credit on Manager Walker and so long as he maintains his present standard he may always count on a good reception before a Fernie audience.

McKELLAR IS CHAMPION.

Easily Defeated O'Hearn in a Mile Skating Race on Monday.

The much talked of skating race for 1 mile between Neil A. McKellar and E. R. O'Hearn took place at the rink on Monday night. A great deal of interest was centred on this event and a large crowd gathered to witness the race. The soft weather had threatened to ruin the ice but it had been kept covered with water and considering the weather conditions the ice was very fair.

E. R. Wood acted as starter and Messrs. Ganong, Liphardt and Scott were the judges. The course was 17 laps and the men were placed on opposite sides of the rink. McKellar got about 8 feet the start and for a couple of laps there was no perceptible difference in the racers' positions. Then McKellar gradually forged a lead gaining a little on every lap. At the 12th he was on the heals of O'Hearn, having gained half a lap on the latter. The remainder of the race was tame. McKellar did not attempt to pass O'Hearn but it was clear that he could have struck a faster gait if it had been required. The time for the mile was 4.06, which considering the heavy ice and the small rink was very fair.

Considerable money was up on the race in addition to the main bet of $200 a side. As O'Hearn claims to have won the provincial championship at Rossland last year this race practically places McKellar at the head of the list for the province, and the easy manner in which he won goes to prove that none but fast men can skate in his class.

The hockey match between the benedicts and bachelors did not materialize as the prospective participants did not like the ominous appearance of the little pools of water on the ice.

A CO-OPERATIVE STORE.

Movement on Foot Among the Miners with That Object in View.

For some time the miners of the three colliery towns have had a movement under way for the establishment of a co-operative store. A committee was appointed some time ago to take preliminary soundings and their report was submitted at a general meeting held in the lodge room of the union on Tuesday evening of this week. The report was accepted and another committee composed of 12 members, three each from Fernie, Coal Creek, Morrissey and Michel was appointed to carry the scheme on to completion. The president of the committee is John Galvin and the secretary-treasurer is Thomas Biggs. At the meeting on Tuesday about 50 members joined.

Some general facts have been gathered as to the practical workings of the scheme as outlined by the committee. The business of the association will be under the control of the members through the system of election. Regular officers, consisting of a president, secretary, treasurer and various committees will be elected every six months from the ranks of the members. A manager, who will be advised by the officers of the association, will be engaged on salary to take charge of the business.

Shares will sell for $5 each, and no member will be allowed to subscribe for more than 40 shares. The capital stock, it is said, will bear interest at 5 per cent. per annum. The profits of the business will be divided every three months among the members according to the amount that each purchased during that time. Each member will be entitled to only one vote. The membership will not be restricted in any way.

The promoters expect to have the main store at Fernie with a branch at Morrissey Mines. One of the prominent members stated this week that the Fernie store would be in operation in three months. The site, he said, was under consideration and already more than one building had been offered them. The rules and regulations to govern the association are not yet adopted but are under consideration.

Mrs. E. L. Wriglesworth wishes to announce to her friends that she will receive next Wednesday and Thursday from 2:30 to 4:30 p.m. at the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Farquharson.

NO FEDERAL INTERFERENCE

Bill 16, Rescinding Grant of Blocks 4593 and 4594 to the C.P.R. will not be Disallowed.

Ottawa, March 3.—It is understood the dominion government has decided not to interfere with the bill passed by the legislature of British Columbia two sessions ago dealing with certain blocks of land in southeast Kootenay which were to be given to the C.P.R. as a subsidy for the Columbia and Western railway and were afterwards refused by the government.

The bill which the legislature passed endorsed the action of the government in withholding the land from the C.P.R. Of course the subject is one in which the dominion is concerned.

The last chapter has probably been written in the sensational history of the southeast Kootenay blocks 4593 and 4594, figures that have danced like a nightmare before the eyes of all concerned in British Columbia politics during two or three years past. These blocks it will be remembered were given to the C.P.R. as lieu lands in satisfaction of subsidy earned on construction of the Columbia & Western railway, although no nearer than 100 miles to that railway at any point, and therefore not fairly to be classed (as they were classed by the government of the day of which Mr. Dunsmuir was premier) "contiguous lands."

Blocks 4593 and 4594 have for years been regarded by those familiar with the country as especially valuable in view of the reputed presence in them of coal and oil measures, hence the extreme desire of the railway company to secure them in place of a much greater acreage elsewhere.

Upon the passage of bill 16 of the British Columbia session of 1903 the hope of the C.P.R. securing possession of these rich lands seemed to expire. This act absolutely nullified the proposed grant, declared it contra to the spirit of the original subsidy act alleged to be given effect to, and ratified and confirmed the cancellation of the grant by order-in-council during the latter days of the Dunsmuir government.

INTERESTED IN TELEGRAPHS.

(From the Toronto Mail and Empire.)

Ottawa March 5.—The Government by order-in-council has approved the leasing of the Dominion Government telegraph lines on Vancouver Island to C. H. Gibbons, of Vancouver, and D. V. Mott, of Fernie, representing the British Pacific Telegraph Co. These lines were built about eight years ago, chiefly for the purpose of affording distressed ships telegraphic communication with owners, agents or authorities at Victoria. The British Pacific Telegraph Co., now about to be incorporated, aims to make these lines commercially profitable. It is the intention to make the Victoria-Cape Beale line an independent link between the telegraph lines of America and the cable.

In return for the lease concessions the Government is to be relieved from further expense in maintaining and operating the line, and also gets free transmission for all Government messages, shipping distress reports, and weather and departmental bulletins. A cash payment is also made annually to the Government. The Government retains the right to terminate the lease, with compensation to the company to be arrived at by arbitration, should nationalization of telegraphs be adopted as a feature of Canadian Government policy at any time during the life of the lease.

POLICE COURT

Various complaints of petty thieving have been made to the police and Con. Sampson made one arrest this week in consequence. On Wednesday the accused, a well known citizen, pleaded guilty of pilfering from a neighboring wood-pile. The magistrate imposed a fine of $20 or 1 month at hard labor. The fine was paid.

A theft case in which the Hayes Lumber Co. figured as plaintiffs and two well known citizens as defendants was tried at the police court on Monday. The defence claimed that the goods taken were in dispute and the magistrate gave the accused the benefit of the doubt and dismissed the case.

Spence Lyon was given a week in jail on Wednesday for being drunk and disorderly.

Frank Naden last week was given 6 weeks for vagrancy and T. Cameron got 4 weeks under the same charge.

E. J. Walsh late C.P.R. agent at Michel has been moved to Frank to fill the vacancy made by T. B. Smith, who has been appointed agent at Coleman.

COAL CREEK.

F. Davis is a new employee in the Trites-Wood Co.'s store here.

J. T. Rouse has been appointed assistant to Mr. White in the store house.

The business school holds sessions on Mondays, Wednesdays and Thursdays from 10 to 12 a.m, and 7 to 9 p.m.

Mr. Empey was visiting in town this week. His arm is slowly recovering from the attack of blood poisoning.

General Manager Stockett entertained the male glee club at his home one evening recently. The boys report having had a splendid time.

The men have had some difference with the management as to the contract rate to be paid in the new tunnels, numbers 4 and 5. They have agreed to continue on at development prices until a settlement is reached.

It is reported that the Coal Company purposes building twenty-five new houses on the same bench as the church. Other improvements, such as a new lamp house and the removal of the present office to a more advantageous position, more free from the coal dust of the tipple are contemplated.

CRANBROOK.

From the Herald.

J. A. Harvey has moved his family from Fort Steele to Cranbrook.

Ed. Home received the sad intelligence of the death of his brother Harry at Oak Lake Monday, and left on Tuesday for that place to attend the funeral.

B. H. Short, of Fernie, visited Cranbrook last week and concluded to locate here. Mr. Short is an artistic sign writer and decorator and looks upon Cranbrook as a good field for his business.

M. McInnis has sold his timber limits below Elko to the Cranbrook Sash and Door Factory. The limits include 8,000 acres of fine timber, and the company proposes to erect a $30,000 mill at once and start to cut lumber as soon as arrangements can be made.

The Crows Nest Pass Lumber Company of Wardner, is receiving its new machinery to double the capacity of the mill, which will bring it up to 150,000 per day. Other improvements are being made that will enable them to meet the demands for lumber without any delay. Their dry kiln will be ready by the 15th of this month, and will have a capacity of 50,000 a day. The planing mill is equipped with five machines, and the platform arranged for the loading of 20 cars at a time. The company expects to cut about 20,000,000 this season, and will run the plant day and night.

TODAY'S DESPATCHES.

St. Petersburg—The Czar has received a message from Viceroy Alexieff at Mukden telling of the Japanese bombardment of Port Arthur this morning. No mention is made of any damage done to Russian forts or ships.

Berlin—Albert Jaffe, a partner in the Frankfort banking firm of A. Jaffe and Ctrier shot and killed himself today. Jaffe lost several million marks in private speculation and his financial ruin was completed by the depression following the outbreak of the war.

New York—For the express purpose of viewing Niagara Falls under winter condition the Grand Duke of Oldenburg arrived here today.

Rome—There are continual slight earthquakes in Abruzzo. Six villages have been destroyed and the inhabitants are under canvas. No lives have been lost. The government is rendering assistance.

London—Mr. Austen Chamberlain said tonight, that his father's health was quite satisfactory and he was receiving much benefit from the change and rest.

Tokio—The ice on the Yalu has begun to melt. Japanese scouts found 40 Cossacks 58 miles north of Ping Yang on the Wiju road.

London—A Times special from Tokio says the bombardment of Vladivostock was evidently a secondary operation incidental to the patrolling of the Japanese sea in search of the Russian squadron.

For Stomach Trouble,

"I have taken a great many different medicines for stomach trouble and constipation," says Mrs. S. Geiger, of Dunkerton, Iowa, "but never had as good results from any as from Chamberlain's Stomach and Liver Tablets." For sale by all druggists and dealers.

The "Crow's Nest Special" is the best cigar along the line. x

RELIEVED OF MONEY AND CLOTHES.

A Newfoundlander named John Snow was held up last week two miles this side of Morrissey and relieved of $25 and the contents of his trunk. He left Fernie for Morrissey on foot drawing his trunk on a sleigh. Two men whom he slightly knew claimed to have the same destination in view and offered to accompany him. When nearing Morrissey one of them produced a gun and the other went through him, securing $25 in cash and some clothes and other belongings in the trunk. They then started him off toward Fernie with dire threats. The police learned that the men purchased tickets for Spokane over the Great Northern and the authorities have notified all likely places for their apprehension. The men stayed at a boarding house at Coal Creek for two days and a fair description has been obtained. They are foreigners and the larger one went by the name of Frank.

LOCALS CONTINUED.

The local Conservative Association held a meeting on Wednesday evening.

A. Joyce was down the line to Cowley this week.

L. Knight was in towh on one of his regular rounds this week.

R. Arnold, of Cranbrook, is in town rustling insurance.

Mrs. Blakemore, of Nelson, is visiting friends in town.

For a good smoke try a "Crows Nest Special." x

Mr. and Mrs. Tuttle returned last evening from a visit with friends at Whatcom Wash.

The rate on telegrams to Winnipeg and other Manitoba points has been reduced from $1 to 75 cents for ten words.

D. Llewellyn arrived this week from Illinois to accept a position on the engineer staff at Michel.

Messrs. J. F. Spalding and Wm. Shaw arrived from Winnipeg this week to accept positions in the Trites-Wood Co. store.

The band concert at the rink last Friday evening was attended by a large number of skaters and others. The program of music was of the highest order and the band received many complimentary expressions from those present Several of the numbers, however, could not be classed as skating music as the time was too fast.

Kanouse & Levers, proprietors of the Sanitarium hotel, Blairmore, wish to announce that they have refitted the hotel in first-class shape and are now in a position to give the best of service to their guests. Those troubled with rheumatism should keep this in mind for the medicinal value of the sulphur springs at that point is gaining a wide reputation.

BEHIND THE DOOR

BY EDWARD DONNEY

AUTHOR OF "A HOUSE OF TEARS" "RED FOOT STORY" ETC.

"Ssh!" gripping the inspector by the arm. "Don't raise your voice. I think I hear a sound."

Both men strained their ears.

"That's the gentleman! In you go, Briggs. Not a moment to be lost. And be as quiet as the grave."

CHAPTER XXII.

THE STRANGER.

Inspector Briggs suddenly lost all his apathy and became as alert as a cat on the pounce. He felt in his best form. There was a mystery to be solved, work to be done, and a reasonable amount of danger to be incurred, for the burglar might be armed and desperate.

The street lamp sent sufficient light into the room, and the inspector's eyes had now grown so accustomed to the dark that he could see almost every object in the bedroom plainly.

He looked under the bed. It seemed an awkward place to plant himself, and it would leave him at the mercy of an armed man. There were two cupboards in the room, both filling up spaces in the walls, and both standing at right angles to the door. One of these cupboards was placed in the wall at the gable end of the house, and the bed stood between it and the door. Into this cupboard Inspector Briggs stepped, secure in the "opinion" of Detective Goringe that the visitor, if he happened to be the right person, would concern himself only with that mysterious door which had perplexed and puzzled the coroner's jury and police.

Briggs had not long to wait before he heard a sound outside the bedroom door, a sound of shuffling feet. The cupboard in which he had concealed himself had no shelves, and when the two doors were pulled to without being closed tight there was a narrow slit between the doors, and through this the police inspector could see the whole of the bedroom door.

A rattle in the lock.

In a few moments he would know who the villain was—the thief and the would-be murderer—or was this a different piece of villainy altogether?

With a quick push the door was opened, and a man stepped into the room.

Briggs could get a view of only a portion of the intruder's face, and that only for a moment, as the man closed the door to quietly, the catch making a clicking sound which denoted that it was safe in its place. Then the stranger stood still, his back toward the cupboard.

A tall man, stout, and with a full, dark beard. Not Steinworth, not Vickery, not Leclerc. At least not unless it was one of these in disguise.

After standing still for a moment the burglar, who wore a long brown overcoat, put his hand into one of the pockets of the overcoat and drew something out. Probably a jimmy.

"Evidently my friend is quite of opinion that he is alone in the house," reflected Briggs. "He seems in no violent hurry. Now, then, he is about to turn his face this way!"

But Inspector Briggs was wrong. The man moved slightly round, and then, lifting his hands and standing quite close to the door, he proceeded to do something with a jimmy.

Was it a jimmy? No, decided the inspector, watching the stranger's movements narrowly. It was a turnscrew. The stranger worked with the turnscrew for a couple of minutes. Then he went down on his knees and continued his operations on the frame of the door.

What did it mean? And why couldn't the fellow just give him one fair look at his face? It was most tantalizing. How long would he have to stand in the cupboard eyeing the stranger? It would never do to interrupt him now. He was evidently engaged on some job which he was certain he could accomplish easily and leisurely. He was not giving any attention to the lock of the door. But why should he? The door was now unlocked. Or was it? Perhaps that sardonic humourist Goringe, was now outside the door turning the key slowly and quietly, a self-satisfied grin on his face. That would be capital, thought Inspector Briggs. Indeed he was so much carried away by the notion that he very near forgetting himself, and indulging in a quiet chuckle.

"What the deuce is he at now, and what prompts him to keep his full face or even half his face out of my line of vision?" wondered Briggs as the stranger rose to his feet. "He has unscrewed something—the hinges of the door. How on earth has he done that, though?"

Inspector Briggs was tantalized. Here was his prey within his grasp, and yet he must not stir. Even his breath he had to draw carefully lest he might disturb the man who was silently operating on the door.

The stranger now got the screwdriver slowly and cautiously in between the door and frame, and as quietly as if he was an engraver or a wood carver picking out a difficult bit of his work he gradually worked the back of the door in toward him until the back of the door itself was wholly parted from the frame and stood in the room.

Inspector Briggs could scarcely contain himself as he saw this strange operation performed.

Then the black-bearded man put out his left hand, holding the back of the door steadily with his right hand, and put the fingers of his left hand into some groove or opening in the door—at least so it appeared to the inspector, although he could not tell exactly what the man was doing.

Suddenly, with a hoarse cry, the stranger fell back several paces, threw up his hands, and in a thick, guttural voice one word fell from him:

"Gone!"

As the black-bearded man stood in the centre of the room, he grasped the brass knob of the bedstead with one hand to steady himself. Inspector Briggs had now the full light from the street lamp thrown on half his face. Fingering his revolver, he opened the cupboard door noiselessly, sprang round by the foot of the bed, and an iron grip was fixed on the throat of the man who had solved the problem of the locked door.

The stranger uttered a hoarse, appalling cry as the police inspector gripped him, and his captor had to drop his revolver, and use both his arms to prevent his prisoner from falling on the floor.

He pushed him toward the bed, and tried to place him upon it, but the man's body felt like lead, and the inspector could only throw the upper part of the body on the side of the bed, and then grip him by the legs and lay him on the bed. He knew the man was in a fit, powerless to offer any active resistance.

A knock at the door of the room startled him.

"Shove the door back into its place," cried Detective Goringe.

Leaving the bed, Briggs pushed the door back, and a moment afterward it was opened from the outside, and the detective stood in the doorway, a lighted candle in his hand.

"The fellow has gone off in some sort of a fit," said Briggs, great drops of sweat falling from his brow.

"He! Who?" asked the bewildered inspector. "'Pon my soul, my nerves and my senses are all gone wrong for the moment."

The detective led the way quickly to the bedside.

"Tear open his collar first," said he, "and then pull off his wig, and the black beard and moustache."

He held the candle on high.

"Steinworth, by all that's good!"

"Steinworth, by all that's good!" gasped Inspector Briggs, as he followed out Goringe's instructions, and stared at the helpless man on the bed.

CHAPTER XXIII.

A STRANGE CONFESSION.

It was about a quarter of an hour before Albert Steinworth had recovered sufficiently to utter an articulate sound.

In the meantime Goringe had fetched and lighted the lamp from the dining-room and had drawn down the blinds of the bedroom window, while Briggs, after divesting Steinworth of two heavy overcoats which he wore inside the long brown surtout, tried to bring the senseless man back to life.

When the two officers considered the young man was sufficiently restored, they propped him up in an easy chair, and then placing a small table in front of him Goringe turned the lamp up to its full.

Steinworth seemed utterly nerveless as he glanced slowly round the room. Then making a strong effort to pull himself together he muttered, disclosing under his moustacheless lips a set of long, white, fanglike teeth:—

"I see I am trapped. You are very clever," he added, after a brief pause, glaring at Detective Goringe and ignoring the imposing figure of Inspector Briggs. "It was of you I was afraid—not of the poor creatures in uniform."

"Recollect," said Inspector Briggs, with dignity, "that whatever you may say now will be taken down in evidence against you."

"I believe that is the formula," said Steinworth, grinning. "Why should I mind what I say to you now? Mr. Detective there can tell you all that has happened. He has discovered the secret of my little puzzle. It was so simple it baffled all the poor creatures who strut about this neighbourhood in uniform and all the miserable donkeys whom the same police select for coroners' juries. That was the reason I first confided my troubles to a policeman. Bah!"

Steinworth seemed to speak with difficulty. He was almost choked with rage—rage at being discovered, at his trick being found out. He did not trouble himself about the future. It was only the present which for the moment concerned him.

"I will give you credit, too," said Goringe, "for being a very clever young man, but you selected a bad time to commit a theft—when you were in serious money difficulties. And then corpses are extremely kittle cattle."

"That was a most unlucky accident—Mrs. Davorn's death." A convulsive shudder shook Steinworth. "It makes me almost sick to think of it. Everything would have gone well but for that, and the idiot Vickery's confession. You are puzzled about that confession, Mr. Detective. Come," with a short, unpleasant laugh, "do not deny it. If you like, I will be perfectly candid with you now. You have discovered my little secret. You have got hold of the money. What have I to hide? Indeed, it will help me as much as it will help you gentlemen and those mutton-headed jurymen to let you know what did happen. I am only a poor player at thieving, whose first move has landed him into a hideous mess. I have lost everything. I have nothing now to hide, nothing to seek for, thanks to you, sir," smiling at Goringe.

Steinworth now seemed an utterly different person from the voluble and somewhat slangy young man who had summoned Constable Metcalf to his assistance on the previous Thursday morning. He spoke in a guttural voice, his sentences were short, and his staccato manner of delivering them sounded strangely in the ears of the two officers of the law.

"You take it coolly," observed Goringe, "for a new hand. You are just after recovering from a fainting fit—you are all unstrung. Do you think you are wise in making a statement just now which will be used against you? Take time to consider. Give yourself a chance."

"I am quite well—quite myself again. Thank you for your caution. But you know my secret. You have the money. Perhaps the law will take into account that I have helped the enquiry."

"Ah! you are beginning, I see, to be a reasonable human being. You were only the mouthpiece of rage before. Now you are looking forward and talking sense. All right. The inspector and I will attend to you. Take your time. Don't flurry yourself."

Steinworth bit his under lip savagely with his long white teeth. Goringe's pleasant manner, his cocksureness, the fact that he had trapped him, were all biting deeply into the young man's soul, and he was about to declare he would reconsider his decision and remain silent. Then he felt that it would be better for him to speak. It would save time, and it would prevent him from lying any longer under the suspicion, which he knew still clung to him in the minds of many, of having in some way, however mysteriously, contributed to the death of Mrs. Davorn. Steinworth was an arrant coward, and as vain as he was cowardly. But his vanity did not reach to the sublime height of wishing to be regarded as a murderer or an accessory to a murder.

"Yes. I will tell you all," he said, with painful deliberateness.

"You will go slow, if you please," said Goringe, "for my friend and I had better help each other in taking a note of the principal part of your statement."

Inspector Briggs sat down at the table near Goringe, and took out his notebook. He was a mine of pent-up anger. Steinworth's contemptuous reference to him and to the Clayfields police compelled the inspector to be silent, lest if he did speak his anger might become volcanic.

"I learned—to begin at the beginning—that Mrs. Davorn had taken the money out of the bank, by an accident—the accident of my being in the bank and being close to her as the cashier was paying over the notes to her. This was suggested in the coroner's court, as you will remember."

"One for you, Briggs," said Goringe. "That was your discovery—or opinion, shall we call it?"

"An opinion," said the inspector, a smile curving his lips. "I don't aspire to certainties now."

"Ah!" was Steinworth's only comment, as he gazed from the detective to the inspector. "I was, to put it shortly, in desperate need of money, and the sight of Mrs. Davorn holding in her hands the bits of paper that would save me from helpless ruin fired me. Besides, I will tell you—though I do not see how it will help you very much—that I had some excuse for my greedy fit. I hoped—and I thought it was no foolish hope—that I should have been able to supplant that currish young Dr. Leclerc, whom I loathe—and that, having him once out of my way, Miss Rodney would turn from him to me. I did not know on Wednesday last that matters had come to such a pass between them."

"A fact worth noting," said Goringe to Briggs, observing that the inspector had ceased to write, and was gazing somewhat stupidly at Steinworth.

"Certainly," said he, setting to work again.

"Just a moment, Mr. Steinworth."

There was a pause for a few moments, and then Goringe, lifting his head, nodded at the pale, bedraggled young man in the armchair.

"I was in great perplexity," continued Steinworth, "to know how I should proceed to work. At first I thought of throwing myself at Miss Rodney's feet, and declaring my passion for her, and informing her of my troubles. I felt she would at least pity me, perhaps help me. That course I could not summon up courage for, so I pondered what I should do to get those notes, which I felt were in Mrs. Davorn's room—those notes which would save me from wreck and ruin. I heard footsteps outside in the forecourt about half-past 10 o'clock, and then I heard the hall doorbell ring. I somehow guessed it was the young doctor, this Leclerc, and straining my ears, I caught the sound of his voice. Instantly it occurred to me that this was a clandestine visit, and that perhaps I could use it for my own purposes, and get my rival—for so I regarded him—suspected. But how, I could not think. As I strode up and down my room in my stockings, I remembered a discovery I had made a few weeks previously about the hinges of my door."

"Go slow. Go slow," interrupted Goringe. "We are getting to business now. How are hinges fixed on a door, Briggs?" he asked, turning to the inspector. "Don't loook at the door, but just tax your memory."

Inspector Briggs paused for a moment.

"It seems a very simple question," said he, "but it is rather a poser to be faced with it right off when you're not in the joinery business. I know. The flat parts of the hinge are screwed to the frame of the door, and to the door itself, in such a way that the screws are out of sight when the dooor is closed, and nothing is seen but the round part of the hinge, through which the pin goes. That's what puzzled me to-night when I saw our friend attack the inside of the door with a screwdriver."

"A somewhat roundabout explanation about door hinges," said Goringe. "Now, Steinworth, will you fire ahead again?"

"A few weeks previously I had been amusing myself in the evening by painting bits of my room, and the last thing I did in that way was the door. It struck me in going over the door that the hinges—which were imbedded deeply in the door itself, and the frame—were different from those of other doors, and later on I found I was right about this. My door was evidently turned some long time ago, and possibly it was refixed by an amateur carpenter. At all events, the flat parts of the hinges, as the inspector calls them, are fixed inside my door. The pin and rounded part is also inside the door, and is the only visible part of the hinge when the door is closed. In fact, it looks exactly the same as any other door. When I was cleaning the woodwork, I discovered this, for there was so much paint already on the door and the doorpost that the flat part of the hinges, and the heads of the screws were quite covered over with paint. As I strode up and down the room, turning everything over in my mind, it occurred to me that it might be possible to unscrew the door at the hinges, to lock it from the outside, get back again into the room, and screw the door up. Then no one could suspect me of having left my room, for I could not get out of the window without leaving traces behind me, and no one could suspect me of having locked myself in—at least no one in Clayfields."

"Did you not consider that the money might have been stolen before you were locked in? That a friend might aid you in locking the door?"

"No; that did not occurr to me. I have no friends of that sort."

"So you see you were not absolutely free from suspicion even if your door trick had not been discovered. Well?"

"It was some time," continued Steinworth, "before I could decide what course I would adopt. Leclerc had left the house, and I was walking up and down my room silently in the dark. After about an hour I thought I heard a queer, hoarse cry—not a loud cry, but a dull sound, with a strange terror in it. I opened my door quietly and listened intently, but I heard no further noise. The house was as still as the grave."

"What time was it you thought you heard the cry?" asked Goringe.

"I could not exactly say. Probably between twelve and one o'clock."

"Go on. You stood listening, your door open. Well?"

"As I stood in my room, still undecided if I would chance a visit to Mrs. Davorn's room, and trying to think how I might be certain she was fast asleep, I heard a noise, which startled me, on the landing, and then—I was nearly dead from terror as I caught sight of it—I saw the figure of a man dressed in a white robe on the landing. Who or what it was I could not tell. I was paralyzed. The man seemed to hesitate. Then he suddenly turned and walked into my room. He wandered about a bit as if he were feeling in the darkness, and at last he got to my bed and held something over it for a few minutes. Next he wandered about the room, feeling his way with outstretched hands, and at last he got to the cupboard over there. He fumbled about in it, and at length—I can't tell how long he was in the room—he groped his way to the door. He passed quite close to me. I couldn't move a muscle to save my life, and I saw his eyes were closed. I got courage from this, and fancied the man was in some kind of trance.

"Of course I now knew it was Vickery. I touched him on the shoulder, but he showed no sign of having felt me, so I plucked up sufficient courage to follow him. He stood on the landing for some minutes, and then went into his own room. I still followed him. He went straight into his bed. Somehow I fancied he was on the same errand as the one I was contemplating. His idea had been to chloroform Mrs. Davorn. A capital idea for me. It would put all suspicion away from me, and direct it either against Vickery or Leclerc. I was aware Vickery used chloroform and ether—he had spoken to me once about the evaporation of ether, and I had seen bottles on his mantelpiece as I passed into my own room. I now know he was utterly unconscious, so I took the liberty of seeking for a bottle of his chloroform. I brought this into my own room, and going to my bed I found upon it a sponge, which, of course, Vickery had dropped there. I waited now for considerably over an hour, and then I saturated my sponge and stole into the next room. Vickery was snoring loudly, but fearing he might awake and disturb me I thought it would be prudent to lock his door. If I heard him fumbling at it I could have time to get back to my own room undiscovered. I then proceeded to Mrs. Davorn's room and, as I thought chloroformed her. I had little difficulty in finding the money, and the only thing was where to hide the notes. As I left the room it occurred to me that if I wanted to throw suspicion on Leclerc it would be best to strengthen it by letting it be supposed he got in through the window. I knew he was devilish hard up, and was the kind of fellow who would flounder about helplessly in a morass once he was plunged into it. I hate the cur."

"Rather a wild sort of way for a cool hand like yourself to work up a case against a rival."

"I admit it was, but the sight of that apparition in my room—Vickery in the trance, or whatever it was—had put me into such a fevered condition that I could not reason out things calmly. Anyhow I returned to the landing outside, went into my room, and lighting a candle I set to work at the hinges. It was a tough job to unscrew them—I think it took me the best part of an hour—but when I did get the back part of the door fairly free from the doorpost I saw that the place where the old lock had been was covered by a slab of wood which seemed to be giving out. As I examined this piece of covering wood I soon saw it would easily come away. I pried it out gently, and found I could almost put my whole hand into the cavity where the old lock had been. What better place for the notes? I put them there. I knew it was putting all my eggs into one basket, but that is not always the worst plan. Then I refixed the piece of wood which covered in this hole. It fitted readily, and I had only to give it a thin coat of the quickly-drying paint I had been using a few weeks before, and no trace would be left to the ordinary eye."

Steinworth now paused; he seemed tired and distraught. He spoke in a drawling tone, and with the air of one who is reading aloud, rather than with the manner of one who is giving utterance to his thoughts. After some minutes he proceeded again.

"I am very near the end of that awful night," he said. "I next pulled the door into the room until I had made sufficient space to let myself out between it and the doorpost. I was now fearfully agitated; any sudden or unexpected noise would, I think, have made me collapse. If Mrs. Davorn had awaked and screamed—a thing I was dreaming—I think I should have died of fright. When I got out on the landing I found I had a more difficult task before me than I expected. The key would not turn in the lock; it was at too sharp an angle in the lock. This added to the terrors of the night, for it was on the door I placed my reliance. In the end I was obliged to drag the door back into its place, and then lock it, and then the task was having locked it, to force it back sufficiently to allow me to squeeze myself into the room between the door and the doorpost without disturbing the lock. At length I accomplished my task. No one but a very slender man could have got back."

Steinworth again ceased to speak and began to pant heavily. It was several minutes before he resumed his story.

"I was now almost fainting from excitement and terror, but I nerved myself for a final struggle with the door. I got it into its place, screwed up the hinges, and then painted them over until I felt they would be as invisible as they had been before I had disturbed them. The paint I was using would dry in about 12 hours, and then I should be safe."

"It was the smell of the paint which first put me on the right scent," observed Goringe. "It was quite dry when I examined the door, but it had plainly been put on recently. Anyhow I scraped enough away with my finger nails to satisfy me that—taking other things into account—the key to the mystery was the door. Now, Mr. Steinworth, as you have been so free with your confession, will you tell me, just for curiosity's sake, at what time did you enter the house last night? Of course, you know it is a question you are quite justified in refusing to answer."

"Not only will I tell you that gladly, for it relieves me to speak, but I will tell you freely why I came. It was at the same time I came to-night—I cannot say the exact hour—but between 12 and 1 o'clock."

"I suppose you were not aware then that I had only just tumbled into bed in this very room when you arrived on the landing?"

"You astonish me!" said Steinworth, his eyes lighting up. "I was quite sure the house was deserted."

"I must have slept more soundly last night than I have slept for 20 years, but all the same it is true that I was in this room while you were busy with the keyhole."

"I worked as silently as I could, but it is strange I did not disturb you."

"The air here evidently agrees with you, Mr. Goringe," said Inspector Briggs. "But our young friend is anxious to tell us why he risked the visit here."

"For the money, of course," said Steinworth. "I had hoped to find the key in the door. Then all would have been done in one night."

"Possibly not," said Goringe. "I am afraid the sight of a man slumbering in your bed would have scared you."

"Perhaps you are right," sighed Steinworth. "At all events, as I had the house to myself—at least, so I thought at the time—I determined to fasten fresh suspicion on Leclerc. I fancied something would arise to upset Vickery's own theory of his being the person who took the notes."

Steinworth paused again. He seemed utterly worn out, and it was beginning to dawn upon the two officers of the law that it would have been safer to have sent for a doctor at the beginning rather than toward the end of the young man's story.

Suddenly a loud knock at the hall door startled the three men.

Steinworth threw his hands up, his eyes blazing with terror.

"Heavens!" he cried. "What is this?"

Governess—Oh, Kitty, you careless child! There are not two r's in "very." Rub one of them out.

Kitty—Yes, but which one?

Why He Quit Work.

The reason he quit the job was this way: He had been out of work for a long time, and money was scarce. He applied for work to a well known south end dealer in coal and feed. "Sure, I'll give you a job!" said the dealer. "Go down to the steamboat landing and help one of my men unload his wagon."

The applicant for work readily accepted the job. He went down to the steamboat landing and saw a man unloading a wagon filled with coal. He said to the driver, "The boss told me to help you unload."

"All right, old fellow; pitch in!" said the driver, very well pleased to receive assistance.

The work progressed rapidly, and the job was about completed when the "boss" came along. He looked surprised. Addressing the recent applicant for work in an angry tone of voice, he said, "I thought I told you to help one of my men."

"Well, so I am, ain't I?"

"I should say not! That's one of my rivals' wagons. I wanted you to unload a car of feed."

The would be workman was so disgusted that he put on his coat and quit work instantly.—Albany Journal.

BIGNESS AND SENSE.

NOT ALL INTELLECTUAL PEOPLE ARE COMPANIONABLE.

The Art of Entertaining Should Be Studied by Many People Who Think They Are Treading the Higher Planes of Life. Loving Children

Bigness is not the same as size, at least not always, and it is not to be estimated by weight. "The people," says a generous woman, "whom I most dread as guests are those who have no capacity for small pleasures." I, too, have the same trouble. John has a bulky friend who never plays a game or romps with children, and I do not know what to do with him. When we go out to play croquet, he stalks up and down with his arms crossed under his coattails and has not the least interest in our sport. Then John has to leave us and go off to discuss the resurrection of the body or settle some other high and mighty problem that neither of them knows anything about.

John doesn't like it, but he feels the obligations of a host—and, as for me, I don't think any guest ought to disrupt a family and become a distracting element. Why can't the man get off his horse and try to see what other folks need and like? This is all the worse because, if we propose a walk, he sees nothing to interest him; doesn't notice the trees or the flowers and strikes in with a disputatious tirade about Dr. Briggs or the higher criticism. When theology runs dry, he goes into politics, and we must discuss tariff and silver or be impolite. I like hospitality. It makes me miserable when I cannot be sure of pleasing my guest. I simply have to wish that Edward Knox would stay away.

Women as a rule are made up for smaller things, and it very much pleases me that Emerson decides genius to be capacity for small things. But I know a few women who are terrible characters to get on with. Mrs. Jane Geary comes in to talk over the last book by a woman author. A pleasant topic this. But how unutterably silly this wise woman is when she tries to please children—for she really tries. Think of asking a 7-year-old if she knows "what the analysis" of candy is. When she walks with me, she pokes a hollyhock and calls it a geranium.

I do not know whether the ancients meant the sun and its rays when they talked about Samson and his long tresses of hair, and I do not much care. But Samson was and is interesting for this reason: He was a physical prodigy, with a gentle capacity for very human feelings. He could be cajoled into a frolicsome mood and was terrible only when he must be. David is a better sample of the great big body full of small and pleasant ways. "I," said a certain great preacher, "learned my first love for the childlike of my brave father, who never despised small things, and then I learned the same lesson of Jesus. I am a Christian because real Christianity is greatness in small things."

One of Jules de Glouvet's novels, "The Woodman," saves its hero, who is a poacher and always ready for killing and eating and little else, by means of a little child. The child kills out the man's furious passions, and the sight of the little one converts him to a new sort of life. That is the mission, is it not, of our children to keep us from growing old and hard in our emotions? But what can a woman do with visitors who either frankly say they do not like children, or who manifestly are very indifferent to them? It becomes a necessity at once to create two households, to keep the children busy somewhere while we attend to our guests.

We are all fond of trifling discoveries. We like our rambles in the woods and glens to find new flowers. John gets as excited as one of the boys when he finds a rare flower. We talk it over, and it is added to some one's herbarium with pride. Indeed I cannot see that there is any other way of making life very enjoyable or livable even but by the trifles. The Japanese Romeos make love by calling on the object of affection, carrying in one hand a flowerpot with a pet plant. We ought, I believe, to cultivate these simple ways. Those who cannot be happy without noise, display and excitement are on the road to being incapable of happiness at all.

Dr. Bremer says: "Basing my assertion on my private practice and at St. Vincent's, I will say that the boy who smokes at 7 will drink whisky at 14, take to morphine at 20 or 25 and wind up with cocaine or other narcotics at 30 or soon after." Above all things have a homely way of living, so childlike, simple, fresh, that you will never be blase or any of your household lose the capacity for being pleased. I have heard of dead moral natures and of intellectual powers arrested in the way of development and have seen cases of both sorts, but there is quite as much danger of loss of faculty for pleasure.

I went to church yesterday and heard a clever discourse on the Christian obligation of loving. The preacher said to us, "Just love, only don't love yourself—that is all there is to the law of religion." But I do not believe that preacher was doing anything more than retailing wares he had bought in the lump and did not know anything about, for he went on with illustrations of all sorts to emphasize and explain love, but all his examples were of a showy sort. The real Christian love is in trifles of the commonest sort. The grandest exhibition of bigness is in doing small favors There is something wonderful in a big man's arms. The habit of taking a man's arm is the finest little exhibition of honor a woman could have bestowed. Your arm, sir, is stout and full of soul. It is the very ideal of defense and protection. You give it to me, and if I have confidence that your soul is as muscular as your body I take the arm. Woman gives the hand; man gives the arm. But it is not all arms that are worth taking. —Mary E. Spencer in St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

CANADA'S ARMY OF 200,000 MEN

Militia Department Makes the Announcement.

OUR NATIONAL DEFENCE

Peace Establiakment of 100,000 and an Additional 100.000 in Time of War—Officers to be Trained Now, Against Emergencies.

The Domition militia department has sent out a statement of the new establishment for national defence in time of war. The first line of defence will consist of 100,000 men, of whom 46,043 will be the peace establishment and the remainder the war establishment. A sufficient number of officers are to be trained with this line of defence to furnish officers for a second lineof defence of another 100,000 men, if required.

For example, each regiment of infantry will have a field officer, each company will have a captain, a subaltern, a sergeant, a corporal and two men to serve as the nucleus of the additional 100,000. All the officers and men of the first line are divided into two classes, those engaging for both peace and war service, who will be paid and be liable for training in peace, and those engaging for war service only. The officers and non-commissioned officers forming the nucleus of the second line will be required to do training in time of peace.

THE BIG FIGHT.

The Port Arthur correspondent of Novoe Vremya eulogizes the conduct of the cruiser Novik during Monday's attack by the Japanese. The correspondent says the cruiser led the other ships and impetuously made for the enemy, manoeuvring at full speed and firing her fore and then her aft batteries. She received the fire of the whole Japanese fleet, but was not silenced. The Novik concentrated her fire on the Japanese flagship before she retired to the inner harbor, and a column of smoke and fire was seen rising from the vessel fired upon.

It is nothing remarkaqle that the Novik should have led the Russian fleet, as she is the fastest warship afloat. She is the most remarkable fighting ship ever constructed—a 3,000 ton destroyer, with a 25 knot speed, having been built at Aibing, Prussia. She carries six 1.7 inch guns, the same as used by the British at the defence of Ladysmith, and is rated as a cruiser, but is often spoken of as a destroyer. A sister ship, the Boyarin, built at Copenhagen, was torpedoed by the Japanese two weeks ago in Port Arthur harbor.

Advices from Port Arthur state that the Manchurian railroad has suffered considerably by the continued act of marauders; 22 locomotives and a number of cars have been disabled.

The Japanese have occupied Ichio-Yang, Corea, and are now fortifying the walls of the town. This was the objective point of General Mishtohenko, who, with a detachment of mounted Cossacks, had reached Kasanja, Corea, and was expected to arrive at Ichio-Yang on Monday.

A detachment of Russian troops is in the neighborhood of Ichio-Yang.

CZAR WANTS TO GO EAST.

A cable to the NeR York World from Eienna says the Zeit published a St. Petersburg dispatch, stating that the czar himself desires to go to the far east, very much against General Kuropatkin's wishes. The newspaper says this statement is confirmed by an exalted military authority, who declares the Russian emperor is anxious to maintain the fighting traditions of his ancestors, and is convinced of his own military ability. Besides, he desires by his presence to encourage his troops and check dissension among his chief officers.

PORT ARTHUR FACING FAMINE.

If the Russian communication at Port Arthur should be cut off there would not be sufficient provisions in the place for a fortnight, says a Paris cable. Ammunition for the forts at Port Arthur was to arrive by sea, but cannot reach the destination. The informant says the quality of provisions for the troops in Manchuria is reported inadequate. The reinforcements proceeding daily to the front have to take their own supplies for the long journey, while the provisions for the army already in the far east have to be forwarded by the same route.

Fire Accidents.

Two women were cremated in a fire which destroyed the Sherman House at Prairie du Chien, Wis. The women were mother and daughter, and their home was at Richland Centre or at Ferryville, Wis. The family of Edward Rogers, proprietor of the hotel, escaped with difficulty. The loss is $5,000.

Rosa Lizotte, seven years old, was literally burned to a crisp on Tuesday morning at the home of her parents on Lafontaine street, Montreal. She was playing around the kitchen stove, when her flimsy night clothes caught fire. When her mother came downstairs she found the child burned beyond recognition.

During an electric storm on Sunday morning the barns of William Marsham, about four miles north of Dutton, Ont., were struck by lightning and burned, with all the contents except the stock. The insurance was $1,200.

INTERESTING DECISION

Chief Justice Sifton Refuses Application of American Lawyer.

Chief Justice Sifton opened a term of the supreme court of the Territories at Macleod on Thursday morning. The most important cases awaiting trial there were postponed but an interesting debate arose at the end of the day's sitting, as it bears materially on the interpretation of the law in the Territories as to the right of custody of children. Solomon Angel, it appears, is an American coming to settle in the west. He was not, however, present in court. His wife was accompanied by two babies, her children. She has become permanently estranged from her husband, and the latter has taken a writ of habeas corpus to get possession of the children. Mr. Harris, counsel for the husband, declared in emphatic terms that British law was so absolute as to rights of the father that suckling babies had been taken from the breast of their mother under order of the courts. "Well, they shall upset my decision before that is done," remarked Chief Justice Sifton pointedly. Later he declared that he did not care two straws as to what was done in England. In the absence of the husband, who could not be questioned by counsel for the mother as to his fitness, application for a writ was dismissed. Angel's counsel says he will appeal to Regina.

WOOD ALCOHOL KILLS

U. S. Coast Artillerymen Die From Drinking Deadly Poison.

Corporal Thomas O'Brien, Private Reynolds, members of the 10th Company, Morris O'Connor and Private John Ryan, of Coast Artillery, U.S.A., stationed at Fort Terry, are dead, and Privates John Walsh and William Horrigan are confined to the military hospital at the post in a precarious condition as a result of drinking wood alcohol. Proprietor Piskell, of the military barber shop, at which place the members procured the stuff, is under arrest pending an investigation.

According to the story told by a non-commissioned officer, the five soldiers obtained a quantity of liquor on Monday, and after it had been drunk desired to get another supply. They visited Piskell's barber shop to secure some alcohol, but were told that wood alcohol was a deadly poison. They treated the assertion as a joke and drank the liquid. All became ill and were treated at the hospital. Horrigan's condition indicates that death is a question of a few hours, and the doctors have given up hope of saving Walsh.

A GREAT MORMON TREK

Five Hundred Families Coming From Utah to Southern Alberta.

Another great trek of Mormons from Utah to Southern Alberta is about to take place. Between four and five hundred families, exceeding 2,000 persons, will invade Alberta with their live stock, farm implements and household effects. The most of them will drive across country. The district in which they will locate is known as Taber, a fertile tract about twenty miles square on the Crow's Nest Pass railway. Preparations are now under way to receive the newcomers, who are due to arrive about the middle of April. The Taber district is said to be well favored with respect to moisture and climatic conditions generally.

Parliament Building Blaze.

Fire broke out in the parliament buildings at Toronto about 1 o'clock on Thursday morning, but was got under control. The blaze started near the telegraph office inside the main entrance. Two hundred dollars will cover the loss.

SHARP FIGHTING NEAR PING YANG

Armies Face Each Other in Northern Corea

JAPANESE BLOCKADE

A Body of Cossacks Crossed the Yalu Friday and Attacked the Japanese Near Ping Yang—Both Sides Claim Victory.

Chinese on the Yalu river report that an advance guard of Russian cavalry, which has penetrated Corea for a distance of about two hundred versts across the river, had an encounter with a detachment of Japanese, and that the Japanese were compelled to retreat, and fled, leaving their horses, which were seized by the Cossacks. General Linevitch despatched cavalry and a body of infantry in pursuit, with an order to occupy Northern Corea.

Details of a skirmish at Ping Yang last Friday show that fifty Russian cavalrymen approached the north gate of the Japanese camp and fired at a distance of one thousand metres. A sharp fusillade took place and the Russians retired. All foreigners are safe.

The following official dispatch was received at the Japanese legation in London:—Tokio, Feb. 28, 1 a.m.: A number of the enemy's cavalry appeared at a point 800 metres north of Ping Yang, Corea. Our infantry fired upon them, causing them to retreat.

HUGE ARMIES FACE TO FACE.

Ping Yang is now the centre of operations in Northwestern Corea. A large body of Japanese troops with many guns are encamped there. They are faced by a huge force of Russians, estimated to be 30,000 in number. It is apparent that the Russians are determined to advance still further south. Military authorities at Chemulpo expect a battle at an early date.

RUSSIAN GARRISON ROUTED.

It is regarted at Pekin that the Russian minister has threatened to ignore China's declaration of neutrality unless China controls the mounted brigands in Manchuria. Japanese troops have destroyed large stores of Russian provisions and forage at Kinchow. The Japanese have routed the Russian garrison at Hunchun, about fifty miles inland from Possiet Bay, and are now marching on to Kirin.

JAPAN BLOCKADES VLADIVOSTOCK.

Vladivostock has been blockaded by a Japanese fleet since Thursday, according to a dispatch from Hakodate, which adds that an incoming steamer reported Russian cruisers on the east coast of Kinkwasan, in the Bay of Sondai, Japan.

Japanese warships have been reported in the vicinity of Vladivostock, but this report of a blockade, although considered probable, has not yet been confirmed from other sources. 2

BRITISH SHIPS RELEASED.

A cable from Suez states that the Russian cruiser Dmitri Donskoi, which last Friday seized three vessels flying the British flag and carrying 15,000 tons of coal, supposedly for Japan, has released them.

FURTHER LOSS FOR RUSSIA.

An unofficial cablegram received at the Japanese legation in the United States says that a Russian torpedo boat was destroyed on Sunday by a Japanese cruiser. She grounded in the northern part of Pigeon Bay and then the Jananese sank her.

BRITISH ARMY ESTIMATE

Expenditure Will Be $144,500,000 This Year—India's Equipment Prior.

War Secretary Forster's explanatory statement of the army estimates has been issued. The estimates for the coming year will be $144,500,000, against $172,500,000 last year. The principal reduction in this year's estimates are for South Africa, which totals $3,070,000. Secretary Forster's estimates make no provision for expenditures in Somaliland, owing to the impossibilty of forecasting the duration of operations there. He announces that it has been decided to concede the priority of India in the supply of new pattern rifles and quick firing equipments for horse and held artillery. The equipments of the whole army will be completed in March, 1907.

SCHOOL OVERWORK.

Goldwin Smith on Longevity—Plain Living, Bodily Exercise, No Overwork—Proper Stimulus in Public Schools.

Mr. Goldwin Smith, writing in The Ladies' Home Journal on "The Reason for My Eighty Years," ascribes his longevity and his ability at the age of eighty still to do work in part to his not having been overworked at school, and adds:

"I probably, however, owe something to plain living and bodily exercise, as well as to immunity from overwork. At the school at which I first was, though it deemed itself first-class, the diet was such as I suppose an American boy would scorn. Our breakfast was bread and butter and a cup of tea. Our dinner was one helping of meat with vegetables, and one helping of pudding. Our supper was the same as our breakfast. The food was good of its kind. During the four years and more which I spent at that school I was never in bed for sickness, nor do I remember that any one of my schoolmates was. At college I did not overwork myself. I never worked at night. But I took regular exercise, almost always on horseback. When an examination approached I rather reduced than increased my amount of reading, thinking that freshness and nerve would be worth more to me in the trial than the little additional amount of knowledge. I may add that, though I have never lived by rule, my general habits have been such as to preserve what my early advantages had given me. I have always taken plenty of exercise; indulged a little, in my own country, in field sports; and traversed Switzerland and the Tyrol with my knapsack. It has been my habit to work early in the morning, not late at night."

"I see mention," continues Mr. Smith, "made of some parents who, being warned that their children were in danger of being made sick by overwork at school, declined to interfere, saying that sickness might be cured, but want of education could not. What is education? Is it not preparation for life? How can a child be well prepared for life when the physical energy necessary to sustain mental effort is impaired? Besides, however highly we may value education, character, after all, is the main source both of usefulness and happiness, and character can hardly fail to share the weakness of an overwrought and enfeebled frame."

Mr. Smith then dilates on the misgivings of our public school system. "In the first place," he says, "it is mechanical. It must deal with all children alike, regardless of differences of constitution, bodily or mental, and of special destination in life. There is a hackneyed story of a minister of education in France, that happy land of administrative uniformity, pointing to a bell in his office and saying that when he rang that bell the same lesson commenced in all the public schools of France. The story may be assumed to be apocrypha, but its moral deserves consideration.

"In the second place, the system is unparental. Dr. Rice, in his work on 'Public School System of United States, dwells repeatedly and emphatically on this fact. He says that in some cases the indifference of parents is such that they will not take the trouble to ascertain whether the school-rooms to which they send their children are in a proper sanitary condition. Ordinary parents, thinking that the State has taken the training of the child out of their hands, are apt to discharge themselves of the responsibility for the formation of the character, and even to take part against a teacher who attempts the application of discipline. An American, and one of the upper class, has been heard to say that his children were guests in his home.

"In the third place, the public school is necessarily devoid not only of religion, some form of which is still for the mass of children the ordinary channel of moral principles, but it is also without moral training of any kind beyond obedience to the order and regulation of the schools. This defect becomes more serious when so many of the teachers are women, by whom boys after a certain age can hardly be well controlled. The consequence seems to appear in the manner of boys. We are continually reading of cases of juvenile crime, sometimes of a first-class kind; and dime novels, though they may be responsible, for a part of this, can hardly be responsible for the whole. The original public school in Scotland or New England was not unparental; it certainly was not unreligious; and we may be pretty sure that its discipline was strong.

"Desire of rising in life," he says in conclusion, "which, if it is not the actual teaching, forms the pervading stimulus of the system, is in itself desirable and laudable. It has vastly contributed to the wealth, progress and greatness of the industrial and commercial republic. But we cannot all climb over each other's heads. The lot of the mass of us must be cast in the station in which we were born, and to imbue children in general with the opposite notion would be to sow the seeds of general discontent.

"There is a rather critical question, which I should like to see treated, with regard to the relation of the public school system to manual labor of the unskilled kind and to domestic service. Is a pupil of the public school often found engaged in either? Is it not generally necessary to look to importation from abroad for both? I do not venture to say anything positive on this subject, having no statistical information before me.

"There is in Canada—I do not know whether there is in the United States—a growing tendency on the part of those who can afford it to resume parental privilege and duty by resorting to voluntary schools."

FATAL CRASH OF STEEL STRUCTURE

Women Killed in Room in Adjoining Building.

SKY SCRAPER ACCIDENT

Seven Were Killed, a Score Injured and Several Missing Through the Collapse of a New York Steel Structure Building.

Seven persons are known to have benen killed, about a score injured, and eight or ten, all of whom are believed to be dead, are missing, through the collapse on Wednesday afternoon of the steel skeleton of the Hotel Darlington a thirteen-story apartment house in course of construction at 57 West 46th Street, New York.

The steel framework had been erected as far as the eleventh floor, and the structure was swarming with iron workers, masons and laborers, when, without an instant's warning, the upper floor sagged and collapsed, and the whole structure fell with a crash that was heard for blocks and which shook all the buildings in the vicinity.

A portion of the steel frame fell upon the rear of the Hotel Patterson, on West 47th Street, smashing in a wall of the dining room and killing Mrs. Ella Lacey Storrs, the wife of Frank Storrs, a wealthy resident of Rye, Westminster county, as she was sitting at luncheon with the wife of Rev. Dr. Savage. Mrs. Savage escaped injury. The other dead so far as known are Robert Morills, foreman of the Robeling Construction Company, and three unidentified men, apparently laborers. The more seriously injured were laborers.

Among those missing is Frank Allison, of the Allison Realty Company, the builders of the hotel, who is known to have been in the building when it fell. Efforts to recover the bodies of the dead and to rescue those imprisoned in the wreck were begun immediately after the crash.

The cause of the disaster generally accepted is the overloading of the floors. Foreman James Halpin, in charge of the iron workers, stated that there was a large quantity of cement and other building materials on the fifth floor. Apparently criminal carelessness is chargeable to somebody, as the building department had placed repeated "violations" against the building, the last one being filed on Wednesday, because the side walls were more than two stories in advance of the front walls, and the floor beams were not properly bolted and tied. In spite of this and previous warnings the work on the building was continued.

Adjoining the collapsed building on the west is the four-story brown stone residence of Harold Brown. Some of the huge iron beams struck the side of the house, stove holes in the walls and roof and dislodged a part of the brown stone front, which was thrown to the street. Mrs. Storrs, whose husband is in London, England, was sitting at luncheon with Mrs. Savage when the crash came, and she and Ernest Meir, a waiter, were buried under the debris. Mrs. Savage escaped, but was pinned to the floor by a mass of brick. Mrs. Storrs was breathing when extricated, but died within a few minutes. The waiter is believed to be fatally injured.

At eleven o'clock Wednesday night the contractor in charge of the wrecking work said that his men had discovered seven bodies and that two more were known to be pinned under the wreckage on the east side of the building.

Splendid work was done by the firemen, who at the risk of their lives crawled under the tangled wreckage to rescue imprisoned workmen. Harold Clark, a watchman, was rescued unhurt from the cellar after being imprisoned for four hours. He said he left Frank Allison, one of the owners and builders, on the ninth floor a few minutes before the crash came.

Patrick Murphy, the engineer of the hoisting engine, and six workmen, were arrested and held as witnesses. Representatives of the district attorney's office examined the wreck and began an investigatian to place the responsibility for the disaster.

Slaughtering Deer.

Complaints come from Muskoka that Indians are running deer on snowshoes and killing them with hatchets. The poor creatures are unable to make way through the deep snow, and the slaughter goes on at a great pace. The Indians are said to make no distinction between bucks and does.

This was in answer to a letter sent by King Edward, in which, in the most friendly terms, he emphasized Great Britain's complete neutrality during the war in the far east, and he trusted that the Czar would pay no attention to the press reports intimating that Great Britain was not neutral nor to any unfriendly comments of the English papers, which the King regretted.

JAPS VISIT CHEFOO.

There have been mysterious night visits to the port of Chefoo during the past week by Japanese torpedo boat destroyers. Officers went on shore and proceeded straight to the Japanese consulate, which is closely guarded.

There is still much confusion at Port Arthur. Russians show the utmost dislike for British and Americans, and are compelling all except a few to leave.

ARMY OF 325,000 BY APRIL.

Russia's army in the far east will be 325,000 strong by April. Admiral Makharoff has arrived at Port Arthur to take over the command of the naval operations, in place of Stark, who has been recalled.

COSSACKS AT WORK.

Cossacks have seized the telegraph offices at Ningpyong and Anju, Corea, have imprisoned the headman of Anju, and have carried off local archives.

CHINESE HATE RUSSIANS.

The London Times correspondent at Nagasaki telegraphs: A Chinese contractor engaged on government work was hustled out of Port Arthur without payment. He had to sacrifice the plant and capital he had invested, and arrived at Wei-Hai-Wei in a destitute condition. The bitterest hatred is felt both by the Chinese and the Japanese in consequence of their treatment by the Russians.

WILL NOT EVACUATE PORT ARTHUR.

A St. Petersburg dispatch quotes a Russian staff officer in reference to the possible evacuation of Port Arthur. "What," exclaimed the officer, "evacuate Port Arthur? What worse disaster could befall the Russian army? It would imply the capture or destruction of our squadron, and one end of our railway would be 'dans la guele du Japonais,' with prospect of his swallowing a larger piece. It would be a terrible blow to Russia, from which she would recover with difficulty. Our army might continue to fight while receding into Manchuria, and might conquer, but it would be retreating, and no advance would be possible before Port Arthur was recaptured. Therefore, it is not to be evacuated. That is an operation which has never been foreseen nor studied by the Russian staff, and we do not believe the Japanese can take the place by main force."

A Moscow correspondent says: The feeling at St. Petersburg is growing more tense. The rapidity of the Japanese movements and the comprehensiveness of Japan's plans have made no less a sensation than her naval vigor and initiative.

300 POLANDERS ARRESTED.

The Arbeiter Zeitung, Vienna, has an article asserting that 300 political arrests have been made at Lodz, Poland. Prisoners are given the alternative of being taken in custody or enlisting as volunteers in the Russian army. The object of the Russian authorities is apparently to simultaneously get rid of political suspects and demonstrate the popularity of war among the more intelligent classes by large enlistment.

And He Ought To Know.

"I never heard a word about it, and I think I should know, if I was the party held up," was the laughing comment of Sir William C. Van Horne, when he got home from New York, upon the story which had been effect that he had been held up while widely circulated in the press to the on a train near Santiago on his own road in Cuba.

The wolves have had a hard time of it throughout the winter, and their number has been considerably depleted by the elements as well as by the merciless effect of the huntsman. The prairie chickens have also suffered considerably and in many parts of the country have become almost domesticated, taking up quarters in and around the prosperous western farm yards.

An Indian of the Long Plains reserve, while working in the bush a few days ago, was struck on the head by a falling tree. He was most seriously injured, the skull bone protruding, but his constitution proved to be remarkable, and although he could not eat for six days he has begun to improve and his recovery is expected.

It is rumored in St. Petersburg that Port Arthur will be abandoned to the enemy after the warships are sunk, as was done in the case of the Crimean war. Another report says that the stronghold is already practically deserted.

INCORPORATION.

The education burden is generally looked upon as a bugbear in the incorporation scheme, but this burden is not a heavy one when studied with the aid of statistics. For instance in the school year 1902-3 there was expended in Fernie for education $4503.60. The per capita grant to which the town would have been entitled, if incorporated, was $3395.20 leaving a burden to the city of $1108.40. The increase in the enrollment since then would swell the per capita grant considerably. Nor are these figures exceptional. In Nanaimo $16,942.88 was expended on education, only $3,184.60 of which came from the municipal coffers. Rossland, another city of the second class, expended $8952.59 of which $7,290.70 is paid by the government's per capita allowance. Vernon, a city of the third class, cost $3773.49 for education during the same year and the city paid only $828.99. The cities of the first class receive $13 per capita, second class, $15 and 3rd class, $20. An agitation on the part of the department to reduce these grants would not affect Fernie as no objection is made to the grant to the towns of the third class. It must also be remembered that the schools come more directly under the control of the town after it is incorporated.

Other cities are cited by those who discourage the proposed measure as examples of over-hastiness in assuming control of their own affairs. Nearly everyone from personal knowledge is acquainted with one or more towns which are hopelessly in debt on account of incorporating prematurely, or more often, rushing into heavy and extravagant expenditures that the revenue of the town did not justify. Of the towns that have made a failure of incorporation how many possessed the revenue that Fernie would possess? Very few. The recklessness and extravagence of other towns need not be repeated and indeed their mistakes should be our danger signals to warn and guide. It is surely superfluous to state that the citizens of Fernie possess the necessary common sense and good judgment to govern their own affairs wisely and for the common good.

The offer of the Coal Company to lease the electric light and water systems to the town on satisfactory terms is an advantage possessed by few towns when launching out into municipal waters. These plants are expensive and their construction or purchase is a heavy undertaking in the beginning.

It is the intention of the Coal Company, we understand, to cancel the leases to householders on the east side of the C. P. R. tracks. If the Company would also cancel other land leases on the border of the town and add a large block to the site beyond the present northern limits, where these householders could purchase homes at a reasonable figure one of the most serious obstacles to the project of incorporation would thus be swept away.

The town is, we believe, on the verge of a period of unprecedented prosperity and growth. The extention of the Great Northern to this point and the proposed introduction of the smelting industry are but signs of the times one can read. The town is outgrowing its present system of government and soon it will present as ludicrous a spectacle as a grown man squeezed into a boy's clothes.

The Board of Trade is again about to grapple with the problem of incorporation and there is reason to believe that new zeal will be infused into the movement, sufficient to bring it to a successful issue. Last week Mr. A. H. Cree introduced the subject at the executive meeting and it was laid over for discussion at a general meeting which will be called next week.

IS THE RESERVE LEGAL?

A LEGAL technicality in the wording of the reservation on the Flathead block as published in the B. C. Gazette of August 1890, has brought out the opinion that the coal and minerals under the ground are not included in the reserve notice, and that therefore the Flathead has always been open in regard to these valuable deposits. The notice reads :—

RESERVE EAST KOOTENAY.

Notice is hereby given that the following described tract of land has been reserved from sale, pre-emption and settlement until further notice, viz.:

Commencing at a point on the eastern boundary of the province of British Columbia in the Crow's Nest Pass; thence southerly along the eastern boundary to a point on the 49th parallel of latitude; thence west along the said parallel twenty five miles; thence in a northerly direction to the junction of Morrissey creek with Elk River; thence easterly to the point of commencement.

EDITORIAL NOTES

THE MORRISSEY DESPATCH calls the attention of the Government to the need of expediency in building the bridge over the Elk at that point before the high water occurs.

AN ambulance corps similar to the organization at Michel is being talked of at Morrissey. Dr. W. H. Willson started the movement and has promised it his support. The dangers incidental to coal mining render an ambulance corps a very useful organization.

COMPLAINTS are continually being made of the mail service from the East. The mail clerk on the train is overworked and he is unable to sort all the Fernie mail on the time allotted to him. As a result many of the Eastern daily papers and other mail is carried through and returned to Fernie from the west. The trouble is getting more pronounced every day and it is time that the postal department saw the necessity of relieving the mail clerks of some of their work by appointing assistants. The department should not fail to remember that the west is steadily gowing, that its reading requirements are growing in proportion, and that the number of mail clerks must be increased likewise.

THOUGH Premier McBride has resolutely declined to open up blocks 4593 and 4594 until the expiry of the full year in which an appeal is allowed, the decision of the Dominion Government to take no action towards disallowing the Provincial Act granting these lands to the C.P.R. was not unexpected. McBride no doubt has been grateful for the respite in order that he might the better frame a policy which will meet the peculiar exigencies of the case, Some parts of the Flathead, it is claimed, are staked four claims deep, and some claims have never been staked except on paper. In the face of such facts it will be a difficult matter to determine the "bona fide" locators and as the policy of the government seems to be to keep clear of litigation, the courts may be asked to decide between contending claimants. At any rate there is no reasonable doubt that the reserves will be thrown open in May, and a considerable rush is expected. The Government has promised to build a road into the Flathead from some point on the Pass as soon as the need for such a road arises. As such a road will certainly be of great service to prospectors when the reserve is lifted it is inferred that the road will be built this Spring. The relative merits of the three proposed routes :—from Elko, Morrissey and Fernie, will likely be left to the judgement of a government engineer.

READ IT THROUGH

'Twould Spoil This Story to Tell It in the Headlines.

To use an eighteenth century phrase, this is an "o'er true tale." Having happened in a small Virginia town in the winter of 1902, it is a story very much of the present. Up to a short time ago Mrs. John E. Harmon, of Melfa Station, Va., had no personal knowledge of the rare curative properties of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. "Last January," she says, "my baby took a dreadful cold and at one time I feared she would have pneumonia, but one of my nieghbors told me how this remedy had cured her little boy and I began giving it to my baby at once and it soon cured her. I heartily thank the manufacturers of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy for placing so great a cure within my reach. I cannot recommend it too highly or say too much in its favor. I hope all who read this will try it and be convinced as I was." For sale by all Druggists and Dealers.

Ask for British Lion or Mainland cigars. For sale at first-class places. Union made. Manufactured by Wm. Lietjan, Vancouver. x

WELL AGAIN.

The many friends of John Blount will be pleased to learn that he has entirely recovered from his attack of rheumatism. Chamberlain's Pain Balm cured him after the best doctors in the town (Monon, Ind.) had failed to give relief. The prompt relief from pain which this liniment affords is alone worth many times its cost. Sold by all Druggists and Dealers.

THE OTHER FELLOWS

APPEAL AGAINST THE EVILS OF RACE AND SOCIAL PREJUDICE.

WITH JESUS THRO' SAMARIA

Candid and Friendly Dealings With Each Other in All the Relations of Life Inculcated—Value of Travel in Broadening the Man's Horizon Beyond the Purely Personal Aspects of Things.

Entered according to Act of Parliament of Canada, in the year 1904, by William Baily, of Toronto, at the Dep't of Agriculture, Ottawa.

Los Angeles, Cal., Feb. 23.—In this sermon the preacher makes a strong appeal against the evils of race and social prejudice and in favor of candid and friendly dealings with each other in all the relations of life. The text is John iv, 4, "And he must needs go through Samaria."

No man's education is complete unless he has traveled. There is a higher diploma than that of Yale, Harvard, Princeton, Oxford, Cambridge, Heidelberg or the University of Paris. The rough diamond must be cut and polished before it can sparkle and glitter and flash. The scholar's ragged metal edges should be smoothed off by personal contact with those peoples whose histories he has been studying as a recluse and as a delver in musty tomes.

To fully realize this scene in which our Lord's interview with the woman took place one "must needs go through Samaria." I remember well that hill once crowned with the capital of Samaria at the foot of which still grow the descendants of those far famed olive groves, and whose pathways are still resonant with the personal histories of an Omri, an Ahab, a Ahaziah, a Jehu, a Jehoahaz, a Joash, a Herod Antipas, a Herodias, a John the Baptist and the evangelist Philip. I cannot portray that scene so grand and majestic in its lonely beauty, but I would have you realize some of the circumstances which gave special significance to that momentous journey of our Lord and present some of the reasons why "He must needs go through Samaria."

One reason, I think, was that Jesus wished to reprove racial antipathy. The Samaritan colonists were interlopers. They were not indigenous to the soil. After the Shalmaneserian conquest the Assyrian king carried away ten out of the twelve Hebrew tribes into captivity. Then the eastern conqueror, having depopulated the best part of the land "flowing with milk and honey," he repeopled it with his own followers. In other words, the Assyrian king gave to his own followers a right to settle upon and cultivate and own that land, just as King James I. gave a charter to William Penn for the American tract of land now called Pennsylvania and Charles I. gave a charter to Lord Baltimore to take possession of the present state of Maryland, to be settled by him and his Catholic friends. After the Jews had returned from the Babylonish captivity and had rebuilt the Jerusalem walls and temple they wanted to drive out these foreign colonists from the garden spot of Palestine. But they could not. Year after year, decade after decade and century after century the Samaritans held on to the region lying directly between Judaea or northern Galilee, and the Jerusalem capital. There they dwelt, ready to slay any Jew or collection of Jews who attempted to molest them. There they continued to dwell. Each year the hatred between the two races grew more bitter and mortal.

Though the Samaritan and the Jew for centuries had lived side by side, yet they hated each other only as a Carthagenian could hate a Roman, a Moor could hate a Castilian, a Turk could hate an Armenian, a Mexican Aztec could hate a Spaniard. These two peoples hated each other unto death, yet when Jesus, with the object of setting at rest the invidious comments of the Pharisees on his rivalry of John the Baptist, left Judaea for his home in Galilee he decided to pass through Samaria. He did so, though he was fully aware of the fact that every man, woman and child in Samaria hated the Jew as every Jew hated the Samaritans.

By that journey Jesus said to all mankind: "The man with the flattened nose and the thick lip of the negro and with the aquiline nose of the Hebrew and with the low forehead of the Australian aborigines and with the calveless limb of the Bengali and with the stunted stature of the Eskimo and with the herculean form of the Saxon and the gigantic Slav are all brothers. The Jew has no right to hate the Samaritan; neither has the Samaritan a right to hate the Jew."

But through the Samaritan should love the Jew and the Jew love the Samaritan, just study how the old racial prejudices against the Hebrew race, as a venomous serpent with its slimy coils, has come wriggling down through the ages. Why is that finely dressed and courteous gentleman refused admittance into some of the leading hotels of Saratoga and New York? He is a Jew? Why was Alfred Dreyfus sent to Devil's Island to be more inhumanly treated than any Government would allow any man to treat a dumb brute? He was a Jew! Why the clannishness of the ghetto? Because the gentile by sneers and scoffs refuses to associate with the Jew, therefore the Jew finds most of his associations with the Jew. Why the public ridicule against a class of men who are the greatest financiers and masters of barter and gain of the world? Because for centuries the Jew had no way of making a living except through barter and gain and as a money lender. He could not hold land, for the princes and the people would rob him of his land. He could not go into statecraft or into the army, because there he was not allowed to go. Though social recognition in certain regions is now accorded to the Hebrew race, as the British House of Lords has been opened to them, yet even to-day a strong barrier to social preferment is the fact of a man belonging to that race, a representative of which Shakespeare immortalized in Shylock, the cruel and remorseless creditor.

I contend that racial prejudice is opposed to the spirit of Christ and Christianity, and I base my belief, first, on this journey that our Lord took through Samaria; secondly, on account of the lesson which Christ taught in the parable of the "good Samaritan," which he spake unto the shrewd lawyer who was trying to entrap him by a series of catch questions. Thirdly, I plead for this obliteration of social prejudice because the Jew is not only as honest as the gentile, but mentally, morally and physically is in every way his equal, if not his superior.

Equal is the Jew to the gentile in the sweetness and purity of his domestic life. Not only are they faithful as a race as husbands and wives, but they are also irreproachable in their relations as parents and children. You never hear a Hebrew girl insulting her mother. You never see a Hebrew son sitting in the presence of an old father when that father has to stand. Filial duty is always practiced in the Hebrew home. The Hebrew fireside is as pure and noble as any gentile fireside.

A second reason, I think, why Christ must needs go through Samaria was that he wished to reprove a social prejudice. He held converse on that journey with a notorious female outcast. She was not a "respectable" sinner. By that I mean she was not one of those able to travel forbidden paths and yet cover up her sinful tracks so that the world's prying eyes did not see them. She was not a hypocrite, living two separate lives—one life which made her outward reputation good and another life which showed her inner character to be bad. She did not sin in secret. She sinned openly. She was one who not only openly sinned, but boastfully and defiantly seemed to glory in her sin. To show her that he knew how stained was her life Christ said unto her: "Thou hast well said, I have no husband. For thou hast had five husbands, and he whom thou now hast is not thy husband." She was a woman at that time living in open adultery. Yet it was to such a social outcast as this that Christ offered the "water of life." It was to such a human being as this that Jesus revealed himself and permitted her to become a gospel messenger to summon her people to hear his discourse.

O ye evangelists and gospel preachers, why do we spend most of our time trying to offer the "bread of life" only to the "respectable" sinners of society, who will not receive it? Why do we not do as Christ did—go into the enemy's country and talk with the outcasts by the Samaritan well, who are willing—oh, so willing, to receive the gospel if we only go to them in Christ's name? Like the Samaritan woman, have not the greatest sinners believed in Christ and sometimes become the greatest of his disciples and martyrs? Have not the Peters who denied him thrice and the Pauls who were once the greatest persecutors of his followers been willing to seal their testimony for Christ with their lifeblood? Who was Richard Baxter, who wrote "Saint's Rest?" Once a notorious sinner. Who was John Bunyan, the dreamer of immortal dreams? Once a notorious sinner. Who was Father Taylor, the great sailor preacher of Boston? Once a notorious sinner. Who were Harry Munroe and Jerry McAuley and Peter Cartwright and John Somerville and John B. Gough? All once notorious sinners. Ah, it is worth while for us to take a long journey if we can only send forth a "woman of Samaria" as a messenger of Jesus Christ. It is worth while to go long distances—aye, a very long distance—if, like the good Ananias, we can only say to the chief of sinners, "Brother Saul, the Lord, even Jesus that appeared unto thee in the way as thou camest, hath sent me that thou mightest receive thy sight and be filled with the Holy Ghost." It is far easier for Jesus Christ to save a seventy deviled sinner who knows that he is all wrong than to save a so-called "respectable" sinner who thinks that he is all right.

Christ was the Saviour of the social outcast at the Samaritan well. Yet the strange fact remains that most Christian evangelists seem to act upon the supposition that it is easier to save the so-called "little" sinner than the big. We seem to be unwilling to reach out after the outcasts.

Another reason why Christ "must needs go through Samaria" was that he wanted to reprove ecclesiastical and religious prejudice. The disciples of John the Baptist and of Jesus were antagonistic and jealous of each other, just as the Episcopalians and the Puritans were bitter during the third year of the Plymouth settlement. The disciples of John the Baptist angrily declared that John had baptized more followers than Jesus Christ, while the followers of Jesus angrily replied that Christ had baptized more disciples than John. It was in order to stop this bitterness that Jesus left Judaea and started north toward Lake Galilee and went by the way of Samaria. Christ was ready to do almost anything to stop the internal dissensions among those who would ultimately accept him as their Saviour and their Christ. Cannot we all realize that no church can rightly accomplish a sanctified glorious work for the Master unless that church has complete gospel harmony within its own ranks?

Absolutely necessary is it for Christian people to love one another before they can as a church welcome the man of the world into their midst with the "everlasting peace of the gospel." And yet, my brother, there are scores and hundreds of churches in this land which are practically a source of dissension to the world instead of a Christian harmony. They are rent and torn into factions by internal strife. The Young People's Society is pulling against the session; the session is finding fault with the board of trustees; the Ladies' Aid Society is sulking because its members do not like the minister's wife. Instead of the Christian people of the church getting together and praying for each other and trying to help each other for the good of the church they are now magnifying each other's faults and minifying each other's virtues.

Want of gospel harmony in a church, although it be composed of only a long series of little frictions and disturbances will after awhile suck out the life's blood and kill the usefulness of a church. Indeed, the little church disturbances, like the little sins of life, are more to be dreaded than the great church tornadoes, which may arise and subside in a day. In church work, the little frictions, the little bitternesses, the little "fault findings," like the fatal leeches of the Teester Valley, can destroy the spiritual life of any church. Christian friends, as with Christ when he took his Samaritan journey, pray hard, sacrifice, plead, apologize, overlook fancied insult, do anything and everything in your church family that is honorable rather than have one pew unChristianly find fault with another pew. A forgiving layman bowing at the mercy seat is just as essential for church harmony as a forgiving minister breaking the bread and pouring out the wine at the table of the holy communion.

Lastly I think Christ took this Samaritan journey to prove that the shortest way in life's work is generally the best way. This is not absolutely an invariable rule, but it holds good in nearly every case. The country of Samaria lay directly between Jerusalem and Galilee. It was as much between these two regions as the States of Indiana and Ohio lie in the direct line between New York and Chicago. But because the Jew hated the Samaritan he would not go through the Samaritan land. Therefore he made a big detour. In one sense he made as big a detour as the traveler coming from New York to Chicago would make if he went by the way of Louisville, Ky., instead of by the way of Buffalo or Pittsburg. Christ in journeying to Galilee simply took the straight path. He went as a bird would fly overland. He went to Galilee through Samaria.

The straight path is nearly always the right path. When that young man comes into your store and asks for a position, if you have not any vacant place for him tell him so. Do not say to yourself, "Now I do not want to hurt that young man's feelings, therefore I will tell him to come back next week or next month." By such an answer you are doing an injustice to the young man, and you are doing an injustice to yourself. The shortest way out of a difficulty is generally the right way. Even for a surgeon it is never a pleasant act to drive a knife into the quivering flesh to cut out the virulent cancer. Neither is it always a pleasant task to tell a person of his faults. But when that young girl who is doing wrong comes to you for advice tell her the truth. Warn her as you would like some one to warn your morally endangered child. The direct way out of a difficulty is generally the right way. So, my brother, when you yourself have done wrong—wrong to your fellow men and wrong to God—be a Christian man and straighten out the wrong and make restitution for your moral deficiencies. Confess your sins to God. The shortest way out of a difficulty is generally the right way—the Christian way. Therefore, O man, O woman, will you not to-day at the Samaritan well seek Christ and ask his pardon for your sins? Will you not do as did the social outcast who at the Samaritan well found there her Saviour many centuries ago?

The word "Samaria" as a Christly refuge in all probability will always mean more to me than to any one else gathered to-day within these walls. On the afternoon of Oct. 26, 1894, with a brother minister, G. B. Trout by name, I was resting among the Palestine hills. Our dragoman had left us some two hours before to hunt up a saddle-bag which had fallen from my horse. While there, alone and unarmed, we were attacked by the eastern bandits. We were attacked in almost the identical place where, three weeks before, two English travelers had been slain. We were driven back and back to the edge of the precipice. I saw the club raised to strike down my companion and knew that my turn was to come next, when succor and rescue suddenly came to hand. That night was dark when we ended our journey in Samaria, but, oh, in the darkness what joy and peace came to us both when, by the Samaritan well, we knew that we at last had safety! As we found physical refuge in Samaria on that October night so may you find spiritual safety. O man, O woman, for you, too, Christ "must needs go through Samaria!" Not for that degraded woman alone was that journey taken. The revelation of himself that he made by that well is an eloquent invitation to all in every age to come to him for the "water of life." Are you weary with the troubles of the way? Are you athirst for the water that will satisfy the longings of your soul? Are you fearful of the grave and the judgment of God? Come to the well and hear him say that to all who come he will give living water, whereof if a man drink he shall never die.

PT. ARTHUR AGAIN BOMBARDED

Reported That Japan Also Attacked by Land

TWO HOURS FIGHTING.

Togo Again Returned to the Attack on Russian Stronghold and Furiously Bombarded it. Damaged Two Cruisers and one Battleship.

A dispatch from Yingkow, dated February 29th, says:—Fifteen Japanese warships appeared at Port Arthur at 10 o'clock this morning and opened a furious bombardment. The cruisers Novik, Askold and Bayan, with four torpedo boats, steamed out to meet the attack, but were forced to retire. The Askold was in a sinking condition and the Novik badly damaged. A torpedo boat was sunk and the Retvizan was again damaged. The bombardment lasted two hours, and the Japanese fleet then withdrew in perfect order. Some Russian artillery has proceeded to Pigeon Bay.

RUSSIANS MASSED ON YALU.

Twenty-five thousand Russians are on the Manchurian bank of the Yalu, and four thousand mounted infantry troops and artillery hold the mountain passes, thirty-five miles south of the Wiju.

In China is circulated a rumor to the effect that the Japanese repulsed the Russians at Youm Cheng, in Corea, east of Yongampho. A few thousand Russians still remain at New Chwang.

ATTACKS BY SEA AND LAND.

A rumor has spread throughout St. Petersburg that the Japanese have made a great combined attack by sea and land on Port Arthur, and that fighting is going on now and that there have been further naval losses.

HURRYING BALTIC FLEET AWAY.

The Russian admiralty intends to despatch the Baltic fleet to the Orient at once. Orders have been issued to prepare eight battleships and five cruisers, and to complete the unfinished battleships Alexander III, Suvaroff and Slava.

PORT ARTHUR WILL CAPITULATE.

The Tien Tsin correspondent of the London Express says the daily attacks on Port Arthur have created a condition approacping demoralization among the troops. There is little hope that the place will be able to make a long defence. Provisions are already exceedingly short, and it is expected that when the town is invested hunger will soon compel its capitulation.

Port Arthur was again furiously bombarded by the Japanese fleet on Monday, and as a result two Russian cruisers were badly damaged, one torpedo boat was sunk, and the Retvizan was further injured. The Japanese sailed away in good order. St. Petersburg is alarmed over a report that Port Arthur suffered a combined attack by sea and land. A Tien Tsin cable states that Port Arthur cannot stand investment, as the soldiery is demoralized, and provisions are very short. Twenty-five thousand Russian troops are said to be massed on the Manchurian side of the Yalu.

MARKET REPORT.

Weekly Review of Prices Culled From The Commercial.

WHEAT—Manitoba wheat has continued strong during the week. On Monday the price of the May option in the Winnipeg market touched 109¾c, and generally the Winnipeg market is the highest in America, which means the highest in the world at the present time. Since Monday the market has been quieter and at times dull. On the week prices show an advance of 7c. We quote prices as follows: 1 northern, 103¾c; 2 northern, 100¾c; 3 northern 96c; No. 4 wheat, 85¼c; feed wheat, 64c; No. 2 feed wheat, 54c; spot or February delivery. And for May delivery: 1 northern, 107¼c; 2 northern, 104¾c; 3 northern, $1; all in store Fort William or Port Arthur.

FLOUR—The market has again advanced, this time 15c per bag. The reason is obvious. With wheat soaring away above the dollar mark, there is no other thing to be expected than that flour will follow. We quote: Hungurian Patent, $2.75 per sack of 98 lbs, delivered to the trade; Glenora Patent, $2.60; Strong Bakers, $2.20; and XXX, $2. These prices subjected to usual trade discounts.

MILLFEED—The market is unchanged. We quote: Bran, $16 per ton, in bulk, delivered to the trade; shorts, $19 per ton.

GROUND FEED—Market steady. We quote: Oat chop, $26 per ton, delivered to the trade; barley chop, $20; mixed barley and oats, $23; oil cake, $27 ver ton.

OATS—Receipts are very light and trading is limited in consequence. It does not seem possible to attract oats to the market at present, no matter what figures are offered. Bad roads have no doubt had much to do with reducing the supply. It is believed that there is still quite a quantity of oats in the country, but they will all be needed and holders are in no hurry to sell. No. 2 white in carlots on track are worth 38c here, and feed grades 36 to 37c. Farmers' loads in the country should bring 31 to 33c, and on the street here 35 to 36c.

BARLEY—Deliveries are very light and the market quiet. Malting grades are bringing 38 to 40c per busnel in carlots on track here and feed grades most bare of choice stock. Dealers 37 to 38c.

BUTTER—Dairy—The market is alare paying as much as 25c in the country for fresh made bricks, which is about the only kind obtainable. Old tub butter is bringing from 12c per pound up, delivered to the trade here, but as most of the held stock is unfit for table use, there is no demand for this kind.

EGGS—The market is about cleaned out. Stocks of pickled and limed are done and there are very few case eggs coming in. These are worth 30c or more delivered here, subject to candling.

DRESSED MEATS—The market is firmer, owing probably to the scarcity and high cost of other lines of foodstuffs. We quote: Beef, 7c per pound for city dressed; ½c to 1c less for country; veal, 9c for choice weights; mutton, 8½c; hogs, 7c, delivered to the trade here. Dressed hogs are bringing 6c for choice weights at packing houses.

HIDES—Receipts are moderate and the market steady. We quote: Country frozen hides, 5½c per pound, less 5 pounds tare. No. 1 city butchers' hides are worth 6c per pound; No. 2's, 5c; and 3's, 4c; sheepskins, same price as hides.

TALLOW—No. 1 tallow is worth 3¾c per pound delivered at Winnipeg, and No. 2, 2¾c.

LIVE STOCK.

CATTLE—The market is quiet, but firmer in sympathy with other centres. Choice beef cattle are worth 4c off cars here, and inferior grades ½c to 1c less.

SHEEP—The market is nominal, as there are none offering.

HOGS—The market is quiet and unchanged. Hogs weighing from 160 to 250 poungs are worth 5c per pound weighed off cars; light and heavy weights ½c to 1c less.

MILCH COWS—Good cows are very scarce and dear. Prices range from $35 to $55 each, according to quality.

HORSES—The spring demand is expected to commence in a short time, when things will be livelier. In the meantime there is but little doing. Ontario draft horses are bringing from $350 to $450 per team her, according to weight and quality.

There never was and never will be a universal panacea, in one remedy, for all ills to which flesh is heir— the very nature of many curatives being such that were the germs of other and differently seated disease rooted in the system of the patient—what would relieve one ill in turn would aggravate the other. We have, however, in Quinine Wine, when obtainable in sound, unadulterated state, a remedy for many and grievous ills. By its gradual and judicious use the frailest systems are led into convalescence and strength by the influence which Quinine exerts on nature's own restoratives. It relieves the drooping spirits of those with whom a chronic state of morbid despondency and lack of interest in life is a disease, and by tranquilizing the nerves, disposes to sound and refreshing sleep—imparts vigor to the action of the blood, which, being stimulated, course through the veins, strengthening the healthy animal functions of the system, thereby making activity a necessary result, strengthening the frame and giving life to the digestive organs, which naturally demand incresed substance—result improved appetite. Northrop & Lyman of Toronto, have given to the public their Superior Quinine Wine at the usual rate, and, gauged by the opinions of scientists, the wine approaches nearest perfection of any in the market. AN INCIDENT IN REAL LIFE.

Showing How Unpleasant People Can Make Themselves by Their Talk.

I stepped upon a Broadway car at the lower end of Broadway and rode in it along that fast changing highway as far as Nineteenth street. At the corner of Chambers street and Broadway a man of perhaps 40 and a woman not more than 25, he carrying a huge portmanteau, a collection of wraps, two umbrellas and a cane, she leading by the hand a 3-year-old baby, joined the partially crowded patronage already seated. A cloud of dissatisfaction rested upon the brow of the man. The frown of an already born rumpus fast unfolding into fruitage made forbidding and ugly the comely countenance of the woman. Her nervous disposition made itself known to every one in the car and particularly to the little boy as she yanked the child by the arm into the seat beside her. After a moment's silence the woman said, "You might have known how it would be," to which he responded, "Well, I might have known, but I didn't, so shut up!"

Another passenger entered the car at that moment and stumbled over the portmanteau.

"Hang that bag!" said the man.

"If I were you, I would keep my cussing for home," said the woman, and so on and on and on.

The ensuing half hour was passed by these two in a strain which would have done credit to the most pronounced hag in the dirtiest quarters of a third rate fish market. The little boy, thank heaven, went fast asleep. Much of the conversation between the two was inaudible save to the three or four people in immediate contact with them, but every once in awhile the shrill voice of the female bird soared into upper altitudes of defiance, making discordant the entire atmosphere and attracting the attention of nearly a score of people. They got out at the corner of Fourteenth street and Broadway and entered a cafe—he sullen, ejaculatory and profane; she keyed up to G in alt, defiant, shrewish, chock full of scold.

Well, what of it? It is not such a very uncommon thing for man and wife—for lovers even, for daily intercoursers—to quarrel and to vent serpentlike hisses from the unruly members that wag with curious motion as they distill poison from bitter and jaundiced hearts. It is not so uncommon, I admit, but isn't it always suggestive? I thought as I looked at the man, with a good, square, clean forehead, well marked brows, a clear skin and an air of self poise, that he was hardly doing himself justice. Save that his hands were rude and rough and that his boots were country made, that his portmanteau was considerably older than the ordinary hill and that his umbrella looked as though it might have been utilized by Mrs. Noah when she came from the ark, he was a man of the world in appearance.

And the woman had a pretty face. Her hair was parted in the middle, as women's hair should be, and revealed in its old fashioned brushing a tiny ear, not so small as to indicate utter selfishness, but, on the other hand, not so large as to rival a genuine Saddle Rock oyster in its vulgarity. Her eyes were brown, soft at that; her teeth were regular and clean; her dress was neat, her hands and feet well clad, and an occasional pat upon the boy's shoulder as he lay nestling against her, fast asleep, indicated the feminine nature, the affectionate tenderness of the mother.

Listening under the circumstances was not rudeness. It was compulsory. I sat next the boy. Some of his banana skin ornaments my coatsleeve until this moment. As he lay semicoiled up I noticed the copper nails in the bottom of his shoe and the copper toe upon the same. The group was easily and perfectly within my vision. As word after word fell red-hot I thought: How odd this all would have sounded in that shell-like ear five years ago. How strange it would have seemed to the lover had he heard it or had it been suggested to him that ever it could be possible for him to hear such language from such lips.—Howard in New York Recorder.

Reclaiming Old Rubber.

Crude rubber is worth from 40 to 75 cents per pound, and yet a pound of hose or packing costs very much less. This would be hardly practical if it were not for the advances that have been made in the art of reclaiming or recovering rubber, which can be done at the total cost of about 3 cents per pound. There are several large factories in the country devoted solely to this purpose, and a great many manufacturers do recovering on a small scale at the seat of the production of new goods.

These old goods are placed in large tanks at the place of reclaiming. A solution of muriatic or sulphuric acid and water is poured upon the waste, and the whole set to boiling by a system of steam pipes passing through the tank. After 10 or 12 hours' boiling the cotton fiber, which is found in all rubber manufactures and which is the serious drawback in the reclaiming process, disintegrates and falls into a powder, and there is no difficulty then in the use of the waste.—New York Telegram.

Leigh Hunt's Breakfast Bouquets.

Leigh Hunt, that early day æsthete, declared breakfast to be the meal of all others when the poetic influence of a table posy was most to be desired. He would bring in a few clover heads or sprigs of grass culled from beneath the protecting bars of a park railing or city square if he could find nothing more beautiful, and with these to look at his fancy took him roaming out into boundless green fields and pastures new.—Chicago Tribune.

How Trees Grow.

The last annual circle of wood leaves an accumulation of living cells upon its surface, and toward midsummer these cells produce an abundance of new ones until the aggregate is sufficient to form a new annual layer. This process on common trees requires about six weeks.—Exchange.

He Knows Others Too Who Have Been Troubled With Kidney Complaint, have Used Dodd's Kidney Pills and Are Well People To-day.

Birdell, Ont., March 7th—(Special.)—Postmaster Henry Bird of this place is one of those grand old men who carried Britain's flag to victory over the walls of Sebastopol. He tells many interesting tales of those terrible days, and also how he escapes the pains and aches brought on by so many days and nights of hardships and exposure.

"I have been troubled for years," he says, "with Kidney Trouble, brought on by lying in the trenches in front of Sebastopol, where thousands of my brothers in arms lost their lives. But every time I feel my trouble coming on I use Dodd's Kidney Pills. I have found them do me good each and every time.

"I never took more than one or two boxes at a time, and so never gave them a chance to make a complete cure in my case. But when I feel my trouble coming back I shall surely use Dodd's Kidney Pills again, for I know Dodd's Kidney Pills can do even more than is claimed for them. I know some of my neighbors who have used them for the same trouble as myself and who are well people to-day."

SOMETHING MORE THAN A PURGATIVE.—To purge is the only effect of many pills now on the market. Parmelee's Vegetable Pills are more than a purgative. They strengthen the stomach, where other pills weaken it. They cleanse the blood by regulating the liver and kidneys, and they stimulate where other pill compounds depress. Nothing of an injurious nature, used for merely purgative powers, enters into their compositions.

SISTER MOLLY'S BEAU.

Us children got t' be as nice
As ever was, an' when we go
T' answer 'at doorbell we got
T' make a little bow—jes' so!
An' ef it's 'at big mustached man
'At came from heaven t'other day
T' call on Molly we must put
Our nicest manners on an' say,

An' 'en we got t' go upstairs
As quiet as we ever knew
An' say t' Molly, "Sister, dear,
A gentleman's t' call on you!"
'Cause ef he'd hear us say, "Oh, Moll,
'At guy 'ith whiskers jess come in!"
Why, 'ere would be a nawful row,
An' we'd get spanked by Moll, like sin,
'Cause he's her beau!

Sence Molly's got a beau they can't
Nobody give her any sass
Ner tell th' man 'at Moll jess stands
All day by 'at big lookin' glass.
We got t' make out like she looks
Like 'at all times, 'cause she 'ud slap
Our heads right off ef we 'ud tell
Him how she looks in her old wrap
When he ain't there!

I wisht 'at they'd stop spoonin' so,
A-sittin' on th' sofa—say!
I saw him put his arm around
Moll's waist, I did, las' Saturday!
I wisht 'at they'd get married, an'
We wouldn't have t' primp up so;
They ain't no fun in livin' now
Sence Sister Molly's got a beau,
'At whiskered man.

A Wry Greeting.

Dr. Madison C. Peters tells of a ludicrous break made by a young man in orders just about graduating into the ministry. This youthful divine was called upon to address the inmates of one of the largest penitentiaries in the country on an occasion when the prisoners were assembled in the chapel for prayers.

When he looked down from his pulpit at the vicious, depraved and desperate looking characters in the congregation the young parson experienced quite a turn. Surely he would find it difficult to say anything that would impress such an audience. He entirely forgot in that instant all the fine sentiments he had intended to give expression to. He cudgeled his brains in vain to remember a single appropriate remark for the occasion. He cleared his throat once, then again and again. Finally he spoke, but instead of the fine address he had hoped to make the best he could stammer forth was:

"Ah, my friends, I am indeed happy to see so many of you here this morning!"—Lippincott's Magazine.

Mental power cannot be got from ill-fed brains.

STEADILY FORGING AHEAD

The Western Assurance Company is a Flourishing Financial Concern.

Of the many flourishing financial concerns which have their headquarters in Toronto, few can point to a more gratifying record than that disclosed at the annual meeting of the Western Assurance Company, a full report of which appeared in the columns of the Mail and Empire on Saturday, Feb. 20. The financial statement showed the company to be steadily forging ahead, an appreciable advance in business being evident. The income for the year was $3,678,387.45, and the expenditures were $3,372,474.85, leaving a profit of $305,912.60, or upwards of 15 per cent. on the company's capital stock. There was an increase of $131,670.28 in premium earnings and of $10,681.71 in interest earnings, while there was a decrease of $3,273.38 in losses incurred. With assets of $3,546,357.25 and a reserve fund of $1,289,850, the company's financial position is as secure and firmly established as wise and efficient management can make it.

An interesting portion of President George A. Cox's address was that in which he referred to the company's interest in the great fire at Baltimore. Having maintained an agency there for 30 years, it would be unreasonable to hope to escape without some considerable loss. The company's share of the insurance due had been estimated at $350,000, which was about equal to the company's income for one month. The probable advancement of rates in other cities on similar properties to those destroyed will largely offset this loss.—Mail and Empire, Toronto.

The Origin of Mezzotint.

Colonel von Siegen, a Dutch artist of German extraction, holding an appointment at the court of the landgrave of Hesse-Cassel, was the inventor of mezzotint, that branch of engraving which comes nearest to nature, though it is far from being the best means of artistic expression.

It dates from about 1611 and is said to have been suggested by the rust on a weapon which a soldier was cleaning. The first fruits of this newly discovered process consisted of a picture of the landgrave's mother, the dowager landgravine, which Siegen presented at court, stating that no copperplate engraver or artist could explain or imagine how it was done.

Evelyn, in his "Sculptura," 1662, attributes the invention to Prince Rupert. An original letter of Siegen's still in existence proves this to be an error, for Siegen met Prince Rupert in Brussels in 1654 and disclosed the process to him then and there, knowing that the prince had already practiced etching.

More than a hundred engravers in mezzotint did for the pictures of Sir Joshua Reynolds what line engravers had done for Raphael.

The Sense of Smell.

That we have not entirely lost the animal basis of judgment, the sense of smell, is proved by the fact we do tell ourselves very much of other people by the nose, often unconsciously. The blind distinguish their friends by the smell of handkerchiefs or coats. Unconscious sensations and unconscious judgments have their field. We know far more by smell than is supposed. Some classes have apparently become degraded in senses as well as habits, for their basis of social judgment is below that of the animals. Those who have had their senses keenly educated are accustomed to judge of persons by odors. Australian children possess the doglike sense of trailing people by scent, and experiment reveals that this is to some degree present in every one. Strong attachments are not so rigidly ideal as we like to suppose. There is a physical basis to all our likes and dislikes. It is this which underlies the demand of refined people that their friends shall be cleanly.—Open Court.

Alleged of Practical Folk.

People who take all things literally are apt to tread on other people's toes. The man who walked in where he saw a sign "Walk In" and who was ordered out was a literal man, and so was he who went into a pawnbroker's shop and demanded 40 shillings because there was a placard in the window that read:

"Look at This Watch For 40 Shillings."

"I looked at it," said he, "and now I want my £2."

The most amusing incident we have heard is that of the countryman who while sauntering along a city street saw a sign:

"Please Ring the Bell For the Caretaker."

After reflecting for a few minutes he walked up and gave the bell such a pull that it nearly came out by the roots. In a few moments an angry faced man opened the door.

"Are you the caretaker?" asked the bell puller.

"Yes. What do you want?"

"I saw that notice, so I rang the bell, and now I want to know why you can't ring the bell yourself!"—Tit-Bits.

Played an Organ.

The little daughter of a well known New York musician was much chagrined the other day by the ingenuous remark of a "new friend." Said the little girl proudly:

"My father is an organist."

"And does he have a monkey?" was the prompt rejoinder.

It will become a matter of wonder that there should ever have existed those who thought it admirable to enjoy without working, at the expense of others who worked without enjoying. m

He afterwards left hurriedly and started for Macleod, but was induced by the police to return, and was committed for trial.

FERNIE'S ADVANTAGES.

THE zinc reduction works will be located either at Fernie or Frank and the work of construction will commence as soon as the decision is made. The natural advantages possessed by Fernie over Frank in this instance are quite apparent. The promoters argue that it is cheaper to take the concentrates to the fuel than to take the fuel to the concentrator. This view is particularly true when it is considered that the C. P. R. are drawing many empty cars from the west to be filled with coal and coke, and that the railway management can afford to haul concentrates in these cars at a rate below the average. On the other hand to carry fuel to the place where the concentrator is located would tax the capacity of the transportation company to a greater extent than it is now and the tendency would be to increase the present rate on fuel. Frank does not have this advantage as few empties are taken over the mountain. The rate on concentrates from Fernie to Frank must necessarily be high as the rise of 1000 feet in the 35 miles to the Divide is a heavy grade. But the fuel conditions in Fernie offer the greatest advantages. The mines are in an advanced state of development, large oven plants are in full operation, and the coke is not surpassed in quality in any part of America. A smelting company takes no risks so far as fuel is concerned in locating in Fernie. Another advantageous point possessed by Fernie over Frank and even over Michel is the comparative lack of lime and magnesia in the water. The Frank water is heavily charged with these substances and Michel creek contains more than does the water of Coal Creek. The water used for zinc smelting should be free from lime and magnesia.

INDIANS RAID GAME.

STONEY INDIANS OF ALBERTA HUNT IN B. C.

Make Regular Expeditions Into Upper Elk Valley Every Fall.—Terrible Slaughter Of Game.—Protection Wanted.

That the game of the northern end of the Elk valley needs protection from the raids of the Stoney Indians is quite apparent from the statements made by John Lewis and Frank Harmer to a FREE PRESS representative this week. Mr. Lewis has prospected the hills of this district for the past six years and few men are able to speak so authoratively on the game question as he.

These men claim that last fall they came upon a number of Stoney Indians hunting in the neighborhood of Aldrich Creek, 50 miles north of Michel. The Indians had come over through the Kananaskis Pass in large numbers and had split up into five parties to make more effective warfare upon the game. They made drive ways and slaughtered the deer in great numbers, regardless of age or sex.

Each member of the party, including women and children, had on an average four or five horses, and these were all loaded with skins and dried meat when the return trip to the Reservation in Alberta was made late in the Fall. The Indians were also caught trapping marten before the opening of the season. They talked with the chief and learned that the Indians were vaguely aware that they were doing wrong in coming across the British Columbia line to hunt but they had come over year after year because they had never received any orders to stay away. The boundary line set by the Kootenai and Stoney tribes was some distance west of the B. C. boundary and the Stoneys continue to visit their traditional hunting grounds.

Messrs. Lewis and Harmer interviewed Chief McMullin with a view to having the raids stopped, and though the district is outside of the Chief's jurisdiction he promised to do what he could towards having game constables appointed in that locality, and he immediately wrote to Mr. Bullock-Webster making recommendations to that effect. Mr. Lewis was of the opinion that more than one constable should be appointed as one might act in another's absence. He also thought that great tact was necessary in approaching them, as any show of force might precipitate trouble. The Stoneys were manly fellows who would listen to reason. If the matter was explained to the head of the tribe at the reservation it might result in the raids being discontinued without any other action on the part of the authorities.

Game exists in the upper Elk valley in large numbers; deer, elk, sheep, goats, bears, black and grisly, all flourish and little hunting is done there by white men. If the game were protected as it should be there need be no fear of any of it becoming depleted. The term "constable" used in the above has the same meaning as game warden in other provinces. No salary is attached to the position.

POLICE COURT

The C. P. R. authorities have complained of continual pilfering of coal from their coal shutes here. Alf. Migo was caught in the act and was tried on the charge of theft before L. R. Forbes, S. M., on Thursday. He was allowed to go with a reprimand.

J. Kosnerra committed an aggravated assault upon a fellow countryman named John Jonas in the old town late on Wednesday night and Constable Sampson placed him under arrest. He was tried yesterday morning before J. F. Armstrong. He pleaded guilty and paid a fine of $10 and costs.

Nellie Scaife the woman pedlar who lost her purse, containing money, rings and other valuables, worth in all several hundred dollars, in Michel last week, accused George Burdett, of Michel, of stealing it from her and the case came up in the police court last Saturday evening. The unfortunate woman told her story to the effect that the robbery had occurred in the Dudley boarding house, that the accused had locked her door from the outside when she retired on the night the alleged robbery took place and unlocked it the next morning. The accused had two witnesses, Miss A. Dudley and Mrs. Murdock to give evidence in his favor and the case was dismissed.

ANOTHER FIRE SCARE.

On Sunday as people were gathering in the churches for the eleven o'clock services the cry of fire caused considerable consternation about the central portion of the town. Mr. Geddes in passing had noticed flames shoot out of an aperture of the Crow's Nest Trading Company's stable at the rear of their store and immediately gave what alarm he could.

Those who arrived first lost no time in releasing the imprisoned team of horses. The grey was badly burned about the head and shoulders, but the other, overcome by the dense smoke, was lying down aud thus escaped the flames. Chief Tuttle was early at the scene and he was assisted by many volunteers. Considerable time elapsed before the chemical engine arrived. Some time was lost in getting the doors of the hall opened, and twice the wheels on one side got off the beaten track on the way to the fire causing them sink deep and "sticking" the horses. After the fire was reached the chemicals did not act immediately. In fact several minutes passed before any appreciable pressure was generated. The hose real was behind the engine in the hall. It was hurried out and some hose was added to two lengths which had already been attached at the Coal company office and the water stream was playing almost as soon as the chemical. The two soon extinguished the fire. The fire, fortunately was not aggressive. It was confined mostly in smouldering hay. The snow on the roof retarded its progress and no wind stirred the air.

The cause of the fire is attributed to a spark from the pipe of the man who fed the horses in the morning. The injured horse will recover from its severe burns. The location of the stable is so central that if the fire had gained any headway the entire business section of the town would have been wiped out.

TODAY'S DESPATCHES.

PARIS.—It is stated in authoritive quarters that Great Britain and France have reached an agreement concerning Fewfoundland.

ST. PETERSBURG.—The interior of the Alexandria Chapel at Vitna was wrecked by a bomb yesterday morning. No one was injured.

MINNEAPOLIS.—At the Republican State convention to-day Governor Van Sant declared the tariff should be revised by its friends, not its enemies.

TOKIO.—An official despatch from Seoul says that 1500 Russian cavalry made a dash between Wiju and Ping Yang. Two hundred of them came as far as the Seisenho River and fired at Japanese troops, on the other side the fire was not returned.

HONG KONG.—Pekin reports Viceroy Alexieff has had an interview with the Tartar general Isen Phi and demanded that the Chinese force evacuate Mukden Isen Phi stoutly objected but the Viceroy was persistent.

PARIS.—A despatch from St. Petersburg says the Japanese fleet off Port Arthur.

THE EAGLES' BALL.

The first annual ball of the Fernie Aerie No. 561 Fraternal Order of Eagles, was given in Princess Hall last evening and was attended by a large number of the representative people of Fernie and adjoining towns. A number of Eagles had given much time toward decorating the hall, and it presented a beautiful appearance. From the grand opening march at 10 p. m. until the "Home Sweet Home," at 3:30 a. m., everyone present certainly had the time of their lives, and all acknowledge that the Fernie Eagles are past masters in the art of entertaining.

Durnig a short intermission before supper, the worthy Vice President of the Aerie, W. W. Tuttle, gave an exposition of the aims and teachings of the order, dwelling especially on the cardinal principle of equality of all men who are men, without regard to wealth or position, and proving that recognition of this principle is essential for the prosperity of any community.

AGAIN TAKE ACTION.

BOARD OF TRADE TAKE UP INCORPORATION QUESTION.

Meeting on Monday Appointed a Committee and Adjourned Until a Later Date.—Annual Meeting Mar. 29th.—Views On the Subject.

A general meeting of the Fernie Board of Trade was held on Monday evening. Owing to counter attractions there were only a few more than a quorum present and as the important subject of incorporation was the chief matter of business it was decided to postpone its discussion until the annual meeting which takes place on March 29th. The meeting appointed a committee composed of President Rennie and Secretary Alexander to make certain inquiries on the subject for report at the next meeting.

Messrs. Rennie and Alexander will interview the Coal Company management with regard to the limits of the proposed town and other important matters on which it is necessary to have an understanding with the Company. They will also gather approximate information on the estimated revenue and expenditure of the town and in this connection will secure information from other towns. They will also look into the the legal phase of the subject to ascertain the necessary steps to be taken to satisfy the law.

The meeting called for next Tuesday should be attended by every member of the Board. The election of officers for the ensuing year, and the incorporation question are both matters of vital importance and no member who has the welfare of the town at heart will fail to be present.

Some of the members of the Board have expressed the opinion that a competent accountant should be employed to go fully into the details of the scheme of incorporation, to present the financial end in figures calculated as close as possible so that a balance sheet can be struck to show whether the town would be in a better position than under the present system. The labor involved in such an undertaking is considerable and the present committee is not expected to gather more than general information on the subject.

RAILWAY TRAFFIC CRIPPLED

The big slide a mile south of Swinton is still blocking the Great Northern and there is little hopes that the slide will be cleared before the end of next week. The rotary plows are useless in the work and already three have been broken in efforts to make them effective. The railway company now have 225 men employed at digging the snow with pick and shovel.

The effect on the coal and coke industry is marked. Morrissey mines are closed down tight. The C. P. R. cannot supply sufficient cars for Fernie and Michel, and the Boundary smelters are closed for repairs, so that difficulty is found in marketing the coal and coke from Fernie aud Michel. It is possible that both collieries will be closed more or less next week.

LOCALS CONTINUED.

E. K. J. Forster, the lumberman from Crow's Nest, was in Fernie early in the week.

Doctor and Mrs. Corsan entertained a large number of friends at their home last evening.

LOST—A pocket book containing a sum of money in gold and bills. Finder will be suitably rewarded by returning same to this office. x

Mrs. Todd will be pleased to exhibit her large stock of beautiful spring hats to her many patrons on Tuesday, March 22nd. A call solicited.

The first robin of the season was reported yesterday. The robins and millinery openings should surely bring spring.

Bob Moore returned on Saturday from a visit to his old home in Ireland. He brought with him a dozen very fine black thorn canes whice he presented to his friends.

For Sale—A one forty eighth interest in the Elk River Coal and Oil Company, price $800.00 cash. Other holdings of the same amount are being held at from $5,000 to $10,000; this is a snap. See Cree & Hutchison.

B. F. Boyce, of Calgary, was in town this week visiting his married daughter at Coal Creek. "Jerry" has bought an hotel at Gleichen on the line of the big irrigation scheme east of Calgary.

Latest reports indicate that the prospects of the zinc smelter coming to Fernie are most bright. Messrs. Fernau and Lefebvre leave very soon direct for Belgium instead of via San Francisco and definite word may soon be expected.

Miss C. Thompson and her sister Miss E. Thompson, of Winnipeg, were the guests of Mrs. S. Graham on Wednesday having stopped over for the day, on their way to Winnipeg from Trout Lake City, where they have been spending the winter.

Herbert Findlay has been frozen to death near Fraser's camp near Fish Bay, Ont. He was about 24 years of age He went to Rat Portage from Orillia eight years ago. One of his sisters lives in Montreal and another in Fernie.—Hamilton Spectator.

A meeting will be held at the Muskoka Hotel next Friday for the purpose re-organizing the base-ball club. A large attendance of enthusiasts is desired as an effort is to be made this year to get a good team together.

Dr. Willson, of Morrissey, came to town on Monday's express. He received a telephone message early in the evening notifying him of the accident at Morrissey and he left hurriedly on a handcar that evening, accompanied by Constable Dow who also came into town the same evening.

Some of the young men of Michel are talking of forming a rifle association at that place. The government allows 10 rifles to a corps of 40 members and 100 rounds of ammunition each per year. The new Militia Act being introduced in the Dominion House may alter the present act governing rifle corps and militia companies.

C. Richards arrived home on Tuesday's train from Winnipeg by the merest chance he missed the train the day before or he would have been in the railway accident which occurred near Moose Jaw. Two cars, the first-class and the colonist, were ditched and twenty people were injured. The accident was caused by a defective rail.

The fight between Jack Curley and Billy Burrows on Monday resulted in a victory for the former in the fifth round. Early in the round Burrows went down to the ninth count. He renewed the attack but another blow put him out of business. Burrows was in excellent form and put up a good fight. The preliminary between Scaler and Slavin was won by Scaler in the 2nd rund.

The Johnson Dramatic Company will play in Princess Hall to-night and tomorrow night on their return trip. This evening they will put on "Finnigan's Fortune" a high class comedy drama full of fun from beginning to end. Tomorrow they will again play Jack O'Diamonds. This drama is known to many, and those who have not seen it have missed one of the strongest plays of its kind that was ever written.

COLLISION ON G. N. R.

J. A. LEE KILLED INSTANTLY AND A DOZEN INJURED.

Work Train and regular Passenger Train Collide in Tunnel near Morrissey Due to Confusion in Orders.

A collision occurred on the Great Northern railway three miles south of Swinton between a work train and the regular north bound express on Monday evening at 7:30 resulting in the instant death of John A. Lee and the injury of a dozen other men on the work train.

The work-train was backing up on its way to Elko for coal and supplies, and were going at about 8 miles an hour. The train was mostly in the tunnel with about two cars projecting out when the crash came. The fireman noticed the danger light on the rear car only a moment before owing to a sharp curve but the engineer lost no time in reversing the engine and his train was almost stopped when the collision occurred. The three rear cars were fortunately empty, they being occupied in the day time by Italian workmen who were on the night shift at the slide. The next two cars were occupied by Lee and his companions. The three rear cars were telescoped and the other two were badly damaged. Some injuries was also sustained by the engine of the express train.

Sugerintendent Long, who has charge of cleaning the snow slide near Swinton, was in the wreck in his private car. Fortunately for him the position of his car had been changed that morning from its usual place at the rear to that next to the tender and he consequently escaped an almost certain death: Mr. Long lost no time in summoning Dr. Willson from Fernie and another doctor from Kalispel. Lee was bruised about the head and died almost instantly. The other men were not hurt seriously, bruises, sprains and scalds constituting their chief injuries.

Coroner H. H. Trites went down on Tuesday to hold an inquest and a verdict was brought in to the effect that the accident was due to a confusion of orders of the officials owing to the imperfect system of giving train orders on that branch. The jury recommended that the telegraph system be instituted instead of the telephone as now used.

The evidence of the principal train men on both trains was secured as well as Agent Thompson at Swinton and O. E. Fisher, Mr. Long's private secretary. The express had been in the habit of coming up to the slide every night, but on this occasion the work train got orders to go to Elko on the understanding that the express would be held there, for the night. Agent Thompson claimed that he made that arrangement with the express at Gateway, but Conductor W. R. Hibbard of the express denied this. At Elko Hibbard attempted to ring up Thompson but failed as the latter had gone to supper, and he gave orders to proceed without any further instructions Secretary Fisher's evidence agreed with that of Thompson's, he being present in the office when the latter was talking with Hayden.

The dead body and the injured men were taken back to Kalispel. Little is known of the deceased. A letter was found on his person from a brother living at Phoenix, Utah.

THE VOTERS LIST.

The voters lists for the different provincial electoral districts close on March 28 th and remain closed until after the courts of revision to be held on May 2nd. All who have neglected to register their nanes should not fail to avail themselves of this opportunity as the provincial lists will be used in the coming Dominion elections. W. H. Whimster has been reappointed collector of voters for the Fernie district.

A CHARITY BALL.

The Ladies Benevolent Society met at the home of Mrs. A. C. Liphardt on Saturday last for the transaction of business. It was decided to hold a Charity ball on the night of Easter Monday, April 4th, for the purpose of increasing the funds of the society. The tickets will sell for $2. The ladies will spare no efforts to make the ball a huge success, and there is little doubt but that the financial end will result satisfactorily as the object is a worthy one which will appeal to everyone who has two dollars to rub together. The society has several cases in view where its assistance in a practical sense will accomplish much good.

BEHIND THE DOOR

BY EDMUND DOWNEY.

AUTHOR OF "A HOUSE OF TEARS" "RED POST PORCH" ETC.

COPYRIGHT, 1894, BY THE OTTEN & SONS.

CHAPTER XXIV.

EXIT STEINWORTH.

"You run down and open the door, Briggs. It's only one of your own men, who can't understand why the light is in the house. I'll attend to our guest here for the present, and send your man to fetch the nearest doctor instantly. And you might wake some one up next door, and see if you can get a drop of brandy."

Steinworth had not fainted outright, but he seemed almost without life as he sat in the armchair, his head thrown back, his arms hanging limp, his long white teeth clinching his lower lip.

As soon as Goringe saw that his guest was not in mortal danger his thoughts flew swiftly back to the door of the room, and picking up the screwdriver, which he had placed on the table before Steinworth had begun his story, he proceeded to screw the door into its place. He had scarcely completed his task when Inspector Briggs, holding a bottle in his hand, entered the room.

"I am afraid I terrified the people next door," he said. "How is our friend ?"

Goringe made no answer. He poured out a stiff dose of the brandy into a tumbler and forced it gently down Steinworth's throat.

The young man recovered slowly, and gazed round the room with a dazed and terrified stare.

"Still here ?" he moaned, flinging up his arms. "Shall I never get out of this awful house ?"

"He'll be all right presently," whispered Goringe to the inspector. "Have you sent your man for the doctor ?"

"Yes; it was Young. He had his eye, of course, on the house, and naturally the light alarmed him; another minute and he'd have burst in the hall door."

"He is full of enthusiasm," said Goringe, quietly. "I think I hear footsteps in the road; he has been pretty quick, if it is he."

In a few moments there was a stamp of feet in the forecourt, and the sound of a gate swinging on its hinges, and then a faint knock at the hall door.

Inspector Briggs descended the stairs swiftly and admitted Constable Young and Dr. Leclerc.

"Odd," said the young man, as he entered the hall, "that it is I who should have been summoned here. Who or what is it now ?"

The inspector briefly told him who the patient was, and indicated as well as he could the condition of Steinworth, and then the two men ascended the stairs.

While Leclerc was silently examining his patient Briggs took the detective aside.

"It's rather awkward, but I shall have to hook it right off—I only wish you could come with me while the traces are fresh—a burglary in the main road—Crescent road. Young has been out on the hunt for me."

"Is it a serious job ?"

"Seems like it, but Young has no particulars. Couldn't we leave this half dead creature here for the night if the young medical would promise to look after him ?"

"I suppose you might if you got one of your men to keep house for you. But don't let me advise you, inspector. I am now in an utterly limp condition. My work is done here, and the reaction has already set in."

"All the more reason you should come with me now to the scene of the new job. It will freshen you up."

"See what the doctor says. He appears to have satisfied himself now."

"Well, doctor," said the inspector, addressing himself to Leclerc, "what do you think of your patient ?"

"He is very low, indeed," said Leclerc, a thoughtful shadow on his pale face. "You may discuss his condition freely. He is deaf to everything at the moment."

"Is he fit for removal ?"

"No; I was going to suggest that I should stop up with him through the night. He may take a sudden change for the worse—or for the better," he added, "though I fear a change for the better is not a very likely prospect."

"Of course you will have no objection to having a constable in the house ?"

"Not if he doesn't interfere with me."

"No objection to his taking up his quarters in the adjoining room—where Mr. Vickery used to sleep ? You see, we have to be careful of our witnesses," explained Inspector Briggs.

"I have no objection to anybody who will not hamper me. I will be very glad to have a constable handy—I may want assistance during the night. But if Mr. Steinworth shows any symptoms of returning to full consciousness it will be better he should not have his mind disturbed at the sight of a policeman. He is in a very critical condition."

"Very well," said Inspector Briggs. "I will install my man in the next room, and you will pass your word to keep watch over your patient until we claim him."

"Yes. If he is not claimed beforehand by the higher powers."

"It is possible then," said Goringe, "that the worst may happen before morning ?"

"Quite possible."

"It is possible that he may recover."

"Or that he may recover ?"

"He has made a certain statement which it would be most desirable he should sign. Will you take charge of this statement, and get him to sign it if he does return to full consciousness ?"

"I will do my best."

Leclerc stood with folded arms as he spoke to the two officers, his eyes fixed all the while on his patient. There was no trace of uneasiness in his voice or on his features.

"The document will interest you considerably if you would care to read it over for Mr. Steinworth before he puts his name to it."

"Indeed !"

"I should think it would, doctor," Inspector Briggs emphatically declared, as Goringe passed some sheets of paper to Leclerc.

"My interest for the present is centred in the man here," said Leclerc, quietly—"not in his statements."

* * * *

About seven o'clock in the morning there was a knock at the door of 13 Felspar road, and Constable Young admitted his inspector and Detective Goringe.

"You have been dozing, Young," said the inspector, sternly, as soon as the hall door was closed. "Don't deny it, you yawning idiot !"

The inspector as a rule did not give way to violent language, but a sleeping sentinel was more than flesh and blood could stand.

"It must have been the smell of the gentleman's chloroform, sir," said Young, at a loss for an excuse.

"Bosh !" said Inspector Briggs.

"Is all right here ?"

"All right, sir."

"Where is Dr. Leclerc ?"

"Asleep on the lounge in the back room—the dining-room."

"Where is your prisoner—the man you were put in charge of upstairs ?"

"Locked into his room, sir. Here is the key," fumbling in his pocket.

"'Pon my soul," said Goringe, "this is lovely. What odds, inspector, that your bird is in his cage ?"

"It's all right, of course, sir," said Constable Young, in a plaintive voice, his conical head trembling like an aspen.

"'All right,' you infernal idiot ? I hope for your sake it is—that's all."

Inspector Briggs was in a fierce rage.

"Come, Goringe," said he, "let us wake up the young doctor, and see what he has got to say. And you, sir," turning to Constable Young, "go upstairs and report what condition your prisoner is in. And don't stop to inhale any chloroform on the way."

As Constable Young was proceeding to ascend the stairs, a prey to indignation, anger, and amazement at his chief's unnecessary anxiety about the safety of Albert Steinworth, Maurice Leclerc stepped into the hall.

"I was worn out, and came for a stretch here," he said. "Good morning, gentlemen."

"Good morning, doctor. How is your patient ?"

"He has made a surprising recovery, and I have been able to carry out your instructions. Here is the statement signed," handing it to Detective Goringe.

"Have you read this ?" asked the detective.

"No; not a word of it."

"He is, of course, in his bedroom now ?" asked Inspector Briggs.

"I locked him in when I was leaving the room, and gave the key to your man—Constable Young."

"Has Steinworth made any statements to you ?" inquired Detective Goringe.

"I decline to say. Anything he may have said I regard as being strictly confidential."

"Privileged, of course," said Goringe, "as between doctor and patient. Might I ask what line of boats you inteded to travel by when you contemplated that voyage across the Atlantic ?"

"I decline to say."

"Or what you have done with your ticket or tickets ?"

"You ask too many questions."

"This way, inspector, please," cried the voice of Constable Young from the landing at the top of the first flight of stairs.

"That's a summons, Briggs," said Goringe, speaking softly into the inspector's ears, "to inform you that for the second time Albert Steinworth has passed mysteriously through a locked door."

"Dr. Leclerc," said Inspector Briggs, sternly, "if you have played us false in any way you will have to pay pretty dearly for your conduct."

"Play you false, inspector ! I carried out your instructions to the letter. What charge have you in your mind against me now ? I have helped to bring back to life a man who was wandering in the valley of shadows. That is my latest crime."

"Fudge, sir!" fumed Inspector Briggs, as he ascended the stairs.

"My darling," said Ethel Rodney, as she stood looking timidly into her lover's eyes, "I have no fault to find with you for what you have done, but are you sure you have got yourself into no fresh trouble ?"

"I think not, dearest. Even if I have sinned—of course Inspector Briggs regards me as some horrible species of criminal—I shall suffer for my latest offence in good company. I have a notion that the detective has a soft corner at the bottom of his heart, and having found the stolen money he began to develop a kind of pity for that miserable, sickly wretch. If you saw him as I saw him, Ethel, and heard his sordid tale, you could scarcely desire to have him punished further, I couldn't, at any rate, although he confessed how he had plotted to drag me down in order to snatch you from me, dearest."

"I think you have acted very generously."

"Do you think that he has got safely away—that he will not be brought back here ?" asked the young girl, clinging more closely to her lover. "I could not even bear the thought of being brought near the man again."

"I think he is clever enough to get clear of the country, as I don't think our good Mr. Goringe is anxious for his capture. So far as I can judge, he is piqued beyond measure at having been found napping—at having allowed a house he was virtually in charge of to be broken into. It must makes me smile—if anything about this wretched business could work that miracle."

"I hope you are right, Maurice. But I cannot bear to think of either of those two men."

"Steinworth and Vickery ? You must have some mercy on the elder man. He has half crazed himself with narcotics. And mind you, after all, Ethel, half crazy as he is, there is something in that theory of his about evaporation as a motive power."

"I hate to think of him or his theories."

"My dearest girl, I am a brute—and I am once more forgetting all my good resolutions and breaking out into complete selfishness. But it is hard to get rid of old habits."

"I think you have acted very generously in helping an enemy—but I don't want to think of him any more, Maurice, if I can help it."

"I am glad you consider I am capable of generosity in any form, Ethel, dearest. I am trying to learn some hard lessons. Already I have been taught that there is infinitely more pleasure in one ounce of generosity—apothecary's weight—than in a ton avoirdupois of brooding over one's own selfish troubles. My new partner—good old Percival—has taught me a portion of that lesson. You, dearest, have taught me the rest—and a good deal more that is worth the studying. I am now engaged upon a harder task—the task of learning the lesson of self-control."

"You are learning that lesson admirably, I think," interrupted Ethel Rodney, with pouting lips. "It is ever so long since you kissed me last."

THE END.

Names of English Magazines.

Not a few magazines bear the name of the publisher. This is a neat way out of the difficulty, but it is quite unenlightening. An acquaintance with the personal idiosyncrasies of Messrs. Cassell, Chambers, Longman, Macmillan and Pearson would be of little service to an investigator of the periodicals of which these publishers are the patron saints. Of late years the fashion has grown of laying claim to some street or district of London. So we have publications, daily, weekly or monthly, named after Belgravia, Cornhill, Ludgate Hill, Pall Mall, St. James, the Strand, the Temple, Temple Bar, Westminster and Whitehall. The only predictions that one would have ventured to make would have been that the Cornhill would deal with finance and that there would be a legal flavor about the Temple. These forecasts, however, would have been as unfortunate as the expectation that there would be an especially courtly tone about the Windsor.—Academy.

"Money Talks" Explained.

"I wonder," said the student boarder, "whence came the expression 'Money talks?'"

"I think it originated in Athens," said Asbury Peppers.

"Athens? When?"

"When it became known that Demosthenes learned oratory by filling his mouth with rocks."—Washington Star.

Humiliating a Bull.

A magnificent red bull owned by an English farmer had an unpleasant notoriety as a man killer. A strip of oak board had therefore been bound firmly across his forehead, and on this as an added insult to the monarch of the herd was painted, "Dangerous." When the beast held his muzzle to the sky he could see in front of him, but the moment he lowered his head for mischief or grazing all view except of his own forefeet was cut off. "Clambering one day down a tor near his haunts," says a writer, "I came on a stretch of level green. In the center of this sat an imperturbable artist painting, and round him in furious tangents charged the ineffectual bull. Up went the beast's head while aim was taken under the board at this disturber of the solitude, but then, with lowered horns, the plank again shut the bull into a mistaken memory of where his target was. The painter said he had spent half a morning in flight and the next half in laughter."

Beefsteak Variations.

A traveler on the continent of Europe received the following bill of fare at a hotel in Versailles: Soup with very turtle—i. e., read turtle; lobster's salad with sharp sauce, according to the bigness (suivant la grosseur); shies (filets) of sole; one's muttons chops with sparagus tops; pickled pork with younk cabage; fish—fish—dabs of different dimensions; lamb epigrams with vegetables; muscles fricasseed; rumsteak with the tumled potatoes (sautees); Strasburg's pie of livers; surfine liquors and of islands (et des iles); gelly with punch." The traveler gives the following variations of the word "beefsteak" which he has noted on his travels in Belgium: "Bifstek, bifstik, bifstick, biftek, bifteek, befstick, beefstick, beefsteek, bifsteeck, beefstake, beefsteack, bufsteks, biefsteaks, bifsteack, bouefstaecks, beefteacks, bifsteecks and even bifsteeckx!"

The "Weeping Willow" Song.

Some people have heard of the ballad containing the words "I'll hang my harp on a weeping willow tree," but perhaps it is not generally known that the author was a young man who fell desperately in love with Queen Victoria, at that time a girl of seventeen. This young lover was heir to a baronetcy, but baronets cannot approach royalty in the guise of a suitor, though it took some time before the romantic youth could be brought to understand this fact. When at last he did so, he sat down in despair and wrote the now well known ballad, which was at that time published in a London paper, and then he emigrated to Australia.

THE PERPLEXING INITIAL

By CHARLES SLOAN REID

Copyright, 1903, by T. C. McClure

The roar of the river as its waters tumbled over the rocks drowned the sound of footsteps, drowned even the sigh of the breeze among the tree tops. A dense shadow lay over the gorge, for the sun was behind a cloud.

The fish in the stream had not been biting to suit a young fisher woman, and she had thrust her pole into the bank and gone aside to carve something in the bark of an old beech. Laboriously she worked away and at length had completed a single large A.

A man approached along the river trail and stood directly behind the girl, watching her work. A flush passed over his face when he saw the letter the girl had carved, and he frowned. Then he coughed, and the girl was startled. She turned quickly around.

"You, Amos?" she exclaimed.

"Me, Marth," was the answer.

"Why didn't ye whistle or somethin' 'fore ye got so close?"

"Wanted to see what ye're doin'."

Marth's face reddened slightly.

"Well?"

"Well, I see ye've got that schoolteacher in yer mind."

"'Tain't so. Now, I wonder what put that in yer head?"

"I see ye're fixin' to carve his name."

Marth looked up at the letter in the bark, then looked at Amos in silence.

"Don't reckon ye can hardly deny it," continued Amos jealously, "for I don't reckon ye could say that letter stood for anybody else around these parts but Aldrich; so I put it up ye're a-thinkin' a right smart about that same schoolteacher."

"Amos Underwood, ye haven't got a grain o' sense. Ye can't see two inches afore yer nose." Marth's eyes were dancing.

"I reckon ye think so, Marth. But I think I know what's what when a girl carves a chap's name on a tree. Marth, girl, I think ye might have spared me this kind o' thing, an' me thinkin' of ye the way I do. Ye might have waited till I was—till somethin' had happened to me. Then I'd allers thought ye loved me."

SPRINGING THROUGH THE OPENING, SHE CALLED HIS NAME.

Marth glanced again at the letter in the bark, then back at Amos, and looked disgusted.

"I never said I was a-thinkin' one mite about the schoolteacher, have I?"

"Not with yer mouth, but ye've said it up there with yer pocket knife." Amos pointed at the big letter in the bark.

Marth turned a steady gaze, full of fire, upon the man's face for a moment, then let her words fly.

"Amos Underwood," she snapped, "ye're the biggest gump I ever saw. I hate ye. I despise ye. Now, ye go. And I do hope the revenues will get ye this very night."

"Marth, I"— Amos had taken off his hat.

"No ye don't!" Marth stamped her foot. "Ye've said enough. Go!"

She pointed up the trail, and Amos moved slowly away.

Marth had wound up her fish line by the time Amos had gone from view, and she turned toward the old beech again.

"The crazy," she murmured. "He couldn't remember his own name started with A. Well, he's gone, and I'm glad of it. I do hate a man that can't see with his eyes open."

The girl followed the trail to the top of the ridge, then turned off to the left and went toward a cabin on the side of the mountain.

As the afternoon dragged along Marth went over and over in her mind the scene on the river bank, and at each rehearsal she softened a little toward Amos until at last each return of the wish she had uttered deepened her regret, for in a superstitious way she feared that her wish might bring the officers into that part of the country, and Amos would indeed be in danger.

But Marth kept herself busy all the while, trying to drive out of her mind the scene and her words under the branches of the old beech.

At dusk she milked the cows, then went to the spring for a pail of water. As she stood and began slowly to dip the water from the rocky basin with a long handled gourd her quick ear caught the sound of hoof beats against the stones, and she turned her head and peered through the woods to the right of her. Just across a shallow ravine a trail led around the side of the mountain, and on this trail Marth's eyes could now see three shadowy horses and riders, and there was a gleam of polished metal which told the girl that each rider had a gun strapped to his back.

For a moment Marth's heart stood still. She knew she was gazing upon the dreaded revenue officers, and her thoughts flew to Amos, more than three miles away down the ravine, where he would soon be at work in the distillery.

The girl sat motionless until the riders had passed a bowlder which protruded from the hillside. Then she seized her pail and ran up the trail to the cabin. There was but one thought in her head. Amos must be warned and saved at any cost. Saddling a small mule which she led from the stable, she leaped upon his back, dragged a shotgun up after her and rested it upon the animal's neck. Then she set off along a trail which diverged from that taken by the officers.

The mule was soon urged into a trot, and this pace he was forced to keep up down the rugged, water worn trail through the darkness of the deep woods. Marth sat like a statue on the animal's back, with her ears strained to catch the least sound and her eyes wide open for any sign of the officers. The murkiness of the woods seemed to hold no terrors for her. She was thinking of the unrighteous wish she had uttered to Amos.

At last she reached a high rock overlooking a bluff, and she stopped and listened intently. Then, slipping down from the saddle, she crept into a laurel thicket on one side of the rock and after a few minutes came out in the glare of a furnace fire. She was at the doorway of Amos Underwood's stillhouse. Springing through the opening, she called his name. Amos turned quickly, and his hand grasped the butt of a revolver, but when he saw Marth he allowed his chin to drop to his breast, and his hand fell limply to his side.

"Have ye brought 'em, Marth?" he asked.

"No, Amos, but they're comin', an' I've come all the way here to warn ye so's ye could save yerself. I'm sorry for what I said, though I didn't reckon I'd ever own it."

"Marth, I—I reckon, then, ye do love me some, though ye did start to carve"—

"Amos, jest plain Amos, on that tree. I reckon A stands for Amos, don't it, crazy?"

"Marth, I've been a gum fool! But I'm powerful happy right now."

He extended his arms toward Marth, but the girl backed away.

"No time for that, Amos. Don't ye hear them hoof beats?"

The moonshiner caught the girl's hand, and together they sprang into the laurel. Five minutes later they stood on the rock above the stillhouse and listened to the work of destruction that was being carried on by the raiders' axes.

"Well, ye're safe anyhow, Amos," whispered Marth, and Amos, catching her in his arms, tousled her hair with his chin.

The Beverage of Paraguay.

Mate, the national beverage of Paraguay, is brewed from the dried leaves of the ilex and does not intoxicate. Mate can be drunk hot or cold, it can be taken with cream and sugar, like tea or coffee, and it can be used "straight," which seems by far the best way of drinking it. Plain mate is quite bitter, and, like beer, it is an acquired taste. The first sip gives a distinctly bitter taste, and the drinker sets down his glass with a wry face. Presently, as soon as the bitter effect wears off, the imbiber has a pleasant recollection of the sensation. By this time the powerful stimulating property of the drink has begun to work and the drinker feels like taking another sip. Mate makes the user of it "feel good," makes him look with a brighter eye on the dark side of life, makes him forget his troubles for the moment, and, best of all, unlike beer, it makes him feel like working or doing something with his brain or his hands instead of loafing or gossiping.

Chemists who have carefully analyzed mate say that it is perfectly harmless. It has only the smallest percentage of caffeine and volatile oils, and it never leaves a bad after effect. Even when the drinker has a disordered stomach or bad nerves the consumption of mate is not followed by unpleasant feelings.

Geographical Taffy.

"What town is this?" asked the eminent statesman, who was making a political tour of the provinces.

"Ionia," they told him.

The eminent statesman stepped out to the rear platform of the gorgeous private car in which he was traveling.

"My countrymen," he said impressively to the cheering throng at the station, "your beautiful and thriving young city has a rare distinction. Independently of its commerce and manufactures, independently of its charming location, independently, I may add, of the stalwart men and fair women who inhabit it, so many of whom I see before me, not forgetting these bright and winsome young children who are also here, the hope and mainstay of the republic—independently, I say, of all these, your lovely city"—

Here he became truly eloquent. His eyes flashed, his voice rang out in clarion tones, and he shook his clinched fist at the zenith.

—"has the rare distinction of bearing a name that has only five letters and yet has four syllables!"

The applause as the train moved away was simply deafening.—Chicago Tribune.

HUMOR

DETECTING THE CULPRIT.

How the Conductor Found Out Who the Guilty One Was.

Three times the conductor went through the car calling for fares. When he returned to the platform the third time he appeared to distrust his qualifications for a conductor.

"There is one woman in there," he said, "who hasn't paid her fare, but I can't for the life of me make out which one it is."

"Why don't you ask?" suggested the man who stood with his back to the rear window. "Just go through the car and tackle each one individually and say, 'Madam, have you paid your fare?'"

The conductor promptly vetoed that plan. "Do you want me to lose my job?" he asked. "That would be the result. Every last one of them would get hopping mad, and I would get money from nobody."

"Then you will have to use tact," pursued the man at the window. "There are various ways whereby you can spot a fare jumper. I'm not a conductor, but I know that much. I have seen my wife do it lots of times, and I have come to know the signs pretty well. When she is up to a trick of that kind she gets so nervous that it makes you feel creepy to watch her. She tucks her feet back under her skirts, reads the advertisements and the newspapers of her neighbors and holds both hands over her pocketbook in a protecting way as if afraid it would get loose. My observation has been that most women act the same way. If I were you I would just take another look at them, and if you find one going through all those contortions you may feel pretty sure she is the sinner you are after!"

Being thus enlightened, the conductor made another tour in search of fares. When he returned his broad face was widened still further by a triumphant grin.

"Your suggestion worked all right," he said. "I found her, and I guess it is up to you to settle. She has owned up, but she refuses to pay. She says it isn't her place to pay when you are along."

The man at the window failed to appreciate the situation.

"What have I got to do with it?" he asked.

"A good deal, evidently," was the reply. "She says you're her husband. She noticed you standing here, she says, when she first came into the car. She came in, it seems, the front way."

The man at the window looked cautiously into the car.

"Here," he said, "is your nickel."—New York Times.

An Unfortunate Remark.

If a certain prominent physician ever writes his autobiography the following incident will undoubtedly be omitted:

Not long ago the physician in question was called to a boarding house to attend a man very ill with pneumonia. The man died. The keeper of the boarding house, a woman, was very much distressed, the man having been the first boarder to die under her roof.

"It's so unfortunate that he should have died," said she with self interested sympathy. "I do hate to have a funeral here."

"It won't be necessary," said the doctor consolingly. "The funeral can be at the undertaker's."

"But I don't even know an undertaker," said the unnerved woman.

"I do," said the doctor. "Just around the corner is a good one, to whom I send all my patients."

"All?" gasped the landlady, and the doctor wondered why she turned pale.—Philadelphia Ledger.

COSSACKS MURDERING WOMEN.

A telegram was received at the imperial palace at Seoul, stating that several hundred Cossacks on Sunday plundered the small north Corean town of Kang Kae and seized all the grain, hay and provisions they could find, and murdered a number of women. The local Corean soldiery exchanged shots with the marauders, who then retired. Several Coreans were wounded.

RUSSIANS AGAIN DEFEATED.

The correspondent of the New York World at Shanghai cables : It is reported here that large bodies of Russian and Japanese troops met about one hundred miles from Vladivostock, and that the Russians were defeated.

EXTENSIVE DEFENCE WORKS.

Extensive earthworks are being thrown up nine miles south of Haicheng, on the line from New Chwang to Liao Tung. Soon there will be an unbroken line of defence from Kaiping on the Liao Tung Gulf to southeast of New Chwang. Several thousand Manchurians have been commandeered by the Russian military authorities, and are working night and day on defences under the supervision of the Russian officers.

SMOTHERED WHILE ASLEEP

Mr. and Mrs. P. Mullen Asphyxiated in Their Home in Winnipeg.

When the fire brigade broke into 64 Carlton Street, Winnipeg, shortly after midnight an Tuesday last, they discovered Mr. and Mrs. Patrick Mullen in bed, asphyxiated. Mr. Mullen was a veteran motorman who had been in the employ of the Winnipeg Electric Street Railway Company over since the first cars appeared on the city's thoroughfares. He and his wife lived in a little, unpretentious cabin beside the residence of H. M. Howell, K.C., on Carlton Street, between Broadway and Assiniboine Avenue.

When the fire brigade, responding to an alarm, arrived on the scene the little cabin was filled with smoke, which forced its way through every crevice, forming a dark, gloomy pall about what a few hours before had been the domicile of a happy old couple. Even as the firemen broke into the place the mysterious hand of death was there. Hurriedly the lanterns moved about the interior in the hands of firemen who knew what was there, and then the two still and silent forms were taken out and carried to the residence of John McKechnie, across the road.

Mrs. Mullen was dead when found, while Mr. Mullen lived but a very few minutes afterwards. Dr. Macarthur was called, but the unfortunate couple were beyond help.

Patrick Mullen came to Winnipeg in 1881 with his wife, from Ireland. On his arrival he entered the employ of H. M. Howell, K.C., as coachman. He was a well known figure on the street cars, and for years ran on the Portage Avenue line. Lately he had been running on the western trip to St. James. For years he and John Carter, conductor, ran on the same car, and both are well known to the general public by reason of their genial manner and their always being together.

The fire started from an overheated stove, and very little damage was done to the house. The blaze was just sufficient to cause enough smoke to do the deadly work. There was no sign of a struggle, and the victims must have gone quietly to death from a deep sleep.

Diver's Discovery in St. Clair.

While diving for the body of Joseph Webb, of Courtright, Ont., in the St. Clair river a week ago, Diver Reed, of Sarnia, found a sunken schooner with hatches all securely fastened down. He also found a wagonload of brick and the skeletons of a team of horses which were drowned in crossing the ice two years ago. The wreck of the schooner will be further examined.

BOTH PORTS ATTACKED

Two Strong Fleets Mustered in Vicinity of Port Arthur and Vladivostock.

Vladivostock, March 7.—Last night passed quietly; the inhabitants and troops are in unusually high spirits. A strict search is being made through the town for Japanese. The police have posted placards on the walls, offering rewards for information as to the whereabouts of Japanese, and threatening with trial by court-martial any person found guilty of concealing them.

St. Petersburg, March 7.—A special meeting of the council of ministers was called suddenly in the winter palace last night to consider measures to protect Vladivostock, which was bombarded by the Japanese fleet yesterday.

Rome, March 7.—That the Japanese fleet of five battleships and two cruisers, which bombarded Vladivostock on Sunday, had previously been engaged in convoying a fleet of transports laden with thousands of Japanese troops, which were landed on the islands on two sides of Vladivostock, is the news contained in a dispatch from the correspondent of the Agens Libera at Chemulpo, Corea, and received here to-day.

The troops were landed mainly on the island of Askold, which is only 25 miles from the Vladivostock side of the harbor. Other transports under protection of the fleet disembarked troops on the small islet to the southeast and directly opposite Vladivostock.

The Japanese squadron in the Yellow Sea, a Chemulpo dispatch adds, still remains before Port Arthur, a constant menace to that stronghold. Three battleships in this squadron, with the cruisers Kasqga and Niegin, have been sent to Vladivostock to reinforce the fleet there. The correspondent says it is believed that a combined attack is to be made on Port Arthur to-day.

The dispatch adds that the Kasuga and the Nichin, the two cruisers which were purchased by Japan from the Argentine republic, and which recently completed the long journey from Italy to the far east, took part in yesterday's bombardment.

Wonderful Find in The Yukon.

The complete form of a mastodon has been discovered at Hillside, on Quartz Creek, according to a dispatch received by the Seattle Post-Intelligencer from Dawson, Yukon Territory. It was imbedded 38 feet in the earth when found, and the use of a steam thawing plant was found necessary to unearth the immense animal. The hair and skin of the beast are in a perfect state of preservation although the flesh is somewhat decomposed, and the big tusks which remain fastened to the skull are in good condition. It is estimated that the skeleton is worth about $50,000, as there are but one or two of them in existence in as good a condition as this. The mastodon was discovered buried in an old channel well in the zone of almost perpetual frost, which accounts for its excellent preservation.

JAPANESE SHELL VLADIVOSTOK

Town is Being Rapidly Evacuated by Muscovites.

JAPAN'S SURPRISES.

Five Battleships and Two Cruisers Bombarded the Siberian Fortress for 55 Minutes on Sunday—Russians Report No Serious Damage.

A dispatch from Vladivostock, dated March 6th, says :—A fleet of five Japanese battleships and two cruisers appeared off this place at 1.25 o'clock this afternoon and bombarded the town and shore batteries for 55 minutes.

The fleet approached from the direction of Askold Island at the east Ussuri Bay and about 32 miles southeast of Vladivostock. They formed in line of battle but did not approach closer than five and one-third miles. They directed their fire against the shore batteries and the town, but no damage resulted, as most of the two hundred lyddite shells failed to burst.

The Russian batteries, commanded by Generals Veronetz and Artemonoff, did not reply, awaiting a closer approach of the enemy. The Japanese fire ceased at 2.20 p.m., and the enemy retired in the direction of Askold Island. Simultaneously two torpedo boat destroyers approached near Askold Island and two more near Cape Maidol. The Japanese ships were covered with ice.

The attack resulted in no loss to the Russians, but cost the enemy 200,000 roubles ($100,000) in ammunition. Most of the projectiles were six and a half inch shells.

The population of Vladivostock was warned this morning of the presence on the horizon of a hostile fleet and of the prospects of an attack during the day, but it remained tranquil.

MOVING PROPERTY AT NEW CHWANG.

A Tien Tsin dispatch, dated March 6th, says :—The Russian intentions at New Chwang are impossible to divine. They are sending off all movable property and railway material, and are promising to pull up the branch line to Tasi Chow, where they are preparing entrenchments.

Five thousand new soldiers arrived at Yinkow to-day. The soldiers themselves say they will leave tomorrow, but others will take their places.

Nangolin and other stations are now defended by Maxim guns and entrenchments, but in many places near no soldiers are visible.

The rumor of a heavy bombardment of Port Arthur was exaggerated The Japanese fire was ineffective. On Friday Cossacks captured a transport train of 180 horses, with baggage, south of Kala.

Reduction of Ten Per Cent in Wages Under Consideration of Men.

The employees of the Massey-Harris Co. are restless, and unless the reduction of 10 per cent. in wages made last December is cancelled they threaten to quit work. The men in the paint shop and machine shop departments at Toronto have already made a formal request on the management, saying they can command better wages elsewhere.

Kingston Penitentiary Experiences a Revolt of Lunatics Which is Suppressed.

A revolt broke out on Sunday last in the asylum department of the Kingston penetentiary. The plan was to overpower the three keepers on duty, secure their uniforms, firearms and keys, and make a dash for liberty out of the western gate. The attempt, however, was frustrated. It might have been successful had assistance not been at hand when the guards on duty called for help. A hot time was experienced in subduing the rebellious inmates, and in the mix-up several of them were severely handled. It was one of the most strenuous attempts to gain liberty ever made within the walls.

Patti.s Unpaid Bills.

While Mme. Adelina Patti was eqtertaining three thousand people with her songs, her treasurer was wrestling with the claims, secured by garnishee suits, of half a dozen creditors. Constables followed one another in quick succession to the box office. The Free Press Printing Company, of Detroit, with a claim of $275, was first. Then came the Sentinel Printing Company, of Indianapolis, which wanted $365.75. The Star Piano Co., of Richmond, also figures in the suits, which will aggregate, it is said, over $1,000 ; the claims of the publishing houses are for advertising bills and poster printing. Because performers' names were misspelled on the posters, Patti's treasurer says their reputations were injured, and he will contest the claims.

SPIRITUAL TELEPATHY

SOULS ARE ENERGIZED AND ELEVATED BY DIVINE INFLUENCE.

PSYCHOLOGICAL PHENOMENA

Spiritual Phenomena Has Its Facts As Has the Material World—Gospel Telepathy a Subtle, Mysterious Influence Which Should Induce All Good Men and Women to Think None But Good Thoughts.

Entered according to Act of Parliament of Canada, in the year 1904, by William Baily, of Toronto, at the Dep't of Arriculture, Ottawa.

Los Angeles Cal., March 6.—In this sermon the preacher discusses the phychological phenomena of mind influencing mind and shows how the soul may be elevated and energized by divine influence. The text is Acts x., 11, "And he saw heaven opened and a certain vessel descending."

Theory is often little more than the fine art of guessing. It is sometimes the way of concealing the fact that you do not know a thing, by using scientific language.

What is specific gravity? "That is the physical law," you answer, "which Isaac Newton discovered. Sitting one day under an overarching tree branch in his orchard, he felt a puff of wind upon his cheek. The overhanging branch swayed, and a fall pippin, like a lump of gold, dropped into his lap. Then the English sage began to wonder why that apple came down to earth instead of flying away, as though it had the wings of a bird, toward the stars. As a result of these ponderings Newton generalized all the causes of cohesion and gravitation which bind this earth into a compact mass and called them "specific gravity." But, my friend, with your learned answer you have not explained to me anything. In reference to the laws of physical cohesion you have only given to me two big words to express what I did not know before and what I do not know now.

As in the material world, so in the mental and spiritual world there are facts and phenomena which we know to be certainly true, though we cannot tell the "whys" and the "wherefores" nor the causes which produced these results. For instance, we are nearly all ready to grant the power of human telepathy, or the influence of one human mind upon another human mind even at a distance. Sitting in a public meeting some night you exercise the power of will upon a person, and soon he will turn round and look at you, although that person could give no rational reason why he turned and looked. Indeed, so powerful sometimes is this influence of one human mind over another that many students of criminology have come to the belief that some murderers who wield the dagger or aim the pistol may be merely the helpless and pliant instruments of unknown criminals who have impelled them to commit their murderous deeds. Mesmerism, hypnotism, bewitchery, enchantment, are merely long names defining this mysterious power, which almost everywhere in the intellectual world is beginning to be recognized, and men are asking whether it may not sometimes dethrone the supremacy of the individual will.

As one human mind has an influence over another human mind, we also know that there is a spiritual telepathy, a subtle, mysterious influence which the other world exerts upon our own. Visional messages as direct and unmistakable as that which came to Peter upon the housetop of Simon's house in Joppa may also come to us. We may be unable to explain how the divine manifestations come to the human mind. God will speak to us now if we will only let him, as surely as he spoke in many cases to his servants of old. If we look to God continually for guidance, to us, too, shall the promise be fulfilled, "Thine ears shall hear a word behind thee saying, This is the way; walk ye in it." The purpose of this sermon is not to analyze the causes of divine telepathy so much as to suggest ways in which God may be speaking to his children in these days.

Gospel telepathy, in the first place, comes to God's children as it did to Peter upon Simon's house-top, in broad daylight. By that I do not mean that it necessarily comes to us as it did to Peter at the sixth hour or when the sun is highest in the meridian, but I do mean this : When God speaks to man he speaks to him when he is rational, when he is wide awake, when his senses are on the alert, not when he is cooped up in some dark, deceitful retreat of a spiritualistic medium or when he is tossing about on his couch at midnight in uneasy slumber as the result of his digestive organs having been overloaded. There is a vision of the spirit and a vision of the flesh. There is a vision which comes from God and one that is, like the nightmare, the product of our own brain under the disturbance of physical or mental conditions. There must be careful discrimination lest we accept foolish fancies and mischevous impulses as the voice of God. That which is born of the flesh is flesh, and that which is born of the spirit is spirit.

I speak very emphatically on this subject. As Charles Dickens had his "Bleak House," with its Ghost's walk, and Nathaniel Hawthorne his "House of the Seven Gables," peopled with the evil spirits of past generations, unless we beware we may have the temples of our minds filled with the weirdest fantasies, created entirely by our own unregulated imagination or by evil associations and not by the vision of God. What right has any man to apply to himself the Ninety-first Psalm of David, as did a man some time ago in one of our eastern cities? He pondered over these verses day in and day out: "For he shall give his angels charge over thee to keep thee in all thy ways. They shall bear thee up in their hands, lest thou dash thy foot against a stone." Then, in order to demonstrate his belief in this saying, that man jumped from the top of a four storey building and broke nearly every bone in his body. Do you suppose a vision like that came from God or from the devil? What right has a man when in doubt about any matter to go to a fortune teller or to a sorcerer or a professor of divination and to regard the voice of a professional charlatan as the voice of God?

There is a vision sent by God. There is also a Satanic telepathy. Christ, bone of our bone and flesh of our flesh, was tempted by the visions of sin as well as we. In the fourth chapter of Luke we read that Satan took Jesus up to a high mountain and in vision showed unto him all the kingdoms of the world and said: "All this power will I give thee and the glory of them, for that is delivered unto me, and to whomsoever I will, I will give it. If thou, therefore, will worship me all shall be thine." Then Satan took Jesus to the pinnacle of the temple and asked him to cast himself down from thence, to prove that he was the Son of God. But Jesus, instead of obeying the Satanic vision, turned unto the devil and answered, "It is written, thou shalt not tempt the Lord, thy God." If being so pure and holy as our Lord was approached by temptation and assailed by a tempter who based his wicked suggestions on passages of Scripture, how careful should we be when a vision comes to us, as it came to Peter on the house-top, to make sure that the vision is heaven sent for our guidance and not a temptation from the enemy sent to our own destruction.

How to explain this manifestation I know not. I would give you the simple facts and let you judge for yourself. We were en route from Beirut to Athens by way of Smyrna. It was about 3 o'clock in the morning. I was awakened by my companion sobbing in his berth. "What is the matter, Trouby?" I asked. "Oh," he answered, "something has happened at my sister's home. I had a strange vision about it. I was not asleep, but this vision has come upon me as an overwhelming reality." "Nonsense, man!" I answered. "You are not a fanatic, are you? You were asleep and had a bad dream; that is all." I did not believe in God's visions then as I do now. My friend said nothing, but that vision made such an impression upon him that he took note of the time and the latitude and the longitude we were then in. From Athens we went directly home. So overpowering was his conviction of the reality of that vision that instead of going at once to his Philadelphia home he stopped first at a friend's residence not far from where he lived. "How are the folks?" said he. The friend answered: "What! Did you not receive any message lately? Why, your sister lost both her twin boys in one day. They both died of diphtheria within an hour of each other." My friend asked the time. They died about the same time the wonderful vision came to him in the middle of the Mediterranean Sea. I ask you not to give a human interpretation of that manifestation. You cannot. I cannot. From a human standpoint was not that vision very strange? Can you interpret it from any supernatural causation?

But why be surprised at the incident I have related? You have heard of many similar occurrences. You had a divine vision in your own life when the undertaker rudely broke into your home. When the doctor said she was dead, at first you were almost broken hearted. You were like a madman. You paced up and down the room saying: "Oh, God, how can I get along without her? Oh, my God, my God! What shall I do?" Hardly had you uttered that agonizing prayer when a strange peace came into your soul. She seemed to come back to you. She seemed to put her arms about your neck and to say with her old terms of endearment: "Husband, papa, sweetheart, son, I am all right. Christ has merely taken me away for a little while. I cannot come to you, but you shall come to me." Was it a dream? Was that message merely a Satanic mockery or was it a divine vision coming to you as one came to Peter on Simon's housetop? When you saw her joy and happiness was it not the same kind of a divine vision as that which came to St. John when he cried out in Apocalypse: "Who are these which are arrayed in white robes, and whence came they? These are they which came out of great tribulation and have washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb."

The divine telepathy often comes as a direct command for practical gospel work. As Peter on Simon's house top by his vision knew that Christ was sending him forth to carry the gospel to all the world, whether Jew or Gentile, so by a divine vision we may know that God wants us to go forth to save this or that man and do this or that work. We know it just the same as we know what our earthly employer wants us to do when he gives us a bundle of checks and tells us to go and deposit them in the bank. By divine telepathy we knew what God wants us to do. God is bidding you to go forth to spiritually save this man and that man, to do this gospel work and that gospel work. Within you to-day you may hear the call. With your wide open eyes in broad daylight you may see the divine vision.

This gospel call for practical work is the more impressive and immanent because God's visions are never haphazard; they are never purposeless or meaningless dreams. They always have a very practical interpretation. When Peter looked off from Simon's house top he saw a great sheet let down from the heavens, filled with "all manner of four footed beasts of the earth, and wild beasts, and creeping things, and fowls of the air." That vision was a symbol of the fact that Jesus died to save the Gentile as well as the Jew, the despised barbarian as well as the Jewish high priest, the uncircumcised as well as the circumcised. Hardly had the vision ended when Peter heard a loud rapping at the lower gate. "Who is there? Who is there?" was asked. "I am a messenger from Cornelius," is the answer. "I am not a Jew, but a Gentile, sent by a holy angel to thee. Wilt thou come and tell him about Jesus Christ?" The vision and the knock at the door were one summons. Then it was that Peter knew his vision was divine and that he was called to a duty which he might have shrunk from if he had not seen the preparatory vision. No longer was the offer of salvation to be made to the Jews only; no longer were the messengers of Christ to regard the Gentiles as common or unclean. So much the vision had taught him, and so Peter went with the men and preached Christ to the Gentile centurion, and he found that the gospel was the power of God unto salvation to the Gentile as well as to the Jew.

God's visions are never haphazard incongruities. When the good Ananias one day in the city of Damascus had the command in a vision that he should place the hands of holy ordination upon the bitterest enemy of the Christian disciples he at first doubted the divine authenticity of the vision. Ananias looked up at first into the heavens and in surprise said: "Lord, I have heard by many of this man, how much evil he hath done to the saints at Jerusalem. Not him! Not Saul! I cannot ordain Saul of Tarsus." But hardly had the good Ananias entered the house to which God had directed him when they brought him a staggering, stumbling blind man. It was Saul! It was the arch enemy Saul! Then Ananias knew that his vision was divine. So, O man and woman, the divine vision comes to you for practical gospel work. You feel it. You know it. Why? Because while I speak there arises before your mind some one man, some one woman, some one child, you can save. You are like Peter standing upon the house top. You are listening to the messenger of Cornelius calling you to carry the news of salvation to some waiting soul.

But there is still another fact about God's visions which it would be well for us to dwell upon. The divine telepathy comes to the despised man's home as frequently as it does to the ruler's palace. Who was Peter's host at the house where he had this divine vision? He was Simon the tanner. He was in all probability the most despised man in all the coast capital at that time. Among the Jews the dealer in cured hides of animals was looked upon as a social outcast. The harlot, the murderer, the insurrectionist, were more respected than he. The condemned criminal might be pardoned of his crimes even though he was the thief who waylaid the poor man on the road to Jericho, but the tanner's calling was never forgiven. As men shrank from contact with the leper, whose touch might communicate his loathsome disease to the healthy person, so the Jew shrank from contact with the tanner, whose presence in a home brought ceremonial contamination. The door of hospitality was always slammed shut in the face of the tanner.

By the old Jewish law, if a husband died without any children, his brother was compelled to marry the widow. But a widow was not compelled to marry that brother if he was a tanner. Not even the Jewish law would compel a woman to suffer such an ignominy. If a man married a woman without telling her he was a tanner, she could have the matrimonial bonds instantly annulled, as soon as the deception was found out. Of course, there had to be tanners among the Jews, as there must be hangmen for this present generation; yet, so bitterly were the tanners despised in ancient times that by the eastern law no tanner was allowed to build his tannery nearer to the outskirts of a town than fifty cubits. It was to this despised home that the heavenly vision came, opening the gate of the Christian church to the Gentile nations. Your home, O man, O woman, may be humble; it may be located in what the aristocratic people call the slums; it may even have been associated with the vicious pollution of society; but even there the voice from the heavenly mansions may be heard. "I came not," said the compassionate Saviour, "to call the righteous, but sinners, to repentance." You may be a social outcast, as much shunned as Simon the tanner, but in your house, too, you may hear a voice saying, "Come, now, and let us reason together; though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be white as snow; though they be red like crimson, they shall be as wool."

One more thought is suggested by Peter's experience. This vision of the sheet coming down from the heavens filled with all manner of four footed beasts and creeping things and fowls of the air came to Peter when he was comparatively a young man. It came to him not only as a message of salvation, but also as a command, especially for young men and women, to go to work. He was then a young man in the thirties. My young friends, note the importance of this fact. It means that God is appealing to the young and the physically stalwart to consecrate our energy and vigor to his service.

"I never hear my pastor preach," said a young girl, "but I am always filled with the desire to say, 'Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?' " So I never read an account of the Joppa vision, but I always feel this a message especially for me and for the young people to whom I speak to do something. Oh, young men and young women, will you not be roused, as Peter was aroused, with the thought that you may become gospel messengers to a sinful world? Will you not catch an inspiration for glorious Christian work by standing upon the house top of Simon the tanner?

SUPPLY AND DEMAND.

The March number of the British Columbia Mining Record contains the following editorial comment on the coal question of South East Kootenay.

"It has been customary to make an outcry against encouraging the export of coal and coke from the Crows Nest collieries, but now that they are equal to producing a larger quantity than the home market can possibly take, the alternative of restricting production is to secure a market south of the international boundary. It should be evident that the chief hope of any considerable further development of the immense coal resources of the south-eastern portion of the Province lies in the opening up of dependable markets across the line for large quantities of coal and coke.

In this connection a correspondent asks whether under the circumstances it would not be well to look into the situation as regards coal lands still unalienated? Apart from the advanced position reached by the Crow's Nest Pass Coal Company in regard to development and equipment of its collieriers and the transportation facilities it now has to enable it to market its products, there is the fact that already so many coal enterprises have been launched that few men with capital are inclined to put money into more similar ventures in southeast Kootenay or southwest Alberta. The Canadian Pacific Railway Company has for some time past had men at work opening up coal mines in the Crow's Nest Region; the Canadian-American company has been operating a colliery at Frank for several years; the West Canadian Collieries Company has lately consolidated several groups of coal lands, two at least of which have been shipping coal; the International Company is opening up mines and erecting coke ovens, primarily to supply the Granby Company's requirements; the North-West Coal and Coke Company lately announced that it had secured $1,500,000 of English money for the purpose of developing its coal holdings: and other ventures have been floated. It would appear that the supply of coal and coke bids fair to greatly exceed the demand for some time to come, if this be so where is the advantage to the province in encouraging speculation in coal lands with no reasonable prospect of their being made productive for years. All through some of the mining sections of the province there are mineral lands lying unworked in most cases held by men who either have no money or no inclination to work them themselves or to make anything like reasonable terms with others disposed to do so. Is it not likely that a similar situation will follow the turning over to men without means or to speculators large areas of the East Kootenay coal lands? This view of the question is certainly worthy of careful consideration."

The writer of the above believes that "the coal supply bids fair to exceed the demand," therefore active organizations are not apt to develop more properties, he discourages the granting of coal lands to speculators who will hold them until markets are developed, then, in his opinion, there is only one other course open to the government,—maintain the present reserve. The province collects a revenue of $100 per year from every license, which is sufficient to induce the holder to make his property revenue-producing as early as possible. The holder speculates but the government's share is sure. It is reassuring to know, however, that the holders of coal licenses in South East Kootenay do not believe that the supply will ever exceed the demand. The markets of the western states are only beginning to look towards the Crow's Nest for their fuel supplies and the relative geographical position of these coal areas to the American west is such that the day will soon come when it will no longer be profitable to send Pennsylvania coal and coke across the continent.

EDITORIAL NOTES

AGAIN Fernie has had a rare opportunity of measuring its fire protection system in an inexpensive way, and again the futility of that system to contend against a really serious conflagration or against conditions that are not entirely favorable has been demonstrated in a convincing manner. Various reasons may be given for the length of time consumed in extinguishing the little blaze on Sunday morning but the whole thing boiled down resolves itself into the old subject of incorporation. IF the doors had been kept free of snow, IF provision had been made for the hauling of the engine, IF a regular fire alarm system had been installed and IF various other things had been attended to the system would be in a better shape to face the fire dangers of the town. These matters to be carried out require funds and some form of local government to control them. Fernie has done nobly in building up its present fire protection, but the custom of "passing the hat" will no longer meet the growing requirements.

At the present the fire hall though completed is still unoccupied by the brigade for the mere reason that the funds are exhausted and will not allow for the purchase of furniture for the sleeping rooms. Not a very heavy expenditure perhaps, and one which a council meeting would dispose of in short order, but sufficient to retard the efficiency of the brigade incalculatably. Not until the fire protection is systematically controlled by a representative council, will the protection to the town approach anything like adequacy.

A CONSTANT DRAIN.

FROM the postmaster general's report for the year ending June 30 1903 is gathered the following interesting table showing the amounts of money received and paid out at many of the principal post offices of the province :—

Ladysmith	66,878 90	13,045 40
Total	$2,518,225 19	$1,496,520 84

The total figures show that the amount of orders issued exceeded the amount of those paid out by 68 per cent. which fact goes to prove that the people of B. C. are building up other provinces and other countries at the expense of their own. But if the total figures show a noticable comparison how alarming are those figures credited to Fernie!

The sum of $136,189.30 was sent from Fernie through the post office and only $18,947.97 was paid out for orders received here. Over sixty times as much was sent from the town as was received from outside places. The post office money order system is only one of three popular methods of transmitting money. It is fair to assume that the amounts transmitted through the express companies and the banks are proportionate with those quoted. The only conclusion is that an enormous amount of money is sent out of the town annualy, and that a comparatively small amount is sent to the town. The natural query is where and to whom is the money sent? One answer comes readily enough as we

Would Fight a Duel

Spoldo Caravetta was bound over in the police court on Wednesday to keep the peace towards Phillip Carosella. There existed between the men some trouble which was augmented by the tale-bearing of their respective friends. Finally Caravetta issued a challenge to fight a duel, allowing the challenged the privilege of choosing the weapons. When the old man learned that such a method of settling private grievances was not tolerated in this country he readily agreed to desist.

There are two reasons for the shortage of cars at Morrissey, which has existed to a greater or less extent throughout the winter, and which necessarily curtails the output of the mines in consequence. The better known reason is the blockades on the tracks which tie up transportation. The other reason is that the Great Northern has a considerable supply of coal on hand, owing to a contract entered into with another Coal Company some time ago. This contract expires at the end of March, and after that date the Great Northern will take all the coal that the Morrissey Mines can produce.

THREE DAYS' BOMBARDMENT

Japan has Landed 100,000 Men at Chemulpo

FRANCE AND TROUBLE

The Japanese Fleet Showered Shot and Shell on Russia's Far Eastern Stronghold, Port Arthur, For Three Days.

Port Arthur has been bombarded by Japanese ships at intervals for three days, Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, first at fifteen kilometres distance from the forts and then at seven.

RAINED SHOT AND SHELL.

Admiral Sckyrdloff, commander-in-chief of the Russian Black Sea fleet, has received confirmation of the statements that the entrance to Port Artour has been blocked to the extent of imprisoning the Russian battleships. Therefore, while the Japanese invest the outer roads, the Russian cruisers and torpedo boats have no hope of success should they attempt a sortie.

FRANCE MAY CAUSE TROUBLE.

The Japanese minister at Seoul has demanded that the Corean foreign office grant a concession for the Seoul-Wiju railway to the Japanese in accordance with article 4 of the Japanese-Corean protocol. Japan is now ready to start construction immediately. Fifteen miles of this railway have already been completed by the Corean government with French engineers, but no rails, locomotives or cars have been purchased yet,

The proposed arrangement may possibly create an issue between the Corean and French governments, as a concession was originally granted in 1896 to French citizens, who, failing to arrange the financing of the road, allowed the concession to lapse in 1899. Under the agreement the railway was to built only by the Corean government, under French engineers, with French materials.

The steamer Isdomeyeus has arrived at Chemulpo with thousands of tons of materials for the Seoul-Fusan railway, the construction of which is being rapidly pushed forward by the Japanese government.

The Japanese hospital ship Kosai has arrived at Chemulpo, with a twelve-foot red cross painted, amid cheers.

JAPAN LANDED 100,000 MEN.

According to information received at Vladivostock, via St. Petersburg, forty Japanese transports, escorted by the entire Japanese fleet, have been landing troops in Corea at Fusan and Chemulpo. It is estimated that fully 100,000 men have disembarked, and it is supposed that an immediate advance into North Corea is contemplated.

Mr. Allen, the United States minister, according to dispatches from several independent sources, has decided to send United States marines from Seoul into the very heart of the zone of military operations in northmines owned by American citizens. ern Corea, in order to protect some The state department is astounded at the proposed action of the minister, and discredits the report. Such an invasion would be unprecedented, and would almost result in a clash with one or both of the opposing powers.

The Japanese minister to Berlin is authority for the statement that Japanese soldiers have scored several successes in Corea. Practically the only news that passes the Japanese censor is that sent by diplomatic representatives.

Public opinion in Russia towards Americans is becoming less hostile.

Coal and stores are reaching Vladivostock, despite the watchfulness of Japan's navy. The four Russian cruisers are still in port.

Little news is obtainable concerning operations on land or sea. The very strict censorship indicates that important movements are under way.

DEAD IN A CABIN

Body of Lonely Alameda Settler Found by J. Dupree.

Word was conceyed to Alameda on Friday morning by J. Dupree that Silas Staunette was found dead in his cabin about seven miles northwest of that town.

The coroner was then summoned, and went to the man's home to investigate the affair. Upon making an examination he reported that from all appearances the deceased had been dead two weeks, and had died fron natural causes, and decided that an inquest was unnecessary.

He appears to be an Englishman of about 55 years of age, and came to this country about four years ago. Arrangements are being made for interment and also for communicating with the relatives of the deceased, who are reported to be in Uxbridge and Woking, England.

ACCIDENT NEAR CHAPLEAN

One Man Reported Killed and Several Injured in Accident.

About 2 o'clock on Friday morning No. 2 express left the track at Forks station, about 100 miles east of Chapleau. One person, a man named McGowen, who got on at Biscotasing, was reported killed, and six people more or less injured. It is also reported that a colonist car was wrecked or burned. None of the passengers in the Pullman coaches were hurt.

HOW CANADA IS DAMAGED

English Text Books and Their Fool Information on The Broad Dominion.

The possibilities of further education of the British people to a true conception of the Canadian west, or rather of Canada as a whole, is to be found in the leading editorial of the Canadian Gazette, London, England, a copy of which has arrived in the mails. "Blundering Geographies" is the title of the editorial, and after speaking of the "steps in progress to ensure a more faithful appreciation of Canada and Canadian resources in British schools,' the Gazette proceeds to quote the innocent geographers as follows : "In unconscious humor these text books abound. Here, for instance, is a pretty little family touch : 'The farmers' wives and daughters make an abundance of cheeses, which find their way to America and British markets.' So homely and haphazard, you see. Who would imagine from the foregoing : One of Canada's great industries, so vast and thoroughly equipped that Canada supplies more than one-half of the total cheese imports of the British Isles. A like happy innocence pervades other extracts : 'The fishing season lasts from June 1 to August 1 and the shooting season from August 1 onward until winter drives the huntsman from the woods. No talk of cities, be it noted, no Montreal and Toronto and Winnipeg and Vancouver, with their factories belching forth smoke and electric cars tearing along busy streets and suburban roads, but a happy, idyllic land, where the fisherman and hunter reign supreme and the fall of winter is their obly care."

"For sheer delight in Canada as a primitive land," says the editor, "note the following : "

In America (for the purposes of this text book America embraces Canada) railways go straight ahead in a more free and easy fashion than in our country. . . . . Engines are built with a curious funnel, wider at the top than the bottom, to let out freely the smoke of wood, which is often burned instead of coal. In winter . . . . the engine will have a machine called a snowplough on the front of it (the natural place, of course, would be at the rear of the engine), by help of which it clears the way through the snow. . . . . In summer the danger is fire. A train may push across a burning prairie, though the smoke be so thick that the passengers are almost stifled. But in a blazing forest there is the risk that a fallen trunk, or branch, may at any moment block the line or throw the train off the rails. (English engines, we imagine, take trees in a hop, skip and a jump.) Exciting stories are told of negine-drivers having to put on all steam to race the flames. (Exciting stories are also told of engine-drivers in the Highlands putting on all steam to race destrians. Sometimes . . . the rails become covered by such a multitude of worms or insects that the wheels get greasy with crushing them and will not turn."

Among the extracts which the Gazette adduces in support of the objections being raised to the inaccuracy of many of the British geographies may be noted the following, some of which have already been sent to Canada by cable dispatches :

"Many of the colonists married among the Indians, their children being the race of half-breeds so common over Canada."

"The Red Indians of Canada are now quite tamed."

"Once winter sets in the people make up their minds to be snowed up till spring."

"Manitoba is treeless."

"The Atlantic Coast is the most useful at present for several reasons. It has splendid railway communications inland by railways. It has one great drawback—most of it is frozen up in the winter."

"Ottawa, though a small town, is a suitable place for the capital of the Dominion."

"The small population of Canada and the attraction of high wages in the States have retarded manufacture." The Gazette adds : "Hardly an accurate picture of the Canada whose manufacturing establishments grew from 13,679 in 1891, to 44,650 in 1901."

"The chief States at present are Quebec, Maine and New Brunswick."

The Gazette says of the matter : "Speaking seriously, these text books are a disgrace to English compilers and English publishing houses, but we have no doubt that Lord Strathcona's intervention will result in such representations by the Education Department at Whitehall as will cause a general leveling-up of the Canadian sections of all geographies in use in English schools."

Japanese Navy is Between Vladivostock Squadron and Its Base—Japanese Expect to Reach the Yalu To morrow.

It is stated that the Japanese are between the Russian cruiser squadron and Vladivostock and are in a critical condition. A Russian land force is said to have been defeated at Anju. Japanese vessels were again sighted off Port Arthur. The Japanese are expected to come to the Yalu, where the Russians are strongly entrenched, and a battle is imminent. don Times says that a Japanese

A Tokio correspondent of the Lon- squadron took possession of Hai Wang Tao, one of the Elliott group of islands, on February 29th. They found stores and tons of coal and signalling flags there, the Russians having evacuated the island on February 23rd. The Russians continue to push southward along the coast from Possiet Bay towards Song Chin and the Vladivostock squadron apparently is covering their communication with Vladivostock.

It is believed at the Japanese legation in London that the Japanese are between the Russian cruiser squadron and Vladivostock, and there is reason to believe that the Rassian squadron is in the vicinity of Possiet Bay. Russian official dispatches do not mention this squadron, and this fact lends color to the belief that the Japanese warships have shut it out of Vladivostock. It is pointed out at the legation that, if this be true, the Russian vessels are in a critical condition.

RUSSIAN TROOPS DEFEATED.

There is excellent ground for believing that the Russian land force has been defeated with much loss on the north bank of the riker at Anju.

FIGHT IMMINENT ON THE YALU.

It is expected that Japanese troops in force will reach the left bank of the lower Yalu about March 10th. A large force of Russians is strongly entrenched now in the hills in the Antung district in Manchuria, directly across from Wiju. The position the Russians hold is close to and parallel with the river. It is like that which the Boers held on the Tugela river.

OFF TO VLADIVOSTOCK.

It is reported that part of the Japanese fleet has gone to Vladivostock and that only a few cruisers are left to watch Port Arthur. It is rumored that General Kuropatkin dislikes the prospect of long, indecisive fighting among the Corean mountains, and therefore orders the Russians to retire on the Yalu. General Stoessnel, commander of the second army corps, has been replaced as governor of Port Arthur by General Smerinkoff.

HOVERING AROUND PORT ARTHUR.

Chefoo, March 7.—It was learned yesterday at noon that six Japanese torpedo boats were sighted at the entrance to Port Arthur. The forts were signalled to prepare for an attack, and after waiting until dusk, as the Japanese had not returned, the Pobeida, the Novik, the Boyan and the Askold cruised out a short distance in the vicinity of Port Arthur, but no sight of the enemy could be obtained.

All poor non-combatants among the Russians are now being sent to Irkutsk at the expense of the government.

BRIEF CALL AT VLADIVOSTOCK.

Telegrams received from Vladivostock say that seven Japanese ships approached that port at 10 o'clock on the morning of March 7th, entered Usuri Bay at about noon, and after some manoeuvring, steamed out seaward.

SHIPS SUNK AT PORT ARTHUR.

A Paris correspondent wires that a report has been received there that the Japanese have made another attempt to blockade the entrance to Port Arthur harbor by sinking coasting ships.

MORE MASSACRES BY THE RUSSIANS.

Rome, March 8.—Agenzia Libra reports that a number of Chinese and Japanese have been massacred in the Vladivostock district. The Japanese government has entered a protest against these acts.

COREANS DEFEAT RUSSIANS.

Corean military authorities have received a telegram from the north, saying that Russian Cossacks have attacked Kingkai on the frontier, and, after a short fight, the Corean troops drove the Russians out, the latter retreating northward. While in town the Russians attacked many women, and killed several who were acting as soldiers.

MARKET REPORT.

Weekly Review of Prices Culled From The Commercial.

GRAIN AND PRODUCE.

WHEAT—Manitoba wheat has kept up with the decline in the American markets, and the Winnipeg May option has declined 10½c on the week, and shows a decline of 13½c from the highest point touched on the recent advance. Cash wheat is dull and weak, and there is no shipping or export trade worth mentioning, but the prices of the lower grades are now nearly, if not quite, down to export value. We quote : 1 northern 94½c; 2 northern 91½c; 3 northern 86½c : No. 4 wheat 75c ; feed wheat 52c; No. 2 feed 42c; spot or March delivery. May delivery is worth : 1 northern 97¼c; 2 northern 94c; 3 northern 89½c; all in store Fort William or Port Arthur.

FLOUR—The market is steady at last week's advance. We quote : Hungarian Patent $2.75 per sack of 98 lbs, delivered to the trade; Glenora Patent $2.60; and XXX $2.00. These prices are subject to the usual trade discounts.

MILL FEED—The market is unchanged. We quote;: Bran $16 per ton, in bulk, delivered to the trade; shorts $19 per ton.

GROUND FEED—Chopped feeds have advanced $1 per ton. Market steady. We quote : Oat chop $27 per ton, delivered to the trade; barley chop $21; mixed barley and oats $24; oil cake $27 per ton.

OATS—There is not much doing in oats, as receipts have fallen very low Farmers are not delivering. No. 2 white in carlots on track are worth 38c here, and feed grades 36 to 37c. Farmers' loads in the country should bring 31 to 33c, and on the street here 35 to 36c.

BARLEY—Malting grades are not offering. Feed barley has advanced 2 to 3c and cannot now be bought here for less than 40 to 43c.

FLAXSEED—Market nominal.

BUTTER — Creamery — Creamery butter is not moving in a wholesale way and the market may be described as nominal.

BUTTER—Dairy—Stocks are low, and there is not much doing. Dealers will pay good prices in the country for fresh made bricks, some naming a price of 25c. Old tub butter is bringing from 12c per pound up, delivered to the trade here.

EGGS—The market is about cleaned out. Stocks of pickled and limed are done and there are very few case eggs coming in. These are worth 30c or more delivered here, subject to candling.

POULTRY — There are practically none offering, and the market is in a nominal condition.

DRESSED MEATS—The market is firmer, owing probably to the scarcity and high cost of other lines of foodstuffs. We quote : Beef 7c per pound for city dressed; ½ to 1c less for country ;veal 9c for choicest weights; mutton 8½c; hogs 7c, delivered to the trade here. Dressed hogs are bringing 6c for choice weights at packing houses.

HIDES—Receipts are moderate and the market steady. We quote : Country frozen hides 5½c per pound, less 5 pounds tare. No. 1 city butchers' hides are worth 6c per pound; No. 2's 5c; and 3's 4c; sheepskins same price as hides.

TALLOW—No. 1 tallow is worth 3½c per pound delivered at Winnipeg; and No. 2 2½c.

SENECA ROOT—Clean, dry stock would bring 60c per pound here, and the market ranges from 55 to 60c.

LIVE STOCK.

CATTLE—The market is quiet, but firmer in sympathy with other centres. Choice beef cattle are worth 4c off cars here, and inferior grades ½ to 1c less.

SHEEP—The market is nominal, as there are none offering.

HOGS—The market is quiet and unchanged. Hogs weighing from 160 to 250 pounds are worth 5c per pound weighed off cars here; light and heavy weights ½ to 1c less.

MILCH COWS — Good cows are scarce and dear. Prices range from $35 to $55 each, according to quality.

HORSES—Ontario draft horses are bringing from $350 to $450 per team here, according to weight and quality

King Edward and the Czar of Russia have exchanged cordial notes, assuring better relations between Britsuring better relations between Brithave an army of 325,000 men in the far east by April.

The Japanese squadron threw shot and shell into Port Arthur for three days. The bombardment began at fifteen kilometres distance and then to seven. ACCIDENTAL SHOOTING

O. C. Lee, of Yorkton, Killed in a Hunting Accident.

A sad shooting accident occurred about 45 miles north of Yorkton on Thursday. While Ove C. Lee and a younger brother were out hunting, they came across a deer, and Ove, being in front of his brother, knelt down and shot the deer. The former rose just as the brother discharged his rifle, and the bullet passed through his head, instantly killing him. His remains were interred at Yorkton.

AND NOW IT'S OHIO

Negro Taken From Springfield Jail and Strung up to a Telegraph Pole.

Richard Dixon, a negro, was taken from the jail at Springfield, Ohio, at 11 o'clock on Monday night and shot to death in the jail yard by a mob.

Dixon shot Policeman Charles Collis while they were both in the former's room in a hotel. Dixon had decided to quit the place, and, fearing trouble with Anna Corbin, a woman with whom he was acquainted, he asked Collis to go to the hotel with him. While in his room Dixon and Miss Corbin quarrelled, and Dixon is said to have shot her in the breast. The policeman then attempted to arrest Dixon, when the latter fired into the officer.s body, inflicting fatal wounds. Collis died the next day, and scores of people became aroused over the tragedy. Early in the evening a mob of five hundred persons gathered at the county jail with the avowed intention of lynching Dixon. who comes from Cynthiana, Kentucky.

Sheriff Routzahn appeared on the jail steps and made an ineffectual attempt to disperse the crowd. By nine o'clock the mob had increased to eight hundred men and the jail yard was completely filled.

At 10.30, however, everything had become quiet. The police became satisfied that there was nothing more to fear, and with other officials and out of the jail. Shortly before 11 newspaper men, passed freely in and o'clock a diversion was made by a small crowd moving from the east doors around to the south entrance. The police followed, and a bluff was made at jostling them off the steps leading up to the south entrance. All this time the party with heavy railway iron was beating at the east door, which shortly yielded to the battering, as did the lattice iron doors. The mob then surged through the east door, overpowered the sheriff, turnkey, and handful of deputies, and began the assault on the iron turnstile leading to the cells, and in five minutes this door had shared the fate of the east one. The heavy iron partition leading to the cells resisted the mob effectualfy, until cold chisels and sledge hammers arrived. Seeing that further resistance was useless, and to avoid the killing of innocent prisoners, the authorities consented to the demand of the mob for the right man. He was dragged from the cell to the jail door and thence down the stone steps to the court in the jail yard. Someone knocked the negro to the ground and those near to him fell back four or five feet. Nine shots were fired into his prostrate form, and then, satisfied that he was dead, a dozen more grabbed the lifeless body, and with a triumphant cheer the mob surged into Columqia Street and marched to Fountain Avenue, one of the principal thoroughfares of the town, and then to the intersection of Main Street, where a rope was tied around the negro's neck. Two men climbed a telegraph pole and threw the rope over the topmost crosstie, and drew the body about 18 feet above the street. Their work was greeted with a cheer, a fusilade began, and for thirty minutes the body was kept swaying back and forth from the force of the rain of bullets poured into it. Frequently the arms would fly up convulsively, when a muscle was struck, and the mob went fairly wild with delight.

Throughout it all perfect good order was maintained, and everyone seemed to be in the best of humor, joking with his neighbor while reloading his revolver. Collis had served twelve years on the force, and was regarded as one of the most reliable and efficient men on the police department.

All night crowds of men and boys passed the body, hooting at it, and occasionally firing a shot or throwing a stone. The negro residents of the city, with few exceptions, went to their homes upon hearing of the lynching. A few of them, however, were with the mob to the end, and seemed to enter into the night's work in the same spirit as the white men.

Dixon's body was literally riddled with bullets, the few remnants of clothing still hanging to him fluttering in the wind like ribbons. While the whole affair was done in the glare of electric lights, no masks were used and not even handkerchiefs were resorted to by any of the men to conceal their faces. It is nevertheless the general opinion in the town that it will be a difficult task to secure the conviction of any of the participants in the tragedy. The affair is greatly regretted by the better class of citizens, although there is no attempt made anywhere to conceal the gratification at the outcome.

THE BABY.

Where did you come from, baby dear?
Out of the everywhere into the here.

Where did you get your eyes so blue?
Out of the sky as I came through.

What makes the light in them sparkle and span?
Some of the starry spikes left in.

Where did you get that little tear?
I found it waiting when I got here.

What makes your forehead so smooth and high?
A soft hand stroked it as I went by.

What makes your cheek like a warm white rose?
Something better than anyone knows.

Whence that three-cornered smile of bliss?
Three angels gave me at once a kiss.

Where did you get that pearly ear?
God spoke, and it came out to hear.

Where did you get those arms and hands?
Love made itself into hooks and bands.

Feet, whence did you come, you darling things?
From the same box as the cherubs' wings.

How did they all just come to be you?
God thought about me, and so I grew.

But how did you come to us, you dear?
God thought of you, and so I am here.

MOTHER AND CHILD.

Suggestions How to Entertain and Teach the Little Ones.

"Happy is the child whose nurse is its mother!" It is not realized by many how capable a child is of ennui, "even as you and I," the grown-ups, and also how incapable the average nurse is of giving intelligent amusement to her charge, and how limited her opportunity in the confines of the nursery, even were she capable. Hence the adage, "Happy is the child whose nurse is its mother."

How full of interest and adventure life may be to the little one who follows the mother in her round of duties! He will dust and sweep, try to make beds, and set the table, sew when she does and fetch and carry to some purpose, perhaps, says a writer in Toronto Star. What delight could be greater than to help at the weekly baking, to be allowed a little wad of dough, which he may knead and make into pies and cakes just as mother does? It will be grey before he is done with it; it will probably have been picked up from the floor more than once, and for the first few times will not be fit to eat, but what of that? Does the mother realize that besides amusing her little one in this way she is developing his faculties, teaching him all sorts of necessary lessons; that the play is, though without any label, the best and most desirable kind of kindergarten? She will soon find, if she take the trouble to impress on the little scholar that there is a right way of doing all these things, yet without making a task of the play, that he is really of much assistance. It is wonderful what a little child of 4 or 6 can accomplish after a year or two's companionship with the mother.

A little game which a mother may play, while sewing perhaps, is one of buying and selling, and it will be of the intensest interest, because played with real money. Let the child buy from the mother a spool, a package of needles, and yard or a package of tape—anything the work-basket may contain or the mind suggest. For these he must pay in actual cash ten and 5-cent pieces and coppers and count his change carefully. Or he may be the vendor, with a little basket of articles for sale and must make the change. It is a lesson in arithmetic, in addition and subtraction, multiplication and division, that will be a most exciting adventure of the greatest possible use.

All this means a certain amount of time and trouble expended, and there may be mothers who cannot be bothered, so they say; they cannot have the children "round under their feet." This is a world where we never get something for nothing, and no mother can expect the best from a child to whom she has not given her best, towards whom she has not shown a wise unselfishness.

An Essay on the Horse.

The following remarkable essay on the horse is said to be from the pen of an Indian student: "The horse is a very noble quadruped, but when he is angry he will not do so. He is ridden on the spinal cord by the bridle, and sadly the driver places his foots on the stirrups and divides his lower limbs across the saddle and drives his animal to the meadow. He has four legs; two are on the front side and two are afterward. These are the weapons on which he runs. He also defends himself by extending these in the rear in a parallel direction toward his foe, but this he does only when he is in an aggravating mood. There is no animal like the horse. No sooner they see their guardian or master than they always cry for food, but it is always at the morning time. They have got tails, but not so long as the cow and such other like animals."

Brother to a Novelist.

Mr. George E. Braeme, an old music teacher, who died in a Toronto hospital a few weeks ago, was a brother of Charlotte M. Braeme, perhaps the most prolific novelist of the nineteenth century. She first commenced to write for The Family Herald, the popular British periodical, over the initials "B.M.C.," a reversal of her own. An American pirate publisher took her novels, and published them in book form, conferring on the unknown writer the name Bertha M. Clay, which was considered a stroke of piratical genius. Miss Braeme then revealed her identity, and signed her own name to her work thereafter. The late Mr. Braeme, who was a man of individual views, had a great affection for his sister, but took no pride in her literary achievements.

THE ROAD TO HEALTH

Lies Through Rich, Red Blood And Strong Nerves.

Debility is a word that fairly expresses many ailments under one name. Poor blood, weak nerves, impaired digestion, loss of flesh. No energy, no ambition, listless and indifferent. This condition is perhaps the penalty of overwork, or the result of neglected health. You must regain your health or succumb entirely. There is just one absolutely sure way to do this—take Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. These pills will bring you new life, fill every vein with rich, red blood, restore elasticity to the step, the glow of health to the wan cheek; they will inspire you with new energy and supply the vital force of mind and body.

There is not a corner of the civilized World where Dr. Williams' Pink Pills have not brought health and hope and happiness to some weak, debilitated, despairing person. If you have not used the pills yourself, ask your neighbors and they will tell you these statements are solemn truth. Mr. Charles Saulnier, Corberrie, N. S., says: "I was very much run down and so weak I could hardly work. It seemed as though my blood was little better than water. I tried several medicines, but I got nothing to help me until I began taking Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. It was simply astonishing how quickly these pills began to help me and how much new life and vigor they put into me. I am a cook by profession, and the fact that I was able to cook for fifteen men last winter is the best proof that the pills have made me as sound as ever I was."

There is no mystery about the power of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills to put new life and strength into you. They actually make new blood, and that is why they cure all blood diseases, like anaemia, indigestion, liver and kidney troubles, headaches and backaches and the special ailments of women. Through the blood Dr. Williams' Pink Pills feed and steady the nerves, strike at the root of nervousness, cure St. Vitus' dance, fits, neuralgia, sciatica and partial paralysis. All these diseases spring from bad blood and disordered nerves, and they have all been cured positively and permanently by Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. Sold by all medicine dealers at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50, or by mail from the Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

by local applications as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

HOW TO FOLD A LETTER.

Only a Small Percentage of Applicants Know the Right Way.

"I see you have lots of applications," said the advertising manager to the business house manager who had advertised for a typewriter and bookkeeper.

"From all over New England," said the business man, jamming his pockets full. "But what some of the girls who answer are thinking of I can't imagine. Here is one girl who will come fifty miles to take a place at $5 a week."

"Can you tell much as to their qualifications by their letters?"

"Can I? Well, rather. For instance, there is the wirting; there is the speling of the words; there is the way the letter is put together; there is even the way the letter is folded. Ever think that letters are folded so as to save time nowadays?"

"No," said the advertising man. "It's all I can do to get the stamps to put on 'em. My stenographer folds 'em all right, I guess. How should it be done?"

"Easy enough, simple enough, but folded wrong often enough," said the business man sententiously. "If your typewriter knows her business she takes the sheet and folds it up from the bottom toward the top, leaving the proper width for the envelope, then over from right to left and from left to right—so. Then when your letter is opened it is right side up. See?"

"I see," murmured the advertising man. "And how many applicants fold their letters that way?"

"Oh, three or four out of a dozen, perhaps. Quite a commentary on business as she is taught, eh?" remarked the business man as he strolled away.

FRENCH POLITENESS.

It Is Widespread, Oppressive and Time Devouring.

During one summer which I spent among exclusively French people in a hotel at Saint-Germain I estimated that I lost quite twenty-four hours out of each week saying good morning and good evening to the men, women, little children and dogs about me. If you encounter the same person twenty-five times in the same day, you must smile rapturously, pause, at least shake hands if you do not kiss, ceremoniously inquire how he or she is "going" and ceremoniously bid him or her "au revoir" at parting. Not only every man and woman expects this, but all the little children toddle up to you, shake hands and exact the same amount of ceremony. Then every well regulated French family has a dog that more than likely occupies a chair and eats off a plate beside you at the table, so that it is considered churlish if you do not also stop and tell the dog "bun jour" and "au revoir" a dozen times a day, pausing to take the paw which he is prettily taught to extend to you.

When the washerwoman brings home your linen, there are at least five minutes spent in ceremoniously greeting and parting from her. In the operation of receiving and paying for linen you exchange "mercis" and "pardons" not fewer than ten times. Any other serving person or tradesman who comes to do business with you throughout the day you similarly receive with "bon jour, monsieur," and "au revoir, monsieur," and you thank him and beg his pardon as often as you can possibly get the words into the length of time he has to stay.

No Place For Icemen.

"I had letters to a prominent official in Porto Rico," said a New York manufacturer of artificial ice plants, "and I went down to that island, thinking I had a sure grip on a big thing. I made an appointment by letter and on a certain day and hour was ushered into his office, and we had no sooner shaken hands than he turned to the attendant and said:

"'Jose, bring the gentleman a fresh glass of lemonade and see that it is good and hot.'

"It was hot enough to melt a dog, and I felt rivers of perspiration running down my back, and when that boiling hot lemonade was brought in I knew that I was dished. So it turned out. I might have sold red peppers or horseradish, but as for ice—they didn't want any in theirs."

Animals Enjoy Racing.

Little pigs are great at combined play, which generally takes the form of races. Emulation seems to form part of their amusement, for their races seem always to have the winning of first place for their object and are quite different from those combined rushes for food or causeless stampedes in which little pigs are wont to indulge. Racing is an amusement natural to some animals and, being soon taught by others, becomes one of their most exciting pastimes.—London Tit-Bits.

HE'S WELL KNOWN IN PORT HOPE

Mr. Chas. Gilchrist Declares Dodd's Kidney Pills Cured His Diabetes

He Suffered For Ten Years and Could Get No Relief Till He Tried the Great Canadian Kidney Remedy.

Port Hope, Ont., Mar. 14—(Special)—It has long been admitted that what will cure Diabetes will cure any form of Kidney Disease, and Dodd's Kidney Pills have cured the long-standing Diabetes of Charles Gilchrist of this place.

Mr. Gilchrist is easily one of the best known men in Port Hope. For fifteen years he was Chief of Police and for twenty-two years Fishery Overseer of the Dominion Government. When asked regarding his cure, he had no hesitation in saying it was caused by Dodd's Kidney Pills and nothing else.

"I had Diabetes and Kidney Disorder for ten years," he said. "My urine was like brickdust and I had a terrible backache. I tried doctors, tried everything, but could get no help till I was advised to try Dodd's Kidney Pills. I commenced taking them, soon began to get better and am quite well now.

"If I had not used Dodd's Kidney Pills I am sure I would have been in my grave."

Safety For Your Children

When a mother finds it necessary to give her little one medicine she cannot be too careful as to the remedy employed. The so-called "soothing" medicines always contain poisonous opiates, and these should never be given to a child. Strong drugs and harsh purgatives should also be avoided. An ideal medicine for young children is Baby's Own Tablets, which cure all the minor ills of childhood, and the mother has the guarantee of one of the foremost analysts of Canada that this medicine contains no opiate. Milton L. Hersey, M. A. Sc., demonstrator in Chemistry, McGill University, says:—"I hereby certify that I have made a careful analysis of Baby's Own Tablets which I personally purchased in a drug store in Montreal, and said analysis has failed to detect the presence of any opiate or narcotic in them." Analysis is proof, therefore mothers know that in giving their little ones Baby's Own Tablets they are giving them an absolutely safe medicine. Sold by all druggists or mailed at 25c a box by writing the Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Thieves and Bibles.

Bibles are said by detectives to be more rarely stolen than any other objects. This is not because Bibles are worthless to a thief, but because few criminals are sufficiently depraved to steal the good book. A detective said recently that in an important case which he had followed up some years ago a thief had entered the house, stolen some valuable jewels and left untouched a Bible bound in white chicken skin and studded with pearls. The detective caught the thief, and the man who had been robbed, a dealer in curios, visited his despoiler in jail, took an interest in him because he had not taken the Bible and eventually reformed him and got him a good job.

"I knew," the thief said, "that if I took that Bible it would do me harm and if I didn't take it it might do me good. I let it alone, and now, thank heaven, I'm an honest and a righteous man."

The detective added that in another case where a thief had stolen a Bible the book had been returned. "Another thing few thieves will take," he added, "is a child's savings bank."

A CONSTANT DRAIN.

glance at the truck loads of goods arriving from eastern departmental stores. A large amount, no doubt, goes to swell the money circulation of Eastern Canada in this manner. The pernicious habit of patronizing outside business houses at the expense of our own is best shown by a study of the subject from a general aspect. It is not only a question of securing value for the money but of keeping the money in circulation in our own town and locality, that it may come to us again with purchasing power. The water that is past cannot turn the wheels of the mill, and the money sent out of the Province will no longer turn our wheels of commerce and industry.

But there is another, and probably a greater drain upon our local earnings. Many of the active wage earners of Fernie have relatives and friends in distant parts dependent upon them for a living. A considerable portion of the monthly earnings is sent away to meet these constant requirements. In many cases this condition, we are glad to believe, exists only temporarily, until such time as the bread-winner is in a position to bring his family to him that they may live happily together again.

There is a class who send not only a sufficiency for their absent family but their total savings. The object of this class, like the penurious Chinaman, is to make his "fortune" in this country and then return to his own land and his family to enjoy it. Happily this class is decreasing steadily. The freedom of the Canadian West coupled with its rare opportunities for the profitable investment of savings makes it an ideal home land with which to cast one's lot, and the thoughtful working man is not slow to see advantageous possibilities for his growing family in this expanding country.

It is not unreasonable therefore to expect a satisfactory tendency towards lessening the difference between the amount sent out of the town and that received here, as the years go by. The results will show in advantages compounded. Had that balance of one hundred and seventeen thousand dollars been retained here the money market of the town would have been in a much better state than it is and every one from the richest to the poorest would have felt its leavening influence.

READ IT THROUGH

'Twould Spoil This Story to Tell It in the Headlines.

To use an eighteenth century phrase, this is an "o'er true tale." Having happened in a small Virginia town in the winter of 1902, it is a story very much of the present. Up to a short time ago Mrs. John E. Harmon, of Melfa Station, Va., had no personal knowledge of the rare curative properties of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. "Last January," she says, "my baby took a dreadful cold and at one time I feared she would have pneumonia, but one of my nieghbors told me how this remedy had cured her little boy and I began giving it to my baby at once and it soon cured her. I heartily thank the manufacturers of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy for placing so great a cure within my reach. I cannot recommend it too highly or say too much in its favor. I hope all who read this will try it and be convinced as I was." For sale by all Druggists and Dealers.

C.P.R. AND LUMBERMEN

CANNOT AGREE ON RATES AND PRICES

PROPOSAL AND COUNTER PROPOSAL TURNED DOWN. A MEETING AT CALGARY

F. W. Peters of Winnipeg, Freight Traffic Manager for the Western Division, accompanied by O. H. Becker and H. E. Macdonell of Nelson, who have control of local freight matters were in Fernie on Tuesday for the purpose of meeting the lumbermen of the district to discuss differences between them regarding freight rates and prices at which lumber is sold to the consumer on the prairie. A delegation of the Mountain Lumbermen's Association of which F. W. Jones of the Columbia River Lumber Co., Golden, was a member, had previously met Mr. Peters, to discuss the subject, but had failed to come to any satisfactory agreement. Mr. Peters therefore stopped off on his way East at Cranbrook and Fernie to see the members of the association individually.

He met the local lumbermen in the Royal Hotel on Tuesday morning. The proposal placed before the meeting was similar to that offered to the Delegation. Briefly it is as follows:

The C.P.R. will reduce their rate on lumber between Swift Current and Broadview 2 cents per 100 lbs. if the lumbermen will reduce their price of lumber $1 per thousand feet to all customers east of Macleod. Mr. Peters stated that rates would be raised on American lumber coming into Canada. Over the Soo line the rate would be raised 3 cents per hundred and probably a similar raise would be made over the Canadian Northern.

The C.P.R. gave as their reason for limiting the reduction in rates to the points mentioned, that this section covers the area in which the Canadian lumber comes into sharp competition with the American product. The Mountain lumbermen are not willing to accept the terms proposed by the C.P.R. They consider that the action of the C.P.R. is based upon arbitrary motives in reducing the rate only between Swift Current and Broadview. They presented a counter proposal agreeing to reduce their prices as requested if the C.P.R. would reduce their rates 2 cents over the territory east of Macleod.

The local lumbermen are in communication with the members of the association at Cranbrook and an attempt to have another meeting with Mr. Peters at Calgary is taking definite form. Mr. Jones, who is well equipped with the knowledge required for these negotiations from a long experience with railway business, will again be a member of the delegation. The Association is strongly united and the C.P.R. can gain nothing by negotiations with individual members. The opinion is general among the lumbermen that the proposed reduction is offered with the object of benefitting the consumer or producer but with the object of increasing its trade. If the C.P.R. can afford to haul lumber at a reduction of 2 cents a hundred pounds between Swift Current and Broadview the natural query is, why cannot it afford a similar reduction between other points?

COAL CREEK.

The league is giving a musical evening this week.

Mrs. More is suffering from an attack of rheumatism.

The Valer family have taken up their residence in Fernie.

Mr. Grant, father of Mrs. McLellan, is suffering from a severe attack of grippe.

Tho severe snow storms of this week have caused the suspension of work in Nos. 4 and 5 tunnels.

Mr. Campbell returned this week from Rosslyn, Wash., bringing his wife with him. They have taken up their abode in house No. 108 across the river.

Mr. Thomas Morgan, the new mine inspector recently paid an official visit to this colliery. He complimented the management on the improved condition of No. 1 mine.

Two slight accidents occurred here this week. Mr Button fell from a trussle and received a bad shaking up but he escaped without serious injury. Hector MacDonald had one of his feet bruised by a motor car passing over it.

THREE LICENSES GRANTED

Report of Board Meeting held on March 18th.

The new license Board of Commissioners met for the first time last Friday evening, when all the members, Messrs. W.H. Whimster, A.W. Bleasdell and Wm. Shaw were present.

The three applications for licenses were presented, as follows:—

Katie Lacey, Royal hotel, Gateway.
Jessie Dilse, Cosmopolitan hotel, Baynes Lake.
T. Labelle, Canadian hotel, Hosmer.

The three licenses were granted. H.W. Herchmer was employed by some residents of Gateway to oppose the granting of that license, but as the applicant had complied with the requirements of the law and the Inspector's report was favorable it was granted.

The license to T. Labelle was conditional upon the hotel being finished as shown in plans submitted, which call for a building 30 x 40 with 8 rooms upstairs.

G. W. Thompson, of Cranbrook, was present at the meeting to petition the board to reconsider the cancelling of the license to the Columbia hotel at Elko. The Board however took the view that two licenses at Elko were sufficient for the present and refused.

TODAY'S DESPATCHES.

Paris—The Echo de Paris says that Bomhard, French ambassador at St Petersburg has not given satisfaction and that his recall is imminent.

Dublin—A meeting held here to-day for the purpose of promoting an international exhibition under the patronage of King Edward broke up in discord the members of the Gaelic League voting with the majority against the proposal. The meeting favored a national exhibition.

Montreal—Sir Wm. McDonald has presented the College Union of McGill with $100,000 to provide it with a home.

Montreal—C. F. Gildersleeve has resigned the management of the Richelieu and Ontario Navigation Co., and will be succeeded by C. J. Smith, general traffic agent, of the Canadian Atlantic Railway.

Hamburg—It is expected here that the Hamburg American Company, has sold the steamer "Furst Bismark" to the Russian government. The sale of "Kizerfriedrich" has also been completed.

Toronto.—In the general sessions to-night Frank A. Gray, druggist and his father, Lieut.-Col. Gray were found guilty of conspiracy in tampering with ballots cast for board of education in the recent municipal elections. Prisoners were removed for sentence. Bail was fixed at $2000 each.

MICHEL NEWS

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

Mr. Gammage spent Tuesday in Fernie on business.

Coroner Trites is in town on official business this week.

The recent deaths here have caused a gloom to spread over the camp.

The cold spell here delayed work on the hotel for three days this week.

A number of Fernie people were in town this week attending to business.

The Aaron Johnson Company played to crowded houses here three nights this week.

An Italian working as a backhand in No. 8 had his hands badly burned by gas last week.

The elevator rope on the tipple broke again Tuesday, causing the men to loose another shift.

Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Wilson have the sympathy of the citizens here in the loss of their infant child, Nellie.

A train made three attempts to get through the snow at the Loop on Wednesday but was unsuccessful.

A social evening was given by Mrs. Munnon to the young people of the Methodist Church on Wednesday evening.

H. D. Turner had charge of the school here last week in the absence of Mr. Terrion who was down to the prairie on a business trip.

Operations commenced last week on the large new hotel and about twenty men are employed on it. The building will be completed by the end of June. The hotel has not yet been leased.

THE NEW JAIL HOUSE.

The Excavation Work Will Commence at Once.—The new Building Will be 26x32.

Chief Constable McMullin received instructions this week from Government Agent Armstrong to proceed with the excavation of the cellar for a new jail building. The building according to the plans forwarded Mr. Armstrong by the Department, will be 26x32. The sum of $1800 has been appropriated for this work.

The government engineer recently prepared two plans, one for the erection of an addition to the present building and the other for a building separate altogether from the present building. The latter plan has been adopted. The new jail will contain six cells, a kitchen and a room for the jailor. It will be located in the vacant space west of the present jail. The work of excavation must necessarily be postponed until some of the snow disappears. The prisoners will be put on to do this part of the work.

ENJOYABLE BAND CONCERT

The Fernie Brass Band gave another concert at the rink last night which was a great success. The ice was in splendid condition and the music, selected to suit the occasion, was rendered in a very creditable manner. This concert, it was announced, would close the skating season but the evening was so very enjoyable that the band was prevailed upon to arrange for another concert next Tuesday evening. This will positively be the last night on the rink this winter, which fact, together with the deserving merit of the organization getting it up, will doubtless draw a large crowd.

The manager of the rink has decided to keep the rink open to-night, to-morrow and Monday nights. Owing to the long skating season regular ticket holders will be required to pay admission.

LOOKING FOR MARKETS.

T. R. Leckie, general manager of the Crow's Nest Pass Coal Co., is at Butte, Montana, this week looking up more markets for coal and coke. The company is now shipping about 300 tons of coke per day to the Butte smelters and there is yet a market available in that quarter for at least 600 tons per day. The rapid development of the coal mining industry has so increased the production of coal and coke that the Boundary smelters can no longer handle more than half of it and hence the necessity for other markets. The Boundary smelters are running short handed at the present time owing to repairs and the heavy snow fall which retards the transportation of ores. The ovens are not running at their full capacity. The Fernie battery was allowed to go three days this week without drawing and the Michel ovens had two days' rest, but despite every effort to relieve the congested condition of the industry at least 3,000 tons of coke is awaiting shipment at Fernie and Michel.

MORRISSEY NEWS.

From The Despatch.

A party of Spokane people went into the Flathead from Morrissey Mines this (Friday) morning.

Work on the freight shed and passenger depot at the foot of Fourth St. is proceeding, the platform and foundation being constructed.

Jos. Aiello left for Fernie on Tuesday where he has opened up a gent's furnishing store. He will continue business in the Pioneer store, Morrissey Mines, with his cousin, John Bosso in charge.

Two cases of diptheria broke out at Tonkin on Friday morning, the children of A. Horbiaeux, who came from Lethbridge two weeks ago, being the victims. Con. Tranter quarantined the house on Friday, and all precautions are being taken to prevent the disease spreading.

The men working on the snow slide near the Junction went on strike Saturday for more wages. The demand was refused and the men's board was cut off. There is plenty of hotel accommodation for the men in this locality, but the meagre pay railway laborers get, and the fact that they have yet to get their's and are at present penniless, did not make it appear a favorable opportunity to get on a stiff back, pay transient rate for their board and buck the company. The digestive system objected to being laid off work a shift or two, so the men soon came to terms with the bosses and resumed work.

TWO SAD FATALITIES.

V. CARBONE AND WM. ANTHONY KILLED AT MICHEL.

Former Smothered in Slack Bin on 18th.—The Latter Buried Under Huge Rock Fall on the 23rd.

Michel during the past week was visited by two accidents, both of which proved instantly fatal. The first occurred last Friday 18th. Vicenzo Carbone, an Italian laborer, slipped into one of the huge slack bins and before the unloading cars could be stopped over thirty tons of slack had piled down upon him.

Superintendent Wilson was on hand and he gave orders to recover the body as rapidly as possible. The bin was hastily emptied from below and the body was in the hands of Dr. McSorley before many minutes went by, but all signs of life were gone and the efforts to revive him were useless. He had been quickly smothered in the fine dust. The deceased was born in Italy and came to Michel in July. He was a young man and unmarried. His only relative in this country is a brother, who lives at Michel. The body was buried at Michel on Sunday.

The inquest was commenced by Coroner Trites on Friday night and adjourned until Wednesday. The jury brought in a verdict of accidental death, holding no one responsible but recommending some form of warning for the men employed in the bins when the slack is about to be drawn out into the cars beneath.

Wm. Anthony was a timberman. While employed in the main tunnel of No. 8 mine on Wednesday night a very large fall of rock occurred burying him under many tons. The work of excavating the rock is being pushed with all possible despatch and the body may be recovered at any time, and again it might not be reached for another day. The fall of rock is the full width of the tunnel, and extends for the length of 60 feet.

Wm. Anthony is a Welshman who with his wife and four young children came from the coast about eight months ago. Mine Inspector Morgan has been notified the coroner is on the spot and an inquest will be held as soon as the body is recovered.

Additional facts regarding the latter accident reached this office this morning. The cave-in is about 16 feet deep and about 40 feet long. At 10 o'clock last night the body had not been found but the rescuers expect to reach it before morning.

Mr. Anthony was an Oddfellow, a member of the Knights of Pythias and of the U. M. W. of America. He was a man of about 45 years of age and leaves a widow and a large family to mourn his sad end.

POLICE COURT

Very few drunks were up in the police court this week considering the amount of drinking that was done around payday.

Dia Davis, an old offender, was brought in from Michel by Constable Henderson charged with chicken thieving. He got off on that charge but a charge of assault, committed on a companion with whom he bached proved more effective and he was given an opportunity to renew acquaintances on the chain gang for two months.

An assault committed upon a Chinaman in his laundry shop by an irate white customer was stopped by the police and when the case was aired in the court house on Monday the provincial coffers were enriched by the sum of ten dollars.

Thos. Farrell was found guilty of assault and was fined $5 and costs.

Paul Burdett was given 2 months for vagrancy and Alex. Graham two weeks on a similar charge.

Two cases of coal thieving at the C.P.R. shutes were dismissed with warnings.

Burns & Co. laid a complaint that a dressed pig was stolen from the C.P.R. platform on Monday.

Two drunks were disposed of in the police court yesterday. They were both allowed to go on suspended sentence.

For Stomach Trouble.

"I have taken a great many different medicines for stomach trouble and constipaton," says Mrs. S. Geiger, of Dankerton, Iowa, "but never had as good results from any as from Chamberlain's Stomach and Liver Tablets." For sale by all druggists and dealers.

LOCALS CONTINUED.

The mines are closed to-day owing to car shortage.

A. P. Chenette went to Cranbrook this morning on business.

D. V. Mott return yesterday from a lengthy visit to Ottawa and other Eastern points.

Advertisers are again requested to get their change of advertisements in at this office on Thursday. Friday is too late.

Fresh Oysters and Fish—Calgary Cattle Co. x

The thermometer registered 15 below zero this morning, one of the coldest mornings of the long winter.

L. Thorne who has charge of the C.P.R. coal operations at Crows Nest was in town this week on business.

The annual general meeting of the Fernie Board of Trade will be held in Joyce's Hall on Tuesday evening March 29th. At this meeting the officers for the ensuing year will be elected and the matter of incorporation will be taken up. A large attendance is desired.

A severe equinoctial storm raged during the first part of the week throughout the west and Fernie got its full share. A large amount of snow fell. On Wednesday night the mercury dropped rapidly to zero and Thursday morning broke clear and beautiful, a harbinger, it is hoped, of the approach of spring.

The Baptist Young People will give a social to-night in the vacant store belonging to Mr. Lundie (nearly opposite the Roma hotel.) Games and other interesting and unique forms of entertainment will be some of the features of the evening. Refreshments will be served. Admission 15 cents. Everyone welcome. A general good time is promised to all.

An amusing story is told at the expense of a thrifty (?) housewife in a near by town. For the sake of the moral which it contains we publish it. The good lady in looking over Timothy Eaton's price list decided that she could save a few cents by adding a bushel of potatoes to her order. The potatoes came alright—by express, with 10 cents per lb. added for transportation charges. Experience is a hard but thorough teacher.

A quiet marriage was performed at the home of Mr. Winnett, Fernie, on Saturday evening Mar. 19th, when Miss Annie Winnett and Mr. Fred. G. Waters were united in the holy bonds of matrimony. The ceremony was performed by Rev. J. Robson in the presence of a few friends. Mr. Waters is foreman of the bushgang of the Elk Lumber and Manufacturing Co. The newly married couple will take up their residence in an extension of the Winnett house until the spring opens when they purpose purchasing a home.

A little boy was detected stealing mail from one of the boxes in the post office. He gained possession of a key left in one of the locks and he made periodic visits to the office. Postmaster Johnson laid a trap for him and soon had his hands on the boy. A letter in the box was attached to a bell and on Sunday morning the tell-tale alarm sounded. The culprit was given a severe reprimand and allowed to go. His name is withheld but if the offence is repeated the same consideration will mot be shown and moreover the case will be handed over to the authorities.

DOUBLE ASSAULT ON PORT ARTHUR

Small Body of Japs Defeated Large Force of Russians

JAPS WON AGAINST ODDS

Japanese Squadron of Fourteen Ships Twice Bombarded Russian Forts and Fleets on Thursday. Japan Has Transported 200.000 Men.

WAR WITH ENGLAND.

A Berlin dispatch says :—The Tage-Blatt asserts that the conviction prevails in government circles in Russia inevitable outcome of the war with Japan. Active preparations are proceeding for the defence of the Baltic coast, and the minister of marine has ordered the inhabitants of the island of Katlin, in the Gulf of Finland, to leave their homes, as the entire island is needed for fortifications. Prince Uchtomsky, the Czar's confidant, is quoted as saying that a Russian attack on India is imminent.

The Czar has received the following message from Viceroy Alexieff, dated at Mukden, March 10th : "The commandant of the fortress at Port Arthur reports that at about 1 o'clock this morning the outlines of vessels, apparently torpedo boats, were seen at sea in the area swept by our searchlights. Our batteries opened fire on the vessels. Our torpedo boats put out to sea at 2.40, and about 4 o'clock met the enemy west of the Liao Tishin lighthouse. After firing several shots the enemy retired to the south in the direction of Shandun. Our torpedo boats returned to the harbor at 6 o'clock.

"Later, torpedo boats were sent to sea again to reconnoitre. They returned in half an hour, having learned that the enemy's squadron was approaching.

"At 8 o'clock the Japanese opened fire upon our cruisers and fortresses. The enemy had fourteen ships, and fired the entire time from behind Liao Tishin.

"I have the honor to report the above to your majesty.

(Signed) ALEXIEFF."

BLOCKED BRITISH AND U. S. WARSHIPS.

A Pekin telegram to the Ji Shimpo, Tokio, states that England and America have protested against the action of the Russians in sinking a junk at New Chwang, because the egress of their war vessels now staying there will be blocked.

JAPS WON AGAINST ODDS.

Another brush between Japanese and Russian scouts has occurred at Pack Chyong. A small force of Japanese came in contact with a much larger body of Russians. Firing commenced on both sides, and, despite the odds against them, the Japanese held out until the Russians retreated northwards.

KNEW HIS GEOGRAPHY

The Strong Point in Which Some Englishmen Excel.

Some idea of the wealth of minute and accurate knowledge which is fairly rampant in the minds of Englishmen concerning their kinsmen over seas may be gained from the following :

Some time ago a paragraph headed "Fortune Goes Begging" appeared in an old country paper. It read : "A Welshman named David Williams, who started life as a cobbler, has died in the United States worth a large fortune, and his relatives, the natural heirs, cannot be found. Williams is believed to have been a native of Caermarthenshire, in South Wales. He settled first in Kansas, then in Chaffee county, where he amassed much wealth. He died suddenly in May last. According to the laws of the state where the properties lie, they will revert to the state unless claimed by the next of kin within twelve months. Nine months have already passed, and the heir has not yet made his appearance."

This picture of a huge fortune lying around just waiting to be claimed, was too much for John W. Caswell, town postman of the town of Middlesborough, Yorkshire, England, and John says, says 'e, "I'll get out my public school geography and I'll write to a man living near the late lamented David Williams, and who knows but I may be able to call in this wandering wealth."

The geography consulted by John W. was evidently one which tells about milk in America being delivered in cakes, and harvest hands being frozen stark and stiff at their work when night overtakes them, for in order to locate his man he addressed the following letter to 'The Head Letter Carrier, Muskoka, Muskoka County, Ontario, Canada.:' The letter reads : "Dear comrade : "I take the liberty of writing to you, as I would like to know if you can give me any information about the enclosed piece of newspaper cutting. Can you furnish me with a full report of his death, also a description of the man, or whatever you might know of him. I fully believe that the relatives are here in Middlesboro. Anything it might cost I will be pleased to pay. Yours fraternally, (Signed) John W. Caswell."

The postal authorities will welcome any information that will lead to the apprehension of a man, lately deceased, who is suspected of having left an unclaimed fortune.

MARKET REPORT.

Weekly Review of Prices Culled From The Commercial.

GRAIN AND PRODUCE.

WHEAT—Manitoba wheat has been dull and declining, following very closely the changes in the American markets. Owing to the more favorable weather at the end of last week, the car receipts showed a considerable increase on Monday and Tuesday. Cash wheat is quiet; the demand has been light and at the same time there has been very little offering. We quote values as follows : 1 northern 92½c; 2 northern 89½c; 3 northern 84½c; No. 4 wheat 74½c; feed wheat 52½c; No. 2 feed 42½c; spot or March delivery. And for May delivery : 1 northern 95⅝c; 2 northern 93c; 3 northern 87⅞c; and No. 4 wheat 76⅞c; all in store Fort William and Port Arthur.

FLOUR — No changes have been made in this market since the recent advances, although the wheat market receded sufficiently to warrant the expectation that flour would follow. Wires from the east state that prices are easier there, which may mean a decline here in due course. We quote Hungarian Patent $2.75 per sack of 98 lbs. delivered to the trade; Glenora Patent $2.60; Strong Bakers $2.20; and XXX $2.00. These prices are subject to the usual trade discounts.

MILL FEED—Bran has advanced $2 per ton. Shorts remain the same. We quote : Bran $18 per ton, in bulk, delivered to the trade; shorts $19 per ton.

GROUND FEED—Chopped feeds have advanced $1 per ton. Market steady. We quote : Oat chop $28 per ton, delivered to the trade; barley chop $22; mixed barley and oats $25; oil cake $27 per ton.

OATS—Stocks on hand are very light, there being less than a week.s supply on hand. In consequence of this prices are firm. No. 2 white in carlots on track are worth 38c here, and feed grades 36 to 37c. Farmers' loads in the country should bring 31 to 33c, and on the street here 35 to 36c.

BARLEY—Malting grades are not offering. Feed barley cannot now be bought here for less than 40 to 43c.

FLAXSEED—Market nominal.

BUTTER — Creamery — Creamery butter is not moving in a wholesale way and the market may be described as nominal.

BUTTER — Dairy — The movement is very light owing to bad weather and other hindrances. Stocks on hand are lower. Dealers will pay good prices in the country for fresh made bricks, some naming a price of 25c. Old tub butter is bringing from 15 to 19c per pound, delivered to the trade here.

EGGS—Receipts are slowly increasing, although this week's storm will prevent shipments for a few days. Dealers will pay good prices for strictly fresh delivered here, the market ranging around 28 to 30c. Some will not name prices, and the market maybe expected to come down suddenly.

HIDES—The market shows no change from values of a week ago. There is a light movement, from country deliveries being retarded by weather conditions and approach of spring. We quote : Country frozen hides, 5½c per pound, less 5 pounds tare. No. 1 city butchers' hides are worth 6c per pound; No. 2's 5c; and 3's 4c; sheepskins same price as hides.

TALLOW—No. 1 tallow is worth 3¾c per pound delivered at Winnipeg, and Eo. 2 2¾c.

LIVE STOCK.

CATTLE—The market is quiet, as cattle are not plentiful. Choice beef cattle are worth 4c off cars here, and inferior grades ½ to 1c less.

SHEEP—The market is nominal, as there are none offering.

HOGS—The market is quiet and unchanged. Hogs weighing from 160 to 250 pounds are worth 5c per pound weighed off cars here; light and heavy weights ½ to 1c less.

MILCH COWS—Good cows are scarce and dear. Prices range from $35 to $55 each, according to quality.

HORSES—Ontario draft horses are bringing from $350 to $450 per team here, according to weight and quality.

THE SAME BRAND.

Her Name it Was Mary, But Not The Madame

WANTED—A man with capital to enter into a contract with person having a great scheme.

The above ingeniously worded advertisement appeared in a Minneapolis paper, and, as future development shows, was answered by a large number of people. The majority of those who answered the ad must have thought something had dropped out of the blue sky when they received the following reply :

My Dear Sir : I received your letter asking about the scheme and how much capital was required to enter into it. You need but little capital, but lots of nerve, for this is my proposition—I am a young, rather good looking woman, and want to get married—that is the substance of it. If I like you and think you are well nough supplied with worldly goods, I should like to open negotiations.

Don't think me forward or unwomanly in resorting to this trickery of getting a husband—entangling one, you may say—but I have always believed and do still that a woman can only get a true and faithful husband by taking just such a course as I am taking.

If you don't wish to carry on correspondence farther, please do not give my name away nor cause me any trouble. If you wish to write to me, address me general delivery.

MARY JOHNSON.

One man turned the reply over to the chief of police, and that is how it reached publicity. From what can be gathered in the Minneapolis papers, the chief simply said "sucker," and let the matter drop, as he could see nothing in it for prosecution.

RUSSIA HAS BEEN BADLY LICKED

The Shells Played Terrible Havoc in Port Arthur.

RUSSIAN BOAT WAS SUNK

British Consul Says Assault on Russian Town is Expected—If Port Arthur Squadron has Escaped, a Great Naval Battle Will Ensue.

A rumor has been current at Tokio to the effect that the Russian fleet escaped from Port Arthur on the night of March 11th, and that the four cruisers at Vladivostock also got out and that the whole Russian fleet is now at sea.

News of a great naval battle is expected, and a serious situation would be created if the Russians should succeed in evading the Japanese fleet. The probability, however, is that the Japs are in touch with the Russians sufficiently to bring about an action which must be decisive to put an end to the naval power in the far east.

Refugees at Chefoo from Pigeon Bay say that the loss of life at Port Arthur by last Tuesday's bombardment will exceed one hundred. Material damage was done in the forts. Feveral Japanese shells destroyed the batteries on Golden and Sunset hills. Two shells destroyed the war building. Nearly every shell that reached the forts or city exploded. Two shells wrecked the Japanese theatre, and one Japanese shell dropped in the park, where the Russian band was playing nationaf airs.

Dispatches from Yankow through consular sources stated that Port Arthur would be attacked not later than Wednesday, and that then a landing of the Japanese army would be made on the west side of Manchuria, from the Gulf of Liao Tung.

WHOLE RUSSIAN CREW KILLED.

A hospital ship has arrived at Sasebo with nine killed and ten wounded men, the result of the attack on Port Arthur on March 10th. The wounded are doing well, in consequence of the prompt attention they received on board the hospital ship. Four of the men were scalded severely through a shell piercing the boiler of the destroyer, while the others were mostly shot below the waist. All of the Russian crew of the Stereguschetchi which the Japanese boarded at Port Arthur, were found lying dead on the deck, except four men in the engine room. These were taken prisoners, but two of them afterwards died of their wounds. The Stereguschetchi sank soon afterwards.

The firing had been so severe that the ships resembled a honeycomb. The exploit of a Japanese sailor in beheading a Russian commander with a stroke of his cutlass has inspired the utmost enthusiasm and admiration in the Japanese navy.

SHELLS NEARLY REACHED THE FLEET.

A new battery of the forward guns from the Czarevitch and the Retvizan now commands Pigeon Bay. During last Thursday:s bombardment the Japanese shells very nearly reached the fleet, many falling into the basin. Only two fell into the new town. The Retvizan was not much further damaged. The Pallada is still in dock.

DECORUM IN CHURCH

REV. DR. TALMAGE DELIVERS A GOOD-NATURED REBUKE TO OFFENDERS.

REFINEMENT IN THE CHURCH

Prevalent Lack of Reverence in American Churches Gently Scored By the Preacher From an Illuminating Text—Reasonable Etiquette in the House of God Should at Least Equal That of Ordinary Worldly Relations.

Entered according to Act of Parliament of Canada, in the year 1901, by William Baily, of Toronto, at the Dep't of Agriculture, Ottawa.

Los Angeles, Cal., March 13.—This sermon is a good natured rebuke to the prevalent lack of decorum among the worshipers in our American churches and a plea for the observance of a certain reasonable etiquette, equal at least to that which we observe in our worldly relations. The text is 1. Timothy iii., 15, "That thou mayest know how thou oughtest to behave thyself in the house of God."

Are you a parent? Have you ever dressed up your little children and sent them forth alone to visit when they were about ten or twelve years of age? Then you have known the anxieties of a mother or father as to their social behavior. Before they go you say: "Now, son, be careful about your manners. When you enter Mrs. So-and-so's home take off your hat and place it upon the hall rack Be careful and don't handle the vases in the parlor, and don't squirm on your chair. When you are at dinner be sure and keep your hands off the table, and don't spill the food upon the tablecloth, and ask for a second helping of anything or talk with your mouth full. When Mrs. So-and-so passes you a plate say 'Thank you.' Remember, my boy, that your mother's home is to be judged by your table manners." When the child leaves the house your mind follows him and stays with him all day long. And, oh, the pride that sweeps into the parental heart when, next day, you meet your friend, at whose home your little children dined, and she congratulates you in these words: "We had such a lovely children's party yesterday. And, Mrs. So-and-so, I want to tell you how well your children behaved. Your boy was a perfect little gentleman, and your daughter a little lady." Ah, such congratulation as that is as a sweet savor to the maternal heart.

If refined social manners are essential in the home, they are equally important in the house of God. So essential are they to a consecrated Christian life that Paul wrote a long epistle to his young lieutenant, Timothy, concerning them. In this letter, wherein are found the words of the text, the great apostle tells how bishops and their wives should act, and also how deacons and deacons' wives. But to-day, instead of my showing how our ministers and church officers should behave in the house of God, I would preach a sermon on church manners directly to the pew. I would try to inculcate the reverential spirit with which our congregations should assemble for worship. I would try to teach this reverence because more and more in this irreverent age there is a tendency to look upon church buildings as places fitted for secular enjoyments rather than as sanctuaries consecrated to the presence of Jesus Christ. "The Lord loveth the gates of Zion more than all the dwellings of Jacob." No man ought to place foot in God's sanctuary unless he can do it with the solemn feeling of Habakkuk, who declared, "The Lord is in his holy temple; let all the earth keep silence before him."

First the church building is the trysting place where God promises to meet his children at certain times. That means it is a place of rendezvous, where you have an appointment to commune with Christ at least twice every Sunday and perhaps once or twice during the week. One inference from that fact is that when a congregation assembles on the Sabbath day the worshipers should always be on time and be ready to lift their voices in praise at the first word of the first line of the doxology, as well as with bending head to listen to the last word of the last line of the benediction.

There is not one tardy church member in a thousand who would show the implied disrespect in not keeping an appointment with an earthly ruler which they frequently show to their Heavenly King. Suppose we should take a trip east and stop in the Capitol at Washington. Suppose while sojourning there one of the California Senators or Congressmen or a member of the Cabinet made an appointment for us with the President of the United States. Suppose that a polite note was sent us by the President's private secretary informing us that we might be received to-morrow morning at the White House at 11 o'clock. What would we do? Would we sit up to-night until very late, as some of us are accustomed to do every Saturday night? Would we arise very late to-morrow morning, about half-past 9, and have breakfast about 10 o'clock, as some of us are accustomed to do every Sunday morning? Then when the clock's minute hand is pointing to a quarter of 11 would we start to dress and at the last moment turn the house upside down and empty all the bureau drawers because we could not find our gloves or hatpins or a clean handkerchief, as some of us are accustomed to do every Sunday morning? Then would we rush across Lafayette square over to the White House and get there twenty minutes late, as some of us regularly and systematically always come to the church service late, where we are to meet God?

Oh, no! That is not the way we should act if we had an appointment with the President to-morrow morning. We would positively see that our clothes were all right before we went to sleep to-night. Then we would go to bed early, so that our minds would be clear and alert and we could remember all that the President might say. We would not only be on time, but a little ahead of time. At ten minutes of 11, instead of ten minutes after 11 o'clock, we would be standing before the President's private secretary presenting our cards for an audience with the Chief Executive of the American people. In the same way if you wish to get your chief spiritual blessings from Christ you must keep your tryst with him. You must start your public worship on time. You must, in your church manners at least, show to your Heavenly King the same respect you would accord to an earthly potentate. A spiritually live church is one whose worshipers always assemble on time. One of the surest signs of a spiritually dead church is the tardiness of the church members, who always expect their seats to be saved until at least the second hymn has been sung, and often until the collection plate has been passed. The pews should be filled on time, just as the organist at the hour sharp should be in her place at the ivory keys and the minister in his place behind the sacred pulpit.

Behaving yourself aright in church implies a second act, which is just as important as promptness at church service. A church member should be in his place when the service starts as surely as he should be at his seat when the train starts. But he should do more than sit down when the minister takes his place. He should, first of all, kneel and render obeisance and homage to the Heavenly Father, whose tryst he, the worshiper, has come to keep. The very first act of a guest in a home is to go and pay his respects to the host or hostess. The very first act a worshiper should perform when in church is to pay his respects to the Christ, who, in a spiritual sense, is the head of the temple in which the church member has come to worship.

The Episcopalian rector begins his service in this wise: "Lord, I have loved the habitation of thy house and the place where thine honor dwelleth." When we enter the house of God, do we one and all feel that we are coming into the presence of the Lord? If we do, would we come laughing and talking and nodding to each other, like a lot of schoolgirls entering their class rooms? If we do, would there be so much whispering among the members, both in the pews and in the back of the church? If we do, would there be so much turning around to watch others who happen to come in late, and a disposition to laugh when anything goes wrong? People who have visited European courts write that there the king is first and last in the thoughts of all the waiting courtiers. As soon as the king enters the room, all the waiting nobles rise and bow. When the king speaks, the waiting nobles listen. When a messenger enters, he not only kneels, but when he leaves the throne room he never turns his back upon the seated king. When we enter the sanctuary of God, which is filled with the presence of God, do we bow as before a king? Do we try to keep our face always toward the divine face? Do we earnestly try to make the prayers of the psalmist our prayer? "Let the words of my mouth and the meditation of my heart be always acceptable in thy sight, O my Lord, my strength and my redeemer." The church of God ought to be something more sacred than a concert hall or a theatre. It ought to be a place where a joke and a cachinnation and a chitchat should be just as much out of place as a minstrel show would be at a funeral by the casket of the dead.

O man and woman, ever keep the face of Jesus Christ before you when you are in the house of God! Every church building dedicated to the worship of God is in very truth his house, in which his presence is manifested as surely, though not so visibly, as in the Shekinah of the Tabernacle. Always enter the house of God in the same spirit that the little child of Rev. Charles T. Brady, an American missionary, showed when he entered a great European cathedral. The father was compelled to return to his boarding place for something he had forgotten. He left his little boy in the nave of the church to await his return. When the father came back he found his child standing in the middle of the great church in awe, looking around as though he was expecting some one. The mellow sunlight streaming through the stained glass windows fell upon his curly head and made him look like a little angel. When the child heard his father's returning footsteps he turned his inquiring eyes upon his parent and said: "Papa, where is Jesus? Where is Jesus?" Childlike, he felt that the house of God implied the presence of Christ. So, with childlike faith, when we assemble to worship Christ, we must come with this holy question upon our lips: "Where is Jesus? Where is Jesus?" If we come in such a spirit a great deal of the irreverence exhibited by some of our modern congregations would forever cease.

Behaving oneself aright in church implies not only due respect to the four walls of the edifice or to the habitation of the divine presence, but also due respect to God's ministers who preach in the sacred pulpit and due respect to God's musicians who sing in the church choirs. When the members of a church choir arise to sing the praises of God they become part of that mighty host who in every Christian land on earth and in the heavenly mansions are occupied with the same theme. When the minister rises to preach he comes as a messenger from God to utter the words that the Holy Spirit has commissioned him to speak. The truly consecrated Christian minister is a representative of the Most High and is entitled to the deference that was paid to the representatives of the European kings when they entered the United States Senate and were given the foremost seats, as I saw them file in when Vice-President Garret A. Hobart took the oath of office preceding the inauguration of President McKinley. They were not welcomed as men. They were honored in their official capacities as personal representatives of the British, the German, the Italian, the Russian and the Austrian thrones. Never forget when you criticise the preacher's message that you may be criticising the very words that God has given him to deliver to you.

"Not criticise the church music or the minister's preaching! Why," some one says, "that is almost an impossibility. Some church choirs smash every law of musical harmony. Some ministers are absolutely stupid. They are impracticable men—men of no force, without any two logical, consecutive thoughts." That is true, my brother. Some choirs are noted more for their discords than their musical perfections. Some ministers' mental depth it does not take a very long line to fathom. But I can give you this as my own personal experience—I never entered any church with the spirit of God in my heart, to try to consider the leaders of that service, God's representatives, without receiving great spiritual good out of that service. In contrast to this statement I never entered a church building with the spirit of criticism in my heart but I found something to criticise about the minister and the service before I got through with it, and, furthermore, when I did enter a service in the spirit of criticism I always found that I received more harm from that service than good. If William E. Gladstone, with the greatest brain in all England, could sit Sunday after Sunday in the little church of Hawarden and get spiritual food from young, inexperienced rectors who came there to break for him the "bread of life," surely you can afford to honor the ministers of Jesus Christ as God's representatives.

But behaving yourself aright in church implies not only due respect to God's presence, in whose sanctuary you assemble, and to his representatives there, but also due respect to the strangers who come in to worship with you at your church altars. It not only means that we should bow before God's altars and in reverential tones say, "Our Father," but it also means that we should give a warm, loving, Christian welcome to God's children who would sit by our side. It means that no church is a consecrated Christian church unless all the men and women alike, whether clothed in silk or in homespun, whether rich or poor, whether master or servant, shall be cordially greeted with an open church door and an open church pew.

But, though Christian etiquette in the house of God should mean much, how many churches are sinfully trying to become the churches of class instead of the churches of a great Christian democracy? Can we not, one and all, be large hearted enough to know that there is only one true gospel aristocracy, and that belongs to the noble serving class which Jesus described when he said, "Whosoever will be chief among you, let him be your servant?" As you would never be rude to my child because you love me, so may we in our church etiquette never cast a slur upon God's children. May we never jostle or push any one away from us! We should all belong to the gospel clan. We should feel that we are all brothers and sisters in Christ and that, therefore, by the gospel fireside there shall be plenty of room for all the members of the gospel family.

Lastly, refined and consecrated church behavior is demonstrated as much in the way a congregation disperses as in the way it assembles. If I make a social call upon you and you are polite and respect me, you do not try to show your impatience even though I do stay a little longer time than I ought. You do not gape and yawn and take out your watch again and again to look what time it may be. You do not get up and go out into the hall and put on your overcoat and then hold your hat in your hand as though you were ready to run away at the first opportunity. If you acted thus I would certainly take the hint and leave as soon as possible. Neither should you be rude in church etiquette.

During the last part of the sermon you should not be sighing and turning around to watch the clock. During the last hymn and the last prayer you should remember that you are there to sing the praises of God, to hear his message or to commune with him, and you should not meanly steal that time away from him to button up your coat and fix your wraps and put on your gloves. From the beginning of the service to the end you should honor the church, the church altar, the sermon and the music, because in so doing you are honoring Christ.

As we began with the words, "That thou mayest know how thou oughtest to behave thyself in the house of God," let us close with the psalmist's words which he wrote for the temple when David sang, "I was glad when they said unto me, Let us go into the house of the Lord," he meant it. Let us prove by our actions and our observance of church etiquette that public worship is not a drudgery and a repulsive slavery, but a joy, a happiness and an opportunity for continuous gospel pleasure. Let us worship "the Lord in the beauty of holiness" with refined and consecrated church manners.

Agricultural Notes.

It is claimed that rye yields more nitrogen to the soil than does clover or any of its kind except the lupin.

In transplanting from the hotbed into flats use rich soil in the latter to push the plants along.

Plowing sandy soil compared with merely disking has proved profitable in tests with oats. The use of nine to ten pecks of seed per acre gave better results than the use of a smaller quantity.

A Strange Pirate Story.

In the museum at Kingston, Jamaica, there are some tattered ships' papers, brown with age and salt water, and a small tin canister. These articles attest the truth of the strangest pirate story ever told.

In 1799 the crew of the Nancy brig were apparently honest traders, but did some piracy now and then on the side. One day they found it necessary to go into Kingston for supplies. Before doing so they naturally removed all traces of their buccaneering trade. Among other things they threw overboard this tin canister stuffed with papers taken from ships they had sunk, with comments written on the margin by the pirate captain.

Later in the day a British frigate was becalmed near the spot, and the sailors spent their leisure catching sharks. Presently they hauled up a big fellow, cut him open and found the tin case with the papers inside. These were taken to the captain, who as soon as a breeze sprung up sailed into Kingston harbor, found the Nancy brig there and had the crew tried, convicted and hanged in chains at Port Royal.

There never was and never will be a universal panacea, in one remedy, for all ills to which flesh is heir— the very nature of many curatives being such that were the germs of other and differently seated disease rooted in the system of the patient—what would relieve one ill in turn would aggravate the other. We have, however, in Quinine Wine, when obtainable in sound, unadulterated state, a remedy for many and grievous ills. By its gradual and judicious use the frailest systems are led into convalescence and strength by the influence which Quinine exerts on nature's own restoratives. It relieves the drooping spirits of those with whom a chronic state of morbid despondency and lack of interest in life is a disease, and by tranquilizing the nerves, disposes to sound and refreshing sleep—imparts vigor to the action of the blood, which, being stimulated, course through the veins, strengthening the healthy animal functions of the system, thereby making activity a necessary result, strengthening the frame and giving life to the digestive organs, which naturally demand incresed substance—result improved appetite. Northrop & Lyman of Toronto, have given to the public their Superior Quinine Wine at the usual rate, and, gauged by the opinions of scientists, the wine approaches nearest perfection of any in the market. All druggists sell it.

by local applications as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

FAMOUS FOR FAT.

Daniel Lambert, Who Died In 1809, Got Too Obese to Wabble.

The fame of Daniel Lambert as a champion among fat men in England, if not in the world, still remains unrivaled. Daniel was born at Leicester in 1770 and died in 1809 at Stamford. The grandson of a celebrated cockfighter and addicted to sport throughout his life, his dimensions were not extraordinary, and his habits were not different from those of other lads until he was fourteen years old. When twenty-three years of age, however, he turned the scale at thirty-two stone, and, although he is recorded to have been able to walk from Woolwich to London, at the time of his death, in his fortieth year, he had attained the prodigious weight of fifty-two stone, or 728 pounds, and was more or less helpless. He was a modest man, and when he had achieved physical greatness fame was thrust upon him. He was for a long time unwilling to be made a show of, but he gained a more than local reputation, and people traveled from far to see him, resorting to various devices in order to be allowed to do so. At length the prospect of profit overcame his resolution, and for four years before his death he exhibited himself in London and in the provinces.

He was apparently a man of some wit, for once, before he permitted the public to gaze upon him, an inquisitive person had gained access to his presence by pretending to be a fellow sportsman interested in the pedigree of a mare, whereupon Lambert promptly replied, "She was bred by Impertinence out of Curiosity." Before the days of Daniel Lambert, Edward Bright of Malden was a well known fat man, although his name no longer lingers as a household word. He died in 1750 at the age of thirty years, weighing forty-two stone and seven pounds, and is stated to have been an active man till a year or two before his death, when his corpulency so overpowered his strength that his life was a burden and his death a deliverance. Both Bright and Lambert seem to have been genial, good humored fellows and very popular among those who visited them. Indeed popularity seems to be the lot of the corpulent in fact as well as in fiction. The heroes of fiction, however, have the advantage in the matter of lasting glory, and the names of Daniel Lambert and the fat boy of Peckham sink into insignificance beside those of Falstaff and the fat boy in "Pickwick."—London Standard.

Applied Science.

When James Russell Lowell was minister to England, he was guest at a banquet at which one of the speakers was Sir Frederick Bramwell. Sir Frederick was to respond to the toast, "Applied Science." It was long after midnight when the toast was proposed, and several speakers were still to be called. Rising in his place, the scientist said:

"At this hour of the night, or, rather, of the morning, my only interest in applied science is to apply the tip of the match to the side of the box upon which alone it ignites and to apply the flame so obtained to the wick of a bedroom candle."

A moment later Lowell tossed a paper across the table to him bearing these two lines:

Oh, brief Sir Frederick, would that all could catch
Your happy talent and supply your match!

A Pair of Misers.

Mr. and Miss Dancer were reputed the most notorious misers in the eighteenth century. The manner in which this couple were found after death to have disposed of their wealth was even more strange than could have been their method of acquiring it. The total value was £20,000, which was thus disposed of: Two thousand five hundred pounds was found under a dunghill, £500 in an old coat nailed to the manger in the stable, £600 in notes was hidden away in an old teapot, the chimney yielded £2,000 stowed in nineteen different crevices, and several jugs filled with coin were secreted in the stable loft.

England's Magna Charta.

That shriveled parchment, the charter of English freedom, was saved, it is said, by the veriest chance from the scissors of a merciless tailor. Struck by the great seals attached to a piece of paper the tailor was cutting up, Sir Robert Cotton stopped the man and gave him fourpence for the document he would have destroyed. It is now in the British museum, lined and mounted and in a glass case, the seal a shapeless mass of wax and the characters quite illegible.—London Mail.

Said Maid to Mistress.

"Where have you been, Jane?"

"I've been to a meeting of the Girls' Friendly society, ma'am," was the maid's reply.

"Well, what did the lady say to you?"

"Please, ma'am, she said I wasn't to give you warning, as I meant to. She said I was to look upon you as my thorn—and bear it."

Willingness.

"But would you die for me?" persisted the romantic maiden.

"I would," replied the frank and elderly suitor. "Even now I am using a high priced preparation warranted to restore hair to its original color."

Dodd's Kidney Pills Cured Him of Stone in the Kidneys.

Mr. S. A. Cassidy, the Well-known Sportsman, Tells Why He is Grateful to the Great Canadian Kidney Remedy.

Ottawa., Ont., Mar. 21—(Special).—Few people in the Capital are as well known and popular as Mr. "Sam" Cassidy, proprietor of the Bijou Hotel, Metcalf Street. As a hunter and fisherman of more than local reputation, he has become known to followers of the rod and gun all over the country, and many of the members of parliament who make an annual sojourn here are counted among his personal friends.

The news, therefore, that he has found a complete cure for a dangerous malady will give general satisfaction. Speaking of it he says:

"My friends all know that I have been troubled for years with Stone in the Kidneys; that though I consulted the best physicians and tried nearly every remedy I could think of, I was unable to get better.

"Some time ago a friend told me Dodd's Kidney Pills would cure me. As a last resort I tried them and they have cured me. I cannot imagine more severe suffering than one endures who has stone in the Kidneys, and I feel the warmest gratitude towards Dodd's Kidney Pills."

If the disease is of the Kidneys or from the Kidneys, Dodd's Kidney Pills will cure it.

Webster and Jenny Lind.

The following quaint story of Daniel Webster and Jenny Lind is told in "Washington, the Capital City:"

It chanced that on the day of Jenny Lind's appearance several members of the cabinet and senate were the guests at dinner of the Russian minister, and the concert was half over when Webster and the other members of the party entered the hall. When the applause with which they were received had subsided the second part of the concert was opened by the gifted Swede with "Hail, Columbia!"

Deeply moved by the patriotic air, Webster at the close of the first verse rose and added his rich, sonorous voice to the chorus. His wife, who sat behind him, pulled at his coat tail to make him stop singing, but at the close of each verse the volunteer basso joined in, and none could tell whether Lind, Webster or the audience was most delighted.

As the last notes of the song died away Webster, hat in hand, made a profound bow to the singer. Jenny Lind, blushing at the honor, courtesied, while the audience applauded to the echo. Webster, not to be outdone in politeness, bowed again. Again Lind courtesied, the house applauded, and this was repeated nine times.

The Meaning of Mess.

The use of the word mess for dining room is a remnant of a custom quite common in Anglo-Norman times. Mess, from the French mets (meat or a dish of food) and the Latin mensa (a table), was the meat prepared in common (compare the collegiate word "commons") for four persons sitting at a separate table. Guests at dinners and other ceremonial occasions were divided for general convenience into such groups.

From this the word came to be used as equivalent to four in other matters. Shakespeare speaks of Henry's four sons as a mess, "Where are your mess of sons?" and in "Love's Labor's Lost" we find, "I confess that you three fools lacked me to make up the mess."

From the fact that soldiers and sailors are always catered for in companies, according to rank, the survival of the word among them is quite natural. The same practice is still maintained in the London inns of court.

The Lemon as Medicine.

The value of lemons in the treatment of both rheumatism and consumption is now known to be very great. The treatment is to begin with one or two a day and gradually increase the number. In one case of rheumatism twenty-five lemons a day were the dose for a time. As a preventive of illness, however, a half a lemon a day is all that should be taken—that is, if taken every day year in and year out. A half a lemon in a cup of hot water taken an hour before breakfast (without any sugar) will annihilate the darkest of dark brown tastes in one's mouth. If you make a practice of eating more butter and sugar than is good for you take lemon and hot water every morning.

Peppis, Peeples or What?

A correspondent (an American, we presume) writes to ask how he shall pronounce the name of the excellent diarist we occasionally quote. "Do you," he asks, "call Pepys 'Peppis' or 'Peepies' or 'Chumley' or what?" Even among contemporary London talkers there is disagreement, but the question should be settled by one Mr. James Carcasse, whom Pepys kindly took in his boat to view the great fire and who returned the compliment by a somewhat virulent set of verses in his volume "Lucida Intervalla."

Get thee behind me, then, dumb devil, begone,
The Lord hath Ephthatha said to my tongue.
Him I must praise who open'd hath my lips,
Sent me from navy to the ark by Pepys.

The rhythm is dreadful, but the rhyme is conclusive, and the man who rowed in the same boat with the diarist called him "Pipps."—London Chronicle.

The Fernie Free Press

ESTABLISHED 1898.

H.G. WATSON, Editor — J. R. WALLACE, Manager

THE FERNIE FREE PRESS, FERNIE BRITISH COLUMBIA

FRIDAY, MARCH 25, 1904.

THE OLD TOPIC.

At the Board of Trade meeting on Tuesday sufficient information on the subject of incorporation will doubtless be submitted by the special committee to justify the Board in taking a decided stand either for or against the proposed measure. If the vote is favorable the next step will naturally be the appointment of an accountant to go carefully into the figures to ascertain more particularly what the approximate revenue and expenditure for the town will be.

The matter is an important one requiring careful deliberation. Self interest, so far as the direct effect of the measure is concerned, should be eliminated from these deliberations, and the general welfare of the town should be substituted in its place; and after all, the indirect effects reach the farthest and count for the most in the long run. The taxation question, for instance, appeals peculiarly to the self interest of the rate-payer, but if the taxation be higher than at present, which does not appear to be certain as yet, there may be advantages acruing from incorporation that may repay the rate-payer many times over for the excess he is called upon to pay in taxation. Take as an example the fire protection of the town. Under the direct control of a representative council and with some further financial assistance the usefulness and effectiveness of this organization can be greatly increased. What this may mean can only be appreciated at those times when a serious conflagration threatens to wipe out the town. In times like those the few dollars spent in extra taxation seem very paltry when compared to the thousands of dollars at stake. In fact the extreme jeopardy hanging over this town from fire should alone be sufficient to convince every business man of the necessity for incorporation.

The argument given by "Citizen" in favor of leaving the residents on the east side of the track as they are is a new one to us and seems to have some foundation. The town does not want a a lot of shacks inside its limits and at any rate the revenue derived from them would be insignificant. Compactness in a townsite is desirable as the expenditure saved in avoiding to take in a scattered area is proportionately greater than the revenue gained in extra taxation fees, etc.

EDITORIAL NOTES

SAYS the Cranbrook Herald. "It grinds a newspaper man to have a merchant suggest a roast on eastern department houses, who gets his printing done east where printers receive $12 a week, instead of $20 as paid by the Herald." Consistency is a jewel. The merchant who does not support the local press can scarcely grumble at the people who do not support the local merchants,

THE Board of Trade meeting called for Tuesday evening should be attended by every member. The importance of the subject under discussion is admitted by all. The initiative in the matter of incorporation naturally falls to the lot of the Board of Trade as the only representative body in the town. This organization has grappled with many matters touching the welfare of the town and its untiring efforts have resulted in much good being accomplished. The present movement, if brought to a successful issue will result in a large share of its present responsibilities being transferred to the shoulders of a town council.

A man prominent in railway business in our hearing the other day touched on the advantages of a joint depot at Fernie when the Great Northern extends to this town. The matter of course is one which more particularly affects the two railway companies concerned, and doubtless their action in connection with it will be governed solely by that circumstance. The companies will not lose sight of the fact that at this point a great amount of transhipment from one line to another will be necessary, in freight, express and passenger service. The advantage gained by having the two depots in one must therefore be apparent, and not only in the question of reducing the distance of transportation from one line to the other but in the general reduction of the staff required.

COMMUNICATION

To the Editor:—

Will you kindly find space in your valuable paper for the following view on the incorporation scheme, which is again taking hold with renewed vigor. The writer in a general sense is in sympathy with the view as published in your editorial columns from time to time, but in one or two particulars he cannot agree.

To include the land east of the C.P.R. tracks within the municipality would burden the town to a much greater extent that any revenue derived from that quarter could ever possibly equal. If incorporated within the town the ratepayers on the east side would be justified in demanding police protection, electric light service, water service, fire protection, and sanitation, as well as expenditure for streets and sidewalks. In return for which the town would receive only a mere pittance of revenue in taxation.

The other plan, of driving those people into the present townsite through the Coal Company cancelling their land leases, would not have the effect generally claimed for it. Doubtless one of the first by-laws adopted by the municipality will be one making it necessary to take out a building permit before a man can erect a residence. This by-law will call for certain conditions respecting size etc which the large majority of the present residents on the east side would refuse to comply with. The result would be disastrous to the town in more ways than one. Many of them are trained in only one occupation,—ovenwork. Rather than be forced to erect what to them would be expensive homes they would leave for other fields of labor. The town would lose many supporters, and a large industry, for a time at least, might be seriously crippled.

Experience and observation teaches that compact areas make the best nucleus for incorporation; as the town grows in its outskirts new suburbs can taken into the municipality. Many an ambitious young town makes the fatal mistake in the start of grasping too much area, of reaching out into the scattered surroundings with the view of securing within its control every possible revenue-producing industry or property, but losing sight of the enormous liabilities the town is thus assuming for these outlying districts each have their requirements which in justice the town cannot deny. Roads must be built, perhaps bridges must be constructed and the public utilities of the town proper must in a greater or less degree be extended to the limits.

If Fernie avoids this mistake there can be no reasonable doubt as to the success of the undertaking. The town is solid and progressive. The revenue from other sources than realty taxation would be heavy. In fact the present rate would be sufficient to enable the municipality to start a sinking fund for the purchasing of water and light systems. Thorough investigation by an expert will establish this fact.

The present townsite is compact. More good residence district can be added on the west or north. The people east of the track, if allowed to retain their holdings until such time as the Coal Company will require the land for the extension of its industries, will continue to spend their money in the town and at the same time will be no burden to the town. The red light district might be transferred across the track and brought under local control. If revenue is desired from a brewery or other business located outside of the limits a tax could be imposed for the privilege of selling their goods within the town. In conclusion, the time is ripe for incorporation, and under careful and wise leadership it cannot fail in the accomplishment of its high purposes.

CITIZEN.

Fernie, March 22nd, 1904.

BLOCKADE RELIEVED.

The big snow slides on the Great Northern near Swinton was cleared at 5 o'clock Saturday evening and traffic was resumed. The blockade was relieved several days earlier than was counted on by the superintendent. In fact it was announced on Thursday that a week would be required to do the work. The snow was hardest however at the point where the operations were commenced and as the work progressed it became softer and the rotaries were able to do their share. A train of 49 empties were rushed on to Fernie and loaded with coke but even this made little difference in the stock of coke piled up along the ovens.

The Aaron Johnson Dramatic Company played "Finnigan's Fortune" and "Hazel Kirke" on Friday and Saturday before slim audiences. The shows were very creditable and deserved better patronage than they received.

WELL AGAIN.

The many friends of John Blount will be pleased to learn that he has entirely recovered from his attack of rheumatism. Chamberlain's Pain Balm cured him after the best doctors in the town (Monon, Ind.) had failed to give relief. The prompt relief from pain which this liniment affords is alone worth many times its cost. Sold by all Druggists and Dealers.

Frank was breaking on a freight and when the train was backing away from the coal shutes after coaling up he got caught between the engine and the side of the shute, injuring himself across the hips. He was brought to the Fernie hospital where he will likely spend three or four weeks under the doctor's care.

At a well attended public meeting held at Cranbrook last week to further discuss incorporation the views of the C. P. R. were expressed in a letter from Mr. Dennis, the company's land commissioner. The letter stated frankly that the C. P. R. regretted that the laws of B. C. did not provide for local improvements without the full and extended powers of a first-class city, yet they realized that Cranbrook had grown so rapidly that it had arrived at the stage where something must be done in way of local government and local improvement. Naturally it would increase the taxes to be paid by the C. P. R. yet the advantage to the town should be of such a material nature as to offset any increase in taxation. A committee of seven was appointed to gather all possible information on the subject and report to a general meeting of the ratepayers.

THE MODES TO COME

EARLY SPRING FASHIONS AND THEIR SUGGESTIONS.

Two Southern Resort Costumes That Illustrate Typical Features of the Season—A Tasteful Tailor Gown For First Wear.

Already the wheel of social life in cities has slackened in its speed. The exodus of people who seek warmer climes to avoid the northern rigors of late winter and early spring is well under way. These sojourns necessitate a fresh supply of suitable garments, and it is in the provisions made for these by the modistes that spring fashions bud and we get a forecast of the modes to come. Some of these earliest productions are shown in the cuts. The two designs of the first cut, destined originally for a southern resort, also suggest early spring costume for colder latitudes.

FOR FIRST SPRING WEAR.

One costume is in beige cloth trimmed with embossed galloon or embroidery in light blue, stripped with darker blue and sprinkled with white diamond lozenges in openwork. Long tassels fall from the epaulet trimming and the short front tabs. Rows of stitching in blue silk finish the skirt that just touches the ground and the fichu shaped pelerine. On the skirt is a double pointed flounce. Blue velvet furnishes the wide belt and the binding for the cream mousquetaire cuffs. The neckband, with its long tab, is in venetian red panne. Mole gray velvet frills bound with black finish the feather muff. Even more springlike is a pinkish cloth speckled with white and various colors, set off with bands of deep red velvet. The tab collaret in the lighter shade of pink, outlined with red velvet and fastened with irregular straps of white cloth, is bound with red. The neckband, collar and pointed wristlets are in white silk lawn elaborately embroidered. Both the bodice and skirt are draped and gathered on either side of a flat panel.

A tailor costume in three shades of wood brown cheviot or zibeline, trimmed with scroll appliques of dark cloth, appears in the second cut, the skirt and balloon sleeves being carried out in fawn colored delaine or silk. The brown hat is faced with swansdown and brightened up with flamingo pink ostrich tips.

The sleeve sets the hall mark of style on today's costumes. Its close upper line and the multitudinous frills and generous proportions of its lower half are quite familiar. The mousquetaire cuff and gauntlet wrist of our first cut are, however, significant. One wearies even of graceful frills, and the very full lower sleeve cannot be called convenient. Some sleeves have already been made in mousquetaire effect, though on rather broad lines. Another whirl of the wheel and we may see the tight sleeve again.

AMY VARNUM.

Wedding Innovations.

When a recent bride, instead of being pelted with rice and old shoes, received a perfect storm of rose leaves, which showered the bridal coach and pair with fragrant petals, the guests, though aghast at such an overturning of traditions, were filled with admiration for the pretty scene and heartily joined in the implied wishes for a rosy future, says a writer in the Designer. By the way, a leaf in wedding lore has been turned back, and once more the bride's bouquet is in the old fashioned round form instead of the shower which has prevailed of late years. At least this harking back to the older shape has been exemplified at several of the fashionable winter weddings.

USEFUL SPRING WRINKLES

To Lay That Refractory New Carpet Smoothly and With a Calm Spirit.

The secret of carpet laying is simple, but it is all the more worth passing on for the benefit of other homemakers. All depends on the order in which the different sides of the carpet are tacked. First, tack across the end of the room, across the end of the breadths of carpet—mind, not along their length. Tack this end firmly and rather closely; then take the opposite end, leaving the two sides loose until the end has been stretched tightly and tacked in place. By taking the opposite end for the second row of tacks one can pull the carpet true, while the average carpet put down by inexperienced hands and tacked along one end and then down the side is very apt to be pulled askew. The two ends fastened, the carpet is true to the room, and the work of tacking the sides is soon accomplished. These do not require tacking as closely as the ends except in front of doors.

Another notion which may have some value to the younger housewives is this: If the old fashioned rag carpet is used in kitchen or dining room—and there is nothing which will stand hard wear better—do not have it sewed. The breadths laid in place and slightly lapped will stay in place fairly well, and they can be lifted and cleaned so much more easily that it is worth while to leave them loose. When cleaned, each breadth should be pinned firmly on a clothesline, with clothespins at frequent intervals. Whip the lower edge of the breadth thoroughly and then unpin and hang it up by the other edge and whip again. In this way a rag carpet too heavy to be well cleaned at home can be handled and got even cleaner than is done by the carpet cleaning establishments, even by a woman who has no masculine arm to assist her.—Amelia H. Botsford in Ladies' World.

Old English Silver Door Knobs.

In one of the largest houses in New York all the door knobs are made of old English silver. They are round and carved in old fashioned designs. They are something entirely new and one of the latest fads in interior decoration, according to an exchange. The knobs are small and well shaped. This sounds like a most expensive fad, but silver is cheap, and as the knobs need not be solid they could be copied at a small cost. Glass knobs have long been the rage. They are usually of fine cut glass and are most attractive. Large lamps made of this same old silver are often seen this winter. They have large silver transparent shades lined with silk that are really something new.

Good Polishing Preparations.

A good polish for brass, nickel plate and pewter can be procured of a druggist under the name of tripoli. It is an exceedingly fine powder made from small shells and is sold for a few cents per pound. Moistened with sweet oil, it is used like whiting upon silver. With these two simple materials, whiting and tripoli, on hand the housekeeper will have no necessity for special preparations. Tripoli is the best cleansing material for brass bedsteads, andirons and fireplace fittings, as well as for exposed plumbing and for bronzes.

Oyster Cocktails.

Remove the round muscle from thirty small oysters, rinse and drain them and set in the icebox until chilled. Mix together one teaspoonful and a half of freshly grated horseradish, three scant tablespoonfuls of lemon juice, one tablespoonful of vinegar, one tablespoonful and a half of worcestershire, four teaspoonfuls of tomato catchup and two-thirds of a teaspoonful of salt. Add the oysters and divide among six glasses.—Table Talk.

Lemon Tea.

Into a small cupful of freshly steeped black tea drop a thin slice of lemon peel and pulp, but no seeds. The tea may be taken plain or sweetened with sugar, but of course no milk is to be used. This is the popular Russian beverage.

The New Lingerie.

Airy nainsook and fine, long cloth underwear is made beautiful with any amount of flouncings, tucks, lace insertions and frills. The newest camisoles have sleeve straps that tie on the shoulder with pretty ribbons. Besides the lace trimmed lingerie the new 1904 models comprise the latest French fashion of embroidered underlinen. This embroidery, sometimes carried out in openwork with buttonholed edge and also in satin stitch, has an excessive quaintness and delicacy, especially as applied to chemises and camisoles, of which the necks and sleeve straps have scalloped edges outlined in deep satin stitch.

NOVEL SUGGESTIONS.

Surprise Souffle—Serving Savories. Crab Flakes.

From Paris, the center of good living and entertaining, come the tidings that pink teas, yellow dinners and such color fads are no longer the fashion. Freak foods and decorations are put aside, and plain elegance reigns supreme once more. Novelties nevertheless are still looked for and sometimes adopted with exceedingly poor judgment, similar to that evidenced some few years ago, when the fad of serving hot chocolate with ice cream came to be quite en vogue in New York. This was probably an imitation of the Norwegian or Siberian omelet or, as it is sometimes more pertinently termed, "surprise souffle." If not artistic, this dish is at least original in its conception and withal easy of preparation.

A piece of sponge cake one inch thick is trimmed and placed on a dish that will stand the fire. Some ice cream, preferably in brick shape, is set on top of the cake, and both are then coated rather thickly with the souffle preparation, which may be flavored either with vanilla or lemon. Six or seven minutes before the omelet is to be served it is put into a brisk oven and when cooked is served on the same dish on which it was baked. Upon serving, the dish is passed at the table, and great is the surprise of those partaking to find ice cream in the center of the omelet.

A variation of this dish is to lay on top of the cake some stewed fruit, which may be composed of different sorts, such as pears, peaches, pineapples or cherries.

The English custom of serving savories at the end of the dinner is getting to be more prevalent of late in the United States. Different cheese preparations, such as souffles, ramekins, cheese straws, etc., were served here years ago, but the request for various toasts, especially spread with fish pastes and purees, is now made more frequently.

Crab flakes, which can be obtained, already picked and in fine condition, from the principal fish dealers, have now replaced the stuffed crab or crab croquette almost entirely. They are convenient in the preparation of various chafing dish forms, in which they replace lobster and oysters.—Adolph Meyer, Chef of Union Club, New York, in Boston Cooking School Magazine.

A HINT TO THE HANDY MAN

A Homemade Clothes Hamper, Convenient and Attractive.

Only a housewife knows the joys of having a roomy hamper into which soiled clothes may be thrown "'gainst" washing day. The wicker affairs that are sold in the stores for this purpose are very nice indeed, but expensive. Now, here is a homemade hamper that looks very attractive, is just as convenient as one of the most expensive "store" hampers and actually costs but a few cents and a little time and taste, says a writer in Ladies' World.

A grocery or dry goods box of the right size and shape and that is constructed of thin boards is selected, and a cover is hinged to it, the hinges being placed upon the inside. The outside of the box and the top of the cover are now to be covered with some pretty cloth—cast aside silkoline curtains are very nice for the purpose—which is carried over the edges of the box and cover and neatly tacked inside with round headed brass tacks. There is often a niche in the wall of the bathroom or laundry into which such a hamper can be fitted. In such a case the dimensions of the box can be arranged to suit the space to be filled. The illustration shows this useful homemade article.

Instead of Soap.

A prominent beauty expert recommends women whose skin is fine in texture and easily roughened and irritated to use the following wash in place of soap and water on the face: Tincture of myrrh, five grams; rosewater, 500 grams; tincture of benzoin, five grams; tincture of quillaia, sufficient for emulsion. This, he says, should be applied to the face with a piece of fine linen. The face should be dried with a circular, upward movement, with a piece of fine, dry linen.—New York Tribune.

Household Brevities.

Cocoanut oil is one of the best of frying mediums.

Sew strips of stiff buckram along the edges of rugs which have a tendency to curl up.

Onions, eaten raw, with bread and butter, make a capital complexion clearer and nightcap, especially for the nervous person.

Tough ducks or fowls ought to be steamed for an hour, then roasted.

Some teachers of cookery beat eggs on a soup plate, using a silver fork instead of an egg beater.

Kerosene in the boiler whitens clothes safely, especially such as are yellow from long lying. Use a tablespoonful to a gallon of water.

A pretty notion is to use a single high champagne glass as a bonbon dish.

A HOME OF TODAY.

A FEW ORIGINAL DETAILS OF A HOUSE SMALL, BUT ARTISTIC.

The Exterior Coloring—Windows, Their Shape and Style—Plain Lines and Finish of Woodwork—A Wood Fire In the Living Hall.

Can a house of moderate cost meet more than the practical needs of the day? A house small, but artistic, which was designed and built during the past year, answers this question in a convincing affirmative, according to the Delineator, from which a few details in regard to the house are gleaned, as follows:

The exterior coloring of a house small, but artistic, is the natural gray of shingles on the first story, the same tone appearing on the plaster work that covers the second and third stories. Dark green shutters and window casings contrast with this neutral color on the body of the building.

Windows—their size, shape and style—have an important part in the interior effect of the house. William Morris makes a special plea for the fitness of small window panes as against one large sheet of glass:

You may see how people feel this by their admiration of the tracery of a gothic window or the latticework of a Cairo house. Our makeshift substitute for these beauties must be the moderate sized panes of glass set in solid sash bars. We shall then, at all events, feel as if we were indoors on a cold day, as if we had a room over our heads.

The ordinary ornamental wood turning is discarded, and plain, dignified lines take the place. In the living hall two heavy beams are exposed in the ceiling.

An excellent finish for woodwork has been accomplished in the living hall with an inexpensive brown green stain that is left unpolished, making a quiet background as valuable in effect as oak of many years' service.

The expense of chimney making has been decreased without depriving the living hall of an open fire by introducing in a wide opening in the wall a modern Franklin stove patterned after the one invented by the famous philosopher. Above the mantelshelf is a design in broad bands of wood set against the plaster, and below is a frill, or valentje, such as the Dutch housewives install on Saturday nights in preparing for the day of rest.

The slight irregularity in the ceiling lines of the front chamber illustrated gives a touch of quaintness, and the beading added to the woodwork is a variation from that adopted on the first floor. The windows are curtained with swiss muslin, a frill running across the top, with straight lengths hanging at the sides. A frieze of pink roses on a latticework is finished at the bottom with a narrow white painted shelf. The bed is covered with a pink and white dimity spread, and small rugs of cotton strips woven like the old rag carpets are laid on the floor.

A real triumph of housewifely ingenuity is the bureau covered with a linen taffeta that is fastened to the wood with close set rows of brass headed tacks.

AFGHAN KNITTING.

Some Novel and Attractive Effects In Hemstitching and Drawn Work.

Baby afghans or any articles knitted of zephyr may be finished off in drawnwork effect. The formula is simple. Drop one or two stitches after the full length has been knit, ravel to the lower end and hemstitch the edges or work a simple design in knot stitch. Zephyr or silk thread can be used equally well. Thread of contrasting color is effective, as blue knitting and white hemstitching.

A Strip For a Baby Afghan.—Cast on 22 stitches and knit across plain; then knit 2, purl 18 and knit 2. Knit across plain. Back and forth purl and knit plain the same 18 stiches and knit plain the two edge stitches on both sides. When the strip is as long as desired, drop the two stitches in the middle, ravel them down to the two bottom stitches, hemstitch both edges and catch the center threads in little three thread groups with the knot stitch. Alternate stripes of white and blue make a handsome combination.

AFGHAN STITCH.

When making the hemstitching, if zephyr be used, care must be taken not to draw the knots too quickly or the wool will break, but at the same time the knotting must be done with sufficient firmness to make the work durable. If knitting silk be used, of course this carefulness will not be necessary.

Still another novel effect may be made in this new kind of hemstitching by using two strands of zephyr or silk of different colors for the knotting. For instance, if the afghan be made of white yarn the knotting may be done with pale pink and white silk or yarn, giving the daintiest effect imaginable and an altogether new one as well. If it is not possible to obtain a needle with an eye large enough to carry the two strands, a small bodkin may be employed. The silk lining may be of either blue or pink silk.

Any of the yarns suitable for afghan making may be used for this knitting, but Spanish or Germantown yarn will be found especially nice. Coarse steel needles are used, or, if it be desired to make loosely knitted stitches, fine bone or ivory needles may be substituted. The model illustrated is knitted on steel needles. The drawn work is wide enough to permit of ribbons being run through it, this producing a very pretty effect.—Designer.

IN THE SIMPLER STYLE.

An Evening or Ball Frock of Interest to Clever Amateur Modistes.

The favor accorded to gauging and flounces in thin materials is shown in an evening or simple ball gown of crepe de chine or silk muslin. The waist, according to the decree of fashion for evening toilets, is encircled with a deep slightly draped corselet belt in rose colored panne.

These bodices, cut right off the shoulder, have an uncomfortable habit of slipping or feeling as if they were doing so unless the shoulder straps are tight. The insertion of a piece of silk elastic about half an inch wide at the shoulder strap affords an excellent grip—welcome for dancing anyway—without any perceptible pressure.

Veal Loaf.

Chop two pounds of veal, add one-fourth of a pound of chopped salt pork, one cupful of cracker crumbs, two eggs, two teaspoonfuls each of pepper, salt and sage. Mix, press into a pan and bake. Serve cold.

THE SMART FIGURE.

An Effect of Height and Slenderness In Spite of Full Skirts.

Despite the fullness of the fashionable skirt the following promises to be a season for slender women. The full, unlined skirt is made of material that drapes in graceful, clinging lines. The hips must be suppressed as much as possible in the up to date figure. The fullness of the skirt can be made to begin below them.

However broad the shoulders, the curved, drooping line from neck to elbow must be achieved in some fashion if one is to be "smartly" dressed.

A blouse or waist that illustrates all the necessary points of style, but is more on the neat and practical order than many, is shown in the cut. It was designed as a cloth bodice to be worn with cloth skirts whose very elaborate lace trimmed bodices were not suitable for simple occasions. As will be noticed, everything about it droops. This one, being of cloth, is cut with as little fullness as possible and is composed of two materials only, the cloth and the velours mousseline that forms the slashings in the bodice and inside the sleeves.

Such a blouse adapts itself with a certain harmony to almost any skirt and does not manifest that aloofness from the rest of the costume which the separate bodice is apt to assume.

An indication of what is to be the up to date figure is found in the following from one of the fashion journals:

"We are suffering a relapse from the nominal corset, which was really little more than a girdle, and are now laced into corsets resembling a coat of mail, so heavily are they boned and steel braced. They reach from the bust to a point well below the hip line, and the newest models are laced down each side of the front steels instead of in the back, which is unbroken with any openings."

What can one say of the hundred and one sorts of lace that now give beauty and individuality to dress? Especially to be desired are the cape collars, the stoles, the handkerchiefs and the scarfs. In the latter one may have the most priceless, but also the simplest, of laces. The long and lovely scarfs in delicate tambour lace accord gracefully with the 1830 modes of evening bodice now in vogue.

Coarse brown linen decorated in oriental fashion with many colored silk embroidery furnishes striking stock collars and cuffs that add a very rich touch to any plain costume.

The depressing effect of the long shoulder on arm action is partly counteracted by a wide and deep armhole.

Striking colors, such as orange and green, appear in new thin fabrics for evening dress.

The touch of black which adds such distinction to a gown when well used is promised for the new season.

ETHEL W. BUSH.

Latest Fad In Men's Ties.

One of the very latest fads for men is to wear bright colored neckties with their frock coats in the afternoon, says the New Idea Magazine. The white and dull gray ties have gone out of fashion almost entirely, and bright red, light blue, salmon pink and canary yellow are now the colors most worn. The well dressed man should wear a small four-in-hand made of heavily ribbed, corded silk. Bright plaids made of surah silk are also much in vogue and are considered very smart and becoming. The ascot tie is being worn again, and one of the newest models seen not long ago was made of bright changeable blue and green silk. This tie was worn at an afternoon reception with a single breasted cutaway coat. Turndown collars, not too high, are also much in fashion this winter and are being worn almost entirely, except for evening wear, when the high collar is the proper thing to wear with a dress or dinner coat.

Fashion's Echoes.

The revival of the styles of 1830 has made an enormous change in a very short time, and hips, once so much desired, are now emphatically tabooed.

Mohair, either plain or figured, forms many smart and serviceable spring gowns.

Heavy mercerized cottons hold favor for wash waists.

Ivory and rose pink are lovely shades in evening dress velvets.

The vogue of the marabou stole, chic and becoming, is undiminished.

A little spray of gold gauze flowers and foliage is a novel ornament for the hair.

Very attractive in corduroy is a soft dove color.

The black cloth gown promises to be extremely smart this season.

Sunburst plaiting is much used in evening dresses and opera wraps.

CHINESE BLOCKADE RUNNERS SUNK

No Russians Stays South of The Yalu River.

RUNNING THE BLOCKADE

Czar's Troops Have all Vacated Corea—Another Rumor and Denial of Port Arthur's Evacuation. Chinese Reports Confirmed.

The advance of the Japanese army is forcing the Russians to evacuate New Chwang and fall back on Mukden, which is strongly fortified. Admiral Togo reports that the crew of the sunken Russian destroyer was rescued by the Japanese fleet.

A dispatch from Rome says :—The minister of marine has received a dispatch from the Italian agent in Tien Tsin, stating that there is now no sign of Russian soldiers remaining south of the Yalu river.

BLOCKADE RUNNERS SUNK.

Several junks and small steamers are running the blockade into Port Arthur and carrying provisions. None of these blockade runners have been captured, although several had narrow escapes. Two were sunk by mistake by the Russians.

VICTIMS TO RUSSIAN FIRE.

The Russian official list of Japanese vessels sunk or disabled includes the following : The battleship Shakishima and the cruiser Tsushima, both repairing at Sasebo; the cruiser Takashibo, sunk off Chemulpo; the cruiser Mutana, sunk off Chefoo; an unknown cruiser, sunk off Chemulpo; and six torpedo boats.

RUMOR OF EVACUATION.

Persistent rumors are current :to the effect that the Russians have burned and evacuated Port Arthur and Dalny, and are retiring up the penninsula.

Telegrams received at Shanghai from Russian sources at Tien Tsin and from Admiral Makharoff at Port Arthur absolutely deny the report that the Russians have evacuated the place.

FENG HUNG CHENG OCCUPATION

Details are unobtainable, but constant Chinese reports confirm the previous one of Japanese occupation of Feng Hung Cheng. Russians are buying up all the available foodstuffs at Yinkow. There is great scarcity of everything. Cossacks are scouting fifty miles west of the Liao river.

PORT ARTHUR LEFT TO ITS FATE.

A naval fight occurred off Port Arthur on Sunday in which the Russian cruiser Diana was damaged by shells from Japanese warships.

It is strongly believed at Tokio that the Russian fleet abandoned Port Arthur after the fourth attack was made upon it by the Japanese fleet, and that it is endeavoring to reach Vladivostock.

A Port Arthur dispatch says '—All is quiet in the Port Arthur district, and no news has been received here from the scene of the land operations, where the movements of the opposing forces are evidently confined to reconnoitering.

The report from New Chwang that four Russian steamers were sunk at the entrance to Port Arthur after the removal of the battleship Retvizan is authoritatively denied at St. Petersburg.

JAPS' ESTIMATE OF THE COST.

Japanese financiers estimate the cost of the war at $265,000,000 a year. Japan is in a position to maintain the war for a year and a half without being driven to borrow money abroad.

FOUR CRUISERS DAMAGED.

The cruisers which took part in the bombardment of Vladivostock have arrived at Sasebo; they include the Iwate, the Idzumo, the Chitase, the Kakagi, the Asma and the Ekzumo. The flagship officers captured on the Russian merchantman Ekaterinoslav report having seen four Japanese cruisers arrive at Sasebo from Port Arthur, badly damaged, one having her bows shot away. There were also two transports with wounded men on board.

DESPERATE FIGHTING.

The last fight at Port Arthur between Japanese torpedo boats and a Russian destroyer was a desperate one. The Japanese torpedo boats and the Russian boats were much closer together than reported by Admiral Togo, and at one time the battle was the fiercest of the present war. After a hand to hand fight the four Japanese torpedo boats surrounded the Stereguschetchi (which was finally destroyed) and another Russian destroyer, and a desperate fight ensued in which the Japanese showed the utmost bravery. The Russians repeatedly tried to break through the Japanese cordon and to reach the harbor. In this one boat was successful, but the Stereguschetchi was so damaged that she could not escape. Twenty dead Russians were on the deck of the doomed boat when she sank. The Japanese say that every movement of the enemy's boats was observable, and that the cruisers seemed to be crowded with men packed like bees in a hive.

AS THE FIORDS OF NORWAY.

Newfoundland's Picturesque Coast Line Described by an Enthusiast—May Be in Canada Some Day.

Newfoundland has a unique, important and commanding position. It is at no great distance from the North American continent, and practically stretches across the Gulf of St. Lawrence. In shape it is quite roughly triangular, and its longest distance across in any direction is only about 216 miles. In approaching the island one is impressed with the thought that it is pretty completely 'rock bound,' which to a great extent proves to be a stubborn fact, but so varied in character as to render it exceedingly picturesque and interesting, says W. H. Yeamans in Country Gentleman.

The entire coast is indented with bays of various shapes and sizes—in some instances these extend so far into land as to almost meet from different directions, leaving only a very narrow isthmus for the connection of the land. In the larger of the bays there are many islands, giving in some instances as great variety and equal beauty as is found in the Thousand Islands of the St. Lawrence River. The general surface is as varied as the coast line, and presents almost every imaginable condition of land surface; mountains, hills and valleys abound, gorges, gulches and ravines, through which rush streams of water; lakes and rivers are numerous, and add to the beauty of the general landscape. If there is enjoyment in traversing and exploring the fiords of Norway, it can be duplicated in sailing in and about the bays and coast indentations of Newfoundland.

If the coast is rough and rugged, it is also picturesque and grand almost beyond description in some instances; nor is there uniformity in any line; in one case the cliffs and mountains will present a surface of bare rough rock; in another there will be sufficient soil upon the rock to sustain a growth of forest that presents a beautiful appearance in the various shades of the foliage; in still another case the hills will be rounded in form, well covered with soil, that has an abundance of herbage for cows or goats.

Within a few years there has been established various lines for steamboat travel, taking in all the principal bays, along a greater part of the coast of the island to Nova Scotia and to Labrador. The trips on and about the bays can be taken upon good steamers in a leisurely manner with stops between if desired.

Not a great time back in the past, settlements were confined almost exclusively to the seacoast, where the chief industry, fishing, was carried on, and is to a great extent at the present day; but quite recently little villages have sprung up in the interior on the line of the railway, induced by the establishment of the industries of lumbering and mining, the latter of which is assuming great importance.

Because of the interesting natural features of Newfoundland, taken in connection with the fishing and mining industries, that are an interesting study, and considering the delightful climate that the summer months afford, makes it a delightful resort for the weeks or months when the extreme heat of New England or middle states cities becomes almost unbearable. It is then that a trip upon one of the bays calls into use medium weight clothing and wraps, as experience has proved.

A. W. Wright Reminiscent.

Mr. A. W. Wright, Conservative organizer, who was a resident of Dufferin in 1854, half a century ago, was present at the recent annual gathering of Dufferin Old Boys in Toronto. President Kyles called upon Mr. Wright for a speech, and he regaled the audience with reminiscences of those early days, when the pioneers were hewing out homes for themselves in the woods. He remembered distinctly when the long-drawn howl of the wolf was a common sound in Dufferin county. The settlers of Dufferin were a sturdy rugged race, and no wonder was it that their sons had achieved success and fame in the various walks of life. Mr. Wright referred to his old school teacher, Dr. Frame, of Mono Centre, who had died at the age of 100 years. A kindly man he was, and only once was known to thrash a boy. He had not a first-class nor yet a second-class certificate, but he was second to none of the teachers of the present day, although there was no James L. Hughes to look over them at that time.

Death of Abbe Casgrain.

Rev. Abbe H. Raymond Casgrain, the well known author of valuable literary and historical works, and formerly president of the Royal Society of Canada, died at Quebec recently, aged 75. He was, according to Morgan, a son of the late Hon. Charles E. Casgrain, and brother of Senator Hon. Charles E. Casgrain. Born at River Ouelle, December 16, 1831, he was educated at Ste. Anne's College, Quebec, and at the Quebec Seminary. He was for a time priest at the Basilica, Quebec, visited Europe in 1858, 1867 and 1873 in quest of historical material, and found many valuable manuscripts relating to early Canadian history, among them the journals and papers of Marechal de Levis, and some personal papers of Montcalm. In 1874 he was compelled, owing to a serious affection of his eyes, to give up ministerial work. In 1877 he received the degree of LL.D. from Laval, and in 1889 was President of the Royal Society of Canada.

PORT ARTHUR CRUMBLING.

The Story is Denied at St. Petersburg.

RUSSIA'S SEVERE LOSS.

Rumors that Russia Has Destroyed Her Stronghold. Four Destroyers Damaged. Another Obstruction Attempted.

A Tokio dispatch says :—It is asserted here that the Russians have virtually abandoned Port Arthur.

UNCERTAIN ABOUT PORT ARTHUR.

The New York World's Chefoo correspondent asserts that Port Arthur was evacuated on Friday last.

The report that the Russians have evacuated Port Arthur is not credited at St. Petersburg, and is denied in government circles.

The London papers all discredit the rumor that Port Arthur has fallen.

PORT ARTHUR FORT SHATTERED.

Following is a special cable to the New York World from Chefoo :—I left Chefoo on board the Daily Mail dispatch boat. At Port Arthur we could see objects with vivid distinctness. The first fort, which is squat, appeared to be damaged. The second or Mantseyang fort, the Bread Hill fort on the summit of the mountain on the western side, about three-quarters of a mile distant from the entrance to Port Arthur, looked to have suffered from a terrific fire. The defences in parts appeared to be shattered. Earthworks were torn up and no guns were visible. Many shells had fallen along the line of forts on Tiger's Tail penninsula. The houses in old Port Arthur appeared to be uninjured. Yet nowhere was there a sign of life or even the flutter of a flag in the deserted roadstead and smoke-hidden forts.

FOUR DESTROYERS DAMAGED.

A council was held at military headquarters in Tokio on Sunday afternoon, and was attended by Field Marshal Yamagata, Count Katsura, Marquis Oyama and Baron Yama Moto, General Toranchi, Baron Kodama, Baron Kolama, Count Inouye, and the Marquis Ito.

A report has been received that serious damage was inflicted on the defences of Port Arthur during the attack on March 10th, and a number of guns were observed to be dismounted, and the garrison was driven out of the works by the Japanese bombardment, while the European quarter of the town was in flames. Four Russian torpedo boat destroyers inside the harbor were out of action, having been deserted by their crews.

ANOTHER OBSTRUCTION ATTEMPTED.

The Tokio correspondent of the Gaulois, Paris, reports that another unsuccessful attempt to obstruct the entrance to Port Arthur has been made by the Japanese.

BROILS BETWEEN FRENCH AND ENGLISH.

The following cable has been received from Tien Tsin :—There is a new menace in the situation in China. The French and English garrisons at Shan Hai Kwan are snarling at each other menacingly and threatening to embroil the two great nations. The soldiers of the two nations stationed at that fortified city are constantly on the verge of a serious conflict. Insults are continually bandied between the men, and personal assaults are frequent.

BRITISH WILL ENTER NEW CHWANG.

British troops are said to be under orders to march into New Chwang whenever it is evacuated by the Russians. This movement will be in the interest of protection of the property of Europeans. The Chinese army on the northern frontier is eager to engage the Russians, and most severe measures are necessary to prevent an outbreak of patriotic agitators.

JAPAN'S TERRIBLE EXPLOSIVE.

The Seoul correspondent of the New York World cables :—I had an interview with Dr. Wada, of the Japanese hospital at Chemulpo, where there are twenty-four men who were wounded on the Variag, as to the effect of the new Japanese high explosive shells. The fuse acts on contact with water, clothing, or in fact anything. The burnt fragments range in size from a few centimeters in most cases to pin heads. The exploding shell tears men to atoms within a small but undefined radius, outside of which it inflicts wounds which generally are slight. On the bridge of the Variag the captain and four men were struck by a bursting shell. The petty officer disappeared completely. Only the arm of Count Nirad was found. The flesh was torn from the legs of a sailor. Captain Rudeneff was only slightly wounded. One sailor had 120 wounds from the fragments of one shell.

HELD FOR MURDER.

W. D. Hamilton, a Restaurant Keeper Charged with Kicking a Man to Death.

A dispatch from Ottawa says :—W. S. Hamilton, a restaurant keeper on Metcalfe street, has been arrested on a charge of killing John Fitzgerald, 28 years of age, who was a sergeant in an Irish regiment and who came to Canada recently. On Friday night Fitzgerald had a meal at Hamilton's restaurant and had no money to pay for it. Hamilton, it is alleged, got into an altercation with Fitzgerald, and threw him out on the street. It is also said that the prisoner kicked Fitzgerald in the stomach. At any rate, Fitzgerald was picked up by the police on the street later on and taken to the police station. He put in the night in the cells, and at about 9 o'clock on Saturday morning Dr. Chabot was sent for, and he at once ordered Fitzgerald to be taken to the hospital. This was done, and it was discovered that the unfortunate man was ruptured in several places, caused by what appeared to be kicks.

The dying man's statement was taken. He said that he was seized by two unknown men on Sparks street, near the Russell house, and was kicked by them. An inquest will be held. The police got sufficient evidence to warrant them arresting Hamilton, who was formerly on the police force in Montreal, and got the championship for putting the heavy shot among the Canadian police. Fitzgerald had an application in to join the police force here. He was about eight months in the country. Hamilton ran the Oxford restaurant on Metcalfe street, opposite the Windsor.

BANK CLERK SUICIDES.

John Nightingale, of Wallaceburg Found Dead Under School Steps.

On Saturday the body of John Nightingale, the junior clerk of the Bank of Toronto at Wallaceburg, was found under the steps of the public school there. A revolver clutched in the dead man's hand and a bullet hole in the right temple told the story of the tragedy. He was the eldest son of Charles Nightingale, and 18 years old. When he did not turn up at the bank on Saturday morning and when the office revolver was missed, his room over the bank was searched and there was found a note of farewell to his pastor, Rev. W. W. Gunton, the Baptist clergyman. He was a zealous church worker and bore an exemplary character. His demeanor was usually cheerful, but he was subject to fits of melancholy.

DRANK POISON.

Took an Appetizer in a Drug Store with Fatal Result.

Three men were accidentally poisoned, one fatally, in a Montreal drug store on Sunday. Raoul Moisan, who died, and A. Berthe, a chemist, visited the drug store of the former's brother, where the three drank a preparartion for an appetizer. They separated, and shortly after all took ill. When he felt that something was wrong Raoul Moisan went to the office of Berthe, where he died during the afternoon. Berthe and the druggist were violently ill, but they are now out of danger. It is not yet known what poisoned the men.

SNOWFLAKE WONDERS

NO TWO OF MYRIAD CRYSTALS ALIKE IN FORM OR DECORATION.

Pictures of Snowflakes Enlarged From 400 to 500 Times Larger Than the Crystals Themselves, Give Some Idea of Their Wondrous Beauty—The Frost Work on the Window Panes Rival Flowers in Design.

Usually each snowflake consists of several or many separate crystals. These crystals are typical of the infinite variety and beauty that exists throughout nature. The pictures herewith are engraved direct from enlarged microscopic photographs made from separate crystals of snow. No two of these crystals are alike in form or in decoration, but the separate crystals that comprise one snowflake often have some similarity. The pictures are from 400 to 500 times larger than the real crystals themselves, or are enlarged from 15 to 16 diameters. They show only the exterior of different snow crystals, each much enlarged, and there is much greater variety in the interior forms. The particles, even while they hang together, are in constant vibration among themselves. Each crystal always has six points or raddii, yet how marvelous the variety! The frost-work on window panes, which rivals leaves and flowers in elegance of design, shows how ice crystals depart from geometrical arrangement when their freedom of growth is limited. The more they are constrained, the more beautiful appears their grace and adaptability.

It is true of the snow crystal as it is of many other crystalized forms, that it never loses the power of growth. It also possesses power of self-repair. If it be bruised or deformed, the subsequent growth is abnormally rapid over the injured area until perfection of form is regained. A German scientist studied the formation of quartz crystals some years ago and discovered that they were actually teeming with life—that is, possess vibrations having organized movement and life manifestations. Thus, even the humble snowflake is perhaps a common expression of Infinite life, as it is of infinite beauty.

About snowflakes Henry Crocker wrote: "Inscribed with the law and loveliness of the Creator, and vieing with the stars of the firmament, the snowflakes feel an earthly drawing—a longing to reveal to man something of Him who stamped his glory on them. Each has a life peculiarly its own, a record of which is faithfully preserved in its features. Mysterious electrical forces play upon those shining hosts, brooding over them, like the Spirit of creation. Flying, as if alive, they cover our sin-cursed world with celestial purity and light. They flit into our eyes and look up to us as if imploring us to look at them carefully and to see what beauty and glory has been wrought upon them. But many are indifferent to their appeal! They brush them off and trample them under foot, and never dream what elegance they destroy, what purity they defile, what delight they miss. But the time is coming when many shall see. They are beginning already to see!"

Baroness Burdett-Coutts.

"What a wonderful woman the Baroness Burdett-Coutts is!" says M. A. P. "The other day I saw her in the Royal York at Brighton, and I hear from everybody that she is enjoying the air of Brighton with as much zest as if she were in her first youth. Like the late Queen, the Baroness has immense faith in open air. Wet or dry, she goes out for her long drive every day. The result is that in old age she has much of the vivacity of youth. She is, I hear, as keenly interested in the fiscal question as though she were a member of the House of Commons herself; and is, I believe, an ardent Chamberlainite."

Where Domesticity Shines.

In Siberia there is a custom that a bride, on coming to her husband's house, has to give a dinner prepared with her own hands, as a test of housekeeping capabilities. If she succeeds in gratifying her guests, it is taken as a proof not only of the young woman's own excellence, but also as a recommendation of her whole family, by whom she was instructed in the culinary art.

Color and Strength.

The Russian War Office has decided that in future grey horses shall be exclusively used for artillery purposes, the reason given for the innovation being that animals of this color have been found by experience to be stronger and more enduring than those of other colors.

Don't Eat With Their Tails.

Those gentlemen who are in favor of docking horses' tails have good reasons for their advocacy of the practice, perhaps. The trouble is that they do not offer them. Instead they rally round one excuse for the cruelty, and present it as though it were an argument. They cite cases of a horse, immediately after the operation, eating his feed with evident relish. If he was badly hurt, they say, he would not do this. Have they never heard of human beings eating their meals immediately after having a broken limb set? Won't a horse eat after he has been cruelly beaten or driven for miles with an overdraw check? The mere fact of the animal cleaning up his oats after being docked only goes to prove that the part of the tail removed was not one of the digestive organs.

Bread to Stay at 5 Cents.

The price of bread in Chicago will remain at 5 cents a loaf, in spite of the war in the east and dollar wheat, accordinb to an opinion expressed by J. Heissler, of Heissler & Junge, in that city. "We do not contemplate raising the price of bread," said Mr Heissler. "The Bakers' Association is trying to get together to push the price above 5 cents a loaf, but it is having a hard time to do it. Even if they do get the price above that figure they can't keep it there, for some of them will cut under, and down will go the price to the old figure. Of course the war in the east and dollar wheat is reason enough, but it can't be done. We are not going to try."

Frank Finn's Body Found.

The frozen remains of Frank Finn, the young man who was lost in a blizzard in the Moose Mountain district on February 16th, were found on Friday of last week by a searching party. He had wandered eighteen miles in a southeasterly direction from his home before succumbing to the cold. It appears that he had visited the home of a neighbor a short distance from his homestead and had started for home in the evening. He lost his way, and kept on before the driving storm, passing close to several farm houses, but owing to the storm was unable to locate any of them.

Alcohol From Sawdust.

A Norwegian chemist has discovered a new and cheap process for making alcohol from sawdust. Sawdust is treated under pressure with diluted sulphuric acid, by which the cellulose is transformed into sugar, which, by adding fermentation producers, is converted into alcohol in the old manner and then distilled.

A report is published in Rome that the Japanese defeated the Vladivostock squadron, but at a fearful cost. It is also stated that the Japanese have bombarded Port Arthur again.

Just the Kind.

The youth in the tan colored cycling suit turned to the white mustached man with a deferential gesture.

"Pardon me, Mr. Bards," he said, "but will you permit me to ask what kind of matches you prefer for domestic use?"

"Matches?" echoed the old gentleman. "Matches for domestic use? What an extraordinary question! Why, safety matches, of course."

The young man smiled.

"Then, Mr. Bards," he said, "permit me to inform you that your daughter Millie and I eloped on wheels this morning and are now back for the customary parental blessing."

He blew lightly on his whistle, and the lovely girl darted into the room.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

His Preference.

"Don't you know that you could buy a fine house with what you spend in luxuries?"

"Yes," answered the easy going man, "but my tastes aren't so luxurious as to make me want a fine house."—Washington Star.

SPRING MILLINERY OPENING.

One forgot wind, frost and snow upon entering the Trites-Wood Co's. store on Tuesday, the opening day of their big spring millinery and dress goods display. Snch a display of beautiful colouring and shading is seldom seen outside of large cities and the many ladies who despite the inclement weather found their way to the big store were delighted with the beautiful goods there on exhibition. Miss Donaldson in charge of the millinery department kindly described some of the many fascinating creations of this season's headwear to a FREE PRESS reporter.

The first was a particularly handsome large picture hat made entirely of quiltings of pleated tulle, fancy straw facings interwoven with tulle, long flounces falling at the back, and pendent ends of black velvet and lace. Rose wreaths placed in symmetrical rows and bordered on one side with leaves of pendent buds decorate the crowns of large picture hats.

A torpedo toque of ciel blue chiffon, with a cluster of pink roses on the left and a border of blue cowslips on the front presented a very Frenchy effect. Another egg-shaped capileine in champagne tints, with a touch of apple green and castor velvet was very chic. One pompadour shape in tuscan shades of straw braid and tucked tulle was finished with tuscan aigrette.

The shirt waist hats stock is very large and many of the styles are exceedingly smart. One along the military lines, is of navy blue mohair combined with London suade on the under brim. The top is ornamented with the popular gun metal buttons. Metal buckles of the old-fashioned shoe pattern of the time "when Knighthood was in flower" are among the most pleasing novelties.

Just a step to the ladies muslin and underwear department where is displayed a grand collection of all that is pretty and new.

On the main floor, prominently displayed, are the new dress goods with all suitable trimmings. These goods represent the finest stock ever exhibited in Fernie. They include many very handsome silks imported direct from Paris. We noticed among the ready-to-wear suits for ladies some very pretty tweeds with snow flake effect, lustres and violes. The window dressing shows marked taste and is but indicative of the goods sold within.

LOCALS CONTINUED.

Monday is the last day on which names may be added to the voters list.

J. R. Martin, timber inspector, was in town this week.

The "Crow's Nest Special" is the best cigar along the line. x

Spring Goods—C. W. Laidley, merchant tailor, has received his new spring goods. They are the very latest patterns. Give him a call. x

Constoble Tranter returned this morning from Coleman bringing with him E. Miller charged with the thieft of a watch at Morrissey. The watch was sold to C. O. Demaurez.

J. F. Armstrong and A. C. Nelson, of Fort Steele, held a court of revision and appeal under the Assesment Act at the court house last week. Few cases were brought to their notice.

The Interior Liberal Association is meeting at Rossland this week. The officers and executive were elected on Wednesday, the first day of meeting. Fred. Stork, of Fernie, was elected a member of the executive.

The funeral of the late Wm. Anthony who was killed at Michel will take place on Monday at 2 p.m. The Oddfellows have charge of the arrangements. The Knights of Pythias will also attend in a body.

The Fernie Lumber Co. paid off their bush gang this week and the company is patiently waiting for the weather to break so that the milling operations may commence. The winter's output of logs will manufacture about six million feet of lumber.

A public mass meeting is advertised for to-night in Princess Hall. Mr. Bousfield, district representative of the U. M. W. of America, will address the meeting on labor topics of interest to the public. W. R. Ross, M. L. A., will occupy the chair.

Jack Curley fought Jack Thompson at Cranbrook on Wednesday night and won the contest in the second round. The Englishman was in fine form and fought hard and fast but Curley was also in his best condition and proved more than a match for him.

Fred Vance is busy getting his new barber shop and baths into shape and he expects to move into his new quarters on Monday. Modern equipped baths are needed in the town and Mr. Vance will no doubt be very successful in his new venture.

OLD HOUSES ON THE HUDSON

They Are Picturesque, but Sadly Lacking In Comfort.

Dutch customs still prevail to a surprising extent in the old villages up the Hudson, and the modern housekeeper from the city who takes a picturesque dwelling, built about 1690, for a summer home is confronted by some bewildering conditions.

While water and the scrubbing brush were and are much in evidence, the sanitation of the bedrooms does not meet modern requirements. In fact, unless the house has been materially altered there were no bedrooms, distinctly such, but from each of the five rooms on the one floor, kitchen, included, open recesses or alcoves just large enough to contain a double bed, says the Brooklyn Eagle.

These used to be filled with "four-postera," having trundle beds beneath, so that a family of twenty persons was easily accommodated, and, if necessary, more people could be placed in the open garret, generally reserved for storage purposes.

Reverence for the past and its traditions may induce the house mistress to put her bed in such an alcove at first, but one night's experience of its stuffiness usually suffices, especially as it is impossible to make the bed unless it is rolled out daily, for no space was allowed for going about it.

However, the recesses meet the modern requirements for closet room, and, remodeled with hooks and curtains, they fill what would otherwise be a decided need, since the only places prepared on which to hang clothes are three hand turned and extremely fat wooden pegs placed between door and window in each room, reminding one of Matthew Vassar's three pegs at the college, "for bonnet, shawl and Sunday dress."

Acquiring a Reputation.

Archbishop Howley, who lived in the eighteenth century, most unjustly got the reputation of swearing like a trooper. The explanation is that the Duke of Cumberland, who fought the battle of Culloden and who was unspeakably profane, once went in quest of the primate to get his assistance about a certain bill which he disliked. He returned to the house of lords, saying: "It's all right, my lords. I've seen the archbishop, and he says he'll see the promoters to —— before he'll vote for the —— bill." As a matter of fact, all the profanity had been supplied quite in the ordinary run of conversation by the duke.

His Faux Pas.

They were uttering the tender nonsense that succeeds the great question.

"And," said the girl bravely, "if poverty comes we will face it together."

"Ah, dearest," he replied, "the mere sight of your face would scare the wolf away."

And ever since he has wondered why she returned the ring.

He Could Pose.

"Why do you think he'll be a famous novelist?"

"He poses for photographs so well, with his arms folded and looking as if he was thinking."

'Twould Spoil This Story to Tell It in the Headlines.

To use an eighteenth century phrase, this is an "o'er true tale." Having happened in a small Virginia town in the winter of 1902, it is a story very much of the present. Up to a short time ago Mrs. John E. Harmon, of Melfa Station, Va., had no personal knowledge of the rare curative properties of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. "Last January," she says, "my baby took a dreadful cold and at one time I feared she would have pneumonia, but one of my nieghbors told me how this remedy had cured her little boy and I began giving it to my baby at once and it soon cured her. I heartily thank the manufacturers of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy for placing so great a cure within my reach. I cannot recommend it too highly or say too much in its favor. I hope all who read this will try it and be convinced as I was." For sale by all Druggists and Dealers.

WILL THE G. N. BUILD?

VANCOUVER REPORT SAYS IT WILL.

Local Authorities Say Contract is not yet Let, but That Road Will be Built to Michel This Year.

The Nelson Daily News publishes the following as a special despatch from Vancouver in its issue of March 26th;

"A number of experienced railroaders of Victoria and Vancouver—men especially valuable in construction works—have during the past few days accepted employment with representatives of James J. Hill, and it is understood that their services will be required very shortly in the East Kootenay district, Hill being now ready to proceed as soon as weather permits with the extension of his line from Morrissey to Fernie, along the opposite bank of the Elk river from the town of Fernie, which will be crossed by the new lines to the mines. The announcement of the construction of the Hill road through to the mines in which Hill is now a dictating owner, will occasion no surprise in East Kootenay, where it has been eagerly looked for during some time past. The making of the new connection with the Crow's Nest will nevertheless cause Fernie to boom during the forthcoming summer."

This report is not given much credence by those in a position to know something about the proposed extention of the G. N. Ry. It is pretty definitely known that the contract is not yet let for the new piece of road but the expectation that it will be constructed this summer is just as strong as ever. A report from an authentic source is abroad this week that the line wiil not stop at Fernie this year but will extend on to Michel. It said that the Vancouver despatch emanated from certain Great Northern contractors who were engaged on a certain work at the coast. This work has been suspended for a time and they thought by this means to hold their men until Hill's plans re the Fernie construction became known or until their work at the coast was resumed.

One of the reasons given for the early construction of the G N. extention here is the favorable condition of the labor market. The Grand Trunk Pacific construction will be in full swing next year and men will then be hard to get. The next thirty days will in all probability reveal Hill's intentions on this piece of construction. In the meantime nothing is being lost as the snow is of such great depth as to prevent any work being done on it.

NEWS OF THE PROVINCE.

A new paper, the Okanagan Herald, is about to start up in Vernon. It will be a seven column, four page paper and Liberal in politics.

W. H. Dorman, post office inspector for the mainland of B. C., died at Vancouver on March 24th, of erysipelas. He was connected with the postoffice department for many years. J. R. M. Greenfield, assistant inspector, will likely succeed Mr. Dorman.

Everything is working out favorably for the resumption of operations at the St. Eugene. The Dominion government the mineowners and the smeltermen are working in harmony, and every move that is being made seems to be in the right direction.

Vancouver will probably soon be found within the copper belt. For a long time the Hudson's Bay Company has been handling the little red coins which have seemed so distinctly to be a feature of life in the east, and now that firm is to be joined by another. A large supply of "coppers" has been imported from Ontario, and will soon be placed in circulation. At the present time they are stored in one of the local banks.

AN IMPRESSIVE FUNERAL.

Remains of Late Wm. Anthony Laid to Rest With Much Ceremony.

One of the most impressive funerals ever held in Fernie was that on Tuesday when the body of Wm. Anthony, victim of the rock fall accident at Michel, was laid to rest. The deceased was a member of three societies, the Knights of Pythias, the Oddfellows and the United Mine Workers of America, and each vied with the other in their efforts to show their respect for their late brother. The Coal Creek and Michel mines were closed for the day which partly accounted for the big turnout.

At a joint meeting of the Knights and Oddfellows held the evening before full arrangements were made that the funeral might be conducted without a hitch. The initiative was handed over to the Knights and the other societies heartily co-operated. Mr. Owen Ross was appointed Grand Marshal and Deputy Marshals were appointed for each society.

The Miners Union at Michel chartered a special train from Michel, which arrival at Fernie at 11:30 a.m. bearing the corpse and 140 friends aud relatives. A long procession followed the corpse to the Baptist church. The relatives of the deceased were driven to the Royal Hotel where they were hospitably received by Mr. and Mrs. Tuttle. At 2:30 the three orders preceded by the sorrowing relatives proceeded to the church where services were conducted by Rev. C. R. G. Poole assisted by Rev. D. L. Gordon. The long procession to the grave was headed by the Miners' Union followed by the Oddfellows and the Knights, and after the corpse came the more immediate relatives and friends. Two members from each society were selected as poll bearers. At the grave the burial service of the three orders were performed in turn.

An impromptu collection taken up among the members of the societies prior to the march amounted to a purse of over one hundred dollars which was subsequently handed to the widow. Many very handsome wreaths and bouquets of flowers covered the casket. D. Anthony brother of the deceased and Mesdames White, Walker and McNiven, three married daughters of the deceased were present from the coast.

Wm. Anthony, the deceased, was born at Maesteg, South Wales, in 1854. He went to Pennsylvania twenty years ago and shortly after made his way to B.C. He lived at the coast until 8 months ago when he came to Michel. He leaves a widow and 7 children four of whom are quite young.

POLICE COURT

Two Important Cases of Theft.—A Conviction in Each Case.

Wm. Burns, alias Thomas Flannigan, was charged in the police court on Saturday with the theft of a purse, the property of Mat. Anderson. The latter in his evidence stated that he had had reasons for suspecting the accused of theft on previous occasions and on this occasion he placed a trap for him by putting the empty purse in a tempting place and keeping a look-out on it. By this means the accused was caught in the act. The magistrate sentenced the accused to two months hard labor at Nelson.

Edward Miller accused of the theft of a watch from H. F. Stephens proprietor of the Alexandra Hotel, Morrissey, put up a hard fight and the case was adjourned twice to secure witnesses for the defence. The evidence of these witnesses however only served to get the accused into deeper water and to firmly fasten the guilt upon himself. The watch had been left at the hotel by a man named Welsh. It next appeared in Demaurez's jewelry store with its works in another case. Accused claimed he had been asked by Mr. Stephens to take it there for repairs, which statement was corroborated by Mr. Demaurez. The latter advanced accused six dollars on the watch and Miller went to Coleman. Mr. Stephens denied having given the watch to accused and Welsh also corroborated Mr. Stephens' evidence. The accused was sentenced to one month at hard labor.

A Mother's Recommendation.

I have used Chamberlain's Cough Remedy for a number of years and have hesitancy in saying that it is the best no remedy for coughs, colds and croup I have ever used in my family, I have not words to express my confidence in this remedy.—Mrs. J. A. Moore, North Star, Mich. For sale by all druggists and dealers.

ONLY ONE OBSTACLE.

ZINC SMELTER WANTS CHEAPER FUEL.

Every Other Detail Settled.—Difference will Be Settled in Favor of Fernie by a Compromise.

The latest indications appear very favorable for the location of the zinc smelter at Fernie. As has been known for some time the choice of the location lay between Frank and Fernie. Fernie possesses every advantage, Mr. Fernau admits, excepting in the price demanded here for fuel.

To understand the matter correctly it must be remembered that a zinc smelter uses only slack coal. The slack is used in the by-product ovens where it is converted into coke and the coke is afterwards used in the furnaces. The zinc smelter would use 100 tons of slack per day during the first year and that amount would be increased to probably 300 tons in the third year. At Frank the slack is not valued as highly as it is here for the reason that the coke plant is not built at Frank, while here the plant is in operation and the slack is estimated at coke valuation, less the cost of labor. Therefore a considerable difference exists between the two rates quoted to Mr. Fernau. Every other detail has been arranged between Mr. Fernau and the C. N. P. Coal Co. and the latter is now considering an offer from the former in which a compromise in the price of slack is suggested. Mr. Fernau does not ask as low a price as quoted by Frank for the reason that Fernie possesses a material advantage in transportation rates.

It is believed that the C. N. P. Coal Compady will agree to the compromise suggested even if they do not realize so much from the slack as they would otherwise by converting it into coke. The Company is anxious for the location of this industry at Fernie for the indirect advantages that will spring from it and from the impetus it will have in bringing kindred industries to Fernie.

MORRISSEY'S COKING COAL.

Last week we stated that a seven foot seam of excellent coal had been struck in No. 4, the mine in which a "fault" has been retarding the output for some time. The coal taken out last week was, in appearance, of excellent quality. A thorough test has since been made, and it has been found to be exceptionally good coking coal—the best in the company's three camps as yet discovered.

Three of the five mines here are now producing good coking coal, those being Nos. 0, 3 and 4. Nos. 1 and 2 produce good steaming coal.

It is understood that a contract for 1400 tons a day of coal from this camp to be shipped on the Great Northern has been entered into by the company, and this will mean a big pay-roll here All the men that can be procured will be given work in Morrissey camp, and the works are expected to hum here this summer, and as the slide is now cut through and there is no lack of cars, the mines are now employing all men available at present, which strengthens the belief that the summer's expectations will be realized.—Morrissey Despatch.

FATALITY AT MORRISSEY

J. G. Eddey Killed by a Falling Tree

J. Gordon Eddey, a miner at Morrissey, was struck by a falling tree on Monday and died a few hours later. Early in the morning he and his cabin mate, a German, went out on the mountain side to cut fire wood. The German was felling a tree higher on the hill side and as it was about to come down he shouted to his companion who tried to escape and in doing so jumped directly in the track of the falling tree.

A short knotty limb penetrated the man's head in a horrible manner. Medical aid was hastily summoned but nothing could be done and shortly after noon the spark of life fled. An inquest was not deemed necessary. The funeral took place on Wednesday. Deceased was a young man of about 22 years of age. He has two brothers living at Morrissey. The parents are now in mid-ocean on their way to Fernie where they purpose making their home.

THE ANNUAL MEETING

BOARD OF TRADE ELECT STRONG BODY OF OFFICERS.

Another Step Taken Towards Incorporation.—Alarming State of the Fire Brigade Finances.

The annual meeting of the Fernie Board of Trade on Tuesday evening was attended by a large number of the members. After the minutes of the last meeting had been read and adopted the retiring president, Mr. J. A. Rennie, gave his address cevering the work of the year, and the secretary, Mr. J. S. T. Alexander read the financial report which showed a balance on hand of $78.15, with $66 due on the rent account.

The election of officers followed. After a spirited contest for the presidency in which four members were nominated Mr. J. D. Quail was declared elected. A. B. Trites was unanimously chosen for vice president. The general satisfaction given by Mr. J. S. T. Alexander as secretary of the Board, which position he has held for the past three years, was clearly demonstrated by the hearty manner in which he was unanimously re-elected secretary for the ensuing year. After two ballots had been taken the following eight gentlemen out of sixteen nominees were elected to the executive of the Board of Trade,—Messrs. J. A. Rennie, A. W. Bleasdell, Jas. McEvoy, F. Stork, F. J. Watson, A. H. Cree, W. F. Cuthbert and J. H. Bricker. As Mr. Quail was not present Mr. Trites filled the chair for the remainder of the evening. Three nominees for membership, Messrs. D. Davies, T. Whelan and T. W. Bell were elected to become members, and the names of Messrs. Joseph Langton and J. G. Cummings were nominated.

The question of incorporation next took up the attention of the meeting. Mr. J. A. Rennie, one of the committee appointed to gather some information on the subject read replies to enquiries sent to the clerks of several incorporated towns, which contained much useful information and advice. The report from Kaslo was particularly full as it contained a copy of the balance sheet for the last year. Mr. Alexander the other member of the committee, reported that they had been unable to secure the necessary information from the Coal Company owing to the absence of General Manager Stockett. These reports were laid on the table for further reference and a hearty vote of thanks was tendered the committee on motion of W. R. Ross.

On motion of Mr. Rennie the Board decided to appoint a committee with power to spend money to ascertain further information regarding assessment values, etc., and to report to a general public meeting. On motion of Mr. Cree the old committee was re-elected to fill this position.

Mr. J. S. T. Alexander who is also secretary of the fire brigade executive read a financial statement showing that the sum of $2500 was owing on the lot, hall engine, and that the treasury contained only $150. None of those present were able to suggest any way by which this indebtedness could be met, except by incorporating.

The address of the retiring President was as follows;—

Gentlemen,

Since the last annual meeting of this Board, when I had the honor of being elected President, nothing has occurred of any great importance to disturb the equanimity of our community.

We have had almost a year of unbroken work and prosperity in connection with the chief industry of our town, and there is every indication that this prosperity is going to continue for some time.

When I took office 12 months ago we were then in the midst of a strike, the merits of which it is not my province to discuss, but which was finally settled on a permanent basis, I believe, satisfactory to both parties to the controversy, and since then things have run along smoothly between employer and employee. Our other great industry, lumbering, has not been on quite so satisfactory a footing, none of the mills in the vicinity having been running for some months past and which has reduced the number of men employed considerably, and which reduction has had a very appreciable effect on the business of the town, but although we have seen one lumber firm obliged to shut down entirely yet the prospects for the coming year in this particular line of business are fairly bright. During the year various matters of more or less public importance have been dealt with by this Board of Trade and action has been taken on these different matters as have seemed best.

Among other things we have succeeded in purchasing a lot and erecting thereon a fire hall and also in procuring a chemical fire engine, and although the financial condition of that body, which more immediately looks after these matters, is not so sound as it might be, still it is a matter for congratulation that we have got as far as we have in the matter of fire protection. We have also kept harping to the provincial government for increased jail and office accommodation, and I am happy to say that through the efforts thus put forth supported so ably by our member, a sum of money has been appropriated to provide a little more room in our public buildings. Considerable however has yet to be done along these lines. Another matter which this Board has dealt with is the opening of a road into the Flathead, and we are assured that when the need of such a road arises, the claim of Fernie to have it start from here will not be overlooked.

The great subject which is occupying our minds at present is incorporation. This subject has been before the Board at various times during the past year and will be brought up for discussion latter on this evening, so that is needless for me to make any remarks regarding it just now, beyond stating that the committee which was appointed at the last regular meeting of this Board, to gather what information they could along this line have fulfilled their duty as best they could but owing to the absence of Mr. Stockett the information they were able to procure is incomplete.

During my term of office I have filled the duties of president of the Board of Trade to the best of my ability and will always look back with pleasure to the fact that I was honored by being elected to first fill the presidential chair of Fernie's Chartered Board of Trade, and I cannot resign that chair without first thanking the members of the Executive Council for the manner in which they have supported me during my occupancy of it.

Howard Proctor met with a painful accident on Saturday evening while playing with some other. little boys at jumping off the roof of a neighboring shed. Once the jar was greater than he expected causing his teeth to make a nasty gash in his tongue. Medical aid was summoned and several stitches were required to draw the cut together.

General Manager Stockett is expected home to-morrow from St. Paul where he went after leaving Butte. It is said that he was successful in his negotiations for more markets. Mr. G. G. S. Lindsey was out as far as Butte to meet Mr. Stockett and he went east again. Mr. Lindsey is expected out again early in May to attend the supreme court sitting on the explosion suits.

THE BEAUTIFUL MISS MERRIAM

By HARRIET LUMMIS

Copyright, 1903, by T. C. McClure

With Miss Merriam the incredible had happened. She was tired of hearing that she was beautiful. From her earliest recollections strangers had exclaimed over her pretty face, and her lovers one after another had hung the variations on the same theme. Miss Merriam listened politely and found herself extremely bored.

"To be loved for your face is like being loved for your fortune," Miss Merriam confided to her journal. "Beauty has wings just as truly as riches. If a man falls in love with your complexion what is he going to do when you come down with the smallpox? If I were a pretty fool I might be perfectly satisfied with things as they are, but I know I'm worth loving for myself—if only they had the sense to find it out."

Unfortunately for themselves Miss Merriam's adorers never suspected her peculiar views. If there had been one of their number shrewd enough to compliment her intellect instead of her dimples and to have talked about her sparkling wit rather than her sparkling eyes he would have found the short cut to her heart. As it was, they were unanimous in deciding that the aforementioned article had been omitted from her composition. And Miss Merriam expressed her displeasure in the following paragraph in her journal: "Beauty, beauty, beauty! How tiresome it all is! I wish I might never hear I was beautiful again."

Rash prayers sometimes bring unwelcome answers. Not very many days later the city was electrified by the news that Miss Merriam had been thrown from her automobile at a well known watering place and seriously injured. Pictures of the beauty appeared in all the leading newspapers of the country, with reference to her possible disfigurement. Miss Merriam's relatives, when appealed to on this important point, refused to say anything to relieve the suspense or to satisfy the popular curiosity. And the explanation of their reticence was apparent when Miss Merriam made her appearance in society a few weeks later. Across the faultless curve of the girl's cheek ran an unsightly scar, a scar so aggressively prominent that it held the attention of the observer and made him forgetful of all else. It seemed likely that Miss Merriam was to have her heart's desire and never again be forced to hear that she was beautiful.

Lloyd Hollister saw her for the first time at one of the opening functions of the season, a few days after his return from abroad. "Notice that girl over there," a friend said, pulling his sleeve. "Last spring she was the 'beautiful Miss Merriam,' and see her now. Hard luck, isn't it?"

Hollister looked as directed. He saw a small head regally carried, a mass of dazzling hair and eyes that shot violet lights from under their arched brows. Then Miss Merriam turned her head, and he saw the scar and nothing else.

"I'd be sorrier for her," the man at his elbow went on, "if she hadn't turned down half the fellows in her set. I guess she thought she was good for a duke with that face of hers. Introduce you, did you say? Why, certainly, my dear fellow."

It was the innate chivalry of Hollister's nature which had prompted him to ask the honor of Miss Merriam's acquaintance. He was as sorry for the girl as he was disgusted with the cold blooded comments of the man who had pointed her out to him. For the first few moments of their conversation he unscrupulously kept his eyes away from her. He could not bear to witness the beauty in eclipse, and he fancied that she who had been so used to reading admiration in the eyes of every man must wince at the pity which tact could not conceal.

Presently he found that admiration was getting the better of his sympathy. This quondam beauty was not crushed by her misfortune. She met this thunderbolt of fate's spite with a gallant courage which quickened Hollister's pulses. Her easy gayety, her apparent unconsciousness of the pathos of her situation, appealed to him as no woman's beauty had ever done. He made the discovery that Miss Merriam was brilliant if no longer beautiful, and that her cleverness, unlike that of many of her sex, owed nothing to ill nature.

In the months that followed he saw a great deal of Miss Merriam. It was clear that the girl's liking for social pleasure remained unaltered by the change in her circumstances. She went everywhere and to all appearances enjoyed herself in spite of the sudden falling off in the number of her admirers. There had been a time when the man who wished a word with the beautiful Miss Merriam was obliged to fight his way through a double ring of black coats, but Hollister had no difficulty in gaining her side whenever he went. Yet the deposed queen of hearts seemed so unconscious of anything about her which called for sympathy that Hollister suppressed his pity as if it had been a form of disloyalty, and after a time he no longer found this difficult. He admired Miss Merriam too much to be sorry for her. In every quality of mind and heart she met his ideal of what a woman should be. As for the scar, he looked at it now unshrinkingly. Whatever he did, he meant to act with his eyes open.

The night he asked her to marry him they sat in Miss Merriam's little library, where the flickering light of the grate fell full upon her face. No man worthy of the name is voluble when he lays his heart and life in the hollow of a woman's hand. Hollister stammered through his lovemaking like a boy. As he went on Miss Merriam turned away her face so that the profile was toward him. The light of the fire flashed on the scar, and it stood out in livid relief. As a rule, Hollister was not fanciful, but for an instant the gash seemed the mocking mouth of a demon stretched in a fiendish grin.

Hollister waited a long time for an answer to his question. Miss Merriam's face was averted, and he could see that she was stirred by some strong emotion. When he made a movement to take her hand she turned toward him suddenly, and he saw that her eyes were brimming with tears.

"You are a brave man, Mr. Hollister," she said in a voice not quite steady. "Have you thought of this?" Her fingers touched the scar with a strange, half caressing gesture. "Have you thought what it will mean to have every passerby look at your wife pityingly and whisper as you pass?"

"I love you," was Hollister's answer. "If there is a hard thing in your life it is my right to share it." Then his head whirled at the look of sudden adoration that leaped from her eyes.

"Oh, I wanted to find a man like you," Miss Merriam whispered. "I was sure there must be such a one in the world." And then she was in his arms, with the poor, scarred cheek pressed to him, sobbing out her heart in a burst of exultant triumph that enraptured him without his understanding it in the least.

When they said good night Miss Merriam clung to her lover as if reluctant to let him out of her sight. "I must see you in the morning, dearest," she said. "You must spare me a few moments." And Hollister, who was looking forward to the separation of a few hours as if it had been as many weeks, agreed with a sudden lightness of heart.

He wondered a little when he came next morning that she should keep him waiting. His heart leaped at every footstep in the hall for the first half hour, and when at last she stole into the room, closing the door behind her, she took him by surprise. Hollister sprang to his feet, then stood staring blankly.

An enchanting face smiled up at him, a face rosy with blushes. He saw the play of the dimples and the curve of the cheek as if he were looking on it for the first time. The scar was gone."

"My God!" said Hollister helplessly, and he dropped into a chair, his own face dead pale. Miss Merriam ran to him and dropped on her knees beside his chair, looking into his eyes with a fascinating mixture of timidity and confidence.

"Forgive me, dearest. Don't be angry with me for deceiving you. If you only knew how tired I grew of men who couldn't see anything in me to love but my pretty face! That little accident with my automobile was too good an opportunity to miss, and the scar was easily put on. An actress showed me how to do it, but I flatter myself that after a little I improved upon my teacher."

She smiled at Hollister shyly and did not seem to find his silence discouraging. "Please don't say you like me better the other way. I almost grew to hate my beauty when it blinded people to all the rest in me, but now I'm glad to have it to give to the man who loved me for myself."

Several complexion specialists claimed the credit for removing the scar that had ruined Miss Merriam's beauty and reaped golden harvests thereby. But the beautiful Miss Merriam never regained her title for the reason that her identity was soon merged in that of the beautiful Mrs. Hollister.

An Equine Joke.

At 2 o'clock one morning, when the fog was so thick that you could not see the name of the streets printed on the lamp posts, a telegram was received at a San Francisco newspaper office from an interior town that a prominent official had been killed while hunting. The news had to be broken to the family, and the man doing the late watch was told to jump into a carriage and get some "dope" on the deceased.

He grabbed the first four wheeler in sight and did not notice that the driver had been imbibing. He gave him the address and settled back to get a few winks of sleep, but was awakened by the carriage coming to a standstill. He got out and as he glanced around he was surprised to see headstones and monuments on every side. He looked up and found "cabby" fast asleep. In an instant he appreciated the situation. The driver had fallen asleep on the box, and the horses, believing they were going to a funeral, had leisurely trotted to the burying ground.—Exchange.

Followed His Leader.

Michael had been in the country only a short time and was not entirely familiar with the table d'hote dinner. In his first evening out he hied himself to a Sixth avenue restaurant and called for a table d'hote dinner. Opposite him sat a sour visaged and voracious person who had arrived only a few moments before. Michael, being in doubt as to how to order, decided to watch his neighbor and invariably said he would take the same in response to the waiter's query.

After finishing his dinner the heavy eating man ordered the waiter to send him in a bootblack.

"Bring me the same," exclaimed Michael.

"What!" said the waiter. "Won't one bootblack do two of you?"

"Well," cried Michael, pointing toward his neighbor, "if he eats his I'll eat mine too!"—New York Times.

In the House of the Loving Heart

By Keith Gordon

Copyright, 1903, by T. C. McClure

"The idea of any wise person caring for money, especially in New York," she gibed as they sank down upon one of the benches at the entrance to the park. The carriages were hurrying feverishly after one another as if happiness lay at the other end or else rolling sadly back again as if to indicate that it was not there after all.

Hazard turned an astonished face toward her.

"You're guying," he observed disapprovingly. "New York's the place where one needs it most. Every one knows that."

"Every one," she echoed with scorn. "And why? Simply because 'every one' is suffering from the greed of possession. They want to possess, not to enjoy. They buy—buy—buy! Then they put what they have bought into a safe deposit vault and hurry off to Europe, where they begin all over again. There's one of them now." And she nodded gayly in response to a bow from a lady in a passing victoria.

"Who is it?" asked Hazard laconically.

"Mrs. Lofty," laughed the girl, following the disappearing carriage with derisive eyes. "Poor thing!"

"Then you'd rather be Elise Sherwin, student of art, and sit here on a bench with a poor young lawyer than be Mrs. Lofty, would you?" he asked, watching a lock of hair which the spring wind blew softly across her cheek.

"I certainly would," she replied with promptness. "She never has any time for enjoyment or cultivation or reading or—or anything that counts," she ended vaguely. "You see, she has responsibilities. There are the servants. Of course I don't need to tell you about the awfulness of the servants. Then there is her house, one of those fearful places that just grip you by the throat when you enter and throttle you."

She paused for breath, with a reminiscent expression. Then she continued:

"You feel as if some one has just died—or perhaps 'demised' would be more in accord with the furnishing."

"But one doesn't need to do such things with money," her companion interrupted with argumentative intention.

"No, I don't suppose one does. And yet they generally do. You see, noblesse oblige seems to demand that when you have a million or upward you copy one of the royal palaces of Europe and live your poor little republican life in it, though I'm sure I don't know why," she finished thoughtfully.

"Still, money is a good thing, and you can't say that it isn't. A fellow must have decent clothes, and it strikes me that that simple little tailor made gown that you are wearing cost"—he screwed his face up in the effort at appraisement—"about $100."

"Only $75," she corrected and returned to her subject somewhat hurriedly.

"There's another thing. When you're rich you just have to have a complexion—and no mere man can know what a fearful responsibility that is. It's worse than servants! You have to employ beauty doctors and have little pots of greasy stuff about. You should see Mrs. Lofty's supply. It is immense."

Hazard smiled in an absent way and then began with the air of a man who is weighing his words, "If you really prefer a castle in Spain to anything"—

She cut him short.

"Have I ever told you about mine?"

He shook his head.

She pointed in the direction of the great, dark hotel which frowned down upon them.

"It ees vanish, n'est pas?" she mimicked. "Behold in its place my House of the Loving Heart! I think the name especially telling since it is situated, as you see, on what we might call the Street of Love of Money.

"I hope you see the house plainly. The style is a sort of modified Italian, with a projecting cornice and an inner court."

Hazard nodded.

"Don't you think the boxes of hyacinths in the windows and the big, low entrance give it a friendly look? That is what I aim at particularly," she explained with well feigned anxiety, "a friendly looking house!"

"Great!" was Hazard's feeling comment. "But who in thunder is that man standing at the window?" and he strained his eyes toward the great hotel. Then he turned to her with an expression of pleased and innocent surprise. "By Jove, it's me!"

"It looked so homely and inviting, I suppose, that I couldn't resist it," he explained as he noticed the warm flush rising in her cheeks.

In a moment she had recovered herself.

"Since you are in I hope you like the divans and the low table and the books and pictures. Please notice, too, that things are within reach. It doesn't look, does it, as if I were trying to live up to my fortune or suggest that I have stopped to think what Mrs. Lofty would have done under similar circumstances?"

"Not a bit," he assured her heartily, while the peculiar compression of the lips of an old gentleman sitting next them indicated suppressed amusement.

"Well, come on, then! Now, this room, which has everything beautiful and useful and comfortable that I could find to put into it, is for my heartsick and discouraged friends. Some of them I shall not have met before. But in some way, I don't know how, they will find their way to this little door (it opens quietly on Fifty-eighth street, you see), and I shall cheer them up."

"Leave care behind, all those who enter here," he murmured, as if he were reading an inscription.

The girl laughed in a pleased way.

"Excellent! A public sympathizer is really what we need. I believe as many people fail from lack of sympathy and encouragement as from lack of ability."

She had grown suddenly earnest, and her eyes filled with tears. Hazard leaned toward her in real distress.

"So silly of me," she began, with a little shake in her voice. "But there have been some rough places—places where Mrs. Lofty, for instance, has looked on from her luxurious life and said: 'I hope you'll get on all right. Goodby, dear!' and left me with loneliness and discouragement eating my heart, and I have felt that in my House of the Loving Heart I should like to have it different."

The old man in the next seat shifted himself around so as to get a better view of the girl's face, but neither of the young people noticed him, and she began her description once more.

"These bedrooms are the best in the house. I intend them for my poor friends. Still, I have indulged in small economies. Now, for instance, in these rooms"—and with a wave of the hand she ushered him into another imaginary suit—"the appointments, though very comfortable, are less luxurious. In these I shall install my rich friends when they visit me."

An unmistakable chuckle escaped from the old gentleman, and Hazard and Miss Sherwin turned in his direction in surprise. But he was bowing to the occupant of a belated carriage, all unconscious apparently of their existence.

"I shall entertain a good deal for my poor friends—give them a chance to meet interesting people and get out of the ruts of their workaday lives," Miss Sherwin resumed. "But the rich ones"—her eyes were dancing mischievously—"I shall ask only on ordinary occasions when I am having simple, wholesome dinners that won't make them discontented with their lot."

They looked at each other and broke into long and merry laughter. Hazard's worldliness had vanished like a cloud.

"It's a great idea, sweetheart," he said softly, "and I'd like to work to make it come true. Would you let me—do you think"—

But the blushes were so violent this time that he got no further, and besides the old gentleman was standing before them.

"I am Jasper Clark," he said simply, and at that name they both stared at him in amazement. "I know you'll forgive an old man for listening." Then with a bow he continued whimsically: "I should very much like the pleasure of your company at dinner"—and he made a gesture toward the Millionaires' club over the way. "You see, the time may come when I shall want to enter that quiet little door on Fifty-eighth street." And he glanced with kindly eyes at the future mistress of the House of the Loving Heart.

"Serendipity."

This word is a coinage of Horace Walpole's. Writing about a discovery he had made in connection with his picture of Bianca Capello, he says:

"This discovery I made by a talisman, which Mr. Chute calls the Sortes Walpolianæ, by which I find everything I want, a pointe nommee, wherever I dip for it. This discovery indeed is almost of that kind which I call serendipity, a very expressive word, which, as I have nothing better to tell you, I shall endeavor to explain to you. You will understand it better by the derivation than by the definition. I once read a silly fairy tale called 'The Three Princes of Serendip.' As their highnesses traveled they were always making discoveries, by accidents and sagacity, of things which they were not, in quest of. For instance, one of them discovered that a mule blind of the right eye had traveled the same road lately because the grass was eaten only on the left side, where it was worse than on the right. Now do you understand serendipity? One of the most remarkable instances of this accidental sagacity (for you must observe that no discovery of the thing you are looking for comes under this description) was of my Lord Shaftesbury, who, happening to dine at Lord Chancellor Clarendon's, found out the marriage of the Duke of York and Mrs. Hyde by the respect with which her mother treated her at table."—Notes and Queries.

On a Large Scale.

"Yes, sir," resumed the Dakota farmer as the crowd of agriculturists seated themselves round a little table—"yes, sir. We do things on rather a sizable scale. I've seen a man on one of our big farms start out in the spring and plow a straight furrow until autumn. Then he turned round and harvested back. We have some big farms up there, gentlemen. A friend of mine owned one which he had to give a mortgage on, and I pledge you my word the mortgage was due at one end before they could get it recorded at the other. You see, it was laid out in counties. And the worst of it is it breaks up families so. Two years ago I saw a whole family prostrated with grief—women yelling, children howling and dogs barking. One of my men had his camp truck packed on seven four-mule teams, and he was going round bidding everybody goodby."

"Where was he going?"

"He was going half way across the farm to feed the pigs," replied the Dakota man.

"Did he ever get back to his family?"

"It isn't time for him yet. Up there we send young married couples out to milk the cows, and their children bring home the milk."—Exchange.

WHILE THE TRAIN WAITED

By A. S. Richardson

Copyright, 1903, by T. C. McClure

The waiter coughed obsequiously, and Margaret Ashton turned toward him impatiently.

"Just some fruit and coffee for dessert."

The waiter picked up the plate holding an untasted entree.

"Why are we stopping here so long?"

"Freight train off de track ahead, ma'am, but de wreckin' crew's heah, ma'am."

Miss Ashton picked up the menu, read it absentmindedly and laid it down again. Then her glance traveled back to the panorama spread beyond the dining car's window. It was the residence district of a pretty village, with yellow and white and gray and white cottages placed at a discreet distance apart, with well kept lawns and budding gardens in between.

Close to the crossing where the train had come to a sudden standstill was the church, painted in pearly white, with dark green shutters and imitation colored glass windows. Even at this distance Margaret recognized the material in those windows. They had received samples when she was in the altar guild at St. Paul's.

The waiter arrived with her dessert, and she selected some white grapes with elaborate care. When she looked up again, a boy came scampering down the drive which divided two of the cottage homes. He swung a baseball bat in signal to another youngster emerging from another yard. Both homes had barns and chicken yards in the rear, and the boys wore sweaters.

"They have had their tea and have done their chores," thought Miss Ashton, stirring her coffee slowly, "and by and by some one will call them both in and pull down the shades."

A woman ran across the back yard of the house nearest the tracks, carrying something under her apron. She disappeared in the kitchen doorway of the next house, then reappeared empty handed and ran back to her own home.

"She had borrowed something, no doubt," said Miss Ashton to herself. "Perhaps she had a little tea this afternoon. We always borrowed things from the Marsdens when we had teas."

She pushed aside her coffee cup, laid a bill on the silver tray which the waiter offered and left the car. Her chair was in the drawing room car forward. She found herself looking straight into the side yard of a trim little cottage. A young woman sat on the step of the porch, a "fascinator" thrown over her shoulders. At the foot of the step stood another woman holding a restless baby in her arms. The two women were so earnestly engaged in conversation that they did not notice how the baby was stripping young buds off the porch vine.

"Gossiping," murmured Miss Ashton.

She knew the narrow life only too well. She had run away from it years before. She wanted to go where your next door neighbor did not count the skirts and shirt waists on your line, where no one insisted that because a young man had shown you a few ordinary courtesies you were bound to be engaged to him.

She swung her chair impatiently, and her glance fell once more on the church. The sun was setting, and two people were walking up the narrow flagged path. The man pulled out a key, threw open the church door, and they both passed in. He did not look like a minister. He was something of an athlete and had an alert air. A moment later he was opening the window. The girl was not in sight, but Margaret was certain that she was putting flowers in the vase at the pulpit.

"He's a leader in the church, no doubt. A man must always be at the head of something," she thought. "And Miss Demure will be sitting down in the amen corner soon watching him with adoring eyes because the whole congregation looks up to him."

What a narrow set these people in small towns were! Here was a train stalled in their midst bearing men of millions, women who had traveled at home and abroad, interests that might affect the world of trade, and they did not stop so much as to inquire into the trouble. They were so small, so narrow, so self absorbed!

At last the train moved with great, heaving strain on wheels and springs. Margaret gave one more glance at the church. The lights were ablaze, and the young man was standing in front of the congregation, a book in his hand. The girl was at the organ.

Margaret leaned back and closed her eyes. She saw another church, another man—and herself. Then she turned her thoughts resolutely into other channels. She glanced down at her bag. She knew the papers in that bag meant insurance policies for thousands, all written by herself. She had stepped in where other agents feared to tread and had secured business. She was going back to New York and the approval of her superiors. She would be glad to shut herself in her private office and take up her accumulated correspondence. She must have a new cabinet ordered for that empty corner of her office. The papers to be filed in her department were increasing.

* * * * * * *

She gave her number to the cabman and was whisked off into the glare of Broadway's lights. By and by they turned into a quiet side street. She mounted the steps leading to a dim brownstone apartment house, shook out her keys and hurried to her room.

There were no matches, and she rang the bell impatiently. The maid apologized and brought in clean towels.

"We weren't expecting you till tomorrow, Miss Ashton," she remarked, with a furtive flirt of her towel across the dusty table.

Margaret lighted every gas jet in the room and in the dressing room adjoining, to say nothing of the gas log in the grate, but still the room seemed dank and dull. She wished that it were morning and she might bury herself in office work.

The maid returned with a package which had arrived in Margaret's absence, and the latter inquired:

"Is Miss Harding in this evening? If she is, I wish you would ask her to come in and have a cup of tea with me."

Miss Harding had the room at the end of the hall.

The maid paused in the doorway and looked in in startled fashion.

"Why, didn't you know? Miss Harding died while you were gone."

"Died!"

"Yes; pneumonia; awful sudden too. None of her folks was here. They live way up state somewhere, and the undertaker shipped the body."

Margaret sat staring at the even flame of the gas log. "None of her folks was here; they shipped"—

The life had died out of the great city and the clock struck 2 when Margaret Ashton laid down her pen. She bent low to kiss the letter as she sealed it, and again there came to her the vision of the man and the girl walking up the narrow, flagged pathway to the church.

* * * * * * *

Ten days later a man who wore gold glasses and looked at her above them called her into his private office. She had only been in that office twice before, and they had been red letter events in her business career.

"Miss Ashton, we have been going over the results of that last trip you made. They are remarkable for a woman. And we have decided to make you superintendent of the Troy offices."

He paused for an expression of surprise or appreciation. Miss Ashton was studying the carpet. The great man coughed.

"Your salary, of course"—

"Thank you," she said, still without looking up, "but I have accepted—another position."

The great man fairly jumped.

"But, my dear young woman, you should consider"—

"I have considered, and this is for life."

This time she looked up, straight into the eyes of the great man. Something he read there made him rise and extend his hand cordially.

"My dear Miss Ashton, I trust you will be very happy. And I congratulate the young man with all my heart."

He Spoke Japanese.

They told this on a Pittsburger who is dead now and therefore shall be nameless, but the story is still told about Washington when a crowd of newspaper men foregather and talk over old times and happenings. It was during the Harrison administration, and the Pittsburger was hot on the trail of a consulship. Several were suggested and rejected by the applicant, who didn't want a government sit at Dahomey or some other out of the world place, but a first class charge.

Finally he picked on Yokohama as the place where he would like to represent Uncle Sam and secured an audience with President Harrison.

"But do you understand the importance of this position?" asked the president. "Can you speak Japanese?"

Oh, yes, the applicant understood the importance of the position; also he could speak the language.

"Well," said the president, "let me hear you speak it."

"All right! Ask me something in Japanese."

There was a laugh all round, but the Pittsburg man did not get the position.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

Pina Gauze.

Pina gauze, made by the women of the Philippines from pineapple spikes alone, is as delicate as chiffon and far more durable. They use only the best leaves, and these, tied into bundles, are placed under heavy stones in the bed of a running stream. After two or three days of this treatment they are exposed for a time to the action of the sun and air. Each piece is closely inspected to make sure that the process of decomposition was thorough, and if it was not the leaves are subjected a second time to the operation. The fibrous threads are at last wholly separate from the cellulose and lignose particles and cleaned from the sap and gummy substance. The whole is then beaten with a wooden mallet grooved on the face like a fluting machine. The threads are kept moist while this beating is in progress, and the separate threads are thus blended into one mass. In color the fibers vary from cream and light gray to pure white. After the "pineapple cloth" is finished figures are stamped on it with blocks and afterward worked or embroidered by hand.—Chicago News.

His Latest Request.

There is a clever lad who will get his living in this world. For playing truant maternal authority cut off his supper. Casting one fond look at the authoress of his existence, he paused at the door to say:

"Mother, I am going to die, and when I am no more I wish the doctor to cut me open and look at my stomach."

The maternal heart was filled with awful forebodings, and the maternal voice asked what he meant.

"I wish it to be known," he answered, "that I died of starvation."

This was enough. The small boy was triumphant and retired to his little bed gorged to repletion.

HOUR FOR ACTION NOW ARRIVED

Vladivostock Squadron Abroad For Several Days.

JAPS OCCUPY PING YANG

Japanese Land Forces Must Make a Decisive Move Against the Enemy.--Russia's Corean Army Is 99,000 Men. Bandits Kill Russians.

The military correspondent of the London Times says that the hour for decisive action by Japanese land forces is at hand, and his expectation is that a forward move toward the Yalu will be made when concentration in that quarter of Corea is complete. The correspondent further says: "While retaining the general intention of retreating to the interior if assailed by overwhelming strength, the Russians are growing confident as their numbers rise, and evidently propose to make the Japanese advance to Mukden a costly business."

VLADIVOSTOCK SQUADRON ABROAD.

The Petit Parisien's St. Petersburg correspondent cables: "I learn from a sure source that the Russian Vladivostock squadron has left port. The officials absolutely refuse to discuss the destination of the squadron. Seventy-two hours have passed since the ships left Vladivostock."

DYNAMITE USED TO FREE SHIPS.

It is reported in official circles in St. Petersburg that the Vladivostock squadron left there last week for an unknown destination. The ice was shattered by dynamite to give the ships passage from the harbor. It is rumored that Vice-Admiral Stark has attempted suicide.

CHIN CHUSES KILL THIRTY RUSSIANS.

Yinkow, March 18th, via Tien Tsin.—Several hundred soldiers arrive here daily. Ten light field guns are now at the Russian railway station and nineteen more have been added to the batteries of forts at the river mouth. There are fifteen hundred soldiers here now and one thousand are expected to arrive to-day. The Chinese say that the Russian post of Chin Chau, near Port Arthur, was attacked by five hundred Chin Chuses on March 16th, and thirty Russians killed. The Chin Chuses were finally driven off, having lost four killed.

I interviewed Col. Wunthe, viceroy of Yuan Shinkai's army, who came to New Chwang recently on an official mission and proceeded to Port Arthur to remove the women and children there. He says that the Russians refused his mission, but promised to send away all the Chinese who desired to leave. Fifteen hundred were sent to Chefoo by one steamer and one thousand more by the American steamer Pleiades. Many women and children were sent to various points in Manchuria by railroad. The Russians say that no more Chinese desired to leave. Col. Munthe was satisfied with this arrangement.

JAPS OCCUPY PING YANG.

Viceroy Alexieff cables from Mukden as follows:—"General Mishtchenko reports that Ping Yang is occupied by Japanese infantry with some guns, and that the Corean carts are carrying their supplies. The enemy's cavalry is not visible in large numbers and only isolated horsemen are seen. Their horses are poor. Our patrols discovered the presence of the enemy's infantry on the banks of the Cheng Cheng river, five versts (about 3½ miles) from Anju. The enemy opened fire and killed one of our horses."

COSSACKS MAINTAIN COMMUNICATION.

All the Russian forces, with the exception of some two hundred Cossacks, have retired beyond the Yalu. The Cossacks are employed in scouting between that river and Ping Yang. Forty thousand Russians are concentrated at Kiuliencheng. Between Kiuliencheng and Antung there is a line of posts consisting of five Cossacks each, distant four hundred yards from one another. The Japanese attach no importance to the Russian force at Possiet Bay. They will refuse minor engagements until the serious business of the war begins. The report that the Russian destroyer Skora was blown up while entering Port Arthur is confirmed.

ADMIRAL STARK ATTEMPTS SUICIDE.

A dispatch from St. Petersburg says it is reported that Vice-Admiral Stark, who was relieved from the command of the fleet at Port Arthur and called home after the battle of February 9th, has tried to commit suicide.

MARKET REPORT.

Weekly Review of Prices Culled From The Commercial.

WHEAT—Manitoba wheat has during the week followed very closely the fluctuations in the American markets. The Winnipeg option market continues to put through a comparatively large volume of trade in the purely speculative. The trade in aggregate, but the bulk of it is cash wheat is dull, for there is practically no demand for shipping or export. Prices are: 1 northern 95c; 2 northern 91½c; 3 northern 86c; No. 4 wheat 78c; feed wheat 56c; No. 2 feed 46c; spot or March delivery. For May delivery: 1 northern 97c; 2 northern 94c; 3 northern 90½c; No. 4 wheat 81c; all in store Fort William and Port Arthur.

FLOUR—The market is unchanged at the moment, but a decline is looked for. We quote: Hungarian Patent $2.60 per sack of 98 lbs, delivered to the trade; Glenora Patent $2.60; Strong Bakers $2.20; and XXX $2.00. These prices are subject to the usual discount to the trade.

MILL FEED—The market is steady. We quote: Bran $18 per ton, in bulk, delivered to the trade; shorts $19 per ton.

GROUND FEED—We quote: Oat chop $28 per ton, delivered to the trade; barley chop $22; mixed barley and oats $25; oil cake $37 per ton.

OATS—There is a good demand for all offerings and the market is a little firmer. No. 2 white in carlots on track are worth 38 to 39c here, and feed grades 36 to 37c. Farmers' loads in the country bring 31 to 32c, and on the street here 35 to 36c.

BARLEY—Malting grades are not offering. Feed barley cannot now be bought here for less than 42 to 43c.

BUTTER — Creamery — Creamery butter is not moving in a wholesale way and the market may be described as nominal.

BUTTER — Dairy — The movement is very light and the market is about bare. Dealers will pay good prices in the country for fresh made bricks, some naming a price of 25c. Old tub butter is bringing from 15 to 19c per pound, delivered to the trade here.

EGGS—The market is very unsettled. The near approach of spring makes a sharp decline certain, but in the meantime there is scarcely any market. There is plenty of demand, but very little to satisfy it with. Dealers will pay 27c per dozen for case lots delivered here, but the price will be lower as soon as the movement starts.

POULTRY—There are practically none offering and the market is in a nominal condition.

HIDES—The market shows no change from values of a week ago. At Chicago the market is firm. We quote: Country frozen hides 5½c per pound, less 5 pounds tare; No. 1 city butchers' hides 6c per pound; No. 2's 5c; and 3's 4c; sheepskins same price as hides.

TALLOW—No. 1 tallow is worth 3¾c per pound, delivered at Winnipeg, and No. 2 2¾c.

SENECA ROOT—Clean, dry stock would bring 60c per pound here, and the market ranges from 55 to 60c.

CATTLE—The market is quiet, as cattle are not plentiful. Choice beef cattle are worth 4c off cars here and inferior grades ½ to 1c less.

SHEEP—The market is nominal, as there are none offering.

HOGS—The market is quiet and unchanged. Hogs weighing from 160 to 250 pounds are worth 5c per pound weighed off cars here; light and heavy weights ½ to 1c less.

scarce and degr. Prices range from scarce and dear. Prices range from $35 to $55 each, according to quality.

HORSES—Ontario draft horses are bringing from $350 to $450 per team here, according to weight and quality.

DOMINION EXHIBITION

The Advantages of Exhibiting at the Winnipeg Dominion Fair.

C. B. McNaughton, superintendent of the exhibition department of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, has issued a circular to the manufacturers of Canada, furnishing details of the Dominion exhibition in Winnipeg, July 25th to August 6th next. By special arrangement, a display of manufactured goods will be placed under the direct supervision of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association. This will afford an unprecedented opportunity to the manufacturers of Canada to introduce their products into this section of the Dominion, which they should not fail to take advantage of. United States manufacturers are alive to the importance of trade in Western Canada and the present conditions demand that a representative display of goods made in Canada should be made at this exhibition. Reference is made to the new buildings and to freight concessions, and to special arrangements for manufacturers to send their exhibits from Winnipeg to the exhibitions at Toronto, London or Ottawa. These shipments will be forwarded free of charge from Winnipeg to any of the points mentioned. From there to other exhibitions, or to the original starting point, exhibits will be carried at one-half of the regular rates.

SECTION FOREMAN KILLED

M. Currie of Oak Lake, Run Into By a Snow Plough.

M. Currie, a C. P. R. section foreman, met his death about three miles west of Oak Lake on Wednesday by being struck by a snow plow while returning home.

Currie was accompanied by two workmen, Wm. Casey and J. Tidball, and had gone over his division with them the afternoon previous. It was on their way back that the accident occurred. All three were injured and the two workmen are yet unconscious. They were picked up and taken into Oak Lake by the snow plow crew, and Currie died at 8.30, despite medical treatment.

The deceased had been a resident of Oak Lake for a number of years. He was among the most highly respected citizens, and his family have the sympathy of the entire community in their sad bereavement.

ROUGH AND TUMBLE

Ymir Miner, A. McDermid Killed By Camp Mate.

As the result of a rough and tumble fight at Ymir, in which Muskoka rules prevailed, Alexander McDermid is dead and Miner Campbell is accused of his murder. McDermid was the aggressor in the mining camp brawl, but he got the worst of the fight. When he was on the ground Campbell kicked him on the head and then walked directly away. A few minutes after this had taken place another miner found McDermid lying on the snow dead. As soon as Campbell heard the news he gave himself up to the police. The coroner's jury found that McDermid came to his death by a blow inflicted by his murderer Campbell.

Professional Mourners.

In ancient times funerals were followed by professional mourners, who simulated the appearance of the wildest grief. The custom survives in the valley of Sondrio, in the Alps. There the women do not follow the funeral, but they group themselves at the entrance of the cemetery and burn, in honor of the dead, candles which vary in size, according to the remuneration. They are as prodigal as were the mourners of ancient times in their simulation of excessive grief.

DUNSMUIR'S MILLIONS

EDNA WALLACE HOPPER'S UNSUCCESSFUL SUIT FOR THEM.

Although She Has to Pay a Large Part of the Costs It Is Not All Loss, as Publicity and Sympathy Are an Asset to Be Counted by the Little Actress—Seemed Near to Success.

Viewed from a business standpoint, Edna Wallace Hopper's unsuccessful suit against James Dunsmuir, formerly Premier of British Columbia, and one of the richest men on the Pacific Coast, has not been altogether a failure. 'Tis true that the millions for which the actress struggled have eluded her eager grasp, and that she is ordered to pay a large share of the costs in a suit which has been remarkably expensive, but there are compensations. The free advertising which she has received, and the sympathy which has been expressed for her in some quarters are worth it all. In the theatrical profession sympathy and publicity are just as good as unminted gold, for with little trouble they can be turned into ready money.

Seemed Near to Success.

At present, the likelihood of the plaintiff accepting congratulations with composure is slight. Only a few weeks ago it appeared that her chances of spending some of the Dunsmuir millions were very bright. So rosy did her prospects appear that the mother of the man whose estate was in dispute joined Mrs. Hopper as a plaintiff. Had there not appeared to be grave danger that the actress would win her point, this unexpected move would never have been made. Mrs. Dunsmuir's step was obviously made in the interests of the defence, and was quite reasonable, for if James Dunsmuir were to be deprived of his brother's millions, surely his mother had as much right to them as a young comedienne, in whose veins flows not a drop of Dunsmuir blood. Mrs. Dunsmuir's claim was strengthened by the fact that it was she who gave the millions to her two sons in the first place. Both were good business men and increased the capital with which they set out, but to their mother both owed their fortune. She could have disinherited either of them, and this possibility, in the past, had a vital effect on the lives of some of the chief actors in the play which has just come to an end.

Dunsmuir's Coal Mines.

The prologue of this "strange, eventful history" opens with the death of Robert Dunsmuir, some fifteen years ago. Dunsmuir had made a large fortune by developing the famous coal mines at Nanaimo, on Vancouver Island. The coal deposits were not only of great extent, but unusually good as well. So superior was the Vancouver article, that it was able to go down to San Francisco, and, handicapped by a hostile tariff, practically put the United States coal out of business. It was exported to Japan, and wherever it came in competition with either American or English coal, it more than held its own. When Robert Dunsmuir died, this great export trade in coal had attained huge proportions. It had demanded a fleet of vessels, and several lines of railway, all of which were owned by the coal magnate, and by him bequeathed to his widow.

The Buxom Widow Appears.

Mrs. Dunsmuir decided to put James, the elder son, in charge of the actual mining work, and all the business which arose on Vancouver Island, while Alexander, the younger, went to San Francisco, to see to the distribution of the coal in its chief market. Thither Alexander repaired, and threw himself into the work with enthusiasm. He was a man of sound judgment, industrious and enterprising. There was, however, another streak in him which attracted attention when he and Mrs. Wallace, a widow, with one daughter, Edna, began housekeeping together. In explanation it was said that they loved each other, but dared not get married, because Mrs. Dunsmuir would surely cut Alexander off with a dollar. Then Mrs. Dunsmuir sold her interest in the Dunsmuir business to James and Alexander. In a day or two appeared the announcement of Mrs. Wallace's marriage to Alexander Dunsmuir. Less than two months later, on January 21, 1900, Alexander Dunsmuir died in New York. Six months afterwards his widow followed him to the grave.

Left Fortune to His Brother.

Shortly before this second event, Alexander Dunsmuir's will had been made public. Executed on the very day of his marriage, it left all his property to his brother James. The heir's position was strengthened by a declaration signed by Mrs. Dunsmuir, in which she assigned, on behalf of herself, her heirs or assigns, all title to her husband's property in consideration of an annuity of $25,000, which James Dunsmuir was to pay her. These facts coming to Edna's ears, she at once entered suit to have Alexander's will set aside, and her mother's deed declared invalid. Her contention was that her stepfather was not of sound mind when he made the will, he having been on the verge of delirium tremens at the time, and quite incapable of sane action. As for her mother's assignment, Mrs. Hopper declared that undue influence had been brought to bear upon her by James Dunsmuir's lawyers, and that this document was therefore null and void.

Deeds Versus Opinions.

At the trial, which has just been decided against her by Mr. Justice Drake, of Victoria, the former wife of the famous DeWolf Hopper lent all her energies to prove that Alexander Dunsmuir was an habitual drunkard. Many witnesses, including an expert or two, were called to establish this claim. Scores of instances of Dunsmuir's servitude to whiskey were presented. He saw snakes. He feared some one was trying to poison him. Such an able and comprehensive drinker was he that DeWolf Hopper shrank from him and turned pale when invited by his stepfather-in-law to "say what his was." In view of these facts, the claimant demanded, could Alexander Dunsmuir make a rational deposition of his property? Judge Drake has answered decisively in the affirmative. In his opinion a number of actions going to show that Dunsmuir was a level-headed business man were to be considered superior to the opinions of experts. He also laid emphasis on the intention of Alexander to leave his property to his brother. This intention had been freely expressed by Alexander, and his will verified it. The will was clearly the result of a long contemplated action. Thus saith the learned judge. And when next we have an opportunity of seeing Edna Wallace-Dunsmuir-DeWolf Hopper (and it is said that she is about to add another storey to her name), we shall be interested to see whether His Lordship's decision has left an unsightly line on her smiling face.

EDUCATION REPORT.

Interesting Government Statistics About Ontario's Public Schools.

The report of the Minister of Education for 1903 has been brought down. The number of public schools in 1902 was 5,671, an increase of 8; pupils enrolled, 408,124, decrease 6,495; average daily attendance, 232,663, decrease 2,421; percentage of average attendance to total, 57.01; number employed as teachers (exclusive of kindergarten and night school teachers) 2,200 men and 6,297 women, increase 94; number of teachers who attended Normal School 4,601, increase 174; teachers with university degree, 81; average salary of male teachers $436, increase $15; average salary of female teachers $313, increase $7; expended for public school houses, $331,842; expended for teachers' salaries, $2,987,933; expended for other purposes, $1,069,944; total expended on public schools, $4,389,719, increase $61,037.

Separate schools in 1902, 391, increase 19; pupils enrolled 45,964 increase 1,977; average daily attendance 28,817; increase 1,891; percentage of average total, 62.69; teachers 870, increase 52; expended on separate schools, $100,910; salaries, $210,199; other purposes, $124,331; total expended on separate schools, $435,440, increase $43,812.

Continuation classes 480; pupils in attendance 4,864, decrease 69.

The report says: "Many of our teachers, through lack of facilities, did not formerly receive training at the normal schools in manual training, nature study and domestic science. I believe it will be the part of wisdom to make up for the loss by having classes formed at suitable centres during the present year."

The Roads and the Snow.

Half a dozen newspaper men who had come to town to attend the annual meeting of the Press Association were talking about the severity of the winter, the abundance of snow, and the disorganized train service.

"The train I traveled on," said Mr. Arch. McNee of the Windsor Record, "was delayed for nearly a day at Forest, and we made part of the journey with eight engines pulling the train."

"The train I came on," said Mr. Young of the Rodney Mercury, "was nine hours making fifteen miles between St. Thomas and London, and when I got to Toronto the two-day canvention was over."

"In our town," said Mr. D. Williams of the Collingwood Bulletin, "careful measurements have been made of the snowfall this year, and the fall has amounted to 96 inches. If it had not melted and packed down, we would have had eight feet on the level."

"Up in our country," said Mr. W. Ireland of the Parry Sound North Star, "there's too much snow to carry on lumbering operations. Coal is scarce, and wood is hard to get because people can't get it from the bush. Why, if you chop down a tree up there the snow's so deep that the tree just falls down in the snow and is buried clear out of sight, and the chopper won't be able to find it until next spring."—Toronto Star.

Goldwin Smith and Journalism.

To his interesting article on the Treaty-making Power in the new number of The Canadian Magazine, Mr. Goldwin Smith appends a little autobiographical note: "I may say that I never was a member of the political Association of 'Canada First,' nor had I anything to do with the founding of The Nation. I was in England at the time, though on my return I was persuaded to contribute. I also contributed a few articles to The Liberal. The attacks made upon me in The Globe gave me an artificial prominence, but it was well understood at the time that they were really directed against Mr. Blake, whom the Browns feared to attack directly. It is untrue, also, that I have ever sought or desired to enter public life in Canada. I had declined it in my native country, and have again more than once declined it since I settled here."

FRIDAY, APRIL 1, 1904.

THE LOGICAL CONCLUSION

The incorporation movement is steadily gaining ground and every week sees some new converts. Some are drawn to it by the increased fire protection the town will gain, others by the better sanitation that the town will have, but the rank and file of its advocates is made up of citizens who sincerely wish to see the town progress in a broad sense, and who realize that the advantages to be gained from incorporation are manifold.

There is no denying the fact that the town is receiving much better attention from the provincial government than it previously did and there is even some ground for believing that the town has been expecting too much from this source. When a town reaches the size that Fernie has reached, with a revenue exceeding those of many incorporated towns within the province it is time that it asserted its independence and relieved the provincial government of the burden of its support. This is but the logical result of growth and development, and the government expects such towns to assume the management of its own affairs as soon as they are able to do so. No town can hope to receive grants from the government that will aggregate anything like a near approach to the revenue collected, for the expense of maintaining the innumerable districts where municipalities are impracticable is immense, and naturally towns that are big enough to run their own affairs must help to bear the general burden if they persist in refussing to accept the emancipation that is theirs for the asking. The situation that Fernie is now in reminds us strikingly of the overgrown lazy youth who will not cut loose from his mother's apron strings but instead of rustling a good living for himself he contents himself with a meagre existence by "spunging" upon his parents' impoverished hospitality.

The deplorable condition of the fire brigade's finances as shown in Mr. Alexander's report at the Board of Trade meeting on Tuesday is one of the strongest arguments in favor of incorporation: the indebtedness is of course only a small matter to a municipality but without any form of government in the town there is only one way raising the money, by passing around the hat. This time-worn method has about reached its limit and some more equitable manner of levying the burden is demanded. A very considerable proportion of the amount subscribed during the last "passing of the hat" has never been paid over and those who had the matter in charge very naturally have lost heart in that system of raising fire protection funds. The present inefficiency of the fire protection service also appeals for reformation and improvement, which can be brought about only through incorporating. The water supply is not adequate and the hose is wearing out: exigencies that cannot be met squarely without some form of local government.

EDITORIAL NOTES

OUR attention has been called to the need of a side-walk running south from the school house connecting with the sidewalk on Wood St. In the spring and fall the pupils and teachers experience much inconvenience in reaching that street direct. If the matter is attended to promptly the slush that is certain to follow the disappearance of the snow will not be feared in that quarter.

HON. MR. LYTTLETON, colonial secretary in the British government, recently made the statement in the House in defense of Chinese immigration, that the prosperity of British Columbia and California was based on gold mines won by Chinese labor. The colonial secretary is certainly at a loss for argument in support of the introduction of Coolie labor into South Africa when he utters such statements as this. With the exception of a few placer and hydraulic claims which white miners did not wish to handle the Chinese have taken no part in the development of our gold mines.

THE duty on Canadian rough lumber entering the United States is now practically $7.50 per 1000 feet. The original $2 duty has been supplemented by another of $5.50 induced by the millmen of the State of Washington in retaliation for the export duty placed on logs by the British Columbia government. This export duty varies from $1.00 to $5.50 per thousand according to the grade of the logs. The prohibitive rate against Canadian lumber will surely open the eyes of the Federal government of Canada to the fact that a duty on American rough lumber could not be regarded as special legislation for British Columbia lumbermen but is demanded to uphold the national policy of the country against the aggressive policy of the country to the south of us.

AN important meeting or the silver lead miners and smelter men was held at Nelson on Wednesday when a memorial was prepared to be sent to the Minister of Trade and Commerce recommending certain alterations in the recently adopted Lead Bounty Act. The memorial states that the Bounty Act has started the development of many low grade mines as well as high grade properties and that the Canadian smelters are so rushed in the beginning that they will be unable to handle the concentrates from low properties at rates sufficiently low to enable the mines to be run at profit. They therefore ask that the Canadian lead smelters be allowed to export their surplus ore and that the bounty on same be paid to the producers of the ore the same as if it was smelted in Canada.

A LEAD SMELTER TOO.

MR. FERNAU STILL ANXIOUS TO LOCATE ONE HERE.

A Million Dollar Plant.—C.P.R. Asked For a Special Rate on Lead Ore to Fernie.

The announcement made some time ago that Mr. Fernau had given up his project of interesting Belgian capital in a lead smelter for the Kootenays was made prematurely. Mr. Fernau has not yet given up the idea, but on the other hand he is working steadily with that object in view. More than that the site for this smelter, if the plans materialize will be at Eernie.

The whole matter resolves itself into a question of transportation rates on lead ores. The C.P. R. is asked to haul ore to Fernie at half the present rate on fuel for western points. It is believed that the C.P.R. can afford to do this as the traffic from this point is nearly all westward and the cars return empty.

This smelter will mean an initial expenditure of one million dollars for plant, etc., and a steady and increasing payroll for the staff of employees. It is stated that the smelter will on the start treat 600 tons of lead ore per day.

LOCALS CONTINUED.

Jas. McEvoy left to-day on a trip to the coast.

Miss Cole of Cranbrook is visiting in town.

Geo. Clapp is laid up with an attack of rheumatism.

The local Masons are having a banquet this evening.

The public schools are closed for the Easter holidays, Friday and Monday.

Good Friday was generally observed as a holiday. The mines were shut down and the stores were closed.

The last issue of the B. C. Gazette contained an application notice for the incorporation of Ladysmith, on Vancouver Island.

An Italian band is being formed in Fernie. The leader was imported direct from Italy and has been quietly at work getting things in shape. Twenty-five new instruments have been purchased and are now on the way and in the meantime the members are receiving instruction on old instruments.

The McRae Lumber Co. at Hosmer, are all ready to commence the sawing season. They have two million feet of logs on the bank now. The operations are kept back by the absence of Mr. Robt Black who is yet to ill to leave the hospital in Victoria where he is slowly recovering from an attack of typhoid fever.

The worst storm of the season raged on the prairie from Medicine Hat to the Lakes during the latter part of last week, and as a result traffic on the railways was badly demoralized. The eastern mail for the Crow line accumulated for four days and on Tuesday an immense quantity of delayed sacks were landed in Fernie.

The output of the coal mines for the month of March has fallen far below the average for various reasons. The heavy snow-fall is directly and indirectly largely responsible for the decrease. The lack of markets and the shortage of cars were caused in many instances by the snowfall in other parts of the province. The Northport smelter is at present closed down temporarily. Butte is not consuming much fuel now and the coke market there has fallen off some.

WANTED—Special representativs in this and adjoining territories, to represent and advertise an old established business house of solid financial standing. Salary $21 weekly, with expenses advanced each Monday by check direct from headquarters. Expenses advanced; position permanent. We furnish everything. FORCE OF JAPS WIPED OUT

Foes Face to Face on Saizen and Cheng Cheng Rivers

RUSSIA NOT READY.

Three Hundred Russians Completely Annihilated a Smaller Body of Japanese Near Ping Yang—More Russians Dead Found on Cruiser.

The American cruiser Cincinnati has brought a report to Shanghai that 3 oo Russians encountered 200 Japanese near Ping Yang, Corea. The Japanese force was annihilated.

FOES FACE TO FACE.

The Russian fleet has returned to Port Arehur. The Russian troops stationed at Leishu are moving towards the south. Two hundred and fifty of them have arrived on the opposite side of the Saizen river. They fired on the Japanese, who replied.

SCOUTS CLOSE TOGETHER.

A Tokio correspondent of the London Times says that the Russian and Japanese scouts are now separated only by the river Cheng Cheng, just north of Anju. The dispatch adds that the foreign correspondents will leave for the front on March 20th and 23rd, but their destination is still unknown.

SIX HANGED AT PORT ARTHUR.

During the last bombardment of Port Arthur four Chinamen and two Japanese were caught signalling to the Japanese fleet. The six men were immediately hanged on the hill below the harbor of the fort. Private advices from Russian forces in Port Arthur state that the intensest anxiety exists as to the town's ultimate fate. Despite the utmost vigilance of the military authorities, the place is infested by spies, who continually betray information to the enemy.

RUSSIANS RECROSSING YALU.

The Japanese have been advised that part of the Russian cavalry in Northern Corea has recrossed the Yalu river, and that a Cossack battery has also withdrawn. A small Russian force still occupies Chong-Ju.

Five thousand engineers are now employed in the building of the military road from Seoul to Wiju. Only a few miles have been completed. Civilians are working on the railroad from Seoul to Sussun. The road can not be completed before next Octoberj

RUSSIA TO BE READY APRIL 1.

The Russian army will be ready for active land operations on April 1st. It is believed that the war will then be pushed to an early conclusion.

MORE RUSSIAN DEAD FOUND.

The work of raising the sunken Russian cruiser Variag in Chemulpo harbor is proceeding rapidly by means of a complete wrecking outfit brought from Japan, including immense derricks on floating barges, diving appasatus and every other appliance required. Several bodies of Russian sailors have been recovered and given military burial. The authorities express the hope that the ship will be placed in commission within a few months.

ESTIMATE OF WAR'S DURATION.

Russia is making preparations for the war on the basis that it will last a year and a half. The idea of sending the Baltic squadron by the northern route is ridiculed in shipping circles, although ships are known to have passed that way. Sixty-eight Cossack regiments, 1,100 men strong each, have been ordered to the front.

Astrologers Predict a Year of Horrors.

The newspapers of Paris view with sonsiderable gravity the unanimity of their astrologers and second isight sages in predicting a year of horrors for 1904. All these wise men have agreed with the leading astrologer, Monsieur Jacob, who thus sizes up the situation:

Here is the horoscope for 1904, made at the moment the sun entered the sign of Capricorn. It indicates a year of great immorality in London. The Viceroy of India abdicates. The United States have great quarrels with Russia and Germany. Roosevelt falls sick and a conspiracy is hatched against him. Serious financial disasters in America.

The Emperor of Japan has great accidents.

An attempt on the life of the Emperor of China.

Volcanic shocks in Constantinople, Chili and Philippines.

A year of unhealthy literature and unlimited materialism.

The French cabinet falls between April 7th and 19th.

A panic in a music hall, grave accidents and popular disturbances in Russia. An attempt to poison the Czar. Serious dissensions between Russia and Austria.

England loses prestige. The campaign in Thibet falls through.

Tremendous failures in Calcutta and the Transvaal.

Anarchist troubles in Spain; the government threatened.

In China women are massacred.

Everywhere crimes of passion, mysterious deaths, and strange phenomena.

A Seedless Apple.

A dispatch from Glenwood Springs, Colorado, says:—After experimenting for seven years John F. Spencer, an old fruit grower of Grand Junction, Colorado, has succeeded in perfecting seedless apple. The apple looks like a navel orange. Its inside is entirely solid, and there is a depress,on in the navel end very similar to that of the seedless orange. The tree on which the seedless apple grows is unusual in that it has no bloom. Spencer will not reveal the secret of his budding and grafting.

That Terrible Child.

The small son of a certain university professor, whose parents are deservedly popular for their tact and courteous speech, appeared at the home of a fellow professor and hesitatingly asked Mrs. —— if he might look at the parlor rug. Permission was of course granted, and Mrs. —— felt some surprise to see the little fellow stoop over the rug and stare silently for some half minute. He straightened himself up and, meeting her wondering expression, said triumphantly:

"It doesn't make me sick!".

ENTIRE COSSACK PATROL CAPTURED

Russians State That They Will Not Hold New Chwang

RATIONS ARE SHORT.

Reported From Port Lazareff That Japanese Here Bagged a Big Force of Cossacks Japan Will Make a Final Effort To Bottle Up Port Arthur.

There is a rumor at Tokio that a column of General Huroki's force has captured an entire Cossack patrol in the mountains at the head of the Yalu river. The report comes from Port Lazareff, and the Japanese army officials believe that there is good foundation for it, as Kuroki's men went by three different roads hrough the Kom mountains and are known to be on both sides of the Yalu in Northern Manchuria.

ANOTHER BOTTLING-UP ATTEMPT.

Japan is about to make a sensational attempt to bottle up Port Arthur once and for all. Fifteen big steamships are being prepared at Sasebo for this new effort. They are to steam toward Port Arthur in line, and it is immaterial whether they are sunk by Russian guns or are blown up by their crews.

RUSSIANS ENCOUNTERING DIFFICULTIES.

Spies in Manchuria have sent important information to the Japanese military auuthorities which goes to show that the Russians are meeting with enormous difficulties in mobilizing their armies. In many places the Manchurian railway is blocked by immense snowdrifts. In other places the rails have sunk. The Russians have already suffered enormous losses in men, chiefly because of lack of warm clothing, and breakdowns in the commissiariat department.

BIG REINFORCEMENTS FOR NODZU.

A St. Petersburg dispatch says:—According to trustworthy intelligence from the theatre of war the reports of a Japanese landing on the east coast of Corea are pure inventions, and no designs on Vladivostock are believed to be harbored by Marshal Nodzu, to whose present army of 65,000 men 42,000 more will probably be added by the middle of the month.

SHORT RATIONS IN PORT ARTHUR.

One of the Russians who was capured on March 10th, when the destroyer Steregushetchi was sunk, reports that food is scarce in Port Arthur, because the money for supplies has stuck to the fingers of the officers' fingers. The food in Port Arthur cannot support the garrison for more than a month, and all have been put on short rations.

WILL NOT HOLD NEW CHWANG.

News has been received at Shanghai from Port Arthur that several officers of the garrison, under the strain caused by the bombardment, and by reverses, have committed suicide. Fifty soldiers have been shot for attempted desertion within the past fortnight. An elaborate system of barbed wire barricades has been constructed around the land approaches to the town, where dynamite mines have been laid. Guns from the disabled battleships have been mounted behind the new earthworks. The Russians are not making elaborate preparations to hold New Chwang; their plan is to withdraw and burn the town. If the Japanese attack the Russians will make their first stand at Liao Yang.

JAPS SENT TO SIBERIA.

Cossacks have captured a Japanese major, five other officers and two civilians near Wi-u. All the prisoners were sent to Irkutsk, Siberia. The Russians near the Yalu river have informed the Corean authorities that anyone caught supplying provisions to the Japanese will be considered an enemy to Russia, and shot.

DIDN:T HURT VLADIVOSTOCK.

Viceroy Yuan Shi Kai is sending more troops to guard the railway at Yinkow and Shan Hai Kwan, in anticipation of the landing of a Japanese force. Three refugees who arrived at Yinkow from Vladivostock have stated that the bombardment of hat town had but slight effect. They say that four cruisers and one volunteer steamer were in the harbor; the garrison was strong. Provisions are scarce and civilians have deserted the town.

CONCENTRATING AT HARBIN.

Two Americans who arrived at New Chwang from Vladivastock say that half of the population at Vladivostock were unaware of the recent bombardment there until the next day. No damage was done, anh all the women and children left. The Americans saw a few soldiers between Tasi Chow and New Chwang, but witnessed no preparations to defend the former station or the railway line Forty miles north ol New Chwang one railway bridge was defended by a single gun. South of that point nothing had been done.

Harbin and Mukden are swarming with troops, who seem to be concentrating there.

A CHRISTIAN SOLDIER

WILL ENDURE HARDNESS TO THE END AND WIN CROWN OF LIFE.

HIS IDEAL CHARACTERISTICS

Rev. Dr. Talmage's Denunciation of War —A Thing to Be Mated With Intense Hatred—An International Curse That We Should Pray the Prince of Peace to Give Us Greater Antipathy to.

Entered according to Act of Parliament of Canada, in the year 1904, by William Sally, of Toronto, at the Dep't of Agriculture, Ottawa.

Los Angeles, Cal., March 20.—In these times of worldwide military activity and when soldierly qualities are everywhere discussed this sermon on the ideal Christian soldier is peculiarly appropriate. The preacher chooses as his text II. Timothy ii., 3, "Endure hardness as a good soldier of Jesus Christ."

What is war? War is a mortal grapple when nation says to a nation, "My quarrel with you cannot be settled but by fighting, and now we will see which of us two has the power to crush the other," and then they put their armies in the field commissioned to kill one another. War is a grave trench dug with bayonets. War! It is the most brutal, the most fiendish, the most terrific, the most blasting curse of the ages. We have the right to hate it with an intense hatred and to pray that the Prince of Peace may give us more antipathy to it and a more intense horror of the awful suffering and death that it entails.

But though war is an awful international curse there have been occasions when men have entered the army and have gone to the battlefield from conscientious motives. There have been cases, as every student of history knows, when it has become a sacred duty for the redress of wrong or for the defence of the home for the patriotic citizen to take up arms. Christ himself recognized the fact when he said, "I came not to send peace on the earth, but a sword." So it has come to pass that his followers have at times, with sore reluctance, but under a stern sense of duty, engaged in war. Unhappily, too, they have been found in hostile camps, as in our own Civil war, when good Christian men conscientiously followed the Confederate flag, as others equally conscientious followed the Union flag.

It is proper and right at certain times and seasons for good men to go to war, if they go with the right motive. The qualities which go to make up a good and a brave soldier are those which should characterize a good Christian. The courage and self-sacrifice and devotion to a righteous cause which have been displayed in the field are needed in the Christian's daily life. Therefore, Paul aptly and powerfully uses the figure of my text for a gospel comparison. He is practically saying to young Timothy: "Look upon your Christ as a great leader and general. Enlist in his service. Implicitly obey his orders. Charge in Christ's name if the order is given you to charge. Do sentinel duty and trudge weary marches if that is your order. Be ready to fight on battlefield, or starve in trench, or suffer in hospital, as duty may command." All young people are delighted with a military parade. Let me in this sermon recount for you how a gospel soldier should obey Christ's bugle call.

What does it mean to be a gospel soldier? First and foremost, to take the oath of enlistment. The difference between an army and a mob, the difference between a collection of men governed by one brain, ruled by one voice, directed by one order, and a lot of men running hither and thither like a flock of sheep, or frightened, stampeding cattle, doing as they will, is the difference between the oath of enlistment and no oath. Before a man takes the oath of enlistment he is a free man. After he takes the oath of enlistment he is no longer an independent individuality. He is a soldier, subject to the soldier's orders, and is liable to be shot if he deserts or disobeys his superior officers. The oath of enlistment practically says: "I will, if necessary, let others do my thinking. I will go where I am told to go, and do what I am told to do." The oath of enlistment is more binding than bands of steel.

What is true in reference to the English soldier or the French soldier or the American soldier is true of the gospel soldier. You cannot do effective service as a soldier of Jesus Christ unless you publicly give to him your oath of enlistment. And when you once do give that oath then you are no longer your own master. When you become a Christian soldier or a Christain sailor you must first take your oath of enlistment and then always be "waiting orders." In the public church aisle and by the table of the holy communion you give open testimony of your purpose to surrender your will to the Divine will. You must say, "I am ready, O Christ, to do what thou wilt have me to do, and go where thou commandest me to go."

What does it mean to be a gospel soldier? To be assigned to some distinct part of some distinct command in the great Christian army, following the standards of Jesus Christ. To have an individual place reserved for you in the gospel ranks, where you are to fight for the church militant, as each private American soldier during the Civil war had a place reserved for him in the ranks, whether he belonged to the cavalry or the artillery, the infantry or the engineering corps. As a military organization of a great aggregation of individuals, so the success of the army depends upon that military organization being divided and subdivided and divided again by orderly arrangement. The individual, the private soldier, must have his distinct place just as the general or the colonel or the major or the captain has his place.

Let us study for a moment the construction of an American army. Take, for illustration, that which followed Sherman to the sea. There were in that host about one hundred thousand men. These one hundred thousand men were divided first into three parts, each commanded by a major-general. Generals Schofield, McPherson and Slocum had respectively charge of the right wing, the centre and the left wing of that army. Then each wing and centre were again divided into corps, under such leaders as Generals Logan, Howard and Kirkpatrick. Then these corps were again subdivided into divisions, and these divisions again into brigades and these brigades into regiments and these regiments into companies, and each private soldier was assigned to a distinct company, the letter of which was marked on his hat and the number of the regiment marked upon the lapel of his coat.

Each American soldier always had a distinct place reserved for him in the ranks where he was supposed to fight. Sometimes in battle an American soldier might get separated from his company. During the two days' fighting before Santiago an American lieutenant saw a colored trooper of the Tenth Cavalry fighting by the side of his white men. When the lieutenant asked the black man why he was there he replied, "I have lost my command, and so, sir, if you will, I would like to fight in your company." The permission was given. That night, when the colored soldier was about to hunt up his command, he asked the lieutenant to give him a note to his captain to prove that he had been in battle and hot skulking in the rear. The next day, when going over the field hunting for his dead and wounded, this same lieutenant found upon the bloody field the same colored trooper, mortally wounded. The colored soldier beckoned to the lieutenant to lean over him. Then the dying man whispered: "Take that note and give it to the captain of L troop, Tenth Cavalry, Lawton's division, and tell him that I tried to report to my company, but could not find him. Give him that paper and say that Williams was not a coward." Ah, yes, 'tis true! A soldier always has an individual place reserved for him in the ranks where he is expected to be and expected to fight.

The soldier must be able to answer roll call in a certain company, of a certain regiment, of a certain brigade, of a certain division, of a certain corps. So the gospel soldier must have a distinct place in which he has his name upon the muster roll of the church militant. There should be no "free lances" in the gospel army, no guerrilla bands. Guerrilla ranks are filled up for the most part with iconoclasts and anarchists and cutthroats. But the gospel soldier must be a regularly enlisted man, detailed for work to some one Bible class, to some one Sunday school, to some one prayer meeting, to some one church. A gospel soldier is a Christian who obeys orders. How can you obey Christ's orders unless you have taken your individual place in the gospel ranks of Christ's great army, called the church?

The true gospel soldier always considers the posts of danger the posts of honor. He wants to hear the singing of the shells, even though that martial song may have to be accompanied by his own death rattle.

Posts of danger and difficulty are always posts of honor in the army. And yet to hear some Christian soldiers talk you would suppose that the posts in Christ's army where there are difficulties are the posts to be avoided or deserted. Even some of the ordained ministers of Jesus Christ feel that way. "Oh," says a visiting clergyman, "I am so discouraged. Why, there has been nothing but friction and trouble in my church ever since I came to it. The people have fought and misrepresented every minister who ever occupied this pulpit, and they have been finding fault with and misrepresenting me. I am so discouraged. I wish God would find me another place." Well, my brother, I confess you are having a hard time of it. I confess that some churches have a bad record. I know of one church that for forty years has made its chief fame on breaking down its different ministers. One pastor after another has been destroyed in regular order as he came to its parsonage. One minister was so tantalized and attacked that under the persecution of its members he committed suicide. But, tell me, you who have been having a hard time in that church, do you not think you are getting along there as well as any one else could? "Oh, yes!" you answer. "I know I am. In spite of three balking elders and two obstinate, fault finding trustees, we are taking in new members all the time. Never in the church's history has it been doing so much good." The, my brother, instead of complaining about your lot you should be congratulated. Go ahead and do your work. God has honored you above all others. He has put you in a difficult position. Post of difficulty always post of honor.

Sunday school teacher, that is a tough class of boys you have. You came to me the other day with tears in your eyes. Some people may think I am talking about an imaginary case, but you know I am not. Those boys at times pester you so much that you have half made up your mind to give up the class. Do not do it. Those boys may stick pins into each other. They may come to class with dirty faces. They may seem to be ungrateful. But remember, oh, Christian soldier, if you desert your post now and leave those boys they will not obey the voice of another teacher. They will not come to church at all. You must be to those boys what Dr. T. J. Bernardo is to the London newsboy, and Charles N. Crittenton is to the Florence Crittenton missions. The gospel heroes of the past have given up their all to win their victories. They labored, they slaved, they sacrificed themselves among the outcasts. "Go thou and do likewise."

The unrecognized heroes of the civil war have not had their due. The generals and the boys who fought at the front have been honored as they deserved, but who has had a tribute of praise to give to the self sacrificing men who made it possible for the fighting soldiers to live and die at the front? I would sing the praises of the muleteers. I would sing the praises of the army officers who bought the shoes and the stockings and the trousers and the coats and the hats and the blankets and forwarded them and never let a dishonest dollar stick to their fingers. I would sing the praises of the ambulance corps; and of the soldiers who acted as nurses. Did you ever stop to think that in all the United States, from the Atlantic to the Pacific, there is not one, not even one, monument erected to an army surgeon? Many memorial stones for McPherson and Sherman, a magnificent remembrance to Grant, but not one monument for one surgeon. In all the United States not one monument erected to a mustering officer who stayed at home to fill the ranks. Not one. In all the United States not one erected to the faithful paymasters who carried around the money so essential to the support of the soldiers' children at home. And yet those sacrificing deeds of the heroes of the Civil War made it possible for their brothers in blue and in gray to stay at the front and fight on the picket line.

Christian soldiers, who are the stay at homes? I have recounted these deeds of the unrecognized heroes of war for a purpose. I want to encourage you in your ordinary duties of life. It is not possible for every Christian to be a Chinese Gordon or a Havelock or a O. O. Howard or a Stonewall Jackson. It is not possible for all Christian soldiers to stand in the conspicuous places and win the plaudits of the Christian world. But remember that the humble private in Christ's army —she who as a mother living in the home, as a sister working behind the counter, as a daughter teaching school to support an aged parent or to give an education to a young brother—is in God's sight one of the essentials for his great army. You are the power behind the main line, making it possible for other Christian soldiers to fight in the open. Paul is saying to the soldier in the rear as well as at the front, to the inconspicuous as well as the conspicuous soldier alike, "Endure hardness as a good soldier of Jesus Christ."

And why should we all endure hardness as good soldiers of Jesus Christ? For two reasons. First, because it is possible for every private as well as Christian officer to receive the highest of all soldier's rewards. What is the highest? Yes, the very highest? We have read how the Duke of Marlborough was honored. Not only was he created a duke, but on account of the Blenheim victory Parliament voted him the magnificent manor of Woodstock and his royal mistress gave him $1,000,000. We have read how Arthur Wellesley was raised to be Duke of Waterloo. Lord Roberts, recently the commander of the British forces, and Viscount Kitchener were raised to the peerage for their services rendered to the British Crown. But all these offerings and honors, these dignities and fame, given by a grateful country to faithful sons, will be as nothing compared to the greatest gift which is given to a Christian soldier. The gift which is the smile of approbation from a loving Divine Commander. The "Well done!" which goes to the Christian hero of the name of Adoniram Judson. The "Well done!" which is given to the humble servant girl and to the humble clerk and to the humble nurse and to the humble missionary.

But why, again, should we all endure hardness as good soldiers of Jesus Christ? Because in so doing we are following his blessed example. He who spared not himself, but suffered freely for us, has the right to expect fortitude from us. From none of us does he ask such service as he himself rendered to us. When the army of Alexander the Great was scaling a noted mountain pass the strength of the soldiers became exhausted. Many threw themselves upon the ground to die. The great commander saw the condition. He did not curse or upbraid. He quietly dismounted from his war charger. He threw aside his heavy cloak. He lifted a private soldier's pickaxe, then vigorously went to work digging away at the ice. His soldiers saw him. They knew he was as tired as they. Then they jumped to their feet. By the power of a brave example they arose and went again to work, and again won a new victory. Christian soldiers, wherever we go, we can find our Divine Leader ahead. Our backs may ache, but he is carrying our burden of sin. Our feet may grow tired, but from his feet and hands and head and heart are flowing streams of blood. In olden times a soldier was said to have gathered an armful of pointing spears and pressed them into his own breast, that over his prostrate body his comardes might find a breach in the enemy's ranks and charge to victory. So over Christ's body we may win eternal life. And here and now upon the foundation stones of a Christ's mausoleum may we build the great "white temple of a Christian soldier's sacrifice."

The Czar as a Composer.

It has long been known that the Czar possessed a very pretty musical gift, and His Majesty has recently essayed his power as a composer of music to his own verses. In these verses the predominant note is one of religion. They extol the glories of the Orthodox Church and its saints, and exalt the virtue of Christian self-sacrifice and renunciation of worldly goods and prosperity.

Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local applications as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

RAILROAD MAN HAD HIS TRIALS

Engineer Rafferty Found Relief in Dodd's Kidney Pills.

Was Run Down And Laid Up, and the Great Kidney Remedy Made Him Strong and Vigorous Again

Winnipeg, Man., Mar. 28—(Special.)—One of the best known and most popular locomotive engineers running out of Winnipeg on the C.P.R. is Mr. Ben Rafferty, who lives at 175 Maple Street. And Mr. Rafferty gives some days of blockades and strain and worry none can afford to overlook. That advice is "Use Dodd's Kidney Pills." Mr. Rafferty says:

"Years of long runs on the railway had broken down my constitution. My back gave out entirely. Terrible sharp cutting pains would follow one another, till I felt as if I were being sliced away piecemeal.

"I would come in from a run tired to death. My sole desire would be to get rest and sleep, and they were the very things I could not get. Finally I got so bad I had to lay off work.

"After being laid up ten days I started to use Dodd's Kidney Pills. The first night after using them I slept soundly. In three days I threw away the belt I had worn for years, and now I have not the slightest pain in the back. I sleep soundly and wake up joyous and refreshed, and Dodd's Kidney Pills did it."

A NEST BUILDING FISH.

Nature Affords a Safe Asylum For the Helpless Fishes.

It is doubtful whether protective mimicry among animals is better exemplified than in the case of the fish commonly known as the marbled angler of the Sargasso sea (Pterophryne histrio). Owing to its peculiar structure it is a poor swimmer, and it therefore spends most of its life moving slowly about on the bottom among corals, seaweed, etc., which these fishes closely resemble in color and in outline. They cling, too, to the floating masses of sargassum weed with their peculiar fins, and the color markings of the fish closely resemble the weed itself. Not only does the weed thus furnish a home for this species, but the fish actually constructs a nest from it and therein deposits its eggs. One of these nests, found in connection with the Hassler expedition, was described as consisting of a round mass of sargassum about the size of two fists rolled up together. To all appearances it was made of nothing but this gulf weed, the branches and leaves of which were, however, evidently knit together and not merely tangled into a roundish mass, for, though some of the leaves and branches hung loose from the nest, it became at once visible that the bulk of the ball was held together by threads trending in every direction among the seaweed. By close observation it became apparent that this mass of seaweed was a nest, the central part of which was bound up in the form of a ball, with several loose branches extending in various directions. On still closer examination the nest above described was found to be full of eggs, which were scattered throughout the mass.

Nature has thus afforded a safe asylum for these somewhat helpless fishes, whose cutaneous filaments, which are plentifully provided on the belly, around the mouth and on the dorsal spine, so nearly resemble the weed itself that predaceous fishes doubtless fail to recognize the living animals, and thus the latter escape extermination.—Scientific American.

WHY HIS MARRIAGE FAILED.

He never had time to go anywhere with his wife.

He never dreamed that there were two sides to marriage.

He never dreamed that a wife needs praise or compliments.

He thought his wife should spend all her time doing housework.

He treated his wife as he would not have dared to treat another woman.

He never dreamed that his wife needed a vacation, recreation or change.

He never made concessions to his wife's judgment, even in unimportant matters.

He thought the marriage vow had made him his wife's master instead of her partner.

He took all the little attentions lavished on him by his wife as his by "divine right" and not as favors.—Success.

Flowers For London.

In Scilly and Guernsey the industry of growing early flowers for the London market has reached large proportions. From the former island as many as fifty tons of early spring blossoms are shipped to the mainland in a single day. The flower season begins in January, when the early varieties are coming into bloom. Often, when the weather is cold and cloudy, the buds are tardy in opening, and it is necessary to resort to artificial aid in order that the waiting markets may be supplied. The flower heads are picked as soon as one bud penetrates the calyx and placed in jars of water, which are ranged upon the shelves of a greenhouse kept at a temperature of 60 to 70 degrees. In a few hours the backward buds respond to the genial warmth, spread their petals, assume their glowing colors and are ready for bunching and packing.

An Anecdote of Whittier.

A friend in conversation with Mr. Whittier, the poet, remarked that he was about to contract to furnish a lot of oak timber for the government gunboats and asked him if he thought it was in consistence with the peace doctrines of the Quaker denomination. Without saying anything calculated to decide the question the two arrived at their parting place, when Mr. Whittier, shaking his friend's hand, said, "Moses, if thee does furnish any of that oak timber thee spoke of, be sure that it is all sound."

His Ambition.

"He wants to be considered a giant in debate," said one statesman.

"Yes," answered the other; "that's why he insists on using stilted language for undersized thoughts."—Washington Star.

THE FEDERAL LIFE ASSURANCE COMPANY OF CANADA.

TWENTY-SECOND ANNUAL STATEMENT.

The twenty-second annual meeting of the shareholders of the Federal Life Assurance Company of Canada was held at the head office of the company in Hamilton on Tuesday, March 1, 1904. The President, Mr. David Dexter, in the chair. The following reports and financial statement were submitted.

DIRECTORS' REPORT.

Your directors have the honor to present the report and financial statement of the company for the year, which closed on the 31st December, 1903 and duly vouched for by the auditors.

The new business of the year consisted of one thousand nine hundred and fifty-seven applications for insurance, aggregating $2,841,250, of which nineteen hundred and sixteen applications for $2,748,172.50 were accepted.

As in previous years, the income of the company shows a gratifying increase, and the assets of the company have been increased by $251,572.89, and have now reached $1,893,960.70, exclusive of guarantee capital.

The security for policy holders, including guarantee capital, amounted at the close of the year to $2,763,960.70, and the liabilities for reserves and all outstanding claims, $1,711,200, showing a surplus of $1,052,760.70. Exclusive of uncalled guarantee capital, the surplus to policy holders was $182,760.70.

Policies on seventy lives became claims through death, to the amount of $130,234.62, of which $2,000 was reinsured in other companies.

Including cash dividends and dividends applied to the reduction of premiums, $41,770.87, with annuities, the total payments to policy holders amounted to $204,018.49.

Careful attention has been given to the investment of the company's funds, in first-class bonds, mortgage securities, and loans on the company's policies, amply secured by reserves. Our investmenes have yielded a very satisfactory rate of interest.

Expenses have been confined to a reasonable limit, consistent with due efforts for new business.

The results of the year indicate a most gratifying progress. Compared with the preceding year, the figures submitted by the directors for your approval show an advance of fifteen per cent. in assets.

The assurances carried by the company now amount to $14,945,249.56, upon which the company holds reserves to the full amount required by law, and, in addition thereto, a considerable surplus.

The field officers and agents of the company are intelligent and loyal, and are entitled to much credit for their able representation of the company's interests. The members of the office staff have also proved faithful in the company's services.

Your directors regret to report the death of Mr. T. H. Macpherson, the Second Vice-President of the company, and a valued member of the Executive Committee. The vacancy thus caused was filled by the election of the Rev. Dr. Potts.

DAVID DEXTER, President and Managing Director.

AUDITORS' REPORT.

To the President and Directors of the Federal Life Assurance Company

Gentlemen,—We have carefully audited the books and records of your company for the year ending 31st December last, and have certified to their accuracy.

The cash and journal vouchers have been closely examined, and agree with the entries recorded.

The debentures, bonds, etc., in the possession of the company have been inspected, whilst those deposited with the Government or banks have been verified by certificate, the total agreeing with the amount as shown in the statement of assets.

The accompanying statements, viz., revenue and assets and liabilities, show the result of the year's operations, and, also, the financial position of the company.

Respectfully submitted,

H. S. STEPHENS, CHARLES STIFF, Auditors.

STRIKE THEIR LAST RESORT.

Exposition of the Principles of the U.M.W. Of A. as Outlined by H. Bousfield.

Princess Hall was well filled last Friday evening to hear Mr. H. Bousfield, member of the National Executive of the United Mine Workers of America, deliver his address on the labor problems of to-day. Mr. W. R. Ross, M. L. A., occupied the chair and with him on the platform were prominent union leaders. Mr. Bousfield was introduced briefly by the chairman.

Mr. Bousfield is a deliberate and thoughtful speaker and for an hour and a half he held the closest attention of his audience. The meeting, he declared was called for the purpose of promulgating a wider knowledge of the purposes of trade unions and he assured his audience that they need not fear that "something dreadful was going to happen" because a public meeting had been announced.

The speaker being one of the high officials of the U. M. W. of America was able to explain clearly the fundamental principles underlying that organization. The union hated strikes and shunned them as far as possible without sacrificing those principles. They used their utmost endeavors to settle disputes by means of conciliation and arbitration and it was only after those means failed that they resorted to the grim strength of a strike. He assurred his audience that if another strike was ever declared here the people of Fernie would have ample opportunities of fully learning the issues at stake before the mandate had gone forth to stop work

Mr. Bousfield spoke of the influence of the U. M. W. of A. in settling the recent dispute between the soft coal operators and the miners in the United States. The operators had asked for a reduction of 15 per cent in wages and the National executive of which the speaker was a member had succeeded in getting this reduced to 5½ per cent, which the miners adopted by a vote of 2 to 1. He closed with an appeal for the sympathy and co-operation of the merchants of Fernie in upholding their principles which placed right before all things.

ITALIANS ON STRIKE.

Foreman Molander Acted Firmly.—Strikers Would Not Move Until C.P.R. Paid Them Off.

A small sized strike in the C. P. R. extra gang of section men caused some little stir in town this week. The strikers were promptly dismissed and after some delay arising over a legal technicality their boarding car was taken possession of by their successors.

The trouble originated over the dismissal of one of the Italian members by the foreman, Peter Molander. Upon his firm refusal to re-instate the man in question, twenty of them, all fellow-countrymen, declared they would go on strike, but the foreman forestalled them by dismissing them summarily. He at once sent for others to take their places and when they arrived the dismissed workmen refused to give up their boarding car until they were paid in full. The wages coming to them averaged $50 each thus aggregating $1000. Molander got legal advice and found that they could not be dispossessed of their car until they were paid. The officials of the company were notified, funds were forwarded and the new men are now in possession. Molander was threatened with dire vengeance but he is not worrying over the matter. The former gang are now begging Molander to take them back and have even offered him money to get their jobs back.

LORD'S DAY ALLIANCE.

A regular meeting of the Lord's Day Alliance was held in the Methodist Church on Monday evening. The selling of liquor on Sunday and especially the selling of it in quantities to residents of Coal Creek was first taken up. A committee was appointed to interview Chief of Police McMullin who is also Chief License Inspector, to ascertain if extra steps could not be taken to prevent these illegal sales. The committee was also instructed to urge the necessity of a regular police officer at Coal Creek, it being shown that considerable drink was consumed there which resulted in more or less rows and drunkenness.

The question of distributing the mail on Sunday was also taken up. It was stated that the Postal department did not require this work to be done and that Postmaster Johnson did it simply to oblige some of the citizens of the town. It was intimated that Mr. Johnson would prefer not to distribute the mail on Sunday if the boxholders would sign a petition to that effect and it is probable that a petition to that effect will result. This would in no way interfere with the outgoing mail.

The committee subsequently interviewed Mr. McMullin. In regard to the constable at Coal Creek he stated that the government, he thought, would not care to put in a regular man on account of the expense it would entail but he would suggest the appointment of a special for a week as each pay-day came around, and he had hopes that his recommendation would be acted upon.

ASSOCIATED BOARDS TO MEET.

Kaslo, April 5.—Secretary Mackenzie will issue a call for a meeting of the executive committee of the Associated Boards of Trade to be held in Nelson on Tuesday, April 12th, at which the business to be dealt with will include the following matters: Payment of bounty on surplus lead ore exported out of the country, appointment of expert to investigate zinc deposits of British Columbia, removal of duty from acid, investigation into overflow of Kootenay river.

C. P. R. TERMS ACCEPTED

As a result of a conference between representatives of the B. C. lumbermen and Mr. Peters of the C. P. R. at Calgary an agreement has been signed by which the terms originally offered by the C.P.R. have been accepted. The lumbermen agree to reduce their price on lumber $1.00 per thousand throughout Assiniboia and Manitoba in return for a reduction of 2 cents per 100 lbs. in freight rates between Swift Current and Broadview. The agreement is now in force.

A Mother's Recommendation.

I have used Chamberlain's Cough Remedy for a number of years and have hesitancy in saying that it is the best no remedy for coughs, colds and croup I have ever used in my family, I have not words to express my confidence in this remedy.—Mrs. J. A. Moore, North Star, Mich. For sale by all druggists and dealers.

SHIPMAN'S COMEDIANS

Mr. Frederick Shipman who is well and favorably known to the concert going people of Fernie as the manager for such companies as Jessie Maclaughlin, James Fax and the Firth-Eaton and other shows, is coming to Fernie with a vandeville company which according to innumerable press notices far surpasses anything he has yet produced.

Shipman's Comedians put on a high class and refined vaudeville entertainment that draws full houses wherever they play. Their entertainment consists of light comedy of a superior and refined nature, and two solid hours of rare jollity and amusement, with not a dull moment in them, are promised to their patrons.

Mr. Bert Harvey, Canada's favorite singing comedian, has made a wide reputation for himself in the east. He is a host in himself, and his character impersonations, his costume songs and dual sketches are easily worth the price of admission.

Miss May Ethel Courtney whose picture has adorned the pages of art contributions to eastern magazines, is a star actress who has charmed hundreds of packed theatres with her wonderfully accurate imitations, her latest songs and humorous sketches. Miss Courtney prior to her present engagement never commanded a salary of less than one hundred dollars per week. Mr. Shipman engaged her in Chicago during the depression following the Iroquois theatre fire.

Mr. C. LeRoy Kenney, character impersonator and entertainer, appears in individual parts as well as in sketches with Mr. Harvey. Mr. Krall has gained a very enviable reputation by his clever dancing. Both these gentlemen were engaged by Mr. Shipman under similar conditions that favored him in securing Miss Courtney.

Miss Milred Keith is a very pretty actress who fills in several parts in the program. Miss Grace Gaut, pianist and accompanist is a musician of rare ability.

The following press notices show how the company was received in Winnipeg.

Winnipeg Free Press: When an audience spends an evening alternately laughing and applauding, is not the inference that it is a pleased audience? Surely. Well then it may be said that Mr. Shipman's comedians made good at the Winnipeg theatre last night.

Mr. Bert. Harvey, popular in Toronto and that section of the country as a singer and mimic was the principal performer in a vaudeville program agreeably diversified.

Mr. Harvey's work is really very clever —no doubt about that. With a voice of good quality, an expressive face and no small amount of acting talent he has all the essential qualificattons of the successful entertainer.

His line is similar to that of our old friend "Jimmie" Fax, but has more refinement and a good deal better vocal equipment.

Miss May Courtney is another bright performer and the sketch she put on with pretty little Mildred Keith was one of the daintiest numbers of the bill.

Winnipeg Telegram: Shipman's Comedians gave their audience at the Winnipeg theatre Saturday night, two hours of entertainment that kept them either deeply interested or heartily amused all the time. Bert Harvey, who appears in a number of comic songs was deservedly encored at every turn, while the charming May Courtney had the audience all her own way as long as she cared to hold the stage.

BASE-BALL ORGANIZED.

A meeting to re-organize the Fernie base ball club was held in the Muskoka Hotel on Wednesday evening. The following officers were elected.

R. W. Wood, Hon. President.
Thos. Whelan, President. & Manager.
F. Stork, Vice-President.
M. A. Kastner, Secretary.
W. F. Cuthbert, Treasurer.

Delegates were chosen to represent the club in the Athletic Association.

The meeting made the preliminary arrangements to hold a ball on May 2nd. to raise funds for the club. The secretary was instructed to write to the different towns along the Crow line with the object forming a base-ball league.

The club is anxious to get some new players and to do so they are prepared to secure good and permanent situations to amateur ball players desirous of locating in Fernie. Another general meeting will be held at same place on April 18th.

COMPANY OFFICE BUILDING

Plans are Received in Fernie. Solid Stone Structure. Will it be Built Now?

The plans for the new office building of the C. N. P. Coal Company arrived at the Fernie office last week and a Free Press reporter had the pleasure of looking them over. The plans are most elaborate and they contain all that was best of half a dozen plans boiled down into one.

The building will be built entirely of stone, dimensions 44 x 86 with two full storeys and a basement under the entire building. The building is planned on beautiful architectual designs, the entrance, on Pellatt ave., being especially worthy of notice in this connection. The rooms and departments are laid out in a manner calculated to give the greatest possible convenience and comfort.

The lower floor is devoted to the operating and clerical departments. The latter takes up the north end while at the south end are the general manager's office and the general superintendent's office and a couple of guest rooms.

The second floor is occupied by the engineering department, the geological department, the surveying department and the auditor's quarters. The entire basement is utilized for many conveniences.

Mr. Stockett when asked when the work of construction would commence stated that the company did not purpose going ahead with it until the town had dealt definitely with the incorporation question.

VESTRY MEETING.

Christ Church Annual Meeting.—Election Of Officers and Financial Report.

The vestry meeting of Christ Church was held on Tuesday evening. The financial report made by Churchwardens Bird and McMullin showed a very satisfactory conditions of affairs. The receipts for the year amounted to $2030.96 while the expenditures totalled $1994.04, leaving a balance of $36.92 on hand. A vote of thanks was tendered Messrs. Bird and McMullin for the able manner in which they had fulfilled their duties as churchwardens.

The election of officers followed. Messrs. Bird and McMullin were re-elected as churchwardens, and the following members of the church were elected sidesmen to complete the vestry, Messrs. T. Beck, R. Reading, D. Davies, J. Todhunter, F. White and A. W. Bleasdell. The meeting appointed Messrs. T. Beck, Bird and McMullin delegates to the synod which meets in Revelstoke in June.

THE CHARITY BALL.

Though Princess Hall was not arrayed in its holiday attire on the occasion of the Charity Ball on Easter Monday evening the large, well dressed gathering presented a scene of enjoyment and brightness not soon forgotten by those present. Many of the gowns worn were models of exquisite beauty and handiwork.

Upwards of seventy five couples sat down to the dainty yet plentiful repast provided by the ladies. The attendance, in fact, was so large that in many of the dances the floor of the big hall was more or less crowded. The music was provided by the Fernie Orchestra. Many complimentary remarks have been showered upon the orchestra for their excellent music but it is no exaggeration to state that their efforts upon this occasion met with greater approbation than ever before. The orchestra included two old members, E. J. Eacrett, of Morrissey, clarionet, and Keith Whimster, of Frank, first violin. The different numbers as they appeared were well received and in addition to a long program a number of extras were called. The six hours of dancing were enjoyed by everyone present.

The Ladies Benevolent Society, under whose auspices the dance was given, deserve praise for the hearty and determined manner in which they carried it through to a successful ending. Many of the members worked with untiring energy to dispose of tickets and to arrange for refreshments and owing to the nature of the cause for which it was gotten up economy was practiced wherever possible.

The Fernie Male Glee Club which gave a very delightful concert in the Methodist church some weeks ago purposes giving another entertainment in Princess Hall, Fernie on April 28th. The Glee Club is composed of excellent singers, and they are sparing no efforts to give the public of Fernie one of the finest treats of its kind ever heard in in Fernie. See their advertisement in another column.

AN AGREEMENT SIGNED.

Rates for Nos. 4 and 5 Mines Have Been Definitely Fixed.

On Monday an agreement was reached by the miners and Coal Company on the contract rates for digging coal in Nos. 4 and 5 mines Coal Creek. The development work in these mines have reached a stage where it is desirable to change to the contract system. The rates have been under discussion for some time and the agreement arrived at is the result of mutual concessions. The Coal Company will pay 55 cents per ton in No. 4 mine, this being the rate paid in No. 1, and in No. 5 the rate is fixed at 60 cents the same as is paid in No. 2. The new system will go into effect on Monday, April 11th. The agreement will continue in force until the expiration of the general agreement signed a year ago.

THE NEW JAIL.

Government Agent Armstrong was in Fernie this week on business connected with the new jail. The location of the site has been altered. It will be located at the rear of the present building, a shed now there will be removed and the new jail will face towards Pellatt Ave. with a separate entrance from that street. A large airy basement under the whole building will be utilized as a kitchen. The work of excavation is being commenced.

A SOCIAL EVENT.

A very pleasant "afternoon" and evening party were given yesterday by Mrs. D. Davies at her pretty home "Edgecliffe" in the Park. Owing to the inadequacy of her home to entertain her long list of friends at one time a large number of ladies were invited for the afternoon while the evening party was attended by ladies and gentlemen. Progressive euchre was played at both partias, ten tables being filled with players.

The evening party was given in honor of Miss Penell, who shared the duties of hostess in a charming manner. Both events were uniquely arranged with appropriate references to the Eastertide. The tally cards, and table numbers were in egg shapes and hand painted. The refreshments also carried out the same pretty suggestions. Little birds of every description adorned the plates, and the confectionery represented birds' eggs. The same idea was maintained in the selection and in the making of the very elaborate prizes which were given to the various successful players. Two of the prettiest were costly egg cruets of beautiful design.

The gowns worn by the ladies were very pretty and were much admired. A pretty feature of the evening was a birthday cake in honor of Miss Marguerite. The cake was in the form of a huge egg and was surrounded by fourteen candles, each representing a year.

All present at this event will remember it with pleasure as one of the prettiest and most enjoyable ever given in Fernie.

Miss Donaldson, of the Trites-Wood Co., was at Morrissey on Tuesday and Wednesday holding the millinery opening at the big store there.

Dr. Bonnell and family left on Tuesday for Fort Steele in hopes that the change of climate may benefit Baby Bonnell who has been very ill.

The 85th anniversary of the I. O. O. F. will be commemorated by divine service in Knox church on Sunday, April 24th. All members and visiting brethren are cordially invited to attend. 2t

An interesting rifle shooting sweepstakes was held at Fernie on Good Friday in which the principal winners were as follows. M. G. Millard, H. Davies, J. Reed, J. Minton, H. Beard and J. Wilde.

The spring feeling is making itself manifest, not in poetic effusions, but in the itching sensations in toes and fingers to again participate in football, lacrosse, baseball and other sports. The Amateur Athletic Association should soon get down to business again.

Messrs. L. M. Proctor and D. V. Mott were at Cranbrook this week attending a meeting of the Mountain Lumbermen's Association. The business of the meeting was of such a nature that it was not thought desirable to publish it at present. It will appear in our next issue.

F. H. Sherman, president of District No. 18 U. M. W. of A., was at Lille recently organizing a branch union among the coal miners there. About 300 members were enrolled. Branches have now been established at Coleman, Frank, Bellevue, Lille and Edmonton, all under District No. 18, with headquarters at Fernie.

The Fernie Manufacturing Co. which closed its factory last Thursday will resume operations next Monday. They have been overhauling their plant and increasing the capacity of their dry kiln. Their mill at Baynes' Lake resumed cutting last Tuesday, after being closed down for some time for the putting in of a planer.

A miner was brought from Morrissey on Sunday to the Fernie Hospital suffering from severe injuries received from a gun powderex plosion. It is said the accident was due to carelessness, a spark from his cigar falling into the powder as he was pouring it into the flask. His face was badly injured but it is thought that his eye sight will be saved.

Messrs. Breckenridge & Lund are engaged on a contract to straighten a piece of C. P. R. track half a mile west of the old Morrissey station where the weak cribbing makes it necessary to move the track about 200 feet further back from the river. About fifty men and a steam shovel are engaged at the work and it is expected that another three weeks will complete the contract.

Three spicy family quarrels have been ventilated in the police court this week. The evidence submitted was mostly of such a nature as to render it unfit for publication. One case from Coal Creek in which the charge was assault, was dismissed without the defence producing any evidence. An Italian case in which a woman resented an insult by charging with a hatchet in Carrie Nation style was also dismissed.

An instrument very useful to prospectors it is said has been invented recently by a Rossland man named Joseph Cunninghan. The instrument is a compass like affair which indicates the presence of gold, silver or copper within fifty feet of the surface of the ground. The instrument has been patented and although not fully tested yet he has been offered $10,000 for the patent which he refused. A partner of Mr. Cunningham's passed through Fernie this week to Michel where he will work incognito and at the same time test the invention on East Kootenay mountains.

Shipman's Comedians.

Owing to the fact that Shipman's Comedians play here on pay-night the manager has arranged to commence the concert at 9 p.m. to enable everybody to attend. Mr. Shipman has also arranged with the Coal Company to have the mine train for Coal Creek leave Fernie at 11.30 p.m. instead of 11 so that the people from Coal Creek may have no difficulty in reaching the train after the concert is over. The plan of the hall may be seen at Bleasdell's Drug hall. Tickets 75cts. and $1.00. People are advised to secure their seats early.

Another lumber mill is to be erected near Morrissey Junction in the near future. Three Spokane men, Messrs. Grady, Owman and Carlson are the members of the firm. They purpose moving their machinery from a plant which the firm has been operating in Montana. The timber claims held by the Company are of course in the disputed block, 4594, and until the government's decision in regard to this block becomes known the company will not make any move. It is said that other claimants have applied for a crown grant for the same timber claims.

MORRISSEY NEWS.

From The Despatch.

J. A. Murray, clerk in the Coal Co.'s office, returned from Pincher Creek with his bride, and the yonng people of Tonkin have been giving the couple an outdoor reception every evening since.

On Sunday morning Harry Best, the eight-year-old son of Mr. H. Best died in the hospital at Cranbrook. Harry had been ill with rheumatism of the stomach for about two weeks and suffered a great deal during that time, but death released him.

JAPS FAIL AGAIN

PORT ARTHUR HARBOR IS STILL CLEAR.

The Japanese Navy Assaulted Port Arthur Sunday Morning, Sending in Four Merchant Steamers to Block the Channel—Were Unsuccessful.

A St. Petersburg dispatch says :—The following official dispatch has been received from General Smirnoff : after moonrise the Japanese attempted to block the entrance to the harbor.

Port Arthur, March 27.—Last night

Four fireships were sent toward the fort convoyed by a torpedo flotilla. Toward 2.15 the approach of the enemy's ships was perceived by the guardships and batteries, which simultaneously opened up on them heavily.

The fireships were preceded by torpedo boats and were followed at a considerable distance by larger ships, which opened fire on the forts, supporting the action of the fireships and torpedo boats.

Owing to the heaviness of our artillery fire and the boldness of our torpedo boats the fireships did not reach the entrance to the harbor. Two grounded on a reef under Golden Hill, anotner sank ibehind the first turn of the channel, struck by a torkedo from our boats, and the fourth sank, its bows touching a Japanese steamer sunk in the previous attemut off Majatschnaja Goroda.

The entrance to the harbor remains clear.

A Hotchkiss one-inch calibre quick-firer was found aboard one of the sunken steamers, from which a fire fire had been kept up on our torpedo boats.

A boat left each of the sunken ships carrying their crews. One of these is believed to have been picked up.

Towards 4 a.m. the enemy's torpedo boats retired and the bombardment ceased.

Vice-Admiral Makaroff at once proceeded in a steam launch to inspect the enemy's sunken steamers.

The enemy's torpedo boats reappeared at five o'clock this morning. They were sighted south of Port Arthur and the battteries opened fire on them. Towards six o'clock the enemy's squadron appeared on the horizon and ours steamed out to meet it. At 6.30 the batteries opened fire. Our ships' batteries soon ceased, the Japanese drawing off to the southeast, evidently declining an engagement. At ten o'clock they disappeared below the horizon.

ADMIRAL MAKAROFF'S REPORT.

Vice-Admiral Makaroff, commanding the Russian naval forces at Port Arthur, has sent the following telegram to the emperor :

I beg most humbly to report that at 2 o'clock this morning the enemy made a second attempt to block the entrance to the inner roadstead. For this purpose they dispatched four large merchant steamers, convoyed by six torpedo boats, to the entrance. The enemy's ships were promptly discovered by the searchlights and were bombarded by the batteries and by the guardships Bobr and Ovatjny. Fearing the enemy's ships might break through, Lieutenant Krinizki, commanding the guard torpedo boat Stilni, attacked the enemy and destroyed the bow of the foremost Japanese steamer with a torpedo. This steamer turned to the right and was followed by two others with the result that the three were stranded to the right of the entrance.

A fourth steamer went to the right of the enemy's ships and likewise sank to the side of the fair way. The Stilni battled with the enemy's six torpedo boats. Engineer Artificer Swyereff and six seamen were killed, and twelve seamen were wounded.

At daybreak the enemy's battleship and cruiser squadron appeared, and I proceeded with the fleet under my charge to meet the enemy.

The second attempt of the Japanese to block the entrance to Port Arthur has failed, thanks to the energetic action by the sea and land forces, who acted as they did during the first attempt.

The harbor remains perfectly clear.

A further telegram to the emperor from Vice-Admiral Makaroff says :

I respectfully report that the enemy having withdrawn I returned to the harbor with the fleet.

The torpedo boat destroyer Stilni, which stranded on a reef in consequence of damage caused to her engines by one of the enemy's shells, was floated during the night, and entered the harbor, thanks to the energy of her crew. Her commander, Lieutenant Krinizky, who was slightly wounded in the arm, did not quit his post.

On the fireships were infernal machines, the wires connecting with which were cut by Lieutenant Kedroff and Ensign Pilsondsky of the Irregulars, whom I dispatched on this task. They bombarded one of the steamers as soon as it stopped, cut the electric wire and extinguished the fire, which would have lit up the entrance of the harbor to the enemy in the roadstead.

In the morning a floating mine was found bearing an infernal machine, but the latter was successfully removed.

Inspection made showed that the steamers utilized as fireships were not old. They were each of about 2,000 tons, and they were armed with light calibre guns.

During his week-end at Portsmouth the King paid a visit to the Victory, Nelson's old ship, and inspected the alterations made by his desire on the cockpit.

Mr. Keir Hardie, the well known labor leader, is in bad health, and has been ordered to take a rest. Certain persons would not feel annoyed if he made it a permanent rest.

MARKET REPORT.

Weekly Review of Prices Culled From The Commercial.

FLOUR—Demand is good and the market easy at last week's prices. We quote : Hungarian Patent $2.75 per sack of 98 lbs, delivered to the trade; Glenora Patent $2.60; Strong Bakers $2.20; and XXXX $2.00. These prices are subjetc to the usual trade discounts.

MILL FEED — Bran is temporarily out of the market, as mills have none to offer. We quote : Bran $18 per prices are subject to the usual trade shorts $19 per ton.

GROUND FEED—We quote : Oat chop $28 per ton, delivered to the trade; barley chop $22; mixed barley and oats $25; oil cake $27 per ton.

OATS—Prices are about the same as last week, although there is not much business moving at any price at the moment. Traffic is suspended owing to storm. There is a good prospective demand and values should hold up well. No. 2 white in carlots on track are worth 38 to 39c here, and feed grades 36 to 37c. Farmers' loads in tne country bring 31 to 33c, and on the street here 35 to 36c.

BARLEY—Malting grades are not offering. Feed barley cannot now be bought here for less than 42 to 43c.

HAY—There is plenty of hay in the country ready baled for delivery, but the railways are not able to handle it and there is a temparary scarcity here with firmer prices. Carlots of baled on track here are bringing $11 to $12 per ton. Loose hay on the the street is worth $12 to $14 per ton.

BUTTER—Dairy—There is nothing doing in this line at the moment, as receipts are exceedingly light. Dealers will pay good prices in the country for fresh made bricks, some namis bringing from 15 to 19c per pound, ing a price of 25c. Old tub butter delivered to the trade here.

EGGS — The market is very unsettled. There is plenty of demand but very little stock to satisfy it with. Dealers will pay 27c per dozen for case lots delivered here, but the price will be lower as soon as the movement starts.

HIDES — The market shows no hange from values of a week ago. We quote : Country frozen hides 5½c per pound, less 5 pounds tare. No. 1 city butchers' hides are worth 6c per pound; No. 2's 5c; and No. 3's 4c; sheepskins same price as hides.

TALLOW — No. 1 tallow is worth 3¾c per pound delivered at Winnipeg, and No. 2 2¾c.

CATTLE—Bad weather and scarcity of feed threaten to destroy many of the cattle which have been brought so far through the winter with such difficulty. The situation is causing anxiety to ranchers, and some herds have already succumbed. Choice beef cqttle are worth 4c off cars here and inferior grades ½ to 1c less.

SHEEP—The market is nominal, as there are none offering.

HOGS—The market is quiet and unchanged- Hogs weighing from 160 to 250 pounds are worth 5c per pound weighed off cars here; light and heavy weights ½ to 1c less.

MILCH COWS — Good cows are scarce aod dear. Prices range from $35 to $55 each, according to quality.

HORSES—Ontario draft horses are bringing from $400 to $650 per team here, according to weight and quality. There is a fair movement even at these high prices. One team is offering in tne city at present for which the owner wants $1,000. They are from North Dakota and show exceptionally good breeding. Their combined weight is about 4,300 pounds.

CHASED THE RUSSIAN

NEW CHWANG IS PLACED UNDER MARTIAL LAW.

Japanese Discovered Port Arthur Fleet 70 Miles From Home and Gave Chase—Attacking Squadron Gives New Version of Sunday Attack.

A Chefoo dispatch says that while the Port Arthur squadron was reconnoitering on Saturday it encountered the Japanese squadron 70 miles from the Port. The Japanese immebiately prepared to attack, but the the Russians returned to Port Arthur at full speed.

JAPANESE STORY OF ATTACK.

A telegram received at Tokio from New Chwang says that at three o'clock on Sunday morning the Japanese succeeded in sinking four steamers at the mouth of Port Arthur harbor. A flotilla of destroyers convoyed the merchantmen, which were subsequently sunk, and rescued the volunteer crews. Later the Japanese battleships bombarded the town and its defences.

CHALLENGED BY RUSSIA.

A dispatch from New Chwang says that the Russians have placed that rity under martial law, and that foreigners are closing their places preparatory for departure. ESPIEGLE WILL LEAVE.

A London dispatch says :—The under foreign secretary, Earl Percy, announced in the House of Commons that despite the British consul's request that the gunboat Espiegle remain at New Chwang, it has been decided that it would be inadvisable to keep the vessel there.

LENIENCY TO MOULDERS.

Were Convicted of Stealing From a Union Agent

George Fisher and Frank Hodapp, the two Toronto iron moulders who were found guilty of stealing $18 from Thomas Atkinson, were remanded until called on for sentence by Judge Winchester, with a warning not to act as the tools of other men in future. The two young men, who were employed as moulders by the Canada Foundry Company, went to Mr. Atkinson, who is the agent of the Iron Moulders' Union, and upon stating that they wished to leave town were given $18 and two tickets to Buffalo. It was shown in the evidence that the men were acting on behalf of Constable Ford, who was endeavoring to get the union men to break an injunction which had been granted against them.

OIL COMPANIES COMBINE

Nearly All the Leading Canadian Oil Concerns Are Consolidated.

Notice is given in the Ontario Gazette that an agreement of amalgamation between the Canadian Consolidated Oil Company, Canadian Oil Refining Company, Sun Oil Manufacturing Company, of Hamilton, and the Grant Hamilton Oil Company, of Toronto, has been confirmed, and the new company will be known as the Canadian Consolidated Oil Company, Limited, with $1,000,000 capital and head office in Toronto. A meeting of the directors was held at Toronto to ratify the agreement. The Walker Oil Company, Winnipeg; Galt Co., of Montreal; Sterling Oil Works, Marietta, Ohio; and the Union Petroleum Company, of Canada, will also be included.

THE TEXT FROM NATURE

"THE TIME FOR THE SINGING OF THE BIRDS IS COME."

LIKE A CALL FROM THE WOODS

Sermon That Urges All to Cheerful Service and to Set the Keynote of Their Lives to High and Noble Themes—The Winged Forerunner of the Spring—Some Beautiful Thoughts Beautifully Clothed.

Entered according to Act of Parliament of Canada, in the year 1904, by William Baily, of Toronto, at the Dep't of Agriculture, Ottawa.

Los Angeles, Cal., March 27.—Like a fresh call from the woods, vocal with the songsters of early spring, this sermon urges all to cheerful service and to set the keynote of their lives to high and noble themes. The text is Solomon's Song ii, 12, ';The time of the singing of the birds is come."

"Do you know what makes the snowbanks disappear in the springtime?" asked a man of poetic temperament. "Why, yes," I answered. "It is due to the heat of the sun being so much stronger now than it is in January. It is due to the fact that, by close contact, Maine and Massachusetts and New York and Michigan are being warmed at the sun's fireside, even as one side of a piece of bread is toasted by being exposed to the kitchen stove's heat while the other side of that piece of bread remains unscorched." "Oh, no," answered my poetic friend. "The snow disappears not on account of the sun's rays, but because the flames glowing among the feathers of the red breasted robins have melted them. Have you not noticed, as a rule, the snowflakes never entirely disappear until those harbingers of the summer flowers have stamped them out of existence?"

Beautiful thought that! Beautiful to think that the winged forerunner of the spring, the chirping robin, should be carrying around with him a brazier filled with burning coals, as the ancient kings used to do when they traveled, and everywhere he alights he changes the white snow bank of winter into the white snow bank of apple blossoms. But whether the snow disappears on account of the coming of the robins or the robins come as the messengers of spring, merely because the snow is disappearing, it is not in our province to discuss. We want to take for granted the one overwhelming fact that spring is here. And as spring is here and the time of the singing of the birds for New York and Michigan and Montana and Dakota has come, we want to tell why the birds sing and why we, as God's children, should also become his singing disciples.

First, like the song bird, God bids us sing because he has given us musical throats with which to sing. As the brown thrush or the redbird or the nightingale is able to lift his voice in treble or fantasia or lullaby or cantata or serenade, God, by anatomical construction of the throat, has made it possible for us to sound forth musical notes in his name. He has not disconnected our windpipes from the great bellows of the lungs. He has not had us born with palsied tongue, or with deaf ears. But as God has placed in the larynx of every singing bird's throat a thin membrane, so he has stretched over the end of almost every human being's windpipe a fibrous, elastic tissue which will vibrate as we attempt to sing or speak. We ought, one and all, to be grateful that God has given to us anatomically a musical throat with which we can sing his praises. Thank God to-day for the power of the speaking throat. We are all ready to acknowledge our indebtedness to him for the blessings of the eyes. Oh, yes, with every glorious sunrise, with every architecture of frost upon window pane, with every masterpiece of autumn foliage, with every walk over country hill or through city street, we are all ready to say: "Thank God for two eyes!\ Thank God for the windows of the soul!"

Not only for visual, but for auditory, organs are we also thankful. If the sounding board of one of our eardrums is in any way deadened we guard the other ear more carefully than we do our jewel boxes or our securities, which we place in the safety vaults. We never let our well ear become overheated by stove or register. We never in a railroad train let the draft blow upon it through opened windows. At the least sign of disturbance then away we rush to the specialist to have it treated and cared for by the best of aurists. Ah, yes, we all appreciate the blessings of the ear. But how many of us appreciate the blessings of the voice? How many of us have in the past thanked God that we can sing his praises as the birds can change every tree branch into a choir loft in the temple of the woods? How many of us are ready to thank God for this wonderful instrument of human voice, which can laugh out our joys and sob out our sorrows and make men know the thoughts that are lodging for awhile under the domes of our foreheads and the loves that are billing and cooing in the silent retreats of our heart?

I never realized so much what the blessing of the human voice meant as the other day, when a lady and gentleman from the east, with their little daughter, called upon me. The child had a beautiful face. She saw as lovely a young girl as I ever saw. While we were talking she would watch us closely and sympathetically smile when we smiled. But though she smiled she never laughed. At last I turned and addressed a sentence directly to her. With that a shadow flitted across the mother's countenance as she said: "My little daughter cannot answer you. She is dumb. Her tongue has been palsied since she was three years old, We have taken her to the best of doctors, but they all say her case is hopeless." "Merciful heavens!" I ejaculated. "What an affliction to fall on so beautiful a child!" And as I looked sympathetically at the bright little creature, so sadly shut out of one of the joys of life, I said to myself, "How thankful ought I to be for the power to sing God's praises and to proclaim the gospel of Christ to my fellow men!" Have you ever thanked God in the springtime for the power of the human voice?

Like the song birds, God bids us sing because he has given to us an open heaven in which to sing. It is one thing to have a voice with which to sing, but it is just as essential to have a suitable place in which you can sing. It is one thing to have a musical throat like the song thrush, in which all the siren spirits of the hills and valleys can find melodious expression, but it is another thing to have the beautiful voice of the yellow tipped canary hushed into perpetual silence by being domiciled in a dark room or in a dungeon. If a singing bird were compelled to live in a ground mole's tunnel, or to work like the moths with their mouths wrapped up with woolen garments, he would be as dumb as they.

Thank God, then, for your musical throat and for your opportunities for using it. John Milton, in some respects, is the greatest name in English literature. Yet old, blind and neglected by his people, he had to write for posterity because the men of his own times and generation would not listen to his poetic song. Edmund Burke, one of the greatest of the English statesmen of his time, most of his life was practically a statesman without an office, or, if in office, one who held a very subordinate place. So little was he honored by his Parliamentary colleagues that it was once said, "No man could empty the House of Commons so quickly as when Edmund Burke arose to speak." Jonathan Edwards, the greatest of New England theologians, was driven out of his Northampton pulpit in 1750 and for eight long years the ablest of American metaphysicians lived in the little village of Stockbridge because no first class church wanted to hear him preach. Oh, yes! We have seen many and many human birds with musical throats who could sing if any one wanted to hear them sing. But the trouble is that thousands of men can sing who have no opportunity to sing. Thank God, my brother, if you have not only talents, but present opportunities for using those talents, in your Master's service.

In all probability there are few of us here who have not our opportunities. We do not have to wait one month, one week or one day or one hour to serve Christ. To-day our opportunity is here. Like the song birds, we have musical throats with which to sing, and we also have the open heaven under which to sing. We have the talent and also the opporturity to use the talent.

Like the song birds, we have a magnificent subject for our songs. Every truly great sculptor is inspired by his theme. Artists have their models. Mere portrait painters strive to reproduce a face, but an immortal artist studies more than a mere face. He tries by the aid of his model to portray love or hate, war or peace, fame or disgrace, the creation or the nativity. The grander the theme the greater the opportunities of the picture.

What is true of painting and sculpture is also true of music. Beethoven and Wagner and Mendelssohn and Handel did not employ their genius in a street ditty. They trained their ears to catch the voices of the winds, which can only be heard upon the heights of Mount Olympus. They called their oratorios by the mighty names of "The Messiah," "The Deluge," "The Prodigal Son," "The Light of the World," "Samson," "Saul," "Esther," "Joshua," "Elijah" and "Paul," "Jephthah," "Israel In Egypt," "The Creation," "The Woman of Samaria." So our singing birds in their oratorios have glorious themes to sing about. Their song is the resurrection. They sing of the bursting seeds and the incense of swinging flowers. They sing of the winter which is gone and the harvests which are to come. They sing of our earth's resurrection, which is emblematic of a heavenly glory. Oh, my friends, like the song birds in the springtime, will you not choose a mighty theme to inspire and uplift your life's music?

The theme! The theme! What is the inspiring theme of your life's song? Are you ready to surrender your life to the noble work of the alleviation of physical pain? Will you attune your life to the upliftment of mankind, as John Howard sang his sweet song in convicts' cells, or Florence Nightingale sang her song among the booming guns of the Crimean war? Will you become Christ's apostle to the gentiles down in the slums, as John Eliot was called the "Apostle to the Massachusetts Indians?" In the old country village meeting house the leader of the choir, before the age of organ or piano, would arise and with a little bar of steel strike the keynote of the song. Every human being has a note by which to start his song. Upon what keynote, O man, are you to-day starting the music of your life's song? The theme! The theme! What is the inspiring, uplifting theme of your life's music?

Again, God bids us, like the song birds, sing because he does not expect us to be soloists, but to take an essential part in a great life's chorus. The true beauty of the song bird's singing is that he carries a part and not a whole day's solitary musical recitation. Like the piccolo, or the clarinet, his voice may be shrill, or like the flute, soft and sweet, or like the bass viol, loud and deep; but whether soft or loud, his voice has a part, an essential part, in the chorus of the woods.

If you would know how essential the birds' voices are for the musical sweetness of the woods just go with me some day up among the forest covered hills. As we tramp on and the twigs snap under our feet and our voices are tossed in echo from tree to tree the birds scurry away or hide silently behind their curtain of leaves. They act a good deal as do the village children when city people are riding through the country. They run into the house or barn and keep very quiet. But if you pay no attention to those children they will begin to peek out of the windows or behind the wood house, and then they will gradually come out and watch you as you disappear down the road. Such is the way the feathered musicians of the forest act. When you first enter the woods and call to them to sing they will keep as silent as the grave, but if you lie down at the foot of some giant oak and pretend you are asleep the many voices of the birds will then begin their seemingly endless chorus. First there will be a twitter, then an answering call, then a duet, then a third voice will break in and make the trio. Then off in the distance a woodpecker will beat time, like the drumstick tapping upon the sheepskin. Then a great wave of harmony, like Handel's "Halleluiah Chorus," will roll over you. Then sudden silence. Again the music will start, and a new concert will be masterfully rendered, each bird's voice not much in itself, but each an essential part of the great wood's chorus.

It is wonderful to realize how quickly a musical conductor knows when any of his musicians are not doing as they ought to. I once read of a great orchestra of hundreds of pieces being gathered together. When every musician was doing his part, and the sounds rose and fell like voices of many waters, the piccolo player thought he would stop and see if the leader would miss him. No sooner did he stop than the leader pointed his baton toward the silent man and said, "Play! Play! You are an essential part of the piece. Do you hear me? Play." So, in the great musical chorus for the salvation of the world, God bids us each to sing and take our part, as each bird of the woods has his singing part. Sing! Sing! To-day in Christ's name sing, as the song birds in the springtime.

Like the singing birds, we should not only sing because we have an essential part in God's great chorus, but because each song bird inspires other song birds to sing. A little canary in a room alone may not care to warble. But it is different when two or three birdcages are hanging in the windows through which the sun is shining. Then one bird's note will inspire the other birds. One bird's song will make the other birds sing. So men and women, singing Christ's songs, will inspire other men and women to sing them. Men and women pray better and oftener if they pray together. They love God more and are more willing to make sacrifices for the Master, if they love and serve him in groups, as the little company gathered in the upper chamber, to await the coming of the Holy Ghost. They are more willing to go out into the byways and hedges and carry the gospel to the blind, the deaf, the dumb, the crippled and the poor, if they go forth as Christ sent his disciples, two by two, and not alone. Oh, my brother and sister, in God's great chorus of redemption, will you not sing and inspire your neighbors and loved ones to sing also?

During the dark days of the American Civil war, after the two opposing armies had been watching each other for months upon the opposite banks of the Potomac River, there came a night of strange song which will always be remembered by those who were participants in the scene. The moon was shining brightly. The surface of the river was reflecting the lights not only of the campfires of the two armies, but also the starry lights from above. The only sounds to be heard were the going forth of the relief guards and the call of the sentries, "All's well along the Potomac." While the stillness of death seemed to prevail, a northern soldier was writing to his mother. As he wrote he became very homesick for the sight of the old farm. He softly began to sing the words which John Howard Payne wrote when he was a helpless, sick, friendless, lonely exile. He sang the words all Americans have sung a hundred times. As the homesick boy sang the men in the next tent took up the refrain. Then the song went from company to company, regiment to regiment, brigade to brigade, until it leaped across the river, and the Confederate army sang it as well as the Federal army. Then the war hounds, which had been growling in rage and showing their white teeth and tugging at their chains, turned and went into their kennels and lay down to listen to the music.

As that one homesick boy's song found its echo in the song of his company, and in the song of his regiment, and in the song of his army, and in the song of the great host which were lying upon the opposite side of Virginia's bank, shall not our Christ's song inspire others to sing? One bird can make a whole forest sound with inspiring songs. Shall we not inspire those in our homes and stores and churches to sing? Sing in Christ's name. Sing as the song birds sing. Sing as the psalmist bids us sing. "Let everything that hath breath praise the Lord." Sing! Sing! Triumphantly and everlastingly sing. Sing, for the time of the singing of all Christians as well as of birds has come.

Our lives are songs, God writes the words
And we set them to music at leisure,
And the song is sad or the song is glad
As we choose to fashion the measure.

We must write the song, whatever the words,
Whatever its rhyme or meter,
And if it is sad we must make it glad,
And if sweet we must make it sweeter.

Good Play of a Golf Enthusiast.

"The Wilkie shot is what we call a special stroke in the game of golf," said a New Orleans man. "This stroke is so called all over the south and was given its name because it was made by a man named Wilkie, a member of the New Orleans Golf club.

"It was one of the prettiest plays I ever saw and was made during a match. Wilkie drove off from the ninth hole, and his ball landed in a small creek, which was one of the hazards in the course. The ball was lighter than the water and floated. To take it out and begin play over again meant the loss of two strokes and the hole, so Wilkie waded into the water, which was about two feet deep, and played the ball from there. He made a pretty stroke and was on the green, making it in two. He holed out in three, which is bogey for that hole. It was a cold day, and that water was not pleasant, but the act gained Wilkie lasting fame, and his stroke will always with us be called a Wilkie shot."

The Girl of the Netherlands.

The Dutch girl does not enjoy anything like the amount of freedom granted to her English or American sister. She is a very carefully chaperoned young person, and when she goes to the theater it is with her elders, not merely with a friend or two of her own age. At the dances she attends, songs, recitations and music for the entertainment of the elders form a part of the regular programme, and the chaperons sit at tables socially enjoying their coffee or other refreshments, while the young folk glide over the waxed floor to the strains of the latest waltz. Dutch maidens have to make the best of their opportunities of amusement, for when it pleases their parents to seek the quiet of home they must meekly accompany them. In their country the idea of a girl being unchaperoned at a dance is not to be thought of—at any rate, not yet.—Exchange.

by local applications as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

Dodd's Kidney Pills Cured Strain Caused by Heavy Lifting.

William Sharam Tells of His Precarious Condition, and His Happy Release From It.

Murray Harbor South, P.E.I., Apr. 4.—(Special.)—William Sharam, who keeps a general store here, is one of many hundreds in Prince Edward Island who have been rescued from chronic sickness, and made sound and well by Dodd's Kidney Pills. Mr. Sharam, who is always glad to say a word for the remedy that did so much for him, relates his experience as follows:

"I strained my back with heavy lifting, and the result was urinary and Kidney trouble, that left me in a very weak state, and at times I got so weak that I almost fainted, and could scarcely hold up.

"After trying several other medicines without relief, I concluded that it was a Kidney Disease I had, and would find the cure in a Kidney remedy, and decided to try Dodd's Kidney Pills.

The result was all that could be asked. I used ten boxes all told, and can now enjoy sweet sleep without being disturbed as heretofore, and my old troubles were banished."

Dodd's Kidney Pills cure all Kidney ills from Backache to Bright's Disease.

RISKS OF FEATHERED TRIBE

Birds Liable to as Many Accidents as Other Creatures.

Of all creatures birds are most exempt from liability to accident, yet they not infrequently lose their lives in most unexpected ways. Once above trees and buildings they have the whole upper air free of every obstacle and though their flight sometimes equals the speed of a railroad train they have little to fear when well above ground. Collision with other birds seems scarcely possible, but it sometimes occurs. When a covey of quail are flushed occasionally two birds will collide, at times meeting with such force that both are stunned. Flycatchers darting at the same insect will now and then come together, but not hard enough to injure either bird. In the English papers a few years ago a rare accident was recorded—a heron had spiked itself on one of the pointed iron arms of a cross surmounting a church steeple. Even the smallest and most wonderful of all fliers, the humming bird, may come to grief in accidental ways, as was recently shown by the case of a tiny bird of the ruby throated variety which became entangled in the hooks of a burdock bur and died a prisoner before help could free it.

Young phœbes sometimes become entangled in the horsehairs which are used in the lining of the nest. When they are old enough to fly and attempt to leave they are held prisoners or left dangling from the nest. When mink traps are set in the snow in winter owls frequently fall victims, mice being scarce and the bait tempting.

Lighthouses are perhaps the cause of more accidents to birds than any other obstacle they encounter on their nocturnal migrations north and south. Many hundreds are found dead at the base of such structures. The sudden glare is so confusing and blinding as they shoot from intense darkness into its circle of radiance that they are completely bewildered and dash headlong against the thick panes of glass. Telegraph wires are another menace to low flying birds, especially those which, like quail and woodcock, enjoy a whirlwind and attain great speed within a few yards. Such birds have been found cut almost in two by the force with which they struck the wire.

The elements frequently catch birds unawares and overpower them. A sudden wind or storm will drive coast flying birds hundreds of miles out to sea, and oceanic birds may be blown as far inland. Hurricanes in the West Indies are said to cause the deaths of innumerable birds, as well as other creatures. Small islands are known to have become completely depopulated of their feathered inhabitants from such a cause. Violent hailstorms, coming without warning in warm weather, are quite common agents in the destruction of birds, and thousands of English sparrows have been stricken in a city during such a storm.

Ruffed grouse have a habit of burrowing deep beneath the snow in winter and letting the storm shut them in. They spend the night in this warm, cozy retreat, their breath making its way out through the loosely packed crystals. But this becomes a fatal trap when a cold rain sets in during the night and an impenetrable crust cuts off their means of escape.—New York Post.

Whistler Before Whistler.

Mortimer Menpes told the following story of Whistler, who was to deliver an address one day to the Society of British Artists: "The master at length entered, faultlessly dressed, walking with a swinging, jaunty step, evidently quite delighted with himself and the world in general. He passed down the gallery, ignoring the assembled members, and walked up to his own picture. And there he stayed for quite fifteen minutes, regarding it with a satisfied expression, stepping now backward, now forward, canting his head and dusting the surface of the glass with a silk pocket handkerchief. We watched him open mouthed. Suddenly he turned round, beamed upon us and uttered but two words—'Bravo, Jimmy!'—then took my arm and hurried me out of the gallery, talking volubly the while."

A Battle of Languages.

Three or four languages strove for mastery in ancient Gaul, which is now France. German was spoken by the 12,000 Frank invaders. Popular Latin was spoken by 6,000,000 Gallo-Romans. Literary Latin was the language of the church and of literature. Low Latin was afterward the language of the administration. German was the first to succumb. In four centuries it ceased to be understood by the soldiers, and in seventy years more it had become an object of ridicule. But it survives in more than 900 words, expressing the things of government, law and war, and thus forms no insignificant part of the French language.

There is nothing more precious to a man than his will. There is nothing which he relinquishes with so much reluctance.—J. G. Holland.

IT MEANS OSTRACISM.

Foul Breath and Disgusting Discharges, Due to Catarrh, Make Thousands of People Objects of Aversion. Dr. Agnew's Catarrhal Powder Relieves in 10 Minutes and Cures.

Hon. George James, of Scrantan, Pa., says: "I have been a martyr to Catarrh for twenty years, constant hawking and dropping in the throat and pain in the head, very offensive breath. I tried Dr. Agnew's Catarrhal Powder. The first application gave instant relief. After using a few bottles I was cured. Sold by all druggists.

The government has decided to fortify the Island of Foronsay, at the extravagant price of £6,000, and when the work is completed the safety of the West Highlands will be assured.

There never was and never will be a universal panacea, in one remedy, for all ills to which flesh is heir— the very nature of many curatives being such that were the germs of other and differently seated disease rooted in the system of the patient—what would relieve one ill in turn would aggravate the other. We have, however, in Quinine Wine, when obtainable in sound, unadulterated state, a remedy for many and grievous ills. By its gradual and judicious use the frailest systems are led into convalescence and strength by the influence which Quinine exerts on nature's own restoratives. It relieves the drooping spirits of those with whom a chronic state of morbid despondency and lack of interest in life is a disease, and by tranquilizing the nerves, disposes to sound and refreshing sleep—imparts vigor to the action of the blood, which, being stimulated, course through the veins, strengthening the healthy animal functions of the system, thereby making activity a necessary result, strengthening the frame and giving life to the digestive organs, which naturally demand increased substance—result improved appetite. Northrop & Lyman of Toronto, have given to the public their Superior Quinine Wine at the usual rate, and, gauged by the opinions of scientists, the wine approaches nearest perfection of any in the market. All druggists sell it.

The Arctic expedition ship Windward, which brought Nansen back to Europe some years ago, has now joined the Dundee fleet as a whaler. It is useful at any rate this time.

Port Arthur does not appreciate those little favors that Japan is sending on the half-shell.

If a woman has a pretty face no man on earth can tell you what kind of clothes she has on.

The Hon. Talbot Rice, the vicar of Swansea, says that if he had more money he could preach sermons, as begging letters for church work now occupy a lot of his time.

THEY ADVERTISE THEMSELVES.—Immediately they were offered to the public, Parmelee's Vegetable Pills became popular because of the good report they made for themselves. That reputation has grown, and they now rank among the first medicines for use in attacks of dyspepsia and biliousness, complaints of the liver and kidneys, rheumatism, fever and ague and the innumerable complications to which these ailments give rise.

In 228 trades unions in England, with a membership of 560,000, 6.7 per cent. were unemployed at the end of last year, as compared with 5.5 per cent. of 224 trades unions with a membership of 552,415 at the end of 1902.

KNOWN TO THOUSANDS.—Parmelee's Vegetable Pills regulate the action of the secretions, purify the blood and keep the stomach and bowels free from deleterious matter. Taken according to direction they will overcome dyspepsia, eradicate biliousness, and leave the digestive organs healthy and strong to perform their functions. Their merits are well known to thousands who know by experience how beneficial they are in giving tone to the system.

It is now the turn of Braintree, Essex, to be overrun with rats. It is common experience to have to get up of nights and beat them off the bed. Cheerful exercise!

Warrior Woes.—Through damp, cold and exposure many a brave soldier who left his native hearth as "fit" as man could be to fight for country's honor, has been "invalided home" because of the vulture of the battle ground—Rheumatism. South American Rheumatic Cure will absolutely cure every case of Rheumatism in existence. Relief in six hours.—98

EDDY'S IMPERVIOUS SHEATHING

The Best Building Paper Made.

It is very much stronger and thicker than any other (tarred or building) paper. It is impervious to wind, keeps out cold, keeps in heat, carries no smell or odor, absorbs no moisture, imparts no taste or flavor to anything with which it comes in contact. It is largely used not only for sheeting houses, but for lining cold storage buildings, refrigerators, dairies, creameries, and all places where the object is to keep an even and uniform temperature, and at the same time avoiding dampness.

GARDENS OF THE ALCAZAR.

One of Their Greatest Charms Is the Apparent Lack of Cultivation.

The garden of the Alcazar is one garden composed of several, each opening into the other by steps descending from a terrace or through arches in marble or living green.

All the gardens are surrounded with wonderful hedges of myrtle, juniper or box. If the gardens of the Alcazar should be stripped of all but their hedges, palm trees and magnolias, they would still be most wonderful. In some places walls about eight feet in height separate the gardens, and against these walls are trained orange and peach trees, with a tangle of jasmine and roses climbing among them as they will. In fact, the flowers grow in such careless and natural profusion and there is seemingly so little cultivation that one might almost think the hoe of a gardener had not visited the place for a hundred years. This very carelessness was one of the greatest charms of the place and added to the effect of age that clung to everything. Modern gardeners would stand aghast at such apparent neglect.

I recognized that the very lack of modern care was artistic and suitable and yet wondered, if the place were mine, whether I could forbear the use of shears, trowel and hoe. The hedges were trimmed. These, with some orange trees growing in a solid mass of green along some fifty feet of palace wall and reaching to the very roof, alone bore signs of the gardener's shears.

The flower beds were of intricate shapes, filled with a tangled mass of flowers and always surrounded with box. And such box! My heart sank within me when I thought of the box in my garden at home, where not even a hundred mild winters and a hundred rainy summers could give growth like the smallest of that at the Alcazar.

The bouquet that is considered in Seville as a model of beauty and elegance was to our eyes a most hideous thing. In shape like a pyramid, about fourteen inches high, it was formed by fastening a magnolia bud to the top of a smooth, round stick and then winding flowers tightly around the stick, each succeeding row becoming larger, so that at the bottom the bouquet was probably two feet around. It was a frequent sight to see two men carrying a pole between them with from six to a dozen of these bouquets swinging, heads down, from the pole.—Scribner's.

An Improvement.

"I see the agent has sold yez a carpet sweeper, Mrs. Maginnis. Is it as good as the ould fashioned broom?"

"It is an' better, Mrs. Mulduckie. I can knock Maginnis twice as far wid it."

Matter of Finance.

"Time is money, they say," remarked the chronic loafer as he bit off a fresh chew of tobacco.

"Well, maybe it is," rejoined the village grocer, "but if it's all the same to you I wish you would spend a little more money here and a little less time."

BLAIR'S GOUT AND RHEUMATIC PILLS

THE GREAT ENGLISH REMEDY.

TESTIMONIAL from the Late SIR SAMUEL BAKER, the famous Nile Explorer:—

"Newton Abbot, Devon. Dear Sirs—I have delayed my thanks as I wished to test the effect of Blair's Pills by a sufficient interval of time.

"For ten years I had suffered acutely from Gout and life had lost its attraction owing to the uncertainty of health and the sudden visitations of the enemy which prostrated me for months, or weeks, according to the virulence of the attacks.

"Blair's Pills have rendered me immense service, as I no longer fear an attack of Gout.

"For the last twenty months I have been comparatively free, as one or two attempted visitations have been immediately stamped out by the assistance of Blair's Pills.

"Truly yours, (Signed) SAML. W. BAKER."

EDITORIAL NOTES

IN view of the fact that the Boundary smelters have curtailed their operations and are unable to consume all our coke, a resolution would be in order at the forthcoming Associated Boards of Trade meeting urging the government to build smelters to accommodate the coal operators. What think you, Brother Ross?

THE following clipping from an exchange gives a fair representation of what the local paper is to the town and shows why it is deserving of local support. "The benefit that the local news paper affords an embryo town is known to some. The majority of people do not realize the important part the newspaper plays in the building up and growth of a community. The town is known from the outside to a great extent by the paper it produces. Its columns are scanned to note its business enterprises and establishments. The advantages and prospects of the town ore there set forth. In short it advertises the town. The newspaper is also the medium through which local improvements and government assistance aie obtained by its constant agitation. It is the town's spoksman: it is your spokesman; it is your paper. Then it must merit your support and patronage. Every new enterprise established here, every improvement in the town in any way increases the value of your business and real estate. It is to your interest to see that the local paper is kept alive. Aside from all this, we want to give you a direct return for your money. To the subscriber, a paper of news interest; to the the advertiser a means of telling the people about his business. If business is slow have recourse to the local paper and it will help you to help yourself. If business is brisk push it on still more.

IN order that the town may incorporate this year it will be necessary that the required petition be in the hands of tho government before July 1. It is therefore necessary that no time should be lost in getting all the needed information that the citizens may have ample time to "make up their minds" on the subject before the petition comes around. If it is not done now a whole year must elapse before the act can be reconsidered. It must not be forgotten that it requires a year for a municipality to get into working shape. A town council elected this summer can do practically nothing towards any permanent improvements this year and another year will be here with its increased prosperity before the serious problems of the town can be faced. If these matters are delayed still another year where will the town be at? Must we wait until 1906 to secure greater fire protection, a sewer system and other needed utilities? By that time the town will have grown to such dimensions that the government will be justified in entirely ignoring our claims upon it, and we will present a ludicrous spectacle indeed. Now is the time to act. The government wants the town to incorporate and surely the latter will not be wanting in common courtesy in refusing to accept an intimation, the justice of which cannot be questioned for an instant.

How To Ward Off an Attack of Rheumatism.

"For years when spring time came on and I went into gardening, I was sure to have an attack of reheumatism and every attack was more severe than the proceeding one," says Josie McDonald, of Man, Logan county, West Va. "I tried everything with no relief whatever, until I procured a bottle of Chamberlain's Pain Balm, and the first applic tion gave me ease, and before the first bottle was used I felt like a new person. Now I feel that I am cured, but I always keep a bottle of Chamberlain's Pain Balm in the house and when I feel any symptoms of a return I soon drive it away with one or two applications of this liniment. For Sale by all druggists and dealers.

Notice is hereby given that sixty days after date, I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for permission to purchase one hundred acres of land, more or less, situate as follows:—Commencing at a post marked "R. BIOGRAPHIES WANTED

By CYRUS DERICKSON

...Copyright, 1903, by T. C. McClure...

The Bebee Settlement was so called because so many farmers of that name, and all related, had settled there. It was at peace with all mankind and the farmers hoeing their corn when something like a cloudburst happened. A stranger arrived at the house of Silas Bebee and sat down to a boiled dinner with him and afterward held a long and interesting conversation. Mr. Graves, as the stranger gave his name, was one of the partners in a big publishing house which made a specialty of publishing the biographies of the old and eminent families of America. The name of Bebee, as he had discovered by long and patient research, dated back to the year 900 and had been borne by princes, dukes, counts, barons, poets and soldiers. What Mr. Graves wanted was to bring the Bebee biography down to Silas and let the world know that the family was still on tap and as eminent as in days of yore. He wanted to fill at least ten pages of the gilt backed book he was getting out with the sayings and doings of Silas, while the eleventh page should be taken up with a full length portrait of the sturdy old farmer. The biography and the portrait would be free, but in order to cover the cost of the glue and the stitching Silas would have to come down with $25 in cash.

"I don't think I'll trade," was the reply when the caller had stated his case.

Mr. Graves seemed to have prepared himself for just such an answer, and he turned away with:

"Very well, Mr. Bebee. As you are the most prominent of the family, I naturally came to you first, but as you don't care for the honors I shall go to Reuben. I think he will jump at the opportunity, being as he wants to be elected county supervisor next year. Good day, Mr. Bebee."

There wasn't a feeling of brotherly love between Silas and Reuben. Both wanted to "run things," and naturally that brought about a clash. Silas had some thoughts of running for county supervisor himself, and it was news to him and news he did not like that Reuben was planning to mix in. He did some rapid thinking. Mr. Graves had not climbed into his buggy when he was called back and a bargain concluded. The rest of the afternoon and all the evening were spent in listening to Silas Bebee's history, covering a period of some fifty-six years. Mr. Graves made copious notes and nodded his head from time to time, and all went well with the story. Bedtime had come, and Silas had given in sufficient matter for his ten pages when his wife, who had all along been doing a heap of thinking, rose and inquired:

"BY GUM, I ALWAYS KNEW SILAS BEBEE WAS A SNEAK."

"Silas, am I to be left out of this thing as if I didn't amount to shucks? If I haven't helped you to be the biggest toad in the puddle, who has?"

"They never say anything in books about big women, do they?" he asked of Mr. Graves.

"Well, very seldom," was the reply. "I believe they have mentioned Cleopatra and one or two others, but those were exceptional cases. Still, as your wife says"—

The result was that Mrs. Silas Bebee was given three pages and a portrait in the book, all for the sum of $8 cash in advance, and the clock had struck midnight before she got through telling how often she had had rheumatism, hysterics and bronchitis and how many yards of rag carpet and barrels of soft soap she had made during her married life. There was a son in the family named Joe. He had nothing to say that evening, but he got up next morning to claim his rights. As the son of Bebee and the biggest Bebee of them all, he wanted to be known of men, and it was finally decided that he should have two pages and a portrait for $5. It was dog cheap, and Mr Graves would lose money on it, but he had started out to see the Bebee family through and must do it even if he went broke. It took him three days to get through with the family, during which he had free board and lodgings as a matter of course, and then he headed for the house of Reuben. It was understood that he must call there to ask Reuben his exact age, but he must not go beyond that. Reuben was in the cornfield with his hoe, and he leaned against the fence and heard what the publisher had to say and then replied:

"By gum, but I always knowed Silas Bebee was a sneak, and now it's proved! He wants folks to think he's the big Bebee, does he? Wants the world to believe that all the other Bebees stand around and look at him with their mouths open? Waal, I'll bust up his little circus for him!"

Mr. Graves had struck a good thing, and he was the man to push it. Reuben wanted more pages than Silas had. His sons wanted to spread out in a liberal manner, and Mr. Graves fixed matters to suit them and himself. He had free board and lodgings for four days and departed with cash enough to buy a fur lined overcoat for the next winter. In honor bound, as he informed Reuben, he must call on Salathiel Bebee, but only to make sure whether his grandfather was bitten by a mad dog in the state of Ohio or Michigan. He called. Salathiel was uprooting the pigweeds which had crept into his garden, and when Mr. Graves had explained the biography business to him he straightened up and said:

"You kin pass right on. I ain't buyin' no gold bricks today."

But Mr. Graves didn't pass. He showed the contracts entered into with Silas and Reuben, and he added the remark that it was too bad there were only two eminent families of Bebees. Then Salathiel struck the trunk of a cherry tree with his fist and exclaimed:

"By John Rodgers, but the idea of them Bebees passin' themselves off the smartest and best in America! They do know how to farm, and I won't go for to deny it, but as for bein' big guns they ain't knee high. I'm no hand to brag, but if I don't lay over Sile and Reube every day in the week then you kin kick me clear across the barnyard."

The rest was easy, of course. There were Salathiel, his wife and two sons and two daughters, and all had to go into that book regardless of space or cost. Mr. Graves was not an impetuous man, and he took his time writing out his notes and managed to get five days' free board and lodgings. Then he departed to "work" Moses, Abraham, Joab, Peter, Paul and several other Bebees, securing victims in each and every family and in one instance taking in everything from the grandmother down to the infant in the cradle. He put in a full month at his work, and he had the best beds and the best meals. After his coming the Bebees no longer neighbored, and they passed each other with their heads held high and their noses turned up. In one or two cases the young men came to blows, and lawsuits were started over old matters. Things were edging along toward a grievous state of affairs when Mr. Graves and his notes and his money departed, and three days later a detective arrived in search of him and exposed him as a swindler. The Bebees didn't want to and couldn't believe it at first, but the evidence submitted was too strong for them to stand against, and after a due amount of weeping and wailing and swearing a meeting of all the families was held, and it was unanimously

"Resolved, That while the Bebees date back to the year 900 this year saw the whole durn caboodle making fools of themselves without reason or excuse, and we won't do it again."

Dashed to Earth Again.

"It's real interesting to read about these folks that lived in mythological times," said Mr. Cobb as he put a slip of paper in his library book and shut it carefully. "Seems as if 9 o'clock came quicker than ever I knew it to before."

Mrs. Cobb was putting a large patch on one elbow of her waist, and she held it close to the lamp in what seemed to her husband an ostentatious way. He turned sidewise in his chair to avoid the view.

"There was that feller Atlas," he said, musing. "He was strong beyond anything that we have nowadays. Why, he supported the heavens on his head and hands; held 'em up in place till they got kind of set, I judge. What muscle such a man as that must have had!" And Mr. Cobb doubled his right fist and brought it up to his shoulder while the fingers of his left hand felt his arm with apparent satisfaction.

"What an appetite he must have had!" said Mrs. Cobb tartly. "And while he was supporting the heavens—work the Lord could have done without any of his help—I'll risk but what his wife was supporting him! And tomorrow I guess your cold 'll be well enough so you can go over to the squire's and begin on that wood they want chopped and piled."

A Salvini Incident.

The late Alexander Salvini was once playing Hamlet in a small Wisconsin town. The theater was the crudest of structures, and the stage had been contrived for the occasion by the simple device of elevating a platform on four posts. When the gravedigging scene was reached a draft of cold air blew up through the aperture in the stage and not only caused the gravediggers' teeth to chatter, but played freaks with their garments.

Salvini, entering with Horatio, heard from the grave only a strange jumble of words bitten in pieces by the first clown's clicking teeth. But when he saw the loose garments of the workmen flapping jocularly in the breeze the irrelevant sight was too much for him, and laughter checked his speech. He tried to say, "Has this fellow no feeling of his business that he sings at gravemaking?" but he had to turn his face away from the audience and laugh, while the gravediggers carried the scene along with much fuss of occupation with pick and spade till Hamlet had recovered his gravity.

HIS STORMY WOOING

...By...

IZOLA L. FORRESTER

Copyright, 1903, by T. C. McClure

"Then it is 'No' again?"

MacDowell's voice was reflective and regretful. He did not look at the small, erect figure in brown linen sitting in solitary state on the old fallen log among the pine needles. The serious hazel eyes regarded him with a calm, disinterested independence that was exasperating.

"It is always 'No.' This is the fourth time."

"Three and a half." There was a flash of mischief in her quick smile. "You only got as far as a lifetime of devotion last time, and Mr. Tisdale came for his waltz. When will you try again?"

"Never!" His voice was quiet. She could not see his face. "I give up the fight. I think that even you will grant I have made a hard one for the cause, and since it is hopeless I shall leave Arleigh."

"For the summer?" She dug the point of her parasol a trifle viciously in among the innocent pine needles.

"No. Indefinitely. I expect to go to Japan on business and from there will merely drift anywhere. It does not matter so long as I do not drift into Arleigh harbor and try again—for the fourth time."

THE BURDEN IN HIS ARMS GREW HEAVIER WITH EVERY DRAGGING STEP.

She did not answer. There was a new tone in his voice that troubled her, a tone of cynicism and finality. She looked off at the broad half moon of the bay and shivered at the sudden chill in the air since the sun had gone down. The sea looked gray, with long wreaths of swirling white foam where the tide was coming in full. There was a dull, low roar to the breaking waves on the beach below, and the anchored yachts out in the bay were tugging and straining like restive horses as the swell plunged them to and fro.

"We had better go back," MacDowell said presently, turning to her. "There is a storm coming up."

"I like a storm." She took off her hat rebelliously and fastened it with the pins to the log. The wind caught her hair and blew it in a brown veil across her eyes, and she held it back, laughing as she looked up at him. "You may go if you wish."

He frowned and threw himself down on the ground near the edge of the bluff.

"I suppose that is one reason why I love you," he said bitterly. "You are so charmingly tractable. You always do as I say."

"There is no necessity for sarcasm." The little square chin tilted higher. Miss Dunderdale felt indignant. "You always wish me to do something that I don't want to do. And you are—are masterful."

She brought out the hateful word solemnly, and he shrugged his shoulders. There is something most annoying in a person shrugging his shoulders at you when you want to argue. It implies mental superiority and an impregnable stand. She closed her lips tightly. She would not say another word. He could go to Japan or the moon. It was a matter of the utmost indifference to her. She turned away from the stalwart figure on the ground and looked off at the storm clouds racing up from the breast of the sea on the horizon, her chin on her palm, one small foot swinging to and fro expressively as she reviewed the case of Hugh MacDowell.

There were just thirty-seven good and excellent reasons why she should marry him. Cecil knew all thirty-seven by heart. They were rehearsed to her with faithful exactitude by an anxious bevy of sisters and cousins and aunts.

And there was but one reason why she should not. She did not choose to.

To Cecil the one reason was sufficient and outweighed all the good and excellent thirty-seven. To the anxious bevy it was a foolish and willful obstacle set up before one of the happiest chances fate ever offered a girl.

MacDowell was twenty-nine—a traveled man of the world, with a generous fortune back of him, who had come from his globe trotting cultured, broad minded and cosmopolitan, with his native American point of view still fresh and optimistic.

Cecil's elderly relatives dwelt loving on these points. Her younger ones veered to the outward and visible signs of grace and said the tall, six foot wooer was handsome and altogether desirable.

That was just it. He was too desirable. He was faultless. Ever since he had come down to Arleigh, Cecil had felt herself lifted bodily by fate, assisted slightly by the anxious bevy, and thrown at his head and heart.

Any other man in his position would have courteously and diplomatically avoided the snare. He had walked into it, eyes open, lips smiling and arms extended to receive fate's gift. Wherefore the gift, with faithful feminine contrariness, declined being received.

There was a sudden vivid glare that ripped the heavy mass of clouds from end to end and a long crashing peal of thunder like cannon. The sea seemed to swell and leap to meet the sky. The boughs of the pines lashed up and down like fragile breeze blown ferns as the wind swept over them.

At the second crash Cecil rose and turned instinctively to the trees for shelter, but the gale caught her, and she would have fallen only for MacDowell's firm clasp of her arm. Almost instantly the whole world of land and sea and sky seemed on fire, and she shrank back into his arms with a cry of fear as a bolt struck a kingly pine that towered above its brothers a few yards away and left it a blasted, smoking ruin.

Before she could recover herself he had lifted her in his arms and gained the path that led down over the face of the bluff.

"We can't get to the shore," she exclaimed. "The tide is in."

"Put your arms around my neck and keep still," he answered curtly. "We can't stay up here."

She obeyed in silence, and he made his way down the path. What had been a smooth stretch of sand was now a swirling mass of low breakers. MacDowell paused an instant for breath as he reached it and looked down at the face on his shoulder. Her eyes were closed. A wild impulse seized him, and he bent and kissed her. The next instant he was knee deep in the waves, struggling in the teeth of the gale to where the shore curved and safety lay, and he fancied that the arms around his neck were clasped closer than before, although the eyes were still closed and the face was white and still.

The waves leaped and snarled with a hissing roar at his feet like a pair of hungry wolves, and he was forced to stop again and again and lean back against the bluff as the wind beat down on him. The burden in his arms grew heavier with every dragging step, but at length the beach shelved and broadened, and he staggered up the higher ground in safety and laid her down under the shelter of the overhanging rocks.

The first wild fury of the storm had passed, and only a faint rumble of distant thunder broke the stillness. She opened her eyes and looked up at him as he knelt beside her. Something new in their hazel depths seemed to answer the cry of his heart, and he raised two small cold hands to his lips.

"Cecil," he asked, "must I go?"

The first soft gleam of midsummer moonlight was casting a path of silver scales on the water when they reached the hotel veranda. The soft, delicious music of a mandolin orchestra came through the bright lighted windows, and they paused a moment in the shadow of the clinging vines to look back at the sea.

"I knew you would try the fourth time," she said laughingly as she raised her face to his. "Japan is so far away!"

"A Canvasbacked Clam."

Traveling on the continent of Europe with a party of young Americans, I was witness of their dismay at being assailed from time to time by friendly English fellow travelers with such questions as these: "Is it not very lonely in America? Are there any singing birds there? Any wild flowers? Any bishops? Are there booths in the streets of New York? Do people read English books there? Have they heard of Ruskin and how?" These were from the rank and file of questioners, while a very cultivated clergyman lost caste somewhat with our young people by asking confidently, "Are Harvard and Yale both in Boston?" a question which seemed to them as hopelessly benighted as the remark of a lady just returned from the wonders of the new world who had been impressed, like all visitors, with the novelties offered in the way of food at the Baltimore dinner tables, but still sighed with regret at having been obliged to come away without eating a "canvasbacked clam."—Thomas Wentworth Higginson in Atlantic.

Witty Response of Lecturer.

A professor who acted as chairman of a meeting at which Max O'Rell was to lecture introduced the Frenchman in the following manner:

"Ladies and gentlemen, when we wish to see ourselves as individuals we have recourse to the mirror. This we cannot do as a nation. I take pleasure in introducing a gentleman who will act as a French mirror, by means of which you will, I am sure, obtain an adequate and pleasing view of yourselves as a nation."

The introduction pleased O'Rell, and he responded in a vein as jovial. "I am requested to reflect on a nation. However, I must take second place to the man in the moon, for he reflects on the earth. As an imported French mirror, I shall do the best I can to give you a correct picture of the nation. And if your chairman remains where he is, in the background, he will add greatly to the reflective power of the mirror."

Colonel Lisenby's Romance

By ANGUS BLANTYRE

Copyright, 1903, by T. C. McClure

"An old man, Miss Edith, who begins to feel his age," said the colonel.

"But you are not old, Colonel Lisenby. I am sure that few of the young men of today hold themselves as erect as you do, and I am quite sure that I have met few of them who have that graceful, deferential manner of yours in the presence of women. I think you are wrong to say that all romance must be dead for you," said the girl laughingly.

They were sitting on the piazza of a country house on the Hudson. From open windows streamed lights and the buzz of conversation, which showed that the guests were enjoying themselves after the fashion of guests in country houses. Before them and beneath them lay the moonlit expanse of the Hudson, and on the other side they could make out the bold line of the precipitous shore.

Tall, slender and graceful, the youth of the girl's twenty years showed in sharp contrast to the fifty odd years of the handsome, soldierly looking man who stood at her side.

"When you were younger, Miss Edith," said the colonel, "you used to be very fond of having me tell you stories, and I think I will tell you one now if you are sure it will not bore you."

"Please do, colonel. I used to think that there was no one who could tell such delightful stories beginning. 'Once upon a time.'"

"This story begins in the same way, Miss Edith. 'Once upon a time' nearly forty years ago a young man was very much in love with a very beautiful woman. The two lived in a little southern village on the Mississippi river and had been playmates through childhood. It was an understood thing between the families of the two that the boy and girl should be married when they were grown.

"One day a foolish little quarrel came up between the two young people, and it was not made up as soon as it should have been. Perhaps the man was wrong; at any rate, he was heartily sorry afterward that he did not say he was wrong and make peace in that way.

"Before the quarrel was made up the civil war broke out, and the young man considered it his duty to go to the front in the ranks of the southern army. It was his luck to see a great deal of fighting and to win promotion more than once. At Gettysburg he was badly wounded and captured. For months he lay in a hospital and on his recovery was confined in a northern prison until the end of the war.

"When the war was over, he was released and hurried back to the little village he had lived in. There he found that the woman he loved was dead. Her mother told him that it had been said in the village that he was killed at Gettysburg and that when nothing was heard of him afterward the girl had died of a broken heart.

"If the man could have had his wish, he would have died also, but he was not cowardly enough to resort to suicide, and he lived. He came to New York and sought forgetfulness in the hardest of hard work. Success came to him in ample measure, and, what he valued more, he found in his work something of the forgetfulness he sought.

"Memory of the woman he had loved did not leave him. The man himself in his bitterest moments never wished for that.

"The man, as the old memories became dulled after many years, began to wonder if it was best for him to always live a solitary life. Then he began to wonder if he was not in love with a beautiful young girl whom he knew and then resolved to ask her to marry him. Do you think he did right?"

The girl did not answer for a moment, and then she said in a voice so low and sympathetic that you could almost detect the ring of tears in it:

"I am thinking of the woman who died. I do not believe the man will ever forget her if he loved her as much as you say. I know that if I were to die I would want Jack to love me always, as the man you have told me of loved the woman, and not to think of another woman."

The girl was looking with tear dimmed eyes across the river to where the lights of West Point could be seen on top of the Palisades.

The man's glance followed hers. Neither spoke for a moment, and then, with an effort which he hoped was not visible to the girl, the man said:

"So you are engaged to Jack Carter? I thought I was too old a friend not to have been told of this before?"

"I meant to have told you this evening," said the girl. "Jack says you were so good about getting him appointed to the academy that we have both felt grateful to you. But we neither of us thought that you would be at all interested in a romance."

"You do me an injustice," said the colonel, with a little dry laugh. "I am always interested in romance—for instance, the one which I have been just telling you. I know the man and have taken a great deal of interest in the case. I shall advise him not to propose to the girl. But you must permit me to tell you that I wish you all happiness and that I consider Jack a very lucky fellow."

"They are beginning to dance, colonel. Won't you come in with me?"

"Thanks. I fancy my dancing days are over. I think I will stay here and smoke a cigar."

The girl stepped in through one of the open windows, and the man lit a cigar.

Perhaps it was the moonlight on the water, perhaps it was the old waltz tune which floated out of the windows of the house, perhaps the old memories were brought up so keenly by the story he had told the girl on the piazza. Whatever the cause, the effect was to carry the mind of the man back to another time and another scene.

The Hudson became another river, the Palisades on the farther side became a low, wooded shore. The breeze which came from the river seemed heavy with scent of magnolia. The man who paced slowly up and down the piazza was young again.

At his side there seemed to walk a woman as beautiful and as young as the girl who had just left him. But the beauty of this woman was of the south, and her dress was of the fashion of forty years ago. The measure of forgetfulness which time had granted the man slipped away, and the old keen heartache woke once again to poignant life.

And the man walking with memories and ghosts in the pure, calm moonlight thanked God that the heartache was alive once more.

The Causes of Cynicism.

Cynicism is never a native quality of the mind. It always has its birth in some unhappy experience. The young man finds that the girl who has gathered up for him all the harmony and melody of earth rings hollow at the test, and he drops his lyrical language and becomes cynical of women. The citizen of Boston has naturally grown cynical of newspapers. The candidate for public office who has been definitely retired to private life by being "knifed" at the polls distrusts party politics. A man publishes a novel and thenceforth is cynical of the publishers of novels. Yet these misfortunes have their salutary aspect. The disappointed lover, generalizing bitterly upon the sex, is not always implacable. A cooler judgment tempers and restores his passion, gives it another object and so guides him to a safer if less gusty and emotional love. The citizen of Boston, the betrayed candidate, the blighted young novelist, all have for their condition, even though they know it not, a valuable compensation, for the very event that has brought them to this pass of reasonable cynicism has stirred their indignation—yes, in spite of their seeming inertness, indignation is now smoldering.—Arthur Stanwood Pier in Atlantic.

Her Cigars.

"My dear," said he the day after their wedding anniversary, "I'll just take those cigars to the office. It's customary, you know, to have a box handy in one's office."

That morning he sent the box of Extras down to his friend Jones, with his compliments, and he chuckled at the joke he was playing on Jones.

When he met Jones in the elevator he was persuaded to have one of his own cigars, which Jones said were "all right." He accepted one and, to his dismay, found they were "all right."

That evening when he arrived at home he said to his wife: "My dear, I smoked one of those cigars you gave me and liked it very much. How did you happen to pick out such good ones?"

"Well, I'll tell you. You made such a fuss about your birthday box that I got the young man next door to buy this box for me."

"Oh-h-h!" said the dear husband. And he muttered to himself, "Just like a woman, bless her—always go contrary to expectations!"—Buffalo Times.

English Kissing Customs.

At Newcastle-on-Tyne, England, at periodic intervals the mayor and corporation assert their rights over the shores of their native river by proceeding in state to various points, where they proclaim their authority. Perhaps as an inducement for the mayor to undertake this particular duty, on landing on the green he is permitted by ancient custom to kiss the prettiest girl present, conferring upon her a sovereign as compensation. At Bournemouth, where the kiss mayoral is also conferred, it is an ancient and loving custom for the retiring mayor to give his successor an osculatory salute.

RAILWAY COMMISSIONS

PERSONEL AND CONSTITUTION OF CANADA'S NEW BOARD.

The Extensive Powers Which Will Be Entrusted to Messrs. Blair, Bernier and Mills After the 1st of February—Their Personal Conduct—Where the Board May Sit—Its Jurisdiction—Provision for Appeals.

A perusal of the Railway Act of last session gives something of an idea as to the vast amount of work to be done by the newly constituted Railway Commission. The Railway Committee of the Privy Council is abolished, and its place is taken by the Board of Railway Commissioners for Canada. The Commission is to be a court of record in the ordinary legal sense. The Commissioners may hold office for ten years during good behavior, but may be removed at any time by the Government. They are eligible for reappointment at the end of their term, but must retire at the age of 75. The Chief Commissioner is appointed such by the Government which may also name a Deputy Chief Commissioner. The salaries are $10,000 for the Chief Commissioner, and $8,000 for each of the others. The Board is invested with the powers and duties of the Railway Committee of the Privy Council. Not less than two Commissioners shall attend at the hearing of every case, except where there is no Commissioner.

The Government reserves the right to appoint a Commissioner ad hoc where a Commissioner is interested by kin or affinity to any party interested in a case.

Their Personal Conduct.

The Commissioners must not hold railway stock, shares, bonds, debentures or other security of any railway subject to the Act, nor have any interest in any railway device, appliance, machine, or rolling stock, and on his appointment he is given three months to sell out.

Any member of the Board accepting any gift or favor for himself or for influence on behalf of any person with any railway company or officer for any position or favor, shall thereby forfeit his seat as a member of the Board.

Each Commissioner shall during his term of office reside at Ottawa, or within five miles thereof, or within such distance thereof as the Government determines.

The Commissioners shall devote the whole of their time to the performance of their duties, and shall not accept or hold any office or employment inconsistent with the Act.

To Sit in Ottawa or Elsewhere.

The Government, upon the recommendation of the Minister, shall provide, at Ottawa, a suitable place in which the sessions of the Board may be held, and also suitable offices for the Commissioners, secretary, staff, and other employes.

Whenever circumstances render it expedient to hold sessions without the city of Ottawa, the Board may hold them in any part of Canada.

The Commissioners may sit either together or separately, in private or in open court, but any party to a complaint may demand a hearing in open court. Any two members of the court shall constitute a quorum. The secretary will hold office during the pleasure of the Government. His duty will be to attend the sessions of the Board and keep its records. His salary will be $4,000. In his absence an acting secretary will be appointed. The Government may at times employ experts in matters in question to advise the Board. The Government itself will decide on the number of officials required to carry out the work of the Board, will make the appointments and fix the salaries.

The Jurisdiction of the Board.

As to the jurisdiction and general powers of the Board, the Act sets out that it shall have jurisdiction to determine any application;

Complaining that the company, or any person, has failed to do any act required to be done by this Act, or the Special Act, or by any direction made thereunder, by the Governor-in-Council, the Board, the Minister, or any inspecting engineer, or has done or is doing any act, contrary to this Act, or the Special Act, or any such direction;

Requesting the Board to make any order, or give any direction, sanction or approval, which by law it is authorized to make or give;

And the Board may order any company or person to do, as far as is not inconsistent with this Act, any act, which such company may be required to do under this Act, or the Special Act, and may forbid the doing or continuing of any act, contrary to this Act.

Has Supreme Court Powers.

In this regard the Board is to have all the powers of a superior court. The Board may act upon its own motion or at the request of the Minister of Railways. It may make regulations respecting the speed of trains, the use of steam whistles, passing from car to car, coupling of cars, shelter for employes, devices to avoid fires, and the general protection of property, the employes of the company and the public. The Board may provide penalties, otherwise than those specified in the Act. These penalties shall not exceed one hundred dollars. As to the practice and procedure to be observed in the Board, the Act makes an interesting provision for the development of the function of the Board as a court of record. Every document purporting to be signed by the Chief Commissioner and secretary, or by either of them, or by the Minister or inspecting engineer, shall, without proof of any such signature, be prima facie evidence in all courts, and shall be sufficient notice to the company and all parties interested, that such document was duly signed and issued by the Board, Minister or inspecting engineer as the case may be; and if such document purports to be a copy of any regulation, order, direction, decision or report, made or given by the Board, or the Minister or inspecting engineer, shall be prima facie evidence in all courts of such regulation, order, direction, decision or report, and when served on the company, or any person, shall be sufficient notice to the company or such person, of such regulation, order, direction, decision or report from the time of such service. And similarly plans, profiles and the like, signed by the Board, shall be prima facie evidence of the existence of such documents. The Act makes elaborate provision for the giving of notice to parties interested in matters to come before the Board, the publication of regulations and orders, the notice of applications for enquiry. The existing orders of the Railway Committee may ne made rules of the Exchequer Court, or of any superior court of any Province, and penalties for infraction of these rules may be exacted by the new Board. In like manner decisions of the Board may be made rules of court.

Provision for Appeals.

The Board itself is empowered to make rules governing its own procedure under the Act, and it shall be independent of judgments of other courts on questions of fact not binding on it. In other words, its judgment of fact shall not be dependent on simultaneous suits in other courts. The order of the Board shall be final, saving the right of review by the Government and appeal to the Supreme Court on questions of jurisdiction or of law. In case of such appeals, the Board may be represented by counsel.

Neither the Board nor any member of the Board shall in any case be liable to any costs by reason or in respect of any appeal. The Governor-in-Council may at any time refer to the Board for a report, or other action, any question, arising under this Act, or the Special Act, and the Board shall without delay comply therewith.

The Board is empowered to fix its own scale of costs, and may make its own orders as to the responsibility for the payment for any construction it may order. It may initiate enquiry into accidents or casualties and exercise the right of inspection of the company's works and documents and will hold the power of an ordinary court to demand the presence of any person for enquiry under oath.

Applications for running rights by railways, within forty yards of the track must be made to the Board, which will exercise also a general supervision of the taking or using of lands by railway companies.

The Board will be charged with the regulation of the construction of branch lines, crossings, and junctions. In the latter regard the Act provides that "the railway lines or tracks of any company shall not be crossed or joined by or with the railway lines or tracks of any other company until leave therefore has been obtained from the Board."

Its Powers Are Sweeping.

It must enquire into all matters affecting works in navigable waters, highway crossings, telegraph, telephone and other lines, and in all these respects must wield a potent influence in the reconciliation of warring interests, drainage, farm crossings, fences, gate and cattle guards, bridges, tunnels and other structures, including station, will all come under the jurisdiction of the Board. It will preside at the inspection of all new railways, and generally supervise the operation of the roads in respect of train service, equipment, telegraphs and telephones, fire protection, and the like.

In she large matter of tolls it is armed with authority to inspect all schedules and provide against unjust discrimination between localities. The whole questions of tolls, freight classification, tariffs, discrimination and general provisions respecting carriage, will be under constant supervision by the Board, which the Act has clothed not only with wide powers of discretion, but hard and fast rules for the protection of the interests of the people at large.

In the whole scheme of Canadian railway development there is hardly one important phase of the relations between the railway corporations and the public, which will not be subject at one time or another to the scrutiny of the Commissioners. Plainly it is a large order, and the Commissioners who are able to fill it must earn their salaries.

An Ingenious Orillia Lady.

One day recently a prominent young lady of Orillia lost her post-office key and soon after complained repeatedly of not receiving any mail. The postmaster and clerks assured her that parcels and letters had been put in her box as before, so she immediately suspected that some dishonorable person had found her key and was appropriating her mail. Last Friday she wrote a decoy letter, stating that a certain amount of money would be sent through the office on Saturday and would reach Orillia at noon. On Friday the lady saw the decoy letter in her box, but left it there, and soon it disappeared in the usual way. That night she again complained to the postmaster and told about sending the decoy letter and how it had disappeared from her box; so he said he would immediately send word to Ottawa and a detective would be sent to attend to the matter. The lady, however, saw the necessity for immediate action, and on Saturday morning asked to be allowed to set a trap, so she put a parcel in her box with a bell fastened to the far end by a long cord, which allowed the bell to extend to the floor of the postmaster's department, where she waited to see what the result would be. At noon, when the decoy letter said the money would be there, the parcel in the box was interfered with, the bell gave the alarm and the person found there was arrested on the charge of being caught robbing the mail.

MASTER OF BIOGRAPHY

LESLIE STEPHEN'S NAME LINGERS HALF FORGOTTEN.

An Eminent Man-of-Letters—Literary Circles Pleased When He Was Knighted in 1902—Brother of Famous Judge—Editor of Cornhill—His Great Work—Rank as a Writer.

Leslie Stephen is one of those names which lurk in everybody's memory, half-forgotten, without associations to assist one to recall them. There is a good deal in a name, after all, and here is a ery famous one, and the mention of it will have no effect on the average man beyond making him vaguely wonder where he heard it before. As it is, this eminent man-of-letters is unknown to the public which is on familiar terms with Sir Gilbert Parker, who was knighted at the same time. None of the honors bestowed by Royal favor in 1902 pleased literary circles more than the K.C.B. given to Leslie Stephens.

Master of Short Biography.

Sir Leslie Stephen is dead, and in a hundred newspaper and magazine offices short biographical articles are being written about the master of biographical sketches. Though his life was a long and active one, full of toil and productive of lasting results, it is difficult in surveying the broad fields in which he labored to gather a nosegay which a non-literary public will appreciate. Sir Leslie was a reserved man, dwelling in a high, thin atmosphere, rarely descending to the plain. He had much of the intellectual aloofness so often remarked by students of Tennyson. He was, in short, a bookman, instead of a fellow-citizen. It is safe to say that he never took enough interest in public affairs to run for any office in the gift of a municipality. Had he done so he would have been defeated. He lived his long life in the past, in the company of that famous host of English authors whom he loved so well.

Brother of Famous Judge.

His taste for literature was inherited fairly enough from a long line of ancestors, who handled the goosequill with some facility. His father, Sir James Stephen, was the author of a series of essays on ecclesiastical biography, and his grandfather had also published matter of a more or less fugitive character. His brother, James Fitzjames Stephen, inherited the literary sense too, and was a prolific writer, though more famous as a lawyer. Later he was made a judge and knighted, and was considered one of the most notable figures on the British bench. He was the judge who sentenced Mrs. Maybrick, and was the centre of one of the fiercest controversies in the past quarter of a century. After his death Leslie prepared his biography, and in it defended his brother with skill and eloquence from the attacks made on his conduct of that famous case.

Editor of Cornhill.

Leslie Stephen was born in Kensington, on Nov. 28, 1832, and received his education at Eton, King's College, London, and Trinity College, Cambridge. He took his B.A. in 1854, and his M.A. three years later. For several years he was a fellow and tutor of Trinity, but in 1864 went to London and embarked on the sea of literature. In 1871 he became editor of the celebrated Cornhill Magazine, which had probably as many famous contributors as any magazine before or since. Stephen held this position for 11 years, and in that time had come in contact with the greatest English writers of the period. Among his friends he could number Hardy, Stevenson, Norris, James Payne, Henry James, Russell Lowell, and a host of others. As a youth he had been on intimate terms with the Macaulays, James Spedding, Sir Henry Taylor, and Nassau Senior, while Tennyson, Dickens, and Thackeray were illustrious members of various little circles in which he was made welcome. At the home of the editor of the Pall Mall Gazette he met Harriet Marion Thackeray, younger daughter of the novelist, and her he married. She died in 1878, and later he wedded Julia Prinsep Duckworth, whose death occurred about nine years ago.

His Great Work.

In 1883, Leslie Stephen, then 50 years old, began the work on which his fame must rest. The desire possessed him to prepare a biographical dictionary of his famous countrymen, "to carry a causeway through the vast morass of antiquarian accumulation," and to this task he addressed himself. He did not pretend to write all these biographies himself. He was to be merely the editor, but, as a matter of fact, the great share of the burden fell on his own shoulders. He issued twenty volumes of the Dictionary of National Biography, and then, his health failing, he called to assist him Mr. Sidney Lee. In collaboration they got out five more volumes, and then Mr. Stephen resigned the monumental task to the capable hands of Mr. Lee, who has continued at the helm ever since Anyone who wishes to see Leslie Stephen at his best should read his sketches in the Dictionary. His study of Johnson has been called the "peerless model of short biography." Turning over the thousands of pages in this library, one will find that Stephen was the biographer of some of the greatest characters there.

His Rank as a Writer.

In all his writings (and beside his contributions to the Dictionary he issued about a dozen volumes) Leslie Stephen's personality is strongly marked. As a stylist he is admirable, a master of brevity, an artist in detail. To carve a character on a cherry stone, as someone has expressed it, was a task in which he delighted, and yet, when opportunity offered, he could split hairs with the writings were biographical, and his biographies philosophical studies. He was always downright and sincere, and it has been said of him that he never wrote below himself. Although he might quarrel with the name, he was a sceptic of the school of Bentham, Mill and Spencer, and had little sympathy with some great men, Jowett, for instance, who held opposite views But if he has written with lack of sympathy, it must be remembered that his business was not to eulogize. As a cold, impartial, slightly sardonic and humorous biographer, he will rank with the best writers of English language.

"NOT MUCH, NOT MUCH."

One of the Best Stories Told in Britain's Art Circles.

Tit-Bits relates the following: One of the best known R. A.'s has a favorite anecdote—one often told but always good—of which he claims to be the original narrator. Moreover, it is a true one.

An old country couple (so he relates) had strayed into the Manchester Art Gallery, catalogue in hand, and were wandering from room to room looking at the pictures, which were numbered anew—one, two, three, and so on in each division, instead of continuously throughout the whole exhibition. The two old people stopped in awe and admiration before Madox Brown's heroic picture, "The Death of King Lear."

"Wha's this 'un, Jinny?" asked the old man.

"A'll see, Jarge—a'll see, ef ye'll give me a minute."

The old lady hastily turned to the catalogue division of another room, and read off the number corresponding to that of the picture before them. It chanced to be that of Landseer's famous picture of a collie fallen over a cliff, and just reached by the anxious shepherd, who announces the result of his examination of the poor beast's injuries to his comrades on the rocks above. She read off the title of the picture to her husband:

"There's Life in the Old Dog Yet."

Looking compassionately on the picture form of the aged and forsaken King, "Jarge" failed to perceive anything wrong in the name."

"So there is, gal!" he exclaimed, in a burst of pity, adding, with dropped voice and a shake of the head at Lear, "But not much, not much!"

Couldn't Have Done Better.

In Academy and Literature a good story is told of Mr. Whistler in connection with his first official visit to the art school established in Paris as the Whistler Academy. The great man, advancing into the room where the students were working, took his stand, hat and stick in hand, and addressed them, apparently seriously, in a few words expressing the honor he was doing himself and themselves in showing Paris and the world that he, Whistler, was in his school and that they, the students, were also there. Then followed a tour of the room, Mr. Whistler speaking to each student in turn somewhat as follows: "Ah, and where have you studied before?" "At John's." "Ah, you couldn't have done better!" And to the next one, "Ah, and where have you studied before?" "With M. Bouguereau." "Ah, you couldn't have done better!" So Whistler went the rounds, repeating the formula in each case without perceptible alteration in tone. Finally, the question being put to a very young man, the answer almost upset the general gravity. "Ah, and where have you studied before?" "I have never studied before." For just the fraction of a moment Mr. Whistler eyed him curiously and then, with perfect gravity, but with an enthusiastic accent, he said, "Ah, you couldn't have done better!"

Leading Figures at Gaelic Mod.

The Marquis of Tullibardine, who, with the Marquis of Breadalbane, will be one of the leading figures at the forthcoming Gaelic Mod at Greenock this year, is one of the few members of old Highland families who still retain the Gaelic. He does not lay any claim to fluency in the language, although Gaelic was his first language, and as a child he was compelled to speak it in the family circle. But his English schooling and his subsequent soldiering in Egypt and South Africa have knocked much of the native language out of him, though it has not quenched his Celtic spirit. He can get along quite well with a Gaelic ghillie, and now that he is at home, and is establishing the Scottish Horse, a body which is to be composed of men accustomed to the hills, he has promised to recapture his old ability in the ancient tongue.

Deterioration of British Workmen.

It appears (says The Lancet) that the most probable explanation of the alleged deterioration of the working classes is placed upon a misconception of the facts, and that what we are witnessing may be merely one of the effects of the improved well-being of the people and of the greater attractions offered to the worker by civil employment. If this be so, the recruiting sergeant is really carrying on his work in a lower social stratum in which, by force of circumstances, the proportion of the unfit is greater than was the case when he was appealing largely to a relatively better class. It is, too, conceivable that, although the fact is not recognized, a somewhat higher standard as regards fitness may now quite unconsciously be set, and that perhaps more stress than formerly is being laid upon defective teeth, imperfect vision and the like.

Dog Changes Color.

A Newfoundland puppy nearly all white was chased by a big dog in Brussels and terribly frightened. He had a violent epileptic fit, and in a few hours he was completely changed, black markings have appeared all over his coat, which have become permanent.

THE MOVING OF GRAIN

CHANNELS FOR TRANSPORTATION OF CANADIAN CEREALS TO THE SEA.

Removal of the Tolls on the Canadian Canals Has Resulted in a Heavy Movement of Grain Over the Canadian Lake Route and Thence Down the St. Lawrence—Saves Three Cents a Bushel.

The United States Government has published a brochure written by their Consul General, Mr. A. W. Edwards, at Montreal, relating to American exports of grain through Canadian waterways.

The removal of the tolls on the Canadian canals, says Mr. Edwards, has resulted in a heavy movement of grain over the Canadian lake route and thence down the St. Lawrence, as the exporters can now handle corn for 3 cents less a bushel than by the part-lake and part-rail route to Boston. A record of 1,000,000 bushels of corn within five days is the showing that the customs reports make for the amount of grain brought from Chicago to Montreal. The record, which is for the five days previous to August 23, 1903, is more than 200,000 bushels greater than any amount ever handled in a similar period.

The Montreal Board of Trade reports up to August show that during the year 1903, 9,000,000 bushels of wheat and 4,500,000 bushels of corn have passed through the port of Montreal, as against a little more than 1,000,000 bushels of wheat and 4,000,000 bushels of corn shipped from Boston.

The matter has drawn attention to the channels in which Canadian grain at present moves to the seaboard. From a pamphlet compiled by the Northwestern Miller, the information is gleaned that last year there was shipped from the two Canadian Lake Superior ports, Fort William and Port Arthur, 35,525,798 bushels of grain. Of this total, 13,500,654 bushels, or 38 per cent. was shipped to Buffalo and Port Huron, the balance—62 per cent.—going to Canadian ports as follows:

	Bushels.
Owen Sound	1,308,160
Midland	8,316,972
Depot Harbor	3,515,760
Point Edward	192,904
Meaford	972,684
Goderich	2,759,484
Kingston	4,985,176
Total	22,051,140

The following is the grain drawn from Duluth to Canadian ports:

	Bushels.
Owen Sound	102,000
Midland	1,633,000
Depot Harbor	3,591,000
Meaford	1,065,000
Quebec	574,000
Goderich	100,000
Kingston	58,000
Port Sarnia	19,000
Total	7,142,000

In addition there was also handled 813,000 bushels of flaxseed.

Chicago shipped extensively to Canadian ports as follows:

	Bushels.
Montreal	254,000
Depot Harbor	4,691,000
Port Sarnia	2,349,000
Midland	3,707,000
Collingwood	2,366,000
Meaford	186,000
Goderich	271,000
Other Canadian ports	81,000
Total	13,985,000

Altogether these two United States ports (Duluth and Chicago) shipped to Canadian ports 21,129,000 bushels of grain, as compared with 13,500,654 bushels shipped from the two Canadian ports (Port Arthur and Fort William) to American ports. In other words, almost 20 per cent. of the grain crop of the United States shipped by water from these two leading American inland ports passed through Canadian waterways. The routes chosen are of interest, they were:

	Bushels.
Midland	13,736,972
Depot Harbor	11,797,760
Kingston	5,043,176
Goderich	3,130,484
Port Sarnia	2,368,000
Collingwood	2,366,000
Meaford	2,223,684
Owen Sound	1,410,160
Quebec	574,000
Montreal	254,000
Point Edward	192,904
Other Canadian ports	81,000
Total	43,171,140

These figures show that 48 per cent. of the grain making use of the Canadian water route was grown in the United States.

Of course, not all of these 43,171,140 bushels were exported, as a considerable portion of the Canadian-grown grain was retained for home consumption. The grain exports from Canadian ports were:

	Bushels.
Montreal	19,934,278
St. John's	2,311,872
Quebec	1,629,860
Total	23,876,010

The balance of twenty million odd bushels, less home consumption, as well as the twelve million odd bushels of Canadian grain sent into the United States via Buffalo, were exported as follows:

	Bushels.
New York	7,733,993
Boston	6,610,512
Portland	5,896,078
Philadelphia	1,555,938
Baltimore	104,000
Total	21,900,521

There was, therefore, more Canadian grain exported from United States ports than from Canadian—in fact, nearly as much as was exported from Canadian ports of both American and Canadian—and the Canadian grain is a considerable item in the traffic of these American ports. Last year it supplied over 21 per cent. of the grain exports of New York, 40 per cent. of the grain shipments from Boston, and nearly 65 per cent. of the Portland shipments.

It is estimated in the West that the grain acreage of Manitoba and the Northwest Territories is full 20 per cent. above the previous year.

The Great Lakes and St. Lawrence Transportation Co. had last season ten ships in commission between Duluth and Quebec bringing grain from the West. The vessels are the largest carriers on the St. Lawrence canals, being 256 feet long, 41 feet deep, and carrying 2,250 tons each on 14 feet draft of water. These vessels are able to bring grain to Quebec for from 4½ to 6 cents per bushel.

NEWFOUNDLAND WRECKERS.

Recent Stripping of a Stranded Schooner Recalls Some Ancient Lore.

It recalls old times to read of how a party of Newfoundland fishermen recently boarded and stripped a schooner that by some rare chance went ashore on their terrible coast without getting ground into little pieces. That was their regular custom in such cases in years not very remote, not because they were a bad, piratical lot, which they never were, but because that custom, once common to every seaboard, lingered in Newfoundland with many another of equally respectable age longer than in most other places. The Newfoundlander—who, by the way, always accents the name of his island on the ultimate syllable and that of himself on the penultimate—retained until just the other day the inclination of his ancestors and ours to look upon lighthouses as a wicked interference with the designs of Providence in the matter of wrecks and consequent profit to a 'longshore population, and though it has been some years since he has been charged with actual efforts to increase the natural harvest of the cliff foot by luring ships ashore or quietly disposing of stray survivors who might be inconvenient claimants for salvaged property, it is not remarkable that he still decides hastily when the question arises whether a stranded vessel belongs to its owners or to the first to reach it. In this instance, such vivacity of judgment has been followed by the imposition of heavy fines, with an alternative of imprisonment which the fishermen will probably be compelled to accept. The comparative certainty, nowadays, of incurring the necessity to make that gloomy choice has had a marked effect upon even the most conservative of the dwellers about the Gulf of St. Lawrence, and the business of "wrecking" will soon be there exactly what it is on kinder shores. Which is a loss as well as a gain, since it means the complete disappearance of a phase of life of large value to the artists of one sort and another who have been wont to earn honest bread by exploiting humanity's interest in the tragica land picturesque.

Paul Kane and His Pictures.

Much interest was renewed in a Canadian artist and his works by the exhibition of Paul Kane's paintings, which the Lieut.-Governor opened in Toronto on Saturday, March 5, under the auspices of the Woman's Canadian Historical Association.

Paul Kane was born in 1810 of humble parentage in the little town of York, now Toronto. His youth was spent here, and, as he tells us in his autobiography, from his earliest years he took the greatest interest in the Indians, of whom many wandering bands were to be found in the neighborhood. As years passed he developed a talent for drawing and became a portrait painter, which vocation he followed for some years in Canada and the United States. In 1841 he went to Europe and passed four years in the study of art in the galleries of England, France and Italy. Returning to Canada in 1845, he determined to devote himself to the dream of his boyhood, the painting of a series of pictures illustrative of the North American Indian, and the scenery of that vast unknown region between the Great Lakes and the Pacific Ocean. In order to accomplish his purpose, he left Toronto on June 17, 1845, with a slender outfit, including his portfolio, a box of paints, his gun and a stock of ammunition. He traveled far and wide for years, sketch book in hand, and lived among the red men, learning their manners and customs, studying their characteristics and taking portraits of their chiefs and warriors, and medicine men, as well as of their wives and daughters. He skirted the shores of the Upper Lakes, and Hudson's Bay, thence to the Red River settlement; the Valley of the Saskatchewan, and the great buffalo prairies of the west. Crossing the Rocky Mountains, he followed the course of the Columbia River to Oregon, Puget Sound and Vancouver Island. Scarcely, as he says, meeting a white man or hearing his own language. Fishing, hunting scenes, games and dances were limned by his pencil, and from these sketches he executed the series of oil paintings which were purchased fifty years ago by the late Hon. G. W. Allan, and which now, by the kindness of their present owner, Mr. E. B. Osler, have been placed on exhibition in Toronto.

A Canadian Captain.

Capt. A. G. Morris, of the steamer Rasbera, which is reported to have performed the feat of escaping from Port Arthur, after being forbidden to leave by the Russians, is a Canadian, the son of a physician in Middle Musquodoboit, Halifax County, N. S. He was married when his ship was last in England to Miss Hallemore, of Nova Scotia, and the happy couple were on their wedding trip when they went through their exciting adventures.

Deaths from starvation in Great Britain have fallen from eighteen to twelve per million in the last thirty years.

BOUNDARIES PRACTICALLY AGREED UPON.

The Fernie Board of Trade Discussed Incorporation with the Coal Company Officials.

A hastily summoned Board of Trade meeting was held on Monday evening to discuss further details of the Incorporation scheme. General Manager Stockett and Comptroller Davies of the Coal Company were present and the attitude of the Coal Company was presented in such a light that there remains little doubt that incorporation is definitely certain to follow, and on a basis satisfactory to all parties concerned.

Mr. A. W. Bleasdell was elected chairman in the absence of the president and vice president. A little preliminary business preceded the main business of the evening. After the reading of the minutes of the last meeting and their adoption the secretary read a communication from the Nelson Board of Trade asking the co-operation of the Fernie Board by endorsing the memorial recently sent to Ottawa by the Silver-lead mine operators. The memorial was also read. A short discussion followed, after which on motion by Mr. McEvoy the matter was laid on the table for further reference.

An intimation was received by the Board from Assistant Land Commissioner Pierce of the C. P. R. at Calgary that the railway was anxious to see a wagon road built into the Flathead at an early date as they had some machinery consigned to the new Coal and oil lands which they must transport. If the Government was going to build a road in from Fernie there was little doubt that the C. P. R. would assist in its construction. The C. P. R. apparently favor the Fernie route, and it was stated that the railway company would build a road of their own into the Flathead from the Loop if the Fernie road was not built. After a discussion pro and con the Fernie route the secretary was instructed to arrange a meeting with Mr. Pierce, by which the subject might be discussed more fully.

Messrs. J. Volume and T. H. White were ballotted upon for membership and both were elected.

Mr. J. A. Rennie opened the discussion on the incorporation question by briefly relating what he and Mr. Alexander, as the investigating committee, had done since the last meeting. They had obtained from the registrar at Nelson information showing that nearly 50 per cent of the lots in the townsite were still registered in the name of the Coal Company. The information re assessment values had not been received from Fort Steele. The committee had had an interview with Messrs. Stockett and Davies of the Coal Company but as those gentlemen were present they doubtless would explain their views direct to the meeting.

Mr. Stockett said that the Coal Company had opposed incorporation in earlier days as they considered the time premature for such an undertaking. The town he believed, was now in a position when it could advantageously take this step. He had not been present when Mr. Jaffray had laid his views before the citizens of Fernie but he believed he understood in a general sense what those views were. The Company was desirous that the railway should form the Eastern boundary, and that the Park should not be included. In talking over these matters with Messrs. Rennie and Alexander many questions incidentally were worked into the discussion. The police protection of the Park, it was suggested, should be in the hands of the town and he was inclined to think on that account that the Park should be included within the Municipality. Coal Creek would form a natural Boundary for the town on the South. With reference to the Cemetery he believed arrangements might be made by which the town could control it. The plots were now free, but the council could put a price on them to raise a revenue sufficient to keep the cemetery in good condition. Objection was made to making the railway the Eastern boundary on account of "The Row" not being then included in the municipality. The speaker was of the opinion that the Eastern boundary at that place might be extended several hundred feet eastward to take in those houses, and that a slice might be added on to the Northern end of the present townsite plot to include the Fernie Manufacturing Co's property, which now is situated only partly inside the townsite. Mr. Stockett exhibited a map showing the entire townsite plot as registered. It consists of 500 acres, 380 of which are north of Coal Creek and 300 of the latter are west of the C.P.R. track. Mr. Stockett closed his remarks by stating that the Company were willing to do everything that was reasonable and fair and he believed that if the town would meet them half way no difficulty would be experienced in arriving at an amicable arrangement.

The views expressed by Mr. Stockett appeared to meet with general favor. Mr. D. V. Mott moved that a committee be appointed by the chairman to confer with Messrs. Stochett and Davies to arrange a basis for incorporation. This scheme will afterwards be submitted to the Coal Company Directors and to the citizens for their respective endorsements. The resolution was unanimously adopted and the old committee consisting of Messrs. Rennie and Alexander was supplemented by the addition of A. B. Trites. This committee will report at an early date.

After the adjournment of the meeting Mr. Stockett exhibited to the members the plans for the new office building, which were much admired by all.

BUILDING OPERATIONS

With the advent of Spring building operations are showing signs of revival. Several large blocks are being spoken of and the season is expected to be a good one for the building contractors.

J. C. Hutchison has secured a five year ground lease of the lot south of Gordon and Mathison's jewelry store and lumber is already on the ground for the erection of a building. He will occupy it as a tailorshop.

W. Cameron who recently purchased the 60 foot lot aud cottage south of the Muskoka hotel is turning the house into a store by putting another story under it similar to the manner in which Mr, Cody raised his.

Mr. A. McLean is completing his neat cottage on Howland Ave. This cottage will be occupied by Mr. J. G. Cummings as soon as completed.

The Trites.Wood Co. Ltd., had been improving the old Joyce store by removing the partition in the rear and turning it into one room. More shelves have been added and fresh paint and paper have given the old building a more cheerful appearance. This building will be devoted entirely to men's goods.

The excavation for the new jail is progressing and the structure will be under way at an early date.

ANOTHER LAW OFFICE.

L. P. Eckstein barrister and solicitor, arrived in Fernie on Wednesday evening to open a law office here. Mr. Eckstein is at present staying at the Royal. He has secured an office in the Cuthbert block and is now ready for business, in a short time he expects to bring his family from Grand Forks, where he has been practising law. The Grand Forks News-Gazette says of his departure :—

(Mr. Eckstein removed to Grand Forks from New Westminster in 1900 and has practiced his profession here ever since with the exception of a year and a half when he represented the Kettle Valley line as legal agent in the State of Washington. He has occupied the position of legal agent of the Dominion Government in the Boundary district for some time past, and recently held official investigations to enquire into the operation of the alien labor law and immigration matters as they affected this district. He will return here shortly for his family.)

The Sun says of him: "Mr. Eckstein has always been of a progressive spirit, and has taken a keen interest in all matters pretaining to the welfare of the city. He served one term as city solicitor, and later he was engaged as legal adviser to the Kettle Valley line for a year and a half. In both capacities he discharged his duties with consummate skill, and in a manner that reflected great credit on his legal abilities."

CONCERT POSTPONED

A wire was received form Frederic Shipman at Glacier, B. C. stating that his Company was snow-bound at that place and were unable to fill its engagements on the dates have therefore been changed to a week later to allow them ample time to make connections, and Shipman's Comedians will appear in Fernie on April 23rd instead of the 15th, as advertised. The public are asked to keep this change in mind.

MR. BOUSFIELD BANQUETTED.

The members of the local Miners' Union banquetted Mr. H. Bousfield on Tuesday night on the occasion of his departure to Colorado. The Alberta Hotel dining room was appropriately decorated and plates were laid for forty guests. Mr. Gates, in his capacity of host, attended to the wants of those present in a first-class manner. Following the repast was a representative toast list. Mr. W. Tuttle acted as toastmaster. The miners presented their departing organizer with a beautiful and costly French clock and a silver sugar bowl and a dozen silver sugar spoons. Messrs. Thomas Addison and D. Carruthers made the presentation. In the speeches many complimentary eulogies were showered upon Mr. Bousfield who replied in his characteristic modest manner. Mr. Bousfield left the following evening for Colorado where he is being sent by the W. M. W. of A. in connection with the strike now on there.

A CHALLENGE

We are in receipt of a letter from Nick Burley of Nelson, challenging the winner of the Burrows-Curley contest of the 22nd to a boxing bout. He states that he will meet either of these men inside of 8 or 10 days after the 22nd of April either at Fernie or Nelson.

The Nelson News aays of Burley, "Nick Burley, champion prize fighter of the Yukon territory, is down from Dawson, and will spend the next few weeks in Nelson. He is open to tackle any exponent of the manly art, weight no consideration. During his stay in Dawson Burley tried conclusions with Frank Slavin and Joe Choynski. The former he knocked out in the ninth round, whilst the latter was disposed of in the second. Burley fights at 160 pounds, but is prepared to meet anyone of heavier weight who thinks he can beat him.

WILL CELEBRATE ON JULY 1ST.

The local Miners' Union is making arrangements to have a grand celebration in Fernie on July 1st. The miners are desirous of the co-operation of the Athletic Association to make this celebration a grand success. The miners of Morrissey and Michel will join forces with their brother unionists here and a special train will be arranged from Frank, Blairmore and Coleman to bring the miners from those camps. The local union is contemplating the erection of a hall for meeting purposes this summer and they hope by this means to raise some money to help defray that expense. The hall will probaby have a second story which will be rented for office purposes.

OFF ON A TECHNICALITY.

Vancouver, April 9.—Mr. Bowser, K.C. found a sufficient number of flaws in the commitment order of one Stancik, of Fernie, to get him out of jail on habeas corpus. The deputy attorney general opposed the proceedings, but Mr. Justice Duff decided that the man should be released immediately without presentation of further order at Nelson. The accused was found guilty of the charge of stealing ten cars of coal, and was sent up for four months by the magistrate at Fernie. The ground of appeal was that the commitment did not disclose the jurisdiction of the magistrate, that the goods were of a value less than $10 and therefore properly to be tried by the magistrate without the consent of the accused. On this and minor irregularities the order was made absolute.

FATALITY AT MICHEL

GEORGE BLAKE, ENGINEER, MET A HORRIBLE DEATH

CAUGHT IN THE BELTING JUST AS HE SAID "OH, IT IS ALRIGHT."

An accident on the tipple at Michel resulted in the sudden death of George Blake last Saturday. Mr. Blake was employed as engineer to run the tipple engine. Joseph Faulkner, a new night engineer, was sent to Blake to get information about his duties on Saturday morning. After the latter had apparently showed all that was necessary, he took the new man up stairs. While there he idly allowed his hand to rub against a large pulley-wheel, called the jack-shaft, very close to its contact with the belting. Faulkner warned him that it was dangerous, to which his companion replied "Oh it is alright." Just as he uttered these words the belt caught his hand, carried him swiftly around the large wheel and landed him with great force against the pit below. When picked up he was found to be terribly bruised and broken. His legs and hips were fractured in several places. He died two hours later, without regaining consciousness.

Coroner Trites was notified and he went to Michel on Saturday evening. After viewing the body and the scene of the accident and getting a sworn statement from Faulkner who was the only witness of the accident and whose story was as related above, the coroner decided that an inquest was unnecessary. The witness said that the wheel was 68 inches in diameter. He could not think of any reason why the deceased put his hand on the wheel unless it was to feel if it was rough. If he had done that on the other side of the wheel where the direction was from the belting there would have been little danger. He considered it a foolish thing to do. The funeral was conducted on Sunday.

The deceased was an Englishman, aged about 26. He was unmarried and came to Michel about 9 months ago.

FERNIE A. A. A. TO ORGANIZE.

Mr. A. H. Cree, secretary of the Fernie Amateur Athletic Association, has given notice of a meeting of that body to re-organize for the coming season. The meeting will take place next Wednesday evening, April 20, in the rear of Mr. Cuthbart's store. Mr. Cree has also intimated that he will not stand for re-election this season. He has served two years as secretary and he finds that he will be unable to continue in that office for another term. The base-ball club has organized. The other clubs, lacrosse and foot-ball should get in line so that the full executive of the association will be known on the night of the meeting.

FIRM IN ADJUSTER'S HANDS.

A commotion was caused in Fernie mercantile circles on Thursday when the doors of B. Bannett were closed and the announcement was posted in the windows that the stock had fallen into the hands of G. E. Stevens & Co., of Chicago, whose business it is to mediate and adjust differences which arise between firms. In this instance the adjusters are understood to have been called in to settle differences between the local firm and eastern parties but a more definite statement could not be secured either from Mr. Bannett or Mr. Swett who arrived Thursday and took charge of the stock.

Shipman's Comedy Company opens its entertainment with a one act play called "Chums" in which Misses Courtney and Keith and Messrs. Harvey and Kenney each take a part. The act is overflowing with sparkling humor and amusement.

The Rawei Family aboriginal natives of New Zealand, gave three delightful entertainments in Princess hall Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday evenings of this week. By means of first class lime light pictures reflected on canvas, they exhibited the wonderful scenery of the South Sea Islands, together with many interesting scenes descriptive of the Maori people. These scenes were accompanied by lectures delivered by Rawei and his talented wife, interspersed by music in the native tongue. Much useful information was gained of these wonderful and far distant islands. Rawei assisted in the church services on Sunday. In the morning he attended the Presbyterian church and in the evening the Methodist church.

IMPERIAL COAL COMPANY

Spokane, April 13.—"We shall commence the development of the Imperial Coal and Coke Company's property in East Kootenay this summer," says Andrew Laidlaw, promoter of the company, who is in this city. Mr. Laidlaw is back from a 10 weeks' trip to Montreal and New York, where he was getting the company under way and arranging for a permanent directorate."

"The holdings of the company," continued Mr. Laidlaw, "include 94 square miles on a block that at its nearest point is seven or eight miles north of the Canadian Pacific at Michel, on the west slope of the main range of the Rockies. The property is held by license, and there is no doubt that crown grants will be issued after the survey of the property and payment of $5 an acre to the British Columbia government. John Brown, Jr., of Spokane, and myself acquired practically all the property a year ago by buying out the locators. We transferred title to the new Imperial Company, formed at Montreal under the Dominion laws. It is registered in British Columbia.

We retain large stock interests and have given option on a control to prominent financial and business men of Montreal and Eastern Canada.

"I have been authorized to spend several thousand dollars on prospecting and as soon as the snow permits will begin opening up faces of coal. According to the estimate of one engineer we have 600,000,000 tons above the level of the valley. The coal is a high grade bituminous and coking coal, similar to that of the Crow's Nest Pass, and there are ten seams of working size. The seams extend from north to south for over 25 miles on the company's area. The seams aggregate 110 feet in width. The eastern people will visit the property in June, and large payments are to be made on their options during the summer."

CARD OF THANKS.

I desire to thank the Miner's Union, the Knights of Pythias, and the Odd-fellows for the sympathy shown to me, and the respect tendered to the body of my beloved husband, at the funeral held in Fernie, on Tuesday, March 29th 1904. I am also greatly indebted to the hotels of Fernie for their aid and kindness. Again citizens one and all accept my sincere thanks for your kindly interest.

Respectfully Yours.
MRS. WM. ANTHONY.

LOCALS CONTINUED

WANTED—$500 for one year. Will pay 20 per cent. Good security. F. C., Box 305, Fernie P. O. x2t

James Elliott received a wire on Sunday that his son Pearson was suffering from an attack of typhoid fever at Leduc Alta. Mrs. Elliott left on the same day to nurse him.

J. A. Hill, of Wolsely, Assin., is visiting his daughter Mrs. Fred Vance this week, and shaking hands with old acquaintances.

Pincher Creek has organized its foot ball club. An effort is being made to form a Crow's Nest League. This ought to find ready support in Fernie.

Fernieites who have enjoyed the pleasure of hearing Bert Harvey in the East are unstinted in their praise of his ability and one and all are determined to hear him again.

Harry Gunn, of Pincher Creek accidently put a 44 calibre revolver bullet through the palm of his hand while out on the range last week rounding up cattle.

"The Matinee Girl" is a society sketch of 15 minutes' duration which closes Shipman's Comedy program. It is a dainty little sketch in which Miss Courtney and Miss Keith never fail to thoroughly captivate their audiences.

A report that one hundred Japanese laborers had been brought into Morrissey by the G. N. R. for construction work has been denied. The party consisted of 27 persons, and they will be employed at repair work.

E. G. Hazell is at Crow's Nest this week where he has decided to go into the lime-kiln business. The lime stone there is said to be of the best quality for that purpose and Mr. Hazell hopes to find ample markets throughout the Crow's Nest and Southern Alberta for his lime.

W. A. Watkins left on Tuesday for Rome where he will continue his studies Mr. Watkins by his courteous manner and bearing has earned for himself many friends in town who wish him God-speed. His successor in the bank is Mr. Darrell, of Kamloops.

HEAVY LOSS FOR JAPS

ACCOUNT OF THE SINKING OF THE HANIEN MARU.

The Japanese Losses in Killed and Wounded Were Much More Serious at Chong Ju Than at First Reported. Russia Buys German Ships.

A report from Tokio is to the effect that Vice-Admiral Togo had made another attack on Port Arthur on the night of March 30-31, but as St. Petersburg had not heard of the report, and as Viceroy Alexieff was at Port Arthur yesterday and reviewed the squadron, the Tokio story probably had no foundation in fact.

That the Japanese losses in killed and wounded in the Chong Ju engagement were more serious than reported in the original despatches seems to be proved by supplementary messages from Corea to St. Petersburg.

The Japanese wounded were conveyed from the field by hundreds of Corean bearers, and so distracted was the Japanese forces that on one occasion the Red Cross flags were hoisted in token of surreader. The Russian cavalry, one despatch stated, was in rather bad condition, and was seen falling back on the Yalu, where it is believed a stand would be made and an issue forced.

From St. Petersburg and Berlin came additional reports in regard to the purchase of a Hamburg-American liner by Russia, the despatches saying that in addition to the Fuerst Bismarck, mentioned yesterday, the sale of the Great Deutschland and the Columbia had been effected.

HANIEN MARU SUNK.

A semi-official despatch from Port Arthur says: Our entire squadron left the harbor March 28, making for Miactas Island. At 11 o'clock the cruiser Novik sighted a steamer towing a Chinese junk. She would not stop until a torpedo boat fired two shots. It was the Japanese steamer Hanien Maru, on board which were found ten Japanese and eleven Chinamen, various papers, telegrams, and maps and two Whitehead torpedoes. The crew was taken on board our ships, after which the vessel was sunk."

DID TOGO AGAIN ATTACK.

An official despatch from St. Petersburg says that up to the present news to confirm the statement sent time the government has received no out by a news agency from Tokio that the Japanese made another attack on Port Arthur during the night of March 30-31.

NEGRO FOR PRESIDENT

American Negroes will Nominate a Candidate for U. S. Presidency.

A despatch from East St. Louis says: W. L. Scott, a negro, has announced that preparations have been completed for a national convention for the nomination of a negro candidate for president in St. Louis on July 6, the date set for the National Democratic convention. The name of the new party is the "National Civic Liberal Party," and a platform will be adopted which, Scott says, will call for government ownership of transportation facilities and a pension list for former slaves. S. P. Mitchell, of Memphis, Tenn., is president of the organization and I. L. Walton, of Washington, D. C., vice-president.

MARKET REPORT.

Weekly Review of Prices Culled From The Commercial.

GRAIN AND PRODUCE.

FLOUR—Trade is light for the time being, as farmers are not able to move about much. There is a fair shipping demand. Ogilvie's mill here is closed down for want of fuel. Wheat is also said to be scarce at the moment, probably because cars cannot be obtained from the country until the railroad lines are clear of snow. We quote: Hungarian Patent, $2.75 per sack of 98 lbs., delivered to the trade; Glenora Patent, $2.60; Strong Bakers, $2.20 and XXXX, $2.00. These prices are subject to the usual trade discounts.

MILLFEED—Bran is temporarily out of the market as mills have none to offer. We quote: Bran, nominally $18 per ton, in bulk, delivered to the trade; shorts, $19 per ton.

GROUND FEED—We quote: Oat chop, $28 per ton, delivered to the trade; barley chop, $22; mixed barley and oats, $25; oil cake, $27 per ton.

OATS—Supplies seem to be ample at the moment, but as demand is good there is no weakness in prices. No. 2 white in carlots on track are worth 38 to 39c. here, and feed grades 36 to 37c. Farmers' loads, in the country, bring 31 to 33c., and on the street here, 35 to 36c.

BARLEY--Malting grades are not offering. Feed barley cannot now be bought here for less than 42 to 43c.

FLAXSEED—Market nominal.

SPELTZ—The market is quiet at 35c. per bushel, delivered here.

BUTTER—Dairy—There is very little dairy butter coming in. A few shippers who have special lines to offer get 25c. per lb. for fresh made rolls or bricks. Fine package butter would bring 15c. here, but round lots are not worth more than 14 and 15c. in a wholesale way.

CHEESE—The market is quiet. Commission houses are getting 13 to 13½c. for Ontario stock and 12½c. to 13c. for Manitoba.

EGGS—Stocks of eggs are very light and the market is quiet. Fresh eggs are bringing 26c. to-day, delivered to the trade, but country shipments of case lots are not quotable at more than 23c., and in the event of receipts improving to any extent the market will go down rapidly.

HIDES—Warm weather is having its customary effect upon the hide business. Country hides, while still coming in frozen, are inclined to be soft. There is danger that a sudden warm wave may spoil shipments of frozen hides coming from a distance. Butchers who have shipments to make should take note of this fact. Those near at hand may, by shipping promptly, save the trouble of salting, but more distant shippers should salt their hides. It is believed that stocks in the country are well cleaned up. Most of the business now coming here is in abattoir hides, which bring 6c. for No. 1's; 5c. for No. 2's, and 4c. for No. 3's. Country hides are much easier at 5 to 5½c. per pound, less usual tare. Brands have been more than ordinarily numerous of late, due to the fact that city butchers have had to send to the ranges for almost all their cattle.

TALLOW—No. 1 tallow is worth 3¾c. per lb. delivered at Winnipeg and No. 2, 2¾c.

SENECA ROOT—The market is nominal, as there is no root moving. A little is held by some city dealers.

LIVE STOCK.

CATTLE—Winnipeg buyers are operating freely in the far west, whence Winnipeg abattoirs are at present drawing their supplies. In the area covered by last week's storm the cattle are in bad shape, and we fear that many have perished. Choice cattle are worth 4 to 4½c. off cars here, and inferior grades ½ to 1c. lessf

Successful Reminder.

A small church was sadly in need of repairs, and a meeting was held with a view to raising funds for the purpose. The minister having said that $500 would be needed, a very wealthy and stingy member arose and said he would give $1. Just as he sat down a large piece of plaster fell from the ceiling and struck him on the head, whereupon he jumped up hastily and said that he had made a mistake, that he would give $50. This was too much for an enthusiastic deacon present, who, forgetful of everything, called out fervently: "O Lord, hit him again! Hit him again!"—Mount Morris (Ill.) Index.

JAPANESE ADVANCE

50,000 MEN NORTH OF SEOUL AT VARIOUS POINTS.

Japs Intend to Effect a Landing at Both Port Arthur and Niu Chwang Where the Russian Resistance Will Be Inconsiderable.

As a result of the great numbers landing at Chinampo, joining the troops dispatched overland, Japan has now 50,000 men north of Seoul. Of these 25,000 are beyond Anju, 10,000 are at Ping Yang and 5,000 remain at Chinampo. Others are distributed along the lines of communication. These comprise the first, second, fourth and twelfth divisions. Anju is occupied and the fortification of the south bank of the Ching Chong river is completed. The ice has broken sufficiently to permit of two temporary bridges being constructed, and some cavalry have been thrown forward, supported by a large body of infantry, which peacefully occupied Pakhun, north of Anju, on March 28th.

The Japanese advance guard caught 600 Russians entrenched at Kong Chu. After several hours of heavy firing the Russians retired northward, taking their wounded with them. The Japanese losses were three killed and ten wounded.

Chong Ju is now occupied by the Japanese cavalry, who are pressing forward. It is not likely that they will encounter the Russians before reaching Wiju. It is stated that the arrival of large bodies of Japanese at Ping Yang will cease after a few days, as it is the intention to effect a landing at Port Arthur and at New Chwang, where Russian resistance will be inconsiderable.

There are great quantities of supplies in the stores on Kidong river; thirty transports in the harbor and nine warshius outside near Ismal Island, where a battery signal station has been established.

TONGHAK UPRISING.

A sudden uprising of Tonghaks has taken place in the neighborhood of Ping Yang. The rebels believe that the ultimate result of the war will be detrimental to Coreans, and therefore it is expedient to organize bands for looting.

DECISIVE MOVE IMMINENT.

Spencer Wilkinson, in the London Morning Post, says that the Yalu river divides the opposing forces, and that the next few days are likely to see the first decisive move of the campaign.

A cablegram to the Chicago Daily News from Tokio says:—"Reliable reports were received here from Seoul to the effect that part of the Japanese fighting line has crossed the Yalu and established itself in strong positions there at several important points."

TREACHEROUS TIBETANS

Fired at British Officers With Whom They Were Parleying.

A dispatch to the London Times from Kalatlo, Thibet, reports that 200 Thibetans at the village of Samonda, in treacherously firing a volley at a party of British officers, whom they had invited to parley with them, aimed badly. No one was injured, but the action is supposed to indicate the tactics which the Thibetans intend to employ at Guru. The correspondent adds that reinforcements are arriving at Gyangtse to oppose the British advance.

Young Celestials Adrift.

A dispatch from Vancouver says:—Five young Chinese, sons of wealthy merchants in Hong Kong, who are being educated here, went out Thursday afternoon in a small boat on Burrard Inlet and have not since been heard of. It is said that only one of them undetstood anything about the management of a boat, and it is thus feared that they have met with disaster and been drowned. A launch was out all day searching for them and returned, not the slightest trace having been found.

Boy Drowned.

Willie MacConochey was thrown from his horse into the river at the Electric Light Company's dam, nine miles west of Brandon, late on Monday night. He was after cattle, and his horse stumbling, he was hurled into the river and drawn under the ice. His father, who was present, attempted to rescue his son, but his efforts were unavailing. The body has not yet been recovered.

LATEST WAR NEWS

What is Being Done By Japanese and Russians.

The Czar has received a dispatch from General Kuropatkin giving a lenghty report from General Mishtchenko, dated at Mukden, which says that an important engagement took place near the town of Chong Ju, in which the Russians were defeated, retiring in perfect order. The Japanese suffered heavily, but the Russian losses are not stated. Cavalry and infantry on both sides were engaged. The Russians occupied a commanding position. The Japanese fought gallantly, but owing to their heavy losses were unable to occupy the position vacated by the Russians.

General Kuropatkin's report is as follows:

I have the honor to respectfully communicate to your majesty the report of General Mishtchenko, dated March 28th, at 10 p.m., which says:

For three consecutive days our small outposts attempted to draw Japanese cavalry into action, but their patrols, after contact was established, retired beyond Chong Ju.

Having learned that four squadrons of the enemy were posted five versts beyond Chong Ju on March 27th, six companies marched towards Kasan, and on March 28th reached Chong Ju at 10.30 a. m. As soon as our scouts approached the town the enemy opened fire from behind the wall. Two squadrons promptly dismounted and occupied the heights 600 yards distant. An engagement ensued.

In the town a company of infantry and a squadron of cavalry were lying in ambush. Our men were reinforced by three companies and attacked the Japanese with a cross-fire. Notwithstanding this and our commanding position, the Japanese gallantly held their ground, and it was only after a fierce fight of half an hour's duration that the Japanese ceased fire and sought refuge in the houses. The Japanese hoisted the Red Cross flag at two points.

Soon afterwards three squadrons of the enemy were seen advancing along the Kasan road at full gallop toward the town, which two of the squadrons succeeded in entering, while the third fell back in disorher under the repeated volleys of our troops. A number of men and horses were seen to fall.

For an hour afterwards our companies continued to fire on the Japanese in the town, preventing them from leaving the streets and houses.

An hour and a half after the beginning of the engagement four companies were seen on the Kasan road, hastening to attack. I gave the order to mount, and the entire force, with a covering squadron, advanced in perfect order and formed in line behind the hill. The wounded were placed in front and the retirement was carried out with the deliberation of a parade.

The Japanese squadron, which was thrown into disorder, was evidently unable to occupy the hill which we had just evacuated, and their infantry arrived too late.

The detachment protecting our rear guards arrived quietly at Kasan, where we halted for two hours in order to give attention to our wounded. Stepanoff and Androonke were shot in the chest andVasevitch in the stomach. Schnilkioff was less seriously wounded in the arm, but did not leave the field. Three Cossacks were killed and twelve were wounded, including five seriously.

General Mishtchenko bears witness to the exceflent conduct and gallantof the officers and Cossacks, and especially praises the third company of the Argunsk regiment, commanded by Krasnostanoff.

TOGO'S STORY IS DIFFERENT.

The Japanese legation at Washington has received from Tokio the following report made by Admiral Togo respecting the second attempt to bottle up the Port Arthur squadron:

About 3.30 a.m. of the 27th of March the "bottling up" squadron, composed of four ships, escorted by a torpedo boat destroyer flotilla and a torpedo boat flotilla, reached the outside of Port Arthur, and, without minding the searchlights of the enemy, steered straight towards the entrance of the harbor. At about two marine leagues from the entrance the squadron was discovered by the enemy. Thereupon the shore batteries and guardships showered hot fire upon the squadron, but in spite of the terrific fire the ships made their way into the inner roadstead one after the other. The steamer Chiyo Maru anchored at a position about half a cable from the Golden Hill, blew itself up and sank. The Fukui Maru passed a little ahead of the Chiyo Maru by its left side, and at the moment when she was lowering anchor was shot by a torpedo from the enemy's destroyers and sunk in that position. Haci Hiko Maru anchored to the left of Fukui Maru and blew up itself and sank.

Yoneyama Maru, colliding with the stern of one of the enemy's torpedo boat destroyers, passed between the Chiyo Maru and Fukui Maru and anchored in the middle of the roadstead. At this moment the ship was shot by a torpedo from the enemy, and consequently, by reason of that torpedo, she was carried toward the left shore and sunk sideways.

The result of the action being as above described, there is some space left between Hachi Hako Maru and Yoneyama Maru. It is a matter of regret that the roadstead could not be completely closed up. The casualties were as follows: Killed, Commander Hirose Takeo, one under officer and two sailors; seriously wounded, Sub-Lieutenant Shimada; slightly wounded, Lieutenant Makasimi, Engineer Kurita and six sailors.

The remainder were safely taken in by our torpedo boat destroyer flotilla and torpedo boat flotilla. Of the torpedo boat flotilla the Oadaka and the Tsubame while escorting the 'bottling up' squadron, and at about one mile from the entrance of Port Arthur, engaged in a fight with one destroyer of the enemy, and inflicted serious damage on her. The enemy's ship retreated, raising an enormous column of steam as if her boiler was broken.

"When all the members of the 'bottling up' squadron had been taken in and our boats withdrew to the outside of the harbor a ship, appearing to be like one of the enemy's was seen at the foot of Golden Hill utterly incapable of navigation.

"Although both our destroyer flotilla and torpedo boat flotilla were subjected to a terrific fire from the enemy until the dawn not the slightest damage was done to any of the boats."

RUSSIAN FORCE SURROUNDED.

Chefoo, March 29.—News came in here to-night of a disaster to a Russian force of infantry and Cossacks yesterday near Chong Ju. The story came dribbling in to Chemulpo last night before the departure of the packet steamer, and there is no clear account of the battle, except that a Russian column, estimated at 1,500, was attempting to escape through the mountains to Manchuria and being caught in the valley of northeast Kasan, made a direct attack on Chong Ju in the hope of escaping by the road west of that town.

The entire Russian force was driven southward toward the Chong Cheng river with heavy loss, and is now surrounded on every side, having water on the west and the Japanese army on the east at Pak Chong, north at Chong Ju, and south at Anju and the towns between that city and Kasan. There is little hope that any of the Russian forces will escape to Manchuria.

APPROACHING CONFLICT ON YALU.

For a week the N. Y. Herald has been the only paper having a correspondent north of Seoul. There are many indications of an approaching contest on the Yalu, the crossing of which is not so serious a matter as hitherto anticipated. A Japanese imperial prince has arrived and has assumed a staff position. The soldiers are enthusiastic that a member of the imperial house should come to share their hardships.

A Story of Whistler.

One day Whistler entered the atelier of his class in Paris and found that a red background had been arranged behind the model. At once he directed something of a duller tone to be substituted, and he scraped the red paint off the canvas of one of the pupils, putting in its place another background. But the red would show through. He scraped, studied and worked laboriously to get something that pleased him. The rest of the class surrounded the easel and eagerly watched the master. He looked up finally and said, "I suppose you know what I am trying to do?" "Oh, yes, sir!" they all chorused. "Well, it's more than I do," he replied grimly and left the place.

What Puzzled Him.

A well known clubman entered a police station and said to the sergeant, "I would like to have an interview with that burglar you arrested for breaking into my house last night." Sergeant—I don't know that I can allow you unless you first tell me what you want to see him about. Mr. Clubman—Oh, there's nothing secret about it. I just wanted to find out how he got into my house so easily; it's more than I can do at night.

Cheerful and Hopeful.

The men whom I have seen succeed best in life, says Charles Kingsley, have always been cheerful and hopeful men, who went about their business with a smile on their faces and took the changes and chances of their normal life like men, facing rough and smooth alike as it came, and so found the truth of the old proverb that "good times and bad times and all times pass over."

How Cigar Dealers Lose Custom.

"This may be a good cigar," said a man as he puffed at it, standing for a moment in the shop, "but I don't seem to relish it. Guess my stomach's a trifle off."

"That's just the way it is," remarked the philosophic tobacconist. "About 200 persons come into this store every day. Some of them spend $10 a week with me for cigars, and others don't spend $2. I lose a certain amount of this trade every week not because I keep inferior goods, but when smokers get a bit out of condition and the cigars don't taste as good as usual they will blame the cigars, and off they go to another shop.

"But it works about the same way with all. My dissatisfied customers go to some other man's store, and other men's dissatisfied customers come to me. So it evens up in the end. Out of every ten strangers who drop in here for the first time to buy a cigar I know by experience that I can count on one or two of them becoming regulars."

To Lose Flesh.

To reduce the flesh one must have the fortitude to give up a number of the pleasant things of life, for a time at least, and many of them for good and all. One must, first of all, become an early riser and not sleep longer than seven hours. Before finishing the morning toilet exercise for twenty minutes with Indian clubs, dumbbells or wands. For breakfast take no cereal, coffee or milk, but tea, not too strong, fruit and toast. Sugar is a fat producer; so also are bread and all farinaceous dishes. Not more than half a glass of liquid should be taken at any meal. For luncheon partake of stewed or raw fruit, a salad dressed with vinegar and oil, green vegetables and a chop. For dinner the bill of fare can comprise fish, mutton, lamb, lean beef, vegetables, especially tomatoes and beans, stale bread and a light dessert.

ROUTED THE COSSACKS.

The Seoul correspondent of the London Daily Mail says that in an engagement on March 23rd, which took place between Japanese soldiers and Cossacks, between Anju and Chong Ju, the Japanese were victorious but lost fifty killed.

TOGO WILL TRY AGAIN.

Officers, both German and English, believe that the army board in Tokio is anxious to see the Russian fleet bottled up at Port Arthur before the soldiers go west of Port Arthur in force, and that Admiral Togo will make another effort without delay. If he should then fail, army movements undoubtedly will begin in any event, as every day of delay now for Japan will increase the obstacles which it will have to overcome in the invasion of Manchuria.

JAPS FEAR RUSSIAN FLEET.

It is believed at St. Petersburg that the Japanese are bombarding Port Arthur with such persistence because they are desperately anxious to land a large body of troops at some point near New Chwang, and that, fearing the Russian fleeet, they are at their wits' end how to proceed with the enterprise.

SILENT FAMOUS MEN

CELEBRITIES THAT HAVE BEEN NOTED AS MISERS OF WORDS.

Some of the World's Greatest Characters Have Been as Sparing of Language as They Have Been Prodigal of Deeds of Renown.

It is a curious and interesting fact that many of the world's greatest men have been as sparing of words as they have been prodigal of deeds.

It is doubtful if there ever lived a more taciturn man than Wallenstein, the famous commander of the Austrian army during the thirty years' war. It is said of Wallenstein that he "lived in an atmosphere of silence" and never uttered a word that was not absolutely necessary, nor would he permit others to speak in his presence more than was essential. One of his chamberlains was hanged for waking Wallenstein with needless noise. His servants were so many mutes, not daring to open their lips in his presence, and he was surrounded by patrols, and the approaches to his house were barricaded by chains to preserve him from the least disturbance. In comparison with Wallenstein, it has been recorded, Diogenes would have been a chatterbox and William the Silent a brawler.

But silence is a characteristic of many of the world's most famous soldiers. Napoleon boasted that in his dealings with men he never wasted a word and made monosyllables answer most purposes. But nothing escaped his eyes, and he could compress more within a sentence than most men could convey in a quarter of an hour.

The great Duke of Marlborough when receiving reports from his generals would produce his watch and say, "I will give you a minute." And it was likely to go hard with the officer who did not observe the limitation. To his staff the Duke of Wellington was always more or less a sphinx. A nod or a shake of the head was often the only response they could get from him, and when once he was asked what he considered the best equipment of a commander he answered, "A long head and a silent tongue."

Von Moltke almost rivaled Wallenstein in taciturnity. He never opened his mouth if a gesture would suffice, and when the news was brought to him that the French had declared war he simply said to the aid-de-camp, "Second pigeonhole on the right, first tier," and turned round to sleep again. But he had said all that was necessary, for in the pigeonhole indicated were complete plans for the campaign which closed in brilliant victory. Von Moltke used to say that one verb in the German language was worth all the others put together, and that was "thun"—"to do."

The worst thing his enemies could say of President Grant was, "He won't talk because he has so much to conceal," and yet it was precisely in this silence that Grant's real strength lay. His orders and dispatches were the briefest ever penned, and when once a charming young lady playfully asked him why he would not talk to her he answered, "My dear, don't you know that silence is one of the greatest arts of conversation?"

But it has been the same in all ages. Charlemagne was a perfect miser of words, holding, with Confucius, that "silence is a friend that will never betray;" Hannibal was a "man of monosyllables," and Julius Cæsar was nicknamed by his soldiers "The Oracle."

Even great statesmen and writers who cannot suffer from any lack of words have often been among the most reserved of men. Of Addison, Johnson says, "Of his external manners nothing is so often mentioned as that timorous or sullen taciturnity which his friends called modesty by too mild a name." According to Chesterfield, he was "the most timorous and awkward man I ever saw," and even Addison himself, speaking of his own deficiency in conversation, used to say, "I can draw bills for a thousand pounds, though I haven't a guinea in my pocket."

Dryden was unutterably dreary as a companion. "My conversation is slow," he once wrote, "my humor saturnine and reserved, and I am none of those who endeavor to break jests in company and make repartees." And Shadwell tells how he once dined with Dryden, and from the beginning to the end of the meal the poet "never opened his lips except to eat."

Thomas Carlyle was a "hoarder of the gold of silence" and would sit for hours, puffing away at his pipe, without uttering more than a grunt or a gruff monosyllable. Leigh Hunt, his neighbor and intimate, once wrote to a friend: "Have just spent a pleasant hour with Carlyle. When I went in he growled, 'Halloa; here again!' and at parting he snapped out, 'Good day!' and that is the sum of the conversation he honored me with. But how eloquent his silence is! I just sat and looked at him and came away strengthened for fresh struggle."

A Blustering King.

Of King George IV. Thomas Creevey, who lived in the early part of the nineteenth century, tells this story:

The king had appointed the bishop of Winchester to administer to him the sacrament on one of the Sundays about Easter. The bishop was not punctual to his time, and when he arrived the king, in a great passion at having been kept waiting, abused and even swore at him in the most indecent manner, on which the bishop very coolly said he must be permitted to withdraw, as he perceived his majesty was not then in a fit state of mind to receive the sacrament, and should be ready to attend on some future day, when he hoped to find his majesty in a better state of preparation.

SHAKE OFF THAT SPRING FEELING

Dodd's Kidney Pills Will Do It Naturally and Well.

Cause and Cure of the "Tired Feeling That is Epidemic at This Season of the Year.

The spring is here. You can feel it in every part of your body. Your clothes are too heavy and though you are not sick, you are too tired to walk, too tired to work, yes, even too tired to eat.

It's that "spring feeling."

Do you know the cause of it? No, all you want to know is how to get rid of it. Well, the explanation and the cure are alike simple.

In the winter you "get used" to the cold, you think. As a matter of fact it is the body that gets prepared. It puts on a fortification of extra tissue that keeps the cold out. In the spring time this tissue is thrown off by the body and if the system is all in good working order, the blood carries away the cast-off tissue, which is in turn filtered out of the blood by the Kidneys, and expelled from the body.

This means extra work for the Kidneys, and if they are at all tired or worn they fail in their work. The result is clogged circulation and that tired spring feeling.

The cure is to tone up the Kidneys with Dodd's Kidney Pills. Dodd's Kidney Pills make healthy Kidneys. Healthy Kidneys quickly cleanse the blood of all impurities and the "spring feeling" is replaced with a vigor of body and buoyancy of spirit that makes work a pleasure.

THE DESPISED TOAD.

POPULAR HATRED OF THE ANIMAL IS OF GREAT ANTIQUITY.

In Legendary as Well as In Superstitious Lore the Uncouth and Misshapen Creature Plays No Small Part—The Belief In Toad Stones.

The unfortunate toad has from time immemorial been an object of distrust and aversion, especially among the common people. A pleasing tale runs that a gentleman, walking along a country lane, came suddenly upon a village boy belaboring the crushed body of a toad with a heavy stick and exclaiming at each blow, "I'll larn 'e to be a toad!" whereat the indignant newcomer, seizing the miscreant by his collar, vigorously applied a cane to his legs, remarking, "I'll larn you to be a boy!" The popular hatred of the toad, indeed, is of such antiquity and is still so general as to seem ineradicable. That the creature is not dangerously poisonous it is hopeless to attempt to convince the ordinary rustic. Doubtless this belief has its origin in the acrid secretion which the toad has the power of emitting when disturbed or annoyed unduly and which will cause a dog that has incautiously picked up a toad to foam at the mouth. Again, the uncouth appearance of the creature has had much to do with the feeling of repulsion with which it has always been regarded. "Squat like a toad" is the phrase by which Milton describes the evil one essaying to reach the ear of Eve.

Superstition, in truth, has laid a firm hold on the toad's misshapen figure. The belief, not only in the existence of "toad stones," but in their efficacy as a sovereign remedy for certain ills, which is still common in parts of the country, is of very ancient date. "There is to be found in the heads of old and great toads," says Fenton, writing in 1569, "a stone they call borax, or stelon, which, being used as rings, gives forewarning of venom." In the Londesborough collection is a silver ring of the fifteenth century in which one of these toad stones is set. They were supposed always to bear on their surface a figure resembling a toad, being somewhat similar trinkets, one may imagine, to the scarabæus ornament of the Egyptians. Another early writer remarks, "A toad stone called 'crepandia,' touching any part envenomed by the bite of rat, wasp, spider or other venomous beast, ceases the pain and swelling thereof." It was believed that when brought near to poison the stone sweated and changed color, thus conveying to its wearers a timely warning of danger.

It is to these peculiar amulets that Shakespeare is supposed to refer in "As You Like It:"

Sweet are the uses of adversity,
Which, like the toad, ugly and venomous,
Wears yet a precious jewel in his head.

Is it not probable, however, that the poet, being a poet, is here alluding to the eye of the toad, an object, as all who are really familiar with the appearance of this humble batrachian will agree, than which there are few more beautiful in nature?

Perhaps the most familiar superstition in regard to toads is that, still rife, which supposes them capable of existing for an indefinite period in the interior of rocks, stones or hermetically sealed cavities. Numberless "authentic instances" of this remarkable power have been brought forward from time to time. The following example from an old book is typical: "In 1793 Mr. George Wilson, a mason, met with a toad, which he wantonly immured in a stone wall that he was then building. In the middle of the wall he made a close cell of lime and stone, just fit for the magnitude of its body and seemingly so plastered as to prevent the admission of air. In 1809, sixteen years afterward, it was found necessary to open a gap in this wall for a passage of carts, when the poor creature was found alive in its stronghold. It seemed at first in a very torpid state, but it soon recovered animation and activity and, as if sensible of the blessings of freedom, made its way to a collection of stones and disappeared." It is known that toads can exist for a long time without food, and it is generally believed that they live to a great age, and doubtless these two peculiarities have had much to do with the superstition in regard to their supposed penchant for a hermit's life. The fallacy, however, was completely exposed by Dean Buckland, father of Frank Buckland, the great naturalist, who went to the trouble of testing the truth of the theory by an exhaustive series of experiments. It need only be remarked that none of his victims survived the incarceration.

In legendary as in superstitious lore the toad plays no small part. It may not be generally known that the fleur-de-lis of France was originally in shape a toad. Thus at least runs the tale. Clovis, king of France, bore on his banner the device of three toads, or "botes," as they were called in old French. His baptism gave great umbrage to the Arians, who rebelled and assembled a large host against him under King Candat. Clovis while on his way to meet the heretics was granted a vision, wherein he saw in the heavens his device of three toads miraculously changed into three lilies "or" on a banner "azur." Such a banner he caused instantly to be made, calling it his "liflambe."—London Globe.

Pedicuring an Elephant.

The tools for trimming elephants' feet are a carpenter's drawknife and a rasp for the soles and a horseshoer's knife and sandpaper for the toe nails. The operator places a beer keg or a strong box behind one huge hind foot, lightly prods the thick ankle with his elephant hook and commands the beast to "Hold up!" Up comes the mighty foot, slowly and heavily, but obediently as the velvety paw of a kitten. The foot is rested on the box or the keg, where it remains while the expert works on it much as a horseshoer pares the hoof of a horse. Great slivers of the horny sole are sliced off until it is cut nearly to proper thickness, when the rasp is used to smooth off. Similarly the toe nails are treated with the knife and the sandpaper, while the big patient stands with swinging trunk and an occasional wag of an ear, too full of satisfaction for utterance. When the turn of the forefoot comes, the great beast is made to lie down on its side and the hoofs are propped up and treated.—McClure's.

A Bird That Is Feared.

The elster (Pica candata) is a bird that is respected and feared throughout south Germany. It belongs to the raven tribe and is about the size of a dove, with black and white feathers and long, pointed tail. It builds its nest in orchards, and its life is sacred. If it is seen three times in succession on the same house top in a place remote from its home it is believed to be a sure sign of death in that house. If it flies and gives its peculiar cry the sick person is sure to die, but if it does not scream the patient may recover. It is better for the sick person if the bird does not come near. No one could be hired to bother these birds for fear they might seek revenge, and if by chance one of them should die it is a sign of bad luck to the owner of the property where it is found. The bird is a valuable insect destroyer and in this way probably more than compensates for the fear it occasions among the farmers.

IT is not to be expected that all the news from St. Petersburg is to be depended upon. The officials at the Russian capital have never enjoyed the reputation of being overburdened with candor, and the sinking of the Petropal vosk is not a cheery subject for a censor to let go. The czar lost his ideal commander and eight hundred men, and although it is given out by Russians that the ship struck a mine, the chances are the London Times is correct when it states on its editorial page that a Japanese torpedo did the damage. The little fellows have not got forty-two vessels outside Port Arthur for target practice.

ADMIRAL MAKAROFF'S death is not only a serious loss to Russia but a distinct gain to Japan. A strict disciplinarian, of undoubted courage, he knew more about Japanese strategy and naval tactics than any man that the Russians have. He will be succeeded by Vice Admiral Skrydloff commander of the Black Sea fleet.

Mrs. J. G. Cummiugs, of Ft. Steele, died on Tuesday, a few days after giving birth to a child. Mr. Cummings has the heartfelt sympathy of many friends in this district in his great loss.

A snow slide swept a work train off the track at Albert Canyon on Monday and four were instantly killed. One was Thomas Downie, trainmaster, who was a brother of William Downie, formerly superintendent of the Kootenay division.

Mr. Jas. A. Macdonell and Miss Maud Cameron, sister of Lady Barionot were married at Ottawa on Tuesday. Mr. and Mrs. McDonnell it is understood, will make their home in Fernie. Their many friends in Fernie extend hearty congratulations.

Owing to the fact that the 23rd is Saturday Shipman's Comedy Co. will not commence their program until 9 o'clock. The train for Coal Creek will leave Fernie at 11:30 instead of 11 and an extra coach will be supplied to accommodate the crowd.

Arthur Sampson, sanitary officer, has been serving notices to householders in the town to clean up their back yards. The time of the year has arrived when this matter must be attended to and Mr. Sampson hopes that his warning will be promptly acted upon.

Rev. Dr. Herdman, superintendent of Missions, came up from Macleod on Tuesday and was the guest of Rev. D. L. Gordon for the day. The reverend gentleman is arranging to secure a Presbyterian minister for the Michel field and it is expected that Rev. W, Douglas, of Little Harbor, N.S., will be stationed there.

Rev. W. E. Kaneen left suddenly on Saturday morning for the coast where his wife and family are living. The reverend gentleman is yet undecided whether he will remain here for the summer or proceed to Tasmania where he intended going when he left the east. If he decides upon the latter course he will sail on the 29th inst.

The train service of the past week has been affected by the warm weather which has caused numerous slides, but no serious delays have yet occurred over the Crow line. The main line is blocked at Albert Canyon and all the traffic has gone over the Crows Nest for three days past. A slide at Kitchener delayed the east bound several hours on Sunday and again last evening the two sections went through at midnight. The west bound trains have been blocked at Swift Current. To-day's trains are held there and will not be through until evening. Reports from West Kootenay indicate that many slides are seriously handicapping transportation companies. The Princess hall seats are selling rapidly. Persons desirous of hearing Shipman's celebrated Comedians should lose no time in securing seats. Plan at Bleasdell's Drug Hall.

CUPID AND THE COMET

By ANNA S. RICHARDSON

Copyright, 1903, by T. C. McClure

It had been bad enough, said the cowboys, to have Buena Vista county turned into a rendezvous for invalids in various stages of hay fever, bronchitis and consumption. It was an outrage to have one's favorite barroom remodeled into a sanitarium, but it was heaping insult upon injury to have a twenty-five horsepower French racer flashing over roads—and good roads, too—long sacred to the festive cow pony.

With Harvey Thatcher, owner of said racer, the good roads surrounding Fort Norton, the county seat of Buena Vista county, had been the main attraction. When his physicians had ordered Colorado air, Thatcher had stipulated that section of eastern Colorado where the roads would permit him to break the already brilliant record of the Comet. And so it happened that he and his machine, his valet and his chauffeur, were thorns in the flesh of the cowboy element, even as the latter had worried the respectable faction among the early citizens of Fort Norton.

The cowboys had barely become accustomed to the presence of the Comet in their midst and had decided that it might prove dangerous to shoot up a gasoline engine when there arose fresh cause for dissatisfaction. Nan Bearce took to riding in the Comet. And Nan was the prettiest girl in Buena Vista county, or all the adjoining counties, for that matter. She had been the toast of every camp on the range, the belle at every ball, the queen of every county fair tournament in which the cowboys had fought for honors after their own peculiar fashion. Her favors had been evenly distributed, and her devotion had gone to her worthless father, who ran the one shoe shop of which Fort Norton could boast. A dilapidated, evil smelling den he kept at the end of the street leading north from the postoffice, but the three rooms behind the shop were as fresh and sweet as Nan's stout arms and sunshiny nature could keep them.

There were men, dozens of them, in Buena Vista county who would have been willing to overlook the father, miserable, drunken wretch that he was, for love of the girl, but she seemed too proud to foist the old man on any of her anxious suitors. The only favor she had ever been known to accept was at the hands of Ben Heth, a stolid, almost morose young ranchman, who had started into the stock raising business in a small way and who held himself aloof from the rollicking, roistering element which had terrorized Fort Norton at regular intervals. When old Bearce had been smitten with smallpox Heth, under cover of darkness, had removed him to his own ranch because of Nan's horror of the pesthouse, and the three had endured the relentless quarantine together. Then the intimacy had apparently been broken off, old Bearce going back to his bench, Nan to her poverty stricken life and Heth to his lonely existence on the cattle range.

All this was before Thatcher and the Comet came to Fort Norton. After old Bearce had skillfully mended some rents in Thatcher's leather robes the friendship between the dashing young automobilist from New York and the humble and beautiful daughter of the village shoemaker became town gossip. Women discussed it over their back fences and at the sewing circle of the Union church. Men shook their heads around the stove at Gilbert's general store, and the news spread out on the range. Thatcher was making a fool of Nan Bearce, and there were mutterings that boded ill for the owner of the Comet. The only man who declined to discuss the situation was Ben Heth and that even after Nan and young Thatcher had ridden out to his ranch twice in the devil's wagon, as one old woman called it. To be sure, the chauffeur was in attendance, but what was a chauffeur perched up in the back seat with Nan—enticing, alluring Nan—her soft, brown hair tossed by the wind, her eyes dancing with the excitement of the run, urging the young New Yorker on to higher speed?

Once they had been seen coming back to town at a slow pace, with Ben trying to keep his astonished pony within talking distance of the machine. Parties who had witnessed the scene reported it variously. Some said that Ben appeared to enjoy the proceeding, more fool he, while others maintained that he was berating Nan for unfaithfulness, even in the presence of his rival.

But Ben's love affair was utterly forgotten in the face of more momentous events which came with the roundup. The H. O. Cattle company, with which Ben had worked before branching out for himself, discovered what it chose to designate as a shortage in H. O. calves and a corresponding and suspicious increase in calves with the Heth brand. The H. O. brand was a bar with an O on the end. The Heth brand was a dumbbell. Rumor—and rumor in Buena Vista county is an ugly customer—declared that it was easy to change the bar-O to the dumbbell. The air around Fort Norton became rife with things other than mere rumors, including some very bad whisky. And justice, as drink crazed cow punchers sometimes see it, works with appalling suddenness.

Rumors travel faster than half drunken cow punchers who stop at each saloon to drown their threats in bad whisky, and a twenty-five horsepower machine will travel faster than either. That was why the mob that had started out to hang Ben Heth as a sort of climax for the annual roundup came upon the Comet, its owner, his valet and his chauffeur two miles beyond Heth's ranch. They were still hunting for Heth, after having razed his ranch cabin. The Comet was piled high with luggage, a couple of dress suit cases showing above the boxes, and rubber blankets, which filled in the body of the machine. Thatcher explained in a casual way that he was trying some new roads and might be gone a week or more. The cowboys sent him on his way with a volley of shots. They were bent on more serious work.

The Comet shot along the country road, through the soft twilight and the limpid moonlight, straight across the state line into Nebraska. At precisely the same time the Overland limited was carrying a white faced but determined girl over the same state line.

Thatcher insisted upon giving away the bride and receiving the first kiss after the ceremony. He said it was due for excess baggage on the best run the Comet had ever made. Then the great red machine, its owner, his chauffeur and his valet rolled back to Fort Norton without the impressive array of luggage, and Harvey Thatcher, tenderfoot, from New York, announced that when a certain bunch of unmitigated fools had finished their annual spree and had recounted their blankety blank calves the bride and groom would come back to Fort Norton, at which time the damages claimed by said groom for injury done his property and his reputation would be paid or the sheriff of Buena Vista county and one Harvey Thatcher, Esq., would know the reason why, whereupon said Harvey Thatcher promptly rose in the estimation of the cowboy element, and his horseless vehicle was forgiven him.

What We Find In Old Schoolbooks.

Along with the writing in old schoolbooks there is more or less drawing. The very early books sometimes have fly leaf sketches of Indians and log houses. The later books, says Leslie's Monthly, have houses of more modern sort, and you find rude drawings of steamboats, horses, birds, flowers, faces and the like. Often a penny or other coin was slipped under the fly leaf and the surface of the paper covering the coin was rubbed with a piece of lead from the schoolboy's pocket or the blunt end of a pencil.

The children had numerous methods for defacing their schoolbooks, and they also had certain devices for keeping them in good order. Many of the older books are protected by an outer cover of sheepskin neatly folded in at the edges and sewed in place with homespun tow. After 1825 this outer covering was apt to be calico, and sometimes there were tie strings attached to the sides. The girls were addicted to the use of a "thumb paper" folded and slipped in where the thumb rested when the book was in use.

Her Opinion.

He was very badly gone in love indeed, as may be judged by the fact that he sat up till the wee sma' hours and nibbled two inches off a pen in composing the following epic:

Beautiful one with eyes so blue,
Oh, how my fond heart sighs for you!
Sweet spirit, listen to me now,
Hear once again my ardent vow!

There was about two feet six inches of this soul inspiring verse, and he sent it to the object of his adoration, with a request that she would express an opinion on its merits. He got it.

Dear Mr. Theodore Hopkins—You ask me for my opinion of your verses. I do not like to hurt your feelings, but if you will read the initial letters of the first four lines downward I may say that you express my sentiments exactly. Yours very truly, MABEL BROWNE.

And when Theodore strung the first four letters together he pondered bitterly.—London Telegraph.

The Harm Noise Does.

Noise is an undoubted factor in impairing the tone of the nerve centers. Whether we are conscious of it or not, it burts the brain and has a deafening, dazing, bewildering effect on the mental processes. It tires the brain and tends to produce cerebral hyperemia. To live in a noisy atmosphere is to shorten one's day. Irritability, neurasthenia, insomnia, are common effects. The tympanum, or drum membrane, of the ear is injured, the circulation of the cerebro spinal fluid is disturbed and the nerve cells themselves suffer as though subjected to mechanical violence.—Family Doctor.

SOLAR HEAT WAVES.

The Sun and the Hot Stove Pour Out the Same Kind of Energy.

So far as I know no reasons at all for doubting the high temperature of the central body of the solar system have ever been found. There are in general three distinct ways in which heat can be transferred from one body to another—conduction, convection and radiation. The first two are dependent upon the presence of matter. The latter will take place across a perfect vacuum.

We may receive heat from a stove by all three methods. If we place our hands upon it we receive heat by conduction; if we hold them above it they are warmed by convection, the heat being brought to them by the rising current of hot air; if now we stand in front of the stove we still feel its warmth, the sensation in this case being produced by the heat waves which it emits. These waves are similar to the electric waves used in wireless telegraphy, differing from them only in their length. They bear the same relation to them as the ripples on a mill pond bear to the Atlantic rollers. With the instruments at our disposal at the present time we can measure the length of these waves as accurately as we can measure the length of a table with a footrule, and we can prove that they will pass through a vacuum, a plate of glass or a tank full of liquid air without losing their ability to warm our hands. We find, however, that if we pass this radiant heat through certain substances—water vapor, for instance—its intensity is diminished owing to the fact that some of the waves have been absorbed. It is possible to determine the exact length of the waves of heat which have been removed by absorption in the vapor, and if we test the radiation which comes to us from the sun we find that waves of this same length are absent, the water vapor in the earth's atmosphere having refused to transmit them. This fact, taken alone, is pretty good evidence that the sun and the hot stove are pouring out the same kind of energy.—R. W. Wood in Harper's Weekly.

CHINESE PROVERBS.

A vain woman is to be feared, for she will sacrifice all for her pride.

A woman without children has not yet the most precious of her jewels.

A haughty woman stumbles, for she cannot see what may be in her way.

A woman desirous of being seen by men is not trustworthy. Fear her glance.

Respect always a silent woman. Great is the wisdom of the woman that holdeth her tongue.

Trust not the woman that thinketh more of herself than another. Mercy will not dwell in her heart.

A mother not spoken well of by her children is an enemy of the state. She should not live within the kingdom's wall.

A woman that respects herself is more beautiful than a single star; more beautiful than many stars at night.

The Tables Turned.

A story is told of a high Indian officer who was in the habit of soundly thrashing his servants when they displeased him. One day he ordered his khansamah to go to a summer house in the compound and wait for him there, presently turning up with a heavy horsewhip. He then addressed the offender:

"Now, you scoundrel, I've got you in a place where no one can hear, and I'll just thrash you within an inch of your life!"

The servant, though a man of powerful physique, squirmed, native-like. "Sah, you sure no one can hear?"

"Yes, you scoundrel; I've brought you here on purpose!"

"Then, sah, I think I thrash you!" And he did it so thoroughly that his master was not visible for a week.

The Humorous Suabians.

"Next to the Americans," said Max Nordau, "I think that the Suabians are the most humorous people in the world. A Suabian if he has nothing funny to say keeps silent. Stupidity is unknown among this race.

"One night in Suabia in my early youth I called on a Suabian maiden. She was very pretty. Perhaps I stayed longer than I should. Suddenly, at any rate, the young girl's mother called in a loud voice from upstairs:

"'Gretchen! Gretchen!'

"'Yes, mother,' Gretchen answered.

"'Gretchen, it is very cold here. Will you ask that young man to shut the front door from the outside?'"

An Unselfish Husband.

Conjurer (pointing to his cabinet)—Ladies and gentlemen, I now call your attention to the great illusion of the evening. I will ask any lady in the audience to step on the stage and enter the cabinet. I will then close the door. When I open it again, the lady will have disappeared, leaving no trace. Husband (to his wife)—Matilda, my love, do oblige the gentleman and walk up.—London Telegraph.

Always Had It.

"Has your husband a birthmark or anything of that kind by which he may be identified?" asked the detective.

The deserted wife reflected a moment.

"Yes, sir," she said. "He has a sort of hangdog look on his face, and it was born with him, I guess."

Ready For It.

Professor Longhair—It has been demonstrated beyond question that this continent is sinking. Miss De Style—Oh, well, we've got a yacht.—New York Weekly.

EASTER DAY SERMON

NEW AND BEAUTIFUL SETTING FOR THE OLD, OLD STORY.

FOUNDATION OF OUR FAITH

Simple and Unlearned Can Learn the Great Lessons of the Anniversary of Our Risen Lord in the Words of the Text: "And Their Eyes Were Opened, and They Knew Him, and He Vanished Out of Their Sight."

Entered according to Act of Parliament of Canada, in the year 1901, by William Baily, of Toronto, at the Dep't of Agriculture, Ottawa.

Los Angeles, Cal., April 3.—In this sermon the Easter story receives a new and beautiful setting, which appeals equally to the simple and the learned. The text is Luke xxiv, 31, "And their eyes were opened, and they knew him, and he vanished out of their sight."

This is Easter day. The lessons with which the anniversary is fraught are at the very foundation of our faith. They are so momentuous that the imagination is overwhelmed by their import. The facts are few, but how vital, how significant they are! Let us try to look at them from a different standpoint from that to which we are accustomed. Transporting ourselves in thought to the city of Jerusalem on that eventful day we hear rumors about the sitting of the Sanhedrin, at which the humble Nazarene was condemned, but we pay no attention to them. I listen not to the excited reports flying everywhere that the high priest and his hirelings and the officers of the law, led by the Apostate Judas, had captured Christ in the garden of Gethsemane. I mingle not with the multitudes that are crowding the courtroom, in which Pilate is the judge and Jesus the prisoner. I gaze not at the awful scene when Christ hung upon the cross and his dying lips parted in their last agony. I go not with Mary down among the lilies to the tomb on the first Easter morn. But when the sunshiny of Easter afternoon has bathed the Judaean hills in great waves of light I would point you to a couple of pedestrians wending their way from the Jerusalem capital toward the little village of Emmaus. As these two ordinarily dressed men walk on I see them accosted by a third traveler, who appeared over the hills. And now, as these three come nigh to the village, I would see them enter a humble home. Then, while they are at supper, I would show you why the stranger revealed himself to these two disciples as the risen Christ.

Easter afternoon's revelation in the first place, comes as a welcome encouragement to all those who are earnestly and prayerfully trying to increase their faith by reaching out for more light. It comes as a divine demonstration that the prayer of a broken hearted father once made to Christ, "Lord, I believe; help thou mine unbelief," is one of the most beautiful and yet humble prayers of earnest beseechment. It is a holy inspiration that though we sometimes in spiritual life have to walk as a blind man feels his way along, step by step, yet if we go on trustfully and prayerfully and hopefully Christ, after awhile, will reveal himself to us in all his glory.

Why do I entertain this hope? I find ground for it in the fact that one of the earliest appearances of Christ on this first Easter day was to the two men who had doubted the fact of his resurrection. Christ, when upon earth, dealt with men as we deal in our loves with our kith and kin. Supposing that I was a young man and had gone off to a four years' war. Supposing after a long series of adventures I should come back to my native town. Who would be the first person I should want to see? Would I wish to go and call first upon my school friends or upon a merchant in whose store I used to work as a clerk? Would I care first to see my old society friends and the boys with whom I used to play baseball in the village lots? Oh, no! If I was a young man the person whom I would honor first with a visit would be my mother and then my father and my sisters. If I was a married man the first person I would honor after my return home would be my wife and then my children.

After important absence we always seek first those whom we would honor the most. Whom did Christ first seek after his resurrection? Was it the gentle John, or the brave Luke, or Mary, the widowed mother, or Matthew, who sat at the seat of custom, or James, or the steadfast Lazarus? Oh, no. The first person whom Christ honored after the resurrection was the sinful but the repentant Mary. The next persons whom he honored with his divine presence on the first Easter day were the two disciples on the Emmaus road, who were honest doubters. These two men had seen the crucifixion. They had heard the wonderful report of Mary from the tomb. They knew the tomb had been emptied of Christ's body, but they could not understand how the miracle could have taken place. Christ appeared straightway unto them. Oh, ye honest doubters, do not despair. Hold fast to your belief, though it be small. Plead. Pray. Keep on seeking for more divine light, and Christ will some day reveal himself to you all as he once revealed himself to his two troubled disciples on that Easter afternoon in the Emmaus village.

I have always been very thankful that Christ made this revelation on Easter day to the two honest doubters at the Emmaus village. Ah, my friends, the honest doubter ought to have our sympathy instead of our execration. Some people by natural mental construction always must have a fact proved to them before they are willing to believe. They do not realize that "faith is the evidence of things not seen." They always demand the evidence.

Certain minds naturally demand sight of the golden links which bind together the great laws of cause and effect. A friend one summer evening turned to John Tyndall, the famous British physicist, and said, "Tyndall, can you behold such a sublime Alpine sunset as this and not feel that there is a God?"

"Oh," he answered, "I feel it. I feel it as much as any man can feel it, and I rejoice in it, but the trouble is I cannot prove it." Ah, yes, there are many doubters who doubt honestly about the resurrection of Jesus Christ. There are scores of men who cannot explain how all these things happened. But, my friends, on this Easter day, if you will only reach out for more light as did the two honest doubters of the Emmaus road Christ will ultimately reveal himself. But, ye honest doubters, mark this: There are two ways to doubt. The wrong way is to let your doubts, as did Tyndall, obscure the divine revelation, which you may have for the asking. The honest way to doubt is to hold firmly to the divine revelations you have, with your mind open to receive newer and fuller revelation, which will surely come to you and in the end banish all your doubts. If you are an honest doubter stand this day by the emptied tomb of a risen Christ and say, "Lord, I believe; help thou mine unbelief."

Easter afternoon's revelation, in the next place, came to these two doubters when on their way to their own homes. Who were these two men? We don't know. But when reading carefully the Scripture lines we are led to suppose that they were among the inhabitants of this little village of Emmaus, which was about sixty stadia, or seven and one-half miles, distant from the Jerusalem capital. In other words, these two disciples of Jesus Christ were villagers. When they heard that their Lord and Saviour was to be tried for his life they immediately went down to the capital to see if they could help him. There they stayed through the awful scenes of the crucifixion. But when the crucifixion was over, and their tears of sympathy had mingled with those of Mary, the mother, and the strange reports of Mary Magdalene had been reported to them, they had to return to their home duties. And while they were going back home to look after the farm stock and take care of the crops Christ appeared unto them on the Emmaus road.

It is a beautiful Easter thought that Christ will reveal himself to us in his sanctuary. But I glory today over the fact that Christ can and will reveal himself to us on Easter afternoon on the Emmaus road. He can and will reveal himself to us while we are cooking the Easter dinner, or while we are dressing the children for the Easter afternoon Sunday school, or when in the evening hour, with the children gathered about the piano, we are singing the Easter songs. The other day, when calling at the home of a very dear friend, I saw this beautiful sentiment written upon the wall over the sideboard of the dining room: "Christ is the head of this house, the unseen guest at every meal, the silent listener to every conversation." Yes, yes; that written sentiment is true. Christ on Easter noon and Easter afternoon and Easter evening and Easter night is ready to enter the humble home of the Emmaus disciples as he is also ready to stand on Easter morning amid the decorated pulpits of the imposing cathedrals and of the city churches and of the little village meeting houses.

Easter afternoon's revelation came, in the next place, as a solution of prophetic mysteries. The two disciples must have known the Scriptures, but they had not understood the prophecies concerning Christ, and not until he explained them did they perceive that the events which had so puzzled and distressed them were precisely those which had been predicted centuries before. It came as a right visual perspective to those whose eyes were focused too far off to properly appreciate the eternal significance of the momentous events which had just happened. What had the death and the horrible crucifixion of their dear friend and leader, Jesus, to do with the Messianic prophecy of Isaiah, written hundreds of years before? Did the words "He is brought as a lamb to the slaughter" imply the occurrence of such a national tragedy as that just ended? Perhaps these men did not stop to consider or think. Did the words of their Saviour, "Destroy this temple, and I will raise it up," allude to the resurrection of Christ's own body? Perhaps these disciples did not know of consider or think. But when on the Emmaus road the stranger appeared and said unto them, "O fools and slow of heart to believe all that the prophets have spoken," and then, beginning "at Moses and all the prophets, he expounded unto them in all the Scriptures the things concerning himself," then they saw, then they knew, that it had been foreseen that Jesus should rise from the dead.

Have there not been in our own lives and in the lives of our dear ones prophecies which on this Easter afternoon find their fulfillment in the risen Christ? How about that fulfilled prophecy in your mother's life? Years ago she marked the favorite psalm of Martin Luther as her special comfort. In the quiet of her own room she used to read over and over again these words: "God is our refuge and strength, a very present help in trouble. Therefore will not we fear, though the earth be removed and though the mountains be carried into the midst of the sea." When your father was taken sick and financial trouble came, and from an earthly standpoint your mother had nowhere to turn, did not that Forty-sixth Psalm come true? Was not the gospel prophecy fulfilled in God being her refuge and strength? When your invalid sister died, what was the strange peace that remained with her on her way to the grave? Did she want to leave her young husband and baby boy? Did she turn a deaf ear to the sobs that were being sounded about her dying bed? Oh, no! She was as a Christian at peace because thousands of years ago God had promised, "The mountains shall depart and the hills be removed, but my loving kindness shall not depart from thee, neither shall the covenants of my peace be removed, saith the Lord that hath mercy on thee." How have God's promises been fulfilled in your own life? Have not all your past troubles been the means, through the influence of the Holy Spirit, of working together for your good? Christ was the fulfillment of prophecy in the Emmaus revelation. Christ is also the fulfillment of prophecy in our own lives.

But again I learn from these Easter afternoon lessons that Christ only appeared unto his disciples when they felt their own helplessness without his divine presence and sustenance. If these men, walking along that Emmaus road, had said to themselves, "Well, Jesus is dead; perhaps it is just as well that he is gone; we were following him too much anyhow; we can get along now perhaps better without him than with him." Jesus would never have revealed himself unto them. But what did these two men practically say? They said: "Oh, what shall we do, what shall we do? The Christ upon whom we have leaned, the Christ whom we have followed, the Christ whose words have been our meat and strength by day and by night, is gone. What shall we do? What shall we do?" Let me read to you their very words. When this stranger accosted the two disciples they told to him their story. Then in a despairing tone they said, "We trusted that it had been he who should have redeemed Israel." Yes; "we trusted," but now all their hope was gone. They were hopeless without Christ. But when Christ revealed himself then their despair was changed into triumphant hope.

My friend, on this hillside overlooking the little Emmaus village do you feel helpless unless you have Christ? Do you pin to him all your faith both for this world and the next? If you do Christ will reveal himself to you. If you do not he will never reveal himself. In your Easter hopes I want you to feel the absolute dependence upon the divine power which my pious ancestor did many years ago. Rev. Nathan Birdseye was among the most famous New England divines of his day. He lived in Connecticut and was not only very wealthy, but lived also in the time when the people of New England owned slaves, and he also owned them. There came during his lifetime a prolonged drought which threatened not only to destroy the crops, but also the cattle and the men and women of that region. Old Nathan Birdseye one day gathered his family and servants together and made this simple yet earnest prayer: "O God, thou knowest that without thee we can do nothing. Save me and my family and people. Save my cattle and my crops. Save us, O God, save us! Thou who didst rescue the children of Israel in the wilderness, rescue us now!"

But I cannot close without a practical application to our future work in our relationship with our fellow men and fellow Christian disciples. When Jesus revealed himself to his disciples in the little Emmaus village, what did they do? Did they rejoice? Yes; they rejoiced as gladly as did the old father in the parable of the prodigal son, who cried out in ecstasy, "It was meet that we should make merry and be glad, for this, thy brother, was dead and is alive again and was lost and is found!" But these two disciples did more than merely stay at home Easter evening and rejoice with each other. Their happiness over the Emmaus revelation was too great to be housed within four walls. They immediately started back to Jerusalem. They said to each other: "Come, come, come! Let us go and tell the apostles and the other disciples that we have seen the risen Christ. Come, come, come! Let us have them rejoice with us as we rejoice, as we have wept with them when they wept." We can now see them running back to the Jerusalem capital on Easter night, and Easter darkness was not made an excuse for laggard feet. They ran. Aye, they ran as fast as their limbs could carry them to tell of the risen Christ.

We are all ready to carry good news to our fellow men. From this church embowered with flowers, where we have seen the risen Christ in vision and heard him in song and sermon, shall we not carry the news everywhere? The news! Aye, tell the glorious news that Jesus has risen from the dead and become the first fruits of them that slept.

But there is one other fact that I would impress upon your thoughts in this Easter afternoon revelation. As soon as Christ revealed himself unto his two disciples he vanished out of their sight. If we do not at once receive Christ when he reveals himself, in all probability we shall never receive him at all. One moment he is here, the next he is gone forever. Some of us in our past lives know when we saw him. We know that there was a certain moment of a certain service when Jesus came to us and said, "Here am I," and if we had not at that moment received him as our Lord we would never have received him. O men and women, are you this Easter day in the Emmaus village? Are you standing in the little village seven and one-half miles from Jerusalem and having a divine revelation and yet will not accept the risen Christ? God forbid that my Saviour's scarred feet and scarred brow and scarred side should in this Easter afternoon's revelation appeal to you in vain!

Beards.

The ancient Romans considered it effeminate to wear beards. All their busts, representing the famous men of olden times, are without beards.

RUSSIANS REPULSED

THERE ARE RUMORS OF MORE FIGHTING.

In Advancing Upon the Yalu River the Japs Had Another Encounter in Which the Russians Were Defeated. Much Fighting at Chong Ju.

A despatch from Seoul says: The Japanese troops advancing towards the Yalu river have had another action, repulsing the Russians smartly, only a score of Japanese being wounded. In connection with the engagement at Chong Ju in North Corea, on March 28, much fighting occurred in the town itself, which is a big walled place. It is asserted in Seoul that 40 Russians were killed and wounded and that a number were captured. The Japanese losses are given as 30. Twenty of the troops wounded in a skirmish at Nasan on March 26 embarked upon the hospital ship Kosai Maru. They are doing well. The Russian losses on that occasion were estimated at 50. It is reported in the same connection that a Japanese major and 30 men were cut off and captured.

A great body of Japanese troops have moved northward from Chinampo and other harbors used for the landing of troops and stores, which latter are arriving at Chinampo in huge quantities. A tramway has been laid from the landing place and for two miles on either side of the roadway. A thousand coolies are being employed adding to the huge piles of war material. The weather is now milder and the land campaign will soon be in full swing. The Japanese fleet is still intact and continues to watch Port Arthur. Doubtless the Mikado's sailors will succeed in blocking the place on the first occasion when the weather favors them. Only a narrow passage is now left. The Russians have taken many of the 12-inch guns out of their ships to arm the old and new forts. The northern seas are safely patrolled. The head of the heroic Vice-Captain Hirose, which fell into his boat when his body was blown to pieces by a shell while he was leaving a sinking hulk during the attack of March 27th, was sent to Japan by the steamer Yomashiro Maru, and has been buried.

It seems reasonable to believe now that the defences of Port Arthur have been weakened and its early capture is to be expected. It has now become known that at the first attack on Port Arthur even more conspicuous bravery was shown by the Japanese than was at first indicated. Their torpedo boats advanced in line ahead in three squadrons. In the darkness two Russian torpedo boats unwittingly crossed behind the leading Japanese squadron. The rest of the Japanese flotilla mistook them and followed the enemy, and thus failed to enter the harbor to complete the work of destroying the Russian fleet. The three Japanese torpedo boats, having fired all their torpedoes, then rejoined their own fleet.

There is a rumor of fighting at Port Arthur, and another of a landing by Japanese troops near Makuchang. If the Russian commanders at New Chwang have news of an engagement it is their evident purpose not to disclose it. Except for the rapid movements of the Russian forces of all arms since Kuropatkin's arrival, all has been quiet in that section of the war sphere.

JAPS SWEEPING ALONG.

It is credibly reported at Shanghai that the Japanese are operating in an irregular lozenge-shaped area, whose corners are intended to be Antung, New Chwang, Kirino and Vladivostock. One force of 105,000 troops has been landed opposite Takushan, in Southern Manchuria, and is marching north and northwest; another army of 40,000 men was landed in Northwestern Corea, and is marching toward the Yalu river. A third force, whose number is unknown, has been disembarked in the nortneastern part of Corea, and is marching to the west. It is supposed that another force will attack New Ohwang from the southwest, and the news of an engagement is daily expected.

The ice on the Yalu is thawing and the Russians are slowly retiring toward the north. Good authorities estimate that the total Russian force in Manchuria is 290,000 men, but this is probably an excessive statement.

Killed With a Shovel.

A dispute arose between Jos. Maltais and Joseph Leforest, two farmers of St. Fulgence parish, nine miles from Chicoutimi, Que., on Monday, over the possession of a piece of land in the course of which Maltais seized a shovel and struck Leforest on the head, knocking him unconscious and causing such injuries that he succumbed three hours after. Maltais surrendered to the authorities next morning. He claims that during the quarrel Leforest attacked him with a pitchfork, and he at once seized the shovel and struck the fatal blow.

Dangerous Vessel.

Vostochnoo Obosrenye, of Irkutsk, says that Port Arthur is imperilled by the proximity of the Russian volunteer ship loaded with 250 pound torpedoes, each containing 240 pounds pyroxiline. This ship is anchored behind Electric Hill. The Japanese have been informed by spies of the vessel's location, and have been instructed to aim their shells in that direction. Should one shell strike the ship it would cause an explosion that would annihilate the whole town.

Land Commissioner Griffin, of the C.P.R., says that that company will sell land in the future only to individual settlers.

RUSSIA'S ONLY HOPE

A Miracle Alone Can Save Russia in the Orient.

R. L. Magowan, an American business man who has spent many years among the Russians both in Europe and Asia, has arrived at Victoria by the steamer Agamemnon from Yokohama. He says that nothing but a miracle can save Russia from a humiliating and disastrous defeat at the hands of the Japanese. Russia's army, navy and civil services are honeycombed with corruption and mutiny to an extent which is utterly beyond belief. The trans-Siberian railway is a complete failure. The Japanese know to a nicety Russia's strength in eastern Asia, and count upon a six-years' war.

They know that the Russians have no supplies and cannot get any except by dribbles from Europe. The Japanese scheme is to drive the Russians out of Manchuria, seize Saghalien Island, wrested from them many years ago, and forming the Alsace-Lorraine of the far east, take Kamchatka peninsula and so settle the vexed sealing question, with which Russia had grievously interfered, to dominate in Corea and have free entry to Corea, as demanded after the war with China and blocked by Russia.

The Japanese count Port Arthur and Vladivostock as mere incidents in the campaign, and look upon them as already theirs. The Japanese have made vast preparation, and every move has been calculated. In Mr. Magowan's opinion the contest is a most unequal one, with every advantage on the side of the Japanese. When in the orient he had exceptional opportunities of acquiring exclusive information. He says that the Japanese would gladly send home every war correspondent now there, but hesitate to adopt so radical a step. They are doing all they can officially to prevent the correspondents doing mischief with premature reports, and the end of the correspondents' trouble is not yet, he says, by a long odds.

THE INCAS' TREASURE

Further Details of the Discovery in Bolivia-- Finders Quarrel.

The New York Tribune has the following regarding the finding of the historic treasure of the Incas, which was briefly mentioned in cable dispatches some time ago.

After a search extending through several centuries and entailing the expenditure of many thousands of dollars, the fabulous treasure buried in the time of the Incas, and valued at $16,000,000, has just been discovered by a group of British and American engineers, according to reports brought to this city by a South American official. Advices from Bolivia tell of great excitement among the natives, as there is, according to their belief, still buried gold amounting to about $30,000,000. The newspapers of Bolivia and Peru publish the news of the discovery under scare headlines unusual in those parts. This rich treasure, consisting of the purest gold, was buried and found at Chayaytaya, in the interior of the republic. About four hundred years ago, at the time of the assassination of Atalmalpa, King of the Incas, by Pizarro's forces, the gold was buried by his followers. Since then innumerable exploring parties, native and foreign, have made fruitless searches for the gold. It was by mere accident that the lucky finders came upon the ancient treasure, which many had come to consider as a myth. They discovered it in making surveys and driving stakes for another enterprise, according to the reports. A dispute has now arisen among the American and English engineers as to its division, in which the Bolivian government has interested itself. The government has taken charge of the find, announcing that on account of the difference in the nationalities of the engineers, it will act as guardian and supervise the distribution.

Forest Fires

Every summer and autumn large areas of public and private forests are devastated by fire. This destruction is a universal injury. It not only destroys a valuable asset in the list of the country's resources, but is productive of floods. The forest is the most effective means of preventing floods and producing a more regular flow of water for irrigation and other useful purposes.

To prevent the mischievous forest fires in the United States Congress has enacted a law which forbids setting fire to the woods, and forbids leaving fires (camp fires and others) without first extinguishing the same.

Circulars have been issued warning the public against carelessness, inasmuch as many fires start from neglected camp fires, and makes the following requests:

1. Do not build a larger fire than you need.

2. Do not build your fires in dense masses of pine leaves, duff and other combustible material, where the fire is sure to spread.

3. Do not build your fire against large logs, especially rotten logs, where it requires much more work and time to put the fire out than you are willing to expend, and where you are rarely quite certain that the fire is really extinguished.

4. In windy weather and in dangerous places dig a fire hole and clear off a place to secure your fire. You will save wood and trouble.

5. Every camp fire should be completely put out before leaving the camp.

6. Do not build fires to clear off land and for other similar purposes without informing the nearest ranger or the Supervisor, so that he may assist you.

As hunters, fishers and campers will soon haunt the woods and streams, it is hoped that the newspapers everywhere will circulate this warning and information.

The wise female does not attempt to monopolize the conversation until after she is married.

TRAITORS IN CAMP.

Japanese Officer Sold Plan of Campaign to the Russians.

Twenty thousand Japanese troops have arrived at Chang Seng, above Wiju. The Cossacks offered scarcely any opposition to the Japanese advance. The Japanese occupied Wiju on Sunday with a large force of cavalry.

The attempt to blockade Port Arthur is giving great trouble to the Russians, who are trying to break up the sunken ships with dynamite, but stones six feet long are difficult of displacement.

COSSACKS LEAVE COREA.

The few remaining Russians quartered at Wiju withdrew on Sunday across the Yalu. Thus the west coast of Northern Corea is deserted by the Cossack scouting parties. However, the Manchurian bank of the Yalu is fortified and occupied by the Russian forces.

SOLD PLAN TO RUSSIANS.

A Shanghai dispatch says:—It has been learned that the whole Japanese plan of campaign has been altered because it was disclosed to Russians by a Japanese officer who is at present awaiting trial. This act of treachery was discovered by the Japanese finding that the place was thoroughly mined where they intended making their first landing of the troops. The discovery has caused a great scandal, and the utmost efforts are being made to keep secret the fact that the national honor has been greatly tarnished. The Russians are apparently prepared to pay large sums for information concerning the movements of the Japanese army. It is said that they bought one Japanese map for £40,000.

The St. Petersburg correspondent of the Echo de Paris says that the Russian general staff is convinced that the Russians will await a Japanese attack on the right bank of the Yalu river, which they are busily fortifying at its mouth. A remarkable bridge has been constructed on the prolongation of the Wiju line connecting it with Pin Hu Jan. The correspondent says that the Russians are seeking to draw the Japanese on by sending small groups across the river.

CONGO ATROCITIES.

Returned Missionary Tells of Awful Sights in the Black Country.

Dr. W. M. Morrison, a southern Presbyterian missionary to the Congo Free State, in speaking to the Presbyterian Ministers' Association at Louisville, Kentucky, gave an impressive recital of the alleged barbarities practiced upon the natives of the Congo Free State. Said Dr. Morrison: "Leopold has there a native cannibal army of 20,000 men, officered by white Belgians and armed with repeating rifles. These men are forced into this military service. In turn, this cannibal soldiery is used to compel the natives to bring in enormous tribute of ivory and india rubber. It is worth noting that the King of Belgium is to-day reputed to be the largest dealer in ivory and india rubber in the world.

"As a result of this forced labor and military service, great and unspeakable cruelties are practiced on the native people. I have seen a number of times at least 50,000 people fleeing into the forests to escape from the cannibal soldiers of King Leopold. I have seen these soldiers scouring the forests and after catching a number of men whom the government wanted as laborers, going away with the captives tied together by ropes around their necks.

"Raids upon villages are being constantly made; some of the people are killed and eaten, others carried away into captivity and sold; others are forced into military service. I can buy all the slaves you want at Luebo at $10 and $15 apiece. When these raids are made the most awful cruelties are practiced. Innocent women and children are killed or captured; hands are cut off to be taken back to the white Belgian officers to show that the work has been well done, and great sections of land are being depopulated. One of these raids was made near one of our mission stations. One of our missionaries went to the scene and counted eighty-one hands cut off and drying over a fire, to be taken back to the Belgian officer; forty-five dead bodies were counted lying near by.

"The Belgian and Congo governments," he said, "would do nothing." He added: "At the request of Lord Lansdowne I preferred a statement of such outrages as had come under my own observation. Consul Roger Casement, an English and acting American representative in the Congo State, has just made a tour of investigation, and his report, in the hands of our government at Washington, presented a most deplorable situation of affairs. As a government we do owe something to the 20,000,000 of black people in the Congo State. What are we going to do?"

The Spanish Wine Tester.

Speaking of the preparation of Spanish wines, an expert said:

"When the grapes are crushed and the juice has been extracted, it is placed in big 160 gallon butts and left to stand. For six years it is not even touched. Then a wine expert goes through the butts, testing them by smell. His nose is the only means used to determine the value and fineness of the wine.

"Now, it is a peculiar fact and one that has never been explained that from the same vintage, secured under the same circumstances, many different grades of wine will be secured. Some of it will be pale, some medium, some dark. Only about one-third of it will be of the best quality. It is the duty of the wine tester, by means of his nose alone, to determine what butts contain the pale wine, etc., and what butts contain the best. He is able to separate the various qualities. Then the wine is bottled, labeled and shipped to foreign consumers."

A Matter of Opinion.

THROUGH ENGLISH EYES.

Feelings of a New-comer—Homesick Englishwoman Does Not Take to Canadian Ways and Things—Feels at Sea.

Arriving in Toronto, tired, limp, and crumpled, after a sleepless night journey from Montreal, the English woman "just out," feels decidedly inclined to sit down on a doorstep and weep, and wishes that she were back again on the friendly steamer, its bows turned toward the river mouth, says The London Leader. She is at present possessed with one all-engrossing desire. It spells TEA. "Black or green?" snaps the waitress with the much bepuffed and beribbon bowed coiffure and the metallic voice. "Why, black, of course!" she says wonderingly. Later on she learns that among their numerous successful recipes for the ruining of their digestions the Canadians include the drinking of green tea. The lady with the bows in her hair slams down the cutlery and plates with a clash; for deft hand and velvet foot do not count as assets in the value of the Canadian waitress.

Superfluities of Speech.

Also in a country which is always insisting on the verb to "hustle," such superfluities of speech as "Thank you," "Please," "Will you kindly?" and "Good morning," are discountenanced. One does not say, "Please let me have a chop." One jerks out "Chop!" The waiting lady bangs it down in front of one, and ticket in hand, snaps, "That all?" One replies "Yaep!" bolts the chop after smothering it in the scarlet-tinted "sass" or "katchup," that takes the place of our mustard, and picks one's teeth with the implement always provided, whatever else be lacking, in the American feeding place.

Troubles of the Boarder.

Unless one can rent a house or a very expensive flat one must either go to a boarding-house or "room with light housekeeping." The "roomer" is one who takes furnished rooms, including heat and light; but providing her own bed and table linen, blankets, crockery, and cooking utensils. The term "light housekeeping" means that she does her own work and cooks on the "other lady's" stove, and she is not supposed to give six-course dinners, have babies, or do washing and ironing on an extensive scale. "I know I'll never get used to messing in and out of someone else's kitchen and cooking on that, after the dear little gas-cooker I used to have in London," says the Englishwoman looking dubiously at the big stove which lords it over every Canadian kitchen. The lady of the house assures her that in less high tone residences than her own there are frequently as many as four roomers, who all cook on the one stove.

Having explained the points of the stove and its little ways, she leads the way to the rooms, pointing out the rocking chairs and double windows and introducing the black grating in the floor as the register. "The furnace in the cellar, you know," she explains, "heats the house by hot-air pipes, and keeps it good 'n warm!" "Does one draw round the cheerful register on a winter's evening?" laughs the Englishwoman, somewhat hysterically, turning to her husband, for a picture flashes across her brain of a winter evening fireside just before the lamps were lit, in a little English cottage now "To let."

A Strange Language.

The Englishwoman bewails having sold all her kitchen things and crockery as she sets out for one of the big stores to buy a fresh supply. "Good job we stuck to our old steel knives. These blunt, tin things—plated they call 'em—that we get here give me the hump. No decent meat or beer or butter, or knives or bread, or fires! G-r-r-r!" growls the Englishman, who has got indigestion as a result of restaurant meals. In buying crockery and kitchen utensils the Englishwoman finds that the former is somewhat more expensive and much coarser than English ware; and the Canadian taste is generally more garish and crude than the English. Many things are called by different names, too. What she calls a glass fruit dish is termed a "berry bowl;" a jug is a "pitcher;" a meat dish a "platter;" a frying-pan a "fry-pan," and when she asks for a salt-cellar she is given a "salt-sprinkler" like a pepper caster.

Sketch of Archbishop Bond.

Archbishop Bond of Montreal, who recently celebrated the 25th anniversary of his appointment to the Anglican See of Montreal, is a remarkable man. He was born in England in 1815, and is consequently 89 years old. He became rector of St. George's, Montreal, in 1848, and was later appointed Dean of Montreal. When Dr. Oxenden, the last English Bishop of the see resigned in 1878 to return to England, Dean Bond was elected by the Synod to succeed him. Belonging to the evangelical school of thought in the Church, Archbishop Bond has been for many years on terms of intimacy with all the religious bodies in his diocese. Upon the union of the Presbyterian churches in 1875 he attended the consecration service, along with the present Coadjutor Bishop Dr. Carmichael, and partook of the communion with the clergy of the Scottish churches, and in 1893, during a serious illness, prayers were offered for his recovery in the Protestant and Roman Catholic churches of the city.

Aged Weather Observer.

At Wiarton one evening recently the recent cold snap was under discussion, when one old gentleman predicted a January thaw. A bystander suggested that there might not be a thaw this year, an idea the old gentleman scouted vehemently.

"I've never known it to fail," he said. "Every year since I can remember I have remarked the January thaw," and growing emphatic he concluded, "I've seen thousands of them."

CONTRIBUTED COLUMN

Of the many infatuations and illusions that enthral and eventually destroy countless numbers of the brightest and keenest intellects, none claims more victims than gambling. It is appalling the number of young men, and even men of mature years that come under its power. It is a sort of mental poison, a mental jugglery, that weakens the intellect and makes it a slave of the emotions. A confirmed gambler cannot look upon a game without becoming excited, loosing his head and rushing into the play. He is urged on by a crazy hope of getting rich without paying for it. Knowing the game he thinks he has a good 'chance' of winning, while as a matter of fact there is no such thing as chance. There is but the uncertainty as to who possesses the certainty. In that moral and mental confusion the mind is excited but not stimulated. There is nothing but illusion and deception (if it stoops to that level) for the mind to work upon—no line of thought to be pursued, no problem to be solved. Gambling is thus a state of mental unreason that unhinges men's brains. If indulged in at all, gambling soon becomes an infatuation from which a man can scarcely break away. It acts as a stimulant. At first it excites, then comes the re action. Then larger stakes are required to produce the same excitement, followed by a greater reaction. Then larger and still larger to the end, which alas! too often is the penitentiary and a dishonored grave.

Gambling is a very different thing from honest speculation. Gambling is idleness craving excitement. It is time wasted in bad company, corrupting the morals. Boys begin by betting on marbles, or putting up stakes at cards "just to make the game more interesting." It does make the game more interesting, but it at the same time introduces deadly germs which have destroyed many of the finest intellects the world has produced. All gambling is like seduction and stealing, eternally unjust and eternally wrong.

Nor is any vice more rampant in Fernie to-day. Married men who ought to be at home with their families, may be seen at almost any hour of the early morning "sneaking" out of hotels with a whipped dog expression and silently stealing to their homes. Young men with good positions and bright prospects sit for hours night after night, enthralled, infatuated in the club rooms and at gambling tables. The serpent's coil is around them, the poison is working in their brain; and the undertow has got them. They are digging their own graves. Many of them are fast degenerating into "tin-horns." They neglect their work and spend their time in idleness. They hang around our streets, the lobbies and bars of our hotels, "corrupt and corrupting, swollen by the winds and the rank mists they draw."

This is a matter that should not be lightly passed over. It concerns every parent and every citizen. We have stringent laws, but it is a difficult matter to enforce law against such a vice, unless all good citizens unite, first to discountenance gambling in its simplest forms by refusing to throw dice for a shave, a cigar or a treat of any kind, and second, to assist the police officers to break up the gambling dens which practically unmolested flourish in our town.

How To Ward Off an Attack of Rheumatism.

"For years when spring time came on and I went into gardening, I was sure to have an attack of reheumatism and every attack was more severe than the proceeding one," says Josie McDonald, of Man, Logan county, West Va. "I tried everything with no relief whatever, until I procured a bottle of Chamberlain's Pain Balm, and the first application gave me ease, and before the first bottle was used I felt like a new person. Now I feel that I am cured, but I always keep a bottle of Chamberlain's Pain Balm in the house and when I feel any symptoms of a return I soon drive it away with one or two applications of this liniment. LACROSSE IS IN LINE.

CROWS NEST HAS TWO LEAGUES THIS YEAR.

Medicine Hat Contributes Another Cup.—Five Teams in the Union League. The Schedule.

A meeting was held at Frank last Saturday for the purpose of organizing a lacrosse league for the Crows Nest. Mr. James Sheppard was present to represent Fernie. A. B. Stafford, of Lethbridge, occupied the chair. The following towns were represented, Cranbrook, Fernie, Frank, Lethbridge and Medicine Hat. The last named town was anxious to play in the Crows Nest League and as the rules governing the Lavasseur Cup made Lethbridge the eastern boundary of the territory eligible for competition Medicine Hat offered to put up a cup for another league which should include that town with the other towns of the Crows Nest. The other towns readily fell in with the idea and the Union League was therefore organized in conjunction with the Crows Nest League. The first four towns will be playing for two cups in the same set of games while Medicine Hat will be playing for one.

The officers elected for the Crows Nest League were as follows.

Patronesses—Mesdames Levasseur, McCullough.

Hon. President—J. G. Taylor.

President—R. E. Beattie, Cranbrook.

1st. Vice-Pres.—A. C. Liphardt, Fernie.

2nd Vice-Pres.—Mr. Farmer, Frank.

3rd. Vice-Pres.—R. C. McClure, Medicine Hat.

Sec.-Treas.—A. B. Stafford, Lethbridge

Executive Council.—W. C. Tees, Lethbridge; S. A. Clancey, Cranbrook; H. J. Johnson, Fernie; and Dr. Malcolmson, Frank.

The officers for the Union League are the same as for the Crows Nest League with the addition of a couple of officers to be elected by the Medicine Hat Club.

The schedule of games drawn up was as follows.

May 24.	Lethbridge at Cranbrook.
June 11	Cranbrook at Frank
" 13	Fernie at Medicine Hat.
" 14	Fernie at Lethbridge.
" 21	Frank at Fernie.
July 1	Cranbrook at Fernie.
" 1	Lethbridge at Medicine Hat
" 7	Frank at Medicine Hat.
" 8	Frank at Lethbridge.
" 12	Fernie at Cranbrook.
" 18	Medicine Hat at Cranbrook.
" 19	Medicine Hat at Fernie.
" 20	Medicine Hat at Frank.
" 25	Lethbridge at Fernie.
" 26	Lethbridge at Frank.
" 30	Cranbrook at Medicine Hat.
Aug. 1	Cranbrook at Lethbridge.
" 3	Fernie at Frank.
" 10	Medicine Hat at Lethbridge.
" 10	Frank at Cranbrook.

A change has been made in the selection of referees. The meeting appointed one from each town, A. C. Liphardt being selected by Fernie. The visiting team suggests the name of two of these referees. The home team selects one of these two or refuses both and in the latter event the president of the league chooses one from the remainder.

COAL CREEK.

(From Our Own Correspondent)

P. D. McTavish is making his usual rounds this week.

Chas. Sawney has gone to the mineral springs at Blairmore.

Mr. Gardener, of Lethridge, is visiting friends in Coal Creek.

Jos. Llewellyn is slowly improving. His mother is expected from Raymond this week.

Two of our boys from the Palmer house tracked a bear the other day getting in sight of him once or twice.

The dwelling house opposite the store is being fitted up and will be occupied as a co-operative boarding house by a number of clerks and office men in the town.

Mrs Shearer arrived home on Monday from Lethbridge, where she had purposed undergoing an operation, but owing to Dr. Newburn's absence it was postponed.

It is expected that on May 1st. Rev. J. H. White travelling secretary for the Methodist church in B. C. will occupy the pulpit here morning and evening.

FEATHERS CLEANED AND CURLED.—Mrs. Sears begs to announce that orders will be received for above, by Mrs. Todd, which shall have strict attention combined with moderate charges.

STOLEN GOODS GALORE.

Uhlman had enough in his heavy Trunks to Start a small Store.

The police court presented an interesting scene on Tuesday morning when three heavy trunks and a valise claimed to be the property of Louis Uhlman, were searched for stolen goods under a search warrant sworn out by B. Bannett of the Bannett-Reese Co. Mr. Bannett went through the trunks with a professional air which a customs officer might be proud to possess. In a very short time sufficient articles were found to confirm Mr. Bannett's gravest suspisions. Mrs. Uhlman had previously admitted that the trunks contained one suit of clothes that they did not own, but none were prepared for the surprise in waiting for them as the different trunks were searched. Suit after suit were recognized by Mr. Bannett as his property. Shirts, cambric and white, in profusion; socks amounting to dozens of pairs. Boots of various sizes made quite a formidable pile upon the floor of the room. Ties of various shapes and shades, collars, suspenders, belts, gloves, watch charms, underwear, towels, etc etc. All made a heterogeneous mass almost sufficient to start a man up in a gents' furnishing business.

The facts leading up to this event may be briefly related as follows: Uhlman has been employed for the past 8 months in the Bannett-Reese store. Sundry amounts had been missed from the store, and also articles of clothing. Suspicion did not rest heavily upon Uhlman until Saturday when he and his wife and two boys were missing. They had purchased their tickets for Morrissey and the police had no trouble in catching them at that point before they had carried out their evident design of getting aboard the G. N. R. for Uncle Sam's country.

Mr Bannett claims he has proof that Uhlman collected $300 on goods sold that was never turned over to him and it was on the charge of embezzling this amount that the arrest was made. The charge of the theft of goods found in the trunks has not yet been laid. The trial on the embezzlement charge came up this week several times and was finally remanded for eight days to allow time to refer the defence argument to the attorney general. Mr. Eckstein is defending the accused. His line of defence is that the Bannett, Reese Co. owed the accused money for wages and that the latter converted certain collections to his own use and credited himself with them on his wage account. He contended that the case was one which could only be tried in a civil court and to avoid any risks of the local authorities being guilty of compounding a felony he asked that the question of substituting civil proceedings for criminal be laid before the attorney general. The request was granted.

A BUSINESS CHANGE.

The business known as the Fernie Drug Store, one of the oldest in the town, changed hands this week when Messrs. E. Hazelwood and N.E. Suddaby purchased it from the wholesale firm of Martin, Bole and Wynne, of Winnipeg. The sale was put through by Mr. E. D. Martin and Mr. Hazelwood, the former arriving from Winnipeg last week and remaining until Monday evening of this week.

The business in future will be managed by Mr. Hazelwood who will give his personal attention to it. Mr. Suddaby will continue his work on the road where he is meeting with much success.

The wholesale firm were anxious to dispose of this retail business as they found that it conflected with their larger business. Mr. Martin who was here in connection with the deal is a brother of Joseph Martin and he has also been mixed up in politics, having represented a Manitoba constituency at Ottawa for one term.

Mr. W. J. Mitchell, the former manager of this store, left on Monday evening for McGrath, Alta., where he has been offered a good position.

THE SMELTER.

The prospects for the smelter coming to Fernie continue to look bright. Mr. Fernan left recently for Toronto where he will consult with the directors of the C. N. P. Coal Co. this week, with regard to the terms already submitted. These terms have been made as favorable to the smelter people as possible and it is confidently believed by those in a position to know that this feature combined with the many natural advantages possessed by Fernie will have the effect of locating it in the great coal centre of Western Canada.

BRICK PLANT IN SIGHT

DETAILS OF NEW INDUSTRY ABOUT TO BE STARTED IN FERNIE.

Samples of Fire and Building Brick are of Excellent Quality.—The Crows Nest Demand Will Furnish a Steady and Increasing Market.

The East Kootenay Brick and Fire Clay Manufacturing Company, Limited, are applying for incorporation. John Todhunter the original promoter of the company has been steadily working on the scheme for some time, and now there seems to be no obstacle in the way to complete success. The firm of Cree & Hutchison has been appointed fiscal agents and they have given valuable assistance in getting the company under way.

The company will be capitalized at $30,000, consisting of 30,000 shares of the par value of $1. Only about $7,000 of this amount will be required for the initial cost, and the plant will be extended in keeping with the development of the industry. The plant on the start will have a capacity of 12,000 bricks per day. The clay beds for building brick are located to the east of the coke ovens. This property has been leased from the Coal Company on suitable terms. The silica clay for fire brick manufacture will be brought from Marysville where Mr. Todhunter owns large beds. The C.P.R. have given a rate of $1.20 per ton on silica from Marysville to Fernie. The samples manufactured from these materials are of the finest quality and experts who have tested them in Chicago and other cities have complimented the promoters on the excellence of their material. The plant will be located in the south end of Old Town. It is expected that much of the capital stock will be taken up by eastern investors.

The market feature of the proposition looks particularly bright. In 1903 upwards of two million silica bricks were used in the Crows Nest for coke oven construction and other purposes, and not less than 100,000 are needed each year for repair work. Building bricks will be required here in great numbers when the price can be brought down to a reasonable figure. The transportation question has figured very prominently in this question up to the present date, but we are assured that the company will be able to put building bricks on the market at prices ranging from ten to twelve dollars per thousand. The fire bricks used here are brought from Pennsylvania and the freight alone amounts to $45 per thousand, so that there is no doubt of the mutual advantage to producer and consumer in manufacturing fire bricks in Fernie. The factory will be rushed to completion and machinery will be installed as soon as the company secures its charter and sufficient stock has been aken up.

SLAVONIC DAY.

Monday of this week was Slavonic Day in Fernie. In the afternoon Victoria Ave, presented a crowded appearance rivalling the biggest celebrations ever given in the town. Three Slav societies took part. They were: The First National Slavonic Society, The Pennsylvania Slavonic Society and the Roman Catholic Slavonic Society. The first named of which John Balko is the President took the initiative in the day's celebration.

In the afternoon Joyce's Hall was packed with representatives from these societies on the occasion of the "christening of the flag." At the conclusion of the meeting a large procession formed and headed by the Fernie band marched through the streets. Seated in the carriage of state were the fair "god mother" of the ceremony and five flower girls. The members of the society were well uniformed and altogether the procession presented a very creditable appearance

In ths evening the First Annual Slavonic Ball was held in the Union hotel which was very largly attended. The ball lasted from 6 p.m. to 6 a.m. and the crowd seemed to enjoy themselves immensely from first to last.

A Mother's Recommendation.

The Fernie Male Glee Club will give a grand musical concert next Thursday, 28th, in Princess hall.

The 20 round glove contest between Jack Curley and Jim Burrows takes place tonight in Princess hall.

The membership of the Fernie Miners Union is now about the 700 mark. On Saturday about 300 new members were added. Special inducements were offered to new members to join on or before that date as the membership fee was raised after that date.

The meeting of the Amateur Athletic Association was postponed from Wednesday evening to next Tuesday evening. It will therefore be held next Tuesday evening at 8 o'clock in W. F. Cuthbert's room in the rear of the store. A large and representative meeting is desired.

Fifteen double power electric lights have been placed on the main street at Michel to enable the residents to make their way by night. A similar plan might have been adopted at Fernie long ago if the merchants had agreed to the proposal to pay the cost of maintaining them.

The 26 new instruments for the Italian band arrived on Wednesday morning. They were manufactured in Italy and cost about $500. Mr. A. H. Cree has consented to take over the management of this band. Anyone desirous of further information as to dates, etc., should see Mr. Cree.

Owen Ross, of the Fernie Cartage Company, was down to Pincher Creek this week where he purchased two horses and two new buggies to add to their livery equipment. Mr. Ross states that plowing and seeding is in full swing there. He saw in operation a steam plow turning 6 furrows at once.

Not among the least of the charms that Spring brings to Fernie is the melody that comes from thousands of song birds that now make their habitation in and around the town. In early days birds were scarce, but they have steadily increased since that time, which goes to prove that birds are fond of human companionship and follow closely in the wake of civilization.

Mr. Grady of the firm of Grady, Owman and Carlson, was in town on Wednesday. This firm is getting everything in readiness to start a saw mill about a mile this side of Morrissey Junction on the west side of the river. They will put in a shingle mill in conjunction with their saw mill that will manufacture one hundred thousand shingles per day. Their machinery is being moved in from Montana, where the Company formerly operated. The timber limits at Morrisey amount to about twenty million feet with other available supplies in sight. The Company feel assured of the validity of their claim upon this timber, but they will not commence operations until the disposition of the disputed lands is settled.

NOTICE.

All members, of Mt. Fernie Lodge, I. O. O.F., are notified to meet at Joyce's Hall, at 2:30 p.m., Sunday, April 24th, for the purpose of attending Divine Service in Presbyterian Church. All members of the order are cordially invited.

MET A SUDDEN DEATH.

F. CAPPELLANI RUN OVER BY EXPRESS AT MICHEL.

Body Cut Into two Pieces.—He lay on the Track in an Intoxicated Condition.—No Inquest.

It is our painful duty this week to chronicle another fatal accident at Michel. The victim of this affair was an Italian named Floreani Cappellani who had worked in the Michel mines for the past 9 months. He was run over by the Sunday evening express and his body was cut in two pieces about the middle, killing him instantly.

It appears that on Sunday the deceased, his brother and two companions went down to the Loop Hotel. In the evening deceased started for home ahead of the others. He was under the influence of liquor at the time. He walked along the railway track to a point near the tank where a sharp turn hides the track from the west. Here he evidently lay down on the track. The express came along at about 8 o'clock when the shadows of dusk made distant objects hard to distinguish. The driver did not see the man until he was within two car-length of him and he could not stop the train.

The remains were taken to Michel and Coroner Trites was notified. He wired he would go to Michel on Monday evening. The coroner received a second message asking him for permission to bury the body on Monday as it could not be well preserved longer. The coroner wired Constable Henderson to give the desired permission if he thought the circumstances justified him. The latter did so and filed a message at 3 p.m. to that effect. This did not reach Coroner Trites before train-time and he proceeded to Michel where he found that the body was already buried. He gathered what information he could as to the manner in which the man met his death and he decided that an inquest was unnecessary. Otherwise he would have ordered the body to be exhumed.

The deceased was a member of the Miners' Union and that order took charge of the burial. He was 26 years old and unmarried.

BOX CAR LOADER.

The April number of the B.C. Mining Record contains an interesting article from E. Jacobs on the Smith Gravity Hydraulic Box Car Loader as used by the C. N. P. Coal Company. The article is illustrated with three large cuts showing the car tilted in various positions in the act of being loaded. In introducing the subject the writer makes the following comment on the advantage of dump cars for coal and coke transportation:

"It would be a decided advantage to many consumers of coal if there were no necessity for the use of any such contrivance, that is to say, if the companies owning the railways provided sufficient dump cars in which to ship coal instead of using by far the larger proportion of box and gondola cars for this purpose in British Columbia. It will be evident to any one giving the matter a little consideration that if it were practicable to use dump cars instead for the shipment of coal and coke from the collieries to the mines and smelters, a considerable saving would thereby be effected in the cost of unloading the fuel at the places to which it is delivered for consumption. In fact one of the serious difficulties the larger smelers are now facing, as they extend their operations and considerably increase their treatment capacity, is the excessive cost, in time as well as in money, of unloading coke from the box cars in which it is shipped, by the present very slow and expensive means of shovelling by hand, whereas if it were carried in dump cars the whole carload of 20 tons or thereabouts could be dumped in two or three minutes. Strong representations in this connection have already been made to the railway company carrying most of the coke used in the interior of the Province, but for the time there are only box cars in use for carrying coke. Similar objections to the use of either gondola or box cars for the shipment of coal hold good, but since the quantity of coal used by mines and smelters is not nearly so large as that of coke the additional cost in unloading does not in the aggregate amount to anything like so large a sum of money. So long, however, as existing conditions shall be continued there will remain the necessity for the use of an expeditious and economical mechanical car loader, and this being so, the colliery owners will continue to seek the most efficient machine for this purpose.

PURSES IN PIPES

INTERESTING FIND IN LAVATORY OF HOTEL

Pickpockets Have Been Reaping Their Harvest in Winnipeg Amongst the Newly-Arrived Immigrants—Flush Pipes Choked With Empty Purses.

Three pocketbooks, rifled of their contents, blocked one of the flush pipes of the public lavatory of the Brunswick hotel, Winnipeg, and were taken from their hiding place on Saturday. One was identified by the police as the pocketbook reported lost on April 7th by Stephen Czorny, an immigrant. He was in the immigration hall and was using the book. He left the hall with it safely, but on arriving at the C.P.R. depot he missed it. It contained $306 in cash.

Archie McLaren found the flush pipe blocked and had it cleaned out. As the purses were withdrawn and found empty, he notified the police, who are now working on the case. It is evident that an expert pickpocket has been at work of late, as many cases of men being robbed are reported, especially among men who have just returned from their winter's work with six months' pay. Some have been doped and robbed; others have got drunk and wakened up penniless, while others again, after exhibiting wealth in saloons, have "lost" their money, missing it in the same manner as Stephen Czorny missed his $306.

JAPANS BIG ORDERS

Two Most Powerful Battleships to Be Ready in Quickest Time.

The two new battleships ordered in England by Japan will be exceedingly powerful. Their length, 445 feet, will exceed that of the most powerful British battleships by 20 feet. In order to meet the capacity of docking accommodations, the beam and draught have been fixed at 78 and 27 feet respectively. Each will have a displacement of 16,400 tons.

Themain batteries, it is stated, will be the most powerful yet devised, consisting for each of four twelve inch guns, four ten inch and five six inch guns. The armored belt at the water line will be nine inches thick, with six inch armor continuing to the level of the deck. A new feature will be a superstructure of four inch armor, insuring that no part of the upper works will be unprotected. Formal orders for these battleships were placed by Japan with Vickers, Maxim & Armstrong on January 30th, the order being to expedite their construction as speedily as possible. They were to be finished in the shortest time on record for ships of such dimensions. They are to have a speed of 19 knots and will be able to discharge eleven tons of projectiles per minute from their main batteries.

In addition to the two battleships actually ordered Japan is contemplating ordering two more of that description to be built there.

FARMER FOUND DEAD

Tim Looney Found in Empty Car—Foul Play Suspected.

The dead body of Tim Looney, a farmer living twenty miles west of North Portal, was found early Sunday morning near the elevators at Portal, N.D. He had been drinking during the day. His coat and bottle of whiskey were found in an empty car near by. He had several bruises on his head, and foul play is suspected.

Leo Teitelbaum Held Up.

Leo Teitelbaum, a member of a Dominion land survey party, was held up last Thursday night, on Flora Street, Winnipeg, near the overhead bridge, and as a result of the encounter Mr. Teitelbaum is now the possessor of a necktie and a watch-chain, once worn by a real, live robber.

In speaking of the occurrence, the gentleman says that when within a few yards of the bridge he was accosted by two well-dressed men, one of whom asked him for 50 cents. As it was about 11 o'clock, and in a lonely spot, Mr. Teitelbaum concluded that he was being played for a victim, and he refused to either make the donation or stop and discuss the matter.

What happened next Mr. Teitelbaum does not say. However, it is known that during the scuffle the "victim" gained possession of a watch-chain and tie belonging to the hold-up men, which he did not return to the owners.

Thankful For Small Mercies.

A good joke is going the rounds among the friends of a well known Baptist minister, who recently resigned from his city charge to take up work in the west. The reverend gentleman was very popular among his church people, who had no intimation whatever that he was to sever his connection with them, so that when at the close of a service a couple of weeks ago he told them that he was about to leave, it came as a great surprise. For a couple of minutes they sat aghast, no one seeming to know just what to do, when one of the elders, arose and requested the congregation to sing the Doxology. Then they rose and solemnly sang: "Praise God, from Whom all blessings flow."

BATTLESHIP BLOWS UP

Two Thousand Pounds of Powder Exploded on the Battleship Missouri.

By the explosion of 2,000 pounds of powder in the after 12-inch turret and the handling room of the battleship Missouri, Captain W. S. Cowles, commanding, and twenty-nine men were instantly killed and five injured, of whom two will die.

The Missouri was on the target range with the Texas and Brooklyn at practice about noon on Wednesday when a charge of powder in the 12-inch left-hand gun, igniting from gases, exploded and dropping below ignited four charges of powder in the handling room, and all exploded. Only one man of the entire turret and handling crew survives. But for the prompt and efficient work of Cowles, in flooding the handling room and magazine with water, one of the magazines would have exploded, and the ship would have been destroyed.

Captain Cowles, completely overcome by the disaster, referred all newspaper men to Lieutenant Hammer, the ordnance officer. The latter gave out a statement of the explosion and its probable cause. According to him, about noon, after the first pointer of the after 12-inch piece had fired his string, and the second pointer had fired the third shot of his string, the charge ignited. The fourth shot was being loaded, and from all indications the first half of the charge had been rammed home and the section was being rammed home, when gases from the shot previously fired or pieces of the cloth cover, ignited the powder. The breech was open, and a dull thud gave notice of something unusual. No loud report was made, but flames were seen to leap from every portion of the turret. A few seconds later another explosion, somewhat stronger, occurred. This was in the handling room below, where sixteen hundred pounds of powder, or four charges, ready to be hoisted above, had ignited. Fire in quarters were sounded, and every man of the ship responded and the magazine and handling rooms were flooded with water. In less than five seconds after the first explosion two streams of water were being played in the rooms, and when volunteers were called for every man of the ship responded, eager to go into the turret and rescue the crew. Captain Cowles gave his command, and but for his presence of mind and that of the officers of the ship the Missouri would have gone down.

The second explosion occurred near one of the magazines, and so hot was the fire that the brass work of the magazines was melted. Smoke and the fumes of the burnt powder made it almost impossible to enter the turret or handling room, but officers and men with handkerchiefs over their faces made efforts to rescue the men inside. Leading the rescuing party was Captain Cowles. The officers endeavored to keep him from going below, as men fell unconscious as they entered and had to be pulled out by their comrades, but unheeding the advice the commanding officer rushed below, followed by Lieutenant Hammer, the ordnance officer, and Lieutenant Clelland Davis. Captain Cowles caught up a dying bluejacket in his arms and staggered to the deck with him. The bluejacket, with two others from the handling room, had crawled partly from their place of duty when they had been overcome. Before the fumes of the burning powder had left the turret, officers and men were lifting out the dying and dead men. Three minutes after the explosion all were on deck, and the surgeons from the Missouri, Texas and Brooklyn were attending to those not dead.

DEAD FOUND IN HEAPS.

The twenty-five men of the turret were found lying in a heap. They had started for the exit when the first explosion occurred, and had just reached there when the more terrible explosion in the handling room overcame them to death. Lieutenant Davidson, who had charge of the turret, believed the men, as he was on top of the pile of men, having fallen there after he had allowed them to pass him to get out of the turret. The bodies were not badly burned and strangled, the terrible and quick fire having burned the clothing from the bodies of the men, and the flesh hung from them in shreds. The faces were mutilated by the fire. Only one man was breathing when the turret crew was rescued, and he died a moment after he reached the deck.

It is reported that the battleship Petrouavlovsk, instead of being sunk Great consternation prevails in St. panese in a battle off Port Arthur, by a mine, was torpedoed by the Ja- Petersburg over the loss of Admiral Makaroff, the battleship and crew.

DOWN WITH SHIP

VICE-ADMIRAL MAKAROFF DROWNED

The Battleship Petropavlovsk Struck a Mine and Sunk With 600 of Her Crew—Naval Battle Now in Progress.

Rome, April 13.—A Chefoo dispatch to the Agencia Libera says: Makaroff's squadron made a sortie to-day, while the entire squadron of the Japanses was concealed behind the Miakato Islands, and immediately attacked the Russians. Discovering the trap, Admiral Makaroff retreated. The Japanese then cut off his retreat, and Makaroff was forced to fight against tremendous odds. The Petropavlovsk was surrounded by torpedo boats, and five torpedoes struck the battleship, which was blown up. All the Russian ships were damaged.

TOGO'S TASK ACCOMPLISHED.

Even if Rear-Admiral Outomisky, who is now in charge of the fleet at Port Arthur, is able to go to sea with four battleships, which it is not certain he can do, Vice Admiral Togo could bring against him a greatly superior fleet. It is pointed out that all the Japanese admiral need now do is to be outside Port Arthur, and transports can pass with absolute impunity.

TERRIFIC BATTLE RUMORED.

There were rumors at New Chwang on Wednesaay night that a terrific battle was going on in the harbor of Port Arthur, the Japanese using the torpedo boat destroyers against the Russian warships. This does not come from Port Arthur, but from Dalny, several miles away from the alleged scene of conflict.

According to later reports, Grand Duke Cyril was more seriously injured than at first believed. He has been removed to a hospital at Port Arthur for treatment. Despite the statements in the dispatches the Grand Duchess Vladimir believes that her (on is dead, saying: "Everybody has been killed, and I cannot believe that Cyril was saved."

BAYAN REPORTED DAMAGED.

The British gunboat Espiegle, which arrived at New Chwang on Wednesday, reported that at forty-five minutes past five that morning she sighted five Japanese warships engaging the Russian cruiser Bayan, which was making for Port Arthur from the direction of the Yalu river. The Askold and another cruiser with three funnels came out of Port Arthur from the direction of Yalu river to assist the Bayan. At forty-five minutes past six the Russians got under the cover of the fort, but the Bayan was evidently damaged, as quantities of steam were seen escaping from her. At five minutes past eight the Japanese ships opened fire with their heavy guns upon the fort, but the latter did not reply. After a fifteen minutes' bombardment the Japanese retreated towards the east.

TOGO ATTACKED WITH TORPEDOES.

The London Times' correspondent at sea off Port Arthur, under date of April 13th, reports a Japanese torpedo attack followed by a bombardment. He does not mention the disaster to the battleship Petropavlovsk. His wireless messages state that the Japanese torpedo boats attacked Port Arthur in the early morning. They bombarded the port at 11.45 o'clock, and at 1.40 the fleet was still shelling the forts.

The correspondent says: "At 3.34 o'clock this morning, amid rain and squalls, we sighted a squadron which proved to be the Japanese fleet of six battleships, followed by a first-class cruiser squadron of six ships With the Nikasi leading the vessels were shaping their course for Port Arthur. Forty miles distant from Port Arthur the battleships drew out at full speed.

"As we neared Port Arthur we saw two first-class and four second-class cruisers already there. This squadron had covered the torpedo attack in the small hours of the morning.

"The battleships now hoisted their fighting flags and steamed in the same formation.

"At 11.30 the shore batteries opened, but they were desultory and it seemed as though Togo was making a demonstration rather than a bombardment.

"Three times Togo's fighting squadron circled in front of the Russian position, drawing a desultory reply, and at noon the admiral withdrew his ships to the southward."

Soldiers to Shoot Down Civilians.

Popular dislike of militarism in Germany has been created by a ministerial decree ordering officers and men of the army to adopt an aggressive attitude in encounters with civilians. The decree begins by warning the soldiers to avoid quarrels with civilians when possible, but proceeds to lay down the law that once a dispute occurs it is the bounden duty of all military men to act with the greatest resolution. They are to make use of their weapons so effectually that offending civilians will never again molest anyone connected with the army. In short, it is made clear that weapons must be used ruthlessly when civilians affront what is known in Germany as military honor. According to the views of the military authorities, it is the imperative duty of soldiers to shed the blood of civilians who insult the army, and the decree expressly states that soldiers who hesitate to kill or wound offending citizens are unworthy to wear their uniform, and render themselves liable to punishment. Officers who are molested by civilians and fail to draw their swords are to be punished by degradation and dismissal. Though the issue of this decree indicates no new departure, it is intended to emphasize the fundamental idea in German militarism, that the military men are a class of society far superior to civilians. The new decree opens up the prospect of a period of military terrorism which will drive thousands of more peaceful citizens into the Socialist camp.—London Daily Express.

"New" Maple Syrup.

In view of the fact that maple syrup of the run of 1904 is already being advertised in the west, the following from The Grocer, Toronto, will be read with interest:

Some difference of opinion seems to exist as to the probable subply and quality of this year's syrup. Some dealers are inclined to think both quantity and quality will be deficient and give as reasons the fact that snow followed the first frost in very quick order and remained, covering the ground practically ever since. To ensure a plentiful formation of sap, a frosted state of the earth is needful, and the snow blanket, they believe, will prevent the frost penetrating deeply. As a result there will be ittle sap, and on the first really warm day it will be released and flow upwards, the premature flow resulting in a "budded" flavor, as one put it.

Others, however, cannot see any mebace to the supply, and several predict an unusually good output. All, however, agree on one point, that the demand will be easily met. There is on the market at present a lot of the adulterated left over from last year, while some dealers make a practice of melting down their last year's surplus of maple sugar, converting it into syrup, which is claimed to suffer no loss in flavor.

From all accounts, the adulterated form of syrup is driving the real stuff out of the market. The former can be retailed at 90 cents a gallon, while the latter calls for $1.40 or $1.50. "The public appear satisfied with what is handed out to them,' say the dealers, "and we get no encouragement to trade in the simon pure brand."

"I don't suppose there will be enough coming into Toronto this year to fill a cart," remarked one. He didn't mean to be taken literally, of coures, but his words were suggestive. It is authoritatively stated that nine-tenths of the so-called maple syrup consumed is an ingenious concoction in which brown sugar and water play leading parts.

TWO SMALL FIGHTS

A BATTLE IN SMALL BOATS NEAR YANAMPO

Russian Sharpshooters Surprise 50 Japanese Scouts Who Were Approaching Samalind Island in Boats and Killed or Drowned Nearly All.

A St. Petersburg dispatch says:—General Kuropatkin, in a dispatch to the emperor, says that General Krasnaiinski, on the night of April 8th, ordered a detachment of sharpshooters to cross to the left bank of the Yalu opposite Wiju. The sharpshooters landed on the island of Samalind and surprised a patrol of 50 Japanese scouts just as the latter were approaching the east side of the island in three boats.

The Russians allowed the Japanese to land and then fired on them. Nearly all the Jauanese were shot or drowned and their boats sunk. The Russians sustained no losses.

Non-Commissioned Officers Louchkine and Souhaschonov distinguished themselves in the fight. On the following day the Japanese lowered their flag at Wiju, and their outposts, which have been seen, fell back.

On the night of April 9th four Russians crossed the Yalu to Yanampo, and made towards a Russian village, where they found a squadron of Japanese cavalry. They remained there twelve hours, when they were betrayed by Coreans and found themselves obliged to swim the river, their boat having struck a sand bank. One soldier lost his life. The Japanese pursued the Russians in a boat, but were in turn attacked by a Russian boat which had come to the rescue of the swimmers. The Japanese were all killed and their boat sunk.

PROBABLY ANOTHER ACTION.

A correspondent of the Associated Press at Teng Chow, forty miles northwest of Chefoo, telegraphs that place as follows: Sounds of heavy firing were heard at half-past six o'clock this (Wednesday) morning. The firing evidently was being done between here and Port Arthur. It is believed at Teng Chow that the long-expected sea-fight among the Miaotao Islands has taken place. The Japanese battleship Asahi, flying an admiral's flag, was seen off Chefoo yesterday going to the Rest, and there is no doubt that the remainder of the Japanese fleet was in the vicinity of Port Arthur. The Russian fleet also was seen outside Port Arthur yesterday.

The captain of the steamer Lockshan, which arrived to-day from New Chwaag, reported that he heard heavy firing between five and seven o'clock this (Wednesday) morning in the direction of Port Arthur. The firing was continuous, but no ships were visible. From the direction of the sound he judges that there was fighting at the entrance to Port Arthur. The Lockshan was the last foreign vessel to leave New Chwang, sailing at the same time as the British gunboat Espiegle at one o'clock yesterday afternoon.

JUNK SUNK BY MISTAKE.

The London Times' New Chwgng corresuondent, cabling under date of April 11th, says:

"The native population is panic-stricken and leaving the town."

PACIFIC SLOPE PIONEERS.

Reminiscences of Old Fur Trading Days—Recent Death of Mr. James Tod Brings Up a Flood of Them.

Memories of Canada's heroic age, of old fur trading days of the Honorable Hudson's Bay Company, now fast fading from the minds of even our most aged men, are recalled by the death in Victoria of Mr. James Tod. While Mr. Tod was a notable pioneer of British Columbia, he was even more distinguished as the son of his illustrious father, John Tod, one of the greatest traders in the employ of the Hudson's Bay Company on the Pacific Slope. Of the son, it may be said that he was a worthy son of his great sire. He was one of those huge Scottish-Canadians, such as Ralph Connor delights in, a man standing some inches more than six feet in height, and, as The Victoria Colonist says, "built in proportion." We can well understand that "his bodily strength was amazing, that he never knew what fatigue was, and was never sick a day in his life." In its obituary notice of Mr. Tod, The Colonist goes on to remark, with significant emphasis, that "he was a man who minded his own business." Therefore he prospered and made of his farm, Cedar Hill, one of the finest demesnes in the whole countryside. One can imagine the old man of a Winter's night, gathering his children round the ingle nook and telling them strange, awesome tales of their grandfather and his companions, the first white settlers in British Columbia; of the days when, as a boy, he looked upon the beautiful City of Victoria and beheld it a Hudson's Bay fort, armed for defence against the Indians.

The Trader Controversialist.

It is through this period of our country, a period awaiting a Canadian Homer, that Professor Bryce carries us in his admirable work on the Hudson's Bay Company. Speaking of John Tod this writer says: "John Tod was the most unique and peculiar of all the traders of the Hudson's Bay Company. He first appeared in the Selkirk settlement and wrote a number of the Hargrave letters. In 1823 he was sent by Governor Simpson, it is said, to New Caledonia at the final settlement of the fur traders. The young Scotsman cheerfully accepted the appointment and became the most noted writer on the Pacific Coast. Indeed, he might be called the prince of the controversialists amongst the traders. He was a man of the broadest views and fearless in the expression of them. In religious matters a Latitudinarian, he sometimes startled the godly by his bold questionings and doubting regarding the authenticity of the Scriptures.

Hargrave, of Brockville.

The contest gives one the impression that the old man's "broad views" represented rather his lust for controversy than his real opinions. There is something rather droil in the long and animated correspondence which he kept up with one of the Ermatingers, a famous trader, who expended as much energy trying to persuade old Tod of the error of his philosophy as he did when he made his famous overland journey to meet Governor Simpson at Monterey. The Hargrave letters, mentioned by Prof. Byrce, give another illustration of this peculiarly Scotch tendency on the part of John Tod. The writer chanced on these letters in London, whither they had been sent after the death of James Hargrave, at his home in Brockville. All had been preserved with scrupulous care, tied up and sealed. They were only to be opened by Mr. Hargrave's children, and when at Prof. Bryce's request they once more saw the light of day, a treasury of information was revealed. For years Hargrave has been Hudson's Bay factor at York House, a most important post, and, apart from the business of buying furs, his chief avocation was in the writing of letters. Nearly all the chief traders, factors and officers of the company, besides scores of other prominent people, were among his correspondents.

The Two Douglasses.

It was a famous company that planted the white man's banner in British Columbia in the early part of the nineteenth century. The greatest of the company's servants there was undoubtedly James Douglas, a scion of the great Scottish family, who entered the service as a boy, and left it a knight. The mention of his name recalls that lesser Douglas, the botanist and naturalist, who nevertheless gave the family name to the Douglas fir, and this in a country where James Douglas was virtually the Emperor! David, by the way, narrowly escaped death at the hands of a trader named Black. The scientist had been thoughtless enough to criticize the Hudson's Bay Company in the presence of the staunch old trader, who had thereupon challenged him to a duel. With a slight loss of dignity but a decided gain in longevity, Douglas declined, and lived to be trampled to death by a bullock on another continent. Black's own death was violent, he being murdered by an Indian, who was surrendered to John Tod by his own tribesmen.

The Pioneer's Last Days.

John Tod passed his last days in Victoria, after a long and adventurous career. It is said of him that even in his old age he would take his morning plunge in the sea, Winter and Summer. On the spot where he had once traded peltries he saw stately buildings erected, he lived to see the new order establish itself on the foundation that he and his comrades had established; to see round him a stalwart family, to feel that, after all, for the hardships he had endured, there was a recompense. Where he ended his son began, and now that James has died, an aged man, the memory of his father slips back apace into the dimness of the past.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer One Hundred Dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials. Address

Leather waste, which used to be thrown away, is now compressed, and makes an excellent substitute for iron when it is converted into cog-wheels.

There never was and never will be a universal panacea, in one remedy, for all ills to which flesh is heir— the very nature of many curatives being such that were the germs of other and differently seated disease rooted in the system of the patient—what would relieve one ill in turn would aggravate the other. We have, however, in Quinine Wine, when obtainable in sound, unadulterated state, a remedy for many and grievous ills. By its gradual and judicious use the frailest systems are led into convalescence and strength by the influence which Quinine exerts on nature's own restoratives. It relieves the drooping spirits of those with whom a chronic state of morbid despondency and lack of interest in life is a disease, and by tranquilizing the nerves, disposes to sound and refreshing sleep—imparts vigor to the action of the blood, which, being stimulated, course through the veins, strengthening the healthy animal functions of the system, thereby making activity a necessary result, strengthening the frame and giving life to the digestive organs, which naturally demand incresed substance—result improved appetite. Northrop & Lyman, of Toronto, have given to the public their Superior Quinine Wine at the usual rate, and, gauged by the opinions of scientists, the wine approaches nearest perfection of any in the market. All druggists sell it.

Courtesy at Home.

On the woman of the house, the wife and mother, more than on anyone else, depends the extent of courtesy and good manners of the members of the household. It goes without saying that she molds the manners of the children; but in most cases she also does those of her husband, for he will, sensibly or insensibly, live up to her standard, and to her expectations of him.

Should she, in the endeavor to save time and "bother," reach across the table in front of others, or fail in the hundred of ways possible to accord to husband and children any of the little courtesies of act and speech that would be shown the stranger, what chances of culture in fine manners are lost!

Perhaps the most trying meal is the breakfast. Unless the mother is "fore-handed," this meal is apt to be spoiled by haste. The inclination of the average individual is to stay in bed until the last moment, then scramble to work or school as best he or she can. The mother ought to prevent this. The household must be roused early, the meal must be on the table in time, a neat appearance of the various members must be insisted on, and tales of woe as to aches and pains, sleepless nights, or bad weather, are to be cheerfully suppressed, or skillfully switched on to other lines. It would take a paragon of all the virtues to do these things, but that is what the ideal wife and mother must be.

Doukhobors Doing Well.

Mr. C. W. Speers, General Colonization Agent for Manitoba and the Territories, reports as follows regarding the Doukhobors: "During my stay among these people I visited most of their villages, and I found them in a most prosperous condition. In addition to the fact that they are entering for their homesteads, and have large areas under cultivation for the coming year, they have a very complete equipment of machinery and horses and a large number of cattle. They are building some Public schools. One large school will be erected in Terpennie village, where the English language will be taught, and there is a marked conformity to Canadian usage and custom. I feel persuaded that these people will by degrees become so Canadianized that they will comply with all our regulations. Permit me to observe that I never saw stock in such excellent condition. They are great caretakers of animals, and make ample provision at all times for a generous supply of food. They are certainly very frugal and industrious people. It was my privilege to meet about forty-five men, representing different villages, who had met as a council to discuss different matters pertaining to their mutual welfare. Since the advent of Peter Verigen there is a system of organization, and the people, even in Saskatchewan, seem more contented and exhibit a greater inclination to cultivate their individual holdings or homesteads."

Man, Woman and Love.

In one of his books Max O'Rell, the witty Frenchman, gives the following advice:

"If you are bald, never make love to a woman taller than you. Looked at from below, you are all right.

"Never let your ladylove see you without a collar; no—not even the very wife of your bosom. A man's head without a collar is like a bouquet without a holder.

"Never marry a woman richer than you, one taller than you, or one older than you. Be always gently superior to your wife in fortune, in size, and in age, so that in every possible way she may appeal to you for help or protection, either through your purse, your strength, or your experience in life. Marry her at an age that will always enable you to play with her all the different characteristic parts of a husband—a chum, a lover, an adviser, a protector, and just a tiny suspicion of a father."

Britain's War Fleet.

The capital value of Britain's war fleet has been enormously increased by recent additions—not merely by the number of ships built, but by the great growth in the cost of individual ships, consequent upon increase in size, speed, and fighting capability. Taking the combatant ships of the British navy, their total first costs (according to Engineering) have represented about the following at the respective periods: 1813, 10 millions sterling; 1860, 17 to 18 millions; 1868, a somewhat higher figure; 1878, about 28 millions; 1887, 37 millions; 1902, about 100 millions. Guns and ammunition are not included. The value of the French national fleet in 1870 was put at 18½ millions sterling, and in 1898 at 47½ millions—a great increase, but a slower rate of growth than that of the Royal navy.

The Lords' Librarian.

Mr. Edmund Gosse's recent appointment to be librarian of the House of Lords recalls another literary candidacy—that of Matthew Arnold, in 1867, for the librarianship of the Commons. Though he had Disraeli's support, a "horrid domestic intrigue" turned the post over to a more obscure applicant. To Mr. Arnold the disappointment was considerable for his duties as a school examiner were onerous. He refused to be comforted when a sympathetic M.P. said: "You wouldn't have liked fetching and carrying for the Philistines of the Parliamentary middle class." To this Arnold only replied: "Oh, you don't know me. If Bottles, M.P., had wanted a volume of 'Hansard' or 'Hayden's Dictionary of Dates,' I should have flown." Which shows that the best of us have hard work to maintain a principle in the face of a sinecure.

FARMER GIVES THE REASON WHY

He Pins His Faith to Dodd's Kidney Pills.

They Made Him Strong and Well After Years of Intense Suffering from Lumbago and Other Kidney Troubles.

North Pelham, Ont., Apr. 13.—(Special)—Mr. Joseph L. Thomas, a substantial farmer of Pelham Township, well known and highly respected throughout this neighborhood, has joined the ranks of the great army of Canadians who pin their faith to Dodd's Kidney Pills. Mr. Thomas gives his reasons for doing so as follows:

"For several years I was sorely afflicted with Kidney Trouble, having many of its worst symptoms in an aggravated degree. I had Lumbago and was in such a condition that I was unfit for anything for weeks at a time.

"Insomnia resulted and I was an intense sufferer. I had almost a perpetual headache and grew thin in flesh.

"I had been treated by a doctor without good results, so upon the recommendation of a cousin, who had been saved from a life of misery by Dodd's Kidney Pills, I began taking them.

"The first box gave me decided benefit, and after taking five boxes the old trouble was a thing of the past and I was again in every way strong and well."

Ask those who have used them if they ever heard of a case of Kidney Disease Dodd's Kidney Pills would not cure.

How Rocks Grow.

Rocks do not grow in the sense that a plant grows. They may increase by accretion, and they may undergo chemical change. The old sea bed, being lifted up, becomes sandstone and limestone. The volcanic ash and lava strewn over the plains become tufa, hard enough for building stone. The pebbly shore of a river becomes conglomerate. The simple mineral does grow, however, when it takes a crystal form. The sparkling prism of quartz increases from an atom to a crystal as large as a forearm by a process of addition and assimilation, wonderfully slow, but beautifully regular, exactly as crystals of ice form on the window pane.

His manservant entered the studio. "Well?" said Whistler. "Lady Somebody, sir," said the servant (she was one of the great ladies of the British peerage). "Where is she?" "In her carriage at the door, sir." Whistler took no further notice of his servitor, but resumed the reading of his proof sheets to me, and the puzzled footman, who was standing behind his master's back and facing me, shook his head slowly up and down and, like Longfellow's Arabs, "silently stole away." Thus the reading went on for quite ten minutes longer, and the reader's sole auditor fidgeted more and more till, realizing how deadly cold it was on that March day, I called out to him, "I beg your pardon, Mr. Whistler, but I think I overheard your servant telling you that a lady was waiting to see you." "Oh," said he, "let her wait; let her wait! I'm mobbed with these people!" "PROSPECTORS'" RIGHTS

IN spite of numerous efforts on the part of the opposition press to draw Premier McBride out to declare his policy in regard to Blocks 4593 and 4594 that gentleman and his colleagues have maintained a discreet silence on the subject. These efforts, consisting as they do, in the publication of unauthentic reports and in caustic criticisms of such reports, can scarcely accomplish any real good. There is no doubt that the lands in question will be opened up next month and there is also no doubt that the McBride government has its policy in regard to the same already carefully outlined. It would therefore show better judgment on the part of these papers to wait until there is something tangible to criticise before giving vent to bitter censure in every issue. The Rossland Miner, for instance, is advocating the granting of licenses to those who staked claims in the Flathead during the reserve period. Any other policy whether emanating from Government or Opposition sources meets with the Miner's uncompromising opposition. Some of the Coast papers have been favoring the selling of these lands by public auction, in answer to which the Miner says, "Such talk may be a good thing for the rich and selfish Vancouverite who is never satisfied with anything less than a "sure thing," but to those who are prospecting and pioneering this province, it is a monstrous and damnable injustice."

If we were assured that the Miner was acting from unselfish motives, if we could believe that numerous Rossland people known to be heavily interested in the Flathead country were not backing this tiresome tirade of the Miner, we would attach more significance to its utterances when it accuses other papers of selfishness in suggesting a public sale that would give everyone an equal chance of obtaining a share of these rich lands.

We were among the first to advocate the sale by auction of these lands, excepting those claims staked prior to the date of the reserve. Nothing has been brought to our notice since to change our ideas on the subject but we are adverse to criticising the government's policy until that policy is made known in its entirety. The Miner's interpretation of "prospecting and pioneering" is not well taken. The majority of those who rushed in and took advantage of a legal technicality in the wording of the reserve were not prospectors and pioneers, but aliens, capitalists and politicians, who are trying to run a bluff on the real prospectors and pioneers of this province.

EDITORIAL NOTES

LACROSSE stock in Fernie appears to be somewhat below par this Spring and unless some more interest is soon shown in this great Canadian game the chances of retrieving past losses will be gone for this season. Get together boys. All you need is concerted action and the same enthusiasm that has been shown during the last two seasons.

A RECENT despatch states that despite the $500 tax on Chinamen entering Canada there are 114 celestials on board the Empress steamer due at Victoria this week. While this means a revenue of $57,000 to the Dominion Government it also shows the futility of the present law to prevent Chinese immigration.

IT is officially announced from Ottawa that J. R. Greenfield has been appointed post office inspector for the Mainland of B.C. The need of a sub inspector for the Kootenay's is becoming more and more apparent. "This is an appointment which," as the Nelson News puts it, "will not likely be made unless representative bodies make application for action. While parliament is in session and the necessary appropriation can be made, is the best time to take the matter up."

THE present time,—when the town is getting in shape for incorporation and when demands are being made for better buildings and greater fire protection,—this is an opportune time for a brick manufacturing plant to commence operations in Fernie. A by-law making it compulsory that new buildings erected on the businesss street be of some other material than wood will in all probability be passed by the first council in order to prevent greater danger from fire and no doubt brick buildings will spring up on all sides in the place of the present fire traps when bricks can be secured at reasonable prices.

THE C.P.R. are still behind in their supply of cars for coke transportation. The ovens are blocked with coke and telegrams are coming in from the smelters to forward their orders. At Michel the situation is somewhat improved since last week but at Fernie it remains unchanged. The mines were idle at Coal Creek on Saturday and Monday and will likely be idle to morrow on account of the lack of cars. On Saturday and Monday the Coal Company did not have cars to carry the coal from the mines even if the coke industry had not been tied up owing to the same reason.

THE organization of a second band in Fernie places each of the two bands in a competitive position which may result disastrously to both. The town band and the Italian band should unite and form one strong musical body. If this were done Fernie would possess one of the finest bands in the province, the town could better support them financially and the results would be more satisfactory all round. A united effort this Spring on the part of townspeople should result in the erection of a band-stand in some central part where open air concerts might be given. The motto, "United we stand, divided we fall," will apply to musical organizations as well as to other matters.

The Pie Social given by the Ladies' Aid of the Presbyterian church on Tuesday evening was an unqualified success. An excellent program of music, readings etc. was rendered by local talent and every number was well received. The refreshments consisted chiefly of pies, furnished in many varieties and in great numbers by the ladies. The surplus were readily purchased by lovers of that delicacy. The attendance was large and the finances of the Ladies Aid have been materially improved in consequence.

OUT of THE DEPTHS

By MARTHA M'CULLOCH-WILLIAMS

Copyright, 1903, by T. C. McClure

Cause and effect are your true endless chain. Thus because young Alanson brought good letters, the very best, to the rector and Squire Clark Mrs. Brown gave the garden party where so much else happened. Mrs. Brown had three girls to establish, and, as beaus were none too plenty, naturally it was a ruling principle with her to let no eligible young man get away from Eastbridge without a proper experience of their fascinations.

The fascinations were all very well until Amy Peters came. Amy was never accounted a beauty, but somehow she put all the set beauties out of court and countenance. Behold her at the party tripping airily about the lawn, with young Alanson at one side, Jock Hilman at the other and Billy Corliss tagging after like the faithful watch-dog he was. This while the other young women had less than a beau apiece. You will admit it was aggravating. Kate Martin, Amy's best friend, spelled upon her fingers "P-I-G" as the train went past her. But Kate was not in the least angry or jealous. She had Bobby Shepherd all to herself, although Essie Brown had done her best to lure the gentleman away.

"Let me tell you about Miss Amy," Jock said to the stranger when presently Amy was safely enthroned in a garden chair, with her court still about her. "She's nearly the only girl in Eastbridge you don't have to court, whether or no you want to"—

"But you know you always want to, Jocky, dear," Amy said saucily. Billy Corliss laughed with the rest, but somehow the laugh did not get into his eyes. Young Alanson kept up the game bravely. "Can you imagine a live man not wanting to?" he asked of the world in general and Billy in particular. Billy put on his most reflective look. "There might be extenuating circumstances," he said diplomatically. Amy gave him a reproachful glance and said loftily: "I suppose, Billy, your extenuating circumstances wear frocks. Pray, does it happen by any chance that the most extenuating of them is named Clarissa Brown?"

"No," Billy said sturdily, shaking his head. "But that reminds me that neither Mr. Alanson nor I have more than said 'howdy' to Miss Clarissa. Jock, you stay here and keep this quicksilver young person out of mischief while we scramble through the decent thing."

"You may find us engaged unless you hurry back," Amy flung after them. Jock laughed aloud. "Let's hide," he said. "I know the very place. Won't it give Billy a jolt to come back and find us missing?"

"He needs one, good and hard," Amy said, tossing her head the least bit. "I have not told anybody else, Jock, but I'm going to marry Billy if I can ever make him show himself properly and humanly foolish. He's so abnormally steady going and sensible and settled I should not dare try to live up to him—unless I knew he had a nice silly streak somewhere."

"I suppose you wouldn't any way consider me. I'm pretty near all silly streaks," Jock said dolefully. Amy laughed and patted his arm, saying: "But you have good sense streaks, too, Jock, else why should you like me so well? We'll always be the best of friends, I know."

"Bet your bottom dollar on it!" Jock said, hurrying her along. He was making for a tumbledown summer house, thickly overgrown with vines, that nestled in the very farthest corner of the lawn. It had a plank floor, rotten and crumbly, and a dilapidated rustic bench along one side—a cool, deeply shaded nook, sweet with roses and honeysuckle. Amy sprang joyously inside it, with Jock at her heels. As they made to sit down low, hollow reverberations came up from below their feet. There was a dull crushing, a giving away, then before they could cry out a sliding down, down to dark, dank, unknown perilous depths.

Five minutes later Billy was asking anxiously of those about the garden chair, "Where is Amy?" Nobody could tell him. Presently he spied far out in the grass one of her little lace mitts. Running away from it were faint footmarks on the warm turf. Billy followed the marks, his face whitening fast. "Jock could not be so cruel as to take her near that old well house," he said to himself—then groaned aloud; he had come in sight of the well house, where the crumbled floor told him the tale.

"Jock! Amy! Answer me! Oh, God!" he cried aloud, peering over the crumbling rim into the blackness. No articulate answer came to him, but was it fancy that down in the deeps of earth he heard low, gasping moans? He sprang up with a shout that brought the whole crowd huddling about him. Mrs. Brown was at the head, weeping and wringing her hands. "They are lost, lost!" she moaned. "Nobody ever came out of that well alive. It's always half full of choke damp! That is why my father had it built over! Why didn't I think to tell everybody?"

Billy seemed not to hear. With giant strength he wrecked the rotten lattice, clearing the well mouth, then flung off coat and shoes, and prepared to clamber down. He had already sent for ropes. "No, I can't wait, with Amy dying," he said to those who tried to stop him. "I've got to save her or die with her. Stand by—listen close—and let me have ropes the minute you can."

The last words were shouted up the well mouth, whence already there came a faint earthy smell, half sweetish, half repulsive. Some of the curious were for crowding the edges to watch him, but wiser ones held them back. "Give him all the light and air possible, poor fellow; he needs both," Squire Clark said. Young Alanson, stripped and barefooted, sprang to the edge of the curb. "Who'll follow me?" he asked. "I'm going down, right behind Billy; we may make a live chain before it's too late."

"I'll follow! And I! And I!" came from all about. In a little, the human line was over the edge, creeping down, down to the dangerous deeps, noisome and cold. Billy heard it coming, and shouted up;

"In time, thank God! I hear moans!" Then he gave a great inarticulate cry. There, clinging to the rough rock wall, was Amy, five feet above the glimmering water, which lapped something dark and limp.

"Here, you! Take her up!" he cried hoarsely, husbanding his breath all he might. He had come to the thick, deadly damp. Unless he was quick and bold it would make an end of him, as it had possibly already made an end of poor, light hearted Jock. Clinging fast with one hand, his feet well braced across the well breadth, he swung Amy up with the other into young Alanson's hold. The others knew enough to pass her on up and out. Drawing a long, long breath, Billy leaped down beside the insensible figure at the bottom, caught it up and began a desperate ascent.

"Hold hard, Billy! I'm coming to help!" young Alanson cried, setting his feet firmly and bending until his head was almost level with them. Thus he gripped Jock's collar and somewhat eased the strain on Billy. Both were, however, so near to smothering their tense muscles gave down. Lights swam before their eyes; their heads were bursting; the subtle heaviness in chest and nostrils numbed them to the bone. Alanson felt himself almost falling when a rope struck his hand, flung with such force it almost drew blood.

"Send up, Jock! We'll pull you two out safe!" the men higher up cried to them and then, when they saw their plight, came down like Trojans to help. It was little short of a miracle that any of the three got out alive. But somehow, by the good God's mercy, they all came into reviving upper air. Jock had the face of a dead man. At sight of him Amy fell to sobbing. "He—he lifted me up and bade me cling," she said brokenly, "but stayed on the bottom himself because there was not room for two to hold in the crevice of the wall."

"He won't die for it," Dr. Payne said, looking up from his patient. Billy, lying spent and white upon the grass, beckoned Amy imperatively to him. "You must marry me—right off," he said, patting her hand. "After this I dare not trust you with yourself."

"Nor I," Amy said, nestling to him. "You were horribly foolish to take such risks for me, Billy. It is only by staying with you I can make sure you will never do it again."

A Lord Chancellor at Play.

It is on record that the great seal of Britain has twice been degraded to kitchen uses. In 1834, when Lord Brougham, then lord chancellor, was staying as a guest with the Duchess of Bedford, some ladies of the house party in a frolic ventured to purloin the great seal from the chancellor's bedroom.

Trembling with anxiety, the great man came downstairs to proclaim his loss, but to his relief they told him of their joke and challenged him to find his treasure. Entering into the spirit of their fun, he at last dragged the emblem of his authority triumphantly from the coal box.

Still in merry mood, he led the party to the kitchen, where each lady made a pancake, with the great seal for a pan, pouring the batter between its disks.

This mad prank created so much amusement that Lord Brougham repeated it at Taymouth to give pleasure to the Marchioness of Breadalbane.—London Answers.

Bashfulness.

Bashfulness is natural to youth. "Modesty is the graceful, calm, virtue of maturity; bashfulness the charm of vivacious youth," and unless a young man takes advantage of opportunities of entering society he will retain "an air of bashfulness, which is in reality the want of habitual intercourse with the world" (Waverley). As long ago as 1570 Ascham wrote that "if a young gentleman be bashfull and soon blush they call him a babishe and ill brought up thyng." Deficient social education is therefore a cause of bashfulness.

Habit also predisposes to it. A mere indisposition to exert oneself, indulged in for too long a time, may eventually result in confirmed bashfulness. This indifference may be due to a want of sympathy with the surroundings or may have its origin in unalloyed selfishness—for many bashful men are extremely selfish—or may be due to vanity.—Cassell's.

When the Plague Raged.

Sir Walter Besant in one of his books says of the author of "Robinson Crusoe" and "Journal of the Plague:" "De Foe was born in the year 1661. His father lived in Cripplegate, where, as we know, he had a shop. The child, therefore, was four years of age in the plague year. A child of four observes a great deal and may remember a great deal. De Foe says: 'When any one bought a joint of meat he would not take it out of the butcher's hand, but took it off the hooks himself. On the other hand, the butcher would not touch the money, but put it into a pot full of vinegar which he kept for the purpose.' This must surely have been seen by the child and remembered. It happened in his father's shop before his eyes."

FROM BLACKFOOT LAND.

Facts About Northwest Indian Life—Some Prairie Curios—M. Jobin Tells of Mission Work.

A healthy, weather-browned face, a manner bubbling over with enthusiasm and kindly courtesy, a sturdy, active frame that a trained athlete might admire—these are some of the attributes of Alexandre Silvio Jobin, a delightful French-Canadian missionary priest, who was recently interviewed when passing through Toronto.

Monsieur Jobin is back for a while from the Northwest, where his missionary "district" stretches from Winnipeg on the east to the Rocky Mountains on the west. He has brought with him a whole batch of Indian curios for Mr. James Morgan of Montreal.

One of the first was a long and imposing apron-like arrangement that went round the neck and hung down over the breast. "This is something we can't get any more," said Monsieur Jobin. "The Indians are getting lazy, and think these are too much trouble nowadays. They use these for the sun-dance and the war-dance. They have a long Indian name, which you are welcome to if you like, but I call them 'Freemason's aprons,' to save trouble. This belonged to a chief."

Some of the most interesting of Monsieur Jobin's curios are a number of bands worked in patterns with glass beads, and perfectly transparent. "People go wild after these," said he. They were certainly beautiful bits of work, showing no trace of any thread. So fine are the beads, that a needle will not go through them, and the Indians use a particular kind of sharp weed for the purpose.

Monsieur Jobin held up also some curiously worked patterns, beautifully designed.

"The boys make these patterns," he said. "You give them a piece of paper, and they will sit down on the floor and work out these by intertwining colored strips. It passes human imagination to think that these little Indians, without any instruction at all, can make such designs."

It is a mixed population that inhabits the wide Western lands where Monsieur Jobin and his fellow-missionaries work. There in Assiniboia is a colony of Belgians at St. Maurice Belgrade. All along the main line of the railway the population is English. Along the Arcole line are settlers from Ontario. At St. Antomy is a French-Canadian colony, while Icelanders, Russians, Jews and other nationalities also abound. The French-Canadians at St. Antony live in houses made of cut sods, like the farm buildings in Iceland, the Faroe Islands, and some of the Highlands and islands of Scotland. They are beautifully warm, and last about four years, "but," said Monsieur Jobin, "there is a very unpleasant thing about them in summer time. The snakes come through them, and make acquaintance with you in the house."

Two years ago Monsieur Jobin was on the Blackfoot Crossing Reserve, with the Blackfoot Indians. "They don't get civilized very much," he said. "Whatever we do for them now, we should feel the results of only in the generations to come."

It is the Crees who do the work of which the kindly priest has brought back such interesting specimens.

"Are there any adventures associated with these curios of yours?" asked the reporter.

"Well," answered Monsieur Jobin, "this cap you see—it isn't much of a cap?"

It certainly was not the sort of cap one would care to walk down Yonge street in on a Sunday morning, being a peculiar erection of feathers sticking up like a fence all around the edge. At the end of the cap were three little bells, and thereby hung a tale. It seemed that the particular band of Crees from whom this cap came were on the prairie one day, preparing for the sun-dance, when suddenly a dreadful thunderstorm came on. The man who was wearing the cap was struck dead. To appease the rage of the thunder-god, his fellows took the cap, and hung the bells on it, and stuck it up on a pole on the prairie, and made a great sacrifice. The poor, deluded Crees don't offer five cent pieces to the Great Spirit, but heap the best they have round the pole of sacrifice, and then go away and leave the good things to be taken by the Great Spirit at his leisure. "They just leave them there on the prairie to go to ruin," said Monsieur Jobin, "and we take them; and then, when they come in a few weeks' time and find they have gone, they have another dance, to show their gratitude to the Great Spirit for accepting their sacrifice. So it is satisfactory all round."

"The people who travel through the West don't see anything of the Indians if they stop in Winnipeg. The best way to see them is to take a rig and leave the cities, and go through the prairies on the reserves. Then they may see the ways of the Indians at their daily life."

"By the way," he added, "my Indian name is Minipoka, which means 'spoiled child,' because, when I first went among them, fresh from college, the Indians treated me so well, after their fashion."

Unique Bonus Asked.

The bonus idea has reached the limit in St. Thomas. Alma College, a ladies' seminary, directed by Methodists, is asking a subsidy of $15,000 to enable it to avoid closing the doors. The building is a handsome one, that would cost perhaps $50,000. It has been in existence for twenty years or more. The ratepayers are asked to pass a by-law to raise $15,000. The ground of asking is that the institution distributes a great deal of money, and is a great advantage to the city, which indeed it is. It costs about $25,000 a year to maintain the college, most of which sum is spent for the necessaries of the table and fuel. From many standpoints it is an admirable institution to have in a city of St. Thomas size.

MUST GO HAND IN HAND

FAITH AND WORKS THE COMPLEMENTS OF EACH OTHER.

SHARP PRACTICE OF JACOB

Startling Illustration of the Central Truth of the Sermon From a Peculiar Text—Power of Mind Over Matter—A Sharp Arraignment of the Faith Curists—Example of the Great Healer Cited.

Entered according to Act of Parliament of Canada, in the year 1901, by William Baily, of Toronto, at the Dep't of Agriculture, Ottawa.

Los Angeles, Cal., April 10.—In this sermon the preacher shows that in sickness, as well as in health, God requires our co-operation and the exercise of our faith, and that the divine blessing follows this union of faith and works. The text is Genesis xxx, 39, "And the flocks brought forth cattle, ringstraked, speckled and spotted."

Laban, though a man of wealth and influence among the Hebrews of his day, was yet, like many rich men in our time, mean and unprincipled where a bargain was involved. In his compact with Jacob the weak points of his character were strikingly revealed. He had two daughters. "Leah was tender eyed, but Rachel was very, beautiful;" in other words, the elder sister was homely and unattractive. She was a maiden lady whom no one cared to marry; her eyes were inflamed, or watery, or "cast;" her disposition was evidently as much askew as her eyes. Jacob was deeply in love with the younger sister, but after he had served seven long years for her old Laban cheated him out of his promised bride and palmed off upon the young man the unattractive elder sister. Then, in order to win the younger sister, Jacob had to serve seven more long years, and as a result he had two wives instead of one.

At the end of his fourteen years of service Jacob prepared to leave his father-in-law's employ. He wanted to take his two wives and go off and build a home of his own somewhere. This, however, Laban did not wish him to do. So the crafty Laban made a contract with Jacob that if he would stay and continue in charge of his herds of cattle and flocks of sheep he, Laban, would give to the young man as payment for his services all the calves and the lambs and the kids that were born ringstraked or speckled or spotted. Jacob agreed to the bargain. But when he agreed the young man was craftier than the old man. As the father-in-law had been unprincipled with Jacob, so Jacob was unprincipled now with Laban. What did Jacob do? Did he allow nature to simply take its usual course? No. He began to scheme and to cunningly influence the colors of the calves, the kids and the lambs about to be born. He took some rods of green poplar and hazel and chestnut and laid those rods of white and black in the watering troughs of the herds and the flocks. Then, when the cows and the sheep and the goats came to drink out of the watering troughs the black and white rods reflected in the water made such a startling impression upon them that the calves, kids and lambs born thereafter were influenced by that prenatal shock, and most of them were ringstraked and spotted and speckled. Thus Jacob's herds grew larger than Laban's, and the craft of the unscrupulous son-in-law overreached the dishonesty of the father-in-law.

After Jacob placed the rods of green poplar and hazel and chestnut in the watering troughs the startling and far reaching effect produced upon the animals is not to be wondered at. If you place a stick in the water, by the laws of reflection that wood may seem to become a creature of life. I remember when a lad once dropping my fishing pole, and as it lay at the bottom of the brook the ripples made that rod look like a long serpent wriggling up-stream. As these cattle stoop to drink I see them start back as though a venemous hissing snake was lifting up his fatal fangs to strike. My text presents one of the best instances to be found in literature of the far reaching effect of the mind over the physical body.

We may grant to-day the influence of the mind over the body, but we do not go so far as to assert that all physical diseases or abnormalities are the direct results of mental hallucinations as the straked, spotted and speckled progeny of the cows, sheep and goats were the result of Jacob's wicked act. We do not advocate the theory that a surgeon's knife is only another name for a butcher's axe, that a modern hospital is only a Satanic incubator, that a medicine bottle is only fools' poison and that sickness is only a synonym for sin; but, as there are thousands and tens of thousands of men and women who honestly believe in "faith cure," pure and simple, as we term that definition, I have chosen in this sermon to preach on Jesus Christ as the Divine Healer and to show both from a Biblical and a common sense standpoint that the surgeon's knife and the physician's prescription have a part in the world's Christianization and civilization as well as the minister's pulpit and the consecrated school-teacher's desk.

The Bible teaches us that faith should always go hand in hand with works. The same divine laws which apply to men in ordinary walks of life apply also to the patient in the invalid's room or upon the hospital operating table. The Christ who stands by the sick bed is the same Christ who accompanies us when, in health and strength, we go forth to fight the great battle of life. Christ wants no drones in the busy human beehives of the world's struggle for daily bread. He wants no drones in the world's struggle for physical health. That struggle ought to be just as commendable in man's sight as is the struggle for daily bread. In the final extremity, when all human effort is exhausted, we may look to God alone; but until that point is reached we must both work and pray; work ceaselessly, and bravely, and hopelessly, and invoke the divine blessing on our labors.

But, though the whole trend of the Bible teaches that works and faith, as twin sisters, should go hand in hand in search of the waters of physical health, yet faith curists blind their eyes and stop their ears to these Biblical teachings. They get a hold on one little passage of Scripture and separate it from all its surrounding connections. As a sweet morsel they turn it over and over again. They magnify it. They distort it, and then they rest their entire belief upon it. These people may be good at heart, but they treat Scripture somewhat as a famous reformer did in the noted meeting he had with John Calvin in Munich, I believe, in about the year 1540. After he had valiantly helped to fight the battle of the reformation to a glorious and a successful issue he still clung tenaciously to the doctrine of transubstantiation. That doctrine, in plain language, means that when we drink of the communion wine and eat of the communion bread we literally are drinking of Christ's blood and eating of Christ's body. The other school of theological thought held that when we assemble at the communion table we only eat of Christ's body and drink of Christ's blood in symbol. We eat and drink in symbol, as the lamb's blood shed upon the Jewish altar was the symbol of Christ's blood about to be shed for us. This battle over transubstantiation raged bitterly for years between the two schools of religious thought.

In order to bring this theological conflict to a close the two schools persuaded the two leaders, John Calvin and this mighty man, to meet and discuss the theological questions at issue. What did this famous reformer do at that conference? History tells us that he brought along a tablecloth, upon which was embroidered these six words, taken from the twenty-sixth chapter of Matthew: "Take, eat; this is my blood." Then he placed that cloth over a table and simply rested his hand upon it and said nothing. No matter what arguments were brought forward, he answered nothing. All that he did was to point to the one sentence written upon the table, "Take, eat; this is my body." "But," said John Calvin, "Christ also said, 'I am the vine, ye are the branches.' Are you going to take that sentence literally? Does that sentence imply that Jesus is a stick?" But the reformer would answer nothing. All that he did was to point to the one sentence upon the table, which read, "Take, eat; this is my body." So in the same way the faith curists pure and simple will not accept the trend of the Bible's teachings. They will not compare passage with passage. They will not see that every leaf of every chapter of every book of the Bible teaches that faith must go hand in hand with works. They will not see that it is almost impossible to find an incident where Christ healed the sick unless at the same time he compelled action upon the part of those whom he would physically help.

Did not Christ compel action upon the part of him that was blind? After he had anointed the blind eyes with a moist clay did he not say unto the young man, "Go wash in the pool of Siloam?" He went his way, therefore, and washed and came seeing. Did not Christ compel action upon the part of the ten lepers? "Go show yourselves unto the priests. And it came to pass as they went they were cleansed." Did not God compel the leper Naaman to leave the far off Damascus and dip seven times in the Jordon before his flesh became like unto that of a little child? I am not here advocating any heretical idea that Christ cannot and will not in many cases heal our physical diseases, but I assert that as a people we have no more right to expect the Divine Physician to answer our prayers for health without any co-operative effort on our part than we have a right to expect our Divine Commissary to give us our daily bread without our working for it. We have just as much right to kneel down at night and say the Lord's Prayer, "Give us this day our daily bread," and then in our eagerness to expect next morning a visionary breakfast to jump out of a visionary fire and sizzle upon a visionary broiler and the water faucet to fill the pot with visionary coffee or the yeast to tumble the empty bread tray down the dummy filled with visionary hot toast as we have to expect the sick to be made well without our own effort upon which divine blessing has been invoked. Faith to react upon works; works always in the invalid's room to go hand in hand with faith!

If the Bible does not honor the medical profession why did Christ use as illustration this sentence for one of his sermons, "They that be whole need not a physician, but they that are sick?" Does not that divine statement mean, "They that are sick need a physician?" When Hezekiah was sick unto death he prayed to God to give him a longer lease of life. God answered that prayer. But how? Through human medicament. Isaiah, the prophet, told the nurse to make a poultice out of figs and put it upon the King's boil, and he recovered. Hezekiah prayed. Oh, yes. But in answer to that prayer God told him to use a sanctified poultice. What did Paul mean when he wrote to Timothy to "take a little wine for thy stomach's sake." Paul was merely prescribing a dose of medicine for a sick colleague. Paul writes thus to Timothy, because the Holy Land with but few exceptions, is noted for its impure waters; therefore Paul, as a common sense Christian, prescribes a little medicine when he says, "Drink no water, but use a little wine for thy stomach's sake." All through the Bible we find commendatory passages like these in reference to doctors. In no case do we find the medical profession anathematized and ridiculed in the Bible. Tyndall, the noted synthetic philosopher, once hurled at the Christian church his famous prayer challenge. Said he: "Let us set apart two wards in a hospital—one to be filled with men who do not take any human medicine but prayer, the other to be filled by sick patients under the care of competent physicians. Then let us compare results and see which is the most efficacious—a physician's prescription or a clergyman's prayer."

Again, faith cure, pure and simple, if accepted in its entirety of belief, would call a halt to the laboratory investigations made for prevention of disease as well as the physician's cures of those diseases after they have come. It would say to Edward Jenner: "Your discovery of vaccination is useless. Disease is a condition of the mind, not of the body. Let merciless smallpox start again if it will. The $50,000 voted to you by the British House of Parliament as the greatest benefactor of your generation was a nonsensical gift, for you have been a curse to the human race instead of a blessing." It would say to Pasteur: "Savant, your inoculation for hydrophobia is itself a species of madness. If the people would only trust God and do nothing the bite of the dog afflicted with rabies would be a tonic instead of death." It would say to Koch of Berlin and Finsen of Norway: "Foolish men, why hunt the bacilli of consumption and cancer with the penetrating eye of the microscope? God will and can cure disease if we will ask him. Let us pray that all these evil bacilli give one gasp and die, and they will die. The prevention of disease is entirely the work of the prayer chamber, not of the scientist's laboratory."

To most of us the old-fashioned doctor yet lives in the memory of our village childhood. He knew every family secret for miles around. He had heard the family skeleton rattling in many a dark closet. He was at every birth, at every marriage altar and at every funeral. With him the village church bell sounded a dirge almost as often as it chimed for a wedding. We knew not when we loved him the most—when he was gathering the rosebuds in the garden of the nativity or intwining the orange blossoms or placing the white lily alongside of the pale cheek in the casket. There was a kind of religious rattle in his old gig. That child was the most envied of the village who could sit by his side and hold the reins over the back of the old mare, that seemed to be just as old as the doctor and to know just as many family secrets, yet it could not gossip any more than did its master. When the boy was in trouble this kind old doctor would place his fatherly hand upon the lad's shoulder and give him advice. The young maiden would smile under the twinkle of his fatherly eye as he chatted to her of her first sweetheart. Even the bees would buzz louder and the dogs bark more happily, and their tails would wag faster as the doctor drove along. We remember the old black bag he always carried and the long white bandages he placed about the splints when we fell off the haymow and broke our arm. The strange looking bottles filled with pills—bottles that all looked alike—and the pills, too, seemed to be the same.

When the minister on the Sabbath day entered the pulpit and gave out the first hymn down the church aisle the good old doctor would always walk. He was always a little late for services. Doctors are always a little late. I think that is part of their education. It is never dignified for a doctor to be on time. In prayer meeting we loved to hear the good doctor pray. We have heard a good many great and noted ministers pray in our time, but we always thought the old doctor prayed better than any. He seemed to be so near to God—he had seen so much trouble. When the poor family over the hill was starving he bought them food out of his own pocket. We never knew how much good he did until after the funeral. He was part of every one's life. He was the poor man's helper.

One day the news went flying over the country roads, "The doctor, the good doctor is sick!" Was it not too bad that he could not prescribe for himself and take his own medicine? If he had we know he would have become well. But he could pray. How he did pray in his own sick-room! Then one day the news went over the country roads that the old doctor was dead! While we were gathering in the home where lay the wornout body of the tired old physician I can imagine that the good doctor went up to the gates of the New Jerusalem and timidly knocked. The gateman called out, "Who is there?" The old Christian answered: "Only a poor, wornout village doctor, who is advancing in Christ's name. Can I come in?" Then the Lord Almighty from his throne called out: "Let him in! Let him in! Let the village doctor come in!" And the angels in the celestial choir began to chime: "Let him in! Let the village doctor come in!" Then all the redeemed spirits over whose earthly deathbeds he had hovered cried: "Let him in! Let our village doctor come in!" Then Christ himself, the great Physician, came forth and led the wornout man to one of the highest thrones in heaven as he said: "Come in, friend. Come in. This is your throne. For I was sick and ye visited me!"

Will you not believe in such a consecrated physician? Will you not believe that by the sick bed faith can go hand in hand with works and the surgeon's knife and that the physician's prescriptions have a part in the civilization and the Christianization of the world? And will not you, O physician, be a Christian doctor, as well as you, O layman, a Christian patient?

All honor, then, to our Christian physicians, whose calling and office are thus divinely consecrated, and may a blessing rest upon their earnest efforts for the alleviation of the physical afflictions of the human race.

Togo's Task is Accomplished—General Consternation in Russia—Torpedoed the Battleship Petropavlovsk—Grand-Duke Seriously Injured.

A semi-official dispatch received at St. Petersburg confirms the report that the Russian battlehip Petropavlovsk has been sunk off Port Arthur, and that only four officers were saved, among them being the Grand Duke Cyril, who was wounded.

ADMIRAL MAKAROFF DROWNED.

It is officially announced at St. Petersburg that Vice-Admiral Makaroff was drowned at the time of the sinking of the battleship Petropavlovsk.

BATTLESHIP STRUCK A MINE.

Another report is to the effect that the telegram which Grand Duke Vladimir received was from Grand Duke Boris, brother of Grand Duke Cyril, announcing that the Petropavlovsk, of which Cyril was first officer, had been blown up by striking a Russian mine, only four officers escaping. The Grand Duke Cyril's wound was said to be slight. The telegram, according to this report, did not mention the losses sustained by the crew.

ATTACKED PORT ARTHUR ONCE MORE.

A private dispatch received at Chefoo from Port Arthur says that the Japanese attacked that place at daylight on April 13th, and that the full Russian fleet went out under Vice-Admiral Makaroff, and assisted by the fire of the forts, drove the enemy off. The dispatch also adds that the town was not damaged. The effect of the bombardment on the forts and fleet was not mentioned.

St. Petersburg, April 13.—While going out to meet the Japanese fleet off Port Arthur, the Petropavlovsk struck a mine in the outer roadstead, turned over and sank. Practically the whole of the crew were lost. Only four officers were saved, among them being the Grand Duke Cyril. The Petropavlovsk was flying the flag of Vice-Admiral Makaroff. The result of the naval battle, which according to the most reliable reports was in progress, according to the last reports has not been received.

TRIED TO INTERCEPT CRUISER.

The action fought off Port Arthur appears to have consisted, according to the reports at Wei-Hai-Wei, of an unsuccessful attempt made by four Japanese cruisers and one battleship to intercept a large Russian cruiser coming from the east. The Russian protected cruiser Askold, and a battleship of the Pobeida type, went to the assistance of the Russian cruiser referred to. The forts at Port Arthur did not participate in the action. The firing was continuous, but was of short duration.

The Espiegle, which brought the news to Wei-Hai-Wei, was unable, owing to the distance, to ascertain the damage done.

BETWEEN 600 AND 700 PERISHED.

It is estimated that between 600 and 700 men perished when the Petropavlovsk sank.

SAVED BY A MIRACLE.

Another account says twenty men escaped from the disaster to the Petropavlovsk. Grand Duke Cyril was only saved from death by a miracle. His brother, Grand Duke Boris, witnessed the catastrophe through a marine glass.

BATTLE STILL IN PROGRESS.

According to very high authority the latest advices received at the winter palace in St. Petersburg are to the effect that a naval battle is still progressing off Port Arthur.

RUSSIANS BECAME OVER-CONFIDENT.

A London dispatch says :—There has been a naval battle off Port Arthur, in which the Russian battleship Petropavlovsk was sunk, and two other vessels seriously damaged. The Petropavlovsk was sunk by a torpedo. All those who escaped were wounded. It is believed that the Japanese allowed Admiral Makaroff to become over-confident, and during one of his sorties intercepted him and took him prisoner. Should the report prove true it will be a serious blow for the Russian cause.

PROVISIONS ROTTING.

The Vorwaerts of Berlin reports that the transportation of Russian troops to the front in unheated cars continues. Wholesale ravages are occurring among the troops along the trans-Siberian line, while thousands who reached Manchuria alive are disabled because of frozen limbs. Supplies at the front are also reported as being in bad condition; the greater part of the flour at Port Arthur is rotted and damp, and as a consequence the provisions will last for one year only, instead of five.

MARKET REPORT.

Weekly Review of Prices Culled From The Commercial.

GRAIN AND PRODUCE.

FLOUR—The market is steady with a fair demand. We quote: Hungarian Patent, $2.75 per sack of 98 lbs, delivered to the trade; Glenora Patent $2.60; Strong Bakers $2.20; and NXXX $2.00. These prices are subject to the usual trade discounts.

MILL FEED—Bran is temporarily out of the market, as mills have none to offer. Shorts, however, are more plentiful. We quote: Bran nominally $18 per ton, in bulk, delivered to the trade; shorts $19 per ton.

GROUND FEED—There is a big demand among farmers, who are laying in stocks for spring feed. We quote: Oat chop $28 per ton, delivered to the trade; barley chop $22; mixed barley and oats $25; oil cake $27 per ton.

OATS—There is at present no surplus stock, but the demand is strong for oats of good quality. Prices are firmer. No. 2 white in carlots on track are worth 38 to 39c here, and feed grades 37 to 37½c. Farmers' loads in the country bring 31 to 33c, and on the street here 37 to 38c.

BARLEY—Malting grades are not offering. Feed barley cannot now be bought here for less than 42 to 43c.

FLAXSEED—Market nominal.

SPELTZ—Owing to the demand for seed and the scarcity of supplies, the price is up 10c to 45c.

BUTTER — Creamery — Importations from Ontario are filling the demand at present, and for this butter 26 to 27c is being realized in a jobbing way.

BUTTER—Dairy—There is very little dairy butter coming in. A few shippers who have special lines to offer get 25c per pound for fresh made rolls or bricks. Fine package butter would bring 18c here, but round lots are not worth more than 14 and 15c in a wholesale way.

EGGS—Stocks of eggs are very light and the market is quiet. Fresh eggs are bringing 26c delivered to the trade, but country shipments of case lots are not quotable at more than 23c, and in the event of receipts improving to any extent the market will go down rapidly.

HIDES—Quotations have been very steady and trade light, although the farmers are rushing their frozen stock before the warm weather sets in. Abattoir hides, 6c for No. 1's; 5c for No. 2's; and 4c for No. 3's. Country hides are steady at 5 to 5½c per lb, less usual tare. Brands have been more than ordinarily numerous of late, owing to the fact that city butchers have had to send to the ranges for almost all their cattle.

TALLOW—No. 1 tallow is worth 4½c per pound delivered at Winnipeg, and No. 2 3c.

SENECA ROOT—The market is nominal, as there is no root moving. A little is held by some city dealers, the price being about 50c per pound.

LIVE STOCK.

CATTLE—There are a few beef cattle coming in, enough to supply abattoir and butchers' requirements. These are bringing as high as 4½c off cars here for choice, and from that figure the market ranges down to 3½c for inferior grades. Reports from the west note that the stories respecting losses among the range cattle during the recent storm were exaggerated; at least the losses were not widespread. Some districts suffered rather severely, but others, notably Medicine Hat, escaped with slight losses. There is a good demand for stocker cattle this spring, and all offerings are readily sold. Perhaps the value can best be shown by the statement that one lot of 500 head was contracted for here this week at a price of $13 per head for yearlings, off cars Winnipeg, in May.

SHEEP—The market is nominal, as there are none offering.

HOGS—The market is quiet and unchanged. Hogs weighing form 160 to 250 pounds are worth 5c per pound off cars here; light and heavy weights ½ to 1c less.

MILCH COWS—Good cows are scarce and dear. Prices range from $35 to $55 each, according to quality.

TWO RECORDS

The Relation of Education to Crime and Criminals.

Judge Jaggard, of St. Paul, recently delivered an address before the Minnesota Teachers' Association, on the subject of "The Relation of Education and the Public Schools to Crime and Criminals." The sole tone of the address was to show the importance of early training, in both home and school, in the prevention of crime, and the result of good or bad moral influences. By way of illustration he compared the records of two well known American families, those of Jonathan Edwards and Max Jukes. Edwards was born in Connecticut in 1703. In 1900 there had been identified 1,394 of his descendants. Of these 80 held public office, including vice-president of the United States, United States senators, congressmen, governors and the like. Seventy-five were officers of the army and navy. Eighty were presidents or professors in colleges. Sixty were authors and editors. Nearly 500 more were fairly entitled to have their services registered in "Who's Who in America."

Max Jukes, a drunkard, was born in 1720. Up to 1874, 1,200 of his descendants had been inmates of penal and charitable institutions. They spent 2,300 years in poorhouses. They lived probably more years in prisons. Each descendant, it is estimated, cost the state $1,600, on an average. Max Jukes and his progeny in other words, cost the nation almost $1,500,000.

The judge is a strong supporter of the kindergarten, and quoted the words of an eminent penologist, who said: "Every dollar that the state spends in providing wise and uniform nurture of its children which they need before reaching the school age, is worth ten spent after that in correction and education, and a thousand expended for protection from criminality and the reformation of criminals." This statement agrees with the best thoughts of the day. Too much attention is paid to the effect of crime and not enough to the cause. In dealing with present methods of education in the graded schools, Judge Jaggard said: "Greater opportunities for training in concrete things are needed in all our lower schools. Most children dislike abstractions. Almost all of them are interested in some form of machinery, carpentry, agriculture and natural history. They must be made to learn the three R's. They must have discipline and drill. They learn best, however, where they are interested most. Members of your school board would not harness a fawn to a plow or an ox to a track sulky; nor would they feed a chicken the same as they would a prize steer. Fictions are as dangerous in school methods as a constructive entity is in law or a lie is in morals. Therefore, your school board should give you the means for teaching both mind and hand. Therefore, you should have facilities and apparatus for manual, industrial, mechanical and agricultural training. This will cost money, but not much money. Moreover, it costs money to be honest, and to be a Christian. The disbursements will more than pay for themselves by saving innocent children from becoming unhappy brigands."

The charge emanating from Russian sources to the effect that the Japanese troops engaged in the fight at Cheng Ju on April 29th abused the privilege of the Red Cross flag by taking refuge in a building occupied as a hospital, is indignantly denied at Tokio, and is prooounced a fabrication designed to injure the Japanese in the eyes of the world. An official investigation shows that the Japanese forces engaged at Cheng Ju had established a bandage station in the rear of their firing line, and it was used exclusively for the purpose of caring for the wounded. The Japanese Red Cross is an old and extensive organization, which did good service in the war with China. Both the society and the army have been found anxious in this war to conduct the work according to the ideals of civilization.

Swearing Spoils Horses.

The horse does not like a nervous, fidgety, fussy or irritable man. He is too nervous and irritable himself, says Country Life In America.

"Why is it," one teamster was heard to ask another, "that Phin's horses are always gaunt? Phin feeds well." "Yes," was the reply, "but he's like a wasp around a horse."

A well known owner of race horses, not at all a sentimental person, recently made an order forbidding his employees to talk in loud tones or to swear in the stable. "I have never yet seen a good mannered horse," he says, "that was being sworn at all the time. It hurts the feelings of a sensitive horse, and I'll keep my word good to discharge any man in my employ if I catch him swearing within the hearing of any horse in this stable."

Brides Priced.

To us it seems a curious whim on the part of our ancestors of the eighteenth century that in their marriage announcements they should so often choose and with such seeming complacency to enlighten the world with regard to the amount of fortune received with the brides. Here are two cases in point: "Mr. James Coutts of Jeffry's Sq., merchant, to Miss Peagrum of Knightsbridge, £30,000." "W. Smith, gentleman, of the 2d Troop of Horse Guards, to Mrs. Ann Gardiner, a maiden lady, aged, 'tis said, near 70, with a fortune of £20,000."

A UNIQUE LIBRARY.

Mr. Barnett's Collection of Shakesperian Works Is a Veritable Encyclopædia.

Stratford, up to the G.T.R., is famous for being the place where Shakespeare lies buried—by proxy. The wards are named from Shakespeare, and some of the schools also. There is a Romeo School, but, alas! no Juliet. There is a Hamlet School, and by the irony of coincidence, its recent teacher was a man named MacBeth.

But the most unmistakably Shakespearen feature of Stratford is the library of Mr. J. D. Barnett, in Romeo Ward, says Kodak in Toronto News. Mr. Barnett was formerly master mechanic of the Grand Trunk shops in that city. As a youth he came to this country, when railways were young, with eleven volumes of Shakespeare in his grip. This was the beginning. Mr. Barnett's present Shakespearian library runs into thousands of volumes, and occupies two rooms, one of them a large parlor with a double cordon of books as high as the ceiling. He has all the available texts of Shakespeare's plays, most of the commentaries extant, and as many as possible of the commentaries on the commentaries. He has also some of the controversies on the latter, with the marginal manuscript annotations of the ingenious disputants. These, like his uncountable collection of miscellaneous books, have been picked up by Mr. Barnett during forty years of pilgrimages among book-stalls in both the Old and the New World. Where other men perpetuated their hobbies in dogs, horses, and Egyptian relics, Mr. Barnett had but one indestructible hobby—books. The result is that his Stratford library is perhaps the most remarkable private library in Canada, if not in America, and his collection of Shakesprarian is a veritable encyclopaedia, from the most antiquated dust-covered tome, ponderous and erudite, to the latest Shakespearian cartoon or squibs of doggerel. The catholicity of the great bard has thus another monument. Washington Irving would have added another chapter to his Sketch Book if he could have seen this library. Mr. Barnett's stupendous aggregation of books, ancient, mediaeval and modern, is one more proof that even a master mechanic, in an age of wheels, may indulge a lifelong passion romantic.

Dr. Hutton on Canadian Character.

"Canadian National Character" was the subject chosen by Dr. Maurice Hutton, Principal of University College, in a recent address at the Empire Club at Toronto. Plato, in discussing where there could be found the combination of the strong and the gentle, which made up the best type of character, could only find in the watch-dog the true ideal blend. But to-day Plato could be told that in the Canadians would be found a more ideal combination of the various blends which make up the best form of character. In Canada were to be found all the ancient blends brought across from the Motherland. There were the people from the North of Ireland, where the Saxon met the Celt and produced a type stronger than either. There were the descendants of the Huguenots, a combination of the Saxon and the Norman, and better than either. Then the English, Saxons and Normans and Danes and Britons were here, and there was another type the Motherland did not have. We are sharing this country with the French people, nearer, than any other to the ancient Greeks and whose more subtle and delicate intelligence corrects the sterner qualities of the Anglo-Saxon.

In addition to these blends we have the same reliance, resourcefulness and energy which mark the Americans, but with a better climate to develop these characteristics and without the quarrelsome, mischief-making, and demagogism which have been the curse of American diplomacy from the days of Washington to the Alaskan and Panama instances of sharp practices. Canadians lived simply, there was an absence of the wealth and luxury and ease which hinder advance, and there was an inspiring pride and hope in our broad acres and great resources. Therefore Plato might be asked if he did not think that the Canadian people combined all the points of character which he wanted for his ideal state.

Dr. Hutton urged more close intercourse between the English-speaking and French elements, and asked why we should not add to the Union Jack as a Canadian flag the Bourbon lilies, which have now no other home.

The Selfish Rich.

Mr. Chamberlain might with advantage reflect on the fact that while the much-abused multi-millionaires of America have given of their own free will fully £60,000,000 for technical schools and colleges, as well as libraries, the wealthy classes of this country have only given £2,500,000. In our case the vast fortunes made from trade appear to have gone to building up titled families.—London Daily Chronicle.

Dwarf Trees for Small Gardens.

The modifications that plants undergo are sufficient to convince one of the great possibilities which await those who choose to make use of them to secure a large return from a limited area. It is well known that in proportion to size dwarf trees are more fruitful than standards, that they come into bearing sooner and are therefore of special value for use in limited inclosures or fruit gardens.

Not What She Meant.

One of the German women who accompanied George I. to England was hissed and hooted at by the crowd as she was being driven along the mall to St. James' Palace. Putting her head out of the coach, she called out in broken English: "Good people, why you abuse us? We come for all your goods." "Yes," answered a man in the crowd, "and for our chattels too."

THE CANADIAN SEA.

Mr. W. F. Maclean on Hudson's Bay—Believes It to Be the Front Door of Canada, and It Must Be Secure.

Before the Canadian Club recently Mr. W. F. Maclean, M.P., renewed his agitation for the changing of the name of Hudson's Bay to the Canadian Sea. In the course of his remarks he said:

Probably the greatest basin in the world was that of the Mississippi River for the extent and variety of its products—cotton, corn, wheat, animals of all kinds, coal, iron and all other minerals. Then there was the basin of the St. Lawrence, dominated for its greater part at least by Canada. But there was another, he believed, greater than either of these. Hudson's Bay, which drained Ungava, a large part of Ontario and Quebec, Manitoba, the Territory of Keewatin, Saskatchewan, Athabasca and Alberta, all regions of great wheat fields and all absolutely under Canadian control. There was every reason why they should keep it and keep the entrance to it. Hudson's Bay was the front door and the central door of Canada, and they would put a knocker on it so that those who came would have to wipe their feet on a Canadian door mat if they wanted to receive a warm welcome.

Hudson's Bay fisheries were, he had been informed, the richest in the world. The surrounding country was one fitted for adventure and for exploration that would provide enough to occupy Canadians for a hundred years. It was rich in minerals, and was, as he had said, the central gateway to Canada. Not only would it open up the vast districts he had mentioned, but it would, he believed, tap the upper portion of the vast Mississippi Basin. It was necessary to send expeditions to open up that territory. The shore of Hudson's Bay was only 400 miles from Toronto and only 200 miles from some of the stations on the C.P.R.

Perhaps it would not be necessary in the first place to build a railway line the whole way, as the Ottawa River might be used for a time for transportation purposes. Only a short portage was needed to carry them into the basin of the Mackenzie River, and from there to the Peace River. Then, Hudson's Bay provided the nearest route to Europe. If Canadians wished to profit by their country they must open up this waste region—they must be up and doing. The United States had a Monroe Doctrine, and here we must have a Canadian Monroe doctrine, and live up to it.

Hudson's Bay would, he declared, become the finest summer resort in America. Toronto people who now went to the States would have their summer cottage there.

Hudson's Bay had been stated to offer the best seal breeding ground in the world, and the Government should take up that question. It offered the shortest route to Europe, and it opened up great possibilities for the eastern trade. Canadians should take an example from the Japanese and what they had done during the last quarter of a century. The time would come when they would have to face this question of Canadian supremacy, for if Uncle Sam once got his foot in he would soon have his whole body. There must be a defensive and commercial union with the Motherland and this did not mean an abandonment of a protectionist policy. It was possible for each part of the Empire to develop its own resources and to so connect itself commercially with the Empire as to stand one with the other and build up the whole. The mother country must respect Canada's view and not interfere with her aspirations. Canada must control Hudson's Bay absolutely—it was the front and central door, and a knocker must be put on it. Canada must be made so strong that it will remain a nation while the nations last, and they must all take their share in maintaining the Canadian Monroe Doctrine and developing Hudson's Bay.

Our Japanese Agent.

Mr. Alexander MacLean of Ottawa, who has just been appointed Commercial Agent for Canada to Japan, was in his earlier days a prominent newspaper man. He established The Mitchell Reformer in 1861, published The Cornwall Freeholder from 1865 to 1872, was Ottawa correspondent of The Globe from 1872 to 1874, was proprietor and publisher of The Ottawa Times, 1874-1875, and was managing director of The Montreal Herald, 1894-1895. With Mr. J. C. Roger he obtained in 1874 the contract for the Parliamentary and departmental printing at Ottawa, and held it until the Printing Bureau was established in 1888. In the meantime he had turned his attention to manufacturing, and in 1885 established the Canadian Granite Company, and three years later the Ottawa Granolithic Paving Company, of both of which he was president. He took considerable interest in municipal matters, and was an alderman for several terms. In politics he is a Liberal, and was for a term president of the Ottawa Reform Association. He has also been president of the St. Andrew's Society, of the Ottawa Art School and of the Central Canada Exhibition Association.

Lord Dundonald's Invention.

During the recent visit to the coast by Lord Dundonald, commander of the military forces in Canada, he exhibited to Chief Engineer Grant, of the Quadra, a little pocket-warming device of his own invention, which he said he had found very useful in campaigns where the weather was severe. It is a miniature stove, burning carbon as fuel, and is comforting and beneficial when one is afflicted with various slight bodily pains. Mr. Grant expressed a desire to become possessed of one, and Lord Dundonal gave a promise he would forward one from Ottawa. It arrived yesterday, and it is highly prized by Mr. Grant.—Victoria Colonist.

FERNIE'S TERRIBLE CONFLAGRATION

The long expected fire demon has visited Fernie and the business part of the town now lies in ashes. The fire broke out in C. Richards general store at 3 a.m. today and at 8 a.m. almost the entire commercial part of the town was in flames or already reduced to ashes or smouldering embers.

The fire had gained some headway before it was noticed, and in the absence of a regular fire alarm considerable time elapsed before many of those most directly interested were on the scene. The chemical engine did not reach the fire for probably 20 minutes after the first alarm was given. H. Wilkes claims the chemical engine did good work in Richards store but that he had no one who understood it to assist him after he became overcome with the smoke. The hose was quickly attached to the water main, and to the utter chagrin of everybody it was found that the pressure was almost entirely off, so much as to render this means entirely useless, Mitchell's tailor shop caught as the flames gained headway. Then the Fernie Drug Store and the Victoria Hotel on the north side and the Todd block, the doctor's office and Richards' warehouse on the south. Then a few moments' breathing space followed the crucial point when a little water would have saved the entire north end beyond Wood St. The water almost entirely failed, so much so that bucket brigades could not secure sufficient water to fill their buckets, and most of the water so used was secured from that stored in tanks connected with stoves. It was felt by many at this time that even under these adverse conditions the fire might be confined to the Victoria block as little breeze was blowing and a gentle rain was falling. The crowd could do nothing but idly await developments. The walls of the Victoria went down in a whirl of roaring flames creating a heat so intense that cameron's house and the Muskoka hotel burst into flames. The remainder of the story is easily told. Quickly the fire shot across again and the coal company office was in flames, then the Fernie Hotel was burning.

The fiery demon the raged northward up both sides of Victoria Ave. The Crow's Nest Trading Co. The three large and well stocked stores of the Trites-Wood Co. and then the Royal hotel on the west side. McEwing & Slinn's bakery; Fred Stork: J.D. Quails' hardware; Sinkbeils, boots and shoes, and the Hill block, where Liphardts jewelry store is situated;on the east side. Still the demon was unappeased. The Bank of Commerce across Cox street ignited, then Cuthbert's block followed suit, which was followed by Christ church. A big fight ensued here which resulted in saving F. J. Watson's residence and Hotel Northern. Tnis was the the end of the fight on the west side. In the meantime Burns' block was burning and the numerous small buildings leading to the Salvation Army were in flames. Here heroic efforts partially saved W. Ingrams house which checked the flames in that direction.

The wind shifted [illegible] the west and the flames leaped ac[illegible] lane into the Alberta hotel bloc[illegible]ling that building, Pollock's wh[illegible] liquior; the Waldorf : Cody's hous[illegible]rown's house and the Gem restau[illegible] here the fire died for lack of fuel. The fire previously had taken the chinese quarter and the Carosella liquor store. The calgary cattle co., in the Turner block, caught early from the Victoria, and the central hotel had a narrow shave, but a hard fight saved it. And that was the fire and on the anniversary of the Frank slide.

Nearly the whole of six business blocks were consumed, which contained at a rapid estimate, about 65 business firms. The total loss will exceed half a million dollars and probably the figures will reach $750,000. The insurance will amount to about $250,000.

The cause of the fire is unknown but it is thought it may have originated from a defective electric light wire in Richard's store. M. Young who was in that building late last night stated that he left everything perfectly safe so far as he knew.

The Coal company sent word to the mines to put on extra water pressure and a large pump was utilized to add to the power. The water pipes were evidently blocked with mud, but a perceptible difference was noted after the pump was put on. The water it may be added, was weak all day yesterday, and the pressure decreased so much in the night that sufficient water could not be got to draw the ovens.

The commercial buildings saved are the Northern Hotel, Robbin's furniture, Sheppard & Elliots' hardware, Rogers' tobacco stand, the Free Press. These buildings were stripped of goods to a large extent, The printing office was badly upset and it is with difficulty that this edition is run off at such short notice. On the outskirts, the Queen's Hotel and the Roma Hotel are of course, saved. Only one church was destroyed.

An estimate of the individual losses with insurance is as follows.

The Trites-Wood co. total loss, buildings and stock nearly $120,000, insurance $80,000,

c. Richards, general merchandise, loss $40,000, insurance $28,000.

F. J. Mitchell, tailor, loss $3500, insurance $2,000.

J. L. Gates, Alberta Hotel, stock, etc., loss $3,000, insurance $1,000.

M. A. Kastner's companies have about twenty-five thousand dollar insurance.

The caledmian and Manchester are involved for ten thousand dollars. The total insurance will reach two hundred and fifty thousand dollars.

WILL BUILD AGAIN.

Fernie, with characteristic energy, will rise from its ashes a better and a larger town Already, while the embers are still smoking, several are doing business in temporary quarters. Postmaster Johnson has opened his office in the Steele & co. studio, opposite the Free Press. The Burns co. have opened their meat shop in the Salvation Army barracks, and the calgary cattle co. are in Kerr's carpenter shop.

The crow's Nest Pass coal co. are already well established in the old bunkhouse on Pellatt ave. Mr. Stockett, who arrived on the morning train from St. Paul as the fire was dying down, stated that the coal creek mines would resume work on Monday.

The Trites-Wood co. have rented the vacant store opposite the Roma and will be in shape to-morrow.

Messrs. cree & Hutchison are doing business in a tent with a characteristic sign painted on the wall behind them "we pay all claims."

S. F. Wallace will have his hotel replaced in sixty days. Fred. Stork will rebuild. W. W. Tuttle will build a large brick hotel. Tom Whelan will rebuild at once. J. L. Gates will transfer his hotel to the Tremont hotel. carosella will open up in a temporary building.

BROTHERLY KINDNESS.

The Free Press is in receipt of prompt wires from Editor Simpson of the Cranbrook Herald and Editor Grace of the Fort Steele Prospector, each tendering their assistance to us. It gives us great pleasure to acknowledge these friendly offers, and we tender our sincere thanks. The Free Press did not suffer materially, and, beyond some destruction to stock in moving, and in the upsetting of machinery and some type, we escaped damage. Had we needed assistance it would have been gratefully accepted in the same spirit that it was offered.

THERE WAS LOOTING.

The action of many by-standers during the big conflagration and after is deserving of severest condemnation. The hotels were looted for whiskey, and the streets became crowded with drunken men. The police took active measures to recover stolen liquors and other goods. A large number of special constables were sworn in, and the hotels were ordered to close their bars. The scenes on vacant streets and the old recreation grounds baffled description. Here in the drenching rain was piled innumerable heaps of household and store goods.

FERNIE'S TERRIBLE CONFLAGRATION

The long expected fire demon has visited Fernie and the business part of the town now lies in ashes. The fire broke out in C. Richards general store at 3 a.m. today and at 8 a.m. almost the entire commercial part of the town was in flames or already reduced to ashes or smouldering embers.

The fire had gained some headway before it was noticed, and in the absence of a regular fire alarm considerable time elapsed before many of those most directly interested were on the scene. The chemical engine did not reach the fire for probably 20 minutes after the first alarm was given. H. Wilkes claims the chemical engine did good work in Richards store but that he had no one who understood it to assist him after he became overcome with the smoke. The hose was quickly attached to the water main, and to the utter chagrin of everybody it was found that the pressure was almost entirely off, so much as to render this means entirely useless, Mitchell's tailor shop caught as the flames gained headway. Then the Fernie Drug Store and the Victoria Hotel on the north side and the Todd block, the doctor's office and Richards' warehouse on the south. Then a few moments' breathing space followed the crucial point when a little water would have saved the entire north end beyond Wood St. The water almost entirely failed, so much so that bucket brigades could not secure sufficient water to fill their buckets, and most of the water so used was secured from that stored in tanks connected with stoves. It was felt by many at this time that even under these adverse conditions the fire might be confined to the Victoria block as little breeze was blowing and a gentle rain was falling. The crowd could do nothing but idly await developments. The walls of the Victoria went down in a whirl of roaring flames creating a heat so intense that Cameron's house and the Muskoka hotel burst into flames. The remainder of the story is easily told. Quickly the fire shot across again and the coal company office was in flames, then the Fernie Hotel was burning.

The fiery demon the raged northward up both sides of Victoria Ave. The Crow's Nest Trading Co. The three large and well stocked stores of the Trites-Wood Co. and then the Royal hotel on the west side. McEwing & Slinn's bakery; Fred Stork: J.D. Quails' hardware; Sinkbeils, boots and shoes, and the Hill block, where Liphardts jewelry store is situated;on the east side. Still the demon was unappeased. The Bank of Commerce across Cox street ignited, then Cuthbert's block followed suit, which was followed by Christ church. A big fight ensued here which resulted in saving F. J. Watson's residence and Hotel Northern. This was the the end of the fight on the west side. In the meantime Burns' block was burning and the numerous small buildings leading to the Salvation Army were in flames. Here heroic efforts partially saved W. Ingrams house which checked the flames in that direction.

The wind shifted into the west and the flames leaped across the lane into the Alberta hotel block, levelling that building, Pollock's wholesale liquior; the Waldorf; Cody's house; J. Brown's house and the Gem restaurant; where the fire died for lack of fuel. The fire previously had taken the chinese quarter and the Carosella liquor store. The calgary cattle co., in the Turner block, caught early from the Victoria, and the central hotel had a narrow shave, but a hard fight saved it. And that was the fire and on the anniversary of the Frank slide.

Nearly the whole of six business blocks were consumed, which contained at a rapid estimate, about 65 business firms. The total loss will exceed half a million dollars and probably the figures will reach $750,000. The insurance will amount to about $250,000.

The cause of the fire is unknown but it is thought it may have originated from a defective electric light wire in Richard's store. M. Young who was in that building late last night stated that he left everything perfectly safe so far as he knew.

The Coal company sent word to the mines to put on extra water pressure and a large pump was utilized to add to the power. The water pipes were evidently blocked with mud, but a perceptible difference was noted after the pump was put on. The water it may be added, was weak all day yesterday, and the pressure decreased so much in the night that sufficient water could not be got to draw the ovens.

The commercial buildings saved are the Northern Hotel, Robbin's furniture, Sheppard & Elliots' hardware, Rogers' tobacco stand, the Free Press. These buildings were stripped of goods to a large extent, The printing office was badly upset and it is with difficulty that this edition is run off at such short notice. On the outskirts, the Queen's Hotel and the Roma Hotel are of course, saved. Only one church was destroyed.

An estimate of the individual losses with insurance is as follows.

The Trites-Wood co. total loss, buildings and stock nearly $120,000, insurance $80,000,

C. Richards, general merchandise, loss $40,000, insurance $28,000.

LOCALS

Rev. Mr. Bartlett, of Russell, Manitoba, has been engaged as rector of Christ Church. He will take up his work here on June 1st.

A miner by the name of Mountford succumbed to a lingering disease at the Michel hospital on Tuesday. He had been in the hospital since January suffering from an abscess of the brain and a form of tuberculosis. He was a single man and came from England.

Tony Caravetta received a nasty kick on the leg from a fractious horse.

Chas. Clingensmith was in town this week buying furniture to fit out a boarding house at Moyie.

The Amateur Athletic Association meeting called for Tuesday evening did not materialize as a sufficient number did not turn out to make a quorum. The meeting was therefore adjourned until Wednesday, May 4th at 8 p.m. in the same place, Cuthbert's store. The significant fact that the sporting enthusiasts of the town do not take a lively interest in this organization throws some doubt on the generally accepted meaning of the term.

Fernie, April 22, 1904.

Mr. F. J. Watson,
Agent London Mutural Fire Insurance Co. Fernie, B. C.

Dear Sir:—I am much pleased with the prompt settlement made in full this date by the London Mutural Fire Insurance Co. for Fire loss sustained on the 3rd inst. John F. Jarvis.

Mr. and Mrs. Alexander Black, of Winnipeg, arrived in Fernie on Friday last and remained here several days. They spent the Winter in California and Honolulu and visited their son Robert, who is ill in Victoria, on their way home.

Mrs. Richard Joyce and children left on Wednesday for Maycok where her husband has been filling the position of postmaster for some time and where they will in future reside. Mr. Joyce was in town a few days previous to assist in the moving.

The Base-ball Club are making arrangementt for a ball in Princess Hall on the night of May 2nd. Tickets will cost $1.50 and the proceeds are to go towards assisting the finances of the club. There is no doubt that the effort will meet with the support it deserves. The base-ball club promises to put a good nine in the field this year. One or two good players are coming from Nanaimo and a third basemen named Arnie Arneyson arrived this week from Spokane to reside in Fernie.

Shipman's Comedians drew a large house on Saturday night. Their high class vaudeville entertainment easily fulfilled the high expectations of the audience and none went away disappointed. Bert Harvey's good voice and clever impersonations called for repeated encores. Miss Courtney also captivated the house with her excellent imitations, her new songs and pretty stage effects. Mr. Kenny's parts were well taken throughout. Mildred Keith in the two sketches called "Chums" and "The Matinee Girls" performed her part in a charming manner. The program consists wholly of light comedy. It abounds in wholesome fun and it does not fail to amuse from start to finish. Mr. Shipman had added "another feather to his cap" by getting together such a company of comedians.

Notice is hereby given that sixty days after date, I intend to apply to the Chief Commissioner of Lands and Works for permission to purchase one hundred acres of land, more or less, situate as follows:—Commencing at a post marked "R. W. Wood's N. E. corner post" planted at the South East corner of John Brown's application to purchase, (surveyed as lot 4141, Group 1, Kootenay District), thence South forty chains, thence West to the Kootenay River; thence up stream to the South West corner of said lot 4141; thence East to the point of commencement and including also the two low islands in the Kootenay River opposite the above described land and excepting from the first described part, the right of way of the Crow's Nest Southern Railway.

R. W. WOOD.
Dated March 4th, A.D., 1904.

A TRAGIC ACCIDENT

JOHN MACLEOD MORTALLY WOUNDED BY A RIFLE SHOT

"Unloaded Gun" Went Off in the Hands of Arthur Chapman. Heartfelt Grief Throughout the Town.

A heavy gloom settled over the town last Saturday evening as the news spread around with lightning rapidity that "Johnnie" Macleod had been accidently shot and that no hopes could be entertained for his recovery. The story is a particularly sad one and calls for the deepest sympathy of everyone who knows the suffering boy and his estimable, widowed mother.

John, who has been employed for some months in Herchmer & Herchmer's law office over Burn's meat store, was not very busy last Saturday afternoon and he spent some of his time below. At about four o'clock, Arthur Chapman, who drives Burn's butcher cart went out to the stable behind the store to get a roll of paper and John accompanied him. The latter remarked to his companion as he entered the stable that he thought he knew a certain man who was talking with another person on the balcony of the Alberta Hotel, and he went to the little window in the stable and drew himself up to get a better view, while Arthur got the paper. The latter on going through the passage-way which leads into the hayroom where the paper was, saw a little rifle standing in the corner. He picked it up saying at the same time, "Look here Johnnie." In the same instant, before John could turn around, a sharp report was heard and Arthur hastily caught his companion as the latter reeled to the floor. Arthur, seeing he was shot, hastily ran for a doctor while the wounded boy set up a cry for help. D. McRae, the man standing on the Alberta balcony whom John had thought he recognized, heard his cry though he had not heard the rifle report, and he asked two men who were passing to look into the stable to see what the trouble was. They did so and found John lying there, quite conscious but utterly unable to move his lower extremities. He did not then know that he was shot, but thought he had fallen and broken his back. Constable Sampson was soon at the scene and had him tenderly removed to the hospital where Doctors Corsan and Bonnell made a hasty examination. They found that the bullet had entered in the centre of the back, between the shoulders, completely severing the spinal cord. They pronounced the wound to be a mortal one and that it would be useless to recover the bullet which was lodged somewhere in the chest.

The young patient has had the best of attention since then and he is bravely holding his own against what he fully realizes must come sooner or later. His body below the wound is limp and powerless but his brain is clear and active. One or more of his relatives or friends are with him all the time and his slightest wish is gratified. The doctors claim that he may drop off any day and that he may live for weeks, but nothing can save his life.

Arthur Chapman feels his position keenly. He was one of John's firmest friends, and he grieves deeply over the tragic act. Arthur states that he picked the gun up by the stock with the right hand and then clapsed the barrel with the left. He had gloves on but the left glove was partly off. He did not touch the trigger with either hands and he did not understand what caused it to go off. The general opinion is that the gun was cocked when picked up and that Arthur's gloved finger, unknown to him, pressed the trigger as he transferred part of its weight to his left hand.

John Macleod is seventeen years old. He worked for a couple of years in the Fernie Drug Store. He was a bright boy at school and has since been of great assistance to his mother, whose husband was killed in the big explosion. John is liked by everybody because of his courteous and manly bearing, traits which show a careful home training, and universal sympathy is felt for him and his relatives in their great affliction.

LOCALS

Mrs. L. M. Proctor entertained a large number of friends at an At Home at her beautiful residence yesterday afternoon.

A very pleasant surprise party was held at the home of Mr. D. V. Mott on Tuesday evening.

G. Thomson, brother of W. W. Thomson left on Tuesday for Edmonton where he has secured a responsible position in one of the leading commercial houses.

A mud slide occurred a mile and a half this side of Morrissey Junction on Tuesday morning. W. Forrest who saw the slide as it came down proceeded on towards Fernie to warn the express if it happened to be near. A freight train from the other direction ran into the slide from the other direction derailing the engine. The express which got into Fernie at 10:30 was held here until evening when the blockade was relieved.

Abont ten of the prominent Oddfellows of Fernie were disappointed in not being ableto go to Cranbrook on Tuesday's train owing to the slide at Morrissey. The Cranbrook lodge held a celebration in honor of the 85th anniversary of the order and the Fernie lodge was invited to be present. The ever popular John Williams was one of the disappointed ones, and it was generally remarked that the C.P.R. might have stretched a point to keep its line open on the one day in six years that John selects for his outing.

Father Coccola left on Wednesday morning for [illegible] where his duties have called him for a short time. It is probable that he will make arrangements by which Father Lardon whose health is failing him, may have a leave of absence to visit the coast. Father Lardon during his short stay in Fernie won many friends who will regret his continued ill health. Father Pecoul of St. Eugene will officiate in Fernie during the absence of Father Coccola.

P. V. Whelan returned this week to his home in Wallace, Idaho, where he is interested in a mining property. He came here several weeks ago to visit his brother Thomas, at the time of the latter's snvere illness.

Rev. D. L. Gordon left on Tuesday for the coast where he will be absent for several weeks. On his return Mr Gordon accompanied by Mrs. Gordon and children will make an extended visit with friends in Eastern Canada. Rev. D. McK. Reid, of Calgary, will take charge of Knox church during the absence of its pastor.

Mr. Fernau has let the contract for his zinc enriching plant at Roseberry on Slocan Lake. The contractor, Maurice Gintsburger, will commence the work at once.

THE Hastings saw mill at Vancouver is to be closed down for an indefinite period. Mr. C. M. Beecher, vice-president of the company, is credited with the statement that the conditions under which the mill is now run are such that it cannot be operated except at a loss. He complains that the mountain lumber mills have the advantage in the prairie markets owing to the better rates given them by the C. P. R. The lack of duty on American rough lumber is given as a disadvantage to the coast lumbermen, and the new assessment act is quoted as another drawback. This act not only taxes the mills on their output but taxes them on the plant with which the output is produced.

LACROSSE ORGANIZED.

A meeting of the Senior Lacrosse Club was held in the Cuthbert block on Monday evening for the purpose of organizing for the season. The meeting was well attended and perfect harmony existed in the election of the new officers and in the plans for the season. The following officers were elected.

Hon. President—A. Mutz.
President—J. H. Bricker.
1st Vice-President—G. R. Lawrence.
2nd Vice-President—J. R. Wallace.
3rd Vice-President—W. Webster.
Secy.-Treas.—George W. Gordon.
Captain—Robt. Schram.
Trainer—H. Chapman.

Committee to represent the club on the A. A. A. executive.—Messrs. [illegible] C. Liphardt and R. Kerr.

New colors will be adopted this year, the selection being green and white.

POLICE COURT

Pete Falcon and Pete Caravat two Italians, were arrested for fighting on Baker St on Sunday. They paid a fine of $15 each.

William Moore got a week in gaol for being drunk and disorderly.

Paul Wallette was charged in the police court on Monday with stealing a purse containing $75.55 from [illegible] Hurtubise at the boarding house at the Fernie Lumber Co's mill. These men were bedfellows and the victim of the robbery placed his purse under his pillow before going to sleep. In the morning he forgot to secure his purse. When he went to look for it later it was gone, as was his room mate. The police were notified and Constable Henderson located his man in a shack between Hosmer and Sparwood with the missing purse on his person. The accused reserved his defence and the magistrate ordered him to stand his trial before Judge Forin.

Losses Under Half a Million

Insurance Will Cover Half the Losses. Adjusters at Work.

Detailed Statement of the Individual Losses Caused by the Fire Together with the Insurance in Each Case.

A great deal more than was given in our hurried account of last week might be written of the great fire. The event abounded in tragic scenes, in heroic efforts to check the demon's onward march and in scenes of plundoring and debauchery that clearly brought out the varied traits of the human race. It is out intention however to leave all this to the imaginative writer and confine ourselves to the bare facts.

The fire was first noticed by George Purvis on his way to work at 3 a m.. He at once gave the alarm at the nearby hotels and soon a crowd was on the scene. Not a life was lost though more than one narrow escape was reported.

Had there been no rain that morning there is little doubt but that almost the entire residential section would have been wiped out also. As it was the air was filled with burning embers and some of these started fires in the residential section. A burning mass fell on A. P. Walker's stable several blocks north of the burning buildings, and set it on fire. Another fell in the hammock at the hospital.

The town presented a very desolate scene after the fire. Where once were flourishing blocks of mercantile houses there remained nothing but ashes and uninflamable material with here and there a chimney or vault rearing its form above the wreckage and symbolic of ruin and disaster. The safes and vaults all came through the fire safely, though in one or two instances the books were somewhat damaged. Many of the combinations however refused to work and force had to be applied to secure the contents.

A corrected list of losses wtth insurance is as follows :—

FOR FIRE PROTECTION

VARIOUS MEASURES ADOPTED BY BOARD OF TRADE.

Main Business Street to be Widened 12 ft.—Fire Proof Buildings Will be Erected. Impetus to Incorporation Movement.

The Fernie Board of Trade have not been inactive since the fire. On Saturday they met in the rear room of the fire hall and took up several important matters connected with greater fire protection and general improvements to the town.

The meeting was unanimous in its opinion that the business street should be wider and owners of lots on both sides expressed their willingness to give a few feet on the front of their lots for this purpose. A committee composed of Messrs. Quail, Stork, Trites, and Rennie was appointed to see the owners on both sides to secure their signatures to a paper acknowledging their willingness to give up six feet to widen the street to 72 feet.

Mr. A. B. Trites suggested that the present was a good opportunity for the re-survey of the lots in the burnt district. Many of the old buildings had not been on their proper lines. The street grade was also a matter which should be considered before building operations were pushed. The secretary was instructed to see a provincial land surveyor to ascertain the cost.

A discussion followed on the sewer question which brought the subject of incorporation before the meeting, and the old committee was authorized to continue its efforts in that direction. W. R. Ross, M. P, P., promised to lay the matter of drainage into the Elk river before the government, and he believed that the present act could be altered to meet the conditions confronting the town.

A motion was adopted recommending the Dominion Government to purchase the Coal Company's old office site for a government building site. A committee composed of Messrs. Cree, Wood, Stork and Bricker was appointed to further the scheme.

The meeting then adjourned to meet Monday afternoon.

On Monday the reports of the various committees were received. Mr. Rennie, chairman of the street widening committee, reported that they had not completed their canvas of the property owners, some being out of town. The committee was authorized to complete the work as well as they could.

Mr. Bricker reported that his committee had secured an option on the Coal Company corner and had circulat- a petition asking the government to buy the site for a government building site. Every man that was asked, excepting one, signed the document

The secretary reported that he had been unable to see a surveyor re staking lots and grading the street level. A committee consisting of Messrs. Trites, Eschwig, Stork and Quail was appointed to circulate a paper among the property owners in the burnt district agreeing to pay their share towards the expenses of having this work done, and the committee was empowered to engage a surveyor without further reference to the Board.

Mr. Rennie, secretary of the school board, asked the Board of Trade for the privilege of using the rear room of the fire hall for a school room in the place of that burned in the Todd block. His request was granted on condition that the government pay a rental of $10 per month.

A. H. Cree read a wire received from the secretary of the Board of Underwriters in answer to an enquiry re reduction of rates on brick structures, etc. The reply was most encouraging. Brick, stone and cement structures come under the heading of "B" class which for store purposes take a risk of 1½ per cent on isolated risks. Exposures on either side, even of wood buildings will not increase this more than to 1 4-5 per cent. This when compared with the old rates of 7 and 8 per cent appeared very favorable.

The question of incorporating was taken up again. Many present spoke of the urgent need for haste in getting under way so that some control might be nad over the nature of buildings erected. The secretary was instrusted to wire Mr. Lindsey, of the Coal Company, who was at Nelson on the Explosion suits, asking him to come to Fernie if possible to confer with the Board.

Mr. G. G. S. Lindsay Talks Incorporation With Board of Trade.

Incorporation Scheme will be Rushed Through Now Without a Hitch. Company Will Erect New Office Buildings at Once.

A special meeting of the Board of Trade was held on Wednesday evening to meet Mr. Lindsey, managing director of the C. N. P. Coal Co., and discuss the incorporation question with him. A large number of members were present and a great amount of important business was put through.

Mr. Rennie opened the discussion on incorporation by briefly outlining the work done by his committee and the Coal Company officiall, and he read the seven clauses of the agreement arrived at. They were.

AGREEMENT

Memorandum of Conditions agreed upon by the Committee of the Board of Trade and the Officers of the Coal Co., as to Incorporation of Fernie, subject to approval of respective Boards.

1. Property to be included—The district west of the centre of the C. P. Railway main track and north of Coal Creek and East of the Elk River, extending Northward to the boundary as shown on map of Fernie Townsite Block : Corporation limits to be extended beyond the present Townsite Block so as to take in the so called Red Light District and leasehold of Fernie Mfg. Co.

2 The Park and Buildings therein contained while owned by the Co. and occupied by its officials, to be exempt from taxation in consideration of the privilege granted to the citizens of Fernie to use the grounds as a Park, with such reservation therefrom as may be necessary for proper grounds in connection with the Officers' houses in the Park.

3. The Coal Co. will exert its influence to prevent any of the houses in the old town or district back of the Coke Ovens and east of the Railway being used as hotels or for commercial purposes.

4. Perpetual and free use of the streets and alleys in Fernie to be given to the Coal Co. or Electric Light and Power Co. for purposes in connection with furnishing light and water or in connection with Telephone business.

5. The Co· is contemplating the construction of new modern General Office buildings, the location of which has not yet been determined upon. In case Fernie should be selected the buildings and lands to be assessed on a taxable valuation of $9,000 for a period of twenty years, in which case the said Offices will be built within the Corporation limits.

6. Property owned by the Coal Co. included within the new corporation outside of the present townsite limits to be exempt from taxation except as to blocks from which a lot or lots have been sold or leased which will be subject to taxation as soon as one lot is so disposed of.

7. These conditions to be embodied in the application for Incorporation.

Mr. Rennie explained that at a previous meeting of the Board the last five clauses had been adopted and the first two had been referred back for amendments.

clause No. 1. was then taken up and amended to read that the eastern boundary was to be the western boundary of the coal company's property on the east side of the c. P. R. track excepting where the "Y" and the coal creek branch is located. At this point the line is to continue in a straight line to the bank of coal creek.

Mr. Lindsey was then asked to state his views on the other clauses of the memorandum.' He complimented the members of the committee and Messrs. Stockett and Davies on the able manner in which they had arranged the basis for incorporation and he declared that there was little left for him to do. In regard to the moving of the eastern boundary to the eastern limits of the c. P. R. he had no preference whatever. It was simply a matter between the town and the railway. As to the extension eastward to take in the "Row" the company were unwilling that any portion of their land on the east side of the track should be included in the municipal limits and he suggested the setting aside of a block on the opposite side of the track to which the houses in the "row" might be moved. He did not wish to work any hardships on these people. The company would sell them lots at a low figure and they could be given a reasonable length of time to move their buildings.

PARK AND OFFICE.

Mr. Lindsey then expressed his views on clause 2. The company were willing to pay full taxes on the houses in the park and the land used for building purposes for all time if they were given exemption from taxation on their new office buildings for twenty years. The company would probably build more houses in the park and this arrangement would be simpler and more advantageous to the town than the original plan.

UNSURVEYED BLOCKS

Mr. Lindsey then dealt with clause 6. He thought the idea of taxing a whole block as soon as a single lot was sold or leased a bad business proposition as viewed from the townspeople's standpoint as under that arrangement the company would naturally discourage the opening up of new blocks until the old ones were taken. He thought a better way was to tax each lot on these lands as soon as they were leased or sold.

Mr. Lindsey closed with assurances of the company's heartiest co-operation and good will. They were always prepared to meet them half way in any thing that would further the general interests of the town. He also extended the sympaty of the Directors to those who had lost in the fire.

Mr. Lindsey was asked if the company would promise to build their offices here to which he replied, "Yes, and more than that we will commence the work the next morning after the incorporation question is settled." The various changes as suggested by Mr. Lindsey were then adopted one by one without a dissenting voice. The selection of the sight for the "Row" was left to the judgment of the Board of Trade.

Mr. cree asked Mr. Lindsey what attitude the company would take towards the municipality on the water works system. He understood that the Municipal Act contained a clause by which a municipality could be obliged to purchase an existing water system from a private corporation before it could construct one of its own. considerable discussion followed and Mr. Lindsey allayed all fears by assuring the Board that while the company would be willing to sell its water system to the town they would never force its sale upon them.

A vote of thanks was tendered the coal company for the fair spirit in which they had met the town in the matter of incorporation.

Other routine business was conducted at this meeting. The various committees reported. Mr. Stork reported that his committee had secured the services of Mr. McEvoy to re-survey the lots and to make the street grade, and that he was already at work. The committee and Mr. McEvoy were authorized to decide what the grade should be.

FIRE PROTECTION.

The Crow's Nest Pass coal co. have decided to install an up-to-date system of fire protection at their collieries and have placed an order for 6,000 feet of standard 2½ cotton rubber lined fire hose, together with nozzles and other necessary appliances. The total amount of hose will be equally divided between the Morrissey, Fernie and Michel mines. The coal co, placed the complete order with The Gutta Percha & Rubber Mfg., co. Toronto, through Mr. A. G. McKenney, the B.C. representative who has been in town for several days. Mr. McKenney states that a few days ago he was awarded the contract for the supply of 1000 ft. of their Paragon Fire Hose for Armstrong, B. c.

It is to be hoped that Fernie will soon be in a position to install a first class fire department and when the opportune time comes will no doubt purchase an additional supply of hose.

FIRES ON THE RED.

A STEAMBOAT COLLIDES WITH C. P. R. BRIDGES.

The Gertie H. Burned to the Water's Edge—Two Bridges Fired by the Floating Hull—Traffic Interrupted For a Time—No Lives Lost.

Fire on the Red river Wednesday burned the steamer Gertie H. to the waters edge, partly destroyed two bridges, tied up traffic generally, and proved one of the most spectacular conflagations Winnipeg has had in a long time.

Coming down the swollen stream with a heavy barge in tow the little steamer failed to make the passage in the heavy current when the new C.P.R. bridge swung open, with the result that she struck a section of the bridge, partly toppled over, and shortly after was in a blaze.

Accounts differ as to the responsibility for the accident. Some claim the bridge was slow in swinging open and the swirl of the swift eddying current, and the force behind of the heavy barge, forced the steamer over against the side of the bridge, in midstream, where it struck.

The captain and Mr. Hall were in the pilot house at the time. This portion of the boat was displaced by the collision and both men were forced to jump to the barge for safety. They immediately cast the anchor and were moored in midstream. Two small steam pipes were broken by the displacement permitting all the steam to escape and leaving the crew helpless. Mr. Hall says he realized at once that capstans and lines would be necessary to get the steamer clear and he immediatly started for the shore in a boat to obtain these. He did not inspect the steamer before going but says no sign of fire was visible. Members ofthe crew had been down the hold, but had noticed no fire; but Mr. Hall believes it must have escaped from the box when the vessel rolled in the collision. Others aver that a stove on board was upset and this caused the disaster. However, when Mr. Hall returned from telephoning for assistance the brigade were on their way to assist in extinguishing the fire.

The crew escaped by climbing upon the bridge, the high water making this quite feasible.

BRIDGE INJURED.

With the exception of the ties the railroad bridge is exclusively a steel structure, so that its destruction was not feared. However, by the time the firemen arrived in response to a telephone alarm sounded at 3.02, they found the sleepers ablaze. By dint of hard work they extinguished the fire after about 50 ties had been destroyed. Immediately afterwards, however, the Girtie H. broke away from the bridge where she had been caught and went floating down the river, a veritable fire-ship. —

LOUISE BRIDGE ON FIRE

At the Louise bridge 300 or 400 yards below the boat extended its fiery torch and the flooring on the north side was quickely blazing and the fireman had another bad job on their hands. Anticipating the disaster that would inevitably follow if the burning hulk grounded up against the J. Y. Griffin, pork packing establishment, which with the height of the river, is right at the water's edge, Chief Buchanan succeeded in getting a grapple onto the boat and having it swung into shore midway between the bridge and factory. There the fire burned itself out, right to the water's edge and now all that remains of the commodious little steamer which has carried so many merry excursions, and otherwise figured prominently in the Red river navigation, is a shapeless hull and boilers. The latter are not seriously damaged.

MANY DIFFICULTIES

At the Louise bridge the fireman had their work cut out for them. It was a case of water, water everywhere with not a drop for the thirsty flames. First of all, the north hall engine was stationed in the centre of the bridge and the suction dropped down, but the lift was too high, and the current too swift for it to work properly. The hydrant at the city side of the bridge was found to be unworkable for some unaccountable reason and finally a line of hose had to be laid from away up on the other side of the railway track before a stream could be brought to bear on the flames. Meantime the men had and so preventing the flaimes had done good work with the axes in chopping away the blazing timbers and so preventing the flames getting beyond control, and when the water was poured on further spread was prevented, although the north hall man had to stay on the scene for some time to prevent any further chance of another outbreak. A considerable hole was burned, but it is expected it will be repaired and traffic resumed to-day.

While the fire on the Louise bridge was in its incipient stage two funeral corteges came along on their way to Elmwood cemetery. While the vehicles were not allowed on, the caskets were permitted to be carried across and to the cemetery in that fashion. Much other traffic was blocked on either side.

C.P.R. WERE PROMPT.

The fire on the railroad bridge naturally tied up traffic over the C. P. R. main line for several hours and the east train was about four hours late in getting away. Scarcely had the timbers cooled when the C.P.R. had a gang of about 50 men at work replacing the scorched ties with new material. Yard engines we[illegible] busy running up and down with [illegible]ber and other material, with the result that the line was open again by six o'clock.

The Gertie H. was en route to St. Peters, six miles beyond Selkirk, to bring in a cargo of wood, when the accident occurred. Just what the loss actually is, Manager Hall did not care to make an astimate last night. There was an insurance of $4,400 upon the boat which will probably cover the loss. The company had not decided last evening what they really would do, but they intend to contiue in business, possibly with an entirely new boat. The hull of the Girtie H. was built in 1894, being part of the old steamer Assiniboine, which was refitted and rechristened in 1898.

SUICIDE AT REGINA

Former N. W. M. P. Member and South African Fighter Ends His Own Life.

An ex-member of the Mounted Police, named Stewart, shot and killed himself near the barracks, Regina on Saturday. It appears that Stewart, who was in the Mounted Police for about five years, went to South Africa with one of the contingents and had recently applied to rejoin the force here. While awaiting a decision on his application and being despondent as a result of excessive indulgence in drink, he deliberately ended his life.

MARCHING NORTH

Mikado's Men are now Thirty Miles North of Antung.

In all probability a considerable body of Japanese troops is now in command of the right bank of the Yalu, north of Antung. The first movement began last Friday night south of Suchange, and on Saturday and Sunday General Inouye, commanding the lower army corp, sent detachments across the Yalu from the Sakju road below Chansun, and at two points north of Wijii between Sukuchin and Okangpo. All operations so far as known have been successful, as on Monday evening the Japanese had occupied Yuhdenchen and small Manchurian towns about thirty miles north of Antung. A boat in here this afternoon from Yonghampo says there has been no conflict between the Japanese and Russians, except desultory firing from Sankuri on Yalu Bay north. The Japanese forces have made several feints at points between Wiju and the mouth of the river, not with the purpose of throwing brigades across, but in order to distract the Russian forces east and west of the main of the main road from Funghwang. Actual crossings were made north of Wiju, and at one point as far up as Chosan.

JAPAN MOBILIZES ANOTHER ARMY.

Mobilization of the fifth, tenth and eleventh divisions of the Japanese army is rapidly going on. The whole army may be mobilized at a later date. The second reserve of the Japanese army, numbering 20,000 men, have been called out.

SURRENDERED AND SUNK.

A report is in circulation in St. Petersburg to the effect that Russian torpedo boats outside Port Arthur have captured several Japanese transports and made them prisoners of war. Although the Japanese hoisted the white flag and surrendered, the Russian commander, suspecting that they were communicating with Togo by wireless telegraphy, sunk all the transports together with 3,000 men. This rumor in various different versions is believed by very well-informed persons.

A Chefoo correspondent states: It is reported here that the Russians sank two transports loaded with Japanese troops at Yuensan.

THEY GOT HOME SAFE.

News comes from Tokio that the Russians cruisers have slipped past the Japanese squadron during a fog and regained Vladivostock.

THE SITUATION ON THE YALU.

News has reached Chefoo, from an authentic source, of significant movements on the Yalu, foreshadowing decisive events. The Japanese seem resolved to undertake vigorous offensive action against the Russian forces holding the northern bank of the river. Operations include the combined naval and military seizure of the island of Samalindo. Some say the crossing by the Japanese was successful, and the opposition offered very light, while others state that the invaders were beaten back. In support of the first, which is generally credited, the report runs that the Japanese have occupied Chiuliencheng, on the right bank of the Yalu above Antung. Details which have reached here are circumstantial. The crossing commenced on April 25. Pontoons are towed across the river by torpedo boats and placed in position under cover of their fire. It could have been no easy matter, the river being three miles wide, and impeded by blocks of ice and frozen snow. The Russian resistance was desperate but brief. Their artillery did little damage and destroyed only one torpedo boat. The Japanese infantry, numbering four or five thousand, crossed with very trifling loss. On the same day a naval demonstration was made at the mouth of the Yalu. The Japanese admiral, Hosoya, commanding the third squadron, ascended with some gunboats, and came under the fire of the Russian field batteries posted nearly opposite Yongampho, to which the gunboats responded. On the following day a body of Cossacks, about a hundred strong, attacked a launch that had ventured too near the shore, but were repulsed and fled into the mountains. There is reason to believe that Hosoya's squadron is part of the fleet engaged in convoying and covering an expeditionary force intending disembarkation to the west of the Yalu at Tautgkao or Takushan, taking in flank the Russian line on the Yalu river.

TRANSPORT SENT TO BOTTOM.

The official report of Rear Admiral Yeszen to the Emperor on the sinking of the Japanese transport Kinshu Maru, is as follows: "During the night of April 26 two Russian torpedo boats met at sea the Japanese military transport Kinshiu Maru of 4,00 tons, laden with rice and other military stores, and about 1,500 tons of coal. The transport was armed with four Hotchkiss guns of 47 millimetres. The Russian captured on board seventeen officers twenty soldiers, eighty-five military carriers or coolies, and sixty-five of the crew, who surrendered. The remainder of the men, who were to form a landing party, and who were left without officers, obstinately refused to surrender or go aboard the Russian cruiser. Furthermore, they offered armed resistance to the Russians. In the end they were sent to the bottom with the transport."

In his complete report Rear Admiral Yeszen says that 200 men went down with the ship.

Admiral Yenzen also reports that besides the sinking of the Japanese steamer Goye Maru at Gensen April 25, the Russians sank at sea the same evening the Japanese steamer Nakamura Maru of 220 tons, whose crew were saved.

"CASH BEFORE DELIVERY"

Captain Bernier Cannot Get Polar Steamer Until Canada Pays Germany.

Hard luck seems to pursue Capt. Bernier, the man with the ambition to seek the North Zole. The captain was sent to Germany to bring out the steamer Gauss, purchased by the Canadian Government for the Hudson Bay revenue service. A cable says that Bernier and his French-Canadian crew have reached Bremen, but the German government refuses to deliver the vessel until Canada pays the whole purchase price.

Through Lord Strathcona, Canada has paid $70, 000 on account, and is withholding the balance until it is demonstrated that the Gauss can steam seven knots an hour in Canadian waters. Hon. Mr. Prefontaine says this was the agreement made with the German department of marine, but the cable says the Germans repudiate this.

New Design in Submarines.

The British Admiralty have adopted a new design for the submarines to be built under the program of construction this year. Hitherto these vessels have been 100 feet in length, with a diameter of 10 feet and a girth of about 31 feet. The new submarines to be built will be 130 feet in length, 13 feet in diameter, and 40 feet in girth.

MARKET REPORT.

Weekly Review of Prices Culled From The Commercial.

FLOUR—We quote. No. 1 grade, $2.75 per sack of 98 lbs., delivered to the trade; No. 2, $2.60; No. 3, $1.90 to $2.20, and XXXX, $1.35 to $2.00. These prices are subject to the usual trade discounts.

MILLFEED—Bran is in good demand, but very scarce. Although the mi-ls have started again they are still short of supplies. Shorts however, are more plentilul. We quote: Bran, nominally $18 per ton, in bulk, delivered to the trade; shorts, $19 per ton.

GROUND FEED—There is a big demand among farmers who are laying in stocks for spring feed. We quote: Oat chop, $28 per ton, delivered to the trade; barley chop, $22; mixed barley and oats, $25; oil cake, $27 per ton.

OATS—The market is firm, buyers being many, but offerings small. There is at present no surplus stock, but the demand is strong for oatslof good quality. Prices are firmer. No.2 white in carlots on track are worth 39c. to 40c here, and feed grades 37 to 37½c. Farmers' loads in the country, bring 31 to 33c.land on the street here, 37 to 38c.

BARLEY—Malting grades are not offering. Business in feed bar.ey is practically nominal at 42c to 43c.

FNAXSEED—In the face of plentiful supplies the demand is weak. Seed is quoted at 85c on the track, Winnipeg, as compared with about $1.10 this time last year.

HIDES — Quotations have been steady and trade light, although farmers are rushing in frozen stocks before the warm weather sets in. Abbatoir hides, seasonable, are ¼c higher at 6¼c for No. 1's; 5¼c for No. 2's, and 4¼ for No. 1's; 5¼ for No. 2's. Farmers hides are steady at 5 to 5½c. per pound, less usual tare. Country cured butchers' are the same as city butchers' at 6½c for No. 1 grade.

TALLOW—No. 1 tallow is worth 4c per lb delivered at Winnipeg and No. 2 ,3 3c.

EGGS—The market is very unsteady after a big drop due to increased receipts. Fresh stock is quoted at 14 to 15 to-day, delivered to the trade. Country shipments of case lots are not quoted.

BUTTER — Creamery — Importations from Ontario are filling the demand at present and for this butter 26 to 27c is being realized in a jobbing way.

BUTTER—Dairy—There is very fittle dairy butter coming in. A few shippers who have special lines to offer get 25 to 28c per lb.for fresh made rolls of bricks. There is practically nothing doing in package butter and round lots. . .

CATTLE—Receipts of beef cattle have been fair. Prices are easier at 4½c off cars here for choice and from that figure the market ranges down to 3½c for inferior gradet. There is practically no market for stockers or feeders.

SHEEP—Offerings are light owing to the floods, but some were bought costing 5c.

HOGS—The market is quiet. Hogs weighing from 160 to 250 pounds are worth today 5c per pound, weighed off cars here; light and heavy weight ½ to 1c less.

MILCH COWS——Good cows are carce and dear. Prices range from $35 to $55 each, according to quality.

HORSES—Trade in all classes is slow owing to the backward season Heavy draught range from $300 to $400 per team. There is considerable inquiries for light weights at from $100 to $200 a team.

OXEN—Considerable business is anticipated. Dealers are holding now a $100 to $150 a yoke.

No financial panic is feared as a result of the Toronto fire.

Harriman and Hill will continue the Northern Security fight.

Prospects are bright for Assocation football in Manitoba this season.

Origin of the Polka.

The polka is of Bohemian origin. A peasant girl, servant to a citizen in Elbekosteletz, a town three hours distance from Prague, was on a Sunday dancing for her pastime, at the same time accompanying her steps with an air of her own fancy. The schoolmaster and organist, Joseph Neruda, having observed her movements, composed a suitable air. The dance was performed for the first time in public at Elbekosteletz, then at Prague, where it obtained the name of polka. At Paris it became very popular and finally found its way to London, New York and all the great towns on both sides of the Atlantic.

Teapots With Quaint Instructions.

The following poetic directions for tea making are painted on many of the teapots used in the Celestial empire: "On a slow fire set a tripod; fill it with clear rain water. Boil it as long as it would be needed to turn fish white and lobster red; throw this upon the delicate leaves of choice tea; let it remain as long as the vapor rises in a cloud. At your ease drink the pure liquor, which will chase away the five causes of trouble."

She Thought of Him.

She—Oh, Mr. Borem! How do you do? I was talking to Mrs. Nexdore just now, and I couldn't help thinking of you. He—And was she discussing me? She—Not exactly. She was commenting on the weather and just asked me if I could imagine anything more tiresome and disagreeable.

WHERE PARLIAMENT FIRST MET.

Facts That Illuminate a Question Perhaps Never to Be Solved.

It is one of the vexed questions not yet settled, perhaps never to be settled, where the first Parliament of Upper Canada met, each contestant scouting the statement of his opponent, writes Janet Carnochan in The Globe. The individual possessed of discretion meekly says when asked, "I do not know," but others not so wise are sure. Several places have been mentioned—Navy Hall, Indian Council House, Government House, Parliament Oak, and even Fort Niagara. Now, as Parliament met in Newark five years, 1792, 1793, 1794, 1795 and 1796, it is possible it may have met in each and all of those places. Many libraries have been visited and many books of travel consulted, the archives of Ottawa, the Educational, Parliamentary, Military and city library of Toronto, to obtain the following facts:

In 1787 there were four buildings at King's Wharf, West Niagara, called Navy Hall, used for naval stores and by naval officers. On the arrival of Governor Simcoe, in 1792, one of these were cleared out, repaired and put in order for the residence of the Governor. Mrs. Simcoe's diary, 26th July, 1792, mentions that "These buildings are undergoing repairs for our residence, but are still so unfinished that the Governor has ordered three marquees to be pitched on the hill above the house," and we have in the public accounts the full bill of expenses given. Col. Clarke's diary, in possession of his son, Dr. Clarke of St. Catharines, says: "The first Parliament met in the Council chamber between Butler's Barracks and Navy Hall." This is the building burned down some years ago, the Military Hospital, formerly the Indian Council House. Whether there is any truth in the story of the Parliament Oak or not, or whether it is a myth (but these generally have some foundation), an explanation may be given thus: When on the warm September day the room was found oppressive the members adjourned to the open air, and as the town itself was then a plain and none of the beautiful trees now seen in every direction was to be seen (on the map of 1835 the oak grove is called Young Oak), perhaps the only large tree near was the oak tree lately destroyed, and our early legislators walked across the space between to take shelter in its shade. The Government House was not built for some time. The Duke of Rochefoucault de Laincourt, who visited Simcoe for eighteen days in 1795, describes his residence as a miserable low building. In Miss Simcoe's picture, drawn from the entrance to the river, there are seen four small buildings at King's Wharf. Some assert that the long low building, now in ruins, cannot be Navy Hall, or part of Navy Hall, but much evidence can be adduced in favor of the statement. In a map of 1818, copied from the archives at Ottawa, there is one long, low building slanting to the water, marked Navy Hall. In the map of 1835 the same building is also marked Navy Hall. In the Harbor & Deck Co.'s map of 1831 the same is seen. In 1853 this building is marked Red Barracks, as it had been used for troops; the two doors have yet the words "28 men" on them. The same building now stands in Fort George enclosure, partly turned round with front to the water instead of the end, which is thus explained: About 1862 the late W. A. Thomson made a cutting to have the trains enter on the other side of the present wharf instead of going through the town, and as thus cutting would run almost through Navy Hall he obtained permission to move the building back, which was carefully done. To the statement that every building was burned on 13th December, 1813, we reply that the American troops left in such haste that though the town was burned very effectually, the soldiers' tents were left standing and cannon, etc., at Fort George. We do not assert that the building was the residence of Gov. Simcoe, or that the Parliament first met here, but that it is one of the four buildings forming Navy Hall, and that it may be the very one in which so many important events took place. The testimony of many old residents points in this direction. Old Mrs. Quade, daughter of Dominic Henry, the lighthouse-keeper, who was born here in 1804, and present at the burning of the town, always said to her children when visiting the old home, landing at the ferry and passing Navy Hall: "There is the old Parliament." Others always called it old Navy Hall. The tavern near was called in advertisements of 1830 Navy Hall tavern. Rev. Mr. McEwan, born here in 1809, spoke of both it and the Indian Council House as the places where the early legislators met.

However, it is certain that it is an historic building, and the Ontario Historical Society lately appointed a committee to send a request to the Dominion Government that all these historic spots be put in the hands of the Niagara Falls Park Commissioners, as has been done with Queenston Heights and Fort Erie with such good effect. We surely should unite to preserve what is left of historic value.

A Lake Postoffice.

Here is an item that is on its rounds in the American press just now: In Lake Wabigoon, Ontario, at a point where the water is not very deep, a strong wooden stake has been driven into the ground. On the top a box has been securely fastened, and there you have the Lake Wa[illegible]goon postoffice. The little stea[illegible] from Rat Portage drops the m[illegible] here on its outward voyage, and a canoe goes out from the shore and collects it, depositing the outgoing mail at the same time, which is picked up by the steamer on its return trip to Rat Portage next day.

The Word Japan.

The word "Japan" comes from the Portuguese pronunciation of the Japanese characters "Ni Hon," meaning "Land of the Rising Sun."

Dimensions of Noah's Ark.

"Within recent years," says the editor of the Syren and Shipping, "the general dimensions of the ark have been closely followed by cargo steamship builders for deep sea and the American great lakes service According to the Bible, the ark was 480 feet long, 80 feet wide and 48 feet deep. Her tonnage was 11,413, and she had plenty of room for pairs of all the distinct species of animals that are classed by Buffon—244—and she could have accommodated a thousand persons and then have plenty of room for the storage of supplies. In the seventeenth century Peter Jansen, a Hollander, built a vessel of the exact proportions of the ark, and she was successful, as records of the times show, in making money for her owners. Noah, 'the father of naval architecture,' is held in profound respect by naval architects of today, who know how immeasurably the Phœnicians, Greeks and Romans and all other shipbuilders fell short of the excellence of the type of the ark as a commodious, safe and economical vessel."

"Orang Outang" Incorrect.

The large anthropoids of Borneo and Sumatra are usually called orang outangs. This form, it seems, is not correct. Orang signifies man and outang, or utang, debt, something owing; so that orang outang would simply mean a man in debt. The correct Malay name is orang utan, or outan. This signifies the forest man in distinction to orang dusun, or village (civilized) man.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers, that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials. Address

CRITICAL TIME AT CHANGE OF LIFE

Sufferred From Nervousness and Extreme Physical Exhaustion, Now Recommends Other Women to Use

Dr. Chase's Nerve Food.

Many women date their illness and suffering from the period of change of life.

It is a trying time to all women, and a time when Dr. Chase's Nerve Food will prove of incalculable value.

By supplying an abundance of rich, red, life-sustaining blood, this great food cure helps women to pass in safety the periods of trial in their lives. It strengthens and invigorates the delicate female organism, and builds up the whole system.

Mrs. Chas. Keeling, sen., Owen Sound, Ont., writes: "It is a pleasure to tell what great benefits I have derived from the use of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food. I am fifty-five years of age, and for about five years my life was one of great suffering from nervousness, weakness and extreme physical exhaustion. I could not sleep, and hot flushes would pass through my body from head to feet. I consulted our family physician and two other doctors, but they told me, about my time of life, I was likely to be troubled that way. I continually grew worse, and despaired of ever being cured.

"Dr. Chase's Nerve Food came to my notice, and, as we have Dr. Chase's Receipt Book, I had confidence in the doctor. I was so surprised at the help I received from the first box that I bought three more. They built me right up, and made me feel healthy and young again. They have proven a great blessing to me, and I hope this testimonial will be of help to some weak, nervous woman suffering as I did."

Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, 50 cents a box, 6 boxes for $2.50, at all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Toronto. To protect you against imitations, the portrait and signature of Dr. A. W. Chase, the famous receipt book author, are on every box.

A great many shirred and smocked skirts are shown among the spring fashions, while full skirts trimmed with flounces and frills are to be extremely popular.

SUFFER NO MORE.—There are thousands who live miserable lives because dyspepsia dulls the faculties and shadows existence with the cloud of depression. One way to dispel the vapors that beset the victims of this disorder is to order them a course of Parmelee's Vegetable Pills, which are among the best vegetable pills known, being easy to take and are most efficacious in their action. A trial of them will prove this.

Net top laces are to be only second in popularity in Valenciennes.

Twin rosettes for each side of the coiffure are coquettish adornments.

THEY WAKE THE TORPID ENERGIES.—Machinery not properly supervised and left to run itself, very soon shows fault in its working. It is the same with the digestive organs. Unregulated from time to time they are likely to become torpid and throw the whole system out of gear. Parmelee's Vegetable Pills were made to meet such cases. They restore to the full the flagging faculties, and bring into order all parts of the mechanism.

Thin and unruly eyebrows are benefitted by a lotion made of two ounces lanolin and three grains muriate of quinine. Apply nightly with a camel's-hair brush, always stroking toward the temples.

Liver spots, the brown discolorations that appear upon the skin, are caused by some derangement of the internal organs, and the advice of a good physician should be sought. A lotion to be applied externally and which will help remove them when used with other treatment, is composed of the following: Twenty grains of citric acid and one-half pint rose water.

Cucumber juice is an excellent skin whitener.

Lanoline, the natural fat of the sheep's wool, is excellent for the hair. Equal parts of vaseline or olive oil should be added to it as in its natural state it is harsh and sticky. Where there is a lack of natural oil and the hair is dry and harsh, this mixture rubbed into the scalp will prove very beneficial in supplying the natural oil.

A good, simple lotion for the skin to keep it smooth and free from chapping is made by taking one ounce of glycerine, one pint of elder flower water and two drachms powdered borax. This can be applied at any time, either on retiring or during the day, before the powder is applied to the face. It will help keep a tender skin from chapping if applied before going out into the wind.

A simple remedy for falling hair is a pint of bay rum and a large teaspoonful of fine table salt.

When manicuring the hands push the cuticle that surrounds the nails back carefully. If broken, it becomes the painful and annoying pieces of skin called "hangnails."

Dark lines under the eyes are usually the signs of ill health. Bathing in moderately hot water and afterward gently massaging with cold cream will help remove both the lines and the discoloration.

Two ounces of alcohol, four of tannic acid, and one-half ounce of cologne will allay excessive perspiration and remove the offensive odor.

The tiny white spots on the nails are usually caused by bruises, and nothing can be done for them but to wait until they grow off.

The simplest and surest remedy for the removal of freckles is drop of lemon juice applied to each spot with a small camel's hair brush.

All kinds of nuts—English walnuts, almonds, etc., are healthful and said to be flesh-producing. If eaten at the meals they take the place of meat.

Do not shampoo the hair too often; twice a month is sufficient, and pure castile is the best soap to use.

Catarrh Sufferers Read!

"C. G. Archer, of Brewer, Maine, says: "I have had catarrh for several years. Water would run from my eyes and nose for days at a time. Gold braids in all widths and weights are to be used lavishly this season.

There never was and never will be a universal panacea, in one remedy, for all ills to which flesh is heir— the very nature of many curatives being such that were the germs of other and differently seated disease rooted in the system of the patient—what would relieve one ill in turn would aggravate the other. We have, however, in Quinine Wine, when obtainable in sound, unadulterated state, a remedy for many and grievous ills. By its gradual and judicious use the frailest systems are led into convalescence and strength by the influence which Quinine exerts on nature's own restoratives. It relieves the drooping spirits of those with whom a chronic state of morbid despondency and lack of interest in life is a disease, and by tranquilizing the nerves, disposes to sound and refreshing sleep—imparts vigor to the action of the blood, which, being stimulated, course through the veins, strengthening the healthy animal functions of the system, thereby making activity a necessary result, strengthening the frame and giving life to the digestive organs, which naturally demand increased substance—result improved appetite. Northrop & Lyman, of Toronto, have given to the public their Superior Quinine Wine at the usual rate, and, gauged by the opinions of scientists, the wine approaches nearest perfection of any in the market. All druggists sell it.

THE FIRE.

THE FREE PRESS in its untiring efforts to denounce the old fire protection system of the town and to urge for new measures which would institute a better and an adequate service often predicted a great conflagration which would sweep the town, but in our most imaginative moments of penning those predictions we did not begin to realize the awful, devastating power of the flames which in a few moments transforms a large area of well-stocked mercantile houses and prosperous hotels into a smouldering waste of of ashes. These predictions were so frequent that they became monotonous, and as the town continued to exist without any big fires people began to believe that it bore an enchanted existence. The awakening came suddenly, as a thief in the night.

But there is no use in crying over spilt milk. Rather let us get to work to fill the vessel again and make it more secure against accident next time. The present dark cloud overhanging the town has a silver liniug. No lives were lost, and human life cannot be compared with commercial values. The fire occurred at an opportune time. Had it occurred in winter the distress and loss would have been much greater. A long building season is before us, affording ample time to complete the most expensive buildings.

Again, the clean sweep gives the merchants and others another start to erect better buildings on a general plan th t will be conducive to greater protection and permanency. The townspeople are thoroughly alive to the importance of erecting only such structures as will meet the approval of the underwriters in the granting of cheap insurance. While the initial cost of such buildings may be greater than the cheap structures that formerly made up the business section of the town the permanent reduction in insurance expenses together with the greater protection to uninsured property will in a short time pay for the difference in the cost.

Probably the greatest good resulting from the fire is the impetus that is being received by the incorporation movement. A statement in a recent editorial to the effect that the fire protection question was alone of such importance that it should engage the assistance of every business man to secure incorporation, comes home now with convincing power. The sensible merchant will no longer consider the rate of taxation when the fire protection of the town is under discussion for he knows that protection is of the first importance. The present is a particularly opportune time to hurry the matter along, that necessary by-laws governing the class of buildings be put in force before the main street is built up.

The present opportunity of widening Victoria Ave. is also a direct result of the fire and full advantage should be taken of it. If permanent buildings are built on the old front lines then the opportunity of having a wide business street in the present business quarter is gone forever.

Fernie's future rests with its citizens in a more responsible sense than ever before. A new start is being made and it is up to those who have the moulding of the present to see that no blunders are being made that will mar the future.

THE QUESTION of fire-proof building material is holding the closest attention of the business men. There is no doubt that brick will be used extensively in building up the business part of the town again, but owing to the heavy freight rates from the nearest brick manufacturing plants this material will come rather high, at least $15 per m. and probably more. The local brick industry will not likely be in operation early enough to supply the first rush orders. Building stone can be secured much cheaper than brick. A man offered to supply an unlimited amount of first-class building stone, f. o. b. Fernie at $11.00 per cord. A cord will build as much as 1,700 bricks. Another very excellent fire-proof material is cement and sand cast in hollow moulds. These blocks when dry are very hard and are built together like a stone building often with cut-stone effects. In the Baltimore fire buildings of this material came through better than any other. The concrete foundations which are practically of the same material that came through the Fernie fire better than stone work. It is estimated that this material will cost less than bricks.

THE Michel School Board have been agitating for more school accommodation for some time. There are now 100 school children in the town and only one small school room. Until they are able to secure another room the Board finds it useless to engage a second teacher. The government has appropriated a sum for the erection of a new school house but it is scarcely probable that it will be ready for occupancy before the fall term commences.

POLICE COURT

Several Fire Thieves Sentenced.—Italian Family Row.

Over thirty special constables were sworn immediately after the fire. These men together with the regulars succeeded in keeping the town in fair order. The specials were gradually reduced till at the beginning of the week only four remained. Various reports of stolen goods stored in Slav shacks across the track were investigated with indifferent success. Provincial police Henderson, of Michel, Tranter, of Morrissey, Dow, of Wardner, and Hoskins, of Cranbrook, were brought to Fernie to assist.

Joe Rovesh was up before justices Trites and Forrest charged with assault upon Constable Sampson. He was given a fine of $50 or six months at Nelson.

The following were sentenced by L. R. Forbes, S. M., on charges of stealing various articles from the fire. The goods were found in their shacks.

LOCAL AND GENERAL

Couches at $5 and upwards, at the B. C. Furniture Co.

H. W. Herchmer went to Nelson on Monday on legal business.

Miss A. Brown, of Hamilton, Ont., arrived in town on Thursday's train and is the guest of Mrs. S. Graham.

The Provincial government has issued new police regulations, which are much more strict than those formerly in vogue.

Mrs. L. P. Eckstein and daughter arrived from Grand Forks on Friday and have taken up their residence here with Mr. Eckstein.

Mr. Lindsey states that the closing down of the mines at Morrissey is only a temporary arrangement and that they will be in full swing again shortly.

No fatalities occurred in the big fire but a number of severe burns and bruises were dressed at the hospital as the result of injuries received by fire fighters.

W. F. Mccreary, M. P., for Selkirk, Man., died suddenly at Ottawa on Wednesday evening. Mr. Mccreary was an uncle of the Sheppard brothers of this town.

News items sent to us through the post-office or left at this office will find their way to our columns of locals. This is one practical way of helping out the local paper.

The regular monthly tea of the Ladies Aid of the Methodist church will be given by Mrs. King at her home on Victoria Ave., on Tuesday, May 10th. Tea will be served from 3 until 6 in the afternoon.

We are in receipt of several telegrams and letters expressing sympathy for the sufferers in the fire, which for lack of space we are unable to publish. One was from the Methodist church body at coal creek.

The baby boy of Dr. and Mrs. Bonnell met with a very unfortunate accident on Wednesday by falling from its carriage. It fell in such a way as to cut its nose in a very nasty manner on each side. It was taken to the hospital where several stitches had to be put in.

The work of removing the debris from the burnt district is progressing steadily. The coal company granted permission to dump the clean refuse over the bank near the park. Here the high water will carry it off. The garbage matter will be taken to the old dumping ground.

Last Monday evening Mrs. S. Graham's residence was invaded by a surprise porty, who spent the evening in dancing and games after which the party broke up declaring themselves delighted with Mrs. Graham as a hostess.

M. Young, of Lethbridge, was in town on Wednesday. He states that the FREE PRESS was in error last week in reporting that he was the last man to leave C. Richard's store on the evening preceding the fire. He left at 8:30 and three members of the staff left after he did.

Death has again visited the Quigg home, on Baker street. corsan Fernie Quigg, the eight-month's old son passed away on May 4th after a lingering illness. Just five months ago the husband and father died from injuries received in coal creek Mines. Much sympathy is felt for the widowed mother and family.

captain Winnie Jones and her assistant captain Heater, who have been in charge of the Salvation Army work in this town for the past six months, will conduct their farewell meeting in the Salvation Army hall on Sunday, May 8th. captain Jones, after two weeks furlough, takes an appointment at the coast. captain Heater goes East,

M. S. Martin, a prominent lawyer of Grand Forks, was in Fernie this week looking for a location. He was quite satisfied with the outlook in this town and he hastened back to his home to wind uw his affairs preparatory to moving here. He expects to be back next week when he will at once enter into building contracts. Mr. Martin is an alderman of Grand Forks.

A number of C. P. R. officials including W. White, 2nd vice president and general manager of the western division. R. R. Jamieson, J. G. Taylor and a number of other officials passed through Fernie last Thursday on a regular trip of inspection. They went to the coast over the mainline and returned by the Crows Nest. They remained at Fernie about 9 hours. While here they visited the mines at Coal Creek and looked over the new site for the depot north of the present site.

Paul Wallette was up before Judge Forin last Thursday charged with the thieft of $75.00 from L. Hurtubise at the Fernie Lumber Co. He told a very smooth plausible story and His Honor evidently believed him for he got off free. He stated that he picked the purse up outside the door as he was leaving the camp. He put it in his pocket without looking at it till hours afterwards. He was on the point of returning to the mill to give it to its rightsul owner when he was arrested. This was the only criminal case. A number of civil cases were disposed of.

H. Bentley returned from the east on Wednesday.

Go-Carts from $3 and up, at the B. C. Furniture Co. x-276

Rev. J. Robson is at Nelson this week attending the Methodist conference.

A few of the best business lots on Victoria Ave., at Watson's office. x

John Hunter returned from Scotland on Monday, only to find to find his old home "The Royal" in ashes.

Mrs. Levasseur and Ffank Levasseur were in town this week. They are thinking of rebuilding the Alberta.

R. A. McMordie has accepted a position with the Fernie Lumber Company. He left for the prairie on Wednesday on business connected with the company.

A. J. Purdy & co., will build temporary store at once on coal company's office site. In the meantime anyone requiring letter pads can get them by calling at Mr. Purdy's residence near Methodist church.

DYNAMITE AT MORRISSEY.

Drunken Slavs Attempted to Blow up a House.—Get Off Free.

Several dynamite explosions have occured at Morrissey at intervals during the past few weeks and in each case it was caused by foreigners celebrating in drunken sprees. Two weeks ago two houses were badly shaken by an explosion of several sticks between them but the perpetrators could not be located.

On Sunday night the culmination of these crazy freaks was reached when an attempt was made to blow up a fellow countryman's house. The effort was frustrated by the drunken stupidity of the operators. At about one o'clock in the night they discharged a large amount of dynamite which shook the people in seven houses surrounding it, and immediately after they commenced to place the sticks to demolish the house, the occupants of which at once becoming suspicious made their appearance on the scene. Two men weze seen to run away and one lost his hat in doing so. The police gained certain evidence against M. Gorek and Mike Garbar, two Slavs, and they were brought to Fernie and tried on Wednesday. The magistrate let them go as he found insufficient evidence against them. W. R. Ross defended them.

DEATH CAME ON TUESDAY.

John McLeod Laid to His final Rest amid Impressive scenes.

John McLeod, the victim of the sad shooting accident of the 23rd, ult., died at noon on Tuesday, having living ten days with his spinal cord severed. The little fellow, though very tired and weak, was couscious to the last. He was attended by his mother or other members of his fsmily throughout his illness and every attention was given the sufferer, who faced death bravely and unflinchingly. The funeral took place on Wednesday afternoon, Rev. C. R. G. Poole officiated in the absence of the Rev. D. L. Gordon. It was largely attended. The following school mates of the deceased boy were the pall bearers :—Fred Kirkpatrick, Fred and Gordon Johnson, Bert Whimster, Thomas Munroe and Elliott Kirkpatrick.

Genuine sorrow is felt by young and old for the sudden ending of a promising young life. John was well liked by everybody and he will be sorely missed.

FIRE AT MICHEL.

Dudley Boarding House Destroyed. Trites-Wood Store and C. P. R. Depot Scorched.

A fire broke out at midnight yesterday at Michel in the Dudley Boarding House. In a few moments the large frame building was reduced to the level of the ground, and the big store and the c. P. R. depot were with difficulty saved from a like fate.

The night clerk thought he smelt smoke in the house at midnight and he went to the kitchen to investigate. He found the room full of suffocating smoke and a fire burning fiercely in the wall of the house. Seeing that it was impossible to extinguish the flames himself he quickly alarmed the house. Attempts to check the fire proved useless and it was abandoned. The building was soon wrapped in flames and many of the boarders escaped with only their night clothes. The total loss will probab y be abozt $9,000 with insurance on stock and furniture.

The breeze, though slight, was in the direction of the Trites-Wood co's store over 100 feet distant and the defenders had a hard fight to prevent the building from burning. Several times the roof burst into flames but they were extinguished each time. The depot also got a bad scorching, the heat being so great as to break the windows. The new hotel was the nearest building but it was favored by the breeze and was in no danger.

The "Crow's Nest Special" is the best cigar along the line. x

A CARD OF THANKS.

We take this opportunity to express the deep sense of obligation under which we labor to those who rendered such splendid and unselfish assistance in protecting our store property during tne fire at Michel yesterday morning.

We are well aware of the fact that it was alone owing to this generous assistance that our properry was saved from total loss and we more than appreciate the kindly spirit that prompted this splendid service accompanied as it was by the utmost personal discomfort and in the fact of great personal danger.

THE FERNIE FREE PRESS, FERNIE BRITISH COLUMBIA

FRIDAY, MAY 6, 1904.

THE FIRE.

THE FREE PRESS in its untiring efforts to denounce the old fire protection system of the town and to urge for new measures which would institute a better and an adequate service often predicted a great conflagration which would sweep the town, but in our most imaginative moments of penning those predictions we did not begin to realize the awful, devastating power of the flames which in a few moments transforms a large area of well-stocked mercantile houses and prosperous hotels into a smouldering waste of of ashes. These predictions were so frequent that they became monotonous, and as the town continued to exist without any big fires people began to believe that it bore an enchanted existence. The awakening came suddenly, as a thief in the night.

But there is no use in crying over spilt milk. Rather let us get to work to fill the vessel again and make it more secure against accident next time. The present dark cloud overhanging the town has a silver lining. No lives were lost, and human life cannot be compared with commercial values. The fire occurred at an opportune time. Had it occurred in winter the distress and loss would have been much greater. A long building season is before us, affording ample time to complete the most expensive buildings.

Again, the clean sweep gives the merchants and others another start to erect better buildings on a general plan that will be conducive to greater protection and permanency. The townspeople are thoroughly alive to the importance of erecting only such structures as will meet the approval of the underwriters in the granting of cheap insurance. While the initial cost of such buildings may be greater than the cheap structures that formerly made up the business section of the town the permanent reduction in insurance expenses together with the greater protection to uninsured property will in a short time pay for the difference in the cost.

Probably the greatest good resulting from the fire is the impetus that is being received by the incorporation movement. A statement in a recent editorial to the effect that the fire protection question was alone of such importance that it should engage the assistance of every business man to secure incorporation, comes home now with convincing power. The sensible merchant will no longer consider the rate of taxation when the fire protection of the town is under discussion for he knows that protection is of the first importance. The present is a particularly opportune time to hurry the matter along, that necessary by-laws governing the class of buildings be put in force before the main street is built up.

The present opportunity of widening Victoria Ave. is also a direct result of the fire and full advantage should be taken of it. If permanent buildings are built on the old front lines then the opportunity of having a wide business street in the present business quarter is gone forever.

Fernie's future rests with its citizens in a more responsible sense than ever before. A new start is being made and it is up to those who have the moulding of the present to see that no blunders are being made that will mar the future.

THE QUESTION of fire-proof building material is holding the closest attention of the business men. There is no doubt that brick will be used extensively in building up the business part of the town again, but owing to the heavy freight rates from the nearest brick manufacturing plants this material will come rather high, at least $15 per m. and probably more. The local brick industry will not likely be in operation early enough to supply the first rush orders. Building stone can be secured much cheaper than brick. A man offered to supply an unlimited amount of first-class building stone, f. o. b. Fernie at $11.00 per cord. A cord will build as much as 1,700 bricks. Another very excellent fire-proof material is cement and sand cast in hollow moulds. These blocks when dry are very hard and are built together like a stone building often with cut-stone effects. In the Baltimore fire buildings of this material came through better than any other. The concrete foundations which are practically of the same material that came through the Fernie fire better than stone work. It is estimated that this material will cost less than bricks.

THE Michel School Board have been agitating for more school accommodation for some time. There are now 100 school children in the town and only one small school room. Until they are able to secure another room the Board finds it useless to engage a second teacher. The government has appropriated a sum for the erection of a new school house but it is scarcely probable that it will be ready for occupancy before the fall term commences.

POLICE COURT

Several Fire Thieves Sentenced.—Italian Family Row.

Over thirty special constables were sworn immediately after the fire. These men together with the regulars succeeded in keeping the town in fair order. The specials were gradually reduced till at the beginning of the week only four remained. Various reports of stolen goods stored in Slav shacks across the track were investigated with indifferent success. Provincial police Henderson, of Michel, Tranter, of Morrissey, Dow, of Wardner, and Hoskins, of Cranbrook, were brought to Fernie to assist.

Joe Rovesh was up before justices Trites and Forrest charged with assault upon Constable Sampson. He was given a fine of $50 or six months at Nelson.

The following were sentenced by L. R. Forbes, S. M., on charges of stealing various articles from the fire. The goods were found in their shacks.

J. Sirik, 2 months at hard labor.

Steve Benusick, 2 months at hard labor.

J. Tiptun, 1 month at hard labor.

J. Petresa, 2 months at hard labor.

An Italian named S. Marasco got into a family scrap and succeeded in cutting a companion horribly about the head with a razor. He got off with a ten dollar fine.

The B. C. Furniture Co. opened up their new stock of wall paper this week.

A number of C. P. R. officials including W. White, 2nd vice-president and general manager of the western division. R. R. Jamieson, J. G. Taylor and a number of other officials passed through Fernie last Thursday on a regular trip of inspection. They went to the coast over the mainline and returned by the Crows Nest. They remained at Fernie about 9 hours. While here they visited the mines at Coal Creek and looked over the new site for the depot north of the present site.

Paul Wallette was up before Judge Forin last Thursday charged with the thieft of $75.00 from L. Hurtubise at the Fernie Lumber Co. He told a very smooth plausible story and His Honor evidently believed him for he got off free. He stated that he picked the purse up outside the door as he was leaving the camp. He put it in his pocket without looking at it till hours afterwards. He was on the point of returning to the mill to give it to its rightsul owner when he was arrested. This was the only criminal case. A number of civil cases were disposed of.

H. Bentley returned from the east on Wednesday.

DYNAMITE AT MORRISSEY.

Drunken Slavs Attempted to Blow up a House.—Get Off Free.

Several dynamite explosions have occured at Morrissey at intervals during the past few weeks and in each case it was caused by foreigners celebrating in drunken sprees. Two weeks ago two houses were badly shaken by an explosion of several sticks between them but the perpetrators could not be located.

On Sunday night the culmination of these crazy freaks was reached when an attempt was made to blow up a fellow countryman's house. The effort was frustrated by the drunken stupidity of the operators. At about one o'clock in the night they discharged a large amount of dynamite which shook the people in seven houses surrounding it, and immediately after they commenced to place the sticks to demolish the house, the occupants of which at once becoming suspicious made their appearance on the scene. Two men weae seen to run away and one lost his hat in doing so. The police gained certain evidence against M. Gorek and Mike Garbar, two Slavs, and they were brought to Fernie and tried on Wednesday. The magistrate let them go as he found insufficient evidence against them. W. R. Ross defended them.

DEATH CAME ON TUESDAY.

John McLeod Laid to His final Rest amid Impressive scenes.

John McLeod, the victim of the sad shooting accident of the 23rd, ult., died at noon on Tuesday, having living ten days with his spinal cord severed. The little fellow, though very tired and weak, was couscious to the last. He was attended by his mother or other members of his fsmily throughout his illness and every attention was given the sufferer, who faced death bravely and unflinchingly. The funeral took place on Wednesday afternoon, Rev. C. R. G. Poole officiated in the absence of the Rev. D. L. Gordon. It was largely attended. The following school mates of the deceased boy were the pall bearers :—Fred Kirkpatrick, Fred and Gordon Johnson, Bert Whimster, Thomas Munroe and Elliott Kirkpatrick.

Genuine sorrow is felt by young and old for the sudden ending of a promising young life. John was well liked by everybody and he will be sorely missed.

FIRE AT MICHEL.

Dudley Boarding House Destroyed. Trites-Wood Store and C. P. R. Depot Scorched.

A fire broke out at midnight yesterday at Michel in the Dudley Boarding House. In a few moments the large frame building was reduced to the level of the ground, and the big store and the c. P. R. depot were with difficulty saved from a like fate.

The night clerk thought he smelt smoke in the house at midnight and he went to the kitchen to investigate. He found the room full of suffocating smoke and a fire burning fiercely in the wall of the house. Seeing that it was impossible to extinguish the flames himself he quickly alarmed the house. Attempts to check the fire proved useless and it was abandoned. The building was soon wrapped in flames and many of the boarders escaped with only their night clothes. The total loss will probab y be abozt $9,000 with insurance on stock and furniture.

The breeze, though slight, was in the direction of the Trites-Wood co's store over 100 feet distant and the defenders had a hard fight to prevent the building from burning. Several times the roof burst into flames but they were extinguished each time. The depot also got a bad scorching, the heat being so great as to break the windows. The new hotel was the nearest building but it was favored by the breeze and was in no danger.

For Benefit Of Both

By CHANNING POLLOCK

Copyright, 1908, by T. C. McClure

On the first night but one of their mutual vacation they sat on the porch of an ocean hotel and watched the sea climb over the sands at their feet. The last of the other loiterers had exchanged the view for the delights of dressing gowns and slippers some ten minutes before, leaving to them the wide veranda and an argument begun an hour earlier. A mile away a small steamer forged onward. Its trail of smoke lay drowsily on the water like a black monster stretching itself for a long rest.

"It's ridiculous!" he remarked, staring reflectively at the lighted tip of a fresh cigar.

"Well," she replied, "we find it true of writers. Nearly every novel is a multiple picture of the novelist. Why should we expect a player to portray emotions he or she has never felt?"

"You would make it necessary for all 'heavies' to be former criminals and all comedians fearful fools. Your Cleopatra must needs have been a wanton, your Lady Macbeth must have planned murder, and your Mrs. Malaprop could not be at once an educated and a successful woman."

"That is a trifle radical," she urged. And as her opponent did not seem to feel that she had recovered her lost ground she added, "I mean merely that the able impersonator must at some time or other have been conscious of the sentiments which produced"—

"I understand," he interrupted.

"Well?" said she.

"Well," came the reply, "you and I played lovers all last season—rather acceptably, we both think. And yet I have never been in love. Have you?"

"No," she answered thoughtfully; "I have not."

"Yet we seem to get along."

"Yes," she admitted. A man and a woman somewhere on the beach were singing an absurd song, and the breeze

"HOLD ON!" HE SAID. "I'LL BE A SUBJECT."

brought the words to their ears. She paused an instant to listen. Finally she continued: "Neither of us has done so well that there is no room for improvement. Often I have had to guess in the vaguest way at some sentimental passage, and many of them may have been spoken in a fashion that lacked the true ring. All this might be remedied if I had ever been in love."

"Why don't you experiment?" the man queried facetiously.

"Because I have no one with whom to experiment. I couldn't very well fall in love with myself."

"It has been done."

The girl laughed and rose to go. A chill had come into the air, and the porch was no longer comfortable.

"Hold on!" he said. "I'll be a subject."

She had forgotten already. "A subject for what?"

"I'll be a subject for your experiment. You may be right after all, and if you are we owe it to the management to test your theory."

She blushed—a faint, puzzled blush.

"Oh, neither of us will be in earnest," he hastened to add. "We will take up the affair as a course of study. You and I can adore each other for two months. It will help to pass the time here, and at the end of our vacation we can drop it. What do you say?"

"I don't exactly like it," the theorist confessed. And she took hold of the doorknob.

"Nonsense!" quoth the man. "You must have the strength of your convictions. Let's test the thing for the benefit of both." He took her hand in the enthusiasm of the moment.

"All right," she said.

"Good! We'll begin by going boating tomorrow."

"Perhaps," she remarked quietly and walked into the hotel.

She met him at the wharf the next evening, and he rowed for over an hour, his arms bared and the smoke from his cigar floating behind them in imitation of that which had drifted from the steamer funnels. Neither mentioned the talk of the night before until he helped her back on shore. Then, "I hope," he said, "that your ride has been a pleasant one."

"I have learned something," quoth she.

Through July and into August the lessons continued. He took her driving, sailing, walking along the strand. She began to feel quite as though they were in earnest and grew a little jealous of the friend to whom he devoted an hour a day and two quires of paper a week. The other people gossiped, as people will who have nothing better to do, and they laughed at the gossip. At last he pulled her out of the surf one afternoon when she had been caught by the undertow. "We are progressing finely," he observed.

Late in the month:

"The season begins soon," said he. "Our time is all but gone."

"We have spent it well," she replied. "Think how our work will have been improved."

It was a delightful summer.

And on the last night but one of their mutual vacation he and she sat together on the porch as they had seventy days before and watched the tide climb vigorously as of old, for the sea is a restlessly ambitious monster and will not tire until it has won the earth back again. "We return tomorrow," the man sighed.

"Tomorrow," said the girl. "I had never been really happy before."

"I have had a jolly time," he admitted.

"And it ends tomorrow."

"Tomorrow."

She paused, scanning the horizon for the steamer, which was long overdue. But there was no motion anywhere except at the ragged meeting place of sky and sea.

"We shall be going on the road again," the man remarked, "to stuffy theaters and crowds of people who recognize tragedy only when it is accompanied by slow music."

"We shall be in the same cast," said the girl.

And then, as he leaned against his chair and took to puffing placidly, she rose to go.

"Hold on," quoth he. "I want to tell you something."

She waited.

"When I get back," he went on, half jokingly—"when I get back I am to be married. She's a charming little thing, and you must know her."

The girl was looking out to sea, though all chance of the steamer passing had vanished. "But you said"—she began hesitatingly.

"That I had never been in love." He laughed. "That was not quite true. I'm afraid the lessons have been wasted. I did not need them."

She opened the door.

"Not wasted," she said. "I have learned something."

The Mexican Bullfight.

"A Mexican bullfight is the most scientific exhibition on earth," said a returned American. "It is a sport which is almost universally condemned in this country, but I believe that it is no more objectionable than our game of football and, in fact, no more than baseball or horse racing. To be sure, the bulls are killed, but they are not tortured to any extent. The bullfighter must have consummate skill, together with great nerve and daring. He must await the charge of the bull without flinching and at exactly the right moment insert his sword in exactly the right spot, and the huge animal falls at his feet dead. Occasionally a bullfighter is killed, but how often is that true of football players and even baseball players and jockeys in this country? The Mexicans would not think of allowing a football game to be played in their country. They think it is barbarous and cruel. For my part I do not see but they have the best of the argument, for from the standpoint of an exhibition of skill and daring there is nothing which can equal a bullfight."—Milwaukee Wisconsin.

No Fare For a Doll Under Three.

True kindness does not abound in any particular place. A conductor on a Ridge avenue car the other day gave an example of how the ordinary things of life may be made attractive by the presence of a little kindliness. The car stopped and a little girl carrying a large doll got on. The conductor came in to collect her fare. The little girl, who was about six years old, handed him a nickel. He looked at it and then at her, but didn't register the fare. Her expression was that of perplexity. The conductor then leaned down and asked her for the doll's fare. That request made the little girl's perplexity even greater. But the conductor quickly asked her whether the doll wasn't over three years old, and to her negative reply he said, "Oh, I thought she was, and I was waiting for her fare." Then he smilingly pulled the register strap, and the other passengers who had witnessed the occurrence somehow or other felt better for this little touch of whimsical comedy.—Philadelphia Record.

Little Emerson's Quandary.

"Father, what is a sparrow?" asked little Emerson Beans, looking up for an instant from a volume of Thoreau.

"Why, a sparrow," responded he, "is one of those little birds that you see"—

Little Emerson listened with a puzzled expression.

The old gentleman tried another tack: "It is what is known as 'Passer domesticus'"—

Little Emerson began to understand.

"Of the family 'fringillidæ.'"

"Oh, of course. I recognize the term now. How stupid of me! There is only one possible objection to Thoreau," he continued, "and that is he uses such nursery terms it is sometimes hard to comprehend them."

And the youth returned to his book, leaving his father in dire perplexity as to the terms in which he was to announce to him that it was time to go to bed.—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

ANCHORING SAND DUNES.

Covered Them With Vegetation to Preserve Arable Land.

So much attention has been directed to the work that is being done in reclaiming the arid and semiarid lands of the west that the reclamation work along the Atlantic coast is almost entirely overlooked. The familiar sand dunes, characteristic of the coast from Cape Cod to Cape Fear, while perhaps artistic, constitute a menace to adjacent cultivated lands and are useless in themselves. Massachusetts, at considerable expense, has been endeavoring to reclaim the sand dunes that form so large a part of the "Province lands" on Cape Cod.

It has been found that sand is readily bound together by grass roots, and that if sturdy varieties of grass, suitable for sandy soils, are planted and cared for while obtaining a foothold and maturing they will gradually cover large areas, transforming them from shifting, worthless lands into veritable fertile cultivable fields. Many years of forestry work in Europe have shown that after the grasses have made a start trees can be successfully raised on these erstwhile sand piles, which may thus be made to yield a revenue. Some of the most extensive and mobile sand dunes in the United States, however, are found in the west, and it is the ambition of the bureau of forestry to cover these with permanent forest growths. Along the Columbia river in Washington the sand is very light, owing to the large proportion of mica it contains, and consequently is easily blown about by the winds.

In a part of the lower Columbia river valley great orchards have been actually ingulfed with the shifting sands, and the railroads have experienced great difficulty in maintaining their tracks in this district in passable condition. In order to make a practical test as to the best method of treating these dunes, a strip of land on the Columbia river between Willow creek and the John Day river has been set aside by the government for extensive experiments, based on the work done in Massachusetts, referred to above. In the east tree planting plans for owners of sandy tracts are being prepared, thus extending the scope of the practical co-operation begun by the bureau of forestry.—Philadelphia Record.

A Future Mikado.

Perhaps the most interesting small boy in the world is little Prince Micchi, grandson of the Japanese mikado and destined himself to be a mikado some day. He will be four years old in April.

The heir presumptive to the great eastern throne has the distinction of being the first baby of the royal house of Jimmu Tenno who has been allowed to grow his hair like an English baby. Both his father and the mikado when babies had their heads shaved daily by their nurses.

Soon after the prince's birth measures were taken to eliminate the "almond eye" of his race. A painless little surgical operation was performed. An incision was made on the outer point of the baby's eyelids in a straight line for the barest part of an inch. The lashes were then drawn into shape and held firmly by a piece of chemically prepared sticking plaster.

The wound healed in less than a week, and the effect now is that Prince Micchi does not look his oriental birth.

The Simplon Tunnel.

The Simplon tunnel, one of the greatest engineering works in the world, is rapidly approaching completion. Its total length will be a little over twelve miles, of which distance six and upward have been penetrated on the north, or Brigue, side and four and upward on the south, or Italian, side, leaving only a fraction over one mile yet to be completed. It is expected that the two sections will be joined together in the coming May or June, and it will not be long thereafter when trains will regularly be running through. The organization of the work is of high efficiency. No sickness exists among the men. The use of the Brandt drill immediately suppresses all dust, and there has not been a single case of miner's phthisis, although some 3,000 men have been at work for five years.

A Love Letter Writer.

Pere Jean, who has just died, was the last of the public writers of Paris. Servant girls, market porters and others who found a difficulty in writing were his chief patrons, and others who could write, but lacked imagination and style, had often recourse to him. An ordinary love letter cost 10 cents, the same with well turned sentences 15 cents and a powerfully persuasive letter 30 cents. Pere Jean would, however, contract to complete a love correspondence for a lump sum.

A Mighty Induction Coil.

The largest induction coil, which produces the longest spark for service in wireless telegraphy, is said to be the one which is used for flashing messages between the coast of Japan and Korea. It can produce, in fact, a miniature streak of lightning forty-five inches in length, capable of killing any number of persons who might get in its way and when in operation sends out something like thunder rolls. The entire apparatus weighs about 2,000 pounds.

A Wealth of Postoffices.

The town of Ossipee, in Carroll county, N. H., has nine postoffices—viz, West Ossipee, Ossipee Valley, Moultonville, Centerville, Center Ossipee, Water Village, Ossipee, Granite and Leighton's Corners. The town of Wakefield, in the same county, also has nine postoffices—viz, Province Lake, North Wakefield, Woodman, East Wakefield, Wakefield, Sanbornville, Horns Mills, South Wakefield and Union.

A ROYAL MAGNANIMITY

CHARACTERIZES THE DIVINE AMNESTY TO ALL WHO REPENT.

"WHITER THAN THE SNOW"

Sinners of Every Degree Are Urged to Accept the Offer Which Is Made With a Completeness That Puts Human Forgiveness to Shame—Black Sins and Their Everlasting Cure.

Entered according to Act of Parliament of Canada, in the year 1901, by William Baily, of Toronto, at the Dep't of Agriculture, Ottawa.

Los Angeles, Cal., April 24.—In this sermon the preacher announces the divine amnesty to all who repent, and sinners of every degree are urged to accept the offer which is made with a royal magnanimity and completeness that put human forgiveness to shame by comparison. The text is Psalm li, 7, "Wash me, and I shall be whiter than snow."

"Absurd simile," you say; "that statement cannot be scientifically true. There is nothing whiter than the snow, any more than there is anything deader than death, or blacker than black, or redder than arterial blood, or emptier than a vacuum."

Snow, from a chemist's standpoint, has a superlative whiteness. The purest of all vapors is that found far up in the heavens. Along comes a sudden cold wave and it freezes that vapor into snowflakes, just as that cold wave can freeze falling raindrops into hailstones which patter upon the pavement. Then as that snowflake slowly drops through the air it comes to us as white as it is possible for anything to be. And yet there is a sense in which the psalmist is right in saying that God can wash away our sins until we become "whiter than snow," the pure snow, the spotless, wind driven snow.

What you state about the snow is literally true. Scientifically, there can be nothing "whiter than snow." But you must interpret these words of my text with the figurative license of the poet. When you see through poetic eyes and hear through poetic ears you can see sights and hear sounds never analyzed in any laboratory or classified by any earthly acoustician.

We do not bind the imagination of the poet with the rigid bonds of scientific accuracy. He is accorded a license to see and hear with his spiritual eyes and ears scenes and sounds not scientifically true. Though these words of my text may not be literally true, in the figurative language of the psalmist they are poetically so. They may mean in the common language this: Though your past lives show stains that seem to you indelible as scarlet, though you have committed sins which have not only corrupted your own soul, but have laid the souls of others, like the human sacrifice of the Aztec sun worshipers on the fiery altars, yet even for you there are pardon and cleansing, if you will accept them. Like the prodigal in his rags and tatters, there is a home for you in the Father's house. Though, like Paul, you have to acknowledge yourself the chief of sinners, like him you may find grace and have the honor of toiling in Christian service.

Christ is ready to cleanse the drunkard's sins. These are neither few nor small, for the drunkard's sins can drag a man down so low that he will lose all sense of decency and respect. They can change a man into a condition more imbruted than that of a wild beast. The drunkard after awhile seems to become as unquenchable in his passions as the patient whose voracious appetite is insatiable after a long attack of typhoid fever. The drunkard's craving will make a man lie and steal and destroy his home and his business. The drunkard's sins will eat out a man's heart as well as his brain. The drunkard's sins are like the legion of demons which took possession of the poor maniac who, naked and alone, haunted the tombs of the Gadarenes, and, like them, they may be exorcised by the same divine power. They are the direct and indirect cause of countless other sins.

Some people will tell you that men drink to drown their sorrows. I tell you that when men drink they stain their souls. No sooner is the drunkard's poisonous draft taken into the blood than the man seems to be possessed with rabies and must go forth to scatter death wherever he can. The human being inoculated with the poison of intoxicants seems to be endowed with the power to destroy spiritual and often physical life, as was the inoculated rabbit of Australia to destroy the physical life of beast, bird and man. Many years ago an Australian colonist was homesick for the sight of the English rabbit. He had one of his friends ship him a couple as pets to his faroff southern home. Those rabbits escaped from their master and began to breed. Their progeny increased until they were almost as countless as the sands of the sea. The Australian rabbit plague destroyed the crops. They became as great a curse as is the seventeen year locust to the American farmer. They were numbered by the million. The Australian Parliament was bewildered with the problem. A reward of $100,000 was offered for any man who could devise a practical plan to exterminate them. Wire fences were built across that island continent. The rabbits were hunted with guns and dogs and entrapped everywhere, but still their numbers grew. At length, as a last resort, some rabbits were caught and inoculated with the fatal serum of hydrophobia. Then a greater danger than before menaced these southern colonists. These mad rabbits not only bit other rabbits, but they bit dogs and sheep and cattle, and even bit men and women and children. So when the drunkard's blood is once inoculated with the poison it seems to create in its victim a mad passion to destroy life. It seems to make a man absolutely indifferent how he might crush out the heart of his wife, his child or his friend. A man drinks to drown sorrow? Oh, no! He drinks to gratify his insatiable craving, reckless of the consequences, though they may involve his becoming recreant to his duty to the helpless woman and the innocent children who are dependent on his exertions and have the strongest of all claims on his loyalty, his truth and his honor.

Young man, you who to-day are having your life's blood squeezed out of you by the upper and the nether millstones of a drunkard's sins, will you not accept this salvation for your emancipation from evil? Will you not seek Christ as a refuge from the destruction of the drunkard, which seems to be going on everywhere? How general the drunkard's eternal overthrow is few people stop to realize. Many years ago these sardonic lines fell into my hands; let me read them to you:

There was an old decanter, and its mouth was gaping wide;
The rosy wine had ebbed away and left its crystal side,
And the wind went humming, humming—up and down the sides it flew,
And through the reedlike, hollow neck the wildest notes it blew.
I placed it in the window, where the blast was blowing free,
And fancied that its pale mouth sang the queerest strains to me;
"They tell me, puny conquerors, the plague has slain his ten,
And war his hundred thousands of the very best of men,
But I"—'twas thus the bottle spake—"but I have conquered more.
Than all your famous conquerors, so famed and feared of yore.
Then come, ye youths and maidens all—come, drink from out my cup
The beverage that dulls the brain and burns the spirit up,
That puts to shame the conquerors who slay their scores below,
For I have deluged millions with the lava tide of woe!
Though in the paths of battle darkest waves of blood may roll,
Yet while I killed the body I have also damned the soul!
The cholera, the plague, the sword, such ruin never wrought
As I, in mirth or malice, on the innocent have brought.
And still I breathe upon them, and they shrink before my breath,
And year by year my thousands tread the dismal road of death."

From this awful doom of the drunkard will you not escape and in Christ's name escape now? Will you not, O drunkard, promise with God's help to let your scarlet sins be cleansed whiter than the driven snow?

Christ is ready to cleanse also the debauchee's sins. By that I mean Christ is ready to forgive those who have immorally broken up the sanctity of the home. He forgave the sins of Rahab, who concealed the Hebrew spies; he forgave the sins of David, who stole the poor man's ewe; he forgave the sins of the dissolute woman who talked with him at the Samaritan well; he forgave the sins of the woman denounced by the scribes, to whom he turned and said: "Woman, where are thine accusers? Doth no man condemn thee? Neither do I condemn thee. Go and sin no more." Christ is ready to forgive the social outcast's sins, as he was ready to forgive the scarlet sins of the dying thief and the murderer.

But, though the Bible declares there is but one unpardonable sin, and that is the sin against the Holy Ghost, yet, strange to say, most people are not willing to forgive the sins of libertinism, especially if the social outcast belongs to the female sex. Alas, alas! Even the best of men, the leaders in our churches and pulpits, are often ready to look upon the breakers of the seventh commandment as moral degenerates who have no chance for ultimate rescue either in this world or in the next.

But, oh, my brother and sister, though man is hard upon fallen man, and woman especially hard upon fallen woman, yet God to-day offers pardon and peace for every penitent Magdalene. Though your sins against morality may be as scarlet, they shall be whiter than the driven snow.

St. Vitalis was a poor monk who in the seventh century was supposed to haunt the evil resorts of the Alexandrian capital. For many years the people thought he was a hypocrite and a libertine. One early morning, when seen coming out of a place of evil resort, he was fatally struck down by a passerby, with the scathing words, "How dare you, rascal—how dare you outrage Christ by not mending your wicked ways?" But hardly had the breath left the body of the humble monk than it was found out by testimony that for years he had given his life to saving social outcasts. What Christian women are doing for ex-convicts St. Vitalis was doing for fallen men and fallen women. At his funeral these social outcasts, whom he had by the power of the Holy Spirit rescued, marched in front of his bier, chanting this cry: "We have lost our deliverer! We have lost our instructor! God help us! God help us!" To-day Christ is willing to go into the lowest brothel and into the haunts of the immorally vile and to say: "Come unto me and I will make thee pure. Come, every man. Come, every woman. Though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white as the driven snow; though they be red as crimson, they shall be as wool."

Christ is ready to forgive the murderer's sins. By that do I mean that he is ready to forgive the highwayman who, with lifted gun, shoots down the innocent pedestrian? By that do I mean that Christ is ready to forgive the fiend who poisons the helpless child or who in the dark night drives the knife into the heart of his sleeping adversary? Yes, Jesus is ready to forgive the convicted murderer though he may be standing upon the scaffold under the hangman's noose, about to expiate his awful crime. "Pardon for all" is the meaning of my text—pardon and peace and eternal life for all, no matter how vile, if in sincere repentance they will come to him and plead for his mercy through his atoning sacrifice.

But among the murderers who are to be pardoned I would also class those who have slain their victims by false signs, as well as by bullet or by gun. He is ready to forgive those who have slain by the lip as well as by the hand. In olden times the pirates along the coast of England used to change the positions of the lights. Then the sea captains, watching the beckonings of the false lights, would drive their boats upon the rocks and be wrecked. The pirates would rifle the drowned bodies as they would be floated upon the shore, and gather together the wrecked cargoes. They were murderers—murderers whose weapons were false lights. So God will forgive even those murderers who have destroyed their fellow men by false examples as well as he will forgive those who have murdered them with the dagger or the gun.

"What!" some murderer says. "Pardon for my scarlet sins? Oh, no! It cannot be true. Why, you do not know what you are saying. My sins are worse than scarlet. They are black with the hopelessness of despair. There can be no pardon for me. Let me tell you my awful story: When I went to college I was a very wild boy. I had there a roommate who was the son of a minister. He was a ruddy-faced lad and as pure as a little child. I taught him how to drink and how to gamble. I argued him out of his belief in the Bible. I led him on, step by step, into the paths of sin. One night—I can remember the time as though yesterday—he sat upon the corner of his bed, and, with a strange light in his eyes, he turned and looked at me and said: 'Jim, do you really believe that my mother's Bible is only a pack of superstitions? Do you believe there is no hell?' 'Yes, Harry,' I answered. Then I went on to convince him of it. Then he laughed a horrible laugh. Then he turned and said: 'Well, old superstition, good-by, good-by! May you live long enough to soften the dying pillow of my mother and father, but as for me, good-by, good-by! Come, Jim, let's go and take a drink.'

"From that moment, sir, that young fellow let loose all his evil desires. He seemed to leap into a very whirlpool of sin. Within a few months he was expelled from college. Within two years he committed suicide, and this is the letter he wrote on the night of his self murder: 'Dear Mother,—This is the last letter you will ever receive from me. I have broken your heart, but try to forget and forgive. If there is no hell, as Jim says, this world is hell enough for me. From your disgraced and dying boy.'" "Did you do all that?" "Yes," he answered. "Well, my friend, I know not how God will forgive, but he can and he will. The blood of Jesus Christ will ever cleanse you, if you will only ask for Christ's forgiveness. 'Whosoever,' Ah, that is the word. 'Whosoever, whosoever!' That means you. Yes, it means you. 'Though your sins be as scarlet they shall be as white as snow; though they be red like crimson, they shall be as wool.'"

Christ is ready to forgive also the merciless thief's sins, even as he forgave the thief upon the cross. He is ready to forgive the thief's sins, whether you have by evil jealousy stolen away a man's good reputation or have rifled a widow's pocketbook; whether you have stolen a good name or a financial income.

"But," you say, "this appalling enumeration of crime has no applicability to me. I have neither robbed nor slandered nor slain, nor am I either drunkard or gambler." Assuredly not; but, though by divine grace you have been mercifully kept from such depths of human infamy and degradation, your heart must still tell you that you are a sinner in need of a pardoning God. And if he stands ready to forgive the greatest of criminals and to wash away their scarlet sins how much more is he willing, O man, O woman, to give to your soul pardon for penitence and to welcome you into the gospel sheepfold!

Paul, the greatest of the apostles, in his abasement called himself the chief of sinners. Like him, by God's grace you may become more honored spiritually than ever you have been in all your past life. After Marshal Lannes on account of insubordination had been deprived of his command Napoleon Bonaparte declared he should never be allowed again to draw his sword in the service of France. What did Lannes do? Did he go over to the enemy? Oh, no. He shouldered a musket and said to himself, "If I cannot draw a sword for my own country I can at least fire a private's gun." When Napoleon found his late marshal fighting in the ranks he not only restored him to his old rank, but gave him a greater command than he ever had before. So, my friends, if you, like Marshal Lannes, are repentant, if you will throw yourself upon the divine mercy, if you will say, "Oh, God, forgive my past sins and let me be a humble servant in thy household," the father will welcome you back as his child. As with the prodigal son, he will put a ring upon your finger and sandals on your feet and a white robe of spotless purity about your scarred and evilly seamed shoulders. He will make you part of himself and part of his throne. "Though your sins be as scarlet," you shall be recognized through heaven as his loving child. Will you? O man, O woman, accept the omnipotent and endless and eternal forgiveness of God? Will you have your sin stained garments washed in the blood of the Lamb?

Quality and Size.

In selecting your lambs for show remember it's not the biggest lamb that wins, but the biggest good lamb. It is always well to select several more than the number which you intend showing, so as to be prepared for accidents, such as sickness and death.

ON TO VALDIVOSTOCK

JAPANESE PUSHING FORWARD ON RUSSIANS

Japan Backed by China Will Wipe off the Russians From the Map of Asia—The Baltic and Black Sea Fleet to be Sacrificed.

Important preparations are being made at Hakodate for a sudden dash across the Japan Sea. A fleet of ten transports is being loaded with troops and a squadron of warships is lying off the port to convoy the troopships. It is presumed the objective point is Vladivostok, where a thaw is imminent. This move has been expected for some time, as the admiral of the Japanese fleet hinted some time ago at an attack on Vladivostok after the Port Arthur fleet had been rendered ineffective.

TWO MOMENTOUS RUMORS.

Two important pieces of news are current at Paris. One is that the Chinese have definitely decided to cast in their lot with the Japanese. As soon as the campaign on land develops to the proper point they will be ready to make a joint attack on the Russians. The other piece of news is the revival of the story that Russia will bring her Black Sea fleet through the Dardaneiles. The story, which came unofficially from St. Petersburg, is to the effect that early in July the Baltic fleet will proceed to the Mediterranean and will there be joined by the Black Sea fleet, and practically all of Russia's sea strength will proceed in one mighty armada to the scene of war and destroy the Japanese.

A PLUCKY ACT

Port Arthur Farmer Carries Away Dynamite at Risk of His Life.

An explosion at the Ontario Powder Company's magazine, about three miles from Port Arthur, Monday afternoon, shook the whole town and did considerable damage in Fort William, breaking plate glass windows in business places, and all the windows in the public school. In the afternoon William McFarland, who owns a farm near at hand, saw fire approaching the building in which dynamite was stored. He hurried over to the magazine and carried out 40 cases and threw them in a hole filled with water, and then hurried away, his family fleeing for shelter. He had not gone far when there was a terrific explosion, and three powder buildings were demolished and a hole blown into the ground 40 cubic feet. The buildings subsequently caught fire, and were soon consumed. McFarland's residence, which is situated about 500 feet from the powder house, was badly wrecked, the doors being blown off the hinges and the windows blown out.

Bogus Nun Hands Welland Canal Wreckers $1,000 to Bribe Guards.

A plot to secure the escape of Bullman, Walsh and Nolan, the Welland canal dynamiters from Kingston penitentiary, was recently nipped in the bud. Two women dressed as nuns visited the penitentiary, and handed one of the dynamiters a packet supposed to contain $1,000, to be used for bribing the guards. The penitentiary authorities began investigations. It was discovered that one of the nuns was a bogus sister, who had duped the Kingston nuns, and accompanied one of them on her prison visit. The disguised nun was traced to Concession street, Rochester, N. Y. Detectives took the matter in hand and found that the money had come from an Englishman named Bergen, who had married a wealthy Italian. There the affair seems to have dropped.

No One in Ferry Boat Engine Room to Answer Signals.

On Friday as the ferryboat America after leaving its Grand street slip, was nearing Broadway, Williamsburg with 500 passengers on board, Chas. Kelly, the engineer, fell dead of apoplexy, and there was no one in the engine room to answer the pilot's signals. The boat crashed into the bulkhead, which tore away the rail of the starboard side of the boat and wrecked the ladies cabin, then it careened to the other side of the slip and the rail and cabin of the men's side was wrecked. There was great excitement on board. Several passengers were injured, none seriously. The steam was not shut off until alter the landing bridge had been wrecked, Kelly was found dead, his hand still grasping the lever.

Mrs. Jex was once wealthy, but it is said that after meeting Hume she was induced to part with $160,000,which she understood Hume was to use in forming the United Coal and Coke Company, of Pittsburg, Pa. There is such a company, but it is said that Hume has never been conected with it. Hume is said to have given Mrs. Jex four notes. Hume was found living under the name of L. Millar.

Puzzles the Taxidermists.

Edmund Jones, a young Englishman, who returned to Winnipeg Monday from Edmonton, brought with him the skin of animal for which he has been unable to find a name or classification He has submitted it to several taxidermists and fur buyers none of whom have been able to classify it definitely.

The animal in question is about the size of a large fox but much heaver in the body and limbs. On the back the fur slightly resembles that of the silver fox, but is darker and heavier. The sides and belly are a dirty grey the nose ears and feet are jet black. The tail is very similar to a fox but the great point of difference is in the nose,which is very short and more of the style of a cat. The claws are similar to those of a wolf. He has been offered a good price for the skin but so far has refused to part with it. The animal was killed in the scrub to the northwest of Edmonton.

WITH THE BANKS.

TORONTO REBUILDING WILL COMMENCE SOON

Need For Ready Money Will Possibly Cause Tenporary Drop in Securities Largest Losses Amongst the English and Scottish Insurance Co's

The general impression among the bank managers and capitalists of Toronto is, that the catastrophe, while necessarily entailing a very severe set back to the whole business community of the city, will not be followed by any financial panic. It is pointed out that the fire losses were, for the most part, sustained by the wealthiest men in Toronto, practically all of whom were able to stand a fairly heavy loss without succumbing to the blow, and were far-sighted enough to keep their property well insured.

The majority of the losers called on their bankers and stated their financial position. As far as can be ascertained, with very few exceptions, no failures are anticipated. There will, of course, be a temporary stringency for the next few months, but the recuperative power of the Toronto wholesalers at the present juncture is, on the whole, unusually strong.

The heaviest losers, providing the insurance companies are able to meet claims, will be the owners of the buildings destroyed, whose insurance was, as a rule, considerably below the actual value of the buildings. However, in any event, the whole district will be speedily built up again, if not by the present owners of the land, then by the tenants or other capitalists.

The fact that ten million dollars worth of property has gone up in smoke, and the immediate need of ready money may cause some considerable liquidation in the stock market, but with stocks at their present low ebb the unloading will not be likely to cause any very great depreciation in the market.

The largest losers among the insurance firms are the English and Scottish companies, and the great bulk of the eight millions of insurance will have to come from Great Britain. This fact will tend to largely relieve the local financial market, and prevent a panic here. All these companies are old and reliable ones, and will undoubtedly be able to withstand the sudden strain. In the case of a few of the local companies, however, it is feared that the blow may drive them out of business entirely, with consequent loss of the policyholders.

The loss of business for the next few months will be very great, and will necessarily effect not only the wholesalers themselves, but also their customers scattered all over the Dominion. Fortunately, the spring orders were pretty well placed and delivered, the stocks in the warehouses were, if anything, below the average. Telegraph messages have been sent to travellers on the road, recalling them, and there was a big influx of commercial men into Toronto as a result.

The Effete East.

Following the footsteps of Fort William and Port Arthur the Bell Telephone Company has substituted a complete new system of telephones in Toronto. They have adopted the central energy lamp system, the same as in use in Winnipeg, and the Toronto papers have devoted columns to describing the new system and telling the people how to get the ear of central. It would pay some of those people to take a trip out through the west and see some of the modern inventions and conveniences of life.

SCENE IN COURT.

Before a Trial in Denver, Militia Bayone a Man.

A despatch from Denver, says:—Present Charles Moyer of the Western Federation of miners, who arrived in Denver Thursday in custody of state troops fromTelluride, where martial law was put in force in consequences of labor troubles, was taken before the state supreme court this afternoon on a writ of habeas corpus. Armed soldiers guarded the entrance to the court room while the proceedings were in progress.

The trial was preceded by a fight between W. D. Haywood, secretary-treasurer of the federation and the milita when Haywood was bayonetted and seriously injured. That he was not killed by the excited soldiers is due to the action of Bert Givens the orderly of Captain Wells, who struck up the muzzle of a gun aimed at Haywood and rescued him from his position.

SLIDES IN SLOCAN

BRIDGE AND MINING CAMP SWEPT AWAY

The Past Winter Has Been a Record Breaker—Snow and Mud Slides, Gumbo and Rich Ore In Great Masses Crash Down the Mountain Sides.

Hairbreadth escapes and exciting incidents marked the most exciting week the railways in the Slocan have ever experienced. Numerous snow and mud slides have come down on the lines each winter, but this season has been a record-breaker in this respect. The worst was the Majestic slide, which had not come down since 1893. It descended on the Kaslo and Slocan railway with a roar, swept out bridge 31, at Falls Creek, and did damage to the track.

Another slide caught the big Payne bridge, carried it in the air 400 feet, when it went down with a crash and was buried in the snow and rocks. The slide tore up the rocks for many yards, and there was some very narrow escapes. The manager of the Payne mine, A. C. Garde, and G. F. Ransoms, were standing in front of the bridge when it broke almost at their feet. They had barely time to step back to safety. One tree struck the house and plowed through the wall, but fortunately no one was hurt. Mr. Ransome's family was in the house, but got out safely. Later another bridge near Sandon was swept away. The whole scene at the Payne was witnessed by a mill crew, who were on both sides of the bridge waiting to cross. The structure was lifted into space before their eyes and went out of sight a twisted mass of debris. The slide also struck the Payne high pressure water main, carried away 30 feet of it and put the concentrator out of business for a few days.

SLIDE AFTER SLIDE.

Next the Donnelly slide came down on to the Kaslo and Slocan line and tore up 400 feet of track, and a bad washout occurred nearer Kaslo, at a place called Sproule's. On the Canadian Pacific's Slocan branch men worked four days clearing away slides, and as fast as they got the track in order other sides would fall, and they had to fall to again. Superintendent F. F. Busteed reports that a heavy gumbo slide covered the track for 300 feet. The stuff stuck to the shovels. Each shovelful had to be cut out of the mass. No sooner was the track replaced than another slide as large as the first came down. For a whole night the men worked at this second slide Just as they had everything right down came another slide larger than either of the others, and there was more sticky gumbo confronting the men than ever. However there was nothing to do but get rid of it, and now the trains are running again.

A bad smash occurred at the Slocan Star mine through a slide. A flyer from the grey Eagle leaped into the hog's back and barely missed the bunkhouse. Most of the miners made to town as quickly as possible, but a few were there when the Rabbit Paw slide decended. It crashed into and carried away the big ore house took off No.4 pocket, knocked off a corner of the blacksmith shop, and badly damaged the tramway. One hundred and fifty tons of ore were carried away heaven knows where in the destruction. A slide burst the Ruth flume and another carried away the bunkhouse at the Texas mine. The Payne slide, already mentioned dammed Carpenter creek and a channel had to be blasted through. Altogether the Slocan has never had so exciting a season from slides.

THE CRIME WAVE

Curious and Interesting Sidelights on British Crime

Some strange and in a way bewildering sidelights are thrown on the problem of crime, writes a London correspondent, and the criminal by the blue book issued under the name of Sir John Macdonald, master of the supreme court.

On the whole, during the last 20 years, there has been a reduction in crime of what is termed the graver sort, but he points out that every now and then, at fairly regular intervals, there is a wave of serious crime, which sometimes extends over half a year, and sometimes eighteen months.

The year of 1902 was one of these years of crime waves. In 1903 the total number of persons tried in this country was 661,667, while in 1902 the figures were 787,676. This increase was chiefly in crimes against property, while crimes against public morals showed a marked decrease; but, as Sir John Macdonald points out, all figures show that neither penal servitude nor imprisonment serves to deter the habitual offender from reverting to crime, the most incorrigible of all being women.

Of the graver crimes which show a marked increase are murders and burglaries.

In view of the enormous increase in taxation in the proposed chancellor's budget, it is not a pleasant thought to the English taxpayer that he has to pay nearly £6,000,000 for the suppression of crime, as revealed in this blue book, and more than $12,000,000 for poor relief.

As to the cause of the increase of crime Sir John Mgcdonald has little to say, except that the manufacture of nitro-glycerine has created new forms of crime of a grave character, but he gives no special details to demonstrate this.

LONDON PAVEMENTS

Proposal That They Should Be Paved With India Rubber.

The success of the rubber road which recently was laid under the under the archway at Buckingham Palace, and of several other private roads in London, has brought forth the proposal that London should be made a city of silence by paving the roads with India rubber. It is estimated by experts, however, that the scheme is too costly, as for every square yard of rubber covered roadway, the ratepayers would have to pay £3.

"Rubber roads are hopeless," said the London manager of a New York firm of rubber tilers.

COSTLY UNDERTAKING.

"No public authority would ever dare venture on the initial expense of such a costly undertaking in spite of the fact that the rubber road lasted a lifetime. Apart from this cost, however, there is no reason why London's streets should not be rubber paved. Horses for one thing ould dispense with shoes, and heavy traffic does not affect it much.

"The cement paving at Broad Street Station, Philadelphia, for instance, had to be renewed every two years, but a rubber road laid down ten years ago is still there. Rubber roads, moreover, are sanitary, clean and waterproof.

BUNYAN'S WARRANT SOLD

Interesting Historical Document Auction in London Saturday.

The warrant under which John Bunyan was apprehended and placed in jail at Bedford for six months, during the reign of Charles II., by thirteen justices of the peace, six baronets and seven esquires, was sold by auction Saturday. The warrant charged the tinker with contempt of law by preaching, and teaching otherwise than "according to the liturgic or practice of the Church of England."

Sir W. Van Horne's Latest Purchase.

A despatch from New Orleans says: Through the influence of President Palma, Sir William Van Horne, of the Canadian Pacific railway, and president of the Havana and San Diego railway, is about to close a deal for the purchase of the old Viebac penitentiary, located opposite Morrow Castle, at the entrance of Havana harbor, for the erection of a hotel that will cost $1,000,000. It will be the most sumptuous and modern hotel structure in the world, and will be equipped especially for winter tourists.

Train of 83 Cars.

Eighty-three cars of rush freight were brought into Winnipeg Saturday by a single Mogul engine, from the east. When the engine stopped in front of the depot the caboose was still on the Red River bridge, nearly a mile distant. This is but one of the several daily trains which are coming into the west, but it serves to give an idea of the amount of traffic being handled.

More Targets for the Japs.

The London Daily Telegraph's Brussels correspondent says an agent of the Russian government has signed an agreement to purchase three large men-o'-war, constructed at Genoa for the Argentine Republic, at a price of $18,200,000. One of the ships, the Garibaldi, is a vessel of 12,000 tons.

Never use a sharp, hard instrument when cleaning the nails; it will bruise the nail and injure the surrounding cuticle.

A simple remedy for falling hair is made by adding twenty grains of quinine to a pint of bay rum. Rub thoroughly into the scalp.

BUSINESS DIRECTORY.

WHERE THE BUSINESS MEN MAY NOW BE FOUND,

Tents and Shacks Pressed Into Service.—Every Man His Own Carpenter These Days.

The business men of the town lost no time in getting settled temporarily until such time as permanent buildings could be built. On the day following the fire many were doing business and others have been getting into line since.

The Bank of Commerce have become comfortably installed in the Coward residence. The Coal Company offices were moved into the old bunk house where improvements are still being made with a large number of men to make it habitable for some months until the new offices can be completed.

The Trites-Wood Co. were doing business on Saturday in the Lundie block which they have rented for six months. The company is also building over their underground cellar where a lot of goods came through the fire safely.

The C. N. Trading Co. have erected a small building on the back of their lot for temporary purposes. The post office in the Steele Co. studio is better than the old one. W. S. Keay has moved the customs office to the Free Press block. The Calgary Cattle Co. are in R. Kerr's carpenter shop. P. Burns & Co. are in the Salvation Army barracks. C. W. Laidley, tailor, has opened business in the Prest studio. Ingram & McIntyre, barbers, are in the cigar factory building. Fred. Vance has opened a barber shop in the Roma. Cree & Hutchison insurance, has two offices, one a tent on Mrs. Thomson's lot and the other in Mrs. Wilkes' boarding house. F. J. Watson, insurance has his office at his residence. L. P. Eckstein's law office is in a tent on Mr. Tuttle's lot. Herchmer & Herchmer are in the little house next the club house. Ross & Alexander are in Mr. Lambert's residence.

A temporary building has been erected at the rear of the old Hill block site, and is being occupied by A. c. Liphardt, jeweler, and the Fernie Drug store. The latter have goods coming by express. A. W. Bleasdell will open in the cigar factory building. He wired for a stock of drugs on the morning of the fire.

cole Murchison has purchased an interest in J. Jean's hotel business. A permanent building will be erected.

Ingram & McIntyre, barbers, are erecting an up to date shop on W. Ingram's lot.

Mrs. Todd has put up a temporary building on the babk of her lot. She is already occupying one half as a millinery store and c. Richards has rented the other half for a general store.

M. Young, of the old firm of c. Richards & co. will open up in the old stand on the Bentley block. J. D. Quail is erecting a ware house on one of his back lots which he will use as a store until his permanent building is ready. W. F. cuthbert has his store running at full swing in the Northern Hotel sitting room. F. Stork is erecting a workshop in the rear of his lot.

LICENSES RENEWED.

Hotels Will be Conducted in Temporary Quarters.

The license board met on Monday evening to consider applications from the six hotel men burned out, for licenses to conduct the hotel business in temporary quarters until permanent buildings could be erected. Messrs. Tuttie, Dunn, Jarvis, Whelan and Jean were able to give satisfactory proof that their hotels would be built again and were granted licenses. Mr. J. L. Gates was unable at the time to say what the Levasseur estate would do and his application was put aside for later reference.

W. Tuttle's temporary building was commenced on Monday and already it is well on to completion. It is 100x40 feet and can be moved away in sections. T. Whelan's temporary structure is back near the lane. It is also nearly finished It will be used for a store house when the permanent building goes up.

INSURANCE ADJUSTERS.

The various insurance companies were promptly notified of losses by their respective agents and by Monday several adjusters were on the grounds. These are, John McEwen, of Winnipeg, representing the Norwich Union and the Pheonix of Brooklyn.

H. Lipscon, of Winnipeg, representing The Atlas, London and Lancashire, Northern, Royal, National of Ireland, Western, and Union.

Henry Lye, of Vancouver, representing The Caledonian, Manchester, Canadian, Ottawa, London Mutual, Anglo-American, and Equity.

W. Bailey, of Vancouver, representing North America, Sun, Pheonix of London, British American, and London, Liverpool and Globe.

The various people who were burned out were instructed to make out a statement of their losses and to present the same at the office of the adjusters in the fire hall.

FOR SALE.

Under and by the virtue contained in two certain mortgages, which will be produced at the time of sale, there will be offered for sale by public auction on Monday, the twenty-third day of May, A.D., 1904, at the hour of noon, at the mill site on the premises to be sold at the town of Fernie, in the province of British Columbia, the following property, viz.:

The timber limits at Fernie, B.C., formerly the property of the Cedar Valley Improvement Company, Limited, consisting of:

One thousand eight hundred and twenty seven acres, more or less, of heavy timber land, consisting of cedar, fir, spruce and tamarac, the timber all of fine growth and easily accessible for logging purposes both summer and winter.

Also one Waterous Mill plant and machinery with a capacity of forty thousand feet per day, two planners and lath mill all complete and ready to operate. The above plant and machinery have been in use only ten months and are in perfet repair.

Also stables, dwelling houses, store, smithy, logging camp all substantially built and ready for occupation and situate upon the above limits.

The above limits are held under Crown Grant and the purchaser of the same will be enabled to enter upon the property and conduct logging and milling operations without delay and with little or no expenditure as the plant is compleie and in good condition while good logging roads have been constructed throughout the property.

The limits are situate on Elk river opposite Coal Creek about one and½ one quarter miles from Fernie and are described as follows:

Lots 5237, 5238 and 5458, groop 1, Kootenay District, according to official survey of the said district.

Lot 5239, group 1, Kootenay District, according to the official survey of the said district.

The aforesaid lot No. 5239 will be sold subject to a first mortgage to Alfred F. Grady, of Macleod, N.W.T., for two thousand dollars and accrued interest, now overdne, and the said Waterous mill plant, machinery, planer and lath mill will be sold subject to a hire receipt order held by the Waterous Engine Works Company, and upon which is due the sum of seven thousand dollars, copies of which first mortgage and hire receipt can be seen at the office of the undersigned and will be produced at the time of the sale.

Subject to the above mortgage and lien the whole of the above property will be sold without prior encnmbrance.

TERMS

Twenty per cent. of the purchase money to be paid at the time of sale, remainder within fifteen days thereafter.

To Be Incorporated July 1st.

Full Terms of Agreement Between Town and Company

A Committee of Six to Circulate Petition Among Property Owners and to Attend to Other Details. July 1st to be Celebrated as "Fernie Day."

The final steps are now being taken to secure the incorporation of the town of Fernie and it is calculated that all the legal requirements will be satisfied and the affairs of the town will be in the hands of Fernie's first council by July 1st, or six weeks hence.

The committee instructed to draft the agreement with the Coal Company called a general Board of Trade meeting for Tuesday evening when the full text of the agreement was read by Mr. J. S. T. Alexander as follows:—

THE AGREEMENT.

Memorandum of conditions agreed upon between the Board of Trade of the Town of Fernie and the Crows Nest Pass Coal Company, regarding the incorporation of the existing town and other lands into a City or Town, subject to ratification by a public meeting of the residents of the town of Fernie.

BOUNDARIES.

1. There shall be incorporated in the new municipality the following lands, more particularly described as follows;—Commencing at point one hundred feet due east of the intersection of the centre line of the British Columbia Southern Railway, and the centre of the stream bed of Coal Creek, and running thence in a northerly direction, and parallel to the centre line of the said railway, and one hundred feet distant therefrom, for a distance of one thousand and eighty five feet more or less to a point fifty feet from the centre line of the southern branch of the Y connecting the main-line of the British Columbia Southern railway with the Coal Creek branch of the same, thence in a direction about north thirty-three degrees and fifteen minutes east fifteen hundred feet more or less to a point distant one hundred and forty feet southerly, from the extension of the line of the southerly side of Cox street of the Fernie townsite and one hundred feet distant in an easterly direction and at right angles from the centre line of the main line of the said British Columbia Southern railway; thence south fifty-six degrees and forty-five minutes east one hundred feet; thence north thirty three degrees and fifteen minutes east one thousand eight hundred and thirty six feet; thence curving to the right with a radius of five thousand seven hundred and thirty feet for a distance of four hundred and seventy three feet thence north thirty eight degrees and fifteen minutes east seven hundred and seventy feet thence north fifty-six degrees and forty five minutes west one hundred feet thence north thirty eight degrees and fifteen minutes east four hundred and fifty feet more or less to a point on the extension of the line of the northern boundary of parcel number three of that certain parcel or tract of land shown on a map or plan of a sub division of lot four thousand five hundred and eighty eight, group 1, Kootenay district and otherwise known as the Fernie Townsite Block: thence in a westerly direction six hundred and forty feet more or less to the north east corner of the said parcel number three, thence in a westerly direction and along the said northern boundary of the said parcel number three, three thousand nine hundred and sixty feet more or less to the east bank of the Elk River, thence in a southerly direction, and along the east bank of the Elk river to the mouth of Coal Creek; thence in an easterly direction, and following the centre of the stream bed of Coal Creek against the stream to the point of commencement, containing three hundred and thirty-one acres, be the same more or less, and for convenience of reference the aforesaid lands are divided into three districts, hereinafter referred to as the "Park", the "Present Fernie Townsite" and the "Annex". The land hereinafter referred to as the "Park" is all that portion of the firstly described lands lying south of Prior Street, bounded on the west by the Elk river, on the south by Coal Creek, and on the east by the west limit of the C. P. Railway. The land hereinafter referred to as the "Present Fernie Townsite" is all that portion of the firstly described lands, laid out and shown on a map or plan of sub-division of the portion of Lot 4588 made by T T. McVittie, Provincial Land Surveyor, and duly registered in the Registry Office at Nelson, B. C., as No. 734. The land hereinafter described as the "Annex" is all that portion of the firstly described lands excepting thereout the "Park" and the "Present Fernie Townsite." The said lands and sub-divisions thereof are also described on the plan hereto annexed.

THE PARK.

2. The Park shall for all time be exempt from such taxes and rates as the municipality to be created shall have power for any purpose to assess and levy, excepting so much of the said "Park" as has been or hereafter may, be built upon, leased or sold, for residences or other purposes, but all such parts thereof now, or hereafter leased or sold or built upon, shall not be exempt as aforesaid. When a residence has been, or shall be built, the lands used therewith, and appurtenanced thereto, shall be subject to taxes. The Crows Nest Pass Coal Company is to enter into a good and sufficient agreement with the new municipality to at all times allow such portion of the "Park" as has not been built upon, or shall not hereafter be built upon, leased or sold, to be used by the citizens of the new municipality as a Park.

THE OLD TOWN AND "ROW."

3. The Crows Nest Pass Coal Company will use its influence to prevent any of the houses in the Old Town, or district back of the coke ovens or east of the lands of the Canadian Pacific railway from being used for hotels or other commercial purposes, and the Crows Nest Pass Coal Company agrees to cancel within six months from the date of incorporation all leases in the "Red Light District" and to dispossess the tenants, and also to set apart in the new municipality, lands which may be purchased by the said ejected tenants, to which they may remove their present tenements The locality to be set aside to which these tenements are to be moved is to be forthwith selected by a committee of the Board of Taade and the officials of the Crows Nest Pass Coal Company. The committee has since selected the lands across the Canadian Pacific Railway track from the "Row" situate between the lands of the Fernie Manufacturing company and the vacant lands of the C. P. R.

PRESENT RIGHTS MAINTAINED.

4. Such right and title as the Crows Nest Pass Coal Company now has in the existing streets and alleys of the firstly described lands, or in any streets or alleys which may be laid out in the said lands, are not to be deemed to have been hereby relinquished but are to remain undisturbed and as effectual as if this agreement had not been entered into, and the free use of the streets and alleys of the new municipality is to be given to the said Company, or to the crows Nest Pass Electric Light and Power company at their option, for the purpose of enabling them, or each of them to lay water mains, and to erect poles and wires, and do such other things as may be necessary to completely install and carry on and operate, a water works system, an electric light system and a telephone system.

THE OFFICE BUILDING.

5. Block 15 of the "Present Fernie Townsite" (upon which the coal company contemplates erecting modern general office buildings) is to be exempt from all taxes and rates, which the new municipality shall have the power to assess, or levy for any purpose for the period of twenty years from the date of building the said offices, and the said company agrees to build its said offices within the limits of the municipality to be incorporated.

VACANT LANDS.

6. Such part of the "Annex" as is the property of the said company is to be exempt from all taxes and rates, which the municipality shall have the power to assess or levy for any purpose as long as the same remains unsold, or is not leased, but upon the sale or lease of any portion thereof, the part so leased or sold shall thereupon become liable to be assessed, and cease to be exempt from taxation and rating as aforesaid.

7. The crows Nest Pass coal company will not take advantage of any statute (if any there be) to oblige or compel the new municipality to take over or purchase the existing water supply in the "Present Fernie Townsite"

8. These foregoing conditions are to be embodied in the application for incorporation of the aforesaid lands as a Municipality, and the charter of Incorporation is to give legal effect to the terms and conditions herein agreed upon; or such security is to be given to both of the parties hereto, as will satisfy them that the terms and conditions hereof will be observed, adhered to and carried into effect before the patent under the public seal of the province to incorporate the said municipality shall be issued.

Several of the clauses came up before the meeting for discussion but when the legal phraseology was explained in certain instances the whole agreement was declared to be exactly the same as agreed upon at the previous meeting and by a unanimous vote it was received and adopted.

The old committee of Messrs. Rennie, Trites and Alexander was increased to six members the names of Messrs. W. R. Ross, L. P. Eckstein and H. W. Herchmer being added. This committee was instructed to proceed with the winding up of the details, which includes the circulation of a petition among the property owners asking the Lieutenant-Governor-in-Council to grant the order for incorporation, and the necessary advertising, etc. The committee who were present expressed their determination to hurry the movement as rapidly as possible and they were of the opinion that Fernie's first council could be elected before July 1st. A suggestion that a grand celebration should be held on that day in honor of the event was received with enthusiasm.

CRANBROOK GETS OFFICES

Present Arrangements only Temporary.—Fernie to have Offices of its own.

The Government offices for Southeast Kootenay District have been removed from Fort Steele to Cranbrook. The change is the result of an order-in-council passed a couple of weeks ago and the transfer will be made on Monday the 16th. The entire staff will take up its quarters at Cranbrook. It consists of J. F. Armstrong, government agent; A.C. Nelson, assessor; J. Hislop, mining recorder; and J. F. Smith, H. S. Clark and Miss Tanhauser, clerks. As there is no government building at Cranbrook the office will be conducted in a vacant school room.

Considerable dissappointment is felt in Fernie over this decision on the part of the Government, as, while many Fernieites are willing to concede that each district should have a government office and that Cranbrook should be selected as the capital of that division of the district, none are willing to admit that Cranbrook's claims are as strong as Fernie's when it is determined that both divisions must come under the control of one government agent.

A FREE PRESS representative in this frame of mind sought out our local member, Mr. W. R. Ross and from him received assurances which materially lessened the seriousness of the situation in his estimation.

Mr. Ross stated that he had lost no opportunity of pressing Fernie's claims for the government offices and he had received a letter recently from Premier McBride stating that the present arrangements were of a temporary nature, the conditions of the district being such as to necessitate the removal of the offices at once to a point on the railway. The letter conveyed the idea that other arrangements would be made shortly, that the Fernie district would secure adequate facilities for carrying on governmental business and that there was a strong probability that a separate district would be created with a full complement of necessary offices.

DEATH OF WM. E. PATTON.

Driver in No. 2 Mine Instantly Killed by Falling From Car.

A sad accident occurred at Coal creek Mines last night at 7:30 resulting in the instant death of Wm. E. Patton driver in No. 2 mine. It appears that the lines caught around the young man's foot causing him to overbalance and fall in front of the car. When picked up his neck was broken and he was dead.

The deceased was 22 years of age. In December last he came from Westville, N. S., where his mother and other relatives live. His father was killed when deceased was an infant. His grandfather owns a large interest in the Amherst Iron Works of Nova Scotia.

William Patton was well known and well liked by his fellow workmen and the people of the town. He was a clever young man with a mechanical turn of mind. He held an electrician's diploma from the Scranton Correspondence School He assisted valiantly in fighting the fire of the 29th, ult., and as he understood the mechanism of the chemical engine his assistance was of great value.

The funeral of the deceased will be held to-morrow from the residence of Mr. D. McDonald where he boarded.

THE IMPERIAL HOTEL.

Handsome Structure at Corner of Hanson and Baker St.

At a meeting of the license board last Friday Messrs. J. Jean and C. Murchison received a transfer of their license from the old Waldorf site to the two lots immediately north of it. This site includes the corner lot recently purchased by Mr. Pollock and the one where the Gem Resturant formerly stood which has been purchased by Mr. Jean.

The new firm have had plans prepared for a handsome new structure 60x54 of two storeys and a one storey addition together with a basement. The house will be plastered and well finished throughout, heated by furnaces and electric lighted. The cost will be about $7,000. The name of the new hotel will be The Imperial. The work of construction will commence at once and should be completed in two months.

THE COMPANY BUILDING.

Orders have been issued for the immediate construction of the new office building of the C. N. P. Coal Company on the old recreation ground square. H. B. Wright, chief engineer of the Company, and F. Sample, superintendent of building construction will have charge of the work. The Company are at the present time negotiating for the purchase of stone for its construction. The work will be pushed as rapidly as possible to be ready for occupancy by the Fall.

The old bunk house is still undergoing repairs and improvements to fit it for temporary premises. The roof is beraised to make more room for the engineering and geological departments and a two storey vault is being built on the outside.

UHLMAN SENT UP.

The trial of Uhlman, the German, who was charged with embezzlement, dragged on for several days and was finally ended on Wednesday. Various witnesses were called to prove that sums of money were paid to the accused that were not credited on the books. The case was fought out at every point by L. P. Eckstein for the defence, but the evidence was overwhelming against the accused and the magistrate ordered him to stand trial before a higher court. Bail will be applied for before Judge Forin. The alleged theft of clothes, etc. will be taken in connection with the present charge when the case comes up again.

J. L. Gates who held the Alberta license in his name has been granted a transfer to the corner site across the street from the post office, he having purchased a 60 foot frontage on that corner. A permit was granted to Mr. Gates to open up temporarily on a site between the post office and the depot on the other side of the street and a neat structure has been erected there and is now ready for occupation. This structure has six rooms upstairs and the bar and dining room downstairs. The permanent building will probably be built of fire proof material and will be three storeys in height. It will be commenced within 30 days.

HILL NOT AFTER CONTROL.

Mr. G. G. S. Lindsey, K. C., Talks on Several Subjects Relating to Local. Affairs.

A FREE PRESS reporter had a few minutes chat on Tuesday with Mr. Lindsey, K. C., managing Director and 3rd Vice-President of the C. N. P. Coal Company.

Mr. Lindsey stated that his business in the west at this time was primarily in connection with the explosion suits which were to come up for hearing on the 25th inst. He would remain in Fernie until the 23rd. Before that date he expected the arrival of several British experts who would examine the scene of the explosion and give evidence in the case. Of the ultimate result Mr. Lindsey had no doubts, had never had any in fact. The suggestion of allowing something to the sufferers had not been repeated since they undertook to push their claims at law and gave their solicitors an interest to the extent of twenty per cent of any amounts recovered. Counsel for the defense are, Messrs. E. P. Davis, K. C., E. V. Bodwell, K. C., Joseph Martin, K. C., W. A. McDonald, K. C., and H. W. Herchmer.

Mr. Lindsey in reply to enquiries as to the cause of the suspension of work at Morrissey stated that the stoppage was due to causes of a private character which for business reasons, he was not prepared to disclose at the present time. These matters would adjust themselves in due time, when the facts would probably be made public. He most emphatically denied the truth of the report that Mr. J. J. Hill was seeking to gain control of the C. N. P. Coal Company. These reports evidently grew out of the dissolving of the Merger by the Supreme Court of the United States. By its decision the Northern Securities Company was ordered to redistribute the Great Northern Railway and Northern Pacific Railway stocks to its shareholders. A large percentage of the residue of the Northern Securities Company's holdings consisted of Crows Nest Pass Coal Company's stock, transferred to it by Mr. Hill, and which represented his interest in the Coal Company purchased some time previous. This stock being the property of the Northern Securities Co. necessarily increased the number of holders of the company and materially decreased Mr. Hill's personal holding instead of increasing it as commonly reported. No man would receive the report that Mr. Hill sought to control the Coal Company or did control it more incredulously than Mr. Hill himself.

Mr. Lindsey did not know definitely the date when the construction work would commence on the Great Northern extension to Michel.

Asked his opinion of the incorporation movement Mr. Lindsey replied that he believed the town was alive to its interests in seeking to obtain control of its own affairs, particularly at the present time when building regulations would be of permanent advantage to the town. When Mr. Jaffray, Col. Mason and himself were in Fernie last September they appreciated the desire of the townspeople in this direction and they had then determined to meet the wishes of the people as far as possible. This had been done and he believed that everything pointed to the early incorporation of the town. He had already given instruction to proceed with getting out the stone for the construction of the Company's new office building. This building would be completed during the present year. Mr. Lindsey spoke optimistically of the future of the town, of the praiseworthy efforts of the sufferers from the fire to build up a better town, and of the general prosperous conditions governing the coal and coke industry of the district.

REFERENCE POINTS.

The surveyors after re-staking the corners of the lots in the burnt district fixed permanent reference points at several places so that at any time in the future these points can be consulted in case of dispute. These monument corners have been placed at each corner of the Coal Company's office square, and at the centres of Wood and Cox streets where they cross Victoria Ave. These holes when they were first dug created some little wonder. They were about 6 feet deep. A large square stone is implanted in each. Then a hole is bored in the top of the stone and the hole is filled with molten lead. A plain point on the lead filling designates the point desired. The top of the stone is about a foot below the surface of the street. Mr. McEvoy who had charge of the surveying reports that while many minor mistakes were noticed in the old locations the final measurements came out correct in almost every case. Several of the old buildings were out 6 and 8 inches.

EVE

Copyright, 1903, by T. C. McClure

It was a mere whimsical idea that prompted Adam Breck to swing suddenly round in his office chair that gray November day and say, "Throw in the farm at Buttonwood, Jimmy, for good measure, and we'll close the deal here and now." It was an equally whimsical idea that sent Breck up to Buttonwood the following June to inspect the farm; for Jimmy Cregar had closed the deal then and there, and a deed to the place, duly drawn up and recorded, had reposed in a pigeonhole of Adam's desk since November.

He had scarcely given the place a thought heretofore, and as to what it might be like he had not cared a whit, for the deal would have been decidedly to his advantage even without the farm. That June morning, however, in overhauling his papers, he had come across the deed, and, with one of those sudden decisions for which he was famous, he was off to Buttonwood to see his farm, the deed in one pocket and a bunch of jingling keys in another. He might sell the place, he might rent it, he might give it away. That was immaterial. The charm of the affair lay in its incongruity. He was starting out to inspect a piece of property the very existence of which he had ignored for some months. He chuckled to himself as he climbed into the smoker of the train.

That evening Adam sat on the stone doorstep of his Buttonwood house. He had been most happily disappointed in the place. The house was a low, rambling, story and a half affair, in an excellent state of repair. An inviting piazza ran along the northern side; the western end was half hidden under rambler rose bushes just coming into bloom, and a box hedge divided his domain from the road. To the left he could see the cozy house of a near-by neighbor, Dr. Thurston, as Breck learned from the lantern above the depot next door. The peace and quiet of the place appealed to him. Seated there in the red twilight Adam suddenly felt a desire to remain here—to build up the place by his own efforts. Sell it, rent it, give it away? No, indeed. He would build it into a little Eden of his own devising. And, the mood being strong upon him, he trudged the mile and a half to town to telegraph for his effects.

"MORE EDENS TO CONQUER?" SHE ASKED LIGHTLY.

Early next morning Breck set to work. With a pair of ancient pruning shears he had found in the shed he was trimming the hedge, which, somehow or other, was not the simple task he had imagined. He was awkwardly lopping off the twigs when he became aware some one was watching him from the other side of the fence. He turned and saw a girl looking at him from the depths of a sunbonnet. She was an amazingly pretty girl, and the laughter lurking in her eyes was a trifle disconcerting.

"Good morning," she said. "Are you our new neighbor?"

Breck doffed his hat, and, fishing in his vest pocket, found a card. He approached the girl.

"I am Adam," he announced, presenting the card, "and this is Eden I am making. I fear I'm doing it badly," he added, with a deprecatory wave toward the gouged hedge.

"Rather," said the girl, her eyes sparkling. "If you like, papa will lend you the gardener."

"Oh, no," said Adam; "this is to be an Eden of my own making. Therein lies the charm."

They talked of commonplace matters—of strawberries and pansy beds and the like. He discovered she was Edith Thurston, the doctor's daughter. He also discovered she was the most charming young woman it had been his privilege to meet. When she turned to the house he watched her to the door.

"Eve, by Jove!" he asserted, as she entered. Then he returned to his hedge trimming with a vigor which threatened to exterminate it.

After that they entered into the jolliest sort of friendship. Every morning she called across the fence: "Good morning, Mr. Adam. What is the latest bulletin from Eden?" Whereat Adam would perch on the fence and drolly relate his experiences with the pruning shears or the lawn mower, or he would set forth his doubts as to where the raspberry bushes should be set out. Summer waxed and Eden grew.

"It's finished," said Adam, almost regretfully. "Eden is complete as far as my work goes."

They sat on the stone doorstep in the twilight of a late July day. The girl was looking pensively at the red sky.

"More Edens to conquer?" she asked lightly.

"No," he said. "I want to complete this one."

"You said it was finished," she said.

"I said my work on it was finished," he returned. "Here is Adam," he went on, "and here is Eden. There's a discrepancy."

"You won't have any trouble finding the serpent," she observed.

"Eve came before the serpent," he said.

"I should think," she said, "you'd profit by example. Eve was the undoing of the original garden."

"There'll be no serpent in this garden," he said. "I've made this solely for Eve. Every flower bed I have made, every drop of paint I have put on, has been with the thought of Eve. It's all for her."

"Then you had Eve in mind when you came here?" she asked.

"Yes," he fabricated unblushingly.

"Oh," she said in a queer little voice.

"I've always known her," he went on, "from the time I was a child."

She was silent.

"I've always thought I'd make her an Eden with my own hands. I hope she'll be happy here. Do you suppose it will suit her?" he asked anxiously.

"It should," she said.

"Does it suit her?" he asked very gently.

She started. "Pray how do I know?" she said coldly.

He slipped an arm about her and drew her close to him.

"I've always known her," he explained, "but I never saw her until she looked at me across a fence and laughed at me from the depths of a sunbonnet because I gouged the hedge. Does it suit her?" he repeated.

"Adam." There was a world of tenderness in her voice.

"Eve," he said gently.

A Hint to Papa.

Twenty times William Archibald Stewart had been forbidden to cross the trolley tracks to buy candy, and twenty times William Archibald Stewart had disobeyed. Patience had ceased to be a virtue with William Stewart's father.

"Don't be too hard on him," the mother pleaded.

But William's father had his dander up and his rattan ready as he summoned the culprit into his august presence.

"Willie," he said, "how many times have you been forbidden to cross the trolley tracks to buy candy?"

William did not answer, but stood with head lowered and hands ready to press to his eyes.

"Don't you know it hurts papa even more than it does you to have to punish his little boy? Now, suppose you had a little boy and you had told him twenty times not to cross the trolley tracks, and suppose he disobeyed you—what would you do with him?"

William swallowed a lump in his throat and threw back his shoulders with a visible effort.

"Papa," he said, "I don't think I'd like it. But—but I'd—I'd try everything in this world before I'd lick my child!"—New York Press.

Mrs. Polk's Escape.

When Polk was a member of congress he and his wife were riding in a coach in Tennessee.

The driver ventured into a swollen stream, where presently the horses got beyond their depth and commenced swimming. A little more and the coach would have been engulfed. At that moment a man came up the bank on horseback and shouted to the driver to stop.

The danger seemed imminent, and Mr. Polk, who could not swim, called out from his seat inside the coach, offering any amount of money to any one who would save his wife. The man on horseback seemed afraid to venture to the rescue, but Mr. Granville Pillow, who was sitting beside Mrs. Polk, threw off his coat, exclaiming, "I will take you out, madam!"

He swam to the bank, compelled the man to give up his horse, mounted, plunged into the rapid current, came up behind the stage and told Mrs. Polk to step on the high hind wheel and thence upon the shoulder of the horse. He held her firmly in his arms and bore her safely to the bank.

Dickens' Name.

A question having arisen in the Pall Mall Gazette as to the earliest authentic portrait of Charles Dickens, Mr. F. G. Kitton writes to that journal as follows: "I venture to say that the earliest presentment which bears the stamp of authenticity is the miniature on ivory painted by Mrs. Janet Barrow (nee Ross) in 1830, representing 'Boz' at the age of eighteen, with a high satin stock and wearing a coat with broad lapels such as was worn in the reign of William IV. Mrs. Barrow was an aunt of Dickens and achieved great repute as a painter of miniatures.

"With regard to the correct spelling of Dickens' third baptismal name there is, I think, no doubt that 'Huffam' is the accurate rendering. My authority is the late Robert Langton, who, in his carefully compiled work on 'The Childhood and Youth of Charles Dickens,' points out that the spelling of the name as 'Huffham' in the Portsea register of baptisms is incorrect—an assertion borne out by Forster's remark that on rare occasions Dickens himself wrote it without the second 'h.'"

MULTIPLY AS THE BUDS

DR. TALMAGE'S WELCOME TO METHODIST GENERAL CONFERENCE.

SECRET OF ITS INFLUENCE

Rise and Growth of the Methodist Church in the Religious World—Just and Generous Tribute From a Preacher Who Is Not of That Especial Fold of Christ's Kingdom—Wesley Everywhere Respected.

Entered according to Act of Parliament of Canada, in the year 1904, by William Daily, of Toronto, at the Dep't of Agriculture, Ottawa.

Los Angeles, Cal., May 1.—On the occasion of the assembling of the Methodist General Conference of 1904 the preacher welcomes the delegates and points out the rise and growth of Methodism and the secret of its far reaching influence upon the religious world to-day. The text is Ezekiel xvi, 7, "I have caused thee to multiply as the bud of the field."

Lord Macaulay, in one of his essays, declares that John Wesley had a greater natural genius for Government than had Richelieu. The great historian believed that in these words he was giving the eminent divine the highest praise. The whole Christian world is in accord in that estimate, and as it recognizes the achievements of the church which John Wesley founded it thanks and praises God for that beneficent life.

The name of John Wesley is everywhere respected by the good and the true. Therefore is it to be wondered at that our people, no matter to what Protestant church they belonged, hailed with joyful acclaim the news that the Methodist General Conference of 1904 was to assemble in the City of the Angels? This conference opens its session during the coming week. We, as a people, look forward to its sessions with interest and hope. We believe that by close touch this conference will bless all Protestant churches, no matter to what denomination they belong. It is appropriate on this Sabbath day to bid the incoming delegates welcome. It is also appropriate to state some of the reasons why the little band of followers with which John Wesley surrounded himself has grown in numbers until to-day it out-numbers in membership every other individual Protestant church in America and in the world.

First, her genesis. In order to study the marvelous multiplying power of Methodism let us analyze the conditions attendant upon her birth. We must find upon what troublous waters her cradle was rocked and search out the place of her infancy, even as the Egyptian princess found the future emancipator of the Hebrew race sleeping in a willow basket among the bulrushes of the River Nile. Every great movement in history has been the product of the condition of the time of its birth. God in his providence has ordained that the prevalence of unrighteousness in a nation shall so stir the souls of his people that they will gather in his name around the standard of some leader whom he raises up to witness for him.

What were the conditions of the nation at the time of the birth of the Methodist church? Did she come into the world as a protest to the sins of a corrupt English court? Oh, yes. In no time of English history have bribery and debauchery run more riot than during Robert Walpole's occupancy of the English premiership. He was the author of the famous and hateful sentence in reference to the House of Commons, "All these men have their price." What Robert Walpole in statecraft could not win by fair means he won by foul. But Methodism came into the world to do a greater work than merely to protest against Governmental depravity. It came, as Josiah Strong has said, as a protest against an Established church, which believed at that time more in outward ceremonies than in spiritual truths. "Isaac Taylor," so records the author of "The Next Great Awakening," "calls the church of this period 'a fair carcass,'" and Blackstone says that he went to hear every preacher of note in London and that there was not one whose discourse indicated whether he was a follower of Confucius or Mohammed or of Christ. The Established church of that time believed in carrying the phylacteries upon the forehead, but not in practicing Christ's spiritual lessons in the life. It was so given over to formalism and rites and ceremonies that it had no warning to give even to men in its pulpits, who, like the Pharisees of old, were whited sepulchers, fair to the eye, but within harboring decaying corpses and whose private lives were a repulsive stench. "It is the inward witness, son, the inward witness," spake the dying father, Samuel Wesley, to his son John—"this is the strongest proof of Christianity." So John Wesley and his followers resolutely set their faces against the prevalent sins of that day. They vehemently declared that the Christian church should not only have a pure creed, but that its members should be men of pure private lives. In the high spiritual standard set before the individual church members we find the chief cause of the marvelous development of the Methodist church.

My brother, it is of vital importance that all Protestant churches realize that they are making a fatal error when they in any way compromise their high spiritual standards by alliance with sin. The higher the standard of the Christian church the greater will be its success. We do not need to-day churches that honor winebibbing ministers. We do not need churches which, when they have a church sociable, tell their young people they may dance and play cards. We do not desire churches whose members in their every day actions are nowise different from the people of the world. One of the reasons why the Christian Endeavor Society, of which Francis E. Clark is the president, is numbering its members by the hundreds of thousands and the millions is because of its ironclad pledge. John Willis Baer, who for so many years was secretary of that young people's Christian organization, was right when in my presence some years ago he declared, "The high standard of the character of the Endeavorers is due to the high standard of the society's pledge."

This fact alone does not tell all the story of its marvelous multiplying power. There are many other reasons for the growth of Methodism. One of the chief of these is the fact that John Wesley was the emancipator of the laymen, as Martin Luther was the emancipator of the Bible. The English ecclesiastic opened the dumb lips of the pew. The German reformer broke the iron clasps holding together the lids of the word of God, which barred to all but ordained priests access to the life giving message that God sent for the deliverance of all his sinful children. John Wesley said to the blacksmith at the forge and the cobbler on his bench and the wife in her kitchen: "Go forth and be my evangelists. You may not be graduates of theological seminaries, but you can testify of Christ's love. Martin Luther said: "There, laymen, is the open Bible. Read it. Ponder it. Study it. Read it with your own eyes and kiss it with your own lips." Do you wonder that when John Wesley built the Methodist church upon an open Bible and then in public meeting set all his people testifying of God's word and love he became one of the greatest gospel reformers of the ages?

John Wesley because he sent forth the common people preaching and praying everywhere was in derision called a "Methodist." He was sneered at because in his day custom dictated that no man should pray in public unless he read his prayer out of a printed prayer book or speak for Christ unless he was entitled to wear a cassock and bands of an ordained priest. But John Wesley removed these restrictions for the Methodists and sent the laymen forth preaching and praying, as in the latter years Archibald Tait, archbishop of Canterbury, enlisted the services of unordained workers in various branches of church activity and earned for himself the title given him in scorn by a jealous clergy of "the archbishop of the laity." There, upon his monument in old Canterbury, is chiseled in the most beautiful of epitaphs, "The one desire of his life was to make the Church of England the church of the people." Oh, my friends, let us hold fast this liberty of service. The work of propagating the gospel is not committed exclusively to any one class or profession. The laborers sent forth by Wesley in the eighteenth century, like the laymen enlisted by Archbishop Tait in the nineteenth, had a work to do, and right earnestly and successfully they did it. Let us never allow the pew to again be shackled and its lips sealed with the silence of death. What we need more and more in the beginning of this twentieth century is not a better educated ministry, but one which will start forth a speaking and a testifying pew.

Another great cause for the multiplying power of Methodism is the "class system." This "class system," so-called, dates its historic birth to the 15th day of February, 1742. Like the life of the Wandering Jew, may it never have a death! May this system live on and on until at last earthly time shall cease and the struggles against sin shall be swallowed up in the eternal conquests of heaven!

This was how the famous "class system" of Methodism was born; John Wesley and his brother Charles were visiting their society in the city of Bristol. A large financial indebtedness hung as an incubus over that society's place of worship. While the members of that society were discussing with the leaders how they should lift the debt a Captain Foy arose and proposed that each member should be taxed one penny a week until the debt was paid. "But that is not fair," some one protestingly said. "Here are some people who are so poor they cannot afford to give even a penny." "Then," said Captain Foy, "put eleven of the poorest with me, and if they can give anything I will call upon them weekly and collect the same, and if they give nothing I will give for them as well as for myself, and each of you can call on eleven of your neighbors weekly, receive what they give and make up what is wanting." No sooner had Captain Foy spoken than in a flash a divine inspiration came to John Wesley. "Yes, yes," said the great leader to himself; "that is just what Methodism needs—a system of caring for its own, a system by which its members shall not be herded together as wild animals are herded together, but a system which will single men out and place them in circles of tens, and over these circles shall be placed a separate leader who will have charge of each class. These leaders in turn were to meet and report to their pastors. Their pastors in turn to-day meet and report to their presiding elders. Each man by the "class system" of Methodism is responsible to some individual person of the church.

We see the value of individual responsibility in the temporal world. Why should we not see the same results from the "class system" of Methodism? Your boy is about sixteen years of age. Where are you going to send the lad to college? "Well," you say, "I would like in many ways to send him to one of our great universities, but the trouble is I am afraid. There the boy will only be lost among a crowd of hundreds of other students, and no one will be individually responsible for the lad. I think I shall send him to one of our smaller colleges, where he will come in close contact with his teachers, and these teachers will be able to keep their eye upon him." You send your boy to a small college to secure the individual touch of a professor upon the boy.

Now, the "class system" of Methodism has a double purpose—first, it makes the Methodist convert a member of a great gospel university in which there are hundreds of thousands and millions of members and it gives to that convert the enthusiasm which truly comes from great numbers, and, secondly, it separates the Methodist convert from the masses. It places him in a gospel family for which some one is responsible. It gives to him a separate gospel garden in which to labor. It says: "Old convert, you look after that young man and that young woman. Visit them in their homes. See that they have the right kind of companionship. When they are absent from the house of God learn why they are absent and tell them that they are missed." Individual responsibilities for individuals—that is the great multiplying slogan of the Methodist "class system." For whom, O Christian man, are you responsible in Christ's name?

The Methodist Church, in the next place, is a singing church, whose songs are nearly always keyed to the tune of hope and joy and the glorious harmonies of a blessed hereafter. It is a church whose music is filled with hallelujah choruses and battle hymns and inspiring marching melodies. It is a church which believes that our thanks and gratitude for blessings received can be returned to God as well when standing upon our feet and, in the words of the psalmist, "singing unto the Lord," as when on bended knee we offer them in silent prayer in the closet. The trouble with many of our churches is they always imagine Christ as keeping step to the slow time of a dirge, but they cannot imagine his moving lips as joining in a wedding march or in the joys of a social gathering.

Daniel Webster once said: "The proof to me that the church was established by God is found in the fact that it has existed in spite of the begowned ministers who have been caged up to preach their sermons behind their repellant pulpits. Any lawyer would be ruined if he were compelled to plead for his client behind a wooden box, as the minister by custom is compelled to plead for his Christ." Whether that statement is true or not, I am not here to discuss, but one of the great facts that convince me that the church is a divine institution is that it has existed for hundreds of years in spite of the sepulchral and awful hymns with which the choirs used to lead in the song worship. These hymns, for the most part, were all gloom, all darkness, all breathing fire and brimstone and death. When one sang them he could almost feel the hot, hissing flames of eternal punishment scorching his lips. No such singing as the ancient churches indulged in could do aught but terrorize and make the worshipers tremble with fear. Do you wonder that the churches of old, which sang for the most part the songs of death, should have worshipers who gave only half-hearted voices to their singing? But while the Methodist Church has its songs in the minor key, for the most part the Methodist songs are songs of life and joy and hope. Go if you will with me to any of the great Methodist camp meeting resorts of this country and you will know of what I speak. The mightiest shout ever raised by conquering host upon battlefield was never more triumphant than are the camp meeting songs of Desplaines or Ocean Grove. When the Methodists sing "We are marching to Zion" they sing it in such a way that it seems to fling wide open the gates of the heavenly city.

Lastly, Methodism has had its marvelous and miraculous multiplying power because it has had an infinite field in which to labor. It has worked for the most part among the common people. Certain churches in the world have been known as churches of a class. Some churches have been known as churches which appealed to the greatest amount of brains in almost every Christian community. Other churches have been known as the churches of the aristocracy. But though John Wesley had as much brain as any man of his generation, and though by political preferment he could have reached a position of influence in aristocratic society, yet he chose to cast his lot among the common people. He did not believe there was one gospel for the rich and another for the poor—one for the brainy men and another for him of small mental calibre. John Wesley believed all classes should meet as one at the throne of grace. Therefore, as the common people crowded around him to receive his message, many of the rich and the affluent stayed away. He was truly the missionary to the middle and lower classes. Are we in church work ready to reach out in Christ's name for the conversion of the same kind of people?

It was said of our Lord that "the common people heard him gladly." Ah, that is the best encomium that can be placed upon the tomb of the founder of Methodism! When Peter Cartwright, many years ago, arose to preach in Tennessee some one whispered to him, "General Jackson is in your audience." With that Peter Cartwright turned and said: "I hear that General Jackson is in this audience. But I want to say to General Jackson that I have no gospel for him any different from that which I offer to every man." Then, in a voice of thunder, Cartwright cried: "Except ye repent, ye shall all likewise perish! General Jackson, that message is for you. Poor man, that message is for you." So, to-day, John Wesley in his old pulpit, like Peter Cartwright in vision, is stretching out his arms over the whole sinful world crying: "Repent! Repent! Repent!" And at the same time he is calling: "Come to the mercy seat! Come! Come!"

God bless John Wesley's memory! God bless all Methodists and Methodism! Delegates to the general conference of 1904, in Christ's name we bid you welcome. Aye, we open our hearts and greet you with 10,000 Christian salutations. May you always love us in the spirit with which we greet you on this Sabbath day.

IS NO LONGER A DEATH SENTENCE

Bright's Disease Again Cured by Dodd's Kidney Pills.

Miss Johann Mayor, Given Up by Two Doctors, is Again a Strong Healthy Girl.

Lochiel, Glengarry Co., Ont., May 9.—(Special).—That Bright's Disease has come within reach of Medical Science and is no longer on the list of incurable diseases is again proved in the case of Miss Johann Mayor, of this place. In an interview Miss Mayor says:—"I had Bright's Disease in its worst stages and had to give up a profitable position with a corset firm. Two doctors whom I consulted gave me up telling me I had let the disease go too far. I spent a fortune with doctors besides going to Caledonia Springs each summer, but no good resulted and I began to think that I could not endure life much longer.

"It was then I started to use Dodd's Kidney Pills and it is owing to them entirely that I am at work to-day a strong healthy girl. It took eight boxes in all to complete the cure, but I did not take the first two boxes regularly as I had no faith in them. You may be sure in future I will never be without Dodd's Kidney Pills."

Dodd's Kidney Pills always cure Bright's Disease. How sure it is they will cure all the earlier stages of Kidney Disease.

BLOTCHY SKIN.

A Trouble Due to Impure Blood Easily Remedied.

Bad blood is the one great cause of bad complexion and blotchy skins. This is why you must attack the trouble through the blood with Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. All blotches boils, ulcers, pimples and paleness are the direct, unmistakable result of weak blood loaded with impurities. Dr. Williams Pink Pills conquer the the poison; they drive out all the impurities; they actually make new, rich red blood; they strike right at the root of all complexion troubles; they are a positive and permanent cure for all virulent skin diseases like eczema, scrofula, pimples and erysipelas. They give you a clear, clean soft skin free from all blemish and full of rosy health. Mr. Matthew Cook, Lamerton, N. W. T., tells how Dr. Williams Pink Pills cured him of erysipelas after medicines had failed. He says: "My skin was inflamed; my flesh was tender and sore; my head ached; my tongue was coated; I had chills and and thought I was taking fever. I tried several medicines, but nothing helped me until I began using Dr. Williams' Pink Pills and drove the trouble from my system, and I am now in the best of health. I think these pills the best medicine in the world for blood troubles."

It is an every day record of cures like this that has given Dr. Williams' Pink Pills their world-wide prominence. They cure when other medicines fail, but you must get the genuine with the full name "Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People on the wrapper around every box. You can get these pills at all druggists or by mail at 50 cents a box, or six boxes for $2.50, by writing The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co. Brockville, Ont.

STORY OF GOLD PIONEER

BIT OF HISTORY TOLD BY MR. JAMES MOORE, OF BRITISH COLUMBIA.

The Discovery of Placer Gold in the Pacific Province—Large Prospect From the Washing of a Pan of Moss—Later the Discovery of the Richest Bar Ever Discovered on the Fraser River.

At the recent mining convention in British Columbia Mr. James Moore, the pioneer miner of B. C. and a delegate from the Cariboo, told the story of the discovery of gold in the country. He said, in part: When I first entered the Fraser River, with a few associates, all we found in this Province were three Hudson's Bay trading posts and a number of Siwashes. That was the whole population of the part called at that time New Caledonia. I shall speak of this Province in future as British Columbia, as the Province was a Crown colony after we discovered placer mines on the Fraser River. In ascending the river we camped one evening on a bar to cook lunch, when one of my associates noticed particles of gold in the moss which was growing on the rocks on the bar. He washed a pan of this moss and got a large prospect. After our gastronomic needs were satisfied, we all went prospecting and discovered a rich bar; in fact, sir, the richest bar ever discovered in the Fraser River or its tributaries. We named the bar in honor of my associate, who washed the first pan of moss, "Hill's Bar."

I wish it distinctly understood that we do not claim to be the first discoverers of gold—as gold was discovered the year before in small quantities by Indians on the Thompson River—but when we located this mine we laid the foundation-stone of mining in British Columbia. I may go a little further and say that we laid the foundation-stone of British Columbia, and I am proud to have the honor of stating upon the floor of this convention that I helped to lay that foundation-stone. I am the only one left of the party that discovered those first placer mines on "Hill's Bar," as my associates have crossed the "great divide." I trust they have struck it rich, and I hope they have a place for me when I join them.

When I was in Victoria last winter I met a gentleman, a Mr. Ladd, who told me that he now owns Hill's Bar, in the Fraser River, near Yale, as a mining proposition. He estimates the amount of gold already recovered from that bar to be approximately two million dollars. But, sir, in those days, no matter how rich a camp we discovered, we could not remain long in one camp. We had to explore, and I am still of the same disposition, and will not remain long in one camp to-day, but will proceed into the interior. But, sir, before I do so, I would like to say that after we discovered mines and the great rush to the Fraser River commenced the river was then at high water, and as Yale was the head of the steamboat navigation, it was also for small boats during its high stage until such time as the river fell to low water. You must remember in those days there were no railroads, wagon roads, nor pack trails. We had only an Indian trail along the great canyon of the Fraser, and the large chasms were spanned by poles tied with twisted willows, from which we could look down several hundred feet to the mighty Fraser rushing below. We had to cross these bridges with our packs on or turn back; but, I assure you, sir, that we did not know what those words meant. Our motto was, "Upwards and onwards." In the fall and early spring, when the river was at its lowest stage, we were enabled to take up boats laden with provisions from Yale to Lytton, through the canyon of the Fraser. When we got to Lytton some of the party continued up the river in the boats and discovered other large bars. Others of our party, myself included, got the horses and started inland and discovered the Horsefly country and located what was then known as the celebrated "Blue Lead Claim." I paid the Horsefly a visit 40 years after our discovery in 1859, and paid a visit to the old discovery claim, and found the company was still working that claim. The foreman of the company showed me a pan of gravel he recovered a few days before but not yet washed. It looked to me to be almost as much in gold as gravel in the pan. I could not help noticing the contrast between the present mode of working, which is by hydraulic elevators, the camp being now lit up with electricity, and our crude mode of working 40 years before with rockers and our camp lit up by camp fires. But, sir, we were able to declare a dividend every night of about $100 per man. In the next year, 1860, we discovered Duck, Keithley, Goose, Harvey, Snowshoe Creek, and in 1861 we discovered the richest creeks in Cariboo, namely, Williams, Lightning and Lowhee, Grouse and other creeks, and some of the claims were fabulously rich. I will just state one claim, for example, the Diller claim on William's Creek, where two men were working on the face of a drift with picks. They took out by 24 hours' work 204 pounds of gold Avoirdupois, and this figured into Troy ounces at $16 per ounce would be something like $47,000. But shallow placer mines do not last forever, they are soon worked out. There are a few yet that will last for some time, but not enough to make a prosperous mining camp. In speaking of these shallow placers, I do not speak of the Atlin district. We have in the interior of British Columbia a vast area of great alluvial deposits of auriferous gravels which have been lying dormant for centuries. These deposits are not confined to any one district, but we can find them in Yale, Lillooet, Cariboo, Omenica, Cassiar in three different classes.

NEWFOUNDLAND.

Confederation With Canada Becoming a Live Question—Why the Colony Has Held Aloof From Dominion.

Confederation is again becoming a live question in Newfoundland. This year a general election will divide the people upon the issue. Many look to Canada as the true haven of the island colony. They point out that its manifest destiny is membership in the great Canadian Confederation, that a time of prosperity like the present is the best time for making advantageous terms, and, finally, that the settlement of the French shore question removes the last bar to the happy union of all the British possessions in North America.

It is now forty years since the union of the Canadas and Newfoundland was first discussed. From our former failures in this connection we have something to learn. In 1864, when the idea of the union of the British colonies on this continent was put forward, Newfoundland, along with the other provinces and colonies, was invited to take part in the negotiations. It was represented by Sir Ambrose Shea and Mr. F. B. T. Carter, who framed what the delegates hoped would prove an acceptable basis of union. But the idea was not popular in Newfoundland. On their return the delegates were ridiculed and reviled, and represented as selling the independence of the colony to Canada. The proposals were overwhelmingly defeated at the polls.

Soon afterwards, in June, 1869, the Newfoundland Government promulgated the terms on which the colony would enter Confederation. These terms would not be considered moderate. They proposed that Newfoundland should have a debt allowance equal to $25 per head of population, $35,000 a year for legislative expenses, a subsidy of 80 cents per head, and $150,000 in lieu of Crown lands. Canada was quite willing to accept the terms, but the Newfoundland Legislature suddenly changed its mind, defeated the Government that proposed them, and declared for separate existence.

This settled the issue for nearly twenty years. In 1888 Sir Charles Tupper paid a visit to St. John's. On his return the Governor-General of Canada sent a message to the Governor of Newfoundland, stating that the Canadian Government considered the time convenient for the discussion of union, and was confident that no difficulty would be experienced in arranging the terms. It was suggested that the Newfoundland Legislature should send a deputation to negotiate, and also that the delegates should represent both the Ministerialists and Oppositionists. To this the Governor of Newfoundland replied: "The question is now being discussed among the parties, and your correspondent has no doubt but that a deputation will be sent." No deputation was sent, however.

Then arose the dispute over the Bond-Blaine Treaty, in which Canada objected to Newfoundland making a fisheries arrangement at Washington independently of this country. Newfoundland, taking umbrage at this, refused bait to Canadians. Finally, however, a conference restored harmony. At the conference Sir John Thompson proposed Confederation as a solution of all the difficulties, but the Newfoundland delegates replied they were not authorized to discuss it.

Dark days financially overtook Newfoundland in the succeeding years. Driven to the verge of bankruptcy the colony sent delegates to Ottawa to discuss Confederation. Then were proposed the terms which Sir Mackenzie Bowell and his colleagues considered excessive. Canada made counter-proposals, which Newfoundland rejected. And thus the conference proved fruitless. Canada's proposals were based on the terms accorded to the existing members of the Confederation. Our Government offered, first of all, to assume a debt of $8,350,000, and to pay interest on $2,000,000 in addition. Thus the total obligation to be assumed was limited to $10,350,000, or fifty dollars per head of population. The colony was offered on annual subsidy of $465,000, which was made up as follows: $50,000 allowance for legislation, $165,000 per capita subsidy, at 80 cents per head of population, $150,000 allowance for Crown lands, timber and mines, and $100,000, being five per cent. on the excess debt

Between the offer of Canada and the request of Newfoundland there was a difference of about $354,000 a year. The first point of divergence was with regard to the assumption of the debt. Newfoundland asked Canada to assume nearly $16,000,000 of debt. Of this about $6,000,000 had been incurred on account of the island railway, which Canada was asked to complete to Port Aux Basques. It has since been completed. Newfoundland asked also for $250,000 a year, in lieu of its Crown lands, $100,000 more than Canada's offer; and $150,000 a year in bounties to fishermen. To the latter proposal Canada replied that the Newfoundland fishermen would be paid the same bounties as were accorded at any time to the Canadian fishermen.

The great obstacle to agreement had been the amount of public debt the Dominion should assume. The theory of Confederation is that the provinces enter it on equal terms financially. Hence, whatever debt allowance is made to one province all the other provinces claim a proportionate allowance. By conceding to Newfoundland $6,000,000 more than its proportionate share, or an excess of 60 per cent., the Dominion would invite claims from the different provinces for compensation. The Dominion has assumed, or allowed, provincial debts to the aggregate of $109,430,148. If we were to increase this by 60 per cent., as Newfoundland practically proposed, we would incur an obligation of more than $65,000,000, exclusive of the debt of Newfoundland. This prospect caused Canada to pause and count the cost. It certainly justified caution.

NEW STOCKYARDS

EXTENSIVE ARRANGEMENTS COMPLETE

Stockyards on Similar Lines to the Stockyards of Chicago, Will be Established at Winnipeg—Packing House to Enter the Field.

Initial preparations are practically complete for the establishment of union stock yards in Winnipeg. This matter has been under discussion for some time past, and the arrangements have just been brought to a stage where the active work begins. A meeting of the directors was held on May 2, when F. L. Bascombe, Chicago; Burt Kenaston, Minneapolis; Thomas Greenway, Crystal City, and T. L. Metcalf, Winnipeg, were present. No statement has been issued, but it is understood that the location of the yards will be announced within the next three weeks.

It is the intention of the directors to run the yards after the style of the Union stock yards at Chicago, the company dealing direct with the rancher and the exporter. It has also been announced that Swift, of Chicago, and Cudahy, of Omaha, have been considering the advisability of opening a packing house in Winnipeg as soon as the demand will guarantee such action on their part. Other packing houses are also considering the same step, and are being backed by the local dealers.

One of the plans which is under consideration by the new company is that of bringing sheep into Manitoba and feeding them in bond. At the present time St. Paul is considered one of the best sheep markets in America, and it is proposed to send sheep in from that point to take advantage of the tremendous quantities of low grade wheat, and of the mill screenings which are at present but little utilized, and which are a considerable source of loss to the farmer and elevator man. The sheep will be shipped in and fed here on low price grain and then returned to St. Paul to be sold. It is hoped that the railway companies may be induced to grant special inducements to this industry in the way of rates.

Another of the proposals is the establishment of a horse exchange, similar in operation to those of the large cities of the east and south. At this exchange the buyer who is not an expert will have an opportunity of getting an animal without running the risks entailed in dealing with the chance horse trader.

SLAUGHTER HOUSE.

If sufficient slaughtering facilities cannot be found in Winnipeg it is the intention of the company to petition the U. S. government for the same privileges accorded the grain men, and that is to slaughter the Canadian cattle in bond in the United States, after which they will be shipped to the British market. They do not anticipate any difficulty in securing this privilege.

Stops British Mail Boat.

A despatch from Port Said says: The Peninsula & Oriental steamship Osiris, nine hours out from Brindisi, has been stopped, boarded and her mails examined by the Russian gunboat Khrabry, which fired a blank shot across the Osiris' bows. The Russians detained the Osiris for two hours, searching the mails. They demanded the Japanese mails, but these were at the bottom of the mass of mail, and remained untouched.

The Japs captured a small Russian detachment and two guns at the Yalu. The Japanese fleet has reappeared at Port Arthur. Fifty-four survivors of the Kinshiu Maru were picked up by a Japanese transport.

Viceroy Alexieff telegraphs that the Japanese fleet was seen six miles off Port Arthur Thursday night. Friday morning Japanese cruisers and six torpedo boats were seen in an adjacent bay.

Viceroy Alexieff also telegraphed on April 29 that Japanese ships were sighted off Port Arthur on the night of the 28th, and next morning ten Japanese cruisers and six torpedo boats were seen in Usuri Bay, adjacent to Vladivostock.

54 RESCUED FROM KINSHU MARU.

A correspondent in Kobe telegraphs that the captain of the Japanese schooner Chihaya, which arrived at Gensan April 29, announces that he rescued a boatload of survivors from the Kinshiu Maru, comprising forty-five soldiers and nine of the transport crew. Among the prisoners the Russians carried off on the cruiser were Lieut. Count Mizubuchi, Paymaster Sida and Captain Yagi.

CAPTURE OF RUSSIAN DETACHMENT.

Following the official announcement that seventy-three soldiers on the transport Kinshiu were drowned by sinking of their ship, came definite news to the ward board at Tokio, which was issued in the form of bulletins three times before nightfall, and served to cheer the people, who have been downcast at the confirmed news of the first known disaster to the emperor's army.

Lieut.-Gen. Baron Tachima, telegraphing from Sukuchin, on the Yalu river, not only confirms the occupation of Manchurian towns by the Japanese army, but announced the capture of a small deatchment of Russian infantry and two guns in the advance to the Manchurian village of Tawasho. Detachments of the Second and Fifteenth Tokio Regiments and the Forty-First Infantry from Hiroshima, and three squadrons of the Twelfth Regiment of Cavalry of Kokura, with three battalions of the Fifth Field Artillery Regiment from Oska, participatch in the advance, which was made across the Yalu from below Sukuchin, the Japanese occupying their left on the road to Killencheng.

FIGHT FIRE SCHEDULE

Manufacturers and Merchants May Form Insurance Company.

The Toronto branch of the Canadiaa Manufacturers' assocation is more determined than ever to resist the latest schedule of the fire underwriters. The formation of a new manufacturerrs and mercantile fire insurance company is being seriously considered. A representative of the Manufacturers' assocation, it is stated will be sent to confer with the manufacturers in the United States with that view.

Previous to the adoption of heroic methods the underwriters are again asked for a meeting. J. F. W. Stewart, secretary of the Toronto branch of the Manufacturers' assocation, writes to the underwriters: "I have been requested to inform you that the executive committee of the branch has been asked to act in this matter on behalf of its 327 members, who carry insurance to upwards of fifteen million dollars."

Shereholders in several Canadian fire insurance companies will shortly receive a call on their portion of unpaid stock. This is one direct result of the disastrous fires in Baltimore and Toronto. Canadian companies will all meet their losses, it is believed, without a single default.

A WHISKEY CARNIVAL

Beer Handed out in Pails and Whiskey in Bottles.

Three glasses of beer or whiskey for five cents, the closing of six hotels at Toronto Junction under local option, and the fact that the Toronto hotels were closed on account of the election, were enough to draw a crowd of about ten thousand men and boys to the Junction hotels on Saturday afternoon. Drunkenness resulted, and the crowds at the different bars simply indulged in lawless riot while the barkeepers passed beer out in pails and whisky in bottles, outside to those who could not get up to the bar. Seven arrests were made and the excitement cooled down about midnight.

ANOTHER VICTORY

THE FLIGHT FROM YALU WAS A ROUT.

Russian Army Fled Panic-Stricken From the Pursuing Japanese Cavalry, Thirty-six Cannon Captured, 2,000 Russian Prisoners, 600 Men Wounded.

A despatch from St. Petersburg says the rumor is current there that another great battle has occurred near the Yalu river. There were 30,000 Russians and 80,000 Japanese engaged. The Japanese were victorious, capturing 36 cannon (Russian) and 2,000 prisoners. Twenty officers and 600 men are reported wounded.

KUROPATKIN COMING TO HELP.

According to despatches sent from Rome, General Kuropatkin is on the march fro Liao Yang to Fen Wang Cheng with 20,000 troops to reinforce the Russians and check the retreat of the Japanese army.

NEXT BATTLE GROUND.

A great battle is imminent at Feng Wang Cheng, which is strongly fortified and has many natural advantages of defence. Gen. Kuropatkin is confident that if attacked the place can hold out till his arrival. A desperate attempt will be made by the Russians to check Kuroki's advance there.

TROOPS DEMORALIZED.

The retreating army is said to be in the neighborhood of Feng Wang Cheng. Every report from the seat of war agrees that the troops are demoralized, and some despatches declare that they are panic-stricken, and that their flight cannot be checked.

In a report received at St. Petersburg by the emperor from Gen. Kuropatkin, it is stated that from 3,000 to 4,000 men at least were killed in the Yalu river fight.

A Seoul (Corea) correspondent telegraphs: The Russian troops fled panic stricken when routed at Chien Tien Cheng, pursued by Japanese cavalry and infantry, over the hill country towards Feng Wang Cheng, from 1.50 p. m. until 8 o'clock at night.

The Russian army engaged was composed of the third division, the Twenty-second and Twenty-fourth Regiment of the sixth division and General Mistchenko's cavalry brigade supported by forty field and eight machine guns. The wounded, including General-in-Chief Eassalitch and General Kashtlinsky, reached Antung, whence the Russians were eventually forced to retire after twenty-five minutes fierce fighting.

TOGO SUSTAINS A REVERSE.

A despatch from St. Petersburg says: It is reported that Vice-Admiral Togo made another desperate attempt to block the entrance of Port Arthur on May 2, at night, but did not meet with success. Viceroy Alexieff sent out a section of the fleet to meet the attack and sank eight fire ships and two Japanese torpedo boats. The channel is reported to be clear.

A later despatch from the Russian capitol says that the report that Admiral Togo had made another attempt to block Port Arthur was confirmed. Viceroy Alexieff reported officially that the Japanese sent eight fire ships to block the entrance of the harbor, but they were all sunk by the Russian torpedo boats, and the fire from the land batteries, leaving the channel clear. The viceroy also reported that the Russians sank two Japanese torpedo boats.

MANY MADE PRISONERS.

The Japanese legation has given out Gen. Kuroki's report, dated May 1, as follows:

"The enemy offered stubborn resistance to our pursuit, adding 300 to our casualties. The enemy fought bravely to the last. Finally two companies of their artillery, after losing the majority of the men and horses, surrendered, raising the white flag. The officers made prisoners assert that Gen. Kastalinsky, the commaoder of the Eleventh and Twelfth Infantry Regiments, and the commander of the artillery were killed, and many other superior officers were killed or wounded. Many refugees subsequently returned and surrendered. The prisoners include thirty officers and 300 non-commissioned officers and men."

BIG YALU BATTLE

Port Arthur Preparing for Siege—Russian Stoicism.

Bad news from the Yalu was received with the wonderful stoicism that has characterized the Russians since their reverse began. At the headquarters of the general staff it was stated that an important engagement was in progress, but no further details were given. The residents of the suburbs of Port Arthur have been warned either to enter the town or remove from the district right away. This clearly shows that a siege is expected immediately.

ANOTHER BIG BATTLE.

Another big battle is believed to be in progress at Fing Huan Cheng.

FLANKED ON THREE SIDES.

After the capture of Kiuliencheng by the Japanese, the Russians stood until the division of their army to the northwest was forced to retire toward Fengwangcheng. The combat was conducted with great bravery from dawn until dusk. The Japanese flanked the Russians on three sides, says a despatch from Tokio. They charged from three directions and bayoneted Russians, making prisoners. The Japanese captured twenty-eight guns, much ammunition and a quantity of equipments.

WATCHING FOR JAPANESE LANDING.

A correspondent in Shangai telegraphs: All Russian troops stationed at Changchu, Funihang, Haicheng, Kaping and other places have been despatched along the sea coast to be ready for the Japanese landing that the Russians expect hourly. The Russians at Haicheng are forcing the Chinese to throw up earthworks and dig deep trenches.

EDITORIAL NOTES

ONE way in which practical advantage could be taken of the government's offer of assistance to sufferers in the fire would be to ask for a rebate of taxes on property destroyed in the conflagration. This, we understand, will be taken up by the Board of Trade and W. R. Ross, M. P. P., has promised to use his influence in that direction. There is little doubt but that the government will grant thd ebate as it is manifestly unfair to levy taxes on property that actually does not exist.

* * *

ANOTHER very probable benefit that will acrue from the Fernie fire is the lesson that it will teach other towns. The press of many towns both to the east and west of us have taken the lesson to heart to prove to their readers that their respective towns are about as little prepared to cope with the fire fiend as was Fernie. Probably Fernie was as able as any other town of its size to make the half million dollar sacrifice in the interests of its country. Many of these same papers said very complimentary things of the persistent energy of the Fernie merchants. In fact the prompt manner in which the rebuilding of the town was commenced caused little surprise to those who have followed it through former vicissitudes of fortune.

As soon as the fire got beyond control Fernie realized that it had to contend with another element equally as dangerous as the fire fiend, and ere longthe hoodlum element commenced its work of looting anything and everything Beasts in human form, who could not be coaxed or bullied into lending assistance to those in such dire distress lost no opportunity of pillaging, liquor seeming the main objective and the scene that followed will not be soon forgotten by our citizens. Chief McMullin and his efficient staff aided by many citizens' hurriedly sworn in as special constables. did yeoman service, despite the fact that all were exhausted from their arduous work of fire fighting, and as a lot of liquor had been stolen it was feared that when darkness set in the occurrences of the morning would be repeated. Vigorous measures were promptly decided on and the accession to the local force of a number of the residents of Coal Creek gave the local force a much needed respite and enabled plans to be arranged which fortunately had the desired effect of restoring order and effectually quelling any disturbance. Early in the afternoon the fire district was cleared of all unauthorized persons and a cordon of sentries was thrown around the burned area, under the command of Major J. G. Langton of the Army Service Corps, who is at present residing in Fernie, and Mr. J. McEvoy, both officials of the Crows Nest Pass Coal Company. This disposition proved effective and in addition to relieving the local force enabled Chief McMullin to continually patrol with his force outside the fire district. The fire guard were maintained both on Friday and Saturday nights, sentries being relieved every two hours and the prompt measures combined with the show of force that even a disciplined force was able to make had a great moral effect. The services of the fire guard were called into requisition on Saturday evening when incipient fires broke out in several places and necessitated laying out the hose at three different places and pouring water on the flames for about two hours. It must be very gratifying to the citizens of Fernie to realize how efficiently such duties were rendered in such an emergency and that the lawless element so much in evidence at all conflagrations was so speedily and effectively suppressed, and too much credit cannot be given to those residents of Coal Creek who proffered their assistance towards saving the property of those who were so sorely afflicted.

The town needs more contractors an more carpenters. There is plenty of building operations in sight to keep a large force of men at work until the snow flies. No tender has yet been received for the building of the Michel school horse and the time limit is out on the 20th inst.

BATTLE RAGING

PORT ARTHUR COMPLETELY ISOLATED

Heavy Cannonading Heard off Gensan —Admiral Urin's Fleet Believed to be Engaged With the Vladivostock Cruisers. A Russian Rumor.

A despatch from London on May 5 to the Central News, dated at Seoul, Tuesday, says: "Heavy cannonading was heard off Gensan (on the coast of Corea) Monday and Tuesday. It is supposed that Rear Admiral Uriu's fleet has succeeded in engaging the Russian Vladivostock squadron (of four cruisers) to battle off Vladivostock, was circulated in Paris, but no confirmation had been teceived.

HEARD IN ST. PETERSBURG.

A St. Petersburg despatch says: Persistent rumors are here of a naval engagement between the Vladivostock and Vice-Admiral Kamimura's squadrons, but no confirmation of the reports had been received. The admiralty says no further news has been received there from Port Arthur.

NEW CHANG CAPTURED.

It is semi-officially announced at St. Petersburg that the Japanese third army corps has landed at New Chwang. The Japanese are therefore supposed to be in possession of the city. The capture of New Chwang city. The capture of New Chwang means the isolation of Port Arthur and its eventual capture or surrender following the sinking of the fire ships.

RUMORED REVERSEFOR JAPS.

A despatch from St. Petersburg says a rumor is current there that a second battle has been fought at Kiu Lien Cheng, in which the Russian loss was 7,000, the Japanese loss 10,000 men, and resulted in the Japanese being driven back in disorder. The despatch adds that no confirmation of this report is obtainable.

POWERFUL FLEET.

A despatch received in London from St. Petersburg says the Russians will abandon Feng Wang Chwang and retire to Liao Yang. As the Japanese are advancing through Manchuria toward Feng Wang Chang with formidable artillery and an army of 80,000 men, the Russians think it unwise to make a stand in face of such odds. The Japanese are under Gen. Kieroki, and are supposed to be the main body of the Japanese army in Manchuria.

It is understood the retreat toward Liao Yang was an orderly one, a strong rear guard of the Russian army keeping in contact with the advance guard of the Japanese. It may, therefore, be a retreat in which constant skirmishing will take place.

The Russian wounded are being hurried to the rear to Mukden and further north. It is supposed they will eventually be sent to Harbin. Gen. Kuropatkin is personally in charge of the affairs of the military movements at the front.

JAPANESE LANDING

Another Bombardment of the Doomed Fortress—Coal Contract Repudiated.

A Tokio despatch says: It is officially announced that a Japanese force began landing on the Liao Yung peninsula on May 5. The place where the landing is occurring and the number of men being landed is withheld.

TRANSPORTS ON BOTH SIDES.

A correspondent in Port Arthur telegraphs: The Japanese transports have arrived at points on both sides of the Liao Tung peninsula, above Port Arthur, and are preparing to land men.

WILL ABANDON FENG WANG CHENG.

A St. Petersburg despatch says it is expected the Russians will abandon Feng Wang Cheng and retire toward Liao Yang, keeping in contact with the enemy. There is no doubt that a Japanese army of 80,000 is advancing with formidable artillery.

WARSHIPS ARE WATCHING.

Five Japanese warships, with a large number of transports have been seen near Yinkow Bay, on the west coast of the peninsula. Another Japanese warship squadron is behind Liao Tishan promontory, southwest of Port Arthur, presumably watching the entrance to the harbor.

SEEN OFF WEI HEI WEI.

Forty Japanese warships and transports were off Wei Hei on the 4th steaming northwest.

BATTERING AT PORT ARTHUR

Following the sinking of the merchant steamers at the entrance to Port Arthur on the 2nd the Japanese bombarded the forts and town on the 3rd.

WON'T SUPPLY COAL.

Paris firms which have contracted to deliver many thousand tons of coal at Biserta, Tunis, at Jubitel, on the Gulf of Aden, and at Salgon, in Cochin, China, have informed their principals that they will not fill their contracts. The coal was to be used by the Baltic fleet on its projected voyage to the Far East.

JAPAN'S SECOND ARMY.

The Japanese army which the despatches say has affected a landing at Pitecow, is undoubtedly the second army under the command of Baron Oku. It is composed of the Tokio, Osaka and Kunamoto divisions, and numbers 63,000 men, with 126 mountain and field guns. The Kunamoto division operated against Port Arthur in 1894 and knows the ground thoroughly.

The refusal of the Japanese soldiers on the attacked transport to surrender was useless courage, but it is a hint of the spirit that Russia has to meet.

MANITOBA CONVENTION

Sunday School Association to Meet in Winnipeg June 28, 29 and 30.

The twenty-fifth Annual Convention of this assocation will be held in Grace Church, Winnipeg, on Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday, June 28, 29 and 30, opening at 2 o'clock on the first day.

Every Sunday School in the province and South-eastern Assiniboia should send deligates; every school is entitled to two delegates for one hundred scholars or fraction of one hundred and one delegate for each additional hundred and fraction of a hundred. The names of the deligates should be forwarded to the secretary or handed to him at the convention.

There should be a full attendance of the board at this convention. The rapid growth of the work, the changing conditions, and the absolute necessity for correct information from all parts of the field render it necessary in order to achieve the largest success in the work, that every member be present. Three meetings of the board will be held between sessions of the convention.

The usual liberal arrangements granted by the railway companies of a single fare for the round trip, hape been secured provided one hundred delegates who have paid railway fare attend the convention. In order to secure this, however, each delegate must obtain from the ticket agent from whom they purchase the ticket, a certificate showing that full fare has been paid to Winnipeg.

At a convention held several years ago it was agreed that free entertainment to delegates to the annual provincial gatherings would be discontinued. The Winnipeg Sunday school workers, however, have appointed a large and influential committee on reception, whose business will be to see that ample and suitable accommodation is secured for all delegates, and if possible, at reduced rates. No one need stay away for fear of not finding a comfortable place to stay.

Great care has been bestowed upon the preparations of the programme, which is now complete and will soon be printed. It contains some new and interesting features. All subjects have been carefully selected and given to those thoroughly capable of making them interesting and helpful to all. No school can affotd to miss this opportunity of raising the standard of its work. See that your school is well represented and insist on your delegates, on their return, making an offical report of the convention to the school.

M. C D. Meigs, of Indianapolis, Indiana, will be one of our specialists. The board being anxious to secure his services, and to secure dates that would suit the Manitoba Sunday school workers, arrangements were made with him in August, 1903. Mr. Meigs is one of the most versatile speakers on the Sunday school platform possessing the combind qualifications of a wide knowledge of his work deep spiritually, wit and humor.

Mrs. J. Woodbridge Barnes, of Newark, N. J., a member of the International Sunday School force, is also engaged. She is a lady of prepossessing appearance, a fluent speaker and has a wide and intimate knowledge of the theory and practice of primary and junior work.

This is the first occasion on which the Manitoba Sunday School Association has undertaken to engage two specialists for one Convention, a heavy task for a young organization. Mrs. Barnes and Mrs. Meigs are expected to be at the entire Convention.

It will be well worth the time and money necessary for every pastor and Sunday School worker to be present.

The Provincial Conventions are growing in interest and attendance from year to year. In 1902 about 250 delegates were present. In 1903 425 were present, while 1,000 delegates are expected to attend the 1904 Convention.

A Fearful Death.

Making a mistep while walking on the edge of a vast caldron of boiling metal, Hainey Anderson, an employee of the Illinois Steel company at South Cnicago, Ill., clung for life the other day, while his feet were being burned off. Then, his strength gone, he slipped with a shriek into the seething mass below. In a few moments his body was consumed. One of his fellow workmen fainted with horror at the spectacle.

THE CANADIAN SEA.

"Probs," Mr. R. F. Stupart, Speaks to Toronto Club, on "Navigation of Hudson's Bay and Strait."

Mr. R. F. Stupart, of the weather office, delivered the other day before the Empire Club, Toronto, an address on "The Navigation of Hudson's Bay and Strait," which was to the following effect:

To the north of Ontario and Quebec there is, as you all know, a great inland sea, a vast expanse of salt water, 850 miles from north to south and 600 in breadth, and bounded wholly by lands which are part and parcel of our great Dominion, and connected with the broad Atlantic by a strait some 450 miles in length. We have as yet but a most imperfect knowledge of what wealth these waters contain. We know that they do contain the right whale, porpoise or white whale, walrus, narwhal, seal, salmon, trout, cod, and a variety of small fish, but the only fishing industries so far developed are the whale fishery by the Americans and the walrus, porpoise and salmon fisheries by the Hudson's Bay Company. The chief whaling ground is in the northwestern part of the bay, and here whalers from Massachusetts and Connecticut have been carrying on a profitable fishery for nearly half a century. I fancy I am not astray in surmising that these people have year by year been taking out oil and bone to the value of at least $100,000. Some years ago the Hudson's Bay Company made large profit out of the oil of the seal and white whale, and refined the oil at their northern ports; now, as the oil has a less commercial value, they have ceased this industry. The walrus is hunted not only by the native Eskimo, who roams the shore line of the bays and straits and kills this huge animal from kyak and ice floe, but also by the company's men, who seek it in small vessels out from Churchill.

The rivers which flow into Ungava Bay and doubtless others further west, abound in salmon—salmon equal in flavor to those of New Brunswick. The Hudson's Bay Company at one time found it worth while to send a ship to Ungava and George's River for salmon alone to be shipped in cold storage. I believe this ship has been discontinued, but I think it probable for reasons other than the failure of the fishery. We Canadians have very slowly awakened to the realization of the fact that in Manitoba and our Northwest Territories we have the best of wheat growing lands on the surface of the globe, sixty million acres, where wheat is as certain a crop as in any part of the world and more than twice sixty million acres where the wheat fields will in most years yield ample returns and where in every year other crops are so certain of success that the farmer will be able to regard with tolerable equanimity the possibility of partial failure of wheat. What wonder that the Manitoban and Northwest farmer have considered whether Hudson's Bay and Straits are not the natural and best outlet from the Northwest granary to the markets of Europe. Churchill is only 859 miles from Edmonton, 620 miles from Prince Albert and 640 miles from Winnipeg and the sea route from Churchill to Liverpool is but 3,368 miles.

The original charter of the Hudson's Bay Company was granted in 1668, in which Prince Rupert sent an expedition into the bay, and Fort Charles, the first English settlement, was established near the mouth of Rupert's River. For nearly 200 years the company's ships have been passing backwards and forwards through the Straits, and seem not to have been liable to any large percentage of disaster. It must, however, be borne in mind that the ships have until recent years been sailing vessels, and making but one trip per annum, have passed through the Straits when there has been very little ice. They leave Scotland so as to reach the entrance of the Straits about August 1st, and within less than two months they are again out of the Straits homeward bound.

Mr. Stupart then proceeded to give some particulars relating to the length of time navigation in the bay is impeded or actually suspended through the ice, then continued:

"I give the following as the season during which navigation may in ordinary years be regarded as practicable for the purpose of commerce; not indeed to the cheaply built freight steamer, commonly known as the 'ocean tramp,' but to vessels of about 2,000 tons gross, fortified for meeting ice, and of such construction as to enable them to be fair freight carriers. These vessels must be strengthened forward; should have wooden sheeting and be very full under the counter; the propeller should be of small diameter and be well down in the water. I place the limit of size at about 2,000 tons because a larger ship would be somewhat unwieldly, could not make such good way through the loose ice, and being unable to turn so sharply she would get many a heavy blow that the smaller ship would escape."

Wakeham's Experiences.

The speaker then went on to give some interesting details concerning the vicissitudes experienced by Captain Wakeham, the commander of a whaling vessel and concluded his remarks thus:

In judging of the suitability of Hudson's Straits as a commercial trade route we have not to consider during what period of each year a Dundee whaler or a specially constructed ice crusher can navigate the Straits, but rather during what period an ordinary well found iron ship with a master of usual experience can navigate them with an ordinary degree of safety. The result of investigation is not uncertain—such a ship may with safety enter the Straits early in July and should she have good luck she may get through to the bay with but a few delays in the ice, but delays of a week or ten days will not be infrequent. At the close of the season ships should not leave Churchill later than the middle of October, because at that date winter has set in.

SEALED AT LAST

Two Stone Laden Vessels Rest in the Harbor Entrance.

The Tokio correspondents of two of London's leading dailies positively assert that Port Arthur is effectually "corked."

TO LAND AT PORT ARTHUR.

On May 3 several vessels of the Japanese fleet, reported southwest the day before, were seen off Hungyocheng. Signal stations at Likuanchun and Yaokialien also reported the presence of a Japanese fleet of transports with small cruisers and torpedo vessels. As these towns are more than forty miles apart the conclusion is reached that a second army of Japan is cruising in the gulf until such time as its commander, General Oku, is ready to carry out the instructions of the Japanese war board. Messages from Tower Hill conveyed news that five Japanese war vessels were six miles off the headlands, and this was accepted as a clear indication that a landing was soon to be made west of Port Arthur. The fact that the war fleet is in the gulf, 1,000 miles north of Port Arthur, does not at all make it certain that an attack will be made on the railroad between this point and the fortress.

All the bays are well fortified west of the railroad, and on May 2, by order of General Linivitch, six companies of artillery were sent to New Chang from Haicheng, by General Kolubatin, to guard the hills southwest of Saddle Bay. It is believed the Japanese will land at the head of the gulf and west of the Liao river.

A despatch from London says: From four news sources the report is confirmed that Admiral Togo has effectually blockaded Port Arthur. Nine steamers were sunk in the harbor's mouth at daybreak.

JAPAN WILL OPEN THE WAY.

The Birmingham Post hears in an official quarter that the Japanese have notified America and England that it is her intention to open Corea and such parts of Manchuria as come into her control to the commerce of the nations. These points will be subject merely to such restrictions as are unavoidable in the time of war.

Drowned at Headingly.

William Boynton, a Canadian, employed by Mr. W. J. Ball, a farmer of Eli, Man., five miles east of Headingly, arranged to go to Winnipeg on Wednesday for the purpose of seeing his brother, who he believed to be there. He walked over to H. Frantz's, a neighbor nearby. Frantz suggested taking two horses and riding to Headingly, and said that he, Frantz, would return with the two horses. When three miles east of White Plains, and about 150 yards south of the C. N. R. tracks, they started to cross a coulee, which had a swift current on account of the high water. Frantz found his horse losing its footing, and he clung to its neck and came across safely, while Boynton's horse lost its footing. Frantz saw him lose the reins, and sink in the chilly waters, and being unable to swim, was drowned. Frantz and several neighbors are making every effort to recover the body.

Little Girl's Horrid Death

A terrible accident, which resulted in the death of Cassie Fountain, the thirteen-year-old daughter of Fred Fountain, occurred at Mille Roches, near Cornwall, Ont., on Wednesday. Fountain had set fire to some dry grass, and his daughter was playing around when her clothing took fire, and in an instant it was burned off her body. She was fearfully burned, and died of her injuries in Cornwall hospital.

JAPAN WINS OUT

AFTER A WEEKS FIGHTING ON THE YALU.

Fierce Pitched Battles—The Russians Made Two Stands, but Were Forced to Retire With Loss of 800 Men Russians Admit Defeat.

After five days of fighting, largely with artillery, the Japanese army, under General Kuroki, forced a crossing of the Yalu river on May 1, with a gallant infantry charge covering a frontage of four miles, and drove the Russians from Chiu Tien Cheng and the heights on the right bank of the Iho or Aida river, which enters the Yalu from the north almost opposite Wiju. The Japanese turned the left flank of the Russian position and in the battle they swept away the new front interposed by the Russians to check their onward movement.

General Kuroki began the move a few days ago by ordering a detachment of the Imperial Guards' division to seize the island of Kurito, which is in the Yalu, above Wiju, and a detachment of the second division to seize the island of Kintelto, below Wiju. Here they established their headquarters. One battery of Japanese artillery, which had taken a position on a hill to the east of Wiju, fired three volleys at Kosan, and at noon of Thursday the Russian batteries behind Chiu Tien Cheng shelled Wiju, wounding one Japanese soldier with shrapnel. The following day the Russians resumed the bombardment of Wiju, firing at intervals throughout the day. The Japanese artillery did not respond to this fire. Subsequently General Kuroki ordered two companies of the Imperial Guards to cross the Yalu and make a reconnaissance along the left bank of the Iho for the purpose of discovering the character of the Russian fortifications along the heights on the right bank of the river. The Japanese force advanced toward Kosan, and then despatched a small detachment to the village, where a party of Russians were killed. The Russians shelled the reconnoitering party from an emplacement near Yoshoko. This fire was without effect. The Russian artillery on the hill behind Chiu Tien Cheng firing at a high angle, opened on Wiju, the island of Kurito and Seikodo to the south of Wiju, where some Japanese batteries had taken possession.

This firing continued into Thursday night, and General Kuroki reports that while it was ineffective, it disturbed his preparations for an attack. The Russians resumed the shelling on Wiju the next day, but the Japanese guns did not reply.

The twelfth division of the Japanese army was chosen to make the first crossing of the Yalu. It began its preparations by driving the Russians from their position on the bank of the river opposite Sulkochin, which is eight miles above Wiju and the points selected for the crossing. This division constructed a pontoon bridge over the river during the day and by six o'clock Saturday it was in the position assigned to it for the battle of Sunday. The movement of the twelfth Japanese division was covered by the second regiment of field artillery, and another artillery regiment of heavy guns.

At 10.40 o'clock Saturday morning the Russian artillery posted to the north and to the east of Chiu Tien Cheng began shelling the patrol of Japanese infantry which had been despatched from Kinteite Island to Chukoda, another island north of Kinteite and under Chiu Tien Cheng. The Japanese batteries replied to the shelling and silenced the Japanese fire. Later eight Russian guns posted on a hill to the east of the village of Makao opened upon the Imperial Guards. In this shelling the Japanese artillery to the east of Wiju responded and the Russians ceased firing. Then both the Chiu Tien Cheng and the Mako batteries reopened fire, and this brought a vigorous response from the chain of Japanese batteries on the Corean side of the river.

The Japanese losses in the bombardment of Saturday were two killed and five officers and twenty-two men wounded. A flotilla of gunboats from the squadron of Admiral Hosoya participated in the fighting of Saturday. He encountered a mixed force of Russian infantry, cavalry and artillery on the Manchurian river below Antung, and after a sharp fight scattered them to the hills.

A bridge across the main stream of the Yalu just above Wiju was completed at six o'clock Saturday night, and the second Japanese division immediately began crossing. They advanced and occupied the hills back of Kosan, facing the Russian position on the right bank of the river. All through the night regiment after regiment of Japanese soldiers poured across the bridge, and at a late hour Saturday night, Gen. Kuroki telegraphed to the general staff of the army: "I will attack the enemy on May 1 at dawn."

True to this promise, he at daylight on May 1, centered all his artillery on the Russian position between Chiu Tien Cheng and Yoshoki. To this fire the Russians made reply with all their batteries.

At seven o'clock in the morning the Russian battery at Yosoko-hmi was silenced, and half an hour later General Kuroki ordered his line, stretching for four miles, to attack. The Japanese infantry, on the word of command, charged across the Iho, wading that stream, and began to storm the heights at 8.15. At 9 they had swept the Russian line back over the plateau. The reports of this fighting, which have been received at Tokio, do not indicate whether the Russians retired down the river or in the direction of Feng Huan Cheng, on the road to Liao Yang.

MARKET REPORT.

Weekly Review of Prices Culled From The Commercial.

GRAIN AND PRODUCE.

FLOUR—We quote: No. 1 grade, $2.75 per sack of 98 lbs., delivered to the trade; No. 2, $2.60; No. 3, $1.90 to $2.20, and No. 4, $1.35 to $2.00. These prices are subject to the usual trade discounts.

MILLFEED—Bran is in good demand, but very scarce. Although the mills have started again they are still short of supplies. Shorts, however, are more plentiful. We quote: Bran, nominally $18 per ton, in bulk, delivered to the trade; shorts, $19 per ton.

GROUND FEED—There is a big demand among farmers, who are laying in stocks for spring feed. We quote: Oat chop, $28 per ton, delivered to the trade; barley, chop, $22; mixed barley and oats, $25; oil cake, $27 per ton.

OATS—The market is firm, buyers being many, but offerings small. There is at present no surplus stock, but the demand is strong for oats of good quality. Prices are firmer. No. 2 white in carlots on track are worth 39c to 40c in Winnipeg, and feed grades 37 to 37½c. Farmers' loads, in the country, bring 31 to 33c, and on the street, 37 to 38c.

BARLEY—Malting grades are not offering. Business in feed barley is practically nominal at 42c to 43c.

FLAXSEED—In the face of plentiful supplies the demand is weak. Seed is quoted at 85c on the track, Winnipeg, as compared with about $1.10 this time last year.

HAY—The market is very firm and prices advanced from $4 to $5 a ton. Carlots of baled on track here are bringing $18 to $19 per ton. Loose hay on the street is worth $18 to $20 per ton.

EGGS — Quotations are slightly easier, and a further decline is anticipatea next week. Fresh stock is quoted at 13c to 14c to-day, delivered to the trade.

BUTTER—Dairy—There is very little dairy butter coming in. A few shippers who have special lines to offer get 25 to 28c per lb. for fresh made rolls of bricks. There is practically nothing doing in package butter and round lots.

HIDES—Stocks of frozen hides are well cleaned up. Some business is doing in lambs, and shearlings and wool skins during the clipping season. Abattoir hides, seasonable, are steady at 6 ¼c for Eo. 1's; 5¼c for No. 2's. Farmer hides are steady at 5 to 5½c per pound flat. Country cured butchers' at 6¼c for No. 3 grade. Lambs and shearlings 10c each. Wool skins from 40 to 75c each.

LIVE STOCK.

CATTLE—Receipts of beef cattle have been fair. Prices are steady at 4¾c off cars in Winnipeg for choice, and from that figure the market ranges down to 3½c for inferior grades. There is practically no market for stockers and feeders.

SHEEP—Offerings are light owing to the floods, but some were bought costing 5c.

HOGS—The market is quiet and prices steady. Hogs weighing from 160 to 250 pounds are worth to-day 5c per pound, weighed off cars here; light and heavy weights ½c to 1c less.

MILCH COWS—Good cows are scarce and dear. Prices range from $35 to $55 each, according to quality.

HORSES—Trade in all classes is slow, owing to the backward season. Heavy draught range from $300 to $500 per team. There is considerable inquiry for light weights at about the same range of prices.

DECREASE FOR C. P. R.

A Decrease of $1,755,164 in Profits During Last Nine Months.

The gross earnings of the C. P. R. for March were $3,532,187. The working expences were $2,681,333, leaving a net profit of $850,854.

In March, 1903, the net profits were $1,258,564, and for the nine months ending March 31st the figures are as follows: Gross earnings, $33,877,136; working expenses, $23,918,040; net profits $9,959,096.

For the nine months ended March 31, 1903, there was a net profit of $11,714,260. The decrease in net profits over the same period last year is therefore for March, $407,410, and from July 1st to March 31st, $1,755 164.

The following incident in the North London police court indicates that Canadian protests are having some influence. An old convict charged with robbery said he would like to go abroad. The magistrate suggested Germany.

The Aristocracy of Birth.

Why did the aristocracy of parentage fail to hold its own? Why did it die out in America and, practically speaking, in all the British colonies? It had every advantage at the outset; it held the inside track. It failed because two great laws of the universe were against it—first, the laws of arithmetic, and, secondly, the laws of physiology. It violated the principles of arithmetic because it required that each individual or household should have a distinct line of ancestors, and it would thus be discovered in a few generations that there were not nearly enough ancestors to go round, leaving people in the position of Mark Twain, who declared that he had "no parents to speak of, only a father or mother or so." It was contrary to the laws of physiology, as shown by the deterioration of one royal family after another in Europe, these having come to resemble those English race horses which have so much blood that there is very little horse, and it must be replenished from a more plebeian stock. —Thomas Wentworth Higginson in Atlantic.

What the Japs Call Japan.

A certain Japanese who has been for some years a resident of Philadelphia and who has many friends here was speaking the other night of his own people.

"Of course," he said, "we do not call our country Japan. Our name for it is 'Nippon,' or 'Sun's Origin,' indicating its position in the extreme east. But when we speak of the entire empire we call it 'Dai Nippon,' which means 'Great Nippon.'"

The Jap's eyes twinkled.

"It is not," he meditatively concluded, "uninteresting to reflect that off the eastern and western boundaries of the greatest mass of land in the world there should exist an insignificant group of islands inhabited in each case by a people of very mixed origin and very mixed characters, each of whom expresses its defiance of its geographical insignificance by the same means—'Dai Nippon' and 'Great Britain.'"

A Scotch Answer.

A good story of an old crofter who appeared before the commission to apply for a reduction of rent was recently told at a meeting in Glasgow. The number of cattle on the farm led Sheriff Brand to observe that surely the croft could not be in such a bad way as its owner would seek to show. "Och," replied the old fellow, "you should see the bit beasties." "What like are they?" queried the sheriff. "They're as lean, sir, as Pharaoh's kine." "How lean was that?" asked the sheriff, doubtless thinking that he had cornered the applicant. But had he? Not a bit. Like a flash came back the answer, "So lean, sir, that they could only be eaten in a vision."

THE SHAMROCK.

Ireland's Wood Sorrel Said to Be St. Patrick's Emblem.

There are many people who do not know what the real shamrock is. The plant which is often called shamrock and generally passes for it in Ireland is the Trifolium repens, or white clover. This plant could not have been the one which St. Patrick held up to illustrate the doctrine of the Trinity, as it has been known only 200 years in Ireland and is a cultivated plant and not native to the soil.

Edmund Spenser says of the Irish of 1580 that "whenever they found a plot of shamrocks, or watercress, they had a feast. There were some who gobbled the green food as it came, some looked for the faultless stalk and the bloom on the leaf." This shamrock of Spenser's time was without doubt the Oxalis acetosella, which is commonly known as wood sorrel. It makes an excellent salad herb, though it has never become a market herb in France or this country. The sorrel of Paris and New York markets is a species of dock. The wood sorrel is indigenous to the soil of Ireland and is believed by botanists to be the original "herb trinity" with which St. Patrick used to illustrate his doctrines.

MONEY IN CORNERSTONES.

The Survival of an Older and More Tragic Custom.

The practice of putting money under the foundation stone of a new building is the shadow of an older tragic custom. The money stands theoretically for the ransom of the human being who by ancient superstition should have been buried in its place. Otherwise, it was held, the building would not stand firm and endure.

There was a time when this particular kind of human sacrifice had a vogue extending to most parts of the world. Even in England skeletons have been found imbedded in the bases of castle walls, and there is record of one German fortress at the building of which a child was bought from its mother with hard cash and walled in to the donjon tower, the unnatural mother, according to the story, looking on the while. Effigies of human beings are still used in some parts of Europe as harmless substitutes, and in remoter and more ruthless places the old custom crops out from time to time in all its grim reality. Within the last half century two children, a boy and a girl, were, it was reported, walled into a blockhouse by some laborers at Duga, Asiatic Turkey.

THE ESKIMO DOG.

He Never Knows the Luxury of a Shelter or a Bed.

The Eskimo dog from his birth to his death, which in many instances is a violent one, never knows the luxury of shelter or a bed. He spends his existence outdoors and appears to be far more comfortable in winter than in summer. The pups when hardly able to toddle instinctively show an ambition to run with sleighs (they never bark) and join with their treble squeals the enthusiastic chorus of howls with which the Eskimo dog invariably greets the first fall of snow. The ambition of the young dogs is soon taken advantage of by the Eskimos.

The little fellows are hitched to sleds in company with full grown dogs, and to prevent them from being run over they are tied by the neck to the towline, so that when the run starts out they are compelled to keep up or be dragged by the team. This simple though brutal method of training is very effective, and after one or two runs the young dog uderstands what is wanted of him. Even before he is full grown he is thoroughly conversant with his duties.

Browning's Modesty.

The only son of Robert Browning and his illustrious wife was a diligent art student when he grew to manhood. He was believed to have a promising career, but once when the father was showing a friend some of his son's pictures he expressed a fear that he might suffer from the high hopes built upon him.

"He is placed at a disadvantage," said Browning. Then he explained further, in a phrase as modest as any ever uttered by a great man:

"People expect much from him, you see, because he had such a clever mother."

Some Old Style Hats.

The gold laced cocked hat was largely used in 1778 not only on account of its military look, but because it probably protected the wearer from seizure by the press gangs, which were at that time more than usually active. The flat, folding, crescent shaped beaver known as the cocked hat was still to be seen as late as 1818.

MUCH SICKNESS, COUGHS AND COLDS.

La Grippe, Bronchitis and Pneumonia--Enormous Demand for

Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine.

There is scarcely a home where there is not some one suffering from throat or lung troubles.

In offices, stozes and factories the staff are greatly reduced. The sudden changes in temperature are more than people can stand. Everywhere you hear people coughing.

Previous experience has taught most people for these ailments there is no treatment so prompt and effective as Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine. Just now the sales of this great family medicine are enormus.

MRS. J. PROVOST, RENFREW, ONT., states my:—"My fourteen-year-old boy had a very severe cold in the chest last winter and I really thought he was going to die. He coughed nearly all the time and some times would spit up blood. We had about given up all hopes of his recovery, when I heard of Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine. After using one bottle there was a great change in his condition, and I can positively say that he was completely cured by two bottles, and he has not been troubled since. I never saw medicine take such quick effect and can sincerely recommend it."

BABY'S HOLD ON LIFE.

The little ones are frgil—their hold on life is slight. The slightest symptom of trouble should be met by a reliable corrective medicine. Baby's Own Tablets have proved by their record of success to be an ideal medicine for the ills of infants and young children. The Tablets cure all stomach and bowel troubles, allay the irritation of teething, break up colds, prevent croup and destroy worms. The mother has a guarantee that this medicine contains no opiate or harmful drug. Mrs. T. E. Greaves, Maritana, Que., says:—"I have used Baby's Own Tablets with great success. They never fail, in my experience, to cure the little ills of children" You get these Tablets from any medicine dealer, or they will be sent by mail at 25 cents a box by writing the Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers, that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials. Address

The revenue of the Suez Canal for 1903 amounted to 102,957,752 francs, a reduction on the total of 1902. The total tonnage which passed through the canal during 1903 was 11,906,288, of which 7,403,653 tons were British. These figures show an increase on those of 1902, and a very large part of the increase is due to British shipping.

LETTER FROM THE PREMIER.

Victoria, May 3, 1904.

W. R. Ross, Esq., M.P.P.,
Fernie, B. C.

My Dear Mr. Ross:

Permit me on behalf of the Executive Council to tender to the people of Fernie our heartfelt sympathy in the terrible calamity which visited their town last week. While the damage by fire is great, it is a matter of congratulation that there weje no lives lost. With such a bright future for your section of the Kootenays, those who have been so seriously injured financially should look forward with some considerable degree of encouragement to better times than have heretotore been experienced. You may accept this assurance, that so far as the ability of the Government will permit, nothing will be spared to afford you every relief in our power. Believe me to be.

Very sincerely,
RICHARD MCBRIDE.

ST. EUGENE NOW WORKING.

The St. Eugene mine is now being worked to its full capacity. There are 275 men on the payroll, which is about the number that will be steadily employed. The concentrator is running day and night with Tom Cameron and Harry Stewart as shiiftbosses.

The plant across the track, which is used for the treatment of the tailings, is working to perfection and is giving excellent satisfaction. At one end of this building, where the mill tail race passes, are four big elevators. One of these is fitted with large cups perforated with ¼ inch holes, through which the water and fine slimes pass, the coarse and barren tailings being taken to the top and discharged into a flume, going thence into the lake. The water and slimes drop into a tank from which they are lifted to the top of the building to four parallel tanks over 100 feet in length. These are for the purpose of settling the slimes. The contents of each tank are drawn off in turn and the slimes fed into the slime-saving machines placed on the floor below. The result of this tacatment of the slimes is a profitable saving of values that without it would be run into the lake with coarser tailings and so be lost.—Moyie Leader.

The Germs of Catarrh.

Not ony attack the passages of the head and throat but finally reach the lungs and cause consumption. Nothing destroys catarrh so quickly as fragrant healing Catarrhozone which relieves the cough, stops the discharge, takes all soreness from the throat. "I consider Catarrhozone has no equal as a cure for catarrh and lung trouole" writes Jas. E. Wetherell, of Brighton. "It cured me after many good doctors failed to even relieve my trouble." Catarrhozone can't fail to cure—it's guaranteed. Two months' treatment $1.00; trial size 25c.

Young Ladies, Read This.

If you are bothered with pimples, rashes or ugly blotches on your face, if your complexion is sallow, it's an evidence that you require Ferrozone to tone up your blood. One Ferrozone Tablet taken at meals makes the complexion like peach bloom, cheeks soon become rosy, eyes bright, you'll be the picture of health. Thousands of ladies keep up their youthful appearance with Ferrozone, why not you? Price 50c. at druggists.

FOR SALE.

Under and by the virtue contained in two certain mortgages, which will be produced at the time of sale, there will be offered for sale by public auction on Monday, the twenty-third day of May, A.D., 1904, at the hour of noon, at the mill site on the premises to be sold at the town of Fernie, in the province of British Columbia, the following property, viz.:

The timber limits at Fernie, B.C., formerly the property of the Cedar Valley Improvement Company, Limited, consisting of:

One thousand eight hundred and twenty seven acres, more or less, of heavy timber land, consisting of cedar, fir, spruce and tamarac, the timber all of fine growth and easily accessible for logging purposes both summer and winter.

Also one Waterous Mill plant and machinery with a capacity of forty thousand feet per day, two planners and lath mill all complete and ready to operate. The above plant and machinery have been in use only ten months and are in perfet repair.

Also stables, dwelling houses, store, smithy, logging camp all substantially built and ready for occupation and situate upon the above limits.

The above limits are held under Crown Grant and the purchaser of the same will be enabled to enter upon the property and conduct logging and milling operations without delay and with little or no expenditure as the plant is compleie and in good condition while good logging roads have been constructed throufih outthe property.

The limits are situate on Elk river opposite Coal Creek about one and one quarter miles from Fernie and are described as follows:

Lots 5237, 5238 and 5458, group 1, Kootenay District, according to official survey of the said district.

Lot 5239, group 1, Kootenay District, according to the official survey of the said district.

The aforesaid lot No. 5239 will be sold subject to a first mortgage to Alfred F. Grady, of Macleod, N.W.T., for two thousand dollars and accrued interest, now overdue, and the said Waterous mill plant, machinery, planer and lath mill will be sold subject to a hire receipt order held by the Waterous Engine Works Company, and upon which is due the sum of seven thousand dollars, copies of which first mortgage and hire receipt can be seen at the office of the undersigned and will be produced at the time of the sale.

Subject to the above mortgage and lien the whole of the above property will be sold without prior encumbrance.

TERMS

Twenty per cent. of the purchase money to be paid at the time of sale, remainder within fifteen days thereafter.

A little building containing two ample rooms has been erected near the Grand hotel and will be used for commercial purposes, by travellers who now patronize that hotel.

G. N. Built by Sept. 1.

Authoritative Statement is Made by Mr. J. J. Hill to Mr. Lindsey.

The Extension from Morrissey to Coal Creek will be Built at Once. Sims and Shield have Charge of its Construction.

Mr. G. G. S. Lindsey who in company with Mr. Stockett went down to St. Paul last week returned on Wednesday, and the former though very busy with various matters on the day following his arrival kindly stopped from his work to give a FREE PRESS reporter some very welcome news, which corroborated our information gathered from other sources of the Great Northern engineer staff now at work between Morrissey and Fernie.

"You know" said Mr Lindsey, "that the G. N. engineers are now on the ground." "Yes but these men, it is said, are here only to survey the line," was answered interrogatively, and Mr. Lindsey continued. "The work of construction is to commence at once. Mr. Hill told me in St. Paul that the line to Coal Creek would be completed by September 1st. While I was there Mr. Sims of the contracting firm of Sims & Shield received instructions to proceed to the crows Nest to construct the line at once. The engineers now here I believe are here not only to survey the line but to oversee its construction." Mr. Lindsey was of the opinion that the road would not be built to Michel this year.

There is no doubt from the above statement that the work of construction will be rushed at a rapid rate, for even allowing for a couple of months grace the building of thirteen miles of railway in a mountainous district will require a large number of men and will necessitate the starting at more than one place. Fernie will naturally be the headquarters for one camp, and as the road winds around three sides of the town its location will be most favorable. No doubt much of the work will be done by sub-contracting.

FATALITY AT COAL CREEK.

Little Three Year Old Willie Johnson Crushed by a Falling Rock.

A very sad accident occurred at Coal Creek on Tuesday afternoon when little three year old Willie Johnson was killed by a rock falling on him fifty feet from his father's house. The little chap had been missing about three hours and an anxious search at last resulted in his body being found between a log and a pile of rock in the back yard, with a heavy rock weighing 200 lbs. resting upon him. His feeble old grandfather, Mr. Yarrow, with superhuman effort released the body which was found to be quite dead. An investigation showed that the little fellow, in the act of climbing over the log, had reached out and pulled at a stone in the rock pile which dislocated the big one from the top. The funeral was held on Thursday afternoon.

LOCALS CONTINUED.

Napoleon Bodette and Alfred Migo were up before justice of the peace Moffatt this week on the charge of being drunk and disorderly and were each given two months at hard labor.

Wm. Gill, of Victoria, Inspector of Inland Revenue for B. C., and J. E. Miller, collector of Inland Revenue for the Mainland of B. C., were in town last Saturday on their regular tour of inspection.

How Foon is erecting a two storey building on his old site on Baker Ave. The lower floor will be used as a store and laundry purposes. Wing Kee is also putting up a laundry house next door.

Wm. Adlam has purchased R. Duthie's interest in the boarding house at Coal Creek. The transfer will take place June 1st. Mr. and Mrs. Duthie contemplate taking a trip to the Old Country this summer.

The Miners Union has purchased the 60 foot lot north of the central Hotel where they purpose erecting a two storey building. The lower floor will be used for a concert hall and the upper storey will be used for union purposes.

J. Brown is erecting a store 30 x 60 on his lot on Baker Ave. A cellar has already been dug and the building will be rushed to completion at once. It will be occupied by C. Richards as a grocery store.

W. R. Ross, M. P. P., received a letter last evening from Premier McBride intimating that his government is very willing to consider the question of rebate on taxation on property destroyed by the fire.

Cree & Hutchison yesterday received cheques for $10,000 in settlement of insurance claims. The time required for settlement by the different companies will depend entirely upon the distance the head offices are from Fernie.

Tuesday next, May 24th, is Victoria Day. There will be no celebration in Fernie though the day will be held as a holiday. Cranbrook and Lethbridge open the lacrosse league on that day at the former town and doubtless some Fernie people will be present to witness the game.

Mrs. McMullin gave an afternoon tea yesterday to some of her friends.

Mrs. (Dr.) Willson, of Morrissey, was the guest of Mrs. Pollock some days this week.

Mrs. D. Davies wishes to announce to her friends that she will not receive in the month of June owing to repairs being made at Edgecliffe during that time.

The only safes that opened on the combination after the fire were Hall's. Mr. Wright, their representative is at present in town. He also represents the Dayton Computing scale.

Mrs. F. J. Mitchell leaves to-day for Moosejaw where she will visit friends for some months. Mr. Mitchell accompanise her as far as Calgary to take in the Victoria Day sports at that place.

Some of the most brilliant legal talent in the Province are now in Fernie preparing their defence in the famous explosion suits. These include Joseph Martin, K. C. of Vancouver; E. P. Davis, K. C. Vancouver; E. V. Bodwell, K. C. Victoria; and W. A. McDonald, K. C., of Nelson.

All accounts due the late firm of Chas. Richards & Co. are payable to J. S. Volume, who alone is authorized to give receipt for same. Office, M. Young & Co.'s store, opposite Free Press office.

Terrice L. O. L., No. 1713 still lives and will meet in D. McDonald's house, Tuesday 24, at 8:30 p.m. All brothers are requested to attend. New banner will be on display in front of lodge room.

Wm. Handley's livery business, whose advt., appears in this issue for the first time, is increasing steadily. He has a large stable filled with horses suited for all purposes and his driving shed contains rigs of all descriptions. One of the latest acquired being a light geared, rubber-tired single driving rig.

The insurance funds are already coming to hand. M. A. Kastner, agent for the Canadian Fire Insurance Co., of Winnipeg, yesterday received cheques aggregating $5,692.93, settling six claims in full. The names of the recipients are F. J. Mitchell, E. Todd, Wing Kee, H. J. Johnson, A. K. Farquharson and A. J Purdy.

Sunday is Memorial Day, the second anniversary of the explosion in No. 2 mine, Coal Creek. The local Miners Union will commemorate the day in the usual way. A procession will form at the Union Town, Old Town at 2 p.m. and march to the cemetery where memorial services will be held. The fraternal societies of the town are cordially invited to join the procession.

Messrs. Swallwell and Thomas, a contracting firm of Everett, Wash., arrived in Fernie a few days ago and are now open for contract work. They have had wide experience in building construction at the Coast, the former as an independent contractor and the latter as head foreman for a large contracting firm. They have secured the contract for Jean and Murchison's hotel.

The Trites-Wood Co. have about concluded to build their new store building of stone. It will be a solid stone structure 114x90, two storeys high, with a large plate glass front and a metal roof. The work of construction will commence very soon and it will be pushed to completion by Oct. The warehouses and underground fire proof cellars, three in number, are being built on the rear lots

The Supreme Court has appointed G. O. Foss and Melvin S. Martin, joint liquidators of the Fernie Manufacturing Company. The application was made at Nelson before Judge Forin. The company was represented by S. S. Taylor, K. C., instructed by Ross & Alexander, for the company, and P. E. Wilson, instructed by L. P Eckstein, for some of the creditors.

Professer Galloway, of Cardiff University, South Wales, and Professor Beard, of Scranton School of Mines, arrived in Fernie this week and will remain here several days when they will proceed to Nelson where they will give expert evidence in the explosion suits. They were at Coal Creek yesterday and examined the scene of the explosion. Several other experts are expected to arrive from distant points.

Right Rev. Bishop Dontenwill arrived from the west with Rev. Father Coccola, who went to meet his Lordship in Nelson. The Bishop will remain in the district five or six days visiting Michel and Morrissey. The Sacrament of Confirmation will be administered next Sunday, 22nd, at 10 o'clock, before High Mass. At 3:30 the president of the church committee will read an address to the Bishop, and the members of the congregation of all nationalities will have an opportunity to converse direct or through interpreter, with the first Pastor of the Diocese.

Mr. A. H. Reeder who for a few weeks was general manager of the Coal Company here has been very unfortunate with a frost bitten foot. In a letter from Mrs. Reeder to a friend in town it was stated that shortly after leaving Fernie to accept his new position at Stonega, Virginia, his foot bothered him greatly and a toe had to be amputated. Blood poisoning set in and his life was despaired of. The best doctors of Philadelphia were employed and after a long illness his life was spared without losing his leg which for some time was considered unavoidable. Mr. Reeder is now convalescing from an attack of pneumonia which ollowed his other trouble.

The soil and gravel from several excavations for cellars has been spread on the streets in places where it was most needed. Some of these places are, at the Alberta corner, the Free Press corner, and in the vicinity of the Methodist church block. Most of the gravel so far has been hauled from the two new cellars of the Trites-Wood Co., the cellar for S. F. Wallace's new hotel and J. Brown's cellar on Baker St. These men deserve the thanks of the town for the pains they have taken to spread this surplus material in the most advantageous places possible. Other excavations are to follow and if the same trouble is taken to improve the streets a very good foundation will be laid for a top dressing of cinders. This material can be had in very large quantities at the coke ovens and on a stony foundation it will make a smooth hard, porous street second to no other material.

THE FERNIE METHODIST CHURCH

A congregational meeting was held in the Methodist church on Wednesday evening at which reports of the different departments of the church work were presented. The pastor, Rev. J. Robson, gave a report of the spiritual condition of the church, showing a membership of 42. The recording-steward and secretary of the finance committee, Mr. A. T. Claxton, followed with a general report of the finances of the church, which are in a very satisfactory condition. The total amount raised during the year just closed was $2430,20. Mrs. A. B. Trites, secretary-treasurer of the Ladies Aid reported that the society had raised the sum of $480. The ladies are be to complimented on their work as this is the best showing of any society of this order of the church in the Kootenays. Mr. J. W. Nunn, ex-president of the Epworth League gave a summary of the efforts of that branch of church work. The Sunday School was represented by the secretary, Mr. J. F. Wilkes, and the Trustee Board by Mr. D. V. Mott. Mr. W. A. Letcher emphasized the work of the envelope secretary, pointing out the advantages of that system of giving.

A very hearty vote of thanks was extended to the pastor and his wife for their unceasing energy in the work of the church at large and Mr. Robson was invited to remain another year in charge of this congregation.

G. N. R. CONSTRUCTION

ENGINEER PARTY AT WORK ON THE OLD SURVEY LINE.

Messrs. Lupfer and Watkins of the G. N. Civil Engineer Staff arrive this week. Construction Work likely to follow at once.

On Monday evening of this week a ripple of excitment passed through the town as a report was speedily circulated that a survey party had arrived at Morrissey that day over the Great Northern, for the purpose of finally adjusting the survey line between Morrissey and Fernie to be followed immediately by the construction of the railroad. The report was corroborated on Tuesday by the arrival in Fernie of the two engineers who have the work in charge. One of these gentlemen, Mr. E. P. Watkins is remembered in town as the engineer who made the G. N. survey two years ago from Coal Creek and southward to Morrissey several miles to meet the party at that end. Mr. Watkins is accompained by Mr. Alex. M. Lupfer a valued member of the Great Northern engineer staff who for many years has undertaken the most important survey work for his company.

These men remained in Fernie until Wednesday afternoon when they went back to Morrissey to begin work. They were seen by a reporter, but were unwilling to make any statement beyond the fact that they had been sent here to run over the old lines and to make any corrections that might be deemed necessary. While here they went across the river where they found some of the old stakes. They also went to Coal Creek mines and examined the grade on their line between that place and Fernie. It is said that Mr. Watkins was in favor of reducing the grade while Mr. Lupfer was satisfied with the 2 per cent. grade of the old survey.

The engineers are accompanied by a full complement of men, about fifteen in number, and their camp has been located at Morrissey where the work has been commenced. The party will work towards Fernie and the total time that it is estimated to take to complete the work to Coal Creek is a month or six weeks.

It is confidently believed by many who have taken a keen interest in the building of this line of railway that the period of uncertainty is now over and that the work of construction will be started inside a month. It is improbable that the line will go past Fernie this year. Mr. Watkins, it is said, will have charge of the construction work.

The old survey line will be followed with minor changes. This line runs up the west side of the Elk to a point a few hundred yards above the bridge when it crosses the river and continues northward on the flat for a distance until the grade is made to the townsite level. It then winds around below the present site of the Fernie Manufacturing Co. and skirts the hill side all the way to Coal Creek at an even grade,

FIRE INQUEST.

Considerable speculation has been made as to the cause of the Fernie fire and to settle all doubts and theories as far as possible a fire inquest will be held in a short time. The law requires that a stipendiary magistrate shall hold a fire inquest upon receipt of a request to do so by five property owners in the vicinity of a fire. Accordingly a petition gotten up by Chas. Richards was presented to L. R. Forbes, S. M., last Saturday who promised to hold an inquest upon his return from Nelson. The petition was signed by Chas. Richards, A. H. Cree, J. A. Rennie, F. Stork and F. J. Watson. The insurance adjusters expressed much satisfaction with the action of the petitioners.

TO OPEN UP PROPERTY.

Word comes from Michel that the Imperial Coal Company are already on the ground with a staff of men to develop their coal claims north of that place. John Brown, a mining engineer of Spokane, with a staff of men outfitted at Michel and left on Tuesday for their new property where they will carry on development work without abatement during the entire summer. It is stated that the Company will build a railway to their claims and put them in shipping condition as early as possible. The company expects to find markets for its entire output on the American side of the line.

DEATH OF ROBERT BLACK

Succumbed to Lingering Illness at Tacoma. Body Taken to Winnipeg for Burial.

Genuine sorrow was felt by many in this town and vicinity where the news spread on Saturday that Robert Black of the McRae Lumber Co., Hosmer, was dead. Mr. and Mrs. Black left Fernie three months ago on a trip to the coast in the hopes that the change would benefit the former's health which for months previous had been unsatisfactory.

Three weeks after their departure Mr. Black developed symptoms of typhoid at Victoria and though the attack was not severe he did not recover rapidly. This was followed by an attack of malaria leaving him very weak. The doctors advised a drier climate and the patient accompanied by his devoted wife travelled as far as Tacoma, Wash., where a cousin of the former lives. Here serious complications set in and death came peacefully a few days later, on the 11th inst.

Deceased was the second son of Mr. and Mrs. Alexander Black, of Winnipeg, who passed through this town a few weeks ago He was 29 years of age. The father was summoned by wire but did not reach his destination before the end came. The body was taken to Winnipeg for burial.

Mr. and Mrs. Black lived in Fernie for nearly a year and during that time made a large circle of friends. Mr. Black was a member of the McRae Lumber Co., of Hosmer, of which he had charge of the business department. The deepest sympathy is felt for the bereaved widow in her great sorrow, made greater by the fact that less than a year ago, her father Engineer Johnson, lost his life in the bridge wreck near Winnipeg.

TAXES TO BE REBATED.

Board of Trade Memorialize the Provincial Government.

A special general meeting of the Board of Trade was held in the fire hall on Wednesday evening with President Quail in the chair. The question of taxation on the burnt property came up and the following resolution was drawn up and adopted.

That a memorial be drawn up setting forth all facts in connection with the late fire, signed by the President and Secretary of the Board and endorsed by the local member of the legislature, to be sent to the government asking that the the taxes for the current year on property destroyed or damaged by fire be rebated.

The entire cost of surveying the lots in the burnt district and of establishing the street and sidewalk grade was put in by Mr. McEvoy for the modest sum of $192. This divided among the different interested parties amounted to $2.75 per 30 foot lot. A resolution was adopted requesting all the parties to pay their share at once to the secretary, Mr. J. S. T. Alexander.

IMPERIAL COMPANY DIRECTORS.

Montreal, May 11.—At a meeting of the shareholders of the newly formed Imperial Coal and Coke Co. held to-day the following directors were elected:—W. Herbert Evans, Jas. W. Pyke, Frank Thompson and C. W. Spencer, Montreal; Randolph Macdonald, Toronto; O. G. Laberee and Andrew Laidlaw, Spokane. At a subsequent meeting of the board Mr. W. Herbert Evans was elected President. The company own about 100 square miles of coal lands in the East Kootenay district of British Columbia.

A SUDDEN DEATH.

Geo. Pete, a Slavonian, died at the hospital on Sunday morning after an illness of two days. On Thursday he attended a small family party and at 2 o'clock while a dance was in progress he fell down unconscious. He recovered sufficient to walk home alone when a relapse occurred and he was taken to the hospital. The deceased was buried on Monday with Slavonic honors, the band leading a long procession of fellow countrymen and brother union men. Rev. Father Coccola performed the ceremony The deceased was a single man and 27 years old. He had resided in Fernie over three years and was an influential citizen among the Slavonians.

$250 FOR FIRE BRIGADE.

Mr. J. S. T. Alexander on Saturday last received a cheque from the Provincial Government for two hundred and fifty dollars for fire protection purposes. The donation was the result of a letter from W. R. Ross, M. P. P. asking for assistance in this direction. The grant will come very acceptable at this time to pay off some of the indebtedness due on the firehall.

THE BEAUTIFUL MISS MERRIAM

By HARRIET LUMMIS

Copyright, 1903, by T. C. McClure

With Miss Merriam the incredible had happened. She was tired of hearing that she was beautiful. From her earliest recollections strangers had exclaimed over her pretty face, and her lovers one after another had hung the variations on the same theme. Miss Merriam listened politely and found herself extremely bored.

"To be loved for your face is like being loved for your fortune," Miss Merriam confided to her journal. "Beauty has wings just as truly as riches. If a man falls in love with your complexion what is he going to do when you come down with the smallpox? If I were a pretty fool I might be perfectly satisfied with things as they are, but I know I'm worth loving for myself—if only they had the sense to find it out."

Unfortunately for themselves Miss Merriam's adorers never suspected her peculiar views. If there had been one of their number shrewd enough to compliment her intellect instead of her dimples and to have talked about her sparkling wit rather than her sparkling eyes he would have found the short cut to her heart. As it was, they were unanimous in deciding that the aforementioned article had been omitted from her composition. And Miss Merriam expressed her displeasure in the following paragraph in her journal: "Beauty, beauty, beauty! How tiresome it all is! I wish I might never hear I was beautiful again."

Rash prayers sometimes bring unwelcome answers. Not very many days later the city was electrified by the news that Miss Merriam had been thrown from her automobile at a well known watering place and seriously injured. Pictures of the beauty appeared in all the leading newspapers of the country, with reference to her possible disfigurement. Miss Merriam's relatives, when appealed to on this important point, refused to say anything to relieve the suspense or to satisfy the popular curiosity. And the explanation of their reticence was apparent when Miss Merriam made her appearance in society a few weeks later. Across the faultless curve of the girl's cheek ran an unsightly scar, a scar so aggressively prominent that it held the attention of the observer and made him forgetful of all else. It seemed likely that Miss Merriam was to have her heart's desire and never again be forced to hear that she was beautiful.

Lloyd Hollister saw her for the first time at one of the opening functions of the season, a few days after his return from abroad. "Notice that girl over there," a friend said, pulling his sleeve. "Last spring she was the 'beautiful Miss Merriam,' and see her now. Hard luck, isn't it?"

Hollister looked as directed. He saw a small head regally carried, a mass of dazzling hair and eyes that shot violet lights from under their arched brows. Then Miss Merriam turned her head, and he saw the scar and nothing else.

"I'd be sorrier for her," the man at his elbow went on, "if she hadn't turned down half the fellows in her set. I guess she thought she was good for a duke with that face of hers. Introduce you, did you say? Why, certainly, my dear fellow."

It was the innate chivalry of Hollister's nature which had prompted him to ask the honor of Miss Merriam's acquaintance. He was as sorry for the girl as he was disgusted with the cold blooded comments of the man who had pointed her out to him. For the first few moments of their conversation he unscrupulously kept his eyes away from her. He could not bear to witness the beauty in eclipse, and he fancied that she who had been so used to reading admiration in the eyes of every man must wince at the pity which tact could not conceal.

Presently he found that admiration was getting the better of his sympathy. This quondam beauty was not crushed by her misfortune. She met this thunderbolt of fate's spite with a gallant courage which quickened Hollister's pulses. Her easy gayety, her apparent unconsciousness of the pathos of her situation, appealed to him as no woman's beauty had ever done. He made the discovery that Miss Merriam was brilliant if no longer beautiful, and that her cleverness, unlike that of many of her sex, owed nothing to ill nature.

In the months that followed he saw a great deal of Miss Merriam. It was clear that the girl's liking for social pleasure remained unaltered by the change in her circumstances. She went everywhere and to all appearances enjoyed herself in spite of the sudden falling off in the number of her admirers. There had been a time when the man who wished a word with the beautiful Miss Merriam was obliged to fight his way through a double ring of black coats, but Hollister had no difficulty in gaining her side whenever he went. Yet the deposed queen of hearts seemed so unconscious of anything about her which called for sympathy that Hollister suppressed his pity as if it had been a form of disloyalty, and after a time he no longer found this difficult. He admired Miss Merriam too much to be sorry for her. In every quality of mind and heart she met his ideal of what a woman should be. As for the scar, he looked at it now unshrinkingly. Whatever he did, he meant to act with his eyes open.

The night he asked her to marry him they sat in Miss Merriam's little library, where the flickering light of the grate fell full upon her face. No man worthy of the name is voluble when he lays his heart and life in the hollow of a woman's hand. Hollister stammered through his lovemaking like a boy. As he went on Miss Merriam turned away her face so that the profile was toward him. The light of the fire flashed on the scar, and it stood out in livid relief. As a rule, Hollister was not fanciful, but for an instant the gash seemed the mocking mouth of a demon stretched in a fiendish grin.

Hollister waited a long time for an answer to his question. Miss Merriam's face was averted, and he could see that she was stirred by some strong emotion. When he made a movement to take her hand she turned toward him suddenly, and he saw that her eyes were brimming with tears.

"You are a brave man, Mr. Hollister," she said in a voice not quite steady. "Have you thought of this?" Her fingers touched the scar with a strange, half caressing gesture. "Have you thought what it will mean to have every passerby look at your wife pityingly and whisper as you pass?"

"I love you," was Hollister's answer. "If there is a hard thing in your life it is my right to share it." Then his head whirled at the look of sudden adoration that leaped from her eyes.

"Oh, I wanted to find a man like you," Miss Merriam whispered. "I was sure there must be such a one in the world." And then she was in his arms, with the poor, scarred cheek pressed to him, sobbing out her heart in a burst of exultant triumph that enraptured him without his understanding it in the least.

When they said good night Miss Merriam clung to her lover as if reluctant to let him out of her sight. "I must see you in the morning, dearest," she said. "You must spare me a few moments." And Hollister, who was looking forward to the separation of a few hours as if it had been as many weeks, agreed with a sudden lightness of heart.

He wondered a little when he came next morning that she should keep him waiting. His heart leaped at every footstep in the hall for the first half hour, and when at last she stole into the room, closing the door behind her, she took him by surprise. Hollister sprang to his feet, then stood staring blankly.

An enchanting face smiled up at him, a face rosy with blushes. He saw the play of the dimples and the curve of the cheek as if he were looking on it for the first time. The scar was gone."

"My God!" said Hollister helplessly, and he dropped into a chair, his own face dead pale. Miss Merriam ran to him and dropped on her knees beside his chair, looking into his eyes with a fascinating mixture of timidity and confidence.

"Forgive me, dearest. Don't be angry with me for deceiving you. If you only knew how tired I grew of men who couldn't see anything in me to love but my pretty face! That little accident with my automobile was too good an opportunity to miss, and the scar was easily put on. An actress showed me how to do it, but I flatter myself that after a little I improved upon my teacher."

She smiled at Hollister shyly and did not seem to find his silence discouraging. "Please don't say you like me better the other way. I almost grew to hate my beauty when it blinded people to all the rest in me, but now I'm glad to have it to give to the man who loved me for myself."

Several complexion specialists claimed the credit for removing the scar that had ruined Miss Merriam's beauty and reaped golden harvests thereby. But the beautiful Miss Merriam never regained her title for the reason that her identity was soon merged in that of the beautiful Mrs. Hollister.

An Equine Joke.

At 2 o'clock one morning, when the fog was so thick that you could not see the name of the streets printed on the lamp posts, a telegram was received at a San Francisco newspaper office from an interior town that a prominent official had been killed while hunting. The news had to be broken to the family, and the man doing the late watch was told to jump into a carriage and get some "dope" on the deceased.

He grabbed the first four wheeler in sight and did not notice that the driver had been imbibing. He gave him the address and settled back to get a few winks of sleep, but was awakened by the carriage coming to a standstill. He got out and as he glanced around he was surprised to see headstones and monuments on every side. He looked up and found "cabby" fast asleep. In an instant he appreciated the situation. The driver had fallen asleep on the box, and the horses, believing they were going to a funeral, had leisurely trotted to the burying ground.—Exchange.

Followed His Leader.

Michael had been in the country only a short time and was not entirely familiar with the table d'hote dinner. In his first evening out he hied himself to a Sixth avenue restaurant and called for a table d'hote dinner. Opposite him sat a sour visaged and voracious person who had arrived only a few moments before. Michael, being in doubt as to how to order, decided to watch his neighbor and invariably said he would take the same in response to the waiter's query.

After finishing his dinner the heavy eating man ordered the waiter to send him in a bootblack.

"Bring me the same," exclaimed Michael.

"What!" said the waiter. "Won't one bootblack do two of you?"

"Well," cried Michael, pointing toward his neighbor, "if he eats his I'll eat mine too!"—New York Times.

In the House of the Loving Heart

By Keith Gordon

Copyright, 1903, by T. C. McClure

"The idea of any wise person caring for money, especially in New York," she gibed as they sank down upon one of the benches at the entrance to the park. The carriages were hurrying feverishly after one another as if happiness lay at the other end or else rolling sadly back again as if to indicate that it was not there after all.

Hazard turned an astonished face toward her.

"You're guying," he observed disapprovingly. "New York's the place where one needs it most. Every one knows that."

"Every one," she echoed with scorn. "And why? Simply because 'every one' is suffering from the greed of possession. They want to possess, not to enjoy. They buy—buy—buy! Then they put what they have bought into a safe deposit vault and hurry off to Europe, where they begin all over again. There's one of them now." And she nodded gayly in response to a bow from a lady in a passing victoria.

"Who is it?" asked Hazard laconically.

"Mrs. Lofty," laughed the girl, following the disappearing carriage with derisive eyes. "Poor thing!"

"Then you'd rather be Elise Sherwin, student of art, and sit here on a bench with a poor young lawyer than be Mrs. Lofty, would you?" he asked, watching a lock of hair which the spring wind blew softly across her cheek.

"I certainly would," she replied with promptness. "She never has any time for enjoyment or cultivation or reading or—or anything that counts," she ended vaguely. "You see, she has responsibilities. There are the servants. Of course I don't need to tell you about the awfulness of the servants. Then there is her house, one of those fearful places that just grip you by the throat when you enter and throttle you."

She paused for breath, with a reminiscent expression. Then she continued:

"You feel as if some one has just died—or perhaps 'demised' would be more in accord with the furnishing."

"But one doesn't need to do such things with money," her companion interrupted with argumentative intention.

"No, I don't suppose one does. And yet they generally do. You see, noblesse oblige seems to demand that when you have a million or upward you copy one of the royal palaces of Europe and live your poor little republican life in it, though I'm sure I don't know why," she finished thoughtfully.

"Still, money is a good thing, and you can't say that it isn't. A fellow must have decent clothes, and it strikes me that that simple little tailor made gown that you are wearing cost"—he screwed his face up in the effort at appraisement—"about $100."

"Only $75," she corrected and returned to her subject somewhat hurriedly.

"There's another thing. When you're rich you just have to have a complexion—and no mere man can know what a fearful responsibility that is. It's worse than servants! You have to employ beauty doctors and have little pots of greasy stuff about. You should see Mrs. Lofty's supply. It is immense."

Hazard smiled in an absent way and then began with the air of a man who is weighing his words, "If you really prefer a castle in Spain to anything"—

She cut him short.

"Have I ever told you about mine?"

He shook his head.

She pointed in the direction of the great, dark hotel which frowned down upon them.

"It ees vanish, n'est pas?" she mimicked. "Behold in its place my House of the Loving Heart! I think the name especially telling since it is situated, as you see, on what we might call the Street of Love of Money.

"I hope you see the house plainly. The style is a sort of modified Italian, with a projecting cornice and an inner court."

Hazard nodded.

"Don't you think the boxes of hyacinths in the windows and the big, low entrance give it a friendly look? That is what I aim at particularly," she explained with well feigned anxiety, "a friendly looking house!"

"Great!" was Hazard's feeling comment. "But who in thunder is that man standing at the window?" and he strained his eyes toward the great hotel. Then he turned to her with an expression of pleased and innocent surprise. "By Jove, it's me!"

"It looked so homely and inviting, I suppose, that I couldn't resist it," he explained as he noticed the warm flush rising in her cheeks.

In a moment she had recovered herself.

"Since you are in I hope you like the divans and the low table and the books and pictures. Please notice, too, that things are within reach. It doesn't look, does it, as if I were trying to live up to my fortune or suggest that I have stopped to think what Mrs. Lofty would have done under similar circumstances?"

"Not a bit," he assured her heartily, while the peculiar compression of the lips of an old gentleman sitting next them indicated suppressed amusement.

"Well, come on, then! Now, this room, which has everything beautiful and useful and comfortable that I could find to put into it, is for my heartsick and discouraged friends. Some of them I shall not have met before. But in some way, I don't know how, they will find their way to this little door (it opens quietly on Fifty-eighth street, you see), and I shall cheer them up."

"Leave care behind, all those who enter here," he murmured, as if he were reading an inscription.

The girl laughed in a pleased way.

"Excellent! A public sympathizer is really what we need. I believe as many people fail from lack of sympathy and encouragement as from lack of ability."

She had grown suddenly earnest, and her eyes filled with tears. Hazard leaned toward her in real distress.

"So silly of me," she began, with a little shake in her voice. "But there have been some rough places—places where Mrs. Lofty, for instance, has looked on from her luxurious life and said: 'I hope you'll get on all right. Goodby, dear!' and left me with loneliness and discouragement eating my heart, and I have felt that in my House of the Loving Heart I should like to have it different."

The old man in the next seat shifted himself around so as to get a better view of the girl's face, but neither of the young people noticed him, and she began her description once more.

"These bedrooms are the best in the house. I intend them for my poor friends. Still, I have indulged in small economies. Now, for instance, in these rooms"—and with a wave of the hand she ushered him into another imaginary suit—"the appointments, though very comfortable, are less luxurious. In these I shall install my rich friends when they visit me."

An unmistakable chuckle escaped from the old gentleman, and Hazard and Miss Sherwin turned in his direction in surprise. But he was bowing to the occupant of a belated carriage, all unconscious apparently of their existence.

"I shall entertain a good deal for my poor friends—give them a chance to meet interesting people and get out of the ruts of their workaday lives," Miss Sherwin resumed. "But the rich ones"—her eyes were dancing mischievously—"I shall ask only on ordinary occasions when I am having simple, wholesome dinners that won't make them discontented with their lot."

They looked at each other and broke into long and merry laughter. Hazard's worldliness had vanished like a cloud.

"It's a great idea, sweetheart," he said softly, "and I'd like to work to make it come true. Would you let me—do you think"—

But the blushes were so violent this time that he got no further, and besides the old gentleman was standing before them.

"I am Jasper Clark," he said simply, and at that name they both stared at him in amazement. "I know you'll forgive an old man for listening." Then with a bow he continued whimsically: "I should very much like the pleasure of your company at dinner"—and he made a gesture toward the Millionaires' club over the way. "You see, the time may come when I shall want to enter that quiet little door on Fifty-eighth street." And he glanced with kindly eyes at the future mistress of the House of the Loving Heart.

"Serendipity."

This word is a coinage of Horace Walpole's. Writing about a discovery he had made in connection with his picture of Bianca Capello, he says:

"This discovery I made by a talisman, which Mr. Chute calls the Sortes Walpolianæ, by which I find everything I want, a pointe nommee, wherever I dip for it. This discovery indeed is almost of that kind which I call serendipity, a very expressive word, which, as I have nothing better to tell you, I shall endeavor to explain to you. You will understand it better by the derivation than by the definition. I once read a silly fairy tale called 'The Three Princes of Serendip.' As their highnesses traveled they were always making discoveries, by accidents and sagacity, of things which they were not in quest of. For instance, one of them discovered that a mule blind of the right eye had traveled the same road lately because the grass was eaten only on the left side, where it was worse than on the right. Now do you understand serendipity? One of the most remarkable instances of this accidental sagacity (for you must observe that no discovery of the thing you are looking for comes under this description) was of my Lord Shaftesbury, who, happening to dine at Lord Chancellor Clarendon's, found out the marriage of the Duke of York and Mrs. Hyde by the respect with which her mother treated her at table."—Notes and Queries.

On a Large Scale.

"Yes, sir," resumed the Dakota farmer as the crowd of agriculturists seated themselves round a little table—"yes, sir. We do things on rather a sizable scale. I've seen a man on one of our big farms start out in the spring and plow a straight furrow until autumn. Then he turned round and harvested back. We have some big farms up there, gentlemen. A friend of mine owned one which he had to give a mortgage on, and I pledge you my word the mortgage was due at one end before they could get it recorded at the other. You see, it was laid out in counties. And the worst of it is it breaks up families so. Two years ago I saw a whole family prostrated with grief—women yelling, children howling and dogs barking. One of my men had his camp truck packed on seven four-mule teams, and he was going round bidding everybody goodby."

"Where was he going?"

"He was going half way across the farm to feed the pigs," replied the Dakota man.

"Did he ever get back to his family?"

"It isn't time for him yet. Up there we send young married couples out to milk the cows, and their children bring home the milk."—Exchange.

WHILE THE TRAIN WAITED

By A. S. Richardson

Copyright, 1903, by T. C. McClure

The waiter coughed obsequiously, and Margaret Ashton turned toward him impatiently.

"Just some fruit and coffee for dessert."

The waiter picked up the plate holding an untasted entree.

"Why are we stopping here so long?"

"Freight train off de track ahead, ma'am, but de wreckin' crew's heah, ma'am."

Miss Ashton picked up the menu, read it absentmindedly and laid it down again. Then her glance traveled back to the panorama spread beyond the dining car's window. It was the residence district of a pretty village, with yellow and white and gray and white cottages placed at a discreet distance apart, with well kept lawns and budding gardens in between.

Close to the crossing where the train had come to a sudden standstill was the church, painted in pearly white, with dark green shutters and imitation colored glass windows. Even at this distance Margaret recognized the material in those windows. They had received samples when she was in the altar guild at St. Paul's.

The waiter arrived with her dessert, and she selected some white grapes with elaborate care. When she looked up again, a boy came scampering down the drive which divided two of the cottage homes. He swung a baseball bat in signal to another youngster emerging from another yard. Both homes had barns and chicken yards in the rear, and the boys wore sweaters.

"They have had their tea and have done their chores," thought Miss Ashton, stirring her coffee slowly, "and by and by some one will call them both in and pull down the shades."

A woman ran across the back yard of the house nearest the tracks, carrying something under her apron. She disappeared in the kitchen doorway of the next house, then reappeared empty handed and ran back to her own home.

"She had borrowed something, no doubt," said Miss Ashton to herself. "Perhaps she had a little tea this afternoon. We always borrowed things from the Marsdens when we had teas."

She pushed aside her coffee cup, laid a bill on the silver tray which the waiter offered and left the car. Her chair was in the drawing room car forward. She found herself looking straight into the side yard of a trim little cottage. A young woman sat on the step of the porch, a "fascinator" thrown over her shoulders. At the foot of the step stood another woman holding a restless baby in her arms. The two women were so earnestly engaged in conversation that they did not notice how the baby was stripping young buds off the porch vine.

"Gossiping," murmured Miss Ashton.

She knew the narrow life only too well. She had run away from it years before. She wanted to go where your next door neighbor did not count the skirts and shirt waists on your line, where no one insisted that because a young man had shown you a few ordinary courtesies you were bound to be engaged to him.

She swung her chair impatiently, and her glance fell once more on the church. The sun was setting, and two people were walking up the narrow flagged path. The man pulled out a key, threw open the church door, and they both passed in. He did not look like a minister. He was something of an athlete and had an alert air. A moment later he was opening the window. The girl was not in sight, but Margaret was certain that she was putting flowers in the vase at the pulpit.

"He's a leader in the church, no doubt. A man must always be at the head of something," she thought. "And Miss Demure will be sitting down in the amen corner soon watching him with adoring eyes because the whole congregation looks up to him."

What a narrow set these people in small towns were! Here was a train stalled in their midst bearing men of millions, women who had traveled at home and abroad, interests that might affect the world of trade, and they did not stop so much as to inquire into the trouble. They were so small, so narrow, so self absorbed!

At last the train moved with great, heaving strain on wheels and springs. Margaret gave one more glance at the church. The lights were ablaze, and the young man was standing in front of the congregation, a book in his hand. The girl was at the organ.

Margaret leaned back and closed her eyes. She saw another church, another man—and herself. Then she turned her thoughts resolutely into other channels. She glanced down at her bag. She knew the papers in that bag meant insurance policies for thousands, all written by herself. She had stepped in where other agents feared to tread and had secured business. She was going back to New York and the approval of her superiors. She would be glad to shut herself in her private office and take up her accumulated correspondence. She must have a new cabinet ordered for that empty corner of her office. The papers to be filed in her department were increasing.

* * * * * * *

She gave her number to the cabman and was whisked off into the glare of Broadway's lights. By and by they turned into a quiet side street. She mounted the steps leading to a dim brownstone apartment house, shook out her keys and hurried to her room.

There were no matches, and she rang the bell impatiently. The maid apologized and brought in clean towels.

"We weren't expecting you till tomorrow, Miss Ashton," she remarked, with a furtive flirt of her towel across the dusty table.

Margaret lighted every gas jet in the room and in the dressing room adjoining, to say nothing of the gas log in the grate, but still the room seemed dank and dull. She wished that it were morning and she might bury herself in office work.

The maid returned with a package which had arrived in Margaret's absence, and the latter inquired:

"Is Miss Harding in this evening? If she is, I wish you would ask her to come in and have a cup of tea with me."

Miss Harding had the room at the end of the hall.

The maid paused in the doorway and looked in in startled fashion.

"Why, didn't you know? Miss Harding died while you were gone."

"Died!"

"Yes; pneumonia; awful sudden too. None of her folks was here. They live way up state somewhere, and the undertaker shipped the body."

Margaret sat staring at the even flame of the gas log. "None of her folks was here; they shipped"—

The life had died out of the great city and the clock struck 2 when Margaret Ashton laid down her pen. She bent low to kiss the letter as she sealed it, and again there came to her the vision of the man and the girl walking up the narrow, flagged pathway to the church.

* * * * * * *

Ten days later a man who wore gold glasses and looked at her above them called her into his private office. She had only been in that office twice before, and they had been red letter events in her business career.

"Miss Ashton, we have been going over the results of that last trip you made. They are remarkable for a woman. And we have decided to make you superintendent of the Troy offices."

He paused for an expression of surprise or appreciation. Miss Ashton was studying the carpet. The great man coughed.

"Your salary, of course"—

"Thank you," she said, still without looking up, "but I have accepted another position."

The great man fairly jumped.

"But, my dear young woman, you should consider"—

"I have considered, and this is for life."

This time she looked up, straight into the eyes of the great man. Something he read there made him rise and extend his hand cordially.

"My dear Miss Ashton, I trust you will be very happy. And I congratulate the young man with all my heart."

He Spoke Japanese.

They told this on a Pittsburger who is dead now and therefore shall be nameless, but the story is still told about Washington when a crowd of newspaper men foregather and talk over old times and happenings. It was during the Harrison administration, and the Pittsburger was hot on the trail of a consulship. Several were suggested and rejected by the applicant, who didn't want a government sit at Dahomey or some other out of the world place, but a first class charge.

Finally he picked on Yokohama as the place where he would like to represent Uncle Sam and secured an audience with President Harrison.

"But do you understand the importance of this position?" asked the president. "Can you speak Japanese?"

Oh, yes, the applicant understood the importance of the position; also he could speak the language.

"Well," said the president, "let me hear you speak it."

"All right! Ask me something in Japanese."

There was a laugh all round, but the Pittsburg man did not get the position.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

Pina Gauze.

Pina gauze, made by the women of the Philippines from pineapple spikes alone, is as delicate as chiffon and far more durable. They use only the best leaves, and these, tied into bundles, are placed under heavy stones in the bed of a running stream. After two or three days of this treatment they are exposed for a time to the action of the sun and air. Each piece is closely inspected to make sure that the process of decomposition was thorough, and if it was not the leaves are subjected a second time to the operation. The fibrous threads are at last wholly separate from the cellulose and lignose particles and cleaned from the sap and gummy substance. The whole is then beaten with a wooden mallet grooved on the face like a fluting machine. The threads are kept moist while this beating is in progress, and the separate threads are thus blended into one mass. In color the fibers vary from cream and light gray to pure white. After the "pineapple cloth" is finished figures are stamped on it with blocks and afterward worked or embroidered by hand.—Chicago News.

His Latest Request.

There is a clever lad who will get his living in this world. For playing truant maternal authority cut off his supper. Casting one fond look at the authoress of his existence, he paused at the door to say:

"Mother, I am going to die, and when I am no more I wish the doctor to cut me open and look at my stomach."

The maternal heart was filled with awful forebodings, and the maternal voice asked what he meant.

"I wish it to be known," he answered, "that I died of starvation."

This was enough. The small boy was triumphant and retired to his little bed gorged to repletion.

WOMAN'S WORLD

MRS. IDA LACHMUND.

An Energetic Woman Who Owns and Operates Two Steamboats.

Steamboating is the unusual business in which Mrs. Ida Lachmund is engaged. She is a resident of Clinton, Ia., and her steamers ply up and down the broad Mississippi river, upon which her home city is situated.

This energetic western woman is the owner of two large steamboats, and she has the entire supervision of them. This means that she has a crew on each vessel, and as each crew contains twenty-six men, and as Mrs. Lachmund closely watches the machinery of her possessions to see that no defects exist and buys all the stewards' supplies, her life is an especially busy one.

What is more, it is also a successful one financially. The unusual undertaking of this feminine boat owner averages the towing of from 35,000,000 to 40,000,000 feet of lumber in a season, which consists of the six months from April to November, and this makes a splendid income for the woman who has entered this strange business.

Do You Keep a Scrapbook?

The very wideawake house mistress has her scrapbook, and if not a scrapbook a box of assorted and labeled envelopes, and if not assorted envelopes a patent index contrivance with all the latest frills of fashion in indexes. Book, envelope or patent indexer or any other scrap collector, it is all the same—she keeps the hints that fall by the wayside and has them ready to peep in upon when she needs their good counsel.

Each house mistress has her own best way of collecting and arranging scraps. She will not go amiss if she makes her plan as simple as possible without neglecting any department of the household, which has as many divisions as a kingdom. Cuisine is one grand division, which may be subdivided, the classifications in a good cookbook forming a trusty guide.

House decorating, house furnishing, house cleaning, the care of beds, linens, baths, servants, suggestions for entertaining, are other departments to be elaborated.

Some suggestions that she meets with may be transient, relating to a prevailing mode or fad for this or that; others pertain to the eternal fitness of things, and hence merit a more honorable place among the scraps.

It is the part of prudence in the almost trackless wilderness of suggestions opened nowadays for the education of the housekeeper to exercise the best judgment with which she is endowed in collecting the scraps that fit with her individual circumstances.—Chicago News.

Let the Children Have Pets.

Nearly all children love animals and should be allowed to have one of some kind for a pet wherever possible. One of the hardest things to exercise in the bringing up of children is foresight, and yet it is the most important and imperative of necessities in the mother who conscientiously tries to do her duty. How often do you hear: "Oh, what's the use? We may all be dead a year from now!" This is both true and trite, yet is a most pernicious mode of reasoning. A child who cares for a helpless kitten is unconsciously fostering the instinct of motherhood. The fact that he or she is needful to the little creature produces the same glow which we experience in after life when we minister to the wants of the tiny little toddlers who have not yet learned to do for themselves. Seldom will a child forget to feed a pet if he is once given the responsibility, all of which cultivates thoughtfulness and diverts from self. They do not know that the sweetest thing in life is to be needed, that we need to be needed above all else, but we know and should not rob them of this keenest and most innocent of pleasures. Instead of enumerating the disadvantages and drawbacks of having a cat or dog around the house when the desire is wistfully expressed by the little folks, look ahead and remember that you are here given the opportunity of planting the seed of a better, stronger and more unselfish solicitude for the care of those little human pets without which no life is fully lived.

The Woman Who Works.

If a young woman is compelled to earn her own living, there are many avenues open to her. There is the commercial world of typewriting, bookkeeping, stenography, etc. There are the fields of literature and art, and by art I include embroidery and designing, and there are the professions. First of all, a woman should decide to which of these various walks of life she is best adapted. Then, with a resolute purpose, she should push into her chosen line of work, determined to let nothing stand in the way of her success. If she is not compelled to earn her own living, but is simply entering the business world in order to procure a little extra pocket money or become independent, in many cases it is far better for her to remain at home and perfect herself in household duties—learn to make her own clothes, trim her own hats, make dainty collars for herself and do many other of the nice little domestic tasks that fall to the lot of women. If she has a calling in any line, however—though she may not be compelled to earn her own living—I say, by all means let her cultivate her particular talent. In fact, she will do so anyway. Poverty, discouragements—nothing will keep her from it. What is in her is bound to manifest itself, though it may require the patience of Job in attaining results.—Chicago Tribune.

Horseback Riding.

There is nothing that so develops the beauty of women as horseback riding. It not only develops beauty of form and complexion, but maintains it. Aside from the beauty of face and form which attracts, equestrianism develops a beauty of character which makes friends and an ability to hold them. It is universally admitted that American women are the most beautiful. And the most beautiful American women are the equestrians. Who has not seen or heard of the sweet Kentucky belle, with her Venus-like figure, bright, laughing eyes, a beautiful complexion that would put the damask rose to shame, a pose, a grace, artistic lines that are beyond the poet to describe or the artist to reproduce? This beauty of face, form and character is the inherited and acquired result of equestrianism.—New York Medical Journal.

Couches and Nerves.

Couches have saved more minds and nervous systems than all the doctors and medicines put together. It is the best refuge that the overworked housekeeper has, did she but know it, and the only fault I have to find with women is that, as a rule, they do not use their couches half enough. When distracted by the infinite cares of the household and worried over this bill and that, she can throw herself down and, stretched at ease, allow her troubles to straighten themselves out of their own accord. By these means hysteria is avoided, beauty is preserved, and the women's chances for eternal salvation are helped tremendously.—Philadelphia North American.

Kitchen Work.

If you would preserve your daintiness, which is an essential to beauty, don't let yourself store away kitchen fumes in clothing and hair. Don't imagine that a sprinkling of white rose or violet water will hide the fumes. Make a point of having your kitchen thoroughly ventilated during cooking hours. Tie your hair in a handkerchief if the fumes are strong. Try your best to change your clothes the minute you leave the kitchen. This is not an easy matter to arrange, but so much the better if you can accomplish it. Give the kitchen clothes and the hair frequent airings. Loosen the hair and hang it out of the window.

The Wonder Ball.

The wonder ball much in use in Germany is good as a means to both interest and amuse a child. It is made by winding a hank of worsted into a ball, stopping every now and then to wind in some little present. The nicest or most expensive gift should be placed in the center, while tiny boxes of pure chocolates may be only partially concealed near the surface. The recipient of the gift should knit until the little presents fall out. The wonder ball might well prove a source of entertainment to an invalid.

A Candy Test.

The mother who purchases the candy she gives to her children can know whether they are eating pure sweets or not by soaking a bit of the candy in clear cold water. If there is a sediment in the bottom of the glass the presence of some sort of impurity or adulteration is indicated, usually terra alba, and while the adulteration may not be exactly harmful the child is not taking pure sweets into the stomach.

The Nervous Woman.

If only the fidgety, nervous women could see themselves there would be fewer sanitariums for nervous wrecks. The woman who would be calm and self possessed should practice relaxation every day and see how much it will do for her. She will no longer be a tiresome sight for her friends and will find it a great benefit to herself.

Tinting Curtains.

To tint lace curtains cream color add an ounce of yellow ocher to two ounces of starch and mix in the usual way with boiling water. It is best to soak a pair of curtains at the same time, for thus one can insure both being of the same shade of color.

To clean wall paper use a little dough made of flour mixed with a little washing soda. The soda will not injure the paper, and the work can be done more rapidly.

Old stockings cut down the seam make excellent cloths for polishing furniture and floors, as well as soft iron holders.

A short, stout woman should dress her hair so that it will give an appearance of additional height.

Soap should never be used for washing pudding cloths.

A WISE MOTHER.

The Way She Treated Her Boy Who Wanted to Run Away.

As soon as a child begins to think, the ties begin to hold him. I know of a youngster eight years old who announced to his mother that he intended to run away. That wise mother did not hold out any threat of bread and water or the flat of a slipper. She calmly asked the boy where he wanted to run to, and when he showed indecision she suggested a neighboring town as a good place for the first step, say a writer in the Great Round World. Then she packed for him a small bundle of clothing and said: "Well, of course, if you don't like it here and want to run away you can. But you don't know how I shall miss you, Harry." The boy wavered for a moment, then went to the front door. There he hesitated longer, but shut his grim little mouth and started out. His mother saw the door close behind him. Her heart ached. Would he come back? Would he? She went to a window. He had reached the front gate—yards were fenced in in those days—and his hand was on the latch. He stopped. The moments were like a thousand years to the mother. He pulled the gate open, he put one foot past the line that marked the limits of his own little world, then all in an instant he dropped his bundle, rushed back into the house and fell sobbing into his mother's arms.

THE REAL HOME.

It Takes Something More Than Mere Furnishings to Make It.

Homes are not dependent upon riches, and their beauty does not consist in bronzes and bric-a-brac. The real home is a place where character is formed and joined for upward growth, where comradeship prevails, where love sways and softens, where mutual endeavor and sympathy make any work which calls them forth a godsend, where peace exalts the mind and rests the body and refreshes the spirit of man and woman of whatever condition or class.

It is for the building of such homes that women should be trained. Men prate too much about the lack of bread raising and floor sweeping accomplishments in the modern girl. Good bread and clean floors do not make houses homes. It is the character back of the cleanliness, or the flaky biscuit, or the cordial welcome, or whatever duties may become the portion of his wife, which makes a man's house his castle and his sanctuary. These bread raising and floor sweeping accomplishments are not difficult of attainment to the woman of ordinary ability. The degree of her success lies largely in her willingness.—Lavinia Hart in Collier's Weekly.

THE HOME DOCTOR.

Bathe inflamed eyes with warm water, not cold.

Alcohol added to the ice water in which cold compresses are dipped will make these much more efficacious.

If used persistently enough, salt will cure nasal catarrh. A weak brine should be made and snuffed up the nose, allowing it to run down the throat.

For burns or scalds nothing is more soothing than the white of an egg, which may be poured over the wound. It is more soothing as a varnish for a burn than collodion.

When your feet become swollen after your long walks, bathe them in water in which charcoal has been boiled. Strain the water through a cloth before putting the feet into it.

One of the most effective remedies known for a sick headache is to place a pinch of salt on the tongue and allow it to dissolve slowly. In about ten minutes it may be followed by a drink of water.

Learn to Stand Well.

Women who wish to preserve the slimness and contour of their figures must begin by learning to stand well. That is explained to mean the throwing forward and upward of the chest, the flattening of the back and the shoulder blades held in their proper places and the definite curving in of the small of the back, thus throwing the whole weight of the body on the hips. This, in a great measure, preserves the figure because it keeps the muscles firm and well strung and prevents the sinking down of the flesh round the waist, so common in women over thirty, which is perfectly easy to escape. Another thing to avoid is a bad habit of going upstairs, as most women do, bent forward, with the chest contracted, which, as well as being an indolent, slouching manner of walking, is injurious to the heart and lungs.

To Keep Baby Healthy.

The three prime essentials for the baby are fresh air, good food and pure water. An infant's thirst is not quenched by milk. It needs clean water to drink with regularity. Always hold a baby in your arms in feeding it in about the same position as if nursing it. Regular habits, proper food and long hours of sleep are necessary conditions to a healthy infant. Plain boiled water given between feeding will often aid the digestion and satisfy the child when restless. Do not feed the baby because it cries; its restlessness may be due to pain, and it is hurtful to fill an infant's stomach at such a time.—American Queen.

Saving Milk.

A tiny pinch of carbonate of soda or salt put into the milk as soon as it arrives will help to prevent it from turning sour, and if it seems inclined to turn and is slowly heated to nearly boiling point and a pinch of carbonate of soda then stirred in the sourness will disappear. Some people also add a tiny pinch of sugar.

A MANTEL SCHEME.

Showing Novel Use of a Mirror and Pretty Rail Effect.

The illustration given herewith shows a pretty mantel scheme in which was skillfully utilized a discarded gilt framed mirror that had for a long time been discarded and consigned to oblivion as inartistic.

Stripped of its hideous gilt frame, it was reframed in plain ivory enameled wood and fixed in an upright position at one end of the mantelpiece, surmounted by a pottery rail slightly larger than the frame. Another pottery rail, fixed about half the height of the mirror, runs to the other end of the mantelpiece. This, as well as the rail over the mirror, is enameled ivory color. A gathered curtain of soft green silk comes from under the rail, and the mantelpiece draperies repeat the green in some artistic woolen fabric.

WOMEN DOCTORS.

There Are About Six Thousand of Them Practicing In This Country.

It will surprise many readers to be told, on the authority of Dr. Katherine G. Townsend, writing in Everybody's Magazine, that the average number of medical women graduates each year is about 900, and it is estimated that there are nearly 6,000 women physicians practicing in this country.

Years ago a medical woman had a hard time to make ends meet with the proceeds of her labor. At this period each large city will show the names of several who are earning five, ten, fifteen and twenty thousand dollars annually.

Fifty-five years ago this country had not one woman physician. Colleges would not graduate them, men abominated them and women had a contempt for them.

Elizabeth Blackwell was the first woman to gain a diploma from a medical college. She was graduated from Hobart college, Geneva, N. Y., in 1849, but it was not until she had applied to twelve colleges that the "sacred" portals were opened to her. Her sister, Emily Blackwell, had similar difficulty in entering a medical college. She finally graduated, however, and these two sisters settled in New York and founded a dispensary which developed into the present New York Infirmary For Women and Children, with its house staff of eighteen physicians, all women.

One's Clothes and One's Work.

Wherever a marked personal care is exhibited for the cleanliness of the person and for neatness in dress there is also almost always found extra carefulness as regards the finish of work done. Work people whose personal habits are slovenly produce slovenly work; those who are careful of their own appearance are equally careful of the look of the work they turn out. And probably what is true of the workroom is equally true of the region behind the counter. Is it not the fact that the smart saleswoman is usually rather particular about her dress, is averse to wearing dingy collars, frayed cuffs and faded ties? The truth of the matter seems to be that extra care as regards personal habits and general appearance is as a rule indicative of a certain alertness of mind which shows itself antagonistic to slovenliness of all kinds.—London Drapers' Record.

The Trained Nurse.

The age limit as applied to the profession of nursing is causing more or less discussion. It is estimated that the trained nurse begins her remunerative career at twenty-seven. If she is to be considered "too old at forty" she must win a competency for herself in thirteen years. It is a well known fact that many women at this "age limit" still possess all the physical qualifications that were theirs when they first finished their studies, with the added value of ripe experience. On the other hand, if the "age limit" is to go into effect it behooves the aspirant to honors in this profession to ponder well the financial pros and cons before entering it.

For Stock Collars.

A dainty device for keeping the twentieth century girl's white stocks and starched collars immaculate when not encircling her fair throat is made of a round basket. Line with silk of delicate hue, with an interlining of wadding, sprinkled with sachet powder. A circular piece of pasteboard covered and wadded serves for a lid and also as a convenient resting place for the fancy pins worn at the front and back of stock collars.

Cooking Utensils.

You can brighten tins and other cooking utensils by putting them all in the wash boiler and place on the fire with plenty of water and a liberal amount of washing soda. Let them boil for twenty minutes, remove the wash boiler from the fire, but do not take the tins out for three hours. At the end of that time they will be, when washed, bright and new looking.

THE STOUT WOMAN.

Two Things She Should Not Do if She Dislikes Corpulency.

Every one is afraid of growing fat nowadays. No system of weight reducing seems too troublesome for the overplump, no corset arrangement too elaborate or expensive. It seems to me, however, that the "don'ts" are in danger of being neglected for the "dos," and really the "don'ts" are of rather more importance.

Don't lie in bed late of a morning is an indispensable one. I know a girl who almost starves herself for slimness and stays in bed till nearly lunch time, feeling dull and bored and anxious to pass the time away rapidly because she does not take any breakfast. She wonders that her abstinence is not more effective, but I only wonder that she is not putting on weight still faster than she does. "Early to rise" and not too early to bed should be the fat woman's motto.

Another "don't" of considerable importance is "Don't sit too much." Constant sitting encourages a peculiarly ungraceful form of stoutness and destroys the carriage as well. Any indoor work that can be done in a standing position should be done so, and walking should be substituted for driving whenever possible. Stout people often suffer from tender and tired feet. It may be useful to note if constant walking and standing develop this trouble that the nightly use of very hot water followed by dryness and rubbing with alcohol will take away all tiredness and swelling most effectively.

THE AMERICAN WOMAN.

She Is Keen In Business, and She Can Keep a Secret.

"The man who contends that a woman cannot keep a secret displays ignorance of Wall street history," says James B. Dill, the great corporation lawyer. "Many of the greatest financial and commercial secrets of the day are intrusted to women who act as private secretaries for well known men, and the confidence is not misplaced. One man of national reputation allows a woman to answer much of his mail without even showing him the letters. To reach the private office of this dignitary you have first to speak your little piece to this woman secretary, and if you get past her it is because you have told your story in a straightforward way, without beating around the bush. She is an expert in reading character, and the man who thinks he fools her soon appreciates his mistake. The American woman is none the less a lady because she adorns a profession or becomes interested in commercial affairs. I honor her all the more for the splendid example she sets her sister in other lands and for the grace, dignity, purity and faithfulness she contributes to the daily routine."

CULINARY CONCEITS.

Condensed milk can be used in cake making, but less sugar will be required.

Young white onions are very nice cooked in boiling water, sliced and served on buttered toast like asparagus.

To remove fat from soup pour through a clean cloth that has been soaked in cold water. The fat will remain in the cloth.

Before frying bacon soak it in water for three or four minutes. This will prevent the fat from running and will make the bacon go farther.

Stale bread, if broken into rough pieces, dipped in sweetened milk and baked on a buttered tin till dry and crisp, is delicious to eat with butter or cheese.

Pastry may be rolled either toward or away from the manipulator, but should not be rolled back and forth. The easiest way is to start each time at the portion of the paste that is nearest and roll lightly to the end.

A Soup With Meat Value.

Lentil soup has meat value. Wash the lentils, cover them with cold water and soak over night; in the morning drain. Add a quart of stock, a pint of water, a bay leaf, a sprig of thyme, a saltspoonful of pepper, a level teaspoonful of salt and simmer for about two hours until the lentils are tender. Press through a colander, then through a sieve and return the puree to the kettle. Rub a tablespoonful of butter and one of flour together, add them to the soup and stir until boiling. Add a small onion grated, bring to boiling point and turn at once into the soup tureen. Sprinkle over the soup a tablespoonful of chopped parsley and serve with croutons. To give variety moisten a tablespoonful of flour gradually in half a cupful of milk and add it to the soup instead of the butter.—Ladies' Home Journal.

Tight Lacing.

Some years since a series of experiments for the purpose of showing the effects of tight lacing were made upon monkeys by an enterprising scientist. Those which were corseted and laced at once to the regulation V shape of fashionable women died in the space of a few days, as though stricken by some mortal malady, and others lingered and succumbed after a few months from some disorder of which stays were the undoubted cause.—Dr. Arabella Kenealy in Nineteenth Century Review.

Cornstarch Pudding.

Cooking school teachers say that cornstarch pudding is seldom properly cooked, being generally underdone. It seldom gets enough cooking, they say, to take away its raw flavor. A cornstarch pudding cooked three-quarters of an hour, the whites of the eggs not being added until after it is cooked, is said to be not only palatable, but nutritious also.

FOR YOUNG FOLKS

FANTASTIC TOPS.

Queer Spinning Devices Used by the Little Moro Chaps.

In my service as a soldier with Captain Pershing's column in the Mindanao campaign of 1902-03 I had a very good opportunity to watch the little Moro lads in their games. Their tops were of peculiar ingenuity and interest.

Fig. 1 is a drawing of their simplest form of top. The Moro lad selects a piece of hard wood with smooth and even grain and proceeds to cut out a block of the material. Then he gradually works the piece of wood to a cone shape and often devotes several hours a day cutting, chipping, smoothing and shaping the top until he gets it into the form desired. Usually the mahogany wood is used.

The boy makes slots in the circumference of the top and inserts little ears of wood. When the top is spun, these ears make humming sounds. The point of the top is a bit of metal properly worked down and a point ground thereon. The Moro lad uses hemp, rawhide or catgut for his top cords.

One curious style of combination top is shown in Fig. 2. It consists of the main portion, about which the cord is wound—or hemp, rawhide or catgut—and the several separate saucer shaped parts. These parts are set one in the other, and when the top is thrown and all spin together the centrifugal force causes the upper saucers to lift and float off two or three yards before they fall to the ground. The saucer-like forms are tediously worked down from hard wood by the boys during the long hours of the day.

Another strange style of Moro top is represented in Fig. 3. It is an egg shaped affair, cut out of boxwood material, with a furrow in the middle. The top is spun upon the pointed end of a metal shaft which runs vertically through it. This is called the fighting top, as the boys use it with great force upon other tops, throwing it so hard as to split them with the point.

The snake top is represented in Fig. 4. It is made from roots which grow in this form. Much skill is needed to obtain the proper balance. Usually the native lad has the top with him for weeks, working it down, playing with it and adjusting the balance before he can spin it.

The top spins only a little while before it topples over, but I noticed that the youngsters had more fun with these awkward long necked tops than with any others.—Ex-Soldier in Youth's Companion.

A Bit of Self Defense.

Here is a little bit of strategy that is at once the most harmless and amusing as well as one of the most effective things in the way of self defense: Let the opponent with whom you are practicing reach out for you with his hands or else ask him to attempt to strike you. Thrust both arms between his, take a firm grip upon the lapels of his coat and pull his coat off and downward over his shoulders until the sleeves are brought down so that the shoulders of the coat are held securely just above the elbows. So simple is this trick that any boy can hold at utter disadvantage a fellow contestant who possesses twice his strength.—St. Nicholas.

Trick With a Penny.

To pierce a penny with a fine sewing needle does not at first seem an easy thing to do, but it is really very simple when done in the following manner: Stick the needle lengthwise through a cork, allowing the point to project a little. If the needle is longer than the cork, cut off the head with nippers. Place the penny and the cork on a soft board and hit the cork sharply with a hammer. The needle is kept by this from slipping aside, and as it is harder than the copper of the penny the coin is easily perforated even by the finest point.

Nettie's Explanation.

Little Nettie had been given the task of rocking the baby to sleep. By and by her mother came in and found him still awake.

"Why, Nettie," she said, "isn't your little brother asleep yet?"

"No, mamma," she replied. "I dest tan't make him teep hims eyes buttoned."

Well Supplied.

There was once a little boy only three years old who was being taught how to count. One day he was talking so much that his uncle asked him how many tongues he had. The little fellow replied:

"I have three tongues, one in my mouth and one in each shoe."

NELSON and Calgary are vieing with each other to secure from the C. P. R. favorable distributing rates over the Crows Nest line. This advantage, to whichever town it falls, will be short lived, for it is only a question of a brief period of time until Fernie, the natural distributing centre of the district, will be recognized as such by the railways, two in number by the way, and will receive the much coveted rates for wholesale distribution.

ELECTION rumors are already in the air and it is said that entire slates have been formulated, from mayor down to clerk. The duties of Fernie's first council will be onerous and it is of the first importance that the selection of this body be upon the broadest lines, that the men best qualified to fill the various positions may be chosen. In this connection it may not be out of place to point out that nothing is more conducive to failure in municipal government than to mix politics in the local elections. This principle, or perhaps more correctly lack of principle, if persisted in will engender local strife and will result in the sacrifice of the town's interests to those of politicul tricksters. Select the men who are thoroughly anxious for the town's welfare, men with sound judgement and wide experience, such men may not take any active part in politics but the town's business may be intrusted into their hands with perfect confidence.

* * *

Now that the insurance adjustment has been completed and the work of removing the immense quantities of debris is progressing rapidly the consideration of permanent buildings is taking more definite form. It is certain that the business section will be built up more substantially than formerly. The street will be twelve feet wider and many of the buildings will be of fire proof material. What this material will be is not yet determined upon. Concrete, made from cement and sand, is receiving favorable consideration and several have expressed their determination to build with that material should the full facts re its cost bear out their present calculations. This material is rapidly growing into favor for building purposes as the following statistics, showing the amount of Portland cement used in the United States will prove.

In 1880	2,29,000 bbls.
In 1890	2,275,000 "
In 1990	10,000,000 "
In 1902	18,000,000 "

In Canada the increase is proportionate. For the ten years preceding Dec. 31, 1902, the increase was five hundred per cent.

IN this issue appears the legal notice of incorporation and the same is being inserted in this week's B. C. Gazette. The committee have also drawn out the petition and have had it engrossed ready for signatures. The assessment values from the Fort Steele office which were burned in the fire have been duplicated and a list of the registered owners of property has also been duplicated from Nelson. Though the time is short it is not impossible that the town's affiairs may be in the hands of a mayor and board of aldermen by July 1st. Several possible obstacles are being removed. The agreement between the Coal Company and the town, which is to be incorporated in the charter, requires the assent of the legislature, which may not meet again this year. This will be gotten over by receiving the promise of the Premier to have it adopted at the first opportunity. The voters list is another matter which might cause delay. The committee, however, is undertaking to supply all the information that the government may require that the latter may have no trouble in making out the voter's list. This list will not be a large one as only property owners who are British subjects will be entitled to vote at the first election. Another objection to incorporation before Jan. 1st, 1905, is the fact that the taxes are collectable by the government to the end of the year. A remedy is provided for this in the Municipal Act by which the town receives a rebate for the unexpired term.

Bowser Conquered

His Mother-in-law Arrives In Town and Takes Charge of the Household—She Rules Things With an Iron Hand and Remedies Affairs

[Copyright, 1904, by C. B. Lewis.]

I AM Mr. Bowser's mother-in-law.

I am the only person on earth who can make him turn pale and shiver.

I do not hold a terrible secret over him, but I have a little way about me that calls his bluffs.

I came into the game at an early date, as soon as he became my son-in-law.

I saw that he was good hearted, but inclined to thunder around and be the It, and he hadn't been married four weeks when I took him by the ear and said:

"Sonny, you have married my only daughter. You have promised to love, honor and cherish her."

"And I'll do it," he replied.

"You'll have to, sonny—you'll have to or settle with me. You have got a voice like a bull and a way of making

"I AM YOUR MOTHER-IN-LAW."

everybody sit down for you, but perhaps you'll get over that in time. Just remember that a wife has the same right as a husband. She's no slave, but an equal partner. There will be little family jars as you go along, and you'll do your full share toward making up again. I'll drop in on you now and again to see how things are going, and you will be under my eye more or less no matter how far away I am."

It wasn't three months before I had to take him in hand and dress him down. He ordered me out doors and called me an old virago, but it was for the last time. I could talk five words to his one, and I gave him such a tongue lashing that he went down cellar and hid behind the coal bin for half a day. Now and then, as time went on, he broke out anew, but I always got the best of him, and he finally saw that it was no use.

The other day, after figuring up that it was about time for one of his "spells," I took the train and dropped in on him unexpectedly. It was a good thing I did. He had got his feet wet, and the consequence was a toothache. He had kept Mrs. Bowser awake half the night and had decided not to go to the office next day. She had tried paregoric, peppermint, hot salt, mustard and three or four other remedies, but nothing had seemed to help. He had jawed around about the gas bill, the coal bill and the butcher's bill, and he had figured out that they would be in the poorhouse and all on her account in less than three months. He was trying to poke the cat out from under the lounge and swearing about the new hired girl at the same time when I opened the door and walked in on him.

"Mr. Bowser, I'm here," I said as I began to take the pins out of my hat.

"By thunder!" he gasped as he ceased poking the cat and turned white as the snow in his front yard.

"Don't use profane language in my presence, sir. There will be thunder and lightning around here before the day is out, but it's too early to speak of it."

"You—you didn't write that you were coming," he said.

"No, sir, I didn't. Where's my daughter?"

"Upstairs."

"Well, you sit there till I go up and see her for a few minutes, and don't get after that cat again."

I was down again in ten minutes, and I found Mr. Bowser pacing up and down the room with his hand to his jaw.

"What's the matter with your jaw?" I asked, although Mrs. Bowser had told me all about it.

"Toothache."

"And what are you hanging around the house for and making it disagreeable for everybody? Aren't you big enough to go to the dentist?"

"That's my business!" he snarled at me.

"And it's mine as well. Don't answer me back like that. You seem to forget who I am."

"I never can forget that."

"And don't you try to. I am your mother-in-law. I am head boss of this shanty. So long as you and my daughter live together I shall look out for her side of things. Open that mouth of yours and let me see the tooth."

"I'll take care of my own toothache," he mumbled.

"And so will I. Open your mouth."

He hesitated for a moment and then obeyed, with a groan.

"It's that old tooth right there," I said as I wriggled at it, "and a pretty man you are! It's got a cavity big enough to hold a peanut. Why didn't you go to the dentist last night instead of thrashing around and disturbing the house? A man forty-five years old afraid of an old tooth!"

"Who—who invited you here?" he asked as he sat down and changed hands on the jaw.

"I invited myself. When I get ready to come, I come; when I get ready to go, I go."

"And you—you may stay a whole week."

"Two, three, four of them. I shall remain until you have cuddled down at least. Now, then, you stay right where you are until after luncheon and don't be prowling around the house and trying to be a martyr. You are no martyr, and don't forget it."

"But my tooth aches!" he wailed.

"Then let it ache. When your wife had toothache for two weeks and had finally to have six drawn at once, you were whooping around the house and cracking hickory nuts with your teeth. You called her a booby for crying. No more hot ashes, hot salt, peppermint or paregoric. After luncheon you and I will take a little walk together."

"To the dentist's?"

"To the dentist's, Mr. Bowser."

"Never! I'll die first!"

"You hear me and get ready. You'll go if you have to go in an ambulance."

Mr. Bowser cuddled up on the lounge with only the cat to keep him company, and I went about straightening things out. No doubt his tooth did ache, and he felt bad all over, but I had no pity for him. When a mother-in-law begins to pity her son-in-law she loses all influence over him. Mrs. Bowser would have put something cold on his head and a hot iron at his feet.

When luncheon was served he refused to taste of a single thing, but I didn't press him. An hour later he pretended to be asleep, but I rubbed his bald head in a vigorous way and said:

"Now, then, for the dentist's!"

"Never! I'll die first!" he shouted as he rolled off the lounge.

"You'll either take a walk on your legs, Mr. Bowser, or I'll hire four men to carry you. That tooth has got to come out."

"Never! I'm a desperate man, and I warn you to let me alone!"

The mother-in-law who hopes to conquer must be firm. Mr. Bowser got away from me for a minute, but then he caved in with a groan of despair and got on his overcoat and hat. As he went out of the door he looked around the hall as if he never expected to enter it again, and I knew that Mrs. Bowser had tears in her eyes as she watched us from a front window.

I led the way down the street, and he followed. I expected him to make a bolt for it every minute, but his nerve was gone. We happened to find the dentist disengaged, and the two of us lifted Mr. Bowser into the chair, and that tooth was out in ten seconds. He dropped it into his pocket with a thud as we started for home, and not a word was spoken until we reached there. Then Mrs. Bowser, the cat, Mr. Bowser and myself gathered in the sitting room, and Mr. Bowser suddenly seized me in his arms and went waltzing about as he shouted:

FOR THE SCHOOLGIRL

Some Dainty Modes For Street and Party Wear

The young girl who is still at school has many pretty costumes designed for her.

The blouse costumes, either short or long, are eminently becoming to her, and when these are made of stout material of fancy weave the effect is very jaunty, especially when there is a wide belt fastening with a prettily jeweled buckle.

Collars and wide cuffs of embroidery add much to the simplest costumes, and navy blue and dull red are tones which lend themselves best to trimming with embroideries.

Loose sack coats and plaited skirts are among the smartest tailor mades for the young person, and to be very smart the hat should match. This may either be of the tricorne or the sailor shape trimmed with a twist of velvet and a couple of good quills.

The wide hat of velvet or taffeta is very becoming to a youthful face, and particularly so when it is trimmed with a wreath of velvet shaded flowers.

Beaver hats adorned with coque feathers to match are worn with workmanlike cloth costumes. Some charming models in rough beaver, trimmed with ostrich feathers and faced with white cloth, have been designed to wear with elaborate toilets of cloth or velvet.

The prettiest material for a party dress is crepe de chine, next to white filmy fabrics, and the latter are not always suitable. The illustration shows a very dainty little frock of crepe de chine trimmed with maltese insertions and lace. JUDIC CHOLLET.

COLORS AND TEXTURES.

The Revival of Jet—Flowered and Pompadour Silks.

The large Spanish comb is revived, and it will be much worn in the hair this spring. Jet will be worn in the hair also, but brilliant jet which sparkles like gems. It will be shaped into flowers and wide wings.

There is an entire revival of jet in blouses, boleros and entire costumes.

PALE YELLOW WAIST.

Sometimes silver is introduced, but all black is more fashionable. All black, all white and judicious mixtures of black, white and gray are seen on the leaders of fashion now staying in the Riviera.

The revival of flowered and pompadour designs in silk is apparent even in the linings of garments and furs. Petticoats, too, are made of these dainty fabrics and are trimmed with dyed lace and bands of plain silk of a contrasting shade.

Taffeta in pretty pastel shades is smart for evening gowns, but it must be softened by chiffon or soft lace.

All of the new silks come in soft lustrous weaves to allow of plenty of fullness in the making without any stiff, awkward effect.

Skirts for spring wear will be fuller and wider than those that have been worn during the winter. Plaits of all sorts and sizes will insure a perfect fit over the hips, and many ingenious devices have been conceived to give the necessary flare.

The cut shows a waist of pale yellow crepe de chine, yellow lace and black velvet ribbon. JUDIC CHOLLET.

The C. O. D. Man

He Relates Some Incidents of Life In the County Jail

"IN my wanderings to and fro," said the C. O. D. man as he pocketed the quarter extended to him and bowed his thanks, "it has happened that I have seen the inside of several county jails. In each and every case I was sentenced as a tramp, and the time was for various periods. In some states they have given up trying to grapple with the tramp problem; in others they are alert to lay hands on him and try to cure him with a dose of jail life.

"I took in the county jail as part of the programme," continued the wanderer with a smile, "and I got it all. The first time I was arrested I let things slide. The constable maltreated me, the justice of the peace abused me, and the jailer half starved and put me at the most menial work. The jail was little better than a pigpen and the food hardly fit for hogs.

"When I had served my time and been kicked out, I posted myself as to the law, and my next arrest resulted in a surprise party. I refused to do any work, and the law upheld me. I refused to eat the fare furnished, and the law compelled the jailer to better it. I demanded bedding and heat, and the jailer had to comply. He was glad enough to see the last of me, but I had scarcely tramped into the next county before I was picked up again. This was in Ohio, just over the Michigan line, and, although it was five years ago, I have no doubt they are talking about me yet.

"I was plodding along the highway about sundown, when a farmer jumped over the fence and pitched into me. He had got in three or four blows before I landed him one that knocked him down. Three other men came to his rescue, and I was handcuffed and kept in a barn all night. Next morning I was arraigned before a county justice, and without even asking me to plead and refusing to let me consult a lawyer he sent me up for six months. The charge was vagrancy, resisting arrest and felonious assault on an officer all rolled into one, and a happy combination. Only one of the men who aided in my arrest testified against me.

"I was bundled off to the county jail in a hurry, and upon my arrival was placed in a dark cell and fed on bread and water, and it was two weeks before I had the run of the ward. Then it so transpired that a young lawyer who happened to run for the legislature visited the jail on business and I got speech with him. The result was that he took up my case, and the end astonished several people.

"In the first place, while the man who assaulted me was a constable, he did not seek to arrest me in the regular way, but only after the assault. Under the law, therefore, I had a right to resist. The charge against me was vagrancy, and yet I had $15 in my pocket. I should have been taken before a justice forthwith, but instead I was locked up in a barn until next day. We had that constable so scared within two days that he fairly begged of me to take $100 and call it square.

"We then went for the justice. He had not given me the show allowed by law, and on four different points had rendered himself liable to removal. He came to me with tears in his eyes and $75 in his hand and I let up on him.

"Then it was the jailer's turn to toe the mark. He had no legal right to shut me up in a dark cell. No law gave him the privilege of substituting bread and water for my prison diet. He had been abusive and tyrannical and had kicked me, and that was assault. The law specified what food he should furnish his prisoners, but he had substituted what he pleased. He had tried to make me saw wood and scrub out the corridors and had put me in irons because I refused, and yet I was clearly within the law. I had him up on six different charges, but before the case came to trial I settled with him for $250.

"I had been sent to jail without the option of a fine. I was taken out on a writ of habeas corpus and admitted to bail and was therefore free to appear in court.

"The case did not end when the jailer squared up. Three or four politicians saw that my lawyer was making too much capital out of it, and they set out to down him. The result was that it became a political contest of interest to all in that legislative district, and after a mud slinging campaign and a close vote my lawyer triumphed over all and came out with flying colors. The district was upset politically for the first time in eighteen years, and all because of a tramp.

"My last jail," continued the C. O. D. man, "was in New Jersey and only last June. My arrest came about in a rather singular way—that is, it would be accounted singular outside of New Jersey. I had been walking all the forenoon, and about 12 o'clock I sat down by the roadside to rest and have a cold bite. Pretty soon a farmer came along leading a bull, and just as he reached me the bull broke away, knocked the man down and jumped into a field and gored a calf.

"Although I offered my services to help capture the bull, the farmer insisted that I was to blame and had me arrested. It was claimed that my presence excited the animal to do mischief, and on the ridiculous charge I was sent to jail for fifteen days. I told the jailer at once that I should stand on my legal rights as a prisoner, and though he sulked over it he carried out his part of the contract to the very last day.

"My sentence of fifteen days expired at noon of a certain Wednesday. Jail and prison sentences always expire at that hour, the same as insurance policies. This jailer probably knew the law better than I did, but in order to get even with me he kept me until 8 o'clock in the evening. It was then raining heavily, and I refused to go out. He had me flung into the street and added a kick by way of farewell and probably thought he had seen the last of me.

"Next morning I began a suit against him for false imprisonment and on top of that another for assault and battery, and he had hardly consulted a lawyer before he was on hand with an offer to settle with me for $150. I closed with him at that, and I think the lesson was one to do him good.

"Yes, I've been in jail, and perhaps I shall bring up behind the bars again, but I shall accept it as all in the day's work and stand on my rights.

"Thank you again for the coin. You have delivered the cash, and I have delivered my story. Best and safest principle in the world to work on. C. O. D. saves all bookkeeping, prevents misunderstandings, and there are no long drawn accounts to go over. I'm sure of a bite to eat and a bed for tonight, and if you haven't got the worth of your money I'll bear on a little harder next time." M. QUAD.

Court Etiquette Illustrated.

Ambassador Choate, at a dinner given by an American resident in London, illustrated the intricacies of court etiquette with a little story about King Edward.

"On the day of the birth of the present king," he said, "a certain marquis approached a lady in waiting anxiously.

"'Is it a boy or a girl?' he whispered.

"The lady in waiting, with a reproachful look, whispered back:

"'It's a prince.'"—New York Tribune.

Juvenile Reverence.

Two little children of Rochester were sitting in a room one evening after dark, with their faces pressed to the window and their eyes fixed on the stars. For some time they contemplated the firmament in silence, then suddenly one of the little fellows turned to the other and said, "Wasn't God a nice man to give us stars for a light?" Oh, Teddy, how can you say such a thing!" said the other boy, much shocked. "You shouldn't call God a man. If ever there was a gentleman, he's one."

What Would You Do?

What would you do if a girl you knew should look in your eyes and say,
"It must be awfully hard to propose?"
Do you think you would turn away
And make some remark about the rain, the snow or the price of tea?
Perhaps you would,
And perhaps you should;
But, my, what a chump you'd be!

What would you do if a man you knew should say, "Here's a million cash
To spend as you like?" Would you shake your head or answer: "Now, don't be rash.
You'll need it yourself some day, perhaps.
Pray, don't give it all to me."
Perhaps you would,
And perhaps you should;
But, my, what a chump you'd be!

What would you do if the world you knew should say to you: "Now, my boy,
You weren't put here to growl and complain.
This life was made to enjoy.
So smile when you can and hum a tune!
Then you'll be happy with me."
Would you scowl in reply?
Perhaps you would;
But, my, what a chump you'd be!

DRESS ORNAMENTATION.

Hood and Bertha Effects—Shirred Boleros of Lace.

Where a bertha effect is not desired a hood effect is often simulated by means of flat folds of lace lined with bright silk. Panels of oriental embroidery run perpendicularly on skirts and are finished at the ends with fringed trimmings.

A full shirred bolero effect of lace is often used over a tight fitting bodice belt.

Black chiffon velvet makes a delightful evening gown, for it allows of a full gathered skirt owing to its supple, shining folds, and the waist can be prettily draped and finished off with a deep bertha of fine creamy lace.

Jet is being enthusiastically revived—not the coat of mail jet, but jet embroideries, jet leaves and jet flowers. Jet dog collars encircle the throat and are set off by fastenings of diamonds, and a wreath of jet leaves worn in the hair is excessively smart.

One of the latest novelties is a black chiffon veil with appliques of velvet ivy leaves or in an exquisite French blue shade with a bright Dresden stripe and threads of gold on either side, while quite one of the newest stoles is composed of plain black taffeta, unrelieved by lace or chiffon, the only adornment being rows of frilled ruchings about four inches apart. The inner side is lined with black.

The cut shows a hat of violet silk trimmed with pale violet ostrich tips. JUDIC CHOLLET.

LOUIS XVI. EFFECTS.

Pompadour Silks, Ruched Trimmings and Tiny Flower Trimmings.

Evening gowns are becoming more and more elaborate, and many of them show marked Louis XVI. effects. This is shown in the long pointed girdles, the sleeves with wide ruffles and the wide skirts with their festooned ruching. A very up to date model recently seen in the workshop of a great dressmaker had a shirred and corded waist with a wide pointed girdle and elbow sleeves, plentifully ruched and ruffled. The skirt was gathered in very full all around the waistband, and it was trimmed at the bottom with rows of ruching. The material was a beautiful pompadour silk in a blurred design.

Roses and their buds made of chiffon adorn many a pink chiffon dancing frock, and these pretty trimmings can be bought by the yard and detached. Velvet ribbon threaded through coarse lace is another dainty trimming, and so are medallions of lace appliqued at intervals on flowered ribbon.

Ruchings, however, are far and away the most popular, and they are particularly handsome made of chiffon or brussels net.

Spangled robes are "in" once more, and these are made up with the addition of lace or chiffon.

The long, voluminous hanging sleeves are a feature of every evening gown. They are often accordion plaited and edged with a tiny ruching.

The hair dressed low, with a big black velvet bow, is an evening style greatly in favor among red haired and blond women.

A most becoming white stock is adorned with violets composed of French knots, the neckband fastened with three tiny buttons, revealing a touch of pale blue, while the short stole ends are adorned with chiffon violets.

The picture shows an evening gown of white tulle over white silk, trimmed with a pink sash and tiny pink roses. JUDIC CHOLLET.

Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local applications as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

RAILROAD MAN HAD HIS TRIALS

Engineer Rafferty Found Relief in Dodd's Kidney Pills.

Was Run Down And Laid Up, and the Great Kidney Remedy Made Him Strong and Vigorous Again

Winnipeg, Man., Mar. 28—(Special.)—One of the best known and most popular locomotive engineers running out of Winnipeg on the C.P.R. is Mr. Ben Rafferty, who lives at 175 Maple Street. And Mr. Rafferty gives some days of blockades and strain and worry none can afford to overlook. That advice is "Use Dodd's Kidney Pills." Mr. Rafferty says:

"Years of long runs on the railway had broken down my constitution. My back gave out entirely. Terrible sharp cutting pains would follow one another, till I felt as if I were being sliced away piecemeal.

"I would come in from a run tired to death. My sole desire would be to get rest and sleep, and they were the very things I could not get. Finally I got so bad I had to lay off work.

"After being laid up ten days I started to use Dodd's Kidney Pills. The first night after using them I slept soundly. In three days I threw away the belt I had worn for years, aod now I have not the slightest pain in the back. I sleep soundly and wake up joyous and refreshed, and Dodd's Kidney Pills did it."

A Test of Strength.

Tradition has immortalized one Adargoma of Grand Canary, who could wrestle for two consecutive hours and, having been thrown undermost in a certain contest, got his antagonist between his legs and arms and squeezed him so that his bones began to crack.

The native was subsequently sent as a prisoner to Spain, where he astounded the people by his performances. One day in Seville he was visited by a brawny youth of La Mancha, who was anxious to try a bout with him. "My good friend," said Adargoma, "as we are going to wrestle together it is only reasonable that we should begin by drinking something."

A large bowl of wine having been brought, he took this in one hand and continued to address his challenger: "If with both your arms you can overpower one of mine so as to hinder me from drinking every drop of this wine we will try our strength together; if not, you may return to your home." The struggle took place, and Adargoma by degrees drained the bowl in the coolest manner without spilling a drop of the wine. His one hand was more than a match for the other's two.

Why People Stammer.

Stammering depends on a want of harmony between the action of the muscles (chiefly abdominal) which expel air through the larynx and that of the muscles which guard the orifice by which it escapes with that of those which modulate the sound to the form of speech. Over either of the groups of muscles by itself a stammerer may have as much power as other people, but he cannot harmoniously arrange their conjoint action. Nervousness is a frequent cause of stammering. It is possible that the defect in some instances may result from malformation of the parts about the back of the mouth. The fact that stammering people are able to sing their words better than to speak them has been usually explained on the supposition that in singing the glottis is kept open so that there is less liability to spasmodic action.

A Bit of Good Advice In Time.

An Antoinette Sterling story relates to "The Lost Chord," which she made famous. The song did not appeal to her when the manuscript was sent to her by Sullivan. But Sir Joseph Barnby spent an evening at her house at that time, and in a casual way she remarked: "By the way, Arthur Sullivan has sent me a manuscript of a new song, which he has asked me to sing. You might look at it. Personally, I don't think much of it and am going to return it." Barnby tried it over there and then, and before he had gone half through it he stopped and said: "'Going to return it,' did you say? It is wonderful—an inspiration. Certainly, tell him you will sing it. It is bound to 'make' both you and him." Mme. Sterling always thanked the fates for bringing Barnby to her house that night.—London Chronicle.

The Wickedest Bit of Sea.

Nine out of ten travelers would tell inquirers that the roughest piece of water is that cruel stretch in the English channel, and nine out of ten travelers would say what was not true. As a matter of fact "the wickedest bit of sea" is not in the Dover strait or in yachting, for example, from St. Jean de Luix up to Pauillac or across the Mediterranean "race" from Cadiz to Tangier, nor is it in rounding Cape Horn, where there is what sailors call a "true" sea. The "wickedest sea" is encountered in rounding the Cape of Good Hope for the eastern ports of Cape Colony.

The Mails In Sweden.

In certain parts of Sweden, where the most absolute confidence is reposed in the honesty of the people, a very informal postal system is in vogue. As the mail steamer reaches a landing place a man goes ashore with the letters, which he places in an unlocked box on the pier. Then the passerby who expects a letter opens the box, turns over the letters and selects his own without being questioned by any one.

Panama.

It is supposed by some that Panama derived its name from the native word for butterfly. Explorers of the interior tell of swarms of butterflies which at times rise on the slopes of the mountains in dense clouds, darkening the sunshine. Others maintain that the name is from an Indian word meaning abounding in fish.

THE FEDERAL LIFE ASSURANCE COMPANY OF CANADA.

TWENTY-SECOND ANNUAL STATEMENT.

The twenty-second annual meeting of the shareholders of the Federal Life Assurance Company of Canada was held at the head office of the company in Hamilton on Tuesday, March 1, 1904. The President, Mr. David Dexter, in the chair. The following reports and financial statement were submitted.

DIRECTORS' REPORT.

Your directors have the honor to present the report and financial statement of the company for the year, which closed on the 31st December, 1903 and duly vouched for by the auditors.

The new business of the year consisted of one thousand nine hundred and fifty-seven applications for insurance, aggregating $2,841,250, of which nineteen hundred and sixteen applications for $2,748,172.50 were accepted.

As in previous years, the income of the company shows a gratifying increase, and the assets of the company have been increased by $251,572.89, and have now reached $1,893,960.70, exclusive of guarantee capital.

The security for policy holders, including guarantee capital, amounted at the close of the year to $2,763,960.70, and the liabilities for reserves and all outstanding claims, $1,711,200, showing a surplus of $1,052,760.70. Exclusive of uncalled guarantee capital, the surplus to policy holders was $182,760.70.

Policies on seventy lives became claims through death, to the amount of $130,234.62, of which $2,000 was reinsured in other companies.

Including cash dividends and dividends applied to the reduction of premiums, $41,770.87, with annuities, the total payments to policy holders amounted to $204,018.49.

Careful attention has been given to the investment of the company's funds, in first-class bonds, mortgage securities, and loans on the oompany's policies, amply secured by reserves. Our investmenes have yielded a very satisfactory rate of interest.

Expenses have been confined to a reasonable limit, consistent with due efforts for new business.

The results of the year indicate a most gratifying progress. Compared with the preceding year, the figures submitted by the directors for your approval show an advance of fifteen per cent. in assets.

The assurances carried by the company now amount to $14,945,249.56, upon which the company holds reserves to the full amount required by law, and, in addition thereto, a considerable surplus.

The field officers and agents of the company are intelligent and loyal, and are entitled to much credit for their able representation of the company's interests. The members of the office staff have also proved faithful in the company's services.

Your directors regret to report the death of Mr. T. H. Macpherson, the Second Vice-President of the company, and a valued member of the Executive Committee. The vacancy thus caused was filled by the election of the Rev. Dr. Potts.

DAVID DEXTER, President and Managing Director.

AUDITORS' REPORT.

To the President and Directors of the Federal Life Assurance Company

Gentlemen,—We have carefully audited the books and records of your company for the year ending 31st December last, and have certified to their accuracy.

The cash and journal vouchers have been closely examined, and agree with the entries recorded.

The debentures, bonds, etc., in the possession of the company have been inspected, whilst those deposited with the Government or banks have been verified by certificate, the total agreeing with the amount as shown in the statement of assets.

The accompanying statements, viz., revenue and assets and liabilities, show the result of the year's operations, and, also, the financial position of the company.

Respectfully submitted,

H. S. STEPHENS, CHARLES STIFF, Auditors.

NOW MAKING BRICK.

PRESENT CAPACITY WILL BE RAPIDLY INCREASED

Messrs. Wriglesworth and Bullock have quietly started on an entirely new Proposition.—Its Success is Guaranteed

Another brick manufacturing proposition is being worked up in Fernie and its success is more certain than any other similar scheme that has been mooted in Fernie. The promoters are E. L. Wriglesworth, well known as an experienced brick layer and mason, and James Bullock, an elderly man who has spent his entire life in the employment of manufacturing bricks. These men are confident that they have a good thing and it is their intention to work it up into a big industry.

Their clay-bed is situated in the hill side southeast of the Fernie Manufacturing Company's plant, which they have secured by lease from the Coal Company. They have started the manufacture of bricks by hand until such time as they can get a machine on the ground. They mould from three to five thousand per day and already have twenty-five thousand ready for the kiln, which will be burnt when it reaches ninety thousand. A Martin machine has been ordered with a capacity of ten thousand per day and when the industry is well established this will be replaced by a much larger machine.

The bricks manufactured from this clay are hard and will stand the severest tests of weather conditions. They are of a light red color and in every respect will meet the wants of those who contemplate erecting brick buildings in this town. Mr. Wriglesworth states that he will be able to sell bricks delivered at twelve dollars per thousand.

A NEW HALL.

Mr. Fred Stork has let the contract for the erection of a modern concert and dance hall on his 60 ft. corner lot opposite the Central Hotel. The cottage formerly on this lot is being moved to a site near the hospital. The new hall will be 35x88, a one storey building with a high ceiling. It will be heated, lighted and ventilated by modern methods. The stage will be 18x35 with wings off the main building for dressing rooms. The stage fittings will be of an up-to-date character. The cost of the building complete will be $4,000. Part of the lumber is already on the ground and the building will be ready for its first engagement on the night of July 1.

COACH DERAILED.

An accident occurred on the mine line where the high line switch is located, at one o'clock on Saturday morning. On the trip down some cars of slack were switched on to the high line. The momentum was not great enough to send the cars far enough and the engine was put on to push them up. The brakes which are usually partly set at this time had been loosened to give the cars every advantage and the precaution was not taken to reset the brakes when the engine was put on. The result was that the brakesman was unable to hold the cars on the grade and they came back with considerable force and in the darkness struck the engine a heavy knock. The momentum sent the engine onto the mainline and against the passenger coach, upsetting the latter into the ditch. The car was full of miners, all of whom got a good shaking up, but none were seriously hurt. The wrecking crew from Cranbrook had the car on the track in the afternoon.

TO GET A FEDERAL BUILDING

In answer to representations to W. A. Galliher, M. P. to secure a government post office building in this town, the Liberal association this week received a wire from our member intimating that a grant of $15,000 in the supplemental list might be made for this purpose. The association met on Tuesday and acted promptly on Mr. Galliher's suggestion by urging strongly that at least this amount be granted this year. The selection of a site, which at the present time is a matter in dispute between the north and south ends, was not touched on.

TWO LACROSSE GAMES

HOW VICTORIA DAY WAS SPENT BY FERNIEITES.

Junior Lacrosse Team Tied With Cranbrook.—Lethbridge Loses First League Game.

May 24th passed off quietly in Fernie. The day was generally observed as a holiday though many carpenters, teamsters, and other busy people plied their regular work.

A considerable number of Fernieites spent the day picnicing at the canyons of the Elk at Elko. The regular west bound train was several hours late, but a special arranged to go to Cowley from the east to carry visitors to the celebration at that place was cancelled on account of a heavy fall of snow at that place and it was run to Cranbrook instead. It arrived at Fernie at the convenient hour of 8 a m. A large number of Fernie people went to Cranbrook to take in the lacrosse games and the three coaches were filled to overflowing with a happy crowd bent on having a day of good sport.

The first league game of lacrosse between Lethbridge and Cranbrook was the centre of attraction. The two teams lined up at 3 p.m. before referee, J. Miller, of Fernie. The Lethbridge team consisted of last year's players with the exception of Stafford who is not in the game this year. The Cranbrook team is made up of four old players and the remainder of new players imported from the east. They are a strong, well built aggregation of men, considerably heavier than their opponents. The game from the start was a slugging match, blood flowed freely from cuts and bruises and the grounds resembled more a battle ground than a sporting field. The Fernie visitors were in a position to view the scene from an impartial standpoint, and though their sympathies may have naturally leaned slightly towards Cranbrook's interests at the start, this feeling was quickly annihilated by the unfair manner in which the home team treated their visitors. The initiative in the slugging work was taken by Cranbrook in many instances and most of the rough play indulged in by Lethbridge was done in self defense.

In fairness to the former it may be stated that the foul tactics were limited to four or five of their players. The game was prolonged until 6 p.m. owing to various interruptions which even required the assistance of the local police to settle. The game resulted in a final victory for the Cranbrook team of 2 to 1.

THE JUNIOR GAME.

Owing to the lateness of the evening only two quarters of 20 minutes each wus played by the Junior Lacrosse teams of Fernie and Cranbrook. Each team played two senior men and the sides were evenly matched in weight and ability. R. Schram, of Fernie, refereed the game. The game, unlike that of the seniors, was marked by absence of rough play and only one player was put off The Fernie line up was; Goal, S. Todhunter; point, O. Shoemaker; cover point, G. Gordon; 1st defense, A. Dunlap; 2nd defense, P. McLeod; 3rd defense, B. Smith; centre, J. Sheppard; 3rd home, L. Rhodes; 2nd home, B. Todhunter; 1st home F. Kirkpatrick; outside home, R. Dunlap; inside home, B. Whimster. Fernie scored once in the first half and Cranbrook evened the score four minutes before the final whistle blew and the game was declared a draw.

THE BALL.

The Fernie orchestra went to Cranbrook with the excursionists to supply the music at the big ball given on the evening of the day in aid of the hospital. The ovent was very successful a very pleasant evening being spent by all.

PICNIC AT COAL CREEK.

The afternoon train for Coal Creek was crowded with Fernie people who took in the picnic at that place. The program of sports, mostly for children, was extensive and interesting. The tug of war in which teams of English, Scotch and Welsh contended was finally won by the Welsh, the Englishman taking second place. The men's footrace was won by T. C. Colwell.

At seven o'clock on the evening of the 24th two local teams of foot-ball players picked respectively from those who claimed England and Scotland as their birthplace, lined up on the recreation ground to do battle in this popular British game. The two sides were very evenly matched and the contest was a good one. The lads from the north however had the slight advantage and they defeated the English team by a score of 3 goals to 1. G. Wilde refereed the game.

NELSON ASSIZE COURT

AHO GETS 5 YEARS. GILLIER AND WILCOX GET OFF.

Jaffray Murder Regarded as an Accident. The East Kootenay Quota at the Assizes Before Mr. Justice Martin.

The spring court of Assizes was held at Nelson last week before Mr. Justice Martin. Three of the criminal cases were from East Kootenay. Edward Aho an Hungarian was found guilty of killing a countryman at Michel in a drunken row and was given five years in the provincial jail. "Dr." Louis Gillier the Jaffray hotel proprietor who shot and killed Jack McGee by two discharges from a double barrel shot gun was discharged, a free man, his plea being that the gun went off accidentally. R. Wilcox also got off on the charge of incest and indecent assault. Mr. McAnn, of Kaslo, was crown prosecutor, S. Herchmer defended Aho and S. S. Taylor represented the accused in the other two cases.

The Michel manslaughter case was the first to come up. An expert interpreter was secured from Calgary who performed the very important function of interpreting the Hungarian language in a satisfactory manner. The evidence of the witnesses who heard the words of the accused as he re-entered the room, was regarded as important. Interpreted into English it meant 'it is ready because I saw him fall to the groun." Beyond this and the fact that the accused and the deceased had fought before in the room there was little evidence of a convicting nature. The jury found him guilty and added a strong plea for mercy. On Saturday the sentence of five years' imprisonment was inflicted. Aho when asked if he had anything to say why he should not be sentenced said. "I do not know, my lord, if it will help me any, but I am perfectly innocent of Johnson's death. I ran out of the house at Michel and Johnson followed me. I saw him fall to the ground and I came back to the house smiling, and said: 'It is ready, for I saw him fall to the ground.' Phorni said to a man at the house that he had hit Johnson on the head with a bottle, but I have no knowledge to this day how Johnson came to his death."

THE WILCOX CASE.

R. Wilcox, electrical engineer of Fernie, charged with incest and indecent assault upon Victoria Wilcox his nine year old daughter, was next taken up. The little girl was one of the most important witnesses and she was examined at great length. Mrs. Wilcox and Dr. Higgins were also witnesses for the prosecution. The former was very closely cross-examined by Mr. Taylor and information was adduced which materially strengthened the case for the defendent. The daughter it was showed, was adopted by the woman in England, unknown to her husband, and the charge was therefore limited to indecent assault. His Lordship in charging the jury stated that if the jury believed some of the evidence against the adopted mother of the child they must find her to be a degenerate of a most repulsive type, a fiend of a rare sort quite capable of putting up the little girl to toll the story against the alleged father. The jury found the accused not guilty and he was dismissed.

THE JAFFRAY MURDER.

The crown had a strong array of evidence in this case. The comrades of the murdered man, W. A. McDonald, Wm. Reid and Alex McDonald all told their story of how the shooting occurred, and in their evidence they did not differ from that given at the preliminary hearing. The evidence of Angus McDonald since deceased, was also put in. Other crown witnesses were provincial constables S. H. Hoskins, A. P. Walker. C. A. Dow, Chief Constable McMullin, and Dr. Higgins. The story for the crown was briefly as follows; The three McDonalds, Angus, Alex and William, Reid, John Magee, the man who was killed, and one other, a party of lumbermen who had been paid off on January 16th, had come to Jaffray Hotel owned by the accused and his wife, on that day during the afternoon. There had been some drinking by some of the men before supper and more afterwards. That some of the furniture had been knocked about and a couple of the doors stove in; that about 11 o'clock the deceased had got into an altercation with the wife of the accused at the foot of the stairs in the front hall and that just as W. A. McDonald had gone up to take him away, the prisoner appeared in the door of the dining room and shot at Magee twice with a shotgun killing him instantly. The medical testimony showing that one shot had made a large hole in the man's side while the other had resulted in the shot scattering over the body from the shoulder down. The prisoner and his wife were the chief witnesses for the defence. Gillier swore that he slipped and fell over a valise used by Magee to block the door way and that the gun went off accidentally. This happened in the [illegible]ing room. Magee walked to the [illegible]e stairs where he fell dow[illegible] The wife of the accused ma[illegible] same story that her hus[illegible] and she fainted away wh[illegible]ned. METHODIST CONFERENCE.

The Methodist conference which met last week at New Westminster made the following appointments for East Kootenay district.

Cranbrook, Samuel J. Thompson.

Moyie, Louis Thomas, under superintendent of Cranbrook.

Kimberley, R. E. Collis, under superintendent of Cranbrook.

Fernie, John Robson, B. A.

Morrissey, one to be sent.

Michel, David W. Scott.

Coal Creek, (H. W.) under superintendent of Fernie.

Elko, to be supplied.

Creston, to be supplied, under superintendent of Cranbrook.

Frederick Brown on list of reserve.

To attend college—R. E. S. Taylor, Thos. C. Colwell, A. E. Marshall.

Rev. G. E. Smith, of Morrissey, goes to Cowichan and Rev. R. F. Stillman takes charge of the Chilliwack field.

EXPLOSION SUITS ON MONDAY.

The date fixed for the hearing of the five test cases in the explosion suits was postponed from the 25th to the 30th inst. In making this decision Mr. Justice Martin said:

"Since the arrangement made at the opening of the assizes that the five test damage cases against the C. N. P. Coal Company should be heard commencing on Wednesday next, I have been considering the matter which was a new one to me, and I have come to the conclusion that all the other cases on the list must first be disposed of before these damage actions are commenced. The accident upon which these damage actions are based took place two years ago and I do not wish to tolerate any further delay. The poor people involved should learn at once if they are entitled to recover or not. An order has been made striking out the jury in all these cases, which are the heaviest damage actions ever brought in this province and which develops upon myself the burden of trying these cases. There are five test cases that are all to be tried together representing many other actions of a similar nature which will stand or fall along with these actions. I specially desire to have my mind free to deal with all the facts and I cannot do this if I have to near and determine other cases afterwards. I do not intend to leave this city without deciding these cases and they will not be tried till all other cases are disposed of for the reasons I have given."

Both sides have their cases well in hand and the fullest investigation will follow. In additon to the two experts, Professors Beard and Galloway, mentioned in our last issue another English expert, Mr. James Ashworth, has arrived on the scene to give expert evidence in the cases. Mr. Ashworth is one of the inventors of the celebrated Ashworth-Hepplewort-Gray safety lamp and he is recognized as one of the cleverest experts on explosions that can be found.

A TENNIS CLUB.

A meeting of the ladies of Fernie for the purpose of forming a tennis club was held at Edgecliffe on Monday, but owing to the rain a great number were unavoidably absent. Mrs. Bonnell was elected secretary and Mrs. Ross, treasurer. It was suggested by Mrs. Corsan and agreed to by those present to ask a membership fee of $1.00, half to be paid upon entrance and the remainder later on if required, the funds to be used in providing a net and balls to keep the court in good condition. It was agreed that tennis should be played by club members three afternoons and evenings each week, Monday, Wednesday, and Saturday. The advisability of two ladies serving tea on the tennis court Saturday afternoons from June 18th to Oct. 29th, inclusive, was considered with favor. A meeting will be held at Edgecliff tomorrow (Saturday) at 8 p.m. to make final arrangements.

MORRISSEY TO OPEN.

OPERATIONS WILL BE IN FULL BLAST ON MONDAY.

Great Northern Will Take All Its Output. The Cut off will Facilitate Shipments to Eastern Points.—A Bright Season Ahead.

Word is given out authoratively that the coal mines at Morrissey will commence operations on Monday. In fact steps are already being taken to open up the mines but the supply of cars required will not be on hand before Monday, and many of the miners have also drifted to other points and others will have to be obtained.

The output of coal and coke will be taken out by the Great Northern as formerly, and this demand will be materially increased when the Columbia Falls cut off, now nearing completion, is in operation. This cuts off 93 miles to eastern points and also does away with the 2000 foot climb over the Hoskell Pass.

The cause of the tie-up at that place now appears to be chiefly due to the fact that the G. N. R. was overstocked with fuel from contracts entered into previously with American companies. This condition was aggravated by the falling off of trade in the winter months. These contracts are running out, the traffic is rapidly increasing, and the demand for Morrissey coal, which is admittedly superior to its American competitors, will steadily increase from this time on.

UHLMAN GOT OFF.

Judge Forin was in town over Wednesday night to hold a speedy court trial on the Uhlman case, charged with embezzling money. L. P. Eckstein appeared for the accused and S. Herchmer for the crown. His Honor agreed that it was not necessary to prove the theft of the total amount but that a single item might be taken as a test. The crown selected that of B. Underwood who purchased for cash a suit of clothes for $10 which amount was not entered in the cash book. His evidence did not exactly agree with that given at the preliminary hearing and the witness got more mixed as he proceeded. Other witnesses were called, among them Constable Sampson, but the latter's evidence was thrown out as he failed to warn the accused that what he admitted would be used against him. The judge decided that the case had not been proven and he dismissed it. Mr. Herchmer attempted to bring in the charge of stealing goods but His Honor ruled that this would first have to come up before a magistrate. Accordingly another warrant was got out for Uhlman's arrest on that charge.

MITCHELL WON AT CALGARY.

That Fernie can boast of one of the fastest sprinters in Western Canada was clearly demonstrated at Calgary on the 24th, when F. J. Mitchel won both the 100 yard and 220 yard open races against all comers. In both of these events he lowered Harry Nevin's flag, which since the eventful race at Cranbrook has been flying under false colors. In the 100 yard event were eight competitors and the race was run in three heats, two of which were won by Mitchell, and one by Nevin. Mitchell had an easier victory in the 220 yard race in which five entered. At half distance he led the others by nearly 20 yards and he won easily. Nevin took third place in this race. Handsome silver cups were awarded Mr. Mitchell for these races.

The program of sports at Calgary, gotten up under the auspices of the firemen of that town, was an interesting one, but the weather was cold and wet. Red Deer defeated Calgary at base-ball.

SUICIDE AT CRANBROOK.

Joseph Laidlaw, a railroad contractor, committed suicide in the Cranbrook hospital on the 25th by cutting his throat. Deceased had been drinking and was taken to the hospital the preceding evening. Apparently under its influence he got hold of a knife and committed the rash act. Joseph Laidlaw was one of the old timers around Cranbrook. During the past few years he has been most of the time at North Star mine.

SUNKEN TREASURE

WRECKED SPANISH GALLEONS DISCOVERED

Sunk in Vigo Bay in 1702—Many Have Tried to Reach It—Over $37,000,000 in Gold and Silver.

It is reported from Madrid that the English company which, under a concession from the Government of Spain, is endeavoring to raise the sunken treasure of the Spanish galleons that went down in Vigo Bay in October, 1702, has succeeded in raising the galleon Santa Cruz, and that on board the wreck there was found silver ingots valued at from 1,500,000 to 2,000,000 petas, that is to say, from $300,000 to $400,000.

Whether later details will verify these estimates of the value of the treasure recovered remains to be seen, says a correspondent. Specimens of silver taken from these submerged galleons at about the time of the outbreak of the Franco-Prussian war in 1870 were subjected to chemical analysis. It was found that some of the metal supposed to be gold was in reality copper and bronze, and that the silver specimens had deterioriated so much by oxidization that there was a very considerable percentage of loss.

It is now seventy-nine years since the first serious attempt to get at this submarine wealth was made, and from time to time other efforts were made, all of which proved to be abortive. The only fact established by them was that at the bottom of the inner harbor of Vigo there were the wrecks of eleven ancient ships, and that on one of them, at least, there was a quantity of silver in the form of ingots.

When all the conflicting stories of the battle of Vigo Bay, fought on the 23rd and 24th of October, 1702, are sifted there seems to be a general agreement that out of the twenty-three treasure-laden galleons which were in the inner bay at the time of the combined English and Dutch attack, fourteen went to the bottom, either burned by the Spanish themselves or sunk in the process of getting them out to sea after their capture.

The submerged treasure ships lay at a depth of from 33 to 50 feet, and for years there was talk of getting at them, and the Spanish Government granted to foreigners a number of concessions for that purpose.

It was not until 1835, however, that the task was undertaken in anything like a businesslike way. In that year an Englishman named Dickson got a concession and made persistent efforts to get at the ships with a diving bell. He spent a good deal of money and a good deal of time, the total result of which was a convincing demonstration of the fact that, whatever other appliances might do, the sunken treasure could never be brought to the surface by means of a diving bell. When he had satisfied himself of this, Dickson gave up the job and went back to England.

No further attempt was made until 1859. In that year an English engineer set about the task of finding the lost galleons by a series of systematic and thorough soundings. He found at first two wrecks which divers examined and reported to be without doubt galleons such as the Spanish used to convey treasure in from the Antilles.

Later on further soundings revealed nine more wrecks, and the eleven were marked with buoys. At this point the English engineer's money gave out; he was unsuccessful in interesting capitalists in the enterprise, and so he, too, had to give it up.

But this effort had had distinct results. It had established the fact beyond question that the galleons were there and were holding together sufficiently in all human probability to protect whatever treasure there might be on board of them. Since the finding of the eleven wrecks, fifty-five years ago, no new ones have been discovered.

Ten years later, in 1869, John E. Goman, an American, took hold of the matter, but also failed, and so once more the galleons were left to rest in peace in their watery graves. Then came the formation of the English company recently, and, after spasmodic efforts, covering a period of nearly eighty years, apparently some of the much sought treasure has at last been brought to the surface.

The story of the loss of these galleons is one of the most exciting of that era of sea adventures. For four years the Spanish government had not ventured to trust its American treasures on the high seas, and upon its American treasures Spain was depending almost entirely for its existence. At last it came to such a pass that the treasure had to be transported in some way.

Spain and France were allies, and opposed to them were England and Holland. French and Spanish war fleets went to escort the twenty-three treasure-laden galleons to Cadiz. The Anglo-Dutch fleet hovered about the Spanish coast to cut them off.

Instead of to Cadiz, the galleons went to Vigo, where they arrived on Sept. 21, 1702. There are two harbors at Vigo, an outer and an inner one. The inner harbor is reached from the outer one by a comparatively narrow channel. The galleons were in the inner harbor. Across the narrow channel between two points a boom barricade made of chains and trunks of trees was stretched. On the two points there were weak forts. For a month the treasure-laden galleons lay in safety, while the Spanish authorities of Cadiz wrangled with the authorities of Vigo as to landing the treasure. Cadiz claimed the right to handle royal treasures from America, and the Madrid Government ordered the landing of the gold and silver stopped.

Finally, on October 23, the combined English and Dutch fleets sailed into the harbor, landed 4,000 men and captured the forts; broke through the boom barricade and captured nine galleons. The rest of the treasure fleet the Spanish burned, after hustling to shore a small part of the treasure, most of which was stolen in the confusion. One of the English prize galleons went on the rocks and sunk while she was being taken out of the bay.

The amount of treasure that was on board the twenty-three galleons is estimated at $50,000,000. Of this about $6,000,000 was landed, while the Dutch and English got away with about $7,000,000 more, leaving somewhere in the neighborhood of $37,000,000 in gold and silver that went to the bottom of Vigo Bay.

When Kisses Were Frequent.

It has long been known to ethnologists that among many primitive tribes and races the practice of kissing was unknown. Among the Lapps and the Maoris rubbing of noses occupied its place. The average native of Japan still knows nothing of the practice of kissing.

The practice of lip to lip salutation was especially characteristic of English social life in Tudor times. Its universal employment was one of the things noticed by Erasmus during his sojourn in England and is thus commented on in one of his "Epistolae:" "Here are girls with angels' faces, so kind and obliging that you would prefer them to all your muses. Besides, there is a custom here never to be sufficiently commended. Whenever you come you are received with a kiss by all; when you take your leave, you are dismissed with kisses; you return, kisses are repeated. They come to visit you, kisses again; they leave you, you kiss them all round. Should they meet you anywhere, kisses in abundance. In fine, wherever you move, there is nothing but kisses."

No Time For Fools.

When George Westinghouse, as a young inventor, was trying to interest capitalists in his automatic brake, the device which now plays so important a part in the operation of railroad trains, he wrote a letter to Commodore Cornelius Vanderbilt, president of the New York Central Railroad company, carefully explaining the details of the invention. Very promptly his letter came back to him, indorsed in big, scrawling letters, in the hand of Commodore Vanderbilt, "I have no time to waste on fools."

Afterward, when the Pennsylvania railroad had taken up the automatic brake and it was proving successful, Commodore Vanderbilt sent young Mr. Westinghouse a request to call on him. The inventor returned the letter, indorsed on the bottom as follows: "I have no time to waste on fools."—Success.

Whimsical Criminals.

In the New Zealand Medical Journal appears this story: On walking to the scaffold in solemn procession a criminal once called to the governor of the prison, "Just oblige me, guv'nor, by telling me the day o' the week." "Monday," answered the surprised governor. "Monday!" answered the prisoner in disgusted tones. "Well, this 'ere's a fine way of beginning a week, ain't it?" And he marched on with dissatisfaction imprinted on every line of his face.

On another occasion an officious hangman whispered as he placed the white cap on his victim's head, "If there's anything you'd like to ask me I'll be pleased to answer." The victim craned his neck forward and said in an equally low but very much more anxious voice, "You might tell me, is—is this scaffold safe?"

The Beautiful Isle of Zante.

Zante, the earthquake shaken, the "nemorosa Zacynthus" of Virgil, has been at all times famous as one of the loveliest of islands. It divides with Corfu the distinction of being the richest and most beautiful of the Ionian group, and while the evergreen forest on its eastern shore is the admiration of every traveler the fertility of its vine growing plains has made the little island famous among the markets of the world. The vine is that dwarf variety which grows the currant of commerce. The growing of this vine is the chief industry of the island, but there are also olives in great numbers.—London Times.

Rode to a Sure Death.

Jacques de Chastel, bishop of Soissons, had accompanied Louis IX. (St. Louis) on the African crusade and, finding that nothing had been accomplished and that the army was about to return in disgrace to France, refused to go, took leave of his friends partook of the sacrament, mounted his horse fully equipped for battle and, in sight of the whole army, charged alone into the Saracen camp, where he was at once cut to pieces.

A Discord.

He—Ha! Absurd things those "Battledore Ballads." Eh! What? She—I'm sorry you think so—my sister wrote them! He—Er—of course, I don't mean the words—they re rippin'. I mean the music—poor stuff—spoils words—composer ought to be kicked—who wrote it? She—I did! (Awkward silence.)—Punch.

Sister's Queer Actions.

Little Johnny—I guess sister doesn't care much for that young man that's after her now. Mother—I should hope not. Little Johnny—Of course she doesn't, 'cause she burns every one of his letters just as soon as she reads 'em.

JAPANESE FLEET

Open a Hot Bombardment on the Defences at Kai Chau, and Silenced Them.

The London Daily Telegraph's correspondent, cabling under date of May 17, says:—"The Japanese with a large fleet of transports and warships, appeared at Kai Chau yesterday morning, and opened a terrible bombardment against the shore defences, which was by four o'clock in the afternoon, the Russians retreating to Tashichao.

"The Japanese troops landed and are to-day advancing rapidly, outflanking Tashichao and New Chwang.

Lloyd's agent at New Chwang has telegraphed under Tuesdays date as follows:—"The Japanese division which landed at Kai Chau, May 16, under heavy fire of the Japanese men-of-war, is marching towards New Chwang. Evacuation by the Russians has been nearly completed. The Japanese are expected to arrive shortly. All is quiet in New Chwang and shipping shows favorable progress."

BURIED 1,900 RUSSIANS

As a result of the battle of the Yalu, the Japanese have buried over 1,900 Russians and the work of interring the dead is still unfinished. Meanwhile ill and wounded prisoners continue to pour into the Japanese camp, where these men who surrender are given every possible succor.

PORT ARTHUR SURROUNDED

Port Arthur is invested by land and sea. Communications of every kind with the fortress have been cut off and the Japanese are scattered all over the peninsula.

A rumor persists that the Russian torpedo boats managed to get out of Port Arthur. The Japanese have been attacking Port Arthur since Monday.

WELCOME COMING FIGHT

From Liao Yang comes a telegram stating that the Russian troops are in splendid condition and are elated at the prospects of the coming fight, which will furnish an opportunity of avenging the Yalu defeat. Reinforcements are constantly arriving. During the day the troops are kept busy digging trenches and throwing up additional lines of earth-works. Duty demands the commander to make a determined stand there and bitter will be the disappointment should the rumored order of retirement be given.

JAPANESE LOSSES

An official report from the second Japanese army shows that the railroad north of Port Arthur has been cut in five places. Between May 5 and May the 17 the Japanese losses have been 146 men.

Patent Medicine Testimonials.

A well-dressed middle-aged man was arrested at Toronto on Wednesday and ordered out of the city. His plan was to pick up girls on the street, and get them to go to a photographer's, where they would have their pictures taken. If they consented to sign a testimonial prepared by the man, they were allowed in return $1 and a dozen photographs. There was a provision to each testimonial permitting the company, whose drugs were supposed to have been taken, to use the photograph and statement for all time without restriction. He got several testimonials in Toronto.

ROUND THE SHAFT

An Oiler in C. P. R. Elevator at Fort William Seriously Injured.

A despatch from Fort William says: Wednesday morning, about 2 o'clock, Henry Heywood, one of the night staff working in elevator D, met with a painful and serious accident.

While oiling a pulley on the third floor of the elevator he was accidentally caught in the arm of the friction pulley and carried around the shaft, producing several large lacerated wounds varying from four to six inches long on the right leg and thigh; also several smaller wounds on the left leg, arm, face and sides. It appears he fell on the drive rope, and it is a miracle he was not killed outright. He was alone at the time and the pulley was set in motion from below by one of the workmen, who did not know he was oiling at the time. He was taken to the McKellar hospital, where chloroform was administered, and the wounds were dressed, it taking in all about seventy-five stitches to sew up the lacerated flesh. He is doing as well as can be expected under the circumstances, as he is also weak from the shock and loss of blood. Heywood was formerly employed in elevator B, but since the fire was on the night gang in D.

KUROKI'S ADVADCE

Destroy Bridges, Telegraphs and Field Railways—Reserves Ready to Sail.

A cable from Chefoo says: The land reconnaissance by the Japanese near Vladivostock was ineffectual. Four thousand Cossacks, in scattered squadrons are harassing the rear of Gen. Kuroki's army as it advances. The Cossacks broke the field railway near Wiju, and destroyed bridges and telegraphs.

Eighty Japanese at Anju repulsed 300 Cossacks, who retreated, leaving sixty fallen. The Cossacks who escaped are being pursued and cut off. Japanese engineers have hurried from Seoul to repair the broken communication.

KUROPATKIN'S RETREAT CUT OFF.

A telegram from Tokio states that two Japanese divisions have arrived close to Mukden, cutting off Gen. Kuropatkin's line of retreat northward.

SECOND ARMY RESERVES SAIL.

Eighty-seven steam transports are leaving Hiroshima for Liao Tung peninsula, carrying the reserves of the second army.

The third army mobilized at Hiroshima and awaits the "bottling up" of the Russian squadron at Vladivostock.

NOT CORROBORATED.

Russian refugees who have arrived at Chefoo on a junk from Port Dalny, say that the Japanese bombarded Port Arthur on the 16th. Russian officers who were on the Golden Hill, declared, according to the refugees, that during the bombardment a Japanese battleship and a cruiser struck mines and sank. The warships reported to have been sunk off Port Arthur are the battleship Shikishima and the armored cruiser Asama. The story is not believed in Chefoo, but the Russians who brought the news insist that it is true.

His Image.

Marked with the indisputable evidence of an encounter with John Barleycorn and a hard fist, he ambled into a drug store for relief. His eyes were half closed; there was a wandering, bleeding laceration across his forehead; his nose was tilted to one side, and a gash in one cheek completed the damage.

The druggist cheerfully replied that he would fix up the caller.

"Wait a minute," said the apothecary as he reached for the gauze, the lint and the antiseptic. The badly marred customer disconsolately sauntered about the shop, but suddenly stopped in front of one of those convex mirrors that do such queer tricks of distortion with their reflected images.

Our friend caught a glimpse of himself out of those disturbed optics. With a yell of terror he tore himself loose from the scene and bolted for the door, scaring the druggist half to death.

"Come back here!" shouted the drug clerk.

"Not much!" almost shrieked the fleeing man. "I just saw myself in your looking glass, and if I don't get to a doctor I'm ruined for life."

And he did not stop for explanations.

"A Bee In Your Bonnet."

Kelly in his "Scotch Proverbs" gives the phrase, "A bee in your bonnet," with a slight addition, "There is a bee in your bonnet case." The earliest reference to it seems to be in Robert Herrick's "Mad Maid's Song:"

Ah! woe is mee! woe, woe is mee,
Alack and well-a-day!
For pity, Sir, find out that Bee
Which bore my love away.
I'le seek him in your bonnet brave,
I'le seek him in your eyes;
Nay, now I think th'ave made his grave
I' the bed of strawberries.

In "Heywood's Duologue," 1546, we find, "Their partes full heavy, their heads be full of bees." The same symbol of confusion occurs in "Ralph Royster Doyster," 1560:

Whoso hath such bees as your master in his head
Hath need to have his spirits with musyke to be fed.

And in "Damon and Pithias," 1571, "But, Wyll, my master hath bees in his head."

Sinister.

"A man feels like a fool when he is proposing to a girl," said the confiding youth.

"Yes," answered Miss Cayenne, "and some of the unlucky ones feel that way many years after she has accepted him."—Washington Star.

RETREAT CONTINUES

Russian Forces Falling Back at All Points—Japanese Crowding Them.

It is reported at Seoul that a Japanese force has cornered 200 Russians north of Anju, and is endeavoring to starve them out. The only provisions in the possession of the Russians are those secured by forage, and it is reported that the food of the besieged men will soon be exhausted.

BACK, BACK, BACK!

A cable from St. Petersburg says: The Journal says it is reported that General Kuropatkin will abandon Liao Yang and retire upon Harbin with 120,000 men, and await there the arrival of 50,000 men on their way from Khadkoff, Southern Russia, and 50,000 which are about to be dispatched from the Moscow district.

A cable from London says: In the absence of actual news from the seat of war in the far east, the London newspapers this morning are commenting on what is believed to be the precarous position of Gen. Kuropatkin, who is menaced by the possibility of the Chinese cutting his communications as well as the difficulty of defining the Japanese plan of campaign.

The Standard which is rather inclined to be pro-Russian in its views admits that Kuropatkin has at his disposal south of Mukden almost 100,000 troops of inferior quality, only 75,000 of whom are available for active operations, while Gen. Kuroki certainly has 140,000 first-class men the equal of European armies. "Under such conditions," the Standard says, "the issue of battle is very seldom doubtful."

NEW CHWANG DESERTED.

In confirmation of the recent Associated Press dispatch, the Russian evacuation of this city has been completed. Nothing remains but the destruction of the gunboat Sivouch, which it is expected will take place early in the morning. The Russian troops marched out in perfect order, Gen. Kondratsvitch leaving with the last regiment.

A cable from New Chwang says: Nothing remains of the Russian administration here except a few companies of infantry and the old gunboat Sivoutch, which will probably be destroyed. General Kondradovitch went northeast to Haichen on May 16 on hurried orders from Gen. Kuropatkin, and it is now apparent that the Russian plan is to abandon the entire northern end of the gulf. Important developments in the war are impending. Military commanders do not seem to know precisely where the Japanese attack is to come from, the enemy being reported from so many points, but the hurried movement from New Chwang, and the recall of the troops west of Liao river, came about because of the sudden appearance of the Japanese warships and transports off Kai Chou point at noon on May 16, followed by the landing of 800 marines. For twelve hours heavy continuous firing was heard in the direction of Kai Ping. Russian scouts sent to investigate returned in the afternoon and reported that the Japanese under gun fire had landed a force of 10,000 men about Kai Ping, and opened a terrific bombardment against the shore defences, which were silenced about 4 o'clock in the afternoon. The Russians retreated to Tashichao.

CHINESE MUST LEAVE.

A despatch from Shangai says. Russians suspect Chunchuses who are raiding Russian posts in Manchuria are led by Japanese officers. Viceroy Alexieff has informed the Tartar general at Mukden that a great fight is expected soon, and that the Chinese must leave town.

Russian torpedo boats are seen outside of Port Arthur occasionally.

CHUNCHUSES ARE "SNIPING."

A despatch from St. Petersburg contains the following: Chunchuses admit that they are in the pay of the Japanese. These marauders are proving a fearful thorn, "sniping" away constantly at outpost sentinels and rising up everywhere and disappearing with irritating persistence. No illusion is given as to the seriousness of the situation. The grim statement is generally heard that Russian to-day is fighting not only for her prestige in the far east, but for her position among the nations of the world, and she must win at whatever cost. Russians say they, and not the Japanese, destroyed the railroad between Port Adams and Bantseualin stations, and also the portion destroyed beyond Yinkow, after successfully withdrawing guns and as much of the stores as possible, the remainder being burned.

Irving Staunton, the young Englishman believed to have been drowned near Lloyminister, is alive and well.

Engineer McHenry, late of the C. P. R., is to be fourth vice-president of the New York, New Haven and Hartford railway.

1904 Spring Poem.

We have been promising our readers the annual spring poem, but after looking through our salt barrel have concluded that we can offer nothing more comprehensive than the vintage of 1903. So here it is:

We sing
Of spring;
That's all—
Full [illegible].

Maple Sugar.

It is said that the first sugar ever made in Vermont was made in Bennington in March, 1763, near the log cabin of Captain Samuel Robinson, the first settler of the town, who came from Hardwick, Mass. The sap was caught in short logs hollowed that held about a gallon. Many pounds of sugar were made and a liquor cask full of sirup.

CURIOUS EIBLES.

Some Strange Inaccuracies or Expressions of Quaintness That in Olden Times Crept Into the Text.

The following memorandum of some quaint editions of the Bible will be interesting to those who care to follow the history of the art of typography. It will also illustrate how, before the invention of printing, certain inaccuracies could creep into the sacred text, as, for example by the absorption of marginal glosses into the body of the manuscript and inadvertent substitution of words similar in appearance, but different in meaning. The archaic words of these old versions also illustrate the need of the Revised Version. The almost absolute accuracy of the present text is indicated by the fact that the standing offer of the University Press, of Oxford, of a guinea for the finding of a typographical error has not been taken up for a long while."

The "Breeches" Bible: "Then the eyes of them both were opened, and they knew that they were naked, and they sewed fig leaves together, and made themselves Breeches." (Gen. III. 7.) Printed in 1560.

The "Bug" Bible: "So that thou shalt not need to be afraid for any Bugges by nighte, nor for the arrow that flyeth by day." (Ps. XCI., 5.) Printed in 1561.

The "Treacle" Bible: "Is there not treacle at Gilead? Is there no physician there?" (Jer. VIII., 22). Printed in 1568.

The "Rosin" Bible: "Is there no rosin in Gilead? Is there no physician there?" (Jer. VIII., 22.) Printed in 1609.

The "Placemaker's" Bible: "Blessed are the placemakers; for they shall be called the children of God." (Matt., V., 9.) Printed in 1561-2.

The "Vinegar" Bible: "The parable of the Vinegar," instead of the vineyard, appears in the chapter headed to Luke XX., in an Oxford edition of the Authorized Version, which was published in 1717.

The "Wicked" Bible: This extraordinary name had been given to an edition of the Authorized Bible, printed in London by Robert Baker and Martin Lucas in 1631. The negative was left out of the seventh commandment; and William Kilburne, writing in 1659, says that, owing to the zeal of Dr. Usher, the printer was fined £2,000 or £3,000.

The "Ears-to-ear" Bible: "Who hath ears to ear, let him hear." (Matt. XIII., 43.) Printed in 1810.

The "Standing-Fishes" Bible: "And it shall come to pass that the fishes will stand upon it, etc. (Ezek, XVIII., 10.) Printed in 1806.

The "Discharge" Bible: "I discharge thee before God." (I Tim., V., 21.) Printed in 1806.

The "Wife-hater" Bible: "If any man come to me, and hate not his father, * * * yea, and his own wife also," etc. (Luke, XIV., 26.) Printed in 1810.

"Rebekah's-Camels" Bible: "And Rebekah arose, and her camels." (Gen. XXIV., 61.) Printed in 1823.

"To-Remain" Bible: "Persecuted him that was born after the spirit to remain; even so it is now." (Gal., IV., 19.) This typographical error, which was perpetuated in the first 8vo. Bible printed for the Bible Society, takes its chief importance from the curious circumstances under which it arose. A 12mo. Bible was being printed at Cambridge in 1805, and the proofreader, being in doubt as to whether or not he should remove a comma, applied to his superior, and the reply, penciled on the margin, "to remain," was transferred to the body of the text, and repeated in the Bible Society's 8vo. edition of 1805-6, and also in another 12mo. edition of 1818.—The Sunday School Repository.

The Chinamen and Age.

In China old age is much venerated, and it is considered a compliment to inquire after your "honorable teeth," the conventional phrase employed in asking people their age. The Chinese admire a long beard, and estimate age by the length of it, because social usage only allows a man to grow old when he is a grandfather, or at least forty-five years old. "What is your honorable age?" a Chinaman asks when introduced to a new acquaintance. "My insignificant years do not number more than thirty," may be the modest reply. "Oh!" it is polite to exclaim in a tone of great surprise, "I should have taken you to be forty at the very least." And the other, even if a woman, will blush with pleasure at the insinuated flattery.

The respect which the Chinese pay to their parents, and to old people generally, is one of the things in which they differ with advantage from ourselves. Chinese children have not to be reminded that a parent is, after all, one of God's creatures. The Chinese never speak of old fogies, or make parents feel that they have over-stayed their welcome in the world. In speaking to a parent a child is taught to avoid all reference to old age, and every boy has held up to him as an example the conduct of Laon Lai-tze. This worthy, fearing that the recognition by his parents of the fact that he was seventy years old would remind them of their own great age, used to dress himself in a child's frock, and play about the room like an infant.
