One of the first duties of the city council will be the appointment of city officials. ive of these offices could easily be le aded to by one man. They city clerk, treasurer, Assessor, lector and Magistrate's Clerk. By coming these offices the council will be lowing an economical course, as there no doubt the various duties can be ed by one man for less money than uld be required to pay five different n. There are other advantages gained the rate-payers. One man to fill these itions, would be paid a fair living sal- independent of any other vocation he would have an office where he ld be found within office hours s is an important consideration.

he Nelson Tribune has persisted in icising the conditions governing voters list for Fernie's first nicipal election. In doing so the bune attributes improper motives to al men, insinuating that the vote is tailed that certain political ends may gained. The editor of the Tribune, man for many years a member of the vincial legislature, does not seem to ve grasped the mere rudiments of the nicipal Elections Act or he would have ognized that the gazetted notice of lication for votes in Fernie's first ction was an exact copy of the said . If this act is unfair Mr. Houston uld have interested himself in having objectional clause amended. We do feel called upon to defend the act we know that the present voters list strict accordance with its provisions. thermore the Tribune's insinuation party politics is a factor in Fernie's icipal affairs is, we are glad to be to say, entirely unfounded. All the men of both parties early in the paign resolutely tramped under their any attempts of would-be political healers to introduce party politics the result that the citizens of Fernie now facing their responsibilities honest frank manner, with a determination to elect the best men, irrespective of party, creed, or class.

FERNIE people returning from the nipeg Industrial Exhibition speak in highest terms of the splendid exhibits from B. C. Two of the finest exhibits of the fair were from the mountain province and they caused endless comment. One was the excellent fruit exhibit from the Okanagan and the other was the lumber exhibit from the coast. A novel feature of the latter was the portable cottages which are put up in sections and can be easily shipped from one place to another. These will fill a long felt want in supplying the farmers of the prairie with cheap houses. The exhibit from the Okanagan valley will act as a stimulus for the continued exodus of Manitoba farmers to "the garden of B. C."

The people of Fernie can congratulate themselves that they have in the two candidates for the mayoralty contest two of their most worthy and most respected citizens. Both came to this town in its early days and both have stuck loyally to it ever since. Both are men of good moral and social standing. Both are shrewd business men, in parallel lines of business in fact, and both have met with something better than indifferent success. Both have always exhibited a public-spiritedness in the town's progress, and both have sacrificed not a little in time and money in furthering its interests when matters of public importance were carried out by private contribution and individual effort. On these grounds Fred Stork and J. D. Quail have almost an even footing. The latter may excel as a man of constructive ability and his place in the council in this regard will be hard to fill. On the other hand Mr. Stork excells as a man of marked executive ability. He is a man well qualified in every respect to grace the first mayoralty chair of the city of Fernie. He is a man of characteristic push and energy, who will, if elected, grapple with the problems of the town in the business-like and determined manner that their urgency requires. His business arrangements are such that he is better able to devote the time required with the least personal sacrifice. Therefore, while we have no hesitation in declaring our belief that the town's affairs will be in safe hands no matter which one of these gentlemen receives the greatest support from the electorate we are equally frank in declaring our belief also that of the two, Mr. Fred Stork is better qualified to fill the important position.

The Government in answer to a largely signed petition has made considerable improvements along MacPherson Ave which will render the town safer from forest fires. The road has been cleared of brush and trees and the refuse has been piled ready to burn.

CHAPTER V.

LEON'S QUEST.

"YOU desired my presence, Mr. Oakfell?" said Mrs. Wyley, entering the office, followed by a servant, who placed lights upon the table and retired.

"Yes, Mrs. Wyley, if you can spare the time to assist me in giving audience to Quillebert's jockey. Leon, who, in apparently great distress, entreats it," Horace replied.

"Indeed I am more than willing to do so," she said, resuming the large rocker, "for I have always felt there was something foully wrong in that Frenchman's treatment of the boy."

"Have you any personal knowledge bearing upon it?"

"I know a good deal about the beginning of it and am anxious to tell you all I can with certainty."

Leon appeared timidly upon the threshold and was bidden assuringly to be seated. He hesitated; but, the invitation being repeated by Mrs. Wyley in a tone conveying something of command, he complied, first laying his hat upon a bench outside the door. He was manifestly agitated, embarrassed and apprehensive, and, though ample time was given him to open the conversation, he sat confused and silent.

"This interview is of your own seeking, Leon," said Horace, "and has been granted by Mrs. Wyley and myself. You ask for my advice and help. Whether either or both will be given must depend upon the character of your statement. Now proceed to tell your trouble without reserve, for we are kindly disposed to you, but tell it with absolute truth. You must not mislead me into action or speech by a falsehood. Give me facts only. Upon this condition I will advise to the best of my ability for your good and possibly assist you to make the advice effective. We are waiting to hear you."

With visible effort to repress his excitement Leon said:

"I cannot speak well like you, Mr. Horace, and some of the things I will tell you I do not at all understand. I know that until I was 10 or 11 years old I lived with Mrs. Wyley on the Lallande plantation, on Atchafalaya river. One day she sent me to M. Constant Quillebert's plantation to see my mother and get some presents from M. Constant, who was my godfather. He would not let me go back to Mrs. Wyley and has kept me on his place since."

Oakfell looked inquiringly at Mrs. Wyley, whose eyes responded a confirmation. Leon continued:

"We are waiting to hear you."

"M. Constant has treated me differently from the others on his plantation. I have never been put to field work. Up to the time I was 15 he made me stay about the house, and after that he put me in charge of his best horses. Now, as you know, Mr. Horace, I am his jockey and ride for him at all the races."

"And from what I hear you give him satisfaction in that capacity," Horace remarked.

"Yes, sir," said Leon, "except when he loses a race, and then he curses me for not punishing the horses. That I will not do, for I know they try their best, as I do mine. But he has never whipped me—the others, yes, my mother and all, for he is terrible in a passion, but not me. My mother has said that I do not belong to him, that I am not a slave, that I am free, and he whipped her for telling me so, though he never said anything to me about it. I do not understand it. Father Grhe, who christened me, has told me the same thing. But I cannot explain how it is. One day when I was crossing some horses on the ferry at Bayou du Lac M. Valsin Mouillot said to me that he had heard M. Constant admit I did not belong to him or to anybody else."

"Can this have been true, Mrs. Wyley?" inquired Horace.

"I am not prepared to say no," replied Mrs. Wyley.

"Though I have feared to speak to M. Constant about it," Leon resumed, "I have always believed I am not a slave and have hoped that something would occur to put me in my freedom. But my hope has been today destroyed. All that cheered me has been denied. Please, Mr. Horace and madame, do not laugh at me and think me foolish for what I am going to tell you now. I am in love"—he hung his head like a guilty child—"and my love has made me strong, obedient and patient. I love Odette, the maid of Mlle. Estelle Latiolais, and she has said she would be my wife. She is a good, faithful, true girl. To me she is lovelier than the yellow jasmine, and the thought of her has kept me honest and cheerful and has made me kinder to my horses. Her mistress loves her and more than a year ago promised to set her free when I should be ready to marry her. But last night she met me weeping and broken hearted, for mademoiselle had informed her that she could not give her freedom, because the law had changed in spite of Mr. Horace's noble opposition so as to forbid the emancipation of slaves. I could not console her. It seemed as if this news took all my life away. Not a moment have I slept since. All the night long I walked up and down in the stables save when I rested my head on one of the horses and cried like a woman. But with the daybreak came a hope. I remembered that if I myself was not a slave I could buy Odette and make her free by taking her to a free state, and I determined to ask M. Constant to lend me the price of my bride, to be paid him in services in the stable and on the track as long as would be reasonable. Knowing how set he was on beating Judge Elgee's mare today and that he had bet heavy sums on the race, I made up my mind to win it for him even at the risk of my neck, so as to have his favor when I should ask him for the loan, which I would do before sundown if my mare kept her feet. He would not refuse then, I felt sure.

Again I cried, but from joy, and I danced with happiness, and I whistled like a mocking bird as I patted and rubbed Charlotte Corday and prayed to her to carry me out of my trouble. Belle Cheney has better points than Charlotte, and I trembled as I saw her leap to the stand. But when the word was given I leaned down and shouted, 'Odette!' in my mare's ear. At the end of the track I saw not the post, but only Odette's sweet face. In the crowd's roar and yell in the last stretch I heard only the name Odette, and when I shot under the line I saw Odette standing with her mistress on the veranda of Father Grhe's house, waving her hand to me. After caring for the mare and kissing her forehead I went to Mlle. Latiolais and asked her if she would sell Odette to me and at what price. She said she would for $100 and, laying her snow white hand on Odette's shoulder, added that she would give the price and something more to the bride as a dot on her wedding day. Odette kissed that little hand and, with a smile of happiness, expressed our thankfulness. Mine was then the lightest heart that ever beat in a poor man's breast, and I made my request to M. Constant on his return home. But, Mr. Oakfell, a knife run through my body could not have given the pain his answer did. His eyes almost closed and his face trembled with anger as he said: 'You scoundrel! Why should you buy a wife? If you did, she would be my slave. Whatever you acquire will be mine.' 'How so, M. Constant?' I asked. 'I am a free man.' Like a mad dog he leaped at me, clutched me by the throat and screamed: 'You lie! You are my slave! If you ever dare again to deny it, I will lay the lash on you till you will wish you were dead!' And he flung me away from him with the vilest curses. Crushed, and all but blind, I staggered to the stable and hid my face in Charlotte Corday's mane until my thoughts came back to me. Then, not knowing or caring whether I was seen, I went to Mlle. Latiolais and informed her what had occurred. She said to me: 'Go at once to Mr. Horace Oakfell, the only real man of this country. Tell him I ask him to hear you and thwart the evil purpose of that wicked Quillebert. Mr. Oakfell has the true eye to see what is just and the brave heart to do it.' As I was leaving the yard I met M. Leonidas Latiolais and asked him whether he would not buy me if I was M. Constant's slave, and he said he would think it over. I came directly here. I have told nothing but the truth. For the sake of justice, for the sake of Jesus, who, the priest says, was friendless as I am; for the sake of Mlle. Latiolais, advise and protect me, Mr. Oakfell, and you, Mrs. Wyley, who were always kind to me and never had cause to chide me."

The poor fellow in his excitement had unconsciously risen at the close of his narrative and assumed an attitude of supplication eloquent in its naturalness and earnestness, and his two auditors looked from him to each other with expressions of astonishment and wounded consciences.

"A dreadful recital, if true," Oakfell said.

"Even the mercy of heaven must be stretched to cover such wickedness," was Mrs. Wyley's comment.

"Do you feel inclined to give me your recollection of this matter, Mrs. Wyley?" asked Oakfell.

"Yes, sir," she replied, "not only inclined, but eager to do so. When Leon was but an infant, Feblen Queyrouze owned the plantation adjoining Lallande's, of which my husband was the overseer. It was in those days that I first saw Quillebert, who visited Queyrouze on Sundays. It seems they had known each other in France. By the request of Queyrouze, Quillebert stood as godfather at the child's christening at Mansura by Father Grhe, who had but recently arrived in this country. Queyrouze was very fond of this child, but was greatly displeased for some cause with the mother, Olive, who, with her children, was his slave. The year the cholera was so bad—I think it was in 1833—on returning home from a visit to New Orleans he told his overseer, Belisaire Poydre, that he intended Leon to be free and directed that he be sent to me to be raised. The following day he died of the cholera. He had befriended my husband in a serious trouble, so that when, two days after his death, a nurse came to us with the child and a message from Poydre conveying the wish of Queyrouze we consented, and I took charge of the little one. Of course he was favored by us and never caused me to regret our action. As child and boy he was good natured, respectful and obedient.

"Queyrouze was a bachelor, and his heirs lived in France. His will instructed Poydre to wind up his affairs, sell his property and deliver the proceeds to the heirs. This he did four years later. Quillebert bought Olive and her three other children. Leon was not included in the sale, but remained with me. Belisaire Poydre died of yellow fever in 1840. My poor husband was carried off by the same disease in 1843. About six months after my husband's death I received a request from Quillebert to send Leon to visit his mother and receive some presents from his godfather, and, suspecting no trick, I did so. Leon did not come back. I wrote Quillebert a note asking why he detained him. He returned the verbal answer that the boy preferred to remain with his mother. This I did not believe, but I felt myself helpless and took no further steps in the matter. This is all I know of it. I do not pretend to understand the law, but I have always thought Leon was free."

At these last words Leon's face brightened, and he looked eagerly and anxiously to Oakfell.

"And my thought agrees with yours," said the latter.

"Oh, thank the good God!" exclaimed Leon, falling on his knees. "And you will secure and protect me in my freedom, Mr. Horace? You are white, you are rich, you are wise, you are powerful. Defend me from this man who enslaves me against law and justice."

"I will, poor fellow, to the utmost of my power," Oakfell promised. "And if I succeed in establishing your freedom I will lend you the money to buy Odette."

Leon wrung his hands in a paroxysm of joy, but could not speak his gratitude. Mrs. Wyley, however, was moved to say, "God will be on your side in the fight, Mr. Oakfell."

"I can only prevail by the humanity and justice of our laws," said Oakfell. "Listen to me, Leon. I must proceed in this undertaking with deliberation. My course will arouse bitter opposition and bad feeling, which should not be provoked prematurely. Meanwhile you must be absolutely under my direction and pledge implicit obedience to my instruction, though it may involve suffering. It is proper that at the institution of your suit for freedom you should be under the apparent control of Quillebert. You must not be a fugitive when you sue for freedom. Therefore you must return to his plantation, though he may put the lash to you for being away tonight. Do not disclose that you have spoken to Mrs. Wyley or myself, though he should torture you to extort the confession, for if he learns that you have conferred with us I do not doubt he will kill you. Can you keep your counsel and ours and endure his cruelty until I send for you and give you further instructions?"

"Mr. Oakfell, I will take the lash and any pains he can put me to if I can gain my freedom and Odette, and neither whip nor fire can force from me one word about this meeting."

"Go, then," said Oakfell, "and be firm."

"God help me to be firm and to be grateful for your goodness and that of Mrs. Wyley," Leon replied and withdrew.

"What is all this, brother?" said Evariste, smiling and entering the office with noiseless step. "Are you holding abolitionist meetings and receiving messages by the grapevine line? Beware, for there is danger in that."

Oakfell explained fully the evening's incident, requesting Evariste's secrecy.

"Certainly," said the latter; "I will be silent as the tomb. But indeed I warn you there is more peril in your undertaking than in a genuine abolition grapevine conclave. That fellow Quillebert is a devil incarnate. He is as venomous as an adder and as conscienceless. To deliver a thrust from behind or a shot in the dark is as easy to him as a gulp of absinth. He is a relentless hater and already has his evil eye on you as an American and as the champion of Estelle Latiolais. Moreover, he has a following among the lowest fellows of this parish. Reflect before you draw the ire of such a rascal for the sake of a saffron jockey who never can be more than he is at this present moment."

"Evariste, your affection for me leads you to magnify the dangers and minimize the cause," Horace answered. "You are perhaps young yet to weigh the considerations which have appealed to my conscience tonight. I feel that this disclosure has laid upon me a duty which it would be disgraceful and cowardly in me to shirk. I would assume it were the perils ten thousand times greater than those you imagine. But I do not wish you to be in the least troubled about it. Only sacredly keep what I have confided to you."

Evariste again promised, and good nights were spoken, but the lights in the office burned till the smallest hour of the morning.

CHAPTER VI.

A HEART OF PEARL.

TWO items of Leon's recital lingered pleasingly in Oakfell's thoughts, Estelle's generous consent to sell Odette to her lover and bestow the price for marriage provision and her confident reference to him (Oakfell) as the one man of the parish able and willing to defend the weak against the injustice of the powerful oppressor. His admiration and self esteem were appealed to effectively, and he found himself wondering why he had not seen the granddaughter of Latiolais during the past three years and whether the child he remembered could justify Evariste's rapturous description of the beauty he had met at Father Grhe's table. Her responses to the appeals of Leon bespoke her a person of superior qualities of character, tender sympathies, courage in high resolutions.

His truly chivalrous mind kept all women upon pedestals, and in his regard all possessed some of the sweet perfections with which his mother and Mme. Fidele were endowed. Yet, though he was keenly sensible of the attractions of the bayou belles and prairie lassies, he had remained heart free. Evariste had before repeated to him commendations spoken by the fair, and if they had fallen gratefully on his ear they had failed to stir his imagination, but the words of Estelle surprised and thrilled him. Such emotions defy analysis, and thus, without understanding why, he realized that the task he had from conscience imposed upon himself took a poetic color which it had wholly wanted but for her interest. He experienced no difficulty in deciding that he should without loss of time call on his gentle colleague, both to pledge his loyalty to the cause she had espoused and delicately warn her to reticence in the presence of her voluble grandfather, whose malleability in the masterful hands of Quillebert might otherwise become the fruitful source of mischief.

The bridle path through the swamps behind the bayou fields shortened considerably the distance between L'Esperance and the Latiolais plantation. The shadows of afternoon were but beginning to lengthen when Oakfell startled Estelle, with broad hat tied under her chin and shears in her hand, clipping a shrub of sweet olive. Flushed cheeks and embarrassed manner testified her maidenly timidity, but quickly the convent taught politeness came to her aid, and she gracefully welcomed her visitor to a seat upon the veranda, where at the summons of her mistress Odette served cool water flavored with the sirup of mandarins.

"You will, I hope, be not displeased, mademoiselle, when I tell you that three years have made such change in your appearance that I scarcely would have recognized you elsewhere than here at your home," said Oakfell.

"I sufficiently realize that," she replied, "when I look at my mirror and then at the little daguerreotype I sent to grandpere from New Orleans when I first went to the convent. Sometimes I fear I shall be an old woman while my companions are still young girls. Laure Luneau is two years older than I, but she looks two years younger."

"Is she one of your companions?" asked Oakfell.

"We have known each other all our lives," answered Estelle, "and the mention of her name reminds me, Mr. Oakfell"—

"I beg you will not," Oakfell interrupted.

"But," she persisted, "I feel bound"—

"So do I," said Oakfell, smiling, "for there are other matters we can discuss with more likelihood of agreement—for instance, the message you sent to me by Quillebert's jockey, Leon."

"Oh, Mr. Oakfell," she exclaimed, "was ever such a cruel, wicked wrong? But you will protect poor Leon and deliver him from that ferocious man, will you not?"

"Your command moved my mind to that resolution," he said.

"And you will succeed," she declared, with warmth. "Father Grhe's account of your speech in the legislature against that disgraceful law forbidding emancipation of slaves told me you were brave and wise, and your championship of me in the election of godmother for the bell told me you were generous, and therefore I sent Leon to you. Was I too bold, and did I do wrong? I had no time to advise with my grandfather."

"No, mademoiselle. My misgiving is as to my own ability. But what strength I have shall be exerted to the fullest, and should success meet my efforts the gratitude of Leon and Odette will be due to you."

"And mine to you, Mr. Oakfell. So you will receive it all, as you well deserve."

"Your grandfather is well, I trust. Is he at home?" Oakfell inquired.

"He is quite well, but I regret is not at home. He rode away an hour ago, I fear, to Quillebert's," Estelle replied, an expression of pain coming to her face. "I do wish dear grandfather was not so much with that bad man, whose evil influence over his kind, yielding nature I so much dread."

"M. Latiolais' virtues are too confirmed to be weakened by contact with so coarse a character. Nevertheless," Oakfell added, "this intimacy between them compels me to suggest, mademoiselle, that nothing be said to your grandfather of Leon's visit to me or of my intentions in his behalf. I pray you will not feel offense at the suggestion."

"Not in the least," she answered him. "It is well founded and just and shall be respected. When will you begin?"

"I cannot say," he replied. "The work of preparation may occupy me until fall."

"I will earnestly pray God and the Virgin to aid and to bless you and to enable me, though but an ignorant and feeble girl, to be of some use in so just a cause," said Estelle.

"Your good will shall be my sufficient stay," said Oakfell, offering his hand in adieu, and the touch produced a delicious shock that sent the blood bounding through his veins in a manner new to his experience.

As he rode away with a knightly bow Estelle turned to her maid, who had loitered unseen within hearing distance of the conversation, and said:

"I am so glad that I sent Leon to him. I am so happy that he came to see me. Now I am sure I did not do wrong and that he will never yield to injustice. What a handsome, good face he has, Odette."

"Oh, mamselle, he is among men what you are among women, the first of the good!" answered Odette. "He is the only one fit for you, and you are the only one fit for him."

"What are you thinking of, silly thing? Mr. Oakfell is not a Catholic, and I am," said Estelle, faintly pouting.

"I know he is not a Catholic," the maid replied, "but, for all that, he is the best man in the parish. I have heard Father Grhe say that."

"Father Grhe has honest and correct opinions, and whatever he says I believe. But Mrs. Oakfell will very likely be one of those bold American beauties on Bayou Bœuf, not the shy and stupid little creole of Bayou Rouge," Estelle said plaintively.

"Ah, my sweet mistress, if you had seen M. Oakfell's face as I saw it when you gave him your hand for goodby you would not talk so. And if he looks for beauty, which one of the American ladies can compare with Mamselle Latiolais? Beauty is not everything to such as M. Oakfell, nor boldness, nor money. Something better than all these he will want—the good, true heart, and no American lady has a heart of pearl like my mistress." The slave girl spoke warmly and loyally, and Estelle ran into the house to conceal the blushes of happiness these words brought to her cheeks.

At sunset the grandfather returned. His step was slow and his countenance grave and troubled. Sinking wearily into a chair on the veranda, he closed his eyes as if to shut out an unwelcome visitor to his memory and thus sat silent and brooding when Estelle approached and lightly kissed his brow.

"Are you sick, my dear grandfather?" she asked.

"In spirit, yes, otherwise no, my dear little girl," he replied.

"Then what is it that has given despondency to my good old child?"

"Ah, little Estelle, you are the child too tender and sensitive to hear the shocking thing that has saddened my soul this evening."

"No," she protested; "you misjudge me. I am strong enough to share with you all your griefs and must do so or fail in my duty. Then tell me what distresses you. Did you not go to M. Quillebert's, and was it not there this thing has happened? Tell your Estelle."

"Yes, my angel, I will tell you, for I must speak to some one. I rode over to Constant's to spend an hour with him. As I passed his stables I heard the strokes of the whip falling heavily upon flesh and a low moan following each blow. I hastened on to the house and had alighted at the gate when Constant came out of the stables, ox whip in hand, breathless and almost speechless. The savage fury of his face frightened me. He sent a negro boy on one of his fastest horses to bring Dr. De Roux. When he had rested somewhat and restored himself with brandy, he told me his jockey, Leon, went away last night, leaving the horses unfed, and did not return to the plantation until midnight, when he was brought by the constable, who had caught him coming out of the swamp, and stubbornly refused to say where he had gone. He caused the unfortunate fellow to be tied by the wrists to a feed rack from last night until this evening without food or water and threatened the whip if he did not tell where he had been, but promising release for confession. Leon obstinately closed his mouth and would not speak.

"You heard what my grandfather told me?"

"Constant went into the stable this evening and made his final demand for confession, but with no effect. He then bared the negro's back and gave him the lash until he fell forward and hung from the rack limp and unconscious. At this he became alarmed, believing that he had killed him, and, cutting him from the rack, dispatched for the doctor. I remained there until De Roux came and reported that he had revived Leon, but could give no assurance that he would not die from the effect of the punishment. Constant drank more brandy, raved like a madman, swore he could never get another jockey to equal Leon and promised the doctor $500 to cure him. All this made me feel utterly miserable, and I came away."

"And if you will never go back there, dear grandfather," Estelle exclaimed, "both you and I will be the gainers."

"You are weeping, child," said the old man, seeing the tears that blinded her eyes. "I should not have harrowed you with such a recital."

"You did right to tell me, that I may have the best of causes to entreat you to stay away from him. Oh, my kind protector, he is not fit to associate with you! He is an atheist, a fiend, a brute, and you are a Christian gentleman. He is not the equal in character of the poor negro he tortured, maybe murdered. Never permit him to speak to me. Do not expect me to notice him if he does. Never invite him to come here. If he enters that gate, I will set all the dogs on him."

"Calm yourself, my little one," the grandfather said soothingly, "and remember that Constant is a white man and Leon only his negro slave."

"Grandfather," the girl replied spiritedly, "it is more probable that Leon is not Quillebert's negro slave than that Quillebert is deserving to be called a white man."

"What do you mean, Estelle?"

"I cannot tell you now, but time will explain this saying of mine in both its parts. Only promise me this—that never shall one of our slaves be put to the lash or tortured."

"I promise that sincerely."

"Then, dear grandfather, let us talk no more of this unhappy subject. You need your supper and pipe."

"Yes, dear, and tell old Julie to drin the coffee extra strong to quiet my nerves."

Passing into the hall, Estelle found Odette sobbing bitterly and, taking her hand, said in a low tone:

"You heard what my grandfather told me?"

"Yes, mamselle. Forgive me for listening."

"Remember, then, Odette, what Leon suffered for your sake and be you as brave and silent for his. The God of mercy will right all this wrong. Trust in God and Mr. Oakfell."

"Yes, and you, dear mistress."

"Go now, bathe your eyes in cool water and wait on us at table with a face showing no trace of weeping."

Estelle proceeded to her own room and, closing the door, knelt at the pretty little priedieu near her bed. Bowing her beautiful head and closing her eyes, she addressed her petition for the succor of the oppressed to heaven, but in her involuntary vision she saw only the face of Oakfell. From the happiness of this dual devotion she was summoned to preside at the meal.

Whistler's Refined Revenges.

In "Whistler as I Knew Him," Mortimer Menpes, the author, has a good deal to say about Whistler the fighter and his quickness in resenting an affront. He is careful to add that Whistler was always refined in his methods:

Still, he was not actually brutal. He never treated his enemies in a coarse way. Any man who had offended him Whistler would rap sharply over the shoulders with his cane, and then, by the time the sufferer had recovered, the master would be in the next room explaining to every one how he had just felled his enemy. Once he caught a man, with whom he was for the moment enraged, washing his face. Without a moment's hesitation Whistler dashed the unfortunate head straight into the basin of water, and while the foe was endeavoring to clear the soap from his eyes to see the cause of this sudden immersion Whistler was in the smoking room setting the men there in a roar with the account of his adventures. When I first met Whistler he was in the act of searching for a man who had dared to criticise his Venetian etchings. "If you want to see some fun, Menpes," he said, "come with me." Fortunately the man had been warned and was nowhere to be found.

"Tattletale" Boys.

Both teachers and parents should discourage tattling among children. The practice is bad enough among girls, but is contemptible among boys. A boy who tells tales on others will doubtless be properly castigated by the courts of juvenile justice which convene in alleys and back lots, but he should not have the satisfaction of feeling that his punishment is in the nature of martyrdom nor should he be made a favorite with his teacher for doing that which most boys instinctively detest. Boys have always been educated to regard tattling as cowardice. This code of ethics has developed some pretty good men. It is good enough for the present generation of schoolboys.

MUST APOLOGIZE.

RUSSIA MUST OR TAKE CONSEQUENCES.

British Government Formally Protests to Russia Against Sinking the Knight Commander—Indemnity Demanded.

After a protracted conference on board the Malacca between the British and Russian consuls and Captain Schwartz commanding the prize crew, it was announced that the Russian flag would be replaced by the British at 6 o'clock on July 27.

The orders to surrender the Malacca were evidently a complete surprise to Captain Schwartz, who immediately after his arrival notified the French naval authorities that he required 600 tons of coal and a good supply of water and provisions to take him to Pabau in the Baltic. It was not until an hour later that the Russian consul, M. Towaizevsky, told him differently.

MALACCA RELEASED.

A later dispatch from Algiers says that at sunset the Russian flag was hauled down on the Malacca, and at eight o'clock, when all the Russians had left the ship the British flag was hoisted and suluted by the British consul.

The British Government has sent (July 27) instructions to Sir Charles Hardinge, the British ambassador to Russia, to energetically protest against the sinking of the British steamer Knight Commander by the Russian Vladivostock squadron.

Until the presentation of the note to the Russian Government the greatest secrecy will be maintained regarding its contents, but it is known that Premier Balfour and his colleagues have decided to demand that the fullest reparation shall be made by Russia, or measures will be taken to follow up the diplomatic demands.

The British note, as Sir Charles Hardinge will submit it, will not mention the amount of indemnity Russia must pay the owners of the ship and British subjects having goods on the vessel, but all that will be sought will be the establishment of the principle of indemnity and apology. A salute of the British flag must also be conceded and the future protection of neutral shipping assured.

The attitude of the British Government is the result of thorough consideration given to the reports received from Sir Claude Macdonald, the British minister at Tokio, and the examination of international law authorities by legal experts. The dispatches from Sir Claude Macdonald confirm the reports that the Knight Commander had no contraband of war on board for Japan. The Government and all the British authorities, it is asserted, unite on the point that there was no justification for the sinking of the vessel.

OVERSHADOWS RED SEA RAIDS.

It is felt in Goverment circles that the Knight Commander incident overshadows the Red Sea seizures, which practically have been adjusted, but which have failed to settle the question of the rights of neutral commerce.

CONFIRMED BY BALFOUR.

That the British Government regards the sinking of the steamer Knight Commander as a breach of international law was confirmed by Premier Balfour in the House of Commons on July 27. In answering questions regarding the destruction of the Knight Commander and the seizure of the Malacca and other vessels the Premier said he hoped to be in a position to make a brief statement regarding the Malacca tomorrow. As to the sinking gf the flnnggt Commander he "regretted that information which reached me this morning confirmed this regrettable occurrence." Mr. Balfour added: "There is no question of loss of life, but I am afraid there is a question of a breach of international law."

UNDER THE MOWER.

Child Had Been Sleeping in the Long Grass —Terribly Mutilated.

A despatch from St. Thomas says: What may prove to be a fatal accident took place Thursday afternoon at the farm of John McLaren, of the eleventh concession, Howard, near Ridgetown. His young son, Dougal, three years old, was lying sleeping in the grass near the house, when the father with the mowing machine went into the paddock to mow. Not until he saw his child under the cutting bar of the machine did he know that he was out of the house. The unfortunate child had a large piece of flesh cut from the thigh, one of his arms almost severed, and a nasty gash cut ib the side of his head.

A Brave Man.

A Chicago despatch says: David Metcalf, an enthusiastic Salvation Army worker, was married and lived in the second flat at No. 98 Walnut Street. On July 9 he went to Crown Point, Ind., and married some more. The second wife was Lucy Round. He installed her in the first flat at No. 98 Walnut Street. When not exhorting, Metcalf flitted between the first and second flats. He told his bigamous wife not to have any communication with the "Mrs. Metcalf upstairs," as she was a relative who did not like him. The women got together, and Metcalf was arrested for bigamy.

Before an invitation of hospitality is given to a stranger a call should first be made.

MARKET REPORT.

Compiled by Thompson, Sons & Co.

Winnipeg, Thursday, Aug. 4, 1904.

WHEAT—In our last weeks review of the wheat markets we stated there had been increased activity in the American speculative markets. The activity during the period then under review has in the past week developed into a wild and excited advance, which to the calmer judgment of conservative observers seems unwarranted by general conditions. It seems patent to experienced members of the grain trade that the opportunity is being taken by interested speculators and operators in the American markets to boom prices, and in their efforts to do so they are daily and hourly pressing on public notice extreme, if not exaggerated reports as to the unfavorable prospect of the American crop generally, and of the North-West hard spring crop particularly, and at the same time they suppress all mention of any favorable element in the situation. Their interest and effort is to get the public to buy wheat for future months' delivery at present high prices, or higher if possible, and they will sell it only the public does not know from whom it is buying. We do not profess to have special information as to the standing of the crop south of the line, but we do know that the prospect for the crop in Manitoba and the Canadian North-West is on the whole very promising at the present date for a yield of from 10,000,000 to 15,000,000 bushels larger than last year. The crop is a week to ten days late. The weather at seed time and during the growing time has not been equally favorable over all districts, but in the last two weeks the weather has been generally very favorable everywhere, so that in the aggregate the prospect is good. The bulk of the crop is now at the filling stage, and it has still to run the gauntlet of crop accidents, but with favorable weather and no accident for the next four weeks a full average yield and quality would be assured. At the present writing we consider the prospect under a continuance of favorable weather good for a yield of 65,000,000 bushels. As we have stated above the American speculative markets have become excited, and big advances have daily taken place during the week so that the total advance on the week is from 8c. to 10c. per bushel. The activity, however, has been altogether in the speculative markets, cash and shipping business being reported on a small scale, and it is evident that millers do not see their way to buy much wheat at present prices, and neither can exporters work business freely. European markets have only advanced slightly on the week. Broomhall, in a recent exposition of the probable world's crop for the season 1904-05, estimates it at only 40,000,000 bushels less than last year's crop, and as there are 11,000,000 bushels more in the World's Visible Stocks than a year ago, this shows only a probable shortage of say 30,000,000 bushels. High prices mean economy in using. Less is wasted, and none will be used for cattle feed, so that there does not seem any great danger of serious scarcity during the coming twelve months unless some serious damage is yet to occur to unmatured crops. The Visible Supply increased 918,000 bushels last week as against a decrease of 504,000 bushels the week previous, and an increase of 464,000 bushels last year. The world's shipments were 8,638,000 bushels against 8,056,000 bushels the previous week and 7,847,000 bushels last year. The world's visible s according to Bradstreet's, decreased 314,000 bushels against a decrease of 2,370,000 bushels the previous week and a decrease of 1,613,000 bushels last year.

The trade in Manitoba wheat has been interesting during the week and prices have of course been influenced by the advance in American markets, but only to a moderate extent. Shippers and exporters are out of the market altogether, and had it not been that one of the large milling companies has been a free buyer trade in cash wheat at least would have been stagnant or the price lower. Speculative trading, however, has been active principally in the October option, which closes today at 92½c. and May at 94c. As it is there has only been an advance in August wheat of 3c., in October of 5¼c., and in May of 6c. At the close of business to-day prices are: 1 Northern, 97½c.; 2 Nor., 94½c.; 3 Nor., 91¾c.; No. 4 wheat, 81½c. Feed wheat, 66c.; No. 2 feed, 57c. spot or August delivery; all in store at Fort William and Port Arthur.

Von Plehve, the Russian minister of the interior, was instantly killed by a bomb thrown at his carriage while en route to the Czar's palace for his weekly official audience. His assassin was captured.

The Japanese were repulsed with fearful slaughter in an assault on Port Arthur. The Russians are reported to have lost 6,000 and the Japanese 20,000. Japanese successes in other quarters is reported.

A Case of Necessity.

"My son," said the parson to a small boy who was digging, "don't you know that it is a sin to dig on Sunday except in case of necessity?"

"Yes, sir," replied the youngster.

"Then why don't you stop it?" asked the good man.

"'Cause this is a case of necessity," replied the young philosopher. "A feller can't fish without bait."

As He Interpreted It.

"How many commandments were given to Moses?" asked the Sunday school teacher of small Bobby.

He could not remember, so in order to prompt him she held up her ten fingers.

"Oh, I know!" he exclaimed triumphantly. "Two handsful."

KILLED BY A BOMB

RUSSIAN MINISTER OF INTERIOR ASSASSINATED.

Bomb-thrower Injured by Explosion —Coachman was Killed and Many Wounded— Sketch of the Life of the Late Minister.

A despatch from St. Petersburg on July 28 says: Von Plehve, minister of the interior, was assassinated at 9.50 o'clock in the morning by means of a bomb thrown at his carriage while he was driving to the Baltic station to take a train for the palace at Peterhoff, where he was to make his weekly report to the emperor. The assassination is believed to be the outcome of a widespread plot, the existence of which has been suspected for several days. Numerous arrests have been made, including that of the assassin, a young man who is believed to be a Finn, named Legio, and who is now in a hospital severely and perhaps fatally injured by the explosion of his own bomb. An accomplice of Legio, also apparently a Finn, but whose name is unknown, is arrested. He had in his possession a bomb which he tried to throw, but he was overpowered by the police just in time to prevent great loss of life. The assassin stood on the sidewalk just as Minister Von Plehve's carriage was about to cross the canal bridge near the station. The minister was escorted by a number of detectives on bicycles, and one of them jostled the assassin, who then rushed into the road and threw the bomb after the carriage. The

and exploded with fearful force, killing or wounding over a score of persons. Minister Von Plehve and his coachman were killed outright, and an officer of the guard was fatally injured. One of the cyclist detectives arrested the assassin, who endeavored to escape, though wounded by splinters in the face, arm and abdomen. He made no attempt at resistance, however, when seized by the detective, and confessed his crime, but refused to give his name. The police, immediately after the explosion arrested a suspicious individual, who took refuge in a hotel opposite the scene of the tragedy. He carried a bomb similar to that thrown by Legio. As soon as the police saw the bomb they scattered, but an employee of the hotel rushed up behind the accomplice and pinioned his arms. The explosive is believed to have been composed of Pyroxolin, as it gave off little smoke. The force of the explosion was so terrific that it not only broke every window within a radius of half a mile, but to powder, heaved up the pavement, and flung a heavy piece of the ironwork of the carriage across the canal, severing the thick mast of a barge. Everybody in the street was knocked down and more or less bruised. When the officers of the law, headed by Minister of Justice Maravieff, had terminated the necessary formalities by drawing up a written report of the crime, the mangled remains of the minister of the interior were conveyed to a humble chapel adjoining the station, the windows of which had miraculously escaped destruction. The priests and people, with characteristic Russian piety, at once joined in a solemn requiem. The square in front of the station was filled with a reverent crowd of peasants and laborers, and the busy hum of traffic was silenced. A priest lifted up his voice and proclaimed "The eternal memory of the departed servant Wencensias," while all those in the congregation dropped to their knees.

A no less impressive service was conducted at the minister's city residence this afternoon, to which only intimate friends were invited by M. von Plehve's assistant, M. Durnovo, who is temporary in charge of the minister of the interior. The magnificent staircase and the reception rooms were draped in black. The body of the minister was completely covered by a white shroud, which

CONCEALED THE GHASTLY MUTILATIONS.

It reposed in a black and silver casket in a corner of West hall, surrounded by luxuriant palms. Gendarmerie and non-commissioned officers stood sentinel at the head of the casket, while at its foot were two high officials of the ministry.

The news of M. Von Plehve's assassination was broken to the minister's wife at Kybinsk on the Volga, while on her way to their country seat with their son, who is 37 years old. A daughter is married to M. Voutch, an official attached to the council of ministers.

Von Plehve saw his wife and son off the night previous to his death, and then drove to the residence of General Bogdanovitch, with whom he remained until a late hour. The minister appeared to be preoccupied, and some of the guests asked him if he had received any more theatening letters, and remonstrated with him for going about unprotected. Curiously M. Von Plehve replied, "I am safe enough every day in the week except Thursday. No one knows of my movements beforehand except on that day, when everybody knows I go to present my weekly report to the emperor."

The assassin was dressed in the uniform of a Warsaw railroad guard. He is a comparatively young man. The cyclists escorting the minister's carriage were powerless to prevent the bomb being thrown. The assassin, who was wounded in the abdomen by a splinter, underwent a successful operation. When throwing the bomb he shouted "Long live freedom," with a little Russian accent. His name has not been ascertained, and the prisoner told the police that he had no accomplices. It is established, however, that the assassin is not a Jew, as at first reported.

FOURTEEN INJURED.

Fourteen bystanders were injured by the explosion, Captain Tevetsinsky, of the guards, sustained a fracture of the skull. He is not expected to recover. The bomb was filled with nails, not bullets.

The outrage is connected by the police with an explosion at Kharkoff three days previous. It is supposed the bombs were manufactured there. The crime is believed to be the outcome of an international anarchist movement with which Girschmin, the Russian revolutionary agitator, who was arrested in June, 1903, was connected.

Gerschmin, it is asserted was the organizer of the murder of M. Bogodenoff, formerly Russian minister of public instruction, and of M. Sipiaguine, who was minister of the interior before M. Von Plehve.

THE OFFICIAL VERSION.

According to the official version the assassination occurred at 9.50 a. m. The assassin, who was standing on the sidewalk, tried to break through the crowd as the minister's carriage approached, but being interfered with he jumped into the street and threw the bomb at the rear of the carriage, which was a closed one. The assassin was severely wounded in the stomach, and over twenty persons were injured, including the officer of the guards previously referred to.

The minister's death was instantaneous. When the body was undressed at his residence not a single wound was found on the trunk, but the lower part of the face was literally blown away.

Although a late despatch says that the assassin had not regained consciousness the physicians have hopes of saving his life. There is no confirmation of the report that he took poison, but it is believed to be true.

The official inquiry is still proceeding. A number of arrests have been made, but as yet there is no clue to the identity of the assassin or the real nature and cause of the conspiracy. The crime in many respects is similar to the Nihilist tragedy which resulted in the death of Alexander II.

Former United States Ambassador to Germany, Andrew D. White, in discussing Plehve and the assassination, said: "I knew Plehve well, having met him frequently during my stay at St. Petersburg from 1892 to 1894. At that time Mr. Plehve had not arrived at the position of full minister of the interior, but was the first assistant minister in that department, and in that capacity took up various American matters, especially the dealings with the Russian government with some of the great American insurance companies. The Russian government had made the companies' agent a deal of trouble, and I was instructed from Washington to discuss the matter, General Bachellor, now judge of the international court in Egypt, very ably represented the companies.

"I think both General Bachellor and myself found Mr. Plehve very agreeable, and apparently, as far as his environment allowed him, reasonable. I also met him socially at various times and found him agreeable and interesting. I was therefore greatly surprised at learning when he was promoted to the first place that his WHOLE CHARACTER SEEMED TO CHANGE.

His part in the horrible massacre and plunder of the Jews, men, women and children at Kishineff caused him to be regarded with abhorrence by the whole world. Even more frightful has been his connection with the destruction of the liberties of Finland. In my mind that is the most wicked thing in the history of the last two centuries. There is no time to go into it here, further than to say that it has turned the best, the most civilized, the most educated, and the most loyal province in the empire into a land in which the opposite of all these characteristics is more highly developed than in any other part of the empire. Other things done by him were also calculated to bring most bitter hatred against him.

"He attempted to help his cause by a defence of his conduct against Finland, which was published in an American magazine, but it certainly must have failed to convince thinking men at all aware of the circumstances.

"During two summers I lived in Finland, coming frequently to St. Petersburg, and the transition in passing from the cultivation and civilization of Finland to the atmosphere of Russia was the most depressing I have ever known.

"I do not wonder at his assassination, although I deeply lament it. Among other reasons for this regret, it will doubtless be made a and new cruelties toward the Jewish population and toward the Finlanders. Assassination always defeats its purpose, and this will be, I fear, no exception to the rule.

I can only account for Mr. Plehve's atrocious, reactionary and despotic conduct since he came to the position of minister on the theory that he found that the clique in control of the winter palace, men and women, who seemed to have brought the present emperor into subjection, oblige Mr. Plehve, as a condition of his tenure of office, to do their will.

"His ambition doubtless led him to adopt their racial and religious hatred, as well as their detestation of anything like constitutional government."

Mr. White concluded by saying that having lived twice officially in Russia he had had observed closely the condition of the empire, and though he saw the most wretched condition of things during the Crimea, the situation at present is the most desperately bad in Russian history, and that it has been brought on by an exercise of a despotism more unreasonable, cruel and shortsighted than anything in recent human history, outside of the Turkish empire.

POWERFUL PERSONALITY.

A late cable from St. Petersburg says: When the news of the assassination was officially announced intense excitement reigned everywhere. Only the assassination of the emperor could have created more of a sensation, as next to his majesty himself Von Plehve was regarded as the most powerful personality in the Russian government.

It transpires that Von Plehve was on his way to Krasneyeseol (sixteen miles southwest of St. Petersburg), where the Grand Duke Vladimir's birthday was to be celebrated. The emperor is still at Peterhof palace. When the news was received all the festivities of the day were, of course, immediately countermanded, and instead a requiem service was held. When the remains of Von Plehve's reached his residence a requiem mass was celebrated in the private chapel. Another one was celebrated the next night, and two will be celebrated daily until the funeral service.

Even in the midst of the consternation produced by the tra- everybody is talking of Von Plehve's probable successor.

ALL-ROUND ATHLETE

G. G. S. LINDSEY, K.C., AS ONE OF THE "YOUNGER CANADIANS."

An Interesting Sketch of the Career of the C. N. P. Coal Company's Third Vice President and Managing Director.

The Toronto News is publishing a series of articles, entitled "Younger Canadians." One of these was devoted to G. G. S. Lindsey, K.C., managing director of the Crow's Nest Pass Coal Co., who is now very well known in this part of the province. The article reads:

When George Golden Smith Lindsey went to Upper Canada College early in the seventies, he little knew that he was going to encounter the first peril of his life. There was cricket to play, and he played it. There was football for muscle making, and he chased the pig skin. There was learning to be acquired, and he acquired it as shall be seen. But young Lindsey had an artistic tendency that he could not for the time overcome, though afterwards he fought against it and conquered. He was for a time a victim of heredity, and in his blood was the desire for writing, and seeing that writing turned into print. His grandfather on his mother's side was William Lyon Mackenzie, journalist, fighter, and rebel or patriot—take your choice. In the days when George Lindsey was born—and afterwards, though Mackenzie's grandson is only 44—William Lyon Mackenzie swung a hefty and sharp-pointed pen. George Lindsey knew this, and early in his college career he decided that he would be a newspaperman. He wrote slashing editorials for the College Times, and the circulation of that great journal went up several dozen copies. When his school days were over he went up to Toronto university. He still hankered after journalism, and he assisted in founding a paper which has attained the respectable age of 25 years. He and George Sanfield Mackenzie put their heads and their purses together, and soon the undergraduates and the graduates, too, had in their hands the first copy of the now renowned Varsity. Mr. Lindsey saw that the publisher required a good business manager, and he took the place himself, while Macdonald acted as editor. In the second year the business manager became editor of the prosperous publication, and ever since Varsity has been a monument to the energy of these two men. Later, in 1882, with G. A. Brown, Mr. Lindsey founded the Canadian Cricket Field, the only paper in the interest of that sport ever published in Canada. Its life was short and merry, and with its death went out the candle of Lindsey in journalism.

It will be seen that the strenuous King's Counsel of today was a sports man in his youth. So he is now academically. At the university he was a cricketer of renown. At point he used to bring off hair-raising catches, which were absolutely necessary, for, had they not been made, there would have been a dead Lindsey on the lawn. At football he was equally energetic. His work at quarter back was not the work of the qnarterback of today, but nevertheless it was in the first rank as the game was played in the early 80's. His college days over Mr. Lindsey continued to play cricket and football with the Toronto clubs of that name. He soon ceased to chase the pigskin, but up to a few years ago he was an ardent cricketer. Even to date he has always captained the Upper Canada Old Boys against the present in the annual match, wherein eleven moss-backs show the young idea how to bat, bowl and field. On these occasions the whiskered but energetic king's counsel is as frisky as a sixteen-year old.

Before his retirement from participation in the game, Mr. Lindsey was the incumbent of nearly every office in the Toronto cricket club.

However, it must not be thought that it was a case of all play and no work. In study he was as earnest as on the field. After graduating he entered the law office of Bethune and Marsh, and in 1886 he was called to the bar, after standing first in the examinations. Later he became a partner in the firm of Lount, Marsh, Lindsey & Lindsey. In the next year, 1887, the young barrister decided to carry out a plan which he had long cherished—the taking to England of a team of Canadian cricketers. The work of organization was carried out successfully. Every man on the team wrs Canadian born, and every one was, of course, an amateur. They played good cricket against the county gentlemen for the most part and won half their complete matches. With D. W. Saunders, Mr. Lindsey published on their return, a history of the tour, entitled "Cricket Across the Sea." The volume is now priced at five pounds in the catalogues of London dealers in rare books.

So much for Mr. Lindsey's training for the active business of life. With play over, work began in earnest.

Municipal politics appealed to him, and in 1890 he was elected at the head of the poll for old St. Mark's ward, Toronto, where he had passed all his days. In 1891 he was again elected, but in March of that year serious illiness compelled him to journey to California, where he remained until 1892. During hiy term as alderman he was chairman of the street railway committee of the Toronto city council while arbitration proceedings were in progress to determine the purchase value of the railway. Mr. Lindsey after 1891, did not enter municipal politics. In the provincial election of 1894 he unsuccessfully contested West Toronto in the Liberal interest. In 1900 and 1901 he was president of the Toronto Reform association.

In the practice of law Mr. Lindsey has been very successful. In 1900 he was appointed king's counsel. He is now head of the law firm of Lindsey, Lawrence & Wadsworth, and is also general counsel and third vice president of the Crow's Nest Pass Coal Co., with the duties of managing director as well as of the Crow's Nest Electric Light & Power Co., the Morrissey, Fernie & Michel railway, and the Crow's Nest Southern railway.

In 1889 Mr. Lindsey married the second daughter of the late James Bethune, Q. C.

TO THE ELECTORS OF THE CITY OF FERNIE.

GENTLEMEN:

At the request of many of the electors I have consented to become and now am a candidate for the Mayoralty of Fernie.

The first council will have many important and trying problems to deal with. Among other things which shall have my attention and which I am in favor of are the following,

1. Municipal ownership of Electric Light and Water Systems.
2. The installation of a Sewer System.
3. Adequate fire protection.
4. Street improvements.
5. A higher liquor license and firm opposition to a wide open town.

I am, and always have been, opposed to the introductio of party politics in municipal affairs and shall at all times do all that I can to frustrate any efforts to introduce such a factor into our municipal government. I am also opposed to sectional consideration. I shall not countenance any measure which is connected with mere sectional interests.

It is my intention to open the Opera House on Monday, the 15th of August at 8 p. m. at which all candidates for Mayor and Aldermen are invited to address the electors. I shall then lay before you a more complete and extended statement of my views. I am,

THOUGHT HE WAS KILLED.

A fatal accident was narrowly averted at the depot on Wednesday evening as the express was pulling out, The train was gaining considerable speed and the usual rush to the steps to board the train resulted in one man falling between the car and the platform. He was more or less under the influence of liquor and he carried a pail of jam in one hand and some other article in the other. As he fell the lid came off the jam and the contents scattered about. Being of a bright red color the on-lookers promptly mistook it for blood and the ladies turned their eyes away in horror, thinking that the man had been run over Some day someone will be killed in this way. People persist in standing on the platform until the train starts and when they gain the steps they stand there and prevent others from getting on.

WON MANY RACES.

F. J. Mitchell returned to Fernie yesterday, after spending a couple of months on the prairie as far as Winnipeg. He entered about a dozen foot races during his absence and won them all with the exception of the last one which was run at Lethbridge on Tuesday of this week. Six entered and three finished almost in a line. Although many thought that Mitchell was first the judge gave the decision as follows, 1st DeForest, 2nd Mitchell, 3rd Kenzie. The winner is a Great Falls man. The race was run in 10 1-5 sec., which is claimed to be the fastest 100 yds ever run in the Canadian Northwest. Mr. Mitchell is contemplating opening up a gents' furnishing business in Fernie.

FERNIE VICTORIOUS.

WON BASE-BALL TOURNAMENT AT LETHBRIDGE,

Defeated Lethbridge by a Score of 14-6 and Raymond in a Close Game by 10-7.

The Fernie base-ball team accompanied by several rooters journeyed down to Lethbridge on Monday evening to participate in the base-ball tournament, held during the two days sports at that town. Three teams entered for competition, Fernie, Lethbridge, and Raymond The last named won the bye and Fernie and Lethbridge played off on Tuesday.

The Fernie team in its batting order was as follows:—

Kastner, r. f. Whelan 3 b. Davies 1 b. Hanson, l. f. McMillan 2 b. McIntyre c. f. Farrell p. Harrington c. McKellar s s.

The game which consisted of only five innings was not particularly fast. Lethbridge led off with three runs, with two men out, a hit was made to McMillan who fumbled. He made second on a grounder. The next batter made a home run and three runs were scored. Lethbridge scored two in the second and one in the third and after that they were shut out. Fernie failed to score in the first two innings but in the last three they had things coming their way and they piled up fourteen runs.

THE RAYMOND GAME.

The Raymond team entered the field with a strong battery imported from Salt Lake City Smith the pitcher and Grant the catcher are members of a large excursion party who came over from Salt Lake City to Raymond and other Mormon settlements. Smith had umpired the previous game and he thereby gained some useful information which now stood him in good stead. Smith proved to be a good man, but Farrell though not so fast was given good support and by hard playing the Fernie aggregation managed to pull even with the Raymond lead at the end of the seventh which was the limit first decided upon. Each team agreed to play two innings more and Fernie won easily in the ninth with an innings to spare, making the score 7-10 in favor of the mountain team. The score by innings was

As will be seen from above, things looked a little blue for Fernie at the end of the second. Three of the five runs made by Raymond in the 2nd were caused by a wild throw by McMillan. After the second Fernie began to find Smith and they began to tally runs, while they effectually shut Raymond out. Roberts of Calgary satisfactorily umpired the game.

The trophy for the tournament was one hundred dollars in cash. The boys were much pleased with their treatment at Lethbridge.

ALBERTA OIL WELLS

Mr. C. L. Haggith of the Rocky Mountain Development Company, head quarters at Pincher Creek, was in town this week selling stock for his company. This company have several oil claims on the east slope of the Rockies about 40 miles south of Pincher Creek. One 3 inch well struck a 300 barrel flow at the depth of 1020 feet, Another well 8 inch in diameter is down 400 feet. The flowing well was capped and the Company is now putting 100,000 of its 500,000 shares on the market at half par value, 50 cents, to raise funds to build a refinery. The refinery will be built at the Company's townsite, Oil City. It will be of sufficient capacity to treat all the oil likely to be found for some time in the locality. The refinery will be in operation in nine months and it will employ 50 men.

The oil from the flowing well assays 52 per cent illuminating oil, a very high percentage indeed. The Company's claims adjoin those of the Vancouver Oil Company which has two boring outfits at work. The Great Northern, it is expected, will tap this field when the industry is put on a dividend paying basis.

MICHEL GETS A SCARE

FOREST FIRES TO DESTROY THE TOWN.

Fires on both sides of the Creek. People packed up to move. Michel's excellent Water System.

The forest fires which had been working in towards Michel for a week previous assumed serious proportions on Monday evening, and at one time it looked as if the town was doomed. The fires from the direction of Crows Nest followed down the Michel Creek on either sides and with a good wind behind it a distance of two miles was traversed in a few hours. At nine o'clock the fire was a mile and a half from the town and burning fiercely and preparations were hastily made for the worst that might happen.

Early in the evening Mine Manager D. Wilson got the fire hose in working shape and thoroughly drenched all the houses in the town. This was the first test of the fire-fighting apparatus and it exceeded the highest expectations of everybody The pump on the north side threw five strong streams at once and the gravity system on the other side maintained two steady streams. The new supply of hose made every part of the town accessible.

The wind suddenly went down about ten o clock and the immediate danger was over. Telephone and telegraph messages had been sent to Fernie and a special train was sent up which arrived shortly after midnight. Mr. Drinnan who accompanied it remained there to assist in taking steps towards extinguishing the forest fire.

The fires approached the town from the direction of Crows Nest, following the thick timber on each side of the Michel Creek. Another fire threatened the town from the vicinity of Bald Mountain. On Tuesday the wind sprang up again and brought the flames still nearer to the town. The mountain sides for fifty feet or more bordering the town have been cleared of brush, but back of that the timber is very thick and considerable dry slashing is mixed with it, making the danger great should the fire get down that far.

Considerable excitement existed in the town. Many were packed ready to move out, and holes were dug in back yards to bury valuables. Preparations were made to move children and women to Fernie.

Mr. J. W. McDonald employed by the Coal Company has been fighting the fire for a couple of weeks with a force of about forty men. The mill property at the Loop and at Crows Nest is now safe. Mr. McDonald estimates that the Company's loss is at least seventy-five million feet.

LICENSE MEETING

The Board of license Commissioners held a regular sitting at the Court House on Tuesday evening when three applications were quickly disposed of. The application for a transfer of the license of Jaffray Hotel, Jaffray from May Black Gillier to Thomas Whelan was granted.

The application of F. H. Pearson for a new license for the Royal Hotel, Jaffray was turned down on the ground that the hotel was not needed.

The application of John Marsh for a new license for the Loop Hotel was with drawn. This case had been up before and it promised to cause a long sitting at this meeting.

TO BUY GLENCAIRN IV.

It was a pleasingly familiar sight on Saturday of Millidgeville to see the redoubtable "Billy" Ganong—he of the Cedars—aboard a racing yacht, the winning Phantom. Attired in his free-and-easy togs the popular and dead game yachtsman was an agile member of the crew that so cleverly handled the little freak. Mr. Ganong is a regular water dog when it comes to racing. He developed his taste for the sport in Fredericton, enchanced it in St. John waters when he bought the old Primrose, and then while away out in the Kootenay he arranged for the purchase of the Duggan-designed craft, Glencairn IV., which is flitting here and there upon the river off the Ganong Hotel. Mr. Ganong is bound to be aboard speed whenever it is possible, and his efforts to develop a slick class of racers in this community is much appreciated by the enthusiasts. —St. John, N. B., Sun.

BEFORE THE PEOPLE.

CANDIDATES FOR MUNICIPAL HONORS SPEAK.

The Public Meeting in The Stork Opera House. Speeches by the Different Candidates.

The public meeting in The Stork Opera House on Monday evening was largely attended. Mr. Rennie occupied the chair and all the candidates for Municipal honors with the exception of Messrs Cree, Proctor and Wallace who were absent from the city, were ranged with him on the platform. The chairman briefly opened the meeting by calling upon F. Stork, candidate for mayor.

F. STORK.

Mr. Stork delivered an excellent address, holding the close attention of the audience to the end. In his opening remarks he referred to the importance of starting the municipal government upon broad and correct lines that its foundation might be "secure, plumb and square." The credit of a town as of an individual was largely guaged by the relative comparison of its revenue and its expenditure. Unless the latter was smaller than the former a good credit could not be maintained and disaster would follow. The speaker briefly enumerated some of the sources of revenue, and he outlined some of the pressing needs of the town. The streets and sidewalks must be improved without delay. The health of the town required that immediate steps be taken to secure a sewer system. He was a strong advocate of municipal ownership of electric light and water system, and lower rates. None knew better than he the need for prompt attention to the fire department. Mr. Stork then spoke of reports to the effect that party politics had entered into the campaign. He thoroughly understood the danger of such a step as he had seen how it worked in other places. He strongly denied any such motive so far as he was concerned. "I never have been, am not, and never will be a party to such a movement," said Mr. Stork. Referring to the post office site the speaker briefly stated the efforts that had been made to secure a government grant for a post office. The efforts had been successful. Nothing had been done towards locating the site. This would be done by the proper government officials, as for himself he would not use his influence in any way to help one end of the town to the detriment of the other. In conclusion Mr. Stork spoke of the many calamities which the townspeople had triumphed over. The people had ever been progressive and had stood loyally by the town. He believed none would deny him his place in this regard. He appealed for support not on the ground of friendship but of merit. "My motto shall be" concluded the speaker, "to build up the City of Fernie and make her known far and near as a city of prosperity."

J. D. QUAIL

Mr. Quail followed in a speach that was brief, modest and to the point. After thanking his supporters for their assistance he urged all present to vote in such a way as would best protect their interests. He was in favor of the Municipal ownership of all public utilities. He would favor the building of sidewalks, on a frontage tax system, when desired by a majority of the tax payers interested. He favored a high license, less hotels and more respectable hotels. He would offer no favors to one man that must be withheld from another. After jocularly comparing the stork as "the big picture bird" with the quail as "the better game bird" he asked the voters to let their own judgments dictate their actions in casting their votes.

THOMAS BECK.

The chairman in introducing the different candidates for aldermen took the the names in alphabetical order. Mr. Beck considered himself flattered that he should be asked to stand for alderman in Fernie's first election. He had received many assurances of support and he believed his election was fairly safe. He was a supporter of municipal ownership. He believed in limiting the number of licenses and in the strict enforcement of the present laws governing hotels. He scored a point on street improvements in alluding to his stumbling over various obstacles in reaching the hall that night.

MARKET REPORT.

Compiled by Thompson, Sons & Co.

Winnipeg, Thursday, Aug. 11.

WHEAT—Trading on the American speculative markets has continued very active during the past week, and on some days has been very excited. At the end of last week there was a slight halt toward an upward movement, and it was the opinion of many traders that a reaction was imminent. This feeling was stronger when Monday morning came and cables reported all European markets lower, the world's shipments much larger than expected, and a considerable increase in ocean passage. At first the American markets sold off a little, just as was generally expected they would, but very soon they began to advance, and then there followed a wild market, such as completely surprised every one who was possessed of the idea that he knew something about wheat markets. The advances for the day ranged from 3c. to 4c. On Tuesday the market was calmer but still strong, and about another cent was added to the price. It was understood that on Monday and Tuesday a number of large operators had sold their long wheat and taken their profits, and by Wednesday this caused a weaker feeling and more realizing of long wheat took place. The effect of this was that prices declined from 1c. to 2c. Then to-day the trade has been treated to a repetition of Monday's experience. The damage reports regarding the spring wheat in the Dakotas and Minnesota, which had been considered so serious last week, were beginning to lose some of their effect, and yesterday the United States' Government crop report, giving condition of spring wheat on August 1st, was issued, and was considered bearish. The trade was therefore prepared to see a substantial decline in prices even if the same might only prove temporary. This morning cables were all lower, and American markets were 1½c. down immediately after the opening, and then came the turn and advance, and the same kind of wild market followed as on Monday. There was an advance of about 5c. from the early low point, and a total advance of 3c. to 3½c. over yesterday, and closing prices are the highest since the last week in February, when the war boom was at the top notch. The course of the markets during the past seven days shows how wildly uncertain they can be when nervousness and excitement seizes hold on the trade and the public. It turns the American wheat market into a veritable gambling institution, and when the spasm of excitement is over, and the trade finds its legitimate level again, it leaves many sadder and poorer men in its wake, and a good many of them unfortunately not much wiser. The advance in the American markets on the week is fully 6c. per bushel, and the price of wheat is now higher in Chicago than it is in Liverpool. European markets have advanced slightly in sympathy with American markets, but buyers over there are slow to see the necessity of higher prices than are now current, and prefer to wait more definite and reliable estimates of ultimate yield before entering into extensive transactions. Millers and merchants therefore are only working from hand to mouth. Except for some extension of damage to portions of the spring wheat crop in the Dakotas and Minnesota, there is practically no change during the week in the prospects of the world's crops. A long spell of fine weather has been very favorable for the harvest in Western Europe, and has put a fine finish on the wheat crop, so that it is of high quality, and in condition immediately available for the miller, very different from the preceding two years, when wet weather spoiled so much of it, and caused a goodly percentage to be used for cattle feed, this year every bushel will be available for the mill. In Manitoba and over the spring wheat country of North America, the weather has been very favorable lately for the ripening crop. There is fair prospect at present that cutting will be general in Manitoba from the 20th to the 25th inst., and the crop is in excellent shape, and has sustained no damage from any cause. Present prospect for yield may be put at 70,000,000 bushels. In Argentina and Australia the growing crops are doing well, plenty of rain having fallen recently, and the acreage under crop shows an increase of at least 10 per cent. over last year. The visible supply decreased last week 580,000 bushels, against an increase of 918,000 bushels the previous week and a decrease last year of 315,000 bushels. A substantial increase was expected in the visible supply last week owing to the largeness of primary receipts, but it is explained that the bulk of the receipts have been going into private elevators and do not appear in the visible supply statement. The world's shipments were 9,112,000 bushels, against 8,638,000 bushels the previous week, and only 6,448,00 bus. last year. The world's visible supply, according to Bradstreet's, increased 1,307,000 bushels, against a decrease of 314,000 bushels the previous week and a decrease of 2,948,000 bushels last year, and the world's visible supply is now 21,000,000 bushels larger than a year ago. The quantity of wheat on passage to Europe is also 15,100,000 bushels larger than a year ago.

Manitoba wheat during the past week has been considerably influenced by the excitement in the American markets, and on the week there is an advance in the price of cash wheat of 1½c. per bushel. But speculators do not buy cash wheat; they deal in wheat for future delivery. The buyer who buys for immediate delivery and takes over the wheat, and pays the cash for it with the intention of holding in expectation of selling later on at an advance, is an investor. The speculator who buys or sells for future delivery does not, as a rule, intend to take delivery or give delivery of the actual wheat, but to close his deal on the option board by a contrary transaction of buying or selling, as the case may be. The influence of speculation on prices is well shown by the course of trading this week on the Winnipeg market. While wheat for immediate or August delivery has only advanced 1½c. per bushel, wheat for October delivery has advanced 5¾c. and for May 4c. per bushel. The advance in prices has practicallly put shippers and exporters off the market, and the advanced prices are mostly speculative and nominal, as only small lots of wheat change hands for immediate delivery. The movement of old wheat is about over for the season, and the trade is now looking forward to make preparations to handle the new crop. At the present writing the prospect is very encouraging for a large and good crop over Manitoba and the Canadian Northwest, but as it is a week to two weeks yet before the bulk of it will be ready to cut, we cannot say it is yet assured as to quality, but every day that passes now without frost damage is making assurance of quantity, and we consider the prospect at writing is good for 70,000,000 bushels of wheat, or say 15,000,000 bushels more than last year. The following are the prices on to-day's Winnipeg market, viz.: 1 Nor., 99c.; 2 Nor., 96c.; 3 Nor., 93c. No. 4 wheat, 84c.; feed wheat, 72c.; No. 2 feed, 63c., spot or August delivery. For October delivery: 1 Nor., 94c.; 2 Nor., 91c.; all in store Fort William and Port Arthur.

Bitten by Rattlesnake.

At Mandan, N. D., a young daughter of Mr. S. F. Goodreau, was bitten by a rattlesnake. The little one was walking from the house to the garden, when she stepped on or near a rattlesnake, and was bitten on the main artery of the leg. Her little sisters who were with her did not know it was a snake, as it did not rattle, but after the little one commenced to scratch and complain of her leg itching, she remembered the snake or stick as she thought it was. Mr. Goodreau went out to the place, and found a huge rattlesnake. It did not rattle but struck viciously when he killed it. Fresh killed chickens, whiskey, sucking the wound and every remedy possible were applied, but the poor child died in fearful agony in a few hours. Between July 25th and August 15th rattlesnakes are blind and change their skins. They are very vicious at this time and strike blindly at anything they hear.

After being ejected from the home of J. Pritchard did not shoot, and the intruder turned and disappeared in the darkness. The police are unable to find any trace of the nervy prowler.

He was knocked out of the waggon by one of the men, secured, and taken into Sheho, where he was taken in charge by Mounted Police Constable Goldsmith. At a preliminary hearing McMaster was remanded for trial at Yorkton on Aug. 18. Latest reports say the injured men are doing well, and will likely recover.

CONTINENTAL CAPITALISTS COMING

The European capitalists who arrived in Winnipeg a little more than two weeks ago, to see for themselves the resources of western Canada, have all returned to New York, whence they will sail for Europe. They were Joseph Brunner, of Brussels, Belgium; P. W. West, of Paris, and Edward Jacobs, of Antwerp, Belgium, and with them came M. Demme, of Paris and London. These gentlemen, who are directors of large banking institutions in France and Belgium, were in this part of the country seeking openings for profitable investment of capital. Already they have invested largely in Egypt and in the Argentine republic, and now have had a look through Canada, with the same purpose in view. In the two weeks they have spent in the west they have seen almost all portions of the country, and have had many novel experiences. For instance, they drove some two hundred miles in the country between Edmonton and Battleford. In Edmonton an informal meeting of several of the leading business men was held at the Edmonton Club in their honor. The resources of Edmonton and the surrounding country were pointed out in speeches by Mayor Short, T. W. Lines, of the Brackman-Ker Company, and T. M. Turnbull, of the Bank of Commerce. In Winnipeg, on their return, the gentlemen of the party expressed themselves as immensely pleased with the country. It had in every respect exceeded their anticipations. The portions of northern Alberta suitable for mixed farming and for dairying probably impressed them most. With regard to their plans they had no hesitation in stating that on returning to Europe a company would be formed to operate in the Canadian west. Just what line they intended to take up could not exactly be determined, but one feature will be the bringing out of settlers to place on western lands. They left for New York a few days ago. M. Demme will return in a short time to Canada in connection with the investments of the company it is proposed to form.

C.N.R HAS ATLANTIC PORT.

Mackenzie & Mann File Plans with Dominion Minister of Railways.

Messrs. Mackenzie & Mann, undaunted by the advent of the G. T. P. in the field of transcontinental transportation, continue steadily at work on their project for a line of railway having its terminus on the shores of the Atlantic and Pacific. At the last session of Parliament, a bill introduced by Mr. H. J. Logan, of Cumberland, was passed, chartering the Quebec, New Brunswick and Nova Scotia Railway. The plans of the route proposed to be traversed by the new company, which were filed a few days ago with the Minister of Railways, are signed by Mr. D. D. Mann, of Mackenzie & Mann. The route located is from a point on the Great Northern Railway near Quebec, across the Quebec bridge, and in the valley of the Etchemin river to the international boundary. Crossing the State of Maine an air line is taken with Woodstock, N. B., as the objective point. From Woodstock the line runs to Fredericton, thence via Moncton through the northern portions of the counties of Westmoreland and Cumberland to Pugwash. From Pugwash the company proposes utilizing the short line of the Intercolonial to New Glasgow, where they will connect with the proposed line which Messrs. Mackenzie and Mann are constructing to Country Harbor, N. S., the proposed new Atlantic port. A branch is laid down on the map from the main line down the valley of the St. John river to the city of St. John, N. B. Mackenzie and Mann, it is understood, have already secured connections between Quebec and the great lakes via the Great Northern, which connects with the Canada Atlantic railway, affording a very direct route to Depot harbor.

Chamberlain on Stump Again.

A cable from London says: Joseph Chamberlain reopened his fiscal campaign a few days ago, addressing a meeting of ten to twelve thousand persons from the surrounding agricultural counties in the riding school of Welbeck Abbey, near Worksop, Nottinghamshire. He maintained that the misery of their grandfathers was due, not to the price of grain, as alleged by the free traders, but to lack of employment. It was, therefore, the duty of the people to ascertain what policy would give most employment and most wages. He proposed to give agriculture the same advantages as manufactures, by imposing an import duty on the chief products, namely, 50 cents per quarter on wheat and such duty on flour as would result in the whole milling of wheat being done in this country. He would place a similar duty of 50 cents per quarter on every kind of grain except maize, which was an important foodstuff, and 5 per cent. on meat, dairy products, butter, cheese and preserved milk, poultry, eggs, vegetables and fruits.

Cheap Rate to the Coast.

The Canadian Pacific Railway, with commendable enterprise, is placing on sale return tickets to Vancouver and Victoria at single first-class fare. This opportunity to visit the coast cities at such reduced rates will no doubt result in a more intimate acquaintance with our British Columbia friends, and as the tickets are good to return within 60 days from date of sale it is probable that a large number of Manitobans will take advantage of these excursion trains leaving Winnipeg on Aug. 15th, 16th, 17th and 18th. The tickets are good going 15 days.

A MASONIC SOUVENIR.

Sir Knights of California Sending a Royal Gift to King Edward VII.

The Sir Knights of California are preparing a gift to King Edward of England as a souvenir of the Conclave which he has honored by sending a delegation as his personal representatives. The Sir Knights, appreciative of the honor bestowed upon them by the foreign potentate, and this being the first instance that a delegation of distinguished Knights representing the highest Masonic bodies crossed the ocean to attend a Conclave, will send their token to Britain's King by that very delegation, as a souvenir of the Templar Conclave held at San Francisco. The gift is to be such that the King will appreciate and treasure it among the most valued in his possession. Under the auspices, and with the sanction of the Triennial Committee, a volume will be printed containing the history of the twenty-ninth Triennial Conclave, with all the incidents of that most memorable event. It will contain a complete and accurate record of the Conclave. The book, which is intended for all Sir Knights as a souvenir of the Conclave, will combine all that the best of the printer's, engraver's and binder's art can produce. Neither skill, effort nor cost will be spared to make it a volume of such exceptional merit and attractiveness that it will convey a correct impression of what San Francisco is capable of in that line. The volume which is to be sent to King Edward is to be printed on the choicest vellum, nine by twelve inches in size, 800 pages, and bound in the highest art. The cover for the precious volume is now being made by Shreve & Co., of San Francisco, of California silver. The designers, apparently imbued by their important task, have evinced exceptional taste and true artistic sympathy in making a dignified and appropriate dress for the royal volume. Filled with the spirit of the craftsmen of old, they have departed from the conventional lines and supplemented the binder's work by the silversmith's art and skill. The cover is entirely of hand-wrought silver worked into a rich, simple, scheme of fourteenth century bands, graceful scrolls and silver studding. The dimensions of the cover are such as to permit ample space for an imposing figure of a golden knight, suggestively backed by a crimson cross, and an underlay of morocco of the same color. The balance of the background for the silver work is of black morocco, a rich and appropriate combination of crimson, black and silver. The reverse cover is bordered with a silver band massively studded by wrought silver nails over uniform black morocco, relieved by a centre plate upon which is engraved the Seal of California. The two covers are held, as were the tomes of old, by a clasp of heavy wrought silver. The volume resembles two massive doors, covering the records of the noble knights, and to be opened to one of the most exalted of the fraternity. This book-casket holding the treasures of the Conclave's history, will be a genuine and dignified symbol of Knighthood and of California, fit to be presented to a Knightly King.

WHAT THE DOCTOR DOES.

The first thing the doctor does when he is called to see a fretting, worrying baby is to give it a medicine to move the bowels and sweeten the stomach. The doctor knows that nine-tenths of the troubles affecting babies and young children are due to irritation of the stomach or bowels, and that when the cause is removed the child is well and happy. Baby's Own Tablets are an always-at-hand doctor, and promptly cure all the minor ills of little ones. They contain no poisonous "soothing" stuff, and may be given with safety to the tenderest infant, or the well grown child. Mrs. J. Overand, Hepworth Station, Ont., says: "My little one was much troubled with indigestion, and Baby's Own Tablets gave immediate relief. I have found the Tablets the most satisfactory medicine I have ever used for children." Sold by all medicine dealers or sent by mail at 25 cents a box, by writing The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

A patient at the Selkirk asylum was seen exercising with a wheelbarrow on the lawn the other day. "Why do you run your wheelbarrow turned upside down?" asked a bystander. "Because I am crazy," replied the patient. "If I turned it up the other way they might fill it with bricks."

Very many persons die annually from cholera and kindred summer complaints, who might have been saved if proper remedies had been used. If attacked do not delay in getting a bottle of Dr. J. D. PERT PARAGRAPHS.

Would it be proper, if a woman's hair is blond ardent, to call her brass mounted?

Doubtless the reason that truth is stranger than fiction is because the truth is so seldom met with.

A man's idea of generosity is doing as he pleases and letting his wife look out for herself.

The chronic borrower loveth a cheerful giver.

A pretty woman sometimes has a way of making herself plain, in which case she is always understood.

Some people are so slow that old age overtakes them while they are yet in their prime.

Some women do their marketing at the store where the color of the trading stamps matches the color of their street gown.

A Perfect Lady.

Oh, the fair lady sits in her mansion up there;
She's surrounded by wealth and by art,
But her listless look and her world wearied air
Do not speak of a blithesome heart.

There's a maid at her hand to respond to her call,
Of her lightest request to take heed,
And of servants a score are below in the hall
To respond to her whim or her need.

But the lady is sad and her head is bent down,
And her waiting maid begs her to say
What's the source of her grief, what's the cause of her frown
(Oh, the maid is but earning her pay).

And the lady replies, "It is hard work to smile,
To exertion I never was used;
Therefore try to get some one with humor and style,
Who will laugh for me when I'm amused."

Time Made a Difference.

ANOTHER VOICE ON THE PRAIRIES

Tells of Diabetes Cured by Dodd's Kidney Pills.

W. G. Bartleman could get no Relief till He Tried the Great Canadian Kidney Remedy.

Wapella, Assa., N.W.T., Aug. 15.—(Special).—This thriving town furnishes one of the most remarkable cures of Kidney Disease that has ever been reported on the prairies. Mr. Wm. G. Bartleman, a well-known farmer, is the man cured, and he makes the following statement:—

"I had Kidney Trouble and it developed into Diabetes. I went to the doctor, but his treatment was of no use whatever to me. I began to take Dodd's Kidney Pills in December, 1902. I took them all winter and summer while I was unable to work my farm. I took twelve boxes in all and in August I was able to work.

"Now I am quite strong. I worked all winter without pains in my back or any part of my body. Dodd's Kidney Pills cured me." H

If the Kidney Disease is of long standing it may take time to cure it. But Dodd's Kidney Pills will do it.

Faulty Kidneys.—Have you backache? Do you feel drowsy? Do your limbs feel heavy? Have you frequent headaches? Have you failing vision? Have you dizzy feeling? Are you depressed? Is you skin dry? Their excellent qualities are well known to all those who have used them, and they commend themselves to dyspeptics and those subject to biliousness who are in quest of a beneficial medicine.

A PLEASANT MEDICINE.—There are some pills which have no other purpose evidently than to beget painful internal disturbances in the patient, adding to his troubles and perplexities rather than diminishing them. One might as well swallow some corrosive material. Parmelee's Vegetable Pills have not this disagreeable and injurious property. They are easy to take, are not unpleasant to the taste, and their action is mild and soothing. A trial of them will prove this. They offer peace to the dyspeptic.

MYSTERIES OF NATURE.

Some of the Many Things That Find No Ready Explanation.

Whatever opens up new doors or windows for us into the world about us, whatever widens the field of our interests and sympathies, has some sort of value, says John Burroughs in Country Life In America. But much of the so called nature study opens no new doors or windows. It affords no mental satisfaction or illumination or aesthetic pleasure. It is mainly pottering with dry, unimportant facts and details. Do you know the edelweiss flowers or our own matchless arbutus after you have merely analyzed and classified them? No more than you know a man after having weighed and measured him. The function of things is always interesting. What do they do? How do they pay their way in the rigid economy of nature? How do they survive? Why do the roots of trees flow through the ground like "runnels of molten metal," often separating and uniting again, while the branches are thrust out in right lines or curves?

Why is our common yellow birch more often than any other tree planted upon a rock? Why do oaks or chestnuts so often spring up where a pine or hemlock forest has been cleared away? Why does lightning so commonly strike a hemlock tree or a pine or an oak and rarely or never a birch? Why does the bolt sometimes scatter the tree about and at others only plow a channel down its trunk? Why does the bumblebee complain so loudly when working upon certain flowers? Why does the honeybee lose the sting when it stings a person, while the wasp, the hornet and the bumblebee do not? How does the chimney swallow get the twigs it builds its nest with? From what does the hornet make its paper?

I have never been greatly interested in spiders, but I have always wanted to know how a certain spider managed to stretch her cable squarely across the road in the woods about my height from the ground.

One Way.

Typewriter Agent—Here, my friend, your last payments on your machine are not due until next month. Why do you insist on paying now?

Typewriter Purchaser—Well, you see, the machine is going to pieces so rapidly that I saw I'd have to hurry up if I got it paid for before it was worn out, and that would never do, you know, to pay for a worn out machine! I couldn't afford it.

"BY MEDICINE LIFE MAY BE PROLONGED."—So wrote Shakespeare nearly three hundred years ago. It is so today. Medicine will prolong life, but be sure of the qualities of the medicine. Life is prolonged by keeping the body free from disease. "Well, I made the sale all right," said the new salesman. "But you lied to her," protested the proprietor. "You told her they were genuine old Irish laces." "No, I didn't. She simply said she didn't want any 'bogus imitations,' and I assured her ours were genuine."

Eat what you like.—Give the digestive organs some work to do. These functions need exercise as much as any part of the human anatomy, but if they're delicate, give them the aid that Dr. Von Stan's Pineapple Tablets afford and you can eat anything that's wholesome and palatable—60 in a box. 35 cents.—8

Two Headed Symbols.

Both Russia and Germany display two headed eagles on their standards. Yet this symbol is considered by some heralds to be merely the result of the heraldic practice of "dimidiation." This was simply a child's way of impaling two coats of arms on the same shield by the primitive method of cutting each in half and taking the dexter half of one and the sinister half of the other and placing them back to back, as it were. Strange two headed beasts naturally resulted, as, for instance, when a lion and an eagle were halved and joined together. The griffin is supposed to have been evolved from two lions rampant by dimidiation. It robs the two headed eagle of half its terrors to know that it owes its origin to this sort of child's play.

REQUIRED HELP TO MOVE IN BED.

Was a Great Sufferer and almost in Despair—New Hope and Strength Came with the Use of

DR. CHASE'S NERVE FOOD.

This great food cure is doing wonders for weak, worn-out and discouraged women.

Many medicines which are prescribed in such cases are merely stimulants which give temporary relief and arouse false hope.

Because Dr. Chase's Nerve Food actually forms new, rich blood and increases the vitality of the body, its benefits are thorough and lasting and its cures permanent.

Mrs. M. A. Clock, Meaford, Ont., writes: "Three years ago I became very much run down in health and suffered from weak, tired feelings, indigestion and rheumatism. At times I was so badly used up that I required help to move in bed. While sick and downhearted I received Dr. Chase's Almanac, and sent for some of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food.

"Under this treatment I soon began to improve, and by the time I had used eleven boxes of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food I was happy to find myself strong and well again. I often think of what a lot of money I spent for medicines which did me no good, and I believe I owe my life to Dr. Chase's Nerve Food. I hope women who suffer as I did will benefit by my experience and use Dr. Chase's Nerve Food."

Do Birds Enjoy Their Own Singing?

It may well be doubted if birds are musical connoisseurs or have anything like human appreciation of their own or of each other's songs. My reason for thinking so is this: I have heard a bobolink with a defective instrument so that its song was broken and inarticulate in parts, and yet it sang with as much apparent joy and abandon as any of its fellows. I have also heard a hermit thrush with a similar defect or impediment, and yet it, too, appeared to sing entirely to its own satisfaction. It would be very interesting to know if these poor singers found mates as readily as their more gifted brothers. If they did the Darwinian theory of "sexual selection" in such matters, according to which the finer songster would carry off the female, would fall to the ground. Yet it is certain that it is during the mating and breeding season that these "song combats" occur, and the favor of the female would seem to be the matter in dispute. Whether or not it be expressive of actual jealousy or rivalry, we have no other words to apply to it.—John Burroughs in Harper's Magazine.

THE FERNIE FREE PRESS, FERNIE BRITISH COLUMBIA

FRIDAY, AUG. 19, 1904.

DELIBERATE FALSEHOOD.

The editor of the Nelson Tribune is showing a surprising interest in the affairs of the City of Fernie but we are of the opinion that this interest is not prompted by other than ulterior motives. In our last issue we referred to certain criticisms that the Tribune was offering on the qualifications governing the first voters list for the City of Fernie. The Tribune in its issue of the 15th replied as follows:

"The Tribune stated that the qualications of voters at the first municipal election at Fernie were not in accordance with the provisions of the municipal Elections Act, and, more, that this was done with design. The Fernie Free Press says that the Tribune does n t know what it is talking about; that the qualifications of voters at Fernie is the same as is provided by the elections act. The Tribune is right and the Free Press is wrong. The editor of the Tribune drafted the sections of the Municipal Elections Act relating to the qualifications of electors in city municipalities, and the section describing the qualifications of voters reads as follows:

" 'In the city municipalities, any male or female, being a British subject of the full age of 21 years, who is the owner of real estate of the assessed value of not less than $100 or who is the representative, being a resident British subject duly authorized by the directors of an incorporated company, which is the assessed owner of lands or of improvements of lands, situated within the municipality, or who is the holder of a trade license, the annual fee of which is not less than $5, or who is a householder who has paid on or before the 31st day of December in the year immediately prior to the day of nomination, all municipal rates, taxes, assessments, rentals, and license fees (which are not chargeable on land), payable by him or her to the municipality; shall be entitled to have his or her name entered on the voters' list of the municipality," etc., etc.

"Compare the above with the qualification of voters at the first municipal election for the "city" not "township," of Fernie, which reads as follows:

" 'The persons qualified to vote for mayor and aldermen at such first electiou shall be all such persons as are male British subjects of the full age of 21 years, who are freeholders, homesteaders, or pre-emptors within the boundaries of the municipality, who have resided within the boundaries of the municipality for one year immediately preceding the date of the letters patent," etc., etc.

We credited the editor of The Tribune with more shrewdness than to carry a "bluff" this far. We know he is a discredited "sorehead" Conservative and that he loses no opportunity of getting even with those whom he believes were connected with his downfall, but we did not believe he would go to the extent of deliberately stooping to falsehood to gain his ends, especially when the proving of the falsehood consists in no more than a brief reference to the Statutes of the Province. The qualifications quoted by the Tribune as being the correct ones are found in Section 6 of Chapter 68 of the revised statutes 1897, as amended by Section 2 of Chapter 20 of the statutes of 1902, and it is quoted correctly with not a word missing, but care has been shown to omit the the first clause of the section, which slightly changes the application of the above quotation. The following is the omitted clause:

"AFTER THE FIRST municipal election the following persons shall be entitled to vote for any person who is duly nominated as a candidate for any elective office at any election in municipalities."

Section 4 of the Municipal Election Act sets forth the qualifications of voters for the FIRST election and they are as used in this election with the addition of one word which has slipped in unnoticed.

Now whether the editor of the Tribune helped to frame this clause or not he certainly must have known that it was there. He deliberately backed up one falsehood with another by a clumsy mutilation of the statutes and tried to bluff it out. The perpetrator of such tricks and subterfuges in journalism is deserving of the vile epithets that the Tribune so freely bestows upon those who have been so unfortunate as to meet its displeasure. The people of this city invite public criticism of its public affairs but when advantage is taken of this privilege to vent one's spleen on one of its worthy citizens the bounds of decency have been overstepped. The press is the servant of the public and should not be used as an instrument of retaliation. Furthermore no reputable newspaper man would stoop to further his private quarrels by making use of a weapon which his adversary does not possess.

His Worship, Mayor Stork!

The first council meeting will be held tomorrow morning at the court house.

THE water system which for some time had been connected with the lower reservoir while repairs were made at the upper reservoir has again been connected with the latter. The danger from illness in using the water below Coal Creek may be more imaginary than real but many of the townspeople would much prefer being notified when such repairs are necessary so that due precautions may be taken by boiling water.

THE election has been conducted in a very friendly spirit throughout. All could not be elected, the people have made their choice, and the defeated candidates will doubtless accept their verdict in a philosophical manner. It now remains for our city council to get down to business for there is much to be done. In this they will have the support and good wishes of all loyal citizens.

CHAPTER VII.

THE DOCTRESS.

LEON'S life hung for weeks on the merest thread. Fever consumed his body and mind, creating hallucinations peopled by Odette, Oakfell and Estelle, whose names were oftenest on his parched lips. The excess of his punishment was discussed throughout the parish in terms condemnatory of Quillebert, to prosecute whom should the jockey die determination was expressed. The medication of Dr. De Roux seemed impotent, a profound and ominous gloom settled upon the slaves on all the plantations, the patrol of constables was nightly re-enforced by volunteers, Quillebert's bottle and card familiars obscured themselves, and he felt deeply disturbed by the entire situation. He drank brandy at home and rum at Dede's cabaret at Mansura. In this latter he was blasphemously inveighing against the doctor's unskillfulness when Dede remarked:

"It is you who lack sense. Why don't you stop throwing away money on De Roux and drop a gold eagle in the lap of old Mother Deshautelles, Laure Luneau's grandmother?"

"What can she do, you pitiful idiot?" Quillebert snapped.

"She can cure your jockey and save you from being tarred and feathered, you Gascon hog," retorted Dede. "She is a doctress served by the saints themselves. Alexe Boudreau's fine trotter could not touch his right hind foot to the ground for four days. Alexe called on Mother Deshautelles. She gave him a dry piece of flannel to put on the horse's hoof. He did so and dealt him a sharp blow. Down went the hoof, and the horse has not limped since. During 48 hours Tatin's boy could not swallow. He was carried to Mother Deshautelles, who laid her hand on his throat just for one second. As soon as he got home he ate a quart of gumbo and can now swallow an egg without breaking it. Bertrand Dufilho called to his wife one night for a candle. She asked him, 'Where is the candle?' For three days she kept repeating, 'Where is the candle, where is the candle?' She did not eat or sleep and continued saying, 'Where is the candle, where is the candle?' Dr. Leme was called to her, but he could do nothing. Her strength gave out, and they had to put her to bed. Still she went on asking, 'Where is the candle, where is the candle?' The priest was sent for, and he burned candles and incense and sprinkled water and talked Latin, but she kept on asking, 'Where is the candle, where is the candle?' Finally Bertrand brought Mother Deshautelles. She sat by the bed and heard the feeble voice whisper, 'Where is the candle, where is the candle?' and, touching her lips with a candle she had carried there, said to her, 'There, the candle!' Mme. Dufilho opened her eyes and, looking first at the candle and then at Mother Deshautelles, closed them again and immediately fell asleep. From that day to this she has never asked, 'Where is the candle?'"

"Do you take me for a fool, Dede, or are you really simple enough yourself to believe such crazy stuff?"

"Crazy stuff!" exclaimed Dede. "I tell you, Quillebert, those are facts, and there are hundreds more known. She is the most powerful doctress since the old nun Bazilia died, who cured the bishop of Natchez of a snake bite. But it isn't every one she will serve, for she is a pious woman. She may refuse you, who are such a fool as not to believe what you cannot understand, who do not believe in God or the saints or the devil. When your jockey dies and the planters begin to hold meetings, perhaps you will no longer believe in rum, cards, ox whip and yourself, which thus far have made up your creed."

Quillebert's philosophical skepticism was demolished by this last stroke of Dede's, and, visibly frightened, he said:

"And do you think this old witch will not sell her charm for my gold?"

"Though she takes it, gold cannot buy her," Dede replied. "You risk failure if you depend upon yourself and gold alone, for the priests have put on you the brand of heretic and on your gold the mintage mark of hell."

"Except what I give them," snarled Quillebert.

"That's plain," laughed Dede. "They purify by exorcism whatever goes to their holy uses. But there is just one chance for you, Constant, and it should be a good one."

"And what is that?" Quillebert anxiously inquired.

"Laure Luneau," Dede answered. "You made a great fight for her at the election of the bell's godmother, and she is your friend for that. Moreover, she hates that overbearing American Oakfell and the simpering doll Estelle Latiolais, and she is a true Gasconne. Her grandmother will do for her what she might deny to the rest of the world. Seek Laure and at once."

"You are right, Dede, and your Gascon wit has not been entirely burned out by your rum, which is so fiery that I believe it is distilled where the priests say my gold is coined. Give me another glass of it, and I will see my little partisan this very day. Gascon shrewdness is a match at any time for hectoring Americanism, and we'll head off this infernal abolitionist Oakfell yet."

"What is that you say? Abolitionist!" exclaimed Dede, placing before his patron the brimming glass of liquor.

"Not so loud, idiot!" Quillebert said, and, with the look of cruel ferocity which came into his visage whenever his malevolence was at work, he added in a low, grumbling tone: "Did not his speech at Baton Rouge prove him an abolitionist? I believe he has been tampering with that rascal Leon. I believe he is at the bottom of all this scare about an uprising among the negroes if Leon should give the pretext by dying. I believe he has been bargained with by the abolitionists to be paid double the price of his own slaves for his services in setting all the others free. But say nothing about this now, Dede; only watch and listen."

Emptying the glass at one draft, though the liquid heat forced the brine to his hardened eyes, he mounted his horse and briskly rode down into the swamp in the direction of Mother Deshautelles' house, leaving Dede with bristling brows drawn down, bloated chin lowered to his chest and countenance of tarnished brass wrapped in an expression of deep cogitation.

The dwelling of the doctress was a tight and durable cottage built of cypress logs daubed with mud, resting upon pillars of cypress butts, arranged into four large chambers, which were divided by a broad hallway, with the inevitable deep veranda in front and the usual kitchen accessories in the rear. Its site was an eminence, a geological aberration in this region of dead levels, where swamp forest broke upon the bare alluvion at the junction of Bayous Rouge and Des Glaises. Mother Deshautelles had never had slaves of her own or planting interests, but had made the income of a small fortune inherited in France suffice for the frugal yet comfortable maintenance of herself and daughter and, after the latter's death, her granddaughter Laure. In former years she had been much in demand as midwife and sick nurse. Her rewards enabled her to hire a negro man to cultivate her garden and provide fuel and a woman for kitchen and cow sheds; also to purchase the largest, stoutest of buggies and the most powerful of mules to draw it, for she was a person of heroic stature, and now in octogenarian years her obesity was such that only with much labor could she walk from room to room. Her journeyings, accomplished with exertion and discomfort, were limited to attendance at the mass at Easter and Christmas and responses in extreme cases to the calls of neighbors who had exceptional claims to her consideration. Her massive head and face were of leonine majesty. The thick white hair and unwinked eyes still spoke strength of character. She was in truth a woman of forceful personality, respected by the intelligent, feared by the ignorant and superstitious.

A short distance within the swamp lay a shallow marais, or pond, choked with water lilies and swarming with ecrevisses, the red crayfish of Louisiana. Bareheaded, barefooted and ankle deep in the marais stood Laure, with hoop net at the end of a long, slight staff, scooping ecrevisses into a basket on her arm for the making of broth for the evening's meal. So intent was she in the pursuit that she was unaware of Quillebert's presence until, after silently feasting his prurient eyes upon the firm, trim limbs and brown and red cheeks of the unconscious girl, he laughed aloud and accosted her:

"Ha, little Gasconne, what a picture—the forest, the marais, the lilies, the nut brown maid with twinkling feet and blushing cheek! Father Grhe has no painting in his church at Mansura to match this one in my church, the great church of nature."

"M. Constant," she cried, "it is not nice to creep out of the bushes at one like this! Go away—at least until I can put on my stockings and shoes!" The flush in her face was for surprise, but the sparkle in her black eyes was not for offense.

"I will not budge an inch," he said, "so come out, my nymph, for I want your aid."

"Glad to be of service to you, M. Constant, but I will not stir a step till you are out of view," said Laure, with a resoluteness which he saw it was useless to combat. He knew she would stand there like a statue until the stars came out if her demand was not complied with.

"And how long shall I be kept out of view, my empress?"

"When I am ready," she replied, "I will sing—

"Soldier, soldier, marry, marry me."

"But that will bring every gallant within hearing of your siren voice," said Quillebert, "and I crave a secret conference with you."

"Then I will sing so low that only the Chevalier Constant de Quillebert shall hear," she said, with a mock air of lofty assurance.

"Pray abbreviate the banishment of your languishing knight as much as you can, for—

"I have little to say
And far to go,
Quick, dear, quick!"

rejoined Quillebert and rode back into the forest.

Laure stood motionless until she could no longer hear the sound of the horse's feet; then, peering searchingly into the thick undergrowth behind which her visitor had disappeared, she tripped lightly out of the water and, dropping net and basket, seized her shoes and hose. With the nimbleness of a doe she sprang behind a huge cypress tree and the concavity of its trunk converted into a toilet, where, drying her feet with grass and leaves, she was quickly shod. Taking her hat from the palmetto spike on which it hung, she adjusted it fetchingly upon her head and, stepping out, took up the net rod and leaned lightly upon it as a staff. Verily she looked the sylvan beauty of the poets as in rich contralto she sang:

"Soldier, soldier, marry, marry me."

Quillebert could not have been far distant, for the line was hardly finished when he emerged from the bushes, having tied his horse to a tree.

"What a change, my little actress, from the bewitching to the bewildering!" he said.

"I do not like to hear an old man talk so, and young men never say such things to me," she complained.

"Be patient, Laure. You will hear enough of that sort from acceptable lips. Now, little one"—Quillebert had suddenly become grave—"listen to some serious talk, for I am troubled. Will you do me a friendly turn? It is not for nothing. I have at home a beautiful little watch made at Havre, inlaid with rubies and diamonds. If what I wish is accomplished, that watch shall nestle beneath the satin belt you will wear at the next ball."

"M. Constant, surely I need no bribe to serve you. I am already under more obligation than I can ever discharge."

"Nonsense, child. I do not mean to bribe you, but I do mean that no one can ever confer a benefit on Constant Quillebert without being the gainer thereby."

"What is it you desire me to do?"

"It is this: My jockey has been very sick since he was whipped for running away. Some think he will die. That incompetent De Roux does not know how to handle the case. Oakfell, who is thought to be paid by the abolitionists, is in an underhand way seeking to arouse public sentiment against me and has already excited old Latiolais' shallow headed granddaughter, who has said some bitter things to the priest Grhe and others. She has the notion that the swaggering American is looking her way, and she struts mightily."

"The double faced thing!" exclaimed Laura vindictively.

"Should Leon die," continued Quillebert, "it is thought Oakfell will urge a popular demonstration, maybe a prosecution. I would avoid all this. If Leon recovers, I will pay back the conspirators with interest."

"Estelle, too?" demanded Laure.

"If she gets in the way, she shall have her share," he answered.

"Then what can I do?" she asked, with a satisfied air.

"This—persuade your grandmother to give you the cure for Leon."

"Oh, M. Constant! I fear your unfriendliness to the church will prevent."

"How? Does any one here give more to the priests and the convents than I do? But that is not to the point. I am not sick. The cure is for Leon. Besides, I am your friend, Laure, and your enemies are my enemies."

"Must you have it today?"

"At once. There is not one minute to spare. If Leon is not better by tomorrow morning, he will not live the week out."

"I will try," Laure consented after short reflection.

"Take this; it may help your argument," said Quillebert, handing her a shining double eagle goldpiece.

"Back into the bushes, then, till I return," said she.

Quillebert did as he was bidden, and the girl walked rapidly to the cottage. The half hour of her absence appeared to him all but interminable, and it was as one freed from long imprisonment that he sprang from the matted vines and brush when she stopped beside the tree holding her hands behind her and sang:

Hard to Kill.

Cats, according to the old tradition, have nine lives, but they are not the only creatures that enjoy such a plurality. Infusoria have been dried and restored to life by moistening after remaining inert dust for twenty-seven years, and the drying resuscitation has been successfully tried eleven times on one lot of rotifers. Frogs and many fishes suffer no injury from freezing solid, while in a few cases even warm blooded animals have been restored to life after apparent death from freezing.

A FOREWORD.

There are many standards—moral, material and intellectual—by which the progress of the Canadian West may be measured, and to all of them the vast prairie-plain and mountain-sea lying between the Great Lakes and the Pacific gives a triumphant response. Though the present sum of its achievement is but the mere promise and prophecy of its potential greatness, it can be safely asserted that nowhere on earth has similarly rapid and permanent development been made, over so tremendous an area, in the same space of time. It is but three decades since Western Canada was the Great Lone Land. To-day it is fast becoming the granary of the Empire. Thriving towns and handsome cities rise on every hand, and everywhere are the evidences of enterprise, content and prosperity.

Among the contributing factors to this wondrous transformation may be recorded the influence of the Western Canadian press. In this vast country the printer came hand in hand with the pioneer. The debt of gratitude the West owes to its press has never been sufficiently acknowledged or appreciated. With tireless vigilance and unfaltering loyalty the men who controlled the organs of publicity have toiled, always with zeal, and nearly always with discretion, for the welfare of their district and their country. Though men of strong convictions, both political and personal, it was seldom that the advocacy of their views overstepped the bounds of debate, and hence the tone of public discussion in the Western press has always been marked by fairness and dignity.

Few of the pioneer publishers of the 80's survive. Many of them rest from their labors, though their good works testify to them. To them came little reward other than the knowledge that they were helping lay broad and deep the foundations of national greatness. Few left much more than the old Washington press that each week printed the local news and the editor's views, a few fonts of type, and a large unpaid subscription list.

The ranks of the Western Canadian press now include a number of new and younger men of character and ability. These, each in his own constituency, exert much influence, but are in many cases unknown outside, except through their opinions on current events, published daily or weekly. Yet there is a natural curiosity among newspaper readers to know somehwat of the personality of him to whom they daily or weekly look for news. For this reason the series of articles begun in this issue will be a feature to attract general interest. Not only will the public get more knowledge as to the appearance and personality of the editors whose papers they read, but it is also hoped that the series will bring the editors themselves in closer touch with each other, softening whatever asperities may result from opposing views on public matters, and promoting friendlier relations through the kinship of common aims.

The Toronto Type Foundry Co., Ltd., proposes to continue the series until it includes every western editor.

When completed, the series will form a Gallery of Fame—possibly the unregenerate may say a Rogues' Gallery—which will contain a portrait and estimate of the men who control and direct the press of Western Canada.

And, speaking of portraits, the editors are requested to make an advertising contract with the local photographer, if necessary, so that a good likeness can be published. We would bear in mind Burns' wish, and let its readers see the editors as others see them, and that cannot be done if antique relics are sent to the engravers instead of good photographs. We want our "Mirror" to be natural. Verbum sap. 'Nuff sed!

BEN. A. HUCKELL,
Proprietor and Editor Carberry Express.

Mental and physical alertness are the most obvious characteristics of Mr. B. A. Huckell, editor of the Carberry Express. Keen of thought, ready of speech, swift of action, he impresses one by the breadth of his sympathy and the bright sincerity of his goodfellowship.

Moreover, Mr. Huckell is a type of that success that always await energy and ability in the Canadian West. He is still a young man—thirty years of age this summer—and his career is as remarkable for its past accomplishments as for its future promise.

"THE EXPRESS MAN."

Prior to entering newspaper work Mr. Huckell had done distinctly good, if not distinguished, work in the realm of education. The teaching profession in the West is the vestibule to the law, the ministry, surgery and the editor's desk, and it was by that route that Mr. Huckell entered the arena of journalism. He had come to Manitoba in 1883, a boy of nine years of age, with his parents, from Ottawa. He came honestly by his liking for newspaper work, for his father, Thomas Huckell, was a veteran who served on the Ottawa Citizen in the earlier days. The family went to Rapid City, and from thence moved, in 1886, to Carberry, where ever since they have been factors of importance in its municipal and political activities.

Young Huckell attended the public school at Carberry, leaving it to attend the Ottawa Model School, where, in 1889, he was silver medallist. Returning to the West, he attended St. John's College, Winnipeg, from 1890 to 1893, and took the teachers' course at the Winnipeg Collegiate. After obtaining his professional certificate, he taught at Reaburn for three years. It was while there he met, and married, Miss J. K. Graham, of Lakefield, in 1894.

It was perhaps circumstances, more than inclination, that forced Mr. Huckell into journalism. The local Conservatives desired a party organ. Carberry already had a local paper, The News, professedly independent and confessedly able. As a business venture, the establishment of a competitor was admitted to be injudicious and unwise, but political requirements overrode commercial considerations, and in 1892 the Carberry Express made its first appearance.

For several years it struggled along. The local news field was very imperfectly covered, and its fashion of arranging and displaying the news would have moved a live editor to wrath or profanity, according to his disposition. But, if it fell far below the standard as a local newspaper, within the limits of its space it fulfilled every requirement as a party organ. Its editorials advocated Conservative principles and defended Conservative policy with skill, weight and vigor, and were frequently relieved by a brightness and a vim that made them as attractive as they were formidable. But, despite this partial success, the Express was run at a financial loss. Several tried their hand at its management, and all failed to make it earn a revenue. At last Thomas Huckell, father of the present editor, bought it, rather than see it discontinue publication. A few months after he transferred it to his eldest son, the late Fred Huckell, and under the management of the two the Express turned the corner, and began to build up into a valuable newspaper property. Each year it grew in strength and importance, till Mr. Fred Huckell, who had never been very strong, died in the fall of 1899. When the matter of the disposition of the estate was considered, Mr. B. A. Huckell decided to forsake the pedagogue's desk, buy the Express, and become an editor.

Under his management the Express has continued to develop, until it is now regarded as one of the foremost local papers of Manitoba. Though still giving consistent support to the Conservative party, the Express is no longer an organ, but a newspaper, its editorial utterances being in general temperate and free from obtrusive prejudice. Its local news service is ably organized, the field being well covered. Typographically it leaves little to be desired, and, justly, one of the best printed sheets in the province. It is a standing recommendation to the type faces and general equipment carried by the Toronto Type Foundry Co., Ltd. The Express worthily reflects the importance of the town and district in which it is published, and is a good type of that important class of local newspapers of Canada which aim not merely to give the news, but to direct the thought of their readers.

Public honors unusual to such a young man have been offered Mr. Huckell, but he has hitherto declined them, devoting all his energies to the upbuilding of his paper. He continues to take, as is natural, a keen interest in educational matters. All forms of athletics and sport appeal to him, and, despite the demands of his growing business, he still finds time to follow most and indulge in some. In the days when the Carberry football team was invincible, Mr. Huckell was famous as its goalkeeper, playing an entire season without losing a single goal.

Statistics show that a man can walk forty miles farther if he is permitted to wear a uniform consisting mainly of gold braid and brass buttons.

IN THE LAND OF FIRE.

How the Native of Tierra del Fuego Manages to Exist.

In Tierra del Fuego the Yaghan Indian leads a remarkable existence. He braves the seas of Cape Horn naked in a frail bark canoe. He owns no faith, religion or tribal tie other than that of the family, which huddles together for food and sustenance. His only household goods are the smoldering firebrands which he carries on a slab of turf in his canoe to each fresh halting place. The women, usually two, paddle the canoe from the stern. The man crouches in the bow on the lookout for prey. On the shore runs one or two dogs to sniff out and turn any lurking otter or sea bird. The long kelp that fringes the coast serves as a breakwater for the frail craft, whose crew only venture out into the open channels when their foresight tells them that a calm will be of sufficient duration to enable them to pass from one inhospitable beach to another. They are unduly developed in the torso at the expense of the lower limbs, for they pass their lives thus circling the coasts. Fishing without hooks, living on mussels and fungus, this tribe marks the limit to which man may strip himself of all aid or comfort and yet survive.

Almost.

Hinks—I always like to dine with a man who knows how to order a dinner. Binks—Yes; it's almost as good as dining with a man who knows how to pay for one.

An Important Difference.

Not long after a series of losses at sea on a certain steamship line two travelers were discussing transatlantic liners. One of the men preferred the C—— line, the other the T—— line, the one on which the repeated wrecks had occurred.

"There's one important difference," said the first, "that you don't seem to have considered, but which weighs strongly with me."

"What is that?"

"Why, the C—— line guarantees to take you across, but the T—— line guarantees to take you only as far as it goes."

ONE KISS.

Because it was so brief a thing—
The loving of this man and maid—
Because one little hour it staid,
It cries for some remembering.
Her heart was light, and lighter his;
The weight was all eternity's.

They had no better sign to give
Between the garden and the grave
Than this alone they turned and gave,
As though to say to heaven: "We live.
Let other lips their moment miss.
Death shall not say we did not kiss!"

The tree is here, the stone is here,
And here come worthier maids and men
Where these have loved to dream again.
The golden silence is as clear,
But they come not, and it is this
Which consecrates their single kiss.

"THE MINISTER."

The crows were wheeling behind the plow in scattering clusters and plumping singly upon the soft, thick grubs which the plowshare was turning out upon an unkindly world. It was a bask, blowy day in the end of March, and there was a hint of storm in the air—a hint emphasized for those skilled in weather lore by the presence of half a dozen sea gulls, white vagrants among the black coats, blown by the south wind up from the Solway—a snell, Scotch, but not unfriendly day altogether.

Robert Fraser bent to the plow handles and cast a keen and wary eye toward his guide posts on the ridge. His face was colorless, even when a dash of rain came swirling across from the crest of Ben Gairn, whose steep bulk heaved itself a blue haystack above the level horizon of the moorland. He was dressed like any other plowman of the south uplands—rough homespun much the worse for wear, and leggings the color of the red soil which he was reversing with the share of his plow.

Yet there was that about Ropert Fraser which marked him no common man. When he paused at the top of the ascent and stood with his back against the horns of the plow—the countryman's legacy from Adam of the Mattock—he pushed back his weatherbeaten straw hat with a characteristic gesture and showed a white forehead with blue veins channeling it—a damp, heavy lock of black hair clinging to it as in Severn's picture of John Keats on his deathbed. Robert Fraser saw a couple of black specks which moved smoothly and evenly along the top of the distant dike of the highway.

He stood still for a moment or two watching them. As they came nearer they resolved themselves into a smart young man sitting in a well equipped gig drawn by a showily actioned horse and driven by a man in livery. As they passed rapidly along the road the hand of the young man appeared in careless wave of recognition over the stone dike, and Robert Fraser lifted his slack reins in staid acknowledgement. It was more than a year since the brothers had looked each other so nearly in the eyes. They were Dr. Henry Fraser, the rising physician of Cairn Edward, and his elder brother Robert, once student of divinity at Edinburgh college, whom three parishes knew as "stickit minister."

When Robert Fraser stabled his horses that night and went in to his supper, he was not surprised to find his friend, Saunders M'Quhirr of Drumquhat, sitting by the peat fire in the "room." Almost the only thing which distinguished the stickit minister from the other small farmers of the parish of Dullarg was the fact that he always sat in the evening by himself "ben the hoose" and did not use the kitchen in common with his housekeeper and herd boy, save only at mealtimes. Robert had taken to Saunders ever since—the back of his ambition broken—he had settled down to the farm, and he welcomed him with shy cordiality.

"You'll take a cup of tea, Saunders?" he asked.

"Thank ye, Robert, I wadna be waur o't," returned his friend.

"I saw your brither the day," said Saunders M'Quhirr, after the teacups had been cleared away and the silent housekeeper had replaced the books upon the table. Saunders picked a couple of them up, and having adjusted his glasses he read the titles "Milton's Works" and a volume of a translation of "Dorner's Person of Christ."

"I saw yer brither the day. He maun be gettin a big practice."

"Aye!" said Robert Fraser very thoughtfully.

Saunders M'Quhirr glanced up quickly. It was of course natural that the unsuccessful elder brother should envy the prosperous younger, but he had thought that Robert Fraser was living on a different plane. It was one of the few things that the friends had never spoken of, though every one knew why Dr. Fraser did not visit his brother's little farm. "He's gettin in wi' the big fowk noo an thinks maybe that his brither wad dae him nae credit." That was the way the clash of the countryside explained the matter.

"I never told you how I came to leave the college, Saunders," said the younger man, resting his brow on a hand that even the horn of the plow could not make other than diaphanous.

"No," said Saunders quietly, with a tender gleam coming into the humorsome, kindly eyes that lurked under their bushy tussocks of gray eyebrows. Saunders' humor lay near the fountain of tears.

"No," continued Robert Fraser, "I have not spoken of it to so many, but you've been a good frien to me, Saunders, and I think you should hear it. I have not tried to set myself right with folks in the general, but I would like to let you see clearly before I go my ways to him who seeth from the beginning."

"Hear till him," said Saunders; "man, yer hoast (cough) is no'near as sair as it was i' the back end. Ye'll be here lang after me, but lang or short, weel do ye ken, Robert Fraser, that ye need no to put yersel richt wi' me. Hev I no kenned ye since ye war the size o' twa scrubbers?"

"I thank you, Saunders," said Robert, "but I am well aware that I am to die this year. No, no, not a word. It is the Lord's will. It's more than seven years now since I first kenned that my days were to be few. It was the year my faither died and left Harry and me by our lane.

"He left no siller to speak of, just plenty to lay him decently in the kirkyard among his forebears. I had been a year at the Divinity hall then and was going up to put in my discourses for the next session. I had been troubled with my breast for some time and so called one day at the infirmary to get a word with Sir James. He was very busy when I went in and never noticed me till the hoast took me. Then on a sudden he looked up from his papers and quietly said, 'Come into my room, laddie!' Aye, he was a good man and a faithful, Sir James, if ever there was one. He told me that with care I might live five or six years, but it would need great care. Then a strange, prickly coldness came over me, and I seemed to walk light headed in an atmosphere suddenly rarefied. I think I know now how the mouse feels under the air pump.

"What's that?" queried Saunders.

"A cruel ploy not worth speaking of," continued the stickit minister. "Well, I found something in my throat when I tried to thank him. But I came my ways home to the Dullarg, and night and day I considered what was to be done, with so much to do and so little time to do it. It was clear that both Harry and me could not go through the college on the little my faither had left. So late one night I saw my way clear to what I should do. Harry must go; I must stay. I must come home to the farm and be my own 'man,' then I could send Harry to the college to be a doctor, for he had no call to the ministry as once I thought I had. More than that, it was laid on me to tell Jessie Loudon that Robert Fraser was no better than a machine set to go five years.

"Now all these things I did, Saunders, but there's no use telling you what they cost in the doing. They were right to do, and they were done. I do not repent any of them. I would do them all over again were they to do, but it's been bitterer than I thought."

The stickit minister took his head off his hand and leaned back in his chair.

"The story went over the country that I had failed in my examinations, and I never said that I had not. But there were some that knew better who might have contradicted the report if they had liked. I settled down to the farm, and I put Harry through the college, sending all but a bare living to him in Edinburgh. I worked the work of the farm, rain or shine, ever since and have been for these six years the 'stickit minister' that all the world kens the day. Whiles Harry did not think that he got enough. He was always writing for more and not so very pleased when he did not get it. He was aye different to me, ye ken, Saunders, and he canna be judged by the same standard as you and me."

"I ken," said Saunders M'Quhirr, a spark of light lying in the quiet of his eyes.

"Well," continued Robert Fraser, lightened by Saunders' apparent agreement, "the time came when he was clear from the college and wanted a practice. He had been ill advised that he had not got his share of the farm, and he wanted it selled to share and share alike.

"Now I kenned and you ken, Saunders, that it's no worth much in one share, let alone two. So I got the place quietly bonded and bought him old Dr. Aitken's practice in Cairn Edward with the money. I have tried to do my best for the lad, for it was laid on me to be my brother's keeper. He doesna come here much," continued Robert, "but I think he's not so ill against me as he was. Saunders, he waved his hand to me when he was gaun by the day!"

"That was kind of him," said Saunders M'Quhirr.

"Aye, was it no?" said the stickit minister eagerly, with a soft look in his eyes as he glanced up at his brother's portrait in cap and gown which hung over the china dogs on the mantelpiece.

"I got my notice this morning that the bond is to be called up in November," said Robert, "so I'll be obliged to flit."

Saunders M'Quhirr started to his feet in a moment. "Never," he said, with the spark of fire alive now in his eyes, "never as lang as there's a beast on Drumquhat, or a poun in Cairn Edward bank," bringing down his clinched fist upon the Milton on the table.

"No, Saunders, no," said the stickit minister very gently. "I thank you kindly, but I'll be flitted before that."—Montreal Star.

Sea Water as Medicine.

When a bather at Coney Island the other day accidentally swallowed a big gulp of sea water and then rushed off to get a drink of whisky to take the taste out of his mouth, a successful medical practitioner who had witnessed the performance said:

"That man is either a greenhorn or a fool. Otherwise he would have taken merely a sip of lemonade and allowed the sea water to do its work. As a matter of fact, one of the most beneficial features of a sea bath is the salt water inadvertently swallowed by bathers. It is a wonderful tonic for the liver, stomach and kidneys. In many cases it will cure biliousness where all drug preparations have failed. It is peculiarly effective in ordinary cases of indigestion, disordered stomach and insomnia, and has been known to produce excellent results in many cases of dyspepsia. Sea water is full of tonic and sedative properties. It won't hurt anybody. Two or three big swallows of it would be of positive benefit to nine bathers out of ten. It isn't palatable or tempting, but neither is quinine or calomel. You never see an old sailor who is bilious, dyspeptic or a victim of insomnia, and why? For the reason that an ocean of good medicine spreads all about his ship, and he doses himself copiously with it whenever his physical mechanism becomes the least bit deranged."—New York Herald.

SPIRITUAL STRUGGLES

WILL PASS "WHERE THERE SHALL BE NO MORE SIN."

PUT YOURSELF IN HIS PLACE

Conditions Necessary to Interpret the Holy Book—St. John's Strange Saying at Patmos Illumined By This Method and the Facts of the Divine Apocalypse May Be Symbolized and Grasped.

Entered according to Act of Parliament of Canada, in the year 1904, by William Baily, of Toronto, at the Dep't of Agriculture, Ottawa.

Los Angeles, Cal., Aug. 7.—In this sermon the reader is taken into an enchanted realm beneath the waves, and a novel and strange interpretation is given to the mystery of the sea. The text is Revelations xxi, 1, "And there was no more sea."

Who was the writer? Where were his feet planted when he saw the spectacles which he describes in his divinely inspired apocalypse? These two conditions must be clearly understood before one can in any true way grasp the meaning of the words of my text. Indeed, to properly appreciate the words or the actions of any man we must first put ourselves in that man's place

We all understand this condition in everyday life. Why, then, cannot we put ourselves in the biblical writers' places when we try to interpret the holy book? During the darkest days of the Civil War Congressman Dixon of New York State entered the White House with a long list of grievances, which he and some of his colleagues had drawn up against the Government. Abraham Lincoln heard him patiently until he was through. Then he said: "Dixon, I believe you and your friends were truly honest men when you drew up those criticisms against my administration. But the trouble is you fellows do not put yourselves in my place. If you did, you would do just about what I am doing. I tell you how I will fix those matters. You go home and think up all the things you would like me to do, and then come back to-morrow and tell me the result, and I will do just what you want me to do."

Congressman Dixon said: "I went back to my hotel that evening with my head high up among the clouds, 'why,' said I to myself, 'Lincoln said he will do anything I want him to do; that makes me to-night practically president of the United States.'" But after supper that night Congressman Dixon went to his room. He laid the white sheets of paper upon his desk and began to plan what he wanted Lincoln to do. The more, however, he thought, the more difficult it was for him to find anything to write. Why? Because the more he put himself in the president's place, the more he felt he would do just as Lincoln was doing and had done. "The next day came. I did not go to the White House," said Congressman Dixon, "neither did I go the next day or the next. About three weeks later I attended a public reception at the White House. As soon as I entered the room, the president saw me and he called out, 'Hello, Dixon! why did you not keep your appointment with me the day after our conversation?' 'Because I was ashamed to do so.' 'Ah, yes,' said Lincoln, 'I thought you would not come back. The actions and words of a man appear entirely different when you put yourself in that man's place, than when you criticise them from an outsider's standpoint.'"

To-day, in order to rightly interpret the words of my text, we must first put ourselves in St. John's place. In the first instance, we notice, he is an old man. His life's work was nearly done. A man at eighty looks at conditions in heaven and on earth differently from the way a young man at twenty looks at them. The struggles of life were to St. John very real and intense. For years he had been a resident of Ephesus, in Asia Minor. He had been a mighty factor in the spreading of the gospel through all those regions. He had suffered for Christ; he had almost been martyred. The second fact we must notice, is that St. John is an exile. Like Napoleon at St. Helena, he knew that in all probability he could never again go back to his earthly work. Under the Domitian persecution, he was sent to this lonely, rock-bound island of the Mediterranean. Therefore the sea meant more to him than it might mean to some of us. It meant, as I shall try to show, first, the "Sea of Mystery"; secondly, the "Sea of Hate"; thirdly, the "Sea of Separation"; and fourthly, the "Sea of Spiritual Struggle." By putting ourselves in St. John's place as exiles upon the Island of Patmos, I believe we can symbolize all these facts.

First, the sea is a mysterious monster. Do we have to go to a Johannian vision to know that? Has any man, woman or child ever stood upon the beach and looked off upon the mighty deep and not wondered about what was happening away down in the depths that no fathom line has ever yet been able to sound? The scientists have unraveled a few of the sea's mysteries. They have shown the world that there are different sea currents flowing over one another in different directions, as the different currents of the air allow the aeronaut to journey in one direction or another. By deep sea dredging they have brought up from the lowest ocean depths the primeval ooze, the deposit perhaps or millions of years. They have captured strange creatures which have never been seen before by the eyes of man. The results of their investigations have been collected into one of the greatest of all scientific volumes, entitled the "Book of Oceanography." But, after all, though some of the ocean's mysteries have been investigated, the most of those mysteries are as yet unraveled. They will always remain as mysteries until suitable apparatus has been invented by means of which divers can descend and pass at leisure through the paths of the sea now untrodden by the foot of man.

Oh, the mysteries of the sea! Who has ever been able to describe them? It was my privilege, some weeks ago, to see some of the wonders of the mighty deep. I took ship and went to the famous Catalina Islands, off the southern coast of California. I went there for the fishing. I had heard away back in the east of the wonderful sea sport at that place. I heard it was no unusual sight to see there three and four or five jewfish brought in each weighing upward of 300 pounds; that some fish had been caught there weighing over 500 pounds. These fishermen had told me that there swam the tuna, the gamest fish of all the seas. There are the yellowtails and the barracudas and the rock bass and the whitefish and scores of other fish. But though I saw fish caught at Catalina weighing 360 pounds, the most marvelous sight by far that I ever witnessed there was what was revealed to me in the depths of the sea by the glass bottomed boats.

A strong muscled oarsman, who knew every nook and corner of that coast, rowed us out. The centre of the boat had no keel, but, instead, a glass flooring. As we rowed on we could see down and down, fifty, sixty, seventy and eighty feet. Here were the rocks, piled up in incongruous forms, like unto the Bad Lands of the Dakotas. There were walls of rocks, dismantled fortresses in rocks, crumbling cathedrals in rocks, shattered masonry in rocks, whole fallen Jerichos in rocks, pyramids and palisades were in rocks. Rocks in column, rocks aslant, immensities and infinities of rock. In yonder cavern a fish, hermitlike, was dwelling. We could see his head as he silently kept vigil, watching the other fish swim by. Now darted past hundreds of thousands of sardines, chased by a larger fish. In those depths, as on the land, the "survival of the fittest" is the law of life—the big fish eat the smaller fish.

Now we seem to be pushing our way into the marine farmlands. Whole gardens of vegetables seem to be planted upon the rocks. Many of those forms of vegetable life are named after the table foods we grow in our country gardens. There are the waving wheatfields and silken bearded corn just ready for the husking and the meadow lands green and red with clover tops. Now we seem to be entering the Indian and African jungles. The seaweeds are matted and snarled together. They seem to take upon themselves all colorings. Here are the long, clinging vines, there the broad leaves and the narrow leaves, the short leaves and the long leaves. Now the bare rocks appear again and seem to be like unto mighty mountains in their impressiveness, crying: "Come, man, come, and take my gold! Come and take my silver! My bones are copper, my heart is iron; come and take my heart is iron; come and take my wealth!" As we wandered on, peering into this strange and unknown world, I say to myself: "There are the revealed mysteries of the sea seventy feet deep. What must be the mysteries of the sea hundreds of feet deep, miles deep, unfathomably deep? What must be the mysteries of the sea when the 'jew' fish, weighing one-half thousand pounds, rubs up his side against the whale, weighing thousands upon thousands of pounds?" Yes, the sea is a mystery, a great unfathomable mystery.

What the mysterious sea was to the lonely exile looking off upon the Mediterranean God always has been and always will be to us on earth. He is a mystery. We know that he created the world, but how? We cannot tell. We know that in the beginning Christ was, and yet he was born a helpless babe. How? We cannot tell. We know that John, as the beloved disciple, walked and lived with Christ. Yet concerning many facts about the personality of Jesus John was as much in the dark as was Nicodemus when he said, "How can these things be?" Paul compares our knowledge of God to a little child's knowledge of a human parent. We know that our babies cannot fully understand us. Therefore Paul says: "Now we look through a glass darkly. Now I know only in part." Do you wonder that when John began to use the mysterious ocean as the symbol of a mysterious God he cried out in the words of my text in reference to heaven, "And there was no more sea?" All the mysteries of earth shall receive heavenly solution when the seas shall vanish away.

Do you suppose that if Carthage had been situated only a few miles from Rome there would have ever been a Hamilcar fighting at Mount Eryx or a Hamilcar's greater son, Hannibal, being defeated by Scipio the Great at Zama, in 202? The reason Carthage hated Rome and Rome hated Carthage was because they were separated by a "sea of hate" called the Mediterranean, two thousand miles long and seven hundred miles wide. The "sea of separation" became, like the Dead Sea, a "sea of blood." Do you suppose England would ever have treated the American colonies as she did during the eighteenth century had she not been separated from them by an Atlantic Ocean three thousand miles wide? Why, the American colonists were of the same blood as those who lived on English shores. The children of the Virginia planters and of the Massachusetts aristocrats were all sent over to the English schools to be educated. But no, England would not treat her American subjects as she did those who were earning their bread on the London Strand. The "sea of separation" became the "sea of hate," and the bloody Revolutionary war was merely the echo of the Atlantic's moaning waves lapping Plymouth rock and Dover cliffs.

Do you suppose Rome would have ever placed her iron heel of tyranny upon the neck of the prostrate Hebrew had Jerusalem not been separated from the capital of the Caesars by the same waves which separated Rome from Carthage? The greatest separators of nations always have been the mighty seas. Thus, when St. John looked off upon the waters of the Mediterranean and said, "And there was no more sea," he meant practically this: In heaven there shall be no hate, no bitterness, no fault-findings, no bloodshed, no Jew hating Roman, no Roman hating Greek, no Japan fighting Russia and no Spain sucking the life-blood of a prostrate Cuba. Then love and kindness and sympathy and mutual self-sacrifice will bind the human family together, because the "sea of hate" shall forever disappear.

But as the "sea of separation" is sometimes the "sea of hate," so it may be also the impassable barrier which separates friend from friend. Napoleon, fretting life away in St. Helena, or Captain Dreyfus, suffering on Devil's Island, or Victor Hugo, in exile on the Island of Guernsey, were no more separated from their friends than was St. John, on Patmos, separated from his friends. Legend tells us that he was sent to work in the Patmos mines as the Russian exiles are put to work in the Siberian mines. But when the day's work was done St. John was allowed to freely roam over the Patmos rocks. No prison walls were more secure than this prison of the apostolic exile. And now, methinks, I can see him, his white hair being tossed by the winds. He strains his eyes as he looks over the Mediterranean waters to Asia Minor, where he knows his Christian co-laborers are working among the churches of Asia. "Ah," says the old patriarch, "in heaven I shall never be separated from those I love. I shall never have to part again from those who have labored by my side in the gospel vineyard. I shall never be compelled to have the silver cords of affection snapped at the grave. These waves of separation shall forever and ever be licked up. There shall be no more sea."

Is not this re-union vision of the Isle of Patmos to you a transcendent thought? Is it not an uplifting hope that those who were once snatched away from us by death shall be given back in all the beauty and love of the redemption? Sometimes we must be separated from those we love, even as St. John on the Island of Patmos was separated from his friends in Asia Minor. But in heaven God will give us back our loved ones. Yes, there will be no separations, no partings there. For in heaven, according to the inspired Apocalypse, "there is no more sea."

But the Mediterranean waves beating against the Patmos rocks were not only symbolic of external troubles, but also of an inward spiritual strife. When St. John gave his heart to Christ, in one sense he was emancipated from sin. But Satan never for an instant, this side of the grave, leaves off his struggle to capture a gospel stronghold. The Bible declares a Christian shall not be tempted by a sin greater than he can bear. But Christians always have to be going to Christ for more spiritual strength in order to repel the Satanic onslaughts which are daily being made against the strongholds of their hearts.

When sailing upon the ocean, some days its surface seems as calm as Loon Lake asleep, as a smiling child in the broad lap of the Adirondack Mountains. But that is only a slumber. Within a few hours she may awake with a scowling face, with the fire of the lightnings in her eye and with the shrickings of the tornadoes in her voice. In our lives the spiritual struggles keep on to the end. We have the "good angel" whispering in one ear to be good; we have the "bad angel" whispering in the other ear to be bad. St. John, even up to the end of his life, had to fight by the power of the Holy Spirit against the restless sea of temptations. So have we.

About the best illustration of my thought that I know is the simple one which Dr. Frederick Goss told to his Cincinnati people a few months ago. One day one of his Sunday school teachers was trying to explain to her class that there are two kinds of lives to live, the good life and the bad life. "Now, children," she said, "all those little girls who want to live the 'good life,' will they please step over on this nice warm carpet, and those who want to live the 'bad life' will stand on that cold, hard oilcloth?" Much to the teacher's surprise, her own little girl put one foot upon the carpet and the other upon the oilcloth. "My dear," said the mother in surprise, "you are standing upon both." "I know it, mamma," said the child, "but you know 'thometimes' I want to be just a little bad." So in every Christian life there has to be a continual war against the world, the flesh and the devil. And when St. John looked off upon the troubled waters of the Mediterranean, he not only looked off upon his own spiritual struggles, but at the same time he looked off in vision to the time when those spiritual struggles should forever pass away, when "there shall be no more sea."

Thus my text means more than a mere figure of speech. It has more than a mere literal interpretation that heaven is to be a place without atmospheric moisture. It means that the "mountain of Calvary" shall be large enough to hold all peoples who give their hearts to Jesus Christ. It means that this "mountain of Calvary" shall not only be a wide mountain, but a high mountain. It shall lift us up and up and up until it lifts us to the very gates of heaven itself. Oh, my brother and sister, will you not stand upon this mountain, this blood red Calvary mountain? Will you not to-day let the island of Patmos be to you a stepping stone to a heavenly throne? There you will never again hear the surging waves of temptation beating against the rocks of sin and threatening to sweep you out into the unfathomable depths. May the sunrise of a gospel hope shed to-day its yellow beams over life's troubled waters and have for you a golden boulevard which shall lead up to the streets of a new Jerusalem, where there shall be "no more sea."

HANG THE PRISONERS!

An Exclamation That Was Interpreted as an Order.

The young laird of Lochnow was a character in the Scotch camp life of the early eighteenth century. He was cool in action and full of fun in daily life. One day he was detailed to command a burial party, and as he strolled over the battlefield his orderly came to him in great perplexity.

"Sir," said he, "there is a heap of fellows lying out yonder who say they're only wounded, and they won't let us bury them like the rest. What shall we do?"

"Bury them at once," replied young Agnew, without moving a muscle of his countenance, "for if you take their word for it they won't be dead for a hundred years to come."

The man saluted and started off in all simplicity to carry out the order, and Agnew had to dispatch a counter order in haste to prevent his joke from becoming a tragedy.

This recalls an "o'er true" tale of border life. Some Galloway moss troopers were brought before Sir William Howard, who was an enthusiastic mathematician. He was deep in his studies when the prisoners were marched into the castle courtyard, and a lieutenant came running up to get orders as to their disposal. Enraged at being interrupted, he cried, "Hang the prisoners!" and went on with his work.

He finished his problem and went down with a cheerful mind, only to learn that his exclamation had been taken for an order, and the prisoners were all hanged.

ATHLETICS IN GERMANY.

Wrestling is one of the most popular forms of athletic exercises in Germany, and it seems as if the heavy and muscular build of the Germans peculiarly adapts them for this kind of sport.

The general public interprets the word "athlete" as meaning a wrestler, weight lifter or "strong man." When the English style of athletics was introduced into Germany, it was termed "light athletics." Wrestling is termed "heavy athletics." In every town there are many clubs indulging in "heavy athletics," and numerous public contests are arranged, in connection with which challenges to "all comers" are issued. Here one can often witness a pitched battle between science and brute power—see an "all comer" of stupendous build, probably a butcher, brewer or furniture remover, laid flat on both shoulder blades in the most approved style by a little, wiry fellow as slippery as an eel. On the occasion of the world's championships held in Berlin an open arena, roofed only in the center, where the wrestling took place, was erected, with tiers of seats for the public all around. As luck would have it, the weather proved boisterous and the public shy of the fair. The championships ended dismally, and the impresario, unable to pay the men's retainers, very discreetly decided to "leave town."

Flying Fish.

Flying fish swim in shoals varying in number from a dozen to a hundred or more. They often leave the water at once, darting through the air in the same direction for 200 yards or more, and then descend to the water quickly, rising again and then renewing their flight. Sometimes the dolphin may be seen in rapid pursuit, taking great leaps out of the water and gaining upon his prey, which take shorter and shorter flights, vainly trying to escape, until they sink exhausted. Sometimes the larger sea birds catch flying fish in the air. The question whether the flying fish use their fins at all as wings is not fully decided. The power of flight is limited to the time the fins remain moist.

The Meaning of Orange Blossoms.

The orange tree is regarded as a prince among trees and the emblem of genius. A peculiarity of this tree is that it bears fruit and flowers at the same time. Its leaves are evergreen and as it grows older it grows in beauty and fruitfulness, its blossom filling the air with its fragrance. It is indeed a fit emblem of marriage promise and hopes. The orange tree is considered typical of love because, though its fruit is golden and its flavor and scent delicious, its rind is bitter, and as every one knows who has experienced it Cupid's dart causes pain. The orange is emblematic of gratitude as well as of genius and love.

The First Ice Cream.

A French chef who prepared a snow-like dish for the Duc de Chartres in 1774 is said to have been the first to make that cool luxury known as ice cream. Lord Bacon was possessed of the knowledge that there was a process of congelation by means of snow and salt. But to him this was a scientific fact, and he little dreamed of the idea that in after years this congelation would prove such a delightful refreshment.

MICHEL NEWS

Mrs. Nimmo who has been recovering for some time past from a serious operation returned to the coast on Monday via Calgary. Her husband came from the coast to accompany her home. Mrs. Nimmo has been visiting her son here for some time.

W. J. Blundell is here this week on business connected with the Trites-Wood Co.

A little child of Mr. and Mrs. Pettingale, a girl of about three year old, was taken ill lately with tuberculosis. Dr. McSorley sent her down to the Lethbridge hospital for treatment and the latest reports are favorable for her recovery. Two weeks ago her little cousin a daughter of Mrs Potts died from the same disease. These children lived at the same house and it is believed they contracted the disease from the same cause. The cows milk used is suspected and an examination is being made. The milk used at Michel comes from Cowley.

ADDITIONAL LOCALS

Jos. Phillipps of Tobacco Plains was in the city on Wednesday. He says that so many claims in the Flathead are disputed that little work will be done until the courts have decided their priority rights.

J. S. Clute, of New Westminster, inspector of Customs for B. C. paid Fernie an official visit. He found the Customs office in first class shape under the able management of the local manager Mr. W. S. Keay.

N. E. Broley has the contract for H. W. Herchmer's new residence and the excavation was commenced this week. The plans for the building were specially prepared in Minneapolis and they are very complete. The building will be of concrete blocks to the second storey, and above that the walls will be shingled. The building when finished will be one of the prettiest and most up-to date residences in the city.

W. Wardrop returned a few days ago from Winnipeg where he went to adjust his fire loss with the C. P. R. He was unable to see Mr. Whyte, the western manager for the company, on account of the later's illness but he was assured that the matter would be settled satisfactorily. Mr. Wardrop has abandoned the idea of building a new mill at Sparwood and he has decided to locate the mill at Crows Nest instead. Mr. Wardrop has entered into partnership with Mr. Mc Ginnis who owns some fine timber limits near Crows Nest and the mill will be located there a couple miles west of the summit on a good-sized stream.

Crow's Nest Mountain is no longer a virgin peak the foot of man having defiled its summit last week. Edw. Whymper, of London, England and a noted mountain climber, came down from Banff with two C. P. R. guides to attempt the ascent. He sent his two guides ahead to pick out a way to the base of the peak, and to save time, intending to attempt the peak himself. The guides disobeying instructions kept right on going and scaled the peak before coming in to report and so claimed the honor of being the first on the summit. Mr. Whymper who wished the honor of being the first up was so disgusted that he left without attempting the ascent.—Blairmore Times.

The Sisters of St. Joseph of Peace have established in Nelson a boarding school for young ladies and for boys under ten years of age. A Commodious building has been secured in a fine location and the school will open on Sept. 1st with a full staff. No distinction is made on account of different religious convictions, but for the maintenance of order and discipline a conformity to the general rules shall be required. The school will fill a long felt want with those who desire to place their boys in a school where their morals will be carefully looked after. Father Coccola took several boys to Nelson this week to attend this school, Parents desiring further information about the school will be cheerfully supplied with the same by applying to Father Coccola, resident priest.

The Knights of Pythias will meet this evening in the Baptist church building at eight o'clock. All members are requested to attend. J. Irvine, general organizer of Vancouver, will be present

The authorities of the Roman Catholic Church have about decided to enlarge their present church building. The plan calls for a 20 foot addition and the the erection of a two story dweilng beyond that.

A DARING ROBBERY.

Cash Register Deliberately Stolen at the Imperial Hotel.

A very daring robbery took place at the Imperial Hotel early on Sunday morning. At five o'clock in the morning the night clerk noticed the cash register was missing from the office counter where its usual place was. He had last noticed it there two hours previous, and he hadn't the slightest idea how it had disappeared. The police were notified but they gained no clues until about 9 o'clock when a negro named Henry Dell who lives in a shack across the track and about opposite the Imperial notified the police that the register was lying near his shack and that his axe was lying near the register. The police found the register all battered to pieces. The thief had got away with about $10 that was in the register. The register is a new one costing about $250 and is a total loss. Later in the day suspicious actions on the part of the negro caused the police to look him up. It was found that he had left town suddenly in the direction of Morrissey. A wire was sent ahead and Constables Walker and Shaw also went up. Dell afterwards came to town having taken a more circuitous route, and he was placed under arrest. Little real evidence was found against him and he was allowed to go after being held in the Fernie jail for a few days.

The machine is a heavy one weighing about 170 lbs. It was evidently taken by a strong man as the top of the desk was not scratched as might have been expected. The deed was a very bold one. The rooms were a glare of light, and had anyone been near at the time he would have been plainly seen. Deep tracks were visible in the soft earth but these were soon obliterated. The crime is shrouded in mystery.

SCHOOL NOTES.

The reopening of the school which was expected to take place this week was abjourned for a week owing to the hot weather. The school will open on Monday next.

Miss Cartwright of Cranbrook who was engaged to teach the Mine School has written the trustees that she will be unable to take the position. The Board will be put to some trouble and much delay ia securing another teacher.

Miss Moody of the Teachers' staff arrived on Saturday from Halifax.

BEFORE THE PEOPLE

PHILLIP CAROSELLA.

Spoke briefly. He was an Italian and not fully conversant with fluent English but he claimed to possess practical knowledge of street building and other practical undertakings.

A. C. LIPHARDT.

Cleverly put the situation in a nut shell. The town needed a first class council to lay the foundation for future councils and he hoped the best men would be le-elected. He had no well defined platform but he appeared before the electors as a candidate who if elected would treat everybody fair and square. If he was not elected he would be quite content to stay at home.

P. R. LUNDIE.

Mr. Lundie spoke very briefly. He was not long a resident of Fernie and had not formerly taken a very great interest in the town. If elected to the position of Alderman he would work for the best interests of the city.

J. A. MACLEAN.

Mr. MacLean spoke with Scotch reticence. He had always helped the town along in any way he could and if elected he would serve the city to the best of his ability.

Mr. Owen Ross was the next name. The chairman read a letter from Mr. Ross addressed to the Returning Officer in which Mr. Ross withdrew from the contest on the ground that his property qualifications, owing to his partnership, were not sufficient.

A.B. TRITES.

As this was the first Municipal contest Mr. Trites believed no definite policy was needed. He was in favor of an economical policy whereby the public funds would be spent with a careful view to the town's requirements He did not believe however, in retrenching the public expenditure when improvements and public works were really necessary. The town needed an adequate water supply and the health of the townspeople required the immediate attention of the council in the putting in of a sewer system.

W. W. TUTTLE.

Mr. Tuttle spoke at considerable length The present was not the first time he had addressed a Fernie audience but this time he "missed the ropes." He was an hotel man and as such sought to represent the hotel interests in the council. Some people thought hotelmen should not sit on the council, and he wished to remove that prejudice. In doing so the speaker discussed many personal affairs, in excuse for which he claimed that the people of Fernie had never understood him. Every man had some weakness, and his was a weaknss for sport. He liked all kinds of sport. He repudiated rumors to the effect that he was contemplating the establishment of a discreditable "joint" in the city. The hotels got more blame than was due them. The speaker frankly acknowledged that whiskey was the greatest curse in the world and gambling was a close second. He was familiar with every phase of gambling but he believed that the boys in learning to play card games at home were sowing the real seeds of the gambling habit. "Cut out card playing at home and you will close the gambling halls." Similarly with whiskey, the habit was taught at home. Afternoon callers in Fernie homes were refreshed with "a glass of wine and a piece of cake". Although he had been associated with liquor since he was fourteen years old not a drop had ever passed his lips. Mr. Tuttle claimed to be a supporter of Sunday closing, in fact he claimed to have been the means of instituting the change. He knew it was wrong to conduct a ball game on the Sabbath but that was not any worse than fishing and shooting on that day. The bar should be closed on Sundays, the bar tenders needed the day, and he hoped a $500 fine could be imposed upon its infringement. The post office site did not concern him, it was none of his business where the government located it. The speaker referred to his many years of travel through the West and to early reminiscences in which "contraband whiskey" and "Mexican standoffs" figured. Touching on Municipal officers the speaker condemned a system of starvation wages which encouraged bribery. He then addressed himself to the ministers some of whom he saw were present. He had the greatest respect for the Church of Christ, and he had always contributed freely in its cause. He had been often asked why he did not attend church. His answer was that his appearance there seemed a mockery and his nature abhorred any form of deception. The speaker then branched into a socialistic line of argument. All men were born equal. The man who toiled hard with his hands was snubbed by society. In closing Mr. Tuttle assured the electors that if elected he would do his utmost to uphold the fair name of Fernie.

After a vote of thanks to Mr. Stork for the use of the hall the chairman called for three cheers for the King after which the meeting adjourned.

1ST. COUNCIL MEETING

THE NEW COUNCIL SETTLE DOWN TO BUSINESS.

Some Appointments Made and Various Committees Selected.--Dog Tax By-Law The First to Come Up.

Fernie's first council met at the Court House on Saturday when the members were sworn in. The returning officer then handed the mayor the letters patent. The mayor read applications for the position of chief of police from A. Joyce and T. W. Flood, Pheonix, and from R. Shaw for the position of constable. These were filed until the police commissioners were appointed. The Mayor in his capacity as an ex-officio member of that body appointed C. D. Warring chief of police and C. Burrows assistant, temporarily. His worship also appointed J. A. Rennie, city clerk, until the next meeting. On motion of Aldermen Cree and Maclean the meeting adjourned to meet at the fire-hall on Monday.

MONDAY'S MEETING.

The council met at the fire hall sitting room promptly at eight o'clock Monday evening, all the members being present. The minutes of last meeting were read and adopted.

His worship, the Mayor, read an application from J. A. Rennie for the position of the combined offices of city clerk, assessor, treasurer, collector and magistrate's clerk.

Cree–Liphardt, that J. A. Rennie's application be accepted.—Carried.

Liphardt–Beck. That Mr. Rennie's salary be fixed at $100 per month.—Carried.

Liphardt–Cree. That Mr. J. S. T. Alexander be appointed city solicitor.—Carried.

Mr. Alexander was called and he gave the council the advantage of his advice during the remainder of the meeting.

W. R. Ross, M. P. P., had previously appeared before the council and announced that he would be pleased to add his influence to any recommendation the council might wish to make re the appointment by the government of a city police magistrate. The matter was now taken up.

Maclean–Liphardt. That the Lieutenant-Governor-in-Council be recommended to appoint W. H. Whimster city police magistrate.—Carried.

His worship presented a draft of a by-law regulating the proceedings of the council and defining the duties of the officers. The by-law, which was of considerable length, was read.

Cree–Maclean. That a committee be appointed to report on the by-law at the next meeting.—Carried.

His worship appointed a committee comprising the mover and seconder, who arranged for a meeting on Friday evening. Other members were invited to be present to discuss the by-law with them.

COMMITTEES APPOINTED.

His Worship then proceeded to name his committees. Two aldermen were named on each committee, and the Mayor as ex-officio member makes the third member for each committee. The following committees for the balance of the year were named.

FINANCE—A. B. Trites, A. H. Cree.

WORKS AND PROPERTY.—A. B. Trites, T. Beck.

FIRE AND POLICE—A. C. Liphardt, A. H. Cree.

HEALTH AND RELIEF.—J. A. MacLean. P. R. Lundie.

LEGISLATION.—P. R. Lundie, A. C, Liphardt.

FINANCES DISCUSSED.

The question of funds for current expenses was then taken up. An application for a loan from the bank was suggested but some members were of the opinion that until an assessment was levied this would be impracticable. The rebate of taxes by the government was an asset which the council thought should be forthcoming at once.

Liphardt—Cree. That the finance committee petition the government through the local member for the rebate of taxes for the balance of the current fiscal year.—Carried.

DOG TAXES.

Alderman Trites brought up the question of taxing dogs and the council was unanimous in favor of promptly adopting a by-law governing dogs and stray cattle. The city solicitor was instructed to draw up a by-law for immediate consideration. The by-law as drafted placed the tax on dogs at $3 and females at $5 per year. Cattle impounded are taxed $1 per head with 50 cents per day per head added for feed.

The Mayor drew the attention of the Health Committee to the reports prevalent that the city water was being taken from the dam below Coal Creek.

Alderman Beck submitted a resolution fixing the regular meeting for the first and third evenings at eight o'clock. The Mayor explained that he thought it a little early to formulate this by-law. After the rush was over they could better decide how often they should meet. The motion was withdrawn, and the meeting was adjourned until the following Monday.

TEMPORARY OFFICES.

The fire-hall has been temporarily fitted up to answer the purpose of a city hall. A partition has been built across the hall up stairs, shutting off the front room and three side-rooms. The front room is the council chamber and the smaller rooms wili be used for the clerk's office, the Mayor's office and a committee room. After the school authorities vacate the room downstairs it will be utilized as the conncil chamber.

FORFEIT MONEY IS UP

MR. FERNAU WILL ERECT ZINC SMELTER AT FERNIE.

To cost at Least $100,000 and to be Completed by the end of 1905. Agreement signed with the Coal Company.

Mr. C. Fernau the English zinc expert who for some time has had his eye on Fernie for the location of a zinc smelter has finally signed the agreement with the C. N. P. Coal Company for the erection of the same, and as evidence of good faith he has put up a considerable sum as forfeit money. The papers were signed in Toronto on August 17th, after which they were forwarded to the Fernie office where they now are.

The agreement calls for the erection of a zinc smelting plant costing not less than $100,000 and to be completed before the end of 1905. Mr. Fernau's company purchases 10 acres for a site, east of the town on the branch line. The agreement also includes the regular purchase of slack coal for smelting purposes..

Since landing in New York over a month ago Mr. Fernau has been in Toronto making the final arrangements for the immediate erection of his smelter, and it is expected that he will come to Fernie without delay to commence operations.

AN ENTERPRISING FIRM.

Messrs. C. Fulljames and E. A. Kummer, of the contracting firm of Fulljames and Kummer, whose card appears in this issue, have devoted special attention to the plastering department of their business, and the large patronage they are receiving bears the best testimany of the excellence of their work. This firm has plastered several of the largest buildings in town and several contracts have recently been granted to them for others. Among these are the new Waldorf Hotel, the Beck block, Stork's block and the Fernie Hotel block. This enterprising firm has secured the agency for the Nelson Marblerock Lime which for finishing purposes cannot be excelled anywhere. A carload of this lime arrived this week which can be secured in any quantity from the firm.

BRADDELEY—MARTIN

Mr. George Braddeley and Miss Lizzie Martin were united in marriage on Tuesday afternoon, August 23rd by Rev. Mr. Bartlett. The ceremony was performed at the reverend gentleman's residence in the presence of two friends who acted as witnesses. The groom is the engineer at the Elk Lumber and Manufacturing Company's mill and is well and favorably known in the valley. The bride arrived on Tuesday morning from Campbellford Ont. where her home was. Mr. and Mrs. Braddeley have taken up their residence ina new cottage near the mill.

A NEW SURVEY MADE

COAL COMPANY'S BRANCH LINE FINALLY LOCATED.

Crosses C. P. R. on Diamond Crossing. Right of Way Clearing nearly Completed. A trip over the Line.

A FREE PRESS representative, on Tuesday had a tramp around the line of the new railway construction at Fernie with the general overseer, Mr. E. Ennerson. Starting at the river edge the line runs straight to the northwest corner of the recreation grounds For this distance the right of way is cleared for a width of 200 feet. A little corner is taken off the recreation grounds, here a slight curve is noticed, and the yards commence a few feet northward. The yard extend northward a distance of 3000 feet with a width of 300 feet skirting most of the way the slight embankment. During the past week a great change has been made here. The slight rain of last Friday enabled the contractors to burn the huge piles of refuse and now the from the river to the end of the yards is cleared. Ed. Jordon has the contract for the first half and Mr. E. Sloane for the north end. The main track runs through the yards at a distance of 100 feet from the east edge of the right of way. The depot will be located below the brewery. The grade over this section is comparatively level. An occasional cut of several feet is found and a filling of a corresponding depth is found in other places.

Several hundred feet from the northern end of the yards of this line, termed the Crows Nest Southern, the branch line of the Coal Company makes its connection. This branch will be known as the Morrissey Fernie and Michel Railway. After curving into a straight line it runs direct to the C. P. R. line, curving to cross it on a diamond in a southerly direction. The crosting is made 300 feet north of the Fernie Manufacturing Company's plant. The new survey for this branch line was completed only last Monday. The old survey took it down to the Fernie Lumber Co s bridge and had an overhead crossing. A switch line runs into the C. P. R. to the left as the crossing is approached. A "Y" is also provided. It runs off northward to join the mainline of the Crows Nest Southern, extended a couple of thousand feet north of the yards. A filling of eight to ten feet will be required at the approach to the C. P. R. tracks, and the line here will be graded to about two percent.

The survey after crossing the C. P. R. runs in almost a straight line to the C. P. R. weigh scales where it switches to the C. P. R. yard track. The survey runs through the tenderloin district, the houses on the west side being directly in its way. The weigh scales and adjoining building will have to be moved and some changes made to the yard tracks leading to the coal bins and the coke ovens.

500 MEN EMPLOYED

The total number of men employed on the line between Morrissey and Fernie now numbers 500 and more will be put on as soon as the engineer's work will warrant it. The surveying staff is short of men and they are behind in their stakes. The grading at the Morrissey end is progressing rapidly and two weeks more of dry weather will see the completion of the big gumbo cut on the McDonald contract.

Mr. Pendergrast, who is in charge of the engineer department, later in the week, has been at the cross-section work at this end, and the work of grading will soon commence. A camp has been established near the Fernie Manufacturing Co. where 40 men board. The grading of the first mile and a half on the west side of the river will be done by the head contractor, Mr. Stewart, who will also do the grading for the yards on the Coal Company branch.

GOVERNMENT ENRICHED.

Monday's Police Court Fines amounted to $130.

Robert Quaife contractor for clearing the G. N. right of way in west Fernie was charged in the police court on Monday with violating the Bush Fire Act. On August 16th., a fire was set by Mr. Quaife's man near the Cedar Valley mill and it was not properly watched. That was before the rain came and the prosecution proved that the danger of spreading in the adjoining brush was very great. Mr. Quaife in defending himself admitted that the fire was not properly guarded. He claimed that he was not present when the fire was set and that he had given orders that no fires should be set before he returned. G. G. Moffatt J. P. who tried the case accepted the literal interpretation of the Act, which holds the employer responsible for his servant and imposed a fine of fifty dollars.

Joseph Chardon was brought in from Morrissey Mines by Constable Sampson on the charge of selling spirituous liquors without a license. The accused was tried on Monday. He claimed that the liquor he sold was not intoxicating, but the effect that it was said to have had upon those who drank it did not bear this statement out, nor did the analysis to which Dr. Higgins subjected the liquor. He reported that it contained more alcohol than did gin. The liquor was a home made beer made from hops and sugar. The magistrate imposed a fine of fifty dollars.

An undesirable character named Carter was arrested at Morrissey Mines on the charge of frequenting houses of ill-fame. The local magistrate who tried the case regarded the accused as a nuisance to society and inflicted a thirty dollar fine.

IS GENERAL MANAGER

G. G. S. LINDSEY, K. C., APPOINTED TO THAT POSITION

Mr. Lindsey also is 3rd Vice Pres. and Managing Director of the Coal Co. as well as Legal Adviser.—Appointment is Popular.

Word was received in Fernie this week that at a meeting of the Directors of the C. N. P. Coal Company in Toronto the position of general manager the company had been offered to Mr. G.G.S. Lindsey K. C. and that the latter had accepted the position. This offer by the Directors is the best possible evidence of the full confidence imposed in Mr. Lindsey's integrity and ability, for in various other positions which Mr. Lindsey has held and still holds with the Coal Company the opportunities for testing these characteristics must have been frequent and thorough. Besides holding the position of General Manager, Mr. Lindsey is also 3rd vice Pres. and Managing Director of the Company and also legal adviser.

The new General Manager will arrive from Toronto on about the 20th of next month. It is not known whether Mr. Lindsey will reside in Fernie or not, but his duties will at least keep him here more than they have in the past. Under the present system of management each department has a distinct head, the operating department under Mr. Drinan, The accounting department under Mr. Davies and the sales and coke department under Mr. Pearson. The General Manager will preside over these heads.

The appointment will give general satisfaction to the people of Fernie where Mr. Lindsey is popular. He has shown himself to be a friend of the city and his appointment augurs well for its future. He is also well liked by the miners. Mr. Lindsey while not possessing a regular training in the practical work of mining, has a surprising knowledge of the various departments, not excluding the operating department.

WILL CLEAR TOWNSITE.

The Coal Company Preparing to Survey More Residential Blocks

The Coal Company have entered into a contract with the Elk Lumber and Manufacturing Co., for the clearing of all the townsite between the new line of the Crow's Nest Southern and the Elk River. This section which is heavily timbered is adjacent to their mill and will be cleared of timber within thirty days

The Coal Company purposes having this part of the townsite surveyed out in blocks with as little delay as possible There are also a few blocks at the north end of the townsite plot to be laid out. The only portion of the townsite that will be left unsurveyed is that part south of the recreation grounds to the river. The timber on this will be reserved, and it is more than probable that it will be taken over by the city as a public park.

His Worship, Mayor Stork, of Fernie, enjoys the distinction of being the first mayor in East Kootenay. He will make a good one.—Cranbrook Herald.

FIRST CIVIC HOLIDAY.

ON THE OCCASION OF CATHOLIC PICNIC

The Picnic was a very successful affair. Program of the Sports. Four Hundred Dollars Cleared.

The Roman Catholic Church picnic on Wednesday was an unqualified success. For two days previous preparations were being made on the recreation grounds. On Monday Mayor Stork issued a proclamation announcing a civic holiday for Wednesday. Owing to the shortness of the notice some of the business houses were unable to close in the morning but at 12 o'clock every store was closed up tight and large numbers wended their way to the big picnic. The school also closed at noon.

One of the novel features of the event was a merry-go-round manufactured by George Cody. It was built on up to-date principals and the little folks enjoyed it immensly. Booths and a dancing floor were also built, as well as ample table accommodation where meals were served at noon and evening.

The Italian band supplied sweet strains of music from noon until late in the evening. The town band also were present in the evening and assisted materially.

The picnic was a success financially as well as other ways. About four hundred dollars were collected from various sources of revenue.

Messrs Tuttle and McLaughlin had charge of the program of sport which they carried through without a hitch. The following is a brief review of the program.

Base-ball pitching contest, 1 J. McIntyre, 2 Hanson.

BASE-BALL GAME.

An interesting five innings base-ball game between the juvenile teams of Fernie and Coal Creek was played at 3 o'clock. The game resulted in a victory for the Fernie boys by a score of 16 runs to 8. Harry Harris and M. Seaman pitched for their respective teams. Each boy on the winning team received a jack knife, donated by Trites Wood Co.

FOOT-BALL TOURNAMENT.

A foot-ball match was played between two picked teams, five a side. The teams were as follows.

Roberts	goal	King
Ryan	Full back	Henderson capt.
Cartledge	Centre forward	Roper
Archibald capt.	Left forward	Macdonald
Hughes	Right forward	Newbiggan

Frank Ryan refereed.

The Archibald team scored after five minutes' play. The opposing team evened the score before half time. The second half was keenly contested and not until one minute from the finish was any more goals scored. At that time Henderson's team landed another making them the winners. The winning team was presented with a silver cup donated by Messrs A. Colville and D. Martin of Coal Creek.

BABY SHOW. A great deal of interest was centered in the baby show in which were entered light fine looking babies, ranging in age from seven weeks to one year. Mrs. Elmes' six months' old boy received the prize

The prizes for the different events were all substantial and well chosen. In the evening a dance was given under the auspices of the church in the Stork Opera House, where those who attended enjoyed the remainder of the day.

The proceeds will go towards building a dwelling for the resident priest, and this work will commence at once. The proposed addition to the church will be held over until next year.

How the Mussel Travels.

Of all the absurd forms of locomotion practiced by the creatures of the deep the most preposterous is that of the mussel. Squids will startle you by darting backward, crabs hustle off sideways at a lively gait, but nothing save the dull brain of "some kind of clam critter," pondering over the transportation problem in those remote epochs when time was no object, could have evolved so slow and cumbersome a method.

You may often see mussels climb up the pile of a wharf toward the high water mark. Notice the black threads attached to the clam. They do the business. The mussel shoots out a spray of gelatinous stuff in the direction he wants to go and this hardens into those black threads. He lets go the old ones and climbs up by the new. You can trace his progress up the pile by the bunches of old threads, which he leaves behind at intervals. It has never been figured out whether he could go a mile in less than a year, but it would be safe to back the mussel in the animals' "slow race."—Country Life in America.

French and English.

The celebrated Mrs. Tickneese undertook to construct a letter every word of which should be French, yet no Frenchman should be able to read it, while an illiterate Englishman should decipher it with ease, and wrote the following:

"Pre, dire sistre, comme & se us, & passe the de here if yeux canne, & chat tu mi dame; dine here, & yeux mai go to the faire if yeux plaise; yeux mai have fiche, mutin, pore, buter, foule, hair, fruit, pigeon, olives, sallette for ure dinner, & excellent te, cafe, port vin, & liqueurs; & tel ure bette & poli tu comme; Ile go tu the faire & visite the baron. But if yeux dont comme to us, Ile go tu ure house & se oncle, & se houe he does; for mi dame ses he beant li. But doux comme, mi dire; yeux canne li here, yeux nos—if yeux louve musique, yeux mai have the harp, lutte, or viel here. Adieu, mi dire sistre."—London Globe.

Late Hours and Drunkenness.

The closing of the Glasgow public houses on Saturday at 10 instead of 11 o'clock, under the powers now vested in Scottish justices, has led to an immediate reduction of 50 per cent. in the police cases of drunkenness.

Birds Are Mathematicians.

The English naturalist, Morris Gibbs, devoted years of study to birds' nests, their formation and their contents, and asserts that birds lay their eggs in accordance with geometrical lines, so that every inch of space is used to the greatest possible advantage. Birds which lay many eggs arrange them in circles, the pointed ends turned to the inside. Others, whose eggs are elliptically shaped, place them in longitudinal rows. If an egg is moved out of its original position by an intruder, it will be found on the following morning that the bird has returned it to its first position. Among the numerous and often difficult cases which Gibbs made a matter of study, not one was found which would not do credit to a mathematician.

Cromwell and the Specter.

The stories of the "White Lady" that periodically visits the German royal family and of the "Little Red Man" that frequently paid his respects to the great Napoleon are tolerably well known, especially that of the former. But few, perhaps, are familiar with the story of Cromwell's "Giant Specter." It appeared to him one night when he was wide awake and quietly resting on his couch. In appearance the apparition was a woman of gigantic proportions. Approaching him she announced in tones like thunder, "Within the year you, my son, will be recognized as the greatest man in Britain."

Palpitation of the Heart.

Asking questions is a fine art, but some people who teach school will not take pains to master it. Then when they have framed a question improperly and get a suitable answer, though not the one they are searching for, they blame the innocent pupils. For example, said a bright young lady teacher to a little boy in the arithmetic class:

"Johnny, if your papa were to give your mamma a ten dollar bill and a twenty dollar bill and a five dollar bill what would she have?"

"A fit," was Johnny's prompt reply. —Lippincott's Magazine.

Brainless.

"Count Spaghetti speaks broken English, doesn't he?"

"I suppose so. That's his condition in any language."—New York Times.

The Biggest Leaves.

The biggest leaves in the world are those of the Inaj palm, which grows on the banks of the Amazon. They reach a length of thirty to fifty feet, and are from ten to twelve feet in breadth.

WESTERN CANADIAN EDITORS.

A series of articles describing their lives, their aims and their influence.

No. 2.

R. G. McCUISH

R. G. McCUISH,
Editor and Proprietor of the Morden Chronicle.

In many respects, the editor of the Morden Chronicle is typical and representative of the breadth of vigor of western Canadian journalism. He touches life at many and varying angles. In the range of his sympathies and interests, and in the variety of his activities, he is the human counterpart of the "wideflung, fenceless prairies," in which his youth and young manhood have been passed.

Mr. McCuish, like the great bulk of western Canadians, hails originally from Ontario, being born near Parkhill, in April, 1877. Of the older province, however, he has no early personal recollections, for his parents came west while he was yet an infant, settling near Morden. It was at the public school of this prosperous town that Mr. McCuish received his elementary education, going from thence to Manitoba College, Winnipeg. From the university to the country school teacher's desk is in Manitoba a natural—almost an inevitable—step, and Mr. McCuish was next to be seen as a rural schoolmaster near MacGregor. But, as with many another, he found that the material rewards held out to the teachers of youth were not such as to tempt him to remain in the profession. And, in any case, he had other ambitions. When a school boy in Morden he had been an almost daily visitor at the Chronicle office, and the smell of the news ink and the attractive variety of newspaper work had marked out for him his career. He came to Winnipeg, and secured a position on the reportorial staff of the Tribune. His natural liking for athletics made the sporting column his chosen sphere, and ere long he was placed in charge of that department. And, in the days of Mr. McCuish's control, the sporting columns of the Tribune, in raciness, in brightness, in impartiality and in reliability, would bear comparison with those of any newspaper anywhere. The fact that the Tribune's competitors were morning papers gave them considerable advantage, since most athletic events came off in the afternoon or evening, but this handicap Mr. McCuish managed to more than compensate for, by the manner in which he handled his news, and not infrequently he secured a number of important "beats" and "scoops" on his competitors. There was widespread and sincere regret among all sportsmen in Winnipeg when Mr. McCuish stepped up from his position on the Tribune to become the owner and editor of the paper in his old town. The wishes expressed for his success among those who knew him—and who didn't—were equally hearty and general.

This was September, 1901, when Mr. McCuish was but 24 years of age. The paper he had purchased was one that enjoyed a reputation as wide as Western Canada. It was one of the oldest papers in the West, having been founded in 1880, and it had had the good fortune to be controlled by a man of much force, breadth, ability and common sense—Mr. J. F. Galbraith, one of the pioneer publishers of the province. Among newspaper men in the West the Chronicle was regarded as perhaps the best printed and edited of all the papers printed outside the cities. Hence Mr. McCuish had no easy man to follow, for the newspaper standard in Morden was high. His success, therefore, is all the more striking, for it is indubitable that the Chronicle is to-day, in all respects, a stronger paper than when he assumed control. Its circulation is larger, its make-up is better, and and its advertising patronage is greater than three years ago, and its opinions command as much respect as ever. Mr. McCuish is a strong party man, a Liberal who is upright and downright in his views, and fearless in uttering and defending them. The Chronicle, in these respects, is a faithful reflection of its editor, being a vigorous and athlethic champion and exponent of Western Liberalism, and a centre of influence to the party it supports.

Newspaper men in the West have been quick to recognize Mr. McCuish's ability, and the W. C. P. A. last year elected him its first vice-president. In the local politics of his district he is a tower of strength. He is secretary of the Liberal associations for both the provincial and federal constituencies, and was the first president of the Morden Young Men's Liberal Association, for the founding of which he was chiefly responsible. He is a ready and convincing platform speaker, and has done yeoman service for the Liberal party in recent campaigns.

Though he has been a resident of Morden only three years, his fellow townsmen, at the last municipal election, returned Mr. McCuish as alderman by acclamation—a striking tribute to his known public spirit and personal popularity. His interest in all forms of athletics continues, despite increasing demands on his time. Mr. McCuish is secretary of the Morden Turf Club, the leading sporting institution in the town, and of football, lacrosse and other games he is a foremost supporter.

Mr. McCuish is unmarried—as yet. This, however, is understood to be a fault that time—a very short time—will cure. Recently reports have been circulated to the effect that in the middle of September the editor of the Chronicle will hie himself east, and that he will not return alone. Mr. McCuish has been at much pains to deny these rumors, but his very obvious efforts in this direction have only succeeded in giving them greater currency and more general belief. In default of an admission of his guilt by the detendant, we feel somewhat diffident about offering congratulations. Nevertheless, we do so, and with the utmost sincerity and heartiness, voicing in this regard, we feel assured, the feeling of Mr. McCuish's hosts of personal and professional friends. If Mr. McCuish still persists that these congratulations are misplaced, we trust that he will return them, but do not believe we will ever have to pay express charges on the returned parcel.

When an Iceberg Turns Turtle.

Think of sections bigger than Rhode Island being torn from a glacier and swept off into the ocean, to be ferried 3,000 miles on the bosom of the Labrador current until the heated waters of the gulf stream cause them to vanish from human ken. Then can one form some idea of the immensity of the ice area discharged from the Greenland seas each year. Thousands of miles of valley are constantly emptying their contents into the bays and fiords of the north waters, whence the tides hurry the detachments southward to cumber the wide Atlantic.

The disposition of icebergs to turn turtle is one of their most dangerous propensities. It arises from several causes. When they start out from Greenland their bottoms are heavy with the detritus gathered in their glacial period, and this drops off at intervals as they move south, causing their center of gravity to change and the berg to assume new positions. The scientific theory of the formation of the vast submarine plateaus which extend from Labrador to Fundy, and are commonly known as the Grand banks of Newfoundland, is that they are the products of bergs during countless ages.

Cannibalistic Scorpions.

During many years of scorpion hunting I never remembered to have seen two individuals living together in amity, and even their more tender relations are tainted at times with the unamiable habit of cannibalism. The males are decidedly smaller than their mates, whom they approach accordingly with the utmost caution. If the fair inamorata doesn't like the looks of her advancing suitor she settles the question offhand by making a murderous spring at him, catching him in her claws, stinging him to death and making a hearty meal off him. This is scarcely loverlike. On the other hand, if a dubious wife, the female scorpion is a devoted mother. She hatches her eggs in her own oviduct, brings forth her young alive—unlike her relations, the spiders—and carries them about on her back, to the number of fifty, during their innocent childhood, till they are of an age to shift for themselves in the struggle for existence.

First Person Cremated In America.

The first white person lawfully cremated within the present limits of the United States, according to wishes and desires expressed by himself, was Colonel Henry Laurens, one of the Revolutionary patriots. He was born in Charleston, S. C., in the year 1724, and died on his plantation near that place on Dec. 8, 1792. His will, which he had requested them to open and read the next day after his death, was supplemented with the following: "I solemnly enjoin it upon my son, as an indispensable duty, that, as soon as he conveniently can after my decease, he cause my body to be wrapped in twelve yards of towcloth and burned until it be entirely consumed." The request was carried out to the letter and was the beginning of cremation in America.

The Real Unicorn.

Early in the last century the unicorn of ancient myth came within the realm of scientific knowledge in the form of the white rhinoceros, the largest, next to the elephant, of modern quadrupeds. For long years the unicorn's only known habitat was on a coat of arms. Ancient writers who had told of it were discredited until a one horned rhinoceros, found by Marco Polo in Sumatra, received this name. And early in the last century Burchell also discovered in South Africa, between the Orange and Zambezi rivers, the huge white pachyderm. It had, in truth, two horns, but one was so small as to be scarcely perceptible, while the other, tufted with bristles at the base, was so many as four feet long, curving and tapering to a hard, sharp point.

Tact.

"Has your mother finally consented to your marriage with Dick?"

"She dotes on him just because she pities him. I don't for a minute think that he is as shortsighted as he pretends to be, but he rushed in Sunday evening, kissed mother twice and apologized beautifully by telling her that he thought he was kissing me."—Detroit Free Press.

Spoiled It All.

A farmer went to hear John Wesley preach. Wesley said he would take up three topics of thought. He was talking chiefly about money. His first was, "Get all you can." The farmer nudged a neighbor and said: "This is strange preaching. I never heard the like before. This is very good." Then Wesley discoursed on "Industry," "Activity," "Living to Purpose," and reached his second division, "Save all you can." The farmer became more excited. "Was there ever anything like this?" he said. Wesley denounced thriftlessness and waste, and he satirized the willful wickedness which lavishes in luxury, and the farmer rubbed his hands, and he thought, "All this I have been taught from my youth up," and what with getting and what with hoarding it seemed to him that "salvation" had come to his house. But Wesley advanced to his third head, which was "Give all you can." "Ah, dear; ah, dear," said the farmer; "he has gone and spoiled it all!"

A DANGER TO BABY.

Doctors have preached against the so-called soothing medicines for years, but they are still used altogether too much. The fact that they put children to sleep is no sign that they are helpful. Ask your doctor and he will tell you that you have merely drugged your little one into insensibility — that soothing medicines are dangerous. If your little one needs a medicine give it Baby's Own Tablets, and you give it a medicine guaranteed to contain no opiate or harmful drug. You can give these Tablets just as safely to a new born infant as to the well grown child, and they will cure all the minor ills of childhood. Mrs. J. M. Gilpin, Bellhaven, Ont., says: "Since I gave my little one Baby's Own Tablets there has been a marvellous change in her appearance, and she is growing splendidly. You may count me always a friend to the Tablets." Ask your druggist for this medicine, or send 25 cents to the Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont., and get a box by mail post paid.

Very Natural Philosophy.—"Why does lightning so rarely strike in the same place?" asked a Board-school teacher of the new boy in the class of natural philosophy. "Oh," said the boy, "because it never needs to!"

There never was and never will be a universal panacea, in one remedy for all ills to which flesh is heir—the very nature of many curatives being such that were the germs of other and differently seated diseases rooted in the system of the patient—what would relieve one ill in turn would aggravate the other. We have, however, in Quinine Wine when obtainable in sound, unadulterated state, a remedy for many and grievous ills. By its gradual and judicious use the frailest systems are led into convalescence and strength by the influence which Quinine exerts on nature's own restoratives. It relieves the drooping spirits of those with whom a chronic state of morbid despondency and lack of interest in life is a disease, and by tranquilizing the nerves, disposes to sound and refreshing sleep—imparts vigor to the action of the blood, which, being stimulated, courses through the veins, strengthening the healthy animal functions of the system, thereby making activity a necessary result, strengthening the frame and giving life to the digestive organs which naturally demand increased substance—result improved appetite. Northrop & Lyman of Toronto have given to the public their Superior Quinine Wine at the usual rate and, guaged by the opinion of scientists, the wine approaches nearest perfection of any in the market. All druggists sell it.

INTERIOR FINISHES.

A Suggestion For Ebony Woodwork and Brass Trimmings.

One of the least expensive finishes for the woodwork of interiors where an artist's effect is desired is black paint ground in Japan. Two coats of this will cover a cheap wood and give it a certain elegance. No varnish should be used with it, for when it has been well polished with a cloth it shines with a soft luster which is quite as satisfactory as an expensive ebony finish for doors, baseboards, picture molds, etc. Brass or silver hardware should be used with black woodwork, reserving the always admirable wrought iron for woods with natural finish. Southern pine and cypress in the eastern part of the United States and redwood and Oregon pine are the cheapest woods for interior finish in this country. When these woods are merely oiled and rubbed down they can be made to do duty most satisfactorily in cheaper houses.

It is sometimes advisable to paint the woodwork of bedchambers in colors which correspond to the figure in the wall paper, the accessories of the toilet table, etc. A pretty bedchamber may thus be evolved from a lot of unattractive articles if the walls are papered with pretty yellow roses on a white ground and the ceiling with frieze calcimined in clear pale yellow, the woodwork painted tint in the flowers, and the iron or wooden bedstead, some wooden chairs and wicker ones painted in eggshell gloss with the same yellow.—Woman's Home Companion.

DOMESTIC ECONOMY.

Some of the Ways Women Are Penny Wise and Pound Foolish.

"One of the most pitiable domestic spectacles I know of," said a veteran housekeeper the other day, "is the way women squander their strength and time in trying to economize. I know a woman who has four young children and does her own work; she never throws a piece of twine away. No matter how knotted the string is that comes off a bundle or parcel, she sits down and unravels it. And yet good twine is only 10 cents a ball!

"One of the commonest modes of being penny wise and pound foolish is in the matter of using up left overs in food. To save half a cent's worth of old, dry bread a woman will use up a quarter's worth of eggs, sugar, butter and currants, only to have her family turn from it with an impatient fling, 'Oh, I hate bread pudding!'

"Another type of domestic economist will spend a dollar on new trimmings to furbish up some old made over gown, and when she has laid out time, money and ingenuity, when she has turned and pressed and pieced and joined and contrived, the result is a patchwork that the maker is ashamed to wear.

"I believe in being economical, mind you. What I stick at is this senseless expenditure of time and money over what is not worth 10 cents. A woman shows her brains quite as much in what she declines to fuss over as in what she makes the most of."

HOUSEHOLD HINTS.

Whisky will remove the most obstinate fruit stains if poured on the stained places before sending the garment to the wash.

Finger marks on varnished furniture are removed by rubbing them with a piece of rag dipped in sweet oil. Afterward polish with a dry cloth.

When scissors get blunt, sharpen them by opening and moving backward and forward on a piece of glass. This sharpens the bluntest scissors and can be repeated when necessary.

When drawing linen threads for hemstitching take a brush and lather that part of the linen well with soap and water. When this dries the thread may be drawn with little difficulty.

If the housekeeper is unable to secure the indented and perforated round enameled ware to fit in the bottom of saucepans to prevent food sticking to the pans or burning, keep a wire dishcloth to set in the bottom of the kettle.

Consider the Children.

Professor Edward Howard Griggs in a talk to the National Congress of Mothers on "Principles of Government In Home and School" said among other things:

"Don't be so neat about the house that your child is driven into the streets in order to be comfortable; don't make the child lie by asking embarrassing questions, but be careful not to suppress the imagination. When the child reaches the interrogation age, be indulgent, but never tolerate impudence."

Professor Griggs said that nagging on the part of overzealous parents was responsible for much of the apparent perversity of children and advocated allowing them independence of thought and action.

Old Potatoes.

When potatoes have begun to be old and rather tasteless soak them before cooking in salted water. Boil them in water to which some salt has been added, and when they are done drain all the water off, keep covered and set back over the fire to steam perfectly dry. Stir the kettle to prevent the potatoes from sticking to it, but do not uncover them. Thus cooked they will be light and mealy.

Colored Cotton Goods.

It is said, we know not on what authority, that cotton goods may be made absolutely unfadeable by soaking the material in water to which turpentine has been added in the proportion of a tablespoonful to half a gallon of water. The goods must remain in the water for three hours.

Damascus Swords.

To the lovers of strange goods the bazaars of Damascus are far more alluring than those of Cairo or of Constantinople. The capacious chests of the merchants contain much that we would buy were our purses longer. Old embroideries of wonderful colors, delicate china, silks of many hues, swords of cunning workmanship, all these lie piled beside us on the floor. It is but seldom that a really good specimen of the Damascus sword can be obtained, for the art of working and engraving steel is dead.

These swords were made of alternate layers of iron and steel, so finely tempered that the blade would bend to the hilt without breaking, with an edge so keen that no coat of mail could resist it, and a surface so highly polished that when a Moslem wished to rearrange his turban he used his sword for a looking glass.

In the Great Western Wheat Belt.

One square mile of wheat. Ever see it? Transcontinental trains used to stop in the Smoky Hill valley of Kansas to allow passengers a view of such a wonder. It realized all the travelers' dreams of agricultural splendor. Hundreds such visions now mark the great grain area of the plains, but their beauty is none the less. Six hundred and forty acres of wealth! It shimmered beneath the perfect opalescent blue of the sky, the tall straws bending with their weight of grain. Standing on the seat of the reaper one might see in the distance a glimmer of green pastures and catch glimpses of rustling fields of corn, but here was the heart of summer.—C. M. Harger in Scribner's.

Letter of John Wesley.

A hitherto unpublished letter of John Wesley has been sent to Notes and Queries by a correspondent in Calcutta. It was originally the property of a relative, the daughter of a Methodist preacher. It is dated Aberdeen, May 5, 1784, and is addressed to "Dear Jemmy." It gives directions as to the forwarding of letters, comments on a certain sermon, and concludes thus: "You have done well in restoring the meetings at 5 in the morning. These are the glory of the Methodists. I am your affectionate friend and brother, J. Wesley."

"Well, I made the sale all right," said the new salesman. "But you lied to her," protested the proprietor. "You told her they were genuine old Irish laces." "No, I didn't. She simply said she didn't want any 'bogus imitations,' and I assured her ours were genuine."

IT NEEDS NO TESTIMONIAL.—It is a guarantee in itself. If testimonials are required they could be furnished by the thousands from all sorts and conditions of men in widely different places. Many medicines are put forth every year which have but an ephemeral existence and then are heard of no more. Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil has grown in reputation every day since it first made its appearance.

RUSSIAN WARSHIP SUNK.

VLADIVOSTOCK FLEET CRUSHED.

Rurik Sunk by Japanese Warships' Terrific Fire — Believed all on Board Lost—Other Vessels Badly Disabled — Two more Destroyers Captured.

A cable from Tokio on the 14th says: Vice-Admiral Kaminura encountered the Russian Vladivostock squadron to-day north of Tsu Island in the Strait of Korea and attacked the enemy at once. The battle lasted five hours, and resulted in a complete Japanese victory. The Russian cruiser Rurik was sunk, and the cruisers Rossia and Gromoboi fled to the northward after having sustained damage. Vice-Admiral Kaminura cables the Navy Department that the injuries inflicted on his vessels were slight. The fate of the crew of the Rurik is not known. It is presumed that many of them were killed or drowned. The strength of the fleet under Vice-Admiral Kaminura is not known, but it is presumed that he had the Adsuma, Idsumo, Iwate, Takashiho and other light cruisers. Tokio is joyous over the news, as it gives Japan mastery of the sea and restores commerce.

A later cable says: Flags are flying, lanterns are glimmering and cries of "Banzai" are ringing in the streets of Tokio to-night in honor of the victory gained at sea by Admiral Togo and Vice-Admiral Kaminura. Underneath the jollity of the populace, lies a feeling of deep satisfaction and gratification at the disposal of a desperately serious problem of the war. The Russian squadron which confronted Admiral Togo refused battle. It was stronger than Admiral Togo's squadron in battleships and armored cruisers, and had it elected to fight the result might have altered the fortunes of war. The strength of the squadron which opposed Admiral Togo compelled him to draw vessels from the squadron under Vice-Admiral Kaminura, and this left the Japanese navy powerless to operate against the Russian Vladivostock squadron and unable to prevent the raids of these vessels.

The raid conducted by the Vladivostock squadron in July was extremely expensive to Japan, and not only was retaliation tempting, but it was demanded by commercial interests. Vice-Admiral Kaminura, after months of weary waiting, got his chance at dawn to-day off Tsu Island. He sunk the Russian cruiser Rurik and sent the cruisers Gromoboi and Rossia fleeing back from the fight.

Japanese guns dominate the dockyards at Port Arthur, and in view of this fact it would seem to be impossible to again make seaworthy or fightable, the Russian battleships which have returned to Port Arthur. It is probable that the Russian battleship Czarevitch will disarm at Tsing Chou.

The best possible naval force that Russia can now concentrate at Vladivostock is four cruisers. In the fight of August 10, the squadron under Admiral Togo was practically uninjured. The battleship Mikasa suffered the most, but she continues on the fighting line. The cruisers Yakumo, Nishin and Kasuga also were hit, temporary repairs already have been made and they are fully serviceable. Eleven wounded officers and sixty-six wounded men arrived at Sazebo to-day. The Imperial Prince Kwacho was hit in the region of the heart, but his wound is slight.

A DESTROYER BEACHED AND BLOWN UP.

A despatch to London from Wei Hai Wei says that the Russian torpedo boat destroyer Burni was beached August 12, on the south of the Shantung promontory, and was blown up. Three of her officers and 60 men who walked from the scene of the accident have arrived at Wei Hai Wei.

HOW RUSSIA'S FLEET IS SCATTERED.

At Shangai: Cruiser Askold, destroyer Grosovoi.

At Kiauchan: Battleship Czarevitch, cruiser Pallada, one destroyer.

At Port Arthur: Battleships Retvizan, Pobieda, Perseviet, Poltava, Sevatopol; cruiser Diana.

Making for Vladivostock (by east of Japan): Cruiser Novik; (from Korea Straits): Cruisers Gromoboi and Rossia.

Sunk: One torpedo destroyer at Chefoo, two near Shanghai.

JAP CASUALTIES TO DATE, 12,055.

The Japanese legation at Washington has received a revised list of casualties on the Japanese side from the battle of Chingjiu, March 28, up to and including the battle of Yangtzling, August 1, showing the number to be 12,055.

HAS THE NOVIK GONE DOWN?

OLD WORLD NEWS.

BRITISH ANNEX BIRD'S ISLAND.

Steerage Rate Down to $7.50.—Revolutionists' Success.—A Reported Massacre.—Winnipeg Boys Eulogized.

A cable from Kingstown, Island of St. Vincent, B. W. I., says: The British cruiser Tribune, on August 11, landed a party under command of Lieutenant Thelfall, at Aves, or Bird's Island, 127 miles west of the north end of the island of Dominica, and annexed it as a British possession. Guns were hauled through the surf and landed, the British flag hoisted, and a royal salute was fired. The Tribune then proceeded direct to St. Vincent, leaving the next day, being ordered to Venezuela to protect British interests at Caracas.

STEERAGE DOWN TO $7.50.

A cable from Liverpool says that the American Line announces that commencing on Aug. 21 the steerage rate to Philadelphia will be $7.50 instead of $10. This reduction caused considerable consternation among the lines not in the combine, but it is not likely that they will do anything at present to combat it.

REVOLUTIONISTS' SUCCESS.

A number of Paraguayans have been killed and wounded in a combat between a revolutionary vessel and a steamer commandeered by the government, says a cable from Beunos Ayres. The latter vessel was captured and is now manned by revolutionists. The acting Minister of War was taken prisoner. The revolutionists have seized Humita, Villa Del Pillar and Villa Franca. Tranquility prevails in Assuncion, and the Government is preparing to resist the impending attack upon the capital. It is expected the insurrection will be successful.

20 DROWNED IN COLLISION.

The barque Inverkip, from Melbourne to Queenstown, was sunk and twenty persons were drowned, as the result of a collision off Fastnet rock, Ireland, the other night, with the British ship Loch Carron, from the Clyde.

REPORTED MASSACRE.

The Tokio correspondent of the London Daily Telegraph, in a despatch dated Aug. 14, says: "A Nemuro (Japan) telegram states that the Russian soldiers at Kamchatka massacred 87 of the crew of the Japanese schooner Teichi.

BRITISH DESTROYER SINKS.

The British torpedo boat destroyer Decoy sank off the Scilly islands the other night as a result of a collision with another destroyer. The crew were saved.

The Referee, the leading sporting journal of London, complains that sufficient hospitality has not been extended to the visiting Winnipeg team. The Canucks, it is stated, are capital fellows to meet, and had been entertained in a friendly way, but when you come to contrast the receptions given to touring Englishmen by their fellow subjects across the sea, with the casual attention paid friends from the colonies honoring us with their company, travelled Britons cannot help fearing that visiting colonial representatives must mark the inequality of the exchanges we make. It is a grave mistake to allow our own people, such as the Canadian, to come and go without being entertained at least by the Amateur Rowing Association.

Dudley Gordon, son of the Earl of Aberdeen, broke the record by swimming in the sea from the River Dee to Ewer, a distance of two miles, in 44 minutes and 38 seconds. The attempt to accomplish the feat has been many times made, but rarely accomplished.

In the House of Lords, Lord Lansdowne, referring to the Newfoundland convention, stated that as the French Government had not been able to secure ratification of the agreement before their separation a short time ago, the question then arose whether it would be well for His Majesty's Government to ratify the agreement in the absence of ratification on the part of the French parliament. The House had no reason to believe that the French chamber in November would fail to give consent, and it was thought it would be very unfortunate if by postponing legislation it was shown that any suspicion was entertained regarding the attitude which the French chamber had rightly taken.

WINNIPEG A SECOND NEW YORK.

Story of King's Prizeman—Does it End Tobacco Trust—Manitoba's Cement Material—Shot at Brandon Fair—Foreshore Jurisdiction

Mr. A. P. Velie, of Messrs. Bartlett, Frazier & Co., 7 New street, New York, returned home, accompanied by his wife, a few days ago from Winnipeg, after visiting his brother, George. Judging from their expressions of what they had seen of the Prairie City and this vicinity, they were delighted. After nearing sometimes that it was not a fit place for a white man to live in they think it a second New York. Mr. Velie was called west suddenly to the deathbed of his brother, Wesley, at Minneaplois a couple of weeks ago, but the latter died about the same hour as his arrival there. Mr. Geo. Velie, of Winnipeg, attended the funeral, and persuaded Mr. Velie to pay Winnipeg a visit. While in the city they met many friends, and were shown all points of interest.

PRIVATE PERRY STORY.

The keeper of the shooting gallery at Sohmer Park, Montreal, was obsequious the other Sunday evening when a jovial party of fellows came up and announced their intention of shooting. He placed weapons in their hands and filled the targets with new pipes. One after another the party shot, with results highly in favor of the proprietor. He was more obsequious than ever, rubbing his hands and laughing encouragement. Then it was that a slight, tanned young fellow, with large, bright blue eyes, took up a rifle and shot. "Crack!" and one pipe flew into pieces. "Crack!" and a similar result. Twelve times the young man shot, and twelve pipes were reduced to fragments, while the eyes of the proprietor opened wider and wider. Then the young man turned his weapon on the bull's eyes, and punctured eight, one after another. He put down the rifle, remarking that it was a very good gun, and smilingly bowed to the man of the targets. The latter was astonished, to the exceeding merriment of the young man's companions. "Say, who is he?" asked the obsequious one, as he dished up twenty bad cigars. "Oh," observed one of the party, "that's just Perry, the King's prize winner."

DOES IT END TOBACCO TRUST?

It is said that the American Tobacco Company, bowing to the will of Parliament, is preparing to cancel the contracts it has hitherto obtained from customers binding them to handle none but the trust's brands of cigars, cigarettes and tobaccos, says a despatch from Ottawa. Hon. Mr. Brodeur, Minister of Inland Revenue, will have an official enquiry made at once to ascertain whether the contracts are still in force. If they are not promptly withdrawn the unpleasant duty would devolve upon him of cancelling licenses under which this corporation carries on its operations in Canada; but if the report is true Mr. Brodeur will not be called on to take this extreme measure. It is understood that there will be no attempt to challenge the authority of Parliament.

MANITOBA'S CEMENT MATERIAL

The Department of Mines at Ottawa expects to receive a very valuable report from Mr. J. Walter Wells, who is now investigating the lime, clay and shale deposits of Manitoba in the interests of the cement industry. If these materials abound to any extent it will mean a great thing for the settlers in the west, where timber for building is scarce and costly. This inquiry is another of the steps which the Minister of the Interior is taking to convert to practical use the natural resources of Canada.

FORESHORE JURISDICTION.

The province has taken action against the firm of J. H. Todd & Sons to have a determination by the courts on the question of jurisdiction over the foreshores which has long been in dispute between the federal and provincial government, says a Victoria (B. C.) despatch. The action is for trespass and damages, and injunction to restrain the firm from operating their traps at East Sooke without having the authority of a provincial license.

SHOT AT BRANDON FAIR.

M. G. Keane, of Minneapolis, is in gaol at Brandon on account of him shooting at an Englishman, F. Robinson, one of his assistants at the fair, over a dispute as to wages amounting to $23. He fired two shots, both of which went wide, and then hit Robinson on the head with his revolver. The police immediately appeared gnd took Keane into custody. Robinson's injuries are not serious. Both were at the Dominion fair.

MEXICAN POSTAGE REDUCED.

The draft convention for a reduction of the postage stamp rates between Canada and Mexico has been received in Ottawa from the Government of the latter country, and Sir William Mulock will execute the formal convention. It will then be despatched to the Mexican Government to execute. The reduced rates would probably go into effect September 1st. The letter rate is lowered from 5 to 3 cents, and the rate on newspapers and periodicals mailed from the office of publication drops from 8 cents to one-half cent a pound.

CHEESE—Little offering. Quotations are about ½c. easier. We quote: 8c. factory.

BUTTER—Creamery—There is very little moving. We quote 16½c., f. o. b., factory, being about the prevailing quotation.

BUTTER — Dairy — Farmers and country dealers appear to be holding off the market, but jobbers are confident of a large make, and quotations are about steady at 11c. to 12c., jobbing price for round lots, Winnipeg, from 1 to 2c. more for special selected shipments by express.

EGGS—The market is steady. Good stock is worth 19c., Winnipeg, subject to candling.

DRESSED MEATS—Beef is ½c. per lb. easier. Veal closed 1½ to 2c. lower for choice weights. Mutton is firm. We quote: Beef, 6 to 6½c. per lb. for city dressed, ½c. less for country; veal, 6 to 7½c. for choice weights; mutton, 9c.; spring lambs 12½ to 14c per lb.; hogs, 7c., delivered to the trade here.

POULTRY—Fowl are coming forward better. We quote: Fowl, live weight, 10c per lb.; spring chickens, 45 to 75c. per pair.

HIDES—Business brisk; prices firmer owing to the strike. We quote: Abattoir hides, 7c for No. 1's; 6c for No. 2's. Country cured butchers' are the same as city butchers' at 6¾c for No. 1 grade; lambs and shearlings, 15 and 25c.

TALLOW—The market is steady. No. 1 tallow is worth 4c. per lb., delivered at Winnipeg; No. 2 3c.

WOOL—Supplies are pretty well cleaned up and the season practically over.

SENECA ROOT—As a result of continued improvement in the export demand prices are 2 to 5c firmer. Receipts are hardly one-half of the amount last year, and the crop is believed to be very short. Local buyers are paying 60c per lb. for good, dry root.

LIVE STOCK.

CATTLE—A decline of 25c per cwt. in exporters is the feature this week. Export stock is worth $3.25 weighed at the point of shipment. We quote: $3.25 off cars here for choice butchers', down to $2.50 for inferior grades.

SHEEP—Prices are steady. We quote: $3.50 per cwt., Winnipeg.

HOGS—Hogs are steady at 4¾c per pound selected weight.

MARKET REPORT.

Compiled by Thompson, Sons & Co.

Winnipeg, Thursday, Aug. 18, 1904.

WHEAT—The week ending this date has been another nervous and exciting week in the wheat markets of the world, but more especially in the American speculative markets. The principal reason for this, in fact we may say the whole reason, has been the reiteration, and to some extent the confirmation of more or less damage by rust to the spring wheat crop in the Dakotas and Minnesota, with the intimation this week that this blight was spreading northward into Manitoba. We are of the opinion that this rust damage is greatly exaggerated, but there is no doubt at this date that rust is more or less prevalent. To what extent damage has been done, or may be done to the crop not yet matured, it is impossible to estimate anything like definitely, until the results are made patent by the thrashing machine. In the meantime the general opinion of the Manitoba trade is that some large operators on the Minneapolis and Chicago markets are, with the assistance of recognized crop experts, making the very most of the damaging influences which can be found, in order to boom prices temporarily, and secure big profits on wheat bought in the anticipation of the success of such efforts. So far their scheme has been unsuccessful, and under the persistent and persuasive statements as to the insidious nature and extent of the rust disease, and the inexperience of farmers and the grain trade in regard to it (for it is stated that nothing like this visitation has occurred for twenty-six years, this was in 1878), the large majority of the spring wheat trade has become mystified over it, and confess they can scarcely at the moment form a definite opinion as to the situation. So far as Manitoba and the Canadian West is concerned no one yet believes that much damage has occurred, but if the disease works as the experts tell us, considerable damage might yet develop. In the meantime it can be stated that the weather over this country during the past week has been ideal for ripening and harvesting. It has been dry, warm, and with bright sunshine fourteen hours each day, and this has hastened the crop, so that previous delay has been almost made up. Cutting of wheat began in several earlier districts between Wednesday and Saturday of last week, and every day since has seen more farmers start cutting. By Monday, the 22nd inst., cutting will be general, and by the end of next week, if the weather keeps dry, 50 per cent. of the crop will be cut. With a continuation of favorable weather the harvest will not be so late as expected, and we think there is good reason to expect harvesting and threshing to be done with expedition this season, and that the free movement of the crop to market will assume large proportions much earlier than last year. In reviewing the course of prices during the week we find that in the American speculative markets there was a sharp break on Friday last of from 2c. to 3c., but since then daily advances took place until to-day, when a decline of 2c. took place. The result on the week, however, is an advance of 2½c. to 6c., the larger advance being on the distant futures, the smaller on September wheat. European markets have also advanced to a moderate extent, but wheat in the American markets is still above the price of the same wheat in Liverpool. There is nothing new on the world's crop situation, the most interesting being that the weather for the growing crops in Argentina and Australia continues very favorable, and these crops will have to be reckoned with as to their effect on prices later on. The visible supply increased last week 45,000 bushels, as against a decrease of 560,000 bushels the week previous and a decrease of 561,000 bushels last year. The world's shipments were 8,504,000 bus., against 9,112,000 bushels the previous week and 8,813,000 bushels last year. The world's visible supply, according to Bradstreet's, increased 1,393,000 bushels, against an increase of 1,307,000 bushels the previous week, and an increase of 2,427,000 bushels last year.

Manitoba wheat has been strong and moderately active during the week, but shippers and large buyers are practically out of the market, and the trade doing is mostly on the part of small speculators. There has been an increase of orders from country dealers to sell wheat for October delivery, which goes to show they are satisfied with the crop prospect. Prices dropped 1c. last Friday but regained it again by Tuesday, and have advanced 3c. since, making an advance of 4c. on the week, and although American markets declined 2c. to-day our prices have held the same as yesterday, and we quote 1 Northern, $1.03½; 2 Nor., $1.00½; 3 Nor., 97½c.; No. 4 wheat, 67c.; feed wheat, 72c.; No. 2 feed, 64c., spot or August delivery. For October delivery, 1 Nor., $1.02½; 1 Nor., 99½c., all in store Fort William and Port Arthur.

Dominion of Canada Exhibition.

The second Dominion of Canada Exhibition, which was this year held in Winnipeg, is now a thing of the past, and it is gratifying to be able to record that it was an unqualified success from the inaugural day, when, with great eclat, the Minister of Interior declared the Exhibition open until the curtain was rung down on the final scene. Every visitor was loud in his praise of the quality of the exhibits, the uniform excellency of the attractions, the magnificent horse racing and the splendid live stock exhibits, which have never been equalled in the history of the Canadian West; in fact, there were visitors from the East who stated that they had never seen a better live stock parade than that which took place before the grand stand on Thursday of the second week of the Fair.

The following statement of attendances during the eleven days of the Fair will testify to the popularity and the importance which was attached to this great Canadian event, all previous great day records having been beaten easily. Gate returns show that 205,183 admissions were paid during the ten days of charge, or an average of 20,818 per day. To this may be added some 3,000 for passes, bringing the average up to about 24,000, with the total at 240,000, or nearly a quarter of a million. Last year the attendance was scarcely one-third, running 78,500. As may be seen by the table of attendance given below, Wednesday of the first week, Citizens' Day, made the record with 33,832.

Tuesday, July 26	21,392
Wednesday, July 27	33,832
Thursday, July 28	30,775
Friday, July 29	14,345
Saturday, July 30	18,043
Monday, August 1	21,982
Tuesday, August 2	20,478
Wednesday, August 3	20,800
Thursday, August 4	13,311
Friday, August 5	10,225

It is not too much to say that the Dominion of Canada Exhibition of 1904 was by far the greatest event which has occurred west of the Great Lakes. So great a degree of excellence has been attained that it will be no easy task to keep up, or improve upon the standard which has this year been set, but the Board of Directors and the management are determined to leave no stone unturned to, at any rate, keep up or even improve upon what has been done this year.

The exhibits were most creditable in character, and eastern and western manufacturers vied with each other in friendly rivalry to put up the best possible exhibits with a result which was extremely gratifying to all concerned. The three industrial buildings, which the generosity of the Winnipeg City Council had made possible, were filled with exhibits, which demonstrated that the manufacturing possibilities of the West were wonderful. Prince Edward Island in the east and Vancouver Island in the west were alike represented, and the most instructive object lesson was afforded, both in the eastern manufacturer seeking a market and the western dealer seeking goods to sell. As an indication of the importance which is now attached by the eastern manufacturer to the west, it may be mentioned that the several manufacturers signified to the management their intention of exhibiting next year at Winnipeg, and asked that the space which had been allotted them might be reserved for future use.

As far as the live stock exhibits were concerned never has Winnipeg seen such a comprehensive and varied collection of live stock in every class, and visitors from the east and south who witnessed the live stock parade state that if they had been informed that the West produced such magnificent animals they would have treated such a statement as entirely incredible, and many predicted that a country which could produce such splendid live stock must rank as one of the greatest live stock countries in the civilized world.

Horses were also there in great numbers, and many of the prize winners were equal to anything that has been seen at the horse shows in the old country.

The display of agricultural implements and threshing outfits also was extensive.

The horse racing was acknowledged by all to be the best ever seen. Horses were entered from as far south as Indianapolis and as far west as Vancouver, and the free-for-alls will live long in the memory of all those who witnessed them.

The platform attractions gave satisfaction to all who witnessed them. The French Fair was crowded every day, and was undeniably free from any of the objectionable features which are sometimes associated with this department of the Fair.

The accommodation which was provided by the Accommodation Bureau under the management of the City Council gave satisfaction, and, although the demand for rooms was very great, yet there were some hundreds still available for any who might require them. To sum up, it is fair to say there could be few who could find any cause for complaint in connection with the Dominion of Canada Exhibition of 1904, which will ever reflect the greatest credit on the Board of Directors and management, and to the citizens in general.

Great praise must be given to the judges for the impartial and conscientious work, and also to the press who were generously interested in doing their utmost to help forward what has been recognized as an event fraught with the most importance, and one which will ever insure the future prosperity of the Canadian west, in which all citizens alike are so intensely interested.

Ole Johnson, of Rat Portage, was killed by the C. P. R. express.

Race outbreaks still continue in Georgia, many negroes being beaten.

Canadian shipping shows an increase in tonnage over any preceding year.

Paul Baldwin, of Fort William, is accused of stealing $500 worth of sermons.

The entries for the D. R. A. rifle matches are the largest in the history of the competition.

Apprehension is expressed at the disappearance of Folendium Fiver, of Louise Bridge, Winnipeg.

Harold H. won the free-for-all on the great western circuit at Decatur in straight heats. His fastest time was 2.05¼.

The week's bank clearings of Winnipeg show an advance of 67 per cent. over the corresponding period of last year.

A little girl once heard her mother remark that she thought a certain lady's daughters made very poor matches. "Well, then, mamma," inquired the young hopeful, "why don't they get better sulphur?"

"Were you never in a court of justice before?" asked a judge of a witness who was conducting himself in a very unseemly manner. "No, sir, never," replied the man, "but I've often been up before the magistrate."

It is heart-rending to make such corrections, but it is very necessary sometimes. "In speaking of the president of our local bank in our last issue," says a country journal, "for 'He skedaddled' please read 'His schedule.'

A five-cent cigar, says a San Francisco paper, with a good draught and an enterprising youth attached to the tail end of it, will load the immediate atmosphere with a fragrance that discounts a bone-yard or a boot factory that burns its own

At a public meeting held in Cranbrook last week to discuss ways and means to improve the fire protection, 24 men guaranteed to pay $50 each towards a fund for that purpose. Truly a very good showing. Why not go one better, Cranbrook. Get incorporated and give up the pass-the-hat system.

THE dog tax proposed by the city council will exactly meet the requirements of the town in this regard. Individuals who wish to keep about them a few thoroughbred animals must pay for the luxury, and those who keep common mongrel stock will in most cases agree that the city can exist without so many dogs. Thus revenue will raised and the nuisance will be abated.

School opened on Monday. Up to to-day the enrollment has been as follows.

1st Division	22
2nd ..	38
3rd ..	33
4th ..	38

We have been asked to draw the attention of the parents to the fact that this enrollment is not so large as it should be. The simple mention of the fact should be sufficient. Children should not be kept from school on trivial excuses and the parent who has the advancement of his or her child at heart will see to it that no excuse but sickness is considered valid.

THE Nelson News of Saturday last contained an account of Fernie's civic election with a sketch of each successful candidate. The writer was particular to mention the politics of each member, and in this manner marred the effect of the whole write-up. Many readers of the News would gather from this article that the election was run on straight party politics. As a matter of fact nothing could be farther from the truth. Party politics did not enter into the contest and there were many electors who did not know the political leanings of some of the candidates until they learned it from the columns of the News. The electors used excellent judgement in conducting the campaign on purely business principles, ignoring entirely the political opinions of the different candidates. It is unfortunate that such reports get abroad as they create an erroneous effect.

THE reservation by the Coal Company of the large tract of beautiful forest land from the axe of the woodman, as explained in a news item elsewhere in this issue, should be followed by the city council in taking steps for the establishment of this as a city park. The location is very central, in fact when the large area on the townsite to the north is cleared there will be little other property for this purpose. Another excellent feature of this natural park is the beautiful stream which flows through it, a stream which never changes summer or winter. This stream with litt'e trouble could be dammed to any desired depth for boating purposes. By widening the stream the island would be more clearly defined, and altogether the whole would make an ideal park, second to none in the Kootenays. While there does not appear to be any urgent need for a park at the present time, it is nevertheless wise to look ahead for the future requirements of the town before all the natural park property is destroyed.

THE rebate by the government of the taxes for the unexpired part of the present fiscal year is a matter of vital importance to the city, and it is a question whether they do not constitute the only taxes that the city can collect until the expiration of the fiscal year, which is June 30th. License fees for unexpired terms come under the same head. The government should be prompt in handing over these funds that the city council may be enabled to attend to public improvements that are urgently needed.

"Soldier, soldier, marry, marry me."

"Well?" he exclaimed.

"She was very unwilling," said she.

"But"—

"I got it," she anticipated his question. "Here it is." And, holding forth her hands, she exhibited in one a narrow band of snow white cloth about ten inches in length made of unspun cotton fiber beaten and pressed while saturated with water. The other held a roll of the cured skin of a garfish, in which the cotton strip had been incased.

"Grandmother raised this cotton in the garden from seed obtained in Egypt by her brother, who was a soldier of fortune. She picked the lint, muttering prayers and crossing herself all the while. She soaked and pressed it with her own fingers, and I am sure she put a prayer between every two layers. She says that if before 9 o'clock tonight this holy fillet is laid over Leon's eyes and temples he will get well."

"Pretty one, you are a Jeanne d'Arc! Give me the fillet," Quillebert eagerly demanded.

"Take it and win," said Laure.

"And share the spoils of victory with my little lieutenant," he added, rolling the strip and replacing it in the fishskin. In an instant his horse was heard bounding through the dry swamp.

Another sound of horse's feet fell upon Laure's ear, and she ran to the skirt of the wood to receive a most elaborate bow from the exquisite Evariste Oakfell as he cantered along the opposite bank of the bayou and to catch the notes of his fine tenor voice caroling:

"Soldier, soldier, marry, marry me."

Her heart beat wildly with a delight she could scarce explain, but was suddenly stilled by the thought that Evariste may have seen Quillebert, heard her signal to him and construed their meeting as she would not for the world have him construe it.

The gait of Quillebert's steed was not lowered from a run until, throbbing and covered with foam, he was halted at his stable. Quillebert took no chances with the clock, but at once proceeded to the cabin where lay the emaciated, sinking, faintly breathing jockey. Producing the gleaming fillet, he stretched it over the closed eyes and sunken temples of the seemingly dying man and on their lives charged the awed negroes in attendance to see that there it remained till morning.

Leon slept fitfully through the night. At break of day he awoke from delirium, Odette and freedom to consciousness, Quillebert and shackles.

CHAPTER VIII.

ARTICLE 3510.

THE cooling air of November had checked the fruiting of the cotton plant and quickened the sweetening of the sugar cane. The harvesting of the one was ending, of the other about to begin, when a small company came together at "L'Esperance" upon Oakfell's invitation. Though not numerous, it reliably represented the best sentiment of the parish—Baldouino and Brulleton from lower Bayou des Glaises, Millechaze and Colmesnotte from Borodino and Moreauville, Jewett and Fyrth from Bayous Bœuf and Huffpower, Bizet and Dufosse from Cocoville, Valsin Mouillot from Bayou du Lac, Father Grhe from Mansura. A truly satisfying dinner, topped by venison and mallard ducks, had maintained the good fame of the Oakfell board, and, the servants being withdrawn by Mrs. Wyley, guests and host, over their coffee, considered the case of the jockey Leon.

Briefly and clearly Oakfell stated the result of his examination of the law and the facts. In proof of Quillebert's guilty knowledge that he had not even the shadow of a claim of ownership, he read this extract from a certified copy of the deed signed by him and Poydre, the agent of the heirs of Queyrouze: "The oldest son of the said negress Olive, called Leon, is not included in the present sale, a condition without which the present sale would not take place and is void if the purchasers disregard it." And, as establishing Leon's right to freedom, he cited the article 3510 of the civil code:

"If a master suffer a slave to enjoy his liberty for 10 years during his residence in the state or for 20 years while out of it, he shall lose all right of action to recover possession of the slave unless the slave be a runaway or fugitive."

"This provision of the law," said Oakfell, "the distinct exception in the act of sale and Quillebert's perfidy in entrapping the unsuspecting boy have determined me, gentlemen, to institute suit in behalf of Leon for freedom, and I have felt that I should declare my purpose to those friends and neighbors whose judgement and esteem I value most."

All looked to Baldouino, who after a moment of silent thought confidently spoke their response:

"Your resolution increases our respect for you. Quillebert is a shameless demoralizer, an evil influence in the community. His chief gains have notoriously been from gambling and usury. His instincts are low, and his practices are scandals nurturi to our young men. This theft of a man from himself is the crowning disgrace he has put upon our parish. In undertaking to thwart and rebuke him you do a true service to the good people of Avoyelles, Mr. Oakfell, and shall have the support of all of us here."

"Not only our support, Mr. Horace," exclaimed Valsin, "but our protection also."

"The danger is not to me, but to Leon," Oakfell replied. "I fear that Quillebert will kill him outright in the rage into which the suit will throw him."

"Then," said Fyrth, whose presidency over sessions of the lynch court in the early days of the state had made his name a dread to evildoers and whose countenance testified a terrible courage, "he must in advance be warned that he cannot live 12 hours in Avoyelles afterward, and I suggest the priest as the proper person to notify him. Do you object, sir?" addressing Father Grhe.

"I do not," replied the latter, and the party dispersed.

As prearranged by Oakfell, the sheriff, charged with the service of the legal processes, called at the house of Father Grhe, and the latter accompanied him on the visit to Quillebert. They found him at a sharp bend in the public road skirting the Bayou Rouge, seated upon his horse and conversing with Laure Luneau, sole occupant of her grandmother's exaggerated buggy, to which was harnessed the colossal mule. Coming suddenly upon the two, they saw the girl quickly snatch from Quillebert's hand a small watch and long golden chain and furtively bestow them under the seat of the vehicle and were amused at her confused efforts to recover the loosened reins and drive on before they spoke.

"Pray do not be disturbed at this interruption of your tete-a-tete, mademoiselle," said the sheriff, doffing his hat. "I have but to deliver these papers to M. Quillebert and be off, with apologies for the intrusion." And he handed the documents to Quillebert, who received them mechanically, without so much as looking at the large written characters indorsed upon them.

"Before reading those papers, M. Quillebert, allow me to speak with you," said Father Grhe, riding near him and in an undertone communicating the particulars of the meeting at "L'Esperance" and the warning in the words of Fyrth.

In the struggle to suppress his anger Quillebert's face was that of a demon. It became knotted with swollen veins; his bloodshot eyes glared like a bated brute's; his heavy lips, though tightly pressed together, shook like storm swept waves of a muddy stream, and his fingers convulsively worked the papers they clutched into a crunched and shapeless lump. Father Grhe turned his eyes away from the revolting spectacle, but Laure gazed upon it fascinated.

"The cowardly creoles join the bullying Americans in threatening a Frenchman with lynch law, and you, monsieur priest, are their herald, eh? That is the case?" at length Quillebert muttered hoarsely.

"It will only aggravate the situation to use insulting adjectives," answered Father Grhe. "Those citizens have but adopted a heroic mode of forestalling a possible and deplorable outcome of an appeal to the law in humanity's cause, and I have borne their message in the hope of preventing two murders. Mlle. Luneau, you seem to have the confidence of M. Quillebert." He accompanied these words with a significant look at the girl. "Advise him against his dangerous impulses."

Her face was instantly aflame, and her eyes became orbs of wrath, but she made no audible reply nor returned the bow of the priest and sheriff as they rode away.

"You see, my little Gasconne," said Quillebert, "what flows from a combination of maudlin hysteria of the Estelle Latiolais type and abolition ambition and avarice of the Oakfell brand."

"The Horace Oakfell brand, you mean," Laure retorted sharply. "M. Evariste, I am sure, has no part in these doings."

"So, so!" mused Quillebert aloud, as if detecting something, yet doubting whether the discovery pleased him. "Not M. Evariste, eh? Aha! Well, let us see. Estelle, yes. Oakfell, yes. But not M. Evariste; no? She has lost her reason on Oakfell, but not M. Evariste, eh? And I have thought he was praying at her church!"

"Not so. I do not believe a word of it," snapped Laure.

"Nor I now. I must have been misled by the frequency of his visits at the Latiolais house." Observing that Laure's vexation was approaching the limit of restraint, he adroitly gave his comments another direction. "My hatred of the one made it too easy for me to do injustice to his half brother. I should have remembered that Evariste has French blood. His grandfather was a grand rascal of '03. Estelle's great-grandfather was a grand gentleman of '89. There should be more pulsant sympathy between him and the true Gasconne maid than between him and the simpering descendant of a supercilious and skipping emigre. We may have a friend in the enemy's camp."

"But the warning must be heeded," Laure said.

"For the present, yes," Quillebert reluctantly assented; "but my day will come."

"If you prudently employ those days which lie between."

"You know my race."

"Yes."

"Well."

"That is enough." And with a stinging blow of the whip Laure started the big mule into a swinging trot toward the junction of the bayous. Reaching the point where the road cut the levee and wound down a soft, steep bank to the narrow bridge at the crossing, she beheld Evariste on the other side riding briskly out of the swamp from the direction of the prairie, and, though she could well have passed over the stream before him, she chose to halt at the water's edge and await him, unseen from her grandmother's cottage. He had not observed her when he emerged from the forest, nor was he aware of her presence until he had begun the descent of the almost sheer declivity with apparent recklessness, but with justified confidence in the sure footed beast that bore him. Checking his horse at the bridge's approach and saluting Laure laughingly, he said:

"Apres vouz, mademoiselle."

"No, M. Evariste; pass over to this side. I have something to say to you," she replied, and in a moment he was at her buggy's wheel.

"Tell me," said she, "what is the meaning of this persecution of M. Constant? Is it neighborly? Is it not abolitionist?"

"I have no part in the business, believe me," he answered. "It is not the sort of thing to interest me. My brother affects philosophy, humanitarianism, altruism and other isms which appeal to his emotional nature, but which have no charm for me, and it seems he has undertaken the affair as a knight of old would sally forth to chop the head off a dragon."

"To win a fair lady." Laure furnished the conclusion from her reading of the Trouveres in the old books sent to her grandmother by the brother who had served the emperor in Egypt.

"I do not comprehend, mademoiselle," said Evariste. "Who can be the fair lady of this exploit?"

"Estelle Latiolais." She shot the name at him, intently watching his face. It flushed; hers paled. But, forcing a smile, he answered:

"You are but guessing, mademoiselle. Horace has not seen Mlle. Latiolais since she went away to the convent near four years ago."

"It is you who guess, and badly. The grandchild of the doctress needs not to guess. Attend to me. The night Leon ran away he went to your brother, sent by Estelle, with her request that he would procure the rogue's freedom. At the very moment M. Constant was leathering the wretch as he deserved your brother was pressing the hand of Estelle Latiolais passionately in his and pledging himself to the scheme for her sake."

"How can you have knowledge of these things?" His eyes and voice betrayed agitation.

"How can you be ignorant of them who see your brother every day and the lady but little less often?" She saw her advantage.

"This is no answer, mademoiselle," he said peevishly.

"If I could feel under duty," said Laure, sighing, and, catching a warmer look in the young man's eyes, she added with an air of trusting frankness: "But I will tell you, M. Evariste, how I know, for, though I have not convent education and accomplishments, I am not one to smile and conceal, pretend and deceive. Know, then, that old Olive, Leon's mother, comes frequently to my grandmother and to her has told these things as she learned them from Odette, the maid of Estelle. They are true. No one dares lie to the doctress."

"Probably. I thank you, mademoiselle. Good night." The young man raised his hat with his right hand as he tightened the bridle with his left.

"But!" exclaimed Laure, as if to stay him; then, suddenly changing her purpose, amiably repeated "Good night, monsieur," and, crossing the bridge, toiled slowly up one bank, while Evariste's horse bounded up the other like a chamois over an Alpine wall.

He gave bridle and spur to the fleet animal, whose speed was timed to the storm that raged within his breast. His brows were drawn downward and together, and from under them his eyes looked fiercely, but saw only the images created by his frenzy. He could but believe that his frequent visits and warmth of manner had plainly notified to Estelle his passion, though it was as yet undeclared in speech, and the ostentatious suavity of her reception of him, as he now regarded it, was sufficient warrant for confidence that his devotion was acceptable. His brother's patronizing munificence and studied show of candor had lulled him into a sense of security against any possible clash between their desires. Yet those two had met on a memorable day. An arduous task had been imposed by her and taken up by him, which necessarily implied reciprocal regard and trust, reward of the tenderest nature and the hope thereof. Their hands had clasped, and he, for the guerdon of her favor, had set forth in a venture perilous alike to his life and his political prospects.

Only a perfect understanding of the most ardent character could explain all this, so skillfully hidden from him. Horace, taking advantage of his (Evariste's) dependence in fortune, was ruthlessly trampling his heart underfoot, for he could not but have known his love for Estelle. Should he submit to be thus ignored in that which was most vital to his happiness? Would life in such submission be worth living? No; a thousand times no! Horace boasted American bravery. Evariste would meet it with a trait, inherited from his ancestor, which had contributed to deepen the red of the French revolution. The unguided courage of his brother was a doit; his own talent was a patient, calculating engineer. He would await the proper time for its employment, and the effect would be the horrid crash of all that had been builded on his wrongs. This was the first shadow that had fallen upon his life, and his soul surged darkly as a tempest tossed sea when the winded horse stopped at the gate of the Oakfell home. Seeing Horace advance toward him, he gave the command of Gloster—

"Dive, thoughts, down to my soul! Here Clarence comes"— and greeted his brother with a smile.

CHAPTER IX.

QUILLEBERT ENTERTAINS.

IT is in the nature of some men to maintain and defend the wrongs they do more obstinately and courageously than their rights and to stake more for the retaining of an unjust acquisition than a legitimate gain. There are those who would die rather than restore ill gotten wealth, yet would yield their honest earnings to avoid a threatened inconvenience. Such are they who restlessly cultivate calumny to the undoing of the victim and laugh at the truth which damns themselves.

Constant Quillebert was no weakling. There was no lack of vigor in his character. His was a strong mentality, his vision straight, though his courses were oblique or tortuous. Neither was he the passive creature of circumstances nor yet a mere form molded by environment. Such as he was he made himself by the exercise of volition, forcing his selective power into each trait of his character and every phase of his life. He could without strain of reason have been a pious churchman, but preferred to defy priestcraft, and from choice, not conviction, became a saucy infidel. Wife and children would have sobered and softened his progress to the grave had he willed, but domestic restraints were as distasteful as moral limitations, and hence he scoffed at matrimony. Nothing was less difficult or expensive than to become an American citizen, entitled to political rights and honors equally with his neighbors; but, weighing the inducements on either side of the proposition, he refrained from swearing fidelity to the constitutions and laws which protected him and his accumulations and remained the subject of a foreign potentate. His genius and accomplishments would have enabled him to achieve by approved industry and commendable methods a competency, even wealth, in the generous country where he dwelt, yet chicanery, commerce in the failings of his fellow men and freebooting excursions to the horizons of the law appealed to him more cogently, and, as said by Baldouino, "his chief gains were notoriously from gambling and usury," and he was rated a rich man with a goodly store of gold. While it had been potentially his to be in the community an elder, giving judgment, he enjoyed eminence among the cavillers against order. Shrewd, bold, unscrupulous, tireless, he was no mean foe whom Oakfell had called into the arena.

During the quadrennial period preceding the civil war no other word was so eloquent to stir popular wrath in Louisiana as the word "abolitionist." Its exposition came from a press and hustings which were at one upon the slavery question, and its definition was confined within the synonymous scope of "hypocrite," "assassin," "insurrectionist," "house burner," "negrophile." Its blight upon the name of a man was as subtle and sure as that of dishonor upon the fame of a woman. And the rancorous and intolerant, the quickest to respond in fury to the hated word, were the very poor whites inhabiting the infertile highlands, who never owned and seldom hired negro slaves. All sentiments have their extreme exponents, and it was not anomalous that the most inimical to the abolition movement should be those who apparently would be least damaged by its accomplishment.

The cunning wit of Quillebert was instant to see advantage in this condition of the popular mind. He had never pretended a legal right or title over Leon. He knew he had never purchased him. He had not forgotten the exception in the deed. He was conscious that his possession resulted from a shameful kidnaping, and his dominion had no other basis than might. He felt that, tried upon its merits of law and fact alone, the issue would be determined against him. Therefore other influences must be brought to bear upon the contest, and ready to his hand lay the anti-American prejudice and antiabolition passion. The thought of Oakfell triumphing over him stung as an ox lash. The barrenness and unworthiness of his cause stimulated him to exertions and inspired tactics which were revelations of endurance and ingenuity.

In as many nights he rode to Mansura, Le Coigne, Bordelon slough, Ile de Cote, Marksville, Bayou Blanc, Paren Haut, Coude d'Œuf, Bout de Bayou and Pointe Maigre and sounded the head man of each of these settlements. Laure Luneau was his embassadress to the women of Coude du Francais. These were the colonies of his countrymen or their descendants, small planters of the nonslaveholding class, keepers of cabarets and roadside shops, blacksmiths, shoemakers, gardeners, charcoal burners, fishermen and hunters of the mallard and the papabote. The insinuation was dropped among them that the suit was a move on the part of the abolitionists and Oakfell was their agent, and close upon it followed the rumor, traceable to no source, that while at Baton Rouge he received numerous letters from Boston, Albany, Philadelphia and Oberlin.

The night of the Sunday preceding Christmas found Quillebert presiding at the baize covered table in the back room of Dede's cabaret at Mansura. There were no cards or chips on the cloth, but in their stead were dishes and a great bowl of steaming gumbo prepared by Dede's wife (he had no negroes) and glasses and pitchers of hot rum spiced by Dede himself. Around the board were Dr. De Roux, Aristides Portvie, Fulgence Jadot, Martin Brille, Alce Robelin, Homer Titbout, Norbert Cazebat and Tibource Pratjean. The last was a swarthy, big jawed, low browed man, short and broad shouldered, a lawyer who in the last election had been an unsuccessful candidate for the judgeship. His restless black eyes, small and set close together, hooked nose and twitching lips over an assertive chin revealed the spirit and faculties suited to further the purposes of Quillebert. The outer doors were locked and windows barred. Nine saddled horses stood under the long low shed at the rear of the cabaret inclosure.

"Listen, Constant," said Pratjean. "In the court I shall say the plaintiff was born a slave; his master never emancipated him. Emancipation must be express; it cannot be inferred from conduct. Born a slave, never emancipated, whence got he the right to sue and stand in judgment? Answer me that! First, the question, Has he the right to sue? If you can answer yes to that, only then the second question, ownership vel non. If you must answer no, then, though M. Quillebert owns him not, the plaintiff is out of court and cannot be heard. No right, no suit; that's all."

"That's so!" came from his auditors in enthusiastic chorus.

"Softly! Softly! Not so fast!" exclaimed Quillebert, thumping the table with his glass. "All that fine logic may do for the day of trial or it may not. The judge truckles to the Americans too much for my taste."

"He does," assented Pratjean.

"Therefore," Quillebert continued, "we would be fools to run to him. Slow is the word. Delay, postpone, put off, tire them out, threadbare the case, starve it, so that when it finally gets into court it must be carried on a litter. You can do that, eh, Tibource?"

"That is my forte," the lawyer answered, chuckling.

"Meanwhile," Quillebert went on, "prove to your neighbors, your wives and daughters that it is all an abolition trick; that the people are being betrayed by this bragging American and the aping lowland creoles. Why, that Latiolais girl is already ashamed to speak French in company."

"Bah!" ejaculated three of the listeners and spat on the floor.

"When the true French get to understand rightly what this case means, Oakfell will not have courage to try it, or, if he does, the judge will not dare to decide in favor of the negro." Quillebert emphasized this forecast with a noisy blow from his fist upon the table.

"But, Constant," De Roux inquired, "what about Leon in all this delay?"

"I have considered that," Quillebert replied. "The rascal has gone, spirited away, of course, by Oakfell. I tracked him to the steamboat wood pile on the Atchafalaya near Simsport and will hunt for him no farther. If I win this case, I will sue Oakfell for $20,000 damages for abducting my jockey and $20,000 more for defaming me. I will teach him what it is to threaten a Frenchman with lynch law. And old Latiolais shall weep a bucketful of tears for the meddling of his pearly granddaughter, for I hold $6,000 of his notes."

"Aye, yi yi! Leonidas be hanged!" cried Dede, and the glasses clattered approval.

"So you see there is a fine campaign, with spoils for you, Tibource," said Quillebert.

"And planned with the skill of a general," the lawyer declared, his mean little eyes sparkling, while his tongue caressed the jumping lips.

"And now"—Quillebert produced notebook and pencil—"which of you has heard Leon admit he was my slave?"

"I at the race track," answered Jadot, Brille and Titbout.

"And I at the church," said Portvie.

"And I"—Dede's utterance was thick and his pose unsteady—"right here with me."

"Never mind, Dede; you can be spared, but the rest of you will remember this when called as witnesses at court," he said to the others, writing in his notebook.

"We will, sure, sure, sure," they promised, and he returned the book to his pocket.

"Bon!" said Quillebert. "Fulgence, tell old grandpere to let you have that gun, and I will pay him for it next Thursday. Aristides, come to me tomorrow and sign a new note at one year. I'll give you the old one and not count the interest. Martin, you can come and drive those two sows home any time after tomorrow. Homer, tell Tatin to pay your taxes and bring the receipt to me, and I have a pretty silver cross for your little girl Felice. Fill your glasses, my friends. It is late. Dede, have you the flasks ready, as I wished?"

"Every one full, corked and in the hot ashes," Dede assured him pompously.

"Then"—Quillebert raised his glass—"I drink confusion to Americans and abolitionists and success to the sons of old Gascony."

"Down with the Americans! Victory to the Gascons!" cried every man, rising to his feet and emptying his glass.

Dede brought forth the nine flasks of hot rum and distributed them among the company for sustenance on their ride in the chill night air, and, quietly mounting horses and ponies, this remarkable gathering dissolved. The last to leave were Quillebert and Pratjean. The latter said admiringly:

"You are a genius, Constant."

"No fool, at least, I hope," laughed the latter, disappearing into the darkness of the swamp road.

There were but two sessions of the court each year for the trial of suits of a civil nature, and these were arranged to meet the agricultural convenience of the people, one in February in advance of planting, the other in September before the commencement of harvest. Hence the procrastination prescribed by Quillebert was no very difficult feat. Dilatory pleas put in by Pratjean served to toll the case over two terms, spanning a year. His professional engagement in the court of another parish and the sudden sickness of Portvie, an important witness for Quillebert, certified in writing by Dr. De Roux, sufficed to carry it over the second year without trial. Throughout this space the interest and activity of Quillebert's adherents never flagged. It was the theme of talk at every store, cabaret and steamboat landing in the highlands, at every Saturday night gumbo ball and Sunday mass. At sessions of the court and police jury the attending crowds discussed it with ever increasing heat and bitterness, the prosecution of Quillebert and menace to Caucasian superiority constituting the beginning, middle and end of each symposium. Inevitably it took on somewhat of a sectional character, the rich planters of the lowlands being the sympathizers with Oakfell and the critics of Quillebert.

As the administration of President Buchanan approached its close rumors of abolitionist aggressiveness grew in frequency and proportion and so charged the public mind with combustible ideas that the simple mention of this lawsuit caused a number of small explosions in the form of fisticuffs within the courthouse yard, even "under the drippings from the eaves of the temple." To the women and children of the uplands, many of whom had never seen him, the name of Oakfell was as execrable as Judas Iscariot's. So acute had this unfriendly feeling grown that some of the conservative minded suggested to Oakfell the policy of withdrawing the suit. He firmly rejected the advice.

Throughout this turbulence of sentiment Evariste held calmly aloof. Whenever the subject was obtruded upon him he dismissed it with the remark that he was neither a lawyer nor a politician. His brother regarded this indifference as in harmony with his poetic temperament and was not displeased. Evariste became more seclusive in habit. He rode often and far into the solitudes of the swamps, where the deep shade accorded with his somber mood. Rivalry with Horace for the hand of Estelle he felt was hopeless while his sole expectancy of fortune was from his brother's grace, and his visits to the Latiolais mansion were made at intervals of increasing length, degenerating into brief formalities, but he bitterly cursed his dependence and silently fed the flame of passion within his pent breast. Laure, brown and vital, surprising him now and again in his wanderings, lifted him from the deeps momentarily, yet he struggled to escape her and descend to his gloomy yearnings. Still, upon the progress of the public agitation he kept a steady and observant eye.

ANAEMIA—POOR BLOOD

Headaches, Dizziness, Heart Palpitation and Consumption Follows.

Anaemia — watery blood — is a treacherous trouble. It steals insidiously from slight symptoms to dangerous disease. The thin, watery blood shows itself at first in pale lips, wan face, breathlessness, heart palpitation, lost appetite. If the trouble is not checked and cured consumption follows; coughing, spitting, clammy night sweats, a total breakdown and death. What the anaemic sufferer needs is more blood —more strength. And there is nothing in the whole wide world will give new blood and new strength so surely and so speedily as Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. Every dose helps to send new, rich, red blood coursing through the system, bringing strength to weak lungs and all parts of the body. Thousands testify to the truth of these statements, among them Miss Enerine Vilandre, St. Germain, Que., who says: "While attending school my health began to give way. The trouble came on gradually and the doctor who attended me said it was due to overstudy, and that a rest would put me right. But instead of getting better I grew weaker. I suffered from headache and dizziness, and at night I did not sleep well. I was troubled with pains in the back, my appetite left me and I grew pale as a corpse. Finally I became so weak I was forced to remain in bed. As the doctor did not help me any, I asked my father to get me Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. Before I had used two boxes there was an improvement, and when I had taken a half dozen boxes I was again in perfect health. I believe all weak girls will find new health if they will take the pills."

Anaemia, indigestion, heart trouble, rheumatism, kidney trouble, and the special ailments of women are all due to poor blood, and are all cured by Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. You can get these pills from any medicine dealer, or by mail, post paid, at 50 cents a box, or six boxes for $2.50, by writing the Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Why ought pawnbrokers be good chess players?—Because they are always handling "pawns."

We have no hesitation in saying that Dr. J. D. Kellogg's Dysentery Cordial is without doubt the best medicine ever introduced for dysentery, diarrhoea, cholera and all summer complaints, sea sickness, etc. It promptly gives relief and never fails to effect a positive cure. Mothers should never be without a bottle when their children are teething.

Erskine puzzled the wits of his acquaintance by inscribing on a tea-chest the words "Tu doces." It was some time before they found out the wit of this literal translation—"Thou teachest."

Kidney Duty.—It is the particular function of the kidneys to filter out poisons which pass through them into the blood. When the kidneys are diseased they cannot do their whole duty, and should have the help and strength that South American Kidney Cure will afford in any and all forms of kidney disorder. It relieves in 6 hours.—14

AN END TO BILIOUS HEADACHE.—Biliousness, which is caused by excessive bile in the stomach, has a marked effect on the nerves, and often manifests itself by severe headache. This is the most distressing headache one can have. There are headaches from cold, from fever, and from other causes, but the most excruciating of all is the bilious headache. Parmelee's Vegetable Pills will cure it—cure it almost immediately. It will disappear as soon as the Pills operate. There is nothing surer in the treatment of bilious headache.

Beowulf.

The only manuscript of "Beowuf," the great Anglo-Saxon epic, now extant, is the one from the collection of Sir Robert Cotton, now in the British museum. The poem dates from he middle of the eighth century, and he single existing manuscript is bady charred by a fire through which it passed in 1731.

SHE GOT SQUARE.

How John's Wife Gave Hubby a Taste of His Own Medicine.

Knowing the aversion of her husband to letter writing, the wife of a Chicagoan thus admonished him on his departure on a recent eastern trip:

"Now, John, as neither I nor the children can accompany you, you must be eyes and ears for us and drop us an occasional postal card, telling us anything of interest you may see and hear. Don't forget, will you?"

The husband promised and took his departure. The next morning but one his wife received a postal card containing the following message:

Dear Wife—I reached Pittsburg all right. Yours aff.

Though disappointed, she excused the brevity of the communication on the ground that her husband was doubtless pressed for time. Two days later, however, another card arrived bearing the startling announcement:

Here I am in New York. Yours ever.

Still later came another:

I am indeed in New York. Yours.

The wife swallowed her disappointment and, being good at retaliation, seized her pen and wrote:

Dear Husband—The children and I are in Chicago. Yours.

A few days later she wrote again:

We are still in Chicago.

In her next communication she grew a little more enthusiastic. She wrote:

Dear Husband—Here we are in Chicago. I repeat it, sir, we are in Chicago.
P. S.—We are indeed.

In due time John reached home and, fearing perhaps that his poor wife was afflicted with some sort of dementia, hastened to ask the meaning of her strange messages. For answer she slipped into his hand his own three postal cards.—Chicago Tribune.

Up to Date Bath.

Much the worse for alcohol, a young fellow entered a Washington bath parlor early the other morning. He pushed the dents out of his hat, walked to the office counter with great confidence and announced that he wanted a bath.

"What sort of a bath?" the clerk asked as he pushed the register toward the unsteady customer.

"What kind yer got?"

"Oh, we can give you a Turkish bath!"

"Had too many of them already. Can't yer give me somethin' new?"

"Yes; we can give you a medicated bath."

"I don't want no quacks workin' on me. No gold cure for Willie."

"Well, we can give you a Russian bath."

"Not if I know it. Just give me a Japanese bath. That's my ticket."—Washington Times.

Inventive Genius.

"Yes, sir; this is a safety razor that gives you the same sort of a shave as you get at the barber shop," said the agent.

The prospective customer rather poohpoohed.

"But it does," persisted the agent. "See, here is a thingumajig that squirts lather into your eyes, and here is a small phonographic attachment that delivers an onion flavored oration while the razor is in use. Can you beat that?"—Judge.

His Wife.

Gorley—You seem to have a model wife.

Fitkins—Oh, yes; but, then, women are such curious things. When we married, Flora wasn't on terms with her mother; hadn't spoken to her for over a year. We hadn't been married six weeks before Flora had the old lady at the house, and she's been there ever since.—Boston Transcript.

Considerate Man.

"Yes," said the meek little woman; "I consider my husband one of the most considerate men in our suburb."

"But I thought you said he scolded you if breakfast was late."

"He does, but he always closes the doors and windows before he begins, so none of the neighbors can hear."—Cincinnati Times-Star.

A Jump.

His Sister's Caller—And you say your sister is skittish and nervous? I suppose she would jump at a mouse?

Willie—I don't know 'bout her jumpin' at a mouse, but I have heard her tell ma that she would jump at a proposal, whatever that is.—New York American.

He Wondered Too.

Tom—Well, well! I wonder if she's really going to marry him!

Nora—That's what he said.

Tom—Eh? Did he tell you it was all settled?

Nora—You misunderstand me. I say he said what you just said.—Philadelphia Press.

CURE THE MOST EXTREME CASES

Stone in the Kidneys Cannot Stand Before Dodd's Kidney Pills.

Mr. S. A. Cassidy, of Ottawa, Permanently Cured after Years of Suffering by the Great Canadian Kidney Remedy.

Ottawa, Ont., Aug. 22.—(Special). While all Canada knows that Dodd's Kidney Pills are the standard remedy for all Kidney Complaints, it may surprise some people to know they cure such extreme cases as Stone in the Kidneys. Yet that is what they have done right here in Ottawa.

Mr. S. A. Cassidy, the man cured, is the well-known proprietor of the Bijou Hotel on Metcalf street, and in an interview he says: "My friends all know that I have been a martyr to Stone in the Kidneys for years. They know that besides consulting the best doctors in the city and trying every medicine I could think of I was unable to get better.

"Some time ago a friend told me Dodd's Kidney Pills would cure me. As a last resort I tried them, and they have cured me.

"I could not imagine more severe suffering than one endures who has Stone in the Kidneys, and I feel the greatest gratitude to Dodd's Kidney Pills."

If the disease is of the kidneys, or from the kidneys, Dodd's Kidney Pills will cure it.

He has recommended it to others with gratifying results. It's a great nerve builder.—12

GREAT THINGS FROM LITTLE CAUSES GROW.—It takes very little to derange the stomach. The cause may be slight, a cold, something eaten or drunk, anxiety, worry, or some other simple cause. But if precautions be not taken, this simple cause may have most serious consequences. Many a chronically debilitated constitution to-day owes its destruction to simple causes not dealt with in time. Keep the digestive apparatus in healthy condition and all will be well. Parmelee's Vegetable Pills are better than any other for the purpose.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer One Hundred Dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials. Address

Curious Contest For a Bride In Tibet.

Among some of the wilder Tibetan tribes in the Koko-nor there is a curious marriage ceremonial function. This consists in placing the girl, on her wedding morn, in the upper part of a tree, while her male relatives remain on the lower limbs, or else in the back part of her father's tent or hut, while these same relatives guard the entrance, in each case the latter being armed with lolo thorn sticks.

The groom, when these preparations have been completed, rides up and announces his intention of seizing the bride. This requires fortitude, for the relatives beat him unmercifully when he attempts to reach the woman. If he manages to elude his assailants and touch the toe of the woman she is his, he is welcomed into the family and complimented on his ardor. Should he fail he suffers not only the inconvenience of being wifeless, but the loss of cattle and other presents given during the negotiations. By the sale of a girl to one man, however, the father does not relinquish his claims upon her, but may sell her to other suitors who come afterward, until she may have half a dozen husbands.

Which Eye Is Stronger?

Here is a little test for your eyes that will soon show you which of them is the stronger. Place an object about two inches in diameter on a level with your eyes and move back from it about ten feet. Then point to it and take sight along the top of your pointing finger until the object and the tip of your finger are exactly in a line with the eye from which you are sighting. Next open the other eye and see if the object seems to have moved from the straight line. If it has not moved to one side apparently, the eye with which you first looked is the stronger, as the addition of the other's vision does not change the focus. If the object seems to have moved, it proves that the other eye is the stronger, the difference being measured by the distance that the object appears to have moved.

Try sighting with both eyes open first. Then look with first one eye and then the other and see how far out of line each makes the object appear. The one that is farthest out of line is the weaker eye.

Bumps on the Head.

The lump raised by a blow on the head is due to the resistance offered by the hard skull and its close connection with the movable elastic scalp by many circumscribed bands of connective tissue.

The result of a blow, when the scalp is not cut, is the bruising and laceration of many of the smalll blood vessels or capillaries. Blood or its fluid constituent, serum, is poured into the meshes of the surrounding connective tissue, which is delicate, spongy, distensible and cellular, and the well known bump or lump is quickly formed. This cannot push inward at all and naturally takes the line of least resistance. Similar lumps may be formed on the shin in exactly the same way, for the shin bone also is covered only by skin and subcutaneous connective tissue.

The Largest Cities of Antiquity.

The greatest cities of ancient times were Babylon and Rome. The former is said to have had an area of 100 to 200 square miles. Its houses were three or four stories high, but palaces and gardens occupied much of the vast area, so that the population was not what these figures would seem to indicate. In fact, it is said by one historian that nine-tenths of this area was taken up by gardens and orcherds. The total population of the city under Nebuchadnezzar and his son Evil Merodach is estimated at upward of 2,000,000. Rome reached its greatest size during the fourth century of our era, and its population was then about 2,500,000.

Saved by a Bullet Wound.

A soldier who served under General Wolfe in the campaign resulting in the fall of Quebec was dying of an abscess in one of his lungs. "Well," said he, "as I am to die, I will die in battle," and he insisted on joining the firing line. Very soon he got a bullet through the lungs. The bullet pierced the abscess at the psychological moment, and drained it. The surgeons were able easily to cure the bullet wound, and that soldier lived for many a year afterward.

His Little Joke.

Said the regular customer of the restaurant as he stopped at the desk to pay his bill: "Where did you get that beef you are serving today?" "What's the matter with it?" aggressively asked the cashier, who scented another kick. "There's nothing the matter with it; that's why I asked."

TROUBLE WITH THE KIDNEYS.

Ailments of the Most Painful Nature Result—Prompt Cure Comes With the Use of

Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills

From every part of the broad land come letters of recommendation for Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills.

They seem to be well suited to the needs of many people, who obtain no benefit from ordinary kidney medicines.

When you wait to think of the hosts of cures they are making it is no wonder they have such an enormous sale.

Mrs. Caswell Reid, Orrville, Muskoka, Ont., writes:—"For nearly twenty years I was troubled with kidney disease, and have recently been completely cured by using three boxes of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills. I have tried a great many remedies, but never seemed to get anything to do me much good until I used these pills."

Mr. John Gearin, an old resident of Thorold, Ont., states: "For twenty years I was badly afflicted with kidney troubles, indigestion and bladder derangements. During that time I was a great sufferer, and had to get up six to twelve times nightly to pass water. I tried different doctors and used all sorts of medicines to no avail.

"Finally I began using Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills and soon found relief. Thus encouraged I continued to use these pills, and after having taken twelve boxes was again in perfect health and vigor. I can sleep undisturbed, the pains in my kidneys and back are gone, and I am feeling well and strong. I consider Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills a great boon to suffering humanity, and had I known about them when I was a young man could have escaped suffering all the best years of my life."

GLACIER MOTION.

The Movement Is Like That of Pitch Upon a Plane.

The motion of glaciers has been scientifically defined as that of a viscous mass, partly sliding upon its bed, partly sheering upon itself under the influence of gravity. In other words, the motion resembles that of pitch poured upon a table, which spreads, not by the expansion of the bottom of the mass, but by the edges rolling over above the lower stratum, which is dragged by the table surface. It was argued against this that ice was a brittle substance, but Principal Forbes was able to show that glacier ice differs from others in possessing a distinct granular structure and that the grains, by imparting a certain amount of motion to each other, as in water, gave the whole plasticity.

The rate of motion varies with local conditions, but is sometimes extremely slow. Thus the Theodul glacier ejected, in 1885, from its end two skeletons, with fragments of clothing, and two medals, dated 1582.

Other high authorities attribute their motion to other natural forces, such as alternate expansion and contraction.

BLAIR'S GOUT AND RHEUMATIC PILLS

THE GREAT ENGLISH REMEDY.

TESTIMONIAL from the late SIR SAMUEL BAKER, the famous Nile Explorer.

"Newton Abbot, Devon. Dear Sirs—I have delayed my thanks as I wished to test the effect of Blair's Pills by a sufficient interval of time.

"For ten years I had suffered acutely from Gout and life had lost its attraction owing to the uncertainty of health and sudden visitations of the enemy which prostrated me for months, or weeks according to the virulence of the attacks.

"Blair's Pills have rendered me immense service, as I no longer fear an attack of Gout.

"For the last twenty months I have been comparatively free, as one or two attempted visitations have been immediately stamped out by the assistance of Blair's Pills.

The Rocking Chair In the Dark.

Although the name of the man who invented the American rocking chair has been lost to us in the mists of time, it is considered highly probable that new arrivals on registering in the hereafter will be able to see it emblazoned on the scroll of fame in letters of brimstone and surrounded by an asbestus wreath of laurel. This is the view shared by all who have encountered an American rocking chair in the dark. A rocking chair may be the instrument whereby weary persons attain comfort; it may be the joy of the flippant youth and the solace of blase age in the daytime or when the gas is burning, but by some miraculous agency it changes its nature completely when darkness falls, becoming an instrument whereby the ruler of evil recruits his corps of coal shoveling imps. No longer, when night falls, it is a padded bit of furniture. It is composed wholly of rockers, and the rockers are composed entirely of sharp ends which fly forth and strike the shin for choice with devilish accuracy of aim. This is one of the wonders of modern life which so far is inexplicable.—San Antonio (Tex.) Express.

TRAINS FOR LABOR DAY.

Joseph Carter, district passenger agent, Nelson, has aranged the following railway plans for the Labor Day celebration at the different towns in East Kootenay.

Passengers to the Fernie and Michel celebrations will arrive from the west on the regular local and from the east on the regular express. In the evening passengers for the east will leave on the regular express. The regular local, bound westward, will be held at Michel until 7:30 p.m. to convey passengers to points west. Passengers to Cranbrook will go on the morning express and return on the special which leaves Cranbrook at 9 p.m.

Tickets for Labor Day are on sale on the 3rd 4th and 5th, good to return Sept. 6th. at one fare and a third.

If the danger from forest fires decreases the excursion of trackmen to Fernie will be well patronized. The late rains have lessened the danger but many of the men are yet required to guard railway property.

THE TYPHOID SEASON.

The season for typhoid fever is here and Fernie is comparatively free from the disease. Four cases in all are in Fernie hospital. Wm. Todhunter and Fred Eshwig are recovering. The other two cases are Mrs. Mott and child who live on the east side of the C. P. R. track. They have a very severe type.

The medical officers in charge of the construction camps, along the new line of railway, report a very very healthy condition of affairs. No fever has broken out. Particular care has been taken to maintain proper sanitary arrangements.

A severe outbreak of typhoid is reported from Wardner. The Cranbrook hospital has about 20 cases, most of which came from Wardner and the remainder from Moyie.

ANOTHER BUSINESS CHANGE.

A. J. Purdy & Co. have purchased the Cuthbert confectionery and tobacco business. The stock was taken over this week on a pro rata basis and the store has been leased for a term of five years. The transfer is temporarily delayed pending the receipt by Mr. A. Cuthbert of a power of attorney from his brothers. Mr. Purdy will conduct his old business as well but he will make his headquarters in the Cuthbert block.

CRANBROOK.

From the Herald.

Albert Banks returned last Monday after an absence of nearly a year. He has been travelling in the east most of the time in the interest of a mining company that has a Perry Creek property.

The big machine shop that has been put up by the Otis Stuples company at the new mill at the mouth of Perry creek is now ready for business and is equipped for any kind of work that would be required in this part of the country.

The friends of Al. Guinley, the blacksmith, are worried over that gentleman's disappearance a week ago last Sunday. He left Mr. Handley's barn where he had been talking to some friends and so far as anyone knows he has not been seen since. He is an old timer in this district and has a host of friends.

Messrs. Cameron, McLean, Bates, Dickenson, Hampton and Frank Clapp spent a few days fishing on the Fording river, which is a branch of the Elk, and is one of the finest trout streams in British Columbia. They brought back a catch that set everyone wild in this part of the country, as finer fish have never been brought in here.

TELL-TALE EVIDENCE.

Case of Casely charged with assaulting a Chinaman was Dismissed.

A chinaman named Ah King who washes dishes at the Imperial Hotel had Andrew Casely in the police court this morning, charged with assaulting him last Sunday. It appeared from the evidence that the accused with three companions came along as King was cutting kindling wood with a meat axe. The accused grabbed hold of the celestial who dropped the axe. In falling it inflicted a nasty cut on his leg above the knee. The case was dismissed.

J. Doran, one of Casely's companions gave some incriminating evidence. He said "We had been drinking but were sober. Fraser was intoxicated. We had been drinking around saloons on Sunday. We were in all the hotels except the one in the Old Town. Don't know if the accused was drinking or taking cigars.'"

ADDITIONAL LOCALS

The work of putting the galvinized iron metal walls on the Muskoka Hotel is nearing conpletion. The walls in their coat of grey paint bear a strong resemblance to grey-stone. The rooms on the first floor are covered walls and ceilings with metal and are painted a different pattern in each room making a very pleasing appearance. Mr. Whelan expects to be in his new quarters in a few days.

"DUTHIE-GILES—At the Imperial Hotel, Aberdeen, on the 3rd of August, by the Rev. Dr. M'Clymont, Holburn Parish Church, George Duthie, inspector Caledonion Railway, to Euphemia Giles, grand-daughter of Robert Smith, Almondale Cottage, Hardgate." The above is a clipping from a Scotch paper The groom is a brother of Robert Duthie who is now on a visit to friends in the old land.

Chief of police Warring is gradually working some needed reforms. A wheel of fortune game has been stopped and the instrument has been shipped to a more congenial clime. One or more gambling rooms have been warned to cease operations and some of the most notorious vags have taken a gentle hint and left the city. As soon as an officer is appointed to look after the city's prisoners and to superintend street improvements these individuals will not be asked to leave town.

F. H. Sherman, President of the District Miners Union came up from Frank yesterday where he was called to advise in a dispute between the Canadian American Coal Co., and its employees. The matter was settled in a conciliatory manner and an agreement to last one year was signed by the two parties. Mr. Sherman is of the opinion that the agreement is a very satisfactory one. He reports considerable prosperity at that camp. About 150 men are employed and a great amount of heavy machinery has been added to the plant. A four hundred horse power hoist plant will be put in operation for the first time this week.

PLANS ALMOST READY

MATERIAL FOR FERNIE'S ZINC SMELTER IS ORDERED.

Mr. Fernau is now at Rosebery Getting the Zinc Enrichment Plant under way. Will be in Fernie in Two Weeks.

Zinc enrichment and smelting is to be an accomplished fact in the Kootenays at no late date. Constant Fernau, the English engineer and chemist, who originated the idea of treating Canadian zinc ores on the ground, was in Rossland last night en route from England to the Slocan, where the initial start in the advanced stages of the zinc industry will be made, says the Rossland Miner.

Mr. Fernau has been absent from the country for several months. The enterprise of which he is the practical head has excited much interest throughout the country, and he was requested by The Miner to make a statement on the topic. Mr. Fernau was exceedingly averse to discussing his plans, owing to misrepresentations annent himself and his undertaking subsequent to his last visit to the Kootenays, but on being pressed he said.

"I hope it will suffice to state that I am here for a stay of many months, in the course of which I propose to put into effect the plans outlined when here last. The zinc enrichment works at Rosebery and the zinc smelter at Fernie will be built. The machinery for the Rosebery works is ordered, and part of the plant needed at Fernie is under order. The purchase price for the enrichment works site at Rosebury has been paid over, and a start will be made at once with the buildings. Installation of plant can be proceeded with at our convenience, once the superstructure is finished. The plans for the Fernie works require some finishing touches, and these will be done by my draughtsman, who will be here in a fortnight."

The Rosebery enrichment works, which are to be constructed under Mr. Fernau's plans will be the first of the kind in Canada. It is intended to "concentrate zinc concentrates" that is to take the crude concentrates carrying zinc and mechanically handle the product to eliminate a further percentage of contents other than the desirable zinc. The higher percentage of zinc thus obtained renders the product more desirable from the smelter's standpoint and reduces the bulk on which railroad tolls must be paid. The process of enrichment is based on standard concentrating practice, varied to meet the special ore in treatment. On the start it is understood the Rosebery works will handle the zinc produced at the Monitor mine in Three Forks, while provisions is to be made for the handling of customs concentrates.

THE FERNIE SMELTER.

Much the most interesting factor in Mr. Fernau's plans is, however, the construction of the zinc smelter at Fernie, which, he states, will now be proceeded with under his personal supervision. One of the objections to the erection of such a plant heretofore has been the excessive cost of construction. The outlay on machinery is comparativeiy small, less mechanical plant being required than in an ordinary lead smelter, owing to the elimination of blowing apparatus. Exceptionally large and heavy furnaces of fire brick are required, and such construction costs heavily with fire brick at $70 to $80 per thousand. Then at Fernie a gas plant will be required, the fuel used in the furnaces being gas. The latter fact is the reason for the erection of the works at Fernie.

The fulfillment of Mr. Fernau's plans should have a decidedly stimulating effect upon the production of zinc in British Columbia. The metal is widely distributed, although usually in conjunction with lead. Heretofore it has been a detriment to lead ores, owing to the zinc penalty charged at lead smelters, and this condition prevailed until recently, when zinc concentrates from the Kootenays have found a fairly good market in Kansas and abroad.

The Fernie smelter will be constructed with a view to finally handling 30,000 tons of zinc ores per annum. This tonnage is by no means available at the present time, hence the plant when ready for operation will be prepared to purchase 10,000 tons of zinc ores per year. From time to time the plant can be extended until the maximum is reached, after which, should any further expansion be desirable in future years, the mechanical apparatus will require to be increased.

The smelter will produce spelter, which is zinc containing a small percentage of lead, iron and other impurities. The demand for spelter is very great, and its use in the industries is continually growing while in some important fields of production the tonnage produced is on the down-grade. The principal consumption of zinc is in galvanizing and the manufacture of brass, while in Europe large quantities are used in sheets of the pure metal for roofing.

It is naturally expected that the establishment of works for the treatment f zinc ores will stimulate the development of properties producing ores which have hitherto had small inducement to operate.

TRAIL BALL TEAM COMING

Will be Here for Labor Day. Preliminary Game on Sunday

The Fernie base-ball team has completed arrangements whereby Trail ball team, champions of West Kootenay, comes to Fernie for Labor Day. The local management had tried hard to get other teams nearer at hand but were not successful. The cost of bringing the Trail team here is heavy and the Fernie team claim for that reason they will have to play two games. The Trail boys will be in on tomorrow's train and as they cannot remain for a game on Tuesday the locals have arranged for a preliminary game on Sunday afternoon at 3 p. m. Admission to grounds and grand stand will be fifty cents.

THE NELSON FAIR

W. W. Braddley was in the city this week in the interests of the Nelson Fair which is to be held on the 28th and 29th of Sept. Mr. Braddley distributed considerable literature and otherwise did much to bring the merits of this society before the people of the city of Fernie. A new building, 75x150, has been added this year to the old one and the fair management hope to fill all the space with exhibits. In addition to full exhibits in agricultural lines particular attention will be given this year to mineral exhibits and the particular treatment of ores. The railways will run single fare excursions. Those who wish to get a prize list should write the secretary Mr. J. E. Annables, Nelson.

WILL WAIT TILL NEXT YEAR

The Trites-Wood Co. have finally decided not to proceed with the construction of their new building this year. They will however get the foundation completed this fall ready forna early start in the spring when the building will be rushed to completion by July 1st. There are various reasons for this decision. In the first place the architects delayed matters by dilly-dallying with the plans. It is only recently that they have been completed and now the firm believe that the season is too far advanced for the erection of the large building that their plans call for. One of the members of the firm stated that if there had been a resident architect in the town the building would have been almost completed by this date. Messrs. Trites and Wood are more than ever convinced of the great future ahead of this town and they are determined to erect a building that will compare favorably with anything of its kind between Winnipeg and Vancouver. To do this they realize that they must have good building weather. In the meantime they believe that the excellence of their stock and their very reasonable prices will go a long way towards compensating for the somewhat out of the way location of their present store. They will improve the building to make it warm for the winter and build a sidewalk out to Victoria Avenue for the convenience of their customers.

BEAN—HARLEY.

The marriage of Mr. John Bean and Miss Sophia Harley was solemnized in Knox church on Wednesday morning at 6:30 o'clock in the presence of a few intimate friends. Rev. D. McK. Reid performed the ceremony and Miss Tazzaman and Mr. C. Bean acted as bridesmaid and groomsman. After the ceremony a wedding breakfast was served at the home of Mr. Frank Bean and the happy couple left on the morning express for the coast where they will spend their honeymoon. The groom as manager of the Fernie Foundry has earned for himself a place among the successful business men of the city. The bride recently came from Calgary. During her stay in the city she has made many friends. Mr. and Mrs. Bean will reside in the residence at the Foundry corner.

MILITIA AT FERNIE.

THE FORMATION OF TWO COMPANIES EXPECTED.

A Suitable Range has been Selected in Close Proximity to the Town. May Organize at once.

The movement set on foot last Spring for the formation of a militia company at Fernie did not die as many supposed. Some of the leading spirits have been working on it ever since with the result that there appears to be every prospect of the immediate realization of the proposed organization. Considerable correspondence has passed between Fernie and the Militia Department at Ottawa and it is understood that the Minister has favored the idea. The recent militia act passed by the house at its last sitting also strengthens the belief that the Department will materially assist local efforts in this behalf.

The matter has reached the point where it rests with the Government to proceed with the publication of the authorization notice in the Ottawa Gazette. This notice authorizing the formation of a Company or Companies is daily expected, and then no time will be lost in getting the local machinery to work. The local promoters have anticipated this act on the part of the department by looking around for a suitable site. This has been found and it fully answers all the requirements. It is ample large enough, it is so situated that the minimum danger will result, and it is very convenient to the town. The site selected is north of the Fernie Manufacturing Company's mill plant and on the east side of the C. P. R. track. The range is 1,000 yards in length and extends almost parallel with the track, the near end being close by the track, and 575 yards from the above mentioned mill the farther end being 190 yards eastward from the track. The target will be located at the farther end, in front of a hill which rises about forty feet abruptly and back of that rises gradually to a considerable height. The site is covered with large timbers, and when the range is cleared of these the border of standing trees on each side will afford additional safety from stray bullets.

Some of the men who are working for establishment of a militia Company here are Jas. McEvoy, Major Laugton, A. H. Cree, S. Herchmer, J. H. McMullin, L. R. Forbes and others who have had experience in camp and active service. The department has been asked for the establishment of two companies at this place. The maximum number for each is 49 including officers, and in a half day canvass in the Spring near double that number of names were secured. The Government supplies rifles and uniforms, 100 rounds of free amunition per year and all that is needed above this amount at cost. Besides this a grant of $80 per year per Company is advanced for the general maintenance fund, officers and men receive pay for a certain drill period each year. This pay has been materially increased by the recent act passed.

A RAILWAY INTO THE FLATHEAD

Victoria, August 26—By arrangements reached here transportation facilities for the new coal and oil fields of Southeast Kootenay is assured. Two syndicates, one represented by Judge Prather of Spokane, and the other by F. W. Teeztel, of Nelson, have pooled one hundred of their coal claims, deeded by them in favor of a transportation company which undertakes in return to build a road into the coal and oil fields and erect coke ovens for the treatment of the coal. The name of the company is not yet available.

A STABBING AFFRAY.

Dan Mahoney Used a Knife on a Negro Named Foster.

A stabbing affray which might have proved serious occurred at the Queen's Hotel late Saturday night. Dan Mahoney and a negro named Harry Foster were engaged in a game of cards. The latter was winning and Mahoney left the game and the room. He was followed by the negro and when outside a scuffle ensued in which the negro received two knife stabs in the abdomen. One chased the other with a plank and broke the front window of Mr. Robischaud's boarding house, but which did the chasing was not clearly brought out in the trial which occurred yesterday before L. R. Forbes. S. M. Mr. Eckstein defended the accused and Foster was sufficiently recovered to be present. The case resolved itself into a common assault in which the open knife carried by Mahoney came into play in an effort to free himself from Foster's hold upon him. The magistrate imposed a fine of $25 and costs or two months at hard labor. The fine was paid. This is the first money taken in by the city for fines.

COUNCIL MEETINGS.

All the members of the city council were present at the regular meeting on Mouday evening.

Alderman Cree presented the report of his committee on by-law No. 1 This by-law which deals with the regulations governing the proceedings of the council and the duties of the city officers was read a first, second and third time and passed.

Alderman Lundie of the health and relief committee reported that he had investigated the source of the water supply. He had examined both dams and he found that all the supply was taken from the upper dam.

By-law No. 2, a by-law for regulating the erection of buildings and the prevention of fires, was introduced by Alderman Cree and Trites, passed the three readings' Alderman Beck alone opposing it. This by-law places the fire limit from the Central Hotel to Lundie's corner, from Baker to Pellatt Avenues. There are eight full blocks inside the limits where all buildings but those built of fire-proof material are prohibited.

The fire and police committee reported that in order to extend the police limits a survey would be necessary. A resolution moved and seconded by Alderman Beck and Lundie respectively was passed authorizing the fire and police committee to take all necessary steps to have the limits extended.

The finance committee reported that the government had been petitioned for the rebate of taxes.

A resolution governing the sidewalks was adopted by the council. All persons putting down sidewalks shall comply with the grades given by the engineer according to the survey made since the fire. Sidewalks on Victoria Ave. must be 12 feet in width. The same shall be inspected by the works and property committee,

The meeting adjourned to meet on Thursday.

THURSDAY'S MEETING.

The council met last night at eight o'clock. All members were present. The minutes of last meeting were read and adopted.

A communication from Messrs Hammond and Turner, electricians, re the installation of a telephone system in Fernie was read and filed for future consideration.

The fire limit by-law was taken up for final consideration. An amendment was adopted re allowing residences and churches to be built on the East side of Pellate Ave. and the by-law was finally passed and became law.

Messrs D. V. Mott and Ald. Beck and Cree were appointed building inspectors and fire wardens.

LICENCE BY-LAW.

The license by-law was read a first time, clause by clause

The saloon license clause was struck out altogether.

The bottle license clause was struck out.

The license to serve beer and ale in restaurants was struck out.

A clause was introduced requiring hotels to have at least 15 well furnished bed-rooms and a first-class dining room. The license fee for hotels was fixed at $300 per year.

A clause was inserted making it impossible for the license commissioners to consider applications for saloon licenses, or for hotels which have not complied with the above clause.

The by law contains 36 clauses dealing with every form of license. The fixing of the different fees consumed several hours. After they were completed the by-law was read a second and third time and the council adjourned at 1.30 a. m. to meet on Saturday morning to give the by-law its finishing touches.

FOUND DEAD.

The body of John Smith an elderly Irishman well known in the city was found dead in an outhouse, at the rear of the Royal Hotel yesterday morning. The men engaged at the excavation of The Royal cellar saw the body when they went to get their tools to go to work, but thinking he was sleeping they did not disturb him. Later Mr. Macdonnel the foreman, becoming suspicious found that the man was dead. John Smith was a well known character about the police court where he was summoned many times. Drink was his greatest enemy. Many years ago he served in the Royal Irish Constabulary, one of the finest police bodies in the old land, and he never tasted liquor till he came to this country. He completed a term in the Fernie lock-up on Monday and since that time the old habit had asserted itself. Dr. Higgins who examined the body stated that he died of heart-failure, an inquest was not thought necessary. He was a man of well over fifty and no one appears to know anything of his relatives. The funeral took place to-day, the expenses being borne by the city.

LARGER FUEL SUPPLIES.

The G. N. R. Largely Increasing its Coal Orders. The Coke Market Improving.

Very encouraging news is reported this week with regard to increased coal and coke sales. The Gaeat Northern have lately placed an order for 500 tons of Fernie coal per day and 350 tons of Morrissey coal. These ordets will in all probability be maintained until the completion of the branch line to Fernie when the former quantity will be largely increased.

The coke orders are also picking up and a much larger quantity of coke is being manufactured. Mr. Pearson, coke sales agent, recently returned from a trip to the smelter towns in Montana. When seen by a reporter he declined to make any definite statement as to future prospects for coke sales but he intimated that the present conditions were improving.

The best index to the condition of the markets is the output at the mines. At the Coal Creek colliery the work has been continued without a break all week. One of the officials in a position to know stated this week that by the present indications the month of September will be very much better than any preceding month since January, and it may crowd the highest monthly record for the mines.

Messrs. Swallwell and Thomas, contractors, left last evening for Pincher Creek.

The Italians of Fernie will celebrate "Garibaldi Day," Sept. 20th, by holding a picnic on the recreation grounds. They have offered a purse of $100 for a base-ball game. The local team will attempt to bring in an outside nine for the event.

Grace Bonner gave an entertainment in the Methodist Church on Monday evening under the auspices of the Epworth league. Miss Bonner presented the drama entitled "Esmeralda" in a manner that showed her to be a clever impersonator. The difficult task of representing eleven characters was surmounted by Miss Bonner with surprising ease. Miss Bonner is a ventriloquist of considerable ability.

Her Soft Soap Acquaintance

By James Norfleet

Copyright, 1904, by K. M. Whitehead

When Farmer James Thompson mortgaged his farm to old John Doan that he might raise money to go into the dairy business he could figure out that he had twenty chances of success against one of failure. Inside of three years, however, misfortune had come to him in half a dozen different directions. Most of his herd had perished when his barn had been struck by a thunderbolt, and following that his wife had died and he had fallen and broken a leg. There could be only one more calamity in store for him, and that put in an appearance in due time. One day when a letter had come for him he called his daughter Bessie in and said:

"Well, it has come. Old John Doan is going to foreclose the mortgage on me, and in a few weeks we shall be homeless. Here's the notice from his man of business."

Bessie Thompson was a girl of twenty. In addition to being good looking and having a good education, her acquaintances called her a "brick." They said so because she had faced misfortune with a braver heart than her father and had displayed a level head and much shrewdness in trying to stem the tide and extricate him from his unfortunate situation. She had even taken a trip of fifty miles to see old John Doan in person and try to soften his heart, but had only found his agent and been gruffly told that her father must pay up or go. She had expected the blow, and her answer to her father was:

"Well, if we can't pay we'll have to go, of course, but we shall be allowed a few weeks' grace, and who knows what may happen in that time?"

Something did happen, but it came about in a queer way. Two weeks had passed, and Miss Bessie had started to make soft soap in a big kettle in the back yard. Farmer folks would make soft soap in the spring even though assured that the world would be no more by midsummer. The big kettle had been filled with lye from the beach and a fire started under it, and the hour was 2 o'clock in the afternoon, when Miss Bessie sat down on the back doorstep out of the smoke to think and plan for the future. In the course of a quarter of an hour she was so lost in her thoughts that she was oblivious of her surroundings and was jumped to her feet by hearing a harsh voice saying:

"Young woman, don't you know that kettle is boiling over and wasting the lye?"

It was a man of sixty who had entered the front gate and passed around the house. He was decently dressed, but he was bowbacked and lame, and his snarling, stingy disposition could be read in his face.

"I say that the kettle is boiling over," he repeated as she stared at him and wondered who he could be. "It seems to me that a girl of your age ought to know enough to put a stick across it. Perhaps, though, you've got lye to throw away or you had rather think of marrying some prince than of making soft soap?"

"I—I was thinking"— she stammered.

"Yes; I know, but it wasn't about the soap. Young woman, when you have anything on hand attend to it and let castle building alone. Thinking won't bring bread and butter."

Miss Bessie walked down to the fire and rearranged it a bit and then laid a stick across the top of the kettle to prevent another accident. While she was doing this the old man sat down on the steps, with a grunt, and looked around and muttered to himself. Presently he called to her:

"Young woman, is your father at work anywheres about the farm?"

"No, sir. Father is in bed with a broken leg."

"I s'pose he was doing some fool thing when he broke it?"

"He was drawing up wood last February."

"Um! Where's your mother?"

"Dead."

"Um! Who runs the farm?"

"I'm doing my best to care for things, but it won't need anybody long, as we shall soon be leaving."

"Got to leave, eh?" he chuckled. "Say, young woman, I'll bet you a hairpin there's a mortgage on this farm. Isn't it so?"

"Yes, sir."

"And I'll bet another that it's held by old John Doan, the old flint hearted rascal. Come now."

"Yes."

"I thought so; I thought so. And, of course, he's going to turn you out?"

"He wants his money, of course," replied the girl. "Perhaps he has to be hard hearted to prevent people taking advantage of him. If I could see him and tell him just how things have gone with us I believe he would give us a show."

"Well, why don't you see him?"

"I have tried to, but I had to deal with his agent."

"Yes, yes! Um, um! So your father is in bed with a broken leg and you are trying to run the farm? I see. Can you cook and wash?"

"Of course."

"Know enough to milk a cow and do churning?"

"Yes; quite enough."

"Who makes your clothes?" continued the old man as he looked her up and down.

"I do, sir, but why do you ask me these questions? What right have"—

"Tut, tut, young woman! It's my way to ask questions, and it should be your way to answer them. Can you split wood without hacking your own feet off?"

"I have done it."

"Um! You happen to know a thing or two. Now, young lady, if you were planting potatoes how many eyes would you put in a hill?"

"Four or five."

"And how about corn?"

"From four to six kernels."

"Y-e-s. And do you play the piano?"

"Fairly well."

"Wonderful young woman—positively wonderful!" he chuckled as he rubbed his hands together. "Another question or two and I'll be going. Of course you expect to get married some day?"

"I—I don't know," stammered the blushing Bessie.

"But I do. Of course you expect to, and your chance has come. What do you say to me? I'm purty nigh sixty, but I'm worth half a million dollars and can buy you silk dresses and velvets and diamonds. Just say the word and we'll be married in a month, and I'll save the farm for your father and give him a new start."

"I thank you, sir," replied Miss Bessie, with dignity, "but I shall marry for love or not at all."

"You are plain of speech, Miss Sauce Box, but I'm not going to quarrel with you. You go your way and I'll go mine, but if you let that soft soap spoil I'll come back and raise a row."

A week later Farmer Thompson, who was making an effort to hobble about his room, received a letter in an official envelope. He opened it with sinking heart, but next minute he was calling to Bessie.

"Here is a discharge of mortgage as a present to me!" he gasped.

"Is it possible?"

"And here is a letter from old John Doan, which says that you are the most sensible girl he ever saw, even to refusing his offer of marriage when you were making soft soap that day. Bessie"—

But Bessie had run away to cry.

Business Before Pleasure.

They were performers in the amateur theatricals. During the progress of the play at one time while their presence was not needed on the stage they sat together behind the scenes.

For some time he had been very attentive to her, and, although people had frequently remarked upon his devotion, he had not come to the point of proposing. But as they sat behind the scenes he felt that an opportune moment had arrived.

"Marie," he said, "you may not have perceived my liking, but I cannot delay. I—I want to ask you to—to—be"—

Just then the prompter called the girl's name, but she never stirred.

"That's your cue," faltered the interrupted lover.

"Yes," she answered calmly enough, laying her hand on his arm, "but never mind the cue. You seemed very earnest just now, and I want you to go on. What were you going to say?"

Start of an Iowa Lawyer.

An Iowa lawyer tells the following story of his first months of practice. He went to a small country town and secured an office room, in front of which was placed the usual sign. Then he sat down and waited for his clients to appear, all the while feeling very much the dignity of his position. The day passed, and no one called, and another and another, until weeks went by, and still there had been no client.

One morning, however, he was at the depot to attend upon the arrival of the daily accommodation train, quite an important function of the town, when a handsome, well dressed young lady approached and inquired, "Is this Mr. Smith?" At once the feeling of importance returned, and in his blandest tone he replied: "It is, madam. What can I do for you?"

"Can you tell me how much it will cost to send a sow and pigs down to the next station?"—Green Bag.

The Peach.

Peaches are a tonic, an aperient, a food and a drink combined, or, to put it briefly, they are meat and medicine. A good meal may be made on cut peaches with cream and sugar, bread and butter. After a meal of this variety a person will feel more like attending to the duties of the afternoon than if he or she indulged in heavy foods. Peaches are good before breakfast and after dinner. They are good for the digestion, good for the blood and good for the complexion. Some people eat them without cream or sugar and with good results. The fruit is so rich in sugar and acid that it preserves its flavor a long while, but to get the full benefit it should be eaten as soon as it is cut. Redness of the nose due to congestion, inflamed complexions, scrofulous and bilious tendencies are said to be materially influenced by a liberal consumption of this luscious fruit.

The Thrifty Piedmontese.

In character the Piedmontese are very unlike the popular conception of the Italian people. As a class the peasants are sober, industrious and thrifty. The following instance of the thrift of the peasants has in it a touch of pathos. On one occasion, having given a cigar to a boaro (herdsman), I found afterward that the precious weed had lasted the recipient a whole month, a few whiffs only being taken after the evening meal, and then it was carefully laid aside till the next evening.

Whether the custom which still obtains in some parts of Piedmont of regarding the harmless, necessary domestic cat as a delicate morsel is to be put down to thrift or merely to a perverted appetite is doubtful, but it is well known that to fill the pot-au-feu of a Piedmontese peasant is the usual fate of wandering or homeless felines.—Eustace Reynolds-Ball in Chambers' Journal.

WESTERN CANADIAN EDITORS

A series of articles describing their lives, their aims and their influence.

No. 3.

H. G. RIGGS

H. D. RIGGS,
Editor and Proprietor of the Manitou Sun.

The Manitou Sun, like most of the country papers of western Canada, has had a career marked almost equally by energy and difficulty. It has had changes in the occupants of its editorial chair, but throughout all it has reflected with faithfulness the happenings of its constituency, and worthily discharged its functions as a director of public opinion on topics of both local and general interest. And, whatever changes have occurred in its proprietorship, those controlling it have always been worthy of the high respect they have commanded in the community, and of the best traditions of western journalism. Perhaps none have brought to the management of a western Canadian newspaper broader attainments in scholarship and culture than Mr. Herman D. Riggs, the Sun's present editor. He grew up in and with the town of which he is a citizen. He was a lad of six years in 1881, when his father, William Riggs, decided to move from Ottawa, with his four children, to the West. In Winnipeg at that time the boom was at its height, and there the Riggs' located. When, in 1882, the boom burst, the family decided to farm, and the location selected was in the southern part of the province, near the site of the present village of Manitou. Here the Riggs family went through all the hardships and inconveniences incident to the organization and cultivation of a prairie farm. To the future editor, being the youngest of the family, fell the duties of herd and chore boy, and general help. There was no school in the vicinity for some time after the Riggs' arrival, the first in the district being that in the embryo village of Manitou. Here Mr. Riggs received the rudiments of his education, his school terms, however, being much broken by the frequent demands on his time made by farm work in summer. But the boy had set before him the ambition of receiving a good education, and at the age of nineteen he went to Winnipeg, and for a year took up preparatory work for matriculation at Manitoba University. In September, 1896, he went to Woodstock, and at the college at that place completed his matriculation course in June, 1898. In October of that year he entered McMaster University, Toronto, where he studied for the ensuing four years, receiving the Arts degree in 1902.

Seven years of severe study had somewhat impaired Mr. Riggs' health, and at the conclusion of his course he returned to the old homestead at Manitou, where he remained for the greater part of the next eighteen months.

Meantime events were slowly transpiring to lead Mr. Riggs into journalism. Mr. W. D. Ruttan, the owner and editor of the Sun, had decided to take an important managership offered him in Montreal. The Sun was temporarily entrusted to his son, W. D. the younger, who for a short time acted as editor. Mr. Riggs decided to launch out on the sea of country newspaper work, and at the beginning of last December bought the Sun. In the eight months that have elapsed since he purchased the plant Mr. Riggs has approved himself a writer of force and ability, with sound and rational views of men and things, and of a grace of expression not frequently found even on city dailies. He was already well known and popular in the vicinity, but since he has broadened out the scope of his work he has made many new friends for himself and the Sun in the Manitou district, while among the merchants and business men few in the town are more highly esteemed. His unaffected good nature and modest cordiality, indeed, make personal enmities impossible, and even those who oppose the policy advocated in the Sun on public questions are the first to acknowledge the fine characteristics of its editor.

It is a distinct loss to western newspaperdom that Mr. Riggs cannot here continue the career he has commenced so auspiciously. But his health, never very robust, has shown unmistakable signs of permanent breakdown, and his medical advisers urge removal to a less bracing and rigorous climate. In accordance with their instructions he has made arrangements to dispose of the Sun, and this autumn will go to the Coast, where it is altogether probable that he will continue in the profession which he has proved his aptitude. The best wishes of western editors go with him to the West, and the hope will be general that his removal to the Pacific slope will speedily result in his complete restoration to health.

Curiously enough, the new editor of the Sun will be Mr. Riggs' predecessor, Mr. W. D. Ruttan, Jr., who filled in the interregnum between the reign of his father and that of the retiring editor. Mr. Ruttan may be said to have almost been reared in the Sun office. He knows its traditions, its subscribers and its advertisers. This knowledge, combined with youthful energy and enterprise, should result in the Sun's taking several long forward strides under his management, and its realizing to a greater degree all the requirements of an ably conducted country paper.

No Love Lost Between the Arnolds.

John Denison Champlin told an amusing story of Matthew Arnold and Sir Edwin Arnold. "Some years ago," he said, "when walking with Matthew Arnold on the banks of the little river Test, near Romsey abbey, conversation turned on Sir Edwin Arnold and 'The Light of Asia,' published four or five years previously. It is not necessary to enter into Mr. Arnold's opinion of the poem. During the conversation I took occasion to ask him if he were related to Sir Edwin. He paused a moment, as if shocked at the suggestion, and then said: 'No, we are not of kin. Indeed, I doubt if he had any right to the name of Arnold. I have been told that he is of Jewish descent.' A few weeks later I happened to meet Sir Edwin at a dinner in London and, prompted by, I hope, a not unpardonable curiosity, propounded a similar query to him. 'No,' he replied quickly, with what seemed a shade of asperity in his tone, 'I am not related to Matthew Arnold. We are of wholly different families.' Then, his face breaking into his peculiar smile, he added: 'Matthew Arnold is an intellectual dyspeptic. His brain does not digest properly.'"

"Maarifsh" River.

Maxwell Sommerville of the University of Pennsylvania spent nearly forty years of his life in oriental travel and study.

Professor Sommerville used sometimes to narrate the strange error that was once made by a French explorer he had known. This explorer had made a journey to Kairwan and had drawn a map of the country he passed through. The singular thing about this map was that the name "Maarifsh" appeared so many times on it. A river would be the Maarifsh river; a mountain would be Mount Maarifsh; a village, a lake, a valley, each would be called Maarifsh.

When Professor Sommerville saw this map he laughed.

"Don't you know," he said to the traveler, "what 'maarifsh' means in Arabic?"

"No," said the other. "What does it mean?"

"It means 'Don't know.'"

A Jealous Ape.

Sir Harry Johnston, the English explorer, once traveled on a ship with a pet ape. It was a great favorite with all the passengers until there came aboard at Madeira a lady with an infant. The latter received a good deal of attention and the ape in consequence became neglected and jealous. Sir Harry Johnston followed it on deck one day just in time to prevent a tragedy. The child had been left unguarded for a moment in its cradle. The ape had made for it, pulled it from the cradle and was in the act of throwing it overboard when the traveler pounced upon it. Says Sir Harry, "It would certainly have hurled it into the sea had not my arrival caused the guilty ape to drop the child on the deck and scramble away." The ape was relegated to a strong iron cage for the rest of that voyage.

Medical Use of Whisky.

Whisky as an alternative to wine may undoubtedly be employed medicinally with advantage in certain cases, both for men and for women. But this is very different from the constant recommendation which is suggested, as if, indeed, doctors regard whisky as a sort of panacea for every disease under the sun, and take a perfect delight in urging its consumption upon their patients. As a matter of fact, there never was a time when medical men were more slow to prescribe the use of alcohol in any form than they are in the present day, nor a time when so many refrained from advising its use at all.—Hospital.

Queer Nest of the Tontobane.

The oddest of all birds' nests is the one built by the tontobane, a South African songster. It is built of cotton and always upon the tree producing the material. In constructing the domicile the female works inside and the male outside, where he builds a sentinel box for his own special use. He sits in the box and keeps watch or sings nearly all the time, and when danger comes in the form of a hawk or a snake he warns the family, but never enters the main nest.

Not Neglected.

"The art of letter writing is sadly neglected nowadays," said the man of literary taste.

"That remark," said his more practical friend, "shows that you haven't a son at college who is applying himself to showing you why his allowance ought to be increased."

Nothing If Not Original.

Mrs. Smith—Have you named your twin girls, Lucy? Lucy—Yessum; we's done name 'em "Flops'm" an' "Jeps'm." Powerful pooty names. Dave, my ol' man, he done got dem names outen de rivah colyum.

In Spain.

"One meets with queer opposites in Spain," said a man who has traveled in that country. "In the Basque provinces the people are alert, up to date, thrifty and industrious. In Barcelona I was agreeably surprised at the evidences of modern progress, and its principal street, the Rambla, is undeniably finer than any boulevard in Paris. In some other sections the natives are about the limit of sloth and evince a don't care spirit in everything that concerns their temporal welfare. They tell a story of a Spanish shoemaker who was approached by a customer with wornout shoes with a request that they be repaired immediately. The cobbler called to his wife to know how much money there was in the house. She answered enough to supply the family wants for another day, whereupon the customer was told that if he was in such a great hurry he had better try some other shop. This is the spirit that prevails in some parts of the kingdom, but must not be taken as a national characteristic."—Washington Post.

The Word "Cad."

"Cad," it is pointed out by a writer, is a word furnishing "a pathetic instance of verbal degeneration." He says: "Its grandfather 'cadet' and its father 'caddie' are still alive in the language, though the relationship is recognized by few. 'Cadet,' signifying by derivation from the Latin a 'little head,' or 'little chief,' was a sufficiently honorable word for the younger son of a noble family, and acquired its modern army sense from the fact that the army was often the destiny of younger sons. But it also begat 'cadie' or 'caddie,' a junior or subordinate in general, such as a bricklayer's assistant or the familiar golf caddie. Then 'caddie' or 'cad' came to mean an odd job man, and from calling the men who hung about to pick up jobs by this name, Oxford undergraduates presently applied it to 'town' in general, as contrasted with 'gown.' As no compliment was thereby intended, its final degradation is obvious."

Charles Kean's Afflictions.

Charles Kean, the actor, could not pronounce the consonants "m" and "n." In the first scene with Jarvis in "The Gamester" he began by inquiring, "Well, Jarvis, what says the world of me? I'll tell thee what it says. It calls me a false friend, a faithless husband, a cruel father—in one short word, it calls me Galester!" In Shylock he was wont to say:

"You take by life
When do you take the beans whereby I live."

But his most unfortunate slip occurred in the last line of "Money," where Evelyn says that, in order to enjoy the good things of life, we require "plenty of money." In this situation Kean always brought the curtain down with a roar by sarcastically remarking that the one thing necessary to complete their happiness is "plenty of putty!"

A Great Engineering Feat.

The Oroyo railroad, which runs from Callao to the gold fields of Cerro de Pasco, is considered one of the wonders in the Peruvian world. It is certainly the greatest feat of railroad engineering in either hemisphere. Commencing in Callao, it ascends the narrow valley of the Rimac, rising nearly 5,000 feet in the first fifty-six miles. Thence it goes through the intricate gorges of the Sierras till it tunnels the Andes at an altitude of 15,645 feet, the highest point in the world where a piston rod is moved by steam. The wonder is doubled on remembering that this elevation is reached in seventy-eight miles.

Wealth of Ancient Jews.

A writer in the Jewish magazine, the Menorah, says that there were richer men before the Christian era than there are now. He estimates Korah's fortune at $3,000,000,000, and says that Solomon, after spending $250,000,000 on his temple, was still worth between $300,000,000 and $400,000,000. In Roman times there were three Jews in Jerusalem who between them offered to spend $100,000,000 for twenty-one years in feeding the inhabitants of the city rather than surrender the city. One of these Jews, Nikodemon, gave his daughter a dowry of $425,000,000.

Permanently Ineligible.

"Mr. Bliggins has just inherited a fortune," said the woman who knows all the news. "I suppose he will now succeed in getting into the smart set."

"No," answered Miss Cayenne. "Before he was rich they said he had more brains than money. Now they will say he has more money than brains."

The Tramp's Taste.

Tramp (at the kitchen door)—Can you give me something to eat, lady? Lady—There's the wood pile. Tramp—I can't eat wood, lady. Lady—You can saw it, can't you? Tramp—I'd rather eat it, lady. Good morning!

A Woman's Tears.

A shrewd observer says that "sometimes a woman cries just to get herself petted," a circumstance which shows that there may be a method in grief as well as in madness.

Well Answered.

An American woman who had been told by a Britisher that America was deficient in antiquities and curiosities remarked, "The antiquities will come; as for our curiosities, we import them."

Holding His Own.

"Stingy, isn't he?"

"You've said it! Why, he holds fast to everything he gets his clutches on and even bolts down his dinner!"

One Exception.

It used to be told of General Logan, who was a member of congress at the breaking out of the war, that when he saw there was really going to be a fight he seized a musket, slipped out of Washington and walked all the way to Bull Run, where he arrived just in time to have a hand in the fray.

He wore a dress coat, but he stood his ground as long as any one. The rout was complete, and the next morning, a good deal out of breath, he was back at the capitol, telling some of his fellow congressmen what he had seen.

"Who gave you this account of the fight?" asked a member from northern New York as he joined the group.

"Why, I was there myself," said Logan.

The New Yorker was mystified. Apparently he had not heard the news.

"You were there!" he exclaimed. "Are the cars running?"

"No," said Logan; "the cars ain't running, but every other thing in the state of Virginia is, as near as I could make out."

An Anecdote of Handel.

On one occasion Handel was caught in a shower of rain and being unprovided with an umbrella was obliged to seek shelter in a blacksmith's forge. Either Handel was in a silent mood or else the blacksmith showed no conversational symptoms, for in a little while the latter began hammering away at his anvil, accompanying his work with a song. He little thought the use his visitor was making of him and his anvil, for it is said that Handel was listening all the time to the strokes of the hammering on the anvil, which, by producing two harmonic sounds, according in time and tune with the tune the man sang, formed a bass accompaniment. Handel, on reaching home, remembered the air and the hammer accompaniment. He wrote down both, and so we owe to a shower of rain the composition known as "The Harmonious Blacksmith."

When He Killed His First Man.

The killing of a brother man, even in battle, is a painful thing to remember. A soldier of the war thus vividly described his first experience:

"My first man I saw but twenty seconds, but I shall remember him forever. I was standing by my gun when a Confederate infantry soldier rushed up. I whipped out my revolver and took him through the breast. He tossed up his arms, gave me the strangest look in the world and fell forward upon his face. He had blue eyes, brown curling hair, a dark mustache and a handsome face. I thought the instant I fired that I should have loved that man if I had known him. I tell you war is terrible business."—Youth's Companion.

A Famous Quarry.

The entire mass of the Monte Sagro, 5,000 feet high, which dominates Carrara, is solid marble. One of the most famous quarries is in the valley of the Polraccio. From this were extracted in Roman times the 1,700 tons of marble that served for the construction of Trajan's column at Rome. Here Donatello got the block which he carved into his St. George, and Michael Angelo the one for his Moses. From here also came the huge block mentioned in the memoirs of Benvenuto Cellini, which served for the colossal Neptune of Ammanati in the middle of the fountain of the Piazza della Signoria at Florence.

A Water Volcano.

One of the greatest natural curiosities in Central America is the Volcan de Aqua or water volcano, which is situated in Guatemala, about twenty-five miles southwest of the capital. Its apex is 14,450 feet above the level of the sea, and cultivated fields and forest trees extend almost to its summit. It occasionally vents forth torrents of pure cold water. On one occasion an "eruption" of this kind inundated the northern valley and destroyed a whole village situated on the side of the peak.

The Way He Put It.

At a school examination at Newcastle-under-Lyme, England, a boy was told to write an essay on the pleasures of reading. He wrote: "People read for many reasons. Sometimes they read for humor, and then they read such books as 'Don Quixote.' At other times they read for amusement, and then they read the Bible."

Took It Mildly.

"Yes, old Bizziboy gave a reception out to his place on the hills and then turned the hose on the first detachment to arrive."

"He did! What did they say to that?"

"They called it unconventional hospitality. You know, he's too rich to quarrel with."

His Malady.

Tess—She's a professional nurse, I believe. Jess—Not at all. What gave you that idea? Tess—She remarked that she sat up last night with a sick man. Jess—Lovesick; that was all. It was that fiance of hers.

The withdrawal of James Duffield, of London, Ont., from the running for Ontario representative on the railway construction commission makes another nomination necessary. The other commissioners are as already announced, viz.: Mr. Wade, Annapolis, chairman; Mr. Alfred Brunet, Montreal; Mr. C. A. Young, Winnipeg. Mr. H. Lumsden, C. MAY BE MURDER.

Domestic troubles in the home of Malcolm Lennie, a laborer living at 693½ Queen street, Toronto, has probably led to murder. In a quarrel the other morning Lennie hit his wife on the head with a rolling pin, and it is supposed the woman's skull is fractured. Mrs. Lennie is now unconscious at St. Michel's hospital, and may die.

NO SODA WATER ON SUNDAY.

CONDEMNS METRIC SYSTEM.

At a meeting of the Commercial Intdligence Committee of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, at Toronto the other day, it was reported that, as the use of the Metric system of weights and measures had not become sufficiently extensive in Great Britain and the United States, the adoption of it in this county would not be desirable.

11,000 MEN WANTED IN MONTREAL.

Some time ago the Montreal branch of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association announced that positions could be found in Canada for 11,000 skilled laborers. The Labor Council objected to the importation of labor saying that they could supply all the labor wanted. So far they have failed to make good on this proposition, and the requests have been made again. It is claimed that there is really a dearth of labor and that they estimate that positions can be found for 11,000 men.

LOSES HIS MONEY.

Dominique Collangelo, of 117 Workman street, Montreal, reported to Chief Carpenter that two Italianders boarding in his house had broken open his trunk during his absence and stolen $1,180. Collangelo says the man he worked with told him the savings banks would not take his money as he could not read nor write. Consequently, he carried it during the day, and locked it in a trunk at night. The detectives have not located the absent boarders.

EVA BOOTH FOR THE STATES.

Indirect confirmation of the report that Miss Evaline Booth is to become commander of the forces of the Salvation Army in the United States, has been afforded by the announcement handed out from territorial headquarters in Toronto the other day, stating that Miss Booth will bid farewell to her command in November.

MARKET REPORT.

Compiled by Thompson, Sons & Co.

Winnipeg, Thursday, Aug. 25, 1904.

WHEAT—At the time of writing our last week's review of the wheat trade we believed the reports about rust damage to the spring wheat of the American and Canadian Northwest were being systematically exaggerated and supplied to the markets by interested speculators. We regret to have to state this week that there is no plenty of evidence to show that we were mistaken in our belief, and that there is now no doubt as to there being widespread damage by rust. The recognition of this damage has come out rather suddenly, owing to the fact that rust has never been known to cause any damage to the Manitoba crop before. A little red rust has been seen in fields in other years, but no damage was noticed or attributed to it. If it was noticed in Manitoba wheat fields this year, nothing was thought of it, and it was not until crop experts, who followed the epidemic up from South Dakota, began to point out that the crop over a large part of Southern Manitoba was more or less affected, some of it badly, and that the disease was spreading. At first people were incredulous and scoffed at the reports of damage, believing they were the work of men hired to get them up. Gradually, however, the workings of the disease became so evident to all who examined the fields that the truth of the reports had to be acknowledged, and since then the only question has been as to the extent and intensity of the damage. To estimate the damage as affecting the probable yield is a difficult matter. One prominent crop expert who has personally driven over a large part of Manitoba, states that in his judgment our crop will not go beyond 42,000,000 bushels. A large party of grain men and bankers have just returned from a five days' trip, covering practically the whole wheat country, and after deliberate consideration have published an estimate putting the probable yield at 44,000,000 bushels. This is compared to a previous expectation of at least 70,000,000 bushels. Last year the crop was put at 53,000,000 bushels after thrashing returns were received. Should the above estimates turn out any way near correct the shortage is sure to have an important effect on prices during the season. The reports about rust damage caused the American speculative markets to advance wildly at the end of last week, but a sharp reaction and slump in prices took place on the first three days of this week, and the result at the close of markets to-day is that prices are from 1c. to 3c. under a week ago, although in the interval they have been 6c. to 10c. higher. While speculative trade has been on a large scale the trade in actual wheat has been at about a standstill. Prices are too high, and market fluctuations too wide to allow the flow of actual grain trade business to proceed in a normal way, and the consequence is such trade is restricted, neither exporters or millers finding business easy to do, and this will continue until speculative markets steady down to a calmer mood, and values find a more normal level. In the meantime, with the exception of the development of the spring wheat situation, there is little change otherwise in the world's situation. Latest reports of European crops confirm the shortage there as compared with last year, but with favorable harvest weather quality is good and conditions such as to make the new wheat immediately available for milling. India continues to export heavily of her last crop, and present prospects there for future crop are favorable. The growing crops in Argentina and Australia also continue to progress favorably. The visible supply decreased 235,000 bushels last week as against an increase of 45,000 bushels the previous week and an increase of 170,000 bushels last year. The world's shipments were 8,376,000 bushels, as against 8,504,000 bushels the previous week, and 8,540,000 bushels a year ago. The world's visible supply, according to Bradstreet's, decreased 130,000 bushels, against an increase of 1,393,000 bushels the week previous and an increase of 593,000 bushels last year.

Trade in the local market during the past week has been nearly all speculative in the October delivery, and decline very much in unison with the changes in Minneapolis wheat. There is scarcely anything doing in cash wheat or for nearly delivery, because stocks are about exhausted, and markets are too erratic and uncertain to induce trade. To-day prices have closed as follows: 1 Nor., $1.01½c.; 2 Nor., 98½c.; 3 95½c.; No. 4 wheat, 88c., spot or delivery. October closed at $1.01½; December, 98c.; May, $1.02. All prices are for in store Fort William and Port Arthur.

ARRIVED IN SOUTH AFRICA ALL RIGHT.

A Cape Town cable says the steamer Monarch has arrived from Montreal with a number of prize cattle and horses on board. All arrived without any loss.

HALIFAX WANTS FAIR.

At a meeting of the Halifax (N. S.) City Council the other evening a resolution was unanimously adopted asking that the Dominion Fair of 1905 be held in that city. It was pointed out that the city and province had in Halifax the necessary buildings and grounds, and the city was most conveniently situated.

SEATS FOR COLONIALS IN BRITISH HOUSE OF COMMONS.

A cable from London says: Mr. Joseph Chamberlain, replying to C. T. Grant, of the Royal Exchange, Glasgow, who suggested that some of the younger spirits of the colonies be asked to come over and find seats in the British House of Commons, in order to hear their views from their own lips, said he would be glad to welcome colonials in the House of Commons. There was nothing to prevent any British subject from being elected to that assembly.

PROTECT THE CONSUMER FROM WHEAT SPECULATORS.

A cable from London says: The Financial News says our hopes of protecting the consumer from the assaults of American wheat speculators must depend upon the freedom with which India releases her stores, on the salvation of the Canadian crop, and the favor nature may show important crops whose futures are still in the incipient stages, viz., Australia, Argentina.

CANADA'S BEST CUSTOMER.

The London Financier, commenting on Canadian financial returns for the fiscal year, says there can be no question that England is Canada's best customer, for 85.47 per cent. of the Dominion's total exports come to Britain. On the other hand, in spite of the preferential tariff, the Dominion imports from Britain show an unfavorable trend compared to those from the United Statesf

FROM SEAT OF WAR.

BREATHING SPACE NOT TO BE ALLOWED RUSSIANS

"Breaking Their Teeth."—Two Russian Ships Sunk, and Two More Gone Out of Commission.—Japs Lose 10,000 More Men.

According to the London Daily Chronicle's correspondent with Gen. Kuroki's army, the Japanese are not likely to retire into interior winter quarters. Rather than thus give the Russians a breathing space they will prosecute a vigorous winter campaign. The correspondent says the Japanese are accumulating immense stores of ammunition and guns at Hai Cheng. A despatch from Liao Yang to the Daily Telegraph reports that severe fighting has taken place at Toranzhesp, 22 miles southeast of Liao Yang, and in that district apparently a general attack is in progress.

"BREAKING THEIR TEETH."

The following has been sent from St. Petersburg: The latest information from the front, as summed up in despatches from Chefoo, showed that the Japanese in the assaults on Port Arthur August 21 and 22 were again repulsed with heavy losses. Despite the assertion made in Tokio that all the attacks so far on the fortress have been merely preliminary to the grand infantry assault, the feeling here that the ferocity of the repeated attacks and defeats must be gradually sapping the energy of the besiegers, and that the Japanese find after all that "They have broken their teeth on the stones of Port Arthur." Nothing can be ascertained here regarding the reports from Tokio of the sinking of two Russian torpedo boat destroyers at Port Arthur. The fact that the Port Arthur squadron is already so crippled and scattered has greatly reduced its importance as a tactical factor in the eyes of the authorities here.

A cable from Tokio on the 26th says: Five steamers and three torpedo boat destroyers weighed from Port Arthur yesterday, and began clearing away floating mines. At 8.20 p. m. a two-funnelled torpedo boat destroyer struck a mine two miles off Liao Ti promontory and sank immediately. Five minutes later a second destroyer, with four funnels, ran against another floating mine, which exploded. The second vessel was at once surrounded by other Russian ships and towed into Port Arthur, the entire flotilla accompanying her. The Japanese cruiser Hashdite witnessed the explosions from a short distance. The action of the Russians in attempting to clear the harbor of mines indicates that the fleet will again sail from Port Arthur.

A late cable from Shanghai says: The Russian cruiser Askold and the torpedo boat destroyer Grozovoi have gone out of commission, but the work of repairing them is being continued. The flags of the vessels were not raised to-day.

RUSSIA'S HOPELESS PLIGHT.

A cable from London says: It is not definitely known whether the Baltic fleet, or any part thereof, has sailed for the far east, but Spencer Wilkinson and other experts doubt whether it will cut much figure in the war in any event. According to the Russian programme, the fleet was to consist of light battleships, five of which were to be of powerful modern type, five cruisers, two transports and thirty torpedo boats. This array of warships is considered ill assorted, and the modern vessels would simply be hampered by the others. Moreover, all coaling must be done at sea, as Russia has decided that coal is contraband of war. When Admiral Rozhdestvensky gets in the far east, if he ever does, he will find an active and vigilant enemy, animated by victory, and having excellent bases. By that time Port Arthur will also have fallen, and Vladivostock will be closely invested. What the admiral will do under these circumstances is problematic.

BOYS ARE FIGHTING.

A junk which left Port Arthur August 22, reported at Chefoo that the Russian wounded at that date numbered 5,000, and that the Japanese occupied the heights near Chao Chanko. It is further reported that boys are fighting in the Russian ranks now.

RUSSIANS HOLD ONLY THREE MAIN FORTS.

Golden Hill, White Marble Mountain and Liao Ti Mountain, according to Chinese advices dated August 22, are now the only main forts securely held by the Russians at Port Arthur. Others occupied by them are subjected to an artillery fire which renders their tenure uncertain. Fort No. 5 is again declared to be in the hands of the Japanese. A cable of the 26th stated that Port Arthur was in flames.

LOST 10,000 MEN.

Russian advices received at Chefoo say that the Japanese assaults on Port August 21 and 22 were repulsed with tremendous losses. It is added that the attempt of the Japanese to capture Fort No. 1 cost them 10,000 men, and that their attack on Fort Etseshan resulted in their losing 3,000 men killed or wounded. Port Dalny is said to be filled with wounded men. The Japanese are hiring laborers in Chefoo for service on the Liao Tung peninsula. It is reported that the Japanese are obtaining provisions through the port of Wei Hai Wei.

STRENGTH OF JAPANESE ARMIES.

At the Russian headquarters at Liao Yang General Kuroki's army is estimated at 100,000 men, General Nodzu's force at 70,000, and General Oku's at 40,000. This is exclusive of two divisions of about 30,000 men moving upon the right bank of the Liao river.

According to the Chinese, the Japanese have converted the branch railroad from New Chwang to Taschichao into a narrow guage, and are conveying thither twenty siege guns.

Field Marshal Oyama, the Japanese commander-in-chief, is understood to be with the besiegers of Port Arthur.

It is believed in Liao Yang that the Japanese armies in Manchuria are awaiting the result of the storming of Port Arthur before renewing their movements against the forces of General Kuropatkin.

OFFICIALLY NOTIFIED.

Advices from Paris say that an official despatch from Shanghai says the Russian consul has notified the Taotai that the Askold and Grozovoi have been disarmed. The authorities in Paris are awaiting a similar notice from Saigon of the disarmament of the Diana. Another cable says that the French officials are much relieved at the avoidance of dangerous possibilities at Shanghai.

RUSSIANS SPIRITS RAISED.

The latest cable from Chefoo says: The spirits of the garrison have been greatly raised through the practical failure of the recent assault, and it is now believed that active operations by the Japanese are for the present at an end and the usual siege tactics are being resumed. There is still a fair supply of food in Port Arthur, and by putting the troops on strict siege rations it is believed General Stoessel can hold out at least until the beginning of winter. The Russians realize the importance of delaying the capitulation of the fortress as long as possible, inasmuch as the Japanese plan of campaign against Kuropatkin, which is now suspended as the result of the Port Arthur assault, will be seriously affected thereby. Preparations for winter quarters are already being made by the Japanese.

JAPANESE LOSS TERRIFIC.

The Japanese losses before Port Arthur were enormous during the four days assault, and entire battalions have been sacrificed in an attempt to hold new positions. The men have fought with almost fanatical bravery. The total Japanese losses before Port Arthur have exceeded 35,000 men. The Guards Division is said to have suffered the heaviest. Russian casualties within Port Arthur have been at least 10,000.

TIN DISCOVERED IN MANITOBA.

D. H. Urquhart and A. McCall of Rat Portage were in Winnipeg one day last week to register claims at the Dominion Land Office, and reported the discovery of a large deposit of ore bearing tin in Eastern Manitoba, about three and a half miles from the Ontario boundary line and south of Cross Lake. There is no known body of tin ore in Canada and practically none in the United States. The discovery of tin in Canada would be an event the importance of which it would be impossible to estimate. To a reporter Mr. Urquhart said that Neil Martin was prospecting south of Cross Lake last winter and came upon a body of ore, which he tested, in his search for gold. The result of his roasting was several buttons, which he did not recognize. He sent these to his partner, F. Doyle, who was then in California. Mr. Doyle had these buttons analyzed and they were found to consist of 98¼ per cent. tin. Mr. Doyle immediately came back. The matter was kept quiet, except among four or five prospectors who had stood together and stood by that country since 1897. These men were Martin, Doyle, Urquhart and McCall. The deposit was thoroughly examined and the body of ore was found to extend for over a mile and to be from 50 to 100 feet wide. Claims were immediately filed and patents applied for. Dominion Surveyor McPhillips surveyed the deposit, which was found to run through four locations.

Mr. Urquhart says the ore contains both copper and gold, besides the tin, the latter running between 2 and 3 per cent., and gold between $5 and $6 per ton. If the tin is as rich as 3 per cent. the deposit will be very profitable. Further development work will be carried on and experts will be taken in to make the tests. Mr. Urquhart says that a Cornishman, who has seen samples, says the appearance is exactly like the Cornwall tin ore. Mr. Urquhart had with him also several samples of gold.

The first novel to be translated from Japanese literature is a book entitled "Nami-Ko." It was first published in 1900, and has already reached a sale of nearly 100,00 copies. Its pictures of daily Japanese life in times of peace and in time of war are as curious as they are interesting. The novel portrays Tokio society at the time of the war with China, and tells us little things about the social life, manners and dress of the Japanese, which is very interesting. The book is published by Herbert B. Turner & Co., of Boston, and sells for $1.50.

Advices from Montreal say that it is expected that the Allan Line will establish a Pacific ocean service upon the completion of the Grand Trunk Pacific railway.

The Dominion Government have formally complained to the Imperial authorities concerning the indignity offered to the Canadian flag by a British consul in South Africa.

RAISE THE STANDARD.

One is apt to hear that the West is the graveyard of the better impulses and loftier standards that dominate human conduct in the East, and that it is hopeless to look for the same high purpose and unselfish aims across the prairie as in the older and more settled provinces of the Dominion. This is a fallacy against which we raise our voice in bitter protest. If our aims are any lower and our attainments any poorer than those of the dwellers of Ontario, Quebec or the Maritime Provinces it is because we curselves are indifferent to the claims of the community amid which we live in this new world, and recreant to the faith of our fathers. The control of this fair pioneer land cannot be allowed to fall into the hands of men with lower ideals than those to which we were trained. There are some such in the West, but their number is out of all proportion to their pretensions, and even among them there are some "who" have not defiled their garments" but who are always to be found on the side of progress, enlightenment and decency. Their help should be thankfully accepted.

As a city we are on the threshold of our civic career. We have a council elected according to the best brinciples of the Mother country as well as of Eastern Canada. A council of old, tried respected residents who were the first comers to the Coal Capital before it was more than a clearing in the primeval forest. These men represent the best traditions of English and Canadian government and home life. Not one of them will lower the standard of right, purity and justice one jot, but all will unite to raise it to the same level as in the most advanced civilized and Christian communities. Men of their character will not parley with vice. They will compel it to hide its shameful face. They will not increase, but will whereever possible reduce the number of licences. They will not make it easier but more difficult to enter the liquor business, by imposing higher license fees. They will not tolerate the roulette wheel or any other gambling device They will not wink at evasions of the liquor or gambling laws in any quarter, and they will in deference to the general wish of a respectable and God-fearing community strictly enforce Sunday closing. In adhering to this time-honored policy they will have to encounter the hostility of all the tin-horn gamblers, pimps and prostitutes in Fernie which in itself should be considered an honor and sufficient justification for a determined line of action. But like all the forces of evil they will collapse the moment they find that British law is in earnest, to the great advantage of the whole community. Every dollar less spent in whiskey and vice is a dollar gained for the store and the home.

Mayor and Alderman of Fernie the eyes of the West are on you. This is your time of testing. You have the power to make the city over which destiny has called you to preside a clean, wholesome, respectable, prosperous city, or that stinking abomination of the Western States "a wide-open town" which shall it be?

THE Nelson News commenting editorially upon the Fernie zinc smelter says—

The Zinc producers are to be congratulated on the erection of this plant as it will mean that they will receive more per ton for their zinc ores than they do at present. The freight rate for instance is $13 per ton on zinc ores and concentrates from the Slocan to Antwerp, Belguim, and it should not be more than $3 per ton from Sandon to Fernie. The saving of $10 a ton in the freight between mine and reduction works is a large one and the Fernie smelter should be able to at least divide this with the mine owner and allow him $5 more on his ore than he receives at present on that portion of his concentrates which he ships to Belguim. The works in Belguim save everything valuable in the ore and the presumption is that the smelter at Fernie which is to be constructed by Belgian capital will be constructed on the same plan as the zinc smelters of that country, should be able to make as close a saving of all of the by-products of the ore or concentrates as is done in Belgium.

The construction of the zinc plant at Fernie will mark another forward step in the metallurgical enterprise of the province, and will lead to other enterprises. The making of pig lead in this province was followed by the manufacture of lead pipe. The turning out of zinc will lead to the manufacturing of the products of zinc, such as galvanized iron etc. Fernie is an ideal spot for the location of a zinc smelter as cheap fuel is one of the great necessities for the carrying on of such an enterprise. Cheap fuel, too, will play an important part in the establishing on a firm footing of the manufactures devoted to the production of the products of zinc.

SOME of our city aldermen who spoke in favor of high license previous to the election have evidently changed their minds—probably they meant high license for pedlars.

THE action of the city council last night in fixing the hotel licenses at $300 per year is open to the gravest criticism. The by-law provides protection to the hotels against competition from saloons and retail liquor stores and there does not seem to be any good reason why the hotels should not pay a larger fee towards the maintenance of the city in consideration of the privileges extended to them. Under the Provincial Act the hotels were paying $200 and that sum has been regarded by all right-thinking citizens as being entirely too small. The increase of that sum by 50 per cent. is not sufficient to satisfy the electors who supported the present council. Nor should the hotel men themselves be satisfied, for it does not require any argument to prove that a higher license system acts as a safety-valve on the trade, tending to restrict the number of licenses. The maximum fee of $500 is not too much to ask the hotels to contribute towards the city funds and we venture the assertion that the great majority of the rate-payers are with us in making this statement. The by-law comes up for reconsideration to-morrow when we sincerely hope that this objectionable clause will be amended.

Estelle was dismayed at the consequences of her demand upon Oakfell, which she was made to realize by the dismal reports of her grandfather and the malediction of herself by the Quillebert faction. To her own impetuousness and presumption she charged this strife among neighbors and its unhappy possibilities. She wept and prayed for guidance, and finally, sending for Oakfell, said to him:

"It was at my request, made upon a girlish impulse, that you entered into this contest, which has aroused such bitterness and so altered your position in our parish. Then you had not an enemy. Now I dare not think of the number who wish you harm. I did not then foresee this dreadful result, but today I am quite a woman and know I had no right to involve you so grievously for the gratification of a mere whim of mine. I entreat you to proceed no further in the lawsuit. To press it now would result only in your injury, but in no one's good."

The girl's speech was earnest and her prayerful face so beautiful that Oakfell gazed upon it in a wordless rapture until his very silence suddenly called him to reply:

"You say further prosecution of the suit would result in no one's good," he said, smiling. "What, then, becomes of Leon's freedom, which is its sole object?"

"Oh, but Leon is gone. M. Quillebert will never see him again." She spoke as one to whom had been unexpectedly given the opportunity of successfully closing debate by a word.

"Ah, mademoiselle, do you not know that under laws which now exist and are enforced by the courts of the United States Quillebert can take Leon wherever found, drag him back to this place, hitch him to a plow, whip him before each meal and compel him to sleep standing, and 'that man's last state shall be worse than the first?' "

"Impossible! Impossible! This is a Christian land," shudderingly exclaimed Estelle.

"It is possible, I assure you, and probable, for, as you well know, Quillebert is no Christian man, and, while I grant you this is a Christian land, yet Christianity forms no part of its law. This has been distinctly declared by its most august court," Oakfell answered.

"What then, are courts Mr. Oakfell?" she demanded, astonished.

"They are human institutions for the interpretation anh enforcement by man against man of man made laws, and yet humanity is the least of their attributes."

"And before such you will persist with this case, so unpopular and so hurtful to you?"

"I will, because there is no other tribunal to appeal to; I will because to abandon this wronged man to the law's cruelty in the face of the brutish mob's threats would be cowardly, traitorous to my standard of honor and unworthy of your respect, mademoiselle, which, I trust, I have and will endeavor to merit. I will fight this fight to the end for the sake of the right and, just because you did inspire it, for the sake of you."

The young man's face glowed with a warmth of feeling which his words but partially expressed. Estelle's soft eyes filled with tears of the supremest joy her life had yet known.

"Go, then, and may God befriend you and your noble cause," she said, giving her hand, upon which he was about to impress a burning kiss, but he checked the impulse and said:

"You but continue to befriend me and my cause, and all will be well."

Long after he had passed out of her sight she stood upon the veranda pressing her wildly throbbing heart and whispering to herself:

"Oh, why are there not more men like this man?"

CHAPTER X.

SWORDS CROSSED.

"WILL you go with me to the trial today, Evariste?" asked Oakfell at the conclusion of an early breakfast.

"No, brother, unless you need me or insist," Evariste replied. "I am feeling entirely out of sorts and should suffer from the excitement. If you are willing, I prefer to remain at home and take the place of Binker Wyley, who must drive with his mother to the court. But for your sake I wish you success."

"I find no fault with your choice and thank you for your good wish," said Oakfell, who was soon flying upon his fastest horse to Marksville.

Plantation affairs concerned Evariste but little that day. Riding through the fields to place himself in evidence before the squads of laborers, he plunged into the very heart of the dark Choctaw swamp and gave himself up to thoughts blacker than its shades. He flung himself from the saddle and walked furiously to and fro through the tangled growth as the captive hyena restlessly tramps his cage's length. He sat upon fallen trees with head buried in hands over which his long black hair fell as a pall upon expired hopes. He leaned on the patient, wondering horse, muttering curses on the conditions and persons that were the causes of his unhappiness. But in all this frenzy and wrath and mad acting he kept before him always and distinctly, as a registered oath, the purpose to possess Estelle, even at the cost of his brother's undoing should the power ever be given him.

It was the day of the great trial. The tactics of Pratjean had at length been exhausted, and now he was compelled to the combat.

Though Oakfell started alone, he was joined by supporters at every plantation, store and settlement he passed and entered the village escorted by a numerous cavalcade of the most substantial dwellers in the lowlands. Immediately about him were Baldouino, Jewett, Valsin Mouillot and Father Grhe, the last meeting the party at Mansura. But the Quillebert forces were also up and moving, and from every point of the prairie they could be seen in bunches, galloping on their little ponies, occasionally yelping: "Vive Quillebert! Hurrah for Quillebert!" And already their diminutive steeds had forestalled every hitching post in the streets and about the courthouse yard, and the riders had swarmed in the cabarets, calling for absinth anisette (at Quillebert's charge) and denouncing vociferously the cursed Americans (at Quillebert's instigation). In the history of the parish no such concourse had ever filled the courtyard or tested the capacity of the courtroom. The long bladed pocketknife was in many a hand, hungrily demolishing tree bark and fence board, and the ugly hump of the Colt pistol was seen under many a blouse, while not a few shotguns were observed to be carried from pony saddle to cabaret and there put out of sight. The general expectation was that blood would flow freely before the setting of the sun.

His long, black hair fell as a pall upon expired hopes.

Quillebert was at the office of Pratjean, scowling, morose, surly and deaf to his advocate's assurances of victory. He caused his witnesses to be brought to him singly and rehearsed in their expected testimony. While this was proceeding the commanding figure of Jewett was seen to emerge from the crowd in Oakfell's office and, his red whiskered face set in an expression of grave determination, walk slowly across the courtyard to Pratjean's office. The movement was quickly notified to the cabarets, which were instantly emptied of their patrons, who drew near to watch and hear what they could of his mission. Arrived in front of the little office building, Jewett stopped and called:

"Pratjean!"

"Hello!" answered the lawyer, appearing at the door.

"Step here a moment. I wish to have a word with you," said Jewett.

"Will you not come into my office, M. Jewett? You are perfectly welcome to come inside." Pratjean assumed his most suave manner and licked his unquiet lips.

"No; I have but a word to say and prefer to say it here in the open." And as Pratjean approached him Jewett continued: "I hear there is a good deal of devilish fool talk going on among these absinth soakers in the coffee houses. Now, I just want to give you a bit of information, and you may make use of it as you see fit. It is this: Oakfell's friends have come here prepared for anything that may happen. If a gun cracks, they are not going to pay any attention to those prairie rabbits over there, but will fill Quillebert's body so full of lead that he would furnish shot for all their papabote hunting next summer."

"M. Jewett," said Pratjean, erecting his head with an air of offended dignity, "do you mean"—

"I mean just what I have said, Pratjean, and you understand me perfectly well." And Jewett stalked back to Oakfell's office in his customary deliberate gait.

As Pratjean was turning to re-enter the office his name was again called, and, looking around, he saw Dede hurrying to him.

"Listen, Tibource," said the latter, panting. "Valsin Mouillot went to Totorin's cabaret this minute and told him if there was any trouble today he and six others would shoot at you and nobody else until you were used up."

"I will attend to him later," muttered Pratjean, the fright of this communication setting his lips to thumping violently. "Come in, Dede."

Shortly Dede and one other left the office and circulated among Quillebert's adherents, and thereafter a pent hush settled upon them.

Three women also had journeyed in from the lowlands—Mrs. Wyley, in charge of her son, to testify in behalf of Leon's freedom; Estelle Laticlais, pale and anxious, accompanying her grandfather, who had been summoned as a witness on the part of Quillebert, and Laure Luneau, with the mammoth buggy and giant mule, who, with steady look and bold speech, explained her presence to be only as a partisan of Quillebert. Mrs. Wyley and Estelle were the guests of good old Mme. Noreau, mother of the clerk of court, who lived not quite a street away from the courthouse, and, nearer still, Laure figuratively flung her banner to the breeze from the "Toilette de la Gascoigne," the little millinery shop of the petite and ancient Mlle. Bereaud, where she received marked respect from the many who deferred to her as granddaughter of the doctress and to whom she sought to impart some of her own courage and energy.

Among the throng were a half dozen "f. m. c.'s," as the free men of color were in those days designated, who lingered silent upon the skirts of the groups, fearing to be spoken to, yet held by intensest interest within hearing of all that was going forward.

The one person who appeared unmoved by—indeed unconscious of—the passion which surged about him was Honore Victor Tailleur, judge of the district court now and for 22 years past. Only twice had his renomination been contested and then with results most discouraging to the competitors. He was of Gascon descent and poor through disastrous speculations of his father and elder brother. His age was 57. Thirty-five years he had been a widower, his wife, the beautiful and pious Ernestine Lafon of Pointe Coupe, having died of yellow fever in their honeymoon. In commemoration of her he had ever since paid for a pew in the church at Marksville, but had never sat in it. He gave its use to poor women who could not rent pews. And her grave in the cemetery behind the church he visited daily, standing above it a brief moment with his head bowed in reverent meditation. His life was simple and studious. He read and reread Rousseau and Paine, adored the "Corpus Juris Civilis" and "Code Napoleon" and recognized only Martin, Kent and Marshall as doctors of American law. Gentle, just and brave, he had long held the chief place in the hearts of his people. His grave is somewhere on the battlefield of Perryville, in Kentucky, in an apple orchard, it is said, but no one has ever found it.

As the judge's tall form and dark face, with kindly eyes and waving hair of iron gray, were seen moving toward the courthouse the throng gathered about him, returning his friendly greeting, and followed him, or as many as could gain entrance, into the courtroom, the raised benches of which and the aisle between being immediately occupied. It was noticed that the highland men appropriated those on the left facing the judge, the lowland men those on the right. Fifty or more, unable to get within, stood on the veranda on which the door of the apartment opened. Hundreds sat and squatted in the yard beneath the unclosed windows. The "f. m. c.'s" perched upon a portion of the fence inclosing the yard, their ponies hitched near by.

The lawyers, except those engaged in the celebrated case, were already in their places within the bar. Exchanging a few pleasant words with these and briefly conferring in an undertone with the sheriff, the judge ascended the bench and ordered that the court be declared in session.

Presently Pratjean waddled briskly in, accompanied by Quillebert. Dede followed, bearing a double armful of lawbooks and looking with his scared, metallic face and big, bleared eyes like a Caliban carrying fagots to the fire. Quillebert surveyed the lowlanders with a sullen glance of defiance. Pratjean nodded jerkily to the bench and bar and persons in the audience, his pursed lips and little eyes performing a tarantula dance the while. Relieving Dede of his unwelcome burden of books and arranging them on the desk before him, he seated himself and became at once absorbed in making notes of seemingly grave import.

The appearance of Oakfell was so long delayed that on the highland side it began to be whispered that he had given up the case. Quillebert caught the intimation and communicated it to his advocate. The latter bustled to his feet and, addressing the judge, said:

"May it please your honor, I move that the plaintiff be called three times from the door of the courtroom and that if at the end of the third call he do not respond in person or by attorney this suit be dismissed." And he turned to the audience a face announcing that he had disabled his opponent at the first pass. The buzz among the highlanders indicated that such was their belief.

You fret because you have to work

A Source of Comfort.

"Do you believe in patent medicines?" said the man who is always complaining.

"Certainly," answered the portly man. "I owe my present comfortable condition to a patent medicine."

"Indeed!"

"Yes, one which I invented and put on the market myself."

THE BASIS OF FREEDOM

TRUTH ONLY QUALITY WHICH MAKES MEN LAW UNTO THEMSELVES.

THE LIMITATIONS OF LIBERTY

These Are Physical, Mental, Social and Physical, and In Every Case the Individual Must Work With Nature to Procure the Greatest Liberty and Happiness—The Liberty of God's Children Outlined.

Entered according to Act of Parliament of Canada, in the year 1901, by William Baily, of Toronto, at the Dep't of Agriculture, Ottawa.

Los Angeles, Cal., Aug. 21.—In this sermon the freedom of this world, with all its restrictions and limitations, and the larger freedom of the spiritual world are picturesquely contrasted. The text is John viii., 32, "The truth shall make you free."

The word freedom has a charming sound. Like unto a xylophone, each one of its letters seems to be a golden bar. Like unto a silver-throated trumpet, its voice sounds just as enchanting in the rich man's palace as in the peasant's hut. Like unto the pheasant's call for his mate, it seems to recognize no government save the sceptre of love. Like unto the aeolian harp, which emits its most thrilling notes when the wintry storms throb through its strings, this word freedom never has a more plaintive melody than when it is uttered by beings who pine for it while they cringe under the lash of the taskmaster and spend their lives in the bondage of tyrants at whose word they may have to die.

There have been orators whose tones were so penetrating and impressive that the words they uttered took a new and deeper meaning. It was said of George Whitefield, the famous evangelist, that his voice was of such compass and pathos that he could melt an audience into tears by the intonation he could throw into the word Mesopotamia. But it is not by melodious tones that the word freedom reaches the heart most powerfully, but by the heroic deeds of men who have suffered and died to win the blessing for their people.

O freedom, thou art more than a mere word! Thou art a strong armed angel of light, breaking the shackles of the slave, unmuzzling the lips of the patriot, lifting the shadow from the home. Under this benignant rule every man's abode is his castle, surrounded, like the ancient fortresses of the old world, with the moat whose waters were impassable to the minions of a king. Thou art the messenger of God, who would place the coronation robes around every human shoulder. Thou wouldst put the crown of gold upon every manly or womanly brow as thou dost say: "Man, lift high thy forehead, for thou art a king! Woman, God has made thy head the resting place for a diadem which is the equal of the crown that I have placed upon thy husband's brow." Yes, yes; no word in all the English language has a more potent sound than that of freedom, for, as God gave to King Solomon everything a prince could want because the young King had asked of him "wisdom," so every good thing in life is accessible to the earnest, aspiring soul when freedom removes the barriers to its flight.

But as I began to study my text I asked myself this important question, "What is freedom?" Is it unbridled license? Does it practically say, "Man, you are free; therefore you can do as you will, no matter what your desire may be?" Does it mean an emancipation proclamation which liberates from obedience to all law? When, on Jan. 1, 1863, Abraham Lincoln in the White House signed his name to the famous State paper which declared that all black men and black women under the stars and stripes "are and henceforth shall be free," it did not mean that the negro was set free to follow his own unbridled inclinations, but that he passed from under the control of his owner to be under the control of the same law that his owner himself has to obey.

Freedom has its limitations. We find those limitations in the physical, the mental and the social as well as in the spiritual world. Biologists find them in the dumb brutes and in the vegetable and mineral kingdoms as well as in human society. Thus my subject to-day, "The Limitations of Liberty," offers a wide scope for natural and spiritual investigation, and I shall endeavor to show that the only true freedom that the spiritual man can enjoy is in the surrender of himself to the service of Christ. In becoming a servant of Christ, in taking his will as the law of our lives, we are set free from the dominion of sin and enjoy the glorious liberty of the children of God.

The physical man is surrounded by limitations which, like impassable bars, restrict him to a certain kind of life. If he tries to break out of the enclosure he bruises and batters his body against those bars. I am not now alluding to the penalties suffered by the glutton and the drunkard, which are only too obvious. There are penalties against over-indulgence in legitimate courses. A man may so devote himself to his business or profession as to neglect the proper care of his body. He has to pay the penalty for overwork in premature exhaustion and decrepitude.

I am not here going into the details of the errors and the reasons why a man should not abuse his physical organism. But I am here to state that as God limits the natural realms in which the fish can live, and the plants can live, and the creeping things, like the worms and the snakes, can live, so God gives to man a physical realm, and in that realm he must live. If he persists in going out of that realm he must die.

I step into the airship of Santos-Dumont, that wonderful wizard of the air. The Brazilian aeronaut says: "Where would you like to go? Would you like a sail over the waters of the Mediterranean? Would you like to view Paris from a height higher than the Eiffel tower? Would you take a sightseeing trip above the buildings of the St. Louis World's Fair?" But I am ambitious, and, forgetting the limitations of my body, I say: "Nay, not any of these journeys would I go. But, as a sailor might sight the gleaming eye of a lighthouse from afar and head toward an open harbor, I would head toward the lighthouse of some star. I would explore an unknown world." With that request a smile twitches the corners of my companion's lips. The machinery of his airship begins to throb. We mount higher and higher and higher until it seems the blood must burst from my agonizing brain. "What is the matter?" I cry. "Turn the ship, turn it, or I shall die!" With that Santos-Dumont turns the airship's rudder, and as we begin to descend he says: "I took you on this journey to prove to you that it is an impossibility for man to live far above the earth. When the air becomes rarefied there is not enough substance there for man to breathe. God has decreed that physical man never can fly like a bird away to the stars. He is free to live in this air only as he breathes that air when his feet are planted upon the solid earth."

Down into the shaft of a coal mine I descend. Farther and farther I go until the darkness seems to be hurled at me. I cling in dumb fear to the miner by my side. We go down and down until the heat becomes like the blistering sands of the Sahara Desert. Fresh air from above is now pumped to my panting lungs. But the heat grows more and more intense until it seems I cannot live. Suddenly we come to the end of a long coal shaft. "Why not farther?" I ask my guide. "Has the coal vein stopped here?" "Nay," is the answer, "the coal is just as rich farther on, but it is an impossibility now to work it. The farther we burrow into the earth the hotter it becomes. God has decreed that physical man must live on the earth's surface. He may pass around the surface of the earth, but cannot go through it. He can never tunnel his way from New York to Pekin." If man leaves his natural element he dies as surely as did the fish we caught some weeks ago when they were drawn out of their natural element. Physical man has his limitations of life. If we would physically live we must obey certain physical laws. We cannot eat pebbles like an ostrich. We cannot hibernate like a snake. We cannot drink in water like a bluefish. We cannot eat grass like an ox. We cannot breathe the foul and fetid air of a miasmic swamp as the firefly, with its little lantern, makes its home among the bogs and calls the green slime its playground. Physical limitations hem in the liberties of physical man. We can live our physical life only as we obey God's physical laws.

We also have social limitations. By that I mean in the liberties of social economies. Every man's liberty ends where his neighbor's liberties begin. As a citizen of the United States I have no right in the sight of the law which is not possessed in an equal degree by every other private citizen of the United States. Neither has any other citizen of the United States a social right which I as an individual citizen do not possess. In other words, my liberties are mine only as long as I do not transgress the rights of my neighbors.

Let me illustrate my thought by the civilized laws of our country. America is called the "land of the free." But freedom does not mean license. For the benefit of our social life we have established restrictions on liberty, and those restrictions must be obeyed. I see a ship sailing hither from the Orient. It is magnificently furnished with lavish splendor. It is owned by an Oriental gentleman of high caste who is coming to live among us. He has heard that America is the land of the free and supposes that here a man may live as he pleases. He has on board eight wives, and he sets up his harem in one of our great cities. One day an officer of the law comes to him and says: "This kind of household is contrary to our laws. You have seven wives too many." But the Oriental replies: "I have taken out naturalization papers, and I am a free citizen. I can live as I choose." But the officer answers: "No; you are under legal restrictions. If you continue to violate them we shall send you to prison as a bigamist."

The land of the free? Yes, if you obey our laws, but not otherwise. You are free to do as you will in your own home—that is, if you do not abuse your offspring. If you do, as an agent for the Society For the Prevention of Cruelty to Children I can step in and take your children away from you. The land of the free? Yes, but you dare not sell to my children obscene pictures, for if you do I can make you wear convict's stripes. The land of the free? Yes, it is the land of the free if you do not try to forcibly enter my home, or rob my store, or refuse to pay your taxes, or to go to war as an American soldier when you are drafted, or to serve in the jury box when you are empaneled. You are free, in a social sense, only when your liberties do not conflict with the equal liberties of some one else.

Under the old educational system every American college used to exact a hidebound course. The young man who was a candidate for the B. A. degree had to take just so much of mathematics, so much of philosophy, so much of this and that and the other thing. But now our college systems have become broadened. The "elective system" is in vogue. Great educational leaders have come to the logical and right conclusion that what is meat for one brain may be poison for another. Charles Sumner was one of the greatest men America ever produced but it was simply an impossibility for Charles Sumner to grasp mathematics. As a result of this deficiency Sumner, one of the greatest of all Massachusetts' scholars, was unable to graduate from Harvard College.

Sometimes there is born a child, as was Edmund Clarence Stedman, with a brain of myriad possibilities. As an American poet he treads closely upon the heels of our greatest poets. Yet Stedman, the poet, is also Stedman, the Wall street banker, as he was also Stedman, the famous war correspondent. But such minds as that of Edmund Clarence Stedman are the rare exceptions. For the most part God gives to man but one first class talent and not ten. The reason Theodore Parker became the great power he was in his day was because, as he said: "Everything I ever saw or did I ground up into the mental grist for my sermons. I was born a preacher and can do nothing else but preach." Many a soldier has been a failure as a statesman; many a statesman has proved his utter incapacity when he tried to command an army.

The limitations of brain power can be well illustrated by comparing the mental makeup of Henry Ward Beecher with that of his illustrious father, Lyman Beecher, one of the greatest ecclesiastical leaders of his day. The famous pastor of Plymouth pulpit was in every sense a prose poet. He spoke, he thought, he lived, in symbol and picturesque verbiage. The songs of the birds, the beautiful wardrobes of the flowers, the autumnal sunsets, the beehives, the snow banks, the murmuring brooks—all had to him a message. Lyman Beecher was made of angular Puritan granite. He was in every sense a logician and a polemic. Like John Calhoun, he was skilful in argument. Grant his simple premises, and you must grant his conclusions. He appealed mostly to the brain as gray matter and not to the artistic sentiments.

It was a great source of sorrow to Henry Ward Beecher that his father never loved nature as he loved it. Lyman Beecher loved to hunt. He loved the woods for game, but not for the flowers. He never loved flowers as flowers. Facts always had to be presented to him as bare, unbreakable rocks, and not as rocks clothed in garments of green and in Joseph's coats of many floral colors. One day, much to Henry Ward Beecher's surprise, he saw his father standing before a beautiful picture. It was a hunting scene, but the son prized it for the beautiful colors, such as are always found in the retreat of the woods. "Ah," said Henry Ward Beecher, "father is at last learned to love nature!" He stepped up to the side of the old man and said: "Father, how do you like the picture? What do you like about it most?" "Well, Henry," said the old man, "I was studying that picture to see whether the artist had aimed that gun right. Yes, I think that hunter will hit the rabbit. I think he will. I think he will." "Ah, father," said Henry Ward, "can you not see anything more in that picture than a cruel man shedding the blood of an innocent, playful rabbit?"

No, Henry Ward Beecher's mind and Lyman Beecher's mind were cast in different molds. They both had their limitations. What one could do in a mental way the other could not do.

If the United States Government compels us to obey certain social laws, enacted upon the statute books by the dictates of its own national legislators, is it unjust for God to declare that when we surrender our hearts to him we should come to him in his way and not in ours? If we have our mental limitations and only in a feeble and incomplete way can grasp the infinite thought of God, are we not foolish in setting up ourselves as judges and critics of his methods? Ought we not rather to accept his plans and humbly to submit ourselves to his rule? That is the way to true freedom. When we accept the truth that he has revealed to us and give ourselves to his guidance, we learn by experience that the truth makes us free.

True freedom always has its limitations. The Christian life, too, has its rightful limitations. Christ said, "I am the way, the truth and the life; no man cometh unto the Father but by me." There is only one way to God, one door, one true life. But after we have once entered through that open door then we are free. Aye, we may become transcendently and eternally free. Is not my text right when it says, "In Christ the truth shall make you free?" The freedom he gives is the freedom from sin, the freedom from punishment, but that freedom, like all others, can be obtained only by submitting to Christ's rule. In one way alone can we gain that freedom, and that is by the way of the cross. In his service are endless joy and pleasure for evermore.

My brother, my sister, are you ready to let the truth make you free? In antebellum days there was a beautiful scene enacted in one of the southern slave markets. A young black girl stood upon the auction block and was being sold to the highest bidder. Rough men were trying to buy her for evil purposes, but in that group of by-standers was a Christian gentleman, holding by the hand his own young daughter. The young girl's heart went out for the sufferings of her black sister, and she persuaded her father to purchase the slave. Higher and higher went the price, but at last the Christian gentleman bought the young slave. When the black girl was handed over to her new master he said: "Mary, I bought you for my daughter's sake. I now give you your papers of freedom. You can go where and when you please. You are free." "What, master, am I free? Can I go where I will? Then I shall go and stay with you." Oh, she was a slave before the auction. She was a slave after the auction. But now she had become a slave of love. Will you not, oh, man, oh, woman, hear Christ's proclamation of emancipation from sin? Will you not let "the truth make you free?"—that is, will you not, in Christ's name, cease to be a subject of sin, but in bondage for the love of Christ? He died to make you free. With his divine limitation will you not be eternally free, yet still in bondage to Jesus Christ?

WHEN BABY IS SICK.

Don't dose him with nauseous castor oil or other harsh griping purgatives. Above all things don't give him poisonous "soothing" stuff. These things only make him worse. Baby's Own Tablets are what your little one needs. They are a gentle laxative, and make baby sleep because they make him well. They cool his hot little mouth, ease his sour stomach, and help his obstinate little teeth through painlessly. They are what every mother needs for her baby—and the older children too. Mrs. Routhier, Greenwood, B. C., says: "I consider Baby's Own Tablets worth their weight in gold in every home where there are children. My only regret is that I did not learn their great worth sooner." These Tablets will help every child from the moment of birth onward, and are guaranteed to contain no harmful drug. Sold by all medicine dealers or sent by mail at 25 cents a box by writing The Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer One Hundred Dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials. Address F. J. Hose of Olden Time.

In the very long ago hose were not stockings as now worn, but made long and were often drawn up even to the waist, and, oddly enough, had pockets in their sides. We read, moreover, that in the time of the Tudors and Stuarts they were of great variety, both of material and color, and for such as could command the luxury were richly trimmed and costly; they were often called "nether stocks."

Doll Soldiers.

The "doll army" in the Parigarmy museum contains 10,000 figures of soldiers about two inches high in five great cases. The armor and uniform of every military branch are represented with the utmost exactitud. The picturesque work occupied the lifetime of an old Alsatian, who fought under the "Little Corporal."

The Real as Imitation.

Professor Ray Lankester, the British scientist, has brought to light a curious trick practiced by London dealers in osprey plumes. Some time ago the Princess of Wales placed herself at the head of a movement to discourage the use of real osprey plumes in order to save the birds from slaughter. The result was an immediate decline in the sale, since fashion could not fly in the face of the Princess of Wales. But recently facts have come to the notice of Professor Lankester showing that among certain fashionable milliners it has become a practice to sell genuine plumes as imitations.

John J. Burns Cured by Dodd's Kidney Pills.

He Had Chronic Inflammation of the Kidneys—Says His Brother Foresters Can Tell All About It.

Darnley, P. E. I., Aug. 29.—(Special).—John J. Burns, a prominent member of the I. O. F. here, whose cure of Chronic Inflammation of the Loins and Kidneys caused a sensation some time ago, reports that he is still in splendid health. "Yes," says Mr. Burns, "my cure is entirely satisfactory. I have had no trouble since I used Dodd's Kidney Pills. They drove away the disease from which I suffered for eight years.

"No, I'll never forget Dodd's Kidney Pills. The doctor could not help me. I got so bad I could scarcely walk, sit or sleep. I was about to give up entirely when an advertisement led me to try Dodd's Kidney Pills. Now I am in good health. Dodd's Kidney Pills saved my life."

If any one doubts Mr. Burns' story he simply refers them to his brother Foresters. They all know how he suffered, and that Dodd's Kidney Pills cured him.

SHIPS' ANCHORS.

The Change From Short, Straight Flukes to Curved Arms.

The ship's anchors in general use up to the beginning of the last century consisted of a long, round iron shank, having two comparatively short straight arms or flukes, inclined to the shank at an angle of about forty degrees and meeting it in a somewhat sharp point at the crown. In large anchors the bulky wooden stock was built up of several pieces, hooped together, the whole tapering outward to the ends, especially on the aft or cable side.

About the beginning of the last century a clerk in the Plymouth navy yard, Pering by name, suggested certain improvements, the most important of which was making the arms curved instead of straight. At first sight this simple change may seem of little value, but consideration will show this is not the case. The holding power of an anchor depends on two principal conditions—namely, the extent of useful holding surface and the amount of vertical penetration. The latter quality is necessary on account of the nature of ordinary sea bottoms, the surface layers of which are generally less tenacious and resisting than is the ground a short distance below.

In the year 1831 chain cables began to supersede the hempen ones, with the result that the long shanked anchors hitherto in vogue were no longer necessary, and anchors with shorter shanks and with heavier and stronger crowns gradually came into use. In consequence of these changes, a commission was appointed in the year 1838 to inquire into the holding power of anchors and a principal result of its labors was the adoption of the so called admiralty pattern anchor, which continued to be used in the British navy up to the year 1860.

The invention of the steam hammer in 1842 made the welding of heavy masses of iron a comparatively easy and reliable process, so that from this time onward the strength of anchors fully kept pace with that of the chain cables, which had come into general use. A number of patents for anchors were taken out prior to the great exhibition of 1851, and, public attention having been called to the models there shown in the following year, a committee was appointed by the admiralty to report on the qualifications of anchors of the various kinds.

Practical trials were then instituted, and, as a result, some of the tests to which the anchors were submitted were of doubtful value—such, for instance, as "facility for sweeping." Nowadays, however, at all events for deep ships in shallow harbors, it is considered an advantage for an anchor to offer as little obstruction as possible above the ground.

How to Keep Out of Trouble.

"The rivalry between the two arms of the national service, the army and navy," said an army man, "is most shown between the marines and the jackies on a man-of-war. The marines are soldier policemen, and the jackies have a keen contempt for them. I remember hearing of one old tar who was always getting into trouble. Finally he made peace with one of the marines.

"'Tell me how to keep out of trouble?' the old tar asked. 'If you'll show me the way I'll give you my plug of tobacco.'

"The marine tried the plug and found it to his liking. He tightened his belt, straightened his cap and then delivered himself of this advice:

"'Whenever you're feeling easy and happy and comfortable, quit it, for you be breaking a rule. It's the only way.'"

An Odd Fact in History.

It is an odd fact in modern history that the tombs of the kings of Sardinia and the cradle of their dynasty, Savoy, are now in the hands of France. Only Kings Victor Emmanuel II. and Humbert I. are buried in Italy. The rest, from the thirteenth century and numbering twenty-eight, lie in the abbey church of Haute-Combe, near Chambery, which the peace of Villafranca in 1860 transferred to France, with the rest of the province, in return for French aid against Austria. By a strange oversight the tombs of the kings were not "extraterritorialized."

Could Not Eat or Work—Powders and Quick Cures of no Avail—Lasting Cure Obtained From

DR. CHASE'S NERVE FOOD.

This case of Mr. Barber well illustrates the way in which Dr. Chase's Nerve Food cures headaches.

He tried the so-called "quick cures" first, but without obtaining benefit. It is a well known fact that such remedies when they do bring temporary relief do so with a tremendous waste of nerve force and consequent injury to the system.

Dr. Chase's Nerve Food cures by enriching the blood, vitalizing the nerves and building up the system. Headaches, as well as all other symptoms of an exhausted system, disappear before its influence. Its cures lasting because it removes the cause of the trouble.

Mr. O. Barber, Simcoe, Ont., writes: "Dr. Chase's Nerve Food is a splendid medicine. I was troubled for a long time with headaches, which would come on about once a week with such violence that I could not eat or do my work. I tried headache powders and quick cures, which did no good.

"About eight months ago I took six boxes of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, and I have not been troubled with headache since. It made a thorough and lasting cure."

Mrs. James Clancy, 714 Water street, Peterboro', Ont., states:—"I have used four boxes of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, and found them an excellent medicine. I was troubled more or less for ninteen years with severe headaches, which made me useless as far as accomplishing my work was concerned.

"The Nerve Food seemed to build me up generally, and so made a thorough cure of my old trouble. I would not think of being without Dr. Chase's Nerve Food in the house, and would strongly recommend anyone suffering as I did to give it a trial. It succeeded in my case after a great many remedies had failed."

Dr. Chases Nerve Food 50 cents a box, six boxes for $2.50, at all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Toronto. To protect you against imitations, the portrait and signature of Dr. A. W. Chase the famous receipt book author, are on every box.

CASTING LOTS.

A Curious Military Custom That Was Once In Vogue In Europe.

In the armies of the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries the custom of casting lots to decide what soldiers should be punished for the offenses of all was common. At Winchester, England, in 1645, complaint was made that after the surrender there had been unfair plundering. Six soldiers were tried and found guilty, and it was decided by lot which one of the six should be hanged. At Tangier in 1663, and again in 1665, two soldiers had to cast dice on a drumhead, and he who threw the least was executed. Thomas May's translation of Barclay's "Icon Animorum" gives a curious story of this sort. Speaking of English courage, he says that during the war in the Netherlands some soldiers of the Spanish party were taken prisoners by the Dutch, who decided to make reprisals for the previous cruelty of their enemies. Out of four and twenty men eight were to be hanged. "There were lots, therefore, thrown into a helmet," says May, "and the prisoners were commanded to draw their fortunes—whoever should draw a blank was to escape, but whoever should draw a black lot was to be hanged presently.

"They were all," says May, "possessed with a great apprehension of their present danger, especially one Spaniard. Their pitiful wishes and tears in some of the standers by did move pity, in others laughter. There was besides in that danger an Englishman, a common soldier, who, with a careless countenance, expressing no fear of death at all, came boldly to the helmet and drew his lot. Chance favored him; it was a safe lot. Being free himself from danger he came to the Spaniard, who was yet timorous and trembling to put his hand into the fatal helmet, and receiving from him 10 crowns he entreated the judges—oh, horrid audacity—that, dismissing the Spaniard, they would suffer him again to try his fortune."

May further relates that "the judges consented to the madman's request, who valued his life at so low a rate, and he again drew a safe lot." May seems rather to regret the second escape of the foolhardy Englishman, whom he denounces as "a wretch unworthy not only of that double, but even of a single preservation, who so basely had undervalued his life."

Too Suggestive.

"The health officer advised me to ask every man with whom we had domestic dealings if he was careful to boil the water he used in his business."

"Yes."

"Well, I asked the milkman first. And what do you think? He got mad and wanted to lick me."

At a number of experiment stations records were kept to determine the cost of producing milk. At four of the stations it cost 55 cents to produce 100 pounds. This made the cost of one pound of butter fat 13.3 cents. Milk was produced at the lowest cost during the summer, and at the highest during winter. This, of course, is to be expected.

George Patmore was in Morrissey Minesthis week removing his stock of hardware to Cranbrook.

A gentleman from Spokane well versed in railway affairs stated the other day that as soon as the Crow's Nest Southern Railway was completed to Fernie the Great Northern Railway would put on a daily passenger train between Spokane and Fernie that would make the run in 12 hours. Another twelve hour run separates Spokane and Seattle, thus Fernie will be only 24 hours from the coast by the Hill road. If this prediction be true, and there is nothing impossible or even improbable about it, much of the passenger traffic now enjoyed by the C. P. R. will be transferred to the Hill road. The Canadian railway must look for a more direct route to the coast if it would hold the Crow's Nest trade.

DYNAMITING FISH

As Mr. Walker had a prisioner with him city policman Burrows who was with him made the arrest. The Italian proved to be Karl Nuzzie and he had a panfull of dead fish.

Nuzzi was tried before Magistrate Forbes on Wednesday. He pleaded guilty but in defence claimed to have been ignorant of prohibiting the use of dynamite in catching fish. He had been in the country one year. In the old country people were not allowed to have dynamite ane therefore did not know what the law was there relative to its use by the fisherman. The Magistrate imposed a fine of $15.

HUMAN SKILL versus MACHINES.

Man's ingenuity invents machines to do work, man's skill cannot do.

No fingers, however deft, could ever sew a stitch locked inside a piece of leather.

No eye, however true, could gauge with absolute accuracy the length of the stitches on a hundred thousand pairs of shoes—or on one pair.

No human muscle could work eight, ten, fifteen or twenty-four hours a day, and draw the stitches evenly, tightly, all day long.

And no human being would have the patience to wax his thread before every stitch—or remember to do it if he had the patience.

And fifty men could not make as many imperfect shoes in the time one Goodyear Welt Machine takes to makes fifty perfect pairs.

"What does Goodyear Welt mean?"

"It is the very best, most perfect method ever invented for joining the Uppers of shoes to the Soles."

GOODYEAR WELT LOCKED STITCH.

"Why is it the best?"

"Because it's the only method that makes a shoe without a stitch or a tack under the foot and stronger than hand sewing."

"Why is it stronger than hand sewing?'

"Because it locks its stitches inside the leather of the outer sole, draws them tighter and more uniformly than hand sewing."

"What advantage does the lock stitch give?"

"The holding power of the stitch remains till the sole is worn through whereas in hand sewn shoes, the top of the stitch wears off in a few days and only straight strands of thread are left to hold the sole on.

"Does it make the shoe cheaper as well as better?"

"It does because it makes fifty perfect pairs, where one imperfect pair could not be made by hand."

"Have any improvements been made in the Goodyear Machines in recent years?"

"Yes, a vast improvement has been made in the New, Improved Goodyear Welt Machine, now in use in the Slater Shoe Factory."

ORDINARY STITCH.

"What is the nature of the improvement?"

"A better motion of the parts, producing better results in the shoe."

"Can a novice tell a Goodyear Welt by seeing it?"

"Not always because there are imitations."

"How can he be sure of getting a genuine Goodyear Welt Shoe?"

"By buying only "The Slater Shoe" because "Slater Shoes" are made only by the new, improved Goodyear Welt process."

Stamped on the sole with the makers' name and price,

LABOR DAY AT FERNIE

SPLENDID PARADE. PROGARM OF SPORTS.

Trail Evens up Score with Fernie at Baseball. A Fine Game. Other Events. Dance in the evening.

The Labor Day Celebration passed off very successfully at Fernie. The weather was superb and nothing occured to mar the day's proceedings. Owing to counter demonstrations at Cranbrook and Michel few people came in from outside places. The trackmen were unable to mabe arrangements for their proposed excursion, as will be seen from a communication in another column, but the people of the town augmented by those from Coal Creek and the lumber camps turned out en masse. In the morning the streets were lined with spectators to witness the parade, and the gate receipts at the recreation grounds in the afternoon was one of the largest on record.

The Bands

As early as nine o'clock the two bands were out calling the people to prepare for the big parade. These two worthy organizations with untiring energy supplied excellent music at intervals throughout the day.

The Parade

At 11 o'clock the different floats and other participants of the parade were gathered al the old recreation grounds and the procession started to the tune of marching music by the Fernie band. The Mayor and council followed, and then the various floats etc. The parade was a blaze of bunting and flags, and some of the floats were particularly worthy of mention. Wm. Handley of the Fernie Livery had a pretty float. It contained his. handsome black driver hitched to his rubber-tired buggy. Miss Tuttle and Rheta Todd occupied the seat of honor. The Elk Lumber Co. had three rigs in the procession, one of which was a cart filled with sawdust and labelled "the new cereal, shredded wood." Their best rig was not used as the road was too rough. The Trites Wood and Sheppard and Elliott had turnouts characteristic of their respective stores. The meatshops were well represented and the Breweries had the goods with them for distribution. The city firemen with their hose cart and chemical engine were in the line. One of the most suggestive features was a wagon filled high with Fernie's unequalled coke. After the circuit of the city had been made the crowd was dismissed by a short address from Mayor Stork.

THE SPORTS.

In the afternoon over $250 was taken in as gate receipts at the recreation grounds The following events created a great deal of interest.

100 yd. open race, 1 J. McLaughlin, 2 Jas. Sheppard. Two others, T. Roberts and F. T. Barnard entered.

Standing broad Jump, 1 J. S. Gusty, 2 T. Lewis, distance 9ft. 6 in.

Running broad jump, 1 J. S. Gusty, 2 T. Roberts, distance 17 ft. 6½ in.

Putting the shot, 1 J. S. Gusty, 34ft. 6½ in., 2 T. Lewis, 32 ft. 5 in.

THE BALL GAME.

At three o'clock the championship ball game between Trail and Fernie commenced. The batting order, positions and runs were as follows.

Fernie was at bat first. Lewis pitched wild on the start, hitting the first three batters. A two-bagger brought in the three runs. The Trail men in the fourth and sixth innings piled up 8 runs. In these innings some costly errors were responsible for several runs. The two pitchers played good ball. Schroder distinguished himself at short stop and at the bat. McMillan, McKellar and Davey put up a pretty triple play in the 7th. True Tuttle umpired the game.

SUNDAY'S GAME

The game on Sunday afternoon between the same teams resulted in a victory for Fernie by a score of 7 runs to 10.

The score by innings was.

Fernie	1	3	2	3	0	1	0	0	x

The game was umpired by A. Ferguson.

TRAIL MEN PLEASED.

Mr. F. W. Brown, manager of the Trail team called at the Free Press Office and asked us to express through these columns the thanks of himself and his companions for the kind treatment they had received at the hands of the Fernie team and the citizens generally. He said that they would have liked to remain another day to accept Fernie's challenge for another game for a purse of $250 but that it was impossible to do so. Mr. Brown also stated tnat he intended to try to arrange a game for the championship between the two teams at the Nelson Fair.

SCHOOLS TAKEN OVER

THE CITY WILL ASSUME CHARGE ON SEPT 12th.

Election of a New Board of Trustees on that Date. All School Expenses now to be Borne by City.

The city clerk is in receipt of a letter from Alexander Robinson B. A. Supt. of Education in which he states that the act of incorporation makes Fernie a city school District and that under the act the city pays all school expenses. The city in return receives a per capita grant of $20 per year from the Government. The Supt. enclosed an order in council passed by the Hon. the Council of Public Instruction in which the 12th day of Sept. is set for the election of a new board of Trustees.

The secretary of the school board also received a letter from the Supt. on the same subject. Mr. Robinson spoke of the pleasant relations existing between the local school board and his office and he hoped that the same board would be returned to office.

Notices have been posted for the school meeting at the Court House on Monday next at 12 o'clock. The board of school trustees in cities of the third class, such as Fernie, consists of three members who hold their office for two years. One or two member are elected each alternate year. The member that receives the largest vote on Monday will retain his office until January 1904 and the other two a year longer.

FLATHEAD RAILWAY

A Victoria dispatch states that steps are being taken for building a railway into the Flathead River coal lands by representatives of two syndicates now in the city. These are Judge Prather, of Spokane, and J. McIntosh of Grand Forks (directors of the Kootenay Coal Company), and F. W. Teezel, of Nelson, representing a Nelson syndicate. Both corporations are heavily interested in lands adjacent to the Crows Nest Coal Co., and which were recently thrown open.

Arrangements have been made by these two syndicates to hand over one hundred claims between them, comprising 64,000 acres, to this company, the latter in turn agreeing to construct a railway and put up coke ovens. This land on the Flathead river will be opened up to all.

The names of those back of the new company are not known but an impression prevails that D. C. Corbin is back of it. It is said to be backed by ample capital and the company will be capitalized at ten million dollars. Both companies have large holding claims yet remaining.

A CHALLENGE.

The Bachelors of Fernie hereby challenge the Benedicts of the same place to give a dance. Both dances to take place within the next six weeks. Each aggregation to pay its own expenses, and it is to be distinctly understood that the bachelors absolutely refuse to be responsible for the debts incurred by their less fortunate friends.

COUNCIL MEETINGS.

Chief of police Warring was appointed city license inspector.

A communication from W. R. Ross M. P. P. was read which stated that finance Minister Tatlow was temporarily absent from Victoria and that until his return which would be about the 6th inst., the rebate question would not be taken up.

The city clerk was instructed to post notices warning people against infringements of the fire limit by-law.

An invitation from the Athletic Association to attend the Labor Day celebration was accepted by the Mayor and Aldermen.

Council adjourned to meet Friday night.

WILL COME LATER ON.

The following communication was received too late for publication last week.

To the Editor:

The Trackmen are unable to make arrangements to be in Fernie on Labor Day on account of dry weather and the shortage of equipment in rolling stock but the C. P. R. officials have given us to understand that they will provide us with trains later on, so we will visit your city yet this season.

Secretary.

A PRESENTATION.

On Monday evening a deputation of carpenters from Coal Creek waited on Mr. F. B. Sample and presented him with a purse containing one hundred dollars in gold. Mr. A. F. Stuart foreman carpenter at Coal Creek made the presentation and in a few well chosen words congratulated Mr. Sample on the pleasant relations which had always subsisted between his employees and himself. Mr. Sample made a suitable reply after which the party broke up. Mr. Sample left for his new home at Nanaimo on Wednesday.

FERNIE BRICKS ARE O. K.

Cameron and Kenny Have Built up a Permanent Industry in Fernie.

In view of the fact that more than one brick-making venture has started up and failed in Fernie within its short history one becomes somewhat skeptical of the ultimate success of the industry in this place. However at last one venture has got beyond the experimental stage and its entire success is absolutely secured. We refer to the enterprising firm of Cameron and Kenney who are now manufacturing bricks on up-to-date principles near by the city.

As far back as June Mr. Kenney who has had many years experience in brick-making commenced the manufacture of bricks by hand on the top of the bank of clay behind the old slack bin site in the old town. He completed a small kiln which when burned turned out to be first class bricks. Mr. Cameron then went in with him and purchased a plant with a capacity of twelve thousand per day. This was put in operation on July 27th. Since then a kiln of 100,000 bricks have been burned and disposed of and yesterday a larger kiln was completed ready for burning. The firm employs eleven men. They have a lease of the site from the Coal Company for a period of five years.

The bricks are a good red color They are free from lime and they are much harder than the bricks manufacted in neighooring towns. Experts have pronounced these bricks to be first class So confident are the local builders of their merits that they have not hesitated to use them in the large buildings now in the course of construction. Mr. Cameron, who has charge of the business end, stated this week that they were not able to supply the local market and that an increase to the plant was contemplated. The bricks in quantity are sold, delivered, for eleven dollars per thousand.

NO CAR SHORTAGES

C. P. R. WILL UTILIZE WORK-CARS TO CARRY COAL

No Shortage in the Grain Season. Mr. Drinnan saw the officials at Winnipeg.

R. G. Drinnan, General Superintendent for the C. N. P. Coal Company returned on Tuesday from a trip to Toronto where he went to consult the Directors on business in connection with the company. At Winnipeg on his way back Mr. Drinnan had an interview with the C. P. R. officials in which definite assurances were given him that there would be no shortages in cars on the Crows Nest branch this Fall. The C. P. R. officials stated that they had gone into the question carefully and they were using every effort to supply sufficient cars. The cars in use on the many work-trains of the Railway Co. were being pressed into regular transportation service. These cars will be sent West for the coal carrying trade and some of the cars now in use here will be sent East for the grain trade. Mr. Drinnan stated this week that this would mean much to his company as the coal and coke orders were rapidly increasing and that with sufficient transportation facilities the prospects for a heavy output for the Fall months was becoming brighter and brighter.

Mr. Drinnan while in Toronto learned the wishes of the Board as to the direction in which the company office building should face. This matter had been in dispute and the site had been surveyed with the main entrance towards Cox St. Mr. Drinnan ascertained that the building was intended to face Pellatt Ave. and he at once gave instructions to have the site resurveyed. Mr. Drinnan saw Mr. Lindsey, the General Manager, who stated that he would be in Fernie in the course of a week or so.

TRACKLAYING NEXT!

G. N. R. CONSTRUCTION PROGRESSING RAPIDLY.

Will be Ready for Steel by Oct. 15th.—The Construction of the Bridge Will be Started At Once.

The railway construction on the Crow's Nest Southern from Morrissey to Fernie is progressing rapidly. The road bed from Morrissey to the Elk river bank at Fernie will be ready for the steel by Oct. 15th. The track-laying will commence about the 1st of Oct., the steel for which is now arriving at Swinton. There is one heavy cut of gumbo about 60 feet deep, on the Foss & Macdonnell section which is requiring a lot of work.

The work of building the bridge over the Elk will commence next week. The Elk Lumber and Manufacturing Co. have been given the contract for getting out the piles. The lumber for the bridge will be of coast fir, 200,000 feet of it will be brought over the G. N. R. to Swinton and transferred to the C. P. R. for shipment to Fernie. Messrs. Porter Bros. have the bridge contract, and it is understood that T. Walsh will have charge of the work.

The work on the east side of the river is progressing more slowly. The large stumps are being blasted out and considerable grading is being done on the yards. About 500 men are employed on the whole road, of which 75 are on the east side. The latter number will be increased to 150 so that it may be ready for the steel when the tracklayers get here. Instructions for clearing and grading have been given only as far as the C. P. R. track crossing.

Mr. Ennerson, the overseer of the work, stated this week that there was no doubt the line would be completed and trains would be running over it before the end of the year.

W. A. LETCHER THE NEW CHIEF.

A Public Meeting was held last night to Reorganize the Fire Brigade.

A public meeting was held last night for the purpose of reorganizing the city fire-brigade. The meeting was called by the fire committee of the city council.

The chief business transacted was the appointment of a new chief for the brigade. W. A. Letcher, assistant to General Superintendent Drinnan, was appointed chief by a unanimous vote of the meeting. A recruiting committee comprising Messrs C. Stephens, J. Rogers and H. A. Wilkes was appointed. This committee will confer with their captain and will advise him in matters of new equipment etc. Their first meeting will be held on next Tuesday evening.

The meeting showed excellent judgement in its selection of a captain for the brigade. Mr. Letcher has had eleven years experience in first-class fire brigades in the east and he has held important offices in them. He is a man of steady nerve and cool judgement, and best of all he possesses a pleasing and strong personality which will go far in assisting him to build up a live, energetic, and united brigade.

BURROWS WINS IN THE 19th.

Jim Burrows of Fernie and Jack Reilly of San Francisco fought a 20 round boxing bout before 800 people in Spokane on Monday night. Burrows knocked his man out in the 19th round with a hard swing to the jaw. Immediately after Thomas Reilly who was one of his brother's backers knocked Burrows down with his bare fist. Burrows at once issued a challenge to the second Reilly to fight for $1,000 a side. The nineteen rounds is described in the Spokesman Review as one of the prettiest exhibitions of boxing ever seen in Spokane. Wm. Burrows and Wm. Tuttle were Jim Burrows' backers.

Oakfell arose and read the petition of Leon.

building and which actually shocked one-half its occupants, for it was recognized as that of Jewett, and as the whispering froze upon the lips of the Quillebert party and Pratjean's countenance confessed to a feeling that he had made a fool of himself Oakfell walked in with Jewett, Baldouino and Father Grhe. He held in his hand but one volume, the civil code of Louisiana, and his companions had neither books nor documents. He satisfactorily explained his tardiness, and the judge directed the trial to proceed before him, neither party having prayed for the assistance of a jury.

"Are the parties, plaintiff and defendant, present?" inquired the judge.

"The plaintiff is present by attorney," said Oakfell.

"And the defendant is present by attorney and in person," responded Pratjean, with special emphasis on the words "in person" and a scornful glance at Oakfell, which was greeted by a whispered "Aye, yi yi!" from the left.

"That is sufficient. Read your pleadings, gentlemen," requested the judge.

Oakfell arose and read the petition of Leon. It was concise and perfectly plain, reciting merely that the plaintiff was born the slave of Fabian Queyrouze, deceased, and was inherited by the heirs of said Queyrouze; that for the period of ten years, with the knowledge of his masters, he was suffered to enjoy freedom within the st te and thereby became a free man in virtue of the article 3510 of the civil code; that after the expiration of said prescriptive period the defendant, Constant Quillebert, by deceit obtained control of plaintiff's person and unlawfully deprived him of his liberty until the institution of this suit, falsely claiming to be his master. The petition concluded with the prayer that the plaintiff should be judicially declared and recognized a free man and released from the custody and dominion of the defendant.

Pratjean in his turn recited in a disjointed way the answer of Quillebert. It denied that the plaintiff had ever enjoyed freedom by the permission of any person entitled to his services and asserted that, having by his own admission been born a slave and never emancipated in the manner and form provided by the laws of the state prior to 1857, he was without right to sue and stand in judgment in the courts of the state, and hence the answer prayed that the plaintiff's demand be rejected.

It was apparent to all professional minds that Pratjean's plea was drawn far more artfully and skillfully than was Oakfell's petition and opposed difficulties of a technical kind which would scarcely have been anticipated to a demand so simple as Leon's.

At the conclusion of the reading Oakfell said:

"One of my witnesses is an old lady who has never been within a court of justice and shrinks from appearing in open court before an audience composed entirely of men. I ask the consent of the other side to have her testimony taken before your honor in chambers."

"I refuse consent," snapped Pratjean, braving the indignant glances directed upon him by the judge and every other respectable man in the courtroom. "My client has received no courtesies from the other side, and for him I insist"—

"You need proceed no further, sir; the request is withdrawn," said Oakfell. At his instance Jewett left the courtroom and in a moment returned escorting Mrs. Wyley and her son Binker, on whose arm she leaned.

At first she seemed greatly agitated and dazed by the strange surroundings, but the assuring words of the judge, the presence of her brave and devoted son and her inborn Dutch good sense soon restored her equanimity. The narration she gave of the coming of Leon to her, his life under her keeping, his inveiglement by Quillebert and the latter's oral reply to the written inquiry concerning the boy's detention was so circumstantial, direct and evidently truthful that Pratjean shrewdly realized the peril of venturing upon his favorite mode of cross examination and dismissed her with but few questions fairly and politely put. He greatly regretted he had forced her to testify in open court.

Oakfell produced the records showing the settlement of the Queyrouze estate with the French heirs, and omitting any price for Leon from the proceeds of the sale of slaves, and the deed, joined in by Quillebert, for Olive and her three children, excepting Leon from the sale.

By Father Grhe and Valsin Mouillot he proved the admission of Quillebert, made at unsuspicious times, that Leon was not his slave.

On the part of Quillebert, Pratjean exhibited the inventory of the Queyrouze estate, in which the child Leon was appraised as an asset.

Jadot, Brille and Titbout testified to Leon's admissions of Quillebert's ownership of him, as they had promised over the gumbo and rum at Dede's.

The distress of Leonidas Latiolais was so apparent that the pity of all feeling men went to him when he was summoned to the witness chair and made to state under oath that on the day of the memorable race between the mares of Judge Elgee and Quillebert Leon said he was the slave of Quillebert and begged him (Latiolais) to buy him. In an unhappy moment he had communicated to Quillebert the jockey's application to him, and that indefatigable casemaker had by dint of persistency, wine and accommodations of card debts argued from his memory the "if" prefixed to Leon's prayer.

Oakfell made no effort to replace it.

This closed the evidence for Quillebert.

There was no more striking contrast in the entire proceeding than that between the arguments of the two advocates.

Oakfell's was calm, direct, unimpassioned and devoid of appeal to the emotions. He relied solely and simply upon a literal application of the article of the code which he thought rendered judgment in his client's favor unavoidable. From Mme. Noreau's cottage Estelle eagerly listened, catching only at times the sound of his voice, but never a distinguishable word.

Pratjean's dry, harsh voice vexed the ears of the assemblage within and rattled upon those without for an hour and a half. Laure heard every syllable, and often her pretty brown hands beat together in approval. He read copiously from French commentators upon the impossibility of courts entertaining the pleas of persons not sui juris. He quoted numerous decisions by the state supreme court declaring emancipation necessary to clothe one born in slavery with the quality of suitor and magnified into political significance the instant cause which, he said, the pestilent abolitionists throughout the north and their secret confederates in our midst were watching with unsleeping eyes, for it was the first of a series of mines they had laid for the destruction of southern society. He warned the judge against lending the aid of the law and courts of Louisiana to those enemies of the Union, those assassins of Caucasian civilization.

In these flights he hopped from place to place and threw his arms about in a maze of gesticulation which served his utterances as an obligato accompaniment supports a wild song of passion. Had he spoken no word his pantomimic art would have conveyed an intelligible address. Indeed it is said of his class in Louisiana that if deprived of the power of gesture their speech would not be understandable to one another. His voice at times broke into falsetto tones maddening to the sensitive ear, but his oratory was effective, and it was difficult for the sheriff to suppress the applause which repeatedly broke from the left and the spellbound groups in the yard.

Oakfell was unaffected by this display. His reply was practically a repetition of his opening speech, reiterating his dependence upon the plain meaning of the article of the code. He concluded by declaring him an enemy to the state who would describe an appeal to the courts of the land for freedom as a political menace to the commonwealth.

It was 4 o'clock in the afternoon when the speeches were concluded. The judge announced that he would give his decision at 5 and left the bench.

Oakfell, Father Grhe, Baldouino and Jewett induced their friends to remain in and about the court, while the highlanders hastened to the cabarets to give a noisy ovation to their Mirabeau. The frequent shouts of "Magnificent! Grand! Glorious!" which rose from those places evinced the happiness of Pratjean's admirers under the inspiration of unlimited absinth anisette.

At the appointed hour all resumed their places of vantage, and, while the tension under which enforced silence put them was painfully visible, there was about Pratjean, Quillebert and their supporters an unmistakable air of confidence that the victory was with them. Pratjean's grand effort had removed every lingering doubt from their minds.

First the sheriff came out of the judge's retiring room, left the building and in a moment or two returned. He tapped the courthouse bell three times and took position at the right of the judge's dais, facing the audience.

Judge Tailleur walked slowly to his seat. He looked inquiringly at the sheriff and, receiving an assuring bow, busied himself briefly in placing the papers in the suit upon the desk before him. From the benches every head was stretched forward, scooped hands were held behind strained ears, and suppressed excitement was depicted upon every face. Even those of strongest nerves and best schooled in self control could not wholly conceal the effect of the situation upon them. Jewett moved uneasily in his chair. Baldouino sat with arms folded upon his mighty chest and by straining them together and looking at the ceiling thought to produce an appearance of calmness he did not feel. Father Grhe took snuff inordinately, and Oakfell looked to the floor and for the first time almost regretted that he had inaugurated the litigation. Pratjean crossed and recrossed his feet and impatiently pressed his finger against the throbbing lips, and Quillebert's muddy eyes expressed satisfaction. The stillness was broken by a girlish voice at some distance exclaiming, "Hurrah for Quillebert—ha, ha, ha, ha!" the merry laugh, fresh and hearty, disclosing the personality of Laure Luneau. This produced a stir of relief, and immediately upon it the judge pronounced his decision.

He said:

"The prohibition of emancipation in the state does not apply to the acquisition of freedom by prescription, as provided by article 3510 of the civil code. This article is not repealed by the statute of 1857. They are not upon the same subject matter. The slave after the prescriptive time must be free, and he becomes subject to the laws relative to free persons of color, for if the master cannot claim him he is free.

"The intention of the heirs of Queyrouze to allow this plaintiff to enjoy his liberty is clearly established. This is sufficient, especially where the contest is with a mere usurper, with one who got possession of the plaintiff under the pretense of affection, of being his godfather and in order to enable him to see his mother. One who could thus act ought not to have the favorable consideration of a court of justice in his attempt to reduce to slavery one over whom he has no right but that of the strong over the weak. He got possession of him under false pretenses and should be allowed to derive no benefit from a possession obtained by treachery and from a control over the plaintiff exercised without permission from his master or heirs.

"In such a contest the technical rules of law ought to be construed with as much rigidity in favor of as against him whose only hope is in the protection the courts of the state can afford him.

"I am therefore of the opinion that the judgment must be in favor of the freedom of the plaintiff against the defendant, and it is so ordered, adjudged and decreed."

Those nearest Oakfell shook his hand warmly. Pratjean held a handkerchief over his lips, and his eyes could scarcely be seen. Quillebert all but foamed at the mouth and glared viciously, murderously, at his adversaries. During the delivery of the judgment 12 of the sheriff's deputies, whom every one knew to be heavily armed, though their weapons were not exposed, took positions in the crowded aisle. When the last words of the decree fell from the judge's lips, 300 men, maddened with excitement, leaped to their feet.

The judge arose and in a voice which arrested the movements of all said:

"My friends, I am not unaware of the extraordinary feeling that has been engendered by this suit. But there must be no violent manifestation. All must submit to the law. I have had the sheriff to take sufficient measures for the preservation of the decorum of this court and the public peace. I admonish you to leave this place quietly and disperse to your respective homes speedily. Do not bring disgrace upon our parish and misery upon some of our citizens by an unseemly demonstration of approval or disapproval of what has just occurred. I am the friend of all of you, and as such I give this advice."

The words from the judge had the effect he wished. The courtroom emptied slowly and noiselessly. The sheriff had stepped near to Quillebert and Pratjean and said in a low tone:

"I know what I am talking about. Stay where you are until all the others are gone."

They heeded his warning.

AS A GLORIOUS CLIMAX

"HE HATH MADE EVERYTHING BEAUTIFUL IN HIS TIME."

MIGHTY LAW OF SEQUENCE

Events of Human Life Marshaled As An Army By the Wise King—The Fitness of Things—"There Is a Time to Be Born and a Time to Die"—"A Time to Laugh and a Time to Weep."

Entered according to Act of Parliament of Canada, in the year 1904, by William Baily, of Toronto, at the Dep't of Agriculture, Ottawa.

Los Angeles, Cal., Aug. 28.—At the season when nature is displaying her glories in greatest abundance the preacher chooses as a theme for his sermon the beauty of things audible and visible and contrasts it with the higher beauty which comes to those whose lives are in harmony with the Divine Life. The text is Ecclesiastes iii., 11, "He hath made everything beautiful in his time."

The Solomonic writings are often epigrammatic in style. Like priceless jewels cut and polished by the lapidaries and collected in caskets, irrespective of size or color, his verses as verbal gems are clustered into chapters, with but little attempt at consecutive arrangement. Indeed, King Solomon for the most part seems to me to be like a writer of notebooks. In the King's judgment hall or on the street or out upon the hillsides under the blue dome of the sky, when a great thought is divinely inspired within his brain, he jots that thought down in memorandum. Then at the end of the day or the week or the month or the year he collects these different thoughts, irrespective of their logical sequence, into a chapter or a book and has the court stenographer write them out again in full. They are often as unconnected as the definitions of Webster's Dictionary. They change their subjects very often. They are like nuggets of gold sometimes found by the Australian miners in the dust by the roadsides or in the river beds, entirely separated from any gold veins.

The modern critics tell us that King Solomon did not write the book of Ecclesiastes, that its style and diction belong to a later date. It appears to me, however, that its tone and its depressing refrain are characteristic of a man who led such a life of ease and self-indulgence as Solomon led, and that at the end of it, satiated with pleasure and study, as he must have been, it was precisely the kind of book that would come from his pen, and the conclusions uttered in that book, just such as would be likely to be reached by a man who, having strayed from God, was disappointed and dissatisfied with his life. In the absence, therefore, of definite knowledge I shall assume that the first verse of the book indicates him as the author, "The son of David, King in Jerusalem."

But, though King Solomon was not, as a rule, a connected writer, yet in the book of Ecclesiastes he makes an exception to his usual custom. In this third chapter, for example, there is clear sequence. No man can interpret my text aright unless he uses the words, "He hath made everything beautiful in his time," as a glorious climax to the ten verses which precede them. Solomon is here enunciating the mighty law of sequence. He is marshaling the events of a human life as an army. Each event must have its right position. In the language of the chapter, he says, "There is a time to be born and a time to die." There is a time for a cradle and a time when the wood of that cradle should be changed into a coffin lid. "There is a time to plant and a time to reap that which is planted." The plow and the sickle cannot have the rust rubbed off their faces at the same time. "There is a time to weep and a time to laugh." That means that a joke or a cachinnation at a funeral is a discord. A tear and a sob at a coronation are also out of place. A wedding march is never played in a minor key, neither is the "Battle Hymn of the Republic" sung to the accompaniment of the "Dead March" from "Saul," nor is a Christmas carol imprisoned behind the musical bars of a Mozart's requiem.

Then, after the author of my text has sung the changes of the "Gospel Harmonies of Sequence:" the meadow lands and upon the mountain top, in sea and on land, by cradles and by opened graves; during the times when the dove of peace is hovering over man, and during the time when the black raven of war is flapping his wings above bloody battlefields, King Solomon generalizes all his statements in one great conclusion. He practically says, "All the different heart beats of joy and sorrow, life and death, peace and conflict, hope and despair, have their purpose to serve, if they only come to man in the right way and at their appointed seasons." For God "hath made everything beautiful in its time." This is the keynote of Christianity. Man in his sinful state is a monster of ugliness, a blemish on creation, a discord, but man redeemed, is haloed with divine beauty, and, as Ralph Waldo Trine has said, "He is in tune with the infinite." He becomes part of the universal harmony, and his thoughts are in spiritual symmetry with the thoughts of God.

We find an analogy for man's spiritual beauty in the painter's brush and the artist's easel. According to Samuel Coleridge, the English poet and literary critic, the true definition of "beauty" is "multitude in unity."

Let me illustrate what an artist's "multitude in unity" means. When Paul Gustave Dore first painted his famous picture, "Christ Leaving the Praetorium," the judgment hall was bathed in the glowing sun of the noontide. The hillsides about Jerusalem were blistering under the heat of a Syrian mid-noon spring. The people who had come to hear the verdict of that trial had left their work in the heat of the day. In that first picture you could almost hear above the spectators' taunting words, the shrill cries of trade in the busy marts of the Hebrew capital. Just before Dore was about to send his picture to the French Salon he called in a friend who was a great Bible student as well as art critic. When Canon Hartford stood before the canvas, Dore saw he was disappointed. "What is wrong with the picture, Hartford?" he asked. "The picture has a wrong setting," said Canon Hartford. "Christ was not tried at noon. Christ was tried in the early morning. The blazing light of that sun should be darkened in order to make the picture historically true." Though Dore had worked on that picture already for nearly three long years, because in that praetorium there were not the "multitudes of colors in blending unity," Dore changed the whole type of that picture. He overcast the sky and represented Christ leaving the presence of Pilate in the early morning.

An artist's beauty is a "multitude in unity." We know that Samuel Coleridge's definition in reference to the painter's easel is true. We see a "multitude of colors in unity" when Turner, the most brilliant artistic colorist England ever produced, makes the sea a creature of life. Now it is a beautiful boulevard of gold, paving its way to the throne of a setting sun; now a perfect pandemonium of furies; now it is a burial scene, when Sir David Wilkie finds a sepulchre in the mighty deep, whose waves beat themselves into pieces on the Gibraltar crags. But, though there may be many different tints blending in the colors of a rainbow or in the hectic flush of a rose, did you ever stop to realize that all colors come from but three primal colors? Just the same as all nature. All the animal and vegetable and mineral kingdoms have but sixty-six different basic elements, of which they are all composed. So in the artistic world we find that all colors originally come from but three primary colors—the red, the yellow and the blue. Now, if God can form the artistic beauty of the sky, the sea, the land, out of the simple red, the simple yellow and the simple violet, is it absurd to suppose that God can spiritually make us artistically beautiful, no matter how crude and sinful we may be, if we only allow our thoughts and lives to be combined in symmetry with his thoughts and with Christ's life. Oh, the beauty of blending colors! From the brilliant pictorials of an autumnal leaf let us learn the spiritual lesson for man that God hath made and can make everything beautiful in its time.

But what, according to the law of sound, do we mean by being "in tune with the infinite?" I went hunting some time ago. As I lay in a dugout by a water hole, hidden by the leaves, waiting for the birds to come down to drink, I asked myself this question, What is music? Why is it that all these voices of the woods have such a wonderful influence over me? Why does not the harsh call of the fishmonger hawking his food at my city door, or the deep voice of the fog-horn on shipboard off the banks of Newfoundland, or the rasp of a saw, or the whining cry of a spoiled child, enchant me as now do the voice signalings of the pheasants, which I can now see way off under yonder trees, or the chirp of the swallows flying over my head, or the beautiful sounds that come to my ear as the harpists of the winds finger the long, slender vines as though they were harp strings? I know that some of the repellant cries I have heard from the fishmonger Richard Wagner has reproduced in his matchless operas. I know the deep voice of the fog-horn rolls and thunders and swells and dies away in the choruses of many a great musical master.

In order to answer this question I made a study of the laws of musical sound. Dudley Buck, the great American composer, taught me that "sweet music was merely a succession of combinations of sound arranged with such connection and mutual relations as to express to the ear some distinct form or train of thought and awaken certain corresponding emotions." He told me that music is thought expressed in sound, even as a great painting is thought expressed in color. A jumble of colors is a daub, not a picture. A riot of sounds, promiscuously pushing and jostling each other, even as the stronger limbed members of a stampeding mob knock down and trample upon the weaker, is merely a collection of discords. It is only when "multitudes of sounds" are marshaled together in "harmonious unity" that we have music. So when I began ta know what true music meant, then I said to myself: "Yes, yes; I now know what Ralph Waldo Trine means when he speaks of man being 'in tune with the infinite.'" Man in himself may be so distracted by sin as to be like a discord in music. His voice in nature may be so discordant by reason of his corrupt condition as to rend the ear as does the shrill cry of the vender on the street. But when his nature is redeemed his voice falls into its right place in the song of creation and of Moses and the lamb and becomes harmonious and melodious.

The symmetries of straight lines and curves in sculpture and architecture also form analogies for man's spiritual beauty. Wandering among the famous buildings of Europe, I find that, architecturally, a great building has a symmetrical unity, just as a perfect statue is chiseled after the physical formations of a perfect man. Many years ago there was exhumed from the buried ruins of old Rome a marble leg, broken from off one of the statues of old. That broken fragment is still preserved in the Vatican. Michael Angelo, as a sculptor, used to study that leg by the day, the week, the month and the year, "because," said the great Italian master, "I consider that piece of stone the most perfect formation of physical anatomy ever carved by the chisel of man."

Now, the symmetrical laws observed in true sculpture are also found to exist in true architecture. A great builder like Christopher Wren did not start in to erect St. Paul's cathedral at haphazard. Every part of the walls, the dome, and the capstone were carefully and harmoniously designed and properly proportioned before one spadeful of dirt was dug out of the heart of mother earth to excavate the cellars of London's architectural pride. And the wonderful part of the masterfully designed buildings of Europe, is how deceptive they are as to their size when first seen by the human eye. When one sees the dome of St. Peter's at Rome, lifting itself toward the skies or the spires of the Cologne Cathedral, like the unlifted forefinger of an orator pointing heavenward, or the roof of the Milan Cathedral, peopled with myriads of saints and apostles carved in stone, the lengths and the breadths and the heights of those structures rarely impress the tourist at first. Why? Because all are in perfect symmetrical proportion. A truly great building is "multitudes of stones arranged in unity." It is thought expressed in stone, as a painting is thought expressed in colors, or as music is thought expressed in sound.

Now, as true architecture is beautiful thought expressed in the curves and lines of the roof and the walls and the foundation stones of a building, I would go one step further in my subject. I would say to the designers of the great Episcopalian Cathedral now being built in New York city: "Oh, architects, of what material are you building these walls? Where are to be found the mighty beams to hold up yonder roof?" Then these architects take me down into the quarries, and amid the dust and the dirt I see the mighty rocks being hewed out. Then they take me to the foundries, where the steel beams are being molded. Then they take me out into the forests, where the great tree trunks are being dragged to the sawmills. Then they say: "Oh, preacher, we are making this beautiful Cathedral of St. John the Divine out of such materials as these. All these rocks and steel beams and tree trunks, a multitude of different elements, shall blend together in beautiful architectural unity." Then I turn to the architects and say: "Oh, designers, if you can make yonder stone beautiful by placing it in symmetrical harmony with other stones, cannot my Lord and my God make redeemed man beautiful when he becomes part of the heavenly temple by union with Jesus Christ? For 'I saw no temple therein, for the Lord God Almighty and the Lamb are the temple of it.' As the apostle says, 'Ye also as living stones are built up a spiritual house.' Is the one achievement from an earthly standpoint any more wonderful than the second achievement from a heavenly standpoint?" Yes, I see to-day, by the beautiful in architecture, analogies that show that God has made and God is now making and will continue to make redeemed man beautiful in his time.

Let us loiter for a little while in the "poets' corner" of Westminster Abbey. As we listen the sweet bards of the English language seem to lift their heads from their pillows of dust and begin to sing, and we find man's spiritual beauty in the analogies of poetry as well as in painting and music and sculpture and architecture. For as painting is rhythm in color and music is rhythm in sound and sculpture and architecture are rhythm in stone, so poetry is rhythm in words. Aye, poetry is more than mere rhythm. An English writer once well said, "Poetry in the flower garden of human language is the blossom and the fragrance of all human knowledge, human thoughts, human passions and emotions."

But though poetry is rhythm in words, yet words themselves, as individuals, are not poetry. The words Burns used in his poems, and William Shakespeare used in his poems, and Longfellow used in his poems, and Whittier and Holmes and Lowell and Bayard Taylor used in their poems were for the most part only the simple words we used in everyday life by our own firesides. The beauty of these poets' words are entirely due to their juxtaposition with their surrounding words.

Are you and I ready to become part of God's beautiful creation? Are we ready to become beautiful in ourselves by becoming beautiful in him? Even the lowest and vilest, saved by his grace and redeemed by his blood, can become a true part of Christ's beautiful life. Many years ago when the yellow fever plague was raging in Memphis, Tenn., a rough looking man applied to the city relief committee and said, "I wish to nurse." It was at a time when most people who could were fleeing from the stricken and desolated homes. The death carts seemed to be going everywhere. At first the physician declined the rough man's services, but as he could get no one else to do the work this man was sent to one of the most filthy and dangerous wards of the city. Wherever he went he was a messenger of love. He would not tell his name; he said simply, "Call me John." Time passed on, and after awhile John, whose name was now famous through the city, sickened and died. While his body was being prepared for an unmarked grave, suddenly upon his arm was found a livid mark, which proved that John was an ex-convict. John had been one of the most dangerous criminals of all the south. Once he was a murderer, but now, through the blood of Jesus, he became a ministering angel. Once he was horrible in his depraved malformation. Now he was made beautiful by bringing his life in symmetrical touch with Jesus' life.

My friends, will you not let Christ fill you with his spiritual beauty? Will you not only in the future be spiritually beautiful, but beautiful now in your present life? Will you not become transformed as was John, the redeemed nurse, laboring for his Master in plague stricken Memphis?

THE GREAT ENGLISH REMEDY.

TESTIMONIAL from the late SIR SAMUEL BAKER, the famous Nile Explorer.

"Newton Abbot, Devon. Dear Sirs—I have delayed my thanks as I wished to test the effect of Blair's Pills by a sufficient interval of time.

"For ten years I had suffered acutely from Gout and life had lost its attraction owing to the uncertainty of health and sudden visitations of the enemy which prostrated me for months, or weeks according to the virulence of the attacks.

"Blair's Pills have rendered me immense service, as I no longer fear an attack of Gout.

"For the last twenty months I have been comparatively free, as one or two attempted visitations have been immediately stamped out by the assistance of Blair's Pills.

"Truly yours (Signed) Saml. W. Baker.

HIS GRAVEL WAS SURELY CURED

Dodd's Kidney Pills Removed the Stones.

And now Ruben Draper is Well and Strong after his long Suffering.

Bristol, Que., Sept. 5.—(Special)—Ruben Draper, a well known resident here, keeps the proof right with him that Dodd's Kidney Pills will surely cure the much dreaded Gravel. The proof consists of two stones, one the size of a small bean and the other as big as a grain of barley. He passed these stones and was relieved of all the terrible pains they caused after using Dodd's Kidney Pills for a short time.

Mr. Draper is confident that Dodd's Kidney Pills and nothing else caused his cure, as he tried two doctors without getting help, and was fast getting weak and despondent when he stopped all other treatment and started to take Dodd's Kidney Pills. In a week he passed the large stone and four days later the smaller one.

This cure causes a feeling of relief over people in these parts, as it shows those terrible operations, long thought to be unavoidable in case of Gravel, are no longer necessary.

If I desire a person to stand on a chair, how shall I make hime come down at the first call?—By not call-him again.

As a lubricant it will keep the muscles pliable and free from pains which often follow constant use of them without softening or impairing their strength. For bruises, sprains and contusions it is without a peer.

Why is love like a potato?—Because it springs from the eyes.

What is that which plays when it works and works when it plays?—A fountain.

Minard's Liniment for sale everywhere.

What is that which every one wishes for, and yet wants to get rid of as soon as obtained?—A good appetite.

When is the soup most likely to run out of the saucepan?—When there's a leek in it.

There never was and never will be a universal panacea, in one remedy for all ills to which flesh is heir—the very nature of many curatives being such that were the germs of other and differently seated diseases rooted in the system of the patient—what would relieve one ill in turn would aggravate the other We have, however, in Quinine Wine when obtainable in sound, unadulterated state, a remedy for many and grievous ills. By its gradual and judicious use the frailest systems are led into convalescence and strength by the influence which Quinine exerts on nature's own restoratives. It relieves the drooping spirits of those with whom a chronic state of morbid despondency and lack of intrest in life is a disease, and by tranquilizing the nerves, disposes to sound and refreshing sleep—imparts vigor to the action of the blood, which, being stimulated, courses through the veins, strengthening the healthy animal functions of the system, thereby making activity a necessary result, strengthening the frame and giving life to the digestive organs which naturally demand increased substance—result improved appetite. Northrop & Lyman of Toronto have given to the public their Superior Quinine Wine at the usual rate and, guaged by the opinion of scientists, the wine approaches nearest perfection of any in the market. All druggists sell it.

Talleyrand's Sharp Tongue.

When Mme. de Stael published her celebrated novel, "Delphine," she was supposed to have painted herself in the person of the heroine, and M. Talleyrand in that of an elderly lady, who is one of the principal characters. "They tell me," said he, the first time he met her, "that we are both of us in your novel in the disguise of women."

A Hard Bluff to Make.

The very best poker players look as if they were caught stealing sheep when they go to explain to their wives how sorry they are they've got to go away on business.

His Voice Changing.

Ethel—How funny your brother's voice sounds now! Edith—Yes, papa says he's outgrown all his clothes and now he's outgrowing his voice, I guess.

A Square Coin.

A square copper coin, struck by the Swedish government in the sixteenth century, is nearly one-half inch thick and weighs a pound and a quarter.

Prison Productions.

John Bunyan wrote "Pilgrim's Progress" during one of his terms in prison, which altogether lasted twelve years. The brilliant Frenchman, Mirabeau, during his three years' imprisonment at Vincennes wrote many pamphlets and his "Lettres de Cachet et Prisons d'Etat." Luther while in the solitary castle of Wartburg wrote that noble hymn, "Eine Feste Burg ist unser Gott." During his thirteen years' confinement in the Tower of London Sir Walter Raleigh wrote a history of the world from the creation to 150 B. C. Daniel Defoe, who was imprisoned for two years for the publication of an ironical pamphlet entitled "The Shortest Way with Dissenters," produced during his imprisonment several of the 210 works he is said to have written. The poet Lovelace wrote "Lucasta" while a political prisoner, and the Roman philosopher Boethius wrote in prison a work singularly appropriate to his situation, "On the Consolation of Philosophy."

How to Reach a Decision.

If indecision runs in the blood you inherit arouse yourself and strangle this insidious foe to your achievement before it saps your energy and ruins your life chance. Do not wait until tomorrow, but begin today. Compel yourself to develop the opposite quality by the constant practice of firm decision. No matter how simple the thing you are called upon to decide, be it the choice of a hat or the color or style of a garment, do not vacillate. Throw all the light possible on whatever you have in hand for decision, weigh and consider it from every point of view, call your common sense and best judgment to your aid before reaching a conclusion, and then, when you have once made your decision, let it be final. Let there be no going back, no reconsidering and no opening the matter up for further discussion. Be firm and positive. Declare the polls closed.

The Elephant's Toilet.

In an interesting little paper upon the grooming of wild animals it says that from every point of view the toilet of the elephant is by far the most interesting performance of the menagerie. It requires at least four weeks to complete the toilet of a single elephant. The operation is very expensive. The assistance of the elephant's valet de chambre must be engaged by the day or week, while an experienced valet—he is known by another name—must be engaged to superintend the work, usually at a large salary. Then, again, the soap used in the process must be purchased by the hundredweight, the sandpaper by the gross, and the oil, an important ingredient, is used by the barrel. The toilet of a single elephant will not infrequently cost as much as $400.

Joking With Royalty.

When Marshal Bassompierre was describing to Louis XIII. his embassy to Spain and how he had entered Madrid in state seated on a mule, Louis exclaimed, "An ass seated on a mule!" "Yes, sire," quietly retorted the old soldier, "and what made the joke the better was that I represented you."

Ferdinand II. was a man of very uncertain moods and would allow his jester to take liberties with him one hour while resenting any familiarity the next. One day he turned round on Jonas, his favorite fool, and thundered: "Fellow, be silent. I never stoop to talk to a fool." "Never mind that," answered Jonas. "I do. So please listen to me in your turn."

A "Lucky Thirteen" Stroke.

"Big Ben," the bell in the clock tower over the houses of parliament in London, is alleged to have struck fourteen on a recent midnight. The incident recalls the well authenticated case of the Westminster "Great Tom" going astray in like fashion.

During the reign of William III. a sentinel on duty was sentenced to death on the charge of being asleep at his post. This the man denied, and he declared that he heard the clock strike thirteen instead of twelve at midnight. The fact was deposed to by several persons at the trial, and the life of the soldier—named Hatfield—was saved. He died in 1770 in Aldersgate, aged 102 years.

Easy to Be Arrested.

In Berlin you are always forced to take the first cab in the row. If you are a family of eight and it is a one horse drosky for two, you take it. Then you hire others for your overflow. Then if you are a lone, lorn bachelor bearing a single grip, and the head of the row is an eight seat family four wheeler, you have got to take it. Not to take it is "verboten." If you don't take it you get arrested. In Germany you're liable to get arrested for almost anything, anwyhere, at any time.—Argonaut.

FATHER AND DAUGHTER

Were Great Sufferers From Kidney Disease and Pains in the Back--Now Unite in Praise of

Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills

Those who are best acquainted with the merits of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills do not wonder at their immense popularity as a family medicine.

In thousands of cases they have cured where physicians and ordinary medicines have failed. This is the test by which they have been proven.

Here is a letter we have just received from Prince Edward Island.

Miss Kate Doyle, lot 1, post office, P. E. I., states:—"About three years ago my father was seized with a severe form of kidney disease, which caused him much suffering, as well as anxiety lest the ailment should become chronic or prove fatal. We immediately obtained Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills, and he began at once to improve under this treatment, the symptoms gradually disappearing, until he became quite well again. Since then we always keep these pills in the house for use in the case of sickness of this kind.

"For some time I suffered from pains in the small of the back and accompanying ills, and though I was treated by a doctor at considerable expense, I could obtain no lasting benefit until I used Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills, which seemed to be exactly suited to my ailment. Father and I are greatly pleased with the excellent medicine and wish to recommend it to others."

Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills, one pill a dose, 25 cents a box, at all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Company, Toronto. To protect you against imitations, the portrait and signature of Dr. A. W. Chase, the famous receipt book author, are on every box of his remedies.

The Two Sided Circle.

A Queer Marriage Ceremony.

Among the Kherrias of India the marriage ceremony is very funny. Taking a small portion of the hair of the bride and groom in turn from the center of the forehead, the priest draws it down on to the bridge of the nose. Then, pouring oil on the head, he watches it carefully as it trickles down the portion of hair. If the oil runs straight on to the tip of the nose their future will be fortunate, but if it spreads over the forehead or trickles off on either side of the nose, bad luck is sure to follow. Their fortunes told, generally to their own satisfaction, the essential and irrevocable part of the ceremony takes place. Standing up side by side, but with faces strictly averted, the bride and groom mark each other's forehead with "sindur" (vermilion).

Concerning Scotch Pawkiness.

A "positively true tale" of Scotch pawkiness is sent us by a naval correspondent. He traveled up to Inverneshire with a Scotsman, on whose taciturnity he failed, after many efforts, to impinge. The Scotsman still stared dully, fixedly from the train. At last intelligence began to show in his face and grew to ecstasy, and he shouted in his excitement, "Look here, look here, that's whaur it was." His companion rushed to the window. "In yon wee town," continued the Scotsman, "I wus charged saxpence for yin cup of coffee."—London Globe.

MESSRS. Wriglesworth and Wichester have completed a very fine cement pavement around the two sides of the Napanee Hotel. This pavement may cost more than a plank walk but there is no doubt as to it being cheaper in the long run. The cement lasts for ages, need no repairs and gives better results all the time. There should be more of such pavements on our main street.

Fernie has never enjoyed better weather for building operations than that of the present season. Old timers with the advantage of many years experience tell us that the weather this season is much like what it used to be and that in recent years it has been abnormally wet. The contractors and carpenters have not lost a day since Spring and the builders are taking full advantage of the good weather conditions to rush their work. It cannot last always, however, and some will be found napping some of these days.

A deal has peen on for some time for a railway into the Flathead Coal and Oil fields. A despatch from Victoria dated Sept. 6th states that the deal for the building of the railway into the Flathead oil and coal country was consummated on Saturday night. There was a hitch in the negotiations following the announcement of twoweeks ago but all the difficulties were finally overcome, and arrangements as then made now stand.

The railway company is really subsidary to the coal company and will build from Flathead to Morrissey.

D. C. Corbin' of Spokane is understood to be at the back of the railway company, which receives a hundred coal claims as a bonus, or over 60,000 acres.

A FATALITY AT MORRISSEY

Parley P. Batt, a Brakesman Instantly Killed on the High Line

A fatal accident occured at Carbonado Colliery last Saturday afternoon when Parley P. Batt was killed by being run over by coal cars. Mr. Batt was engaged to start on the High Line on Monday morning as brakesman, and on Saturday he went at his own leisure (not being on shift) to practise at his new job.

He made what is called a flying switch when he pulled the pin uncoupling the engine. By some cause or other he lost his balance and fell in front of the first car. Several cars passed over him and he was dragged eight car lengths to the edge of the dump where he fell over with the cars. He was badly crushed and he died an hour after. An inquest was not neccessary.

The deceased was buried on Monday He was only a month out of the Lethbridge hospital where he was operated on for a ruptured intestine.

Several fires apparently from the right-of-way got beyond control north of the townsite's northern limits yesterday afternoon. The wind was blowing hard and the efforts of the right-of-way men were powerless to keep it under control. The wind storm blew up a shower at night and checked the progress of the fire. The fires which have been smouldering on Mount Fernie and on Proctor mountain since the last rain were fanned up into a big blaze yesterday and two mrown patches have been added to the burnt areas.

The baseball team has received an offer of $100 from the Nelson Fair management to play two games of base ball at that town in the Fair week. The boys say that the offer is not a very liberal one as it would be insufficient to pay their travelling expenses alone. They will go if the Nelson people will guarantee all expenses. These are the terms upon which the Fernie boys got the Trail team here and the expenses amounted to close on $300.

He, She— And Charles Augustus

By F. B. WRIGHT

Copyright, 1904, by T. C. McClure

Charles Augustus had had a most unpleasant day. It had commenced well enough, but had clouded over soon after he had started on his lessons about the dog and the rat and the active cat. Then Higgins had brought Miss Purvis a letter, and with it something had entered into Charles Augustus' life that he could by no means understand.

You see, Charles Augustus loved his governess greatly. She came next to his father and mother and way above the goat. Charles Augustus had quite decided to marry Miss Purvis when he grew up and had even talked over the details with the young lady herself.

The letter, when she read it, made Miss Purvis' face go all pink and beautiful, and then pale and her eyes fill with tears. Then she put the letter away in the bosom of her gown, and Charles Augustus thought that was the end of it. But it was not, for as often as he looked up from his book or slate he saw Miss Purvis reading the letter, and each time he saw tears in her eyes.

What could it be in those scrawly black marks to make people cry? He cried when he was spanked or shut up in a closet or had to do something he did not want to—but this wasn't like that. Charles Augustus could not understand this silent crying. When he cried he wanted to let the whole world know—and usually succeeded.

Later, when lessons were over, he saw Miss Purvis, through the window, writing a letter, and she was crying over that. Plainly there was something in this writing business which was decidedly unpleasant. Charles Augustus decided then and there that he would never write. Then when she had finished she went off to the village and would not let Charles Augustus go with her.

In that half hour of easy time which came when Charles Augustus had shifted from his day things into the ample lengths of his flannel pyjamas and, cuddled down into the big chair with Miss Purvis, toasted his pink toes before the fire preparatory to going bedward, he came once more across this peculiar thing which he could not understand, for Miss Purvis was strangely silent, only answering a listless yes or no to his observations on life and the curious ways of people and the idiosyncrasies of the goat. She did not take much interest even when he touched upon the many things he would give her when he became a man and they were married—the rings like mamma's and an express wagon and a jar of ginger. Though her arm drew him close when he told her how much he loved her, yet Charles Augustus was not satisfied. He felt as though something invisible were between them.

He put up a hand and turned her face toward him.

"You do love me, don't you?" he said. "And you will wait for me until I am big?"

She kissed him and told him "Yes." She would always be his sweetheart. "But I'm afraid, dear, I'll have to go away. Will you mind?"

Charles Augustus minded very much and said so, and the thought kept him awake long after he had got into his bed. Through the door he could see Miss Purvis and the fire. Then he saw her of a sudden bend forward, her face in her arms, and hear her sob.

Though he wanted to comfort her, something told Charles Augustus that Miss Purvis wanted to be let alone. At last she raised her tear stained face.

"No, it must not be!" Charles Augustus heard her say. "They would think it was for his money. It is better as it is—better for him. I must leave here as soon as I can, and, oh, I don't want to!"

Then Miss Purvis took the letter, kissed it and put it in a box on her dressing table, a box with curious patterns in mother of pearl on it, and with a queer lock that only she and Charles Augustus knew how to open.

Charles Augustus' mind started to work this thing out. This letter was the cause of Miss Purvis' feeling bad. It must be taken away—that was all about it.

The room was quiet; the fire died to a little glow of winking embers; Miss Purvis was asleep. Charles Augustus got up and got the letter. Then he hid it under the mattress and went to sleep with a lighter heart. Now Miss Purvis would be happy again, and she would not go away.

But the next day Miss Purvis was not happy. True, she did not cry, nor did she read the letter which Charles Augustus had craftily tucked inside his blouse, but yet she was not the Miss Purvis of aforetime, who laughed and sang and romped on the lawn with him. It was not the mere possession of the letter then. What was it?

"He must not come." "I must leave here." Charles Augustus remembered those words. Some one was coming then; some one who would carry Miss Purvis, the beloved, away. Charles Augustus thought of giants and gypsies and grew horribly alive to the exigencies of the occasion. His father and mother were away, so he could not go to them for advice.

There was only one man in Charles Augustus' confidence, and he was very big and strong and knew everything. Next to the goat, who was manifestly inadequate under the circumstances, Charles Augustus adored this man. He lived in a house by himself, a long way off beyond the most distant trees.

Charles Augustus saw the man that afternoon. He had come to call, but Miss Purvis had excused herself. She had a headache, she said. Now, the man, whose name was Mr. Houghton, was going down the drive with great strides, and so intent on his own thoughts that he did not hear Charles Augustus call to him. It took him a long time to catch up with the man. Indeed it did not happen until the latter had turned off into the woods and Charles Augustus' hat had been lost on the road and his legs much scratched with briers. Then Charles Augustus told his story—about the letter and how she had kissed it and yet cried and was going away.

"And she said 'I can't! I can't!' like that," ended Charles Augustus. "'He mustn't never know,' she said, and 'he mustn't never come here.'"

What wasn't he to know, and who was he, and did Mr. Houghton think it was a giant that was coming to carry Miss Purvis off? Then Charles Augustus took the letter from his blouse—and then the man knew.

"I'm afraid it is a giant," said Mr. Houghton gravely, "and it's lucky I heard of it in time, because I was going away tomorrow. But now"—

"But now?" said Charles Augustus anxiously.

"Now I think I'll go right back to the house with you."

"And you won't let her be tooken—I mean taked—away?" said Charles Augustus.

"No, she isn't going away," the man replied—"at least not very far."

They got out into the road and started back, Charles Augustus' hand in that of his friend and his small shoes plowing through the dust. And then, at a turn in the road, they came suddenly on Miss Purvis, very white and scared looking and carrying Charles Augustus' hat. "Charlie," she cried, "I thought you were lost!"

Charles Augustus plunged toward her. "I tolded him!" he cried triumphantly. "I've told him all about the letter and how you cried because the giant was going to carry you off, and he says the giant shan't and that you are going to live here happily ever after, amen, like people do in fairy stories. And you are, ain't you?"

Miss Purvis looked at the man a second, and then her face came all pink—and then she said "Yes."

It was a very happy walk back home to Charles Augustus, except that he for some reason could not manage to walk between his two friends and hold both their hands at the same time, a thing which Charles Augustus particularly wished.

Skeptic and Pessimist.

Mr. Dolan looked at his visitor with an expression of confirmed opposition, and during the friend's argument he further emphasized his disagreement by an occasional emphatic shake of the head.

"Naw, I don't hold wid loife insurance companies, nor yet wid savings banks," he said stubbornly. "A cousin o' me own, he had his loife insured for the benefit o' his widdy, an' afther all he nivver had one, for 'twas him lived to be eighty, an' her that doied.

"Wid banks it's just the other way," he continued. "For there was me own uncle, he put money in the bank and he kept sticking it in and sticking it in in the hopes that whin old age come he cud take it out gradual loike and enj'y himself, and instid o' that 'twas him that had the widdy befoore he touched sixty-two! Hands Were Shaking Already.

An American actor once attended a duel in Paris for the sole purpose of studying the demeanor of the duelists. He was preparing at the time to act a duelist's role in a new play.

Discussing this combat afterward, he said:

"I confess that I learned very little from it. The men were too well scared to teach me anything that would have been of service in a serious stage duel. They reminded me, in fact, of a story that Edwin Booth used to tell.

"This story concerns two principals who, after they had exchanged shots harmlessly, were urged by their seconds to shake hands. They were about to do so when a bystander, who had looked on at their duel despite their requests that he depart, exclaimed in a disgusted tone:

"'It's hardly necessary for them to shake hands. Their hands have been shaking this half hour.'"

J. J. YOUNG, M. L. A.

JOHN J. YOUNG, M. L. A., Editor and Proprietor of the Calgary Herald.

While it is true that some men are destined from their cradles for certain lines of work, and make such success in them as they could by no possibility achieve in any others, there is nevertheless much ground for belief that men of the right stamp will succeed in any occupation—not requiring special physical adaptation—and that the surest evidence of a man's fitness to rule in one field is his success in another. The fact is also sometimes lost sight of, in this age of specialization and concentration, that versatility is, after all, the greatest test of ability. In new countries, where conditions are changing rapidly and institutions are growing quickly, the man of greatest adaptability and energy is invariably the man who rises most steadily.

A striking illustration of this can be found in the person of John J. Young, proprietor and editor of the Calgary Herald. In many important respects Mr. Young is one of the most representative men, not merely in western Canadian newspaper work, but in the whole Canadian West. He possesses qualities that have made him successful, not alone in the profession to which his major energies have been devoted, but in many other departments of activity, in which unremitting and lifelong application is usually the price paid for success.

Mr. Young's characteristics are those most readily acknowledged and appreciated by Westerners. He is level-headed, ready-witted and broad-minded. His personality is both interesting and attractive. Of average height, slender build and quiet, alert courtesy of manner, he impresses one at first sight as being both a man of wide outlook and sympathy, of culture and refinement, and of a shrewd practical knowledge of affairs. Nor would the impression created be far wide of the mark, for few in the West have a more balanced mental development than the Calgary Herald's editor. The mere recital of a few of his activities shows how many phased he is. He is an editor, a musician, a miner, a dealer in real estate, a politician, a rancher, president of several companies, and a foremost citizen of his town. On the aesthetic, the intellectual and the practical sides of human nature it will therefore be admitted that he has unusual endowments.

Mr. Young is a fine example of what can be made in Canada of an Englishman who is caught young. He is a Midlander by birth, having been born in Nottinghamshire in 1868. In 1884, a boy of 16, he came to Western Canada, and "roughed it" for a couple of years. He quickly assimilated Canadian ways, and adopted the Canadian viewpoint, and almost naturally gravitated to newspaper work. While in Regina he had been noticed by Nicholas Flood Davin, whose interest to detect ability was unerring, and occasionally Mr. Young contributed items and brief articles to the Regina Leader, of which the brilliant Irishman was founder. When, in 1887, Davin was elected to the Dominion Commons, he cast about for a man to take charge of the Leader during his absence at Ottawa. His choice fell on Mr. Young, then a youth of 17. And, though the editor whose locum tenems he was was admitted throughout the length and breadth of the Dominion to be one of the most forceful, vigorous and versatile men of Canada, and as a writer perhaps without a superior, it is nevertheless true that the boy-editor who occupied his seat in the Leader office in Regina proved himself a phenomenally capable understudy. Was ever the leading paper of a capital city in Canada edited before by a boy of seventeen? Certainly, if so, no such paper was better edited. The local matter was bright and the editorial matter was weighty. Throughout the West—and, indeed, the East—the Leader was accepted as voicing the thought and feeling of an important and influential section of Western opinion. Mr. Young's management of the Leader cannot be praised in higher terms than by saying that the long and frequent absences of its gifted owner made no appreciable difference to either its appearance or its reputation. Mr. Young stayed with the Leader until 1892, when, with characteristic self-chance, he went to Moosomin, and organized a company to buy out the Courier and the Journal, the two papers there existing at that time. Having bought them he consolidated them, establishing in their stead the Spectator, which, from the date of its first appearance until the present time, has been one of the most thoughtful, observant and sane papers in the West. Like all things else of which Mr. Young had the management, it was a prosperous undertaking from the start. Two years later Mr. Young, having managed successful newspaper enterprises in two Territorial towns, looked for larger worlds to conquer, and, in partnership with C. A. Magrath of Lethbridge, bought the Herald plant at Calgary. Mr. Young's organizing ability soon got busy again, and a few months afterwards he formed a company and bought out his partner.

From the time that Mr. Young took hold of the enterprise the progress of the Herald has kept pace with the growth of Calgary and of the West. Alberta's biggest town occupies a strategic position, being distant from other large newspaper centres, located at important railway junctions, and with an important, enterprising and growing town for its immediate constituency. To all these advantages the Herald fell heir, and of all of them its editor quickly availed himself, and as a result it stands to-day practically out of the reach of competition. One needs to go far afield to find a paper as good as the Herald published in a town no larger than Calgary. And its sphere of influence is by no means limited to the district of news of which it publishes. Its opinions on current events are noted and commented on throughout the Dominion as setting forth the sentiment of the western section of the party it supports. The Herald, like its editor, is Conservative, and of late years has been a rallying point to the supporters of that party. Its criticisms of the Liberal administration at Ottawa—sometimes kindly, sometimes caustic, sometimes facetious—are widely quoted by its friends and rebutted by its opponents, and are the best of all possible proofs of the paper's influence.

Mr. Young has been for some time the sole proprietor of the Herald, having bought out the other stockholders. The paper is magnificently housed in a building costing $60,000—also the property of its proprietor—and has conveniences and facilities that indicate the energy of its management, and their determination to continue to keep ahead in the race for supremacy.

Mr. Young, as before stated, has by no means devoted the whole of his time to his newspaper enterprises. He has operated largely, and very successfully, in British Columbia mines. Many of his ventures in this direction have brought him large sums. If rumor reports correctly only one of the many on which he entered turned out disastrously—that in which he, with a bank manager and certain other equally prominent Calgary men, was induced to purchase a Brick, the product of a gold mine of extraordinary richness. There are many versions of the story, but all agree that the metal did not assay up to standard, that the vendor disappeared suddenly after receiving the proceeds, and that the purchasers were all much wiser—and angrier—men. But this is, with every man, no unique experience. Which of us, in his time, has not been gold-bricked? Indeed he has much to be thankful for if in his lifetime he has been gold-bricked only once.

In addition to his mining interests, Mr. Young is connected with other important western enterprises, commercial and otherwise. He has a fine ranch, fully stocked, and does considerable business in real estate.

In 1901 Mr. Young was elected as member for East Calgary to the Territorial Legislature, and in the two years and more he has served in that capacity he has achieved considerable reputation as a clear thinking, practical business representative. Being yet but a young man, it seems destined that he will span each year a larger arc in the public affairs of the Territories—a sphere in which his conspicuous administrative ability will find both scope and opportunity.

The esteem in which Mr. Young is held by his fellow editors in the West is testified by the fact that he was one of the first elected to office by the Western Canada Press Association, of which he was one of the early presidents. He is social and domestic in his tastes, preferring above all pleasures a cigar and a chat with a friend or the society of his family—he has four children—at his beautiful home in Calgary. Another pleasure he has—that almost amounts to a passion—is music. He has been a church organist continuously since he was nine years old.

Bold Court Jesters.

"You are ready enough to point your satire at other people's faults," Queen Bess once said to Clod, one of the court jesters, "but you never say a word about mine." "Ah," exclaimed Clod, "why should I waste time in reminding your majesty of your faults, seeing that they are in everybody's mouth?"

Patch, one of Henry VIII.'s fools, once sought permission to demand an egg from every husband who was dissatisfied with his wife. No sooner had the king granted his request than Patch proceeded to demand the first egg from him, saying, "Your grace belongs to the class of husbands on whom I am entitled to make levy."

Japanese Myths.

Japanese believe in more mythical creatures than any other people on the globe, civilized or savage. Among these are serpents 800 feet long and large enough to swallow an elephant, foxes with eight legs, monkeys with four ears and fishes with ten heads attached to one body. They also believe in the existence of a crane which, after it has lived for 600 years, has no need of any sustenance except water.

A CRANK ON TEA.

Cyrus W. Field's Encounter With an Expert Tea Taster.

It may be that the millionaire is no more eccentric than humbler mortals, and yet in the fierce white light of publicity it often seems so. Cyrus W. Field was never given to any of the expensive hobbies of other rich men. He did not dote on horses or yachts or pictures. But Mr. Field did like tea. He used to say there was only one man of his acquaintance who knew how to brew it, and that man was "Old Field." The father of the submarine cable used to travel a great deal by rail, but he never went anywhere without his favorite brand of tea and his personal utensils for brewing it.

Mr. Field seldom traveled in his private car, and none of his retinue of servants ever made tea for him. From his berth in the Pullman he rose early, as at home, and it was not an uncommon sight to see the gray old philanthropist half dressed and stirring about in a buffet car at daylight, seeking hot water with which to brew his choice young Hyson, a canister of which was invariably a part of his baggage.

One day when Mr. Field was going through Front street he was attracted by a tea taster who was sipping the contents of a number of small cups. Mr. Field watched the man carefully and observed his method of using boiling water. Finally he entered the place and said to the expert: "How long have you been in this business?"

"Thirty-one years," said the tea taster, who was enjoying an annual income of about $20,000.

"Well, you had better give it up," remarked Mr. Field frankly. "You don't know how to make tea and you are too old to learn. Let me brew some of that stuff for you."

The aged philanthropist poured water on some leaves which he took from a paper in his pocket, let it draw for a few seconds and invited the tea taster to test it. But the expert spat the stuff out. "Worst ever!" was his comment. "Not even properly brewed." Then Mr. Field, who was a sensitive man, turned on his heel and walked away, muttering, "If you are an expert, the good Lord help some of our tea drinkers."

But when the millionaire was out of sight the tea taster roared with laughter and said to one of the clerks: "That was old Field. He's a crank on tea. Pays $9 a pound for it, and I told him it was like dishwater."

A Good Doctor.

One day in Shanghai, says a writer in the Chicago Record-Herald, when I was feeling sick, I called a Chinaman to me and said, "John, do you have good doctors in China?"

"Good doctors!" he exclaimed. "China have best doctors in wo'ld."

"Eudon, over there," I said, pointing to a house covered with a doctor's signs, "do you call him a good doctor?"

"Eudon good doctor!" he exclaimed. "He great! He best doctor in China. He save my life once!"

"You don't say so!" I said. "How was it?"

"Me velly sick," he said confidentially. "Me callee Dr. Han Kou. Givee some medicine. Get velly, velly sick! Me call Dr. Sam Sing. Givee more medicine. Me grow worse. Going to die! Blimeby call Dr. Eudon. He no got time, no come. He savee my life!"

Siwash Fishing.

The Siwash Indians on Puget sound make their living principally by fishing, but the Siwash buck does not condescend to go out for his evening meal of smelt or sardines with a hook and line as the white man does; he takes a long pole and for two feet from each end he makes a sort of comb of it by driving through it long, tin French nails, then he launches his canoe and goes out for a pleasant sail. He paddles easily with the pole, and every few minutes he pulls up a fish impaled on the nails. With a shake he drops it inboard and then calmly continues his paddling.

A Young Logician.

Jennie's mother was expecting company, but just before train time, says What to Eat, a telegram arrived which read: "Missed train. Will start same time tomorrow."

Jennie rushed home from school expecting to see the guest, but instead was shown the message. After reading it laboriously and carefully through she exclaimed, "Why, mamma, if she starts at the same time tomorrow she will miss the train again!"

A LUCKY WOMAN.

How Good Health Came to Mrs. Deschesne After Much Suffering.

Mrs. Abraham Deschesne, wife of a well known farmer at St. Leon le Grand, Que., considers herself a lucky woman. And she has good cause, as the following interview will show: "I was badly run down and very nervous. Each day brought its share of household duties, but I was too weak to perform them. My nerves were in a terrible condition. I could not sleep and the least sound would startle me. I tried several medicines and tonic wines, but none of them helped me. In fact I was continually growing worse, and began to despair of ever getting well again. One day a friend called to see me and strongly advised me to try Dr. Williams Pink Pills. I decided to do so, and it was not long before they began to help me. I gained in strength from day to day; my nerves became strong and quiet, and after using about a half dozen boxes of the pills I was fully restored to my old-time health and cheerfulness. I now think Dr. Williams Pink Pills an ideal medicine for weak women."

Dr. Williams Pink Pills feed the nerves with new, rich red blood, thus strengthening and soothing them, and curing such nerve troubles as neuralgia, St. Vitus dance, partial paralysis and locomotor ataxia. These pills cure also all troubles due to poor and watery blood, including the special ailments of women. Get the genuine with the full name, "Dr. Williams Pink Pills for Pale People," on the wrapper around each box. Sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 50 cents a box, or six bottles for $2.50 from the Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Inherited.

They were jollying the man about his enormous appetite, but he kept "putting away," undisturbed by the taunts. Finally he said in defense: "Well, you see, I take after both my father and my mother. One ate a long while and the other ate a great deal."

Wilson's Fly Pads. No dead flies dropping about when properly used.

Facts About Oranges.

The riper an orange gets the more yellow it becomes. A dealer's test for a perfect orange is to press it as you would a hard rubber ball. If you can make a slight indentation by pressing hard, but the pulp remains firm enough to rebound, the orange is all right.

Russet oranges are rich, but liable to spoil. When buying oranges by the box (and this is the best plan where you use a good many) get a repacked box instead of an original one. Thin skinned, bright colored oranges are the best. While the California, Florida and Arizona fruit are altogether the best for eating out of hand or on the table, the foreign oranges, Messina or Sicily, are considered best for marmalade.

Wilson's Fly Pads. Each 10c. packet will kill more flies than can be caught on 300 sheets of sticky paper, costing $15.

The Modern Plow.

Thomas Jefferson invented the modern plow. There were plows, of course, thousands of years before the time of the Sage of Monticello, but he first laid down the mathematical principles that underlie the construction of the plow and so enabled any blacksmith to make one. A plow consists of two wedges, a cutting and a lifting wedge, and Jefferson discovered and enunciated the proportions of each and the relations each bore to the other. Before his day no two smiths made plows alike. Now they are all made in accordance with a mathematical formula.

Superfluous Hair

Removed by the New Principle.

De Miracle

It is better than electricity, because it does not scar or produce a new growth. Better than X-ray, because it does not burn, scar or paralyze the tissues under the skin. Better than depilatories, because it is not poisonous; therefore, it will not cause blood poisoning, or produce eczema, which is so common with depilatories, and does not break off the hair, thereby increasing its growth.

Electrolysis, X-ray or depilatories are offered you on the bare word of the operators and manufacturers. De MIRACLE is not. It is the only method which is indorsed by physicians, surgeons, dermatologists, medical journals and prominent magazines.

De MIRACLE will be mailed to any address, sealed, in plain wrapper, on receipt of $1.00. Your money back without question (no red tape) if it fails to do all that is claimed for it.

MARKET REPORT

Compiled by Thompson Sons & Co.

Winnipeg, Thursday, Sept. 1, 1904.

WHEAT—During the past week the wheat markets have exhibited a somewhat steadier course than they did the two weeks previous. The speculative markets in the States have not been wanting in activity, but the fluctuations in prices have not been so violent, and the general tone has been calmer. There has, nevertheless, been a fair recovery in price from the decline which had taken place towards the end of last week, and at this writing prices show an advance of around 4c. to 4½c. over the quotations of a week ago—that is in the American markets. In the Winnipeg market Manitoba wheat shows only an advance of 2c. on cash wheat, 1½c. on October and 1⅜c. on May. The general outlook is that prices should not decline much from present level for many months to come, but a great deal depends on the kind of weather we may have over the Northwest during September. With no interruption to harvesting and thrashing operations the influence would be to keep markets steady, and the free movement of new wheat might cause prices to ease off, because the marketing of large quantities of wheat means that some one must find money to take it over and carry so much of it, until millers need it; and it is quite a different proposition paying cash for wheat around a dollar per bushel to what it is when the price is around, say, 70c. Millers generally can only stock up moderately on new wheat at a dollar no matter what the prospect of the yield may be; therefore, if the farmer presses his wheat for sale early prices would naturally decline some. On the other hand, should the thrashing of the crop give incontrovertible evidence that the aggregate in quantity of milling wheat is actually as low as most crop experts put it, then speculative operations which act very quickly either on sentiment or evidence, would boom prices higher than we have yet seen. No approach to the possibilities which confront wheat prices at the present time has occurred since the Leiter boom in 1897-98. In the meantime there is no scarcity of wheat or flour to satisfy from day to day bread requirements. Prices have been raised through speculative operations working on the apprehension as to future supply, and yet so far as we have noticed no one has suggested that there will not be bread enough to go around during the coming twelve months. With a continuance of high prices for wheat and the comparatively low prices for corn and other grains, the energy and genius of corn millmen and others will be stimulated to push the sale of cheap and palatable products, which in large centres of laboring populations will gradually supplant to more or less extent expensive wheat flour, and contribute to lessen consumption of it. At present prices no wheat will be used as animal food, and waste will be almost eliminated. Then dollar wheat will lead to increased acreage, for such prices in connection with the immense areas of low-priced lands available for wheat production, with modern machinery for cultivation and modern facilities for movement and transit, constitute a wheat farm in the new lands of Argentina or the Canadian Northwest a veritable bonanza. Thus we may have high-priced wheat for several months, but it is likely to be more through the action of speculative operations than because of actual scarcity of breadstuffs. While speculative markets have continued active, trade in actual wheat and flour is quiet, everyone engaged therein only working from hand to mouth. The movement of wheat in the States from first hands has been larger during the last month than for same time last year, being stimulated, no doubt, by present prices. World's shipments last week showed some increase, but were not large, and visible stocks show almost no change on the week. There is nothing new regarding crops. The conflict of opinion as to rust damage over the American and Canadian Northwest continues, and the thrasher, with movement and inspection, will have to decide. New crops in Argentina and Australia report continued favorable progress, and the new winter wheat crop in the States is being planted under favorable conditions, and promises good increase in acreage. The visible supply decreased last week 336,000 bushels, against a decrease of 235,000 bushels the previous week, and an increase of 493,000 bushels last year. The world's shipments were 9,752,000 bushels, against 8,376,000 bushels the previous week, and 8,871,000 bushels last year. The world's visible supply, according to Bradstreets, increased 1,149,000 bus. against a decrease of 130,000 bus. the previous week and an increase of 905,000 bushels last year.

Trade in Manitoba wheat has been fairly active during the week in a speculative way for future delivery, prices following the fluctuations in the American markets. Cash trade, however, is nearly at a standstill for lack of supply. The tail end of last crop is practically run out and high prices cannot draw forward any more. Nominal prices for cash wheat at close of prices to-day are: 1 Northern, $1.03½; 2 Nor., $1.00½; 3 Nor., 96½c.; No. 4 wheat, 86c.; feed wheat, 67c., and No. 2 feed, 61c.; that is for spot or delivery, say, next week. On the option market September wheat closed at $1.03, October $1.02⅞, May $1.03¾. All prices are for in store Fort William and Port Arthur.

BRITISH FARM IMPLEMENTS.

Richard Jibb writes to the Times, says a cable from London, and anticipates that the Chamberlain tariff scheme would give cheaper machinery to British farmers. He found that Canada, in spite of her 25 per cent. duty on agricultural machinery, possesses the largest implement works under the British flag, and supplied its farmers cheaper machinery than any other country in the empire. The dearest country for machinery was free trade New South Wales before federation.

MUNROE GETS SIX THOUSAND DOLLARS.

The gross receipts of the Jeffries-Munroe fight were $21,800, of which Jeffries received $9,156 and Munroe $6,104, the remainder going to the promoter of the fight. All who witnessed the contest agree that the champion is in a class by himself, and that no living pugilist is likely to dispute his right to the title. Throughout the round and forty-five seconds that the fight lasted, Jeffries was perfectly calm and entirely at his ease, while Munroe was pale and evidently nervous. Never for a moment did Munroe stand the slightest chance to win. Had not Referee Graney interfered as Jeffries was preparing to land the decisive blow, the bout might have ended in a tragedy. While disappointed at the brevity of the fight, which some men paid $20 to see, sporting men admit that it was on the level and the best man won.

WILL NOT MEDIATE.

The following cable has been received from Paris: The French Government is not aware of any present movement for mediating in the war. This statement comes from the highest official quarters and is made in response to inquiries regarding renewed reports of peace movements.

One report gives sensational prominence to a statement attributed to a high French official that Emperor William intends to offer Russia Germany's good offices. The Foreign Office, which is the most authoritative source of official information, is not aware of such a movement, and does not credit its reality. Another report, in a London daily newspaper, says that France is about to offer Russia her mediation. The officials here specifically deny that France is taking any step and they offer the following explanation as to such reports. The Petit Parisian recently published an editorial favoring European meditation, which was published throughout Europe. The fact is that France is ready and anxious to offer mediation when there is the slightest chance that it would be acceptable, but Foreign Minister Delcasse and other officials regretfully feel that no such effort can succeed at the present time.

YELLOW DANGER AGAIN.

However, there is a strong official opinion growing that France, Great Britain and the United States should put their shoulders together to avert the increasing danger of Japan's victory being so great that she may become the dominant power in the Far East. A leading official says: "Japan is making terrible sacrifices of men and money with a prospect of securing an overwhelming victory. This sacrifice is great, and it threatens to give Japan a prepondering position in the Far East, such as no one anticipated when the war began. Therefore, the war no longer concerns Japan and Russia, but all the countries having interests in the Far East, particularly Great Britain, the United States and France, who should together adopt means to stop the war before either party secures such an overshadowing vistory as to make either incontestably master of the Far East."

PEACE ONLY FOLLOWS A RUSSIAN VICTORY.

A cable from London in reference to the above says: In connection with the revival of the rumors of mediation it is stated that Emperor Nicholas only recently announced in the most positive terms that he would not permit peace negotiations even should Port Arthur fall, and General Kuropatkin be driven back to Harbin. This fact, well understood in official circles, has prevented the British Government from taking any steps in the direction of mediation. It is known here that Germany understands this attitude of the Czar as well as Great Britain and the other powers. Therefore the reports from Paris that Emperor William is prepared to suggest peace are dismissed as groundless for the present at least. If General Kuropatkin, however, should win a decisive victory at Liao Yang, which in a measure would restore Russian prestige, it is believed here that the restoration of peace would undoubtedly be materially facilitated.

TWO KILLED BY AUTOMOBILE.

Blinded by the dust thrown by the swiftly moving machine of A. C. Webb, of Toledo, Barney Oldfield, of Cleveland, lost control of his machine in a false start of the fifth event of the World's Fair automobile speed contest, and crashing through the outer fence of the course instantly killed John Scott, a watchman, and inflicted injuries on Nathan Montgomery, a negro, from which he died a few hours later. Oldfield was painfully injured, and his machine was completely demolished. Shortly after passing the first turn of the track Webb secured the lead by a narrow margin, and the men were in relatively the same position when passing the three-quarter pole. In making the turn Webb's machine skidded, and raised a blinding cloud of dust that completely blinded Oldfield and half smothered him. Not being able to see that he had completed the turn, Oldfield continued his course and crashed through the fence. Oldfield was not seriously injured, and shortly afterward he was driven to the clubhouse in an auto.

LORD STRATHCONA BUYS HISTORIC ISLANDS.

Lord Strathcona has purchased the Colonsay estates of the Inner Hebrides group belonging to the late Major-General Sir John McNeill, V. C. The islands have been in the possession of the McNeill family for 200 years, and are 12 miles long and contain about 12,000 acres, and are famous for their Highland cattle and interesting ecclesiastical ruins, which tradition says, that St. Columbus settled here before going to Iona. The Cronsay cross is said to be the finest example of early Christian sculpture in the west Highlands.

TO SETTLE LAW OF CONTRABAND.

A cable from St. Petersburg says: A joint commission representing the foreign and marine ministeries, to be presided over by Prof. Demartens, professor of international law at the University of St. Petersburg, will sit forthwith to consider the distinction between conditional and absolute contraband of war. It is expected that the result will be communicated to the British and American ambassadors by the end of the week, and that it will tend to the removal of the existing causes of friction.

SNOW IN SUNNY ITALY.

A cable from Rome says that snow has fallen on the Appenines, where it has reached a depth of five inches. The temperature is low.

BUILDING TRADES COMPLETELY TIED UP IN TORONTO.

The Toronto Builders' Exchange have refused to confer with the Masons' and Bricklayers Union over the laborers' demands. A strike is now on in the building trades which will keep 1,700 men idle. The carpenters, plasters and roofers have caught up to the bricklayers on all big jobs, and they will soon be idle too. The Toronto building trade is completely tied up. Both sides are determined, and a long and bitter struggle appears inevitable.

LUMBER RATES FROM B. C.

Alleging discrimination by the C. P. R. in the matter of freight rates on cedar from the coast to Winnipeg, says a Vancouver despatch, the British Columbia Lumber and Shingle Association took up several hours on Monday before the Railway Commission. W. D. Miller, of Toronto, manager of the transportation department of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, said the local lumber section of the association made complaint on the eastbound freights on lumber and shingles. The rate on all lumber from the mountain mills of British Columbia to Winnipeg was 33c. per hundred, but from the coast it was 40c. for fir and 50c. for cedar. He claimed it to be evident that the C. P. R. was working under some kind of an agreement with the northern American lines. To Chairman Blair Mr. Miller said that the parties would be satisfied if the rates on fir and cedar were equalized. The commissioners will go to New Westminster, and the C. P. R. will give evidence in rebuttal of that tendered by the lumbermen.

WINNIPEG RANKS RIGHT AT THE TOP.

An Ottawa despatch says: The increase in the Ottawa postoffice revenue for the past year has resulted in an advance of salary from $3,000 to $3,200 for the postmaster, James A. Gouin. This is the statutory pay to postmasters in offices with a revenue between $100,000 and $150,000. The receipts in Ottawa last year were $112,918 for postage collections. The maximum of $4,000 is now being paid in Toronto, Montreal and Winnipeg, whose collections exceed $250,000. The growth of post office business in Winnipeg, where last year's collections totalled $256,000, accounts for its ranking among the three foremost mailing centres in Canada. Toronto is at the million dollar mark, while Montreal is a close second.

R. H. McGREEVY'S DEATH.

The death is announced from St. Patrick's, near River Du Loup, Que., of R. H. McGreevy, ex-M. P. for Quebec West. The deceased was one of the contractors for the construction of the Intercolonial Railway on the North Shore railway, and of the Quebec harbor works. Some years ago he was also a member of the Quebec city council. The deceased was in his seventieth year.

SIR CHARLES' FIFTIETH TRIP.

The Liverpool Mercury says Sir Charles Tupper made a proud boast on sailing Saturday that he had crossed the ocean fifty times. At the same time he expressed the hope that he would be spared to cross it several times more. The Mercury adds that Sir Charles can look back to a most distinguished career, one which has been of immense benefit to the Dominion.

TRADE IN JAPAN AWAITS BIG VICTORY.

Alex. McLean, Canadian trade agent for Japan, has sent a second report to Ottawa. He says that the war has not affected business seriously, but everything hinges on the fall of Port Arthur, when a big revival is expected. The commissioner at Cape Town reports dullness and poor prospects.

BRANTFORD MAN FOUND DEAD.

James Wilkes, ex-city treasurer of Brantford, died Monday morning, aged 95. He leaves a wife and five children: George, A. J., and Miss Annie Wilkes, of Brantford; James C. Wilkes of Mount Forrest, and Walter A. Wilkes, of Winnipeg.

CANADA'S TRADE RETURNS.

The complete trade returns for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904, have just been completed. They show that Canada's trade last year was $472,733,000 against $455,064,000 the year previous, and $239,025,000 in 1894.

NEW RAILWAY FOR VANCOUVER ISLAND.

The deal is completed for the construction of a railway to tap the Flathead Valley coal and oil fields, says a despatch from Vancouver. The owners of the mineral property gave 64,000 acres to the railway company.

A proclamation was issued at Ottawa last week bringing into force the Act of 1903 imposing a duty of $7 per ton on steel rails. The duty was to take effect when satisfactory evidence was furnished to the government that rails of the best quality were being made in sufficient quantity to supply the ordinary demand. A rail mill is now in successful operation. The duty is subject to the deduction under the British preferential tariff, and will not apply to any rails actually contracted for abroad prior to this date, but such rails must be imported into Canada not later than November 30th, 1904, and must be laid on the track not later than February 28, 1906.

THE G. T. P. WANTS $2,000,000 WORTH.

A despatch from New York says: Grand Trunk Pacific sponsors have sent out enquiries for steel rails for 1905 delivery, estimated at 100,000 tons. It is considered likely that the entire tonnage may be given to American mills, because it is manifestly impossible for Canadian rail makers to meet the demand. The new Canadian transcontinental project is so well assured that it may need all the rails included in the inquiry before the end of 1905. It is willing to pay for American rails $20 per ton, which would make the amount of rails it wants worth $2,000,000 to the steel company securing it.

C. P. R. BUYS 65,000 TONS.

Another despatch from New York states that announcement has been made of the closing of a big contract for steel rails by the Canadian Pacific railroad. The contract is the largest made in recent months, and is for 65,000 tons. It will be divided by the United States Steel corporation and the Pennsylvania Steel Company. The official statement was to the effect that the sale had been made at the regular pool price, which is $28 per ton, but this is doubted in well informed quarters, as it is well known that rails have heretofore been sold to Canadian consumers on the basis of rails for export, which means at about $22 a ton. In steel circles the belief is expressed that the present order was contracted for at a price not far removed from $22 a ton.

NEW BLAST FURNACE IN NOVA SCOTIA.

The Nova Scotia Steel & Coal Company blew in their first blast furnace at their plant at Sydney Mines the other day. This furnace was commenced two years ago, and has been most carefully built. It is in charge of William Aiken, manager for many years of the company's plant at Ferrona, N. S. It has 3,250 tons' capacity, considerably larger than the furnaces of the Dominion Iron & Steel Company at Sydney. Starting off this furnace will give the company, in the course of a few weeks, an abundant supply of pig iron, which, since the suspension of operations at Ferrona, has been very limited. The works at Trenton for that reason are being run on a reduced scale in order not to exhaust the supply of pig iron until the new furnace was started.

APPLY TELEPHONE SYSTEM ON TRAINS.

The Canadian Pacific Railway authorities have been experimenting for some time past with a train telephone system, which is now perfected, and which they have decided to adopt generally. Each baggage car and each freight van will be equipped with a telephone, a long wire and a hook, which is simply hooked on to a telegraph wire at any point, and the dispatchers office at Montreal can be communicated with instantly without interfering with the wire being used in telegraphing, says a despatch from Brockville. The great advantage will be that in case of trouble the trainmen can communicate with the despatcher, and he can not only protect the train, but send assistance promptly.

TWO ACCIDENTS AT FORT WILLIAM.

Two serious accidents occurred on Saturday at Fort William, on the C. P. R. works there, one of which resulted fatally. J. Porkis, an Italian workman on the coal handling plant fell from the bridge on a pile of coal beneath, thirty-five feet, fracturing his skull at the base of the brain and breaking several ribs. The unfortunate man was taken to the McKellar Memorial hospital, where he died from the effects of his injuries. The other accident occurred at elevator "D," where Frank Mazza was caught by a rope and drawn on a rope pulley, resulting in breaking the man's leg below the knee.

LITTLE GIRL KILLED BY TRAIN.

Maud Howell, 11 years of age, of Bathurst street, Toronto, was instantly killed, and a man named Phipps, King street east, badly injured by a C. P. R. train one day last week. The child was running away from another girl, and looking round as she ran, when the train, travelling between 35 and 40 miles an hour, struck and instantly killed her. Phipps sprang forward to rescue her, but was too late, and was himself knocked down by the engine.

ROBBED AND BEAT HIS BENEFACTOR.

H. L. Hess, a market gardener of Ryckman's corner, Toronto, got out of his wagon the other night in answer to a call for help from a man lying on the road. As he leaned over the prostrate man a confederate struck him on the back of the neck, knocking him down. The two men then beat Hess and robbed him of $168.

INQUIRIES FOR RELATIVES.

The commissioner of immigration is anxious to find the present whereabouts of Douglas McDonald, from Glasgow, who arrived in Winnipeg about April 13 last; also Howard B. Collett, from England, who arrived in Winnipeg about May 9 last; and David McClelland, from Limerick, arriving July 22; also James Baker and his friend, W. Fitzhardinge, both from South Africa, in May last.

TRAIN CUTS OFF BOY'S LEG.

At Oak Lake, near Brandon, last Saturday, a young boy, Johnnie Barradell, while jumping off a moving freight train, fell, the train passing over his left leg and foot. He was taken to the Brandon Hospital, and the injured limb was amputated above the knee. He is the only child of Mr. and Mrs. E. Barradell of Oak Lake.

OLD WORLD NEWS

INTERESTING BUDGET FROM BRITAIN

The Paris correspondent of the London Times wires that, judging from resolutions passed by the departmental councils, Seine Inferieure, Ille et Pilaine and Loire Inferieure, the local fishery interests of France have not yet abandoned hope of bringing effective pressure upon the Government to secure further concessions for French fishermen before the Anglo-French convention was ratified. These departmental councils demand the repeal of the Newfoundland Bait Act, authorization for French fishermen to purchase bait along the whole of the Newfoundland coast, the right to erect establishments for the curing of fish and lobsters on the French shore. The Depeche Coloninal of Paris, commenting on these resolutions, contends that British maintenance of the Bait Act is incompatible with the sentiments which ought to inspire the British people about the contract of a friendly agreement with France. It deprives the French of the advantage they ought legitimately to expect from the cod fishery, which can only be made profitable by use. Though bait is to be found in abundance along the Newfoundland coast, the prohibition to fish within the mouths of rivers renders the capture of bait almost impossible. The Journal considers considers these, and the prohibition of fixed nets, to constitute the real obstacles of the French acceptance of the convention as far as the French shore is concerned.

SEARCHING FOR VOLUNTEER SHIPS.

It is stated on good authority that the British cruisers sent to search for the Russian volunteer cruisers Smolensk and St. Petersburg have overhauled at least one af these vessels, says a cable from London. The utmost reticence is maintained at the admiralty, and at this hour no official confirmation of the statement has been given out. The admiralty does not confirm the statement, but issued the following: "The Russian Government having requested His Majesty's Government to take steps to deliver an urgent message to the Smolensk and St. Petersburg, belonging to the Russian volunteer fleet now in South African waters, the commander-in-chief of the Cape of Good Hope station left the Seychelles islands about August 26 in His Majesty's ship Crescent, and is proceeding southward with the cruisers Forte and Pearl with the object of communicating with the Russian vessels. His Majesty's ships Barossai and Partridge have also been directed to proceed in search of the volunteer fleet vessels. The Barossai is between Walfisch Bay and Simons Bay. The Russian message was also communicated to the commodore commanding the South Atlantic squadron, who with His Majesty's ships St. George and Brilliant is at present in the neighborhood of St. Vincent, Cape Verde Islands." The Foreign Office has no confirmation of the statement that the British cruisers have overhauled at least one of the volunteer fleet vessels.

STARVED FOR A WEEK.

H. Walter Black, a stonemason living here, says a Vancouver despatch, wandered away from his home on Mount Pleasant on Monday last during a fit of temporary insanity, and despite most diligent search was not found till Sunday night. He was then discovered in an empty shack at Aliceville, a summer camping ground near Port Moody. He was conveyed to the hospital at New Westminster as quickly as possible, but died the next morning from exposure and starvation, caused by not having any food since he left home. He was about 54 years of age and leaves a widow and grown-up family. He was a native of Lanark county, Ontario.

RUSSIA TURNS DOWN U. S.

A cable from St. Petersburg says: While Russia has not rejected the proposal of the United States to reopen negotiations looking to the unrestricted recognition of American passports, it is practically certain that she will decline, as she has heretofore done, to entertain the proposition on the ground that it involves a question of purely domestic policy, and that a compliance with the wishes of the United States would entail a complete change in the laws of the empire in so far as they affect the Jews. Upon the actual intervention of the emperor himself would seem to rest the only possible hope of a Russian agreement even to enter into negotiations on the subject with the United States.

DUNDONALD FOR CEYLON.

The Bristol Mercury says Lord Dundonald sailed Saturday to take up the command of the troops in Ceylon for about a year. The rumor is current in official circles that Lord Dundonald has been selected for the governorship and commander-in-chief of Ceylon. Nothing is known at the various offices of the steamship companies running steamers to Ceylon re Lord Dundonald having sailed or engaged passage, says a later cable.

DUNDONALD'S GUN ACCEPTED.

The Moscow correspondent of the London News World says that a letter dated Harbin, from a Russian officer, says that a battery of a new type of machine gun arrived with a carriage invented by Earl Dundonald for use in South Africa. We expect great things from it. Certainly, for handiness, it is hard to beat.

LORD GREY NOW THE NOMINEE.

It is now reported in London that Lord Grey, and not the Duke of Marlborough, is to be the new Governor-General of Canada.

What the foundation is to a building—the sole is to a shoe—basic, fundamental.

In sky-scraper, or foot-wear, the covered up base, that which is least seen is of greatest importance.

No single item in a shoe costs so much as the best sole leather, and no part can be "robbed" so easily, without revealing it to the eye.

Paint and polish cover equally the best, and the worst, sole in the finished shoe.

Wear alone tells the consumer (too late for remedy) what grade of leather has been put into it.

This is where the "Slater Shoe"—the slate frame "Slater Shoe" —steps in, to eradicate lottery.

As the Slater Shoe Makers brand their own price on the sole of every pair, they thus become directly responsible to the Wearer up to that price, for its durability and shape retention, in addition to its window appearance.

They dare not rob the vitals of the shoe to put the plunder into the mere selling points—into surface value, and finish chiefly.

Goodyear Welted and priced on the sole, $4.00, $5.00.

.. C. W. Ross, Morrissey.
.. J. C. Herdman D. D. Supt. of missions in the Synod of B. C. and Alberta.
Mr. A. K. Farquharson, Elder, Fernie.

The first session consisted of a public meeting addressed by Dr. Herdman on Home Missions. The worthy Doctor in introducing his subject briefly outlined the territory and work covered by this synod. The synod of B. C. and Alberta consists of eight Presbyteries as follows, Edmonton, Red Deer, Calgary, MacLeod Kootenay, Kamloops, New Westminster, and Victoria. These contained 165 congregations, of which 34 were self-supporting, 22 were on the augmentated list and the remainder were Mission fields. The growth of the work could be seen from the fact that over 20 new fields were opened up this year. The speaker then entertained his audience with a vivid description of one of his regular official trips over the Victoria Presbytery.

The Wednesday morning session was devoted to Bible study, Rev. M. D. McKee taking charge of the meeting. He gave an exposition of the first two chapters of Acts. This was followed by an interesting discussion in which a number of members took part.

Home Mission work was under consideration when a rather happy incident interrupted the proceedings of the court. This was the arrival of His Worship, Mayor Stork, who on behalf of the city of Fernie extended a hearty welcome to the members of the Presbytery. Mr. Fortune on behalf of the visitors heartily thanked the Mayor for his courtesy. The subject of Home Missions was then continued. Good and faithful work is being done by the various missionaries despite discouraging conditions prevailing in some of the fields.

In the afternoon considerable business of importance having been disposed of a very helpful conference was held. Rev. H. R. Grant presided and delivered a very inspiring address on the subject, "Sources of Spiritual Power". This was followed by an interesting discussion on "Church Union." All the speakers recognized the desirability of some such union but there seemed to be a feeling, among the majority at least, that the difficulties in the way could not be overcome in the immediate future.

In the evening another public meeting was held in the Church. A large congregation assembled to hear a very spirited address, by Rev. Mr. Ferguson on the subject "The Spiritual Debt we owe to the Church". Mr. Ferguson recently came from Scotland and his first impressions of Canada, its wonderful resources and its progressive people, which formed the introduction to his address, showed that Mr. Ferguson is very favorably impressed with Canada during his five months residence in the country.

The address was followed by a social hour, during which the ladies served refreshments. A hearty vote of thanks was tendered by the Presbytery to the members and adherents of Knox Church. This was responded to by the Moderator and Mr. A. Joyce. The latter referred feelingly to the resignation of Rev. D. L. Gordon.

COMMUNICATION

To the Editor of the Fernie Free Press.

Sir:—

It is almost three years since a school district was created for Morrissey. Up to the present school has been held in two small rooms, kindly lent the school board by the Coal Company. During the last two sessions of the Government appropriations have been made for a school building and yet nothing has been done. Owing to our crowding of the present building many children have been unable to attend school. Why is it that Morrissey cannot have a school? It is high time that something should be done if a school building is to erected this fall.

ANOTHER FIRE TRIAL

Long Dragged out Case Against J. A. Sloan of the G. N. R. Construction.

J. A. Sloan who has the contract for clearing the right-of-way at the Fernie end of the C. N. Southern railway, was summoned to answer a charge laid by A. McDougall of violating the Bush Fire Act. The case was begun last Saturday afternoon before G. G. Moffatt J. P. W. R. Ross appeared for the prosecution and L. P. Eckstein for the accused. The case dragged on during the afternoon and evening of Saturday, during Tuesday evening, Thursday evening and this morning. The counsel submitted their arguments this morning and His Worship reserved his decision until Monday.

Both the prosecution and the defence brought a strong array of witnesses but much of the evidence did not deal directly with case in question. In brief, the prosecution claimed the big fire that raged north of the extreme end of the right-of-way last Thursday was caused by the right-of-way burning. On that day a high wind blew and Mr. McDougall, of the Fernie Lumber Co., had all his men out fighting the fire to save the mill which was in grave jeopardy. The men succeeded in checking the flames from catching onto the slashing leading to the mill but the fire got around to the east where it has been burning ever since. The prosecution claimed that on the day before the fire the last 400 ft. was covered with unpiled slashing. The next 600 ft with piled brush. On that evening they claimed fires were smouldering on the right-of-way and the next day the flames swept over this 1000 feet stretch.

The defence denied much that was advanced by the prosecution. Many witnesses were called to prove that due precaution was taken in piling the brush and in burning the same, onlyone admitting that their fires had got off the right-of-way.

HON. D. W. HIGGINS' NEW BOOK.

Hon. D. W. Higgins is in town this week spending a few days with son, Dr. C. P. Higgins. Mr. Higgins presented us with one of the first copies printed of his new book, "The Mystic Spring and other Tales of Western Life." William Briggs, Toronto, publisher. The book is handsomely bound and beautifully illustrated, the frontispiece being an excellent photogravure of the ex-speaker and author. The book contains four hundred pages which treats of two dozen stories of typical western life in the author's masterly style. All the stories but one are based on actual fact and the whole forms a link which binds the present to the mystic past of this glorious province. The historical connection in these thrilling stories adds greatly to the intense interest they create making the book a desirable one for every Canadian home. The book is already creating a very favorable impression among Canadian readers. The first edition of two thousand copies is exhausted and the demand on the next edition, now being printed, is heavy. Mr. Dougan has been canvassing the book in this vicinity and is meeting with remarkable success. At Morrissey alone he secured 250 subscribers. Mr. Higgins is now engaged on a novel based on western life. He received flattering offers from publishers which goes to prove that his ability as a writer is being recognized.

A GREAT ATTRACTION COMING.

Manager Stork, of the Stork Opera House, Fernie, B. C., has secured for two nights Sept. 21st and 22nd, Miss Jessie Shirley and Company, one of the strongest and best stock companies playing the west. The people of Fernie are fortunate in being able to have an opportunity of seeing this company in two of the best plays in their repertoire. Manager Stork has been trying to secure this company for some time and would not have succeeded but for the fact that they were specially engaged to open the Lyric Theatre in Calgary, and after a great deal of correspondence was able to secure them for the above dates. Miss Shirley is considered one of the the best actresses on the coast, having played in all the large cities in the west for the past eight years, where her name is a household word. Her supporting company is the best that has ever appeared in B. C. and at Calgary where they opened and played at the new Lyric theatre for two weeks they have received nothing but praise for the artistic manner in which the number of plays were produced and staged. The plays which this sterling attraction will present are as follows: Wednesday night, Sept. 21st., the southern comedy drama, "The Princess of Patches" and Thursday night the 22nd inst, the celebrated society drama, "Camille.". Seats will be on sale at Bleasdell store Monday morning, Sept. 19th. Prices $1, 75 and 50 cents.

A FIRTS-CLASS JEWELRY STORE.

A. C. Liphardt is gradually getting his jewelry store into shape. Some of the fittings and fixtures have not yet arrived from the manufacturers and it may be a month before the store is finally completed to his satisfaction. Enough has been done, however, to prove that this will be one of the finest equipped and best stocked jewelry stores in western Canada and one of which the city of Fernie may well be proud. The two large show-cases are the best that are made. An immense wall-case of quartered oak weighing nearly two tons also provides a great amount of room for exhibiting goods for sale. These cases are all fitted with plate glass, in fact no glass inferior to the best plate glass is to be found on the premises. The cases are absolutely dust-proof, the sliding doors being edged with felt and run on balls and brass tracks. An eight ft. partition in sections runs along one side and across the rear end, behind which are the office, the optical room and workshop. This partition is cleverly hand-carved, and is stained and varnished to give a very handsome effect. Very expensive lead lights in this partition admit light to the rooms behind. The electrical fixtures which are being put in will greatly add to the beauty of the store at night. The cases will be lighted with many two candle power invisible incondescent lights. Many other details such as beautiful palm plants and large window mirrors might also be mentioned. The stock that Mr. Liphardt has ordered is quite in keeping with the elegance of his store surroundings. This stock will be larger and much more expensive than he carried previously. This stock will include very valuable assortments of loose diamonds and other precious stones as well as a stock of semi-precious stones. The increased show room space will be taken up with larger and more varied lines of silver and cut-glass ware. Mr. Liphardt will also devote more attention to the optical department. His optical room is well adapted for the testing of eyes and he has added several valuable optical instruments which shows that he is keeping in the front rank as an expert optican.

POSTOFFICE ROBBERY

MARTIN FUNFER, A SLAV, CAUGHT IN THE ACT.

He Opened a Registered Letter and appropriated the Contents. Other Stolen Goods in his Possession.

At half past ten last Friday evening Postmaster Johnson closed the front door of the postoffice for the night. As he was doing so he thought he would go around to the back door to see that all was safe there. He had previously locked the latter when he finished distributing the evening mail. He saw at once that something was wrong, the staple to which the padlock had been attached was pulled out and the door was open an inch or two. He immediately pulled it shut and he heard someone inside. Constable Burrows was near at hand. He was sent for and the door was opened. Inside was found a young Slavonian named Martin Funfer. He was taken to the lock-up where he was searched. On his person were found a hammer and a screw-driver with which he had effected an entrance into the postoffice, and the following goods picked up in the postoffice, a pipe and a pair of small scissors, the property of the postmaster, a sum of small change amounting to $1.20 abstracted from the till, a post customs parcel addressed to Mrs. McLaughlin, Coal Creek, a registered letter addressed to the Citizen Office, Ottawa, and a post office savings book. The registered letter had been opened and the sum of three dollars taken from it.

The preliminary hearing was given the case on Monday before L. R. Forbes. Evidence in accordance with the above facts was taken and the accused made no defence. The magistrate sent the accused for trial. He will probably be tried at the Fall Assizes at Nelson next month. The offence is a very serious one, so serious indeed that a life sentence may be attached to it.

Chief of police Warring took the prisoner to Nelson on Tuesday. He is a young married man of about 22 years of age.

SCHOOL BOARD ELECTED.

Messrs J. C. Hutchison, T. H. White and George Cody form the city's first School Board.

The nomination and election of the city's first Board of School Trustees was held at the Court House on Monday at 12 o'clock. About a dozen rate-payers were present when Mr. Rennie, the chairman, called the meeting to order and read the letter from the Superintendent of Education to the city clerk authorizing the election of a city school board to replace the board elected when the school district was a rural school district. The retiring board consisted of Messrs J. A. Rennie, (sec.), W. R. Ross, M. P. P. and T. H. White. The chairman called for nominations for the new board. The names nominated were, George Cody, J. C. Hutchison, J. A. Rennie, W. R. Ross and T. H. White. Messrs Rennie and Ross withdrew their names and at one o'clock the chairman declared the other three nominees duly elected to serve as the city school board. The instructions from the Superintendent of Education were that the one receiving the largest number of votes was to be elected to serve until Jan. 1905 and that the other two were to serve until Jan. 1906. As no ballot was required at the election this matter could not be decided in that way. It will be referred to the Department for a decision.

The Board held its first meeting on Tuesday, trustees White and Hutchison being present. Mr. White was appointed chairman and J. A. Rennie secretary. The question of the appointment of a truant officer was discussed and the matter was referred to the city council.

MOVED INTO NEW PREMISES.

N. E. Suddaby moved his drug business into his new premises in the L. T. W. block on Wednesday. Mr. Suddaby has now secured an excellent store space where he can exhibit and stock his goods to the best advantage. He has ordered a full line of the finest furniture but it will not arrive for a month or six weeks. In the meantime he will do as well as he can with the inferior furniture from the old store. When this store is finally fitted up as Mr. Suddaby is planning it, it will be one of the finest drug stores in the Kootenays.

MASTER and SLAVE

By... T. H. THORPE

Copyright, 1901, by T. H. Thorpe.

As Oakfell was mounting his horse to ride away with Father Grhe a servant of Mme. Noreau ran to him and gave him this note:

God has befriended you and your cause. I am so proud and so grateful. ESTELLE LATIOLAIS.

CHAPTER XI.

"IN A GARDEN LAY A LUTE."

"SO sweet a commendation as that you sent to me at the close of the trial, mademoiselle, had to be acknowledged in person. Those two short lines made me very happy, I assure you." Oakfell and Estelle were sitting on the veranda of the Latiolais mansion in the early evening of spring's first month. The twinkle of stars was upon the bosom of the full bayou, which was often rippled by the plunge of leaping fish. The odor of china blossom, rose and jasmine filled the air, and the whippoorwill's plaint softened the wildly joyous potpourri of a saltant mocking bird in the feathering top of a crooked kneed cypress.

"The sisters of the convent would have chided me for boldness in sending those lines to you," Estelle said, "but I could not restrain myself. And, Mr. Oakfell, I could not have survived your defeat. I am sure I could not. You must not judge me as severely as the sisters for my forwardness of speech."

"The sisters are assuredly good in intention and good in deed, but their seclusion unfits them to judge of the proper rules of life which have relation to the thoughts, desires and impulses of the great human family. The emotional struggle through which you have passed in consequence of this lawsuit he pious nuns could not understand and therefore, mademoiselle, could not appreciate. It follows that they would not be proper judges of the appropriateness of any speech or communication between you and me on the subject. As for me, the result would have been maimed without your expressions of satisfaction. They were the rewards for which I labored."

Estelle lowered her head and held silence lest attempted reply should betray her agitation and her adoration of this man. She felt sorely the loss of a mother's training, which so effectually habituates the creole girl to still the maidenly sentiments.

"My brother has not seemed to join in the general rejoicings of my friends," Oakfell remarked, to the great relief of the embarrassed girl. "But he is also somewhat of a recluse, a poet and dreamer, who loves to view men and their affairs from a height. Of late I have feared his health was impaired and have suggested to him to spend the coming summer in the mountains of Virginia. He does not take to the idea, however, and expresses a reluctance to going away from the plantation."

"I, too, have noticed his changed appearance and manner. Formerly he came often to our house; now I seldom see him, and then he appears almost unfriendly. Maybe he is in love, or maybe I have offended him," Estelle suggested.

"Not the latter, I am certain," said Oakfell, "and I do not think the former, but if such should be the case I wonder who can be the happy demoiselle?"

"I could not guess," replied Estelle, "but I do know one who ardently admires him."

"Who is she?"

"Laure Luneau. She was very jealous of the friendly visits M. Evariste formerly paid to me. Alas, she has no cause for jealousy now!"

"Do you regret it?" asked Oakfell, alarmed.

"Regret what?" Estelle looked up, surprised.

"That the Gascon gypsy girl has no cause for jealousy of you concerning Evariste."

"I regret that he visits me so seldom, but not the other." Estelle, with womanly instinct, perceived that the sting of jealousy had momentarily thrown Oakfell off his guard, and she rejoiced in this as the beginning of proof that he loved her. "But why do you call Laure a gypsy?" she queried.

"I should not have done so," Oakfell admitted, "but suppose the thought rose from her black and brown style of beauty and her connection with the uncanny fame of the doctress, to whose trade and its good will she doubtless will succeed as forced heir of her grandmother."

"Not Laure," laughed Estelle. "Religion sits too lightly on her. The doctress must be duly religious. You must not speak irreverently of the doctress, Mother Deshautelles, for she is kind to the poor and suffering and has given relief to those who could not buy it from the doctors."

"I speak irreverently of nothing that is honestly meant, however mistaken it be, and upon your avouching will respect the doctress in the future more than I have done in the past." Oakfell concluded he could not safely discuss the peculiar powers attributable to the old woman, but was loath just yet to abandon the granddaughter as a topic and added: "Laure was decidedly a campaigner against us in the suit. I wonder why she felt so interested."

"There is a strange sympathy between her and M. Quillebert, I have heard my grandfather say, and M. Quillebert has sure control over the persons whom he takes into friendship. I dread his influence over my poor grandfather and daily pray God to destroy it. He is a wicked man, whose smile is as dangerous as his frown."

"Should the supreme court sustain the judgment in Leon's case I have reason to believe Quillebert will quit this parish," Oakfell said, "and then your grandfather will be released from the hurtful intimacy."

"If the supreme court sustains the judgment!" Estelle exclaimed. "Can you doubt it, Mr. Oakfell?"

"There should be no doubt, yet the judges of the high tribunal are only men, subject to human passions, prejudices and imperfections of judgment. I have no absolute reliance upon any future event which depends upon the mental operations of men. Quillebert has taken an appeal and, I am informed, will retain a leading member of the city bar to prosecute it. However, the case cannot be heard until fall, and much may happen before that."

"Yes," said Estelle spiritedly, "you may be selected as a member of congress at Washington, as I have heard my grandfather say."

"It is true that some of my very partial friends talk in that vein, and I confess to you, mademoiselle, that I am not averse to the idea if the people deem me deserving of the honor and trust."

"Oh, do try, Mr. Oakfell! You will certainly succeed. You are in every way worthy. You will honor the people. You will make me so happy. Oh, what am I saying? Forgive my ignorance." And, sobbing her confusion, she ran into the house.

Oakfell rose and stepped toward her, but she was too fleet. He resumed his chair and meditated upon this incident, which assured him that he possessed Estelle's interest, possibly her love. His heart welled over with joy and thankfulness, and at one moment he resolved to declare himself that evening, but at the next determined to await the overcoming of troubles and passage through trials that confronted him not far off. If success were his, hers should be the trophies; if defeat—well, he would see.

"I did not mean to thank you, sir."

Having dried her eyes, but not driven the red from her cheeks, Estelle returned, leading Odette by the hand, and said:

"She asks to be allowed to come and thank you, Mr. Oakfell, for your brave defense of her fiance."

"I require no thanks. I have already my reward, I hope, for what I did in Leon's case," said Oakfell, looking anxiously at Estelle, whose eyes turned quickly away.

"I did not mean to thank you, sir. I would not know how," the girl cried, kneeling and taking his hand. "I only wanted to say that I pray for you morning, noon and night and will do so as long as I can repeat a prayer."

"This is very pleasing to my feelings, Odette, for I know it proceeds from a true and honest heart, but understand that every obligation to me can be discharged by your love and fidelity to your mistress."

"My mistress!" Odette exclaimed, springing to Estelle's side. "Love my mistress! I would gladly die for her 20 times a day. Love my mistress! Why, she is my religion. It may be wicked, but when I kneel and close my eyes and pray to the Mother of God it is only the sweet image of my mistress I see. There is but one angel on the earth, and that is my mistress."

"Hush, Odette, you silly girl," said Estelle. "Mr. Oakfell will think I teach you such nonsense."

"Indeed he will not, my mistress," Odette replied, "for he must see you just as I do, because he is not blind, and he is white and educated and smart."

Both laughed at this ratiocination and welcomed it as a diversion from what had threatened another embarrassing situation. Oakfell prepared to take his leave when Odette said:

"Mistress, may I ask Mr. Oakfell a question?"

"Certainly, Odette, unless Mr. Oakfell objects."

"I am sure I do not," he said.

"It is this," Odette's voice faltered—"can Leon come back now without danger?"

"Yes," Oakfell replied. "Quillebert's appeal does not suspend the judgment"—addressing Estelle—"and pending the appeal I do not believe he would dare to offer injury to Leon, who could live on my plantation until the suit is ended. Do you know where he is?" he inquired of Odette.

"I can get a word to him," she answered.

"Then let him come to my place, if you wish."

When Estelle gave her hand for good night, Oakfell said, "This much at least of reward you will not deny me," and, pressing his lips lightly upon it, rode away the very happiest man under the stars.

"Oh, Odette!" sighed Estelle, sinking into a chair.

"Ah, my happy mistress, he loves you! He loves you! And whose love could be like his?" said Odette, leaning over her.

"He did not say so," complained Estelle. "Bring my guitar."

While the affectionate slave sat at her feet Estelle plucked delicious chords from the instrument, and her voice rose clear and tender into the perfumed night, singing:

"In a garden lay a lute,
Where a careless hand had flung it.
One who saw it lying mute
Took it up and strung it."

The whippoorwill and the warbler in the cypress hushed to listen.

CHAPTER XII.

THE LAW SUPREME.

SEPTEMBER of the year 1860 was exceptionally hot and dry even for the climate of Louisiana. Navigation of the Mississippi's tributaries was impracticable. The baked alluvion crumbled into a depth of impalpable dust, which rose in clouds at the disturbance of a dog's trot. The still lands were of stony hardness. Creamy white lay the cotton fields on either side of the bayous to the green borders of the moss hung swamps, and the beds of the deep, yawning bayous themselves could almost be traversed dry shod.

It was afternoon at the close of the month when Evariste, attired in the latest of the city's modes, alighted from his buggy at Mother Deshautelles' gate. Though he had driven the long distance from Red River landing, on the Mississippi, where he disembarked from the steamboat on his return from a visit to New Orleans, he appeared neither travel stained nor heated. Rather he looked spotless and cool. Laure, in a gown of stuff which might have been woven of the spider's web and which clung lovingly to her perfect figure, welcomed him with a warmth of manner which would have proved fatal to any of her 20 Gasconoid admirers. Her beauty, though dark, was rich, dazzling and dangerous, and she knew it. She realized the power of a smile made up of glistening teeth and parted carmine lips. The glinting of deep brown eyes, the arch pose of a pretty head and the springing step of dainty feet were a poem of health and vitality of her own composition. But the narrow forehead and mouth spoke as much of will as of love.

She led Evariste to the shaded veranda and, serving him a draft of refreshing wine, said:

"Now tell me, great traveler that you are, all about the wonders of the grand city, for you know I have never been there."

"Oh, no," he replied. "I saw no wonders except miles of steaming streets and swarms of sweltering people."

"Nothing short of Paris for you, then?" said Laure.

"Well, I might compromise on Vienna or possibly Nice. But see, Laure, what I bring you." Evariste took from his pocket a small packet, opening which she discovered a dainty Russia leather and satin lined case, with golden initials "L. L." inlaid upon it and within it the watch given her by Quillebert, which Evariste had taken to be repaired in New Orleans. Lifting the watch, she discovered at the end of the chain a charm, a gold crescent studded with wine red rubies and sparkling diamonds.

She could not speak her delight at once, but looked in an ecstasy from the jewel to the young man and from him to the jewel—her face would then have been an artist's treasure—until words came to her, when she exclaimed:

"From you to me?"

"If you will accept," he said.

"I do accept," she cried, "and shall prize this crescent as the most precious of my possessions. But what will Estelle say?"

"What will Quillebert say?" returned Evariste, with some shade of irritation in his voice.

"Why?" asked Laure, startled.

"He gave you the watch and chain," he said.

"And she gave you the"— She checked herself and bit her lip in vexation.

"The what, Laure? Say it and let it go."

"Forgive me, my friend. Yes, let it go and with it any thought of those two persons who"—

"Let us not speak ill of the absent, but talk of other things. Be prepared for unwelcome news from the city later on. Quillebert will lose the suit."

"Why do you say that?"

SERMON FOR LABOR DAY

DR. TALMAGE SYMPATHIZES WITH HARD LOT OF WORKINGMAN.

VIRTUE SEEN IN AFFLICTION

Oppression Does Not Always Decimate, As Witness the Multiplication of the Hebrews in the Land of Egypt During the Reign of the Pharaoh Who Knew Not Joseph—A Comparison With American Labor Conditions of To-day.

Entered according to Act of Parliament of Canada, in the year 1901, by William Kelly, of Toronto, at the Dept of Agriculture, Ottawa.

Los Angeles, Cal., Sept. 4.—In this sermon, which is specially appropriate to the Sunday before Labor Day, the preacher expresses his sympathy with the hard lot of the workingman and points out some of the conditions which increase his difficulties. The text is Exodus i., 12, "The more they afflicted them the more they multiplied and grew."

"Some virtues," wrote Joseph Addison, "are seen only in affliction." But from the Egyptian standpoint it would take a very long and a very useless investigation to find any virtue in the national catastrophe which, as the text would indicate, was about to overwhelm the Egyptian kingdom. The mightiest foreign foe ever assembled upon the borderland drained by the arteries of the gigantic Nile was not to be feared as much as was the host of enslaved Hebrews who were living among them. It was only a few hundred years before that a little handful of Hebrews, with their flocks and herds, had migrated to and settled in the land of Goshen during the Premiership of Joseph, the famous statesman. But since that time the descendants of old Jacob had multiplied so greatly that now they could be counted literally by the hundreds of thousands. Not only in numbers were they to be feared, but in mental power also. With the proverbial acquisitiveness of the Hebrew, these people were absorbing much of the wealth of the kingdom. Moreover, the "signs of the times" declared they would soon become rulers of the nation. By a silent revolution they threatened to take possession of the Egyptian Government.

"What shall we do? What shall we do?" was the one question that was upon almost every Egyptian lip. "Shall we allow the Hebrew people to become the dominant factors upon the banks of the Nile and to sit upon the throne of the Pharaohs?" This question was not only asked in the street, but it was anxiously discussed in the King's palace. To-night we see the lights blazing in the Privy Council room. As we enter the council chamber we see the King sitting at the end of the long room, surrounded by his best and strongest Ministers. After the question has been talked over long, and earnestly I see the King rise. He looks straight at his Councillors of State as he says: "Gentlemen, we are facing a condition, not a theory. We dare not and cannot deport the Hebrews from our realm. They are now essential to our national welfare and prosperity, as laborers, clerks and servants. But we can debar them from holding property. We can forbid them studying in our schools. We can enslave them and make them the chattels of our people. We can degrade them by ignorance and overwork. Thus saith the King. I here and now decree the Hebrew men and women and children from henceforth to be in perpetual bondage. They shall be compelled to make bricks without straw. My Ministers will see that my decree is carried out. When the King speaks the King's will becomes the law. Gentlemen of the Privy Chamber, the Council is dismissed."

This royal behest was carried out to the letter. The Hebrew people living in Egypt were disfranchised. Not only were they deprived of the rights of citizenship, but they were degraded to the most abject and humiliating servitude. Their property was taken away from them, and they could not even claim their wives and children as their own. Yet, strange to say, and yet not strange after all, the more the Hebrews were cursed and struck and ill-used and murdered by the Egyptians the more their numbers grew, and the more of a menace they became to the Egyptian Government.

This is the first Sunday in September. To-morrow is Labor Day. Many preachers this Sabbath morning will be talking to the mechanics, the clerks and the farm hands, to the masons, the carpenters and plumbers, and to all those who work with their hands. It is not inappropriate that this morning I should present some of the conditions that are afflicting American labor. If in this talk I should speak frankly concerning capital, I shall speak with equal candor concerning labor, for I firmly believe, as a dear friend of mine said to me a few days ago, that "the greatest curse labor has to bear to-day does not come from capital, but from labor itself."

"The more the Egyptian master afflicted the Hebrew slaves," says our text, "the more they multiplied and grew, and the Egyptians grieved because of the affliction of Israel." Labor's afflictions! We first find them in the American laborer being compelled to compete for work in a home market that is glutted with foreign immigrants. We find them in the great army of invaders which each year disembarks at Ellis Island, New York's Castle Garden of the present day. We find them in the impoverished Italians and the Bohemians and the Portuguese and in the human offscourings of Europe who each year come to our manufacturers and foundrymen and contractors and say: "Let me handle your pick." "Let me lay your asphalt pavement." "Let me dig your mines." "Let me chop your wood." "Let me work in your foundries." "We are foreigners. We do not intend to become citizens of the United States. As soon as we can save up a little money we intend to return to our native land and live there. But meantime we will work cheaper than any American man can work. Why? Because our living expenses are practically nothing. We will live in dugouts. We will eat food that no American family would eat. We will buy no books and will wear the cheapest clothing. As a result of these conditions of living we can crowd your American workman to the wall."

The American laborer, from this foreign competition, must have help, and help right soon, to save him from this condition of affairs. Our National Legislature must give it. Shall we lift high our tariff walls to protect capital and not at the same time lift high our walls of immigration laws to protect our native workers? Is not the American laborer's sturdy arm as valuable in the sight of our Government as the capitalist's pocketbook? "What do you mean by such a statement as that?" some one asks. "Would you start another Know Nothing party? Would your ballot box slogan be 'American work only for the American born—American political offices only to be held by those cradled under the shadows of Mount Washington and Pike's Peak?'" Oh, no, I am not preaching any such political nonsense. I do not believe there ever was a political party wrapped in the swaddling clothes of so many errors as that born in 1853, and which, with ex-President Millard Fillmore as its Presidential candidate, swept many of our northern States in 1856 with the political cry, "America only for the American born." American liberties and American prowess both on land and sea, militarily and industrially, have been won and built up by America's adopted sons as well as by her native born children. Were there not foreigners among George Washington's mightiest companions in arms? Baron Johan DeKalb, who was shot at Camden in 1780, and Kosciusko and Lafayette and many others—they were all foreign born. Who was the most valued statesman during Washington's Administration next to the President himself? Alexander Hamilton, who was foreign born. Who was John Ericsson, the inventor of the Monitor, that revolutionized naval warfare and saved the American navy off Newport News? He was a Swedish-American; he was foreign born. If you blot out from our nation's history all the deeds which America's foster sons and daughters have accomplished for the land of their adoption you blot out some of its brightest pages.

But while we, as American citizens, would welcome gladly into our midst the German or Englishman or Scotchman or Swede and the men of any foreign nationality who with intelligence would come among us and say: "Brother, give me thy hand, for to-day I would be one with you and become an American citizen," yet to-day we would not welcome the ignorant, the idle, the filthy, the pauper, the lazzaroni or the criminal offscourings of Europe or Asia, who would come to this land, not to become American citizens, but to stay here just long enough to scrape together a few thousand dollars and then go back to the land of their birth. We would not welcome the ignorant and depraved of foreign lands, who would underbid our American workmen, and compel our American boys and girls to live in dugouts or as rats in a cellar as they live. These classes have neither part nor parcel in the glorious inheritance of freedom and equality for which our forefathers fought and bled. While we would gladly open our gates to the oppressed of other lands, we would shut them against a horde that can have no appreciation for the precious privilege of American citizenship, and no sympathy with our national aims and ambitions, and whose coming is as much of a menace to our people as the cloud of locusts is to a harvest field. Nations, like individuals, should be wise as well as generous in their hospitality. We must protect ourselves against the industrial locusts of the old world by wise and discriminating laws, which shall do injustice to none, and which, while vindicating our ancient hospitality as a world-wide asylum for the lovers of liberty and independence, shall shut out the swarms of mere mercenaries and against the "indescribable elements" which other lands seek to thrust upon us, from whatever quarter they may come.

Labor's next great affliction is to be found in the absurd and tyrannical demands made by some labor unions, which seem to have the suicidal policy of antagonizing capital at all times and under all pretexts and of widening the breach between capital and labor, with the result that labor itself is the heaviest sufferer through their insane follies. The most brutal tyrant the southern negro knew in antebellum days was not the white man, but the negro himself who was made the overseer of the plantation. In the same way in many cases the most brutal tyrant the laboring man has to-day is not the capitalist, but the "walking delegate" or the mercenary political trickster who, as a laboring man, manipulates the executive committees which govern the labor unions for their own ruin. Of course this indictment is not universal in its application. There are many honest and upright and beneficent labor organizations, like that of which the late Mr. Arthur was president—namely, the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers. Mr. Arthur brought that organization up to such perfection that it not only looked after the interests of the owners of the different railroads, but after the interests of the engineers themselves. There are many clear brained, sagacious and noble minded labor leaders whose object is not to disorganize the labor market, but to steady it, so that employers as well as the employed may have their due.

Now, my laboring friends, mark you this. I am not claiming that capital is all right and labor is all wrong. I think some of the most merciless men in the world are to be found in the ranks of capitalists. Some of them will squeeze out of a worker his last drop of blood. But, while capital in some instances may be merciless, it is quite certain that if the labor unions will stop their petty bickerings and their unjustifiable tyrannies and unitedly demand what is right capital will be compelled to yield to all of labor's just demands. So long as labor persists in making absurd claims just so long will labor not only be refused such demands, but labor will lose much of what she justly and rightfully ought to have. When a labor union comes and says, "Capitalist, you must hire the men I send to you and no others," then the capitalist, stung by such tyranny, replies: "Rather than have you dictate to me what I shall do I will fight your organization to the last dollar. Free I was born, free I shall live, and free I shall die." It is flint against steel and is the inevitable result of such a course of action. This is the spirit with which capital is to-day fighting labor when labor makes absurd and unjust demands.

But I would speak also in reference to another great affliction from which labor to-day is suffering. The world, by every law of justice, owes every man, woman and child a living, if they are ready to work for it. But God never intended some people to work for a living in certain ways any more than he intended a colt six months old to do the work of a well developed draft horse. He never intended young boys and girls to leave school before their time, or wives and daughters to labor as farm hands in the fields, when there are sturdy fathers and brothers physically able to bear the brunt of the work under the noontide sun. Yet everywhere we see strong men, able-bodied men who want to work and yet who are unable to find employment because the work that they should do is being done by women who ought to be at home caring for the household. The natural place for woman is the home. It is there that the qualities with which God has endowed her find their proper exercise. To be the wife and mother, to make the house a home by her sweet and refining influence, to train the children to be good and wise men and virtuous women by a mother's love and care—these are the services she alone can render, and if she deserts that duty it will go undone, and this country will lose its moral tone. There is no compensation known to man for the lack of a mother's beneficent influence on her children.

I yield to no man in my admiration for the girl, who being left fatherless, and having no brothers capable of earning a livelihood for the bereaved family, goes forth to toil for the support of her widowed mother and her fatherless brothers and sisters. Many a noble girl is doing that and deserves to be honored for her conduct. Many a girl unsought in marriage, seeing her father gradually losing by age his capacity for work, takes up the burden of helping to provide for the family, which he is no longer able to bear alone. All honor to her for the assistance she is rendering, and for the sympathy and reverence for her parents which she displays in relieving them of care and anxiety. Many a widow, clinging to her children, and shrinking from the pain of having them scattered in the charitable homes of relatives or friends, finds employment by which she can support and educate them and fit them for their duty in life. God bless and help all such and give them the strength they need for their arduous lot!

But the spectacle of what such women are doing has stirred the ambition of another class of women. These are they who voluntarily and by choice elect to do a man's work in the world. In order that they may escape the drudgery of domestic service or the weariness of school teaching or in order to obtain money for extravagant dress and ornament or for luxuries which their fathers cannot provide, they thrust themselves into business pursuits, displacing some man who was earning a higher salary, and they help to depress the market rate of wages.

I protest against a system which makes it impossible for a strong, able bodied man to find work, forcing him to stay at home and live upon his young daughters' earnings when they themselves should be at school or helping their mothers at home. There are only two ways to rectify this evil. Employers should hire their employes in two ways. First, when an applicant comes for a place give the preference to men who are husbands and fathers and the heads of families; second, absolutely refuse to employ any young girl in a store or factory unless that young girl is fatherless, brotherless and has others dependent upon her for support. It is high time that some of our female clerks who are working in stores for a little extra spending money should go back to their homes and domestically help to care for their mothers and fathers and younger sister and brothers, where they belong.

The afflictions of the industrial workers of America are very great. Indeed, I sometimes think they are about as badly off in America to-day as were the Israelities in the Egyptian capital over three thousand years ago. In a blunt way I have tried to present three or four of the difficult labor problems which confront the laboring classes of America at the present time. Do not, however, even for a moment suppose that I consider these problems and others like them impossible of solution. The same God who led the children of Israel out of their enslavement will yet lead his American children to freedom from their industrial troubles. I see all men, both laborers and capitalists, living together in harmony and love—all living as Christ would have them live. May all of us, whether we work in broadcloth or in overalls, try to speed that millennial day by doing to our brothers as we would have our brothers do to us. Then all labor troubles will not be solved by the "black rule of selfishness," but by the "Golden Rule of Christian love."

YOUNG LADIES MARRIED WOMAN

Mrs. Jno. C. Huffman speaks to you all.

She Tells of her Troubles and their cure that you may be Benefited.

Napanee, Ont., Sept. 12.—(Special)—There are many women in Canada who will yet write letters of thanks to Mrs. Jno. C. Huffman of this place. Mrs. Huffman suffered as they are suffering now. She discovered a cure in Dodd's Kidney Pills; and she is breaking the law of secrecy that binds the great majority of womankind to let her suffering sisters know where they may find relief. Mrs. Huffman says:

"I was troubled for about six years with Kidney Disease, and the pain was so great I could hardly bear it. I could not entertain any company. One night when I was feeling very miserable I read of some wonderful cures by Dodd's Kidney Pills, and resolved to try them.

"At this time my urine was something terrible, and at times very disagreeable to pass, but Dodd's Kidney Pills soon brought me relief from all my troubles, and by the time I had taken six boxes I was completely cured.

"I am making this statement to the public in the hope that it may help other young ladies or married women."

A WISE MOTHER.

A wise mother never attempts to cure the ailments from which her little ones suffer by stupefying them with sleeping draughts, "soothing" preparations and similar medicines containing opiates. This class of medicines are responsible for the untimely death of thousands of little ones, though some mothers may not realize it. When your little ones are ailing give them Baby's Own Tablets, a medicine sold under guarantee to contain no opiate or harmful drug. Mothers who have used the Tablets always speak in their praise. Mrs. A. Johnstone, Eddystone, Ont., says: "I find Baby's Own Tablets all you recommend them to be. My baby was troubled with eczema, and was very cross and restless, but since giving her the Tablets she has become quite well and is now a strong healthy child." PRETTY HANDS.

Finger Nails Should Receive the Best of Attention.

"Women do not seem to realize," said a manicure, "that the hands and finger nails are very delicate and should receive the best of care and attention. They are constantly abusing and neglecting them and then wonder why their hands and nails are so ugly.

"It is a very common occurrence, for instance, to see women take up a sharp penknife to clean their finger nails or possibly use the sharp pointed end of a fancy file for the same purpose. This is a very wrong habit and should be avoided by all those who wish to have nice finger nails. It not only injures the skin under the nail, making it ragged and giving it an inflamed appearance, but the sharp edge is bound to scrape the underpart of the nail, in most cases causing it to split and break off.

"An orange stick should always be used for cleaning the nails. These sticks are not expensive and can be purchased at all stores and manicure establishments. If the flesh or underpart of the nail has become stained from ink, fruit or in any other way, don't try to scrape it out. There are plenty of good bleaches to be used for this purpose that will not injure the flesh or nail. Perhaps one of the best is peroxide. Wind a little absorbent cotton around the end of the orange stick, wet it in the peroxide and thoroughly moisten the flesh under the nail. The stain will then soon disappear."—Exchange.

THE AMERICAN WOMAN.

Are Her Physical Powers Sacrificed to the Making of Brain?

The native born American woman has been made the subject of discussion almost ad nauseam. Indeed, it would be a matter for no surprise if she were to regard herself as a being apart. Her energy, her brightness and resourcefulness have been lauded to such an extent that it might well be believed that the women of other countries cannot be considered in the same category with her. This, too, is true as far as it goes, and in many qualities the American woman stands supreme. Unfortunately, however, she fails in the most important one of all, that of maternity, and fails in consequence of her cultivation to excess of those attributes which are generally thought not to be within a woman's province. Her physical powers suffer in proportion as her mental powers increase, and as a propagator of the race she cannot compete with women of stronger bodies, but of less highly trained brains.

Dr. Emil Reich, a German who lived for five years in this country, has recently written on this matter in a British periodical. He draws attention to the fact that one outcome of the overmentalization of the American woman and the hypergalvanization of her energy is the breakdown of American maternity, which he regards as one of the most serious phenomena which cloud the future of the United States.—New York Medical Record.

DRESS HINTS.

A color is just as beautiful in cotton as in silk. Neatness is the first requisite to good dress.

A soiled white shoe is almost as bad as a soiled white glove, and that is the most slovenly thing in the world.

No matter how fine your gown and hat, you will look badly dressed if your gloves are ripped at the finger tips.

A well bred, well dressed woman never runs to extremes. She strives for harmony of color as well as simplicity of style.

If the lace edgings on the hem of a petticoat be "overcast" with a strong thread before the garment is washed, ragged edges and ravelings will be avoided.

Goods that have become faded and discolored are often restored by being packed away in a dark closet or chest into which no ray of light can penetrate. Two or three layers of tissue paper aid in the process.

A Valuable Flesh Builder.

Persons who are thin and emaciated from consumption or any disease may gain flesh rapidly by drinking the last quart of milk drawn from the cow, commonly called the "strippings." This milk is very rich, and when taken immediately after milking, while it contains all the animal heat, will be absorbed at once into the system without going through the ordinary process of digestion. Patients should begin with one-half pint, morning and evening, taken regularly, and gradually increase the quantity until at the end of the week they are taking a quart at a time or as much as they can drink without causing discomfort. Many who cannot drink cold milk or even milk which has stood an hour can drink the "strippings" without difficulty.

Austria's Kaiser, Hungary's King.

The Austrian kaiser has many an odd custom to comply with in his capacity as dual monarch of Austria-Hungary. He is emperor of the former, but king of the latter. Pleasant Lessons.

J. B. Brodie, in charge of an English school, has inaugurated a system of "pleasant lessons" to which his pupils have taken very readily. A lesson on the woolen industry is followed by a journey to a farm to witness the process of sheep shearing; the mystery of brick and tile making is made clear by a visit to the works where the pupils can see everything from the digging of the clay. The dead facts of wars are made to live again by excursions to fields of battle and descriptions of what took place upon them. Excellent results follow these practical lessons, Mr. Brodie says.

To Extract a Splinter.

A bit of home surgery, stated to have been practiced when a splinter is driven into a child's hand particularly deep, is its extraction by steam. A bottle with a sufficiently wide mouth is filled two-thirds with very hot water, and the mouth of the bottle is placed under the injured spot. The suction draws the flesh down when a little pressure is used, and the steam in a moment or two extracts inflammation and splinter together. This is very efficacious when the offending substance has been in for several hours, long enough to have started some of its evil consequences.

Creamed Dishes.

It may take a very few more minutes in the preparation, but the effect is sufficiently attractive to be worth the effort if escaloped codfish is cooked in individual baking dishes having buttered bread crumbs on top. In fact, all creamed dishes are attractive if served in ramikins.

The Druggist RECOMMENDED IT.

Because He Knew of Scores of Severe Cases of Piles that were Positively Cured by DR. CHASE'S OINTMENT.

The writer of the letter quoted below suffered dreadfully from itching protruding piles for six years.

Like hosts of others, he was only disappointed with the many treatments he tried, until his druggist told him of what Dr. Chase's Ointment was accomplishing as a cure for this wretched ailment.

Mr. G. W. Cornell, who is with the Shaw Milling Company, St. Catharines, Ont., writes: "In justice to suffering humanity I write to tell you of the world of good I obtained from the use of Dr. Chase's Ointment. For about six years I was the victim of itching and protruding piles and was in dreadful agony day and night. Doctors were unable to help me and I could get nothing to relieve the suffering. I was about as miserable a creature as was to be found on the face of the earth.

"One day my druggist, Mr. A. J. Greenwood, advised me to try Dr. Chase's Ointment, which I did, and obtained relief from the first box and complete cure with the second. My trouble was caused by heavy lifting, and I consider that Dr. Chase's Ointment would be cheap at fifty dollars a box, in view of the good that it did for me. A feeling of sympathy for others similarly affected prompts me to give this testimony."

Dr. Chase's Ointment, 60 cents a box, at all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Company, Toronto. To protect you against imitations the portrait and signature of Dr. A. W. Chase, the famous receipt book author, are on every box.

Water For British Troops.

British soldiers are provided with boiled water for drinking. The water is first clarified by a kind of rough filtration through charcoal containing a certain amount of potassium permanganate and then "sterilized," either by filtration or by heat, after which it is distributed to the troops by means of water carts reserved for "safe" water only.

THE FERNIE FREE PRESS, FERNIE, BRITISH COLUMBIA.

FRIDAY, SEP. 16, 1904.

THE daring robbery on the C. P. R. near Mission City this week has brought out the fact that only on one other occasion has there been a similar hold-up in Canada. This is a record worthy of emulation by the people to the south of us, where such events are of almost daily occurrence.

THE Grand Trunk Pacific party passed east over the mainline yesterday in their special train. Senator Cox and E. R. Wood, directors of the new railway company are of the party. The party are non-committal as to the terminus of the line. Various surveys will have to be made before this is finally decided upon.

THE recommendation of the city council asking for the instituting of a Small Debts' Court at Fernie is a very modest and a very timely request which should meet with prompt attention at the hands of the Provincial Government. The matter was touched upon at the Board of Trade meeting convened at the time of Premier McBride's visit to Fernie and we gathered then from the latter's remarks that no difficulty would be experienced in having this satisfactorily adjusted when it was brought up in the regular way by the local member. Fernie at one time had a Small Debts Court but for some reason it ceased to exist and the people of the town and district are now, as they were before, obliged to bring all small debt cases before the regular sittings of the county court, which increases the costs very materially as well as the inconvenience of all parties concerned.

The telephone franchise as proposed by the city council to be given to D. V. and A. J. Mott will doubtless meet with the approbation of the large majority of the people. An outline of the agreement was drawn up at the last council meeting and at the next meeting the by-law will be framed ready to be submitted to the vote of the people, which will be taken as soon as it can legally be done. Briefly, the proposed by-law gives these gentlemen the franchise in the city limits for a period of ten years. In return they agree to charge not more than $3 per month for office telephones and $2 each for residence phones. They also agree to put in a free fire alarm system and they promise to connect the city system with Cranbrook on the west and Coleman on the east at the earliest possible date. The system put in will be the best that is made and an expert will be sent by the manufacturers to install the plant. The successful applicants also agreed to have the system installed this Fall. There was little difference between these terms and those submitted by Messrs Hammond and Turner. The latter wanted a 15 year franchise and they asked the council to bear the actual expense of putting in the fire alarm system. The city is very fortunate in securing a telephone system on such favorable terms. The inconvenience caused by the long delay will soon be forgotten in the many advantages derived from a first class telephone service at very reasonable rates.

The School Act of this Province is very stringent with respect to the regularity of attendance of the children at the public schools. This act has never been enforced in this place and the result is that the education of some children in Fernie has been neglected. The new board of Trustees are determined to grapple with this question in earnest and to assist them in their efforts they have taken steps to have a truant officer appointed. Few people, we believe, understand the significance of this act in this particular and for the benefit of the others we quote from the Act as amended to date.

SECTION 79

"In City School districts every child from the age of seven to twelve, inclusive shall attend school during the regular school hours every school day, subject to the exemptions provided for in section 81 of the Act." Section 79 also deals with rural school districts, where children are required to attend six months every year.

SECTION 80

This section authorizes the school board or their duly appointed truant officer to lay complaints against any violation of the above section before the police magistrate who has the power to try it like any other criminal case and to impose a fine upon the parents or guardian of five dollars for the first offence and double that amount for each subsequent offence.

SECTION 81

Under this section four causes for exemption are given which are to be considered by the magistrate as valid excuses for non-attendance at school.

(1) That the child is under instruction in some other satisfactory manner.

(2) That the child has been prevented from attending school by sickness or some other unavoidable cause.

(3) That there is no public school open which the child can attend within a distance of three miles, measured according to the nearest possible road from the residence of such child.

(4) That such child has reached a standard of education of the same or of a greater degree than that to be attained in such public school.

The Girl From the East

By Marjorie A. Barkley

Copyright, 1904, by T. C. McClure

There was excitement among the young officers at Fort Wayne when Hicks, the little corporal who wore his cap on the side of his head, spread the report that the girl from the east had come and had been escorted to Colonel Klein's house.

During that first day there was an unusual amount of promenading in Officers' row. Lieutenants, sergeants and even corporals found time to walk, in approved military style, past the colonel's quarters, and there was one who showed signs neither of excitement nor interest. It was Captain Roberts. He told his friend, a first lieutenant, that he wouldn't go around the corner to see twenty girls. Whereat the lieutenant grunted and said something about behavior in the Philippines, adding, with frank sarcasm: "You're a peach, you are, to pose as a woman hater after cutting me out with the little senorita so clean that every fellow in the regiment was afraid to have you see his girl. I know you all right, old pal, and I'll bet with the rest that you take your little stroll in the row on the heels of some big headed corporal. I passed the house myself," he owned boldly, "and I saw her too. She's a regular beaut, Dick."

But even his best friend failed to awaken the interest of the captain. He went so far as to get into citizen's clothes that same afternoon and leave the fort for a walk in the river road. This, by the critical corporals, was considered stuck up.

When the captain reached a sandy strip of beach a mile or more from the fort he stretched out at full length and gazed at the water where freight and passenger steamers passed on their routes to the great lakes.

His thoughts, whether they were upon commerce or navigation, were profound indeed, for he started when he heard the rush of a woman's skirts and saw from the corner of his eye that a girl was approaching. He moved a little, but did not look in her direction until the girl stopped and said softly: "I beg your pardon, but isn't this—it is! Dick, I knew it was you!"

Captain Roberts sprang to his feet and looked into the girl's flushed face

"It's Margaret, Dick," she said. "Peggy."

Roberts took the hand she offered. "Peggy," he said wonderingly. "Peggy, you take my breath away. Where did you come from?"

"I'm staying at Colonel Klein's, but where did you come from?"

"You, at the fort?" he asked incredulously. "That's where I live. Sit down here on this rock. Peggy, Peggy Adams, do you realize how you have surprised me? When did you strike these parts?"

"This morning."

"No! Then you're the girl from the east? They've been talking about you for weeks."

"How lovely of them—and you?"

"Why, I'm up there too."

"Those clothes?" she said doubtfully.

"Are 'cits,'" he finished, smiling. "I wear a uniform up there."

"Oh! And what are you—what rank?"

"Captain," he said briefly. "Peggy, how you have grown up."

"Have I?" she laughed. "And so have you, about two feet higher, and you went to West Point after all?"

"Yes, father insisted."

"Do you like the army?"

"Oh, yes, when we see active service!"

"Then you have seen active service. In the Spanish-American war? Oh, tell me about it!"

Roberts laughed. "I will some time," he said. "I will tell you anything you ask, but let's talk about you now. Where have you been all these years?"

"School and college and around at places."

"That means traveling, I suppose, yet you never visited West Point?"

"Never. I didn't know that you were there, that you had gone back. You know you said"—

"Yes, I said several things about that time. You haven't forgotten then?"

"Forgotten? Oh, Dick, I couldn't forget! Never! Wasn't it dreadful?"

"It was rather a bad mess, but we—at least I—showed remarkably good taste, though you weren't as beautiful then as you are now."

"I can't snub you for that," the girl said, with carefully lowered lashes. "It sounds genuine. You always were thoroughly genuine, Dick."

"Yes, I was in earnest then," he said, smiling. "You were my first sweetheart." He laughed aloud. "My, how you cried when the minister refused to marry us! I flattered myself that you were disappointed, but it really was your pride, you poor little girl."

He regarded the poor little girl's blushing face with tender affection.

"I think that the old minister was the sweetest man I ever met. He knew that we were eloping. How gentle he was and tactful. I have always thought of him with thankfulness akin to love."

"I thought he was a regular old donkey, but it appears that I am the only one who was in real earnest," he said tentatively.

Peggy laughed. "Do you remember my high heeled boots?" she asked, ignoring his remark.

"Oh, don't I, though! You tripped, and I had the delirious joy of catching you in my arms. But do you remember how I saved money? I've roared over my williness more than once. You know I had only $25 to my name, and I said that carriages were too slow and that we would much better take a car."

"I had forgotten that," Peggy said, "but I remember how fighting mad you were when papa rushed in. You stood between him and me and said, 'Sir, your daughter has consented to become my wife!' Oh, Dick, wasn't it funny?"

"Yes," he said slowly. "Sometimes it seems funny to me and sometimes it seems strangely tragic. That we were such babies is the only saving fact. Poor kids!" He sighed and turned his eyes from the girl's face. "I suppose you're engaged now?" he said.

"No."

"How does that happen?"

She shook her head. "And you?" she said.

"Engaged? No, indeed. I never saw but one lovable girl in my life."

"And she wouldn't marry you?"

"She wouldn't. There will never be another. I lost track of her."

"But you didn't forget her?" the girl asked softly.

"I never forgot her for a minute. But it's too late to find her now. She doesn't care for me anyway."

"Oh, Dick, don't say that. Any girl ought to care for you. Just the fact that you stay true to one woman should be enough. Don't give up and spoil it."

"Will you give me a recommendation?" he asked, smiling. "Say that none of my relatives were hanged or something like that?"

"I could say much better things. It is beautiful that you want to find her. I like it, Dick. And I think the girl will like it."

Roberts looked deep into her eyes, but he saw no self consciousness. He forgot what he had read many times, that women are clever actresses.

"Your advice may be good," he said after a few moments of silence. "But what would you have said yourself, Peggy, if I had hunted you up and had told you about caring for you? The girl is very much like you. What would you have said?"

"Oh, that's silly, Dick," she said quickly. "You know you wouldn't." She looked past Roberts and frowned uneasily. "It's going to rain," she murmured, "and I'm cold."

"Oh, I suppose so," Dick said gloomily. "She'd say that too. That's why I didn't hunt her up."

"But it's going to rain. There, I felt a drop, Dick."

Roberts rose quickly and looked toward the fort.

"By Jove, it is, Peggy. I didn't notice those clouds. Here comes the wind. We'll have to stand under those trees till it blows over. I'm mighty sorry that I didn't notice it." He slipped off his coat and wrapped it about the girl's shoulders.

"Oh, don't, Dick," she protested. "Please. You know girls don't take cold as easily as men. They're used to exposure."

They ran to a clump of trees and Roberts made the girl kneel by a low stone wall that ran at the side of the road.

"Dick, I don't want you to stand there in the rain. Please take your coat."

He smiled down at her. "What a foolish little girl it is," he said. "But I'll kneel beside you if you think it's safe."

She raised her questioning eyes to his. "I wish you would," she said. "I don't like to have you take such a terrible risk, and just to protect me, when I can keep dry in this corner as well as not."

Roberts dropped to his knees and leaned against the wall.

"Peggy," he said, "just to protect you I would give my life. Didn't you know that, dear?" There was tenderness in his tone and conviction. He spoke not passionately, but truly.

Peggy locked her hands tightly together and her lips quivered. It seemed a long time before she could raise her eyes. Then she met the earnest, questioning gaze of the man.

"You may," she said simply. "Dick, you may."

The rain had ceased and the clouds had hurried on their way toward the east when Peggy and Captain Roberts entered the reservation and were met by the jovial colonel.

"Well," he said heartily, "Peggy, I've had a searching party out for you, but I just heard that you two were coming up the river road. This looks bad, bad. Why, we began to think you and the captain, here, had eloped."

Peggy flushed and glanced at the younger man. Then she smiled at the colonel.

"We did," she said demurely, "six years ago."

Sweets as Presents.

Sugar and preserves were fashionable presents in Queen Bess' time. Every one seemed to have had "a sweet tooth" in those times. The dean and chapter of Salisbury, having a case to be tried before Justice Hale, presented him with six sugar loaves, for which the judge, who was exceptionally scrupulous, insisted on paying. In Davenant's poem, "Madagascar," occurs the couplet:

Then reconcile the rich for gold fringed gloves,
The poor for God's sake or for sugar loaves.

The sergeants of the house of commons in Lent, 1585, received from Lord Howard a present of sugar. The chamber of Exeter in 1610 voted sugar loaves to two canons for their morning lectures. Sometimes marmalade, oranges, lemons or even potatoes took its place, and when sugar became cheaper the custom ceased. In 1581 all persons in Scotland not being dukes, earls, etc., possessed of at least £250 in yearly rent were prohibited the use of confections, foreign drugs and costly spices.—Westminster Review.

HORSE BREEDING.

Question of Government Aid—An Outline of the Irish System.

In the year 1900 the Department of Agriculture and Technical Instruction for Ireland devised a scheme for encouraging improvement in the breed of live stock, particularly of horses and cattle, in that country. An outline of the Irish system may be of interest to Canadian horsemen, who have for some time been discussing the problem of obtaining for service throughout the country a sufficient number of sound well-bred stallions of the most profitable type.

General Objects.—In formulating their live stock schemes, the department's main object was to promote improvement in the breeds of the country by encouraging private enterprise in the breeding of pure-bred animals, and in the introduction of new sires, and to do this in such a way that the accompanying advantages should be principally secured for the smaller farmers. Since interests of national importance were at stake—such, for example, as the maintenance of the high reputation of Irish horses) the improvement of the feeding qualities of the store cattle, and the milking properties of dairy cows—and as these interests required that the stock of the country should be considered as a whole, and should not, in public schemes for its improvement, be attacked by the introduction of strains likely to have injurious general effects on the national breeds, it was necessary that these schemes should contain certain principles of uniform application to the whole country. It was, therefore, necessary that the live stock schemes should emanate from the central authority, while, in particulars other than their national features, they might be modified in accordance with local opinions and circumstances. In order to have the assistance of the most representative expert opinion in Ireland in the formation of these schemes, the Government appointed two special advisory committees—one for horses, and the other for cattle, sheep and swine.

Horse Breeding Scheme.—The horse breeding scheme, as outlined by the advisory committee and approved by the Agricultural Board, provided for the registration of suitable and sound thoroughbred and agricultural sires, and the selection of a number of the best brood mares in each county to be served by these sires. The owner of a registered stallion is entitled, under the scheme, to a fee of £3 for each selected mare put to his stallion. The mares selected were the property of persons deriving their means of living from farming, whose valuation did not exceed in the poorer counties £150, and in the more wealthy counties £200.

The first year 410 stallions were offered for registration, of which 298 were thoroughbred and 112 of the agricultural type. From the first it was deemed advisable to spare no pains in making a searching examination of the stallions offered for registration, and, accordingly, before any of the stallions offered under the scheme were accepted, the department's inspectors had to certify, (1) as to suitability, and (2) as to the soundness of the animal. A register was published in March, 1901, which contained the names and pedigrees of 97 thoroughbred and 31 agricultural stallions that had been accepted. Upwards of 1,800 free nomination tickets of £3 each were offered at 150 shows of mares held during March and April, and nearly 1,700 of these tickets were issued.

In addition to subsidizing stallions by means of £3 nominations to mares, the department offered in a few counties, where there was an insufficient number of stallions for the purposes of the scheme, premiums varying from £50 to £100.

Loans for the Purchase of Stallions.—In order to encourage farmers of small means to provide themselves with a registered stallion, a sum of money was allotted by the department for the purpose of granting loans for the purchase of approved sires. The money was lent at 2½ per cent. interest, payable in five annual instalments. It was a condition precedent to these loans that the animal should be insured for its full market value.

Premiums for Female Stock.—As a further means of encouraging improvement in stock breeding, the department adopted the principle of awarding premiums and prizes to female stock. The advisory committee on horse breeding pointed out that that industry in Ireland is, to a great extent, injured by young mares being sold out of the country, thus leaving only second class animals for breeding purposes, and the department adopted their recommendation that the prizes and premiums should be mainly confined to young mares from two to six years old, served by a registered sire, in the hope that the farmers would thereby be induced to retain these mares.

THE SPRINKLING CART.

The time now approaches when one may expect
The days to get awfully hot.
You then from your wardrobe with great care select
The airiest things you have got.
And when you have dressed with immaculate care
The sprinkling cart man will compel you to swear.

You start in the morning most jauntily clad;
You're fresh and spic span as you please.
The birds sweetly sing and all nature is glad;
You're happy and quite at your ease.
Then fizz and kersplash—you are maddened at once;
You are sprinkled and splashed by that water cart dunce!

The man is no dunce, though he's wickedly wise;
He sits there as silent as death.
He never looks up, neither does there arise
Any sign that he's drawing his breath.
But just as you pass him he suddenly wakes—
A different look quickly your linen suit takes.

He just seems to know when you're dressed for a call
And slips up behind in so quiet a way.
Before you can dodge him he's sprinkled you all
Completely and drenched you and driven away.
You swear you will kill him; you don't, though, because
For some unknown reason it's 'gainst the state laws.

A Business Head.

"No," said the beautiful girl, "I can never marry you. I am promised to another."

Norman Forsythe bowed his head in silent anguish. He loved the beautiful girl. For months it had been his ambition to make her his wife. But it was only for a moment. Then he stood erect, his eyes blazing with suppressed fury. "Who is this man?" he asked fiercely. "Where is he? I shall kill him. Nothing shall come between us."

"Would you really kill him?" asked the girl without betraying alarm.

"I would," he replied.

"I have half a notion to marry you if you would promise to do the job afterward," she said.

"Do you fear this man?" he asked, hope springing in his heart like weeds in an onion bed.

"Oh, no," she replied.

"Then why should I kill him after we were married?"

"I only wanted you to try, because you would never come back alive and we could have quite a start in life on your life insurance."

What He Overlooked.

"Adam certainly was no financier."

"What did he overlook?"

"When he proposed to Eve, if he had had the proposal copyrighted see what royalties his descendants could be drawing."

Just In His Line.

"Why did they hire a blacksmith for a dramatic critic?"

"He is so adept in the use of the hammer."

It Must Be.

They say that all the world's a stage,
And it's a fact
All girls, regardless of their age,
Think they can act.

No Proof There.

"Do you think the good die young?"

"I doubt it. You look healthy."

PERT PARAGRAPHS.

Many a woman could make a fortune if she had the face to do it.

A man may smile and be a villain, but he cannot hold his job as one on the stage if he does.

A man feels complimented to be called a "sly dog," but just try "deceitful puppy" on him once.

One peculiarity about money is that it takes so much longer to earn it than it does to spend it.

All fruits and vegetables taste so strongly of money these days that it really takes away one's appetite.

THE CORSET.

How It Should Be Adjusted For Comfort and Health.

This article of dress has been the subject of much discussion. It has the most direct bearing on the general health.

If women knew how to adjust corsets properly they would prove a blessing instead of the curse they have been.

Use two strings (not three, as many do in order to be able to "pull in" the waist). Lace the first from the bottom up to the waist line, the second from the waist line to the top. Let the strings hang loosely until the garment is on and hooked. Then the abdomen should be pressed up into place by the hands, not pushed down, as usual, and the lower string drawn up and fastened. The shape of the corset holds the abdomen in place. The upper string is left very loose and fastened. This permits the lungs to be filled with air.

This is the only healthful way to wear a corset, and if so worn it acts as a support to the organs and also to the clothing.

By first adjusting and fastening the lower part, then by drawing a very deep breath while the upper string is entirely loose, one can tell how much "slack" should be left in order to have unrestricted breathing.

Try it, you women who find corsets uncomfortable.—Exchange.

WOMEN'S INVESTMENTS.

Remember That High Interest, as a Rule, Means Risky Securities.

How can a woman who has a few thousand dollars place it where it will draw a little better interest than it would if left with a savings bank or responsible trust company and still be safe?

There can be, of course, no certain and general answer to this question, since what is sought for is the mysterious balance between safety and profit in business affairs which must always be a matter of delicate, individual adjustment and involves the use of poised judgment and the possession of large experience. One certain general principle nevertheless does govern the matter. It is this: The amount of money seeking desirable investment is always so great that the competition of investment for the ownership of securities of high class is very acute and tends, save under exceptional circumstances, to bring down the interest rate on these securities to a low level. A high interest rate is therefore almost invariably and in the very nature of things a warning of insecurity. If the large dividends paid by this or that enterprise whose advertisements were in fact well assured, the great, shrewd capitalists of the country would be the first to know the truth and to seize possession of such treasures.—Exchange.

LAUNDRY LINES.

To clean flatirons rub them on green cedar.

Never put table linen into soapsuds until the stains have been removed by pouring boiling water through the linen.

Baby's knitted sack will be out of shape and stringy if it is hung to dry. Next time dry it on a paper on the warming oven.

Bits of soap which are too small to be used should be carefully laid aside for laundry days. Then they can be melted and added to the wash boiler.

Buttermilk will bleach clothes if they are soaked in it for two or three days. Then they should be washed, boiled and dipped in bluing in the usual manner.

In ironing handkerchiefs it is useful to remember that the middle should be ironed first. To iron the edges first causes the middle to swell out like a balloon and makes it difficult to iron satisfactorily.

Bed Valances.

The most satisfactory method of fastening a valance to a brass or iron bed is by means of a piece of heavy muslin laid over the springs. Cut a piece of cotton cloth that has been shrunk—preferably unbleached—that will come just to the edge of the frame. To this fasten the goods for the valance either laid in plaits or shirred, having the flounce hemmed at the ends where it touches the bedposts. After basting securely place on the bed and put the mattress in place to be sure the valance hangs evenly. After stitching on the machine, with a long stitch, fasten to the springs in several places, head, foot and sides, with cord to prevent slipping.

Bureau Covers.

Linen scrim makes handsome and inexpensive table and bureau covers if worked in a cross stitch pattern with double floselle or san silk. The pattern chosen may be as elaborate or as simple as one prefers. The spread is first hemstitched, a three inch hem being liked for a small spread. Within the hem the border is worked. Pillow and pincushion tops are also worked on the same material. A pillow top seen recently was worked in yellow silk, a number of stitches and patterns being combined so that it was almost solidly worked. It was very handsome and represented a good deal of patience and eyesight.

Making Mayonnaise.

A medicine dropper as an adjunct to the making of mayonnaise was the inspiration of a housewife not long ago. Every one who ever tried to make mayonnaise knows the bother of adding the oil slowly, drop by drop, until the dressing is thick enough. This woman experienced the same difficulty and met it with the five cent medicine dropper, which adds the oil with machine-like regularity and precision.

Macadam and Telford.

A satisfactory highway can be built eighteen feet wide, exclusively of stone, usually for $3,000 to $3,500 a mile. These are known as macadam roads. A more costly stone road, running from $4,000 to $6,000 a mile, is the telford road. Both are named after Scotchmen who first devised the systems.

TO EXTERMINATE HOUSE FLIES.

Scientists have proved that the common house fly is responsible for the spread of some of the most deadly diseases, it becomes the duty of every housekeeper to assist in exterminating the little pests. Many contrivances have been used for the purpose, including fly traps of many kinds, sticky paper, and different makes of poison, but although all will kill some flies there always seems to be as many left as ever. There is only one really effectual way to kill them all, and that is Wilson's Fly Pads, being sure to follow directions carefully. One ten cent packet of Wilson's Fly Pads has been known to kill a bushel of flies, and a few pads properly used will kill all the flies in any room in a few hours.

Winnipeg, Thursday, Sept. 8, 1904.

Wheat: At the close of this week prices for wheat show little change from a week ago, the closing quotations to-day in the American and Canadian speculative markets showing a shade under to a shade over the closing prices of this day week. Nevertheless, in the interval, there has been a good deal of nervousness, prices having declined 2c. to 3c., and recovered that much again, the principal part of the recovery having been obtained in the last two days. This recovery in price has taken place in face of bearish weekly statistics, such as large increase in the world's shipments, increase in amount on passage, a comparatively large increase in American visible supply, and also very large increase in world's visible supply as compared with a year ago. The advance in prices, however, seems chiefly attributable to the development of evidence regarding the deficient yield of the Northwest spring wheat crop. Reports from thrashing done, and samples of the wheat from such thrashings show that serious damage has occurred, and that in extensive districts of the country the yield has been cut down twenty-five to seventy-five per cent., and any one acquainted with the effect of rust damage understands that the quality of such wheat is deterioriated in a corresponding ratio to the percentage of damage, and that the most seriously damaged crops only yield chicken feed. In our last week's review we said that "should the thrashing of the crop give incontrovertible evidence that the aggregate in quantity of milling wheat is actually as low as most crop experts put it, then speculative operations which act very quickly either on sentiment or evidence would boom prices higher than we have yet seen." The action of the markets the last two days supports this suggestion. Reports of small yields and samples of low quality are coming forward and prices advance, and there seems to be a sure prospect that as thrashing progresses and the actual situation develops prices for good milling wheat will see a much higher level through the force of speculation, which will in the long run, however, overdo itself as it has always done, so that should we have good crop prospects next spring and the larger acreage which is practically certain, wheat may easily be cheaper next June than it is at present, even although speculation may put prices high in the interval. The movement of new wheat in the States, which during July and August showed much larger than last year, has during the past week shown a smaller movement, owing principally to the delay in movement of the new spring wheat crop. Exports of wheat and flour from the States continue very small as compared with last year. There is little change in regard to growing crops during the week. Argentine and Australia continue to send favorable reports, although latest reports from Argentine mention the appearance of locusts. India needs rain to prepare soil for new crops. European crops are not turning out any better than previously reported, in fact the French crop shows by thrashing it will be less than previously estimated. The visible supply increased last week 827,000 bushels, against a decrease of 336,000 bushels the previous week and an increase of 147,000 bushels last year. The world's shipments were 11,032,000 bushels against 9,752,000 bushels the previous week, and 8,871,000 bushels last year. The world's visible supply increased 3,978,000 bus., against an increase of 1,194,000 bushels the previous week and an increase of 866,000 bushels last year.

Manitoba wheat is very quiet, as the old crop is cleaned up and the new has not begun to move yet. Harvest is being prolonged by partially unsettled weather, not serious enough to do particular damage but enough to cause a good deal of delay. For the week ending the 7th inst., only 33 cars of wheat passed the inspector here, against 380 cars inspected for the same week last year. Up to date only four cars of new wheat have been inspected. Reports of thrashing show some of the crop to be very poor where rust damage has been serious. Prices for future delivery follow the fluctuations in the American markets, but very little business is doing. The elevator companies and exporters keep out of the market altogether, and it is left entirely to small dealers, so that the trading is on a very small scale. This may be expected to change when the new crop begins to move. Prices for cash wheat are nominal at $1.02½ for 1 northern, 99½c. 2 Nor., 94c. 3 Nor., spot or September delivery, and on the option market October closed to-day at $1.02½, December, $1.00; May, $1.04; all prices are for in store Fort William and Port Arthur.

FIVE KILLED IN RAILROAD WRECK.

The second section of the transcontinental express which left Winnipeg the morning of the 1st, and to which the private car of Lord Minto was attached, was wrecked at Sintaluta, on the Moose Jaw section, at 9.30 that night, five people being killed and five injured in the collision. The wreck was caused by the carelessness of the conductor and engineer of freight train No. 118, which was in the siding at that point. They had left the switch open, and the express dashed into the siding with disastrous results. The express left Brandon in two sections, the first consisting of the baggage, express, mail and second class cars; and the second section consisting of the tourist, diner, Pullmans and the two coaches bearing the vice regal party. When the collision came the first tourist car was telescoped, and in it were all those killed and injured. An inquest was held in the afternoon, and the conductor and engineer of the freight were adjudged guilty of criminal negligence and placed in prison to await trial. Those killed are: Mrs. J. C. Dowett, Edmonton; Mrs. Warren, Sand Point, Ont.; Miss Agnes M. Shirley, Ottawa; two other women, supposed to be the Misses Hewitt, en route from Toronto to Calgary. The injured are Mrs. J. Beck and Miss Gouldman, of New York, en route to Manilla, bruised and shaken up, proceeded at once; Miss Murray, of the China inland mission, en route to Shanghai, bruised; Ira Ross, of Blenheim, Ont., en route to Victoria, badly bruised and shaken up, and is considered the worst injured of the passengers; L. P. Hart, porter of the tourists car, a compound fracture of one leg and severe bruises, also fear of internal injuries.

What is that which goes about the wood and cannot get in?—The bark of a tree.

FROM SEAT OF WAR.

What is happening at the seat of war is known only to those on the ground. There is no immediate news either through the medium of press despatches nor from official sources. Kuropatkin reports, in a telegram sent a few days ago that he had not lost a single gun in his retreat, and that Kuroki is on his east flank and Oku on his left, and St. Petersburg officials surmise that a big battle may be fought if the Japanese continue to press on to Mukden. The story of bad roads and hampered transport is repeated, and from Mukden in the last despatch received comes the significant information that "there is an interesting movement toward Tieling," the nature of which is not disclosed.

The Japanese in raising a vessel sunk by the Russians found the gate of the dry dock which also had been sunk, says a cable from Chefoo. The dock was repaired and is being used by the Japanese. A torpedo boat destroyer is now in Chefoo undergoing repairs.

BLOODY BATTLE AT ANPING.

A correspondent of the London Daily Mail with General Kuroki, telegraphing Aug. 28, describing the battle of Anping, says: "The Russian position was exceedingly strong. On the left wing was a long line of mountain ridges, and gradually shelving down on the left and right were straight slopes steeply descending for six hundred feet. The movements of the Japanese were greatly hampered by the configuration of the country, the unceasing succession of mountains, which were almost pathless, making it impossible for them to bring forward their field guns, and mountain artillery therefore was used. After opening with shrapnel the Japanese advanced in arch-shaped formation. Massing at every convenient point of shelter they soon reached the foot of the mountain, where the angle of slope afforded protection. From a hill opposite I saw the steady and persistent move forward, now by twos and threes, now in long lines as the Japanese crept from point to point. Then a heavy fusilade began. The Japanese tore off their coats in order to facilitate their movements, thus presenting splendid white marks to the enemy. The Japanese guns experienced difficulty at first in getting the range. Soon, however, smoke and flames showed where the opposing batteries were working ruin. Two Japanese mountain guns advanced on the right before the Russian front concealing themselves in the corn. Their fire in the midst of the Russian trenches caused the Russian fire momentarily to waver. Then it was renewed more vigorously than ever, but it was the beginning of the end. Some Japanese crept around, and wriggling through the corn, burst unexpectedly on the trenches. There was a bloody fight. Then as though by magic, white flags with blood red centres appeared all up the mountain sides. On the summit stood men waving the flag of the missing sun aloft and standard bearers were tearing up the slope, eager that their companies should have the honor of reaching the summit first. The Japanese now opened fire upon the Russians descending the opposite slope, while the Russian artillery turned savagely upon the heights whence the Russians had been ousted. The Russian artillery covered the retreat and both armies remained in touch during the afternoon. A heavy thunderstorm ensued, during which the artillery of our left wing attacked Daidentsu. There was little shelter that night for the wounded, and all lay in common fellowship upon mud drenched to the skin. The pitiless rain continued until near midday, when a thick fog arose. When the fog lifted at 3.30 p. m. the Russians were observed in full retreat pouring towards the bridge over the Iang."

THE LONDON TIMES ON YELLOW PERIL.

The London Times, in an editorial on the future of the Far East, discusses the question whether the triumph of the Japanese in the pending war will turn the "yellow peril" that has been talked about so much into a reality. It starts with the proposition that the Japs' power and influence in Manchuria, Corea and China is not improbable, and asks what, in twenty or fifty years, will be the result, particularly for Europe and America. The idea gains strength on the continent, it says, that an awakening in China will take place like the awakening in Japan; that a generation or two hence Europe will stand face to face with a confederacy able to put into the field five or six millions of men as brave and well disciplined as those now fighting under the Japanese colors. The Times, however, doubts that there will be such development in the Far East, because it doubts that Chinese character will lend itself to such a transformation as will be necessary in order to make the development possible. It says a large majority of skilled observers, men who know China best, are utterly skeptical on this point, failing to see among the Chinese any sign of the spirit that would regenerate the country by assimilating and adapting the wisdom of other nations and using it honestly in the service of the state.

BALTIC FLEET AGAIN DELAYED.

It is said that the Baltic fleet will not sail before November owing to some defects in the vessels.

RUSSIANS LOOKING FOR SHIPS.

A St. Petersburg despatch says it is understood that Russia is trying to negotiate for the purchase of the British steamer Calahas (captured by the Vladivostock squadron while on her way from Puget Sound to Japan) which is still at Vladivostock, but no decision has yet been arrived at with the prize court.

CANADIAN NEWS.

BUDGET OF INTERESTING HAPPENINGS.

A mountain of hard coal has been purchased by P. Burns & Co., of Winnipeg, for $320,000. The property is in the Misty range, 36 miles west of Okotoks, Alta., and comprises 16,000 acres. It was discovered by an explorer, Julius Rickart, an old-time prospector. Mr. Patrick, D. L. S., and a party of surveyors spent several weeks in the district, and made a thorough inspection of the coal seams as exposed in many tunnels made by the miners in the pass. From information gleaned by an Okotoks press representative from Mr. Rickart and other members of the survey party, there exists a veritable mountain of pure anthracite coal. The situation of this phenomenal coal bed is most picturesque. Upon either side there towers huge, precipitous mountains thousands of feet high, and nestling in this valley is the mountain of coal, which is 12 miles long and three miles wide in extent. The formation of this mountain differs vastly from the surrounding mountains, inasmuch as it is covered with vegetation, while the others are bare limestone. The place selected and laid out for a town site is prettily situated. There are fully five square miles of valley to build upon, any quantity of pure, sparkling mountain dew and timber in great abundance. For some time past miners have been engaged making tunnels into the mountain, and succeeded in exposing 26 veins of coal, which varies from 4 feet up to 40 feet. Samples of this coal were sent to assayers in Denver, Vancouver and other cities, and in every case remarkable reports were made. The assays of this coal run from 87 to 92 per cent. carbon. The following is the report received of the assay of the 4-foot vein: Hydrocorpic water, none; volatile matter, 4 per cent.; fixed carbon, 92 per cent.; sulphur, none; ashes, 4 per cent. The physical description is briefly given in the report: Color of ashes, white; weight per cubic yard, 2,680 lbs.; specific gravity, 1.54. According to these figures it will be observed that this coal excels the Pennsylvania article. What particularly attracted the attention was the total absence of rock, and in burning there is practically no smoke but a blue blaze. A test was made in an ordinary coal stove, it being filled with coal, which burned for 71 hours. Upon investigation they found only a small amount of white ashes, without any signs of clinkers. The coal ignites easily, and from their experience in burning it they feel satisfied the coal excels the well-known Pennsylvania coal. Julius Rickart, the discoverer of this mine, has had a varied experience. Three years ago it was he that landed at Banff and inspected the anthracite coal mines there. Since then he has been searching for the mother lode. Arriving at Okotoks, in August, 1902, he drove out west, and after exploring the mountains he at last discovered the real thing. Producing samples, he got Pat Burns greatly interested, with the result that the latter paid out to the Government $320,000 for the 16,000 acres of coal land which he now possesses. Mr. Burns is highly elated with his purchase, and is of the opinion that it will develop into the largest mining camp in the Dominion.

A TEN-YEAR-OLD HERO.

An Ottawa evening paper says: An act of bravery which has probably never been excelled was witnessed here yesterday at Assiniboine Lodge, on the St. Lawrence, the residence of Hon. Clifford Sifton, when his ten year-old son, Clifford, proved himself a true hero. It appears that he and his cousin, Arthur Burrows, aged 4 years, were playing at the end of the wharf near the house, when the latter toppled off the platform into about 12 feet of water. Without waiting to give the alarm young Clifford plunged into the water, and dived after the little chap, who had gone down. The brave little rescuer is a splendid swimmer, and succeeded in securing young Burrows. With one arm around his precious burden he swam towards a place near the verandah, where he knew the water was shallow. By this time the household had been informed of the accident, and were soon to the assistance of the gallant young Clifford. Hon. Mr. Sifton and his other sons secured a hold on the boy's clothing and landed him in an exhausted condition on the verandah. Master Burrows was soon in his mother's arms after a very close call from death. He will not likely suffer any serious results. This act of young Sifton is surely deserving of recognition by the Royal Humane Society.

NO DISCRIMINATION.

The Minister of Inland Revenue is notifying the American Tobacco Company and the Empire Tobacco Company that if they have not abandoned their exclusive contracts with their customers their licenses will be cancelled, says a despatch from Ottawa. Last session of Parliament an act was passed giving the minister power to cancel the license of any company that partook of a monopoly and discriminated against its customers. The American Tobacco Company and the Empire Tobacco Company have exclusive contracts by which those parties who took all their goods from them got a larger commission than those who did not. Mr. Brodeur has also notified his officers to see that the law is carried out.

"RED CARD" SYSTEM ON C.P.R.

Consequent upon the rapidly increasing freight traffic the C. P. R. will inaugurate this month the "Red Card" freight system. This will not imply any change in train service except to facilitate delivery more than formerly. Under this system cars containing freight will be ticketed with a red card and the waybills will be accompanied by red envelopes, on which will be marked the full particulars of the shipment. The cars thus labelled will be placed on designated "red card" freight trains and will carry them through to their destinations.

NOTES FROM THE YUKON.

At Dawson, Yukon, Sept. 5, fire destroyed the Klondike saw and planing mills on Klondike island, beside Dawson. They were fine buildings and machinery, and they are a total loss. Many saw logs were burned. Lumber and piles were saved by the Dawson fire brigade. The loss is estimated at about $80,000. The North American Transportation and Trading Company were the proprietors. There has been a big rush of goods and machinery from Dawson to Tanana mines during the last few days. Every available steamer is loading at Dawson. Some people are still going, but the new camp is already overdone. An early fall is promised by the weather. Gardens are already injured by frosts. The Yukon Rifle Association had a two days' shoot, which was largely attended, Noble, a veteran of Bisley, leading in the shooting. The Alaska-Seattle cable was opened for business Tuesday. The next day the people of Seattle and Alaska were allowed free use of the cable to express their congratulations on the opening of communications.

BRITISH ATTITUDE TO KOREAN CONVENTION.

No official representation will be made by the British Government in regard to the Korean-Japanese agreement, says a cable from London, but the authorities are taking a lively interest in the extent of the intervention of Japan in the affairs of the Hermit Kingdom. Under the Anglo-Japanese alliance both powers agreed to respect the independence and integrity of Korea and the agreement between Japan and Korea is regarded as an infringement of Korean independence. But it had been expected that if Japan was successful in the war she would establish a protectorate over Korea. The Russian Embassy pointed out that, at the beginning of the war, the Russian Government declared it would not regard the acts of Japan in Korea as binding agreements and, therefore, they would not receive the recognition of the Russian Government, a fact, which it is stated in Japanese diplomatic circles, does not concern Japan.

CANADIAN POLICY PRAISED.

A cable from London says: Sir H. Tozier, the agent-general for Queensland, who returns to the colony to confer with the Government as to the best means of getting emigrants for his country, says that having been in Canada, and having studied the immigration question, he has become in favor of Queensland adopting Canada's methods, and that if the authorities of the colonies agree with him by adopting Canada's methods, there is no reason why Australia should not obtain sufficient settlers.

$1,000 TAKEN FROM BRANDON STATION.

The C. P. R. depot was broken into at noon on Sept. 1st, and between $900 and $1,000 taken from the ticket office. Crowds of people were about all day long, so it is difficult to see how the thieves were successful in making the haul, which consisted of about $300 in endorsed cheques and $700 in cash. The local police and C. P. R. detectives have the case in hand.

WRONG IDEAS ABOUT SECOND HOMESTEAD.

Many wrong ideas have been formed in regard to the right of a settler being entitled to a second homestead. This is not the case. The only persons entitled to a second homestead are those homesteaders who had either received their patent or were entitled to apply for it, on or before June 2, 1889. This gives the very early settlers only the right to a second homestead.

COMING TO WINNIPEG.

J. K. Savage, chief night despatcher for the Canadian Pacific railway at the Union station, Toronto, has been promoted to the position of inspector of despatchers for the division between Winnipeg and Fort William, under the direction of Alfred Price, superintendent of transportation. H. E. Kelly will succeed Mr. Savage in Toronto.

STREET CAR FATALITY.

Mrs. Hill, of Murray street, Hamilton, in getting off a street car a few days ago, fell, fracturing her skull, and died two hours later.

Mr. Fred White, comptroller of the Mounted Police, has returned from Quebec, says an Ottawa despatch, where he was inspecting the Arctic before the steamer proceeds on her trip to the Far North. Mr. White says that supplies for three years are on board. They are of the best quality. The ten mounted policemen who are to go under Superintendent Moodie are at Regina, ready to start for Quebec in 12 hours' notice. For the first year the Arctic will be confined to explorations to Hudson's Bay, Hudson's Strait, Davis Strait and Baffins Bay. This instruction is definite. The Arctic will not go farther north than Kennedy Strait. Mr. White is well pleased with the steamer, and considers her well adapted for the work. One or two smaller and swifter craft may be necessary in the near future. To these the Arctic would make a good flagship. The Neptune will return to Newfoundland and will be put out of commission upon being replaced by the Arctic.

Building permits in Toronto for the eight months of this year to date are $4,101,000 against $2,853,000 for the same period last year.

INTERESTING BUDGET FROM BRITAIN

The correspondent of the London Telegraph at St. Petersburg sends the following despatch to that journal: "The finance ministry has practically arranged with German bankers for a loan of 500,000,000 roubles (approximately $250,000,000), at a higher rate of interest than on the last loan. Only minor details remain to be settled, and the date of issue is not stated, but it is not likely that the loan will be floated until after the fall of Port Arthur. At first it was intended to wait until spring, as gold is not yet needed, but various motives, including a desire to spoil the market for Japan, induced the ministry to close with the German offer, reserving to itself the choice as to the time of issue of the loan, which it is expected will be distributed among various European countries. The admiralty, under the supervision of its chief, Admiral Avellan, and Grand Duke Alexis, the high admiral, has drawn up a protest of rebuilding the navy, but no practical steps are possible unless the Minister of Finance is able to arrange the matter of ways and means."

SAILED 40,000 MILES IN A B. C. DUGOUT.

A Dover despatch says a three-masted canoe, supposed to be the Tillikum, passed Beachy Head Sept. 2, bound east. The British Colubia sailing canoe, Tillikum, is of only 2½ tons. It is an ordinary dugout, carved out of the trunk of a tree by an Alaskan Indian in 1843. The little craft is in command of Capt. J. C. Voss, who is accompanied by a single companion named Harrison. The Tillikum left Vancouver in May, 1901, bound for Europe by way of various islands in the Pacific, Cape Horn and the Azores. She was last reported as having sailed from Ponta Belgada, Azores, August 11, for London. At that time she had already nearly covered 40,000 miles of her long journey. Captain Voss' companion, when he set out three years ago was, was Mr. W. N. Luxton, now editor of Crag and Canyon, Banff, and son of W. F. Luxton, of Winnipeg.

BOXER RISING IS THREATENED.

A revival of Boxerism is reported from Tamingfu in the southwestern part of Pechili province, 125 miles from Tien Tsin. Over twenty American missionaries, including women and children, have been obliged to evacuate Tamingfu, owing to an intended massacre on the part of the Boxers, who call themselves "Tsaiyun." The local telegraph company refused to transmit a message from the missionaries to American Minister Conger, at Pekin. Fortunately, however, an English friend in Honan forwarded their message, whereupon Yuan Shika, viceroy of Pechili province, despatched urgent orders for their protection. In view of the fact that the local officials gave them no protection, and there was no hope of continuing their work the missionaries came out. They travelled in safety.

INQUIRES FOR HARRY BURNE.

Mrs. Annie Burne, of 52 Kirkstall avenue, Leeds, Yorkshire, England, would be grateful for information concerning the present whereabouts of her son, Harry Burne, aged 22, height 5 feet 8 inches, light brown curly hair, blue eyes, good teeth and strong build. Harry Burne worked for Mr. T. P. Jones, of Swan River, last August, leaving at the end of the harvest for Saskatchewan, where he was employed by Mackenzie & Mann on the Erwood-Prince Albert line construction work.

Francis Sloane Stanley is dead, aged 63. He married, in 1866, Charlotte, the daughter of the late Sir John Rose, Montreal.

Lord Castletown, president-elect of the Celtic Congress, in an address, quoted Jessie McLachlin's message from Canada: "I am proud to think that our old language is spoken everywhere, especially in Canada. A more enthusiastic Celt than the Canadian it is difficult to find."

BRITISH PRESS COMMENT ON LORD GREY.

The London Globe, on the choice of Lord Grey, says the Government has undoubtedly secured an excellent representative of the sovereign in our great North American dependency, says a London cable. In politics, before all things he is an Imperialist in the fullest sense of the word. The Prime Minister of Canada will obtain a Governor-General of parts in Lord Grey; whatever he is put hard to he does with a will. The Pall Mall Gazette says it is a curious coincidence that Lord Grey's aunt was a wife of a former Canadian Governor-General, Lord Durham, and sister to the wife of Lord Minto, present Governor-General of Canada; therefore it takes kindly to him. Lord Grey has a statesman's mind and a diplomat's temper. The St. James Gazette says: If ever an administrator had a fine chance of serving a British colony, that administrator is Lord Grey. If tact, prudence and wise conciliation were ever needed they are needed now in the Dominion. Lord Grey's extended acquaintance with colonial government should enable him to look at Canadian affairs from a colonial standpoint, an important factor in the task of keeping unimpaired the bonds which tie the motherland and her children abroad. Many have failed because they lacked this. Comprehensive and more subtle wisdom will be required to direct the destinies of Canada at the present moment than that which Lord Grey was called upon to exercise in South Africa.

Prayer Meeting, Wednesday at 8 p.m.

REV. JOHN ROBSON - - PASTOR

Convened at Fernie

On Thursday morning Mr. McColl of Pheonix led in a very suggestive and helpful discussion on, First, "The Ministers' Discouragements." Second, "The Minister's Encouragements." After this, many important items of business were disposed of. Among others Mr. Gordon, Commissioner to the General Assembly made his report. The last item of business considered was the resignation of Mr. Gordon from the Congregation of Knox Church, Fernie.

Mr. Gordon stated his intention of returning East and asked the Presbytery to release him of his present charge. Mr. Rennie spoke briefly on behalf of the session. It was moved by Rev J. F. Ferguson, seconded by M. D. McKee and agreed that we as a Presbytery while deeply regretting the loss we will sustain in the removal of Mr. Gordon yet to accede and release him from his charge after the 1st Sabbath of October. Mr. McColl voiced the sentiments of all his fellow ministers when he spoke of the most cordial relations that had always existed between them and Mr. Gordon.

It was also agreed that Mr. Fortune be appointed interim moderator and declare the pulpit vacant on the second Sunday of October.

Tha next regular meeting of the Presbytery will be held in Nelson, the time to be fixed later.

In the afternoon the Coal Company kindly placed a car at the disposal of the Members of the Presbytery which conveyed them to Coal Creek Mines. Here they were met by Mr. Letcher and Mr. J. McClement who with care and patience piloted them through one of the mines bringing them out, as one of their number remarked "a dirtier but a wiser lot of men."

One of the happiest incidents of the whole meeting was the marriage of the Rev. Thos. McCord, B. A. of Slocan, to Miss Agnes Donnelly of Winnipeg at eight o'clock in the evening. The cermony was performed in Knox Church, before a large congregation, by Rev. Mr. Fortune, who is an old friend of the groom. Immediately after the ceremony Mr. Gordon, on behalf of the Ladies of the Church presented the happy couple with a handsome piece of cut glass, and Mr. Fortune on behalf of the Members of the Presbytery made a further presentation of the same material.. Having received the congratulations and good wishes of the large number of friends present, the young couple with their more immediate friends repaired to the home of Mr. Farquharson where a most enjoyable evening was spent.

Several members of the Presbytery were heard to remark that they never had been present at a more enjoyable and successful meeting of the Presbytery They were also deeply impressed with the future possibilities of this district.

FIRST TO THE CAVE.

Two of Fernie's young men, Messrs William Forsythe and W. H. Bauldrey, claim the honor of being the first to climb to the cave on the side of Hosmer mountain. They started from Fernie at six o'clock Sunday morning and they ate their lunch in the cave at noon. Many are known to have tried this difficult feat but none to our knowledge had succeeded before this time. The cave as seen from Fernie appears like a dark blot on the precipitous face of the mountain side with no visible approach to it. The successful climbers followed a ledge in a direct line for the greater part of the distance. They found the cave to be about fifty feet across at the opening and about ninety feet high with no appreciable decrease in these dimensions farther back. The cave extends into the solid rock about ninety feet.

SUICIDE AND ACCIDENT.

Blairmore, N. W.T., Sept, 12. E. C. Harding, secretary-treasurer of the Miners Union at Lille, a new camp two miles from Frank, on the Frank and Grassy Mountain Railway, committed suicide this evening in a house of ill-fame at this place. Infatuation for an inmate of the house is supposed to have been the cause. Besides being secretary of Lille branch of the United Mine Workers of America, Harding has a contract for driving a tunnel on the new coal property being developed by C. P. Hill, at Hill Crest, near Frank.

John Henry, an old time lumberman of the west, was killed late last night by being struck by a freight train on the Crows Nest line. Henry was walking through the slide east of Frank when hit by the train. It is supposed he was intoxicated.

MORRISSEY NEWS.

(From our own correspondent)

An assault at the shingle-mill resulted in the case being aired in court. Each of the two participants were fined $5.

The mines are working full time and it is said that the orders for coal are sufficient to keep them running for months to come. It is also reported that some of the ovens will be fired shortly.

D. McKay, government road builder, replaced the ruined swing bridge with a new structure this week. Mr. W. Stewart who was hurt in the collapse of the bridge is rapidly recovering. He is rapidly recovering. He had a rib broken and was otherwise shaken up.

J. Donovan was up before Justice of the Peace Strathearn on Tuesday charged with vagrancy. He was given two months at hard labor. Constable Sampson took him to Fernie the same day.

The shortage of water at this place is becoming somewhat serious. Morrissey Creek is entirely dry, something that has never been known to occur before. The mountain spring which feeds the waterworks reservoir is also getting weak and little water is available from that source. Some difficulty is experienced in getting sufficient water to run the mines and several wells are being sunk.

FIRE AT CRANBROOK.

King Lumber Co's Mill Destroyed.—Loss $25,000.—Watchman was Asleep.

The King Lumber Co's No. 1 mill on Nigger Doc creek, was totally destroyed by fire on Sunday morning. The fire is said to have started in the boiler house and it is stated that the watchman must have been asleep when the fire started, because he had great difficulty in escaping from the burning building. The value of the mill, which had a capacity of 50,000 feet a day, was $25,000 and it was insured, but for what amount it was impossible to ascertain. No lumber nor logs were damaged.

The King Lumber company is owned and controlled by Senator King, of Chipman, New Brunswick, and his sons, Dr. King, M. P. P. for Cranbrook, and M. B. King, the latter being the manager. Several years ago the Kings acquired some valuable timber limits in the immediate vicinity of Cranbrook, and have built two mills, No. 1, which was burned down on Sunday, and No. 2, which is situated about two mills northwest of No. 1. They have been turning out an extra good quality of lumber during the time they have been running which has found a ready market in the Northwest and Manitoba. No doubt the mill furnished employment to about 60 men, who will be thrown out of employment until it is rebuilt.

A LAMENTED DEATH.

The sad death occurred on Sunday morning of Mrs W. K. Whalen at her home near the Elk Lumber Co's mill. On the preceding day Mrs. Whalen had given birth to a little baby girl and complications set in which resulted in her death. Mr. Whalen who is the yard foreman at the Elk Lumber Co's mill has the sincere sympathy of a large number of friends in his heavy loss. The interment took place at the Fernie cemetery, Rev. Mr. Robson officiating. The little child will be taken care of by a sister of the deceased.

HOUSES MUST BE MOVED.

The Right-of-Way Clearing Commenced East of the C. P. R. Track.

Mr. Ennerson of the Crow's Nest Southern construction work was seen this morning with respect to the progress of the work along the line. He said that everthing was going along very satisfactorily. The road bed to the Elk River bridge would be ready for the steel by Oct. 15th., and on the east side of the river the grading would be completed two weeks later.

Mr. Ennerson started some men clearing the right-of way east of the C. P. R. track along the route outlined in these columns a few weeks ago. The clearing there is easy and the grading which will not be difficult will commence there next week. Notices have been served on the owners of six houses on the "row" to have them moved off inside of two weeks. The railway line runs directly through the line of houses on the west side of the "row."

Mr. E. R. Wood arrived this morning on a visit to his brother R. W. Wood.

This is pay day at the St. Eugene and a sum in the neighborhood of $24,000 will be disbursed. On account of the shortage of water it was necessary to lay off some of the men, therefore the payroll for August is about $1,000 less than that for July.—Moyie Leader.

Dr. Fagan, of Victoria, secretary of the Provincial Board of Health, is in the city on a tour of the province to arouse a crusade against the spread of tuberculosis. As we go to press he is addressing a public meeting in the Stork Opera House on this important matter. A report of this meeting will appear in our next issue.

The new hotel regulations requiring the closing of the bars from 11 o'clock on Saturday night until 6 o'clock on Monday morning as well as the arranging of the windows and doors to give an uninterrupted view of the bar from the street was satisfactorily observed last Sunday by all the hotels.

Constable Routh, of Moyie, received a wire last Saturday from Toronto informing him that his mother was very ill and could not recover. Mr. Routh obtained leave of absence and left for Toronto without delay. Constable Walker, of Fernie, was sent to Moyie to substitute for him and A. Joyce was appointed as substitute for Constable Walker.

The first sod of the excavation work for the large office building of the C. N. P. Coal Company was turned on Monday of this week. Philip Carosella has charge of the work. Chief Engineer Wright stated this week that the foundation would be completed this fall, ready for an early start on the walls next spring.

H. D. Talbot wishes to announce to the citizens of Fernie and the surrounding district that he has opened up a harness making and repairing establishment two doors north of the Roma Hotel and that he is prepared to do all kinds of harness making and repairs on short notice at reasonable prices. The patronage of the public is solicited. See his advertisement elsewhere in this issue.

The new Johnson-Falconer block is making rapid progress this week, the walls now being completed for the first storey. This will be one of the finest if not the finest block in the city. The two front walls are of concrete blocks, which give it a very solid and imposing appearance. In the corner stone which was laid on Monday were placed various articles which will no doubt be viewed with interest by the people of some future generation.

Mr. Stork has arranged to have the train for Coal Creek leave Fernie at 11:30 on the evenings that entertainments are given in the Stork Opera House. This will be appreciated by the Coal Creek people.

Reports from Ottawa strongly indicate that the Dominion elections will take place this Fall. The Globe's correspondent fixes the date some time in November.

SOLE leather, or apology—which?
—Can you tell from appearances?
Good grade of upper leather—shoe fits well,—smart,—stylish!
But how about vitality—flexibility—shape retention—continued satisfaction?
Is the sole of tough, close textured, long fibred leather, which holds the stitches like wax, repels water, bends like buckskin, and wears to the thinness of a wafer without breaking?
Or—is it short grained as linoleum, brittle and stiff like cardboard, without cling to the stitches, and with a chronic thirst for water, like blotting paper?
How do you know which kind of sole leather is in the shoe, under the finish?
How can you hold the Manufacturer responsible for it—or for value,—if the Dealer, not he, regulates the price?
There are shoes made to sell merely, and shoes made to wear.
The Slater Shoe Makers dare not rob the covered up sole of The Slater Shoe, to give an extra selling effect to the visible shoe upper, because their brand, and price, pledges certain fixed values, from which there is no hedging.
The limit of the Makers' direct responsibility is clearly stated —viz:—their own prices, $4.00 and $5.00—stamped on the soles by themselves.
Every pair Goodyear Welted, and the trade mark is a slate frame.

E. R. WOOD IN CITY.

IS PLEASED WITH DEVELOPMENT OF OUR MINES.

The G. T. R. one of Canada's Greatest Enterprises. The Director Speaks of The Trip to Inspect the Proposed Terminal Point.

Mr. E. R. Wood, of Toronto, Director of the Crow's Nest Pass Coal Company, and of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Co., was in the city visiting his brother R. W. Wood, of the Trites-Wood Co., from Friday last till Tuesday of this week. The visiting director inspected the mines at the three collieries and to a FREE PRESS man he expressed much satisfaction at the manner in which these mines had been developed since he was last here four years ago. "Our mines and oven plants are now in excellent shape to produce a largely increased output. Our output as you know has been greatly curtailed in the past owing to the lack of markets. The extension of the Crow's Nest Southern to Fernie now in the course of construction will put us in touch with smelting centres to the south of us and will doubtless open up extensive markets, which in turn will cause greater development at our mines." Mr. Wood also spoke enthusiastically of the permanent and rapid manner in which the city of Fernie was building up since the fire.

Speaking of his mission to the Coast with the other directors of the Grand Trunk Pacific, Mr. Wood stated that they had gleaned all possible information of all the harbors from the Alaskan boundary south by a personal inspection. This information would be largely supplemented by exhaustive reports from engineers on the harbor conditions and the land conditions leading to the harbors. "The selection of the terminus" said Mr. Wood, "is of such vital importance that it will not be made until every detail is looked into. In fact the same care will be taken all along the line of the new transcontinental railway even though an extra year may be required to locate it. The main object will be to make the route as direct and short as possible. A zig-zag course to strike rich tracts of country will not be followed but numerous branch lines will be added to tap these sections."

"Yes", concluded the genial director, "The Grand Trunk Pacific will doubtless be made a political issue in the approaching elections for of course it is the business of the opposition to find fault with the work of the government. Mr. Borden has nothing practical to offer in its place nor can his party offer any reasonable criticism of the G. T. P. contract effected by the government. The Grand Trunk Pacific, next to the Canadian Pacific, is the greatest undertaking this country has ever seen and from an economic point of view its terms of contract are much more satisfactory to the people of Canada."

PAY YOUR DOG TAX.

Pound and Dog Tax By-Law Now in Force in the City.

By-Law No. 4 cited as "The Pound and Dog Tax By-Law" was considered and passed by the city council at its meeting on Tuesday, and since that time it has received the official seal and has been registered with the registrar of the county court. The by-law is therefore now in force.

The principle features of the by-law are the following;—All owners of male dogs are required to pay a tax of $3 each per year, and females, $5 per year. The tax collectable now is good only till Jan. 15th of next year when the tags will be required to be renewed. Dogs not carrying tags may be taken by the dog catcher and impounded, and if not redeemed within the space of 72 hours by the payment of the tax, a one dollar fine each and the sum of 25 cents each per day for expenses the dog will be destroyed or otherwise disposed of by the dog-catcher.

All other animals including fowls, may be impounded by the pound keeper or any person finding the animals running at large within the city limits. Fowls may be redeemed by the payment of a fine of 25 cents each and 15 cents each per day for their keep. Other animals may be redeemed by the payment of a fine of one dollar each and 50 cents per day for its keep. After five days' notice animals impounded may be sold.

Infringements of this by-law may be tried summarily before the city police magistrate and a sentence not exceeding a $100 fine or two months in jail may be imposed.

A SMALL FIRE.

A fierce blaze occurred on Wednesday afternoon at 5 o'clock when the frame blacksmith shop opposite the Roma Hotel was burned down. The building was formerly used as a store house for oils of different kinds, chiefly kerosene oil, and it was saturated with inflammable oils. It caught from a cinder and like a flash the building was in flames, haste having to be used to get the team that was being shod safely out of the building. The fire brigade with the hose reel arrived in time to prevent the flames from catching to the tailor shop about 30 feet to the south. The building belonged to A. B. Trites. The loss of blacksmith tools was slight. A fire in Fernie is a great drawing card and this was no exception to the rule, everybody dropping their business to line up on the street

THE MORRISSEY BRIDGE.

The Provincial Government is calling for tenders for the erection of a wooden bridge over the Elk River at Morrissey for highway purposes. Tenders will be received up to Oct. 6. The drawings, specifications, etc., can be seen at Chief Constable McMullin's office. The successful tenderer will be required to furnish bonds, himself and two sureties, in the sum of $2,000 each.

The plans show an elaborate structure that will cost in the neighborhood of $8,000. A grant of $7,000 has already been made for this bridge. The bridge will have three main piers, each of the two spans being 106 feet 9 inches long.

JESSIE SHIRLEY CO.

The Jessie Shirley Company played in The Stork Opera House on Wednesday and Thursday evenings to large audiences. This is the first engagement booked by the Northwest Theatrical Association and if every Company endorsed by that association gives as much satisfaction Fernie has good reasons for congratulating itself upon becoming a member. Miss Shirley is a star, without doubt the best actress ever appearing on a Fernie stage. The Company containing a dozen members is well balanced, and though Miss Shirley stands high above the others she receives good support throughout. In the "Princess of Patches" Miss Shirley enacts to perfection the sweet little orphan waif who suddenly becomes transfigured into glorious young womanhood, the owner of a large estate. "The Lady from Laramie" gives Miss Shirley a strong hold on American sentiment and the burlesque English characters afford endless innocent amusement.

CHURCH IMPROVEMENTS

At a committee meeting of the Roman Catholic Church on Wednesday evening, it was decided to put on a 22 foot addition to the end of the present church building. It was also decided to build a residence for the priest at the rear end of the lot. Up-to-date plans were submitted for both these proposed erections. The house will be 34x33, with a basement and two storeys. The total improvements will cost about $3,500. The work will be commenced at once to have it completed this Fall.

NEW SCHOOL DISTRICT.

The Coal Creek school which formerly formed a part of the Fernie School District has now been created a new school district. The boundaries were gazetted last week as follows:—Commencing at the Junction of Coal Creek with Elk River, East Kootenay; thence in an northerly direction, following the eastern bank of the said river for a distance of three miles; thence due east six miles; thence in a southerly direction and parallel to the course of Elk River, six miles; thence due west six miles, more or less, to the eastern bank of the said river; thence northerly, following said river to the point of commencement at the junction of Coal Creek with Elk Liver: Except such portions of such district as is included in the Fernie City School District.

The Fernie district has been made to read, all that tract of land embraced within the corporate limits of the city of Fernie.

W. O. Robbins of the B. C. Furniture Co. furnished four homes for newly married couples during the past week.

THE COUNCIL MEETING

CITY FIRE BRIGADE ELECT OFFICERS.

The Telephone Franchise Question laid over. Finance Committee passes First Accounts. Shacks to be Moved from MacPherson Avenue.

The Council met on Tuesday evening and put through considerable business. All the members excepting Alderman Trites were present. The minutes of the last meeting were read and adopted.

A letter was read from H. W. Herchmer complaining of the shacks on MacPherson Avenue. On motion of Aldermen Cree and MacLean the matter was referred to the works and property committee, to be taken up by them and acted on at once, conjointly, if possible, with the C. N. P. Coal Co.

A communication from the Prest Photography Co. asking that they be permitted to continue business in the city without being taxed was read and filed.

Letters were read from the Provincial Secretary's Department notifying the Council of the appointments for the city. These letters were filed.

The building inspectors and fire wardens reported to the council through their chairman, Ald. Beck.

A meeting was held on Sept. 14th when the three members Mr. Mott and Ald. Beck and Cree were present. The committee then passed a resolution asking the council to authorize the publication of By-law No 2, dealing with the fire limits and the prevention of fires. On motion by Ald. Liphardt and MacLean, the report was adopted and the fire wardens were authorized to publish the necessary clauses in the by-law.

Ald. Cree presented the finance committee's report, as follows.

We, your committee of Finance, beg to report that we have examined the following accounts, and having found them correct have issued vouchers to the treasurer for their payment.

J. A. Rennie, for expenses of Returning officer in connection with the first election, including $127.50 for printing and advertising.	$163.50

As new members are appointed the men will be placed somewhat different than at present.

I have secured the rail for the making of a triangle and expect to have it placed in a few days. The rail did not cost the city anything.

Owing to the small working force at present it is the wish of the members of the Department that men who are interested in the welfare of the city become Honorary members of the Department and that our offices of President, secretary, Treasurer, etc. may be selected from the Honorary members. Any assistance that you would be able to give in getting others interested in the Department will be appreciated.

Very truly yours

W. A. Letcher

Chief Fire Department

On motion by Ald. Beck and Lundie the above report was adopted and the appointments therein were confirmed.

The telephone franchise received a lengthy discussion. The city solicitor presented a draft of the agreement and interests of Messrs Mott were represented by Mr. S. Herchmer. The question was finally laid on the table for discussion at the next meeting of the council.

By-law No. 4 relating to the dog tax and pound by-law was reconsidered. No amendments were offered and the by-law was finally passed on motion by Ald. Lundie and Beck.

On motion by Ald. Liphardt and MacLean the sidewalk and ground in front of Mr. H. Manley's residence was referred to the works and property committee.

The meeting adjourned to meet on Monday evening next at eight o'clock "sharp"

Amos Purdy, father of Amos Purdy of this city, recently died at his home in Amherst, N. S. at the age of 79. The Amherst Gazette devotes over a column to an obituary notice of the deceased gentleman. Mr. Purdy was one of the best known and most respected citizens of Cumberland which constituency he represented in the local legislature for several years. AN 'AERIAL' RAILWAY

THE C. P. R. PRESIDENT TALKS AT VANCOUNER.

Sir Thomas Shaughnessy says an Aerial Line will Connect Sullivan Group with Fernie Smelter

The following extract from the Vancouver World's interview with Sir Thomas Shaughnessy, President of the C. P. R. is of special interest to the people of the Crows Nest.

"Well, I never came to the coast with so little news of public interest; but there are one or two points you can have if you wish. For instance, this is my annual inspection tour of the entire line and I must say it is a most satisfactory inspection, and has been since I left Montreal. It is true we have had two incidents to mar our pleasure. The strike of the boiler makers and then this robbery on the Coast—but we have to surmount all such things and come out on top. In fact we have overcome all previous troubles and have a line the like of such does not exist in America to-day. "Why since January 1st last, the Canadian Pacific has spent $31,000,000 in repairs and improvements on the line and we believe" continued the C. P. R. President, "it will come back to us in additional traffic over such a well settled and established line as the C. P. R."

After close questioning Sir Thomas admitted that the Windemere district would be opened next year by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company building a line from near Fort Steele, on the Crows Nest Railway, to Golden on the main line, running the full length of this fertile valley.

"Will you do any other building next year?" asked the reporter.

"Probably, probably. We have several lines in view" said Sir Thomas; "for instance, from Penticton to a point near Ruby Creek on the main line, which would open up a wonderful mining district; and a line from Vernon to Midway to open up the Okanagan Valley. How soon we will build these, or whether we will build them at all, is a question to be settled by the Directors." I might say," continued Sir Thomas, "that an aerial railway will soon be operating from the Sullivan group of mines to the smelter at Fernie, while we may shortly grant the request of the Kootenay Coal Co., through the Dominion government, and build in a branch to their mines on the Flathead River. Of course these things will be thoroughly looked into on our return trip east when we will go by the way of the Crows Nest and see for ourselves just what is required."

Sir Thomas admitted that the Grand Trunk Pacific had roused them a little but refused to state whether or no the Canadian Pacific Railway would open up any country north of the main line.

The work of putting in the foundation walls of the Coal Company office building was commenced this week, Messrs. Oldland and Carosella having the contract. It is found that the Michel rock contains too much iron to make it a desirable material for the walls of the new building, as it will give them a streaky appearance. It is being used for the foundation, however, where it will answer very satisfactorily. Messrs. Oldland and Wright intend to make a search for a better class of stone towards Elko where a good limestone vein is said to exist.

Chief Constable McMullin is at Nelson this week consulting with Chief Constable Bullock Webster on important business. It is understood that one matter being taken up is that of a mutual arrangement with the city council by which the government building may also be used by the municipal authorities. Arrangements may also be made by which the jail may be taken over by the city on a rental system. These arrangements if entered into by the city will be only temporarily until such time as permanent quarters can be obtained.

The Honorable Benjamin Davies, the aged father of Daniel Davies, Comptroller of the C. N. P. Coal Co., passed away at his home in Charlottetown, P. E. I., at the advanced age of 91 years on Friday, Sept. 16th. The deceased was born in Prince Edward Island. He was a prosperous ship builder and merchant and for many years he took a prominent part in the political affairs of the province. He served for many years in the local legislature during some years of which he was a member of the cabinet. He was the first champion of the tenants in their bitter fight against the old feudal landlord system in that province, and through his son Sir Louis Davies the fight was carried to a triumphant finish.

Two of the Extra People

By W. W. HINES

...Copyright, 1908, by T. C. McClure...

Sometimes they are called "supernumeraries," or, in derision, "supes," but stage land and the people themselves take more kindly to the more commonly used term "extra people."

In the big crowd of applicants for the position with the company which was to present the society comedy "My Lady Sylvia" were all sorts and conditions of men and women. The fact that the advertisement inserted by the stage manager in the morning newspapers had stated that each applicant must have evening clothes had not been sufficient to deter the man who slept on a park bench the night before from applying, and next to him in the line you might see the eager, boyish face of some well dressed stage struck young fellow from one of the acting schools.

On the big dark stage were crowded over 200 men and women, and from these twenty men and as many women were to be selected to take part in the ballroom scene. The stage manager passed rapidly from one to another. "Have you a dress suit?" he said to the men, and "Have you a ball gown?" to the women. In spite of the fact that the advertisement had mentioned these as absolutely requisite, fully half of the applicants did not own them, and those who did not were told to go at once. Then the stage manager picked out twenty men and twenty women whom he thought would be able to carry themselves in the ballroom scene without awkwardness.

The men were on one side of the stage and the women on the other. There was no light except that furnished by a single "spot light" set in the rear of the stage, and one could not see across it well enough to recognize even a friend.

Then began the rehearsal of the second act, in which the ballroom scene occurred.

"The scene, ladies and gentlemen," began the stage manager, "is laid in the ballroom of the Duke of Ellerslie. The stage settings and exits I will indicate by chairs. Here is the entrance to the conservatory and here to the supper room. At the rise of the curtain you are waltzing. When the music stops some of you go into the conservatory and some into the supper room, others stand and talk. When Archibald is denounced I want my picture this way."

AT THIS THE MAN STARTED AND LOOKED AT HER INQUIRINGLY.

And he began to group the people about the stage. In the supposed entrance to the conservatory he placed a man and a woman, who, he said, were supposed to be so interested in each other that they did not even look up when Archibald was charged with theft. "Now, you two people keep up a conversation. Count up to a thousand and back again if you can't think of anything to say to each other, but be animated and absorbed in each other."

Neither had noticed the other until then on the dimly lighted stage. And the first look, which brought recognition, caused each to start.

The woman spoke first, and with an attempt at lightness said:

"Who would have ever dreamed it possible that we should meet in such a strange place as this after we told each other goodby in Virginia? Where have you been and what have you been doing?"

"It is strange that we should meet at all," said the man. "I have been doing a little of everything and nothing well. I suppose you have entered one of the acting schools and have determined to try to realize your old dream of going on the stage?"

"Exactly. And you?"

"Oh, I am here because I need the $5 a week the part of a 'super' pays. Things have not gone well with me since I left Virginia. I made a futile effort to establish a law practice in Kansas, drifted to New York to try newspaper work, failed there and came here. This morning I counted up my assets and found that they consisted of $2 in cash and an indefinite prospect of a job on one of the afternoon newspapers. I suppose you know that I cut off all communication with the people at home?"

"And you know nothing of what has happened since you left?" asked the girl.

"Not a word. You know that I have no near relatives there, and when the trouble came I determined that I would cut my friends before they got a chance to cut me. That is an excellent plan," said the man in a cynical tone.

"And you had not heard of the death of my brother?" the girl continued in her questioning.

At this the man started and looked at her inquiringly. Her face was white, and her lips were trembling a little.

"No," he said softly. "I had not heard of that. When did he die?"

"He died very suddenly last year, but before he died he—he told the truth about that Martin matter to my father and me. We could not bear for justice's sake—and—and yours, to keep silence, so every one in Lexington knows now that he was guilty and not you. Finally we came to the conclusion that you must have died, and I—well, I suppose that I thought of the stage because there was nothing else for me to do. You know Uncle Jack left me some money, so I decided to come on here and study. A woman must have some interest in her life, and that seemed all that was left me."

"The first rehearsal is over," said the stage manager in a loud voice. "Report promptly at 10 o'clock tomorrow morning."

Then he came over to where the couple were standing talking to each other and said: "Both of you young people did admirably. You followed out my instructions to the letter. I like to see people take an interest in their work, and I am going to see if I cannot find a small speaking part for each of you. You are too clever to be wasted among the extra people."

The man and the woman looked at each other. There was a question in the eyes of the man and a happy answer in those of the woman.

"We will talk that over when we report in the morning, and, at any rate, we thank you for your compliment," said the man.

But neither of them showed up for the rehearsal next morning.

White Buffalo.

Old buffalo hunters of the western Kansas prairies used to tell of having seen and pursued white buffalo. There were white buffalo, albinos, such as are found at rare intervals in all the families of the animal kingdom, but the number of those which existed in fact and of those which existed purely in the imagination, says the Kansas City Journal, were in wonderful disproportion.

In 1873 old Ben Canfield, who roamed the plains, with his tall, gaunt wife for a companion, followed a herd of buffalo from the northern edge of what is now Oklahoma to the sand hills of Nebraska, thinking to kill a big white bull which he had seen in the herd. After three weeks of patient stalking Canfield did kill the bull, only to find that the whiteness of its appearance was due to a coat of whitewash.

An explanation of this phenomenon would not be needed by people familiar with the natural lime beds of western Kansas. The habit of the buffalo is to roll or wallow in every pool of water or mudhole to which he comes. Canfield's buffalo had simply been rolling in a bed of the native lime, which, when dried in the sun, coated his hide with a kind of plaster.

No doubt these lime holes account for many of the "white buffalo" so often reported by hunters.

Tact.

"You're an authority on tact, Turveydrop, aren't you?" said Miggs.

"I have some reputation in that direction."

"Well, what would you do under these circumstances? I took a lady friend to a matinee a few weeks back, and of course after the performance I offered her tea. She accepted, but to my horror I found I had only tenpence, and she ate at least 15 pennyworth."

"Under those circumstances," replied Turveydrop, "you should have explained that you would have to send an important telegram, and as soon as you got outside you should have left your watch with a friendly pawnbroker."

"Couldn't. He'd got it already."

"Then of course there was nothing for it but an explanation and a hint that enough to pay the bill would be treated as a debt of honor."

"Couldn't do that either. There was an old gentleman sitting at the table, and one can't explain a thing like that before strangers."

"Perhaps not. But what did you do?"

"Well, I watched an opportunity and took that old gentleman's bill and left him mine. His was only sevenpence."

"Mr. Miggs," said Turveydrop, "you need no instruction in that beautiful accomplishment—tact."

Two Ways to Get Strong.

There are two ways to get strong—the active and the passive. To sum it up with one brief concrete illustration, the active treatment would comprise such vigorous exercise of all the muscles of the body in the fresh, rejuvenating air and under the bright and healing sun as one might obtain in the railroad section gang. By this method you are able to relish and digest anything short of shoe pegs.

The passive method goes at it the other way about. Instead of exercising that one may eat, one eats that one may exercise. A diet is prescribed which is almost pure nutriment to begin with and has been so completely predigested that all one has to do is to swallow it down and the food is turned directly into power. By this method, if the billboards are to be believed, aged gentlemen become so frisky that they jump over eight foot fences just to work off their superfluous energy.—Eugene Wood in Everybody's.

WESTERN CANADIAN EDITORS

A series of articles describing their lives, their aims and their influence.

No. 5.

PHILIP PURCELL.

PHILIP PURCELL,
Editor of the Brandon Sun.

Of all the newspaper men of Western Canada, few, outside his own city, are less known than Philip Purcell, editor of the Brandon Sun. In most of the western Canadian towns the local editor is as well known as the mayor or auctioneer. In small communities it is difficult, indeed, well nigh impossible, for the writer or publisher of a newspaper to resist the pressure that persistently forces him forward to the front rank in local affairs. Almost always a man of intelligence, and frequently a man of ability, by virtue of his profession familiar with, and an authority on, all matters of public interest, the irresistible tendency is to compel him, sooner or later, to take positions of public responsibility and trust. To be able to continuously resist the pressure in this direction is to argue personal unfitness, personal disinclination or unusual personal powers of resistance.

Mr. Purcell represents perhaps a combination of the two latter qualities. Those who know him best esteem him one of the very best newspaper men in Western Canada. Had he any aspirations to public office, or any other position of kudos or fame, the means to gratify his wish have long been at his command. But Mr. Purcell is a strong believer in the anonymity of journalism. The English dictum that "all credit is due to the paper, and none to the editor," is a belief to which he subscribes unreservedly, and of the practice of which his whole life is a noteworthy example. In his time he has made many reputations for others, and he has also marred a few. His influence is undeniable, but is never personally exerted. When a man is identified with a movement, whether political, municipal, or in any other capacity bringing him before public attention, the paper Mr. Purcell directs praises or blames, as seemeth to him good, with judicious commendation or unsparing flagellation, but, in either case, without a trace of personal feeling. But nobody ever dreams, in Mr. Purcell's case, of associating the man with his paper. A year or so ago, when he had charge of the Brandon Times, nobody ever heard the expression "Mr. Purcell says so and so." It was always "I see the Times says so." And, now that he has charge of the Sun, the saying is the same. A more complete merging of the identity of the man with the paper he edits it would be difficult to find than that of Mr. Purcell.

It need not be thought, however, that Mr. Purcell is an unapproachable recluse. On the contrary he is, exteriorily at least, the most accessible and popular of men. A constant stream of visitors drops into his office, and in the course of a few minutes chat the genial editor has absorbed news and views as a sponge does water. Mr. Purcell has the true news gathering instinct. He will "get a story" out of the most uncompromising conditions, and "nose out the news" in defiance of every obstacle. And his ability to write a news item brightly and interestingly is as apparent as that of securing the data therefor.

Mr. Purcell is one of the many splendid newspaper men who have graduated from "the case." He is a practical printer, whose care, taste and knowledge of the minutiae of the business has perhaps no superior in the West. He learned his business in the Guelph Herald office, which he entered in 1879. He was then a boy of fourteen, having been born in the Royal City June 7, 1865. He worked his way upward from galley boy, and after eight years came west. Mr. E. L. Christie, Brandon's big bookseller, was establishing a book and job printing office, and of this he put Mr. Purcell in charge. Those were the days when typographic excellence was a factor but little appreciated in the West, but the new job office set to work to cultivate a taste for individualism and quality in printing products, and in consequence speedily gathered to itself a practical monopoly of high-class work from the West. The standard of excellence on which Mr. Purcell insisted was a liberal education to his competitors, and the whole range of quality in the West was of necessity raised to meet the new mark his office had set.

For nine years Mr. Purcell directed the Christie job plant, when in 1897 the concern acquired the Brandon Times, and Mr. Purcell was given the editorial charge and control of the paper. As an editor his career duplicated the success he had already achieved as a job plant manager. The news of the paper was reorganized, and a higher quality of work required. The paper took a new lease of life, and speedily became one of the best paying propositions in the West. Its editorials were usually plain, pithy business talks, of a kind most impressive and convincing. Outside Winnipeg, the Conservative party in the West had no more loyal or able supporter than the Brandon Times, while, as might be expected from Mr. Purcell's record, the make-up and appearance of the Times was a model to the whole western press.

In April last year Mr. Purcell acquired an interest in the Sun, Brandon's daily newspaper. Under his management the paper has improved in both its appearance and its news service. Its advertising patronage and its circulation have both increased enormously, and its hold on popular favor is stronger than ever. Moreover, there is no sign of stoppage to its growth. Mr. Purcell is devoting the same energy to the upbuilding of the Sun as he did aforetime to that of its competitor, and with results as apparent. His striking success in this regard having, in the same town, twice demonstrated his capacity and ability as director of every department of a newspaper, is a record of which any man might well be proud, and which has not been duplicated by any other journalist in the West.

A SNOW EXPERIMENT.

Frozen Vapor From the Action of Sulphide of Carbon.

Two solid bodies, one yellow, sulphur, the other black, carbon, unite under certain circumstances to form a colorless liquid called sulphide of carbon, which must be handled with much precaution on account of its great explosive property. The soluble property of sulphide of carbon renders it valuable to take spots off garments. If its odor is more disagreeable than that of benzine or turpentine, it has at least the advantage of being dispelled quickly in consequence of the prompt evaporation of the liquid. There is nothing equal to it to take off spots of paint on clothes. It does not do it, however, without creating great fear in persons who use it for the first time, for they see on the very place where, to their great pleasure, the paint had disappeared a large white spot, the nature of which is hard for them to define, and the more they brush the more unsightly and the larger that white spot grows. Is then the garment lost? No, for fortunately after a few moments the spot melts away never to show again. It was snow and nothing more. The sulphide of carbon in evaporating takes heat from the cloth and surrounding air, and the result of that is a sudden lowering of temperature sufficient to freeze the vapor of the atmosphere.

Without operating on your clothes you may make the experiment in the following way: Fill a small vial with sulphide of carbon, taking great care to do it far from all flame or heated stove. Then close the bottle with a cork stopper through which you have previously bored a small hole. In this hole place a piece of blotting paper made up into a small roll. The paper must reach to the bottom of the bottle and about an inch above the cork. Within fifteen minutes you will see the outside of this paper covered with snow, the quantity of which gradually increases. The liquid has risen through the pores of the paper as the oil of a lamp through the wick. When it gets to the open air it evaporates, and water contained in the surrounding atmosphere, being brought to a temperature below 32 degrees, has been frozen. If you divide the paper outside of the bottle into several pieces you obtain flowers and most charming effects. You may make the experiment in summer and in the full rays of the sun. The result will be obtained then more promptly, evaporation being more abundant.

The Word "Boodle."

Late American dictionaries acknowledge "boodle" as a word. Dr. Murray quotes from an American paper of 1884, "'Sinews of war,' 'soap' and other synonyms for campaign boodle are familiar." There, however, "boodle" is explained as meaning only "stock in trade," kinship with the Dutch "boedel," a man's stock of business or household goods, being highly probable. Perhaps "boodle," meaning a crowd or pack, as in the phrase, "the whole boodle (or caboodle) of them," is the same word. In that sense "buddle" is found in the early seventeenth century. No doubt it is only a coincidence that there is an old Scotch word "boddle" or "bodle," meaning a twopenny piece, and derived from the name of the mint master Bothwell.

It's Sometimes That Way.

She was surprised when she heard of the engagement, and she showed it.

"Why, I was perfectly satisfied in my own mind that you liked Tom better than George," she said.

"Well, to tell the truth, I did," replied the engaged girl.

"But you say you are engaged to George?"

"Yes, that's true."

"Well, I don't understand it at all."

"Why, it's very simple. You see, George was the one who proposed."

When you have said what you intended to say, stop; when you have written what you intended to write, stop. A practice of this habit will render many after dinner speakers tolerable and many literary persons readable. Verbosity is the ruin of much that might otherwise be endured patiently.

ORIGIN OF "FOOLSCAP" PAPER.

Watermark the Cause and Away Back in the Fourteenth Century.

The word "Foolscap," as applied to paper, is a well known term (says an English contemporary). It is interesting, however, to search for the origin of such a singular epithet. A careful study of some rare old collection of papers would, no doubt, reveal this origin and bring to light, as well, many other curious facts about paper. The oldest known paper in which water-mark appears is that of an old account book in Holland, bearing date 1301; it has a water-mark of a globe surmounted by a cross. Other paper, of a trifle later date, bears a rude representation of a pot or jug. These two marks are, therefore, the most ancient yet discovered.

Paper of the fourteenth century shows a great variety of symbols in water-marks. Conspicuous among these are The "Ram's Face," the "Half Lily," the "Bull's Head," the "Collared Dog's Head," the "Human Head," the "Two Cans" and the "Post Horn." Of these the "Bull's Head" was for a long time the most famous. In the main, however, these designs were but rudely executed. The "Anchor," the "Star" and "Crescents," the "Crown" and the simple "Spring with Leaves and a Fruit or Flower" are but a few of the many other suggestive marks belonging to the paper of this period. Probably one of the most unique designs is that of a fool's cap and bells; and this curious water-mark is undoubtedly responsible for the words "Foolscap," by which name one of our standard sizes of paper is designated. Likewise our "Post paper" received its name from the water-mark of the "Post Horn." The "Open Hand" is said to be the water-mark in the paper on which the "Golden Legende" was printed.

An early Strassburg Bible, although it adopts the common "Bull's Head" on most of its pages, yet distinguishes the two Books of Kings by the more appropriate mark—a "Regal Crown." This leads to the conclusion that in some instances the water-marks have reference to the subject matter of the book, rather than the mere quality or grade of the paper. The frequently found marks "P" and "Y" represent the initials of Philip of Burgundy and Isabella, his wife, the latter name at the time being usually spelled with a Y. After the "Bull's Head," probably the most famous mark was that of the "Dolphin and Anchor." This has perpetuated the ancient symbol of the City of Venice.

Water-marks are made by a comparatively simple contrivance, consisting merely of ornamental figures, in wire or thin brass, which are sewn upon the wires of the mould. Where these wires lie, the paper is rendered thinner and more translucent, thus leaving the desired impression. The originators of this ingenious invention are unknown, though the Spaniards were the first to introduce it into Europe. The right and wrong side of paper can be easily told by holding the sheet up to the light and reading the water-mark; the correct side is the one which reads the right way. Every manufacturer of to-day has his own special device, and the water-marks produced are often delicately shaded, and of the most artistic forms.

When Paul Kruger Was Young.

(As Told by Himself.)

After the Kaffirs had been besieged for some time and suffered greatly from famine, without our getting any nearer to effecting our object, I endeavored to end the matter and bring about a surrender by stratagem. With this object in view, I crept in the dark, unseen, into the cave where the Kaffirs lay hidden. I sat down among them and began to talk to them in their own language, as though I were one of themselves, and suggested that it would surely be better to surrender than die of hunger. Suddenly an armed Kaffir exclaimed:

"Magoa! White man!"

But this dangerous moment also passed, for when the Kaffir shouted "Magoa!" all the others fled deeper into the cave, and I jumped up and ran after them, right into the back of the cave. The Kaffirs now began to hunt for the white man, looking for him in every direction except where he was, in their very midst.

When they had quieted down a little I once more addressed them in their own language, and urged them to surrender. Finally I succeeded in bringing 170 or 180 women and children out of the cave, and it was not until I was outside that they perceived that it was I, and not a Kaffir, who had been talking to them.

Admired His Example.

The London Daily Graphic of July 27 had the following: "At the House of Commons yesterday afternoon Mr. Balfour presented to Mr. Spencer Charrington, the member for Mile End, a silver cup subscribed for by 178 Unionist members in recognition of his loyalty to the party in taking part in the all-night sitting last week. The cup bears the following inscription: "Presented to Spencer Charrington, member of Parliament for the Mile End Division of the Tower Hamlets, to commemorate the twenty-five and a half hours' sitting of the House of Commons, July 19th and 20th, 1904, when he, at the age of eighty-six, voted in nineteen divisions and remained in attendance until the rising of the House. The gift of 178 colleagues who shared his exertions and admired his example."

For the Minister.

Some time ago a worthy farmer had a visit from the minister, who was asked to stop for tea. Their servant, who is a Highland lass, had newly come from the land of heather, and her mistress put her in charge of getting the bread and butter ready for the occasion. Mary, thinking the minister's visit was of unusual importance, as it would be considered in her native land, came and whispered in the good wife's ear: "Will I butter the bread on baith sides?"

And From a Used Up Man He Became as Smart as a Boy.

Orland, Ont., Sept. 19—(Special)—Mr. Chester Loomis, an old and respected farmer living in this section, is spreading broadcast the good news that Dodd's Kidney Pills are a sure cure for the Lame Back and Kidney Disease so common among old people. Mr. Loomis says:

"I am 76 years of age and smart and active as a boy, and I give Dodd's Kidney Pills all the credit for it.

"Before I started to use Dodd's Kidney Pills I was so used up I could hardly ride in a buggy and I could not do any work of any kind. Everybody thought I would not live long. Dodd's Kidney Pills are a wonderful remedy."

The Kidneys of the young may be wrong but the Kidneys of the old must be wrong. Dodd's Kidney Pills make all wrong Kidneys right. That is why they are the old folks' greatest friend.

Candy.

"The talk about adulterated candies," said a manufacturer, "is nonsense. There is a national organization of confectionery manufacturers which makes a business of investigating all reports of poisoning from eating candy and has succeeded in exploding most of such rumors. When a child is hungry it will fill up on almost anything it can get hold of—green apples, for instance, or even gravel or grass. It gets sick, and the mother, knowing it had eaten candy that day, spreads the report that the sweets were poisoned. The organization looks into every such case it hears about and finds out the truth. Competition is too strong for any concern to try to sell adulterated goods. The firm's competitors would immediately analyze the piece which is sold suspiciously cheap, and if it contained injurious ingredients would not be slow in proclaiming the fact. Good business principles demand honesty in the manufacture of candies."

INTERESTING BUDGET FROM BRITAIN

CZAREVITCH IS OBJECT OF PLOT.

In Rue Aboukir the police the other day by a mere accident discovered a Nihilistic printing establishment, says a cable from Paris. Thousands of recently printed circulars point out to the members of the Nihilist groups the necessity of murdering the little Czarevitch of Russia. The following was on the circulars: "The arrival of this accursed baby has overthrown all our plans and he must be killed. Of course, this cannot be done by a bomb, but one of us must try to get access to the Imperial kitchen and watch for an opportunity to poison his food as soon as he is weaned. We feel confident that there will be no lack of noble women among us who will volunteer to perform this heroic deed which is necessary for the welfare of Russia. The death of his son will either kill the weakling who now sits upon the throne of our poor country or make him insane and nothing can then prevent a general uprising against the Romanoffs and the proclamation of a free Russian republic." A list of names of Russian nobles and officials who are to be murdered at all costs, was also found, but no trace has been found which gives any clue to the identity of any of the conspirators. The owner of the house, an old building occupied by many tenants, says that he rented the rooms to a man who claimed he was a Polish noble by the name of Bielewitz, and that, though the other tenants on several occasions had spoken to him of noisy meetings of foreigners in the rooms, he says that he had no idea that his Polish tenant was a Nihilist or that any printing was being done in his apartment. The circulars were all printed on a small hand press which could easily be carried into the house without attracting attention.

REVOLUTIONISTS PLOTTING IN RUSSIA.

Intense activity is being displayed by anti-Russian revolutionary organizations abroad, who have united in an effort to appeal to all the discontented classes in Russia. Incendiary proclamations have been smuggled across the border and distributed broadcast, especially in Polish and Jewish centres, calling upon the population to take advantage of the Government's pre-occupation owing to the war to overthrow the autocracy. Such propaganda in Russia always results in an increase of violence. The proclamations are addressed to the Jews in particular, but the appeals are made to all hotordox sects of workmen and Socialists, says a St. Petersburg despatch. Special appeals are made to the soldiers and peasants. Many proclamations have been seized, and it is proved that they have been printed in London. Until now they have met with little response in Russia' proper, but there have been several manifestations in various parts of Southwestern Russia, where the population is largely Jewish. The largest demonstration it is understood took place at Grodonow, Poland, where 500 persons have participated. The Ministry of the Interior seemingly does not attach great importance to the proclamation.

GOVERNMENT TROOPS PURSUE GIRL BANDIT.

A cable from Sofia says: Government troops have at last succeeded in capturing the woman bandit chief, Dascalitza, and fifteen of her female followers after a hard battle in which three soldiers were killed and many wounded. The female bandit leader, a young girl of twenty-two, was considered the belle of her native town two years ago, and was engaged to marry a government official, who, however, jilted her just before the marriage. It was this which drove her to become a bandit, and for eighteen months she has terrorized the country and made travelling unsafe. Her last feat which caused the troops to follow her to her mountain stronghold, where she was captured, was the plundering and burning of the village of Agenmenitza. The women of the village joined their husbands in the defence of their homes, and two of them were killed.

BEATS THE COLONEL.

Anxious to gain promotion the young lieutenant went to see the commanding officer of the regiment to ask him to send him to the front. The colonel, however, told him that it was impossible as he had already made his choice.

Others in his place would probably have taken his refusal as final, but not so with Kuropatkin. When the colonel, two hours later, left his office he found the young man waiting for him in the hall. "What are you doing here?" the colonel asked. "I am waiting for you to send me to Kokand." Kuropatkin replied, saluting. "Never," blurted out the colonel, and left. When he returned to office eighteen hours later Kuropatkin was still there and this time the colonel had to give in. "The devil take you Alexis Nicolaievitch," he said with a smile. "What can one man do with a man as obstinate as you are? I suppose there is no way of keeping you from the fight, and so you shall go. The Czar has plenty of use for officers of your kind."

POPE'S HANDWRITING TELLS HIS CHARACTER.

A prominent graphologist, in a paper in Rome, gives his impressions of Pope Pius X's handwriting. He first remarks that the handwriting of the Holy Father very much resembles that of two of his predecessors, Pius VII. and Pius IX. His handwriting, which is firm and clear, indicates an artistic temperament and imagination, an unusual intelligence and steadfastness of character. It, furthermore, shows that he is a man of great patience, modest and benevolent, but also a man who under a calm exterior conceals remarkable energy and tenacity of purpose.

A Berlin despatch says: Though there is no longer any doubt that the Japanese have defeated Gen. Kuropatkin in several preliminary skirmishes no one who knows the Russian general has the slightest doubt that in the end General Kuropatkin will drive the Japanese into the sea, and they are confirmed in this belief by the character of the Russian commander-in-chief, who is known never to give up anything that he has made up his mind to accomplish.

A story proving how persistent he is, is told from his early youth when he was still a poor lieutenant.

It was during the war Russia was carrying on in the East in 1866 and only a certain number of the officers of Kuropatkin's regiment were to be allowed to go to the front.

The forthcoming marriage of Mlle. Ruth Hofer, the Swiss heiress, to Mr. Gladstone Dowie, son of the notorious "Profit" Dowie, forms the culmination of manoeuvers commenced in 1901 to entrap the wealthy young lady, says a Geneva, Switzerland dispatch. On the death of her father, a native of Zurich, who made a fortune as a brandy distiller in Genoa, Mlle. Hofer's mother returned to Switzerland and purchased the magnificent castle and park of Lieburg, in the canton of Thurgovie, where she resided with her daughter, leaving her two sons to attend to the distillery in Italy. Some of Dowie's agents reported that she was a docile subject, the "Profit" himself came to Switzerland and converted both daughter and mother from Roman Catholicism to his way of thinking. The income of the mother and daughter, declared at £1,500 each but in reality much larger, soon felt the strain of contributing to the to the funds of Zion and the two sons in Genoa vigorously protested. As the sums handed over to Dowie became larger they brought an unsuccessful action again their mother, and violent quarrels between the sons and the mother and the daughter took place, which were accentuated when the engagement of Gladstone Dowie was announced. Finally, to the indignation of the whole canton, Mlle. Hofer returned with the Dowie's to America, her mother remaining behind and spending large sums in the cause of Zion. Mlle. Hofer, who refused several offers of marriage, at the instance of her mother (who reserved her for the young Dowie) is tall and slight, with fair hair, blue eyes, and a fascinating manner. She is highly educated and speaks several languages and will inherit a large fortune on the death of her mother.

FROM SEAT OF WAR.

WAR SUMMARY.

There has been no renewal of fighting since the retreat of the Russian army under General Kuropatkin to Mukden. Conditions there within both the Japanese and Russian lines indicate that a month may elapse before the great armies in Central Manchuria again enter upon a general engagement. At St. Petersburg the expectation is that the next conflict of moment will occur at Port Arthur, where there has been a respite from heavy fighting for several weeks. The spirit of the Russian troops at Mukden, which was greatly depressed and bordered upon panic following the reverse at Liao Yang, has been restored, and business in the city is reported to be recovering. The Japanese are said to be entrenched on the Taitse river, and the bridge over that stream, which the Russians wrecked as they retreated from Liao Yang has been rebuilt.

WARLIKE PREPARATIONS IN ESQUIMALT HARBOR.

A despatch on Friday from Victoria, B. C., said: Members of the crew of H. M. S. Grafton just returned from Comox, report the presence of the Russian armed auxiliary Korea in the Pacific off the northern coast of Vancouver Island, steaming slowly southward. They expect that the Korea will come to Esquimalt or Victoria. She is described as a larger vessel than the Lena, which put in to San Francisco a few days ago, and is commanded by an officer of high rank in the Russian navy. The news has caused much excitement at Esquimalt, where preparations to deal with her should she enter, are now being made. The same despatch says: H. M. S. Grafton, flagship of the Pacific squadron, enters dry dock at daybreak Friday morning for a rush cleaning. She is to be out in 24 hours. H. M. S. Flora is at her moorings in Esquimalt harbor, under steam, and ready to put to sea on an instant's notice. The Grafton will also be made ready for immediate sea service on issuing from dry dock.

TRADE RETURNS FOR AUGUST.

The trade returns for August show an increase in the imports of $163,677 over the same month last year, while the exports of domestic produce show a decrease of $1,000,000, says an Ottawa despatch. The imports of dutiable and free goods for August were $22,479,102, compared with $22,315,435 for August, 1903. The exports were $21,826,954, as against $23,498,885 for August last year. There was a substantial increase in every branch of trade except minerals and lumber. But for a decrease of $2,200,000 in minerals there would have been a considerable increase in the month's returns. The decrease in lumber was a little over $300,000. The fisheries, agricultural, animals, their products and manufactures all show good increases.

CANADIAN NEWS.

THE DOMINION'S RECENT HAPPENINGS.

GIRL KIDNAPPED.

Miss Jennie McCurdy asserts that she met Oliver J. Sawrey over two years ago, and has since been keeping company with him, says a Toronto despatch. A few days ago she found out that he had given her a wrong name—Holmes—and that he was already married. She informed him she would not see him again, whereupon he called an her at 185 Church street, and by producing a revolver, got her to accompany him to Rosedale, where he said he was going to end her existence. At the corner of Bloor and Church streets the complainant declares that she pointed out to Sawrey it was useless to go any farther, because she might as well be shot first as last. Fearing he would carry out his threats she consented to go to his home at 140 Portland street and enter the house as a roomer. On Friday, she says, she got a note out to her sister, who came and demanded admission. Before he would permit her being seen, Miss McCurdy maintains, Sawrey put a razor dangerously near her throat and told her what would happen if she said she was there against her wishes. By a good deal of manouvering she escaped with her sister and told her story to Policeman Westcott, who reported all the circumstances to the morality department, with the result that Sawrey's arrest followed.

CENSUS OF THE BUFFALO.

A world census of all the American buffalo or bison now living has just been completed by Mark Sullivan of Boston, Mass., who achieved his remarkable results by correspondence. He conducted a similar census about four years ago and found that the number of bison then in existence numbered 1,204. The latest census fixes the number at 1,233, an increase of 29 in four years. The largest group is in the Pablo Allard herd on the Flathead Indian reservation in Montana. It comprises 330. The next largest wild herd is west of the Great Slave Lake, Northwest Canada, numbering 200. The James Phillip herd, Fort Pierre, S. D., numbers 160, and the J. J. Hill group at Cardigan, Minn., 18. In the Banff (Rocky Mountain) park are 45; in the Yellowstone park, 70; at Winnipeg, Denver and other city parks, 30, and at the Gold Night ranch, Texas, 50. The average value is six hundred dollars, or the total nearly $800,000. A mysterious herd in Lost Park, Colo., was not included.

ANOTHER FIRE IN HALIFAX.

Fire broke out at one o'clock Sunday morning in Halifax, two blocks north of Thursday's conflagration, and burned fiercely. The fire started in Black Bros. Ltd.'s hardware warehouse, and the whole harbor was lighted up. In the Black Bros. hardware establishment were stored large quantities of gunpowder and dynamite, which were dumped into the harbor by order of Mayor Crosby, north of the scene of the fire, and the The Imperial ordnance wharf is just military forces were called out. After a strenuous fight the fire was got under control. The properties destroyed include Forban's sail loft, customs bonded warehouse, and the warehouses of Black Bros. & Co. These warehouses were fitted with valuable goods, and the total loss will be $100,000. A large force of soldiers and sailors and the Dartmouth fire company were called to assist the Halifax force, so threatened was the blaze. The fire was undoubtedly of incendiary origin.

HAMILTON MAN DISAPPEARS.

Quite a sensation has been caused in Hamilton, Ont., by the disappearance of Benjamin Walling, secretary of St. Luke's Sunday School, and a prominent churchman. On Sunday he went with his wife and child to Sunday school, and then left them to visit an old man at the House of Refuge. He has never been seen or heard from since, and the police have been working on the case. He had been married eight years and had one child. No reason is given for his disappearance.

BIG CONCERN PASSES INTO AMERICAN HANDS.

S. H. C. Minor, organizer and president of the Granby Mining & Smelting Company, on his arrival in Montreal the other day, informed his friends that he had sold his controlling interest in the big smelting and mining company to J. J. Hill, and other interests of the Great Northern Railway of the United States. The company, which is the largest of its kind in British Columbia, and has always been controlled by Canadians, now passes under American control. The entire business of the company, which totalled close on to $50,000 a month, has up to the present time been handled by the Canadian Pacific Railway, but by the change in ownership the entire business will be handled by the Great Northern Railway, which has a branch line to the works.

FELL UNDER WHEELS OF A THRESHER.

A bad accident occurred near Macdonald, Man., Saturday afternoon. A man named Thomas Askin, while driving a team hitched to a portable threshing engine, was crushed to death under the wheels. No one saw how it occurred, but it is presumed he attempted to climb upon the seat in front of the engine while it was moving, and fell in front of one of the wheels, which passed over his chest, killing him instantly. His brother, James Askin, who owns the threshing outfit, was following a short distance behind the outfit, and seeing something wrong came up to find his brother dead. Deceased leaves a wife and six children at Allenford, Ont. He came west about four weeks ago to work for his brother during the harvest season. The body, accompanied by James Askin, left for Allenford Monday.

A DUCK HUNTER SHOT.

Garfield Sheppard, a young man, 21 years of age, while duck shooting near Echo Lodge, met with a terrible accident, which resulted fatally, says a Brockville (Ont.) despatch. The gun was lying in the boat, and was in some way discharged, tearing the front part of Sheppard's body, exposing the stomach and liver, and wounding the liver severely. Part of the breast bone is gone, and several ribs as well. Two doctors are in attendance. A remarkable thing is that after being wounded in this horrible manner Sheppard actually walked up a hill after landing near the scene of the shooting.

LECTURER FOR ST. JOHN'S COLLEGE.

Edward J. Williamson, M. A., of Kingston, Ont., has been appointed lecturer in German and French in St. John's College, Winnipeg, affiliated with the University of Manitoba. He graduated as master of arts at Queen's in 1899, and for two years was tutor in modern languages there. The following two years he studied at Leipsic University, Germany, and for a short time at the University of Besancon, in France.

DEFAULTER LEAVES FOR WEST.

Charles Black, clerk for the Canadian American Music Company, Toronto, left that city a few days ago ostensibly to start a store in Brandon. Before leaving he admitted a shortage of $3,500 in his accounts, and a warrant has been issued for his arrest.

MR. COWAN'S SUCCESSOR.

INCREASE IN C.P.R. EARNINGS.

The C. P. R. traffic receipts for the week ending Sept. 14 were $933,000; same week last year, $879,000.

The second cycle of musical festivals of the Dominion of Canada will be inaugurated in the spring of 1905 by Mr. Charles Harriss, says a despatch from Ottawa. Thirty-seven choruses, representing 6,000 voices, will take up the work of preparation during this coming winter. Sir Alexander Mackenzie will again be associated with Mr. Harriss in the great work.

HARVESTER WORKS CLOSED—9,000 OUT.

Three plants of the International Harvester Company in Chicago failed to open on the 12th inst., throwing 9,000 men out of work for several weeks. The plants closed are the following: McCormick Harvester works, 4,000 men; Deering Harvester works, 3,500 men; Plano Harvester works, 1,500 men. While officials of the company declare that the shutdown is merely for the purpose of taking stock, the employes believe that a reduction in wages is contemplated. If this is attempted a big labor war involving machinists, blacksmiths and other factory hands, including thousands of laborers, is almost sure to result. Last year the employes, after a big strike, secured wage agreements with the harvester combination, and the union officials do not intend to give up the advantages then gained. General Manager C. S. Funk of the company was asked: "Is it the intention of your company to start up later without an agreement with the unions and at lower wages?" "The question of wages for the future has not been considered," he said. "It is possible, however, that some rearrangement will have to be made to equalize the rate of pay in the various departments." The International Harvester comuany is now a member of the Chicago Employers' Association, and would be backed by that organization in case of a labor war. Through the new employment bureau it is said that all the skilled mechanics required could be secured to fill the places of strikers with very little delay. Any attempt to run the three factories on the "open shop" principle would meet with resistance. Most of the present employes are foreigners, and in case of a strike the police fear a repetition of last year's riots and disorder.

Winnipeg, Thursday, Sept. 15, 1904

WHEAT—We have to record a remarkable strength in the wheat markets during the past week. At the close of last week they had quieted down to steadier level, and in the three days ending the 10th inst. very little change occurred in quotations. On Saturday afternoon, however, the United States Government monthly crop report was issued giving crop conditions as at Aug. 1st. It is usual to give the condition of winter and spring wheat combined, but this year the condition of spring wheat only was given. It was put at 62.2 against 87.5 last month. This was considered a very bullish showing, and on Monday morning the American markets responded to it without hesitation. Cables were also strong. Along with the foregoing the weather of the Northwest became very unfavorable for harvesting. A general rain and wind storm began on Monday morning and lasted until Tuesday afternoon. The combination of bullish events caused an advance on Monday of around 4c, and another advance on Tuesday of 3c. This sharp advance had a fair setback on Wednesday, but to-day the speculative markets have been again very active, prices closing ½c. to 1c. over yesterday, and on the week these markets show advances of from 6c. to 10c. per bus., the larger advances being on wheat for immediate delivery, the smaller on the deferred futures. The passing of another week has given additional evidence of the strong situation into which the world's wheat market has been developing. While no absolute scarcity of wheat and flour shows itself at the present date there might develop great scarcity in the first half of 1905. This will depend on the progress of the crops in Argentina, Australia and India. At the present time the Argentine and Australian crops are in their growing stage and harvest is from two to three months distant. So far they have had very favorable weather both at seedtime and for growth since, and the acreage under crop has been considerably increased, probably not less than 15 per cent. over last year, when the acreage was the largest on record, and also the yield was larger than in any previous year. An increase in the yield of these countries this year would therefore be very important in its influence on wheat prices later on, but should the latter part of their growing season develop the prospect of small yield then we might see the level of wheat prices become higher than they have been in the last twenty years at least. The crop of India comes on about two months later than the crops in the Southern Hemisphere, so that it is almost too early yet to mention its prospects, but so far as present prospects go they are favorable for the planting and growth of an increased acreage. In regard to an aggregate yield of this year's crops in Europe and America latest information tends to curtail the anticipated yield. European wheat crops seem now to be probably 250,000,000 bus. under last year's yield, and feed grains, such as corn and oats, are much less also. In America the results shown by thrashing in the Northwestern spring wheat country are confirming the most pessimistic estimates as to yield and quality, and besides that, harvest work is being delayed by unfavorable weather. Under such a general situation it is no wonder that wheat prices are high compared with recent experience. As is natural the speculative side of the trade has first taken hold of the situation, but now the great body of the grain trade, including merchants, millers, flour dealers, and last but not least the bread bakers, are getting to understand that the situation is not temporary. The trade has held back from buying at high prices, consequently stocks in all hands are at a low ebb, but everyone is now getting accustomed to wheat at above the dollar mark, and regular demand will absorb supply as it is offered, and prices for some time to come will keep up and at times advance under the influence of speculative buying, and this will continue until in the course of time supply will run ahead of demand. This may come more quickly than many people would expect, because such high prices for wheat are a bonanza in the new undeveloped wheat countries where land is abundant and cultivation under modern facilities is quick and cheap. The visible supply increased last week 301,000 bushels, against an increase of 827,000 bus. the previous week and an increase of 816,000 bus. last year. The world's shipments were 10,432,000 bushels, against 11,032,000 bus. the previous week and 12,360,000 bus. last year. The world's visible supply, according to Bradstreet's, increased 2,800,000 bus., against an increase of 3,978,000 bus. the previous week and an increase of 6,403,000 bus. last year.

In Manitoba wheat there has been practically nothing doing during the week except that trading in the option market for future delivery has shown a slight activity whenever the American markets were strong and advancing. Cash business, however, is at a standstill because the old crop is cleaned up and the movement of new wheat is delayed by unfavorable weather. The number of cars of wheat inspected during the fortnight ending Sept. 14 is only 81, against 950 for same two weeks last year, which shows the difference in the movement. Prices at close of business to-day are: 1 Northern, $1.05¾; 2 Nor., $1.02¾; 3 Nor., 96½c. No. 4 wheat, 88c.; Feed wheat, 60c.; No. 2 feed, 51c., spot. September or October delivery. On the option market October closed at $1.05¾; December, $1.03¾; May, $1.07¾; all prices being for in store Fort William and Port Arthur.

HARVEST HAND JUMPS FROM CAR WINDOW.

After handing his money to a woman for safe keeping a harvest hand jumped through a window of a car, near Fort William, one day last last week. The man, who is supposed to be James Walker, of Halifax, N. S., has not been seen since. He was on the Imperial Limited and the incident occured two miles west of Schreiber. A search party sent out from that town failed to find any trace of the unfortunate man.

The Fernie Free Press

ESTABLISHED 1898.

THE FERNIE FREE PRESS, FERNIE, BRITISH COLUMBIA

FRIDAY, SEP. 23, 1904

One by one, though a little late, the Government is redeeming its promises made through our local member to this constituency. The Morrissey bridge is the latest that bears evidence of early fulfillment. The plans call for a structure fully as substantial as promised, and when complete it will be a credit to South East Kootenay.

* * *

Every day our real estate agents turn away applicants for houses to rent. There are insufficient houses in this city to accommodate its population. Those who own residential properties find they pay a high rate of interest in rentals and it is surprising that more capital is not put into this form of investment.

The appointment of a resident Supreme Court Judge for the Kootenays to fill the present vacancy is a question which vitally affects the people of Fernie and the other Crows Nest towns. Situated as we are in the extreme corner of the province the disadvantages of being obliged to refer all Supreme Court matters between the regular sittings to a judge residing at the Coast are more apparent than at any other point in the Kootenays. Nelson is centrally situated in the Kootenays and the appointment of a Supreme Court Judge to reside in that city meets with universal favor throughout the Crows Nest as it apparently does in the other parts of the district.

M. A. Beale of Cranbrook was credited by the Nelson Daily News of Sunday's issue with making statements with reference to Fernie that called forth some strong opinions on the part of those citizens in Fernie who noticed the paragraph. Fortunately Mr. Beale was misquoted and he lost no time in having the matter set right. This is not the first instance that mis-statements relative to Fernie have appeared in the News due to the same cause. The citizens of Fernie are not sorry they have incorporated their city and though it may be a little early to form an opinion, any opinion that is formed is certainly not unfavorable to the step that has been taken.

Reports apparently based on excellent authority have once more appeared in print asserting that J. J. Hill has secured the controlling interest in the Granby Mining and Smelting Co. The Spokesman Review has one despatch from New York stating that at the annual meeting of the Company to be held at Montreal on Oct. 4th S. H. C. Miner the present head of the Company will retire to be succeeded by Mr. Hill's nominee. Mr. Miner in an interview with the Toronto Star admitted that he had sold out his controlling interests in the Granby Mining and Smelting Co. to J. J. Hill and other interests of the Great Northern Railway. "The entire business of the Company, which totals about $50,000 a month, has up to the present time, been handled by the C. P. R. but by the change in ownership the entire business will be handled by the Great Northern Railway which has a branch line to the works." This change in the management of the Granby will doubtless result in the purchase of more fuel from the C. N. P. Coal Co. which since the opening of the International Coal Co's. Mines at Coleman has fallen off somewhat. Mr. Hill will very naturally prefer to purchase from mines in which he is interested and to transport the fuel over the Great Northern rather than over the C. P. R.

MASTER and SLAVE

By... T. H. THORPE

Copyright, 1901, by T. H. Thorpe.

"Because I heard the arguments in the supreme court and thought I observed their effect upon the judges and the assembled lawyers. The whole matter is exceedingly distasteful to me, as you know; still I could not well decline my brother's invitation to be present at the trial of the appeal. Zabourin made a learned and forcible effort for Quillebert, quoting authorities and drawing deductions which appeared absolutely unanswerable. But Horace, with an ease at which I marveled, met every proposition, and his irresistible logic picked it into shreds. He exposed the sophistries of Zabourin's contention and flung them aside. With childlike simplicity of language he made Leon's case so plain that every layman understood the principles on which it rested as thoroughly as did the most learned lawyer, and with the eloquence that comes of unaffected earnestness he held up the justice and equity supporting the decision of Judge Tailleur. He appeared to carry every man within hearing of his voice, and when he concluded it seemed that all doubts of the righteousness of his case had been demolished. His peroration was beautiful and pathetic without being theatrical—in fact, was what they call a prose poem. I was as much amazed as any of his hearers could have been. I cannot divine when and where he got all the wealth and variety of learning he displayed in that address."

Laure was interested, but not pleased, by Evariste's glowing account of his brother's brilliant and masterly oratory.

"Where is M. Horace?" she asked. "He came up on the boat with you?"

"No. Why?"

"Oh, nothing. I only supposed he had returned with you and stopped at Estelle's. That is what he will do when he does come back."

"Laure, why do you persist in such allusions. You surely know full well how they wound me."

"Of course I do. But it is not to wound you. No; it is to make you see who they are that care nothing for your happiness. That girl is as indifferent to you as the pearl whose beauty she vainly affects. She reaches for fortune; you have none. She aspires to American ladyship; you are a creole. Stay with your kind, my friend. It will pay you best in the long run."

This speech was a whip cut to Evariste's spirit, and words of chagrin and anger rose to his lips, yet he forced them back and, consummate actor that he was, gave no sign of his suffering.

"You have not told me where your brother is," Laure said, fondling the crescent lovingly.

"I left him at New Orleans talking politics. One hears nothing else there now. The supporters of Breckinridge encourage Horace to run for congress, and he is quite willing to do so, though he tells them he is opposed to the extension of slavery. They regard the race as being entirely between Mr. Breckinridge and Mr. Douglas. Lincoln's candidacy is laughed at."

"If the lawsuit should be decided against M. Horace, he will be bitterly opposed in this parish," Laure observed.

"That is a very big if," Evariste replied.

"And if Lincoln should win a great many plans will be upset. I know nothing of politics, but they say these things on the highlands." Laure smiled apologetically.

"You must make that 'if' still larger, Laure. The great heads in the city will hardly admit that Lincoln is running."

"I have heard my grandfather say there were just two smart men in this parish—Baldouino and Quillebert—one gifted as if from God, the other as if by the devil."

"Well?" queried Evariste.

"I have also heard that Baldouino said not long ago that if both Douglas and Breckinridge are candidates to the end Lincoln will be elected president, and Quillebert has said that he will win the suit in the supreme court." Laure had spoken with a positiveness that was not without its effect upon Evariste, and as he pursued his journey homeward he seriously revolved in his mind these possibilities and their bearing upon his own aims and interests.

Oakfell returned a week later, and his supporters set actively to work to secure a favorable delegation to the convention called to met at Baton Rouge on the 15th day of October. They were successful, though considerable strength was developed against him. It was believed he would receive the nomination, which would be tantamount to election. His friends proudly anticipated the distinction his career in congress would give to the parish and had agreed upon three representative citizens to accompany him in a short canvass of the district after the convention. He had spent a happy hour with Estelle and was sitting in his plantation office thinking of her when Leon brought letters and papers from New Orleans just arrived by way of the Red River landing. One bulky envelope bore the card of a professional friend of whom he had requested the earliest possible news of the court's judgment. The letter said:

"I caused a copy to be made of the opinion handed down by the supreme court this morning in the suit of Leon Queyrouze versus Quillebert for freedom and mail it by today's boat in order that you may know the result before tomorrow's newspapers can reach you. The chief justice was the organ of the court and had the concurrence of three of the associates. One justice, as you will notice, dissented."

Quivering with interest, he read the following dictum of the highest court of the state, penned by its chief justice:

"The plaintiff, with his mother and other children, were inventoried as belonging to the estate of Queyrouze. One Poydre, acting as agent for the heirs, made sale of the property, with the exception of the boy Leon. He sold the mother of the plaintiff and her other children to the defendant Quillebert. Leon himself was expressly exempted from the sale, being then in the keeping of one Mrs. Wyley, to whom he had been sent by the expressed wish of Queyrouze. About nine years after the defendant obtained possession of the plaintiff and enjoyed the benefit of his labor until he ran away after the institution of this suit.

"There is testimony in the record to show that Queyrouze and his heirs intended that Leon should be free and some conversations in which he said he was free. The plaintiff, however, never asserted his freedom and never left the service of the defendant until he absconded after the bringing of this suit. On the contrary, he admitted he was a slave to a person whom he wished to bargain for him.

"However desirous the heirs of Queyrouze may have been that the plaintiff should become free, their wishes alone could not make him so. This being a matter affecting the public order, it required the action of the public authorities before it could be brought about.

"It is apparent that in this controversy it is a matter of no consequence who is the owner, whether Quillebert or the heirs of Queyrouze. The only question which we can consider is whether the plaintiff had acquired the status of a free person of color prior to the promulgation of the act of 1857, which now prohibits emancipation.

"It is quite clear that the plaintiff has never enjoyed his liberty for one week, much less the space of ten years. He has been all his life under the control of others, who have enjoyed the benefit of his labor. It matters not, so far as this controversy is concerned, whether the defendent Quillebert has acted in good or bad faith or whether he has acted against the wishes of the heirs of Queyrouze. If the plaintiff cannot show the facts on which the law declares his emancipation or freedom, he must fail in his action.

"The judgment of the lower court, which was in favor of the plaintiff, must be reversed."

Oakfell with burning eyes read again these words of the chief justice: "It is a matter of no consequence who is owner, whether Quillebert or the heirs of Queyronze." "It matters not whether the defendant Quillebert has acted in good or bad faith or whether he acted against the wishes of the heirs of Queyrouze."

Sick at heart, he let fall the paper and lowered his head, murmuring:

> "He finds his fellow guilty of a skin
> Not colored like his own and, having power
> To enforce the wrong, for such a worthy cause
> Dooms and devotes him as his lawful prey."

From his gloomy reflection he was recalled by the voice of Leon at the door, saying:

"Mr. Horace, are you sick? Is anything wrong?"

"Yes; I never was so sick as now, and something has gone wrong. Leon, the supreme court has adjudged you a slave, the slave of Quillebert."

"O merciful God!" Leon groaned, clutching a chair for support. "Save me from that man, Mr. Horace, or kill me!"

"Save yourself. Take a good horse from the stable and fly for your life. Never stop until you are where that human wolf cannot reach you. The cursed news may not be known to any one else in the parish for two days yet, and, if so, you will have that much start. Take this and go." Oakfell gave him a sum of money.

"Some day I will prove I am grateful for all your goodness, sir," said the poor fellow, retreating from the door. Soon the muffled sound of a horse speeding over the dusty road was heard, and Leon was again a runaway slave.

The newspapers of the city arrived two days later, bringing the intelligence of the supreme court's ruling, with editorial remarks commending it as a timely check to abolitionist propaganda. Great was the rejoicing on the highlands. The cabarets had a day of business recalling that of the trial. Dede did so thriving a trade that he was put to bed early in the afternoon, leaving the harvest to the madame. At night bonfires were lighted, and ponies clattered and flitted across the prairie, their courses indicated by the cracking of pistols and shrill cries of "Long live Quillebert!" "Down with Oakfell!"

The victor received the congratulations of his admirers at Dede's with profuse entertainment of gumbo and rum, but with the tranquillity of a strategist who had foreseen success planned through feigned retreat. Pratjean's lips and eyes were beyond control and continued to dance long after the hot rum had stilled his tongue.

Oakfell assembled his friends and, explaining that the decision could be used as an effective weapon against him in the convention, requested their leave to withdraw his candidacy. After much discussion the justness of his view was conceded, and the consent he desired was given. A formal note was received from Pratjean demanding the return to his client Quillebert of the slave Leon, who, the writer said, was harbored by Oakfell. It was consigned to the flames. A little letter came through the local post saying, "I suffer for poor Odette's grief, but more because you suffer and through my fault." This was not consigned to the flames.

The result of the litigation was a severe shock to the young lawyer. His confidence in his fellow men was weakened. He lost respect for authorities. Ambitions seemed but snares to peace of mind. Wrong, chicanery and cruelty appeared essential to success. His brother, upon whom he had lavished so much affection, could not or did not cheer his drooping spirit. The time was sadly out of joint; the adjustment was that of the powerful, "brief, comfortable and wrong."

"Save me from that man!"

Thus dejected and gloomy, he wandered for days about the plantation, not caring to read, avoiding converse, unable to feel interest in what had formerly engrossed him, when in the early days of November came the intelligence, astounding, incredible, yet verified, that Abraham Lincoln had been elected president of the United States.

CHAPTER XIII.

TURBID WATERS.

TIME now seemed to quicken its flight. Events trod on the heels of events in scramble and hurry of occurrence. Disintegration of institutions, enterprises and associations, public and social, appeared everywhere like a corroding disease, and demoralization was the rankest of growths. Secession, civil war, suspension of industries, gatherings and departures of volunteers, dissensions and suspicions, dread of the negro—dumb cause of contention—gave somber color to the life of fair Avoyelles.

The first banner flung to the breeze was the flag of France, hoisted by Quillebert over his dwelling, thus warning both factions that molestation of him or his would be at the peril of his imperial master's displeasure.

Oakfell was instant to take his stand. Though discountenancing negro slavery, he was wedded to the doctrine of state sovereignty and in its defense buckled on his sword. He was chosen lieutenant of the company of horse organized under the captaincy of Judge Honore Victor Tailleur, whom Pratjean succeeded on the bench.

The day approached for the company to proceed to New Orleans for assignment to its regiment and brigade, to be forwarded to the front. The half brothers held a long conference in the plantation office.

"Evariste," Horace said, "I do not concur in the general belief that this strife will end in 90 days. My forecast is that it will extend into years and will be fierce and desolating. My life has known three sweet affections which have been as incense to it. The love I bore your mother still clings to her memory. All my yearnings for kinship have been centered upon you, whom I have cherished as son, brother and friend and have sought to shield from the rude experiences of life. Though absent, I wish to leave my protection with you and for that entreat you to promise that under no circumstances will you enter the military service during the coming war. I leave with you full authority to manage all my interests, and this will supply you with ample means to purchase exemption from any call which may be made for troops. Promise me, Evariste."

"Would not that be taken as cowardice?" asked Evariste.

"Not necessarily," replied Horace, "after what I will say to our friends on the subject. But, even if it should, make that sacrifice for my sake and give me your promise, for should you enlist my anxiety for you would unman me as a soldier, and should you be killed this would never be home for me again. Promise me, my boy."

Evariste walked to the door and looked out into the starlit night. Returning, he gave his hand to Horace and said, as if he had struggled:

"I promise, brother."

'HOW GOES THE NIGHT?'

PREACHER SCORES BESETTING SINS OF MODERN SOCIETY.

EVILS COVERED BY DARKNESS

Vulgarities and Wickednesses of a Vile Theatre Pointed Out—The Saloons and the Dance-Halls Also Come in For Condemnation—A Dance That Cost the Life of a Saint—An Eloquent Appeal.

Entered according to Act of Parliament of Canada, in the year 1901, by William Bain, of Toronto, at the Dep't of Agriculture, Ottawa.

Los Angeles, Cal., Sept. 11.—In this sermon the preacher considers some of the besetting sins of modern society and warns Christians against yielding to their allurements. The text is Isaiah xxi., 11, "Watchman, what of the night?"

Have you an active imagination? If so, you do not need to go to Palestine, the land in which the ancient prophet wrote, for an illustration of the words of my text. There are watchmen everywhere—men who at night, while others sleep, are on guard protecting property and by their vigilance foiling the plans of thieves and conspirators who prowl around in the darkness.

I was deeply impressed with this duty of the watchman by a spectacle I witnessed some years ago in the British capital. It was that of the ancient ceremony, still observed, of mounting guard at the old Tower of London. This tower, as you may know, is not really a tower, but a collection of buildings covering an area of thirteen acres. They are surrounded by a strong and high wall in which there are four gates, called respectively the Iron gate, the Water gate, the Traitors' gate and the Lion's gate. Within those walls some of the ancient kings held their courts and passed the nights in wild orgies and licentious dissipations. It was the place also where some of them defended themselves behind the barred gates against domestic enemies, as well as foreign foes. Here also many of the insurrectionists were incarcerated and put to death. The execution axes which to-day hang upon the museum walls were wetted with the blood of many victims. Upon the blood-stained block, which is still kept as a gruesome reminder of the awful past, many bodies were decapitated. The frightened eyes that looked up at the rising sun for the last time from that block did not all belong to the masculine sex. There poor Lady Jane Grey died as well as the handsome Earl of Leicester, and Lords Kilmarnock and Balmerino and Lovat.

But I am digressing from my subject. I would not have you loiter longer among these historic stones merely to see a few crown jewels and regalia, which are guarded in the jewel house. I would not have you linger longer among the breastplates and helmets and battleaxes and pikes and spears and casting nets of chivalric times which are now on exhibition side by side with the guns and bayonets, and swords and cannon of the modern British soldiers. But I would hasten you out into the open square, where the shrill fifes are calling and the rolling of the drums tell us the guards are forming to take their places by and in these watch-towers, just as the watchmen did away back in the time of William the Conqueror and during the reigns of the Plantagenet kings.

"Stand back, stand back!" cry the officials to the sightseers. "You must keep off the parade ground and give the soldiers room." A field officer in gold lace and clanking sword comes out of his quarters and takes his position on the right of the ground. "Fall in, fall in!" cry the corporals to their men. The different squads are quickly formed into one line. The sergeants report to the adjutant, the adjutant reports to the commandant of the Tower. The evening orders are now read. The bandmaster lifts his signal. The musicians pass down in front of the line and wheel back to their places. Tattoo is sounded. The flag is lowered. The sunset gun's guttural voice is heard. Then the soldiers march to their respective posts, and through the night, as on every night for well nigh 800 years on every tower and at all the gates a soldier is stationed as a military watchman to keep vigil until the day breaks.

It is merely formal routine duty that the British sentinel on the tower now has to perform, but in former times there was need of all his vigilance. From his watch-tower he might see the approach of a foreign foe, or in some part of the great slumbering city spread out on all sides below him he might witness the outbreak of insurrection. We can imagine how anxious in those unquiet times might be the tone of the officer of the guard, who, visiting him, would ask, "Watchman, what of the night?" That means: "How goes the night? What is the news? Tell me what you have seen. What are the prospects ahead?"

As I see the sun sink behind the Los Angeles hills I see ignited one by one the different lights of the many places of pernicious amusement. These different lights, as destroying flames, begin to beckon the young men and the young women into their fascinating haunts. I see the stage curtains lifted before many an alluring group of actresses and chorus girls, such as was seen in the wealthy capital of Samaria on the night when a disreputable dancing girl, Salome by name, danced among the licentious guests of her stepfather, Herod, and by sinuous movements of limb and suggestive look of sin so captivated the drunken King that he promised her anything that she might ask of him, even to the half of his kingdom.

John the Baptist lost his life on account of that dance. But many a man, not, like John, in prison, but in orchestra chair, has lost his head, both morally and spiritually, as the result of an immoral show on the theatre boards. There may be good theatres. I know that some people whom I respect attend the theatre. But I know there are also vile theatres. I also know some of these vile theatres are attended regularly by some so-called good people. And I also know that these vile shows are the haunts of spiritual and physical death.

When I wrote this sermon there lay upon my study desk a powerful editorial upon "Stage Abominations." It lately appeared in one of the greatest secular newspapers of the present day. This editorial was not written by a minister, but by a layman who perhaps never enters a church. It said: "It does not seem possible that the public will much longer tolerate the abominations that are constantly being inflicted upon it from behind the footlights of the theatres of the present day. Surely the vulgarities and indecencies of actors and actresses of the present day who substitute filth and vile insinuations for wit and humor are not so licensed that they can be allowed to go on forever without rebuke. The nasty and offensive jokes, the immoral action and the language of the slums and the vile resort are all too frequently forced upon the ear and seen in the streets and public places of the town without being flaunted in our faces when we pay good money for a seat in the theatre. If the stage has become so impoverished that it must resort to dirtiness and suggestive vice to maintain itself it were better to abolish it entirely as an institution." Then this editorial goes more into detail to denounce the trend of the modern theatre which blasts the lives of its audiences by what they see as well as hear. Does any man in the face of such a powerful philippic declare that thousands and tens of thousands of men and women every year are not morally contaminated by the filthy streams of conversation which playwrights and actors and actresses roll over them in the theatres in the long winter nights?

But as a watchman I must not allow my eyes to follow only one class of people. While the theatre audiences are moving through the streets to witness these distorted and often impossible plays, through the open doors of the saloons I can see the stages on which are being enacted scores and hundreds and thousands of tragedies in real life. Each one of these tragedies is as pathetic as that of a Hamlet, an Othello, a Merchant of Venice. Each one has more of pathos within it than could ever be found in the misery and woe of Dickens' "Tale of Two Cities," or a Seton Thompson's "Autobiography of a Grizzly Bear." Oh, the tragedies of the saloons! As a watchman on God's watch-tower who can ever refrain from sympathizing with them and shedding tears of deepest sorrow for them? "Oh, no," exclaims some cynical man, "I have no sympathy for the drunkard. If a man wants to stop drinking he can stop. The only reason why the drunkards do not stop is because they do not want to stop." Ah, my cynical friend, you are wrong. I have no sympathy for that egotistic and self-inflated young man who to be smart loafs about a saloon and deliberately cultivates a taste for drink. But there are thousands of men who do not want to drink. They do not know how to stop drinking. They have never yet heard of the grace of God which will save them if they would only let him save them. Aye, I go further than that. I believe there are thousands of drunkards to-night who would be willing to take an axe and with it cut off their right hands if they could only be freed from the curse of drink. They are fighting drink every day of their lives, but in their own strength they cannot stop. And so to-night as a watchman on God's tower I see thousands of the finest brained men and women going to destruction through the rapids which head toward the awful Niagara of delirium tremens. I hear them shouting and cursing and see them tumbling and fighting and resisting and yet yielding and going down, and down and down. Through the lights coming from the open doors of the saloons I see these victims heading toward eternal death.

"But, watchman," some one asks, "are these all the sights and sounds of death that you see and hear?" Alas, alas, no! For, while one crowd is passing through the hallways and ascending the stair of the immoral theatres, and another crowd is staggering slowly on with flushed cheeks, hurrying toward the bar behind which liquor is sold, which in the end will prove as fatal as the poisonous hemlock quaffed by a Greek philosopher, I see still another multitude of death seekers. These pass me not in rags or with slow and leaden steps. They are dressed for the ball-rooms and the low dance halls. They move in regular step, not with the tramp, tramp, tramp of many soldiers, but with the sliding and graceful step of the waltz, the two-step, the polka and dances which we should not and will not mention.

"Are all dances bad?" asks some young girl. "Is every one a dance of death? Are all our young people enemies of Christ and bad who ever visit dance halls?" This is a question which is often honestly and anxiously put to me by my young people. Well, my young friend, you have asked me a blunt question, and I will answer you in just the same way. First, I will say and emphatically say, that I do not believe all young people who go to our dance halls are intentionally bad. I believe, yes, I know, some of them go there without one impure thought. They go for the pleasure of meeting other young people and of passing an evening in each other's company. In the next place I will emphatically state that I believe one of the most pernicious, one of the most awful causes of spiritual death in our cities to-day is the dance hall. And in support of my second statement I will say that in all the United States you cannot find one minister or layman noted for spiritual or evangelistic power who is not an enemy of the dance hall, through and through, out and out. They all, without an exception, believe that the dance hall is the depleter of spiritual life, consequently they are, and always will be, out and out, through and through, enemies of this destroyer, this insidious foe of spiritual life.

As I spoke in reference to regular theatre goers, I now speak in reference to the regular dance hall devotee. You never saw in all your life a person who was conspicuous for her love for the dance hall who was at the same time conspicuous for her devotion to the service of Jesus. The two loves do not exist in the same heart. They are altogether incongruous. You never in your life saw deep spiritual consecration for Christ and love for the dance hall exist together in the same human heart. The modern dance is a foe to all spiritual development and a barrier to progress in the Christian life.

But standing in the watch tower to-night I see more than the gleaming lights of the evil resorts luring the victims to their fascinating but fatal haunts. I see dark shadows in the streets where no lights are. I see these dark shadows following the burglar and the "hold up" man and the murderer with his pistol and knife. I see the dark and tightly closed houses from which no ray of light is coming. These houses look deserted, but they are not deserted. They are outposts of perdition, silent but haunted with outcasts and gamblers and conspirators who are flagrantly breaking the laws of the land. I see the low dives of a great city reeking with human vermin. I see also where the counterfeiters are silently doing their work in the stillness of the night. Night is a symbol of social calamity, sin and death. So we find that most of the lowest outcasts of society try to conceal their evil actions in the darkness of the night. It is the time when the devotees of sin hold their high carnival. It is when the death dealers are able to deliver their hardest blows with the least chance of detection. But with God the night is not only the emblem of calamity, it is also the harbinger of the day, for as Isaiah traveled forth into the darkness as a divine prophet he "saw the gleam of the sunrise coming over the eastern hills." Yes, he saw the time when righteousness would claim its disciples as well as the time when the enemies of God should be hurried away to their eternal incarceration. "What of the night, Isaiah? What of the night?" cries the officer of the guard. Then the prophetic watchman calls, "I see the morning cometh and also the night." That means: "I see the righteous triumph through God. I see also the enemies of God scattered in complete defeat." "What of the night? What of the night?" You call to me. I answer: "The morning cometh for the disciples of Jesus Christ. I see also the eternal night coming for those who will not yield themselves to Christ's love."

That these words of my text can truly be changed into the lightness of an eternal and peaceful day was never more impressed upon me than some years ago when I was going around the world. As I found the opening description of this text not among Syrian hills, but among the "wilderness of rock" in the London metropolis, so I will find my closing scene not in Jerusalem, but upon the troubled waters of an angry Pacific. For days and weeks we had been treading the quiet paths of the "trackless deep." The ocean had heretofore been very kind to us. It was truly pacific in every way that its name signified. But then, like some of our old friends, it changed. Its heart of kindness became a heart of hate. It seemed to have not the purpose to be loving, but only the desire to destroy. Day in and day out we battled with the tempest. "The worst storm I ever knew," said the captain. "Many good ships have been foundered in less storms than this." The surface of the sea was a raging mob of demons. The wind, shrieking through our rigging, was like a chorus of lost souls yelling out in rage.

After three days of storm I went to my berth and tried to sleep. Hour after hour we were wedged in our berths, unable to sleep. At last in the darkness I arose to dress and go upon deck. No sooner did I step upon the floor than the heaving ship hurled me across the stateroom, out through the door and clear across the deck. I picked myself up, bruised and stunned; then I looked about me. What was my surprise to find the storm over and the stars out. A sailor turned to me and said: "Mate, it will soon be clear. We shall soon have a calm sea. The storm is past. See yonder star by the edge of the horizon. That is the morning star. The sun will soon be up." Yes, as I stood there holding to the ship's ropes I knew the sea was growing calm. Soon quietly and peacefully the sun arose. The angry waves stopped their batterings; the winds ceased to laugh and yell. That afternoon we sailed into the harbor. The morning had come for the end of the tempest. So at last for all those who love Christ the night is not the emblem of calamity, but of the morning. The morning with its heavenly day breaketh—the morning, with its emblem of eternal peace. Will you not to-night, with Christ's help, take the night as the emblem of the day?

Intelligent Chimpanzees.

The two young chimpanzees recently brought from West Africa for the Zoological Gardens in Regent's Park, London, are said to be showing remarkable intelligence in learning the lessons which they are being daily taught in eating and drinking with their hands and in manners generally. Dress has been provided for them, and it is amusing, says a Scotsman contributor, to note the anxiety they show to get into clothes before taking their morning stroll or afternoon tea in the Fellows' Pavilion. They are both quite young apes, so that there is no reason why in course of time they should not, in the hands of their painstaking mentors, rival in accomplishment the famous ape Consul.

TYING KNOTS IN JAPAN.

It Is a Serious Art, as a Mistake May Mean an Insult.

Like the arranging of flowers, the tying of knots has been carried to the point of a complex art by the Japanese. There is one way—one right way, that is—to knot the cord that confines a birthday or New Year's present. There is one way to tie the brocade bag of the tea jar when the latter is empty and another when it is full. Not only general ignorance of social customs but deadly insults may be communicated by the way a knot is tied, foreigners often making dreadful mistakes either through not knowing or from ignoring the niceties of knot etiquette.

Hooks and eyes, buttons and buckles are unknown so far as Japanese dress is concerned. They do not have much to fasten, but what they do have they fasten with cord. That is why they have carried the tying of cord so far. The Japanese have hundreds of ornamental knots, some of them so old that they antedate written history.

Japanese children are taught to make knots just as they are taught to write and draw. All sorts of flower and animal forms are copied. There is the chrysanthemum knot, the iris knot, plum blossom, pine tree and cherry blossom knots. There is a stork knot, a turtle knot, a knot named for the sacred mountain Fujiyama. An easy knot is called the "old man's knot." There is also an "old woman's knot."

First Stogies Made In Pennsylvania.

"The first stogie was made by hand in the wilds of Pennsylvania," said a tobacco man of Allegheny City.

"The story which they tell once in awhile in West Virginia and which must be true is that the long cheroots derived their name from the town of Conestoga, Pa. An emigrant train of wagons was finding its way across the state, and a supply of tobacco was found at Conestoga.

"The emigrants got a lot of it, but failed to get any pipes and so could not smoke unless they made pipes themselves. Necessity is the mother of invention. You may have heard that remark before. Anyhow one of the men rolled a leaf of the tobacco in his hand and wrapped it with another leaf. That was the first stogie. Others followed his example, and they all called the article that they made a 'stogie' in honor of the town at which the tobacco was secured. That is said to be the true story of how the name 'stogie' originated."

IN MODERN DAYS.

The Ways of Doing Things Have Greatly Changed.

No Branch of Science has made Greater Advancement Than that of Medicine—Thousands of Lives Prolonged by Modern Discoveries.

"Few things have developed as rapidly during the past quarter of a centure as the science of medicine," said a well known practitioner recently. "And undoubtedly the most striking phase in its progress is in the treatment of the blood. In the old days it was thought that opening a vein and letting the blood out was a cure for most diseases. The utter fallacy of that theory was discovered after a while. Then the symptoms of the disease were treated and the blood disregarded. That also has been shown to be a wrong practice, for, though driven away for a time, the symptoms always return if the cause is not removed, and the disease is worse than before. It is the root of the disease that must be attacked, and the most important development of modern medical science has been in discovering that, in most diseases, this lies in the condition of the blood. If the blood is thin and poor, the nerves and vital organs cannot receive their proper nourishment, the system becomes run down and in a condition to invite disease. Build up the blood, restore the worn-out nerves and you remove the cause. When the cause is gone the disease will vanish."

An instance of the truth of this is given by Miss A. M. Tuckey, Oxdrift, Ont., who says:—"I do not know what would have become of me had it not been for Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. My blood seemed to have turned to water, and I was troubled with dizziness, headaches and general prostration. I tried several medicines but instead of getting better I was gradually but surely growing worse. I became so weak I could no longer work, and it was while in this condition I was advised to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. After using the pills for a few weeks I began to gain in strength; my appetite returned, the headaches and dizziness vanished, and before long I was enjoying as good health as ever I had done in my life. I cannot thank you enough for the good the pills have done me, and I hope they will long continue to help other sufferers."

Indigestion, neuralgia, heart trouble, anaemia, kidney and liver complaints, rheumatism, the functional ailments of women, and a host of other troubles are all a disease of the blood, and that is why they are always cured by the use of Dr. William's Pink Pills, which actually make new, rich, red blood, thus reaching the root of the disease and driving it from the system. The great success of this medicine has induced some unscrupulous dealers to offer pink colored imitations. You can protect yourself against these by seeing that the full name "Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People" is printed on the wrapper around every box. Sold by all medicine dealers, or may be had direct from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont., at 50 cents a box, or six boxes for $2.50.

THE LOWER ANIMALS.

They Are Keen of Perception, but Are Incapable of Thought.

Animals have keen preceptions—keener in many respects than our own—but they form no conceptions, have no powers of comparing one thing with another. They live entirely in and through their senses. To all that inner world of reflection, imagination, comparison, reason, they are strangers. They never return upon themselves in thought. They have sense memory, sense intelligence, and they profit in many ways by experience, but they have not soul memory or rational intelligence. All the fundamental emotions and appetites men and the lower animals share in common, such as fear, anger, love, hunger, jealousy, cunning, pride, curiosity, play, but the world of thought and thought experience and the emotions that go with it belong to man alone.

It is as if the psychic world were divided into two planes, one above the other—the plane of sense and the plane of spirit. In the plane of sense live the lower animals, only now and then just breaking for a moment into the higher plane. In the world of sense man is immersed also; this is his start and foundation, but he rises into the plane of spirit, and here lives his proper life. He is emancipated from sense in a way that beasts are not.—John Burroughs in Harper's Magazine.

BLAIR'S GOUT AND RHEUMATIC PILLS

THE GREAT ENGLISH REMEDY.

TESTIMONIAL from the late SIR SAMUEL BAKER, the famous Nile Explorer.

"Newton Abbot, Devon. Dear Sirs—I have delayed my thanks as I wished to test the effect of Blair's Pills by a sufficient interval of time.

"For ten years I had suffered acutely from Gout and life had lost its attraction owing to the uncertainty of health and sudden visitations of the enemy which prostrated me for months, or weeks according to the virulence of the attacks.

"Blair's Pills have rendered me immense service, as I no longer fear an attack of Gout.

"For the last twenty months I have been comparatively free, as one or two attempted visitations have been immediately stamped out by the assistance of Blair's Pills.

"Truly yours (Signed) Saml. W. Baker.

Case of Nervous Prostration.

For Months Mrs. Myles Lay a Helpless Sufferer—Attributes Restoration to

Dr. Chase's Nerve Food.

Mrs. John Myles, senior, of South Woodslee, Essex County, Ont., is well known throughout the surrounding country because of her work among the sick and suffering, and it was on account of over-exertion in this regard that her health broke down, and she lay weak and helpless, a victim of nervous prostration. Doctors could not help her, and she resolved to try Dr. Chase's Nerve Food. As a result she has been thoroughly restored, and by recommending this treatment to others has been the means of bringing back health and happiness to many a weakened and discouraged sufferer from diseases of the nerves.

Mrs. Myles writes:—"When I began the use of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food I was confined to my bed with what the doctors said was nervous prostration. My stomach was very weak, and I could not sleep at all for any length of time. Nervous chills and trembling would come over me at times and I seemed to be getting weaker and weaker all the time. There was also pains on top of the head, which caused me much suffering and anxiety.

"After using half a dozen boxes of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food I began to gain in weight and to feel stronger. Since then I have been gradually restored to health, and in looking back can say that the improvement has been something wonderful. I used in all forty boxes of the preparation and feel it a duty, as well as a privilege, to recommend it to all who are suffering from nervous disorders. Several persons to whom I have described my case have used it and been cured, and I am sure that I owe my present good health, if not life itself, to Dr. Chase's Nerve Food."

Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, 50 cents a box, at all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Company, Toronto. To protect you against imitations, the portrait and signature of Dr. A. W. Chase, the famous receipt book author, are on every box.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. MORRISSEY NEWS.

(From our own correspondent)

The pay-roll at the Carbonado colliery is still increasing, the sum paid out last Saturday amounting to $20,000.

Mr. T. Langely, customs house officer who has just returned from the Flathead country after spending a summer there reports considerable activity in the new coal and oil fields. He thinks a railway into that country will likely be built next year.

The contract for the erection of a two-roomed school house at Morrissey Mines has been let to H. Bell & Co., of Fernie. The contractors will be ready to go to work as soon as the lumber is on the ground.

On Saturday night Artie Belfour was arrested by Constable Sampson for being drunk on Third St. On Monday before R. Strathearn she pleaded guilty to the charge and received a sentence of $15 or 30 days. She paid the fine.

On Monday night a grand banquet was given at the Clarke House, Morrissey Mines, to bid farewell to Mr. A. D. Drummond who is leaving for the coast. The chair was taken by Mr. R. Strathearn, captain of the Rifle Association, of which Mr. Drummond is a distinguished member. The captain on behalf of the association presented the guest of the evening with a beautiful dressing case. Mr. Drummond responded very feelingly after which several other toasts were given.

On Sunday night a serious fire broke out on the government road between Morrissey Mines and Morrissey Jct., where several hundred feet of corduroy were destroyed before it could be checked. This road is now in a very bad condition and unless repairs are made at once it will be impassable when the wet weather sets in. The cause of the fire is not known.

A daily passenger service between Spokane and Morrissey will be put on the Great Northern, commencing Oct. 1st. This will be a great boon to the district. The present schedule is three trains each way per week.

WILL BE APPEALED

Mr. G. G. Moffatt J. P. rendered his decision on Monday morning in the case of J. A. Sloan tried last week on the charge of violating the Bush Fire Act while engaged on the right-of-way clearing in the preceding week. The evidence taken during the trial was voluminous, but much of it was of an unimportant nature. His Worship after carefully considering the evidence found the accused guilty and imposed a fine of $100 and costs. Mr. Eckstein for the accused gave notice that he would appeal the case.

ROW IN THE OLD TOWN.

Mike Benick, a Slav, who runs the butcher shop in the Old Town, got into a mix-up with Dan McCarthy last Thursday at the Union Hotel, and the matter was aired in the Police Court yesterday, before L. R. Forbes, S. M.: Ross appeared for the prosecution and Eckstein for the defence The latter laid a counter charge and the trouble resolved itself into a three cornered squabble. It appears that McCarty some time ago was struck by a chair in the hands of a man named Rickets. On Thursday last he mistook Rickets' brother for his assailant and pitched into him. Benick the latter's son-in-law then took a hand in the fight and McCarty claimed he was cut on the head by a knife in the hands of Benick. The magistrate reserved his sentence until next Tuesday.

Why it pays.

Strength in the hidden parts is the keynote of a good shoe.

Without it the shoe can not be comfortable—cannot wear well.

Weak spots cause uneveness under the foot—pain.

When one weak spot wears out, the shoe is done. One piece of poor material—workmanship—spoils the whole shoe.

Uneveness from any cause—weakness, threads, tacks or lumps under the foot—is painful, and the wearer unconciously wears out other parts of the shoe more quickly by exerting extra pressure upon them in the effort to relieve the tender places.

So a shoe to give greatest wear must be comfortable,—Goodyear welted—strong in the hidden parts.

Its economical to wear that kind of a shoe.

The "Slater Shoe" is Goodyear Welted.

It is made by specialists who work on nothing but one kind of men's shoes.

Everybody knows that a workman who does one particular thing all the time does that thing well and quickly.

Every operation in the making of a "Slater Shoe" is performed by men who do nothing but that identical thing.

The "Slater Shoe," a speciality, is therefore better and made with less cost than common shoes made in a factory where all kinds of shoes are made.

The saving in cost is put into quality of material and workmanship.

The materials used in Slater Shoes—the hidden parts as well as those seen—must be the best obtainable, because the makers stamp their name on the soles and guarantee the workmanship and quality and they could not afford to do so if the shoes were not faultless.

Because of these reasons it is economical to wear "Slater Shoes."

Price, $4.00 and $5.00 stamped on the soles

THE COUNCIL MEETING

The Curfew and Sunday Closing By-Laws Next in Order.

Proposal for Joint Use of Government Building. Council to Investigate Fairy Creek Water Supply.

The City Council met on Monday evening. All the members were present excepting Ald. Beck. Ald. Liphardt acted as Clerk in the absence of Mr. Rennie.

A communication was read from The Fernie Cartage Co. asking permission to build a temporary wooden shed beside their stable to house their rigs during the winter. The letter stated that it would be removed next year as well as the present stable building and in its place a fire proof building would be erected. The request was granted on the above conditions.

Messrs. Alloway & Champion, Winnipeg brokers, wrote asking for the payment of $350.00 and $42.00 interest assigned them by Mr. McRobie, of The McRobie Fire Extinguisher Co. The city clerk was instructed to reply that payment could not be made until the first assessment had been levied.

A. H. Cree wrote quoting the United States Fidelity and Guarantee Co's rate for a bond on the city clerk at 50 cents per hundred dollars, with a pro rata rebate on Jan. 1st. The council accepted this offer and authorized the issuance of a $5,000 bond.

The Finance Committee reported that they had gone into the question of adequate remuneration for the city solicitor. In consideration of the great amount of legal work that will have to be done during the first four months in drafting by-laws and arranging other matters they suggested that a salary of one hundred dollars per month be offered for the months of Sepember, October, November and December and that afterwards a yearly salary of $300 be paid to the said official.

On motion of MacLean and Lundie the report was adopted and the city clerk was instructed to communicate the same to the city solicitor and to get his reply.

Lundie—Liphardt. That the city solicitor be instructed to draw up a Sunday closing by-law.—Carried.

Cree—Trites. Re prison accommodation, that a committee of two take this matter up with the chief of provincial police at once and that the committee be instructed to make an offer of $15 per month for the use, conjointly with the provincial government, of the present building. That tne city offer to keep the Government's prisoners at 40 cents per day per head, said prisoners to be used on the streets of Fernie.—Carried.

The Mayor appointed Aldermen Cree and MacLean for this committee.

MacLean—Lundie. That the property and Works Committee be instructed to have the city pound built immediately.—Carried.

Lundie—MacLean. That Jas. Wallace be offered the position of pound keeper.—Carried.

The city solicitor was instructed to prepare a curfew by-law to be submitted at the next meeting.

The city clerk was instructed to communicate with other towns to ascertain the salary paid to the health officer.

The council was of the opinion that the present dry season was an excellent time to investigate for a future water supply and they decided to go in a body to Fairy Creek on the west side of the Elk River, on Friday, Sept. 30th, to examine the supply there. This will be followed later by an engineer's report.

The meeting adjourned to meet on Monday, Oct. 3rd

TUBERCULOSIS SANITARIUM

Dr. Fagan Wants a Provincial Institution. Local Committee Appointed to Collect Funds.

Dr. Fagan, Secretary of the Provincial Board of Health, recently addrsssed a meeting in the Stork hall on the subject of a provincial sanitarium for the care of tuberculosis cases. Mayor Stork occupied the chair and the audience numbered about 30 people, including Drs. Bonnell and Ker. The energetic secretary of the Board of Health spoke at length on the terrible ravages of the disease and the little that had been done in this province to check it. Tuberculosis was spreading in the province and it was high time that some systematic means was employed to battle with the terrible plague. He quoted statistics from sanitariums in other places showing that a large percentage of the patients recovered from the diseese, and those who were only helped received practical instruction in the matter of preventing contagion that had far-reaching effects in keeping the disease from spreading. The treatment for consumption was simplicity itself.

Dr. Fagan then proceeded to lay his plan before his audience. The Government had already promised substantial aid in the erection of a provincial sanitarium and numerous individuals had agreed to supplement this grant by large private subscriptions, so that little doubt remained that the sanitarium could be built. The cost of maintaining the institution was a question brought forward by those who promised aid to the building fund, and this had resulted in the formation of the Maintenance Fund to which people all over the province were asked to contribute. Members agreed to give one dollar each per year for ten years. By this system everybody had an opportunity to help along in the good work. The cost of the proposed sanitarium would be about $100,000 and its location would doubtless be in the Kamloops valley. The speaker stated that the maintenance idea was taking hold in other parts of the Province and he made a strong appeal for help in the city of Fernie. Clergymen, fraternal societies, ladies' societies, miners' unions, etc., might by concerted action take the matter up and give very material aid. The whole affair was now in the hands of a provisional board of trustees, consisting of Chief Justice Hunter, Mr. Gillespie, manager of the Bank of Commerce, Victoria, and Mr. Sweeney, manager of the Bank of Montreal, Vancouver. In due time a regular board of directors would be appointed.

D. V. Mott moved that a committee consisting of the mayor, the clergy of the city, the heads of all fraternal societies, and the presidents of ladies' aid societies be appointed to take the matter up in Fernie and to secure subscribers towards this fund. The motion was passed and Dr. Fagan promised to send all necessary forms, lists, etc., to the different parties interested that the work might be started at once.

POTTERY AND FIRE CLAY

A LARGE DEPOSIT FOUND ON THE C. N. S. RAILWAY CONSTSUCTION.

Mr. E. Ernesson of the Crows Nest Sonthern Construction work and Mr. H. Oldland are interested in what may develope into a valuable discovery. Some weeks ago the construction gang on the new railway cut through a bed of what appeared to be a peculiar kind of clay. Ernesson examined it, showed it to Mr. Oldland who is somewhat of an expert on all matters pertaining to fire brick and the result has been the staking of three claims.

We were shown a little piece of the clay that was burned. It was light in color and light in weight and very hard and brittle. Mr. Oldland is having it assayed and he is of the opinion that it will turn out to be a valuable clay, between a pottery clay and silica clay. With certain ingredients it may be excellent for the manufacture of pottery and fire bricks. The claims are on the west side of the Elk River, a mile or two below the city.

NEW INSURANCE RATING.

Mr. A. W. Ross representing the Mainland Board of Underwriters of Vancouver arrived on Tuesday to rate the city for fire insurance. Mr. Ross expects to be engaged at this work for probably a week. When seen by a Free Press man Mr. Ross was unable to make any statement as to the approximate ratings. He was glad to see fire proof material being used in the constructiou of so many of the buildings but he was of the opinion that the two new large three story hotel buildings would materially affect the rating in their respective blocks. The result of Mr. Ross' work in the city will be awaited with a great deal of interest by many who are financially concerned.

LORD'S DAY ALLIANCE

REV. J. G. SHEARER, GEN. SEC. VISITS FERNIE.

Delivers a Strong Adress in Pres. Church. New Officers Elected. Want Fruit Stores closed on Sunday.

Rev. J. G. Shearer, Secretary of the Lord's Day Alliance, addressed a largely attended public meeting in the Presbyterian Church on Tuesday evening in the interest of that Association. Rev. D. L. Gordon the retiring local President occupied the chair.

The speaker dealt with his subject in a manner which showed that he was after practicial results. He emphasized the need of a restful Sabbath in Canada more than iu any other country. Canadians work hard and they need a day of rest once a week. Moreover Canada is developing fast and now while its foundation for a great and glorious future is being laid it is important that due consideration be given to this question of Sabbath observance. He was glad to recognize a favorable stand on the part of many public men in this country, and among the press of this country. In this connection he referred more particularly to the strong position taken by the Fernie Free Press for clean municipal government and for a better Sabbath observance. An Editorial from Sept. 2nd issue headed "Raise the Standard" had pleased him so much that he sent it to Toronto for the reproduction in the Official organ of the Alliance, which had a circulation of a hundred thousand copies.

The cause of the Association was prosperous. For instance the game laws of the Territories had been altered to make it prohibitive to hunt game on the Sabbath. The Dominion Government courteously received a deputation from the Alliance and a new Lord's Day Act is now awaiting the verdict of the Supreme Court as to the Dominion's powers with respect to rights of the different provinces.

Mr. Shearer coming down to the present conditions in Fernie emphasized the importance of the right thinking people in Fernie acting at the present time. The city council had the power to enact by-laws regulating the hours for closing for fruit stores and the playing of games on Sunday.

The local officers for the ensuing year were elected as follows:—

President, Rev. John Robson, B. A.
Vice Pres's The other clergymen of the city.
Secretary-Treasurer, Robert McEwing

COMMITTEE

Anglican Church, N. E. Suddaby and J. C. Hutchison.
Methodist, Messrs. P. R. Lundie and H. L. Manly.
Presbyterian, A. C. Liphardt and C.W. Ward.
Baptist, A. McLean and The captain of the Salvation Army,
Two representatives from each labor union.

At the committee meeting held afterwards it was decided to interview the the council to ask that confectionery stores be closed on Sundays. This was done by the President and General Sec. on the following day when Mr. Stork assured them that the matter was already under consideration by the council.

Mr. Shearer proceeded to Michel on Wednesday. When in Nelson he appointed Mr. Wm. Blakemore Honorary District Organizer for the Kootenays Mr. Blakemore would cover territory that he had been unable to cover. He would try to induce Mr. Blakemore to give a public address in Fernie on the Lord's Day Alliance work. On the whole Mr. Shearer was well satisfied with his visit to Fernie.

FUNFER GOT THREE YEARS

Martin Funfer who broke into the Postoffice a couple of weeks ago and stole a registered letter and other things elected to be tried summarily before His Honor Judge Forin. The trial took place on Monday. Funfer pleaded guilty and his honor sentenced him to three years imprisonment in the Provincial Penitentiary. This is the minimum for the offence and it serves to show its seriousness in the eye of the law.

PURCELL—CARD.

A quiet wedding ceremony took place at the home of Mr. and Mrs. W. J. McPherson, Victoria Ave. on Thursday evening last when Mr. Wm. G. Purcell and Miss Eileen Card were made man and wife. The ceremony was performed by Rev. D. L. Gordon, B A., in the presence of a few intimate friends. The groom is the engineer at the Fort Steele Brewing Co. and the bride recently arrived from London, England. Mr, and Mrs. Purcell will reside at Mr. McPherson's residence for a time,

PROGRESS OF GREAT NORTHERN CONSTRUCTIQN.

The work on the Morrissey Fernie and Michel Railway Co's branch to Coal Creek was stopped on Tuesday by a wire from Mr. Lupfer, chief engineer at Kalispel to Mr. Ernesson superintendent of the work. The right-of-way had been cleared and a gang of men had been put on the grade work that morning. Mr. Ernnesson transferred these men to the grade work in the yard. He was unable to account for the order but supposed it meant that some changes in the route were under consideration. He expected that Mr. Lupfer and Chief Engineer Hoaglan would be in Fernie in a few days when explanations would be forthcoming.

Mr. E. L. Shield, superintendent of construction, from St. Paul came in on Tuesday to inspect the work on the C. N. Southern. He was somewhat disappointed with the rate of the progress being made on the grade work. At the Morrissey end the grade is about completed with the exception of the gumbo cut in the Foss section. This cut threatens to give some trouble in having it completed on time. The steel laying will commence about the middle of Oct. and it is planned to have all ready for it as the rails are laid from Morrissey. Thos Walsh of Porter Bros. firm will be here next week to drive the piles for the bridge and the stringers will be brought over the new rails from Morrissey causing a delay of two weeks in making the bridge passable. The bridge will have about 2000 ft of trestle in the two approaches most of it being on the west side of the Elk. The steel laying in the yard will then proceed without loss of time. The rails are already at Morrissey Jct.. They are English made of 60 lbs. weight and came through a Vancover firm.

The Great Northern officials are counting on running trains to Fernie by the middle of Nov. and already steps have been taken to provide living accomodation at Fernie for the train crews and other people connected with its operation.

Mr. Drinnan when asked if any changes were contemplated on the M. F. & M. Ry. Co. branch said that doubtless that was the reason why the work was stopped. There were points in the agreements between the Coal Co. and the C. P. R. which had not been settled. One of these was the the maintenance of the grade crossing. Mr. Lindsey was in Winnipeg at the present time conferring with the C. P. R. officials on these matters.

ELECTIONS NOV. 3RD.

Ottawa, Sept. 30.—At a meeting of the Cabinet yesterday the general elections were fixed for November 3rd, with nominations on Oct. 27th.

Two Furnished Rooms to rent. Bath in connection. Apply Mrs. S. Graham.

The Board of City Licensing Commissioners held it first meeting on Tuesday evening when the application of W. W. Tuttle for his New Royal Hotel was considered and granted. Other matters with respect to the provisions of the new license By-law were discussed.

The Benedicts of Fernie were not long in answering the challenge of the Bachelors, and their answer was of a most satisfactory nature. Late last week Mess. McEvoy and Renuie on behalf of the Benedicts took the matter up and the result was a very successful dance given under the auspices of the Benedicts of Fernie, in the Stork Opera House on Tuesday evening. Those who were present report an excellent time. The floor was not crowded and the music, furnished by the Fernie Orchestra, was excellent.

A pretty house wedding was solemnized on the 14th inst., at the residence of Mrs. Edward Osborne, of Guelph. The bride was Miss Margaret J., eldest daughter of Mrs. Osborne, and the groom Mr. David Logie, of Fernie. The ceremony took place in the becomingly decorated drawing room and under a beautiful autumn floral bell, Rev. R. J. M. Glassford, of Chalmers Church, officiating. Mr. and Mrs. Logie arrived in Fernie this morning and were met at the depot by Mrs. W. W. Thomson, sister of the bride, and other friends. They proceeded to Coal Creek where they will make their home. Mr. Logie is the book-keeper for the Trites-Wood Co. at that branch.

A GOOD MONTH.

The Coal Creek colliery has been working fairly steady this month and as predicted at its beginning the month of Sept. has been a good one. The output will total 35,000 tons which is within 5,000 of the record when a double shift was worked. The output for the three collieries will be about 65 ,000 tons, the record being 76,000 tons, last January. The old complaint of car shortage is in evidence very much this month. The Michel colliery was idle three days this week on this account. The coal and coke orders are piling up and the cars are getting scarcer on account of the grain shipments.

FERNIE AT NELSON.

The Fernie baseball team met a double defeat at Nelson on Wednesday and Thursday afternoons, at the hands of the Trail team. The first game resulted 3 to 0 and the second 9 to 2 in favor of the West Kootenay boys.

Jim. Burrows in his 15 round bout with Curley won in the 6th on a foul.

SOMETHING FOR THE LADIES.

A baking school will be conducted at the Crow's Nest Trading Company's store next Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday by Miss K. Milligan, from the school of Domestic Science, Toronto. This lady will be assisted by Miss M. Brown from the same school. These ladies are visiting all the principal cities in B.C. and Manitoba to open up instruction in the art of baking. Some of the Fernie ladies should go and take lessons. x

DUFOUR—GODDARD

A quiet wedding was solemnized in the Catholic church on Monday morning the contracting parties being Mr. Albert Dufour and Miss Emma Goddard. Rev. Father Coccola performed the ceremony in the presence of a few intimate friends. Mr Dufur is the popular conductor on the branch line and Miss Goddard, who has lived in the city for some time, has many friends here. Mr. and Mrs. Dufour have taken up housekeeping in a cottage on MacPherson Ave.

An easy joke has been worked on many travellers over the Great Northern Railway between Jennings and Swinton. The trainmen got hold of a couple of discarded telephone instruments and connected them up, with one in each compartment of the accommodation car. Then with the train running at 30 miles an hour a fictitious enquirer from Morrissey or some other distant point, would ring up a traveller and pretend to transact business with him. Nearly all would bite readily though some would afterwards shake their heads and sagely remark, "Marvellous, these scientific inventions!"

Ex-Mayor Neelands of Vancouver, Grand Master of the I. O. O. F., will be in the city next week and will pay an official visit to the local Oddfellows on their meeting night, Thursday, Oct. 6th. The Oddfellows on that night will meet for the first time in their new hall over Stork's store building. This hall has been rented by the Oddfellows who will furnish it and possibly arrange with other fraternal orders for its use also. The new paraphernalia of the Oddfellows will be opened up for the first time next Thursday. It is exactly the same as that destroyed by the fire which is equivalent to saying that it is one of the best in use in the Province. A large attendance is looked for next Thursday evening.

MASTER and SLAVE

By... T. H. THORPE

Copyright, 1901, by T. H. Thorpe.

"I thank you, Evariste. Now let us pass to another subject near my heart. You know I have intended always to divide with you all I own. Such is still my purpose. Perhaps it should have been done in form before this, but you have never intimated the wish, and I have been much distracted by other matters. But it is here provided for." Giving him a sealed envelope, he continued: "If I fall, open this and act upon it. A second and last pledge you must give me. I told you three affections have made life sweet to me. The last, Evariste, is my love for Estelle Latiolais."

Evariste's heart suddenly ceased to beat. He felt himself falling from his chair, but clutched the arms with tightening grasp and by a supreme effort of will restored his self command without drawing his brother's notice. The latter continued:

"I need not tell you what this love is to me. You can well understand that it is more than food, drink, air, rest or sleep. It is all that makes life. Yet I have never told her of my love."

"You have not?" Evariste exclaimed quickly.

"I have not."

"But you will before you go?" he asked anxiously.

"I will not," replied Horace, and Evariste breathed freely.

"The fate that awaits me as a soldier," Horace resumed, "is so uncertain that it would be unjust to leave her plighted, though I knew my love to be returned, and I have no such knowledge. Now, Evariste, you are well aware of the weakness of her old grandfather and how profitless to her is his guardianship—indeed, how sadly she needs protection against his improvidence; also you cannot be ignorant of the baneful influence exercised over the old gentleman by that conscienceless wretch Quillebert. Swear to me, brother, by all you hold most sacred that you will advise, aid and protect her against the mischiefs these two may work to her fortune and defend her from danger and harm in every form. I place you on guard; give her in charge to you. Swear you will preserve her safe till my return." Oakfell's feelings had mastered him, and his eloquent eyes welled over.

"I make the promise and swear to keep it," said Evariste.

"A wealth of gratitude shall be your reward," Horace cried, embracing him warmly, and the brothers spoke good night.

Wearing for the first time his military uniform, Oakfell paid his visit of Oakfell saw the action.

adieu to Estelle on the eve of the company's departure. Both had schooled themselves for the ordeal, she to appear brave and he to keep back the words of love that were ever rising from his heart to his lips. As is usual in such trials, the result was diluted with emotion. It is safe to say each understood the other better than if free rein had been given to speech.

"Mademoiselle," Oakfell said on taking leave, "I have perhaps been somewhat officious concerning your affairs, but when I explain my action I beg you to approve. M. Latiolais, your only kinsman, your sole authoritative protector and adviser, is growing old and, as you have admitted to me, is, through his amiable weaknesses, to some extent subject to Quillebert's domination. I have charged my brother to be especially watchful of your welfare and in all things to stand between you and harm."

"And has M. Evariste accepted the charge?" Estelle asked.

"Most willingly, and bravely he will keep it," Oakfell answered. "His soul is a noble one, his heart as true as steel. Rely upon him and trust him implicitly, mademoiselle, should any peril or crisis arise. I have chosen him for this because I know his lofty character and love him next to—his mother's memory."

"I will be guided by him because you tell me to," Estelle said, her trembling voice forbidding more of reply. "Wear this," she added, pinning to his coat a tiny cockade of red, white and red.

"And wear you this," Oakfell answered, passionately kissing her hand. "Au revoir, and God keep you."

"Au revoir, and God bless"— Estelle could say no more, but threw her arms about Odette, who stood behind her, and wept as if her heart were broken. Oakfell saw the action. His grief was akin to joy.

It was a gallant company that pranced down the bayou road to the steamboat landing amid huzzas and waving handkerchiefs—dark eyed creoles, chevaliers by heredity, fair skinned Americans, soldiers by instinct. None sat his horse with braver mien than Sergeant Valsin Mouillot, who, refusing to be repressed, had placed his daughters in the keeping of his sister and determinedly followed where Oakfell led. And in a few short weeks these elites of the southern countryside were swallowed up by the great, seething army of the southwest.

Quillebert exploited his tricolored standard to the utmost. His accustomed boldness progressed to daring audacity. As the rigors of the times and privations of the people increased he pushed his ventures and speculations, trading the necessaies of life at exorbitant valuations for cotton, which commanded enormous gold prices in the markets of the world. Though embargo was laid by the authorities upon exportation of the staple, he successfully smuggled cargoes down the Atchafalaya through Berwick bay to French traders and brought back packets of consols and notes of the Bank of France.

A strange companionship came to be observed. Evariste Oakfell and Quillebert were seen much together and not infrequently at Dede's cabaret, but so engrossed were the neighbors with the growing miseries of their isolation that theirs was only silent wonder.

The rumor that the two were partners in contraband adventures was received with mere shrugging of shoulders and turning up of eyes, save by Estelle, who repelled them as malicious and whose trusting heart was satisfied with Evariste's explanation that his intimacy with Quillebert and the cabaret was intended to enable him the better to guard her grandfather, for it was true that Leonidas was almost daily the third of the trio at Dede's testing the fortune of cards with Quillebert; that he made periodical settlements of losses by giving promissory notes, and habitually reached his gate stupefied by potations of rum.

After one of these seances, the old man having been lifted to his saddle and his horse's head turned homeward, Quillebert and Evariste sat at table in the cabaret, the former drinking brandy, the latter sipping a light wine.

"How much of Latiolais' paper do you hold?" asked Evariste.

"Sixteen thousand dollars, to be paid in gold," Quillebert answered.

"How much of it is secured by mortgage?"

"Eleven thousand dollars."

"What will you take for half the whole batch?"

"Fifty bales of cotton."

"Have I that much under your shed now?"

"Yes; more."

"Where are the notes?"

"At my house."

"Will you transfer them today?"

"Yes, if you will come with me. But why do you want this paper, and what need is there for such haste?"

"It does not concern you to know. Come," Evariste said, rising from his chair.

"I am not so sure of that," replied Quillebert, following him.

The exchange having been completed, Evariste continued on to the Latiolais home. Most solicitously he plied Estelle with inquiry as to her comfort and health, the affairs of her plantation and behavior of her slaves.

"None of these matters gives me the care that my dear grandfather does, M. Evariste," she said sadly. "Not only does his intemperance increase appallingly, but he seems haunted by some secret fear, and he cannot sleep unless in his cups or under the effect of a drug. So kind, so gentle and loving, it is killing me to see his old age thus miserable. I am sure much of it is due to his association with M. Quillebert. Oh, can you not stand between him and that wicked man?"

"Mademoiselle, believe me, I am sincerely distressed by what you say and am doing all I properly can to effect what you desire. A more direct interference on my part would be resented by M. Latiolais and render me powerless for future service in his behalf. But let us be hopeful. For your sake I will be watchful and ready to act for his protection." Evariste accompanied his words with look and gesture of sincerest devotion.

"I know you will. I know you will," Estelle replied, "and I trust in your friendship and tact unquestioningly, as your noble brother bade me."

Evariste flushed and said:

"Is it impossible for me to win your confidence by my own merit, mademoiselle? Must I have it only at the bidding of another, though that other be my brother?"

"M. Evariste," Estelle exclaimed, "do not speak so! You wrong yourself, your brother and me by such words."

"Possibly, but I have feelings, though you persist in ignoring them."

"My friend, forgive me if a word of mine has wounded you. I did not so intend. Your brother always delighted at the mention of you, and I supposed"—

"Yes, mademoiselle, except when he is held up as the lens through which alone I am seen. I only mean that I strive by my own endeavors to deserve your trust and seek it not through the inspiration of another."

"I do trust you, M. Evariste, because, being Horace Oakfell's brother, you cannot but deserve to be trusted," she said firmly.

This display of loyalty to Horace staggered him, and he retired, nettled and meditating things which boded no good to the dependent girl's peace.

The second year of the war witnessed a second conscription of recruits to strengthen the armies at the front, and Evariste's name was drawn, to the infinite amusement of Quillebert and Dede. He joined in the merriment and by the application of 4,000 francs sent Dominique Binoret of Par en Haut to the enrolling officer in his stead. Six weeks later Dominique was capering as nimbly as ever at the gumbo balls of Bayou Blanc, vanishing with the stars of morning and as completely.

Evariste hastened to explain to Estelle that his sending of a substitute was in fulfillment of the promise exacted from him by his brother, adding cynically:

"Therefore, mademoiselle, you will not only acquit but you will praise me."

But when at sight of him Laure sang teasingly,

"Soldier, soldier, marry, marry me;
I will give you a fife and drum," he was annoyed not a little.

"Very well," said he; "if you wish it so very much, mademoiselle, I can volunteer and march to the battlefields, gaining the credit for two recruits instead of one."

"No, you must not; you shall not," said Laure, suddenly dropping her gayety and showing alarm. "It is not your fight. You own neither slave nor land to fight for. Even the gains of your ventures with M. Quillebert you must account for to your hero brother if he returns, for they were made by the use of his money."

"Laure, why are you continually saying things which you know vex me?"

"Because I want you to realize your situation, learn the truth, see your interest and know who are your friends. Does that girl over there," extending her arm in the direction of Estelle's home, "ever tell you a truth for your profit?"

"She does not presume to advise me," Evariste replied.

"A little presumption in the way of good advice would be but slight return for your devoted protection of herself and her doting grandfather, protection so disinterested and costing so much self sacrifice on your part." Laure laughed contemptuously, assuming a mock attitude of humility and lifting her saucy eyes to the young man's burning face.

"Do you make bold to insinuate that I am acting selfishly?"

"Oh, I do not call it making bold to say what I know or what I think, and I never insinuate."

"How, then, can you know my motives save as they are indicated by my acts?"

"I am the granddaughter of the doctress," she said haughtily.

"Bah!" exclaimed Evariste.

"Have a care, Evariste; have a care. The doctress must not be insulted."

Laure's warning was so serious and dramatic that Evariste involuntarily checked the impetuosity of his manner. He said:

"Laure, I meant no insult, no disrespect. Her relationship to you would forbid that. We are friends?"

"Friends?" she repeated. "I am your friend. I do not believe anything could make me other than your friend. But what does it mean to be friend to one? Is it not to tell the truth and warn away from danger? I am not convent taught, and I know nothing of what are called convent proprieties, but I do know when to speak and what to speak to a friend who is blindly endangering his career. Hear me well. Openly join hands with Quillebert and trust in me, and independence and happiness will be yours. Pursue your double faced course with that tearful chit, and upon your brother's return your post will be that of servile dependence upon his bounty. Bold? Yes, because I feel the truth and say it for your sake and"—turning away and hiding her face, she sobbed—"for mine."

"Laure, you have said too much!" he exclaimed hotly and started away.

THE GOSPEL TRIUMPHS

CONQUEST OF WORLD FOR CHRIST MAY BE NEAR AT HAND.

SOME SIGNS OF THE TIMES

Great Revival Within and of the Church Are Pointed to—It Is a Self-Evident Fact That the Church of the Lord Jesus Christ Is the Most Vital and Essential in the World To-day.

Entered according to Act of Parliament of Canada, in the year 1904, by William Baily, of Toronto, at the Dep't of Agriculture, Ottawa.

Los Angeles, Cal., Sept. 18.—In the nature and habits of the birds the preacher finds a simile of the entrance into the church of a large accession of converts. The text is Isaiah lx., 8, "Who are these that fly as a cloud, and as the doves to their windows?"

An axiom is a self evident fact. "It is," the lexicographers say, "a proposition whose truth is so obvious at first sight that no process of reasoning or demonstration can make it plainer." It is a golden truism coined in the "mint house of maxims" with the raised features of the Goddess of Truth stamped upon its side, even as the English shilling bears the profile of King Edward, an American silver dollar the outstretched wings of an eagle, as the Roman penny once bore the superscription and image of Caesar and a Grecian coin the features of Alexander the Great. It is an aphorism, an apothegm. It is as Hippocrates once said, "A succinct saying comprehending a complete statement." It is truth in a nutshell. It is a universe of analyses condensed in an epigram.

Hundreds of men are simply doing the same thing in trying to find the reasons for the phenomenon stated by shallow observers, that the church of Jesus Christ is losing its power over men. Long lists of reasons for this waning influence are cited, whereas the writers have only to open their eyes to discover that the church of Jesus Christ is not losing its power ever men. The church of God was never so powerful as it is to-day. More strong men and strong women are bowing before its altars than ever before. More are the church's teachings respected by statesmen and in the homes and daily lives of our citizens than ever before. I have not time to go into argument to prove this assertion. I would not to-day do so if I had the time. Why? Because it is a self evident fact that the church of the Lord Jesus Christ is the most vital and essential influence in the world to-day. It is a self evident statement. All intelligent people who have looked boldly and impartially at the facts are ready to concede that the assertion is true.

But though the church of the Lord Jesus Christ is growing more and more powerful day by day, yet we believe that still greater triumphs are before it in the future. The victories already won are small compared with those which are yet to be won, when nations shall be born in a day. Josiah Strong recently wrote a book entitled, "The Next Great Awakening." I am not going to find my theme in the latest book of the famous author of "Our Country." I am going to look through the inspired spectacles of a prophet who lived nearly 3,000 years ago. Isaiah took the picture of the doves flying to their home cotes in great clouds as the symbol of the church of the future gathering in its members. So I shall try to show that the "coming awakening of the church" is not only going to be a world-wide evangelistic movement, but also that the conquest of the world for Christ may be near—yes, very near—at hand.

In the first place, let me say that such a movement as this, foreseen by the prophet and prefigured under the symbol of a flight of doves, is in accord with the record of history. Again and again there have been revivals which have brought into the church vast numbers at one time. Since the day of Pentecost, when 5,000 were convected under the preaching of the Apostle Peter, there have been such great movements. How many were won to the truth by the teaching of Luther? What vast multitudes were gathered under the preaching of a Wesley, a Whitefield, a Finney and a Moody and of a Torrey and a Chapman, a Munhall and a Harrison of the present day. We know that Peter the Hermit, clad, like John the Baptist, in untanned skins, walked through Europe, lifting high in his hands the crucifix, until thousands and tens of thousands of devotees were ready, in 1096, to follow this enthusiastic ascetic to Palestine as the advance guard of the crusaders. We know that thousands upon thousands of Cromarty miners used to hang upon the words of John Wesley in the early mornings at 5 o'clock, before their day's work began. We know that no building was large enough to hold the crowds who wanted to hear Moody. Great halls had to be erected in Boston and New York and Chicago to hold the huge audiences. The Philadelphia depot on account of its great size had to be used in place of a church. Thousands upon thousands found Christ in the revivals of the seventeenth century under the preaching of the Puritans. Thousands upon thousands found Christ in the Methodist revivals of the eighteenth century. Thousands upon thousands found Christ in the first part of the nineteenth century, when Charles G. Finney had such power over sinners that a dying blasphemer said, "Don't let Charles G. Finney preach my funeral sermon, or he will preach my soul into heaven in spite of my own desires." But all these gospel triumphs of the past centuries are as nothing in numbers to the multitudes Isaiah saw crowding into the kingdom of Christ. Isaiah saw them coming, not by the hundreds or the thousands, but by the millions. "Who are these," cried he, "that fly as a cloud and as the doves to their windows?"

The selection of the figure of a flight of doves is significant. It is, above other things, a suggestion of immense multitude. But few people realize the marvelous numbers and propagating powers of the doves of olden times. Biberg, the ornithologist, estimated that if a common pair of domesticated pigeons hatched nine times a year—which number of hatchings is not extraordinary for an average pair of these birds—and if these pigeons laid two eggs at one time, and all the fledgelings which were hatched should live and hatch in turn, that single pair of pigeons would produce in four years nearly fifteen thousand descendants. The fecundity of the dove is about as great as the reproductive powers of the English sparrow or the Australian rabbit. The most graphic description ever written of the innumerable multitudes of the doves was penned by Alexander Wilson, the naturalist. Statements made by this Scottish-American traveler were indorsed by John Audubon. Among the ornithological authorities there can be no better indorsement than this: "Mr. Wilson wrote that down in Kentucky, in a place which migrating doves used to visit annually, their multitudes were so great that they literally destroyed whole forest regions. In this tract about which he wrote the branches of every tree were filled with dove nests wherever a nest could be built. In many trees over one hundred nests had been constructed. Above the trees the multitudes of the pigeons' wings were so great that their flapping wings sounded like the boomings of a tornado. So great was the noise of their flapping wings that the horses of the farmers in that region often became unmanageable and could not be driven. Near Frankfort, Ky., Alexander Wilson saw a flock of migrating doves. The naturalist estimated that this single flock was two hundred and forty miles long and had an enrollment of at least 2,230,000,272 birds."

Isaiah describing the consecrated worshipers flocking to the millennial church could not have chosen a more expressive figure. "These that fly as a cloud and as doves to their windows." The readers of his time would realize by it what countless throngs of men he saw in prophetic vision hastening into the kingdom of God. The church of God is now great in membership, but, church members, do you not look forward in holy ecstasy to the time when the thousands who are worshiping Christ now shall be changed into the millions? Do you not long for the millennial day when Christ's disciples shall flock through the church's doors in innumerable multitudes "as the doves fly to their windows?"

The figure is expressive not only of numbers, but of spiritual qualities. The church of the future is not to have a padded roll. It is not to be composed of a lot of members who, as the five foolish virgins of Christ's parable, lounged around and slept and had no oil for their spiritual lamps. It is not to be composed of men and women who occupy their church pews only on Sunday and then when the benediction of the sermon is given turn and shut their pew doors and say: "Good-by, religion. I must go home now. You just stay here for a week, and next Sunday morning I will come back and see you and pat you on the back for an hour again while the choir sings and the pastor prays." But in that church which Isaiah saw in prophecy not only shall there be multitudes of worshipers, but all these multitudes shall be consecrated worshipers. These many worshipers shall be men of living faith, to whom the presence of God is an abiding reality, influencing them wherever they go and in every moment of their lives.

But though "black eyed Susans" or the "golden spore" or the "blue eyed violets" on account of their great multitudes may be called a common flower—a weed—the dove, in spite of her multitudes, has never been called a common bird. The dove always has been and always will be the symbol of purity, gentleness and love. This symbol was recognized in heathen times. Because the dove signified purity Venus had this bird as her emblem.

In the beautiful mythological legend Semiramis, the quuen, was said in her youth to have been nurtured by a dove and at death to have been changed into a dove. We find, however, in Christian nomenclature the dove is also the symbol of purity and gentleness and divine love. In the Bible the dove has the most hallowed of associations. It was as a dove that the Holy Spirit appeared at the baptism of Jesus. It was two doves that the blessed virgin presented at the temple as an oblation for her purification after the divine birth. What says the psalmist in reference to the man's redemption from sin and his cleansing through the blood of Jesus Christ? "Though ye have lain among the pots, yet shall ye be as the wings of a dove covered with silver and the feathers with yellow gold."

This migration of the redeemed and spotless multitudes of human beings to Christ's churches shall not only come with the purity of the dove, but also with the swift velocity of the dove. It will not come with the leadened feet of a man who, having been born in a Christian home, takes ten, fifteen, twenty, perhaps thirty years, to make up his mind to be a Christian. It will not come with the slow processes some churches have, whereby their sessions or vestries or boards of deacons place the applicant for church membership on probation. But these new accessions to the churches of Jesus Christ will come to the front rank of Christian service and worship as quickly as the name of a Saul was changed into a Paul. The new members whom Isaiah saw in vision fled to Christ's altar as quickly as the doves fly to their windows.

The swiftness of the dove's flight is one of the greatest inspirations to me of all of Isaiah's vision. Why the swiftness? Because I know that we can come to Christ now. Oh, my brother, it takes a swift wing for you in an instant of time to cross over all that far country of sin which separates you from God's dovecote. The distance from Arizona to New York or from St. Sebastian, Spain, to Venice, where doves have flown, are not as far. Tell me, O man, did you not start forth on your journey of sin ten, twenty, forty years ago? Why, let me recount the years. You have not seen a communion table since your mother died. You have not made one earnest prayer for ten years. If I was to-day to count over the list of your intimate friends I would find them without exception to be men and women who have not been in the past and are not now living Christian lives. Oh, my brother, my poor sin sick brother, you have a long distance to come back to God. But you can come by divine grace. You can come now. You can come as quickly as the new converts of the church which Isaiah saw in vision came to the mercy seat. You can come with a superlative swiftness. You can come with the lightning velocity of a flying dove.

But why talk about Isaiah's church of the future? Why caption this sermon with the title, "The Coming Awakening?" When Isaiah saw this migrating dove and used it as an emblem was he alluding only to a future church? I think not. I think as the Hebrew prophet was standing there on the mountain of inspiration looking off on what was to come he kept saying to himself: "Why is it not possible for this vision of God's church to be materialized now? Is not God willing to bring this beatific condition to present man if the members of the children of God will to-day co-operate with the Holy Spirit? Yes, he can, he will, was the prophet's thought. I know this is the thought to-day running through many a Christian's mind. God can and God will make the prophetic vision of Isaiah come true now if we, the church members, will only truly yield ourselves and consecrate our minds and hearts to Christ's will. O man, O woman, the greatest enemy of Jesus Christ to-day is not the infidel and scoffer outside of the church. It is the man and the woman inside the church who does not co-operate with Jesus in his purpose to save the world for Christ through the agency of his church. If we yield ourselves to his will even the smallest and the most insignificant can become mighty for God, for, as Joshua hath said: "One man of you shall chase a thousand, for the Lord your God, he it is that fighteth for you, as he hath promised you. Take good heed, therefore, unto yourselves that ye love the Lord your God."

The symbol of the dove which Isaiah uses to describe the church could not be better illustrated than by the spectacle in the great square of Venice, which is flanked on the one side by the famous cathedral of St. Mark. With but few exceptions I have seen all the great cathedrals of the world. Take it all in all, though it cost not nearly as much as some others, the most impressive cathedral I ever saw was that of St. Mark's of Venice.

Like unto natural scenery St. Mark's is the Yellowstone Park, not the Yosemite or the Gothard Pass, among the cathedrals. It impressed me not with its size so much as its exquisite colorings. Its roof, its walls, its arcades all blended as the colors of a rainbow frozen in stone. The tops of its lofty columns were not hideous with grimy gargoyles. They were chiseled into flower gardens, which grew at your feet or with their leaves hung down from above. These different flower gardens were so perfectly chiseled that it seemed as if the winds, sweeping up from the Venetian Canals were gently swaying them as the rosebushes bended under the touch of a summer breeze in your father's garden. There, within those walls, the chancel and auditorium blend in such perfect harmony that when I stood before the altar's picture of the dying Christ I felt for the first time in a European cathedral that I was in the presence of God and in the place of prayer.

But, though I saw many places in the Venice cathedral that entranced me, after all, my greatest lesson learned there was outside the cathedral walls, and not within. I learned that lesson there not from the cold stones of a building, but from the warm hearts of living doves. There, from behind the towers and from within the recesses down from the roof and the four great bronze horses, from pillars and vestibules, the doves gather around you by the hundreds. They came as fearlessly to my side as my little children might come. They perched on my shoulder, on my hat. They fluttered over my head. They crowded by the hundreds at my feet to eat of the food I had ready for them. As they fluttered about me I said to myself, "Would that God's sinful children might here gather about these church doors as I see my God's little feathered loved ones." When I spoke these words involuntarily I started. I said to myself, "Why will not God's sinful children thus come to God's sanctuaries?" Did not Isaiah in vision see them coming? Shall they not come? Will they not come now if the Christian church members feed them with the "bread of life," as I am feeding these birds with little crumbs? Yes, they will. They will, if we Christian church members only live right and offer to the outside suffering world the right kind of divine sustenance. Will not you and I, O church members, by our examples and welcome and gospel food, make Isaiah's vision a possibility now? Will not you and I, as followers of Christ, beckon the sinners to him, and they will come as doves come to their windows.

Commercial Traveller Talks of Dodd's Kidney Pills.

Gives Valuable Advice to Those Who Use the Railroad Train Frequently.

Toronto, Ont., Sept. 26.—(Special)—Mr. J. H. Ireland, one of the oldest and best known commercial travellers on the road, has come out with a statement for the benefit of his fellow travellers.

"It is with pleasure," says Mr. Ireland, "that I indorse Dodd's Kidney Pills. While on a trip through the Maritime Provinces Dodd's Kidney Pills completely cured me of a severe pain in my back that had bothered me for some time. The first dose seemed to go right to the spot and removed the trouble so effectually that it has not and is not likely to return.

"Dodd's Kidney Pills are just as advertised," Mr. Ireland concludes. "They cure to stay cured."

Travellers, railroad men and others who ride on the railway a good deal are subject to Kidney Troubles. They will find Mr. Ireland's statement valuable reading.

Paul Lawrence Dunbar, the Afro-American poet, is critically ill of consumption, at Dayton, Ohio. The doctors say he probably will not live lohger than a month.

SUCCESSFUL MOTHERS.

You will always find that the mothers who are successful in bringing up families of hearty, healthy children are those who are careful to note the slightest evidence of illness and to check it at once. The wise mother gives her children Baby's Own Tablets at the first symptom of any childish ailment, and almost at once the little one is all right. Mrs. Thos. Stevenson, 13 Bishop street, Halifax, N. S., says: "It gives me pleasure to be able to speak of the great value of Baby's Own Tablets. I always give them to my children when they are ailing in any way, and they speedily make them well. I would advise every mother to keep the Tablets in the house." The Tablets allay teething irritation, rent constipation, destroy worms, cure colic and stomach troubles, prevent fevers and break up colds. They can be given safely to a new born child. Sold by all medicine dealers or sent by mail at 25 cents a box by writing The Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

MESSRS. C. C. RICHARDS & CO.

Gentlemen,—I fell from the bridge leading from a platform to a loaded car while assisting my men in unloading a load of grain. The bridge went down as well as the load on my back and struck on the ends of the sleepers, causing a serious injury to my leg. Only for its being very fleshy would have broken it. In an hour I could not walk a step. Commenced using MINARD'S LINIMENT, and the third day went to Montreal on business, and got about well by the use of a cane. In ten days was nearly well. I can sincerely recommend it as the best Liniment that I know of in use.

Yours truly,

AUGUST EMIGRATION.

The Liverpool (Eng.) Daily Post says: "Popular as emigration to Canada has become the number who went direct to Canada during August falls short 255 of August, 1903, but to the States there has been a large increase. August, 1904, showing 39,973 against 29,512 in August 1903. No doubt a substantial number of the emigrants who sailed for American ports may ultimately find their way to Canada, but it is none the less remarkable that the number of British emigrants who sailed direct to Canada is less than one-third of the total going direct to the States."

MISS CORELLI FLAYS CARNEGIE.

Marie Corelli is now engaged in a novel in which Andrew Carnegie is said to figure prominently and unfavorably. The authoress has a poor opinion of Mr. Carnegie's character, owing to his action respecting the free library for Stratford-on-Avon, and even does not give him credit for making his own fortune, which she declares really was amassed by his brother.

Nearly all infants are more or less subject to diarrhoea and such complaints while teething, and as this period of their lives is the most critical, mothers should not be without a bottle of Dr. J. The proprietors claim it will cure any case of cholera or summer complaint.

THE SERVANT PROBLEM ENDS; SPINSTER HAS A PLAN.

Of the many schemes which have been suggested in London as a possible solution of the domestic servant problem, probably the latest is the most ambitious. The idea, which had its inception in the mind of an unmarried daughter of a country canon, and which has been largely discussed in the London press, is that of the formation of a co-operative government between mistresses and maids. The scheme is called "The National Registry, Limited." It is planned to obtain an army of 100,000 and 200,000 servants to bind themselves together in a friendly union. The work is to be done systematically. A town or district will be taken and a few ladies there induced to interest themselves in the movement. "Then," says a cynic, "the trouble will begin, for the whole place is to be canvassed in order to get into touch with those who will have them to offer. The response no doubt will be prodigious, and the tales told each side will be edifying when they are not scandalous." But it is to come out all right in the end, for when two hundred ladies are prepared to pay $5 each, a local committee of management will be formed and the good mistress and the servant will embrace each other. Of course only exemplary servants and mistresses with good characters will be admitted into this noble society, which pronounces the doom of the bogus and undesirable registry office and is to save $5,000,000 a year alleged to be paid in fees by mistresses and servants to the registry office.

Le Comte D'Alviella urged that the President of the United States was quite the proper person to tender mediation. After the alarmist reports in circulation was next taken up. Congressman Burton of Cleveland presented the resolution and urged its adoption. The resolution was supported enthusiastically and its adoption was unanimously voted. By this resolution President Roosevelt is asked to call a second session of The Hague Conference. The real labors of the conference were thus ended.

FINAL SETTLEMENT OF CONTRABAND QUESTION.

Russia's position on the question of contrababand will be officially promulgated in the form of decisions of the Admiralty Court in the cases of the Calchas, Arabia and Allantown, when they come up on appeal, says a St. Petersburg cable. Prof. de Maartens, president of the commission which decided the Russian interpretation of the contraband, will appear on behalf of the Government, thus insuring the acceptance of the principles formulated by the commission. He will be in possession of the British and American notes, and the contentions of those Governments will be practically before the courts. Russia's position has been authoritatively stated as follows: Russia does not desire to interfere with Great Britain's legitimate commerce with Japan, but she has the right to, and must, protect herself as far as possible against shipments which may aid the enemy in prosecuting the war.

Could Not Eat Without Suffering

Sixteen Years of Great Distress from Indigestion and Liver Trouble--Doctor's Failed--Cure Effected by

Dr. Chase's Kidney Liver Pills.

In most cases of chronic indigestion the liver and kidneys are at fault as well as the stomach, and because of their combined action on these organs, Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills cure when all ordinary means fail.

The case of Mrs. Husband is not unlike scores and hundreds which are repeated to us. There can be no better evidence as to the thoroughness and effectiveness of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills.

Mrs. E. Husband, Moore street, St. Catharines, Ont., states: "I was seriously afflicted with indigestion and stomach trouble for sixteen years. Finally I became so bad that I could scarcely eat anything without eating terrible distress. Gradually I grew weaker and more emaciated, and though treated by three doctors and a specialist I received no benefit.

"After a time a pain began in my right side, which medical men said was liver trouble. I never got relief until I began the use of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills, and they helped me at once. By using about a dozen boxes I was entirely cured. I owe my cure entirely to this treatment, and make this statement with the hope that some poor sufferer may benefit by my experience.

Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills, one pill a dose, 25c. a box, at all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Toronto. To protect you from imitations, the portrait and signature of Dr. A. W. Chase, the famous receipt book author, are on every box.

Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local applications as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

FRIDAY, SEP. 30, 1904

The Provincial voters' list will close on the 8th of October. The revision of the list will take place on Nov. 7th before W. H. Whimster, registrar of voters for the District. All who have not yet attended to having their names placed on the list should take advantage of this last opportunity.

As will be seen elsewhere the council have authorized the city solicitor to draw up a curfew by-law, to be presented at the next meeting. Perhaps no act of the City Fathers will give greater satisfaction to the people of Fernie than this one. Scarcely a week passes by but some one complains of the shameful manner in which children are allowed to roam and romp on the public streets at all hours of the night and we have been asked numerous times to agitate for a curfew by-law. Snch a by-law is not intended to restrict the liberty of wholesome growing youth, but rather to foster its freedom and to preserve and protect from contaminating vice and evil associations. We do not believe in putting old heads on young shoulders, in depriving boys and girls of their legitimate and rightful hours of play. No rational curfew law will do that. But we do very strenuously object to young boys loafing around the doors of bars, stores, public buildings, etc., where their young ears soon become accustomed to filthy language and where their impressionable characters come under the demoralizing influence of loose habits.

In addition to the well-authenicated reports from other sources that the Kootenay Central is about to be built, comes the direct statement of Sir Thos. Shaughnessy, president of the C.P.R. that the line will be built by his company during the coming summer. There is no doubt that the C.P.R. have had this line in contemplation for some time as it affords the natural connecting link between the main line and the Crow's Nest Branch. The encroachment of the Great Northern in this section has doubtless had the effect of urging greater activity on the part of the C.P.R. The Kootenay Central will mean much for East Kootenay. Locally it will open up a fine valley, rich in agricultural and mineral wealtn, and it will bring to those towns which have patiently waited its advent a full measure of reward. More generally speaking it will prove of immense benefit to the whole of East Kootenay. Not only will it promote activity in new industries in the valley through which it runs, but it will open the Crow's Nest Branch to a more direct line to the coast. Instead of the present tedious water course through West Kootenay we will be in touch with the coast by an all-rail line. This will cut off half a day from the present schedule time and it ought to have a beneficial effect upon the freight rates from the mainline points due to the saving of numerous barge or transhipments.

Mr. Jas. McEvoy, P. L. S., has been engaged lately at running over some of the old survey lines on the north end of the Fernie townsite. The lines originally laid out by T. T. McVittie, P. L. S. were found to agree with the new ones. The entire building of the Fernie Manufacturing Co's. plant is found to be inside the townsite. The work of laying this end off into townsite lots will proceed after Nov. 1st when the remainder of the townsite to the river will be cleared according to contract and the survey of the whole can be done at the same time.

Constable A. P. Walker and wife returned on Sunday from Moyie where Mr. Walker has been substituting for Constable Routh. The latter will not return for a few days and his place is taken by Constable Hoskin, of Cranbrook. Mr. Walker reports that the mines at Moyie are working only about half force at the present time owing to the shortage of water. Pumps have been ordered and sufficient water will be got from the lake to run the mines with a fuller force.

A monster barbecue was held by the miners of Naniamo last Saturday in honor the completion of Pithead No. 1. The correspondent of the Vancouver Province speaking said "The management of the affair was in the hands of a committee of the employees appointed for the purpose by General Manager Stockett, whose instructions were brief and to the point: 'Make all the necessary arrangements to give everybody a good time and send the bill to me'. The instructions were carried out.'

With Fernie, Mr. Kerr was particularly impressed The townspeople have shown such remarkable energy in rebuilding so rapidly since the fire. The Tissue Paper Man

by WILLIAM H. OSBORNE

Copyright, 1908, by T. C. McClure

The maid knocked gently upon Miss Catherwood's door and handed in a card. Miss Catherwood looked at it and tossed it to the floor.

"Oh, the dickens!" she said frankly. It will be seen at once that, although Miss Catherwood was a young lady of beauty and charming personal characteristics, she had decided opinions about various things. One of the things was Mr. Anthony Wadsworth, who, as appeared, was waiting below for an audience with her.

"The dickens!" reiterated Miss Catherwood. "I suppose I shall have to see him." Miss Catherwood's mother happened to be within earshot.

"Who is it?" she inquired. She was informed. "Dear me," said Miss Catherwood's mother, "why, Mr. Anthony Wadsworth has always appeared to me to be a very proper young man."

"That's just the trouble, mother," returned Miss Catherwood. "He's too proper. He's too conventional. He's a tissue paper man."

"Dear me," answered her mother, "he—he doesn't look like a tissue paper man."

"Oh, I know," petulantly responded the young lady. "I know. He's just about the proper weight and proper height, and his shoulders are just the proper breadth. He's like a pattern—a fashion plate. He's just unbearable."

Miss Catherwood's mother, who could not quite reconcile her daughter's premises with her conclusion, sighed. Her daughter swept out of the room and went downstairs.

Mr. Anthony Wadsworth rose as she entered and bowed in a quaint old fashioned way. He was flustered and embarrassed, and there was good reason for it, for Mr. Anthony Wadsworth was there for a purpose, and his purpose ultimately became apparent. He was there to propose to Miss Catherwood, and he proposed. He didn't do it very well, and Miss Catherwood, who had had a proposal or two before, as she listened to him made mental comparisons that were unfavorable to this particular suitor.

"Don't—don't give me your answer tonight," implored Mr. Wadsworth, the perspiration standing out upon his brow. "Wait—wait until tomorrow night. Take time."

Miss Catherwood, who would have preferred to end it at once, assented. She said with all the coldness she could summon to her aid that she would consider it; that she would wait until tomorrow night. And she had a reason for it. She had an engagement with Tommy Boggs for the next night, and she intended to write a short note for Mr. Wadsworth to receive when he came. That would be the end of Mr. Wadsworth.

Tommy Boggs, a boisterous young man whom she rather liked, was going to do for her what no one had ever done. He was going to take her down to a big political rally in the Fourteenth ward—down where she could see politics as it really is. She looked forward to it with pleasure. She liked to learn about the real things that real men did.

She started with Tommy about 7 o'clock in the evening in order to get a choice seat in the ladies' quarters. She left the fatal note with her mother, with instructions to hand it to Mr. Wadsworth. She told her mother what it was. Her mother, who was a very tender hearted old lady, met Mr. Wadsworth at the door—he came at 8 o'clock sharp—and Mr. Wadsworth was so downhearted when he found that Miss Catherwood was out that the old lady thought she would keep the note to herself.

"I—I'll call tomorrow evening," said Mr. Wadsworth tremulously. "She probably forgot last night that she had this—this engagement for tonight, although— I'll call tomorrow night."

Down in the Fourteenth ward, in Bailey's hall, Tommy Boggs and Miss Catherwood were having the time of their lives. The campaign was in full blast. Election was near at hand. Miss Catherwood kept her eyes on the speaker, and she listened to every word he said.

"Isn't he fine?" she exclaimed to Tommy. "It's just great to be a man like that, a man who can sway men."

There was a burst of applause from something more than one-third of the crowd as the man upon the platform paused in his speech at the proper place. He was a paid campaign orator, and he was good at that. But there was just a bit of dissatisfaction visible upon the faces of the crowd. A man near Miss Catherwood moved about uneasily.

"Aw, ——," he said, "why don't they bring on the alderman? What the —— the use o' this?"

Another man nudged him. "The alderman," he explained, "ain't a-goin' to be on hand tonight."

As he spoke a stout man entered from behind the scenes and stepped up toward the front of the stage. He was cheered loudly.

"That must be the alderman," whispered Miss Catherwood to Tommy Boggs. But he wasn't. He whispered for a moment to the speaker, and the speaker nodded and shook his head. The big man raised his hand.

"Ladies and gents," he said, "we'd fully expected to have the alderman with us here tonight, but I'm givin' it to you straight that"—

He was interrupted by a mighty yell. "Hi, hi, hi!" yelled the crowd. "What ye givin' us? Look behind you!"

The big man turned, and everybody looked and howled. "Hooray, hooray, hooray!" yelled the crowd. Miss Catherwood looked with the rest, and then she gave a little gasp, for the man that the whole crowd was looking and yelling at was a young man attired in a full dress suit. He was bowing, with conventional stiffness, right and left, and he was none other than Mr. Anthony Wadsworth.

"Tony, Tony, Tony, Tony!" yelled the crowd. The big man stepped forward. "Mr. Tony Wadsworth," he exclaimed by way of introduction, and pandemonium broke loose. Mr. Anthony Wadsworth stepped forward a pace or two. "Ain't he corkin'?" said the loquacious individual near Miss Catherwood, "and he always comes here in a swallowtail suit. He knows what's what, he does"

Wadsworth nodded, and the crowd became instantly silent. "I didn't intend to be here tonight," he explained. He hesitated. "The fact is," he went on, "I had an engagement with my girl, and she turned me down. I didn't have any other place to go, and I came here."

This, in black and white, amounts to nothing. But it was the way that Wadsworth said it that took. "Ha, ha, ha!" roared the crowd. "Imagine Tony's girl a-turnin' of him down. Go on, Tony!"

Mr. Anthony Wadsworth raised his hand high in the air and started in. Suddenly he stopped. He was looking directly into the eyes of Miss Catherwood herself. He turned white and then turned red. Then he turned away and apparently forgot her. And then he started in. He started in as only Alderman Anthony Wadsworth knew how. Miss Catherwood had thought the campaign orator had talked as no other man could talk. That was because she had never heard Mr. Anthony Wadsworth. With one hand in his trousers pocket and the other in the air the alderman walked up and down the stage, casting into the very faces of his audience humor, pathos, expletive, vituperation, sarcasm, congratulation—everything.

And when he finished the crowd surged up to the platform and literally overwhelmed him. Miss Catherwood, when it was all over, drew a sharp breath. "To think," she wailed to herself, "that I have refused such a man!"

The next night Mr. Anthony Wadsworth called upon her. She met him at the door. She was radiant.

"I—I've come to ask your pardon," he said contritely.

"For what?" she inquired.

"You—you haven't forgotten," he stammered, "about—about my—my girl last night. I—I don't know why I said it. I felt reckless, I suppose."

She laughed joyously. "That," she said, "is the only part of your speech last night that I had forgotten. It was just superb."

He laughed. "Dear me," he answered, "that's nothing. Every fellow in politics has to do that. That's not the question," he went on. "There's something else."

"W-what?" she inquired timidly.

"I want to know," he continued, "whether—whether my—my girl is going to turn me down tonight? If so I've got a meeting in the Fifth district. The boys are waiting for me."

Miss Catherwood stepped toward him and held out her hand. "They can't have you," she answered gently, "Anthony Wadsworth, alderman."

Somewhat Surprising.

"John," remarked Mrs. Bifkins coldly at the breakfast table, "you were saying some rather queer things in your sleep last night. You mentioned something about Kittie and a full house and a showdown and a few other things along that line. What were you talking about?"

Did Mr. Bifkins tell his wife that Kittie was the name of the woman who cleaned out the office and that he was probably dreaming about a full house down at the show the other night? The funny papers would have you believe that he did. But he did not.

"I was probably dreaming of the poker game I sat in that night," he replied without batting an eye. "I lost $37.15 in that game, by the way, so I can't let you have that $19.98 for that new hat for a couple of weeks."

Did Mrs. Bifkins scream and burst into tears and call him a brute and go right straight back to her mother? The comic writers and the jokesmiths would have you think she did. But she didn't.

"You must be a bum pokerist, John," she said scornfully. "I don't believe you know a straightup from a fourflush. I believe I could give you three kings and beat you to the jack pot myself. What did you think you were doing—digging post holes or playing pingpong?"—Smart Set.

Football For a Husband.

Until early in the nineteenth century it was a very ancient custom practiced at Inverness, Scotland, for the spinsters to meet the matrons in an annual game of football. All the available women took part, and the men surrounded the players and urged on their sisters, wives and sweethearts in their struggle, directing their efforts by word of mouth and encouraging the exhausted to struggle on and secure the prize.

The honors of these unusual combats, strange to say, rested more often with the married than the single, for the men selected their wives from those who showed most prowess and endurance on the football field. Hence all the better players were mated and frequently more than a match for the less tough and skillful maidens, though the latter fought like the knights of old for the lady of their choice and to the death, a strange reversal of positions, which doubtless had its compensating advantages when domestic differences arose between a tyrannical husband and his former footballing consort.

AN INDIAN JOKER.

Kickingberg's Poser, Which Dr. Rose Made No Attempt to Answer.

"It is a notorious fact that there are but few humorists among the many thousands of Indians in this country, and I therefore regard it as a distinction to have enjoyed the friendship of a red man who was a wag in every sense of the word," observed a former member of congress from Ohio in conversation with a friend.

"The wag to whom I refer was known as Kickingberg and was a Kiowa. He was a fine, handsome and tall specimen of Indian manhood. He and myself became fast friends and often dined together.

"I recall an incident in which Kickingberg played a part. It was an important conference between Dr. Rose of Philadelphia and a delegation of Kiowas and was held almost within the shadow of Fort Sill. In the course of his remarks Dr. Rose urged the red man to follow in the steps of the industrious white man—to get a piece of land, till it, raise a family and become a citizen of whom the community might be proud. At the conclusion of his remarks Dr. Rose announced that he was willing to be interrogated.

"Kickingberg took the floor. He said, 'Why don't white men do as white man says?' Raising his arm and pointing to Fort Sill he continued, saying, 'Lots white men there got no squaws, no farm—they carry guns!'

"Dr. Rose was confounded. It would have been certain death to have truthfully explained to the Indians the reason for the station of the troops at Fort Sill. And so Dr. Rose made no attempt to answer the question, which had a demoralizing effect upon the conference.

"A day or two later I met Kickingberg. I inquired why he made such a speech and told him he had done wrong. He nearly went into convulsions with laughter and regarded his act as a great joke. Recovering himself he said:

"'I know doctor could not answer question. I know, same as doctor, government keeps 2,000 soldiers at fort to shoot us down if we don't behave.'"

QUEER THINGS TO PAINT.

Peculiar Subjects For Pictures Selected by Students.

A noted artist was addressing his class.

"Young men," he said, "when you begin to paint don't choose peculiar and uncanny subjects for your pictures. Some of you, though, despite me, will choose such subjects. That has been the case with all my classes.

"A country lad painted under me a picture of Nebuchadnezzar eating grass. The picture was intended to be horrible and sad. In a gaunt landscape the king, nearly naked, crouched on his hands and knees. He was eating greedily of a big bunch of grass that he held in his left hand. His aspect was bestial and insane. The picture wasn't badly done, but whoever looked at it laughed.

"Another student of mine once painted a picture that he called 'The Deliverance of Jonah.' On a sea beach Jonah knelt, his hands clasped and his face turned skyward in grateful prayer. The whale was disappearing. Its vast bulk was sinking into the sea.

"A young Australian painted 'The Pound of Flesh.' In this composition the judge and the multitude of spectators looked on while Portia held a long knife against the bared ribs of Shylock. Shylock was howling with wide open mouth and arms stretched out in an appeal for mercy, and the blood was beginning to flow from his side. When this picture's disagreement with Shakespeare's text was pointed out to the young Australian he said, smiling indifferently, that an error of that sort did not interfere with the picture's value as a work of art.

"Among the queer subjects that my pupils have chosen to paint there have been lepers, snakes, tombstones, rats, tailors, worms, skeletons and surgical operations."

The Judge Silenced.

In the famous trial of the dean of St. Asaph, Mr. Erskine, the great English lawyer, put a question to the jury relative to the meaning of their verdict. Mr. Justice Buller objected to its propriety. The counsel reiterated his question and demanded an answer. The judge again interposed his authority in these emphatic words:

"Sit down, Mr. Erskine. Know your duty or I shall be obliged to make you know it."

Mr. Erskine, with equal warmth, replied: "I know my duty as well as your lordship knows your duty. I stand here as the advocate of a fellow citizen, and I will not sit down."

The judge was silent, and the advocate persisted in his questions.

The Intelligent Mule.

"Valuable mule that," said the Billville citizen to the prospective purchaser. "Saved my life once."

"Indeed! How was that?"

"Saw a flash of lightning making straight for me an' kicked it all to pieces 'fore it could land!"

A Heated Argument.

A man who was charged with assaulting his wife pleaded that he had only had a heated argument with her. It afterward transpired that the "heated argument" consisted of his beating his wife with a redhot poker.—London Tit-Bits.

WALTER SCOTT.

WALTER SCOTT, M. P.,
President of the Leader-Times Publishing Company.

Of all the newspaper men of the Canadian West, perhaps none is personally more popular, or has proved professionally more successful than Walter Scott, M. P. for West Assiniboia, and president of the company owning the Regina Leader and the Moosejaw Times. This is in no sense remarkable when the characteristics of the man are known, for they are characteristics that necessarily compel success and inevitably attract friends. Quiet efficiency, disciplined enthusiasm, tireless industry, calm judgment, broad outlook, abounding charity—these are the outstanding qualities impressing every one who meets Mr. Scott. He has firm opinions, opinions reached after mature thought, and which he advocates and defends reasonably and seasonably. But among those holding contrary views he has hosts of friends, and none ever heard him attack any man on personal grounds. It is doubtful if any one has ever heard Mr. Scott at any time say a word in dispraise or depreciation of any man whatsoever. Envy, hatred, calumny, malice, uncharitableness—these are all utterly foreign to his nature and disposition. If he cannot praise, he never blames. While Mr. Scott fearlessly criticizes what he considers wrong policies or courses of conduct, and in no sense can be considered a mere acquiescer, he appears to have the unusual faculty of looking at things from a detached, impersonal point of view, and of not including the person holding views from which he differs in the condemnation he gives to the opinions they hold. Both in his journalistic and political debates, he attacks and defends principles, rather than men. His method of public conviction is based on no appeal to any consideration of either person or sentiment but rests his case wholly on grounds of logic and reason. He compiles, arranges, relates, and presents facts and evidence impossible to dispute, points to the conclusions these facts have compelled he himself to reach, and leads his readers or his auditors, by the same process of reasoning, to arrive at similar conclusions. But as a writer and as a speaker, Mr. Scott indulges in no "frills." Elegance of expression is in every case subordinated to a businesslike presentation of facts or issues. After he is through the dullest reader or hearer understands Mr. Scott's position, knows how he has reached it, and in all probability is disposed to agree with him therein.

Mr. Scott is another instance of a successful professional man hailing from the farm. He was born in October, 1867, in London township, Middlesex county, Ont., and until the age of seventeen had little or no opportunity for education. At those infrequent intervals, when his services were not urgently required on the homestead, he attended the nearby country school, where he learned to read and write. But almost every minute of his early years he did the duty of chore boy or hired man at home. He picked the potato bug, pulled ragweed, followed the harrow and the plow, rode the sulky rake and the reaper, bound sheaves by hand, learned to swing both the scythe and the cradle, hoed the corn, pulled turnips, chopped wood, and studied at close range the disposition of the cow, the temper of the horse, and the life-purpose of the pig. From the quizzical humor with which Mr. Scott relates the experiences of those days, his friends infer that he loved not the occupation of pioneer farming, but, despite this, he feels an honest and pardonable pride in the fact that whatever measure of success he has attained has been due, not to extraneous help or accidental advantages, but to personal effort in overcoming personal disabilities.

In March, 1885, a lad of seventeen, Mr. Scott came west, landing at Portage la Prairie, and starting work as a driver in the delivery wagon of a firm of general traders there. After five months of this, he joined the staff of the Manitoba Liberal as "devil." In a few months he received promotion to "the case," and in December, 1886, accompanied C. J. Atkinson, the then proprietor of the paper, to Regina, where the Journal was founded. For six years he was working printer and writer with The Standard and the Leader, with a winter's interval at Winnipeg job offices to gain further experience.

In 1890 Mr. Scott returned as mechanical foreman to the Journal, which the following year was acquired by a local company under the presidency of the present Judge Scott of Edmonton. Two years later, in partnership with J. K. McInnis, he bought the Regina Standard, and, two years later still, disposed of his interest to Mr. McInnis, and bought the Moosejaw Times. He conducted the paper personally for a year, and in 1895 purchased the Regina Leader from W. F. Davin, M. P., and again returned to the Territorial Capital. Shortly afterwards the Leader-Times Company was organized, with Mr. Scott as president, and both papers entered on an enlarged sphere of usefulness.

The Leader, of which Mr. Scott, prior to the engrossing attention necessitated by public affairs, was more closely in control, has an enviable reputation among western newspapers. In the Territories its position corresponds somewhat with that occupied by the Toronto Globe in Eastern Canada. It is able, progressive, sound and sane. It gives the news when it is news, and on matters of Territorial interest has had the enterprise to institute and conduct personal investigation. The campaign of information it has within recent years carried on in connection with railway blockades, and general inefficiency and inadequacy of transportation facilities throughout the region in which it circulates is one that has attracted attention throughout the length and breadth of the Dominion, and that has earned for itself the enthusiastic support of the farmers whose grievances it exposed. Its editorial opinions are weighty and well considered, always regard public questions from the Western point of view, and are free from partisan rancor or hysteria, while typographically the Leader is one of the handsomest papers in the West.

Mr. Scott's reputation has been founded on his journalistic and parliamentary career, and hence it is not generally known that he is one of the best amateur ball players in the West. He was a playing member of Regina's first nine for eight years, and can play any position. For several seasons he was pitcher, and for two was behind the bat. In 1895, the year of the Territorial Exhibition, when he was living at Moose Jaw, he played second base with the local nine that won the championship of the Territories against several clubs with imported batteries. Mr. Scott has also won several curling trophies. He is not a "jiner," and has but few associations in fraternal societies, but is a member of Camp Balmoral, Sons of Scotland. As might have been expected from his Scotch ancestry, he is a Presbyterian.

Perhaps among the editors of the West Mr. Scott's chief title to popularity was the highly efficient manner in which, in 1899, he acted as president of the Western Canada Press Association. During the term of his presidency the first, and perhaps the most enjoyable and successful, of the ambitious series of excursions which have marked the successful career of the W. C. P. A., was inaugurated. The editors, with "their sisters and their cousins and their aunts," went through to the Coast and down to Washington State points, being tendered many banquets, receptions and other entertainments en route, at all of which Mr. Scott was the Association's protagonist, he and his umbrella—which no one ever saw him without—well and worthily maintaining the honor and dignity of Western Canadian journalism.

Four years ago Mr. Scott was nominated for the Commons in West Assiniboia, and after an exciting election, defeated his opponent, the brilliant Irishman, Nicholas F. Davin, by hundreds of votes. At Ottawa Mr. Scott has made for himself an enviable record for so young a man. He has paid great attention to the subjects of grain trade and inspection, has resolutely stood for discontinuance of land grants to railway companies, and on the general questions of railways and transportation has displayed great activity. Among the many local benefits he has succeeded in securing for his constituency was the inducing of the Dominion Government to deed to these towns blocks of lots which had been held for years in a Town Site Pool, so escaping taxation.

Of all the young men in the Ottawa House, there are none whose utterances command more respectful attention, both from his leaders and his opponents. As quiet of voice as he is of manner, Mr. Scott depends for the effect of what he says rather on the matter than the manner of his remarks, but few speeches delivered in the Commons are more persuasive than his closely reasoned, fact-full addresses. Last January Mr. Scott was re-nominated by a convention which had delegations from every corner of the constituency, and which offered him the nomination on the first ballot with absolute unanimity.

Mr. Scott is one of the West's rising young men, both as a citizen, a journalist, a politician. His tact, his courage, his industry mark him for future honors, and Western newspaper men may felicitate themselves that among their number is one with such promise of a career so distinguished.

The Latest Happenings In The Dominion.

CENSUS OF THE BUFFALO.

A world census of all the American buffalo or bison now living has just been completed by Mark Sullivan of Boston, Mass., who achieved his remarkable results by correspondence. He conducted a similar census about four years ago and found that the number of bison then in existence numbered 1,204. The latest census fixes the number at 1,233, an increase of 29 in four years. The largest group is in the Pahlo Allard herd on the Flathead Indian reservation in Montana. It comprises 330. The next largest wild herd is west of the Great Slave Lake, Northwest Canada, numbering 200. The James Phillip herd, Fort Pierre, S. D., numbers 160, and the J. J. Hill group at Cardigan, Minn., 18. In the Banff (Rocky Mountain) park are 45; in the Yellowstone park, 70; at Winnipeg, Denver and other city parks, 30, and at the Gold Night ranch, Texas, 50. The average value is six hundred dollars, or the total nearly $800,000. A mysterious herd in Lost Park, Colo., was not included.

Part of the breast bone is gone, and several ribs as well. Two doctors are in attendance. A remarkable thing is that after being wounded in this horrible manner Sheppard actually walked up a hill after landing near the scene of the shooting.

OLD WORLD NEWS

INTERESTING BUDGET FROM BRITAIN

GREAT STRIKE ORDERED IN ITALY.

The strike in Rome has begun, but it is not general, says a despatch dated the 17th. At Naples it has been decided to strike Monday. In other towns troops are kept in readiness and the police everywhere have been reinforced. The Socialist agitation is on the increase, especially in the northern part of Italy. In some places it is assuming the character of a rebellion. Another fight has occurred at Genoa between the police and strikers. The whole night was passed in darkness there owing to the strike. The mayor and other municipal officers of Milan came to Rome to-day to present to the government an expression of indignation of the population of Milan as a result of what they term the slaughter of the people. The real cause of the whole agitation is an attempt of the extreme party to overthrow the cabinet. In spite of the fact that it is a Liberal ministry it energetically keeps the extremists in hand. The Paris Journal's Genoa correspondent reported that he had travelled to Nice in order to file the following uncensored despatch: "The situation throughout Italy is most serious. At Rome the council of ministers has called out two classes of reserves in order to reinforce the authorities. Premier Giolitti has postponed a journey to Racioncigi, which he had intended to make for the purpose of extending his personal congratulations on the birth of the crown prince. At Port Novo crowds of people stopped the railroad trains, many children lying down before the engines. Troops were powerless. One person was killed and several badly hurt in a colision with soldiers at Genoa where the strikers prevented the departure of trains. Railway tracks were also torn up near Rivarolo. No trains left Milan Sunday night."

SALVATION ARMY'S AUTOMOBILE.

"What do I think of automobiling, now that my trip is over," queried General Booth of the Salvation Army, in reply to a question asked him on his return to London after his tour from Land's End to Aberdeen. "Well," with a mischievous twinkle in his eye, "I don't think a man ought to start motoring unless he is prepared to die at full speed. Of course my trip was hardly fair to the motor, but it shows me the providence of God. If I was a manufacturer I would leave all the swell cars go to the French and turn my attention to a car for the butcher, the grocer, the doctor and the tradesman, so that they could keep them for business and pleasure. It ought to be cheap, good and substantial." Asked if the tour answered his purpose, the general replied, exultingly: "The trip has resulted in a lot of prejudice against the army being removed from the minds of the people. I could not have covered the distance in time without an automobile."

LIVED IN MIRROR HALL; IS MAD.

A cable from St. Petersburg says: From Tomsk comes a curious story of a modern Narcissus. He is Vladimir Yevdokimoff, son of one of the richest merchants in Russia. After spending millions of roubles in all sorts of foolish ways he retired to Tomsk with a considerable fortune still in his hands. He bought a wooded hill in the neighborhood and on the summit built a glass palace. One of the largest of the rooms is a hall, in which walls, roof and floor are formed only of mirrors. In the middle of this hall he had a throne erected which revolved on a pivot like a piano stool. Here he would sit for hours admiring himself. His admiration of himself was sometimes varied by elaborate banquets, to which only women were invited. They were attired as Bacchantes, and he presided crowned with roses. In five years he squandered 7,000,000 roubles and now is in an asylum for the insane.

BATTLE IN PARAGUAY.

The rebel vessel Sajonia attacked San Antonio, on the 15th, says a cable from Buenos Ayres, General Ferriera making a simultaneous attack by land with cavalry and infantry after a reconnaissance towards Literone, where a considerable number of Government troops were encountered. The combat lasted three hours and resulted in the defeat and dispersal of the Government forces. The extent of the losses is unknown. The Argentine consul at Ascension has telegraphed confirmation of the defeat, but gives no facts as to the losses sustained. The Sajonia returned to Villetta without having sustained a single casualty.

In the Journal of the Board of Agriculture, A. D. Hall, writing of the Rothamstead experimental station, eulogizes Manitoba wheat, which enables bakers to make two more loaves from each sack of flour. While No. 1 hard Manitoba sold last season 35 shillings per quarter, the best British brought only 29 shillings.

F. W. Leigh, president of the Federation of Grocers' Association, London, in speaking of the grocery exhibition, expressed the hope that the enterprise displayed by the Canadian Government would next year be emulated by other colonies and the daughters of the motherland.

RELIEF EXPEDITION HAD TO TURN BACK.

W. S. Champ, secretary of William Ziegler, who was in charge of the relief expedition sent in search for the Arctic exploration steamer America, has arrived in Tromsoe, Norway, on board the steamer Frithjof. Mr. Champ, in a statement given out on his arrival said: "I regret to report my failure to reach Franz Josef Land. The ice conditions were insurmountable and the approaching winter and the heavy frosts compelled us to abandon further efforts to get north."

JULES VERNE HAS NEW NOVEL.

The veteran fiction writer, Jules Verne, says a Paris despatch, who has attained the ripe age of four score years, is to publish a new story entitled, "Automobolisme," which, it is said, will be even more interesting to old and young than any of his numerous works of past years.

TO DISCUSS ROENTGEN METHOD.

A congress to discuss the Roentgen method will meet in Berlin April 30,1905. Professor Roentgen will be the guest of honor of the congress, which marks the tenth anniversary of the publication of his dicovery.

KIPLING SLAPS LAZY BRITONS.

A Paris correspondent writes: After reading, the Vicomte Robert D'Aumiere's kind and sympathetic volume, "Impressions of London, English Society and English Rule in India," Rudyard Kipling has written to the author a letter, which the Figaro publishes. Mr. Kipling declares he is glad that another England, which he says is spoiled by too much ease, which sleeps and because it snores aloud imagines that it thinks, has escaped the French author's notice.

DO NOT USE DUM-DUM BULLETS.

General Sakharoff telegrapns from St. Petersburg a formal denial of General Oyama's statements. He says the alleged dum-dum bullets found at Liao Yang are simply the regular square long bullets of the service revolver. They are of the same calibre as the Russian rifle of 1891, and the bullets are all lead, are not jacketed and are in nowise dum-dum. The general also makes the statement that the Japanese captured a large quantity of ammunition. He says they obtained possession only of a few boxes of empty cartridge shells, and says it is not true that the Russian rolling stock fell into the hands of the Japanese. Only two old trucks, he ads, were left on a siding.

Andrew Carnegie has written a little volume on James Watt, the great engineer, which will appear oon as the concluding volume of he "Famous Scots'" series.

TO REMAIN ON STRIKE.

Advices from Chicago state that because of alleged discrimination against the sheep butchers at the Union stock yards the Sheep Butchers' Union workmen have decided to remain on strike. All of the packing companies excepting Armour & Co., are alleged to be discriminating.

IROQUIOS THEATRE REOPENED.

The Iroquios Theatre in Chicago, in which nearly 600 persons were burned and smothered on December 30, 1903, was re-opened last week as a vaudeville playhouse. The theatre has been refitted at a cost of nearly $100,000, and constructed so as to meet every requirement of the law.

MODEST MILLIONAIRE.

Samuel Davis, who recently died in San Francisco, had lived simply in two rooms. The estate was found to be worth $1,193,522, all of which was in valuable stocks and bonds, except some real estate valued at $400,000. The aged man left a will in which he nominated Julius C. Heis, of San Francisco, as executor, and named a great many heirs extending from Scotland to the Pacific coast. Davis was born in Galway, New York, in 1862.

LAWYER'S ADVICE COMES HIGH.

President John Mitchell, of the United Mine Workers, arrived in Wilkesbarre a few days ago and attended a conference of the lawyers engaged for the defence in the case of A. D. Wales, attorney of Binghampton, N. Y., who has instituted a suit against President Mitchell and the United Mine Workers for $200,000, for a suggestion which he claims he made to Mr. Mitchell, and which, he alleges, was the means of settling the great strike of two years ago. Mr. Mitchell declined to make any statement, but at the trial it is understood he will make a denial that he acted on any suggestion made by Mr. Wales.

LENA'S CREW MUST REMAIN IN SAN FRANCISCO.

Admiral Goodrich has telegraphed to the Navy Department, says a despatch from Washington, D. C., that the agreement he entered into with Captain Berlinsky of the Russian vessel Lena for the parole of the officers and crew of the ship provides for the freedom of the city of San Francisco, but they may not go beyond the bounds of the city during the continuance of the present war, and under no conditions can they be permitted to return to Russia, except upon the conclusion of an agreement on that point between the Governments of Russia and Japan, which would relieve the United States of any responsibility.

SUICIDE BY AGREEMENT.

Nellie Geyer and James Day, sweet hearts, of Zanesville, O., committed suicide one day last week by agreement, although they did not die at the same hour. The girl left a latter to her mother foretelling the deed and leaving no doubt that there had been an agreement for the double tragedy during the night. Mrs. Parker, with whom Nellie Geyer was staying, was aroused before daybreak by groans and found Nellie in a pool of blood in her room. Later James Day was found about three miles outside the city, having shot himself while en route home from a visit to Miss Geyer. Neither of the suicides lived long enough to tell the motive for self-destruction.

Winnipeg, Thursday, Sept. 22, 1904.

WHEAT: The course of the wheat markets during the past week has been nervous and erratic, sharp declines and sharp advances alternating. The day after our report of last week was written there was a heavy slump in the prices running from 2c. in New York and Chicago to 4c. and even 5c. in Minneapolis and Duluth. The influences causing the decline were better weather conditions over America and lower cables from Europe, which so worked on the nerves of weak holders and gave such encouragement to short sellers that the markets for the day became completely demoralized in the eagerness of traders to get rid of wheat. Saturday's and Monday's markets continued to feel the influence of Friday's slump and declined further, but on Tuesday European Markets, especially London and Paris, became quite strong owing to reported free buying by the French trade of cargoes on ocean passage, and this caused a firmer feeling and moderate advance in American markets. Wednesday brought a great improvement in the weather over the Northwest spring wheat country, especially on the Canadian side, and it caused a somewhat weaker feeling in New York, Chicago and Winnipeg, but had no effect on prices in Minneapolis and Duluth. To-day, with a return of less favorable weather in the Northwest, an advance has taken place of 1c. to 1⅜c. in all markets. The difference in prices on the week, however, still shows an advance of from 5c. to 6c. per bushel, and in Minneapolis and Duluth a drop of 9c. per bushel on September wheat. The above shows how erratic and uncertain the wheat market is at the present time. And it is likely to continue more or less so throughout the present season. The level of price is higher than the grain trade or speculators have been used to for a long time. European stocks and amount on ocean passage are fair, but American stocks are decidedly small for the time of year. Crops in Europe and America are small compared to recent annual yields and the American crop is mixed in quality. World's consumption of wheaten flour has largely increased in recent years. Naturally high prices will lessen consumption by causing economy in use and prevention of waste, and will give opportunity for cheaper breadstuffs being used to a small extent. But before the effect of such influences have time to be generally recognized, actual movement of wheat and quality of new crops as shown by inspections, together with weather influences on the final ingathering of this year's crops for next season will give the speculative trade plenty of material for playing its game, and the prices of wheat may in that way be carried much above present level for temporary periods. In the long run the crops of the Southern hemisphere and the prospect for next year's crops in the Northern hemisphere will help to decide whether prices will hold up to present level or not. The movement of wheat in America is not large considering high prices and visible supply stock is still two million bushels under last year, and at the same time exports are not much over half last year's figures. In regard to new crops reports from the winter wheat States tell of good progress made in seeding under favorable conditions, and the prospect of increased acreage. The new crops in the Argentine and Australia are doing well, although there are rumors of locusts appearing in the Argentina which, however, may come to nothing. The visible supply increased 895,000 bushels last week against an increase of 301,000 bus. the previous week and an increase of 1,761,000 bushels last year. The world's shipments were 11,392,000 bushels, against 10,432,000 bushels the previous week and 9,181,000 bus. last year. The world's visible supply, according to Bradstreet's, increased 1,301,000 bushels, against an increase of 2,800,000 bushels the previous week and an increase of 4,779,000 bushels last year.

Manitoba wheat has been rather dull during the week. The delay in new wheat moving restricts trade. From the 1st inst. to date only 407 cars of wheat have passed Winnipeg, compared to 1,554 cars for same period last year. Exporters are scarcely doing anything yet, the price holding rather above export. Demand from the milling trade is good. With good increase in movement prices must come to export level, but weather is far from favorable for completing harvest, and getting ahead with thrashing. This delays movement, and also is making more or less no grade wheat. Prices show a decline of around 4c. on the week, and to-day are $1.01⅞. 1 Northern; 98⅞c., 2 Nor.; 93⅛c., 3 Nor.; 82c., No. 4 wheat; 55c., feed wheat, and 46c., No. 2 feed, spot. September or first half October delivery. On the option market prices closes October, $1.01⅞; December, 98⅞; May, $1.03¾; all prices are for in store Fort William and Port Arthur.

SAVED FROM SINKING SHIP.

A despatch from Grand Rapids, Mich., says: The steamer Pentland, bound from Petoskey to Grand Haven, on the 19th, saved eighteen lives in a heavy gale. When seventeen miles off Big Point Sable the barge Pewaunee was sighted in a sinking condition. The crew of eighteen were taken off.

SUITORS TO PLAY CARDS FOR WIDOW.

A despatch from New York says: Some day next week a game of pinochle will be played in the parlors of 224 Hudson avenue, Guttenburg, N. J., between two suitors for the hand of a widow who owns the house. The widow, who is to abide by the result of the game, is Mrs. Amelia Arkland, who is styled by her neighbors as "fair, fat and forty," and admits the forty. She has been married three times and weighs 200 pounds. She is worth $25,000. One of the suitors is Reinola Van Blessing, a carpenter, 39 years old. He has been courting the widow for some time and is a good hand at cards. The other man is Captain John Taylor, 43 years old, who has command of a tramp steamer. He also is a good card player. Captain Taylor was well acquainted with the widow's last husband, Arkland, who also was captain of a tramp steamship. Mrs. Arkland thinks a good deal of both men, and was undecided which to take. Van Blessing had, if anything, the better of the contest, as he was at home near the widow all the time. Recently both men have been so urgent for the widow to choose between them that she did not know what to do. Finally she said she would let a game of pinochle decide the matter. She said that 100,000 points would be the game. Mrs. Arkland is a lover of the game, and is herself no mean player. The contest, she stipulated, must be played in the parlor of her home in the presence of all concerned.

MORRISSEY NEWS.

On Friday last Robert Hewitt, a boy of about 14 years of age, met with a serious accident at the Carbonado mines, resulting in the loss of his right arm. Hewitt along with some other boys was employed at the tipple as a picker. The boys were having some fun and young Hewitt stumbled into the shute. The huge cog wheels caught the fingers of the right arm and in a twinkling the arm to the elbow was mangled horribly. The tipple boss hurried to the boy's assistance and with difficulty released him. He was taken to the Fernie hospital where the arm was amputated above the elbow.

On Saturday night last considerable excitement was caused at Morrissey Mines by the burglarizing of the Crow's Nest Trading Co's store. The offender gained admittance by breaking through the window. A search the followiug morning revealed the loss of a number of articles from the store. Constable Sampson, who took the matter up without loss of time captured John Devine at the Junction at six o'clock the next evening. He suspected Devine and a lost watch-chain bar gave him the necessary clue. The stolen goods were found on him and in his valises. Constable Sampson brought his man to Fernie for trial.

POUND LAW BEING ENFORCED.

Jas. Wallace was appointed poundkeeper and dog-catcher at Monday's meeting of the council. He has built a pound at the rear of his lot and is now ready for business. His first prize was captured on Wednesday night, and many others are likely to follow unless prompt action is taken by the owners of troublesome animals. In another column may be fouud a copy of the pound and dog-tax by-law. A careful perusal of its different clauses by all citizens is to be desired as it affects most residents in some manner.

The Board af Police Commissioners met this week. The police appointments made by the Mayor were confirmed, Chief Warring at a salary of $100 and Constable Burrows at $75 per month. A. Joyce was appointed jailor at $75 per month.

AT THE OPERA HUOSE

The popular Irish comedian James F. Post heading a clever company of farceurs' will be at the Stork Opera House on October 7th and 8th Mr. Post has many admiring old friends in this part of British Columbia and no doubt they will be pleased at this announcement. This company has just a season at Vancouver and the News-Advertiser has this to say of him:—Jim Post has proven before that he is an attraction. He has always been a drawing card but yesterday his popularity as a comedian received its best testimonial. Long before the doors opened every seat had been taken, while judging from the satisfied audience that left the theatre last night, crowded houses will be the rule of the week. "This is where they all laugh,', people were told on the bill but it should have added "all the time.' Post has a style that's all his own and in 'U and I' he shows to such advantage that one laughs continually."

There will be a change of program each night. Mr. Post the star, and his wife, May Ashley, aro too well known to need any particular mention. They are strongly supported by an all star caste of the most versatile performers in the theatrical profession. All lovers of clean comedy, good singing and dancing and music should not fail to see 'U and I'.

Grand matinee Saturday commencing at 2:15 p.m. Matinee, Adults, 50 cts., Children. 25 cts. Night, $1.00, and 75 cts. Seats on sale Monday.

SHOE STAMINA

IT centres round the insole!

Without good live leather in this, the mainstay of the shoe, there will come early ruin.

The stitching cuts, the upper spreads, the welt rips, and the shoe quickly loses its shape.

When you buy shoes, the last thing you look at is the insole.

Manufacturers know this, and they also know that the first thing you look for is fine upper leather, neat finish, and smart shape.

Result—insole robbery for mere outward effect.

Of what use is fine appearance, if it wont continue under wear.

But you can't hold the Makers responsible for this,—for value, or wear, unless the Maker too fixes the retail price.

He usually gives the kind of value Shoe Retailers usually want —surface value, selling effect. His market is with the Retailer.

But the Slater Shoe market, created through advertising, is with the Wearer.

Therefore, satisfaction to the Wearer is the ambition and prime necessity of the Slater Shoe System.

And such permament satisfaction depends, among other hidden things, upon an insole which costs nearly twice as much as that used in the ordinary shoe.

Goodyear Welted—$4.00 and $5.00.—Stamped on the soles, in a slate frame.

THE COUNCIL MEETING

MORE FIRE FIGHTING APPARATUS NEEDED

Several Communications Before the Council. Temporary Arrangements for a Jail.

The City Council met on Monday evening all the members being present except Aldermen Trites and Liphardt.

A communication from W. W. Tuttle was read asking for permission to move his building on Cox St to the corner of Cox St. and Baker Ave. The petition was granted on condition that it be moved within sixty days and that it be placed on the front portion of the lot.

The Deputy Attorney General wrote on the subject of the extension of police limits. He pointed out that according to sub-section 2 of the "Municipalities incorporation Act" any municipality, subject to the approval of the Lieutenant Govenor-in-council, could extend the limits of the municipality for police purposes only, all that was neccessary was to pass the by-law and submit it to the government, along with a plan showing the proposed extension. The letter was referred to the city solicitor with instructions to prepare the by-law.

The city solicitor wrote accepting the salary offered at the last meeting. The letter was filed.

G. G. Moffatt aud F. Johnson wrote applying for the position of city auditors. Their applications were accepted.

G. R. Lawrence, assistant Fire Chief wrote asking the council to purchase another hose reel, about 500 ft of hose, some more ladders and a few helmets. He also suggested a pole attachment to the chemical engine. A wagon gear now the property of the brigade could with little expense be made to answer for a ladder wagon and he asked permission to incur this expense. He also suggested that the public be cautioned against using the triangle fire alarm except in case of fire. This letter was referred to the Finance committee.

Ald. Cree, chairman of special committee re jail accomodation reported that the committee had interviewed Chief of Provincial Police McMuilin and that he had forwarded and recommended to Victoria an offer from the city as follows:- The city to rent from the government the present jail quarters with use of the Court Room, at a rental of $15.00 per month for twelve months, and the government to pay 40c. a day per head for all provincial prisioners kept in said jail. Owing to the delay liable to occur in Victoria in getting this matter arranged satisfactorily a temporary arrangement had been madewith the government Agent, viz. that the city take over the jail on Monday October 3rd under the above plan, and should the government agree to the city's offer an agreement would be drawn up to date from Oct. 1,1904. Should the government not accept the offer it would agree to pay the sum of $2.50 a day for the jailer during the time he had acted. The report was adopted.

The finance committee passed the following accounts:—

Thomson Stationery Co. city seal	$15
John Carnsley & Co. Hand cuffs & etc.	$75.00
A. Joyce Collecting Census	$15 00
Sundry postages and express	$3.85
Total	$108.85

The sidewalk grade on Victoria Ave. from Burns block to the postoffice corner was discussed at some length. Ald. Beck reported buildings had been erected on different grades. On motion of Ald. Cree and Lundie it was decided to employ an engineer to establish a grade along this block to conform as near as possible with the grade of the buildings now erected.

The Mayor and Alderman Cree were appointed a committee to interview General Manager Lindsey on the subject of a new location for the tenderloin district.

The jailor was authorized to purchase lumber and spikes for the repair of sidewalks.

The meeting adjourned till Monday Oct. 10th.

ODDFELLOWS CELEBRATE.

Grand Master of B. C. Banquetted by the Local Order last Night.

Ex Mayor Neelands, of Vancouver, Grand Master of the Order of Oddfellows for B. C. paid an official visit to the local lodge last night, when it met for the first time in its new hall in the Stork building. A large turnout of members greeted the visiting grand master. After the meeting the members repaired to the dining room of the Imperial Hotel where a sumptuous repast was spread by the genial proprietors Messrs Jean and Murchison. After the wants of the inner man had been supplied a short toast list brought forth some very interesting speeches.

Owen Ross, recording secretary, filled the position of toastmaster iu an acceptable manner. The first toast was "The King" followed by "Our City" which brought a capital speech from Mayor Stork. "The Home Lodge" was responded to by Ald. Beck. D. D. Grand Master, "Our visiting Brothers" was responded to by Brothers White and Johnson. The last toast "The grand lodge of British Columbia" brought the guest of the evening to his feet. Ex Mayor Neelands is and eloquent speaker and for more than an hour he held the closest attention of his audience as he went into the history of the order and the rapid and solid growth it was making.

THE POLICE COURT.

W. H. Whimster, City Police Magistrate, sat on his first case on Monday. It was a case of assault with intent to do bodily injury. The complainant was D. J. McMillan and the accused Charles Thompson a colored man. It came out in the evidence that the two men had quarrlled in the bar-room of the Napanee Hotel on Friday night, last. McMillan had got the best of the row and the accused walked off as if it was all over. A short time after he came back with a razor in his hand. Someone called "look out Mac" and the latter turned in time to dodge a vicious plunge from the accused, with the razor in his hand. The comlpainant swore that the accused made a second slash at his back. He escaped unharmed and T. H. Whelan the proprietor who was attracted by the noise took the razor from the accused. His Worship found the accused guilty of the charge and in sentencing him to pay a fine of $100 and costs or serve six months at hard labor he stated that he would be easy with him in view of the fact that this was his first case in the city. The accused paid the fine.

The Magistrate's second case was that of violating the fire act, the accused being John McKechnie. Complaints had been made by A. Milton that the accused had set fires on the lot next to that owned by the witness. He had warned the accused several times but evidently to no effect and the fire had frequently spread to neighboring lots. The witness had reported the matter to the chief of city police who had also warned the accused. Finally the fire had sprung up fiercely in the heavy wind and had caused considerable damage and a good deal of work to get it under control. His Worship imposed a fine of fifty dollars and costs.

A windfall came to the city treasury yesterday from the police court fines. Four tin-horns paid the aggregate sum of $125 for the carrying on of their profession during the past six weeks.

John Rowell was the first case, He was charged in the usual form with "having no peaceable occupation and with living chiefly by the gains made from gaming." In addition to this Chief Warring proved that the accused used marked cards. The cards were produced, as was also a letter from the manufacturers in Chicago found on the accused. The letter was written at the time the cards were forwarded and explained their combination by means of samples enclosed, The accused pleaded guilty and His worship gave him the option of paying a fine of $50 and costs or 6 months imprisonment. The fine was paid.

Three other tin-horns answered respectively to similar charges. Their names were Harry Nash, Frank Carper and Harry Hudson. Chief Warring asked that, in view of the fact that he had no evidence that these men used marked cards, they might be dealt with more leniently, They each pleaded guilty and the magistrate imposed a fine of $25 each and $1 costs, with a caution that a repetition of the offence might prove more disastrous to them.

ANOTHER JAILOR APPOINTED

A meeting of the Police commissioners was held on Saturday last to appoint a new jailor, A. Joyce refusing to accept the position for the salary offered. The application of C. H. Levers was accepted at the same salary. An aditional condition was stipulated that the jailor should sleep at the jail. Mr. Levers took charge of his work on Monday Oct 3rd.

SPEEDY COURT TRIAL.

HIS HONOR JUDGE LEAMY VISITS FERNIE.

Three Criminal Cases tried. One Dismissed and each of the Others got Nine Months.

His Honor Judge Leamy, who is acting for Judge Forin during the latter's visit East, came to Fernie on Wednesday to hold a speedy courts trial.

James Devine, the Morrissey burglar who broke into the Crows Nest Trading Co's. store last week pleaded guilty to the charge, and offered the drink plea as an extenuating circumstance. His Honor sentenced him to nine mouths at Nelson jail with hard labor. No counsel were employed in the case.

George A. Knox, a boarder at the Roma Hotel was the next. He was accused of stealing a collection of valuable coins from Wm. Gott the bar-tender, and also with attempting to get into the safe. He was proviously up before Police Magistrate Whimster where he waived the preliminary hearing. He pleaded guilty to His honor. The prosecution submitted the facts of the case. The face value of the coins was only $30 but their commercial value was ten times that amount. Some of the coins had been found in his possession. He also had a key which he had broken in trying to open a drawer in the safe. He likewise got nine months at Nelson.

This was a case of quick justice. The offence was committed on Monday night and within 36 hours he was doing time.

The next case was James Doran accused with the theft of a $20 bill. He was defended by L. P. Eckstein. E. Wrigleswortb was the chief witness. He swore that he saw the accused pick a $20 bill from the sidewalk near the Free Press corner. Accused denied this accusation and claimed that the two $20 bills found on him were his own. His Honor gave Doran the benefit of the doubt and dismissed the case.

THE IMPERIAL CO. BUSY.

Mr. Lewis when in the city on Tuesday gave a brief account of the work being done by the Imperial Coal aud Oil Company on Fording River. He himself has been working his pack-train of six horses for the Company during the Summer. The camp is located on Fording River about 30 miles above Michel. Mr. W. R. Wilson has charge of the work with a force of twenty-two men. The preliminary development work is progressing very satisfactorily and the property is now about ready for tunnelling. Seventeen seams had been uncovered and the quality of the coal so far as tested had come up to the highest expectations of the Company. The development work would probably be continued all through the Winter.

MICHEL NEWS.

The new two roomed school house will be completed this month.

The new jail will be completed this week. Some objection has been made to its location, it being situated between the Methodist Church and the site selected for the Catholic Church. Already $400.00 has been subscribed for this new church building.

A Dancing Club has been organized in town. The practise meeting is on Wednesday evening and a dance is given every Saturday evening. The Almond family supply the music.

The lumber mills at The Loop and Sparwood are running full blast.

The Mines are running less than half time. The want of cars is the cause.

Two Pittsburg hunters under the guidance of C. L. Smith and M. Norboe are out hunting game across on Bull River. They expect to be back this week.

Three Fernie sports were down to Michel prairie on Sunday after chickens.

Mr. Cook of Cowley has taken over the personal management of his dairy business at Michel.

Two cases of diphtheria have broken out here, two children of Wm. Sayers being down with the disease. The house has been quarantined by Constable Henderson. This is the first outbreak of the disease in Michel.

Dr. McSorley who recently underwent an operation for appendicitis is visiting friends at Enderby while he recuperates. A medical man from Toronto is looking after his practice.

The pile driver, engine and all accessories arrived in Fernie this week from Kalispell and the Fernie Cartage Co. received the contract to place it in position on the west side of the river for driving piles for the trestle approaching the bridge. The hammer of the driver weighs three and a half tons. Two cars of bridge timber also arrived and has been unloaded and five more cars of similar material is expected to arrive soon. A. G. Brown of Spokane, representative of Porter Bros. arrived on Tuesday to oversee the construction of the bridge.

The grade work is proceeding favorably with the exception of the gumbo cut on the Foss section which again threatens to give more trouble. Forty men are working on this cut in three sections and with ordinary luck they will have it cleared in time for the track laying which is expected to start at Morrissey in a few days. The yard work is also making good progress. No further orders have been issued regarding the branch to the C.P.R. track.

J. D. Quail has received a large consignment of stoves.

The regular monthly meeting of The Ladies Benevolent Society will be held next Friday Oct. 14th, at 3.30 p. m. at the home of Mrs. Robson.

The new school board received word this week from the Superintendent of Education, Victoria, that though the schools were formally taken over by the city on Sept. 12th, the government would pay the expenses up to Oct, 1st.

HOCKEY ORGANIZED.

FIRST MEETING HELD ON MONDAY NIGHT.

Officers Elected. The Meeting was Largely Attended and the Prospects for a Good Season are very Bright.

The organization meeting of the Fernie Hockey Club was held in Purdy's store in the Cuthbert Block. It was largely attended and a great amount of enthusiasm was displayed by those present. Indeed, seldom have we seen so much interest taken in the cause of sport in this city as on this occasion.

G. R. Lawrence occupied the chair and A. M. Grimes acted as secretary. The full list of officers elected is as follows.

Honorary President, G. G. S. Lindsey, General Manager of the C. N. P. Caal Co.
Patrons, Mayor Stork, W. R. Ross, M. P. P., James McEvoy, W. W. Tuttle, Dr. Corsan and J. H. Bricker.
President, R. W. Wood.
1st Vice Pres. Ald. Liphardt.
2nd " " A. Mutz.
3rd " " S. Herchmer.
Manager, C. W. Sheppard.
Secretary-Treasurer, A. M. Grimes.
Managing Committee, Messrs G. R. Lawrence, W. J. Blundell, A. J. Purdy, C. W. Sheppard and A. M. Grimes.
Delegate to Convention, J. E. Sheppard.

The appointment of a captain was left to the players at a later date. The price of the membership was fixed at one dollar. The prospects for the coming season were discussed by those present and the prevailing opinion was most optimistic. The city possessed two new players who held high honors in hockey circles in the east and the prospects were good for still further additions. The meeting took a strong stand against allowing the slightest tinge of professionalism to enter into their club.

A new rink for the city was discussed briefly. The matter was in the hands of private individuals and the prospects were good for the consummation of their plans for a first-class rink for the coming season. Mr. Purdy offered the club the free use of his store for meeting purposes which called for a hearty vote of thanks by the meeting.

GRAND MASTER AT FERNIE

A very large number of members were present. This event had been arranged to take place at the same time that the Grand Masters annual visit to Fernie was fixed. After the meeting the members repaired to the dinning room of the Napanee Hotel where an elaborate banquet had been prepared in honor of the visiting Grand Master. The banquet was a very successful affair.

A PRISONER ESCAPED.

A prisoner named Davidson made a dash for freedom on Wednesday. Jailer Levers took two prisoners to mend a sidewalk opposite the King Edward Hotel that morning. He left the men at the place and stepped into Sheppard and Elliott's to get some spikes. Returning almost directly he found one man gone. Enquiring of the other he learned that the missing man had disappeared behind a pile of lumber in the lumber yard. Mr. Levers hastily making enquieries followed the man into the brush behind the hospital and into the G. N. right of way. Here he lost trace of him, though afterwards he learned at the Fernie Co's mill that a man answering the missing man's description had passed there a short while after. Telegrams were sent to various points advising of the escape.

Davidson was a prisoner brought in from Morrissey about one month ago to serve two months on the charge of vagrancy.

A meeting of the Fernie Liberal Association was held on Wednesday evening when preliminary steps were taken to assist in the coming campaign. President Stork was elected to attend the party caucus at Nelson.

Her Chapter of Proposals

By Hattie Preston Rider

...Copyright, 1903, by T. C. McClure...

Miriam came into the library and sat down opposite Graham. There was a pucker of anxiety on her forehead.

"Bart," she said, "would you mind being engaged to me?"

Graham took his feet off the window sill and sat up.

"Engaged!" he repeated dubiously.

Miriam nodded.

"It's only for a couple of days," she hastened to reassure him. "Mr. Forsythe is coming to propose, and I'm at my wits' end. I haven't a single excuse for refusing him. He's good and wealthy and nice looking. Mother won't hear an objection, even his age. So, you see, the only way is to let him understand ever so delicately that I'm not free to listen to him. Nobody will know, for he isn't the sort to repeat confidences."

"I DON'T SEE HOW ANY ONE COULD HAVE HELPED IT EXCEPT MOTHER."

Graham lay back in his chair and surveyed her coolly.

"If you've no objection to him, why don't you marry him?" he inquired.

"I thought I made it clear that I didn't want to," she explained, with a note of injury in her voice. "I'm sure, if you don't wish to help me out, Bart, you needn't. But we've been such chums I thought you'd as lief as not. I'd do as much for you."

Graham swallowed hard, but she did not notice.

"Why don't you tell him the truth?" he said at last. "He's man enough to stop his attentions if he knows they're unwelcome."

"That's just it," she rejoined hopelessly. "Mother has tacitly given him to understand that I do care for him for all my seeming indifference. In fact, they've done nearly all the courting themselves."

Graham's lips curled.

"Well," he said shortly, "I should think you could disabuse him of the idea easily enough.

Miriam's brown eyes widened.

"You must think it is prime fun, Bart Graham, to boldly tell a good friend right to his face that you don't care for him, especially when he's such a dear old fellow!" she said, with a little quiver in her voice.

Graham stared. What a refreshing phase of womanhood! Then he smiled grimly.

"So, I suppose, it was your idea to let Forsythe down easily by giving him to understand that, although I held your hand, your heart responded to him, eh? You'll pardon me, Miriam, but you remind me forcibly of the Irishman who was too tender hearted to dock his dog's ears at one fell stroke, so he cut them a half inch at a time."

Miriam winced, reddening. The truth sounds so different stripped of picturesque phrases. Graham relit his cigar.

"You want me to go in with you, virtually lying to Forsythe," he went on gravely. "At the risk of appearing ungallant I'm afraid I must decline your flattering offer. I don't know much about such things, but it seems to me if I didn't care to go into partnership with a man I could make him understand my refusal had nothing to do with my personal regard for him. If—if I didn't want to marry you, for instance, Miriam, you wouldn't take it as unfriendliness on my part, would you?"

Her downcast eyes missed the fact that he was watching her narrowly. She got up.

"I don't know if I've the nerve to do it," she said, rather tremulously and letting his question pass unheeded. "You've no idea how hard it is, Bart. I've always liked him, if not in that other way, so very much till—till"—

She hesitated and looked at him appealingly, but there was no sign of relenting in his averted face. She sighed softly. A moment later he heard the swish of her light skirt along the hall. He laid down his cigar.

"In one respect," he groaned, "women are like Providence—their ways are past finding out!"

He did not see Miriam again that day or the next. He watched her mother's face, however, when they met at table, as a seaman does his barometer in squally weather. Though that lady's bland cordiality to himself was marked, the two tiny lines of anxiety between her brows became a beacon of hope to him, for Graham knew Forsythe had arrived, and he could not put out of mind that parting speech of Miriam's. His growing fears, for disinterested ones, were acute indeed.

On the morning of the third day, from the vantage point of his own window, he saw the suitor depart. There was a rosebud in the lapel of his faultless coat. As he got into the autobus Graham caught a glimpse of his face. His own promptly fell. As if that were not sufficient, on going out directly after, he met Miriam's mother in the hall. The pretty widow's cheeks were flushed like a girl's, and, it seemed to him, there was a guilty look in her eyes. She gave him a smile that relaxed not a whit of its sweetness at the savage tone of his "Good morning." This last confirmed his worst forebodings. He decided that between the two they had succeeded in coercing Miriam to their wishes.

It took Graham the whole of his forenoon's tramp to perfect his plan of action. He blamed himself bitterly that he had played the mentor in refusing Miriam's request, foolish and cowardly as it had seemed to him then. But from the very fact of it he felt justified now in taking a bold hand.

He went back to the house and sent a peremptory note to the young lady. He wished to see her once more and at her earliest convenience. He thought their former close friendship gave him the privilege.

He was hardly prepared for the flushed cheeks and defiant eyes that greeted him. Nevertheless he resolved to stick manfully to his role of protector.

"If it came to this, Miriam," he burst forth, "I think you might have trusted me to help you out for all I refused the other day. I would have done anything but what you asked, even to shooting him," savagely.

Miriam's nervous color deepened.

"I—I don't see how any one could have helped it except mother," she stammered.

"I could, and I intend to yet," he retorted grimly. He came a step nearer. "I tell you, child, you shall not be forced into this marriage against your will. I have some right as—as your nearest friend, and I shall remonstrate with your mother. That failing, I shall go to Forsythe himself and tell him the truth, since you dare not. He is an honorable man, and he will release you."

Miriam backed away from him and hid her face in her hands.

"Oh, Bart!" she cried between hysterical sobs and laughter. "What in the world are you talking about?"

"You shall not marry Forsythe against your will," he insisted. Then, to his astonishment, Miriam uncovered her face and burst into a ringing laugh of sheer relief.

"It was mother, not I, to whom he proposed," she said. "It was just her silly blunder, the blessed goose! She never told me they were engaged years ago. And I acted such a guy before you. I fretted myself sick about it. But," meeting his eyes with unwonted and bewildering shyness, "if he had asked me, Bart, I should have told him the truth. I've resolved to be as honest as the day hereafter."

Graham's head swam in the great light breaking on him. Impulsively he strode forward and took both her hands.

"Miriam, be honest with me, then, as I am with you. I've loved you all the while I was pretending friendship, and when I thought another man was winning you I was beside myself with misery. Tell me, little chum, could you love me in that 'other way?'"

The flushed face was instantly buried against his sleeve. Graham as promptly unearthed it and forced its shy eyes to meet his again. What he saw there only he knows, but it proved to him beyond a doubt that Miriam's impersonal friendship was as preposterous a fraud as his own.

A Vegetable Pepsin.

The useful properties of the papaw plant have long been known to the various natives and have been taken advantage of by them, as can be seen by reference to the works of travelers, who can themselves vouch for the accuracy of the accounts they narrate. Thus Drury in "The Useful Plants of India" states that old hogs and poultry which are fed upon the leaves and fruit, however tough the meat they afford might otherwise be, are thus rendered perfectly tender and good if eaten as soon as killed. Browne, too, in his "Natural History of Jamaica" says that meat becomes tender after being washed with water to which the juice of the papaw tree has been added, and if left in such water ten minutes it will fall from the spit while roasting or separate into shreds while boiling.—Chambers' Journal.

A Great Player.

Many good stories are told of Sir Walter Parratt, the master of the king's music. Here is one illustrative of his extraordinary memory: Some eight or ten men were assembled one evening in one of the lodges attached to St. Michael's college, Tenbury. Sir Walter Parratt and Herr von Holst played in turn upon the piano such music as was asked for. This went on for some time, until at last the chessboard was brought out. Sir Walter then proposed to play two men at chess in consultation, still remaining at the piano and playing from memory what was demanded either from Bach, Beethoven, Mozart, Chopin or Mendelssohn. Without even a glance at the chessboard he won the game in an hour.—London Globe.

SALVATION ARMY CHANGES.

A cable received from London says: Important changes in Salvation Army leaders in various countries will shortly take place. The officers included in the reorganization scheme are Commissioners Eva Booth, Mrs. Booth in Switzerland, and Booth-Tucker, who is leaving the United States. The new appointments are as yet unannounced.

A REVOLUTION PREDICTED.

Speaking of the recent automobile accidents, according to the New York Herald, Winthron E. Scarritt, President of the Automobile Club of America, predicted in an interview that if an immediate curb be not placed upon the spirit of lawlessness possessed by many chaffeurs, a long suffering public would take matters into its own hands and scenes similar to those of the French revolution might be witnessed.

POPULAR INSURANCE MAN COMMITS SUICIDE.

George R. Hamilton, western Ontario manager for the Imperial Life Insurance Company, shot himself through the head about 6.30 this evening in his office in the Bank of Toronto chambers, says a London (Ont.) despatch, dated the 26th. About half an hour after the shooting, Alex. Boreland, the caretaker, went into Hamilton's office to clean up as usual, and found the insurance man dead. Various stories are in circulation as to the cause of the accident, but nothing definite can be learned. The deceased, who was about 45 years old, came to London some five years ago from Toronto, where he had been in the employ of the Imperial Life, which company he had previously represented in Winnipeg. Shortly after the finding of the body Mr. Hamilton's wife telephoned to the office to know why he had not come home to tea. A detective replied that he had met with an accident. In a few minutes Mrs. Hamilton and the family, thoroughly alarmed, reached the scene and then learned the distressing truth. Hamilton was a man of a quiet manner, and well liked by those who knew him. Besides his wife, six children survive.

CRYING BABIES.

Babies do not cry unless there is some good reason for it. The cry of a baby is nature's warning signal that there is something wrong. If the fretfulness and crying are not caused by exterior sources, it is conclusive evidence that the crying baby is ill. The only safe and judicious thing to do is to give Baby's Own Tablets without delay. For indigestion, colic, teething troubles, constipation, diarrhoea, worms and simple fevers these marvellous little Tablets have given relief in thousands of cases and saved many precious lives. They are guaranteed to contain no harmful drug. Mrs. John Dobie, St. Andrew's East, Que., says: "Baby's Own Tablets are a splendid medicine for the cure of constipation and other ills that afflict children. I consider it my duty to recommend them to all who have little ones." The Tablets are sold at 25 cents a box by all druggists, or may be had by mail by writing The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

AMERICANS TRY TO EVADE TIMBER TAX.

Timber Inspector Murray of British Columbia, has seized the plant of four American logging camps, near the boundary line on the south side of the Fraser river. All the camps were well equipped with donkey engines, etc., and the plant seized, together with the logs in the water, is worth over $100,000. The Americans were evading payment of the provincial tax of $1 per 1,000 feet. The logs were being hauled to mills at Blaine, Washington.

SOO STEEL OUTPUT.

In the twenty-four hours ending Friday midnight the steel plat at Sault Ste. Marie turned out 600 tons of steel rails. This amount constituted a record, being the largest amount manufactured in any similar period of time since the plant was put in operation a couple of years ago. Tests of the product also have been very successful. Preparations for the commencement of the work at the blast furnace are progressing satisfactorily, and it is expected that the furnaces will be in operation by the end of the month. Specimens of ore for use there arrives daily.

WESTERN CANADIAN EDITORS

A series of articles describing their lives, their aims and their influence.

No. 7.

GEO. PATERSON, B. A., L. L. B.

GEO. PATERSON, B. A., LL. B.
Proprietor and Editor of the Deloraine Times.

The proprietor and editor of the Deloraine Times, George Paterson, B. A., LL. B., is one of the very numerous illustrations the Canadian West can offer of distinct success achieved in professional life by men reared on a farm. Till he was nineteen years of age Mr. Paterson went through every grade of farm work, up to the full dignity of doing a man's work in the field. The task of hewing out a home from the primeval bush of Old Ontario was one that developed a sturdy race, both intellectually and physically. The conditions of life were such as to bring out those qualities of adaptability and resourcefulness, self-reliance and self-discipline, best calculated to make big of frame and broad of mind. The men reared under such conditions were in every sense those best qualified to lay the foundations of the new Canadian Empire of the West, when, some three decades ago, the people of Eastern Canada became seized of the illimitable wealth of opportunity offered in the rich prairie lands west of the Great Lakes. Of these men Mr. Paterson is in many respects a representative type. His predominating characteristics are those more generally associated with the simpler life of the farm than the strenuous life of the city. On the business side he is frankly direct and forthright, and withal shrewd and farseeing. Socially he is of such a genial companionability that his friends include practically all who know him. A live editor, a good lawyer, a capable business man, a public-spirited citizen, with troops of friends, Mr. Paterson is indeed in a position commanding the friendly envy of many of those who know him, and the hearty respect of all.

Though none would so suspect from his figure and activity, from his hearty whole-souled boyishness of manner, Mr. Paterson is 47 years of age. He seemed somewhat surprised at the fact himself, when questioned about it, and when his interviewer looked incredulous, he went over the calculation again, to make sure that he hadn't slipped in another ten years. "I guess that's right," he said, ruefully, after some mental figuring. "I was born in '57, and I don't see that I can be less than 47. But, honestly," he added, brightening, "I don't feel near that old." And certainly he doesn't look it.

It was in the township of North East Hope, in the county of Perth, Ontario, that Mr. Paterson first saw the light of day. On both sides he was of Scotch descent, his father having emigrated to Canada from Roxburghshire, Scotland, in '37, and some time after, meeting and marrying his (George's) mother, who was also of Scotch parentage.

Mr. Paterson's early education differed no whit from that of other youths brought up in those pioneer days under similar conditions. He attended the log school with the other farm boys of his neighborhood, his attendance being, like theirs, somewhat broken and interrupted by the exigencies of sugaring, seeding, haying and harvest. The outstanding incident of this early part of his life is the fact, which Mr. Paterson yet recalls with pride, that at the age of eighteen he took the first prize at the provincial plowing match held at Stratford.

Until the age of nineteen Mr. Paterson stayed on the farm. Then he went to the collegiate for eighteen months, proving a ready and indefatigable student. He obtained certificates as third and second-class teacher, and then for three years taught school near Stratford. In 1882 he went to Collingwood to prepare for the University course, and subsequently entered Toronto University, where, in 1886, he graduated, and in the following year took the LL. B. degree.

In 1885, at the time of the Northwest rebellion, Mr. Paterson, with many another of the Toronto University students, volunteered for service. He joined the Queen's Own Rifles, and was ordered to the front. Here he was "a corporation sol- di-er at 50 cents a day," as the famous university ballad has it, but none of these valiant and adventurous youths had an opportunity to smell powder burned in anger, having thier full share of the hardships of the campaign, but little or none of its glory.

After taking his degree, with but $20 in his pocket, but with the high heart and courage of youth, Mr. Paterson left college and went south. From Toronto he went "by easy stages," as he himself says, to Chicago and down to Kansas City. When pressed as to how he travelled so far on such limited resources, Mr. Paterson said, quizzically, "Well, I said I went 'by easy stages'; I didn't figure on paying railway fare—at least, not unless I had to. I rode in box cars, and on coal trucks, and with all sorts of freight. No, I never tried a trip on the brake beams, but I've had some pretty wild rides. Often I'd be put off, and then I'd 'hoof it' along the track till I could jump the next freight. It's an experience worth living through, though. You meet all sorts and conditions of men when you are stealing a ride on a freight, from young college chaps, like I was, to the broken down gentleman or the professional hobo. There's a sort of Freemasonry among them, too, and the help they give each other would surprise one unacquainted with the customs of the fraternity."

"Of course I could," he answered to a question as to some details of this tour. "Of course I could tell you a whole lot of experiences, but I don't know that they'd be specially entertaining, and then, besides, you'd go and give me away in print. But one day I was completely 'strapped,' and had been put off by a conductor I couldn't do anything with, at a wayside station twenty miles from anywhere. A farmer's wagon was hitched up to the fence across from the track, and an old man and a younger—his son—were in it. I walked over to them and said, 'Do you want a hired man?' 'Yes,' said the younger. 'Then take me,' I said. They asked me what I could do, and I told them, but the old man shook his head unbelievingly. 'Been fired off the train, eh?' asked he, and I had to admit that I had. 'Got any money?' he asked again, and I had to tell him I hadn't. They held a consultation, and at last they told me to jump into the wagon and come along. I worked for them for two months, when I had enough money to carry me afresh on my travels. The old man wanted me to stay very badly. He said I was the best hired man he ever had, and he'd give me good wages if I'd agree to stop a year. He told me, too, that was the greatest disappointment he'd ever had since he'd been on a farm. He had sized me up for a dead beat, and had thought I wouldn't earn my board. He'd noticed that my hands were soft, and it was only because they were stuck that he consented to engage me. However, the work soon cured that, and the old man was delighted when he found I could plow and pitch as well as any man on the farm.

"It was too hot down there to suit me, and so I started for the north. I gave $1 to a brakeman, and he put me as far as Minneapolis. Then I engaged to work in a railway gang at Crookston, and paid $2 for my transportation thither. There were some thirty of us in the party, and when we got to Crookston one of the foremen, and nearly all the men, skipped out. I wasn't very hungry for railroading, so I kept on to the north. When I got to Gretna I was in too big a hurry to wait for the train—nobody knew when a train would run in those days—so I set off walk, and tramped across the prairie to Morden. I hired out to a farmer there, and afterwards worked on a threshing gang. Then for nine months I taught Belmont school, and from that I went to Portage la Prairie, and went into the office of a law firm. In 1889 I went to Winnipeg, going into the firm of which the present Judge Richards was the head, and in 1892 took my final law exam. and went to Deloraine."

Since his removal to Deloraine Mr. Paterson has built up a splendid law practice. Five years ago he bought the Deloraine Times from Mrs. Daubrey, who had managed it since her husband's death. Under Mr. Paterson's charge it quickly developed into one of the best country weeklies in Manitoba. It has been a consistent advocate of Liberal principles, and its comments on current events are regarded as among the most well considered and weighty of all the papers published in the smaller towns of the provinces. As far as local news is concerned, all that happens in the vicinity of Deloraine that the paper does not cover is not of sufficient importance to be chronicled. The esteem in which the Times is held by the local business men is best evidenced by its large advertising patronage.

Since his removal to Deloraine Mr. Paterson has received marks of the esteem in which he is held by the townsmen by election to several offices of public trust and confidence. At the last general provincial election he contested the seat in the interest of the Liberal party, but was defeated. His personal and political friends were not dismayed by his defeat, however, but have since selected him as the standard bearer of Liberalism in the more important contest for the Dominion seat of Souris. Nobody can predict the result of the contest, as his opponent is of undoubted strength, but many of his friends are confident that Mr. Paterson will win. Should this be the case, the West will have, in the person of Mr. Paterson, a representative thoroughly familiar with its needs and requirements, and one who may be relied on to do his utmost to advance its interests.

A LETTER FROM OVER THE SEA

Which Will Prove of Interest to Canadians.

Tells of Good News Received from Calgary, Alta., which Brought Joy Into His Life.

Here is a sincere and unsolicited letter from an Englishman who was almost led to take his own life on account of what he suffered from itching piles. He had doctor's advice and remedies to no end, and after sixteen years' of suffering was without hope of recovery. He tells in his letter how he accidentally heard of Dr. Chase's Ointment.

114 Milton Road,
Margate, England.

Edmanson, Bates & Co.,
Toronto, Can.,

Dear Sirs,—I feel it my duty to write to acknowledge the great good Dr. Chase's Ointment has done for me. I had suffered from itching piles for over sixteen years, and suffered badly at that. There have been times when I could and would have put an end to it all if it had not been for the thought of meeting God. Some people may think I am stretching it a point, but those who have suffered as I have will know.

At other times I have felt I could take a knife and cut away the parts until I came to the bottom of the evil, but thank God it is all past. It was quite by accident that I came to know of Dr. Chase's Ointment. I have had doctors' advice and remedies to no end and could not say how much I spent in that sixteen years. I had a Calgary paper sent to me and there I saw your Ointment advertised. It just met my case, as it said for itching piles and saved painful operations.

As I could not get Dr. Chase's Ointment from my chemist, I wrote to my brother, Mr. H. Shelley, of Calgary, Alta., and he sent me one box. Before I had used one-third of the box I was perfectly cured by this ointment.

I am sure you will be surprised to get this letter from this corner of the world, but I felt it my duty to acknowledge the great good Dr. Chase's Ointment has done for me. You are at liberty to make use of this letter as you see fit. All I should like to say to anyone who suffers from this dreadful complaint is I know it cures. With many thanks, I remain,

Yours respectfully,
T. Shelley.

If you enclose a stamp for reply, Mr. Shelley would no doubt gladly answer any question about his case. But there are similar cases among your own friends and neighbors with whom you can have a personal interview. If you are not acquainted with the merits of Dr. Chase's Ointment you will be surprised at the cures which are being brought about in your own neighborhood. No preparation has ever been more heartily endorsed by people who have used it and none has ever been so successful in curing piles.

Dr. Chase's Ointment, 60 cents a box, at all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Toronto. The portrait and signature of Dr. A. W. Chase, the famous receipt book author, are on every box.

A London cable says: The Mullah is still in the far eastern end of the Nogal, says Ruter's correspondent at Burao. His people have lost all faith in him, and are daily deserting. He now has very few followers. The great majority have either gone away and rejoined their own tribes or have come in and settled in Burao, Berbera, Sheikh, and other posts. They are quite peaceably disposed. The Mullah is very short of food, and is sick of fighting. At present his only desire is to bring off one raid to replenish his larder, and then go to the south and live in peace with his tribe.

TIRED AND DEPRESSED

The Condition of Many Young Women in Shops and Offices.

Thousands of young women have to depend upon their own efforts to gain a livelihood, and to these, whether behind the counter, in the office, the factory or the home, work means close confinement—often in badly ventilated rooms. There is a strain on the nerves; the blood becomes impoverished; the cheeks pale; there are frequent headaches; palpitation of the heart and a constant tiredness. If the first symptoms are neglected it may lead to a complete breakdown — perhaps consumption. What is needed to restore vim and energy and vitality, is a tonic, and absolutely the best tonic in the world is Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. They actually make new blood, and bring health and cheerful energy to tired and depressed girls and women. Miss Viola Millett, Robinson's Corners, N. S., says: "I was a great sufferer from headaches, heart palpitation and troubles that afflict my sex. My blood seemed almost to have turned to water, and the least exertion left me weak and depressed. I used seven boxes of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills and they have made a remarkable change in my condition. I can truly say that I feel like a new person, and strongly recommend these pills to all weak, ailing girls."

These pills cure all forms of blood and nerve troubles, but you must get the genuine with the full name, Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People, on the wrapper around each box. Ask your druggist for them, or you can get them by mail at 50 cents a box, or six boxes for $2.50, by writing The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

MORE FACTORIES FOR CANADA.

The president of the Pressed Steel Car Company, who visited the West along with the directors of the Grand Trunk Pacific, has returned east apparently well satisfied with the character of the country through which the new road will run. It is learned that his company has arranged with the Grand Trunk Pacific and the parent line itself whereby a construction company will be formed in Canada, and the patents owned by the Pressed Steel Car Co. will be used in the Canadian company. Recently it was announced that the American Locomotive interests recently acquired a plant in Montreal, in which locomotives will be constructed for the Canadian railways. Both these factories will constitute a very large addition to the industries of Canada.

Quality is good and the price is ranging around one dollar per bushel.

A despatch from Dawson, Yukon, says: Fire broke out at midnight of the 24th in the Cecil Hotel, formerly the Hotel McDonald. The flames raced up through the shaft so swiftly that some of the guests had to leap from the windows. Mr. N. A. Fuller, manager of the telephone company, broke his leg by leaping, and Mrs. Card was seriously injured. The fire spread swiftly and caused intense heat. The water was slow in coming on and the pressure poor, and the result was that the whole block immediately adjoining the three-storey building of the Hotel Cecil was destroyed, also the opposite side of Queen street between Second and Third avenues. The losses will aggregate $200,000. The principal sufferers are: Alex. McDonald, Putnam, Mersereau and Clark, the Flannery hotel, owned by Mr. Vernon; Butler's grocery, the Donovan saloon, Pacific Cold Storage Company, the branch market building, the Klondike Thawing Machine Company's premises, the Stockholm hotel, the McDonald Trading Company, Shoff, druggist; the Central hotel, C. Great loss resulted from the removal of goods along the avenue.

OTTAWA TEACHER SUICIDES.

An Ottawa despatch says:—The body of Miss A. M. Harmon, principal of the Harmon Ladies' school, on Elgin street, was discovered on the morning of the 20th floating in the Ottawa river below the Interprovincial bridge. She was seen the night before by the watchman of the bridge acting in a strange manner, and Mr. Harry Lecompte, of Hull, saw a woman jump from the bridge into the river. He reported it to the Hull police. Miss Harmon had been suffering from nervous prostration for some time past. The Harmon school is known all over Canada. In a purse in the pocket of the skirt on the body was found a piece of brown paper on which was writ-written "Dr. MacCarthy has killed me with his theory of keeping boarders. Send my body to Mr. Rogers' morgue, Rideau street, and from there to Montreal to Kate." On the inside of half an envelope was her name and address. Dr. MacCarthy says that Miss Harmon was suffering from nervous prostration and mental depression. He advised her to give up teaching and go looking after boarders. She promised to do so, but would always go back to work. She had no financial troubles, but had a dread of becoming bankrupt. Deceased was 63 years of age.

Forbes, R. C. A., of Montreal, to paint a portrait of his majesty the King, to be placed in the chamber of the House of Commons, says: "I have laid your despatch before the King, and I have it in command to desire you to inform your ministers that his majesty will with great pleasure give Mr. Forbes a sitting for the portrait. "As his majesty's time in London is fully occupied, it would be well for Mr. Forbes to communicate with Lord Knollys, G. C. V. O., private secretary to his majesty, with a view to ascertaining what time would be most convenient for the sitting.

THOMPSON-SETON TO WRITE AN INDIAN DRAMA.

In an interview in Montreal, Mr. Thompson-Seton, the naturalist and author, announced that he intended to write an Indian drama. During the past summer Mr. Thompson-Oeton spent considerable time in the wilds of New Ontario, studying animal life. While there he saw "Hiawatha" presented by Ojibway Indians, and was so impressed with the simplicity and beauty of the play that he and the famous novelist, Mr. Hamlin Garland, have decided to write another play along the same lines as Longfellow's masterpiece. Their proposed drama will have Indian scenes for its settings and an Indian love story or legend for its theme. When completed it will be presented, it is intended, by the players who give Hiawatha. These two performances will form entertainment for those who go to New Ontario for canoe trips, hunting, fishing and camping life.

TWO PORT ARTHUR FISHERMEN DROWN.

In Moffatt Straits about noon on the 21st, a sail boat with three fishermen, Harry Shelly, Thomas Williams and Robert Smith, was suddenly capsized by the wind. Smith was lost sight of on the spot; the boat turned on end and Williams and Shelly hung on to the main mast. About two hours later, Williams gave up and was also drowned, Shelly securing his body to the mast. About 4 p. m. James Gerow, who was on his way to Rossport with a tug, picked up Shelly, who was still hanging on to the boat and Williams' body. Williams is single, and has lived in the vicinity of Port Arthur for a number of years. Smith leaves a wife and three children in Port Arthur.

VALUABLE CARGO GOES TO ENGLAND.

One of the most valuable consignments of freight which was ever hauled over the C. N. R., was taken from Winnipeg a few days ago. It consisted of a carload of muskrat pelts, which were being shipped to London, Eng., to the head office of the Hudson's Bay Company. The pelts are all choice furs, and were purchased in the North by the Winnipeg branch of the historic company. The consignment is valued at $250,000. They are packed in 167 bundles, and the car in which they were taken over the C. N. R. was securely locked. The valuable cargo was loaded into the steamer Wahcondah at Port Arthur, and will be taken into an ocean steamer and taken to its destination.

ALASKA FREIGHT SEASON IS CLOSED.

The Alaska season for 1904 is closed so far as shipments to the north are concerned. The Pacific Coast Steamship Company has received advices from the White Pass and Yukon railroad not to accept any more freight for interior points in Alaska beyond White Horse, as the company will not be able to handle them. All the north coast lines are preparing for the rush of out-comers from all points in Alaska to Seattle. They are beginning to arrive in Seattle now, and boats are preparing to leave for the last trip of the season to Nome, St. Michael, Dutch Harbor, Cook's Inlet and other calling points along the southeastern coast. There are a few shipments of treasure yet to come. On the whole it has been a good season for gold diggers. The gold production of the entire northern district for the present year is estimated as follows: Klondike, $11,000,000; Nome, $10,000,000; Tanahan, $2,000,000; all other districts, $3,000,000.

HAROLD H. GONE LAME.

Harold H., "Rod" Mackenzie's great pacing gelding, has been retired for the season. He was shipped to Winnipeg a few days ago from Columbus, Ohio, where he made his last start in the 2.04 pace, being drawn after finishing last in the first heat. John Moyse, who manages Harold H. for Mr. Mackenzie, arrived in Winnipeg from Columbus, in company with James O'Leary of the Iroquois Hotel and L. Dingman. Mr. Moyse has been with Harold H. since the meet at the Hamline track at Minneapolis, when Bob Carnathan was relieved of the charge of the horse, and he brought back the information that the great pacer has developed a lameness in a hind leg that threatens to prove serious unless the horse is given a thorough rest. Harold H. has started in ten races this year and has won seven of them. The other occasions he was third, second and sixth. That is a brilliant record, and it seems unfortunate that the accident necessitates his retirement this early. Besides, Harold H. has lowered his own mark a quarter of a second, having clipped it 2.03¾ at Galesburg, Ill., over a slow track.

Winnipeg, Thursday, Sept. 29, 1904.

WHEAT: During the past week the wheat markets have shown the same nervous and erratic disposition that has characterized them for some time. On Friday and Saturday last they were quite strong and advanced sharply under ephemeral rumors of France taking off the duty on importing wheat into that country, and the expectation of bullish weekly statistics to be issued on Monday. By Monday it was understood that the French rumor was mere conjecture and an immense increase in the primary receipts in the States over same day last year, took confidence from the bulls and gave the bears courage, so that the result of Monday's trading was a sharp decline in prices running around 3c to 4c. per bushel, and in one instance (Duluth September wheat) the drop was 5¾c. per bushel. Since Monday the feeling has been somewhat stronger again, but still the action of the markets exhibits the same nervous and erratic feeling. The difference in prices on the week is quite irregular in the American markets, the September delivery is 2c. to 2½c. higher in Chicago and New York, but 2½c. to 3½c. lower in Minneapolis and Duluth, while the May delivery is practically unchanged in all markets. During the last two weeks the primary receipts in the States show a large increase over last year, intimating that many farmers are willing to accept present prices for their wheat, and that buyers are willing to take the wheat at present prices. Notwithstanding this larger interior movement, exports continue on a small scale, and visible supply does not increase as compared with last year. The weather over the American and Canadian Northwest during the week has been generally favorable to the progress of threshing and movement, although partly unsettled and showery; but the time has now arrived when such work must be done whenever the weather will allow outdoor work to be done at all. Consequently a considerable movement in spring wheat may be looked for. During the week the most important news as affecting the general situation has been the issue of an official report on the French crop putting this year's yield at 297,000,000 bushels, against 365,000,000 bushels last year, and along with this came a statement from Broomhall saying France would require to import 32,000,000 bushels. Then there has been dry weather in Australia, and Broomhall has put out an estimate that the Australian crop this year will not be over 54,000,000 bushels against 80,000,000 bushels last year. These are very bullish items, and if borne out by ultimate results will have great bearing on the price of wheat after New Year. In other respects there is little change in the week's news. Plowing for and seeding of winter wheat is progressing favorably in both Europe and America, and under the influence of high prices the acreage will tend to increase considerably. Latest reports from the Argentine show favorable progress of the crop. The visible supply increased 1,193,000 bushels last week against an increase of 895,000 bus. the previous week, and an increase of 1,312,000 bushels last year. The world's shipments were 8,810,000 bushels against 11,392,000 bushels the previous week and 12,138,000 bushels last year. The world's visible supply, according to Bradstreet's, increased 3,058,000 bus., against an increase of 1,301,000 bushels the previous week and an increase of 7,669,000 bushels last year.

Manitoba wheat has been moderately active during the week, but trade is restricted owing to the delay in the movement, and the great variety and uncertainty of the grading of cars shipped from country points. The unsettled and backward weather of the last four weeks is resulting in wheat being thrashed before it is in condition, so that a large proportion of the cars are inspecting tough, and where a little smut is in the wheat it results in "Rejected" when thrashed in damp weather. However, the weather on the whole has been better during the week than previously and the movement is increasing, and it has the effect of depressing the market so that on the week prices are 1c. to 1½c. lower. At the close of business to-day prices are: 1Nor., $1.00½; 2 Nor., 97½c.; 3 Nor., 93½c.; No. 4 wheat, 83c.; feed wheat, 60½c.; No. 2 feed, 51c., spot or delivery within ten days. On the option market October closed $1.00½; December, 97c., and May, $1.02½. Prices are all for in store Fort William and Port Arthur.

WAR NEWS.

WAR SUMMARY.

A dearth of news from the armies in the far east continues. Reports from Russian sources tell of terrible ravages of disease in the Japanese armies. The Liao river is said to have been dammed abreast of Liao Yang, in case of that flooded country may protect the left flank of the Japanese army threatening Mukden. In St. Petersburg it seems to be the impression that General Kuropatkin will not make a stubborn fight for the possession of Mukden. Vladivostock has heard that the Port Arthur garrison is confident of being able to hold out three months longer.

ENGINE CRASHED INTO C. N. R. CABOOSE.

Four men were injured in a collision at Oak Point on Lake Manitoba Wednesday morning, where the C. N. R. are working on the extension at that point. A couple of work cars, a boarding and sleeping car were standing on the track when a work train coming down the line backed into them at a good rate of speed, doing considerable damage to the train and injuring William Breen, Thomas Marks, Ernest Breen and Joseph Richardson. The injuries are internal and may prove serious. The accident occurred at six o'clock in the morning, when the men were sleeping.

DOMINION EXHIBITION PAID.

The Dominion Exhibition held at Winnipeg this year proved what few enterprises of its kind have—an unqualified financial success. The association has a cash balance after all expenses to date have been covered of $6,482.38. There is still owing to the association, $2,678, making a total of $9,160. In addition, the directors have repaid the Imperial bank an overdraft from last year of $12,413, have paid other accounts from last year amounting to $2,600, have refunded $12,000 to the city for the colonnade, and have further expended $10,000 on improvements to the grounds and buildings. The receipts amounted to $168,302.20, and the disbursements to date have been $146,805.69.

OLD WORLD NEWS

INTERESTING BUDGET FROM BRITAIN

BIRTH OF ROYAL HEIR PUTS AN END TO FEUD.

With the birth of the Prince of Piedmont, the welcome heir to the throne of Italy, whose arrival has been signalized by congratulation from the Pope, most of the sovereigns of Europe, as well as President Roosevelt, ends a feud which, though silent, has been the bitterest experience of Queen Helena's married life. Her disappointment as a mother meant the success of her dreaded rival, that other Helen, the Duchess D'Aosta, whose lusty son was destined for the crown in the event of no son being born to the royal pair. The Montenegrin princess, who once was intended for the bride of the Czar of all the Russias, literally had captured a king by the beauty which served her in place of dower. The daughter of the poorest prince in Europe, she was regarded as a dangerous detriment in the matrimonial market, and her marriage to the Prince of Naples took place when she was 27 years old. When in two years she was still childless, the Duchess D'Aosta, whose union had been notably uncongenial, presented her husband with a son. It was only in 1901 that the Queen of Italy became a mother, and then to a daughter. The second daughter, idolized, as her sister was, by the Italian people, was an added grief. But Queen Helena has been the devoted mother of the two little girls, who meant so much of heartbreak, and the joy in her own children has made her a lover of all children, one of the strongest bonds between her and the Italian people.

"MISSING LINK" FOUND IN JAVA.

The Brussels Soir says a new animal, much resembling a monkey, but much nearer in habits and culture to man has been discovered in Java. A merchant named Van Beuren, happening to be lost in a forest, was obliged to spend the night under a tree on which he discovered a giant nest with a circular opening measuring 18 inches in diameter. This nest was occupied by a family of animals much resembling the ordinary monkeys, except that their heads were covered with long brown hair. On his return to civilization M. Van Beuren told an American scientist, Dr. Werdehouse, of his discovery, and they returned together to the spot, where they spent several months studying the habits of the animals. Contrary to the custom of monkeys, these animals, which the natives call Asch Perrizie, are very fond of bathing, and the females usually adorn their necks with collars made of kernels. They take good care of their little ones, but seem to be little prolific and near extinction. They eat fruits, birds' eggs and fishes and like to be near a fire, although unable to light one. Dr. Werdehouse, who classified these animals as hithecanthropes, has been unable to capture any of them, and had not the heart to kill one, even in the interest of science. A scientific expedition has been formed to explore the island and capture one of the animals if survive. A later despatch says that it is now believed that Mr. Hamilton came to his death through an accident. Before leaving for his home that day he told a friend he was going to extract some cartridge from a revolver he had at home.

MORMON PROPAGANDA BARRED IN HUNGARY.

A cable from Vienna says that Count Tisza, the Hungarian Minister of the Interior, has rendered a decision prohibiting the Mormon propaganada in Hungary, upon the ground that such a movement is undesirable, both from the standpoints of state policy and religion. The immediate occasion of the decision was the expulsion of two Mormon missionaries, who came from Salt Lake City to Memesvar, 18 months ago, attempted to organize a Mormon community among Hungarians who had formerly resided in Utah. The two missionaries were promptly expelled, whereupon their Hungarian friends appealed to the Minister of the Interior, the result being the present decision.

VESUVIUS IS ACTIVE AGAIN.

A cable from Naples says that Vesuvius is gradually becoming more active. The crust around the crater has broken away and produces magnificent flurries of red hot ashes and sparks of fire, which rise occasionally in immense columns to a height of 700 feet, accompanied by loud detonations and slight earthquakes, the sound resembling a bombarment by artillery. The eruption was the most spectacular witnessed in the last ten years. A great stream of lava was discharged, threatening wide destruction. The spectacle was witnessed by thousands of awe-stricken people.

WANTS A PIECE OF LIBERIA.

Sir Harry Johnston, the well-known traveller and former consul-general for the Uganda protectorate, who recently returned to London from a visit to Liberia, is quoted in an interview as saying there is no doubt that France is endeavoring to secure as a result of the boundary dispute a portion of the territory of the Liberian republic.

OFFENDERS WILL APOLOGIZE.

The conflict between Chinese and Italian soldiers at Pekin on Sept. 15, during which one of the Italians fired two shots into the residence of General Chiang, the Chinese commander-in-chief, give rise to nothing serious. The incident will be terminated by an apology, which, however, has not yet been tendered.

The Fernie Free Press

ESTABLISHED 1898.

THE FERNIE FREE PRESS, FERNIE, BRITISH COLUMBIA

FRIDAY, OCT. 7, 1904

This is the first time in our recollection that Fernie has not been represented at the Nelson Assize Court.

A good deal of interest is centred on the question of where the Kootenay Central will connect with the Crows Nest Line. A. B, Fenwick a man well acquainted with the situation told the Cranbrook Herald last week that the new line would leave the Crows Nest near Elko, crossing Bull River near the old pack bridge, and the Wild Horse near the present wagon road. Following the hills around just back of Fort Steele it would continue on to the Windemere country. The alternative route lies on the west side of the Kootenay River joining the Crows Nest at Fort Steele Junction. The former route would evidently be the superior one from a tonnage point of view, while the latter would be the shorter by a distance of about 30 miles. The large deposits of iron ore on Bull River await only the advent of a railroad to make them very valuable, the water falls on that River may be turned to good account in developing the country, and the Fernie fuel for smelting purposes is near at hand.

By the present indications there will be considerable activity in railroad construction in South East Kootenay in the near future. The Kootenay Central will be built next summer. The Corbin road from Spokane to some point on the Crows Nest branch has long been talked of. The Great Northern will without doubt extend their line eastward from Fernie to connect with their line at Lethbridge. In opposition to these encroachments on the part of the American line the C. P. R. or its accredited agents, it is now said, will build through the coal areas of the Crows Nest and through the Flathead. Again, the immense coal areas in the upper Elk valley await the action of these rival railroads to give their products access to the outside markets. The C. P. R. has personal interests in that section which make it imperative that its own line be built into the heart of that country. Rival coal companies will soon be operating there, which will readily afford ample inducement for rival transportation Companies to seek business and it is not improbable that the G. N. R. may find it advantageous to build up the parallel valley.

An aged couple, Mr. Whales and Mrs. Hennessey, were united by marriage on Wednesday evening of this week. The ceremony was preformed at Mrs. Hennessey's home Victoria Ave., by Rev. John Robson B. A. in the presence of a few intimate friends, among whom was Mrs. D. Clark niece of the groom. Mr. Whales is seventy five years of age while his bride is less than a score of years his junior.

Dr. Harry Keith of Coal Creek was united in marriage last Wednesday to Miss May B. Carter of Cranbrook. The ceremony took place at the residence of Mr. M. B. King, brother-in-law of the bride, Rev. H. Beacham officiating. The wedding was a quiet one, only the relatives being present. Mr. and Mrs. Keith left for the Coast to spend their honeymoon, after which they will make their home at Coal Creek, where the worthy Doctor has a large practice.

Mr. John Lewis came in from the upper Elk Valley on Tuesday morning and left this week for New York to represent South East Kootenay at a sporting Club's exhibit. The C.P. R. is putting up the expenses of sending Mr. Lewis to New York. He will take with him some excellent exhibits of game of various kinds shot under his guidance in the upper Elk valley. He will also have exhibits of minerals. This exhibit will do much to bring the resources of the district to the attention of outside people and will doubtless result in increased tourist trade.

Mr. W. A. Letcher of the Coal Company Office left for Nanaimo on Sunday. His companions at the "Quarters" where Mr. Letcher boarded presented him with a beautiful gold locket and chain as a token of the esteem in which he was held. Mr. Letcher had expected to bring his family to Fernie in a short time. He has had to change his plans some but they will join him at Nanaimo as soon as practicable.

MASTER and SLAVE

By... T. H. THORPE

Copyright, 1901, by T. H. Thorpe.

"The senseless infatuation for a girl who despises you makes you say that. But time will show. You will come to me yet. You are of my kind. You will come to me yet." Her eyes blazed with passion as she confronted him again, and her words seemed to burn their way into his soul. She ran into the forest and, throwing herself at the foot of a familiar old oak tree, gave vent to her overwrought feelings in a fit of violent weeping. Then, bathing her cheeks and eyes in the cool waters of the marais, she stood long upon its edge, thinking intently. Setting her teeth firmly and clinching her little fists, she mentally vowed, "I will it—he shall be mine!" and returned to the cottage with the bright look and airy step of one whose spirit had never known tribulation.

But Evariste's agitation was not so quickly allayed. He now saw in Laure an active, interested hinderer of his designs. He could not estimate the potentiality of her influence with Quillebert, who could make disclosures fatal to him in the regard of the pure hearted Estelle. He recognized that he had made no progress in her good graces. Difficulties accumulated, but they only hardened his determination and drove him to devise a course of action of swift and heroic severity in ending all uncertainty. The event on which this policy depended, though abhorrent, was one for which he devoutly wished. Laure's speech had stung him, and he swore Estelle Latiolais should be his bride.

CHAPTER XIV.

THE BLIGHT OF WAR.

WITH the line of Federal occupation extending along the east bank of the Mississippi from New Orleans to Vicksburg and the Confederate army of the transmississippi department hovering about the western and northern borders of Louisiana, the people of Avoyelles were in a state of insulation which made life harder day by day and at times appeared to menace even the very possibilities of existence. Commercial navigation of the rivers, on which they depended for much of their supplies, was stopped. A number of the largest planters had taken refuge with their slaves and animals in Texas and the Indian Territory. The scarcity of all staples of food and clothing increasing from month to month, labor was but poorly sustained and diminished crops were cultivated under formidable and multiplying difficulties. Medicines were a desideratum sorely needed. Privations and suffering were present actualities.

Selfishness grew apace, community interests waned, social phases disappeared, and indifference to neighborhood concerns prevailed. And thus it was that, though a numerous cortege attended the obsequies of Mother Deshautelles, the doctress, who was found dead in her thronelike chair, with Egyptian cotton in her hands and an unfinished fillet in her lap, yet when Laure accepted the protection of Quillebert and became his housekeeper, an event which in normal times would have set the entire parish by the ears, the spirit of gossip and censure materialized now in mere shruggings of shoulders and shakings of heads. On returning to the cottage after the funeral Quillebert had said to her:

"You cannot live here alone. Your father and I were friends. I am older han he would be if alive. Do not mind what these dolts about here may say. Look to your own interests. Come to my house. When this war is ended and I have finished the harvest it yields to me, I may go back to France to end my days. Perhaps we may then marry."

And Laure had replied:

"No; we will not marry then or ever, but I will go and keep your house. I have no kin here. It is nothing to me what the neighbors say. I can truly speak worse of them than they of me, and they know it. I am not beholden to any one and will make my way according to my own notions, not those of others."

In the autumn of 1862 news percolated into Marksville and thence spread rapidly that a terrible battle had been fought near Perryville, in Kentucky, between divisions of the armies commanded by General Buell on the Union side and General Bragg on the Confederate and that Judge Tailleur and Horace Oakfell had been slain and left on the bloody field by their retreating comrades. For many months the report could not be verified or tested, communication with the army of the southwest being cut off by the Federal lines east of the Mississippi, but general credence was given to it. An added gloom settled upon the people.

Father Grhe strove in vain to prevent these tidings from reaching Estelle. She staggered as if under a bludgeon's blow, but tears came not to her relief. Odette knelt beside her and repeated like a devotee telling beads: "There is no proof Mr. Horace is dead. Then, mistress, do not believe it." And by dint of her strange persistency she lodged a doubt in Estelle's mind, which brought her the consolation of a frail hope.

Quillebert gave the intelligence to Laure with a chuckle and observed:

"The obliging Yankee took the job off my hands so far as Oakfell was concerned."

"I suppose," Laure commented, "Evariste will now think he can persuade Estelle Latiolais to marry him and will speed his steps accordingly."

"I hope so," said Quillebert, still pleased. "It would be a fit punishment for her, and my vengeance would be satisfied."

"He shall not marry her," Laure exclaimed hotly.

"And you shall not marry him," retorted Quillebert in sudden rage.

"Let him say that, not you. My grandmother never used 'shall' or 'shall not' to me. Then do not waste your energy in laying commands upon me. You cannot steal my liberty as you did the negro jockey's."

Laure's defiance was pronounced with such fire, contempt and insinuated threat that Quillebert quailed beneath her flashing eyes, and, swallowing the coarse retort that rose to his lips, he whistled a prolonged note of mock surprise and walked to the room where his treasure of brandy was stored. But he stiffly resolved that Evariste should wed Estelle and in that connection took from his strong box a bundle of papers bearing the signature of Leonidas Latiolais. Selecting two, he read them carefully and tied them in a separate parcel, which he laid away by itself.

To the curious Evariste's grief was evidenced by his self seclusion. For the space of a week he was not seen at the Latiolais home, Quillebert's place or Dede's cabaret. He immured himself behind locked doors at "L'Esperance," and Mrs. Wyley saw him only at meals. She, good soul, was overwhelmed by sorrow. She could not trust herself to mention the dreadful rumor to Evariste, even to question its verity. But he, when alone, passed his time otherwise than in mourning. It was a busy week with him. He counted and recounted the money he had hoarded since his brother's departure, calculated over and over his gains from the contraband ventures exploited with Quillebert, scanned repeatedly the written obligations of old man Latiolais which he had purchased from the Frenchman; but, though the effort involved the full measure of his strength, he refrained from opening the sealed envelope which Horace had delivered into his hand before marching to the dangers of battle. He contented himself for the present with the belief that it contained a disposition in his favor of all the Oakfell estate. The thoughts, schemes and resolves which occupied him during those seven days were such as consume or sear the soul, and he came forth with hardened countenance, compressed lips, cruel eyes and contracted brows.

His first call was on Estelle, whose pale face and stricken look stirred his secret resentment. She greeted him sadly and, almost weeping, said:

"Tell me, my friend, that you do not believe this awful news about your brother; that you have good reason to disbelieve it."

"Alas, mademoiselle," he replied, affecting a distress he did not feel. "I have no more reason for belief than the existence of the rumor and none for disbelief other than the absence of official or authoritative corroboration. I can only hope that Horace still lives."

"God grant he lives! God grant he lives!" she murmured, sinking into a chair.

"Amen to that," said Evariste solemnly. "But should the all wise God have decreed differently, I pray you, mademoiselle, to feel assured that you have in me a friend and protector as devoted and as brave as he, though not as gifted."

"Yes, yes." She seemed to be speaking to herself without looking at her visitor. "He said so and bade me trust his brother. But God grant he lives! God grant he lives!"

"Estelle, am I never to be regarded by you save as the suggestion of another man? Can you not see"— Her surprised and pained glance apprised him that he was betraying anger, and he checked the utterance of harsh words that sprang from his heart, for he knew his time was not yet ripe while a chance remained that Horace still survived.

"Pardon me, mademoiselle," he added humbly. "My distress has made me a sick man, irritable beyond my power of self control. I will not come to you again until I am better."

"I hope that will be soon," she said, giving him her hand.

He next sought Dede's. Passing Quillebert's house, he was halted by Laure.

"Your brother—is it true that he is dead?" she asked.

"I do not know," he answered.

"What do you believe?"

"Nothing."

"What does she believe?" pointing toward Estelle's home.

"She mourns for him."

"That is more than you will do."

"Why?"

"For a reason I will not state."

"Do you know the reason?" he asked testily.

"I do not. I sense it. I inherit that from my grandmother."

"Bah, Laure! That is nonsense, which you did not inherit from the doctress."

"Have it your own way. But there is a second reason why you will not mourn."

"What is that?"

"Because you will not be sorry."

"Do you not think you are overstepping the bounds?"

"I have no bounds. I talk so because I know you. I have studied you, but I need not have done so, for I understand you without."

"Well?"

"You are in danger."

"From whom?"

"Yourself."

"Then I am doomed, for I cannot escape from myself." And Evariste laughed at his poser.

"But you can escape," Laure said, undisturbed.

"How?"

"Avoid Quillebert from this time on."

"That would be inconvenient, though it would not break my heart."

"And leave off your hopeless pursuit of that girl," again stretching her arm down the bayou, "for you shall never marry her."

"Is that a threat?" he demanded.

"It is a prophecy," she said, with a confident air.

"I was not aware Cassandra survived Troy."

"I do not know what you mean, but you know what I mean."

"Well, I thank you," he said, gathering the reins of his bridle and raising his hat.

"Unless you heed you shall have no cause to thank me." She kept her eyes fixed upon him until he disappeared behind the crest of the bayou bank, and then with all the intensity of her nature she exclaimed: "He shall come my way! I will it!"

Evariste continued to the cabaret and there found his two customary companions at their usual devotion to rum and cards. Quillebert was restive and hastened the intoxication and departure of old Latiolais, after which he drew his chair near to Evariste and said:

"What are your plans now that your brother is dead?"

"They are not definitely formed. I must have verification of this report."

"But you believe it?" asked Quillebert.

"I incline to."

"If it prove true, what is your purpose toward Latiolais' granddaughter?"

"I will marry her."

"Will she consent?"

"Yes, when I convince her she must in order to save her home and the old man's honor."

"How will you do that?"

"By means of the papers I bought from you and the two you still hold, which I will buy also."

"You mean the power of attorney and the order to cancel her mortgage upon his plantation?"

"Yes."

"How did you learn I had them?"

"It is not necessary to explain."

"If I put them at your service without price, you will not relent?"

"Never!" said Evariste, setting his teeth together determinedly.

"The papers are subject to your demand. Give me your hand," Quillebert said exultingly, adding as he chuckled, "Aha, my little Laure of the 'shall' and the 'shall not!'"

"What do you mean by that?" sharply asked Evariste, eying Quillebert suspiciously.

"Oh, as you said just now, it is not necessary to explain," replied the latter, continuing his low, malevolent laugh. "We will await the confirmation of the news."

And await they did, though impatiently enough, until two winters and springs had rolled by and fallen into the immeasurable and insatiate maw of the past. Though the battle of Perryville became a known historical fact, no list of the Confederate dead was obtainable, and no survivor returned to give the roll of the slain. Between Avoyelles and the dwindling army of the southwest lay the impassable Union line along the mighty river. But at length when this latter stretched to the western shore and beyond the region of middle Louisiana came the confirmation so devoutly wished.

Moving Large Trees.

A French expert on tree planting reports great success in moving large trees at night. He takes them up late in the evening after 10 o'clock, moves them as rapidly as possible and waters the soil and the branches bearing the buds. The results were excellent, only two of the large shada trees dying, although a number of the species are considered hard to transplant. For the first fifteen days after transplanting he advises that the boughs and leaves of the tree be abundantly sprinkled.

To Fatten a Horse Quickly.

To fatten a horse quickly in order to improve its appearance before sale feed liberally of cornmeal, steamed oats and clover hay, adding a little linseed meal to the grain ration. Exercise but little and give purging salts once a week. Feed at least three times a day and supply plenty of water. A horse not too wild will often gain several pounds a day for a fortnight under this plan.

THE GOSPEL CAMPAIGN

CAPTAIN IN THE ARMY OF CHRIST LAYS OUT HIS PLANS.

TALMAGE AFTER HOLIDAYS

The Winter's Campaign Against Sin—Splendid Equipment Temporally and Materially For the Battle—The Enemies From Within Are More to Be Feared Than Those Who Are Without the Fold.

Entered according to Act of Parliament of Canada, in the year 1901, by William Baily, of Toronto, at the Dep't of Agriculture, Ottawa.

Los Angeles, Cal., Sept. 25.—At the close of the vacation season and the opening of a new period of activity in the churches this sermon comes as a call to arms to all who are eager for spiritual conquest. The text is Revelation iii., 8, "I have set before thee an open door, and no man can shut it."

The Japanese armies have been concentrating for weeks and months to acquire a commanding position at Port Arthur and have been seizing strategic points from which they could drive the Russian armies which were being sent to its relief. These strategic movements are planned in advance with the utmost care in selection of the ground so as to get the advantage of elevated positions from which to fire upon the enemy. The generals on both sides are aware that the conquest of the region depends in no small degree on the skill exercised in this important matter.

Months before an invading army moves for the subjugation of a country trained military minds study its natural features and intuitively settle the strategic points which it is essential to capture and to hold and the course which the various corps must take to co-operate in the general scheme. Thus coming campaigns or the military lines of summer operations are planned for the most part by the different commanders of invading armies while their armies are encamped in winter quarters. Therefore the question which at this season naturally forces itself upon the mind is this: "What is the gospel campaign ahead of the Christian church for the ensuing ten months? I am a captain in the army of Christ. How am I to lead my people? Where am I to go?"

Christ is our great commander, and as a captain under him I would here and now point out to you the mighty opportunities which are before us. I would sketch the line of campaign we as a church are about to enter. And, furthermore, I not only want to show you how we are to fight, where we are to fight, but also to try to encourage you by reminding you of the great agencies of our time which are going to help us in this coming year's struggle.

The glorious twentieth century is opening wide its doors to let the church of the Lord Jesus Christ pass forth into God's conflict, aided by scientific and social facilities that no other age possessed, whereby each man can double and treble and quadruple the amount of work which his grandfather or his great-grandfather was able to do. It is saying to us: "Man, if the length of your life is to be estimated by the amount of work you shall be able to accomplish I will let you live longer than did Jacob, who died of old age at one hundred and forty-seven, or Noah, who lived to be nine hundred and fifty years, or Methuselah, who only lacked thirty-one years of being one thousand years old. I will let you live so long that what your ancestors accomplished in the course of their lives will seem to be as nothing to what you shall be able to accomplish." The twentieth century speaks thus not to one man, but to all.

This inventive age has literally doubled and quadrupled and almost infinitely multiplied the material producing power of man. Think of the facilities of communication! Supposing I wish to plead the cause of Christ with some friend clear across the American continent. I sit down and pen my appeal. In a few minutes it is in the postman's hands. A little later it is in the mail wagon on its way to the depot. Soon it is in the mail car going at lightning speed over the mountains and across the alkali deserts and across the rivers until it is dropped in the eastern home. It has taken only a few days for that message to reach its destination in the east, and in a few days longer an answer comes back to me that my appeal has been read, and under God's blessing it has been made effectual to the salvation of a soul. Think how many times such an effort might be multiplied and how largely the facilities of communication might be utilized for the spread of the gospel! I can to-day send a letter from California to New York, 3,000 miles away, quicker than in the beginning of the last century my New Jersey ancestor could send a letter to his missionary son living among the Georgia pines. It used to take our ancestors sometimes hours to ride to the nearest church. Now the church of our Lord Jesus Christ is at almost every street corner, and the religious papers are scattering their prints everywhere. Man to-day has quadrupled his opportunities of life because he can accomplish four times the amount of work which his ancestors were able to do in the same time.

You must see that all these increased advantages of man can be made to act and re-act mightily for good in the coming campaign of the church of Christ against sin. Matthew Simpson, the great Bishop of the Methodist Church, once delivered a lecture to show how God is preparing the way for the glory of his coming millennium in the inventions and the social movements of everyday life. The other day a book came into my hand entitled "The Romance of Invention." But no romance of inventions has ever been written which can fully depict the Christian romance of the uses to which these inventions can be applied in the extension of Christ's kingdom as Bishop Simpson explained them. One item alone of that lecture comes to my mind. I speak it in my own language, as I recall it from a blurred memory. The Methodist orator wanted to show how every modern facility was appropriated and used in the late Civil war. The sewing machine had just been invented. It was employed to ensure the soldiers being properly clothed. The steam engine was utilized to carry the armies quickly to the scene of conflict so that the carnage might sooner end. The modern improvements in arms were adopted, and so the terrible destruction of life in single combats by the old-fashioned axe and spear was avoided. And as man used modern inventions for carrying out his purposes, so might God use the terrible curse of slavery itself for the benefit of the colored race. The negro torn from his African home and sold as a slave might be Christianized in the land of his bondage and return as a missionary to carry the tidings of the gospel to his people still on the banks of the Congo.

I find the church of the Lord Jesus splendidly equipped materially and temporarily for this winter's campaign against sin. But, more, than that, I find that there never was a time when the great evangelical churches were so thoroughly in accord on the fundamental doctrines of Christianity. In the pulpit and in the pew those doctrines are held firmly, intelligently and devoutly, and Christ as the Saviour of the world has the whole-souled allegiance of his people. Before a general goes forth to invade the enemy's country it is very important for him to know that his own soldiers are loyal to his country's standards and are of one heart, one mind and one purpose. When a Christian church goes forth into a winter's campaign against sin it is just as important for its pastor to know that his people are of one thought and one mind in reference to the great cardinal doctrines of the church. A thousand enemies outside of a general's camp are not so dangerous a menace as one traitor inside of the guarding sentinels' lines. A thousand blatant infidels attacking the church of Jesus Christ in infidel convention hall or by saloon counter are not so formidable as the so-called free-thinking liberal who is attacking the church of God as a member of that church or as an ordained minister of that church.

Some time ago before a famous New York club an ordained minister arose and delivered an explosive, heretical speech. This minister was afterward expelled from his church for his outrageous utterance. He denied that Jesus was divine except that "he was divine as we are divine." He denied that the inspiration of the Bible was any more infallible than was the inspiration of Shakespeare's works. After he had finished and the applause of those among his hearers who sympathized with his remarks had subsided Dr. Gottheil arose. Dr. Gottheil was a Jew and at that time was the leading Jewish rabbi of America. Amid death-like silence he said: "I know not how others may feel; but, though I am not a disciple of the gentile's Christ, I like not this talk of the preceding speaker. If I had been in the place of my brother and had entertained doubts and suspicions similar to his I would have quietly slipped out of the church with which those doubts collided, keeping my lips tightly sealed. I do not think I could do such an injury to the church which gave me my ordination vows as when a member of that church to attack it openly." All honor, say I, to the answer of Dr. Gottheil, the Jew! I believe that the most serious damage which can be inflicted upon the church of the Lord Jesus Christ is done not by his avowed enemies who are outside the church, but by traitorous foes within.

Now, for the most part, the church of the Lord Jesus Christ has been purged of those members who do not believe in the great cardinal doctrines of the Bible. It has been bold enough to say to such members, "If you do not believe in Jesus Christ as the Son of God, if you do not believe in the efficacy of his sacrifice, then you had better transfer your allegiance to some other church with whose creed you are in sympathy, for in this church the doctrines which you repudiate are regarded as the essence of Christianity.". The greater part of the heretical teachers have accepted the advice, and, like the army of Gideon, the men who remain are fewer in number, but are of one heart and one mind. The church of Christ throughout the land enters upon the winter's campaign with unbroken front, all the stronger for the elimination of its half hearted members.

But I take a step further in this mighty subject. We have a wonderful time in which we are to enter the coming campaign of Christ. This is the youngest of the centuries, but into it are gathered the ripe fruits of the past. The thought and experience of all the centuries that are gone have in these years come to fruition. It is the mighty movements and trials and struggles of past generations which have made the present time possible. From the triumphs and failures of the past, from the wisdom and the mistakes of our forefathers, we have learned lessons which should make us masters in the art of soul winning and successful leaders in the assault on the intrenchments of sin. This is the very best year of all years to start in a gospel campaign for Christ.

But take another step further in this momentous subject. We have another campaign blessing in addition to these two of which we have spoken. We have a church with all of its great leaders as well as thousands and tens of thousands of members moved to holy enthusiasm by knowledge of the strength of the Satanic enemies are strong also, so meet in combat. We know that as the church of Christ is strong the Statnic enemies are strong also, so strong that unless we go forth to this battle with a full endowment of the Holy Spirit to fight as we ought to fight for Christ we shall fail ignominiously, as we deserve to fail.

Outside of his own intrinsic strength nothing brings out the hidden power of a general more than the realization that his enemy is strong and wily—an adversary whose power it would be folly to underestimate, against whom he must marshal his forces with all his skill and develop their fighting qualities to the highest efficiency. When Goliath saw the puny form of David, who was to give him battle, the Philistine giant laughed him to scorn. He sneeringly cried, "Am I a dog that thou comest to me with stones." That contempt lost him the battle. Not so with David. His weapons were those with which he was familiar, and he employed the skill developed by long experience. He knew his enemy to be superior in might and cruel and relentless, and he nerved his strength for the unequal struggle. The church of Christ is made resolute by the knowledge that it is to meet a strong armed foe. We know we must fight hard to win. And we also know that unless like David, the shepherd boy, we go forth in unfaltering faith in the divine reenforcement we shall fail in the battle. A stalwart foe always brings out the best that is in a worthy opponent.

To-day the church of God has no cowardly enemy. Like a hunter stalking the man eating monsters of India or Africa, the church is and must be continually on its guard. As it goes forth into the coming winter's campaign to do the best it can and with the help of the Holy Spirit to do all it can for Christ, the consciousness that its foe has almost unlimited prowess has made the church strong and confident.

But where is the gospel campaign of this church during the coming winter to be fought? We have talked about the time. We have spoken about the oneness of purpose and the divine strength in which we are to enter the conflict. We now speak about the geographical region in which we are to fight. We must find our church's Plain of Esdraelon and its Marathon pass. America is to be the geographical plain of gospel manoeuverings for the American church. It is the foremost nation in the world to-day, and its power and influence are rapidly growing. In energy, in wealth, in enterprise, its takes the lead among the nations of the world. If it boldly takes its stand for Christ and declares that the principles of Christ are its guide and that he is its supreme ruler the effect on the world will be overwhelming. An enormous step will then have been taken toward the conquest of the whole world for him. America is the strategic point in the Christian campaign. Let every Christian church in this country realize that fact and unite to win this fair land for the Prince of Peace.

Oh, my friends, with such a glorious outlook for our coming gospel campaign, should not the church of Christ as a whole and our own individual churches go forth into this winter's campaign strong in God strong in faith, strong in holy zeal? For the most part I have been talking about how God is going to bless the great American church as a whole. Will he bless our own individual churches to which we have given our allegiance as he will bless other churches? Yes, if we go into this gospel conflict as we ought to go. Are you and I willing by our own consecrated lives to let our church, our dear individual church, with its glorious past, take the position in the church army on the front line of battle where she ought to stand? Remember, the open door which God opened for the Philippian church was not a doorway off in the distance, but near at hand. And so the open door of gospel opportunity of our church is right at hand. As consecrated, Holy Spirit inspired, earnest Christian church members will you and I join to-day in the forward march for Christ?

Oh, the Macedonian call for the physical and mental and social and spiritual salvation which is coming through the open door of the American church from a sin struck and a dying world! The whole world groans under the burden of sin. It is here; it is everywhere. The only way of deliverance is that Christ's church set itself to the task in the power of his Spirit. Beginning at its own doors, it must lead the assault and, uniting with the churches in other cities and states, work faithfully and bravely for the emancipation of this land and of the whole world.

Let our cry go to no earthly throne, but to the throne that is set in the heavens, and from that throne will come the power that will enable us to win the whole world for Christ. That appeal which, raised in Macedonia, reached the ears of the apostle, "Come over and help us!" is raised to-day by a world oppressed by the dominion of Satan. It comes to the American church as a whole and to the individual churches. Men and women and children, will you not hear that cry from foreign lands? Will you pass through the door that is opened to Christ's people? Oh, for the salvation of our cities! Oh, for the salvation of the United States! Oh, that the whole world may hear the word of deliverance and bow before the throne of Christ!

I would enlist you one and all in this glorious war. Your trials may be severe, your labor arduous, but in the end victory is certain. It may be yours to share in the triumph, but if you perish in the struggle you will yet be able to say: "I have fought a good fight. Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness."

Christmas Feasting In Old Times.

There are certain dishes which are peculiarly dedicated by custom and tradition to the Christmas feast. The plum pudding is almost the sole survivor of a long list of equally savory ones. There was the boar's head, always the herald of the feast and always seasoned with mustard. Next in importance was the peacock. The skin was carefully stripped off, with the plumage adhering. The bird was then roasted. When it was done and had cooled it was served up again in its feathers and with gilded beak was sent to the table. Sometimes the whole body was covered with gold leaf and a piece of cotton saturated with spirits placed in its beak and lighted as it made its gorgeous entry. The noble bird was not served by common hands. That privilege was reserved for the ladies most distinguished by birth and beauty. Geese, capons, pheasants and pies of carps' tongues also helped to set out the Christmas table in days gone by.

Stop the Pain but destroy the Stomach—This is sadly too often the case. So many nauseous nostrums purporting to cure, in the end do the patient immensely more harm than good. Dr. Von Stan's Pineapple Tablets are a purely vegetable pepsin preparation, as harmless as milk. One after eating prevents any disorder of the digestive organs. 60 in a box, 35 cents.—40

AS THE OIL RUBS IN, THE PAIN RUBS OUT.—Applied to the seat of pain in any part of the body the skin absorbs the soothing liniment under brisk friction and the patient obtains almost instant relief. The results of the use of Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil have surprised many who were unacquainted with its qualities, and once known it will not be rejected. Try it.

Mme. Latrille, said to be a Canadian lady, took a flat in Rue Piat, Paris, where she stored pictures and tapestries valued at £10,000. After she left, her son, who was asked to visit the house occasionally, found the collection had been neatly picked over by burglars. A valuable vase, for which the Duke d'Aumile offered £1,200 has disappeared.

THEY ADVERTISE THEMSELVES.—Immediately they were offered to the public, Parmelee's Vegetable Pills became popular because of the good report they made for themselves. That reputation has grown, and they now rank among the first medicines for use in attacks of dyspepsia and biliousness, complaints of the liver and kidneys, rheumatism, fever and ague and the innumerable complications to which these ailments give rise.

BLAIR'S GOUT AND RHEUMATIC PILLS

THE GREAT ENGLISH REMEDY.

TESTIMONIAL from the late SIR SAMUEL BAKER, the famous Nile Explorer.

"Newton Abbot, Devon. Dear Sirs—I have delayed my thanks as I wished to test the effect of Blair's Pills by a sufficient interval of time.

"For ten years I had suffered acutely from Gout and life had lost its attraction owing to the uncertainty of health and sudden visitations of the enemy which prostrated me for months, or weeks according to the virulence of the attacks.

"Blair's Pills have rendered me immense service, as I no longer fear an attack of Gout.

"For the last twenty months I have been comparatively free, as one or two attempted visitations have been immediately stamped out by the assistance of Blair's Pills.

"Truly yours (Signed) Saml. W. Baker.

Underwear a Farmer Needs

Regular weights won't do for the farmer. He must be warmer clad, because his work about the farm and long drives to town keep him out in the cold so much.

Stanfield's Unshrinkable Underwear

comes in special weights, especially for farmers. Special weights don't mean clumsy, bulky garments. Stanfield's Underwear is so warm because of the peculiar knit of the garments. It's pure Nova Scotia wool, that has been treated to take out the shrink and leave in the softness. We—and your dealer—both guarantee Stanfield's to be unshrinkable.

MUST BE ADAPTED TO SUIT THE COLONIES.

A cablegram from London says Messrs. Montagu and Herbert, in summing up the views of the leading schools of Canadian opinion, and reviewing Canadian conditions say that unless British manufacturers modernize methods and adapt themselves to colonial requirements they will, with or without preference, lose the Canadian markets. The authors' chapter suggests state-aided immigration and the removal of the embargo on cattle.

No one need fear cholera or any summer complaint if they have a bottle of Dr. J. D. Kellogg's Dysentery Cordial ready for use. It corrects all looseness of the bowels promptly and causes a healthy and natural action. This is a medicine adapted for the young and old rich and poor, and is rapidly becoming the most popular medicine for cholera, dysentery, etc., in the market.

H.B.K. BRAND

BIG SHIRT

Made big enough for a big man to work in with comfort. Has more material in it than any other brand of shirt in Canada. Made on the H.B.K. scale it requires 39½ to 42 yards per dozen, whereas common shirts have only 32 to 33 yards.

That's the reason why the H.B.K. "Big" Shirt never chafes the armpits, is never tight at the neck or wristbands, is always loose, full and comfortable and wears well.

Each shirt bears a tiny book that tells the whole history of the "Big" Shirt, and also contains a notarial declaration that the H.B.K. "Big" Shirt contains 39½ to 42 yards of material per dozen.

GOVERNMENT OFFICES

Says the Cranbrook Herald:—Word has been sent to Mr. Armstrong, the government agent, that the arrangements made by the Cranbrook school trustees to rent another room for the extra school for the balance of this year was satisfactory and that the government offices should remain in their present quarters until next year. At the next session of the legislature an appropriation will be made to build offices in keeping with the importance of this district and to give the officials the necessary accommodations. The removal of the offices to Cranbrook has met with universal favor throughout the district as the central location of Cranbrook has made it far more convenient for all the people from Ryan to Fernie. The growth of the country will without a doubt make it necessary to divide the district on the lines that it is now divided for legislative purposes, and when that is done, of course Fernie will be the natural point for the offices of the other district.

AT THE OPERA HUOSE

The popular Irish comedian James F. Post heading a clever company of farceurs' will be at the Stork Opera House on October 7th and 8th Mr. Post has many admiring old friends in this part of British Columbia and no doubt they will be pleased at this announcement. This company has just a season at Vancouver and the News-Advertiser has this to say of him:—Jim Post has proven before that he is an attraction. He has always been a drawing card but yesterday his popularity as a comedian received its best testimonial. Long before the doors opened every seat had been taken, while judging from the satisfied audience that left the theatre last night, crowded houses will be the rule of the week. "This is where they all laugh,', people were told on the bill but it should have added "all the time.' Post has a style that's all his own and in 'U and I' he shows to such advantage that one laughs continually."

There will be a change of program each night. Mr. Post the star, and his wife, May Ashley, aro too well known to need any particular mention. They are strongly supported by an all star caste of the most versatile performers in the theatrical profession. All lovers of clean comedy, good singing and dancing and music should not fail to see 'U and I'.

LARGE SAWMILL FOR FERNIE

Elk Lumber and Manufacturing Company Putting a lot of Capital into a Large New Plant.

Fernie is soon to have one of the largest and most up-to-date saw mills in the interior of B. C. Yesterday two of the principal directors of The Elk Lumber and Manufacturing Co. arrived in Fernie and the information we give has been secured at first hand. They are Mr. O. A Robertson, President, and Mr. F. B. Lynch, Secretary, both of St. Paul. The latter gentleman very kindly submitted to an interview and gave us the facts.

"Yes we are here to get our new mill under way" commenced Mr. Lynch. "In fact the initial work has already been going on for some time. Wh have with us two mill experts, H. F. Dittbenner of the Diamond Iron Works of Minneapolis, and O. P. Boynton of Washburn Wis. who are giving us the advantage of their expert knowledge of up-to-date mills. At the government sale of lots recently we purchased several acres to give us more room and we have been at work getttng this cleared for the new mill site, which is to be located south of the bridge. A good deal of levelling and filling is to be done on this site, and we expect to commence the building of the mill on Nov. 1st. The present mill will be dismantled and torn down at once.

The new mill will be 40x220 with 16 ft. timbers in basement and 14 ft. in the saw floor. The planing mill will be a separate building 64x40, with separate engine, etc. The entire mill will be equipped with the most modern and finest machinery attainable with all labor-saving appliances and the plant will have a capacity of 100,000 feet in 10 hours or 200,000 feet in 20 hours. The mill will be kept running from 250 to 300 days per year. The yearly cut will aggregate twenty million feet, and the company will give steady employment to 175 men. The cost of the plant will, at the least estimate, amount to $75,000.

Mr. Lynch upon being interrogated gave further particulars of the Company's big undertaking. They planned to have the new plant in operation by May 1st next. A spur would be put in from the Great Northern, aud cars for the C. P. R. route would be transferred by means of the switch. The entire plant would be lighted by their own system of electric lighting. A very important feature was that the new building was being erected so that another side might be added at any time, that the capacity might be doubled. Sufficient power was being provided for this purpose.

As to timber, Mr. Lynch stated that the company had 16,000 acres, and he did not fear a shortage inside of twenty years' steady cutting.

The men behind the Elk Lumber and Manufacturing Co. are enterprising and progressive, and where they see a good opportunity for investment they are not slow in placing their money. The same Company are operating a very large plant at Red Deer Lake, Saskatchewan, where they have invested altogether the large sum of $950,000. The markets east of Brandon are served from this latter mill.

The visiting directors return East today. They have a competent staff here who will carry out their directons in a satisfactory manner.

THE POLICE COURT.

May Rutland a dissolute woman was brought to Fernie last Saturday by Constable Sampson on the charge of creating a disturbance at Morrissey while drunk. She was fined $25 or given the option of going to Nelson for two months.

Complaints were laid before Provincial Chief of Police McMullin last week, which resulted in the dismissal from the service of special police officer Beaudwin who was stationed at Morrissey. That officer was charged in the police court last Friday with assaulting William Dick. The evidence of the accused and the complainant was directly opposed to each other, and though the latter bore distinct marks which corroborated his statement the magistrate dismissed the case.

E. C, Johnson pleaded guilty to the charge of gambling before police magistrate Whimster last Friday and was fined $25 and costs.

Nelson Krohn, on the same charge, pleaded not guilty and had L. P. Eckstein to defend him. He was fined $30 and costs.

Wing Kee was charged with violating the fire-limit by-law by building a coal shed on the lane behind his house. He pleaded ignorance of the law and was allowed to go on paying a fine of $1.00.

An assault was committed at the Chinese restaurant opposite the C. P. R. depot last Saturday which resulted in four distinct charges being laid. Jos. Essen, a German, who spoke four or five languages in one, and who required an expert linguist to interpret his evidence, claimed he was lured to an upper room in this house by a dissolute woman named Roa Fountaine who there robbed him of $5. While he was demanding his money, Clyde Westlake, a friend of the woman arrived on the scene and brutally assaulted Essen, inflicting nasty wounds on his face with his fists, and robbing him of $60 from his inside pocket. Westlake on the charge of assault was tried on Tuesday. The evidence was of a contradictory nature. The woman and the accused claiming that Essen started the row by clinching with Westlake. The woman's evidence however was not given much weight as she varied from the truth in some details. The accused was fined $100 or 6 months at hard labor. L. P. Eckstein who defended gave notice of appeal.

The woman was tried on the charge of the theft of $5. The case was not proved and it was dismissed. She was then tried for being a loose and disorderly person. Pleading guilty she was sentenced to pay a fine of $25 or serve two months at Nelson jail.

Essen pleaded not guilty to the charge of being drunk, and the case was dismissed.

On Wednesday, Mrs. Maria McDonald was charged by Sing Song under "the Master and Servant" Act with the non payment of wages to the amount of $30. The case was adjourned until today. This morning judgement was given for the plaintiff.

John Chardon was accused by Robert Fowler with assault. W. R. Ross appeared for the defendent. Several witnesses were examined after which it was adjourned until today for further hearing.

Henry Gates charged the Roma Hotel with selling liquor on Sunday. He claimed that he purchased liquor on Sunday, Sept. 25th, and that his trunk was held for the bill. Three witnesses were produced who swore that no liquor had been sold on that date. It was proved that the trunk was held on a $5 board bill. The case was dismissed.

Louis Zampa, a brick layer, was accused by Frank Marasco with assault. The latter is a fifteen year old boy who was employed as assistant to the men with whom Zampa worked. It was shown that the boy had disobeyed orders and had used foul language. His Worship held that the man was justified in shaking the lad and he gave the latter a wholesome lecture on his unbecoming conduct.

COUNCIL MEETING.

All the members of the City Council were present at the regular weekly meeting on Monday night.

A Communication from L. P. Eckstein solicitor, enclosing an itemized bill of $183.71 for services rendered re incorporation, was read by the City Clerk. The letter was filed and the bill was ordered to be sent to the secretary of the Board of Trade.

A. J. Purdy wrote asking for permission to move his store building from the corner of Victoria Ave. and Wood St. to lot 4 block6, forty feet north of the Todd building. The request was granted, on condition that he sign an agreement that he would move the same to outside the fire limits before Dec. 1905.

Messrs. Kenny and McLeod, tailors, wrote applying for the work of making city polic uniforms. The letter was filed.

Thomas Batt of Carbonado wrote applying for the position of city scavenger. The letter was filed.

On motion of Ald. McLean and Liphardt the city clerk was instructed to notify the owner of the pile of posts on Baker St. to remove the same at once.

The special committee appointed to interview G. G. S. Lindsey, General Manager of the C. N. P. Coal Company, reported that they had an interview with that gentleman and that he had been quite willing to change the location of the red light district to any other site in that end of the city. The map of the new survey had been consulted and blocks 41 and 42 met with the approval of the committee. It was explained that these blocks were on the extreme limits of the townsite, a little west of the last site selected and in a slight hollow. The blocks were at the extreme end of Howland Ave.

The report was adopted and the city clerk was instructed to communicate with the Coal Company re change thus made.

The report of the finance committee re payment of salaries was passed.

A resolution was passed granting Jas. Wallace a commission of 10 per cent. on dog taxes collected.

The meeting adjourned to meet on Tuesday Oct 18th.

J. A. BAKER MAY RUN.

The Socialists of Kootenay may Take a Hand in the Coming Dominion Election.

The Socialist party in Kootenay will shortly call a meeting in this city to nominate a candidate for the Dominion elections, says the Nelson News The matter has been left in the hands of the city socialists who will name the candidate. At present no definite statement can be obtained as to the calling of the meeting, those appealed to merely saying that a meeting would be called shortly.

The name most prominently mentioned as a likely candidate is that of James Baker, of Slocan, who at present is a guest at the Grand Central Hotel here. Mr. Baker was seen last evening but said he knew nothing of his possible candidature. A meeting would be called shortly, he said, for the purpose of nominating some one, but he declined to discuss the matter further at this stage.

Mr. Baker is a prominent member of the Western Federation of Miners, being the Canadian representative on the executive of the Federation.

A SAD FATALITY

Little two year old Daughter buried under a Lumber Pile.

Yesterday morning at about nine o'clock little two year old Annie Taylor daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Archie Taylor who keep a boarding house on Pellatt Ave. was instantly killed by a lumber pile falling upon her.

The little girl with two other children were playing about the lumber pile which was in the lane at the back of the lot. The lumber had been purchased by the owner of the next lot for fencing purposes. The children had been climbing about the pile when it suddenly tipped over and the little girl was buried beneath.

The agonized mother was quickly on the spot and rescued the little one but not before its short life had been extinguished. Much sympathy is felt for the bereaved parents in their sudden loss.

TRACKMEN COMING

The trackmen's Union has completed arrangements by which their excursion first set for Labor Day, and afterwards postponed, will take place on Saturday, Oct. 22nd. All the trackmen from Kootenay Landing to Dunmore Jct. are invited to attend. The C. P. R. are giving free transportation to all its employees. A procession will be held in the morning after the arrival of the excursionists. In the evening a banquet for 100 people will be given in the Napanee Hotel.

PODBIELANCIK-PESTIK

On Monday evening a quiet wedding was solemnized in the Catholic Church Church, when Mr. John Podbielancik and Mrs. Mary Pestik were united for life. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Father Coccola in the presence of a few intimate friends. Mr. Podbielancik is a member of the Crows Nest Trading Co. He has been in business in Fernie for three years and is well known in the city. His bride was one of the twenty-three widows who lost their husbands in the explosion of May 22nd 1902. Mr. and Mrs. Podbielancik have taken up their residence in the large house in West Fernie.

W. A. GALLIHER IN CITY

A LARGE PUBLIC MEETING HELD LAST NIGHT.

The Member Speaks on the Campaign Issues. Defends G. T.P. Favors Lumber Duty.

The Liberals opened the campaign in this city last evening at a public meeting held in the Stork Opera House. W. A. Galliher the Liberal candidate arrived on the evening train and delivered an excellent address to the large and appreciative audience. The chair was taken by J. H. Bricker Sec-treasurer of the local Liberal Association and about him were grouped several prominent liberals of the city. The chairman in a few introductory remarks opened the meeting and called upon Mayor Stork who gave a capital speech. He spoke at some length upon the progressive railway policy of the Liberals, citing the Crows Nest line and the wonderful advantages resulted therefrom. He compared the G.T.P. with the alternative offered by Mr. Borden and ridiculed the idea of the Conservatives operating a government owned railway after making such a failure of the Intercolonial. In closing Mr. Stork spoke warmly of the good services reudered this district during the past four years by the member, W. A Galliher.

Mr. L. P. Eckstein was the next speaker. He spoke briefly, but in a few minutes he clinched a number of hard cold facts. He looked at the issues from a labor man's point of view, asserting that upon labor all classes depend. He went back to the institution of the ballot and from there on brought out many features of liberal administration in which labor had benefitted. Referring more particularly to local matters Mr. Eckstein spoke of the prosperous condition of Fernie and South East Kootenay and of the faithful manner in which Mr. Galliher had worked for his constituents.

W. A. Galliher, "The People's Bill" as the chairman introduced him, received a warm ovation as he rose to speak. For an hour and a half he held the closest attention of the audience as he clearly outlined the issues of the campaign. By far the greatest issue, in fact the only important issue, was the Grand Trunk Pacific agreement and he therefore devoted most of his time to that topic. The speaker had been a member of the railway committee that framed the agreement. They had "turned down" the first proposition which made the terminus at Portland, a U. S. port. The terms of the agreement finally decided upon were gone into minutely. The new railway when complete, counting the entire interest on the bonds for the seven years, at a fair estimate, would cost the Dominion only fourteen million dollars. True the government went surety for a large percentage of the bonds, but their liability could only result through the line proving a failure. He had too much confidence in this great Dominion and the unlimited resources which this great transcontinental line would develop to entertain such pessimistic impossibilities. Another feature well worth noting was that the railway would be built at once if the liberals were returned to power. The railway was needed, and it was needed now. The actual work of construction would begin as soon as the survey parties were through with their survey lines. The new railway would be a national road. Not only were running rights over it reserved for other government roads, but for all other roads. The rates were under the direct control of the government. The payment for all material in equipment and for all labor was guaranteed by the Company, and a fair wage clause protected the laborer to the practical exclusion of chinese. A clause had been inserted guaranteeing a preference for the Canadian route, rail and ocean, where instructions were not given to the contrary by the shipper.

Hon. Mr. Borden had offered several alternative schemes, as one was proved abortive another was taken up. The last was the high sounding one, Government ownership. This was nothing but a name as the Hon. gentleman had nothing definite to promise as to how, when or where the line was to be built. The people of Canada were to judge whether a mystical, impractical policy like that was to supercede the clear-cut, business-like, bold and practical policy as laid down by the Liberals.

The growth and prosperity of the country under Liberal rule was touched on. The trade of Canada increased 66 million of dollars in 18 years of Conservative rule while under 7 years of Liberal rule it had increased 228 millions of dollars.

On the lumber duty question Mr. Galliher reiterated what he has previously stated in Fernie. He believed the B. C. lumbermen should be protected as are other industries which the lumbermen help to support. He would continue to work for a tax on American lumber as he had worked in the past.

The lead bonus which he had worked hard to secure was working wonders in lead-mining districts. He showed that the bonus on the lead production was better than a duty on American importations.

In conclusion Mr. Galliher modestly referred to his record during the four years he had the honor of representing the Kootenays at Ottawa. In all he had secured about six million dollars for this constituency. The $10,000 grant for a government building at Fernie that he had been instrumental in securing would, he felt assured, be supplemented by a larger grant next year.

The meeting closed with cheers for the King and for the candidate.

MR. LINDSEY ARRIVES

NEW GENERAL MANAGER TALKS ON LOCAL TOPICS.

The Branch Crossing at C. P. R. Tracks Causes a Trip to Winnipeg. More Townsite to be Laid off.

Mr. G. G. Lindsey K, C. General Manager of the Crows Nest Pass Coal Co. arrived in Fernie last Saturday. This is his first appearance here since he was appointed to his present position over a month ago. In a few minutes' conversation with a Free Press man on Wednesday Mr. Lindsey spoke of various matters of public interest to the people of Fernie. In reply to our congratulations Mr. Lindsey modestly attributed the appointment to his long connection with the Company in other important offices. He was pleased to come to Fernie. His business at the head office would require much of his time to be spent in Toronto where his home was but he supposed he would spend about half his time in Fernie.

Mr. Lindsey was much pleased with the rapid improvement made in the city since his last visit here. The city was building up with a much finer class of structures, and of a fire-proof material in many instances. In reply to enquiries the new general manager stated that the work on the Coal Company office building has been suspended until Spring. The foundation walls was a splendid piece of masonry and he did not wish to spoil a good job by building in unsuitable weather. He was much struck with the fine appearance made by the Michel stone and he had about decided to build the whole structure of that material. The contractors were willing to guarantee rock free from iron. The quarrying would be done through the winter.

Mr. Lindsey had nothing to say re the zinc smelter, beyond stating that Mr. Fernan would doubtless be here as soon as he was able to proceed with its construction; owing to the lateness of the season it would probably not be built this Fall.

Asked as to the reported hitch in the negotiations between the C. P. R. and the Coal Company re the leasing of the branch line the general manager replied that the only matter not settled was the kind of crossing at the junction of the M. F. and M. road with the C. P. R. The level crossing, the overhead crossing and the underground crossing had been considered. The deep holes dug at the proposed crossing had been made to test the feasability of an underground crossing. "I am going to Winnipeg this evening" said Mr. Lindsey "and while there I expect the matter will be satisfactorily adjusted." The branch to Coal Creek would not be taken over until the G. N. extension to Fernie was completed. This in the speaker's opinion would not be before the end of the year.

Touching on the townsite extension question Mr. Lindsey expressed himself as being anxious to have it attended to at the earliest possible date. Plans of new survey were being made and the new blocks would be on the market shortly. It was his desire to provide plenty of residential lots graded in prices to suit all purchasers.

A Japanese was arrested in the tenderloin district on Monday night for creating a disturbance. He had over $1,000 on him. He was fined $50 and costs.

MASTER and SLAVE

By... T. H. THORPE

Copyright, 1901, by T. H. Thorpe.

in rags and unshod, his right arm handless and his left leg from the knee gone, Valsin Mouillot hobbled back to his old home, discharged as incapable of service. To eager listeners, many of them weeping, he recited what of the engagement he had seen, which was little, for he was in the heat of it. He told of the drought parched section of Kentucky, dusty and waterless, through which forced marches were made; how, east of Perryville, his retreating division was halted and formed for action under a broiling midday sun; how the warriors of both sides were famished for drink, while the only spring on the field lay in an apple orchard, on one side of which was a low stone wall protecting a battalion of Illinois infantry. His wan face glowed as he described the charges of his company on this wall to uncover the spring. The first was under Captain Tailleur, who fell at the brink of the pool with a minie ball through his forehead. Lieutenant Oakfell led the second, received a murderous volley within 40 feet of the wall and bit the dust with Leon, the jockey, who had joined him at Corinth and followed him as body servant and cook of his mess. The third charge was about to be made under the leadership of Lieutenant Brulleton when a shell exploded in Valsin's face, and he knew no more until he recovered consciousness in a canvas covered wagon jolting through the passes of the Cumberland mountains to find himself minus a foot and a hand. He had lingered about the camps and hospitals until he was formally reported as unfit for duty, discharged and ordered to return home as best he could. His journay back was long, tedious and painful and now that it was accomplished appeared to him a hideous dream.

"What do you mean by that?"

When the doleful story of Valsin was carried to Estelle, she looked with streaming eyes far into the blue vault above and whispered:

"Horace, hear me. Your voice called my love into being, and now my love is dead. No other voice than yours shall ever recall it to life."

CHAPTER XV.

THE OLOGRAPHIC TESTAMENT.

NEVER had Evariste breathed so deeply and freely, never had his pulse beat so strongly, as after hearing Valsin, an eyewitness, rehearse the heroic fall of his brother. His spirit bounded; he felt his powers expand; he saw the path to the goal cleared. It was an effort to feign grief in the repetition of the story to tearful Mrs. Wyley, but his acting was superb, and it sufficed to excuse hasty retirement to the privacy of his room and the request that no one should be permitted to disturb him. Tiptoeing steps past the locked door and underneath the curtained windows testified the respect of the household for his sorrow.

With hands unsteadied by the extreme of exultation he opened the small brass ribbed box of ebony in which the sealed envelope had lain since the day he had received it from Horace and promised to defend Estelle from harm. Drawing his chair into the subdued light which filtered through the window curtain, he broke the seal, took out the one sheet of paper and, unfolding it, read:

PARISH OF AVOYELLES, LOUISIANA, May 6, 1861.

I, Horace Oakfell, of "L'Esperance" plantation, in the parish and state above written, of lawful age and without forced heirs, being of sound health both in mind and body, but knowing the certainty of death and the uncertainty of the time thereof and especially having in view the perils of war, into which I am about to enter, do make this my last will and testament in the olographic form.

I give and bequeath unto my brother, Evariste Oakfell, one-half of all my estate of whatsoever kind and wheresoever situated which I may possess at the moment of my death.

I give and bequeath unto Estelle Latiolais, granddaughter of Leonidas Latiolais of the parish and state above written, the remainder of my estate of whatsoever kind and wheresoever situated which I may possess at the moment of my death.

I appoint my said brother, Evariste Oakfell, sole executor of this testament and dispense him from giving bond, and I direct him to make partition of my estate by licitation within one year after probate and deliver to said Estelle Latiolais her share in gold money or its equivalent in interest bearing securities to be approved by the parish judge.

This testament has been dated, written and signed by me on one sheet of paper at one writing. HORACE OAKFELL.

So intense was the shock he experienced from this perusal that his head fell forward, and for a moment his state was one of semiconsciousness. But rage, bitter, unspeakable rage, sent the blood surging hot from his heart. The veins of his neck and temples gorged; his face grew livid. Had he been of full physical habit he would have died in the tempest of wrath which burst within him. An hour he sat motionless except for the twitchings of his countenance, like those of an anæsthetized patient under the surgeon's knife. But one thought was defined in his dazed, congested mind, and that took the form of an infinite, malignant curse upon the brother who thwarted him even from his undiscoverable grave. Exhausted, weak as a child coming out of a cataleptic spasm, he tottered across the room and fell panting upon his bed. The calmness of collapse came upon him, bringing a gradual return of connected thought.

In his view Horace's malevolence to him was manifest. The purpose of the bequest of half the estate to Estelle was so to burden the conscience of the sentimental girl with a weight of gratitude to his memory that the bestowal of her hand to another would to her seem the basest of crimes. He had sought to make her life one of virgin widowhood or religious seclusion. The plain animus was to baffle the suit which he anticipated that Evariste would press. The latter would not admit that his passion was unknown to Horace. How was this stroke to be parried? Now, if ever, was the crisis out of which his boasted cunning, the gift of his Latin ancestors, should bear him victorious. What was this weapon used against his life's life? What was the character of an olographic will? What was his status without the will no living person but himself having seen it?

He dared not consult a lawyer. No one of the craft known to him possessed the degree of secretiveness to invite his trust. Rising and borrowing strength from a decanter of brandy, he took down the civil code of Louisiana and, turning over the leaves, every one of which bore the pen notes and thumb marks of his brother, rested his eyes upon these lines:

Article 1581. The olographic testament is that which is written by the testator himself. In order to be valid it must be entirely written, dated and signed by the testator. It is subject to no other form and may be made anywhere, even out of the state.

Article 1648. The olographic testament shall be opened if it be sealed, and it must be acknowledged and proved by the declaration of two credible persons, who must attest that they recognize the testament as being entirely written, dated and signed in the testator's handwriting, as having often seen him write and sign during his lifetime.

"The perfection of simplicity," Evariste muttered, "and from all the forms of testament allowed by the law he has deliberately selected this one for my discomfiture. Shall I suffer it to wreck my hopes? Shall I not strangle it before it sees the light? What would be the effect of that? Let me look further."

Delving again into the code, he found that he, though only half brother, would have inherited the whole estate to the exclusion of other collateral heirs had Horace died intestate.

"Oh, Horace, you stupid American dolt," he soliloquized gloatingly, "to leave in my hands this cursed instrument of your ill will and expect me to turn it upon myself—to commit suicide with it! You never understood me. You never tried to understand me. It is too droll. Between me and success stands only this flimsy barrier, erected by a stolid mind, and away it vanishes in smoke!"

He seized the will and struck a match, when he was startled by a sharp knock at his door.

Throwing away the match and thrusting the will into his pocket, he demanded:

"Who there?"

"It is I," Mrs. Wyley answered. "A letter has been brought by a messenger, who says an immediate answer is required."

He opened the door and received the following note:

Come to Dede's at once. Matters of importance require consideration and action now.

QUILLEBERT.

"Tell the messenger, please, that I will come," he said to Mrs. Wyley, and then to himself: "Perhaps this is fortunate. It may be well for me to breathe fresh air and get back to the normal, possibly to consult Quillebert, before taking steps which could never be retraced. He is an expert on all matters of this complexion."

He was soon at the cabaret and seated in the rear room with Quillebert.

"I have news for you," said the latter.

"Tell it."

"The Latiolais girl wants to become a nun."

"She will forego that wish when I make her realize the consequences to her grandfather."

"You are still resolved on that?"

"More inflexibly than ever."

"Then I have other news."

"Tell it."

"Your brother left a will."

Evariste paled and exclaimed:

"Who says so?"

"Valsin Mouillot."

"How does he know?"

"Your brother told him he had left his will with you."

A cold moisture bathed Evariste's brow.

"Moreover, he made the same statement to the priest Grbe the day before he went away. But neither of them knows its dispositions," continued Quillebert. "The people will expect you to produce it soon."

"My God!" said Evariste, realizing the futility of denying the existence of the testament and his need of an adviser. "Your summons came in the nick of time to save me from ruin."

"How so?" asked Quillebert.

"I was on the point of burning the testament."

"Why?"

"Because it divides the estate evenly between Estelle and me."

"Hone!" grunted Quillebert. "Maybe that is an intimation of his wish that she should marry with you."

"No. It was intended to make her his widow and fortify her against the duress I meant to apply through old Leonidas. She will never consent to become my wife if that will goes into effect."

"You are right," Quillebert said after a moment's thought. "Where is the document?"

"I have it here," replied Evariste.

"Let me see it," Quillebert demanded.

The testament was exhibited. Quillebert read it slowly and deliberately, with half closed eyes and knit brows,

For an hour he labored thus.

proof that his genius was actively working. Looking up without raising his head, he said:

"Who has seen this besides yourself?"

"No one but you."

"Are you sure?"

"Yes. It has been locked in my desk since Horace gave it to me, and the key has never been out of my possession."

"Hone!"

Quillebert stretched himself to a half reclining position, thrust his hands deep into his pocket and, with his eyes riveted upon the will, plunged into a cogitation so profound and apparently so forceful that it seemed a bodily action instead of an intellectual operation. This silent function was prolonged, and Evariste became impatient, though he dared not disturb it. Suddenly Quillebert rose, drew from his pocket a number of letters, and, tearing from one a blank page of thin French made paper, he took up the will, turned the key in the door and walked to the rear end of the room, where a single window let in the light from the west. Finding pen and ink on the wide mantel, he placed them on the window ledge.

"What are you doing?" asked Evariste.

"Stay where you are," Quillebert replied.

He spread the will against the dirty window pane, illumined by the almost vertical rays of the evening sun, and over it the page of translucent paper. With slow movement he plied the pen, stopping at intervals to rest his hand and wrist, and for an hour labored thus, uttering never a word. Then, emitting a satisfied snort, he removed the two sheets from the glass and, laying them before Evariste, said:

"How does that strike you?"

Evariste was amazed and exclaimed admiringly:

"You certainly are a master, Constant!"

"But you can improve on that. Your fingers and wrist are more supple and steady than mine. Only take time and be careful." And Quillebert drew the thin sheet toward him and lit a match.

"Don't do that. Give it to me," Evariste cried.

"No, no," his companion answered, with a sapient grin. "This is mine. You have the suggestion." And, touching the flame to it, he turned the burning paper with his fingers until every part was converted to ashes, which he crumbled with his hand and stirred with those in the huge fireplace.

For many days Evariste remained on the plantation. His reticence and thoughtful mien were taken for sorrowing. Much of this time was spent in his room. He aged visibly. The poignancy of his grief was attested.

A month later, wearing on his hat a band of black, he sought audience of Father Grhe, who received him with courtesy, but not with warmth, briefly speaking the expected words of condolence.

REST OF SABBATH DAY

HOW THE ICONOCLAST TWIST THE TEXT'S MEANING.

UNDERMINING FOUNDATIONS

Ancient and Modern Ideas of Spending the Day Which the Lord Has Hallowed —Rev. Dr. Talmage's Plea For Christian Instead of Lazy Man's Rest On That Day—A Timely Deliver.

Entered according to Act of Parliament of Canada, in the year 1901, by William Baily, of Toronto, at the Dep't of Agriculture, Ottawa.

Los Angeles, Cal., Oct. 2.—At this time, when renewed attempts are being made by the enemies of religion to undermine the old established foundations of faith and to revolutionize the Christian Sabbath, this sermon makes a vivid contrast of "the old time religion" and the new. The text is Psalm xi., 3, "If the foundations be destroyed, what can the righteous do?"

We should hold sacred the dust of our dead. That is true, but we should never build the hillock of the grave so high that it will dam back the onward flow of the "waters of knowledge" and change the "river of progress" into the "stagnant pool of ignorance and sloth." When the past generations did their work they did it well for the time and the conditions in which they lived, but the dead generations would not do as they did in the past if they were living now. We would not cry "halt" to the "forward march" of scientific investigation; neither would we compel the church of the Lord Jesus Christ to "mark time" by the grave of a Justin Martyr, a Calvin, a Wesley, a Luther, a Knox, or bivouac with eternal somnolence in the chambers of a Westminster Abbey, where the honored ecclesiastical fathers gathered July 1, 1643, and composed the Presbyterian Confession of Faith and our Longer and Shorter Catechisms.

But, though we would not consider our ancestors infallible in their opinions nor absolutely wise in their ways of living, yet, on the other hand, we must grant that our ancestors knew a great deal more than some of us are willing to give them credit for. Though our forefather's "lightning expresses" were only canal boats and stage-coaches and sailing boats, in which most of us would be afraid to cross Long Island Sound, let alone the Atlantic Ocean, that is no reason why they did not know how to develop Christian men and women as successfully as do we. Though our ancestors for the most part had no books save that of a Bible, a "Pilgrim's Progress" or a Doddridge's "Rise and Progress of Religion in the Soul," that is no proof that they did not know as much of God and hold the truth in its purity as thoroughly as do we who have access to such vast modern libraries, and yet to-day we find a spirit of "exterminating iconoclasm" abroad. Man's profane hands are digging up the old foundations and destroying the old altars and ridiculing the old ways merely because they are old. I would not have you bend the knee before the hillock of a ancestral grave as though it were a shrine, but I would have you respect and not destroy it, but use that hillock of a grave as the stepping stone to a higher throne. The living may in some things be right where their Christian ancestors were wrong, yet we have only to look around at the modern innovations and observe the effect they have on the community to be convinced that in some things our Christian ancestors were right and the modern innovators deplorably wrong.

In the first place, I protest against the iconoclasm which is undermining the foundation stones of our ancestral Sabbath. Its desecrators have been going up and down the length and breadth of the land asserting that religious worship can become as much a form of dissipation as drink or over-eating or over-exercising can be. They make a wrong application of our Lord's words that the "Sabbath was made for man, and not man for the Sabbath." They affirm that it is absurd for a business man who has been at hard work for at least six days of the week from 7 o'clock in the morning sometimes until 10 or 11 or 12 o'clock at night to be compelled to get up on Sunday in time for an early Sunday school, then attend two long church preaching services, and then perhaps to attend a Christian Endeavor Society besides.

They contend that Sunday should be a day of rest and that what a man needs upon the Sabbath day is relaxation. He should go to bed Saturday night after a hot bath with his mind perfectly at ease. As he crawls into bed he should be able to say to himself: "Now, I can lie here just as long as I please. If I can awake at 9 o'clock, all right. If I can sleep to 12, better still. Then after I awake I will have a cup of coffee and a roll brought to my bedside, and I will eat a little and then stay in bed for another hour, reading the newspaper. Then after dinner I will take my children out to one of the public parks or down by the seaside and get a sun bath and a view of God's trees and valleys and hillsides, or I will go to one of our great art galleries and look at the pictures. It is impossible for me to go and see the painters' and the sculptors' masterpieces on any other day. Therefore the city art galleries should be opened on Sunday. Then in the evening hour I will go to church if I feel like it. If I do not desire to do so I will go to bed again and rest—yes, just rest. By such a system of rest I shall be invigorated and shall return to my work the next Monday strong in body, clear in mind, more loving to my family, the human race at large, and to God himself. That," says our iconoclast, "is my idea of the Sabbath day. I do not think a hard-working man has a right to make his Sunday a day of hard work in churchgoing, so that he works harder on the Sabbath than he does on any other day of the week."

Sabbath iconoclasts, is that the way you would have man spend his Sabbaths? Well, already your modern teaching in reference to the Sabbath too well has taken root. Your premises are wrong, for you know not to what conclusions they tend. To see whether your grandfather's Sabbath or your own is the better I would have you compare the two side by side. Thirty, fifty years ago the man who made Sunday a day of pleasure was looked upon as a blasphemer, an out and out enemy of God, of the church and of the better elements of the social community. When Sunday morning would come even the horses and the stock of the farm knew it was a day of rest. The family would arise a little later than usual. Then they would linger a little longer at the breakfast table. Then the sweetest music of the world would begin to sound. The old village bell would send its silvery notes rolling down the valley. Then, after morning prayers, the horses were hitched up, and father and mother and all the children rode to town in the same big wagon. Then the pew was a family pew, and all the members were there. Then came the sermon, then the journey home, then the quiet yet bountiful dinner, then the afternoon for reading or restful quiet, then the singing of the hymns around the old-fashioned piano. Then the evening church service again or, if the farm was too far away, the evening prayers and early bed. You know, O man, that old-fashioned Sabbath day meant more than mere cessation from worldly work. It meant quiet communion with God. It meant Bible study and sacred readings as well as mere rest. Do you wonder that such a Sabbath as our fathers observed was the very foundation of church life, of Christian home life, of Bible reading and of consecration to God?

Alongside of this beautiful Sabbath day of rest I want you to place the modern Sabbath, with its so-called liberal ideas. First, where do we find the vestibule of the Sabbath? Namely, Saturday night. To bed early? Oh, no! Saturday night has come. In our large cities the street cars are crowded. Where are the people going? Some to the theatres; others, alas, to places of still more evil resort! Men and women, tired from work now, are turning this Saturday night into the hardest kind of work. They are dissipating for pleasure's sake. To the non-churchgoer, as a rule, Saturday night is only too often a time for free indulgence of every desire that is bad.

Sunday morning is here. Where do we now find most of the non-churchgoers? Again crowding our railroad trains and cars; picnics, ball games, outing parties, where the breweries and the wine sellers get their biggest revenues. The beautiful pictures of the family Bible which we used to study as a boy have given place to the silly pictorials of the Sunday newspaper. Everywhere on the Sabbath sin simply runs riot. In many cities even the saloons and playhouses are full. Instead of the quiet family group going to the village church, now almost every country road near an adjacent city has its yelling rioters, half drunk or entirely debauched, who are off for a day of sin. Do you mean to tell me, sensible man, that the modern way of spending the Sabbath is as profitable as a day of rest and communion with God as were the Sabbath days our forefathers observed?

The rigid observance of God's day as a day consecrated to himself is the most important foundation stone of the church of Jesus Christ. Without it no true gospel consecration can exist. I know that in some homes the lines were too tightly drawn and in them the Lord's day was gloomy and was a weariness to the children.

I protest, in the second place, against the iconoclasm which would eliminate from our lives the divine principle of concern for the welfare of others. Profane iconoclastic hands have been undermining the foundation stones of our sacred Sabbath. Aye, these enemies of God have been doing more; they have been sneering and ridiculing the beautiful parable of the good Samaritan. They have been declaring that a man's neighbor belongs not to the family which lives next door to him. The only neighbor who has claims he would recognize is the wife or child who lives within the four walls of his own house. He has been asserting that a man's chief duty in life is to himself and his own. After the members of his immediate family have eaten enough and have a well filled wardrobe and a comfortable house to live in, then a man has fulfilled his chief end to society. His doctrine is, "Care for yourself and let others care for themselves in the same way."

The Golden Rule with our ancestors was a practically and not a mere theory. "Where are you going to-night, mother?" the father often asked. "You look tired. You ought not to be going out to-night." "I know it," she would say, "but I must go. Our neighbor is very sick. I am afraid she will not get well. They have sent for me to come and spend the night with her. I have fixed everything for breakfast. If I do not get back in time in the morning, why, you and the girls can get along somehow. Goodby now. Make the children go to bed early."

The daintiest delicacies ever cooked in the mother's stove were not for the growing boys, with healthy, vigorous appetities. They were for the poor consumptive young girl who used to sit day after day upon the neighbor's veranda in the noon sun, smiling at us as we trudged away to school. My, how we cast longing eyes at those jellies! We then at times almost wished we could be sick, at least for a little while, to get a taste of them. And how warm and comfortable the mittens looked which mother knitted for the poor children living over the hill! And when the farmer who lived down in the valley was prostrated with typhoid fever and lay for months, hovering between life and death, don't you remember how your father and the neighbors took turns plowing his fields and sowing his grain and getting in his harvests? They say that that sick man was once a strong athlete. However that may be, when upon his sick bed he heard what his neighbors had done and how they had kept the wolf of hunger from his door he cried like a little child. He became just such a sick man as Ralph Connor depicted in one of his backwoods tales.

I deplore also the iconoclasm which is robbing this country of the sanctity of home life. The iconoclast's profane hands are ruthlessly laid upon our ancestors' Sabbath observance and our forefathers' doctrine of "Do to others as you would have them do unto you." They go further than this. Those same profane hands are also snatching away our ancestral home enjoyments as well. They are saying to modern man: "Man, do not be an old fashioned granny. Do not think because your grandfathers found most of their enjoyment in the society of your grandmothers and your uncles and aunts that you have to find most of your enjoyment in the society of your wives and children. Do not forever be a 'stay at home.' Come; let us build for you clubhouses, where you can find nightly fellowship with strong and brilliant men. Come out of that little hencoop of yours. If you want to give a reception to your friends, do not give it in your home. It is too small. Hire a big hall in the centre of the town, where you can receive in better style. There, instead of having a few cakes baked by your own hands and some ice cream which you made in your own freezers, you can have a fine caterer furnish an elaborate supper; instead of having your own daughter sing a simple song or your little boy recite a piece you can have the finest of orchestras furnish the music. If you want speaking, you can hire a professional elocutionist to recite. This is an age of progress."

Do you, my brother, think for one instant that the advent of the modern clubhouse and public reception hall and Delmonico banquets is a moral improvement for modern men over the old fashioned quilting parties and merrymaking frolics which once made the rafters of the old farmhouse creak like the beams of a ship at sea and bend almost like William Tell's bow? Do you think this? I do not. I believe that any enjoyment which a man is compelled systematically to find outside of the society of his wife and children and home is a depleting, enervating and ultimately degrading enjoyment. I believe that any enjoyment which systematically makes a mother relegate the care of her children to nurse girls and to hired hands is an enjoyment which is poisoned through and through by evil influences which will ultimately bring forth harvestings not for God, but for Satan.

But, lastly, I would state that the iconoclasts of this day are trying to sidetrack the chief purpose for which our forefathers and foremothers lived in reference to their children. Instead of leading a parent to the altar of Jesus and saying, "Oh fathers and mothers, the chief desire of your lives should be to consecrate your children at these altars and have them make a public confession of Christ here," they would break these altars. They would say: "Here is the statue of wisdom. Dedicate your children here. Send your boys to college and give them an intellectual education." "Here is the statue of Midas. Sacrifice here, that you may leave them money." "Here is the statue of fame. Make out of your children great orators or painters or musicians or authors." Thus we see scores and hundreds of parents working by day and night to give their children—what? To give them to God and the higher life as their parents tried to do? No. To give them to a worldly success, which those parents in their hearts know may only lead their children to moral ruin and perhaps to eternal death.

O man, I ask of you one question. It is a blunt question. Will you answer me? What would you sooner have had your father to be—a great speaker, a great financier, a great general or a simple, noble, pure hearted and devoted servant of Christ as he was and is to-day in heaven? You answer well. There is but one right answer. Then, if the noble, pure, gentle Christian life of your father meant so much to you, can you not, will you not give to your boy the same Christian heritage? By the sacred altar of God's love will you not follow their example? Will you not carry out the dying wishes of your now redeemed and glorified parents and consecrate yourself to your Divine Master? Will you not here and now lead your boys and girls to the feet of Christ and consecrate them to the Master also? Shall not the chief purpose of your Christian parents in reference to their children be duplicated in the chief purpose of your life, to bring to Christ your children and your children's children?

To-day let us have some of the old fashioned purposes and ways and habits of our forefathers. When we are dying may we never be ashamed to utter the words which Dwight L. Moody said to his children. You all have read them: "May we not be ambitious to make money. May we not be ambitious for worldly fame and honors. May we simply be ambitious to find a consecrated, earnest place to work in God's vineyard and have in that vineyard our wives, our children and all our friends working by our side in the Master's name." That purpose is a noble purpose. That purpose God will bless as he has blessed that holy purpose in the lives of the old fashioned folks who are now in heaven awaiting the home coming of their children. That purpose forms the true foundation, the maker and builder of which is the living and true and pardoning and redeeming and ascended and glorified Christ. May God answer the fulfillment of this prayer for pulpit and pew alike.

Pale, Weak and Languid Girls

It is to Your Best Interest to Know about the Extraordinary Restorative Powers of

Dr. Chase's Nerve Food.

Dr. Chase's Nerve Food forms new, rich blood, creates new nerve force and actually adds new flesh and weight. When you have read the letter quoted below we believe that you will be satisfied that this is the very treatment you need.

Miss Lena Hiebert, Lowe Farm, Man., writes:—"I had suffered for two years with dizzy spells, pains in the back, cold hands and feet, nervousness, jerking of the limbs, sore tongue, soreness of arms and shoulders, and general exhaustion. About seven months ago I became so nervous that I could not rest or sleep, and could not do the least bit of work without suffering dreadfully from pains in the back. I could hardly walk, could eat very little, and felt that people were always watching my body twitch.

"I tried several medicines with little effect, and was a mere skeleton of skin and bone about to give up in despair when I heard of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, and began using it. I have used in all fourteen boxes of this preparation, and it has built me up until I am now strong and well again. Dr. Chase's Nerve Food has done me a world of good, and I feel that I cannot recommend it to highly to persons who suffer as I have."

Mrs. Welcher, wife of Conductor Welcher, of the G. T. R., 147 Congregation Street, Montreal, Quebec, states:—"My daughter was not at all well. She had no appetite, was pale and weak, her nerves were unstrung and at times she suffered a great deal from headaches. I got her a box of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food and since the use of this treatment for some time she has been thoroughly restored to health. This preparation has given her a good appetite, she has a much better color, and is stronger and healthier in every way. Dr. Chase's Nerve Food certainly is the best tonic which we have ever had in the house."

Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, 50 cents a box, at all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Company, Toronto. To protect you against imitations the portrait and signature of Dr. A. W. Chase, the famous receipt book author, are on every box.

TO OUR READERS

This Journal has been in existence six years. It was started on a platform not one plank of which has been abandoned or weakened. The principles we advocated in our earliest issues are those for which we ask support today, and whatever our failings may have been our most exacting critic cannot charge us with inconsistency. We have always fought debauchery, gambling and vice and shall continue to do so. We have always fought unfairness and monopoly and are still engaged in the same conflict. We started as an independent journal and have maintained that position. We have fought the C. P. R. for lower freight rates and better accommodation. We have fought the Coal Company on the Stores question and more than once when we considered they were wrong in connection with labor disputes we said so in no uncertain voice. We supported W. R. Ross, a conservative, for the Provincial legislature because we believed he was the best man offering for the position. We supported Fred Stork a liberal, for Mayor for the same reason. These are only a few of the instances which might be cited to show that we have been fearless and independent in our policy and have consistently advocated what we believed to be right regardless of the consequences.

It has been maintained that no newspaper can be successfully conducted on these lines. It has been cynically asserted that there must be a considerable admixture of venality if financial disaster is not to result. Our history and experience disproves this theory. In spite of the powerful interests we have at times antagonized we have continued to prosper and each year has found us stronger financially and in every sense. In other words our subscribers have recognized our singleness of purpose and have stood by us.

Because in a recent issue we reiterated the moral principles which it is our duty to enforce, and because we advocated a higher license fee than was at first proposed by the city council we have been attacked by a portion of the liquor interest and dire consequences have been threatened. Because we declaimed against what all know to be a common evil we have been charged with hostility to a legitimate trade. This is untrue and therefore unfair. We have never said one word against decently conducted hotels. We have always been against cheap saloons. We believe that the way to make the liquor business respectable is to make it too expensive for every Tom, Dick and Harry to get a license and so cut the profits that there is no inducement for the legitimate hotelkeeper to stay in the trade. As to gambling and vice there is surely no need to defend one's action in attacking them. All we urge is that the law should be enforced. Now we ask our readers to consider the situation, if they find anything inconsistent in our position we should like to have it pointed out. We do not for one moment believe that the miners whose reasonable demands we have always supported, or the merchants and other citizens for whose rights we have always stood, would have us one whit more mercenary or one whit less independent. We nailed our colors to the mast six years ago and they are still there. We have stood for independence of thought for the individual, good government for the people, and toleration for all things not inimical to the public weal.

The Department of Mines at Victoria has issued an official bulletin dealing with the mining industry in the province. The book is gotten out in good style with excellent cuts, one of which represents the Fernie Coke plant with the city in the back ground. The mining industry is treated in a comprehensive manner, with concise statments in figures wherever attainable. The output of the province in mineral wealth has grown from $3,588,413 in 1893 to $17,495,954 in 1903. In summing up the situation from last year's output the compiler says: In coal and coke Vancouver Island with its much older collieries leads but the Crows Nest Pass collieries are increasing their output at a rate that will probably place them first next year if not this. More than three fifths of the lode gold came from Trail Creek (Rossland) Divieion with Greenwood Divisien (Boundary District) contributing more than one-fifth. The Slocan (including the adjoining Ainsworth Division) produced more than one-half the silver. The Boundary must be credited with more than one-half the copper production, Rossland coming next with about one-faurth, and Vancouver Island with one-fifth. Tee Slocan and Ainsworth produced nearly four-fifths of the lead, but it is probable East Kootenay will this year take first place in this metal, its big silver-lead mine (St Eugene) being now in operation after a shut-down of three years. Zinc should be worthy of a place in the production statistics for the current year. Mr. E. Jacobs contributes lengthy write-up on the Crows Nest Pass Coal fields. In the beginning of of his article he says, "The economic importance of the immense coal fields of the Crows Nest Pass cannot well be overestimated. It is believed that there exists in that region of British Columbia the largest and most important known coal fields west of Pennsylvania. To this may be added the claim that has been made that the quality of the coal occurring there is admitted by experts to be superior to that of any other bituminous coal yet discovered in large quantities west of the Alleghanies, and that its coking qualities are better than those of other coals in the West."

The date of the Kootenay elections has been fixed for Nov. 22nd. The nomination day will be Nov. 1st., two days before general election. The effect of having the nomination day before the general election will be to insure a contest. The Kootenay liberals are reasonably confident that their party will carry the country. The Conservatives, at least the optimistic Conservatives, entertain a hope that the Laurier administration will be defeated, and the Hon. Chas. McIntosh will be nominated to contest W. A. Galliher's re election.

* * *

The proposed nominee for the Socialist party in Kootenay is well knowh in Fernie where as a member of the Executive of the Western Federation of Miners he took a prominent part in the two strikes which occured at these collieries.

AFTER THE INDIANS

Constable Walker was sent into the Upper Elk Valley this week to investigate a report that a tribe of Alberta indians have invaded that district on a hunting expedition and are slaughtering the big game. The trip is a long one and Mr. Walker may be absent several more days. There is a vast country in the district north of Michel where the indians in past years have made regular expeditions. The need for game wardens in this section has been mentioned before. A systematic patrol at certain times would effectually prevent the indians' invasions.

Later—Constable Walker arrived this morning with five Indians whom he caught shooting game. They had 12 pack horses loaded with hides. One indian eluded arrest.

STUART'S COMIC PLAYERS

Stuart's comic players gave three performances in Fernie, Friday and Saturday evenings and a matinee on the latter day. Rose Chains

By IZOLA L. FORRESTER

Copyright, 1904, by Izola L. Forrester

It was late when Rosemary arrived. The other guests were rising, and dinner had been announced. She had barely time to toss aside her furs and exchange a few hurried words with Mrs. Creighton.

There was one thing certain, she decided, after a glance at Helen and the rest. They had not heard yet, and she was glad of an hour's respite. After the scene with Dean last night, followed by the solemn one in the morning with her mother, and finally the reproaches and condolences of four younger sisters, each with her individual opinion on the fitness of the engagement, it was a relief to breathe freely without fear of conversational dissection of her case.

"Who is to take me in?" she asked at the foot of the stairs, but Helen was already bowing and smiling to another guest as she answered:

"You're always late, dear, aren't you? No excuse, though, please. Don't you see the senator looking helpless and alone over there? He's to take me in and thinks I'm lost."

"But"— Rosemary stopped short and went upstairs to the dressing room with a little sudden heartache. For a whole month one only had had the right and privilege of claiming her, and now she was free again. She hoped Helen would not give her to any one brilliant and strenuous tonight, who would bother her by trying to make an impression. She didn't want to be impressed. In a measure she blamed impressionism for her engagement to Dean. He was a royal comrade, clever and responsive, but not too clever or too responsive. There was a difference. Looking back on the joyous days of the month, she decided that it had been this element of clumship, of mindful affinity, which had been responsible for the whole thing.

As a comrade Dean was splendid, but as a lover in the role of prospective husband to be wedded to for life she had suddenly discovered that he was exacting—most exacting.

Any man who was engaged to a girl and positively forbade any other man falling in love with her was exacting. Moreover, it was foolish, because, really, it was in the abstract a compliment to his own good taste.

She could not help Jack Stowell telling her that he loved her. Of course he loved her. He had told her so on an average of twice a month for over a year. And he was a dear, dear boy.

She smiled contentedly at the mirrored image of herself in the dressing room as she paused to tuck in a few refractory hairpins. Who could help loving her? Even Dean had called her the dearest girl in the world. It was sweet to remember that. Of course he had behaved intolerably about Jack, but when a man is in love—

She laughed softly and buried her lips caressingly in the heart of a single long stemmed La France rose that lay lightly on her breast.

The last trailing gown was vanishing beyond the heavy velvet portieres of the dining room as she came down stairs. Only one lone figure awaited her coming in the wide hall, and she wondered who it could be. Not Jack. Mrs. Creighton did not approve of Jack. In fact, she had once called him a cub. Mild, but irritating—to Jack. The figure turned suddenly at the sound of her coming. It was Dean himself. Half unconsciously she hesitated, her head lifted a trifle higher than usual, her lashes drooping obstinately over telltale eyes.

He was terribly grave and dignified.

"I am to have the pleasure of taking you in, Mrs. Creighton said. She evidently does not know."

"I had no idea that you would be here." She spoke indignantly. It was almost impertinent of him, when only last night she had told him she never wished to even look at him again.

"I could hardly help myself, after accepting the invitation a week ago. We will probably meet in the same places for some time, until the breaking of the engagement is announced. At present people consider us indispensable to each other's happiness."

His quiet, courteous sarcasm was maddening under the circumstances. She resolved not to even speak to him again. Old Mr. Rathburn sat at her other hand, and she devoted herself to him with earnest fervor. He was interested in a plan for the irrigation of the great American desert by means of huge spinning hose nozzles to be operated from balloons.

"But you'll have to get the water up there before you can get it down," objected Rosemary anxiously for the seventh time. She knew that Dean was smiling amusedly. "Unless you attach it to the clouds."

Mr. Rathburn was silent, and she felt withered by a sense of his displeasure, and she hated the theory of irrigation by balloons or any other way.

Dean was talking across the table to Eleanor Lee, and she suddenly classed Eleanor with irrigation and other unpleasant topics. Next to Dean was Mrs. Chadwick. Her gray curls were just visible beyond his brown ones. She was congratulating him, Rosemary knew. She had been in Europe all summer and had only heard of the betrothal a few days ago. It seemed to Rosemary that she was unnecessarily rapturous and voluble on the subject.

"It is the sweetest time of your life," she was saying. "The betrothal hour when we laugh and love and let Cupid bind us in rose chains and drive us at his dear, capricious will, span or tandem"—

"It's generally tandem, Mrs. Chadwick," said Dean, with merry scorn. "There must be a leader, you know, and Cupid's law is ladies first."

"Ah, but they are only rose chains, Dean." The gray curls were shaken at him rebukingly. "And they break so easily. Once married, they are rose chains still, but some wise fate has slipped links of steel beneath the petals."

"And if we break them now"— Dean paused.

"Then there are only scattered roses in the dust and Cupid weeping and Rosemary—for remembrance. May it never come to you." She smiled at both young faces. "Memory is dear, but not when all it brings to mind are the broken rose chains."

There was a momentary hush. The sweetly modulated old voice had carried to the far ends of the table, and all were listening. Rosemary's gaze rested on her plate. She dared not meet Dean's eyes. The hush passed, and there was the low, light babel of voices again. She heard him speaking to her and held her breath to listen.

"Isn't she an old darling to say that?"

"She doesn't know they are already broken." He could hardly catch the half whisper.

"But are they? Only last night, and no one knows, and it was all a mistake." He bent, with pleading eyes, toward her. "Rosemary, my Rosemary."

"For remembrance?" She laughed, a low, tremulous little laugh that was the first sign of surrender.

"For life. Roses are sweet, but they need the steel."

She hesitated, her eyes full of questioning doubt.

"Jack didn't mean anything," she said hurriedly. "He didn't really propose. He knew that I was engaged, of course. He only said that he had always loved me, and, after all, he's only a boy. It couldn't matter in the least his loving me when"—

"When what?"

His tone was full of the old imperative, proprietary command, and she met his glance for one swift, losing instant.

"When I loved you."

Mrs. Creighton was rising. As he drew back Rosemary's chair he whispered:

"Broken rose chains can be rewoven, can't they, dear? Forgive me."

He caught a fleeting glimpse of her face as she passed on in the wake of Mrs. Chadwick. She was tall and sweet as a young lily in her white lace dinner gown, and he felt a wild, sudden longing to crush her to his heart before them all and win the world of forgiveness.

She was gone, and he was unanswered, but the La France rose lay in his hand, and Rosemary was smiling as she, too, accepted Mrs. Chadwick's congratulations in the drawing room.

The Personal Equation.

Mr. Ames entered with his nose unequivocably turned up. "Those people in the flat below are cooking onions again," said he. Mrs. Ames lowered one of the windows before she replied.

"I wish you wouldn't say 'those people,'" she said. "Their name is Watson."

"Phew!" said Mr. Ames, lowering another window.

"I don't think the odor is so very disagreeable," she said cheerfully.

Mr. Ames looked at her amazed. "Why, I thought you couldn't bear the smell of onions!"

"I don't really like it, of course, but it is such a little thing to be disturbed over."

Mr. Ames looked indignant and injured and felt so; he could not understand his wife's attitude. "I wish you had felt that way sooner," he said dryly. "Last week you made me tell the janitor that if those people didn't stop cooking onions every night we should move."

"Yes, I did," said Mrs. Ames candidly; "but that was before I knew Mrs. Watson. We have exchanged calls this week, and I like her very much."

Mr. Ames made a curious noise which his wife was able to interpret.

"I expected you'd take it that way," she said. "But even you must admit that there's a great difference between the smell of a friend's onions and those of people we don't know."—Youth's Companion.

A Tough Old Invalid.

In England the purchase of an advowson, or the right to succeed to a vacant church office, is not uncommon. There is a story told of a country vicarage whose incumbent was, though but middle aged, very infirm. His tenure of the position being thus uncertain, the living was advertised for sale. The auctioneer who at the time had the disposal of all church preferments mentioned as a special advantage to intending purchasers that the then holder could not last long. To put this prospect to the test several possible buyers went down to the village to look over the vicar. A father and son attended the Sunday services at the church. A servant led in the ailing vicar, but the latter managed to get through a very earnestly delivered sermon lasting half an hour. In the afternoon he again conducted service, baptized children and preached for fifty minutes. Service in the evening was to follow. But the man who had come to buy had seen enough. "My son," he said, "that old cock ain't a-goin' yet; I am," and he forthwith departed. In the end a young parson bought the place for himself. The invalid outlived by twenty years the man who had bought his living. He lasted fifty years beyond the sale and died of sheer old age at ninety-two.

WHEN STAMPS WERE NEW.

Trouble In Getting People to Stick Them on the Envelope.

"When postage stamps first came into use," said a veteran postal clerk, "the public didn't know how to handle them. You remember how, when tea and coffee first appeared among us, the people fried the tea leaves and the coffee berries and served them with salt and pepper? Well, the people treated their stamps as absurdly in 1854.

"Some folks would put the stamps inside their letters, out of sight. Here is the official notice that we issued to stop that practice."

The clerk took from the drawer an aged bulletin that said:

"The stamps upon all letters and packages must be affixed on the outside thereof and above the address thereon."

He put back this bulletin and drew forth another one.

"People would pin the stamps on their letters instead of gumming them," he said, "and when they did gum them they would not do it right; hence this second bulletin," and he read:

"'Persons posting letters should affix the requisite number of stamps previous to depositing them in the letter receivers, as when posted in a damp state the stamps are liable to run off and thereby cause the letters to be treated as unpaid. Do not pin on the stamps.'

"Still," said the clerk, "the public didn't understand. Think of it—it didn't understand the simple matter of sticking a postage stamp on a letter. So we got out a third bulletin."

The third bulletin, in big, impatient letters, said:

"The simplest and most effectual method of causing stamps to adhere firmly is first to moisten well the outside of the stamps and afterward the gummed side slightly, taking care not to remove the gum."

The clerk said that a philatelist had offered him $12 apiece for these three queer bulletins.

COTTON SPINNING.

The Scheme by Which a Workman Kept His Bobbins Clean.

The father of the famous Sir Robert Peel was a cotton spinner in a comparatively small way until he suddenly went straight ahead of all his competitors. The earliest cotton spinning machinery gave serious trouble through filaments of cotton adhering to the bobbins, thus involving frequent stoppages to clear the machinery. The wages of the operatives were affected by these delays, but it was noticed that one man in the works always drew full pay. His loom never stopped.

"The onlooker tells me your bobbins are always clean," said Mr. Peel to him one day.

"Aye, they be," said the man, whose name was Dick Ferguson.

"How do you manage it, Dick?"

"Why, you see, Mester Peel, it's sort o' secret! If I towd yo', yo'd be as wise as I am."

"That's so," said Peel, smiling in response to Dick's knowing chuckle. "I'd give you something to know. Could you make all the looms work as smoothly as yours?"

"Ivery one of 'em, mester!"

"Well, what shall I give you for your secret, Dick?"

The man smiled and rubbed his chin.

"Well, Dick, what is it to be?"

"Come, I'll tell thee," was the reply. "Gi' me a quart of ale ivery day as I'm in the mills and I'll tell thee all about it."

"Agreed," said the master.

"Well, then," returned Dick, beckoning Mr. Peel to come closer and let him whisper in his ear, "chalk your bobbins!"

That was the entire secret. Machinery was soon invented for chalking the bobbins, and Dick Ferguson was given a pension equal to many daily quarts of beer.

Old Time Remedies.

Strange as it may seem to some, the ingredients of the witches' caldron in "Macbeth," at least a part of them, were once standard remedies among Europeans. In the tenth and eleventh centuries a sovereign cure for ague was the swallowing of a small toad that had been choken to death on St. John's eve, and a splendid remedy for rheumatism was to fasten the bands of clothing with pins that had been stuck into the flesh of either a toad or a frog. Physicians frequently recommended the water from a toad's brain for mental affections and that a live toad be rubbed over the diseased parts as a cure for the quinsy.

Letters of Introduction.

Letters of introduction should not be worded in too complimentary or highly flattering terms. As they are left unsealed and delivered in person it is embarrassing for the caller to deliver them. The letter should simply introduce the bearer, state that he is a friend and that any courtesy or entertainment shown him will be greatly appreciated.

WESTERN CANADIAN EDITORS

A series of articles describing their lives, their aims and their influence.

No. 8

Dr. Adam McMillan.

DR. ADAM McMILLAN,
Editor and Proprietor of the Virden Advance.

Mr. Adam McMillan, the proprietor and editor of the Virden Advance, is in some respects one of the most interesting figures in Western Canadian life. Few, even among the many-phased men of the West, can be compared with him in point of the variety and the success of his activities. He has been a blacksmith a surgeon, a soldier and an editor, and in intervening intervals many other things besides. In most of these he has been conspicuously successful, and even in those in which good fortune was not so pronounced no absolute failure can be recorded against him. Adventurous, but level-headed, progressively conservative by temperament, experimental by disposition, taking little or nothing on faith, whether in the realm of mind or matter, his habit of mind is as essentially open and unprejudiced as his courage is unquestioned. Mr. McMillan is a picturesque figure, from whatever aspect of his personality he is regarded. It is undoubtedly as a soldier that he has hitherto bulked largest in the popular estimation.

The family of which Mr. McMillan is a member is, in some respects, a remarkable one. His father is known throughout Canada under his pen name of "Hayseed." No more devoted, enthusiastic and loyal Scot can be found in all Canada than he. He is, perhaps, the typical Canadian-Scotch poet of the West, representing the sturdy Doric virtues of an independent peasantry given freer scope in the broader arena of the Dominion. The migration of the race has enlarged both their views and their sympathies, without in one whit impairing the strength of the loyalty to the land of their nativity. Hence, in all references to the "land of brown heath and shaggy wood," the larger opportunity, the broader hope, the loftier destiny, of the Land of the Maple is acknowledged and accentuated.

Among the knights of the besom an' stane Hayseed's curling rhymes are perhaps the most popular on the continent, and at curling "smokers" and other high festivals of the fraternity they are recited and sung with enthusiasm. Nor are the comments on current events by the canny Scotch fairmer and his sonsy, Kirsty, to be forgotten. Many a bit of pungent criticism and wise counsel are embalmed in these dialogues, which are worthy of more permanent preservation than the fugitive issues of a daily newspaper.

Of such parentage, it is no wonder that "Hayseed's" children should betray inclinations to newspaper work. As a matter of fact it is doubtful if in Canada there is any other parent who can boast of having as many sons who are editors. Adam, the subject of the present sketch, is editor of the Virden Advance, one of the most influential of Manitoba papers; Ernest, another son, is proprietor and editor of the Treherne Times, and another son is publishing a paper in the States.

Mr. McMillan was born in Glasgow, Scotland, before his parents came to Canada. He was yet an infant in arms when brought to the Dominion. His early childhood was spent in the vicinity of Markham, Ont., where he received a public school education. When almost fourteen years of age he came with his family to the West, and learned the blacksmithing trade under his father. He aspired, however, to something better, and decided to take the regular course in the Toronto Veterinary College. He graduated in 1890, and returned to Manitoba to practise his profession, locating at various times in Carberry, Virden, Oak Lake and Brandon.

He was in the Wheat City at the time of the outbreak of the South African war. Another brother held the rank of sergeant-major in the first contingent, and this fact, combined with his naturally adventurous position and his patriotism, drew him toward enlistment. He received the non-commissioned office of farrier-sergeant with Strathcona's Horse. Within a few weeks after his arrival in South Africa he was promoted to a lieutenant's commission, through the illness of his superior officer. After seeing months of service with the now historic Strathcona Horse, Mr. McMillan was transferred to the commander-in-chief's body guard, with the rank of veterinary captain. After nine months' service with that corps—during which its gallant conduct won merited praise from Lord Kitchener—Captain McMillan returned home to Canada by way of England. After spending the winter in Manitoba he again volunteered for service in the reorganization of the 5th regiment of Canadian Mounted Rifles under command of Lt.-Col. McDonald, D. S. C. He was given entire charge of the veterinary department, with the same rank as that on which he retired. But the war was concluded by the time this contingent arrived in South Africa, and the troops returned home by way of England, in which country Capt. McMillan stayed some months before leaving for Canada.

It will thus be seen that the editor of the Advance has a distinguished war record. In that war, which was one of the most just and humane ever waged, and which made the dream of Colonial Federation a reality, he bore no unimportant part. He, and those from the other colonial nations who served with him on the veldt, perceived with a keenness of instinct not surpassed by the most patriotic of Englishmen the magnitude of the issues at stake in that happily ended war. They demonstrated, not alone to Britain and her colonies, but to the world at large, that the British Empire is not, as are other European Governments, a machine operated under an ambitious sovereign or ambitious statesman, but an Association, in which, with mutual support and confidence, the world-wide subjects of one Crown could come together for all purposes, fiscal and Imperial, in which all were interested.

On returning home, Capt. McMillan took a practice in Virden. In a few months he bought the Advance. Under Captain McMillan's control the Advance became much more independent, but lost none of its influence.

The instinct to write inherited from his father, and hitherto dominant because without opportunity for expression, asserted themselves as soon as Mr. McMillan took hold of the practical management of the Advance. He became deeply interested in the paper's success, and soon placed it on such a substantial footing that he was recently offered a large figure for it, and, after due consideration he accepted the offer. In a week or so he will forsake the editorial chair he has filled with such promise, and devote himself entirely to his practice. There are many, however, who predict that ere long Mr. McMillan will leave the curing of the ills of agricultural stock, in order to again prescribe for those of the body politic, and that hereditary instincts and family affiliations will ere long triumph over the arts of healing. Should this be, the ranks of western editors will be swelled by an able recruit, and newspaperdom in Manitoba and the Territories be that much the gainer.

STRAINED HIS BACK WHILE LIFTING

Was in a Bad Way Till He Used Dodd's Kidney Pills.

They Removed the Bad Effects and now William Sharam is as well as Ever Again.

Murray Harbor, South P. E. I., Oct. 10th, 1904.

(Special).—Hurt through straining his back while lifting Mr. William Sharam, general storekeeper here, got so weak that he could scarcely hold up. To-day he is enjoying the best of health once more, and when asked how he got his health back he unhesitatingly answers, "Dodd's Kidney Pills."

"Having sprained my back with heavy lifting," Mr. Sharam says in telling his story, "it brought on Urinary and Kidney Trouble. I got so weak that I almost fainted and could scarcely hold up. I was terribly troubled with having to get out of bed so frequently to urinate.

"After using many medicines with no good results, I tried Dodd's Kidney Pills. I have used ten boxes in all and now I can sleep without being disturbed and my old trouble has vanished."

Dodd's Kidney Pills cure the Kidneys. Cured Kidneys cure numerous diseases, including Rheumatism Dropsy, and Bright's Disease.

A CASE OF LUCK.

How the Lack of a Nickel Won a Good Paying Position.

Little Mrs. Tyler sighed as the trolley car whizzed past her.

"To think," she mused, "that I should have come to this—too poor to spend 5 cents for car fare! If I could only get more music scholars! Then Bob could have the beefsteak and the fruit he needs—dear, patient Robert!"

Time was when Frederica Feelner's piano playing had won her many a social triumph, but that was before she had married the penniless Robert Tyler, to begin life anew across the continent. Now that he was sick they had only the pittance her pupils brought her.

Today Mrs. Tyler was very tired. No wonder she had sighed when the car had glided past her, and home was a mile away. Strains of Handel's "Harmonious Blacksmith" drew her inside a music store. Music always rested her. A girl was playing upon a grand piano, and several persons stood about. Mrs. Tyler strolled their way.

One after another took a turn at the instrument. The newcomer was too interested in the playing to question wherefore. Finally a man approached her.

"It is your turn next," he said.

She was about to explain his mistake when the humor of the situation appealed to her, and she was seized with a desire to carry out the joke. Accordingly she took her seat and began Paderewski's "Love Song." She did not know for what she was playing, but she vaguely felt that it was a test of some sort, and she threw her soul into her fingers. When she ended there was a little burst of applause, and "something else" was called for. She responded with Liszt's "Schubert's Serenade" and then with Chopin's "Cradle Song."

A sheet of music was placed before her, and a lady came forward to sing. If there was one thing in which Mrs. Tyler excelled it was in accompaniments, and now she did her best. The face of the man who had invited her to play was one broad smile as he inquired deferentially:

"May I ask whom we have had the honor of hearing? You have distanced them all, my dear madam. The place is easily yours."

Mrs. Tyler looked at him in bewilderment; then she laughed and explained. He explained too.

She had unwittingly taken part in a trial of applicants for the double position of accompanist for a singing master and piano player for the music shop. A salary was named that left the little woman nearly dumb with surprise, so amply it fitted her present needs. She wanted to dance all the way home. Fatigue was forgotten.

"I'm glad you didn't ride," remarked Robert Tyler whimsically.

"Oh!" cried his wife, and the exclamation was a thanksgiving.—Youth's Companion.

The Family Tree.

A pleasant pastime, literally, for those who have no more pressing duties and wish to get outside their environment at least in thought will open up before her who begins to mount a family tree. Tracing one's genealogy may become—probably will become—a matter of absorbing amusement and attention, for it entails a thread gathered up here, dropped there, a letter to write, a book to read, a register to consult. To the self absorbed, the despondent, the listless, one may recommend this diversion as certain to suit even rather morbid conditions of temperament, and yet as certain to gently force the mind away from itself to other persons and things in opening up a wider and wider field of reflection.

Quaint Prayers.

The chief of the Leslies is said to have prayed before a battle: "Be on our side. An gin ye canna be on our side, aye lay low a bit, an' ye'll see thae carles get a-hidin' that must please ye." An old covenanter, who ruled his household with a rod of iron, is said to have prayed in all sincerity at family worship: "O Lord hae a care o' Rob, for he is on the great deep, an' thou holdest it in the hollow o' thy hand. An' hae a care o' Jamie, for he hae gone to fight the enemies o' his country, an' the outcome o' the battle is wi' thee. But ye need na fash o' yersel' wi' wee Willy, for I hae him here, an' I'm cawpable o' lookin' after him mysel'."

Careless of Honors.

Pastor Kneipp, the famous discoverer of the "barefoot cure," who was appointed chamberlain by the pope, cared little for the honor. He did not even take the trouble to open the letter announcing the appointment and first learned of the honor conferred upon him by the arrival of a deputation at the Woersihofen cloister to congratulate him. He declined to be addressed, however, as "monsignore." It was with difficulty that he was persuaded to leave his retreat to go to Rome to thank the pope.

Basis of His Esteem.

"It is proper to respect an office under the government," said the patriotic citizen, "even if you do not happen to approve of the man who holds it."

"Of course," answered Senator Sorghum. "It is to the office that the salary and perquisites are attached, not to the individual."

Man.

Husband—My, but I wish I had your tongue! Wife—So that you could express yourself intelligently? Husband—No; so that I could stop it when I wanted to.

Good breeding is the result of much good sense, some good nature and a little self denial for the sake of others.

CANADIAN NEWS.

The Latest Happenings In The Dominion.

C. P. R. ADOPTING LATE INVENTION.

Among the latest experiments which are being undertaken by the C. P. R. for the improvement of its service is the composite telephone. This is a new system, by means of which telephone and telegraph messages may be sent over one wire at the same time, without hindering the efficiency of either instrument. One of the new telephone instruments has been installed in the office of G. J. Bury, general superintendent, at Winnipeg, and others will be set up at Brandon and Portage within the next few days. The installation of these instruments is by way of an experiment, and they are the first that have been set up in Canada. Experiments have been carried on with them in the United States by the American Telephone and Telegraph Company, but the C. P. R. is one of the first to adopt them for railway work. The new instruments are based on the principle that the telephone and telegraph are operated by different styles of current. The current from the telephone will not affect the telegraph key, and the chief problem to be solved is the absorption of the telegraphic current so that the sound of the transmitter will not be reproduced in the telephone diaphragm. When this has been accomplished the one wire may be used for the dual purpose without the slightest hindrance in efficiency. If the instruments are found to work satisfactorily they will be installed in the offices of the chiefs of departments, so that telephonic communication may be had with all points on the system. It is argued that this will be a great benefit in many ways, for while there is no question as to the efficiency of the telegraph, better work may be done in a limited time when the parties interested can come into direct communication. It will also make it possible to transact business of a secret or private nature without having it to pass through the hands of different operators. The new instruments may be set up on any wire which has been rendered "composite," that is, which is carrying the two currents. In this way a telephone may be carried in the car and attached to the composite wire at any point along the line, bringing the car in immediate touch with the whole system. This system may also be carried into the operating and other departments of the railway work.

CANADIAN SAILORS FIRED AT BY RUSSIANS.

The Victoria sealing schooner Carmelite, Captain McLean, which arrived at Victoria Oct. 2 from Kamtchatka, reported a very exciting experience with the Russians at Port Angel of the Aleutian group on Aug. 1. A boat's crew from the Carmelite got lost in the fog, and after pulling around for hours saw Copper Island, which they steered for. When about 200 yards off shore a party of men, believed to have been Russian soldiers, opened rifle fire upon them from behind the rocks near the beach. The bullets flew all around the boat and some knocked splinters out of the boat, while one struck John York, a Missourian, serving as boat puller, in the mouth, carrying away all the teeth on one side of the lower jaw, and seriously wounding him. The boat's crew immediately started pulling frantically seaward, the Russian riflemen continuing a hot fire, which kept the bullets splashing all around the boat. The Carmelite was fortunately only 15 miles in the offing and providentially the fog cleared, revealing her to the distressed boat's crew. York was bleeding badly when taken aboard, but thanks to the attention of Captain Maclean, he made good recovery. The Carmelite was preceded in these waters a short time before by a Japanese vessel, a number of whose crew were massacred on landing on the island by the Russians. Captain Maclean thinks the Russians on the island took the approaching boat for more Japanese and therefore tried to kill the men in her. The Carmelite had no news of the missing Victoria sealing schooner Triumph or her crew of 22 white men, and no other vessels spoken by the Carmelite had seen her. The Carmelite left San Francisco for Siberia on a prospecting cruise last May.

WILL INJURE IMMIGRATION.

At Montreal a few evenings ago when the citizens' meeting decided to hold a winter carnival and ice palace, Mr. Bosworth, fourth vice-president of the C. P. R., cabled Mr. Archer Baker, the London representative of the company, as follows: "It is proposed to hold a carnival here during the winter. How, in your opinion, will this affect Canadian immigration?" The following reply was received: "For the next 50 years consider a carnival undesirable from the point of view of emigration."

DROWNED IN LAKE WINNIPEG.

William Morgan, a young man employed by Captain Robinson, West Selkirk, was drowned off Elk Island, Lake Winnipeg, on Oct. 2. He and his brother Joseph were on a raft of logs being towed by the tug Rocket, and William, in some unaccountable way, fell overboard and was drowned before aid could reach him. He was 24 years of age, and came to Selkirk about a year ago from Lurch's Bite, Newfoundland.

OVER THREE-FOURTHS ENGLISH-SPEAKING.

The immigrant arrivals by nationalities for the year ending June 1, 1904, were as follows: British (English and Welsh), 36,694; Scotch, 10,552; Irish, 2,128; total, 50,374. Continental (Galicians, Austria), 7,729; Germans, 2,985; Hungarians, 1,207; Austrians, 2,201; Scandinavians, 4,204; French and Belgians, 2,392; Russians and Finns, 2,806; miscellaneous, 11,262; total, 34,785. United States, 45,171. Grand total, 130,330.

WANTS SECURITIES RELEASED.

The following notice appeared in a recent issue of the Manitoba Official Gazette: "Notice is hereby given that the Western Canadian Hall Insurance Company has applied to the provincial treasurer of the province of Manitoba for the release of its securities on the second day of January, A. D., 1905, and that all claimants, contingent or actual, opposing the release of the said securities, are hereby notified to file their opposition with the said provincial treasurer of the province of Manitoba on or before the said date.

G. N. W. MANAGER RETIRES.

After fifty-seven years of continuous service, during which time he has won the respect and esteem of all those who have formed relationships with him, Mr. Norman W. Bethune is retiring from the position of Ottawa district manager of the Great North Western Telegraph company. Mr. Bethune came here when Ottawa was Bytown, says a despatch from that city. He has seen the city grow and expand industrially, and coincident with that growth there has been constructed under his supervision a network of telegraph lines connecting all points of the Ottawa valley. Mr. Bethune, although enjoying good health, is advancing in age, and after a lifetime of service he naturally seeks a rest, and is giving up work to which he has devoted his efforts assiduously and in which he won the good will of all who have met him.

BIG OPENING FOR SERVANTS.

In the Imperial Colonist for September, the official organ of the British Women's Immigration Society, appears an article by Miss Vernon, on her recent visit to Canada, investigating the demand for female immigrants from Great Britain. Miss Vernon says she was favorably impressed with the factories in this country, they being better ventilated and built more with a view to the comfort of the employes than those of England. She comments on the remarkable neatness and beauty of Canadian girls, and advocates that only English girls fully their equals should come to the Dominion. She comments on the scarcity of servant girls and advises that the English women who come should be prepared to take situations in this line of work, as therein lay the greatest openings for their employment. She states that the position of working people in this country is much better than in Great Britain.

SHAUGHNESSY ON C. P. R. PROGRESS.

At Montreal a few days ago, Sir Thomas Shaughnessy, in speaking of the progress of the C. P. R. in the west, especially with reference to the new works that have been undertaken, said' "The works of improvements which have been going on for the past two years, are now practically completed. These include yards, terminals, shops, changes of line, improvements to line, heavier rails, ballasting and the thousand and one details that go to the successful operating of a railway system. On these items we have in the time I have indicated spent nearly $32,000,000." Asked as to the condition of the western country generally, Sir Thomas remarked: "Everything is in a progressive state. The people have been doing well, and are doing well, and the whole country bears an air of healthy prosperity, there are no indications of a boom, and I should judge that the progress is being made on a good financial basis." "Do you contemplate double tracking the system from Montreal to Vancouver?" Sir Thomas was asked. "Well," he replied, "as I remarked to a reporter in St. Paul, there may come a time when the entire system may have to be double tracked. We all look forward to that but we have no present intention of doing anything in that line."

CANADA'S NATAL TRADE.

Trade returns from Natal show that during the six months ended 30th of June, 1904, the imports from Canada amounted to $419,735, an increase of $35,240 over the corresponding six months of 1903. Canada's trade with the island of St. Lucia shows a decline of $10,000 in exports to that country in 1903, as compared with 1902, when the exports amounted to $50,000. Imports from St. Lucia which for 1902 amounted to $42,312, fell off to almost nothing last year.

MR. CHAMBERLAIN ANXIOUS TO COME TO CANADA.

Dr. Lapthorpe Smith, who has just returned to Montreal from England, says: "Mr. Chamberlain is anxious that Canada will extend an invitation to him to speak in the Dominion, and I learned from most credible sources that he would be pleased to accept an invitation to speak in Montreal and Toronto as soon as possible, when he would be prepared to give two addresses."

DOWIE LOSES.

A jury in Judge Tuthill's court at Chicago a few days ago rendered a verdict that John Alexander Dowie is not entitled to $55,000 left him by the will of Fred Sutton, a wealthy New Zealand sheep herder, who died in Dowie's hospital several weeks ago. The jury found that Sutton was not in his right mind when he made the will. Dowie will appeal.

PRINCE OF WALES TO VISIT INDIA.

In a special cable from London the New York Herald has the following: "The visit of the Prince and Princess of Wales to India next year, according to the Onlooker, is decided. It will take place in October, and the satisfaction at the announcement not only among the English, but also the native subjects of the empire, has already been widely expressed. The tour will be an extensive one, taking in most of the principal provinces and for this purpose an entirely new train for the use of the royal party has been built, and will be furnished in a most elaborate style. Six large carriages will be reserved for the use of the prince and princess and their suite, each compartment measuring something between seventy and eighty feet in length.

LIKELY C. N. R. ABSORPTIONS.

A despatch from St. Paul says: James McNaught, formerly general counsel of the Northern Pacific, was here a few days ago, and in company with a party of other railroad men left for Montana. The purpose of the trip is to consider the construction of a new line in that state. McNaught is largely interested in three small Canadian roads near Montreal and Quebec that he expects will eventually be used by the Canadian Northern to secure a tidewater outlet which would give the new Canadian transatlantic line an outlet on the Atlantic and the Pacific. "Lines in which I am interested and which may be absorbed by the Canadian Northern," said Mr. McNaught, "are the Great Northern of Canada, the Chateauguay and Northern and a line owned by the Montfort and Geatneau Colonization Company."

PREVENTED A PANIC IN CHICAGO THEATRE.

A despatch from Chicago, dated Oct. 1, says: Since the Iroquois disaster last December, when nearly 600 lives were lost, the Chicago theatres have been so thoroughly equipped with safeguards against fire that to-day when fire broke out in the Great Northern theatre during a matinee performance it was emptied in one minute and 45 seconds. This was accomplished, too, without the least semblance of panic among the 1,500 persons who were in the playhouse at the time. As soon as the manager of the theatre learned that the roof of the building in which the theatre is located was on fire, he ordered the fire curtain lowered on the floor of the stage. He then requested the orchestra leader to play a march, and the audience, thinking the matinee was at an end, left the place. No one was injured and the theatre crowd was in the streets before the fire department arrived.

Lord Brassey, writing in the Nineteenth Century, on our naval strength and naval estimates, and referring to the discussion of a Canadian fast service by the Montreal congress, says that if established by an imperial subsidy we will be giving our colonial fellow subjects a helping hand in an undertaking they have at heart, while at the same time adding to the list of vessels available as scouts to the navy. The imperial and colonial mail service will be practically a training for the engineers and officers of the navy reserve.

Referring to Lord Rosebery's writing the preface to "Canada and the Empire," Richard Jebb, in the London Times, says if the book has not served to remove his own wide misapprehension of colonial matters then the sinecure Imperialist who wrote it must have failed to get in touch with the national life of the Dominion.

Harbour, pictures the many quaint porcelain relics which have been discovered in odd hiding places in the historic mansion.

MARKET JOBBING PRICES from THE COMMERCIAL

Winnipeg, Thursday, Oct. 6, 1904.

WHEAT: An unsettled and less confident feeling has come across the wheat markets and prices have had a sharp decline in the last two days. On Friday, Saturday and Monday the markets displayed a good deal of strength of a nervous kind, sharp breaks in prices being quickly followed by sharp advances, but closing prices each day showing a slight gain over the previous day. On Tuesday, however, a weaker feeling prevailed and the price lost a little. This has been followed by a distinct loss of strength on Wednesday and to-day, and in the American speculative markets wheat holders have lost courage and let go their wheat, and bears have taken courage and put out short sales, and their action has caused a sharp break in the price amounting to 2½c. to 3c. for the two days. The difference in prices from a week ago, however, does not show a decline of more than 1⅜c. to 2⅜c. No special change in the general world's wheat situaion has taken place during the week, but it would seem as if the market needed a rest, and it has come in the shape of a dull spell and a natural reaction in prices. It is true that the movement of the spring wheat crop in Western Canada and America has shown considerable increase during the week, and that primary receipts in America are much larger than last year, but on comparing the receipts for this year for those of 1902 it will be found that this year's are smaller, while at the same time prices are 40c per bushel higher this year than two years ago, the larger price being no doubt responsible for the comparatively large movement. While the movement is liberal the exports of wheat and flour from America and Canada are only about one-third of what they were last year, and yet there is no appreciable increase in visible stocks. The visible supply on the 1st inst. is only 17,565,000 bus., compared to 19,489,000 bushels last year, 25,624,000 bushels in 1902, 37,474,000 bus. in 1901, and 55,401,000 bus. in 1900. It will therefore be prudent for those engaged in the trade not to allow themselves to be too much influenced by passing and temporary circumstances, but to study the general situation of aggregate world's crops for the year, the amount of recognized stocks available, and the demand for consumption together with the opportunity afforded for extensive speculative operations, having in view the possibility of much higher prices later on. There is nothing new regarding crops this week. Thrashing is progressing in the Canadian Northwest as fast as the variable and unsettled weather will permit. The season continues backward and work is behind hand, and it is probable that the acreage of fall plowing will be much less than is desirable. The visible supply increased 2,373,000 bushels last week, compared to an increase of 1,193,000 bushels the previous week and an increase of 2,230,000 bushels last year. The world's shipments were 10,616,000 bus., against 8,810,000 bus. the previous week and 11,234,000 bus. last year. The world's visible supply, according to Bradstreet's, increased 9,997,000 bus. against an increase of 3,658,000 bus. the previous week and an increase of 12,928,000 bus. last year.

Manitoba wheat has declined in price in about the same measure as wheat in the American markets. This season the movement of our crop has been delayed by backward weather; dull, partly showery and without the drying atmosphere so much needed during the period of saving and thrashing the crop. During September the movement of wheat was so small as to have little effect on the market except to prevent any idea of lower prices. Somewhat better weather for last week, and the advancing season has caused shipments to suddenly increase, so that the number of cars inspected in the first six days of October is almost as large as the number of cars inspected during all September. The increasing movement naturally causes a weaker feeling in the trade. At the same time it seems evident that the bulk of the car shipments belong to farmers who are not yet selling their wheat. Therefore, although there is a comparative plenty of wheat moving, there is not much actual business doing, and shippers who get an opportunity of doing a little business find it difficult to buy wheat unless they offer above the recognized market value, and even then the quantity they desire to secure is not easily got. This situation greatly restricts selling for forward delivery, which is usually very extensive at this season of the year, when the bulk of the crop is put in motion towards the lake ports. Our prices for wheat in store, lake port elevators, are running 14c to 16c per bushel under the price of the corresponding grades in Minneapolis, but we are still a little above export basis. Therefore our price must decline little yet or European prices advance, or we must hold our wheat. The holding of our wheat depends on our farmers, and generally speaking they are in a position to do so if they see fit. From what we know very few of them care to sell at present prices and all can carry their wheat over until New Year, or have it carried for them. Our prices at close of business to-day compared to a week ago show a decline of 1⅛c to 2⅜c on the higher grades and practically unchanged on the lower grades, and we quote: 1 Northern, 97⅞c.; 2 Nor., 94⅞c.; 3 Nor., 92c.; No. 4 wheat, 83⅞c.; feed wheat, 60⅛c., and No. 2 feed, 50⅛c., spot or first half October delivery. October closed 97⅞c.; November, 96⅞c.; December, 94⅞c.; May, $1.00. All prices in store Fort William and Port Arthur.

LIVE STOCK.

CATTLE — Considerable good export stock has been received and the prices are steady. Butcher cattle is 25c per cwt. easier at $2.75. Export stock is worth $3 to $3.25. Winnipeg, weighed at the point of shipment. We quote $2.75 off cars here for choice butchers down to $2 for inferior grades.

War Summary

The significance of a Mukden despatch noting an unusual activity in that place, is the subject of much speculation at St. Petersburg. The theory that it indicates the purpose of Gen. Kuropatkin to evacuate the town is not generally accepted, military officers there surmising that the commotion noted is in connection with a movement to check the Japanese flanking operations. In Russian official circles more credence is given to the report that Admiral Wiren has left Port Arthur with the ships, the confusion resulting from a severe storm on Tuesday being regarded as having made a dash probable. There are indications that the Russian warships in the Baltic will soon be despatched to the far east.

OLD WORLD NEWS

INTERESTING BUDGET FROM BRITAIN

PEACE THAT WOULD MENACE WHOLE WORLD.

The movement in favor of a Franco-German rapprochement is beginning to assume a practical aspect, says a cablegram from Paris. At a recent meeting of Socialist leaders at Carmaux, resolutions were drawn up by M. Jaures and adopted, strongly urging the Government to bring about an early reconciliation between the two countries. As the Socialists, under the leadership of M. Jaures, hold the balance of power in Parliament, their advocacy of a rapprochement is considered to be a significant development of the movement. The resolutions read as follows' "We look forward with enthusiastic hope to the day when France and Germany will be completely reconciled through the strong Socialist influence existing in both countries, and will work throughout Europe for the encouragement of civilization, the elevation of labor, the development of science and art, the extension of international peace, and the simultaneous disarmament of the great powers, thus permitting the vast budgets to be utilized for their internal improvement instead of their devourment by war and armed peace." Commenting on the resolutions, a leading official said: "The action of the Socialists gives an impetus to the rapprochement, but owing to the lingering animosities of the Franco-German war it will take another decade before any Government will be strong enough to carry out a Franco-German entente."

BABES BORN IN WOODS GET SADLY MIXED.

The identity of two babies, who were born in the forest near Cabezon, a small town in Santander province, has to be settled by a council of the families of both. While the mothers were taking a walk in the forest the children were born, both being boys. A number of women from a neighboring village who arrived on the scene took mothers and babies home on stretchers. Unfortunately the excited women handed the infants from one to the other, and in the confusion that followed it became impossible to distinguish one child from the other. By way of temporary arrangements each of the two mothers accepted a baby without troubling herself as to whether it was her baby or not. The families of the two women have decided to hold a joint meeting, at which efforts will be made to identify the babies by some distinguishing family characteristic.

WOULD HAVE BEEN A PEER.

In referring to the death of Sir William Vernon Harcourt, the St. James Gazette says: "It is understood that the late Sir William Vernon Harcourt, who twice refused a peerage, eventually accepted the honor, and would have been gazetted Baron Malwool in the next birthday honor list." "Fate," the paper adds, "has rendered the event impossible, but it is deemed probable that a baroncy following the procedure on the death of W. H. Smith (who was minister of war in Lord Salisbury's cabinet of 1885 and 1886) will nevertheless be conferred on Lady Harcourt."

BRITISH INCOME TAX SHOWS FALLING OFF.

The return of the total revenue for the United Kingdom for the half year ending Sept. 30 shows a decrease of $15,233,525, compared with the corresponding period of 1903. The principal decrease is in the property and income tax—$12,100,000. The principal increase was in the customs receipts—$4,357,685. The total revenue was $306,851,640. This is the first time in many years that the income tax has fallen off, and is regarded as an alarming sign.

KING EDWARD MOURNS SIR WILLIAM HARCOURT.

After hearing of the sudden demise of Sir William Vernon Harcourt, King Edward telegraphed the following from Balmoral to the widow of the late statesman: "Allow me to express my deepest sympathy in the sad loss you have sustained. I have lost an old and valued friend in your dear husband.

(Signed) EDWARD."

Premier Seddon, speaking at a banquet in London to celebrate his silver jubilee as an M. P., urged the establishment of a British commercial bureau with branches in all the British possessions to be maintained by Great Britain and the self-governing colonies. The president of the board should be affiliated with all colonial chambers of commerce with the special object of watching and reporting on trade requirements for manufactured goods and raw material and the products of the empire. It would assist the extension of British and colonial markets in keeping with other countries.

The president of the Associated Chamber of the Manufacturers of Australia at the banquet held at Sydney, read a cablegram from Hon. Joseph Chamberlain which stated that Chamberlain was unable to accept an invitation to visit Australia now, but hoped before long to bring evidence to Australia of the readiness of the mother country to meet her half way towards closer commercial union.

A letter in the Financial News regarding the coal bill for the past half year incurred by the Grand Trunk says, with an increase of five and a half per cent. in train mileage one could not expect to find an increase of 32 per cent. in the quantity of coal consumed. It looks as if there was lax supervision somewhere.

REV. JOHN ROBSON - - PASTOR

An ambulance class has been started in Coal Creek, which will supply a long-felt want. In fact it is something that ought to be in every mining camp, above all places, for men may meet with accidents and die before reaching the doctor, whose lives may be saved by the first aid an ambulance man can render. For instance some time ago, a man at these mines had his foot cut off; had it not been for his own coolness in taking an article of his own clothing and bandaging his foot and thus stopping some of the bleeding, he would have bled to death before the arrival of the doctor. Ambulance men in such cases have saved many lives. The class promises to be a successful one, for already a good many have signified their intention of joining. Dr. Keith has been approached and has promised to give lectures on ambulance work. The president, Mr. Airy and the treasurer Mr. Milburn have gone through a three years course in England and are both bronze medalists, while the vice president, Mr. Finlayson and the secretary Mr. Featherstone have both got certificates, and there are many others in the camp who have attended a course of lectures in England so that there should soon be an efficient corps. The class will meet in the church.

The last B. C. Gazette contains an application from Cranbrook for the incorporation of that place as a city. The names of G. T. Rogers, W. F. Gurd and J. A. Harvey are signed to the notice. Cranbrook, like Fernie, has outgrown its swaddling clothes, and is now quite capable of looking after itself. May it continue to grow and expand as a city at the same rate that it has grown as a town.

WALKER'S COMEDIANS

This talented company played "My Friend from India" to a large and appreciative audience in the Stork Opera House on Tuesday evening. The company is well balanced throughout. Mr. Earle Stirling as the impromptu theosophist from India plays his important and difficult part very cleverly and he is well supported by the other members of the Company. The play is a very funny farce comedy, which interests and amuses from start to finish. The mirror scene is one of the cleverest things ever seen on a Fernie stage. Play-goers in Fernie will be glad to learn that this company is returning in a few weeks to put on another comedy entitled "Brown's in Town."

TIN-HORNS DECAMPING.

The territory formerly covered by Constable Beaudwin is now looked after by Constable Sampson, the latter having the three towns under his charge. Chief McMullin has given Constable Sampson orders to clear out the tin-horns at the Junction town, and the latter has gone about it in a manner which leaves no doubt as to his efficiency in such work. A dozen or more undesirable characters have taken their departure for more congenial parts, and the town is well-rid of its parasitical population.

IN THE TOILS AT LAST.

Fraudulent Flathead Prospector who Caused a lot of trouble has troubles of his own.

"Andy" Hackett, the notorious staker of coal and petroleum claims in the Flathead district, East Kootenay, is at last in the toils of the law. He was taken into custody at Seattle last Monday on the charge of obtaining money under false pretenses and is now in Spokane where he was taken by a deputy sheriff. His case will come up for trial in the next few days.

Two years ago Hackett, who styles himself a prospector, happened to be in East Kootenay when J. Fred Ritchie and Ross Thompson of this city were on their way into the Flathead country for the first time with the intentions of making some coal and petroleum locations. Hackett accompanied the party and was present when Messrs Ritchie and Thompson staked their rich discoveries at the Lodge Pole Creek. Shortly afterwards Hackett turned up in Spokane and endeavored to work up an excitement over the natural resources of the Flathead region. His efforts were so successful that he induced scores of Spokane people to pay him from $150 to $500 each to locate claims in the district. Hackett then returned to East Kootenay and procceeded with his promiscuous staking following it up with advertisements in the Fort Steele Prospector and the British Columbia Gazette.

It was largely due to Hackett's operations that such a strong sentiment was created in this country against the wholesale staking of lands in the Flathead by citizens of the United States His methods of making locations are largely responsible for the almost hopeless tangle that followed the issuance of licenses of the provincial government.

The prosecution of Hackett will be watched with considerable interest by those who are interested in the Flathead oil fields and if he is convicted there will be no overwhelming grief among Flathead prospectors who have endeavored to comply with all the requirements of the law.—Rossland Miner.

AN INTERESTING SUBJECT

Professor Cooper, the blind Phrenologist gave a very interesting lecture on Phrenology in the Stork Opera House on Wednesday evening. The Professor is evidently near the top of the ladder in his profession and his lectures are calculated to do a lot of good in urging parents to train their children properly and to fit them for the sphere in life that they are best adapted for.

The public reading was much appreciated by the audience. Professor Cooper will lecture again this evening in the same place. A collection will be taken to defray expenses. The Professor may be found in room 6 The King Edward Hotel at any time for a private reading.

Why it pays.

Strength in the hidden parts is the keynote of a good shoe.

Without it the shoe can not be comfortable—cannot wear well.

Weak spots cause uneveness under the foot—pain.

When one weak spot wears out, the shoe is done. One piece of poor material—workmanship—spoils the whole shoe.

Uneveness from any cause—weakness, threads, tacks or lumps under the foot—is painful, and the wearer unconciously wears out other parts of the shoe more quickly by exerting extra pressure upon them in the effort to relieve the tender places.

So a shoe to give greatest wear must be comfortable,—Goodyear welted—strong in the hidden parts.

Its economical to wear that kind of a shoe.

The "Slater Shoe" is Goodyear Welted.

It is made by specialists who work on nothing but one kind of men's shoes.

Everybody knows that a workman who does one particular thing all the time does that thing well and quickly.

Every operation in the making of a "Slater Shoe" is performed by men who do nothing but that identical thing.

The "Slater Shoe," a speciality, is therefore better and made with less cost than common shoes made in a factory where all kinds of shoes are made.

The saving in cost is put into quality of material and workmanship.

The materials used in Slater Shoes—the hidden parts as well as those seen—must be the best obtainable, because the makers stamp their name on the soles and guarantee the workmanship and quality and they could not afford to do so if the shoes were not faultless.

Because of these reasons it is economical to wear "Slater Shoes."

G. N. R. TRACK LAYING

STARTED THIS WEEK AT THE MORRISSEY END.

Work on the G. N. Southern Branch progressing Rapidly. Grading Practically Finished. Hydraulic Force for Gumbo Cut.

The laying of the track for the G. N. construction commenced at Morrissey on Monday of this week. Last week some preliminary track laying such as spurs were put in but the actual track laying did not commence until this week. The steel is going down rapidly, about 50 men being employed on the work. A small bridge two and a half miles from Morrissey will delay the track a day or two as the piles are not yet driven. No further obstacle will be met until the Elk River crossing is reached.

The big gumbo cut in Mr. Foss' section has been abandoned for the present and the track will be built over it at a rise of 2 per cent. This cut has given a lot of trouble, as it filled in almost as fast as the wet earth could be removed. Hydraulic force will now be used. An eight foot trench is being constructed from the river and underneath the temporary track to the cut. This trench will be well timbered and will be built for permanent draining purposes. A giant hydraulic engine will be brought to the scene and the big cut will be washed into the river. It is said that it can be removed in a week or ten days by this method.

The pile-driver is busy on the trestle work on the bridge approach, about two spans a day being driven. A short delay will be experienced here by the track layers. The grading in the yard is going along rapidly and next week will see it completed. The grading west of the river will be completed this week.

This piece of railroad when completed will be one of the finest in Canada. The curves are very slight, the greatest being less than 6 degrees in 100 feet. The grade is very slight and uniform. The greatest grade will not exceed seven tenths of one per cent. Mr. Ennerson stated this week that trains would be running in about another month.

STONEYS ALLOWED TO GO.

Were Ignorant of the Law. Their Hides Confiscated by Government.

The five Stoney Indians brought in last Friday for hunting in the Upper Elk Valley were sent home on Monday. Some difficulty was experienced in getting an interpreter. Finally Mr. R. T. Galbraith, of Fort Steele, Indian agent, was summoned. In the police court on Monday before Stipendiary Magistrate Forbes the five Indian braves told their story in turn. They were six strong with their squaws and children on their way to visit their friends, the Kootenays. While passing through the country they they did not refrain from shooting the game as they did not know that it was contrary to the laws of the country. They each told the same story. Each one related the exact number of animals he had shot. One killed two bear, a goat three deer, etc, only one admitted having killed an elk. As there were four elk hides among the stock captured it was supposed the Indian left behind in charge of the squaws and children was the principal offender. The Indians promised to in the future obey the law and to tell their friends what they must do. The hides were ordered by the magistrate to be confiscated, and instructions were sent to the government agent at Gleichan, the home of the Stoneys, warning him against infringements of the act.

Constable Walker left with the five braves to bring back the hides.

MORE ROOM SECURED

Bush foreman Waters of The Elk Lumber and Manufacturing Co. started a bush gang of 60 men at work on Monday. The mill foreman, R. L. Firestone, is busily engaged preparing the site for the new mill of the Company. Two more acres have been purchased by the Company at a cost of $1250 to give them ample room

THE POLICE COURT.

Harry Baker who pleaded guilty to the charge of carrying concealed weapons was fined $20 and costs, or one month at hard labor.

The case of Fowler vs Chardon for assault was finished last Saturday. Sufficient cause was shown to justify the assault and the case was dismissed.

Several pay-day drunks were disposed of on Monday. Donald McFarlane got $5 and costs. Wm. Wright got a similar sentence and Isaac Simpkins and Harry Ryan each contributed $10 to the city treasury.

A man by the name of McNeill pleaded guilty to the charge of stealing a gun from J. Carrick and was given a month at hard labor. Constable Sampson made a very creditable capture in this case. He followed his man to Hosmer where he found that the gun had been sold to a man named Green. McNeill had started out on foot through the timber an hour in advance of Mr. Sampson, who following the faint marks soon caught up with him.

OMITTED FROM THE LIST.

W. H. Whimster, collector of votes, has received a copy of the voters list with the latest revision, to be used in the election on Nov. 22nd. Mr. Whimster notes that one revision list has not been added. This was the one made on Nov. 6th. 1903. There were 16 names on it. This list reached the authorities at Ottawa safely as the collector of votes has a letter from Ottawa dated Nov. 11th 1903, in which its receipt is acknowledged. Mr. Whimster has written asking that a supplementary list be printed of these 16 names, which by some mistake on the part of the government have been omitted from the regular list.

WHEELER-WILSON

On Oct. 12th a quiet but pretty wedding was solemnized at the home of Mrs. Devitt, Yellow Grass, Assa. when Mr. James W. Wheeler of McTaggart, Assa., and Miss Alice Wilson, af Fernie, formerly of Dublin, Ireland, were united for life. Miss Sarah Devitt was the bridesmaid, and Mr. George Davis of McTaggart supported the groom. Rev. J, J. Squire of Yellow Grass officiated. The bride was dressed in a pretty travelling suit of green broadcloth, and the bridesmaid wore a dress of cream basket cloth. After supper the happy couple left for Eastern points where the honeymoon will be spent; upon their return they will reside at McTaggart. The bride is a sister of Mrs. J D. Quail of this city where she has lived for some time. We join her many friends in extending best wishes for a happy and prosperous life.

HAROLD NELSON COMING.

Mr. Harold Nelson whose very worthy performance last season of 'Quo Vadis" are still recalled with pleasure by our theatre patrons return to us on Monday with a stronger Company than ever before. "Heart and Sword" the attraction for Monday evening is a picturesque romantic comedy written by Mr. Walter Whiteside. Mr. Nelson has in "Prince Victor" a role peculiarly suited to his temperament, and his versality.

Mr. C. P. Walker has furnished his star with a very beautiful production of this charming romantic play, the scenery being specially painted by a New York Artist from the original designs. The period and locale of the play afford opportunities for elaborate costuming, and these have been taken full advantage of without regard to expense. The lighting effects will be found particularly good, being in charge of an experienced electrician.

On Tuesday evening Mr. Nelson and his Company will put on a thoroughly metropolitan production of "Faust", Goethe's immortal drama.

LECTURE AND CONCERT

The choir of Knox Church have arranged for a very pleasant evening's entertainment at the church on Thursday next, Oct. 27th commencing at 8.15 p.m. Rev. A. Dunn, B. A., B. D. will give a very interesting and instructive lecture on his travels through Palestine. Mr. Dunn has gained a very accurate knowledge of the Holy Land from close personal observation and his narrative and descriptive powers are such that can surround every detail with interest. Selections of music will be rendered by the choir and the male quartette. Admission 35cents.

Marriage licenses were issued to the following parties this week at the Fernie registry office. On Oct. 14th F. Fray, engineer, Carbonado, to Miss Mary Carus of the same place. On Oct 17th Harvey E. Martin, motorman, Fernie, to Miss Dorothy D. Quigg of Fernie. On Oct. 17th, John Ruis, miner of Coal Creek to Miss Jossie Jajnon of Frank, Alta.

All the members of the city council were present at the weekly meeting on Tuesday evening except Ald, Liphardt.

A communication from G. G. S. Lindsey, general manager of the Coal Co. was read. The letter called attention to the apparent oversight on the part of the council in rendering a bill to the Electric Light and Power Company for the fee under the Trades Licenses Act, as according to the agreement this Company was granted all privileges enabling it to do business of this kind without cost. On motion by Ald. Cree and Trites this letter was laid over until the next meeting.

The P. Burns Co. asked permission to erect a wooden out building at the rear of their lot. The request was refused.

The Crows Nest Trading Co. wrote asking permission to move their store buildings to Victoria Ave. This also was refused.

The motion of the 10th inst., granting A. J. Purdy provisional permission to move his building to lot 4 block 6 was repealed on motion of Ald. Cree and Trites.

A dispute arose as to parliamentary procedure and the city clerk was instructed to purchase a work on this subject by a recognized authority.

The finance committee passed the following accouuts.

Ald. Cree gave notice that at the next meeting of the council he would move an amendment to certain clauses of the fire-limit by-law.

The meeting adjourned until Friday, Oct. 28th.

MR. PLASTER OF PARIS.

Among the few standard attractions sitting Fernie "Mr. Plaster of Paris" headed by the well known and popular actor Mr. Ernest Willis will be at Stork's Opera House on Friday Oct. 28th. Everything has been done to make this an event worthy of the lovers of dramatic art. Nothing more is promised than 2½ hours of solid fun but such as will be remembered and looked back upon by those who are fortunate enough to attend the performance, Mr. Plaster of Paris is one of the latest and most successful farce comedies and is interspersed by a host of clever and refined specialties, absolutely free from any suggestion of coarseness.

It contains a clever plot, humorous situations and witty dialogues. You will be disappointed if you miss it. Plan of seats at Bleasdell's Drug Store.

TO-DAY'S DESPATCHES

Washington—It was decided to-day to keep U. S. Marines on the Isthmus of Panama for the present prepared to meet any emergency which may arise as the result of the discontented element in the New Republic.

Chicago—A despatch to the daily news at Cho Foo says number of Japanese killed before Port Arthur has reached 5000.

Tokio—Despatches from the front state that there has not been any fighting of consequence for the last two days. The Russian artillery occasionally shells the Japanese positions.

Mukden—The big battle has practically worn itself out leaving the two armies facing each other with the Sakhi River as the dividing line. There is considerable artillery fighting.

Toronto,—The Telegram states tonight that it will not be surprising if Mr. Stratton's resignation as member of the Ross Government is received within a few days and that general elections will be held in December.

Berlin.—The Tageblatt's correspondent at Kiel states that the Russian Baltic fleet is expected to make the journey in 85 days.

TRACKMEN'S DAY TO-MORROW

The trackmen from Kootenay Landing to Dunmore Jct. will be in the city tomorrow on their annual excursion.

A procession will march with the band at its head. At 3 p. m. a football match between Fernie and Coal Creek will be played on the recreation grounds, where the band will also be present. A. R. Low, first vice pres. of the I. B. of M. of W. E. will be present and he will be banquetted in the evening at the Napanee.

SCHOOL INSPECTOR AT FERNIE

Mr. D. Wilson, public school inspector is in the city on an official visit. He visited the city school yesterday and this morning he went to Coal Creek. To morrow he goes to Morrissey, the Junction town, where he will investigate the need for a school to be established there. Many requests have been made to the Department for this accommodation.

Mr. Wilson in speaking of the change of control which had come over the city school by incorporation stated that the city was now in a position to materially increase the attendance by the enforcement of the school act. In a short time two new rooms would be ready for occupancy which would give ample accomodation for some time to come. Naturally the city would be anxious to secure a high average percentage of attendance in order to swell the government grant which is based on the average attendance. Mr. Wilson hopes to see a marked improvement in the regularity of attendance at the Fernie school.

OFFICIALS AT FERNIE

A party of high officials of the engineering staff of the Great Northern are in the city this morning to inspect the new branch line. These men have all been here before, but never at one time. They consist of A. H. Hogeland, chief engineer of the system, L. E. Shields and Mr. Simms, under whose superintendence the contract was let, and A. M. Lupfer, engineer for the Western division. The party were driven over a considerable portion of the road by Owen Ross this morning.

INJURED IN THE MINES.

On Tuesday of this week an accident occured in the Coal Creek mines by which a miner named Alexander Page received serious injuries to his leg. The injuries were caused by a fall of rock which crushed the leg and broke both the bones. The injured man was removed to the Fernie hospital for treatment.

A LEVEL CROSSING

The Work on M. F. and M. branch commenced Yesterday.

On Wednesday night General Manager Lindsey wired from Winnipeg authorizing the building of Morrissey, Fernie and Michel branch connecting the Great Northern railway with the C. P. R. The next morning Mr. Ennerson put on a gang of men on the grading of this place It is an easy stretch and no difficulty will be experienced in having it ready for the steel when it gets to the branch.

The telegram also conveys the news that an agreement had been reached by which a grade diamond crossing would be used where the two lines cross. This point had been in dispute for some time causing the suspension of the work on the branch. The survey line formerly outlined in this paper will be followed. The row of houses will be moved at once to allow the line to run into the yards on the east side of the C. P. R.

BURGLARS AT COAL CREEK.

Burglars at Coal Creek last Sunday morning broke into two houses but in each case they were frightened away before they secured much booty. James Dick's house was entered by means of the kitchen window, the upper pane of glass being removed to get at the window fastening. The inmates of the house heard a noise and loosed the dog which scared away two men. They got $6 from the sideboard in the kitchen. Mr. Shield's boarding house was also entered but Mr. Barr, a boarder, heard a racket down stairs and went to investigate. He was struck on the forehead with a rock and the burglars made their escape.

To the Editor.

Dear Sir:—

We note in last week's issue of your paper that the Trites-Wood Co. have organized an athletic Association.

We hereby challenge them to a game of baseball or lacrosse, or in fact any old game except ping pong; the same to be played on Saturday afternoon 22nd inst.

Signed on behalf of the Sheppard & Elliott aggregation.

G. Bruce Brown,

ANCESTRAL LIMITATIONS

By T. Blair Eaton

Copyright, 1904, by K. M. Whitehead

Francis Norton looked at the pouting girl opposite him and smiled pleasantly. This was characteristic of Norton. When anything particularly displeased him, or when there was something unpleasant to be said, he invariably prefixed his utterances with this same misleading smile.

"Dolly," he said with much conviction, "you must admit that I have followed your whims with a fidelity deserving higher rewards than I have ever received. When you took up golf—and you took it up with undue seriousness, it seemed to me—kindly remember the patient afternoons I spent with you on the links. When you went in for slum work, you probably recall the rounds of calls I made with you on the McGinnisses and the Lamperonis and the Barofskis and the number of dirty children I held uncomplainingly on my knees and fed with candy. At the time your mind was bent on collecting old china you certainly haven't forgotten the trip to Maine I made in the dead of winter to get a 'state's pitcher.' And so on through the list—and it's a long list, Dolly. Don't you misunderstand me. I was glad to do anything, so long as it was in your service. But the point is just here—whenever I speak to you of marriage all these things seem to count for nothing in my favor. There is some new fad to be followed out, and when that is done another is brought to light. It seems to be an endless task, and that is why I am protesting against your present devotion to genealogy."

"MY GREAT-GREAT-GREAT-GRANDFATHER WAS A THIEF."

Dolly bit her lip and looked at Norton angrily.

"Genealogy is not a fad with me, permit me to explain," she said coldly. "I have taken it up as a serious work. Mr. McGregor of the Genealogical society says I have the true genealogical instinct requisite for such endeavor."

Norton sighed.

"There have been so many things taken up by you as 'serious works,' Dolly," he began suggestively.

She interrupted him with an imperious little gesture.

"And all this because I suggested a man should take some interest in his ancestors," she remarked.

"I do take an interest in my ancestors," said Norton, "so much interest, indeed, that I am willing to let their memories rest in peace; infinitely better it seems to me, than prying into their affairs."

Dolly sniffed scornfully.

"Your lack of family pride is positively shocking," she asserted.

Norton's face became quite grave.

"Dolly," he said slowly, "if it would hasten your answer to my eternal question I'd hunt my ancestry back to Adam."

Dolly's face brightened.

"I'll make a compact with you," she said. "If you'll hunt it up for ten generations back, I'll—I'll marry you, Frank."

"Dolly! Do you mean it?"

She nodded emphatically.

"I'll do it," he said with determination, "not because I want ancestors, but because I want you, Dolly."

For two weeks after the interview Dolly saw little of him. Then, one blustering February evening, he came, with a strange, preoccupied look and a meek humility of bearing that contrasted strangely with his usual brisk, determined air.

"It's all over, Dolly," he said, dropping into a chair near the fire.

"What's all over?" said Dolly.

"Everything," he announced ambiguously.

"I thought you'd find it difficult," she said knowingly.

He paid no attention, but stared at the crackling fire.

"It is discouraging at first," she persisted, "there are so many of them."

"So many of what?" he said, looking up.

"Ancestors," said she.

He grunted something unintelligible.

"Still, with time and patience you can trace them," she went on.

"I've found them too readily," he said gloomily. "I wish they all were untraceable."

"I'm afraid I don't understand," she said, eying him curiously.

"I wish I didn't either," he groaned.

"Perhaps you'll explain, anyway," she said.

"Dolly," he said, with much tragedy in his voice, "this is probably the last time I shall ever see you."

Dolly looked a trifle frightened.

"My veins are fairly bursting with criminal blood."

"What!" said Dolly, thoroughly alarmed.

"My ancestors, you know," he said.

"Goodness!" she exclaimed, with more or less relief.

"I'll tell you all about it," he said, "but first you'd better lock up the silver. My great-great-great-grandfather was a thief."

He paused.

"Well, go on," she said impatiently.

"And I know now why I detest the confinement of the office so," he said. "One of my—I don't know how many 'greats' there should be—grandfathers did ten years for arson."

"Oh!" said Dolly, beginning to understand.

"That isn't the worst of it," said he.

"No?" asked Dolly anxiously.

"I also know why it is my collar often feels tight," Norton rattled on.

"Why?" said she.

"One of my ancestors wore a rope collar."

"Well, that certainly isn't a crime," said she.

"Dolly," he said severely, "try to understand. He was hanged. He was a pirate. They strung him up to the yardarm."

"Gracious!" gasped Dolly.

"So I came to say goodby," he said wearily. "Of course in light of these discoveries I can't ask you to marry me."

"You idiot," said Dolly, "I'm not marrying your ancestors."

He came over to her chair, and, catching her face in his hands, he looked at her until she grew crimson to her little ears.

"You display a shocking lack of family pride," he said severely.

Dolly chuckled softly.

"All the same," she said, "I don't think I care as much for genealogy as I did."

A Quotation Well Used.

Few have ever forgotten the cyclone of cheers that burst over the Republican convention of 1880 as Conkling, tall, majestic, imperious in his bearing, strode upon the platform and faced that great audience of 20,000 souls. Conkling was there determined to secure the nomination of Ulysses S. Grant as president for a third term. It was fifteen minutes before he could be heard. The mighty thunder of those 20,000 throats, from friend and foe, rolled and crashed and rumbled on. At length Conkling, swinging his arms above him, brought them down, down, down, by graceful moves as if to soothe the tempest. He did this a dozen times. There was silence at last. In a voice broken by four days of battle in committee rooms and on the floor of the convention, yet sonorous in its very hoarseness, he began his speech by declaiming:

And when asked what state he hails from our sole reply shall be,
He hails from Appomattox and its famous apple tree.

No scene in any national convention of either party since has rivaled that which greeted Conkling's use of Miles O'Reilly's famous lines. It was half an hour before he could proceed, and through it all the multitude cheered and roared its interruptions.—Everybody's Magazine.

Wonders of Chess Combination.

To estimate the actual number of ways of playing even a very few moves in chess is beyond the power of calculation. At first both players have a choice of but twenty moves. The first player has an average of twenty-eight, thirty and thirty-three ways of playing the second, third and fourth moves respectively. On the hypothesis that the number of "replies" is always the same, no matter what the preceding move may have been, the number of ways of playing the first four moves on one side only would be 318,979,504,000. Let us assume for convenience of calculation that for the next six moves on each side after the first four there is a choice of thirty ways of playing. We thus get by combination with the result quoted above figures which prove that the number of ways of playing the first ten moves on each side is 169,518,829,100,544,000,000,000,000,000.

The above figures are quoted from an article on "The Inexhaustibility of Chess" by Edward Anthony, a noted British mathematician.

Strange Antipathies.

"One of my patients," said a physician, "faints at the smell of a rose. In studying her case I found that a number of persons of a certain nervous temperament have always fainted before odors that to the normal mind are pleasant. Cardinal Cardona fainted if he drew near heliotrope. Boyle fainted at the smell of honey. Others have fainted at the smell of thyme, of fish and of violets.

"A second patient of mine develops a rash whenever she eats crab meat. That is a strange case, but in the records there are stranger cases—a boy, for instance, whose lips grew sore and swollen if he ate an egg; an old man who would bleed at the nose if he ate an apple.

"But the most peculiar personal antipathy I know of is the case of a widow. She is healthy and of a calm, placid mind, yet the sound of a funeral bell invariably throws her into a deep and dangerous swoon."—New York Telegram.

FAMOUS TATTERSALL'S.

World's Great Horse Mart Known to Turfmen in All Parts—Highest Bids for Equine Stars.

It seems a little strange that there are thousands of people the whole world over to whom "Tattersall's" is as a household word, and yet who probably could not give you the name of the present Prime Minister or the Archbishop of Canterbury, says a writer in Tit Bits. And so it has been for a long time more than a century, and seems likely to continue for centuries to come.

What interesting stories the generations of Tattersall's could have handed down to us if they had cared to, for they have had intimate relations with many of the greatest men of the last five generations. It was at Tattersall's that Lords Palmerston and Derby met one May day in 1859. The Derby Ministry had just received its death-blow in the Commons, and both statesmen had horses in the coming Derby.

"Well, Palmerston," said the Earl, "you don't expect to win the Derby, I hope? Two wins in one week would be too much." "I don't know," answered Palmerston. "Mainstone's a good horse." Palmerston became Prime Minister a few weeks later, but his horse did not win the Derby—neither did his rival's.

It was at Tattersall's that Lord Hastings paid his Derby losses in 1866, amounting to £103,000. "Hermit fairly broke my heart," he said, "but I did not show it, did I?" But it would fill a column merely to mention by name the men who have become historic for one reason or another whose faces have been familiar at Tattersall's. They range from George IV. to King Edward, from Lord Eglinton of tournament fame to Lord Rosebery and from Lord George Bentinck and the Earl of Glasgow to the Duke of Portland of to-day.

The original Tattersall was training groom to the last Duke of Kingston, and when his patron died he opened the auction mart, which was to become so famous, on the site on which St. George's Hospital now stands.

Richard, it is said, laid the foundation of his fortune when he bought Highflyer for the then enormous sum of £2,500, but he seems to have been a singularly shrewd man, and there is little doubt that he would have got on quite well even without Highflyer.

He quickly established a great reputation as a judge of a horse and as a man of strict probity and his mart was patronized by all the principal horse owners and soon became quite a fashionable resort—"a place where men of position and honor might congregate without breathing the pestilential vapor that too often surrounds the stables."

The original mart was approached through an arched passage, at the foot of which was a tap-room. The Turf, patronized by jockeys, grooms and horse dealers, and it comprised the subscription-room, where bets were recorded and settled, a "garden-like enclosure which formed a kind of open-air club for patrons of rank," a courtyard with rostrum where the auction sales were held, and a large number of stables for the horses. In the centre of the enclosure was a pump shrined under a pillared dome, which was crowned by a bust of George IV., Richard Tattersall's good friend and patron.

When the lease expired in 1865 the mart was moved to its present quarters in Knightsbridge, near to Albert Gate, where the king-crowned dome still holds its own in the new courtyard. It is interesting to note that the triangular piece of ground in front of Tattersall's was once part of a village green with a Maypole, as well as a watch-house and a pound, which survived until seventy years ago.

Auctions are held on Mondays throughout the year and on Thursdays during the height of the season. And what exciting scenes and what phenomenal bidding have been seen at Tattersall's.

In September, 1861, Sir Tatton Sykes had bidden 3,000 guineas for Fandango, and in his anxiety he immediately sprang another hundred. When he was reminded by the auctioneer that he had made the previous bid as well, he said, "Knock him down, Mr. Tattersall, knock him down. We want to go to the races." But 3,100 guineas is a very small figure compared with many in Tattersall's books. Blair Athol fetched 12,500 guineas and Meddler 2,000 guineas more; Isonomy was knocked down for 9,000 guineas and Baron Hirsch paid 5,500 guineas for La Fleche as a filly. But more wonderful than all these figures was the £30,000 which Tattersall's paid for Ormonde.

William Watson, the Poet.

Mr. Wm. Watson, The London Chronicle says, is of Yorkshire origin, but spent his youth in Liverpool. He is one of the few contemporary poets whose work is certain to live. At its best Mr. Watson's work is fit to bear comparison with that of some of our greatest poets. All of it is marked by felicity of expression, stateliness, and a high, austere note. Mr. Watson has written nothing better than his fine Coronation Ode, which is all too little known. It has pomp; it is fired with an elevated patriotism; thought and metre are happily wedded, and through its sonorous lines we seem to catch the majestic roll of English history. His latest volume, "Poems Written in Estrangement," had its origin in the Boer war. These poems, written to reproach England—for Mr. Watson was utterly out of sympathy with the war—are English to their innermost fibre.

Stunted Lambs.

Lambs should be given every opportunity to do their best before they are a year old. There are more lambs stunted through improper care at weaning than perhaps through any other cause. It is important that they get succulent and generous fare at this time, and we know of nothing that better fills this bill than rape.

One of Sheridan's Dodges.

It is related of Richard Brinsley Sheridan, the dramatist and statesman, that, always in debt, he had among his creditors the brothers Chalie, who were the partners in a wine firm in 1775. One day when he was giving a dinner party to some distinguished people Sheridan sent for one of the brothers, told him he was now able to settle his account and invited him to the dinner party, asking him to come before the hour for some private conversation. Chalie arrived early, and he was no sooner in the house than Sheridan sent off a servant with a note to the clerk desiring him, as Mr. Chalie was favoring him with his company, to send as soon as possible three dozen of burgundy, two dozen of claret and two dozen of port, with a dozen of old hock. The unsuspecting clerk sent the wine, with which the guests were so pleased that they asked where it came from. Sheridan, turning toward Chalie, said, "I am indebted to my friend here for all the wine you have tasted and am always proud to recommend him." It was not until the following morning that Chalie realized the double meaning in Sheridan's words. The debt was canceled.

The Lonely Library.

At the English universities the libraries are so little used that they have become famous as places of unbroken solitude. One yarn told to illustrate this is to the effect that an elderly fellow of Caius college, Cambridge, got tired of life and determined to put himself quietly and unostentatiously out of the way, so that the world in general and Caius college in particular should know him no more. Being a man with a great love for his university and a greater love still for his college, he made up his mind that no scandal should be caused by his sudden departure, so he debated in his mind the ways and means. His decision was an inspiration. He bought a decent length of rope and hanged himself in the college library. But his hopes were doomed to disappointment. He was discovered a year and a half later.

When a man fools his wife and is ashamed of it, it is not so serious, but when he thinks he has a right to fool her, that is serious.

A THOUGHTFUL PRIEST

Points Out to Mothers the Way to Keep Their Children Well and Happy.

Rev. J. L. Francoeur, Casselman, Ont., is a kind-hearted priest who has done much to alleviate suffering among the little ones in the homes of his parishioners. Writing under a recent date he says: "I must say that Dr. Williams' Baby's Own Tablets are deserving of the high praise they have had as a cure for the ailments of children. For the past eight months I have been introducing them in many families, and always, the mothers tell me, with perfect results. Their action is always effective, without any sickly reaction, and they are especially valuable in allaying pains in the head, fever in teething, nervousness, sleeplessness, spasms, cramps in the stomach and bowels, colic and other troubles. Their regulating action gives almost instant relief and gives speedy cure. This is the comforting experience that has come to my knowledge out of their judicious use. I am glad to give you my sincere testimony, and I will recommend the Tablets to all mothers and nurses of sick children as I have done heretofore."

These Tablets are sold by all medicine dealers, or mothers can obtain them by mail at 25 cents a box by writing to the Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

JAPAN BUYING OREGON FLOUR.

A despatch from Pendleton, Oregon, says: A local flour mill has received an order from Hong Kong for 80,000 sacks (2,000 tons) of flour, which is said to be for the Japanese government. Twenty thousand sacks of this will be sent this month by way of Portland and the balance from Tacoma and Seattle. The same mill has just completed a shipment of 60,000 sacks for Oriental ports.

Long Cooking.

Of fresh foods the elephant's foot needs cooking the longest time, as it does not acquire its proper tenderness and succulence till it has been baked for about thirty-six hours. Next comes tripe, which requires from ten to fifteen hours of boiling before it becomes thoroughly digestible. Next come hams of good size, which require from six to seven hours. Of roast meats, a haunch of venison takes longer than any other joint—about three and a half hours. Of puddings, the Christmas pudding comes easily first, as it is boiled over and over again. Sometimes it is kept for months or years and undergoes several boilings. The average time is from six to eight hours. The vegetable which takes the longest time to cook is the onion.—London Mail.

Huxley on Darwin's Degree.

Huxley did not love degrees, but he had to have one. Anticipating the donning of the red gown he informed his friends that after the ceremony he would have to be treated as a person of respectability. "I have done my best to avoid that misfortune," said he, "but it's of no use." It was Oxford that paid him the compliment, as it had done to Darwin two years earlier. When Darwin was given the degree Huxley let him have no false idea as to the honor bestowed. "Canon Pusey," he declared, "has been making inquiry as to who are the blackest heretics on the list proposed. He was glad to assent in your case in order to keep out seven devils worse."

Near Side and Off Side.

When horses were first hitched to vehicles the driver never thought of riding himself, but walked by the side of the road as he held the lines. So as to have his right hand always ready he walked on the left side, and consequently the horse on the left side came to be known as the "near" horse, and the one on the right side was called the "off" horse. In that manner the terms "near horse" and "off horse" became general and still pertain to horses hitched as a team.

Reluctant to Give Up.

"Lend me $10, old man. I'm a little short."

"That won't help you any. You'll be just as short after getting the money."

Appearance a Protection.

"Appearances are deceitful" is an old saying, which was illustrated by an old lady in one of our banks a few days ago.

She drew out a sum very near the $1,000 mark. The banker kindly asked her if she did not wish an escort to her destination in order to insure protection for the large amount. Looking calmly at the banker, she replied, "Why, nobody would think I had more than $1.25!"

TRIED ALL ELSE TO NO BENEFIT

Then Dodd's Kidney Pills Cured His Diabetes.

Startling Case of Thos. Harrison, of St. Mary's Ferry—He Tells the Story Himself.

St. Mary's Ferry, York County, N. B., Oct. 17.—(Special).—That Dodd's Kidney Pills will cure Diabetes, one of the most deadly forms of Kidney Disease, has been satisfactorily proved by Mr. Thos. Harrison, of this place. Speaking of his cure Mr. Harrison says:

"I began to suffer with severe pains above the region of the kidneys. When I lay down it was torture to get up again. My appetite failed and I lost flesh rapidly.

"I doctored with several physicians but it was all no use. Shortly after this I began to urinate blood and then I knew I was in the grip of that dread monster, Diabetes.

"At this time a friend prevailed on me to try a box of Dodd's Kidney Pills and they did me so much good I continued the treatment till I had used three boxes. They cured me completely."

Joy Succeeds Despair

In the Home of Mr. Joseph Hilton, Thorold, Ont.

His Daughter, Florence, Was All But Dead from Dropsy—Her Doctor had Given Her Up—Dr. William's Pink Pills were then Used and To-day She is Well and Strong.

Everybody believes in a dreamy sort of way of the efficacy of a well and wisely advertised medicine, when the recorded cases of restored health are at a distance; but when a case comes up in the home town, when the patient is known to everyone, and when the cure is not only positive but marvellous, the efficacy of the medicine becomes a fact—a decided thing. For many years the Post has advertised Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People; large quantities of them have been sold by the local drug stores, and many remarkable cures have been effected. One of these attracted the attention of our reporter and he investigated. Miss Florence Hilton, the eighteen year old daughter of Joseph and Mrs. Hilton, living in the west part of the town, was taken ill early last summer with dropsy, coupled with heart trouble. She was compelled to give up one duty after another, and finally became unable to walk or to lie down. Her suffering was intense and medical skill did all that could be done. Florence, however, grew worse, sitting in her chair day and night for five long months to get her breath, and the parents despaired. At last the doctor gave her up and said further visits were futile. The poor girl's limbs were pitifully swollen and finally burst below the knees. She sat helpless and weak, gasping for breath and at times could breathe at all only with the greatest difficulty. One night the neighbors came in and said she could not live till morning. But to-day she is alive and well, moving about among her young companions a remarkable and miraculous contrast to what she then was. The reporter called one evening at the Hilton home, but Miss Florence was out visiting. The father and mother were in, however, and freely told him of the cure, which they attribute entirely to Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. The first box was brought to her by her grandmother, who urged their use. Then Mrs. Hilton herself remembered that she had the previous winter been cured by Dr. Williams' Pink Pills of a slight attack of dropsy, and also remembered the many cures advertised in the Post. She bought two boxes and Florence took them three pills at a dose. In two weeks she felt a slight decrease in the pain in her limbs, and more pills were procured. For five months—five long pain-laden months, the weary girl had sat day and night in her chair, but now she began to feel the pain leaving her and to see her limbs resume their natural size. Fourteen boxes of the pills were taken and at last her perseverance was rewarded. She rose from her chair; her former strength gradually came back; one by one her household duties were taken up again; and when the Post representative called he was met by beaming faces and thankful hearts and a grateful readiness to give to the world the facts that had saved a bright young life, and had brought joy instead of grief to a Thorold home."

In thousands of other homes scattered over the length and breadth of Canada, Dr. Williams' Pink Pills have brought health and joy and gladness and in every home in the land where sickness and suffering enters new health and strength can be had through a fair use of this medicine. Remember that substitutes can't cure—they make the patient worse, and when you ask for this medicine see that the full name "Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People" is printed on the wrapper around the box—then you are sure you have the genuine pills. Sold by all medicine dealers or by mail post paid at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 by writing The Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

CANADIAN NEWS.

The Latest Happenings In The Dominion.

OAK BLUFF FARMER'S SUIT.

On Oct. 10 at the court house in Winnipeg, before Judge Myers, a second attempt was made to try a jury case of Gosselin vs. Canadian Northern Railway Company. On the former occasion two jurymen were challenged and the case could not be heard. The plaintiff, a farmer living at Oak Bluff, brings his action claiming $200 damages for the burning of 20 tons of hay, which he had stacked on his farm last fall, through, as he maintains, the negligence of the defendants' servants. An engine, it is said, was stalled on a grade close to where the hay was stacked; the firebox was pulled out and its contents of cinders allowed to be blown about; they set fire to the weeds and grass on the right-of-way, and they crept over and demolished the hay. The defendants deny that there was any negligence on their part in connection with the fire. The jury brought in a verdict for the plaintiff for $160.

ARCTIC MAKES GOOD TRIP.

A telegram from A. P. Low, of the Hudson Bay expedition, has been received by the Marine Department at Ottawa, announcing that the steamer Arctic, with Major Moody's party on board, had reached Port Burwell on Oct. 1. That point, which is near the entrance to Hudson Strait, is the Arctic rendezvous with the steamer Neptune, which has been in Hudson Bay since 1903, and which passed Chateau Bay in the Strait of Belle Isle on Oct. 8, bound for Halifax, from which point Mr. Low's telegram was sent. As the Arctic made the passage to Hudson Strait in 13 days, it is regarded as certain that she will take the trip across the bay to Cape Fullerton, her winter quarters, before navigation closes, which is usually about Oct. 10. Mr. Low's telegram reported all well on board.

Major Archibald was banquetted in Toronto by the Canadian Club of that city on Monday evening in honor or of his appointment by the Dominion government to the position of commissioner of paroled and discharged prisoners. The major followed with an eloquent address, giving an outline of what is accomplished, in helping the unfortunate and the erring to good citizenship. He left on Thursday to attend the prison congress, which is in session at St. Louis, being sent by the Dominion Government to report on reformation measures.

DRIVER FALLS DEAD IN RACE.

With his pacer well in the lead at York, Pa., the other day, in the 2.14 pacing event at York County Fair races, Leman Redmond, the driver, fell from the sulky to the track dead. Noah B. kept on, and for another quarter retained the lead. Then he began to waver and was caught. The judges declared the horse distanced, although he had won two heats. Physicians who examined Redmond said his death was due to heart failure, and that before he fell from the sulky he was dead.

EARL GREY AND KAFFIRS.

After a very stormy meeting a few days in London, the shareholders of the British South Africa Company authorized the issue of $5,000,000 new capital. Previous to the close of the meeting, which broke up in confusion, the chairman, the Duke of Abercorn, was unable to secure a hearing and left the hall. The directors, with the exception of Earl Grey, were re-elected. The earl sent a letter resigning his position because of his appointment as governor general of Canada. He warned the shareholders that the greatest peril in South Africa was the drifting policy towards the natives. For a solution of the native question, he said, a conference should be held of the best and most humane scientists of Great Britain and America to advise on the policy which should be adopted with the object of civilizing the Kaffirs.

MRS. HANNA TO BUILD $100,000 MAUSOLEUM.

A despatch from Cleveland, Ohio, says that Mrs. Augusta Hanna, widow of the late Senator Hanna, has confirmed the report that a magnificent mausoleum will be erected in Lake View cemetery, in Cleveland, wherein the bodies of the senator and other members of the family will be interred. The mausoleum will cost $100,000 and will be completed in about a year. It will be constructed almost entirely of Troy white granite and in the style of a Greek temple. There will be eighteen niches for bodies. Two mammoth sarcophagi of pure Norwegian marble will be placed in the centre of the mausoleum. One will contain the remains of the late senator, while the other will be the final resting place of Mrs. Hanna.

DIME NOXELS LEAD TWO GIRLS TO SUICIDE.

Clasped in each others arms they drank the contents of an ounce bottle of strychnine. Death came before medical assistance could be summoned. The reading of trashy novels is said to have led to the suicides.

OFFICIAL REPORT ON THE U. S. CROPS.

The monthly report of the chief of the bureau of statistics of the United States Department of Agriculture will show the condition of corn on October 1 to have been 83.9 as compared with 84.6 one month ago, 80.8 on October 1, 1903, 79.6 at the corresponding date in 1902 and a ten-year average of 78.3. The average quality of spring wheat is 75.7, as compared with 85.5 in 1903, and 87.7 in 1902. The preliminary returns indicate an oat crop of about 888,500,000 bushels, or an average of 33.1 bushels per acre, as compared with 28.4 bushels as finally estimated in 1903, 34.5 bushels in 1902 and a ten year average of 28.2.

GREAT REJOICING AT ST. PETERSBURG.

A St. Petersburg cablegram says: The formal announcement that General Kuropatkin is at last strong enough to assume the offensive, together with unofficial reports that offensive movements against the three armies of Field-Marshal Oyama have been progressing since Oct. 4, has sent a thrill of joy throughout Russia. The announcement, which had been awaited patiently through the long, weary months of discouragement and defeat, had an instantaneous effect. The public bulletin boards at the street corners, upon which were posted copies of Kuropatkin's order of the day were surrounded by crowds, really cheerful for the first time since the war began. Monday night, at a Russian club, where Gen. Velitchko, the engineer who fortified Liao Yang, was delivering a lecture in defense of Kuropatkin's abandonment of that place, the order created a scene of enthusiasm, and a telegram was sent to Kuropatkin, expressing the deepest satisfaction and unshaken confidence in his leadership and praising his chivalrous act, saying: "Like the Russian warriors of old, you have warned the enemy that you are advancing against him." All the papers acclaim the tidings with intense satisfaction, at the same time warning the public not to harbor illusions, and saying they must be prepared for the heavy sacrifices involved in attacking so powerful and determined a foe.

AN ODD PHENOMENON.

Showers of Rain Can Come From a Cloudless Sky.

It appears that rain can fall from a cloudless sky. This is true of a thin drizzle which falls in France, known as "serein." As the atmosphere looks quite clear when it falls, the probability is all in favor of the moisture having been brought by the wind at a great elevation. In the island of Mauritius the phenomenon is by no means uncommon during the prevalence of southeast winds, slight showers falling in cloudless evenings when the stars are shining brightly. There the rain is thought to be due to invisible vapor in the upper reaches of the atmosphere, being condensed at once and falling in drops without passing through the intermediate stage of cloud. Ross said that in the south Atlantic it rained on one occasion for upward of an hour while the sky was altogether free from clouds. Says a Genoese naturalist, "The night was clear, the stars were shining with their accustomed brilliancy, when a shower of rain, consisting of large lukewarm drops, fell during six minutes upon the town." A similar view was once observed at Constantine, in Algeria, about noon, the sky being all the time a splendid blue. Some believe that these showers are the result of particles of ice formed in the higher regions melting and falling, while others attribute them to currents of warm and cold air traveling in opposite directions, with the result that the latter condenses some of the moisture in the former and causes it to fall.

Heroism In Animals.

Animals are capable of what we should call heroism in man. In one field was a donkey, in another a horse. Through the first went a mastiff and made for the ass, seized him by the throat, pulled him down, and that so suddenly that the donkey looked likely to be killed. The horse in the next field leaped the hedge dividing the two pastures, collared the dog with his teeth, swung him and like a baseball player caught him on the fall—with his heels. The mastiff was whisked over the hedge which the horse had just crossed, and the donkey was left in peace to recover from his worries.

Coronets.

English noblemen are the only ones in Europe who ever wear coronets on their heads, and the sole occasion when they do so is at the coronation of the sovereign. They hold them in their hands through the ceremony, and at the moment when the archbishop of Canterbury places the crown upon the monarch's head every peer and peeress present dons his or her coronet.

MARKET JOBBING PRICES from THE COMMERCIAL

Winnipeg, Thursday, Oct. 6, 1904.

WHEAT: An unsettled and less confident feeling has come across the wheat markets and prices have had a sharp decline in the last two days. On Friday, Saturday and Monday the markets displayed a good deal of strength of a nervous kind, sharp breaks in prices being quickly followed by sharp advances, but closing prices each day showing a slight gain over the previous day. On Tuesday, however, a weaker feeling prevailed and the price lost a little. This has been followed by a distinct loss of strength on Wednesday and to-day, and in the American speculative markets wheat holders have lost courage and let go their wheat, and bears have taken courage and put out short sales, and their action has caused a sharp break in the price amounting to 2½c. to 3c. for the two days. The difference in prices from a week ago, however, does not show a decline of more than 1⅜c. to 2⅜c. No special change in the general world's wheat situaion has taken place during the week, but it would seem as if the market needed a rest, and it has come in the shape of a dull spell and a natural reaction in prices. It is true that the movement of the spring wheat crop in Western Canada and America has shown considerable increase during the week, and that primary receipts in America are much larger than last year, but on comparing the receipts for this year for those of 1902 it will be found that this year's are smaller, while at the same time prices are 40c per bushel higher this year than two years ago, the larger price being no doubt responsible for the comparatively large movement. While the movement is liberal the exports of wheat and flour from America and Canada are only about one-third of what they were last year, and yet there is no appreciable increase in visible stocks. The visible supply on the 1st inst. is only 17,565,000 bus., compared to 19,489,000 bushels last year, 25,624,000 bushels in 1902, 37,474,000 bus. in 1901, and 55,401,000 bus. in 1900. It will therefore be prudent for those engaged in the trade not to allow themselves to be too much influenced by passing and temporary circumstances, but to study the general situation of aggregate world's crops for the year, the amount of recognized stocks available, and the demand for consumption together with the opportunity afforded for extensive speculative operations, having in view the possibility of much higher prices later on. There is nothing new regarding crops this week. Thrashing is progressing in the Canadian Northwest as fast as the variable and unsettled weather will permit. The season continues backward and work is behind hand, and it is probable that the acreage of fall plowing will be much less than is desirable. The visible supply increased 2,373,000 bushels last week, compared to an increase of 1,193,000 bushels the previous week and an increase of 2,230,000 bushels last year. The world's shipments were 10,616,000 bus., against 8,810,000 bus. the previous week and 11,234,000 bus. last year. The world's visible supply, according to Bradstreet's, increased 9,997,000 bus. against an increase of 3,658,000 bus. the previous week and an increase of 12,928,000 bus. last year.

Manitoba wheat has declined in price in about the same measure as wheat in the American markets. This season the movement of our crop has been delayed by backward weather; dull, partly showery and without the drying atmosphere so much needed during the period of saving and thrashing the crop. During September the movement of wheat was so small as to have little effect on the market except to prevent any idea of lower prices. Somewhat better weather for last week, and the advancing season has caused shipments to suddenly increase, so that the number of cars inspected in the first six days of October is almost as large as the number of cars inspected during all September. The increasing movement naturally causes a weaker feeling in the trade. At the same time it seems evident that the bulk of the car shipments belong to farmers who are not yet selling their wheat. Therefore, although there is a comparative plenty of wheat moving, there is not much actual business doing, and shippers who get an opportunity of doing a little business find it difficult to buy wheat unless they offer above the recognized market value, and even then the quantity they desire to secure is not easily got. This situation greatly restricts selling for forward delivery, which is usually very extensive at this season of the year, when the bulk of the crop is put in motion towards the lake ports. Our prices for wheat in store, lake port elevators, are running 14c to 16c per bushel under the price of the corresponding grades in Minneapolis, but we are still a little above export basis. Therefore our price must decline little yet or European prices advance, or we must hold our wheat. The holding of our wheat depends on our farmers, and generally speaking they are in a position to do so if they see fit. From what we know very few of them care to sell at present prices and all can carry their wheat over until New Year, or have it carried for them. Our prices at close of business to-day compared to a week ago show a decline of 1⅛c to 2⅛c on the higher grades and practically unchanged on the lower grades, and we quote: 1 Northern, 97⅞c.; 2 Nor., 94⅞c.; 3 Nor., 92c.; No. 4 wheat, 83⅞c.; feed wheat, 60⅞c., and No. 2 feed, 50⅞c., spot or first half October delivery. October closed 97⅞c.; November, 96⅞c.; December, 94⅞c.; May, $1.00. All prices in store Fort William and Port Arthur.

LIVE STOCK.

CATTLE — Considerable good export stock has been received and the prices are steady. Butcher cattle is 25c per cwt. easier at $2.75. Export stock is worth $3 to $3.25. Winnipeg, weighed at the point of shipment. We quote $2.75 off cars here for choice butchers down to $2 for inferior grades.

How They Say Goodby.

"When I left Manila," said a sailor, "a Filipino lady saw me off. Do you know how she said goodby? Why, she rubbed my face with her hand.

"In Fiji they say goodby by crossing two red feathers under your nose.

"The Burmese crouch down and shout 'Hib nib!'

"The south sea islanders wear farewell necklaces when goodbys are to be said. These necklaces are made of whales' teeth. To say goodby each islander rattles with his fingers the teeth of the other's necklace.

"The Sioux Indian digs his spear in the ground as a sign of farewell.

"In Otaheite they twist an end of your garment and then shake their own hands three times."

THE "CLEAR GRIT."

The Platform as Published in The Globe in 1852 Interesting in View of Recent Newspaper Discussion.

Recently the daily papers of Toronto have been publishing the ancient history of 50 years ago, with a view doubtless of instructing young Canada of some of the political struggles of that bye-gone age. The articles of The World and News, though very interesting and nonpartizan are two long for reproduction, and we content ourselves with one published in The Globe of July 8, 1852, which gives some idea of the political asperities of that period and which prints the entire "Clear-Grit" platform, as follows:

Meeting of Parliament.

Toronto Globe, July 8, 1852: The organs of the Government in this city announce that Parliament will meet for the despatch of business on the 19th August, and The North American (whose editor has just returned from the seat of Government) gives us the program of the session. The organ sets out with the information that as a large proportion of the members are new men, and "not accustomed to public speaking" (very complimentary from the organ!) the Ministry do not expect much trouble from them—but any quantity of that sort of thing may be anticipated from "George Brown for Upper Canada and Cauchon for Lower Canada." He then proceeds thus:

"Notwithstanding these prospects (from Cauchon and Brown—but what about Mackenize? and what about J. Sanfield McDonald?—Ed. Globe) the session will no doubt be a short one." . . .

And is this program to satisfy the Reformers of Upper Canada? Shall the first session of a Radical Parliament effect nothing more than this, towards remedying the crying evils under which—as we have been told for years by the men now in office and their friends—the country labors? . . .

When Dr. Rolph and Malcolm Cameron joined the Ministry, their organs declared that Hincks & Co. came to Rolph & Co. We maintained that Rolph & Co. went to Hincks & Co.—that the policy of the new Government (except as to the division of the plunder) would be precisely that of the Baldwin Ministry in the scandalous scenes of the session of 1851. . . . And what do we find? . . . We know what the principles of Messrs. Cameron and Rolph and their adherents are. . . . The platform of the party is to the fore, and lest its character be forgotten we now republish it for The North American:

Clear Grit Platform.

I. Elective institutions from the highest office of the Government to the lowest. These we class as follows:

1. The election of our Governmant.
2. An elective Legislative Council.
3. Election of all local officers, by the County and Town Councils.

II. No property qualification for the representatives of the people.

III. Extension of the elective franchise to all householders and housekeepers.

IV. Vote by ballot.

V. Biennial and fixed Parliaments.

VI. No expenditure of public money without consent of Parliament.

VII. Retrenchment.

VIII. Reform in the representation based on population.

IX. No pension attached to any office.

X. Our commerce and intercourse with other nations placed entirely in our own power, leaving in the power of England nothing but the question of peace and war, and that under certain restrictions.

XI. Our Legislature to have power to alter or repeal any act or charter, Imperial or otherwise, affecting ourselves only, which the Imperial Government itself might alter or repeal.

Subjects for Immediate Legislation.

1. Law reform.
   Court of Chancery abolished.
   Simplification of law proceedings.
   Abolition of present monopoly of the legal profession.
2. Clergy reserves for education.
3. Abolition of rectories
4. Immediate repeal of all laws granting monies to, or conferring special privileges upon, religious bodies.

5-6. Speedy sale of public lands—cheap and for cash.

7. Free navigation of the St. Lawrence to all nations.

8. Abolition of primogeniture.

9. Improve agriculture by a judicious application of public grants.

10. Completion of . . . public works. . . .

11. Abolition of customs houses and duties on imports.

12. Amendment of the school law.

13. Establishment of a uniform decimal system.

Not one item of all this is recognized by the present Government. . . And yet the ultra-Radicals eat their leek, eulogize every act of the Administration and denounce as "Tories" and traitors to the Reform party all who doubt their progressive disposition.

Perry's Bisley Score.

If King Edward does the right thing he will send Corporal Jack Graham of the R.N.W.M.P. $1,250, the same sum that he gave Private Perry of Vancouver. While Perry did some very good shooting, it cannot be compared to the score made by Graham. The latter was out with the police team yesterday, and at all the ranges made 98, or two more than Perry. He had a wonderful record up to the 1,000-yard mark, when one bad shot pulled his score down three points or he would have excelled Perry by five points. At 500 yards Graham made seven bullseyes, or a possible. At 200 yards he made 34, the inner shot being on the bullseye line.—Dawson City News.

THE DUTY OF PARENTS.

Prof. Goldwin Smith Expresses His Views Before the Friends.

Prof. Goldwin Smith took part in the discussion on the paper on "Parental Responsibility in Education," read by Miss Stover, before the Friends' convention in Massey Hall, Toronto, recently.

"The question of parental influence over children," said Mr. Smith, "is to my mind one of the first magnitude. I suppose it must be over fifty years ago that the British Parliament, after several tentative efforts, took up in earnest the question of national education, and appointed a commission to make inquiries and propound a scheme. Of that commission I was a member. I had the privilege of having as my colleagues several men of first-rate eminence and excellent representatives of the opinions they were sent to represent. I heard the question then discussed by every able men seated round a table without reporters, and I carried away from this discussion a lingering feeling in favor of home education, at all events the retaining to the home of that which seems to be primarily its duty. I fully recognize the necessity of securing the education of the people in free institutions, and I have always been loyal to the existing system, but I have always had some misgiving as to the effect of taking children so much away from their parents. Dr. Rice in his work on the American schools, which he had carefully surveyed, complains again and again of the indifference of the parents; he says he found them sometimes so indifferent that they would not take care to see that the schoolhouses were in a sanitary condition. One reads in the papers frequently complaints respecting the character of boys. I read a plaintive letter in The New York Journal on that subject, and the conclusion of it was that the boys were no longer under home influence.

"I hardly see how you can expect the mass of the children to be under home influence when the State takes them away from the home and makes itself responsible for their education. Something is wanting somewhere in the training of character. I have grown up to believe that in character is the main source of usefulness and happiness, and if that is neglected education will be a failure. There is certainly tendency here in Toronto to revert to voluntary schools—schools chosen by the parents, in which they take an interest, and which are more or less under their influence. I believe that points to a real want, and what will be the issue of it would be premature to say. I think before long the question will come up again, whether the State system is perfect and whether something more ought not to be done to bring the children under home influence." Mr. Smith closed by expressing the hope that the Society of Friends would be successful in "robbing the world of the scourge of war which we now see in its most hideous form."

Miss Stover, in her paper on parental responsibility, referred to the general tendency of parents to shift the training of their children to teachers. This was greatly to be deplored, as no school could supply the influences of the poorest homes.

"The Death of Wolfe."

Benjamin West's famous picture of the "Death of Wolfe," which will be exhibited at the Canadian National Exhibition by the gracious permission of His Majesty the King, was painted by West in 1771. It is a picture of much artistic significance, as it was the first in which a modern battle was represented in modern costumes instead of that of Greeks and Romans. The feeling against such a daring innovation was very strong. Sir Joshua Reynolds called upon West with the Archbishop of York, and tried to dissuade him from his project. But West was firm. They came again when the picture was finished, when Reynolds said to his companion: "West has conquered, he has treated the subject as it ought to be treated. I retract my objections. I foresee that this picture will not only become one of the most popular, but will occasion a revolution in art." All, however, were not convinced, and James Barry, in protest against such an indignity to historical art, painted the same pictures with the figures in the nude. Reynolds' prophecies were nevertheless verified, and the "Death of Wolfe" was the most successful and best of all West's pictures.

The picture was exhibited at the Royal Academy in 1771, and was purchased by Lord Grosvenor for the modest sum of $28. Woollets' plate after this picture had the largest sale of any engraving in England.

Benjamin West was born in 1728 at Springfield, Pennsylvania, of Quaker parents. He early showed a talent for art, and at nine years of age declared his intention of being a painter. In 1760 he went to Italy to study and remained there for three years. He then went to England, with two pictures painted in Rome. His works rapidly grew in popularity, and in 1772 he was appointed historical painter to King George III. by whom he was employed to decorate St. George's Hall, Windsor, with eight pictures from the life of Edward III. He also painted a number of royal portraits. He was most industrious, and produced altogether over 400 works, the "Death of Wolfe" being one of the early ones. He always had a profound belief in his own genius, and Leigh Hunt has left a charming picture of the kind, vain old man, in his stately house, surrounded by his own pictures.

Doubtful Compliment.

Second Artist—Indeed! What was it?

First Artist—You know the picture, "A Storm at Sea?" Well, a man and his wife were viewing it, and I overheard the fellow say: "Come away, my dear. That picture makes me sick!"

DUMPING OF LUMBER

While the apathy of the Dominion cabinet on the lumber duty question must necessarily call for remonstrances from this wooded province with its illimitable reaches of forest-clad mountains and valleys, the manly attitude of Mr. W. A. Galliher in boldly demanding from his party the recognition of his constituents in this regard must in an equally strong sense claim our highest commendation. Mr. Galliher has in past sessions strongly urged protection to the the B. C. lumberman, whom he claimed was just as deserving of assistance as was the farmer and the rancher of the prairie, from whom the former purchases his flour, his beef and various other commodities. Owing to the peculiar conditions governing the lumber market through the Canadian Northwest and Manitoba that industry is suffering in a double sense while kindred industries are protected from the two-fold evil. We refer to the "dumping" of American lumber on the Canadian market.

The American lumber market is overstocked. Mill-yards are piled high with lumber and in many cases financial distress threatens. In this crisis the time-honored practice prevails of dumping the surplus on the Canadian market at a very material reduction in price, oftentimes below cost, thus forcing the Canadian dealer to sell at corresponding low rates. By so doing the shrewd American producer maintains a steady market in his own country. The Canadian lumberman can successfully compete with his neighbor to the south when the conditions are equal but in the present unequal conditions are found additional arguments for protection.

A "Dumping Clause" added to the Customs Act in the last session of Parliament might have relieved the situation had it been so constructed that it embraced lumber, this clause reads:—"Whenever it appears to the satisfaction of the Minister of Customs, or of any officer of Customs authorized to collect Customs duties, that the export price or the actual selling price, to the importer in Canada of any imported dutiable article, of a class or kind made or produced in Canada, is less than the fair market value thereof, as determined according to the basis of value for duty provided in The Customs Act in respect of imported goods subject to an ad valorem duty, such article shall, in addition to the duty otherwise established, be subject to a special duty of customs equal to the difference between such fair market value and such selling price."

Since American rough lumber is on the freelist this clause is inoperative against the dumping of that product on the Canadian market by American lumbermen. The placing of a nominal duty, if onty 50 cents a thousand, would render the clause effective and would give the B. C. producer the protection he so long has craved. The Canadian lumber market is being slaughtered to protect the American market, legislate so that American lumber cannot be sold in Canada at a lower price than it is sold in the United States and the Canadian producer has nothing to fear even though the duty may be only a nominal one which in itself will afford no appreciable protection This is a feature that ought to appeal to the common sense of the Government that has legislated against the dumping of so many lines of goods less deserving of consideration because already protected by a duty. Mr. Galliher's efforts directed in this channel might result in more satisfactory returns.

The lumber tariff question has no political significance, and more cannot be expected of one party than the other. American lumber was placed on the freelist by the conservative party and it has been kept there by the liberals.

Three cases of diphtheria in the city, at the homes of Messrs Letcher and Clower have happily recovered without any further contagion despite the fact that there is no board of health in the city to order a quarantine. These people have been very considerate for the welfare of their neighbors by obeying their physicans' orders in maintaining a self-imposed quarantine with the result that the disease has not spread. The city, fortunately, is free from contagious diseases, otherwise the long delay in getting a board of health organized might cause considerable trouble.

It is reported on good authority, that the Kootenay Valley Land Co., a London company, which some years ago acquired the extensive holdings of Mr. Grohman in East Kootenay, have in junction with the Canadian Pacific Railway Co., successfully financed the construction of the Kootenay Central Railway, which will run from Golden to Fort Steele, and thence to a junction with the Crows Nest Railway near Elko. This will be good news to the owners of mineral claims along the Columbia and Kootenay valleys and will give fillip to development in the Fort Steele and Windemere districts. The Estella and Paradise mines are ready to ship considerable quantities of ore, and many promising prospects in the neighborhood of Wasa, and on Toby Creek, will have inducement for developing.

The Roman Catholic Church here have secured the services of Mme. Rosa d'Erinas, the great vocal and instrumental entertainer. She will appear in Fernie some time in November. "Mme. Rosa d'Erina's reputation is world-wide and she is perhaps the most remarkable musical marvel of the day. Not only is she a vocal star of great brilliancy, but she is also the only lady concert organist in the country. She was the professional organist of the Catholic Cathedral at Armagh, Ireland, before she was twelve years of age, and at fourteen she was the organist of the Carmelite Church in Dublin. Her operatic debut was made in Paris, and on going to London she immediately sprang into popularity, and was honored by a special command to sing at Marlborough House before the King and Queen, being appointed vocalist and organist to the latter. In Ireland the people call her "Rosheen na Nan," the Rose of the Songs, and it is not too much to say that she is one of the greatest vocalists who ever visited this section, while she is, the world over, conceded to be the greatest lady organist. A magnificent voice, a charming stage presence, a magnetic touch, embodied in one individual is a concentration never before met with, and Mr. Vontom is in no degree inferior in his line. European, American and Canadian critics aver that he is one of the best impersonators of the day. No mere elocutionist, no mere singer has been as successful as Mr. Vontom in his dual role. His humor is clean, spontaneous and free from burlesque. His audiences scream positively with laughter. The New York press unanimously say that he is simply inimitable as a comedian and humorist, while he can easily rank with the best of our tenors, having a full, rich and sympathetic tenor voice and knowing well how to produce with it in the most artistic effects."

Highest cash price paid for second hand cook stoves and furniture. The B. C. Furniture Co. x

"Father," he said, "my dear, generous brother left with me a sealed envelope instructing me to open it on learning of his death. I have just done so and found it to be his last will and testament in the olographic form. Here it is. Kindly read it and say whether you recognize the handwriting to be entirely his, for I know you have often seen him write and sign during his lifetime." He had got by rote the very wording of the code's formula.

The priest carefully studied the paper, throwing now and then a searching glance upon the subdued countenance of his visitor, and said:

"Yes, I recognize the writing to be that of your brother."

"You will so testify in court, father?"

"I must, if called." His tone implied reluctance.

"You were one of his closest and most highly esteemed friends and for that reason, father, I deem it meet and desirable that you should be one of the witnesses to prove his testament."

"Be it so," said the good man, though he piously wished the request had not been made.

Evariste now sought Noreau, the old time clerk of court, and, putting to him the same interrogatories, received the like responses.

And in due course, on proof of handwriting delivered by Father Grhe and Lucien Noreau and of death made by Valsin Mouillot, the parish judge attached his paraph and ordered to be executed "in all its parts and particulars" the following instrument propounded by Evariste as the last will and testament of Horace Oakfell:

PARISH OF AVOYELLES, LOUISIANA, May 6, 1861.

I, Horace Oakfell of "L'Esperance" plantation, in the parish and state above written, of lawful age and without forced heirs, being of sound health both in mind and body, but knowing the certainty of death and the uncertainty of the time thereof and especially having in view the perils of war, into which I am about to enter, do make this my last will and testament in the olographic form.

I give and bequeath unto my brother, Evariste Oakfell, all my estate of whatsoever kind and wheresoever situated which I may possess at the moment of my death.

I appoint my brother, Evariste Oakfell, sole executor of this testament and dispense him from giving bond.

This testament has been dated, written and signed by me on one sheet of paper at one writing. HORACE OAKFELL.

Receiving the letters testamentary sealed with seal of the court, his warrant of dominion over all the Oakfell fortune, Evariste proudly traversed the parish, returning to "L'Esperance" as its master.

"Ah, Horace," to himself he said, "in your narrow bed beneath the apple trees do you dream? Can you see your mean craftiness made a stepping stone to my will? Do you now believe that I am fit for neither law nor politics? O wise Horace, do you not know that success is the only thing worth striving for; that with it I rise in my own esteem and advance in the respect of my fellow men? Do you not understand the difference between your arrogant daring and my patient courage? Have you visions, sleeping hero? Behold this one. The beautiful, melting Estelle is no longer a virgin widow. Her sweet, blushing face is under the bridal veil. Rouse yourself, dear brother, and be present at the marriage fete."

"I will," said a voice, which froze his blood and caused him to reel in his saddle.

"I will send a squad with the corporal to guard the cotton," continued the voice, and, looking around, he saw and saluted two officers of the Union forces passing behind him on the crossroad to Coude de Francais.

CHAPTER XVI.

VISIONS.

LAURE'S quick eye perceived the change in Evariste's bearing. She saw the lofty confidence in his face as he passed to and from the Laticlais home with increasing frequency and understood that he felt he had been lifted above the level on which she stood, far and beyond her reach. And Quillebert's manner of easy familiarity and assured control she attributed to his belief that her passion for the young man must be attenuated by the suddenly lengthened distance from its object. But her stout heart was not dismayed nor were her faculties blunted by contact with difficulties. Her hate was strong and unpitying; her love was fierce and selfish. She had never forgiven Estelle the defeat in the contest for sponsorship of the church bell. She had an added grievance against her as the magnet which drew him who was her own life's loadstone and abhorred her as the source of Quillebert's hope of power over herself. That Estelle loved Horace and could never love again; that marriage with Evariste would make her life one long, bitter misery, she well knew. But welcome as was that prospect to her hatred, it terrified her love as its doom. Estelle's punishment and her own suffering were inseparably involved. The counter currents of passion met in her, and, as the scientists declare of the cursoidal positives and negatives of electricity, instead of annihilating each other, commingled and produced a force partaking of the natures of both. Her watchfulness of Quillebert was sharpened, her demeanor toward Evariste grew bolder and warmer, and she refused to admit into her mind a doubt of her final triumph over both.

The cause of the Confederacy was expiring when the Federal commander ordered the burning of the Proshame distillery near Mansura, from which Dede's cabaret had long drawn its supply of rum. That notable boniface was thus enabled to double the price for the goodly store of it he had then on hand. The conflagration attracted the country folk in large numbers. Among the spectators were Quillebert, Evariste and Laticlais, who had awaited it at the cabaret; also Laure, returning from a visit to the litte milliner at Marksville, viewed the spectacle from a favorable point which she selected near Evariste. When the dense black folds of smoke hung sullenly over the ruin, laying a pall upon the dead damnation, she said to him:

"It is only you I want."

"I have seen writhing in that foul cloud the souls of men lost through the product of this vanished manufactory of satan."

"Is vision seeing an inheritance like sensing?" Evariste asked sarcastically.

"I believe it is. I see visions often."

"Is the one power as reliable as the other?"

"Yes, but the visions depress me. They are so real."

"Then why do you indulge them?"

"Because I cannot banish or resist them."

"Why, Laure, you may yet become a doctress."

"No."

"Why not?"

"Because you will prevent."

"Not I," said Evariste positively.

"Yes, you," she insisted, with firmness.

"Is this another Cassandra prophecy?"

"It is a true prophecy. I know nothing of Cassandra. Come with me, please. I wish to stop for a moment at the old cottage to get a book of my granduncle's which I left there."

"I will be delighted," he assented, with a condescending air which was not lost upon her. "Are you not fearful that those things will be stolen from the deserted cottage?"

"No. The thieves among us will not risk the vengeance of the doctress."

"But she is dead."

"They dread her curse the more because she is dead."

They rode through the swamp in silence. He affected to reinstate the dignity which he thought had been unwittingly lowered by the free converse in the crowd. She gave herself to a train of disturbing thoughts, which flushed and paled her brown face and escaped in sighs from her heaving bosom, and she threw from dark, melting eyes glances of yearning and adoration upon her unseeing companion for which many a Gasconoid would gladly have given all his worldly possessions.

Arrived at the cottage, she drew a bunch of keys from her reticule and, begging Evariste to await her on the veranda, unlocked the door and entered. The stillness of the house and all its surroundings, the motionless prospect of open field and rigid forest, the creeping shadows of evening and Laure's words, "They dread her curse the more because she is dead," worked insidiously upon the scoffer a sense of the uncanny, and Evariste was oppressed by a feeling of the presence of the old doctress. Dreamily he fell into a reverie, in which he seemed to receive a presentiment from the white haired oracle. A footstep recalled him, and he started, as if at an apparition, upon beholding Laure, her head bared and the luxuriant hair tumbling in wavelets about her forehead, clad in the gown of filmy, clinging fabric she had worn the day he gave her the crescent of rubies and diamonds. Her ripened figure, of voluptuous contour, strained to the utmost the delicate enveloping tissue. Entreaty was in her moist eyes, passion in her mantling cheeks. Quivering lips and quick breath betrayed the agitation of her heart. Rich, glowing, tropical, her beauty was that of the red lily. Evariste gazed upon her in mute, admiring wonder.

"Hear me patiently, Evariste, and weigh well what I will say." There was intense pleading in her voice, and as she drew near to him he could see the rapid throbbing of the veins in her satiny neck. "You have book learning and know the ways and rules of what is called society. You understand the business and politics of men. But you do not know yourself or human nature. I do. It is a gift. Your passions possess you. If you attempt to hide them, they consume you. Opposition slays discretion and sends you on reckless courses. You have never been happy. You envied your brother. His very generosity irritated you. His fortune you coveted and his intended wife. Both desires were enemies to your content. Your heart was lighter when you had none of his fortune than now that you possess it all. You would be more at peace with only the half he promised you."

Alarm came to Evariste's face at these words, but whether she detected it or not she continued her dissection of his life without pause.

"And should you acquire the woman as you did the fortune, your wretchedness would be complete and beyond other cure than death. She will never love you. Her weak spirit would yield a tearful, meek submission, which would rub against the grain of your temper, hold you back, fret you and end in tragedy."

"Indeed, Laure, you talk very like a fortune teller," Evariste said coldly, "and I foresee quite a career for you in taking horoscopes. You will have many patrons, but at present I do not care to be numbered among them."

"Do not make light of what I am saying," Laure implored. "Be just to yourself, Evariste, and to me. I know that fine ladies would condemn me in this, but I know they would be hypocrites. Abandon the pursuit of that which can only desolate your life, and—and—come, Evariste, to me, who alone can"— Her speech was stifled by a rising sob. Opening her arms to him, devouring him with her passion lit eyes, her face aflame, she put aside restraint from her words, which came burning from her ravishing lips. "Oh, Evariste, I love you! I care not what you think of me for saying it. I love you. Do you hear, Evariste? I love you. My love is not what these people about us call love. My love is myself. Apart from it I am not; without it I cannot breathe or sleep or think—I do not exist. And you are my love, you are my life. Without you I cease to be. Would not you defy the world's opinion to save your life? I live but once, I love but once. Life and love, they are but one to me. Then I brave the world to save my love, my life."

Pausing for breath, she saw the frown which had settled upon his brow, and as scalding tears coursed down her cheeks she said in supplicating tone:

"No other woman can ever know you so perfectly as I do, Evariste. No one can smooth your path as I can. No one will ever understand how to stay and direct your impulses as I will. I can and will be your watchful guardian, your faithful slave. It is not your fortune I crave; it is only you. All interest in the estate I would renounce. I would sell this little place my grandmother left and maintain myself upon its proceeds. I care nothing for dress or luxury. It is only you I want. Oh, come to me, Evariste, and let me compel your love and happiness! Save me from myself and let me save you from yourself. Come to me in peace and wait not till you must fly to me for refuge from storm."

She was on her knees, and her upturned face shone with the light of devotional prayer.

It cost Evariste an effort to steel himself against the power of such a revelation of beauty and passion. But his answer was delivered coldly and harshly.

"There is at least one insurmountable obstacle to what you propose," he said.

"Name it, and I will overcome it," Laure exclaimed hopefully.

"You cannot." He gave a cruel emphasis to his words. "It is your position in Quillebert's household!"

She sprang to her feet, every fiber of her being tingling with the sting of this thrust, and glared upon him with the fury of a wounded tigress.

"You know your words imply a mean lie!" she cried. Checking her anger, covering her burning face for an instant and gulping back the bitter speech, she presented to him an offended countenance struggling for calmness and added:

"But go your way. I cannot renounce you and live. Thus far I have waited and suffered. I can endure a little more. It will not last very much longer, for, Evariste, come to me you will and in the flight of terror. I see it! I will wait!"

There was in her manner the positiveness of prescience which awed the man who had prided himself on impassibility, and he turned away perturbed and vexed. She re-entered the dark room and, flinging herself into the huge chair of her grandmother, sat staring into the future until the fury within her had spent itself. As if charged with the sturdiness of spirit which had borne the old doctress through many a trial, she resolutely exclaimed:

"He shall not, though it take his death and mine to prevent!"

Resuming the gown she had worn through the day, Laure composed her features and returned to Quillebert's dwelling, loathing it now as a charnel house, but choosing not yet to leave it.

The Castle In Chess.

The castle in chess owes its shape and name to a misunderstanding of its old Italian name, "rocco," as if it were "rocca" a castle or fortress. The words rocco, rook and roc (French) come from rohk, the old Persian name of the piece, which was in the shape of an elephant. Curiously enough, the elephant carried a little castle on his back, and the position of the piece on the board seemed suitable for a castle.

WICKEDNESS OF PRIDE

UNSPARING EXPOSE OF THE FOLLY OF THIS PARTICULAR SIN.

NO MATTER WHAT BASED ON

"A Man's Pride Shall Bring Him Low"—The Word, in Bible Times, Saith the Preacher, Had Always a Debased Meaning—Arrogance and Pride the Quicksands to Destroy Souls—Cut It Out.

Entered according to Act of Parliament of Canada, in the year 1901, by William Baily, of Toronto, at the Dep't of Agriculture, Ottawa.

Los Angeles, Cal., Oct. 9.—In this sermon the preacher unsparingly exposes the folly and wickedness of pride, whether it be founded on ancestry, possessions, social position and influence or upon personal vanity. The text is Proverbs xxix., 23, "A man's pride shall bring him low."

The word "pride" in this age may sometimes be used in a good sense. In Bible times it always had a debased meaning. Searching through a concordance I cannot find one place where that word "pride" was not used as the symbol of "sin" and condemned as the cause of sin. God denounces it all through the Old Testament. God hurls at it his execrations all through the New. Arrogance and pride compose the quicksands which have destroyed many an immortal soul in the past. They are the insidious means whereby Satan is tripping up and manacling his helpless victims at the present time. Therefore this sinful pride, which is found nestling in many hearts as a fatal cancer, must be cut out or some of us will be forever lost.

First, consider the silliest of all kinds of pride, that of aristocratic lineage. The spoiled infant in its canopied bed, screaming for the attention of its nurse, is not more of a nuisance than are these people who strut through the world claiming the homage of their fellows because of their having been born in an aristocratic home. It cries, "Bow low to me, not because I have brain or have accomplished anything, not because I am of any earthly use to anybody, but because my grandfather or great-grandfather has accomplished something to make his name famous or because my great-grandmother had in her veins the blood of the European aristocracy." Listen to the babblings of one who would continually shake before our eyes a single branch of his ancestral tree which happened to bear a few fragrant blossoms while on that same genealogical tree are hundreds of other branches which have borne nothing but worm eaten fruit, and which branches have been gnarled and twisted for generations and for centuries.

Have you ever stopped to consider how many different ancestors you have had? My parents were two in number. I had one father and one mother. But, stepping back another generation, I find I had four grandparents and eight great-grandparents and sixteen great-great-grandparents, and thirty-two great-great-great-grandparents. And so back and back they go, doubling with each generation. A few hundred years back I find my ancestors were not counted by the tens, but by the thousands. Now, my friends, what right has a man with family pride to follow up one branch of a genealogical tree that lands him in a king's throne room or in an earl's palace and ignore the hundreds of other ancestral lines, any one of which would land him in a peasant's hut or perhaps even at the end of a hangman's noose? For, though some of us may not have had ancestors who were hanged, all of us have had plenty of them who ought to have been hanged if they had been treated as they deserved. Thus, when we estimate how many ancestors we all have had, both good and bad, there is a great deal of broad common sense in the answer which Theodore Roosevelt gave to one of his boys who had boasted in school about his family. The President said: "There are only two classes of boys in this world, my son. Big boys and small boys alike are either good boys or bad boys. It does not make very much difference from what family you spring, if you are a good boy the world will respect you and if a bad boy the world will punish you and despise you."

Then there is another fact that always amuses me in reference to the false assumptions of family pride. Almost without exception the great families of the earth are proud of their descent from some one man who in his youth was a nobody, the son of a hodcarrier, a stonemason or a laborer in the ditch. Where did the proud Astor family come from? From a palace? Oh, no. It sprang into prominence from a poor German emigrant who had to cross the Atlantic practically in the steerage. Where did the famous Vanderbilt family come from? Four generations back Cornelius Vanderbilt was a barefoot boy running about the Staten Island hills. He made his first money as a common ferryman, rowing passengers over the waters between his island home and New York's great metropolis.

Where did the great Adams family, or the Beechers, or the Van Cortlands, or the Van Rensselaers, or the Hamiltons, or the Goulds, or the Armours, or the Swifts, or the Leiters, or the Otises spring from? Either in the last generation or a few generations back you can find their ancestors keeping a butcher shop or working as clerks or digging as farmers or so poor that they had to borrow money to get their start in life in their chosen career. Now, my aristocratic friends, if the most honored names in all history are for the greater part names first heard of in the annals of the poor and the first bearers of which were born in poverty and obscurity why should you hold your heads so high? Because your father or grandfather happened to do something that made his name famous is that any reason why you should consider yourself above your fellow men when you have accomplished absolutely nothing for mankind? The pride of birth is among the silliest and the most baseless of all kinds of pride, for, though some of us may have the blood of a great man flowing in our veins, all of us without exception have the blood of hundreds of obscure ancestors mingling in our arteries, from whom we are just as much descended as we are from him who was king among the kings. I would infinitely prefer to be the founder of a race than the degenerate offspring of a noble sire who bravely worked his way from nothing to the pinnacle of fame. This practical world of everyday life does not ask who was your father, who was your grandmother, but who are you? If you are a nobody you must fall to the rear of the onward marching of the human race, where you belong, or be knocked down and trampled under foot.

But though we would denounce the pretentious pride of birth, we would go further than this. We would denounce the arrogant pride of many men and women who seem to have accomplished something in life. If we are honest we must admit that such successes as we have achieved have been due in no small degree to fortuitous combinations of circumstances of which we have taken advantage and not exclusively to our own merits. We have no right to take all the credit to ourselves or to despise others who have not had the opportunities which have helped us in the race. Many of them have been hindered by poverty or lack of educational facilities or ill-health, and we show disgraceful ingratitude to Providence if we give ourselves airs of superiority over our less fortunate fellows who have not enjoyed our advantages.

James A. Garfield once seemed to preach the doctrine that there are no difficulties in life too great for a man to overcome. In one of his addresses he said: "No man who is worth saving can ever be drowned in the troubled sea of life. No matter how far it is from shore, pitch him overboard and he will at least be able to swim ashore." I am not sure that statement of Garfield's is always true. I believe that there may come a time when a young man, like a young colt, can be beaten too much and his spirit will be gone. I believe that a young man may have too many obstacles to overcome until at last he will lose his energy and he will cease to struggle any more. In any case, it becomes us all to consider how much of our success is due to the advantages we have enjoyed and never to assume superiority over those who might have succeeded as well or better than we have done if their opportunities and equipment had been equal to ours.

Men make circumstances. Not always. Some time ago when seated in a railroad train I read a newspaper article in reference to one of the notorious pugilists of the country. This article went something like this: "Mr. So-and-so will never amount to anything again in the roped arena. Why? Because he has been twice whipped. A man is like a dog; when he has been beaten enough to find that some one else is his master his nerve is forever gone." "How true in life is that!" I said to myself. Then I pictured that noble dog of Jack London's in his "Call of the Wild." He was a big, lovable, brave dog, but no sooner was he sent north than he was clubbed until his spirit was broken. What then? He whined and whimpered like a frightened puppy. So some men, noble men, brave men in their youth, become failures as middle aged men. Why? Because they are battered and pounded by struggle after struggle and defeat after defeat. They are halted in their progress through life by obstacles practically impossible to overcome until at last their courage and nerve and fighting manhood practically ooze away. O man, be not puffed up in your own conceit on account of your seeming triumphs in life! You and I in a sense have both succeeded not because we are smarter than all men, but because God has given to us chances of success which he has withheld from men who were just as smart and just as diligent and brave and as conscientious as ever we have been.

It is too often forgotten that arrogance and pride are sins in themselves. The lofty spirit which boasts that it is free from the guilt of others and holds aloof from the repentant sinner, whom it surveys with scorn, is not that pride a most heinous sin in the sight of a just God? During the darkest days of the French revolution of 1830 a great mob of insurgents and rioters were blockading the Parisian streets. "It is useless to appeal to their reason. They have no reason," said General Lafayette, the commander of the National Guard, which ultimately placed Louis Philippe upon the French throne, "Shoot them down like dogs." "Let me, general, try to scatter them," said a staff officer to his commander. The young man took off his hat and rode up to the threatening mob. Then he cried, "All gentlemen will please to retire, for I am ordered to shoot down the rabble." At once the mob scattered. "Not," wrote the historian, "from fear, but because not one of those fierce rioters wanted the people of France to consider that he belonged to the scum or the off scourings of the nation." Because arrogant pride considers herself different from the repulsive hags of sin does that make her different? I tell thee nay. The vilest and the most degraded forms of sin are not more condemned in God's sight than the sin of the Pharisee. Christ said it. We must believe it.

Who is this Pharisee of old modernized into the language of the church life of to-day? Let me describe him as you have often seen him. Sunday morning is here. The supercilious creature crawls out of bed. He must go to church. It is part of his religion to go to church. Every one says he is one of the pillars of the church. He dislikes the word "pillar" because for a long time he has thought he is the whole sanctuary, choir loft and pulpit thrown in as well as pew.

He has hard work to get up this morning because all the week, like Shylock, he has been demanding his pound of flesh. He gave a hundred dollars to the church last week, but he did not miss it much. He took it off the wages of his employes. During the week, by business tricks and financial thumb-screws, he got at least four different pieces of real estate $5,000 less than they were worth. He lied about the deal, but of course he only lied according to recognized business custom. Last night he discharged a young girl because she was sick. He knew what made her sick. He worked her overtime and worked all the physical life out of her.

"Why don't you hurry to church, old Pharisee? Don't you hear the last bell ringing?" "Oh, yes," says the old hypocrite, "but there is no need of my hurrying. The ushers always keep my seat. I make a fuss about having any one else put in my pew. Besides, it is not dignified for me to go ahead or even to be on time. Let me come in just before the sermon and disturb the service, and then every one will be impressed by my entrance and the solemn devotion with which I kneel in prayer."

Our Pharisee of modern times comes in late as usual. A quiet little lady dressed in black is seated in his pew. His face and neck get as red as if he had been taking a ten mile tramp under the tropical sun. We are almost afraid he will burst a blood vessel in an apoplectic fit. "Who is she? For what is she there? Wasn't her husband that old drunkard who died in delirium tremens five months ago and who died a bankrupt, owing me $500?" "Yes," said the usher. "But her own life has been sweet and pure, and as she used to know your family in her better days she asked for your pew. She has come to church because she wants to join our church." "Join our church, eh! Yes," said the old hyprocite, "I know why she wants to join our church; she wants me to help her and to let her children enter the society of my family. I will not do it. Now, Mr. Usher, see here, this is going too far. This is too good a church for the rabble. We can start missions for the poor. I do not want a lot of people with scandals besmirching their names using us for a social hospital. I am willing to pay my pew rent and help out the pastor's salary and help support a few foreign and home missions, but I am not willing to be dragged into the social mud with a lot of ordinary clerks and poverty stricken women and general 'deadbeats.' If you cannot keep this church entirely for the exclusive class, the social 'upper tendom,' why I will get out." God help me if I have made this scene too personal! Some of you know who represents the modern Pharisee clothed in the filthy garments of arrogant pride. That person, oh, man or woman, in God's sight is your self satisfied, evil self. You are even now making the hypocritical prayer of him who of old said, "Lord, I thank thee that I am not as other men."

But, lastly, I believe that pride is often the result of bigotry and ignorance. It is possible to become so absorbed in a particular work and in some one church as to overlook the fact that other men in other churches are winning souls and planting seed in other fields which will yield a harvest as great as our own, though other sickles may be used to reap it and other methods be adopted to produce it.

How do you know that your own church is the best church and the only true church? Have you ever studied the ways and the means other ministers are using in our sister churches? It would be a good thing for you to worship in some other church for a little while before you are so quick to condemn their ways of doing things. "Other sheep have I which are not of this fold," said Christ.

How do you know that your way of bringing up your children is the only right way? Have you developed your family so marvelously that they are brighter than all other children, more intellectual, more spiritual? Perhaps instead of your children being blamed for doing wrong you ought to be blamed. Your way of discipline may be wrong. Broaden your life. Study the ways of other Christian parents and you may be able to improve your own ways.

How do you know that your own interpretation of the Scripture is right? Perhaps if you would only empty yourself of self and as a student come and sit at Christ's feet you might learn so much from him who was meek and lowly of heart that you would have a less exalted estimate of yourself and of your own wisdom and piety. I personally would never have any use for a physician who thinks he knows so much that in the crisis of a disease he would not ask another physician to come to the bedside of the sick for consultation. Neither has Christ any use for one of his disciples who knows so much that he is not willing to come to sit at his feet and learn of him. Are you ready to-day to empty yourself of self and be as an empty vessel to be filled with the Holy Spirit?

Oh, the imbittered and imbittering, sinful pride of life! How hard it is for some of you to give up! Oh, man will you yield up your pride for Christ? Will you be as a little child at his feet? Will you say, "Master, I am nothing, but thou art all in all?" May God grant that the bane of sinful pride shall here and now forever be cast out of every one of our hearts. "A man's pride shall bring him low, but honor shall uphold the humble in spirit."

The only involuntary muscle composed of red or striped fibres is the heart.

CHEVALIER DROLET DEAD

There passed away on Wednesday evening at the Glengarry hospital in Montreal, one of the best known of French Canadians, in the person of Chevalier Gustave Adolphe Drolet, whose service as a leading member of the pontificial Zouave movement and his long residence in Paris made him a familiar figure both in Montreal and the French capital. The late Chevalier Drolet spoke English French and Italian. He lost his wife a lady of exceedingly sweet disposition, a few years ago and the bereaved husband appeared to fail from that time.

John A. Whitmore, the veteran postmaster of Regina, died suddenly on October 11. He appeared to be in his usual good health during the day and was in the post office during the evening, and in conversation with some of the clerks signified his intention of going on a shooting expedition on the morrow. Shortly after going to his room he was seized with an attack of acute asthma and choked to death. The deceased was sixty-four years of age. ONTARIO'S GOOD CROPS.

Officials of the Ontario department of agriculture have prepared a statement to refute the general impression that the 1904 crops were poor. The average per acre of spring wheat has been 18.5 bushels, against 18.7 in 1903, and 15.7 two years ago. The United States average this year is only 12.7 bushels, and in only one state, Washington, is the average up to Ontario. Ontario's oat crop of 104,000,000 bushels gives anaverage of 39.3 bushels to the acre, against 37.1 in the United States.

BEECHER AND "THE ROOSTER"

(From "Success-".)—That Henry Ward Beecher was spared much embarrassment by his quickness at repartee is illustrated by the following story.

One evening as he was in the midst of an impassioned speech, some one attempted to interrupt him by suddenly crowing like a rooster. It was done to perfection; a number of people laughed in spite of themselves, and the speakers friends felt that in a moment the whole effect of the meeting, and of Mr. Beecher's thrilling appeals, might be lost. The orator, however, was equal to the occasion. He stopped, listened till the crowing ceased, and then, with a look of surprise pulled out his watch.

"Morning already!": he said; "my watch is only at ten. But there can be no mistake about it. The instincts of the lower animals are infallible."

There was a roar of laughter. The "lower animal" in the gallery collapsed, and Mr. Beecher was able to resume as if nothing had occurred.

Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills

In its course through the body the blood not only supplies nourishment to the various organs, but also gathers up the poisonous waste matter.

Because they restore the strength and activity to the kidneys and liver Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills overcome such troubles and purify the blood in a wonderfully short time.

Mr. L. W. Dennis, Welland, Ont., writes: "It gives me pleasure to testify in behalf of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills. For many years I was seriously afflicted with kidney and liver troubles. At times my back would ache so bad I could not rise from a chair, and then again I would be confined to my bed. I was treated by the medical profession, but they all failed to understand my case.

"About the time I was most discouraged I heard of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills, and they were so strongly recommended that I decided to try them. Before I had used all of five boxes my old trouble had entirely left me, and I was again as healthy as in boyhood. I freely give this testimony for the benefit of those who suffer as I have."

NEW OIL WELL IN ALBERTA.

Another fine Flow for the Rocky Mountain Oil and Development Co.

Says the Pincher Creek Echo.— On Wednesday Mr. John Lineham president of the Rocky Mountain Oil and Development Co. reached town with the good news that one of the company's wells was pumping at the rate of two or three hundred barrels per day. The flow was sudden and steady. Not having the necessary tanks at hand a good deal of oil has been wasted. On Friday Mr. Lineham left for the oil wells with a tinsmith and a large supply of iron sheeting for tanks. It is the intention of the company to increase the flow. There is now no doubt that the oil is there in large quantities and the company is to be congratulated on the success of its long and faithful prospect, in which large sums have been spent.

WATER POWER ON BULL RIVER

South East Kootenay will shortly be able to boast of a water electrical generation plant which will be up-to-date in every particular, says the Cranbrook Herald. The work is being rushed forward as quickly as material can be procured. The Bull River Falls Power and Light Co. have certainly secured a situation for the installation of their plant which seems almost unique, for, in order to install their water power plant two miles of a flume has to be constructed and during several months in the year this flume will be able to carry all water in Bull River leaving the bed dry and accessable to mining so that the draining of the Bull River is automatically brought about without any expense to this company and this is a situation which miners in the old days labored for years to attain. Besides being an interesting character a trip to Bull River will show you some of tho prettiest scenes in East Kootenay and the genial superintendent of the company, Mr. G.E. Henderson, extends, to all a most hearty welcome to say nothing of the gold pan and unlimited bed rock, and thus a Klondike experience can be obtained without all the hardship of a long journey, for the poorest panner fails to pan without getting a color.

This plant means a great deal to the people of South East Kootenay. When completed it will be able to supply 10,000 horse-power to the different mining and other properties throughout the country so that industries will not suffer from irregularity of the seasons of the year and accordingly business will be steadier. Power will be at the disposal of companies whose properties are situated in the most inaccessable places for grade is no object. Wherever a wire can be taken and laid by human beings the company will be able to send their power. Very little is heard about the Companies operations at Bull River. Like the bee you dont hear much buzz until you get near the nest, but it would suprise anyone to see how much has been done there and with what care and attention the work is being steady and surely prosecuted, and when completed, one of nature's grandest works, a waterfall, will which is the order of things.

Harold Nelson Co., Monday and Tuesday.

A. Milton has gone into the flour & feed business. He has erected a fine store building near his residence. He has a delivery wagon and solicits business as he delivers his goods.

Arrangements have been made by which the mine train to Coal Creek will be held at Fernie until the close of the entertainments in the Stork Opera House on Oct. 24th, 25th and 28th. Coal Creek people may secure seats in advance for the Harold Nelson nights at the Fernie Drug store and for the 28th at Bleasdell's Drug Store.

Rev. A. Dunn B. D. arrived in the city last Saturday. He occupied the pulpit of Knox Church last Sunday and he will also act in that capacity next Sunday morning and evening. Mr. Dunn has many friends in Fernie and in fact in numerous places in B. C. where he has done noble pioneer missionary work. In '98 he came to Fernie before the town was fairly started and by his self sacrificing efforts and his quickly recognized ability in his calling he soon was largely instrumental in getting the Presbyterian Church well established in the town. Since those days Mr. Dunn has won fresh honors at the highest institutions of learning on the Continent. Recently he went to Beirut, Syria, as a professor in the Protestant University there. While in the Old Land he took advantage of the exceptional opportunities for travelling. He visited leisurely every nook and corner of the Holy Land and he also travelled through nearly all the countries of Europe. On Tuesday evening he will give a very interesting lecture on the subject of his travels in Palestine. This will be a treat which many are looking forward to with a great deal of pleasure.

SHOE STAMINA

IT centres round the insole!

Without good live leather in this, the mainstay of the shoe, there will come early ruin.

The stitching cuts, the upper spreads, the welt rips, and the shoe quickly loses its shape.

When you buy shoes, the last thing you look at is the insole.

Manufacturers know this, and they also know that the first thing you look for is fine upper leather, neat finish, and smart shape.

Result—insole robbery for mere outward effect.

Of what use is fine appearance, if it wont continue under wear.

But you can't hold the Makers responsible for this,—for value, or wear, unless the Maker too fixes the retail price.

He usually gives the kind of value Shoe Retailers usually want—surface value, selling effect. His market is with the Retailer.

But the Slater Shoe market, created through advertising, is with the Wearer.

Therefore, satisfaction to the Wearer is the ambition and prime necessity of the Slater Shoe System.

And such permament satisfaction depends, among other hidden things, upon an insole which costs nearly twice as much as that used in the ordinary shoe.

Goodyear Welted—$4.00 and $5.00.—Stamped on the soles, in a slate frame.

THE TRACKMEN'S HOLIDAY

PROCESSION, SPORTS AND BANQUET IN EVENING.

The Visiting Trackmen Enjoyed their annual Excursion last Saturday. A. B. Low the Guest of the Day.

Last Saturday, Oct. 22nd the freedom of the city was extended to the visiting C. P. R. trackmen on the occasion of their annual excursion. Free transportation had been made out to several hundred members of the I. B. of M. of W. E. but for various reasons the number of visitors did not come up to expectations, the chief reasons being the unsuitable hours of the regular trains. Some from the East missed the early morning train and did not get here.

However those that did come had a very enjoyable day. The weather, as usual, was perfect and the Italian band added materially to the charms of nature by contributing a lot of excellent music. At eleven o'clock a procession was formed and marched through the city. At 3 o'clock the crowd of holiday people repaired to the recreation grounds where some impromptu sports were held.

A matched handicap 100 yard race awakened considerable interest. F. J. Mitchell was at scratch and J. Nunn and J. Gusty had a handicap of five yards. For the first 50 yards the race was a good one. At that point Mitchell's staying powers were seen to advantage and he quickly narrowed the space between himself and his opponents, winning easily J. W. Nunn coming in second. A matched race between T. H. Whelan and W. O. Robbins also caused considerable interest. A foot ball match between Coal Creek and Fernie resulted in a victory for the latter by one point

THE BANQUET

In the evening a large and elaborate spread was prepared at the Napanee Hotel where the visiting railway men were entertained by the local union. The tables were laden with good things and served in such a manner as to reflect the greatest credit upon the Napanee as a first class hostelry.

Mr. George Clapp, sec. treas. of local union No. 234 occupied the toastmaster's chair and by his side sat the guest of the evening, Mr. A. B. Low, first vice president of the international organization of which local lodge No 234 forms a part.

The list of toasts was as follows.

"The King"
"The city of Fernie"
By Mayor Stork and W.R. Ross M. P. P.
"The C. P. R."
by R. Reading.
"The I. B. of M. of W. E.
by A. B. Low and George Clapp.
"Our Sister Organizations"
by Chas. Fife.
"Lodge No. 234."
Messrs Kinert, past president and Carlson.
"The Ladies"
by A. T. Sarup.
"Our host and hostess"
by T. H. Whelan.
"God Save the King"

Mr. Low gave a very entertaining and instructive address in which he outlined the work of the organization throughout Canada.

BUSINESS CHANGES

Numerous changes in the business locations will be made in the near future. In several instances the present locations were chosen to meet temporary wants, but as winter approaches these business men with natural instincts not limited to lower animals look abroad for permanent quarters and prepare to lay in large stores to tide them over the cold frozen months. Among these proposed changes may be mentioned the following:—

N. E. Suddaby, druggist, finding the room in his present store cramped for the stock he expects to carry has rented the remaining store in the Fernie Hotel Block. This will not be any to large to accomodate his business when his fixtures and furniture arrives and when his full stock is in place.

A. W. Bleasdell, Druggist is making a move in the opposite direction. His stock is also cramped in his present quarters and he has rented the store next to the Postoffice corner in the 'J.&F block." He will have a prominent location here and move room to display his first class stock.

F. J. Mitchell will open up his Semi Ready Clothing store in the store to be vacated by A. W. Bleasdell. Mr. Mitchell's goods are on the way and he is anxious to get down to business as soon as possible. He may open up temporarily somewhere else in the meantime.

Philip Carosella is moving into his new concrete store building back of the Napanee. The corner store will be occupied by the wholesale liquor department and the larger by the grocery and general goods department. The plate front gives this building a fine appearance.

W. J. Blundell is opening his grocery and crockery business in the J&F block.

E. J. Cann of Fort Steele has leased the third store in the L. T. W. block now occupied by N. E. Suddaby. About the 20th November he will open up a stock of books, stationery, fancy goods, music, musical instruments etc in this place. This is the first business house devoted entirely to these lines and Mr Cann who has had many years experience in these lines will doubtless make a success of it.

Dr. Higgins has leased office room upstairs in the "J. & F. block," which he will occupy as early as possible.

W. F. Vance will open his O.K. barber shop and bath rooms in the new Stork building in the beginning of next week. He will occupy the north half of the building which is being fitted up with all modern conveniences and improvements. Mr. Vance was just nicely started in this stand when the big fire interfered with his plans but he is now in a better position than ever to cater to the needs of his many customers, who will find his new quarters clean, neat and thoroughly up-to-date.

Mayor Stork is moving his tinsmith and plumbing business into the south end of his new store block. He will carry a full line of all kinds of modern plumbing fittings.

C. Richards will open up his general store in the Todd block next week. He will retain his present quarters on Baker St. where he will carry a full line of groceries for his customers in that end of the city.

Gordon and Mathison, jewelers have dissolved partnership. The businsss will hence-forth will be run under Mr. Mathison's name with Mr. Martin in charge.

COMING TO FERNIE

Mme. Rosa D'Erina and Prof. Vontom will give their celebrated concert in Fernie in the near future under the auspices of the Roman Catholic Church. The Charlottetown (P. E. I.) Guardian says of them. "Two of the best singers who ever visited this Province. Rosa D'Erina's Lecture and Recital is most fascinating. She is gifted with a sweet and powerful voice, which shows the highest order of cultivation. Prof. Vontom, the talented humorist and gifted tenor, performed his numbers admirably." The St. John (N. B.) Globe comments as follows. "To say the audience were delighted but feebly expresses the pleasure, amounting to enthusiasm, awakened by the magnificent vocalism of the fair cantactrice."

EAIRY CREEK WATER

The council recently went over in a body to examine the water supply of Fairy Creek with a view to gathering information which might at some future time be useful in determining plans for a city water system. The season was an opportune one as the water is as low now as it may ever be. They found its supply ample for all reasonable demands, and the distance over which the water would have to be piped not over three miles. This week Ald. Lundie went over to get a sample of the water for analysis.

THE "J.&F." BLOCK

H. Oldland has about completed his contract for the Johnson and Falconer block. One of the last acts was the carving of "J & F" Block in the ornamental concrete top. The concrete cornice work of this building has won the admiration of all who have seen it. It was done by a couple of Italian experts who have spent many years in the sculpture work. The lower floor will be occupied by Nov 15th.

LUMBER MILL BURNED

St. Petersburg.—Admiral Rojestvensky's official report on the North Sea affair will likely be given tomorrow. He opened fire and he believes he sank one of the torpedo boats, the other making off for safety among the fishermen. As soon as he noticed the fishermen he says he ceased firing.

BOYS CREATE EXCITMENT.

Two Boys go off with Packtrain at Coal Creek.

A lively sensation was caused at Coal Creek Saturday night when it was found at about 9 o'clock that two little boys of about ten years of age were missing. Enquiries by anxious parents soon brought information from the companions of the missing boys. A man had passed through the town in the evening with five horses. He was riding one and three others had saddles on them. He had accosted the group of boys, had asked numerous suspicious questions as to where the safe of the store was kept etc and tried to entice four of them with him. He succeeded in getting two of them to go with him. Then after their stories got out the excitement increased. A volunteer force quickly was out on the trail of the kidnapper who had proceeded towards Crows Nest. Six miles up they came up with his camp and rescued the boys. The man was brought back to Coal Creek but in the morning was allowed to go. The most serious suspicions were entertained at the time. Some thought the three owners of the horses and saddles were in ambush ready to commit depredations after an exodus had been of the town in search for the boys.

TWO CONVICTIONS QUASHED.

The chief Justice at Greenwood on Tuesday quashed two convictions made by Fernie Magistrates. J. A. Sloan, a contractor for clearing a portion of the Great Northern right of way was charged and convicted for a contravention of the Bush Fire Act, in allowing as was alleged, a fire to escape from the right of way on the 8th of Sept. The trial lasted several days. Many witnesses were examined on either side. After taking time to consider the Magistrate found the accused guilty and imposed a fine of $100.00 and costs, alternatively two months' imprisonment. Messrs. Eckstein & Law for the accused took proceedings by certiorial to have conviction set aside, alleging three distinct grounds on which it was claimed to be bad. The case was argued at Greenwood, where H. C. Shaw appeared for the application, and P. Myers Gray, instructed by the Attorney, general represented the crown.

The other conviction set aside was that of one Clyde Westlake, who was, on the 11th inst, convicted before the Police Magistrate of an assault occasioning actual bodily harm to one Joe Asn. The accused was fined $100.00 and in default of payment was sentenced to six months in the common goal at Nelson where he was taken. Habeas Corpus proceedings were instituted in his behalf by Eckstein & Lawe and resulted in the conviction being quashed. Among the grounds on which it was claimed the conviction was bad was that the evidence was insufficient in law to support a conviction. H. C. Shaw and P. Myers Gray were Counsel for the prisoner and Crown respectively.

In each case the order made provides that no action shall be brought against the magistrate.

AN UNFORTUNATE ACCIDENT.

J. Scott's leg Fractured by Horse Falling upon it. Jos. Gingara's arm Fractured.

John Scott, the efficient and obliging man behind the block for P. Burns & Co. butcher shop, met with a very painful and unfortunate accident on Sunday evening while returning from a horseback ride with a friend. They were going through the old town when Mr. Scott's horse's fore-foot slipped on a tin can. He went down suddenly, carrying his rider with him. Mr. Scott did not remove his foot in time from the stirrup and the result was a bad fracture of the bones of the leg above the ankle. He was removed to the Fernie hospital, where doctors found the break to be a serious one, the fracture of both bones being in an oblique direction. He will probably be off duty for six weeks or two months.

Joe Gingara, who lives up the Mine road met with an accident on Saturday. He was playing on the track and he fell striking his arm a severe blow on the steel rail. He was taken to the hospital but the doctors were unable to detect a fracture of the bone though the arm was badly oruised.

INDIAN HUNTERS DECAMPED

Several Lodges in Fording River Valley makes their Escape.

Constable Walker returned from a long trip up Fording River on Monday. He in company with James Miller, a prospector, who informed the police of the Indian inraid on B. C. hunting territory patrolled the valley of the Fording River for thirty miles above its junction the Elk. They then crossed the mountain divide into the upper Elk Valley. Nowhere did they see any Indians, though they saw traces where they had been. Jas. Miller had first seen the Indians while coming down from Banff through the Kananaskis Pass.

Constable Walker first went to the scene of the Stoney Indians' arrest but he found the whole party decamped and gone into their own country carrying with them the hides and meat they had secured. The quantity of hides was not nearly so great as was previously stated. Three pack horses could easily carry all the hides taken by the party, but there were eight elk in the bunch. Messrs Walker and Miller saw a fine herd of seven elk, at the head of which was a magnificent bull with fine horns. Under such tantalizing conditions it is not surprising that they were almost tempted to shoot and pay the fine.

LECTURE ON POLITICS

Rev. Dr. Chown delivered an excellent lecture on "Politics as they are and as they should be" in the Methodist church Tuesday evening. Owing to the counter attraction the attendance was small. He said the moral principles that govern a man in his individual capacity should also be his ethics when exercising his duties as a citizen. Failure to realize this has brought the science and art of politics to such a level that we now speak of "descending to politics." The ballot renders every voter an uncrowned king. He considered the ballot next to the Holy Sacrament in its sacredness, and a man could scarcely be found guilty of an act more unreasonable, unpatriotic and unmanlike than when he ignors men and measures and votes party right or wrong.

A marriage ceremony was performed at the home of Mrs. Quigg, Baker St. Fernie, on Friday evening last by Rev. John Robson B. A. The contracting parties were Harvey E. Martin, son of Wm. Martin now of Pennsylvania, and Dorothy D. Quigg second daughter of Mrs. Quigg. Mr. Martin is a motorman at Coal Creek. The newly married couple will live in Fernie.

JAPS VS. LUMBERMEN

A DRUNKEN RIOT OCCURRED AT JAFFRAY.

Warm Time at the Lumbering Town last Sunday Evening. Chief Offender Escapes.

A gang of Japanese construction men working for the C. P. R. at Jaffray and a gang of lumbermen working at a tie mill nearby got into a general mix up last Sunday evening. The lumbermen were drunk otherwise the row would never have occurred. Some Japanese went down to the store to buy a quantity of hay with which to make beds. On their way back while passing the lumuermen's camp the carousing lumberjacks accused the brown men with stealing the hay. A white man struck a Jap and the row started. The Japs pummelled the aggressor and beat an orderly retreat. Later the lumbermen attacked the boarding car. At the point of a revolver in the hands of a man named Connor the Japs were forced to pile the hay between the two compartments of a car and to pour coal oil upon it. It was then set on fire. Connor then relented, lowered his gun and allowed the Japs to extinguish the flames before serious damage was done. Connor then skipped.

Great excitement prevailed in the little town. The wires were kept hot summoning aid. Chief McMullin sent Coubles Walker from Fernie, Rorsch from Morrissey and Morris from Cranbrook, but by the time they arrived things had settled down. They were unable to locate Connor, but they arrested four other lumbermen, less deeply implicated. These were taken to Cranbrook, and upon being brought up before the magistrate were remanded for a week. Connor was reported to be in Hayden, Montana, but investigation proved the report to be false. It is believed that he is in hiding around Jaffray.

ADDITIONAL LOCALS.

The local liberal Association have made arrangements foa a public meeting next Thursday evening at the Stork Opera House. A special wire will be put in and the election returns will be announced as they come in. Music and speeches will relieve any waiting between despatches and a general good time is aftticipated. Mayor Stork who is President of the Association gives the free use of his hall for this purpose.

W. W. Smith the noted sprinter and his trainer Jack Allen were in the city early in the week. They are on their way to the prairie from Kaslo where Smith added another notch to his list of victories. Smith is a six footer and weighs 193 lbs, but he is hard to beat for all the weight he carries; in fact there are those who think Smith cannot be beaten by any living man.

Electricity flowed freer than whiskey around the Napanee Hotel the other night. An employee in putting in a new fixture had neglected to complete the job and the result was that the whole house, tin roof, metal walls and ceiling and hot air furnace fixtures were all charged with 110 volts of electric force. R. Hammond readily found the defective spot and remedied it.

A slight earthquake was felt at Coal Creek at about five o'clock on Sunday morning. People in their beds could feel the earth slightly tremble, and piles of dishes were heard to rattle. Slight tremblings have been felt at various times at that place but no serious results are feared for such occurrences are not uncommon at other collieries. The cause though not understood appears to be associated with the underground working in the mines.

Dr. W. W. Walkem who has been looking after Dr. Keith's practice at Coal Creek during the latter's absence has concluded to open an office in Fernie. He is now looking about for suitable quarters. The doctor claims the honor of being at one time the youngest newspaper editor in Canada. He started reporting when he was fifteen. In the early seventies, after taking his medical course, he did some pioneer newspaper work in Victoria Dr. Walkem has also been in politics, representing South Nanaimo in the local legislature for four years. He is a brother of Mr. Justice Walker of the Supreme Court. Dr. Walkem held the position of colliery surgeon first with the Wellington Coal Company and subsequently with the Wellington (Dunsmuir) Company for twenty years.

A WEAK HEART.

The Interesting Experience of a St. Catharines Man.

Had Suffered for Twelve Years and Was Ultimately Cured Through the Advice of a Friend.

"Twelve years ago," says Mr. Wm. Emery, of Welland Avenue, St. Catharines, "I was living in the town of Gananoque, and the physicians there told me I had heart disease. From that time and up to four years ago I often had severe spells of the trouble. The least exertion would bring on violent palpitation, and at other times I would become dizzy, nervous and frightened and my heart would almost cease to beat. I became reduced in flesh and insomnia followed. I was hopeless of finding a cure for I had been treated by an experienced doctor, and had taken many advertised remedies without getting any benefit. One day a neighbor strongly advised me to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and acting on his advice I got a half dazen boxes. I soon found much relief through the use of the pills, and after continuing the treatment for a couple of months I was again enjoying perfect health. I have not since had any return of the trouble and I feel safe in saying that the cure is a permanent one, and I can strongly advise the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills to all who suffer from similar trouble." The reporter can only add that Mr. Emery is well known in St. Catharines, is a prominent worker in Methodist circles, and has the highest respect of all who know him.

If you have any symptoms of heart trouble, neuralgia, indigestion, rheumatism, anaemia or any of the numerous troubles caused by poor or watery blood, you will find new health and strength in a fair use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. Do not waste money or further endanger your health by the use of substitutes—get the genuine pills with the full name, "Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People," on the wrapper around every box. Sold by all medicine dealers, or sent by mail at 50 cents a box, or six boxes for $2.50, by writing the Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

There are a thousand ways of lying, but all lead to the same end. It does not matter whether you wear lies, tell lies, act lies or live lies, your character is ruined all the same.

There is no more demoralizing influence in modern life than the unnatural straining to seem other than we are. Nothing else so quickly lowers self respect, takes the fine edge off honor and blunts the conscience as the sense of being a sham, a gilded fraud or an unreality. It cheapens standards, lowers ideals, saps ambition and takes the spring and joy out of living. No man can make the most and the best of himself until he is absolutely honest with his own soul and unfalteringly true to his highest ideals, and this is impossible while he is living a lie.—Success.

The Moorish Woman at Home.

When not fixed up for visitors the Moorish woman is always en dishabille, lounging about all day in a loose cotton or muslin nightgown, rose or yellow being her favorite shade, her bare feet thrust into slippers very much down at the heel and a flower stuck in her wisp of uncombed hair, which, from a continual use of henna dye, is apt to break out in patches of yellow, green or gray. Hairbrushes are unknown, a very coarse comb alone being used, which may account for the fact that the hair is never glossy or well kept. She has a devouring passion for paints, powders and perfumes, attar of roses and sandalwood being in special demand.—Pilgrim.

A Tree Distillery.

On the Canary islands grows a fountain tree, a tree most needed in some parts of the islands. It is said that the leaves constantly distill a quantity of water that is sufficient to furnish drink to every living creature in Hiero, nature having provided this remedy for the drought of the island. Every morning near this part of the island a cloud of mist arises from the sea, which the winds force against the steep cliff on which this tree grows, and it is from the mist that the tree distills the water.

Proved It.

"My wife will bear witness," said the prisoner at the bar, "that at the very time I am accused of burglarizing Mr. Smith's premises I was engaged in walking the floor with my infant child in my arms, endeavoring to soothe it by singing 'Rock-a-by, Baby.'"

"The prisoner is discharged," remarked his honor. "He can prove a lullaby."

Waiting Instead of Going.

The art in life is to sit still and to let things come toward you, not to go after them or even to think that they are in flight. How often I have chased some divine shadow through a whole day till evening, when, going home tired, I have found the visitor just turning away from my closed door.—Arthur Symons in Saturday Review.

LORD KNOLLYS.

Sketch of His Majesty the King's Private Secretary.

His Majesty has no time for the cultivation of the statelier style of letter writing which characterized the early decades of the last century. But he never finishes a word with an unintelligible syllable, and does not observe the practice of referring to people and places by their initial letters, except in family notes, when he would not hesitate to write of "G." or "V." To his relatives in Denmark, he refers to Her Majesty as "alix;" to all others as "the Queen," only in exceptional cases as "Queen Alexandra." There are, however, some little time-saving idiosyncrasies which were adopted long ago, and have been perpetuated. Thus a favorite form of subscription consists of the syncopated words, "Yrs. v. sincerely."

Of course, much of the King's letter-writing is delegated to Lord Knollys, his private secretary. His Lordship is a remarkable combination of the old-world aristocrat and the keen and modern man of business. He is a spare man with crisp, curling white hair, surmounting a refined and thoughtful face. He has a certain picturesque dignity and reserve about him. In his frock overcoat and silk hat he might be taken for a beau of a hundred years ago, spick and span, and bearing the marks of an inborn courtliness and grace. Those who meet Lord Knollys outside his work know him as a man immaculate in dress, precise in manner and deportment. They should see him in his rooms at Buckingham Palace. He sits there in shirt sleeves, cuffs tucked up, dealing with His Majesty's correspondence and other work with a celerity and an astuteness that would do credit to the keenest man of business in London.

The King's secretary says little, but when he speaks he goes straight to the point. He is a master of the snub in its various phases, as bores and cranks have found to their cost. And yet he has a wonderful fund of considerate kindliness. Some little while ago a London press man who happened to be the only one of his craft at a meeting where the King made a little speech, went to Lord Knollys with his transcript, and asked His Lordship to glance over the copy. Lord Knollys dashed the reporter's hopes by saying he was not present at the meeting. The press man was disappointed, for he feared he had made some mistake. "Come back in two hours," said Lord Knollys, taking the copy. He returned at the appointed time, and found his copy corrected in a strange hand. Lord Knollys had gone to the King himself, and His Majesty had made the correction.

His Farewells.

"That young chap that calls on our Myrtilla reminds me of Patti," said the old man in the dining room.

"Why so?" asked his wife.

"He has so many farewell performances in the vestibule."

Dont's for Young Mothers.

Don't give baby a sleeping draught, soothing mixture or opiate of any kind except by the order of a competent doctor who has seen the child. Remember that all so-called soothing mixtures contain dangerous opiates. If your child is restless give it Baby's Own Tablets, as they are absolutely harmless and in a natural way promote health-giving sleep.

Don't give medicine to check the movement of baby's bowels in diarrhoea except on the advice of a doctor. Feed the child sparingly and give Baby's Own Tablets to cleanse the bowels of irritating secretions. Keep the abdomen warm. This treatment will cure diarrhoea.

Don't give a young child harsh cathartics, such as castor oil, which gripe and torture. Baby's Own Tablets have a gentle laxative action and never fail to cure constipation.

Mrs. J. D. Cilly, Heatherton, Que., says: "I have used Baby's Own Tablets for stomach and bowel troubles and have always found them a most satisfactory medicine."

Don't fail to keep Baby's Own Tablets in the house. Sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box by writing the Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

A Fair Opportunity.

Tasso, being told that he had a fair opportunity of taking advantage of a very bitter enemy, replied, "I wish not to plunder him, but there are things which I wish to take from him—not his honor or his life, but his malice and ill will."

Well spoken! A noble taking from an enemy, "his malice and ill will!" How is that done? Love is the potent weapon. "Heap coals of fire on his head."—Exchange.

Vastness of London.

There are about 6,000 miles of railway in Greater London, and it is estimated that something like 600,000,000 separate journeys are made by passengers annually. The number of journeys on an average week day is over 1,500,000. An idea of the vehicular traffic in the streets may be gathered from the statement that in twelve hours 16,054 vehicles of all kinds passed a particular spot in Piccadilly, and a full service of 690 buses pass the Bank of England in an hour. The number of passengers carried by the London trams in a year is over 360,000,000. A census taken of the number of pedestrians who crossed London Bridge on a certain day showed that they totaled 116,902, and in nineteen and a half hours during a day in April last year 248,015 people crossed the roadways at the bank. It is always a source of amusement for American children visiting London to look for the cab with the highest number. Quite frequently one is seen above the 20,000 mark.

THE TIME I'VE LOST IN WOOING.

The time I've lost in wooing,
In watching and pursuing
The light that lies
In woman's eyes,
Has been my heart's undoing.
Though Wisdom oft has sought me,
I scorned the lore she brought me:
My only books
Were woman's looks,
And folly's all they've taught me.

Her smile when Beauty granted,
I hung with gaze enchanted,
Like him, the sprite,
Whom maids by night
Oft meet in glen that's haunted.
Like him, too, Beauty won me.
But while her eyes were on me—
If once their ray
Was turned away,
Oh! winds could not outrun me.

And are those follies going?
And is my proud heart growing
Too cold or wise
For brilliant eyes
Again to set it glowing?
No—vain, alas! the endeavor
From bonds so sweet to sever;
Poor Wisdom's chance
Against a glance
Is now as weak as ever.

TIRED OF HIS THRONE.

Sir Charles Brooke, Sultan of Sarawak, Over 70 Years of Age, Retiring to England.

Sir Charles Brooke, the only Englishman who can boast of being an Asiatic Monarch, and whose sovereignty over the Sultanate of Sarawak, in the Island of Borneo, with its population of nearly a million, is recognized as subject to British suzerainty, has just issued a proclamation appointing his eldest son and heir, Vyner Brooke, to act as Regent of Sarawak. Sir Charles, who expressly declares that he does not abdicate his throne, explains that age and growing infirmities have led him to transfer the task of administering the Government of his Sultanate to his eldest son, who bears the title of Rajah Muda, and who will from henceforth be "entitled to use the swallow-tail flag of the Sovereign on shore and on land, and likewise the yellow umbrella," which is in Sarawak the emblem of rulership.

Sir Charles, who was formerly in the British navy, is now over seventy years old, and will very soon retire to England to spend the remainder of his days in the land of his birth. He has been on the throne of Sarawak since 1868, and is entitled, not only in the Orient, but likewise when he visits England, to the same honors in the shape of gun salutes, sentinels, etc., as the great vassal rulers of British India. Sir Charles, whose English title is due to his Grand Cross of the English Order of St. Michael and St. George, served in the navy as Charles A. Johnson, and assumed the name of Brooke on succeeding his uncle, Sir Jas. Brooke, the first ruler of Sarawak.

The latter's story has often been told. He was associated with the late Sir Harry Keppel in the expedition fitted out by Baroness Burdett-Coutts for the suppression of piracy in the Far East. Sixty or seventy years ago, when steam navigation was in its infancy, piracy played a far more serious role in maritime intercourse with the remote Orient than to-day. In fact every vessel that had occasion to traverse the Straits of Malacca was compelled to carry guns to repel those fierce Malay, Chinese and Tonkinese pirates who were the scourge of those seas. Lady Burdett-Coutts, at a considerable cost, fitted out an armed naval expedition for hunting the pirates to their lairs and exterminating them, and placed it under the command of Harry Keppel and James Brooke, two young naval officers. The expedition proved eminently successful, and while Keppel returned to civilization, Brooke remained in the Orient, and, having become associated with the Sultan of Borneo, eventually became possessed of Sarawak, which occupies a considerable portion of the Island of Borneo.

Lady Burdett-Coutts played a considerable role in this strange venture of Brooke, supporting him with money, and especially with political influence in England. Sir Charles is married to a Miss de Windt, whose brother, Harry de Windt, is well known as an explorer and a lecturer.

Lord Kelvin's Discovery.

Some interesting tales are told of Lord Kelvin's discoveries, and how the ideas of them have come to his quick mind. For instance, this is said to have been the way in which he found the mirror galvanometer. He was puzzling over the difficulty of perfecting the ordinary telegraphic apparatus used on overhead wires, which was not suited for the varying current passing along cables. The lagging of the electric currents had the effect of making them run together into one bottom current, with surface ripples, which correspond to the separate signals of the message. The problem was how to invent a means of interpreting clearly and easily all the delicate fluctuations. One day Lord Kelvin's eyeglass fell off and swung in front of the magnet, reflecting, its movements, and instantly the idea of the mirror suggested itself. So a monocle has had a direct effect on science!

Eighteen Hundred Farewells.

The Rev. Stephen Gladstone, who is retiring from the rectorship of Hawarden, has a farewell letter in his parish magazine. He says that he has visited every one of the 1,800 homes of his parishioners to say good-bye, but after thirty-two years the parting is very hard. He thanks the Nonconformists for much kindness, and all for the sympathy shown him and his family on the break-up of their home. Mr. Gladstone will for a few weeks take charge of the poor London parish where, under the present Dean of St. Paul's, he was for four years curate. Thus the eldest surviving son of the great Prime Minister passes from the ken of the Cheshire village which his father's zeal made famous through the English-speaking, church-going world. Keen and earnest in his work, he was content with his little parish as his working place, where he will long be remembered and sorely missed.

WAGE REDUCTIONS

The wage reductions and the reductions in earnings of working men through closed industries and decreased output during the past 12 months have been pretty general only in manufacturing but in railroading was there a cutting down of expenses, and of the larger transportation companies materially reduced their mechanical and operating staffs. By the closing down of such companies as the Pullman Company thousands are thrown out of employment. The wave of great prosperity has evidently passed away, and while Canada has not yet been materially affected, the existing conditions in the United States gives warning to us that retrenchment may of necessity be enforced here. Amongst the lists of United States enterprises which have found it compulsory to reduce wages of employees are the following'

Dodd's Kidney Pills doing good Work at Port Arthur.

Mr. Dick Souvey and Wife Both Had Kidney Troubles and the Great Canadian Kidney Remedy Cured Them.

Port Arthur, Ont., Oct. 24.—(Special)—That Dodd's Kidney Pills cure the Kidney ills of men and women alike has been proved time and again in this neighborhood, but it is only occasionally they get a chance to do double work in the same house. This has happened in the case of Mr. and Mrs. Dick Souvey, a farmer and his wife, living about seven miles from here. In an interview Mr. Souvey said:

"My wife and myself have used Dodd's Kidney Pills, and have found them a big benefit to our health. We had La Grippe two winters and were exposed to much frost and cold. Our sleep was broken on account of urinary troubles and pain in the kidneys. We each took six boxes of Dodd's Kidney Pills and now enjoy good health."

The Charm of Victoria Falls.

How the Victoria falls impress a visitor is recorded in Miss C. W. Mackintosh's journal of a tour in South Africa. Miss Mackintosh says: "We perceived no hint of the falls, only seeing before us a screen of rocky based, bright green forest, apparently closing in the river, like a lake. Ten minutes' walk brought us to the camp, on a cliff which literally overhung the gorge, and we saw the cataract thundering down into the boiling pot at our feet. The walls of the chasm, 400 feet high, were spanned by a rainbow. The charm of these falls lies not in the one overwhelming crash as at Niagara, but in the cumulative effect of various glimpses, the matchless beauty of the surroundings and the strangeness of the whole setting, but chiefly in the columns of spray, called the "thundering smoke" and in the ever changing rainbows. The mile wide river suddenly drops into a yawning crack in the ground, stretching right across the stream at right angles to the banks, a foaming trough, quite narrow, of which the walls rose 400 feet above the surface of the water."

LAKE OF PITCH.

Chief Wonder and Attraction of the Island of Trinidad—Natural Asphalt in State of Perfection.

Asphalt, in its natural form, is too brittle when cold and too sticky when warm to make a serviceable road, but when mixed with sand, gravel and tar, answers every requirement. In its natural state, it is found in many parts of the world, but in only one place to perfection, and that is the Island of Trinidad, one of Great Britain's numerous possessions in the West Indies.

Trinidad's great pitch lake, which is the chief wonder and attraction of the island, is situated in a low, sandy stretch of the southwest coast, near Cape Corbaray. The surrounding country is low and malarial, in striking contrast to the high hills and rich woodlands to the coast further back.

The laborers are all negroes, even the coolies shrinking from the heat and low fevers of the place.

The lake itself is about a mile in diameter, hard at the edges and softening toward the middle. The surface is continually changing, apparently from subterranean action. Little oases of dry land, and even trees and shrubs, will disappear in a single night and fresh islands of soil be reared in other places.

The lake is in all probability merely an unusually large deposit of bitumen or soft coal, that has undergone its transformation from decaying vegetable matter in contact with water, and too near the surface for the earth pressure above to harden it thoroughly.

Hundreds of negroes the year round toil at the lake's edge, taking out cargo after cargo from the supply that seems never to diminish.

The asphalt crust is broken up with picks and crowbars, and is loaded on dump-carts, drawn by a single mule. The carts crunch through a long, sandy road down to the wharf at the water's edge, where the load is dumped and carried by wheel barrows on board of lighters, which in turn carry it out to ships, lying a half mile out in the shoal water.

The rough lumps of pickings are hoisted on board in baskets and piled in the hold, where they sink down into a compact mass, requiring a fresh filling the next day, and so on till the solid cargo is completed.

When the vessel reaches its port of discharge the asphalt has to be broken up again before it can be removed from the hold.

Owing to the viscous quality of the native "pitch" it has, in the course of ages, filtered through the sand soil around the lakes, and of these great fields the asphalt is, if anything, better after its filtering process than the original deposit.

Canadian Women.

Mr. P. B. Ball, Canadian Agent at Leeds, England, writing to Toronto Sunday World, says: Some little time ago I noticed that an English lady was writing some rather severe criticisms on Canadian women, and I wondered if it could be my friend, Mrs. Margaret Poison Murray. At that time I had not been very long in this country, and remembering my earlier predilection for English women I did not like to get in the mix up, more especially as I knew how well able both our women and men are to defend the sex. The longer I live in the country the more predisposed I am to acknowledge the better qualities of Canadian women. Many years ago in my callow youth before I had been sufficiently acquainted with their many good points, on my trips here I was disposed to give foreign women the preference, but I thought I would allow my more matured judgment to speak before writing on the subject. It has been my privilege to visit Great Britain, Germany, Austria, France and the United States, and meet women in each of these countries. Hitherto I had always thought that English women were probably the finest, next to them the Austrian, having in mind a visit to Budapest in the late seventies. Looking at the matter after some years' experience I can say honestly that no nation produces a finer class of women than Canada. We do not, as the Germans do, have women for breeding children only, or as upper servants. We do not stand as a race, producing money to clothe the women in purple and fine linen only, as the United States men do. We do not keep our girls back and not allow them to have any say for themselves until after they are married, as France or Austria. We take them something between the British and American. We have the good looks of both, and the sound common sense of the one and the good dressing of the other. We are apt to treat them more as companions than other nations.

Marconi As He Is.

Mr. Marconi has a striking personality. Quite six feet in height, powerfully built, the young inventor has none of that physical frailty which so often distinguishes men great in mind. Many of the published photographs make him boyishly good-looking; in reality his face is the stern, impassive one of a strong man. Somewhat pallid, with clear cold eyes, and a towering white forehead, he has a touch of the dreamer as well as of the remorseless student of facts. He crosses the room with a lounging, leisurely stride, and he speaks to new acquaintances reservedly, almost distantly. To the casual observer there is not a spark of enthusiasm in the young man whose enthusiastic researches have resulted in a discovery which has made him famous all over the world. But once break beneath the surface, and you will find Mr. Marconi a keen and clever talker. He has a wonderful gift of expression, with that cold eloquence that convinces rather than persuades. And yet some of our hardest-headed men have been both convinced and persuaded after a talk with Mr. Marconi.

CANADIAN NEWS.

The Latest Happenings In The Dominion.

C. N. R. CLEANING PLANT.

The cleaning and drying plant recently installed at large cost by the Canadian Northern in its Port Arthur terminal elevators, is now in working order, and in addition to the handling of no grade grain arriving at the lake front over its own rails, it is receiving damaged grain from the Canadian Pacific for treatment by its up-to-date facilities. The Canadian Pacific cleaning plant at Port Arthur, known as "King's," has been disabled, and this throws the entire work of this nature on the Canadian Northern. Under the grain act, public terminal elevators cannot receive for storage grain inspected out of condition, which would entail the disposal of a large quantity of grain at forced sale—besides tying up a large number of cars at a season of the year when they are urgently needed in the movement of the crop.

WINNIPEG PAINTER FALLS TO DEATH.

A distressing accident occurred in Winnipeg on Tuesday, at the Sherbrooke fire hall, which is now under construction, when Mr. J. D. Nesbitt, of Nesbitt & Chandler, painters, 216 Logan avenue, met his death by falling. He with his apprentice were painting the cornice of the tower at a height of 60 feet when the scaffolding broke, precipitating him to the ground, death being instantaneous. The body was at once removed to the general hospital. The boy was more fortunate. When the scaffold gave way he clutched at the sill of the building and succeeded in hanging on to two nails until assistance was rendered releasing him from his perilous position. Deceased was a member of City of Winnipeg Lodge No. 211, Canadian Order of Oddfellows, and leaves a widow and small family.

CANADA GETS GOLD MEDAL.

Dr. Haanel superintendent of mines at Ottawa, has been notified that the gold medal has been awarded to the systematic collection of alluvian gold from British Columbia and Yukon, which was placed on exhibition at St. Louis. The collection consists of seventy-five specimens of gold dust and nuggets from British Columbia. Although not especially a show collection it is of great educational value and will probably find a place on the shelves of the national museum when that building is completed. To each specimen is a card attached showing the locality in which the gold was found, the builion in fineness and value per ounce after melting.

CRIME IS LESSENING.

At the State Department, Ottawa, it has been ascertained that 196 tickets of leave were issued for the year ending with September, as against 413 in the previous year. Of the tickets granted last year eight were afterwards revoked on account of the recipients having failed to comply with the terms on which they were released. All cases are dealt with on their merits. There have been four executions for murder since the 1st of January, 1904. In 1903 five criminals paid the death penalty. One of these was an American, one a Japanese, one an Assyrian and one an Indian.

THREE OF SAME FAMILY DIE.

The sad news has been received of the death at White Horse, Yukon, of H. B. Shadwell, collector customs at that point, and of Mrs. Shadwell and daughter, all of whom succumbed to black diphtheria. Several other members of the family have been attacked with the disease. Mr. Shadwell was formerly a merchant of New Westminster, leaving there for the North about four years ago. He was 50 years of age. The family consisted of Mr. and Mrs. Shadwell, four sons and one daughter.

EX-H. B. CO. MAN DISAPPEARS.

The police of Port Arthur are endeavoring to locate the whereabouts of Thomas Kirkness, who disappeared two weeks ago. He was supposed to have gone to Duluth, but he is not there. It is thought he may have fallen off the dock and drowned. He was in the habit of drinking heavily and becoming utterly incapable of caring for himself. He was an old Hudson Bay employee at Hudson Bay, but lived in Port Arthur for the past 30 years.

BURGLARY AT DAUPHIN, MAN.

On the night of the 18th was a grand field night for robberies at Dauphin, Man, no less than five occurring. Unsuccessful attempts were made to enter Walt's jewelry store and Buckwold's general store, while quantities of clothing were stolen from R. Lilly's, H. Durham's and Grandview Hotel. The police have clues of the thieves.

MORE FAVORABLE RATES FOR FLOUR

The Halifax Board of Trade has succeeded in having a favorable railway rate fixed on Manitoba flour for shipment via Halifax. A short time ago the council of the Board of Trade took the matter up on the ground that Halifax was at the disadvantage of a practically prohibitive rate as compared with other Atlantic ports. As a result the rate has been reduced until it is now only 1c more per 100 pounds to Halifax than to other Atlantic ports. It is to be hoped Halifax dealers will be in a position to handle Manitoba flour for export.

A Barrie (Ont.) young girl, Miss May Slidden, was handling a 32-calibre rifle at the back of her father's house in Barrie a few days ago, when it discharged. The bullet struck Mrs. Mary Villiers, a lady about 65 years of age, and passed completely through her body. Mrs. Villiers is suffering great pain, but it is expected the result will not be fatal.

LOOKS LIKE CHILD MURDER.

A despatch from Woodstock, N. B., dated the 17th says: Yesterday G. W. Van Wart and his hired man discovered the body of a new-born infant in the furnace of Mr. Van Wart's residence. The body had evidently been there some days. A domestic employed in the house has been arrested on suspicion of having been concerned in the crime, and has made a partial admission.

HAROLD WALLIS DIES FROM ACCIDENTAL SHOT.

The accidental discharge of a revolver Oct. 17 caused the death of Harold Wallis, for two years manager of Crooks & Co.'s drug store in Port Arthur and one of the most prominent young men of the Twin Lake towns. With a friend Mr. Wallis had driven into the country to take some views. Seeing a partridge the companion drew a revolver and pulled the trigger. The pistol did not discharge, and the young man started to examine, whereupon it went off, the bullet blowing away a portion of the young man's hand, and lodging in Wallis' forehead. Wallis lived about 15 minutes. Deceased was unmarried.

GRAIN SAMPLES ARE LATE.

A Toronto despatch dated the 17th says: A large meeting of the grain section of the Board of Trade to-day discussed the delay in the determination of the grain standards, which is later this year than in any of the last ten years. E. F. Craig, Montreal, chief inspector, was present, and explained that he had not received samples from the various inspectors throughout the province, which is the system by which samples are collected for fixing the standards. The meeting passed resolutions condemning the system, and advising the chief inspector to get his samples from all shipping points in Ontario by sending after them at the Government's expense.

GIRL KILLED IN TRAIN WRECK.

A fatal head-on collision occurred on the Galt, Preston and Hespeler electric railway on the morning of the 17th, at Preston. Two loaded coal cars, pushed by a freight motor, were being moved on to the siding at Pattinson's mill. The conductor went ahead to open the switch and also to flag the passenger car from Hespeler, as is the rule. The passenger car was not due for ten minutes, and the freight started for the switch. There is a sharp curve at this point, and just as the coal cars reached the switch the passenger car crashed into them. Miss Annie Renwick, of Hespeler, a 16-year-old student of the Galt Collegiate institute, on her way to the school at Galt, was instantly killed, her head being almost severed from the body. George Rooke, a motorman on the passenger car, had his left foot taken off and his right leg broken. Several of the other passengers were injured.

TWO DROWNED.

Fred and Paul Buckensin, brothers; Glen Tewksbury and Guy Stewart, of Morris, went out in boats yesterday, on Lake Pomme De Terre, says a despatch of the 17th from St. Paul. The boats became unmanageable in the storm and all were drowned except Stewart, who reached the shore with much difficulty, and is now in a precarious condition. All the young men were under twenty years of age.

Friday, October 21, 1904.

WHEAT: The market has been generally strong during the course of the past week, but the outstanding feature to the world's wheat situation has been strongly exhibited, viz., the local or domestic strength of the American markets and the almost complete indifference of the European importer to the advances made on this side. On some days sharp advances have taken place in the American markets and these have been quite ignored in the European markets, which next day would show lower quotations in face of the previous day's advance in America. The ability of Europe to thus ignore the American market is something entirely new in recent times. One does not, however, require to search far for the causes. Perhaps the principal cause is the large crops produced in Argentina, Australia and India during the last season, enabling them to supply Europe during the last eight months with unprecedented quantities of wheat. The next principal cause has been a succession of three large crops in Russia, and the willingness or necessity of that country selling apparently all it could ship away. There is no doubt that the aggregate yield of European crops for 1904 is considerably smaller than last year, but the quality being better and the prices higher it has been more freely sold by farmers in the early part of the season. This and the large supplies from other countries have kept the European situation easy in face of a very strong situation in America. On the first inst., the stocks in sight available for Europe were 17,000,000 bushels larger than a year ago, while the stocks in sight available in America were 1,000,000 bushels less than a year ago. Besides the large increase in stocks in Europe and afloat for Europe, there is the present prospect of another large crop in Argentina, a fairly good crop in Australia, and favorable prospects for the seeding of larger acreage in India and Europe. At present Europe is receiving from America and Canada a little over a million bushels in wheat and flour per week. Should American prices advance further this quantity may be lessened or cut off altogether, and later on if Europe has to come to America for wheat European prices would have to advance. In the meantime there are two sides to the wheat question, and it merits careful and deliberate study. The visible supply increased last week 2,622,000 bushels, against an increase of 3,221,000 bushels the previous week and an increase of 1,429,- bushels last year and the total visible showed an increase over previously corresponding weeks for the first time in several years. The world's shipments were 11,386,000 bushels, against 10,616,000 bushels the previous week and 10,538,000 bushels last year. The world's visible supply, according to Bradstreet's, increased 7,100,000 bushels, against an increase of 9,897,000 bushels the previous week and an increase of 4,193,000 bushels last year.

Manitoba wheat has been fairly steady and firm. Cash trade has been slow, but trade for future delivery on the option market has been active. The Northwest Grain Dealers' Association issued a report yesterday estimating the crop in Manitoba and the Northwest Territories at fully 59,000,000 bushels. The movement of wheat by rail to the lake ports is now on a fairly large scale, and stocks are accumulating at Fort William and Port Arthur. Exporters are doing little or nothing as our prices are still somewhat above an export basis. Farmers are not selling freely but incline to hold in hope of higher prices. At the close of business to-day values are 1 Northern, 98½c.; 2 Nor., 95½c.; 3 Nor., 90½c.; No. 4 wheat, 82½.; No. 5 wheat, 65½c.; feed wheat, 55½c., spot or past Winnipeg, and on the option market October closed 98¼c.; November, 97½c.; December, 95¾c.; May, $1.00¼; all prices are for in store Fort William and Port Arthur.

War Summary

St. Petersburg has been cheered by the report that General Kuropatkin has resumed the offensive and by the news of the defeat of the Japanese command of General Okamada and the capture of Lone Tree hill, which is represented to be the key to the position to the southwest fronts of the contending armies. If the report of the advance is authentic and the Russians have crossed to the south side of the Shakhe river, a later rise in that stream may have produced conditions seriously threatening the failure of General Kuropatkin's plans; for it is believed the advance force will be cut off from the reserves and the base of supplies, and retreat rendered problematical. It is, however, questionable if the advance movement had proceeded to the point indicated. There seems no immediate prospects of a cessation of the fighting that has been in progress for the last ten days, although there are signs that on both sides the supply of ammunition is falling short and that the limit of endurance in the troops must have been nearly reached.

There has been an end, for the time being, of the fighting on a large scale, which began when, on Oct. 9, General Kuropatkin announced to his army that the time had arrived for an advance against the Japanese. Heavy rains and consequent bad roads have made military operations on either side extremely difficult, if not impossible. The interruption, according to advices received at St. Petersburg is being utilized by both the Russian and Japanese commanders in making new dispositions of forces, and new objective points are likely to develop when active operations are resumed. A Tokio despatch states that the Japanese Government will seek to make representations to St. Petersburg, through the American embassy, against the alleged use of Chinese uniforms by Russian troops, in violation of the usages of war. Russia is hastening the organization of the second Manchurian army.

Former Mayor S. F. Smith, of Davenport, Ia., a son of Samuel Francis Smith, author of "My Country, 'Tis of Thee," has been sentenced to ten years imprisonment for embezzling $120,000 from estates for which he was trustee.

BELASCO HAS A GUARD.

David Belasco, the theatrical manager, was set upon by a mysterious assailant in New York last Thursday as he was entering a cab with Mrs. Leslie Carter, the actress. Later in the night the same assailant attacked Mr. Belasco, he declares, in front of his home, but did not succeed in doing him harm. Mr. Belasco of late has been accompanied in most of his travels by the stalwart body guard.

The body of a man, supposed to be Milton S. Talbot of Montreal, was found hanging in the woods in the Pelham Bay park, says a New York despatch. A diary showed that he was at one time employed as an electrical engineer in Durban, Natal, South Africa. It showed also that he came to New York, Sept. 4. Several newspaper clippings referred to his invention of an explosive more powerful than dynamite which the British Government was then testing.

BRITT STARTS TRAINING.

Featherweight champion pugilist, Jimmy Britt, who is matched to meet Joe Gans, the middleweight champion, in a 20-round contest in San Francisco on Oct. 31, has begun active training. Britt says he will meet "Young Corbett" in December, whether he loses with Gans.

THE WORLD'S CHAMPION EATER DROPS DEAD.

Phil Melloy, the world's champion eater, dropped dead at Dubuque, Ia., on the 17th. The week before he made a wager of $100 that he could eat eighty-five pounds of beef in 20 hours. The doctors found that his stomach was three times the average size, and was perforated like a sieve. His gastronomic feats had attracted national attention.

INJURED IN A FIGHT.

In a fight at the rooms of the St. Paul Amateur Athlethic Association Tuesday night between Kid Braun, a Chicago pugilist, and Jimmy Pots, of Minneapolis, Braun received a terrific body blow in the second round which may cause his death. He was taken to the hospital. The fight is said to have been allowed to proceed by the referee with a disregard of rules.

CELESTIALS HAVE WAR FEVER.

Bennett Burleigh reports from Shanghai to the London Telegraph that the Chinese are becoming restless and anxious to attack the Russians, but the correspondent of the Times telegraphs from Pekin that after travelling through the northern provinces of China he has arrived at the conclusion that reports of unrest and anti-foreign disturbances have little foundation in fact and are largely disseminated through inbuence of the Russian legation for interested motives.

TRAGIC END TO MONTREALLER

The body of a man, supposed to be Milton S. Talbot of Montreal, was found hanging in the woods in the Pelham Bay park, says a New York despatch. A diary showed that he was at one time employed as an electrical engineer in Durban, Natal, South Africa. It showed also that he came to New York, Sept. 4. Several newspaper clippings referred to his invention of an explosive more powerful than dynamite which the British Government was then testing.

DOUBLE TRAGEDY.

Charles Pfefferman, a wealthy commission merchant, and Cora Kippling, a woman in whom he was interested, were shot to death in Pfefferman's flat at 408 East Seventy-eighth street, New York, just after midnight Saturday night. Pfefferman's wife had left the place after a violent quarrel a few hours before. An hour after the man and woman are supposed to have been slain, a man was heard to leave the apartment and pass down stairs, and was seen to run across the street and disappear. Pfefferman and the woman were each killed by a single shot through the right temple.

"JOE" WALCOTT ARRESTED.

Technically under surveillance on the charge of murder, "Joe" Walcott, the negro pugilist was still at the city hospital this forenoon, says a Boston despatch dated Oct. 18, suffering from pistol wounds in his right hand, self-inflicted, he says, during the accidental discharge of his revolver, which resulted in the killing of Nelson Hall, another negro. His hand is badly shattered from the bullets, and amputation of several fingers may be necessary. Walcott may be unable to leave the hospital for several days at least, to assist at any court proceedings. While the police accept Walcott's story that the shooting was entirely accidental, an examination of those present at the dance last night, where Hall was killed, was started to-day by the authorities.

DESPERATE CRIMINAL THREATENS BLOODSHED.

"I will never be caught alive. I will fight until my last drop of blood is gone. I must fight from now on to live, and nothing would please me better than to kill a few of the officers who are so anxious to capture me and receive the $500 reward." These were the parting exclamations of Edward Donahue, who, on Oct. 2, murdered A. M. Northrup of Benton Harbor at Miller's Station, Ind., and for whom the greatest man hunt ever known in Southern Michigan is now on. After 12 days' wandering, covering 100 miles in several counties of Indiana and Michigan, the fugitive is still at large, but his capture seems a question of only a few hours. He is recognized, however, as one of the most desperate criminals in Michigan, and bloodshed is expected to precede his arrest.

NEARLY AS BAD AS A WAR.

A report issued by the Interstate Commerce Commission at Washington shows that the total number of casualities to persons on the railroads in the United States during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904, was 55,130, of which 3,787 were killed and 51,843 injured. This shows a large increase. The total number of collisions and derailments was 11,201, involving $9,383,077 of damage to cars, engines and roadway. This is an increase of 648 collisions and derailments. The casualities were an increase of 233 killed and of 5,366 injured over the preceding year. Four hundred and twenty of those killed were passengers, and 367 railroad employees; and of those injured 8,077 were passengers and 43,266 railroad employees. In close figures are the statistics for the last three months of the year, which show a total of 677 killed and 11,418 injured, a decrease from the preceding quarter.

IMPORTING MANITOBA WHEAT.

A despatch from St. Paul, Minn., says: Julius H. Barnes, of the Ames-Brooks Company, Duluth, enjoys the distinction of having made the first sale of foreign wheat to be imported into the United States. A few days ago he sold the Consolidated Elevator Company of Duluth a 10,000-bushel lot of Manitoba wheat, to be delivered at the Duluth elevators. In the past wheat has been imported for seed or other special purposes, but this wheat will go into the elevators and into the same channels as ordinary American wheat. This trade was made on a legitimate basis and without a loss to either party, a superior quality of Manitoba wheat and freight rate being matters that operate to the advantage of Manitoba wheat. Barnes asserts his belief that much more Canadian wheat will be imported during the crop year.

SOCIALISTS ATTACK LOYALTY OF ARMY.

The following despatch from Rome, evidently mutilated by the censor, has been received at Genoa: "The Minister of War has addressed a circular to the military authorities saying that in the recent rioting the extreme party tried to induce soldiers to disregard discipline and rebel. Subversive hymns were distributed to some of the soldiers, who destroyed the copies handed them or gave them to their superiors. The subversive propaganda in the army is known, but it is powerless against the sense a duty strongly rooted in the Italian army. Still there is at present a grave danger, which must be fought. At Milan, the escutcheons of a foreign consulate were defaced and the halyard burned by an exiled Russian anarchist."

BULGARIAN OUTLAWS MURDER GREEK PRIEST.

The following semi-official statement has been issued at Athens: "Hardly a day passes without the assassination of Greeks by Bulgarians being reported from Macedonia. Last Sunday, in the village of Brot, near Monastir, an orthodox priest was murdered while he was celebrating mass, and his wife was burned alive in her house. A Greek notable was also assassinated in the church. The object of these crimes is to terrorize Greeks into declaring themselves to be members of the Bulgarian committees, thereby seeking to make the Bulgarian element appear predominant."

STRANGE LOVE AFFAIR RESULTS IN TRAGEDY.

John Namet and his half-brother's wife, Mrs. James Tish, have been found dead in the woods, says a despatch from Shawnee. Mrs. Tish had been shot twice through the left breast, and Namet had two bullets in the head. A revolver was found lying by his side. Mrs. Tish was married three months ago in New York. It is believed that Namet, a bachelor, was enamored of his sister-in-law and, despairing of ever makher his own, decided to kill her and himself. Both were about 22 years old.

FIENDISH ACT OF BOHEMIAN FATHER.

Bohumil Schnepp, a Bohemian, taking his two children, Emma and John, four and three years, into the cellar of their home, killed them by shooting them in the temple, says a despatch from Cleveland. The children had been gagged to prevent an outcry. Schnepp then went to the cemetery, where his wife, who died a year ago, is buried, and shot himself in the head. His wound is not believed to be fatal.

MYSTERIOUS MURDER IN NEW YORK CITY.

Three men are under arrest on suspicion of murder, says a New York despatch, and the police are searching for the body of John Twitch, a Russian saloon keeper, who, they believe, has been the victim of foul play. The men under arrest are Louis Lieseer who occupied a room adjoining one in which Twitch lived; James Ryan, owner of premises where Twitch's saloon is located, and Joseph Highland, a waiter.

2,500 MEN LAID OFF.

Notice was posted, on the 15th, at the plant of the American Locomotive Company in Schenectady, N. Y., stating that all piece-work men could seek other employment when the contracts upon which they are now working had expired. This means that about 2,500 men will be laid off. The officials of the company say that lack of work is the cause for the reduction of the force. The office force also will be materially reduced.

PRODUCING OIL

H. M. Fullerton arrived in the city this morning. While hunting a day or two ago in Southern Alberta he came upon the oil fields of the Rocky Mountain Development Co. where he found astonishing activity. A pump has been placed in the well recently tapped and tanks has been filled at the rate of 50 barrels a day, as fast as the tanks could be made. About 1,000 barrels of oil was already pumped when Mr. Fullerton was there. The shares of the Company have jumped from 50 cents to 85 cents. Several Fernie people are financially interested in this company and some of them are going down to see the property with a view to investing heavier The next proposition ahead of this company is transportation. No doubt either J. J. Hill or the C. P.R. can be induced to build in at once and provide shipping facilties for this new product of the Canadian West. This activity will bring encouragement to the Western Oil Company who are boring nearby and to the hundreds of other claim holders of oil property in the Elk and Flathead Valleys.

The Italian band were again out last Sunday and rendered some excellent music on the public square. If this band would add the British and Canadian anthems and other music of a patriotic nature,—patriotic to the people of Canada,—to its repertoire its exceptional ability would be even more appreciated.

It is reported that the C. P. R. officials are talking of making Crows Nest a divisional point. The road from Kootenay Landing to Dunmore Junction would then be of four sections, with Cranbrook Crows Nest, Lethbridge as divisional points. The advantage of this division is quite apparent. Crows Nest being on the Divide trains can be loaded to suit the grade and much economy can be practised in the use of power.

The builders are taking full advantage of the fair weather conditions. Many buildings are completed, but many others commenced later in the season are being rushed simultaneously to completion with an astonishing rapidity. A visitor to the town who was here two weeks ago expressed astonishment at the changes he saw in that time. The sidewalk is gradually creeping along through the burnt district and very soon the two ends will meet.

Nature has bountifully stored her rich treasures in the hills and valleys surrounding the city of Fernie. The latest discovery is clay that is largely used in the manufacture of Portland cement. Samples of this material have been sent East for analysis. If found to be satisfactory no doubt a large cement factory will be established at this point. Cement has become a very important factor in modern building material and its use is rapidly increasing. Large quantities of coal are required for the manufacture of cement, and nowhere is this obtained in better quality or lower price than right here in Fernie.

Grand Forks people have organized a company to build and operate a skating rink. The company is capitalized at $5000, divided into 500 shares of $10 each and no difficulty is being experienced in disposing of the stock. Such an enterprise has long been talked of in Fernie but so far nothing has come of it. All it needs to make it a success is a live energetic individual or committee to give it a start. Fernie needs a new skating rink. The old one was crowded in other years. Moreover the present owners of the old rink are anxious to use the building for the purpose for which they originally purchased it and while they will not close it as a skating rink this year unless another building is provided they are anxious that such provision be made.

The continued bright dry weather is a marvel even to Oldtimers. Comparatively little rain has fallen since early Spring and the weather conditions have been uniformily favorable for building operations. Indeed had the weather been specially ordered by the local contractors they could not have met their wants more satisfactorily. Surely a kind Providence has looked down upon our struggling efforts to get new coverings for ourselves and goods before the chilling snows of Winter descended. It is true that according to old residents of the districts the recent years have brought an unusual and excessive precipitation of moisture but their keenest recollection fails to bring to mind a season of such uniformly fine weather as the present one. About a dozen years ago, they say, there were several excellent seasons but they failed to come up to this year's standard.

LECTURE ON PALESTINE

The lecture given last night in Knox Church by Rev. A. Dunn, B. D. on Palestine was keenly appreciated by those present. The speaker presented many beautiful word-pictures of that land which is held sacred not only by christians but by the people of all countries. He carried his hearers from place to place and caused them to see the things that he had seen. Many strange customs and manners of the people of the East were related and so explained that they no longer appeared strange, but fitting the conditions surrounding them. Biblical lore was freely recalled suggested by different places touched on, and many old sources for wonder and mystery were dissolved in the clear and logical descriptions of the unchanging conditions underlying life in the Holy Land. The lecture was intensely interesting from beginning to end, and to many present no doubt it proved equally as instructive. Several very choice musical selections were rendered by the choir and others. A respectable sum was netted by the choir for their new music etc.

CHAPTER XVII.

THE VIRGIN WIDOW.

IT is the curse of many to desire most those things they have least courage to attempt. Innumerable Cæsars are chained to plows by dread of unseen hordes of Gauls; endless rows of would be Rothschilds stand behind counters measuring tape, not daring to leap over into the fluctuating sea of values, and Mirabeaus sit mute at every country crossroads lest the world should hiss. A brave act, a bold venture, an earnest word might win the prize, but the arm hangs, the project lags, the lips are dumb in the presence of a possible negation. To such what might be ever holds more terrors than what is.

And thus the native hue of resolution
Is sicklied o'er with the pale cast of thought,
And enterprises of great pith and moment,
With this regard, their currents turn awry
And lose the name of action.

Evariste Oakfell was thus affected. He had rushed into dissolute ways to profit by the evil talents of his brother's foe. He had recklessly embarked in Quillebert's perilous and piratical commerce to enrich himself. He had ruthlessly spurned the love of a lion hearted woman to be untrammeled in the pursuit of a shrinking maiden. Without compunction he had traded with a villain for the proofs of a guardian's infidelity to his trust in order to coerce the submission of the ward. Unflinchingly had he suppressed the true will of his brother and propounded a forgery to render defenseless her whom that brother had loved and sought to protect.

All these had he dared and done and had experienced no trepidation or sting of conscience. But that to which they had reference only, that to which they were designed as mere aids, appalled him. His mind by day and night reveled in imaginings of joyous life with Estelle his wedded wife. A hundred times he set forth determined to make his bliss assured and returned with void yearnings and nothing more. He dared not hear refusal from her pale lips. Could he brave that the course of cruel duress and compulsion he had prepared would be easy, swift and grateful to his temper. But his vanity shrank from her rejection. He sought to convince himself that she would not, could not, say the dreaded word, and yet he knew she had loved Horace and feared she would be loyal to that love. Though armed with the instrumentalities for forcing her consent, he was unable to expel the unquieting belief that the frail, gentle girl was in character such as Carlyle describes his wife, "In her bright career she had more sorrows than are common, but also a soft invincibility, a clearness of discernment, a noble loyalty of heart, which are rare."

Impatient, fretting, chafing at his timorousness, he nurtured his design upon Estelle—it was destitute of the tenderness and generous warmth of love—until it became a mania. Yet he lingered, held back, deferred the test of his fate, not noting the flight of time. The dirge of the Confederacy was sung at Appomattox, and still he halted.

But another spirit more masterful than his rebelled against this procrastination.

"Do you know the war is ended?" said Quillebert, appearing at "L'Esperance" for the first time during his residence in the parish.

"Yes," Evariste replied uninterestedly.

"Then the period has come when I must wind up my affairs here and go back to France, for a time at least, if not permanently," Quillebert continued. "Some of my Christian neighbors are zealous to have the United States authorities pry into my business. My absence will not facilitate them."

"Well, Constant, how can I speed you?"

"Settle our business first. I owe you $8,000 on the last cotton sales. Which do you prefer, the money or the absolute transfer of those two Latiolais papers?"

"You said you would give me those papers."

"I said I would put them at your service free of charge, but you have never called on me for them, and I have no assurance you will ever use them for the purpose which induced my promise. That brings us to the second thing you must do to speed my departure."

"What is that?"

"Marry the Latiolais girl."

"What bearing has that upon your staying or going?"

"This—I have made up my mind that Laure must go with me."

"As your wife?" inquired Evariste, aroused.

"Not at first; later, perhaps," replied Quillebert. "But she knows too much about my business to be left here."

"True enough," Evariste said. "But what has my marriage to do with that?"

"Everything," Quillebert said emphatically. "I am not a fool. I can see my nose at midday without a candle. She will not budge an inch while you remain unmarried. I know her thoroughly. She is as set as the rock of Teneriffe. When you marry, I can control her, not before. She believes she can prevent you, but she cannot. This matter must not longer be put off. It must be brought to a finish now."

"I am not quite prepared"— Evariste began.

"As well prepared as you would be a year hence," Quillebert interrupted peremptorily. "Take care! This is vital to me. I have no time to be wasted by your chicken heartedness or to devote to arguments. Few words are needed. If you will pledge me to marry Estelle Latiolais before the expiration of 60 days, I will give you the papers of old Leonidas now and pay you the $8,000 the day after the marriage. If you fail, I will go to France alone leaving "Constant! You will not do that?"

Laure Luneau here with a full history of the olographic will." Quillebert's face grew hard and cruel. His enunciation of this threat was like the click of the cocking of a rifle.

"God above us, Constant!" exclaimed Evariste, trembling violently. "You will not do that?"

"I certainly will," Quillebert said savagely.

"She will not be believed. The original was destroyed," said Evariste in desperation.

"Perhaps. Nevertheless, she could make great use of the story," Quillebert replied, with a vicious nod.

The torture inflicted upon him by this menace and the prospect it opened before him appeared to deprive Evariste of the power of speech. With terror depicted in his face he stared at his tormentor until the latter stirred him, saying:

"Well?"

"I accept your proposition," he said faintly. "Within 60 days Estelle Latiolais shall be my wife."

"Hone!" grunted Quillebert. "Set about it at once."

"I will begin tomorrow."

"Good!" Quillebert rose. Reaching the door, he stopped and said: "An odd thing has occurred. My little pistol, the one I kept under my pillow at night and in the armoir during the day, has disappeared."

"Whom do you suspect?" Evariste asked, forcing a show of interest.

"I do not suspect any one yet. Laure is the only other person who knew where the weapon was. But I will discover the thief," said Quillebert confidently, and, mounting his horse, he rode away.

Evariste returned to his room to brood over the particulars of this most disturbing interview. The importance which Laure had assumed as a factor in his life startled him as he now realized it. The mention of her name in connection with the missing pistol caused him an uneasiness, too, he could not shake off. Her passion, protestations, warnings and prophecies presented her to his harassed thoughts as an impediment to his purpose, inexorable and mysterious.

The self denials imposed on the people by the conditions of civil war he had escaped through means of the contraband trade so successfully prosecuted by the genius of Quillebert. From France he stocked his larder and buffet; from Paris he supplied his wardrobe. Hence, when, after a night of feverish unrest, he set out in quest of his bride he was arrayed, primmed and perfumed as became a gallant of the boulevards, offensively incongruous to the neighbors clad in homespun, the broken fences and grass grown fields he passed on the dusty bayou road.

There was unrest, too, at the Latiolais home. Age, dissipation, hypnotics and remorse were hastening the grandfather to wreck and miserable death. Night after night he walked his room with shaking step, sleepless and bemoaning his impotence to recoup his own and Estelle's estates or conceal the unworthy methods by which he had incumbered them to gratify his low appetites. Her written authority to mortgage for maintenance, unquestioningly conferred on his advice, he had meanly used to protect his gambling debts and bills for rum and morphine, leaving the legitimate accounts unliquidated, unsecured and bearing ruinous interest. His perfidy would become known to Estelle and the world at his death, now fast approaching; his memory would be execrated by all honest men; his grandchild would inherit only poverty and his disgrace. The sole escape lay in her preceding him to the grave; his only hope was to die before the storm broke. These goading, unrelenting thoughts banished sleep; distress gave free current to his tears, whether alone or in the presence of Estelle; the coma of opium was his refuge.

When Odette announced Evariste Estelle, tenderly ministering to the venerable sufferer, was on the point of leading him to stroll in the garden among flowers she herself had planted, nursed and reared into loveliness. At the name of the visitor a tremor passed over the wasted frame of the old man, but he looked beseechingly at his companion and said:

"Go to him, child, and receive him pleasantly. He has been our very solicitous friend. Do not keep him waiting. Odette will assist me into the house when I become fatigued."

She left him with Odette and proceeded to her parlor.

She was gowned in simple white. A deep collar about her neck was clasped by a medallion portrait of her mother in miniature. The pale brow deepened the hue of her soft brown hair. The eyes of dark hazel, large and liquid, the small mouth of perfect curves and the finely molded chin gave a beauty to her face which was eloquent of affection, truth and patience—the beauty which subdues by its gentleness, compels by its sweetness, the beauty which refines prosperity and hallows affliction.

"It is kind of you to call, my friend, for our house is sadly in need of cheer," she said, greeting Evariste.

"No misfortune has come to you, I hope," he replied, seeking, yet dreading, a suggestion for the declaration he was resolved to make. "You have not been ill?"

"No; I must not fall sick, for there would then be no one to nurse my poor grandfather."

"Is he not as usual?"

"Much worse than usual. I am sorely distressed over his state. He is rapidly failing. Sleep and appetite are denied him. He is grieving over some imaginary or real trouble which he keeps secret to himself. Oh, why could not this good old gentleman be rescued from that wicked man Quillebert?"

"Mademoiselle, I labored for that sincerely."

"I believe you; indeed, I believe you. It was not to complain of you that I spoke. It was only to bewail the hard fate. I fear it is now too late."

"How too late?" asked Evariste in a tone of concern.

"I do not think my grandfather will live through the summer. I am sure he will not unless he can be relieved of the mental anxiety that is so fast consuming his strength." Estelle's eyes began to well over as she made this gloomy prediction.

"Mademoiselle, what would you do, what would you give to cure M. Latiolais and make him what he was ten years ago?" Evariste's nervousness became apparent as he thus suddenly approached the crisis.

"Ah, le bon Dieu!" she exclaimed. "I am very weak, and I am very poor, but there is no task I would not undertake, nothing of mine I would not give! But, alas, I am powerless to cure or restore him."

"No, you are not powerless. You have the cure."

"I?" she said, astonished. "Surely you are jesting, monsieur. But it is a strange subject for merriment."

"Mademoiselle, it is a subject upon which I could not jest if I would," Evariste protested, with warmth. "I repeat seriously that you possess your grandfather's cure. Will you give him the benefit of it?"

"I love my grandfather so that I would willingly die to save him. But what is this cure, monsieur? How can I restore him? Your words mystify me."

"And yet they are simple and easily understood," replied Evariste. "Listen, mademoiselle. I perfectly comprehend the troubles which oppress M. Latiolais and threaten his health. He has not the talent for business and has not exercised due care in his affairs. The consequence is that he now finds himself indebted beyond his means of payment and fears he has involved your interests also. Having the sensitiveness of a gentleman, this condition preys upon his mind. His long addiction to drink and drugs has unfitted him to bear the strain. He is shortening his life by silent, corroding grief."

Waiting His Turn.

"Well, Jack," said his chum after Jack had proposed to the most popular girl in the town, "is it all right?"

"Well," said Jack ruefully, "I can hope—that's all."

"What did she say?"

"She said she'd file my proposal with all the others and consider it when she got down to it."

JESUS' JUDGMENT RULE

"LET HIM THAT IS WITHOUT SIN CAST THE FIRST STONE."

SIN OF MODERN SOCIETY

Rev. Dr. Talmage Discusses the Tendency to Unsparingly Condemn in One Sex What Is Tolerated in the Other—Universal Habit of Condemning Others For Sins Similar to Those We Conceal.

Entered according to Act of Parliament of Canada, in the year 1901, by William Baily, of Toronto, at the Dep't of Agriculture, Ottawa.

Los Angeles, Cal., Oct. 16.—In this sermon the preacher discusses the tendency of society to unsparingly condemn in one sex what is tolerated in the other, and the almost universal habit of denouncing in others sins which we conceal and excuse in ourselves. The better way of the divine law is illustrated from the text, John viii., 5, "What sayest thou?"

Have you studied constitutional law? Without doubt it offers one of the most appetizing feasts ever spread in the banquet hall of the mental epicurean. It follows with unerring eye the ramifications of a Government's internal organism, even as a medical student searches out the entangled pathways of the nerves and muscles and arteries of the human frame. It tells us where the brain is, where the heart is and why the arm is sinewy and strong. It tells from whence comes the source which creates the law and whence the power which executes the law.

Constitutional law is above all other kinds of law. The National Congress and the Legislatures of the States deal with conditions as they arise, and sometimes, in their haste to remedy an evil or to provide means for an urgent purpose, they enact a statute which proves to be unconstitutional. What do we mean by that? We mean that there are certain fundamental principles of government embodied in our constitution which must not be transgressed. If a law is passed which violates one of those principles there is no need to repeal it, because when it is found to be unconstitutional it at once becomes void and inoperative. Thus back of all legislation stands the constitution as the supreme test by which the acts of President and lawmakers are judged. It defines the rights of rulers and legislators and sets limits to their power and is the safeguard of national liberty.

In the kingdom of God we have also a supreme authority. The councils of the churches may formulate doctrines, make decrees and construct creeds and catechisms, but high over all there is the will of the great King of kings. Christ is the supreme ruler of his kingdom, and his word is the test by which every dogma and practice must be judged. Let us consider some of the characteristics of this government.

First it is an absolute monarchy. We have governments on earth that we describe as absolute monarchies, meaning that they have no constitution. We speak about the Russian Government as an absolute monarchy, but it is not. There are thousands of things which the Russian Czar would like to do which he cannot do. With his pistol or sword Nicholas might slay his own children, as Ivan the terrible in maniacal rage killed his first-born son, and no power on earth could bring him to justice. But there are limits to the present Czar's power. His own subjects recognize the fact. The old Russian proverbs tell us there are many things the Czar cannot do. Among those proverbs are the following: "Even the Czar gets his shoes bespattered if he puts his foot in a puddle." "The Czar's crown cannot protect him from a headache." "The ox of the Czar can have only two horns." "Even the Czar's vinegar will not sweeten." "Put the Czar in the desert and he is a man and nothing more." "The Czar's edicts are good for nothing unless God's 'Amen' is written on them." By these quaint aphorisms, current in Russia, do the people show that they realize that, powerful as the Russian autocrat is, he is subject to human limitations, like the most obscure peasant in his Empire. It is well known, too, by statesmen that even as a ruler he is not so supreme as is thought. The nobles who surround him exercise a constraint upon him, and his agents often thwart his will.

In an infinitely higher sense is Christ the absolute ruler in his kingdom. In his wisdom and power he governs without check, and his word is the law and life of his people. "I am the Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the ending, saith the Lord, which is and was and which is to come the Almighty." "That means," says Dr. Key, "Christ is all in all of creation, of history, of Scripture, of salvation. He is all in all in the life of the believer and in the life of the Christian church and in the life of everything." He is in truth more than a president, more than a Doge of Venice, more than a King, more than a Czar. He is an absolute monarch in the Christian world. He shares his throne with no one. He is king of kings. His word is the law and the only true law. Christ again and again emphatically stated that by him and through him must all things be judged as right or wrong.

A significant illustration of Christ's originality and his freedom from current principles and prejudices is given in the gospels, and it may help us to understand his attitude if we study the story. One day while Jesus was teaching in the temple surrounded by the people the scribes and Pharisees tried to entrap him. Right into the temple where Jesus was they dragged a trembling, frightened, sobbing woman who had been taken in adultery. Right through the crowds of listeners they pushed her. Then they cried out in stentorian tones so that all could hear: "Master, what shall we do with her? Shall we stone her to death, as Moses commanded, or shall we let her go free?" Instead of Christ condemning or acquitting the poor creature, as they all supposed he must do, Christ by his actions as well as by the word of lip condemned the men who were her accusers. What was the meaning of that judgment? We cannot for a moment suppose that a being so pure as Christ thought lightly of so heinous a sin. It must have been loathsome and abhorrent to him, but we may learn a lesson from the way in which he treated the sinner and her accusers, a lesson all the more weighty because it comes from him who is the embodied law of the kingdom of God.

The divine law, in the first place, makes no discrimination between the masculine and the feminine sins. It does not come to man and smilingly say, "Husband, you have a right to be a libertine, while your wife must tread the narrow path of virtue." It does not say, "Brother, here in the 'saloon of respectability' you can get drunk, but if your sister is found in that saloon she will be disgraced for life." It does not say that a man can tell vile stories and frequent the low race tracks and be the companion of pugilistic thugs and dissolute characters and still be respected, while a woman, having done wrong, can never be allowed to enter again into the association of the good and the true and the respectable. But the divine law does say this: "Oh, men, if the sin that this woman has committed is to be punished by stoning, every one of you who has committed the same sin deserves to be stoned also." A blasphemy from a man's lips in the sight of God is just as vile and culpable as a blasphemy from a woman's lips. And yet from time immemorial the world has always had two criminal courts in which it has judged its moral delinquents. The one is the "court of mercy" for masculine offenders; the other is the "court of no hope," in which lynx-eyed Judge Hardheart sits upon the bench, charging the jury of "no regrets" and sentencing woman defendant after woman defendant to a life imprisonment in the "penitentiary of despair."
