A good farm paper is a true and unselfish friend.
Keep the soil rich and open around your fruit trees.
Apples are the easiest of fruit to grow and the best.
A full feed at every meal, but not an overfull one.
Provede yourself with a rich and mellow garden spot.
The low-down wagon has been a long time coming.
Keep rubbish away from the trees; it harbors mice.
Try to produce everything above the average quality.
Poultry will consume most of the refuse of the kitchen.
If there is no money in hogs now, when will there be?
A moderate amount or good silage is good for sheep.
Too much working spoils the flavor and grain of butter.
Maintain all the conditions of health, as far as possible
The hen likes a dark nest but a light place to feed in.
A tree must have plenty of room in which to grow.
When fruit is produced, the end of the tree is full.
A good pedigree promises a good produce, but may fail.
The strawbury likes a mellow deep soil, moist but not wet.
Make your cuttings when the plants are the most vigorous.
Air-sloked lime is cheap. Use it freely as a disinfectant.
Eggs are always in demand, and the demand is increasing.
The smaller the breed, the higher must be the fence for hens.
Hornless cattle are more comfortable, and make you feel so.
Laws should favor justice, not monopoly; but they don't do it.
Don't expect a hog to thrive on the ration that you feed to a pig.
The more your fruit is excluded from the air, the better it will keep.
The man who breeds and feeds his own pork knows what he has got.
Only strictly new and fresh cream can be churned at 36 to 39 degrees F.
Keeping the dropping well cleaned up prevents disease among fowls.
The cow and the pig are not much alike, but they match well on the farm.
A man may have a leading crop, but it is not safe in depending on a specialty.
Keep abreast with the times in thought and deed; no harm if you lead a little.
Breed your hens so that the moulting season will come when eggs are cheapest.
Ripened cream requires a high temperature —60 to 70 degrees—for successful churning.
The farmer cannot know too much about his occupation, but he may know too much that isn't so.
Irregularities in laying show that the hens are too fat. This makes double-yolked eggs.
Would it not pay for our dairymen to grow more peas and beans and buy less cotten-seed meal and bran?
Ammonia is a form of nitrogen very liable to get away from you. It is not directly a fertilizer, but turns to one in the soil.
"Prove that dehorning does not injure the animal, says prejudice. There are ten thousand proofs, but prejudice can't see them.

THE DAIRY.

Report of the Dairy Commissioner of the State of New York.

The retiring dairy commissioner of the state of New York has just issued his annual report. When he began his work as dairy commissioner the annual sale of oleomargarine in the state was estimated as at least 15,000,000 pounds. After establishing the validity of the anti-oleomargarine law the commissioner went to work to suppress the clandestine trade. The state was divided into ten districts, and an assistant or deputy dairy commissioner was appointed in each of them. It may be fairly said that the enforcement of the statutes against the production and sales of simulated dairy products has produced the great result of reducing the consumption of oleomargarine and kindred products in this state from 15,000,000 pounds per year to practically nothing. The assistant commissioner of New York city makes the statement that during the past year receipts of eastern butter in that city increased 1,361,850 pounds and that seven-eights of that increase was produced in this state. Commissioner Brown adds: "There is no question that the butter now made in New York state is genuine and free from adulteration." Under the head of milk, Commissioner Brown says: The first investigations of the department revealed the fact that from 75 to 90 per cent. of all the milk sold for consumption was adulterated, Part of it was mixed with fully 25 per cent, of water. The law under which the department set out to improve this condition of affairs establishes a standard of quality below which milk must not be put upon the market or offered for sale. That standard is that milk to be lawful must contain at least 12 per cent. of solids and 3 per cent. of butter fat. The dairy commissioner proceeded to enforce the law. The effect of such enforcement was seen in the case of Rochester. At the end of a year's work in that town the area from which the supply was drawn had become enlarged by a radius of from 25 to 50 miles, the old territory being no longer able to supply the demand when the well buckets could not be called in with safety to help the dealers out. The change in New York city, according to the commissioner's statement, was equally astonishing. In 1885, when dealers were free to carry on their milk and water trade, the receipts were 4,930,450 cans of 40 quarts each, while in 1892, water having been shut off, the receipts were 7,040,342 cans. After a chapter on cheese making in which it is shown that the plan of the department for having factories adopted and use brands to identify their product is working satisfactorily, the report gives a favorable view of the state animals from which our supplies of dairy food are derived. It estimates the number of cows in the state at 15,552,923. [This is at least 10,000,000 to high.] By far the greater portion of these are, of course, in the country where they have plenty of food, drink and air. The milk and butter obtained from these cows are practically guaranteed by the outgoing commissioner, to be wholesome and of satisfactory quality.

Relief Comes When Hope Has Almost Fled.

An Ex-Councillor of Oso Township Tells of His Release From Suffering—His Neighbors Verify His Statements—A Marvellous Cure That is Now a Household Word.

Kingston Whig.

The readers of the Whig will remember that our reporter at Sharbot Lake, on two or three occasions last winter, wrote of the serious illness of Edward Botting, a well-known and respected resident of the township of Oso. Mr. Botting, was so low that his friends had no hope of his recovery, and although of an energetic disposition and not the kind of a man to give up easily, he even felt himself that life was slipping from him. Later we learned that Mr. Botting's recovery was due entirely to the use of that remedy which has achieved so many marvellous cures that its name is now a household word throughout the land—Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People,

Our reporter visited Mr. Botting at his home on the picturesque shore of Succor Lake. Mr. Botting is a very intelligent and agreeable gentlemen, some seventy-five years of age, but looking and acting as smartly as a man twenty years younger. He is probably one of the best known men in this section. He was postmaster at Fermoy for fourteen years, and a councillor of the united townships of Bedford, Oso, Olden and Palmerston for ten years. He gave the Whig representative a cordial greeting, remarking that it was his favorite paper and that he had been a constant subscriber for forty-nine years. Mr. Botting readily consented to give his experience in the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, saying that he believed it was a duty he owed to humanity to let the public know what they had done for him. "It was about two years ago," said Mr. Botting "that I first began to feel that I was not my old self. Up to that time I had been exceptionally strong and rugged. My illness first came in the form of kidney trouble, which seemed to carry with it general debility of the whole system, and none of the medicines that I took seemed to do me any good. I am not of a disposition to give up easily, and I tried to fight off the trouble and continued to go about when many another would have been in bed. Things went on in this way until about a year ago when I had a bad attack of la grippe, and the after effects of that malignant trouble brought me so low that my friends despaired of my recovery. I did not give up myself for that is not my disposition, but when I found that the remedies I tried did me no good, I must admit I was discouraged. I was troubled with severe and constant pains in the back, sensations of extreme dizziness, weakness, and was in fact in a generally used up condition. I had read frequently in the Whig of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and at last the conviction forced itself upon me that they had some special virtue else they could not obtain such strong endorsations in all parts of the country. The upshot was that I determined to try them and I bless the day that I came to that conclusion. Before the first box was finished I felt benefited, and I continued their use until I was as strong as ever. I have lately worked hard and find no ill effects therefrom. I consider Dr. Williams' Pink Pills the best medicine sold, and you may say I would not be without them in the house if they cost $5 a box. All my neighbors know what Pink Pills have done for me," said Mr. Botting, "and I would just like you to ask some of them."

Your reporter acted upon the hint and first saw Mrs. L. Kish, a daughter of Mr. Botting, Mrs. Kish said "What my father has told you is quite true. It was Pink Pills that cured him and we are very, very thankful. Father is now as smart as he was twenty years ago."

Charles Knapp a prominent farmer, said: "I consider Mr. Botting's cure a most wonderful one and I believe he owes his life to Dr. Williams' Pink Pills." Your reporter called at John W. Knapp's but found that gentleman away from home. His wife, an estimable and intelligent lady said, "we are aware that Mr. Botting was very sick for a long time and considering his age thought it unlikely that he would recover, but he is now as smart as he was ten years ago and he ascribes it all to Dr. Williams' Pink Pills."

Mr. Avery Reeve, of the Township of Oso, and warden of the county of Frontenac, merchant, told your reporter that he has a large and constantly increasing sale for Pink Pills, and from all quarters has good reports of their curative qualitise.

H. W. Hunt, a commissioner and school teacher, said he had known Mr. Botting for a number of years and considered him a well read and intelligent gentleman, who if he said Pink Pills had cured him, could be depended upon, as he is a very conscientious man who would not make a statement that was not accurate.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are a perfect blood builder and nerve restorer, curing such diseases as rheumatism, neuralgia, partial paralysis, locomotor ataxia, St. Vitus' dance, nervous headache, nervous prostration and the tired feeling therefrom, the after effects of la grippe, diseases depending on humors in the blood, such as scrofula, chronic erysipelas etc. Pink Pills give a healthy glow to pale and sallow complexions and are a specific for the troubles peculiar to the female system, and in the case of men they effect a radical cure in all cases arising from mental worry, overwork, or excesses of any nature.

These Pills are manufactured by the Dr. Williams Medicine Company, Brockville, Ont., and Schenectady, N. Y., and are sold only in boxes bearing the firm's trade mark and wrapper, at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50. Bear in mind that Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are never sold in bulk or by the dozen or hundred, and any dealer who offers substitutes in this form is trying to defraud you and should be avoided. The public are also cautioned against all other so called blood builders and nerve tonics, no matter what name may be given them. They are all imitations whose makers hope to reap a pecuniary advantage from the wonderful reputation achieved by Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. Ask your dealer for Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People, and refuse all imitations and substitutes.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills may be had of all druggists or direct by mail from Dr. Williams' Medicine Company from either address. The price at which these pills are sold make a course of treatment comparatively inexpensive as compared with other remedies or medical treatment.

OCCIDENTAL ODDITIES.

A Graphic Description of a Trip across the Continent in Winter.

By a Frederictonian.

But as it was raining like the 'Old Harry,' pouring right down without any consideration whatever; the sky overhead dark and murky; the grey mist enveloping and hiding all the peaks and mountains round about. Just our luck again. When there was nothing much of any account to be seen; when we were running through that abominably uninteresting; that flat, dull, stale unprofitable prairie country, or even worse, when we were wearying our eyes and worrying our hearts out trying to observe something noticeable in that barbarous western Ontario district; we had the bright clear sun, and the fair blue sky, vieing with each other in mocking our sad plight; fairly laughing at us in our predicament; and now when we are in the midst of the grandest, sublimest scenery on the North American continent, we haven't enough blue sky to patch a pair of pants, but rain enough to flood Mount Ararat itself. Truly it was disappointing. We have passed Keith, Cochrane, Radnor, Morley and are now running past Kananaskis after leaving Cochrane and crossing the Bow River, the line ascends the top of the First Terrace and approaches Kananaski. The Kananaskis river is crossed by a high iron bridge, a little above where it joins the Bow and the roar of the great Kananaskis Falls on the Bow River, may, so they say, be heard from the railway. But we didn't hear it. The only roar audible anywhere near me at that time of night, was the roaring snore of my nearest neighbour, who would vie with old Niagara itself. This is without doubt what awakened me and very glad I was. Just beyond Kananaskis station a bend in the line brings the train between two almost vertical walls of dizzy height. These we could just dimly see in the early rainy morning, and they form the gap by which the railway enters the mountains. We are ascending the Bow River, which here issues forth from the mountains.

These sheer hills on either side look very grand and solemn even on this dull morning, and to a New Brunswicker are imposing in a way which it is difficult to describe. They over awe one standing there in their sublime indifference to all worldly affairs whatever, and seem to impress you with an awful sense of your own littleness and unimportance in this world. But we must not moralize. We are all feeling dark ultramarine blue by this time. We look at the guide book, and we see there something like this—"Beyond this gateway the track turns Northward and ascends the long valley between the Fairholme range in the right and the Kananaskis range opposite. The prominent peak in the left is Pigeon Mountain, and in approaching the station called the Gap, a magnificent view is obtained of Wind Mountain, and the three sisters also on the left. A remarkable contract between the ranges ahead is noticable On the right are fantastically broken and castellated heights; on the left, massive snow laden promontories, rising thousands of feet, penetrated by enormous alcoves in which haze and shadow of gorgeous coloring be engulfed." Of course they lie engulfed; and pretty well engulfed they are this morning. Anyone might have known that without being told.

FREDERICTON, N. B., FEB. 25, 1893.

ELLIS VS THE QUEEN

The decision of the Supreme Court of Canada in the contempt case of Ellis vs. The Queen, appealed from the Supreme Court of New Brunswick interested in the relations which the Press bears to public life in general. The history of the case is that in the general election for the House of Commons in 1887 G. G. King received a majority of the votes cast in the county of Queens. John R. Dunn, the returning officer, however, declared George F. Baird, the minority candidate elected. Mr. King endeavoured to have a recount, and applied to Judge Steadman, County Court Judge, who was the proper officer under the statute. Judge Tuck, at the instance of Baird's counsel, granted an injunction to prevent Judge Steadman holding the recount, and Mr. Baird retained the seat. The St. John Globe of which Mr. J. V. Ellis is the editor in chief and part proprietor, strongly censured Judge Tuck's interference with Judge Steadman in the discharge of his statutory duties. Proceedings in contempt were commenced by the Crown against Mr. Ellis, and he was by the Supreme Court of New Brunswick, found guilty of contempt. An appeal was taken to Ottawa, and the dicision as embodied in the judgement of the court rendered on Monday, is to the effect that no appeal lies from the judgement of our Supreme Court in the matter of contempt, which is criminal in nature. The act providing for appeals does not apply to criminal cases, when the lower court is unanimous. The effect of this decision, unless appealed to the Judicial committee of the Privy Council in England; will be be to sustain the judgement of our own Supreme Count. As, however, the court at Ottawa were guided almost entirely by a recent decision of the Privy Council declaring a criminal proceeding, it is not likely the case will be further appealed. The peculiar part of the affair is that Judge Fournier, of the Supreme Court of Canada, in discussing the merits of the case in his judgement, himself criticized Judge Tuck rather severely, remarking that the proceeding in an election matter, was unheard of, and that he had no power to restrain any court or any Judge acting under powers vested in him specially by the controverted elections act, and cited cases in support of his criticism, both from the Privy Council and the upper Canada court of Queen's Bench. It seems very unfair to Mr. Ellis that the case should have been decided in this way. It still remains a fact that the Globe, in criticesing Judge Tuck's action in grantiug the injunction, was in the right, but in face of all that the decision of the highest court but one in Canada goes against him, while a member of the same court, himself indulges in a little criticism of Judge Tuck's conduct in this very matter. Judge Fournier, however, being a member of a court having higher jurisdiction than that in which Judgs Tuck sets, will, we presume, be beyond the reach of any proceedings in contempt, while Mr. Ellis is mulcted in a heavy sum for conduct identically the same.

HOME RULE.

The debate on the Home Rule bill still goes on in the British House of Commons. Speeches have already been made against it by Messrs. Balfour, Chamberlain, Lord Randolph Churchill and others, whose great cry is "dismemberment of the Empire." They point out to Mr. Gladstone, with incessant unanimity, that if the Home Rule bill passes the House, the United Kingdom will be forever disrupted. The Grand Old Man and his loyal followers do not seem much disturbed by these gloomy forebodings. Speeches in support of the bill have been made during the week by many liberals, including Henry Labouchere and Edward Blake. The latter received the freest encomiums on his success. It was his first important speech in the House of Commons and Sir William Vernon Harcourt, Chancellor of the Exchequer, says Mr Blake's speech was the best ever uttered in parliament on the subject of Home Rule. Canadians as a whole should be very proud of the success of the public man, among the leading public men of the world. As for the bill it seems to have met with the approval of all the Gladstonian following. The Tories were building their hopes on the expectation that Mr. Gladstone could not frame a measure which would fully satisfy his ultra-Irish followers, but they have been disappointed. An address has been issued by Justin McCarthy, Blake, Sexton, Healy, O'Connor and other leading Irishmen to their Irish brethren in Canada, Australia and the United States expressing their entire satisfaction over the measure and asking for financial aid in carrying on the almost inevitable struggle with the House of Lords. As an instance of the scale on which public affairs are carried on in England it is worth while to note that the Home Rule Bill is not expected to reach the House of Lords before the first of of June, or three and a half months yet. Despatches from the North of Ireland indicate that the Orangemen in Ulster are determined to give all the opposition in their power to Home Rule. An address has been issued by the Grand Master and Secretary, in language full of the jingo spirit and smacking of the old times when ignorance prevailed in England, and disputes were settled, not by the exercise of brain power, but by brute force, calling upon the Orangemen to stand firm. One would imagine that Gladstone was marching for Ulster with a couple of million Irishmen at his back armed with bloody shillelahs, and intent upon nothing but bloodshed. Such manifestations are ridiculous in the extreme. But we are inclined to think that the whole matter is part of the Tory scheme to frighten and cause panic among the people of England over Home Rule, and we hope the people of England have too much good sense to listen to such bullying talk.

Dr. Weldon M. P. for Albert is a great favourite with the Sun Newspaper of St. John. Almost everything Dr. Weldon does is endorsed by the Sun very readily. The Sun some time ago undertook to sit very heavily on Prof. Davidson of the U. N. B., because of some remarks the latter saw fit to make in his inaugural address, regarding the prevalence of political corruption in New Brunswick. Prof. Davidson, so said the Sun, had not been in the province long enough to judge intelligently of the condition of political affairs. But Dr. Weldon, the Sun's chromo politician, has just introduced a bill in the House of Commons providing a very heavy punishment for the taking of bribes by voters. Dr. Weldon recognizes the existence of the evil and promotes legislation to prevent it and the Sun eulogizes his purity of mind. Probably the chief reason why Dr. Weldon's bill so satisfactory to the Sun is that it does not provide any punishment for those who give the bribes, thus affording the Tory politicians at St. John and elsewhere abundant scope to prosecute their evil work with impunity, while the poor voters whom they purchase in so great numbers at every election will bear a heavy punishment.

Mr. S. G. Derry
Of Providence, R. I.,

widely known as proprietor of Derry's Waterproof Harness Oil, tells below of his terrible sufferings from Eczema and his cure by

HOOD'S Sarsaparilla

"Gentlemen: Fifteen years ago I had an attack of inflammatory rheumatism, which was followed by eczema or salt rheum, breaking out on my right leg. The humor spread all over my legs, back and arms,

A Foul Mass of Sores, swollen and itching terribly, causing intense pain if the skin was broken by scratching, and discharging constantly. It is impossible to describe my suffering in those years of agony and torture. I spent in futile efforts to get well, and was discouraged and ready to die. At this time I was unable to lie down in bed, had to sit up all the time, and was unable to walk without crutches. I had to hold my arms away from my body, and had to leave my arms, back and legs bandaged by my faithful wife twice a day.

"Finally a friend who was visiting at our house, urged me to take Hood's Sarsaparilla. I began by taking half a teaspoonful. My

Stomach Was All Out of Order

But the medicine soon corrected this, and in six weeks I could see a change in the condition of the humor which nearly covered my body. It was driven to the surface by the Sarsaparilla, the sores soon healed, and the scales fell off. I was soon able to give up bandages and crutches, and a happy man I was. I had been taking Hood's Sarsaparilla for seven months; and since that time, nearly two years, I have worn no bandages whatever and my legs and arms are sound and well.

Oscar Wilde's new play which is to be produced at the Haymarket Theatre in London, will bear the rather odd title, A Woman of No Importance. Of course, the woman is really of a very great deal of importance, but Mr. Wilde's title is at least suggestive of her character. In this play Mr. Beerbohm Tree, who has hitherto achieved his greatest successes in character roles, will play the part of a genteel villian. The American rights in A Woman of No Importance have already been disposed of by Mr. Wilde.

It has been said that society, after applauding skirt-dancers, Spanish dancers, and other eccentric performers and entertaining them, set about to imitate for select audience on special occasions solely with the ken of the four hundred. As the Vaudeville Club is an exclusive institution, is it not fair to presume that its members are now simply taking lessons from its paid entertainers with a view to future exploits of its own within its own charmed—and no doubt charming—circle?

May Merrick's costume when she enters the Central Park scene in "The Two Sisters" is admirably gotten up. It is just about what a country girl with a little taste, but a great deal of money suddenly given into her possession, would be likely to acquire. And that is just the situation in the play. The picture of the tramp sitting in lordly ease on a park bench after he has swallowed a baby's allowance of lacteal fluid is quite a true representarion of the only leisure class we have in this country.

Said the ingenue girl to the small soubrette:
"Your manner's exceeding tough!"
"Are you giving lessons in etiquette?"
Said the small soubrette in a huff.
Then the first old woman she chipped in,
With a soothing word of tact,
That was lost, alas, in the general din,
As the prompter called: "First Act!"
Do you think they will mingle each other in rage?
Inquired the gasman new;
"Oh no!", said props, "they've 'made up' for the stage,
All actors and actresses do!"

The Great Blood and Nerve Remedy

THE CRISP-CURRIE CASE.

Mr. Crisp Found Not Guilty, the Vote Being Three to Two on Two Charges.

The conference committee which has been investigating the charges against Rev. Robert Crisp has at last completed its labor. After hearing evidence for several days at Fredericton and for two days in St. John the five members settled down to consult and deliberate as a jury. This task has occupied two days three sessions each day, and can hardly be said to be satisfactorily completed as the committee is still divided in opinion.

It will be remembered that Rev. Mr. Howie preferred three charges against Mr. Crisp. These the committee took up separately. The first charge is as follows:

That the Rev. Robert Crisp was guilty on or about August 3rd. 1884, of committing adultery with an unmarried woman living in Scotchtown, Queens county, N. B.

On this charge Mr. Crisp was acquitted, three members of the committee voting for acquittal and the two for conviction.

The second charge sets forth—

That being accused in November or December of the same year of being the father of the unborn child referred to he conspired to direct the charge from himself and fix it on D. D. Currie.

The committee by unanimous vote acquitted Mr. Crisp of this charge. It is understood that Mr. Crisp argued strongly that he could not be convicted of conspiring to bring a guilty man to justice; that the conference had found Mr. Currie guilty, and that no new evidence had been produced to break down the case against Mr. Currie.

The third charge was:

That he has been guilty of misrepresentation, deception and falsehood in concealing and denying his connection with the woman, and in concealing and denying his correspondence with Dr. Gardner in relation to the above charges.

On this charge the finding was not guilty, by a vote of three to two, the members of the committee voting as on the first charge.

Mr. Howie, who was in town yesterday was notified of the finding. He will leave for his home on the Gibson circuit this morning. Mr. Howie states that he will certainly appeal the case to the conference. Had the committee returned a unanimous verdict of acquittal he might have seen his way clear to allow the inquiry to drop, but in view of the almost even division of the committee, he thinks he should bring the matter before the full ministerial conference In this view he is said to have the support of the committee of trial. Probably also he will have the support of Mr. Crisp, who will hardly care to rest under the stigma that two out of five jurors believe him guilty of a serious offence.

The discipline as revised provides that an appeal of this kind as to facts shall be heard by conference in ministerial session, instead of by a conference committee of twelve or nine, as formerly. The next annual conference will meet at Moncton and the court will comprise somewhere near a hundred ministers.

POOR DOCUMENT

GRAND ORANGE LODGE.

The Business Transacted During the Annual Session.

Messrs. Wilson, Colter and McKeown Fully Exonerated With Regard to the Bathurst School Petition.

The annual session of the Grand Orange Lodge opened in the Odd Fellows hall, York street, on Tuesday evening. The attendance was unusually large, over one hundred delegates being present. Grand Master Fowler presided. The following committees were struck:

Suspension and expulsion—David Burgess, John Hewetson, John Corbett, W. J. Hunter, Samuel Earl.

Petitions and appeals—J. Walker, Wm Rogers, J. R. McLean, A. Delancy and W. J. Richardson.

Constitution and laws—A. O. Crookshank, R. Wills, A. J. Armstrong, Rev. G. F. Currie and J. Tracy.

Credentials—Wm. Rossborough, G. A. Dryden, A. Watters, W. H. Barton and J. DeV. Payne.

Correspondence—Dr E. O. Steeves, S. S. Gamblin, D. McArthur, S. Ferguson, N. Morrison.

Finance—D. F. Merritt, J. A. Moore, James Kelly, H. H. Pitts, G. H. Parker.

County Master Pitts then read an address of welcome, to which the Grand Master made a brief reply before presenting his annual report. He referred to the Bathurst school matter stating that he had personally visited that place and thoroughly satisfied himself that the people of Bathurst had a real live grievance. He organized a lodge there for the purpose of placing the protestant minority in a better position to ask aid from the Grand Lodge and make them better able to carry on the fight for their rights.

The Grand Master referred to the growth of the order during the year. H dedicated new halls at Fairville and South Bay and laid the corner stone of the new hall in St. John. He concluded with a reference to Rev. T. F. Fullerton the Grand Secretary who had removed from the province. The Deputy Grand Secretary, D. L. Morrison of Sussex, reported a large increase in membership due principally to the large number of new lodges organized, many of the old lodges not having increased in membership.

Grand Treasurer Magee reported the receipts of the year were $897.67; expenditure $545.81; balance $351.86.

Several petitions and appeals were read and referred to the proper committees.

H H. Pitts gave notice of motion dealing with the Bathurst schools question and the dismissal of a local government official for no other reason, he alleged, than that he belonged tothe orange order, after which the meeting adjourned.

Wednesday—The Grand Lodge opened this morning at nine o'clock, Grand Master Fowler in the chair. The credentials committee reported 99 members enrolled.

Fredericton was selected for the 12th of July celebration.

Deputy Grand Master Colter called the grand lodge's attention to the reports derogatory to himself as an orangeman and a grand lodge officer, which had been published in the Reporter, and referred the lodge to sec. 147 of the constitution which says:—"Any member who shall utter, print, publish or be privy to the printing, publishing or circulating of any matter or thing derogatory to the association or the character of any of its officers, shall be suspended or expelled."

He demanded an investigation of the charges publicly made against him. The Grand Master suggested as it was a personal attack made upon him by Bro. Pitts of the Reporter, and not upon the lodge the proper thing for Bro. Colter to do would be to bring a charge against the brother. Mr. Colter assented and the case was deferred.

AFTERNOON SESSION

Grand Master Fowler called the meeting to order at sharp 3 o'clock. Reports were received from a few counties and also a letter of regret from the county master of Westmoreland at his forced absence.

The report of the finance committees showed a balance on hand of $381 with all outstanding debts paid.

John Kerr of St. John, was reinstated by a good majority of votes.

The Grand Master's report was then taken up section by section. The first three sections passed unanimously, but the fourth caused great discussion. At St. Stephen last year it will be remembered the grand lodge appointed a committee to see that the Bathurst school business was presented to the local legislature. The petition was sent, but was not brought before the house owing to the fact that Dr. Stockton, who was the counsel in the matter, advised Mr. McKeown to make no move at that time in the matter, as Mr. McManus, one of the Bathurst school trustees, was then in the city, and stated that it would not be worth while presenting the petition to the house, as from the shape things were taking at that time in Bathurst in about six months the school trouble would be a thing of the past. Messrs. H. A. McKeown, W. Wilson and Thos. Colter proved conclusively to the grand lodge that they were not responsible for the non-presentation of the Bathurst petition, and Mr. McKeown moved an amendment that the words "Not desiring to censure anyone" be prefixed to that section. Mr. Pitts moved an amendment to the amendment censuring the orange members of the House for dereliction of duty. The question was warmly discussed during the afternoon session, the speakers being Messrs. Armstroug, Kelly, Heine, Thompson and a few others. In the evening session the debate was proceeded with. Able addresses were delivered by Messrs. Vincent, Maxwell and Thomas. In closing the debate Mr. McKeown made a very vigorous speech.

Mr. Pitts' amendment was lost by a vote of 68 to 18.

On motion the further adoption of the report was deferred until after the election of officers for the ensuing term which resulted as follows:—

Geo. W. Fowler, Grand Master.
James Kelly, Senior Deputy Grand Master.
Dr. O A. Steeves, Junior Deputy Grand Master.
Rev. B. H. Thomas Grand Chaplain.
Richard G. Magee, Grand Treasurer.
W. H Barton, Grand Secretary.
Geo. W. Ebney. Grand Lecturer.
D. C. Gamblin, Grand D. of C.
John B. Morgan, Deputy Grand Secretary.

On motion the lodge adjourned at 1.45 o'clock this (Thursday) morning, to meet at 10 o'clock in the morning.

Thursday—Grand Master Fowler called the lodge to order at 10 o'clock this morning. Mr. Colter's charge against Mr. Pitts was booked for to-day but upon a request from several members of the lodge, and on condition that Mr. Pitt's resolutions with regard to Mr. Lipsett's dismissal; that the present local government have forfeited all claims for the support and confidence of the Orange Association in this province, etc, etc, would be withdrawn. Mr. Colter kindly consented to withdraw his charge, and the matter was settled.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The lodge was called to order at 3 o'clock, shortly after which it dissolved itself in a committee of the whole to allow the Rev. Mr. Sellars to enter and present his report setting forth the state of affairs at Bathurst. The Rev. gentleman spoke for about an hour, and left no doubt in the minds of his hearers that the school system at that place was not by any means what it should be. The matter was under discussion for some time, when it was decided to frame a resolution, setting forth the necessity of immediate action being taken in the matter and for the purpose of raising funds to carry the case into the courts.

Before adjourning for supper it was decided that the grand lodge should meet next session at Fairville, St. John.

P. G. M. Armstrong called the lodge to order at 7 30. Mr. Pitts resolutions in reference to the Bathurst school difficulty were withdrawn and the following substituted in their stead:

Resolved. That the present situation of affairs at Bathurst by which many of Protestant families of that town have been obliged to withdraw their children from the so-called public schools and are now making preparation to provide one or more teachers at their own expense to instruct their children, thus being obliged not only to educate their own children but assist as well in the support of the conventual schools, is a most grievous state of affairs, and that such should be a necessity under our public school system is an outrage upon the whole Protestant population of this province; that the course of the board of education in making it possible for the Roman Catholics or any other denomination to contravene the expressed instructions of the Public School act, as are now taking place at Bathurst and other places in the province, should receive the condemnation of every true Protestant.

Resolved. That this grand lodge do proceed immediately to put in operation the suggestions in the report of the committee on the grand master's address, in having a petition prepared and circulated setting forth the facts regarding the situation at Bathurst and praying that these regulations be rescinded, permitting members of religious orders to quality and receive licenses without attending the Provincial Normal school, and the hiring of denominational buildings for public school purposes, which have been in force since the public school law was enacted; that the said petition be returned to the representatives from the various counties for presentation to the legislature at the coming session; if the said petition fail to accomplish its object within a reasonable time that the executive of this grand lodge be authorized to take such legal proceedings as they may deem necessary in the premises, and that an appeal be issued to the primary lodges in this jurisdiction soliciting contributions to a fund, to test this matter in the courts, which contributions shall be forwarded to the grand treasurer to be at the entire disposal of the executive.

The resolutions were adopted unanimously, whereupon the remaining clauses of the committee's report on the grand master's address were accepted as presented.

R. W. Geo. W. Fowler was then installed at the hands of P. G. M. Major Armstrong and he proceeded to install the remaining officers in the usual form.

Numerous matters of no public interest occupied several hours, when the grand lodge adjourned at 1.15 a.m., sine die.

Will Reside Here.

It is reported th Hon. P. G. Ryan, late chief commissioner of the board of works will become the owner of the residence at present owned and occupied by Judge Fraser, and that Mr. Ryan will make Fredericton his permanent residence at an early date.

The difficulty among the Baptists in St. John over the case of Rev. Sidney Welton has been enhanced by the action of his late congregation. Instead of accepting the advice of the advisory council to withdraw fellowship from their pastor, they ignored this advice, accepted Mr. Welton's resignation and gave him the usual dismission papers. This placed him in the position of a resigned minister in good standing, which position the representatives of the other Baptist churches think he is not entitled to occupy. This action also put the church in antagonism with the other Baptist churches, leaving it not only pastorless, but with little chance of getting any one to occupy the place of the former incumbent. It is evident that this affect was not forseen by the members who voted in the majority, as some of them are moving in the direction of rescinding the former resolution.

* * * *

Mr. H. H. Pitts has evidently arrived at the conclusion that there are a great many "mugwump" orangemen, (as he terms those who did not support him last election) even in the grand lodge, and instead of the officers and members of that most worshipful body falling down and worshiping his "Royal Nibs," as he no doubt they would, he was raked over the coals for the methods he used to secure his election, and it is to be hoped the lesson will be of some benefit to him and his lieutenants. The charges to be preferred against Messrs Wilson and Colter by Pitts never materilized, as Mr. Colter having entered a charge against Mr. Pitts for a violation of the constitution, and which, if pressed, would mean either suspension or expulsion, Mr. Pitts gladly withdrew his charges and the resolution he proposed passing with regard to Mr. Lipsett's dismissal, and took back all he said in the Reporter with regard to Colter, "How the mighty have fallen."

A Knights of Pythias lodge was organized at Halifax Tuesday night last, the first of the order in that city.

The Normal Light made its appearance this week and is pronounced equal if not superior to former years.

Mrs. Geo. Hatt entertained a number of her young friends Thursday evening at her residence, Brunswick street.

The young people of the Baptist church will hold a musical and literary entertainment in the vestry Monday night.

Mr. and Mrs. J. D. Fowler entertained a number of their friends at their residence, Brunswick street, last night.

The officers and members of the Baptist Church held a meeting in the Vestry last night. The pastorate was under discussion.

Hon. Dr. Pugsley is to be appointed law clerk of the Legislature, with Messrs W. Wilson and A. D. Richard as assistants.

The whist league met Thursday night at Mrs. Vanbuskirk's. The place of meeting for next week is at Miss Campbell's, York street.

R. Blackmer, Jeweler, has taken the premises now occupied by the Merchants Bank of Halifax, and will remove there the 1st of May.

Mr. James Daly, truckman, died at his residence Charlotte Street, Sunday night. The remains were interred in the rural cemetery above town on Wednesday.

Mr. John Limerick's little girl while playing in the house yesterday, fell and knocked her thumb out of joint. Dr. McLaren rendered the necessary surgical aid.

The students of the U. N. B. had a drive around town last night after which they repaired to the Masonic hall where they held a social, the ladies furnishing refreshments.

The Baptist choir drove down to Mr. A. R. Miles, Maugerville, Thursday evening. Owing to the heavy roads they did not reach there until shortly after ten o'clock. The party spent a few hours and did justice to a grand supper before returning to the city.

Mr. John Neill, father of Mr. James S. Neill, hardware merchant of this city, died at his home at Gibson Sunday afternoon after a an illness of a few weeks. Mr. Neill for years carried on an extensive hardware business in this city and was widely known and highly respected. He was the oldest living member of the Fredericton Society of St Andrew's. Mr. Neill leaves surviving him a widow, five daughters (among whom are Mrs. J. F. McMurray, Mrs. Wm. McKay, Mrs. W. R. Logan and Mrs. Sewell), and two sons.

Dartmouth, N. S. furnishes a bigamy case. On January 25 1893, Martha Jane McLeod and William Staken were married by Rev. W. Mellor, Episcopal clergyman of Dartmouth. Mrs. Stakin admits that she has two husbands No. 1 she married some years ago and he is still living at Musquodoboit. All parties concerned know the facts of the case. Mrs. Stakin says she is very happy with No. 2 and thinks No. 1 will not disturb her peace. Her reason for leaving husband No. 1 she says, was because of his neglect of herself and her two children.

The handsome grammar schoolhouse at Sussex was discovered on fire at half-past ten o'clock Wednesday morning. The fire started in the roof from a defective flue. About two hundred and fifty children were in the building. If the fire had of caught in any other part than where it did there is no doubt but a general panic would have resulted. As soon as the fire was discovered nearly the whole population of the town gathered at the scene, but nothing could be done to save the school, as their was no fire engine to work with. The building was erected in 1875 and cost $8,000. It was insured for $5,000. The out buildings in the rear, containing cord-wood, etc., were also distroyed. There was no wind at the time, and as there was no buildings close at hand no other damage was done. The scholars will be given apartments in different buildings, and it is expected by Monday all departments will be to work again.

OCCIDENTAL ODDITIES.

A Graphic Description of a Trip across the Continent in Winter.

By a Frederictonian.

"Engulfed" is hardly strong or forcible enough. The "gorgeous colouring" etc is blotted out.—gone—swallowed up in the mantle of thick mist enshrounding the mountains. Then again the guide book loquitur six—The jaggedness of profile observed from the plains is now explained. These mountains are tremendous uplifts of stratefied rocks of the Devonian and Carboniferous ages, which have been broken out of the crust of the earth, slowly heaved aloft. Some sections miles and miles in breadth, and thousands of feet thick, have been pushed straight up, so that their strata remain almost as level as before, others are tilted more or less on edge (always on this slope towards the east) and lie in steeply slanting positions. Still other sections are bent and crumpled under prodigious side pressure, while all have been broken down and worn away until now they are only colossal fragments of the orginal upheaval This disturbed stratification is plainly marked upon the faces of the cliffs, by the ledges that hold the snow after it has disappeared elsewhere, or by long lines of trees which there alone can maintain a foothold, and this peculiarity is one of the most striking and admirable features of the scenery. Many ranges of prodigious mountains like these must be traversed before the Pacific coast is reached, and grandeur and beauty will crowd upon the attention without ceasing, as the train speeds through gorge and over mountain, giving here a vast outlook and there an interior glimpse, then exchanging it for a new one with the suddenness of a Kaleidoscope."

Fine prospect was it not? All this nice scenery, and we 'not in it!' I suppose if we had been under legal compulsion to pass through the Rockie mountains on the worst possible day and in the most disagreeable weather prevailing upon the face of the globe, we could not have carried out the injunction more perfectly than we do this day. At the beginning of day, when we were in the lower elevations of the Rockies, it was as I saw, raining very heavily, but as we ascended and passed into the higher atmosphere, the weather grew colder and by the time we had reached Castle mountain it was snowing heavily.

It snows up here on these mountains in a way which would shame the average penny sleet storm of the Eastern provinces. Although the weather was apparently warm and muggy, the flakes came down thick and large and heavy, and the whole atmosphere presented the appearance of a vast, circling, dense white cloud incessantly moving downto the already snow-burdened earth. The white peaks of the mountains on either side seemed to have emptied their burden of snow simultaneously into the valley, and so silent and ghostly was the continuous fall of the flakes, that the very noise of the moving train, puffing and toiling up the eastern slope of the Rockies, seemed hushed and subdued into an awful mysterious undertone. Thickets of tall, puny saplings, standing like innumerable billiard cues, or the bayonets of warlike battalions on either side of the valley their straight stems and degenerate tops nearly void of twigs and branches, seemed to be thrusting their spearlike bodies into the midst of the storm, and reminded one of the stories told of the spike covered valleys of the Alpine Mountains, into which in the old days of religious persecution the living bodies of martyrs were hurled from the neighbouring ledges. Everything here is in a whirl—the flying storm and the rivers and trees and mountain tops are continuously shifting and changing as the train advances up the slope and each turn of the road brings into view a new and more weird panorama of terrible winter grandeur, resembling the sudden transformation of the groups of a kaleidscope. We stand on the rear platform of the hindmost car and silently wonder at the grandeur of this stupendous country landscape. But we have not yet seen the mightest of the mountain scenery on this route. We pass Mount Massive and the snow peaks far to the west, enclosing Simpson's Pass, a sharp turn in the road discloses right ahead the great heap of snowy ledges that form the eastern crest of Pilot mountain. As we leave the western limit of Rocky Mountain Park, Castle mountain looms up ahead on the right, a sheer precipice of 5000 feet which the guidebook characterises "a giant's keep—with "turrets, bastions and battlements complete." After passing this peak the mountains on each side become more grand and prominent.

On the right or Northeast are the bare rugged, sharply serrated peaks of the sawback sub-range, with a spur running out at Laggan. On the left the lofty Bow range fronts the valley in a series of magnificent snowladen promontories. By the time we reach Eldon, this whole array of splendid peaks is on plain view, and as we look back to the left, the central peak of Pilot Mountain comes into view leaning high like a pyramid above the ledges below. We pass the entrance of Vermilion Pass, permitting a view of the spires and crests along the continental watershed, from whose glaciers and snow fields the Vermilion river flows westward into the Kootenai. West of this entrance and over Mount Temple, is seen the prodigious helmet shaped Mount Lefroy, the loftiest and grandest in the whole grand array. At Loggan the railway leaves the valley of the Bow Range From this point, the guide book says, a view may be obtained of Mount Hector and the first of the great Glaciers; 1300 feet above the railway and a dozen miles away. We didn't see it, of course. But we saw what was probably the chemical equvalent of the great Glacier, snow enough, if melted, to glace the surface of the habitable globe and still leave some to spare. Laggan is the station for the lakes in the clouds, which form one of the most picturesque and gracefully beautiful summer resorts on the route. In summer ponies and vehicles wait here for tourists intending to visit these lakes, but I suppose they hibernate in winter, like the bears. Lake Louise, Mirror Lake and Lake Agnes are the names of this remarkable trio of aethereal ponds, and I am told that a visit to them will never be forgotten nor regretted. That is in the midst of summer. I am inclined to think that it would be equally difficult to forget a visit to them in winter, if one had the hardihood to attempt it, but as to regretting it, I fear that the weight of evidence would all incline the other way. However, we did not attempt it this time, but journeyed on higher and higher, until we reached Stephen, the station at the summit of the rockies. It seemed to me that we had reached the summit of the Rockies very quickly and I wondered if this meant that we were now about to descend for about the same distance until we emerged again into a level country on the West. If so, I thought, the ride through the rockies is not so grand nor long nor "scary" as I had been led to believe. It is comparatively tame, but I was to be undeceived. As a matter of fact the Rocky Mountain scenery proper, the grand and terrible and (so to speak) "scary" portion of the ride was yet to come. The Rocky Mountain range east of the summit is probably the easiest portion of the route. From thence commences a long and gradual descent westward to the valleys of the Thompson and Fraser rivers through the Rockies, the Ottertail, Van Horne and Beaverfoot Ranges via the kicking horse pass; through the Selkirk by the Beaver River Valley and Roger's Pass, down the Illecilliwaet, across the Columbia at Revelstoke and through the Gold Range by the Eagle River Pass to the Shuswap Lakes every mile of which is crowded with landscapes the most fascinating and terrific on the American continent. Stephen is named in honour of Sir George Stephen (now Lord Mount Stephen) the first president of the C. P. R. From here the line descends rapidly passing Wapla Lake and crossing the deep gorge of the Kicking Horse river just beyond! The scenery is now sublime and almost terrible, The line clings to the mountain side at the left, and the valley on the right rapidly deepens until the river is seen as a gleaming thread a thousand feet below.

CHAPTER XXVI.

THE AVEGGER ON ARE TRACK.

When Dacres had sprung aside into the woods in the moment of his fierce rush upon Girasole, he had been animated by a sudden thought that escape for himself was possible and that it would be more serviceable to his friends. Thus, then, he had bounded into the woods, and with swift steps he forced his way among the trees deeper and deeper into the forest. Some of the brigands had given chase, but without effect. Dacres superior strength and agility gave him the advantage, and his love of life was a greater stimulus than their thirst for vengeance. In addition to this the trees gave him every assistance toward the escape of a fugitive, while they threw every impediment in the way of a pursuer. The consequence was, therefore, that Dacres soon put a great distance between himself and his pursuers, and what is more, he ran in such a circuitous route that they soon lost all idea of their own locality, and had not the faintest idea where he had gone. In this respect however Dacres himself was not one whit wiser than they, for he soon found himself completely bewildered in the mazes of the forest; and when at length the deep silence around gave no further sound of pursuers, he sank down to take breath, with no idea whatever in what direction the road lay.

After a brief rest he arose and plunged deeper still into the forest, so as to put an additional distance between himself and any possible pursuit. He at length found himself at the foot of a precipice about fifty feet in height, which was deep in the recesses of the forest. Up this he climbed and found a mossy place among trees at its top, where he could find rest and at the same time be in a more favorable position either for hearing or seeing any sign of approaching pursuers.

Here, then, he flung himself down to rest, and soon buried himself among thoughts of the more exciting kind. The scene which he had just left was fresh in his mind, and amidst all the fury of that strife there arose most prominent in his memory the forms of the two ladies, Minnie, standing calm and unmoved, while Mrs. Willoughby was convulsed with agitated feelings. What was the cause of that? Could it be possible that his wife had indeed contrived such a plot with the Italian? Was it possible that she had chosen this way of striking two blows, by one of which she could win her Italian, and by the other of which she could get rid of himself, her husband? Such had been his conjecture during the fight, and the thought had roused him to his Berserker madness; but now as it recurred again, he saw other things to shake his full belief. Her agitation was too natural.

Yet, on the other hand, he asked himself, why should she not show agitation? She was a consummate actress. She could show on her beautiful face the softness and tenderness of an angel of light while a demon reigned in her malignant heart. Why should she not choose this way for keeping up appearances? She had betrayed her friend and sought her husband's death; but would she wish her crime made manifest? Not she. It was for this then, that she wept and clung to the child-angel.

Such thoughts as these were not at all adapted to give comfort to his mind, or make his rest refreshing. Soon by such fancies, he kindled anew his old rage, and his blood rose to fever heat, so that inaction became no longer tolerable. He had rest enough. He started up and looked all around, and listened attentively. No sound arose and no sight appeared which at all excited suspicion. He determined to set forth once more, he scarcely knew where. He had a vague idea of finding his way back to the road, so as to be able to assist the ladies, together with another idea, equally ill defined, of coming upon the brigands, finding the Italian, and watching for an opportunity to wreak vengeance upon this assassin and his guilty partner.

He drew his knife once more from a leathern sheath on the inside of the breast of his coat, into which he had thrust it some time before, and holding this he set forth watchfully and warily. On the left side of the precipice the ground sloped down and at the bottom of this there was a narrow valley. It seemed to him that this might be the course of some spring torrent, and that by following its descent he might come out upon some stream. With this intention he descended to the valley, and then walked along following the decent of the ground, and keeping himself as much as possible among the thickest growth of the trees.

The ground descended very gradually and the narrow valley wound along among rolling hills that were covered with trees and brush. As he confined himself to the thicker parts of this, his progress was necessarily slow; but at the end of that turn he saw before him unmistakable signs of the neighborhood of some open place. Before him he saw the sky in such a way that it showed the absence of forest trees. He now moved on more cautiously, and quiting the valley, crept up the hill-slope, among the brush as carefully as possible, until he was at a sufficient height, and then, turning toward the open, he crept forward from cover to cover. At length he stopped. A slight eminence was before him, beyond which all was open, yet concealed from his view. Descending the slope a little, he once more advanced, and finally emerged at the edge of the forest.

He found himself upon a gentle declivity. Immediately in front of him lay a lake, circular in shape, and about a mile in diameter, embosomed among wooded hills. At first he saw no signs of any habitation; but as his eyes wandered round he saw upon his right, about a quarter of a mile away, an old stone house, and beyond this, smoke curling up from among the forest trees on the borders of the lake.

The scene startled him. It was so quiet, so lonely, and so deserted that it seemed a fit place for a robber's haunt. Could this be indeed the home of his enemies, and had he thus so wonderfully come upon them in the very midst of their retreat? He believed that it was so. A little further observation showed figures among the trees moving to and fro, and soon he distinguished faint traces of smoke in other places, which he had not seen at first, as though there were more fires than one.

Dacres exulted with a fierce and vengeful joy over this discovery. He felt now not like the fugitive, but rather the pursuer. He looked down upon this as the tiger looks from his jungle upon some Indian village. His foes were numerous, but he was concealed, and his presence unsuspected. He grasped his dagger with a firmer clutch, and then pondered for a few minutes on what he had better do next.

One thing was necessary first of all, and that was to get as near as he possibly could without discovery. A slight survey of the situation showed him that he might venture much nearer; and his eye ran along the border of the lake which lay between him and the old house, and he saw that it was covered over with a thick fringe of trees and brushwood. The narrow valley along which he had come ended at the shore of the lake just below him on his right, and beyond this the shore arose again to a height equal to where he now was. To gain that opposite height was now his first task.

Before starting he looked all around, so as to be sure that he was not observed Then he went back for some distance, after which he descended into the valley, crouching low, and crawling stealthily among the brush-wood. Moving thus, he at length succeeded in reaching the opposite slope without appearing to have attracted any attention from any pursuers. Up this slope he now moved as carefully as ever, not relaxing his vigilance one jot, but, if possible, calling into play even more caution as he found himself drawing nearer to those whom he began to regard as his prey.

Moving up this slope, then, in this way, he at length attained the top, and found himself here among the forest trees and underbush. They were here even denser than they were on the place which he had just left. As he moved along he saw no indications that they had been traversed by human footsteps. Every thing gave indication of an unbroken and undisturbed solitude. After feeling his way along here with all the caution which he could exercise, he finally ventured toward the shore of the lake and found himself able to go to the very edge without coming to any open space or crossing any path.

On looking forth from the top of the bank he found that he had not only drawn much nearer to the old house, but that he could see the whole line of shore. He now saw that there were some men by the door of the house and began to suspect that this was nothing else than the headquarters and citadel of the brigands. The sight of the shore now showed him that he could approach very much nearer, and unless the brigands, or whoever they were, kept scouts out, he would be able to reach a point immediately overlooking the house, from which he could survey it at leisure. To reach this point became now his next aim.

The wood being dense, Dacres found no more difficulty in passing through this than in traversing what lay behind him. The caution which he exercised here was as great as ever, and his progress was as slow, but as sure. At length he found himself upon the desired point and crawling cautiously forward to the shore, he looked down upon the very old house which he had desired to reach.

The house stood close by the lake, upon a sloping bank which lay below. It did not seem to be more than fifty yards away. The doors and windows were gone. Five or six ill-looking fellows were near the doorway, some sprawling on the ground, others lolling and lounging about. One glance at the men was sufficient to assure him that they were brigands and also to show him that they kept no guard or scout or outpost of any kind, at least in this direction.

Here, then, Dacres lay and watched. He could not wish for a better situation. With his knife in his hand, ready to defend himself in case of need, and his whole form concealed perfectly by the thick underbrush into the midst of which he had crawled, he peered forth through the overhanging leaves and watched in breathless interest. From the point where he now was he could see the shore beyond the house where the smoke was rising. He could now see that there were no less than four different columns of smoke ascending from as many fires. He saw as many as twenty or thirty figures moving among the trees, made conspicuous by the bright colors of their costumes. They seemed to be busy about something which he could not make out.

Suddenly while his eye roved over the scene, it was struck by some fluttering color at the open window of the old house. He had not noticed this before. He now looked at it attentively. Before long he saw a figure cross the window and return. It was a female figure.

The sight of this revived all that agitation which he had felt before, but which had been calmed during the severe efforts which he had been putting forth. There was but one thought in his mind, and but one desire in his heart.

His wife.

He crouched low, with a more feverish dread of discovery at this supreme moment, and a fiercer thirst for some further revelation which might disclose what he suspected. His breathing came thick and hard, and his brow lowered gloomily over his gleaming eyes.

He waited thus for some minutes, and the figure passed again.

He still watched.

Suddenly a figure appeared at the window. It was a young girl, a blonde, with short golden curls. The face was familiar indeed to him. Could he ever forget it? There it was full before him, turned toward him, as though that one, by some strange spiritual sympathy, was aware of his presence, and was thus turning toward him this mute appeal. Her face was near enough for its expression to be visible. He could distinguish the childish face, with its soft, sweet innocence, and he knew that upon it there was now that piteous, pleading, beseeching look which formerly had so thrilled his heart. And it was thus that Dacres saw his child angel.

A prisoner, turning toward him this appeal! What was the cause and what did the Italian want of this innocent child? Such was his thought. What could his fiend of a wife gain by the betrayal of that angelic being? Was it possible that even her demon soul could compass iniquity like this? He had thought that he had fathomed her capacity for malignant wickedness; but the presence here of the child-angel in the power of these miscreants showed him that this capacity was indeed unfathomable. At this sudden revelation of sin so enormous his very soul turned sick with horror.

He watched and still looked with an anxiety that was increasing positive pain.

And now after one brief glance, Minnie drew back into the room. There was nothing more to be seen for some time, but at last another figure appeared.

He expected this; he was waiting for it; he was sure of it; yet deep down in the bottom of his heart there was a hope that it might not be so, that his suspicions, in this case at least, might be unfounded. But now the proof came; it was made manifest here before his eyes, and in the light of day.

In spite of himself a low groan escaped him. He buried his face in his hands and shut out the sight. Then suddenly he raised his head again and stared as though in this face there was an irresistible fascination by which a spell was thrown over him.

It was the face of Mrs. Willoughby—youthful, beautiful, and touching in its tender grace. Tears were now in those dark luminous eyes, but they were unseen by him. Yet he could mark the despondency of her attitude; he could see a certain wild way of looking up and down and in all directions; he noted how her hands grasped the window ledge as if for support.

And oh, beautiful demon angel, he thought, if you could but know how near you are to the avenger! Why are you so anxious, my demon wife? Are you impatient because your Italian is delaying? Can you not live for five seconds longer without him? Are you lookins in all directions to see where he is? Don't fret; he'll soon be here.

And now there came a confirmation of his thoughts. He was not surprised; he knew it; he suspected it. It was all as it should be. Was it not in the confident expectation of this that he had come here with his dagger—on their trail?

It was Girasole.

He came from the place, further along the shore, where the brigands were around their fires. He was walking quickly. He had a purpose. It was with a renewed agony that Dacres watched his enemy—coming to visit his wife. The intensity of that thirst for vengeance which had now to be checked until a better opportunity, made his whole frame tremble. A wild desire came to him then and there to bound down upon his enemy, and kill and be killed in the presence of his wife. But the other brigands deterred him. These men might interpose and save the Italian, and make him a prisoner. No; he must wait till he could meet his enemy on something like equal terms—when he could strike a blow that would not be in vain. Thus he overmastered himself.

He saw Girasole enter the house. He watched breathlessly. The time seemed long indeed. He could not hear anything; the conversation if there was any, was carried on in a low tone. He could not see anything; those who conversed kept quiet; no one passed in front of the window. It was all a mystery and this made the time seem longer. At length Dacres began to think that Girasole would not go at all. A long time passed. Hours went away, and still Girasole did not quit the house.

It was now sundown. Dacres had eaten nothing since morning, but the conflict of passion drove away all hunger or thirst. The approach of darkness was in accordance with his own gloomy wishes. Twilight in Italy is short. Night would soon be over all.

The house was on the slope of the bank. At the corner nearest him the house was sunk into the ground in such a way that it looked as though one might climb into the upper story window. As Dacres looked he made up his mind to attempt it. By standing here on tip-toe he could catch the upper window ledge with his hands. He was strong. He was tall His enemy was in the house. The hour was at hand. He was the man.

Another hour passed.

All was still.

There was a flickering lamp in the hall, but the men seemed to be asleep.

Another hour passed.

There was no noise.

Then Dacres ventured down. He moved slowly and cautiously, crouching low and thus traversing the intervening space

He neared the house and touched it. Before him was the window of the lower story. Above him was the window of the upper story. He lifted up his hands. They could reach the window ledge.

He put his long, keen knife between his teeth, and caught at the upper window-ledge. Exerting all his strength he raised himself up so high that he could fling one elbow over. For a moment he hung thus, and waited to take breath and listen.

There was a rush below. Half a dozen shadowy forms surrounded him. He had been seen. He had been trapped.

He dropped down and, seizing his knife, struck right and left.

In vain. He was hurled to the ground and bound tight.

CHAPTE RXXVII.

FACE TO FACE.

Hawbury, on his capture, had been at once taken into the woods, and led and pushed on by no gentle hands. He had thus gone on until he had found himself by that same lake which others of the party had come upon in various ways which have been described. Toward this lake he was taken, until finally his party reached the old house, which they entered. It has already been said that it was a two-story house. It was also of stone, and strongly built. The door was in the middle of it, and rooms were on each side of the hall. The interior plan of the house was peculiar, for the hall did not run through, but consisted of a square room, and the stone steps wound spirally from the lower hall to the upper one. There were three rooms up stairs one taking up one end of the house, which was occupied by Mrs. Willoughby and Minnie; another in the rear of the house, into which a door opened from the upper hall, close by the head of the stairs; and a third, which was opposite the room first mentioned.

Hawbury was taken to this house, and led up stairs into this room in the rear of the house. At the end farthest from the door he saw a heap of straw with a few dirty rugs upon it. In the wall a beam was set, to which an iron ring was fastened. He was taken toward this bed, and here his legs were bound together, and the rope that secured them was run around the iron ring so as to allow of no more motion than a few feet Having thus secured the prisoner, the men left him to his own meditations.

The room was perfectly bare of furniture, nothing being in it but the straw and the dirty rugs. Hawbury could not approach the windows, for he was bound in a way which prevented that. In fact, he could not move in any direction, for his arms and legs were fastened in such a way that he could scarcely raise himself from where he was sitting. He therefore was compelled to remain in one position, and threw himself down upon the straw on his side, with his face to the wall, for he found that position easier than any other. In this way he lay for some time, until at length he was roused by the sound or footsteps ascending the stairs. Several people were passing his room He heard the voice of Girasole. He listened with deep attention. For some time there was no reply. At length there was the sound of a woman's voice—clear, plain, and unmistakable. It was a fretful voice of complaint. Girasole was trying to answer it. After a time Girasole left. Then all was still. Then Girasole returned. Then there was a clattering noise on the stairs, and the bumping of some heavy weight, and the heavy breathing of men. Then he heard Girasole say something, after which arose Minnie's voice, close by, as though she was in the hall, and her words were, Oh, take it away, take it away! followed by long reproaches, which Hawbury did not fully understand.

After this there was a further silence for some time, which at last was broken by fresh sounds of trampling and shuffling together with the confused directions of several voices all speaking at once. Hawbury listened, and turned on his couch of straw so as to see anything which presented itself. The clatter and the noise approached nearer, ascending the stairs, until at last he saw that they were entering his room. Two of the brigands came first, carrying something carefully. In a few minutes the burden which they bore was revealed.
