SOLDIERS' STRIPES

What They Mean and for What They May be Awarded

"What is the meaning of the small blue stripes worn at the bottom of the sleeves of some returned men?"

Such a question is continually overheard since the innovation of new varieties of stripes worn by the men returning from overseas. Perhaps the very latest in stripes is the blue "sateen" triangular shape worn at the bottom of the left sleeve, and in some instances, accompanied by a red one. They are the shape of the valued N.C.O.'s stripes and placed with the point downwards. They were primarily introduced officially, in the British armyy and then adopted by the Canadians soldiers, indicating the number of years the wearer has served actually in France, one for each year.

The red stripe means that the soldier was on the fighting line in the year 1914, the blue ones show the number of years after 1914 of service in France.

Sure Sign of Active Service.

Most people know that each strip of gold braid about two inches long and placed lengthways on the cuff represents a time wounded while on active service.

Then there is the "good conduct" stripe, which is rarely won until two years' service, and may be almost compared to an award like the D.C.M. There are few of them to be seen, in spite of the prevalence of military uniform. The good conduct stripe is exactly the same as an n.c.o.'s stripe, but is worn with point upward and the cuff of the sleeve about four inches from the lower edge.

Another bit of "stripe" information not generally known is the fact that non-commissioned officers are not allowed to wear their one, two or three stripes on both sleeves until they have been on active service.

The Hospital Badge.

The wide blue band worn on the upper arm by hundreds of veterans is the hospital badge showing that the wearer is under treatment in a military hospital.

BRITISH LOSSES.

Bulletin, Washington, May 6. — British losses in men killed, wounded, captured and missing on the western front since the German offensive began March 21, are estimated by the British military mission here at nearly 250,000.

In a statement to-day, giving this calculation, the mission said everything indicates the offensive will be continued almost immediately and that if the brunt attack is borne again by the British it will become serious unless their troops are supported by sufficient reserves.

By a vote of 11 to 8, Winnipeg council signified its willingness to enter into an agreement with the Street Railway Company without reference to the fare question. The jitneys were given their death blow and must cease running. The company pays $105,000 due the city for percentage in 1917.
